PRAEPOSITINUS OF CREMONA (c. 1140–c. 1210), theologian and liturgist. He studied dogmatic theology and canon law at Paris, where he afterwards taught. About 1194 he became prebendary at Mainz Cathedral, and probably about this time was engaged in missionary work among the *Cathari. He seems to have resigned his office in 1203, owing to a conflict with *Innocent III over the succession to the see of Mainz, but he must have soon submitted to the Pope, since in 1206 he is known to have been chancellor of *Paris university. He wrote the 'Tractatus de Officiis', a work in four parts, an explanation of the symbolism of the Offices and a principal source of William *Durandus of Mende. The 'Summa contra Haereticos' contains valuable information of the otherwise unknown sect of the Passagians, but its authorship has been contested. He also wrote a 'Summa super Psalterium' and a 'Summa Theologica', which represents the theological teaching of his last period in Paris. Even his latest work is untouched by the new problems raised by the introduction of *Aristotle into the W. It had a considerable influence in his time, esp. on the *Franciscan school (*Alexander of Hales, St. *Bonaventure).

G. Lacombe, Prepositini Cancellarii Parisiensis (1206–1210) Opera Omnia, I (all publd. to 1972): la vie et les œuvres de Prévostin (Bibliothèque thomiste, No. 11, Kain, 1927). 'Tractatus de Officiis' ed. J. A. Corbett (University of Notre Dame Publications in Mediaeval Studies, xxxi; 1969). The 'Summa contra haereticos' ascribed to Praepositinus ed. J. N. Garvin–J. A. Corbett (ib., xv; 1958). G. Lacombe in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1, 1933), cols. 162–9, s.v. 'Prévostin de Crémone'; A. Piolanti in E.C., ix (1952), col. 1953 s.v. 'Prepositino di Cremona'.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION (Lat. Pragmatica Sanctio). A term orig. employed in later Roman law for an arrangement defining the limits of the sovereign power of a prince, esp. in the matter of royal succession. A pragmatic sanction, published by Philip V, introduced Salic Law into Spain, and another, issued later by Ferdinand VII, revoked it.

The Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges, issued by the French clergy on 7 July 1438 while the Council of *Basle (q.v.) was still in session, was a statement of *Gallicanist principles. It upheld the right of the French Church to administer its temporal property independently of the Papacy and disallowed Papal nominations to vacant benefices. In 1516 it was superseded by the Concordat of *Bologna (q.v.).

Text of the Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges in Ordonnances des rois de France de la troisième race, xiii (ed. M. de Vilevault, 1782), pp. 267–91; summary in Mirbt, No. 398, p. 232 f.; Eng. tr. in S. Z. Ehler–J. B. Morrall (edd.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 112–21. N. Valois, Histoire de la pragmatique sanction de Bourges sous Charles VII (Archives de l'Histoire de la France; 1906). Hefele–Leclercq, vii (pt. 2; 1916), pp. 1053–61. V. Martin, Les Origines du gallicanisme, ii (1939), pp. 293–324. R. Hedde in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2781–6, s.v. 'Pragmatique Sanction, II'.

PRAGMATISM (Gr. πράγματα, 'ordinary things', 'affairs'). A system of belief devised by C. S. Peirce, H. *Bergson, F. C. S. Schiller, W. *James, J. Dewey, and others, on the principle that every truth has practical consequences, and that these are a test of its truthfulness. Truth is therefore relative, and the proof of a fact is not an act of the pure reason, but rather an account of how the fact has come to be accepted as justifying itself by practical results. The real is not to be investigated by metaphysical speculation, but rather acc. to the values developed through its being known. Pragmatism justifies and explains religions acc. as they satisfy psychological criteria and generate suitable values. In the RC Church the *Modernist Movement was much influenced by Pragmatist ideals, notably in the persons of L. *Laberthonnière and G. *Tyrrell, as well as F. *von Hügel in his earlier life. Pragmatist ideas also exercised a widely diffused influence on religious thought generally, esp. in the period 1901–30.

Personal Idealism (ed. H. Sturt, 1902); J. Dewey, Studies in Logical Theory (1903); F. C. S. Schiller, Humanism (1903); id., Studies in Humanism (1907); W. James, Pragmatism (1907); id., The Meaning of Truth (1909); H. Vaihinger, Die Philosophie des Als Ob (1911). F. C. S. Schiller in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 147–50, s.v., with bibl.

PRASSEDE, St. See Praxedes, St.

PRAXEAS (fl. c. 200), heretic. The substance of his history and teaching is known only from the treatise 'Adversus Praxean' (c. 213?) of his vigorous opponent *Tertullian and may thus be somewhat misrepresented. He is said to have arrived in Rome towards the end of the 2nd cent. from Asia, where he had suffered imprisonment for his faith, and to have succeeded in turning the Pope (*Victor or *Zephyrinus) against the *Montanists. He proclaimed himself a leader of the '*Patripassian Monarchians', i.e. of those who were concerned to maintain the unity of the Godhead even at the cost of declaring that God suffered. As Tertullian put it, he 'crucified the Father' (Patrem crucifixit) since he conceived of the Godhead as emptied into the person of Christ in order to assume the temporary role of Redeemer. Before the end of his life he recanted his heretical doctrines.

'Praxeas' is prob. a real name and not, as G. B. *de Rossi suggested, a pseudonym ('busybody') for *Noetus or Epigonus. Tertullian's Adversus Praxean is ed., with introd., Eng. tr. and comm., by E. Evans (London, 1948). P. Meinhold in P.W., xxii (pt. 2; 1954), cols. 1744–7, s.v. See also bibl. to Monarchianism.

PRAXEDES, St. (1st–2nd cent.), also Prassede, early martyr at Rome. Acc. to her (spurious) acta, she was a Roman virgin who sheltered Christians during the persecution under *Marcus Aurelius. She was buried in the Catacomb of *Priscilla next to the grave of St. *Pudentiana and hence (on wholly insufficient grounds) was supposed to have been her sister. The well-known church of Santa Prassede on the Esquiline at Rome (which inspired R. Browning's 'Tomb at St. Praxed's') was built by Paschal I (817–24) on the site of an earlier structure supposed to have stood on the site of her house. Feast day, 21 July.

St. Praxedes and St. Pudentiana are first mentioned in 7th-cent. Roman Itineraries to the Catacombs; they occur only in interpolated texts of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. Later legends make them both daughters of St. *Pudens (q.v.). AA.SS., Mai. IV (1685), pp. 296–301. A. de Waal, 'Der Titulus Praxedis' in R.Q., xix (1905), pp. 169–80. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 149–51. R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett in idd. and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iii (Rome, 1967), pp. 232–59, with bibl. [in English].

PRAYER. Christian prayer rests on two foundations which give it its specific character: belief in the transcendent and personal nature of the God who is revealed in the Bible as Lord of History and Creator of the World, and the acceptance of the intimate relation of God and man disclosed by the atoning work of the Incarnate Christ.

From these truths it follows that petition, invocation and adoration, which also belong to other world-religions, are practised in Christian spirituality under the dominant ideas of (a) submission to the Divine will and (b) recognition of the direct relationship of every creature to God, who at once transcends the created order and is immanent in it. Adoration, thanksgiving, penitence and petition are therefore acts directed to God 'through Jesus Christ our Lord' or made 'in the Spirit' (Jude 20). Moreover, the root of the Christian's approach to God is the fruit of '*justification' by Christ.

A further consequence for Christian prayer follows from the theology of the Incarnation. By disclosing a congruity of humanity with deity, though not a unity of essence, this belief supplies a new basis for man's search for God in prayer which leads to the vision of God and union with and likeness to Him. It points to a way of prayer which, though a part of natural religion, occupies besides a large place in the devotional tradition of Christendom, where it is transformed by the Christian belief in God's grace. This type of prayer is the fruit of 'sanctification'.

These two kinds of prayer have been distinguished as vocal prayer and mental prayer. An early statement of such a distinction is in St. *John of Damascus: 'Prayer is either the ascent of the mind to God or the decently beseeching of Him' (De Fide Orthodoxa, iii. 24), though it should be noted that vocal prayer includes praise, thanksgiving and penitence, as well as 'beseeching'. St. *Thomas Aquinas, who also clearly distinguishes vocal and mental prayer, divides the former into common and individual prayer (Summa Theol., II (2), q. 83, art. 13). F. *Heiler has differentiated them as the 'prophetic' and the 'mystical' types of prayer, contending that the first only is Biblical and Christian while the second is of *Neoplatonic affiliation. But this last contention is misleading, and for two reasons. There are elements of 'mysticism' in the Bible and there are ways of contemplation and union with God in the Christian tradition which are not strictly mystical. But the distinction in itself is valid. While, as Heiler points out, Protestant piety confines itself almost entirely to the prophetic type, Catholic and Eastern Orthodox devotion give a prominent place to the mystical as well.

As to vocal prayer, while the *Stoics recognized praise and the summoning of the soul to acquiescence in God's will, but not petition, Christianity allows petitions for benefits and virtues. Though Cicero had recommended prayer to Jupiter for the gifts of fortune, he declared that 'no one has ever referred to God the acquisition of virtue' (De Natura Deorum, III. 36), since virtue is a human achievement. By contrast Hebrew and Christian prayer, while asking God for both, regard esp. the practice of virtue as the reward of prayer. *Solomon besought the Lord for virtue (1 Kgs. 3. 9) and for benefits (8. 22–53). To the Hebrew requirement of holiness as a precondition of true prayer, Christianity adds the converse that true holiness only comes of prayer.

As regards Christ's own authority, it must be observed that He participated in the public worship of the synagogue (Mk. 1. 21). When He expressly mentions prayer, however, it is always of a private kind: 'Enter into thy closet' (Mt. 6. 6); and on occasion He Himself went into a solitary place (Mk. 1. 35), to a mountain (Lk. 9. 28, Mk. 6. 46), and to Gethsemane (Lk. 22. 39–41, Mk. 14. 32) to pray. This double prayer life adumbrates the distinction between common and private prayer in the life of the Church. Common prayer may be further divided into liturgical (*Eucharist, Hours of Prayer) and informal gatherings for prayer and praise. Liturgical prayer is normally a regular cycle of worshipful action, with variations only according to festival or fast and to the turn of the year, month, week or day. Informal common worship expresses aspirations and needs of the moment, as does also extempore individual prayer.

In the NT prayer is an art to be learnt; hence the pattern given in the *Lord's Prayer. Prayer is also a weapon in the cosmic spiritual battle of good and evil (Mk. 9. 29); Jesus prays for power to raise *Lazarus (Jn. 11. 41 f.) and to endure the Passion (Mt. 26. 39, Mk. 14. 35 f., Lk. 22. 42).

As to Mental Prayer, the name is unsatisfactory, for it includes the direction of the affections as well as of thought, and also contemplation, which is a kind of spiritual looking or gaze. On the other hand, 'contemplative prayer' is not wide enough to include meditation and acts of the affections. The medieval rendering of the description of John of Damascus, quoted above, as 'the ascent of the mind to God' ('ascensus intellectus in Deum') has given a too intellectual appearance to mental prayer, at least for those who do not understand 'intellectus' as the faculty of spiritual vision, in distinction from 'ratio' which is the discursive reason. The main schools of mental prayer recognize that its 'ordinary ways' include discursive meditation, affective prayer and contemplation (with the prayer of loving regard and prayer of simplicity), while its 'extra-ordinary ways' comprise mystical and supernatural experiences. (See Mysticism.) The Cloud of Unknowing* is commonly regarded as a reliable guide to contemplative prayer for those without mystical gifts.

Many methods of meditation and of contemplative prayer have been advocated by Christian spiritual writers; and a stream of teachers of prayer such as *Clement of Alexandria, *Origen, *Cassian, St. *Bernard, St. Thomas Aquinas, *Thomas à Kempis, St. *Peter of Alcántara, St. *Ignatius Loyola, St. *Teresa of Ávila, St. *John of the Cross, *Fénelon, J. B. *Bossuet, and W. *Law, not to mention more recent guides, have expounded their principles.

There has been a continuous stream of literature on the practice and philosophy of Christian prayer from *Tertullian and Origen onwards. Many of these studies are cited under their authors, notably the various exponents of Mysticism. Useful guides to the subject generally include P. Pourrat, P.S.S., La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1918–28; Eng. tr. of vols. 1–3, 1922–7); F. Heiler, Das Gebet. Eine religionsgeschichtliche und religionspsychologische Untersuchung (1918; abbreviated Eng. tr. by S. McComb–J. E. Park, New York, 1932); and the writings of Evelyn *Underhill (q.v.). Modern studies on the nature and philosophy of prayer include H. P. *Liddon, Some Elements of Religion (1872), Lect. v ('Prayer, the Characteristic Action of Religion'), pp. 165–203; A. Poulain, S.J., Des Grâces d'oraison (1901; Eng. tr., 1910); A. J. Worlledge, Prayer (Oxford Library of Practical Theology, 1902); J. *Hastings, The Christian Doctrine of Prayer (1915); B. H. *Streeter (ed.), Concerning Prayer. Its Nature, its Difficulties and its Value (1916); F. Ménégoz, Le Problème de la prière (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, xiii; 1925); E. J. Bicknell, In Defence of Christian Prayer (1925); B. Frost, The Art of Mental Prayer (1931); F. P. Harton, The Elements of the Spiritual Life (1932); D. Jenkins, Prayer and the Service of God (1944); H. Northcott, C.R., The Venture of Prayer (1950); M. Nédoncelle, Prière humaine et prière divine. Notes phénoménologiques (1962; Eng. tr., 1964). C. S. Lewis, Letters to Malcolm: chiefly on Prayer (1964). E. Behr-Sigel, Prière et sainteté dans l'Église Russe (1950). A. Bloom, Living Prayer (1966); id., School for Prayer (1970). A. Hamman, O.F.M., La Prière, i. Le Nouveau Testament; ii. Les trois premiers siècles (Bibliothèque de Théologie [1959–63]). R. L. Simpson, The Interpretation of Prayer in the Early Church (Philadelphia [1965]). 'Prayer' in various religions in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 154–205, by various writers, incl. F. Perles on 'Prayer (Jewish)', pp. 191–6, C. F. D'Arcy on 'Prayer (Christian, Theological)', pp. 171–7, and R. M. Woolley on 'Prayer (Christian, Liturgical)', pp. 177–80; A. Fonck in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 169–244. See also bibl. to Liturgy, Mysticism.

PRAYER OF MANASSES. See Manasses, Prayer of.

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD. See Dead, Prayers for the.

PREACHERS, Order of. See Dominican Order.

PREACHING OF PETER. See Peter, Preaching of St.

PREBEND and PREBENDARY. A *cathedral benefice and its holder. Though in the early Middle Ages reformers constantly aimed at maintaining the common life under rule for the *canons of cathedral and collegiate foundations, in the majority of such foundations this ideal was frankly abandoned and the endowment divided up into separate portions, each designed for the support of one member of the chapter. These acquired the name of 'prebends' from the fact that they supplied or furnished (praebere) a living to their holders, who in turn came to be known as 'prebendaries'. The prebend normally consisted of the revenue from one manor of the cathedral estates, a fact which accounts for the territorial names still attached to the prebendal stalls in many English cathedrals. In English cathedrals of the 'Old Foundation' the ancient prebends have been kept in name, though the transference of their attached incomes to the *Ecclesiastical Commission by the 19th cent. legislation has made them in nearly all cases honorary offices only. In the former monastic cathedrals, reorganized by *Henry VIII at the *Dissolution and known as cathedrals of the 'New Foundation', prebends in the proper sense do not exist, though 'prebendary' became the normal appellation of the members of the chapters of these churches until the 19th cent., when the title of 'canon' replaced it in general usage.

PRECENTOR. In *cathedrals, the cleric responsible for the direction of the choral services. In those of the 'Old Foundation' he is a member of the chapter who ranks next to the Dean, and commonly delegates his duties to a deputy known as the *succentor. In cathedrals of the 'New Foundation', however, his status is the lower one of *minor canon or chaplain.

PRECEPT (Lat. praeceptum). In moral theology, a matter of obligation, as contrasted with a 'counsel', which is only a matter of persuasion. For Precepts of the Church, see Commandments of the Church.

PRECEPTORY. Among the Knights *Templar a community established on one of their provincial estates. The corresponding institution among the *Hospitallers was a '*Commandery'.

PRECES FERIALES (Lat., 'ferial prayers). In W. service books, a short series of prayers which used to be said esp. on ferial (non-festal) days, consisting of *Kyrie Eleison, *Paternoster and versicles and responses. In the 1568 *Breviary they stood immediately before the collect; from 1955 their use was confined to *Lauds and *Vespers on the Wednesdays and Fridays of Lent and Advent and Ember Days. In the 1971 Breviary they have been replaced by a series of intercessions said every day at Lauds and Vespers. In the BCP the Preces feriales are represented by the prayers at *Mattins and *Evensong between the Creed and the Collects, and are said or sung throughout the year.

PRECES PRIVATAE. The Latin book of devotion issued by *Elizabeth I in 1564 with the title Preces Privatae in Studiosorum Gratiam Collectae et Regia Autoritate Approbatae. It was a manual of prayers largely based on the BCP, and thus carried on the tradition of the medieval English *Primers, which were compilations for private use based on the liturgical services. A later edition of 1573 contained additional devotions compiled by St. John *Fisher. Apart from its title it has no connexion with the celebrated 'Preces Privatae' of L. *Andrewes (q.v.).

It is printed in Private Prayers of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (Parker Society, 1851), pp. 209–428.

PRECIOUS BLOOD, Devotion to the. The Blood of Christ, shed during the Passion, has been honoured and regarded as of redeeming virtue since the Apostolic Age, esp. in connexion with the Eucharist. Beyrout, Bruges, Saintes, the English monasteries of Ashridge and Hailes, and various other churches have claimed to possess particles of it. Such relics have been greatly venerated, although St. *Thomas Aquinas (S.T., 3a., q. 54, a. 3) maintained that all the particles of the Blood of Christ shed during the Passion were reassumed by Him at His Resurrection, and that such relics must have flowed from an image of Christ. *Benedict XIV, admitting that some particles might not have been assumed, maintained that, not being united to the Godhead, they were to be venerated rather than adored. The *Dominicans held that the Precious Blood was an essential part of the Sacred Humanity; the *Franciscans that it was concomitant only. Since the Council of *Trent the former view has tended to prevail among RC theologians. Feasts in honour of the Precious Blood were celebrated by various orders in the 19th cent. In 1849 *Pius IX, while at Gaeta, extended the Feast to the whole Church, assigning to it the first Sunday in July, altered by *Pius X in 1914 to 1 July. It was raised to the rank of double of the first class in 1934, but suppressed altogether in 1969. *John XXIII inserted a clause about the Precious Blood in the *Divine Praises. The whole month of July is traditionally connected with the devotion. A number of religious orders are dedicated to the Precious Blood, and the dedication of the (RC) Cathedral Church of the Archdiocese of *Westminster is to the Most Precious Blood.

F. W. *Faber, The Precious Blood, or the Price of our Salvation (1860; devotional). M. D. Chenu, O.P., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1094–7, s.v. 'Sang du Christ'; A. P. Frutaz in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1778–80, s.v. 'Sangue preziosissimo di N.S. Gesù Cristo'.

PRECISIAN. A name widely used of the *Puritans in the 16th and 17th cents. on account of their punctiliousness in observing external religious rules and forms.

PREDELLA. (1) The platform (foot-pace) on the uppermost of the steps to an altar, on which the priest formerly stood when celebrating Mass; it is now obsolete. (2) The lowest piece of a *reredos, immediately above the altar. The word is the Ital. predella, 'foot-stool', 'kneeling-stool'.

PREDESTINARIANISM. The doctrine according to which human freewill and co-operation are totally eliminated from the process of salvation by a thorough-going application of the principle of *Predestination. It has always been regarded as heretical by the RC Church.

PREDESTINATION (from Lat. 'praedestinare', Vulg. trans. of Gk. προορίζειν, 'fore-ordain'). The Divine decree acc. to which certain persons are infallibly guided to eternal salvation. The doctrine is not explicitly taught in the OT, but adumbrations of it may be found in the conception of the 'Book of Life' (Ps. 69. 29, Exod. 32. 32, Dan. 12. 1). Predestination is presupposed in the Gospels, e.g. Mt. 20. 23, where the Lord tells the Apostles that the sitting on His right or left is reserved 'for them for whom it hath been prepared of my Father', and in Jn. 10. 29, where He tells the Jews that no one can snatch from Him the sheep given Him by the Father. The most explicit teaching in the NT is in St. *Paul, esp. in the crucial text Rom. 8. 28–30, where the Apostle traces the process of the salvation of those 'that are called according to His purpose' from foreknowledge and predestination to vocation, justification, and glorification. The theme is resumed in Eph. 1. 3–14, where is added the factor of *election (q.v.), inserted between foreknowledge and predestination. In the same text great stress is laid on the gratuity of it, 'according to the good pleasure of His will'. This is still more emphasized in 2 Tim. 1. 9, where it is affirmed that God has called us 'not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace'.

In the W. the *Pelagian controversy caused a thorough investigation of the doctrine, which St. *Augustine developed on the basis of St. Paul's teaching. For him the mystery of Predestination consists in the inaccessibility to the human mind of the reasons for the Divine choice, which, nevertheless, is made in perfect justice. In his view it is the vocation not only to grace but also to glory. It contains the gift of final perseverance (donum perseverantiae) and depends not on human acceptance but on the eternal decree of God and is therefore infallible, without, however, acc. to Augustine, violating free-will. Evil enters into the plan of Predestination in so far as it is permitted by God in view of a greater good.

St. Augustine's doctrine was defended by St. *Prosper of Aquitaine. The 6th cent. Semi-Pelagian *Faustus of Riez attacked it, but he was opposed by St. *Fulgentius and St. *Caesarius of Arles. The latter's influence led to the acceptance of the Augustinian teaching by the Council of *Orange (529), which ended the quarrel between Augustinians and Anti-Augustinians. In the 9th cent. the discussions were revived by the monk *Gottschalk (q.v.), who seems to have propagated an exaggerated Augustinianism, teaching a double predestination to eternal life and eternal death. This doctrine was condemned by the Synod of *Quiercy in 849.

The medieval teaching was based on St.

Augustine, but took into account also the Greek doctrine, esp. as represented by St. *John of Damascus, who followed *Origen and stressed the universal saving will of God. Acc. to him God 'antecedently' wills the universal salvation of all men, but, in consequence of their sins, He wills eternal punishment for some. The reconciliation of this view with the Divine omnipotence and the efficacy of grace, stressed by St. Augustine, was undertaken by the Schoolmen. *Peter Lombard emphasized the absence, in God, of all passivity or dependence on the decisions of creatures, and St. *Bonaventure asserted the principle of the Divine predilection, which is the cause, not the effect, of the greater or lesser goodness of creatures. St. *Thomas Aquinas based the reconciliation of the universal saving will of God with the mystery of Predestination on the same principle, viz. that the love of God is the cause of the goodness of things (Amor Dei est causa bonitatis rerum).

The problem was again a matter of fundamental concern to the Reformers. J. *Calvin made the doctrine of Predestination one of the corner-stones of his system. Rejecting the universal saving will of God, he maintained that Christ's atoning death was offered for the elect alone. He added to the gratuitous predestination of the elect the equally gratuitous and positive reprobation of the damned, to whom salvation is denied from all eternity without any fault on their part. Calvin's disciples, however, were divided into Ante- or *Supralapsarians and *Sublapsarians (qq.v.). The Calvinist doctrine of Predestination, which was not accepted by the *Arminians (q.v.), was imposed by the Synod of *Dort (1618–19) and by the *Westminster Assembly (1647), which declared that at least after Adam's Fall God does not will the salvation of all men and that Christ died only for the elect.

The post-Tridentine RC theologians formulated their doctrine of Predestination with particular emphasis on the freedom of the human will. Among the systems devised to reconcile the latter with the dogma of Predestination was that of the Spaniard, L. de *Molina, who abandoned the principle of Divine predilection and taught predestination post praevisa merita. On the other side, F. *Suarez, *Bellarmine, and most Jesuit theologians except the strict Molinists recognize the gratuity of Predestination and its priority to the prevision of merits, though they seek to preserve the element of human consent and the reality of the Divine will that 'all men should be saved'.

The number of the predestined has been a matter for speculation from early times. Acc. to the teaching of the majority of the Fathers and theologians, who based their belief on passages such as Mt. 22. 14, it was smaller than that of the reprobate.

On the Biblical teaching on Predestination, see esp. commentaries on the OT Prophets and Rom. and works on the theology of St. Paul. The more important post-Biblical discussions include Origen, De Principiis, ii and iii; St. Augustine, De Praedestinatione Sanctorum; and Calvin, Institutes, iii. Modern discussions will be found in treatises on dogmatic theology. J. B. *Mozley, A Treatise on the Augustinian Doctrine of Predestination (1855); W. A. Copinger, A Treatise on Predestination, Election and Grace (1889), with bibl. R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., La Prédestination des saints et la grâce (1936). H. H. Rowley, The Biblical Doctrine of Election (1950). P. Maury, La Prédestination (1957; Eng. tr., 1960). J. Moltmann, Prädestination und Perseveranz. Geschichte und Bedeutung der reformierten Lehre 'de perseverantia sanctorum' (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, xii; Neukirchen, 1961). V. Boublík, La predestinazione. S. Paolo e S. Agostino (1961). G. G. Most, Novum tentamen ad solutionem de Gratia et Praedestinatione (Rome, 1963). M. J. Farrelly, O.S.B., Predestination, Grace and Free Will [1964]. A. Bsteh, Zur Frage nach der Universalität der Erlösung unter besonderer Berücksichtigung ihres Verständnisses bei den Vätern des zweiten Jahrhunderts (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, xiv; 1966). G. Hoennicke in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 581–6, s.v. 'Prädestination I. Schriftlehre'; E. F. K. Müller, ib., pp. 586–602, s.v. 'Prädestination II. Kirchenlehre'; J. Pohle in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 376–84, s.vv. 'Predestinarianism' and 'Predestination'; A. S. Martin in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 225–35, s.v.; A. Lemonnyer, O.P.–H. D. Simonin, O.P.–R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P.–B. Lavaud, O.P., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2809–3022, s.v. 'Prédestination'; H. Rondet, S.J.–K. *Rahner, S.J., in Sacramentum Mundi, v (1970), pp. 88–91.

PREDESTINATUS. See Praedestinatus.

PRE-ESTABLISHED HARMONY. In the system of G. W. *Leibniz, the predetermined harmony between all the 'simple substances' (monads) in the universe. Leibniz believed that God had established such a harmony before creation, which explained the apparent interaction between mind and body in the world of experience. See also Occasionalism.

PREFACE. In the Eucharist, the words which introduce the central part of the service. It begins with the '*Sursum Corda' and ends with the '*Sanctus'. The main part of it is an ascription of praise to the Creator in union with the worship of the whole angelic company. It varies acc. to the feast observed. In W. liturgies there is a common form into which a 'proper' is interpolated on the greater feast days. The 1662 BCP provides 'proper prefaces' for *Christmas, *Easter, *Ascensiontide, and *Whitsuntide, and on *Trinity Sunday; a number of others are included in the ASB and in other modern Anglican liturgies. In the Roman rite still more propers are in use. The oldest surviving Roman *Sacramentary, the *Leonine, had a separate Preface for every Mass, the *Gelasian had 54, but in the *Gregorian Sacramentary their number had fallen to ten. In the E. Church the Preface does not change with the season. Historically the Preface is the first part of the prayer of *consecration or *canon; but in the Roman Mass it now appears to be a separate entity from the canon, and in the BCP it is divided from the consecratory prayer by the 'Prayer of *Humble Access'.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, esp. pp. 145–61 (Eng. tr., pp. 115–28). Christine Mohrmann, 'Sur l'histoire de Praefari–Praefatio' in V.C., vii (1953), pp. 1–15. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1948), cols. 1704–16, s.v., with reff.

PRELATE. A term originally of wide connotation, it gradually acquired a purely ecclesiastical reference and still later came to be restricted to Church officials of high rank. In the C of E the title is restricted nowadays to bishops. In the Roman Church it was long used of important ecclesiastics having an independent jurisdiction, but it is now also applied to a variety of officers attached to the Roman curia who may have only an honorary dignity. The term 'prelacy', which denotes the system of ecclesiastical government by bishops, is commonly used only in a hostile sense.

PREMONSTRATENSIAN CANONS, also 'Norbertines' and, in England, 'White Canons' from the colour of their habit, an order founded by St. *Norbert (q.v.) at Prémontré, near Laon, in 1120. The basis of the rule was the so-called rule of St. *Augustine, with additional austerities, e.g. entire abstinence from meat. In its details, the Premonstratensian life also came under *Cistercian influences through Norbert's friendship with St. *Bernard of Clairvaux. In 1126 the order received papal approbation and quickly spread over W. Europe, their earliest English house being at Newhouse in Lincoln (c. 1143). They became powerful in Hungary and also took an active part in evangelizing the lands between the Elbe and the Oder. Relaxation in the severity of the original rule led to several reforms and the creation of more or less independent congregations, notably in Spain, where a virtually self-contained body was established c. 1573. The order suffered severely from the French Revolution and had become nearly extinct in the early 19th cent. More recently it has re-established its influence and is esp. strong in Belgium, with its headquarters at Tongerloo.

Numerous studies of primary importance in Analectes de l'ordre de Prémontré, ed. M. van Waefelghem (12 vols., Brussels, 1905–14); contd. as Analecta Praemonstratensia (Tongerloo, 1925 ff.). C. L. Hugo, Sacri et Canonici Ordinis Praemonstratensis Annales (2 vols., Nancy, 1734–5). F. Petit, Ord. Praem., L'Ordre de Prémontré ('Les Ordres religieux'; 1927). N. Backmund, O. Praem., Monasticon Praemonstratense, id est Historia circariarum atque canoniarum candidi et canonici ordinis Praemonstratensis (3 vols., Straubing, 1949–56). F. Petit, O. Praem., La Spiritualité des Prémontrés aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles (Études de Théologie et d'Histoire de Spiritualité, x; 1947). J. Le Paige, Bibliotheca Praemonstratensis Ordinis (Paris, 1633). L. Goovaerts, Écrivains, artistes et savants de l'ordre de Prémontré. Dictionnaire bio-bibliographique (4 vols., bound in 3, 1899–1917). F. Winter, Die Prämonstratenser des zwölften Jahrhunderts und ihre Bedeutung für das nordöstliche Deutschland (1865). F. A. *Gasquet (ed.), Collectanea Anglo-Premonstratensia. Documents drawn from the Original Register of the Order, now in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Transcript of another Register in the British Museum (Camden Society Third Series, xii; 1906). H. M. Colvin, The White Canons in England (1951), with bibl. R. van Waefelghem, Répertoire des sources imprimées et manuscrites relatives à l'histoire et à la liturgie des monastères de l'ordre de Prémontré (1930). Heimbucher, i, pp. 432–48, and ii, p. 657 f. R. J. Cornell, O. Praem., in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 737–9, s.v.

PREPARATION, The. In the W. Church the opening prayers at *Mass, formerly recited alternately by the priest and ministers (or *server) at the foot of the *altar. It usually consisted of Ps. 43 (Vulg. 42), a confession of sin, and two prayers preceded by four *versicles and responses. In the Roman Rite a shorter form dates from the 11th cent.; in substantially its traditional form it is found from c. 1300. In the current RC rite the Mass opens with the Rite of Entry, consisting of psalms, greeting, address, act of penitence and absolution.

Jungmann (ed. 1952), i, pp. 377–409; Eng. tr., i, pp. 290–311.

PREPARATION, Day of (Gk. παρασκευή). A name given by the Jews to Fridays, i.e. the day preceding, and thus employed in 'preparation' for, the *Sabbath (hence also προσάββατον). The title was perhaps used occasionally also of the day before certain other of the greater feasts, e.g. the *Passover. In all four Gospels, the Crucifixion is recorded to have taken place on the Preparation (Mt. 27. 62, Mk. 15. 42, Lk. 23. 54, Jn. 19. 14, 31, 42).

PRESANCTIFIED, Mass of the (Gk. λειτουργία τῶν προηγιασμένων). A shortened form of the Eucharistic Liturgy without consecration, a *Host consecrated at a previous Mass being used for Communion. It is attested as an approved custom for the E. by can. 52 of the *Quinisextum (692), and in the Byzantine Rite it was formerly celebrated on most week-days in *Lent, though now it takes place ordinarily only on the *Wednesdays and *Fridays. In the Latin Church it is restricted to *Good Friday. It first appears in Gaul. It is described in the *Gelasian Sacramentary and was in general use in Rome by the 9th cent. According to the current rite, after the *Veneration of the Cross, the ciborium, containing Hosts consecrated on *Maundy Thursday, is brought from the Altar of *Repose to the High Altar. The priest says the Lord's prayer, in which the people join, the *embolism, a pre-Communion prayer, and the invitation to Communion (Ecce Agnus Dei); he then communicates himself and the people. The dismissal follows after a single collect. Before the reform of the Holy Week liturgy in 1955 the rite was very much more elaborate, and only the celebrant communicated; in that year General Communion, which was the custom in the early Middle Ages, was restored. At the same time the term 'pre-sanctified' was dropped from the official documents.

The text of the various rites will be found in the standard edd. of the Liturgies. Earlier expositions incl. St. *Theodore Studites, Explicatio Divinae Liturgiae Praesanctificatorum (PG, xcix, 1687 f.), and L. *Allatius, De Missa Praesanctificatorum (1648). G. *Dix, O.S.B., 'The Christian Passover' in Laudate, xiii (1935), pp. 2–18; repr. sep. as The Mass of the Presanctified. H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3, Rome etc., 1956–7), esp. i, pp. 108–16, ii, pp. 797–806. I. Ziadé in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 77–111; H. Schmidt, S.J., in L.W., i (1962), cols. 892–5, s.v. 'Goede Vrijdag, VII', with bibl.

PRESBYTER. The earliest organization of the Christian Churches in Palestine resembled that of the Jewish synagogues, each of which was administered by a board of 'elders' (πρεσβύτεροι, i.e. 'presbyters'). Acts 11. 30 and 15. 22 witness to this collegiate system of Church government at *Jerusalem, and Acts 14. 23 mentions the appointment of Presbyters in the various Churches founded by St. *Paul. At first the Presbyters seem to have been identical with the 'overseers' (ἐπίσκοποι, i.e. 'bishops'), and such passages as Acts 20. 17 f., Phil. 1. 1, and Tit. 1. 5, 7 reveal the terms as interchangeable. But from the 2nd cent. the title of bishop is normally confined to the presidents of these councils of Presbyters, and such 'bishops' came to be distinguished, both in honour and prerogative, from the Presbyters, who were held to derive their authority by delegation from the bishops. The presbyterate, in its developed form, possesses both authority in administration and teaching and the sacerdotal functions foreshadowed by the Jewish priesthood. The English word 'priest' derives ultimately from this root. See also Bishop.

For discussion of the office of Presbyter and its relation to that of the Bishop in NT times see works on the early history of the Ministry; some listed above, p. 177, s.v. 'Bishop'. Many theologians now defend the original identity of the two offices. Cf. also J. A. *Robinson in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 3833–7, s.v.; G. Bornkamm in T.W.B., vi (1959), cols. 651–83, s.v. Πρέσβυς, etc.

PRESBYTERIANISM. Presbyterianism is a form of ecclesiastical polity wherein the Church is governed by presbyters. Its proponents in the 16th and 17th cents. did not regard it as an innovation but as a rediscovery of the apostolic model found in the NT, and many of them held it to be the only permissible form of government and thus permanently binding upon the Church. However, the model had to be adapted to suit a wide variety of regional variations. The pattern for the city-state of Geneva required considerable emendation before it could be applied to the parochial system covering the whole of *Scotland. Many Presbyterians now allow that the Church in NT times had episcopal and congregational as well as presbyterian elements and that Presbyterianism has no jure divino claim to be the only permissible or valid Church polity.

The normal pattern of government of Presbyterian Churches is a hierarchy of courts: the Kirk-session (consistory) of the particular congregation consisting of the minister and elders; the Presbytery (colloquy, classis) consisting of ministers and representative elders of the Churches within a prescribed area; Synods consisting of members of several presbyteries within a large area; and the General Assembly which is the supreme legislative and administrative court and which consists of ministers and elders, usually in equal numbers, commissioned by the presbyteries. These courts are representative bodies based ultimately upon popular election.

Differing views exist concerning the status of the elders. Some see both ministers and elders as presbyters, the ministers being set apart by their ordination to be preachers and teachers of the Word of God, and the elders being set apart by their ordination to a ruling office within the Church. This view is based on 1 Tim. 5. 17. Others see the elders as laymen chosen to be helpers and administrators in ruling the Church. This view is based on 1 Cor. 12. 28. Some also regard *Apostolic Succession through presbyters as an important historical fact which enhances the position of presbyters as ministers of the Word and Sacraments; others view the idea of a lineal succession with indifference or even with disfavour. Ministers are elected ad vitam aut culpam by the people, but their ordination is an act of the Presbytery. The standard of education required for the Presbyterian ministry is traditionally high, the curriculum usually including three years in Arts at a university and three years in Theology, but modifications are made to meet changing patterns of professional training and to facilitate those of mature years who offer themselves for the ministry. Many Presbyterian Churches now admit women to ordination.

The only Presbyterian State-Church is the Church of Scotland, but it claims and exercises the spiritual independence which is a fundamental principle of all Presbyterians. All Presbyterian Churches declare that the supreme standard of faith and practice is contained in the Scriptures, and most of them adopt the Confession and Catechisms of the *Westminster Assembly as subordinate standards, which are interpreted with varying degrees of latitude in the different Churches. Their doctrine is traditionally *Calvinistic. Worship is simple, orderly and dignified, with an emphasis upon the hearing and preaching of the Word of God. There is a family likeness in the forms of services used in the different Churches, but there are variations of ceremony and of liturgical practice due to local traditions and to degrees of churchmanship. The usual Sunday morning service has the shape of an ante-Communion service. Few churches have a weekly celebration of the Sacrament; monthly celebrations are not uncommon; quarterly celebrations are widespread, but a twice-yearly cycle remains the custom in some churches. Discipline is rarely exercised so publicly, harshly or frequently as it once was. Since Church membership is not now required as a condition of citizenship, Churches have now no compulsive power beyond the persuasion of their own censures and the readiness of members to be bound thereby.

Presbyterian Churches are found in all the continents. The strongest concentrations of Presbyterians are in the *U.S.A., Scotland, *Hungary, *Holland, Northern *Ireland, Switzerland, and *France. Some Presbyterian Churches have their roots in the Reformed Churches of Europe. Others, especially those in the British Commonwealth and in the U.S.A., had their origins through emigrants from countries such as Scotland and Ireland. Others are the results of missionary effort and these Churches are found especially in *India, Africa and S. America. The membership of the Presbyterian Churches, along with their adherents, has been estimated to be about 50 millions.

Presbyterian Churches have been linked in the World Alliance of Reformed and Presbyterian Churches which was founded in 1875 and has had its headquarters in Geneva. In 1970 this Alliance was merged with the International Congregational Council to form the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (Congregational/Presbyterian). Some Presbyterian Churches have also been involved in regional unions which have led to the formation of the United Church of *Canada, the Church of *South India, and the Church of *North India. In 1972 the Presbyterian Church of England united with the *Congregational Church of England and Wales to form the United Reformed Church.

See also Scotland, Christianity in; and, for the Presbyterian Church of *Wales, Calvinistic Methodism.

Useful introd. by J. *Moffatt, The Presbyterian Church (1928). J. N. Ogilvie, The Presbyterian Churches. Their Place and Power in Modern Christendom (1896; enlarged ed., 1925); G. B. Howard, The Rise and Progress of Presbyterianism (1898). J. Macpherson, Presbyterianism [1883]. A. Wright, The Presbyterian Church. Its Worship, Functions, and Ministerial Orders (1895); W. M. Macphail, The Presbyterian Church. A Brief Account of its Doctrine, Worship, and Polity (1908). E. W. Smith, The Creed of the Presbyterians (Toronto, 1901); H. J. Wotherspoon–J. M. Kirkpatrick, A Manual of Church Doctrine [1919], revised by T. F. Torrance–R. Selby Wright (1960). G. D. Henderson, Presbyterianism (Chalmers Lectures; Aberdeen, 1954); J. Kennedy, Presbyterian Authority and Discipline (Chalmers Lectures; Edinburgh, 1960). Brief, but useful, account by J. M. Barkley, Presbyterianism (Belfast, 1951).

A. H. Drysdale, History of the Presbyterians in England. Their Rise, Decline and Revival (1889). Olive M. Griffiths, Religion and Learning. A Study in English Presbyterian Thought from the Bartholomew Ejections [1662] to the Foundation of the Unitarian Movement (1935). W. T. Latimer, A History of the Irish Presbyterians (Belfast–Edinburgh, [1893]; ed. 2, 1902). C. A. *Briggs, American Presbyterianism. Its Growth and Early History (New York, 1885); R. E. Thompson, A History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (American Church History Series, vi; New York, 1895); A. C. Zenos, Presbyterianism in America. Past, Present and Prospective (New York, 1937); L. A. Loetscher, The Broadening Church. A Study of Theological Issues in the Presbyterian Church since 1869 (Philadelphia, 1954). M. W. Armstrong–L. A. Loetscher–C. A. Anderson (edd.), The Presbyterian Enterprise. Sources of American Presbyterian History (Philadelphia, 1956). E. T. Thompson, Presbyterians in the South (3 vols., Richmond, Va., 1963–73). J. Dall in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 244–70, s.v., with bibl. by J. Herkless, p. 270 f. See also works cited under Scotland, Christianity in.

PRESBYTERY. (1) The sanctuary or eastern part of the chancel of a church beyond the choir. (2) The residence of (esp.) RC priests. (3) Acc. to current Presbyterian usage, the Church court having oversight and jurisdiction over a certain area, the extent of which is decided by the *General Assembly, and consisting of the ministers and representative elders of the congregations within the bounds. A Presbyterian minister is ordained by it (the ministerial members only joining in the imposition of hands) and is subject to it, and not to his session. It belongs to the Presbytery, not to the court of a particular congregation (*Kirk-session), to see that public worship is in accordance with the law and usage of the Church.

PRESENTATION OF CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE, The. In the BCP an alternative name for the feast of the *Purification of the BVM or *Candlemas (q.v.), kept on 2 Feb. In 1969 the RC Church adopted the title of 'the Presentation of the Lord' for this feast.

PRESENTATION OF THE BVM, The (not to be confused with the preceding). A feast kept in the E. and W. Churches on 21 Nov. to commemorate the presentation of the Virgin in the Temple when three years old, as related in the apocryphal 'Book of *James'. The feast was first observed in the E. c. the 8th cent., and in the W. gradually established itself in the later Middle Ages. *Sixtus IV received it into the Roman *Breviary, St. *Pius V removed it again, and *Sixtus V made its observance universal in the RC Church in 1585. In the E. it is one of the *Twelve Great Feasts (q.v.).

M. Zalan, O.S.B., 'Das früheste Vorkommen des Festes Praesentatio B.M.V. im Abendland' in E.L., xli (1927), p. 188 f. Sr. Mary Jerome Kishpaugh, O.P., The Feast of the Presentation of the Virgin Mary in the Temple (Catholic University of America, Diss., Washington, D.C., 1941). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 103–15. G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1966–8.

PRESENTATION OF THE LORD, The. The title given in the RC Church since 1969 to the feast of *Candlemas.

PRESTER JOHN (i.e. 'Presbyter' John), legendary medieval Christian king of Asia. The story of an E. *Nestorian priest-king who had defeated the Moslems and would bring help to the Holy Land spread through Europe from the middle of the 12th cent. He is first mentioned in *Otto of Freising's Chronicle and soon afterwards in a letter full of fables, addressed by 'Prester John' to the German Emp. *Frederick I and to the E. Emp. Manuel and several other princes. In 1177 Pope *Alexander III wrote a letter, headed 'Indorum Regi, Sacerdotum Sanctissimo' ('to the King of the Indies, the most holy priest'), which was supposed to be addressed to Prester John. It has been argued, however, that it was meant for a real historical personage, viz. the King of *Ethiopia, which country was commonly confused with India during the Middle Ages; and this contention gains weight from the fact that in the later Middle Ages Prester John was actually located in Ethiopia. Another theory, based on an account of the 13th cent. *Franciscan missionary, William of Rubruck, identifies him with a Chinese prince, Gor Khan, who defeated the Sultan of Persia in 1141 and founded an empire in which lived a number of Nestorian Christians. The designation 'priest' is held to be due to a confusion of khan, 'king', with kam, 'priest'. The whole story seems to be a legend of Nestorian origin, but it probably contains a nucleus of historical fact.

Otto of Freising, Chronicon, vii. 33. F. Zarncke, 'Der Priester Johannes' in Abh. (Säch.), vii (1879), pp. 827–1030 (with Lat. text of the letter sent to the Emp., pp. 909–24), viii (1883), pp. 1–186. F. Fleuret, 'La Lettre de Prêtre Jean, pseudo-roi d'Abyssinie' in Mercure de France, cclxviii (1936), pp. 294–318, with Fr. tr. of the letter, pp. 298–309. E. D. Ross, 'Prester John and the Empire of Ethiopia' in A. P. Newton (ed.), Travel and Travellers in the Middle Ages (1926), pp. 174–94, with Eng. tr. of extract of the letter, pp. 174–8. G. Oppert, Der Presbyter Johann in Sage und Geschichte (1864). Dr. Bruum, 'Die Verwandlungen des Presbyters Johannes' in Zeitschrift der Gesellschaft für Erdkunde zu Berlin, xi (1876), pp. 279–314. C. Marinescu, 'Le Prêtre Jean. Son pays, explication de son nom' in Académie roumaine. Bulletin de la Section historique, x (1923), pp. 73–112; id., 'Encore une fois le problème du Prêtre Jean', ib., xxvi (1945), pp. 202–22. L. Olschki, 'Der Brief des Presbyters Johannes' in Historische Zeitschrift, cxliv (1931), pp. 1–14. R. Hennig, 'Das Christentum im mittelalterlichen Asien und sein Einfluss auf die Sage vom "Priester Johannes" ' in Historische Vierteljahrschrift, xxix (1935), pp. 234–52. C. E. Nowell, 'The Historical Prester John' in Speculum, xxviii (1953), pp. 435–55.

PREVENIENT GRACE. The species of Actual *Grace which, as an illumination or inspiration of the Holy Spirit, precedes the free determination of the will. It is held to mark the beginning of all activity leading to *justification, which cannot be achieved without it, but its acceptance or rejection depends on man's free choice. Belief in the existence of Prevenient Grace claims Scriptural support in such texts as Ps. 59. 10 (Vulg.), Rom. 8. 30, and 2 Tim. 1. 9. It was defended by St. *Augustine (who often uses the technical term, 'gratia praeveniens') against the *Pelagians, taught by St. *Thomas Aquinas, formally defined by the Council of *Trent, and asserted in the Anglican Article X.

PRICE, RICHARD (1723–91), Nonconformist minister, moral and political philosopher. In 1758 he published A Review of the Principal Questions in Morals (ed. 3, 1787), in which he defended a view of ethical action which had many affinities with the teaching later expounded by I. *Kant. He held that the rightness and wrongness of an action belonged to it intrinsically and criticized the 'moral sense' view of ethics which had secured popularity through such writers as Lord *Shaftesbury (d. 1713) and F. Hutcheson (d. 1746). In the fields of politics and economics he advocated the reduction of the National Debt, and strongly supported the cause of American Independence. Though holding opposite views on morals and metaphysics, he became an intimate friend of J. *Priestley. By 1778 both were '*Unitarians', and in 1791 Price became an original member of the Unitarian Society.

Modern ed. of Price's Review of the Principal Questions in Morals by D. D. Raphael (Oxford, 1948 [based on ed. 3 of 1787, but repr. preface from ed. 1]). The principal authority is the Memoir by his nephew, William Morgan (London, 1815). Modern life by R. Thomas (ib., 1924), with detailed list of his works, pp. 173–7, and other bibl. C. B. Cone, The Torchbearer of Freedom. The Influence of Richard Price on Eighteenth Century Thought (Kentucky University Press, Lexington, 1952). L. Åqvist, The Moral Philosophy of Richard Price (Library of Theoria, v; Lund, 1960). W. D. Hudson, Reason and Right. A Critical Examination of Richard Price's Moral Philosophy (1970). T. Fowler in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 334–7. See also bibl. to Unitarians.

PRICKET. A stand containing one or more upright spikes on which to fix votive candles.

PRIDE. The first of the seven deadly sins, being the inordinate love of one's own excellence. It is traditionally believed to have been the sin of the angels and the first man, and is denounced as a vice particularly repugnant to God throughout the OT and NT (e.g. Prov. 16. 18; 1 Pet. 5. 5).

PRIDEAUX, HUMPHREY (1648–1724), Dean of *Norwich from 1702. He was educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he came under the influence of J. *Fell, and from 1677 onwards held a succession of benefices. As a Low Churchman he welcomed the Revolution of 1688, and supported the proposed changes in the BCP with a view to the inclusion of dissenters. His fame rested on two treatises, his Life of Mahomet (1697), really a polemical tract against the *Deists, and The Old and New Testaments connected in the History of the Jews (2 vols., 1716–18), an account of the history of the Jewish people in the last centuries before the Christian era. He also issued The Validity of the Orders of the C of E (1688) and several other pamphlets.

Anon. Life (London, 1748, prob. by T. Birch), from information supplied by his son. Bibliotheca Cornubiensis, ii (1878), pp. 527–33. His letters to John Ellis, Under-Secretary of State, 1674–1722, ed. by E. M. Thompson (Camden Society, N.S., xv; 1875). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 354–6.

PRIE-DIEU (Fr., 'pray God'). A small prayer-desk for private use, usually constructed with a sloping ledge and sometimes also a shelf for books. The name appears to date from the early 17th century.

PRIERIAS, SYLVESTER (1456–1523), Sylvester Mazzolini, opponent of M. *Luther. A native of Priero in Piedmont, he entered the *Dominican Order, taught at *Bologna and *Venice, and from 1508 to 1510 was Vicar General of the province of Lombardy. After being Prior of Cremona, *Leo X appointed him in 1514 to the Dominican chair of theology at the Gymnasium Romanum. His Summa Summarum quae Silvestrina dicitur (1515), an alphabetically arranged compendium of moral theology which won great popularity through its convenience despite its slight intrinsic theological merit, brought his name into prominence and in 1515 Leo made him 'Sacri Palatii Magister'. Here he acted as *Inquisitor. He took an active part in condemning J. *Reuchlin and in 1517 entered the lists against M. Luther with his Dialogus de Potestate Papae. Some brief and hastily compiled writings against the Reformer were followed in 1519 by a more elaborate Errata et Argumenta M. Luteris [sic] recitata, detecta, repulsa, et copiosissime trita (1520). It is generally agreed that the Papal case suffered in its early stages through not being in more competent hands. He also wrote a commentary on the 'Summa', Conflatum ex S. Thoma, of which that on Part I only was printed (1519).

There is a brief Lat. diss. devoted to his life and works by F. Michalski (Münster i.W., 1892), with detailed list of his Lat. writings, pp. 21–34. F. Lauchert, Die italienischen literarischen Gegner Luthers (Erläuterungen und Ergänzungen zu Janssens Geschichte des deutschen Volkes ed. L. von *Pastor, viii; 1912), pp. 7–30. Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 55–8. M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 474–7, s.v. 'Mazolini'.

PRIEST. The term 'priest' is etymologically a contraction of '*presbyter' (Gk. πρεσβύτερος, 'elder'), but while the AV and RV of the NT regularly render πρεσβύτερος by 'elder', they keep 'priest' and 'priesthood' for the purely sacerdotal terms ἱερεύς and ἱεράτευμα (Lat. sacerdos and sacerdotium). The latter words are never used in the NT specifically of Christian ministers, though they are applied to the Christian body as a whole (1 Pet. 2. 5 and 9; Rev. 5. 10). By the close of the Old English period the English term 'priest' had become the current word alike for 'presbyter' and 'sacerdos' and so an ambiguous term. The idea and institution of priesthood is found in almost all the great religions, usually connected with the conception of *sacrifice. In some cases the duties attach to the father of the family or the ruler of the tribe or nation, but in most religions a separate order developed.

Acc. to the OT the priesthood before the age of *Moses was patriarchal. The father sacrificed for the family (*Noah, Gen. 8. 20; *Abraham, Gen. 22. 13), the sheik for his tribe (Jethro, Ex. 2. 16) and the prince for his people (*Melchizedek, Gen. 14. 18). Acc. to an early tradition, Moses himself was a priest. At the same time it appears that there was a separate class of priests (Ex. 19. 22), but it was not they whom Moses employed to offer sacrifice, but 'young men' and himself (cf. Ex. 24. 4–8). Later a more formal priesthood seems to have been established. On Mt. Sinai Moses was ordered to consecrate *Aaron and his three sons 'to minister in the priest's office' (Ex. 28. 1). In Ex. 32. 26–9 the tribe of Levi was chosen to be consecrated to the Lord; eventually the *Levites were given charge of the services of the Tabernacle, and only the sons of Aaron were to exercise the functions of the priesthood (Num. passim). All subsequent priests were believed to be descendants of Aaron, though various legal fictions mitigated this rule. As the holiness of Israel centred on the Sanctuary, the importance of the priesthood, and esp. of the *High Priest (q.v.), increased with the enhanced place of the Temple in later Judaism. His position, exemplified in the Priestly Code of the Pentateuch, as mediator between God and man, came to be the predominant idea of the Jewish priesthood in the time of Christ.

In the NT all the pre-Christian ideas of priesthood were raised to a new level in the Christian revelation. The idea of Christ as the culmination of the High Priesthood finds clear expression in Heb. 5, where He is described as 'called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedek' (Heb. 5. 10). The Jewish priesthood is seen as the type of His priesthood, as the Jewish sacrifice was of His Sacrifice. By His Sacrifice as Priest He reconciles God to men, fulfilling what had been foreshadowed by the Jewish sacrifices. His own realization of His priesthood is summed up in the 'High Priestly Prayer' in Jn. 17. But though He was in the Sacrifice the Priest, He was also the Victim, the 'Lamb slain from the foundation of the World' (Rev. 13. 8); consequently, while He remains 'our Great High Priest', yet for the continuation of the offering of the Sacrifice, a Christian priesthood was established in the Church. For although in one sense His priesthood is all-sufficient and through Him we have 'access by the one Spirit to the Father' (Eph. 2. 18), and the whole Church is through baptism conceived as sharing in the priesthood, a Christian priesthood was held to be implied in His teaching and, esp. in relation to the Eucharist, came to be regarded as an integral element in the Church.

The idea of priesthood as belonging to the Christian ministry was, however, a gradual development. Apart from a doubtful reference in St. *Ignatius (Phil., 9), the term 'priest' does not appear to have been applied to Christian ministers until the end of the 2nd cent. The 'presbyters' of the NT were not commonly called 'sacerdotes' until the time of St. *Cyprian (Ep. 61). At first the use of the term was commonly confined to Bishops. It appears in St. Cyprian that, while priests shared in the episcopal sacerdotium, could offer the Sacrifice of the Eucharist, and by the imposition of hands receive a penitent lapsus*, these functions were to be exercised only in the absence of the Bishop and seem to have been regarded as delegated by him. With the spread of Christianity in the country and the establishment of parish churches, the presbyters adopted more fully the priestly functions of the Bishop. A letter of *Innocent I to Decentius (A.D. 416) explains that in towns the Eucharist is to be consecrated by the Bishop only and sent to parish priests, but in the outlying churches the priests are to consecrate themselves. When the priest thus independently obtained power to consecrate in the Eucharist and administer most other Sacraments, the way was opened for the fullest medieval doctrine of the priesthood. This was most fully developed in connexion with the power conferred in *Ordination, esp. when, in the 11th cent., the custom spread of ordaining priests who had no benefice. As the parish priest came to be the normal celebrant of the Eucharist and customarily to exercise the power of absolution, esp. with the development of eucharistic theology and the obligation of confession (1215), increasingly he came to be regarded as the representative of God to the people rather than the converse. His supernatural powers and functions were emphasized, so that during the Middle Ages, vis-à-vis the laity, a priest acquired a position outside that of the feudal hierarchy. He remained, however, entirely subordinate to his bishop, who retained his superiority in such matters as Ordination and *Confirmation and his canonical jurisdiction, though there remained some doubt whether his office was of a different order from that of the priesthood. The validity of the position of a priest always depended upon his ordination.

The tendency of medieval theology to see the priesthood of the clergy almost exclusively in relation to the Mass led to its rejection by the Reformers. The term 'priest' was retained in the BCP apparently in order to make it clear that deacons were not to celebrate the Holy Communion. In general parlance, except in the N. of England, the term 'clergyman' was more frequently used in the C. of E to avoid the implications of that of priest. With the revival of Catholic views, however, the term 'priest' has again come into common use. This revival of the term outside the RC Church prob. also reflects a more comprehensive view of the priesthood, which is seen in relation to the whole Church and to that extent ministerial rather than dominating, and a fresh recognition of its relation to the priesthood of Christ. See also Orders.

E. O. James, The Nature and Function of Priesthood. A Comparative and Anthropological Study (1955). E. Landtman, The Origin of Priesthood (University of Finland thesis; Ekenaes, 1905).

On priesthood in the OT, W. W. G. Baudissin, Die Geschichte des alttestamentlichen Priesterthums untersucht (1889). E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, ii (ed. 4, 1907), pp. 267–363. R. H. *Kennett, Old Testament Essays (1928), pp. 59–90 ('The Jewish Priesthood'). A. C. Welch, Prophet and Priest in Old Israel (1936); J. Hoschander, The Priests and Prophets (posthumously publd., New York, 1938). W. Baudissin in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 67–97, s.v. 'Priests and Levites'; J. Köberle in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1906), pp. 32–47, s.v. 'Priestertum im AT'.

For the origins of the Christian Priesthood, see bibl. to artt. Orders and Ordination and to Bishop, par. 2. Cf. also H. S. Box (ed.), Priesthood (1937). J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., Le Sacerdoce dans le mystère du Christ (1957), and N. Lash–J. Rhymer (edd.), The Christian Priesthood (9th Downside Symposium, 1970). E. *Hatch in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 1698–1708, s.v. 'Priest or Presbyter'; A. Michel in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 138–61, s.v. 'Prêtre'; G. Schrenk in T.W.B., iii (1938), cols. 257–84, s.v. ἱερεύς, and G. Bornkamm, ib., vi (1959), cols. 651–83, s.v. πρέσβυς. N. Turchi–A. Romeo in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1532–40, s.v. 'Sacerdozio'. On the conception of priesthood in non-Christian religions, E. Landtman and others in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 278–336, s.v.

PRIEST, High. See High Priest.

'PRIEST IN ABSOLUTION, The' (1866; 1870). A privately printed manual for the use of Anglican confessors, compiled by the Rev. J. C. *Chambers (q.v.). The second part, dealing with certain sins which necessarily called for treatment in a technical manual, was sold only to bona fide confessors. On Chambers's death (1874), to prevent misuse of the work, the remaining stock and copyright were bought by the Society of the Holy Cross. The work created a storm of protest against the *High Church Movement when, on 14 June 1877, Lord Redesdale, into whose possession by some inadvertence a copy had come, drew attention to its contents in the House of Lords. The attack, in which A. C. *Tait, Abp. of Canterbury, took part, caused for a short time much annoyance to High Churchmen, but it passed without leaving any permanent mark and with Chambers's high character unstained.

R. T. *Davidson–W. Benham, Life of Archibald Campbell Tait (1891), ii, pp. 171–84. W. Walsh, The Secret History of the Oxford Movement (1897), pp. 93–146 (hostile); J. Embry, The Catholic Movement and the S.S.C. (1931), pp. 97–127.

PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH (1733–1804), *Presbyterian minister and scientist. A native of West Yorkshire, he entered Daventry Academy to train for the *Presbyterian ministry in 1751. In 1755 he became minister at Needham Market, Suffolk, and in 1758 at Nantwich, where he opened a school. His religious beliefs became increasingly unorthodox. He came to hold *Arian views on the Person of Christ, and rejected the doctrine of the *Atonement and the Inspiration of the Bible. In 1761 he became tutor of languages at the newly founded Academy at Warrington, and in 1767 was appointed minister of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, where he embraced *Socinianism. Here he brought out the Theological Repository, a critical periodical that appeared irregularly and aroused much hostility, favoured the autonomy of the individual congregation and an increase in the number of sects, and complete toleration for RCs; and he attacked the idea of a national Church. In 1772 a librarianship to Lord Shelburne gave him sufficient leisure to pursue his scientific studies, which had already gained him a reputation. During this period he published his Institutes of Natural and Revealed Religion (3 vols., 1772–4), Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit (1777), and A Harmony of the Evangelists (also 1777). In 1780 he gave up his post with Lord Shelburne and settled at Birmingham, where he became junior minister of the New Meeting Society. In 1782 he published his widely read History of the Corruptions of Christianity. He denied the impeccability and infallibility of the Lord, views which he finally elaborated in his History of Early Opinions concerning Jesus Christ (1786). The book provoked a violent controversy, his chief orthodox critic being S. *Horsley. In 1791 he became one of the founders of the *Unitarian Society, and in the same year defended the French Revolution in his Letters to Burke. The hostility aroused was such that he had to escape to London, where he became morning preacher at Gravel Pit Chapel, Hackney. In 1794 he went to America, spending the remaining years of his life at Northumberland, Pennsylvania. During this period he adopted the doctrine of universal restitution and of moral progress in life after death. Despite his unorthodoxy on other points he was a firm believer in the mission of Moses and the Messiahship of the Lord. In the realm of science he is known chiefly for his 'discovery' of oxygen in 1774 and for his great work on Experiments and Observations on Different Kinds of Air (1774–86).

Theological and Miscellaneous Works, ed. J. T. Rutt (25 vols., London [1817–31]). Selections from his Writings ed. I. V. Brown (University Park, Pa., 1962). Memoirs of Dr. Joseph Priestley, to the Year 1795, written by himself, with a Continuation . . . by his son, J. Priestley (London, 1806); repr., with introd. by J. Lindsay (Bath, 1970). Modern lives by T. E. Thorpe ('English Men of Science', 1906), Anne Holt (London, 1931) and F. W. Gibbs (ib. [1965]). R. E. Crook, A Bibliography of Joseph Priestley 1733–1804 (1966). A. Gordon–P. J. Hartog in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 357–76.

PRIMASIUS (6th cent.), Bp. of Hadrumetum in N. Africa. His commentary on Rev., which drew extensively on *Tyconius and *Augustine, is of great value for the light it throws on the history of the *Old Latin Version of the NT. A commentary on St. *Paul's Epp. is also attributed to him; but this really belongs to the school of *Cassiodorus. In the *Three Chapters Controversy he was a strong supporter of Pope *Vigilius.

Comm. on Rev. ed. Cologne, 1535; Paris, 1544; Basle, 1544 (all purporting to be editiones principes). Works in J. P. Migne, PL, lxviii, 407–936. New ed. by A. W. Adams in C.C. forthcoming. J. Haussleiter, Leben und Werke des Bischofs Primasius von Hadrumetum (1887); id., Die lateinische Apokalypse der alten afrikanischen Kirche (in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Gesch. des NT Kanons, iv, 1891, pp. 1–224); id. in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 55–7. H. J. Vogels, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der lateinischen Apokalypse-Übersetzung (1920), pp. 19–36 and 153–64. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 245–7.

PRIMATE. The title of the bishop of the 'first see' (prima sedes), used originally of the *metropolitan of a province, then for a time equated with the *patriarch, and later applied to the chief bishop of a single state or people. The Abp. of *Canterbury is 'Primate of All England', the Abp. of *York 'Primate of England'.

PRIME. The *Office traditionally appointed for the first hour, i.e. 6 a.m. Acc. to *Cassian, it was introduced as 'altera matutina' ('Second Mattins') in his monastery at *Bethlehem c. 395, and under its name of 'Prima' appears as the first of the Little Hours (see Terce) in the Rule of St. *Benedict. At first recited in the dormitory, it was later transferred to the choir and thence passed into the Office of the secular clergy. In 1964 the recitation of Prime became voluntary for the secular clergy, and the Office has no place in the 1971 Breviary.

Prime consisted of two parts. The first, after the usual opening and the hymn 'Iam lucis orto sidere', contained three Psalms with antiphon to which a fourth was added on certain days; and on *Trinity and some other Sundays the 'Quicunque Vult' (see Athanasian Creed) was recited as well. The Psalms were followed by a (little) *chapter with 'responsorium breve', the Sunday or ferial prayers, and a concluding prayer. The second part was the originally independent Chapter Office. It began with the reading of the *Martyrology (if recited in choir), followed by several prayers, versicles, and the variable 'lectio brevis', and ended with a benediction.

J. Pargoire, 'Prime et complies' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, iii (1898), pp. 281–8 and 456–67. N. Gihr, Prim und Komplet des römischen Breviers, liturgisch und aszetisch erklärt (Theologische Bibliothek, 1907). J. Froger, O.S.B., Les Origines de prime (Bibliotheca 'Ephemerides Liturgicae', xix, 1946); crit. reviews by L. Brou in J.T.S., xlviii (1947), p. 240 f., and by E. Cattaneo in E.L., lxi (1947), pp. 366–9. J. M. Hanssens, S.J., Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, lvii; 1952), passim.

PRIMER (or Prymer; Lat. Primarium). A devotional book popular among the educated laity from at least the early 14th century. The etymology of the word is not entirely clear. It was often used as a synonym for 'Book of Hours' (Horae). The Primer contained the *Little Office of the BVM, followed by the *Seven Penitential Psalms, the fifteen *Gradual Psalms, the *Litany of the Saints and the Office for the Dead. Until the beginning of the 16th cent. the prohibition against unauthorized English translations of any portion of the Bible (decreed because of the rise of *Lollardy) precluded an English version of the Primer. In the third decade of the 16th cent., however, some of the Reformers began to print abroad texts of the Primer in English adapted to their own doctrinal positions. Official attempts to prevent these books being smuggled into England were largely ineffective. From 1534 onwards various editions of the Primer were published in England with official sanction. In 1545 the first authorized Primer of Henry VIII was issued, first in English and the following year in Latin; it was accompanied by the injunction that it was to be used by every schoolmaster next after the ABC in teaching children to read and know their Paternoster &c. The Primer came to be linked to elements in the BCP and continued for some years into the reign of *Elizabeth I in association with the *Catechism. Among RCs the original Primer maintained its popularity until the 19th cent. The word eventually lost its religious significance and came to be used also of any short introductory textbook, regardless of the subject.

E. Burton (ed.), Three Primers put forth in the Reign of Henry VIII (Oxford, 1834); W. Maskell, Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae, iii (ed. 2, ib., 1882), pp. i–lxvii and 1–260. Helen C. White, The Tudor Books of Private Devotion (Madison, Wis., 1951), pp. 53–133; C. C. Butterworth, The English Primers (1529–1549). Their Publication and Connection with the English Bible and the Reformation in England (Philadelphia, 1953). See also works cited under Little Office of Our Lady.

PRIMICERIUS. The word, derived from 'primus in cera', i.e. 'the first on the waxed table' of names, was applied to the senior in rank of several classes of officials, both ecclesiastical and secular. In the Rule of St. *Chrodegang he was the cleric next below the archdeacon and archpresbyter and charged with the liturgical functions and music of the monastery.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH. One of the three *Methodist Churches which united in 1932. It came into being in 1811 in connexion with, but for the most part outside, the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The new community developed out of some earlier unofficial Methodist movements. Hugh Bourne, a Methodist, had begun c. 1800 an important evangelistic movement near Mow Cop, Staffs, but outside the official structure of Methodism. Another contributory element was the work of Lorenzo Dow, an American Methodist, who in 1807 introduced the Camp Meeting into English Methodism at Mow Cop. This form of meeting, held for a whole day in the open and designed for those not attracted by the ordinary work of the Church, was pronounced by the Wesleyan Conference to be 'highly improper and likely to be of considerable mischief'. When these Camp Meetings were continued, Hugh Bourne, who was now mainly responsible for them, was expelled and in 1810 there came into being as a distinct community the 'Camp Meeting Methodists'. In the same year William Clowes, who had carried Bourne's earlier evangelistic work to Tunstall, was also expelled from the Methodist Church. In 1811 the two bodies united under the name of the Primitive Methodists.

At first the policy of the new society was to cease mission work and consolidate itself; but soon they gave themselves to systematic and widespread evangelism. For several years they met with great success, in spite of persecution, but rapid growth and lack of discipline brought a serious decline in 1825–8. Bourne was able, however, to replace the original organization, whereby administration was carried out chiefly by District Meetings and each district was to a great extent autonomous, by a centralization of authority. In 1843 the Primitive Methodists founded missions in *Australia and *New Zealand; and in 1889 work was begun in Africa also.

Notable features of the Church were its connexion with the Society of *Friends and its use of women as preachers, esp. in its earlier years. In 1932 the Primitive Methodist Church united with the Wesleyan and *United Methodists to form the present *Methodist Church.

H. B. Kendall, The Origin and History of the Primitive Methodist Church (2 vols., [1905]). J. Petty, The History of the Primitive Methodist Connexion from its Origin to the Conference of 1859 (1860). J. Ritson, The Romance of Primitive Methodism (1910). H. Bourne, History of the Primitive Methodists, Giving an Account of their Rise and Progress to the Year 1823 (1823); J. Watford, ed. W. Antliff, Memoirs of the Life and Labours of the late Venerable Hugh Bourne (2 vols., 1855–6). J. T. Wilkinson, Hugh Bourne 1772–1850 (1952). J. Davison [son-in-law], The Life of the Venerable William Clowes (1854); J. T. Wilkinson, William Clowes 1780–1851 (1951). H. B. Kendall, 'The Primitive Methodist Church and the Independent Methodist Churches, 1796–1908' in W. J. Townsend–H. B. Workman–G. Eayrs (edd.), A New History of Methodism, i (1919), pp. 555–98. R. Currie, Methodism Divided. A Study in the Sociology of Ecumenism (1968), passim. The Christian Endeavour (20 vols., 1858–78); cont. as The Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review (31 vols., 1879–1909); cont. as The Holborn Review (23 vols., 1910–32); in 1932 The Holborn Review was amalgamated with The London Quarterly to form The London Quarterly and Holborn Review (37 vols., 1932–68). Primitive Methodist Year Book (ceased 1932).

PRIMUS. In the Scottish Episcopal Church, the title of the presiding bishop. The first mention of the office is in 1731 in the 'Articles of Agreement amongst the Bishops of the Church of Scotland'. The principal function of the Primus, who has no metropolitical power, is to convene and preside at meetings of the Episcopal Synod. He is elected by the College of Bishops and the office is attached to no fixed see and not necessarily given by seniority. His title is 'The Most Revd. the Lord Bishop of X, Primus of the Scottish Church'.

PRIOR. The head or deputy head of a monastery. During the early Middle Ages the word was used in a very vague sense and might be applied to various secular officials. Under *Benedictine influence it came to denote the monk who ranked next to the abbot and deputized for him, a post which was sometimes multiplied. Later it was also applied to the heads of houses in the mendicant orders and of the small houses dependent on an abbey. See also Priory.

PRIORESS. The head or deputy head of certain houses of nuns. In general the Prioress fulfils the same functions for her house as a *Prior in the corresponding male order. In the case of an abbey she is subject to the *Abbess and the second in command. In the Roman Church the title is confined, strictly speaking, to convents which have Papal approbation and whose members take solemn vows, but it is sometimes used more generally. See also Priory.

PRIORY. A religious house presided over by a *prior or *prioress. In certain orders of the Roman Church, esp. those following the Rule of St. *Augustine, the Priory is the normal unit. The Benedictine and allied orders distinguish between 'conventual priories' (self-governing houses) and 'obedientiary priories', which are dependencies of abbeys.

PRISCA. The name given to an early Latin version of the canons of certain Greek Councils, viz. those of *Nicaea, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Chalcedon, and *Constantinople. The translation was made in Italy, almost certainly in the late 5th cent. The two chief MSS. are the 'Chieti MS.' (Vat. Reg. 1997; 9th cent.) and the 'Justel MS.' (Bod. e Mus. 100–2; 6th–7th cent.). The title 'Prisca', found in the *Ballerini, is taken from a (perhaps misunderstood) reference in *Dionysius Exiguus (confusione priscae translationis offensus). W. M. Peitz has argued that the translation is the work of Dionysius himself.

F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, i (1870), pp. 87–100. C. H. *Turner, 'Chapters in the History of Latin MSS. of Canons, 5 and 6' in J.T.S., xxx (1928–9), pp. 337–46, and xxxi (1929–30), pp. 9–20. E. *Schwartz, 'Die Kanonessammlungen der alten Reichskirche' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Kirchengeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, xxv (1936), pp. 1–114, esp. pp. 95–108. W. M. Peitz, S.J., Dionysius Exiguus-Studien, ed. H. Foerster (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxxiii; 1960), passim.

PRISCA, St. See Priscilla, St.

PRISCILLA, St. (1st cent.), also 'Prisca', an early Christian convert. She is mentioned six times in the NT (Acts 18, verses 2, 18 and 26; Rom. 16. 3; 1 Cor. 16. 19; 2 Tim. 4. 19); in the Pauline Epp. the best attested form in all cases is 'Prisca'. She was the wife of Aquila, a Jew of Pontus and (like St. *Paul) a tentmaker. They are mentioned in the NT at *Rome, *Ephesus, and *Corinth, and were clearly prominent members in the primitive Church. They were compelled to leave Rome by the Emp. Claudius's decree (Acts 18. 2), but, unless Rom. 16 is a fragment of an epistle sent by St. Paul to Ephesus, returned later (Rom. 16. 3). The suggestion of A. *Harnack that she and her husband were the authors of the Ep. to the Hebrews has met with little favour. Feast day in E., 13 Feb.; in W., 8 July.

In later Roman tradition, a saint with one or other of her names is prominent in two connexions:

(1) Since the 4th cent. a church has existed on the Aventine Hill known as the titulus S. Priscae. Acc. to the (late) Acta S. Priscae, this church enshrined the remains of the martyr St. Prisca, whose relics had been translated hither from the *Ostian Way. This St. Prisca, who was well known to the medieval hagiographers, is sometimes represented in art between two lions, who are reputed to have refused to attack her. Feast day, 18 Jan.

(2) The 'Coemeterium Priscillae' on the Via Salaria was one of the oldest of the *catacombs. It prob. takes its name from a Priscilla quite unconnected with the saint of the titulus S. Priscae and perh. a member of the senatorial family of the 'Acilii Glabriones'. It was in this catacomb that J. Wilpert discovered the well-known painting, 'Fractio Panis'. On the site Pope *Sylvester built a basilica in which he was himself buried.

There are no sufficient reasons for identifying either of these with the Priscilla of the NT.

A. Harnack, 'Ueber die beiden Recenzionen der Geschichte der Prisca und des Aquila in Act. Apost. 18, 1–27' in Sb. (Berl.), 1900, pp. 2–13.

On (1), J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix. 1–2; 1918), pp. 101–4, 162 f. F. Lanzoni, 'I titoli presbiterali di Roma antica nella storia e nella legenda' in Riv. A.C., ii (1925), pp. 195–257, esp. pp. 247–50; A. Amore, O.F.M., 'Note agiografiche sul calendario perpetuo della Chiesa Universale' in Antonianum, xxxix (1964), pp. 18–53, esp. pp. 27–29. R. Krautheimer and others in idd., Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iii (Rome, 1967), pp. 260–76 (in English).

On (2), see works cited s.v. Catacombs. J. Wilpert, Fractio Panis. Die älteste Darstellung des eucharistischen Opfers in der 'Cappella Greca' (1895). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1799–1874, s.v. 'Priscille (Cimetière de)', with bibl.; E. Josi in E.C., x (1953), cols. 36–40, s.v. 'Priscilla, Cimitero di', with full bibl.

PRISCILLIANISM. The origins of this 4th–5th cent. heresy are obscure. Acc. to the historian *Sulpicius Severus, Priscillian (c. 370) was a layman who took up a kind of *Gnosticism introduced into Spain by an Egyptian named Marcus. As a person of education famous for his austerity, he soon found adherents, among them two bishops, Instantius and Salvianus, and a large number of women. In 380 the doctrines attributed to him (though Priscillian was not mentioned by name) were condemned at Saragossa. The canons of this synod forbade mixed gatherings for the reading and interpretation of Scriptures, fasting on Sundays, absence from church during *Lent and the three weeks preceding *Epiphany, and similar unusual practices. Despite this condemnation Priscillian became Bp. of Ávila soon afterwards. In 381 his opponents obtained a decree of exile against him and his followers, who were now described as '*Manichaeans'. The exiles went to the S. of France and thence to Rome, where they sought Pope *Damasus' support but failed to obtain a hearing. At Milan they met with a similar rebuff from St. *Ambrose. They succeeded, however, in getting the decree of exile annulled by the secular authorities and returned to Spain, where they won a large following.

Not long after this, the new Emperor, Maximus, seeking the support of the Catholic bishops, had Priscillian tried at an episcopal synod at Bordeaux. Priscillian, however, refused to recognize its authority and appealed to the Emperor. In 386 he was tried at Maximus' court at Trier on a charge of sorcery—a capital offence. Despite the pleadings of St. *Martin of Tours, he was convicted and executed, together with several of his adherents. Although these executions were inflicted by a secular and not an ecclesiastical court, the religious motivation was obvious and in Spain the dead Priscillianists were venerated as martyrs. The fall of Maximus in 386 produced another change in imperial policy and Priscillianism flourished, esp. in the province of Galicia. In 400 a Council at *Toledo decreed the deposition of those Priscillianist bishops who would not abandon the heresy and the confirmation in office of those who submitted. The movement, however, continued, being denounced by Pope *Leo I in 447, and it did not disappear until after its condemnation by the Council of Braga in 563.

Priscillianism, in its fully developed form, seems to have been a kind of Manichaean Dualism, with strong *Docetic and *Sabellian elements. While professing to derive their doctrines from the Bible, Priscillianists showed a marked preference for the apocryphal books. They taught a *Modalist doctrine of the Trinity and denied the pre-existence of Christ before His birth from the BVM as well as His real humanity; hence their fasting on *Christmas Day and on Sunday. Angels and human souls were emanations of the Godhead and souls were united to bodies in punishment of their sins. The devil was not a fallen angel, but the principle of evil, and the body was his creation. Hence marriage, the procreation of children, and the use of flesh-meat were condemned, while, on the other hand, free love was permitted. It is uncertain, however, how far these tenets were inspired by Priscillian himself, since many scholars hold that the major collection of Priscillianist writings, eleven treatises found under his name in a manuscript at Würzburg, are not the work of Priscillian but are by his supporter Instantius.

The Würzburg treatises were ed. by G. Schepss, Priscilliani Quae Supersunt (C.S.E.L., xviii; 1889). Their authenticity has been challenged by A. *Hilgenfeld, 'Priscillianus und seine neuentdeckten Schriften' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xxxv (1892), pp. 1–85; G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Pro Instantio, contre l'attribution à Priscillien des opuscules du manuscrit de Würzburg' in R. Bén., xxx (1913), pp. 153–173; and M. Hartberger, 'Instantius oder Priscillian' in Th.Q., xcv (1913), pp. 401–40; it has been defended by J. Martin, 'Priscillianus oder Instantius' in Hist. J., xlvii (1927), pp. 237–51. D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'Fragments retrouvés d'apocryphes priscillianistes' in R. Bén., xxiv (1907), pp. 318–35, with text; G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Un Traité priscillianiste inédit sur la Trinité', ib., xxvi (1909), pp. 255–80, repr., with text, in his Études, Textes, Découvertes, i (Anecdota Maredsolana, Sec. Sér., 1913), pp. 151–205. D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'La Regula Consensoria, une règle des moines priscillianistes' in R. Bén., xxv (1908), pp. 83–8. F. Paret, Priscillianus. Ein Reformator des vierten Jahrhunderts (1891). K. Künstle, Antipriscilliana. Dogmengeschichtliche Untersuchungen und Texte aus dem Streite gegen Priscillians Irrlehre (1905). E. C. Babut, Priscillien et le priscillianisme (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études. Sciences Historiques et Philologiques, clxix; 1909). A. Puech, 'Les Origines du priscillianisme et l'orthodoxie de Priscillien' in Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétiennes, ii (1912), pp. 81–95 and 161–213. J. A. Davids, De Orosio et Sancto Augustino Priscillianistarum Adversariis. Commentatio Historica et Philologica (Diss., The Hague, 1930). A. d'Alès, S.J., 'Priscillien' in Rech. S.R., xxiii (1933), pp. 5–44 and 129–75. Id., Priscillien et l'Espagne chrétienne à la fin du IVe siècle (1936). J. M. Ramos y Loscertales, Prisciliano. Gesta rerum (Acta Salmaticensia, Filosofia y Letras, v, No. 5; 1952). B. Vollmann, Studien zum Priszillianismus. Die Forschung, die Quellen, der fünfzehnte Brief Papst Leos des Grossen (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, vii; 1965). R. López Caneda, Prisciliano. Su pensamiento y su problema histórico (Compostela, 1966), with bibl. J. *Chapman, O.S.B., Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), pp. 238–70, ch. 13, 'Priscillian the Author of the Prologues'. Dekkers (ed. 2; 1961), pp. 178–80 (Nos. 785–97) and 416 (No. 1872). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 403–13; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 374. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 391–400, s.v. 'Priscillien'; J. N. Hillgarth in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 790 f., s.v. See also works cited under Toledo, Councils of. H. Chadwick, Priscillian of Avila (Oxford, 1976).

PRIVATE CHAPELS ACT. This Act of 1871 (34 & 35 Vict., c. 66), which regulates the status of C of E chapels in schools, hospitals and similar institutions, permits the Bishop of the diocese in which the chapel is situate to license a cleric to serve such chapels, with the right of administering the Lord's Supper. Such a cleric is not subject to interference from the incumbent of the parish, provided that the entire cure of souls, except of those within the institution, is safeguarded to the incumbent. All alms collected in such a chapel can be disposed of as the minister shall determine, subject to the *ordinary's direction. Canon B 41 of the 1969 Canons lays down certain regulations for the conduct of divine service in private chapels.

PRIVILEGED ALTAR. An altar at which formerly, according to RC canon law, a *plenary indulgence could be secured for a soul in purgatory by the application of a Mass celebrated on it. All such privileges were abrogated by Pope *Paul VI's Constitution 'Indulgentiarum doctrina' (1 Jan. 1967).

PRIVILEGED PRESSES, The. The Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, so called in respect of their right, shared only with the King's (Queen's) Printer, of printing the Book of Common Prayer and, in England, the Authorized Version of the Bible, which are perpetual Crown copyright. The King's Printer holds this right by his Letters Patent of appointment, while the University Presses derive it from their respective Charters. That granted to Cambridge in 1534 conferred the right to print 'all manner of books' (omnimodos libros), and this was held to be unimpaired by the monopoly otherwise granted to the Stationers' Company in 1587, and was confirmed in 1628. A similar Charter was granted to Oxford in 1634. As a result, the Authorized Version, printed at first only by the then King's Printer, Robert Barker, was printed, with considerably improved accuracy, at Cambridge in 1629. At Oxford the same rights of printing Bibles and certain other books were claimed, but, by a 'covenant of forbearance' made with the members of the Stationers' Company (including the King's Printer), remained unexercised until 1675. Before 1839 the King's Printer for Scotland held similar exclusive rights in his territory; but an Order in Council of that year empowered the Lord Advocate to license any printer to produce an edition of the Authorized Version upon certain conditions.

J. Johnson–S. Gibson, Print and Privilege at Oxford to the Year 1700 (1946).

PRIVY COUNCIL, Judicial Committee of the. See Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

PROBABILIORISM. The system of *moral theology based on the principle that, if the licitness or illicitness of an action is in doubt, it is lawful to follow the opinion favouring liberty only when it is more probable than the opinion favouring the law. The system was developed by opponents of *Probabilism (q.v.), adopted by the *Dominican Order in 1656, and favoured by several Popes, esp. *Innocent XI. Though paramount in the first half of the 18th cent., it is today abandoned by most moral theologians. Chief among the objections to it is its impracticability, as the decision on the relative degrees of probability demanded by it requires more time and skill than are normally at the command of the confessor and his penitent.

PROBABILISM. The system of *moral theology based on the principle that, if the licitness or illicitness of an action is in doubt, it is lawful to follow a solidly probable opinion favouring liberty, even though the opposing opinion, favouring the law, be more probable.

From the beginning of the 14th cent. the rights of the probable opinion began to be discussed, but Probabilist principles were first fostered esp. in the school of Salamanca in the 16th cent., where the *Dominican, B. *Medina, in his 'Commentary on the Summa of St. *Thomas Aquinas' (1577), gave this teaching its classical form: 'Si est opinio probabilis, licitum est eam sequi, licet opposita probabilior sit.' From Medina down to 1656 the doctrine reigned almost without opposition, being accepted by both Dominicans (*John of St. Thomas) and *Jesuits (G. *Vazquez, F. *Suarez) alike. The latter developed the 'principle of possession', acc. to which in case of doubt one is not obliged to change the present state of things, i.e. if a law is doubtful, human freedom remains 'in possession'. The system, however, was recognized to be open to the charge of *Laxism, since, under the pretext of making salvation easy, it would seem to allow men to act acc. to freedom even on a very slight chance of probability; and already in 1604 abuse of the principle was deplored by the Jesuit General, C. *Aquaviva.

It was not, however, till 1656 that a sharp conflict among moralists broke out. The Dominican general chapter in Rome required members of the order to follow more closely St. Thomas and to adopt a system that came to be known as *Probabiliorism (q.v.). In the same year B. *Pascal began to publish his Lettres provinciales with their violent denunciations, inspired by *Jansenism, of the morality of the Jesuits, with whom, since then, Probabilism has increasingly been identified. Several Probabilist propositions savouring of Laxism were condemned by *Alexander VII in 1665 and 1666, and Laxism as a whole by *Innocent XI in 1679. In the following year the Pope ordered the Jesuit General, G. P. Oliva, to permit the teaching of Probabiliorism and to allow criticism of Probabilism in the Society, and in 1687 T. González (1624–1705), who favoured Probabiliorism, was elected General. His Fundamentum Theologiae Moralis (publd. 1694) further impaired the position of Probabilism in the order. On the other hand, '*Tutiorism', a more rigorist system, which had been taught by the Jansenists and J. Sinnich (1603–68) at Louvain, was condemned by *Alexander VIII in 1690. In 1700 the French clergy, under the leadership of J. B. *Bossuet, censured Probabilism and adopted Probabiliorism, which, under Jansenist influence, held sway during the first part of the 18th cent. The vigorous advocacy of Probabiliorism by the Dominican, D. Concina (1687–1756), who attacked the rival teaching in his Storia del probabilismo (1743), provoked a long-drawn-out controversy between Dominicans and Jesuits.

The subsequent rehabilitation of Probabilism is due esp. to the authority of St. *Alphonsus Liguori. After a short period of Probabiliorism, which he abandoned as too rigid, he became a Probabilist; and, though in 1762 he again modified his position and expounded his own theory of '*Equiprobabilism' (q.v.), this system rests at bottom on a Probabilist foundation. His great prestige as a moralist, esp. after he was canonized (1839) and declared a Doctor of the Church (1871), reflected on the whole Probabilist position, which was further strengthened by the restoration of the Society of Jesus in 1814. Surrounded with safeguards to prevent it from degenerating into Laxism, Probabilism has since become the official teaching of the Society, and together with Equiprobabilism is the most generally accepted moral system of the RC Church.

M. A. Potton, O.P., De Theoria Probabilitatis (Paris, 1874); F. ter Haar, C.SS.R., De Systemate Morali Antiquorum Probabilistarum (Paderborn, 1894). Id., Das Decret des Papstes Innocenz' XI über den Probabilismus (1904). A. Schmitt, S.J., Zur Geschichte des Probabilismus. Historisch-kritische Untersuchung über die ersten 50 Jahre desselben (1904). T. Richard, O.P., Le Probabilisme moral et philosophique (1922). T. Deman, O.P., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 417–619, s.v.; Sisinio da Romallo, O.F.M., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 57–61, s.v., for further bibl. See also bibl. to Moral Theology.

PROBATIONER. In the Presbyterian Churches, the status of one who, after examination and approval by his presbytery, receives a licence to preach. He is also known as a licentiate. The licence empowers him to act as an assistant to a minister, but he may not administer the Sacraments until he is ordained to a charge of his own. In Scotland a probationer who failed to be elected to a church used commonly to be called a 'stickit minister'. The title is also used in a similar sense in the Methodist Churches.

PROBST, FERDINAND (1816–99), liturgical scholar. A pupil of K. J. *Hefele at Tübingen, he was ordained priest in 1840 and became Pastor at Pfärrich near Wangen in 1843, Prof. of Pastoral Theology at Breslau in 1864 and Dean of Breslau Cathedral in 1896. Among Probst's long series of writings were Katholische Moraltheologie (2 vols., 1848–50), Die Liturgie der drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderte (1870), Sakramente und Sakramentalien (1872), Die ältesten römischen Sakramentarien und Ordines (1892), Die Liturgie des vierten Jahrhunderts (1893) and Die abendländische Messe vom 5. bis 8. Jahrhundert (1896). He was a scholar of great erudition and industry. But his conclusions were marked by an excessive conservatism, and his methods of argumentation were apt to be over-speculative. He held that the Liturgy in Apostolic Constitutions*, Bk. VIII (late 4th cent.), was in almost universal use throughout the Church from the earliest times.

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), col. 1731 f., s.v. 'Liturgistes, iv'.

PROCESS OF CANONIZATION. See Beatification and Canonization.

PROCESS THEOLOGY. A contemporary theological movement which emphasizes the processive or evolutionary nature of man and the world, and holds that God Himself is in process of development through His intercourse with the changing world. The name is derived from A. N. Whitehead's 1928–9 *Gifford Lectures, Process and Reality (1929), which gave considerable impetus to the movement. As a distinctive theological movement, it originated in the United States of America, especially in the University of Chicago during the 1920s and 1930s, but it soon spread elsewhere and is now represented in most W. denominations of Christianity. Its more important exponents include C. Hartshorne, S. M. Ogden, J. B. Cobb, P. N. Hamilton and W. N. Pittenger.

Unlike other radical movements, process theology is theistic, but its concept of God emphasizes His relationships with creation, His capacity to 'surpass' Himself (but in respect of other entities to remain 'unsurpassable'), His 'bi-polar' nature, and His root attribute as love rather than uncreatedness. All process, natural, human, or divine, is regarded as social in nature, entailing inter-relationship, mutuality and participation. Notions of 'substance' are rejected as outmoded relics of a static metaphysic; their place is taken by the concept of 'event'. Each event, including God, 'prehends' (grasps or actively receives) from all other events; it is a 'concrescence' of the past, which it inherits and remembers, its present relations, and its 'subjective aim' or future goal for self-fulfilment. Further, each event is given by God (in His 'primordial' aspect) its initial aim, which by free decision it seeks to satisfy, hence actualizing its possiblity. God is the ultimate recipient of all such realizations, which He harmonizes in accordance with His nature of love and then uses for further 'creative advance' in the cosmos. This affective nature of God is His 'consequent aspect'. Hence the bi-polarity of God, who is thus seen, as Whitehead said, not as the 'exception to' but as the 'chief exemplification of' the metaphysical principles required to describe all elements in 'reality in process'.

Following this basic concept, process theologians see the Incarnation of Christ in a classical sense, and not as an anomaly in the world. In Him there is 'the disclosure in act' of what had elsewhere been 'divined in theory', namely that love and persuasion are more significant and effective than power or coercion. Sin is interpreted as deviation from creative advance, through the free decision of the creature to choose his own narrow self-realization instead of the wider shared good. Redemption is acceptance by God of the creature's achievement and the opening of future possibilities of true fulfilment in community with others. Heaven and hell are respectively the positive or negative acceptance by God of the creation's achievement, since God receives all accomplished good and rejects all that is not consonant with His nature as love-in-action.

Process theologians claim to take seriously the Biblical portrayal of God as participating in and working through creation, but they hold that it is necessary to '*demythologize' the images in which this Scriptural affirmation is made, and reject what they call 'classical theism' because of its supposedly static quality.

Other works expounding process theology include A. N. Whitehead, Religion in the Making (Cambridge, 1926); id., Adventures of Ideas (ib., 1933); C. Hartshorne, Man's Vision of God and the Logic of Theism (New York [1941]); id., The Divine Reality (New Haven, 1948); id., A Natural Theology for our Time (La Salle, Ill. [1967]); J. B. Cobb, Jr., A Christian Natural Theology, based on the thought of Alfred North Whitehead (1966); S. M. Ogden, The Reality of God and Other Essays (1967); P. [N.] Hamilton, The Living God and the Modern World (1967); [W.] N. Pittenger, God in Process (1967); id., Process-Thought and Christian Faith (1968); id., Christology Reconsidered (1970); and D. D. Williams, The Spirit and the Forms of Love (1968).

PROCESSION (Liturgical). Processions are of two different kinds, festival and penitential. Acc. to strict W. use, there is a procession on all Sundays and principal festivals before the principal celebration of the *Eucharist, but in practice this takes place generally only on festivals. The ancient English use was for processions to be held after *Evensong on feasts and on all Saturdays from *Easter to *Advent. The order of procession, acc. to *Sarum Use, is thurifer, cross-bearer, candle-bearers, sub-deacon, deacon, celebrant, choir, clergy, bishop (if present); but acc. to modern Roman use the choir walk before the celebrant. Processions are frequently held in the open air as acts of witness, e.g. on *Good Friday or before a parochial mission. Other traditional processions include those of *Palm Sunday, the *Rogation Days (often through the fields to pray for God's blessing on the fruits of the earth) and *Corpus Christi. Banners are often carried in procession both to excite devotion and to typify the Church's vocation to conquer like an army the powers of evil. See also Processional.

N. Serrarius, Sacri Peripatetici, sive de Sacris Ecclesiae Catholicae Processionibus libri duo (Cologne, 1607). C. Dunlop, Processions. A Dissertation together with Practical Suggestions (*Alcuin Club Tracts, xx; 1932). T. Bailey, The Processions of Sarum and the Western Church (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, xxi; Toronto, 1971). La Maison-Dieu, No. 43 (1955), special number on Processions, with articles by F. Louvel, O.P., P. Doncœur, S.J., I. H. Dalmais, O.P., A. G. Martimort and J. Gelineau, S.J. A. G. Martimort in id., L'Église en prière (ed. 3, 1965), pp. 649–57, with bibl. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 446–8.

PROCESSION (Theological) (Gk. ἐκπόρευσις, Lat. processio). In Trinitarian doctrine, the attribute which distinguishes the Holy Ghost from the two Persons of the Father and the Son. This attribute of the Holy Ghost implied in the NT (cf. e.g. Jn. 15. 26) is asserted in the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, and is first developed at length by the *Cappadocian Fathers. See also Double Procession, Filioque.

PROCESSIONAL. The book containing the text of the litanies, hymns, and prayers formally prescribed for use in processions. In the W. Church, the bulk of it is merely an extract from the '*Rituale', with some supplementary matter derived from the *Missal and the *Pontifical. In the later Middle Ages, 'Processionals' were often adapted to the requirements of local churches and uses, e.g. the widely used 'Sarum Processional'.

PROCLUS, St. (d. 446 or 447), Patr. of *Constantinople. On the death of the Patr. Atticus (425), whose secretary he had been, he was an unsuccessful candidate for the patriarchate, but in 426 he was consecrated Abp. of Cyzicus. Unable to take possession of his see through ecclesiastical differences, he remained in Constantinople as a much-applauded preacher, and here delivered in 428 or 429 a famous sermon on the *Theotokos in the presence of *Nestorius, though Proclus did not take an active part in the subsequent controversy. When he became patriarch in 434, his moderation in the cause of orthodoxy gained him much sympathy and his popularity was enhanced by the solemn translation of the body of St. *Chrysostom which he effected in 438. Among his writings, which consist for the most part of homilies and epistles, is the so-called 'Tome of St. Proclus' (Ep. 2), an exposition of the doctrine of the one Christ in two natures, addressed to the *Armenians, and directed against *Theodore of Mopsuestia (but without naming him). Traditionally the formula 'One of the Trinity was crucified acc. to the flesh', destined to play an important part in the *Theopaschite Controversy (6th cent.), has been ascribed to him (but mistakenly). The introduction of the *Trisagion into the Liturgy has also been attributed to him. Feast day in E., 20 Nov.; in W., 24 Oct.

His writings, first ed. by V. Riccardus (1630), are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 651–88. Crit. text of his Sermon on the Theotokos in A.C.O., I. i. 1 (1927), pp. 103–7; of his Tomus ad Armenios, ib., IV. ii (1914), pp. 65–8, 187–205. E. *Schwartz, Konzilstudien (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft in Strassburg, Hft. 20, 1914), II. Über echte und unechte Schriften des Bischofs Proklos von Konstantinopel, pp. 18–53. B. Marx, Procliana. Untersuchungen über den homiletischen Nachlass des Patriarchen Proklos von Konstantinopel (1940) (Marx ascribes, often on precarious grounds, more than 80 of the sermons preserved in the spuria of Chrysostom to Proclus). M. Richard, 'Proclus de Constantinople et le théopaschisme' in R.H.E., xxxviii (1942), pp. 303–31. F. J. Leroy, S.J., L'Homilétique de Proclus de Constantinople. Tradition manuscrite, inédits, études connexes (S.T., ccxlvii; 1967). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 202–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 338 f.

PROCOPIUS OF CAESAREA (mid-6th cent.), Byzantine historian. A native of *Caesarea in Palestine, in 527 he was appointed secretary to Belisarius, whom he accompanied in his campaigns against the Persians, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths. From 542 he lived in *Constantinople. His writings consist of his 'History of the Wars' (i.e. those which he had himself witnessed), his 'De aedificiis' (an account of the buildings of the Emp. *Justinian), and the so-called 'Anecdota' (or 'Secret History'), issued only after his death. The work of a careful and on the whole impartial author, they are of great historical value and stand in marked contrast to most of the poor compositions of his age. The 'De aedificiis', however, suffers from its excessive flattery of Justinian. On the other hand, the 'Anecdota', which were not intended for publication, are a bitter invective against Justinian and *Theodora.

Works ed. W. Dindorf in C.S.H. Byz. (3 vols., Bonn, 1833–8). Crit. ed. J. Haury (Teubn., 3 vols., 1905–13; repr., with additions, 4 vols., 1962–4); also ed., with Eng. tr., by H. B. Dewing (Loeb, 7 vols., 1914–40). Other Eng. trr. of his 'Anecdota' by R. Attwater (Ann Arbor, 1961) and G. A. Williamson (Penguin Classics, 1966). F. Dann, Prokopius von Cäsarea (1865). Averil M. Cameron, 'The "Scepticism" of Procopius' in Historia, xv (1966), pp. 466–82. Krumbacher, pp. 230–6. B. Rubin in P.W., xxiii. 1 (1957), cols. 273–599, s.v. 'Prokopius von Kaisareia'.

PROCOPIUS OF GAZA (c. 475–c. 538), rhetorician and Biblical exegete. He was perhaps the foremost figure of the 'School of Gaza', a group of Christian rhetoricians of the 5th–6th cent. His Biblical works consist mainly of extensive extracts from older exegetes (*Philo, *Origen, *Basil, *Theodoret, *Cyril of Alexandria). Of his two Commentaries on the *Octateuch the shorter, which is preserved in Cod. Monac. gr. 358, has been published in toto in a Lat. transl. and, in fragments, also in the Gk. He also commented on 1 and 2 Sam., 1 and 2 Kgs., and 1 and 2 Chron.; on Is.; and on Cant. His Epp., of which 163 survive, are in an affected and precious style (which, however, made them popular) and without theological interest, but remain, with the funeral oration of his pupil Choricius, the chief source for his life. Acc. to D. Russos and J. Dräseke, some fragments of a work against the *Neoplatonist Proclus (410–85) are to be assigned to Procopius of Gaza; but more recent opinion is against this ascription.

Works first collected in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvii, 1–2838 (ptt. 1–3); new ed. of Procopius's Epp. in R. Hercher, Epistolographi Graeci (Paris, 1873), pp. 533–98; Epistolae et Declamationes also ed. A. Garzya–R. J. Loenertz, O.P. (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, ix; 1963). The chief source for his Life, apart from his Epp., is a Funeral Oration of Choricius of Gaza (Opera, ed. R. Foerster–E. Richtsteig, Teubner ed., 1929, pp. 109–28). L. Eisenhofer, Procopius von Gaza. Eine literarhistorische Studie (1897). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 86–91, with bibl.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 516, with bibl. J. van den Gheyn, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., v (1912), cols. 686–9, s.v.; W. Aly in P.W., xxiii (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 259–73, s.v. 'Prokopius von Gaza'. See also bibl. to Catenae.

PROCTORS FOR THE CLERGY. The elected representatives of the Anglican clergy who, together with the ex officio members, constitute the Lower Houses of *Convocation of *Canterbury and *York. The canons regulating the existing conditions of election date from 1921 (with an amendment in 1936 to provide for University representation). The proctors are elected on a diocesan basis by all clergy beneficed in the diocese or licensed under seal. See further Convocations of Canterbury and York.

PROFESSION, Religious. The taking of the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, necessary to the embracing of the 'religious life'. The profession follows upon the novitiate or training period. By can. 574 of the 1918 Roman *Codex Iuris Canonici there must in every case be first a temporary profession of at least three years. At the end of this period the 'professed' may either withdraw again into the world or make a perpetual profession, i.e. take lifelong vows.

PROHIBITED DEGREES. The relationships by blood or marriage which render it unlawful for two persons to marry. Certain relationships, e.g. mother and son, and a man and his wife's mother, prevent marriage in almost every state of society, however primitive. The reasons which underlie these prohibitions are partly biological, but mainly social, e.g. the maintenance of peace and purity in the home. Blood relationships are called '*consanguinity': relationships by marriage, '*affinity'. Such relationships are called in canon law 'degrees' (cf. Lat. gradus, 'step').

It is the general practice to compute the nearness of the relationship by the number of persons or steps between the people related and their common ancestors. Thus son to father is one step or the 'first degree', son to grandfather the second, and so on, and such relationship is called linea recta or 'direct line'. Brother to sister is one step via the common parent, and so the 'first degree'. First cousin to first cousin is two steps either way to the common ancestor, the grandfather, and so the 'second degree'; this is the 'collateral line'. In the E. Church there is another system of calculation for the collateral line, namely to add the steps between each of the pair related and the common ancestor, e.g. first cousins are related in the 'fourth degree', there being two steps on either side to the common grandparent.

Ecclesiastical legislation forbidding marriage between persons related within certain degrees is based on the prohibitions in Lev. 18. At one time the W. Church extended the prohibition to the seventh degree. This was reduced to the fourth at the *Lateran Council of 1215, and by the Roman *Codex Iuris Canonici of 1918 to the third in consanguinity and the second in affinity. The degrees of affinity are calculated in the same way as those of consanguinity, the husband and wife being regarded as identical for this purpose, i.e. a man's wife's first cousin is counted as his own first cousin, to whom he is accordingly related in the second degree of affinity. In the C of E the prohibited degrees are those listed in the Table of *Kindred and Affinity in the 1969 Canons, can. B 31.

See also Affinity.

The principal canons on the subject in the Codex are canons 96 f., 1042, and 1076 f. F. X. Wahl, The Matrimonial Impediments of Consanguinity and Affinity (Washington, D.C., 1934), with bibl. F. Cimetier in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), s.v. 'Parenté (Empêchements de)'. See also bibl. to Affinity, Consanguinity, and Matrimony.

PROKIMENON (Gk. προκείμενον, 'what is set forth'). Verses from the Psalter sung before the Epistle in the Byzantine Liturgy. It is roughly equivalent to the *gradual in the W., except that it precedes the Epistle instead of following it. The prokimenon also occurs at *Orthros, before the Gospel; and at Vespers, after the Entrance.

PROLOCUTOR. The title of the president and chairman of each of the Lower Houses of the *Convocations of *Canterbury and *York. He also acts as the representative of his House to the corresponding Upper House (of bishops). He is elected to his office by the House to which he belongs.

PROMISED LAND, The. The land of *Canaan, promised to *Abraham and his descendants. Cf. Gen. 12. 7, 13. 15, &c.; and J. *Milton, Paradise Lost: 'Over the Promis'd Land to God so dear' (iii. 531).

PROMOTOR FIDEI (Lat., 'promoter of the faith'). The member of the *Congregation of the Causes of Saints appointed to examine critically the alleged virtues and miracles of a candidate for *beatification or *canonization, and so to prevent any rash decision. The first formal mention of the office seems to be in connexion with the canonization of St. Lawrence Justinian (d. 1456) by *Leo X. In the *Codex Iuris Canonici his function is described as 'ad ius tuendum' (can. 2010). He is popularly known as 'the Devil's Advocate' (advocatus diaboli).

PRONE. The name was given in medieval N. Europe, including Britain, to the vernacular office attached to the sermon at High Mass on Sundays and other feast days. Its form was at the discretion of the preacher, but it ordinarily consisted of such items as the '*bidding of the bedes' (q.v.) and expositions of the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, as well as notifications of ensuing feasts and fasts and of banns of marriage and ordination. The name has also been used for sermons, esp. of an expository kind. The word is derived from the Fr. prône, orig. a grille which separated the chancel or place where notices were given out from the rest of the church.

PRONOUNCEMENT STORIES. The name proposed by V. Taylor for those passages in the Gospels which M. *Dibelius terms *Paradigms (q.v.) and R. *Bultmann *Apophthegms.

PROPAGANDA, Sacred Congregation of. The *Roman Congregation which is concerned with missions to heathen countries and the administration of territories where there is no properly established hierarchy. It originated in the latter half of the 16th cent. to meet the spiritual needs of the newly discovered heathen populations, as one of the fruits of the general stimulus given to Church organization by the *Counter-Reformation. At first it took the form of a cardinalitial commission 'De propaganda fide', and it was not until 6 June 1622 that Gregory XV created the Congregation of Propaganda by the bull 'Inscrutabili Divinae'. The Congregation was originally composed of 13 cardinals, 2 prelates, a secretary, and a consultor. *Urban VIII further gave the Congregation a prefect-general and a central missionary training seminary, the 'Collegium Urbanum', founded in 1627. Owing to the extensive range of its work the Congregation is now divided into numerous secretariats and commissions; the scope of its jurisdiction is regulated by the Apostolic Constitution 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' of 6 Aug. 1967, nos. 81–91, which renamed it 'Sacra Congregatio pro Gentium Evangelizatione seu de Propaganda Fide' (Sacred Congregation for the Evangelization of the Nations or of the Propagation of the Faith).

Bullarium Pontificium Sacrae Congregationis de Propaganda Fide (5 vols. bound in 3, Rome, 1839–41; appendix, 2 vols., ib., no date); Collectanea S. Congregationis de Propaganda Fide, seu Decreta, Instructiones, Rescripta pro Apostolicis Missionibus, Ann. 1622–1906 (2 vols., ib., 1907). The relevant sections of 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' are pr. in A.A.S., lix (1967), pp. 915–18. R. H. Song, The Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, ccccxx; 1961). Catalogus Editionum quae prodierunt ex Typographia Polyglotta Sacrae Congregationis de Propaganda Fide (Rome, 1890). R. Hoffman in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 840–4, s.v. 'Propagation of the Faith, Congregation for the', with bibl. See also works cited under Roman Congregations.

PROPER. The part of the *Eucharist and *Offices which changes acc. to the festival or ecclesiastical season. It is thus contrasted with the rest of the service, the invariable '*Ordinary (or Order) of the Mass'. The 'Proper of Saints' ('Proprium Sanctorum' or, in the 1970 Missal, 'Proprium de Sanctis') is the Proper for festivals of a fixed date; the 'Proper of Time' ('Proprium Temporum', or, in the 1970 Missal, 'Proprium de Tempore') that for *Sundays, *ferias, and festivals which have no fixed date. Many saints' days share the same Proper with others, and where this is so their Proper is printed once for all in a separate part of the *Missal and *Breviary, under the title '*Common of Saints' ('Commune Sanctorum'). In the BCP the Proper consists of (1) the *Collect, *Epistle, and *Gospel (with the *Easter Anthems for use at *Mattins on Easter Day), which are arranged together in the order of the ecclesiastical year, the Proper of Time coming first, and then that of Saints (there being no Common), and (2) the *Prefaces, which are set out in the body of the Communion Service, as in the Roman Missal. The ASB also provides Proper Introductory and Postcommunion Sentences for Sundays, Festivals and Holy Days.

PROPHECY. From the earliest times Christians have believed that already before the Incarnation God the Holy Ghost, as affirmed in the *Nicene Creed, 'spake by the prophets'. Such prophetic inspiration was found esp. in the supernatural knowledge by which holy men were enabled to foresee and foretell, in part, the revelation which was to be given in Christ. It was extended to *Abraham (Jn. 8. 56) and *David (Mk. 12. 35 ff.), but it was pre-eminently the privilege of the prophets. It has also been generally recognized that the prophets were the inspired deliverers of God's message not only about the future, but to their contemporaries, to whom they declared His will, and whom they recalled to His righteousness.

In NT times the Jews applied the term 'the Prophets' to the large section of the OT *Canon intermediate in authority between the ancient 'Law' and the more recent 'Writings'. In this connexion it was customary to distinguish (1) the 'Former Prophets', viz. Jos., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., 1 and 2 Kgs., and (2) the 'Latter Prophets', viz. Is., Jer., Ezek. and the twelve (*Minor) Prophets. But the name of prophet could be applied personally in a wider sense, e.g. to *Moses and the future 'prophet like Moses' who was expected to appear (Deut. 18. 15 ff.), and to David (Acts 2. 29 f.). Christ Himself was considered by some as a prophet (Mk. 8. 28; Jn. 4. 19).

The beginnings of Hebrew prophecy can be traced to the early days of the monarchy. 1 Sam. 9 f. already attests the existence of two types of prophets, the Seer (Heb. ro'eh), possessed of clairvoyance, like Samuel who was able to show Saul the whereabouts of his lost asses, and the ecstatic (Heb. nabi'), associated with the local shrine, who under the stimulus of music and dancing fell into a frenzy and uttered words not his own, held to be Jehovah's (1 Sam. 10. 10 f., 19. 23 f.). In this ecstatic condition, the prophet gave the impression of madness (cf. 2 Kgs. 9. 11, Jer. 29. 26).

Gradually, however, the ecstatic features became of less importance and the conscious delivery of a Divine message or 'word' became the dominating feature of prophecy. Thus 'the word of the Lord' 'came' to prophets already in the age of Elijah. Side by side with this was the use of symbolic action. Thus Zedekiah foretold the overthrow of the Syrians by equipping himself with horns of iron (1 Kgs. 22. 11); and, in the early period at least, such action was believed not merely to foretell but to influence the future (cf. 2 Kgs. 13. 14–19), being in its beginnings not far from sympathetic magic. Moreover, even among the later prophets words were reinforced by actions. *Isaiah went about naked 'for a sign' (Is. 20), *Jeremiah wore a 'yoke' (or fetters) on his shoulders (Jer. 27), and *Ezekiel performed various symbolic actions (e.g. Ezek. 12). It was, however, essentially the 'word' of Jehovah which controlled the prophet, and his words passed on the Word of God to His people.

The prophetic Books of the OT Canon fall into four groups: (1) the 8th-century prophets, *Amos, *Hosea, *Micah, and Isaiah; (2) the immediately Pre-exilic prophets (late 7th–early 6th cent.), *Nahum, *Zephaniah, *Habakkuk and Jeremiah; (3) the Exilic prophets, Ezekiel and *Deutero-Isaiah; (4) the Post-exilic prophets, *Haggai, *Zechariah and *Malachi, together with (prob.) *Obadiah, *Joel, and *Jonah, which are less easy to date precisely.

Since it is in the prophets of the OT that most (though not all) of the passages concerning the *Messiah appear, Jews who looked for His coming had an especial interest in the prophets, who, with other inspired writers, had looked for the Messiah 'since the world began' (Lk. 1. 70; cf. Lk. 1. 55, 2 Pet. 1. 21). Christ Himself saw the fulfilment of OT prophecy in His own Ministry, saying, e.g., that 'many prophets and righteous men' had desired to see what the disciples were then seeing (Mt. 13. 17) and declaring that with His Coming (Is. 61. 1) was fulfilled (Lk. 4. 21). Similarly, the Evangelists point to the fulfilment of a number of OT prophecies in the events they describe, e.g. Christ's birth from a virgin (Mt. 1. 22; cf. Is. 7. 14) and its occurrence at *Bethlehem (Mt. 2. 6; cf. Mic. 5. 2), the ministry of *John the Baptist (Mk. 1. 2–3; cf. Mal. 3. 1 and Is. 40. 3), the Lord's entry into Jerusalem riding upon an ass (Jn. 12. 12–15; cf. Zech. 9. 9), and the piercing of His side at the Crucifixion (Jn. 19. 36 f.; cf. Zech. 12. 10).

Acc. to Acts, the Apostles began, immediately after *Pentecost, to see the fulfilment of OT passages in Christ's Resurrection and Ascension and the Coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2. 14–36, quoting Joel 2. 28–30, Ps. 16. 8–11 and Ps. 110. 1), and the appeal to OT prophecy was a constant feature of early Christian preaching (Acts 8. 26–35). St. *Paul in writing to his converts not only reminds them of the universal Christian belief that 'Christ died for our sins acc. to the Scriptures' (1 Cor. 15. 3), but also uses many OT texts in a more individual manner, here doubtless influenced by his rabbinic training as well as by his Christian faith; thus he interprets the Rock which supplied the Israelites with water in the wilderness (Ex. 17. 6) as a type of Christ (1 Cor. 10. 4). The Ep. to the Hebrews is almost a continuous appeal to OT texts (predominantly in the Law and the Pss. rather than the Prophets) in support of teaching about Christ.

In Christian writers from the *Apostolic Fathers onwards the appeal to the OT is continued on the same general lines as in the NT. It is elaborated esp. in the Ep. of *Barnabas, for the author of which all the ceremonial enactments of the OT referred in a hidden manner to the Christian revelation and had been misinterpreted by the Jews. Among the *Apologists it is found esp. in *Justin Martyr, whose 'Dialogue with Trypho, the Jew' is naturally much concerned with rival interpretations of the OT. Throughout the Patristic and Medieval periods all who sought to expound Christian doctrine, whether heretical or orthodox, assumed that the inspiration of Scripture guaranteed the prophetic foreknowledge of the Christian revelation, even in its details, so that OT texts might validly be used as arguments, e.g., for specific Christological teaching.

Wide application was given to the allegorical interpretation of OT texts, esp. by the *Alexandrian theologians. By the mystical interpretation of Scripture some Latin and Medieval writers were able to find an appropriate relevance in one OT text or another to almost any conceivable subject. At the Reformation the traditionally accepted uses of OT texts in a Christian sense continued unchallenged; an example is afforded by the original chapter-summaries and page-headings of the Authorized Version for such passages as Is. 40–66 and Ps. 110. It was only with the Aufklärung and the rise of a critical approach to history that doubt was cast on the existence of any real anticipation of NT events in such texts as Is. 7. 14. Hence modern expositors of the OT tend to stress that the prophets were originally and primarily 'forth-tellers' of God's will to their contemporaries rather than 'foretellers' of the future.

Among the more important of the older discussions are J. Davison, Discourses on Prophecy (1824); G. H. A. *Ewald, Die Propheten des Alten Bundes (2 vols., 1840–1; Eng. tr. of ed. 2, 5 vols., 1875–81); B. *Duhm, Die Theologie der Propheten (1875). In British theology, the modern critical view of the development of Hebrew Prophecy was popularized by W. R. *Smith, The Prophets of Israel and their Place in History to the Close of the Eighth Century B.C. (1882; ed. 2, with notes by T. K. *Cheyne, 1895). B. Duhm, Israels Propheten (1916); T. H. Robinson, Prophecy and the Prophets in Ancient Israel (Duckworth's Theology Series, 1923). More recent works include A. R. Johnson, The Cultic Prophet in Ancient Israel (Cardiff, 1944); S. *Mowinckel, Prophecy and Tradition. The Prophetic Books in the Light of the Study of the Growth and History of the Tradition (Avhandlinger utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1946, No. 3); H. H. Rowley (ed.), Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to Theodore H. Robinson (Edinburgh, 1950); J. Lindblom, Prophecy in Ancient Israel (Oxford, 1962).

On the Christian interpretation of prophecy, E. G. Selwyn, The Oracles in the New Testament (1912); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., The Throne of David. A Study of the Fulfilment of the Old Testament in Jesus Christ and His Church (1941); W. Vischer, Das Christuszeugnis des Alten Testaments, ii (Zürich, 1942); C. H. *Dodd, According to the Scriptures (1952); G. F. A. Knight, A Christian Theology of the Old Testament (1959); B. Lindars, S.S.F., New Testament Apologetic. The Doctrinal Significance of the Old Testament Quotations (1961); B. W. Anderson (ed.), The Old Testament and Christian Faith (New York, 1963; London, 1964); A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament (1965); F. F. Bruce, This is That. The New Testament Development of some Old Testament Themes (1968). See also works cited under Allegory.

PROPHETS (Early Christian). There are several indications, notably the lists in 1 Cor. 12. 28 and Eph. 4. 11, that there existed in the primitive Church a separate group of ministers known as 'prophets'. On the other hand, it would appear that the term 'prophet' might be applied to an elder, a deacon, and even a lay member of the Church, male or female (Acts 15. 32, 21. 9, 21. 10). If the Didache* could be accepted as an authentic historical document of c. 100–20, we should have here clear evidence of the prophets as a group in a primitive itinerant ministry, whose authority, indeed, had already fallen into disrepute; but as many recent writers (J. A. *Robinson, R. H. *Connolly, &c.) hold that the Didache is an imaginative reconstruction of primitive Church life from NT tags, the possible invalidation of its witness throws serious doubt on the view of A. *Harnack, A. C. *Headlam and others, which saw in the prophets a well-established order in the sub-Apostolic age. A prominent place was accorded to 'prophets' by the *Montanists, but it is most improbable that these were in any sense successors of the prophets mentioned in the NT.

A. Harnack, Die Lehre der zwölf Apostel (T.U., ii, Hftt. 1–2; 1884), pp. 119–31. R. M. Pope in D.A.C., ii (1918), pp. 279–81, s.v. 'Prophecy, Prophet, Prophetess'; E. K. Mitchell in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 382–4, s.v. 'Prophecy (Christian)'.

PROPITIATION. The general meaning of the word is the appeasing of the wrath of the Deity by prayer or sacrifice when a sin or offence has been committed against Him. The word occurs three times in the AV, in connexion with the death of Christ (Rom. 3. 25, 1 Jn. 2. 2, 4. 10; to which RV adds Heb. 2. 17), but it is disputed whether it accurately represents the Greek of these passages (ἱλαστήριον, ἱλασμός). In Christian thought the death of Christ has usually been regarded as a propitiatory sacrifice to the Father for the sins of the world. The conception of the Divine wrath involved is to be understood, however, in harmony with the fact that the sacrifice which appeases it proceeds from the Divine love. Acc. to the Council of *Trent (Sess. xxii, can. 3), the Sacrifice offered in the Eucharist is propitiatory (propitiatorium). See also Atonement, Mercy Seat.

PROPRIETARY CHAPEL. In the C of E a chapel built by subscription and maintained by private individuals, without constitutional existence or parochial rights. Such chapels were seldom episcopally consecrated, though their ministers were normally granted episcopal licences (revocable absolutely at the bishop's will) which could only be issued with the consent of the incumbent of the parish. They were established esp. in fashionable areas (London, watering-places); were commonly supported by pew rents, which were often high; and were sometimes centres of extreme Evangelicalism or (less frequently) High Church doctrine. Many such chapels existed in the 18th and early 19th cents; but they are now almost, if not quite, extinct.

R. J. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore; 1895), i, pp. 250–2, 436, and ii, pp. 1459 and 1759; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8, by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 104 f., esp. note m, 209, and 533.

PROSE (Lat. prosa). An alternative name, once common in England, for the *Sequence (q.v.). The word has occasionally been applied to other anthems of similar form which have no place in the Liturgy.

PROSELYTE (Gk. προσήλυτος). The word means literally 'stranger' or 'foreign sojourner', and, by an extension, a convert to Judaism. The NT mentions both 'proselytes' and 'God-fearers' (cf., e.g., Acts. 2. 10, 13. 43; 10. 2), the distinction being probably that the former underwent circumcision and were therefore reckoned full members of the Jewish Church, whereas the 'God-fearers' were more loosely attached to the Jewish communities. In a wider sense the word has come to be used of a convert to any faith or sect.

PROSKOMIDE (Gk. προσκομιδή). In the E. Church, the preparation of the bread and wine for the Eucharist which takes place before the beginning of the service at the table known as the *prothesis. The priest cuts the bread into pieces with the *lance, and then arranges it on the *discus in a fashion prescribed by the rubrics; then the deacon pours wine and water into the chalice; and the whole is afterwards veiled. At the end of the ceremony the bread and wine are censed and a prayer is said over them. In origin the Proskomide is the second part of the *offertory, moved back to the beginning of the service. There are considerable variations in terminology among liturgical writers, the Proskomide being sometimes known as the Prothesis.

PROSPER OF AQUITAINE, St. (c. 390–c. 463), theologian. Prosper Tiro of Aquitania was living at Marseilles at the outbreak of the *Semi-Pelagian controversy (426), probably as a lay monk. In 428 he wrote to St. *Augustine, whose theology of grace and predestination he warmly accepted, informing him of the opposition which his teaching was encountering among the disciples of *Cassian. About the same time he wrote a letter to a certain Rufinus and the 'Carmen de ingratis', a poem of over a thousand hexameters, both on the subject of grace. In 431, after St. Augustine's death, he went to Rome to secure Pope *Celestine I's support for Augustinian doctrines and between 431 and 434 published a number of works in their defence, one of them directed against St. *Vincent of Lérins and another against Cassian. After the latter's death (c. 435), he became more conciliatory, as is borne out by his 'Expositio super Psalmos', and (if, as is now widely held, it be Prosper's) the 'Capitula Coelestini', written as an appendix to the Pope's letter to the bishops of Gaul, probably between 435 and 442, from Rome. In his last period, when he held the office of secretary to *Leo I, he devoted himself chiefly to compilations, among them the 'Epigrammata ex sententiis sancti Augustini', versified excerpts from the works of St. Augustine, and a 'Chronicle' which until 378 follows *Eusebius and St. *Jerome, but is of value for his own time (425–455), esp. for the history of dogma. It would seem that Prosper's theological opinions developed from the rigid Augustinianism of his earlier controversial writings to a milder view which rejected predestination to damnation and affirmed the will of God to save all men, though believing in fact in the reprobation of a great number. The canons of the Council of *Orange of 529 are partly based on his extracts from St. Augustine, and later he exercised a considerable influence on the Carolingian theologians. Feast day, 7 July.

Works ed. J. B. Le Brun des Marettes, O.S.B.–D. Mangeant, O.S.B., Paris, 1711; repr. with addendum in J. P. Migne, PL, li, 1–868. Crit. text of 'Chronicle' ed. T. *Mommsen in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, ix (1892), pp. 341–499. Eng. trr. by P. De Letter, S.J., of Prosper's De Vocatione Omnium Gentium (A.C.W., xiv; 1952) and of various works in defence of St. Augustine (ib., xxxii; 1963). R. Lorenz, 'Der Augustinismus Prospers von Aquitanien' in Z.K.G., lxxiii (1962), pp. 217–52, with bibl. E. M. Pickman, The Mind of Latin Christendom (1937), pp. 418–36. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 533–41; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 450–2. H. W. Phillott in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 492–7; A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 123–7; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 846–50; R. Helm in P.W., xxiii (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 880–97, s.v. 'Prosper (1)'.

PROSPHORA (Gk. προσφορά). In the E. Church, the altar bread. It takes the form of round leavened cakes about 3 inches in diameter and 2 inches thick, of which five are required for the service. They are solemnly cut up at the *Proskomide. From the first, which is divided by a cross into four quarters containing respectively the Greek letters IC ('Jesus'), XC ('Christ'), NI, KA (νικᾷ, 'conquers'), the principal particle (the 'seal') is cut out. From the second a particle is removed in honour of the BVM, and from the other three, nine further particles in honour of St. John the Baptist, the Prophets, the Apostles, &c. The remaining portions, the 'Antidoron', are not consecrated but distributed later among the congregation. In the Greek Church today one large loaf is used, instead of five smaller loaves; but the Russian Church retains the older practice of the five loaves.

PROTASIUS, St. See Gervasius and Protasius, Sts.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The Church in that country in communion with the see of *Canterbury, otherwise (since 1970) known as the Episcopal Church.

The first Anglican church in America was built at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607; many other congregations were established in different parts of the Continent, all under the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London; and from 1701 onwards the spread of the Anglican Church was vigorously furthered by *S.P.G., founded in that year. But it was only after the War of Independence that the Protestant Episcopal Church was established as an autonomous organization. S. *Seabury (q.v.) was elected by the clergy of Connecticut as their bishop, and after legal difficulties had prevented his consecration in England, he received the episcopal succession in 1784 at the hands of the Bishops of the (Episcopal) Church of *Scotland. Further Bishops were consecrated in England, however, in 1787 and 1790. At a General Convention in 1789 a constitution and canons were drawn up and the Prayer Book revised. The Church for a long time had to meet with considerable prejudice through its British connexions, but gradually this feeling lessened, though in point of numbers it has never quite recovered from this initial handicap.

The Church was a pioneer in the foundation of theological seminaries and established the *General Theological Seminary in New York as early as 1817. During the Civil War of 1861–5 the Church in the southern states formed itself into a separate body, but reconciliation followed the peace of 1865. Since that date the Church has expanded both at home and abroad, and missionary dioceses were set up in Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Cuba, China, Japan, Haiti, Liberia, and Brazil. Missionary work has been co-ordinated by a single body, the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, from its foundation in 1821. Since 1867 the American Church has taken a prominent part in all the *Lambeth Conferences. Further revisions of the Prayer Book were made in 1892 and in 1928–9; a new Prayer Book, based on rites authorized in 1967 and 1971, became official in 1979. It includes services in both traditional and contemporary language.

The constitution of the Church provides for the laity a greater share in administration than has been customary in England, both in all legislative bodies and in the vestries of individual churches. Bishops are elected, by majority vote of both clerical and lay orders, in diocesan conventions. The supreme court in the Church is the General Convention, which meets every three years. There are no archbishops, but there is a Presiding Bishop. Until 1919 he was the senior bishop by consecration, but he is now elected by the General Convention. An Executive Council, composed of elected representatives of bishops, lower clergy, and laity, is the continuing executive organ between meetings of the General Convention.

Theological and ecclesiastical parties run in some measure upon similar lines to those in the C of E, though the absence of state control encourages freer development. There are numerous Church organizations; and religious communities, both for men and women, made their appearance soon after the middle of the 19th cent.

The Church has long taken a prominent part in ecumenical activities. Recent developments include the Consultation on Church Union (COCU), discussions with nine Protestant denominations in progress since 1962; Anglican–RC negotiations; and official joint commissions with *Lutheran and *Orthodox theologians. In 1976 the General Convention voted to permit the ordination of women to the priesthood. Opposition to this decision, and to the new Prayer Book, has resulted in several small schismatic bodies. The generally liberal social programmes established by recent General Conventions have also provoked strong opposition.

The Church has some 2.85 million baptized members, with just under 2 million communicants.

See also United States of America, Christianity in.

W. S. Perry [Bp. of Iowa] (ed.), Historical Collections relating to the American Colonial Church (5 vols. in 4, relating to Virginia, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Delaware; privately pr. at Hartford, Conn., 1870–78). W. White, Bp. of Pennsylvania, Memoirs of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America (Philadelphia, Pa., 1820), with orig. docc. W. S. Perry, The History of the American Episcopal Church, 1587–1883 (2 vols., Boston, Mass., 1885); C. C. Tiffany, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America (American Church History Series, vii; New York, 1895); W. W. Manross, A History of the American Episcopal Church (New York, 1935; ed. 2, 1950); R. W. Albright, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church (New York–London, 1964). P. M. Dawley, The Episcopal Church and its Work (Greenwich, Conn., 1955). C. O. Loveland, The Critical Years. The Reconstruction of the Anglican Church in the United States of America, 1780–1789 (Greenwich, Conn., 1956). J. T. Addison, The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1789–1931 (New York, 1951). W. W. Manross, The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1800–1840 (Columbia University thesis; New York, 1938). G. E. DeMille, The Catholic Movement in the American Episcopal Church (Philadelphia, Pa., 1941; ed. 2, enlarged, 1950); id., The Episcopal Church since 1900 (New York, 1955). W. S. Perry, The Episcopate in America. Sketches, Biographical and Bibliographical, of the Bishops of the American Church, with a Preliminary Essay on the Historic Episcopate and Documentary Annals of the Introduction of the Anglican Line of Succession into America (New York, 1895). A. L. Cross, The Anglican Episcopate and the American Colonies (Harvard Historical Studies, ix; 1902). E. C. Chorley, Men and Movements in the American Episcopal Church (Hale Lectures for 1943; New York, 1946). E. L. Parsons–B. H. Jones, The American Prayer Book. Its Origins and Principles (New York, 1937). M. H. Shepherd, The Oxford American Prayer Book Commentary (New York, 1950). C. R. Barnes, The General Convention. Offices and Officers, 1785–1950 (Philadelphia, Pa., 1951). E. A. White, Annotated Constitution and Canons for the Government of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, adopted in General Convention 1789–1922 (New York, 1924; revised and continued to 1952 by J. A. Dykman, 2 vols., Greenwich, Conn., 1954). H. Lowther Clarke, Constitutional Church Government in the Dominions Beyond the Seas and in Other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924), pp. 196–205. Also important articles in the Historical Magazine of the Protestant Episcopal Church (Austin, Texas, 1932 ff.). See also bibl. to United States of America, Christianity in.

PROTESTANTISM. The system of Christian faith and practice based on acceptance of the principles of the Reformation. The term is derived from the 'Protestatio' of the reforming members of the Diet of *Speyer (1529) against the decisions of the Catholic majority. The word has retained a strongly anti-Roman flavour and is commonly repudiated by those who minimize their difference from Rome.

The chief branches of original Protestantism were *Lutheranism, *Calvinism, and *Zwinglianism (qq.v.). The position of the C of E is disputed. Here strong Calvinist influences have intermingled with older traditions, but it is widely contended that these have not effected any intrinsic modification of the pre-Reformation faith. The term is not used in any edition of the BCP, but from the beginning of the 17th cent. it was adopted as opposed to both Roman Catholicism and Puritanism, e.g. by *Charles I when he affirmed his allegiance to the Protestant religion. After the Restoration, however, it was generally extended to include also the Nonconformists. In this enlarged sense it is now widely used in popular parlance, though a large body of Anglicans deny the Protestant character of the C of E.

The chief characteristics of original Protestantism, common to all its denominations, are the acceptance of the Bible as the only source of revealed truth, the doctrine of justification by faith only, and the universal priesthood of all believers. Protestantism has tended to stress the transcendence of God, laying corresponding emphasis on the effects of the Fall and Original Sin and the impotence of the unaided human intellect to obtain any knowledge of God, to minimize the liturgical aspects of Christianity, to put preaching and hearing of the Word before Sacramental faith and practice, and, while rejecting asceticism, to uphold for the individual a high, if at times austere, standard of personal morality. The principle of 'private judgement' in the interpretation of Scripture accounts for the great variety of sects and Churches typical of Protestantism, in which many shades of doctrine and practice are found.

The rigid systems of doctrinal orthodoxy elaborated by the earlier Protestant theologians began to suffer dissolution in the 18th cent., esp. under the growth of the new sense of history. G. E. Lessing and the Aufklärung distinguished Bible and religion, letter and spirit, theology and religious sentiment, and put all the emphasis on the latter members of these pairs. This one-sided stress on the subjective element in Christianity was further developed by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, who placed religious experience in the centre of the Christian life. He had a profound influence, esp. on Continental Protestantism, which was later enhanced, and largely superseded, by that of A. *Ritschl (q.v.). Ritschl, though giving the first place not to feelings but to the facts of Scripture, brought back the principle of subjectivism by his theory of 'value judgements'.

His contentions about Scripture, notably his assumptions that the fundamental idea of original Christianity was the Kingdom of God and that the Christianity of Jesus differed radically from that of St. *Paul, also won a wide following. Another strong influence on the formation of modern Protestantism was that of A. *Harnack (q.v.), whose Wesen des Christentums presented the Lord as the prophet of a religion without priests and dogma, but with the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of men as its central theme. In Calvinism also there has been a tendency to abandon old positions such as the rigid doctrine of *Predestination.

These liberal currents, however, have been variously counteracted. From the time of the *Oxford Movement there has been a strong group in the C of E concerned with the defence of traditional doctrine and practice. More recently there has been a similar movement in Germany. S. *Kierkegaard had also endeavoured to infuse a new objectivism into the Protestant Church in *Denmark. And in 18th- and 19th-cent. Protestantism generally, there continued a large body of conservative belief, the strength of which, because it was less vociferous than many of the more academic theologians, has often been much under-estimated. In the present cent. the most influential proponent of the objective realities of Christianity has been K. *Barth. His Römerbrief (1919) marked a decisive break in the universities with the earlier psychological systems and a return to a Theology of Revelation. His influence was very deep on the Continent as well as in Great Britain and America, where it did much to end the reign of the more negative elements of German criticism. This return to the foundations coincided with an increasing desire to overcome the old divisions which found expression in the *Ecumenical Movement.

By the middle of the 20th cent., however, the theological renaissance under Barth had spent itself. Within *dialectical theology itself there was a widening gap between the Biblical and revelationist tendencies of Barth, on the one hand, and the *demythologizing of R. *Bultmann and his followers on the other. This rift was succeeded in the 'sixties by attempts at a secular theology and at a Christian atheism ('death of God'; see God), and it seemed for a time as if liberal Protestantism might dissolve into something indistinguishable from humanism. But meanwhile a return to more definitely Biblical themes was signalled by the rise in Germany of a new school of thought, associated with the names of Wolfhart Pannenberg and Jüngen Moltmann, stressing the essentially eschatological character of Christianity and the centrality of the doctrine of the *Resurrection.

The writings of many of the early leaders are pr. in the Corpus Reformatorum, ed. C. G. Bretschneider–H. E. Bindseil and others (Halle, &c., 1834 ff.). Collection of the Protestant confessions tr. into English in P. *Schaff, The History of the Creeds, iii (1878), with discussion in vol. i (1878), pp. 203–930. R. W. *Dale, Protestantism. Its Ultimate Principle (1874). O. Ritschl, Dogmengeschichte des Protestantismus. Grundlagen und Grundzüge der theologischen Gedanken- und Lehrbildung in den protestantischen Kirchen (4 vols., 1908–27). E. *Troeltsch, Die Bedeutung des Protestantismus für die Entstehung der modernen Welt (1911; ed. 2, Beiheft ii der Historische Zeitschrift, 1924; Eng. tr., 1912). K. *Heim, Das Wesen des evangelischen Christentums (1925; Eng. tr., 1935). R. H. Tawney, Religion and the Rise of Capitalism. A Historical Study (Holland Memorial Lectures for 1922; 1926). C. J. Cadoux, Catholicism and Christianity. A Vindication of Progressive Protestantism (1928). K. Leese, Die Religion des protestantischen Menschen (1938). T. Siegfried, Das protestantische Prinzip in Kirche und Welt (1939). K. Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert. Ihre Vorgeschichte und ihre Geschichte (Zürich, 1947; Eng. tr., 1972). P. *Tillich, The Protestant Era (Chicago, Ill., 1948; London, 1951). J. Dillenberger–C. Welch, Protestant Christianity interpreted through its Development (New York, 1954). C. W. Kegley, Protestantism in Transition (New York, 1965). E. G. Léonard, Histoire générale du protestantisme (3 vols., 1961–4; Eng. tr., 1965 ff.). C. H. H. Wright–C. Neil (edd.), A Protestant Dictionary (1904). F. *Kattenbusch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 135–82; E. Wolf and others in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 648–66, both s.v. 'Protestantismus'.

PROTEVANGELIUM, The. A modern title of the apocryphal Infancy Narrative, also known as the Book of *James (q.v.). It was so described by G. Postel (d. 1581), whose Lat. transl. of it was published by T. *Bibliander as Protoevangelion Jacobi, fratris Domini, de natalibus Jesu Christi, et Virginis Mariae; cum Evangelio vitaque S. Marci Evangelistae (Basle, 1552).

PROTHESIS (Gk. πρόθεσις). In the E. Church the word is used (1) for the table on which the solemn preparation (*Proskomide) of the Eucharistic gifts takes place; (2) for the chamber to the left of the apse of the church, on the opposite side to the *diaconicon, in which the table just mentioned stands; and (3) for the Proskomide (q.v.) itself.

PROTO-LUKE. A first draft which St. *Luke is supposed to have made of his Gospel. The theory was first developed by B. H. *Streeter in an article in the Hibbert Journal, Oct. 1921, and in a fuller form in his Four Gospels (1924), ch. viii. It is suggested that Proto-Luke consisted mainly of those sections of the existing Gospel which were peculiar to Luke, together with material derived from '*Q', and that only at a later stage did the Gospel reach its present form by the addition of the Infancy Narratives (ch. 1 and 2) and the matter provided by the Gospel of St. *Mark.

PROTOMARTYR (i.e. First Martyr). A title commonly given to St. *Stephen (Acts 7. 60), and also occasionally to the first martyrs of different countries, e.g. to St. *Alban, the 'Protomartyr of England'.

PROTONOTARY APOSTOLIC. A member of the college of notaries attached to the papal court. The office, which dates back to very early times, has undergone frequent changes. Until recently there were four grades, the highest being limited to seven members. In 1968, by the papal decree 'Pontificalis Domus', the grades were reduced to two, de numero and supra numerum. The latter are purely honorary.

PROVERBS, Book of. A poetical Book of the OT, part of the '*Hagiographa', and usually placed second after the *Psalms. The Book is divided into eight clearly marked sections: (1) chs. 1–9, headed 'The Proverbs of Solomon', comprising a series of counsels given by Divine Wisdom, and ending in a description of two feasts, of wisdom which leads to understanding

(9. 1–6), and of folly which leads to '*Sheol' (9. 13–16); (2) chs. 10. 1 – 22. 16, also headed 'The Proverbs of Solomon', consisting of simple unconnected distichs enouncing particular rules of conduct; (3) chs. 22. 17 – 24. 22, entitled 'The Words of the Wise', consisting of small groups of practical counsels, more developed than the preceding ones; (4) 24. 23–34, 'The Sayings of the Wise', containing maxims of behaviour to one's neighbour; (5) chs. 25–29, 'Proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out', also chiefly distichs but more popular in style than the two former Solomonic sections; (6) ch. 30, 'The Words of Agar'; (7) 31. 1–9, 'The Words of King Lemuel'; and (8) 31. 10–31, an acrostic poem in praise of the virtuous woman.

As it stands, the Book represents a compilation of various collections of proverbs, stemming from widely different periods and places, while the separate collections contain individual sayings of even more diverse origin. Section (3), for example, appears to be a variant version of the Egyptian Teaching of Amen-em-ope (which dates from c. 1000 B.C.), though the precise relationship between the two is difficult to determine. It is possible that one or other of the sayings in the Book, or even of the small collections presupposed in the larger collections, may go back to *Solomon, but the tradition that he was the compiler of the Book is prob. best explained by the fact that he was known himself to have uttered proverbs and to have made his court a centre of Eastern wisdom (1 Kgs. 4. 29–34; 10. 23–4).

In the NT Proverbs is quoted as Scripture in Rom. 3. 15 and Jas. 4. 6. It was also a favourite source of quotations among the Fathers, and the passage in ch. 8, in which *Wisdom seems to be *hypostasized, was one of the key texts in the *Arian controversy. The Book as a whole, however, was little commented on either in antiquity or in the Middle Ages, but it was the subject of commentaries by P. *Melanchthon (1526), Card. T. *Cajetan (1542), and J. B. *Bossuet (1693). In the Roman liturgy passages from the Book are frequently used in connection with Marian devotions, while parts of the poem about the virtuous woman (31. 10–31) provide the first reading in one of the Commons for 'Saints and Holy Women'.

Commentaries by C. H. Toy (I.C.C., 1899), T. T. Perowne (Camb. Bib., AV, 1899), G. C. Martin (Cent. Bib., on Prov., Eccles., and Song of Sol., 1908, pp. 9–207), W. O. E. Oesterley (West. Comm., 1929), B. Gemser (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Abt. xvi; 1937; ed. 2, 1963), A. Barucq, S.D.B. (Sources bibliques, 1964) and W. McKane (London, 1970). G. Boström, Proverbiastudien. Die Weisheit und das Fremde Weib in Spr. 1–9 (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. 1, Bd. xxx, Nr. 3; 1935); R. N. Whybray, Wisdom in Proverbs. The Concept of Wisdom in Proverbs 1–9 (Studies in Biblical Theology, xlv; 1965); Christa Kayatz, Studien zu Proverbien 1–9 (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, xxii; 1966).

PROVIDENTISSIMUS DEUS (1893). The encyclical on the study of the Holy Scriptures issued by Pope *Leo XIII on 18 Nov. 1893. Its purpose was to give official guidance, esp. to the clergy, in the new situation in Biblical studies brought about by recent discoveries in archaeology and literary criticism. While stressing the importance of the study of the new evidence, it condemned the use made of it in some quarters (with a clear ref. to such scholars as A. F. *Loisy and M. *D'Hulst, though they were not mentioned by name). It expressly reaffirmed the pronouncements of the *Tridentine and First *Vatican Councils on Biblical Inspiration and on the Scriptural text and asserted that the whole of Scripture was written 'at the dictation of the Holy Ghost' (Spiritu Sancto dictante). Both conservatives and liberals appealed to the document; but in the next decade, owing to the spread of *Modernism (q.v.), the Encyclical was increasingly interpreted in official quarters in a conservative sense. See also Biblical Commission.

Two later encyclicals, Pope *Benedict XV's 'Spiritus Paraclitus' (15 Sept. 1920) and Pope *Pius XII's 'Divino Afflante Spiritu' (30 Sept. 1943), both dealt with the same issues as 'Providentissimus Deus' in the light of the further development of Biblical studies. All three reflect the ever-growing interest in the study of the Bible along modern lines in the RC Church.

Text pr. in A.S.S., xxvi (1893–4), pp. 269–92. Extracts in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 638–42 (Nos. 3280–94). A. M. Ambrozic in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 922 f., s.v.; id., ib., xiii (1967), p. 611 f., s.v. 'Spiritus Paraclitus'; J. F. Whealon, ib., iv (1967), p. 925 f., s.v. 'Divino Afflante Spiritu'.

PROVINCE. A group of *dioceses, territorially contiguous, forming an ecclesiastical unit, so called because such groups were originally coincident with the Provinces of the Roman Empire. See also Archbishop; Metropolitan; Primate.

PROVINCIAL. An official of a religious order subject to the superior-general. He exercises authority over all houses of the order within a given area, though a house may sometimes be geographically in one province, but subject to the Provincial of another. The office of Provincial, unknown to the old monastic orders, came into being with the more centralized *Mendicant orders, and from them was taken over by the majority of modern orders and congregations. The Provincial is normally elected by the provincial chapter, subject to the approval of the *general chapter; in the *Jesuit Order he is appointed by the *General. The Provincial holds office for a term of years, usually three or six, never for life. His chief duty is to make regular visitations of the houses of his jurisdiction and to supervise the life of the religious and the administration of their property.

PROVISORS, Statutes of. Four laws passed in England in the 14th cent. to check the practice of Papal 'provision', or nomination to vacant benefices over the head of the ordinary patron.

The First, passed in 1351, provided that 'the King and other lords shall present unto Benefices of their own, and not the Bishop of Rome'.

The Second, passed in 1353, imposed the penalties of '*Praemunire for suing in a foreign realm, or impeaching of Judgment given [sc. in the English courts]'.

The Third, passed in 1365, confirmed the law of 1351.

The Fourth, passed in 1389, enacted that benefices accepted contrary to the earlier laws of Provisors should be forfeited, and that proceedings should be taken against anyone attempting to enforce a provision by summons or excommunication, and against any prelate enforcing such a provision.

Despite these Statutes, the practice of provision continued down to the *Reformation, and was revived during the reign of *Mary.

See also Praemunire.

Text, with Eng. tr., in A. J. Stephens, The Statutes Relating to the Ecclesiastical and Eleemosynary Institutions of England, Wales, Ireland, India, and the Colonies (1845), pp. 58–66, 67–70, and 84–7. Eng. tr. of the last, reciting in full the Statute of 1351, also in Gee–Hardy, pp. 112–21 (No. xxxix), mainly repr. in Bettenson (ed. 2, 1963), pp. 233–9. For general background see G. Barraclough, Papal Provisions (1935). F. Cheyette, 'Kings, Courts, Cures, and Sinecures: The Statute of Provisors and the Common Law' in Traditio, xix (1963), pp. 295–349, with further reff. G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 476 f.

PROVOST (Lat. praepositus, Germ. Probst). In early Christian usage the official next in dignity to the abbot of a monastery, but now esp. the head of an ecclesiastical chapter. In England the title is used in the newer dioceses (e.g. Bradford, Derby, Portsmouth) of the head of the cathedral chapter where the cathedral is also a parish church and the Provost is thus also an incumbent with cure of souls. The title is used in a non-ecclesiastical sense for the heads of certain colleges, e.g. of Oriel, Queen's, and Worcester Colleges at Oxford, King's College at Cambridge, and Eton College.

PRUDENTIUS AURELIUS CLEMENS (348–c. 410), Latin poet and hymn-writer. A Spaniard by birth, he practised at the bar and had a successful career in civil administration. The retirement of his later life was occupied in devout exercises and Christian writings. His apologetic poems, 'Apotheosis' (on the theology of the Incarnation), 'Hamartigenia' (against *Marcion), and 'Contra Symmachum' (on the occasion of a temporary recrudescence of paganism), exhibit his distinction in abstract thought as well as in the imitation of classical models. His hymns are reflective and didactic, rarely less than 100 lines long, and composed in classical metres; extracts from them are found in most W. breviaries. One collection, the Cathemerinon (καθημερινῶν), consists of hymns designed for daily use; another, the Peristephanon (περὶ στεφάνων), sings the praises of a number of Spanish and Italian martyrs. The 'Psychomachia', a description of Christian asceticism under the allegory of a spiritual warfare, exercised a profound influence upon medieval poetry.

Of the older edd., the best is that of F. Arevalus (2 vols., Rome, 1788–9), with extended comm.; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lix and lx. Crit. edd. by J. Bergman (C.S.E.L., lxi; 1926) and M. P. Cunningham (C.C., Series Latina, cxxvi; 1966). Text with Fr. transl., also ed. M. Lavarenne in 'Collection des Universités de France' (4 vols., 1943–51); text with Eng. tr. by H. J. Thomson (2 vols., Loeb, 1949–53). R. J. Deferrari–J. Marshall Campbell, A Concordance of Prudentius (Cambridge, Mass., 1932). A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), pp. 115–48. A. Puech, Prudence (1888); J. Bergman, A. Prudentius Clemens, der grösste christliche Denker des Altertums (Dorpat, 1922). M. Lavarenne, Étude sur la langue du poète Prudence (1933), with bibl. I. Lana, Due capitoli prudenziani. La biografia, la cronologia delle opere, la poetica (Verba Seniorum, N.S., ii; 1962). C. Gnilka, Studien zur Psychomachie des Prudentius (Klassisch-Philologische Studien, xxvii; Wiesbaden, 1963). R. Herzog, Die allegorische Dichtkunst des Prudentius (Zetemata, xlii; 1966). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 440–3; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), pp. 407–9. A. Kurfess in P.W., xxiii (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 1039–71, s.v. 'Prudentius (2)'.

PRUDENTIUS, GALINDO (d. 861), Bp. of Troyes. He was a native of Spain, became a chaplain at the court of *Louis the Pious, and, c. 843, Bp. of Troyes. He played an important part in the controversy on *Predestination between *Hincmar of Reims and the monk, *Gottschalk, defending the *Augustinianism of the latter, and denying the general saving will of God. In his 'Epistola ad Hincmarum' he taught the Augustinian doctrine of the double predestination and, in 852, wrote a treatise 'De Praedestinatione contra Joannem Scotum', i.e. against John Scotus *Erigena, whom Hincmar had called to his aid. Acc. to Hincmar, he signed the four anti-Augustinian propositions of the Synod of *Quiercy (853). In 856, however, he wrote his 'Epistola Tractoria', addressed to Abp. Venilo of Sens, in which he opposed to the decisions of Quiercy four counter-propositions, teaching Augustinian doctrine of the strictest type. Prudentius also wrote a continuation of the 'Annales Bertiniani' for the years 835–861, valuable for the history of the Frankish Empire.

His writings on the predestination controversy were first publd. by G. Mauguin at Paris in 1650. Crit. ed. of his continuation of the 'Annales Bertiniani' by G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, i (1826), pp. 429–54. Collected ed. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxv, 965–1458. J. Girgensohn, Prudentius und die bertinianischen Annalen (Riga, 1875). Manitius, i, esp. pp. 344–8. H. Peltier in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1079–84, s.v. 'Prudence de Troyes'.

PRYMER. See Primer.

PRYNNE, WILLIAM (1600–69), *Puritan controversialist. Educated at Bath Grammar School and Oriel College, Oxford, he was admitted at Lincoln's Inn in 1621 and later became a barrister. As a strong and unbending Puritan, he was soon in conflict with the High Church party. In 1627 he published his first book, The Perpetuity of a Regenerate Man's Estate. A violent attack on the stage in Histriomastix (1632), thought to contain veiled attacks on both *Charles I and *Henrietta Maria, led to his sentence by the Star Chamber on 17 February 1634 to imprisonment for life, a fine of £5,000, expulsion from Lincoln's Inn, the loss of his university degree, and the pillory, where he was to lose both his ears. The whole sentence, except the permanence of the imprisonment and the fine, was carried out. In 1637 an attack on the 'Declaration of *Sports' led to a fresh sentence by the Star Chamber and he was imprisoned first at Caernarvon and then in Mont Orgueil Castle in Jersey; but the unpopularity of ship-money and the metropolitical visitation had changed public opinion and Prynne now met with wide sympathy. When the Long Parliament met in 1640 he was liberated and defended the right of taking up arms against the King, notably in his The Sovereign Power of Parliaments and Kingdoms (1643). He also carried on a literary warfare with W. *Laud. On the other hand, his ideal of the supremacy of State over Church put him out of sympathy with the *Independents, whom he attacked in Twelve Considerable Serious Questions touching Church Government (1644); and he hated the notion of toleration. In 1648 he issued The Levellers Levelled, a defence of the House of Lords. Eventually on 7 Nov. 1648 he obtained a seat (Newport, Cornwall) in the Commons and unexpectedly argued for conciliation with the King and opposed his execution. In consequence he was included in 'Pride's Purge' (6 Dec.) and imprisoned. On 1 Jan. 1649 he published A Brief Memento to the Present Unparliamentary Junto. Later in the year he attacked the new tax imposed by the Commonwealth in A Legal Vindication of the Liberties of England and embarked on a large-scale work against the new Parliament; and in 1650 he was again imprisoned, without a trial. After his release (1653) he ceased from further attacks on O. *Cromwell's régime and wrote against the Papists and *Quakers. To his annoyance he was excluded from the Rump Parliament (1659) and fearlessly criticized it in a long series of controversial writings. He eventually resumed his seat in Parliament on 21 February 1660 and three days later brought in the bill for the dissolution preparatory to *Charles II's restoration. Shortly after his return, Charles appointed him Keeper of the Tower Records. His strong *Presbyterianism, however, soon brought him into conflict with the reviving *Anglicanism, which he attacked in a long series of publications, among them A Short, Sober, Pacific Examination of Exuberances in the Common Prayer (1661) and Apology for Tender Consciences touching Not Bowing at the Name of Jesus (1661). But he continued to take a prominent part in Parliamentary affairs until his death. He also wrote extensively in his last years, defending on historical grounds the subjection of the clergy to the Crown.

S. R. Gardiner (ed.), Documents Relating to the Proceedings against William Prynne in 1634 and 1637 (Camden Society, New Series, xviii; 1877), with the beginning of a life by J. Bruce (d. 1869) [up to 1624], pp. i–xxxv, and list of Prynne's works by Bruce, pp. 101–18. Modern studies by E. W. Kirby (Cambridge, Mass., 1931), with list of Prynne's works, pp. 194–207, and other bibl., pp. 207–19; and W. M. Lamont (London, 1963), also with bibl. C. H. Firth in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 432–7; S. R. Gardiner–P. C. Yorke in E.B. (ed. 11), xxii (1911), pp. 531–3, s.v.

PSALMS, Book of (Gk. ψαλμοί, 'songs, accompanied by string music'), in the Hebrew Bible the first of the '*Hagiographa'. The Book contains 150 Psalms, variously enumerated. By combining Pss. 9 and 10 of the Hebrew *Massoretic text (followed by the BCP version, AV and RV), the Gk. and Lat. (Vulg.) versions, up to Psalm 114, remain one number behind the Hebrew counting (e.g. Ps. 90 AV is Ps. 89 Vulg.); Pss. 114 and 115 (Heb.) are again conflated in Gk. and Lat., but as the following Ps. 116 is divided in two, the Gk. and Lat. numeration is again one behind that of the Heb. up to Ps. 147, which is divided in two in Gk. and Lat. Hence only the first eight and the last three Psalms agree in both enumerations.

The Psalms are traditionally divided into five Books, probably after the model of the Books of the *Pentateuch, viz. 1–41, 42–72, 73–89, 90–106, 107–50, each except the last ending with a doxology. There are clear indications of earlier groupings which point back to independently existing collections, e.g. the concluding notice after 72 ('The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended'). Similarly Pss. 3–41 are all (except 10, a continuation of 9, and 33) headed 'Of David'; 42–49 (except 43, a continuation of 42) 'Of the Sons of Korah'; and 73–83 (also 50) 'Of Asaph'.

The rubrics in the Massoretic text and in the Septuagint make it clear that in its present form the Psalter is essentially a liturgical book; it has often been described as the 'hymn-book of the Second *Temple'. Being entirely composed of poems, the Book provides many excellent examples of the Hebrew device of *parallelism. Many attempts have been made to discover a definite metre in the Psalms, but with little success. Poetical conceits, such as refrains and acrostics, are frequent. Of 'Alphabetical Psalms', Ps. 119 is the most elaborate, each section of eight verses beginning with a different letter of the alphabet.

The popular belief that David was the author of the whole Psalter can no longer be sustained. It was held by many of the Latin Fathers, e.g. St. *Ambrose and St. *Augustine, and not seriously questioned during the Middle Ages or by the Reformers, except J. *Calvin; but it had been strongly opposed by St. *Jerome. Most modern scholars believe that the Pss. come from a variety of authors and are of widely differing dates. The 20th cent. has, however, seen a reaction against the view, prevalent in the later 19th cent., that few, if any, of the Pss. are pre-exilic, and no serious scholar today would accept the thesis of B. *Duhm that the bulk of the Psalter belongs to the *Maccabean period. Though we may prefer to assign few, if any, of the Pss. to David, there is no reason to doubt that many of them come from the early years of the Monarchy and in their original form may have been used in the worship of the First Temple. Uncertainty also prevails as to the date at which the various collections were made, but they are probably all post-exilic.

Traditionally interpreted, the Psalms are held to cover the whole range of the relations between God and man. Jehovah, the eternal, immutable and omnipotent, is the Creator of the universe which He upholds and governs by His Divine Providence. Himself all-holy, He demands from His creatures holiness and penitence (see Seven Penitential Psalms), but His supreme justice is tempered by His mercy. The Psalmists' zeal for the right often finds expression in a passionate desire to see God's vengeance on the wicked (see Imprecatory Psalms). The conception of individual life after death is mainly confined to the shadowy realm of *Sheol, though a brighter hope at times emerges (Pss. 16. 9–11, 49. 15, 73. 23 f.). The nation's hope for the future is centred on a scion of the Davidic line, described as the great Priest-King (Ps. 110) and God's son (Ps. 2), who will cast down his enemies (Ps. 89) and unite the whole world in his worship (Ps. 22).

During the past 100 years this traditional exegesis has been challenged at several points. R. Smend and others have maintained that the 'I' of the Psalms commonly refers not to an individual but to Israel as a nation. Even more radical are the theories of S. *Mowinckel, for whom the evil men about whom the Psalmists complain are frequently sorcerers and many of the Psalms themselves a kind of counter-charm. He also argued that the so-called 'Accession Psalms', in which Jehovah is described as a king, find their origin in an otherwise unknown feast of the Inthronization of Jehovah, held to have been celebrated in Israel as a 'New Year Festival'; the grounds for the existence of such a festival are based on supposed parallels in Babylonian literature, and Mowinckel's thesis, though widely accepted, has been severely criticized from many points of view.

In the Christian Church the Psalter has been used both in public worship and private prayer from very early times. The Gospels record that Christ applied to Himself the metaphor of the 'stone which the builders rejected' (118. 22) and that on the Cross He voiced both His desolation and His supreme act of surrender in the words of Pss. 22. 1 and 31. 6. Both St. *Paul and the author of Heb. constantly see the Psalmists' aspirations fulfilled in Christ.

The patristic tradition follows the same lines as the NT. Jerome, Ambrose and many others recommend the regular use of the Psalms, and St. Augustine, in his long commentary, finds Christ or His Church prefigured in almost every Psalm. As a book of devotion it has retained its position through the centuries. In the Divine Office of the RC Church, until the recent revision of the *Breviary, the whole Psalter was recited every week; in the C of E it has traditionally been said each month; and both Continental Protestant and English Nonconformist piety have been nourished on it. The Psalms were an integral part of the spiritual life of men as widely apart as *Benedictines and *Puritans, M. *Luther and St. *Francis Xavier, Charles *Wesley and J. H. *Newman.

Commentaries by J. M. *Neale and R. F. *Littledale (mystical interpretation; 4 vols., London, 1860–74); T. K. *Cheyne (ib., 1888); B. Duhm (K.H.A.T., xiv, 1899; ed. 2, 1922); A. F. Kirkpatrick (Camb. Bible, 1902); C. A. *Briggs (I.C.C., 2 vols., 1906); H. *Gunkel (H.K.A.T., II. Abt., Bd. ii, ed. 4, 1925–6); W. E. Barnes (West. Comm., 2 vols., 1931); W. O. E. Oesterley (2 vols., London, 1939); E. J. Kissane (2 vols., Dublin, 1953–4); A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xiv–xv; ed. 5, 1959; Eng. tr., 1962); and H. J. Kraus (2 vols., Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, xv; Neukirchen, 1960; ed. 2, 1961).

W. T. Davison, The Praises of Israel (1893); C. L. Marson The Psalms at Work (1894); R. E. Prothero, The Psalms in Human Life (1904); S. R. *Driver, The Parallel Psalter (1904); S. Mowinckel, Psalmenstudien (6 parts, Kristiania, 1921–4); J. P. Peters, The Psalms as Liturgies (1922); D. C. Simpson (ed.), The Psalmists (1926); A. C. Welch, The Psalter (1926); P. S. Waddy, Homes of the Psalms (1928); N. H. Snaith, Studies in the Psalter (1934); L. James, Songs of Zion (1936); W. O. E. Oesterley, A Fresh Approach to the Psalms (1937); S. Mowinckel, Offersang og Sangoffer (1951; revised Eng. tr., 2 vols., Oxford, 1962); A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel (Cardiff, 1955).

PSALMS, Imprecatory. See Imprecatory Psalms.

PSALMS, Metrical. See Metrical Psalters.

PSALMS OF SOLOMON. See Solomon, Psalms of.

PSALTER COLLECTS. Collects recited in early times by the officiating priest after each Psalm. The custom is attested by *Etheria in her account of the Sunday vigils at Jerusalem (ii. 24), by *Cassian among the monks of Egypt (Inst., ii. 7) and by the author of the Regula Magistri* in Italy. The recital of the collects survived into the Carolingian age, but thereafter was abandoned, except in Spain, where the composition of new collects continued until the introduction of the Roman rite in the 11th cent. The latest testimony is that of Smaragdus, abbot of St.-Mihiel, on the bank of the R. Meuse (fl. 819).

Three ancient series have recently been published, named African, Roman and Spanish. The African, which prob. dates from the second half of the 5th cent., appears to be the work of a single author. It survives in only one manuscript. The Roman is assigned to Italy, c. 500. It is the work of more than one hand. It survives in a considerable number of Psalters. The authorship of the Spanish series, which covers only Pss. 1–134, is also composite. Its date is prob. earlier than the 8th century.

Text ed. by L. Brou, O.S.B. (using materials collected by A. *Wilmart, O.S.B.) (H.B.S., lxxxiii; 1949). Text also pr. by P. Verbraken, O.S.B., Oraisons sur les cent cinquante psaumes (Lex Orandi, xlii; 1967), with Fr. tr. and full bibl.

PSALTERS, Western. The earliest Latin Psalters were translated from the *Septuagint. The most ancient complete text of the *Old Latin Psalter is preserved in the Verona Psalter; the manuscript (Verona Capitular Library 1 (i)) dates from the 6th–7th cent., but the text was clearly used by St. *Augustine in his Commentary on the Psalms. St. *Jerome, in his Preface to the *Gallican Psalter, states that he had earlier worked on a translation of the Psalms from the Septuagint and this work has been traditionally equated with the *Roman Psalter (q.v.); but the identification has been seriously contested. About 392 Jerome made a fresh translation of the Psalms from the *Hexaplaric text of the Septuagint (the Gallican Psalter, q.v.) and c. 400 he made a further one from the Hebrew (the 'Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos' or 'Hebrew Psalter'). Conservatism in the practice of worship prevented this last Psalter from ever replacing the older version in public use; indeed, even in the *Vulgate the Gallican Psalter was ultimately preferred, although in many medieval manuscripts all three Psalters, Roman, Gallican, and Hebrew, are set out in parallel columns.

The version of the Psalms in the BCP, which is almost identical with that of the '*Great Bible' (1539), was based on M. *Coverdale's translation from the Vulgate, i.e. from the Gallican Psalter; and it thus embodies many Septuagintal readings not found in the Hebrew. The authors of the 'Revised Psalter' (1964) attempted to preserve the literary character of Coverdale's work while basing their translation on the Hebrew text. It was the work of a Committee appointed by the Abps. of Canterbury and York in 1958, which included T. S. *Eliot and C. S. Lewis. In 1963 it was authorized for use at Mattins and Evensong in the C of E. The version in the ASB is a translation from the Hebrew into modern English, commissioned by the Liturgical Commission in 1972 and published in 1977. See also Metrical Psalters.

P. *Capelle, Le Texte du psautier latin en Afrique (Collectanea Biblica Latina, iv; 1913). R. Weber, O.S.B. (ed.), Le Psautier romain et les autres anciens psautiers latins (ib., x; 1953); H. de Sainte-Marie, O.S.B. (ed.), Sancti Hieronymi Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos (ib., xi; 1954). A. Allgeier, Die altlateinischen Psalterien. Prolegomena zu einer Textgeschichte der hieronymianischen Psalmenübersetzungen (Freiburg, 1928). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1950–67, s.v. 'Psautier'. See also works cited s.v. Roman Psalter.

PSALTERY (Lat. Psalterium). (1) An ancient and medieval stringed instrument played by plucking the strings with the fingers or a plectrum.

(2) The book which contained the Psalms for recitation at the Divine Office in the medieval W. rite. The arrangement was commonly acc. to the requirements of the Office. Psalteries often contained also the corresponding *antiphons, the *canticles recited in the Office, and other matter such as hymns, litanies, and prayers. When their contents were later incorporated in the *Breviary Psalteries fell into disuse.

PSELLUS, MICHAEL (c. 1019–c. 1078), Byzantine philosopher, historian, theologian, and statesman. He was Imperial secretary to Michael V (1041–2), and secretary of state to his successor, Constantine IX (1042–54). A keen enthusiast for the revival of classical learning and esp. *Platonic philosophy, in 1045 he was appointed the first professor of philosophy at the newly founded university of *Constantinople. Having incurred the displeasure of the Emperor, he entered a monastery in 1054, but soon on Constantine's death returned to the court, where he took part in many intrigues until, in 1072, he fell from favour once more and spent the rest of his life in obscurity.

Psellus wrote a large number of treatises on a wide range of subjects as well as many speeches, letters, and poems. His Χρονογραφία remains an important source for the history of the years 976–1077 and was utilized by later historians such as *Anna Comnena and *Zonaras. His chief theological writings are expositions of various Biblical books including an exegesis of seventy-two psalms in verse, a short treatise against the Latin theologians, and a dialogue Περὶ ἐνεργείας δαιμόνων against the *Messalians. His philosophical works include commentaries on the 'Timaeus' of *Plato and on the Περὶ ἑρμηνείας and other writings of *Aristotle.

Works repr. from various sources in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxii, 477–1358. Ed. of his unpubld. Scripta Minora begun by E. Kurtz–F. Drexl (Munich, 1936; only one part issued). His Χρονογραφία ('History') ed. C. Sathas, from the only surviving and poor MS., Bibl. Nat. 1712 ('Byzantine Texts', ed. J. B. Bury, London, 1899); also ed. E. Renauld (2 vols., 'Collection Byzantine', 1926–8); Eng. tr. by E. R. A. Sewter (London, 1953). The most important of the older discussions on Psellus is the account in L. *Allatius, De Psellis et eorum Scriptis (Rome, 1634); repr. with corrections and additions in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., cols. 477–536. Modern studies include C. Zervos, Un Philosophe néo-platonicien du XIe siècle (1920), E. Renauld, Étude de la langue et du style de Michel Psellos (1920), G. Böhlig, Untersuchungen zum rhetorischen Sprachgebrauch der Byzantiner mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Schriften des Michael Psellos (1956), and A. Gadolin, A Theory of History and Society with special reference to the Chronographia of Michael Psellus; 11th Century Byzantium (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, xi; 1970). Joan M. Hussey, Church and Learning in the Byzantine Empire, 867–1185 (1937), incl. bibl. to Psellus, pp. 236–8. Krumbacher, pp. 433–44. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1149–58, s.v. 'Psellos (Michel)'.

PSEUDEPIGRAPHA. Writings ascribed to some other than their real author, generally with a view to giving them an enhanced authority. The term is used esp. of the pseudonymous Jewish works, dating from the centuries immediately before and after the beginning of the Christian era, which were not included in the Greek *Canon of the OT. Among these writings are the 'Book of *Enoch', the 'Assumption of *Moses', the later 'Books of *Baruch', and the 'Psalms of *Solomon'. On the other hand, pseudonymous books which occur in the OT or *Apocrypha, e.g. 'the Rest of the Book of *Esther' and the '*Wisdom of Solomon', are by convention not ordinarily reckoned among the Pseudepigrapha.

The most convenient collection of these writings, with full discussion of authorship, dates, &c., is The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ed. by R. H. *Charles, vol. ii: Pseudepigrapha (1913). Eissfeldt, pp. 603–637, with bibl. For further bibl. see also under separate treatises.

PSEUDO-CLEMENTINES. See Clementine Literature.

PSEUDO-ISIDORIAN DECRETALS. See False Decretals.

PSILANTHROPISM (Gk. ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος, 'a mere man'). The heretical doctrine that Christ was just a man and not God and man in one Person. In the '*Little Labyrinth', quoted by *Eusebius (H.E., V. xxviii. 6), *Theodotus the Cobbler is said to have taught that He was a 'mere man' (ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος). The single word, ψιλάνθρωπος, seems to occur for the first time in *Anastasius of Sinai (Hodegos, xiii; J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxiii, 216 C), while the noun 'Psilanthropism' is apparently a 19th cent. coinage.

PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION. A field of study, dating from the late 19th cent., in which the concepts and methods of psychology are applied to religious experience and behaviour.

One of the first to investigate such possible applications of psychology was W. *James, whose work has since in some ways served as a model. The topics he chose for study included the experience of well-being or of conflict in human response to God, and the experiences of religious conversion and of saintliness and mysticism. His method was to collect written, and more rarely controlled, observations; his primary aim was a philosophical understanding of what he observed.

At the same period the early writings of S. Freud (1856–1939) on psycho-analysis in their own way contributed to the psychology of religion. Though the critical and reductionist views of religion which he repeatedly expressed no longer command assent either among psychologists or among theologians, some of his more precise observations and questions, for example about the relationships between certain religious practices and obsessional behaviour, and his speculations about patterns of early personal and religious growth, have since been followed by more exact methods. Similarly, the views of C. G. Jung (1875–1961), though by contrast tending to assign an almost indiscriminate validity to religious phenomena in human experience, have in turn led to critical restatements of permanent value for the psychology of religion.

The more precise methods that are now used in psychology have also come to be applied to topics similar to those studied by James. With the help of tests, measurements, a few specifically devised questionnaires, and projective methods, religious behaviour and experience have been studied in relation to age, to cognitive style and other personal characteristics, and also with reference to pathological and drug-induced conditions. It is, however, now generally agreed in principle that merely psychological methods cannot fully answer questions about the validity of religious behaviour and experience, even if they can account for some aspects of both of these in non-religious terms. In addition, the range of phenomena to which the psychology of religion can attend is at present considerably more restricted than that known to Christian hagiography and ascetical and mystical theology.

W. James, The Varieties of Religious Experience (Gifford Lectures for 1901–2, 1902); S. Freud, Massenpsychologie und Ich-Analyse (Vienna, 1921; Eng. tr., Group Psychology and the Analysis of the Ego, 1922); R. H. Thouless, Introduction to the Psychology of Religion (1923); C. G. Jung, Psychology and Religion (1938); G. W. Allport, The Individual and his Religion. A Psychological Interpretation (New York, 1950; London, 1951); L. W. Grensted, The Psychology of Religion (H.U.L., 1952); H. Thurston, S.J., The Physical Phenomenon of Mysticism, ed. J. H. Crehan, S.J. (1952); V. White, O.P., God and the Unconscious (1952); [J.] M. Argyle, Religious Behaviour (1958); W. H. Clark, The Psychology of Religion. An Introduction to Religious Experience and Behavior (New York, 1958); D. [P.] Cox, Jung and St. Paul. A Study of the Doctrine of Justification by Faith and its Relation to the Concept of Individuation (1959); [A.] G. S. Spinks, Psychology and Religion. An Introduction to Contemporary Views (1963). W. W. Meissner, Annotated Bibliography in Religion and Psychology (New York, 1961).

PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM. The body of astronomical doctrines elaborated by Ptolemy (2nd cent. A.D.) in his Μαθηματικὴ σύνταξις, which explained the apparent motions of the sun, moon and planets on the assumption that the earth was stationary. It was commonly accepted throughout the Middle Ages and later until it was replaced by the *Copernican theory.

PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT. The Act (37 & 38 Vict., c. 85) passed in 1874 to suppress the growth of ritualism in the C of E. The Bill, drafted by Abp. A. C. *Tait, was drastically amended in Parliament in a more Protestant and *Erastian direction by Lord *Shaftesbury. It provided for the appointment, by the two Archbishops conjointly, of a barrister or ex-judge as Judge of the provincial courts of *Canterbury and *York to try ritual cases, with an appeal to the Privy Council. Tait secured (against Shaftesbury's wishes) provision for the bishop's veto of proceedings under the Act. The first judge was James Plaisted Baron Penzance, ex-judge of divorce. The imprisonment of four priests (Arthur Tooth, 1877; Thomas Pelham Dale, 1880; Richard William Enraght, 1880; Sidney Faithorn Green, 1881–2) for contumacy between 1877 and 1882 greatly discredited the Act and henceforward it has been virtually obsolete. It was repealed by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure, 1963.

J. Bentley, Ritualism and Politics in Victorian Britain. The Attempt to Legislate for Belief (Oxford, 1978), incl. text, pp. 129–42. P. T. Marsh, The Victorian Church in Decline. Archbishop Tait and the Church of England 1868–1882 (1969), pp. 158–92. On the trial of A. Tooth and subsequent events, Joyce Coombs, Judgement on Hatcham. The History of a Religious Struggle 1877–1886 (1969).

PUBLICAN. The word used in the traditional English versions of the Bible to translate the Greek term τελώνης (Lat. publicanus), a member of one of the financial organizations which farmed the taxes in the service of the Roman government. In view of the abuses and corruptions to which the system led, the publicans were the objects of widespread hatred. In the Gospels they are commonly coupled with the 'sinners'. St. *Matthew ('Levi'), one of their number, received the call to be an Apostle from his place of toll (τελώνιον) at *Capernaum (Mt. 9. 9, &c.). *Zacchaeus at *Jericho is described as a 'chief publican' (ἀρχιτελώνης) (Lk. 19. 2).

E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, i (ed. 3, 1901), esp. pp. 477–9, with reff. W. F. Adeney in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 172 f., s.v.; L. Fillion in Dict. Bibl., v (1912), cols. 858–61, s.v. 'Publicains'; W. Schwahn in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 1; 1934), cols. 418–25, s.v. τελῶναι [mainly on 'publicans' in Republican, i.e. pre-N.T., times]; O. Michel in T.W.B., viii (1969), cols. 88–106, s.v. τελώνης, esp. part B.

PUDENS, St. (Gk. Πούδης). A Christian of *Rome who is mentioned in 2 Tim. 4. 21 as sending greetings along with Eubulus, *Linus, and Claudia to *Timothy. Tradition makes him St. *Peter's host at Rome. He is possibly the Pudens mentioned with Claudia in Martial's 'Epigrams' (4. 13; cf. 11. 53). There are no sufficient grounds for identifying the Pudens of the NT with the Pudens (prob. 3rd cent.) who gave his house on the Vicus Patricius (titulus Pudentis or ecclesia Pudentiana) to the Roman Church. See also foll. entry. Feast day in E., 14 Apr.; in W., 19 May.

On the proposed identifications of the NT Pudens, see W. *Lock in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 173. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hfft. 1 and 2; 1918), pp. 61–7; A. Petrignani, La basilica di S. Pudenziana in Roma (Monumenti di antichità cristiana pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, Ser. 2, i; 1934); B. Vanmaele, O.Praem., L'Église pudentienne de Rome (Santa Pudenziana) (Bibliotheca Analecta Praemonstratensium, vi; 1965). R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett in idd. and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iii (Rome, 1967), pp. 277–302, with bibl. [in English].

PUDENTIANA, St., also 'Potentiana'. Acc. to the Roman *Martyrology, she was a Roman virgin of the early Church, the daughter of St. *Pudens and the sister of St. *Praxedes. Probably the cultus rests on a mistaken popular notion which supposed that the 'ecclesia Pudentiana' in Rome, really the church of St. Pudens, presupposed a 'St. Pudentiana'. The 'Acta' of Sts. Pudentiana and Praxedes, printed by the *Bollandists, are not earlier than the 8th cent. Feast day in W., 19 May.

AA.SS., Mai. IV (1685), pp. 296–301. See also bibl. to preceding entry.

PUFENDORF, SAMUEL (1632–94). The first German professor of natural and international law. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he became professor successively at Heidelberg (1661) and Lund (1670), historiographer to the court of Sweden (1677), and privy councillor to the Elector of Brandenburg (1688). Developing the system of H. *Grotius, he divided law into natural, civil, and moral, and maintained that while moral law was based on revelation and civil law on the positive enactments of the state, natural law had its basis in the instinct of society, and therefore ultimately in human reason. His chief book is De Iure Naturae et Gentium (1672), of which an Eng. trans. was published in 1710 (under the title, Of the Law of Nature and Nations). In his De Habitu Religionis Christianae ad Vitam Civilem (1687), he expounded the theory of Church government known as '*Collegialism'. Pufendorf was also the author of many historical writings, among them Einleitung zu der Historie der vornehmsten Reiche und Staaten . . . in Europa (Frankfurt a.M., 1682), Commentariorum de Rebus Suecicis Libri XXVI (Utrecht, 1686; Eng. tr., with continuation, London, 1702), De Rebus Gestis Friderici Wilhelmi Magni, Electoris Brandenburgici (Berlin, 1695), and De Rebus Gestis Friderici III Electoris Brandenburgici (ib., 1784).

Photographic reproductions of Pufendorf's De Officio Hominis et Civis juxta Legem Naturalem [ed. 1682] with introd. by W. Schücking and Eng. tr. of text by F. G. Moore (The Classics of International Law, x; 2 vols., New York, London, &c., 1927); of his Elementorum Jurisprudentiae Universalis Libri Duo [ed. 1672] with introd. by H. Wehberg and Eng. tr. of text by W. A. Oldfather (The Classics of International Law, xv; 2 vols., Oxford–London, 1931); and of his De Jure Naturae et Gentium [ed. 1688] with introd. by W. Simons and Eng. tr. of text by C. H. and W. A. Oldfather (ib., xvii; ib., 1934). Correspondence with Christian Thomasius, 1687–93, ed. E. Gigas (Munich–Leipzig, 1897). F. Lezius, Der Toleranzbegriff Lockes und Pufendorfs (1900), pp. 58–115; L. Krieger, The Politics of Discretion. Pufendorf and the Acceptance of Natural Law (Chicago–London, 1965). F. Schenke, 'Pufendorfs Kirchenbegriff' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kan. Abt., xiv (1925), pp. 39–61. G. Frank in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 315–18, s.v., with bibl.; G. Fasso in E.C., x (1953), col. 304 f., s.v., for further bibl.

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS WELBY NORTHMORE (1812–52), architect and *ecclesiologist. He was the chief initiator and inspirer of the 'Gothic Revival'. The son of Auguste-Charles, Comte de Pugin, a French refugee, c. 1835 he joined the RC Church, to which his attention had been directed through his admiration of Gothic architecture. Among his very many works were St. Giles, Cheadle, St. George's (RC) Cathedral, Southwark, and the chapel of St. Edmund's College, Ware. He also collaborated with C. Barry in his designs for the Houses of Parliament. His plans often suffered in execution as the money to carry them through was constantly lacking, esp. as the RCs by whom he was chiefly employed were a relatively poor body. Hence his designs often give a more adequate idea of Pugin's ideals than the buildings themselves. He also met with many difficulties from RCs who wanted to model their architecture on Italian prototypes. His most important writings were The True Principles of Pointed or Christian Architecture (1841), An Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture in England (1843), and The Present State of Ecclesiastical Architecture in England (1843).

B. Ferrey, Recollections of A. N. Welby Pugin, and his Father, Augustus Pugin (1861). Modern lives by M. Trappes-Lomax (London, 1932) and Phoebe Stanton (ib., 1971). D. Gwynn, Lord Shrewsbury, Pugin and the Catholic Revival (1946). H. R. Hitchcock, Early Victorian Architecture in Britain (2 vols., 1954), esp. i, pp. 56–98, with illustrations in vol. ii, section III. P. Waterhouse in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 6–10.

PULCHERIA, St. (399–453), E. Empress from 450. She was the daughter of the Emp. Arcadius (395–408) and elder sister of *Theodosius II (408–50), and a woman of uncommon ability and deep piety. From 414 to 416 she was entrusted by the Senate, despite her youth, with the guardianship of her weak-minded brother, Theodosius; and for several years she ran the Imperial palace at *Constantinople on strict and ascetic Christian principles. After Theodosius's marriage (421), she found life at court increasingly difficult, partly because of theological intrigues. A stalwart supporter of orthodoxy, she induced Theodosius to condemn *Nestorius. In 438 she put an end to the schism at Constantinople by bringing thither the bones of St. *Chrysostom. In the *Monophysite controversy she was again on the orthodox side, and after the momentary triumph of Monophysitism at the *Latrocinium (449), she sought the support of Pope *Leo I. After the sudden death of Theodosius in 450 she became Empress, taking the aged general and senator, Marcian, as her consort. In the interests of orthodoxy, she forthwith arranged for a General Council to meet at *Chalcedon in 451, and herself attended the sixth session in person. Since the Middle Ages she has been commemorated as a saint. Feast day, 10 Sept.

AA.SS., Sept. III (1750), pp. 503–40. Ada B. Teetgen, Life and Times of the Empress Pulcheria (popular; 1907). E. *Schwartz, 'Die Kaiserin Pulcheria auf der Synode von Chalkedon' in Festgabe für Adolf Jülicher zum 70. Geburtstag 26. Januar 1927 (Tübingen, 1927), pp. 203–212; P. Goubert, S.J., 'Le Rôle de Sainte Pulchérie et de l'eunuque Chrysaphios' in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (1951), pp. 303–21. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., xii (1911), p. 561 f., s.v.; W. Ensslin in P.W., xxiii (pt. 2; 1959), cols. 1954–63, s.v. 'Pulcheria (2)'.

PULLEN, ROBERT (d. 1146), theologian. He is one of the earliest known masters in the schools of Oxford, where he began to teach the Scriptures in 1133, being at the same time archdeacon of *Rochester. After the death of Henry I (1135) he went to *Paris, where he taught logic and theology, counted *John of Salisbury among his pupils, and was highly esteemed by St. *Bernard on account of his sound doctrine. Called to Rome by Innocent II, he was created cardinal probably by Celestine II in 1143–4; c. 1144 Lucius II appointed him papal chancellor of the Holy Roman Church, an office he held also under St. Bernard's disciple, *Eugenius III, who became Pope shortly afterwards. He used his influence in Rome against *Abelard and laid down his own doctrine in his 'Sentences', a compilation treating a wide range of theological subjects, but soon to be superseded by the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard.

His Sententiae are repr. from the ed. of H. Mathoud, O.S.B. (Paris, 1655), in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxvi, 625–1152. F. Courtney, S.J., Cardinal Robert Pullen (Analecta Gregoriana, lxiv; 1954). F. Pelster, S.J., 'Einige Angaben über Leben und Schriften des Robertus Pullus, Kardinals und Kanzlers der römischen Kirche († 1146)' in Scholastik, xii (1937), pp. 239–47; A. Landgraf, 'Studien zur Theologie des zwölften Jahrhunderts. II. Literarhistorische Bemerkungen zu den Sentenzen des Robertus Pullus' in Traditio, i (1943), pp. 210–22. H. *Rashdall in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), p. 19 f., s.v.

PULPIT (Lat. pulpitum, 'platform'). An elevated stand of stone or wood for the preacher or reader. They first became general in the later Middle Ages. In early Christian times the bishop preached from his *cathedra. Later the *ambo was used for the sermon and in still later times the rood-loft. Except in cathedrals the north side of the *nave is considered the proper place for the pulpit. Sometimes the workmanship of the pulpit is very elaborate, famous examples being the marble structures at Pisa and Siena and the wooden *baroque pulpits of the Netherlands. Pulpits are also generally found in monastic refectories, and sometimes outside but close to the wall of a church, e.g. at Magdalen College, Oxford. It is now customary to use the Latin word 'Pulpitum', not for the preaching-stand, but for the stone choir-screen which sometimes separates the choir from the nave in cathedral and monastic churches.

F. T. Dollman, Examples of Ancient Pulpits Existing in England (1849); J. C. Cox, Pulpits, Lecterns and Organs in English Churches (1915), pp. 1–147.

PURCELL, HENRY (1659–95), English composer. He was born in London and, becoming a choirboy at the *Chapel Royal, began to study music at an early age. From 1675 he tuned the organ, and in 1680 was made organist, at *Westminster Abbey, to which in 1682 the office of organist at the Chapel Royal was added. During the next years he devoted himself chiefly to sacred music, among his compositions being a series of Odes for St. Cecilia's Day. His most famous ecclesiastical work is the Te Deum and Jubilate in D (1694), also written for St. Cecilia's Day, which was regularly performed at *St. Paul's Cathedral for half a century. He also composed settings for the Benedicite and Jubilate in B flat (known as his 'Second Morning Service') and for the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in G minor. His burial service for Queen Mary (d. 1694) contained the well-known anthem 'Thou knowest, Lord'. Many of his anthems are still regularly performed. With the exception of a few early examples of polyphonic composition, their most outstanding feature is Purcell's development of the verse anthem, dimly foreshadowed by W. *Byrd; in the spirit of the Restoration much of the music is elaborate and highly dramatic; the words are nearly always from the OT. They include 'In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust', 'Thou art He that took me from my mother's womb', 'Save me, O God', 'My beloved spake', 'O Praise God in His Holiness' and the Coronation anthem, 'My heart is inditing of a good matter'. Even apart from his more extensive work in the sphere of secular composition, the technical skill, powers of expression and the beauty of the melodies of his sacred music have deservedly maintained Purcell's reputation among the first rank of English composers.

The best ed. of his works is that publd. by the Purcell Society (London, 1878 ff., 32 vols. to 1965; revised ed., 1964 ff.). F. B. Zimmerman, Henry Purcell 1659–1695. An Analytical Catalogue of his Music (1963). Modern lives by W. H. Cummings ('The Great Musicians'; London, 1881), D. [D.] Arundel (London, 1927), H. Dupré (Paris, 1927; Eng. tr., New York, 1928), A. K. Holland (London, 1932; Penguin Books, 1948), J. A. Westrup ('The Master Musicians'; London, 1937; ed. 5, 1965, with bibl.), and F. B. Zimmerman, Henry Purcell 1659–1695. His Life and Times (1967). I. Holst (ed.), Henry Purcell 1659–1695. Essays on his Music (1959). J. A. F. Maitland in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 39–44; id., revised by W. B. Squire–H. C. Colles, in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, vi (ed. 5 by E. Blom; 1954), pp. 997–1019, s.v., with detailed bibl.

PURCHAS JUDGEMENT, The. The judgement by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1871 that Eucharistic *Vestments, the *Eastward Position, the *Mixed Chalice, and Wafer *Bread were illegal. This decision, which was given when the Rev. John Purchas (1823–72), vicar of St. James's, Brighton, had been charged with these and other ritualistic practices, reversed the previous judgement in Purchas's favour by the *Dean of the Arches. The verdict marks a turning-point in the ceremonial revival in the C of E in the 19th cent., because hitherto such practices had been regarded on nearly all sides as conforming with the letter of the law, whereas from now onwards ritualists were held to be lawbreakers. The judgement was widely disobeyed, however, as without spiritual authority, and the Eastward Position was continued, e.g. in *St. Paul's Cathedral.

PURGATIVE WAY, The (Via Purgativa). The first stage of mental prayer, acc. to the scheme commonly adopted by *ascetical theologians, and most fully set forth by St. *Teresa and St. *John of the Cross. The chief activity of the soul at this stage is the eradication of bad habits, with repentance for past sins; and to this end the imagination and intellect are called into play. When meditation gives place to increased activity of the affections and will, the soul begins to enter gradually upon the next stage, the '*Illuminative Way'.

PURGATORY. Acc. to RC teaching the place or state of temporal punishment, where those who have died in the grace of God expiate their unforgiven *venial sins and undergo such punishment as is still due to forgiven sins, before being admitted to the Beatific Vision. The OT passage most frequently adduced in proof of the doctrine is 2 Macc. 12. 39–45, acc. to which *Judas Maccabaeus 'made the propitiation for them that had died, that they might be released from their sin'. In the NT the words of the Lord on the sin against the Holy Ghost which will be forgiven 'neither in this world nor in that which is to come' (Mt. 12. 31 f.) seem to imply a state beyond the grave in which expiation is still possible. The much-quoted 1 Cor. 3. 11–15 is difficult, but, given the doctrine of Purgatory, the conception of salvation 'yet so as through fire' seems easily applicable to it. As regards the Fathers St. *Clement of Alexandria already asserts that those who, having repented on their deathbed, had no time to perform works of penance in this life, will be sanctified in the next by purifying fire (Stromateis, 7. 6), a conception developed by *Origen (Numbers, Hom. 15; J. P. Migne, PG, xii, 169 f.). Without the conception of Purgatory the general practice of offering prayers and the Holy Sacrifice for the dead, attested by numerous inscriptions and E. Fathers such as St. *Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. myst., 5. 9) and St. *Chrysostom, is held to be unintelligible. St. *Epiphanius even reckons the denial of the utility of prayers for the dead a heresy (Panarion, 75. 8), and in the E. liturgies these prayers are a constant feature.

The Latin tradition follows that of the E., but, in accordance with its particular genius, in a more systematic manner. Fairly clear traces of a belief in Purgatory are found already in the visions of Dinocrates, related in the 'Passion of Sts. *Perpetua and Felicitas'. A more developed doctrine is taught by St. *Ambrose, who asserts that the souls of the departed await the end of time in different habitations, their fate varying acc. to their works, though some are already with Christ. The foundation of the medieval doctrine is found in St. *Augustine, who holds that the fate of the individual soul is decided immediately after death, and teaches the absolute certainty of purifying pains in the next life (De Civ. Dei, xxi. 13, and ib., 24), whereas St. *Caesarius of Arles already distinguishes between capital sins, which lead to Hell, and minor ones, which may be expurgated either by good works on earth or in Purgatory. This doctrine was sanctioned also by St. *Gregory the Great, who taught that the privation of the vision of God was one of the purgatorial pains, and Gregory's position was accepted by many Latin theologians, e.g. the Venerable *Bede. This more explicit teaching on Purgatory was evolved in order to avoid a confusion of thought as to the state of the souls between death and the *General Judgement; its main points were constantly embodied in the practice of the Church esp. in her offering of the Eucharist for the departed and in the Memento of the dead in the Mass, as found e.g. in the Missals of *Bobbio and *Stowe. It was amplified in the Middle Ages esp. by St. *Thomas Aquinas. He taught that the guilt (culpa) of venial sin is expiated immediately after death by an act of perfect charity and that only the punishment remained to be borne. Acc. to St. Thomas and other Scholastic theologians, the smallest pain in Purgatory is greater than the greatest on earth, it being relieved, however, by the certitude of salvation which establishes the Holy Souls, despite their sufferings, in deep peace. Moreover, they may be helped by the suffrages of the faithful, and esp. by the offering of Mass on their behalf, a belief which St. Thomas bases on the doctrine of the Communion of Saints, from which only the inhabitants of Hell and of Limbo are excluded. The official teaching of the RC Church on Purgatory was defined at the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439) with a view to reconciling the Greeks, who objected esp. to the conception of material fire and to the distinction between guilt and punishment. The Latins confined themselves to the two points of the existence of Purgatory and of the usefulness of prayer and pious works offered for the departed; at Florence, agreement was reached on both these questions.

In the W. the existence of Purgatory had been denied in the Middle Ages by some heretical sects such as the *Waldenses and *Albigensians. It was openly rejected by the Reformers, who taught that souls are freed from sin by faith in Christ alone without any works, and therefore, if saved, go straight to heaven. One of the earliest and most explicit attacks on the Reformation teaching was that by St. John *Fisher, Assertionis Lutheranae Confutatio (1523), who based himself esp. on the Fathers and on the practice of prayer for the dead from the earliest times. The Council of *Trent reaffirmed the teaching propounded at Lyons and Florence, forbidding all fanciful elaborations, esp. in public sermons. The nature or duration of the purgatorial purification has never received dogmatic definition. Modern RC divines, besides insisting on the fact that, from her beginnings, the Church has prayed for the dead, adduce the theological argument of the need for personal expiation within the economy of the Redemption. They regard Purgatory not so much as a place of punishment, as a process by which man's basic love of God, which becomes immutable at death, penetrates the resistant elements in the personality. Temporal punishment is then seen as the purging away of the after-effects of sin or the necessarily painful integration of the character round the fundamental option. The RC Church officially encourages the offering of Masses, *indulgences, and public as well as private prayers and works of devotion on behalf of the souls in Purgatory. It is, however, extremely careful in the matter of private revelations on the subject, the most credited being those described in St. *Catherine of Genoa's 'Treatise on Purgatory'. The custom of addressing prayers to the Holy Souls to ask for their intercession is a fairly recent development, advocated, among others, by St. Robert *Bellarmine and St. *Alphonsus Liguori, and accepted by nearly all modern RC theologians.

The E. Church attaches the greatest importance to the practice of praying for the dead, but in its teaching on the exact status of the departed for whom these prayers are offered, it is less precise and explicit than the RC Church. The Confession of *Dositheus, ratified by the Synod of *Jerusalem (1672), without actually using the term 'Purgatory', admitted a third category of souls, besides the saints and the damned: souls in this third category sustain in 'Hades' the punishment of their sins, which may be lightened by the prayers of the faithful, and esp. by the offering of the Holy Sacrifice. Most modern Orthodox, however, reject the idea of expiatory suffering after death, and consider that Dositheus was too much influenced here by Latin theology; and Dositheus himself explicitly admitted as much in later life, publicly withdrawing what he had written in his Confession.

The conception of Purgatory found its way into the C of E in the form of the 'Intermediate State' as defended by the *Tractarians. There is, however, no generally accepted teaching on the subject. The most widely received opinion would seem to be that this state is not so much a process of purification from sin, as in RC theology, as one of growth and development. Moreover, it is believed to end only with the Last Judgement, the soul being only then admitted to the Beatific Vision.

Besides the immortal description by Dante in his Divina commedia, Book ii, and the account in Aquinas (Comm. in Lib. IV. Sent., dist. xxi, qu. 1) there are classic treatises by R. *Bellarmine, S.J., Disputationes de Controversiis Fidei, iii (Ingoldstadt, [1588]), part 2 (Primi Tomi Sexta Controversia: 'De Ecclesia, quae est in Purgatorio'), and F. *Suarez, S.J., Commentarii ac Disputationes in Tertiam Partem Divi Thomae, iv (Lyons, 1603), pp. 618–55 ('De Purgatorio'). The Tridentine 'Decretum De Purgatorio' is repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 418–19 (No. 1820). The subject is necessarily treated in all books on eschatology, q.v. Modern Catholic works include J. P. Kirsch, Die Lehre von der Gemeinschaft der Heiligen im christlichen Alterthum (Forschungen zur christlichen Litteratur- und Dogmengeschichte, i; 1900; Eng. tr., 1911), passim. F. Schmid, Das Fegfeuer nach katholischer Lehre (1904). B. Bartmann, Das Fegfeuer (1928; Eng. tr., 1936). H. Rondet, S.J., Le Purgatoire (1948). E. O'Brien, S.J., 'The Scriptural Proof for the Existence of Purgatory from 2 Machabees–12: 43–45' in Sciences ecclésiastiques, ii (1949), pp. 80–108. E. Brisbois, S.J., 'Durée du purgatoire et suffrages pour les défunts' in Nouvelle Revue Théologique, lxxxi (1959), pp. 838–45. Works by Anglicans include H. W. Luckock, After Death (1879); id., The Intermediate State between Death and Judgement (1890); E. H. Plumptre, The Spirits in Prison and Other Studies on the Life after Death (1884), esp. ch. x, 'The Doctrine of Purgatory', pp. 287–311; A. J. Mason, Purgatory [and other Lectures] (1901), esp. pp. 1–57; R. E. Hutton, The Soul in the Unseen World (1901). De Purgatorio disputationes in concilio Florentino habitae, ed. L. Petit, A.A.–G. Hofmann, S.J. (Concilium Florentinum: Documenta et Scriptores, viii, fasc. 2; Rome, 1969). A. d'Alès, S.J., 'La Question du purgatoire au concile de Florence en 1438' in Gregorianum, iii (1922), pp. 9–50, with reff.; J. Gill, S.J., The Council of Florence (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 117–25, 285. On the archaeological data, A.

Stuiber, Refrigerium Interim. Die Vorstellungen vom Zwischenzustand und die frühchristliche Grabeskunst (Theophaneia, xi; Bonn, 1957). A. Michel–M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1163–1357, s.v. 'Purgatoire'. A. Piolanti–W. Wehr in E.C., x (1953), cols. 330–9, s.v. 'Purgatorio'; E. Klinger in Sacramentum Mundi, v (1970), pp. 166–8, s.v., both with further bibl.

PURGATORY, St. Patrick's. See St. Patrick's Purgatory.

PURIFICATION OF THE BVM. The feast kept on 2 Feb. in commemoration of the BVM's purification in the Temple, recorded in Lk. 2. 21–39. The feast is also known as *Candlemas (q.v.). In the RC Church since 1969 it has been called the 'Presentation of the Lord'.

PURIFICATOR. A small piece of white linen used at celebrations of the Eucharist to cleanse the chalice after communion. Occasional references to purificators are found in the Middle Ages (e.g. in a Roman inventory of 1295), but they did not come into general use until the 16th century.

PURIM. A Jewish festival, celebrated in the spring (14 and 15 Adar), which commemorates the deliverance of the Jews from massacre under the Persian Empire (473 B.C.), as related in the Book of Esther (9. 26 ff.). It is observed primarily as a national and secular, rather than as a religious, festival. There are some grounds for believing that the 'feast of the Jews' of Jn. 5. 1 is the Feast of Purim. The name was long thought to be of Persian or even Indian origin, but it has now been shown to be connected with the Assyrian puru, 'lot' (cf. Est. 3. 7).

For the method of observance see the tractate 'Megilla' of the *Talmud. P. Haupt, Purim (Beiträge zur Assyriologie und semitischen Sprachwissenschaft, vi, Hft. 2; 1906). R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 425–9, with bibl. p. 460; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 514–17, with bibl. p. 552. See also Commentaries on Esther.

PURITANS, the more extreme English Protestants who, dissatisfied with the Elizabethan Settlement, sought a further purification of the Church from supposedly unscriptural and corrupt forms along the Genevan model. Although never in the majority, they were powerful and influential, producing many able controversial writers and enjoying support from some royal councillors of *Elizabeth I, from some of the nobility and gentry, and esp. among the mercantile classes. They demanded express Scriptural warrant for all the details of public worship, believing that all other forms were popish, superstitious, idolatrous, and anti-Christian. At first they attacked church ornaments, *vestments, *surplices, *rochets, *organs, the *sign of the cross, and ecclesiastical courts, and put corresponding emphasis on preaching, Sunday observance, and the 'tablewise' position of the altar. From the early 1570s more extreme Puritans, such as T. *Cartwright, J. *Field, and W. *Travers, began to attack the institution of episcopacy itself, and to advocate a *Presbyterian polity. Elizabeth I bitterly opposed all Puritan attempts further to change the C of E. Abp. E. *Grindal gave her inadequate support, but his successor, J. *Whitgift, aided her to the full. His Articles of 1583 and the Act of 1593 against 'seditious sectaries' were aimed at the Puritans, who consequently formed extravagant hopes of her successor. On *James I's accession the Puritan *Millenary Petition led to the unsuccessful *Hampton Court Conference (1604). After the relative inactivity of Abp. G. *Abbot, the Puritans were among the chief targets of W. *Laud's ecclesiastical and political policy, which, for example, sought to thwart the Puritans' attempts to propagate their views by means of *Lecturers. By 1600 some Puritans, such as H. *Barrow and for a time R. *Browne, had come to advocate *Congregationalism. The Great Rebellion (sometimes called the 'Puritan Revolution') in and after 1642 led not only to the temporary hollow triumph of Presbyterianism, but also, since Presbyterianism was less tolerant than the Anglicanism which it sought to replace, to a rapid proliferation of sects. The term 'Puritan' never had a single precise meaning, and in the senses of the post-1559 period it ceased to be applicable after the Restoration in 1660.

W. *Perkins was a representative moderate Puritan of Elizabeth I's day; other more extreme later Puritans were W. *Prynne and J. *Milton. See also Parker, M., Bancroft, R., and 'Root and Branch'.

Collections of Puritan documents ed. H. C. Porter, Puritanism in Tudor England (1970), and L. J. Tinterud, Elizabethan Puritanism (New York, 1971). D. *Neal, History of the Puritans from 1517 to 1688 (new ed. by J. Toulmin, 5 vols., 1793–7); W. A. Shaw, A History of the English Church during the Civil Wars and under the Commonwealth 1640–60 (2 vols., 1900); G. B. Tatham, The Puritans in Power (1913); A. F. Scott-Pearson, Church and State: Political Aspects of Sixteenth-Century Puritanism (1928); C. E. Whiting, Studies in English Puritanism, 1660–1688 (1931); W. Haller, The Rise of Puritanism (New York, 1938); M. M. Knappen, Tudor Puritanism (Chicago, 1939); Horton Davies, The Worship of the English Puritans (1948); A. Simpson, Puritanism in Old and New England (Charles R. Walgreen Foundation Lectures, Chicago, 1955); G. S. Wakefield, Puritan Devotion. Its Place in the Development of Christian Piety (1957); G. R. Cragg, Puritanism in the Period of the Great Persecution 1660–1688 (Cambridge, 1957); P. Collinson, The Elizabethan Puritan Movement (1967); P. McGrath, Papists and Puritans under Elizabeth I (1967); W. M. Lamont, Godly Rule. Politics and Religion 1603–1660 (1969); O. C. Watkins, The Puritan Experience (1972). J. S. Coolidge, The Pauline Renaissance in England. Puritanism and the Bible (Oxford, 1970). J. N. *Figgis in D.E.C.H., pp. 479–82, s.v. 'Puritanism'; H. G. Wood in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 507–15, s.v. 'Puritanism'.

PURVEY, JOHN (c. 1353–c. 1428), *Wycliffite preacher. Educated probably at Oxford, he became closely associated with John Wycliffe (d. 1384) at Lutterworth in Leics. His most important achievement was a revision, probably with Wycliffe's full agreement, of the extremely literal and almost unreadable English version of the Bible made by Wycliffe and *Nicholas of Hereford. Begun in Wycliffe's lifetime, it was probably completed at Bristol in 1388. On account of his continued *Lollard activities, Purvey was forbidden to preach and in 1390 was imprisoned. After recanting under pressure (c. 1401), he was inducted to the vicarage of West Hythe, Kent; but, finding that he could not conscientiously abandon his former position, he resigned in 1403 and, as far as circumstances allowed, continued to disseminate Lollard doctrine. See also Bible (English Versions), p. 169.

H. Hargreaves, 'The Latin Text of Purvey's Psalter' in Medium Ævum, xxiv (1955), pp. 73–90. M. Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and Other Medieval Biblical Versions (1920), esp. pp. 266–85, 334–47, 437–67; id., The Significance of the Lollard Bible (Ethel M. Wood Lecture, 1951). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), p. 51 f.; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1526–7, with further reff. See also works on the Wycliffite Bible cited under 'Bible, English Versions'.

PUSEY, EDWARD BOUVERIE (1800–82), *Tractarian leader. He was educated at Eton and at *Christ Church, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of Oriel College, in 1823. Not long afterwards he went to Göttingen and Berlin (1825), where he got to know many leading German Biblical critics. During the next years he devoted himself to the study of Hebrew, Arabic, and other Semitic languages both at Oxford and in Germany. In 1828 he published An Historical Enquiry into the Probable Causes of the Rationalist Character lately predominant in the Theology of Germany (followed by Part II in 1830), in which he traced German rationalism to the dead orthodoxy of a Protestantism lacking in spiritual vitality; but the book was misunderstood to be a defence of his German masters and later he withdrew it. In 1828 he was ordained deacon and priest and also appointed Regius professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church. He held this office for the rest of his life. At the end of 1833 he became formally attached to the *Oxford Movement by contributing a Tract (No. 18) on Thoughts on the Benefits of the System of Fasting, Enjoined by our Church (publd. in 1834), his prestige and erudition proving of great benefit to the cause. In 1836 he published three further Tracts on Scriptural Views of Holy Baptism (Nos. 67–9), which taught a very rigorous doctrine on the forgiveness of post-baptismal sin, and which, in their form, were significant as altering the scope of the Tracts from pamphlets to learned treatises. He also gave wholehearted support to the Library of the Fathers*, supplying its first volume (St. *Augustine's Confessions, 1838) with a notable preface on the significance of *patristic study. His most influential activity, however, was his preaching. This was eminently practical and was devoted chiefly to inculcating the heinousness of sin, the nothingness of the world, and the blessedness of heaven. The death of his wife, in 1839, left an indelible mark on his life; from that time he practised many austerities and took an active interest in the establishment of the religious life in the C of E. When, in 1841, J. H. *Newman, whom he had vigorously defended, withdrew from the movement, the leadership devolved on Pusey alone. His sermon on The Holy Eucharist, a Comfort to the Penitent, preached before the university in 1843, was condemned by the vice-chancellor and six doctors of divinity as teaching error, and Pusey was suspended from the university pulpit for two years. The condemnation, however, secured for it wide publicity in its printed form and drew attention to the doctrine of the *Real Presence, of which Pusey remained a devoted defender. In 1845 he assisted in the establishment of the first Anglican sisterhood, and throughout his life he continued to encourage efforts in this direction. In 1846 he preached another sermon before the university on The Entire Absolution of the Penitent, in which he claimed for the C of E the power of the keys and the reality of priestly absolution. The practice of private confession in the modern Anglican Church dates from this work. As the principal champion of the High Church Movement he had frequently to defend its doctrines, e.g. in the *Gorham Case (q.v.), which issued in many conversions to the RC Church, though Pusey then and later spared no effort to dissuade his followers from joining it. He took a leading part in the controversy on the reform of the university, defending the old tutorial system. In 1862 he accused B. Jowett of teaching unsound doctrine, but the court of the chancellor of the university declined to hear the case. After the judgement of the Privy Council in favour of the authors of Essays and Reviews (1860), he wrote his famous letter to J. *Keble on The Church of England a Portion of Christ's One Holy Catholic Church, and a Means of Restoring Visible Unity. An Eirenicon (1865). In it he expressed his belief that union with Rome was prevented not so much by the official teaching of the RC Church as by unofficial devotions, e.g. to the BVM, and by the popular conceptions of purgatory and *indulgences. This letter was answered by Newman in 1866. From 1867 he took an active part in the Ritualist controversy. In his sermon Will Ye also Go Away? (1867) he again defended the doctrine of the Real Presence and the corresponding ceremonial. In 1869 he published his second Eirenicon in answer to Newman, which dealt chiefly with the *Immaculate Conception, and in 1870 he issued the third, entitled Is Healthful Reunion Impossible? principally on the doctrine of purgatory, the deutero-canonical books, and the Roman supremacy. This he sent to many RC bishops who attended the *Vatican Council, but his hopes were disappointed by the definition of Papal Infallibility. From 1870 to 1873 he fought vigorously for the retention of the *Athanasian Creed, threatened by the Fourth Report of the Ritual Commission, which advocated its abandonment. In 1880 in What is of Faith as to Everlasting Punishment? he defended against F. W. *Farrar the eternity of hell, basing himself on Scriptural and patristic teaching. He died at Ascot Priory, Berks, on 16 Sept. 1882 and is buried in the nave of Christ Church cathedral, Oxford. After his death his library was bought by his friends, who endowed for it the institution in Oxford known as Pusey House. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 18 Sept.

Spiritual Letters, ed. J. O. Johnston and W. C. E. Newbolt (1898). Monumental Life by H. P. *Liddon (4 vols., London, 1893–7), with list of Pusey's writings, compiled by Falconer Madan, iv, pp. 395–446. Shorter Lives by Maria Trench (anon.; ib., 1900), G. W. E. Russell (ib., 1907), and G. L. Prestige (ib., 1933). H. C. G. Matthew, 'Edward Bouverie Pusey: From Scholar to Tractarian', in J.T.S., N.S., xxxii (1981), pp. 101–24. J. O. Johnston in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 53–61. G. W. E. Russell in D.E.C.H., pp. 482–6. See also bibl. to Oxford Movement.

PUSEY, PHILIP EDWARD (1830–80), *patristic scholar. The only son of E. B. *Pusey, whom he assiduously assisted in his patristic and Semitic studies, he was an indefatigable student who, though deaf and a cripple, travelled all over Europe, working at MSS. He edited many of the writings of St. *Cyril of Alexandria and laid the foundations for a critical edition of the *Peshitta (publd., after further editing, by G. H. Gwilliam, 1901).

H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, iv (1897), pp. 346–9.

PUSEYISM. A contemporary title for the *Tractarian Movement, generally used in an opprobrious sense, from its leader, E. B. *Pusey. Pusey was prob. singled out as he was the first contributor to the Tracts for the Times to append his initials (to No. 18, 21 Dec. 1833), the earlier Tracts being anonymous. The term spread rapidly, being met with even in a Greek newspaper as πουζεισμός.

O.E.D., vii (1909), p. 1639, s.v.

PYE. See Pie.

PYRRHONISM. Properly, the system of sceptical philosophy expounded c. 300 B.C. by the Greek thinker, Pyrrho of Elis. Its characteristic doctrine was the denial of all possibility of attaining to certain knowledge. Conceived in an ethical interest, it maintained that when a man had understood the futility of intellectual inquiry, he would not be perturbed or lose his happiness by disquietude at his inability to arrive at any certain truth. In a wider sense, the term has come to be applied to any sceptical system of thought.

Pyrrho himself left no writings; the propagation of his doctrines was due to his disciple, Timon of Phlius (c. 320–230 B.C.), of whose satirical poems (Σίλλοι) a few fragments survive. L. Robin, Pyrrhon et le scepticisme grec (1944). J. Glucker in O.C.D. (ed. 2, 1970), p. 903.

PYX (Gk. πυξίς, 'box-wood vessel'). The word denoted formerly any receptacle destined to contain the reserved *Host, and is still so used officially in the CIC (can. 1270). Acc. to ordinary present terminology it is used esp. of a small, mostly flat, gold or silver-gilt box which is used for carrying the Blessed Sacrament to the sick. For this purpose it is wrapped in a small *corporal and placed in a pyx-bag hung round the priest's neck. The term is also used for the vessel in which the large Host for exposition is kept in the *Tabernacle.

Braun, A.G., pp. 280–347 and 456 f. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2, 1948), cols. 1983–96, s.v. 'Pyxide'.

Q

'Q'. The symbol (usually, perh. wrongly, held to come from Germ. Quelle, 'source') for the hypothetical source of those passages in the Synoptic Gospels where Mt. and Lk. show a close similarity to each other but not to anything in Mk. (See Synoptic Problem.) These passages consist largely of sayings of Jesus, but include also some other material, e.g. on St. *John the Baptist (Lk. 3. 17 f., cf. Mt. 3. 12; Lk. 7. 18–23, cf. Mt. 11. 2–6) and the account of the Temptation (Lk. 4. 2–13, cf. Mt. 4. 2–11). The theory, elaborated on the basis of critical studies by Sir John Hawkins and A. *Harnack, was put into a widely accepted form by B. H. *Streeter, who held that: (i) Q was a document (not merely a group of oral traditions) written in Greek; (ii) almost its whole content was used by either Matthew or Luke or both; and (iii) the order of the contents in Lk. is nearer to the original than that in Mt. Acc. to Streeter the existence of Q 'though highly probable, falls just short of certainty'. The existence of such a document is still challenged (e.g. by A. M. Farrer and B. C. Butler, O.S.B.), but the hypothesis continues to enjoy very wide acceptance among scholars.

J. C. Hawkins, Horae Synopticae (Oxford, 1899); A. Harnack, Sprüche und Reden Jesu (1907; Eng. tr., 1908); W. *Sanday (ed.), Oxford Studies in the Synoptic Problem (1911); B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), chs. vii–xi. R. H. *Lightfoot, History and Interpretation in the Gospels (1935), p. 27, note 1. J. Chapman, O.S.B., Matthew, Mark, and Luke (1937); B. C. Butler, The Originality of St. Matthew (1951). A. M. Farrer, 'On Dispensing with Q' in D. E. Nineham (ed.), Studies in the Gospels. Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot (1955), pp. 55–86. R. A. Edwards, The Theology of Q. Eschatology, Prophecy, and Wisdom (Philadelphia, Pa. [1976]).

Q.A.B. See Queen Anne's Bounty.

QARAITES. See Karaites.

QORBAN. See Corban.

QUADRAGESIMA. Another name for the forty days of *Lent and, occasionally, for the First Sunday in Lent (six weeks before *Easter). The word 'Quadragesimale' has been sometimes used of a set of sermons delivered in Lent.

QUADRAGESIMO ANNO. The encyclical letter of Pius XI, dated 15 May 1931, confirming and elaborating the theses of Rerum Novarum (q.v.). Points esp. stressed are: the evil results of free competition and administrative centralization; the incompatibility of strict Socialism with Catholicism; and the need for a reorganization of society on the model of the 'guild' system.

Text in A.A.S., xxiii (1931), pp. 177–228. An Eng. tr. was publd. by the *Catholic Truth Society under the title The Social Order [1931].

QUADRATUS, St. (2nd cent.), the earliest Christian '*Apologist'. About 124 he wrote in Asia Minor an apology for the Christian faith addressed to the Emp. Hadrian, of which a single fragment survives in *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., IV. iii. 2). P. Andriessen has put forward persuasive arguments for equating Quadratus's Apology with the Epistle to *Diognetus. Since *Jerome (de vir. illust., 19; ep. 70) Quadratus has been erroneously identified with an early Bp. of Athens of the same name. Feast day, 26 May.

Fragments in M. J. *Routh (ed.), Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2, Oxford, 1846), pp. 69–79, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, v, 1261–6. P. Andriessen, 'L'Apologie de Quadratus conservée sous le titre d'Épître à Diognète' in R.T.A.M., xiii (1946), pp. 5–39, 125–49, 237–60, and 'L'Épilogue de l'Épître à Diognète', ib., xiv (1947), pp. 121–56; Eng. summary of these articles in V.C., i (1947), pp. 129–36. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 183–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 61 f. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1429–31; E. Peterson in E.C., x (1953), col. 362 f., s.v. 'Quadrato'.

QUADRILATERAL, Lambeth. See Lambeth Quadrilateral.

QUADRIVIUM. The medieval name for the group of four sciences consisting of music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy, which together with the *trivium (q.v.) of the inferior sciences constituted the *Seven Liberal Arts.

QUAKER. A nickname first given by Justice Bennet in 1650 to George *Fox because he bade the Justice tremble at the Word of the Lord. The word had been used, however, at least as early as 1647 of a foreign religious sect. Early Quakers also explained it by the spiritual trembling sometimes experienced at their religious meetings. See Friends, Society of.

See O.E.D., s.v.

QUAM SINGULARI. The decree issued, on 8 Aug. 1910, by the Sacred Congregation of the Sacraments, recommending that children be admitted to receive Holy Communion as soon as they have reached the 'age of discretion' (aetas discretionis), i.e., by the tests there given, at the age of about 7 years.

Text in A.A.S., ii (1910), 577–83.

QUANTA CURA. The encyclical, issued by Pope *Pius IX on 8 Dec. 1864, to which the famous *Syllabus (q.v.) condemning the doctrines of *liberalism was attached.

Text in the A.S.S., iii (1867), pp. 160–7; excerpts repr. in Denz.–Bann., Nos. 1688–99.

QUARANT' ORE. See Forty Hours' Devotion.

QUARE IMPEDIT. In the C of E a form of legal action in the temporal court by which the right of presentation to an ecclesiastical benefice is tried. It may be brought by a patron against the bishop on his refusal to institute his presentee to a living. Since the passing of the Benefices Act (1898), its use is restricted to cases where the objection to presentation is on the grounds of doctrine or ritual. The name is from the opening words of the writ issued. See also Duplex Querela.

QUARLES, FRANCIS (1592–1644), religious poet. He was born at Romford, Greater London, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge (1606–9). In 1613 he went to Heidelberg in the retinue of the Princess Palatine, returning to England by 1615. He now began to publish many Biblical paraphrases, among them Job Militant (1624) and Sions Elegies wept by Jeremy (1624). About 1626 he went to *Dublin, where he became private secretary to J. *Ussher, Abp. of Armagh. In 1630 a collection of his Biblical paraphrases was published with the title Divine Poems, and in 1632 there appeared his Divine Fancies, a small volume of epigrams and meditations in verse. They were followed by his popular Emblems (1635), perhaps the most original of emblem-books, though it was partly derived from two Jesuit manuals, Pia Desideria (1624) and Typus Mundi (1627). In 1638 Quarles published another emblem-book, Hieroglyphikes of the Life of Man. In 1640 he was made chronologer to the city of London. In his later years he wrote chiefly devotional prose. His Enchiridion (1640), a collection of thoughts on religion and morals, achieved great popularity, and he also wrote The Loyall Convert (1644), a pamphlet defending the Royalist cause, of which he was an ardent partisan. His reputation increased after his death through the publication of his posthumous works, among them The Shepherd's Oracles (1646), a satire in verse on the contemporary religious disputes. Though often overladen with conceits and epithets in the style of his time, Quarles's poetry betrays deep religious feeling, coloured by a keen sense of sin and of the transitoriness of life.

Complete Works ed. A. B. Grosart (Chertsey Worthies' Library, 3 vols., privately pr., 1880–1), with biographical introd., i, pp. ix–lxvi. The primary authority is the brief life by Ursula Quarles, widow, prefixed to Quarles's posthumously publd. Solomon's Recantation, entitled Ecclesiastes Paraphrased (1645) [no pagination]. J. Horden, Francis Quarles (1592–1644). A Bibliography of his Works to the Year 1800 (Oxford Bibliographical Society Publications, New Series, ii; 1953), with introd., pp. 1–16. Further bibl. by F. E. Hutchinson in C.B.E.L., i, p. 450 f. S. Lee in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 92–6.

QUARR ABBEY, near Ryde, Isle of Wight. In 1131 or 1132 Baldwin de Redvers founded a monastery on the site, which was originally colonized from *Savigny. With other houses dependent on Savigny, it was affiliated to the *Cistercians in 1147. It became the most considerable religious foundation on the island and survived until the Dissolution in 1537. Soon afterwards the buildings were destroyed, and only a small part of the medieval structure remains. In 1908 the site was acquired by the *Benedictine monks exiled from *Solesmes (q.v.), who had previously (1901) settled at Appuldurcombe House, near Wroxall, in the centre of the island. A fine abbey in red brick in a Flemish style was erected (consecrated 1912). After the First World War many of the monks returned to Solesmes. The Abbey is now an independent house of the Solesmes Congregation, and an important centre of liturgical and historical studies.

S. F. Hockey, O.S.B., Quarr Abbey and its Lands 1132–1631 (Leicester, 1970). S. C. Kaines-Smith in V.C.H. Hampshire, v (1912), pp. 152–4, with map and illustration of the medieval abbey.

QUARTODECIMANISM. The early custom in some places of following Jewish practice in always observing *Easter, i.e. the Christian *Passover, on the 14th day of the month Nisan, whatever the day of the week, and not (as elsewhere) on the following Sunday. The tradition was esp. rooted in Asia Minor, where it was believed to derive from St. *John the Apostle, and upheld by *Melito of Sardis and *Apollinarius of Hierapolis. On a visit to Rome c. 155 St. *Polycarp, Bp. of Smyrna, sought to persuade Anicetus to conform to Quartodeciman usage. Though the Pope refused, he had no scruples about Polycarp's continuing his own custom. Thirty or forty years later a more rigid line was taken up by Pope *Victor, who tried to suppress Quartodecimanism; and when *Polycrates, Bp. of Ephesus, refused to comply, Victor forthwith excommunicated him. Despite this stern measure, which was met with a sharp rebuke from St. *Irenaeus (ap. Eusebius, H.E., V. xxiii–xxv), the Asiatic Churches retained their practice for the time being. At a later date the Quartodecimans organized themselves as a separate Church. They survived as a sect down to the 5th cent. See also Paschal Controversies.

F. E. *Brightman, 'The Quartodeciman Question' in J.T.S., xxv (1923–4), pp. 254–70. B. Lohse, Das Passafest der Quartadecimaner (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, liv; Gütersloh, 1953). C. W. Dugmore, 'A Note on the Quartodecimans' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, iv (T.U., lxxix; 1961), pp. 411–21. C. Mohrmann, 'Le Conflit pascal au IIe siècle' in V.C., xvi (1962), pp. 154–71, with further reff. W. Huber, Passa und Ostern. Untersuchungen zur Osterfeier der alten Kirche (Beiheft zur Z.N.T.W., xxxv; 1969), esp. pp. 1–88. C. C. Richardson, 'A New Solution to the Quartodeciman Riddle' in J.T.S., N.S., xxiv (1973), pp. 74–84. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1445–7. See also bibl. to Easter.

QUASIMODO SUNDAY. A title in the W. Church for *Low Sunday, derived from the opening words of the *Introit at Mass on that day (Quasi modo geniti, 'As new-born babes', 1 Pet. 2. 2).

QUATTRO CORONATI (i.e. 'the Four Crowned Ones'). A group of four saints, commemorated in the W. Church on 8 Nov., to whom a famous ancient basilica on the Celian Hill at *Rome is dedicated. Considerable doubt reigns as to which particular saints are intended. The Roman *Martyrology for 8 Nov. supposes the conflation of two groups of five and four martyrs respectively whose names it gives. It appears from other sources that the one group were five sculptors of Pannonia who were martyred for refusing to make a statue of Aesculapius for a heathen temple, and the other group four martyrs who were buried not at Rome but at Albano in the Alban Hills. They are the patrons of stonemasons.

AA.SS., Nov. II (2) (1931), p. 590 f., and III (1910), pp. 748–84. On the church, R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer et al., Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iv (Rome, 1970), pp. 1–39 [in Eng.], with full bibl. H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2009–14; A. Amore, O.F.M.–P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, x (Rome, 1968), cols. 1276–1304, s.v., both with bibl.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY ('Q.A.B.'). A fund formed by Queen *Anne in 1704 to receive the firstfruits (*annates) and tenths which had been confiscated by *Henry VIII. On surrendering them for the benefit of the Church, she directed their use for the augmentation of the livings of the poorer Anglican clergy. Grants of capital (not income) were made to poorly endowed benefices; and later the fund was empowered to make loans (from 1777) and disbursements (from 1803) for the building and repair of parsonage houses, etc. Between 1809 and 1820 it received grants of over £1,000,000 from Parliament and at various times large private benefactions. By the Tithe Act of 1925, Q.A.B. was charged with the collection of ecclesiastical tithe rentcharge and its distribution to benefices and ecclesiastical corporations. When the Tithe Act of 1936 extinguished tithe rentcharge, Q.A.B. received Government Stock as compensation. In 1948 Q.A.B. and the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners were united in a new body, the *Church Commissioners for England (q.v.).

A. Savidge, The Foundation and Early Years of Queen Anne's Bounty (C.H.S., 1955); G. F. A. Best, Temporal Pillars. Queen Anne's Bounty, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the Church of England (Cambridge, 1964). G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 486 f., s.v.

QUENTIN, HENRI (1872–1935), *Benedictine scholar. Professed at *Maredsous in 1895, he was transferred to *Solesmes in 1897 and ordained priest in 1902. Five years later *Pius X called him to Rome as a member of the commission on the revision of the *Vulgate, in which capacity he superintended the photographing of most of the important Vulgate MSS. at Paris, Rome, London, and elsewhere, including the entire *Codex Amiatinus at Florence; and he was the principal editor of the text of the *Pentateuch (1926–36). His own writings include J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900) and Les Martyrologes historiques du moyen âge (1908), the latter containing discussions of the text of the *martyrologies of *Bede and other early medieval compilers. He also issued several writings in defence of his much-contested principles for establishing the Vulgate text. The new Office of the Feast of the *Sacred Heart (1928) was, for the most part, his work.

C. Mohlberg, O.S.B., 'Commemorazione dell'abbate Dom Enrico Quentin' in Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Serie III, Rendiconti, xi (for 1935; 1936), pp. 13–39, with list of his works, pp. 34–9.

QUESNEL, PASQUIER (1634–1719), French *Jansenist. Educated by the *Jesuits, he studied philosophy and theology at the *Sorbonne and entered the Congregation of the *Oratory in 1657, where he soon was entrusted with the direction of students and became the author of a number of spiritual books. In 1672 he published Abrégé de la morale de l'Évangile, with a commendatory preface by the Bp. of Châlons-sur-Marne; its subsequent editions, expanded and revised, became famous under the title of Le Nouveau Testament en français, avec des réflexions morales sur chaque verset, usually called Réflexions morales. As against the formalized methods of spirituality in the manuals, the work emphasized the value of the close study of the Scriptures in increasing true devotion. In 1675 he published a scholarly edition of the works of St. *Leo which, however, was placed on the *Index owing to the *Gallican theories developed in the notes. In 1681 he was removed to Orléans on the charge of upholding Jansenist views. Three years later he refused to subscribe to an anti-Jansenist formula imposed by his superiors and went to Brussels, where he lived together with A. *Arnauld. In 1703 he was imprisoned by the Abp. of Malines at the instigation of Philip V, but escaped and fled to Holland in the following year. His subsequent life was filled with defences of himself and his Réflexions, which, commended by the Abp. of *Paris, Cardinal L. A. *de Noailles, went through many editions, but was condemned by a brief of *Clement XI in 1708 and, five years later, by the bull '*Unigenitus'. Among his doctrines condemned by the bull are the theses that no grace is given outside the Church, that grace is irresistible, that without grace man is incapable of any good and that all acts of a sinner, even prayer and attendance at Mass, are sins. Quesnel never accepted the condemnation, and though he asked for and received the Last Sacraments, he appealed to a future General Council for his vindication.

L. Batterel, Mémoires domestiques pour servir à l'histoire de l'Oratoire (ed. A. M. P. Ingold, 5 vols., 1902–11), with list of Quesnel's writings, iv, pp. 424–93. Correspondance de Pasquier Quesnel, ed. A. Le Roy (2 vols., 1900). Causa Quesnelliana (Brussels, 1704; documents ed. by order of the Abp. of Malines). A. Le Roy, Un Janséniste en exil (1900; with selection of Quesnel's Letters). J. A. G. Tans, Pasquier Quesnel et les Pays-Bas. Correspondance, publiée avec introduction et annotations (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Amsterdam, Maison Descartes, vi; 1960). L. Ceyssens, 'Les Papiers de Quesnel saisis à Bruxelles et transportés à Paris en 1703 et 1704' in R.H.E., xliv (1949), pp. 508–51. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1460–1535, s.v. 'Quesnel et le quesnellisme'.

QUICK, OLIVER CHASE (1885–1944), Anglican theologian. Educated at Harrow and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1912. He was canon residentiary successively at Newcastle (1920–3), *Carlisle (1923–30), *St. Paul's (1930–4), *Durham (1934–9), and Christ Church (1939–43; also Regius Professor of Divinity). One of the leading exponents of orthodox Anglicanism, he upheld a position akin to that of Essays Catholic and Critical (1926). His approach to doctrinal issues was systematic and synthetic rather than historical, and essentially modern in expression. His many writings, all widely read, included Doctrines of the Creed (1938) and The Gospel of the New World (posthumous, 1944, with a Memoir by W. *Temple).

L. Hodgson in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 702, s.v.

QUICUNQUE VULT (Lat., 'Whosoever wishes' [salvus esse, 'to be saved']). An alternative name for the '*Athanasian Creed' (q.v.) from its opening words.

QUIEN, MICHEL LE. See Le Quien, Michel.

QUIERCY, Synods of. Of the several synods held in the 9th cent. at Quiercy (palatium Carisiacum), near Laon, the two most notable are:

(i) Synod of 849, under *Hincmar of Reims. It condemned the strict Augustinianism of *Gottschalk, who was sentenced to degradation and imprisonment at Hautvillers.

(ii) Synod of 853, also under Hincmar. It repeated its condemnation of Gottschalk's doctrines, publishing four chapters ('capitula'), viz. (1) that God has predestined to life only; (2) that human free-will, lost by Adam, was restored to us by Christ; (3) that God would have all men to be saved; and (4) that Jesus Christ suffered for all. These articles were rejected by the Church of Lyons and formally repudiated in 855 by the Council of *Valence (q.v.).

(i) Hardouin, v, cols. 17–20; Mansi, xiv (1769), cols. 919–922. Hefele–Leclercq, iv (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 150–6, and iv (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1308–10. A. Werminghoff, 'Verzeichnis der Akten fränkischer Synoden von 834–918' in N.A., xxv (1901), pp. 607–78, esp. p. 615.
(ii) Hardouin, v, cols. 57 f.; Mansi, xiv (1769), cols. 995–8. Hefele–Leclercq, iv (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 197–9, and iv (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1324, 1390–8. A. Werminghoff, op. cit., esp. p. 619. B. Lavaud, O.P., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2920–2, s.v. 'Prédestination', with Lat. text and Fr. tr. of the capitula.

QUIETISM. The term 'Quietism', which is often used loosely of any system of spirituality minimizing human activity and responsibility, is usually restricted to the teaching of certain 17th cent. writers, esp. that of M. de *Molinos, and, to a lesser degree, Mme *Guyon and Abp. *Fénelon.

The fundamental principle of Quietism is its condemnation of all human effort. Acc. to the Quietists, man, in order to be perfect, must attain complete passivity and annihilation of will, abandoning himself to God to such an extent that he cares neither for heaven nor hell, nor for his own salvation. This state is reached by a certain form of mental prayer in which the soul consciously refuses not only all discursive meditation but any distinct act such as desire for virtue, love of Christ, or adoration of the Divine Persons, but simply rests in the presence of God in pure faith. As this passive prayer expresses the height of perfection, it makes any outward acts of mortification, almsgiving, going to confession, &c., superfluous. Once a man has attained to it, sin is impossible, for then all he does or thinks is the work of God. The devil may, indeed, tempt him and even compel him to commit actions that would be sinful in others, but when his will has become completely annihilated they cease to be sins in him; on the contrary, the man who has reached this state must carefully guard against being disquieted by such distractions, lest he should be disturbed in his state of mystic death. The moral consequences of such teaching are almost indistinguishable from those of pantheism.

Quietism was condemned in the person of M. de Molinos by *Innocent XI in his bull 'Coelestis Pastor' of 19 Nov. 1687. Sixty-eight propositions from Molinos' writings were condemned. Other notable exponents of Quietist teaching were P. M. Petrucci (1636–1701) and the *Barnabite, F. Lacombe, the director of Mme Guyon.

H. Heppe, Geschichte der quietistischen Mystik in der katholischen Kirche (1875). J. Paquier, Qu'est-ce que le quiétisme? (1910). M. Petrocchi, Il quietismo italiano del seicento (Storia e Letteratura, xx; 1948). R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), esp. pp. 231–87. P. Pourrat, P.S.S., La Spiritualité chrétienne, iv (ed. 2, 1928), pp. 128–295. Id. in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1537–81, s.v. 'Quiétisme'; id. in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 25–49, s.v. 'Abandon'; P. Sannazzaro in E.C., x (1953), cols. 412–16, s.v. 'Quietismo', with further bibl. See also works cited under Fénelon, Molinos, and Guyon.

QUINISEXT SYNOD. See Trullan Synod.

QUIÑONES, FRANCISCO DE (d. 1540), reforming cardinal. Born at León of a noble Spanish family, he entered the *Franciscan Order in 1498. In 1517 he became Definitor General and in 1523 and 1526 he was elected Minister *General of the *Observants, in which office he worked for a strengthening of discipline, promoted missions and studies, and induced many Conventuals to join the Observants. In 1526, and esp. in 1527 after the Sack of Rome and the imprisonment of *Clement VII, he mediated successfully between *Charles V and the Pope, who made him cardinal in the same year or early in 1528. From 1529 he took an active part in the question of the divorce of *Henry VIII, defending the interests of Queen Catherine.

It was then that Quiñones, by order of the Pope, devoted himself to the compilation of a new *Breviary, which *Paul III published in 1535, often called the 'Breviary of the Holy Cross' after the cardinal's titular church. It abolished almost entirely the difference of rank in the Feasts as well as *antiphons, *versicles, and *Little Office of our Lady, and reduced to a minimum the readings from the Lives of the Saints. On the other hand, the whole *Psalter was recited during the week and nearly the whole of the Bible read during the year. The several Hours were almost equal in length, each containing only three Psalms, and Mattins on all days only three lessons. A second recension of it appeared in 1536. Although special permission was necessary for the recitation of Quiñones' Breviary, which was originally intended only for private use, it soon began to penetrate even into the public offices of the religious orders and more than a hundred editions appeared between 1536 and 1566. In other quarters it was attacked for its disregard of tradition and it was eventually proscribed by *Paul IV in 1558.

Quiñones' Breviary considerably influenced T. *Cranmer, whose early drafts of a reformed Service Book and Calendar follow it closely; and with its uniformity, its continuous reading of Scripture, the recitation of the whole Psalter during a given period, and the general simplification by cutting out antiphons, responses, and the like, the BCP of 1549 and, through it, the final shape of the BCP, owe a good deal to the 'Breviary of the Holy Cross'.

Quiñones' Breviary of 1535 was repr. by J. Wickham Legg (Cambridge, 1888); the second recension, of 1536, ed. id. (H.B.S., xxxv (text) and xlii (liturgical introd., life of Quiñones, notes and indices), 1908–12). [Fernando] Marquis d'Alcedo, Le Cardinal Quiñones et la Sainte Ligue (Bayonne, 1910). J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Warum ist das Reformbrevier des Kardinals Quiñonez gescheitert?' in Z.K.T., lxxviii (1956), pp. 98–107. See also works cited under Breviary and Common Prayer, Book of.

QUINQUAGESIMA. Properly the period of fifty days preceding *Easter which begins on the Sunday before *Ash Wednesday; but the word came to be generally applied only to the Sunday mentioned. In earlier times a new stage in the pre-Lenten discipline, e.g. abstinence from flesh-meat, began on this day. It ceased to have any liturgical significance and was suppressed in the RC Church in 1969. The word is occasionally used also of the fifty days which extend from Easter to *Pentecost.

A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâque d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains' in Rech. S.R., xxxvii (1950), pp. 125–45, esp. III, 'La "Cinquantaine" préparatoire au jour de Pâques ou Quinquagésime', p. 130. P. Siffrin, O.S.B., in E.C., x (1953), col. 421, s.v. See also bibl. to Septuagesima and Sexagesima.

QUINQUE VIAE. The five 'ways' or arguments by which St. *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., I, q. 2, art. 3) sought to prove the existence of God a posteriori, i.e. from those effects of His being which are known to us, viz. (1) that motion implies a first mover; (2) that a sequence of efficient causes, and their effects, such as we find in the world, implies an uncaused first cause; (3) that the existence of things which are not self-explanatory, and therefore might logically not exist, implies some necessary being (see Cosmological Argument); (4) that the comparisons we make (more or less 'true', 'good', 'noble', &c.) imply a standard of comparison which is itself perfect in all these qualities; (5) that the fulfilment by inanimate or unintelligent objects of an end to which they are evidently designed to work implies a purposive intelligence in their creation and direction (see Physico-Theological Argument).

QUIRE. The older spelling, still retained in the BCP, of the word now usually spelt choir.

QUIRINUS. The signature over which the series of 69 brilliantly written letters on the *Vatican Council was published in the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung in 1869–70. The writer is now known to have been J. J. I. von *Döllinger, who relied on material supplied by informants residing in Rome, among them Lord *Acton and J. *Friedrich. The letters, which were directed against the dominant party at the Council which was pressing for the definition of the Pope's Infallibility, maintained that the anti-infallibilist cause suffered from the many non-theological factors working in favour of an early definition, e.g. the Pope's personal influence and the disproportionate representation of Italians at the Council. Admittedly the work of a strong partisan, they remain one of the primary sources for the history of the Council. See also Janus.

An Eng. trans. was published in 1870. See also C. Butler, The Vatican Council (1930), vol. i, ch. xiv.

QUMRAN. The site of some ruins at the north-western end of the *Dead Sea, c. 8 miles south of *Jericho. It was near here that the first of the so-called *Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in 1947, to be followed by further finds in later years. Excavations of the site, carried out between 1951 and 1956, reveal two main periods of occupation: (1) from c. 150 to c. 31 B.C.; and (2) from the reign of *Herod's son, Archelaus (4 B.C.–A.D. 6) to c. A.D. 68; it would seem that it was at the end of this period that the Scrolls were secreted in caves. Subsequently the site was occupied by Jewish insurgents during the revolt of *Bar Cochba (A.D. 132–5).

R. de Vaux, O.P., L'Archéologie et les manuscrits de la mer Morte (Schweich Lectures for 1959; London, 1961). J. T. Milik, Dix Ans de découvertes dans le désert de Juda (1957; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, xxvi; 1959). See also works cited under Dead Sea Scrolls.

QUMRAN SCROLLS. See Dead Sea Scrolls.

QUO VADIS? Acc. to a legend, first found in the 'Acts of St. *Peter' and transmitted by St. *Ambrose, the words 'Domine quo vadis?' (Lat., 'Lord, whither goest Thou?') were spoken by St. *Peter when, fleeing from Rome, he met Christ on the *Appian Way. The Lord answered: 'I am coming to be crucified again', words which St. Peter took to mean that He was to suffer again in His disciple; so he turned back to Rome, where he was martyred. The small church of S. Maria delle Piante on the Appian Way, commonly called Domine Quo Vadis, which was rebuilt early in the 17th cent., commemorates the incident.

The development of the legend can be studied in 'Acts of Peter', xxxv; *Origen, Comm. in Joan., xx. 12 (PG, xiv, 600 B); Ambrose, Sermo Contra Auxentium (inter epp. 21 and 22), xiii (PL, xvi, 1011).

QUOAD OMNIA. The name given to Scottish parishes to which the ancient *teinds or tithes belonged. They were so called because they were provided quoad omnia, i.e. in respect of all things civil and ecclesiastical. If, however, through changed circumstances, e.g. owing to the growth of population, the one parochial church was found insufficient and a portion of the original parish was erected into a parish with a church of its own, the new parish was designated quoad sacra, i.e. as provided in respect of ecclesiastical affairs alone. In the pre-union Church of Scotland most of the churches in the cities were in quoad sacra parishes, and hence supported not by the teinds but by modern endowments and the liberality of their members. Since the union of 1929 ex-United Free churches have been allotted parishes and in many cases have received a portion of the teind-endowment of the old parish within whose area they stand.

QUOAD SACRA. See Quoad Omnia.

QUODLIBET. The name of an academic exercise in medieval universities, chiefly Paris. Twice a year, before Christmas and Easter, a disputation was held in which the master undertook to deal with any questions (disputatio de quolibet) raised by any of the participants (a quolibet). The subjects ranged from abstruse questions of theology to the smallest details of daily life. The answers of the masters were afterwards drawn up in writing and published. Thus, for example, we possess eleven quodlibets of St. *Thomas Aquinas and part of a twelfth. The exercise was not compulsory. The practice seems to have begun in the time of *Alexander of Hales and Guerric of St. Quentin and was at its height in the later 13th and early 14th cents. In the course of the 14th cent. its character changed, and it came to be part of the exercise required for a bachelor seeking the licentiate. One of the most famous encounters was between St. Thomas Aquinas and John *Peckham on the doctrine of the soul.

P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique (Bibliothèque thomiste, v and xxi; 1925–35); id., 'Où en est la question du Quodlibet?' in Revue du moyen âge latin, ii (1946), pp. 405–14.

R

RABANUS MAURUS (776 or 784–856), Abbot of *Fulda and Abp. of Mainz, one of the greatest theologians of his age. Educated at Fulda and later at Tours under the direction of *Alcuin, he was on his return made master of the monastery school at Fulda, which under him became one of the most influential schools in Europe, counting *Walafrid Strabo and Otfrid of Weissenburg among its pupils. He was ordained priest in 814 and elected abbot in 822, and during the twenty years of his government the abbey of Fulda rapidly developed spiritually and intellectually as well as materially. He resigned his charge in 842, probably owing to difficulties with King Louis the German, and retired to Petersberg near Fulda. There he led a life of prayer and study until, in 847, he was made Abp. of Mainz, where, during his episcopate, three important synods were held in the years 847, 848, and 852. As abbot and archbishop Rabanus Maurus carried forward the evangelization of Germany and with this end in view furthered the learning of monks and clerics, for whom he wrote 'De clericorum institutione', a kind of manual dealing with the Sacraments, public prayer, fasts, and other subjects necessary for their work. He wrote a number of commentaries on the Scriptures, e.g. on the Pentateuch, the Wisdom Books, St. Matthew, and the Pauline Epistles. Amongst his other writings 'De Rerum Naturis' (commonly known as 'De universo'), an encyclopaedic work based on St. *Isidore of Seville's 'Etymologiae' which upheld a mystical interpretation of the world, had considerable success. Rabanus was also a prolific poet, the '*Veni Creator Spiritus' being often attributed to him. He took part in the controversy which centred in the monk *Gottschalk, who advocated the doctrine of predestination to damnation, and wrote against the pronounced realism of the sacramental teaching of *Paschasius Radbertus. Though he was not an original thinker or theologian, his sound knowledge, esp. of the Scriptures, the Latin Fathers and the Liturgy, and his zeal for the promotion of learning won him the title of praeceptor Germaniae. He was early venerated as a Saint but was not formally canonized. Feast day, 4 Feb.

Works ed. J. Pamelius–G. Colvenerius (6 vols., bound in 3, Cologne, 1626–7); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cvii–cxii. Modern edd. by E. Dümmler of his letters in M.G.H., Epistolae, v (1898), pp. 379–516, with appendix of fragments pp. 517–33, and of his poems, ib., Poetae, ii (1884), pp. 154–244, with 'Appendix Hymnorum Incertae Originis', pp. 244–258, and by A. Koepler of his De Institutione Clericorum (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, No. 5; 1901). The primary source for his life is the biography by his disciple Rudolph, monk of Fulda, printed in A.A.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 512–22. E. Dümmler, 'Hrabanstudien' in Sb. (Berl.), 1898, I, pp. 24–42. J. Hablitzel, Hrabanus Maurus. Ein Beitrag zur mittelalterlichen Exegese (Biblische Studien, xi, Hft. 3; 1906). G. M. Dreves, Hymnologische Studien zu Venantius Fortunatus und Rabanus Maurus (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, III. Reihe, No. 3; 1908), pp. 55–136. P. Lehmann, 'Zu Hrabans geistiger Bedeutung' in Sankt Bonifatius. Gedenkgabe zum zwölfhundertsten Todestag (Fulda, 1954), pp. 473–87; repr. in his Erforschung des Mittelalters, iii (Stuttgart, 1960), pp. 198–212. Elisabeth Heyse, Hrabanus Maurus' Enzyklopädie 'De rerum naturis'. Untersuchungen zu den Quellen und zur Methode der Kompilation (Münchener Beiträge zur Mediävistik und Renaissance-Forschung, iv; 1969). Raby, pp. 179–81, with bibl. p. 474; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 220–7. H. Peltier in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1601–20, s.v.; M. Bernards in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 499 f., s.v. 'Hrabanus Maurus', for further bibl.

RABBI (Heb., 'my master'). A Jewish title of respect given to honoured teachers by disciples and others (Mt. 23. 7). Christ is so addressed in the Gospels (Jn. 1. 38, &c.). Shortly after NT times it became added as a recognized title to the name of Jewish religious teachers, e.g. 'Rabbi Johanan'. Rabbi Judah (A.D. 135–217) was regarded as 'the Rabbi' par excellence.

RABBULA (d. 435), Bp. of *Edessa from 412. The leading figure in the Syrian Church in his day, he strongly opposed *Nestorianism, and attacked in particular the writings of *Theodore of Mopsuestia (d. 428). Acc. to F. C. *Burkitt, he compiled the *Peshitta text of the NT in the interests of orthodoxy and issued it to supersede the *Diatessaron of the heretic *Tatian. This is now, however, disputed. He translated into Syriac St. *Cyril of Alexandria's 'De Recta Fide', and was also the author of many letters and hymns, a sermon against Nestorius, and a number of canons regulating the life of monks and clergy. His successor in the see was the unorthodox *Ibas.

J. J. Overbeck (ed.), S. Ephraemi Syri, Rabulae Episcopi Edesseni, Balaei aliorumque Opera Selecta (Oxford, 1865), containing text of Vita (pp. 159–209), prose works (pp. 210–244), and some poetical and other texts (pp. 245–8, 362–78). Rabbula's Canons ed., with introd. and Eng. tr., in A. Vööbus, Syriac and Arabic Documents regarding Legislation relative to Syrian Asceticism (Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile, xi; Stockholm, 1960), pp. 24–50. M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., Mélanges d'histoire religieuse (1915), pp. 185–226 ('Un Évêque syrien du Ve siècle'; repr. from La Science catholique, 15 Sept. 1888). P. Peeters, S.J., 'La Vie de Rabboula, évêque d'Édesse' in Rech. S.R., xviii (1928), pp. 170–204 [very sceptical about the value of Vita]. G. G. Blum, Rabbula von Edessa. Der Christ, der Bischof, der Theologe (C.S.C.O., ccc; 1969), with bibl. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 96–9. E. Venables in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 532–4, s.v. 'Rabbûlas'; I. Ziadé in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1620–6, s.v. 'Rabboula'. See also bibl. to Peshitta.

RACCOLTA (Ital., 'collection'). An officially approved RC prayer book containing all the devotions to which Papal *indulgences were attached. The first Raccolta was published in 1807 at Rome by Telesforo Galli. The Raccolta has now been supplanted by the much briefer 'Enchiridion Indulgentiarum' of 1968.

RACOVIAN CATECHISM, The. The first statement of Socinian principles. Drawn up by Valentin Schmalz and Johannes Völkel on the basis of drafts by F. P. *Socinus, it was published in Polish in 1605 at Racow, an early stronghold of Socinianism in S. Poland. Versions in German (1608) and Latin (1609) followed. It was professedly not a formal confessional creed, designed to be dogmatically imposed on the Socinians, but a body of opinions which would point believers towards eternal life. In eight sections it dealt with (1) the Scriptures (the only source of truth), (2) the way of salvation (knowledge and a holy life), (3) the knowledge of God ('the Supreme Lord of all things', with rejection of the Trinity), (4) the Person of Christ (a man by his marvellous life and resurrection raised to divine power), (5) the Prophetic Office of Christ, (6) the Kingship of Christ, (7) the Priesthood of Christ, and (8) the Church (the body of Christians who uphold and profess the saving doctrines). A copy of the Latin version, sent to England with a dedication to *James I, was publicly burnt in 1614.

An English version by J. *Biddle was publd. at Amsterdam in 1652; it was formally burnt in 1654 by order of O. *Cromwell. New Eng. ed. by Thomas Rees with Historical Introduction, London, 1818.

RAD, GERHARD VON (1901–71), OT scholar. He was born at Nürnberg and educated at the Universities of Erlangen and Tübingen. After serving as Privatdozent at Leipzig (1930–4), he held chairs at Jena (1934–45), Göttingen (1945–9), and Heidelberg (1949–66). His most important writings are concerned with three main fields of study, viz. Deuteronomy; the literary analysis, *form criticism, *traditio-historical criticism, and theological interpretation of the *Hexateuch; and the theology of the OT. On Deuteronomy he wrote his first substantial work, Das Gottesvolk im Deuteronomium (1929), Deuteronomium-Studien (1947; Eng. tr., 1953) and a commentary in Das Alte Testament Deutsch entitled Das fünfte Buch Mose (1964; Eng. tr., 1966). He attributed Deuteronomy to the preaching activity of priestly and Levitical circles who sought to restore the ancient traditions of the Israelite amphictyony, emphasized the influence of covenant formulas on its structure, and claimed that the idea of the 'Holy War' is an important element in its teaching. This last idea he also propounded in Der Heilige Krieg im alten Israel (1951). His principal writings on the Hexateuch were Die Priesterschrift im Hexateuch (1934), Das formgeschichtliche Problem des Hexateuchs (1938, repr. in his collected works), and his commentary on Genesis in Das Alte Testament Deutsch entitled Das erste Buch Mose (3 vols., 1949–53; Eng. tr., 1961). He applied form-critical methods to the entire structure of the Hexateuch and claimed that the short historical credo or cultic confession in Deut. 26. 5 f. was a miniature of the Hexateuch. He further maintained that the Exodus-Conquest traditions (the festival legend of the Feast of *Weeks at Gilgal) and the Sinai traditions (the festival legend of the renewal of the covenant at Shechem) were originally separate, and he emphasized the creative unifying work of the compiler. His Theologie des Alten Testament (2 vols., 1957–60; Eng. tr., 1962–5) was also based on form-critical study and reflects important aspects of current contemporary German theological debate. He did not attempt to construct a unified system of OT theology, but expounded, first, Israel's confession of the Heilsgeschichte as proclaimed in the cult and transmitted in the historical traditions, second, the searching criticism of the older traditions by the prophets and their proclamation that new divine acts were about to take place, and third, the relationship between the OT and the NT in terms of a modified typological interpretation. His Weisheit in Israel (1970) is also important.

Collection of his more important essays in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (1958); Eng. tr., with additional essay, The Problem of the Hexateuch and other Essays (1966). Festschriften for his 60th birthday, ed. R. Rendtorff and K. Koch, Studien zur Theologie der alttestamentlichen Überlieferungen (Neukirchen, 1961), with list of his works, pp. 162–74; and for his 70th birthday, ed. H. G. Wolff, Probleme biblischer Theologie (Munich, 1971), incl. list of recent works, pp. 665–8. J. L. Crenshaw, Gerhard von Rad (Waco, Texas [1978]).

RADBERTUS, PASCHASIUS. See Paschasius Radbertus.

RADEGUNDE, St. (518–87), the Queen of Clothaire I. The daughter of a prince of Thuringia, she fell into the hands of the Franks after a successful invasion of her country. She was a woman of great piety who did not wish to marry, but as an act of charity consented to become the wife of Clothaire, a man of debased tastes and evil character (c. 540). His murder of her brother gave her an excuse to flee from court (c. 550) and to persuade Médard, Bp. of Noyon, to ordain her a deaconess. Not long afterwards she founded a monastery of nuns outside Poitiers, where the rule of *Caesarius of Arles was adopted. Here she spent the remaining thirty years of her life in prayer, study, and good works. In 569 she obtained for her convent, from the Emp. Justin II, a large fragment of the true cross, which inspired *Venantius Fortunatus to write his famous '*Vexilla regis'. Feast day, 13 Aug.

Contemporary Lives by Venantius Fortunatus and the nun, Baudonivia, printed in AA.SS., Aug. III (1737), pp. 67–83; crit. ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, ii (1888), pp. 358–95; the former Life also ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Aigrain (Paris, 1910). Life by *Hildebert of Lavardin in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 83–92, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxi, 967–88. Anon. Life attributed to Henry Bradshaw, O.S.B. (d. 1513), printed c. 1508–27, ed. by F. Brittain (Cambridge, 1926). Modern lives by E. Briand (Poitiers, 1898) and R. Aigrain ('Les Saints', 1918; ed. 2, Poitiers, 1952). F. Brittain, St. Radegund. Patroness of Jesus College, Cambridge (1925). L. Schmidt, St. Radegundis in Gross-Höflein. Zur frühmittelalterlichen Verehrung der heiligen Frankenkönigin im Burgenland und in Ostniederösterreich (Burgenländische Forschungen, xxxii; 1956). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2044–2055, s.v.

RADEWYNS, FLORENTIUS. See Florentius Radewyns.

RAHNER, KARL (1904–84), RC theologian. Of Swabian extraction, Karl Rahner followed his elder brother into the *Jesuit Order in 1922. He was ordained in 1932. After further study at Freiburg and Innsbruck, he was appointed to the theological faculty of the latter university in 1936. After the Second World War he returned to Innsbruck in 1948 and in the following year became Professor of Dogmatic Theology. In 1964 he was appointed Professor at Munich. He edited Denzinger's Enchiridion Symbolorum in 1952 and was one of the editors of the new Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche (10 vols., 1957–65, + supplements on the Second *Vatican Council) and of the six-volume encyclopaedia Sacramentum Mundi (1968–70), which is strongly influenced by his outlook. He is the author of a large number of books and articles, and was a peritus at the Second Vatican Council.

The ultimate source of Rahner's thought is to be found in Joseph Maréchal's vast work Le Point de départ de la métaphysique (1923–49), which attempted to construct a revised system of Thomist metaphysics which would take account of and be immune to the criticism of I. *Kant. His literary and philosophical idiom is, however, largely that of the *existentialist philosopher Martin *Heidegger, under whom he studied in Freiburg; this renders his writing difficult to master. His basic position is expounded in detail in his major work, Geist in Welt (1939; ed. 2, 1957; Eng. tr. as Spirit in the World, 1968) which, interpreting in existential terms St. *Thomas Aquinas's doctrine of perception as the grasping of intelligible being through the medium of the sensible species, sees the human subjectivity as functioning within a horizon of being whose ultimate determinant is God. In a smaller work, Hörer des Wortes (1941), Rahner extends his argument to the realm of the Christian revelation.

In contrast to his technical writings Rahner's addresses to student and mixed audiences are direct and forceful, showing deep insight into the problems of the contemporary world and of the Church's pastoral and evangelistic task. He is one of the most influential of RC theologians, especially in German-speaking countries; while firmly loyal to the traditional teaching of his Church he is intrepid in his exploration of new problems and provides a fine example of that combination of intellectual modesty and audacity which É. *Gilson has pronounced to be the mark of the great theologian.

A collection of some of his more important theological articles is being publ. under the title Schriften zur Theologie (1954 ff.; Eng. tr., with introd. by C. Ernst, O. P., 1961 ff.) and of his pastoral works as Sendung und Gnade (1959; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1963–6). J. B. Betz and others (edd.), Gott in Welt. Festgabe für Karl Rahner (2 vols., Freiburg i.Br., etc., 1964), incl. list of his writings to date, ii, pp. 900–36. L. Roberts, The Achievement of Karl Rahner (1967).

RAIKES, ROBERT (1735–1811), the founder of *Sunday Schools. A native of *Gloucester, he was educated at the College (i.e. Cathedral) School. He became an advocate of many philanthropic causes which he supported in the Gloucester Journal (est. 1732), which he inherited from his father in 1757. Stimulated by the neglected condition of the local children and their behaviour on Sundays, he was led to assist in the establishment of a Sunday School in a neighbouring parish; and in 1780 he started a school in his own parish, open on week-days and Sundays, for the teaching of Scripture, reading, and other elementary subjects. Although he had to face opposition at first from conservatives who felt that popular education spelled revolution, as well as from strict *Sabbatarians, his enthusiasm and use of new methods (phonetics, employment of monitors, &c.) triumphed. In 1783 he felt his school sufficiently established to draw attention to his achievement in his paper. His methods were soon followed by Hannah *More (q.v.) and others, and before his death Sunday Schools had come into being in many places throughout the country.

The basic lives are those by A. Gregory (London, 1877) and that ed. J. H. Harris, with introd. by F. W. *Farrar (Bristol–London, 1899). Other lives by J. H. Harris ('Splendid Lives Series', London [1900]; revised ed. [1928]), T. B. Walters (London, 1930), G. Kendall (ib., 1939) and F. Booth (ib., 1980). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 168–70.

RAINOLDS, JOHN (1549–1607), also Reynolds, Anglican divine. A native of Pinhoe, Devon, he was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1568. As reader in Greek in his college (1573–8), he became well known through his successful lectures on *Aristotle's Rhetoric. Resigning his Fellowship in 1586, probably through difficulties with William Coke, the president, he taught for a time at Queen's College. In 1593 he became Dean of *Lincoln and in 1598, by an arrangement welcome to Corpus, where Coke's rule was much disliked, exchanged this office with the president. By this time Rainolds had won a reputation as a skilled champion of *Calvinism, and at the *Hampton Court Conference (1604) he was the chief representative of the Puritan cause. Among the things in the BCP to which he objected were the *sign of the Cross in baptism, the ring in marriage, the use of the *Apocrypha, and the *churching of women. Though the Puritan objections were overruled at the Conference, Rainolds did not fall from favour. He was given a prominent part in preparing the *Authorized Version of the Bible, sitting in the company which translated the Prophets. His high character and wide learning won him respect even from his theological adversaries.

Rainolds's Orationes Duodecim were posthumously ed. by his friend and pupil, Henry Jackson (London, 1614). The fifth of them, Oratio in Laudem Artis Poeticae, was repr. from a later ed., with introd. (pp. 1–23) and commentary by W. Ringler and Eng. tr. by W. Allen (Princeton Studies in English, xx; Princeton, N.J., 1940). T. Fowler in D.N.B., xlvii (1896), pp. 180–2.

RAMBAM. See Maimonides.

RAMBLER, The. A monthly RC periodical, founded by J. M. Capes in 1848, which became an organ of liberal English Catholicism. In 1859 (Lord) *Acton, then one of its proprietors, secured J. H. *Newman as editor. After four months, however, an article by Newman on the place of the laity in the Church was condemned at Rome and he was compelled to retire. Acton himself nominally succeeded to the editorship, though in fact Richard Simpson, an earlier editor, did most of the work. The Rambler attacked the *Ultramontanism of W. G. *Ward and H. E. *Manning, and in 1862 the latter suppressed it. It was nominally merged in a quarterly, the Home and Foreign Review (itself suppressed for similar reasons in 1864).

J. L. Altholz, The Liberal Catholic Movement in England. The 'Rambler' and its Contributors 1848–1864 (1962).

RAMON LULL. See Lull, Raymond.

RAMSAY, WILLIAM MITCHELL (1851–1939), NT scholar. Educated at Aberdeen, Oxford, and Göttingen, he became Fellow successively of Exeter (1882) and Lincoln (1885) Colleges, Oxford. From 1886 to 1911 he was professor of humanity at Aberdeen. He travelled extensively in Asia Minor, and became an eminent authority on its geography and history. He was also a keen student of the NT, making extensive use of his archaeological and other learning in defence of a moderate conservatism. His books include The Historical Geography of Asia Minor (1890), The Church in the Roman Empire (1893), The Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia (2 vols., 1895, 1897), St. Paul, the Traveller and Roman Citizen (1895) and Was Christ born at Bethlehem? (1898).

Anatolian Studies presented to Sir William Mitchell Ramsay, ed. W. H. Buckler and W. M. Calder (Manchester, 1923). J. G. C. Anderson in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 727 f.

RAMSEY, ARTHUR MICHAEL (1904–88), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of Arthur Stanley Ramsey, President of Magdalene College, Cambridge, he was educated at Repton and Magdalene College. After training at Cuddesdon College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1928 (priest in 1929) to the title of Liverpool parish church. In 1930 he became sub-warden of Lincoln Theological College and in 1936 Lecturer of Boston. From 1940 to 1950 he was Professor of Divinity at *Durham University and Canon of Durham Cathedral, and from 1950 to 1952 Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. In 1952 he was appointed Bp. of Durham, being translated in 1956 to *York and in 1961 to Canterbury. In 1966 he paid an official visit to Pope *Paul VI, and he has done much to foster relations with the E. Churches. During his primacy *Synodical Government was inaugurated in the C of E in 1970, and there were extended negotiations over the *Anglican–Methodist Scheme of Unity, to which he gave wholehearted support. His writings include The Gospel and the Catholic Church (1936), The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ (1949), Sacred and Secular (1965), and God, Christ and the World (1969). He resigned in 1974.

RAMUS, PETRUS (Pierre de la Ramée) (1515–1572), French humanist. Of impoverished noble family, from Picardy, he studied at the College of Navarre in Paris. Though doubt has been cast on the story that in his exercise for his Master of Arts at Paris in 1536 he defended the thesis that all *Aristotle's doctrines were false, it is clear that in his two works, Aristotelicae Animadversiones and Dialecticae Institutiones, which were published in 1543, he violently attacked Aristotle and the university curriculum, and a storm followed. In 1544 Francis I forbade him to teach, but through the influence of his patrons, the Cardinals de Bourbon and de Lorraine, he was appointed president of the College of Presles in 1545 and professor of rhetoric and philosophy at the Collège Royal in 1551. After becoming a *Calvinist in 1562 he went to Germany. He returned to Paris in 1571 and was killed in the Massacre of St. *Bartholomew in 1572. To Aristotle's system, which he accused of falsifying the innate logic of the human mind, he opposed his own, a mixture of logic and rhetoric which declared deduction to be the final scientific method. His distinction between inventio (idea and definition) and iudicium (judgement, conclusion and method) was much discussed, and the quarrel between 'Ramists' and 'Anti-Ramists' agitated the European universities for several years.

Facsimile of the 1543 ed. of his Dialecticae Institutiones and Aristotelicae Animadversiones with introd. by W. Risse (Stuttgart, 1964). Modern ed. of the French version, Dialectique, originally publd. in 1555, by M. Dassonville (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, lxvii; Geneva, 1964). Studies by C. Waddington-Kastus (Paris, 1848, in Lat.; ib., 1855, in Fr.), C. Desmaze (ib., 1867), F. P. Graves (New York, 1912), W. J. Ong, S.J. (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), with bibl., and R. Hooykaas (Leiden, 1958, in Fr., with Eng. summary). P. Lobstein, Petrus Ramus als Theologe (Strassburg, 1878). Überweg, iii, pp. 156–8, with bibl. p. 647. W. J. Ong in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 77 f., s.v.

RANCÉ, ARMAND-JEAN LE BOUTHILLIER DE (1626–1700), reformer of *La Trappe. The son of a secretary of Marie de' Medici, and godson of *Richelieu, he was at an early age provided with a number of benefices, including that of *commendatory abbot of La Trappe, in succession to an elder brother who died prematurely. He distinguished himself at the *Sorbonne, and as a classical scholar, but he became one of the many worldly abbés who frequented Parisian salons and, though after his ordination (1651) he sometimes preached, he did not take his religious duties very seriously. Under the protection of his uncle, who was Abp. of Tours, he began a successful ecclesiastical career, being named chaplain to Gaston d'Orléans while attending the Assembly of Clergy in 1657, but suddenly, on the death of Mme de Montbazon in that year, he underwent a dramatic conversion. At first he retired to his country house near Tours, and was for a time directed by Arnauld d'Andilly, whom he visited at *Port-Royal, but by 1662 his vocation had become clear. He resigned all his benefices except that of La Trappe, where he introduced the *Cistercian Reform; he then entered the noviciate at Perseigne nearby, whence he emerged after a year to be blessed as regular abbot of La Trappe in 1664. Almost at once he was sent to Rome to plead the cause of the Reform, with little success; on his return he devoted himself to his own community, which became the model for what long after his death was called the *Trappist Reform. To the existing rules of the Reformed Cistercians he added more stringent regulations, based, he always claimed, on the original spirit of Cîteaux. Encouraged by his friend J. B. *Bossuet to publish the Traité de la sainteté et des devoirs de la vie monastique (1683), Rancé became involved in endless polemic with other orders, which resented his criticism, and particularly with the Maurist, J. *Mabillon, who challenged Rancé's total prohibition of study in his ideal monastery. Apart from his austerity, Rancé incurred frequent charges of *Jansenism because many of his friends, and some of his monks, were closely associated with the party, but it seems clear that his sympathy was limited to the moral sphere, and that theologically he was perfectly orthodox. Bossuet enlisted his support against F. *Fénelon in the *Quietist dispute in 1697, and he was seldom free of controversy of one kind or another. Among his correspondents, and those who placed themselves under his direction, were Cardinal de *Retz, *James II and Bossuet.

Collection of his letters, 2 vols., Paris, 1701–2; modern ed. by B. Gonod, ib., 1846. Ed. by A. J. Krailsheimer, Kalamazoo, Mich., in preparation. Primary lives by P. de Maupeou (2 vols., Paris, '1602' [1702]) and J. Marsollier (ib., 1703). Other lives include those of P. Le Nain, O.S.C.O. (Prior of the Abbey, 2 vols., no place, 1715; ed. 2, Paris, 1719), F. R. de *Chateaubriand (ib., 1844; undertaken in fulfilment of a penance), L. Dubois (2 vols., ib., 1866), B. Schmid, O.S.B. (Regensburg, 1897), H. *Bremond, L'Abbé Tempête (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1930; unsympathetic), and A. J. Krailsheimer, Armand-Jean de Rancé, abbot of La Trappe. His Influence in the Cloister and the World (Oxford, 1974). Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum, xxv (1963), pp. 189–254, a special issue to mark the third centenary of his conversion; A. Mensáros, O.Cist., 'L'Abbé de Rancé et la règle bénédictine' in Analecta Cisterciensia, xxii (1966), pp. 161–217. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1652–6, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to Trappists.

RANKE, LEOPOLD VON (1795–1886), German historian. From 1825 till his death he was professor of history at Berlin. Ranke's work is characterized by emphasis on the primary importance of the study of original sources, by psychological penetration and by a fundamentally objective attitude to history, as well as by understanding of national tendencies in their relation to the history of their age. The most famous of his works was his History of the Popes in the 16th and 17th cents., Die römischen Päpste, ihre Kirche und ihr Staat (3 vols., 1834–6), which from the 6th edition (1874) was carried down to 1870. It was based on extensive researches in the libraries of Italy where he collected material for three years (1828–31). In this work he removed the history of the Papacy from denominational polemics and showed the development of the Papal power and its effects on the history of Europe, stressing, however, its political rather than its religious significance. This work was followed by a large-scale history of the Reformation, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (6 vols., 1839–47), which it studied in the setting of contemporary European history and with full appreciation of its religious values from the Lutheran point of view.

Sämmtliche Werke (54 vols., Leipzig, 1867–90); also ed. P. Joachimsen, with the co-operation of E. Marcks, F. Meinecke, and H. Oncken (Munich, 1925 ff.). Das Briefwerk, ed. W. P. Fuchs (Hamburg, 1949); Neue Briefe, ed. B. Hoeft–H. Herzfeld (ib., 1949); Tagebücher, ed. W. P. Fuchs (Aus Werk und Nachlass, i; Munich, 1964). His principal works have also been tr. into Eng. H. F. Helmolt, Leopold von Rankes Leben und Wirken (1921). T. H. Von Laue, Leopold Ranke. The Formative Years (Princeton, 1950), with bibl. C. Hinrichs, Ranke und die Geschichtstheologie der Goethezeit (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, xix; 1954); R. Vierhaus, Ranke und die soziale Welt (Neue Münsterische Beiträge zur Geschichtsforschung, i; 1957); G. Berg, Leopold von Ranke als akademischer Lehrer (Schriftenreihe der historischen Kommission bei der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, ix; 1968). G. P. Gooch, History and Historians in the Nineteenth Century (1913), pp. 76–102. F. Meinecke, 'Ranke und Burckhardt' in H. Kohn, German History. Some new German views (1954), pp. 141–56.

RANTERS. A fanatical *antinomian and *pantheistic sect of the mid-17th cent. They appealed to their inward experience of Christ and denied the authority of Scripture, Creeds, and the Ministry. Their revolutionary and immoral doctrines made them the object of deep suspicion. They were at first popularly associated with the *Quakers, who suffered misrepresentation from the confusion. They were fiercely attacked by R. *Baxter. In the 19th cent. the word was applied colloquially to nonconformist (esp. *Primitive Methodist) preachers.

R. Barclay, The Inner Life of the Religious Societies of the Commonwealth (1876), pp. 409–74, with repr. of extracts from two Ranter Tracts as appendix to Ch. xvii (sep. pagination). R. M. *Jones, Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), pp. 467–81. Id. in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 578–80, with refl.

RAPHAEL, St., *Archangel. In the Books of *Tobit and *Enoch, Raphael figures as one of the seven archangels who stand in the presence of God. In Tobit (12. 12, 15) he hears the prayers of holy men and brings them before God. The name in Hebrew means 'God has healed', and in Enoch (10. 7) he is said to have 'healed' the earth when it was defiled by the sins of the fallen angels. From these Jewish speculations the figure of Raphael passed into Christian tradition. Feast day, previously 24 Oct.; in 1969 combined with St. Michael on 29 Sept.

In the C of E the Guild of St. Raphael was founded in 1915 with the aim of restoring the Ministry of Healing as part of the normal function of the Church.

The principal literature is to be found in commentaries on Enoch and Tobit, cited s.vv. On the Christian feast, L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), p. 602. J. T. Marshall in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 201, s.v.; A. Penna, C.R.L.–G. Löw, C.SS.R.–M. Donati in E.C., x (1952), cols. 469–73, s.v. 'Raffaele'. See also works cited under Angels.

RAPHAEL (1483–1520) (Raffaele Sanzio), the most famous of the Renaissance painters. From 1499 to 1504 he worked under *Perugino at Perugia, and painted the Crucifixion (1502; lately in the Mond Collection, now in the National Gallery, London) and the Espousals of the Virgin (1504; Brera, Milan). In 1504 he migrated to Florence, where he was brought into contact with the greatest artists of the time, among them *Michelangelo, *Leonardo da Vinci, and the Dominican Fra *Bartolommeo. Here he painted the Madonna del Granduca (Pitti, Florence) and the Ansidei Madonna (National Gallery, London). In 1508 he was summoned to Rome by *Julius II to decorate the Vatican 'Stanze'. The series of famous paintings for their walls included the Disputa and St. Peter released from Prison, while many Biblical scenes depicted on the ceilings were very frequently reproduced in illustrations of the Bible. He also executed at Rome the celebrated Sistine Madonna* (c. 1512; Dresden) and the Madonna della Sedia (c. 1513–14; Pitti, Florence). In 1514 *Leo X appointed him chief architect of *St. Peter's in succession to Bramante. His last work, The Transfiguration (Vatican), was left unfinished and completed by his pupils.

Reproductions of his pictures, in black and white, ed. G. Gronau (Klassiker der Kunst, i; ed. 4, 1909); also by G. Nicodemi (Milan, 1929) and E. Camesasca (2 vols., Milan, 1956; ed. 2, 1962; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1963). Collection of colour plates with introd. by W. E. Suida (Phaidon Press, London, 1941). V. Golzio, Raffaello nei documenti nelle testimonianze dei contemporanei e nella letteratura del suo secolo (Pontificia Insigne Accademia Artistica dei Virtuosi al Pantheon; Rome, 1936). O. Fischel, Raphaels Zeichnungen (8 parts, Rome, 1913–41). Modern studies include those of J. D. Passavant (2 parts, Leipzig, 1839; Eng. tr., 1872), E. Muntz (Paris, 1881; Eng. tr., 1882), J. A. Crowe–G. B. Cavalcaselle (2 vols., London, 1882–5), A. P. Oppé (London, 1909; revised ed., New York, 1970), S. Ortolani (Bergamo, 1942; ed. 2, 1945), O. Fischel (translated into Eng. and posthumously publd., 2 vols., London, 1948, incl. one vol. of plates), and J. Pope-Hennessy (Wrightsman Lectures; London [1970]). L. Dussler, Raffael. Kritisches Verzeichnis der Gemälde, Wandbilder und Bildteppiche (Munich, 1966; Eng. tr., 1971). A. Venturi, Storia dell'arte italiana, ix (pt. 2, Milan, 1926), pp. 1–336, xi (pt. 1, 1938), pp. 177–266.

RAPP, JOHANN GEORG (1757–1847), founder of the *Harmony Society (q.v.).

RAS SHAMRA TABLETS. A collection of cuneiform tablets with mythological poems and ritual prescriptions excavated by C. F. A. Schaeffer at Ras Shamra (anciently Ugarit) in N. Syria from 1929 onwards. The tablets, prob. dating from the 14th cent. B.C. or earlier, are in a hitherto unknown alphabetical script and in a Semitic dialect closely akin to Hebrew. They bear on the development of the alphabet and the language, literature, and religion of Canaan before the Israelite settlement. Their contents show some remarkable correspondences with the OT literature, throwing light on obscure Hebrew words and phrases, on OT religious practices and beliefs, and on the forms of Hebrew poems and their liturgical use. The key to the decipherment of the texts was discovered almost simultaneously by three scholars, H. Bauer, E. Dhorme, O.P., and C. Virolleaud.

Reports of the finds at Minet-el-Beida and Ras Shamra are given by C. F. A. Schaeffer in Syria. Revue d'Art et d'Archéologie publiée par l'Institut Français d'Archéologie de Beyrout, x (1929), pp. 285–97; xii (1931), pp. 1–14; xiii (1932), pp. 1–27; xiv (1933), pp. 94–127; xv (1934), pp. 105–131; xvi (1935), pp. 141–76; xvii (1936), pp. 105–49; xviii (1937), pp. 125–54; xix (1938), pp. 193–255 and 312–34; xx (1939), pp. 277–92; xxviii (1952), pp. 1–21. Mission de Ras-Shamra dirigée par C. F. A. Schaeffer: i, C. Virolleaud, La Légende phénicienne de Danel (Haute Commission de la République Française en Syrie et au Liban. Service des Antiquités. Bibliothèque archéologique et historique, xxi; Paris, 1936); ii, id., La Légende de Kéret, roi des Sidoniens (ib., xxii; 1936); iii, C. F. A. Schaeffer, Ugaritica. Études relatives aux découvertes de Ras Shamra (ib., xxxi; 1939); iv, C. Virolleaud, La Déesse 'Anat. Poème de Ras-Shamra (ib., xxviii; 1938); v, C. F. A. Schaeffer, Ugaritica, ii (ib., xlvii; 1949); x, A. Herdner, Corpus de tablettes en cunéiformes alphabétiques découvertes à Ras Shamra-Ugarit de 1929 à 1939 (ib., lxxix; 2 vols., 1963). C. F. A. Schaeffer, The Cuneiform Texts of Ras Shamra-Ugarit (Schweich Lectures for 1936; 1939). C. H. Gordon, Ugaritic Handbook. Revised Grammar, Paradigms, Texts in transliteration, Comprehensive Glossary (Analecta Orientalia, xxv; 1947). J. Aistleitner, Wörterbuch der Ugaritischen Sprache, ed. O. Eissfeldt (Ber. (Sächs.), cvi, Heft 3; 1963). G. R. *Driver, Canaanite Myths and Legends (1956). There are also a number of other important specialized artt. by C. Virolleaud and others in Syria, x (1929) and following volumes.

RASHDALL, HASTINGS (1858–1924), moral philosopher and theologian. Educated at Harrow and New College, Oxford, Rashdall taught philosophy at Oxford from 1888 to 1917, first at Hertford College and later (after 1895) at New College. From 1909 to 1917 he also held a canonry at *Hereford. From 1917 till his death he was Dean of *Carlisle. He won fame first as a historian by his Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages (3 vols., 1895; new ed. by F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden, 1936). In 1907 he published an important treatise on moral philosophy, The Theory of Good and Evil (2 vols.), in which he expounded an ethical doctrine which he described as 'Ideal *Utilitarianism'. In his *Bampton Lectures for 1915, The Idea of Atonement in Christian Theology (1919), he upheld with much vigour the *Abelardian or '*Exemplarist' theory of the Atonement. Rashdall possessed supreme confidence in the capacity of human reason, rightly employed, to arrive at the final truths of religion. He was in consequence an untiring controversialist, and a strong critic of all forms of *pragmatism, *modernism, sentimentalism, and *mysticism.

Three volumes of (largely unpubld.) papers and sermons by Rashdall, ed. H. D. A. Major–F. L. Cross under the titles Principles and Precepts (Oxford, 1927), Ideas and Ideals (ib., 1928), and God and Man (ib., 1930). Life by P. E. Matheson (London, 1928). C. C. J. *Webb in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 706–9.

RASHI (1040–1105), Jewish Biblical scholar, so called from the initials of his name Rabbi Solomon ben Isaac. After studying at Mainz and Worms he was appointed rabbi in his native city of Troyes. Among the Jews he is still one of the most highly reputed exegetes of the Hebrew Scriptures and the *Talmud. His aim, in opposition to the current exegesis of his time, was to interpret the OT acc. to its literal sense. His commentaries were influential from an early date; they were used by *Andrew of St. Victor as well as by *Nicholas of Lyra, through whom they are commonly supposed to have influenced M. *Luther. His works were translated into Latin in the 17th and 18th cents., the most complete edition being that of F. Breithaupt (1710, 1713, 1714).

His Comm. on the Pentateuch is ed. with Eng. tr. and notes by M. Rosenbaum–A. M. Silbermann (5 vols., London, 1929–34). L. Zunz, 'Solomon ben Isaac genannt Raschi' in Zeitschrift für die Wissenschaft des Judentums, i (1822), pp. 277–384. M. Liber, Rashi (Paris, 1906; Eng. tr., 1906). Volumes commemorating the 900th anniversary of his birth ed. H. L. Ginsberg (American Academy for Jewish Research, Texts and Studies, i; New York, 1941) and commemorating the 850th anniversary of his death, ed. S. Federbush (New York, 1958). H. Hailperin, Rashi and the Christian Scholars (Pittsburgh, 1963). E. I. J. Rosenthal, 'Rashi and the English Bible' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxiv (1940), pp. 138–67. A. Rothkoff and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xiii (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1558–65, s.v.

RASKOLNIKI (Russ., 'schismatics'). A comprehensive name for the section of the Russian Church that refused to accept the reforms of the patriarch *Nikon (d. 1681). They are also known as the '*Old Believers' (q.v.).

RATHERIUS (c. 887–974), Bp. of *Verona. A man of a very refractory and ambitious character, he took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical life of the 10th cent. Born in the neighbourhood of Liège, he at first became monk at the abbey of Lobbes in the Hennegau. In 926 he accompanied his abbot, Hilduin, to Italy, where Hugo of Provence, Hilduin's cousin, was King. In 931 Ratherius received the see of Verona from Hugo, but he soon fell out with the King and was removed from his see. After many changes of fortune, he was made Bp. of Liège in 953, but forced to resign in 955. From 962 to 968 he was again in possession of the Bpric. of Verona. His many writings, mostly of an occasional kind and often full of invective, throw important light on his age.

Works ed. J. and P. *Ballerini (Verona, 1765), with life pp. xxvi–clxxiv; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxvi, 9–768. Letters ed. F. Weigle (M.G.H., Briefe der deutschen Kaiserzeit, i; 1949); Opera Minora ed. P. L. D. Reid (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xlvi; 1976). A. Vogel, Ratherius von Verona und das zehnte Jahrhundert (2 vols., 1854). G. Pavani, Un vescovo belga in Italia nel secolo decimo. Studio storico-critico su Raterio di Verona (1920). G. Monticelli, Raterio, vescovo di Verona, 890–974 (1938), with bibl. V. Cavallari, Raterio e Verona (Biblioteca di Studi Storici Veronesi, vi; 1967). C. Leonardi, 'Raterio e Marziano Capella' in Italia Medioevale e Umanistica, ii (1959), pp. 73–102; G. Billanovich, 'Dal Livio di Raterio (Laur. 63, 19) al Livio del Petrarca (B.M., Harl. 2493)', ib., pp. 103–78, both with extensive bibl. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1679–87, s.v. 'Rathier de Vérone'.

RATIO STUDIORUM (Lat., 'the method of the studies'). The abbreviated name for the 'Ratio atque Institutio Studiorum Societatis Jesu', the *Jesuit scheme of studies issued in 1599. After earlier drafts in 1586 and 1591, the original editions legislated for studies in the three divisions of letters (Latin and Greek), philosophy, and theology, but were chiefly concerned with the study of literature and philosophy. The success of Jesuit secondary education from the 16th to the 18th cent. was largely due to it. The Ratio is based on the best pedagogical theory and practice of the period. In the restored Society a revised edition was issued in 1832, but was never finally approved. Recent editions (1941 and 1954) of the Ratio are limited to the regulation of the higher studies (philosophy and theology) of Jesuit students.

G. M. Pachtler, S.J. (ed.), Ratio Studiorum et institutiones scholasticae Societatis Jesu per Germaniam olim vigentes collectae (Monumenta Germaniae paedagogica, ii, v, ix, xvi; Berlin, 1887–94). C. Gomes Rodeles, S.J., and others (edd.), Monumenta paedagogica Societatis Jesu (Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, Madrid, 1901). E. A. Fitzpatrick, S.J. (ed.), St. Ignatius and the Ratio Studiorum (New York, 1933), incl. Eng. tr. of the 1599 text, pp. 119–254. A. P. Farrell, S.J., The Jesuit Code of Liberal Education (Milwaukee, 1938). J. W. Donohue, S.J., Jesuit Education. An Essay on the Foundations of its Idea (New York, 1963).

RATIONALE. The word has several ecclesiastical senses:

(1) Formerly, the breastplate worn by the Jewish high priest.

(2) A liturgical vestment of stuff which was sometimes worn by bishops over the shoulders. It seems to have been looked upon as a kind of substitute for the archiepiscopal *pallium, and to have been in use esp. in Germany. Its use is now confined to the Bps. of Eichstätt, Paderborn, Toul, and Cracow.

(3) An ornament worked in gold sometimes worn by bps. on the breast over the *chasuble when celebrating Mass. Its adoption was never widespread, though its use survived at *Reims till the beginning of the 16th century.

(4) A set of liturgical rules, e.g. those of W. *Durandus ('Rationale Divinorum Officiorum', 1286–91). Cf. also the Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer (1657), by A. *Sparrow.

RATISBON, The Conference of (1541). A reunion conference of three Catholic and three Protestant theologians convened at Ratisbon (Regensburg) from 27 Apr. to 22 May by the Emp. *Charles V. The three Catholics were J. *Eck, J. von *Pflug, and J. *Gropper; the three Protestants P. *Melanchthon, M. *Bucer, and Pistorius (1503–83). Though doctrinal agreement was reached on most of the controverted subjects, including the crucial question of *justification, the subsequent hostility of M. *Luther, as well as political rivalries, prevented any reunion being effected.

The Acta were publd. by M. Bucer at Strassburg in 1541 (Eng. tr. by M. *Coverdale [Geneva?], 1542). Kidd, pp. 340–346 [incl. Docc. Nos. 136–40]. L. *Pastor, Die Reunionsbestrebungen während der Regierung Karls V (1879), pp. 218–278. K. T. Hergang, Das Religions-Gespräch zu Regensburg i.J. 1541 und das Regensburger Buch nebst andren darauf bezüglichen Schriften jener Zeit (1858). H. Eells, 'The Origin of the Regensburg Book' in The Princeton Theological Review, xxvi (1928), pp. 353–72. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 536 f. (Nos. 41376–89). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 542–52, s.v. 'Regensburger Religionsgespräch und Regensburger Buch, 1541'.

RATRAMNUS (d. 868). A monk of *Corbie, who took a prominent part in the theological controversies of his age. In his 'De Praedestinatione', written at the bidding of Charles the Bald, he defended the doctrine of 'double predestination', i.e. to good and evil. His most celebrated writing was his treatise on the *Eucharist, 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini', in which he attacked the realist view of the Sacrament defended by *Paschasius Radbertus. Ratramnus's highly individual approach to the doctrine makes it difficult to relate his position to that of later orthodoxy. His book was condemned at the Synod of Vercelli held on 1 Sept. 1050 (where it was wrongly attributed to *Erigena). In the 16th cent. he was claimed (whether justly or not is much disputed) by several of the Reformers, notably N. *Ridley, as supporting their own doctrines. John *Fisher, on the other hand, appealed to his teaching against that of J. *Oecolampadius. In 1559 the treatise was put on the *Index, but removed again in 1900. Ratramnus also wrote a book, 'Contra Graecorum Opposita', against the theology of the E. Church.

Editiones principes of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini', Cologne, 1531; of his 'De Praedestinatione' in G. Mauguin (ed.), Veterum Auctorum qui IX. saeculo de Praedestinatione et Gratia scripserunt Opera et Fragmenta (Paris, 1650), pp. 29–102. Collected ed. of his works repr. from various sources in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxi, 11–346 and 1153–6. Crit. edd. of 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by J. N. Bakhuizen van den Brink (Verhandelingen der koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, lxi, No. 1; 1954) and of six letters by E. Dümmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, vi (1925), pp. 149–58. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'L'Opuscule inédit de Ratramne sur la nature de l'âme' in R. Bén., xliii (1931), pp. 207–23, incl. text (abbreviated) from one MS.; full ed. by C. Lambot, O.S.B. (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, ii; Namur–Paris, [c. 1952]). Modern Eng. trr. of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by 'H. W.'–'W. C. C.' (London, 1838) and W. F. Taylor (ib., 1880). A. Naegle, Ratramnus und die hl. Eucharistie (Theologische Studien der Leo-Gesellschaft, v; 1903). D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, i (1909), pp. 226–33; J. Geiselmann, Die Eucharistielehre der Vorscholastik (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, xv, Hftt. 1/3; 1926), esp. pp. 176–84; J. N. Bakhuizen van den Brink, 'Ratramn's Eucharistic Doctrine and its Influence in Sixteenth-Century England' in Studies in Church History, ii (1965), pp. 54–77. J. Dräseke, 'Ratramnus und Photius' in B.Z., xviii (1909), pp. 396–421. Manitius, i, pp. 412–17. G. E. Steitz–A. Hauck in P.R.E., xvi (1905), pp. 463–70, s.v.; H. Peltier in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1780–7, s.v. 'Ratramne'. See also works cited under Paschasius Radbertus.

RAVENNA. Acc. to tradition the first Bp. of Ravenna was St. *Apollinaris (q.v.). After the choice of the city in 404 as the Imperial residence by Honorius (395–423), it rapidly grew in importance and wealth. In 493 it fell to *Theodoric the Goth (d. 526), who introduced *Arianism. After the capture of the city for the Byzantine Empire by Belisarius (540) it became the capital of the Exarchate until it fell to the Lombards in 751. It is unrivalled in its mosaics and other remains of early Christian art. The oldest monument is the mausoleum of *Galla Placidia (d. 450), with magnificent mosaics, the most famous that of Christ as the Good Shepherd. Other noted early mosaics are in the Baptistery, a converted Roman bath (449–52), and the chapel of the archiepiscopal palace. Of the churches, the most famous are S. Apollinare Nuovo, originally the Arian cathedral (c. 500), S. Vitale (547), and S. Apollinare in Classe (549; at Classe, some three miles distant). *Dante, who spent the last four years of his life at Ravenna, was buried in the church of S. Francesco (1321). It was a key-point in the German defence in the Second World War, but the only building seriously damaged was S. Giovanni Evangelista. The patron of the city is St. *Vitalis (q.v.). Perhaps its most celebrated Bishop (apart from St. Apollinaris) was St. Peter *Chrysologus (d. 450).

Ravenna's geographical position and former status gave its medieval archbishops a special importance. The Emp. Otto III made Abp. Gerbert Pope as *Sylvester II, and *Henry IV set up his partisan, Abp. Wibert, against *Gregory VII as (the antipope) Clement III.

The principal source for the early history is the Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis of *Agnellus, q.v. E. Hutton, Ravenna (1913; rev. ed. for 'The Mediaeval Towns Series', 1926); T. Nediani, Ravenna (Florence, 1921); C. O. Nordström, Ravennastudien (Stockholm, 1953); G. Bovini, Ravenna. An Art City (Ravenna [1966]). S. Muratori, Ricordi di Ravenna medioevale, nel VI centenario della morte di Dante (1921). O. G. von Simson, Sacred Fortress. Byzantine Art and Statecraft in Ravenna (Chicago, 1948). E. Uehli, Die Mosaiken von Ravenna (1935); G. Bovini, Ravenna Mosaics (1957); F. W. Deichmann, Frühchristliche Bauten und Mosaiken von Ravenna (Baden-Baden, 1958), both with superb illustrations. Marion Lawrence, The Sarcophagi of Ravenna (Monographs on Archaeology and Fine Arts sponsored by the Archaeological Institute of America and the College Art Association, ii; New York, 1945). M. Mazzotti, La basilica di Sant'Apollinare in Classe (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xxi; 1954). E. Dinkler, Das Apsismosaik von S. Apollinare in Classe (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xxix; 1964), with bibl. on Church history of Ravenna, p. 11. G. Bovini, Saggio di bibliografia su Ravenna antica (Bologna [1968]). See also following entry.

RAVENNA ROTULUS, The. An inscribed strip of material, prob. of Ravennese origin and now in the *Bodmer Stiftung at Geneva, containing a series of early Latin prayers. It is nearly four yards long and was made up by sewing together seven separate pieces of vellum. As it is mutilated at both ends, its original length is unknown. The writing (in large uncials) prob. dates from the second half of the 8th cent.; it is closest to that of a MS. life of St. *Apollinaris now in Leningrad. In its present mutilated form the MS. contains 40 collects for the Advent season, together with a fragment of another collect and a further item which is prob. a 'Preface' for Christmas. The 27th item is found among the Christmas formularies in the '*Leonine', '*Gelasian' and '*Gregorian' Sacramentaries; but the rest are unique. The prayers may have been intended for use in the Office, not in the Mass.

On the back of the rotulus there are eight documents in a 10th cent. minuscule hand. Prob. all these come from the metropolitan archives of Ravenna. The prayers have sometimes been attributed to St. Peter *Chrysologus (d. 450), e.g. by F. *Cabrol; but on no sufficient evidence. They have also been ascribed (also improbably) to Marinianus, Bp. of Ravenna 595–606[?].

Editio princeps by A. Ceriani–G. Perro, Il rotolo opistografo del Principe Antonio Pio de Savoia (Milan, 1883); conveniently in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 3028–33, s.v. 'Rome (liturgie)'. Text also ed. L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B., Sacramentarium Veronense (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, i; 1955), pp. 173–8. F. Cabrol, O.S.B., 'Autour de la liturgie de Ravenne. Saint Pierre Chrysologue et le Rotulus' in R. Bén., xxiii (1906), pp. 489–500. S. Benz, O.S.B., Der Rotulus von Ravenna (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xlv; 1967), also incl. text. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, iii (Oxford, 1938), p. 30 (No. 371); cf. xi (ib., 1966), p. 8 (No. 1608).

RAYMOND LULL. See Lull, Raymond.

RAYMOND NONNATUS, St. (c. 1204–40), *Mercedarian missioner. The accounts of his life rest on wholly unreliable sources written in the Mercedarian interest centuries later. Acc. to these he came into the world after his mother had died in labour (hence 'non natus', not born) at Portello in Catalonia. After a most pious childhood, he was given leave by his father to join the Mercedarians, to whom he was admitted at Barcelona by St. *Peter Nolasco. Sent to N. Africa, he redeemed many slaves at Algiers and, when his funds were exhausted, gave himself up in ransom and for some years lived among the Moslems, converting many to the Christian faith. His trials are said to have culminated in an eight months' imprisonment, from which he was ransomed by members of his order. On his return to Spain in 1239, *Gregory IX nominated him cardinal, but in the next year on his way to Rome he died at Cardona, near Barcelona. Feast day, 31 Aug. He is the patron saint of midwives.

There is very little trustworthy information about the Saint. A 16th cent. life is pr. in AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 737–41, with introd., pp. 729–37, and account of the miracles attributed to him, pp. 741–76. See also histories of the Mercedarians, cited s.v.

RAYMOND OF PEÑAFORT, St. (1185–1275), Spanish canonist. He studied, and later taught, rhetoric and logic at Barcelona, but resigned his chair in 1210 in order to study law at *Bologna. Here he was made doctor in 1218 and lectured until 1221. He was persuaded by the Bp. of Barcelona to return and teach there, and was made canon and later provost of the cathedral. In 1222 he entered the *Dominican convent of Barcelona. Here he wrote his Summa de casibus poenitentiae, which exercised a profound influence on the development of the penitential system. In 1229 he was called away to accompany the papal legate to Spain, and returned with him to Rome. In 1230 *Gregory IX appointed him chaplain and penitentiary, and charged him with the collection and arrangement of papal decretals subsequent to *Gratian; this work was finished in 1234 and promulgated on 5 Sept. in the bull 'Rex Pacificus'. In 1236 Raymond went back to Spain for reasons of health, but two years later, much against his will, he was elected General of his order. In this capacity he drew up a revision of the Dominican constitution which remained in force until 1924. After having resigned his generalship in 1240, he devoted himself esp. to the conversion of Jews and Moors, and for this purpose he founded schools of Hebrew and Arabic. Besides the Summa already mentioned, which he revised after 1234, Raymond wrote other works on canon law. He was held in high esteem by his contemporaries. James I of Aragon was among his penitents, and St. *Thomas Aquinas wrote his Summa contra Gentiles at his suggestion. He was canonized by *Clement VIII in 1601. Feast day, 7 (formerly 23) Jan.

Summa de casibus poenitentiae pr. at Rome 1603, and later edd. Collected ed. of his works under the auspices of the Facultad de Derecho, Universidad de Barcelona, by J. Rius Serra (Barcelona, 1945 ff.). Raymond's revision of the Dominican Constitutions ed. H. Denifle, O.P., in id.–F. Ehrle, S.J. (edd.), Archiv für Literatur und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, v (1889), pp. 530–64; also ed. R. Creytens, O.P., in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xviii (1948), pp. 5–68, both edd. with introd. AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 404–29, incl. material from the process of canonization. F. Balme, O.P.–C. Paban, O.P.–J. Collomb, O.P. (edd.), Raymundiana; seu Documenta quae pertinent ad S. Raymundi de Pennaforti Vitam et Scripta (Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica 'iv' [vi], fascc. 1 and 2; 1898–1901); J. Rius Serra (ed.), San Raimundo de Penyafort. Diplomaterio: documentos, vida antigua, crónicas, processos antiguos (Opera Omnia, iii; Barcelona, 1954); A. Collell, O.P., 'Raymundiana' in Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, xxx (1957), pp. 63–95, xxxi (1958), pp. 341–66. Modern life by F. Vallis Taberner (Colección pro Ecclesia et Patria, Barcelona, 1936); brief sketch in English by T. M. Schwertner (Milwaukee [1935]). A. Danzas, Études sur les temps primitifs de l'ordre de St. Dominique, Sér. 2, i, Saint Raymond de Pennafort et son époque (1885). [D. A.] Mortier, O.P., Histoire des maitres généraux de l'ordre des Frères Prêcheurs, i (1903), pp. 255–85. S. Kuttner, 'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Summa de casibus poenitentiae des hl. Raymund von Penyafort' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxx. Kanonistische Abteilung, xxxix (1953), pp. 419–34. J. Watt, 'The Papal Monarchy in the Thought of St. Raymond of Peñafort' in Irish Theological Quarterly, xxv (1958), pp. 33–42 and 154–70. S. Kuttner, Repertorium der Kanonistik (1140–1234), i (S.T., lxxi; 1937), pp. 438–52. A. Teetaert, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1806–23, s.v. 'Raymond de Penyafort'; A. Vauchez in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols. 16–24, both with bibl.

RAYMOND OF SEBONDE (d. 1432–6), Spanish philosopher. A native of Barcelona, he became professor at the university of Toulouse, where he taught theology, philosophy, and medicine. His book, 'Liber Naturae sive Creaturarum', in later printed editions Theologia Naturalis, written originally in Spanish, was first published in 1484, and achieved great fame in the 16th cent. through M. de *Montaigne, who translated and defended it (1569). Its Prologue gave offence because it over-emphasized the authority of the 'Book or Law of Nature' at the expense of Scripture and tradition, maintaining that it is possible for human reason to discover the contents of the Christian Revelation in nature alone; and it was put on the *Index in 1595. The book itself, however, was highly esteemed, not only by his contemporaries but also by later authorities such as Cardinal Bona and St. Peter *Canisius, for its able defence of the truth and reasonableness of Catholic doctrine on grounds appealing to those who do not accept revelation.

Raymond's Theologia Naturalis was often repr. in the 15th–17th cents. Best ed. (but without the preface) by J. Sighart, Sulzbach, 1852. J. H. Probst, Le Lullisme de Raymond de Sebonde (Ramon de Sibiude) (Toulouse, 1912); C. de Boer, Montaigne als 'Apologeet' van Raymond Sebond (Mededeelingen der Nederlandsche Akademie van Wetenschappen. Afd. Letterkunde, N.R., dl. iii, No. 12, Amsterdam, 1940). C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), pp. 292–312. K. Schaarschmidt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 415–21, s.v. 'Raimundus Sabieude'.

READER, Lay. See Lay Reader.

READERS. See Lectors.

REAL PRESENCE, The. In (esp. *Anglican) Eucharistic theology an expression used to cover several doctrines emphasizing the actual Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament, as contrasted with others that maintain that the Body and Blood are present only figuratively or symbolically. An early instance of its use is in H. *Latimer, who, as reported in J. *Foxe's 'Book of Martyrs' (1563), held that 'this same presence may be called most fitly a real presence, that is, a presence not feigned, but a true and faithful presence'.

REALISM. (1) Any form of belief which is chary of speculation and rooted in sober fact. In this sense, Christianity claims to be realistic as based not on abstract theorizing or symbolic myths, but on historical events known to have happened at a certain time and concerned with the concrete facts of human experience. Thus L. *Laberthonnière contrasted 'Christian Realism' with 'Greek Idealism'.

(2) The philosophical doctrine of the reality of the external world as against the idealistic view that it is constituted by consciousness. In reaction from the classical formulation of Idealism by I. *Kant and his successors (J. G. *Fichte, F. W. J. *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel), which exercised such a deep influence on speculative theology throughout the 19th cent., in the present cent. there has set in a strong reaction towards Realism. In philosophy the turning-point was G. E. Moore's 'Refutation of Idealism' in Mind, new ser., xii (1903), pp. 433–53.

(3) In a more technical sense the doctrine that abstract concepts ('universals') have a real existence apart from the individuals ('particulars') in which they are embodied. The doctrine was developed in the Middle Ages on the basis of *Plato's metaphysic, largely out of a constantly discussed passage in *Porphyry's 'Isagoge' on the existence of genera and species. It was professed by *Erigena and *Remigius of Auxerre and, in a modified form, by St. *Anselm in opposition to the *Nominalism (q.v.) of *Roscellinus. It was carried further in the 12th cent. by *William of Champeaux, who recognized in the several individuals of the same species an identical reality (eandem rem), modified by *Abelard and, under the influence of *Aristotle, reconstructed by St. *Thomas Aquinas, who, rejecting the view that universals exist apart from the individuals (universalia ante res), upheld a 'moderate realism' (universalia in rebus).

RECAPITULATION (Lat. recapitulatio; Gk. ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, a 'summing up', 'summary'). The term is used in its verbal form in Eph. 1. 10, where God is said to sum up all things in Christ, and from this passage was taken over by the Fathers. The conception of recapitulation was elaborated esp. by St. *Irenaeus, who interpreted it both as the restoration of fallen humanity to communion with God through the obedience of Christ and as the summing-up of the previous revelations of God in past ages in the Incarnation. Besides these two meanings, which are common in patristic literature, there is a third found in St. *Chrysostom, who applies the word to the reunion of both angels and men under Christ as their common head.

RECARED (d. 601), King of the Visigoths. Having been associated with his father, the *Arian Leovigild, in the government of the country (most of Spain) from 573, he succeeded him on the throne in 586. In the next year, probably owing to the influence of St. *Leander, Bp. of Seville, he and his family became Catholics. The step, though followed by several quickly suppressed insurrections on the part of the Arian bishops, helped considerably to pacify the country, in which the Catholic clergy and nobles were more powerful than the Arian Visigoths. The king's action was ratified in 589 by the Third Council of *Toledo, which regulated the religious situation in a number of canons. The remaining years of the king seem to have been peaceful; he is praised by St. *Isidore of Seville for founding many churches and monasteries.

The main sources for his life are St. Isidore's Historia Gothorum and the Chronicle of John of Biclara, both ed. T. *Mommsen in M.G.H., Chronica Minora, ii (1894), pp. 217–20 and 288–90. Life by M. Hernández Villaescusa (Barcelona, 1890). F. Görres, 'Rekared der Katholiker' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xlii (1899), pp. 270–322. M. Torres López in R. Menéndez Pidal (ed.), Historia de España, iii, 'España visigoda' (ed. 2, 1963), pp. 108–12.

RECEPTIONISM. A form of Eucharistic teaching acc. to which, while the bread and wine continue to exist unchanged after consecration, the faithful communicant receives together with them the true Body and Blood of Christ. Such a doctrine was common among Anglican divines in the 17th cent. Those who lean to such teaching have generally shrunk from giving it precise definition. The word itself is apparently not found before 1867.

RECHABITES. A religious order or clan in Israel, founded by Jehonadab, the son of Rechab, who persuaded Jehu to abolish Tyrian Baal worship (2 Kings 10). The order represented a protest against Canaanite luxury and ways of living and a return to the simplicity and even asceticism of the more nomad life. Like the *Nazarites, they made it a rule to abstain from wine, and they were also opposed to agriculture and the cultivation of vineyards. The title has been adopted in modern times by a society of total abstainers.

RECLUSE. A person who lives apart from the world, esp. for the purpose of religious meditation. In a stricter use, the word is applied to those who have made definite vows to live in this way.

RECOGNITIONS, Clementine. See Clementine Literature.

RECOLLECTION. A term used by spiritual writers to denote the concentration of the soul on the presence of God. It involves the renunciation of all avoidable dissipations and its use is habitually recommended to those who wish to lead an interior life. In a more restricted sense the word is applied to a certain stage of prayer, in which the memory, understanding, and will are held to be stilled by Divine action and the soul left in a state of peace in which grace can work without hindrance.

RECOLLECTS. The title of two separate religious orders:

(1) The Franciscan Recollects. A reformed branch of the Franciscan *Observants, started in France at the end of the 16th cent., which spread to Belgium, Germany, Ireland, and the exiled English Friars on the Continent in the course of the 17th cent. In 1897 they were incorporated with the other Observants by *Leo XIII.

(2) The Augustinian Recollects. A reformed branch of the *Augustinian Hermits, started in Spain. Their first house was founded at Talavera in 1589, and other monasteries were soon established in many parts of the country. They were erected into a separate province by brief of *Clement VIII in 1602, and in 1621 formed a separate congregation. The congregation became successful as missionaries, esp. in Peru and the Philippines. In 1912 they were constituted into an independent order ('Ordo Eremitarum Recollectorum S. Augustini') with a prior-general at its head.

(1) L. Spätling in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1156 f., s.v. 'Rekollecten'. See also works cited under Franciscan Order.
(2) Bullarium Ordinis Recollectorum S. Augustini et Diplomatica Officialis, ed. I. Fernandez a S. Corde Iesu, O.R.S.A. (Rome, 1954 ff.). Andrés de San-Nicolas, Historia general de los religios descalzos del orden de los Hermitanos del . . . Padre . . . San Agustín (Madrid, 1644; continued by other members of the Order, making 7 vols. to 1927, publd. Madrid–Barcelona). M. T. Disdier, A.A., in D.H.G.E., v (1931), cols. 581–95, s.v. 'Augustin (Ier Ordre dit de saint-) (Ermites récollets)', with detailed bibl.; G. La Mountain in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 1061 f., s.v. 'Augustinian Recollects'. See also works cited under Augustinian Hermits.

RECORD, The. The first Anglican weekly newspaper, begun on 1 Jan. 1828. It was from the first strongly *Evangelical, among those concerned in its foundation being J. H. *Newman (then an Evangelical). On 1 Jan. 1949 it was amalgamated with the Church of England Newspaper (founded as the Church Family Newspaper, 1894).

RECTOR. In the C of E a rector, as distinguished from a *vicar, is a parish incumbent whose *tithes are not impropriate. A '*lay rector' is a layman receiving rectorial tithes or in whom the rectory is vested. In the Scottish universities the 'Rectors' or 'Lord Rectors' are elected officers; in English universities the title is used of the heads of Exeter and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford. On the Continent the title is customary for the heads of universities or for the presidents of their administrative bodies. The heads of *Jesuit houses are also commonly styled rectors.

RECUSANCY. The term, which was earlier employed in a wider sense, came to be used about 1570 of those Romanists who refused to attend the services of the established Church in England. Until the Pope expressly anathematized *Elizabeth I in the bull '*Regnans in excelsis' (1570), recusancy had been rare, since conservative and reactionary elements in the nation had received no clear guidance regarding their attitude towards the Establishment. Recusancy received a powerful impetus with the arrival of the *Jesuits and other priests from the Continent, esp. during the years around 1580. By Elizabethan and Jacobean statesmen it was considered a dangerous problem, since, unlike *Puritanism, it had tenacious roots throughout the social structure of certain regions of England, notably in the N., where it was for long thought likely to express itself in the form of armed rebellion. Lancashire and Durham, followed by certain regions of Yorkshire and Wales, took the lead in recusancy during the 16th and 17th cents. Derbyshire, Warwickshire, Staffordshire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, and even Hampshire also showed strong recusant parties. That everywhere, except in Lancashire, actual recusants became a small percentage of the total population was largely due to the eroding influence of the penal laws. The penalties imposed by the Acts of *Uniformity of 1549, 1552 and 1559 were heavily reinforced by statutes of 1581 and 1586–7, and further penalties continued to be added until the 18th cent. Actual enforcement waxed and waned under political pressures, but by the 18th cent. judges and juries became increasingly unwilling to exact the full penalties, which included death, banishment and life-imprisonment, though forfeiture of estates and goods, double taxation, monthly fines and a host of civic disabilities remained. The first relief under the law was not given until 1778, when RCs were again allowed to purchase and inherit land, and priests and schoolmasters were freed from persecution. By the *Catholic Relief Act of 1791 the crime of recusancy for not attending the services of the C of E was finally abolished, though many disabilities remained. These were gradually removed during the 19th and 20th cents., and at the present time RCs in England are liable to very few legal restrictions because of their beliefs.

A. O. Meyer, England und die katholische Kirche unter Elisabeth (Bibliothek des kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, vi, Pt. 1, 1911; Eng. tr., 1916); J. H. Pollen, S.J., The English Catholics in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. A Study of their Politics, Civil Life and Government (1920). B. Magee, The English Recusants. A Study of the Post Reformation Catholic Survival and the Operation of the Recusancy Laws (1938). P. Hughes, Rome and the Counter-Reformation in England (1942). E. I. Watkin, Roman Catholicism in England from the Reformation to 1950 (H.U.L., 1957). Mary D. R. Leys, Catholics in England 1559–1829. A Social History (1961). J. Bossy, The English Catholic Community, 1570–1850 (1975). J. C. H. Aveling, The Handle and the Axe. The Catholic Recusants in England from Reformation to Emancipation (1976). Much primary material is publd. by the *Catholic Record Society. The subject is also covered by Recusant History (Bognor Regis, 1951–64; London, 1965 ff.) and by A Newsletter for Students of Recusant History, ed. T. A. [C.] Birrell (9 vols., Nijmegen, 1958–70; from 1972 incorporated in Recusant History). The writings of earlier recusants (1558–1640) are being repr. in a facsimile series entitled English Recusant Literature, ed. D. M. Rogers (Leeds, 1969 ff.).

REDACTION CRITICISM (Germ. Redaktionsgeschichte). The name given by W. Marxsen and others to the investigation of the editorial work done by Biblical authors on earlier material, e.g. the use made of the Marcan material by Matthew and Luke.

N. Perrin, What is Redaction Criticism? (1970).

RED HAT. The flat-crowned broad-brimmed hat, with two clusters of 15 tassels, traditionally distinctive of a *cardinal. Until recently the Pope invested the cardinal with the red hat at the first public *consistory after his appointment, and it was not worn again. After the cardinal's death, it was suspended over his tomb. Although cardinals are now invested with a red biretta, the expression 'red hat' is still often used for the cardinal's office.

RED LETTER DAY. An important feast or saint's day, printed in ecclesiastical calendars in red ink. In the C of E the term is applied to those feasts for which the BCP provides a proper Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, as formerly these feasts were distinguished in the calendar in this way.

RED MASS. Acc. to W. usage, a *votive Mass of the Holy Ghost, so named from the red vestments in which it is celebrated. Such Masses are customarily celebrated with some solemnity at the opening of councils, synods, &c., to invoke the aid and illumination of the Holy Ghost in the deliberations to follow. In England a Red Mass is celebrated at *Westminster Cathedral at the opening of the law term and attended by RC judges.

RED SEA. In the OT the Hebrew phrase rendered 'Red Sea' is usually taken to mean 'Reed' or 'Marsh Sea'; the change in terminology may be traced back to the LXX and Vulgate and no satisfactory explanation has been offered. The exact site of the crossing of the Sea by the Israelites, recorded in Ex. 14 and 15, is disputed. Older scholars held that either the Gulf of Suez or the Gulf of Aqaba was intended; more recently critics have tended to favour a northern route for the Exodus, arguing that the Gulf of Suez then extended further north than it now does, and suggesting that the crossing took place in the region of Rameses, perhaps on a southern extension of the present Lake Menzaleh. The crossing of the Red Sea marked the end of the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt and was subsequently regarded as a turning-point in their destinies (e.g. Pss. 66. 6; 78. 53; 114. 3). In the NT (1 Cor. 10. 2) it is regarded as a type of Christian Baptism. See also Exodus.

G. E. Wright, Biblical Archaeology (ed. 2, 1962), pp. 60–2. N. H. Snaith, יַם־סוּף: The Sea of Reeds: the Red Sea' in Vetus Testamentum, xv (1965), pp. 395–8. See also bibl. to Exodus.

REDEMPTION. The idea of redemption is common to many religions, being based on the desire of man to be delivered from sin, suffering, and death. Christianity claims that in it alone has it become a fact through the Incarnation and the Death of Christ. It is viewed by theologians under the double aspect of deliverance from sin and restoration of man and the world to communion with God. Both these aspects are developed in the NT, esp. in the Pauline Epistles, where the 'redemption (ἀπολύτρωσις) through His blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses' (Eph. 1. 7), and 'the dispensation of the fullness of the times, to sum up (ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι) all things in Christ' (Eph. 1. 10) are set forth as the interrelated effects of the work of the Redeemer. In patristic thought both sides were somewhat differently emphasized, the Greeks stressing more the restoration of man to the Divine life, whereas the Latin Fathers gave primary importance to the expiation of our sins through the sacrificial death of Christ. In St. *Augustine, and later in *Scholastic theology, Redemption was brought into more direct connexion with *Original Sin, which it was held to remove by restoring man to his state of *Original Righteousness, lost by the *Fall of *Adam. From St. *Anselm's Cur Deus Homo onwards, the question of the necessity of the Redemption was widely discussed. Anselm held that, given the Divine plan and its violation by the infinite malice of sin, the justice of God which required adequate satisfaction made redemption by the death of the God-man a necessity. This view was abandoned by the Schoolmen, notably St. *Thomas Aquinas, who taught that, though God might have redeemed the world in many other ways, the manner in which He did so was highly 'congruous', because it showed forth His omnipotence, goodness, and wisdom, and the admirable harmony in His Being between Justice and Mercy. Consequently Redemption is the free gift of God to man, who could not have redeemed himself, because of the supernatural character of the gifts lost by Original Sin. He maintained that, though it was impossible that sin should be abolished as a physical reality, it could be repaired morally by the objective merits of the Redeemer which, applied to the repentant sinner, enabled him to co-operate with grace towards justification and sanctification.

The theologians of the Reformation claimed to return to the teaching of St. Paul. They denied the idea of Redemption as a restoration to Original Righteousness and, consequently, the possibility of human co-operation with grace other than by faith alone, and placed the exclusive emphasis on the forgiveness of sin and justification by imputation of the righteousness of Christ. Through the teaching of J. *Calvin and, later, of C. *Jansenius, the view that Redemption extends only to the predestined was advocated by a number of Protestant and Catholic theologians in the 16th and 17th cents. It was pronounced heretical by *Innocent X in the constitution '*Cum Occasione' (1653). Later, the proposition that Christ died for all the faithful, but for the faithful alone (pro omnibus et solis fidelibus), was also condemned by *Alexander VIII (1690). The universality of Redemption, taught already in the NT (e.g. 1 Jn. 2. 2), was thus safeguarded, without, on the other hand, prejudicing the fact that its actual application does not extend to the damned nor, as *Origen believed, to the fallen angels. See also Atonement.

REDEMPTORISTS. The common name for the members of the 'Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer', founded by St. *Alphonsus Maria di Liguori at Scala, Italy, in 1732. The Congregation was instituted for mission work among the poor both in Europe and among the heathen, and it has steadily refused to engage in purely educational activities. The order received the sanction of *Benedict XIV in 1749, and a community of Redemptorist nuns received similar approval in 1750. Despite frequent persecution at the hands of secular governments, it has continued to flourish to the present time. It was introduced into England in 1843. The Congregation is governed by a 'Rector Major', who holds office for life and resides in Rome.

G. Stebbing, C.SS.R., The Redemptorists (1924); E. Hosp, C.SS.R., Die Kongregation des allerheiligsten Erlösers. Ihr Werden und Wollen (1924); G. Brandhuber, C.SS.R., Die Redemptoristen, 1732–1932 (1932). M. de Meulemeester, C.SS.R., Histoire sommaire de la congrégation du T.S. Rédempteur (1950; Eng. tr., Louvain, 1956). J. B. Byrne, C.SS.R., The Redemptorist Centenaries. 1732, Founding of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer—1832, Establishment in United States (1932). M. de Meulemeester, C.SS.R.–E. Colet, C.SS.R.–C. Henze, C.SS.R., Bibliographie générale des écrivains rédemptoristes (3 vols., 1933–9). Heimbucher, ii (ed. 3; 1934), pp. 345–64 and 667, with bibl. M. de Meulemeester, in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 294–6, s.v. 'Congregazione del S.mo Redemptore'; M. J. Curley, C.SS.R., in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 161–4, s.v.

REFORMATIO LEGUM ECCLESIASTICARUM (Lat., 'the Reform of the Ecclesiastical Laws'), the book which was designed to provide a system of order and discipline for the C of E in place of the medieval *canon law. By an Act of 1549 (3 & 4 Edw. VI, c. 11) the King had been empowered to appoint 32 persons to compile a corpus of ecclesiastical laws for use in the English spiritual courts. The work was actually taken in hand in 1551 by a body of eight persons, and the Book produced was presented to Parliament in Mar. 1553. Through the King's death in the summer, however, it ceased to be possible to proceed with it, and the Book was first printed by J. *Foxe in 1571. In his preface Foxe confidently affirmed that it would have been sanctioned but for Edward VI's death; but this is highly contestable. Its standpoint was virtually *Calvinist. The Book is of importance for its connexions both in content and language with the *Thirty-Nine Articles.

Modern edition by E. *Cardwell (Oxford, 1850).

REFORMATION, The. This somewhat loose term covers an involved series of changes in W. Christendom between the 14th and 17th cents. They may be said to have begun with the attacks of the *Lollards and the *Hussites upon the hierarchical and legalist structure of the Church as a whole. From first to last, however, the Papacy, as most clearly responsible for that structure, attracted the strongest criticism. The English statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire, like the French *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438), represent the effort of the rising monarchies to curtail Papal influence over their national Churches. Though after the dark periods of the 'Babylonish Captivity' at *Avignon and the *Great Schism the Popes had recovered sufficient authority to ride out the storms of the *Conciliar Movement, the final collapse of the Council of *Basle in 1449 left European opinion still dissatisfied with many aspects of the Papal monarchy in the Church. If down to the late 15th and early 16th cents. anti-clericalism and divergence from Catholic doctrine remained spasmodic phenomena, discontent continued to simmer against the worldliness and increasing financial exactions that characterized the Papacy as an Italian power.

Consequently, when M. *Luther protested against the corruption of Rome and the great abuses attending the sale of *indulgences, he was breaking no new controversial ground. Most, indeed, of the Reformation movements, like those of the Renaissance, laid stress, not upon innovation, but upon return to a primitive excellence. Luther's study of St. *Augustine had led him to question the emphasis of late medieval theology upon 'good works'; later his historical reading, based on the work of L. *Valla, raised doubts regarding the validity of Papal claims to supremacy. From these traditionalist origins were derived his attacks upon *Transubstantiation and clerical celibacy as well as his demands for the abolition of Papal power in Germany and for the radical reform of the religious orders. They found pregnant expression in Luther's celebrated treatises of 1520. Four years later, his advocacy of princely authoritarianism during the *Peasants' Revolt helped to ensure the support of his cause by the German princes. The rulers of Saxony, Hesse, Brandenburg, and Brunswick, besides the kings of *Denmark and *Sweden, were won to the reformed beliefs before or shortly after their classic enunciation in the 'Confession of *Augsburg' (1530). These rulers proceeded to regulate the Churches within their territories acc. to Lutheran precept, and the progress of the Lutheran Reformation lay in the hands of the 'godly prince', to whom the plenitude of power was explicitly confided, and in its adoption by a number of the free cities of Germany.

Meanwhile in 1523–4 the Swiss divine H. *Zwingli, motivated at first by studies and beliefs analogous to those of Luther, had captured the support of the civic authorities of Zürich and carried through anti-papal, anti-hierarchic, and anti-monastic reforms in that city. The Zwinglian Movement, far more radical and less scholastic than Lutheranism in its eucharistic and social doctrines, rapidly overran many of the Swiss cantons and most of SW. Germany. It was only the death of Zwingli in warfare against the Catholic cantons in 1531 that was ultimately to transfer the leadership of the Swiss Reformation from Zürich to Geneva.

Here, in 1541, J. *Calvin finally got accepted an elaborately organized theocracy. In his hands, reforming opinion assumed a more explicitly doctrinal and revolutionary tone. Emphasis upon predestination, it is true, may be traced in the thought of J. Wycliffe, while Luther himself denied to man freedom or responsibility, as traditionally understood. Yet a coherent theological system based upon the doctrines of particular election and redemption first appeared in Calvin's Institutio Christianae Religionis (1536). This system, with its peculiar appeal to many rising elements in European society, henceforth proved for several generations the driving force of the Reformation, esp. in W. Germany, France, the Netherlands, and Scotland. Like that of Lutheranism, but upon a wider stage, the progress of the Calvinist Reformation became inextricably involved with a series of political struggles, notably the Wars of Religion in France, which ultimately adjusted the position of the *Huguenots, the national revolt which freed the northern Netherlands from Spain, and the *Thirty Years War, which ensured the apotheosis of princely control and incidentally the preservation of N. German Lutheranism under the aegis of Sweden. In Scotland, too, the Calvinist cause, led by J. *Knox and the Lords of the Congregation, triumphed upon a wave of nationalist reaction against French control, parallel to that contemporary English reaction against Spain which contributed so powerfully to the success of the Elizabethan settlement.

Meanwhile, however, the English Reformation had remained an insular process responsive to peculiar political and social forces. *Henry VIII, a convinced traditionalist in both doctrine and Church government, accomplished the overthrow of Papal Supremacy and the *Dissolution of the Monasteries largely in pursuance of a long-standing monarchical policy of extending the sovereignty of the central government into all spheres of the national society. Despite, however, his repression of reforming Continental doctrines, he found himself unable to check the undermining of scholastic theology by humanist Biblical studies. Under *Somerset and T. *Cranmer, the first English Prayer Book of 1549 sketched out that via media in religion which was recaptured in 1558–9 by the Elizabethan government after a period of antithetical extremes under Northumberland and *Mary. Upon this *Erastian basis, which from the first stood firm against the impact of extremist Calvinism upon English religious life, the national Church developed in course of time spiritual and cultural traditions more brilliant than those of the analogous Erastian Churches of Germany. The Calvinist Reformation in England, a radical movement within the national Church, finally allied itself with political forces to form the Puritan Revolution (1640–60). Its force, diminished by sectarian subdivision and by political reaction, proved insufficient to sweep away the established Church, which was restored together with the monarchy in 1660 and was then grounded in public opinion. In England, as on the Continent, where the reforming movements were increasingly checked and balanced by the *Counter-Reformation, a considerable degree of stabilization had been attained by the last years of the 17th century.

Useful primary material collected and translated into English in B. J. Kidd (ed.), Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation (1911); H. J. Hillerbrand (ed.), The Reformation in its own words (1964); id. (ed.), The Protestant Reformation (1968). For the history of the Reformation in England much basic material is preserved in the works of J. *Foxe, J. *Strype, and G. *Burnet (qq.v.). A. G. Dickens–Dorothy Carr (edd.), The Reformation in England to the Accession of Elizabeth I (Documents of Modern History, 1967). L. von *Ranke, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (6 vols., 1839–47; Eng. tr. of vols. i–iii, 1845–7). C. *Beard, The Reformation of the Sixteenth Century in Relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge (Hibbert Lectures, 1883; 1883). J. Janssen, Geschichte des deutschen Volkes seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (8 vols., 1878–94; Eng. tr., 16 vols., 1896–1910, + index, 1925). P. Imbart de La Tour, Les Origines de la réforme (4 vols., 1905–1935; new ed. of vol. ii, with revised bibl., by Yvonne Lanhers, 1946). T. M. *Lindsay, A History of the Reformation (2 vols., 1906–7). J. P. Whitney, The Reformation. Being an Outline of the History of the Church from A.D. 1503 to A.D. 1648 (1907; new ed. entitled 'The History of the Reformation', C.H.S., 1940). H. Hermelink, Reformation und Gegenreformation (Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte für Studierende, iii; 1911). A. Plummer, The Continental Reformation in Germany, France and Switzerland, from the Birth of Luther to the Death of Calvin (1912). Preserved Smith, The Age of the Reformation [1921]. N. Sykes, The Crisis of the Reformation (1938). J. Mackinnon, The Origins of the Reformation (1939). J. Lortz, Die Reformation in Deutschland (2 vols., 1939–40; Eng. tr., with new bibl., 1968). R. H. Bainton, The Reformation of the Sixteenth Century (Kansas, 1952; London, 1953). G. R. Elton (ed.), The Reformation 1520–1559 (New Cambridge Modern History, ii; 1958). H. Holborn, A History of Modern Germany [i]. The Reformation (New York, 1959). H. Bornkamm, Das Jahrhundert der Reformation. Gestalten und Kräfte (Göttingen, 1961). E. G. Léonard, Histoire générale du protestantisme, i. La Réformation (1961; Eng. tr., with additional bibl., 1965). O. Chadwick, The Reformation (Pelican History of the Church, iii; 1964). J. Delumeau, Naissance et affirmation de la Réforme (1965). A. G. Dickens, Reformation and Society in Sixteenth-Century Europe (1966). F. Lau–E. Bizer, A History of the Reformation in Germany to 1555 (Eng. tr. of 2 separate works, 1969). H. J. Hillerbrand, Christendom Divided. The Protestant Reformation (1971). F. M. Powicke, The Reformation in England (Oxford, 1941). P. Hughes, The Reformation in England (3 vols., 1950–4). T. M. Parker, The English Reformation to 1558 (1950; ed. 2, 1966). G. H. George–Katherine George, The Protestant Mind of the English Reformation 1570–1640 (Princeton, 1961). W. A. Clebsch, England's Earliest Protestants 1520–1535 (1964). A. G. Dickens, The English Reformation (1964). Also extensive bibl. to date in C.M.H., ii, 'The Reformation' (1903); more recent material in J. Roach, A Bibliography of Modern History (Cambridge, 1937), pp. 37–46 and 48 f. For further bibl. on the Continental Reformation see works cited in Schottenloher. See also bibl. to Calvinism and Lutheranism.

REFORMED CHURCHES. The term is sometimes taken to include all the Protestant Churches which have accepted the principles of the *Reformation, but in a narrower and more accurate sense it is used specifically of the *Calvinist bodies, as contrasted esp. with the *Lutherans. This restriction is almost universal, with the corresponding expressions in French (Églises réformées) and German (reformierte Kirchen). The designation of the Calvinistic Churches as 'ecclesiae reformatae' was already general before the end of the 16th century.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, The. The small body of Scottish Presbyterians, popularly known as *Cameronians, who declined to accept the settlement of 1690 which established the Church of Scotland. The Reformed Presbytery was formed in 1743. The majority joined the *Free Church of Scotland in 1876, but a remnant has continued to exist as a separate body. They are represented in Northern Ireland, Canada and the U.S.A. J. G. *Paton, the missionary to the New Hebrides, was a member of this Church.

M. Hutchison, The Reformed Presbyterian Church in Scotland. Its Origin and History 1680–1876 (Paisley, 1893). W. J. Couper, The Reformed Presbyterian Church in Scotland. Its Congregations, Ministers and Students (Edinburgh, 1925).

REFRESHMENT SUNDAY. A name for the Fourth Sunday in Lent. The epithet has been explained as referring either to the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand which was until 1969 in the RC Church, and in the BCP is, the Gospel for the Day (Jn. 6. 1–14) or to the relaxation of Lenten discipline allowed on this day (e.g. the consumption of simnel-cakes). It is also known as *Laetare Sunday and *Mothering Sunday.

REFUGE, Cities of. See Cities of Refuge.

REGALE (Lat. regale, neut. of regalis, 'pertaining to the king'). In legal language esp., the right to the revenues of vacant bishoprics and abbeys and to presentation to their dependent benefices claimed by the kings of Europe during the Middle Ages. It was usually held to derive from their position as feudal lords, and taken as analogous to that enjoyed during the minority of a lay tenant. The claim, consistently denied by the Popes, became closely connected with the *Investiture Controversy. The earliest known trace of it is met with in *France towards the end of the Carolingian period (10th cent.). In England it was successfully asserted by King William II (1087–1100) on the death of *Lanfranc (1089), and later became one of the causes of rejection of the Constitutions of *Clarendon by *Alexander III. In 1176 King Henry II (1154–89) promised to limit the exercise of the right to one year, but it continued, with few exemptions, until the *Reformation. It is still enjoyed by the Crown over the temporalities of vacant sees (though the revenues are now restored untouched when the newly elected Bishop does homage). In Germany the right was claimed and exercised by Henry V (1106–25) and his immediate successors, but practically ceased after the death of *Frederick II (1250). In France, where it was claimed not only by the king but also by certain of the more important territorial lords, it was a continual source of friction between the Papacy and the temporal power from the time of St. *Bernard to the end of the 19th century.

The term 'Regale' has also, since the 18th cent., been more properly used of the privileges and prerogatives of the Sovereign in general.

Margaret Howell, Regalian Right in Medieval England (1962), with reff. G. J. Campbell, S.J., 'Temporal and Spiritual Regalia during the Reigns of St. Louis and Philip III' in Traditio, xx (1964), pp. 351–83. J. Gaudemet in D.D.C., vii (1965), cols. 493–532, s.v., with full bibl. to date.

REGENERATION. The spiritual rebirth (Gk. παλιγγενεσία), which, acc. to traditional theology, is effected in the soul by Christian Baptism (cf. Tit. 3. 5). See Baptism.

REGENSBURG, Conference of. See Ratisbon, Conference of.

REGIMINI MILITANTIS ECCLESIAE. The bull issued by *Paul III on 27 September 1540, instituting the *Jesuit Order. After listing the members of the proposed Society and acknowledging their work at Rome, at their request it established their organization and rule, under the name of the Society of Jesus, for the care of souls in life and doctrine, for the preaching of the faith and for the ministry of the word, esp. through education and the confessional. They were to have one Superior, who would consult the whole Society on matters of importance, were to obey the Pope implicitly wherever he might send them, swear obedience to the rule and the Superior, and have no permanent property, except colleges, schools and other things necessary for education. Their numbers were limited to sixty. The Society was permitted to draw up constitutions conformable to the purpose of the Society, and it was taken under special papal protection. The terms of the bull implied that much of the work of the Society would be directed towards the conversion of pagans and heretics.

The full text is pr. in Mirbt, pp. 272–6 (No. 430), with reff. See also works cited under Jesuits.

REGINA COELI (Lat., 'Queen of Heaven'). The Eastertide anthem to the Blessed Virgin, so named from its opening words. In the Roman *Breviary its recitation after *Compline is prescribed from *Easter Day to *Whitsunday. It also takes the place of the *Angelus in Eastertide. Its authorship is unknown, but it probably dates from the 12th century.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Regina Cœli' in The Month, cxxi (1913), pp. 384–8, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), pp. 146–51, with reff.

REGINALD OF PIPERNO (c. 1230–90), *Dominican friar. Having been chosen by St. *Thomas Aquinas as his confessor at Rome in 1259, he became his inseparable companion. He collected all the saint's writings and took down several of his lectures, among them the Commentary on St. John and part of that on the Pauline Epistles. He also compiled the Supplement to the Third Part of the 'Summa' after St. Thomas's death.

Quétif–Échard, i, p. 382. M. *Grabmann, Die Werke des hl. Thomas von Aquin (ed. 3, B.G.P.M., xxii, Hftt. 1/2; 1949), esp. pp. 298–301; A. Dondaine, Secrétaires de saint Thomas (Rome, 1956), esp. pp. 198–202.

REGIONARIUS. A name in use at Rome in the earlier Middle Ages for members of the clergy who filled offices dependent on the arrangement of the city into seven ecclesiastical 'regions' (regiones), and who were thus distinguished both from the 'Papal' and the 'titular' clergy. See Title.

REGISTERS, Episcopal. Many English Episcopal Registers have been printed in the publications of the *Canterbury and York Society (q.v.) and elsewhere. See the bibliographies to the separate dioceses and to individual bishops.

REGIUM DONUM (Lat., 'Royal Gift'). The grant from public funds formerly made to the ministers of certain English *Nonconforming bodies. It originated out of sums which *Charles II ordered to be paid to *Presbyterian ministers after the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1672; but the practice did not become established in England till 1723, in which year a fresh precedent was created by a sum of £500 granted to E. *Calamy by George I. By 1727 all the '*Three Denominations' (Presbyterians, *Baptists, *Congregationalists) were enjoying it, and it continued until 1851. In *Ireland a regium donum to Presbyterian ministers was paid almost continuously from 1690 until the disestablishment of the Irish Church in 1869.

R. W. *Dale, History of English Congregationalism (ed. by A. W. W. Dale, 1907), pp. 524–7.

REGIUM PLACET. See Exequatur.

REGNANS IN EXCELSIS. The *bull of excommunication published by *Pius V on 25 Feb. 1570, against Queen *Elizabeth I. It was issued after a formal trial of the Queen at Rome, whither a number of English exiles had been summoned to testify to her heretical proceedings. The bull declares Elizabeth a usurper as well as a heretic, absolves her subjects of their allegiance, and orders them to disobey her laws. It thus placed the unfortunate English RCs between conflicting loyalties and evoked as a counterblast the Elizabethan penal laws.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, vii (Naples, 1882), p. 810 f.; operative clauses repr. in A. Mirbt, No. 491, p. 348 f., with reff. See also bibl. s.v. Elizabeth I.

REGULA MAGISTRI. An anonymous monastic Rule written by 'the Master' in Italy SE. of Rome c. 500–25. It appears c. 817 in the Codex Regularum of St. *Benedict of Aniane. Being in part verbally identical with the prologue and chapters 1–7 of the Rule of St. *Benedict, it was thought to be later than this until A. Génestout, O.S.B., in 1940 declared St. Benedict to be the borrower. This assertion opened a lively and widespread debate which continued for twenty years; at present a majority of scholars give priority to the Regula Magistri. While textual and palaeographical evidence is inconclusive, liturgy and observance suggests the priority of the Regula Magistri, while vocabulary and grammar seem decisive in favour of separate authorship (i.e. the Regula Magistri is not a first recension of the Rule of St. Benedict), though possibly the Regula Magistri may stand between two redactions of the Rule of St. Benedict. The monastery of the Master, though similar to that of St. Benedict, is smaller and simpler, with many homely details. The Regula Magistri is diffuse and disorderly; but if the prologue and chapters on the abbot, etc., were borrowed by St. Benedict from the Master, the latter was a man of deep spiritual wisdom.

Diplomatic ed. by H. Vanderhoven–F. Masai–P. B. Corbett (Publications de Scriptorium, iii; Brussels–Paris, 1953); text also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by A. de Vogüé, O.S.B., and others (S.C., cv–cvii; 1964–5). M. J. Cappuyns, O.S.B., Lexique de la Regula Magistri (Instrumenta Patristica, vi; 1964). A. Génestout, O.S.B., 'La Règle du Maître et la Règle de S. Benoît' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xxi (1940), pp. 51–122. The literature of the subsequent controversy is considerable, mainly scattered in periodicals. B. Steidle, O.S.B. (ed.), Regula Magistri, Regula S. Benedicti. Studia Monastica (Studia Anselmiana, xliv; 1959), with extensive bibl. M. D. Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises [1963], pp. 135–95. See also works cited s.v. Benedict, Rule of St., esp. introd. to ed. of R. Hanslik.

REGULAR (from Lat. regula, 'rule'). General term for those members of the clergy who are bound by the vows of religion and live in community, following a rule. They are to be distinguished from the seculars, i.e. priests living in the world. In a narrower sense the expression is restricted to religious who have taken solemn *vows.

REGULAR CANONS. See Canons Regular.

REGULAR CLERKS. See Clerks Regular.

REGULARIS CONCORDIA. The code of monastic observance in England, drawn up and approved by the Synod of *Winchester (c. 970). Acc. to *Aelfric, it would appear that the compilation was the work of St. *Ethelwold, though it was very prob. inspired by St. *Dunstan, to whom it was long attributed. Its provisions follow the *Benedictine tradition of *Benedict of Aniane, modified by the *Cluniac reforms and greatly influenced by the customaries of *Fleury, Ghent, and elsewhere. Details are given of the liturgical functions of the day and year and the duties attached to various monastic offices. The important position accorded to the sovereigns as patrons of the monastic life, e.g. the intercession for the King and Queen after all parts of the Office, except *Prime, is peculiar to England. Other English traditions were the allowance of a fire in winter and processions through the streets; notable also is the encouragement given to daily Communion.

Text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxvii, 475–502. Crit. edd. by W. S. Logeman 'De Consuetudine Monachorum', in Anglia, Neue Folge I (1891), pp. 365–448 (glossary, pp. 448–54), and by T. Symons, O.S.B. ('Medieval Classics', 1953).

REICHENAU (Lat. Augia dives). A small island in the western arm of Lake Constance famous in the earlier Middle Ages for its Benedictine monastery, founded by St. *Pirminius in 724. It was an important centre of culture when the neighbouring St. *Gall was still insignificant; in the 9th cent. it numbered among its members *Walafrid Strabo and Hatto, Abp. of Mainz. Its collection of MSS. (many of which have been at Karlsruhe since 1805) was already well established by the early part of the 9th cent. The churches still survive and contain interesting remains.

Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte der Abtei Reichenau herausg. von der Badischen historischen Kommission (2 vols., Heidelberg, 1890–3). J. Dieterich, Die Geschichtsquellen des Klosters Reichenau bis zur Mitte des elften Jahrhunderts (1897). K. Beyerle (ed.), Die Kultur der Abtei Reichenau. Erinnerungsschrift zur zwölfhundertsten Wiederkehr des Gründungsjahres des Inselklosters, 724–1924 (2 vols., 1925). A. Holder, Die Reichenauer Handschriften beschrieben und erlaeutert (Die Handschriften der Grossherzoglich Badischen Hof- und Landesbibliothek in Karlsruhe, v–vii; 1906–18). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2427–30, s.v., with detailed bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2197–2213, s.v., with reff.; E. Josi in E.C., x (1953), cols. 665–8, s.v.

REICHSBISCHOF. The title adopted in May 1933 at the suggestion of a Committee of the German Evangelical Church Federation for the office of head of a united German Evangelical Church, incorporating all the provincial Churches. Its first holder was Friedrich von Bodelschwingh. When the state appointed a Commissar for Prussia, who dismissed many pastors, Bodelschwingh resigned and was succeeded by the *German Christian, Ludwig *Müller.

REIMARUS, HERMANN SAMUEL (1694–1768), *Deist and Biblical critic. A native of Hamburg, he joined the class of J. A. *Fabricius, whose son-in-law he was to become, and later studied theology, classical philology and philosophy at Jena. For a time he was Privatdozent at *Wittenberg and rector of the Hochschule at Wismar; and from 1727 until his death Prof. of Hebrew and Oriental languages at Hamburg. His light duties enabled him to pursue independent studies in many fields, and between 1744 and 1767 he composed the treatise from which G. E. Lessing published the notorious Wolfenbüttel Fragments (q.v.) in 1774–8. The complete work (which Reimarus kept back from publication during his lifetime) bore in the MS. the title Apologie oder Schutzschrift für die vernünftigen Verehrer Gottes. It unreservedly rejected miracles and revelation and sought to convict the Biblical writers of conscious fraud, innumerable contradictions, and fanaticism. The appearance of the fragments produced a sensation in Germany. Further portions were issued by C. A. E. Schmidt (a pseudonym) in 1787 and W. Klose in 1850–2, while D. F. *Strauss in his book on Reimarus gave an analysis of the complete work. Reimarus himself published two writings in defence of *Natural Religion on the principles of C. *Wolff, which became very popular, viz. Abhandlungen von den vornehmsten Wahrheiten der natürlichen Religion (1754) and Betrachtungen über die Kunsttriebe der Thiere (1762), as well as a good edition of Dio Cassius (2 vols., 1750–2).

Eng. tr. of two extracts from his work, 'On the Resurrection' and 'On the Intention of Jesus', and of part of Strauss's work, ed., with introduction, by C. H. Talbert, Reimarus: Fragments (1971). D. F. Strauss, Hermann Samuel Reimarus und seine Schutzschrift für die vernünftigen Verehrer Gottes (1862). A. C. Lundsteen, Hermann Samuel Reimarus und die Anfänge der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (Copenhagen, 1939), with bibl. A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (ed. 2, 1913), pp. 13–26. H. Hohlwein in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), col. 937 f., with bibl.

REIMS. Acc. to tradition, the episcopal see in the old capital of the Remi in Gaul was founded in the second half of the 3rd cent. by St. Sixtus, who was succeeded by St. Sinicius. The first bishop for whom there is historical evidence was Imbetausius (or Bethausius), who took part in the Council of *Arles in 314. The power of the see increased greatly under St. *Remigius (d. c. 533; q.v.), who baptized *Clovis in 496 and evangelized the surrounding districts, and under the famous *Hincmar (d. 882). From the middle of the 10th cent. the Archbishops were also counts of Reims whose right to crown the French kings was recognized by Pope *Sylvester II in 999 and confirmed as their exclusive privilege by *Alexander III in 1179. One of the most famous consecrations was that of Charles VII in the presence of St. *Joan of Arc in 1429. By the *Concordat of 1801 the Abpric. of Reims was abolished and its territories divided between the dioceses of Meaux and of Metz, but it was restored in 1821.

The cathedral, one of the finest examples of French Gothic, was begun in 1211 and completed in the 14th cent. In 1481 a fire destroyed the roof and spires, and during the First World War (1914–18) the famous western façade with its three portals richly decorated with statues suffered severely. Among the badly damaged parts were the beautiful rose window above the central portal, the statue of Christ (the 'beau Dieu'), and that of the smiling angel. The cathedral was restored after the war and reopened in 1927. It suffered further damage in the Second World War. Its rich treasury contains many famous relics, e.g. the chalice of St. Remigius and the remains of the Sainte Ampoule (see Ampulla). The tomb of St. Remigius in the former Benedictine abbey of St. Remi is a popular place of pilgrimage.

Flodoard (canon of Reims; d. 966), Historia Remensis Ecclesiae (ed. G. Colvener, Douai, 1617; ed. and cont. by G. Marlot, O.S.B., 2 vols., Lille–Reims, 1666–79). G. Marlot, O.S.B. (d. 1667), Histoire de la ville, cité et université de Reims (ed. J. Lacourt, 4 vols., Reims, 1843–6). G. Boussinesq–G. Laurent, Histoire de Reims depuis les origines jusqu'à nos jours (2 vols. in 3 parts, 1933). Gallia Christiana*, ix (Paris, ed. 1751), pp. 1–322. L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, iii (1915), pp. 76–88. The many architectural studies of the Cathedral include those of C. Cerf (2 vols., Reims, 1861), L. Demaison (Petites Monographies des grands Édifices, [1910]), P. Vitry (9 fascc., Paris, 1915–20; mainly plates), L. Bréhier (Paris, 1916), and H. Reinhardt (ib., 1963), with bibl. M. Hollande, Trésors de Reims (Reims [1961]). G. Goyau in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 725–30, s.v.

REIMS NEW TESTAMENT. See Douai-Reims Bible.

REINCARNATION. See Metempsychosis.

REINKENS, JOSEPH HUBERT (1821–96), *Old Catholic bishop. In 1850 he became professor of Church history at Breslau, where he published some monographs on *patristics. At the First *Vatican Council he was opposed to the definition of Papal Infallibility, and in 1871 joined J. J. I. von *Döllinger in the *Nuremberg Declaration. After excommunication from the RC Church, Reinkens was elected the first bishop of the German Old Catholics at Cologne in 1873, and consecrated by Bp. Hermann Heykamp of Deventer. For the rest of his life he devoted himself to the Old Catholic cause by learned writing and in other ways. In 1874 and 1875 he took a prominent part in the *Bonn Reunion Conferences and in 1876 consecrated Edward Herzog the first Swiss Old Catholic bishop.

His Life was written by his nephew, J. M. Reinkens (Gotha, 1906).

REITZENSTEIN, RICHARD (1861–1931), classical philologist and historian of religions. From 1889 onward he held professorships at several German universities, his final appointment being to Göttingen in 1914. His earlier work was chiefly philological, but later he applied the results of his philological studies to the religious and philosophical movements of the early cents. A.D. and their influence on the development of Christianity. In Poimandres (1904) he tried to prove that NT phraseology and ideas are largely derived from *Hermetic sources and that the Christian Churches were modelled on Hermetic communities, while in Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen (1910; ed. 3, 1927) and other later writings he sought to establish the direct dependence of early Christianity on Hellenistic, *Mandaean, and Iranian ideas. Similar methods were applied to the study of Christian monasticism in Historia Monachorum und Historia Lausiaca (1916). Though his brilliant and ingenious theories did not win much acceptance, they brought together much new material for the study of Christianity in relation to its primitive environment.

E. Fraenkel, H. Fränkel, M. Pohlenz, E. Reitzenstein, R. Reitzenstein, E. *Schwartz and J. Stroux, Festschrift Richard Reitzenstein zum 2. April 1931 dargebracht (1931), with list of his works by R. Reitzenstein, pp. 160–8.

RELICS. In Christian usage the word is applied to the material remains of a saint after his death, as well as to sacred objects which have been in contact with his body. The veneration of relics is found in many religions, e.g. popular Buddhism, and is based on the natural instinct of men to treat with reverence what is left of the dead they loved. Traces of it may be found in the OT miracles worked through the mantle of *Elijah (2 Kgs. 2. 14) and the bones of *Elisha (2 Kgs. 13. 21), and, in the NT, in the healing power of handkerchiefs that had been in touch with St. *Paul's body (Acts 19. 12). In post-NT times the martyrs' bodies were venerated from an early date, the first certain evidence occurring in the 'Martyrium Polycarpi' (c. 156–7), where the relics of St. *Polycarp are described as 'more valuable than precious stones and finer than refined gold' (ch. 18), to be carefully collected and honoured by a memorial service for the saint at the place where they were laid.

The cult of relics spread quickly both in the E. and in the W. In Rome it was bound up with the *catacombs, where prayer services were held and, from the 4th cent., the Eucharist celebrated over the tombs of the martyrs. The danger of exaggerated worship, caused by the great influx of pagans into the Church after the age of persecution, led *Vigilantius to oppose the cult. Against him St. *Jerome enunciated the principle, already foreshadowed in the 'Martyrium Polycarpi', that the relics of the martyrs are honoured for the sake of Him whose martyrs they are. St. *Augustine added the reason that the bodies served the saints while they lived as organs of the Holy Spirit, and that also the objects they used should be dear to Christians from motives of filial piety. *Gennadius held that they should be honoured as the members of Christ. At the same time the increasing demand for relics led, in the E., to the translating and even dismembering of the bodies, a practice strictly forbidden by the Roman civil law and not introduced into the W. till the 7th and 8th cents. Under the influence of the *Iconoclastic Controversy, the Second Council of *Nicaea (787) anathematized those who despised holy relics and laid down that no church should be consecrated without them. The veneration of relics was approved for the E. Church by the Council of *Constantinople in 1084, though owing to the scarcity of canonizations and the great role played by the *icons it has never held the same place there as in the W. In the W., on the other hand, the cult increased enormously, esp. during the *Crusades, when quantities of relics, often spurious, were brought to Europe from the Holy Land. They were kept in magnificent *reliquaries, carried in procession, and often gave rise to superstitious practices. After the end of the persecutions relics were placed under altar stones and the kissing of the mensa at the beginning of Mass came to be interpreted as a salutation of the relics.

The theological foundation of the cult of relics was worked out by the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas, on the principles laid down by St. Jerome and St. Augustine. Stress was laid on the special dignity of the bodies of the saints as temples of the Holy Ghost destined to a glorious resurrection, and the sanction given by the Godhead in making them the occasion of many miracles. In the 16th cent. the doctrine was confirmed by the Council of *Trent against the Reformers. Post-Tridentine theologians have differed as to whether they are to be honoured with the same cult of '*dulia' as the saints or with an inferior one. Acc. to canon law (CIC, 1281–9) no relics may be venerated without a written authentication by a cardinal or the local ordinary; and the sale of genuine relics as well as the fabrication or distribution of false ones is punished by excommunication. Among the most famous relics are those of Santiago de *Compostela, the Holy House of *Loreto, and the *Holy Coat of Trier. A feast of Holy Relics used to be observed in many English RC dioceses on 5 Nov.

See also Martyrium.

S. Beissel, S.J., Die Verehrung der Heiligen und ihre Reliquien in Deutschland (Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, Ergänzungshefte, xlvii and liv; 1890–2). H. Siebert, Beiträge zur vorreformatorischen Heiligen- und Reliquienverehrung (1907). U. Mioni, Il culto delle reliquie nella chiesa cattolica (1908). F. Pfister, Der Reliquienkult im Altertum (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, v; 2 vols., 1909–12). B. Lefeuvre, Courte Histoire des reliques (1932). H. Fichtenau, 'Zum Reliquienwesen im früheren Mittelalter' in Mitteilungen des Instituts für österreichische Geschichtsforschung, lx (1952), pp. 60–89. B. Kötting, Der frühchristliche Reliquienkult und die Bestattung im Kirchengebäude (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, Geisteswissenschaften, cxxiii; 1965), with summary in English, p. 38 f. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 734–8, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2294–359, s.v. 'Reliques et reliquaires'; E. Josi–F. Antonelli, O.F.M.–P. Palazzini in E.C., x (1953), cols. 749–60, s.v. 'Reliquie'; F. Chiovaro in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 234–40, s.v. See also works cited under Reliquary.

RELIEF ACTS. See Catholic Relief Acts.

RELIGIONSGESCHICHTLICHE SCHULE. The 'History of Religion School', an influential group of German Biblical scholars between 1880 and 1920 who advocated extensive use of data from the comparative study of religions in the interpretation of Christianity. In contrast to A. *Ritschl, who interpreted the NT in the light of modern doctrinal convictions and largely ignored its historical antecedents, this School reduced dogmatic considerations to a minimum. Further, religious documents must be understood not as isolated expressions of their authors' thoughts and aspirations, but as products of a long and often complex development of the tribe or community. In its philosophy the School was influenced by G. W. F. *Hegel and the concept of evolution, in its historical methods also by L. von *Ranke and T. *Mommsen.

At first the School confined itself to tracing historical developments inside Judaism and Christianity, but it soon came to search for parallels in Egyptian, Babylonian, and various Hellenistic religious systems. Thus H. *Gunkel, H. Gressmann (1877–1927), and W. *Bousset claimed that many Biblical passages were based on the ancient myths not only of the Hebrews but also of, e.g., Babylon and Egypt. Bousset and J. *Weiss maintained that the eschatological ideas underlying the terms '*Messiah' and '*Kingdom of God' were largely of non-Jewish origin, while Bousset also claimed to have found extrabiblical antecedents for the term 'Lord'. R. *Reitzenstein, whose imagination admittedly far outran his critical sense, advanced similar claims for such terms as 'Man from Heaven', 'Holy Spirit', and 'Saviour', and he, A. Eichhorn (1856–1926), and W. Heitmüller (1869–1925) upheld the relevance of Gentile 'parallels' for the *Eucharist and *Baptism. Another prominent member of the school was H. *Windisch.

O. Eissfeldt in R.G.G. (ed. 2), iv (1930), cols. 1898–1905, s.v., with useful bibl.

RELIGIOUS (Lat. religiosus). Technical term for a member of a religious order or congregation. In canon law (CIC, can. 487) the religious status is defined as a stable mode of living in community in which the faithful bind themselves by vow to observe, in addition to the precepts, the evangelical *counsels of obedience, chastity, and poverty.

RELIGIOUS DRAMA. See Drama.

RELIGIOUS ORDERS IN ANGLICANISM. The revival of religious orders in the Anglican Communion was one of the results of the *Oxford Movement. In 1839 E. B. *Pusey wrote to J. *Keble that he and J. H. *Newman had independently been led to recognize the desirability of some 'Sœurs de Charité' in the Anglican Church and on Trinity Sunday 1841 he received the vows of Marian Rebecca Hughes, who in 1849 became the first Superior of the Convent of the Holy and Undivided Trinity at Oxford. In 1845 he founded the first community at Park Village, Regent's Park, which was later merged in the Society of the Holy Trinity, founded at Devonport by Priscilla Lydia *Sellon in 1848 and now at Ascot. After this, communities followed in rapid succession. Among the most famous are the Community of St. Mary the Virgin, founded in 1848 with the help of W. J. *Butler, vicar of Wantage; the Community of St. John the Baptist, founded in 1852 at Clewer by T. T. *Carter, with Harriet Monsell as first superior; the Community of All Saints, founded in 1851 by W. Upton Richards, vicar of All Saints, Margaret Street, London; and the Community of St. Margaret, founded in 1855 at East Grinstead by J. M. *Neale. All these were 'active' or 'mixed' communities, combining the monastic life (with its centre in the daily recitation of the Breviary Offices) with a life of service, and they were among the pioneers in the care for the poor in the slums of great cities which was one of the fruits of the Oxford Movement. It was not until 1907 that, with the foundation of the first enclosed community, the 'Sisters of the Love of God', at Fairacres, Oxford, the 'contemplative' life was revived. In the previous year, however, the Sisters of the Community of the Holy Comforter, founded at Edmonton, London, in 1891, decided to give up active work and adopt the rule of St. *Benedict. After 10 years at Baltonsborough, Somerset, they moved to Malling Abbey, Kent, which had been vested in the English Abbey Restoration Fund before the secession to Rome of its donor.

Communities for men have developed more slowly. J. H. Newman, after he had moved to Littlemore in 1842, lived a community life with some companions and on occasion referred to his establishment as a μονή, but there were no vows. The first religious order of men was the *Society of St. John the Evangelist, founded in 1865 at Cowley by R. M. *Benson. The *Community of the Resurrection, founded in 1892 by C. *Gore, while principal of Pusey House, Oxford, has been, since 1898, established at Mirfield, and the Society of the Sacred Mission, founded by H. H. Kelly in 1891, went to Kelham in 1903; one of the chief works of both of these has been the training of ordinands. The English Order of St. Benedict at *Nashdom Abbey sprang from the Benedictine community at *Caldey. The period immediately after the First World War saw the establishment of an English *Franciscan Order (q.v.). In 1938 R. C. S. Gofton-Salmond retired to a woodland property near Crawley, Sussex, where the Community of the Servants of the Will of God now follow a contemplative vocation of a semi-eremitical type. In recent years Anglican communities have been founded following the inspiration of the *Cistercian reform and of Charles *de Foucauld.

From England this revived religious life has spread over much of the Anglican Communion. Many of the English orders have branch houses in other countries and new communities have grown up in America, Africa, India, and Australasia.

The early communities, though for the most part established in dioceses where the bishop was sympathetic, had no recognized place in the life of the Church and had to face much suspicion and at times active hostility. Since 1861, when the movement was first discussed in *Canterbury Convocation, their contribution to the life of the Church has been increasingly recognized. Following the recommendation made in a report to the *Lambeth Conference of 1930, an 'Advisory Council on the Relation of the Bishops and Religious Communities' was established for Canterbury and York, and it is now possible for communities to receive formal recognition. In 1949 the American (Episcopal Church) Advisory Council on the Religious Life was formed, to be followed by the Advisory Council of Religious Communities for Australasia and the Pacific in 1968.

A Directory of the Religious Life (1943) and Guide to the Religious Communities of the Anglican Communion (1951) [both] issued by the Advisory Council on Religious Communities under the Chairmanship of the Bishop of Oxford [K. E. *Kirk]. A. T. Cameron (ed.), Directory of Religious Communities of Men and Women and of Deaconess Communities and Institutions in the Anglican Communion (1920; ed. 2, enlarged, 1922). P. F. Anson, The Call of the Cloister (1955; revised by A. W. Campbell, 1964). A. M. Allchin, The Silent Rebellion. Anglican Religious Communities 1845–1900 (1958). S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), s.v. 'Religious Orders. II: Modern'.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY (R.T.S.). The Society was founded in 1799 (incorporated, 1899), with a committee of an equal number of Anglicans and Nonconformists, for the publication and dissemination of tracts and other Christian evangelical literature. It published in two hundred languages for missionary purposes and established daughter societies in *India and *China. During the war of 1914–18 it gratuitously distributed many millions of books and magazines among soldiers, sailors, and prisoners of war. On 14 May 1935 it was absorbed in the *United Society for Christian Literature (q.v.).

W. Jones, The Jubilee Volume of the Religious Tract Society: containing a Record of its Origin, Proceedings, and Results. A.D. 1799–1849 (1850); S. G. Green, The Story of the Religious Tract Society for One Hundred Years (1899); G. Hewitt, Let the People Read. A Short History of the United Society for Christian Literature, 1799; Christian Literature Society for India and Africa, 1858; Christian Literature Society for China (British Support), 1887 (1949). Annual Reports of the Religious Tract Society (London, 1799–[1936] for 1935).

RELIQUARY. A receptacle for *relics. The oldest reliquaries took the form of caskets, capsules, *ampullas, also of crosses, esp. for relics of the True Cross, of rings and of purses, and from early times they have frequently been of precious material and richly decorated. For the reception of the whole remains of a saint the gabled shrine was a favourite form in the Middle Ages, among famous examples being the silver shrine of the Three Kings at *Cologne (c. 1190–1225) and H. *Memling's reliquary of St. *Ursula at Bruges. At the same period smaller relics were kept in reliquaries of the shape of arms, legs, and esp. heads and busts, while in the later Middle Ages the *monstrance form, which facilitated exposition, became frequent. Besides the varied formalized shapes, caskets and boxes of all sizes and materials have always served as receptacles for relics. See also Martyrium.

J. Braun, S.J., Die Reliquiare des christlichen Kultes und ihre Entwicklung (1940). M. Andrieu, 'Aux origines du culte du Saint-Sacrement. Reliquaires et monstrances eucharistiques' in Anal. Boll., lxviii (1950), pp. 397–418. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., xii (1911), p. 762 f., s.v.

REMBRANDT (1606–69) (Rembrandt Harmensz or Harmenszoon van Rijn), Dutch painter. The son of a wealthy miller of *Leyden, he showed an early inclination for his art and, at the age of 25, was one of the most famous portrait painters of his country. In 1631 he moved to Amsterdam, where he lived till his death. In 1634 he married the beautiful Saskia, who during the rest of her life was the inspiration of his art. His pictures on Scriptural subjects in these years, which treat mostly of vivid scenes such as the story of Samson, are full of vigour and imagination though they have not reached the spirituality of his later period. With the death of Saskia, in 1642, sorrow entered his life, and his troubles were increased by financial difficulties ending in bankruptcy and, in 1654, the scandal of having a child by his servant, Hendrickje, which brought him into conflict with the Reformed Church at Amsterdam. These sufferings, which threw him more and more into solitude, helped further to deepen and spiritualize his art and to give him an understanding of the Passion—a theme treated in about 90 paintings and etchings—such as few artists have possessed. Characteristic was his treatment of light and shade out of which his human figures appear to grow, thereby producing the impression of a happening beyond space and time. The supernatural atmosphere of the Last Supper and the Disciples at Emmaus, and the union of Divine majesty and redeeming love in the face of his Christ blessing the children or healing the sick, are unsurpassed in Christian art. Among his last great works is his famous Return of the Prodigal Son (Leningrad, c. 1668), a painted confession of faith in the goodness of God expressed in the face and hands of the father, who receives the kneeling beggar with infinite love. Rembrandt has rightly been termed the painter of the soul.

Reproductions of his Paintings include that ed. W. R. Valentiner (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, ii; 1904; further paintings by same editor, ib., xxvii; 1921); also by A. Bredius (Utrecht, 1935; Eng. ed., 1937, revised by H. Gerson, 1969); of his Drawings, ed. W. R. Valentiner (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, xxxi, xxxii, &c.; [1925] ff.); also ed. O. Benesch (London, 6 vols., 1954–7); of his Etchings, ed. H. W. Singer (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, viii; 1906); also ed. Constance Schild (New York, 1937), L. Münz (London, 2 vols., 1952), and K. G. Boon (ib., 1963). The very extensive literature includes studies by W. Weisbach (Berlin–Leipzig, 1926), A. M. Hind (Charles Eliot Norton Lectures, 1930–1; London, 1932), J. Rosenberg (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1948; revised ed., London, 1964), and B. Haak (Amsterdam, 1968; Eng. tr., 1969). K. Clark, Rembrandt and the Italian Renaissance (Wrightsman Lectures, 1966). C. White–K. G. Boon, Rembrandt's Etchings. An illustrated critical catalogue (2 vols., Amsterdam–New York [1970]). O. Benesch in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart begr. U. Thieme–F. Becker, xxix (1935), pp. 259–71.

REMIGIUS, St. (c. 438–c. 533), also 'Remi', 'Apostle of the Franks'. The son of Aemilius, Count of Laon, he studied at *Reims and was elected Metropolitan of Reims at the age of 22. In 496 he baptized *Clovis I, King of the Franks (481–511), with three thousand of his subjects. He directed missions to the Morini and the *Arians of Burgundy and is associated with the foundation of Bishoprics at Laon, Tournai, Cambrai, Arras and Térouanne. Acc. to a legend, first mentioned by *Hincmar of Reims, the *ampulla of chrism traditionally used in the coronation of French kings was brought by a dove in answer to the prayers of St. Remigius at the baptism of Clovis. He is said to have conferred upon Clovis the power of touching for the *king's evil. Feast day, 1 Oct., the anniversary of the translation of his relics to the abbey of St. Remi by Pope *Leo IX in 1049, has now been dropped from the Universal Calendar of the RC Church. At Reims his death is commemorated on 13 Jan.

Letters, together with the Testament attributed to St. Remigius, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxv, 963–76; crit. ed. of the letters by W. Gundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 112–16, and of the Testament by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 336–47. AA.SS., Oct. I (1765), pp. 59–187, incl. text of life traditionally ascribed to *Venantius Fortunatus, pp. 128–30; full text of the life by Hincmar of Reims, ed. B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 239–336. The traditional account of the baptism of Clovis is also found in *Gregory of Tours, Historia Francorum, ii. 23. B. Krusch, 'Reimser Remigius-Fälschungen' in N.A., xx (1895), pp. 511–68. A. H. M. Jones, P. Grierson, and J. A. Crook, 'The authenticity of the "Testamentum S. Remigii"' in Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, xxxv (1957), pp. 356–73. H. Jadart, 'Bibliographie des ouvrages concernant la vie et le culte de saint Remi, évêque de Reims' in Travaux de l'Académie Nationale de Reims, lxxxvii (1891), pp. 225–75. Modern study by R. Barroux ('Grandeurs et gloires de l'ancienne France', 1947). F. Oppenheimer, The Legend of the Sainte Ampoule (1953). G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2379–81, s.v. 'Remi de Reims (Saint)'; E. Brouette in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1226 f., s.v., with further reff. See also bibl. to Reims and Clovis.

REMIGIUS OF AUXERRE (c. 841–c. 908), medieval philosopher. He was educated at the monastic school of St.-Germain at Auxerre, where he was a pupil of *Heiric, on whose death he succeeded as master of the school. Later he taught at *Reims and *Paris. His most important works are his commentaries on Martianus Capella and *Boethius' 'De Consolatione Philosophiae'. In them the work of more original Carolingian scholars, notably Johannes Scotus *Erigena, was presented in a form that made their teaching assimilable in the schools. The commentaries were one of the main sources for the understanding of the seven liberal arts in a Christian context. Although they lost this central place in the course of the 12th cent., they continued to be used and quoted. Remigius also wrote commentaries on Genesis, Psalms and St. Matthew's Gospel, and a liturgical treatise, 'De Celebratione Missae', which was incorporated into Pseudo-*Alcuin's 'De Divinis Officiis' (ch. 40).

Collection of his works, with notices of his life, in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxi, 47–970, but the commentaries on Genesis and the Psalms there printed are not genuine. The genuine commentaries remain unprinted; cf. A. Vaccari, S.J., 'Il genuino commento ai Salmi di Remigio di Auxerre' in Biblica, xxvi (1945), pp. 52–99, repr., with additional material, in his collected Scritti di Erudizione e di Filologia, i (1955), pp. 283–329. The best list of his writings is in Manitius, i, pp. 504–19, with addenda, ii, p. 808 and iii, p. 1063. Commentary on Martianus Capella, ed. by Cora E. Lutz (2 vols., Leiden, 1962–5). For later work see C. E. Lutz, op. cit., and M. de Marco, 'Remigii inedita' in Aevum, xxvi (1952), pp. 495–517, and R. B. C. Huygens, 'Remigiana', ib., xxviii (1954), pp. 330–44. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B. 'Le Plus Ancien Commentaire des Opuscula Sacra et son origine' in R.T.A.M., iii (1931), pp. 237–72; P. Courcelle, 'Étude critique sur les commentaires de la Consolation de Boèce (IXe–XVe siècles)' in A.H.D.L.A., xiv (1939), pp. 5–140, esp. pp. 56–65. J. R. Geiselmann, 'Der Einfluss des Remigius von Auxerre auf die Eucharistielehre des Heriger von Lobbes' in Th.Q., cxiv (1933), pp. 222–44. L. Scheffczyk in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 1223–5, s.v.

REMONSTRANCE, The. The statement of *Arminian teaching drawn up at Gouda in 1610, after the death of J. Arminius, in the presence of 46 ministers. It appears to have been compiled by J. Uitenbogaert, though it was often attributed by earlier writers to H. *Grotius and S. *Episcopius. Under five headings it sets out in positive form the leading Arminian doctrines on salvation. Among the Calvinistic doctrines repudiated were both the *Supralapsarian and *Sublapsarian forms of predestination, the doctrine that Christ died only for the elect, and the belief that the saints could not fall from grace. The ensuing conflict was very bitter, for the Remonstrants were suspected of favouring the pro-Spanish party in politics, and the *Contra-Remonstrants, led by F. *Gomar, were aided by Prince Maurice of Orange. As a result the Remonstrants were condemned at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19). See also Arminianism.

The text is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 545–9. Cf. also i, pp. 508–19.

RENAN, JOSEPH ERNEST (1823–92), French philosopher, theologian, and orientalist. A native of Tréguier in Brittany, he was invited in 1838 by F. A. P. *Dupanloup (whose attention had been drawn to Renan's brilliance through his sister, Henriette) to join his celebrated seminary of St.-Nicolas-du-Chardonnet at Paris. His study of German theology and Semitic languages led him to have doubts of the truth of Christianity, and in Oct. 1845 he left the seminary of *St.-Sulpice, where he then was. After a somewhat precarious and varied life for several years, he published in 1852 his Averroès et l'averroïsme, which at once established his reputation as a scholar. In 1860 he was sent by the Emperor on an archaeological mission to Phoenicia and Syria, and it was while in Palestine that he wrote his celebrated Vie de Jésus. In this book, written in an attractive and vivid style, but in a tone that hardly rang sincere, he repudiated the supernatural element in Christ's life, ignored its moral aspect, and portrayed Him as a charming and amiable Galilean preacher. Its publication in 1863 created an immediate sensation throughout Europe. In Jan. 1862 he had been appointed professor of Hebrew at the Collège de France, but the storm created by his Vie de Jésus led to his removal in 1864. For the rest of his life he held no further appointment. His other writings include Les Apôtres (1866), St. Paul (1869), Les Évangiles (1877), Histoire du peuple d'Israël (5 vols., 1887–93), and his widely popular Souvenirs d'enfance et de jeunesse (1883).

Collected ed. of his works by Henriette Psichari (10 vols., Paris, 1947–61). Many of his works were translated into English, incl. his Life of Jesus (London, 1864, and many later edd.), Recollections of my Youth (ib., 1883) and History of the People of Israel (3 vols., ib., 1889–91). The many studies in French include J. Pommier, Ernest Renan d'après des documents inédits (1923); id., La Pensée religieuse de Renan (1925), and id., La Jeunesse cléricale d'Ernest Renan. Saint-Sulpice (Strassburg thesis, Strassburg, 1933), with bibl.; M. Weiler, La Pensée de Renan (1945); R. Dussaud, L'Œuvre scientifique d'Ernest Renan (1951); and J. Chaix-Ruy, Ernest Renan (Paris, 1956). G. Sorel, Le Système historique de Renan (4 vols. bound in 1 [1905–6]). M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., La Vie de Jésus d'après Renan (1921; Eng. tr., 1928). P. Alfaric, Les Manuscrits de la 'Vie de Jésus' d'Ernest Renan (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, xc; 1939), with introd., notes, and concordance. H. Girard–H. Moncel, Bibliographie des œuvres d'Ernest Renan (Publication de la Société Ernest Renan. Histoire religieuse, i; 1923). Studies in English by L. F. Mott (New York–London, 1921) and H. W. Wardman (London, 1964). H. W. Wardman in E.B., xix (ed. 1968), p. 139 f., s.v.

RENAUDOT, EUSÈBE (1646–1720), orientalist and liturgist. He was a native of *Paris. After a short stay with the *Oratorians he devoted himself entirely to oriental studies and became a member of the Académie Française in 1689. A valued friend and adviser of the leading men of his time, among them J. B. *Bossuet, he accompanied the Cardinal *de Noailles to the conclave of 1700. He never received more than minor orders.

Renaudot's two chief theological writings are his erudite Historia Jacobitarum Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum (1713) and his Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio (2 vols., 1716). The latter contains the texts of a great number of E. liturgies with copious notes and commentaries, and is still indispensable for liturgical studies. Renaudot, who was a friend of several *Jansenists, was also the author of the fourth and fifth volumes of the famous Perpétuité de la foi, published under the direction of P. *Nicole and A. *Arnauld, in which, by rich documentation, he upheld the antiquity of the Eucharistic faith of the E. Churches against the *Calvinistic doctrine.

A corrected ed. of Renaudot's Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio was publd., 2 vols., Frankfurt a.M., 1847. Selections from his correspondence ed. F. Duffo (Paris, 1927 and 1931). H. Omont, 'Inventaire sommaire des manuscrits de la collection Renaudot, conservée à la Bibliothèque Nationale' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, li (1890), pp. 270–97. A. Villien, L'Abbé Eusèbe Renaudot. Essai sur sa vie et sur son œuvre liturgique (1904). J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2381–3, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2369–72, s.v.

RENEGADE. One who forsakes his religion for another faith. The term was formerly in current use esp. of Christians who apostatized to *Islam.

RENUNCIATION OF THE DEVIL. The renunciation of Satan at *Baptism is attested in St. *Hippolytus' Apostolic Tradition, St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, and St. *Ambrose's De Mysteriis, and has been a regular part of almost all Baptismal rites, E. and W. It was presumably designed originally to confirm the candidate in his intention to forsake all heathen worship and ways of life.

REORDINATION. The repetition of an ordination to the priesthood which had been conferred either extra ecclesiam, i.e. by an heretical or schismatic bishop, or intra ecclesiam but not canonically, e.g. by a deposed or simoniacal bishop. Reordination was frequently practised in the Church down to the 12th cent., when the doctrine of the Sacraments began to receive more precise formulation. The question of reordination first became a practical issue through the rise of schisms and heresies. Implicitly different answers were already given in the 3rd cent. by St. *Cyprian of Carthage and St. *Stephen of Rome, in that the one rejected and the other accepted the validity of heretical Baptism.

In the following cents. the practice of the Church varied. Acc. to the Council of *Nicaea (325; can. 19) ordinations in the different sects were treated differently, whereas the *Apostolic Constitutions and the *Apostolic Canons are hostile to the sacraments of all non-Catholic bodies. In view of the new schisms of the 4th and 5th cents. the practice of reordination was attenuated and often replaced by a ceremony called χειροθεσία, which was mentioned in the Canons of Nicaea, and is apparently a supplementary rite distinct from ordination (χειροτονία). The Greek Church, though it repudiated reordination at the *Trullan Council (692; can. 95), has continued to waver in its practice. In the W. St. *Augustine's doctrine of the validity of the sacraments administered by sinful, excommunicated, schismatic, or heretical priests, formed in the course of the *Donatist controversy, slowly gained ground against opposition. Though St. *Gregory the Great expressed himself clearly against reordination, heretical sacraments were viewed with hostility by many subsequent theologians, and reordination was practised, e.g., by the Greek Abp. *Theodore of Canterbury, who, in 669, reordained Ceadda, who had been ordained by supposed *Quartodecimans. It was also practised in the case of priests ordained by the irregularly elected Pope Constantine II (767–9), by Pope *Formosus (891–6), and by the 9th-cent. *chorepiscopi, as well as on the simoniacal clergy of the 11th cent., many of whom were reordained by the Pope himself, St. *Leo IX. From the period of *Gregory VII, however, when *Anselm of Lucca defended the validity of heretical sacraments, the Augustinian view became more and more general and was finally formulated by St. *Thomas Aquinas, who rejected the practice of reordination because of the indelible *character bestowed by the Sacrament of Holy Orders on its recipient. This doctrine was formally sanctioned by the Council of *Trent, provided that the sacrament was conferred in the prescribed form and with the right intention.

L. Saltet, Les Réordinations (1907); C. H. *Turner, 'Apostolic Succession' in Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (ed. H. B. *Swete, 1918), esp. pp. 161–79.

REPARATION. The making amends for damage done to another. In moral theology it is generally used in a sense similar to *restitution (q.v.) in cases of personal injury such as homicide, detraction, adultery, &c. For wrongs of this kind reparation cannot be made exactly corresponding to the loss, but takes the form of compensation, already prescribed in the Mosaic Law (Ex. 21. 22 ff.).

In modern devotional language the term is frequently used for the amends made to God for offences against Him by means of prayer and penance. Reparation plays a central part in the *Sacred Heart devotion, esp. with ref. to outrages committed against the Blessed Sacrament, and confraternities and congregations have been established with this and similar ends in view.

REPENTANCE. The condemnation and abhorrence of one's own sins. True repentance or *contrition (as contrasted with mere *attrition) springs from a sense of the outrage which sin commits against the love of God. It includes sorrow for sin committed, confession of guilt, and the purpose of amendment. The Greek word μετάνοια, translated 'repentance' in the English NT, emphasizes the last aspect, while the Latin word penitentia (whence 'penance' and 'penitence') refers in origin to the first two aspects, esp. as expressed in the payment of a penalty. In accord with this distinction in language, Latin teaching has laid special emphasis in *penance on acts of *reparation and *satisfaction for sin.

REPINGTON, PHILIP (d. 1424), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was educated at *Oxford and became an *Augustinian canon of St. Mary-de-Pré, Leicester. In early life he was a supporter of the doctrines of J. *Wycliffe, whose sacramental teaching he defended in several sermons. At the Council of Blackfriars (1382) he was suspended and a few weeks later excommunicated at *Canterbury, but he recanted his heresies and was restored to communion in the same year. In 1394 he became abbot of St. Mary-de-Pré and three years later chancellor of the university of Oxford, an office he held again in 1400 and the two following years. Shortly after his accession in 1399 Henry IV made him his chaplain and confessor, and in 1404 he was appointed Bp. of Lincoln. Four years later Gregory XII created him Cardinal, a dignity rendered doubtful by the deposition of Gregory by the Council of *Pisa in 1409 until it was revalidated in 1415 by the Council of *Constance. He resigned his bishopric in 1419, probably because Henry V had opposed the raising of Henry *Beaufort to the cardinalate.

Episcopal Register ed. Margaret Archer (Lincoln Record Society, lvii, lviii, &c.; 1963 ff.). The primary source for his life is the Fasciculi Zizaniorum, ed. W. W. Shirley (Rolls Series, 1858), pp. 289 f., 296–329 passim. 'Cardinal Repyngdon and the Followers of Wycliffe' in C.Q.R., xix (1884), pp. 59–82. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1953), pp. 102 f., 108–15, and 120. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xlviii (1896), pp. 26–8; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1565–7, s.v. 'Repyngdon'.

REPOSE, Altar of. An altar to which (acc. to W. use) the Blessed Sacrament is taken in procession after the evening Mass of *Maundy Thursday and reserved for communion on *Good Friday. Until 1955 it was customary to make the Altar of Repose as splendid as possible with lights and flowers and in many places the faithful kept watch before it in turns throughout the day and night. *Pius XII's Holy Week rite recommended a certain austerity and decreed that the watch need last only until midnight; in 1970 the length of the watch was left to the discretion of the parish priest. The Altar of Repose is first mentioned in the 15th century.

REPROACHES, The (Lat. Improperia). The set of reproofs addressed by the Crucified Saviour to His ungrateful people, which form part of the *Good Friday Liturgy of the Latin Church. They are chanted by two choirs during the *Veneration of the Cross and consist of twelve verses, which set in parallel the Divine compassion for Israel and the outrages inflicted on Christ in His Passion. Each of the first three verses is followed by the *Trisagion sung alternately in Latin (or the vernacular) and Greek, and each of the other nine by the refrain 'Populo meus, quid feci tibi', &c. The Improperia are built up on OT passages, but their early history is obscure. The first three verses are found in documents of the late 9th and early 10th cents., the last nine are not found in their entirety before the 11th cent. There are, however, traces of the component parts in the 7th cent., and the use of the reproach as a homiletic device may go back to St. *Cyril of Jerusalem.

H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Hebdomada Sancta, ii (pt. 2; Rome, 1957), p. 794 f.

REPROBATION. The act by which God condemns sinners to eternal punishment, and the state of this punishment. In his struggle against *Pelagianism and *Semi-Pelagianism, St. *Augustine sometimes used expressions which might be understood as teaching that there is predestination, on the part of God, to everlasting death, as there is to eternal life. In the 9th cent. the question was agitated in the Frankish Church on account of the bold teaching of the monk *Gottschalk, who was accused of maintaining that God positively and irresistibly predestined certain men to sin and damnation. His doctrine, vigorously opposed by *Hincmar of Reims, was condemned by the Council of Mainz in 848 and by the first (849) and second (853) Councils of *Quiercy, which rejected all predestination to perdition. The Council of *Valence (855), though using the expression 'predestination to death', was none the less careful to point out that 'the evil deserts precede the just judgement of God'. The doctrine of predestination to eternal punishment was revived by many of the 16th cent. Reformers, esp. J. *Calvin, who taught positive and gratuitous reprobation. Acc. to Calvin God, by an inscrutable decree, Himself incites to sin those whom He has predestined to hell. This teaching was condemned by the Council of *Trent (Sess. VI, can. 6). Somewhat similar doctrines were taught later by M. *Baius and the *Jansenists.

REQUIEM. A Mass offered for the dead, so named from the first word of the *introit which, until recently, was the common opening of all such Masses in the Roman rite ('Requiem aeternam dona eis, Domine'). The 1970 Roman Missal, which embodies a complete revision of these Masses, provides three formulas for *All Souls' Day (2 Nov.), which may be employed even on a Sunday; three formulas for use at funerals and three for anniversaries (in each case one for use in Eastertide and two for the rest of the year); and five for other occasions. There are also prayers for different categories of people, five *Prefaces, and a variety of Scriptural readings. Many of the characteristics previously distinctive of requiems have disappeared: vestments, which used to be black, may now be any colour determined by national conferences of bishops, and unbleached candles are no longer required. The *Paschal Candle is now usually placed at the head of the coffin. On the occasion of a burial, the Mass is followed immediately by a final commendation. In general, except on the most important feast days and a few other occasions, requiems are offered throughout the year, as occasion arises, e.g. on the day of burial of a member of the congregation (usually praesente cadavere) or of a public figure or by special request. In November, regarded acc. to modern RC custom as the month of Holy Souls, Masses for the dead used to be said with particular frequency. See also Dies Irae.

J. Merk, Die messliturgische Totenehrung in der römischen Kirche (1926); E. Freistedt, Altchristliche Totengedächtnistage und ihre Beziehung zum Jenseitsglauben und Totenkultus der Antike (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxiv; 1928). Jungmann, i, pp. 275–7; Eng. tr., pp. 217–19. A. Hollaardt, O.P., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2382–9, s.v., with extensive bibl. on historical aspects.

REREDOS. Properly any decoration put up above and behind an altar. The earliest type of such decoration was the painting of scenes or symbols on the walls against which altars backed; but during the Middle Ages a reredos might consist of a rich silken hanging or a piece of jewelled metalwork, as, e.g., at St. Mark's, *Venice. More commonly, painted wooden panels, either fixed or in the form of a triptych, made up the reredos, while another way of providing a reredos that represented Biblical incidents or figures of the saints was to have it carved in stone or alabaster. Where there happened to be no east window behind the altar, a reredos might cover the whole wall, as at New College, Oxford, or—a most elaborate example—at Burgos in Spain.

Braun, C.A., ii (1924), pp. 277–544, with plates 192–336. F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 51–100.

RERUM NOVARUM. The encyclical issued by *Leo XIII on 15 May 1891 De Conditione Opificum. Its purpose was to apply to the new conditions created by the Industrial Revolution the traditional Catholic teaching on the relationship of a man to his work, profit, masters, and servants. On the ground that society originated in the family, it proclaimed private property a natural right and condemned 'socialism' as infringing it. It upheld wage-settlements by free agreement, the rightfulness of combinations of workers or employers, and above all the ideal of a just wage, defined as 'enough to support the wage-earner in reasonable and frugal comfort' with a family. It maintained that the natural place of women was in the home. It also emphasized the duty of the state to preserve justice and the responsibility of the Church in the moral aspects of employment.

This new concern of the Church for the condition of the workers was heralded as revolutionary and subversive of the established order; but the encyclical has since been widely acclaimed as among the most important modern pronouncements on social justice and has exercised wide influence. On 15 May 1931 Quadragesimo Anno* (q.v.) was issued by *Pius XI to mark its fortieth anniversary, and on 14 May 1971 *Paul VI marked its eightieth anniversary by the publication of an Apostolic Letter on Social Justice addressed to Cardinal Maurice Roy, Abp. of Quebec and President of the Pontifical Commission of Justice and Peace; this dealt with a wide range of social problems, incl. racial discrimination and environmental conditions.

Text in Acta Leonis XIII, iv (1894), pp. 177–209. L'Enciclica Rerum Novarum. Testo autentico e redazioni preparatorie dai documenti originali, ed. G. Antonazzi (1957). H. E. *Manning, Leo XIII on the Condition of Labour (1891); H. George, The Condition of Labour (1891; rev. ed., 1947, incl. Eng. tr. of text, pp. 99–127).

RESCISSORY ACT. The Act passed by the Scottish Parliament on 28 Mar. 1661 repealing the whole of the legislation enacted since 1633. Its effect was to overthrow *Presbyterianism and restore episcopacy. Its principal author was Sir Archibald Primrose (1616–79).

Text of Act pr. in The Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland [1124–1707], ed. T. Thomson–C. Innes for the Record Commission, vii (1820), p. 86 f.

RESERVATION. The practice of keeping the Bread (and occasionally also the Wine) consecrated at the Eucharist, primarily for the purpose of Holy Communion. The earliest mention of Reservation occurs in the First Apology of St. *Justin Martyr (cap. 65). It is frequently referred to in the 2nd–4th cents., e.g. in *Tertullian, St. *Cyprian and St. *Basil. When Communion was frequent but Masses comparatively rare, the faithful kept the Bl. Sacrament in their homes or carried It on their persons, as being the safest places, and this practice long survived; and among the hermits, who often lived at a great distance from a church, the custom survived until the 13th and 14th cents. But from the Constantinian era (4th cent.) the churches were increasingly the ordinary places for reservation. Here the Sacrament was kept either in the sacristy, as is attested for the 6th cent. in Gaul, and still in the 16th cent. for parts of N. Italy, or in the church itself, either in an *aumbry (q.v.) in the wall, or in a *pyx (q.v.) hanging over the altar, or in a *tabernacle (q.v.) on the altar, the last being the normal modern RC practice. Current RC legislation favours reservation in a separate chapel apart from the centre of the church, but allows considerable latitude. A lamp is kept burning nearby as a sign of honour. From the beginning reservation under the Species of Bread only seems to have been the most common practice in both E. and W. But from the 11th cent. developed the modern E. custom, acc. to which a drop of the consecrated Wine is placed on the Host, which may then be artificially dried. The Sacrament, thus prepared, is used in the E. for the Communion of the sick as well as for the Liturgies of the *Presanctified in the season of *Lent.

In the 16th cent. the First BCP of 1549 provided for the Communion of the sick by reservation of the Sacrament at the open Communion and the carrying of It to the sick man as soon as convenient, though it also allowed the priest to celebrate in the sick person's house. In the Second BCP of 1552 the provision for reservation ceased, and it was not replaced in Elizabeth's English Book of 1559. In the Latin Prayer Book of Elizabeth (1560), however, the two provisions for sick Communions in the 1549 BCP came back. The (present) BCP of 1662 retained the regulations of 1559; but, apparently to prevent the use for profane purposes of any of the consecrated Sacrament left over, it ordered that the priest and such other of the communicants as he summoned should reverently consume what remained immediately after the blessing. Anglican divines opposed to the practice have argued that this rubric, in conjunction with the statement in the *Thirty-Nine Articles that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not commanded by Christ's ordinance to be kept, is prohibitive of reservation in the C of E. Those who defend it commonly maintain that in view of the circumstances mentioned the rubric is irrelevant to the issue. As a matter of history, the practice had died out in the C of E, except in very rare instances, before the beginning of the 19th cent., but it has now been widely restored. In the Scottish Episcopal Church it has remained customary and a note in the Scottish Liturgy declares it to be lawful. The rubrics which would have permitted the practice in the proposed English Prayer Books of 1927 and 1928 largely contributed to the defeat of the Prayer Book Measure in Parliament. See also Benediction with the Blessed Sacrament.

D. *Stone, The Reserved Sacrament (1917); W. H. Freestone, The Sacrament Reserved (Alcuin Club Collections, xxi; 1917); Reservation. Report of a Conference held at Farnham Castle on 24–27 Oct. 1925 (S.P.C.K., 1926); G. *Dix, A Detection of Aumbries (1942); E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (Brussels, 1942); S. J. P. van Dijk, O.F.M.–J[oan] H. Walker, The Myth of the Aumbry. Notes on medieval reservation prectice and eucharistic devotion with special reference to the findings of Dom Gregory Dix (1957); A. A. King, Eucharistic Reservation in the Western Church (1965).

RESERVATION, Mental. See Mental Reservation.

RESERVED SINS. In conformity with the early practice, which restricted the administration of penance to a bishop, bishops in the RC Church have retained the right to 'reserve' certain sins to their own jurisdiction. The reservation may be either as to the sin or as to the censure—excommunication, &c.—imposed on the sin, a distinction corresponding to that between the internal and external *forum. Some sins are reserved by a general law, others by a particular enactment. In normal cases absolution for reserved sins may be granted only by the authority making the reservation, his successor, superior, or delegate. But on death-beds, and in cases of great urgency, any priest may absolve, though if a censure is involved subsequent ratification by the proper authority is normally required. A few very grave matters are reserved to the Pope. The system is not so irksome as it sounds on account both of the number of delegates who may absolve and the excepting clause of urgency. In the C of E the practice of such reservation of sins does not obtain.

See Codex Iuris Canonici*, Nos. 893–900, 2245–54.

RESIDENCE. All clergy are under a grave obligation to reside personally in the place in which they are authorized to minister. From very early times, owing to the frequent abuse of non-residence, this injunction figures in the canons. Combined with the holding of livings in plurality, which non-residence makes possible, the abuse was at its worst during the Middle Ages. The Council of *Trent took reforming action (Sessions IV and XXIII). In RC *canon law, the place and time of residence for all grades of clergy are precisely laid down (CIC, cans. 143, 238, 338, and 465). In the C of E residence is required by the English *Canons of 1969, cans. C 18, 20, 21 and 25.

RESPONSES. See Versicles.

RESPONSORY (Lat. Responsorium), a liturgical chant traditionally consisting of a series of *versicles and responses, the text usually taken from Scripture. The arrangement was designed for the alternate singing of sentences or lines by different people. The 'cantus responsorius', which is already mentioned by *Tertullian, goes back to the worship of the Synagogue. Responsories were long found in the Mass at the *Gradual (this is now replaced by a Responsorial psalm sung by the cantor or choir and the people), and formerly also at the *Offertory. In the Divine Office, responsories were already prescribed in the Rule of St. *Benedict (c. 540). They used to follow the Lessons at *Mattins and now follow them in the *Office of Readings. A shorter form, called the 'responsorium breve', follows the Little *Chapter at *Lauds, *Vespers, the Little Hours and *Compline in the Monastic Office; in the Roman *Breviary it used to follow only at Prime, the Little Hours and Compline, but in 1971 it was adopted at Lauds and Vespers. The 'responsorium breve' varies according to the Office and season.

RESTITUTION. In W. moral theology, the act of 'commutative justice' by which an injury done to the goods or person of another is repaired. The duty of restitution arises from the unjust detention or damage to another's property. If the possessor of another's property has been in good faith, he is bound to make restitution if the goods are still extant, together with the fruits derived from them, unless they have been gained by his own industry. If, however, the property has perished, there is no such obligation. On the other hand, in the case of a possessor in bad faith, he must restore the goods together with a compensation if they have suffered deterioration, and if they have perished he must make restitution acc. to the value they had at the time they were stolen. In the case of possession of property in doubtful faith, the possessor is bound to investigate; but, if the question of ownership cannot be cleared up, he may keep the property. In the case of wilful damage done to another's property restitution must be made as far as possible for the damage done as well as for consequent losses which were to be foreseen. The same principles hold good for the damage to another's reputation, health, life, or chastity.

RESTORATION, The. A term used by English historians from the 18th cent. onwards to describe the restoration of the monarchy under *Charles II in 1660; by extension it is also applied to the period immediately following this event. For the C of E it was a turning-point leading to its political re-establishment and to its definition along strictly episcopalian lines during the primacies of G. *Sheldon and W. *Sancroft.

Anne [O. E.] Whiteman, 'The Re-Establishment of the Church of England 1660–1663' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, v (1955), pp. 111–31.

RESURRECTION, Community of the. See Community of the Resurrection.

RESURRECTION OF CHRIST, The. That the Lord Jesus, after His death and burial, rose again on the third day is a fundamental tenet of Christian belief, asserted in the NT and the Creeds. It was the Resurrection which gave the Apostles, who on Christ's arrest 'all forsook him and fled' (Mk. 14. 50), a renewal of faith and enabled and inspired them to preach the Gospel; in that preaching the fact of the Resurrection was itself basic (cf. Acts 2. 22–36, 1 Pet. 1. 3). At a date before most of the NT Books were written, St. *Paul testifies to this fact as part of the Gospel which he had 'received' (1 Cor. 15. 1–17), stating that Christ both 'was raised' from the dead and 'was seen' (ὤφθη) by, or 'appeared to', Cephas (*Peter; cf. Lk. 24. 34), to 'the twelve' (Lk. 24.

36 ff.; Jn. 20. 19 ff.), to more than five hundred brethren at once, to *James, and to all the Apostles (cf. perhaps Mt. 28. 16 ff.). It should be noted that the tradition received by St. Paul does not merely say that after His crucifixion Christ 'appeared' to these persons; by stating, before mentioning the appearances, that Christ 'was buried' and then 'was raised' (1 Cor. 15. 3 f.), it points to an objective Resurrection in which His human body no longer remained in the tomb.

The Gospels amplify this statement of St. Paul by declaring that the disciples received their earliest intimation of the Resurrection through the discovery by St. *Mary Magdalene and other women that the body of Christ was missing from the tomb and the words of a 'young man' (or angel) to them that He was risen from the dead (Mk. 16. 1–8, Mt. 28. 1–10, Lk. 24. 1–12, Jn. 20. 1–9). Acc. to Mk. and Mt. the disciples were bidden to go to *Galilee, acc. to Lk. and Jn. Christ showed Himself first in and near *Jerusalem to Mary Magdalene (Jn. 20. 11–18), to Peter (Lk. 24. 34; cf. 1 Cor. 15. 5), to two disciples who were walking to *Emmaus (Lk. 24. 13–35), and to the Apostles who were gathered together in the city (Lk. 24. 36 ff., Jn. 20. 19–23). Jn. records appearances to the Apostles again in Jerusalem a week later (Jn. 20. 24–9), and, later, in Galilee (Jn. 21. 1–23, cf. Mt. 28. 16–20).

It is clear from the NT that the Resurrection was in no sense a restoration of Jesus to an earthly life as He had previously lived it; but neither was it merely a series of visions which assured the disciples that Jesus was still alive and present with them in spiritual power. The event is rather a mighty act of God, by which Jesus 'was raised up' (ἠγέρθη, passive) and exalted by the Father to His rightful position of glory at the Father's right hand (Acts 2. 22–36, etc.). It was the victory of Christ over death, with results not only for Himself but for all Christians (1 Pet. 1. 3 f., cf. 1 Cor. 15. 14), and hence the beginning of a new era (Jn. 20. 17, Mt. 28. 16). It is true that the details of the time and place of the appearances by which the disciples were convinced of this fact and commissioned to proclaim it appear somewhat confusedly in the Gospels. In the genuine text of Mk. there is no account of the Resurrection appearances, and opinions differ as to whether an original concluding section has been lost or whether the Gospel was designed to end at 16. 8 (with the fear of the women indicating the sense of a great supernatural event). While the accounts in Mt. and Lk. might be read as referring to a single day only, Jn. spaces the events over a week or more, and Acts (correcting or amplifying Lk. 24) fixes the period at forty days closing with the *Ascension near Jerusalem. To this St. Paul adds the appearance to himself on the Damascus road. But on the significance of the Resurrection as Christ's conquest of death and entrance into His Glory, with its far-reaching consequences, all the NT writers are agreed. This is shown by the way in which it is inseparably connected in thought with the Passion (Lk. 24. 26, etc.), with the Christian life (Col. 3. 1–11), and even with belief in God (Rom. 4. 24, 1 Pet. 1. 21).

In modern times NT critics have drawn attention to the difficulties in the Gospel accounts of the Resurrection, particularly the discrepancy between the 'Galilee' tradition of Mr. and Mt. and the 'Jerusalem' tradition known to Lk. It has been held by liberal critics (D. F. *Strauss, E. *Renan) that the whole story sprang from subjective visions first of the women at the tomb and then of other disciples, influenced by their intense love for Christ and their excited mental state. The chief objection to this view is that the disciples clearly had no expectation that Jesus would survive death such as would predispose them to such experiences, but on the contrary were amazed and at first sceptical. Indeed they are expressly said to have distinguished between seeing the spirit of one dead and the experience which they had of Christ's bodily presence (Lk. 24. 37 ff.). Another view (K. T. *Keim, B. H. *Streeter) is that while the visions which the disciples saw were indeed Divinely authenticated and sufficient evidence that Christ had overcome death and thenceforth reigned in glory, His material body was not actually raised from the tomb. Either the wrong tomb was visited by the women and Peter and John or the body of Jesus had been removed, unknown to them, by some other persons. This conflicts with the evidence of the grave-clothes (Jn. 20. 5), to say nothing of the improbability of such an elementary mistake not being discovered within a short time. Advocates of this view often allege on a priori grounds that the resuscitation of a material body is irrelevant to the reality of Christ's conquest of death, and its appearance in the Gospel narratives arises from ideas which must be discarded in the light of modern knowledge. But this contention ignores the difference between ideas of the immortality of the soul, which were well known in the contemporary world, and the quite distinct Christian doctrine of the *resurrection of the dead (see foll. entry), acc. to which not a disembodied spirit, but the complete personality consisting of body and soul, ultimately possesses eternal life.

The subject is treated by St. *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, iii, qq. 54 ('De Qualitate Christi Resurgentis'), 55 ('De Manifestatione Resurrectionis'), and 56 ('De Resurrectionis Christi Causalitate'); also by the commentators on these questions, notably F. *Suarez, S.J. Modern works include B. F. *Westcott, The Gospel of the Resurrection (1866); W. Milligan, The Resurrection of Our Lord (1881); W. J. Sparrow Simpson, Our Lord's Resurrection (1905); id., The Resurrection and Modern Theology (1911); B. H. Streeter in Foundations* (1912), esp. pp. 127–45; E. G. Selwyn in Essays Catholic and Critical* (1926), pp. 279–319; W. Künneth, Theologie der Auferstehung (1933; ed. 4, 1951; Eng. tr., 1965); A. M. *Ramsey, The Resurrection of Christ (1945); F. X. Durrwell, La Résurrection de Jésus, mystère de salut (1950; ed. 2, 1954; Eng. tr., 1960); M. C. Perry, The Easter Enigma. An Essay on the Resurrection with special reference to the data of Psychical Research (1959); S. H. Hooke, The Resurrection of Christ as History and Experience (1967); W. Marxsen, Die Auferstehung Jesu von Nazareth (Gütersloh, 1968; Eng. tr., 1970); E. L. Bode, The First Easter Morning. The Gospel Accounts of the Women's Visit to the Tomb of Jesus (Analecta Biblica, xlv; 1970).

RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. The belief that at the *Parousia or 'Second Coming' of Christ departed souls will be restored to a bodily life and the saved will enter in this renewed form upon the life of heaven is a fundamental element in the Christian doctrine of man's final destiny. The doctrine of resurrection appears in a few late passages in the OT; it was held by many Jews at the time of Christ's ministry; and it was clinched for Christian believers by the *Resurrection of Christ Himself. It can be combined with the Greek doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, but the two doctrines are independent and different, since resurrection implies (1) that the full redeemed life of heaven must include a restoration of the whole psychophysical organism, because man was created by God to be and to remain an embodied spirit; and (2) that the life after death is wholly the gift of God, and not due to the inherently immortal nature of man's soul. It has at times been the prevailing view that the resurrection will involve a collection and revivifying of the material particles of the dead body. Many theologians, however, following the principles of St. Paul, hold that the resurrection body will be new and 'spiritual' (1 Cor. 15. 35–54), i.e. a body of a new order, the perfect instrument of the spirit, raised above the limitations of the earthly body, with which it will be identical only in the sense that it will be the recognizable organism of the same personality. Commonly it is held that all the dead, whether saved or not, will rise to pass under judgement; but with some support in the NT it may be held that resurrection in any full sense will be confined to those destined to eternal life.

R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism and in Christianity (Jowett Lectures for 1898–9; 1899). J. T. Darragh, The Resurrection of the Flesh (1921). H. Cornélius, O.P., and others, La Résurrection de la chair (1962). W. Milligan, The Resurrection of the Dead. An Exposition of 1 Corinthians xv (1894). A. Michel in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2502–71, s.v. 'Résurrection des morts'. See also bibl. to previous entry.

RETABLE. A structure placed at the back of an altar in the form either of a ledge on which ornaments may be set or of a frame for decorated panels. The ledge form is also known as a *gradine, the form for panels also as a *reredos.

RETREAT. A period of days spent in silence, and occupied with meditation and other religious exercises. In essence the practice is older than Christianity, but the forty days Christ spent in the wilderness have been considered to give the ultimate authority for its Christian use. As a formal devotion, retreats were introduced in the *Counter-Reformation period. The *Jesuits, who were the first religious order to include them in their rule, also counselled them to those outside their body. A little later St. *Francis de Sales and St. *Vincent de Paul became strong advocates of the practice. In the 17th cent. retreat houses were instituted, where those who wished to make a retreat might stay for short periods under the guidance of 'conductors'. In the RC Church the practice of annual retreat became widespread early in the 19th cent., at first for the clergy, both *regular and *secular, but soon also for many of the laity. In the C of E the practice of retreat was adopted under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, the first formal retreat being held in 1856 in Christ Church, Oxford.

R. Schofield (ed.), Retreats. Their Value, Organisation and Growth (1915); id., new work with same title but different contributors (1927). A. T. Cameron, Directory of Retreat Houses and other Places of Retreat [C of E] (1925). P. Debuchy in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 795–7, s.v.; D. *Stone in H.E.R.E., x (1918), p. 743 f., s.v., with bibl.

RETZ, CARDINAL DE (Jean François Paul de Gondi) (1613–79), Abp. of Paris. Destined to an ecclesiastical career by his family, in whose hands the archiepiscopal see of Paris had been since 1569, he was a member of St. *Vincent de Paul's Tuesday Conferences and was appointed Coadjutor-Archbishop to his uncle, Jean François, in 1643. His inclination towards a secular life and political intrigues led him to take a prominent part in the activities of the Fronde (1648–9) against J. *Mazarin. After being temporarily reconciled to Louis XIV, at whose suggestion he was created Cardinal by *Innocent X in 1652, he soon lost favour and was imprisoned at Mazarin's instigation. On the death of his uncle in 1654, his plenipotentiaries took possession of the see of Paris and, a few months later, he escaped from prison. He went to Spain and from there to Rome, where he took part in the election of *Alexander VII in 1655. After a series of adventures and intrigues in Italy, Germany, and other countries, he returned to Paris in 1661, was finally reconciled to the king, and resigned his see in the following year in exchange for the rich abbey of *St. Denis. He took an active part in the subsequent conflicts between Louis XIV and the Popes and in the conclaves which elected Clement IX, Clement X, and *Innocent XI. His Memoirs, begun in 1671, are famous for their literary charm and for their political judgements.

Works ed. J. Gourdault–R. Chantelauze, with notes by M. A. Feillet and appendix to his correspondence by C. Cochin (11 vols., Paris, 1870–1920). Memoirs, first publ. 3 vols., Nancy, 1717, first ed. from autograph MSS., Paris, 1837; modern edd. by G. Mongrédien (4 vols., Paris, 1935), with biogr. preface, vol. i, pp. vi–xxxviii and bibl. pp. xli–xliii, and, with other material, with introd. and notes by M. Allem and Edith Thomas (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, liii; 1956); Eng. trr. of his Memoirs, London, 1723, 1774, and 1904. M. Topin, Le Cardinal de Retz (1863); A. Gazier, Les Dernières Années du Cardinal de Retz, 1655–1679 (1875); R. Chantelauze, Le Cardinal de Retz et l'affaire du chapeau (2 vols., 1878); id., Le Cardinal de Retz et ses missions diplomatiques à Rome, d'après les documents inédits des archives du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères (1879). D. Ogg, Cardinal de Retz, 1613–1679 (1912); L. Batiffol, Le Cardinal de Retz (1927); id., Biographie du Cardinal de Retz (1929); J. Dyssord (pseudonym of J. M. de Bellaing), Le Cardinal de Retz: conspirateur né (1938); [F.] Albert-Buisson, Le Cardinal de Retz (1954); P. G. Lorris, Le Cardinal de Retz. Un agitateur du XVIIe siècle (1956); J. T. Letts, Le Cardinal de Retz. Historien et moraliste du possible (1966); J. H. M. Salmon, Cardinal de Retz. The Anatomy of a Conspirator (1969), with bibl.

REUCHLIN, JOHANNES (1455–1522), German humanist. He studied Latin and Greek at Freiburg i.Br., *Paris, and Basle, where he compiled a Latin lexicon, Vocabularius Breviloquus (1475), which became very popular. Having become a Master of Arts in 1477, he studied law at Orléans and Poitiers and took his degree as licentiate in 1481. In 1482 he accompanied Count Eberhard of Württemberg to Rome as his interpreter and later became his adviser and ambassador. About 1485 he began to study Hebrew with the help of learned Jews and became interested in *Cabbalistic doctrines, expounding the latter in De Verbo Mirifico (1494) and later in De Arte Cabbalistica (1517), both full of abstruse speculations on sacred letters. Owing to the hostility of Eberhard's successor he fled to Heidelberg in 1496; here he wrote his spirited Latin comedies Sergius and Henno in imitation of Terence, and perfected his knowledge of Hebrew. After the deposition of Eberhard's son in 1498, he returned to Württemberg, where he became one of the three justices in the Swabian League in 1502. In 1506 he published his most important work, De Rudimentis Hebraicis. Consisting of a Hebrew grammar and lexicon, it placed the hitherto almost neglected scientific study of the Hebrew language on an entirely new basis and became a powerful incentive to the study of the OT in the original. It was supplemented by an edition of the *Seven Penitential Psalms in Hebrew, with a Latin translation (1512), and a treatise on Hebrew accents, De Accentibus et Orthographia Linguae Hebraicae (1518). The latter years of his life were troubled by his controversy with the Jewish convert, Johann Pfefferkorn, and the Dominican friars of Cologne on the destruction of the Jewish books, which Reuchlin opposed in the interests of scholarship. Bitter pamphlets were produced on both sides, the most celebrated being the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum (1515–17, q.v.), in which Reuchlin and his friends stood for the modern learning against the Dominicans, esp. Jakob von Hochstraten (d. 1527), who represented the old Scholastic tradition. In the course of the controversy Reuchlin became involved in a trial for heresy in which both parties appealed repeatedly to Rome and which was finally decided against him by *Leo X in 1520. As a result his satirical pamphlet, Augenspiegel (1511), was forbidden and he was condemned to defray the costs of the trial. Though many of the Reformers took part in the controversy on the side of Reuchlin, he himself remained a loyal Catholic and endeavoured hard to detach his grandnephew, P. *Melanchthon, from his friendship with M. *Luther.

The standard life is that of L. Geiger (Leipzig, 1871). Correspondence ed. id. (Bibliothek des litterarischen Vereins in Stuttgart, cxxvi; 1875). A. Horawitz, 'Zur Biographie und Correspondenz Johannes Reuchlins' in Sb. (Wien), lxxxv (1877), pp. 117–90. K. Christ, Die Bibliothek Reuchlins in Pforzheim (Beiheft zum Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, lii; 1924). Festschrift der Stadt Pforzheim zur Erinnerung an dem 400. Todestag Reuchlins (Pforzheim [1922]); Johannes Reuchlin 1455–1522. Festgabe seiner Vaterstadt zur 500. Wiederkehr seines Geburtstages, ed. M. M. Krebs (ib., [1955]). M. Brod, Johannes Reuchlin und sein Kampf. Eine historische Monographie (1966). S. A. Hirsch, A Book of Essays (1905), pp. 116–50 ('Johann Reuchlin, The Father of the Study of Hebrew among Christians'). L. W. Spitz, 'Reuchlin's Philosophy: Pythagoras and Cabala for Christ' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, xlvii (1956), pp. 1–19, repr. in The Religious Renaissance of the German Humanists (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), pp. 61–80. G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 680–8, s.v.

REUNION. Desire for the visible unity of Christendom has greatly increased in the present century, both on practical and on theological grounds. Growing doctrinal agreement between the major Christian bodies has been reinforced by liturgical reforms derived from a wider knowledge of early Christian worship and by a higher view of the status and functions of the laity. The problems involved in reunion vary according to the different bodies of Christians between whom it is envisaged.

Reunion between the C of E and the RC Church, often considered since the 17th cent., notably in the time of the *Oxford and post-Tractarian movements and at the *Malines Conversations (1921–1925), has recently become a more practical issue. In the period since the end of the Second World War (1945), there has been a gradual but marked change towards liberalism in the attitude of the RC Church towards other communions. This was reflected in the visit to the Pope in 1960 of Abp. G. F. *Fisher, the first Archbishop of Canterbury to be received in Rome since the Reformation, and in the invitations to non-RC Churches to send observers to attend the Second *Vatican Council. During the preparations for the Council in 1960 Pope *John XXIII established a 'Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity', which was made permanent by *Paul VI. The Council's own Decree on Ecumenism described members of other communions as 'separated brethren' rather than outside the Church. The same spirit inspired the 'Directorium de re oecumenica' (1967), which recommended the establishment of ecumenical commissions in each country, as well as issuing directions about *Baptism administered in other Churches and dealing with questions of RC participation in common worship with members of other communions. In 1968 a permanent *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission (q.v.) was set up; similar contacts were established by the RC Church with the American *Lutherans in 1965 and with the World *Methodist Council in 1967.

Reunion with the *Orthodox Church has also been frequently attempted by both Roman and non-Roman Churches. After the short-lived union effected by the Council of *Florence (1439) there were other less important rapprochements. Friendly relations with the C of E were maintained until in 1725 Abp. *Wake disillusioned the Patriarch of Jerusalem about the status of the *Nonjurors, who had been in contact with the Orthodox since 1716. Several attempts in the 19th cent. came to nothing, including the Conferences at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875. In 1864 the 'Eastern Church Association' was founded, which became in 1906 the '*Anglican and Eastern Churches Association', and the *Lambeth Conference of 1908 appointed a Committee to confer with the E. Patriarchs. The Lambeth Conference of 1930 discussed the question of unity with Orthodox delegates, and progress has been made on the question of the validity of *Anglican Ordinations. The relative independence of the various Orthodox Churches has been a difficulty, but the first pan-Orthodox Conference at Rhodes in 1961 decided to open discussions with the RC Church and with the C of E. Some Orthodox Churches sent observers to the Second Vatican Council, and in 1965 the mutual anathemas of 1054 between the E. and W. Churches were lifted.

Schemes for reunion between the C of E and foreign Protestant bodies were discussed in the 16th and 17th cents. In 1708 Frederick I of Prussia sought to unite the Lutheran and Reformed Churches in his kingdom, and to introduce episcopacy by entering into union with the C of E. Negotiations continued until his death in 1713. A loose union between Lutherans and the Reformed Churches was imposed in 1817, and a fresh, but again unsuccessful, attempt to introduce episcopacy was made in 1841 by the establishment of the *Jerusalem Bishopric (q.v.). Intercommunion between the C of E and the *Old Catholics was established in 1932.

There have been several efforts at uniting English dissenting bodies with the Established Church. At the Restoration an attempt was made to 'comprehend' *Presbyterians and *Independents, but the *Savoy Conference (1661) failed, and similar suggestions made in 1688 were without success, as were private conversations in the middle of the 18th cent. In the 19th cent. reunion between the C of E and the Free Churches was advocated by T. *Arnold (1832), A. P. *Stanley (1834), Thomas *Chalmers (1843) and by W. T. Mowbray, the founder of the Home Reunion Society (1873). The Lambeth Conference of 1888 laid down four conditions for such union, known as the '*Lambeth Quadrilateral' (q.v.). The *Kikuyu Conference (1913, q.v.) showed a widespread desire among missionaries for federation and intercommunion without waiting for dogmatic agreement or uniformity in Church order. As a result of the 'Appeal to all Christian People', issued by the Lambeth Conference of 1920, exploratory conversations took place between representatives of the C of E and the Federal Council of Evangelical Free Churches (1920–5), and further conversations followed the Lambeth Conference of 1930. The main difficulties turned on the question of the ministry. Fresh impetus to the movement for reunion was given by the suggestion of G. F. Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury, in a Cambridge University sermon in 1946, that the Free Churches might, without surrendering their identity, 'take episcopacy into their system' and thus prepare the way for intercommunion in England. Conversations interrupted by the Second World War were resumed and resulted in the publication of 'Church Relations in England' (1946). The response of the Methodist Church led to the beginning of the '*Anglican–Methodist Conversations' (q.v.). Meanwhile in 1964 a '*Faith and Order' Conference at Nottingham passed a resolution that the *British Council of Churches should work and pray together for unity by 1980. The English Churches' Unity Commission, established in 1974 in response to an invitation from the *United Reformed Church, in 1976 issued Visible Unity: Ten Propositions. This proposed a Covenant under which the membership, ministers, and sacraments of the Churches involved should be mutually recognized and accepted. The Churches' Council for Covenanting was set up in 1978 by the C of E, the *Disciples of Christ, and the Methodist, *Moravian and United Reformed Churches. After being accepted by the Methodist and United Reformed Churches, the Covenant proposals were rejected by the C of E in 1982.

In other parts of the world a number of unions have taken place, of which the most influential has been the establishment in 1947 of the Church of *South India (q.v.). Apart from the Jerusalem Bishopric, this was the first union between episcopal and non-episcopal bodies. The long period before the attainment of organic unity presented difficulties which have been avoided in the establishment of the Churches of *North India (1970) and *Pakistan (1970), where an act unifying the ministries took place during the same service as the unification of the constituent bodies.

The unions which have taken place during the past half-century largely represent the healing of past internal dissensions, and have been largely on a geographical basis. The United Church of *Canada was established in 1925, and includes former Methodists, *Congregationalists and *Presbyterians. In 1929 the *United Free Church of Scotland, formed in 1900 by the union of the *Free Church of Scotland and the *United Presbyterian Church, merged with the Established Church of *Scotland. In 1938 Reformed and Free Chuches in France came together. In *Japan a union imposed by the government in 1941 still unites Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, and some *Baptists; other Churches have since left the union. In 1932 the Methodist Church of Great Britain was formed by the union of the *Wesleyan, *Primitive and *United Methodist Churches, while in 1939 three Methodist bodies in the United States united.

In the United States there have been a number of other unions of Protestant Churches. In 1931 the Christian Churches and the Congregational Churches united to form the Congregational Christian Churches; in 1934 the Evangelical Synod and the Reformed Churches united as the Evangelical Reformed Church; and both resulting bodies united in 1957 as the *United Church of Christ. In 1958 the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the United Presbyterian Church of North America united; in 1961 the American Lutheran Church was joined by the Evangelical Lutheran Church and the United Evangelical Lutheran Church; and in 1962 the American Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Finnish Evangelical Lutheran Church and the United Lutheran Church in America united to form the Lutheran Church in America. The largest of these unions was that between the Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren in 1968 to form the United Methodist Church in the United States and Canada, which claims over 11 million members. Meanwhile, following a suggestion of Dr. E. C. Blake in 1960, the Consultation on Church Union was formed in 1962. Its original members were the United Presbyterian Church, the *Protestant Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church and the United Church of Christ, but it has since come to include nearly all the non-Roman Churches in the U.S.A., apart from the Lutherans and Baptists. In 1970 this body produced a 'Plan of Union' for a proposed 'Church of Christ Uniting'; this was set aside in 1973.

Plans for a union on a confessional rather than a geographical basis were initiated in 1966 between the International Congregational Council (founded in 1891) and the World Alliance of Reformed and Presbyterian Churches (founded in 1875); these came to fruition in 1970. A parallel development was the union, two years later, of the Presbyterian Church of England and the Congregational Church of England and Wales to form the United Reformed Church. The union of two confessional organizations on a world-wide basis appears to be without precedent, and some commentators regard this development, along with the abandonment by the RC Church of the rigid position which it formerly adopted, as the most significant factor in present-day hopes for visible unity among the Christian Churches.

See also Ecumenical Movement and Uniat Churches.

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity 1920–4 (1924); id., Second Series (1930); id., Third Series 1930–48 (1948); id., Fourth Series 1948–57 (1958). Digest of the Proceedings of the Consultation on Church Union (Fanwood, N.J., 1963 ff.).

J. H. *Shakespeare, The Churches at the Cross Roads

(1918); S. L. Ollard, Reunion (1919); A. C. *Headlam, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920); M. J. Congar, O.P., Chrétiens désunis (1937; Eng. tr., 1939); H. L. Goudge, The Church of England and Reunion (1938); K. D. Mackenzie (ed.), Union of Christendom (1938); T. Sartory, O.S.B., Die ökumenische Bewegung und die Einheit der Kirche (1955; Eng. tr., 1963). A. Bea, S.J., L'unione dei cristiani ([1962]; Eng. tr., 1963), and other works of this author. [C.] K. Sansbury, Truth, Unity and Concord. Anglican Faith in Ecumenical Setting (1967). Annie Perchenet, Renouveau communautaire et unité chrétienne. Regards sur les communautés anglicanes et protestantes (1967; Eng. tr., 1969). P. A. Crow, The Ecumenical Movement in Bibliographical Outline (New York, 1965). See also histories of the Ecumenical Movement, cited s.v., esp. Ruth Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954; ed. 2, with revised bibl., 1967; vol. ii: The Ecumenical Advance, 1948–1968, ed. H. E. Fey, 1970).

REUSCH, FRANZ HEINRICH (1825–1900), *Old Catholic theologian. He taught at Bonn from 1854, holding a full professorship in OT exegesis from 1861 onwards. Throughout his life he was closely associated with his former teacher J. J. I. von *Döllinger, and shared his intellectual ideals as well as his liberal views of Church history. In 1870 he strongly opposed the infallibility decrees of the *Vatican Council and in 1872 was excommunicated on his refusal to subscribe. Thereafter he took a leading part in organizing in its earlier years the Old Catholic Church and in arranging the Reunion Conferences which were held at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875. When, however, the Old Catholics abolished clerical celibacy in 1878, Reusch objected and retired into lay communion. An untiring student, Reusch wrote many books, his earlier ones dealing with OT subjects and his later ones mainly with modern ecclesiastical history. Much of his best work was done in conjunction with Döllinger, notably a history of post-Tridentine moral theology (Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten in der römisch-katholischen Kirche seit dem XVI. Jahrhundert, 2 vols., 1889). His other writings include Luis de Leon und die spanische Inquisition (1873); Der Prozess Galileis und die Jesuiten (1879); and Index der verbotenen Bücher (2 vols., 1883–5).

Life by L. K. Götz, incl. list of Reusch's works (Gotha, 1901). [Dr.] Menn, 'Fritz Heinrich Reusch als Schriftsteller' in Revue internationale de Théologie, xiv (1906), pp. 38–72, 462–8, 729–44; xv (1907), pp. 75–93, 462–80. In English there is a brief sketch by J. E. B. Mayor (Cambridge, 1901). L. K. Goetz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 689–91.

REVELATION. In Christian theology the word is used both of the corpus of truth about Himself which God discloses to us and of the process by which His communication of it takes place. Traditional theology has tended to conceive of revelation in the latter sense as taking place through propositions; but there has been an increasing tendency among many modern theologians to insist that Divine revelation reaches us largely, and even primarily, through God's activity (His 'mighty acts', magnalia Dei; cf. Acts 2. 11), rather than in propositional statements. Since it is commonly held that there are certain truths about God which can be learnt through man's natural endowments (e.g. His existence, which such philosophers as *Aristotle who were outside the Christian covenant believed that they could establish), while others, e.g. the Doctrine of the Holy *Trinity, are not knowable except by faith, Christian philosophers have often held that a sharp distinction must be drawn between 'truths of reason' and 'truths of revelation'. This distinction received its classic elaboration from St. *Thomas Aquinas. It has its counterpart in the antithesis between 'natural theology' and 'revealed theology'. Over against this, there has been another school of theologians who have held that truths of revelation and truths of reason differ only in degree. When revelation has once been formulated, it is known as '*dogma' (q.v.). Christians of the Protestant tradition hold that all revelation is sufficiently contained in Scripture; Catholics on the other hand commonly maintain that part of it is also to be found in the unwritten traditions of the Church, but in recent years RC theologians have drawn a less sharp distinction between tradition and Scripture and have rather emphasised their ultimate unity. See also Tradition.

Modern discussions include A. B. *Bruce, The Chief End of Revelation (1881); J. R. *Illingworth, Reason and Revelation. An Essay in Christian Apology (1902); E. *Brunner, Philosophie und Offenbarung (1925); id., Offenbarung und Vernunft. Die Lehre von der christlichen Glaubenserkenntnis (Zürich, 1941; Eng. tr. as Revelation and Reason, 1947); P. *Tillich, 'Die Idee der Offenbarung' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, N.F., viii (1927), pp. 403–12; J. Baillie–H. Martin (edd.), Revelation (1927); R. *Bultmann, Der Begriff der Offenbarung im Neuen Testament (Sammlung gemeinverständlicher Vorträge und Schriften aus dem Gebiet der Theologie und Religionsgeschichte, cxxxv; 1929); H. Dieckmann, De Revelatione Christiana. Tractatus Philosophico-Historicus (Freiburg i.Br., 1930); J. Baillie, The Idea of Revelation in the Light of Recent Discussion (1956); W. Pannenberg (ed.), Offenbarung als Geschichte (Göttingen, 1961; Eng. tr., New York–London, 1968); H. D. McDonald, Theories of Revelation. An Historical Study 1860–1960 (1963); K. *Rahner–J. Ratzinger, Offenbarung und Überlieferung (Quaestiones Disputatae, xvii; 1965; Eng. tr., 1967); G. Moran, F.S.C., Theology of Revelation (New York, 1966; London, 1967), incl. Eng. tr. of the Dogmatic Constitution on Revelation at the Second Vatican Council, pp. 201–14. N. Iung in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2580–2618, s.v. 'Révélation', with bibl. See also bibl. to Tradition.

REVELATION, Book of. The last Book of the NT and the only one which is an *Apocalypse. Its author, described in the title as 'John the Divine', has traditionally been identified with St. *John the Apostle.

At the time of writing, the author was in the island of *Patmos 'for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus' (1. 9). He prefaces his Book with letters to the 'Seven Churches of Asia' (*Ephesus, Smyrna, *Pergamum, *Thyatira, Sardis, *Philadelphia, and *Laodicea). The remainder of the Book consists of a series of visions. In the first the author sees the glory of God (ch. 4) and the book sealed with seven seals which only Christ can open (5); as the first six seals are opened, four horsemen appear, presaging the approach of the end (6); the 144,000 faithful of Israel are sealed on the forehead and an innumerable multitude of the redeemed is seen in Heaven (7); the opening of the seventh seal begins a series of seven trumpet calls, heralding various disasters (8 f.); after the 'seven thunders', which the seer is bidden not to record, the angel's book is given him to eat (10. 1–11. 14); and the seventh trumpet call is followed by the proclamation of the kingdom of God and of Christ (11. 15–19). Then follow two general eschatological visions: the woman who is persecuted by a dragon, and war in heaven between Michael and his angels and Satan (12); and then a pair of visions of a beast from the sea who blasphemes against God and a beast from the earth who compels all men to worship the first beast (13). The execution of judgement on 'Babylon the Great' is followed by world judgement, described under various images (14–16). The destruction of Babylon, now described as a harlot, is vividly portrayed (17 f.). Then comes the 'marriage supper of the Lamb'; the beast and the 'false prophet' are destroyed in a great battle and Satan is 'bound' for a thousand years (see Millennium) and finally cast into the lake of brimstone for ever (19 f.). The Book ends with the general resurrection and judgement of souls, the 'New Heaven and the New Earth' and the 'New Jerusalem' (21. 1–22. 5), and an epilogue (22. 6–21).

The Book, which was prob. known to *Papias, is already ascribed by St. *Justin to the Apostle John. This attribution was accepted in the *Muratorian Canon, and by *Tertullian and St. *Hippolytus and (except by *Gaius, who assigned it to *Cerinthus) generally followed in the West. In the East, however, it was widely rejected, notably by the so-called *Alogi, St. *Dionysius of Alexandria (who argued against its Apostolic authorship on the ground of differences in style and content from the Fourth Gospel and believed it to be the work of some other John) and *Eusebius. Some subsequent E. writers and Councils (St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, Council of *Laodicea, St. John *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret) did not include it in the Canon, and it was omitted originally from the *Peshitta (Syriac) and *Armenian versions.

Its bitterly hostile attitude to Rome indicates that the Book cannot be earlier than the persecution under *Nero in 64. If the '*Number of the Beast' is correctly interpreted as 'Nero Caesar', this would support a connection with that Emperor. But it is unlikely that the Neronian persecution affected Asia Minor and it therefore seems probable that the Book dates from some later persecution, perhaps that of the Emp. *Domitian (81–96). In that case the implication of the cryptogram may be that Domitian was regarded as a second Nero, reflecting the current superstition that Nero was not really dead, but would return (Nero redivivus) as the leader of barbaric hordes.

The Greek of the Book, both in grammar and in vocabulary, is often uncouth. There are several points of contact with St. John's Gospel, notably in the use of the titles 'Word of God' (19. 13; cf. Jn. 1. 1) and 'Lamb of God' (Jn. 1. 29; cf. Rev. 5. 6) applied to Christ, neither of which appears elsewhere in the NT except in the Johannine Epistles. Such features would suggest a common theological background for the authors of the Gospel and Rev., but a common authorship is precluded not only by wide differences in outlook, but also by differences in language (e.g. different Greek words are used for 'Lamb': in Jn. 1. 29 ἀμνός, in Rev. 5. 6 ἀρνίον). Further, the author of Rev. nowhere claims to be an eye-witness of the Incarnate Christ and refers to the twelve Apostles in so reverential and detached a manner (21. 14) that it is improbable that he was John the son of Zebedee. However, it is not unlikely that the author's real name was John; he was an otherwise unknown Christian of Asia Minor.

Patristic commentaries include those by *Victorinus of Pettau, *Oecumenius of Tricca, and Andrew of Caesarea (J. P. Migne, PG, cvi, 215–486); important medieval commentaries by *Bede, *Richard of St.-Victor, St. *Albert the Great, and *Joachim of Fiore. Modern commentaries include those of C. J. *Vaughan (2 vols., London, 1863), W. *Bousset (K.E.K., vi, ed. 5; 1896), J. *Weiss (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, iii; 1904), H. B. *Swete (London, 1906), R. H. *Charles (2 vols., I.C.C., 1920), E. B. Allo, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1921), A. *Loisy (Paris, 1923), T. *Zahn (Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, xviii; 2 vols., 1924), E. Lohmeyer (Hb. N.T., xvi; 1926; ed. 2, 1953, with detailed bibl.), E. Lohse (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, xi; 1960), A. M. Farrer (Oxford, 1964), T. F. Glasson (Cambridge, 1965), G. B. Caird (Black's N.T. Comm., 1966), and J. [P. M.] Sweet (S.C.M. Pelican Commentaries, 1979). Collations of Gk. MSS. by H. C. Hoskier (2 vols., London, 1929). Christopher *Wordsworth, Lectures on the Apocalypse (Hulsean Lectures for 1848; 1849); F. D. *Maurice, Lectures on the Apocalypse (1861); W. Milligan, The Revelation of St. John (1886; enlarged as Lectures on the Apocalypse, 1892, and Discussions on the Apocalypse, 1893). B. *Weiss, Die Johannes-Apokalypse. Textkritische Untersuchungen und Textherstellung (T.U., vii, Hft. 1; 1891). A. S. *Peake, The Revelation of John (1919). J. E. Carpenter, The Johannine Writings. A Study of the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel (1927), pp. 3–188. A. M. Farrer, The Rebirth of Images. The Making of St. John's Apocalypse (1949). S. Giet, L'Apocalypse et l'histoire (1957). T. Holtz, Die Christologie der Apokalypse des Johannes (T.U., lxxxv; 1962). A. Feuillet. L'Apocalypse. État de la question (Studia Neotestamentica, Subsidia, iii; 1963). P. Prigent, Apocalypse et liturgie (Neuchâtel 1964). J. M. Court, Myth and History in the Book of Revelation (1979). W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904).

REVEREND (Lat. reverendus, 'worthy of being revered'). An epithet of respect applied to the clergy since the 15th cent. Since the 17th cent. it has been used as a title prefixed to their names in correspondence. Archbishops and the Bp. of Meath (as the 'Premier Bp. of Ireland') are styled 'Most Reverend', other bishops 'Right Reverend', and deans 'Very Reverend'. Abbesses, prioresses, and other nuns who have the title of 'Mother', are also styled 'Reverend'. The Moderator of the Church of Scotland is 'Right Reverend'. *Carthusian priests are an exception, all except the prior-general being styled not 'Reverend' but 'Venerable'. The legal right of Nonconformists to the title was established by the 'Keat Case' in 1876, when a faculty was ordered for the erection of a tombstone on which a *Wesleyan minister was styled 'Reverend', the incumbent having previously refused to allow it to be set up.

REVISED VERSION OF THE BIBLE, The. See Bible (English Versions), No. 4.

REVIVALISM. A type of religious worship and practice centring in evangelical revivals, or outbursts of mass religious fervour, and stimulated by intensive preaching and prayer meetings. It has been a common feature of the work of many religious bodies since the *Methodist Movement of the 18th cent., where, under the *Wesleys, G. *Whitefield, and others, it was regularly encouraged. Some bodies, e.g. the *Salvation Army, make revivalism the principal element of all their worship.

REVUE BÉNÉDICTINE. A Belgian periodical devoted esp. to the study of Christian Latin literature, issued quarterly from the abbey of *Maredsous. The first 6 vols., under the direction of Dom G. van Caloen, were issued as Le Messager des fidèles (1884–9).

REVUE BIBLIQUE. The quarterly periodical on Biblical studies which is published (at Paris) by the *Dominicans established at the convent of St.-Étienne at *Jerusalem. It was founded by M. J. *Lagrange and its first issue appeared in Jan. 1892. Its contributions on matters of Biblical archaeology tend to be of marked distinction.

REYNOLDS, EDWARD (1599–1676), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and in 1622 appointed preacher at Lincoln's Inn. He had considerable sympathies with the *Puritan Movement, but, though a member of the *Westminster Assembly, did not take the Covenant until 1644. In 1647 he was one of the parliamentary visitors at Oxford, and in 1648–50 was Dean of *Christ Church, and again in 1659, when he was ejected for refusing to subscribe the Engagement. At the Restoration he conformed and took a prominent part in the efforts then made to effect a reconciliation between Episcopalians and Presbyterians. In 1661 he was made Bp. of Norwich. He published many sermons and short devotional works which maintained a wide popularity down to the early 19th century.

Collected edd. of his works, London, 1658 and 1679; full ed. by A. Chalmers, 6 vols., ib., 1826, with memoir in vol i, pp. xvii–lxxiv. W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., xlviii (1896), p. 40 f.

REYNOLDS, JOHN. See Rainolds, John.

RHADAGUNDE, St. See Radegunde, St.

RHEIMS. See Reims.

RHENANUS, BEATUS (1485–1547), German humanist. A native of Schlettstadt, he studied at *Paris from 1503 to 1507, where Jacob *Faber Stapulensis taught *Aristotelian philosophy. From 1511 to 1526 he lived at Basle, where he became interested in the publishing activities of J. *Froben, and from 1526 onwards at Schlettstadt, here pursuing his philosophical and historical studies. His earliest work was a biography of *Geiler of Kaisersberg (1510). Later he produced many editions of the classics and of the Fathers, e.g. of Velleius Paterculus, from a MS. found by him at Murbach (1520), and of *Tertullian (1521). His studies of German antiquities resulted in the Rerum Germanicarum Libri Tres (1531), the best German work in critical historical research of the period. In 1540–1 he published the works of his friend, D. *Erasmus, with a Life, in 9 vols. Like him, Rhenanus at first favoured the Reformers, esp. their rejection of *indulgences and *auricular confession, but he changed his attitude when the revolutionary character of Protestantism became more apparent.

Correspondence ed. A. Horawitz–K. Hartfelder (Leipzig, 1886). The primary authority is the life by J. *Sturm (Basle, 1551). A. Horawitz, 'Beatus Rhenanus. Ein biographischer Versuch' in Sb. (Wien), lxx (1872), pp. 189–244; id., 'Des Beatus Rhenanus literarische Thätigkeit in den Jahren 1508–1531', ib., lxxi (1872), pp. 643–90; id., 'Des Beatus Rhenanus literarische Thätigkeit in den Jahren 1530–1547', ib., lxxii (1872), pp. 323–76. G. Knod, Aus der Bibliothek des Beatus Rhenanus. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Humanismus (Strassburg, 1889). W. Teichmann, 'Die kirchliche Haltung des Beatus Rhenanus' in Z.K.G., xxvi (1905), pp. 363–81. H. Kaiser, 'Aus den letzten Jahren des Beatus Rhenanus' in Zeitschrift für die Geschichte des Oberrheins, lxx (1916), pp. 30–52.

RHODES, KNIGHTS OF. See Hospitallers.

RHODO (2nd cent.), anti-*Gnostic apologist. A native of Asia Minor who became, for a time, a disciple of *Tatian at Rome, he wrote under the Emp. Commodus (180–192). His works included a treatise against the *Marcionites and a commentary on the *Hexaemeron (Εἰς τὴν Ἑξαήμερον Ὑπόμνημα).

The few surviving fragments, nearly all from *Eusebius, H.E., v. 13, are pr. in M. J. *Routh (ed.), Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2, Oxford, 1846), pp. 435–46; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, v, 1331–8. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 392–4.

RHYTHMICAL OFFICE. A form of the *Breviary office, popular in the Middle Ages, in which besides the hymns almost all the other parts except the psalms and lessons were put into metre or rhyme. It developed from the practice of enlarging on the lives of the saints in the *nocturns by additions in rhythm, and was thus also known as a 'Historia'. The construction of such rhythmical offices was a popular diversion for monks possessed of poetic gifts. Among the better-known writers of these offices are St. *Odo (d. 942) and St. *Odilo (d. 1048), abbots of *Cluny, and *Fulbert, Bp. of Chartres (d. 1028).

R. Jonsson, Historia. Études sur la genèse des offices versifiés (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, xv; 1968).

RICAUT, PAUL. See Rycaut, Paul.

RICCI, MATTEO (1552–1610), *Jesuit missionary in China. He entered the Roman College in 1571, where he was specially trained in mathematics, astronomy, and other branches of natural science. In 1578 he was sent to Goa, and in 1582 to Macao, where he studied the Chinese language and civilization. In 1583 he settled at Chao-K'ing, whence he was expelled in 1589, but went to Shao-chow in the same year, to Nanking in 1599, and finally, in 1601, to Peking, where he stayed till his death. Gaining the esteem of the Chinese by displaying and explaining to them European scientific instruments, esp. clocks and a map of the world, he made many converts by skilfully adapting Christianity to Chinese notions. One of the fruits of his missionary experience was his work The True Doctrine of God (1595), written in Chinese, as well as a Chinese translation of the Ten Commandments and a Chinese Catechism, which have become standard manuals for many generations of missionaries. His methods, however, which attempted to recommend Christianity to the Chinese by a far-reaching adaptation to their semi-religious ceremonies, gave rise to a protracted controversy after his death which was finally decided against him by *Clement XI in 1704 and 1715.

Opere storiche, ed. P. Tacchi Venturi, S.J. (2 vols., Macerata, 1911–13). Eng. tr. of his Journals of 1583–1610 by L. J. Gallaher, S.J. (New York, 1953). P. M. D'Elia, S.J. (ed.), Fonti ricciane (Reale Accademia d'Italia, 3 vols., 1942–9). H. Bernard, S.J., Le Père Matthieu Ricci et la société chinoise de son temps, 1552–1610 (2 vols., Tientsin, 1937). J. Bettray, Die Akkommodationsmethode des P. Matteo Ricci S.J. in China (Analecta Gregoriana, lxxvi; Rome, 1955). V. Cronin, The Wise Man from the West (popular biography; 1955). Sommervogel, vi (1895), cols. 1792–5.

RICCI, SCIPIONE DE' (1741–1810) ecclesiastical reformer. In 1780 he was created Bp.

of Pistoia-Prato in Tuscany at the instance of Leopold I. He took the initiative among the Tuscan prelates in introducing into N. Italy *Josephinist doctrines and a higher standard of morals. To this end he founded in 1783 a theological academy at Prato to which he appointed professors in sympathy with his views and carried through a plan of reform at the Synod of *Pistoia in 1786. He was esp. opposed to the excesses (as he held them) of the current devotions to the *Sacred Heart. His proposals however, met with much opposition and in 1790 he was deposed from his see and retired into private life. Later he became reconciled to the RC Church.

His Memorie (ed. A. Galli, 2 vols., Florence, 1865) is the chief authority. M. Vaussard (ed.), Correspondance: Scipione de' Ricci–Henri Grégoire (1796–1807) (Publications de l'Institut Français de Florence, 1e Série. Collection d'Études d'histoire, de critique et de philologie, xiv; Florence–Paris, 1963). There is also a full Life by L. J. A. de Potter (3 vols., Brussels, 1825). B. Matteuci, Scipione de' Ricci (Studi e Documenti di Storia Religiosa; Brescia, 1941). E. Passerin, 'Il fallimento dell'offensiva riformista di Scipione de' Ricci secondo nuovi documenti (1781–1788)' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, ix (1955), pp. 99–131, incl. texts.

RICHARD OF CHICHESTER, St. (c. 1197–1253), Bp. of *Chichester. He was born at 'Wych' (i.e. Droitwich), and is hence sometimes known as 'Richard of Wych'. After studying at Oxford and Paris, he became chancellor of the university of Oxford c. 1235 and a little later, under Abp. St. *Edmund Rich, chancellor of *Canterbury. He accompanied St. Edmund in his exile and was with him on his death-bed (1242). In 1244 he was elected Bp. of Chichester but, on the refusal of Henry III, who favoured Richard Passelew, a rival candidate, to surrender the temporalities of the see, he obtained consecration from *Innocent IV at Lyons in 1245. Only under the threat of excommunication did Henry give way. Richard was a man of deep spirituality and an excellent administrator of his diocese, where he did much to raise the standard of clerical life. He was canonized by Urban IV in 1262. His shrine in Chichester Cathedral, where many cures are said to have been wrought, was destroyed by order of *Henry VIII in 1538. Feast day, 3 Apr.

His Statutes are printed in F. M. Powicke–C. R. Cheney (ed.), Councils & Synods with Other Documents relating to the English Church, ii. Part 1. 1205–1265 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 451–67; his will, with notes by W. H. Blaauw, in Sussex Archaeological Collections, i (1848), pp. 164–92. An almost contemporary life by Ralf Bocking, with account of miracles and the bull of canonization, in AA.SS., April I (1675), pp. 282–318. Further life by J. Capgrave, ib., pp. 278–82. J. H. Cooper, 'Some Notes on the Life of Richard of Chichester' in Sussex Archaeological Collections, xliv (1901), pp. 184–203. M. R. Capes, O.S.D., Richard of Wyche, Labourer, Scholar, Bishop and Saint, 1197–1253 [c. 1913]. E. F. Jacob, 'St. Richard of Chichester', J.E.H., vii (1956), pp. 174–88. Mrs. Tout in D.N.B., xlviii (1896), pp. 202–4; S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H., p. 514 f., s.v. 'Richard of Wych'; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 2099–2101, s.v. 'Wyche, Richard de'.

RICHARD OF MIDDLETON (born c. 1249), 'Richardus de Mediavilla', Franciscan philosopher and theologian. It is disputed whether he was French or English and very little is known of his life. As a bachelor of theology in 1283 he was one of those charged to examine the writings of Petrus *Olivi. He was regent master at Paris from 1284 to 1287 and he was in the household of St. Louis of Toulouse in 1296. The date of his death is unknown. His chief writings are a Commentary on the 'Sentences' of Peter Lombard, notable for its clarity and precision, Quodlibets and Quaestiones disputatae. At a number of points he abandoned the *Augustinian doctrines, traditionally defended in his order, in favour of the teaching of St. *Thomas Aquinas. He rejected the thesis that there was an immediate bond of union between the human intellect and God, the uncreated Light, and also denied the validity of St. *Anselm's *Ontological Argument for the being of God. In his 'Quodlibeta' he showed a keen interest in the phenomena of hypnotism.

His commentary on the Sentences was pr. at Venice, c. 1475, 1489, and 1499; also, with the Quodlibeta, at Brescia, 1591. Quaestio Disputata de Privilegio Martini Papae IV, first ed. F. M. Delorme, O.F.M. (Quaracchi, 1925). R. Zavalloni, O.F.M., Richard de Mediavilla et la controverse sur la pluralité des formes. Textes inédits et étude critique (Philosophes médiévaux, ii; 1951). P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique de 1260 à 1320, i (Bibliothèque thomiste, v; 1925), pp. 267–73, ii (ib., xxi; 1935), p. 257. E. Hocedez, S.J., Richard de Middleton. Sa vie, ses œuvres, sa doctrine (S.S.L., vi; 1925). J. Lechner, Die Sakramentenlehre des Richard von Mediavilla (Münchener Studien zur Historischen Theologie, v; 1925). P. Rucker, O.F.M., Der Ursprung unserer Begriffe nach Richard von Mediavilla (B.G.P.M., xxxi, Hft. 1; 1934). M. Schmaus, 'Die theologische Methode des Richard von Mediavilla' in Franziskanische Studien, xlviii (1966), pp. 254–65. E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 347–50 and 696–8. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2669–75, s.v. 'Richard de Mediavilla'; V. Heynck in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1292, s.v. 'Richard v. Mediavilla'; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1253–5, s.v. 'Mediavilla, Richard de', each with detailed bibl.

RICHARD OF ST.-VICTOR (d. 1173), *Victorine mystic and theologian. Apparently a native of Scotland, he came as a young man to the Abbey of St.-Victor in Paris. He became sub-prior in 1159, and prior in 1162. His most important treatise was his 'De Trinitate' in six books, in which his main philosophical doctrines are contained; but he also wrote many other works, largely devoted to Scriptural exegesis, e.g. his 'De praeparatione animi ad contemplationem, seu Liber dictus Benjamin minor' and his 'De gratia contemplationis, seu Benjamin maior'. Despite his mystical temperament, Richard insisted on the importance of demonstration and argument in matters of theology, and he emphasized the folly of contentment with an array of mere authorities. In his stress on the need of an empirical basis for the proof of God's existence, he pointed forward to the position of St. *Thomas Aquinas. But unlike St. Thomas he held that it was possible to arrive at the essentials of the Christian doctrine of the Trinity by the processes of speculative reasoning.

Collected ed. of his Opera, Venice, 1506; also ed., with brief life by John of Toulouse, a Victorine (Rouen, 1650; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxcvi, 1–1378). Also by Richard of St.-Victor are the 'Sermones Centum' pr. as an appendix to the work of *Hugh of St.-Victor in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxvii, 899–1210, and the exposition of Acts 12. 1–11 pr. under the name of *Fulbert of Chartres, ib., cxl, 222–306. Sermons et opuscules spirituels inédits, ed. J. Chatillon–W. J. Tulloch, with Fr. tr. by J. Barthélemy (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité [Bruges], 1951 ff.); Opuscules théologiques, ed. J. Ribaillier (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Age, xv; 1967); Liber Exceptionum, ed. J. Chatillon (ib., v; 1958); De Trinitate, ed. J. Ribaillier (ib., vi; 1958) and, with Fr. tr., by G. Salet, S.J. (S.C., lxiii; 1959). Eng. tr. of Selections from his Spiritual Writings, with introd. by Claire Kirchberger (London, 1957); also of 'Benjamin Minor' by S. V. Yankowski (Ansbach, 1960). G. Buonamici, Riccardo da S. Vittore (1898). J. Ebner, Die Erkenntnisse Richards von St. Viktor (B.G.P.M., xix, Hft. 4; 1917). C. Ottaviano, 'Riccardo di

S. Vittore. La vita, le opere, il pensiero' in Memorie della R. Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Classe di scienze morali, storiche et filologiche, Ser. 6, iv (1933), pp. 411–541. A. M. Éthier, O.P., Le 'De Trinitate' de Richard de Saint-Victor (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, ix; Paris–Ottawa, 1939). L. Ott, Untersuchungen zur theologischen Briefliteratur der Frühscholastik (B.G.P.M., xxxiv; 1937), pp. 549–657 ('Die theologischen Briefe Richards von St. Viktor'). G. Dumeige, Richard de Saint-Victor et l'idée chrétienne de l'amour (Paris thesis, 1952), with bibl. pp. 171–185. D. van den Eynde, O.F.M., 'Les Commentaires sur Joël, Abdias et Nahum attribués à Hugues de Saint-Victor' in Franciscan Studies, xvii (1957), pp. 363–72. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2676–95, s.v., with bibl.; J. Chatillon in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1293 f., s.v.

RICHELIEU, ARMAND JEAN DU PLESSIS (1585–1642), French cardinal and politician. Destined at first for a military career, he became an ecclesiastic in order to secure the bishopric of Luçon which had originally been intended for his elder brother who entered the *Grande Chartreuse in 1602. Having been nominated bishop by *Henry IV in 1606, he was consecrated at Rome in 1607. He administered his diocese wisely, entrusted the *Capuchins and *Oratorians with missions in all the parishes, and encouraged the conversion of Protestants. Chosen to represent the clergy of Poitou in the States General in 1614, he soon gained influence with the queen mother, Maria de' Medici, and the young king, Louis XIII, who appointed him Secretary of State in 1616. Dismissed after the assassination of his protector, C. Concini, he retired to Blois and, in 1618, was exiled to *Avignon. During his enforced leisure he wrote his Défense des principaux points de la foi catholique (1617) against the *Huguenots, and his famous catechism, Instruction du chrétien (1619), which was translated into many languages. He was recalled to Paris in 1619 owing to the influence of the Capuchin Father Joseph, who became his intimate friend and adviser. In 1620 Richelieu effected the reconciliation between the king and his mother and two years later was created cardinal by Gregory XV. He became president of the Council of Ministers in 1624, and from 1629 was chief minister and actual ruler of France. His policy aimed at the establishment of absolutism in France and at the destruction of the Hapsburg-Spanish power in Europe. For the achievement of the former end he fought the Huguenots, who were allied with the feudal aristocracy. They were defeated at La Rochelle in 1628 and their political privileges were abolished. In his foreign policy, on the other hand, he supported the Protestant German princes and *Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden against the Emperor, thus seriously impeding the work of Catholic restoration in Germany. Though an enemy of the *Jesuits, many of whom denounced his policy, he opposed *Jansenism and dispersed the solitaries of *Port-Royal in 1638. He favoured the independence of the French Church from Rome and was even suspected of aiming at being made 'patriarch' and thus concentrating the supreme spiritual power of France in his hands. Abbot General of *Cluny from 1629, he undertook the reform of the *Benedictine Order. He was a patron of art and literature and, in 1635, founded the French Academy. His Traité de la perfection du chrétien was published posthumously (1646); it is a brief exposition of the threefold way of purgation, illumination, and union, prob. largely influenced by the mystical teaching of Father Joseph. See also Thirty Years War.

Lettres, instructions diplomatiques et papiers d'état du Cardinal de Richelieu, ed. M. Avenel (Collection des Documents inédits sur l'Histoire de France, 8 vols., 1853–77); crit. ed. of Richelieu's Testament politique by L. André (Paris, 1947); facsimile repr. of the 1642 ed. of Richelieu's Instruction du chrétien, publd. at Paris, 1944, to commemorate the third centenary of the foundation of the Imprimerie Nationale de France, founded by Louis XIII on Richelieu's advice in 1640. The best ed. of the Mémoires du Cardinal de Richelieu (written after his death) is that publd. by the Société de l'Histoire de France, 1907 ff.; see also the Rapports et notes sur l'édition publd. by the same Society, 1905 ff. G. Hanotaux–le Duc de la Force, Histoire du Cardinal de Richelieu (6 vols. in 7 parts, 1893–1947). Other studies include those of R. Lodge ('Foreign Statesmen', London, 1896), J. B. Perkins ('Heroes of the Nations', New York, &c., 1900), A. Bailly (Paris, 1934; Eng. tr., 1936), C. J. Burckhardt (4 vols., Munich, 1935–67; abridged Eng. tr. of vols. 1 and 2, 1940 and 1970), L. Batiffol (Paris, 1937), and C. V. Wedgwood ('Teach Yourself History', London, 1949). G. Fagniez, Le Père Joseph et Richelieu, 1577–1638 (2 vols., 1894). V. L. Tapié, La France de Louis XIII et de Richelieu (1967). S. Leathes in C.M.H., iv (1906), ch. 4, pp. 118–57, with full bibl. to date, pp. 873–83. W. F. Church, 'Publications on Cardinal Richelieu since 1945. A Bibliographical Study' in Journal of Modern History, xxxvii (1965), pp. 421–44. There is an attractive character study in Aldous Huxley, Grey Eminence (1941).

RIDLEY, NICHOLAS (c. 1500–55), Bp. of London. After studying at Cambridge, the *Sorbonne, and Louvain, he became Fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge (c. 1530), chaplain to T. *Cranmer (1537), vicar of Herne in Kent (1538), and master (1540) of Pembroke Hall. In 1547 he became Bp. of *Rochester and in 1550, upon E. *Bonner's deprivation, of London. From c. 1535 he had had definite leanings towards the teachings of the Reformers, partly through the study of *Ratramnus's book on the Eucharist, and from the accession of *Edward VI his Protestantism became pronounced. He assisted in the compilation of the BCP of 1549 and in the establishment of Protestantism at Cambridge University. In 1553 he supported the claims of Lady Jane Grey to the Crown, and on Mary's accession was deprived of his see. After the Oxford disputations (1554) he was excommunicated, and, when heresy was made a capital offence, was burned with H. *Latimer at Oxford, 16 Oct. 1555. Like Latimer, he preached on the social injustices of his age, and a sermon he preached before the King was partly the occasion of the foundation of Christ's Hospital, St. Thomas's Hospital, and Bridewell. In the American BCP (1979), feast day (with Latimer and Cranmer), 16 Oct.

Surviving works ed. H. Christmas (Parker Society, i; 1841), with biographical notice, pp. i–xvi; selections also in The Fathers of the English Church, iv (1809), pp. 31–267, with account of his life and martyrdom based on J. *Foxe, pp. 3–25; his A Brief Declaration of the Lord's Supper, ed. H. C. G. *Moule (1895), with biographical sketch, pp. 1–68. Gloucester Ridley, The Life of Nicholas Ridley (1763). Modern life by J. G. Ridley (London, 1957). W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., xlviii (1896), pp. 286–90.

RIDSDALE JUDGEMENT. The judgement of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, pronounced on 12 May 1877, acc. to which Eucharistic vestments were declared illegal in the C of E, but the *Eastward Position permitted, provided it did not conceal from the congregation the *manual acts. The defendant was the Rev. C. J. Ridsdale, vicar of St. Peter's, Folkestone.

The Judgement was fully reported as 'The Folkestone Ritual Case' in The Times, Monday, 14 May, 1877, pp. 11–13.

RIEMENSCHNEIDER, TILMAN (c. 1460–1531), German wood-carver and sculptor. He was a native of Osterode (Harz) and lived from 1483 until his death at Würzburg, where he became Bürgermeister in 1520. He took a prominent part on the side of the insurgents in the *Peasants' Revolt of 1525. His work, which was in both wood and stone, was marked by deep religious feeling; and now, after three centuries of neglect, it is considered among the most remarkable of the late Gothic style. In his altar-pieces he secured unity by focusing the design on a central point. In place of colour, he achieved his effects by the play of light, the texture of his material and the highly expressive faces of his figures. Among his most notable works are the Altar of the Blessed Sacrament in S. Jakobus, Rothenburg ob der Tauber (1499–1504); the tomb of Rudolf von Scherenberg (1496–9) and carvings in the Lady Chapel (1500–5) and on the High Altar (1508–10) in Würzburg Cathedral; and the tomb of the Emp. Henry II and his wife, Cunigunde, in Bamberg Cathedral (1499–1513).

J. Bier, Die Jugendwerke Tilman Riemenschneiders (1925); K. Gerstenberg, Tilman Riemenschneider (Vienna, 1943); H. M. von Freeden, Tilman Riemenschneider (Frankfurt, 1954; ed. 2, 1959). G. Poensgen (ed.), Der Windsheimer Zwölfbotenaltar von Tilman Riemenschneider im kurpfälzischen Museum zu Heidelberg (1955). H. Muth in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1306 f.

RIENZO, COLA DI (c. 1313–54), i.e. Nicolas [the son] of Lorenzo, Tribune of the Roman people. The son of a Roman inn-keeper, he passed his early years at Anagni, where intensive study of the Latin classical authors inspired him with the idea of restoring Rome to its past greatness. Later he became a notary. In 1343 he was sent on a public mission to Clement VI at *Avignon in a vain attempt to secure the Pope's return to Rome. By describing eloquently the bad rule of the nobles in the city, he gained, however, Clement's confidence and in 1344 he was nominated secretary to the Camera Capitolina.

On his return to Rome Rienzo agitated for the restoration of order and freedom and prepared for revolution. In May 1347 he called the people to the Capitol, gave them a new constitution, and was invested by them with almost dictatorial powers. The Pope sanctioned his action, but his luxurious life and his attempts at uniting all Italy under his leadership soon provoked opposition, and at the instigation of the Papal legate for Italy the Roman barons whom he had expelled rose against him. In Dec. 1347 he fled from Rome and lived for two years with the *Spiritual Franciscans at Monte Maiella. In 1350 he went to Prague to deliver a prophetic message to Charles IV, who arrested him and sent him to Clement VI, who kept him a prisoner. But when, in 1353, Cardinal Albornoz went to Rome to restore order, Innocent VI sent Rienzo with him. He was appointed senator, and triumphantly entered the city in 1354. His cruelty and luxurious life, however, again estranged the people, who soon revolted and killed him while he was trying to escape. Rienzo's career is intelligible only within the setting of his age, in which the religious and supra-national inheritance of the Middle Ages began to give way to the love of antiquity and the beginnings of nationalism characteristic of the Renaissance. He is the hero of one of *Petrarch's odes and of the well-known opera by R. Wagner (1842).

Epistolario di Cola di Rienzo, ed. A. Gabrielli (Rome, 1890); ed. with full introd., crit. apparatus, and bibl. by K. Burdach–P. Piur, Briefwechsel des Cola di Rienzo (5 vols., Vom Mittelalter zur Reformation. Forschungen zur Geschichte der deutschen Bildung, ii; 1912–29). Anon. contemporary life, once attributed to T. Fortifiocca, publd. by A. Fei, Bracciano, 1624; modern ed. by A. M. Ghisalberti (Florence, 1928). Studies by F. Papencordt (Hamburg and Gotha, 1841), H. J. Schmitz (Sammlung historischer Bildnisse 4, ser. v; 1879), E. Rodocanachi (Paris, 1888), and P. Piur (Vienna, 1931), with bibl. M. E. Cosenza, Francesco Petrarca and the Revolution of Cola di Rienzo (Chicago, 1913). Popular studies by Iris Origo (Tribune of Rome, 1938) and V. Fleischer (London, 1938); anonymous novel, with much historical material, by Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton, Rienzi, the Last of the Tribunes (3 vols., 1835).

RIEVAULX (i.e. Rye Vale), N. Yorks. One of the earliest *Cistercian foundations in England. At the invitation of Thurstan (d. 1140), Abp. of *York, a colony of Cistercians, under Abbot William, was sent by St. *Bernard of Clairvaux to England to start a monastery, and in 1131 Walter Espec, who himself joined the community later, provided them with a site about 20 miles north of York. The abbey was dedicated to the BVM. It soon gained repute as a centre of devotion, learning, and agriculture, and several other foundations such as Melrose sprang from it. By the time of St. *Aelred (the 'Bernard of the North'), its third abbot (1147–67), the community numbered 600. Later its importance declined and at the *Dissolution there were only 23 religious beside the abbot. Today the abbey lies in ruins, but the greater part of the exquisite Early English cruciform church remains, with many of the altars in situ.

J. C. Atkinson (ed.), Cartularium Abbatiae de Rievalle (Surtees Society, lxxxiii; 1889). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, v (ed. 1825), pp. 274–86. H. A. Rye, 'Rievaulx Abbey, its Canals and Building Stones' in The Archaeological Journal, lvii (1900), pp. 69–77. T. M. Fallow in V.C.H., York, iii, ed. W. Page (1913), pp. 149–53; W. H. St. J. Hope in V.C.H., North Riding, i, ed. W. Page (1914), pp. 494–502.

RIGHTEOUSNESS, Original. See Original Righteousness.

RIGORISM. In a technical sense the word is used as another name for the system of moral philosophy known as *Tutiorism. Non-technically it is employed to denote the cult of extreme asceticism and self-denial and rigid keeping of the letter of the law, and thus approximates in meaning to *Puritanism and *formalism.

RIMINI, Synod of. See Ariminum and Seleucia, Synods of.

RINGS. Of the ring, which is commonly considered an emblem of fidelity, there have been, and still are, several kinds in Christian use:

(1) Early Christian rings. In the 3rd–4th cents. rings with Christian emblems seem to have been often worn in ordinary life.

(2) Episcopal rings. Rings are first mentioned as an official part of a bishop's insignia of office in the early 7th cent., and their use became general in the 9th–10th cents. They were emblematic of the bishop's betrothal to his church. Worn on the third finger of the right hand, they were engraved with a signet and sometimes enclosed relics (e.g. the ring of St. *Hugh of Lincoln). Today the bishop's ring is of gold and usually contains an amethyst. Cardinals, abbots, and some abbesses also wear similar rings. In the E. Church rings are not worn by bishops or abbots.

(3) Nuns' rings. In many female orders, e.g. the *Benedictine and *Cistercian, a ring is conferred at solemn profession.

(4) Wedding rings. Originating in the betrothal rings used by the Romans, they were adopted by Christians at an early date, but customs regarding their use have differed widely. In England down to the end of the 16th cent. the bride wore the ring on her right hand. The present custom of wearing it on the third finger of the left hand is explained by the practice of pronouncing the Trinitarian formula over the thumb and first two fingers, so that the third was reached at the 'Amen' which sealed the marriage rite. The current RC marriage ceremony envisages the use of a ring for both husband and wife, providing forms of blessing for both.

(5) The 'Fisherman's Ring' (anulus piscatoris). A gold seal-ring which the cardinal camerlengo places on the finger of a new Pope. Engraved on it is St. *Peter in a boat fishing (cf. Lk. 5. 10), with the Pope's name round it. The earliest mention of it is in a letter of Clement IV (1265). Since the 15th cent. it has been used for sealing Papal briefs. At the death of a Pope it is ceremonially broken up by a camerlengo.

(6) The 'Coronation Ring', in England placed by the Abp. of *Canterbury on the fourth finger of the Sovereign's right hand as 'the ensign of Kingly Dignity and of Defence of the Catholic Faith'.

(7) *Rosary rings. These have ten small knobs and are used for saying the rosary. They were in use in the 15th cent. and have been revived in modern times.

RIPALDA, JUAN MARTÍNEZ DE (1594–1648), *Jesuit theologian. One of the most famous theologians of his time, he taught philosophy at Monforte, theology at Salamanca, and, in the last years of his life, moral theology at the Imperial College at Madrid. His chief work is his treatise on the supernatural, De Ente Supernaturali (3 vols., 1634, 1645, and 1648, vol. iii being mainly an attack on M. *Baius). Among his other published works are an exposition of the *Master of the Sentences, Brevis Expositio Magistri Sententiarum (1635), and the posthumous De Virtutibus Theologicis (1652). Several other treatises, among them 'De Visione Dei', 'De Voluntate Dei', and 'De Praedestinatione', are preserved in MS. in the National Library at Salamanca.

A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, v (1916), p. 81. A. Arbeloa Egüas, La doctrina de la predestinación y de la gracia eficaz en Juan Martínez de Ripalda (Pamplona, 1950). Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 640–3. P. Dumont, S.J., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2712–37, s.v.

RIPIDION. See Fan.

RIPON (Lat. Ad Ripam). About 650 Aldfrid, King of Northumbria, founded a monastery at Ripon which he peopled with monks from Melrose, but when shortly afterwards he required them to abandon their *Celtic customs and adopt Roman discipline, Eata, the abbot, St. *Cuthbert, the guestmaster, and others returned to Melrose, and St. *Wilfrid was elected abbot (661). In 950 the monastery was destroyed by King Edred (d. 955) in his war with the Danes. It was rebuilt later by Abps. of *York. In the 11th cent. *Augustinian canons raised a new church, dedicated to Sts. Peter and Paul, upon the ruins of that of St. Wilfrid. This foundation was dissolved by *Henry VIII, but re-founded in 1604 as a collegiate church. In 1836 the church became the cathedral of the new diocese of Ripon. Beneath it is the 7th cent. crypt featuring the small aperture connecting the crypt with an adjacent passage, known as 'St. Wilfrid's Needle'.

The primary material is ed. by J. T. Fowler, Memorials of the Church of SS. Peter and Wilfrid, Ripon (Surtees Society, lxxiv, lxxviii, lxxxi, and cxv; 1881–1908). Id., Acts of Chapter of the Collegiate Church of SS. Peter and Wilfrid, Ripon, A.D. 1452 to A.D. 1506 (ib., lxiv; 1875). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, ii (ed. 1819), pp. 131–3. C. Hallett, The Cathedral Church of Ripon (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1901). A. H. Thompson in V.C.H., York, iii, ed. W. Page (1913), pp. 367–72. G. G. *Scott, 'Ripon Minster' in The Archaeological Journal, xxxi (1874), pp. 309–18. R. L. Poole, 'St. Wilfred and the See of Ripon' in E.H.R., xxxiv (1919), pp. 1–24. G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), p. 536, s.v.

RITA OF CASCIA, St. (1381–1457), *Augustinian nun. Acc. to her biographers, she was a native of Roccaporena in the Apennines who wished from early childhood to become a nun, but was forced by her parents into marriage. For the next 18 years, despite tyrannical treatment from her husband, she behaved as an exemplary wife and mother. When after his death she sought admission to the Augustinian convent at Cascia, she was at first refused, as a widow, but later, owing (it is related) to supernatural intervention, was received and professed, and lived her last years with great austerity. Her symbol is roses, which are blessed in Augustinian churches on her feast day, 22 May.

There is very little early or reliable information. An Italian life by A. Cevallucci is tr. into Latin in AA.SS., Mai. V (1694), pp. 224–9, with introduction, p. 223 f., and other material, pp. 230–2. The many popular lives include those by J. Sicardo, A.A. (Madrid, 1701; modern ed., Naples, 1924), L. Tardi, A.A. (Foligno, 1805; modern ed., 1925; Eng. tr. by R. Connolly, O.S.B., 1903), M. J. Corcoran (New York, 1919), A. C. De Romanis, A.A. (Rome, 1923), and L. Vannutelli, O.E.S.A. (Perugia, 1925). N. Del Re in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols 212–18, with further bibl.

RITES, The Congregation of Sacred. This Congregation was established by *Sixtus V in 1588 for the purpose of carrying out the decrees of the Council of *Trent with regard to the uniformity of public worship. It was responsible for the direction of the Liturgy of the Latin Church and everything relating to *canonization, *beatification, and the veneration of *relics, as well as for all *faculties, *indulgences, and *dispensations in liturgical matters. In 1930 *Pius XI imposed upon it the duty of correcting and improving liturgical books and established a historical section.

In 1969 the Congregation of Rites was divided into the Congregation for the Causes of Saints and the Congregation for Divine Worship. The former deals with beatification and canonization procedures and the veneration of relics; the latter succeeded the Consilium set up in 1964 by the Second *Vatican Council for the reform of the liturgy, and liturgical documents are issued under its authority. It has already issued a new *Missal, *Lectionary and *Breviary, and new orders for administering the Sacraments. In 1975 it was combined with the Congregation for the Discipline of the Sacraments.

The Decisions of the Congregation of Sacred Rites prior to 1926 are collected in Decreta Authentica Congregationis Sacrorum Rituum sub Auspiciis S.D.N. Leonis Papae XIII (5 vols., Rome, 1898–1901; vols. i–iii, decisions issued from May 1588 to 15 Dec. 1899, Nos. 1–4051, with enumeration of older collections in brackets; vol. iv, the 'Instructio Clementina' with comm. by A. Gardellini and further Suffragia and Adnotationes to decrees; vol. v, index; vol. vi, Appendix I (1912), continuing the decrees to 1911 (Nos. 4052–4284), with index; and Appendix II (1927), containing the decrees (4285–4404), issued 1912–26; later decrees are published in the Acta Apostolicae Sedis. An index of the archives placed in the Bibliothèque Nationale by order of Napoleon I was made by Amedeus Comes de Bourmont and printed in Anal. Boll., v (1886), pp. 147–61. F. R. McManus, The Congregation of Sacred Rites (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, cccliii; 1954). B. Ojetti, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 144 f., s.v. 'Roman Congregations', with bibl.; F. R. McManus in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 518 f., s.v. See also works cited under Roman Congregations and Canonization.

RITSCHL, ALBRECHT (1822–89), German Protestant theologian. He was the son of Georg Karl Benjamin Ritschl (1783–1858), a pastor at Berlin. After studying at Bonn, Halle, Heidelberg, and *Tübingen, he was successively extraordinary (1851–9) and full (1859–64) Professor of Theology at Bonn; and then, from 1864 until his death, Professor of Theology at Göttingen.

Ritschl began his career as a disciple of F. C. *Baur and the *Tübingen School (qq.v.), defending in Das Evangelium Marcions und das kanonische Evangelium des Lukas (1846) and Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche (ed. 1, 1850) Baur's thesis of the radical conflict in the primitive Church between Petrinism and Paulinism. But his partial independence of Baur was already clear in his Entstehung, and when in 1857 he issued a second edition of this work he had completely abandoned the Tübingen doctrines.

From 1852 onwards Ritschl lectured regularly on 'Systematic Theology'. He insisted on the irreducibility of religion to other forms of experience. We apprehend by faith, not by reason, and this faith rests not on the intellectual apprehension of a series of facts but on the making of value-judgements (Werturtheile). To take a concrete instance, the Lord's Divinity is to be understood not as an historical statement of fact but as an expression of the 'Revelational-value' (Offenbarungswert) of Christ for the community which trusts in Him as God. The theologian will reject all forms of philosophical Idealism as irrelevant to the Christian faith. Ritschl believed that his doctrines were in essence a reaffirmation of the NT message, which, despite their serious endeavours, even the 16th cent. Reformers did not wholly understand.

Ritschl insisted further that it was to a community, not to individuals, that the Gospel was, and still is, committed. The Church was the immediate subject of Divine revelation and of God's Redemptive work. The forgiveness of sins ('justification') is primarily achieved in and through the community for which, in His priestly office and in loyalty to His vocation, Christ died; and the final purpose of God for redeemed man is the moral integration of humanity in the Kingdom of God. The 'faith' by which man receives this gift is totally different from every form of mystical experience, of which Ritschl and his followers showed a deep distrust.

Ritschl elaborated his main conceptions in Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (3 vols., 1870–4; Eng. tr. of vol. i by J. S. Black, 1872, of vol. iii ed. by H. R. Mackintosh and A. B. Macaulay, 1900). The work exercised an immense influence on the theology of Germany in the latter half of the 19th cent. Of his later writings the two most considerable were Theologie und Metaphysik (1881; ed. 2, 1887) and Geschichte des Pietismus (3 vols., 1880–6).

The so-called 'Ritschlian School' was characterized by its stress on ethics and on the 'community', and by its repudiation of metaphysics and religious experience. Its principal organs were the Theologische Literaturzeitung, founded by E. *Schürer in 1876, Die christliche Welt (1887 ff.), and the Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche (1891 ff.). Apart from a more rigidly 'Ritschlian' inner circle, the school counted a great number of important Protestant theologians among its members, among them J. *Kaftan, W. *Herrmann, F. *Kattenbusch, F. *Loofs, A. *Harnack, and E. *Troeltsch.

There is no collected ed. of Ritschl's works. Life by Otto Ritschl (son), 2 vols., Freiburg i.Br.–Leipzig, 1892–6. The extensive literature in German includes W. Herrmann, Der evangelische Glaube und die Theologie Albrecht Ritschls (1890); F. Kattenbusch, Von Schleiermacher zu Ritschl (1892); C. von Kügelgen, Die Dogmatik Albrecht Ritschls (1898; ed. 2, much altered, 1903); J. Wendland, Albrecht Ritschl und seine Schüler (1899); C. Fabricius, Die Entwicklung in Albrecht Ritschls Theologie von 1874 bis 1889 (1909); G. Hök, Die elliptische Theologie Albrecht Ritschls nach Ursprung und innerem Zusammenhang (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1942, 3), with extensive bibl.; H. Timms, Theorie und Praxis in der Theologie Albrecht Ritschls und Wilhelm Herrmanns (Gütersloh, 1967), esp. pp. 29–88; R. Schäfer, Ritschl. Grundlinien eines fast verschollenen dogmatischen Systems (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xli; 1968), with discussion of lit. A hostile study is O. Pfleiderer, Die ritschlische Theologie (1891). Works in English include J. Orr, The Ritschlian Theology and the Evangelical Faith (1897); A. E. Garvie, The Ritschlian Theology (1899); J. Orr, Ritschlianism. Expository and Critical Essays (1903); J. K. Mozley, Ritschlianism (1909); R. Mackintosh, Albrecht Ritschl and his School (1915); D. L. Deegan, 'Albrecht Ritschl on the Historical Jesus' in Scottish Journal of Theology, xv (1962), pp. 133–50; id., 'The Ritschlian School, the Essence of Christianity and Karl Barth', ib., xvi (1963), pp. 390–414; id., 'Critical Empiricism in the Theology of Albrecht Ritschl', ib., xviii (1965), pp. 40–56; P. Hefner, Faith and the Vitalities of History (New York, 1966). O. Ritschl in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 22–34; E. Schott in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 1114–17, s.v.

RITUAL. Strictly, the prescribed form of words of a liturgical function. By common usage the word is also employed, often in a derogatory sense, of the accompanying ceremonial. In the 19th cent. the term 'Ritualist' was commonly used of those who introduced or reintroduced medieval or modern RC ceremonial practices into the C of E.

RITUAL COMMISSION, The. The Royal Commission created in 1867 to inquire into the differences of ceremonial practice in the C of E. Its appointment followed the creation of a Committee of the *Canterbury Convocation on the subject, set up on the motion of Harvey Goodwin, afterwards Bp. of *Carlisle, early in 1866. Among the Commissioners were Abp. C. T. *Longley, Bp. A. C. *Tait, Bp. S. *Wilberforce, Bp. C. *Thirlwall, Dean R. *Gregory, Dean A. P. *Stanley, and Sir Robert *Phillimore. The Commission published its evidence in four reports issued between 1867 and 1870. The first (1867) confined itself to the question of Eucharistic *vestments; the second (1868) dealt with *incense and lights; the third (1869) was concerned with the *lectionary; and the fourth (1870) dealt with Prayer Book revision and other subjects. The Commissioners were almost unanimous in their wish to forbid the use of vestments, but in the second and fourth reports there were great divergences of opinion. As a general rule, practices which had prevailed in the C of E for the last 300 years were to be the standard of Anglican usage, and the Bishop, on receiving complaints relating to any variation from such established use from churchwardens or from five resident parishioners, was to enforce obedience. The proposals met with much criticism, esp. from High Churchmen, and failure to bring them into effect led ultimately to the *Public Worship Regulation Act (q.v.).

The reports, with appendices, are to be found respectively among the Parliamentary Papers, 1867, xx, pp. 719–896 (of the MS. pagination of the volumes arranged for the House of Commons) (Cd. 3951); 1868, xxxviii (whole volume; Cd. 4016); 1870, xix, pp. 437–59 (C. 17); and 1870, xix, pp. 461–742 (C. 218).

RITUAL MASSES. The Masses provided in the 1970 Roman Missal for use on the various occasions when sacraments or other solemn acts are included in the Eucharist, e.g. at *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Ordination, the administration of *Viaticum, weddings, wedding anniversaries, the consecration of *virgins, and the renewal of religious *vows. The Ritual Mass may take precedence over the Mass of the Day except on the most important Sundays and festivals. See also Nuptial Mass.

RITUALE ROMANUM. The official service book of the Roman Rite, containing the prayers and formulas for the administration of the Sacraments and other liturgical actions of a priest apart from the Mass and the Divine Office. The first edition appeared under *Paul V in 1614; it was enlarged in 1752, revised in 1925, and is now under radical revision. It includes such rites as *Baptism, *Marriage, and *Unction, though all these are at present superseded by the orders issued in 1969 and 1972, which will be incorporated in the revision.

Before the pontificate of Paul V, various dioceses had issued their own Rituale. An editio typica of the Rituale Romanum was issued by Pope *Leo XIII (Ratisbon, 1884). F. A. Zaccaria, Bibliotheca Ritualis, i (Rome, 1776), pp. 137–60. L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), pp. 100–13, and, on the Rituale of the Eastern Churches, pp. 111–18. A. *Fortescue in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 88–90, s.v. 'Ritual'; G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1010–17, s.v. 'Rituale Romanum', with further bibl. On the Rituale of the Eastern Churches see also J. *Goar, Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647).

RITUS SERVANDUS. Two liturgical items relating to the traditional RC Latin rite have this title.

(1) The rules about the customs and ceremonial of the Mass which, from the time of *Pius V until recent years, were printed at the beginning of the *Missal ('Ritus Servandus in Celebratione Missae'). It has now been replaced by the 'Instructio Generalis' issued in 1969 and attached to the 1970 Roman Missal.

(2) The book, formerly officially approved by the RC hierarchy in England, containing the directions and prayers for *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament and certain other non-liturgical services (Ritus Servandus in Solemni Expositione et Benedictione SS. Sacramenti). This is also now obsolescent. The corresponding book in Ireland is known as a Benedictionale.

ROBBER COUNCIL OF EPHESUS (449). See Latrocinium.

ROBBIA, DELLA. See Della Robbia.

ROBERT, St. (c. 1027 – 1111), Abbot of Molesme. A member of a noble family of Champagne, he entered the abbey of Moutier-la-Celle at the age of 15 and later became prior. After 1060 he was appointed abbot of St.-Michel-de-Tonnerre, but failed to reform its greatly relaxed discipline and returned to Moutier-la-Celle. After a brief period as prior of St.-Aiyoul, some hermits living in the forest of Colan asked to be placed under Robert's direction, and with the approval of the Pope he founded a monastery for them at Molesme (Burgundy) in 1075. The saintly life of its abbot and the original monks caused the house to flourish. But increasing wealth and the influx of unsuitable new members gradually brought about divisions in the community, and in 1098 Robert and several of his monks left Molesme and founded the monastery of *Cîteaux, to be made famous in the following century by St. *Bernard of Clairvaux. When eighteen months later the monks of Molesme asked to have their abbot back, Robert returned and under his government Molesme became a famous Benedictine centre. Permission for his cultus was granted by *Honorius III in 1222. Feast day, 29 Apr.

The principal authority is a 12th cent. life by a monk of Molesme, printed in AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 668–76; Process of canonization, ib., pp. 676–8. Life repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clvii, 1269–94, with three letters, col. 1293 f. Modern ed. of Life by K. Spahr, S.O.Cist. (Freiburg i.Br., 1944), with bibl. M. F. Delehaye, 'Un Moine saint Robert fondateur de Cîteaux' in Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum, xiv (1952), pp. 83–106; J. A. Lefèvre, 'Saint Robert de Molesme dans l'opinion monastique du XIIe et du XIIIe siècle' in Anal. Boll., lxxiv (1956), pp. 50–83.

ROBERT BELLARMINE, St. See Bellarmine, St. Robert.

ROBERT OF HOLCOT. See Holcot, Robert.

ROBERT OF MELUN (d. 1167), Scholastic theologian. An Englishman by birth, he studied at *Paris, where he became the successor of *Abelard at the school on Mont Ste-Geneviève and *John of Salisbury was among his pupils. In 1142 he went to Melun, where he directed a school, and in 1148 took part in the condemnation of *Gilbert de la Porrée at the Synod of *Reims. Recalled to England by Henry II c. 1160, he was made Bp. of *Hereford in 1163. His works comprise 'Quaestiones de divina pagina', 'Quaestiones de epistolis Pauli' and the unfinished 'Sententiae'. His Trinitarian doctrine, which contradicted that of St. *Bernard, came nearer to Abelard and was generally accepted by the 13th cent. Schoolmen. Acc. to Robert, power is to be esp. attributed to the Father, wisdom to the Son, and goodness to the Holy Ghost, without, however, robbing the other two Persons of the quality predicated in a particular way of the one. Robert had a wide knowledge of the work of his contemporaries, and critically examined certain aspects of the Trinitarian doctrines of Gilbert de la Porrée and his followers, and theses of *Thierry of Chartres that tended to Pantheism. He used every known device of dialectic to maintain a conservative position.

'Quaestiones de divina pagina', 'Quaestiones de epistolis Pauli' and the first Book of the 'Sententiae' ed. R. M. Martin, O.P.–R. M. Gallet, O.P. (S.S.L., xiii, xviii, xxi, xxv; 1932–52). R. M. Martin, 'L'Œuvre théologique de Robert de Melun' in R.H.E., xv (1920), pp. 456–89, with reff. and biographical introd.; id., 'Les Idées de Robert de Melun sur le péché originel' in Revue des Sciences philosophiques et théologiques, vii (1913), pp. 700–25; viii (1914), pp. 439–66; ix (1920), pp. 103–20; xi (1922), pp. 390–415; id., 'Pro Petro Abaelardo. Un Plaidoyer de Robert de Melun contre S. Bernard', ib., xii (1923), pp. 308–33; id., 'L'Immortalité de l'âme d'après Robert de Melun (†1167)' in Revue néoscolastique de Philosophie, xxxvi (1934), pp. 128–45. F. Anders, Die Christologie des Robert von Melun (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, xv, Hft. 5; 1927). R. P. Nash, S.J., 'The Meaning of Est in the Sentences (1158–1160) of Robert of Melun' in Mediaeval Studies, xiv (1952), pp. 129–42. U. Horst, O.P., Die Trinitäts- und Gotteslehre des Robert von Melun (Walberger Studien des Albertus-Magnus-Akademie. Theologische Reihe, i; 1964). R. P. Nash, S.J., in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 533 f., s.v.

ROBERT OF WINCHELSEA. See Winchelsea, Robert of.

ROBERT, PIERRE. See Olivetan.

ROBERTSON, ARCHIBALD (1853–1931), Bp. of *Exeter. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1876, he became Principal of Hatfield Hall, *Durham (1883–97), and later of *King's College, London (1897–1903). From 1903 to 1916 he was Bp. of Exeter. He was the principal Athanasian scholar of his generation. In 1882 and 1893 he issued editions of the text of the De Incarnatione, and in 1892 published the Select Writings of Athanasius, based on J. H. *Newman's translations, but with the addition of important prolegomena and notes. His other writings include Regnum Dei (1901; *Bampton Lectures).

C. Jenkins in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), p. 734 f., s.v.

ROBERTSON, FREDERICK WILLIAM (1816–1853), 'Robertson of Brighton', Anglican preacher. After abandoning an earlier intention of entering the army, he matriculated in 1837 at Brasenose College, Oxford, to prepare for the ministry. In 1840 he was ordained to a title at *Winchester and in 1842 became curate of Christ Church, Cheltenham. Here he gradually abandoned his earlier *Evangelicalism in favour of a *Broad Church type of theology. In 1846 he was for a short time minister of the English Church at Heidelberg. After returning to England and working for a brief space as rector of St. Ebbe's, Oxford, he was appointed in 1847 minister of Trinity Chapel, Brighton, a small *proprietary chapel. Here his influence as a preacher extended far and wide. Though in no sense a scientific theologian, he appealed through his manifest sincerity, his great spiritual insight, and his remarkable capacity for analysing motive and character. He had a powerful influence with the working classes, at that time largely untouched by the C of E, and some of his best lectures were delivered to working men. The opposition he had to face throughout his time at Brighton, largely through his support of the revolutionary ideas of 1848, hastened his early death.

His sermons and lectures were publd. posthumously from shorthand notes: Sermons Preached at Brighton (Series i and ii, 1855; Series iii, 1857; Series iv, 1863); Lectures and Addresses on Literary and Social Topics (1858); Expository Lectures on St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians (1859). Selection of Sermons in Everyman's Library, Nos. 37–9 (1906). Life and Letters, ed. Stopford A. *Brooke (2 vols., London, 1865). Other lives by Frederick Arnold (London, 1886) and H. H. *Henson (London, 1915). R. Garnett in D.N.B., xlviii (1896), pp. 404–7.

ROBINSON, HENRY WHEELER (1872–1945), theologian and OT scholar. Born in Northampton of humble parentage, he was educated for the *Baptist ministry in the universities of Edinburgh and Oxford. After short pastorates at Pitlochry and Coventry, he was appointed in 1906 to the staff of Rawdon Baptist College and quickly made his mark as teacher and writer. From 1920 to 1942 he was Principal of Regent's Park College and was chiefly responsible for its transference from London to Oxford. He was Speaker's Lecturer in the university of Oxford, one of the editors of 'The Library of Constructive Theology', and president of the Baptist Historical Society. His main interests were in the fields of OT theology and the doctrines of the Holy Spirit and redemption. Among his principal writings were The Christian Doctrine of Man (1911), The Religious Ideas of the Old Testament (1913), The Christian Experience of the Holy Spirit (1928), Redemption and Revelation (1942), and Inspiration and Revelation in the Old Testament (1946). A man of wide intellectual interests and deep piety, his influence extended far beyond his own communion.

E. A. Payne (ed.), Studies in History and Religion Presented to Dr. H. Wheeler Robinson . . . on his Seventieth Birthday (1942), incl. list of his Works, pp. 254–7. Id., Henry Wheeler Robinson. A Memoir (1946). Id. in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 727–9.

ROBINSON, JOHN (c. 1575–1625), pastor to the *Pilgrim Fathers. Very little is known about his early life. He was a native of Lincs or Notts, probably studied at Cambridge, was ordained in the C of E, and seems to have held a curacy at *Norwich. He later became a *Puritan, joining the 'gathered Church' at Scrooby Manor, Notts. In 1608, owing to severe measures against Nonconformity, Robinson and his congregation were forced to flee to *Holland. In 1609 he settled at *Leyden, of which university he became a member in 1615. From 1617 he interested himself in the project of his Leyden community to emigrate to America, as their strict *Calvinism had brought them into conflict with the *Arminianism of which Leyden was a centre. Though he was prevented from joining the Pilgrim Fathers in the Mayflower, he assisted them in their preparations and encouraged them by his letters. He was an able controversialist: in 1610 he published Justification of Separation from the Church, and in his Apologia (1619) he defended the principles of Congregationalism. He also wrote A Defence of the Doctrine Propounded by the Synod of Dort (1624). His Observations Divine and Moral, a collection of 62 essays on spiritual and moral subjects, was published posthumously (1625).

Collected ed. of his works, 3 vols., London, 1851, with memoir by R. Ashton in vol. i, pp. xiii–lxxiv. Modern studies by F. J. Powicke (London, [1920]) and W. H. Burgess (ib., 1920). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 18–22, with reff. to primary sources.

ROBINSON, JOSEPH ARMITAGE (1858–1933), NT and patristic scholar. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow from 1881 to 1899, he was ordained priest in 1882 and devoted himself to patristic studies. In 1891 he founded the series of monographs Texts and Studies, in which he edited the Passion of Perpetua in the same year. In 1893 he published an edition of *Origen's 'Philocalia'. In 1899 he became a canon, and in 1902 Dean, of *Westminster. In 1903 he published his commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, in which he defended the authenticity of the letter. In 1911 he resigned the Deanery of Westminster to become Dean of *Wells. Here he took a lively interest in the cathedral and the early history of the see and wrote The Saxon Bishops of Wells (1919) and St. Oswald at Worcester (1919). In 1920 Robinson published an English translation of the recently recovered 'Apostolic Preaching' of St. *Irenaeus and his Donnellan Lectures on Barnabas, Hermas, and the Didache, in which he attempted to prove a late date for the *Didache. Among his later publications is The Times of St. Dunstan (1923), which has become a standard work. He was one of the Anglican participants in the *Malines Conversations.

J. M. Creed, 'Joseph Armitage Robinson, 1858–1933' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xx (1934), pp. 297–308. C. Jenkins in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), pp. 743–5, s.v.

ROCH, St. (c. 1295 – 1327), also ROCCO (Ital.), healer of the plague-stricken. Very little is known of his life. Acc. to Francis Diedo, his Venetian biographer (1478), he was a native of Montpellier, who on a journey to Italy stopped at the plague-ridden town of Aquapendente, where he cured many by the sign of the cross. He afterwards performed similar miracles at Cesena, Mantua, Modena, Parma, and elsewhere, himself fell a victim at Piacenza, but recovered and returned to his native city. A miraculous cross is said to have been discovered on his body after his death. He was regularly invoked against the plague, notably in an outbreak in 1414 during the Council of *Constance. In 1485 his relics were moved to Venice, where they are still venerated. There is no sufficient evidence for the *Franciscan tradition that he was a *tertiary of the Order. Feast day, 16 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. III (1727), pp. 380–415. Life by Jehan Phelipot, orig. publ. Brescia, 1494, re-edited by M. Luthard (Paris, &c., 1917), with introd. and notes. Abbé Recluz, Histoire de saint Roch et de son culte (Avignon, 1858); J. C. F. Chavanne, Saint Roch. Histoire complète (ed. 2, Paris, 1875). G. Ceroni, San Rocco nella vita, nel culto, nell'arte (1927); M. Bessodes, Saint Roch. Histoire et légendes (Turin and Rome, 1931). A. Fliche, 'Le Problème de saint Roch' in Anal. Boll., lxviii (1950), pp. 343–61, with bibl. A. P. Frutaz in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1054–9, s.v. 'Rocco'.

ROCHESTER (Lat. Durobrivae or Roffa). This, the oldest and smallest of the suffragan sees of *Canterbury, was founded by St. *Augustine, who consecrated St. *Justus its first bishop in 604. The cathedral, which was dedicated to St. *Andrew and served in early times by a college of secular canons, was damaged in 676 by the Mercians and later by the Danes. Gundulf (bp., 1077–1108) began a new cathedral, probably at the request of *Lanfranc, and in 1082 replaced the secular canons by Benedictines. His nave is the oldest in England, and a fine example of rich and varied Norman work. The cathedral was consecrated in 1130 by the Abp. of Canterbury in the presence of Henry I, but a fire which occurred at the time damaged much of the cathedral and city. In 1343 the choir was rebuilt and a central tower added (replaced 1825–7) out of the offerings at the shrine of 'St. William of Rochester' (a baker from Perth who was murdered here c. 1201, while on pilgrimage; feast day, 23 May). At the *Dissolution, c. 1541, the monks were replaced by a dean and six canons (now reduced to four).

C. Johnson (ed.), Registrum Hamonis Hethe, Diocesis Roffensis A.D. 1319–1352 (*Canterbury and York Society, xlviii and xlix; 1948). 'Ernulfi Episcopi Roffensis Collectanea' in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i (1691), pp. 329–40; 'Annales Ecclesiae Roffensis, ex Historia Ecclesiastica Edmundi de Hadenham', ib., pp. 341–55; William de Dene, 'Historia Roffensis ab anno MCCCXIV. ad MCCCL.', ib., pp. 356–83. T. *Hearne, Textus Roffensis (Oxford, 1720; a collection of documents by Ernulf, many of them relating to the see of Rochester); facsimile of MS. ed. P. Sawyer (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, vii and xi; Copenhagen, 1957–62). J. Thorpe–J. Thorpe (son) (edd.), Registrum Roffense: or a Collection of Antient Records, Charters, and Instruments of Divers Kinds, necessary for illustrating the Ecclesiastical History and Antiquities of the Diocese and Cathedral Church of Rochester (1769); J. Thorpe (ed.), Custumale Roffense (London, 1788). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817) pp. 153–88. The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Rochester (anon., ascribed to J. Lewis, but generally supposed to have been written by Dr. Rawlinson; 1717). A. I. Pearman, Rochester (Diocesan Histories; 1897); G. H. Palmer, The Cathedral Church of Rochester (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1897). W. H. St. J. Hope, The Architectural History of the Cathedral and Monastery of St. Andrew at Rochester (1900). R. A. L. Smith, 'The Early Community of St. Andrew at Rochester, 604–c. 1080' in E.H.R., lx (1945), pp. 289–99. R. C. Fowler in V.C.H., Kent, ii, ed. W. Page (1926), pp. 121–6. E. M. Blackie in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 520–3, s.v.

ROCHET. A white linen vestment, resembling the *surplice but with tight sleeves, which is worn by bishops and occasionally by other ecclesiastical dignitaries. It is derived from the *alb, and until the 14th cent. was in use outside Rome by all clerics (and even sacristans). The rochet worn by Anglican bishops under the *chimere has wide lawn sleeves. In the 18th cent. these sleeves developed to such balloon-like dimensions that they were commonly detached from the rest of the garment and sewn on to the chimere separately.

Braun, L.G., pp. 125–35. W. B. Marriott, Vestiarium Christianum. The Origin and Gradual Development of the Dress of Holy Ministry in the Church (1868), p. 226.

ROCK, DANIEL (1799–1871), ecclesiologist and antiquary. He was ordained to the RC priesthood in 1824. He took a keen interest in the English medieval religious ceremonial customs, and his chief work, The Church of our Fathers (3 vols. in 4, 1849–53), did much to spread knowledge of them, esp. of the *Sarum Rite. His other best-known work is his Hierurgia, or the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass (2 vols., 1833). He took an active part in furthering the restoration of the RC hierarchy in England, and in 1852 he was appointed one of the first canons of Southwark RC Cathedral.

His Church of Our Fathers was ed. by G. W. Hart–W. H. *Frere, C.R. (4 vols., London, 1903–4), with life by B. W. Kelly, vol. i, pp. xvii–xxvi; his Hierurgia was also ed. and rev. by W. H. J. Weale ('Catholic Standard Library', 2 vols., 1892).

ROCOCO. A development of *baroque architecture and decoration, which originated in France and lasted from c. 1715 to 1750. It endeavoured to substitute gracefulness for the dignity of the Louis XIV period, but was often over-ornate. The name is derived from the French rocaille ('shell-work'), the twisted curves of a shell typifying freedom and irregularity.

ROGATION DAYS (Lat. rogare, 'ask'). In W. Christendom certain prescribed days of prayer and fasting in the early summer, associated with intercession esp. for the harvest. The 'Major Rogation', which was on 25 April, was a Christianized version of the pagan observance of the 'Robigalia', which took the form of processions through the cornfields to pray for the preservation of the crops from mildew. Historically it had no connexion with the Feast of St. *Mark, of later institution, also kept on 25 Apr. The 'Minor Rogations' were kept on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before *Ascension Day. These rogations, which derived from the processional litanies ordered by St. *Mamertus of Vienne (c. 470), when his diocese was troubled by volcanic eruptions, spread through Gaul and later to other places. They are first found at Rome in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. In England they were adopted by the Council of *Clovesho (can. 16).

The outdoor Rogation processions were suppressed in England in 1547, but under Elizabeth I the Royal *Injunctions of 1559 (No. 19) ordered the perambulation of the parish at Rogationtide and the Second 'Book of *Homilies' contained two homilies for the Rogation Days. The observance is not mentioned in the earlier issues of the BCP. In that of 1662 the three (minor) Rogations (only) were ordered to be observed as 'Days of Fasting and Abstinence'.

In the RC Church the Rogation Days were replaced in 1969 by periods of prayer for the needs of mankind, the fruits of the earth and the work of men's hands. The observance of these periods, which may be of one or several days' duration and may take place at different times of the year, is decided by conferences of local bishops. Suitable Masses are included in the 1970 Missal.

D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'L'Origine des processions de la chandeleur et des rogations à propos d'un sermon inédit' in R. Bén., xxxiv (1922), pp. 14–26, esp. pp. 14–18. W. E. Scudamore in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1809 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), col. 1740 f., s.v. 'Marc (Procession de saint)'; id., ib., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2459–61, s.v. 'Rogations'; P. Siffrin, O.S.B., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1084–6, s.v. 'Rogazioni'.

ROGER BACON. See Bacon, Roger.

ROGERS, JOHN (c. 1500–55), editor of '*Matthew's Bible' and first British Protestant Martyr under *Mary. Educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, in 1534 he became chaplain to the English merchants in Antwerp. Soon after meeting W. *Tyndale (d. 1536), then engaged on his translation of the Scriptures, he accepted the Protestant faith. In 1537 under the name of 'Thomas Matthew' he published the first complete version of the Bible in English, which was hence known as 'Matthew's Bible' (q.v.). Rogers's own share in it was confined to contributing some valuable prefaces and marginal notes. At about this time he gave evidence of his Protestantism by marrying. His wife was an Antwerp lady, Adriana de Weyden (later Anglicized as 'Pratt'). Having returned to London in 1548, he was presented in 1550 with the crown livings of St. Margaret Moyses and St. Sepulchre, both in London, and shortly afterwards became prebendary, and then divinity lecturer, at *St. Paul's Cathedral. For preaching Protestant doctrine at Paul's Cross at the beginning of Mary's reign, he was first confined to his house, and then taken to Newgate prison, where he was kept for a year with J. *Hooper and others. In Jan. 1555 sentence of death was pronounced for denial of the Papal claims and of the Real Presence in the *Eucharist, and he was burnt at Smithfield on 4 Feb.

J. L. Chester, John Rogers. The Compiler of the First Authorised English Bible; the Pioneer of the English Reformation; and its first Martyr (1861). The attempt of W. T. Whitley, 'Thomas Matthew's Bible' in the Church Quarterly Review, cxxv (Oct. 1937), pp. 48–69, to deny that Matthew was an alias for John Rogers seems to have failed. Cf. J. F. Mozley, William Tyndale (1937), Appendix E, 'Thomas Matthew', p. 354 f.; H. H. Hutson–H. R. Willoughby, Decisive Data on Thomas Matthew Problems [Chicago, 1938], with reff. S. Lee in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 126–9.

ROGERS, WILLIAM (1819–96), Anglican educational reformer. Educated at Eton, Balliol College, Oxford, and Durham university, he was ordained deacon in 1843. From 1845 to 1863, while perpetual curate of St. Thomas's, Charterhouse, he devoted himself to the cause of primary education and, winning influential support, erected a large network of very successful schools in his slum parish. When in 1863 he became rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, he worked on similar lines on behalf of middle-class schools, among them Alleyn's College, Dulwich, of which he was a governor. His attempt to exclude from his schools religious teaching, on the ground that the responsibility for this lay with the parents and the clergy, won him the sobriquet of 'Hang Theology Rogers'. He also took a very active part in several local philanthropic works, including the founding of the Bishopsgate Institute (1894).

R. H. Hadden (formerly curate at St. Botolph's; ed.), Reminiscences of William Rogers (1888), with foreword by Rogers. T. Seccombe in D.N.B., xlix (1897), p. 145 f.

ROLLE OF HAMPOLE, RICHARD (c. 1300–1349), English hermit and mystic. The facts of his life have been much discussed in modern times. According to the account in the office drawn up in view of his (never realized) canonization, he was born at Thornton, near Pickering in N. Yorkshire, and studied at Oxford under the patronage of Thomas Neville, Archdeacon of Durham. He broke off his studies at the age of eighteen to become a hermit, first on the estate of his friend, John Dalton, and later in various other places, where he prayed, wrote and gave guidance to others. The investigations of E. J. F. Arnould show that it is unlikely that Rolle ever studied at the *Sorbonne. His last years were spent near the convent of Cistercian nuns at Hampole, where he died and was buried in 1349. He was held in considerable veneration as late as the 17th cent., when 'Blessed Richard, Confessor and Ermite' was commemorated in martyrologies of 1608 and 1672 (1 Nov. and 20 Jan.).

Rolle's prolific writings on mystical and ascetical topics contain references to his own experiences (using the distinctive terms 'heat', 'sweetness' and 'song'), as well as a defence of his views on the value of the eremitical life. The canon of his writings, established by Miss H. E. Allen, includes various Scriptural commentaries, among them commentaries on the Psalter and on the lessons from Job in the Office for the Dead. His Latin treatises 'Incendium Amoris' and 'Emendatio Vitae' were later translated into Middle English. His best-known writings in English are his lyric poems, his commentary on the Psalter, and letters written for the guidance of others, 'Ego Dormio', 'The Commandment' and 'The Form of Living'. The attribution to Rolle of 'The Prick of Conscience' has now been conclusively refuted. The authenticity of the 'Meditation on the Passion' remains possible but not certain. His commentaries on the Psalter show acquaintance with *Peter Lombard and St. *Augustine; among other influences noticeable in his works are *Richard of St.-Victor, St. *Bernard, and St. *Gregory. His writings had a wide manuscript circulation. Some manuscripts of the English commentary on the Psalter were interpolated by the *Lollards.

Collections of his Latin works were pr. at Antwerp, 1533; Cologne, 1535 and 1536; and in M. de la Bigne, Magna Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, xv (Cologne, 1622), pp. 817–38, and id., Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, xxvi (Lyons, 1677), pp. 609–32. His Commentary on the lessons from Job in the Office of the Dead was pr. at Oxford, 1483, and Paris, 1510. 'Incendium Amoris', ed. Margaret Deanesly (Publications of the University of Manchester, Historical Series, xxvi; 1915); 'Canticum Amoris', ed. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xxi (1940), pp. 131–48, and ed. G. M. Liegey in Traditio, xii (1956), pp. 369–91; 'Melos Amoris', ed. E. J. F. Arnould (Oxford, 1957); 'Contra Amatores Mundi', ed. P. F. Theiner (University of California Publications, English Series, xxxiii; 1968); and Comm. on Rev., ed. N. Marzac (Paris, 1968). Collections of his English writings ed. G. G. Perry, English Prose Treatises of Richard Rolle of Hampole (E.E.T.S., xx; 1866); C. Horstman (ed.), Yorkshire Writers. Richard Rolle of Hampole . . . and his followers (2 vols., 1895–6); and H. E. Allen (ed.), English Writings of Richard Rolle (Oxford, 1931). Modernized versions by G. E. Hodgson (ed.), Some Minor Works of Richard Rolle of Hampole (1923) and G. C. Heseltine (ed.), Selected Works of Richard Rolle Hermit (1930). H. R. Bramley (ed.), The Psalter or Psalms of David and Certain Canticles, with a Translation and Exposition in English by Richard Rolle of Hampole (Oxford, 1884). 'Meditatio de Passione Domini' ed. H. Lindkvist (Skrifter utgifna af K. Humanistiska Vetenskaps-Samfundet i Uppsala, xix, No. 3; 1917). Frances M. M. Comper, The Life of Richard Rolle, together with an Edition of his English Lyrics, now for the first time published (1928).

The principal authority for his life is the office prepared for his canonization, ed. F. Procter, Breviarium ad Usum Insignis Ecclesie Eboracensis, ii (Surtees Society, lxxv; 1883), Appendix V, cols. 785–820; crit. ed. by R. M. Woolley (1919). H. E. Allen, Writings ascribed to Richard Rolle Hermit of Hampole and Materials for his Biography (Modern Language Association of America Monograph Series, iii; 1927), with reff. Dorothy Everett, 'The Middle English Prose Psalter of Richard Rolle of Hampole' in Modern Language Review, xvii (1922), pp. 217–27, 337–50, xviii (1923), pp. 381–93. M. Noetinger, O.S.B., 'The Biography of Richard Rolle' in The Month, cxlvii (1926), pp. 22–33; E. J. F. Arnould, 'Richard Rolle and the Sorbonne' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxiii (1939), pp. 68–101, repr. in his edition of 'Melos Amoris'; id., 'Richard Rolle of Hampole' in The Month, N.S., xxiii (1960), pp. 13–25, repr. in J. Walsh, S.J. (ed.), Pre-Reformation English Spirituality (1966), pp. 132–44; C. E. Whiting, 'Richard Rolle of Hampole' in Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, xxxvii (1951), pp. 5–23. Margery M. Morgan, 'Versions of the Meditations on the Passion ascribed to Richard Rolle' in Medium Ævum, xxii (1953), pp. 93–103. G. M. Liegey, 'Richard Rolle's Carmen Prosaicum, an Edition and Commentary' in Mediaeval Studies, xix (1957), pp. 15–36. [M.] D. Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 48–66. Rosemary Woolf, The English Religious Lyric in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1968), pp. 159–72 and 380–382. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1586–7. Further bibl. in C.B.E.L., i (1940), pp. 191–4 and 307 f.

ROLLS CHAPEL, The. A chapel which once stood on the site of the Public Record Office, London, and from the time of Edward III was annexed to the Keeper of the Rolls ('Custos Rotulorum'). The first chapel (begun in 1233) was part of a foundation by King Henry III for the reception of converted Jews; this was destroyed in the 17th cent. After extensive rebuilding and repairs in the 17th, 18th and 19th cents., in 1895 it was decided to pull down the crumbling walls of the Chapel and erect a museum incorporating any remains of historical value; these include fragments of the 13th cent. chancel arch. J. *Butler held the office of Preacher at the Rolls Chapel from 1718 to 1726 and delivered his famous sermons here. The records (Rolls) of Chancery were formerly kept in the Chapel.

H. C. Maxwell Lyte, 'The Rolls Chapel' in The Fifty-seventh Annual Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Records [C. 8271] (1896), pp. 19–47.

ROMAINE, WILLIAM (1714–95), *Calvinist preacher. He was educated at Hertford College, Hart Hall, and *Christ Church, Oxford, and was ordained in 1736. In his early years he followed the scholarly traditions of the C of E, to which he made an important contribution with his edition of the Hebrew Concordance of Marius de Calasio (1748). In 1749 he was appointed lecturer at St. Dunstan's-in-the-West and in 1750 at St. George's, Hanover Square. In 1755 he came under the influence of G. *Whitefield and became one of the principal representatives of rigid Calvinism. His preaching attracted vast crowds of the poor and uneducated, whose presence in church was resented by his fashionable parishioners, so that he had to give up his lectureships. After holding brief appointments at some other London churches he became incumbent of St. Anne's, Blackfriars, in 1766, where his revivalist preaching continued to draw large congregations till his death. He was a powerful preacher; he held an extreme form of predestinationism which he expounded in several writings, e.g. The Life of Faith (1763), The Walk of Faith (1771), and The Triumph of Faith (1795).

Works ed. by his son (8 vols., bound in 4, London, 1796), with life by W. B. Cadogan in vol. vii, pp. 9–111, and list of Romaine's works, ib., pp. 112–16. The last three works mentioned in the text were repr., with introd. by P. Toon (Cambridge–London, 1970). A further contemporary life, emphasizing his part in 'the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion', by T. Haweis (London, 1797). J. C. *Ryle, The Christian Leaders of the Last Century (1869), pp. 149–79. H. L. Bennett in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 175–7.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM. The term, which denotes the faith and practice of Christians who are in communion with the Pope, is used particularly of Catholicism as it has existed since the Reformation, in contradistinction to Protestant bodies. On its doctrinal side it has been characterized by strict adherence to tradition combined with acceptance of the living voice of the Church, which is held to expound infallibly the revealed truths contained in the deposit of faith. Whereas in the early centuries the Church had to clarify especially the great mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, and in the Middle Ages doctrines concerning the relation of God and man through grace and the sacraments, post-Tridentine theologians have been especially concerned with the structure and prerogatives of the Church, the position of the BVM in the economy of salvation, and the function of the Pope as the Vicar of Christ on earth, culminating in the dogma of *Infallibility promulgated at the First *Vatican Council of 1870. In recent years there has been some reaction against the positions developed at the end of the 19th cent. and an attempt to bring the Church into closer communication with the modern world. This movement is closely connected with the Second *Vatican Council, with its doctrine of the *collegiality of bishops, the use of the vernacular in worship, and a more liberal attitude towards Christians of other denominations.

From an external point of view RC-ism presents itself as an organized hierarchy of bishops and priests with the Pope at its head. This structure has been built up during a long history and rests its claims on the powers entrusted by Christ to His Apostles in general (Jn. 20. 23) and to St. *Peter in particular (Mt. 16. 18 f.; Lk. 22. 32; Jn. 21. 15–17), as whose successors the Popes are traditionally regarded. Their supremacy over the Church, though sometimes contested by representatives of the *Conciliar Theory and of *Gallicanism, was widely accepted in the W. from early times, as is shown by the appeals to Rome in the *Donatist and *Pelagian controversies of the 4th and 5th cents. The doctrine was positively accepted at the Council of Trent and only slightly modified by the Second Vatican Council, which emphasized the position of the bishops. Acc. to RC teaching this hierarchy represents the Divine authority to whom obedience is due. Supernatural life is normally mediated to individual Christians by members of this hierarchy in the *seven sacraments. The emphasis in recent years on the part of the whole Church and the desirability of the participation of the community, e.g. in the administration of *Baptism, has not altered the essential position of the ordered episcopate and priesthood. An elaborate sacramental theology was developed by the Schoolmen and post-Tridentine theologians, and the sacramental system covers the whole life of RCs. The centre of the liturgical life of RCism is the Mass, which is regarded as an extension of the Incarnation and a bloodless re-presentation of the sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. Frequency of Communion has been encouraged by modern Popes, esp. *Pius X, and has been made easier by drastic relaxations in the *Eucharistic Fast and by the introduction of *evening Masses. Communion is, however, required only at Easter, and should then be preceded by the Sacrament of *Penance. Attendance at Mass on the other hand is compulsory on all Sundays and *Feasts of Obligation. Other devotions are left to the free choice of individuals and the traditional extra-liturgical exercises, such as *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, the *Rosary, and *Stations of the Cross, have recently come to play a less prominent part in RC life than formerly. This development may be partly explained by the introduction of the use of the vernacular in liturgical worship obviating the need for popular services, and more particularly by the increased emphasis on the liturgical life of the whole Church which is reflected not only in the new *Missal and *Breviary but also in the customary arrangement of services at times convenient for those engaged in industrial life. The reformed liturgy has laid stress on the centrality of Sunday and drastically reduced the importance of saints' days. At the same time, devotion to the saints has been fostered by the large number of canonizations in modern times, such as those of St. *Teresa of Lisieux and the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales.

The religious life, confined in the Middle Ages to the comparatively few older orders of monks, friars, canons regular and enclosed nuns, in post-Reformation Catholicism grew both in size and in scope. The most influential of the modern orders is the Society of Jesus (see Jesuits), beside which grew up a multitude of congregations and other associations of both men and women, often pursuing particular aims, such as teaching, nursing and social work. The period since the Second World War has seen the growth of 'lay congregations', such as the 'Little Brothers' and 'Little Sisters' inspired by the ideals of Charles *de Foucauld; they live in small communities in conditions prevailing among the poorest sections of the world, seeking to combine an element of contemplation with the discipline of earning their living, often in industrial society. Since the Second Vatican Council the traditional religious orders have also been undergoing considerable modernization and reform. But, despite all the apparent changes in the outward presentation of the RC faith, and despite the active interest of recent Popes and other RC agencies in social work throughout the world, the primary aim of the RC Church still remains the sanctification of its members and the conversion of souls.

Introductions by RCs include K. *Adam, Das Wesen des Katholizismus (1924; Eng. tr., 1929); C. C. Martindale, S.J., The Faith of the Roman Church ('The Faiths'; 1927); R. A. *Knox, The Belief of Catholics (1927); P. L. T. G. Goyau, Le Catholicisme ('Les Religions'; 1931); P. Hughes, The Faith in Practice. Catholic Doctrine and Life (1938); T. Corbishley, S.J., Roman Catholicism (Hutchinson's University Library, li; 1950); S. Bullough, O.P., Roman Catholicism (Penguin, 1963); J. L. McKenzie, S.J., The Roman Catholic Church (1969). Works on RCism in England include D. Mathew, Catholicism in England, 1535–1935. Portrait of a Minority, its Culture and Tradition (1936), and E. I. Watkin, Roman Catholicism in England from the Reformation to 1950 (H.U.L., 1957). See also works cited under Recusancy. For the history of the RC Church in other parts of the world, see bibl. to the various countries. For works on RC theology, see bibl. to Moral Theology; Trent, Council of; Vatican Councils, &c. There is also abundant information in C.E., D.T.C., L.Th.K., E.C., and N.C.E., also in W. E. Addis–T. Arnold, A Catholic Dictionary (1884; ed. 16 by T. B. Scannell and others, 1957), and D. Attwater (ed.), The Catholic Encyclopaedic Dictionary (1931; revised ed., 1949).

ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS. See Catholic Relief Acts.

ROMAN CONGREGATIONS. The executive departments of the Roman *curia responsible for the ordinary central administration of the RC Church. Established by *Sixtus V in 1588 and reorganized by Pius X in 1908, their number was originally fourteen but it was reduced to eleven in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 242–57). In the complete reorganization of the curia effected by the papal decree 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' (15 Aug. 1967), nine congregations emerged, most of them with a modified title and a redefined competence. The former *Holy Office, now styled Congregatio pro Doctrina Fidei, still heads the list, though with a somewhat reduced field of competence. As formerly, each congregation consists primarily of cardinals under a 'Cardinal-Prefect', assisted by a Secretary and lesser officials, but since 1967 each has attached to it as full members seven diocesan bishops chosen by the Pope from the various parts of the world, along with a panel of consultors similarly selected. All appointments are for a five-year term. The official organ of the Roman congregations is the Acta Apostolicae Sedis*. See also Propaganda, Congregation of, and Rites, Congregation of.

V. Martin, Les Congrégations romaines (1930). The decree 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' is pr. in A.A.S., lix (1967), pp. 885–926. L. L. McReavy, 'The Reorganization of the Roman Curia' in Clergy Review, liii (1968), pp. 306–13.

ROMAN MARTYROLOGY (Martyrologium Romanum). The official *Martyrology of the RC Church. It was compiled by a commission of ten scholars, among them C. *Baronius and A. Agellius (d. 1608), and issued by *Gregory XIII in 1584 to replace the various local adaptations of *Usuard's text current since the later Middle Ages. Several later Popes have subjected it to revisions demanded by the progress in historical knowledge and fresh canonizations. Of these the most radical was that of *Benedict XIV (1748), the principles of which are contained in a prefatory letter to John V, King of Portugal. More recent revisions are due to *Pius IX (1870), *Pius X (1913), and *Benedict XV (1922). A further revision is in progress.

The Roman Martyrology in which are to be found the eulogies of the saints and blessed approved by the Sacred Congregation of Rites up to 1961. An English Translation from the Fourth Edition after the Typical Edition (1956) approved by Pope Benedict XV (1922), edited J. B. O'Connell [1962].

ROMAN PSALTER, The. The text of the Biblical Psalter which was used in all churches in Rome, as well as elsewhere in Italy, down to the time of Pope *Pius V (1566–72), when it was virtually replaced, except at *St. Peter's, Rome, by the '*Gallican Psalter' (q.v.). It has commonly been equated with the revision of the Latin Psalter which St. *Jerome says he compiled hastily ('cursim') on the basis of the *Septuagint, though this identification has recently been challenged. See also Psalters, Western.

Crit. ed. by R. Weber, O.S.B. (Collectanea Biblica Latina, x; Rome, 1953), with bibl. D. de Bruyne, 'Le Problème du psautier romain' in R. Bén., xlii (1930), pp. 101–26; A. Allgeier, 'Die erste Psalmenübersetzung des hl. Hieronymus und das Psalterium Romanum' in Biblica, xii (1931), pp. 447–82.

ROMANIA, Christianity in. See Rumania, Christianity in.

ROMANOS, St. (fl. c. 540), 'Melodus' (ὁ μελῳδός), Greek religious poet, the most significant composer of the kontakion*, the metrical sermon chanted to music. A Syrian by birth, he made his way to Constantinople, where he achieved fame. Eighty metrical sermons have come down to us under his name, but not all are genuine. Some of these, like his celebrated kontakia 1 On the Nativity, 4 On the Presentation in the Temple, and 29 On the Resurrection VI (in Maas–Trypanis ed.), are considered among the masterpieces of world literature. Feast day, 1 Oct.

Crit. ed. of his works by P. Maas–C. A. Trypanis (genuine Cantica, Oxford, 1963; Cantica dubia, Berlin, 1970). There is a much less satisfactory ed. by N. B. Tomadakes (4 vols. + supplement, Athens, 1952–9). Works also ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Grosdidier de Matons (S.C., xcix, cx, cxiv, cxxviii; 1964–7). H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 425–7, with bibl.; Bardenhewer, v, p. 199 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 532 f.

ROMANS, Epistle to the. The longest of St. *Paul's Epistles and the most systematic theologically. The letter was dispatched from *Corinth, prob. c. A.D. 58, when St. Paul was about to leave for *Jerusalem at the close of his 'Third Missionary Journey' and was proposing to travel thence to *Rome, which he had not previously visited. It is the only Epistle which St. Paul addressed to a Church not of his own foundation. He writes as one conscious of his Apostolic commission from Christ, yet deferentially, as 'not wishing to build upon another man's foundation' (15. 20).

After a formal opening, St. Paul gives an epitome of the Gospel which he preaches (1. 16 f.). The universality of sin, both in the Gentile world with its idolatry and vice, and among the Jews, who have failed to keep the Mosaic law, is shown to be a fact (1. 18 – 2. 29), and leads to the conclusion that 'by the works of the law'—i.e. by all human efforts at obedience—'no flesh is justified before God' (3. 20). On the contrary, *justification is given 'apart from law' (3. 21) by the righteousness (or 'righteous act') of God which is revealed in Christ, whom God 'set forth to be a propitiation' to reconcile sinful man to God (3. 25). The method of appropriating this free gift of God is by faith, acc. to the example of *Abraham (4), whose trust in God, rather than any legal observance, was 'counted to him for righteousness' (Gen. 15. 6). By such faith Christians obtain not only peace with God but also the hope of glory and the love of God, imparted through the gift of the Holy Spirit, all of which are mediated by the atoning death of Christ, the Second *Adam (5).

St. Paul next rebuts the objection that in such a situation we might as well continue in sin so that grace might abound. In reply he points to the fact that *Baptism effects a change in character which is (i) a death to sin and a sharing in Christ's death and resurrection, (ii) a transfer, as of a slave, to a new ownership, viz. from sin to righteousness, or (iii), like the death of a spouse, the end of one marriage-bond and the beginning of another (6. 1 – 7. 4). Lest these analogies might seem to make the 'law' equivalent to 'sin', he elaborates the true purpose of the law in God's design (7. 5–25). It is by the Spirit through Christ that we are freed from sin and the resulting condemnation and that we walk not by the flesh but by the Spirit. The life according to the Spirit, in which as 'joint heirs with Christ' we are led to eternal life, is celebrated in a hymn of confidence in the glory of our redemption (8).

The next section deals with the problem of the destiny of Israel. There is a new situation in which, while salvation is now offered freely also to Gentiles, most Jews have rejected it. But, as in His dealings with the patriarchs and Pharaoh, God is sovereign in His choice or rejection of whom He will, even though only a remnant of Israel be saved. St. Paul also recognizes that the falling-away of Israel may be only temporary, to provide an occasion for the bringing in of the Gentiles, and that we can trustfully await the eventual restoration of the unconverted Israelites in God's providence (9–11).

St. Paul now turns to the practical obligations of the Christian life. We are to live not acc. to the fashion of this present world but acc. to the will of God in the unity of the Body of Christ, 'overcoming evil with good' (12). Due obedience must be given to the civil government, for the ruler is a 'minister of God' (13. 1–7). The whole law is summed up in the command to love one's neighbour. All this is the more urgent, as the *Parousia is at hand (13. 8–14). There must be mutual tolerance. Those who do not share the sensitiveness of others about foods and days must respect the consciences of the scrupulous, who in turn must not judge their brethren (14. 1–15. 13).

In the final section St. Paul treats of his personal plans, conveys his greetings to some twenty-five named persons, adds yet a word more on unity, and concludes with further greetings, the 'grace', and a doxology (15. 14–16. 27).

The integrity of the text of Romans has been much discussed. There is evidence of one ancient recension which ended at 14. 23, followed immediately by the doxology (16. 25–27), and of another ending at 15. 33, again followed by the doxology. There are also texts which omit the name 'Rome' in 1. 7 and 1. 15. There is no completely satisfactory explanation of these facts, but it seems on the whole more likely that the short recensions represent abbreviations of the full text than that the full text is an expansion of the recensions. However, many modern scholars have contended (independently of the textual evidence) that the long list of personal greetings in ch. 16 suggests that this chapter at least was designed for some Church in which St. Paul had a number of friends (most prob. *Ephesus) rather than Rome, which he explicitly states (1. 13) that he had never visited. But whatever the true solution, it is clear that the doxology appears in three different places in different MS. traditions and in some MSS. it is lacking altogether.

Rom. has always been recognized as a primary contribution to Christian theology. Its influence is perhaps already to be traced in other Books of the NT (e.g. 1 Pet., Heb., Jas.) and it is quoted or alluded to by the Fathers from St. *Clement of Rome onwards. From the 4th cent. it stood first in the traditional *Canon of the Pauline Epp. From *Origen onwards it has been the subject of many commentaries, and its teaching was esp. influential in St. *Augustine's anti-*Pelagian works and has profoundly affected the Christian outlook on such questions as original sin, merit, and justification generally. In a different way, the reading of Rom. 13. 3 f. played a decisive part in St. Augustine's conversion (cf. Confessions, viii. 29). Meditation on Rom. 1. 16 f. strongly influenced M. *Luther's conviction of the truth of justification by faith, and J. *Wesley's conversion was also connected with his study of it.

The principal Gk. commentators are Origen (whose Comm., written at *Caesarea in his later life, survives, apart from a few fragments, only in *Rufinus's paraphrase) and *Chrysostom (written during his Antiochene years). Lat. commentators include *Ambrosiaster, *Pelagius, P. *Abelard, and St. *Thomas Aquinas (a study of exceptional penetration, due, however, more to the theological equipment which Aquinas brought to the Epistle than to close study of the text itself). Luther, despite the place which the teaching of Romans occupies in his theology, wrote no Comm. on Rom. to match his great work on Gal.; but important Commentaries come from P. *Melanchthon (Nuremberg, 1522, on Rom. and Cor.; more fully on Rom. only, Wittenberg, 1532; enlarged ed., Strassburg, 1540) and J. *Calvin (Strassburg, 1540). Among Commentaries publd. in the 19th cent. may be mentioned those of [F.] A. [G.] Tholuck (Halle, 1842; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1833–6), C. F. A. Fritzsche (3 vols., Halle, 1836–1843), H. A. W. Meyer (K.E.K., Teil 2, iv; 1836; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1873–4), B. *Jowett (2, vols., with Thess. and Gal., London, 1855, vol. ii), C. J. *Vaughan (Cambridge, 1859), F. *Godet (2 vols., Paris, 1879–80; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1881), H. C. G. *Moule (Camb. Bib., 1879), B. *Weiss (K.E.K., Abt. iv, ed. 6, 1881), and H. P. *Liddon (posthumous, London, 1893).

For English-speaking students, a new era in the study of Rom. was opened by the Comm. of W. *Sanday–A. C. *Headlam (I.C.C., 1895). Since then there have appeared those of H. *Lietzmann (Hb. N.T. iii, pt. 1; 1906; ed. 3, 1928); T. *Zahn (Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, vi; Leipzig, 1910); E. Kühl (Leipzig, 1913); M. J. *Lagrange, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1916); N. P. *Williams in C. *Gore–H. L. Goudge–A. Guillaume (edd.), A New Commentary on Holy Scripture (1928), pp. 442–84; C. H. *Dodd (Moff. Comm., 1932); P. Boylan (Dublin, 1934); K. E. *Kirk (Clar. Bib., 1937); A. Nygren (Stockholm, 1944; Eng. tr., 1952); C. K. Barrett (Black's N.T. Comm., 1957); O. Michel (K.E.K., Abt. iv, ed. 10, 1955), F. J. Leenhardt (Neuchâtel, 1957; Eng. tr., 1961), E. Best (Cambridge, 1967), and C. E. B. Cranfield (I.C.C., new ed., 2 vols., 1975–9). Though K. Barth's commentary, Der Römerbrief (1918; ed. 6, 1921; Eng. tr., 1933), often throws flashes of illumination on the Epistle, its main significance is as an exposition of the author's theological viewpoint. Other works on Rom. include K. *Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St. Paul (1911), pp. 324–420; P. Feine, Der Römerbrief. Eine exegetische Studie (1903). E. Evans, To the Romans. An Exposition of the Epistle (1948).

ROMANTICISM. The word is used esp. for the movement in literature and art reasserting passion and imagination in reaction from the classicism and rationalism which marked the 18th cent. As so used, it is a vague term, and describes a mood or tendency rather than a system. It has been applied, however, in a more exact sense to the school which flourished in Germany at the end of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th cent. of which Goethe has been termed the divinity, F. *Schlegel the high priest, and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, with his definition of religion as 'feeling of dependence', the prophet. Among its more vigorous Catholic lay exponents was *Chateaubriand; and *Novalis was also a prominent member of the group.

ROMANUS, St. A deacon and exorcist of a church of *Caesarea in Palestine, who was martyred at *Antioch (c. 304) in the *Diocletianic Persecution. The contemporary account of *Eusebius (De mart. Pal., 2) was embellished by later writers. *Prudentius mentions a boy associated with him in martyrdom, whom later tradition, perhaps through some confusion with an authentic Syriac martyr Barlaba or Balaam, names Barulas. The two saints are mentioned together in the Roman Martyrology. Feast day, 18 Nov.

H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'S. Romain martyr d'Antioche' in Anal. Boll., 1 (1932), pp. 241–83, with text of sources. On the entry in the Roman Martyrology, id. in AA.SS., Nov. II

(1931), p. 650 f. Id., 'S. Barlaam, martyr à Antioche' in Anal. Boll., xxii (1903), pp. 129–45, with text of 'Passio'.

ROMANUS, St. 'Melodus'. See Romanos, St.

ROME (Early Christian). An early but not well grounded tradition asserts that St. *Peter reached Rome in A.D. 42. When the Ep. to the *Romans was written (c. A.D. 58), a large Christian community already existed at Rome, and *Suetonius almost certainly refers to Christians in Claud., xxv. 4 (Judaeos impulsore Chresto tumultuantes Roma expulit). St. Paul arrived between A.D. 59 and 61 (Acts 28. 16) and many scholars hold that his '*Captivity Epistles', as well as Mk., Lk., Acts, and 1 Pet., were written in Rome. The burning of the City under *Nero (A.D. 64) was a pretext for a general persecution of the Christians (*Tacitus, Ann., xv. 44; I Clem. 6) in which it appears that both St. Peter and St. Paul were martyred. Under Vespasian (69–79) and Titus (79–81) the Church grew and attracted persons of every social class, incl. members of the patrician families. *Domitian (81–96) had his cousin, the consul Flavius Clemens, and his cousin's wife, Flavia *Domitilla, banished, prob. because they were Christians.

The early Roman Bishops, of whom we have exceptionally reliable lists, were all Greek-speaking before *Victor I (c. 189) and mostly administrators rather than theologians. In the first two cents. A.D. the most notable Bishops were St. *Clement I (c. 88–97), author of an Ep. to the Church in Corinth; St. *Telesphorus (c. 126–36), prob. the only martyr among them; St. *Pius I (c. 141–54), brother of the *Hermas who was author of 'The Shepherd'; Anicetus (c. 155–66), who received St. *Polycarp of Smyrna and discussed with him the dating of *Easter; and St. Victor I, the first Latin-speaking Bishop, whose action in the *Quartodeciman Controversy reflects the growing importance of the see. St. *Ignatius of Antioch was martyred at Rome (c. 110–17), and under *Marcus Aurelius (A.D. 161–80) the Church was severely persecuted, St. *Justin Martyr and (prob.) St. *Cecilia being among the victims. During the 2nd cent. Christians and semi-Christians of the most diverse views (*Tatian, *Hegesippus, *Valentinus and *Marcion) congregated in Rome.

During the early 3rd cent., a number of *Monarchians of varying schools taught in the capital and were opposed by the rigorist theologian, St. *Hippolytus. Hippolytus's disputes with St. *Callistus (Bp. 217–22) on disciplinary and dogmatic matters led to a serious schism, which continued until the episcopate of Pontian (230–5), when the persecution of Maximin (Emp., 235–8) issued in the exile of the leaders of both parties and their consequent reconciliation. During the persecution of *Decius (249–51) St. *Fabian (Bp. 236–50) was martyred and the see kept vacant for thirteen months. Another rigorist schism, led by the presbyter *Novatian, took place under Fabian's successor, *Cornelius (251–3), who died in exile during the persecution of Gallus. *Stephen I, the next Pope (253–7), is known for his controversy with St. *Cyprian of Carthage about re-baptism. Persecution began once more under Valerian (253–60), who struck at both the clergy and the property of the Church, and in 258 the Bishop, *Sixtus (Xystus) II, and all his deacons, incl. St. *Laurence (q.v.), were martyred. Bishop *Dionysius of Rome (259–68) is best remembered for his intervention in a doctrinal dispute in the Church of Alexandria.

By this date the Roman Church was already highly organized. Under Cornelius there were forty-six presbyters, seven deacons, and a large number of lesser ministers (*Eusebius, H.E., VI. xliii. 11). The considerable property of the Church included private houses (tituli) in the City for worship and burial-places (*catacombs, q.v.) outside the walls. Both these would be made over to the Church by wealthy Christians who would hold them in custody for the community. The administration of this property, together with the relief of a large number of poor, fell to the deacons, each of whom had a district and a staff under him.

Little is recorded of the course of the *Diocletianic persecution at Rome. The accounts of both the lapse and the martyrdom of Bp. Marcellinus (296–304) seem equally unreliable. But it is known that the Church's property was confiscated and that a number of Christians fell away; and it is possible that among the victims was St. *Agnes. With the coup d'état of Maxentius (306), persecution ceased, but the see remained vacant until 308. Bps. Marcellus (308–9) and Eusebius (310) had to face opposition from the lapsed, who wished to be readmitted to communion with little or no penance. The disorders which arose led to the exile of both Bishops and their chief opponent, Heraclius. The re-establishment of the tituli by Marcellus and the return of the Church's property in 311 under Bp. *Miltiades (311–14) were the prelude to the grant of full toleration. This was achieved by Constantine's victory at the Milvian Bridge (28 Oct. 312) and the so-called Edict of *Milan (313).

The period from 313 to the fall of the Western Empire in 476 saw the steady growth of the authority of the Bishops, or Popes, of Rome. They consistently intervened on the orthodox side in the theological disputes of the time. Their characteristics were common sense, firm adherence to traditional belief, distrust of theological niceties, and support of orthodox leaders in adversity, qualities which made appeal to their authority increasingly general. *Julius I (337–52) and *Liberius (352–66) upheld the Nicene faith against the *Arians, *Damasus I (366–84) condemned *Apollinarianism, *Innocent I (402–17) *Pelagianism, and *Celestine I (422–32) *Nestorianism, while the '*Tome' of St. *Leo I (the Great) (440–61), a masterly statement of the orthodox doctrine of the Incarnation, greatly assisted the defeat of *Eutychianism at the Council of *Chalcedon (451). St. *Athanasius was welcomed in Rome while in exile from 339 to 342, and St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, Flavian of Antioch and St. *Augustine were all supported by the increasingly respected authority of the Roman see in their struggles against heresy.

During this period the disciplinary authority of the Papacy increased steadily despite the exile of Liberius, the intrusion of the anti-pope Felix, and the tumults which accompanied the elections of Damasus and *Boniface (418–22). The Canons of *Sardica (343) and the legislation of Gratian (Emp., 375–83) and *Theodosius (d. 395) firmly established the Roman see as a court of appeal. The earliest genuine decretal dates from the reign of *Siricius (384–99), and Innocent I and Leo I frequently intervened in the affairs of other Churches.

Meanwhile paganism lingered on among the aristocracy much longer in Rome than elsewhere. Not before 382 was Christian influence sufficiently strong to cause the removal, by Gratian, of the Altar of Victory from the Senate-house; but there soon followed the anti-pagan legislation of Theodosius and the decree of Honorius (408) denying the right of property to the pagan religions. The growth of Christianity in Rome in the period is reflected in the building of churches under Pope *Sylvester (314–35) and his successors (see Rome, Churches of), the restoration by Pope Damasus of the tombs of the martyrs, the introduction of monastic life by St. Athanasius and St. *Jerome, and the beginnings of the latter's new Latin version of the Bible (the *Vulgate) at the instance of Damasus.

In political significance Rome suffered greatly after the removal of the capital of the Empire to *Constantinople (330). Even in the West Milan and later *Ravenna became the effective capitals rather than Rome. In the 5th cent. Italy was invaded thrice, by *Alaric the Goth, *Attila the Hun, and Gaiseric the Vandal, and Rome was sacked twice before the final fall of the Western Empire in 476. The rule of Italy passed into the hands first of Odoacer, and then of *Theodoric the Ostrogoth, neither of whom, as an Arian, was well disposed to the Roman see. Their policy, however, was one of tolerance, and a far greater disaster was the long Gothic War (537–53), during which Rome changed hands several times between Goths and Byzantines, and, at one point, was almost completely abandoned by its inhabitants. The partial conquest of Italy by the Arian Lombards and the decline of the Byzantine power made it necessary for the Popes to assume political authority in Rome. Fortunately for the Papacy, this coincided with the pontificates of the able Pelagius II (579–90) and his greater successor St. *Gregory I ('the Great') (590–604). The defence of the 'Roman Duchy' was assured by the papal policy of holding the balance of power between Byzantines, Lombards, and (later) Franks. Gregory's missionary and pastoral zeal, united with his remarkable statesmanship, make his pontificate one of the outstanding eras in the history of the Papacy. Especially notable was his genius in turning Benedictine monasticism into an instrument for missionary activity. After the Lombards had destroyed practically all monastic life in Italy except in Rome itself, Gregory founded his own monastery on the Celian Hill which gave refuge to St. *Benedict's community of *Monte Cassino and sent St. Augustine to Britain. He made important changes in the Roman liturgy and fostered the development of liturgical chant (see Schola Cantorum).

Relations between the Papacy and the Byzantine Emperors, the nominal overlords of Rome, deteriorated during the 7th cent. Pope Martin I (649–55) died a prisoner in exile and *Gregory II (715–31) was the chief opponent of the *Iconoclast Emperor, *Leo III (the Isaurian). We have the beginnings of the Temporal Power of the Papacy in the Donation of Sutri to 'St. Peter' (729) by the Lombard King, Liutprand. The growth of the Lombard power led Pope Stephen III (752–7) to appeal in 753 to the Frankish King *Pepin for support and in 773 *Hadrian I (772–95) followed his example with Pepin's son, *Charlemagne. The Frankish intervention led to the destruction of the Lombard kingdom, to the restoration of the Roman Duchy and the Exarchate of Ravenna not to the Byzantine Empire but to the Papacy, and, in 800, to the coronation by St. *Leo III (795–816) in Rome of Charlemagne as Roman Emperor.

See also foll. entry, and under individual Popes.

The most important single early source is the Liber Pontificalis* (q.v.). Much primary material is also to be found in the extant Papal Letters (coveniently catalogued in Jaffé, i). The subject naturally occupies a place in all histories of the early Church, notably those of L. *Duchesne, P. *Batiffol, H. *Lietzmann, Fliche–Martin, and in C. *Baronius's Annales. Much information also in the earlier volumes of F. *Gregorovius, Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter (8 vols., 1859–72; Eng. tr., 8 vols., 1894–1902). H. Grisar, S.J., Geschichte Roms und der Päpste im Mittelalter, i: Rom beim Ausgang der antiken Welt (14 Lieferungen, [1898–] 1901; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1911–12). H. Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom. Liturgische und archäologische Studien (1915; ed. 2, 1927). E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums (2 vols., 1930–3). On the transition to Medieval Rome, cf. also L. Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical, 754–1073 (1898).

ROME, Churches of. From the innumerable Roman churches of historic and ecclesiastical interest, only a selection, necessarily somewhat arbitrary, can be listed in this art. For the four 'Major *Basilicas'—(1) *St. Peter's, (2) St. John *Lateran, (3) *Santa Maria Maggiore, and (4) *St. Paul's outside the Walls—see sep. entries.

In addition to these Major Basilicas three further churches (here listed first, Nos. 5, 6, and 7) also rank as 'Patriarchal Basilicas'.

(5) S. Croce in Gerusalemme (Basilica Sessoriana). Founded by St. *Helena c. 325 on the site of the Sessorian Palace to enshrine the newly recovered relics of the Passion. Very little of the 4th cent. building remains except a subterranean chapel and the pillars of the nave. A Council met here as early as 433, and at a later date the Pope went barefoot on Good Friday from the Lateran to S. Croce, carrying a relic of the Cross. The church was rebuilt by Lucius II (1144), much restored at the end of the 15th and beginning of the 16th cent., and modernized under *Benedict XIV (1744).

(6) S. Lorenzo fuori le Mura (4th cent.). In the Cemetery of S. Ciriaco where St. *Laurence was buried. The basilica, already described by *Prudentius (d. c. 410), was rebuilt by Pelagius II (579–90) and entirely reconstructed by *Honorius III (d. 1227), who transferred the façade and porch to the W. end. *Pius IX (d. 7 Feb. 1878) is buried in the crypt. The church was damaged by a bomb on 19 July 1943.

(7) S. Sebastiano fuori le Mura (4th–5th cent.). On the *Appian Way over the catacombs. The relics of St. *Peter and St. *Paul were possibly removed here during the Valerianic Persecution (258). The church is first mentioned by St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604). It contains the body of St. *Sebastian and a statue of the saint designed by G. L. Bernini (1589–1680); the present church is mainly the work of Card. Scipio Borghese (1612).

(8) S. Agnese. On the Via Nomentana, adjoining the catacombs where St. *Agnes was buried. Built under *Constantine (d. 337) or slightly later, the church (now subterranean) has a fine mosaic in the apse depicting St. Agnes with Popes *Symmachus (498–514) and *Honorius I (625–38) on either side. In a chapel is the shrine of St. Emerentiana (feast day, 23 Jan.), her foster sister. Annually on 21 Jan. the lambs to provide wool for the archiepiscopal *pallia are blessed here. The church is served by *Canons Regular of the Lateran.

(9) S. Clemente. Near the *Colosseum. The present church dates from the 12th cent. (*Paschal II, d. 1118); but excavations begun in 1858 revealed the existence of a much larger church (mentioned by St. *Jerome in 392; the scene of a Council in 417) at a lower level, which was severely damaged at the sack of Rome under Robert Guiscard (1084). The latter has some highly interesting 9th–11th cent. mural paintings depicting the legends of Sts. *Cyril and Methodius and of St. *Clement. The white marble altar canopy, choir screen, and ambones of the present church no doubt belonged to this earlier structure. At a still lower level is a chapel of *Mithras dating from the Imperial Age. The church, with the adjacent priory, is now in the hands of Irish *Dominicans.

(10) SS. Cosmas & Damiano. On the edge of the Forum. The first of the Roman churches to be constructed from pagan temples, it consists of the union of two buildings, a round Temple of Romulus (built by the Emp. Maxentius, son of Maximian; d. 312), and a rectangular Temple of the Sacra Urbs (built by Vespasian, d. A.D. 79). They were adapted to Christian worship by Felix IV (528), who inserted the notable mosaics (subjects from the Apocalypse, &c.) and dedicated the church to Sts. *Cosmas and Damian, the two 'anarguroi' who enjoyed great popularity at Rome in the 6th cent.

(11) S. Francesca Romana (S. Maria Nuova). In the Forum. *Leo IV (d. 855) erected the church, formerly known as S. Maria Nuova, on a site partly occupied by a ruined Temple of Venus and Rome, to replace the ruined S. Maria Antiqua. The mosaics in the apse date from 1161; the beautiful campanile from the 12th–13th cent. St. *Frances of Rome (q.v.), whose labours were centred here, was buried in the church (1440), which was restored by Carlo Maderna (1556–1629) after her canonization (1608). It is served by *Oblates of the Order of St. Benedict.

(12) The Gesù. The principal church of the *Jesuits and one of the most ornate in Rome, enshrining the body of St. *Ignatius Loyola, their founder. It was built (1568–75) in the *Baroque style by Card. Alessandro Farnese (1520–89, nephew of *Paul III) after designs by Vignola and Giacomo della Porta.

(13) SS. Giovanni & Paolo. On the Celian Hill. Built by *Pammachius over the supposed house of the two Roman saints, *John and Paul (4th cent.). Interesting remains of an ancient dwelling (discovered 1887) contain some famous frescoes (Christ between Sts. Michael and Gabriel, Sts. John and Paul). The church, which with other buildings on the Celian Hill was severely damaged by the Normans in the sack of Rome, was enlarged in 1154, and extensively restored in the late 19th cent. In a chapel lies the body of St. *Paul of the Cross, founder of the *Passionists, who now serve the church.

(14) S. Gregorio Magno. Also on the Celian Hill. A monastery was established here in 575 by St. Gregory the Great (Pope, 590–604) in his paternal house (gens Anicii) and was dedicated to St. *Andrew the Apostle. Later *Gregory II (715–31) dedicated it to his earlier namesake. The church, which claims to possess the stone bed and marble chair of the saint (himself buried in St. Peter's), was extensively restored by G. B. Soria in 1633 under Card. Borghese and the interior modernized in 1725–34. It has close connexions with England as the orig. home of St. *Augustine of Canterbury and the titular church of Cards. H. E. *Manning and H. *Vaughan, successive Abps. of *Westminster. There are some frescoes by Guido Reni (1574–1642). Since 1573 the church has been served by *Camaldolese.

(15) S. Maria in Ara Coeli (so named since the 14th cent.). On the site of the ancient Roman citadel and the Temple of Juno Moneta and already mentioned as 'S. Maria de Capitolio' in the 9th cent. It was in this church that E. *Gibbon conceived the plan of his Decline and Fall. A chapel in the transept ('Capella Santa di Sant'Elena) marks the spot where, acc. to an early legend, a vision of the Blessed Virgin on an altar in heaven (ara coeli) was granted to the Emp. Augustus (d. A.D. 14) when sacrificing. Beneath this altar in a porphyry sarcophagus are the reputed remains of St. Helena. The church was the scene of Marcantonio Colonna's solemn thanksgiving for the victory of *Lepanto (5 Oct. 1571). Since 1280 it has been served by *Franciscans.

(16) S. Maria in Cosmedin (also 'Bocca della Verità'). On the site of an ancient temple, perh. the 'Temple of Fortune', and in a region formerly inhabited by Greek refugee Christians, it was prob. so named from its beauty (Gk. κοσμέω, 'adorn'; or perh. from a square named 'Cosmedin' in *Constantinople). The church, which has recently been restored to its austere simplicity, is one of the best examples of an early basilica in Rome (inlaid marble canopy over high altar, ambones, Cosmati pavement); the fine campanile was erected by *Hadrian I (d. 795). Acc. to a late tradition, St. *Augustine of Hippo taught at a neighbouring house.

(17) S. Maria ad Martyres (the 'Pantheon'). The foundations go back to a building erected by Marcus Agrippa, son-in-law of the Emp. Augustus, in 27 B.C.; the present round structure and vaulting are due to Hadrian (d. 138), who rebuilt it after it had been struck by lightning. On 13 May 609 it was dedicated as a Christian church by Boniface IV (608–15) under the name of 'S. Maria ad Martyres', large quantities of relics being brought from the catacombs to mark the event and the Feast of *All Saints (orig. 13 May) instituted. *Urban VIII (Maffeo Barberini) removed the bronze panels from the ceiling of the portico to provide metal for the spiral columns for the baldacchino of St. Peter's (hence 'Quod non fecerunt barbari, fecerunt Barberini'). The church contains the tomb of *Raphael.

(18) S. Maria sopra Minerva. On the ruins of an ancient temple of Minerva which later became the site of a Greek monastery. The present church (completed 1453), the only Gothic Church in Rome, was begun c. 1280 by Fra Sisto and Fra Ristoro, two *Dominicans, and has been continuously served by members of the Order. It contains statues, frescoes, and paintings by *Michelangelo, Filippino Lippi, Giacomo della Porta, and other famous artists.

(19) S. Pietro in Vincoli (also 'Basilica Eudoxiana'). The church, which goes back at least to 431, being at first known as titulus Apostolorum, was reconstructed by Sixtus III (432–40), to whom the Empress Eudoxia, wife of Valentinian II, presented the reputed chains of St. Peter. Among its monuments are the celebrated *Moses of Michelangelo, a relief of *Nicholas of Cusa, and the tomb of *Julius II (1503–13). It is served by Canons Regular of St. John Lateran.

(20) S. Prassede. On the Esquiline. The present church, which contains the reputed remains of St. *Praxedes and St. *Pudentiana, was built by Paschal I (817–24) near an earlier church of the same dedication. A chapel near the W. end contains some furniture which belonged to St. *Charles Borromeo, titular Card. of this church. The 9th cent. mosaics, among the best in Rome, depict subjects from the Apocalypse. A column in the chapel of St. *Zeno is traditionally reckoned that to which Christ was bound. The church, which is served by *Vallumbrosans, inspired R. Browning's 'Tomb at St. Praxed's'.

(21) S. Pudenziana. Near the foot of the Esquiline. Its nucleus was the mansion of the senator, Pudens, whose daughters, Praxedes and Pudentiana, are said to have given it to *Pius I (d. 154 ?). The church was restored as early as the time of *Siricius (d. 395). The apse has a fine early mosaic (c. 400, but much restored; incl. Christ enthroned with the Apostles, and two female figures, prob. representing the Jewish and Gentile Churches). A table in the church is venerated as that on which St. Peter celebrated Mass.

(22) SS. Quatro Coronati. On the Celian Hill. As early as the 4th cent. a church (titulus Aemilianae) existed on the site; it was later dedicated to the *Quattro Coronati whose bodies it enshrines. After its destruction by Robert Guiscard (1084), it was rebuilt in 1111 by Paschal II, who reduced its size. It is served by *Capuchins.

(23) S. Sabina. On the Aventine. Built by an Illyrian priest, Petrus, and consecrated, acc. to tradition, in 432, it is one of the most impressive Roman basilicas (recently admirably restored). It contains a fine series of columns of Parian marble which came from a Temple of Diana and between the vestibule and nave a large wooden door (5th–6th cent.) with a series of remarkable wood-carvings (incl. a very early Crucifixion). The church has been served by Dominicans since the time of *Honorius III (d. 1227).

(24) S. Stefano Rotondo. On the Celian Hill not far from the Lateran. Prob. orig. a secular building, it was consecrated by Pope *Simplicius (468–83), decorated with marbles in the 6th cent., and adorned with mosaics (Christ above a jewelled cross; Sts. Primus and Felicianus, martyrs from the age of the Persecution of Diocletian) in the 7th cent. The transverse wall prob. belongs to the time of Hadrian I (d. 795). Under *Nicholas V (1447–55) a third outside circle of pillars was destroyed and the church correspondingly reduced in size; but it is said to be still the largest circular church in existence. It contains an ancient episcopal throne from which St. Gregory I (d. 604) delivered one of his homilies.

M. Armellini, Le chiese di Roma dalle loro origini fino al secolo XVI (1887; new ed., continuing history to 19th cent., ed. C. Cecchelli, 2 vols., 1942). O. *Marucchi, Basiliques et églises de Rome (1902). J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hfft. 1–2; 1918). Id., Die Stationskirchen des Missale Romanum (Ecclesia Orans, xix; 1926). C. Hülsen, Le chiese di Roma nel medio evo. Cataloghi ed appunti (1927). F. X. Zimmermann, Die Kirchen Roms (1935). R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae (Monumenti d'Antichità cristiana pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, Ser. 2, ii; 5 vols., 1937–77). R. Vielliard, Recherches sur les origines de la Rome chrétienne. Les Églises romaines et leur rôle dans l'histoire et la topographie de la ville depuis la fin du monde antique jusqu'à la formation de l'état pontifical (Mâcon, 1941; repr. with illustrations, Rome, 1959). É. Mâle, Rome et ses vieilles églises ([1942]; Eng. tr., 1960). F. W. Deichmann, Frühchristliche Kirchen in Rom (Basle, 1948). C. G. Paluzzi (ed.), Roma cristiana; vol. ii: P. Testini, Le catacombe e gli antichi cimiteri cristiani in Roma [1966]; vol. iii: G. Matthiae, Le chiese di Roma dal IV al X secolo [1962]; vol. iv: V. Golzio–G. Zander, Le chiese di Roma dall'XI al XVI secolo [1963]; vol. v: V. Mariani, Le chiese di Roma dal XVII al XVIII secolo [1963]; vol. vi: C. Cheschi, Le chiese di Roma dagli inizi del neoclassico al 1961 [1963]. R. Krautheimer, Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture (1965), passim. J. Wilpert, Die römische Mosaiken und Malereien kirchlicher Bauten vom IV. bis XIII. Jahrhundert (4 vols., 1916). Popular surveys in English by E. Hutton, Rome (1909; ed. 7, 1950); R. Thynne, The Churches of Rome (1924); R. Lanciani, Wanderings through Ancient Roman Churches (1925); and M. Sharp, The Traveller's Guide to the Churches of Rome (1967). U. Benigni in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 164–79, s.v. 'Rome', esp. pp. 169–75; E. Josi in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1208–45, s.v. 'Roma V: topografia'.

ROMUALD, St. (c. 950–1027), founder of the *Camaldolese Order. A nobleman of *Ravenna, he entered the abbey of Sant'Apollinare in Classe through horror at his father's having killed a man in a duel. In 998 he was appointed abbot, but the life not proving sufficiently severe, he resigned in the next year and retired to the neighbouring marshes to practise rigid asceticism. In his later years he wandered round Italy, founding hermitages and monasteries, that at Campus Maldoli becoming the centre of the Camaldolese Order. Feast day, formerly 7 Feb., now 19 June.

Fragm. of exposition on Ps. lxviii attrib. to Romuald in J. P. Migne, PL, cxl, 1125–8. Life by St. *Peter Damian (c. 1040) in AA.SS., Feb. II (1658), pp. 104–24; repr. from A. *Mai's ed. of Damian's works in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cxliv, 953–1008; and ed. G. Tabacco (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, xciv; 1957). Filippo Maria da Napoli, O. Camald., Delle notizie storiche della vita di San Romoaldo (Naples, 1716). B. Collina, Vita di San Romualdo, fondatore della religione camaldolese (2 pts., Bologna, 1752). W. Franke, Quellen und Chronologie zur Geschichte Romualdo von Camaldoli und seiner Einsiedlergenossenschaften im Zeitalter Ottos III (Diss., Halle, 1910); id., Romuald von Camaldoli und seine Reformtätigkeit zur Zeit Ottos III (Historische Studien, cvii; 1913). Modern lives by A. Pagnani (Sassoferrato, 1927; ed. 2, 1967) and T. Ciampelli (Ravenna, 1927). J. Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Saint Romuald et le monachisme missionnaire' in Rev. Bén., lxxii (1962), pp. 307–23. G. Tabacco, 'Romualdo di Ravenna e gli inizi dell'eremitismo camaldolese' in L'eremitismo in occidente nei secoli XI e XII (Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, iv; Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Contributi, Serie Terza, Varia, iv [1965]), pp. 73–119. L. A. St. L. Toke in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 179.

RONCALLI, ANGELO GIUSEPPE. See John XXIII.

'ROOT AND BRANCH'. An expression originally taken from the wording of the London Petition of 11 Dec. 1640 (itself modelled on Mal. 4. 1) in which it was demanded 'that the said government [i.e. the episcopal system] with all its dependencies, roots, and branches, be abolished'. The petition thus became known as the Root and Branch Petition, and the bill of 1641 embodying its demands the Root and Branch Bill; and the expression hence came to be applied to any thoroughgoing policy.

ROPES, JAMES HARDY (1866–1933), NT scholar. Born at Salem, Massachusetts, he was educated at Harvard and Andover and in Germany. From 1903 until his death he was a professor at Harvard university. His principal writings were Die Sprüche Jesu (Texte und Untersuchungen, xiv. 2; 1896), an edition of the uncanonical sayings of Christ; a Commentary on the Ep. of St. James (I.C.C., 1916); and an edition of the texts (based on *Codex Vaticanus and *Codex Bezae) of the Acts of the Apostles (Beginnings of Christianity, ed. F. J. Foakes-Jackson and K. *Lake, vol. iii, 1926).

E. C. Moore in Dict. Amer. Biog., xvi (1935), p. 151 f.

ROSARY. The devotion to the Fifteen *Mysteries (q.v.) in which fifteen '*decades' of '*Ave Marias' are recited, each decade being preceded by the *Paternoster and followed by the *Gloria Patri. Ordinarily only a third part of the Rosary, a so-called *chaplet, is said on one occasion. To assist the memory, the prayers are commonly counted on a string of beads. Acc. to a tradition current since the 15th cent., the devotion of the Rosary was founded by St. *Dominic in the course of his missionary work against the *Albigensians; but in fact it seems to have developed gradually, esp. under *Cistercian and Dominican influence. The name of an earlier form of instrument for reciting the rosary (a 'paternoster') survived until the mid-20th century in 'Paternoster Row' in London, once the residence of craftsmen who made them. In the RC Church the Feast of the BVM of the Rosary is kept on 7 Oct., the anniversary of the victory of the Christian naval forces over the Turks at *Lepanto (1571); throughout the month of October special prominence used to be given to the devotion. See also Chaplet and Rings (7).

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Rosary' in The Month, xcvi (1900), pp. 403–18, 513–27, 620–37, xcvii (1901), pp. 67–79, 172–88, 286–304, and 384–404. M. Chéry, O.P., La Théologie du rosaire (2 vols., 1869); id., Histoire générale du rosaire et de sa confrérie (1869); T. Esser, O.P., Unserer Lieben Frauen Rosenkranz erklärt (1889); M. D. Chapotin, O.P., Les Quinze Mystères du saint-rosaire (1900). H. Holzapfel, O.F.M., St. Dominicus und der Rosenkranz (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, Nr. 12; 1903). M. M. Gorce, O.P., Le Rosaire et ses antécédents historiques (1932). H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 184–7, s.v.; M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2902–11, s.v. 'Rosaire'; W. A. Hinnebusch, O.P., in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 667–70, s.v.

ROSCELLINUS (d. c. 1125), Scholastic philosopher and theologian. The facts of his life are very imperfectly known. Probably a native of Compiègne, he studied at Soissons and *Reims, and later taught as a canon either at Compiègne or at Besançon. He was accused of *Tritheism at a Council at Soissons in 1092, but denied having taught it and went to England, where his doctrines were opposed by St. *Anselm. After his return to France he taught at Loches, Besançon, and Tours, his most famous pupil being P. *Abelard, who attacked his teaching c. 1120.

Roscellinus's theories are known principally through the works of his opponents Anselm, Abelard, and *John of Salisbury. He was one of the first and most outstanding defenders of *Nominalism, and possibly even its founder. He stressed the universal in voce to the detriment of the universal in re, claiming to establish that a being can have no parts. These philosophical tenets led him to adopt a Tritheist position, on the consideration that if the three Persons of the Trinity were identical in substance, as orthodoxy affirms, the Father, in generating the Son, would generate Himself and, on the other hand, the Father and the Holy Spirit would have become incarnate together with the Son.

His sole surviving work, a letter to P. Abelard, is ed. J. A. Schmeller in Abh. (Bayr.), v. (Hft. 3; 1849), pp. 189–210; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxviii, 357–72; crit. ed. by J. Reiners, Der Nominalismus in der Frühscholastik (B.G.P.M., viii, Hft. 5; 1910), pp. 62–80, with discussion of his position, pp. 25–41. Letter from Walter of Honnecourt to Roscellinus ed. by G. *Morin, O.S.B., in Rev. Bén., xxii (1905), pp. 172–5. F. Picavet, Roscelin, philosophe et théologien, d'après la légende et d'après l'histoire (École pratique des Hautes Études. Section des sciences religieuses. Rapports annuels, 1896; greatly enlarged ed., 1911). M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2911–15, s.v., with bibl.

ROSE OF LIMA, St. (1586–1617), the first canonized saint of America. She lived all her life in Lima, Peru, and from childhood practised the severest austerities. In her 20th year she joined the *Third Order of St. *Dominic. A vow of virginity and her strictness of life incurred persecution from her family and friends, and she also suffered intensely from interior desolation. Long sickness and early death crowned her self-sought mortifications. She was canonized by Clement X in 1671 and is the Patroness of S. America and the Philippines. Feast day, 23 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. V (1741), pp. 892–1029, incl. text of life by Leonard Hansen, O.P., pr. at Louvain, 1668, pp. 902–84, and bull of canonization, pp. 1027–9. Short life by J. B. Feuillet (Paris, 1671; Eng. tr. in The Lives of St. Rose of Lima, the Blessed Columba, &c., ed. by F. W. *Faber, London, 1847, pp. 3–195). M. T. de Bussierre, Le Pérou et sainte Rose de Lima (1863); F. M. Capes, The Flower of the New World. Being a Short History of St. Rose of Lima (1899); R. Vargas Ugarte, S.J., Vida de Santa Rosa de Santa María (Lima, 1951). Frances Parkinson Keyes, The Rose and the Lily (1962), pp. 55–138.

ROSE, Golden. See Golden Rose.

ROSE, HUGH JAMES (1795–1838), pre-*Tractarian Anglican High Churchman. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and after ordination as priest in 1819 held the vicarage of Horsham, W. Sussex, from 1821 to 1830, and of Hadleigh, Suffolk, from 1830 to 1833. A year's absence in Germany from May 1824 bore fruit in The State of the Protestant Religion in Germany (1825), designed to counteract the dangers of contemporary rationalism on the Continent. Its hostile tone provoked a reply from E. B. *Pusey, who in his early years was more sympathetically disposed than later towards German theology. In 1832 he founded the British Magazine to further High Church doctrines. A meeting in July 1833 in his rectory at Hadleigh, attended by W. *Palmer (of Worcester College), A. P. *Perceval, and R. H. *Froude, was an important landmark in the beginnings of the Tractarian Movement and indirectly led to the 'Association of Friends of the Church'. Later Rose became somewhat more critical of the Tractarian ideals. In 1833–4 he held the chair of divinity at *Durham University and in 1836 he was appointed Principal of *King's College, London. Rose's other writings include The Commission and Consequent Duties of the Clergy (1826), A Letter to the Lord Bishop of London in Reply to Mr. Pusey's Work on the Causes of Rationalism in Germany (1829), Notices of the Mosaic Law (1831), and The Gospel an Abiding System (1832).

J. W. *Burgon, The Lives of Twelve Good Men, i (1888), pp. 116–283 (No. 2: 'The Restorer of the Old Paths'). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 240–2. See also bibl. to Oxford Movement.

ROSENMÜLLER, ERNST FRIEDRICH KARL (1768–1835), Biblical scholar. From 1792 till his death he taught at Leipzig. He issued a long series of commentaries and other works bearing on Scriptural (esp. OT) exegesis, which drew extensively on rabbinic and patristic sources. They included Scholia in Vetus Testamentum (16 parts, 1788–1817), Handbuch der biblischen Altertumskunde (4 vols., 1823–31), and a new edition of S. *Bochart's Hierozoicon (1793–6).

A. Vogel–G. Frank in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), p. 156 f.

ROSETTA STONE, the celebrated basalt stele which provided J. F. Champollion (1790–1832) and others with the key to the Egyptian hieroglyphics. Discovered in 1799 by a party of French soldiers in the neighbourhood of Rosetta on the W. bank of the western mouth of the Nile, it records in Egyptian (both hieroglyphic and demotic) and in Greek a decree of the priests assembled at Memphis in favour of Ptolemy V Epiphanes (reigned 204–181 B.C.). At the fall of *Alexandria in 1801 it passed into the hands of the British Government and is now in the British Museum. The interpretation of the demotic text was mainly the work of Thomas Young (1773–1829), who published his conclusions in 1815.

E. A. W. Budge, The Rosetta Stone and the Decipherment of Egyptian Hieroglyphs (1929), with Gk., Demotic, and Egyptian texts, Eng. trr., and full bibl.

ROSICRUCIANS. The name assumed by members of certain secret societies similar to the freemasons, who venerated the emblems of the Rose and the Cross as twin symbols of the Lord's Resurrection and Redemption. Early in the 17th cent. (1604 or 1614) two anonymous writings were published in Germany, the Chymische Hochzeit Christiani Rosenkreutz and the Confessio Fraternitatis, which are now unanimously assigned to the *Lutheran pastor, J. V. Andreae (1586–1654). They narrate the fabulous story of a certain Christian Rosenkreutz, who, having learned the wisdom of the Arabs in the E., became the founder of a secret society devoted to the study of the hidden things of nature and an esoteric and anticatholic kind of Christianity, which acc. to the author was still in existence. The books, meant to be satirical, were taken seriously and aroused a very wide interest. A flood of literature about the mysterious society followed, and the curiosity kindled was so great that even men like R. *Descartes and G. W. *Leibniz tried in vain to get into touch with its genuine members, while a number of new societies with alchemistic tendencies actually came into being under this title. The best-known English representative of these tendencies was Robert Fludd (1574–1637), a London physician who spread Rosicrucian ideas in a number of medico-theosophical books. In the 18th cent. the name 'Gold- und Rosenkreuzer' ('Gold- and Rosicrucians') was adopted by a society started in Vienna which, spreading rapidly through Germany, Russia, and Poland, received only freemasons of the master grade and generally followed masonic ideas. One of its most famous members was the Prussian minister, J. C. von Wöllner (1732–1800), through whom Rosicrucian ideas exercised a strong influence on Friedrich Wilhelm II of Prussia; but the society became extinct before the end of the 18th century.

The considerable literature is mainly the work of authors of Rosicrucian leanings or profession. It includes: A. E. Waite, The Real History of the Rosicrucians (1887), with reff. to earlier Eng. lit.; id., The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross (1924); F. Wittemans, Histoire des Rose-Croix (ed. 3, 1925; Eng. tr., 1939). R. S. Clymer, The Rosicrucians. Their Teaching (Quakertown, Pa., 1923). F. de P. Castells, Our Ancient Brethren, the Originators of Freemasonry. An Introduction to the History of Rosicrucianism, dealing with the period A.D. 1300–1600 (1932). W. E. Peuckert, Die Rosenkreutzer. Zur Geschichte einer Reformation (1928). R. Kienast, Johann Valentin Andreae und die vier echten Rosenkreutzer-Schriften (Palaestra, clii; 1926). J. Twine, De Geheimen der Rozekruisèrs Broederschap. Esoteriese Analyse der Fama Fraternitatis, A.D. 1614 (Haarlem, 1939). R. Ambelain, Sacramentaire du Rose Croix. Sacralisations, exorcismes, formules de défense et d'action (1964). A. C. Jones in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 856–8, s.v., with bibl.; H. Hermelink in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 150–6, s.v. 'Rosenkreuzer'.

ROSMINI-SERBATI, ANTONIO (1797–1855), Italian philosopher and founder of the 'Institute of Charity'. Born at Rovereto of a noble family, he studied at Padua and was ordained priest in 1821. With the aid of Pius VIII, *Gregory XVI, and *Pius IX, he undertook the renewal of Italian philosophy, beginning with the systematic study of St. *Thomas, a translation of whose Summa he had attempted in 1819. Following a suggestion of the Ven. Maddalena di Canossa, the foundress of a society of Daughters of Charity, he established, in 1828, his congregation of the 'Fathers of Charity' (see Rosminians), without, however, relaxing his efforts to construct a satisfying philosophical synthesis. His first and most important work, Nuovo saggio sull'origine delle idee, appeared in 1830 and was supplemented by Il rinnovamento della filosofia in Italia in 1836. Through his attack on *Probabilism in his Trattato della coscienza morale (1839) he incurred the hostility of the *Jesuits, and in the following years was repeatedly accused of *Jansenist and *pantheistic teaching. In 1848 he proposed ecclesiastical reforms in the Costituzione secondo la giusticia sociale, which, along with his Cinque piaghe della Chiesa, was condemned by the Congregation of the *Index in 1849. Rosmini submitted at once and retired to Stresa, where, a year before his death, he had the satisfaction of seeing his works, which had been denounced to the Index in their entirety, returned with a dimittantur, i.e. without censure. After his death, however, and esp. after the posthumous publication of his voluminous synthesis La teosofia (5 vols., 1859–74), the accusations against his teaching continued and a second examination of his works resulted in a mild condemnation of 40 propositions by *Leo XIII in 1887–8.

Rosmini's system, which shows the influence, besides that of *Plato, St. *Augustine, and St. Thomas, of R. *Descartes, I. *Kant, G. W. F. *Hegel, and other modern philosophers, is founded on the leading idea of indeterminate being, innate in the human soul. If analysed this idea divides itself into a plurality of other ideas which are identical with those that are in the mind of God. Rosmini distinguished between degrees of being acc. to their completeness, God alone being absolutely complete. The being, however, which actualizes finite nature and which is the object of human intuition, is 'something of God', though not God Himself. Among the 40 condemned propositions were several on this metaphysical doctrine of the idea. Others related to the mystery of the *Trinity, which Rosmini thought capable of rational explanation, to *Transubstantiation, and to *Original Sin, which he seems to have believed to be only a physical infection of the human flesh.

His influence, though negligible outside Italy, was considerable in his own country. A number of periodicals were founded after his death with the object of defending his teaching, and A. Manzoni, M. Minghetti, and G. Cavour were among those who came under his influence.

Collected ed. of Rosmini's works, 14 vols., Naples, 1842–5; many posthumous items issued separately, Turin, 1857–74. Edizione Nationale of his Opere edite e inedite (Rome, 1934 ff.). Works translated into Eng. include A Catholic Catechism by W. S. Agar (1849); The Five Wounds of the Holy Church (abridged tr.) with introd. by H. P. *Liddon (1883), Maxims of Christian Perfection by W. A. Johnson (1889), and Short Sketch of Modern Philosophies by W. Lockhart (1882). For his correspondence, Epistolario completo (13 vols., Cassale Monferrato, 1887–94); Eng. tr. of 'Selected Letters' by [D. Gazzola] (London, 1901). Lives include those by G. B. Pagani (2 vols., Turin, 1880–4; Eng. tr., 1907; and the anonymous life which he published as La vita di Antonio Rosmini scritta da un sacerdote dell'Istituto della Carità, 2 vols., ib., 1897, revised by G. Rossi, 2 vols., Rovereto, 1959), G. S. Macwalter (vol. i only, London, 1883) and W. Lockhart (2 vols, [vol. i being a reissue of the previous item without the author's name], London, 1886). B. Brunello (Milan, 1941), C. Leetham (London, 1957). Bibliography by C. Bergamaschi (2 vols., Milan, 1967). D. Hickey, I.C., in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 194–8, s.v. 'Rosmini and Rosminianism'; C. Caviglione in Enciclopedia italiana, xxx (1936), pp. 123–6, s.v.; G. Bozzetti in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1359–71, s.v.

ROSMINIANS, the 'Fathers of Charity'. The congregation was founded by A. *Rosmini in 1828 and formally approved by *Gregory XVI in 1838. Its chief aim is the sanctification of its members, combined with such works of charity as they may be called upon to perform, e.g. teaching, preaching, popular missions, and literary activities. There are the two grades of presbyters and coadjutors, the presbyters taking a special fourth vow of obedience to the Pope; and persons living in the world may be affiliated to the Institute. The congregation, which was introduced into England by A. Gentili in 1835, now has houses in Italy, England, Eire, and America. The women's branch of the congregation, the 'Sisters of Providence', was founded in 1831–2 and has houses in Italy and England, where they devote themselves esp. to the instruction of converts.

C. J. Emery, I.C., The Rosminians (1960). Heimbucher, ii, p. 634 f. W. H. Pollard in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 198–201, s.v. See also lives of Rosmini, cited s.v.

ROSSETTI, CHRISTINA GEORGINA (1830–1894), poetess. She was a younger sister of M. F. *Rossetti and D. G. *Rossetti, and closely associated with the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. The first of her poems to be published (some had been privately printed earlier) appeared in the Germ (1850), the organ of the Brotherhood, under the pseudonym of 'Ellen Alleyne'. Marked by great beauty and care in the selection of words and pervaded by a deep melancholy (not, as is sometimes asserted, morbidity), they are the expression of a strong Christian faith. Besides those dealing with definitely religious subjects, many give expression to the agonies that come from disappointed love. She also wrote a number of religious books, among them Seek and Find (1879) and Time Flies, a Reading Diary (1885). Her hymns include 'What are these that glow from afar?' and the well-known carol 'In the bleak mid-winter'.

Poetical Works ed. with memoir and notes by William Michael Rossetti, brother (London, 1904; memoir, pp. xlv–lxxi); Family Letters, ed. id. (ib., 1908). Further letters in J. C. Troxell (ed.), Three Rossettis. Unpublished Letters to and from Dante Gabriel, Christina, William (Cambridge, Mass., 1937), esp. pp. 138–80, and in Lona M. Packer (ed.), The Rossetti–Macmillan Letters. Some 133 Unpublished Letters written to Alexander Macmillan, F. S. Ellis, and Others, by Dante Gabriel, Christina, and William Michael Rossetti, 1861–1889 (Berkeley, Calif.–Cambridge, 1963). Brief memoir by Ellen A. Proctor (London, 1895); much fuller life by M. Bell (ib., 1898). Modern studies by Dorothy M. Stuart ('English Men of Letters', 1930) and Lona M. Packer (Berkeley, Calif.–Cambridge, 1963). R. Garnett in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 282–4. Further bibl. by R. Gathorne-Hardy in C.B.E.L., iii, pp. 273–5. See also bibl. to following entry.

ROSSETTI, DANTE GABRIEL (1828–82), English Pre-Raphaelite poet and painter. He was for a short time a pupil of Ford Madox Brown, and with J. E. Millais, Holman *Hunt, and T. Woolner founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood in 1848. In 1860 he married Elizabeth Siddal, whose death in 1862 marked a turning-point in his life. The principal influence of Rossetti's early years was *Dante, whom he began to translate in 1845. In his own poetry of this period Christian themes abound, and his ideal of womanhood is expressed by the BVM and Beatrix. Among his poems of this period are 'Ave', a beautiful prayer to the Blessed Virgin, the well-known 'The Blessed Damozel' (1847) with its Dantesque conception of heaven, and the weird 'Sister Helen' (1850–1), characteristic of his love for mystery and magic. Of his paintings The Girlhood of Mary Virgin (1849), Ecce Ancilla Domini, the triptych The Seed of David in *Llandaff Cathedral, Beata Beatrix (1863), and many others, try to recall the spiritual beauty of medieval pictures, an aim which they hardly achieve, however, for lack of simplicity. In the second period, from c. 1863 to his death, religious motives disappear, and the inherent sensuality of his poetry and art, which now came more and more to the fore, brought upon him the charge of being a 'fleshly poet'. The eroticism of these years was coupled with a pessimistic outlook on life and an intensified interest in its morbid aspects which comes out, e.g., in his poem 'Rose Mary'.

Collected Works [prose and poetry] ed. William Michael Rossetti [brother] (2 vols., London, 1886; enlarged ed., 1911); Family Letters, ed. id. (2 vols., ib., 1895), with memoir as vol. i. Further material in id. (ed.), Præraphaelite Diaries and Letters (1900), esp. pp. 3–47 ('Some Early Correspondence of Dante Gabriel Rossetti'), and id., Rossetti Family Papers, 1862 to 1870 (1903). Modern ed. of Letters by O. Doughty–J. R. Wahl (5 vols., Oxford, 1965 ff.). Lona M. Packer (ed.), The Rossetti–Macmillan Letters. Some 133 Unpublished Letters written to Alexander Macmillan, F. S. Ellis, and Others, by Dante Gabriel, Christina, and William Michael Rossetti, 1861–1889 (Berkeley, Calif.–Cambridge, 1963). W. M. Rossetti, Dante Gabriel Rossetti as Designer and Painter (1889). W. Sharp, Dante Gabriel Rossetti. A Record and a Study (1882); T. H. Caine, Recollections of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1882; fuller ed., 1928). Later general studies include those of A. C. Benson ('English Men of Letters', 1904), H. Dupré (Paris, 1921), E. Waugh (London, 1928), R. L. Mégroz (ib., 1928), L. Wolff ('Les Écrivains étrangers', [1934]), O. Doughty, A Victorian Romantic (London, 1949; ed. 2, 1960), Helen Rossetti (ib., 1949), and Rosalie G. Grylls (ib., 1964). Works dealing more specifically with his art, incl. reproductions, by H. C. Marillier (London, 1899) and Virginia Surtees, The Paintings and Drawings of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1828–1882). A Catalogue raisonné (2 vols., incl. plates, Oxford, 1971). J. Savarit, Tendances mystiques et ésotériques chez Dante-Gabriel Rossetti (1961). F. Winnar, The Rossettis and their Circle (1934; popular). R. Garnett in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 284–9. Further bibl. by J. B. Gregory in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 271–3.

ROSSETTI, MARIA FRANCESCA (1827–76), Anglican religious. The eldest of the Rossetti family, she was, in the opinion of her agnostic brother William (W. M.), 'more warmly and spontaneously devotional than any person I have ever known'. Feeling herself free from domestic responsibilities on his marriage in 1874, she joined the sisterhood of All Saints', Margaret Street, London, but died shortly afterwards. In 1871 she published A Shadow of Dante.

The principal sources are W. M. Rossetti's lives of Christina Georgina and Dante Gabriel Rossetti, cited s.vv. R. D. Waller, The Rossetti Family, 1824–1854 (Manchester, 1932), pp. 171–80. See also other works cited in the two previous entries.

ROSVITHA. See Hrosvitha.

ROSY SEQUENCE. A part of the hymn '*Jesu dulcis memoria' (q.v.), used as a sequence for the Feast of the *Holy Name in the *Sarum Gradual. A form of the hymn in 50 stanzas was formerly used as a kind of *rosary in five decades.

ROTA SACRA ROMANA. The normal RC tribunal for judging cases brought before the Holy See. It dates from the middle of the 13th cent., and its name appears to derive from the circular table used by the judges at *Avignon. Its power was at a maximum in the 15th and 16th cents., but by the 18th its duties had come to be limited to civil cases, and hence with the cessation of the temporal power in 1870 they ended altogether. In its present form it was created by *Pius X in 1908 by the bull 'Sapienti Consilio'. It now tries all cases except the so-called 'major' cases (causae maiores), i.e. grave matters which by their nature or by law are reserved to the Pope himself. It is also a court of appeal for cases tried in episcopal tribunals. The judges, who are known as auditors (auditores) and form a college, must be priests who are at least doctors in civil and canon law. The president is called the 'Dean' and is primus inter pares. It is prob. best known as the court to which appeals in nullity and other matrimonial cases are referred. In its present form it is governed by cans. 1598–1601 of the *Codex Iuris Canonici, slightly supplemented by the decree 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae', 15 Aug. 1967.

Several collections of the decisions of the Rota in various periods have been publd.; some of the more important are listed in L.Th.K., cit. infra. D. Bernini, Il tribunale della S. Rota Romana (fol., 1717). E. Schneider, Die römische Rota nach geltendem Recht auf geschichtlicher Grundlage, i. Die Verfassung der Rota (all publd. Görres-Gesellschaft, Veröffentlichungen der Sektion für Rechts- und Sozialwissenschaft, xxii; 1914), with bibl. to date. E. Cerchiari, Capellani Papae et Apostolicae Sedis Auditores Causarum Sacri Palatii Apostolici seu Sacra Romana Rota ab Origine ad diem usque 20 Septembris 1870. Relatio historica-juridica (4 vols., Rome, 1919–21). A. Trilhe, 'Les Chapelains du pape, auditeurs des causes du Palais Apostolique ou la Rote Romaine' in Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique, xxiv (Toulouse, 1923), pp. 348–59. E. Schneider, 'Über den Ursprung und die Bedeutung des Namens Rota als Bezeichnung für den obersten päpstlichen Gerichtshof' in R.Q., xli (1933), pp. 29–43, with further refs. U. Benigni in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 205 f., s.v.; F. E. Schneider–H. Ewers in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 62–4, s.v.; C. Lefebvre in D.D.C., vii (1965), cols. 742–71, s.v. 'Rote Romaine (Tribunal de la Sainte)', with bibl. See also works cited s.v. Curia.

ROTHE, RICHARD (1799–1867), *Lutheran theologian. He taught successively at *Wittenberg (from 1828), Bonn (from 1849), and Heidelberg (from 1854). A disciple of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and J. A. W. *Neander, he combined an unusually devout and even pietistic spirit with a keenly critical and historical sense. He emphasized the inseparable relation between religion and morals in his great work Theologische Ethik (3 vols., 1845–8; 2nd ed., 5 vols., 1867–71). He also wrote a book on the beginnings of the Christian Church (1837). He is best known in Britain by his Stille Stunden (1872), a collection of devotional essays and reflections translated under the title Still Hours (1886).

Several treatises, based on Rothe's unpublished papers, were issued posthumously. There is a brief sketch by J. Macpherson prefixed to Rothe's Still Hours (Eng. tr. by Jane T. Stoddart, 1886), pp. 9–41. Studies on Rothe include W. Hoenig, Richard Rothe (Berlin, 1898), A. Hausrath, Richard Rothe und seine Freunde (2 vols., 1902–6), and H. J. Birkner, Spekulation und Heilsgeschichte. Die Geschichtsauffassung Richard Rothes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Zehnte Reihe, xvii; 1959). A. E. F. Sieffert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 169–78; E. Schott in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 1197–9, s.v.

ROTHMANN, BERNT (c. 1495 – 1535), German *Anabaptist leader. In 1529 he was appointed a chaplain of St. Maurice's church outside Münster, but soon joined the Protestant Movement. From 1531 he openly preached *Lutheran doctrines and in 1532 secured by force the possession of the large church of St. Lambert in the city. From 1533 onwards he came to incline increasingly to Anabaptist views, propagated by the adherents of Melchior *Hoffmann, and in 1534 became a member of their sect. He now took part in organizing communism and the burning of books in his 'New Jerusalem' (of which the Bible was to be the only law book), as well as in the introduction of polygamy; he himself had nine wives. When John of Leyden (d. 1535) had been elected 'king' of Münster, Rothmann became his 'court preacher' and published an exposition of Anabaptist teaching in his Restitution rechter und gesunder christlicher Lehre and a pamphlet Von der Rache (both 1534), in which he incited the people to kill the 'godless'. He died during the occupation of Münster by the troops of the bishop and his allies in 1535.

There is no collected ed. of Rothmann's writings. H. Delmer–R. Krumbholtz (edd.), Zwei Schriften des Münsterschen Widertäufers Bernhard Rothmann. Mit einer Einleitung über die zeitgeschichtlichen Verhältnisse (Dortmund, 1904). C. Sepp, Geschiedkundige Nasporingen, i (Leyden, 1872), pp. 55–157 ('De veel genoemde en weinig bekende Geschriften van den Wederdooper Bernt Rothmann'). See also bibl. to Anabaptists.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN-JACQUES (1712–78), French author. He was the son of a French refugee family at Geneva, and, though brought up a Calvinist, became a Catholic in 1728 through the influence of Mme de Warens, his benefactress and later his mistress, herself a convert from Protestant Pietism. She had a large share in his religious formation, combining *Deistic beliefs, which excluded doctrines such as Hell and Original Sin, with a kind of *Quietist sentimentalism. During the years spent with her (1731–40), Rousseau completed his sketchy education by omnivorous reading, including the works of R. *Descartes, G. W. *Leibniz, J. *Locke, B. *Pascal, and others. In 1741 he went to Paris, where he met Thérèse Levasseur, a servant girl, by whom he had five children whom he placed in a foundlings' hospital. Through D. *Diderot he was introduced to the circle of the *Encyclopaedists, for whom he wrote several contributions, all but one of them on musical subjects. In 1750 he published his Discours sur les sciences et les arts, a prize essay for the university of Dijon, in which he defended the thesis that technical progress and material goods corrupt human morals. In 1754 he returned to Geneva and once more became a Calvinist, and in the same year wrote his Discours sur l'origine et les fondements de l'inégalité parmi les hommes. Inspired by H. *Grotius, S. *Pufendorf, and others, he treated the subject regardless of historical reality, and, on the gratuitous assumption that the primitive man was a free and happy being living in acc. with his instincts, without virtue or vice, alleged that human inequalities arose from the undue development of his social and proprietary instincts. In 1756 Rousseau settled near Montmorency, where he wrote the works which made him world-famous. In Julie, ou La Nouvelle Héloïse (1761), a passionate love story, he condemned a society which for the sake of convention divorced love from marriage, and put forward a defence of a natural religion based on an undogmatic personal interpretation of the Gospels which, he maintained, is necessary for morality. In Émile, ou de l'Éducation (1762) he developed a Utopian programme of an education far from the corrupting influence of society and in acc. with nature. In the famous chapter entitled 'La Profession de foi du vicaire savoyard' he summed up his religious ideas. He advocated a Deism which, although similar to that of the Philosophes in affirming belief in the existence of God, the soul, and a future life, found its ultimate justification in the individual's sense of a personal relationship with God through the conscience, of which He is the source and inspiration. Du contrat social (1762) set out his theory of the just state, resting on the general will of the people, the expression of which are the laws. This too, contained a chapter on religion, 'De la religion civile', in which 'civic religion' was distinguished from natural religion. The articles of this civic religion, which are fixed and enforced by the state, bear on the same subjects as natural religion, forbid all dogmatic intolerance, and admit only those religions which do not claim to possess the absolute truth. Émile, put on the *Index in 1762, and Du contrat social were condemned in France and at Geneva, and Rousseau fled first to Neuchâtel, then to Strassburg, and, in 1766–7, he was the guest of D. *Hume in England. But, suffering from persecution mania, he went back to France, where he married Thérèse Levasseur 'before nature' in 1768, and in 1772 completed his Confessions, with their curious mixture of vanity and self-accusation.

After his death Rousseau became one of the most powerful influences in Europe. In France his ideas were taken up by the Revolution, in Germany by the 'Storm and Stress' movement. His religious impact was the deeper as, unlike *Voltaire, he offered man a substitute for revealed religion which was not only doctrinally simple and unelaborate in its moral prescriptions, but also addressed to his emotional as well as his intellectual needs. It has sometimes been asserted that he served Christianity by propagating its fundamental truths among his unbelieving contemporaries. A juster estimate might point out that, by eliminating the idea of original sin and replacing the need for grace by belief in the complete adequacy of reason, conscience and free-will, he removed the foundations of sound religion and became a forerunner of humanistic liberalism.

Many edd. of his collected works, incl. that of V. D. Musset-Pathay (24 vols., Paris, 1823–6). Convenient ed. by B. Gagnebin–M. Raymond and others (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 4 vols., 1959–69), but this does not include correspondence. Religious Writings, ed. R. Grimsley (Oxford, 1970). Correspondance complète, ed. R. A. Leigh (Geneva, 1965 ff.). There have been innumerable edd. of individual works; useful ed. of his Political Writings, with full introd. and notes in Eng., by C. E. Vaughan (2 vols., Cambridge, 1915). His more important works were translated into English soon after publication; there have been many reprr. and new trr., incl. that of The Social Contract by H. J. Tozer (London, 1895), by M. Cranston (Penguin Classics, 1968), and also, with The Discourses, by G. D. H. Cole (Everyman's Library, dclx; [1913]); of Émile by Barbara Foxley (ib. [1911]); of his Confessions (ib., 2 vols., 1931) and by J. M. Cohen (Penguin Classics, 1953). The numerous studies include those of J. Morley (2 vols., London, 1873) and J. H. Broome (ib., 1963). A. Schinz, La Pensée de Jean-Jacques Rousseau (2 vols., Northampton, Mass., 1929); E. H. Wright, The Meaning of Rousseau (1929). C. W. Hendel, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Moralist (2 vols., 1934). R. Derathé, Jean-Jacques Rousseau et la science politique de son temps (1950). S. Baud-Bovy and others, Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Université Ouvrière et Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Genève, Neuchâtel, 1962). Études sur le Contrat social de Jean-Jacques Rousseau. Actes des journées d'étude organisées à Dijon pour la commémoration du 200e anniversaire du Contrat social (Publications de l'Université de Dijon, xxx; 1964). P. M. Masson, La Religion de J.-J. Rousseau (3 vols., 1916); R. Derathé, Le Rationalisme de J.-J. Rousseau (1948); J. F. Thomas, Le Pélagianisme de J.-J. Rousseau (1956); R. Grimsley, Rousseau and the Religious Quest (Oxford, 1968). P. Burgelin, La Philosophie de l'existence de J.-J. Rousseau (Bibliothèque de Philosophie contemporaine. Histoire de la Philosophie et Philosophie générale; 1952); J. Starobinski, Jean-Jacques Rousseau. La transparence et l'obstance (1957); R. Grimsley, Jean-Jacques Rousseau. A Study in Self-awareness (Cardiff, 1961). H. Roddier, J.-J. Rousseau en Angleterre au XVIIIe siècle (Études de Littérature étrangère et comparée [1950]). J. *Maritain, Trois Réformateurs. Luther, Descartes, Rousseau (1925), pp. 131–237, with notes, pp. 267–84; Eng. tr. [1928], pp. 93–164, with notes, pp. 219–341. J. Sénelier, Bibliographie générale des œuvres de Jean-Jacques Rousseau [1949]. Annales de la Société Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Geneva, 1905 ff.).

ROUTH, MARTIN JOSEPH (1755–1854), patristic scholar and president of Magdalen College, Oxford. A strong supporter of the traditional High Church position in Anglican theology, he was much respected and revered by the *Tractarians, J. H. *Newman in dedicating to him his Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church (1837) declaring that he had 'been reserved to report to a forgetful generation the theology of their fathers'. It was he who advised S. *Seabury, when sent to Europe to inaugurate an episcopal succession in the American (Anglican) Church, to seek it from the Scottish Episcopal Church.

Elected a demy at Magdalen College in 1771, he was ordained deacon in 1777, and, after holding College appointments, was elected president in 1791 (in succession to G. *Horne), to hold the office for sixty-three years. In 1788 he issued a prospectus of his projected Reliquiae Sacrae, an edition of scattered pre-Nicene Patristic texts. The work first appeared in 4 vols., Oxford, 1814–1818; a complete revision ('ed. altera'), with an additional volume, was issued in 5 vols., 1846–8. Routh also published Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Opuscula Praecipua Quaedam (2 vols., 1832).

Life by R. D. Middleton (London, 1938). J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, i (1888), pp. 1–115. G. C. Boase in D.N.B., xlix (1897), pp. 324–7.

ROWITES. The disciples of J. McLeod *Campbell, who was in charge of the parish of Row, near Cardross, Dumbarton, from 1825 to 1830. They are also known as 'Campbellites'.

ROWNTREE, JOSEPH (1836–1925), *Quaker philanthropist and social reformer. Educated at Bootham School, *York, he entered the grocery business established by his father in the city in 1822, and eventually, on the death of his elder brother, Henry Isaac Rowntree, in 1883, became head of the great cocoa business of Rowntree & Co. He was a pioneer in the movement for securing for workpeople reasonable hours and conditions of labour, higher wages, and provision against old age and unemployment. He established three trusts to carry some of his ideals into effect and in 1904 founded the model village of New Earswick. He was an ardent temperance reformer, did much to promote adult education, esp. in the Society of Friends, and took a prominent part in the civic life of York.

Anne Vernon, A Quaker Business Man. The Life of Joseph Rowntree 1836–1925 (1958). A. E. Watkin in D.N.B., 1922–1930 (1937), p. 731 f., s.v.

ROYAL CHAPELS. See Chapel Royal.

ROYAL DECLARATION. See Declaration of the Sovereign.

ROYAL SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC (R.S.C.M.). An organization founded in 1927 as the School of English Church Music, and granted its present title in 1945. Till his death in 1947 its Director was Sydney H. Nicholson (b. 1875; organist of *Westminster Abbey, 1918–27). Its work has consisted in advice to choirs affiliated to the School, provision of suitable music, and the organization of choral festivals. In 1929 the College of St. Nicholas was founded at Chislehurst, London, to provide courses for organists, choristers, clergy, and ordinands, with both resident and non-resident students. In 1945 the work, interrupted by the War since 1939, was resumed at *Canterbury, and in 1954 was removed to Addington Palace (an archiepiscopal residence 1807–96) near Croydon, London.

RUBRIC, Black. See Black Rubric.

RUBRIC, Ornaments. See Ornaments Rubric.

RUBRICS. Ritual or ceremonial directions, printed at the beginning of service-books, or in the course of the text. The word originated from the fact that in medieval books they were written in red (Lat. ruber), to distinguish them from the text of the services.

RUCHERAT (or RUCHRAT), JOHN. See John of Wesel.

RUFINUS, TYRANNIUS or TURRANIUS (c. 345–410), monk, historian and translator. Born near *Aquileia in N. Italy, he went to a school in Rome, where he became friends with St. *Jerome. About 372 he went to Egypt; here he met *Melania the Elder and visited the monks of the desert. He also studied for several years in *Alexandria under *Didymus the Blind, and was deeply influenced by his *Origenism. In 381 he was in Jerusalem. With Melania he founded a *double monastery on the Mount of *Olives. After the outbreak of the controversy about the teaching of *Origen, he returned to Italy in 397.

Though he was also an original writer, Rufinus is mainly important as a translator of Greek theological works into Latin at a time when knowledge of Greek was declining in the W. His free translation of Origen's 'De Principiis', the only complete text now surviving, was intended to vindicate Origen's orthodoxy, and involved Rufinus in bitter controversy with his former friend, St. Jerome, who criticized the tendentious character of his rendering. He also translated some of Origen's scriptural commentaries, the 'Sentences' of Sextus (which he attributed to Pope *Sixtus II), the '*Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', some works of *Basil and *Gregory of Nazianzus, the 'Historia Monachorum' (long thought to be his own original work) and, in a free rendering with additions, the 'Ecclesiastical History' of *Eusebius. His commentary on the *Apostles' Creed, which is partly based on the 'Catechetical Discourses' of St.*Cyril of Jerusalem, gives the earliest continuous Latin text of the 4th cent. form of the creed, as used at Aquileia and Rome. At the invitation of *Paulinus of Nola, he wrote a commentary on the Benedictions of the Twelve Patriarchs in Gen. 49 which, though not original, is of some importance in the history of exegesis.

D. *Vallarsi projected a collected ed. in 2 vols., fol., but only vol. i, containing Rufinus's independent works, appeared (Verona, 1745); this is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxi. Works ed. M. Simonetti (C.C., Series Latina, xx; 1961). Rufinus's translations are to be sought in the edd. of their corresponding Gk. authors. His 'Commentary on the Apostles' Creed' has often been printed; convenient ed. by C. A. Heurtley, De Fide et Symbolo (Oxford, 1864); Eng. tr., with crit. introd. and notes, by J. N. D. Kelly (A.C.W., xx; 1955). The most comprehensive study is F. X. Murphy, C.SS.R., Rufinus of Aquileia, 345–411 (Catholic University of America. Studies in Médiaeval History, N.S., vi; 1945). Id., 'Rufinus of Aquileia and Paulinus of Nola' in Revue des Études Augustiniennes, ii (1956), pp. 79–91. R. *Reitzenstein, Historia Monachorum [by Rufinus] und Historia Lausiaca [by *Palladius] (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, N.F., vii; 1916). J. E. L. Oulton, 'Rufinus's Translation of the Church History of Eusebius' in J.T.S., xxx (1928–9), pp. 150–74. H. Chadwick, 'Rufinus and the Tura Papyrus of Origen's Commentary on Romans', ib., N.S., x (1959), pp. 10–42. M. Simonetti, 'Note rufiniane' in Rivista di Cultura Classica e Medioevale, ii (1960), pp. 140–72; id., 'Osservazioni sul De Benedictionibus Patriarcharum di Rufino di Aquileia', ib., iv (1962), pp. 3–44. C. P. Hammond, 'The Last Ten Years of Rufinus' Life and the Date of his Move South from Aquileia' in J.T.S., N.S., xxviii (1977), pp. 372–429. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 549–58; Altaner–Stuiber (ed. 1966), pp. 392–4. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 153–60, s.v. 'Rufin'; F. X. Murphy in L.Th.K. (ed.), ix (1964), col. 91 f.; M. Simonetti in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 702–4, s.v.

RUINART, THIERRY (1657–1709), *Maurist patristic scholar. From 1674 he was a monk of St.-Remy at *Reims and from 1682 an assistant to J. *Mabillon at *St.-Germain-des-Prés. The most celebrated of his writings is his Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (1689), a collection to which he admitted only those acta of the martyrs which seemed to him authentic, though some of its contents are no longer regarded as genuine today. Among his other works was an edition of St. *Gregory of Tours (1699).

V. Thuiller, O.S.B. (ed.), Ouvrages posthumes de D. Jean Mabillon et de D. Thierri Ruinart (3 vols., Paris, 1724), vol. ii, pp. 399–544, and vol. iii. Modern ed. of his Acta Martyrum (Ratisbon, 1859). H. Jadart, Dom Thierry Ruinart (1657–1709). Notice suivie de documents inédits sur sa famille, sa vie, ses œuvres, ses relations avec D. Mabillon (1886). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 163–82, s.v., with bibl.

RULE, Golden. See Golden Rule.

RULE OF ST. BENEDICT. See Benedict, Rule of St.

RULER. A name formerly applied to those who presided in cathedrals over the singing in the choir, esp. over the psalms. The office, which goes back to medieval times, when the rulers frequently wore copes, was revived in a few places in the C of E in the 19th century.

RUMANIA, Christianity in. Roman Dacia, which roughly covered the present Rumania, received Christianity through Roman soldiers and colonists by the 4th cent. or earlier. Its earliest liturgy was Latin, and a see was in existence at Tomi (Constanza) in the 4th cent. Under Bulgarian rule its ecclesiastical affairs were placed under *Constantinople, and its worship gradually took on an E. character. In the 14th and 15th cents., when it stood in the outer line of defence of Europe against the Turks, it retained its national religion and culture. Under Turkish rule Christianity was not proscribed, but under the Phanariot hospodars (1721–1812), the episcopate was generally filled by Greeks, who upheld Greek customs in ecclesiastical matters. In the 19th cent. Rumania suffered as a victim of the power-politics of Russia, Turkey, and Austria; but after having been ruled in various ways by all three, she began her existence as a virtually self-governing state in 1862. In 1859 she claimed the independence of her national Church from the metropolitan jurisdiction of Constantinople, and in 1885 this claim was allowed by the *Oecumenical Patriarch and a Holy Synod constituted. In the 1923 constitution the Rumanian Orthodox Church was recognized as the national Church. After the Rumanian surrender to Russia in 1944, a new constitution was enacted in 1948. In theory this guaranteed religious freedom and recognized the existence of the Rumanian Orthodox Church, but since that time the Church has been closely controlled by the communist government. In 1935 the National Synod of the Rumanian Orthodox Church recognized the Anglican Communion as part of the Catholic Church and its orders as valid. There are very small RC and Protestant minorities, consisting mainly of immigrants.

The main literature is in Rumanian. In Eng. there is a brief sketch by M. Beza, The Rumanian Church (1943). A. *Fortescue, The Orthodox Eastern Church (1907), pp. 328–34; D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc. [1935]; ed. 2 [1946]), pp. 98–103; id., The Dissident Eastern Churches (ib. [1937]), pp. 110–18. G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity, Third Series, 1930–48 (1948), pp. 43–50 (No. 158 f.). On the general history of the country, N. Iorga, Histoire des Roumains et de leur civilisation (Paris, 1920; ed. 2, Bucarest, 1922; Eng. tr., 1925); R. W. Seton-Watson, A History of the Roumanians from Roman Times to the Completion of Unity (1934). G. Rosu and others, 'Church and State in Romania' in V. Gsovski (ed.), Church and State Behind the Iron Curtain (New York, 1955; London, 1956), pp. 253–99. G. Caraci, A. Raes, S.J., and others in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1282–1301, s.v. 'Romania'; E. Herman, S.J.–O. Bărlea in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 95–9, s.v. 'Rumänien', with further bibl.; M. Lacko in N.C.E., xii (1969), pp. 714–17, s.v.; L. Tautu, ib., pp. 718–21, s.v. 'Rumanian Rite'.

RUPERT OF DEUTZ (c. 1075–1129 or 1130), monastic theologian. At an early age he entered the Abbey of St. Laurent in Liège. In 1092 he went into exile for three years with his abbot, who was expelled during the troubles of the *Investiture Controversy. Rupert himself was not made priest until 1106, because he refused to accept ordination from a bishop who was excommunicated. His first work, 'Liber de divinis officiis' (c. 1111), was concerned to expound the ecclesiastical year; it made much use of *allegory. In it he used language about the Real Presence in the Eucharist which provoked a fatherly rebuke from *William of St. Thierry, who accused him of holding the doctrine later known as *Impanation. There followed long Homilies on the Gospel of St. John. Then came the 'De Trinitate' in 42 books. This work is in effect concerned with the history of salvation. It is based on an analysis of the historical books of the Bible. In 1116 a fellow monk returned from a period of study under *Anselm of Laon and proclaimed that he had taught that God willed that evil should happen. Rupert was scandalized and wrote a rejoinder, 'De voluntate Dei', which created a storm. Rupert had to retire to the monastery of Siegburg in the Rhineland. From here he was summoned to Liège in 1117 for examination of his thesis. He emerged unscathed and wrote his treatise 'De omnipotentia Dei'. At Siegburg he came to the notice of the Abp. of Cologne, who secured his election as abbot of Deutz in 1120. He continued his writing and produced a Commentary on the Twelve Minor Prophets, the 'De victoria Verbi Dei', and a Commentary on the Song of Songs in which he interprets the bride as the BVM, providing an early example of this interpretation. He also engaged in controversy, defending the historical Benedictine way of life against the new orders (*Cistercians and *Canons Regular). Rupert's work demonstrates the interaction between the older monastic theology and the nascent scholastic way of thinking. When his writings were printed in the 16th cent., the Reformers sought to find in them support for their own doctrines, esp. on the Eucharist.

Opera Omnia, ed. M. Pleunich (4 vols. bound in 2, Venice, 1748–51), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxvii–clxx. Crit. edd. by R. Haacke, O.S.B., of his Liber de Divinis Officiis (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, vii; 1967); of his Commentary on St. John's Gospel (ib., ix; 1969); De Sancta Trinitate et Operibus Eius (ib., xxi; 1971), and of De Victoria Verbi Dei (M.G.H., Quellen zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, v; 1970). Part III of De Trinitate also ed., with Fr. tr., by Élisabeth de Solms, O.S.B., and useful introd. and notes by J. Gribomont, O.S.B. (Les Œuvres du Saint-Esprit, i–ii; S.C., cxxxi and clxv; 1967–70). The Chronicon Sancti Laurentii Leodiensis is no longer attributed to Rupert; cf. H. Silvestre, Le Chronicon Sancti Laurentii Leodiensis dit de Rupert de Deutz. Étude critique (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux d'histoire et de philosophie, 3e série, xliii; 1952). M. Magrassi, O.S.B., Teologia e storia nel pensiero di Ruperto di Deutz (Studia Urbaniana, ii; 1959). P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 169–205, s.v.

RURAL DEAN. In the C of E, the head of a group of parishes in a given area ('Rural Deanery'). He is appointed by the Bishop of the diocese, usually, but not necessarily, from among the beneficed clergy of the Deanery, and may be removed by the Bishop at any time. The boundaries of a Rural Deanery can, if necessary, be modified under the Archdeaconries and Rural Deaneries Act of 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., cap. 63).

The office is ancient and formerly the duties were important, but they were gradually absorbed by the *Archdeacons. The office was revived in 1836; and since the later 19th cent. Rural Deans have again come to play a considerable part in the life of the diocese, e.g. as a channel of communication between the smaller parishes and the Bishop. The Rural Dean is president of the Ruridecanal Chapter, i.e. the incumbents and clergy licensed under seal in the Deanery, and co-chairman of the Deanery Synods established by the *Synodical Government Act.

In the RC Church Rural Deans are technically known as 'Vicars Forane'. See Dean.

W. Dansey, Horae Decanicae Rurales (2 vols., London, 1835). J. B. Hughes, Deans Rural. The History of their Office and Duties (revised ed., 1889). F. Makower, Die Verfassung der Kirche von England (1894), pp. 334–9; Eng. tr. (1895), pp. 321–6. A. H. Thompson, 'Diocesan Organization in the Middle Ages. Archdeacons and Rural Deans' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxix (1943), pp. 153–94, esp. pp. 184–94. E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H., pp. 527–9, s.v.

RUSKIN, JOHN (1819–1900), art critic and social reformer. The son of a puritanical mother and an art-loving father, Ruskin was brought up at home. From 1836 to 1840 he studied at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he retained a simple *Evangelical piety and was completely untouched by the *Tractarian Movement. The first book that established his fame was Modern Painters (1843, followed till 1860 by 4 more vols.). In this and in later writings (which treat not only of such modern painters as J. M. W. Turner, whose prophet he became, but also of the old Italian masters, esp. Fra *Angelico and Tintoretto), he expounded his spiritual interpretation of art. His main principles are summed up in The Seven Lamps of Architecture (1849) as sacrifice, truth, power, beauty, life, memory, and obedience. Closely connected with his moral ideals were his aesthetic views, truth and sincerity being the indispensable foundations of both; for he held that the art and architecture of a people are the expression of its religion and morality. From 1851 to 1853 appeared his Stones of Venice, with the famous chapter on 'The Nature of Gothic' which became an important influence in the growth of the Gothic Revival in architecture. About the same time he became connected with the Pre-Raphaelites, whom he defended in his work on Pre-Raphaelitism (1851). His interest in Protestant reunion resulted in his pamphlet Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds (1851), in which he proposed as a basis a simple NT Christianity, rejecting the High Church claims to the priesthood but retaining the episcopate. After the completion of the series Modern Painters in 1860, he devoted himself almost entirely to social and economic problems. In Unto This Last (1862) he defended the dignity and moral destiny of man. Against J. S. Mill and other contemporary thinkers he stressed nobility of character and aesthetic development as the only true wealth of humanity and upheld national education, organization of labour, old-age pensions, and other social institutions as against the laissez-faire principles of the age. In Time and Tide (1867), Munera Pulveris (1872), and other works, he further elaborated his views. By this date his early Evangelicalism had given place to a vague Theism, and among his ideas for social reforms was the plan of a completely dependent State Church with state-salaried officials and with a minimum of dogma. From 1871 onwards he attempted to put his principles into practice, and he established the 'Guild of St. George', comprising agricultural and also industrial settlements; but they did not succeed. From Brantwood on Coniston Lake he wrote monthly letters 'to the workmen and labourers of Great Britain' which are collected in the volumes of Fors Clavigera as a means of propagating his ideas. In 1870 he was elected the first professor of fine arts in Oxford. Here he also worked out his social programme, which was among the main influences leading to the establishment of university settlements. From c. 1875 he returned to a more Christian standpoint, his partiality for the Middle Ages and his friendship with H. E. *Manning at one time giving rise to the rumour that he was about to become a RC. But the religion of his last period seems to have been rather an undogmatic kind of Bible Christianity without attachment to any Church. From 1884 he lived in retirement.

Best ed. of his Works by E. T. Cook–A. Wedderburn (39 vols., 1903–12). J. H. Whitehouse (ed.), The Solitary Warrior. New Letters by Ruskin (1929); Charlotte Quaritch Wrentmore (ed.), Letters of John Ruskin to Bernard Quaritch, 1867–1880 (1938). J. L. Bradley (ed.), Ruskin's Letters from Venice 1851–1852 (Yale Studies in English, cxxix; 1955); id. (ed.), The Letters of John Ruskin to Lord and Lady Mount-Temple (Columbus, Ohio, 1964); V. A. Burd (ed.), The Winnington Letters. John Ruskin's Correspondence with Margaret Alexis Bell and the Children at Winnington Hall (1969); V. Surtees (ed.), Sublime and Instructive. Letters from John Ruskin to Louisa, Marchioness of Waterford, Anna Blunden and Ellen Heaton (1972). Selections from Diaries ed. Joan Evans–J. H. Whitehouse (3 vols., Oxford, 1956–9).

W. G. Collingwood, The Life and Work of John Ruskin (2 vols., 1893); id., The Life of John Ruskin (1900); E. T. Cook, The Life of John Ruskin (2 vols., 1911). Other studies by C. Waldstein (London, 1894), M. H. Spielmann (ib., 1900), [Alice] *Meynell (ib., 1900), F. Harrison ('English Men of Letters', 1902), A. Williams-Ellis (London, 1928), J. Bardoux (ed. 4, Paris, 1931), R. H. Wilenski (London, 1933), D. Leon (ib., 1949), P. Quennell (ib., 1949), Joan Evans (ib., 1954), and J. D. Rosenberg (New York–London, 1961). J. A. Hobson, John Ruskin Social Reformer (1898). H. G. Pollard in C.B.E.L., iii (1940), pp. 691–707.

RUSSELL, CHARLES TAZE (1852–1916), 'Pastor Russell', founder of the International Bible Students Association, now generally called '*Jehovah's Witnesses' (q.v.). He was a draper of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, of *Congregationalist upbringing. He refused to accept the doctrine of eternal punishment and, after applying himself to the study of the Bible, in 1872 he came to believe that the second, though secret, *Advent of Christ would take place in 1874 and the end of the world in 1914. His conclusions became widely known through a small book, The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return (no date). In 1878 he assumed the title of 'Pastor', without receiving any form of ordination, and became pastor of an independent church in Pittsburgh. In the following year he began publication of The Watchtower, a magazine of his movement which circulated widely and was translated into various languages. His principal book, Food for Thinking Christians, was written in 1881, reissued in 1886 as Millennial Dawn, and later incorporated in his series of so-called 'Scripture Studies'. In 1884 he founded the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, which soon became a flourishing business, bringing out innumerable pamphlets and books. At the same time he engaged in various other commercial ventures. His wife obtained a divorce on grounds of immoral conduct in 1909, and in 1911 a further scandal followed in connexion with the sale of 'miracle wheat', alleged to have marvellous agricultural qualities. The sect, however, continued to flourish, and the outbreak of war in 1914, though very different from the beginning of the millennium which he had prophesied for that year, brought him an increase of popularity. His teaching, which resembles that of other *Adventists in its fanciful interpretations of the Books of Daniel and Revelation, lends itself to political propaganda of a subversive type. It proclaims the approach of a general revolution of the workers which is to be followed by the resurrection of the dead, the Last Judgement, and the Messianic Kingdom on earth. His ideas were developed in a still more anarchist direction by J. F. *Rutherford (q.v.).

E. S. Bates in Dict. Amer. Biog., xvi (1935), p. 240, s.v. See also bibl. to Jehovah's Witnesses.

RUSSIA, Christianity in. Christian missionaries first preached extensively in Russia in the 9th and 10th cents. About 988 the Emp. *Vladimir (canonized, 12th cent.) was baptized and established Christianity as the official religion in his dominions. Anxious to bring Russia into closer relationship with Europe, he brought priests from the Byzantine Empire and established a Greek hierarchy under a metropolitan. From the first the Slav tongue was used in worship and gradually a Russian clergy replaced the Greeks. At the *Great Schism of 1054 the Russian Church took the E. side. Monastic life began with the coming from Mount *Athos c. 1051 of the monk Antony, who established himself in a grotto near Kiev and laid the foundations of the great Kiev Monastery of the Caves. Monasticism spread rapidly, so that by the 12th cent. in Kiev alone there were 17 monasteries.

During the invasions of the Tartars from Mongolia, which began in 1237, several Russian princes suffered martyrdom for their faith. The monastic movement continued to grow, and in 1329 two Russian monks, Sergius and Germanus, founded the famous monastery of Valamo on an islet in Lake Ladoga. Later St. *Sergius of Radonezh (c. 1314–92), one of the most honoured saints in Russia, began a reform of monastic life. He founded the monastery of the Most Holy Trinity at Sergievo, and gave the impulse to the wave of monasticism which in the following cent. resulted in the building of monasteries all over Russia. Monasteries supplied bishops, while the secular clergy were commonly married and unlettered. When the Church eventually emerged from the ruins left by the invasions she had become the embodiment of the Russian soul.

During the early years of the 14th cent. the metropolitical see was moved from Kiev to Moscow. In 1461 the Russian Church was divided between two Metropolitans, centred at Moscow and Kiev, the former entirely Russian and rigidly Orthodox, the latter more exposed to pressure and influences from the W. During the 15th and 16th cents. the missionary activity of the Russians continued to the south and east of their borders.

Russia wholly refused the findings of the Council of *Florence (1439). Since the official Church at Constantinople for a time accepted the Florentine Union, in 1448 a Council of Russian bishops elected a Metropolitan of Moscow without reference to the Greek ecclesiastical authorities, and in this way the Russian Church became *autocephalous. Two outstanding religious leaders in the see of Moscow during this period were Macarius (1542–63) and St. Philip II, the latter slain by the order of Ivan the Terrible (1533–84) in 1569.

In 1503 a famous dispute broke out concerning the monastic ownership of property. One group of monks, the 'Possessors', led by St. *Joseph of Volokalamsk (1439–1515), stressed the social responsibilities of the monasteries—their duty to provide schools, orphanages, hospitals, and relief for the poor—and therefore insisted on the need for adequate endowments. The other party, the 'Non-Possessors', led by St. *Nil Sorski (c. 1433–1508), underlined the more spiritual and mystical aspects of monasticism, and demanded a stricter interpretation of the vow of poverty. The Non-Possessors, who came into conflict with the Tsar, were largely suppressed and their centres closed, to the grave impoverishment of Russia's future religious development. In 1551 the celebrated Council of the Hundred Chapters was called to reform the clergy. In the reign of Theodore (1584–98), the second son of Ivan the Terrible, the Russian Church realized her greatest ambition in the creation of the Patriarchate of Moscow by Jeremias II, Patriarch of Constantinople (1589). The first Patriarch was Job (1589–1605).

Since the Council of Florence RCs had been severely repressed in the Moscow Tsardom, but Russians in the metropolis of Kiev to the south, falling as they did within the territory of *Poland and Lithuania, found themselves under constant pressure from their RC masters. A large part of the Russian Church in this area acknowledged the Papacy at the Synod of *Brest-Litovsk in 1596. The Orthodox metropolis of Kiev, however, despite persecution, still continued in existence, organizing a vigorous opposition to the *Uniats, and attaining considerable intellectual brilliance in the 17th cent., esp. under Peter *Mogila, Metropolitan from 1632 to 1646. In 1606–12 a determined effort was made by the Poles to impose a RC Tsar at Moscow itself, but this was repulsed. Outstanding among the Patriarchs of Moscow during the 17th cent. was *Nikon (q.v.: d. 1681). A man of great ability and sincerity but of autocratic temper, he pushed forward too hastily with the work of revising the service-books, inaugurated under his predecessors, esp. Patriarch *Philaret (Romanov), and his liturgical reforms precipitated the schism of the '*Old Believers' (q.v.). This tragic division grievously weakened the Church in Russia.

Peter the Great (1672–1725), anxious to secure the subjugation of the Church to his authority, abolished the office of Patriarch, and in his 'Spiritual Regulation' of 1721 he replaced it with the *Holy Synod, the members of which were nominated by the Emperor and could be dismissed by him at any time. All its meetings were attended by a lay official, the Chief Procurator, who wielded considerable influence over Church affairs.

From the inclusion of part of Poland in the Russian Empire, which took place by stages at the end of the 18th cent., RC activity was intensified and sternly repressed by imperial ukases. In the reign of Catherine the Great (d. 1796) the *Jesuits, after their suppression by *Benedict XIV in 1773, found a home in Russia, but, proving unwelcome guests, they were shortly afterwards expelled. The RC cause was bound up with Polish and Lithuanian nationalism while these countries were under Russian rule, and even the edict of toleration to all faiths, issued by Nicholas II in 1905, had almost at once to be modified and limited in respect of the RCs.

In 1917–18 a large council of bishops, parish clergy, and laity met at Moscow and initiated a thorough reorganization of all aspects of Church life, in particular restoring the Patriarchate. Metropolitan *Tikhon of Moscow was elected Patriarch. But the Church had no time to consolidate the work of reform before the beginning of persecution under the Communist régime. The Revolution of 1917 brought into power a government which was both committed to the materialist and anti-religious doctrines of Marxism, and also hated the Church as the instrument and associate of Tsarism. Public worship was at no time legally forbidden, but very many church buildings were confiscated and secularized, clergy were esp. suspect and liable to death or banishment to prison camps, churches were forbidden to possess funds or engage in any public activity, and the teaching of religion to any person under 18 was a criminal offence. As between different religions (including Mohammedanism and Judaism, both represented in the country as well as Christianity) and different sects, the state proclaimed official neutrality, but RCism was accorded probably even less freedom than under the Tsars. Certain sects, however, such as *Baptists, benefited, relatively to their former state, though they never attracted more than a small fraction of the population. There was also a 'Reform' movement in the Orthodox Church, known usually as the 'Living' or 'Renovated Church', whose supporters formed a schismatic body, but afterwards returned to the Church. Intensive government 'anti-God' propaganda was maintained throughout the 1920s and 1930s. The Constitution of 1936 enacted 'freedom of anti-religious propaganda', but to the Church it allowed only 'freedom of religious worship', not of propaganda. By 1939, in the whole of the U.S.S.R. only a few hundred churches still remained open, and the ranks of the clergy were depleted to a critical degree (since 1918 all theological colleges had been closed). The Church, however, still maintained a tenuous central organisation under Metropolitan Sergius of Moscow, who in 1927 reached a limited understanding with the Soviet state. On the outbreak of hostilities with Germany (1941) Sergius firmly supported the war effort, and as a result the government made significant concessions on its side. Anti-religious propaganda was largely abandoned, in 1943 Sergius was elected Patriarch (the office had been vacant since Tikhon's death in 1925), and two state councils were set up, one for Orthodox and one for all other religious groups. The Church was granted a restricted power to possess corporate funds, the number of churches functioning for worship was very greatly increased, and eight seminaries were opened for the training of the clergy, together with two academies for higher theological study. At a synod in 1945, attended by 44 bishops, Metropolitan Alexis of Leningrad was elected Patriarch in succession to Sergius (d. 1944).

With the defeat of Germany and increasing tension between the U.S.S.R. and the W., government policy was modified. Anti-religious propaganda was restarted; the Orthodox Church in Russia (as in other countries of E. Europe) retained a limited degree of freedom, but it was required to support Communist positions at home and, more especially, abroad. A council held at Moscow in 1948, attended by delegates from most of the other Orthodox Churches, displayed considerable reserve towards the W.: an unfavourable (though carefully qualified) decision was reached concerning the validity of *Anglican ordinations, and resolutions were passed hostile to the Vatican and the *World Council of Churches, in accordance with Soviet foreign policy at that time. Subsequently, however, the Russian Church came to adopt a more moderate attitude: it joined the World Council of Churches in 1961 and sent observers to the Vatican Council in 1962; and although the decision regarding Anglican ordinations still remained in force, a constructive conference between Anglican and Russian theologians took place at Moscow in 1956. Since 1960 the Soviet state has been increasingly oppressive in its policy towards the Church; and during 1960–4 the authorities closed more than half the churches still in use, together with five out of the eight seminaries.

The principal material is in Russian and has largely remained untranslated into any W. European language; standard works available in tr. are the histories of the Russian Church by A. N. Muraviev (orig. publd. in Russian in 1840), translated into Eng. by R. W. Blackmore as A History of the Church of Russia (1842), and D. *Philaret, translated into German by Dr. Blumenthal as Geschichte der Kirche Russlands (2 vols., 1872). The best general history in a W. language is A. M. Ammann, S.J., Storia della Chiesa russa e dei paesi limitrofi (Turin, 1948). On the more recent period, see I. Smolitsch, Geschichte der russischen Kirche, 1700–1917, i (Studien zur Geschichte Osteuropas, ix; Leiden, 1964). W. H. *Frere, C.R., Some Links in the Chain of Russian Church History (1918). N. Zernov, Moscow the Third Rome (1937); id., The Russians and their Church (1945). G. P. Fedotov, The Russian Religious Mind (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1946–66). Id. (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950). I. Kologrivof, Essai sur la sainteté en Russie (Bruges, 1953); I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum. Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das Östliche Christentum, N.F., x–xi; 1953). N. Zernov, The Russian Religious Renaissance of the Twentieth Century (1963); N. Arseniev, La Piété russe (1963; Eng. tr., 1964). A. Schmemann (ed.), Ultimate Questions: An Anthology of Modern Russian Religious Thought (New York, 1965).

L. K. Goetz, Staat und Kirche in Altrussland . . . 988–1240 (1908). N. de Baumgarten, Chronologie ecclésiastique des terres russes du Xe au XIIIe siècle (Orientalia Christiana, xvii, Pt. 1 (No. 58); 1930); id., Saint Vladimir et la conversion de la Russie (ib., xxvii, Pt. 1 (No. 79); 1932). J. B. Koncevicius, Russia's Attitude towards Union with Rome, 9th–16th Centuries (Catholic University of America thesis; Washington, D.C., 1927), with bibl. P. Pierling, S.J., La Russie et le saint-siège. Études diplomatiques (5 vols., 1896–1912). R. S. Latimer, Under Three Tsars. Liberty of Conscience in Russia, 1859–1909 (1909), and other works by this author. J. S. Curtiss, Church and State in Russia. The Last Years of the Empire, 1900–1917 (New York, 1940); id., The Russian Church and the Soviet State, 1917–1950 (Boston, Mass., 1953). F. McCullagh, The Bolshevik Persecution of Christianity (1924); M. Spinka, The Church and the Russian Revolution (New York, 1927). G. P. Fedotov, The Russian Church since the Revolution (1928). J. F. Hecker, Religion and Communism. A Study of Religion and Atheism in Soviet Russia (1933). N. S. Timasheff, Religion in Soviet Russia, 1917–1942 (1943). M. Spinka, The Church in Soviet Russia (New York, 1956); W. Kolarz, Religion in the Soviet Union (1961); N. Struve, Les Chrétiens en U.R.S.S. (1963; enlarged Eng. tr., 1967). Johannes Chrysostomus [Blaschkewitz], Kirchengeschichte Russlands der neuesten Zeit (3 vols., Munich–Salzburg, 1965–8). M. Bourdeaux, Opium of the People. The Christian Religion in the U.S.S.R. (1965); id., Religious Ferment in Russia. Protestant Opposition to Soviet Religious Policy (1968); id., Patriarch and Prophets. Persecution of the Russian Orthodox Church Today [1969]. E. [W.] Benz, Die russische Kirche und das abendländische Christentum (Munich, 1966). W. C. Fletcher, The Russian Orthodox Church Underground, 1917–1970 (1971). H. Fireside, Icon and Swastika. The Russian Orthodox Church under Nazi and Soviet Control (Cambridge, Mass., 1971).

W. J. Birkbeck (ed.), Russia and the English Church during the Last Fifty Years, containing a Correspondence between Mr. William Palmer, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and M. Khomiakoff, in the Years 1844–1854 (1895); A. Riley (ed.), Birkbeck and the Russian Church. Containing Essays and Articles by the late W. J. Birkbeck . . . written in the Years 1888–1915 (1917). H. M. Waddams (ed.), Anglo-Russian Theological Conference, Moscow, July 1956 (1958).

K. K. Grass, Die russischen Sekten (2 vols., 1907–9); F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, x; 1921). H. Dalton, Beiträge zur Geschichte der evangelischen Kirche in Russland (4 vols., 1887–1905). A. W. Fechner, Chronik der evangelischen Gemeinden in Moskau (2 vols., Moscow, 1876). S. Bolshakoff, Russian Nonconformity (Philadelphia [1950]).

S. Bolshakoff, The Foreign Missions of the Russian Orthodox Church (1943). J. Glazik, M.S.C., Die russisch-orthodoxe Heidenmission seit Peter dem Grossen (Missionswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen und Texte, xix; 1954); id., Die Islammission der russisch-orthodoxen Kirche (ib., xxiii; 1959).

B. Stasiewski, in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 115–22, s.v. 'Russland', with further bibl. See also bibl. to Orthodox Church.

RUTH, Book of. The Book tells the story of Ruth, a Moabitess, who had married a Hebrew when he was compelled during a famine in the land of Judah to take refuge in Moab. It is narrated how, after the death of her husband, Ruth determined to return to Judah with her mother-in-law, and how Boaz, a kinsman of her former husband, took her under his protection and married her. The incident is set in the later days of the Judges (before 1000 B.C.), and this explains the position of the Book in the English Bible (as in the Greek and Latin Versions) after *Judges. The Book itself, however, is evidently of a relatively late date, certainly not earlier than the Exile (6th cent. B.C.); and in the Hebrew Bible it appears as one of the 'Five *Megilloth', i.e. in the third and latest division of the Hebrew OT, the *Hagiographa. The genealogy at the end (4. 18–22) indicates one of the apparent aims of the book, viz. to record the Moabite strain in *David's ancestry. This shows that the writer had a broader view on the legitimacy of the marriage of Jews with foreigners than was inculcated by *Nehemiah and *Ezra, and the story may point to his disapproval of the exclusive attitude of many of the Jews of his time. He probably also wished to insist on the duty of marriage on the part of the next-of-kin with a widow left without male offspring. In St. *Matthew's genealogy, Ruth is specifically mentioned as the great-grandmother of David, and so as an ancestress of Christ (1. 5–16).

Commentaries by G. A. Cooke (Camb. Bib., RV, 1913), W. Rudolph (K.A.T., xvi, Theil 2, 1939; ed. 2, Ruth, Song of Sol. and Lam., 1962, pp. 23–72), P. Joüon, S.J. (Rome, 1953), H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, ix, on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1953; ed. 2, 1959, pp. 257–83), and E. Würthwein (H.A.T., Reihe I, Bd. xviii, ed. 2, on Ruth, Song of Sol., Est., Eccl., and Lam., 1969, pp. 1–24). J. M. Myres, The Linguistic and Literary Form of the Book of Ruth (Leiden, 1955). H. H. Rowley, 'The Marriage of Ruth' in H.T.R., xl (1947), pp. 77–99, repr. in The Servant of the Lord (ed. 2, Oxford, 1965), pp. 171–94, with bibl. E. Robertson, 'The Plot of the Book of Ruth' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxii (1950), pp. 207–28.

RUTHENIAN CHURCHES. This title comprises certain *Uniat Churches mostly found in Polish Galicia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Bohemia, with colonies in N. America and elsewhere. Their ancestors, who were Slavonic converts of St. *Vladimir, formed part of the *Russian Church under the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan of Kiev until his expulsion on the promulgation of the Union of *Florence (1443). In 1485 *Pius II appointed a Catholic metropolitan of Kiev, who, by agreement with Casimir IV of *Poland (1447–92), was permitted to exercise jurisdiction over the eight *eparchies of the province under the control of Poland and Lithuania. Although these Churches reverted to Orthodoxy at the beginning of the 16th cent., in 1595 the Metropolitan of Kiev and the Bps. of Vladimir, Lutsk, Pololsk, Pinsk and Kholm petitioned for communion with Rome, which was achieved on 23 Dec. 1595 by the Union of *Brest-Litovsk (q.v.). They were joined in 1694 by the Bp. of Przemysl and in 1700 by the Bp. of Lwów. Despite a decree of *Urban VIII (1624), during the 17th cent. the majority of the nobility and landowners in Poland adopted the Latin rite. After the Partition of Poland (1795) most of the Ruthenians, except those of Galicia, passed under the sovereignty of Russia and were gradually suppressed in the early 19th cent. in favour of the Orthodox Church; in the Kholm district (ceded by Austria in 1815) they survived until c. 1875. When toleration was granted to RCs in Russia in 1905, Catholic Byzantines still being illegal, the survivors passed to the Latin rite.

After the Ruthenians of Galicia had come under the sovereignty of Austria, to solve the problems arising from the sees of Lwów and Przemysl being under a different political authority from their metropolitan, Lwów was constituted an Archbishopric in 1807. During the 19th cent. the Galician Ruthenians enjoyed religious toleration, but more recently they have suffered greatly from the political troubles in Eastern Europe, during which considerable ill-feeling between the Latin Poles and Byzantine Ruthenians has been engendered. A Ruthenian College was founded in Rome by *Leo XIII in 1897 (since 1904 in charge of the Ruthenian Basilian monks). The monastic element in the Ruthenian Church appears to be strong, and is esp. fostered by the more austere Studites (founded c. 1900). The Ruthenian liturgy is based on the Byzantine rite with certain modifications adopted from Rome.

There is a further Ruthenian community (the Podcarpathian Ruthenians), granted a separate jurisdiction by the erection of the eparchy of Mukachevo, subject to the primacy of Hungary, by Pope *Clement XIV in 1771. It was created to settle the disputes between the Ruthenian metropolitan north of the Carpathians and the settlement (dating from the 14th cent.) of Little and White Russians south of the Carpathians, brought into communion with Rome in 1646 by the Union of Uzhorod. There are also considerable Ruthenian communities of both jurisdictions in U.S.A. (since c. 1876), *Canada (from the 1890s), *Brazil and the *Argentine.

A. Theiner, Die neuesten Zustände der katholischen Kirche beider Ritus in Polen und Russland seit Katherina II bis auf unsere Tage (Augsburg, 1841). J. Pelesz, Geschichte der Union der ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom (2 vols., Würzburg, 1878–81). M. Lacko, S.J., Unio Užhorodensis Ruthenorum Carpaticorum cum Ecclesia Catholica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxliii; 1955). D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc., [1935]), pp. 76–95. J. Krajcar, S.J., 'The Ruthenian Patriarchate. Some remarks on the project for its establishment in the 17th century' in O.C.P., xxx (1964), pp. 65–84. A. J. Shipman in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 277–80, s.vv. 'Ruthenian Rite' and 'Ruthenians'; N. Andrusiak in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 382–407, s.v. 'Ruthène (Église)'; G. Olšr, S.J.–A. Raes, S.J., in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1482–92, s.v. 'Ruteni'; M. M. Wojnar in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 372–5, s.v. 'Ukrainian (Ruthenian) Rite'.

RUTHERFORD, JOSEPH FRANKLIN (1869–1941), popularly called 'Judge Rutherford', second head of the American sect of '*Jehovah's Witnesses' (q.v.). He was the descendant of a Baptist family of Morgan County (Mo.). Though he had never studied, he was given an attorney's licence c. 1892. He frequently defended C. T. *Russell (q.v.) in the courts and became a resourceful supporter of his sect and, in 1917, after Russell's death, its head. Under his leadership the organization took on an increasingly revolutionary aspect. In 1918–19 he served a term of imprisonment at Atlanta- (Georgia) for insubordination and disloyalty, and he was frequently accused of fraudulent practices, even by his own followers. He originally assigned the Second Coming to 1914. Later he held that Christ had returned invisibly in that year, and that the final Armageddon between Jehovah and Satan was imminent, though no precise date was fixed. He wrote several books, including The Harp of God, Deliverance, and Creation (all undated), and innumerable pamphlets propagating his subversive views.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'Judge' Rutherford (C.T.S. pamphlet, 1940).

RUTHERFORD, MARK, pseudonym of WILLIAM HALE WHITE (1831–1913), author of religious works. The son of William White, a Nonconformist bookseller who was later a doorkeeper of the House of Commons and author of The Inner Life of the House of Commons (1897), Hale White had orig. intended to enter the *Congregational ministry. He spent most of his life as a civil servant. He won recognition as a religious author by The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford (1881), marked by its unusual combination of spiritual depth, irony, and humour. It was followed by Mark Rutherford's Deliverance (1885) and other works, incl. Catharine Furze (1893), Pages from a Journal (1900), More Pages from a Journal (1910), and Last Pages from a Journal (posthumous, 1915). He also issued under his real name an Eng. tr. of B. de *Spinoza's writings. Though he has never made more than a limited appeal, the freshness and penetration of his books have won him an assured place among English religious writers.

W. R. *Nicoll, A Bookman's Letters (1913), pp. 364–412; repr. separately as Memories of Mark Rutherford (1924). Lives by Catherine M. Maclean (London, 1955) and I. Stock (ib., 1956). W. Stone, Religion and Art of William Hale White ('Mark Rutherford') (Stanford University Publications, University Series. Language and Literature, xii; Stanford, California, 1954). H. W. Massingham in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 573 f.

RUTHERFORD, SAMUEL (c. 1600–61), also 'Rutherfurd', Scottish *Presbyterian divine. After studying at Edinburgh University, he was elected professor of humanity in 1623, but deprived in 1626 for a pre-nuptial scandal. Soon afterwards he became fervently religious. In 1627 he was appointed minister at Anwoth, Dumfries and Galloway. His Exercitationes Apologeticae pro Divina Gratia (Amsterdam, 1636), written from a rigidly *Calvinist standpoint, led to his prosecution before the High Commission, and in 1636 he was deposed and exiled at Aberdeen till 1638. In 1639 he became professor of divinity at, and in 1647 principal of, St. Mary's College, St. Andrews. His Plea for Presbytery appeared in 1642. In 1643 he was one of the eight Scottish Commissioners at the *Westminster Assembly and for four years he defended the Presbyterian cause at London. His Lex Rex, a Dispute for the Just Prerogative of King and People (1644), which was an attack on monarchical absolutism, brought him considerable repute as a constitutional theorist. There followed The Divine Right of Church Government and Excommunication (1646), on behalf of Presbyterian Church polity, and A Free Disputation against Pretended Liberty of Conscience (1648), a vigorous defence of religious persecution in reply to J. *Taylor, on the ground that the advocacy of toleration put conscience in the place of God and the Bible. Several devotional writings also belong to these years. At the Restoration (1660) his Lex Rex was publicly burnt and a charge of high treason was preferred against him, but he died shortly afterwards.

Collection of his letters publd. under the title Joshua Redivivus or Mr. Rutherford's Letters [ed. by R. McWard], no place, 1664; the best ed. is that of A. A. Bonar (London, 1848), with sketch of Rutherford's life, pp. v–xxxiii, frequently republd.; in ed. of 1891 there is also a list of Rutherford's works, p. 31 f.; modern selection ed. H. Martin (London, 1957). A collection of his Sermons also ed. A. A. Bonar (ib., 1885). Lives by T. Murray (Edinburgh, 1828), A. Thomson ('Men Worth Remembering', London, 1884), and R. Gilmour (Edinburgh–London, 1904). A. Whyte, Samuel Rutherford and some of his Correspondents (Lectures delivered in St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh; 1894). G. W. Sprott in D.N.B., 1 (1897), pp. 7–9.

RUTILIUS CLAUDIUS NAMATIANUS (5th cent.), Latin poet. In 416 he returned to his native Gaul after some time spent in Rome; in his 'De Reditu Suo' he described the journey homewards. By religion he was almost certainly a pagan, despite H. Schenkl's attempt (1911) to prove him a Christian. He was conservative in his outlook, despised all religious innovations and was esp. critical of the monastic movement which, under St. *Jerome's influence, had then become very popular at Rome. Stilicho he regards not as a restorer of traditional pagan practices (the usual Christian conception of him), but as their uncompromising enemy. His poem throws important light on the background of the Church in the period.

Editio princeps by J. B. Pius, Bologna, 1520. Crit. texts by J. Vesserau, with full study (Paris, 1904), C. H. Keene, with Eng. tr. in verse by G. F. Savage-Armstrong (London, 1907), J. Vesserau–F. Préchac (Collection des Universités de France, Paris, 1933; with Fr. tr.), P. van de Woestijne (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren, Afl. lxxvi; Antwerp, 1936), and E. Merone (Naples, 1955). I. Lana, Rutilio Namaziano (Turin, 1961). H. Schenkl, 'Ein spätrömischer Dichter und sein Glaubensbekenntnis' in Rheinisches Museum für Philologie, N.F., lxvi (1911), pp. 393–416. F. Vollmer in P.W., 2. Reihe, ii (pt. 1; 1914), cols. 1249–54, s.v. (dismisses view that Rutilius was a Christian).

RUYSBROECK, JAN VAN (1293–1381), Flemish mystic. A native of Ruysbroeck, c. 1304 he went to Brussels for his education, living in the house of his relative, J. Hinckaert, canon of St.-Gudule, and continuing there after his ordination, c. 1317. He opposed a woman heretic who seems to have been connected with the '*Brethren of the Free Spirit'. In 1343 he retired with Hinckaert and another priest to a hermitage at Groenendael, near Brussels, where they were joined by others. In 1349 the group became a community of Canons Regular, with Ruysbroeck as prior until his death. Groenendael became prominent in the religious movement later to be known as Devotio Moderna, with which were also associated the '*Brethren of the Common Life' and the Canons Regular of *Windesheim, and such eminent spiritual writers as *Thomas à Kempis and *Dionysius the Carthusian.

Ruysbroeck's Flemish writings include The Spiritual Espousals (later criticized on doctrinal grounds by J. *Gerson), The Kingdom of the Lovers of God, The Book of Supreme Truth, The Mirror of Eternal Salvation, The Seven Steps of the Ladder of Spiritual Love, The Sparkling Stone (also known as The Treatise of Perfection of the Sons of God), and The Book of the Spiritual Tabernacle. Several of these works were translated into Latin during the 14th cent., and all his vernacular works were translated by L. Surius in the 16th cent. His writings show the influence of St. *Augustine, *Bede, St. *Bernard, *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and *Eckhart; they made a profound impression in his time. He was beatified in 1908. Feast day, 2 Dec.

Works ed. J. David (5 vols., Ghent, 1858–68) and by J. B. Poukens, S.J., and others (4 vols., Malines–Amsterdam, 1932–4; revised ed., Tielt, 1944–8). Lat. tr. by L. Surius (Cologne, 1552). Fr. tr. by the Benedictines of S. Paul de Wisques (3 vols., Brussels, 1912–30). Eng. trr. from the Flemish of The Twelve Béguines by J. Francis (London, 1913), of The Adornment of the Spiritual Marriage, The Sparkling Stone, and The Book of Supreme Truth by C. A. W. Dom (ib., 1916), of The Seven Steps of the Ladder of Spiritual Love by P. S. Taylor (ib., 1944), and of The Spiritual Espousals by E. Colledge (ib., 1952), and (from Surius's Lat.) of The Kingdom of the Lovers of God by T. A. Hyde (ib., 1919). Medieval Eng. tr. of The Chastising of God's Children and The Sparkling Stone ed. by Joyce Bazire and E. Colledge (Oxford, 1957). Medieval German tr. of The Spiritual Espousals, with full introd., ed. W. Eichler (Munich, 1969). The principal authority for his life is H. Pomerius, De Origine Monasterii Viridisvallis una cum Vita Joannis Rusbrochii (first half of the 15th cent.), pr. in Anal. Boll., iv (1885), pp. 257–308. P. O'Sheridan, 'Ce qui reste de la plus ancienne vie de Ruysbroeck' in R.H.E., xxi (1925), pp. 51–78 and 215–48, with reff. M. d'Asbeck, Documents relatifs à Ruysbroeck [1926], with bibl. D. A. Stracke, S.J., 'Jan van Ruusbroec's leven en karakter' in Jan van Ruusbroec. Leven, Werken, onder de redactie van het Ruusbroec-Genootschap Antwerpen (Malines–Antwerp, 1931), pp. 60–100; P. Lefèvre, O.Praem., 'Le Séjour du mystique brabançon Jean de Ruusbrooc à Bruxelles' in R.H.E., xxix (1933), pp. 387–98; id., 'La Valeur historique des écrits de Pomerius sur la vie de Ruusbroec et les origines de Groenendael' in Annales de la Société royale d'archéologie de Bruxelles, xl (1936), pp. 148–65. Modern lives by V. Scully, C.R.L. (London, 1910), E. *Underhill (ib., 1915), A. Wautier d'Aygalliers (Paris, 1924; Eng. tr., omitting bibl., 1925). A. Auger, De Doctrina et Meritis Johannis Ruysbroeck (Louvain, 1892). L. Reypens, S.J., 'Le Sommet de la contemplation mystique chez le bienheureux Jean de Ruusbroec' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, iii (1922), pp. 250–72. G. Dolezich, Die Mystik Jan van Ruysbroecks des Wunderbaren (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, iv; 1926); M. d'Asbeck, La Mystique de Ruysbroeck l'Admirable (1928). A. Combes, Essai sur la critique de Ruysbroeck par Gerson (Études de Théologie et de l'Histoire de la Spiritualité, iv–vi; 1945–72). A. Ampe, S.J., Kernproblemen uit der Leer van Ruusbroec (3 vols. in 4, Tielt, 1950–7). S. Axters, O.P., La Spiritualité des Pays-Bays (1948), pp. 41–60; Eng. tr. (1954), pp. 29–42; id., Geschiedenis van de Vroomheid in de Nederlanden, ii (1953), esp. pp. 213–91. E. Colledge in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 763–5, s.v.

RYCAUT, PAUL (1628–1700), also 'Ricaut', traveller and author. Born at Aylesford, Kent, after studying at Trinity College, Cambridge, he spent most of his life abroad. In 1661 he was appointed secretary to the British Embassy at *Constantinople, where he collected extensive materials on the life and customs of Turkey and the Moslem religion, which were published later as The Present State of the Ottoman Empire (1668; acc. to S. Pepys, the original edition was almost completely destroyed in the Great Fire). From 1667 to 1679 he was consul to the Levant Company at Smyrna. On his return to England he issued an essay on The Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), which remains an important contemporary source of information on the Eastern Churches. He was also the author of The History of the Turkish Empire from the Year 1623 to the Year 1677 (2 parts, 1679–80), and translated a large number of Latin and Greek treatises into English, incl. B. *Platina's Lives of the Popes (1685).

T. Seccombe in D.N.B., 1 (1897), pp. 38–40.

RYLANDS ST. JOHN. Part of one page of a papyrus codex (P.52), now in the John Rylands Library, Manchester. It contains on the recto chapter 18, verses 31–3, and on the verso verses 37–8, of St. John's Gospel. It is written in a clear quasi-documentary hand and may be assigned to the first half of the second cent. and prob. to the early part of it. It is thus both the earliest known MS. of any part of the NT and the earliest distinct evidence for the existence of the Fourth Gospel. It was found in Egypt, prob. either in *Oxyrhynchus or the Fayum. The text exhibits no striking divergences from the known text. The complete Gospel would have occupied some 150 pages, and it may be assumed that the Codex contained no other work.

Text first publd. by C. H. Roberts, An Unpublished Fragment of the Fourth Gospel in the John Rylands Library (Manchester, 1935); also in Catalogue of the Greek and Latin Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, iii, ed. id. (ib., 1938), pp. 1–3. H. I. Bell, Recent Discoveries of Biblical Papyri (lecture; Oxford, 1937), esp. p. 20 f. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (ed. 2, Oxford, 1968), p. 38 f.

RYLE, HERBERT EDWARD (1856–1925), Dean of *Westminster. The son of J. C. *Ryle, he was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, where in 1881 he was elected a Fellow. Apart from a short period as principal of St. David's College, Lampeter (1886–8), he remained at Cambridge until his appointment to the see of *Exeter in 1900. Translated in 1903 to the see of *Winchester, he resigned this office in 1910 to become Dean of Westminster. From 1919 to 1925 he was *Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation of Canterbury. His writings include The Early Narratives of Genesis (1892), The Canon of the OT (1892), and Genesis (Camb. Bible, 1914).

Memoir by M. H. FitzGerald (London, 1928). Id. in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 733–5.

RYLE, JOHN CHARLES (1816–1900), Bp. of Liverpool. He was born at Macclesfield and educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. When his wish to become a member of Parliament had been frustrated by lack of financial means, he decided to take orders. He was ordained priest in 1842, and after holding several parochial cures, was consecrated bishop of the newly created Anglican see of Liverpool in 1880, which he held till shortly before his death. A strong Evangelical in his beliefs, he defended his convictions in forceful and simple language in a number of tracts which had a wide circulation. Among his publications are The Bishop, the Pastor, and the Preacher (1854; studies on H. *Latimer, R. *Baxter, and G. *Whitefield), The Christian Leaders of the Last Century (1869), What do we owe to the Reformation? (1877), and Principles for Churchmen (1884).

M. L. Loane, John Charles Ryle 1816–1900. A Short Biography (1953), repr. in his Makers of our Heritage (1967), pp. 19–56. Life by P. Toon–M. Smout (Cambridge, 1976). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), p. 334 f., s.v.

RYNSBURGERS. See Collegiants.

RYSWICK CLAUSE, The. The clause 'Religione tamen Catholica Romana in locis sic restitutis, in statu quo nunc est, remanente', inserted into Article IV of the Treaty of Ryswick (30 Oct. 1697). It modifies the general rule that the religious frontiers should revert to their position at the time of the Treaty of Nymegen (1679) in favour of the Catholic communities in those places where they had been re-established by Louis XIV in the interval.

Text of the Treaty of Ryswick between the Emp. Leopold and Louis XIV, pr., with comm., in H. Vast, Les Grands Traités du règne de Louis XIV, ii (1898), pp. 228–53, this stipulation occurring on p. 232; most imp. sections of Treaty repr. in E. Reich (ed.), Select Documents Illustrating Mediaeval and Modern History (1905), pp. 25–32, with this stipulation, p. 26 f. C. T. G. von Scheurl in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), p. 273 f., s.v. 'Ryswicker Klausel'.

S

SA, MANOEL DE (c. 1530–96), Portuguese theologian. He entered the *Jesuit novitiate at Coimbra in 1545. In 1551 he became professor of philosophy at Alcalá and in 1557 was called to teach theology at the Roman College. *Pius V appointed him a member of the *Septuagint Commission. The last years of his life he spent in apostolic works at *Loreto and Genoa. Besides several Scriptural Commentaries he published, in 1595, Aphorismi Confessariorum, a manual of casuistry in dictionary form which was temporarily placed on the *Index in 1603 for allowing confession and absolution to be made by letter, but in its corrected edition of 1607–8 enjoyed great authority among moral theologians.

Sommervogel, vii (1896), cols. 349–54, and ix (1900), col. 829. R. Brouillard, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols 425–8, s.v. 'Sa (Emmanuel)', with bibl.

SABAOTH (Heb. צְבָאוֹת; Gk. Σαβαώθ). This Hebrew word, which denotes 'armies' or 'hosts', is preserved untranslated in the phrase 'Lord of Sabaoth' in the NT (Rom. 9. 29, Jas. 5. 4). and in the ordinary English version of the *Te Deum. See also Lord of Hosts.

SABAS, St. (439–532), monk. A native of Mutalaska in Cappadocia, after leading the life of a monk and solitary in several places in the East, in 478 he founded a large laura* (still extant as 'Mar Saba') in Palestine in the wild country between *Jerusalem and the Dead Sea (the Wadi en-Nar). With reluctance he accepted ordination to the priesthood (then not usual for monks) in 490, and in 492 the Patr. of Jerusalem created him superior of all the hermits in Palestine. A strong supporter of theological orthodoxy, he took a prominent part in the campaign against *Origenism and Monophysitism. A typicon circulates under his name in the E. Church, Feast day, 5 Dec.

The principal authority is the life by *Cyril of Scythopolis, pr., with Lat. tr., by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, iii (Paris, 1686), pp. 220–376; modern ed. by E. *Schwartz in T.U., xlix (pt. 2; 1939), pp. 85–200. Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière, O.P., Les Moines d'orient, iii, pt. 2 (1962). B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957), ii, p. 228 f. (Nos. 1608–10). History of the Laura of St. Sabas (in Gk.) by J. Phocylides (Alexandria, 1927). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 189–211, s.v., with full bibl. on the churches and monastery.

SABAS, St., Patron of Serbia. See Sava, St.

SABATIER, AUGUSTE (1839–1901), French Protestant theologian. He was professor of reformed dogmatics at Strassburg university from 1867 to 1873, and from 1877 at the newly established Protestant theological faculty at *Paris. He propagated the theories of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and A. *Ritschl in France, applied the methods of historical criticism to the NT, and, esp. by his interpretation of Christian dogma as the symbolism of religious feelings, exercised a profound influence not only on French Protestantism but also in Catholic theological circles, thus helping to prepare the *Modernist Movement. Among his best-known works are L'Apôtre Paul (1870; Eng. trans., 1891), La Vie intime des dogmes (1890), Esquisse d'une philosophie de la religion (1897; Eng. trans., 1897) and his posthumous Les Religions d'autorité et la religion de l'esprit (1903; Eng. trans., 1904).

T. Silkstone, Religion, Symbolism and Meaning. A Critical Study of the Views of Auguste Sabatier (Oxford, 1968). E. Ménégoz, 'The Theology of Auguste Sabatier of Paris' in Expository Times, xv (1903–4), pp. 30–4 (tr. from the French). G. B. Stevens, 'Auguste Sabatier and the Paris School of Theology' in Hibbert Journal, i (1903), pp. 553–68.

SABATIER, PAUL (1858–1928), *Calvinist Pastor and Franciscan scholar. Born at Strassburg, after studying letters at Besançon and Lille and medicine at Montpellier, he enrolled himself in the Protestant Faculty of Theology at Paris, where Auguste *Sabatier and E. *Renan were among his teachers. From 1885 to 1889 he held a pastoral cure at St. Nicholas, Strassburg. He then became Pastor at St.-Cierge-la-Serre, where he began his studies on St. *Francis, to which he had been stimulated by Renan. Soon compelled by frail health to give up his pastoral work, he devoted the rest of his life solely to his researches, spending long periods in Italy, esp. at *Assisi. His Vie de St. François (1893; Eng. trans., 1894), depicting the mission of the Saint as a renewal of the medieval Church in the light of the 'pure Gospel', was based on a close study of the sources, brilliant in presentation and penetrating in its psychological understanding. The work was widely read, but, on account of its liberal outlook, was soon put on the *Index (8 June 1894).

Sabatier's further researches continued to give great impetus to Franciscan studies. He brought to light much important new material, notably the Speculum Perfectionis, the Tractatus de Indulgentia S. Mariae de Portiuncula of Brother Bartolo of Assisi and the Regula Antiqua of the Third Franciscan Order, though some of his contentions on the primitive sources turned out to be mistaken. He also directed two series of publications, Collection de documents pour l'histoire religieuse et littéraire du moyen âge (1898–1909) and Opuscules de critique historique (1901–19). In 1902 he founded the 'Società Internazionale di Studi Francescani' at Assisi and in 1908 the British Society of Franciscan Studies at London. He was also an active sympathizer with the RC *Modernist Movement, on which he delivered a course of Jowett Lectures in London in 1908 (publd. later in the year).

A. G. Little, 'Paul Sabatier, Historian of St. Francis' in Franciscan Papers, Lists and Documents (Publications of the University of Manchester, No. cclxxxiv, Historical Series No. lxxxi, 1943), Lecture XI (delivered in 1929), pp. 179–88. C. Bellò, 'Note ad un carteggio inedito fra Mons. Bonomelli e Paul Sabatier (1900–1913)' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xv (1961), pp. 31–70.

SABATIER, PIERRE (1682–1742), *Maurist scholar. After joining the *Benedictine Order at *Reims in 1700, he went to *St.-Germain-des-Prés, where he was trained in historical method by T. *Ruinart. His monumental work, the fruit of many years' research, was a virtually exhaustive collection of the material then available for the *Old Latin (i.e. pre-*Vulgate) text of the Bible.

It was published posthumously as Bibliorum Sacrorum Latinae Versiones Antiquae (3 vols., fol., 1743[-9]) at Reims, whither the author had been transferred in 1727 on account of his supposed *Jansenist tendencies. The importance of his work is acknowledged by the fact that his name still occurs in the title of the edition in process of publication by the Vetus Latina Institute at the Archabbey of *Beuron.

[R. P. Tassin, O.S.B.,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (1770), pp. 617–21. L. F. Hartman in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 777.

SABBATARIANISM. Excessive strictness in the observance of the Divinely ordained day of rest. In its more rigorous form it is a peculiar development of the English and Scottish Reformation, being unknown on the Continent even among *Calvinists. The beginning of 17th cent. Sabbatarianism is connected with the publication in 1595 of Nicholas Bound's True Doctrine of the Sabbath, which advocated its strict enforcement on OT lines. The book caused a lively controversy, which assumed political importance when *James I issued his *Book of Sports (1618), enjoining cessation of work but allowing lawful recreation. James's Book roused a storm of protest, and was burned by Parliament in 1643. The Puritan Sabbath was imposed by successive Acts of legislation (1644, 1650, 1655) prohibiting any kind of recreation on Sunday, even going for a walk. After the Restoration observance was slightly relaxed when under *Charles II the Act for the Better Observance of the Lord's Day (1677) was passed which, though it forbade all work and travel by horse or boat on Sunday, was silent on recreations. Under the influence of the *Evangelical Revival at the end of the 18th cent. rigorism took a new lease of life by the Lord's Day Observance Act, drawn up by Bp. B. *Porteus in 1781, which laid down that any place of entertainment or debate where admission was gained by payment of money should be closed to use on Sunday. In Scotland Sabbatarianism was carried to extremes from the beginning of the 17th cent., all recreation including even books and music not strictly religious being disallowed. Here, as well as in England, relaxation has been progressive since the latter part of the 19th cent. The Puritan point of view is today represented by the *Lord's Day Observance Society. See also Sunday.

Full bibl. of the older literature (which, though abundant, is very repetitive) in R. Cox, The Literature of the Sabbath Question (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1865). E. W. *Hengstenberg, Ueber den Tag des Herrn (1852); R. Cox, Sabbath Laws and Sabbath Duties (1853); J. A. Hessey, Sunday. Its Origin, History and Present Obligation (Bampton Lectures for 1860; 1860). On the 'Law relating to Sunday' see W. F. Craies in E.B. (ed. 11), xxvi (1911), pp. 95–8, s.v. 'Sunday' (part). See also bibl. to Sunday.

SABBATH. The seventh day of the Jewish week. It was to be sanctified by complete abstinence from work (Ex. 20. 10) and marked by the doubling of the daily sacrifices (Num. 28. 9 f.) and special gatherings for worship (Lev. 23. 2 f.). The particular distinction of the seventh day is probably connected with the phases of the moon. Its origin is accounted for in a double way. Acc. to Ex. 20. 11 and 31. 17 it represents the rest God took on the seventh day from His work of Creation, whereas acc. to Deut. 5. 15 it is apparently kept in remembrance of the deliverance from Egypt. The Sabbath served the twofold purpose of being a day set apart for the worship of God (Ex. 31. 13–17) as well as for the rest and recreation of man, esp. slaves, and cattle (Deut. 5. 14). The prohibition of work was regulated by detailed prescription, forbidding e.g. the gathering of manna, cooking (Ex. 16. 22–30), and the lighting of fire (Ex. 35. 3). In the *Maccabaean period regulations became increasingly strict, and pious Jews let themselves be killed rather than defend their lives on the Sabbath (1 Macc. 2. 32–8). In NT times even activities such as healing (e.g. Mt. 12. 10) and plucking of ears of corn (Mt. 12. 1 f.) were forbidden. One of the Pharisees' chief grievances against Christ was that He declared the Sabbath to have been made for man and not vice versa (Mk. 2. 27). Though the primitive Christians largely continued to keep the seventh day as a day of rest and prayer, the fact that the Resurrection and Coming of the Holy Ghost had taken place on the first day of the week soon led to the observance of that day (i.e. *Sunday), to the exclusion of the Jewish Sabbath on Saturday. In modern times a few sects, such as the *Seventh Day Adventists, observe Saturday in literal fulfilment of the Fourth Commandment rather than the Sunday adopted by most Christian bodies.

The details of later Jewish Sabbath observances are set out in the *Mishnah tractate 'Shabbath'. Eng. tr. of Tractate Shabbath with notes by W. O. E. Oesterley (Translations of Early Documents, Series III, 1927); also by H. Danby, The Mishnah (1933), pp. 100–21. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 371–82, with bibl. p. 456 f. (Eng. tr., ed. 2, 1965, pp. 475–83, with bibl. p. 550). R. North, S.J., 'The Derivation of Sabbath' in Biblica, xxxv (1955), pp. 182–201. S. R. *Driver in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 317–23, s.v.; W. Lotz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 283–91, s.v.; E. Lohse in T.W.B., vii (1960–4), pp. 1–35, s.v. σάββατον.

SABBATICAL YEAR. The one year in seven which the *Mosaic legislation (Ex. 21. 2–6, Deut. 15. 1–3, 15. 12–18, 31. 10–13, Lev. 25, &c.) ordered to be observed as a 'Sabbath', i.e., requiring the land to remain fallow and all debtors and Israelite slaves to be freed. In Lev. 25 a simultaneous fallow year is prescribed; but in the older strata of the *Pentateuch it seems to have been intended that each husbandman and slave-owner should be at liberty to decide which seventh year he would observe, so that the whole land should not go out of cultivation at once. See also Jubilee, Year of.

R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, i (1958), pp. 264–7, with bibl. p. 338 f. (Eng. tr., ed. 2, 1965, pp. 173–5, with bibl. p. 532). See also commentaries to Deut., ad loc.

SABBATINE PRIVILEGE. An indulgence granted to the *Carmelite Order. On the basis of a bull, 'Sacratissimo uti culmine', ascribed to *John XXII (1322), which was held to rest on an apparition of the BVM, certain privileges were granted to the Carmelite Order and its confraternities. They include unfailing salvation and early release from Purgatory through the intervention of the BVM (esp. release on *Saturdays, Our Lady's day), provided certain conditions such as wearing the brown *scapular, keeping certain fasts, and reciting the *Little Office of the BVM, are observed. The Sabbatine Privilege has been confirmed by several Popes, e.g. by *Pius XI in 1922. The authenticity of the original bull was widely contested in the 16th and 17th cents., esp. by the Jesuit D. *Papebroch, and some violent controversies ensued. Its spuriousness is now admitted even by Carmelites themselves, such as B. Zimmerman. It prob. dates from the latter half of the 15th century.

A note of the bull of John XXII occurs in G. Mollat, Jean XXII (1316–1334). Lettres communes analysées d'après les registres dits d'Avignon et du Vatican, iv (1910), p. 169 (No. 16193). B. Zimmerman, O.D.C., Monumenta Historica Carmelitana (Lérins, 1907), pp. 356–63. See also bibl. to Simon Stock, St.

SABELLIANISM. An alternative title for the Modalist form of *Monarchianism (q.v.). It is so named from Sabellius, of whom, however, very little is known. He was prob., like his fellow-Monarchians *Noetus and *Praxeas, an early 3rd cent. theologian of Roman origin, though he is described by later 4th–5th cent. Gk. writers (*Basil, *Timothy of Constantinople) as belonging to Libya or the Pentapolis.

SABINA, St. (c. 126), Roman martyr. Acc. to her late and untrustworthy acta, she was a widow of Umbria who was converted by the virtuous life of her servant, Serapia, a native of Antioch in Syria. Both Sabina and Serapia were arrested in the persecution under Hadrian, and Serapia beaten to death, while Sabina was discharged on account of her rank. A year later, however, Sabina was again apprehended and martyred at Rome. There seems no probability even of the existence of such a saint. The acta were perhaps fabricated to account for the church of St. Sabina (originally 'titulus Sabinae', later 'titulus Sanctae Sabinae') on the Aventine Hill, which is believed to contain her relics. Feast-day, 29 Aug. She is commemorated by name in the canon of the *Ambrosian Rite.

On SS. Sabina and Serapia, AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 496–504; cf. also H. *Delehaye, S.J., in his ed. of the *Hieronymian Martyrology (AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 2; 1931), p. 475). J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hftt. 1–2; 1918), pp. 163–6.

On the church, J. J. Berthier, L'Église de Sainte-Sabine à Rome (Rome, 1918); id., Le Couvent de Sainte-Sabine à Rome (ib., 1912). A. Muñoz, Il restauro della basilica di Santa Sabina (1938). F. Darsy, O.P., Santa Sabina (Le chiese di Roma illustrate, lxiii–lxiv; 1961). Id., Recherches archéologiques à Sainte-Sabine (Monumenti dell'Antichità Cristiana, Ser. II, Monumenti, ix; 1968). R. Krautheimer-S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iv (Rome, 1970), pp. 72–98 [in English]. J. P. Kirsch, op. cit., pp. 96–100. H. I. Marrou, 'Sur les origines du titre romain de Sainte-Sabine' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, ii (1932), pp. 316–25. M. D. Darsy, O.P., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 218–38, s.v. 'Sabine (Basilique de Sainte-)'.

SACCAS, AMMONIUS. See Ammonius Saccas.

SACCOS. See Sakkos.

SACHEVERELL, HENRY (1674–1724), High Church divine and pamphleteer. Born at Marlborough, he was educated at the Grammar School and at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1701. In 1705 he was elected chaplain of St. Saviour's, Southwark (now *Southwark Cathedral). On 15 Aug. 1709 he preached the assize sermon at Derby and on 5 Nov. 1709 before the Lord Mayor at *St. Paul's. On both these occasions he upheld the doctrine of non-resistance and emphasized in violent language the perils facing the Church from the Whig government's policy of toleration and allowance of *Occasional Conformity. In the latter sermon he also openly attacked G. *Burnet, Bp. of *Salisbury. In Dec. 1709 the Commons condemned the sermons as seditious and, despite the opposition of the Tories and of many Whigs, as well as strong feeling in the country, Sacheverell was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanour. The sentence (suspension from preaching for three years) was so light as to be a triumph for the accused and he became a popular hero. When the three years had passed, Sacheverell preached on Palm Sunday, 1713, to a packed gathering at St. Saviour's, Southwark. The sermon sold for £100 and had a very wide circulation. In 1713 he was presented by Queen *Anne, who had openly shown him sympathy, to the living of St. Andrew's, Holborn.

Although the fall of the Whigs in 1710 was largely the result of the impeachment of Sacheverell, he would prob. not have made his mark in history had he not become the champion of the High Church and Tory parties. Among his pamphlets were Character of a Low Churchman (1701) and The Rights of the Church of England (1705; with Edmund Perkes).

J. R. *Bloxam, Register of Magdalen (1879), pp. 98–110. F. Madan, A Bibliography of Dr. Henry Sacheverell (1884). A. T. Scudi, The Sacheverell Affair (New York, 1939). G. Holmes, The Trial of Doctor Sacheverell (1973). W. Hunt in D.N.B., I (1897), pp. 80–3.

SACRAMENT. Acc. to the *Catechism of the BCP, 'an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace given unto us, ordained by Christ himself, as a means whereby we receive the same, and a pledge to assure us thereof'; or more briefly, acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, 'the sign of a sacred thing in so far as it sanctifies men' (signum rei sacrae in quantum est sanctificans homines). The Lat. sacramentum orig. meant an oath, esp. the soldier's oath of allegiance, and traces of this meaning survive in early Christian literature (e.g. *Tertullian, Ad Martyres, 3). But the main factor in determining Christian usage was its employment in the Lat. NT to render the Gk. μυστήριον ('mystery').

In Christian theology the scope of what the word comprises has varied widely. St. *Augustine, who defined it as the 'visible form of invisible grace' or 'a sign of a sacred thing', applied it to formulae such as the Creed and the Lord's Prayer; and this wide application was maintained into the Middle Ages. *Hugh of St.-Victor (d. 1142) in his 'De Sacramentis Christianae Fidei' enumerated as many as thirty Sacraments, dividing them into three groups. In *Peter Lombard (Sentences, Bk. 4, dist. i, num. 2), the seven which have become traditional, viz. *Baptism, *Confirmation, the *Eucharist, *Penance, Extreme *Unction, *Orders, and *Matrimony, are enumerated. This list was accepted by St. Thomas and formally affirmed at the Councils of *Florence (1439; in the 'Decretum pro Armenis') and *Trent (1545–63). Acc. to the Council of Trent (Sess. VII) all seven Sacraments were instituted by Christ; but in the case of some of the Sacraments (notably Confirmation, Extreme Unction, Matrimony) there is much disagreement among RC theologians as to the occasion when Christ instituted them. The sevenfold enumeration of the Sacraments is accepted also by the E. Church.

From early times a special rank among the Sacraments was given to Baptism and the Eucharist, both of which are clearly referred to in the Gospels (Mt. 28. 19; 26. 26–29). In Art. 25 of the C of E they are differentiated as the 'two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel' as distinct from the other 'five commonly called Sacraments', which are 'such as have grown partly of the corrupt following of the Apostles, partly are states of life allowed in the Scriptures; but yet have not like nature of Sacraments with Baptism, and the Lord's Supper, for that they have not any visible sign or ceremony ordained of God'. In modern times Anglican theologians generally have adopted a more positive attitude towards the five lesser Sacraments, and views not widely different from those of the Council of Trent are often held.

The theological significance of the Sacraments lies in: (1) The exhibition of the principle of the Incarnation. By the embodiment of spiritual reality in material form an appropriate counterpart of the union of God with man in the Person of Christ is made patent. (2) Their expression of the objectivity of God's action on the human soul. The reception of God's gifts is normally dependent not on changing subjective feelings, but on obedience to the Divine will. (3) As ordinances mediated through the Church, their essentially social structure. They are the means whereby the union of God and man consequent on the Incarnation is perpetuated in Christ's mystical Body of His Church, its members incorporated in Him, and through Him united to one another.

Acc. to traditional Catholic theology, a distinction, orig. due to *William of Auxerre (d. c. 1235), is made between the 'matter' (materia) and the 'form' (forma) of the Sacraments, the matter being the undetermined material element (in Baptism, water; in the Eucharist, the bread and wine) and the form the consecratory words (in Baptism, the pronouncement of the Triple Formula; in the Eucharist, the words 'This is My Body', 'This is My Blood'). The right matter and the right form, used with the right *intention, are among the minimal conditions for the 'validity' of the Sacrament. Where given conditions are all present the due performance of the act is sufficient to ensure that the Sacraments will normally convey grace, since acc. to Catholic theology the validity of the Sacraments is independent of the worthiness or unworthiness of the minister and hence their working is normally ex opere operato. Nevertheless they do not convey grace to the recipient if he is not rightly disposed. In the absence of faith and repentance he may put an impediment (obex) in the way of the grace which would naturally flow from the Sacrament. In such cases the Sacramental act, though 'valid', is not 'efficacious'.

In recent RC theology stress has been laid on the Sacraments as maintaining and deepening the union of the individual recipient with the Church as the Body of Christ. In line with this, Christ Himself, as the expression of the eternal Word in human nature, and the Church as His Body, have been described as the primordial Sacraments, on which all the commonly enumerated Sacraments depend. This notion finds expression in the documents of the Second *Vatican Council, especially in the 'Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy'.

Three of the Sacraments, viz. Baptism, Confirmation, and Orders, are held to imprint an abiding mark or *character (character indelebilis) on the soul and therefore cannot be repeated. When there is uncertainty as to whether or not a person has already received these Sacraments, they are administered 'conditionally'.

Among the Protestant Churches the *Quakers and the *Salvation Army are the only two large bodies which make no use of Sacraments. In Protestantism in general, though the technicalities of Sacramental theology are less developed, the greatest importance is often attached to Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The comparative rarity with which the latter is celebrated in some Protestant Churches is often matched with a correspondingly high degree of seriousness and devotion in its reception. Great emphasis is laid on the belief that the Sacraments are expressive of the Word.

See also entries on the separate Sacraments.

Introductory modern studies include P. T. *Forsyth, Lectures on the Church and the Sacraments (1917); A. J. Tait, The Nature and Functions of the Sacraments (1917); O. C. *Quick, The Christian Sacraments (1927); J. W. C. Wand, The Development of Sacramentalism (1928). F. Gavin, The Jewish Antecedents of the Christian Sacraments (1928). J. C. Lambert, The Sacraments in the New Testament (Kerr Lectures for 1903; 1903). F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872). J. B. *Franzelin, S.J., Tractatus de Sacramentis in Genere (Rome, 1868); P. Schanz, Die Lehre von den heiligen Sakramenten der katholischen Kirche (1893); J. B. Sasse, Institutiones Theologiae de Sacramentis Ecclesiae (2 vols., Freiburg i.Br., 1897–8); N. Gihr, Die heiligen Sakramente der katholischen Kirche (Theologische Bibliothek, 2 vols., 1918–21). [E.] H. Schillebeeckx, O.P., De Sacramentele Heilseconomie. Theologische bezinning op S. Thomas' sacramentenleer in het licht van de traditie en van de hedendaagse sacraments-problematiek (Antwerp, 1952). Id., Christus, Sacrament van de Godsontmoeting (Bilthoven, 1960; Eng. tr., 1963); B. Leeming, S.J., Principles of Sacramental Theology (1956; new ed., 1960). D. M. Baillie, The Theology of the Sacraments and Other Papers (1957), pp. 37–124. K. *Rahner, S.J., Kirche und Sakramente (Quaestiones Disputatae, x; 1960; Eng. tr., 1963). B. Spáčil, S.J., Doctrina Theologiae Orientis Separati de Sacramentis in Genere (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxiii; 1937). J. de Ghellinck, S.J., and others, Pour l'histoire du mot 'Sacramentum' (S.S.L., iii; 1924). Other studies include those of P. B. Bull, C.R. (London, 1915), W. M. Clow (ib., 1934), C. R. Smith (ib., 1927), A. L. Lilley (ib., 1928), M. M. Philipon, O.P. (Bruges, 1945; Eng. tr., 1956), Papers of the Maynooth Union Summer School 1963, ed. D. O'Callaghan (Dublin, 1964), and B. J. Cooke, S.J. (New York, &c., 1965). A. Michel in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 485–644, s.v. 'Sacrements', with further bibl. See also bibll. to separate Sacraments.

SACRAMENT HOUSE. A shrine-like receptacle for the *reservation of the Blessed Sacrament. It developed from the stone niche in the wall ('*aumbry') which after the introduction of the Feast of *Corpus Christi (1264) began to take the shape of a small tower, the central part of which was done in open-work. These sacrament houses, which were popular esp. in Germany, Belgium, and France, were frequently decorated with ornamental reliefs representing the Last Supper, the Passion, and other subjects. From the 16th cent. onwards they were largely displaced by *tabernacles, but current RC legislation permitting reservation away from the altar has led to the revival in some places of receptacles similar to the medieval sacrament houses.

J. Hertkens, Die mittelalterlichen Sakraments-Häuschen (1908). Braun, C.A., ii, pp. 585–97 passim. F. X. Noppenberger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 244, s.v. 'Sakramentshäuschen'. See also works cited under Reservation.

SACRAMENTALS. Certain religious practices and objects akin to the *Sacraments (q.v.) but differing in being held not to have been instituted by Christ and therefore of relatively much less importance. Their number is undetermined, but they are sometimes classified under the six heads of praying, anointing, eating, confessing, giving, and blessing ('orans', 'tinctus', 'edens', 'confessus', 'dans', 'benedicens'). They include the *sign of the cross, the saying of *grace at meals, *vestments, lights, palms and ashes, the *Stations of the Cross, *litanies, the *Angelus, the *rosary, and so on. RC theologians hold that they do not convey grace ex opere operato, but ex opere operantis ecclesiae; by the Church's intercession they convey spiritual effects, and by their aid men are disposed to receive the chief fruits of the sacraments and various occasions in their daily life are rendered holy.

Popular account in M. Donovan, Sacramentals (1925). F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872), pp. 16–96. Much material also in A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter (2 vols., 1909). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 292 f., s.v.; A. Gaboardi, in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1555–8, s.v. 'Sacramentali'.

SACRAMENTARIANS. The name which M. *Luther gave to those theologians (esp. H. *Zwingli and J. *Oecolampadius) who maintained that the Bread and Wine of the *Eucharist were the Body and Blood of Christ in only a 'sacramental', i.e. metaphorical, sense. The word thus came to be commonly used in the 16th cent. for all those who denied the doctrine of the *Real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist. It has occasionally been applied also in other senses.

SACRAMENTARY (Lat. Liber Sacramentorum). In the W. Church, the liturgical book in use down to the 13th cent. for the celebrant at Mass; it contained the *Canon of the Mass and the proper *Collects, *Prefaces and other prayers for use throughout the year, but not the *Epistles or *Gospels, nor those parts of the rite (e.g. the *Gradual) which were sung. Sacramentaries also contained *ordination formularies, blessings and other prayers used by priests and bishops. From the 10th cent. onwards, the desirability of having all the parts of the service in a single book led to the gradual replacement of the Sacramentary by the *Missal and Pontifical.

Older editions of the texts include G. M. *Tommasi, Codices Sacramentorum (Rome, 1680); id., Antiqui Libri Missarum (ib., 1691); L. A. *Muratori, Liturgia Romana Vetus (2 vols., Venice, 1748); J. A. *Assemani, Codex Liturgicus Ecclesiae Universae (13 vols., Rome, 1749–66). For more recent edd., see Gelasian, Gregorian and Leonine Sacramentaries, Missale Francorum, Missale Gallicanum Vetus, and Missale Gothicum. L. Delisle, Mémoire sur d'anciens sacramentaires (1886); F. *Probst, Die ältesten römischen Sakramentarien und Ordines (1892); E. Bourque, Étude sur les sacramentaires romains (vol. i, Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xx, 1948; vol. ii, part 1, Bibliothèque Théologique de Laval, Quebec; 1952; vol. ii, part 2, Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xxv; 1958), with extensive bibl. C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au moyen âge (Biblioteca degli 'Studi Medievali', i [1966]), pp. 43–97. K. Gamber (ed.), Sakramentartypen. Versuch einer Gruppierung der Handschriften und Fragmente bis zur Jahrtausendwende (Texte und Arbeiten, 1. Abteilung, Heft xlix/1; 1958); id., Codices Liturgici Latini Antiquiores (Spicilegii Friburgensis Subsidia, i; Freiburg, Switzerland, 1963) [both books are useful but inaccurate]. V. Leroquais, Les Sacramentaires et les missels manuscrits des bibliothèques publiques de France (1924; with plates). M. Andrieu, 'Quelques remarques sur le classement des sacramentaires' in J.L.W., xi (1931), pp. 46–66. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 242–85, s.v. 'Sacramentaires'; A. Bugnini in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1558–69, s.v. 'Sacramentario'; H. Ashworth, O.S.B., in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 792–800, s.v. See also bibl. to Missal and to Ordines Romani.

SACRED COLLEGE. The corporation of the *cardinals in the RC Church which since c. 1150 has been known as a 'Collegium'. Its members, limited to 70 until 1958 when an upper limit was abolished, are divided into three orders, bishops, priests and deacons, under a Dean and a Sub-dean elected by the 6 *suburbicarian cardinal bishops from among their number. Since 1962, all cardinals who are not already bishops are given episcopal consecration on being nominated. The chief duties of the College are to elect the Pope and act as his privy council, but a cardinal loses his right to participate in the electoral conclave when he reaches the age of 80.

SACRED HEART. Devotion to the physical heart of Jesus, though theologically defined and officially practised only since the 18th cent., can be traced back to the Middle Ages. It seems to have sprung from the cult of the Wound in the Side. It is to be met with in two treatises of St. *Bonaventure, 'Vitis mystica' (formerly attributed to St. *Bernard) and 'De ligno vitae'. Extracts from the latter are incorporated in the present Office of the Feast, and the devotion appears richly developed in the visions of St. *Mechtilde (d. 1298) and St. *Gertrude (d. c. 1303). But the devotion was long confined to a relatively small number of mystics and saints, e.g. *Julian of Norwich and St. *Frances of Rome. A new departure was made in the 16th cent., when the devotion extended from the visions of the mystics to the regular practice of many given to the ascetic life, and it was fostered esp. by the *Carthusians. A little later the *Jesuits became its most ardent advocates in France and St. *Francis of Sales imbued with it his *Visitandines, and these two orders worked together to obtain for the Sacred Heart a place in the official as well as the popular life of the Church. The first to provide an elaborate theological and liturgical foundation for both devotion and feast, however, was St. John *Eudes (q.v.). But his efforts remained without much response until the famous visions (1673–1675) of the Visitandine nun, St. *Margaret Mary Alacoque, which gave a definite shape to the object of the devotion and its practices. Its most prominent feature was reparation for the outrages committed against the Divine Love, esp. in the Blessed Sacrament. From that time it became one of the most popular RC devotions, though its liturgical observance was not permitted until 1765, when *Clement XIII authorized the Mass and Office of the Feast. It is observed on the Friday in the week after *Corpus Christi. In 1856 *Pius IX extended the Feast to the universal Church; in 1889 *Leo XIII raised it to a *Double of the First Class, and ten years later solemnly consecrated all mankind to the Sacred Heart. The Mass and Office of the feast were revised by *Pius XI in 1928 when it received a privileged octave. The octave was dropped in 1960. In the 1969 Roman calendar the observance is now classed as a '*solemnity'.

J. Croiset, La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de N.S. Jésus-Christ (Lyons, 1691; 3rd and definitive ed., 1694; Eng. tr. from Italian, London, 1863; modern Eng. tr. from 1694 ed., Dublin and London, 1949); J. de Gallifet, S.J., De Cultu Sacrosancti Cordis Dei et Domini Nostri Jesu Christi (Rome, 1726; Fr. tr., 1732). J. B. Terrien, S.J., La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de Jésus d'après les documents authentiques et la théologie (1893). J. V. Bainvel, La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de Jésus (1906; Eng. tr., 1924). D. Chastelain, De Cultu Eucharistici Cordis Jesu. Historia—Doctrina—Documenta

(Paris, 1928). Useful material in the Encyclical of Pius XI revising the Mass and Office (8 May 1928), pr. in A.A.S., xx (1928), pp. 165–78. K. *Rahner, S.J., '"Siehe dieses Herz!" Prolegomena zu einer Theologie der Herz-Jesu-Verehrung' in Schriften zur Theologie, iii (1956), pp. 379–90; id., 'Einige Thesen zur Theologie der Herz-Jesu-Verehrung', ib., pp. 391–415; Eng. tr. of both articles in Theological Investigations, iii (1967), pp. 321–52. J. Bainvel in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 163–167, s.v. 'Heart of Jesus. Devotion to the'; id. in D.T.C., iii (1908), cols. 271–351, s.v. 'Cœur Sacré de Jésus (Dévotion au)', with bibl.; L. Penzo in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1059–64, s.v. 'Cuore di Gesù', with bibl.

SACRED HEART OF MARY. Devotion to the heart of the BVM was first seriously fostered in the 17th cent. by St. John *Eudes (q.v.), who linked it closely with the cult of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. In 1805 *Pius VII allowed the observance of a feast of the Pure Heart of Mary; in 1855 a proper Mass, based on texts proposed by Eudes, was authorized for use in some places, and an Office followed in 1857. Words attributed to the BVM at *Fatima popularized the cult; in 1942 *Pius XII consecrated the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary and in 1944 he made universal a corresponding feast to be observed on 22 Aug., the *Octave day of the *Assumption. In the 1969 RC calendar this observance became an optional '*memoria'.

Pius XII's Oratio consecrating the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary is pr. in A.A.S., xxxiv (1942), p. 345 f.; the new Office and Mass provided for the feast in Aug. 1944 are pr. ib., xxxvii (1945), pp. 44–52. G. de Becker, SS.CC., Les Sacrés Cœurs de Jésus et de Marie (Études Picpuciennes, v; 1959), pp. 239–437, with bibl. pp. 243–5. J. Arragain, 'La Dévotion au Cœur de Marie' in H. du Manoir, S.J. (ed.), Maria, v (Paris, 1958), pp. 1007–48. See also works of St. John Eudes.

SACRIFICE. Sacrifice is fundamentally the offering to the Deity of a gift, esp. a living creature. It is a widespread feature of religion, incl. that of the Hebrews. Early in the OT there is the record of the sacrifice of Cain and *Abel (Gen. 4. 3–5), while the demand for the sacrifice of *Isaac (Gen. 22) underlies the need for the offering to be a costly one and may be taken to suggest that human sacrifice was not excluded (cf. Jephthah's daughter, Jgs. 11. 32–40; also Ex. 22. 29 and Mic. 6. 7). From the earliest times also sacrifice was particularly associated with the making of covenants; the most important of these were God's covenants with *Noah after the Flood (Gen. 8. 20 – 9. 17), with *Abraham (Gen. 15), and with Israel at *Sinai (Ex. 24. 4–8). After the settlement in Canaan sacrificial observances became increasingly elaborate and they provoked considerable criticism from some of the 8th–7th cent. Prophets (e.g. Amos 5. 21–5, Hos. 6. 6 and Jer. 7. 21–3). At the end of the 7th cent. King Josiah (640–608 B.C.) prohibited sacrifices except at the *Temple in Jerusalem, and when the city was destroyed at the Exile (586) the regular round of official sacrifices temporarily ceased. After the Exile, when the Temple was rebuilt, an even more elaborate system of sacrifices was devised; it is described in detail in the final form of the *Pentateuch, and esp. in Leviticus. Apart from a brief interruption by *Antiochus Epiphanes (168), this sacrificial system was practised in the restored Temple until its destruction in A.D. 70. Throughout the historical period, the chief annual sacrifice was that of the *Paschal Lamb sacrificed for each household at the Passover, which commemorated the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt (Ex. 12. 1–28).

In the NT Christ apears to have tolerated the current practice of sacrifice (cf. Matt. 5. 23 f., 8. 4); but He quoted with approval the teaching of Hosea subordinating 'sacrifice' to 'mercy' (Matt. 9. 13, 12. 7: cf. Hos. 6. 6). At the Institution of the *Eucharist, which took place in the sacrificial context of the Passover (whether on 14 Nisan or 15 Nisan) and with reference to the covenant-sacrifice of Exod. 24. 4–8, He pointed to the sacrificial quality of His death (cf. Mk. 10. 45), speaking of the shedding of His blood in a New Covenant. Both St. *John the Baptist (Jn. 1. 29) and the Evangelist (Jn. 19. 14 and 36) appear to imply that Christ, as the 'Lamb of God', is Himself a Sacrificial Victim, a doctrine endorsed by St. *Paul in 1 Cor. 5. 7, and made more explicit in Eph. 5. 2 (cf. also 1 Pet. 1. 19), while Rev. 13. 8 emphasizes the eternal nature of the Lord's Sacrifice. The author of *Hebrews (q.v.) stresses the High Priesthood of Christ, who by His perfect obedience in the voluntary offering of Himself (9. 26, cf. 10. 5 ff.) made 'one sacrifice for sins for ever' (10. 12), in contrast to the deficiencies of the OT sacrifices, and he compares the Lord's Passion to the sin-offering (13. 11 f.).

The implications of these Biblical ideas are developed by the Fathers, who stress esp. the uniqueness of Christ's sacrifice in that He was (1) a voluntary victim, (2) a victim of infinite value, and (3) also Himself the Priest. See also Atonement.

The chief development of the Patristic and Medieval period was in regard to the *Eucharist (q.v.). From early times the Eucharistic Offering was called a sacrifice in virtue of its immediate relation to the Sacrifice of Christ (e.g. by *Serapion of Thmuis). While it can also be said that in the Eucharist Christ is sacrificed 'again', yet St. *Thomas Aquinas insisted that the Mass was itself an 'immolation' only in so far as it was an 'image' of the Passion which was the 'real immolation' (S.T. III. lxxxiii. l). In rejecting the doctrine of 'the sacrifices of Masses' the Anglican Article XXXI is perhaps more concerned to deny the idea, current in the Middle Ages, of the repeated 'immolation' of Christ than to repudiate belief in the Eucharistic Sacrifice altogether. See also Eucharist.

In accordance with such passages as Ps. 40. 6–8 and Rom. 12. 1, Christian theology has commonly asserted that the individual's conscious obedience, active or passive, to the will of God may be a form of sacrifice which can be offered to God the Father in imitation of, and in union with, the Sacrifice of Christ.

E. O. James, Origins of Sacrifice (1933). W. R. *Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (1889), pp. 196–419; ed. 3 by S. A. *Cook (1927), pp. 213–440, with full notes; S. C. Gayford, Sacrifice and Priesthood (1924); G. B. *Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament (posthumous, 1925); W. O. E. Oesterley, Sacrifices in Ancient Israel (1937); R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Sacrifices de l'Ancien Testament (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, i; 1964; Eng. tr., Cardiff, 1964). J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., Le Sacrifice de la nouvelle alliance (1962). L. Sabourin, S.J., 'A Bibliography of Sacrifice in the Bible and the Ancient Near East' in S. Lyonnet, S.J.–L. Sabourin, Sin, Redemption, and Sacrifice. A Biblical and Patristic Study (Analecta Biblica, xlviii; 1970), pp. 299–333, incl. a section on the Eucharistic Sacrifice. A. Gaudel in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 662–92, s.v., with bibl.

SACRILEGE. Strictly a violation or contemptuous treatment of a person, thing, or place, publicly dedicated to the worship of God. Moral theologians hold that it may be either personal, i.e. directed against a person in holy orders or a religious (e.g. ill-treatment or sins against chastity), or real, i.e. committed against a thing, esp. the Sacraments (e.g. treating irreverently the Blessed Sacrament or administering or receiving the sacraments in a state of mortal sin), or local, i.e. committed in a holy place (e.g. homicide in a church). Sacrilege is held to be a grave sin in itself, though venial if the matter is trivial. It is dealt with in the various parts of canon law treating of sacred persons and things. In everyday language the term is used more vaguely, though in a sense similar to that of moral theology.

The subject is regularly treated in works on moral theology. N. Iung in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 692–703, s.v. 'Sacrilège'.

SACRING BELL. A bell, also known as a 'Sanctus bell', rung at Mass to focus the people's attention. The use of a bell, esp. at the *Elevation of the Elements, dates from the 12th cent. The *Ritus Servandus required the bell to be rung at the *Sanctus and at the Elevation, and it became customary to ring it at certain other moments as well. Where bells are used at all, they are now usually rung at the Elevation and before the communion of the celebrant.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Bells of the Mass' in The Month, cxxiii (1914), pp. 389–401. Braun, C.A., pp. 573–80. P. Browe, S.J., 'Die Elevation in der Messe' in J.L.W., ix (1929), esp. pp. 37–40, with reff. Jungmann, M.S., ii (ed. 1958), p. 261 f.; Eng. tr., ii (ed. 1955), p. 131, with reff.

SACRISTAN. The term is used either (1) for a *sexton or (2), more commonly, for the sacrist or official who has charge of the contents of a church, esp. those used in Divine worship such as sacred vessels, vestments, &c. He may be in holy orders, as is usual in a cathedral, or a layman.

SACRISTY (Lat. sacristia, sacrarium, or secretarium; Gk. διακονικόν). A room annexed to a church or chapel for keeping the sacred vessels and for the vesting of priests and other clerics. Sacristies were introduced c. 400 in Syria as annexes to the apse; in the Middle Ages they came to be built behind or on either side of the high altar. In large conventual churches and cathedrals they often consist of a suite of separate rooms for the higher and the lower clergy and for lay servers. They are furnished with chests, cupboards, and a table for vestments, liturgical books, and vessels, a basin for the washing of hands, a prie-dieu, and a crucifix. In early times the sacristy was often used for the permanent reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, and it is commonly still so used for the purpose when the Blessed Sacrament is removed from the church between Good Friday and the Paschal Vigil Service. In current Anglican usage, the room where the clergy vest is often known as the (priests') vestry, the term sacristy tending to be restricted to vestries in churches with an elaborate ceremonial, where a larger number of liturgical objects need to be stored.

SADDUCEES. A Jewish politico-religious sect, opposed to the '*Pharisees'. The name is probably derived from the high priest Zadok (2 Sam. 8. 17). The party originated at the time of the *Hasmonaeans and stood for the interests of the priestly aristocracy and the rich. Though never popular, they exercised a great political influence from the reign of John Hyrcanus (135–104 B.C.) onwards, and in the time of Christ they were of particular importance in Jerusalem and in the *Temple. Little can be recovered of their beliefs, but they rejected the oral tradition of interpretation as developed among the Pharisees and accepted the written Law only. Thus they rejected belief in retribution in an afterlife and in the resurrection of the body (Mt. 22. 23), and also the existence of angels and spirits (Acts 23. 8). In the NT they appear to have taken a leading part against Jesus, perhaps because they feared trouble with the Roman power, and in any case because they opposed His doctrines (Mt. 22. 23–33, &c.). They also repeatedly attacked the Apostles for teaching the Resurrection of Christ (Acts 4. 1–3; 5. 17; cf. 23. 6–10). After the fall of *Jerusalem they disappear from history.

For works dealing with the Pharisees and the Sadducees, together, see also bibl. to Pharisees. G. Hölscher, Der Sadduzäismus (1906); R. Leszynsky, Die Sadduzäer (1912); J. Le Moyne, O.S.B., Les Sadducées (Études Bibliques, 1972). P. Z. Lauterbach, 'The Sadducees and Pharisees. A Study of their Respective Attitudes towards the Law' in Studies in Jewish Literature issued in Honor of Prof. Kaufman Kohler (Berlin, 1913), pp. 176–98; G. H. Box, 'Who were the Sadducees?' in The Expositor, Ser. 8, xv (1918), pp. 19–38; id., 'Scribes and Sadducees in the New Testament', ib., pp. 401–11, and xvi (1918), pp. 55–69. J. W. Lightley, Jewish Sects and Parties in the Time of Jesus (1925), pp. 11–78 ('Pharisees and Sadducees'). T. W. Manson, 'Sadducee and Pharisee: the Original Significance of the Names' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxii (1938), pp. 144–59, esp. pp. 144–53. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, ii (ed. 4, 1907), pp. 475–89, with bibl. pp. 447–9. H. L. Strack–P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrash, iv (1928), pp. 339–52. K. Kohler in J.E., x (1905), pp. 630–3, s.v.; R. Meyer in T.W.B., vii (1960–4), pp. 35–54, s.v. Σαδδουκαῖος, with bibl.

SADHU, The. See Sundar Singh, Sadhu.

SADOLETO, JACOPO (1477–1547), cardinal. A classical and philosophical scholar and favourite of Card. O. Caraffa, he was appointed secretary to *Leo X in 1513, and in 1517 Bp. of Carpentras. A man of pure and blameless character and unselfish zeal, he soon became one of the most influential ecclesiastics of his time, one of his chief concerns being the reconciliation of the Protestants. In 1536 he was made cardinal by *Paul III together with R. *Pole, and in 1537 he became a member of the special commission for the reform of the Church and the preparation of a General Council. At the same time he endeavoured unsuccessfully to win back P. *Melanchthon (1537) and the city of Geneva (1539) to the Catholic faith. In 1542 as Papal legate he failed to effect a reconciliation between the French King Francis I and the Emp. *Charles V. During his last years he was among the most trusted advisers of Paul III, constantly advocating reform. Among his writings are the treatise De Peccato Originali and De Exstructione Ecclesiae Catholicae as well as a commentary on Romans, which was forbidden at Rome until its doctrine of grace, which was suspected of *Semi-Pelagianism, had been corrected in the *Augustinian sense.

Works [ed. D. Raustius] (Mainz, 1607), with life by A. Florebelli prefixed [no pagination]; also ed. in 4 vols., Verona, 1737–8. Eng. tr. of his De Pueris Recte Instituendis by E. T. Campagnac–K. Forbes (London, 1916) and of his letter to the city of Geneva, along with Calvin's reply, by J. C. Olin, A Reformation Debate (New York, 1966). Modern studies by A. Joly (Caen, 1856), G. von Schulthess-Rechberg (Zürich, 1909), S. Ritter, Un umanista teologo (Rome, 1912), and R. M. Douglas (Cambridge, Mass., 1959). J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, ii (1908), p. 115 f. F. Gagliuolo in E.C., x (1953), col. 1611 f., s.v.; R. M. Douglas in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 846, s.v.

SAHDONA (or, from the Gk., 'Martyrius'), 7th cent. spiritual writer. A native of Persia, he was educated at Nisibis and about 615/20 entered a *Nestorian monastery. About 635/40 he became Bp. of Mahoze. He was, however, expelled from the Nestorian Church because of his teaching on the Person of Christ and fled to *Edessa. It was very probably here that he wrote 'The Book of Perfection', one of the masterpieces of Syriac spiritual writing.

Œuvres spirituelles, ed., with Fr. tr., by A. de Halleux, O.F.M. (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, lxxxvi–lxxxvii, xc–xci, cxcxiii; 1960–65). S. P. Brock, 'A further fragment of the Sinai Sahdona Manuscript' in Muséon, lxxxi (1968), pp. 139–54. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), p. 146.

SAHIDIC. One of the principal dialects of Coptic (q.v.; see also Bohairic and Fayumic). Among older scholars it was known as 'Thebaic', from Thebes, the chief city of Upper (i.e. Southern) Egypt, where Sahidic was used early in the Christian era. The Scriptures were translated into Sahidic prob. as early as the 3rd or even the end of the 2nd cent. In recent times a large number of papyrus fragments have been discovered. Notable Biblical MSS. include *Bodmer Papyrus 23 (4th cent.), containing Is. 47.1 – 66.24, an almost complete Acts (also containing Deut. and Jonah; early 4th cent., British Museum Or. 7594), and a complete John (Library of the *British and Foreign Bible Society). The text of the NT in the Sahidic version has both '*Neutral' and '*Western' elements, though the extent of the Western elements is less considerable than used to be supposed.

The standard edition of the Sahidic NT is that of G. Horner (7 vols., Oxford, 1911–24). J. M. Plumley, An Introductory Coptic Grammar (Sahidic Dialect) (1948); G. Steindorff, Lehrbuch der koptischen Grammatik (Chicago, 1951); W. Till, Koptische Grammatik (saïdischer Dialekt) (Lehrbücher für das Studium der orientalischen Sprachen, i; Leipzig, 1955; ed. 3, 1966), with bibl.

ST. ALBANS. A church has existed at Verulam on the site of the reputed martyrdom of St. *Alban from at least the time of *Bede; and c. 794 King Offa endowed a monastery here in expiation of the murder of St. *Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, which soon became one of the most famous in the country. In 1077 Paul of Caen, the first Norman abbot, began to rebuild it. Its wealth continued to increase, esp. after *Hadrian IV gave it precedence over all other English monasteries and exempted it from episcopal jurisdiction. At the Reformation the church was bought from *Edward VI (1553) for use as a parish church. In 1877 a see of St. Albans was constituted, by taking Hertford and Essex from London and N. Woolwich from *Rochester to make the new diocese; and the abbey became the new cathedral church. In 1914 Essex and N. Woolwich were transferred to the new see of Chelmsford, while the county of Bedford was added as compensation to St. Albans. See also Matthew Paris.

Thomas Walsingham, Gesta Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani, ed. H. T. Riley (3 vols., R.S., 1867–9); fuller text of the St. Albans Chronicle, 1406–1420, ed. from Bodley MS. 462 by V. H. Galbraith (Oxford, 1937). John Amundesham, Annales Monasterii S. Albani, ed. H. T. Riley (2 vols., R.S., 1870–1). Chronica Monasterii S. Albani. Registra Quorundam Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, qui Saeculo XVmo floruere, ed. id. (2 vols., ib., 1872–3). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, ii (ed. 1819), pp. 178–255). P. Newcome, The History of the Ancient and Royal Foundation, called the Abbey of St. Alban . . . from the Foundation thereof in 793, to its Dissolution in 1539 (2 pts., bound in one, 1793–5). I. C. Buckler–C. A. Buckler, A History of the Architecture of the Abbey Church of St. Alban, with especial reference to the Norman Structure (1847). E. Beckett, St. Alban's Cathedral and its Restoration (1885). L. F. R. Williams, History of the Abbey of St. Alban (1917). J. Watkins, The Alban Gulde (1925; ed. 23, completely revised, 1969). Elsie Toms, The Story of St. Albans (1962). C. R. Peers–W. Page and others in V.C.H., Hertfordshire, ii, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 469–515. W. Levison, 'St. Alban and St. Albans' in Antiquity, xv (1941), pp. 337–59. The St. Albans Psalter, a richly illuminated 12th cent. MS. prob. written at St. Albans for Christina, anchoress of Markyate, ed. O. Pächt, C. R. Dodwell, and F. Wormald (Studies of the Warburg Institute, xxv; 1960). A. L. Poole–G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 530–2, s.v.

ST. ASAPH. The foundation of this diocese, now a see in the Anglican Province of *Wales, is prob. to be ascribed to St. *Kentigern (c. 560), after whose favourite disciple and successor, St. *Asaph (q.v.), the see took its name. Like the other Welsh sees, it was in origin a monastic settlement of the Celtic type. The present diocese comprises the whole of the county of Clwyd, about a quarter of Powys, and part of Gwynedd. The present cathedral is largely the work of Bp. Redman (c. 1480); the choir was rebuilt c. 1770; and the whole restored by G. G. *Scott (1869–75). Notable Bishops of St. Asaph include *Geoffrey of Monmouth (1152–1154), R. *Pecock (1444–50), I. Barrow, the elder (1670–80), W. Beveridge (1704–8), and S. *Horsley (1802–6).

'Summi Libri Rubei Asaphensis communiter dicti "Llyfr Coch Asaph", exscrpt. ex Originali 26º Octobris 1602' in Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica, ii (1835), pp. 255–79; 'Index to "Llyfr Coch Asaph" copied out of a MS. in the Bishop's Library at St. Asaph', ed. G. Roberts in Archaeologia Cambrensis, Third Series, xiv (1868), pp. 151–66, 329–40, with notes pp. 433–43. The Registers of the thirteen ancient parishes of the Diocese in the County of Shropshire, ed. W. P. W. Phillimore–W. G. D. Fletcher–D. R. Thomas (Shropshire Parish Register Society, 8 vols. bound in 11, 1899–1922). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of St. Asaph and the Edifices belonging to it (1720; enlarged ed. by E. Edwards, 2 vols., 1801). D. R. Thomas, Esgobaeth Llanelwy. A History of the Diocese of St. Asaph (1874). Id., St. Asaph (Diocesan Histories, 1888); P. B. I. Bax, The Cathedral Church of Saint Asaph (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1904). J. Fisher in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 532–5, s.v. See also works cited s.v. Wales, Christianity in.

SAINT-CYRAN, ABBÉ DE (1581–1643), Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, one of the authors of *Jansenism. A protégé of Justus Lipsius at the *Jesuit College at Louvain, and then a fellow-student at Paris (1604–10) and Bayonne (1611–17) with C. *Jansen, with whom he made a close friendship, he was attracted to St. *Augustine's writings, the theology of which he preferred to the prevailing scholasticism. In 1617 he settled for a time at Poitiers, where he was secretary to the Bishop, de la Rocheposay. In 1620 he was created commendatory Abbot of Saint-Cyran and thenceforward lived mainly in Paris, seeking out all the chief personalities of the time (*Vincent de Paul, J. J. *Olier, G. Tarisse, P. de *Bérulle). He made it his object to reform Catholicism on Augustinian lines, largely in the hope of defeating Protestantism with its own weapons. From 1623 he became closely associated with the influential *Arnauld family and with *Port-Royal, and from 1633 as spiritual counsellor of the convent exercised an immense religious influence. Between 1617 and 1635 he was the recipient of a long series of letters from Jansen (publd. at Louvain, 1654). His power led *Richelieu to consider him a dangerous character, and from 1638 until 1643 after Richelieu's death he was incarcerated in the donjon at Vincennes, where he wrote his Lettres chrétiennes et spirituelles (publd. 1645). He was held in great veneration by later Jansenists, who looked up to him as a martyr. His writings include Somme des fautes . . . du P. Garasse (1626), an attack on the Jesuits; Petrus Aurelius de Hierarchia Ecclesiastica (1631), a plea for the rights of the episcopate against the papacy, partly based on M. Antonio *de Dominis's De Republica Christiana; and Théologie familière (1642).

C. Lancelot, Mémoires touchant la vie de M. de S. Cyran (2 vols., Cologne, 1738). J. Lafferière, Étude sur Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran (Louvain, 1912). J. Orcibal, Les Origines du jansénisme (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xvi), ii and iii, Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran et son temps, iv, Lettres inédites de Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran, ed. Annie Barnes, and v, La Spiritualité de Saint-Cyran avec ses écrits de piété inédits (1947–62). J. Orcibal, Saint-Cyran et le Jansénisme [1961]. H. Lindau, 'Saint Cyran. Ein Beitrag zu seiner Charakteristik' in Z.K.G., xxxvi (1916), pp. 405–23. Bremond, iv, pp. 36–175. C. Constantin, in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1967–75, s.v. 'Du Vergier', with reff. to sources; J. Orcibal in D.H.G.E., xiv (1960), cols. 1216–41, s.v. 'Duvergier de Hauranne (Jean Ambroise)'. See also bibl. to Jansenism and Port-Royal.

ST. DAVIDS. Acc. to tradition a monastery was founded at Menevia by St. *David (6th cent.), the Patron of *Wales, which was thereafter called St. Davids. The early history is fragmentary and uncertain, but a succession of bishops followed. In 1115 Bernard the Norman was elected bishop and the see became suffragan to *Canterbury. The shrine of St. David became famous, and was visited by William I, Henry II, Edward I and his queen Eleanor; and, acc. to an inscription found on the shrine by Abp. *Peckham (1240–92), two pilgrimages to St. Davids were the equivalent of one to Rome. Today only the stone base of the shrine survives, but the reputed relics of St. David are preserved close by. The present beautiful cathedral was begun by Bp. Peter de Leia (1176–98). Among his successors were Henry Gower (1328–1347), the 'Menevian *Wykeham', who built the stone rood-screen and the fine episcopal palace (now in ruins); Henry *Chichele (1408–14), afterwards Abp. of Canterbury; W. *Barlow (1536–1548), the chief consecrator of Abp. M. *Parker (1559); and W. *Laud (1621–6). The official title of the Bishop of St. Davids is 'Episcopus Menevensis'.

The Episcopal Registers of the Diocese of St. David's, 1397 to 1518, ed., with Eng. tr., by R. F. Isaacson (Cymmrodorion Record Series No. vi, vols. i and ii, 1917; vol. iii, A Study of the Published Registers by R. A. Roberts, 1920). J. W. Willis-Bund (ed.), An Extent of all the Lands and Rents of the Lord Bishop of St. David's, made by Master David Fraunceys, Chancellor of St. David's . . . in the Year of Our Lord 1326. Usually called the Black Book of St. David's (ib., No. v; 1902). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272, i (Historical Society of the Church in Wales, i; 1946), pp. 233–413. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of St. David's, and the Edifices belonging to it as they stood in the Year 1715 (1717). G. W. Manby, The History and Antiquities of the Parish of Saint David, South Wales . . . to which is annexed a correct List of the Archbishops, Bishops, etc., who have filled the See (1801). W. B. Jones–E. A. Freeman, The History and Antiquities of Saint David's (1856). P. A. Robson, The Cathedral Church of Saint David's (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1907). F. Morgan in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 535–9, s.v.

ST.-DENIS. The *Benedictine abbey at St.-Denis, four miles north of *Paris, which was founded c. 625 and contained the reputed shrine of St. Denis (see Dionysius, St. [3]), was for centuries the richest and most important in France. As it became the regular burying-place of the kings of France and other French princes and nobles, it long enjoyed royal favour, and over the high altar was suspended the 'Oriflamme' of the kings of France (originally the banner of the abbey). Here St. *Joan of Arc hung up her arms in 1429, and *Henry IV renounced his Protestantism in 1593. Early in the 17th cent. it was constituted the chief abbey of an independent Benedictine congregation, but in 1633 it was attached to the *Maurists. The abbey (which had been reduced to the rank of a priory in 1691 by Louis XIV) was dissolved and sacked at the Revolution (1792–3), but the buildings were restored under Napoleon III, and are now a 'national monument'.

The best ed. of the book of Abbot *Suger (q.v.), Sugerii Abbatis Sancti Dionysii Liber, is that, with Eng. tr. and introd., by E. Panofsky (Princeton, 1946). J. Doublet, O.S.B., Histoire de l'abbaye de S.-Denys en France (1625); M. Félibien, O.S.B., Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Denys en France (1706). [P.] de Guilhermy, Monographie de l'église royale de Saint-Denis. Tombeaux et figures historiques (1848). W. M. Conway, 'The Abbey of Saint-Denis and its ancient Treasures' in Archaeologia, lxvi (1915), pp. 103–58. S. McK. Crosby, The Abbey of St.-Denis, 475–1122, i (Yale Historical Publications, History of Art, 3; New Haven, Conn., 1942); id., L'Abbaye royale de Saint-Denis (1953), with 130 photographs by P. Devinoy. J. Formigé, L'Abbaye royale de Saint-Denis. Recherches nouvelles (1960).

ST. GALL. See Gall, St.

ST.-GERMAIN-DES-PRÉS. An abbey in Paris on the south bank of the Seine. It was founded in the 6th cent. and originally dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. *Vincent, but later it assumed the name of its benefactor, St. *Germanus of Paris, who was buried in its church. In the 17th cent. it gained great celebrity when it adopted the *Maurist reform and became the headquarters of such scholars as J. *Mabillon and B. de *Montfaucon. Most of the abbey was destroyed by fire during the French Revolution, but its fine collection of MSS. was saved, and mostly passed in 1795–6 to the Bibliothèque Nationale.

J. Bouillart, O.S.B., Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Germain-des-Prez (1724). J. B. Vanel (ed.), Nécrologe des religieux de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur décédés à l'Abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés (1896). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1102–50, s.v. 'Germain-des-Prés (Saint-)', with reff. L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 2710 f. See also bibl. to Maurists.

ST.-MAUR, Congregation of. See Maurists.

ST.-OMER. The *Jesuit college of St.-Omer in Artois was founded by R. *Parsons c. 1592 for the education of the English RC laity and, in the first ten years of its existence, numbered already over a hundred pupils. After a fire in 1684 it was rebuilt on a large scale. When, in 1762, the Parliament of Paris ordered the expulsion of the Jesuits and the Society transferred their school to Bruges, the buildings at St.-Omer were used for the preparatory school of the English clergy at *Douai until they removed to England in 1795. The house at St.-Omer was afterwards sold to the French Government and used for secular purposes.

Hubert Chadwick, S.J., St. Omers to Stonyhurst (1962), pp. 1–311.

ST. PATRICK'S PURGATORY. A place of pilgrimage on Station Island, in Lough Derg in Donegal. Acc. to tradition, St. *Patrick saw here a vision which promised all who should visit the sanctuary in penitence and faith a plenary indulgence for their sins and, if their confidence did not fail, a sight of the torments of the damned and the joys of the redeemed. The place has been a place of pilgrimage from far and wide at least since the early 13th century.

Various MSS. containing the legend in different forms have been edited, mainly in specialized periodicals; details are given in a collection of the legends, tr. into Eng. by S. Leslie, Saint Patrick's Purgatory. A Record from History and Literature (1932), with bibl., pp. 195–215. T. Wright, St. Patrick's Purgatory (1844). P. de Félice, L'Autre Monde. Mythes et légendes. Le Purgatoire de saint Patrice (Montauban thesis; Paris, 1906), pp. 3–92. F. W. Locke, 'A New Date for the Composition of the Tractatus de Purgatorio Sancti Patricii' in Speculum, xl (1965), pp. 641–6. The legend is also discussed in J. Healy, Abp. of Tuam, The Life and Writings of Saint Patrick (Dublin, 1905), pp. 656–67, and other works on St. Patrick, and Purgatory (qq.v.). W. H. Grattan-Flood in C.E., xii (1911), p. 580, s.v. 'Purgatory, Saint Patrick's'.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, London. A church was built c. 607 by *Ethelbert, King of Kent, as a cathedral for St. *Mellitus, first Bp. of London. This was rebuilt in stone between 675 and 685 by St. *Erconwald, whose shrine attracted pilgrims throughout the Middle Ages. The Saxon building, the scene of many of the early synods of the English, was burnt in a great fire which destroyed much of London in 1087. The new Norman cathedral was begun in the same year and completed in 1332. The largest building in England, it was 690 ft. long and covered an area of 3½ acres. The spire, 498 ft. high, was completed in 1315. The Bishop's Palace adjoined the NW. corner of the Nave. In the NE. part of the Close stood 'St. Paul's Cross', originally a rallying-place for Folkmoots, but from the mid-13th cent. until 1633 the national centre for religious and political proclamations, sermons and disputations. It was destroyed in 1643. During W. *Laud's episcopate (1628–33) a restoration of St. Paul's was begun with Inigo *Jones as architect, but this ceased under the Commonwealth, when the Nave became a cavalry barrack and the Lady Chapel a preaching-house. The old building, already ruinous, perished in the Great Fire of 1666.

The present Cathedral, designed by Sir Christopher *Wren, combines with much success the classical style and a traditionally gothic ground-plan. Rebuilding began in 1675, the choir was opened for service in 1697, and the whole was completed by 1710. The restrained Baroque of the interior was enriched considerably by the woodwork of Grinling Gibbons (1648–1720) and the iron-work of Jean Tijou (fl. 1690–1711). Later generations have removed Wren's fine organ-screen and filled the vaulting and saucer-domes of the E. end with mosaics. Since 1906 the SW. chapel, formerly the *Consistory Court, has been the religious centre of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George. The chapel of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire is in the crypt. Also in the crypt are the tombs of Lord Nelson and the Duke of Wellington and of Wren, with its famous inscription Lector si monumentum requiris circumspice. Because of its position St. Paul's is frequently the scene of great national services. Very many buildings in the surrounding area were destroyed by bombing in 1940, but St. Paul's escaped serious damage. Notable Deans include J. *Colet, A. *Nowell, J. *Overall, J. *Donne, W. *Sancroft, E. *Stillingfleet, J. *Tillotson, H. H. *Milman, H. L. *Mansel, R. W. *Church, R. *Gregory and W. R. *Inge. Among the residentiary canons Sydney Smith (1771–1845) and H. P. *Liddon are outstanding.

W. *Dugdale, The History of St. Paul's Cathedral in London from its Foundation Untill these Times (1658). W. Sparrow Simpson (ed.), 'The Charter and Statutes of the College of the Minor Canons in S. Paul's Cathedral, London', in Archaeologia, xliii (1871), pp. 165–200; id. (ed.), Registrum Statutorum et Consuetudinum Ecclesiae Sancti Pauli Londinensis (London, 1873); id. (ed.), Documents Illustrating the History of S. Paul's Cathedral (Camden Society, New Series, xxvi; 1880); Marion Gibbs (ed.), Early Charters of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London (ib., Third Series, lviii; 1939). H. H. Milman, Annals of S. Paul's Cathedral (1868); W. Longman, A History of the Three Cathedrals Dedicated to St. Paul in London (1873); W. Sparrow Simpson, Chapters in the History of Old S. Paul's (1881); id., S. Paul's Cathedral and City Life. Illustrations of Civil and Cathedral Life from the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries (1894); W. M. Sinclair, Memorials of St. Paul's Cathedral (1909). W. R. Matthews–W. M. Atkins (edd.), A History of St. Paul's Cathedral and the Men associated with it (1957). G. L. Prestige, St. Paul's in its Glory. A Candid History of the Cathedral 1831–1911 (1955); Jane Lang, Rebuilding St. Paul's after the Great Fire of London (1956). A. Dimock, The Cathedral Church of Saint Paul (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1900); S. A. Warner, St. Paul's Cathedral (1926). On the clergy, and others, connected with St. Paul's, G. Bolton, The Dome of Devotion [1938].

ST. PAUL'S OUTSIDE THE WALLS, Rome (San Paolo fuori le Mura). The church, one of the four 'Major *Basilicas', lies on the W. side of the *Ostian Way about 1½ miles beyond the Porta S. Paolo. The original edifice, erected by *Constantine over the relics of St. *Paul (324), was rebuilt as a large basilica in the late 4th cent. (completed by the Emp. Honorius, 395); this latter suffered little change until it was destroyed by fire on 15 July 1823, with only the triumphal arch and its mosaics surviving. The present building, which conforms closely to the plan of the earlier basilica, was consecrated on 10 Dec. 1854, two days after the Definition of the *Immaculate Conception. Until the Reformation the Kings of England were honorary members of the Chapter and the Abbot of the monastery a Prelate of the Order of the Garter (hence the insignia of the Garter incorporated in the arms of the church). The basilica has long been served by *Benedictines.

N. M. Nicolai, Della basilica di S. Paolo (1815). I. Schuster, La basilica e il monasterio di S. Paolo fuori le Mura. Note storiche (1934). J. P. Kirsch, 'Der Ort des Martyriums des hl. Paulus' in R.Q., ii (1888), pp. 233–47. S. Pesarini, 'La basilica di S. Paolo sulla Via Ostiense prima delle innovazioni del sec. XVI' in Studi romani, i (1913), pp. 386–427. L. de Bruyne, L'antica serie di ritratti papali della basilica di S. Paolo fuori le Mura (Studi di Antichità cristiana, vii; 1934). U. Benigni in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 369 f., s.v.; E. Josi in E.C., ix (1952), col. 719 f., s.v. 'Paolo, Apostolo. VI. Archeologia'. See also works cited under Rome, Churches of.

ST. PETER'S, Rome. The present 16th cent. building replaced a much older basilican structure, erected by *Constantine (d. 337) on the supposed site of St. *Peter's crucifixion. After it had fallen into serious disrepair by the later Middle Ages, *Nicholas V (1447–55) planned to replace it by a new church in the form of a Latin cross, selecting Bernardo Rosselino (1409–64), the restorer of the church of St. *Francis at *Assisi, as architect. Little had been done when the work was suspended on Nicholas's death. It was resumed under *Julius II (1503–13), who laid the first stone on 18 April 1506, and continued by a succession of architects—Bramante (d. 1514), *Raphael (d. 1520), Peruzzi (d. 1536), Sangallo (d. 1546)—all in turn making drastic changes in the design. The dome followed closely a design of *Michelangelo (d. 1564). By a radical change in plan the nave was lengthened under *Sixtus V to accommodate a vast congregation; the effect of this extension was to spoil the view of the dome from the Piazza. The building was finished in 1614 and consecrated by *Urban VIII on 18 Nov. 1626. Since 1940 extensive excavations have been made under the basilica, and it is claimed that the remains of a shrine dating from the early 3rd cent., if not earlier, have been recovered.

St. Peter's, which is the largest church in Christendom (length, 619 ft.; *St. Paul's Cathedral, London, c. 517 ft.), contains the remains of over 130 Popes. The traditional burial-place of St. Peter is the confessio under the high altar. The baldachino over the high altar, supported on four massive spiral columns of bronze, is the work of G. L. Bernini (1598–1680). Around the base of the dome are inscribed the words Tu es Petrus . . . cælorum (from Mt. 16. 18 f.). See also Vatican.

The literature is dispersed in accordance with the various interests (historical, archaeological, architectural, liturgical, &c.) involved. A. Valentini, La patriarcale basilica vaticana (2 vols., 1845–55); F. M. Mignanti, Istoria della sacrosanta patriarcale basilica vaticana (2 vols., 1867); P. M. Letarouilly, Le Vatican et la basilique de Saint-Pierre de Rome (2 vols., 1882). D. A. Mortier, O.P., Saint-Pierre de Rome. Histoire de la basilique vaticane et du culte du tombeau de saint Pierre (Tours, 1900). H. Chéramy, Saint-Pierre de Rome. De la tombe apostolique à la basilique moderne (1933). [S.] Schüller-Piroli, 2000 Jahre Sankt Peter. Die Weltkirche von den Anfängen bis zur Gegenwart (Olten, 1950). C. G. Paluzzi, San Pietro in Vaticano (Le Chiese di Roma illustrate, lxxiv–lxxvii; 1963). J. Lees-Milne, Saint Peter's. The Story of Saint Peter's Basilica in Rome (1967). The official report of the recent excavations was issued under the title Esplorazioni sotto la confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano eseguite negli anni 1940–1949: relazioni a cura di B. M. Apolloni Ghetti–A. Ferrua, S.J.–E. Josi–E. Kirschbaum, S.J. (2 vols., 1951). Jocelyn Toynbee–J. W. Perkins, The Shrine of St. Peter and the Vatican Excavations (1956). J. Carcopino, Études d'histoire chrétienne. Le Christianisme secret du Carré magique. Les Fouilles de Saint-Pierre et la tradition ([1953]; ed. 2: Études d'histoire chrétienne. Les Fouilles de Saint-Pierre et la tradition [1963]); id., Études d'histoire chrétienne, ii. Les Reliques de saint Pierre à Rome [1965]. T. Klauser, Die römische Petrustradition im Lichte der neuen Ausgrabungen unter der Peterskirche (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen. Geisteswissenschaften, xxiv [1956]). E. Kirschbaum, S.J., Die Gräber der Apostelfürsten (Frankfurt a.M. [1957]; Eng. tr., 1959). Margherita Guarducci, I graffiti sotto la Confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano (3 vols., 1958); id., La tomba di Pietro. Notizie antiche e nuove scoperte (1959; Eng. tr. [1960]); id., Le reliquie di Pietro sotto la Confessione della Basilica Vaticana (1965) [the conclusions of this author are largely contested]. D. W. O'Connor, Peter in Rome. The Literary, Liturgical and Archeological Evidence (New York–London, 1969). A. A. de Marco, O.F.M., The Tomb of Saint Peter. A representative and annotated bibliography of the excavations (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, viii; 1964). H. I. Marrou in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 3290–334, s.v. 'Vatican (Fouilles du)', with reff.; E. Josi in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1053–97, s.v. 'Vaticano. III: Zona archeologica e basilica', with further bibl. See also bibl. to Rome, Churches of.

SAINT-SIMON, CLAUDE HENRI DE ROUVROY (1760–1825), one of the earliest exponents of French socialism. He was a native of Paris and came from a noble family. His education was directed by J. Le R. *d'Alembert. After fighting on the side of the Americans in the War of Independence, he led a life of adventure in Holland, Spain and other European countries. In the French Revolution of 1789 he abandoned his titles and changed his name. During the following years he took part in successful financial enterprises, which were to help him to his ideal of service to humanity, but some of his plans having failed, he was reduced to great poverty. From 1797 his interest in science and the reorganization of society rapidly increased, and he worked out the ideas which he later embodied esp. in L'Industrie (1817), L'Organisateur (1819; a periodical), Du système industriel (1821), and Catéchisme des industriels (1823–4). In these works he developed and expounded his thesis that only the industrial classes work for the moral and physical welfare of mankind and that they should be preferred to those who have hitherto been privileged. In the last years of his life his thought turned into more religious channels and was expressed in the Nouveau Christianisme (1825). The one Divine principle in Christianity is that men must behave as brothers towards each other, i.e. must organize society in the way that will be most advantageous to the majority. Religion, therefore, ought to provide a speedy amelioration of the lot of the poorest. A truly Christian priest will regard dogma and cult as negligible accessories and give his chief attention to morals and social betterment.

This teaching, which won little following in Saint-Simon's lifetime, was later propagated by his disciples, esp. O. Rodrigues, S. A. Bazard, and B. P. Enfantin. In the two collective volumes, Exposition de la doctrine de Saint-Simon (1829 and 1830), Bazard and Enfantin sought to substitute for the traditional structure of society a religious system of social solidarity with the object of the progressive disappearance of the leisured classes and the abolition of all privileges, including interest and inheritance. This Saint-Simonian tendency to generalize and unify everything eventually led his disciples, esp. Enfantin, to a pantheism that divinized the universe and the carnal instincts of man and resulted in a semi-religious sect given to immorality. In 1832 Enfantin was imprisoned; but the ideas of his master exercised a great influence not only in France but also in other Continental countries and in England.

Saint-Simon was one of the first representatives of *positivist science, industrialism, and socialism as well as the apostle of a new humanitarian lay religion, whose suggestions were destined to have a great future in the 19th and early 20th cents. For a time A. *Comte, the Positivist leader, was under his influence.

Works in Œuvres de Saint-Simon et d'Enfantin publiées par les membres du conseil institué par Enfantin (47 vols., Paris, 1865–78), vols. xv, xviii–xxiii, xxxvii–xlv, and xlvii, with Notice Historique in vol. i, pp. 1–133. Selected Writings ed., with Eng. tr., by F. M. H. Markham (Oxford, 1952). A. J. Booth, Saint-Simon and Saint-Simonism. A Chapter in the History of Socialism in France (1871); P. A. Janet, Saint-Simon et le saint-simonisme (Bibliothèque de Philosophie contemporaine, 1876); [J.] G. Weill, Saint-Simon et son œuvre (1894); S. Charléty, Essai sur l'histoire du saint-simonisme (Paris thesis, 1896; revised ed., 1931); M. Leroy, La Vie véritable du Comte Henri de Saint-Simon (1925); E. Durkheim, Le Socialisme, ed. M. Mauss (1928; Eng. tr. as Socialism and Saint-Simon, Yellow Springs, 1958; London, 1959); F. E. Manuel, The New World of Henri Saint-Simon (Cambridge, Mass., 1956). E. M. Butler, The Saint-Simonian Religion in Germany. A Study of the Young German Movement (1926). J. Tonneau in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 769–99, s.v. 'Saint-Simon et saint-simonisme'.

ST. SOPHIA. See Santa Sophia.

SAINT-SULPICE, Society of. The congregation of secular priests founded by J. J. *Olier in the parish of St.-Sulpice, *Paris, in 1642 with the aim of forming a zealous clergy, esp. suited to be directors of seminaries. The Society, which spread to Canada in 1657, was granted Papal approbation in 1664. Under its second Superior General, A. de Bretonvilliers (1657–76), it received its constitutions, which were further elaborated by his successor, L. Tronson (1676–1700), who also developed the Sulpician method of prayer and asceticism. Acc. to their rule, modelled on that of the French *Oratory and adapted to the double purpose of studies and spiritual formation, the members of the Society take no vows, keep their property, which they are expected to use in the spirit of poverty, and live in close community with their pupils, whose spiritual and other exercises they share.

St.-Sulpice soon gained a profound influence on the ecclesiastical life of France, to which it gave a great number of bishops. After a period of partial eclipse during the French Revolution, it was restored soon after the *Concordat of 1801 by its resolute Superior General J. A. Emery, who, in 1791, had opened a house in Baltimore. Though again hard hit by the anti-ecclesiastical legislation in France of 1903 and 1906, the Society still trains many of those destined for the French priesthood and has provinces in Canada and the U.S.A.

The theology of St.-Sulpice, which, until at least the 1930s, was considered solid and traditional, has been deeply imbued with *Thomism. Its spirituality followed the lines of the French School, professed by its founder, Olier, and laid down in the ascetical textbooks of Tronson. Past members of the Society include B. Joubert, who prepared new editions of the *Missal (1777) and the *Breviary (1778), F. Vigouroux, the author of La Bible et les découvertes modernes (1877) and editor of the Dictionnaire de la Bible (1895–1912), P. Pourrat, whose La Spiritualité chrétienne (1917) is a standard work on the history of spirituality, and M. Lepin, author of L'Idée du sacrifice de la messe (1926).

H. Joly, La Compagnie de Saint-Sulpice (1914); J. Montval, Les Sulpiciens (1934); J. Gautier, P.S.S., Ces Messieurs de Saint-Sulpice (Bibliothèque Ecclesia, xxxiii; 1957). C. G. Herbermann, The Sulpicians in the United States (New York, 1916). L. Bertrand, P.S.S., Bibliothèque sulpicienne, ou Histoire littéraire de la compagnie de Saint-Sulpice (3 vols., 1900). Bremond, iii, pp. 419–507. C. Hamel, Histoire de l'église de Saint-Sulpice (1900). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 586–92. F. Levesque, P.S.S., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 802–32, s.v.

ST.-VICTOR, Abbey of. See Victorines.

SAINTE-CHAPELLE, The, *Paris. The chapel built c. 1245 by St. *Louis IX to house the *Crown of Thorns and other relics of the Passion, and richly endowed by successive kings of France. It was desecrated in 1791, restored to religious use in 1837, and again secularized and dismantled in 1906. This masterpiece of Gothic architecture is the work of Pierre de Montereau, and though zealously restored in the 19th cent. by E. E. Viollet-le-Duc (1814–79), J. B. A. Lassus (1807–57), and others, still contains much beautiful medieval glass.

F. de Guilhery, La Sainte-Chapelle de Paris après les restaurations commencées par M. Duban . . . terminées par M. Lassus (1857). Id., Description de la Sainte-Chapelle (1867). C. Desmaze, La Sainte-Chapelle du Palais de Justice de Paris (1873); E. Pottet, La Sainte-Chapelle de Paris, 1246–1912 (1912). H. Stein, Le Palais de Justice et la Sainte-Chapelle de Paris (1912), pp. 191–239; F. Gebelin, La Sainte-Chapelle et la Conciergerie (Petites Monographies des Grands Édifices de la France, 1931), pp. 1–86; L. Grodecki, Sainte-Chapelle (Caisse Nationale des Monuments historiques [1964]). A. Vidier, 'Le Trésor de la Sainte-Chapelle. Inventaires' in Mémoires de la Société de l'Histoire de Paris et de l'Ile-de-France, xxxiv (1907), pp. 199–324, xxxv (1908), pp. 189–339. See also works cited s.v. Paris.

SAINTS, Devotion to the. The practice of venerating and invoking the saints has long been a regular element in Catholic devotion. Its justification rests on the beliefs that the saints are both close to God (because of their holiness) and accessible to man (whose nature they share), and in the efficacy of intercessory prayer.

A Jewish anticipation of the conception is found in 2 Macc., where *Judas Maccabaeus sees Onias and *Jeremiah in a dream 'with outstretched hands invoking blessings on the whole body of the Jews' (15. 12). In the NT the gift of special privileges for certain persons in the next world is held to be indicated in Christ's promises to the Apostles (Mt. 19. 28), while support for the idea that the dead may intercede on behalf of the living has been found in the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16. 19–31). Other NT references commonly invoked are the description of the saints of the Old Covenant as a 'cloud of witnesses' (Heb. 12. 1), which Christians are to imitate (13. 7), and the martyrs who pray before the throne of God (Rev. 6. 9 f.) and receive white robes (7. 14–17) as a reward of their martyrdom. But the principal theological basis of the practice is St. Paul's doctrine of the Mystical Body of Christ, in which all members have their particular office (Rom. 12. 4–8) as 'fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God' (Eph. 2. 19). It is the implications of this teaching about the Church rather than specific references to the subject that are commonly held by its advocates to constitute the Biblical foundation of devotion to the saints.

For the pre-Nicene period, literary evidence for the practice continues scanty, though the 'Odes of *Solomon' (2nd cent.) and the (largely *Gnostic) Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles attest a developing cult. The first incontrovertible documentary witness is the 'Martyrium *Polycarpi' (c. 156), where his followers express their intention of 'celebrating the birthday of his martyrdom' in days to come. The practice was furthered by the growing cultus of the relics of those who had suffered death for their faith. Besides the actual martyrs, those who had survived their sufferings ('confessores') were also paid special honours, and their power of intercession after death was asserted e.g. by St. *Cyprian. *Origen was apparently the first of the Fathers to give the cult of martyrs an express theological foundation. He placed it within the doctrine of the Communion of Saints and taught that the prayer of the saints is efficacious in so far as the faithful follow in their footsteps.

From the 4th cent. devotion to the saints spread rapidly. St. *Cyril of Jerusalem distinguished the saints commemorated at the Eucharistic Sacrifice who offer our prayer to God from the ordinary dead who would be benefited by the sacrifice. The same distinction is found in St. *Chrysostom, who exhorted his hearers to have confidence in the intercession of the martyrs. About the same time the ranks of those accounted saints were enlarged by the addition of 'confessors' and 'virgins', on the ground that a life of renunciation and holiness might equal the devotion of those who had actually died for Christ. Thus ascetics such as St. *Antony and bishops such as St. *Athanasius and St. Chrysostom were soon venerated in the E., and in the W. St. *Augustine was honoured as a saint at Carthage before 475. The abuses connected with the cultus met, however, with occasional opposition, e.g. from *Vigilantius (q.v.). Later theologians sought to rebut the charge of idolatry by a distinction between the worship of God, expressed in the Gk. word λατρεία, and the cult of honour and imitation due to the saints, expressed in the term δουλεία. Among later Fathers who contributed to the theology of the cultus were St. *Leo, St. *Gregory the Great, and St. *John of Damascus. St. Leo affirmed that the saints as our special intercessors obtain for us the mercy of God by their prayers; St. Gregory, who did much to further the cultus, exhorted the faithful in his 'Dialogues' to place themselves under the protection of the saints; and St. John of Damascus stressed the theocentric character of the cult.

Liturgical developments followed popular devotion and the current of Patristic teaching. The mention of saints in the Mass is already attested by St. Augustine (De Civ. Dei, XXII, 10). From the 5th cent. onwards *diptychs of martyrs and confessors found a place in the *Gallican, *Mozarabic, and *Celtic liturgies, and from the 6th cent. also in the *Roman Mass. From the 8th cent. the lives of the saints were read at *Mattins. In the beginning of the Middle Ages their cult was greatly extended through the conversion of the barbarians. The Irish monks, themselves influenced by the E., spread it to England, and thence to the Continent. From the 9th cent. saints' lives and edificatory sermons, often resting on very slender historical evidence, enjoyed increasing popularity and Councils frequently found it necessary to curb the excesses and superstitions of popular devotion. The fervour of even such preachers as St. *Peter Damian, St. *Anselm, and St. *Bernard needed some measure of correction from the great 13th cent. Scholastics.

The large amount of superstition surrounding the practice in the later Middle Ages had led the *Bogomils and *Waldensians to attack the practice, and at the Reformation it was fiercely repudiated, esp. by the *Zwinglians and *Calvinists, on the ground that it was not explicitly recommended in Scripture. In the *Thirty-Nine Articles (art. 22) of the C of E the 'Romish Doctrine' on the subject is designated 'a fond thing vainly invented'; but it is debated by modern Anglican theologians whether the Article forbids the invocation of saints altogether, or only condemns exaggerations in the RC Church. Under the influence of the *Oxford Movement the practice has been widely revived in the C of E in modern times, though the early Tractarians viewed the veneration of the saints with considerable misgivings.

In the RC Church the practice is everywhere upheld. The Council of *Trent, however, treated the subject with studied moderation, the bishops being merely asked to remind the faithful to address themselves to the saints to obtain their assistance in winning the favours of God and Christ. The post-Tridentine theologians carried on and developed the teaching of the Schoolmen. The modern cult of the saints in the RC Church is regulated by canon law (CIC, can. 1255–6; 1276–1278), which recommends the veneration of the saints and esp. of the BVM. The attitude of the E. Churches to the subject is closely akin to that of Rome. See also Beatification, Canonization.

On the history of the Cult of the Saints: I. C. Trombelli, De Cultu Sanctorum (2 vols., Bologna, 1740–3); E. Lucius–G. Anrich, Die Anfänge des Heiligenkults in der christlichen Kirche (1904; Protestant); H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Brussels, 1912; ed. 2, Subsidia Hagiographica, 20, 1933); id., Sanctus. Essai sur le culte des martyrs dans l'antiquité (Subsidia Hagiographica, 17, 1927). P. Dörfler, Die Anfänge der Heiligenverehrung nach den römischen Inschriften und Bildwerken (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchen-historischen Seminar München, IV. Reihe, ii; 1913). On the theological principles involved, D. *Stone, The Invocation of Saints. An Article reprinted, with slight Additions, from the Church Quarterly Review [for Jan. 1899] (1903); J. P. Kirsch, Die Lehre von der Gemeinschaft der Heiligen im christlichen Altertum (1900; Eng. tr. [1911]); H. F. Stewart, Doctrina Romanensium de Invocatione Sanctorum. Being a Brief Enquiry into the Principles that underlie the Practice of the Invocation of Saints (S.P.C.K., 1907). H. Thurston, S.J., in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 51–9, s.v. 'Saints and Martyrs (Christian)'; P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 870–978, s.v. 'Saints (Culte des)'. Much material will be found also in the Analecta Bollandiana* (q.v.). See also bibls. to Martyr and Martyrology. P. [R. L.] Brown, The Cult of the Saints. Its Rise and Function in Latin Christianity (1981).

SAKKOS (Gk. σάκκος). In the Eastern Church, an embroidered liturgical vestment similar in form to the *dalmatic in the West. It prob. dates from the 11th cent. It is the chief Eucharistic vestment of those of high rank and was orig. confined to Archbishops and Metropolitans. It is now worn instead of the *phelonion (q.v.) by all Bishops.

SALAMANCA, School of. See Salmanticenses.

SALESIANS. The Society of St. *Francis de Sales, founded near Turin in 1859 by St. John *Bosco for the Christian education of boys and young men of the poorer classes, esp. with a view to their ordination. In 1846 St. John began to gather them together in what he termed 'festive oratories' and night schools; the first 'festive oratory' was established in Turin, but similar foundations soon followed in other parts of Italy. A religious congregation of priests and teachers under the patronage of St. Francis de Sales came into being to develop the work, and in 1859 began to live by a rule drawn up by St. John two years earlier. In 1874 the rule was approved by *Pius IX, and the Society spread rapidly to many parts of the world, including England. It now has over 21,000 members—priests and lay brothers. A sister congregation of Daughters of Our Lady Help of Christians was founded by St. John in 1872, out of a small community started independently in 1852 by St. Mary Mazzarello at Mornese, for similar work among girls. This congregation now has over 18,500 members with houses in England and many other parts of the world.

E. Ceria, Annali della Società Salesiana [1841–1921] (4 vols., Turin (1941–51); also other specialized works by the same author. E. J. Doherty, Lambs in Wolfskins (New York, 1953). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 392–9 and 667; and on the female order, pp. 641 f. and 661. E. Marsh, Salesian, in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 298 f., s.v. 'Salesian Society'; W. Kelley in N.C.E., xii (1969), p. 982 f., s.v. See also lives of Bosco, St. John, cited s.v.

SALETTE, La. See La Salette.

SALISBURY. From the see originally founded in 634 by St. *Birinus at *Dorchester in Oxfordshire sprang the later sees of *Winchester, *Sherborne, Ramsbury, and Salisbury. Herman, Bp. of Ramsbury, who united the dioceses of Ramsbury and Sherborne in 1058, transferred the see to Old Sarum in 1075. Here his successor, St. *Osmund, built a cathedral, constituted a chapter, and drew up offices, which perhaps formed the basis of the *Sarum Rite. Richard *Poore, the seventh Bp. of Old Sarum, moved the see to New Sarum or Salisbury in 1218, and laid the foundation of the new cathedral (of the BVM) on 28 Apr. 1220. The Lady Chapel was consecrated in 1225 in the presence of St. *Edmund, afterwards Abp. of Canterbury, and the cathedral completed in 1266. Built throughout in the Early English style, it is a rare example of architectural unity. Cloisters and chapter-house were added later in the 13th cent. The spire, built between 1334 and 1350, is the highest in England.

Registers of Simon of Ghent, Bp. 1297–1315, ed. C. T. Flower–M. C. B. Dawes (*Canterbury and York Society, xl and xli; 1934); of Roger Martival, Bp. 1315–30, ed. Kathleen Edwards, C. R. Elrington and others (ib., lv, lvii–lix; 1959–75). W. H. Rich Jones (ed.), Vetus Registrum Sarisberiense alias dictum Registrum S. Osmundi Episcopi (2 vols., R.S., 1883–4); id., Fasti Ecclesiae Sarisberiensis, or a Calendar of the Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, and Members of the Cathedral Body at Salisbury from the Earliest Times to the Present (1879); id.–W. D. Macray, Charters and Documents Illustrating the History of the Cathedral, City and Diocese of Salisbury in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries, selected from the Capitular and Diocesan Registers (R.S., 1891). E. A. Dayman–W. H. Rich Jones (edd.), Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Sarum (privately printed, Bath, 1883); C. Wordsworth–D. Macleane (edd.), Statutes and Customs of the Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Salisbury (1915), incl. Eng. tr. C. Wordsworth (ed.), Ceremonies and Processions of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (Cambridge, 1901). R. L. Poole, 'The Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury' in the Historical Manuscripts Commission Report on Manuscripts in Various Collections, i (1901), pp. 338–88; id., 'The Records of the Bishop of Salisbury', ib., iv (1907), pp. 1–12. S. M. Lakin, A Catalogue of the Library of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1880). [R. Rawlinson,] The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral-Church of Salisbury and the Abbey-Church of Bath (1719), pp. iii–xvi, 1–161, and 269–351. W. Dodsworth, An Historical Account of the Episcopal See and Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1814). S. H. Cassan, Lives and Memoirs of the Bishops of Sherborne and Salisbury, from the Year 705 to 1824 (Salisbury, 1824). Kathleen Edwards in V.C.H., Wilts., iii, ed. R. B. Pugh–Elizabeth Crittall (1956), pp. 156–210. G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 539–43, s.v.

SALISBURY or SARUM, Use of. The local medieval modification of the Roman rite in use at the cathedral church of Salisbury, traditionally ascribed to St. *Osmund (d. 1099) but really much later. The *Consuetudinary, i.e. the cathedral statutes and customs and a complete directory of services, were compiled by Richard *Poore (d. 1237). The 'New Use of Sarum' was a further (14th cent.) revision, effecting certain changes in the Calendar. In the later Middle Ages the Sarum Use was increasingly followed, in whole or in part, in other dioceses, and in 1457 stated to be in use in nearly the whole of England, Wales, and Ireland. In 1543 the *Canterbury Convocation imposed the Sarum *Breviary on the whole province, and the books of the Sarum rite furnished the Reformers with their main material for the First (1549) BCP of *Edward VI, in the Preface to which (the section now headed 'Concerning the Service of the Church') the Sarum use appears as one of the local variations which the new standard order was to replace. In the years preceding the Reformation the output of Sarum books was enormous. The much increased knowledge which followed their discovery and re-editing in modern times led to the revival of Sarum customs and ornaments in many English cathedral and parish churches.

Missale ad Usum Insignis et Praeclarae Ecclesiae Sarum, ed. F. H. Dickinson (Burntisland, 1861–83); The Sarum Missal done into English by A. Harford Pearson (1863; ed. 2; 1884); Breviarium ad Usum Insignis Ecclesiae Sarum, ed. F. Procter et C. Wordsworth (3 vols., 1879–86); W. H. *Frere, The Use of Sarum, I: The Sarum Customs (1898), II: The Ordinal and Tonal (1901); C. Wordsworth, Ceremonies and Processions of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1901); J. W. Legg, The Sarum Missal edited from Three Early MSS. (1916); Manuale ad usum percelebris ecclesie Sarisburiensis, ed. J. Collins (H.B.S., xci; 1960). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970).

SALMANTICENSES. The customary name for the authors of the Cursus theologicus Summam d. Thomae complectens, a group of Discalced *Carmelites who taught at Salamanca between 1600 and 1725. The authors were anonymous, but their identity is now well established: they were Antonio de la Madre de Dios (c. 1585 – c. 1640), Domingo de Sta Teresa (1600–54), Juan de la Anunciación (1633–1701), and three others. The Cursus, which took 70 years to complete (1631–1701), is a gigantic Commentary on the 'Summa' of St. *Thomas Aquinas, undertaken to provide a sound basis of theological teaching for the friars of the *Teresian reform. It was conceived on the same lines as the philosophical course (Cursus Complutensis) done by their college at Alcalá, and was supplemented by the Cursus Salmanticensis Theologiae Moralis (publd. in its complete form, 1717–24).

O. Merl, O.C.D., Theologia Salmanticensis. Untersuchung über Entstehung, Lehrrichtung und Quellen des theologischen Kurses der spanischen Karmeliten ([Regensburg] 1947). T. Deman, O.P., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1017–31, s.v. 'Salamanque (Théologiens de)', with bibl.; O. Merl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 269 f.; R. A. Couture in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 987 f., s.v.

SALMASIUS, CLAUDIUS (1588–1653), Claude Saumaise, French classical scholar. At Paris, where he studied from 1604, he became a friend of I. *Casaubon and was converted to *Calvinism. In 1608 he edited two 14th cent. tracts against the primacy of the Pope. After publishing various classical works, including an edition of Solinus's 'Polyhistor' (1629), he succeeded to the chair of J. J. *Scaliger (d. 1609) at *Leyden in 1632. Here he wrote two books defending the compatibility of *usury with Christian principles, De usuris liber (1638) and De modo usurarum (1639), and a Defensio regia pro Carolo I (1649) which provoked J. *Milton's celebrated and successful reply, Pro populo anglicano defensio (1651). In 1650 he accepted an invitation to visit the court of Queen *Christina of Sweden, but soon afterwards returned to Holland.

Letters ed. A. Clément (Leyden, 1656), with life of Salmasius prefixed (pp. iii–lxiv). There also exists a MS. life by Philibert de la Mare, which was used by P. Papillon, Bibliothèque des auteurs de Bourgogne (Dijon, 1745), pp. 247–287 [incl. full list of Salmasius's works]. G. Laubmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 397–9, s.v.; unsigned art. in E.B. (ed. 11), xxiv (1911), p. 81, s.v.

SALMON, GEORGE (1819–1904), mathematician and theologian. He was educated at *Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became a Fellow in 1841, Regius professor of divinity in 1866, and Provost in 1888. He was ordained priest in 1845. A strong Protestant, Salmon co-operated with R. *Whately in writing the Cautions for the Times (1853), intended as a reply to the Tracts for the Times* (1833–41). His lectures on the Infallibility of the Church, first published in 1888, were a defence of Protestant principles against the tenets of the Church of Rome, and well illustrate at once his skill, his vigour, and his humour, as a controversialist. In his widely read Introduction to the New Testament (1885), he was more concerned to refute critical theories than to produce a handbook of reference. His distinguished work as a mathematician cannot be described here. Salmon also took a prominent part in the reconstruction of the Irish Church after its disestablishment in 1870.

J. H. *Bernard in D.N.B., Second Suppl., iii (1912), pp. 251–4.

SALOME. (1) A woman who followed Jesus to Jerusalem, Mk. 15. 40, 16. 1. Matthew (27. 56) appears to identify her with the mother of St. *James and St. *John, the sons of Zebedee (Mt. 27. 56; cf. Mk. 15. 40). She is sometimes also identified with the sister of the BVM (Jn. 19. 25). See Marys in the NT (4).

(2) The name given by *Josephus (Ant., xviii. 136) to the daughter of Herodias, who is mentioned without a name at Mt. 14. 6 and Mk. 6. 22.

SALONICA. See Thessalonica.

SALT. Owing to its preservative quality salt was a sign of purity and incorruptibility, esp. among the Semitic peoples. As such, it served to confirm contracts and friendship, the covenant between Jehovah and Israel on *Sinai, e.g., being called a 'covenant of salt' in Num. 18. 19. This symbolism, taken together with its seasoning properties, explains the Lord's saying 'Ye are the salt of the earth' (Mt. 5. 13, cf. also Mk. 9. 50), where the salt represents Christian wisdom and integrity, as also in Col. 4. 6. The ritual use of salt is very old and widespread. It was prescribed in the OT for every oblation (Lev. 2. 13) and played an important part in the sacrifices of the Greeks and Romans. The old pagan Roman custom of placing a few grains of salt on the lips of an infant on the 8th day after his birth to chase away the demons prob. lay behind the offering of blessed salt to *catechumens which formerly formed part of the RC rite of *Baptism. Salt may also be used for the preparation of *holy water.

V. Hehn, Das Salz. Eine kulturhistorische Studie (1873; ed. 2 by O. Schader, 1901). A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter, i (1909), pp. 154–92 and 221–9. W. E. Scudamore in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1838 f., s.v.; W. Robertson *Smith–A. R. S. Kennedy in E.Bi., iv (1903), cols. 4247–50, s.v.; F. Hauck in T.W.B., i (1933), p. 229, s.v. ἅλας, with bibl.

SALTMARSH, JOHN (d. 1647), preacher and writer. He crowded much controversy into a short life of some 35 years. About 1639 he became rector of Heslerton, N. Yorks, and was at first an ardent supporter of episcopacy and conformity; but his opinions gradually changed and he became equally ardent in advocating complete religious liberty. In 1644 he was appointed to the sequestered rectory of Brasted, Kent, and in 1646 became a chaplain in Fairfax's army. All the time he was pouring forth a stream of books and pamphlets of which the best known are Holy Discoveries (1640) and Sparkles of Glory (1647).

W. Schenk, The Concern for Social Justice in the Puritan Revolution (1948), pp. 85–9. L. F. Solt, 'John Saltmarsh: New Model Army Chaplain' in J.E.H., ii (1951), pp. 69–80. A. Gordon in D.N.B., l (1897), pp. 220–2.

SALTUM, Per. See Per Saltum.

SALUTARY ACT. In RC theological terminology a human act which contributes to the salvation of the person performing it. To be 'salutary', it must be carried out in a state of grace and with the co-operation of the will, i.e. it must not be a purely instinctive reaction.

SALVATION ARMY, The. An extensive international Christian organization for evangelistic and social work. It was founded by W. *Booth (q.v.) in 1865, received its present form and title in 1878, and from that time spread rapidly all over the world. It is organized on a strictly military basis, with a 'General' at its head. On W. Booth's death (1912), his son, William Bramwell Booth, succeeded to the Generalship on his father's nomination, but since 1931 the General has been elected by the High Council, consisting of commanders and other leading officers. 'Unquestioning obedience' is required from all members of the Army, which is divided into 'territories', acc. to the national frontiers of the respective countries, which, in their turn, are subdivided into 'provinces' and 'divisions'. The religious teaching of the Salvation Army is largely in harmony with traditional evangelical belief, but rejects all Sacraments and stresses esp. the moral side of Christianity. The technique of producing conversions is aggressive and emotional and makes extensive use of public testimony and penance; its realistic methods of presenting religion to the people, in which open-air meetings with brass bands and banners play an important part, differ greatly from those of other Christian bodies. The Army carries on a great variety of social activities, including all kinds of rescue work, care of criminals and drunkards, soup kitchens, workers' hostels and night shelters, as well as hospitals and schools. The Army, which is esp. strong in the U.S.A., has its headquarters in London.

R. Sandall–A. R. Wiggins, The History of the Salvation Army (1947 ff.). For the early history, see also lives of W. Booth, cited s.v.

SALVATOR NOSTER. The bull of *Sixtus IV, dated 3 Aug. 1476, granting an indulgence to the church of Saintes. It is the first instance of the issue of an indulgence granting plenary remission of sins for the dead (plenariam remissionem per modum suffragii).

Text in Archives historiques de la Saintonge et de l'Aunis, x (1882), pp. 56–69. The clauses concerning the souls in purgatory also pr. in H. Lea, A History of Auricular Confession and Indulgences in the Latin Church, iii (1896), p.

585 f., with discussion, pp. 345–51, and extracts from other allied documents, pp. 586–96; extracts of the text repr. in Kidd, p. 3 f. (No. 2). A. Tectaert, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), col. 2210 f., s.v. 'Sixte IV'. See also works cited under Indulgences.

SALVE REGINA (Lat., 'Hail, Holy Queen'). One of the oldest Marian *antiphons, sometimes recited in the W. Church at the end of the canonical hours. It is among the most widely used Catholic prayers to the BVM, owing its popularity to its tender devotional language and beautiful plainsong. The earliest MS. evidence is usually dated at the end of the 11th cent. The chronicle of Alberic of Trois-Fontaines (d. 1241) mentions the Salve Regina under the year 1130 in connexion with a story about St. *Bernard, who is said to have referred to it as the antiphon of Le Puy ('Antiphona de Podio'), the famous pilgrim shrine of Le Puy-en-Velay. The authorship is unknown. It has been variously ascribed to Adhémar, Bp. of Le Puy (d. 1098), Peter, Bp. of Compostela (d. 1003), *Herimannus Contractus, and St. Bernard.

From the middle of the 12th cent. the Salve Regina was used by the *Cistercians as an antiphon for either the *Benedictus or the *Magnificat on the four great feasts of the BVM and from early in the 13th cent. they recited it daily. It was adopted by both the *Franciscans and the *Dominicans. The *Breviary of *Pius V in 1568 made its recitation after Compline from Trinity to Advent generally obligatory; in the 1971 Breviary it is one of five antiphons which may be used at the end of Compline. From 1884 to 1964 its recitation was also required after Low Mass.

Critical ed. of text by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, ii (A.H.M.A., 1; 1907), p. 318 f. J. de Valois, En marge d'une antienne. Le 'Salve Regina' (1912); J. Maier, Studien zur Geschichte der Marienantiphon 'Salve regina' (Regensburg, 1939); J. M. Canal, Salve Regina Misericordiae. Historia y leyendas en torno a esta antífona (Temi e Testi, ix; Rome, 1963). H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Salve Regina' in The Month, cxxviii (1918), pp. 248–60 and 300–14; text (without illustrations) repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), No. vii, pp. 115–45, with reff. I. Cecchetti in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1719–21, with bibl.

SALVIAN (c. 400 – c. 480), 'Massiliensis', ecclesiastical writer. Born, prob. near *Cologne, of a noble Christian family, he married a pagan, Palladia, who thereupon became a Christian. Later they separated by mutual agreement so that both could devote themselves more exclusively to religion, and Salvian lived henceforward at *Lérins (from c. 424) and Marseilles (from c. 439). His chief work was his 'De Gubernatione Dei', a treatise in 8 books in which, by contrasting the vices of decadent Roman civilization with the virtues of the victorious barbarians, he used the latter as a witness to God's judgement on society and as an incentive for Christians to purity of life and faith in Providence. Though somewhat deficient in criticism, his book is valuable as social history. There are also extant a treatise 'Ad Ecclesiam' (on almsgiving) and 9 letters.

Works repr. from ed. of S. *Baluze in J. P. Migne, PL, liii, 25–238; crit. edd. by F. Pauly in C.S.E.L., viii (1883), by C. Halm in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, i (pt. 1; 1887), and, with Fr. tr., by G. Lagarrigue (S.C., clxxvi and ccxx; 1971–5). Eng. tr. of his works by J. F. O'Sullivan (Fathers of the Church, iii; 1962) and of his De Gubernatione Dei by Eva M. Sandford (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies; New York, 1930), with notes on early edd. of his works. M. Pellegrino, Salviano di Marsiglia (Lateranum, N.S., vi, fascc. 1–2; 1940). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 456 f., with further bibl. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1056–8, s.v. 'Salvien', with bibl.

SAMARIA. The capital of the kingdom of *Israel, i.e. of the 'Ten [northern] Tribes', founded by King Omri (c. 880 B.C.) and in 721 B.C. captured by the Assyrians, who resettled the territory with pagans from other parts of their empire (2 Kgs. 18. 9–12 and chapter 17). According to Jewish tradition, the Samaritans known to later Judaism and the NT were the descendants of these settlers, though precisely when they became a separate religious sect with a temple of their own on Mt. Gerizim is disputed; opinions vary between the 5th and the 1st cent. B.C., most scholars favouring a date in the 4th cent. The hostility of the Jews to the Samaritans was proverbial (Jn. 4. 9, 8. 48). The Lord's sympathy to them is shown in the parables of the Good Samaritan (Lk. 10. 33) and the Ten Lepers (Lk. 17. 16). Apparently St. *Philip the Evangelist was the first to preach the Gospel to them.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25, 1931), pp. 323–63. J. A. Montgomery, The Samaritans (Philadelphia, 1907); M. Gaster, The Samaritans (Schweich Lectures for 1923; 1925). J. Macdonald, The Theology of the Samaritans (1964). L. Heidet in Dict. Bibl., v (1912), cols. 1413–21, s.v., with bibl.; J. Jeremias in T.W.B., vii (1960–4), pp. 88–94, s.v. Σαμάρεια, with bibl. On the city of Samaria: G. A. Reisner–C. S. Fisher–D. G. Lyon, Harvard Excavations at Samaria, 1908–1910 (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1924). J. W. Crowfoot–Kathleen M. Kenyon–E. L. Sukenik, The Buildings at Samaria (1942); J. W. Crowfoot–G. M. Crowfoot–Kathleen M. Kenyon, The Objects from Samaria (1957). R. W. Hamilton, Guide to Samaria-Sebaste (Jerusalem, 1944). A. Alt, Der Stadtstaat Samaria (Ber. (Sächs.), ci, Heft 5; 1954). A. Parrot, Samarie, capitale du royaume d'Israël (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, vii; 1955; Eng. tr., 1958). See also bibl. to following entry.

SAMARITAN PENTATEUCH, The. A slightly divergent form of the *Pentateuch in Hebrew, current since pre-Christian times among the Samaritans and the only part of the OT accepted by them. Where it differs from the *Massoretic (i.e. the standard Jewish) text, it seems usually to be inferior in value. Though the differences for the most part are only verbal, it is worth noting that they not infrequently agree with divergent readings found in the LXX, and they sometimes accord with the more developed ideas of reverence of a later date, e.g. in the substitution of 'the angel of God' for 'God' in the sentence 'God met Balaam' (Num. 23. 4). A notable difference is the name of the Samaritan holy mountain, Mt. Gerizim, for Mt. Ebal in Deut. 27. 4. No extant MS. appears to be older than the 11th cent. A.D., apart from a fragment of Num. 26. 62–27. 11 in Manchester, which is dated in the 9th century.

The text was first made known in Europe in 1616 by the traveller Pietro della Valle, who brought home a copy from Damascus, now preserved in the *Vatican Library. The text was first publd. in the Paris *Polyglot of 1645 and repr. by B. *Walton in the London Polyglot of 1657; also ed. separately by B. Blayney (Oxford, 1790) and by A. von Gall (5 pts., Giessen, 1914–18; eclectic text, which makes no use of older MSS. preserved at Nablus). W. *Gesenius, De Pentateuchi Samaritani Origine, Indole et Auctoritate (Halle, 1815; denies its usefulness for OT text). P. Kahle, 'Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Pentateuchtextes' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, lxxxviii (1915), pp. 399–439, esp. 'I. Der Pentateuch der Samaritaner', pp. 402–10. R. H. Pfeiffer, Introduction to the Old Testament (New York, [1948]; London, 1954), pp. 101–4. J. D. Purvis, The Samaritan Pentateuch and the Origin of the Samaritan Sect (Harvard Semitic Monographs, ii; Cambridge, Mass., 1968). E. König in H.D.B., v (extra vol.; 1904), pp. 68–72, s.v.

SAMSON (prob. 11th cent. B.C.), Hebrew hero, enemy of the Philistines and traditionally the last of the great 'judges'. Acc. to Jgs. 13. 2–16. 31 he was the son of Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, born in answer to prayer and bound throughout his life by a *Nazarite vow. He was endowed with prodigious strength, which enabled him to perform various remarkable exploits (e.g. slaying a lion and moving the gates of Gaza). After marrying a Philistine woman who betrayed him, he wrought havoc among the Philistines, from whom he escaped by his own strength both when surrendered by the men of Judah and when surrounded while visiting a harlot at Gaza. He at last fell victim to his consuming passion for Delilah, to whom he revealed that the secret of his strength lay in his hair. The Philistines put out his eyes, but Samson was granted his revenge in pulling down the pillars of the temple when three thousand Philistines were assembled.

The name 'Samson' is almost certainly connected with the Hebrew word for 'sun' (shemish), and some would see in Samson the hero of a solar myth, derived from either the form of his name or that of his burial-place (Bethshemesh). In acc. with the scheme of the editor of the Book of Judges, he is said to have 'judged' Israel for 20 years (15. 20 and 16. 31), but the account in general contains nothing to suggest that he was a deliverer of Israel. He was, however, regarded as a recipient of divine favour and in the NT his faith is commended (Heb. 11. 32). In later literature he is the hero of J. *Milton's Samson Agonistes (1671) and one of G. F. *Handel's oratorios (1743).

See commentaries on Judges, cited s.v., notably C. F. *Burney, The Book of Judges (1918), with bibl. p. 335, and additional note pp. 391–408 ('The Mythical Element in the Story of Samson'). G. G. Roskoff, Die Simsonsage nach ihrer Entstehung, Form und Bedeutung und der Heraclesmythus (1860). H. Stahn, Die Simsonsage (1908). A. Smythe Palmer, The Samson Saga and its Place in Comparative Religion (1913). V. Zapletal, O.P., Der biblische Samson (Fribourg, 1906). H. *Gunkel, 'Simson' in Reden und Aufsätze (Göttingen, 1913), pp. 38–64. K. *Budde in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 377–81, s.v.

SAMSON, St. (c. 490–?565), Bp. of Dol. A native of Wales who had embraced the monastic life, he was ordained by St. *Dubritius. His reputation for piety and as a miracle-worker was such that he was compelled to retire first to the banks of the Severn and later to Cornwall and finally to Brittany in search of solitude. Having landed near Dol, he built a monastery there, and was subsequently consecrated bishop, though Dol did not become an established episcopal see till the 9th cent. Feast day, 28 July.

Anon. life, poss. 7th cent., first pr. by J. *Mabillon, also in AA.SS., Jul. VII (1729), pp. 573–93; crit. ed. by R. Fawtier (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, cxcvii; 1912); Eng. tr. of text by T. Taylor ('Translations of Christian Literature'; 1925). F. Duine, 'La Vie de saint Samson, à propos d'un ouvrage récent' in Annales de Bretagne, xxviii (1913), pp. 332–56; R. Fawtier, 'Saint Samson abbé de Dol. Réponse à quelques objections', ib., xxxv (1923), pp. 137–186. F. C. *Burkitt in J.T.S., xxvii (1926), pp. 42–57.

SAMUEL, Books of. The two Books of Samuel were originally a single Book, which was divided for convenience by the compilers of the *Septuagint, who also grouped the Books of Samuel with those of *Kings under the one single title of the '[Four] Books of the Reigns'. The English title follows the Hebrew, and is due to the important part played in the opening chapters by the prophet Samuel, in the establishment of the monarchy in Israel. After relating the history of Samuel, the writer sets down a description of the reigns of Saul (c. 1025–1010 B.C.) and *David (c. 1010–970). Three ancient poems lie embedded in the narrative: Hannah's prayer (1 Sam. 2. 1–10), David's lament (2 Sam. 1. 19–27), David's song of triumph (2 Sam. 22). As might be expected in such a work, various sources have been used by the compilers. Some scholars have detected in it continuations of the *Pentateuchal sources *J and *E. Others stress the religious and theological standpoint of the compilers and regard the Books as an important constituent in the so-called '*Deuteronomic History' (q.v.).

Commentaries by A. F. Kirkpatrick (2 vols., Camb. Bib., AV, 1880–1; RV, 1930), H. P. Smith (I.C.C., 1899), A. R. S. Kennedy (Cent. Bib., 1905), W. Nowack (H.K.A.T., Abt. 1, Bd. iv, pt. 2, 1902; sep. pagination), K. *Budde (K.H.C., Abt. viii; 1902), P. Dhorme, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1910), W. Caspari (K.A.T., vii, 1926), H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, x; 1956; ed. 2, 1960; Eng. tr. 1964), and J. Mauchline (New Cent. Bib., 1971). S. R. *Driver, Notes on the Hebrew Text and the Topography of the Books of Samuel (1890); O. Eissfeldt, Die Komposition der Samuelisbücher (1931). R. A. Carlson, David, the Chosen King. A Traditio-Historical Approach to the Second Book of Samuel (Eng. tr., Stockholm, 1964). A. Weiser, Samuel. Seine geschichtliche Aufgabe und religiöse Bedeutung. Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu 1. Samuel 7–12 (Göttingen, 1962). R. Press, 'Der Prophet Samuel. Eine traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung' in Z.A.T.W., lviii (1938), pp. 177–225.

SANATIO IN RADICE (Lat., 'healing at the root'). In canon law, the process whereby an invalid 'marriage' is validated retrospectively, i.e. from the moment at which the 'marriage' was solemnized. Unless special provision is made for sanatio in radice, the marriage is validated only from the moment at which the *impediment is dispensed. In the absence of such retrospective validation, the full legitimacy of children born before validation would not be secured. Under RC canon law (CIC, can. 1141) sanatio in radice can be granted only by the see of Rome.

N. Iung in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1063–74, s.v., with reff. to docc., incl. the Replies of the *Holy Office on the subject. See also bibl. to discussions in RC handbooks of moral theology.

SANBENITO. The yellow penitential garment, provided with a red cross front and back, which the Spanish *Inquisition ordered to be worn by those who had confessed heresy. It was so named from its resemblance in shape to a Benedictine *scapular.

SANCHEZ, THOMAS (1550–1610), Spanish moral theologian. He entered the *Jesuit Order in 1567 and was appointed master of novices at Granada, where he also taught moral theology and canon law. He became famous for his Disputationes de sancto matrimonii sacramento (1602), a comprehensive work on the moral and canonical aspects of matrimony which enjoyed high authority in the 17th cent. One volume of its Venetian edition was placed on the *Index because of the omission of a passage, displeasing to the Venetian Republic, defending the legitimization of illegitimate children by the Pope without interference of the civil authorities. In the Opus Morale in Praecepta Decalogi (1613), published posthumously, he undertook to expound a system of casuistry based on the Decalogue, but he did not go beyond the Second Commandment. Much later Sanchez was attacked as a *laxist by B. *Pascal in his Lettres provinciales, but he seems only to have shared some erroneous opinions, e.g. on *mental reservation, with other *probabilists of his time.

Collected ed. of his works, 7 vols., Venice, 1740. Sommervogel, vii (1896), cols. 530–7. A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, iv (1913), p. 65. M. Petrocchi, Il problema del lassismo nel secolo XVII (1953), passim. R. Brouillard, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (1939), cols. 1075–85, s.v.

SANCROFT, WILLIAM (1617–93), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was a Fellow from 1642 till 1651, when he was ejected by the *Puritans. At the *Restoration he was appointed chaplain to *Charles II, Master of Emmanuel College (1662), Dean of *Durham (1663) and of *York (1664). As chaplain to Bp. J. *Cosin of Durham he acted as secretary to the revisers of the 1662 BCP, which he also saw through the press. In Nov. 1664 he became Dean of *St. Paul's, where he re-ordered the capitular finances; after the disastrous fire of 1666 he collaborated with C. *Wren in rebuilding the cathedral. In 1677 he succeeded G. *Sheldon in the see of Canterbury. His primacy was distinguished by a major effort to renew the strength of the Anglican establishment, both politically, in alliance with the Tory party, and spiritually, with the aid of a newly appointed set of bishops. The accession of the RC *James II caused him to alter the *Coronation rite radically in 1685, so that the Communion could be omitted. James's attack on the inherited position of the C of E soon pushed Sancroft into opposition to the royal policies. His action as leader of the *Seven Bishops who opposed the *Declaration of Indulgence in 1688 led to his imprisonment in the Tower, but on trial he was acquitted. After James's flight he refused, however, to recognize William of Orange as rightful king, was suspended from office on 1 Aug. 1689, and on 1 Feb. 1690 deprived of his archbishopric as a '*Nonjuror'. His later years were spent in retirement in Suffolk. He came to be revered as a confessor, one who stood out for the rights of the Church against those of the state.

A small collection of his Occasional Sermons was publd., London, 1694. Life by G. D'Oyly (2 vols., London, 1821). C. R. L. Fletcher, 'Some Troubles of Archbishop Sancroft' in Proceedings of the Huguenot Society of London, xiii (1926), pp. 209–61, with calendar of some of his correspondence in the Tanner Collection [Bodleian Library], pp. 255–61. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 16–18, 82–9, 134 f., 188–92. R. [A.] Beddard, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Promotions, 1681–84: An Instrument of Tory Reaction' in Historical Journal, x (1967), pp. 11–40; id., 'The Guildhall Declaration of 11 December 1688 and the Counter-Revolution of the Loyalists', ib., xi (1968), pp. 403–20. W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., 1 (1897), pp. 244–50; id. in D.E.C.H., p. 543 f. See also works cited under Seven Bishops and Nonjurors.

SANCTA CLARA, FRANCISCUS A. See Davenport, Christopher.

SANCTA SOPHIA. See Santa Sophia.

SANCTORALE. The section of a *Missal or *Breviary (sometimes made into a separate book) which supplies the Masses or offices peculiar to the festivals of particular saints.

SANCTUARY (Gk. ἱερατεῖον, or, more commonly, βῆμα). The part of the church containing the altar (or, if there be several altars, the high altar). In Byzantine churches it is enclosed by the *iconostasis. It is sometimes termed the 'presbytery', as being the portion of the church properly reserved to the clergy.

SANCTUARY, Right of. In the Middle Ages this was of two kinds, ecclesiastical and secular. The former had developed out of the usage that a criminal who had taken refuge in a church might not be removed from it, but was allowed to take an oath of abjuration before the coroner and proceed to a seaport appointed by the latter. If within 40 days he refused to adopt this procedure, he might be forcibly extricated for justice. The privilege was understood not to extend to sacrilege or high treason. Sometimes those claiming the privilege of sanctuary had to touch a particular object in the church (in early times, often the altar). The sanctuary-stool ('frith-stool') survives at *Hexham, the sanctuary-knocker at *Durham and elsewhere.

Secular and jurisdictional sanctuary relied upon royal grant, and in theory at least might be held to apply to every franchise where the lord had jura regalia and the king's writ did not run. This institution is frequently confused with ecclesiastical sanctuary, since criminals commonly repaired to a church in a franchise, esp. in the great ecclesiastical liberties like *Beverley, Durham, and Tynemouth. Such sanctuaries as these latter certainly promoted social disorder in the later Middle Ages. At the Reformation the privilege of sanctuary was drastically curtailed. In 1540 *Henry VIII limited it to seven cities, viz. *Wells, *Westminster, Northampton, Manchester, *York, Derby and Launceston. A petition from Manchester against the nomination led to *Chester being substituted. By an act of *James I (1623), sanctuary for crime was finally abolished altogether, though it lingered on for civil processes until 1723.

S. Pegge, 'A Sketch of the History of the Asylum, or Sanctuary, from its Origin to the Final Abolition of it in the Reign of James I' in Archaeologia, viii (1787), pp. 1–44. N. M. Trenholme, The Right of Sanctuary in England (University of Missouri Studies, vol. i, No. 5; 1903). J. C. Cox, The Sanctuaries and Sanctuary Seekers of Mediaeval England (1911). G. Le Bras in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), cols. 1035–47, s.v. 'Asile'; E. Herman and L. R. Misserey in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 1084–9 and 1089–1104, s.vv. 'Asile dans l'Église orientale (Le Droit de)' and 'Asile en Occident' respectively, all with detailed bibl.

SANCTUS. The hymn of adoration which follows the *Preface in the *Eucharist and begins with the words 'Holy, holy, holy'. It is perhaps referred to by St. *Clement of Rome (1 Cor. 34. 6 f.) and *Origen (Hom. in Is. 1. 2). Based on the Lat. of the medieval rite, it runs in the BCP 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts, heaven and earth are full of thy glory: Glory be to thee, O Lord most High'. The words of the '*Benedictus qui venit' (i.e. 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest'), which completed it, were omitted in the 1552 and later 16th and 17th cent. Prayer Books, but are allowed in the ASB and other modern rites. Originally it was not separated from the *canon which follows immediately afterwards (in the BCP the Prayer of *Humble Access has been interpolated at this point); but the practice of the congregation and choir joining in the words of the Sanctus led to a division here, and the canon proper came to be looked on as a separate item.

A. *Baumstark, 'Trishagion und Qeduscha' in J.L.W., iii (1923), pp. 18–32. E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Sanctus and the Pattern of the Early Anaphora' in J.E.H., i (1950), pp. 29–36 and 125–34. W. C. van Unnik, 'I Clement 34 and the "Sanctus"' in V.C., v (1951), pp. 204–48. Jungmann, M.S., ii (ed. 1958), pp. 161–73, with refs. to ancient lit. and further bibl. A. *Fortescue in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 432–4, s.v.

SANCTUS BELL. See Sacring Bell.

SANCTUS CANDLE. The rubrics of the Roman Missal long required that at the Epistle side of the altar an additional candle should be lighted at the *Sanctus, and that it should be left burning until after the Communion. The custom seems to have originated at the end of the Middle Ages; but, despite the rubric, it was not generally observed in modern times. It is still, however, sometimes used among the *Dominicans.

SANDALS, Episcopal. The low shoes with leather soles and the upper part of embroidery which may be worn by bishops in the W. Church exclusively at solemn Pontifical Masses and other functions (e.g. Ordination) performed during them. Except in Rome they are usually adorned with a small cross. Their use goes back certainly to the 5th cent. Liturgical stockings (caligae), now of the liturgical colour of the day, are also worn with them.

Braun, L.G., pp. 384–424. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 434 f., s.v.

SANDAY, WILLIAM (1843–1920), English NT scholar. He was educated at Repton and at Balliol and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford. In 1876 he was appointed principal of Hatfield Hall, *Durham, and in 1882 recalled to Oxford as Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis, where he remained for the rest of his life. From 1895 to 1919 he was Lady Margaret professor of divinity. Hesitant in decision, he warmly defended his convictions when once his mind had been made up; and his influence went far to winning Anglican clergy to the acceptance of modern methods of NT study. Though his long projected Life of Christ was never achieved, the plan bore fruit in a large number of books conceived as subsidiary studies. Among his writings are The Gospels in the Second Century (1876); Inspiration (*Bampton Lectures, 1893); Commentary on Romans (1895, in conjunction with A. C. *Headlam); Outlines of the Life of Christ (1905; reprinted from J. *Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible); Christologies, Ancient and Modern (1910); and Oxford Studies in the Synoptic Problem (in conjunction with other Oxford scholars, 1911).

Obituary notice by W. *Lock in J.T.S., xxii (1921), pp. 97–104, with bibl. of his published works by A. *Souter, pp. 193–205. C. H. *Turner in D.N.B., 1912–1921, pp. 482–4.

SANDEMANIANS. See Glasites.

SANDERS, NICHOLAS (c. 1530–81), RC controversialist and historian. Educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, he graduated in 1551 and lectured on canon law. After the accession of *Elizabeth I he fled to the Continent (1559) and was ordained priest at Rome c. 1560. In 1561 he accompanied Cardinal S. *Hosius to the Council of *Trent and later on missions to Poland, Prussia, and Lithuania. In 1565 he went to Louvain, where he became professor of theology and, in connexion with the controversy aroused by Bp. J. *Jewel's Apology, published The Supper of the Lord (1565), A Treatise of Images (1566), The Rock of the Church (1567), and De Visibili Monarchia Ecclesiae (1571). The last of these, resuming the general ideas of St. *Augustine's De Civitate Dei, gives a comprehensive view of the Church from its first adumbrations at the beginnings of humanity and defends its monarchical government; it also throws much incidental light on the sufferings endured by RCs under Elizabeth. Called to Rome in 1572, he became consultor to *Gregory XIII on English affairs. In 1573 he went to Spain to induce *Philip II to make war on Elizabeth, and in 1579 he went to Ireland as Papal agent to cause an insurrection against the government. After two years of continual failure he died as a fugitive, probably of exhaustion. His unfinished work De Origine ac Progressu Schismatis Anglicani was edited by E. Rishton in 1585 and translated by D. Lewis in 1877. Though sharply criticized at the time, it is now admitted to be accurate in many of its controverted statements.

J. H. Pollen, S.J. (ed.), 'Dr. Nicholas Sanders' Report to Cardinal Moroni, n.d., ? May 1561' in Catholic Record Society Miscellanea, i (*Catholic Record Society, i; 1905), pp. 1–23, with Eng. tr. pp. 24–47. Id., 'Dr. Nicholas Sanders' in E.H.R., vi (1891), pp. 36–47. T. M. Veech, Dr. Nicholas Sanders and the English Reformation, 1530–81 (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux publiés par les Membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, Sér. 2, fasc. xxxii; 1935), with bibl. T. G. Law in D.N.B., l (1897), pp. 259–62.

SANDERSON, ROBERT (1587–1663), Bp. of *Lincoln. Educated at Rotherham Grammar School and Lincoln College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1606, he was ordained in 1611 and held several livings, as well as prebendal stalls at *Southwell and Lincoln. Gaining the favour of W. *Laud, he was appointed a royal chaplain in 1631 and Regius professor of divinity at Oxford in 1642. During the Civil War he was deprived of his professorship and for a time imprisoned. In 1660 he was reinstated and soon afterwards consecrated to the see of Lincoln. He took a leading part in the *Savoy Conference of 1661 and drafted the preface to the new (1662) Prayer Book. His best known work is his Nine Cases of Conscience Occasionally Determined (1678), one of the most notable contributions to moral theology in its age. His other writings include: Logicae Artis Compendium (1618); De Juramenti Promissorii Obligatione (lectures in 1646; publd. 1670); and De Obligatione Conscientiae (lectures in 1647; published 1660).

An Eng. tr. of Sanderson's De Obligatione Conscientiae by R. Codrington was also publd., London, 1660; ed. with Eng. comm. and abridged tr. by W. Whewell, Cambridge, 1851; Eng. tr. with preface by C. *Wordsworth, Lincoln, 1877. Collected ed. of his works by W. Jacobson (6 vols., Oxford, 1854), with repr. of the famous life by I. *Walton, orig. publd. London, 1678, in vol. vi, pp. 265–350. Modern study by G. Lewis ('English Theologians', ed. S. L. Ollard–W. Spens, London, 1924). J. H. Legge in D.N.B., l (1897), p. 265 f., with further refs.

SANDYS, EDWIN (c. 1516–88), Abp. of *York. A graduate of St. John's College, Cambridge, he became master of St. Catharine's Hall in 1547, vicar of Caversham in 1548, canon of *Peterborough in 1549, and vice-chancellor of Cambridge university in 1553, in all these posts doing his utmost to further the principles of the English Reformation. A supporter of Lady Jane Grey, he was imprisoned in the Tower in July 1553, but eventually escaped to the Continent. On *Elizabeth I's accession he returned, and was appointed subsequently to the sees of *Worcester (1559), London (1570), and York (1575). A fervent and learned opponent of Romanist practices, with personal leanings towards Puritanism, he came on several occasions into collision with his clergy. He was one of the translators of the *Bishops' Bible.

Sandys issued a collection of his sermons, London, 1585; ed. T. Whitaker (ib., 1812), with life, pp. i–lxiv; also ed., with other miscellaneous pieces, by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 1841), with biographical introduction, pp. i–xxxii. Further letters in H. Robinson (ed.), The Zürich Letters, i (Parker Society, 1842), pp. 3–6, 72–5, 145 f., 264–6, 294–7, 311–13, and 331–3. W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., I (1897), pp. 283–6.

SANHEDRIN. The supreme council and highest court of justice at *Jerusalem in NT times. The name is a Heb. form of the Gk. συνέδριον, 'council', though in Gk. sources the Sanhedrin is also designated by the words βουλή (*Josephus, Bell. Jud., II. xvi. 5), γερουσία (Acts 5. 21) and πρεσβυτέριον (Lk. 22. 66, Acts 22. 5). Its origin is obscure, but it certainly goes back behind Roman times, when it was given a definite place in the administration of Palestine. It consisted of 71 members (cf. Num. 11. 16). It was usually dominated by members of the priestly aristocracy, but it also included laymen such as Scribes and *Pharisees. The NT implies that it was presided over by the *High Priest (Mt. 26. 57, Acts 24. 1). Rabbinic sources, however, make no mention that such a position belonged to the High Priest and refer to its president by such expressions as 'the Head of the House of Justice'. The Sanhedrin dealt with the religious problems of the whole Jewish world, collected taxes, and acted as a civil court for Jerusalem. Having the right (prob.) to try capital cases (Josephus, Antiq., XIV. ix. 3 f.; Mt. 26. 3 f.; Acts 4. 5, 6, 12, 22. 30), it pronounced sentence of death on Christ. After the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, when it came to an end in its original form, some of its duties were taken over by the Pharisees at Jamnia and later at Tiberias.

Much information is contained in the Tractate 'Sanhedrin' of the *Mishnah (q.v.). E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, ii (ed. 3, 1898), pp. 188–214. S. B. Hoenig, The Great Sanhedrin. A Study of the origin, development, composition and functions of the Bet Din ha-Gabol during the Second Jewish Commonwealth (Philadelphia, 1953). H. Mantel, Studies in the History of the Sanhedrin (Harvard Semitic Series, xvii; 1961). On the disputed right of the Sanhedrin to inflict the death-sentence, and its relevance to the Passion Narrative, cf. also A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament (Sarum Lectures, 1960–1; Oxford, 1963), esp. pp. 32–47, with reff. An ingenious solution to some of the problems is proposed by the suggestion that there were two separate bodies, S. Zeitlin, 'The Political Synedrion and the Religious Sanhedrin' in Jewish Quarterly Review, N.S., xxxvi (1945), pp. 109–40. W. Bacher in H.D.B., iv (1902), cols. 397–402, s.v.; U. Kahrstedt in P.W., 2te Reihe, iv (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1333–50, s.v. Συνέδριον; W. Lohse in T.W.B., vii (1960–64), pp. 858–69, s.v. συνέδριον.

SANKEY, IRA DAVID (1840–1908). See Moody, Dwight Lyman.

SANTA CLAUS. An American corruption of the Dutch form of St. *Nicholas, Bp. of Myra, widely venerated as the patron of children. The custom of making Christmas gifts in his name was introduced in America by the Dutch Protestants at New Amsterdam and thence into England. In some countries, e.g. parts of Germany, small presents are given to children on his feast day, 6 Dec.

SANTA MARIA MAGGIORE, Rome. The celebrated *basilica on the Esquiline Hill was founded by Pope *Liberius (352–66). The present structure was erected under Sixtus III (432–40). Acc. to a medieval tradition the site was indicated by the BVM, who one August night left her footprints in a miraculous fall of summer snow. This legend was formerly commemorated in the Feast of Our Lady of the Snows (5 Aug.; now renamed as the Dedication of the Basilica of St. Mary). Though smaller than the other early basilicas (Old St. Peter's, S. Paolo fuori le Mura, and the *Lateran), it is the largest of the eighty churches in Rome dedicated to the BVM. Among the treasures of the church are the reputed remains of parts of the manger in which Christ was born.

A. Valentini, La patriarcale basilica liberiana illustrata (Rome, 1839). A. Schuchert, S. Maria Maggiore zu Rom, i. Die Gründungsgeschichte der Basilika und die ursprüngliche Apsisanlage (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xv; 1939). R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett–W. Frankl, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iii (Rome, 1967), pp. 1–60, with full bibl. [in English]. See also Rome, Churches of.

SANTA SOPHIA. The famous church at *Constantinople, dedicated to the 'Holy *Wisdom' (i.e. the Person of Christ), was built under *Justinian by Anthemius of Tralles and Isidore of Miletus between 532 and 537 and consecrated in 538. One of the most perfect examples of Byzantine architecture, its chief feature is the enormous dome, supported by piers, arches, and pendentives, and pierced by 40 windows, which crowns the basilica. In 1453 the church was converted into a mosque by the Turks, and the mosaics which adorned its interior were covered up and partly destroyed. They were restored in 1847–9 by the Italian architect Fossati and since 1931, under American direction, esp. by T. Whittemore.

W. R. Lethaby–H. Swainson, The Church of Sancta Sophia, Constantinople. A Study of Byzantine Building (1894). E. M. Antoniades, Ἔκφρασις τῆς Ἁγίας Σοφίας (3 vols., Athens, 1907–9). V. R. Zaloziecky, Die Sophienkirche in Konstantinopel und ihre Stellung in der abendländischen Architektur (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xii; 1936). A. M. Schneider, Die Hagia Sophia zu Konstantinopel (Bilderhefte Antiker Kunst herausgegeben vom Archäologischen Institut des Deutschen Reiches, vi; [1938]). E. H. Swift, Hagia Sophia (New York, 1940). R. L. Van Nice, Saint Sophia in Istanbul. An Architectural Survey (Washington, D.C., [1965] ff.). T. Whittemore, The Mosaics of St. Sophia at Istanbul (Byzantine Institute, 4 vols., 1933–52); C. Mango, Materials for the Study of the Mosaics of St. Sophia at Istanbul (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, viii; 1962). See also works cited under Constantinople.

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA. See Compostela.

SANTIAGO, Order of. A military order under the patronage of St. *James founded in 1170 for the protection of pilgrims and the expulsion of the Moors. Its constitution was closely modelled on that of the *Templars; it was approved by Pope *Alexander III in 1175. A distinctive feature of the Order was that the knights were allowed to marry under certain conditions, a right obtained by the other military Orders only at the end of the Middle Ages. The Order rapidly acquired property in Castile and Portugal as well as León, and in 1523 its administration was annexed to the Spanish crown.

J. López Arguleta, Bullarium Equestris Ordinis Sancti Jacobi de Spatha (Madrid, 1719). D. W. Lomax, La Orden de Santiago (1170–1275) (1965), with bibl.

SARABAITES. A name, of doubtful derivation, given in the early Church to a class of ascetics who dwelt either in their own houses or in small groups near cities and acknowledged no monastic superior. Their mode of life seems to have been regarded with disfavour, notably by St. *Benedict, who refers to them adversely in the first chapter of his rule.

Comm. on rule of St. Benedict (q.v.), esp. that by P. Delatte, O.S.B. (Eng. tr., 1921), pp. 30–2. J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, VII. ii. 4.

SARACENS (Lat. Saracenus, from Gk. Σαρακηνός, perh. from Arabic Sharqi, 'an Oriental'). A word used by medieval writers of the Arabs generally and later applied to the infidel and Mohammedan nations against whom the crusaders fought. In his De Haeresibus Compendium, 101 (PG, xciv, 764 AB) St. *John of Damascus identifies the Saracens with the Ishmaelites, giving a curious etymology, as though the word were Σάρρας κένοι, i.e. the descendants of Hagar the Ishmaelite whom Sarah sent away empty. The term was not used by the Mohammedans themselves. See Islam.

SARAPION, St. See Serapion, St.

SARAVIA, HADRIAN À (1531–1613), Protestant divine. Born at Hesdin in Artois of Hispano-Flemish Protestant parents, he became pastor at Antwerp, where he assisted in the drafting of the *Belgic Confession (1561). The religious disturbances in the Low Countries having compelled him to transfer his residence to the *Channel Islands, he here acted as assistant minister at St. Peter's, Guernsey. Later he became master of the Grammar School at Southampton, and then returned to Holland, where he was made professor of divinity at *Leyden. In 1585 he again left the Low Countries for England, was appointed rector of Tattenhill (1588), and in 1591 he became a prebendary of *Gloucester. From then onwards he was a zealous champion of episcopacy, esp. in his De Diversis Gradibus Ministrorum Evangelii (1590), which led to a controversy with T. *Beza. Incidentally the book was among the earliest Protestant writings to stress the claims of the heathen on the preaching of the Gospel. In 1595 Saravia became vicar of Lewisham and in 1610 of Great Chart. A cultured and studious man, he was a close friend of R. *Hooker and I. *Casaubon. He was also one of the translators of the AV of the Bible.

A collection of some of his writings was publ. as Diversi Tractatus Theologici (London, 1611). His treatise, De Sacra Eucharistia, ed. with Eng. tr. by G. A. *Denison (1855), with notes on the author, pp. vii–xxviii. G. W. Sprott in D.N.B., I (1897), pp. 299–301, s.v., with reff.

SARCOPHAGUS. Sarcophagi, i.e. stone coffins, usually adorned with bas-reliefs, were much used down to the Byzantine period for the burial of both pagans and Christians. Till a late date Christians continued to adorn them with pagan designs; but from the 4th cent. Christian designs also became common. The Christian subjects illustrated were, however, strictly limited in number, the most popular being *Jonah and the whale, *Moses striking the rock, the apprehension of *Peter, and one or two of the Lord's miracles. Most of the extant Christian sarcophagi are to be found in Italy, esp. in the *Lateran Museum and at *Ravenna. There are also many at Arles.

G. Wilpert, I sarcofagi cristiani antichi (3 vols., bound in 5, 1929–36); F. Gerke, Die christlichen Sarkophage der vorkonstantinischen Zeit (Studien zur spätantiken Kunstgeschichte, xi; 1940); G. Bovini, I sarcofagi paleocristiani. Determinazione della loro cronologia mediante l'analisi dei ritratti (Monumenti di Antichità Cristiana, II Serie, v; 1949); A. Saggiorato, I sarcofagi paleocristiani con scene di Passione (Studi di Antichità Cristiane, i; 1968). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 778–888, s.v.

SARDICA, Council of (mod. Sofia). A Council summoned c. 343 by the Emps. Constans and Constantius principally to settle the orthodoxy of St. *Athanasius. It was intended that it should be an Oecumenical Council, but the E. bishops on arrival refused to attend on the ground that Athanasius, whom the E. had deposed, was being regarded by the W. as a proper member of the synod. The W. Bishops therefore met by themselves, under the presidency of *Hosius of Cordova. They confirmed the restoration of Athanasius, acquitted *Marcellus of Ancyra of heresy, and also restored Asclepas, Bp. of Gaza, who had been deposed by a Synod of *Antioch. The Council is famous for the disciplinary canons which it passed, chief among which are the provisions constituting the Bp. of Rome a court of appeal for accused bishops in certain circumstances. The canons of Sardica were at one time held to be canons of *Nicaea and were quoted as such by Pope *Zosimus in a letter sent in 418 to a Council of *Carthage.

The documents connected with the Council, incl. the text of the canons (both Gk. and Lat. versions), will be found in Hardouin, i, cols. 635–84, and Mansi, iii (Florence, 1759), cols. 1–140. Convenient ed. of canons only in Lauchert, pp. 51–72. Critical ed. of Lat. text of canons [incl. Gk. text in parallel column] in E.O.M.I.A., I. ii. 3 (1930), pp. 441–560. Lat. and Gk. text also pr., with Fr. tr., by P. P. Joannou, Discipline Générale Antique, i, pt. 2 (Pontificia Commissione per la Redazione del Codice di Diritto Canonico Orientale, Fonti, ix; 1962), pp. 159–89. Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 733–823. J. *Friedrich's criticism of the authenticity of the canons was decisively answered by C. H. *Turner, 'The Genuineness of the Sardican Canons', in J.T.S., iii (1902), pp. 370–97. On the Sardican Creed, F. *Loofs, Das Glaubensbekenntnis der Homousianer von Sardika (Abh. (Berl.), 1909, Hft. 1). H. Hess, The Canons of the Council of Sardica, A.D. 343 (Oxford, 1958). G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iii (1936), pp. 123–30. Id. in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1109–14, s.v. 'Sardique (Concile de)'.

SARPI, PAOLO (1552–1623), Fra Paolo, *Servite theologian. A native of *Venice, he entered the Servite Order in 1565 or 1566, and was elected Provincial in 1579. From 1585 to 1588 he was Procurator-General. His relations with leading Protestants aroused the suspicion of the Curia, which opposed several times his appointment to an episcopal see. In the struggle between Venice and *Paul V (1606–7) he defended the interests of the Republic, which appointed him its theological consultor in 1606. Largely owing to his influence the interdict placed on Venice remained without effect, and his violent anti-Papal activities resulted in his excommunication in 1607. In the same year an abortive attempt to murder him was made, possibly by his ecclesiastical enemies. Despite his excommunication he remained theological counsellor to the Republic and exercised his priestly functions until his death. His most important work is the Historia del Concilio Tridentino, first published, in English, at London in 1619, under the name of 'Pietro Soave Polano' (an anagram of 'Paolo Sarpi Veneto'). It is based on much authentic material but, lacking in objectivity, it represents the Council as being solely a conspiracy against the reform of the Church. Sarpi's general attitude favoured the Protestants, and he was also keenly interested in the new scientific movement.

Works collected in 5 vols., bound in 6 (Venice, 1677), with life by Fulgentio Micanzio, Ord. Serv. (orig. publd. Leyden, 1646) in vol. i, pp. 1–326; standard ed., 8 vols. (Helmstadt–Verona, 1761–8); modern ed. by M. D. Busnelli–G. Gambarin–R. Amerio in the series 'Scrittori d'Italia' (6 vols. in 8, Bari, 1931–40 [incomplete].) There are also modern edd. of Lettere ai Gallicani by B. Ulianich (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, xxvi; Wiesbaden, 1961) and La Repubblica di Venezia, la Casa d'Austria e gli Uscocchi, aggiunta e supplimento all'Istoria degli Uscocchi trattato di pace et accommodamento, by G. and L. Cozzi ('Scrittori d'Italia', ccxxxi; Bari, 1965). A. Bianchi-Giovini, Biografia di Frà Paolo Sarpi (2 vols., Brussels, 1836); P. de Balan, Frà Paolo Sarpi (Venice, 1887). Arabella G. Campbell, The Life of Fra Paolo Sarpi (1869); A. Robertson, Fra Paolo Sarpi, the Greatest of the Venetians [1894]. F. A. Yates, 'Paolo Sarpi's "History of the Council of Trent"' in Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, vii (1944), pp. 123–44. L. Salvatorelli, 'Le idee religiose di Fra Paolo Sarpi' in Atti della Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Memorie. Classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, Ser. 8, v (1954), pp. 311–60; G. Cozzi, 'Fra Paolo Sarpi, l'anglicanesimo e la "Historia del Concilio Tridentino"' in Rivista Storica Italiana, lxviii (1956), pp. 559–619. G. Getto, Paolo Sarpi (Biblioteca della Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, Studi e Testi, i; 1967). P. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 486–8, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1115–21, s.v.; H. Jedin in E.C., x (1953), col. 1928 f., s.v., with further bibl.

SARTRE, JEAN PAUL. See Existentialism.

SARUM; SARUM RITE. See Salisbury; Salisbury, Use of.

SATAN. In the Hebrew-Christian tradition, the supreme embodiment of evil, also the *Devil (q.v.). The word is from the Heb. שָׂטָן (satan), 'adversary', esp. one who plots against another. In the OT it is used of an angelic being hostile to God, esp. in the later Books (Job, Chr., Zech., Ps. 119). The older form of the word ('Satanas', Gk. Σατανᾶς), usual in the Greek NT and the *Vulgate, is found in J. *Wycliffe, but was abandoned in the English Bible from W. *Tyndale onwards.

W. Foerster–K. Schäferdiek in T.W.B., vii (1964), pp. 151–65, s.v. σατανᾶς.

SATIS COGNITUM. The encyclical issued by Pope *Leo XIII on 29 June 1896, on the subject of religious unity. While professing an ardent desire for the reunion of Christendom, it insisted that it was possible only on the basis that the Pope was recognized as the sole source of jurisdiction in the Church and hence the necessary centre of unity. The bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (13 Sept.), pronouncing *Anglican Ordinations invalid, followed shortly afterwards.

The text is in Leonis Papae XIII Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, vi (1900), pp. 156–89. Critique in E. Denny, Papalism. The Claims of the Papacy as set forth in the Encyclical Satis Cognitum (1912).

SATISFACTION. An act of reparation for an injury committed. In Christian theology it is usually applied to the payment of a penalty due to God on account of sin. St. *Anselm first gave the term theological currency in reference to the *Atonement (q.v.) by interpreting Christ's death as a sufficient vicarious satisfaction for the sins of the world, which was possible because of the sinlessness of His human nature and its hypostatic union with the Second Person of the Trinity.

In Catholic moral theology satisfaction is held to be a necessary element of the virtue and sacrament of penance, in addition to contrition and confession. The term was used by *Tertullian and *Cyprian of the reparation made for sin by fasting, almsgiving, and other good works, which were already in Scripture regarded as means of averting Divine punishment (cf. Dan. 4. 27, Lk. 16. 9). It became part of the penitential practice of the early Church, which enjoined such works before giving absolution. With the gradual attenuation of penances and the practice of giving absolution before satisfaction was made, the distinction between the forgiveness of the fault and the satisfaction due to it after forgiveness was worked out more clearly, the classic example, adduced by St. *Augustine, being the penance inflicted on David after Nathan had pronounced God's forgiveness (2 Sam. 12. 13, 14). Thus satifactio operis came to be regarded as a necessary means of avoiding punishment in purgatory after the sin itself had been remitted by sacramental absolution, and this doctrine, which had been repeatedly formulated by *Peter Lombard and the later Schoolmen, was defended by the Council of *Trent.

On non-Christian conceptions, L. Vannicelli, O.F.M., in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 884–7, s.v. 'Soddisfazione (nella etnologia)', with bibl. On its place in the Christian Sacrament of Penance, cf. St. *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, Suppl. qqu. 12–15. Also R. S. Franks in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 207–10, s.v.; P. Galtier, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1129–1210, s.v. See also bibl. to Penance.

SATORNILUS. See Saturninus.

SATURDAY. The Jewish '*Sabbath' (q.v.) and the day of the week on which Christ's body rested in the tomb. In the W. Saturday was observed as a fast day as early as the 3rd cent., but never so in the E. The reason of the fasting was probably the extension of the Friday fast (superponere jejunium) which was subsequently reduced to a semi-fast on both days. In modern times the Saturday fast, except during *Lent and on the *Ember Days, became more and more restricted to Italy and Rome, where it was eventually abolished in 1918. Down to the 5th cent. Mass was not celebrated on that day at Rome and Alexandria, or apparently elsewhere in the W. In most of the E. Church, on the other hand, the opposition to Judaism led it to be distinguished from the 4th cent. onwards by the celebration of the Liturgy, which in Lent is still confined to Saturday and Sunday.

The special connexion of Saturday with the BVM is a medieval development. Usually mystical reasons are given for it, such as the Sabbath rest of the Word in Mary. It found liturgical expression in the recitation of the 'Office of Our Lady' on Saturday, a practice supposed to have been introduced by *Urban II at the Council of Clermont in 1096. Acc. to pre-Tridentine MS. breviaries this office (Officium BMV in Sabbato) was said in addition to the ferial office; since the time of *Pius V (1566–72), however, it has replaced the ferial office. In the 1971 Breviary an optional memorial of the BVM is provided for use on Saturdays throughout the year, except in Lent and Advent and on certain major feasts. On the same occasions a Mass of the BVM may be said in place of the ferial Mass.

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xi; 1959), pp. 207–20.

SATURDAY, Holy. See Holy Saturday.

SATURNINUS (2nd cent.), also 'Satornilus', Syrian *Gnostic. Apparently the only authority is St. *Irenaeus (Haer., I. xxii), on whom later references to this heretic (*Hippolytus, Philosoph., vii. 28; Ps.-*Tertullian, Praescr., 3; *Epiphanius, Haer., 23; *Philaster, Haer., 31; &c.) depend. He is said to have been a pupil of Menander, the Samaritan heretic (himself the disciple of *Simon Magus), and to have taught in *Antioch. He held that the origin of things was to be sought in a Father unknown to all, who created a series of angels and other supernatural beings who in turn created man. As originally formed, man was a powerless entity who wriggled on the ground like a worm (ὡς σκώληκος σκαρίζοντος) until a divine spark set him on his feet. The God of the Jews was one of the creator angels, and the Supreme Father sent the Saviour to destroy this God and to redeem such as were endowed with the divine spark. These fantastic cosmological speculations have close affinities with those of the *Ophites, with which they are doubtless historically linked. In ethics Saturninus rejected marriage and the use of animal food.

G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 587 f., s.v.; R. Liechtenhan in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), p. 491 f., s.v. 'Satornil'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), col. 1310 f., s.v. 'Satornil'. See also bibl. to Gnosticism.

SATYRUS, St. (d. 375 or 377), elder brother of St. *Ambrose, whose household and property he administered. He was evidently a much-loved and gentle character. When Satyrus died, Ambrose preached the funeral oration 'De Excessu Fratris'. Feast day, 17 Sept.

St. Ambrose's 'De Excessu Fratris' is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xvi, 1289–1354.

SAUMAISE, CLAUDE. See Salmasius, Claudius.

SAVA, St. (c. 1176–1235), also Sabas, patron of *Serbia. Rastko was the third son of Stephen Nemanja, founder of a strong Serbian dynasty who united the Serbs into a nation. In 1191 he secretly went to Mt. *Athos, where he became a monk under the name of Sava. In 1196 his father followed him, after abdicating in favour of Sava's elder brother, Stephen. Here on Mt. Athos father and son founded the Serbian monastery of Hilandar which became the centre of Serbian culture in the Middle Ages. In 1208 Sava returned to Serbia, where, as archimandrite of the monastery of Studenica, he took an active part in the political and religious life of the country. He opposed the policy of his brother, who, in 1217, had himself crowned king with the help of the Pope, and, in 1219, Sava succeeded in establishing an independent Serbian Church, of which he was consecrated the first archbishop by the Patr. of Nicaea. He organized the Church by establishing several bishoprics, devoted himself to the education of the country, and built and embellished many churches. In 1229 he made a pilgrimage to Palestine, and in 1233 went there again to obtain the recognition of the Bulgarian patriarch from those of Alexandria, Jerusalem, and Antioch. He died on his way back in Tirnovo in Bulgaria. Feast day in the Serbian Church, 14 Jan.

J. T. Marnavitius in AA.SS., Jan. I (1647), pp. 979–83. Brief modern account in English by A. *Butler, The Lives of the Saints (ed. H. Thurston, S.J.), i (1926), p. 181. J. Matl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 350, with bibl. (mainly Eastern European).

SAVIGNY, Abbey of, Normandy (dépt. Manche). In 1105 Vitalis of Mortain, a canon of the collegiate church of St.-Évroul, established a hermitage in the Forest of Savigny. After a time some of the hermits felt a call to follow the *Benedictine Rule in its primitive strictness and Vitalis obtained from Rudolf, Count of Fougères, some grants of land. The new house, which in its customs kept some distinctive practices, e.g. the wearing of grey habits, rose to high repute, esp. under the Abbots Geoffrey (1122–38) and Serlon (1140–53); and daughter monasteries were founded in France (*La Trappe), England (Furness, *Quarr), Ireland, and elsewhere. In 1147 Serlon integrated the houses into the *Cistercian Order (confirmed by Pope *Eugenius III, 10 Apr. 1148), though they continued to retain certain peculiarities. In the later Middle Ages the orig. Abbey of Savigny declined and community life finally came to an end during the French Revolution.

C. Auvray, O.S.B., Histoire de la congrégation de Savigny, ed. A. Laveille (3 vols., Rouen, 1896–8). J. Buhot, 'L'Abbaye normande de Savigny. Chef d'ordre et fille de Cîteaux' in Le Moyen Age, xlvi (1936), pp. 1–19, 104–21, 178–90, 249–272. L. Guilloreau, O.S.B., 'Les Fondations anglaises de l'abbaye de Savigny' in Revue Mabillon, v (1909), pp. 290–335. L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2965–7, with full bibl. E. M. Obrecht, O.C.R., in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 489, s.v.

SAVILE, HENRY (1549–1622), Warden of Merton College, Oxford, and Provost of Eton. He was educated at Brasenose College, became a Fellow of Merton in 1565, and soon acquired a wide reputation as a Greek scholar, mathematician, historian, and antiquarian. In 1578 he travelled in Europe, collecting MSS., and on his return was appointed Greek tutor to Queen *Elizabeth I. In 1585 he was elected Warden of Merton, which greatly flourished under his rule. In 1596 he asked for, and obtained from the Queen, the provostship of Eton, although, not being in holy orders, he was not qualified under the statutes. In 1604 he was named as one of the scholars appointed to prepare the AV of the Bible. In 1610–13 he published in 8 folio vols. his celebrated edition of the works of St. *Chrysostom, based on a collation of the best available MSS. and earlier editions, and still of great value for determining the correct text of many of St. Chrysostom's treatises. It was printed at Savile's private press at Eton, at his own charges (£8,000), in type imported from Holland. He also helped in the foundation of the *Bodleian Library, to which he afterwards presented many MSS. and printed books; and he founded at Oxford professorships of geometry and astronomy.

S. L. Greenslade, 'The Printer's Copy for the Eton Chrysostom, 1610–13' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, vii (T.U., xcii; 1966), pp. 60–4. W. Carr in D.N.B., I (1897), pp. 367–70, s.v., with reff.

SAVONAROLA, GIROLAMO (1452–98), Italian preacher and reformer. Educated at Ferrara, he entered the *Dominican Order at *Bologna in 1474, where from the first he led a life of fervent asceticism. In 1482 he moved to the priory of San Marco at Florence, and here attracted great attention as a preacher by his passionate denunciations of the immorality of the Florentines and of the contemporary clergy. Believing himself inspired, he prophesied on the future of the Church and on other subjects, often in apocalyptic language. Elected prior in 1491, he slighted Lorenzo the Magnificent, whose end he predicted accurately, supported Charles VIII of France, in whom he saw the instrument of God for the reform of the Church, during his Italian campaign in 1494–5, and established a kind of theocratic democracy in Florence. The principles of this government, which included a thorough moral reform of the city, are laid down in his 'Rule and Government of the City of Florence'. His severity, however, made him many enemies, and in 1495 *Alexander VI summoned him to Rome to give an account of his prophecies. As he refused to leave Florence on grounds of health and personal danger, the Pope forbade him to preach; and when Savonarola continued his attacks on the Curia and Alexander himself, he was excommunicated (1497). The friar, believing himself to be directly charged by God and therefore entitled to disobey ecclesiastical authority, disregarded the excommunication and demanded a General Council which should depose the Pope. His position, however, was already shaken by the hostility of many citizens and other religious orders, esp. the *Franciscans, one of whom proposed an ordeal by fire between himself and one of Savonarola's followers in order to disprove his prophecies. But the ordeal did not take place, and the people now turned against the Dominican and imprisoned him together with two of his brethren. Put to the torture, he confessed to having acted not by Divine inspiration but for personal motives, a confession which he soon retracted. He was hanged as a schismatic and heretic on the market-place of Florence. Among his many writings 'The Triumph of the Cross' is a remarkable apology for orthodox Catholicism. His theological treatises follow the lines of Thomist doctrine. His character has been variously judged. Whilst he has sometimes been venerated almost as a saint, e.g. by St. *Catherine dei Ricci, others would see in him only a fanatic.

Edizione nazionale of his Works (Rome, 1955 ff.). Modern edd. of various of his Sermons by G. Baccini (Florence, 1889), P. Villari–E. Casanova (ib., 1898), F. Cognasso–R. Palmarocchi ('Documenti di Storia Italiana', Perugia and Venice, 3 vols. bound in 4, 1930–5) and of his letters by R. Ridolfi (Florence, 1933). Anthology ed. M. Ferrara, Predichi e scritti (Milan, 1930). Le Procès de Savonarole ed. R. Klein [1957]. 16th cent. life attributed to P. Burlamacchi ed. R. Ridolfi (Florence, 1937). F. T. Perrens, Jérôme Savonarola, sa vie, ses prédications, ses écrits [c. 1853]; R. R. Madden, The Life and Martyrdom of Savonarola, Illustrative of the History of Church and State (2 vols., 1853). P. Villari, La storia di Girolamo Savonarola e de' suoi tempi (2 vols., 1859–1861; Eng. tr., 1863); J. Schnitzer, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte Savonarolas (4 vols., 1902–10); id., Savonarola (2 vols., Munich, 1924). P. Misciattelli, Savonarola (1925; Eng. tr., 1929). R. Ridolfi, Studi savonaroliani (1935); id., Vita di Girolamo Savonarola (2 vols. 1952; Eng. tr., 1959). M. Ferrara, Savonarola (2 vols., Florence, 1952). R. de Maio, Savonarola e la Curia Romana (Uomini e dottrine, xv; 1969). D. Weinstein, Savonarola and Florence (Princeton, 1970). M. Ferrara, Bibliografia Savonaroliana. Bibliografia ragionata degli scritti editi dal principio del secolo XIX ad oggi (Biblioteca di Bibliografia Italiana, xxxi; 1958).

SAVOY CONFERENCE, The. The conference which sat by royal warrant, dated 25 March 1661, at the Savoy in the Strand from 15 April until 24 July 1661, to review the BCP. It consisted of twelve bishops, twelve Presbyterian divines, and nine assessors from each party. The Presbyterians vainly hoped to gain concessions which would enable them to remain members of the Established Church. The bishops, led by G. *Sheldon, Bp. of London (though Accepted Frewen, Abp. of York, was nominal president), ignored R. *Baxter's alternative service-book and his appeal that ministers not episcopally ordained should not be required to seek reordination. In reply to the Presbyterian *Exceptions (q.v.) to the BCP, the bishops made only 17 trivial concessions, 15 of which were embodied in the BCP of 1662. The Presbyterians could not accept the 1662 Book and about 2,000 were deprived of their livings.

Proceedings of the Commission for the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer (1661). E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences and other Proceedings connected with the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer from the Year 1558 to the Year 1690 (1840), chs. vi and vii. R. Baxter, A Petition for Peace (1661). E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Savoy Conference and the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer' in G. F. Nuttall–[W.] O. Chadwick (edd.), From Uniformity to Unity (1962), pp. 89–148. F. E. *Brightman in D.E.C.H., pp. 548–50, s.v.

SAVOY DECLARATION, The. A statement of *Congregational principles and polity of a moderate type, drawn up at a Conference held at the Chapel of the old Savoy Palace in 1658 by representatives of 120 churches. It consists of a Preface, a Confession of Faith closely akin to the *Westminster Confession, and a Platform of Discipline. The first is largely an apology for the divisions of the Reformed Churches as contrasted with the 'dull and stupid peace' of the Church of Rome and a plea for toleration of the Congregational form of Church government side by side with Presbyterianism. The second professes the modified *Calvinism of the Westminster Confession, with a few alterations, e.g. rejecting the power of the civil authority to punish heresy. The third part, which treats of the Institution of Churches, declares that all necessary power is vested in each individual Church and repudiates the institution, by Christ, of a wider organization.

Text repr. in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds, iii (1877), pp. 707–29, with introd. in vol. i (1877), pp. 829–33. Modern ed., with introd., by A. G. Matthews (London, 1959). See also works cited under Congregationalism.

SAWTREY, WILLIAM (d. 1401), *Lollard. As a priest at Lynn, Norfolk, he was summoned before his bishop in 1399 to answer charges of heresy; and after ministering in London, he was charged before Abp. T. *Arundel in 1401 with heresies concerning the adoration of the cross, *transubstantiation, and other matters. He appealed to the King in Parliament, and also made a defence from the NT and St. *Augustine. On the ground that he had relapsed into heresies which he had abjured in 1399, he was burned, though the statute '*De Haeretico Comburendo' had not yet been passed.

A. M. Cooke in D.N.B., I (1897), p. 380 f.

SAXA RUBRA, Battle of. See Milvian Bridge, Battle of the.

SAXON CONFESSION, The (1551). The Protestant Confession of Faith drawn up in 1551 by P. *Melanchthon at the Emperor's request for the Council of *Trent. It followed the main lines of the *Augsburg Confession of 1530 but, with all hope of reconciliation between Catholic and Protestant over, was less conciliatory. The distinctive Protestant doctrines were elaborated round the two Articles in the *Apostles' Creed on the forgiveness of sins and the Church. The former article was held to exclude merit and justification by works, the latter to prove the Church to be a spiritual though visible communion of believers in Christ. The sacramental character of the Eucharistic gifts was asserted to be confined to their use in the service. Unlike the Augsburg Confession, the Saxon Confession bore the signatures of theologians only, among them, besides Melanchthon himself, J. *Bugenhagen and G. *Major.

Lat. and Germ. texts pr. among P. Melanchthon's collected works ed. E. H. Bindseil, xxviii (Corpus Reformatorum, xxviii; Brunswick, 1860), cols. 369–568, with introd. cols. 327–68. Lat. text only also pr. in Sylloge Confessionum sub Tempus Reformandae Ecclesiae Editarum (Oxford, 1804), pp. 199–287. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, i (1877), pp. 340–3.

SAYCE, ARCHIBALD HENRY (1845–1933), English oriental scholar. He was elected a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1869, and from 1891 to 1915 was professor of Assyriology at Oxford. He was a member of the company which produced the RV of the OT. After 1885 he was almost wholly absorbed in the history of religion, particularly of Egypt, Babylon and Israel, and in this connexion he travelled and explored extensively in the E. His many publications included works on the Hittites, Hebrews, Assyrians, Babylonians, and Egyptians. In several of them, notably The 'Higher Criticism' and the Verdict of the Monuments (1894), he defended the Mosaic authorship of the *Pentateuch.

A. H. Sayce, Reminiscences (1923). B. Gunn in D.N.B., 1931–1940, pp. 786–8.

SAYINGS OF JESUS, The. The name given by their first editors to the texts preserved in two *Oxyrhynchus papyri (Nos. 1 and 654). It is now clear that these texts, together with those in No. 655, if not portions of the Greek original of passages in the Gospel of *Thomas (q.v.), are very closely related to it.

B. P. Grenfell–A. S. Hunt, ΛΟΓΙΑ ΙΗΣΟΥ. Sayings of Our Lord from an early Greek Papyrus (1897); idd., New Sayings of Jesus and Fragments of a Lost Gospel (1904). See bibl. to Thomas, Gospel of.

SAYINGS OF THE JEWISH FATHERS, The. See Pirqe Aboth.

SCALA SANCTA (also known as the Scala Pilati). A staircase of twenty-eight Tyrian marble steps near the *Lateran church at *Rome. Tradition affirms that they were the steps descended by Christ after His condemnation to death and brought to the W. by St. *Helena from the palace of *Pilate in *Jerusalem. Now covered with wood, they are a popular place of *pilgrimage in Rome, pilgrims making the ascent on their knees. At the top of the steps is the 'Sancta Sanctorum' chapel (1278), the only surviving piece of the old Lateran Palace.

H. Thurston, S.J., The Holy Year of Jubilee (1900), pp. 185–91, with full reff. L. Oliger, O.F.M., in C.E., xiii (1912), p. 505 f., s.v.

SCALIGER, JOSEPH JUSTUS (1540–1609), French scholar. He was a native of Agen and studied Greek and oriental languages at Paris, where he became a *Calvinist in 1562. After travelling in Italy (1565) and England and Scotland (1566), between 1567 and 1570 he fought on the side of the *Huguenots. From 1572 to 1574 he was professor at *Geneva. The following years he spent in private research until, in 1593, he became the successor of J. Lipsius at *Leyden university, which he made a European centre of philological studies, though he did not lecture himself. His editions of Latin authors such as Festus (1575), Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius (1577), and others were a new departure in the field of textual criticism. His greatest claim to fame, however, is his De Emendatione Temporum (1583), by which he established the modern science of chronology, though his attacks on the newly introduced *Gregorian Calendar and on the genuineness of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite earned him the hostility of the *Jesuits. In 1606 followed the Thesaurus Temporum, containing a brilliant partial reconstruction of the 'Chronicon' of *Eusebius of Caesarea. D. *Petavius's great work, De Doctrina Temporum (1627), directed against Scaliger, whom it corrected, carried on his ideas.

The chief sources for his life are his Epistolae (Leyden, 1627) and his Lettres françaises inédites (ed. P. Tamizey de Larroque, Agen and Paris, 1879) Autobiography of Joseph Scaliger. With autobiographical Selections from his Letters, his Testament and the Funeral Orations by Daniel Heinsius and Dominicus Baudius. Tr. . . . with introd. and notes by G. W. Robinson (Harvard Translations, Cambridge, Mass., 1927; good collection of material. 'Autobiography', however, very brief, on pp. 29–33). Life by J. Bernays (Berlin, 1855). [M. *Pattison,] 'J. J. Scaliger' in Quarterly Review, cviii (1860), pp. 34–81, review of J. Bernays's book; repr., with long extension from Pattison's MSS., in M. Pattison, Essays, i (1889), pp. 132–243. C. M. Bruehl, 'Josef Justus Scaliger. Ein Beitrag zur geistesgeschichtlichen Bedeutung der Altertumswissenschaft' in Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, xii (1960), pp. 201–18, xiii (1961), pp. 45–65. J. E. Sandys, History of Classical Scholarship, ii (1908), pp. 199–204. R. C. Christie–J. E. Sandys in E.B. (ed. 11), xxiv (1911), pp. 284–6, s.v. 'Scaliger (2)'.

SCANDINAVIA, Christianity in. See Denmark; Norway; and Sweden, Christianity in.

SCAPULAR (Lat. scapulare, from scapulae, 'shoulder-blades'). A short cloak consisting essentially of a piece of cloth worn over the shoulders and hanging down in front and behind. It is usually from 14 to 18 inches wide with its two ends reaching almost to the feet, and forms part of the regular monastic habit. The Rule of St. *Benedict (cap. 55) prescribes its use for the monks when engaged in manual labour and the rules of some religious orders require it to be worn also throughout the night. By a natural symbolism it is taken to denote the 'yoke of Christ' (jugum Christi, cf. Mt. 11. 29 f.). A vesture of very much smaller dimensions (known as 'the smaller scapular') is worn by persons living in the world who have become affiliated to the religious orders, e.g. *tertiaries. In the RC Church important privileges have been attached to wearing the smaller scapular.

Comms. on rule of St. Benedict (q.v.), esp. by P. Delatte, O.S.B. (Eng. tr., 1921), p. 349 f. P. Oppenheim, O.S.B., Das Mönchskleid im christlichen Altertum (R.Q. Supplementheft, xxviii; 1931), esp. pp. 139–42. P. E. Magennis, Ord. Carm., The Scapular Devotion. Origin, Legislation and Indulgences attached to the Scapular (Dublin, 1923). H. Thurston, S.J., 'Scapulars' in The Month, cxlix (1927), pp. 481–8, and cl (1927), pp. 44–58. J. Hilgers, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 508–14, s.v.; P. N. Zammit in N.C.E., xii (1969), pp. 1114–16, s.v.

SCARAMELLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (1687–1752), Italian spiritual writer. He entered the *Jesuit Order in 1706 and was ordained priest in 1717. From 1722 onwards he was chiefly engaged on giving missions and retreats in the Pontifical States. He expounded his spiritual teaching in three works, Direttorio ascetico (1752), Discernimento de' spiriti (1753), and Direttorio mistico (1754). In his Ascetic Directory, which has long been regarded as a classic, Scaramelli examines the nature of Christian perfection and the means of attaining it. His books were designed primarily for the use of spiritual directors.

Eng. tr. of Direttorio ascetico by W. Eyre (4 vols., Dublin, 1870; ed. 2, London, 1879–81). O. Marchetti, S.J., 'Un opera inedita su di una mistica del 700 attribuita al P. Scaramelli, S.J.' in Archivum Historicum Societatis Jesu, ii (1933), pp. 230–57. L. A. Hogue, S.J., 'The Direttorio mistico of J. B. Scaramelli, S.J.', ib., ix (1940), pp. 1–39. Sommervogel, vii, cols. 689–94 (incomplete). Pourrat, iv, pp. 439–42. L. A. Hogue, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1259–63, s.v.

SCETE. The southern portion of the *Nitrian desert which lies to the west of the mouths of the Nile, celebrated in the 4th and 5th cents. as a centre of monasticism. Among the most celebrated of its monks were Pambo and *Macarius the Egyptian.

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 994–1002.

SCHAFF, PHILIP (1819–93), German American theologian and Church historian. Born in Switzerland, he was educated at *Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin, and became professor first in the German Reformed Seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania (1844), and later in *Union Theological Seminary, New York (1870). He saw through the press an immense body of theological literature. The most extensive of his original writings was his History of the Christian Church (12 vols., 1883–93), a popular work from the standpoint of Evangelical liberalism, hortatory rather than scientific in tone. He edited, among other compendious works, the Religious Encyclopaedia (3 vols., 1882–4), an American adaptation of J. J. *Herzog's Realencyclopädie (12 vols., 1908–12), and the sets of patristic translations known as the Nicene and post-Nicene Fathers (Series I, 14 vols., 1886–9; Series II, 14 vols., of varying merit, 1890–1900); and he compiled a valuable collection of credal documents in The Creeds of Christendom (3 vols., 1877). From 1870 he was president of the American committee which co-operated with the British committee responsible for the *Revised Version of the Bible. As an exponent of the '*Mercersburg Theology', he was closely associated in outlook with J. W. Nevin (q.v.).

David S. Schaff (son), The Life of Philip Schaff (New York, 1897). J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology. Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961). D. S. Schaff in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 515–22, s.v.; H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog., xvi (1935), p. 417 f.

SCHEEBEN, MATTHIAS JOSEPH (1835–88), German Catholic theologian. He was educated at the *Gregorian university in Rome (1852–9), ordained priest in 1858, and was professor of dogma at the seminary at *Cologne from 1860 to his death. Already in his first speculative work Natur und Gnade (1861) he outlined his doctrine of the supernatural, which he describes as a participation in the Being of God, and popularized this conception in Die Herrlichkeiten der göttlichen Gnade (1863, an independent version of a work of the 17th cent. author, E. Nieremberg), which had an immediate success and was translated into many languages. In his profound, though sometimes obscure, Mysterien des Christenthums (1865) he attempted to build up the whole organism of Christian doctrine, viewed as a supernatural cosmos with the mystery of the Blessed Trinity as its centre. In the following years his dogmatic work was interrupted by the controversies raised by the impending *Vatican Council, in which he took a vigorous part as one of the chief opponents of J. J. I. von *Döllinger and a passionate defender of Papal *Infallibility. Between 1873 and 1887 he wrote his Handbuch der katholischen Dogmatik, a work of immense erudition, based on Thomist principles but also making extensive use of the Fathers as well as of modern theologians. Scheeben stood for the rights of supernatural faith against the rationalist and naturalist tendencies of 18th and 19th cent. theology which had been rife esp. in Germany and Austria.

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. J. Höfer (8 vols., Freiburg i.Br., 1941–67). Eng. tr. of Die Mysterien des Christentums by C. Vollert, S.J. (St. Louis, Mo., 1946), and of Natur und Gnade by id. (ibid. and London, 1954). J. Hertkens, Professor M. J. Scheeben. Leben und Wirken eines katholischen Gelehrten im Dienste der Kirche (1892). K. Feckes and others, M. J. Scheeben (Mainz, 1935). F. S. Pancheri, O.F.M., Il pensiero teologico di M. J. Scheeben e S. Tommaso (1956), with bibl.; B. Fraigneau-Julien, P.S.S., L'Église et le caractère sacramentel selon M.-J. Scheeben (1958); W. Bartz, Die lehrende Kirche. Ein Beitrag zur Ekklesiologie M. J. Scheebens (Trierer theologische Studien, ix; 1959). N. Hoffmann, SS.CC., Natur und Gnade. Die Theologie der Gottesschau als vollendeter Vergöttlichung des Geistgeschöpfes bei M. J. Scheeben (Analecta Gregoriana, clx; 1967). E. Paul, Denkweg und Denkform der Theologie von Matthias Joseph Scheeben (Münchener theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, lx; 1970), with extensive bibl. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1270–4, s.v.; A. Piolanti in E.C., xi (1953), col. 33 f., s.v., with further bibl. J. Höfer in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 376–9, s.v.

SCHEFFLER, JOHANNES. See Angelus Silesius.

SCHELLING, FRIEDRICH WILHELM JOSEPH VON (1775–1854), German Idealist philosopher. He was the son of a Württemberg pastor and was educated at the *Tübingen Stift, where G. W. F. *Hegel was one of his elder contemporaries. From 1798 to 1803 he taught at Jena, where he was brought into close contact with the leaders of the *Romantic Movement, and from 1803 at the university of Würzburg. Difficulties with the government led him to retire to Munich in 1806. From 1820 to 1826 he lectured at Erlangen, and in 1827 he became professor at the newly founded university of Munich. In 1841 he was called to Berlin to counteract the influence of Hegel's disciples.

Schelling never elaborated a consistent philosophical system. His constantly changing views owed much to his vivid imagination and were also greatly influenced by current scientific doctrines which, however, he only imperfectly understood. In his early years he was under the influence of J. G. *Fichte and thus mediately of I. *Kant. In his first important work, Vom Ich als Prinzip der Philosophie (1795), he acknowledged only one reality, the infinite and absolute Ego, of which the universe was the expression. In his Ideen zu einer Philosophie der Natur (1797) and Von der Weltseele (1798), this abstract pantheism was modified in favour of his conception of 'Naturphilosophie', acc. to which nature was an absolute being which works unconsciously, though purposively. The problem of the relation of nature to spirit later gave rise to his 'Identitätsphilosophie', expounded esp. in Darlegung des Systems der Philosophie (1802) and Bruno, oder über das göttliche und natürliche Prinzip der Dinge (1802). Acc. to this philosophy, which shows strong traces of B. *Spinoza, both nature and spirit are but manifestations of one and the same being, absolute identity being the ground of all things. In his subsequent speculations he became more and more influenced by *Neoplatonist and *theosophist speculations, esp. by J. *Boehme. Thus in Philosophie und Religion (1804) he explained the universe as a Fall of the ideas into matter and redemption as a return to the world of ideas. His attempt in Philosophische Untersuchungen über das Wesen der menschlichen Freiheit (1809) to reconcile Christianity with his philosophy was carried on later in his Berlin lectures (publd. 1856–8). Here he distinguished three elements in God: (1) the blind primeval necessary being; (2) the three potentialities of the Divine Essence, viz. unconscious will (material cause), rational will (efficient cause), and unity of the two (final cause of creation); (3) the Three Persons who evolve from the three potentialities by overcoming the primeval being. In the history of Christianity he also distinguished three periods, viz. the Petrine or Catholic, the Pauline or Protestant, and the Johannine or the Church of the future.

Schelling exercised a profound influence on German thought. His earlier teaching was the point of departure of Hegel's system, and many elements of his nature and religious philosophy were taken up and transformed by E. von *Hartmann.

Collected works ed. by his son, K. F. A. von Schelling (14 vols., Stuttgart, 1856–61) and ed. M. Schroter (6 vols., Munich, 1927–8, + 6 extra vols., 1943–59). His Munich lectures 'Zur Geschichte der neueren Philosophie' ed. A. *Drews (Leipzig, 1902). Correspondence and other documents ed. F. Fuhrmans, Bonn, 1962 ff. Among the many studies of his system may be mentioned: J. Watson, Schelling's Transcendental Idealism (1882); E. von Hartmann, Schelling's Philosophisches System (Leipzig, 1897); H. Sueskind, Der Einfluss Schellings auf die Entwicklung von Schleiermachers System (Tübingen, 1909); W. Metzger, Die Epochen der Schellingschen Philosophie v. 1795–1802 (Heidelberg, 1911); E. Bréhier, Schelling ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1912). R. Kroner, Von Kant bis Hegel, i (1921), pp. 535–612, ii (Tübingen, 1924), pp. 1–141. N. Hartmann, Die Philosophie des deutschen Idealismus, i (1923), pp. 123–186, with bibl. p. 279 f. H. Knittermeyer, Schelling und die romantische Schule (Geschichte der Philosophie in Einzeldarstellungen, Abt. vii: Die Philosophie der neuesten Zeit i. Band xxx–xxxi; 1929). H. Fuhrmans, Schellings letzte Philosophie (Neue Deutsche Forschungen, Abteilung Philosophie, 1940); id., Schellings Philosophie der Weltalter (Düsseldorf, 1954). K. *Jaspers, Schelling. Grösse und Verhängnis (Munich [1955]). E. D. Hirsch, Wordsworth and Schelling. A Typological Study of Romanticism (Yale Studies in English, cxlv; 1960). K. Hemmerle, Gott und das Denken nach Schellings Spätphilosophie (Freiburg, 1968); H. Holz, Spekulation und Faktizität. Zum Freiheitsbegriff des mittleren und späten Schelling (Bonn, 1970). Bibliography by G. Schneeberger (Bern, 1954). Überweg, iv, pp. 35–67, with bibl. pp. 674–7. R. Kroner in E.B. (ed. 1968), xix, p. 1153 f.

SCHELSTRATE, EMMANUEL (1649–92), Belgian Church historian and canonist. A native of Antwerp, he early specialized in the study of Christian antiquities. Through his publications, in which he defended the rights of the Holy See, he attracted the attention of *Innocent XI, who made him Prefect of the *Vatican Library and later canon of the *Lateran and of *St. Peter's. Among his writings are Antiquitas Illustrata circa Concilia Generalia et Provincialia (1678), in which he undertook to prove the antiquity of the Roman primacy, and the Acta Constantiensis Concilii (1683), defending the supremacy of the Pope over the Council against the *Gallican Articles of 1682. In the considerable controversy created by the latter, J. B. *Bossuet and A. *Arnauld took sides against the author. In the De disciplina arcani (1685) he developed the view that the 'discipline of the secret', i.e. the secrecy exacted by Christ, the Apostles and their successors, explained the relative weakness of the evidence for the doctrines of the Person of Christ and the Sacraments in the primitive Church.

The primary authority for Schelstrate's life is the introd. to vol. ii of his Antiquitas Illustrata (Rome, 1697; i.e. five years after his death), written by an unknown Roman friend of the author. L. Ceyssens, O.F.M., La Correspondance d'Emmanuel Schelstrate, préfet de la bibliothèque vaticane, 1683–1692 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, fasc. 1; 1949); this vol. has a valuable study of Schelstrate with full bibl. reff. in its introd. (esp. pp. 18–90). J. Ruysschaert, 'Annotations marginales à la biographie d'Emmanuel Schelstrate' in Bulletin de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, xxviii (1953), pp. 137–56. J. Mercier in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1278–80, s.v., also with bibl. reff.

SCHENUDI. See Shenoute.

SCHISM (Gk. σχίσμα, 'tear' or 'rent'). Formal and wilful separation from the unity of the Church. In a technical sense the word is first met with in St. *Irenaeus (adv. Haer., IV. xxxiii. 7). Early instances of schismatic bodies are the *Novatianists and *Donatists. RC theologians account all those out of communion with the Pope, the supreme head of the Church, in a state of material schism, though the Decree of the Second *Vatican Council on Ecumenism stated that those baptized into other Christian communions were established in 'a certain, albeit imperfect, communion with the Catholic Church'. Schism is distinguished from heresy in that the separation involved is not at basis doctrinal; whereas heresy is opposed to faith, schism is opposed to charity. Schism does not entail the loss of orders. A bishop in schism can ordain and a priest in schism can celebrate the Eucharist. The term 'schism' is also often used by Anglican and Protestant theologians of divisions within the Church, e.g. of that between Anglicanism and Roman (or Orthodox) Catholicism. See also Ecumenical Movement and Reunion.

T. A. *Lacey, Unity and Schism (1917).

SCHISM ACT, The. The Act (12 Anne, Stat. 2, c. 7) passed in 1714 by the English Parliament under the Tory leadership of Bolingbroke forbidding dissenters to keep schools or engage in tuition. The Act was repealed in 1719 by 6 Geo. I, c. 4.

The principal clauses of the Act are pr. in W. C. Costin–J. S. Watson (edd.), The Law and Working of the Constitution. Documents, i (1952), pp. 121–3.

SCHLATTER, ADOLF (1852–1938), Protestant theologian. Born at St. *Gall in Switzerland, he taught first at Berne (1880–8), and later was professor at Greifswald (1888–93), Berlin (1893–1898), and Tübingen (1898–1922). He held that the only sound foundation of Systematic Theology lay in Biblical exegesis, and also vigorously opposed all idealistic interpretations of the Christian faith. In these and other respects he anticipated the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth. His work on the Fourth Gospel exercised considerable influence on E. C. *Hoskyns. His writings (none trans. into English during his lifetime) include Der Glaube im Neuen Testament (1885), Erläuterungen zum Neuen Testament (3 vols., 1887–1904), Die philosophische Arbeit seit Cartesius (1906), Das christliche Dogma (1911), Andachten (1927).

Collection of his 'Kleine Schriften', Zur Theologie des Neuen Testaments und zur Dogmatik, ed., with introd., by U. Luck (Munich, 1969). R. Brezger, Der Schrifttum von Professor D. A. Schlatter (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xl, Hft. 2; 1938). A. Schlatter, Die Entstehung der Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie und ihr Zusammenhang mit meiner theologischen Arbeit (ib., xxv, Hft. 1; 1920). Theodor Schlatter (ed.), Adolf Schlatters Rückblick auf seine Lebensarbeit. Zu seinem hundertsten Geburtstag (Sonderheft to the Beiträge, 1952). Memorial volume to A. Schlatter and W. Lütgert by P. Althaus–G. Kittel–H. Strathmann (Beiträge, xl, Hft. 1; 1938). U. Luck, Kerygma und Tradition in der Hermeneutik Adolf Schlatters (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xlv; 1955). A. Bailer, Das systematische Prinzip in der Theologie Adolf Schlatters (Arbeiten zur Theologie, II. Reihe, xii; [1968]); G. Egg, Adolf Schlatters kritische Position gezeigt an seiner Matthäusinterpretation (ib., xiv; [1968]).

SCHLEGEL, FRIEDRICH (1772–1829), *Romantic author and Catholic apologist. From 1793 onwards he devoted himself entirely to literary pursuits. His early leanings were towards Greek ideals, as revealed in his Von den Schulen der griechischen Poesie (1794). Before long, however, he abandoned classicism and became an enthusiast for medieval poetry and the reigning German idealism, esp. the ideas of J. G. *Fichte and F. W. J. *Schelling. In 1797 he settled in Berlin, where he became one of the leaders of the Romantic Movement. His next years were devoted to lectures at Jena, Dresden, and Paris, and the study of Oriental languages and literature. In 1808 he and his wife, Dorothea, a daughter of Moses Mendelssohn, were converted to the RC Church. From now on Schlegel became an advocate of Catholic principles. In lectures on literature and modern history which he gave at Vienna (1810–12) he defended the medieval Imperial idea against the Napoleonic state: and, in association with F. X. von Baader and St. Clement Maria *Hofbauer, he sought to restore the national life of Austria and Germany on a Catholic basis. When circumstances led him to despair of a reform of the state on these lines, he looked to literature and philosophy for a renewed Catholicism. His Philosophie der Geschichte (2 vols., 1829; Eng. tr., 1835) contained the lectures given to these ends at Vienna in 1828. Philosophically, Schlegel after he became a Catholic was a severe critic of the *pantheism of G. W. F. *Hegel. His own philosophy, based on *Plato rather than *Aristotle, had affinities with some forms of *Ontologism.

Collected works ed., 10 vols., Vienna, 1822–5; crit. ed. by E. Behler and others (Munich–Zürich, 1958 ff.); also of his Literary Notebooks 1797–1801 by H. Eichner (London, 1957). Eng. tr. of selected writings by E. J. Millington (Bohn's Standard Library, London, 1849), and of 'Dialogue on Poetry' and 'Literary Aphorisms' by E. Behler–R. Struc (University Park, Pennsylvania–London, 1968). F. [D. E.] *Schleiermacher, Vertraute Briefe über Lucinde (1800). I. Rouge, Frédéric Schlegel et la genèse du romantisme allemand (1904); C. Enders, Friedrich Schlegel. Die Quellen seines Wesens und Werdens (Leipzig, 1913). O. Mann, Der junge Friedrich Schlegel. Eine Analyse von Existenz und Werk (1932). L. Wirz, Friedrich Schlegels philosophische Entwicklung (Grenzfragen zwischen Theologie und Philosophie, xiii; 1939). J. J. Anstett, La Pensée religieuse de Friedrich Schlegel (Strassburg thesis; Lyons, 1941), with extensive bibl. Überweg, iv, pp. 128–33, with bibl. p. 685 f. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1492–5.

SCHLEIERMACHER, FRIEDRICH DANIEL ERNST (1768–1834), German theologian. A native of Breslau in Silesia, he was the son of a Reformed army chaplain, and, after his parents' conversion to the *Herrnhuter Brethren, was educated at their college at Niesky and their seminary at Barby. Finding the teaching imparted at Barby too narrow for his independent intellect, he entered the university of Halle in 1787, where he was introduced to the philosophy of I. *Kant and *Aristotle. In 1790 he accepted a post as tutor to a noble family in W. Prussia. Ordained to the ministry in 1794, he was appointed Reformed preacher at the Charité at Berlin, where he came into close contact with representatives of the *Romantic Movement, esp. F. *Schlegel. In 1799 he published his famous Reden über die Religion (Eng. tr., Religion. Speeches to its Cultured Despisers, 1893). In this work, which shows the influence of B. *Spinoza, G. W. *Leibniz, and I. Kant, he attempts to win the educated classes back to religion, which he defines romantically as 'a sense and taste for the infinite'. Contending that religion was based on intuition and feeling (Anschauung und Gefühl) and independent of all dogma, he saw its highest experience in a sensation of union with the infinite. In 1800 followed the Monologen, a preliminary to his later work on ethics. In 1804 he became professor of theology at Halle, but left it in 1807, after the Prussian defeat, and went to Berlin, where he was appointed preacher at the Dreifaltigkeitskirche in 1809 and dean of the Theological Faculty of the newly founded university in 1810. As such he played an influential part in the Prussian war against Napoleon, esp. through his stirring sermons. From 1819 he was chiefly occupied with his most important work, published in 1821–2 under the title Der christliche Glaube nach den Grundsätzen der evangelischen Kirche im Zusammenhang dargestellt, which is the chief source for his theology. Here he defines religion as the feeling of absolute dependence, which finds its purest expression in monotheism. The variety of forms which this feeling assumes in different individuals and nations accounts for the diversity of religions, of which Christianity is the highest, though not the only true one.

Schleiermacher's strong emphasis on feeling as the basis of religion, inherited from his Herrnhut education, was at once a reaction from contemporary German rationalism and from the ruling formalist orthodoxy. His influence on Protestant thought was enormous; generations of theologians, among whom were authorities such as A. *Ritschl, A. von *Harnack, and E. *Troeltsch, built on, developed, and modified his ideas. More recently, however, his influence has been diminished by a powerful reaction, connected esp. with the names of K. *Barth and E. *Brunner, who opposed to Schleiermacher's 'feeling' the Scriptural principle of the Reformers.

The high regard in which Schleiermacher was held in Germany throughout the 19th cent. is well illustrated by the large literature on him. Collected ed. of his writings, ed. Berlin, 32 vols., 1834–64. Collected correspondence, ed. L. Jonas–W. *Dilthey, 4 vols., Berlin, 1858–63; Eng. tr. of vols. i and ii, 1860; selected correspondence [ed. M. Rade], Jena, 1906. Correspondence with J. C. Gass, ed. Berlin, 1852. Crit. edd. of his Reden über die Religion by G. C. B. Pünjer, Brunswick, 1879; also by R. *Otto (Jubiläumsausgabe), Göttingen, 1899; of the Monologen by F. M. Schiele, Philosophische Bibliothek, lxxxiv; Leipzig, 1902. Friedrich Schleiermachers Aesthetik, ed. from unpubld. sources by R. Odebrecht (Berlin–Leipzig, 1931); Friedrich Schleiermachers Dialektik, also ed. from unpubld. sources by id. (Leipzig, 1942). Eng. tr. of Schleiermacher's essay on St. Luke's Gospel by C. *Thirlwall, London, 1825; of his Reden über die Religion by J. *Oman, ib., 1893; of 'Selected Sermons' by Mary F. Wilson, ib., 1890; of the Monologen by H. L. Friess, Chicago, 1926; and of Der christliche Glaube by H. R. Mackintosh–J. S. Stewart, Edinburgh, 1928. Apart from his edition of Schleiermacher's correspondence, the primary source for his life is the biography by W. Dilthey (Part 1, Berlin, 1870; ed. 3 by M. Redeker, 2 vols., 1970; Part 2 first publd., ed. id., 2 vols., 1966). Studies on Schleiermacher in English by G. Cross (Chicago, 1911), W. B. Selbie ('The Great Christian Theologies', 1913), J. A. Chapman (London, 1932), R. B. Brandt (New York, 1941), with bibl., R. R. Niebuhr (ib., 1964; London, 1965), and G. E. Spiegler (New York, 1967). E. Troeltsch and others, Schleiermacher, der Philosoph des Glaubens (Moderne Philosophie, vi; 1910). R. Odebrecht, Schleiermachers System der Aesthetik (1932). H. Lindroth, Schleiermachers Religionsbegrepp (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1926, Teologi, i, and 1930, Teologi, i). E. Brunner, Die Mystik und das Wort. Der Gegensatz zwischen moderner Religionsauffassung und christlichem Glauben dargestellt an der Theologie Schleiermachers (1924). W. Schultz, Schleiermacher und der Protestantismus (Theologische Forschung, xiv; 1957). P. Seifert, Die Theologie des jungen Schleiermacher (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xlix; 1960). C. Albrecht, Schleiermachers Liturgik. Theorie und Praxis des Gottesdienst bei Schleiermacher und ihre geistesgeschichtlichen Zusammenhänge (Veröffentlichungen der Evangelischen Gesellschaft für Liturgieforschung, xiii; Göttingen, 1963). M. Redeker, Friedrich Schleiermacher. Leben und Wirken (1968). R. R. Williams, Schleiermacher the Theologian (Philadelphia, Pa. [1978]). K. Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zürich, 1947), pp. 379–424; Eng. tr., 1972, pp. 425–73. T. N. Rice, Schleiermacher Bibliography (Princeton, 1966). O. Kirn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 587–617, s.v., with additional bibl. by A. Hauck–H. Hering, ib., xxiv (1913), p. 454 f.; W. B. Selbie in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 236–9; R. Hermann–E. Weniger in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 1422–36, s.v.

SCHMALKALDIC ARTICLES (1537). The doctrinal statement drawn up by M. *Luther at the behest of Johann Friedrich, Elector of Saxony, for presentation to the projected General Council convoked by *Paul III to Mantua for 23 May 1537. It consisted of (1) a statement of the doctrines of the Creeds, very brief, as outside controversy; (2) a long section on 'the office and work of Christ, or our redemption', attacking such practices and institutions as the *Mass ('the greatest and most horrible abomination'), *purgatory ('a Satanic delusion'), the *Pope ('Antichrist'), the Invocation of *Saints, and *Monasticism; and (3) a final section on matters on which Protestants were themselves divided, e.g. the *Eucharist. On 23 Feb. 1537 an assembly of Lutheran princes and theologians at Schmalkalden in Thuringia approved the Articles as well as a much more moderate Appendix, added by P. *Melanchthon at the Assembly's request, conceding to the Pope as a matter of human right jurisdiction over the other bishops of Christendom and adopting a markedly conciliatory attitude towards the Papacy. The Articles were issued from the press by Luther (but without Melanchthon's Appendix, which had exposed its author to violent abuse from the stricter *Lutherans) as Artikel christlicher Lehre in 1538, and in 1580 were incorporated in the 'Book of *Concord'. The title Articuli Smalcaldici is first met with in 1553.

Text pr. among the works of Luther, e.g. in the Weimar ed., I (1914), pp. 192–254, with introd., pp. 160–91; also ed., with Melanchthon's appendix, by H. Volz in the Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche (Göttingen, 1930; ed. 2, 1952), pp. 405–98; Eng. tr. by T. G. Tappert, The Book of Concord (Philadelphia [1959]), pp. 287–335. H. Volz, 'Luthers Schmalkaldische Artikel und Melanchthons Tractatus de Potestate Papae' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, ciii (1931), pp. 1–70. Id. (ed.), Drei Schriften gegen Luthers Schmalkaldische Artikel von Cochläus, Witzel und Hoffmeister (Corpus Catholicorum, xviii; 1932). Id. (ed.), Urkunden und Aktenstücke zur Geschichte von Martin Luthers Schmalkaldischen Artikeln (1536–1574) (Kleine Texte, clxxix; 1957). Id., 'Luthers Schmalkaldische Artikel' in Z.K.G., lxviii (1957), pp. 259–86, with reff.; id., 'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte von Luthers Schmalkaldischen Artikeln', ib., lxxiv (1963), pp. 316–20. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds, i (1877), pp. 253–7. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 586 f. (Nos. 13675–87). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 640–45, s.v. 'Schmalkaldische Artikel'.

SCHMALKALDIC LEAGUE. The alliance concluded in the town hall at Schmalkalden on 27 Feb. 1531 between the Protestant groups in Germany in self-defence against *Charles V's 'Recess of Augsburg' (19 Nov. 1530). It united the *Lutherans and the *Zwinglians, as well as the N. and S. German princes, and soon became a strong anti-Hapsburg force. It was T. *Cromwell's wish that England should join the confederates, but this wish was not realized.

O. Winckelmann, Der Schmalkaldische Bund 1530–1532 und der Nürnberger Religionsfriede (Strassburg, 1892); F. Prüser, England und die Schmalkaldener 1535–1540 (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, xi; 1929); E. Fabian, Die Entstehung des Schmalkaldischen Bundes und seiner Verfassung 1529–1531/33 (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, i; 1956); id. (ed.), Die Schmalkaldischen Bundesabschiede 1530–1532 (ib., vii; 1958); id. (ed.), Die Schmalkaldischen Bundesabschiede 1533–1536 (ib., viii; 1958). A. Holborn, A History of Modern Germany [i] (New York, 1959), esp. pp. 215–18.

SCHMIDT, BERNARD. See Smith, Bernard.

SCHMIEDEL, PAUL WILHELM (1851–1935), NT scholar. He taught successively at Jena (1873–93) and, as professor of NT theology, at Zürich (1893–1923). His principal writings were Das vierte Evangelium gegenüber den drei ersten (1906; Eng. tr., The Johannine Writings, 1908) and his short but much discussed Die Person Jesu im Streit der Meinungen der Gegenwart (1906). He also contributed extensively to the (British) Encyclopaedia Biblica (1899–1903), including the notable art. 'Gospels'. He is best known through his celebrated attack on a small group of critics (A. Kalthoff, W. B. Smith, J. M. Robertson) who denied the historical existence of Christ. On the basis of nine crucial passages in the Gospels ('die Grundsäulen eines wahrhaft wissenschaftlichen Lebens Jesu'), viz. Mk. 3. 21 and 31–5, Mk. 13. 32, Mk. 10. 18, Mt. 12. 32, Mk. 15. 34, Mk. 8. 12, Mk. 6. 5 f., Mt. 11. 5, and Mt. 16. 5–12, which could not be the invention of the primitive Church, he argued that the historicity of Jesus was put beyond dispute. On the other hand, he was himself one of the most radical of critics and professed that his Christian faith would be unaffected even if Christ's historicity were disproved.

A. Meyer, 'Zu Prof. Dr. Schmiedels 70. Geburtstag' in Protestantische Monatshefte, xxv (1921), pp. 161–7 (with portrait); R. Steck, 'Professor Schmiedels Grundsäulen des Lebens Jesu und ihre amerikanische Bestreitung', ib., pp. 167–72.

SCHOLA CANTORUM (Lat., 'a school of singers'). In the worship of the early Church all music was rendered by the clergy with the assistance of the congregation, but gradually the practice of having a body of trained singers was introduced. At *Rome the Schola was established on a sound basis by *Gregory the Great (d. 604), and several of his successors were trained in it. From Rome the custom spread rapidly over W. Christendom, the Roman chant being brought to England by St. *Benedict Biscop (d. 690) and St. *Wilfrid (d. 709). The modern descendant of the Schola is the cathedral choir school and, in certain monasteries (notably *Solesmes), those monks whose special work is the study of the ecclesiastical chant. The term 'Schola Cantorum' is also used for the place where the chant is taught.

SCHOLARIUS, GEORGE. See George Scholarius.

SCHOLASTICA, St. (c. 480–c. 543), sister of St. *Benedict of Nursia. Almost all that is known of her comes from a brief passage in St. *Gregory the Great's 'Dialogues' (ii. 33 f.). She established a convent at Plombariola, a few miles from *Monte Cassino, where brother and sister met annually for the discussion of spiritual matters. Feast day, 10 Feb. She is invoked against storms.

B. Heurtebize, O.S.B.–R. Triger, Sainte Scholastique, patronne du Mans (Solesmes, 1897). W. Goffart, 'Le Mans, St. Scholastica and the literary tradition of the translation of St. Benedict' in R.Bén., lxxvii (1967), pp. 107–41. A. Lentini, O.S.B., in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols. 742–9, s.v. 'Scolastica', with extensive bibl. See also lives of St. Benedict, s.v.

SCHOLASTICISM. In its strict etymological sense Scholasticism is the educational tradition of the Medieval Schools. As now understood it may be described as a method of philosophical and theological speculation which aims at a better understanding of revealed truths, that is, as an attempt by intellectual processes, by analogy and by defining, co-ordinating, and systematizing the data of faith, to attain to a deeper penetration into the inner meaning of Christian doctrine. Consequently, philosophy has a great part to play in Scholastic thought, and there is a Scholastic philosophy as much as a Scholastic theology.

The theoretical foundations of Scholasticism were already laid by St. *Augustine and *Boethius. In his De Doctrina Christiana St. Augustine urged the need for dialectics in the study of Christian doctrine, while in the De Praedestinatione Sanctorum he formulated, as it were, the programme of Scholasticism. Setting out from the notion that 'to believe is to ponder with assent' (credere est cum assensione cogitare), he reached the maxim: 'Understand so that you may believe, Believe so that you may understand' (ergo intellige ut credas, crede ut intelligas). Boethius by his translations of, and commentaries on, *Aristotle and *Porphyry opened the door which later introduced medieval thinkers to their first knowledge of logic, while his Opuscula Sacra indicated the way in which philosophy should come to the aid of theology. *Cassiodorus, a follower of Boethius, pointed in a different direction. In his Institutiones Divinarum et Humanarum Litterarum he propounded a plan of studies for his monastery at Vivarium which put the seven liberal arts at the basis of all secular and sacred learning. This programme, followed later by *Alcuin and *Rabanus Maurus, led to the flourishing *Carolingian renaissance, and by insisting on the Trivium (Grammar, Rhetoric, and Dialectic) and the Quadrivium (Arithmetic, Geometry, Astronomy, and Music) also did much to prepare the way for the philosophical and theological speculation of the Middle Ages.

John Scotus *Erigena in the 9th cent. was one of the first to put St. Augustine's teaching into practice by stating clearly the distinction between auctoritas (Holy Scripture) and ratio (reason). Holy Scripture is still the main source of our knowledge of God; but it is the duty of reason, illuminated by God, to investigate and expound the Christian data supplied by authority. Moreover, by reviving interest in Boethius's translations of the logical treatises of Aristotle and translating the pseudo-*Dionysian corpus, he played a fundamental part in the moulding of medieval thought. The study of the trivium, and especially of dialectic, kept alive in the 10th cent. in the monastic schools which were spread all over Europe, developed and expanded in the 11th cent. and also led to the establishment of the *Cathedral schools. It gave rise to a twofold controversy, that between the *Realists and *Nominalists on the problem of Universals and that between dialecticians and anti-dialecticians. One consequence was that *Berengar of Tours, relying solely on dialectic and applying its use to all theological matters (per omnia ad dialecticam confugere), came to uphold views contrary to Christian dogma. By the middle of the 11th cent., however, the service that dialectic, used in due moderation, could render to theology was widely recognized. Masters such as *Lanfranc, Alger of Liège and others, distinguishing between use and abuse, showed that dialectic could be skilfully employed in theological disputations without imperilling the faith.

At the end of the 11th cent. St. *Anselm's great achievement was to formulate the programme of Scholasticism. Following the traditional teaching, esp. that of St. Augustine, he asserted the right of reason to inquire into revealed truths, not in the sense that by rational reasoning we acquire the knowledge of faith, but because it seems reprehensible if, once established in the faith, we make no effort to understand what we believe. His guiding principles, which remained the fundamental rules of every Schoolman, found expression in such positions as: a distinction between understanding (intelligere) and belief (credere); 'I believe that I may understand' (credo ut intelligam); the constant endeavour to understand what we believe (intelligere quod credimus); and the quest of faith for intellectual formulation (fides quaerens intellectum).

The impulse given by St. Anselm of Canterbury was developed in the 12th cent. in the school of St. *Anselm of Laon and of his brother Ralph. Here we find in the 'Sentences', a selection of dogmatic, moral, ascetic topics grouped under special headings, the first systematic arrangement of theological questions. Authority (auctoritas), the argument from Biblical and Patristic sources, is still predominant; but we also perceive here a timid endeavour to use the argument from reason (ratio). A more important innovation is the appearance of the quaestio, with its arguments for and against. Despite its elementary and crude character, it was this technique and method that in the long run gave the chief impetus to classical Scholasticism.

To *Abelard belongs the merit of perfecting this technique. He did this by the unreserved application to theology of the dialectic method, based on the quaestio and interrogatio and on the disputatio; he also achieved the first theological synthesis, co-ordinating the whole of theology under the headings fides, caritas, sacramentum. The schools of *Chartres and St.-*Victor also had an important share in moulding Scholasticism. *Hugh of St.-Victor in particular, by his skilful use of secular learning, saved the scholastic method, which had been somewhat compromised by certain rash applications of Abelard and *Gilbert de la Porrée. All these achievements are summed up in *Peter Lombard's Sentences, which until the 16th cent. was, after the Bible, the text-book of the theological schools.

Of decisive importance at this stage was the introduction into Western Europe of the works of Aristotle. Although the main treatises were already translated from the Greek and Arabic in the 12th cent., their real influence was felt only in the 13th. At the same period the translations of the great Arabic commentators, *Avicenna and *Averroes, and other philosophical writings, reached the schools. From the new material arose three currents of thought. First, the so-called Augustinians, who, though using Aristotelian terminology and some of his ideas, refused to accept what they considered to be in opposition to St. Augustine. Second, the Latin Averroists, under the leadership of *Siger of Brabant and Boethius of Dacia, who adhered strictly to Aristotelian doctrines, as interpreted by Averroes and the Arabian commentators, even when in opposition to Catholic teaching. It was left, third, to the *Dominicans to establish a harmony between St. Augustine and Aristotle, which, foreshadowed by St. *Albert the Great, was accomplished by his disciple, St. *Thomas Aquinas, in his '*Summa Theologica', the crowning achievement of Scholastic Theology. Following the usual method of presenting a doctrine in argument, counter-argument, and solution, he drew the line between faith and reason with the utmost clarity, securely establishing their connexion and showing the completion of the one by the other.

The work of St. Thomas found its most vigorous contemporary critic in the Franciscan *Duns Scotus. In opposition to the Dominican School, with its Aristotelian emphasis on the intellect, Scotus and the Franciscan School stressed the Augustinian primacy of the will. From now on Scholasticism declined rapidly. *William of Occam, though drawing on the work of Duns Scotus, went far beyond him and taught a Nominalism which undermined all belief in the possibility of objective knowledge. Such teaching was a leading factor in the dissolution of medieval Scholasticism, and certain aspects of it exercised a decisive influence on the theology of the Protestant Reformers.

Scholasticism, which had never wholly lost its vitality esp. in the Latin countries and continued to be generally taught in the curricula of the RC theological seminaries, was revivified in modern times. In the 19th and early 20th cents. it became increasingly important as a reaction against a destructive subjectivism, particularly after *Leo XIII in his encyclical '*Aeterni Patris' (1879) strongly recommended the study of St. Thomas to all RC priests and scholars. After that Neo-Thomism spread chiefly in France and Belgium, where J. *Maritain and Cardinal *Mercier were among its best-known exponents. It also attracted much attention in Britain and America, and not only among Roman Catholics. Since the Second *Vatican Council, however, it has tended to hold a less central position in RC theology than formerly.

The very large literature, much of it of high quality, is mainly the work of RC scholars. For edd. of the texts, see bibliographies to the chief Scholastics, incl. those mentioned above. There is an important collection of monographs, incl. some crit. texts, founded by C. Baeumker, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des Mittelalters (Münster i.W., 1891 ff.). The older histories of Scholastic philosophy include those of A. Stöckl (3 vols., Mainz, 1864–6), B. Hauréau (2 vols., Paris, 1850; much extended, 2 vols., 1872–1878); more recent are the works of M. de Wulf (Louvain–Paris, 1900; ed. 6, 3 vols., 1934–47; Eng. tr. of ed. 6, 1952 ff.) and F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, ii (ed. 11 by B. Geyer, 1928); briefer are É. *Gilson, La Philosophie au moyen âge (Collection Payot, 1922; ed. 2, much extended, 1944); F. Copleston, S.J., Medieval Philosophy (1952); É. Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy (New York, 1955; London, 1955); P. Vignaux, Philosophie au moyen âge (1958; Eng. tr., New York, 1959; London [1961]). R. L. Poole, Illustrations of the History of Medieval Thought in the Department of Theology and Ecclesiastical Politics (1884; ed. 2, with revised title, 1920). M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode (2 vols., 1909–11); id., Die Geschichte der katholischen Theologie seit dem Ausgang der Väterzeit (Herders theologische Grundrisse, 1933); A. M. Landgraf, Einführung in die Geschichte der theologischen Literatur der Frühscholastik (1948); id., Dogmengeschichte der Frühscholastik (4 vols. in 8, 1952–6). A. J. Macdonald, Authority and Reason in the Early Middle Ages (Hulsean Lectures, 1931–2; 1933). O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et morale aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles (6 vols., 1942–60). G. Paré–A. Brunet–P. Tremblay, La Renaissance du XIIe siècle: Les écoles et l'enseignement (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, iii; 1933). P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique de 1260 à 1326 (Bibliothèque Thomiste, v, xxi; 1925–35). Id., Répertoire des maîtres en théologie au XIIIe siècle (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xvii, xviii; 1933–4); suppl. by V. Doucet, O.F.M., in A.F.H., xvii (1934), pp. 531–564 and 584–9; F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Commentariorum in Sententias Petri Lombardi (2 vols., Würzburg, 1947; suppl. by V. Doucet, O.F.M., Quaracchi, 1954). R. W. Southern, The Rise and Fall of the Mediaeval System of Religious Thought (Gifford Lectures, 1971–2; forthcoming). On the history of Logic in the Middle Ages, the classic study is C. Prantl, Geschichte der Logik im Abendlande (4 vols., 1855–70), esp. vols. ii–iv; modern, but less exhaustive, treatment, by P. Boehner, O.F.M., Medieval Logic. An Outline of its Development from 1250 to c. 1400 (Manchester, 1952) and by I. M. Bocheński, O.P., Formale Logik (1956), esp. pt. III; revised Eng. tr. (Notre Dame, Ind. [1961]), pp. 148–251. F. van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIIIe siècle (Philosophes médiévaux, ix; 1966); P. Glorieux, La Faculté des arts et ses maîtres au XIIIe siècle (Études de Philosophie médiévale, lix; 1971). Relevant periodicals, often with bibliography of current literature, include the Revue thomiste (Paris, 1893 ff., with separate Bulletin thomiste, 1924 ff.), Revue néo-scolastique (Louvain, 1894 ff.; since 1946, Revue philosophique de Louvain), Revue des Sciences philosophiques et théologiques (vols. i–ii, Le Saulchoir, 1907–8; iii ff., Paris, 1909 ff.), Scholastik (Freiburg i.Br., 1926 ff.; since 1966, Theologie und Philosophie), Recherches de théologie ancienne et médiévale (Louvain, 1929 ff.), with separate Bulletin, and Mediaeval Studies (New York–London, 1939 ff.); also other publications of the Institute [from 1940, Pontifical Institute] of Mediaeval Studies of the University of Toronto, 1929 ff. A. S. *Pringle-Pattison [–X.] in E.B. (ed. 11), xxiv (1911), pp. 346–56, s.v.; I. C. Brady, J. E. Gurr, J. A. Weisheipl in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 1153–70, s.v.

SCHOLIA (plur. of Gk. σχόλιον). Notes, esp. of a critical, grammatical, or explanatory kind, inserted in the margins of an ancient MS. Their use was a regular practice in the Greek schools of later classical antiquity, and, probably through the contact between pagan and Christian culture at Alexandria, they were introduced by Christian scholars into the MSS. of Biblical and ecclesiastical texts.

SCHOOL OF ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC. See Royal School of Church Music.

SCHOOLMEN. The teachers of philosophy and theology at the medieval European universities, then usually called 'schools', of which *Paris and *Oxford were pre-eminent. From the 13th cent. many of their greatest representatives belonged to the *Mendicant Orders, among the most famous being the Dominicans St. *Albert the Great and St. *Thomas Aquinas, and the Franciscans St. *Bonaventure and *Duns Scotus. See Scholasticism.

SCHOOLS, Cathedral. See Cathedral Schools.

SCHOOLS, Sunday. See Sunday Schools.

SCHOPENHAUER, ARTHUR (1788–1860), German philosopher. The son of a wealthy Danzig merchant, he was apprenticed to a Hamburg firm by his father in 1804, but went to Göttingen university in 1809 and to Berlin in 1811, where he attended the lectures of J. G. *Fichte and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. He was a great admirer of I. *Kant, whose only authentic interpreter he professed himself to be, and was also influenced by the nature philosophy of J. W. Goethe and F. W. J. *Schelling. The problem of combining Kant's criticism with the positive view of life of Goethe and Schelling led him to construct a philosophical system which he expounded in his chief work, Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung ('1819' [really 1818]; ed. 2, 1844). After its completion he travelled in Italy and in 1820 accepted a lectureship at Berlin university which, however, proved a failure. In 1831 he fled from the cholera to Frankfurt, where he spent the latter part of his life in embittered seclusion, publishing only a few works, the chief of which were Die beiden Grundprobleme der Ethik (1841) and Parerga und Paralipomena (1851).

Schopenhauer may be regarded as the classic exponent of Pessimism. The ultimate Reality was Will (Gk. θέλημα, 'impulse', 'striving'; rather than βούλησις, 'the capacity to determine'), which extends far beyond the range of conscious life. Its extinction by pity for creatures and the mortification of the passions was the sovereign remedy for the ills of existence; and Schopenhauer claimed that his teaching was so far essentially at one with that of the Christian mystics. Meanwhile, as a stage towards this goal, he found a transient place of rest in the realms of art, poetry, and above all music. In the formulation of his ethical doctrines he was considerably influenced by Buddhism, though he never made any pretence of himself practising the Buddhist maxims.

Schopenhauer's philosophy, which achieved recognition only at the end of his life, influenced R. Wagner and F. *Nietzsche (in his early years), and was continued and modified by E. von *Hartmann and A. *Drews. It was one of the chief anti-Christian systems in Germany in the 19th century.

Collected works ed. by his pupil, J. Frauenstädt, 6 vols., Leipzig, 1873–4; ed. 2 by A. Hübscher, 7 vols., Wiesbaden, 1946–50. Posthumous writings ed. J. Frauenstädt (Leipzig, 1864); others ed. E. Grisebach from MSS. in the Royal Library at Berlin, Leipzig [1896]. Correspondence ed. L. Scheemann, Leipzig, 1893. Eng. tr. of his principal work by R. B. Haldane–J. Kemp, The World as Will and Idea (3 vols., 1883–6; ed. 8, 1937), and by E. F. J. Payne, The World as Will and Representation (2 vols., Indian Hill, Colorado, 1958). Many of his other works have also been translated. Studies in German by W. von Gwinner (Leipzig, 1862), O. Busch (Heidelberg, 1877; ed. 2, Munich, 1878), J. Volkelt (Stuttgart, 1900; ed. 3, 1907), and W. Schneider (Vienna, 1937; ed. 2, Wiesbaden, 1949). Studies in English by Helen Zimmern (London, 1876; rev. ed., 1932), W. Wallace (ib., 1890 and 1913), W. Caldwell (Edinburgh, 1896), F. Copleston, S.J. (Bellarmine Series, xi; 1946), P. [L.] Gardiner (Harmondsworth, 1963). G. Simmel, Schopenhauer und Nietzsche (1907; ed. 2, 1920). Schopenhauer-Lexikon, ed. J. Frauenstädt, 2 vols., Leipzig, 1871. C. Gebhardt, Schopenhauer-Bilder (1913). Überweg, iv, pp. 133–47, with bibl. pp. 686–90. P. L. Gardiner in E.B. (ed. 1968), xix, pp. 1185–7.

SCHRADER, EBERHARD (1836–1908), Assyriologist. A pupil of H. E. W. *Ewald, he became professor of OT in turn at Zürich (1863), Giessen (1870), and Jena (1873); and later professor of Semitic studies at Berlin (1875). He was a leading authority in the field of Assyriology, and did pioneer work in bringing its findings to bear on OT problems. The most important of his writings was Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament (1872; ed. 3 by H. Zimmern and H. Winckler, 1902; Eng. trans. by O. C. Whitehouse, 1889).

E. Meyer, 'Gedächtnisrede auf Eberhard Schrader' in Abh. (Berl.), 1909, Gedächtnisrede I.

SCHÜRER, EMIL (1844–1910), German NT scholar. After lecturing in theology at Leipzig from 1869 to 1878, he was appointed professor at Giessen in 1878, went to Kiel in 1890, and held a chair of NT exegesis at Göttingen from 1895. In 1876 he founded the Theologische Literaturzeitung, which he edited together with A. *Harnack from 1881. His principal work is the Lehrbuch der Neutestamentlichen Zeitgeschichte (1874), published since its 2nd edition (1886–7) under the title Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Eng. trans., A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, 5 vols., 1890–1). This monumental treatise gives a detailed and carefully substantiated account of the political history and the religious and social customs and beliefs as well as of the religious and profane literature of the Jewish people from the time of the *Maccabees to the wars under Trajan, and is still the standard text-book. There is a completely revised English version, taking account of later scholarship, by G. Vermes, F. Millar and M. Black (3 vols., 1973 ff.).

Obituary notice by A. Harnack in T.L.Z., xxxv (1910), cols. 289–92. A. B. Titius in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxiv (1913), pp. 460–6.

SCHÜTZ, HEINRICH (1585–1672), German composer. The Latin form 'Sagittarius' is also found. From 1609 to 1612 he studied music at *Venice, became court organist at Cassel in 1612, and from 1617 was court conductor at Dresden. Apart from secular works he wrote much Church music, and is esp. famous for his *Passion music, which is remarkable for its dramatic qualities. He was one of the greatest exponents of the musical *baroque and exercised a profound influence on J. S. *Bach and other later composers esp. in Germany. Both Catholic and Protestant Church music are deeply indebted to him, the former esp. for his Latin motets. His works include the Symphoniae Sacrae, i (1629) and ii (1647), the Geistliche Konzerte (1636–1639), and Geistliche Chormusik (1648).

Collected ed. of his musical works by P. Spitta and others (18 vols., Leipzig, 1885–1927); Neue Ausgabe, herausgegeben im Auftrag der Neuen Schütz-Gesellschaft, by F. Schöneich and others (Kassel, 1955 ff.); letters and other writings ed. E. H. Müller (Ratisbon, 1931). Modern studies by A. Pirro (Paris, 1913) and H. J. Moser (Kassel, 1936; ed. 2, 1954; Eng. tr., St. Louis, Mo., 1959; also a shorter study, Kassel, 1940; ed. 3, 1952; Eng. tr., 1967). W. Bittinger (ed.), Schütz-Werke-Verzeichnis (1960). A. C. Lewis in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), vii (1954), pp. 642–50, s.v., with bibl. by J. H. Davies, pp. 650–2.

SCHWABACH, Articles of (1529), the first of the *Lutheran Confessions. These 17 Articles were based on the collection of 15 Articles considered and, with one exception (that on the Eucharist), adopted at the Colloquy of *Marburg (3 Oct. 1529). The revision was due to M. *Luther, assisted by P. *Melanchthon, J. *Jonas, J. *Brenz, and others. On 16 Oct. 1529 they were accepted at Schwabach by the Elector and George, Margrave of Brandenburg-Ansbach, as admitting to membership of the Lutheran League of the N. German States. They were later taken as the basis of the first part of the *Augsburg Confession (1530).

Text of the articles pr. among the works of P. Melanchthon in the Corpus Reformatorum founded by C. G. Bretschneider, xxvi, ed. H. E. Bindseil (Brunswick, 1857), cols. 151–60, with introd. cols. 129–50. P. *Schaff, The History of the Creeds, i (ed. 2, London, 1878), p. 228 f. Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 599 (Nos. 42437–44). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), p. 1 f., s.v. 'Schwabacher Artikel'.

SCHWARTZ, EDUARD (1858–1940), classical philologist and *Patristic scholar. A native of Kiel, he was educated at Göttingen, Bonn (under H. Usener), and Greifswald (under U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff). He held a succession of professorships in German universities, among them Strassburg (1897–1902; 1913–18), Göttingen (1902–9; here he was closely associated with J. *Wellhausen), and Munich (1919 onwards). His early training, philological rather than theological, gave the stamp to his Patristic work. He published editions of *Tatian's 'Oratio ad Graecos' (1888), *Athenagoras (1891), and *Eusebius's 'Ecclesiastical History' (1903–9, in collaboration with T. *Mommsen), the Pseudo-*Athanasian Sermo Major de Fide (1924), *Cyril of Scythopolis (1939), and other Patristic texts. His main work, the Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum (1914–40), was a grandly planned edition of the Greek Councils; it was mostly completed at the time of his death. It provided, for the first time, a critical edition of the 'Acts' of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451), besides portions of the later Councils. It was in many respects the Greek counterpart of C. H. *Turner's Monumenta, the last part of which, after Turner's death (1930), Schwartz saw through the press (1939). His important collection of papers on Athanasius in the Nachrichten of the Göttingen Gesellschaft (1904–11) inaugurated a new era in Athanasian studies. His other writings include a paper maintaining the early death of *John, the son of Zebedee (1904), Kaiser Konstantin und die christliche Kirche (1913; ed. 2, 1936), and a paper on the so-called 'Counter-Anathemas' of *Nestorius (1923). Among the many papers subsidiary to his edition of the Councils was an important study of the *Theodosian Collection.

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. E. Schwartz, K. Aland, W. Eltester, and H. D. Altendorf (5 vols., 1938–63). There is much autobiographical material in Schwartz's own Vergangene Gegenwärtigkeiten (1938). A. Rehm, Eduard Schwartz' wissenschaftliches Lebenswerk (Sb. (Bayr.), 1942, Hft. 4), with list of his works, pp. 67–75. Appreciation in English by C. H. Turner, 'Eduard Schwartz and the Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum' in J.T.S., xxx (1929), pp. 113–120.

SCHWARZERD, PHILIPP. See Melanchthon, Philipp.

SCHWEGLER, ALBERT (1819–57), German Patristic scholar and philosopher. At the university of Tübingen, which he had entered in 1836, he came under the influence of F. C. *Baur, and from the standpoint of the *Tübingen School published Der Montanismus und die christliche Kirche des zweiten Jahrhunderts (1841). His other writings in the field of Patristics, all written from the same point of view, include a Geschichte des nachapostolischen Zeitalters (2 vols., 1846) and an edition of the '*Clementine Homilies' (1847). He also wrote extensively on the history of philosophy and on Roman history.

E. Zeller, 'Drei deutsche Gelehrte: 1. Albert Schwegler' in Vorträge und Abhandlungen, II (1877), pp. 329–63. W. S. Teuffel in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, xxxiii (1891), p. 327 f.

SCHWEITZER, ALBERT (1875–1965), German theologian, physician, and organist. Born at Kaisersberg in Alsace, he was educated at Strassburg University, completing his studies at Berlin and Paris. In 1899 he became pastor at Strassburg. In Das Messianitäts- und Leidensgeheimnis (1901; Eng. tr., The Mystery of the Kingdom of God, 1925) he expounded what was to be the leading idea of his theological work, viz. that the Lord's teaching centred in His conviction of the imminent end of the world. The book made a great stir, and shortly after its publication he became lecturer at Strassburg University (1902) and principal of a theological college. In 1906 appeared his brilliant Von Reimarus zu Wrede (Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910). After a review of previous attempts at interpreting the Life of Christ (G. E. *Lessing, D. F. *Strauss, J. E. *Renan, O. Pfleiderer, and W. *Wrede), all of which he held to be inadequate, he expounded an interpretation on the basis of 'thoroughgoing eschatology'. He held that Christ shared with His contemporaries the expectation of a speedy end of the world and, when this proved a mistake, concluded that He Himself must suffer in order to save His people from the tribulations preceding the last days. In 1911 there followed Die Geschichte der paulinischen Forschung (Eng. tr., Paul and his Interpreters, 1912), in which Schweitzer applied similar eschatological principles to the theology of St. Paul. In the same year he took his medical degree, and in 1913 gave up a career of great academic distinction to devote himself at Lambaréné (French Equatorial Africa) to the care of the sick and to missionary activities. Having been interned in France in 1917, he returned to Strassburg in 1918. In 1921 he published his widely read reminiscences, Zwischen Wasser und Urwald (Eng. tr., On the Edge of the Primeval Forest, 1922). In 1923 appeared his Kulturphilosophie, summing up his views on ethics as 'reverence for life'. In 1924 he went back to Lambaréné and restored his destroyed hospital, which was his principal concern for the rest of his life. He nevertheless completed his work on St. Paul, Die Mystik des Apostels Paulus (1930, Eng. tr., 1931), which is built on the thesis that 'Being in Christ', interpreted as the 'physical union between Christ and the elect', is the centre of the Pauline teaching and is to be distinguished from 'God mysticism', which attains to God directly without the mediation of Christ. At the time of his death he was working on the posthumously published Reich Gottes und Christentum, ed. by Ulrich Neuenschwander (1967; Eng. tr. as The Kingdom of God and Primitive Christianity, 1968).

Schweitzer exercised a very considerable influence on Continental as well as on English and American Protestant theology, though his view of the Lord's Person aroused much opposition not only among conservative, but also among liberal Protestant theologians. He was also an accomplished musician and interpreter of J. S. Bach, on whom he wrote a monograph (1908; Eng. tr., 1911), and his organ recitals found an enthusiastic public. In 1953 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for the previous year.

Collections of autobiographical reminiscences publd. as Aus meiner Kindheit und Jugendzeit (1924; Eng. tr. by C. T. Campion as Memoirs of Childhood and Youth, 1924); Aus meinem Leben und Denken (1931; Eng. tr. by id. as My Life and Thought, 1933); and Afrikanisches Tagebuch, 1939–45 (1946). Sermons preached at Strassburg between 1900 and 1919, ed. U. Neuenschwander, Strassburger Predigten (Munich [1966]; Eng. tr., Reverence for Life, 1970). Life by G. Seaver (London, 1947; ed. 6, 1969). The numerous other substantial studies include R. Grabs, Albert Schweitzer (Berlin, 1949); W. Picht, Albert Schweitzer. Leben und Bedeutung (1960; Eng. tr., 1964); H. W. Bähr (ed.), Albert Schweitzer. Sein Denken und sein Weg (Tübingen, 1962); H. Clark, The Ethical Mysticism of Albert Schweitzer (Boston, Mass., 1962; London, 1964, as The Philosophy of Albert Schweitzer); M. Lönnebo, Albert Schweitzers Etisk-Religiösa Ideal (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, Studia Doctrinae Christianae Upsaliensia, ii; 1964).

SCHWENCKFELDIANS. The followers of the Silesian Reformation theologian, Caspar Schwenckfeld (1490–1561).

Schwenckfeld, essentially a mystic by temperament, was much impressed by the writings of J. *Tauler and M. *Luther, and in 1522 made a pilgrimage to *Wittenberg. He soon found, however, that he could not give unreserved assent to many of the Protestant doctrines. He believed that the tenet of justification by faith created serious moral dangers; he was unable to accept the Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist; and he sought to introduce among his followers a strict rule of Church discipline. The opposition which his teaching met with from both Catholics and Protestants led him to leave his native Silesia in 1529 for Strassburg and other cities in S. Germany. He gradually came to hold also a doctrine of the deification of Christ's humanity, and in 1540 issued an elaborate account (Konfession und Erklärung) of his beliefs on the subject, with a reply to his opponents. Its theses were at once repudiated by the main body of orthodox Protestants, and a few years later Schwenckfeld finally withdrew from the Lutheran Church. After much further persecution from both Church and state he died at Ulm on 10 Dec. 1561.

After his death his small band of disciples, who called themselves the 'Confessors of the Glory of Christ', continued to propagate his teaching, publishing many of his writings from his MSS. They continued to exist in Silesia till 1826, and a branch of their disciples, which established itself at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1734, still survives.

Their writings and letters are collected in the Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum, ed. C. D. Hartranft and others (vols. i–xv; Leipzig, 1907–39; vols. xvi–xix; Pennsburg, Penn., 1959–61). Schwenckfeld's correspondence with *Philip of Hesse, ed. J. L. French (London, 1908). K. [T. C. G.] Ecke, Schwenckfeld, Luther und der Gedanke einer apostolischen Reformation (1911; new ed. as Kaspar Schwenckfeld, ungelöste Geistesfragen der Reformationszeit (Gütersloh, 1952). Selina G. Schultz, Caspar Schwenckfeld von Ossig (Pennsburg, Pa., 1946). P. L. Maier, Caspar Schwenckfeld on the Person and Work of Christ. A Study of Schwenckfeldian Theology at its Core (Assen, 1959). G. Maron, Individualismus und Gemeinschaft bei Caspar von Schwenckfeld (Stuttgart, 1961). F. M. Weber, Kaspar Schwenckfeld und seine Anhänger in den freybergischen Herrschaften Justingen und Öpfingen (ib., 1962). H. W. Kriebel, The Schwenckfelders in Pennsylvania (Lancaster, Pa., 1904). R. H. Grützmacher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 72–81; G. Maron in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 1620–23.

SCIENCE, Christian. See Christian Science.

SCIENTIA MEDIA (Lat., 'mediate knowledge'), A term coined by the *Jesuit theologian, L. *Molina, in his attempt to reconcile God's foreknowledge with human freewill. It designates the knowledge which God has of 'futuribilia', i.e. of things which are not, but which would be if certain conditions were realized, and thus are intermediate between mere possibilities and actual future events. Acc. to Molinist teaching this mediate knowledge is independent of the decree of the Divine Will. This thesis was keenly contested by the *Thomists and remains one of the chief differences between the systems of theology in the Jesuit and *Dominican Orders. See also Molinism.

G. de Henao, S.J., Scientia Media Historice Propugnata (Lyons, 1655); id., Scientia Media Theologice Defensata (ib., 1674). F. Stegmüller in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 551, s.v., with bibl.

SCILLITAN MARTYRS, The. Seven men and five women of Scillium in North Africa who were executed in 180, by order of the proconsul Saturninus, for refusal to renounce Christianity and to swear by the 'genius' of the Roman Emperor. Their 'Passio', which is authentic, is a valuable document for the persecutions of the 2nd cent. It shows the pagan authorities eager to obtain a recantation and the martyrs steadfast in their refusal; and it is the first documentary evidence of Christianity in N. Africa. Later a basilica was built over their tomb where St. *Augustine preached three sermons. Feast day, 17 July.

Text of 'Acta' in AA.SS., Jul. IV (1725), pp. 204–16; also in R. Knopf, Ausgewählte Märtyrerakten (ed. 3, Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, N.F., iii; 1929), p. 28 f. J. A. *Robinson, The Passion of S. Perpetua (Texts and Studies, I (2), Cambridge, 1891), with 'The Acts of the Scillitan Martyrs', pp. 106–21

(incl. orig. Lat. text, with Gk. version and later Lat. recension). Lat. text repr., with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 86–89. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, 'Le reliquie dei martiri scillitani' in R.Q., xvii (1903), pp. 209–21. H. Karpp, 'Die Zahl der Scilitanischen Märtyrer' in V.C., xv (1961), pp. 165–72. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 675–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 91, for further bibl. A. Hamman, O.F.M., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 551 f., s.v.

SCINTILLA ANIMAE (Lat., 'spark of the soul'). A metaphorical expression current in mystical literature, esp. in the writings of Master *Eckhart, for the element in the soul (also 'ground' or 'apex') in which its union with God is achieved.

S.C.M. See Student Christian Movement.

SCONE, Perthshire, an ancient Scottish religious centre and once the capital of a Pictish kingdom. At an assembly held here in 908, the Scottish king, Constantine, swore to protect the Church and recognized the Bp. of St. Andrews as primate. In 1115 an abbey of *Augustinian canons, succeeding an earlier foundation, was settled there by King Alexander I (1107–24). All the kings of Scotland, from Malcolm IV (1153) onwards, were crowned at Scone. The Stone of Destiny, on which the Celtic kings were crowned, was brought to *Westminster Abbey by Edward I in 1296. It was traditionally believed to be that on which *Jacob laid his head at *Bethel (Gen. 28. 11).

The Liber Ecclesie de Scon was ed. by W. Smythe for the Bannatyne Society, vol. lxxxii, Edinburgh, 1843. M. E. C. Walcott, Scoti-Monasticon. The Ancient Church of Scotland (1874), esp. pp. 313–16. W. F. Skene, The Coronation Stone (1869). J. Hilton, 'The Coronation Stone at Westminster Abbey' in Archaeological Journal, liv (1897), pp. 201–24. See also bibl. to Coronation Rite.

SCORY, JOHN (d. 1585), successively Bp. of *Chichester and *Hereford. Originally a Cambridge *Dominican, he became a secular clerk in 1538 at the *Dissolution of the Monasteries and was appointed in 1551 to the see of *Rochester and in 1552 to that of Chichester. At the accession of *Mary Tudor, Scory was deprived of his see, but submitted and recanted. Nevertheless he left England, going first to Emden and then to Geneva. In 1558 he returned and was in the next year appointed Bp. of Hereford, which see he held until his death. He was a wealthy, able, and not over-scrupulous prelate. He assisted at M. *Parker's consecration (and hence figured prominently in the *Nag's Head Fable) and is thus held to be one of the channels through which the episcopal succession was preserved in the C of E.

W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., li (1897), p. 8 f., s.v., with further refs. See also H. N. Birt, O.S.B., The Elizabethan Religious Settlement (1907), pp. 241, 246, 248, 362–70 and passim.

SCOTISM. The system of Scholastic philosophy expounded by the *Franciscan teacher, *Duns Scotus (q.v.), and defended in the later Middle Ages, esp. in the Franciscan Order.

SCOTLAND, Christianity in. The first known Christian missionary to Scotland was the Briton, St. *Ninian, who had come under the influence of St. *Martin of Tours. He built the first stone church in Scotland, Candida Casa, at Whithorn (397), from which he carried on a widespread mission among the Picts. The next great evangelist was St. *Columba, a Scot from Ireland, who used *Iona as the headquarters of his missionary labours (563–97). The Columban monks, through St. *Aidan (c. 635), created a new centre at *Lindisfarne, from which they evangelized the northern English. The *Celtic Church represented by these men was monastic and missionary; the heads of its communities were presbyter-abbots not bishops; it was independent of Rome and maintained peculiar usages, e.g. the date of *Easter and the *tonsure were different from those of the Roman Church. The declaration of the Synod of *Whitby (664) in favour of the Roman Easter was a prelude to the decline of the Celtic Church's influence in England and the gradual adoption of Roman usages in the North.

From the dark age that long shrouded the Scoto-Pictish Church it eventually emerged as a united body under a national bishop, whose seat was at Dunkeld from the middle of the 9th cent. to the beginning of the 10th, when it was transferred to St. Andrews. The Romanization of the Scottish Church was completed under the influence of Queen *Margaret (d. 1093), the devout exile driven from England by the Norman Conquest, and her sons, esp. David I, in whose reign (1124–53) diocesan episcopacy was extended, Roman monastic orders introduced, and many monastic houses built by the munificent king. The chief features of the medieval period were the constant affirmation of independence by the Scottish Church against the claims of *Canterbury and *York to supremacy, the establishment of provincial councils, the arrival of the friars in the 13th cent., the patriotic part played by the Church in the wars with England, the founding of the universities of St. Andrews (c. 1411), Glasgow (1450–1), and Aberdeen (1494), the erection of archiepiscopal sees (St. Andrews, 1472; Glasgow, 1492), the deterioration of the Church, and the foreshadowings of the Reformation.

Among those who prepared the way for the Reformation were the exponents of *Wycliffite doctrines; their story is marked by the martyrdoms of Resby (1406) and Crawar (1433) and the citation of the *Lollards of Kyle before the Abp. of Glasgow (1494). The first wave of the Reformation proper was *Lutheran, the second was Swiss. Heretical books were smuggled into Scotland in spite of an Act of Parliament (1525) against their importation. Patrick *Hamilton, who had been in Germany, was burnt at the stake in St. Andrews (1528) for his advocacy of Lutheran principles and his death increased the number of reformers. The policy and campaigns of England under *Henry VIII and *Edward VI added to the pro-Reformation forces but also created patriotic opposition. Cardinal *Beaton led the anti-English party, but his responsibility for the martyrdom of G. *Wishart (1546) led to his murder shortly afterwards. Wishart's mantle fell upon the shoulders of J. *Knox, who, after his labours in England, Frankfurt, and Geneva, ultimately returned to lead the Calvinistic party, now strongly supported by the Lords of the Congregation.

In 1560 the reformed Church of Scotland was established on *Presbyterian lines. It prepared a Confession of Faith (see Scottish Confession) and a 'Book of *Discipline' (1560) and soon adopted the Anglo-Genevan 'Book of *Common Order' as its liturgical directory, but not until twenty years afterwards were presbyteries systematically erected. To make up for the dearth of ministers at first, it was deemed expedient to appoint *superintendents and readers. Soon after the death of Knox (1572) the mantle of leadership was borne by the doughty advocate of high Presbyterianism, A. *Melville. Intimate associations existed between Scottish Presbyterians and the English *Puritans, who, led by T. *Cartwright and W. *Travers, sought by 'Scottizing for Discipline'—to use R. *Bancroft's phrase—to presbyterianize the C of E, but were frustrated by *Elizabeth I and her agent J. *Whitgift.

For more than a hundred years the fortunes of Scottish Presbyterians ebbed and flowed owing to the determination of the Stuart kings to make the Kirk episcopal. Now the Crown was dominant and pro-episcopal Acts were passed (1584); now the Kirk came into power again and Presbyterianism was ratified (1592). For some decades the policy of *James VI & I prevailed, Episcopacy being established by the Scottish Parliament in 1612. The Five Articles of *Perth, which enjoined such usages as kneeling at Communion and the observance of holy days, were passed by a packed Assembly in 1618. The imposition of the Prayer Book, known as W. *Laud's liturgy, brought the conflict between the Kirk and *Charles I to a head in 1637. In the following year the pro-Presbyterian *National Covenant was subscribed and the Glasgow General Assembly, the first free assembly for thirty years, swept Episcopacy away. In 1643 the alliance between the Scottish Covenanters and the Long Parliament was cemented by the *Solemn League and Covenant, and the southern Parliament, aiming, under Scottish influence, at Presbyterian uniformity for the British Isles, convened the *Westminster Assembly (q.v.). The *Directory of Church Government, the Directory of Public *Worship, the *Westminster Confession, and the *Westminster Catechisms (qq.v.) were formally accepted as standards by the Church of Scotland.

After the Restoration Episcopacy was re-established and a bitter and bloody struggle between Scottish Episcopalians and Presbyterians ensued. At the Revolution the Church of Scotland became Presbyterian once more (1690) and has remained so ever since. Chiefly owing to the infringement of popular rights by the Patronage Act of 1712 the Church was weakened by secessions in the 18th cent. (Original Secession, 1733; Relief, 1761) and by the *Disruption (q.v.) of 1843, when nearly a third of its ministers and members left the Establishment and formed the *Free Church. Among notable modern features of Scottish Presbyterian history may be mentioned foreign and colonial missionary enterprise, Church extension at home, increased interest in worship and Church architecture, the transfer of Church schools to the civil authorities (1872), the abolition of patronage (1874), and the relaxation of the terms of credal subscription. The 19th cent. witnessed a growing movement in favour of the union of the different Presbyterian Churches in Scotland. The chief unions took place in 1847 (Secession and Relief to form *United Presbyterian), 1900 (United Presbyterian and Free to form *United Free), and 1929 (United Free and Church of Scotland under the name of the latter). Each union had its unyielding remnant who continued in their former ways, e.g. Free Church, 1900, and United Free Church, 1929. More recently there have been serious attempts to bring about a rapprochement between the Church of Scotland and the (Anglican) Episcopal Church of Scotland. There have been conversations between the Church of Scotland and the C of E; the 1957 Report advocating Bishops in Presbytery' was defeated in the General Assembly by a small majority in 1959, as was the proposal that the Episcopal Church should form a Synod of the General Assembly in 1971.

The great majority of the population of Scotland belong to the Church of Scotland, which is Presbyterian, national, endowed, and free. Its spiritual independence has been recognized and patrimony secured by Acts of Parliament (1921, 1925). From those who adhered to Episcopacy at the Revolution settlement (1690) arose the Episcopal Church in Scotland, which after years of repression and suspicion, largely owing to its Jacobite predilections, is now free to make its distinctive contribution to Scottish religious life. It is in full communion with the C of E, but is autonomous, has its own Prayer Book and is governed by bishops, the chief of whom is called *Primus. The RC Church retains its hold on the descendants of those in the Highlands who were never deeply influenced by Reformation principles; and it also flourishes among those of Irish extraction in industrial Lowland areas.

G. Grub, An Ecclesiastical History of Scotland from the Introduction of Christianity to the Present Time (4 vols., Edinburgh, 1861); J. Cunningham, The Church History of Scotland from the Commencement of the Christian Era to the Present Century (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1859; ed. 2, continued, 1882). A. B. Scott, The Pictish Nation. Its People and its Church (1918). J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960). G. Donaldson, Scotland, Church and Nation through Sixteen Centuries (1960). G. D. Henderson, The Burning Bush. Studies in Scottish Church History (Edinburgh, 1957). A. R. MacEwen, A History of the Church in Scotland [397–1560] (2 vols., [1913]–1918); J. A. Duke, History of the Church of Scotland to the Reformation (1937). Id., The Columban Church (1932). G. A. Frank Knight, Archaeological Light on the Early Christianizing of Scotland (2 vols., 1933). W. D. Simpson, Saint Ninian and the Origins of the Christian Church in Scotland (1940). J. Dowden, The Medieval Church in Scotland. Its Constitution, Organisation and Law (Glasgow, 1910); id., The Bishops of Scotland. Being Notes on the Lives of all the Bishops under each of the Sees prior to the Reformation (Glasgow, 1912). The primary authorities for the period of the Reformation are the histories of J. Knox, J. *Spottiswode and D. *Calderwood (qq.v.). W. M. Campbell, The Triumph of Presbyterianism (Edinburgh, 1958). G. Donaldson, The Scottish Reformation (1960). J. M. Reid, Kirk and Nation. The Story of the Reformed Church of Scotland (1960). R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk. Some Leaders of the Church in Scotland from the Reformation to the Reunion (1960). D. Shaw, The General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland 1560–1600. Their Origins and Development (Edinburgh, 1964). G. D. Henderson, Religious Life in Seventeenth Century Scotland (1937). J. R. Fleming, A History of the Church in Scotland, 1843–1874 (Edinburgh, 1927); id., A History of the Church in Scotland, 1875–1929 (ib., 1933). H. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanae. The Succession of Ministers in the Church of Scotland from the Reformation (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1866–71; new ed., 7 vols., Edinburgh, 1915–28, + 2 additional vols., viii–ix, 1950–61). C. L. Warr, The Presbyterian Tradition. A Scottish Layman's Handbook (1933). J. T. Cox, Practice and Procedure in the Church of Scotland (1934; ed. 5 by J. B. Longmuir, 1964). M. B. Macgregor, The Sources and Literature of Scottish Church History (Glasgow, 1934). H. J. Wotherspoon–J. M. Kirkpatrick, A Manual of Church Doctrine [1919], revised by T. F. Torrance–R. Selby Wright (1960). W. D. Maxwell, A History of Worship in the Church of Scotland (Baird Lectures, 1953; 1955). G. B. Burnet, The Holy Communion in the Reformed Church of Scotland 1560–1960 (1960). F.

Goldie, A Short History of the Episcopal Church from the Restoration to the Present Time (1951). The Scottish liturgies of 1637 and 1764 are printed in W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, xl; 1958), pp. 163–82 and 333–48, with comm. pp. 1–18 and 150–9. W. Perry, The Oxford Movement in Scotland (1933). D. Maclean, The Counter-Reformation in Scotland, 1560–1930 [1931]; P. F. Anson, The Catholic Church in Modern Scotland, 1560–1937 (1937); id., Underground Catholicism in Scotland 1622–1878 (Montrose, 1970). H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960).

SCOTT, GEORGE GILBERT (1811–78), ecclesiastical architect. He was the grandson of T. *Scott, the Biblical commentator (q.v.). A native of Gawcott, Bucks, he had an Evangelical upbringing, and studied architecture under James Edmeston and Robert Smirke, who discouraged his predilection for Gothic. But his acquaintance with Benjamin *Webb, the secretary of the (High Church) *Cambridge Camden Society, and with A. W. N. *Pugin led him to an intensified study of the principles of Gothic art; and his first notable church in that style was St. Giles at Camberwell. In 1840 he was selected as architect for the Martyrs' Memorial, Oxford, from which time he became the most prominent ecclesiastical architect in England. In 1844 he won a competition for the *Lutheran church of St. Nicholas at Hamburg, executed in 13th cent. German Gothic. From 1847 he frequently travelled on the Continent, utilizing his studies esp. of French Gothic for restoration as well as original work in Great Britain. Among cathedrals he was entrusted with work of restoration at *Ely, *Hereford, *Salisbury, and *Gloucester. In 1849 he was appointed architect to the Dean and chapter of *Westminster Abbey. His later works include the Albert Memorial and the mosaic pavement of *Durham Cathedral. In his 'restorations', for which he was famous, he met with resistance owing to his too ready preference for his own designs to the original plans, and the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings was founded to oppose the methods of restoration of which Scott was the leading promoter. Well-known ecclesiastical architects who were trained in his office include G. E. *Street and G. F. Bodley (1827–1907).

His grandson, GILES GILBERT SCOTT (1880–1960), was also a distinguished architect. His works include the Anglican cathedral at *Liverpool, the New Library at Cambridge, and the New Bodleian Library and the Deneke Building and Chapel at Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford.

George Gilbert Scott, Personal and Professional Recollections, ed. by his son, G. Gilbert Scott (1879), with introd. by J. W. *Burgon, pp. ix–xx. List of his works from 1847 to the time of his death in The Builder, xxxvi (1878), p. 360. P. Waterhouse in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 19–23, s.v.
On Giles Gilbert Scott, A. S. G. Butler in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 870–72.

SCOTT, ROBERT (1811–87), Greek lexicographer. Educated at Shrewsbury and at *Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Balliol in 1835 and Master (with B. *Jowett, who succeeded him at the next election, as rival candidate) in 1854. From 1861 to 1870 he was also Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis, and from 1870 till his death Dean of *Rochester. He is remembered esp. through the famous Lexicon which he edited in conjunction with H. G. *Liddell (q.v. for particulars). His other publications include Twelve Sermons (1851) and Sermons preached before the University of Oxford (1860).

H. Craik in D.N.B., li (1897), p. 65 f.

SCOTT, THOMAS (1747–1821), Biblical commentator. The son of John Scott (d. 1777), a grazier, Thomas was apprenticed to a surgeon at Alford, Lincs, but after quick dismissal for some misconduct was employed for some nine years in menial work on the land. Eventually he was ordained deacon in 1772 by the Bp. of *Lincoln and held a succession of curacies, in 1781 succeeding John *Newton, whose acquaintance he had made earlier, at Olney. From 1801 till his death he was rector of Aston Sandford, Bucks. In his Force of Truth (1779) he set out the stages in which his theological beliefs developed from a *Unitarian rationalism to a fervent *Calvinism. His chief work, however, was his Commentary on the Bible, issued in weekly numbers between 1788 and 1792. It was remarkable for its endeavour to discover the message of each section of the Bible for his own soul and a persistent refusal to shirk difficulties by falling back on historical or pietistic disquisitions. It had an enormous circulation, though Scott, who shared but few of the financial profits, continued a poor man. J. H. *Newman in the Apologia testifies to Scott as the influence 'to whom (humanly speaking) I almost owe my soul'.

Collected editions of his works were published at Buckingham in 1805–8 (5 vols.) and in 1823–5 (10 vols.). A. Gordon in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 73–5.

SCOTTISH CONFESSION, The (Lat. Confessio Scotica). The first Confession of Faith of the reformed Church of Scotland. It was adopted by the Scottish Parliament in 1560 and remained the confessional standard until superseded by the *Westminster Confession in 1647. It had been drawn up in four days by J. *Knox and five other ministers in 25 articles, and is a typical Calvinistic document. *Justification by faith is assumed; the doctrine of *election is affirmed; the Real Presence in Communion is emphasized and *transubstantiation and the view that the elements are bare signs are condemned. The Kirk is defined as Catholic; it consists of the elect, and outside of it there is no salvation. The notes of the true Kirk on earth are not lineal descent or numbers, but the true preaching of the Word and the right administration of the sacraments and of discipline. Civil magistrates are stated to be the lieutenants of God, whose duty it is to conserve and purge the Church when necessary; but supreme authority is ascribed to the Word of God.

A supplement to the Confession, also known as the 'Second Scottish Confession' or the 'National Covenant', of a strongly anti-Roman character, was issued and subscribed in 1581.

Modern ed., with introd. by G. D. Henderson, The Scots Confession 1560, together with a rendering into modern Eng. by J. Bulloch (Edinburgh, 1960). P. Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom (1877), iii, pp. 479–85. K. *Barth's *Gifford Lectures (The Knowledge of God and the Service of God according to the Teaching of the Reformation, 1938) are in the form of a commentary on the 1560 Confession.

SCOTUS, DUNS. See Duns Scotus.

SCOTUS ERIGENA. See Erigena.

'SCOURGE OF GOD', The. See Attila.

SCREENS. Partitions of wood, stone, or iron, dividing a church into two or more parts. Chancel- or choir-screens, separating the *choir from the *nave, may be high, solid, and elaborate, as the 15th cent. screens at Amiens, *Chartres, *Canterbury, and *York, or, as in Italy in early times, quite low. In the latter form they were sometimes provided with *ambones on either side. When a chancel-screen is surmounted by a cross ('rood'), it is termed a 'rood-screen'.

J. B. Thiers, Dissertations ecclésiastiques, sur les principaux autels des églises, les jubés des églises, la clôture du chœur des églises (1688), Dissertation des jubés des églises (separate pagination). A. W. *Pugin, A Treatise on Chancel Screens and Rood Lofts, their Antiquity, Use and Symbolic Signification (1851); F. Bond, Screens and Galleries in English Churches (1908); A. Vallance, English Church Screens. Being Great Roods, Screenwork and Rood-Lofts of Parish Churches in England and Wales (1936); id.–E. T. Long, Greater English Screens. Being Great Roods, Screenwork and Rood-Lofts in Cathedrals, Monastic and Collegiate Churches in England and Wales (1947). J. C. Cox, English Church Fittings, Furniture and Accessories [1928], pp. 133–53. G. W. O. Addleshaw–F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 37–63.

SCRIPTORIUM. The room, esp. in a monastery, which was set apart for the scribes to copy MSS. The necessary utensils were provided by a person known as the 'armarius'. As the scriptorium of a particular monastery (or group of monasteries) often adopted a characteristic script, its affiliations can be of great value to palaeographers in assigning the date and place to a MS. A good instance of such a characteristic style of writing is the school of Tours, and of illumination that of *Winchester.

SCRIVENER, FREDERICK HENRY AMBROSE (1813–91), NT textual critic. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he held a number of parochial appointments. From 1846 to 1856 he was headmaster of Falmouth School. He made a very comprehensive study of the text of the NT, publishing collations and detailed descriptions of a large number of (esp. minuscule) MSS., some of them hitherto unexamined. His Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the NT, of which the 1st edition appeared in 1861 (listing some 1,170 MSS.) and the 4th (posthumous, ed. by E. Miller) in 1894 (listing over 3,000), is still a valuable book of reference, despite the attempt made in it to defend the textus receptus*.

E. C. Marchant in D.N.B., li (1897), p. 126, s.v.

SCROFULA, Touching for. See King's Evil, Touching for the.

SCROPE, RICHARD LE (c. 1346–1405), Abp. of *York. Of noble family, he was ordained priest in 1377, became chancellor of Cambridge university in 1378, and in 1382 went to Rome, where he was made auditor of the Curia. He was appointed Bp. of Coventry and *Lichfield in 1386 and, at the request of Richard II, was translated to the Abpric. of York in 1398. Though he assisted in forcing the abdication of the King in 1399 and took part in the enthronement of Henry IV, he soon grew discontented with the latter's government and favoured Northumberland's revolt, to which his reputation for holiness gave additional weight. He also composed a manifesto demanding justice, security, and lighter taxation, and gathered an army which included dissatisfied citizens whom he led against the royal troops. He was tricked, however, into disbanding his followers by the Earl of Westmorland, who feigned compliance with his demands for reform, and was arrested and irregularly sentenced to death at the command of the King. At his tomb in York Minster miracles were soon believed to take place, and he was popularly venerated as a saint, though his cult was never formally approved.

Miscellanea relating to Abp. Scrope in J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, ii (R.S., 1886), pp. 292–311; account of the proceedings against him, ib., iii (1894), pp. 288–91, and letters deprecating the worship at his shrine, pp. 291–4. Life by continuator of chronicle of Thomas Stubbs (perhaps William Melton, 1496–1528), ib., ii, pp. 428–33. Short life by N. H. Nicolas in his ed. of the Scrope and Grosvenor Roll, The Controversy between Sir Richard Scrope and Sir Robert Grosvenor in the Court of Heraldry, MCCCLXXXV–MCCCXC, ii (1832), pp. 121–6. J. H. Wylie, History of England under Henry IV, ii (1894), pp. 192–211, 226–9 and 236–42. J. Sollowway, Archbishop Scrope ('York Minster Tracts', No. 15, [1928]). J. Tait in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 144–7, s.v., with reff. to original sources. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1659–60; B.R.U.C., pp. 513–14.

SCRUPLES (Lat. scrupulus, 'small sharp stone'). In *moral theology, unfounded fears that there is sin where there is none. Scrupulosity may be the result of much ascetic reading of a rigorist tendency, but more often is the outcome of nervous disturbances. It usually manifests itself in the fear of having consented to sinful imaginations and desires, of having made incomplete confessions, and of being unworthy of the reception of the sacraments. It may also err with regard to duties which it is prone to see where they do not exist. Scrupulosity, which often inclines the penitent to refuse submission to the judgement of his confessor, may lead to the sins of obstinacy and despair, or, conversely, to self-indulgence. The scrupulous, who are discouraged from making minute confessions, are usually counselled to disregard their scruples and to act in obedience to the advice of a prudent spiritual director.

SCRUTINY (Lat. scrutinium). In the early Church a term applied to the formal testing to which *catechumens were subjected before their baptism. The word came to be used also of the corresponding examination of candidates for holy orders.

See works cited s.v. Catechumens.

SEA, Forms of Prayer to be used at. In the BCP, a small collection of prayers and anthems for use in various circumstances at sea. The forms include a prayer to be used daily in the Royal Navy, prayers for use in a storm and before battle, thanksgivings for deliverance from storm and for victory, and directions for general confession and absolution in serious danger. The first special prayers for use at sea were put out as a supplement to the *Directory for Public Worship, issued by the Long Parliament in 1645, and the forms now prescribed were first included in the BCP of 1662.

F. Procter–W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), pp. 162, 199, 246, and esp. 644 f. F. S. Horan in P.B.D., p. 745 f., s.v.

SEABURY, SAMUEL (1729–96), first bishop of the *Protestant Episcopal Church of America. After studying theology at Yale university and medicine at Edinburgh, he was ordained priest by the Bp. of *Lincoln in 1753 and served as a missionary in New Brunswick, later holding livings near New York. Remaining loyal to the British Government in the War of Independence, he engaged in controversy in the three 'Farmer's Letters' with Alexander Hamilton and for a time (in 1775) suffered imprisonment. He was elected bishop in 1783; but as his inability, now that the States were independent, to take the Oath of Allegiance precluded his consecration by English bishops, arrangements were made that he should obtain his episcopal orders from Scotland. Seabury was accordingly consecrated at Aberdeen on 14 Nov. 1784. Later, by his co-operation in the consecration of Bp. T. J. Claggett of Maryland, the Scottish and English successions were united. An able organizer and administrator, he was one of the pioneers of the American Protestant Episcopal Church. His consecration is commemorated on 14 Nov. in the American BCP (1979).

E. E. Beardsley, Life and Correspondence of the Right Reverend Samuel Seabury (Boston, 1881; abridged ed. as The Life of Samuel Seabury, London, 1884). Other lives by his great-grandson, William Jones Seabury (New York–London, 1908), H. Thoms (Hampden, Conn.–London, 1963) and B. E. Steiner (Athens, Ohio [1971]). C. K. Vance in Dict. Amer. Biog., xvi (1935), pp. 528–30.

SEAL OF CONFESSION. The absolute obligation not to reveal anything said by a penitent using the Sacrament of *Penance. The obligation includes not only the confessor, but interpreter, bystander, eavesdropper, persons finding and reading lists of sins obviously drawn up for the purpose of the confession, and indeed everyone except the penitent himself. It covers all sins, *venial as well as *mortal, and any other matter the revelation of which would grieve or damage the penitent, or would lower the repute of the sacrament. The obligation arises from a tacit contract between penitent and confessor, from its necessity for the maintenance of the use of the sacrament by the faithful, and from canon law. The obligation covers direct and indirect revelation, e.g. unguarded statements from which matters heard in confession could be deduced or recognized, and admits of no exception, no matter what urgent reasons of life and death, Church or state, may be advanced. The RC ruling on the seal (Sacramentale sigillum) is to be found in CIC, can. 889. In the C of E the relevant proviso in the 1603 *Canons (can. 113) was left unrepealed by the 1969 Canons, which superseded the earlier collection in almost every other respect.

B. Kurtscheid, O.F.M., Das Beichtsiegel in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1912; Eng. trans. as A History of the Seal of Confession, 1927).

SEBALDUS, St., patron saint of Nuremberg. His date (8th–11th cent.) is disputed and nothing certain is known of him, but he is traditionally believed to have lived as a hermit and preacher near Nuremberg. His tomb is attested as a place of pilgrimage from 1072, when miracles were reported to have taken place at it and a church was built over it. From 1300 to 1377 the famous Sebalduskirche was built, and in 1425 the city obtained his formal canonization from Pope *Martin V. His relics rest in the celebrated shrine of Peter Vischer (1508–19), and his name was inserted in the *Roman martyrology in 1927. Feast day, 19 Aug.

His Acta, of uncertain date, mainly recording miracles, pr., with introd., together with the proper of the Mass for his Feast, in AA.SS., Aug. III (1737), pp. 762–77. J. B. Stamminger, Franconia Sancta. Das Leben der Heiligen und Seligen des Frankenlandes, i (Würzburg, 1881), pp. 534–52. A. Feulner, Peter Vischers Sebaldusgrab in Nürnberg (Munich, 1924). A. Borst, 'Die Sebaldslegenden in der mittelalterlichen Geschichte Nürnbergs' in Jahrbuch für fränkische Landesforschung, xxvi (1966 [1967]), pp. 19–178. K. Kunze in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols. 754–67, with extensive reff.

SE-BAPTISTS (Lat. se baptizare, 'to baptize oneself'). In the 17th cent. a name occasionally given to the followers of John *Smyth (the 'Se-Baptist', q.v.), who after baptizing himself established a church at Amsterdam in 1609.

SEBASTE, The Forty Martyrs of. Forty Christian soldiers of the '*Thundering Legion' who were martyred at Sebaste in Lesser Armenia during the Licinian persecution (c. 320) by being left naked on the ice of a frozen pond, with baths of hot water on the banks as a temptation to apostatize. The place of one who gave way was taken by a heathen soldier of the guard, who was immediately converted. Their martyrdom is narrated by St. *Basil of Caesarea and St. *Gregory of Nyssa; and their ashes, which were recovered by the Empress *Pulcheria, were very greatly venerated in the E. Feast day in the E., 9 Mar.; in the W., formerly 10 Mar.

Besides the descriptions in Basil, Hom. 19 ('In sanctos quadraginta Martyres'; J. P. Migne, PG, xxxi, 507–26), and Greg. Nyss., 'In Laudem SS. Quadraginta Martyrum' (J. P. Migne, PG, xlvi, 749–88), there survive an ancient Gk. Passio (not contemporary; ed. O. von Gebhardt, Acta Martyrum Selecta, Berlin, 1902, pp. 171–81) and a Testamentum (διαθήκη; Gk. and Old Slavonic; ed. N. Bonwetsch, Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer, 1897). P. F. de' Cavalieri, 'I quaranta martiri di Sebastia' in Note agiografiche, vii (S.T., xlix; 1928), pp. 155–84 (retracting his earlier views).

SEBASTIAN, St., Roman martyr who is believed to have suffered death during the *Diocletianic Persecution. He is mentioned by the *Chronographer of 354 and in the *Hieronymian Martyrology, and his remains probably gave the name to the Basilica San Sebastiano on the *Appian Way. Acc. to later legend, he was sentenced by the Emp. Diocletian to be shot by archers (hence the representations of him in late medieval and renaissance art as a young man transfixed by arrows), but through the attentions of a widow, named Irene, he recovered from this ordeal and unexpectedly presented himself before the Emperor, who caused him to be clubbed to death. Feast day, 20 Jan.

Gk. text of Martyrium in J. P. Migne, PG, cxvi, 793–816. AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 257–96. B. Pesci, O.F.M., 'Il culto di san Sebastiano a Roma nell'antichità e nel medioevo' in Antonianum, xx (1945), pp. 177–200. On the Basilica, A. Ferrua, S.J., S. Sebastiano fuori le mura e la sua catacomba (Le Chiese di Roma illustrate, xcix; 1968), and R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iv (Rome, 1970), pp. 99–147, with extensive bibl. [in English]. A. Amore in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 557 f.; G. D. Gordini–P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols. 776–801, both s.v.

SECKER, THOMAS (1693–1768), Abp. of *Canterbury. Won over from Dissent to the C of E, he was passed with celerity through Exeter College, Oxford, and deacon's orders, and was ordained priest in 1723. Standing in high favour with Queen Caroline, he was made rector of St. James's, *Westminster, in 1733, and Bp. of Bristol in addition in 1735. In 1737 he became Bp. of *Oxford, in 1750 Dean of *St. Paul's, and from 1758 till his death was Abp. of Canterbury. Secker was among the better prelates of his age. Though he disliked the enthusiasm of the *Methodists, he admired their piety, and he favoured the dispatch of bishops to the American colonies. He stood for tolerance and good sense in general, and thoroughly eschewed the theology of B. *Hoadly. He published a large number of his sermons, which though of no outstanding merit reflect his sober and judicious outlook.

Articles of Enquiry Addressed to the Clergy of the Diocese of Oxford at the Primary Visitation of Dr. Thomas Secker, 1738, ed. H. A. Lloyd Jukes (Oxfordshire Record Society, xxxviii; 1957). Beilby *Porteus, A Review of the Life and Character of Dr. Thomas Secker [1770]. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 216–23. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 170–3.

S.E.C.M. See Royal School of Church Music.

SECOND ADAM. A title of Christ, the new Head of redeemed humanity, as contrasted with the 'first Adam', the original member and type of fallen man. The conception goes back to St. *Paul (Rom. 5. 14, 1 Cor. 15. 45), whose expression, however, is not the 'second' but the 'last Adam' (ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδάμ). St. Paul was perhaps influenced by the notion of the 'heavenly Man' in the Book of *Enoch (so, e.g., A. E. J. Rawlinson).

SECOND COMING. See Parousia.

SECRET (Lat. Oratio secreta). The name long given to a prayer to which the 1970 Roman Missal restores the earlier designation 'Oratio super oblata'. It is said or sung by the celebrant at Mass after the offering of the bread and wine. Until 1964 it was customarily said silently, a practice first recorded in France in the middle of the 8th cent.; it is prob. from this circumstance that the name derived. The prayer varies with the *Proper. It can be traced back to the *Gelasian Sacramentaries.

SECRÉTAN, CHARLES (1815–95), Swiss Protestant philosopher and theologian. A native of Lausanne, he studied at Munich under F. W. J. *Schelling and Franz Baader (1765–1841), under whose joint influence he was led to a speculative and mystical view of religion. He held professorships at Lausanne (1839–45; there he lost his post in the latter year for political reasons), Neuchâtel (1850–66), and again at Lausanne (from 1866). With his older contemporary, A. R. *Vinet (1797–1847), he was one of the leaders of liberal Swiss Protestant thought in the 19th cent. As his outlook matured he increasingly emphasized, under Kant's influence, the moral significance of faith and the importance of freedom. Among his works were Philosophie de la liberté (2 vols., 1849; later edd., much altered, 1866, 1879), La Raison et le christianisme (1863), La Civilisation et la croyance (1887), and Essais de philosophie et de littérature (1896; posthumous).

L. Secrétan, Charles Secrétan. Sa vie et ses œuvres (1911). F. Pillon, La Philosophie de Charles Secrétan (1898). E. Plasshoff-Lejeune in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1896), pp. 114–18.

SECRETS OF ENOCH, Book of the, also known as 'II Enoch' or 'the Slavonic Enoch', an apocryphal work orig. written in Greek and prob. dating from the first century A.D. For further details see Enoch, Books of.

SECTARY. The term was applied in the 17th and 18th cents. esp. to Protestant Nonconformists in England. Occasionally it is used in modern writers of those whose zeal for their own religious body is considered excessive.

SECULAR ARM. In *canon law, a term used to describe the state or any lay power when intervening in ecclesiastical cases. This intervention has been generally of two kinds, (1) unsought, (2) sought, by the Church. (1) Resort has often been made by individuals to the lay authorities to interfere with or hinder the processes of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. In the RC Church such action is now punished by excommunication and is a case specially reserved to the Apostolic See (see Reserved Sins). It has frequently been invoked as an appeal tamquam ab abusu, i.e. an appeal to the secular arm to see that justice is done, on the ground that the ecclesiastical authorities have been guilty of a miscarriage of justice. (2) The Church has not felt justified in imposing in her own tribunals penalties which involve mutilation or death, but the Church courts have had to deal with some cases, chiefly those of heresy, in which it was felt that sterner punishments were needed than they could impose. The assistance of the secular arm was therefore sought and, after trial by an ecclesiastical judge, the condemned prisoner was handed over to the secular authorities for punishment. In the Middle Ages this course of action, which was common, was a fruitful source of dispute between the two powers as to the proper method of procedure, and in particular as to whether there should be a second trial in a secular court.

For the action of the secular arm in the trial and punishment of clerks see Benefit of Clergy.*

R. Naz in D.D.C., ii (1937), col. 980 f., s.v. 'Bras séculier (Appel au)'; R. Laprat, ib., cols. 981–1060, s.v. 'Bras séculier (Livraison au)'. See also works cited under Inquisition.

SECULAR CLERGY. The term, which seems to have been first used in the 12th cent., is used of priests living in the world, to distinguish them from the 'regular clergy', i.e. members of religious orders, who live acc. to a rule. Secular priests are bound by no vows, may possess property, and owe canonical obedience to their bishops. Acc. to RC canon law they are bound to celibacy. They take precedence of the regular clergy of equal rank.

SECULARISM. The term, which was first used c. 1850 by G. J. Holyoake (1817–1906), denotes a system which seeks to interpret and order life on principles taken solely from this world, without recourse to belief in God and a future life. Holyoake's ideas were later developed into extreme atheism by being cast into a more logical form by C. *Bradlaugh. Apart from its negative attitude to Christianity and religion in general, secularism advocated on the positive side social progress and the amelioration of material conditions for the working classes. The term is now widely used in a more general sense for the modern tendency to ignore, if not to deny, the principles of supernatural religion in the interpretation of the world and existence.

SEDE VACANTE (Lat., 'the see being vacant'). The period during which a diocese is without its bishop. In the C of E during such vacancy the archbishop of the province is guardian of the spiritualities of the diocese, which are administered under his commission. The temporalities are in the custody of the sovereign. During a vacancy in the Papal See, the administration of the RC Church is in the hands of the 'Cardinale Camerlengo', the Chamberlain at the Vatican.

SEDIA GESTATORIA. The portable throne on which the Pope is carried by 12 footmen (palafrenieri), dressed in red uniforms, on certain prescribed solemn occasions.

SEDILIA (Lat., 'seats'). The seats, usually three in number, for the celebrant, deacon, and subdeacon, on the south side of the chancel. They were introduced in England about the middle of the 12th cent., and used during those parts of the service at which it was customary for the ministers to sit. In medieval England they were usually stone benches built into a niche in the wall, often richly carved and surmounted by arches or canopies. On the Continent of Europe and in modern England wooden seats (scamna) have been more common. Since 1964 sedilia have largely been replaced by a chair for the celebrant placed in the centre of the sanctuary.

SEDULIUS SCOTUS (9th cent.), poet and scholar. A native of *Ireland, in 848 he came to Liège, where he found a patron in Bp. Hartgar and established an important Irish centre of culture. He also enjoyed the favour of the Emp. Lothair I, who probably entrusted him with the education of his sons, Lothair and Charles, and for one of whom his 'Liber de Rectoribus Christianis' on the art of government seems to have been written. Besides his numerous poems on religious and secular subjects he published several theological works, incl. commentaries on St. Matthew's Gospel and St. Paul's Epistles. The Pauline commentaries are of interest because they draw on the genuine text of *Pelagius. There is also evidence that he wrote Greek.

His Commentaries on the Pauline Epp., 'Liber de Rectoribus Christianis', and some other theological works are collected in J. P. Migne, PL, ciii, 9–352. Crit. ed. of his commentary on Eph. by H. J. Frede, Pelagius, Der irische Paulustext, Sedulius Scottus (Vetus Latina. Die Reste der Altlateinischen Bibel. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, iii; 1961), pp. 107–55. His Comm. on Matt. is not yet published. Poems ed. L. Traube in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 151–240. S. Hellmann, Sedulius Scottus (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, i, Hft. 1; 1906), with text of 'Liber de Rectoribus Christianis', pp. 19–91, and certain other fragments. Further letter probably to be attributed to him ed. E. Dümmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, vi (1925), p. 206. G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Une Révision du psautier sur le texte grec par un anonyme du neuvième siècle' in R. Bén., x (1893), pp. 193–7. G. Martini, 'Un codice sconosciuto del "De Rectoribus Christianis" di Sedulio Scoto' in Bullettino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo e Archivio Muratoriano, 1 (1935), pp. 49–62. R. E. McNally, S.J., The Bible in the Early Middle Ages (Westminster, Maryland, 1959), pp. 93, 107–15. H. Pirenne, 'Sedulius de Liège' in Mémoires couronnés et autres mémoires publiés par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, Collection in -8°, xxxiii (1882), Lettres, No. 4. J. Gross, 'Sedulius Scottus, ein verspäteter Semipelagianer' in Z.K.G., lxviii (1957), pp. 322–32. R. Düchtung, Sedulius Scottus. Seine Dichtungen (Munich, 1968). Manitius, i, pp. 315–23; Raby, pp. 193–6. J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (Records of Civilization, 1929), pp. 553–69 ('The Circle of Sedulius'). I. Cecchetti in E.C., xi (1953), col. 228 f., s.v. 'Sedulio Scoto'.

SEE. Properly, the official 'seat' (sedes) or 'throne' (cathedra) of a *Bishop. This seat, which is the earliest of the Bishop's insignia, normally stands in the *Cathedral of the Diocese; hence the town or place where the Cathedral is located is also itself known as the Bishop's see. See also Holy See.

SEEKERS. A small *Puritan sect of the early 17th cent. They believed that no true Church had existed since the spirit of *Antichrist became uppermost in the Church, and that God would in His own time ordain new Apostles or Prophets to found a new Church. They did not think it right to hasten on this process, with the result that they were vehemently opposed by the *Anabaptists. In their quietistic outlook they had many affinities with the *Quakers. Bartholomew Legate (c. 1575–1612), one of their preachers, was burnt at Smithfield for heresy. During the Commonwealth period the word was used very loosely to describe people dissatisfied with the existing religious sects. Many of these Seekers were absorbed into the Society of *Friends.

R. M. *Jones, Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), pp. 449–469; W. C. Braithwaite, The Beginnings of Quakerism (1912), esp. pp. 25–7, 58–65, and 78–97. A. L. Morton, The World of the Ranters (1970), esp. pp. 61, 127–31. R. M. Jones in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), p. 350 f., s.v., with reff. See also bibl. to Friends, Society of.

SEELEY, JOHN ROBERT (1834–95), historian. The son of R. B. Seeley, an author and publisher (1798–1886), J. R. Seeley was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and in 1863 appointed professor of Latin at University College, London. His book Ecce Homo* (1865; q.v.) at once made him famous. Later he supplemented this by an essay, Natural Religion (1882), which was designed to reconcile the claims of Christianity with those of natural science, though he denied that the supernatural was an integral part of the Christian faith. In 1869 he was appointed professor of modern history at Cambridge, where he exercised a stimulating influence as a teacher. His later writings were on purely historical subjects, among them his widely read Expansion of England (1883).

Memoir by G. W. Prothero prefixed to Seeley's The Growth of British Policy, i (1895), pp. vii–xxii. Id. in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 190–3, s.v.

SEGNERI, PAOLO (1624–94), Italian preacher. Having entered the *Jesuit Order in 1637, he was ordained priest in 1653. He is reckoned the greatest pulpit orator of Italy after St. *Bernardino of Siena and *Savonarola. Though his sermons show occasional lapses in taste, he was very successful in uniting a vigorous and ordered exposition of his argument with a powerful emotional appeal. His most famous collection of sermons is his Quaresimale (i.e. those delivered in *Lent), first published at Florence in 1679. In the matter of moral theology he opposed both *Probabiliorist and *Quietist doctrines.

Early collected edd. of his works in 2 vols., Parma, 1700–1701; 4 vols., Venice, 1712, and 3 vols., Parma, 1714; several later edd. Lettere inedite, ed. G. Boero (Naples, 1848); further Lettere inedite di P. Segneri al granduca Cosimo Terzo [ed. S. Giamini] (Florence, 1857). P. T. Venturi, S.J. (ed.), 'Lettere inedite di Paolo Segneri di Cosimo III e di Giuseppe Agnelli intorno la condanna dell'opera segneriana la "Concordia" ' in Archivio storico italiano, Ser. 5, xxxi (1903), pp. 127–63. The brief life by G. Massei, S.J. (Venice, 1701), is also pr. in the edd. of his works; Eng. tr. ed. F. W. *Faber, Cong. Orat., London, 1851. G. Minozzi, Paolo Segneri (Il pensiero cristiano, i, 2 vols., Amatrice, 1949). V. Socini, Il p. Paolo Segneri (1624–1694) nella storia farnese a Parma con lettere e documenti inediti (Parma, 1924). G. Marzot, Un classico della controriforma, Paolo Segneri (Saggi di letteratura ital., x; Palermo, 1950). Sommervogel, vii (1896), cols. 1050–89, and ix (1900), col. 849. R. Brouillard in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1951), cols. 1771–5, s.v.; C. Testore in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 239–41, s.v., for further lit.

SÉGUIER, PIERRE (1588–1672), Chancellor of France from 1635 (with some interruptions) until his death. A keen patron of literature, he possessed one of the finest private collections of (esp. Greek) MSS. then in existence. Séguier's great-grandson, H. C. du Cambout de Coislin, Bp. of Metz from 1697 to 1732, into whose hands his library had passed, commissioned the *Maurist scholar, B. de *Montfaucon, to make a catalogue of it, which he issued in 1715 as Bibliotheca Coisliniana olim Segueriana. In 1735 the MSS. came into the possession of the abbey of *St.-Germain-des-Prés, whence, during the winter of 1794–5, they passed to the Bibliothèque Nationale.

Lettres et mémoires adressés au Chancelier Séguier (1633–1649), ed. R. Mousnier (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris, Série 'Textes et Documents', vi–vii; 1964). Modern catalogue of the MSS. by R. Devreesse, Bibliothèque Nationale. Département des Manuscrits. Catalogue des Manuscrits grecs, ii. Le Fonds Coislin (1945). Life by R. Kerviler (Paris, 1874).

SEISES, Dance of the. The religious dance performed before the Blessed Sacrament in Seville Cathedral in the course of the celebrations of *Corpus Christi and the Immaculate *Conception of the BVM. It is executed by a group of boys, of whom there were formerly (as their name implies; seis = 'six') only six, but are now ten.

SELBORNE, First Earl of. See Palmer, Roundell.

SELDEN, JOHN (1584–1654), author of The History of Tithes. Educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, he was admitted to the bar at the Inner Temple in 1612, but never made the practice of law more than incidental to his life. He sat in several parliaments, being M.P. for Oxford University in the Long Parliament. A moderate *Puritan, he became in 1643 a member of the *Westminster Assembly of Divines. His learning was prodigious. In his History of Tithes (1618) he upheld their legal, but denied their Divine, right, and in consequence the book was suppressed and its author forbidden to reply to any of his antagonists. Among his other historico-legal writings are Jani Anglorum Facies Altera (1610), The Duello (1610; a history of trial by combat), Mare Clausum (1635, but for the most part written much earlier; a reply to H. *Grotius's Mare Liberum, 1609), and The Privileges of Baronage (1642). Selden was also one of the foremost oriental scholars of his day and the author of De Diis Syris (1617). The greater part of his valuable collection of books passed to the *Bodleian Library. His Table Talk (1689), the utterances of his last twenty years, was compiled by his amanuensis, Richard Milward.

Opera Omnia, ed. D. *Wilkins (3 vols. bound in 6, London, 1726), with life by id. in vol. i, pt. 1, pp. i–lvi. Modern ed. of his Table Talk by F. Pollock (London, 1927), with account of his life by E. Fry (repr. from D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 212–24, s.v.), pp. 153–85, and introd., pp. vii–xxiv. G. W. Johnson, Memoirs of the Life of John Selden and Notices of the Political Contest during his Time (1835). J. Aitkin, The Lives of John Selden, Esq., and Archbishop Usher (1812), pp. 1–199. H. D. Hazeltine, 'Selden as a Legal Historian: A Comment in Criticism and Appreciation' in Festschrift Heinrich Brunner zum siebzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht von Schülern und Verehrern (1910), pp. 579–630. A. W. Ward, 'Selden's Table Talk' in A. W. Ward–A. R. Waller (edd.), The Cambridge History of English Literature, viii (1912), pp. 321–7. D. M. Barratt, 'The Library of John Selden and its later History' in Bodleian Record, iii (1951), pp. 128–42, 208–13, and 256–74.

SELEUCEIA, Synod of. See Ariminum and Seleuceia, Synods of.

SELLON, PRISCILLA LYDIA (c. 1821–76), a restorer of the religious life in the C of E. She was the daughter of W. R. B. Sellon, Commander R.N. When about to leave England for her health on New Year's Day, 1848, she was led to change her plans at the last moment by a public appeal of H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of Exeter, for work among the degraded and destitute of Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse. Here she was gradually joined by others, who, with the help of E. B. *Pusey, created a community life (the 'Devonport Sisters of Mercy'), set up schools and orphanages and heroically tended the sick in the cholera epidemic of 1848. Their conventual mode of life soon provoked local opposition, but the support of Phillpotts (who, however, withdrew from the office of 'visitor' in 1852) enabled them to continue. In 1856 Miss Sellon united her community with the Sisters of the Holy Cross at Osnaburgh Street, Regent's Park, and assumed the title of Abbess of the combined sisterhood of the 'Society of the Most Holy Trinity' (present headquarters at Ascot Priory, Berks). In her last years Miss Sellon was severely paralysed. In 1867 she visited Honolulu, where she founded St. Andrew's Priory.

T. J. Williams, Priscilla Lydia Sellon (1950; revised ed., 1965).

SELWYN, GEORGE AUGUSTUS (1809–78), first Bp. of *New Zealand. Educated at Eton and St. John's College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1833 and made missionary Bishop of New Zealand in 1841. He was a *Tractarian in his convictions, whose formal protest against a clause in the civil Letter Patent professing to 'give him power to ordain' signalled the beginnings of a less Erastian conception of the Colonial Episcopate. He had a very marked effect on the future of the New Zealand Church, for settling the constitution of which he was himself largely responsible. Returning to England in 1867, he was appointed in 1868 to the see of *Lichfield. In American BCP (1979), feast day, 11 Apr.

His son, JOHN RICHARDSON SELWYN (1844–1898), was Bp. of Melanesia (1877–89) and master of Selwyn College, Cambridge (1890–98), which had been founded in memory of his father in 1881.

Lives by H. W. Tucker (2 vols., London, 1879), G. H. Curteis (ib., 1889), Louise Creighton (ib., 1923) and J. H. Evans (ib., 1964). R. Bayne in D.N.B., li (1897), p. 232 f.; R. H. Codrington in D.E.C.H., p. 550 f.

On J. R. Selwyn, Life by F. D. How (London, 1899). R. Bayne in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), p. 338 f.

SEMIARIANISM. The teaching of the theologians who gathered round *Basil of Ancyra from c. 356 onwards and upheld a doctrine of Christ's Sonship intermediate between that of orthodoxy and *Arianism. Other members of the group were *Macedonius of Constantinople, *George of Laodicea, *Eustathius of Sebaste, and Eleusius of Cyzicus. Over against ὁμοούσιος, they took as their watchword ὁμοιούσιος; but the whole tendency of the group was towards orthodoxy. They were sympathetically treated by St. *Athanasius at the Alexandrine Council of 362, and by their theological influence on the '*Cappadocian Fathers' contributed largely to the reaffirmation of orthodoxy at the Council of Constantinople in 381.

The chief work is J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des arianischen Streites in den Jahren 356–61 (1900). Much useful material also in H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (ed. 2, 1900). M. Simonetti, Studi sull'arianesimo (Verba Seniorum, N.S. v [1965]), pp. 160–86 ('Sulla dottrina dei Semiariani'). G. Rasneur, 'L'Homoiousianisme dans ses rapports avec l'orthodoxie' in R.H.E., iv (1903), pp. 189–206, 411–31. F. J. Foakes Jackson in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 374–6, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1790–1796, s.v. 'Semi-Ariens'. See also bibl. to Arianism.

SEMI-DOUBLES. Feasts in the Roman Calendar which ranked below *Doubles and above *Simple Feasts. By a decree of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites dated 23 Mar. 1955, the rank of Semi-Double was abolished, feasts which had ranked hitherto as such being reduced to Simples.

SEMINARY. The term is sometimes used to describe Anglican *theological colleges (q.v.), but is more usually kept for the corresponding institutions in the RC Church. The Council of *Trent ordered the establishment of a seminary in every diocese and this has remained roughly the rule of the RC Church. The rules concerning seminaries were revised by the Second *Vatican Council's decree on priestly formation, 'Optatam totius'. Seminaries are of different kinds, diocesan, interdiocesan, provincial, and pontifical, acc. to the authority which establishes them and has jurisdiction over them.

J. A. O'Donohoe, Tridentine Seminary Legislation. Its Sources and its Formation (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, ix; 1957). Id. in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 72–5, s.v.

SEMI-PELAGIANISM. The doctrines on human nature upheld in the 4th and 5th cents. by a group of theologians who, while not denying the necessity of *Grace for salvation, maintained that the first steps towards the Christian life were ordinarily taken by the human will and that Grace supervened only later. Their position was roughly midway between the radically opposed doctrines of St. *Augustine and *Pelagius. (It should be added that the term 'Semi-Pelagian', which is modern, was orig. coined by the followers of D. *Báñez for the doctrines of the Jesuit, L. *Molina; in this sense it is now extinct.)

These teachings first took definite shape in the writings of *Cassian of Marseilles c. 420 and received widespread support esp. in the monasteries in the S. of Gaul. They developed mainly in opposition to St. Augustine's later writings, which taught an extreme form of predestination, infallible perseverance, and a 'numerus clausus' of the elect. When after Augustine's death (430) these doctrines continued to be championed by his disciple, St. *Prosper of Aquitaine, they were fiercely attacked in two writings of Gallic provenance, the 'Objectiones Vincentianae', almost certainly by St. *Vincent of Lérins, and in the 'Capitula Gallorum'. Prosper replied in two no less violent works, 'Contra Collatorem' and 'Responsiones ad Capitula Objectionum Gallorum'. After this the controversy subsided, though Semi-Pelagianism continued to be the dominant teaching in Gaul for several generations.

Early in the 6th cent. the controversy broke out afresh over the 'De Gratia', a Semi-Pelagian writing of *Faustus of Riez (q.v.), composed c. 470. Its author had long been dead, but the work was denounced as heretical at both *Constantinople and Rome by the Scythian monks under John Maxentius. Its critics gained the support of St. *Fulgentius of Ruspe and of St. *Caesarius of Arles; and through their agency Semi-Pelagian (as well as Pelagian) doctrines were formally condemned by the Council of *Orange of 529. From then onwards the Augustinian teaching on Grace was generally accepted in orthodox Western theology.

For an extended treatment, see the classic study of H. *Noris, Historia Pelagiana (Padua, 1673), pp. 158–338. F. Wörter, Beiträge zur Dogmengeschichte des Semipelagianismus ('1898' [1897]); id., Zur Dogmengeschichte des Semipelagianismus (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, v, Hft. 2; 1899). F. A. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 192–203, s.v. 'Semipelagianismus'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1796–1850, s.v. 'Semi-Pélagiens'. See also bibl. to Pelagianism and to the entries on the Semi-Pelagians mentioned in the text.

SEMI-QUIETISM. A name sometimes applied to the doctrines of Abp. *Fénelon and other spiritual writers who, though not sufficiently unorthodox to come under the censures attaching to *Quietism and quite free from its anti-ecclesiastical and anti-moral elements, manifest certain quietist tendencies.

SEMLER, JOHANN SALOMO (1725–91), *Lutheran theologian and Biblical critic. Born at Saalfeld in Thuringia, he studied at Halle, where he later became Professor of Theology (1753–91). He soon rejected the *Pietism of his youth for a rationalistic position which he termed 'liberalis theologia'. One of the first German theologians to apply the critico-historical method to the study of the Biblical *Canon and Text, he reached many novel, and often unorthodox, conclusions, at some points anticipating F. C. *Baur. He held, however, that Christian ministers should be required to make external profession of all traditional doctrine. In this matter, finding himself at variance with G. E. *Lessing in the controversy over the *Wolfenbüttel Fragments, he directed against Lessing his Beantwortung der Fragmente eines Ungekannten (1779). In his last years he interested himself in scientific, alchemistic, and theosophical studies. His principal treatises are Historiae Ecclesiasticae Selecta Capita (3 vols., Halle, 1767–9), Abhandlung von freier Untersuchung des Canon (4 parts, Halle, 1771–5), Commentarii

Historici de Antiquo Christianorum Statu (2 vols., Halle, 1771–2), and Versuch eines fruchtbaren Auszugs der Kirchengeschichte (3 vols., Halle, 1773–8).

Autobiography, 2 vols., Halle, 1781–2, with list of his writings. H. Hoffmann, Die Theologie Semlers (1905); P. Gastrow, Johann Salamo Semler in seiner Bedeutung für die Theologie (1905); L. Zscharnack, Lessing und Semler. Ein Beitrag zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Rationalismus und der kritischen Theologie (1905); G. Hornig, Die Anfänge der historisch-kritischen Theologie. Johann Salomo Semlers Schriftverständnis und seine Stellung zu Luther (Forschungen zur systematischen Theologie und Religionsphilosophie, viii; Göttingen, 1961). H. Hohlwein in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), col. 1696 f., s.v.

SEMPRINGHAM. In S. Lincolnshire, the mother-house of the Order founded by St. *Gilbert of Sempringham (d. 1189; q.v.). Gilbert was in early life an incumbent of the parish.

SENECA, LUCIUS ANNAEUS (c. 4 B.C.–A.D. 65), Roman moralist. A native of Cordova, he studied at *Rome under the *Stoic Attalus, and entered on a career at the bar. Under the Emp. Claudius he was banished for several years to Corsica (41–9). After his recall by Agrippina he became the tutor of the future Emp. *Nero. In the earlier part of Nero's reign he exercised much influence, being granted a suffect consulate c. 56; later he was charged by Nero with taking part in Piso's conspiracy and forced to take his own life. Seneca's brother, *Gallio (q.v.), who was Proconsul of Achaia, is mentioned in Acts 18. 12.

Seneca's writings include a collection of so-called 'Dialogues', among them 'De Providentia', 'De Ira', 'De Beata Vita' (imperfect), 'De Tranquillitate Animi', 'De Brevitate Vitae'; a set of 124 'Epistulae Morales' addressed to Lucilius; the 'Apocolocyntosis', a skit on the deification of the Emp. Claudius; and the 'Naturales Quaestiones', a treatise on natural phenomena. He also wrote some Tragedies. His writings represent Stoicism at its best and have been much studied by Christian apologists for the similarities as well as the contrasts of their moral teaching with the Gospel ethic.

There is also in existence an apocryphal correspondence of fourteen letters between Seneca (eight letters) and St. *Paul (six letters). Their commonplace manner and colourless style show that they cannot be the work either of the moralist or of St. Paul. They are prob. the same letters as those known to St. *Jerome (De Vir. Illustr., xii), who on the strength of them reckons Seneca a Christian, and to St. *Augustine (Ep. cliii. 14), though some critics have denied the identification and assigned the extant letters to a much later date. The oldest MSS. date from the 9th cent., and the text is transmitted in a corrupt state.

There have been innumerable editions of Seneca's works, beginning with the editio princeps of B. Romerus, Naples, 1475. Modern lives by R. Waltz (Paris, 1909), C. Marchesi (Messina, 1920; ed. 3, 1944) and P. Grimal (Paris, 1948). M. Baumgarten, Lucius Annaeus Seneca und das Christenthum (1895). E. Albertini, La Composition dans les ouvrages philosophiques de Sénèque (1923). Überweg, i, pp. 488 f., 491–493, with bibl. pp. 158*–162*. M. Spanneut in N.C.E., xiii (1967), p. 80 f., s.v.; A. Ker–L. D. Reynolds in O.C.D. (ed. 2, 1970), p. 972 f., s.v. 'Seneca (2)'.

Edd. of Seneca's Correspondence with St. Paul by F. X. Kraus in Th.Q., xlix (1867), pp. 603–24; by F. Haase in Senecae Opera, Suppl. 1902 (Teub.), pp. 74–9, and by C. W. Barlow (Rome, 1938), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Supplement, i, 673–8. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 480–4. T. *Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, ii (pt. 2; 1892), pp. 612–22; P. de Labriolle, La Réaction païenne. Étude sur la polémique antichrétienne du Ier au VIe siècle (1934), pp. 25–8; A. Momigliano, 'Note sulla leggenda del cristianesimo di Seneca' in Rivista Storica Italiana, lxii (1950), pp. 325–43, with extensive refl.; repr. in his Contributo alla storia degli studi classici (1955), pp. 13–32. On the relations between St. Paul and the real Seneca see J. B. *Lightfoot, 'St. Paul and Seneca' in Philippians (1868), pp. 268–331; K. Deissner, Paulus und Seneca (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Bd. xxi (2); 1917); and J. N. Sevenster, Paul and Seneca (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, iv; 1961).

SENS, Councils of. Of the many provincial Councils held at Sens (e.g. in A.D. 601, 833, 845, 1140, 1225, 1461, 1485), the most renowned is that of 1140 under Abp. Henri le Sanglier, which condemned *Abelard for heresy. Abelard forthwith appealed to Pope Innocent II against its sentence.

On the council of 1140 (formerly dated 1141), Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1219–24; Mansi, xxi (Venice, 1776), cols. 559–570. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 747–90. M. Deutsch, Die Synode von Sens 1141 und die Verurteilung Abälards (1880). E. Vacandard, 'Chronologie abélardienne; la date du concile de Sens: 1140' in R.Q.H., I (1891), pp. 235–245. See also works cited under Abelard, P., and Bernard, St.

SENTENCES (Lat. Sententiae), short reasoned expositions of the principal truths of Christian doctrine. The Lat. word 'sententia' orig. meant any exposition of thought. During the early Middle Ages it came to be used esp. of general impersonal maxims, and then later took on a new technical meaning in relation to exegesis. *Hugh of St.-Victor distinguished three elements in the explanation of texts: (1) littera, which studied words and their connexion with each other; (2) sensus, the obvious meaning; and (3) sententia, which provided understanding of the meaning underlying the text. Collections of Sentences then became systematized, reasoned compilations of opinions; the most famous of these collections was the 'Sententiarum libri quattuor' of *Peter Lombard, which was the subject of numerous commentaries. By the 13th cent. sententia had come to mean an accepted proposition or theological conclusion. See also Florilegia.

SEPARATISTS. As a title, first applied to the followers of R. *Browne and later to the *Independents (*Congregationalists) and others who separated from the C of E.

SEPTUAGESIMA (Lat., 'the seventieth [day before Easter]'). The third Sunday before *Lent and hence the ninth before *Easter. The name, which first occurs in the *Gelasian Sacramentary, seems not very appropriate, as the Sunday indicated is in fact only 64, and not 70, days before Easter; but perhaps it was coined by reckoning back the series 'septuagesima', 'sexagesima', 'quinquagesima', from Quinquagesima Sunday, which is exactly 50 days from Easter. In the RC Church it was suppressed in 1969. Previously in the liturgical cycle it marked a stage towards the Lent fast; purple vestments were worn from that day onwards until *Holy Week and the word 'Alleluia' was not used again in the offices or at Mass until the end of Lent. The name passed into the BCP and is still used in the C of E.

C. Callewaert, 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Grégoire. La septuagésime et l'alléluia' in R.H.E., xxxiii (1937), pp. 306–326; G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'La Part des papes du sixième siècle dans le développement de l'année liturgique' in R. Bén., lii (1940), pp. 1–14, pp. 1–8 being relevant; J. Froger, O.S.B., 'Les Anticipations du jeûne quadragésimal' in Mélanges de Science religieuse, iii (1946), pp. 207–34; A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâques d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains' in Rech. S.R., xxxvii (1950), pp. 125–45, esp. V, 'La "Septantaine" ou Septuagésime', pp. 143–5. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1262–6, s.v.

SEPTUAGINT, The. ('LXX.') The most influential of the Greek versions of the Heb. OT. Jewish tradition attributes its origin to the initiative of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285–246 B.C.), who desired a translated copy of the Hebrew Law for his famous Library at Alexandria (see Aristeas, Letter of) and engaged 72 translators (hence the title 'Septuagint') for the work. Gradually the story was improved, and Ptolemy's name was connected not only with the Pentateuch, but with all the OT. Internal evidence indicates that the LXX was really the work of a number of translators (in some cases more than one scholar sharing the responsibility for a single Book), that not all of it was translated at Alexandria, and that the work of translation extended over a considerable period. A passage in the preface to the Greek version of Ecclus. suggests that at the time the author of the preface was writing (132 B.C.) the Greek OT as we now know it was virtually complete.

The LXX differs from the Hebrew Bible both in the order of the Biblical Books and in the fact that it includes more Books. The threefold division into the 'Law', the 'Prophets', and the 'Writings' is abandoned, and several other Books, which are not found in the Hebrew, are included. These, known as the '*Apocrypha' in the English Bible, include Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Judith, Tobit, and Baruch. Also the text of the LXX differs considerably at many points from the corresponding Hebrew. The original LXX of Job is about one-sixth shorter than the Hebrew; there are several interesting passages in the LXX of 1 Kings that are not in the Hebrew; and there are considerable differences in order between the Hebrew and the LXX in Jeremiah.

The early Christian Church inherited the LXX, and the NT writers commonly quoted the OT Books from it. In Mt. 1. 23, where the *Immanuel prophecy of Is. 7. 14 is cited in approximately the LXX form, the Greek is particularly relevant since it here renders the Hebrew word 'almah ('a young woman of marriageable age') by παρθένος ('a virgin'). Commonly, however, the differences between the Hebrew and LXX are only verbal. It must also be noted that in a number of NT passages the Hebrew is followed against the LXX.

In post-NT times, the Christian Fathers down to the later 4th cent. almost all regarded the LXX as the standard form of the OT and seldom referred to the Hebrew. *Origen, however, was greatly interested in the relation of the LXX to the Hebrew and the other Greek versions. The LXX was also the basis of the '*Old Latin Version(s)' of the OT. It was St. *Jerome's *Vulgate that first provided Christians with a Latin version of the OT direct from the original, and did most to dispel the belief, common in the early Church, that the LXX was verbally inspired.

The LXX exists in a large number of MSS., uncial and minuscule, as well as in a number of important, though not very extensive, papyrus fragments (esp. the *Chester Beatty Papyri). The MSS. include the *Codex Sinaiticus, where, however, only about a third of the OT survives; the *Codex Vaticanus, with Gen. 1. 1–46. 28, and a few other portions, wanting; and the *Codex Ephraemi, of which only 64 leaves from the poetical Books remain.

The complete LXX was printed for the first time in Cardinal *Ximenes' Complutensian Polyglott (1514–17), the Latin Vulgate being placed between the Hebrew on the left and the LXX on the right ('tanquam duos hinc et inde latrones, medium autem Jesum'*). Later editions are those of A. Manutius (1518); 'Auctoritate Sixti V Pont. Max.' (Rome, 1586); J. E. *Grabe (Oxford, 1707–20); R. Holmes–J. Parsons (Oxford, 1798–1827); H. B. *Swete (Cambridge, 1887–94); A. E. Brooke, N. McLean, and H. St. J. Thackeray (Cambridge, 1906 ff.); the Göttingen Academy (Stuttgart, 1926 ff.); A. Rahlfs (Stuttgart, 1935).

E. *Hatch–H. A. Redpath, A Concordance to the Septuagint (2 vols., 1897; suppl., 1906). H. St. J. Thackeray, A Grammar of the Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint (vol. i, all publ., 1909). H. B. Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900, rev. by R. R. Ottley, 1914). R. R. Ottley, Handbook to the Septuagint (1920). S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968). P. Walters, The Text of the Septuagint, ed. D. W. Gooding, 1973. P. de *Lagarde, 'Septuaginta Studien' in Abh. (Gött.), xxxvii (1891), pp. 3–92, and xxxviii (1892), pp. 3–102. A. Rahlfs (ed.), Septuaginta-Studien (3 vols., 1904–11). F. G. Kenyon, The Text of the Greek Bible (1937), pp. 24–65. Mitteilungen des Septuaginta-Unternehmens der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen (5 vols., Berlin, 1910–32). E. *Nestle in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 437–54, s.v.; F. C. *Burkitt in E.Bi., iv (1903), col. 5016 f., s.v. 'Text and Versions'.

SEPULCHRE, Holy. See Holy Sepulchre.

SEQUENCE (Lat. sequentia). In the Liturgy, a rhythm sung on certain days after the second reading (*Epistle). The word seems to have been applied originally to the series of notes on which the final a of the *Alleluia was sung. As time went on, a syllabic text was introduced as a basis of this music, and by an easy change the word was transferred from the melody to the text of the composition, which gradually came to resemble a hymn in form, and was placed before the Alleluia. In medieval times a large number of sequences were in regular use. Many of these have survived in the rites of the religious orders, e.g. the *Dominican, but in the Roman Missal their number has now been reduced to five. These are the well-known '*Victimae paschali' (at *Easter), the '*Veni, sancte Spiritus' (at *Whitsun), the '*Lauda Sion' (at *Corpus Christi), the '*Dies Irae' (at *All Souls'), and the '*Stabat Mater' (on the feast of the *Seven Sorrows of the BVM). Only the first two of these need now be used.

The principal Sequences were ed. C. Blume, S.J.–H. Bannister in A.H.M.A., liii–lv (1911–22); further Sequentiae Ineditae are published ib., viii, ix, x, xxxiv, xxxvii, xxxix, xl, xlii, and xliv (1890–1904). W. von den Steinen, 'Die Anfänge der Sequenzdichtung' in Zeitschrift für Schweizerische Kirchengeschichte, xl (1946), pp. 190–212, 241–68, xli (1947), pp. 19–48, 122–62. Jungmann, M.S. (ed. 1958), i, pp. 557–564; Eng. tr., pp. 436–41, with reff. Raby (ed. 1953), pp. 210–19, with bibl. p. 479. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung (2 vols., 1964–5), esp. i, pp. 282–359, 409–16, ii, pp. 99–121, with extensive reff. W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958], pp. 442–64. E. Leahy in N.C.E., xiii (1969), pp. 100–4, s.v.

SERAPHIC ORDER, The. Another name for the *Franciscan Order (q.v.). The name commemorates St. Francis's vision on Mount Alverna in which he saw a seraph from heaven impressing the stigmata on his body.

SERAPHIM. The supernatural creatures, each with six wings, which *Isaiah in his inaugural vision saw standing above the throne of Jehovah (Is. 6. 2–7). Unless they are to be identified with the 'fiery serpents' mentioned in Num. 21. 6 ff., Deut. 8. 15, Is. 14. 29, and Is. 30. 6, they are not mentioned elsewhere in the OT.

From an early date Christian interpreters held the 'Seraphim' to be a category of *angels, and considered them counterparts of the '*Cherubim'; hence their occurrence together in the Preface of the Roman Mass and also in the Te Deum. The further view, which was widely accepted among Christian exegetes, that the Heb. word 'seraphim' was connected with a root meaning 'to burn' led to the notion that they were esp. distinguished by the fervour of their love. As such they came to be ranked highest in the nine orders of angels (the cherubim filling the next place).

O.E.D., viii (pt. 2; 1914), p. 490 f., s.v. J. Strachan in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 458 f., s.v. See also comm. to Is. 6. 2 ff.

SERAPHIM OF SAROV, St. (1759–1833), Russian monk and *staretz. He was born at Kursk, into a family of provincial merchants. At nineteen he entered the monastery of Sarov, and spent fifteen years in the ordinary life of the community, being ordained deacon and then priest. From 1794 to 1825 he lived in seclusion, first as a hermit in the forest close to the monastery, and then enclosed in a small cell within the monastic building itself. In 1825 he opened the door of his cell, and during the remaining eight years of his life he devoted his entire energies to the work of spiritual direction, receiving a constant stream of visitors from all parts of Russia. Astonishingly severe in his personal ascetic practices, towards others he was always gentle, stressing the importance of joy and cheerfulness in the spiritual life, and the need for moderation. His teaching is best summed up in a conversation recorded by his friend Nicolas Motovilov. He was canonized in 1903. Feast day, 2 Jan.

Eng. tr. of extracts from his life, and also the conversation with Motovilov, in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 246–79. Valentine Zander, St. Seraphim of Sarov (Eng. tr. from unpublished Fr., 1975). Iulia de Beausobre, Flame in the Snow (1945: a popular account).

SERAPION, St. (d. 211), Bp. of *Antioch from 199. Though one of the chief theologians of his age, little is known of him. His writings, of which only a few fragments survive, include a letter to Caricus and Pontius against *Montanism, a work addressed to one Domninus who had lapsed during persecution, and a letter withdrawing his earlier permission to the Church of Rhossus to read the 'Gospel of St. *Peter', on the ground that he had now discovered it to be *Docetic. Feast day, 30 Oct.

The principal ancient authorities are *Eusebius, H.E., v. xix and vi. xii, and *Jerome, De Viris Illustribus, 31. The fragments are collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2), pp. 447–62.

SERAPION, St. (d. after 360), Bp. of Thmuis in the Nile delta from c. 339. He was the close friend and protégé of St. *Athanasius, probably his junior in age; and before he became bishop had been a monk and a companion of St. *Antony, who left in his will one of his two sheepskin cloaks to Serapion and the other to Athanasius. Athanasius selected him for a difficult mission to the Emp. Constantius, and addressed to him a series of important doctrinal letters on the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. Serapion composed some literary works, notably a treatise against the *Manichees; and an early 'Sacramentary' which has come down under his name was probably his compilation. He also corresponded with the heresiarch *Apollinarius, then still orthodox. Feast day, 21 Mar.

Crit. ed. of 'Serapion of Thmuis against the Manichees' by R. P. Casey (Harvard Theological Studies, No. 15; Cambridge, Mass., 1931); older uncrit. text, with other items of Serapion, in J. P. Migne, PG, xl, 895–942 (from A. *Gallandi). 'Sacramentary' (or 'Euchologion'), which survives in the single 11th cent. MS. Athos Laura 149, ed. by G. Wobbermin, Altchristliche liturgische Stücke aus der Kirche Ägyptens nebst einem dogmatischen Brief des Bischofs Serapion von Thmuis (T.U., xvii. 3b; 1898); also ed. by F. E. *Brightman in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 88–113, 247–77. Eng. tr. (based on Wobbermin's edition) by J. *Wordsworth (Bishop Sarapion's Prayer-Book; Early Church Classics, S.P.C.K., 1899). R. Draguet, 'Une Lettre de Sérapion de Thmuis aux disciples d'Antoine (A.D. 356) en version syriaque et arménienne' in Muséon, lxiv (1951), pp. 1–25, incl. text and Lat. tr. Eng. ed. of Athanasius's Epp. to Serapion, with introd. and notes, by C. R. B. Shapland (1951). A. Peters, O.F.M., 'Het Tractaat van Serapion van Thmuis tegen de Manichaeën' in Sacris Erudiri, ii (1949), pp. 55–94. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'L'Anaphore de Sérapion. Essai d'exégèse' in Muséon, lix (1946), pp. 425–43. P. E. Rodopoulos, 'The Sacramentary of Serapion' in Θεολογία, xxviii (1957), pp. 252–75, 420–39, 578–91; xxix (1958), pp. 45–54, 208–17. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 98–102. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1908–12; H. Dörrie in P.W., Suppl. viii (1956), cols. 1260–7, both s.v.

SERBIA, Church of (in Yugoslavia). Systematic missionary work in Serbia was first undertaken by the Byzantines during the second half of the 9th cent., in particular by followers of Sts. *Cyril and Methodius from Moravia. With the baptism of Prince Mutimir (reigned c. 860–91) Christianity became the official religion of the country. For some time the Serbs wavered between Constantinople and Rome, and it was not until the start of the 13th cent. that their attachment to E. Christendom became definite and final. In 1219 St. *Sava established an *autocephalous Serbian Church, of which he was consecrated the first archbishop by the *Oecumenical Patriarch in Nicaea (Constantinople being at this time in the hands of the Latins). The Serbian medieval empire, and with it the Church, attained its period of greatest brilliance under Stephen Dushan (1331–55). In 1346 the head of the Serbian Church assumed the title '*Patriarch', with his seat at Peć (Turkish: Ipek): the Serbian Patriarchate was recognized by Constantinople in 1375. Along with the *Bulgarians and the *Rumanians, during the Ottoman period the Serbs passed increasingly under Greek ecclesiastical control, and the Patriarchate of Peć was eventually suppressed in 1766. The Church of Serbia became autocephalous once more in 1879, with the approval of Constantinople. In 1920 the Serbian Patriarchate was restored, its seat being transferred from Peć to Belgrade.

R. M. French, Serbian Church Life (1942); L. Hadrovics, Le Peuple serbe et son Église sous la domination turque (1947). Stella Alexander, Church and State in Yugoslavia since 1945 (1979). J. Kondrinewitsch in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 684–6, with bibl.; V. J. Pospishil in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 107–11, s.v. 'Serbian Rite'.

SERGEANT, JOHN (1622–1707), RC controversialist. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and afterwards became secretary to T. *Morton, Bp. of *Durham. Later he became a RC. After study at the English College, Lisbon, he was ordained to the priesthood, and in 1652 was attached to the English Mission. The remainder of his life was spent in controversy, for which he had marked gifts. Indeed there was hardly any Protestant writer of standing whose views Sergeant did not attack. The titles of some 34 pamphlets by Sergeant are listed under his name in the D.N.B.

His 'Literary Life' written by himself is publ. in Catholicon, ii (1816), pp. 132–6, 169–76, 217–24, iii (1816), pp. 9–16, 55–64, 97–104, and 121–7, with introd. in ii, pp. 129–31. J. Warner, The History of English Persecution of Catholics and the Presbyterian Plot, ed. T. A. Birrell, with translation by J. Bligh, S.J. (Catholic Record Society, xlvii–xlviii; 1953), i, pp. 230–32 (Nos. 208–13), p. 277 f. (Nos. 328–30), ii, p. 456 f. (Nos. 606–8), and pp. 527–32. T. Cooper in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 251–3, s.v.

SERGIUS (d. 638), Patr. of *Constantinople from 610 and the most influential exponent of *Monothelitism. He was of Syrian origin. After elevation to the Patriarchal See he became the trusted adviser of the Emp. *Heraclius, who confided the capital to his care during his absence in his wars with the Persians. To reconcile the disaffected Monophysites Sergius, in his search for a Christological formula acceptable both to them and to the adherents of the Dyophysite *Chalcedonian orthodoxy, began to teach Two Natures but only one 'activity' (ἐνέργεια) in Christ. On being opposed by St. *Sophronius of Jerusalem, he referred the case to Pope *Honorius I, who in reply used the unfortunate expression 'one will'. Sergius now modified his teaching to the affirmation of only one will (μία θέλησις) in Christ. This doctrine was promulgated by the Emperor in the famous '*Ecthesis' (q.v.), of which Sergius was the author. Two synods held at Constantinople in 638 and 639 approved this teaching, which was, however, condemned by the Council of Constantinople in 681. Sergius is believed to have introduced several liturgical innovations, and an old tradition ascribes to him the authorship of the famous hymn known as the '*Acathistus'.

V. Grumel, A.A., Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, i, fasc. 1 (1932), pp. 113–18 (Nos. 279–93), with reff. Krumbacher, pp. 671–3. See also bibl. to Monothelitism, esp. artt. by V. Grumel.

SERGIUS, St. (d. 701), Pope from 687. A native of *Antioch, he was educated at Palermo. On the death of his predecessor, Pope Conon (686–7), Sergius was elected in the face of two rival candidates with the support of the mass of the clergy and people. He took an active part in several English matters. He baptized Caedwalla, King of the West Saxons (689), consecrated St. *Willibrord, Bp. of the Frisians (Nov. 695), and ordered St. *Wilfrid to be restored to his see (c. 700). He strongly resisted the attempt of the Emp. Justinian II (685–95) to secure his support for the *Trullan Council (692), which would have placed Constantinople on an ecclesiastical level with Rome, and was saved by the Roman populace from being forcibly conveyed to the Eastern capital. He made various liturgical innovations, notably the singing of *Agnus Dei in the Mass and the introduction of a litany and processions on the four chief feasts of the BVM. He also did much for the restoration of the Roman basilicas. Feast day, 8 Sept.

Jaffé, i, p. 244 f. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 371–82. F. Görres, 'Justinian II und das römische Papsttum' in B.Z., xvii (1908), pp. 432–54, esp. pp. 440–54. J. Gay, 'Quelques Remarques sur les papes grecs et syriens avant la querelle des iconoclastes (678–715)' in Mélanges offerts à M. Gustave Schlumberger, i (1924), pp. 40–54. O. Bertolini, Roma di fronte a Bisanzio e ai Longobardi (Bologna, 1941), esp. pp. 399–408. Mann, i (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 77–104. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, ii (1933), pp. 624–36; Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 407–9. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1913–16, s.v. 'Serge Ier'. See also bibl. to Trullan Synod.

SERGIUS, St. (c. 1314–92), Russian monastic reformer and mystic. His original name was Bartholomew. He was born at Rostov, and when a boy fled with his family to Radonezh, nr. Moscow. He founded in the neighbourhood, with his brother Stephen, the famous monastery of the Holy Trinity, and thereby re-established the community life which had been lost in Russia through the Tartar invasion. When his brother opposed his reforms, Sergius, though abbot, retired into seclusion, but was later restored. He had great influence over all classes, stopped four civil wars between Russian princes, and inspired the resistance of Prince Dmitri which saved Russia from the Tartars (1380). In 1378 he refused the metropolitan see. Altogether, Sergius founded forty monasteries. He was canonized before 1449, and is regarded as the greatest of Russian saints. Feast day, 25 Sept.

The primary authority is the life written by Epiphanius the Wise, one of his monks, which was shortened and revised in the 15th cent. by a Serbian monk, Pachomius. Abridged Eng. tr. in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 54–83, with introd. pp. 50–3, and notes pp. 487–9. N. Zernov, St. Sergius: Builder of Russia (New York, 1939), also with Eng. tr. of Life, by A. Delafeld, as pt. 3 (ptt. 1 and 2 also publ., London [1939]). P. Kovalevsky, Saint Serge et la spiritualité russe [1958].

SERGIUS PAULUS. The proconsul of *Cyprus who, acc. to Acts 13. 4–12, having invited St. *Paul and St. *Barnabas to preach before him on their first missionary journey and seen the miracle done by St. Paul on the sorcerer Bar-Jesus, 'believed' (ἐπίστευσεν). He is perhaps the Paulus mentioned as proconsul in a Cypriot inscription of this time.

A. C. *Headlam in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 731, s.v. 'Paulus, Sergius'; J. E. Roberts in D.A.C., ii (1918), p. 471, s.v. 'Sergius Paulus'.

SERMO GENERALIS. The ceremony at which the final decision in trials of heretics by the *Inquisition was pronounced, usually with great solemnity. After a short exhortation, the 'sermo' proper, the secular officials assisting at the ceremony vowed obedience to the Inquisitor; then were published the 'decrees of mercy', i.e. mitigations of earlier sentences; and lastly the penalties imposed on those found guilty at the present trial were announced. The proceedings closed with the turning-over of the guilty to the secular arm. The term 'Sermo Generalis' has come to be replaced in more recent usage by '*auto-da-fé'.

SERMON ON THE MOUNT, The. The Lord's discourse in Mt. 5–7 setting forth the principles of the Christian ethic. It includes the eight (or, acc. to another counting, nine) *Beatitudes (5. 3–12) and the *Lord's Prayer (6. 9–13). A somewhat parallel, though shorter, discourse of similar content, sometimes known as the 'Sermon on the Plain', is recorded in Lk. 6. 20–49 [cf. 6. 17].

The only Patristic treatment of the subject as a separate work is St. *Augustine, 'De Sermone Domini in Monte' (PL, xxxiv, 1229–1308); Eng. tr. by J. J. Jepson, with introd. and notes (A.C.W., v; 1948). C. *Gore, The Sermon on the Mount (1896; homiletic); B. W. Bacon, The Sermon on the Mount. Its Literary Structure and Didactic Purpose (1902). G. Kittel, 'Die Bergpredigt und die Ethik des Judentums', in Zeitschrift für systematische Theologie, iii (1925), pp. 555–594; H. *Windisch, Der Sinn der Bergpredigt (1929; ed. 2, 1937); M. *Dibelius, The Sermon on the Mount (New York, 1940). T. Soiron, O.F.M., Die Bergpredigt Jesu. Formgeschichtliche, exegetische und theologische Erklärung (Freiburg i.Br., 1941). W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount (1964). C. W. Votaw in H.D.B., Extra vol. (1904), pp. 1–45, with bibl. See also commentaries to Luke and Matthew, Gospels of.

SERPENT, The Brazen. See Brazen Serpent, The.

SERVANT SONGS. The four passages in *Deutero-Isaiah (Is. 42. 1–4, 49. 1–6, 50. 4–9, and 52. 13 – 53.12) describing the person and character of the 'Servant of the Lord'. They were first isolated from their contexts and seen as an entity by B. *Duhm. In his commentary on Isaiah, Duhm challenged the prevalent view that Jehovah's servant in these and other passages in Is. referred to the nation of Israel, or some element in it; he held that the Servant in these four passages was an otherwise unknown individual and that the author of the poems was one of his disciples. There have since then been many attempts to identify the Servant with some historical individual, e.g. Zerubbabel, Jehoiachin, Cyrus, or even *Moses, while in 1921 S. *Mowinckel contended (though he abandoned the theory later) that it was the Prophet himself. Among British OT scholars prevalent opinion (H. W. *Robinson, C. R. North, H. H. Rowley) still identifies the Servant with Israel in some form. Christian theology has traditionally interpreted the Servant in Isaiah as a prophecy of the Incarnate Christ.

There is a vast literature. Among the more important items are B. Duhm, Die Theologie der Propheten als Grundlage für die innere Entwicklungsgeschichte der Israelitischen Religion (Bonn, 1875), pp. 287–301; id., Das Buch Jesaia (K.A.T., III. i, 1892), esp. pp. 284–7, 339–43, 351–3, and 365–78; S. R. *Driver–A. Neubauer, The Fifty-Third Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpretation (2 vols., 1876–7); K. *Budde, Die sogennanten Ebed-Jahwe-Lieder und die Bedeutung des Knechtes Jahwes in Jes. 40–55 (1900); S. Mowinckel, Der Knecht Jahwäs (Giessen, 1921); A. S. *Peake, The Servant of Jahweh and other Lectures (Manchester, 1931); W. E. Barnes, 'Cyrus the "Servant of Jehovah"' in J.T.S., xxxii (1931), pp. 32–9; C. R. North, The Suffering Servant in Deutero-Isaiah (1948; ed. 2, 1956), with valuable bibl. pp. 240–53; H. H. Rowley, The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays (1952), pp. 1–88; H. Zimmerli–J. Jeremias in T.W.B., v (1954), pp. 650–713, s.v. παῖς θεοῦ. The subject is also discussed in all commentaries on Isaiah (qq.v.).

SERVATUS LUPUS. See Lupus, Servatus.

SERVER. In the W. Church a minister in the sanctuary, esp. at the Eucharist. He may be either a boy or an adult man, but not a woman, though when no male person is available a woman (lay or religious) may answer a Mass at the altar-rails. His principal duties are to make the responses, bring the bread and wine to the altar, wash the celebrant's hands, and ring the *sacring bell at the Elevation if it is used. He normally wears cassock and surplice.

SERVETUS, MICHAEL (1511–53), physician and heretic. A native of Tudela in Navarre, he studied at Saragossa and Toulouse and travelled in Italy and Germany, where he met P. *Melanchthon and M. *Bucer. His Biblical studies having led him to abandon the dogma of the Trinity, he published his conclusions in a provocative but earnest treatise De Trinitatis Erroribus Libri VII (1531). The book shocked his Protestant friends, and he went to *Paris, where he studied medicine. From 1541 to 1553 he was physician to the Abp. of Vienne. In these years he entered into a secret correspondence with J. *Calvin, who, however, soon repudiated his anti-Trinitarian views. In 1553 appeared anonymously his principal work, Christianismi Restitutio, in which he expounded his doctrines in full. He denied the Trinity and the true Divinity of Christ, whose humanity he regarded as a compound of three elements, viz. (1) the Logos, conceived as the model of all created things, though not really Divine, (2) the soul, and (3) the human body. Servetus's authorship was denounced to the Catholic *Inquisition by a friend of Calvin and he was imprisoned, but escaped to Geneva, possibly counting on the support of an anti-Calvinist party. Calvin, however, had him arrested and, having refused to recant, Servetus was burnt as a heretic at Champel on 27 Oct. 1553.

Eng. tr. of his Two Treatises on the Trinity by E. M. Wilbur (Harvard Theological Studies, xvi; 1932), with life, pp. xix–xxviii, and bibl., and of his Geographical, Medical and Astrological Writings by C. D. O'Malley (Philadelphia, 1953). H. Tollin, Charakterbild Michael Servets (1876); id., Das Lehrsystem Michael Servets genetisch dargestellt (3 vols., 1876–8); A. van der Linde, Michel Servet, een Brandoffer der Gereformeerde Inquisitie (Groningen, 1891), with bibl. J. Goyanes, Miguel Serveto. Teólogo, geógrafo y médico, descubridor de la circulación de la sangre quemado vivo en Ginebra en 1553 (1933). R. H. Bainton, Hunted Heretic. The Life and Death of Michael Servetus (Boston, 1953); J. F. Fulton, Michael Servetus, Humanist and Martyr (New York, 1953). D. Cuthbertson, A Tragedy of the Reformation, being the authentic Narrative of the History and Burning of the 'Christianismi Restitutio', 1553, with a succinct Account of the Controversy between Michael Servetus, its Author, and the Reformer, John Calvin (1912). B. Becker (ed.), Autour de Michel Servet et de Sébastien Castellion (Haarlem, 1953), pp. 29–157. Full bibl. by E. M. Wilbur, A Bibliography of the Pioneers of the Socinian-Unitarian Movement in Modern Christianity in Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland (Sussidi Eruditi, i; Rome, 1950), pp. 44–74. B. Riggenbach–E. Lachenmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 228–36, s.v. 'Servet, Michael'; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1967–72, s.v. 'Servet, Michel', with reff.

SERVICE, Divine. See Divine Service.

SERVILE WORK (Lat. opus servile, Lev. 23, Num. 28 and 29 passim, Vulg.), a term applied specifically to work which is forbidden on *Sundays or Holy Days, as the work of slaves, in contrast with liberal work, that of free men. Taken in early times to cover agricultural and mechanical work, by the 13th cent., when the prohibition was becoming increasingly unpopular, attempts were made to define it (after St. *Augustine, In Jo., iii. 19; J. P. Migne, PL, xxxv. 1404) as work which made a man the slave of sin or had the appearance of making him such. In modern RC canon law (CIC, can. 1248) the term is still used. It is sometimes interpreted as work in which the body plays a greater part than the mind, or sometimes as gainful work.

SERVITES, The Order of (Ordo Servorum BVM). The Order was founded in 1240 by seven wealthy Florentine city councillors who had left the world seven years earlier in order to devote themselves entirely to the service of the BVM. They adopted a black habit and the Rule of St. *Augustine, with some additions from the *Dominican constitutions. The Order developed rapidly, esp. after it had been officially sanctioned by a bull of Benedict XI in 1304. Its most influential member in early days was St. Philip Benizi (1233–85), under whose generalship Servite missionaries were sent as far as India. The Servite nuns (Second Order) were founded by two of Benizi's penitents about the time of his death; they are chiefly contemplative. The nuns of the *Third Order were founded by St. Juliana Falconieri in 1306; they devote themselves to the care of the sick and the poor and to the education of children. The principal Servite devotion is to the Sorrowful Virgin, in whose honour they recite the Rosary of the *Seven Sorrows. The Feast of the Seven Founders is on 17 (formerly 12) Feb.

A. Gianius, O.S.M., Annales Sacri Ordinis Fratrum Servorum B. Mariae Virginis (Florence, 1618; ed. 2 with continuation by A. M. Garbio, O.S.M., 3 vols., Lucca, 1719–1725). Monumenta Ordinis Servorum Sanctae Mariae, ed. A. Morini, O.S.M.–P. Soulier, O.S.M., and others [to 1750] (20 vols., Brussels and Rome, 1897–1930). A. P. M. Piermejus, Memorabilia Sacri Ordinis Servorum B.M.V. (4 vols., Rome, 1927–34). P. Panichelli, I sette patriarchi. Storia dei SS. fondatori dell'ordine dei Servi di Maria (Turin, 1933). A. M. Rossi, O.S.M., Manuale di storia dell'Ordine dei Servi di Maria (MCCXXXIII–MCMLIV) (1956), with bibl. Heimbucher, i, pp. 576–88, with bibl. Studi storici sull'Ordine dei Servi di Maria (4 vols., Rome, 1933–42). G. M. Casarotto, O.S.M.–D. M. Montagna, O.S.M., Bibliotheca Servorum Veneta (Vicenza, 1963 ff.). R. Taucci, O.S.M., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1982–7, s.v.; J. M. Ryska, O.S.M., in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 131–5, s.v.

SERVUS SERVORUM DEI (Lat., 'the servant of God's servants'). A title of the Pope employed in official documents. It was first used by St. *Gregory the Great (590–604) and has been in general use since the time of *Gregory VII (1073–85).

K. Schmitz, Ursprung und Geschichte der Devotionsformeln bis zu ihrer Aufnahme in die fränkische Königsurkunde (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, ed. U. Stutz, Hft. 81; 1913), ch. v, 'Servus Servorum Dei', pp. 120–39. W. Levison, 'Zur Vorgeschichte der Bezeichnung Servus Servorum Dei' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kan. Abt., vi (1916), pp. 384–6.

SESSION. See Kirk-session.

SETH, ANDREW. See Pattison, Andrew Seth Pringle-.

SETTLEMENT, Act of. The Act (12 & 13 Will. III, c. 2) passed in 1701 to settle the Crown on the Electress Sophia of Hanover. Since William III had no children, Princess *Anne's only surviving child had died in childhood, and the son of *James II was a Papist, the hereditary rights of the descendants of *Charles I were set aside and the succession vested in Sophia of Hanover, daughter of Elizabeth of Bohemia, who was the daughter of *James I. Thus the title of the present monarch rests not so much on hereditary right as on Parliamentary settlement. The opportunity was also taken to extend the provisions of the Bill of Rights and to ordain that all future sovereigns and their consorts should 'join in Communion with the Church of England as by law established'.

Text in Gee–Hardy, No. cxxiv, pp. 664–70; C. G. Robertson, Select Statutes, Cases and Documents (1904), No. xx, pp. 87–92; and in W. C. Costin–J. S. Watson, The Law and Working of the Constitution, i (1952), No. xxxvi, pp. 92–6.

SEUSE, HEINRICH. See Henry Suso, Blessed.

SEVEN BISHOPS, Trial of the. The Trial arose out of *James II's decree that his *Declaration of Indulgence should be read in all churches on 20 and 27 May 1688 (London) or 3 and 10 June (elsewhere). W. *Sancroft, Abp. of *Canterbury, summoned a meeting, and a protest was drawn up by six divines and six other bishops, viz. W. Lloyd of St. *Asaph, F. Turner of *Ely, J. Lake of *Chichester, T. *Ken of *Bath and Wells, T. White of *Peterborough, and J. Trelawney of Bristol. Their petition was presented on 18 May. The protest, received with wild enthusiasm throughout the country, seemed to James 'a standard of rebellion'. The seven bishops were imprisoned in the Tower on 8 June and tried in Westminster Hall on 29 June on a charge of seditious libel. By ten o'clock on the next day even the King's Brewer (to his sorrow a juryman) had consented to the verdict of 'Not Guilty'. The case marked the limits of Anglican obedience to an RC king; James's authority never recovered, even though five of the bishops remained constant in their allegiance and became *Nonjurors.

Full account in T. B. Howell, A Complete Collection of State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Crimes and Misdemeanours, xii (1812), cols. 183–434, with other docs. cols. 433–524. Chief relevant docs. in C. G. Robertson, Select Statutes, Cases and Documents to Illustrate English Constitutional History, 1660–1832 (1904), Case ix, pp. 249–67; extracts of the case also in W. C. Costin–J. S. Watson, The Law and Working of the Constitution. Documents, 1660–1914, i (1952), pp. 258–71. Agnes Strickland, The Lives of the Seven Bishops Committed to the Tower in 1688 (1866). R. Thomas, 'The Seven Bishops and their Petition, 18 May 1688' in J.E.H., xii (1961), pp. 56–70. W. H. *Hutton in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 553 f., s.v. 'Seven Bishops'.

SEVEN CHURCHES, The. The churches in Asia Minor to which the letter of St. *John, incorporated in Rev. (1–3), was addressed, viz. *Ephesus, Smyrna, *Pergamum, *Thyatira, Sardis, *Philadelphia, and *Laodicea. A separate message for each of these churches, appropriate to its particular temporal and spiritual condition, was revealed to John.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904). See also comm. on Revelation, cited s.v.

SEVEN CORPORAL ACTS OF MERCY. See Corporal Works of Mercy.

SEVEN DEACONS. The title traditionally given to the 'seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom' who, as related in Acts 6. 1–6, were appointed to 'serve tables', i.e. to administer the temporal concerns of the Church. Their names were *Stephen, *Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas. Their appointment has been commonly held to be the institution of the order of *deacons in the Christian Church, and for many centuries the practice obtained at Rome of restricting the number of its deacons to seven.

S. Bibel, O.F.M., 'De Septem Diaconis (Act. 6, 1–7)', in Antonianum, iii (1928), pp. 129–50. See also comm. on Acts, cited s.v.

SEVEN DEADLY SINS. They are: (1) *Pride; (2) Covetousness; (3) Lust; (4) Envy; (5) Gluttony; (6) Anger; (7) Sloth ('*Accidie').

*Cassian, Coll., v. 10, gives a list of eight sins (dejection and accidie counting as two); the traditional number of seven is found in St. *Gregory the Great, Moralia in Job, xxxi. 45 (where tristitia takes the place of accidie). St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica, II (1), qu. lxxxiv, art. 4. O. Zöckler, Askese und Mönchtum, i (1897), pp. 253–256. K. E. *Kirk, Some Principles of Moral Theology and their Application (1920), pp. 265–7; id., The Vision of God (1931), p. 201 f. (Note 4 f.). M. W. Bloomfield, The Seven Deadly Sins. An Introduction to the History of a Religious Concept, with Special Reference to Medieval English Literature (Michigan, 1952). S. Wenzel, 'The Seven Deadly Sins: some Problems of Research' in Speculum, xliii (1968), pp. 1–22.

SEVEN GIFTS OF THE HOLY GHOST. They are: (1) Wisdom; (2) Understanding; (3) Counsel; (4) Fortitude; (5) Knowledge; (6) Piety; (7) Fear of the Lord. The list is taken from Is. 11. 2 (*Vulgate text, which adds pietas to the six in the AV and RV).

A. Mitterer, 'Die sieben Gaben des Hl. Geistes nach der Väterlehre' in Z.K.T., xlix (1925), pp. 529–66. K. Schlütz, Is. 11. 2. Die sieben Gaben des Heiligen Geistes in den ersten vier Jahrhunderten (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, xi, Hft. 4; 1932). A. Gardeil, O.P., in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 1728–81, s.v. 'Dons du Saint-Esprit'; R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 1861–5, s.v. 'Doni dello Spirito Santo', with bibl.

SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS. The group of sciences which formed the staple of secular education esp. in the earlier Middle Ages, consisting of the elementary *Trivium (grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic) and the more advanced *Quadrivium (music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy). This grouping derived from Martianus Capella (early 5th cent.), who drew it up on the basis of the ninefold arrangement of Varro by excluding architecture and medicine, but it did not become generally established until the time of *Alcuin. In practice considerably more was covered by the three disciplines of the Trivium than their titles might suggest, e.g. classical and philological study as well as the technical rules of grammar were comprised under 'grammar'. It was not till the student had completed his studies in the 'liberal arts' that he was held competent to proceed to theology.

SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS, The. Psalms 6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, and 143. They were in liturgical use from early Christian times, and in the later Middle Ages they were ordered to be recited after *Lauds on Fridays in *Lent. The BCP appoints them as Proper Psalms for *Ash Wednesday, the first three at *Mattins, Ps. 51 at the *Commination, and the last three at *Evensong. They were also used in the English *Coronation Service before the revision of 1603.

SEVEN SACRAMENTS, The. Since the 12th cent. the RC Church has held the number of the sacraments to be seven, viz. *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Eucharist, *Absolution, Extreme *Unction, *Ordination, and *Matrimony. Though the beginnings of these rites can all be traced back to very much earlier times, it was through the teaching of *Peter Lombard in his 'Sentences' (c. 1150) that the belief gained general credence that these particular seven constituted a set different in kind from all other religious rites (see Sacramentals). Their sevenfold number was given formal definition at the Council of *Trent (Sess. VII, can. 1). Most of the Reformed Churches rejected this enumeration, coming to hold that there were only two sacraments, viz. Baptism and the Eucharist. The E. Church, however, has accepted the W. enumeration. For further discussion, see Sacrament.

SEVEN SLEEPERS OF EPHESUS. Seven Christian young men who are said to have been walled up in a cave when taking refuge during the *Decian persecution (c. A.D. 250) and to have been awakened under the Emp. *Theodosius II (d. 450), as a proof of the *resurrection of the dead. The legend was certainly known in the E. and the W. in the 6th cent., as both *Jacob of Sarug (d. 521) and St. *Gregory of Tours record it. It probably arose in a Syriac-speaking Church in connexion with the *Origenist controversies over bodily resurrection. The alleged tomb of the Sleepers was much visited by pilgrims from all parts of the world before the Turkish conquest of Asia Minor. Feast day, 27 July.

I. Guidi (ed.), 'Testi orientali inediti sopra i Sette Dormienti di Efeso' in Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei. Memorie della classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, Ser. iii, xi (1884), pp. 343–445, with It. tr.; crit. ed. of the version of Gregory of Tours by B. Krusch in Anal. Boll., xii (1893), pp. 371–87. M. Huber, O.S.B., 'Textbeiträge zur Siebenschläferlegende des Mittelalters' in Romanische Forschungen, xxvi (1909), pp. 462–583 and 825–36. Id., Die Wanderlegende von den Siebenschläfern. Eine literargeschichtliche Untersuchung (1910), with reff. J. Koch, Die Siebenschläferlegende, ihr Ursprung und ihre Verbreitung. Eine mythologisch-literaturgeschichtliche Studie (1883). E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (Studi e Testi, clxxiii; 1953), No. 17, 'Stephen of Ephesus (April 15, 448–Oct. 29, 451) and the Legend of the Seven Sleepers', pp. 125–68. I. Guidi in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 428–30, with reff.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1251–62, s.v. 'Sept Dormants d'Éphèse'.

SEVEN SORROWS OF THE BVM. Acc. to the former Roman Breviary, the Sorrows were the following: (1) at the prophecy of *Simeon; (2) at the flight into Egypt; (3) at the loss of the Holy Child; (4) on meeting the Lord on the way to Calvary; (5) at standing at the foot of the Cross; (6) at the taking down of Christ from the Cross; (7) at His burial. Until 1960 the Seven Sorrows were commemorated on two feast days: the Friday after *Passion Sunday (dating locally from the 15th cent., made of universal observance by *Benedict XIII in 1729, but reduced to a commemoration in 1960 and dropped entirely in 1969) and 15 Sept. The September feast, originally observed on the third Sunday in September, was granted to the *Servites in 1668 and extended by *Pius VII to the whole RC Church. In 1913 it was fixed on 15 September, except for the Servites who retain the Sunday. In the 1969 Calendar it was called the feast of Our Lady of Sorrow.

SEVEN VIRTUES. They are (1) Faith; (2) Hope; (3) Charity; (4) Justice; (5) Prudence; (6) Temperance; (7) Fortitude. The first three are the '*Theological Virtues', the remaining four the '*Cardinal Virtues'.

SEVEN WORDS FROM THE CROSS. They are (1) 'Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do' (Lk. 23. 34); (2) 'Today shalt thou be with me in paradise' (Lk. 23. 43); (3) 'Woman, behold thy son! . . . Behold thy mother' (Jn. 19. 26 f.); (4) 'Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? [that is to say] My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' (Mt. 27. 46; cf. Mk. 15. 34); (5) 'I thirst' (Jn. 19. 28); (6) 'It is finished' (Jn. 19. 30); (7) 'Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit' (Lk. 23. 46).

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS. One of the groups of *Adventists who originally expected the Second Coming of Christ in 1844. Later in that year they began to observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, although the name 'Seventh-day Adventist' was not adopted until 1861. In England their beginnings as an organized community go back to a mission started at Southampton by W. Ings in 1878. They are a staunchly Protestant body, believing that the Scriptures provide the unerring rule of faith and practice and that the return of Christ is imminent, although they now set no date for that event. Emphasizing that the human body is a temple of the Holy Spirit (I Cor. 6. 19), they require of their members a life of strict temperance; abstinence from alcohol and tobacco is mandatory and that from tea, coffee and meat is recommended. Members observe the Sabbath from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday. They are expected to pay tithe on their income in addition to freewill offerings. They are Trinitarian in belief and adhere to the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith alone. They practise adult baptism by total immersion. Their current world membership (1980) is well over three million (Britain 14,569).

The vast literature issued by the Seventh-Day Adventists includes M. E. Olsen, A History of the Origin and Progress of the Seventh Day Adventists (Washington, D.C., 1925); E. E. Howell, The Great Advent Movement (ib., 1935); L. E. Froom, The Prophetic Faith of our Fathers, vol. iii (ib., 1946), pp. 263–751, and vol. iv (1954); id., Movement of Destiny (ib., 1971); A. W. Spalding, Origin and History of Seventh-day Adventists (4 vols., ib., 1961–2). On their early history, F. D. Nichol, The Midnight Cry (ib., 1944); on their doctrine, W. L. Emmerson, The Bible Speaks (Watford [1942]); D. E. Rebok (ed.), Our Firm Foundation (2 vols., Washington, D.C., 1953); Seventh-day Adventists Answer Questions on Doctrine (ib., 1957), a compilation. D. E. Robinson, The Story of our Health Message. The Origin, Character, and Development of Health Education in the Seventh Day Adventist Church (Nashville, Tennessee, 1943).

SEVENTY WEEKS. Acc to a prophecy in Dan. 9. 20–7, an Anointed One (i.e. *Messiah) will arise, and then be 'cut off', in a predestined period of 'seventy weeks', and afterwards *Jerusalem and its *Temple be destroyed. Biblical scholars are generally agreed that by the 'seventy weeks' is meant '70 weeks [i.e. "sevens"] of years', viz. 490 years, and that the Prophet is here reinterpreting the seventy years of Jer. 25. 11f. In Christian tradition the prophecy has frequently been referred to the coming of Christ at the Incarnation, but there is little doubt that the primary reference, at least, is to the Jewish High Priest and the desecration of the Temple in 166 B.C.

SEVERIAN (fl. c. 400), Bp. of Gabala. A strong opponent of St. *Chrysostom, he played a leading part at *Constantinople in the events leading up to the Synod of the *Oak in 403. He is chiefly important as an exegete of the *Antiochene School. His writings include a collection of six Homilies on the Hexaemeron, other sermons on Genesis, a set of nine Homilies which have come down in Armenian and several catena fragments. Many of these survive under the name of St. Chrysostom.

His writings have not been collected. His six Homilies on the Hexaemeron are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lvi, 429–500; Hom. de Serpente, ib., cols., 499–516; Hom. de Sigillis, ib., lxiii, 531–44. Catena fragments from Severian's Commentaries on the Pauline Epp. in K. Staab, Die Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 213–351. Fifteen Armenian Homilies ed. J. B. Aucher, Venice, 1827 (several of these, however, are spurious). J. Zellinger, Die Genesishomilien des Bischofs Severian von Gabala (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, vii, Hft. 1; 1916); id., Studien zu Severian von Gabala (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, viii; 1926). H. D. Altendorf, Untersuchungen zu Severian von Gabala (Tübingen diss., 1957). B. Marx ascribed other homilies among the Chrysostomica to Severian in 'Severiana unter der Spuria Chrysostomi bei Montfaucon–Migne' in O.C.P., v (1939), pp. 281–367. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 363–5; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 332. E. Venables in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 625 f.; H. *Lietzmann in P.W., Reihe 2, ii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1930–2, s.v. 'Severian (17)'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2000–6, s.v. 'Sévérien de Gabala'.

SEVERINUS, St. (d. 482), 'Apostle of Austria'. He was in early life a monk in the East. After the death of *Attila in 453, he came to Noricum Ripense, then overrun by barbarian invaders, and though never himself a bishop, he rallied the Church, founded two monasteries, and organized relief work, in this way winning the respect of the barbarians (particularly Odoacer) and moderating their cruelty. His body was taken to Lucullanum, nr. Naples, where his companion *Eugippius wrote his Life c. 511. Feast day, 8 Jan. He is the patron of vine-dressers.

Acc. to the Roman Martyrology, his feast-day, Jan. 8, is also observed as that of another Severinus, Bp. of Naples, 'brother of Bl. Victorinus, Martyr'. As no Bishop of Naples of this name is known to have existed, there is perhaps some confusion with St. Severinus, the Apostle of Austria.

The principal authority is the life by Eugippius pr. J. P. Migne, PL, lxii, 1167–2000; crit. edd. P. Knoell (C.S.E.L., ix, pt. 2; 1886), T. *Mommsen (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum; Berlin, 1898), and R. Noll (Schriften und Quellen der alten Welt, xi; 1963); Eng. trr. by G. W. Robinson ('Harvard Translations'; Cambridge, Mass., 1914) and L. Bieler–L. Krestan (Fathers of the Church, lv; 1965). M. Pellegrino, 'Il Commemoratorium Vitae Sancti Severini' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xii (1958), pp. 1–26, with reff. 'Historia Translationis Auctore Ioanne Diacono' in AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 1098–1103. A. Baudrillart, Saint Séverin, apôtre de Norique ('Les Saints'; 1908). P. Dörfler, Severin, der Seher von Norikum. Dichtung und Geschichte (ed. 2, 1947). K. Kramert–E. K. Winter, St. Severin. Der Heilige zwischen Ost und West (2 vols. [1958–9]). F. Lotter, Severinus von Noricum (1976).

SEVERUS (c. 465–538), *Monophysite Patr. of *Antioch. He studied at Alexandria and Berytus, was baptized in 488, and later became a monk. About 508 he went to *Constantinople, where he succeeded in securing the support of the Emp. Anastasius (491–518) for the persecuted Monophysite monks, and in 512 was made Patr. of Antioch in place of the deposed Flavian II. On Justin I's accession (518), he was deposed, took refuge with Timothy IV, the Monophysite Patr. of Alexandria, and after the failure of an attempted reconciliation under *Justinian, was excommunicated by a synod at Constantinople in 536. Severus was the leading theologian of the moderate Monophysites. Many of his works, still not completely edited, survive, including 125 homilies and 400 letters. They are mainly preserved in Syriac translations. His life to the year 512 was written by his friend *Zacharias the Scholastic ('Rhetor').

Severus's Liber contra Impium Grammaticum [sc. against a certain John, an upholder of the *Chalcedonian Christology] was ed. J. Lebon (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, iv–vi; 1929–38); his Orationes ad Nephalium by id. (ib., vii; 1949) (incl. his 'Critique of the Tome of Julian' and 'Refutation of the Propositions'); his Philalethes was ed. by R. Hespel (ib., Scriptores Syri, lxviii–lxix; 1952); other writings against the extreme Monophysite, *Julian of Halicarnassus, ed. id. (ib., civ, cv, cxxiv, cxxv, cxxvi, cxxvii, cxxxvi, cxxxvii; 1964–71). Of his Cathedratical Homilies, one, in Coptic, ed., with Fr. tr., by E. Porcher in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, xix (1914), pp. 69–78 and 135–42; others, in Syr. tr., mainly by *Jacob of Edessa, ed., with Fr. tr., in P.O.: [liii–lvii] by R. Duval, iv (1908), pp. 5–94 (fasc. 1); [lviii–lxix] by M. Brière, ib., viii (1912), pp. 211–394 (fasc. 2); [lxx–lxxvi] ib., xii (1919), pp. 5–164 (fasc. 1); [lxxvii] by M. A. Kugener–E. Triffaux, ib., xvi (1922), pp. 765–862 (fasc. 5); [lxxviii–lxxxiii] by M. Brière, ib., xx (1929), pp. 277–432 (fasc. 2); [xcix–ciii] by I. Guidi, ib., xxii (1930), pp. 207–312 (fasc. 2); [lxxxiv–xc] by M. Brière, ib., xxiii (1932), pp. 5–176 (fasc. 1); [xci–xcviii] ib., xxv (1943), pp. 5–174 (fasc. 1); [cxiii–cxix] ib., xxvi (1949), pp. 263–450 (fasc. 3); [cxx–cxxv] ib., xxix (1960), pp. 73–262, with general introd., pp. 8–72 (fasc. 1); [xlvi–li] by M. Brière and F. Graffin, S.J., ib., xxxv (1969), pp. 287–389 (fasc. 3); [xl–xlv] ib., xxxvi (1971), pp. 5–137 (fasc. 1); [xxxii–xxxix] by M. Brière, F. Graffin, S.J., and C. J. A. Lash, ib., xxxvi (1972), pp. 395–534 (fasc. 3). Severus's 'Sixth Book of Letters', ed. E. W. Brooks (2 vols., Text and Translation Society, 1902–4); further Letters, ed. id., with Eng. tr., in P.O., xii (1919), pp. 165–342 (fasc. 2), and xiv (1920), pp. 1–310 (fasc. 1). His Hymns, in the translation of Jacob of Edessa, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks, ib., vi (1911), pp. 5–179 (fasc. 1), vii (1911), pp. 597–802 (fasc. 5). The 'Anaphora' traditionally (but wrongly) ascribed to Severus ed. H. W. Codrington, Anaphorae Syriacae, i, fasc. 1 (Rome, 1939), pp. 51–96, with introd. by A. Raes, S.J., pp. v–xlix. Lives by Zacharias Scholasticus and by John of Beith Aphthonia, with other relevant documents, ed. M. A. Kugener, with Fr. tr., in P.O., ii (1907), pp. 5–115 and 203–400 (fascc. 1 and 3). The most important modern study is J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (Louvain, 1909). A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon (3 vols., 1951–4), passim (see index, iii, p. 968 f.). A. *Baumstark, 'Das Kirchenjahr in Antiocheia zwischen 512 und 518' in R.Q., xi (1897), pp. 31–66, xiii (1899), pp. 305–23. A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), see index, p. 376; Bardenhewer, v, pp. 1–5; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 505–7. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1988–2000. A. de Halleux, O.F.M., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 702 f., s.v.

SEVERUS, GABRIEL, Metropolitan of Philadelphia. See Gabriel Severus.

SEVERUS, SULPICIUS. See Sulpicius Severus.

SEWELL, WILLIAM (1804–74), Anglican divine. Educated at *Winchester and Merton College, Oxford, where he had a brilliant academic career, he was elected a Petrean Fellow of Exeter College in 1827. He was one of the ablest and most learned of those in general sympathy with the Tractarian Movement in its earlier days, though after the publication of Tract No. 90 in 1841, he dissociated himself from the movement. He remained a High Churchman, and in 1847 founded St. Peter's College, Radley, as a school where strict Anglican principles were to be inculcated. He was also the author of many theological and classical writings.

L. James, A Forgotten Genius. Sewell of St. Columba's and Radley (1945). G. C. Boase in D.N.B., li (1897), p. 290 f.

SEXAGESIMA (Lat., 'the sixtieth [day before Easter]'). The second Sunday before *Lent and hence the eighth before *Easter. Its name, formed on the analogy of *Quinquagesima and *Septuagesima (qq.v.), goes back certainly to the 6th cent. It was suppressed in the RC Church in 1969, but survives in the C of E. In the W. the Sunday was also known, from the opening words of the *introit, as Exsurge Sunday.

A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâques d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains' in Rech. S.R., xxxvii (1950), pp. 125–45, esp. IV, 'La "Soixantaine" ou Sexagésime', pp. 130–43. See also bibl. to Septuagesima.

SEXT (1). 'Liber Sextus Decretalium', the Book of *Canon Law promulgated by *Boniface VIII in 1298. This 'Sixth Book' contains the *Decretals posterior to the five books issued by *Gregory IX (1234), the material being similarly arranged. The bulk of the texts are from the Decretals of Boniface VIII himself, notably the bull '*Clericis laicos' (under the title 'De immunitate)', the rest from those of the successors of Gregory IX and the two Councils of *Lyons in 1245 and 1274. The legislation in the Sext, as in most collections of canon law, covers a wide range of miscellaneous subjects and also reflects the growing tendency to centralization in the later medieval Church.

The standard text is that of E. Friedberg (ed.), Corpus Juris Canonici, ii (Leipzig, 1881), cols. 929–1124. P. Torquebiau in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 632–5, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici III', with list of principal commentators and other bibl. reff.

SEXT (2). The 'Little Hour' of the Breviary Office appointed to be recited at noon. See also Terce and None.

SEXTON. Traditionally the sexton was the assistant of the parish clerk. His principal duties consisted of cleaning the church fabric, ringing the bell and digging graves: he thus combined the ancient offices of fossor, *doorkeeper and *sacristan. With the division of these duties the title has become obsolescent. The office may be held by a woman. The sexton is appointed by the minister and parochial church council, who determine the nature of the duty and terms of employment (can. E 3 of 1969).

J. Wickham Legg (ed.), The Clerk's Book of 1549 (H.B.S., xxv; 1903), esp. pp. xlvii–xlviii and 78–80.

SEYMOUR, EDWARD. See Somerset, Duke of.

SHAFTESBURY, ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER (1801–85), 7th Earl of, social reformer and factory legislator. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1826 entered on his Parliamentary career as a member of the Conservative Party. His main concern was with the amelioration of the conditions of the working classes, in whose interest he often pursued an independent line of policy. A personal investigation of the London slums in 1846 bore fruit in the Ten Hours Bill of 1847 and the Factory Act of 1874, for both of which he was largely responsible. He also took up the cause of women and children in the mines and collieries, as well as young chimney sweeps, for whose protection he introduced the Climbing Boys Act. He was for a long time chairman of the Ragged School Union, and in 1872 he laid the foundation stone of Shaftesbury Park Estate at Battersea. He was a fervent *Evangelical, who hated Ritualism and attacked Rationalism. Though a supporter of *Catholic Emancipation, he opposed the *Maynooth Endowment. He was for many years president of the *British and Foreign Bible Society and took a deep interest in the work of the London City Mission, the *C.M.S., and the *Y.M.C.A. He was also the trusted adviser of Lord Palmerston for the appointment of bishops and other high preferment in the C of E.

E. Hodder, The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury (3 vols., 1886), with extracts from his diaries passim. J. L. Hammond–B. Hammond, Lord Shaftesbury (1923); [Evelyn] Barbara Blackburn, Noble Lord. The Life of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury (1949); G. B. A. M. Finlayson, The Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury (1981). Other studies by H. Frith (London, 1887), R. E. Pengelly (ib. [1902]), M. G. Higham (ib., 1945), M. St. J. Fancourt (ib., 1962) and G. F. A. Best (ib., 1964). J. Wesley Bready, Lord Shaftesbury and Social-Industrial Progress (1926). W. G. Blaikie in D.N.B., xii (1887), pp. 133–7, s.v. 'Cooper'.

SHAKERS, also 'The United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing' or 'The Millennial Church', or 'Alethians', an early communistic and pacifist body which took its origin during a *Quaker revival in England in 1747. The original leaders, James and Jane Wardley, were succeeded by Ann Lee, known as Mother Ann, who came to be regarded as 'The female principle in Christ', Jesus being the 'Male principle'; in her the Second Coming was fulfilled. After a period of persecution she led a band of six men and two women to the U.S.A. in 1774, where they settled in the woods of Watervliet, near Albany, N.Y. Going about preaching and faith-healing Mother Ann founded many new communities. Their numbers were greatly increased in 1780 by converts from an independent religious revival near New Lebanon. After Mother Ann's death in 1784, the leadership passed into the hands of Joseph Meecham and Lucy Wright.

The name 'Shakers' is derived from the shaking by which under the stress of spiritual exaltation they were possessed during their meetings. They rose at a common hour, wore uniform dress, took their meals together, and, in the case of the advanced or 'Senior Order', held property in common. They insisted on confession before admission, abstained from alcohol, and discouraged smoking; but foremost in their teaching was the high value that they put on celibacy. Marriage, however, was not absolutely forbidden. They also claimed to have special powers over disease, which they regarded as due to sin, and they encouraged separation from the world, to attain which they lived in large 'families' of 30 to 90, under a hierarchical form of government, each family with its own house. At one time there were about 5,000 Shakers in the U.S.A., but by the 1950s only a few families remained and the sect is prob. now extinct. They claimed to have spent nothing on police, lawyers, judges, poor-houses, or penal institutions.

F. W. Evans, Shakers. Compendium of the Origin, History, Principles, Rules and Regulations, Government, and Doctrines of the United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing (New York, 1859), and other works by this author. C. E. Robinson, A Concise History of the United Society of Believers called Shakers (East Canterbury, New Hampshire [c. 1893]). Anna White–Leila S. Taylor, Shakerism. Its Meaning and Message (Columbus, Ohio, 1904). C. E. Shears, Gleanings from Old Shaker Journals (Boston, Mass., 1916). Marguerite F. Melcher, The Shaker Adventure (Princeton, New Jersey, 1941). Julia Neal, By their Fruits. The Story of Shakerism in South Union, Kentucky (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1947). E. D. Andrews, The People Called Shakers (New York, 1953, repr., with additional notes, 1963). J. P. MacLean, A Bibliography of Shaker Literature (privately pr., Columbus, Ohio, 1905). R. B. Taylor in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), pp. 781–3, s.v. 'Communistic Societies of America. 2'.

SHAKESPEARE, JOHN HOWARD (1857–1928), *Baptist preacher and organizer. After a fifteen years' pastorate at *Norwich, he became secretary of the Baptist Union in 1898 and gradually won for himself a leading position in the religious world. He made the Baptist Union a highly influential organization, and was mainly responsible for founding the Baptist World Alliance (1905) and the Federal Council of the *Free Churches (1919), and securing the appointment of Baptist and Congregational chaplains in the army. His book, The Churches at the Cross Roads (1918), is a moving and powerful plea for the reunion of Christendom.

Geoffrey Shakespeare (son), Let Candles Be Brought (1947), ch. xvii, pp. 335–47.

SHAMMAI, School of. The disciples of Shammai, a leading rabbinical teacher of the time of Christ. In contrast with the school of *Hillel, the Shammaites interpreted the Mosaic Law strictly and rigidly, following the unbending attitude of their founder. Their intolerance of any intercourse with Gentiles brought them into frequent conflict with the Roman authorities in Palestine. In the *Sanhedrin, which represented Jewish officialdom, the Shammaites, with the help of the *Zealots, the party of extreme Jewish patriots, succeeded in winning a temporary victory over the Hillelites. At the reorganization of the Sanhedrin after A.D. 70, however, the moderation of the School of Hillel prevailed.

Bibl. as for School of Hillel, q.v., except A. Hyman, Toldoth Tannaim Ve'Amoraim (Heb., London, 1910), p. 1118 f.

SHARP, JAMES (1613–79), Abp. of St. Andrews. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, and being out of sympathy with the more radical *Covenanters, went to England in 1639. After his return he was appointed professor of philosophy at St. Andrews (1643) and minister of Crail, in Fife (1648). When the Scottish Kirk was divided into resolutioners and protestors he took sides with the former and soon became one of their leaders. In 1659 he joined General G. Monck, who was then planning to effect the Restoration, and began to work secretly for the re-establishment of Episcopacy while outwardly protesting his loyalty to the Kirk. The services he thus rendered to the King's cause were rewarded by his appointment to the see of St. Andrews in 1661. As Archbishop he took severe measures to abolish Presbyterianism and supported the oppressive policy of the Duke of Lauderdale, an attitude which roused the bitter resentment of his opponents. In 1668 James Mitchell made an attempt to shoot him, and when, in 1678, Mitchell was finally executed, the hatred against Sharp increased, and in the next year he was brutally murdered by a party of Fife lairds and farmers.

'Twenty Four Letters written to James Sharp . . . by the Duke and Duchess of Lauderdale and by Charles Maitland, Lord Hatton, 1660–1672', ed. J. Dowden in Miscellany of the Scottish History Society, i (Scottish History Society, xv; 1893), pp. 229–92. A number of polemical accounts of his murder were published at the time of his death; further contemporary account by James Russell appended to J. Kirkton, The Secret and True History of the Church of Scotland from the Restoration to the Year 1678 (1817), pp. 403–82. T. Stephen, The Life and Times of Archbishop Sharp (1839). J. Willcock, 'Sharp and the Restoration Policy in Scotland' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, New Series, xx (1906), pp. 149–69. T. F. Henderson in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 404–7.

SHARP, JOHN (1645–1714), Abp. of *York. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he became rector of St. Giles-in-the-Fields in 1675 and Dean of *Norwich in 1681. A strong High Churchman, he refused to read the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1688. In 1689, however, he took the oaths to William and Mary, but announced that he would not accept any bishopric vacated by a *Nonjuror during the lifetime of the former occupant. In 1691 he accepted the see of York on the death of Thomas Lamplugh, and his episcopate was notable for the high standard of duty which marked it (e.g. in his distribution of patronage). Queen *Anne, who greatly respected him, made him her spiritual adviser.

Life by Thomas Sharp (son), ed. T. Newcome, publd. 2 vols., London, 1825. A. T. Hart, The Life and Times of John Sharp, Archbishop of York (C.H.S., 1949). G. Le G. Norgate in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 408–11.

SHAXTON, NICHOLAS (c. 1485–1556), Bp. of *Salisbury. Educated at Cambridge, he was one of the committee appointed by the university in 1530 to consider the royal divorce. He thereby obtained the patronage of Anne Boleyn, while the favour of T. *Cromwell and his own advocacy of the Royal Supremacy enabled him to survive her downfall unharmed. He soon developed pronounced Protestant views. In 1535 he was made Bp. of Salisbury, but resigned his see in 1539, in protest against the *Six Articles. During the rest of the reign his position was precarious, and in 1546 he was arrested with Anne *Askew and others and charged with heretical views on the Eucharist. He saved himself from the stake by a recantation, apparently quite sincere, since he maintained a Catholic position throughout the reign of *Edward VI. Under *Mary he was appointed a suffragan to the Bp. of *Ely, and took part in the examination of certain Protestants on trial for heresy.

J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 452–4, s.v., with reff.

SHEER THURSDAY. An old name for Maundy Thursday, perhaps from 'skere' or 'sheer' (= 'clean', 'free from guilt'), with reference to the practice of receiving absolution or (alternatively) of ceremonially washing the altars of the church on that day.

SHEKINAH (Heb. שְׁכִינָה 'dwelling'). The word (not found in the OT) was used by the Jews of God's visible Presence, conceived as 'dwelling' among men. The *Rabbis often employed it as one of the circumlocutions for the name of 'God' in cases where it was desired to avoid *anthropomorphism. Hence in the *Targum, Is. 6. 5 becomes 'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the Shekinah of the King of the Ages'. Similarly, in the NT the ideas of God's glory and His dwelling among men are associated in Jn. 1. 14 ('And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory'), and in a number of other passages the word 'glory' (δόξα) occasionally seems to convey the overtones associated with the Jewish Shekinah.

W. O. E. Oesterley–G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (ed. 2, 1911), pp. 217–20. J. T. Marshall in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 487–9, s.v.

SHELDON, GILBERT (1598–1677), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected Fellow of All Souls in 1622 and ordained in the same year. In 1626 he was made Warden of All Souls and became an active supporter of W. *Laud's reforms at Oxford. During this period he also held in plurality several country livings. In 1638 he was put on the reforming commission which visited Merton College. A strong Royalist, he took part in the negotiations for the Uxbridge treaty of 1644 and in 1647 was with the King at Newmarket and Carisbrooke. In 1648 he was ejected from All Souls and spent some months in prison. During most of the Commonwealth he lived in retirement in the Midlands. Eventually, in 1659, he was restored to his Wardenship. In 1660 he became Bp. of London and Master of the Savoy, and in 1661 the *Savoy Conference met at his lodgings. While W. *Juxon lived he was virtually primate and succeeded him at Canterbury on his death in 1663. As Archbishop he worked hard for the re-establishment of Laudian religious principles. He also carried through the arrangement with Clarendon whereby the Convocations ceased to tax the clergy (1664). After Clarendon's fall in 1667 he was in disfavour at Court for most of the rest of his primacy, and he strongly opposed *Charles II's *Declaration of Indulgence of 1672. Throughout his life he was devoted to his university, and from 1667 to 1669 he was Chancellor. The Sheldonian Theatre at Oxford was built at his expense. Many of his papers are preserved in the *Bodleian Library.

N. Salmon (anon.), The Lives of English Bishops from the Restauration to the Revolution (pt. 1; 1731), pp. 10–47. V. Staley, The Life and Times of Gilbert Sheldon (1913). R. S. Bosher, The Making of the Restoration Settlement (1951), passim. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), passim. W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., lii (1897), pp. 24–6.

SHEMA, The (Heb. שְׁמַע 'hear'). The Jewish confession of faith. Its name is derived from the first word of the first of the three Scriptural passages of which it consists, viz. Deut. 6. 4–9, 11. 13–21, Num. 15. 37–41. These are preceded and followed by a number of benedictions, which perhaps emanated from *Essene circles and were added by the Great *Synagogue. The Shema, which is mentioned as a well-known observance in the *Mishnah (Berakoth, 2) and was doubtless known to Christ (cf. Mk. 12. 29), is to be recited every morning and evening by all Jewish men and is included among the passages inscribed in the *phylacteries.

W. O. E. Oesterley–G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (ed. 2, 1911), pp. 364–8. L. Jacobs in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xiv (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1370–74, s.v.

SHEMONE ESRE. See Eighteen Benedictions.

SHENOUTE (d. c. 450), or 'Shenudi', Abbot of Athribis in Egypt. In 370 he entered the White Monastery, nr. Schâg, under his uncle Pgôl, where he became superior c. 388. His community greatly increased, the numbers being given as 2,200 monks and 1,800 nuns. His government was very severe, esp. in the punishments, which included flogging and imprisonment for light faults, and he added many austerities to the more humane rule of *Pachomius. One of his most important innovations was the introduction of a written profession of obedience for his religious, probably elicited by the frequent cases of revolt and insubordination. He also allowed his older monks to live apart as hermits. An organizer rather than a theologian, Shenoute accompanied St. *Cyril of Alexandria to the Council of *Ephesus in 431, where he played an important part opposing *Nestorius. He knew Greek, but wrote in Coptic. The letters, homilies, and apocalypses attributed to him, of which many are spurious, are written in a fiery style and deal chiefly with monastic concerns and with exhortations to practise virtue and avoid vice. Feast day in the Coptic Church, 1 July.

Life and Works ed. J. Leipoldt–W. E. Crum (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Coptici, ii, 1906 (life by his pupil Besa, with Lat. tr. by H. Wiesmann, S.J., xvi, 1951, incl. indexes to whole set); iv, 1908, with Lat. tr. by H. Wiesmann, 1931; and v, 1913, with Lat. tr. by H. Wiesmann, 1936). E. Amélineau, Œuvres de Schenoudi (Coptic text and Fr. tr.; 2 vols., 1907–1914). Pseudo-Shenoute On Christian Behaviour ed. K. H. Kuhn (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Coptici, xxix, 1960, with Eng. tr., ib., xxx; 1960). J. Leipoldt, Schenute von Atripe und die Entstehung des national-ägyptischen Christentums (T.U., xxv, Hft. 1; 1903). Bardenhewer, pp. iv, 98–100; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 268 f.

SHEOL (Heb. שְׁאוֹל), in the OT, the underworld, the place of the departed spirits. Several derivations of the world have been given, e.g. (1) from a root meaning 'to ask', and hence referred to Sheol as the place of inquiry or scrutiny, or (2) from a root denoting 'to be hollow'. In the AV it is translated variously as 'hell', 'grave', or 'pit'. The notion reflects an undeveloped and shadowy belief in the future life which was gradually superseded by the more defined beliefs of later Judaism. The conception was widely held in early Semitic mythology and descriptions of Sheol in the OT can frequently be paralleled from Assyrian and Babylonian sources.

Friedrich *Delitzsch, Das Land ohne Umkehr. Die Gedanken der Babylonier-Assyrer über Tod und Jenseits (1911). P. Dhorme, O.P., 'Le Séjour des morts chez les Babyloniens et chez les Hébreux' in R. Bibl., xvi (1907), pp. 59–78; id., 'L'Idée de l'au-delà dans la religion hébraïque' in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, cxiii (1941), pp. 113–42. W. O. E. Oesterley, Immortality and the Unseen World (1921), esp. pp. 80–94. E. F. Sutcliffe, S.J., The Old Testament and the Future Life (Bellarmine Series, viii; 1946), esp. pp. 36–69 and 187–90. H. H. Rowley, The Faith of Israel (1956), pp. 157–60, 171–5. N. J. Tromp, M.S.C., Primitive Conceptions of Death and the Nether World in the Old Testament (Biblica et Orientalia, xxi; 1969), passim. R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life (1899), see index p. 426.

SHEPHERD OF HERMAS, The. The treatise of the sub-Apostolic Christian writer, *Hermas (q.v.). It was so named from the angel who, in the form of a shepherd, is recorded to have communicated to Hermas some of its contents. The identification of Hermas himself with the Shepherd, found in some later writers, seems to have arisen from mere confusion.

For bibl. see Hermas.

SHEPPARD, HUGH RICHARD LAWRIE (1880–1937), popularly 'Dick Sheppard', vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, London. He was educated at Marlborough, Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and Cuddesdon, ordained deacon in 1907 to Oxford House, Bethnal Green, and in 1911 became curate of St. George's, Hanover Square, London. In 1914 he was appointed vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. His religious enthusiasm and personal attractiveness won the affection of innumerable people in all stations of life, esp. after the growth of broadcasting, of which he was the first to sense the full possibilities as a Christian influence. He made his church, with its unique 'parish magazine', the St. Martin's Review, the best-known parish church in the British Empire. A keen enthusiast for ecclesiastical reform on unconventional lines, Sheppard identified himself with the Life and Liberty Movement in its earlier stages, and later his ideals for reform were embodied in The Human Parson (1924) and the very widely read The Impatience of a Parson (1927). Ill-health compelled his resignation of St. Martin's in 1926. From 1929 to 1931 he was Dean of *Canterbury and for a brief space (1934–5) Canon of *St. Paul's. In his last years he was an ardent upholder of the Pacifist cause and devoted his chief energies to its propagation.

R. Ellis Roberts, H. R. L. Sheppard. Life and Letters (1942). C. H. S. Matthews, Dick Sheppard. Man of Peace (Modern Christian Revolutionaries, n.d.). C. Jenkins in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 809 f.

SHERBORNE. St. *Aldhelm established the seat of the Bp. of W. Wessex here in 705, and founded a church and school. In 978 Bp. Wulfsey introduced the Benedictine Rule, himself becoming the first abbot. In 1058 the see was united with Ramsbury, and in 1075 moved to Old *Sarum. The church was rebuilt in the 12th cent., and again, after a serious fire, in the 15th. At the *Dissolution in 1536, the parishioners purchased the abbey for a parish church, while the conventual buildings (13th, 14th, and 15th cents.) were handed over to the school, which was refounded (1550), with a new charter from *Edward VI. The church is a fine example of the Perpendicular style, with notable fan-tracery in the choir. A Bishopric of Sherborne, suffragan to *Salisbury, was founded in 1928.

On the abbey, see W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 331–41; Muriel M. C. Calthrop in V.C.H. Dorset, ii, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 62–70.

SHERLOCK, THOMAS (1678–1761), Bp. of London. He was educated at Eton and St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1698, and was Master from 1714 to 1719. In 1704 he had succeeded his father as Master of the Temple and held the office till 1753. Here he established a great reputation as a preacher. In the *Bangorian Controversy he was strongly opposed to B. *Hoadly, thereby temporarily losing his influence at court. He was subsequently in turn Bp. of *Bangor (1728–34), of *Salisbury (1734–48), and of London (1748–61). The most celebrated of his writings was his Trial of the Witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus (1729, anon.), a highly characteristic apologetic writing of its age. In ecclesiastical politics he endeavoured to maintain against nearly all his contemporaries the ideals of the previous century.

E. F. Carpenter, Thomas Sherlock (C.H.S., 1936). W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., lii (1897), pp. 93–5.

SHERLOCK, WILLIAM (1641–1707), Dean of *St. Paul's. He was a native of Southwark, educated at Eton and Peterhouse, Cambridge, and in 1669 became rector of St. George's, Botolph Lane, London. In 1674 he published The Knowledge of Jesus Christ, and Union with Him, in which he attacked Puritan spirituality, esp. the contention of J. *Owen that the mercy of God can be known only through Christ. In his Case of Resistance (1684) he upheld the *Divine Right of Kings and inculcated the duty of passive obedience. In 1685 he was made Master of the Temple. In the Revolution of 1688 he sided with the *Nonjurors, and the Practical Discourse concerning Death (1689), the most popular of his works, reflects the emotions of this period. In 1690 he published the Vindica- tion of the Doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation. A violent controversy with R. *South and others followed, in which he was charged with teaching Tritheism. In the same year he took the oath, an action which he defended in the Case of Allegiance (1691), and in 1691 he was made Dean of St. Paul's. In 1695 his Trinitarian views, propagated at Oxford by J. *Bingham, were condemned by the Hebdomadal Council, and in his *Present State of the Socinian Controversy (1698) Sherlock abandoned most of his earlier theological doctrines.

Sermons Preached upon Several Occasions (1700; ed. 4, 2 vols., 1755); several repr. in T. S. Hughes, Summaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the Most Eminent British Divines (1834), pp. 1–276. Sherlock's Practical Discourse of Religious Assemblies (1681), ed. by H. Melvill (1840), with preface, pp. v–xx. C. F. Mullett, 'A Case of Allegiance: William Sherlock and the Revolution of 1688' in Huntington Library Quarterly, x (1946–7), pp. 83–103. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lii (1897), pp. 95–7.

SHEWBREAD (Heb. לֶחֶם הַפָּנִים; Gk. ὁ ἄρτος τῆς προθέσεως. The English word was adopted by W. *Tyndale from M. *Luther's Schaubrot). The twelve loaves which, acc. to the practice of the Jewish *Temple, were prepared from the finest flour and, arranged in two piles, set out weekly beside the altar of incense 'before the Lord'. When they were removed for renewal at the end of the week, only the priests might eat them (cf. Lev. 24. 9, Mk. 2. 26). The practice, which is first referred to in 1 Sam. 21. 2–6 (*David at the sanctuary of Nob), was doubtless a survival from the naïve primitive custom of putting out food for the god (cf. Bel and the Dragon; also the Roman lectisternia). Acc. to 1 Kgs. 7. 48, the Table of Shewbread was among the furnishings of *Solomon's Temple. The use of the Shewbread was restored by *Judas Maccabaeus after Antiochus Epiphanes' desecration of the Temple (2 Macc. 10. 3). At the destruction of the Temple under Titus in A.D. 70, the Table was rescued and its transport to Rome by captured Jews is prominently depicted on the Arch of Titus. It eventually reached *Constantinople, whence it was sent back to *Jerusalem under *Justinian (d. 565). It probably perished in the sack of Jerusalem by Chosroes in 614.

A. R. S. Kennedy in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 495–7, s.v.

SHIBBOLETH (Heb. שִׁבֹּלֶת). A word used by Jephthah as a test to distinguish the Gileadites from the Ephraimites, who could not pronounce it (Jgs. 12. 4 ff.). In modern usage it denotes a sectarian or party catchword.

SHORTENED SERVICES ACT. See Uniformity, Act of, Amendment Act (1872).

SHORTHOUSE, JOSEPH HENRY (1834–1903), author of John Inglesant. Born at Birmingham, the son of *Quaker parents, he was attracted to Anglicanism under the influence of J. *Ruskin and the Pre-Raphaelites and baptized at St. John's, Ladywood, in 1861. From 1866 to 1876, in the intervals of an active business-life, he was constantly brooding over and working on John Inglesant, which he wrote down piecemeal. Finishing it at Llandudno in 1876, he was unable to find a publisher and had it printed privately in 1880. Shortly afterwards Mrs. Humphry Ward brought it to the notice of A. Macmillan, who published it in 1881. It at once attracted very wide interest, among its admirers being W. E. *Gladstone, C. M. *Yonge, T. H. *Huxley, H. E. *Manning and E. S. *Talbot. The delicacy and charm with which John Inglesant's spiritual pilgrimage is portrayed, its sympathetic understanding of the religious life of the 17th cent., and its vivid delineation of the community at *Little Gidding made it, apart from its high literary qualities, a powerful apologia for Anglicanism.

Shorthouse also wrote some other works, but they were without merit and have long been forgotten.

Life and Letters of J. H. Shorthouse. Edited by his Widow (2 vols., 1905). T. Seccombe in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii, p. 309 f.

SHRINE (Lat. scrinium, 'chest'). In its original sense the word is applied to *reliquaries (q.v.), but is now commonly used either of sacred images of special importance usually kept in a church, or of any holy place, esp. one connected with *pilgrimages (q.v.). Among famous English medieval shrines are those of Our Lady of *Walsingham (recently rebuilt), of St. *Edward the Confessor at *Westminster Abbey, of St. Thomas *Becket at *Canterbury and of St. *Cuthbert at *Durham.

SHROUD, Holy. See Holy Shroud.

SHROVE TUESDAY. The day immediately preceding *Ash Wednesday, so named from the 'shriving', i.e. confession and absolution, of the faithful on that day.

SIAN-FU STONE. See Sigan-Fu Stone.

SIBYLLINE ORACLES, The. A collection of oracles worked up by Jewish and Christian authors in imitation of the pagan 'Sibylline Books'. They consist of fifteen books, three of which (9, 10, and 15) are missing. Books 1 and 2 give an account of the history of the world, in prophetic form, from the beginning of the world to the fall of Rome. Book 3 contains a defence of Jewish monotheism, together with another history of the world and apocalyptic prophecies. Books 4 and 5 deal with Roman history of Neronian times from the Jewish point of view, whereas Book 6 is a hymn to Christ. Book 7 is a conglomeration of eschatological prophecies and moral and ritual precepts. Book 8 treats of the nature of Christ and of His second birth. Books 11 to 14 are of less religious interest, giving yet another account of world history of more or less imaginative character. The whole collection, which is written in hexameters, is preceded by a prose prologue affirming that the oracles are utterances of Greek Sibyls of various periods.

Many of the Fathers, e.g. *Theophilus of Antioch and *Clement of Alexandria, accepted this view of the Oracles and drew from them arguments in defence of Christianity. Modern critics, however, assign them to Jewish and Christian authors; for, though genuine Greek oracles are inserted in some places, the tendency of the whole is monotheistic and Messianic. They are evidently cast in their particular form to gain the pagan world to Jewish or Christian doctrines. The dates of the Jewish portions of the collection range from the *Maccabaean period to the time of Hadrian, and these were freely used by the Christian *Apologists of the 2nd cent. The Christian additions seem to date from the late 2nd cent. onwards. Books 3–5 in their present form are probably mainly Jewish, of which the third, the oldest, is generally attributed to an Egyptian Jew writing c. 140 B.C., whilst the contents of Books 4 and 5 demand a date after the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The other books are either of Christian origin or heavily interpolated in a Christian sense. Their dates are much disputed. Apart from Books 11–14, which are usually assigned to the 4th cent., the latest seems to be Book 7 (generally dated 3rd cent.). The earliest are the Christian elements in Books 1 and 2, which are prob. to be dated in the second half of the 2nd cent. Books 6 and 8 used to be assigned to the 3rd cent., but most scholars now argue for a 2nd cent. date for Book 8, and the hymn to Christ (Book 6) is often held to be *Gnostic and 2nd cent. The work, which reflects contemporary popular theology, had considerable influence on *Lactantius and was known to St. *Augustine, who quotes a short passage in his 'De Civitate Dei' (xviii. 23).

Crit. ed. by J. Geffcken (G.C.S., 1902); more recent ed., with Germ. tr., by E. A. Kurfess [Munich, 1951]. Books iii–v also ed., with Ital. tr., by A. Pincherle (Rome, 1922). Eng. tr. of portion of Book ii (190–338) in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 521–4; further fragments of Book ii and Books iii–v are tr. into Eng., with comm., by H. C. O. Lanchester in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 368–406; Eng. tr. of Books iii–v by H. N. Bate (Translations of Early Documents, Series 2, Hellenistic-Jewish Texts, S.P.C.K., 1918). Eng. tr. of considerable extracts from Books i–viii by R. McL. Wilson, with tr. of introd. by A. Kurfess, in Schneemelcher, ii (Eng. tr., 1965), pp. 703–41. J. Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit der Oracula Sibyllina (T.U., xxiii, Hft. 1; 1902). B. Bischoff, 'Die lateinischen Übersetzungen und Bearbeitungen aus den Oracula Sibyllina' in Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, i (Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, xiii; 1951), pp. 121–47; repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, i (1966), pp. 150–171. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4, 1909), pp. 555–92. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 708–13; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 119–21. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 168–70, with bibl. to date. Eissfeldt, pp. 615–17. J. R. *Harris in H.D.B., Extra Vol. (1905), pp. 66–8, s.v.; W. *Bousset in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 265–80, s.v. 'Sibyllen und sibyllinische Bücher'; [A.] Rzach in P.W., Zweite Reihe, ii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2117–69, s.v. 'Sibyllinische Orakel'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2027–32, s.v. 'Sibyllins (Livres)'.

SICARD (1160–1215), Bp. of Cremona, historian, canonist, and liturgist. A native of Cremona, he was appointed Canon of Mainz in 1183 and Bp. of Cremona in 1185. Having won the confidence of *Frederick I, he played a considerable part in Lombard politics and was entrusted with several missions to Rome. In 1212–13 he was employed by the Pope on behalf of *Frederick II against Otto IV. His principal works are his Chronicon, a history of the world orig. up to 1201, revised and continued up to 1213, which is a primary authority for the Crusade of Frederick I; his Summa on the Decretum of *Gratian; and his Mitrale. The last of these, a moralistic and allegorical interpretation of places, ceremonies and vestments, throws important light on contemporary liturgical practice.

The best ed. of his Chronicon is that of O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxxi (1904), pp. 22–181, with bibl. reff.; the Mitrale is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, ccxiii, 13–436. E. Komorowski, Sicard, Bischof von Cremona (Diss., Königsberg, 1881). S. Kuttner, 'Zur Biographie des Sicardus von Cremona' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte. Kanonistische Abteilung, xxv (1936), pp. 476–8, with valuable reff. E. Brocchieri, Sicardo di Cremona e la sua opera letteraria (Annali della Biblioteca Governativa e Libreria Civica di Cremona, xi, fasc. 1; 1958). O. Holder-Egger, 'Einiges zur Quellenkritik der Chronik Sicards' in N.A., xxvi (1900), 471–555; id., 'Ueber die verlorene grössere Chronik Sicards von Cremona', ib., xxix (1904), pp. 177–245. P. G. Ficker, Der Mitralis des Sicardus nach seiner Bedeutung für die Ikonographie des Mittelalters (Leipzig Diss., 1889; also pr. as Beiträge zur Kunstgeschichte, N.F., ix; 1889). J. Sauer, Symbolik des Kirchengebäudes und seiner Ausstattung in der Auffassung des Mittelalters (1902), pp. 22–8 and passim. A. Franz, Die Messe im deutschen Mittelalter (1902), pp. 448–52.

SICILIAN VESPERS, The. A general massacre of the French in Sicily on 30 March 1282, the signal for which was the tolling of the bell for *Vespers. The number of the victims was prob. between 3,000 and 4,000.

M. Amari, La guerra del vespero siciliano (2 vols., Paris, 1843; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1850). O. Cartellieri, Peter von Aragon und die sizilianische Vesper (Heidelberg, 1904). S. Runciman, The Sicilian Vespers (1958).

SICK, Visitation of the (BCP). See Visitation of the Sick.

SICKINGEN, FRANZ VON (1481–1523), German knight. A native of Ebernburg near Worms, he became the leader of bands of 'Landsknechte' with whose help he conducted many feuds, ostensibly in the cause of the weak and oppressed, but always accompanied by plunder and cruelty. He warred against the cities of Worms and Metz and also fought in the service of Francis I of France and the German Emperor. Having supported the election of *Charles V, he was made Imperial Councillor in 1519. Under the influence of Ulrich von *Hutten he embraced the Reformation, defended J. *Reuchlin, and offered his castles as places of refuge to the Protestants. He also aided the Reformers by literary activities and supported M. *Luther in the hope of wresting their power from the spiritual princes and of increasing the strength of the knights. In 1522 he led an army against the Abp. of Trier, but the campaign was a failure, and in 1523 the archbishop and other princes laid a siege against his castle of Landstuhl. In the defence he was mortally wounded and capitulated shortly before his death.

Studies by E. de Bouteiller (Metz, 1860), H. Ulmann (Leipzig, 1872), F. P. Bremer (Strassburg, 1885) and K. H. Rendenbach (Historische Studien, ccxxv; 1933). W. R. Hitchcock, The Background of the Knights' Revolt 1522–1523 (University of California Publications in History, lxi; 1958), pp. 42–52. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, ii (1935), pp. 274–276 (Nos. 20010–67).

SIDESMAN. The 1603 Canons (can. 90) ordered that two, three or more persons in each parish be chosen as 'Sidemen or Assistants' to the *churchwardens, by agreement between minister and parishioners if possible, or otherwise by the Bishop. Their function was to ensure the attendance of parishioners at divine service. By canon E 2 of the 1969 Canons they are elected by the annual parochial church meeting and the minister; in the event of disagreement, each party is to choose half of the number. They must be on the electoral roll, and it is their duty to promote the cause of true religion in the parish, and to assist the churchwardens.

SIDETES, PHILIP. See Philip Sidetes.

SIDGWICK, HENRY (1838–1900), moral philosopher. A cousin of Abp. E. W. *Benson, he was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1859 elected a Fellow of his college. Here he taught classics and (after 1869) moral philosophy. He gave strong support to the movement for abolishing religious tests at Cambridge, and in 1869, through feeling no longer able to subscribe himself, resigned his fellowship as a public protest. From 1883 till his death he held the Knightbridge professorship at Cambridge. Sidgwick took a keen and active interest in many fields —university administration, psychical research, morality, politics, and the admission of women students to the university. His Methods of Ethics (1874), a thorough, if inconclusive, study of moral philosophy on mainly *hedonistic lines, exercised considerable influence, e.g. on H. *Rashdall and C. D. Broad. Sidgwick's other writings include The Ethics of Conformity and Subscription (1871), The Principles of Political Economy (1883), Outlines of the History of Ethics (1886), and The Elements of Politics (1891).

His posthumous writings include Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. H. Spencer and J. Martineau (1902), The Development of European Polity (1903), Miscellaneous Essays and Addresses (1904) and Lectures on the Philosophy of Kant and other Philosophical Lectures and Essays (ed. J. Ward, 1905). Arthur Sidgwick (brother) and Mrs. E. M. Sidgwick, Henry Sidgwick. A Memoir (1906). L. Stephen, 'Henry Sidgwick' in Mind, x (1901), pp. 1–17. F. H. Hayward, The Ethical Philosophy of Sidgwick (1901); C. D. Broad, Five Types of Ethical Theory (1930), ch. vi (pp. 143–256); W. C. Havard, Henry Sidgwick and Later Utilitarian Political Philosophy (Gainesville, Florida, 1959). D. G. James, Henry Sidgwick (Riddell Memorial Lectures [not delivered]; posthumously publd., 1970). L. Stephen in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 342–5.

SIDONIUS APOLLINARIS, St. (c. 423 – c. 480), statesman, author and Bp. of Clermont. A member of an aristocratic family of the Lyonnais, he received a good classical education at Arles (perh. also at Lyons) and became the friend and pupil of *Claudianus Mamertus of Vienne. About 450 he married Papianilla, a daughter of the future Emp. Avitus (455–6), and about the same time entered upon a political career. In 456 he published an elaborate panegyric on his father-in-law for which he was rewarded by a statue in the Forum of Trajan. After the overthrow of Avitus by Ricimer and the Emp. Majorian, he obtained the favour of the latter through another panegyric. On Majorian's fall he retired for a time from public life, but resumed it in 467 with a mission to the Emp. Anthemius, being soon made prefect of Rome (468–9). In 469, when prob. still a layman, he was elected Bp. of Clermont, partly in order to defend the country against the Goths. He accepted the episcopal office with reluctance and humility, abandoned poetry, became a benefactor of monks, and distributed much of his wealth in charities. His strenuous efforts did not avert the occupation of Clermont by the Visigoths under Euric in 475 after repeated sieges, and he himself was exiled and imprisoned. Freed in 476 and reinstated in his diocese, he spent the leisure of his remaining years in making a collection of his letters.

Sidonius may be regarded as the last representative of classical culture. His poems, of which twenty-four are still extant, lack poetical inspiration but show great technical skill. They are formed on the models of *Virgil and Horace and filled with pagan mythology. His letters, though of little religious depth and marred by verbosity, are a valuable source for the history of his time. A work 'Contestatiuncula', probably a collection of his Eucharistic prayers made by St. *Gregory of Tours, has been lost. He was venerated as a saint in Gaul. Feast day, 23 Aug. (in modern editions of the *Roman Martyrology, 21 Aug.).

Editio princeps by E. Vinetus (Lyons, 1552). Improved ed. by J. *Sirmond, S.J., Paris, 1614; new ed., 1652; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lviii, 435–752. Crit. edd. by C. Luetjohann (completed by F. Leo and T. *Mommsen; M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, viii; 1887) and A. Loyen (Collection des Universités de France, 3 vols., 1960–70). There is also an ed., with Eng. tr., by W. B. Anderson (Loeb, 2 vols., 1936–1965). Eng. tr. of Letters ed. O. M. Dalton (2 vols., Oxford, 1915). C. E. Stevens, Sidonius Apollinaris and his Age (1933), with bibl. H. Rutherford, Sidonius Apollinaris. L'homme politique, l'écrivain, l'évêque (Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences, Belles-Lettres et Arts de Clermont-Ferrand, xxxviii; 1938), with bibl. A. Loyen, Sidoine Apollinaire et l'esprit précieux en Gaule aux derniers jours de l'Empire (1943), and other works of this author. Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 296–327; W. H. Semple, 'Apollinaris Sidonius, a Gallo-Roman Seigneur' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 1 (1968), pp. 136–58. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 652–8; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 498. A. Klotz in P.W., 2te Reihe, ii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2230–8, s.v. 'Sidonius (1)'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2033–5.

SIGAN-FU STONE, The. An early *Nestorian monument, discovered in 1625 at Sigan-Fu (officially Sian-Fu) in NW. China. It is a slab, 7½ ft. high by 3 ft. wide, which was set up in A.D. 781. The inscription, mainly in Chinese, contains (1) an allusive statement of Christian doctrine; (2) a description of the arrival in 635 at Sigan-Fu, then the capital of the Tang dynasty, of a missionary from Tuts'in named Olopan and of the imperial privileges which he was granted. After relating how Olopan became a 'Guardian of the Empire' and 'Lord of the Great Law', there follows an account of the fortunes of the Church down to the reign of Tih-tsung (780–3); (3) an epitome of (2) in octosyllabic verse; and (4) a series of short additions in *Syriac in the Estrangelo character. The stone is the most considerable witness extant to the growth of Christianity in the Far East before the 13th cent. In 1907 a replica of the stone was made by the Danish traveller, Frits v. Holm, and deposited in 1908 in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

F. v. Holm, The Nestorian Monument (Chicago, 1909); P. Y. Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China (1916): id., The Nestorian Documents and Relics in China (Tokyo, 1937).

SIGEBERT OF GEMBLOUX (c. 1030 – 1112), medieval chronicler. He was a monk of the *Benedictine abbey of Gembloux, taught for more than 20 years at the school of St. Vincent at Metz, and returned to Gembloux c. 1071. His two principal works are the 'Chronicon' (from 381 to 1111), in which he uses an immense wealth of sources, but without much critical discernment, though from 1024 he relied more on first-hand information, and 'De Viris Illustribus', an ecclesiastical literary history in biographies with an air of great erudition. He is also the author of a history of the early abbots of Gembloux (Gesta Abbatum Gemblacensium), as well as of a number of hagiographical works mainly intended for edification and of little historical value. In the great struggle between the Empire and the Papacy he took the side of *Henry IV against *Gregory VII, whose reforms he thought inopportune and whose policy he attacked in several pamphlets. He also wrote against Pope *Paschal II.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL, clx, 57–834 (incl. repr. ed. of the Chronicon from L. C. Bethmann in M.G.H., Scriptores, vi (1844), pp. 300–74). His Apologia contra eos qui calumniantur Missas Coniugatorum Sacerdotum was first pr. by E. Sackur in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, ii (1892), pp. 436–464; his Passio Sanctae Luciae Virginis and his Passio Sanctorum Thebeorum were pr. in full by H. Dümmler in Abh. (Berl.), 1893, Abh. 1. S. Hirsch, De Vita et Scriptis Sigeberti (Berlin, 1841). A. Cauchie, La Querelle des investitures dans les diocèses de Liége et de Cambrai (2 pts. 1890–1), passim. E. de Moreau, S.J., Histoire de l'Église en Belgique, ii (ed. 2, Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, ii, 1945), pp. 83–6, 95–9, 156–8, 277–81, and 285 f. M. Schulz, 'Zur Arbeitsweise Sigeberts von Gembloux im Liber de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis' in N.A., xxxv (1910), pp. 563–71. L. Brigué in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2035–41, s.v.

SIGER OF BRABANT (c. 1240–c. 1284), *Averroist philosopher. All that is known of his earlier career is that in 1266 he was a master of arts in the University of *Paris, where he was teaching, and that he was a member of the 'Picard' nation and a canon of St. Paul, Liège. He must therefore have come to Paris not later than 1260. He was involved in the condemnation of 13 errors by Stephen Tempier, Bp. of Paris (10 Dec. 1270), and in the same year *Thomas Aquinas wrote the 'De Unitate intellectus contra Averroistas', which is chiefly directed against him. He may have somewhat modified his radicalism, but dissension continued in the Faculty of Arts until 1275, when a papal legate acted as arbitrator. In 1276 Siger was cited for heresy with two others by Simon du Val, inquisitor of France. He had already fled the kingdom and appears to have appealed to the papal court. According to a letter of John *Peckham, written in 1284, he was killed at Orvieto by his clericus in a fit of insanity.

When Siger arrived in Paris the Faculty of Arts had recently revised the curriculum to include the study of the Metaphysics of *Aristotle and his works on natural philosophy. The most substantial works of Siger were commentaries and quaestiones on books of Aristotle, notably quaestiones on the Metaphysics, Books II–VII, on the Physics, and De Anima, Book III. He also wrote shorter treatises, including 'De aeternitate mundi' and 'De anima intellectiva'. An early sixteenth-century Italian writer quotes from a 'De intellectu', not known to be extant, which was apparently a reply to Thomas Aquinas. Siger regarded it as his task not to conceal Aristotle's views, even if they were contrary to revealed truth; and, like all medieval interpreters, his views on Aristotle were coloured by study of the works of Proclus, *Avicenna and Averroes. The chief doctrines in question were the eternity of the world and the unity of the intellect in the human race, which involved the denial of personal immortality and of rewards and punishments in a future life. Theological critics accused him of holding the position known as the doctrine of the 'double truth', viz. that the same tenet might be true in theology but false in philosophy. This he would have disputed. He maintained that in cases of conflict, truth was on the side of faith. How far he resolved the status of philosophical truths is not clear from his writings. *Dante (Paradiso, x. 133–7) did not regard him as a heretic, and placed him among the twelve sages.

Editions of his treatises in P. Mandonnet, O.P., Siger de Brabant et l'averroïsme latin au 13e siècle (Collectanea Friburgensia, viii, 1899; 2nd ed. enlarged in 2 vols., 'Les Philosophes belges', vi, 1911, and vii, 1908); crit. ed. of his 'De aeternitate mundi' by W. J. Dwyer, C.S.B. (Louvain, 1937). Eng. tr. by L. H. Kendzierski (Mediaeval Philosophical Texts in Translation, No. 16, Milwaukee, 1964, pp. 75–98, incl. introduction); comm. on Aristotle, chiefly pr. only in extracts, ed. F. van Steenberghen, Siger de Brabant d'après ses œuvres inédites (2 vols., Les Philosophes belges, xii, 1931, and xiii, 1942); C. A. Graiff, O.S.B., Siger de Brabant. Questions sur la métaphysique (Philosophes médiévaux, i; 1948); J. J. Duin, La Doctrine de la providence dans les écrits de Siger de Brabant (ib., iii; 1954); A. Zimmermann, Die Quaestionen des Siger von Brabant zur Physik des Aristoteles (Cologne Diss., 1956); A. Dondaine, O.P.–L. J. Bataillon, O.P., 'Le Manuscrit Vindob. Lat. 2330 et Siger de Brabant' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxxvi (1966), pp. 153–261, incl. attributions of new works. The authenticity of the 'Questions sur la physique d'Aristote' ed. P. Delhaye (Les Philosophes belges, xv; 1941) is contested. Convenient list of Siger's works, with editions, in P. Glorieux, La Faculté des arts et ses maîtres au XIIIe siècle (Études de Philosophie médiévale, lix; 1971), pp. 351–4. B. Nardi, Sigieri di Brabante nel pensiero del rinascimento italiano [1945]. F. van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIIIe siècle (Philosophes médiévaux, ix; 1966), pp. 373–402. E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 389–99, with notes, pp. 718–25.

SIGN OF THE CROSS. From the time of *Tertullian Christian writers testify to the use of the 'sign of the Lord', partly as sanctifying every action in daily life from rising in the morning to retiring at night, partly as an encouragement in temptation and trial, and partly as a means of mutual recognition in times of persecution. From early times the sign was also employed in *Baptism and *Confirmation, and its use was then extended to the liturgical blessing of persons and things. In the early centuries the sign was drawn upon the forehead by the thumb or finger of the right hand. In later times it has been made by drawing the right hand from forehead to breast, and then from shoulder to shoulder, returning to the centre afterwards. It is usual in the W. Church to make the cross-stroke from left to right, in the E. from right to left.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Sign of the Cross' in The Month, cxviii (1911), pp. 586–602, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), pp. 1–21, with reff. E. Beresford-Cooke, The Sign of the Cross in the Western Liturgies (*Alcuin Club Tracts, vii; 1907), with reff. F. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, iii (1932), 'Das Segnen der Sinne mit der Eucharistie', pp. 231–44. A. Rücker, 'Die Kreuzzeichen in der westsyrischen Messliturgie' in Pisciculi. Studien zur Religion und Kultur des Altertums Franz Joseph Dölger zum sechzigsten Geburtstag dargeboten von Freunden, Verehren und Schülern (Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, i; 1937), pp. 245–51. F. J. Dölger, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte des Kreuzzeichens' in Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, i (1958), pp. 5–19; ii (1959), pp. 15–29; iii (1960), pp. 5–16; iv (1961), pp. 5–17; and v (1962), pp. 5–22. E. Dinkler, Signum Crucis. Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament und zur Christlichen Archäologie (Tübingen, 1967), esp. pp. 1–76.

SILAS, St. A prominent early Christian disciple. He was St. *Paul's companion on his first visit to Macedonia and *Corinth (Acts 15. 22–40, 2 Cor. 1. 19), and St. Paul associated him with himself and *Timothy in writing to the Thessalonians (1 & 2 Thess. 1. 1), giving his name in the form 'Silvanus'. This led some of the Fathers to distinguish between the two, making Silas Bp. of Corinth and Silvanus Bp. of Thessalonica. Silas, who is probably identical with St. Peter's amanuensis Silvanus (1 Pet. 5. 12), acc. to tradition died in Macedonia. Feast day, 13 July; in the Greek calendar, 30 July.

A. Stegmann, Silas als Missionar und 'Hagiograph'. Eine exegetische Studie (1917). L. Radermacher, 'Der erste Petrusbrief und Silvanus' in Z.N.T.W., xxv (1926), pp. 287–99.

SILENCE, The Argument from (Lat. argumentum e silentio). The deduction from the absence of any known reference to a subject in the extant writings of a particular author that he was ignorant of it. Many 19th cent. critics of historic Christianity carried it to extreme lengths. In a famous set of articles (1874–7) criticizing Supernatural Religion (anon., by W. R. Cassels; 3 vols., 1874–7), in which the argument had been extensively used, J. B. *Lightfoot showed that it is unsafe to employ it, except in the most compelling cases.

SILESIUS, ANGELUS. See Angelus Silesius.

SILOAM, The Pool of. A pool or reservoir at *Jerusalem, mentioned several times in the OT, and almost certainly the modern Birket Silwān. In the NT it is referred to only twice, viz. in the incident of the man born blind (Jn. 9. 1 ff.), whom Christ told to go and wash in this pool, and in Christ's mention of the fall of a tower 'in Siloam' (Lk. 13. 4). In the latter reference, part of the city wall, which ran near the pool, may be intended. The pool Birket Silwān receives, through an underground conduit probably made by King Hezekiah, its waters from the 'Virgin's Spring' (Ain Sitti Maryam) on the other side of the eastern hill of Jerusalem. Since the 4th cent. it has been a place of pilgrimage for Christians.

T. Tobler, Die Siloahquelle und der Oelberg (1852), pp. 1–58. H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1914), pp. 861–4, with reff. The whole water system is described by D. R. Ap-Thomas in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Archaeology and Old Testament Study (Oxford, 1967), pp. 283–5 and 290 f. Excavations in 1964 reported by Kathleen M. Kenyon in Palestine Exploration Quarterly, xcvii (1965), pp. 14–17.

SILVESTER. See Sylvester.

SILVIA OF AQUITAINE. A relative of the Roman prefect, Rufinus. Her sole interest to the Church historian lies in the fact that she was considered to be the authoress of the 'Pilgrimage of *Etheria' (q.v.), by F. Gamurrini, who discovered the work in MS. in 1884. In 1903, however, Dom M. Férotin identified the writer with a Spanish nun, Etheria, and this view is now generally accepted.

SIMEON. (1) In the OT, one of the Hebrew patriarchs, the ancestor of the tribe of the same name. (2) In the NT, the aged and devout Jew who took the infant Christ in his arms in the *Temple at *Jerusalem and spoke the words known as the '*Nunc Dimittis' (Lk. 2. 25–35). (3) In Acts 15. 14, apparently for St. *Peter (elsewhere 'Simon Peter'), though St. *Chrysostom, perhaps correctly, sees here a reference to the Simeon of Lk. 2. (4) Simeon that was called Niger, a prophet at Antioch (Acts 13. 1).

SIMEON, the New Theologian, St. (949–1022), Byzantine mystic and spiritual writer. In youth he entered the imperial service at *Constantinople, but in 977 he embraced the monastic life at *Studios. Within a few months he transferred to the monastery of St. Mamas, also at Constantinople, becoming priest in 980 and a year later abbot. Because of the fierce opposition which certain aspects of his teaching aroused, in 1005 he was forced to resign from his position as superior, and four years later he was sent into exile in Asia Minor. Although this sentence was quickly revoked, he preferred to remain in voluntary retirement for the rest of his life. He is the greatest of Byzantine mystical writers, with a vivid and highly personal style. In his teaching he assigned a central place to the vision of Divine Light, while being at the same time strongly Christocentric, and underlining the importance of the Eucharist. He combined the contemplative tradition of *Isaac of Nineveh with the *coenobitic tradition of *Basil the Great and *Theodore of Studios. He was much influenced by the Homilies of *Macarius of Egypt, and in his turn he exercised a formative influence upon the rise of *Hesychasm. His appellation 'the New Theologian' implies a comparison with St. *Gregory Nazianzen, known in the East as 'Gregory the Theologian'. Alternatively, but with less probability, it has been understood to mean 'Simeon the Younger, the Theologian'.

'Catecheses' ed. B. Krivocheine, with Fr. tr. by J. Paramelle, S.J. (S.C., xcvi, civ, cxiii; 1963–5); 'Kephalaia', ed. Nicodemus of Agioritis and Macarius of Corinth, in Philocalia (Venice, 1782; ed. 2, Athens, 1893); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxx, 604–688; crit. ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Darrouzès, A.A. (S.C., li; 1957); Ethical and Theological Treatises, also ed., with Fr. tr., by id. (ib., cxxii, cxxix; 1966–7); Hymns ed. J. Koder, with Fr. tr. by J. Paramelle, S.J. (ib., clvi, clxxiv, cxcvi; 1969–73). Life by Nicetas Stethatos ed. I. Hausherr, S.J., with Fr. tr. by G. Horn, S.J. (Orientalia Christiana, xii; 1928; fasc. 45). K. Holl, Enthusiasmus und Bussgewalt beim griechischen Mönchtum; eine Studie zu Symeon dem Neuen Theologen (Leipzig, 1898). W. Völker, Praxis und Theoria bei Symeon dem neuen Theologen (1974). G. A. Maloney, S.J., The Mystic of Fire and Light. St. Symeon the New Theologian (Denville, N.J., 1975). B. Krivochéine, Dans la lumière du Christ. Saint Syméon le Nouveau Théologien, 949–1022. Vie, Spiritualité, Doctrine (Chevetogne, 1980). J. Gouillard, A.A., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2941–56, s.v. 'Syméon le Jeune'.

SIMEON OF DURHAM (c. 1060 – 1130), chronicler. He was a monk of the *Benedictine monastery of *Durham, where he was professed in 1085 or 1086 and later became precentor. His first work, inspired by *Bede, was his 'Historia Ecclesiae Dunelmensis', written between 1104 and 1107, which brings the history of the see of Durham down to 1096. It was prob. he who later wrote a general history of England, 'Historia regum Anglorum et Dacorum', wholly based on earlier writers, except for the contemporary period between 1119 and 1129. The latter was continued by Richard and John of *Hexham.

Opera Omnia, ed. T. Arnold (R.S., 2 vols., 1882–5), with biog. introd. pp. ix–xv. Eng. tr. of his Historical Works by J. Stevenson (The Church Historians of England, iii, pt. 2; 1855). Preface by I. H. Hinde to his ed. of Symeonis Dunelmensis Opera et Collectanea, i (all publ.; Surtees Society, li; 1868), pp. v–lv. H. S. Offler, Medieval Historians of Durham (Inaugural lecture, Durham, 1958), pp. 6–10. P. H. Blair, 'Some Observations on the "Historia Regum" attributed to Symeon of Durham' in K. [H.] Jackson and others, Celt and Saxon (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 63–118. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., lii (1897), p. 254 f.

SIMEON METAPHRASTES, St. (fl. c. 960), also known as Logothetes, Byzantine hagiographer. Nothing is known of his life. He owes his fame to his collection of saints' lives ('Menologion') compiled, it is said, at the bidding of the Emperor. A few of the lives were simply copied from older collections, but most of them were worked over ('metaphrased', hence his name) to make them acceptable in style and manner of presentation to the taste of his time. They were not, however, subjected to criticism, the historical errors of the models being reproduced in the new versions, as the interest of the author was chiefly moral and devotional. His work was frequently added to in later times. Among other writings attributed to Simeon are a chronicle and collections of sayings from St. *Basil and other Fathers. The Orthodox Church honours him as a saint. Feast day in E., 9 or 28 Nov.

Texts (many only in mod. Lat. trss.) collected in J. P. Migne, PG, cxiv–cxvi. On lives of Simeon, see B.H.G., ii (ed. 3; 1957), p. 255 f. (Nos. 1675 f.); on works by Simeon, see refr. in index, iii, p. 263 f. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'La Vie de saint Paul le Jeune et la chronologie de Métaphraste' in R.Q.H., liv (1893), pp. 49–85; id., Les Saints stylites (1923; Lives of St. Alypius, pp. lxxvi–lxxxv and 148–94). A. Ehrhard, Überlieferung und Bestand der hagiographischen Literatur der griechischen Kirche, ii (T.U., li, 1938), pp. 306–717; H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 570–5, with extensive bibl. J. Gouillard, A.A., in D.T.C., xiv (2; 1941), cols. 2959–71, s.v. 'Syméon Logothète'; B. Kötter, O.S.B., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), col. 1214 f., s.v. 'Symeon Metaphrastes'.

SIMEON STOCK, St. See Simon Stock, St.

SIMEON STYLITES, St. (c. 390 – 459). The first of the *stylites or pillar ascetics. He was born on the Syrian border of Cilicia. After some time as a monk in the monastery of Eusebona (at Tell 'Ada, between *Antioch and Aleppo) he moved to Telanissos, which was not far away. Here, after several years of anchoretic life, he mounted a pillar, at first low, but gradually increased to a height of forty cubits; he lived on the top of it until his death, occupied in adoration and intercession. This novel austerity attracted to him a continuous stream of pilgrims, and was widely imitated. Both by personal intercourse and by correspondence, Simeon exercised considerable influence upon the world of his time, converting pagans, awakening the careless, reconciling enemies, and urging the cause of *Chalcedonian orthodoxy. There are still extensive remains of the church and monastery that were built around his pillar (modern Qal'at Sim'ân). He is not to be confused with his 6th cent. namesake, also a stylite, who took up residence on Mons Admirabilis, just to the west of Antioch. Feast day, 1 Sept. in the E., 5 Jan. in the W.

AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 261–86, with Lat. texts only. Of the early lives, the most trustworthy is the account in *Theodoret (Hist. Rel., 26). This was used, and the narrative carried to a later date, in the less reliable Gk. life by a monk Antony (to which a Coptic life is nearly related). Its Gk. text was first pr. from a St. Petersburg MS. by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus (St. Petersburg, 1907). Coptic text ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Chaîne (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, Bibliothèque des Études Coptes, iii; Cairo, 1948). Syriac life ed. P. Bedjan, Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, iv (Paris, 1894), pp. 507–644; Eng. tr. by F. Lent in Journal of the American Oriental Society, xxxv (1915–17), pp. 103–98. This is closely followed by a Georgian life, ed. G. Garitte (C.S.C.O., clxxi, Scriptores Iberici, vii, 1957, pp. 1–77, with Lat. tr. in C.S.C.O., clxxii, Scriptores Iberici, viii, 1957, pp. 1–53). H. *Lietzmann, Das Leben des heiligen Simeon Stylites (T.U., xxxii. 4; 1908), with texts and full crit. discussion. H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Saints stylites (1923), pp. i–xxxix. P. Peeters, S.J., 'St. Syméon Stylite et ses premiers biographes' in Anal. Boll., lxi (1943), pp. 29–71, repr., with revisions, as 'Un saint hellénisé par annexion: Syméon Stylite' in his Le Tréfonds oriental de l'hagiographie byzantine (Subsidia hagiographica, xxvi; 1950), pp. 93–136. A. J. Festugière, O.P., Antioche païenne et chrétienne (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxciv; 1959), pp. 347–401 and 493–506, incl. Fr. tr. of texts. Alice Leroy-Molinghen, 'A propos de la "Vie" de Syméon Stylite' in Byzantion, xxxiv (1964), pp. 375–84. J. Lassus, Sanctuaires chrétiens de Syrie (Institut Français d'Archéologie de Beyrouth. Bibliothèque archéologique et historique, xlii; 1947), pp. 129–32. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 311–15, with bibl.

SIMEON OF THESSALONICA (d. 1429), Abp. of Thessalonica. Little is known of his life except that he favoured the Venetians who had bought Thessalonica in 1423 and opposed the surrender of the city to the Turks. He was one of the most influential authors of his age. His principal work is a 'Dialogue against all Heresies and on the One Faith' (Διάλογος κατὰ πασῶν τῶν αἱρέσεων καὶ περὶ τῆς μόνης πίστεως), which reflects his predominating interest in the mystical interpretation of the Byzantine cultus. It consists of a shorter treatise on doctrine, dealing chiefly with the Trinity and with Christology, and a longer second part on the Liturgy and the Sacraments. The polemical passages envisage the Jews, *Bogomils, Mohammedans, and the Church of Rome. Among his other works are a treatise 'On the Holy Temple' (Περὶ τοῦ θείου Ναοῦ), also mainly a symbolical explanation of the ritual, and an exposition of the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed ('Ερμηνεία συνοπτική').

His writings, edited by *Dositheus (Jassy, 1683), are reprinted in J. P. Migne, PG, clv. Politico-Historical Works, ed. D. Balfour (Vienna, 1979). Liturgical works ed. I. M. Phountoules (Thessalonica, 1968 ff.). Id., Τὸ λειτουργικὸν ἔργον Συμεὼν τοῦ Θεσσαλονίκης (ib., 1966), with summary in French. R. Bornert, O.S.B., Les Commentaires byzantins de la divine liturgie du VIIe au XVe siècle (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, ix; 1966), pp. 245–63. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2976–94, s.v. 'Syméon de Thessalonique'.

SIMEON, CHARLES (1759–1836), leader of the *Evangelical Revival. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1782. In 1783 he was ordained priest, and in the same year was appointed vicar of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, holding this incumbency till his death. At an early date he had come under the influence of the two *Venns and his whole future ministry was strongly coloured by his Evangelical experience. At first he was met by hostility both in the university and among his congregation, but his pastoral zeal broke down all opposition. He became a leading figure in the Missionary Movement, being one of the founders of the *C.M.S. (1799) and a prominent supporter of the *British and Foreign Bible Society; and he was frequently consulted by the East India Company on the choice of their chaplains. He was also the founder of a body of trustees (the Simeon Trustees) for securing and administering Church patronage in accordance with his principles. In the ASB, feast day, 13 Nov.; in the American BCP (1979), 12 Nov.

H. C. G. *Moule, Charles Simeon (1892); Charles Smyth, Simeon and Church Order (1940). A. R. Buckland in D.N.B., lii (1897), pp. 255–7; G. W. E. Russell in D.E.C.H., pp. 558–560.

SIMILITUDO DEI (Lat., 'likeness of God'). Acc. to a distinction based on a traditional exegesis of Gen. 1. 26, that element in man's being as originally constituted which he lost through the Fall. See Imago Dei.

SIMON, St., 'the Less', Apostle. One of the twelve Apostles, called by *Matthew and *Mark 'the Canaanite' (AV; 'the Cananaean', RV) and by *Luke 'the Zealot', two terms which represent the same Hebrew or Aramaic word. Of his personal history nothing certain is known, but it may be inferred from Lk. that he had once been a member of the *Zealots. The apocryphal 'Passion of Simon and Jude' relates the preaching and martyrdom of these two Apostles in Persia. In the W. the two are always coupled in the ecclesiastical calendar and in dedications of churches. Feast day in E., 10 May; in W. (with St. Jude), 28 Oct. See also Simons in the N.T.

AA.SS., Oct. XII (1867), pp. 421–36. J. S. Hoyland, Simon the Zealot (1941; an imaginative reconstruction of the Gospel narrative, conceived as the supersession of Jewish nationalism).

SIMON OF CYRENE. A passer-by who was compelled by the Roman soldiers to carry Christ's cross on the way to the crucifixion (Mt. 27. 32 &c.). Mark (15. 21) describes him as the father of Alexander and Rufus, implying that these were figures known in the early Church. According to *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer., I. xxiv. 4) the *Basilideans held that Simon not only carried Christ's cross but was crucified in His place. In modern times Simon of Cyrene has been claimed as patron by groups of people working among outcasts.

See commentaries on Mark 15. 21, etc.

SIMON MAGUS. Acc. to Acts 8. 9–24, a sorcerer, known as 'the Power of God which is called Great', who practised in *Samaria in the time of the Apostles. Having professed Christianity and been baptized, he was later rebuked by St. *Peter for trying to obtain spiritual powers from the Apostles for money (hence the term '*simony'). This in substance is all that is recorded in the NT.

In the 2nd–3rd cents. there existed a quasi-Christian sect of a *Gnostic cast which was supposed to have taken its origin from him. *Justin Martyr, followed by other writers, says that its founder, Simon, was a native of Gitta in Samaria, who came to Rome in the time of the Emp. Claudius (A.D. 41–54). He also affirms that Simon was regarded by his disciples as a god and describes a statue in his honour on an island in the Tiber inscribed 'Simoni Deo Sancto'; but the base of a statue recovered in 1574, and usually regarded as the statue in question, shows by its inscription (Semoni Sancto Deo Fidio) that it was really dedicated not to Simon but to a Sabine god. Simon was said by St. *Hippolytus and others to have come into conflict with St. Peter again at Rome, and to have perished dramatically there through a failure of his magic powers. He later figures in the '*Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', and also in ancient and medieval legends from which, perhaps, that of Faust evolved. The most probable view seems that the heresiarch, Simon of Gitta, though a genuinely historical person, was in fact a different person from the Simon Magus of Acts, and that he really lived in the 2nd century.

On the NT account see commentaries on Acts, cited s.v. J. M. A. Salles-Dabadie, Recherches sur Simon le Mage (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, x etc.; 1969 ff.). On Simon's place in Gnosticism, L. Cerfaux, 'La Gnose simonienne' in Rech. S.R., xv (1925), pp. 489–511, and xvi (1926), pp. 5–20, 265–85, and 481–503. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 681–8; G. N. L. Hall in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 514–25; H. *Lietzmann in P.W., Zweite Reihe, iii (1929), cols. 180–184; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2130–40, s.v. 'Simon le Magicien'.

SIMON PETER, St. See Peter, St.

SIMON STOCK, St. (c. 1165–1265), also 'Simeon Stock' and 'Simon Anglus', General of the *Carmelites. One of the first Englishmen to join the Carmelites when they settled in Britain, he became at a great age the sixth General of the order (c. 1247). During his term of office the order increased rapidly, esp. in England; and he was responsible for obtaining Papal approbation for the alterations which it had undergone since leaving Palestine (see Carmelites). The name 'Stock' is perhaps derived from the legend that as a young man he lived a hermit's life inside a tree-trunk. Feast day, 16 May.

A. Monbrun, Vie de saint Simon de Stock, sixième général des Carmes, fondateur de la confrérie du Saint-Scapulaire, suivie de la bulle sabbatine du pape Jean XXII (Clermont-Ferrand, 1869). F. M. Xiberta, Ord. Carm., De Visione Sancti Simonis Stock (Bibliotheca Sacri Scapularis, i; Rome, 1950). B. Zimmerman, O.D.C. (ed.), Monumenta Historica Carmelitana (Lérins, 1907), pp. 313–22. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), p. 1779, s.v. 'Stock, Simon', with further reff.

SIMON OF SUDBURY (d. 1381), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Sudbury in Suffolk, he studied at the university of *Paris, and later became chaplain to Innocent VI, who appointed him Bp. of London in 1361. He was very soon playing a prominent part as a diplomatist and politician, being an adherent of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. In 1375 he was translated to Canterbury, and two years later crowned Richard II. He seems to have been reluctant to take proceedings against J. *Wycliffe until ordered to do so by the Pope, and then was not extreme in his measures. In 1380 he became chancellor and was responsible for the imposition of a poll tax. When in 1381 a great rising of the peasants took place, the Kentish rioters spoiled the archbishop's lands, released from prison John *Ball, the excommunicated priest, and attacked the Tower, where Sudbury had taken refuge with the King. He resigned the chancellorship, but this did not avail to save him, and on Friday, 14 June 1381, the mob captured and beheaded him. The archbishop met his death bravely and was by many regarded as a martyr.

R. C. Fowler (ed.), Registrum Simonis de Sudbiria, Diocesis Londoniensis A.D. 1362–1375 (*Canterbury and York Society, xxxiv and xxxviii; 1927–38), with introd. by C. Jenkins in vol. ii, pp. v–lxv. W. L. Warren, 'A Reappraisal of Simon Sudbury, bishop of London (1361–75) and archbishop of Canterbury (1375–81)' in J.E.H., x (1959), pp. 139–152. W. Hunt in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 146–9, s.v. 'Sudbury, Simon of'; W. H. *Hutton in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 575, s.v. 'Sudbury, Simon of'.

SIMON, RICHARD (1638–1712), Biblical scholar. From 1662 to 1678 he was a member of the French *Oratory. After extensive studies in oriental languages, he published in 1678 his Histoire critique du Vieux Testament, in which he denied that *Moses was the author of the *Pentateuch, arguing from the existence of duplicate accounts of the same incident and the variations of style. He is thus generally regarded as the founder of OT criticism. For his boldness Simon was expelled from his order. Much of his work, however, was written in the interests of orthodoxy against B. *Spinoza's OT theories, and Simon continued throughout his life to have the interests of Catholicism at heart. He was strongly opposed to *Jansenism. He lived later at Rouen and at Dieppe, where he wrote several works on the NT.

Of older books the best is the Life by K. H. Graf (Jena, 1847). A. Bernus, Richard Simon et son Histoire critique du Vieux Testament (Diss., Lausanne, 1869); H. Margival, Essai sur Richard Simon et la critique biblique au XVII siècle (1900); F. Stummer, Die Bedeutung Richard Simons für die Pentateuchkritik (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, iii. 4; 1912); J. Steinmann, Richard Simon et les origines de l'exégèse biblique (1960). A. Bernus, Notice bibliographique sur Richard Simon (Basle, 1882). A. Molien in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2094–2118, s.v., with bibl.

SIMONS, MENNO. See Mennonites.

SIMONS IN THE NT. Besides (1) Simon *Peter the Apostle, (2) *Simon 'the Less', Apostle, called 'the Cananaean' or 'the Zealot', (3) *Simon Magus, and (4) *Simon of Cyrene, there is mention in the NT of (5) Simon, one of the *Brethren of the Lord, who has been identified with (2) but is almost certainly distinct; (6) Simon the *Pharisee, in whose house Christ was anointed by 'a woman which was a sinner' (Lk. 7. 36–50); (7) Simon the leper, in whose house at *Bethany Christ was anointed by an unnamed woman (Mk. 14. 3–9), sometimes identified with *Mary of Bethany; (8) Simon, the father of *Judas Iscariot (Jn. 6. 71); and (9) Simon, a tanner, with whom St. Peter lodged at Joppa (Acts 9. 43).

SIMONY. The term, which is derived from *Simon Magus (cf. Acts 8. 18–24), denotes the purchase or sale of spiritual things. The legislation of the early Councils shows that simony became frequent in the Christian Church after the age of the persecutions. The Council of *Chalcedon (451) forbade ordination to any order for money. St. *Gregory the Great later vigorously denounced the same evil. It came to be very widespread in the Middle Ages, esp. in its form of traffic in ecclesiastical preferment, which was frequently forbidden, e.g. by the Third *Lateran Council (1179). It was treated in detail by St. *Thomas Aquinas and again strenuously opposed by the Council of *Trent. In post-Reformation England the English *Canons of 1604 exacted an oath from all ordinands and recipients of benefices to the effect that their offices had not been obtained by simoniacal transactions. The system of ecclesiastical patronage led almost inevitably to simony in a large number of cases, an evil partly remedied by the English Benefices Act of 1898, initiated by Abp. E. W. *Benson, which, among other anti-simoniacal provisions, forbade sales of next presentations. The form of the Declaration against Simony now required from the recipients of benefices in the C of E is incorporated in Canon C 16 of the 1969 Canons.

A. Leinz, Die Simonie. Eine kanonistische Studie (1902); N. A. Weber, A History of Simony in the Christian Church from the Beginning to the Death of Charlemagne, 814 (Baltimore, 1909); R. A. Ryder, Simony. An historical Synopsis and Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies; lxv; 1931). H. Meier-Welcker, 'Die Simonie im frühen Mittelalter' in Z.K.G., lxiv (1952–53), pp. 61–93. J. Weitzel, Begriff und Erscheinungsformen der Simonie bei Gratian und den Dekretisten (Münchener Theologische Studien, III. Kanonistische Abteilung, xxv; 1967). A. Bride in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2, 1941), cols. 2141–60, s.v. 'Simonie'.

SIMPLE FEASTS. Feasts of the lowest rank in the pre-1960 RC Calendar. They were characterized by having no Second Vespers and only one *nocturn with three lessons at *Mattins. For the classification of feasts, see Doubles.

SIMPLICIANUS, St. (d. 400), Bp. of Milan. He is first heard of at *Rome between 350 and 360, where he was instrumental in bringing about the conversion of *Victorinus. Shortly afterwards he became tutor to St. *Ambrose, and when in 373 his pupil was elected bishop, Simplicianus also removed to Milan to prepare him for baptism and ordination. Later he played an important part in St. *Augustine's conversion by recounting the story of Victorinus, and some of Augustine's early treatises were addressed to him. In 397 he succeeded Ambrose as Bp. of Milan. Feast day, 16 (sometimes 13) Aug.

The chief early sources are Augustine, Confessions, viii. 1–12, and *Gennadius, De Viris Illustribus, 36. H. W. Phillpott in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 688 f., with further reff.

SIMPLICIUS, St. (d. 483), Pope from 468. He was born at Tivoli. During his pontificate, which was marked by the fall of the W. Empire (476), the rule of Odoacer (an *Arian) as king of Italy, and the spread of the *Monophysite heresy, he considerably advanced the jurisdictional claims and prestige of the Roman see. In the E. he successfully intervened in defence of the *Chalcedonian formula against its Monophysite critics. He also ably organized the ecclesiastical affairs of the city, where he established several new churches, including S. Stefano Rotondo on the Celian Hill. See Rome, Churches of. Feast day, 2 Mar.

Several of his letters are repr. from the conciliar collections in J. P. Migne, PL, lviii, 35–62; fourteen from the Collectio Avellana also ed. O. Guenther in C.S.E.L., xxv (pt. 1; 1895), pp. 124–55. P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, i (ed. 2 by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 77–80. V. Grumel, A.A., Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, i, fasc. 1 (Istanbul, 1932), pp. 64–9. L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 92 f. and 249–51. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2161–4, s.v.; J. Chapin in N.C.E., xiii (1967), p. 232, s.v., both with reff.

SIMULTANEUM. The term was originally used in the 16th cent. in Germany for the authorization of two or more religious communions in the same territory. It gradually came to be restricted to the simultaneous right of two congregations differing in their faith to use a single ecclesiastical building. Special provisions for this practice were made in the Peace of *Ryswick (1697). Fresh arrangements for the joint use of churches were drawn up by the Prussian state after the *Vatican Council of 1870 for the newly formed *Old Catholics and the RCs, but on 12 Mar. 1873 *Pius IX expressly forbade RCs to use the churches given by the government to the Old Catholics.

SIN. The purposeful disobedience of a creature to the known will of God. Unlike moral evil it is a fundamentally theological conception.

In the OT sin is represented as a constant factor in the experience both of God's people and of the world from the first transgression of *Adam and *Eve in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3) onwards. Its power was aggravated rather than diminished by the moral and ceremonial precepts in the Law of *Moses, which both increased the occasions of sin and developed a keener sense of moral responsibility (cf. Rom. 7. 13). The teaching of the Prophets with its emphasis on the heinousness of injustice (Am. 5. 11–24), lack of mercy (Hos. 4. 1), and idolatry (Am. 5. 4–5, Is. 1. 10–17) deepened the sense of sin in another way; in addition, Ezekiel (18. 1–4) and Jeremiah (31. 29–30) proclaim the personal responsibility of each man for his own sins. The Pss., by their stress on the heart as the seat of sin, are marked by their penetrating insights into its personal and emotional effects.

In the NT the Hebrew and Jewish teaching on sin is summed up and deepened by the clear recognition that its roots lie in a man's character (Mt. 5. 21–5; 15. 18). St. *Paul expounds it as a breach of the natural law written in the conscience of man (Rom. 2. 14–16) and asserts its universality. St.*James stresses its origin in the human will and again emphasizes personal responsibility. In the Johannine writings sin is seen to consist esp. in disbelief in Christ and the consequent judgement.

Later theology, though it introduced many formal distinctions, has added little if anything to what is implicit in the NT. In the 2nd cent. an acute problem was raised by the question of serious post-Baptismal sins which certain theologians held to be never, or only once (*Hermas, *Tertullian), forgivable; but this rigorism was soon generally abandoned for a more lenient view. The Fathers held varying beliefs in the universality or otherwise of sin, e.g. St. *Athanasius believed that there were sinless lives both before and after Christ. In the early 5th cent. *Pelagius raised the fiercest of all controversies on the nature of *original sin and grace. St. *Augustine's part in the conflict, combined with his own religious experience, issued in an intense personal perception of the gravity of sin. Yet on the theological issue St. Augustine emphatically rejected the *Manichaean doctrine that evil was a substance and the created universe inherently wicked, opposing to it the *Platonic view that sin was in essence privative (privatio boni). In this teaching he exercised a decisive influence on the medieval doctrine of sin.

In the 8th–9th cents. the prevalence of feudal notions and the development of the penitential system fostered in many quarters a somewhat external view of sin. For each sin due satisfaction was to be paid in a measurable quantity of penance. But under the influence of such teachers as St. *Anselm and the *Victorines a fundamentally personal view of sin reasserted itself. The regularization of confessional practice also led to the elaboration of a corpus of *moral theology in St. *Thomas Aquinas and other writers. For the long dispute as to whether or not the BVM was conceived without sin, see Immaculate Conception.

The Reformers were largely concerned to reject the external view of sin which they saw in the later Middle Ages. The doctrine of *justification by faith only was held by M. *Luther to be the one solvent for every external view of sin. The *Calvinistic teaching on *predestination brought vividly before the imagination of countless Protestants the terrifying consequences of sin. In the 17th cent. the doctrine of sin in the *Jansenist movement in the RC Church had close affinities with the teaching of the Reformers, while in the Protestant Churches certain *Arminian tenets had much in common with Catholic teaching. Among Catholic theologians, the intensive cultivation of moral theology since the 16th cent. has led to such precise distinctions as those currently drawn between *mortal and *venial, and between *formal and *material, sin (qq.v.).

Since the end of the 17th cent. there has been little further development of the doctrine of sin. Under the secularizing influences of the Aufklärung attempts were made to remove sin from its religious setting and interpret it as moral evil ('philosophic sin'). The liberalistic optimism of the 19th cent. led to the virtual elimination of the notion of sin from much popular religious teaching. Early in the present century the Freudian psychology was invoked in attempts to explain sin in non-moral terms. At a later date the recognition of demonic forces in contemporary civilization led to a renewed theological emphasis on the gravity of sin in the spirit of St. Augustine and the Reformers (*Dialectical Theology, &c.).

See also Atonement, Original Sin, Penance, Redemption, Seven Deadly Sins.

Modern works in English directly on the subject include J. *Tulloch, The Christian Doctrine of Sin (1877); F. R. Tennant, The Origin and Propagation of Sin (*Hulsean Lectures, 1902); id., The Sources of the Doctrines of the Fall and Original Sin (1903); id., The Concept of Sin (1912); T. A. *Lacey, Nature, Miracle and Sin (1916); P. Green, The Problem of Evil (1920); R. S. Moxon, The Doctrine of Sin (1922); E. J. Bicknell, The Christian Idea of Sin and Original Sin (1922); N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (*Bampton Lectures for 1924; 1927); C. R. Smith, The Biblical Doctrine of Sin and the Ways of God with Sinners (1953); F. Greeves, The Meaning of Sin (Fernley-Hartley Lecture, 1956; 1956); J. Hick, Evil and the Love of God (1966). Other recent works include H. Rondet, S.J., Notes sur la théologie du péché (1957); S. Lyonnet, S.J., De Peccato et Redemptione, i (Rome, 1957), largely in Eng. tr. in id.– L. Sabourin, S.J., Sin, Redemption, and Sacrifice. A Biblical and Patristic Study (Analecta Biblica, xlviii; 1970); P. Delhaye and others, Théologie du péché (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série 2. Théologie Morale, vii; 1960); C. Journet, Le Mal. Essai théologique (1961; Eng. tr., 1963). P. Palazzini (ed.), Il peccato (1959; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1964). P. H. Simon, La Littérature du péché et de la grâce. Essai sur la constitution d'une littérature chrétienne depuis 1880 [1957]. Artt. in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 528–71, esp. H. R. *Mackintosh on 'Sin (Christian)', pp. 538–44; T. Deman, O.P., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 140–275, s.v. 'Péché'; G. Quell–G. Bertram–G. Stählin–W. Grundmann in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 267–320, s.v. ἁμαρτάνω, ἁμάρτημα, ἁμαρτία, with extensive bibl. refs.; P. Schoonenberg–K. *Rahner, S.J., in Sacramentum Mundi, ed. K. Rahner and others, vi (1970), pp. 87–94, s.v.

SINAI. The mountain in the desert between Egypt and Palestine where the Law was given by *Moses (Ex. 19. 1 ff.). From very ancient times it was regarded as the sacred mountain of *Jehovah (Deut. 33. 2, Jgs. 5. 5). The region of the traditional Sinai (now Jebel Musa) became an early centre of Christian *monasticism, the present monastery dedicated to St. *Catherine of Alexandria claiming to have been built on the site to which her body was miraculously transported.

A. P. *Stanley, Sinai and Palestine in connection with their History (1856), ch. i, 'The Peninsula of Sinai', pp. 3–62. M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., 'Le Sinaï biblique' in R. Bibl., viii (1899), pp. 369–92. D. Nielsen, 'The Site of the Biblical Mount Sinai' in Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society, vii (Jerusalem, 1927), pp. 187–208; L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'Un Nouveau Sinaï biblique' in R. Bibl., xxxix (1930), pp. 73–83. L. Prévost, Le Sinaï hier–aujourd'hui. Étude topographique, biblique, historique, archéologique (1937). A. Legendre in Dict. Bibl., v (1908), cols. 1751–83, s.v., with bibl.; E. Lohse in T.W.B., vii (1960–64), pp. 281–6, s.v. Σινᾶ.

C. N. Papamichalopoulos, Ἡ μονὴ τοῦ Ὄρους Σινᾶ (Athens, 1932), with docc. M. H. L. Rabino, Le Monastère de Sainte-Catherine du Mont Sinaï. Souvenirs épigraphiques des anciens pèlerins (Cairo, 1935). H. Skrobucha, Sinaï (Stätten des Geistes; Olten and Lausanne, 1959; Eng. tr., 1967). For further bibl., G. Hofmann in E.C., xi (1953), col. 660, s.v.

SINAI, Church of, the smallest independent Church of the Orthodox Communion. It is ruled by the 'Archbishop of Mount Sinai', the abbot of the monastery of St. Catherine on the mountain, who has jurisdiction over a few daughter-houses and cells and a small number of Arabs who live in the vicinity of the monastery. The independence of the Church was proclaimed in 1575 and confirmed in 1782. The archbishop must always be consecrated by the Patr. of *Jerusalem, who in consequence has often tried, though with little success, to assert a certain supremacy over the Church.

SINAITICUS, Codex. See Codex Sinaiticus.

SION. See Zion.

SION COLLEGE, London. An ecclesiastical institution founded by Thomas White (1550?–1624), who left £3,000 to purchase premises for a 'college' for a 'corporation' or guild of the clergy of London and its suburbs, with almshouses for 20 people attached. To the original hall, chapel, and almshouses in London Wall, a library was added by the donation of John Simpson, White's executor. The College was moved to the Victoria Embankment in 1886 and now functions chiefly as a theological and historical library.

E. H. Pearce, Sion College and Library (1913).

SI QUIS (Lat., 'if anyone'). The public notice issued on behalf of a candidate for a benefice, holy orders, &c., which requires any objectors to come forward.

SIRICIUS, St. (c. 334–99), Bp. of *Rome from 384. His pontificate is of importance as marking a new stage in the development of Papal authority. His epistle to Himerius, Bp. of Tarragona (385), advocating a relatively lenient treatment of public penitents, is the first of the Papal *decretals. He held a synod at Rome in 386 which passed nine canons on matters of ecclesiastical discipline that were sent to the African Church. He also took active steps towards preventing the Church in E. Illyria from becoming subject to the jurisdiction of *Constantinople. In 390 he dedicated the new *basilica of St. Paul on the *Ostian Way, and in 392 condemned *Jovinian. Feast day, 26 Nov.

Letters ed. P. *Coustant, O.S.B., Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, i (Paris, 1721), cols. 623–700; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xiii, 1131–96. Jaffé, i, pp. 40–2. L.P. (Duchesne), i, p. 216 f. J. Janini, S. Siricio y las cuatro temporas. Una investigación sobre las fuentes de la espiritualidad seglar y del Sacramentario Leoniano (Valencia, 1958). On the events of his pontificate, E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 257–85. J. Barmby in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 696–702, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2171–4, s.v. 'Sirice'; P. T. Camelot, O.P., in N.C.E., xiii (1969), p. 258 f., s.v.

SIRMIUM, Blasphemy of. The doctrinal formula published in Latin by the Council of Sirmium of 357, setting forth the teaching of the extreme *Arian party. All mention of the term 'substance' (substantia, quae Graece usia appellatur) and its compounds (including the *Homoousion) in Trinitarian speculation was forbidden, and the subordination of the Son to the Father asserted. Its promulgation marked the turning-point in the history of the Arian controversy. It takes its name from the description of it in St. *Hilary of Poitiers' 'De synodis' as the Exemplum blasphemiae apud Sirmium.

The text is in A. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der alten Kirche (ed. 3, 1897), § 161, pp. 199–201.

SIRMOND, JACQUES (1559–1651), French *Jesuit scholar. Having entered the Society of Jesus in 1576, he was professor of literature and rhetoric from 1581 to 1590 at the Collège de Clermont, where he numbered St. *Francis of Sales among his pupils. From 1590 to 1608 he was secretary to the General of the Jesuits, C. *Aquaviva, at Rome, and while there assisted C. *Baronius in his historical works. After returning to France he became rector of the Paris College (1617) and later confessor to Louis XIII (1637–43). From 1610 onwards he published the works which established his fame as one of the greatest scholars of his century. Esp. important are his editions of the Fathers, which include St. *Fulgentius's 'De veritate praedestinationis et gratiae' (1612), the works of *Paschasius Radbertus (1618) and *Theodoret of Cyrrhus (1642), the 'Opuscula' of *Eusebius of Caesarea (1643), and *Rufinus's 'De Fide' (1650). His other writings include Concilia Antiqua Galliae (1629), a dissertation Dionysii Parisiensis et Dionysii Areopagitae discrimen (1641) which raised a long-drawn-out controversy owing to its attack on the traditional identification of the two *Dionysii, and various polemical works.

Opera Varia nunc primum collecta (not quite complete), ed. by J. de La Baune, S.J. (5 vols., fol., Paris, 1696, with brief biography; repr. Venice, 1728). H. *Valesius, Oratio in Obitum J. Sirmondi (Paris, 1651). Sommervogel, vii (1896), pp. 1237–61. P. Galtier, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2186–93.

SISTERS OF MERCY. (1) A name widely used in the 19th cent. of members of any (esp. Anglican) religious community engaged in nursing or similar work. A penitentiary conducted by such sisters was known as a 'House of Mercy'. (2) A RC sisterhood founded in *Dublin in 1827.

SISTINE CHAPEL. The principal chapel of the *Vatican Palace, so called because it was built for Pope *Sixtus IV (1471–84). It is used for the principal Papal ceremonies and also by the cardinals for the election of a new Pope when there is a vacancy. The chapel is celebrated for the frescoes by *Michelangelo and other artists on its walls and ceiling, chief among them being Michelangelo's Last Judgement covering the altar wall.

E. Steinmann, Die Sixtinische Kapelle (2 vols., 1901–5), with plates (2 vols., 1901–5). C. de Tolnay, Michelangelo, ii (Princeton, 1945), The Sistine Ceiling, incl. full bibl. L. D. Ettlinger, The Sistine Chapel before Michelangelo. Religious Imagery and Papal Primacy (Oxford, 1965).

SISTINE MADONNA (Madonna di S. Sisto). One of *Raphael's best-known works, depicting the Virgin and Child floating on the clouds of heaven, between St. *Sixtus II and St. *Barbara, while two angels gaze upwards at them from below. It was painted in Rome c. 1512, and placed over the high altar of the Benedictine abbey church of San Sisto at Piacenza. By reason of the idealism of its form and its vision-like grace it has been pronounced the 'sublimest lyric of the art of Catholicity' (J. A. Symonds). It is now at Dresden.

M. Putscher, Raphaels Sixtinische Madonna (Tübingen, 1955).

SITZ IM LEBEN (Germ., 'place in life'). A term used particularly in Biblical criticism, to signify the circumstances (most often in the life of a community) in which a particular story, saying, etc., was either created or preserved and transmitted.

SIX ARTICLES, The (1539). The Articles imposed in June 1539 at the King's bidding by 31 Hen. VIII, c. 14, popularly known as 'the Whip with Six Strings', to prevent the spread of Reformation doctrines and practices. They (1) maintained *transubstantiation and (2) *communion in one kind, (3) enforced clerical *celibacy, (4) upheld *monastic vows and (5) defended private *Masses and (6) *auricular confession. The bill was introduced into the Lords by the Duke of Norfolk, and all the lay peers were subservient. A minority of the bishops, however, resisted. Nicholas *Shaxton (c. 1485–1556), Bp. of *Salisbury, and H. *Latimer, Bp. of *Worcester, resigned their sees, and T. *Cranmer sent his wife back to Germany. In operation the act turned out to be less severe than its critics feared, as its requirements were widely ignored even by those holding high ecclesiastical office.

Text in Gee–Hardy, pp. 303–19 (No. lxv); the Articles, without the rest of the Act, repr. in Bettenson, p. 328 f.

SIX POINTS, The. The *Eastward Position, *Eucharistic Vestments, the *Mixed Chalice, *Altar Lights, Unleavened *Bread at the *Eucharist, and *Incense. Their introduction into the C of E followed a campaign, set on foot c. 1870 under the indirect influence of the *Oxford Movement, to restore these and many similar ceremonial usages. Their crystallization into 'six points' dates from a resolution of the *English Church Union, proposed by T. T. *Carter and passed at the annual meeting of the Union on 15 June 1875. See also Purchas Judgement, Lincoln Judgement.

SIX-PREACHERS. In *Canterbury Cathedral six preachers founded in 1541 by Abp. T. *Cranmer to represent the new learning. They were originally required to preach every saint's day, not being a Sunday, and to travel round the diocese. They had a house in the Precincts, stipend, and wood and forage allowances. Under the 1941 Statutes of Canterbury Cathedral, Six-Preachers hold office for five years and are paid for the one sermon they each deliver annually.

SIXTUS II, St. (d. 258), or 'Xystus', Pope. On his accession in 257 to the Roman see, he resumed relations with St. *Cyprian and the Churches of Africa and Asia Minor, which had been broken off under his predecessor St. *Stephen I on account of the controversy on the validity of heretical baptism. Sixtus himself, however, continued the Roman practice of not rebaptizing heretics. He suffered martyrdom under the second edict of the Emp. Valerian (Aug. 258) and was buried in the catacomb of St. *Callistus. He was one of the most highly venerated of early martyrs. His name is found in the Roman calendar of the middle of the 4th cent. and still stands in the *Canon of the Mass. Feast day, 6 Aug.

He is to be distinguished from an earlier St. Sixtus (I), who was Bp. of Rome c. 117 – c. 127. Feast-day, 6 Apr.

Jaffé, i, p. 21 f. L.P. (Duchesne), i, p. 155 f. AA.SS., Aug. II (1735), pp. 124–42; also Nov. II (pt. 2; 1931), p. 420 f., with full reff. P. Corssen, 'Der Schauplatz der Passion des römischen Bischofs Sixtus II' in Z.N.T.W., xvi (1915), pp. 147–166, with reff.; P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, vi (S.T., xxxiii; 1920), No. 4, 'Un recente studio sul luogo del martirio di S. Sisto II', pp. 145–78. E. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2194–6, s.v. 'Sixte II'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B.–M. Combet-Farnoux in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1501–1515, s.v. 'Sixte II', with bibl.; A. Amore, O.F.M., in E.C., xi (1953), col. 778 f., s.v. 'Sisto II'. The Sayings of a pagan moralist Sextus, wrongly ascribed to the Pope by *Rufinus, were ed. H. Chadwick (Texts and Studies, new series, v; Cambridge, 1959); id., 'The Sentences of Sextus and of the Pythagoreans' in J.T.S., N.S., xi (1960), p. 349.

SIXTUS IV (1414–84), Pope from 1471. Born of a poor family, Francesco della Rovere entered the *Franciscan Order, where he became a successful lecturer, General in 1464, and Cardinal in 1467. Elected Pope in 1471, he undertook a crusade against the Turks, but with little success, and soon turned almost entirely to Italian politics and the aggrandizement of his family. With him the nepotism of the Renaissance Popes entered its worst stage and the spiritual interests of the Church were almost wholly relegated to the background. His nephews, one of whom was the later Pope *Julius II, implicated the Pope in political intrigues with the Italian cities, esp. in the conspiracy of the Pazzi, which resulted in the murder of Giuliano de' Medici and a war with Florence (1478–80). His nepotism also led to considerable confusion of the Papal finances and troubles in the Pontifical States. Besides increasing the privileges of the Franciscans and other Mendicant orders and furthering the cult of the BVM, Sixtus was a great protector of arts and scholarship. He founded the Sistine Choir, built the *Sistine Chapel, and enriched the *Vatican Library. Sixtus was unfortunate in his training and his circumstances. His extravagance arose from his inexperience as a member of a Mendicant Order and from the want of any worthy relatives on whom to exercise his natural generosity. In his personal life he appears to have been blameless and also a passable theologian.

Life attributed to B. *Platina (d. 1481) in L. A. *Muratori (ed.), Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, iii (pt. 2; Milan, 1724), cols. 1053–68. E. Franz, Sixtus IV und die Republik von Florenz (1880). E. Müntz, 'Un Mécène italien au XVe siècle. Les lettres et les arts à Rome pendant le règne de Sixte IV' in Revue des Deux Mondes, xlviii (1881), pp. 154–192. C. Bauer, 'Studi per la storia delle finanze papali durante il pontificato di Sisto IV' in Archivio della R. Società di Storia Patria, l (1927), pp. 314–404. A. Matanić, O.F.M., 'Xystus Pp. IV scripsitne librum "de conceptione beate Virginis Marie"?' in Antonianum, xxix (1954), pp. 573–8. Pastor, iv (1894), pp. 197–471; Fliche–Martin, xv (1951), esp. pp. 74–90. A. Teetaert, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2199–217, s.v. 'Sixte IV', with full bibl. P. Paschini in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 780–2, s.v. 'Sisto IV', with bibl.

SIXTUS V (1521–90), Pope from 1585. The son of a gardener, Felice Peretti was educated by the *Franciscans of Montalto, where he took the habit at the age of 12. Ordained priest in 1547, he soon became a famous preacher and a friend of St. *Ignatius Loyola and St. *Philip Neri. He was appointed Consultor of the *Inquisition and professor at the Roman University in 1560, and General of his order and Bp. of S. Agata in 1566. In 1570 he was created cardinal by *Pius V, whose confessor he was. He was Bp. of Fermo from 1571 to 1577 and in 1585 was elected Pope. The five years of his pontificate were devoted to far-reaching reforms in the government of the Church and of the Papal States, carried through by ruthless methods. He rigorously suppressed brigandage in his territories and put the Papal finances on a sound basis by the sale of certain offices, the setting-up of more '*montes', and additional taxes. Continuing the reform of the Curia, he fixed the number of cardinals at 70, and by the bull 'Immensa Aeterni' of 1588 established 15 cardinalitial congregations (see Roman Congregations). In his European policy he endeavoured to uphold the balance of the Catholic powers, and thus distrusted the ambitions of *Philip II, who wished to split up France. A patron of art and scholarship, Sixtus V was esp. concerned with the embellishment of Rome, though he had scant appreciation of its antiquities. He built the *Lateran Palace and the *Vatican Library, had the cupola of St. Peter's finished, and supplied the city with drinking water, the 'Acqua Felice', which was conducted over a distance of 20 miles. He also inaugurated an edition of the *Vulgate (q.v.), which, after the corrections made under *Clement VIII, long remained the standard text.

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, viii (Naples, 1883), pp. 563–1025, and ix (Turin, 1865), pp. 1–381. 'Acta Consistorialia' in Analecta Juris Pontificii, ix (Rome, Paris, and Brussels, 1872), cols. 841–74. G. Cugnoni, 'Documenti chigiani concernenti Felice Peretti, Sisto V' in Archivio della Società Romana di Storia Patria, v (1882), pp. 1–32, 210–304, and 542–89. C. Leti, Vita di Sisto V (3 vols., Amsterdam, 1721; Eng. tr., 1724); C. Tempesti, Storia della vita e geste di Sisto Quinto (1754); J. A. de Hübner, Sixte-Quint (2 vols., 1870; Eng. tr., 1872; revised Germ. tr., 1932). S. Klein, Sixtus der Fünfte nach dem grösseren Werke des Barons von Hübner bearbeitet (Sammlung historischer Bildnisse, x; 1873). L. M. Personé, Sisto Quinto. Il genio della potenza (Florence, 1935). E. A. Segretain, Sixte-Quint et Henri IV (1861). M. de Boüard, 'Sixte-Quint, Henri IV et la Ligue. La Légation du Cardinal Caetani en France (1589–1590)', in R.Q.H., cxvi (1932), pp. 59–140. U. Balzani in C.M.H., iii (1904), pp. 422–55. Pastor, xxi (1932) and xxii (1932), pp. 1–312. A. Teertaert, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2217–38, s.v. 'Sixte-Quint', with full bibl.; G. B. Picotti in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 780–7, s.v. 'Sisto V'; D. R. Campbell in N.C.E., xiii (1969), pp. 273–5, s.v.

SLAVERY. A state of servitude by which a man is the property of another man. It is opposed on the one hand to human dignity, which does not allow a person to be treated as a chattel, and violates a man's rights to liberty of conscience, integrity of soul and body, and the stability of family life, and, on the other hand, tends to breed vice and cruelty in the owner. In the OT, however, a mitigated form of slavery was tolerated by the Mosaic Law (Ex. 21. 1–11, Lev. 25. 44–55), and in NT times it was an integral part of the social system whose sudden abolition would have reduced the Roman Empire to chaos. There is no explicit teaching on the subject in the Gospels, but the spiritual equality of men as children of the same Father, together with the *Golden Rule and the Lord's affection for the poor and oppressed, provided the principles which were slowly to penetrate the nascent Christian society. They were formulated by St. Paul, who recognized neither bond nor free in Christ (Gal. 3. 28, 1 Cor. 12. 13, Col. 3. 11), though he did not condemn slavery but rather strove to imbue both masters and slaves with the new Christian spirit of charity which was finally to abolish the institution itself. This teaching is most conspicuous in his Ep. to Philemon and in the exhortations of Col. 3. 22–4. 1 and Eph. 6. 5–9. A similar attitude was prevalent in the early Church until the 3rd cent., Christian masters and slaves, who shared in the same sacraments, being still more closely drawn together by their common sufferings often culminating in martyrdom. From *Constantine onwards the Imperial legislation followed the Christian sentiment and many mitigations were introduced, esp. in the 6th cent., by *Justinian. Slaves who, with the consent of their masters, became priests were automatically freed, whereas entrance into the religious life did not even presuppose this consent. After the christianization of N. and E. Europe slavery was gradually transformed into the much milder institution of serfdom, which in its turn slowly disappeared in and after the Renaissance. A cruel form of slavery, however, reappeared after the fall of *Constantinople in 1453, when the Turks reduced large numbers of Christians to a servitude which was only mitigated by the devoted work of the religious orders such as the *Trinitarians, the *Mercedarians, and St. *Vincent de Paul's 'Congregation of the Mission'. A renewed outbreak of slave-owning among Christians took place after the discovery of America, when the Spanish, Portuguese, and British settlers made slaves of the Indians and later also introduced negro slaves from Africa despite the steady resistance of the missionaries, esp. the *Dominicans and the *Jesuits, who set up a model colony without slaves in Paraguay, and despite the condemnations of successive Popes, e.g. *Paul III in 1537, *Pius V in 1567, and *Urban VIII in 1639. In the 18th cent. the movement against slavery was taken up by the *Quakers, esp. W. *Penn, who abolished slavery in Pennsylvania, and philanthropists like T. Clarkson and W. *Wilberforce. The slave trade was made illegal in 1808, and slavery was finally suppressed in the British Empire in 1833. In the U.S.A., at the conclusion of the Civil War in Dec. 1865, a constitutional amendment for ever prohibited slavery throughout the States.

The question of slavery has been much discussed by theologians. Acc. to several of the Fathers, e.g. St. *Gregory of Nazianzus and St. *Augustine, it was a state of life which was consequent on the Fall; acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas it was a chastisement. It has been admitted as, theoretically, not contrary to the natural law by later theologians such as L. *Lessius and J. De *Lugo, if arising from contract, birth, in punishment for a crime or as the result of a just war. It is now generally condemned on account of the almost inevitable abuses accompanying it and of its opposition to the spirit of the Gospel.

J. K. Ingram, A History of Slavery and Serfdom (1895); G. MacMunn, Slavery through the Ages (1938); C. W. W. Greenidge, Slavery (1958), and other works of this author. A. Katz, Christentum und Sklaverei (Vienna, [1926]). A. Rivière, L'Église et l'esclavage (1846); P. Allard, Les Esclaves chrétiens, depuis les premiers temps de l'Église jusqu'à la fin de la domination romaine en Occident (1876); H. Wallon, Histoire de l'esclavage dans l'antiquité (3 vols., 1879); T. *Zahn, Skizzen aus dem Leben der alten Kirche (1894), ch. 2, 'Sklaverei und Christentum in der alten Kirche', pp. 62–105. W. L. Westermann, The Slave Systems of Greek and Roman Antiquity (Philadelphia, 1955), esp. chapter 23, 'Upon Slavery and Christianity', pp. 149–59, with reff. J. Höffner, Christentum und Menschenwürde. Das Anliegen der spanischen Kolonialethik im goldenen Zeitalter (Trier, 1947). T. Clarkson, The History of the Rise, Progress, and Accomplishment of the Abolition of the African Slave-Trade by the British Parliament (2 vols., 1808; new edition with prefatory remarks on the subsequent abolition of slavery, 1839); W. L. Mathieson, British Slavery and its Abolition 1823–1838 (1926); id., British Slave Emancipation 1838–1849 (1932); id., Great Britain and the Slave Trade 1839–1865 (1929); R. Coupland, The British Anti-Slavery Movement (H.U.L., 1933); R. Anstey, The Atlantic Slave Trade and British Abolition 1760–1810 (1975); Christine Bolt and S. Drescher (edd.), Anti-Slavery, Religion, and Reform. Essays in Memory of Roger Anstey (Folkestone, 1980). For the history of the abolition of slavery in the British Empire see also lives of W. Wilberforce, &c. J. D. Dutilleul in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 457–520, s.v. 'Esclavage', with bibl.; L. D. Agate in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 601–12, s.v. 'Slavery, Christian', with bibl.

SLAVONIC BOOK OF ENOCH, The. See Enoch, Books of.

SLEIDANUS, JOHANNES (1506–56), annalist of the German Reformation. Born at Schleiden near Aachen, he studied classics at Liège and *Cologne and jurisprudence at *Paris and Orléans. Adopting Protestant views (exact date unknown) of a *Calvinist type, in 1536 he entered the service of the Bellay brothers, who were in correspondence with the *Schmalkaldic League, and in 1540–1 he was employed in diplomatic missions for the French crown. In 1544 M. *Bucer persuaded *Philip of Hesse to appoint him historiographer of the Reformation. When war interrupted his work, *Edward VI at T. *Cranmer's intercession gave him a stipend in England (1551). But he soon returned to the Continent, where he represented a group of S. German cities at the Council of *Trent (1551–2) and took part in the negotiations of the German Protestants with Henry II of France in 1552. In 1554 he was appointed Prof. of Law at Strassburg, where he completed his De Statu Religionis et Reipublicae Carolo V Caesare Commentarii (2 vols. [Strassburg], 1555; Eng. trans. by J. Daws, 1560). Its large collection of documents makes it the chief contemporary source for the period, though its author's impartiality met with little favour from his contemporaries, Protestant or Catholic. His other works include a Latin version of Bucer's Shorter Catechism (1544).

Briefwechsel ed. H. Baumgarten (Strassburg, 1881). Id., Über Sleidans Leben und Briefwechsel (1878); W. Friedensburg, Johannes Sleidanus (Leipzig, 1935), with reff. G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 443–7, s.v., with bibl. to date. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, ii (1935), pp. 279–81 (Nos. 20151–78).

SLESSOR, MARY (1848–1915), missionary of the *United Presbyterian Church. Born in Aberdeen, she spent her early life in work in a factory. In 1875 she offered herself for service in Africa to the Foreign Missions Board of her Church, and the next year sailed for the Calabar coast of West Africa. Here she gained great influence with the native population, not least in successfully bringing to an end many tribal abuses (twin murder, human sacrifice, witchcraft, cruelty). In 1905 the Government, recognizing her authority, invested 'Ma Slessor' (as she was popularly called) with the powers of a magistrate, which she continued to exercise until her death.

Life by W. P. Livingstone (London, 1915). B. O'Brien, She had a magic. The story of Mary Slessor (1958); Carol Christian-Gladys Plummer, God and one Redhead. Mary Slessor of Calabar (1970).

SMALKALDIC ARTICLES, LEAGUE. See Schmalkaldic Articles, League.

SMART, PETER (1569–c. 1652), *Puritan iconoclast. Educated at *Westminster School and at Broadgates Hall and *Christ Church, Oxford, he was appointed Headmaster of *Durham Grammar School in 1598. In 1609 he became prebendary of *Durham Cathedral, where in 1614 he was promoted to the fourth stall. He strongly resisted the introduction by Richard Neile, Bp. of Durham (1617–28), of High Church ornaments into Durham cathedral and on 27 July 1628 preached a violent sermon against J. *Cosin, one of the chief promoters of the advanced ceremonial, which was published as The Vanity and Downfall of Superstitious Popish Ceremonies (1628). Smart was at once brought before the *High Commission of *York and on 2 Sept. suspended. Early in 1629 the case was removed to the Southern High Commission, but it was referred back to York in 1630, and in 1631 Smart was degraded, fined £500, and, on refusing to pay, imprisoned. He remained in custody until 1641, when the Long Parliament declared his imprisonment void, ordered the prosecution of Cosin and restored Smart to his preferments. In 1643 he took the *Solemn League and Covenant. In his last years he was given various sequestered benefices.

G. W. Kitchin, Seven Sages of Durham (1911), pp. 97–132. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lii (1897), p. 392 f.; L. Pullan in D.E.C.H., p. 560 f., s.v.

'SMECTYMNUUS'. The professed writer of a book publd. in March 1641 to defend the *Presbyterian theory of the Christian ministry in reply to Bp. J. *Hall's Humble Remonstrance. The name was made up of the initials of its five real authors, viz. Stephen Marshall, Edmund *Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, and William Spurstow. The form 'Smectymnuan' was used both of the actual composers of the treatise and of others who accepted its views. On its publication J. Hall replied with a Defence of that Remonstrance, while in May 1641 J. *Milton, who had prob. had a hand in the orig. Smectymnuan work, defended 'Smectymnuus' in Of Reformation touching Church Discipline in England and the Causes that hitherto have hindered it.

SMITH, BERNARD (c. 1630–1708), usually called 'Father Smith', organ-builder. He was a native of Germany (his original name was Schmidt) who before 1660 came to England, where he was appointed organ-maker in ordinary to *Charles II. In 1660 he built a new organ for *Westminster Abbey and in 1664 one for *Wells Cathedral, followed by others. In 1676 he became organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, where he had installed an organ in 1675. In 1680 he finished the instrument for *Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1685 that for *Durham Cathedral. In the same year his organ, built in competition with Renatus Harris, was accepted by the Temple Church, and in 1694 he was entrusted with that of *St. Paul's Cathedral, which was installed in 1697, after dissensions with C. *Wren over its position and the size of its case. His last work was the organ for Trinity College, Cambridge, which was uncompleted at his death. His organs, of which more than forty existed, are famous for the quality of their material and their purity of tone.

A. Freeman, Father Smith, otherwise Bernard Schmidt (1926).

SMITH, GEORGE ADAM (1856–1942), OT scholar. Born at Calcutta and educated at Edinburgh, *Tübingen, and Leipzig, he became minister of Queen's Cross Free Church, Aberdeen, in 1882, professor of OT at the United Free Church College at Glasgow in 1892 and Principal of the university of Aberdeen in 1909. He travelled extensively in Egypt, Syria and Palestine. His writings include The Book of Isaiah (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1888–90); Historical Geography of the Holy Land (1894, 25th ed. 1931, still unsurpassed); The Twelve Prophets (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1896–7); *Life of Henry Drummond (1898); Jerusalem (2 vols., 1907); The Early Poetry of Israel (Schweich Lectures, 1912); Deuteronomy (Cambridge Bible, 1918); and Jeremiah (1923).

Lilian Adam Smith, George Adam Smith. A Personal Memoir and Family Chronicle (1943). W. Manson in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 792–4.

SMITH, JOHN (c. 1554 – 1612), the 'Se-Baptist'. See Smyth, John.

SMITH, JOHN (1618–52), *Cambridge Platonist. He was educated in the *Puritan foundation of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where B. *Whichcote was his tutor. In 1644 he was transferred to Queens' College and here lectured. Under the influence of Whichcote and the study of *Plato and *Plotinus he became one of the leading Cambridge Platonists, upholding spiritual religion against the acrimonious theological disputes of his age. His work was cut short by his early death. S. *Patrick, a warm admirer, preached his funeral sermon.

His Select Discourses, ed. John Worthington (London, 1660), with a sermon preached at his funeral and a short account of his life and death by Simon Patrick, pp. 483–526; ed. 4 revised by H. G. Williams (Cambridge, 1859). J. *Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century, ii (1872), pp. 121–92; F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists. A Study (1926), ch. iii, pp. 87–109. J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, iii (1911), pp. 630–7.

SMITH, WILLIAM ROBERTSON (1846–94), Scottish theologian and Semitic scholar. Educated at Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Bonn, and Göttingen, he became professor of oriental languages and OT exegesis at the Free Church College, Aberdeen, in 1870. In 1875 he was made a member of the company for the RV of the OT. About the same time his articles in the 9th edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica began to appear, and henceforward Smith was in the centre of the storm provoked by the Higher Criticism of the OT. His writings having been severely criticized by a committee of the General Assembly of the Free Church as undermining belief in the inspiration of the Bible, in 1881 he was removed from his chair. He spent the rest of his life at Cambridge, where he was elected in 1885 a Fellow of Christ's College. Of his two celebrated books, The OT in the Jewish Church (1881) and The Prophets of Israel (1882; ed. 2, by T. K. *Cheyne, 1895), both series of lectures, the former popularized among English readers J. *Wellhausen's theory of the structure and date of the Pentateuch and of the development of the Israelite religion; the latter work expounded on this basis the life and teaching of the early prophets. Later Smith extended his researches into the whole field of Semitic religion. Through The Religion of the Semites (1889; ed. 3, by S. A. *Cook, 1927) his thesis that the original leading idea in sacrifice was that of communion with the Deity rather than propitiation became widely known and accepted, though it is now generally recognized to be an over-simplification.

Collection of his Lectures and Essays (mainly unpubl.) ed. J. S. Black–G. Chrystal (London, 1902). Idd., The Life of William Robertson Smith (1912). J. S. Black in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 160–2, s.v.

SMITHFIELD, in London, originally Smoothfield. The place was noted formerly as the site of executions, esp. during the Reformation period, when in the 'fires of Smithfield' during *Mary Tudor's reign about 300 heretics were burned there. It is now famous as a meat market.

SMYTH, or SMITH, JOHN (c. 1554 – 1612), the 'Se-Baptist' and reputed founder of the *General Baptists. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was afterwards a Fellow, he was ordained in the C of E. He became a *Puritan preacher at *Lincoln (1603–5) and later *Separatist pastor in Gainsborough (1606). He led a company of exiles to Amsterdam c. 1608 and there, after baptizing himself (hence the name Se-Baptist), established in 1609 the first modern *Baptist Church. He styled his community 'The Brethren of the Separation of the Second English Church at Amsterdam'. Membership consisted of such as had confessed their faith in baptism. From now onwards Smyth passed increasingly under *Mennonite influence. He died in Amsterdam in 1612. In the same year a company of his associates returned to London to establish the first Baptist Church in Great Britain. Among Smyth's writings were A True Description out of the Word of God of the Visible Church (1589), A Pattern of True Prayer (1605; on the *Lord's Prayer), and The Differences of the Churches of the Separation (1608).

Collected ed. of his works by W. T. Whitley (Tercentenary ed. for the Baptist Historical Society, 2 vols., Cambridge, 1915), with life, vol. i, pp. xvii–cxxii. T. Cooper in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 68–70, with further reff.

SOBORNOST. A Russian term with no exact English equivalent. It signifies (1) 'catholicity' (the word soborny is used in Slavonic to translate 'catholic' in the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed); (2) 'conciliarity' (the word sobor in Russian means 'assembly' or 'council'). In modern Russian theology (e.g. of A. S. *Khomiakoff and S. *Bulgakov), the word denotes primarily the unity of many persons within the organic fellowship of the Church. In this unity each member retains his full freedom and personal integrity, while at the same time sharing in the common and corporate life of the whole. Russian writers claim 'sobornost' as a special characteristic of the Orthodox Church, contrasted with the emphasis on juridical authority in the RC Church and the excessive individualism of the Protestant communions.

SOCIALISM, Christian. See Christian Socialism.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE. See S.P.C.K.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL. See S.P.G.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS. See Friends, Society of.

SOCIETY OF JESUS. See Jesuits.

SOCIETY OF ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST ('S.S.J.E.'). The Anglican society of mission priests and laymen, popularly known as the '*Cowley Fathers'. It was founded in 1865 by R. M. *Benson, then vicar of St. James's, Cowley, and is thus the oldest Anglican community for men religious. While a life of prayer under the monastic vows is its first object, the society is also occupied in missionary and educational works. It is now constituted in three congregations—English, American and Canadian—each with its own superior and chapter, and there are houses in Oxford, London, Cambridge, Boston (Mass.), and Bracebridge (Ontario).

H. E. W. Slade, S.S.J.E., A Work Begun. The Story of the Cowley Fathers in India, 1874–1967 (1970).

SOCINIANISM. See the following entry, and Unitarianism.

SOCINUS. The Latinized name of two Italian religious teachers, uncle and nephew.

(1) LELIO FRANCESCO MARIA SOZINI (1525–62), a native of Siena, came of a cultivated family. He was educated by his father, Mariano Sozini, junior (1482–1556), himself a jurist, at *Bologna, to be a lawyer. Finding that his real interests were in theology he made his way to Venice, then the headquarters of Protestantism in Italy. In 1547 he came also under the influence of Camillo, a Sicilian mystic of liberal views, at Chiavenna. Between 1547 and 1550 he was received by the Reformers in several countries (Switzerland, France, England, and Holland), and from 1548 to 1550 settled in Switzerland. Later he visited *Wittenberg, where for a time he was the guest of P. *Melanchthon, and later Poland. Changed political conditions in 1552 drew him back to Italy, where he endeavoured to win his nephew (see below) over to his beliefs. Early in 1554 he left Italy again for Switzerland. At Geneva, where he made the acquaintance of J. *Calvin, he was challenged on the doctrine of the Trinity; he satisfied H. *Bullinger, but reserved to himself the right to further inquiry. His surviving writings include a Confession of Faith (1555) and De Sacramentis Dissertatio (1560). He died at Zürich.

(2) FAUSTO PAOLO SOZZINI (1539–1604; he spelled his name with two z's), nephew of the preceding, was also a native of Siena. His early education was neglected. In 1562 he published a work on St. John's Gospel, denying the essential divinity of Christ; by 1563 he had rejected the natural immortality of man. From 1565 to 1575 he was in the service of Isabella de' Medici, daughter of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, where he conformed, at least outwardly, to Catholicism. After a period of theological study and discussion at Basle, where he wrote De Jesu Christo Servatore (1578) against the Evangelical teaching of the Reformers, he made his way to Klausenburg in Transylvania in 1578, in the hope that his liberal teachings would be welcomed under the anti-Trinitarian ruler, John Sigismund. In fact his services were enlisted to moderate the extreme anti-Trinitarianism of the Bishop, Francis David (1510–79). In 1579 he passed to Poland, where he spent the rest of his life and did much to spread moderate *Unitarian doctrines among the upper classes. But when he acknowledged the authorship of some of his anonymous writings, the masses revolted against him and on Ascension Day, 1598, he was forced to flee from Cracow. He spent his last years at Luclawice. See also Racovian Catechism and Unitarianism.

(1) C. F. Illgen, Vita Laelii Socini (Leipzig, 1814); E. Burnat, Lelio Socin (Vevey, 1894). J. A. Tedeschi (ed.), Italian Reformation Studies in honor of Laelius Socinus (Florence, 1965), esp. pp. 215–41 ('Four Letters from the Socinus–Calvin Correspondence' tr. and ed. R. Lazzaro, and D. Willis, 'The Influence of Laelius Socinus on Calvin's Doctrines of the Merits of Christ and the Assurance of Faith').

(2) The works of Faustus Socinus [ed. by his grandson, Andreas Wiszowaty] (Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum quos Unitarios vocant i et ii, Amsterdam, 1656), with life written by Samuel Przipcovius in 1636 prefixed to vol. i [no pagination]; this life was repr., with Eng. annotations by 'E. S.' (Manchester, 1912). G. Pioli, Fausto Socino. Vita, opere, fortuna (Modena, 1952). Other modern studies by D. M. Cory (Boston, Mass., 1932), L. Chmaj (Warsaw, 1963), and Magda Martini, Fausto Socino et la pensée socinienne (Paris [1967]).

On the two Socini, L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2326–34, s.v. 'Socinianisme'; M. Bendiscioli in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 874–6, s.v. 'Socini (Sozzini), Lelio e Fausto'. See also bibl. to Unitarianism.

SOCRATES (c. 380–450), 'Scholasticus', Greek Church historian. He was a native of *Constantinople, where he became a lawyer (σχολαστικός). His Church History, in seven Books, each covering the life of one of the Emperors, was designed as a continuation of *Eusebius's treatise and extends from the abdication of *Diocletian (305) to 439. It draws on *Rufinus and also on *Gelasius of Caesarea. After publishing it, Socrates became possessed of the writings of St. *Athanasius, which apprised him of Rufinus's historical blunders, and he accordingly drastically revised the work. Only this later edition survives. For information about the ecclesiastical Councils he made extensive use of a collection of documents issued c. 375 by the *Macedonian, Sabinus of Heraclea. In general Socrates' history is objective and lucidly written, but its treatment is rather colourless and the author has few theological interests. He shows a certain sympathy with the *Novatianists and gives special attention to events connected with Constantinople. See also Sozomen.

Ed. princeps by R. *Stephanus (Paris, 1544). An excellent ed. for its date by H. *Valesius (Paris, 1668); revisions by W. Reading (Cambridge, 1720; repr. J. P. Migne, PG, lxvii, 9–842) and R. Hussey (3 vols., Oxford, 1853). Hussey's text was repr. by W. *Bright (Oxford, 1878). A modern crit. text is badly needed. Eng. tr. by A. C. Zenos in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, vol. ii, 1890. F. Geppert, Die Quellen des Kirchenhistorikers Sokrates Scholastikus (1898). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 137–41. G. Loeschcke in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 481–6, s.v.; W. Eltester in P.W., 2te Reihe, iii (pt. 1; 1927), cols. 893–901, s.v.

SODALITY (Lat. sodalis, 'companion'). In the RC Church, a common designation for a guild established for the furtherance of some religious purpose by mutual action or assistance.

SÖDERBLOM, NATHAN (1866–1931), *Lutheran Abp. of *Upsala and chief promoter of the '*Life and Work' Movement. A native of Trönö, nr. Söderhamn, he studied at Upsala and was ordained in 1893. In the same year he published

The Religion of Luther (in Swedish), whose great admirer he was. In 1894 he was appointed chaplain to the Swedish legation in *Paris, where he pursued the study of comparative religion, esp. of *Zoroastrianism. In 1901 he became Prof. at Upsala, continuing to lecture in Paris from time to time, and from 1912 to 1914 he also held a lectureship at Leipzig. In 1914 he was appointed Abp. of Upsala despite the opposition of the more conservative elements in the Swedish Church. He was a prominent supporter of the reunion movement and the leading figure in the *Stockholm Conference (1925), his aim being to organize the practical co-operation of the Christian Churches esp. in social questions without consideration of doctrinal differences. His own theological beliefs were largely influenced by A. *Sabatier, A. *Ritschl, and other representatives of Liberal Protestantism.

Söderblom's religious outlook was essentially constructive, despite its challenge to the older orthodoxy. His sense of personal religion went deep. Of his books, only comparatively few have been translated into English. In The Nature of Revelation (1903; Eng. trans., 1933) he defended the position of 'Higher Criticism', maintaining that the scientific study of the history of religion will lead to a sure knowledge of God. He criticized here the dogma of the two natures of Christ as unacceptable for modern men and also formulated one of his leading ideas, viz. that God's Revelation is restricted neither to the Bible nor to the Church but continues in history throughout the ages. In his treatise Gudstrons Uppkomst (1914) he argued that the idea of holiness rather than the conception of God was at the basis of religion. Among his other works are Christian Fellowship (Eng. trans., 1923) and The Living God (1933; Gifford Lectures for 1931). He encouraged the liturgical movement in the Swedish Church and was also influenced by Catholic modernist authors such as A. *Loisy and F. *von Hügel.

Tal och Skrifter (5 vols., Stockholm, 1933). Lives in Swedish by T. Andrae (Uppsala, 1931), in Danish by M. Neiiendam (Copenhagen, 1933). Brief sketch by Y. Brilioth prefixed to Söderblom's (posthumous) Gifford Lects. (1933). P. Katz, Nathan Söderblom. Ein Führer zu kirchlicher Einheit (1925; Eng. tr. with additions, 1949); J. G. H. Hoffmann, Nathan Soederblom. Prophète de l'œcuménisme (Geneva, 1948); E. Ehnmark, Religionsproblemet hos Nathan Söderblom (Lund [1949]); B. Sundkler, Nathan Söderblom. His Life and Work (1968). N. Karlström in Ruth Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 519–42.

SODOM AND GOMORRAH. Acc. to Gen. 19. 24 f. two of the 'Cities of the Plain' (prob. S. of the *Dead Sea) which were destroyed by fire from heaven for their wickedness. The Lord proclaimed that in the Day of Judgement even more severe punishment would be meted out to cities which rejected the Gospel than to Sodom and Gomorrah (Mt. 10. 15).

M. G. Kyle, Exploration at Sodom. The Story of Ancient Sodom in the Light of Modern Research (popular; [1928]). On the question of the location of Sodom, F. M. Abel, O.P., 'Histoire d'une controverse' in R. Bibl., xliii (1931), pp. 388–400, with reff. to earlier lit.; cf. also other artt. by the same author in earlier numbers of the review; M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., 'Le Site de Sodome d'après les textes', ib., xliv (1932), pp. 489–514; F. C. Clapp, 'The Site of Sodom and Gomorrah' in American Journal of Archaeology, New Series, xl (1936), pp. 323–44, also with reff.; J. P. Harland, 'Sodom and Gomorrah' in Biblical Archaeologist, v (1942), pp. 17–32, and vi (1943), pp. 41–54. G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25, 1931), pp. 504–10; W. F. Albright, The Archaeology of Palestine and the Bible (1932), pp. 133–7.

SODOR AND MAN. The present Anglican diocese of Sodor and Man consists of the Isle of Man. The original diocese of Sodor (from 'Sudreys', i.e. Southern Isles, as distinct from the Northern Isles of Orkney and Shetland), which seems to date from the time of *Edward the Confessor (d. 1066), included, besides the Isle of Man, the Hebrides and other islands west of Scotland. In early days it was probably suffragan to *York, but when in 1152 Nicolas Breakspear (the future Pope *Hadrian IV), organized the Norwegian Church at the Council of Nidaros, Sodor became a suffragan see to Nidaros (Trondhjem). The Scottish islands were detached in 1334. Since 1542 the diocese of Sodor has been in the province of York, but it has its own *Convocation. The termination 'and Man' was apparently added in error by a 17th cent. legal draughtsman. The Prayer Book was issued in Manx in 1765, the Bible in 1772. In 1895 a *chapter was constituted with four canons, the bishop being dean. The bishop, who is a member of the Upper House of the Tynwald in the Isle of Man, has no seat in the House of Lords. Of the bishops of Sodor and Man the most renowned is the saintly T. *Wilson (bishop 1698–1755). The cathedral (in ruins), dedicated to St. *Germanus, stands on St. Patrick's Isle (now united to the mainland), near Peel.

The principal source for the early history of the Isle of Man is the Chronica Regum Manniae et Insularum (ed. P. A. Munich, Manx Society, xxii and xxiii; 1874, with Eng. tr.); facsimile ed. from Cod. Julius A. VI in Brit. Mus. (Douglas, 1924). W. Harrison (ed.), The Old Historians of the Isle of Man: Camden, Speed, Dugdale, Cox, Wilson, Willis and Crosse (Manx Society, xviii; 1871). A. W. Moore–J. Rhŷs (edd.), The Book of Common Prayer in Manx Gaelic. Being translations made by Bishop Phillips in 1610, and by the Manx Clergy in 1765 (2 vols., 1895). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Man, Lichfield, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester and Bristol, i (1727), pp. 359–70. A. W. Moore, Sodor and Man (Diocesan Histories, 1893). Anne Ashley, The Church in the Isle of Man (St. Anthony's Hall Publications, xiii; 1958). P. M. C. Kermode, Manx Crosses (1907); E. A. Jones, The Old Church Plate of the Isle of Man (1907). E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 346–9, s.v. 'Man, Isle of, Church in'.

SOHM, RUDOLPH (1841–1917), jurist and Protestant Church historian. He taught law first at Göttingen, and later as Professor at Freiburg i.Br. (1880), Strassburg (1872), and Leipzig (1887). His chief theological works were Verhältnis von Staat und Kirche (1873), Kirchenrecht (vol. i, 1892; vol. ii, posthumously ed. by E. Jacobi and O. Mayer, 1923), and Wesen und Ursprung des Katholizismus (1909). In these and other writings he developed the view that, while the Church was wholly spiritual, law was wholly secular; hence the development of canon law ('Catholicism') was an abandonment of the primitive ideal of the Church, which was a fundamentally '*charismatic' body. Sohm also compiled a manual, Kirchengeschichte im Grundriss (1888; Eng. tr., Outlines of Church History, 1895). In recent years there has been considerable interest in the work of Sohm, especially in connexion with questions on the relationship of Church and State.

Festgabe für Rudolph Sohm (Munich, 1914). W. Lowrie, The Church and its Organisation in Primitive and Catholic Times. An Interpretation of Rudolph Sohm's Kirchenrecht (1904); critique of Sohm's theses in A. *Harnack, Ent- stehung und Entwicklung der Kirchenverfassung und des Kirchenrechts (1910; Eng. tr., 1910); O. Scheel, 'Zur urchristlichen Kirchen- und Verfassungsproblem' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, lxxxv (1912), pp. 403–57. H. Barion, Rudolf Sohm und die Grundlegung des Kirchenrechts (1931); E. Foerster, Rudolph Sohms Kritik des Kirchenrechtes (Haarlem, 1942). W. A. Hauck, Rudolf Sohm und Leo Tolstoi. Rechtsordnung und Gottesreich (Heidelberg, 1950), pp. 11–156. D. Stoodt, Wort und Recht. Rudolf Sohm und das theologische Problem des Kirchenrechts (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Reihe 2, xxxiii; 1962). A. Bühler, Kirche und Staat bei Rudolph Sohm (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, vi; 1965).

SOISSONS, Councils of. The two principal Councils are:

(1) 1092. The Council was convened by Raynaldus, Abp. of *Reims, against the *nominalist, *Roscellinus, who was accused of teaching *Tritheism. Roscellinus asserted that *Lanfranc and *Anselm, then abbot of Bec, shared his views; but the latter sent a letter to be read at the Council, denying the charge and professing the Catholic faith. Roscellinus was condemned by the Council and recanted, though he later declared that he had done so only through fear of the populace.

(2) 1121. The Council was held by the Papal legate, Conon, Bp. of Palestrina, in order to censure Peter *Abelard's work, 'Theologia Summi Boni'. Conceived as an attack on Roscellinus's Tritheistic teaching, it contained itself the opposite error of *Sabellianism. Abelard was not permitted to dispute about it, but forced to burn his book. Our information about the Council comes from the partisan account in Abelard's own 'Historia Calamitatum'.

(1) Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1695–1700; Mansi, xx (Venice, 1775), cols. 741–4. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 365–7.

(2) Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1103–6; Mansi, xxi (Venice, 1726), cols. 265–70. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 593–602. See also bibl. to Abelard, P.

SOLEAS (Gk. σωλέας). In the E. Church, the platform immediately in front of the *iconostasis, raised above the nave floor by one or more steps, and on the same level as the sanctuary.

SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT. The agreement between the Scots and the English Parliament in 1643. Its professed aims were the maintenance of the *Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the reformation of the Church of England, the uniformity of the Churches of the British Isles, the extirpation of popery and prelacy (i.e. episcopacy), the preservation of the rights of Parliaments and the liberties of the kingdoms, the defence of the King's just power and the suppression of the malignants who sought to divide him from his people. It was also a pact of mutual defence and a covenant of penitents with their God. The English Parliamentarians in their struggle with the Royalists were specially anxious for a civil league; the Scots emphasized the religious side of the agreement. It was formally accepted by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland on 17 Aug. 1643, and by the English Commons and the *Westminster Assembly on 25 Sept. 1643. Shortly afterwards, the proceedings of the Westminster Assembly took a pro-Presbyterian turn and for a time the English allies became nominal 'Covenanters'; but after the Scottish army had helped to turn the tide at Marston Moor (2 July 1644) and the rise of O. *Cromwell and the *Independents to power the Covenant became a dead letter in England. It continued longer, however, to be a living document in Scotland, where it was renewed in 1648 and subscribed by *Charles II in 1650 and 1651.

Text in Gee–Hardy, pp. 569–74 (No. cvii). See also bibl. to Westminster Assembly.

SOLEMNITAS (Lat., commonly rendered in English 'Solemnity'), the name given in the 1969 Calendar and subsequent liturgical documents of the RC Church to feasts of the greatest importance.

SOLESMES. The seat of a famous Benedictine monastery, dedicated to St. Peter, in the department of Sarthe, France. It was founded in 1010, but in modern times its history goes back to Dom Prosper *Guéranger, who settled there with five other priests in 1833. In 1837 *Gregory XVI constituted it an abbey and head of the French Benedictine congregation, with Guéranger as its first abbot. Under his influence it became, and has remained, a centre of the *Liturgical Movement in France, taking a notable part in the revival and development of liturgical music. After being several times ejected by force by the French Government, the monks were finally expelled from France under the anticlerical legislation in 1901, and for several years *Quarr Abbey in the Isle of Wight was their headquarters. They returned to Solesmes in 1922. Solesmes has numbered among its members many eminent scholars, notably Dom J. B. *Pitra (1812–89), Dom P. Cagin (1847–1923), Dom F. *Cabrol (1855–1937), Dom H. *Quentin (1872–1935), and Dom A. *Wilmart (1876–1941).

H. Quentin, O.S.B., Notice historique sur l'abbaye de Solesmes, suivie d'une courte description de l'église abbatiale et ses sculptures (Tours, 1924). J. Hourlier, O.S.B., Les Églises de Solesmes (1951). A. des Mazis, O.S.B., L'Entrée de Solesmes dans la Congrégation de Saint-Maur (Solesmes [1950]), and other works of this author. N. Rousseau, L'École grégorienne de Solesmes, 1833–1910 (Tournai, 1910). G. Cozien, O.S.B., L'Œuvre de Dom Guéranger (Solesmes, 1933; with illustrations of the Abbey). F. Cabrol, O.S.B., 'L'Œuvre historique et littéraire de Solesmes et de la Congrégation de France (1833–1933)' in Revue Mabillon, xxiii (1933), pp. 249–65.

SOLIFIDIANISM. The doctrine of *Justification by faith alone (sola fides), proclaimed by the Protestant Reformers against the medieval teaching of the merit of good works. It was orig. based on M. *Luther's translation of Rom. 3. 28 where he rendered πίστει by allein durch den Glauben ('only by faith').

SOLIPSISM (Lat. solus, 'alone', and ipse, 'oneself'). The philosophical belief that the individual self is the only existent and that all other selves are illusions. It is doubtful whether any philosopher has ever held this extreme form of theoretical egotism; its chief use in philosophical debate is to reduce opponents to absurdity. The word is less commonly applied to the doctrine that the self is the only object of real knowledge, without prejudice to the existence of other selves. Either doctrine is a particular form of 'Subjective Idealism'.

SOLOMON (d. c. 930 B.C.), King of Israel from c. 970 B.C. No such clear picture of his personality is to be found in the OT as we have of his father, *David, whom he succeeded. The impression made by the account in 1 Kgs. 1–11 is of an oriental despot, honoured for his wealth and wisdom and round whose name much legendary material has gathered. This reputation, which is responsible for the later attribution to him of the Books of *Proverbs, *Canticles, *Ecclesiastes, and the *Wisdom of Solomon, has probably coloured the history in 1 Kings. His reign marked the zenith of ancient Israel's prosperity and saw the organization of the kingdom on new lines. The *Temple, with the erection of which his name is esp. associated in subsequent history, was part of a grandiose building scheme intended to make Jerusalem a worthy capital for a kingdom which he determined should rank among the great powers. With such ends in view, he made a marriage alliance with the reigning Pharaoh and, by strengthening the friendly relations established by David with Hiram, King of Tyre, obtained from Phoenicia the skill and materials needed for his building schemes (5. 1–12) and also the experienced sailors to direct a short-lived naval experiment (9. 26–8). His other enterprises include a trade in horses with Egypt (10. 28–9), the fortifying of strategic cities (9. 15–19), and the establishment of a standing army (10. 26). But to finance his projects Solomon had to impose on his subjects a system of levies and forced labour, and the resulting discontent led, after his death, to the secession of the ten northern tribes under Jeroboam. In this the compiler of the Books of Kings saw Divine retribution for Solomon's apostasy in his later years, which is ascribed to the influence of his foreign wives.

The main discussions will be found in Histories of Israel and commentaries on 1 Kgs. F. Thieberger, King Solomon (1947). J. Garstang, The Heritage of Solomon (1934; on the sociology of ancient Palestine generally). J. Hornell, 'Naval Activity in the Days of Solomon and Rameses III' in Antiquity, xxi (1947), pp. 66–73. B. Porten, 'The Structure and Theme of the Solomon Narrative (1 Kings 3–11)' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xxxviii (1967), pp. 93–128, with extensive bibl. R. Flint in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 559–69; E. Lohse in T.W.B., vi (1964), cols. 459–65, s.v. Σολομών, with bibl.

SOLOMON, Odes of. This pseudepigraphical work contains forty-two short hymns of a lyrical character. Mention of it occurs in lists of Christian books from the 6th cent. onwards, but until the discovery (1908) by J. R. *Harris of a Syriac MS. containing the Odes and Psalms of Solomon, the only known fragments of it were (1) five of the Odes included in the Gnostic Pistis Sophia (where the Odes are treated as of almost equal authority with the Pss. of David) and (2) a short quotation in *Lactantius. The Greek text of Ode 11 is preserved in a *Bodmer papyrus. The Odes are perhaps a Christian adaptation of a Jewish work, but more probably wholly Christian in origin; and though containing thoughts and expressions which lend themselves to a Gnostic interpretation, they are not unorthodox. If Christian, they were almost certainly written in Syria or Palestine in the 1st (J. R. Harris) or 2nd (J. H. *Bernard) cent. A.D. It is disputed whether their original language was Greek or Syriac. In these Psalms, the terms used of '*Wisdom' in the Wisdom Literature are freely applied to Christ. Though there are few references to the Lord's life, the descent into Hades is described in some detail in more than one place; but the doctrine of the Holy Spirit is undeveloped and the word 'Church' nowhere occurs. One suggestion is that they were baptismal hymns, used ritually on the days of *Lent as part of the final preparation of catechumens for baptism.

Syriac text of Odes and Psalms of Solomon ed., with Eng. tr., by J. R. Harris (Cambridge, 1909; ed. 2, with facsimile, 1911); also ed., with facsimile of the whole MS., by id.–A. Mingana (Manchester, &c., 1916; Eng. tr. and notes, 1920). Greek text of 11th Ode ed. from Bodmer Papyrus XI by M. Testuz, Papyrus Bodmer X–XII (Geneva, 1959), pp. 49–69. Eng. tr. of Syriac, with notes, by [J.] R. Harris, An Early Christian Psalter (London, 1909), Further Eng. tr., with introd. and notes, by J. H. Bernard (Texts and Studies, viii, No. 3; Cambridge, 1912). W. Frankenberg, Das Verständnis der Oden Salomos (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., xxi; 1911). R. H. *Connolly, 'The Odes of Solomon: Jewish or Christian?' in J.T.S., xiii (1912), pp. 298–309. G. Kittel, Die Oden Salomos überarbeitet oder einheitlich? (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, xvi; 1914). J. A. Emerton, 'Some Problems of Text and Language in the Odes of Solomon' in J.T.S., N.S., xviii (1967), pp. 372–406. J. H. Charlesworth, 'Les Odes de Salomon et les manuscrits de la mer Morte' in R. Bibl., lxxvii (1970), pp. 522–49. H. Chadwick, 'Some Reflections on the Character and Theology of the Odes of Solomon' in P. Granfield–J. A. Jungmann (edd.), Kyriakon. Festschrift Johannes Quasten, i (Munich, 1970), pp. 266–70, with reff. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 160–8. W. Bauer in Schneemelcher, ii, pp. 576–8; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 808–10. J. Daniélou, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 677–84, s.v. 'Odes de Salomon'. Text ed., with Eng. tr., by J. H. Charlesworth (Oxford, 1973).

SOLOMON, Psalms of. Mention of this Jewish *pseudepigraphical collection of 18 Psalms occurs after the list of OT and NT Books in the catalogue at the beginning of *Codex Alexandrinus (A), as well as in later lists of canonical Books, but the Psalms had little influence on early Christian literature. Though extant only in Greek (and in a Syriac translation of the Greek), almost all scholars are agreed that they were written in Hebrew. Certain historical allusions indicate the date. A period of prosperity has been brought to an end by foreign invasion and the capture of Jerusalem; Jewish kings are condemned as usurpers; and the description of the invader seems most readily to apply to Pompey; thus the Psalms can be assigned with considerable confidence to the post-*Maccabean age and probably to the years 70–40 B.C. The Psalms depict the nation as divided into two classes, 'the righteous' (almost entirely the *Pharisees, to which party the author belongs) and the 'sinners' (the *Sadducees), while the writer sees in the catastrophes that have overcome his country Divine retribution for national sin. The last two Psalms are esp. significant as predicting the coming of a Messiah of the house of David who will cleanse Jerusalem, punish sinners, subdue the nations hostile to Israel and rule in righteousness.

Crit. ed. of Gk. text with Eng. tr. by H. E. *Ryle–M. R. James (Cambridge, 1891); also by O. von Gebhardt (T.U., xiii, Hft. 2; 1895). Gk. text also pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, iii (Cambridge, 1894), pp. 765–87, and in A. Rahlfs (ed.), Septuaginta, ii (Stuttgart [1935]), pp. 471–489. Syriac text first ed., along with that of the Odes of Solomon, with Eng. tr., by J. R. *Harris (Cambridge, 1909; ed. 2, with additions, 1911); also ed., with facsimile, [J.] R. Harris–A. Mingana (Manchester, &c., 1916, with Eng. tr. and notes, 1920). Gk. text also pr., with notes of main Syriac variations, Fr. tr. and comm., by J. Viteau (Documents pour l'Étude de la Bible, 1911). Eng. tr. and comm. by G. B. *Gray in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 625–52. W. Frankenberg, Die Datierung der Psalmen Salomos (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., i; 1896). K. G. Kuhn, Die älteste Textgestalt der Psalmen Salomos insbesondere auf Grund der syrischen Übersetzung neu untersucht (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, Folge 4, xxi; 1937). J. Begrich, 'Der Text der Psalmen Salomos' in Z.N.T.W., xxxviii (1939), pp. 131–

164. J. O'Dell, 'The Religious Background of the Psalms of Solomon' in Revue de Qumran, iii (1961–2), pp. 241–57. J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 390–6, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament 4', with further bibl.

SOLOMON, The Song of (also known as 'The Song of Songs' or as 'Canticles'), OT Book included among the *Hagiographa. It is prob. an anthology of love poems of varying length, ascribed to *Solomon and his beloved (the 'Shulamite') and their friends. The Book, however, must be much later than the time of Solomon; its vocabulary and place in the *Canon suggest that it may date from as late as the 3rd cent B.C., though some of the individual poems may be very much earlier. In the Hebrew Bible it is the first of the five *Megilloth and it was read by the Jews on the eighth day of *Passover.

From an early date Jewish and Christian exegetes alike have interpreted the Book allegorically. Indeed, apart from such interpretation it would be hard to justify its inclusion in the Canon. Rabbi *Akiba (d. 132) already protested strongly against a literal interpretation of its contents. In the *Talmud it is interpreted as an allegory of God's dealings with the congregation of Israel. Christian exegetes from St. *Hippolytus onwards have seen in it a description of God's relations with the Church or the individual soul; and it was already the subject of a commentary in this sense by *Origen. This interpretation became esp. congenial to a long succession of mystics, beginning with St. *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, and received classical form in St. *Bernard's 86 homilies on Canticles. Others who have interpreted the Book on the same lines include R. *Rolle, St. *Teresa of Ávila and St. *John of the Cross (esp. in his 'Spiritual Canticle'). Indeed among Christian interpreters *Theodore of Mopsuestia seems to have been alone until modern times in upholding a literal exegesis. This was revived in the 16th cent. by Sebastian *Castellio and the *Anabaptists and it is now very generally allowed that the original character of the work was erotic.

Commentaries by K. *Budde (K.H.C., xviii, on Song of Sol., Ruth, Lam., Eccles., Est., 1898, pp. 1–48), A. Harper (Camb. Bib., AV, 1902), G. C. Martin (Cent. Bib. on Prov., Eccles., Song of Sol., 1908, pp. 287–355), M. Haller (H.A.T., Reihe I, Bd. xviii, on Ruth, Song of Sol., Eccles., Lam., Est., 1940, pp. 21–46), H. Ringgren (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xvi/2, on Song of Sol., Lam., Est., 1958, pp. 1–37; ed. 2, on Prov., Eccles., Song of Sol., Lam., Est., 1967, pp. 257–93), W. Rudolph (K.A.T., xvii. 1–3, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Lam., 1962, pp. 73–186), G. Gerleman (Biblischer Kommentar (Altes Testament), xvii, on Ruth and Song of Sol., 1965, pp. 43–227), and E. Würthwein (H.A.T., Reihe I, Bd. xviii, on Ruth, Song of Sol., Eccles., Lam., and Est., ed. 2, 1969, pp. 25–71). M. Jastrow, The Song of Songs. Being a Collection of Love Lyrics of Ancient Palestine (1921; imaginative). W. H. Schoff (ed.), The Song of Songs. A Symposium (Philadelphia, 1924). A. Feuillet, P.S.S., Le Cantique des Cantiques. Étude de théologie biblique et réflexions sur une méthode d'exégèse (Lectio Divina, x; 1953). H. Riedlinger, Die Makellosigkeit der Kirche in den lateinischen Hoheliedkommentaren des Mittelalters (B.G.P.M., xxxviii, Heft 3; 1958); F. Ohly, Hohelied-Studien. Grundzüge einer Geschichte der Hoheliedauslegung des Abendlandes bis um 1200 (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft an der Johann Wolfgang Goethe-Universität Frankfurt am Main. Geisteswissenschaftliche Reihe, i; Wiesbaden, 1958). L. Krinetzki, O.S.B., Das Hohe Lied. Kommentar zu Gestalt und Kerygma eines alttestamentlichen Liebesliedes (Düsseldorf, 1964). H. H. Rowley, 'The Interpretation of the Song of Songs' in J.T.S., xxxviii (1937), pp. 337–63; id., 'The Song of Songs. An Examination of Recent Theory' in The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1938, pp. 251–76.

SOLOMON, Wisdom of. See Wisdom of Solomon.

SOLOVIEFF, VLADIMIR (1853–1900), Russian philosopher and theologian. After lecturing on philosophy at Moscow in 1875 and holding a post in the ministry of education at St. Petersburg from 1877 to 1881, he devoted himself entirely to writing. In 1873 he became an intimate friend of F. *Dostoievsky, on whose religious ideas he exercised considerable influence. Down to 1881 he shared the ideas of the religiously minded Slavophils, including their antipatny to the RC Church; but further study and the desire for visible unity led him to modify his attitude, and from that time he regarded the union of the Churches as the main task of Russia, desiring to conserve the characteristic values of E. and W. During this period he wrote a profound ascetical book on the spiritual foundations of life (1882–4) and carried on negotiations with Bp. J. G. *Strossmayer for reunion between the Orthodox and RC Churches. In 1889 he published La Russie et l'Église universelle in which he proclaimed his Catholic ideal. It met with violent opposition in Russia, and when forbidden by the Holy Synod to write on religious questions he confined himself to politics and philosophy. In 1896 he was received into the RC Church, but without abandoning his critical attitude.

In his philosophical and religious ideas he was strongly influenced by German thought, esp. G. W. F. *Hegel and the nature philosophers J. *Boehme and F. W. J. *Schelling. He sought to combine their pantheism with the Christian doctrine of the Incarnation. He admitted into his system, however, Gnostic elements and upheld the existence of a female principle, 'Sophia' or the world-soul. Solovieff also wrote fine religious poetry. His influence, esp. among the refugees from the 1917 Revolution, did much to turn the Russian intellectuals from their 19th cent. materialism and nihilism to a definitely religious and Christian view of the world.

Works publ. in 9 vols., St. Petersburg, 1901–3, and 10 vols., ib., 1911–14. Letters publ. ib., 4 vols., 1908–23. There are Eng. trr. of War and Christianity with introd. by S. Graham (London, 1915); War, Progress and the End of History, tr. by A. Bakshy (ib., 1915), with biog. notice by H. Wright, pp. vii–xii; The Justification of the Good, tr. by N. A. Duddington (ib., 1918); Plato, tr. by R. Gill (ib., 1935), with note by J. Lavrin, pp. 5–21; God, Man and the Church, tr. by D. Attwater (ib. [1938]); Lectures on Godmanhood, tr. by P. Zouboff (New York, 1944), with introd. pp. 11–77; The Meaning of Love, tr. by Jane Marshall (London, 1945); and Russia and the Universal Church, tr. by H. Rees (ib., 1948). There is also A Solovyov Anthology arranged by S. L. Frank, tr. by N. Duddington (1950), with introd. pp. 9–31.

M. d'Herbigny, Un Newman russe. Vladimir Soloviev (1911; Eng. tr., 1918). D. Strémooukoff, Vladimir Soloviev et son œuvre messianique (1935). F. Muckermann, S.J., Wladimir Solowiew (Olten, 1945). L. Müller, Solovjev und der Protestantismus (Freiburg, 1951); id., Das religionsphilosophische System Vladimir Solovjevs (1956); E. Munzer, Solovyev. Prophet of Russian–Western Unity (posthumously publd., 1956). Edith Klum, Natur, Kunst und Liebe in der Philosophie Vladimir Solov'evs (Slavistische Beiträge, xiv; 1965). A. Paplauskas-Ramunas, Dialogue entre Rome et Moscou. Vladimir Soloviev, porte-parole du mouvement œcuménique en Russie (Ottawa, 1966). K. Pfleger, Geister die um Christus ringen (1934; Eng. tr., 1936), ch. 7 (pp. 223–265 of Eng. tr.); N. Zernov, Three Russian Prophets (1944), pp. 116–51.

SOMASCHI, The. An order of clerks regular in solemn vows who follow the Rule of St. *Augustine.

They were founded in 1532 by St. *Jerome Emiliani at Somasca in N. Italy to work among the poor and afflicted, and formally constituted by Pope *Pius V in 1568. They still flourish in Italy, where they conduct schools and orphanages.

L'ordine dei Chierici Regolari Somaschi nel IV centenario della sua fondazione (Rome, 1928). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 110–112, with reff. G. B. Pigata in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 952–954, s.v.; P. Bianchini in N.C.E., xiii (1969), p. 424 f., s.v.

SOMERSET, Duke of (c. 1506–1552), Protector of England. Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford (1537) and Duke of Somerset (1547), was a brother of Jane Seymour, third wife of *Henry VIII. From 1524 onwards he held a succession of offices in the royal household. He played an important part in the Scottish campaign of 1544, and in 1545–6 successfully commanded the English forces in France. The fall of the Howards left him the leading figure in the Council when his nephew succeeded as *Edward VI. As protector to the young King he pressed on the reforming cause in the English Church, while attempting to coerce the Scots into co-operation. The offence given by his liberal agrarian policy and his failure to repress the risings of 1549 contributed largely to his deprival of the protectorship in Jan. 1550 and his ultimate execution on a charge of conspiracy against his rival and successor, Warwick.

A. F. Pollard, England under the Protector Somerset (1900), with bibl.; W. K. Jordan, Edward VI: The Young King. The Protectorship of the Duke of Somerset (1968). A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., li (1897), pp. 299–310, s.v. 'Seymour, Edward', with notes on unpublished material. See further bibl. s.v. Edward VI.

SON OF MAN. In the NT, a title applied to Christ. With one exception (Acts 7. 56), it is found only in the Gospels and here always on the Lord's lips.

The uses of the term in the Gospels are frequently classified as: (1) passages where it refers unambiguously to Christ Himself, e.g. Mt. 11. 19 and Lk. 7. 34. In some other parallel passages one Gospel has 'I' or 'Me' (cf. Lk. 12. 8 and Mt. 10. 32; Mt. 16. 13, Mk. 8. 27 and Lk. 9. 18); (2) passages where it relates to the future suffering, death and resurrection of the Messiah, e.g. Mt. 17. 22, Mk. 8. 31, Jn. 3. 14; and (3) passages in which the Son of Man is to appear at the End (Doomsday), 'coming with the clouds of heaven' (Mk. 14. 62), with 'authority to execute judgement' (Jn. 5. 27). Some scholars have argued that in each case the Lord did not use the term of Himself, but of some other who should come.

The meaning of the phrase must be sought in its Jewish ancestry. There is some reason to think that in the popular Aramaic of NT times, it was simply used as a paraphrase for 'I'. In the Hebrew Bible the corresponding Hebrew expression is often a synonym for 'man', i.e. a human being (e.g. Num. 23. 19; Ps. 8. 4), and in Ezekiel (e.g. 2. 1) the Prophet is addressed by God as 'Son of man', perhaps emphasizing his humanity. This usage may be reflected in some passages in the Gospels (e.g. Mt. 8. 20). In Dan. 7. 13 (RV), however, the 'one like unto a son of man' seems to be some sort of angelic being, perhaps the Archangel *Michael, who represented the personification of Israel. On the basis of this passage, T. W. Manson and others have maintained that in the Gospels the word had a 'communal' sense and was indicative of the Messianic community. Some critics have held that the NT usage was influenced by the 'Son of Man' in the Similitudes of *Enoch, but since the relevant parts of this Book may well be later than the Gospels, it is equally possible that the influence was the other way round. Even more debatable are the attempts which have been made to connect the Son of Man with the Primal or Heavenly Man (Urmensch) thought to have figured in Oriental mythology.

In traditional exegesis of the Gospels the term 'Son of Man' is held to signify esp. the humility of Christ's incarnate manhood as contrasted with the majesty of His Divinity denoted by 'Son of God'. Similarly it is thought to emphasize His universalist role as 'son of Adam' in contrast with the narrow nationalist conceptions associated with the title 'Son of David'.

Important modern discussions include H. *Lietzmann, Der Menschensohn (1896); W. *Bousset, Kyrios Christos (1913), esp. pp. 1–27; D. Völter, Die Menschensohn-Frage neu untersucht (Leiden, 1916); Nils Messel, Der Menschensohn in den Bilderreden des Henoch (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., xxxv; 1922); J. M. Creed, 'The Heavenly Man' in J.T.S., xxvi (1924–5), pp. 113–36. C. H. Kraeling, Anthropos and Son of Man. A Study in the Religious Syncretism of the Hellenistic Orient (Columbia University Oriental Studies, xxv; 1927; esp. in ref. to the 'Anthropos' in Manichaean, Hellenistic and West Gnostic, Mandaean, and Jewish sources). T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus (1931), pp. 211–36. R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934), pp. 124–220 (Eng. tr., pp. 159–261). W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah (1943), esp. Appendix D ('The Heavenly Man Redemption Myth'), pp. 174–90. J. Y. Campbell, 'The Origin and Meaning of the Term Son of Man' in J.T.S., xlviii (1947), pp. 145–55. C. H. *Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (1953), pp. 241–9. V. Taylor, The Names of Jesus (1953), pp. 25–35. M. Black, 'The Son of Man Problem in Recent Research and Debate' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlv (1963), pp. 305–18. H. E. Tödt, Der Menschensohn in der synoptischen Überlieferung (Gütersloh, 1959; ed. 1963; Eng. tr., 1965). A. J. B. Higgins, Jesus and the Son of Man (1964). Morna D. Hooker, The Son of Man in Mark. A study of the background of the term 'Son of Man' and its use in St. Mark's Gospel (1967). F. H. Borsch, The Son of Man in Myth and History (1967). G. Vermes, 'The Use of בר נשא/בר נש in Jewish Aramaic' in M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts (ed. 3, Oxford, 1967), pp. 310–330. C. Colpe in T.W.B., viii (1969), cols. 403–81, s.v. υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, with extensive bibl.

SONG OF SONGS, The. See Solomon, The Song of.

SONG OF THE THREE CHILDREN, The. A short 'Book' of the *Apocrypha. In the *Septuagint and *Vulgate, where its 68 verses are treated as part of the canonical Book of *Daniel (into which they are inserted after Dan. 3. 23), the Song of the Three Children is part of the story of the three young Hebrew exiles thrown into the fiery furnace by Nebuchadnezzar. It consists of (1) the Prayer of Azarias, a petition for national deliverance, and (2) the canticle used in Christian worship under the name of the '*Benedicite'. Neither of these, however, apart from a single verse (66) in the Benedicite, seems to have any immediate relevance to the story of the three young men of Dan., and hence they are both generally supposed to have been written originally for some other occasion or occasions.

Gk. text in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, ii (ed. 1912), pp. 515–23. Eng. tr. and comm. by W. H. Bennett in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 625–37. W. H. Daubney, The Three Additions to Daniel. A Study (1906), pp. 17–99. C. Kuhl, Die drei Männer im Feuer (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., lv; 1930). W. O. E. Oesterley, An Introduction to the Books of the Apocrypha (1935), pp. 272–9. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4, 1909), pp. 453–8, with detailed bibl. to date (on the additions to Daniel). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 444–8, with further reff. J. T. Marshall in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 754–6, s.v. 'Three Children, Song of the'. See also RC commentaries on Daniel and bibl. to Benedicite and Apocrypha.

SONGS OF ASCENT or SONGS OF DEGREES. See Gradual Psalms.

SONGS OF PRAISE, a 'national' hymnal designed for the use of Christians of all denominations, first published in 1925. The General Editor was P. *Dearmer (1867–1936) and the Musical Editors Martin Shaw (1875–1958) and R. Vaughan *Williams (1872–1958). It aimed at an improved literary and artistic quality in the words, introducing many poems which had hitherto not found a place in hymnals. Theologically its standpoint was markedly liberal; considerable place was found for the social aspects of religion; and a high standard of musical taste was set. In 1931 it was superseded by a second edition in which the liberal element in the book was carried to a much greater extreme. Many of the hymns were altered, and sometimes rewritten, to eliminate expressions of dogmatic faith, esp. those concerned with the Atonement, and references to penitence, fasting, and the sterner side of Christian practice generally were removed. Though Songs of Praise continues to be used for interdenominational purposes, e.g. in schools, its use in Anglican churches has very largely ceased.

P. Dearmer, Songs of Praise Discussed. A Handbook to the Best-known Hymns and to Others Recently Introduced (1933), with notes on the Music by A. Jacob.

SOPHIA, St. See Santa Sophia.

SOPHRONIUS, St. (c. 560 – 638), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 634. His identity with Sophronius 'the Sophist' seems now beyond dispute. He was a monk first in Egypt (c. 580), later near the Jordan, and finally (from 619) at Jerusalem. From 633 onwards he was the chief opponent of *Monothelitism, then being defended by Cyrus, Patr. of Alexandria. He wrote extended Lives of the two Alexandrian saints, Cyrus and John, believed to have been martyred in the *Diocletianic Persecution, and some of his sermons, as well as several poems, have also survived. Shortly before his death he witnessed the capture of Jerusalem by the Saracens under Caliph Omar in 637. Feast day, 11 Mar.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvii (3), 3147–4014, with life repr. from AA.SS., 3125–46. Modern ed. of his 'Anacreontica' by M. Gigante (Rome, 1957). S. Vailhé, A.A., 'Sophrone le Sophiste et Sophrone le Patriarche' in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, vii (1902), pp. 360–85, and viii (1903), pp. 32–69 and 356–87. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 36–41; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 520 f.; H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 434–6. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2379–83, s.v. 'Sophrone de Jérusalem'; E. Peterson in E.C., xi (1953), col. 906 f., s.v. 'Sofrone', with full bibl. Study by C. von Schönborn (Paris, 1972).

SORBONNE. The most famous college of the old university of *Paris, originally known as the Collegium Pauperum Magistrorum. It was founded c. 1257 by Robert de Sorbon, confessor of St. *Louis, for the education of advanced students aspiring to the theological doctorate. Among its many benefactors was St. Louis himself, who gave part of the site. It was favoured by the Popes, and Clement IV granted it Papal approbation in 1268. The house was governed by a 'provisor', assisted by the 'bursars', to whom were added the 'socii' without a 'burse' and the 'hospites'. In addition to these were the 'beneficiarii', supported by the college to perform menial offices for the Fellows. The reputation of the Sorbonne, whose examinations were famous for their severity, soon became such that its membership was sought not only by most theological doctors of Paris but also by many otherwise prominent personalities. The college also came to be consulted on theological and even political questions from all parts of Christendom. From 1554 it was the regular meeting-place of the Theological Faculty, and from this date the name Sorbonne was popularly applied to this faculty. From the later Middle Ages the Sorbonne had favoured *Gallican tendencies, and in the 17th and 18th cents. it vigorously defended the '*Gallican Articles'. It opposed the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713), thus losing its influence with Rome, and also fought the *probabilist moral theology and the educational aims of the *Jesuits. On the other hand, it stoutly defended Catholic principles against the Reformation theology and the Rationalist philosophy of the 18th cent. The Sorbonne was suppressed in 1792, but re-established as the Theological Faculty of the university by Napoleon in 1808. Its professors and graduates, however, were obliged to subscribe to the Gallican Articles, a condition which drew away most theological students to *St.-Sulpice and the diocesan seminaries. The faculty was finally abolished in 1882, but the name 'Sorbonne' is still in general use for the modern University of Paris.

Important docc. in the Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis, ed. H. *Denifle, O.P.–A. Chatelain (4 vols., Paris, 1889–97). J. Duvernet, Histoire de la Sorbonne dans laquelle on voit l'influence de la théologie sur l'ordre social (2 vols., bound in one, 1790). O. Gréard, Nos Adieux à la vieille Sorbonne (1893), with docc. J. Bonnerot, La Sorbonne. Sa vie, son rôle, son œuvre à travers les siècles (1927). P. Glorieux, Aux origines de la Sorbonne (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, liii, liv, etc.; 1965 ff.), incl. text of Cartulary of the college in vol. 2. A. Franklin, La Sorbonne. Ses origines, sa bibliothèque, les débuts de l'imprimerie à Paris et la succession de Richelieu (1875). H. *Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, i (new ed. by F. M. Powicke–A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 507–9, with bibl. p. 497.

SORROWFUL MYSTERIES, The Five. The second chaplet of the *Rosary, consisting of (1) the Agony in Gethsemane, (2) the Scourging, (3) the Crowning with Thorns, (4) the Carrying of the Cross, and (5) the Crucifixion.

SOTERIOLOGY (Gk. σωτηρία, 'salvation'). The section of Christian theology which treats of the saving work of Christ for the world. It includes not only the doctrines of the *Atonement and of *Grace, but also (a) the doctrine of human nature as affected by the *fall and by *sin, which is the presupposition of Christ's work, and (b) the doctrine of man's final destiny as the result of that work (see Resurrection, Heaven, Hell).

SOTO, DOMINIC (1494–1560), *Dominican theologian. A native of Spain who was a student at Alcalá and at Paris, he entered the Dominican Order at Burgos in 1524. Here he taught in his convent for 7 years until appointed in 1532 to a chair of theology at Salamanca university. This office he continued to hold until 1545, when *Charles V chose him as Imperial Theologian for the Council of *Trent, where he ably expounded the *Thomistic teaching on grace and original sin. After spending some time in Germany as confessor to Charles V, in 1550 he returned to Salamanca, where he was elected in 1552 to the principal chair of theology in succession to Melchior *Cano. His writings include, besides his Summulae (a manual of logic, 1529), commentaries on *Aristotle (1544–5), on the Ep. to the Romans (1550), and on the Sentences (1557–60).

V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., Domingo de Soto. Estudio biográfico documentado (1961). A. M. Viel, O.P., 'Dominique Soto, 1494–1560. Étude historico-doctrinale' in Revue thomiste, xii (1904), pp. 151–66, and xiii (1905), pp. 174–93. F. Stegmüller, 'Zur Gnadenlehre des spanischen Konziltheologen Domingo de Soto' in G. Schreiber (ed.), Das Weltkonzil von Trient, i (1951), pp. 169–230. K. J. Becker, S.J., Die Rechtfertigungslehre nach Domingo de Soto (Analecta Gregoriana, clvi; 1967). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain. A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 171–4. V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2423–31, s.v.

SOUBIROUS, BERNADETTE. See Bernadette, St.

SOUL. No precise teaching about the soul received general acceptance in the Christian Church until the Middle Ages. The Scriptures are explicit only on the facts of the distinction between soul and body, the creation of the soul of the first man by the Divine breath, and its immortality. St. Paul's teaching on the existence in the human person of body, soul, and spirit (cf. 1 Thess. 5. 23) seems to imply a 'trichotomy' rather than the 'dichotomy' of body and soul of later times; but in his language he is not entirely consistent, and 'spirit' sometimes denotes the principle of supernatural life in contrast to the natural life of the soul, and on other occasions signifies the higher powers (intellect and will), as opposed to the lower faculties (emotions, &c.).

The indefiniteness of Scriptural teaching, in conjunction with the confusion in pagan philosophy where materialistic, pantheistic, and dualistic conceptions were held side by side, was reflected in the writings of the early Fathers. Thus *Tertullian, supporting his view by the material imagery of the parable of Dives and Lazarus, held the corporeity of the soul, an error from which even St. *Irenaeus does not seem to have been entirely free. *Origen, on the other hand, was led by his strongly *Platonist leanings to affirm its pre-existence and explained its confinement in a body as a punishment for sins committed in its previous incorporeal state. In the post-Nicene period these divergences largely disappeared. St. *Gregory of Nyssa and St. *Augustine found in the soul an image of the Trinity (Noverim Te, noverim me), and in *Nemesius and *Maximus Confessor the doctrine of the Schoolmen is already developed in its main aspects.

Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, who follows *Aristotle in his definition of the human soul, the soul is an individual spiritual substance, the 'form' of the body. Both, body and soul together, constitute the human unity, though the soul may be severed from the body and lead a separate existence, as happens after death. The separation, however, is not final, as the soul, in this differing from the angels, was made for the body. As it is purely spiritual, the soul is not, as *Traducianism affirms, a product of the generative, and therefore entirely material, powers of man, but each individual soul is a new creation of God, infused into the body destined for it ('Creationism').

This Scholastic teaching is that which has received the widest acceptance in the Christian Church. Among orthodox *Lutheran and *Calvinistic theologians, however, Traducianism has been commonly preferred to Creationism, as conforming more nearly with the Reformation tenet of the depravity of human nature. Modern Christian theologians tend to consider the doctrine of the soul not per se, but in relation to the whole Biblical doctrine of man.

SOURCE CRITICISM. See Higher Criticism.

SOUTER, ALEXANDER (1873–1949), NT and Patristic scholar. He was educated at Aberdeen and Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of the Latinist, J. E. B. Mayor. From 1903 to 1911 he was professor of NT Greek at Mansfield College, Oxford, and from 1911 to 1937 Regius Professor of Humanity (in succession to W. M. *Ramsay) at Aberdeen. He came to acquire an unrivalled knowledge of early Christian Latin. His works in the Patristic field include *A Study of Ambrosiaster (1905), an edition of the Pseudo-Augustinian Quaestiones Veteris et Novi Testamenti (C.S.E.L., 1908), and, most important of all, his identification of the text of *Pelagius' Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles, which he edited (Texts and Studies, 1922–1931). He co-operated with W. *Sanday in studies on the text of the NT. He also argued for a late date (370–420) for the Latin version of *Irenaeus. His valuable Glossary of Later Latin (1949) was published posthumously.

R. J. Getty, 'Alexander Souter, 1873–1949' in Aberdeen University Review, xxxiii (1950), pp. 117–24; repr. with expansions in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxviii (1952), pp. 255–68.

SOUTH, ROBERT (1634–1716), English divine. Educated at Westminster under R. Busby and at Christ Church, Oxford, he was for a time in sympathy with *Presbyterianism. In 1658, however, he secretly took Orders. He held a varied succession of offices, becoming Public Orator of Oxford (1660), domestic chaplain to Lord Clarendon (1660), Prebendary of *Westminster (1663), chaplain to the Duke of York (1667), canon of Christ Church (1670), and rector of Islip, Oxon (1678). His sermons, smart, witty, and often sarcastic, became exceedingly popular, but his outspokenness precluded him from higher preferment, though in 1713 he was apparently offered, but declined, the see of *Rochester. In 1689 he opposed the *Toleration Act and for a time hesitated before taking the Oath, and in 1710 he sided with H. *Sacheverell. For several years he controverted with vigour W. *Sherlock's dubiously orthodox teaching on the *Trinity, publishing in 1693 some Animadversions on Sherlock's Vindication (1690) and in 1695, in answer to a reply by Sherlock, Tritheism Charged (both anonymous).

South himself began the publication of his Sermons Preached on Several Occasions (Oxford, 1679; new edd., with further sermons, London, 1692, and 3 vols., ib., 1697–8). Posthumous works, Lat. and Eng., publd. 2 vols., London, 1717, incl. his will and memoir of his life and writings. The many later edd. of his sermons include five additional vols., London, 1744; also collected ed., 7 vols., Oxford, 1823. Selection of his writings under the title The Wisdom of Our Fathers [1867], with memoir, pp. v–xxiv. His sermon on 'Man Created in God's Image' repr. in D. Macleane (ed.), Famous Sermons by English Preachers (1911), pp. 120–34, with biographical introd., pp. 117–20. A. Gordon in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 275–7; W. H. *Hutton in D.E.C.H., p. 569 f., s.v.

SOUTH AFRICA, Christianity in. The first Christian missions to Africa south of the Zambesi river were Portuguese. Their effect on what is now S. Africa was very limited, and Christianity was really introduced by the Dutch, who began to settle in 1652. Though they were remarkably free from racial prejudices, and were willing to treat converts on a footing of equality, there was no organized mission. A *Moravian mission went to the Cape in 1737, but the authorities were suspicious and the mission was soon closed; it did not reopen until 1792. After that it grew rapidly and Moravian stations, complete and self-contained villages, became the pattern for many other missionaries. During the Napoleonic Wars the British twice occupied the Cape, and they retained the colony at the Peace of Paris (1814). Though they expelled two RC missionaries whom they found, many other agencies began work in this period. The *L.M.S. arrived in 1799 and provided many of the most famous missionaries, including the pioneers Robert *Moffat and David *Livingstone.

The character of Christian work in S. Africa during the past two hundred years has been determined by two principal facts. The existence of a large white community (though not large in proportion to the native population) caused the establishment and organization of a settled Church in many places, with duties other than those of missionary propaganda. And the immensity of the field, with the gradual opening up of communications, provided room for the missionary activity of religious bodies and societies from almost every part of W. Christendom. *Methodists arrived in 1814; under William Shaw (1798–1872) they established a thriving mission in the E. Cape and came to have the largest number of African adherents in the country. American, German, French, Finnish, Swiss, Scandinavian, Scottish and English Protestant missions have all been at work for varying periods. The *S.P.G., whose work is now partly merged with that of the Church of the Province, arrived in 1821.

The Great Trek (1837) resulted in the establishment in the Transvaal of the Hervormde Kerk, separate from the Dutch Reformed Church. A further separation led to the creation of a free Gereformeerde Kerk. The Dutch Reformed Church was subjected to considerable tensions not unlike those of the controversy surrounding Bp. J. W. *Colenso in the Anglican Church. It later experienced a renewal of missionary zeal as a result of the *pietistic revival led by Andrew Murray (1828–1917). During the second half of the 19th cent. there was a general expansion of missionary work; this in turn led to some overlapping and friction. French Protestants and RCs entered Lesotho. German missionaries began work in SW. Africa. RC missions particularly have grown since the latter part of the 19th cent., the Oblates of Mary Immaculate (founded 1816) playing a leading part.

This overlapping led to the creation of the first official *ecumenical organization in S. Africa, the General Missionary Conference founded in 1904. It was replaced in 1932 by the Christian Council of South Africa, which was, in turn, reorganized in the early 1960s and became the South African Council of Churches. In 1963 the Anglican, *Congregationalist, Methodist and *Presbyterian Churches established a federal theological seminary at Alice in Cape Province. Two years later the same Churches set up a Joint Unity Commission, with *Lutheran and RC observers, and this body was instructed to draw up a plan for union between the constituent bodies.

In recent times relations between the South African Churches and the state have attracted attention. The Dutch Reformed Church, whose theology is not incompatible with the ideology of 'separate development', left the *World Council of Churches after the Sharpeville crisis of 1960. The other Churches have all been more or less opposed to the policies of the state, and some leading Churchmen have been deported. The work of the Churches in education has been curtailed by government policy.

African Independent Churches have been more numerous in South Africa than elsewhere on the continent, perhaps because of racial tensions. There are thought to be some 3,000 of these bodies, many of them centred upon a messianic figure.

The Church of the Province of South Africa is an independent province of the Anglican Communion. It comprises 17 dioceses, with the archiepiscopal see at Cape Town, founded in 1847, with R. *Gray as its first bishop. The Province as a whole has been strongly influenced by the *Tractarian Movement, and religious communities, both of men and of women, are perhaps more active in South Africa than in any other Anglican province. An Alternative *Eucharistic Liturgy was approved by the Provincial Synod in 1919; a complete provincial Prayer Book was issued in 1954, and another Eucharistic Liturgy in 1975.

J. Du Plessis, A History of Christian Missions in South Africa (1911); G. B. A. Gerdener, Recent Developments in the South African Mission Field (1958). P. [B.] Hinchliff, The Church in South Africa (C.H.S., 1968). C. Lewis–G. E. Edwards, Historical Records of the Church of the Province of South Africa (1934). A. T. Wirgman, The History of the English Church and People in South Africa (1895); A. H. Baynes, South Africa (Handbooks of English Church Expansion, 1908); P. [B.] Hinchliff, The Anglican Church in South Africa. An Account of the history and development of the Church of the Province of South Africa (1963). Id., The South African Liturgy (Cape Town, 1959). Father Agathangelus, O.F.M. (ed.), The Catholic Church and Southern Africa (Cape Town, 1951), pp. 109–80; W. E. Brown, The Catholic Church in South Africa from its Origins to the Present Day (1960). G. B. A. Gerdener, Boustowwe vir die Geskiedenis van die Nederduits-Gereformeerde Kerk in die Transgariep (Cape Town, 1930). H. D. van Broekhuizen (ed.), Die Wordingsgeskiedenis van die Hollandse Kerke in Suid-Afrika, 1652–1804 (Amsterdam, 1922); A. Moorrees, Die Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk in Suid-Afrika, 1652–1872 (Cape Town, 1937). J. Whiteside, History of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa (1906). L. A. Hewson, An Introduction to South African Methodists (Cape Town, 1951). B. G. M. Sundkler, Bantu Prophets in South Africa (1948; ed. 2, 1961). Latourette, iii, p. 245 f.; v, pp. 319–81, with bibl. pp. 471–506 passim; and vii, pp. 224–30, with bibl. notes.

SOUTH INDIA, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 27 Sept. 1947 by the union of three religious bodies: (1) the (*Anglican) Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon, in respect to four of its dioceses, viz. Madras, Tinnevelly, Travancore and Cochin, and Dornakal; (2) the South India Province of the *Methodist Church; (3) the South India United Church, itself the result of a movement which brought *Presbyterian, *Congregational, and Dutch Reformed bodies into organic union in 1908 and was joined in 1919 by the Malabar District of the Basel Mission, which drew its foreign workers from Continental *Lutheran and *Reformed Churches. The Church of South India, which numbers somewhat over a million, is based doctrinally on the *Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888) and claims to be a united and visible Church, in which the Congregational, Presbyterian, and Episcopal elements are preserved. Though it is not yet wholly episcopal, there are provisions in the plan the outcome of which may be that at the end of an interim period of 30 years its presbyters will all be episcopally ordained.

The union was the fruit of negotiations which began at a historic conference at Tranquebar in May 1919, when the 33 participants (31 Indians, 1 American, and 1 Englishman, almost all ministers of varying denominations) determined to remedy the evils arising from divisions to Christian mission work in India. The 1920 *Lambeth Conference Appeal to all Christian People quickened hopes, and a Joint Committee of the three bodies concerned was set up. The challenge to traditional Catholic order in the proposed arrangement led to much controversy and many delays; but the 1930 Lambeth Conference gave general encouragement to the scheme, believing that Catholic principles would be sufficiently safeguarded. The scheme was later subjected to considerable revision, and in 1947, if one vote had been differently cast, the union would have been delayed. In the Nandyal district of S. India some 40,000 Anglicans refused to join the Church.

The 1948 Lambeth Conference gave the union a measure of qualified approval, and in 1955 a state of 'limited inter-communion' between the Church of South India and the C of E was approved by the Convocations of Canterbury and York. The Church of South India has subsequently been joined by other small groups, including the Basel Mission Council of Bombay-Karnatik in 1958 and two Presbyterian congregations from Bangalore in 1959. In 1962 the Synod approved the Book of Common Worship (publd. 1963), which contains orders for the Eucharist, Morning and Evening Prayer, *Occasional Offices and *Ordinal.

One of the fundamental principles of the formation of the Church of South India was the acceptance of ministers possessing congregational, presbyteral, and episcopal ordination into a united ministry, without requiring the re-ordination of any, combined with the introduction of an episcopate in the historic succession (in this case from Anglicanism) and its maintenance for the future, and the assurance that all future ordinations would be episcopal. In subsequent union negotiations in various parts of the world this principle has been advocated and in some cases accepted, but in most cases it has been rejected in favour of the imposition of hands by bishops on all the uniting ministers at the time of union. The experience of the Church of South India is held by its supporters to have shown that its method of uniting episcopal and non-episcopal ministers is a promising way forward; on the other hand it is professedly a practical expedient only and is dissociated from any positive theological view of episcopacy; for this reason it fails to satisfy many advocates of unity, especially when judged by traditional Catholic standards.

G. K. A. *Bell, Documents on Christian Unity (4 vols., 1924–58; Nos. 71–81, 139–43, 147, 204–8 and 267–74). B. Sundkler, Church of South India. The Movement towards Union, 1900–1947 (1954). [A.] M. Ward, The Pilgrim Church. An Account of the First Five Years in the Life of the Church of South India (1953).

SOUTH SEAS, Christianity in the. In 1776 a RC mission was sent by the Viceroy of Peru to Tahiti, but withdrew after a few months. The *L.M.S. sent out evangelists who started work in the Society Islands in 1796 and in Tahiti in 1797, and rapidly extended it. Among their pioneers were John Williams and James Harris of the New Hebrides, who both suffered martyrdom at Erromanga in 1839. The work of the L.M.S. in the area was more persistent and more widespread than that of any other society, but many other bodies have taken part in attempts to evangelize the South Sea Islanders. In 1822 the Wesleyan *Methodists sent their first missionaries to Tonga; they later went on to the Fiji Islands. In 1854 the control of this mission passed from the Methodists in Britain to those of *Australia. From 1848 onwards *Presbyterians came from Nova Scotia and Scotland, while in 1886 and 1887 two *Lutheran societies took up work in the German part of New Guinea. When French government action caused the L.M.S. to withdraw from the Loyalty Islands, the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society took over the work of providing for Protestants. For the missionary work performed by the *Reformed Presbyterian Church, see Paton, J. G.

RC missions entered the field in many places early in the 19th cent. The work was largely undertaken by the newer missionary orders, notably the Picpus Society or Fathers of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary (approved in 1817), who were given responsibility for work in Oceania in 1825, and the *Marists (q.v.). In 1835 the area was divided between the two orders, East Oceania being assigned to the Picpusians and West Oceania to the Marists. The Picpusian mission included the heroic work of Father *Damien in the leper colony at Molokai, Hawaii. The Hawaiian Islands were annexed to the United States of America in 1898 and created the 50th state of the Union in 1959; but for a long period most of the missionary work in that part of the Pacific had originated in the U.S.A.

Anglican work in the South Seas began under G. A. *Selwyn, appointed first Bp. of New Zealand in 1841. One of his disciples, J. C. *Patteson, first Bp. of Melanesia (1861), suffered martyrdom in 1871. The dioceses of Melanesia and Polynesia formed part of the Province of New Zealand until Melanesia became an independent Province in 1975. Together with Papua New Guinea (a Province since 1977) they comprise the South Pacific Anglican Council.

The task which confronted missionaries in the South Seas was one of the hardest in missionary history, from the difficulties of communication to the extreme savagery of the inhabitants, many of whom were cannibals; even to quite recent times missionaries have suffered martyrdom. Here, as elsewhere, during the present century there has been a marked diminution of hostility between Protestant and RC missionaries, which in the 19th cent. was aggravated by the support given by French naval power to RC missions; there have also been widespread attempts to transfer some of the leadership of the Churches to the native inhabitants. In the *ecumenical sphere notable events have been the foundation in 1943 of the Pacific Christian Literature Society, formed to prepare literature on an interdenominational basis, and the first Assembly of the Pacific Conferences of Churches in 1966.

J. Williams, A Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands (1837); J. Hutton, Missionary Life in the Southern Seas (1874). J. Colwell (ed.), A Century in the Pacific (1914), pt. iv, 'Missionary', pp. 409–585. E. S. Armstrong, The History of the Melanesian Mission (1900). J. W. Burton, Modern Missions in the South Pacific (1949). Ida Wench, Mission to Melanesia (1961). A. R. Tippett, Solomon Islands Christianity. A Study in Growth and Obstruction (1967). R. Lovett, The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795–1895, i (1899), pp. 117–474; N. Goodall, History of the London Missionary Society, 1895–1945 (1954), esp. pp. 352–411, and bibl. refs., p. 592; Latourette, v, pp. 198–263, with bibl. pp. 471–506 passim, and vii, pp. 192–9, with bibl. notes. J. L. Dunstan in S. [C.] Neill and others (edd.), Concise Dictionary of the Christian World Mission (1970), pp. 459–65, s.v. 'Pacific Islands'. [W.] N. Gunson, Messengers of Grace. Evangelical Missionaries in the South Seas, 1797–1860 (Melbourne, 1978).

SOUTHCOTT, JOANNA (1750–1814), religious fanatic. After beginning life as a dairy-maid to her father, she became a domestic servant. In 1791 she joined the *Methodist Society "by Divine command', and in the following year proclaimed that she was the woman of Rev. 12. She thereupon proceeded to 'seal' the 144,000 elect at a charge varying from 12 to 21 shillings, but when one was hanged for murder in 1809 no further 'sealing' was done. She had a habit of writing and sealing prophecies, and R. T. *Davidson, when Abp. of Canterbury, was constantly being requested to open a box said to contain them. When opened in 1927 (not by the Archbishop), its contents were found to include a woman's nightcap and a lottery ticket. Among her 60 publications were Prophecies announcing the Prince of Peace (1814), to whom she was to have given birth in 1814, and the Book of Wonders (1813–14). She died of brain disease.

Her own writings are the primary source for her life. General Index to the Writings of Joanna Southcott (London, [1805]). Life by D. Hughson (pseudonym of Edward Pugh, London, 1814; very critical). G. R. Balleine, Past Finding Out. The Tragic Story of Joanna Southcott and her Successors (1956). A. Seymour, The Express (2 vols., 1909; sympathetic). G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (1935), ii, pp. 1199–1201. A. Gordon in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 277–9, s.v., with further bibl.

SOUTHWARK. The Anglican diocese of Southwark was created in 1905, comprising the deaneries of Greenwich, Lewisham and Woolwich in Kent and the Parliamentary Divisions of East and Mid Surrey. In 1877 these deaneries had been taken away from the diocese of *Winchester and added to that of Rochester. Anthony Thorold (Bp. of Rochester 1877–91; Bp. of Winchester 1891–5) worked for the establishment of a separate diocese for South London and Surrey and for the restoration of St. Saviour's, Southwark, as the future cathedral for a new diocese. In 1905, through the efforts of E. S. *Talbot, the diocese of Southwark was created and Talbot translated from Rochester as its first bishop.

The priory of St. Mary Overie ('Overie' means 'over the water from the City of London') was founded in 1106, when it was served by *Augustinian canons. The church was severely damaged by fire in 1212. A new Gothic church was built during the next two hundred years, though a few traces of the Norman church can still be seen. In 1469 the roof of the nave collapsed and was rebuilt. The priory was surrendered to *Henry VIII in 1539, and it became the parish church of St. Saviour, Southwark. By 1815 the church had fallen into disrepair and much work was undertaken between 1818 and 1827. After the roof of the nave was found to be unsafe in 1831, it was removed and the walls were taken down, and in 1841 a new nave was completed. In 1890 the foundation stone was laid for the fourth nave to be built since the Conquest. When the diocese of Southwark was created the church became 'The Collegiate Church of St. Saviour and St. Mary Overie'. Lancelot *Andrewes, Bp. of Winchester, was buried in the church in 1626.

The RC diocese of Southwark dates from the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850; it was created an archdiocese in 1965.

W. Taylor, Annals of St. Mary Overy. An Historical and Descriptive Account of St. Saviour's Church and Parish (1833); F. T. Dollman, The Priory of St. Mary Overie, Southwark (1881); [W.] Thompson, History and Antiquities of the Collegiate Church of St. Saviour (St. Marie Overie), Southwark (1904); G. Worley, Southwark Cathedral. . . . A Short History and Description of the Fabric, with some account of the College and See (Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1905); T. P. Stevens, The Story of Southwark Cathedral [1922]; Florence [M. G.] Higham, Southwark Story (1955). Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England), An Inventory of the Historical Monuments in London, v. East London (1930), pp. 58–66.

SOUTHWELL. St. *Paulinus is said to have founded a collegiate church here c. 630. The present cathedral church of St. Mary the Virgin was begun in the reign of Henry I and has a fine Norman nave and transepts, and a 13th cent. *chapter-house. The early collegiate foundation developed into a college of secular canons, which was dissolved by *Henry VIII in 1540, refounded in 1585, and again dissolved in 1841. In 1884 the church became the cathedral of the new Diocese of Southwell, consisting roughly of the counties of Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. In 1927 the former was separated off when the Diocese of Derby was constituted. In 1935 the Diocese was transferred from the Province of *Canterbury to that of *York.

A. F. Leach (ed.), Visitations and Memorials of Southwell Minster (Camden Society, Second Series, xlviii; 1891); T. M. Blagg (ed.), Seventeenth Century Parish Register Transcripts Belonging to the Peculiar of Southwell (Thoroton Society, Record Series, i; 1903); A. H. Thompson (ed.), 'The Certificates of the Chantry Commissioners for the College of Southwell in 1546 and 1548' in Transactions of the Thoroton Society, xv (1900), pp. 63–158. W. D. Macray, 'The Manuscripts of Southwell Cathedral' in the Twelfth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix, Part ix (1891), pp. 539–52. W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi (pt. 3, ed. 1830), pp. 1312–23. W. Dickinson Rastall, A History of the Antiquities of the Town and Church of Southwell (1787). A. Dimock, The Cathedral Church of Southwell (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). A. H. Thompson, 'The Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Southwell' in Transactions of the Thoroton Society, xv (1900), pp. 15–62. J. C. Cox in V.C.H. Nottingham, ii, ed. W.Page (1910), pp. 152–61. G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), p. 582 f., s.v.

SOUTHWELL, St. ROBERT (c. 1561–95), poet and RC martyr. He was a native of Norfolk, educated by the *Jesuits at *Douai and *Paris, and entered the order in 1580 after a two-year novitiate. In 1584 he was ordained priest and made prefect of studies at the English College in Rome. In 1586 he was sent on the English mission. He first stayed with Lord Vaux of Harrowden and, though closely watched, gained many conversions through his piety and winning manner. In 1589 he became chaplain to Anne, Countess of Arundel, and established relations with her husband, imprisoned in the Tower. During his missionary activities he spent most of his time in hiding in London or in RC country houses, where he stayed in disguise and under assumed names. In 1592 he was betrayed by Anne Bellamy, the daughter of Richard Bellamy, a Catholic whom he had visited at Harrow. He was confined first at the gatehouse at *Westminster and later in the Tower. After three years of imprisonment he was hanged and quartered as a traitor. He was beatified in 1929 and was among the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales canonized in 1970. Feast day, formerly 21 Feb.

Collections of his verse were published immediately after his death entitled St. Peter's Complaint with other Poems and Maeoniae (both 1595). Among his prose treatises are An Epistle of Comfort, The Triumphs over Death, Mary Magdalen's Tears, and A Humble Supplication to Her Majesty, all written in 1591 and at first circulated in manuscript. They were designed esp. to encourage Catholics under persecution. His poems, most of which were probably written in prison, soon became popular with both Catholics and Protestants. They give utterance to deep religious feeling, though his vivid imagination led him to use extensively the fanciful conceits favoured by the poets of his time.

Southwell's Prose Works ed. W. J. Walter (London, 1828); Poems ed. A. B. Grosart ('The Fuller Worthies Library', London, 1872) and by J. H. McDonald–Nancy P. Brown (Oxford, 1967). His Spiritual Exercises and Devotions (Lat. text) first ed. by J. M. de Buck, S.J., with Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett (London, 1931). Modern ed. of An Humble Supplication to her Maiestie by R. C. Bald (Cambridge, 1953). Modern life by C. Devlin (London, 1956). Rose A. Morton, S.S.J., An Appreciation of Robert Southwell (University of Philadelphia thesis; Philadelphia–London, 1929). P. Janelle, Robert Southwell the Writer. A Study in Religious Interpretation (Paris thesis, Clermont-Ferrand; also London, 1935). J. H. McDonald, The Poems and Prose Writings of Robert Southwell, S.J. A Bibliographical Study (Roxburghe Club, 1937). S. Lee in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 294–9, with refs. to original sources. Further bibl. in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 421 f. and 685.

SOZOMEN (early 5th cent.), Salmaninius Hermias Sozomenus, Church historian. Little is known of his life beyond the facts that he was a native of Bethelia, nr. Gaza in Palestine, that he was educated by monks, and that, after travelling extensively, he settled at *Constantinople as a lawyer. Here he conceived the idea of continuing *Eusebius of Caesarea's 'Church History' down to his own day. His work, in nine Books, covers the period 323 to 425. He drew extensively upon his elder contemporary, *Socrates; his historical grasp was weaker, but he reports certain subjects, e.g. the spread of Christianity among the *Armenians, Saracens, and Goths, much more fully. Also, he had more sense of style than Socrates. Though orthodox in intention, he reveals little understanding of the issues at stake in the dogmatic controversies.

Text ed. by R. *Stephanus, H. *Valesius, and W. Reading, as for Socrates (q.v.). W. Reading's ed. repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxvii, 843–1630. Revision by R. Hussey (3 vols., Oxford, 1860). Modern crit. ed. of Sozomen by J. Bidez–G. C. Hansen (G.C.S., 1; 1960). G. Schoo, Die Quellen des Kirchenhistorikers Sozomenos (1911). P. *Batiffol, 'Sozomène et Sabinos' in B.Z., vii (1898), pp. 265–84. G. Loeschcke in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 541–7; W. Eltester in P.W., 2te Reihe, ii (pt. 1; 1927), cols. 1240–8; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2469–71, all s.v.

SPAIN, Christianity in. Spain was reached very early by Christian missionaries, acc. to tradition by St. *Paul (q.v.) and St. *James. *Prudentius (4th cent.) says that there were Spanish martyrs in all the ten great persecutions. Early Spanish councils are those of *Elvira (c. 306), Saragossa (380), and *Toledo (400). In the 5th cent. the *Arian Visigoths overran the land, but at the Third Council of Toledo (589) their king, *Recared, accepted Catholicism.

In the 8th cent. the Moslem Moors conquered Spain, and were only checked from entering the Frankish kingdom by *Charles Martel's victory at Tours (732). About 100 years later the persecution of the Christians of Spain began. The Christian reconquest, which began with the victory at Calatañazor in 1002, was completed only by the reduction of Granada in 1492. As the reconquest proceeded, French influences became increasingly felt, e.g. in church buildings and the founding of religious orders, esp. those of the *Cluniac reform; and as early as the 11th cent. the Roman rite nearly everywhere replaced the ancient *Mozarabic rite, which has lingered, however, until the present day at Toledo. The 12th cent. saw the arrival of the *Cistercians and the military orders, the latter gaining great influence in Spain. In the 13th cent. came the *Carmelites, *Dominicans, and *Franciscans.

The later Middle Ages were marked by the introduction of the *Inquisition. It was largely fostered by the civil power as a means of checking the Jews, whose numbers, wealth, and frequent intrigues with the Moors were causing alarm. In the *Great Schism Spain played a leading part on the side of the antipopes, until the time of the Council of *Constance (1415).

In 1492, after the union of the Crowns of Aragon and Castile and the expulsion of all professed Jews, the title of '*Catholic Majesty' was conferred by Pope *Alexander VI upon the King of Spain. Under the Emp. *Charles V, who was King of Spain from 1516 to 1556, the power of the country reached its height. Not only was its influence in Europe unparalleled, but it had won an Empire in the New World, equalled only by *Portugal. The adhesion of Spain to the Papacy in the conflicts of the 16th cent. thus became a political factor of the first importance, while the moderating influence of the Spanish bishops at the Council of *Trent did much to shape the *Counter-Reformation. It was an age of unparalleled mystics and spiritual writers (St. *Teresa, St. *John of the Cross, *Luis of Granada), who nevertheless faced ecclesiastical suspicion and hostility in their own day.

Political and religious liberalism appeared in Spain, under French influence, c. 1800. It has never come to terms with traditional Spanish attitudes, which in both spheres are strongly reactionary. The result has been a long period of unrest, war, and alternating extremes, and even Civil War from 1936 to 1939. In these conflicts the Church has been allied with the conservative side, its influence reinforced in the economic and political spheres by the ramifications of the *Opus Dei movement, which has been particularly strong in Spain. The opposing forces, from freemasonry in the early 19th cent. to communism in the 20th, have been almost consistently anti-religious. In recent years, however, the teaching of the Second *Vatican Council, esp. on religious freedom, political liberty and social justice, has introduced new tensions into the Spanish Church. In particular, many priests have felt less sympathy with their bishops and have seized upon industrial unrest and Basque nationalism as opportunities to challenge the claim of General Franco's régime to embody religious orthodoxy.

Non-RC Christianity, for which toleration became effective only in 1910, is of the smallest importance in Spain. Protestantism received some encouragement by the disestablishment and restriction of the RC Church in the Revolution of 1931, but its fortunes were again reversed by the settlement of 1939. The 1953 Concordat between the Spanish Government and the Holy See recognized RCism as the 'only religion of the Spanish nation', and the public cult of other denominations was forbidden. Since the Second Vatican Council, however, the position of Protestants and Protestant Churches in Spain has considerably eased. This change has been furthered by political developments in the country since the death of Franco.

H. Florez, cont. by M. Risco, A. Merino, J. de la Canal, S. de Barnanda, V. de la Fuente, and C. R. Fort, España sagrada. Theatro geográphico-histórico de la Iglesia de España (56 vols., 1747–1961; index by A. González Palencia, 1918; ed. 2, 1946). V. de la Fuente, Historia eclesiástica de España (3 vols., 1855; ed. 2, 6 vols., 1873–5); P. B. *Gams, Die Kirchengeschichte von Spanien (3 vols., 1862–79). F. Meyrick, The Church in Spain (1892). P. Kehr, Papsturkunden in Spanien. Vorarbeiten zur Hispania Pontificia (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., xviii, 2; xxii, 1; 1926–8). Z. García Villada, S.J., Historia eclesiástica de España [to 1085] (3 vols. bound in 5, 1920–36). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., L'Espagne chrétienne (1906). T. D. Kendrick, St. James in Spain (1960). A. K. Ziegler, Church and State in Visigothic Spain (Catholic University of America Diss., Washington, 1930); E. A. Thompson, The Goths in Spain (Oxford, 1969), esp. pp. 275–310. P. Lineham, The Spanish Church and the Papacy in the Thirteenth Century (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd series, iv; 1971). J. Vincke, Staat und Kirche in Katalonien und Aragon während des Mittelalters, vol. i (1931). Id., 'Kirche und Staat in Spanien während des Spätmittelalters' in R.Q., xliii (1935), pp. 35–53. H. C. Lea, A History of the Inquisition in Spain (4 vols., 1906–7); H. [A. F.] Kamen, The Spanish Inquisition (1965). M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne. Recherches sur l'histoire spirituelle du XVIe siècle (Bibliothèque de l'École des hautes études hispaniques, xxi; 1937; revised Spanish translation, ed. 2, Mexico, 1966). Joan C. Ullman, The Tragic Week. A Study of Anticlericalism in Spain, 1875–1912 (Cambridge, Mass., 1968). A. de Castro, Historia de los protestantes españoles (1851; Eng. tr., 1851); E. Schäfer, Beiträge zur Geschichte des spanischen Protestantismus und der Inquisition im sechzehnten Jahrhundert (3 vols., 1902). C. A. García–K. G. Grubb, Religion in the Republic of Spain (1933; evangelical survey). J. Delpech, The Oppression of Protestants in Spain (Eng. tr. by T. and Dolores Johnson, Boston, 1955; London, 1956). C. J. Bartlett, 'The Question of Religious Toleration in Spain in the Nineteenth Century' in J.E.H., viii (1957), pp. 205–16. C. Baraut, O.S.B., and others in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1089–1192, s.v. 'Espagne'; Justo Fernández Alonso in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 892–944, s.v. 'Espagne'. W. A. Christian, Jr., Local Religion in Sixteenth-Century Spain (Princeton, 1981). J. Iribarren (ed.), Documentos colectivos del Episcopado español 1870–1974 (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, 1974).

SPALATIN, GEORG (1484–1545), German humanist and reformer. Georg Burkhardt was born at Spalt (hence his name) nr. Nuremberg, studied at Erfurt, and from 1505 to 1508 taught at the monastery of Georgenthal. In 1518 he was ordained priest and in 1509 was appointed tutor to the sons of the Prince Elector, *Frederick the Wise of Saxony. He soon won the Elector's confidence and became his secretary and librarian. In 1511 he was sent to *Wittenberg, where he became acquainted with M. *Luther, under whose guidance he began to study the Bible. His scholarship came to be much valued at the Saxon court, and it was mainly through Spalatin's influence that the hesitating Elector was gained to the ideas of the Reformer. In 1518 he accompanied Frederick to the Diet of *Augsburg, and in 1521 to *Worms. In 1525 he advocated the complete abolition of Catholicism in Saxony. In the same year he married and went to Altenburg, where he carried through the reform. Under Frederick's successor, John (1525–32), he continued to foster the Reformation, being chiefly engaged in the visitation of schools and churches. His later years were darkened by melancholy. Besides translations of writings of Luther, P. *Melanchthon, and *Erasmus, he compiled Annales Reformationis (ed. 1718) and Chronicon et Annales [1463–1525]. He also conducted an extensive correspondence with Luther, whose confidant he was, but only Luther's replies survive.

An edition of his Historischer Nachlass und Briefe was undertaken by C. Neudecker–L. Preller (vol. i only, the life of Frederick the Wise, publd. Jena, 1851). A. Seeheim, Georg Spalatin als sächsischer Historiograph (1876; low estimate of Spalatin's competence as a historian). Several studies by G. Berbig (Halle, 1906 ff.; uncritical). I. Höss, Georg Spalatin, 1484–1545 (Weimar, 1956). F. Müller in Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, xxxv (1893), pp. 1–29, s.v.; T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 547–53, s.v. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, ii, pp. 284–6 (Nos. 20266–20296).

SPALATRENSIS. See De Dominis, Marco Antonio.

SPANISH ARMADA. See Armada, Spanish.

SPARROW, ANTHONY (1612–85), Bp. of *Norwich. He was a Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge, from 1633 till his expulsion by the *Puritans in 1644. For a sermon preached on confession and absolution in 1637, he was brought into the Vice-Chancellor's court, but successfully defended by W. *Juxon, Bp. of London. At the Restoration, when he became Archdeacon of Sudbury, he appears to have taken an influential part in the revision of the BCP. In 1662 he was appointed President of his college, in 1667 was made Bp. of *Exeter, and in 1676 translated to Norwich. He was a keen High Churchman throughout his life, best known through his Rationale or Practical Exposition of the Book of Common Prayer (earliest extant edition, 1657; many times reprinted), the object of which was to show that the C of E service was neither 'old superstitious Roman dotage' nor 'schismatically new'.

His Rationale was ed., with some of his minor works, to which are prefixed the lives of the Compilers of the Liturgy, by Samuel Downes (London, 1722), and repr. by J. H. *N[ewman] (Oxford, 1839), with preface, pp. i–iv; extracts in P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism (1935), Nos. 220 and 234, pp. 501 f. and 521 f. W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., liii (1898), p. 313 f., s.v.

S.P.C.K. The 'Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge'. It was founded by T. *Bray and four laymen in 1698 'to promote and encourage the erection of charity schools in all parts of England and Wales; to disperse, both at home and abroad, Bibles and tracts of religion; and in general to advance the honour of God and the good of mankind, by promoting Christian knowledge both at home and in the other parts of the world by the best methods that should offer'. Its educational and missionary work is still vigorously carried on, although partly taken over since by the *National Society and the *S.P.G. Through its agency many Church schools and teachers' training colleges have been built at home and on the mission field. The Society also has a publishing house, which issues literature in book and pamphlet form on theological and other subjects.

W. O. B. Allen–E. McClure, Two Hundred Years. The History of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1698–1898 (1898); W. K. Lowther Clarke, A History of the S.P.C.K. (1959). E. McClure (ed.), A Chapter in English Church History. Being the Minutes of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge for the Years 1698–1704, together with Abstracts of Correspondents' Letters during Part of the same Period (1888). Mary Clement, The S.P.C.K. and Wales, 1699–1740. The History of the S.P.C.K. in Wales from its Foundation to the Early Years of the Welsh Methodist Movement (C.H.S., 1954), with bibl.

SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY, The. A Commentary on the whole Bible, edited by F. C. Cook (1810–89), at the instance of J. E. Denison (1800–1873), who was Speaker of the House of Commons from 1857 to 1872. It was published in 10 vols. between 1871 and 1881. Its object was the defence of a conservative attitude to Scripture, to combat the liberalism of Essays and Reviews* (1860) and similar writings. Cook was assisted by many eminent scholars and theologians, but his work suffered from the somewhat narrow purpose for which it was conceived.

SPEIER, Diets of. See Speyer, Diets of.

SPENCER, HERBERT (1820–1903), philosophical and scientific thinker. The son of a schoolmaster, he was practically self-taught. From 1837 to 1846 he was a civil engineer on the railway. Two years later he became connected with the Economist and afterwards with the Westminster Review. His two earliest writings were Social Statics (1851) and Principles of Psychology (1855). In 1860 he announced a systematic series of philosophical treatises; they included First Principles (1862), Principles of Biology (1867), Principles of Psychology (1872), and Principles of Sociology (1877). From 1886 to 1891 Spencer's health prevented his writing, but in 1893 he completed Principles of Ethics.

Spencer was the chief exponent of *Agnosticism in 19th-cent. England. He divided all reality into the knowable (the province of science) and the unknowable (that of religion). He asserted that man could not only be conscious of the unknowable, but that knowledge itself was finally dependent upon the unknowable, and that the Absolute is the fundamental reality behind all things. Nevertheless the Absolute could not be known in the strict sense of the word. Spencer also affirmed his belief in progress as a supreme law of the universe. All his writings were characterized by an extreme individualism.

Autobiography (2 vols., 1904; posthumous). D. Duncan, The Life and Letters of Herbert Spencer (1908, with full bibl.). F. H. Collins, An Epitome of The Synthetic Philosophy (1889; suppl. 1894; Pref. by H. Spencer). Studies by H. Macpherson (London, 1900), Josiah Royce (New York and London, 1904), J. A. Thomson ('English Men of Science', 1906), W. H. Hudson (London, 1908), and H. [S. R.] Elliot ('Makers of the Nineteenth Century', 1917). W. H. Hudson, An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer (New York, 1894; London, 1895; rev. ed., 1904); H. *Sidgwick, Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. Herbert Spencer and J. Martineau (1902), pp. 135–312. J. Rumney, Herbert Spencer's Sociology (1934); J. D. Y. Peel, Herbert Spencer. The Evolution of a Sociologist (1971). H. S. R. Elliot in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii, pp. 360–9.

SPENCER, JOHN (1630–93), English Hebraist. He was a native of Bocton, Kent. In 1645 he became a scholar of Corpus Christi, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow c. 1655 and Master in 1667. In 1677 he became Dean of *Ely. After publishing a treatise on the *Urim and Thummim (1669), which he believed to be of Egyptian origin, he devoted himself chiefly to Hebrew studies. The result was his principal work, De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus et earum Rationibus, libri tres (1685). Though, owing to the state of contemporary oriental studies, he had to rely almost entirely on second-hand information furnished mainly by the Bible, the classical authors, and the Fathers, he can claim to be the founder of the study of *comparative religion. He endeavoured to trace the connexions between the religious rites of the Hebrews and those of other Semitic peoples, and his work remains a permanent contribution to the subject. His new departure in OT scholarship caused his orthodoxy to be suspected, and his opinions, being too far in advance of his time, were severely criticized and exercised no immediate influence. His work, however, was taken up in the 19th cent. by such scholars as J. *Wellhausen and W. Robertson *Smith.

His Works were reissued at Cambridge (rev. by L. Chappelow), 2 vols., 1727. T. Cooper in D.N.B., liii (1898), p. 359 f.

SPENER, PHILIPP JAKOB (1635–1705), founder of German *Pietism (q.v.). Born of devout Protestant parents at Rappoltsweiler in Alsace, he studied history and philosophy at Strassburg (1651–3). When on a visit to Switzerland, the influence of J. de Labadie (see *Labadists) gave his religion a personal and interior turn, and Spener became increasingly aware of a call to revivify the Lutheran Church with evangelical fervour. He was appointed minister successively at Strassburg (1663) and Frankfurt (1666). At Frankfurt he introduced 'Collegia Pietatis', devotional meetings which gathered twice weekly in his house, and also issued his Pia Desideria (1675, q.v.) and his Erklärung der christlichen Lehre nach der Ordnung des Kleinen Katechismus Luthers (1677), based on his instructions on the Catechism. His independent outlook, added to his endeavours to give the laity a real part in Church life, offended many of the clergy, and when the ecclesiastical authorities had become openly hostile, he gladly accepted an invitation to Dresden as court preacher (1686). Here in Saxony he gained the warm support of A. H. *Francke (q.v.) and P. Anton, who instituted their 'Collegia Philobiblica'; but he came into conflict with the theological faculty at Leipzig. In 1691 he migrated to Berlin, where he was appointed Rector of the Nikolaikirche, finding an influential ally in the Elector of Brandenburg (King Frederick I of Prussia from 1701). His movement, by this time known as 'Pietism', made rapid progress, and in 1694 the University of Halle was founded, largely under his influence. Though he met with ever increasing opposition from Lutheran orthodoxy, the movement won many ardent supporters. In 1695 J. Deutschmann's Christuslutherische Vorstellung, composed for the theological faculty at *Wittenberg, charged Spener with 283 heads of heretical teaching. In 1698 Spener withdrew from the struggle and devoted his last years mainly to pastoral work. His enthusiasm for the reform of the Lutheran Church and his insistence on the inner religious life of the individual had a deep and mainly beneficent influence on German Protestantism. Spener also wrote Das geistliche Priesterthum (1677), Die allgemeine Gottesgelehrtheit aller gläubigen Christen und rechtschaffenen Theologen (1680), Natur und Gnade (1687), Letzte theologische Bedencken (1711), and other works.

Life by P. Grünberg (3 vols., Göttingen, 1893–1906). Other studies by W. Grün (Würzburg, 1934), H. Bruns (Marburg, 1937), K. Aland (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxviii; 1943), and J. Wallmann (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xlii; Tübingen, 1970). K. Aland, Kirchengeschichtliche Entwürfe (Gütersloh, 1960), pp. 523–42, 'Philipp Jakob Spener. Sein Lebensweg von Frankfurt nach Berlin (1666–1705) dargestellt an Hand seiner Briefe nach Frankfurt.' P. Grünberg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 609–22; M. Schmidt in R.G.G. (ed. 3), vi (1962), col. 238 f.

SPEYER (Spires), Diets of (1526 and 1529). (1) The Diet of June 1526 marked a new stage in the consolidation of reforming influences in Germany. Instructions sent by *Charles V from Spain in the previous March forbidding all innovations and requiring the enforcement of the Edict of *Worms (1521) were set aside on the ground of his war with the Papacy which had broken out in the interval. The Diet determined that each Prince should order ecclesiastical affairs in his state in acc. with his own conscience.

(2) By the end of 1528 a Catholic reaction had set in, provoked by *Philip of Hesse's repressive measures and his invocation of foreign (French and Hungarian) aid. In response to an appeal from the Pope, Charles V issued a mandate on 30 Nov. 1528 summoning the Diet to Speyer on 21 Feb. 1529. The proceedings were controlled by a strong and well-organized Catholic majority who passed legislation to end all toleration of *Lutherans in Catholic districts. On 19 April six Princes and fourteen cities made a formal 'protest' addressed to the Archduke Ferdinand, defending freedom of conscience and the right of minorities. Henceforward the Reformers were known as 'Protestants'.

(1) W. Friedensburg, Der Reichstag zu Speier 1526 im Zusammenhang der politischen und kirchlichen Entwicklung Deutschlands im Reformationszeitalter (Historische Untersuchungen herausgegeben J. Jastrow, v; 1887). J. Ney, Der Reichstag zu Speier 1526 (Sammlung gemeinverständlicher wissenschaftlicher Vorträge, lxxv; 1889). T. J. Ney in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 589–94, s.v. 'Speier, Reichstage in, 1'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), p. 15 f. (Nos. 27960b–74).

(2) J. Ney, 'Geschichte des Reichstages zu Speier im Jahre 1529' in Mittheilungen des historischen Vereins der Pfalz, viii (1879), pp. 1–368; also issued separately, Halle, 1880, with primary docc., pp. 291–362. Some of these docc. are translated into Eng. in Kidd, pp. 239–45 (No. xxxii). J. Kühn, Die Geschichte des Speyrer Reichstags 1529 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, xlvii, Hft. 1; 1929). E. Mayer, Der Speierer Reichstag 1529 (Speyer, 1929). T. J. Ney in P.R.E., loc. cit., pp. 594–603, s.v. 'Speier, Reichstage in, 2'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), pp. 16–18 (Nos. 27975–28010).

S.P.G. The 'Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts'. This Anglican society was formed in 1701 by Thomas *Bray and his associates to assist in the missionary work initiated by the *S.P.C.K. Authorized by Convocation, and incorporated by Royal Charter, it had two main objects: (1) to provide the ministrations of the Church for British people overseas; and (2) to evangelize the non-Christian races subject to the Crown. In the 18th cent. its work was carried out mostly in the American Colonies, *Canada, and the *West Indies. Its sphere of activity increased in the 19th cent., esp. in *India, *South and *West Africa, *Australia and the Far East. In most of the areas where the S.P.G. worked the Churches are now independent provinces and their bishops and clergy are largely nationals. But much of the financial backing and some of the staffing of parishes and dioceses overseas, esp. in Asia, Africa and the West Indies, still comes from Britain.

In 1965 the S.P.G. joined with the *U.M.C.A. to form the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (*U.S.P.G.).

C. F. Pascoe, Two Hundred Years of the S.P.G. [1701–1900]. Based on a Digest of the Society's Records (1901). H. P. Thompson, Into All Lands. A History of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1701–1950 (1951).

SPINCKES, NATHANIEL (1653–1727), *Nonjuror. The son of a Northamptonshire rector, he was educated locally and at Trinity and Jesus Colleges, Cambridge. Ordained priest in 1678, he became chaplain to the first Duke of Lauderdale (d. 1682), curate and lecturer at St. Stephen's, Walbrook (1682–5), rector of Peakirk-cum-Glinton (now Cambs.), and in 1687 a prebendary and rector of St. Martin's, *Salisbury. On his refusal to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary he was deprived in 1690. In 1713 he was consecrated Bishop by G. *Hickes, but took no title. In the dispute about the *Usages, he advocated the retention of the BCP as it then was rather than a return to the First Book of *Edward VI. A man of considerable learning, proficient in Greek, Latin, Anglo-Saxon, and French, with some knowledge of Oriental languages, he was much revered for his personal sanctity. He wrote five treatises on the Roman controversy, one against the French prophets, one against B. *Hoadly, and several against the Usagers, but he is esp. remembered for his sermons and devotional works, which include A Sick Man Visited (1712) and a collection of prayers and meditations from L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, T. *Ken, and others entitled 'The True Church of England Man's Companion to the Closet with a preface by N. Spinckes' (1721), commonly known as 'Spinckes's Devotions'. He was a close friend of G. Hickes, R. *Nelson, and J. *Kettlewell.

J. Blackbourne, The Life of the R. Reverend Mr. Nathanael Spinckes (1731). J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902), pp. 129–33 and 384 f.; id. in D.N.B., liii (1898), p. 405 f.

SPINOZA, BARUCH (BENEDICT DE) (1632–1677), Dutch Jewish philosopher. He was born in Amsterdam of Portuguese parents. From an early age he was prob. familiar with the works of G. *Bruno, *Maimonides, R. *Descartes, T. *Hobbes, and others who fostered in him religious unorthodoxy, and in 1656 he was expelled by the Synagogue and compelled to leave Amsterdam. He went to Rijnsburg and several other places, and last to The Hague (1670), earning his living by grinding lenses. During his lifetime only a treatise on Descartes (1663) and the Tractatus Theologico-politicus (1670) were published. His principal work, the Ethica ordine geometrico demonstrata, appeared posthumously (Amsterdam, 1677). It is in five parts: 'De Deo', 'De Natura et Origine Mentis', 'De Origine et Natura Affectuum', 'De Servitute Humana, seu de Affectuum Viribus', and 'De Potentia Intellectus, seu de Libertate Humana'. Spinoza also wrote a Tractatus Politicus and a Tractatus de Intellectus Emendatione (both first publd. with the Ethica, 1677). Several of his letters have also survived.

Spinoza is to be accounted the most thoroughgoing modern exponent of *pantheism. The foundation of his system is his idea of God as the substance which is 'causa sui' or 'natura naturans', from which follows logically the world as 'natura naturata'. This substance is infinite, with an infinite number of attributes of which, however, only two, thought (cogitatio) and extension (extensio), are known to man. All individual things are modes of these two attributes, being either bodies or ideas, between which there is a perfect parallelism. The human mind is part of the Divine impersonal intellect which works acc. to necessity. Thus Spinoza denies both freedom and will, the permanence of personality and immortality. The highest human activity is the loving contemplation of the necessity in God (amor Dei intellectualis) which becomes possible after the complete victory over the passions, among which Spinoza numbers such Christian virtues as humility and penitence. The conceptions of a personal God and an immortal soul being ruled out, Spinoza's religious ideas developed in the Tractatus are purely rationalist. His studies on the Bible, carried on from the same point of view, have made him one of the fathers of the modern historical criticism of the Bible. Spinoza's influence on European philosophy was at its height in the 19th cent., esp. in Germany, where F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, F. W. J. *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel, and others owed much to his teaching.

Modern edd. of his works by J. van Vloten–J. P. N. Land (2 vols., The Hague, 1882–3) and C. Gebhardt (4 vols., Heidelberg [1924–6]). Eng. trr. of the Ethics and other works by R. H. M. Elwes (Bohn's Philological Library, 1883); of Ethics also by W. H. *White (London, 1883) and by A. Boyle (Everyman's Library, [1910]); of his Political Works (Tractatus Theologico-politicus in part and Traetatus Politicus in full) by A. G. Wernham (Oxford, 1958). Correspondence tr. and ed. A. Wolf (London, 1928). Earliest life, usually attributed to J. M. Lucas, and prob. written between 1677 and 1678 (orig. printed at Amsterdam, 1719), also ed., with Eng. tr., by A. Wolf (London, 1927). Studies in English by F. Pollock (London, 1880), J. *Martineau (ib., 1882), J. *Caird (Blackwood's Philosophical Classics, 1888), R. MacKeon (New York, 1928), L. Roth (Leaders of Philosophy, London, 1929), H. A. Wolfson (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1934), S. Hampshire (Pelican Books, 1951) and others. L. Brunschvicg, Spinoza (Paris, 1894; ed. 4, extended, with title Spinoza et ses contemporains, 1951). H. H. Joachim, A Study of the Ethics of Spinoza (1901); id., Spinoza's Tractatus de Intellectus Emendatione. A Commentary (1940; posthumous). H. F. Hallett, Aeternitas. A Spinozistic Study (1930); id., Benedict de Spinoza. The Elements of his Philosophy (1957); id., Creation, Emanation and Salvation. A Spinozistic Study (The Hague, 1962). L. Strauss, Die Religionskritik Spinozas als Grundlage seiner Bibelwissenschaft. Untersuchungen zu Spinoza's Theologisch-Politischem Traktat (1930; revised Eng. tr., New York [1965]). P. Siwek, S.J., Spinoza et le panthéisme religieux (1937; ed. 2, 1950). N. Altwicker (ed.), Texte zur Geschichte des Spinozismus (1971), with bibl. Überweg, iii, pp. 269–94, with bibl. pp. 664–72. A. S. Pringle-*Pattison in E.B. (ed. 11), xxv (1911), pp. 687–91, s.v. G. Rabeau in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2489–2506, s.v., with extensive bibl. There is a 'Societas Spinozana' at The Hague which issues a Chronicon Spinozanum (The Hague, 1921 ff.).

SPIRES, Diets of. See Speyer, Diets of.

SPIRIDION, St. See Spyridon, St.

SPIRIT. In Christian theology the word denotes: (1) The intelligent and immaterial part of man or the human *soul in general, whether united with the body in life or separated from it in death, and esp. that aspect of it which is concerned with religious truth and action and is directly susceptible to Divine influence. (2) An order of being which is superhuman in the sense that it is not subject to the limits of time, space, and a bodily frame. In this sense God Himself is said in Scripture to be spirit (in contrast with 'flesh', i.e. humanity). (3) One of the creatures belonging to this order, whether good or evil, i.e. angels or demons. In accord with popular beliefs of the time, certain forms of disease, esp. lunacy and epilepsy, were attributed in the early Christian centuries to the presence of evil or 'unclean' spirits in the human body (see *Exorcism). (4) The Third Person of the *Trinity (see Holy Spirit, The).

SPIRIT, Brethren of the Free. See Brethren of the Free Spirit.

SPIRITISM. See Spiritualism.

SPIRITUAL EXERCISES, The. The famous treatise of St. *Ignatius Loyola, drafted at Manresa and much revised and expanded through the greater part of his life. It contains a series of meditations and rules designed to lead souls to conquer their passions and give themselves to God. This result is obtained by systematic consideration of sin and its consequences (first week, deformata reformare), the Kingdom of Christ (second week, reformata conformare) culminating in the 'Two Standards', the Passion (third week, conformata confirmare), and the risen and glorified Lord (fourth week, confirmata transformare). The special characteristic of these meditations and the main ground why they have been an invaluable help for souls is their successful employment in combination of sense impressions, imagination, and understanding, in actuating the will towards the pursuit of perfection. Besides the points for meditation the work contains a wealth of ascetic advice which has led it to be considered an almost indispensable manual of spiritual direction. The Exercises, which were originally meant to extend over four weeks, may be compressed into ten days or an even shorter time; they are widely used for retreats.

Crit. ed., with introd., notes, and bibl., in Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, Monumenta Ignatiana, Ser. 2, vol. 1, Madrid, 1919; ed. 2, Rome, 1969, with full bibl. Eng. tr., with comm. by W. H. Longridge, S.S.J.E. (London, 1919) and T. Corbishley, S.J. (ib., 1963). Earlier edd. and trr., &c., listed in Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 59–75. A. Brou, S.J., Les Exercices spirituels de S. Ignace de Loyola. Histoire et psychologie [1922]. R. Debauche, S.J., and others, Les Exercices spirituels de saint Ignace à l'occasion du 4e centenaire de leur approbation (Cahiers de la Nouvelle Revue théologique, v; 1949). I. Iparraguirre, S.J., Historia de la práctica de los ejercicios espirituales de San Ignacio de Loyola (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., iii, vii, etc.; Bilbao–Rome [1946 ff.]), with full bibl. Id., Commentarios de los Ejercicios Ignacianos (Siglos XVI–XVIII) (Subsidia ad Historiam S.I., vi; 1967). G. Fessard, La Dialectique des Exercices spirituels de saint Ignace de Loyola (Théologie, xxxv [1956]). F. Marxer, Die inneren geistlichen Sinne. Ein Beitrag zur Deutung ignatianischer Mystik (Freiburg, etc., 1963). K. *Rahner, [S.J.,] Betrachtungen zum ignatianischen Exerzitienbuch (Munich, 1965; Eng. tr., 1967). Handbooks on the subject in English designed primarily for retreat conductors include the works of H. V. Gill, S.J. (Dublin, 1935), and H. S. Box (London, 1939). Pourrat, iii, pp. 36–65. See also bibl. to Ignatius Loyola.

SPIRITUAL FRANCISCANS. Before St. *Francis's death two groups, (1) those led by *Elias of Cortona who wished to mitigate the rule of poverty and remodel the order, and (2) the 'Zealots' or 'Spirituals' who wished to maintain the original manner of life, could be distinguished. The latter group became more apparent as the original simplicity of the Franciscan rule was progressively modified, the decretal 'Quo elongati' (1230), e.g., allowing anyone to give alms to the order provided it was given to a nuncius, chosen by the donor or the order, who would buy the goods required, whilst any surplus money was given into the administration of a so-called 'spiritual friend'. The influence of the teaching of *Joachim of Fiore, whose works, under the title the Eternal Gospel, were published in 1254 by a young Franciscan, Gerard of Borgo San Donnino, also encouraged the Spirituals to take an extreme position. For a time, under the generalship of *John of Parma (1247–57), this rigid view was officially accepted in the order.

By the end of the 13th cent. a compromise, implicit in the teaching of St. *Bonaventure, who held that all property left to the friars was the property of the Church and that they were permitted to use things necessary for their life and work (usus pauper), had been arrived at and was embodied in Nicholas III's decretal 'Exiit qui Seminat' (1279). The solution proved unacceptable, however, to the Spirituals, esp. as the Constitutions of the Chapter-Generals of the time indicate that the abuses denounced by the Spirituals were spreading. The conflict was renewed under *Clement V (1310–12; see Ubertino of Casale), as a result of which Nicholas's decretal was reaffirmed in 'Exivi de Paradiso' (1312). Meanwhile the Spirituals, now led by Angelo Clareno in the March of Ancona and by P. J. *Olivi in Provence, maintained an intransigent position, and even employed force to seize certain possessions of the Conventuals. Pope *John XXII, in consequence, resorted to rigorous measures, enjoining them to obey authority under penalty of excommunication and burning four of their number as heretics (1318). But within two or three years the controversy relating to the poverty of Christ again threatened to create a schism within the order, and the danger was increased when the Spirituals were aided by the forces of Louis of Bavaria and the able pen of *William of Occam. As a result the Pope followed up his previous condemnation in the bulls 'Sancta Romana' (1317; here they had been first called '*Fraticelli') and 'Gloriosam Ecclesiam' (1318) by the publication of the decretals 'Ad Conditorem Canonum' (1322), which affirmed that complete renunciation of possessions did not necessarily constitute the perfect life, and 'Cum Inter Nonnullos' (1323), which declared that the Spirituals' doctrine of the absolute poverty of Christ and his Apostles, both individually and corporately, was heretical. The conflict continued. The Fraticelli and the *Beghards of Provence continued to hold the Spirituals' views, while the whole question of usus facti and dominium gave rise to *FitzRalph's 'De Pauperie Salvatoris', perhaps the best argued attack on their position. In the face of persecution the numbers dwindled, but the movement itself gave an impetus to the rise of a more rigorous group of the Franciscan Order, the Friars of the Strict Observance (Osservanti), who later received papal recognition.

F. von Ehrle, S.J., 'Die Spiritualen, ihr Verhältniss zum Franciscanerorden und zu den Fraticellen' in Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, i (1885), pp. 509–69; ii (1886), pp. 106–64; iii (1887), pp. 553–623; and iv (1888), pp. 1–190, with full refl. D. S. Muzzey, The Spiritual Franciscans (Columbia University thesis, New York, 1907). K. Balthasar, Geschichte des Armutsstreites im Franziskanerorden bis zum Konzil von Vienne (Vorreformations-geschichtliche Forschungen, vi; 1911). Decima L. Douie, The Nature and the Effect of the Heresy of the Fraticelli (Publications of the University of Manchester, ccxx; Historical Series, lxi; 1932). M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty. The Doctrine of the Absolute Poverty of Christ and the Apostles in the Franciscan Order 1210–1323 (C.H.S., 1961). Heimbucher, i, pp. 697–709, with bibl. L. Oliger, O.F.M., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2522–49, s.v. 'Spirituels', with detailed bibl.; A. Ghinato in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1151–3, s.v. 'Spirituali'. See also bibl. to Franciscan Order.

SPIRITUAL HEALING. The expression, occasionally used as a synonym of psychotherapy, is properly confined to the attempt to heal the whole personality by prayer and sacramental means, sometimes combined with religious suggestion. Among the methods in general use are *unction and the laying on of hands. Most of those who practise such methods believe that the patient should at the same time make full use of medical skill, but a minority holds that spiritual means should alone be sufficient. It is a common practice among Anglicans to give Absolution and Communion immediately before the anointing. Although bodily healing is not normally expected as a result of unction in the Roman Communion, many miraculous cures are claimed at *Lourdes and other places of pilgrimage. The laying on of hands as a '*sacramental' should be distinguished from the use of a natural gift of healing which does not depend on its possessor being a Christian; but it may be added that such a gift may most profitably be used when combined with Christian suggestion. The possession of the gift of healing was regarded in the early Church as a recommendation in candidates for holy orders.

The *Lambeth Conference of 1920 (Resolution 63) asked the Abp. of *Canterbury to appoint a committee to consider and report upon 'the use with prayer of the Laying on of Hands, of the Unction of the Sick, and other spiritual means of Healing'; the report of the committee was publd. under the title The Ministry of Healing (S.P.C.K., 1924), with 'Forms of Service suggested for use at the Anointing of the Sick', pp.

38–43. A further commission was appointed by the Abps. of Canterbury and York at the request of the Convocations in 1953 to 'consider the theological, medical, psychological and pastoral aspects of "Divine Healing"'; the report of this commission was issued under the title The Church's Ministry of Healing (1958). The many discussions of the subject include introductions by P. *Dearmer, Body and Soul (1909); G. Rhodes (ed.), Medicine and the Church. Being a Series of Studies on the Relationship between the Practice of Medicine and the Church's Ministry to the Sick (1910); W. F. Cobb, Spiritual Healing (1914); H. Anson, Spiritual Healing. A Discussion of the Religious Elements in Physical Health (1923); H. H. *Henson, Notes on Spiritual Healing (1925); J. R. Pridie, The Church's Ministry of Healing (1926); T. W. Crafer (ed.), The Church and the Ministry of Healing (1934); A. G. Ikin, The Background of Spiritual Healing. Psychological and Religious (1937), and other works by this author; L. D. Weatherhead, Psychology, Religion and Healing (1951); H. Edwards, The Power of Spiritual Healing (1963). The subject is treated historically in G. G. Dawson, Healing, Pagan and Christian (1935), pp. 112–308 on the Christian period. Evelyn Frost, Christian Healing. A Consideration of the Place of Spiritual Healing in the Church of Today in the Light of the Doctrine and Practice of the Ante-Nicene Church (1940). See also bibl. to Unction and Visitation of the Sick.

SPIRITUAL WORKS OF MERCY, The. There are traditionally seven: (1) converting the sinner; (2) instructing the ignorant; (3) counselling the doubtful; (4) comforting the sorrowful; (5) bearing wrongs patiently; (6) forgiving injuries; (7) praying for the living and the dead. See also Corporal Works of Mercy.

SPIRITUALISM, also 'Spiritism'. A system of (often superstitious) beliefs and practices the purpose of which is to establish communication with the spirits of the dead. Necromancy is an element common to most primitive and many higher religions, an early example occurring in 1 Sam. 28. 8. In its modern form Spiritualism dates from the occult experiences of the American Fox family in 1848, and soon spread to England and the Continent as a reaction against the prevalent materialism. It professes to make contact with the souls of the departed chiefly by means of mediums, accompanied by table-turning, automatic writing, and other devices. It has found adherents, also, among recognised scholars such as O. Lodge, F. W. H. Myers, and W. F. Prince. The scientific study of these phenomena has been extensively pursued in Great Britain by the Society for Psychical Research (founded 1882). After ruling out conscious or unconscious fraud, of which almost all famous mediums have been convicted, and phenomena susceptible of a natural explanation, e.g. by the abnormal qualities of the medium, there remains a certain number of striking cases such as the foreseeing of free actions and otherwise incalculable events. The theory that such phenomena are due to preternatural, i.e. demonic, agencies has been advanced by certain Christian theologians who point to the fact that the alleged messages from the beyond are generally hostile to Christian doctrine and of no moral or spiritual value. The practice of Spiritualism is denounced by Scripture (Dt. 18. 11) and by all parts of the Christian Church. In England, and esp. in U.S.A., the cult is highly organized, and has been much exploited for commercial ends.

There is an immense literature on the subject. More serious studies in English include E. Gurney–F. W. H. Myers–F. Podmore, Phantasms of the Living (2 vols., 1886); F. Podmore, Studies in Psychical Research (1897); id., Modern Spiritualism. A History and Criticism (2 vols., 1902); F. W. H. Myers, Human Personality and its Survival after Bodily Death (2 vols., 1903); F. Podmore, The Newer Spiritualism (1910); O. J. Lodge, Raymond, or Life and Death, with examples of the evidence for survival of memory and affection after Death (1916); A. C. Doyle, A History of Spiritualism (2 vols., 1926); H. Price, Fifty Years of Psychical Research. A Critical Survey (1939), with bibl. G. Lawton, The Drama of Life after Death. A Study of the Spiritualist Religion (Columbia University thesis; London, 1933), with bibl. H. Thurston, S.J., The Church and Spiritualism (Milwaukee, Wisc., 1933); G. W. Butterworth, Spiritualism and Religion (1944). F. C. S. Schiller in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 805–8, s.v. 'Spiritism'; L. Roure, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 2507–22, s.v. 'Spiritisme', both with further bibl. See also the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (London, 1882 ff.) and the Journal of the same body (ib., 1884 ff.).

SPITTA, FRIEDRICH (1852–1924), German Protestant theologian. Born at Wittingen in Hanover, he became lecturer at Bonn in 1880, professor of NT and pastoral theology at Strassburg in 1887, and prof. at Göttingen in 1919. He was keenly interested in Church music and the renewal of liturgical life in German Protestantism, and from 1895 joint editor with J. Smend (1857–1930) of the Monatsschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst. His best-known work is Zur Geschichte und Litteratur des Urchristentums (3 vols., 1891–1901 [–1907]). He also wrote Das Johannes-Evangelium als Quelle der Geschichte Jesu (1910) and Die synoptische Grundschrift (1912), both based on the method of source analysis. Among his many other writings are Der Gottesdienst des Urchristentums (1901), Studien zu Luthers Liedern (1906), Jesus und die Heidenmission (1909) and Die Auferstehung Jesu (1918).

A. Meyer in R.G.G. (ed. 2), v (1931), col. 704, s.v.

SPONSOR. Another name for a *godparent at a *baptism.

SPOON, Liturgical. In the E. rites, a spoon is used for giving communion, a portion of the consecrated Host being dipped in the chalice and the two species then conveyed on the spoon to the communicant. In the RC Church the use of a spoon for administering the consecrated Wine was sanctioned in 1965. In the W. spoons also were sometimes used to measure the water at the mixing of the chalice. Mention of them, however, in inventories of Church property is not proof that they have any liturgical significance. See also Fistula.

Rohault, iv [c. 1887], pp. 185–8. Braun, C.A., pp. 265–79, and plate 142, Fig. 565. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L. iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3172–83, s.v. 'Cuiller', with bibl.

SPORTS, The Book of. A declaration defining the recreations permissible on Sunday first issued in 1617 by *James I for the use of the magistrates in Lancs, and extended in the following year to the whole country with instructions to ministers to read it from the pulpit. It was reissued in 1633 by *Charles I, who deprived all clergy who refused to publish it. It permitted archery and dancing, and was designed to counteract the growing *Sabbatarianism fostered by the *Puritans. It derived such legal force as it possessed from the ecclesiastical supremacy conferred on the Crown in 1559; its publication aroused considerable opposition, culminating in its being publicly burnt by order of Parliament in 1643.

Modernized version of text in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England, ii (1839), pp. 188–93; repr. in P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism (1935), No. 261, pp. 565–8. R. W. Henderson, The King's Book of Sports in England and America (repr. from the Bulletin of the New York Public Library of November 1948). M. Levy, Der Sabbath in England. Wesen und Entwicklung des englischen Sonntags (Kölner anglistische Arbeiten, xviii; 1933), pp. 192–206, with greater part of Eng. text, pp. 193–5. See also lives of James I cited s.v.

SPOTTISWOODE, JOHN (1565–1639), Abp. of St. Andrews and historian. He was educated at Glasgow University and was originally a staunch supporter of strict Presbyterianism. When, however, at the end of the century the relations between King and Kirk deteriorated he became an adherent of the royal policy. In 1603 he accompanied *James I to London and was appointed Abp. of Glasgow. He did not receive episcopal consecration, however, until 1610, when, with two other Scottish bishops, he was consecrated (per saltum, on High Anglican principles) at London House. He became the chief agent of the King for suppressing the political influence of the Kirk, being a convinced advocate of *Erastian principles. In 1610 he was Moderator of the Assembly which limited the presbyteries, and in 1615 was translated to St. Andrews. At the General Assembly of the Kirk in 1618 he made himself Moderator without election, and succeeded in imposing the so-called Five Articles of *Perth (q.v.), heavy penalties being inflicted on ministers who refused to conform. In 1635 *Charles I appointed him Chancellor, and as such he gave loyal, if reluctant, support to the introduction of the Liturgy which he regarded as inexpedient. After the riots in 1637 he petitioned the King to desist from his policy, and when, in 1638, the *National Covenant had been signed, he fled to Newcastle. He was deposed by the Assembly some months later on a series of unjustified charges, including adultery, incest, and sacrilege. His chief works are Refutatio Libelli de Regimine Ecclesiae Scoticanae (1620) and The History of the Church of Scotland [to 1625] (1655; rev. ed., G. *Burnet, 1677; new ed., 3 vols., 1847–51), an amply documented official history reflecting the writer's position in the struggle.

Life prefixed to the first ed. of his History (1655), ascribed in the fourth ed. (1677) to B. *Duppa, and another by M. Russell prefixed to the latter's ed. of the History publd. for the Spottiswoode Society (3 vols., 1847–51), i, pp. xxix–cxxxvi. The fourth ed. of his History (1677) contains an appendix by G. Burnet, with addit. information to date. Study by I. Dunlop in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 48–61. T. F. Henderson in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 412–15.

SPURGEON, CHARLES HADDON (1834–92), *Baptist preacher. The descendant of several generations of *Independent ministers, he was born at Kelvedon, Essex, and became a Baptist in 1850. In the same year he preached his first sermon, and in 1852 he was appointed pastor of the Baptist congregation at Waterbeach. In 1854 he went to Southwark, where his sermons drew such crowds that a new church, the Metropolitan Tabernacle in Newington Causeway, had to be built for him. Apart from his preaching activities he founded a pastors' college, an orphanage, and a colportage association for the propagation of uplifting literature. Spurgeon was a strong Calvinist. He had a controversy in 1864 with the *Evangelical party of the C of E for remaining in a Church that taught Baptismal Regeneration, and also estranged considerable sections of his own community by rigid opposition to the more liberal methods of Biblical exegesis. These differences led to a rupture with the Baptist Union in 1887. He owed his fame as a preacher to his great oratorical gifts, humour, and shrewd common sense, which showed itself esp. in his treatment of contemporary problems. Among his works are The Saint and his Saviour (1857), Commenting and Commentaries (1876) and numerous volumes of sermons (translated into many languages).

Spurgeon's Autobiography, compiled from his Diary, Letters, and Records, by his wife [Susannah Spurgeon] and private secretary [Rev. W. J. Harrald] (4 vols., London, 1897–1900). Letters ed. Charles Spurgeon, son (London, [1923]). Full life by G. H. Pike (3 vols., London [1892–3]). The many other studies include those of W. Williams (London, 1895), C. Ray (ib., 1905), W. Y. Fullerton (ib., 1920), J. C. Carlile (ib., 1933), and E. W. Bacon (ib., 1967). A. R. Buckland in D.N.B., liii (1898), pp. 433–5.

SPY WEDNESDAY. The Wednesday before *Good Friday, so named as the day on which *Judas Iscariot betrayed Christ (Mt. 26. 14–16).

SPYRIDON, St., also 'Spiridion' (d. c. 348), Bp. of Tremithus in *Cyprus. He was a simple peasant who acc. to tradition had suffered in the *Diocletianic Persecution, and after becoming bishop had attended the Council of *Nicaea (though his name is not found in the episcopal lists of signatures). He was certainly present at the Council of *Sardica (c. 343). His life gathered to it many legends. Acc. to one, some thieves trying one night to rob him of his sheep discovered their hands tied miraculously behind their backs and were set free by Spyridon the next morning; acc. to another, he recovered a valuable ornament by the prayers of his deceased daughter, Irene (*Socrates, H.E., I. xii; *Sozomen, H.E., I. xi). Later writers attribute to him the recitation of the Creed at Nicaea that converted the heathen philosopher who had mocked at the Christian faith. Feast day, in the E., 12 Dec.; in the W., 14 Dec.

P. van den Ven, La Légende de S. Spyridon, évêque de Trimithonte (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xxxiii; 1953), incl. crit. ed. of basic texts; review article by G. Garitte in R.H.E., 1 (1955), pp. 125–40. B.G.H. (ed. 3, 1957), p. 247 f. (Nos. 1647 f.).

S.S.J.E. See Society of St. John the Evangelist.

STABAT MATER DOLOROSA. A hymn of unknown date descriptive of the Sorrows of the BVM at the Cross. Suggested authors are *Innocent III (d. 1216), St. *Bonaventure (d. 1274), and *Jacopone da Todi (d. 1306). It gradually came into liturgical use in the later Middle Ages, and in 1727 the Roman Missal prescribed it as a *sequence for the two feasts of the *Seven Sorrows of the BVM and in the corresponding Breviary offices. It survives as a sequence for optional use at Mass on 15 September, and may be used at the devotions of the *Stations of the Cross. Its popularity is reflected in the many English translations (among them 'At the Cross her station keeping') and the variety of musical settings (e.g. of G. P. da *Palestrina, F. J. Haydn, A. Dvořák, &c.). Another hymn, 'Stabat Mater speciosa', apparently modelled on the 'dolorosa', which describes the sorrows of the BVM at the manger in *Bethlehem, was also widely popular, though this hymn was never used liturgically.

Crit. ed. of text in C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister (edd.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (A.H.M.A., liv; 1915), pp. 312–18. C. Carbone, L'inno del dolore mariano 'Stabat Mater'. Studi critico-dogmatico-litterari (1911). C. Blume, S.J., 'Der Sänger der Sequenz auf die "Schmerzensreiche Mutter" ' in Stimmen der Zeit, lxxxix (1915), pp. 592–8. Raby, pp. 437–40, with bibl. p. 484 f.; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, ii (1965), pp. 287–90.

STABILITY (Lat. stabilitas loci). The vow taken by every monk under the Rule of St. *Benedict to remain till death attached to the monastery of his profession. This vow, which fosters the dependence of the monks on their abbot, was in keeping with St. Benedict's conception of the monastery as a large family, and has in fact exercised a potent and continuous influence in moulding the character of Benedictine monasticism.

Rule of St. Benedict, cap. lviii, 'De Disciplina Suscipiendorum Fratrum'. See also commentaries cited under Benedict, St., Rule of.

STAFF, Pastoral. See Crosier.

STAFFORD, ANTHONY (1587–1645?), devotional writer. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford. He is known as the author of The Female Glory; or the Life and Death of Our Blessed Lady, the Holy Virgin Mary, God's Own Immaculate Mother (1635), of which the language of exalted adulation addressed to the BVM and an engraving depicting the *Assumption gave great offence to the *Puritans, esp. when the work was licensed and defended by W. *Laud.

The book was edited and reprinted in 1860 by Orby Shipley (ed. 4, 1869). G. C. M. Smith, 'Anthony Stafford' in Notes and Queries, clii (1927), pp. 219–21, 239–43, 431.

STAINER, JOHN (1840–1901), organist and composer. He was born at *Southwark, became a chorister of *St. Paul's in 1849, and organist of St. Benedict and St. Peter, Paul's Wharf, in 1854. In 1857 he was appointed organist at St. Michael's, Tenbury, where he completed his studies under F. Gore Ouseley. In 1860 he became organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, and in 1861 organist to the university. Having been appointed organist at St. Paul's Cathedral in 1872, he carried out important reforms in its service music, which became famous for beauty and reverence under his direction. He helped to found the Musical Association in 1847, and in 1881 became principal of the National Training School for Music. From 1889 to 1899 he was professor of music in the university of Oxford, and from 1900 to his death Master of the Musicians' Company. His principal works were oratorios and cantatas, among them St. Mary Magdalen, performed at the *Gloucester Festival of 1887, The Crucifixion (1887), and The Story of the Cross (1893). His anthems include 'Lead, kindly Light', 'O clap your Hands', and 'I saw the Lord'. He also composed hymn tunes, many of which are reproduced in Hymns, Ancient and Modern.* His compositions are typical and often good examples of their period, showing influences from various schools, notably F. Mendelssohn and C. F. Gounod, but his distinction lies more in his work as an organist and choirmaster, and as an all-round musician and scholar.

F. G. E[dwards], 'John Stainer' in The Musical Times, xlii (1901), pp. 297–309. E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music, revised ed. by J. A. Westrup (1969), pp. 243–7. W. G. McNaught in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 377–9, s.v.; G. Grove [with later additions] in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), viii (1954), p. 39 f.

STALLS. The fixed seats for the clergy and others on both sides of the choirs of cathedral and certain other churches. They are usually separated by high projecting arms, often richly carved, and sometimes surmounted by canopies. The seats can frequently be turned back, disclosing a bracket called a '*misericord' (sometimes carved with a grotesque design). Knightly orders have stalls for their members, the Knights of the Garter, e.g., having stalls assigned to them in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. See also Installation.

F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, ii (1910), pp. 1–100.

STANBROOK ABBEY. The Abbey of Our Lady of Consolation, Callow End, near *Worcester, a monastery of enclosed *Benedictine nuns, was founded at Cambrai in 1625 within the English Benedictine Congregation. Strongly influenced by their spiritual director, Dom Augustine *Baker, the nuns were instrumental through their transcriptions in preserving his teaching. In 1793 the Revolutionaries confiscated all their property and imprisoned them at Compiègne. The survivors came to England in 1795, and, after residing for a time at Woolton in Merseyside and later at Abbots Salford in Warwickshire, they settled at Stanbrook Hall in 1838. The abbey church, designed by E. W. *Pugin, was completed in 1871, and new monastic buildings were soon afterwards erected. The community played a notable part in the 19th cent. restoration of liturgical and monastic life. Today the abbey is widely known for its fine printing.

'Records of the Abbey of Our Lady of Consolation at Cambrai, 1620–1793', contributed by Cecilia Heywood, O.S.B., ed. J. Gillow, in Catholic Record Society Miscellanea, viii (Catholic Record Society, xiii; 1913), pp. 1–85. [L. M. McLachlan, O.S.B.,] Stanbrook Abbey. A Sketch of its History, 1625–1925 (1925). In a Great Tradition. Tribute to Dame Laurentia McLachlan, Abbess of Stanbrook, by the Benedictines of Stanbrook (1956). The Stanbrook Abbey Press. Ninety-two years of its history written . . . by the Benedictines of Stanbrook (Worcester, 1970). See also bibl. to More, Dame Gertrude.

STANISLAUS, St. (1030–79), Patron of Poland. The son of a noble family, he was educated at Gniezno, and perh. at *Paris, and became Bp. of Cracow in 1072. In imposing strict discipline in his diocese, he soon came into conflict with King Boleslav II, whom he repeatedly reproved for his scandalous conduct. Eventually he excommunicated the King, and Boleslav, acc. to tradition, slew him with his own hand while he was offering Mass. He was canonized by *Innocent IV in 1253, and his first biography, which is full of purely legendary material, dates from that time. In 1904 a Polish historian, T. Wojciechowski, provoked much discussion by alleging, in a work on Poland in the 11th cent., that Stanislaus had rightly been put to death for treason. Feast day, 11 April (formerly 7 May; at Cracow, 8 May).

Two early lives, with miracles cited in procedure for canonization, ed. W. Ketrzyński in Monumenta Poloniae Historica, iv (Lwów, 1884), pp. 238–438; excerpts ed. M. Perlbach in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxix (1892), pp. 501–17. 15th-cent. life by J. Dlugossius printed in AA.SS., May II (1680), pp. 200–80. B.H.L. (pt. 2, 1901), p. 1134 f., Nos 7832–43. T. Wojciechowski, Szkice Historyczne Jedenastego Wieku (ed. 3, 1950), pp. 221–340, passim, and introd. by A. Gieysztor, pp. 17–19. K. W. Schenk, Kult liturgiczny Św. Stanisława Biskupa na Śląsku (Lublin, 1959), with summary in German and extensive bibl.

STANLEY, ARTHUR PENRHYN (1815–81), Broad Church Anglican divine. He was educated at Rugby under T. *Arnold and felt his master's influence all his life. In 1834 he went up to Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1838 was elected a Fellow of University College. In the ecclesiastical struggles of the period he consistently advocated toleration for both *Tractarian and liberal extremes. He was Canon of *Canterbury from 1851 to 1858, professor of ecclesiastical history at Oxford from 1856 to 1864, and Dean of *Westminster from 1864 till his death. He made it his aim at Westminster to make the Abbey a national shrine for all, irrespective of dogmatic creed, and gave much offence to orthodox Churchmen by his invitation to all the scholars who had produced the RV, among them a Unitarian, to receive Holy Communion in the Abbey. In the *Colenso case he did not agree with the bishop, but was strongly opposed to disciplinary action against him. His publications include Life and Correspondence of Dr. Arnold (1844), Memorials of Canterbury (1854), Sinai and Palestine (1856), Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church (1861), Lectures on the History of the Jewish Church (3 parts, 1863–76), and volumes of sermons.

Letters and Verses of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., between the Years 1829 and 1881, ed. R. E. Prothero (London, 1895). R. E. Prothero–G. G. Bradley, The Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley (2 vols., 1893). Modern memoir, with further letters, ed. A. V. Baillie–H. Bolitho, A Victorian Dean (1930). R. E. Prothero in D.N.B., liv (1898), pp. 44–8; G. W. E. Russell in D.E.C.H., p. 571 f.

STANLEY, HENRY MORTON (1841–1904), explorer, administrator, author, and journalist. His original name was John Rowlands, but in 1859 he took the name of Henry Morton Stanley, after his adoptive father. Appointed in 1868 foreign correspondent to the New York Herald, he left Zanzibar on 21 Mar. 1871 to seek D. *Livingstone, and they met on the following 10 Nov. This expedition led to various other journeys of exploration between 1873 and 1889, in the course of which he discovered and reported on the nature of over two million sq. miles of the interior of Africa. His communications with the *C.M.S. during his crossing of Africa from east to west in 1874–7 led to the beginning of mission work in Uganda, and his discoveries probably did more than those of any other man to make Christian missionary work possible in the heart of the Continent.

Autobiography ed. by Dorothy Stanley, widow (London, 1909), with life continued from his Journal and Notes, pp. 219–539, and list of his works, which contain much autobiographical material, p. 540. Authorized life by F. Hird (London [1935]). Other lives by H. W. Little (London, 1890), J. Wassermann (Berlin, 1932; Eng. tr., 1932); shorter lives by A. Montefiore-Brice (London, [1907]), P. Price (ib., [1931]) and A. J. A. Symons ('Great Lives', London, 1933), and, with that of Livingstone, by M. Douglas (London, 1900). W. Hoffmann, With Stanley in Africa (1938). S. White, Lost Empire on the Nile. H. M. Stanley, Emin Pasha and the Imperialists (1961). C. L. Skinner in Dict. Amer. Biog., xvii (1935), pp. 509–13.

STANTON, ARTHUR HENRY (1839–1913), Anglo-Catholic priest. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and in 1862 ordained to the title of St. Alban's, Holborn, where he remained as a curate for 50 years. The depth and sincerity of his religious faith, combined with his personal attractiveness, won him the confidence of thousands of men in one of the roughest parts of London, while his eloquent and powerful preaching made a great appeal to people of all classes. Like many other Anglo-Catholic priests of that time, he met with much opposition at the hands of the more official elements in the Church.

Faithful Stewardship and other Sermons, ed. E. F. Russell (London, 1916), and Last Sermons in S. Alban's, Holborn, ed. id. (ib. [1916]), both ed. from reports of a shorthand writer. Further collection of Sermon Outlines from his own manuscripts, ed. id. (2 vols., ib., 1917–19). Life by G. W. E. Russell (London, 1917). E. F. Russell in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 506 f.

STAPELDON, WALTER DE (c. 1261 – 1326), Bp. of *Exeter. Probably a native of Annery in Devon, he became professor of canon law at Oxford and chaplain to *Clement V. In 1308 he was consecrated to the see of Exeter. As Lord Treasurer (from 1320) he reformed the royal exchequer; he helped to rebuild Exeter Cathedral, and founded Stapeldon Hall, which became Exeter College, Oxford. He was murdered by the London mob for his association with the misgovernment of Edward II.

Register ed. F. C. Hingeston-Randolph (1892). G. Oliver, Lives of the Bishops of Exeter (1861), pp. 54–70. C. W. Boase, Register of . . . Exeter College, Oxford (O.H.S., xxvii; 1894), pp. iii–v; W. K. Stride, Exeter College (1900), pp. 1–11. J. P. V. D. Balsdon, 'Walter de Stapeldon and the Founding of Exeter College' in Devon and Cornwall Notes and Queries, xvii (1933), pp. 147–52. F. C. Hingeston-Randolph in D.N.B., liv (1898), p. 92 f., s.v.; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1764–5.

STAPLETON, THOMAS (1535–98), RC controversialist. He was born at Henfield in W. Sussex and educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, of which he was a Fellow. He became a prebendary of *Chichester under *Mary in 1558, but fled on *Elizabeth's accession to Louvain, where he studied theology. Returning to England, he declined to renounce the authority of the Pope, was deprived of his prebend in 1563, and went back to Louvain. In 1569 he moved to *Douai and began to teach there in the university faculty of theology, and from 1585 also in the Jesuit college. In 1590 he was given by *Philip II the professorship of Scripture at Louvain as the successor of M. *Baius. Shortly afterwards he became Dean of Hilverenbeck, and in 1597 *Clement VIII made him *protonotary apostolic. Stapleton was an able, skilful and erudite controversialist. The circumstances of his time led him to treat esp. of the relation of the Pope to the temporal power, a matter in which he ascribed more limited rights to the Pope than many RC writers. He was a prolific author. Among his more important works are the Principiorum Fidei Doctrinalium Demonstratio (1578); Tres Thomae (1588), viz. the Apostle, St. Thomas *Becket, and St. Thomas *More; and Auctoritatis Ecclesiasticae Defensio (1592), directed against W. *Whitaker.

Lat. tr. of his Eng. works publ. 4 vols., Paris, 1620, with brief life by T. Holland in vol. i (no pagination). Mod. ed. of his Eng. tr. of *Bede's Historia Ecclesiastica (orig. publ. Antwerp, 1565; Oxford, 1930; also ed. P. Hereford, London, 1935); Eng. tr. of his Lat. life of Sir Thomas More from Tres Thomae (orig. publ. Douai, 1588) by P. E. Hallett (London, 1928). M. R. O'Connell, Thomas Stapleton and the Counter Reformation (Yale Publications in Religion, ix; 1964). H. Schützeichel, Wesen und Gegenstand der kirchlichen Lehrautorität nach Thomas Stapleton (Trierer theologische Studien, xx; 1966); M. Seybold, Glaube und Rechtfertigung bei Thomas Stapleton (Konfessionskundliche und kontroverstheologische Studien, xxi; 1967). M. Richards, 'Thomas Stapleton' in J.E.H., xviii (1967), pp. 187–99. T. Cooper in D.N.B., liv (1898), pp. 101–4, s.v.

STAR OF BETHLEHEM, The. The star seen by the wise men 'in the east' at the birth of Christ and which 'went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was' [i.e. at *Bethlehem] (Mt. 2. 1–11). Several attempts have been made to connect the star with unusual astronomical phenomena at the time, J. *Kepler, e.g., calculating that there was a conjunction of the planets, Jupiter and Saturn, in 7 B.C.; but such rationalizations of the story have now been generally abandoned.

STARETZ. In the Russian Church a religious leader who is sought out as a spiritual counsellor because of his exceptional personal holiness. He has no formal position in the ecclesiastical hierarchy, but owes his authority to his spiritual gifts. A staretz is usually a monk, but may on occasion be a lay man or woman. The Russian word meant orig. just 'an old man'.

STAROVERY. Another name for the Russian sect of the *Old Believers (q.v.).

STATE PRAYERS. In the BCP, the prayers for the Sovereign and the Royal Family towards the end of *Mattins and *Evensong.

F. Streatfeild, The State Prayers and other Variations in the Book of Common Prayer (1950), pp. 9–30. C. L. Berry, '"... and all the Royal Family" ' in History Today, xvi (1966), p. 276 f.

STATE SERVICES. In the C of E, the services appointed to commemorate days of national rejoicing or deliverance. Since the Reformation the rubrics have required the anniversary of the reigning sovereign's accession to be so observed. In the 17th cent., services to mark the *Gunpowder Plot (5 Nov.), the beheading of *Charles I (30 Jan.), and the birth and return of *Charles II (both 29 May) were drawn up. Though these services have never been an integral part of the BCP, and thus did not fall under the provisions of the Acts of *Uniformity, they were formerly printed at the end of the Book. In 1859 all except the 'Accession Service' were withdrawn.

STATES OF THE CHURCH. Those parts of Italy and the territory of *Avignon and Venaissin in France which at one time acknowledged the temporal sovereignty of the Papacy. Some of these lands, which were a special gift to the Basilica of *St. Peter at Rome, were also known as the '*Patrimony of St. Peter' (q.v.). Their beginnings date from the edict of *Constantine in 321, which declared the Church capable of holding and transmitting property, but their possession constantly involved the Popes in temporal disputes, which added nothing to their spiritual authority. See also Stephen II and Donation of Constantine.

In 1791 the Papal territories situate in France were lost to the new republic, and by 1861 the Papacy was left with Rome alone, all the rest having been absorbed in the kingdom of Italy. In 1870 Rome itself was lost and the Pope withdrew into the *Vatican. By the Law of *Guarantees the new secular state allotted to the Pope a pension and declared the basilicas and palaces of the *Lateran and the Vatican and the country seat of *Castel Gandolfo to be extraterritorial. The Popes refused to accept this settlement, but in 1929 the *Lateran treaty between *Pius XI and Fascist Italy contained an agreement on much the same lines and constituted the 'Vatican City' a separate state.

For the early history of the Papal States see bibl. to Patrimony of St. Peter. W. Barry, The Papal Monarchy from St. Gregory the Great to Boniface VIII, 590–1303 (1902). G. Ermini, 'La libertà comunale nello Stato della Chiesa da Innocenzo III all'Arbornoz (1198–1367)' in Archivio della Società Romana di Storia Patria, xlix (1926), pp. 5–126. D. [P.] Waley, The Papal State in the Thirteenth Century (1961). P. Partner, The Papal State under Martin V. The administration and government of the temporal power in the early fifteenth century (1958). M. Brosch, Geschichte des Kirchenstaats [1500–1800] (Geschichte der europäischen Staaten, xli and xliii; 1880–2). J. *Hergenröther, Der Kirchenstaat seit der französischen Revolution (1860). L. C. Farini, Lo stato romano dall'anno 1815 all'anno 1850 (2 vols., 1850; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1851–4, vols. i–iii being tr. by W. E. *Gladstone). G. Mollat, La Question romaine de Pie VI à Pie XI (Bibliothèque de l'Enseignement de l'Histoire Ecclésiastique, 1932), with bibl. Id., 'La Question romaine sous Grégoire XVI et Pie IX' in Rev. S.R., xxvi (1952), pp. 132–42. N. Miko, Das Ende des Kirchenstaates (Veröffentlichungen des Österreichischen Kulturinstitutes in Rom. Abteilung für historische Studien, i–iv; 1962–70). G. Schnürer in C.E., xiv (1912), pp. 257–68, s.v.; P. Partner and others in N.C.E., xiii (1969), pp. 655–62, s.v. See also bibl. to Lateran Treaty and under individual Popes.

STATION DAYS. Certain days, until 1970 marked in the Roman Missal, on which the Pope formerly celebrated Mass in the so-called 'station churches' in Rome. The solemnity was enhanced by processions of clergy and people from one church, called 'collecta', to the station church ('statio' being from early times the term for the Christian assemblies of worship) where the Pope was to offer Mass, while litanies and other prayers were recited on the way. Acc. to tradition it was St. Gregory the Great who assigned its special church to each of the station days. In the Würzburg comes (prob. 8th cent., but reflecting practices going back to the time of Gregory), the station days comprised the Marian feasts, the *Ember Days, Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, *Septuagesima and *Sexagesima Sundays, most of the Sundays and ferias in Lent (except the Thursdays), Easter Sunday and the following weekdays and Whitsunday and the following weekdays. Certain other days came to be added later, including the missing Thursdays in Lent, and various other feasts and vigils, eventually making 87 days in all. The Papal Station Masses fell into disuse esp. during the exile of the Popes at *Avignon, but traces of the ancient custom survive in the indulgences attached to visits to the station churches under certain conditions. Among the most famous of the station churches are *Santa Maria Maggiore for the First Sunday in Advent, the First and Third Mass on Christmas Day, and Easter Day, the church of St. John *Lateran for Holy Saturday, and Santa Sabina, established by *Urban VIII for Ash Wednesday, where the Popes distributed the ashes to the people. The station Masses were also imitated by some churches outside Rome, e.g. at Milan. See also Rome, Churches of.

H. Grisar, S.J., 'Die Stationsfeier und der erste römische Ordo' in Z.K.T., ix (1885), pp. 385–422. Id., Das Missale im Lichte römischer Stadtgeschichte. Stationen, Perikopen, Gebräuche (1925). J. P. Kirsch, 'Origine e carattere primitivo delle stazioni liturgiche di Roma' in Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Ser. iii, Rendiconti, iii (1925), pp. 123–41. Id., Die Stationskirchen des Missale Romanum (Ecclesia Orans, xix; 1926). R. Hierzegger, 'Collecta und Statio. Die römischen Stationsprozessionen im frühen Mittelalter' in Z.K.T., lx (1936), pp. 511–54. Christine Mohrmann, 'Statio' in V.C., vii (1953), pp. 221–45. R. Zerfass, 'Die Idee der römischen Stationsfeier und ihr Fortleben' in Liturgisches Jahrbuch, viii (1958), pp. 218–29. J. Bonsirven, 'Notre Statio liturgique est-elle empruntée au culte juif?' in Rech. S.R., xv (1925), pp. 258–66. G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1291–7, s.v. 'Stazione liturgica', with further bibl.

STATIONS OF THE CROSS. A series of 14 pictures or carvings, designed for devotional purposes, which depict incidents in the last journey of Christ from *Pilate's house to His entombment. They are commonly arranged round the walls of a church, and it is a popular devotion, esp. during *Lent and *Passiontide, to visit the stations in order, reciting prayers and meditating on each incident. The devotion probably arose out of the practice, attested from an early date, of pilgrims at *Jerusalem following the traditional route from Pilate's house to *Calvary and wishing to reproduce an analogous devotion at home. Its currency dates from the later Middle Ages, when it was popularized esp. by the *Franciscans, but the final selection of incidents was not settled until the 18th–19th cents. In the RC Church an *indulgence is attached to the devotion. The 14 incidents of which the stations usually consist are: (1) Christ is condemned to death; (2) Christ receives the cross; (3) His first fall; (4) He meets His Mother; (5) *Simon of Cyrene is made to bear the cross; (6) Christ's face is wiped by *Veronica; (7) His second fall; (8) He meets the women of Jerusalem; (9) His third fall; (10) He is stripped of His garments; (11) He is nailed to the cross; (12) Christ dies on the cross; (13) His body is taken down from the cross; (14) His body is laid in the tomb.

H. Thurston, S.J., The Stations of the Cross. An Account of their History and Devotional Purpose (1906), with reff.

STATUTA ECCLESIAE ANTIQUA (Lat., 'The Ancient Statutes of the Church'). A document comprising a profession of faith, disciplinary canons and a ritual for *ordination. It is preserved in very many ancient MSS., which can be divided into Gallican, Italian and Spanish families. Acc. to the *Hispana collection of canons, the Statuta were the decrees of the Fourth Council of Carthage of 398; it was from this source that they were first known and were long cited. It was not until 1757 that the *Ballerini brothers showed that the Statuta originated from the south of Gaul and were composed in the second half of the 5th cent. Some scholars tried to connect them with *Caesarius of Arles, but this attribution has now been rejected. More recently C. Munier has suggested that they were compiled by *Gennadius of Marseilles.

The canons are found in all the principal edd. of the Councils under 'Council of Carthage of 398'. The Hispana form is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxiv, 199–208; the Ballerini ed., ib., lvi, 879–89. Crit. ed., with full discussion, by C. Munier (Bibliothèque de l'Institut de Droit Canonique de l'Université de Strasbourg, v; 1960); text repr. in his Concilia Galliae A.314–A.506 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 162–88. F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des kanonischen Rechts, i (1870), pp. 382–94. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 102–20. A. Malnory, Saint Césaire, évêque d'Arles (Paris thesis, 1894; also publd. in the Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, ciii, 1894), pp. 50–62. B. Botte, O.S.B., 'Le Rituel d'ordination des Statuta Ecclesiae antiqua' in R.T.A.M., xi (1939), pp. 223–41.

STATUTES OF PROVISORS. See Provisors, Statutes of.

STEEN, CORNELIS CORNELISSEN VAN DEN. See Cornelius a Lapide.

STEIN, EDITH (1891–1942), in religion Teresa Benedicta a Cruce, *Carmelite nun. A native of Breslau, of Jewish family, she studied at Göttingen and Freiburg i.Br. under E. Husserl and became a leading figure of the *Phenomenological School. Having lost faith in her ancestral religion in early childhood, she was received into the RC Church in 1922, and from then on sought to interpret Phenomenology from a Thomist standpoint. She took the Carmelite habit at Cologne in 1934; in 1938 she was transferred to Holland but during the Nazi occupation she was taken to Poland and put to death in a gas-chamber. Her philosophical publications include 'Beiträge zur philosophischen Begründung der Psychologie und der Geisteswissenschaften' in Jahrbuch für Philosophie und phänomenologische Forschung, v (1922), pp. 1–283, and 'Eine Untersuchung über den Staat', ib., vii (1925), pp. 1–123. Most of her later works remained unpublished at her death.

Collected works ed. L. Gelber–R. Leuven, O.C.D. (Louvain, 1950 ff.). Eng. tr. of Selected Writings by Hilda [C.] Graef (1956) and of Kreuzeswissenschaft (vol. i of Collected works) as The Science of the Cross by id. (1960). Biography by Sr. Teresa Renata de Spiritu Sancto, Prioress of Carmelite Convent, Cologne (Nuremberg, 1948; Eng. tr., 1952). Hilda C. Graef, The Scholar and the Cross. The Life and Work of Edith Stein (1955).

STEINER, RUDOLF (1861–1925), founder of *Anthroposophy (q.v.). The son of a stationmaster and apparently given a Catholic upbringing, he studied natural science at Vienna University and from 1890 to 1897 he was engaged on the Weimar ed. of the works of J. W. Goethe. In the next years he sought to elaborate a scientific method of studying the world of spirit and lectured widely on his conclusions. He was co-editor for a time of a literary magazine, and in 1902 he became the leader of a German section of the *Theosophical Society, but rejected the predominantly Eastern associations of the main body. In 1913 Steiner founded the Anthroposophical Society as an independent association, building the Goetheanum at Dornach near Basle as its headquarters. His aim was to develop the faculty of spirit cognition inherent in ordinary people and to put them into touch with the spiritual world from which materialism had long estranged them. He taught the original nobility of the human spirit and a doctrine of immortality, supporting his teaching by a claimed clairvoyance. His extensive writings, which were mostly founded on his lectures, include Die Philosophie der Freiheit (1894; Eng. tr., 1916), Theosophie. Einführung in übersinnliche Welterkenntnis und Menschenbestimmung (1904; Eng. tr., 1910), and Die Geheimwissenschaft im Umriss (1910; Eng. tr., 1914).

The principal authority for his life is Steiner's autobiography, written when he was about 60; it was publd. at Dornach, 1925; Eng. tr., London, 1928. Details of his lectures by A. Arenson, Ein Führer durch die Vortragszyklen Rudolf Steiners (1–50) (3 vols., 1930). A. P. Shepherd, A Scientist of the Invisible. An Introduction to the Life and Work of Rudolf Steiner (1954). A. W. Harwood (ed.), The Faithful Thinker. Centenary Essays on the Work and Thought of Rudolf Steiner (1961). P. M. Allen, The Writings and Lectures of Rudolf Steiner. A Chronological Bibliography of his Books, Lectures, Addresses, Courses, Cycles, Essays and Reports as published in English translation (New York, 1956); Rudolf Steiner. Das literarische und künstlerische Werk. Eine bibliographische Übersicht, herausgegeben von der Rudolf Steiner-Nachlassverwaltung (Dornach, Switzerland, 1961).

'STEPHANUS' (Estienne). A family of scholar-printers who worked at *Paris and Geneva in the 16th and 17th cents.

ROBERT [I] ESTIENNE (1503–59), Printer to Francis I. He is famous chiefly for his editions of the Scriptures and for his Thesaurus Linguae Latinae, first published in 1532, and for long a standard work. In his Latin Bibles, of which those of 1528, 1532, and 1540 are of special importance, he tried to follow as closely as possible the original text of St. *Jerome. Of his editions of the Hebrew OT the chief are those of 1539 and 1544–6. In 1544 he began to print Greek, first using the famous Garamond type in his editio princeps of *Eusebius's Historia Ecclesiastica. Among his later editions of the Fathers is that of *Justin Martyr (1551). His most important edition of the Greek NT is that of 1550. It was the earliest to contain a critical apparatus, and its text is almost identical with the '*textus receptus' (q.v.). His annotations to his Bibles provoked severe attacks from the *Sorbonne, which led him to flee to Geneva in 1551 where he became a *Calvinist. In his NT, published at Geneva in the same year, he introduced the division into verses arranged by himself, which is still used today. He subsequently published many of J. Calvin's works.

HENRI [II] ESTIENNE (1528–98), Robert's eldest son, who took over his father's establishment at Geneva. He published several editiones principes, including works by *Athenagoras, *Athanasius (spurious), and *Synesius. His fame rests chiefly on his Thesaurus Linguae Graecae (5 vols., 1572), a work of outstanding erudition which remained indispensable to generations of Greek scholars and was twice republished in the 19th cent. (London, 1815–25; Paris, 1831–63).

Two of Robert's other sons were of some importance: Robert [II] Estienne (1530–71), who returned to France and the RC Church, and in 1561 succeeded his father as Printer to the King; he enjoyed the protection of the Chancellor of France, Michel de l'Hôpital; and François Estienne (b. c. 1539), who supplemented the work of Henri at Geneva. Both printed Bibles.

M. Maittaire, Stephanorum Historia, Vitas Ipsorum ac Libros Complectens (London, 1709). A. A. Renouard, Annales de l'imprimerie des Estienne, ou histoire de la famille des Estienne et de ses éditions (2 vols., 1837–8; ed. 2, 1843). M. *Pattison in Quarterly Review, cxvii (1856), pp. 323–64, repr. as 'The Stephenses' in Essays, ed. H. Nettleship (Oxford, 1889), i, pp. 67–123. H. Stein (ed.), 'Nouveaux Documents sur les Estienne, imprimeurs parisiens (1517–1665)' in Mémoires de la Société de l'Histoire de Paris et de l'Île-de-France, xxii (1895), pp. 249–95. L. Clément, Henri Estienne et son œuvre française (Paris thesis, 1898). [A.] Elizabeth Armstrong, Robert Estienne, Royal Printer (Cambridge, 1954). DeW. T. Starnes, Robert Estienne's Influence on Lexicography (Austin, Texas [1963]). A. E. Tyler, 'Jacques Lefèvre d'Étaples and Henry Estienne the Elder 1502–20' in W. [G.] Moore and others (edd.), The French Mind. Studies in honour of Gustave Rudler (Oxford, 1952), pp. 17–33; R. M. Kingdon, 'The Business Activities of Printers Henri et François Estienne' in G. Berthoud and others, Aspects de la propagande religieuse (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, xxviii; Geneva, 1957), pp. 258–75; Elizabeth Armstrong, 'Robert (II) Estienne à Paris (1556–1570)' in Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance. Travaux et documents, xx (1958), pp. 349–69.

STEPHEN, St. (d. c. 35), protomartyr and, acc. to tradition, the first deacon. Most probably a Hellenistic Jew, he was one of 'the seven' who were appointed by the Apostles to 'serve tables' in *Jerusalem (Acts 6. 5). He also took part in the preaching and performed miracles (Acts 6. 8 ff.), thus incurring the hostility of the Jews, who accused him to the *Sanhedrin. There he delivered the great discourse reproduced in Acts 7. 2–53, setting out by a recapitulation of Israel's history that God does not depend on the Temple, which he had been accused of blaspheming, and that Christ was the prophet announced by *Moses, whom the Jews had killed. Incensed at his denunciations, his accusers, apparently without formal trial, had him stoned acc. to the Mosaic Law, the witnesses laying their clothes at the feet of Saul, the future St. *Paul, on whom Stephen's death made a deep impression. He died confessing Christ and asking forgiveness for his persecutors, and was buried by 'devout men' (Acts 8. 2). His tomb was not known until its discovery by the priest Lucian in 415. His feast has been celebrated on 26 Dec. from the end of the 4th cent., while at one time a second feast, 'Inventio S. Stephani', commemorating the finding of his relics, was also kept on 3 Aug. A church was built in his honour outside the Damascus Gate by the Empress Eudoxia in 455–60. Its ruins were discovered by the *Dominicans in 1882 and a new church erected on the site. St. Stephen was one of the most popular saints of the Middle Ages, esp. on the Continent. He is also commemorated in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. In the E. Church his feast is kept on 27 Dec.

For St. Stephen himself the main material is to be found in commentaries on Acts, cited s.v., esp. that of E. Jacquier (Paris, 1926), pp. 194–245. M. Simon, St. Stephen and the Hellenists in the Primitive Church (1958). J. Bihler, Die Stephanusgeschichte im Zusammenhang der Apostelgeschichte (Münchener Theologische Studien. I. Historische Abteilung, xvi; 1963). M. H. Scharlemann, Stephen: a singular saint (Analecta Biblica, xxxiv; Rome, 1968). On the church at Jerusalem, M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., Saint Étienne et son sanctuaire à Jérusalem (1894); C. Mommert, Saint Étienne et ses sanctuaires à Jérusalem (Jerusalem, &c., 1912); [L.] H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1914), pp. 743–804. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (1922), cols. 624–71, s.v. 'Étienne (Martyre et sépulture de saint)'; F. M. Abel, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1132–46, s.v. 'Étienne (Saint)'; A. P. Frutaz–A. Romeo in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1298–1304, s.v. 'Stefano, Santo', with further bibl.

STEPHEN I, St. (d. 257), Pope from 12 May 254. He was a Roman by birth of the gens Julia and successor to Pope Lucius I. On his accession he (with St. *Cyprian) was at once pressed by Faustinus, Bp. of Lyons, to intervene in the affairs of S. Gaul where Marcian, Bp. of Arles, had embraced *Novatianist doctrines. Soon afterwards he also intervened in *Spain in another dispute arising out of the Decian Persecution. Later he became involved in a long and bitter dispute with Cyprian over the validity of Baptism by heretics, which Cyprian, with the support of three African councils and Firmilian, Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia, held to be null and void; and Stephen even refused to see a delegation from Carthage in 256. Acc. to the (unreliable) Liber Pontificalis, he introduced the rule that clerics should wear special clothes at their ministrations. He is traditionally reckoned a martyr, but on insufficient evidence. Feast day, formerly 2 Aug.

Two letters ascribed to Pope Stephen I are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, iii, 1033–44. Jaffé, i, p. 20 f. The principal sources are Cyprian, Epp., lxvii–lxxv; *Eusebius, H.E., vii, 2–5; and L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 68 and 154. AA.SS., Aug. I (1733), pp. 112–46, incl. Lat. text of 'Acta', pp. 139–46; 'Acta' translated into Lat. from Armenian text by P. Martin in Anal. Boll., i (1882), pp. 470–84. J. Ernst, Stephan I und der Ketzertaufstreit (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, v, Hft. 4; 1905); id., 'Die Stellung der römischen Kirche zur Ketzertauffrage vor und unmittelbar nach Papst Stephan I' in Z.K.T., xxix (1905), pp. 258–98. H. Koch, 'Zwei Erlasse Papst Stephans I in sprachgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung' in Philologus, lxxxvi (1930), pp. 128–32. H. K. Mann in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 288, s.v.; A. Clerval in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 970–3, s.v. 'Étienne (1) Ier (Saint)'.

STEPHEN II (III) (d. 757), Pope from 752. (He is sometimes counted the third of his name, 'Stephen II' having died four days after his election.) Under him the Papacy finally freed itself from the weakened Byzantine power and became allied with the rising Frankish dynasty, a fact which was to determine the relations between Church and Empire for several centuries. When the Lombard king, Aistulf, in defiance of a treaty concluded with Stephen shortly before, besieged Rome, the Pope, after turning in vain to the Byzantine Emperor for help, crossed the Alps to ask the assistance of the Frankish king, *Pepin. After obtaining from him the much discussed 'Donation' of Quiercy (754), Stephen returned to Rome, which was finally delivered from the Lombard threat by Pepin's second campaign in 756. See also Patrimony of St. Peter.

Letters preserved in the Codex Carolingus (ed. W. Gundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 487–507). Jaffé, i, pp. 271–7. L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 440–62. G. Schnürer, 'Der Verfasser der Vita Stephani II im Liber Pontificalis' in Hist. J., xi (1890), pp. 425–38. C. Rodenburg, Pippin, Karlmann und Papst Stephan II (Historische Studien, clii; 1923). L. Levillain, 'L'Avènement de la dynastie carolingienne et les origines de l'état pontifical (749–757)' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, xciv (1933), pp. 225–95. M. Buchner, Das Vizepapsttum des Abtes von St.-Denis. Studien zur 'Offenbarung des Papstes Stephan II.' ('Revelatio') und ihrem Anhang ('Gesta') (1928); O. Bertolini, 'Il problema delle origini del potere temporale dei papi nei suoi presupposti teoretici iniziali: il concetto di "Restitutio" nelle prime cessioni territoriali (756–757) alla Chiesa di Roma' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, i (Lateranum, N.S., xiv; 1948), pp. 103–71. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (ed. 2, 1904), pp. 52–78. Mann, i (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 289–330; Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 423–30. G. Mollat in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1308 f., s.v. 'Stefano II (III)'; A. Dumas in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1184–90, s.v. 'Étienne II'.

STEPHEN III (IV) (d. 772), Pope from 768. Elected as the candidate of the Frankish party after the expulsion of the usurper Constantine II, he held a synod at the *Lateran (769) to regularize the situation created by Constantine's irregular election and ordinations, which were declared null. The same synod excluded laymen from the Papal elections, confirmed the veneration of images, and anathematized the *iconoclastic Synod of 754. In the following years the Pope tried in vain to prevent a marriage between *Charlemagne and the daughter of the Lombard king, Desiderius, but finally abandoned the Franks and allied himself with the Lombards, a policy revoked by his successor *Hadrian I.

Letters preserved in the Codex Carolingus (ed. W. Gundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 558–67). Jaffé, i, pp. 284–8. LP (Duchesne), i, pp. 468–85. O. Bertolini, 'La caduta del primicerio Cristoforo (771) nelle versioni dei contemporanei, e le correnti anti-longobarde e filolongobarde in Roma alla fine del pontificato di Stefano III (771–772)' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, i (1947), pp. 227–62 and 349–78. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (ed. 2, 1904), pp. 123–33. Mann, i (pt. 2, 1902), pp. 361–93. Fliche–Martin, vi (1937), pp. 38–49. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 952–73. G. Mollat in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1309 f., s.v. 'Stefano III (IV)'; A. Dumas in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1190–93, s.v. 'Étienne III'.

STEPHEN, St. (975–1038), first king of *Hungary. He became a Christian, with his father, in 985, and on his accession to the Hungarian throne in 997 set out to christianize his country, a work which was partly undone by his pagan successors. A strong supporter of the Papacy, he obtained in 1001 a royal crown from the Pope, part of which is incorporated into the crown preserved at Budapest. At about the same date he established episcopal sees throughout Hungary. He was canonized in 1083 together with his son, St. Emeric. His feast (now an optional memorial) is kept on 16 Aug. (formerly 2 Sept.); but in Hungary 20 Aug., the day of the translation of his relics, is his principal festival.

Two early lives (prob. 11th cent.), known as the Vita Major and the Vita Minor, ed. W. Wattenbach in M.G.H., Scriptores, xi (1854), pp. 224–42. A 12th cent. life by Hartwick, perh. Bp. of Veszprem, pr. in AA.SS., Sept. I (1746), pp. 562–75, with other material, pp. 456–562. Vita major and vita minor, and life by Hartwick, also ed. Emma Bartoniek in Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum, ed. E. Szentpétery, ii (Budapest, 1938), pp. 363–440, with material on his son, Emeric, pp. 441–60. E. Horn, Saint Étienne, roi apostolique de Hongrie ('Les Saints', 1899); G. Bónis, István Király (Budapest, 1956). Special number of the Archivum Europae Centro-Orientalis, iv (Budapest, 1938). R. F. Kaindl, 'Studien zu den ungarischen Geschichtsquellen', I: 'Ueber das Verhältniss der Hartvici Eps. Vita S. Stephani zu der Vita Maior und Vita Minor' in Archiv für österreichische Geschichte, lxxxi (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 325–37. On the question of the supposed bull granted by Pope *Sylvester II and the crown, L. L. Kropf, 'Pope Sylvester II and Stephen I of Hungary' in E.H.R., xiii (1898), pp. 290–295. P. J. Kelleher, The Holy Crown of Hungary (Papers and Monographs of the American Academy in Rome, xiii; 1951), with bibl. On his son Emeric, AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 477–91, which includes discussion of sources for the history of the father. J. Szalay in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1235–7, s.v. 'Étienne (51)'.

STEPHEN HARDING, St. (d. 1134), abbot of *Cîteaux. He was educated at the abbey of *Sherborne in north Dorset. After travelling in France and Italy, he withdrew to Molesme, where he led a life of extreme austerity until, in 1098, he went with part of the community to Cîteaux. There, after being in turn sub-prior and prior, he was elected abbot in 1109. Owing to poverty and the severity of the rule, the monastery was faced with the danger of dying out when, in 1112, St. *Bernard with 30 followers joined the monks, whose sudden increase of numbers soon necessitated other foundations. In order to maintain the original austerity and uniform government, Stephen drew up the nucleus of the '*Carta Caritatis', which established the system of regular visitations and General Chapters. The oldest history of the Order, the 'Exordium Cisterciensis Coenobii', is also in part attributed to him. Besides being a great organizer, he was a competent Biblical scholar, as is shown by his emendations of the *Vulgate text designed for the use of Cîteaux, and possibly also an artist. He was canonized in 1623. Feast day 17 Apr.; in the order, 16 July.

Works ascribed to him, with life from AA.SS., repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxvi, 1361–1510. Life [by J. B. *Dalgairns] (The Lives of English Saints written at the suggestion of J. H. *Newman, 1844; ed. 2 by A. W. Hutton, i, 1900, pp. 3–214). There is no modern biography: the best study is that of M. A. Dimier in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 1226–34, s.v. 'Étienne Harding', with extensive bibl.; for Stephen Harding and art, see works by C. Oursel and J. Othon there cited. See also bibl. to Carta Caritatis and Cistercian Order.

STERCORANISTS. Persons who asserted that the Blessed Sacrament is digested and evacuated by the recipient. Although they are written of as a sect, there appears to be no evidence that such a sect ever existed.

The name, prob. of 12th cent. origin (from Lat. stercus, 'dung'), is found in connexion with the *Berengarian controversies. C. M. *Pfaff, Dissertatio Theologica de Stercoranistis Medii Aevi, tam Latinis, quam Graecis (Tübingen, 1750). O. Zöckler–A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), p. 9 f., s.v. 'Sterkoranisten', with further bibl.; also O.E.D., s.v.

STERN, HENRY AARON (1820–85), missionary to the Jews. Born of Jewish parents at Unterreichenbach in Hesse-Cassel, he was educated at Frankfurt and Hamburg. Having entered on a commercial career he went to London, where he received Christian baptism in 1840, and in 1842 began to prepare for service as a missionary. In 1844 he was ordained deacon by M. S. *Alexander, Bp. in *Jerusalem, on his way to Baghdad, and for some ten years he conducted itinerant missionary work among the Jews of Mesopotamia, Persia, and Kurdistan. He was ordained priest in 1849 on a visit to London. From 1853 to 1856 and again from 1857 to 1859 he was at *Constantinople. In 1859 and 1862 he made journeys to Abyssinia, where he did notable work among the black Falasha Jews. Anti-European feeling led to the imprisonment of Stern and his fellow-Europeans by King Theodore of Abyssinia in 1864, and only the approach of a British army secured his release in 1868. Somewhat broken in health, he spent the rest of his life in missionary activity in London, where many conversions and baptisms took place. His publications include Dawning of Light in the East (1854) and The Captive Missionary (1868).

Life by A. A. Isaacs (London, 1886). Popular sketch by E. C. Dawson ('Splendid Lives Series', ib. [1901]). W. G. D. Fletcher in D.N.B., liv (1898), pp. 195–7.

STERNHOLD, THOMAS (d. 1549), versifier of the Psalms. Educated at Cardinal College (*Christ Church), Oxford, he entered the King's service and became a court favourite as one of the grooms of the robes. In 1544 he was elected M.P. for Plymouth. His claim to fame rests on his metrical version of the Psalms. A first edition (undated) containing 19 Pss. appeared in 1547; it was dedicated to *Edward VI. A second edition with 37 Pss. was issued posthumously in 1549. In 1557 there appeared a third edition with seven further Pss. by 'J. H.' (John Hopkins, a Suffolk clergyman, d. 1570); and the collection, in the complete edition printed by John *Day in 1562, became generally known as 'Sternhold and Hopkins'. For the most part Sternhold used the familiar ballad metre of 'Chevy Chase', a fact which partly accounts for the popularity of psalm-singing in Elizabethan times.

J. Holland, The Psalmists of Great Britain, i (1843), pp. 91–105. M. Patrick, Four Centuries of Scottish Psalmody (1949), pp. 27–30. Detailed account of his early edd. of the metrical psalter, composed in conjunction with J. Hopkins, in W. *Beveridge, A Defence of the Book of Psalms collected into English Metre, by Thomas Sternhold, John Hopkins and Others (1710). H. L. Bennett in D.N.B., liv (1898), p. 223 f., s.v.

STERRY, PETER (?1613–72), *Puritan divine. He was a native of Surrey and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1636. In 1643 he was one of the fourteen divines proposed by the House of Lords for the *Westminster Assembly, and from 1645 preached frequently before the Houses of Parliament. In 1649 he was appointed one of O. *Cromwell's chaplains. After the Protector's death he retired to Hackney, where he took pupils and devoted himself to literary work. Sterry's theology was a mixture of *Calvinism and *Neoplatonism. The former is to be seen in his emphasis on the will of God to the virtual exclusion of secondary causes and human free will, the latter in his conception of the world as emanating from God and, through the Fall and Redemption by Christ, returning to God and to its own original beauty. He was influenced by *J. Boehme, and in an age of sectarian strife was an ardent advocate of mutual tolerance founded on Christian love. Among his more important works, all written in a fine prose, are A Discourse of the Freedom of the Will (1675) and The Rise, Race and Royalty of the Kingdom of God in the Soul of Man (1683).

V. de Sola Pinto, Peter Sterry, Platonist and Puritan, 1613–1672. A Biographical and Critical Study with Passages selected from his Writings (1934). F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists. A Study (1926), ch. v, pp. 174–92. C. Fell Smith in D.N.B., liv (1898), p. 224 f.

STEVENS, WILLIAM (1732–1807), Anglican religious writer. He was born at Southwark, and educated at Maidstone together with his cousin, G. *Horne. He later became partner of a hosier and studied theology in his leisure time. He belonged to the circle of '*Hutchinsonians' and acquired an extensive knowledge of the Scriptures, the early Fathers, and such Anglican divines as L. *Andrewes and J. *Taylor. His works were chiefly pamphlets, collected as Οὐδενὸς Ἔργα ('Nobody's Works') in 1805. One of his best-known studies is An Essay on the Nature and Constitution of the Church (1773), in which he defended episcopacy and the legislative power of the Church. He also edited the works of W. *Jones of Nayland (12 vols., 1801) to which he prefixed a Life written by himself in the style of I. *Walton.

J. A. Park, Memoirs of William Stevens, Esq. (anon., 1812; enlarged ed. with name of author, 1859). G. Le G. Norgate in D.N.B., liv (1898), p. 233.

STICHARION (Gk. στιχάριον). The liturgical tunic, usually of coloured stuff, worn in the Eastern Church and comparable with the *alb in the West.

Braun, L.G., pp. 92–101.

STICHERON (Gk. στιχηρόν). In the Eastern Church a brief liturgical hymn which is attached to a verse (στίχος) of a Psalm or other Scriptural passage.

STICHOMETRY. The practice, dating from at least 300 B.C., of computing the length of a MS. from the number of lines. In the MSS. of the Greek classics the standard line (στίχος) contained 16 syllables; but when stichometric reckoning came to be applied to Biblical MSS., it seems that a 15-syllable line was sometimes used for the Gospels. Among the oldest extant Biblical stichometric tables is the list of the Pauline Epistles in the *Codex Sinaiticus.

STIGAND (d. ?1072), Abp. of *Canterbury. A king's priest under Cnut, he was made Bishop of Elmham in his native E. Anglia in 1043, translated to *Winchester in 1047, and appointed Abp. of Canterbury in 1052 in succession to the Norman Robert of Jumièges, who had been expelled and outlawed. He nevertheless retained the see of Winchester, thus combining the two richest bishoprics in England. He did not secure papal recognition until 1058, and then from Benedict X, who next year was himself deposed as a schismatic Pope. Stigand was covetous and worldly, and exemplified some of the weaknesses of the English Church before 1066 (thus, although a man of some culture, he apparently never went abroad). His uninspiring leadership and dubious status at Canterbury cast an undeserved shadow over his province. His position provided a pretext for *William I's invasion in 1066, though after William's victory Stigand soon submitted and assisted at the coronation. In 1070 he was nevertheless deposed on various charges by papal legates; he was succeeded by *Lanfranc and died in custody at Winchester.

*William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton (Rolls Series, 1870), pp. 35–7, gives the critical view of the next generation. F. Barlow, The English Church 1000–1066 (1963), esp. pp. 76–81, 302–7. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (ed. 3, Oxford, 1971), esp. pp. 465 f., 623 f., 659–61. W. Hunt in D.N.B., liv (1898), p. 369 f., with refs.

STIGMATIZATION. The reproduction of the wounds of the Passion of Christ in the human body. It is a phenomenon usually accompanied by other manifestations of the same category, such as levitation, *bilocation, and telepathic faculties, as well as by abnormal physical states such as lameness or blindness not due to organic causes, and almost complete abstinence from food and sleep. Stigmata may either be invisible, i.e. the stigmatized person experiences only the pain without any exterior signs, or visible, in which case they normally consist of wounds or blood blisters on hands, feet, and near the heart, also on the head (Crown of Thorns) or shoulders and back (carrying of the Cross and Scourging). They do not become septic and resist ordinary treatment, but are liable to periodical bleedings, mostly on Fridays and during Lent and Passiontide. Various natural explanations have been advanced; and though it is widely held that supernatural influences have to be admitted in many cases, a certain abnormal physical predisposition, acted upon by a deeply religious mind imbued with an extraordinary devotion to the Passion of the Lord, would seem to account for much in these phenomena. The official attitude of the RC Church has always been guarded, and stigmatization has never been made a reason for *canonization; among the more than 330 known stigmatized there are only some 60 saints and beati. None of them appear before the 13th cent., when the growing devotion to the suffering Christ seems to have occasioned their appearance. The first saint known to have received the stigmata is St. *Francis of Assisi; but since then cases have been numerous, esp. among women. Some of the best known are St. *Catherine of Siena (invisible), St. *Catherine of Genoa, Anna Katharina *Emmerick, St. Gemma *Galgani, and Therese *Neumann. The Stigmata of St. Francis are commemorated in the Franciscan Order on 17 Sept.

A. Imbert-Gourbeyre, La Stigmatisation, l'extase divine et les miracles de Lourdes (2 vols., 1894), esp. vol. i, and vol. ii, pp. 1–231. H. Thurston, S.J., The Physical Phenomena of Mysticism (posthumously ed. J. H. Crehan, S.J., 1952), pp. 32–129 (various essays repr. from scattered sources, with corrections). R. Biot, L'Énigme des stigmatisés (1955; Eng. tr., 1962). G. Wunderle, Zur Psychologie der Stigmatisation (1938). Jeanne Danemarie [pseudonym for Marthe Ponet-Bordeaux], Le Mystère des stigmatisés de Catherine Emmerich à Thérèse Neumann (1933; Eng. tr., 1934). É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), colş. 2616–24, s.v. 'Stigmatisation'.

STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD (1635–99), Bp. of *Worcester. He was born at Cranborne in Dorset and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1653. In 1657 he was appointed rector of Sutton, Bedfordshire, and in 1665 rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn, where he soon made a name as a preacher. Having won the favour of *Charles II he was given several preferments, becoming Archdeacon of London in 1677 and Dean of *St. Paul's in 1678. He was less esteemed under *James II, but after the Revolution of 1689 he was immediately appointed Bp. of Worcester.

Stillingfleet was a man of *Latitudinarian views. His first book, the Irenicum (1659), advocated a union between *Episcopalians and *Presbyterians. While opposing Nonconformity, it treated forms of Church government as inessential. The work was re-edited in 1662 with an appendix, in which Stillingfleet propounded the view that the Church was a society distinct from the state with its own rights and privileges. In the same year he published Origines Sacrae, an apologetic work dealing with the Divine authority of Scripture. In 1664 he replied to the *Jesuit account of the controversy between W. *Laud and J. *Fisher in his Rational Account of the Grounds of the Protestant Religion. The book had a great success and was followed by other controversial writings against RCs, *Socinians and J. *Locke. Stillingfleet held Locke's Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690) to be detrimental to the Trinitarian faith and published three pamphlets in reply (1696–7). His famous Origines Britannicae (1685) deal with the sources of the British Church. His Sermons, of which several volumes were published, enjoyed a long popularity.

Works (6 vols., London, 1709–10), with life [by R. Bentley] in vol. i, pp. 1–46. J. [W. H.] Nankivell, 'Edward Stillingfleet, Bishop of Worcester 1689–99' in Transactions of the Worcestershire Archaeological Society, xxii for 1945 (1946), pp. 16–34; sep. publd. with list of his ordinations appended (1946). W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., liv (1898), pp. 375–8; id. in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 574 f.

STOCK, St. SIMON. See Simon Stock, St.

STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE (1925). It grew out of an appeal for peace and fellowship sent out by Christian leaders in several neutral countries at the outset of the First World War (1914), followed by a further appeal by N. *Söderblom, Abp. of Upsala, in June 1917 for an immediate conference. After the end of the war plans were made, and the Universal Christian Conference on *Life and Work eventually met at Stockholm, 19–30 Aug. 1925, to promote Christian influences on political, social, and economic life in the modern world. Over 500 representatives, drawn from most of the larger religious bodies except the RC Church, took part. The subjects of the discussions were: The Purpose of God for Humanity and the Duty of the Church; The Church and Economic and Industrial Problems; The Church and International Relations; The Church and Christian Education; and Methods of Co-operative and Federative Efforts by the Christian Communions. The conference issued a 'Message', but no official findings. Its work was carried further in the conferences of *Oxford (1937) and *Amsterdam (1948).

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), The Stockholm Conference 1925. The Official Report of the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work held in Stockholm, 19–30 August, 1925 (1926).

STOICISM. A Greco-Roman school of philosophy, founded at *Athens by Zeno of Citium (335–263 B.C.). His chief pupil was Cleanthes of Assos (331–232), whose work was carried on by Chrysippus of Soli (c. 280–207). The system may be described as a form of materialistic pantheism or monism in contrast to *Platonic idealism on the one hand and *Epicurean hedonism on the other. The Stoics believed in law—the law of nature and the law of conscience or duty. To them God is the immanent all-pervading energy by which the natural world is created and sustained. He is also the world reason or '*Logos' which manifests itself in the order and beauty of the world. To the Stoics the good man is the wise man, and his wisdom consists in conformity to nature, i.e. in living according to the law of the universe embodied in the Divine reason. This 'life according to nature' was open to all men, even to slaves. Stoic ethics had a wide and tonic influence in the Greco-Roman world, and its religious spirit is well illustrated in the famous 'Hymn to Zeus' of Cleanthes. The Stoic *Seneca was reputed to have engaged in correspondence with St. *Paul.

Fragments of earlier Stoics collected in H. von Arnim, Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta (4 vols. [vol. iv, index], Teub., 1903–24). For the editions of Seneca, Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius, see s.vv. Studies in English include E. V. Arnold, Roman Stoicism (1911); R. D. Hicks, Stoic and Epicurean (1911); E. R. Bevan, Stoics and Sceptics (1913; four lectures); R. M. Wenley, Stoicism and its Influence (1924); R. M. Rist, Stoic Philosophy (Cambridge, 1969). A. Dyroff, Die Ethik der alten Stoa (1897); M. Pohlenz, Die Stoa. Geschichte einer geistigen Bewegung (2 vols., 1948–9). M. Spanneut Le Stoïcisme des pères de l'Église de Clément de Rome à Clément d'Alexandrie (Patristica Sorbonensia, i; 1957). Überweg, i, pp. 410–31, 475–83, 486–503, with bibl. pp. 125*–30*, 149*–56*, 157*–67*. R. D. Hicks in E.B. (ed. 11), xxv (1911), pp. 942–51, s.v.; Y. Cauchy–M. Spanneut in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 717–21, s.v.

STOLBERG, FRIEDRICH LEOPOLD, Graf zu (1750–1819), poet. A member of the German poets' circle, Goettinger Hain, he was an admirer and imitator of F. G. *Klopstock and a friend of J. W. Goethe, and became a translator of Homer, Aeschylus, and other classical authors. After filling the posts of envoy of the Protestant Prince Bp. of Lübeck to the Danish court (1777), of Danish envoy to Berlin (1789), and other offices, he was received into the RC Church in 1800. His most important work after his conversion is the Geschichte der Religion Jesu Christi in 15 vols. (1806–18), an influential though not always scholarly history of Christianity from OT times to the death of St. *Augustine. Among his numerous poetical and prose works a Life of *Alfred the Great (1817) and the devotional Büchlein von der Liebe (1819) became popular among his contemporaries.

Gesammelte Werke der Brüder Christian und Friedrich Leopold Grafen zu Stolberg (20 vols., Hamburg, 1820–5; ed. 2, 1827). T. Menge, Der Graf Friedrich Leopold und seine Zeitgenossen (2 vols., 1862); J. Janssen, Friedrich Leopold Graf zu Stolberg, grösstentheils aus dem bisher noch ungedruckten Familiennachlass dargestellt (2 vols., 1876–7); id., Friedrich Leopold Graf zu Stolberg. Sein Entwicklungsgang und sein Wirken im Geiste der Kirche (1882; ed. 4 by L. von *Pastor, 1910). H. Jansen (ed.), Briefe aus dem Stolberg- und Novalis-Kreis (1932), with full introd. L. Scheffczyk, Friedrich Leopold zu Stolbergs 'Geschichte der Religion Jesu Christi' (Münchener theologische Studien, I. Historische Abteilung, iii; 1952). E. Schmidt in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, xxxvi (1893), pp. 350–67, s.v. 'Stolberg-Stolberg: Friedrich Leopold', with literature to date; P. Wittmann in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 299 f., s.v.

STOLE. A liturgical vestment consisting of a long narrow strip of silk. Its origin is doubtful. It was possibly first used in the manner of a neck-cloth or a handkerchief in the E., where the deacon's stole is first mentioned in the 4th cent. In the W. it is first attested for Spain in the 6th cent. When it came to Rome in the 8th cent. it was worn under the dalmatic, whereas in the E. it was worn outside, as it still is in the *Ambrosian Rite of Milan. The priest's stole is not mentioned in the E. till the 8th cent., but was in general use in the W. from the 9th, when the priests of the Frankish Empire were bidden always to wear it as a sign of their calling, e.g. by the Synod of Mainz in 813. At Rome the stole was originally called 'orarium', the stola being Gallican and introduced into Italy c. 11th cent.

The stole has become the distinctive vestment of the deacon, who wears it like a sash over the left shoulder, its ends being fastened together under the right arm. It is, however, also a regular vestment of the priest, who in the RC Church now always wears it round the neck, with its ends falling straight down in front, as does the bishop. Besides its use at Mass, it is also worn when touching the Blessed Sacrament, when administering the Sacraments, and very generally when preaching. Its colour depends on that of the other vestments and on the occasion, e.g. when hearing confessions the priest wears a purple stole. In the C of E the use of the stole was revived in the middle of the 19th cent. The 1969 Canons (B 8) make provision for either a stole or a scarf to be worn by the minister at the Occasional Offices and by the celebrant, gospeller and epistoler at the Eucharist. In the E. rite the priest's stole is called an '*epitrachelion', that of the deacon an '*orarion' (qq.v.). See also Broad Stole.

Braun, LG, pp. 562–620. J. Braun, S.J., Handbuch der Paramentik (1912), pp. 154–64. Id. in C.E., xiv (1913), p. 301 f., s.v.

STONE, DARWELL (1859–1941), *Anglo-Catholic theologian. Educated at Merton College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1883, and after a short period of parish work at Ashbourne (1883–1884) was priested and became vice-principal (1885) and later principal (1888) of Dorchester (Oxon.) Missionary College. From 1909 to 1934 he was principal of Pusey House, Oxford. Throughout his adult life he was a strenuous upholder of High Church principles, defending the more traditional theology of R. W. *Church and H. P. Liddon against the teaching of the Lux Mundi School. In later life he became increasingly the leader of the Anglo-Catholic Movement in the C of E. He was strongly opposed to the project of Prayer Book revision. Stone's writings were characterized by wide and accurate learning and fairness towards his opponents. Among the chief were Holy Baptism (1899), Outlines of Christian Dogma (1900), The Christian Church (1905), A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1909), and The Reserved Sacrament (1917). From 1915 till his death he was editor of the projected *Lexicon of Patristic Greek.

F. L. Cross, Darwell Stone, Churchman and Counsellor (1943). Id. in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 842–3.

STONYHURST COLLEGE. One of the largest RC schools in England. Conducted by the *Jesuit Fathers, it traces its origin back to Elizabethan days, when a college for English boys was founded at *St.-Omer (1592) and subsequently transferred to Bruges (1762) and Liège (1773). In 1794 it moved to Stonyhurst Hall in Lancashire. The standard of education is that of the great public schools. Stonyhurst Observatory has been made famous by many astronomers of European reputation.

A. Hewitson, Stonyhurst College, Past and Present (Preston, 1870). J. Gerard, S.J., Stonyhurst College. Its Life Beyond the Seas, 1592–1794, and on English Soil, 1794–1894 (Centenary Record. Belfast, 1894). G. Gruggen, S.J.–J. Keating, S.J., Stonyhurst. Its Past History and Life in the Present (1901). A. Rimmer, Stonyhurst Illustrated (1884). Hubert Chadwick, S.J., St. Omers to Stonyhurst (1962). F. Irwin, S.J., in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 309 f., s.v.

STORCH, NICHOLAS (d. 1530), *Anabaptist. A Saxon clothmaker, he became leader of the *Zwickau Prophets (q.v.) after T. *Münzer's flight. Later he and his associates, having been compelled to leave Zwickau, arrived at *Wittenberg (1521). Here their success was only temporary, and Storch is next met with in West Thuringia in 1523 and at Strassburg in 1524. After the collapse of Münzer's rebellion (1525), he fled to Silesia; then to Poland, where he established an Anabaptist sect; and finally to Bavaria, where he died. He taught that, since all godly men were under the direct influence of the Holy Spirit, a ministerial and sacramental Church was unnecessary, and that the Church was shortly to suffer violent purification.

R. Bachmann, Niclas Storch, der Anfänger der Zwickauer Wiedertäufer (Zwickau, 1880). Schottenloher, ii (1935), p. 307 (Nos. 20732–5). See also bibl. to Zwickau Prophets.

STOUP (O.E. stéap). A basin near the entrance of a church containing *holy water with which the faithful may sprinkle themselves. Holy-water fonts were perhaps originally derived from the fountains in the *atrium of the old basilicas, in which those who entered washed their hands and faces. They began to come into more general use with the custom of sprinkling the people with holy water at the Sunday Mass, which was introduced in the middle of the 9th cent. The stoups are of various forms, either let into the wall or standing on a socle, and often richly ornamented. In England they were usually of stone and built into a small niche, and many specimens are preserved in pre-Reformation churches. Their use is universal in RC churches and has been widely revived in the C of E in modern times.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), Appendix, 'The Holy Water Stoup', pp. 255–8. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1, 1910), pp. 758–71, s.v. 'Bénitier'.

STOWE MISSAL. An early Mass-book of the Irish Church, formerly preserved at Stowe House in Bucks, and now in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy at Dublin (D. II. 3). In its present state it contains, besides extracts from St. John's Gospel, an *Ordinary and *Canon of the Mass, própers for three special Masses, an office of Baptism and of the Visitation of the Sick, a treatise in Irish on the ceremonies of the Mass, and three Irish spells. The main interest lies in the Ordinary and Canon, in which various peculiarities in the text suggest that the book was originally made for a specific occasion, perhaps the dedication of a church in a largely pagan district of N. Ireland. The last name in the series of bishops enumerated in the *diptychs is 'Maileruen', who is usually identified with St. Maelruain of Tallaght, who died in 792; the earliest part of the MS. cannot have been written before this date. This nucleus was considerably revised and extended at a later date by a scribe called Moelcaich. In the 11th cent. the MS. was encased in a cumdach, or case of precious metal.

The most convenient ed. of the text is still that of B. MacCarthy in Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, xxvii (1886), pp. 135–268. It is also ed., with facsimiles, by G. F. Warner (H.B.S., xxxi–xxxii; 1906–15).

STRABO, WALAFRID. See Walafrid Strabo.

STRATFORD, JOHN DE (d. 1348), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was a native of Stratford-on-Avon. After being Archdeacon of *Lincoln and Dean of the Court of *Arches, he became Bp. of *Winchester in 1323, an appointment which temporarily lost him the favour of Edward II. In 1327 he drew up the six articles against Edward II and counselled him to abdicate. From 1330, the year in which he was first appointed Chancellor by Edward III, he was the chief adviser of the young King, and in 1333 became Abp. of Canterbury. The following years were mainly spent in political affairs, including repeated negotiations with France. When, in 1340, Edward returned from an unsuccessful expedition to Flanders, Stratford's enemies attributed to him the failure and the King brought a series of charges against him. Stratford, however, inspired by the example of St. Thomas *Becket, stood firm and finally obtained recognition of the principle that peers should be tried only by their equals in full Parliament. Though soon reconciled to the King, he retired from political life and devoted himself to his ecclesiastical duties. He was a benefactor of Stratford-on-Avon, where his devotion to Becket led him to establish a chantry in his honour in the parish church and to endow a college of priests.

W. D. Macray, 'Sermons for the Festivals of St. Thomas Becket, etc. probably by Archbishop Stratford' in English Historical Review, viii (1893), pp. 85–91, incl. extracts. G. Lapsley, 'Archbishop Stratford and the Parliamentary Crisis of 1341', ib., xxx (1915), pp. 6–18, 193–215; Natalie M. Fryde, 'John Stratford, Bishop of Winchester, and the Crown, 1323–30' in Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, xliv (1971), pp. 153–61. W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iv (1865), pp. 1–79. Dorothy Hughes, A Study of Social and Constitutional Tendencies in the Early Years of Edward III (1915), passim. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1796–8.

STRAUSS, DAVID FRIEDRICH (1808–74), German theologian. A native of Ludwigsburg in Württemberg, in 1821 he entered the seminary at Blaubeuren, where he was a pupil of F. C. *Baur, and in 1825 went to the *Tübingen Stift. Here he came under the influence of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (with whose doctrines he later lost sympathy) and of G. W. F. *Hegel's philosophy. After studying in Berlin, he was appointed in 1832 'Repetent' at the Stift and lecturer on Hegelian philosophy at Tübingen university. His famous Leben Jesu, in which he applied the 'myth theory' to the life of Christ, appeared in 1835–6. The book denied the historical foundation of all supernatural elements in the Gospels, which were assigned to an unintentionally creative legend (the 'myth'), developed between the death of Christ and the writing of the Gospels in the 2nd cent. The growth of primitive Christianity was to be understood in terms of the Hegelian dialectic. The work, which exercised a deep influence on subsequent German Protestant theology, roused a storm of indignation and led to Strauss's dismissal from his post at Tübingen. In 1839 an attempt to obtain for him a Professorship of Theology at Zürich came to nothing. His next work, Die christliche Glaubenslehre (2 vols., 1840–1), is a polemical history of Christian doctrine from the NT and the Fathers to its dissolution in Hegelian philosophy. Strauss now turned his attention to politics and, in the literary sphere, to biography. His writings of this period include Ulrich von Hutten (3 vols., 1858–60) and Hermann Samuel Reimarus (1862). In 1864 he published a slightly more positive version of his first work, Leben Jesu für das deutsche Volk, and in 1865 Der Christus des Glaubens und der Jesus der Geschichte (1865), an attack on Schleiermacher's attempt to combine the 'historical Jesus' with the 'Christ' of dogma. His last work, Der alte und der neue Glaube (1872; Eng. trans., The Old Faith and the New, 1873), is essentially a negation of Christianity in favour of scientific materialism and rejects human immortality.

Gesammelte Schriften (incomplete), ed. E. Zeller (12 vols., Bonn, 1876–8); Ausgewählte Briefe, ed. id. (ib., 1895); Briefwechsel zwischen Strauss und Vischer, ed. A. Rapp (Veröffentlichungen der deutschen Schillergesellschaft, xviii and xix; 1952–3). E. Zeller, David Friedrich Strauss in seinem Leben und seinen Schriften (1874; Eng. tr., 1874); A. Hausrath, David Friedrich Strauss und die Theologie seiner Zeit (2 vols., 1876–8); T. Ziegler, David Friedrich Strauss (2 vols., Strassburg, 1908). K. *Barth, David Friedrich Strauss als Theologe 1839–1939 (Theologische Studien, vi; Zollikon, 1939). G. Backhaus, Kerygma und Mythos bei David Friedrich Strauss und Rudolf Bultmann (Theologische Forschung, xii; Hamburg, 1956). G. Müller, Identität und Immanenz. Zur Genese der Theologie von David Friedrich Strauss (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, x; 1968). A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906), pp. 67–119 (Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910, pp. 68–120). T. Ziegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 76–92, s.v.; P. Nober, S.J., in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1407–12, s.v., with further bibl. Study by H. Harris (Cambridge, 1973).

STREET, GEORGE EDMUND (1824–81), architect. Born at Woodford, NE London, he was educated at Mitcham and Camberwell. He soon developed an enthusiastic interest in ecclesiastical architecture and, obtaining an appointment under G. G. *Scott, became a leader in the Gothic revival. In 1849 he set up an office of his own and, after making the acquaintance of B. *Webb, became a member of the *Ecclesiological Society. His first successes were several churches in the West country, esp. Cornwall. After some good work for W. J. *Butler at Wantage, where he resided from 1850, he was appointed Diocesan Architect by S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of *Oxford. He continued to travel extensively to study French and German churches, and in 1855 his design for the new cathedral at Lille only just missed acceptance. He was the architect of the Crimea Memorial Church at *Constantinople (1864–9). Meanwhile at home he had carried through a large number of churches and institutions, among them St. Peter's, Plymouth, Cuddesdon Theological College, the Convent at East Grinstead, St. Peter's, Bournemouth, the nave of Bristol Cathedral, St. Mary Magdalene's, Paddington, All Saints', Clifton, and St. Margaret's, Liverpool. He was the first to make modern students of architecture aware of the glories of the church of Santiago of *Compostela, mainly through his Gothic Architecture in Spain (1865). The apex of his influence was marked by the invitation to design the new Law Courts in the Strand, which he did not live to see completed.

Arthur Edmund Street (son), Memoir of George Edmund Street, R.A. (1888; with complete list of Street's works). P. Waterhouse in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 42–5.

STREETER, BURNETT HILLMAN (1874–1937), theologian and NT scholar. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, and was a Fellow from 1905 to 1933 and Provost from 1933 to 1937. From 1915 to 1934 he was also a canon of *Hereford Cathedral. His researches into the *Synoptic problem, notably in Oxford Studies in the Synoptic Problem (ed. W. *Sanday, 1911), went far towards winning the assent of English Biblical scholarship to the priority of St. Mark's Gospel and the existence of '*Q'. In 1924 he published a large-scale work, The Four Gospels, in which he set out his conclusions on the Gospels as a whole, and also expounded a number of original ideas, notably his theses on the '*Caesarean text' and '*Proto-Luke'. He also took a keen interest in the problems confronting the Christian faith in its relations with the modern outlook on life. In Reality (1926) he sought to correlate science with theology. His other publications included essays in Foundations* (1912), Concerning Prayer (1916), Immortality (1917), The Spirit (1919), and Adventure (1926), all of which he edited. In 1932 he delivered a course of *Bampton lectures on The Buddha and the Christ. He was an active supporter of the *Student Christian Movement and of the *Modern Churchmen's Union, and also (at the end of his life) of the *Oxford Group Movement.

L. W. Grensted in D.N.B., 1931–40, pp. 836–8, s.v.

STREITGESPRÄCHE (Ger., 'controversial discussions'). In *form-critical analysis, R. *Bultmann's designation for the group of *apophthegms in the Gospels, introduced by a controversial pronouncement by Christ's enemies. The Question on the Tribute Money (Mk. 12. 13–17) is a characteristic instance.

STRIGEL, VICTORINUS (1524–69), Reformation theologian. A native of Kaufbeuren in Swabia, he was educated at Freiburg and later at *Wittenberg, where he was much influenced by P. *Melanchthon. After teaching for a time at Erfurt, in 1548 he became first professor and rector of the new school at Jena, founded by the followers of J. A. *Ernesti. Here he expounded, in opposition to the strict Lutheranism of M. *Flacius, more moderate and conciliatory doctrines and defended a form of *synergism. At Weimar in

Aug. 1560 he found himself involved in a disputation in the presence of the court on the relation of the human will to divine grace in the work of conversion. The five heads of discussion—*de libero arbitrio, de definitione legis et evangelii, de *Majorismo, de Adiaphorismo, and de academica ἐποχῇ—indicate the points at which Strigel's teaching departed from the stricter Lutheranism, it being opposition to Strigel at Weimar that led Flacius to the formula that original sin is the substance of the natural man. In 1563 he was appointed professor at Leipzig, but four years later opposition to his liberal outlook led to his withdrawal, and he became a professor at Heidelberg. He wrote extensively on philological and historical as well as on theological subjects, though many of his works were not published till after his death. They include a commentary on almost the whole Bible.

Collection of his Opuscula Quaedam Theologica, publ. Hanover, 1598. V. A. Nordman, Victorinus Strigelius als Geschichtslehrer (Helsingfors thesis, Åbo, 1930), with reff. to earlier lit. G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 97–102, s.v.

STRONG, THOMAS BANKS (1861–1944), Dean of *Christ Church, Oxford. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, he was ordained deacon in 1885, priest in 1886, and was successively Student (1888–1901) and Dean (1901–20) of Christ Church, Bp. of *Ripon (1920–5) and Bp. of Oxford (1925–37). As Vice-Chancellor (1913–17) during the First World War, he took a leading part in bringing the needs of the nation before the university. Theologically his sympathies were with the Lux Mundi School, but he had a great dislike of its *Anglo-Catholic developments. He wrote a Manual of Theology (1892), Christian Ethics (Bampton Lectures, 1896), The Doctrine of the Real Presence (1899), Authority in the Church (1903), and Religion, Philosophy and History (1923); and he edited C. *Bigg's Origins of Christianity (1909). A talented musician, he wrote some hymn tunes, among them 'Peckwater' and 'Hebdomadal', and edited, in conjunction with Basil Harwood, organist of Christ Church (1892–1909), The Oxford Hymn Book (1908).

Harold Anson, T. B. Strong. Bishop, Musician, Dean, Vice-Chancellor (London, 1949). C. M. Blagden in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 849–50.

STROSSMAYER, JOSEPH GEORG (1815–1905), Bp. of Diakovár. Born in Croatia of a family of German descent, he was ordained priest in 1838, and in 1847 became professor of canon law at Vienna. In 1850 he was appointed Bp. of Diakovár. Despite his German ancestry, he was a keen pan-Slavist, who led the movement which issued in the formation of Yugoslavia after the war of 1914–18. At the *Vatican Council of 1869–70 he was one of the most outstanding opponents of the definition of Papal infallibility, and on 22 Mar. 1870 occasioned a 'scene' at the Council by his ill-timed defence of Protestantism. Until Oct. 1871 he continued to maintain relations with J. J. I. v. *Döllinger and J. H. *Reinkens, but on 26 Dec. 1872 finally published the Vatican decrees in his official diocesan journal.

F. Šišić (ed.), Korespondencija Racki–Strossmayer (Zagreb, 4 vols., 1928–31); id., Josi Juraj Strossmayer. Dokumenti i Korespondencija (ib., 1933 ff.). C. Loiseau, 'La Politique de Strossmayer' in Le Monde slave (mars 1927), pp. 379–405. [E.] C. Butler, O.S.B., The Vatican Council, i (1930), pp. 134 f., 189 f., 270–5, and ii (1930), p. 175, and passim. R. Schutz in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2630–5, s.v.

STRYPE, JOHN (1643–1737), English Church historian. He was a native of London, educated at St. Paul's School and at Jesus College and Catharine Hall, Cambridge, and in 1669 was appointed curate and lecturer at Leyton, London. From 1689 to 1724 he was lecturer at Hackney, and in 1711 he was given the sinecure of West Tarring, W. Sussex. He formed a very fine collection of Tudor documents, now in the Harleian and Lansdowne MSS. of the British Museum. His historical works deal chiefly with the Reformation period, the principal one being the Memorials of Thomas Cranmer (1694, ed. for the Eccl. Hist. Soc. in 3 vols., 1848–54). Among the others are Annals of the Reformation in England (4 vols., 1709–31), Life and Acts of Matthew Parker (1711), and Ecclesiastical Memorials (3 vols., 1721). The wealth of documentary material on which his works are based renders them invaluable to the student of the period, despite their bad arrangement, cumbersome style, and frequent errors. He also edited J. Stow's Survey of London (1720).

Modern repr. of his historical and biographical works, 19 vols. bound in 25, Oxford, 1812–24; index to this ed. [by R. F. Laurence] (2 vols., ib., 1828). G. Goodwin in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 67–9.

STUBBS, JOHN (c. 1543–91), *Puritan fanatic. A native of Norfolk, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1574 he published an Eng. trans. of the Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury which John Joscelyn (1529–1603), M. *Parker's secretary, had incorporated in the Archbishop's De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae (1572). Somewhat later Stubbs became a strong opponent of Catholicism. In Aug. 1579 he published The Discovery of a Gaping Gulf whereinto England is like to be swallowed by another French Marriage if the Lord forbid not the Banns by letting Her Majesty see the Sin and Punishment thereof, an attack on *Elizabeth's proposed marriage with Henry, Duke of Anjou. Stubbs, his publisher and his printer were all sentenced and the first two had their right hands cut off (3 Nov. 1579), though Stubbs continued to protest his loyalty to the Queen. After 18 months' imprisonment in the Tower he was set free. In 1589 he became M.P. for Great Yarmouth. His other writings include a reply (apptly. unpublished) to W. *Allen's Defence of the English Catholics (1584) and an English version of some of T. *Beza's Meditations on the Psalms (publd. 1582).

A. F. Scott Pearson, Thomas Cartwright and English Puritanism (1925), pp. 185 f. and 305 f. L. Stephen in D.N.B., lv (1898), p. 119 f., s.v., with reff.

STUBBS, WILLIAM (1825–1901), ecclesiastical historian and Bp. of *Oxford. He was born at Knaresborough, N. Yorks, educated at Ripon Grammar School and through C. T. *Longley's influence nominated a servitor at *Christ Church, Oxford. In 1848 he was elected a Fellow of Trinity College. While rector of Navestock (1850–66) he laid the basis of his immense historical learning. From 1866 to 1884 he was Regius professor of modern history at Oxford, and from 1879 to 1884 also a Canon of *St. Paul's. Later he became Bp. of *Chester (1884–9) and of Oxford (1889–1901).

Stubbs was the greatest British historian of his time. He contributed 19 volumes to the Rolls Series of Chronicles and Memorials, among them the Gesta Regum of *William of Malmesbury (1867), the Gesta Regis Henrici II (1867), Roger Hoveden's Chronica (4 vols., 1868–71), the Memorials of St. Dunstan (1874), and the Historical Works of Gervase of Canterbury (1879–80). His Constitutional History of England (3 vols., 1873–8), which takes its subject down to 1485, and the companion vol. of Select Charters (1870) became classics. His other works included Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum (1858, ed. 2, 1897; chronological lists of the English Bishops) and Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents relating to Great Britain and Ireland (3 vols,. 1869–73, with A. W. Haddan). A collection of his ordination addresses was published posthumously in 1901.

W. H. *Hutton (ed.), Letters of William Stubbs, Bishop of Oxford (1904). J. G. Edwards, William Stubbs (Historical Association Pamphlet G.22; 1952), with further refts. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 444–51.

STUDD, CHARLES THOMAS (1862–1931), missionary. He was the son of a retired planter, Edward Studd, who was converted in 1877 at a mission of D. L. *Moody (1837–99) and I. D. Sankey (1840–1908). He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was famed for his cricketing prowess. Edward Studd's conversion influenced his three sons and 'C. T.' (as he came to be called) volunteered for missionary work in China. As one of the 'Cambridge Seven' his intentions aroused much interest and enthusiasm, and laid the seeds of the Student Volunteer Movement. Sailing for China under the *China Inland Mission in 1885, he followed the early practice of that Mission by living in Chinese fashion. Ill-health compelled him to return in 1894. In 1900 he sailed for India, where he was the pastor of an undenominational Church at Ootacamund until he was again forced to return through sickness. Stirred by the need of missionary pioneer work in Central Africa, he sailed, contrary to medical advice, for the heart of Africa in 1910, and continued to work there till his death. On being joined by recruits in 1912, he founded the 'Heart of Africa Mission'. As this work developed, 'C. T.' conceived the idea of a 'World Evangelization Crusade' for the occupation by missionaries of the unevangelized areas of the world; the Crusade later extended its activities to S. America and elsewhere.

Lives by T. B. Walters (London, 1930), N. P. Grubb (ib., 1933) and Edith Buxton [daughter] (ib., 1968). N. [P.] Grubb, After C. T. Studd (1939).

STUDDERT KENNEDY, GEOFFREY ANKETELL (1883–1929), Anglican priest. Of Irish descent, he was educated at Leeds Grammar School, Trinity College, Dublin, and Ripon Clergy College, and in 1908 was ordained deacon. After holding curacies at Rugby and Leeds, he became vicar of St. Paul's, *Worcester (1914–21), and Chaplain to the Forces (1916–19). His vivid faith, the fruit of a deep sacramentalism, was reflected in a warmth of character which endeared him to the men in the trenches (where he won the affectionate title of 'Woodbine Willie', from a brand of cigarettes he distributed) and made him the best-known padre in the Great War of 1914–18. The unconventionality of his views (e.g. his belief in God's passibility and his dissatisfaction with certain elements in the traditional Christian moral code), which helped to gain him a wide hearing, were the expression of a solid theology. In 1922 he was appointed rector of St. Edmund, King and Martyr, Lombard Street. He continued his mission preaching, constantly travelling about and working in association with the *Industrial Christian Fellowship. His books, popular in form, include Rough Rhymes (1918), The Hardest Part (1918), The Wicket Gate (1923), and The Word and the Work (1925).

J. K. Mozley (ed.), G. A. Studdert Kennedy. By his friends (1929); W. Purcell, Woodbine Willie. An Anglican Incident. Being some account of the life and times of Geoffrey Anketell Studdert Kennedy, poet, prophet, seeker after truth, 1883–1929 (1962).

STUDENT CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT ('S.C.M.'). The British section of a world-wide fellowship of students who 'desire to understand the Christian faith and live the Christian life'. It developed out of several independent movements at Cambridge and elsewhere in the later years of the 19th cent. By study-circles, conferences, and camps, it seeks to bring Christian students of all denominations together, to instruct them in the Christian faith and to enable them to witness to the outside world. From the first an integral part of its work was the 'Student Volunteer Missionary Union', which aimed at fostering missionary work abroad, and it has taken its full share in the international association known as the World Student Christian Federation. From its activity in promoting the issue of literature addressed to students, originally publications of small cost and of practical purpose, there has developed a religious publishing house (S.C.M. Press, Ltd., London). As a body drawing membership from all Christian communions (since the Second *Vatican Council incl. the RC) the Movement has cultivated an outlook closely akin to that of the *Ecumenical Movement, many of whose leaders had earlier been associated with the S.C.M.

T. Tatlow, The Story of the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland (1933). E. Fenn, Learning Wisdom. Fifty Years of the Student Christian Movement (1939). Ruth Rouse, The World's Student Christian Federation. A History of the First Thirty Years [viz. 1895–1924] (1948), with bibl.

STUDIOS. The famous monastery of *Constantinople, dedicated to St. *John the Baptist. It stood in the west of the city, not far from the Golden Horn. Acc. to tradition founded in 463 by the former Roman consul, Studios, its monks followed the rule of the '*Acoemetae', who organized their psalmody so as to ensure its perpetual recitation by part of the community. They became famous as zealous upholders of orthodoxy, and defended the decrees of *Chalcedon against the Monophysite patriarch, *Acacius (484–519). Driven from their monastery by the persecution of Constantine Copronymus (Emp. 741–75), only a few of them returned after his death.

A new period began for Studios under St. *Theodore, who became its abbot in 799. He introduced a new rule, based on that of St. *Basil, in which manual work played a far greater part than hitherto, and a strict discipline, esp. in regard to enclosure, poverty, and the exclusion of women from the monastery, was introduced. From his time Studios became the centre and model of E. monasticism and the monks of Mount *Athos, e.g., formed their life on its basis. It became esp. famous for its school of copyists and artists, and very many of its ancient hymns are still in use in the Greek Church. During the *Iconoclastic Controversy it supplied the most ardent defenders of images. Destroyed by the *Crusaders in 1204, the monastery was rebuilt in 1290, but again severely damaged by the Turks in 1453. The church, once a mosque, is now in ruins. The religious life of Studios, however, was revived by the metropolitan, A. Szeptyckij, who founded an organization of E. monks acc. to the Rule of St. Theodore of Studios in 1906.

Extracts from the Rule ('Constitutiones Studianae') from Vat. gr. 2029 in J. P. Migne, PG, xcix, 1703–20. E. Marin, De Studio Constantinopolitano (Paris, 1897). On the form of the name, H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Studion-Studios' in Anal. Boll., lii (1934), p. 64 f. E. Candal, S.J., in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1441 f., s.v. 'Studiti'.

STUDIUM GENERALE. A name widely current from the middle of the 14th cent. for what is now a university. At first the term denoted any 'school of general resort' (H. *Rashdall) which set out to attract students from all parts and possessed one or more of the higher faculties, viz. theology, law, and medicine. Of the early studia generalia, the most celebrated were those at *Paris (for theology and arts), *Bologna (for law), and Salerno (for medicine). By the end of the 13th cent. the privilege, granted by the Pope or Emperor, of conferring the ius ubique docendi ('the right of teaching everywhere') had become the special mark of the studium generale.

H. Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages (new ed. by F. M. Powicke–A. B. Emden, 3 vols., 1936), esp. vol. i, pp. 6–17.

STUNDISTS (Russ. Štundisty; cf. Ger. Stunde, 'devotional hour'). Certain Russian evangelical sects which emerged in the Ukraine c. 1858–62, under the direct influence of *Lutheran and Reformed pastors and *Mennonite preachers. In the last quarter of the 19th cent. the Stundists became increasingly Baptist in orientation, and their present-day descendants form part of the 'All Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists', established in Russia in 1944.

W. Gutsche, Westliche Quellen des russischen Stundismus (Cassel, 1956).

STURM, JOHANNES (1507–89), Protestant Reformer and educationalist. Educated at Liège at the School of the *Brethren of the Common Life and at Louvain university, he joined himself to the French humanists and lectured on the classics at *Paris from 1530 to 1536. Having become a Protestant under M. *Bucer's influence, he went to Strassburg in 1537, where he took an active part in furthering the Reformation. His interest in education did much to make the city one of the foremost educational centres of Europe, and in 1538 a gymnasium on a humanistic model devised by Sturm was established with himself as rector. In 1564 an academy followed. In 1581 Sturm was expelled from Strassburg for his liberalism and inter-confessional sympathies by the strict *Lutherans, but eventually allowed to return. His writings included a Life of the German humanist, B. *Rhenanus.

C. Schmidt, La Vie et les travaux de Jean Sturm (1855), with careful chronological lists of Sturm's writings, pp. 314–331. W. Sohm, Die Schule Johannes Sturms und die Kirche Strassburgs in ihren gegenseitigen Verhältnis (Historische Bibliothek, xxvii; 1912). C. Schmidt–J. Ficker in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 109–13; C. Testore, S.J., in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1449 f. Schottenloher, ii (1935), p. 315 f. (Nos. 20926–52).

STYLITE (Gk. στῦλος, 'pillar'). In the early Church a solitary who lived on the top of a pillar. Their pillars would vary in height, and the platforms, sometimes made more habitable by a small hut, were generally provided with a parapet against which the Stylite would lean for his scanty sleep. Food was usually supplied by disciples or admirers. Apart from prayer Stylites gave much time to spiritual instruction, to reconciling enemies, and often to theological controversies. They considered St. *Simeon Stylites (q.v.) their founder. There are many instances of such ascetics from the 5th to the 10th cents., and isolated examples down to modern times. They flourished esp. in Syria, Mesopotamia, Egypt, and Greece.

H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Les Stylites' in Compte Rendu du Troisième Congrès Scientifique International des Catholiques, tenu à Bruxelles du 3 au 8 septembre 1894, v (1895), pp. 191–232; also printed in R.Q.H., lvii (1895), pp. 52–103. Id., Les Saints stylites (Subsidia Hagiographica, xiv; 1923), with general bibl. in note to p. cxvii f. B. Kötting, Peregrinatio Religiosa (Münster i.W., 1950), pp. 113–31. S. V[ailhé], 'Les Stylites de Constantinople' in É.O., i (1897–8), pp. 303–7. Heimbucher, i, pp. 107–9. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 1697–1718, s.v.

SUAREZ, FRANCISCO DE (1548–1617), Spanish *Jesuit theologian. From 1564 to 1570 he studied philosophy and theology at Salamanca, and subsequently taught at several Spanish colleges of his order. From 1580 to 1585 he lectured on the 'Summa' of St. *Thomas Aquinas at the Roman College, and from 1585 to 1593 on the Incarnation and the Sacraments at the Jesuit College at Alcalá. Here he wrote his first work, De Verbo Incarnato (1590), a commentary on the first 26 questions of the third part of the 'Summa', noted esp. for its attempt to reconcile the Thomist view of the Redemption as the final cause of the Incarnation with that of *Duns Scotus, who held the manifestation of the perfection of the Divine work of creation to be its final cause, so that even without the Fall the Incarnation would have taken place. De Mysteriis Vitae Christi followed in 1592, and in 1597 appeared his Disputationes Metaphysicae, one of the principal textbooks on the subject, in which he combined the teaching of Aristotle with that of St. Thomas. The work, which exercised a considerable influence also on Protestant contemporary philosophers, is important esp. for its new method, as it no longer closely follows Aristotle in the sequence of thought but gives an independent systematic treatment adapted to the needs of the modern Christian thinker. In 1597 *Philip II called Suarez to the university of Coimbra, where he lectured until 1616. In 1599 he published his Varia Opuscula Theologica, occasioned by the controversy on grace (De auxiliis*) between the Jesuits and *Dominicans. In it, as in his De vera intelligentia auxilii efficacis of 1605 (publd. 1655), he proposed in the system called *Congruism a solution of the problem of the relation between human freedom and Divine grace on *Molinist lines. Acc. to Suarez, God does not, as the Thomists teach, cause man's free acts, but, foreseeing them by His special knowledge called '*scientia media', brings about the salvation of the elect by giving them those graces ('gratia congrua') of which he foresees that they will make good use in certain given circumstances. The teaching provoked much opposition but became the prevalent doctrine among non-Thomist RC theologians. In 1608–9 he published De Virtute et Statu Religionis, a fundamental work on the religious state with special reference to the Society of Jesus, and in 1612 De Legibus (which became of paramount importance for jurists and legislators on the Continent and in America) in the form of a Commentary on the 19 relevant questions of the 'Summa', in which he expounded the principles of natural and international law. It was followed, in 1613, by the Defensio Fidei, directed against the C of E, which was burned in London and banned by the Parliament of Paris for teaching doctrines prejudicial to the power of the state. His last great works on grace, published posthumously in three parts as De necessitate gratiae (1619), De gratia habituali (1619), and De gratia actuali (1651), elaborated and systematized the teaching given in his earlier writings.

The salient points in which Suarez departs from Thomism are regarded by some scholars as forming a system of his own, called 'Suarism'. Among its chief features are the conception of the individual as the object of direct Divine and human intellectual cognition, the pure potentiality of matter, and the conceptual, not real, distinction in created beings of essence and existence. Suarez is usually considered the greatest theologian of the Society of Jesus and was called by *Paul V 'Doctor eximius et pius'.

Collected ed. of his Opera, 23 vols., Venice, 1740–51; new ed. by D. M. André, 28 vols., Paris, 1856–78. Photographic reproductions from the original editions of Selections from Three Works: De Legibus ac Deo Legislatore, 1612; Defensio Fidei Catholicae et Apostolicae adversus Anglicanae Sectae Errores, 1613; De Triplici Virtute Theologica, Fide, Spe, et Charitate, 1621, with list of errata and Eng. tr. by Gwladys L. Williams–A. Brown–J. Waldron–H. Davis, S.J., and introd. by J. B. Scott (2 vols., Classics of International Law, xx; 1944). Modern edd., with Spanish tr., of his Disputaciones metafísicas, by S. Rabade Romeo and others (Madrid, 1960 ff.) and of Defensio Fidei by E. Elorduy–L. Pereña (ib., 1965). Good general modern study by R. de Scorraille, S.J., François Suarez de la Compagnie de Jésus d'après ses lettres, ses autres écrits inédits et un grand nombre de documents nouveaux (2 vols., [1912–13]). J. H. Fichter, Man of Spain. Francis Suarez (New York, 1940). The vast number of more specialized studies, of which there is an extensive list in D.T.C., cited infra, include L. Mahieu, François Suarez. Sa philosophie et les rapports qu'elle a avec sa théologie (1921); P. Dumont, S.J., Liberté humaine et concours divin d'après Suarez (1936), and J. J. O'Brien, Reparation for Sin. A Study of the Doctrine of Francis Suarez (Mundelein, Ill., 1960). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain. A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). Sommervogel, vii (1896), cols. 1661–87, s.v.; P. Múgica, S.J., Bibliografía Suareciana, con una introducción sobre el estado actual de los estudios suarecianos por E. Elorduy, S.J. (Granada, 1948). P. Monnot, S.J.–P. Dupont, S.J.–R. Brouillard, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2638–2728, s.v., with bibl.

SUBCINCTORIUM. An ecclesiastical vestment resembling the *maniple, which is now reserved to the Pope. He wears it on his left side, attached to his *girdle, when celebrating a solemn pontifical Mass. In the Middle Ages it was worn also by bishops (a usage which persisted at Milan until the 16th cent.) and occasionally by priests. Its original purpose was to secure the *stole to the girdle.

Braun, L.G., pp. 117–24.

SUBDEACON. In the RC Church, formerly a person in the lowest of the three *major orders. The Subdiaconate was not instituted by Christ but by the Church, and the conferring of the order was thus regarded as a *Sacramental rather than a true *Sacrament. The earliest mention of a 'subdeacon' is in a letter of Pope *Cornelius to Fabius of Antioch (255), while the correspondence of St. *Cyprian attests the existence of subdeacons in Africa at the same time. Until the 13th cent. the subdiaconate was regarded as a *minor, not a major, order.

A subdeacon was one of the three sacred ministers at *High Mass, when his functions were to prepare the bread and wine and the vessels, to chant the Epistle, to present the chalice and paten at the offertory and to remove the vessels from the altar after the communion. In recent times, however, the part of the subdeacon at High Mass has generally been taken by a person in deacon's or priest's orders. In the RC Church, until the office was suppressed in 1972, candidates had to be over 21 years of age and were bound to celibacy and the recitation of the *breviary. In the E. Church the subdiaconate still exists as a minor order. It was given up in the C of E with the other minor orders in the 16th cent., though in recent times proposals have occasionally been made to restore it. It has been restored in certain Anglican missionary dioceses.

H. Reuter, Das Subdiakonat: dessen historische Entwicklung und liturgisch-kanonistische Bedeutung (1890). F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q., Supplementheft, vii; 1897), pp. 18–48. A. Michel in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2459–66, s.v. 'Sous-diacre'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (1953), cols. 1619–26, s.v. 'Sous-diacre', with reff.

SUBIACO (Lat. Sublacum). A town some 40 miles east of Rome, famous as the site of the grotto where St. *Benedict settled on his retirement from the world. It became the cradle of the *Benedictine Order. Before his death St. Benedict founded 12 separate monasteries in the vicinity. The present monastery is the principal house of the *Cassinese Congregation of Primitive Observance.

P. Egidi–G. Giovannoni–F. Hermanin–V. Federici, I monasteri di Subiaco (2 vols., 1904). B. Cignitti–L.Caronti, L'Abbazia nullius Sublacense. Le origini. La commenda [1956]). P. Carosi, Il primo monastero benedettino (Studia Anselmiana, xxxix; 1956). Cherubino Mirzio, O.S.B., Cronaca Sublacense (ed. L. Allodi, O.S.B., Rome, 1885). 'Chronicon Sublacense, sive Catalogus Abbatum Monasterii Sublacensis ab Anno circiter DXCV usque ad MCCCXC' by an anonymous monk, ed. L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, xxiv (Milan, 1738), pp. 927–66; new ed. by R. Morghen in G. Carducci–V. Fiorini–P. Fedele's ed. of Muratori, xxiv, part 6; Bologna, 1927. L. Allodi–G. Levi (edd.), Il Regesto Sublacense del secolo XI (Biblioteca della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 1885). L. Allodi, O.S.B. (ed.), Consuetudines et Caeremoniae Regularis Observantiae Monasterii Sublacensis (Subiaco, 1902). B. Albers, O.S.B., 'Une Nouvelle Édition des "Consuetudines Sublacenses" ' in R. Bén., xix (1902), pp. 183–204. B. Trifone, O.S.B. (ed.), 'Documenti Sublacensi' in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, xxxi (1908), pp. 101–120. B. Camm, O.S.B., Pilgrim Paths in Latin Lands (1923), pp. 1–46. L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 3099 f., s.v. F. Mershman in C.E., xiv (1913), p. 321 f., s.v.; E. Josi–G. Avanzi in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1459–64, s.v., with bibl.

SUBINTRODUCTAE (Gk. συνείσακται). In the early Church, women who lived associated with men in spiritual marriage. *Hermas seems to be familiar with the practice, and later subintroductae existed at *Antioch under *Paul of Samosata and at *Constantinople under St. *Chrysostom. The practice, with its obvious dangers, was opposed by St. *Cyprian, St. Chrysostom, and others, and forbidden by the canons of the Councils of *Elvira (can. 27), *Ancyra (can. 19), and *Nicaea (can. 3; A.D. 325). There is a certain analogy with the practice centuries later in the mixed monasteries of monks and nuns. *Philo attests the existence of a similar institution among the *Therapeutae (q.v.).

H. Achelis, Virgines Subintroductae. Ein Beitrag zu 1 Kor. vii (1902). H. Koch, Virgines Christi (T.U., xxxi, Hft. 2; 1907, pp. 59–112). P. de Labriolle, 'Le "Mariage spirituel" dans l'antiquité chrétienne' in Revue historique, cxxxvii (1921), pp. 204–25. H. Achelis in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 123–7, s.v.; id. in H.E.R.E., i (1908), pp. 177–80, s.v. 'Agapetæ'; E. Magnin in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 311–15, s.v. 'Agapètes'; A. Ferrua, S.J., in E.C., i (1948), col. 426 f., s.v. 'Agapete'.

SUBLAPSARIANISM. Also known as 'Infra-' or 'Post-lapsarianism'. In contrast to *Supralapsarianism (q.v.), the form of the *Calvinistic doctrine of *Predestination which holds that it was only after the *Fall that God decreed the election or non-election of individual men to salvation. This less rigid teaching on predestination has been commonly current among Calvinists, esp. since the Synod of *Dort (1618).

SUBMERSION (also 'total immersion' or, loosely, 'immersion'). The form of *Baptism in which the water completely covers the candidate's body. It is still the method practised in the Orthodox and several of the other E. Churches, as well as in the *Ambrosian rite. It is one of the methods provided in the 1969 RC rite for the Baptism of Infants. On the basis of Rom. 6. 3–11 it has been generally supposed to have been the custom of the early Church, but this view has been challenged by C. F. Rogers from the evidence of primitive pictorial representations and measurements of surviving early baptismal fonts.

C. F. Rogers, 'Baptism and Christian Archaeology' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica. Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism by Members of the University of Oxford, v (1903), pp. 239–361; id., 'Baptism by Affusion in the Early Church' in J.T.S., vi (1905), pp. 107–10, with reff. See also bibl. to Baptism.

SUBMISSION OF THE CLERGY. The act whereby the English *Convocations surrendered, on 15 May 1532, to the demands made by *Henry VIII. The clergy promised to make no new *canon without royal licence, and to submit the existing canons to a committee of 32, half lay and half clerical and all to be chosen by the King, for revision. Its effect was to make the King supreme in all ecclesiastical causes. Less than two years later (Jan. 1534), the submission of the clergy was incorporated into an Act of Parliament (25 Hen. VIII, c. 19), which coupled it with the restraint of appeals to Rome. See also Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum.

Text in Gee–Hardy, pp. 176–8 (No. xlviii); also repr. in Bettenson, p. 305 f.

SUBORDINATIONISM. Teaching about the Godhead which regards either the Son as subordinate to the Father or the Holy Ghost as subordinate to both. It is a characteristic tendency in much Christian teaching of the first three centuries, and is a marked feature of such otherwise orthodox Fathers as St. *Justin and *Origen. Various reasons may be given for this tendency: the stress on the absolute unity and transcendence of God the Father, which is common to all forms of theology using the existing categories of Greek thought; the fear of compromising monotheism; and the implications of one strand of Biblical teaching, represented by such texts as Jn. 14. 28. By the standards of orthodoxy established in the 4th cent., such a position came to be regarded as clearly heretical in its denial of the co-equality of the Three Persons of the Trinity. The issue was most explicitly dealt with in the conflict with *Arius and his followers, who held that the Son was God not by nature but by grace and was created by the Father, though in a creation outside time. In relation to the Holy Ghost the issue came to the fore later in the 4th cent., with the teaching of the *Pneumatomachi (q.v.). Subordinationism was condemned by the Council of *Constantinople in 381.

W. Marcus, Der Subordinatianismus (Munich, 1963), with bibl.

SUBSTANCE (Lat. substantia). (1) The word has played a continuous and important part in philosophy since *Aristotle, who in the Categories distinguished between first and second substances (πρώτη οὐσία, δευτέρα οὐσία). The former was the individual, which can neither exist in another nor be predicated of another; the latter was the universal, which does not as such exist in another, though it may be predicated of another. These distinctions were taken over by the *Scholastic philosophers. In general substantia was the permanent, underlying reality as contrasted with its changing and visible accidents. In modern times R. *Descartes defined substance as that which needed nothing else for its existence; there were two kinds of substances—absolute substance, viz. God, and created substances (unextended mind and extended matter). For B. *Spinoza substance was whatever needed nothing else for its conception. The sole substance was the eternal and infinite substance, God, whose essence implied His existence. For G. W. *Leibniz the monads were substances.

(2) In the Christian doctrine of the Godhead, the word is used to express the underlying Being, by which all Three Persons are One. The earliest theologian to make extensive use of the word substantia in this connexion was *Tertullian; but the common view that he was largely influenced by its legal meaning ('a piece of property') is exaggerated. At first, besides οὐσία, the Greek-speaking Church widely used ὑπόστασις in a closely similar sense, a usage favoured by the apparent etymological equivalence of ὑπο-στασις and substantia; and this identity was accepted at *Nicaea (325) and is common in *Athanasius. But under the influence of the *Arian controversy, and esp. the *Cappadocian Fathers, οὐσία and ὑπόστασις became generally distinguished, οὐσία being confined to the meaning 'substance', whereas ὑπόστασις became the accepted equivalent of the Latin persona. See also Homoousios, Homoiousios.

(3) In the Middle Ages the word filled an important place in the theology of the *Eucharist, where the substance of the Eucharistic species was contrasted with their '*accidents' (q.v.). For the history of the doctrine see Transubstantiation.

SUBUNISTS. The party in Bohemia in the 15th cent. which defended against the *Utraquists the practice of communion in one kind (sub una specie).

SUBURBICARIAN DIOCESES (Lat. suburbium, 'suburb'). The seven dioceses in the immediate vicinity of Rome, viz. Albano, Frascati, Ostia, Palestrina, Porto and Santa Rufina (united in 1120), Sabina and Poggio Mirteto (divided in 1841, reunited in 1925), and Velletri. The six '*Cardinal Bishops' take their episcopal titles from these sees, but, since 1962, they no longer have pastoral charge of them. The Dean and Sub-Dean of the Sacred College are elected by them from their own number. The Suburbicarian Dioceses are very small, but very ancient. Their bishops had the right of taking part in the election of the Pope probably as early as the 11th century.

P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum. Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis, Monasteriis, Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, ii (Berlin, 1907), pp. 14–74. G. Phillips, Kirchenrecht, iv (1864), pp. 145–220. U. Benigni in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 324 f., s.v.; F. C. Bouuaert in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 1267–71, s.v. 'Diocèses suburbicaires'. See also works cited under Cardinal.

SUCCENTOR. In cathedral churches of the 'Old Foundation', the title usually given to the deputy of the *Precentor. He is generally a *minor canon. At *York there are two Succentors, the one subject to the canons and the other the principal member of the corporation of vicars-choral. At *Lichfield the holder of the office is called the 'Subchanter'.

SUCCESSION, Apostolic. See Apostolic Succession.

SUDBURY, SIMON. See Simon of Sudbury.

SUETONIUS, Roman historian and secretary to the Emp. Hadrian (117–38). He was apparently one of the first pagan writers to mention Christianity, the following passage from his 'Life of Claudius' (25. 4) being generally held to refer to the early Christians: 'Since the Jews constantly made disturbances at the instigation of Chrestus, he [i.e. Claudius] expelled them from Rome' (Iudaeos impulsore Chresto assidue tumultuantes Roma expulit).

The best ed. of his Lives of the Caesars is that of M. Ihm (Teub., 1908), which is repr., with Eng. tr. by J. C. Rolfe (Loeb, 2 vols., 1914); of his other works that by A. Reifferscheid (Leipzig, 1860). Convenient Eng. tr. of Lives of the Caesars by R. Graves (Penguin Classics, 1957). A. Macé, Essai sur Suétone (1900). Index Verborum by A. A. Howard–C. N. Jackson (Cambridge, Mass., 1922). On the significance of his words quoted, see W. M. *Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire (1893), pp. 230–2, 240, 257 f., 267, 271–4, 276 f. G. Funaioli in P.W., II. Reihe, iv (pt. 1; 1931), s.v., cols. 593–641; G. B. Townend in O.C.D. (ed. 2, 1970), p. 1020 f., s.v. 'Suetonius (2) Tranquillus'.

SUFFICIENT GRACE. In the RC theology of grace, grace which, in contrast to *efficacious grace (q.v.), does not meet with adequate co-operation on the part of the recipient, and hence fails to achieve the result for which it was bestowed. In the *Dominican view (D. *Bañez), it required a further Divine motion ('efficacious grace') to produce a salutary act. The *Jesuit view (L. *Molina), on the other hand, was that 'sufficient grace' was really adequate to produce such a result, needing only the consent of human free will to become efficacious. Both sufficient and efficacious grace are different forms of 'actual grace'.

SUFFRAGAN BISHOP. The title is used in two senses, viz. for:

(1) Any Bishop in relation to his *Archbishop or *Metropolitan, by whom he may be summoned to assist at synods and give his 'suffrage'.

(2) An assistant Bishop appointed to help the Bishop of the diocese. The first instance of this office in England is from 1240. From the end of the 14th cent. to the Reformation appointments of such assistant bishops were frequent and made by the Pope. An Act of 1534 (26 Hen. VIII, cap. 14) named twenty-six specific places (Thetford, Ipswich, Colchester, Dover, Guildford, and so on) as sees from which Bishops Suffragan should take their titles. When a diocesan Bishop was desirous of a suffragan, he was to recommend two candidates to the King, who was to have power to nominate one of them to any see in the list specified within the same province and to present him to the Archbishop, in letters patent under the great seal, for consecration within three months. The suffragan depended for his authority and fees on the commission of the diocesan, which was presumed to lapse on the death or translation of the latter and was renewable only at the pleasure of his successor. The Act was repealed under *Mary (1554; 1 & 2 Ph. and M., cap. 8), but restored under *Elizabeth I (1559; 1 Eliz., cap. 1). After the consecration of seventeen suffragan Bishops in the 16th cent. the office lapsed in 1592, though the existence of Bishops suffragan is assumed in the *Canons of 1604. In 1870, in the face of strong demands, suffragan Bishops were consecrated under the same act for Nottingham (for the diocese of *Lincoln) and Dover (for that of *Canterbury). The Suffragans' Nomination Act of 1888 (51 & 52 Vict., cap. 56) empowered the Crown, by order in council, to make additions to the list of places from which Suffragan Bishops might take their titles.

Henry VIII's Act of 1534 is repr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 253–5 (No. lix). W. *Stubbs, Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum. An Attempt to Exhibit the Course of Episcopal Succession in England from the Records of the Church (1858), esp. pp. 142–9 (Appendix V: 'Suffragans and Bishops in Partibus'). R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, i (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), pp. 75–86 ('Bishops without Sees').

SUGER (c. 1081–1151), Abbot of *St.-Denis, near Paris. Of humble origin, c. 1091 he entered the abbey of St.-Denis, where he was a fellow-student of King Louis VI. From 1106 onwards, he was active in the affairs of the Abbey. In 1107 he was nominated Provost of Berneval in Normandy and in 1109 of Toury. He was sent by the King on embassies to the papal Curia, and he was returning from a visit to *Callistus II in 1122 when he was elected Abbot of St.-Denis. In the next year he went to Rome again to attend the (Ninth) General Council of the *Lateran. Throughout much of his life he was an influential adviser of the French Crown, an active administrator of the lands of his monastery, and a friend of monastic reformers. During Louis VII's absence on the Second *Crusade he was one of the regents, discharging his duties with such success that Louis on his return rewarded him with the title of 'Father of the Country'.

Suger's 'Vita Ludovici Grossi' is a primary historical source for his age. His new church at St.-Denis (choir consecrated 1144), of which he has left an account in his 'Libellus de Consecratione Ecclesiae S. Dionysii', was a crucial step in the development of Gothic architecture. His methods of monastic government are set out in his 'Liber de Rebus in Administratione sua gestis'.

Œuvres complètes, ed. A. Lecoy de La Marche (Société de l'Histoire de France; 1867), with 12th-cent. life by Père Guillaume, O.S.B., pp. 377–411. Modern ed., with Fr. tr., of his life of Louis VI by H. Waquet (Paris, 1929). Eng. tr. of his 'Sancti Dionysii Liber' by E. Panofsky, Abbot Suger on the Abbey Church of St.-Denis and its Art Treasures (Princeton, 1946). F. A. Gervaise, O.S.B., Histoire de Suger (3 vols., 1721). A. Huguenin, Étude sur l'abbé Suger (thesis; 1855). O. Cartellieri, Abt Suger von Saint-Denis, 1081–1151 (Historische Studien, Hft. xi; 1898). M. Aubert, Suger ('Figures monastiques'; 1950), with refs. O. von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral. The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (1956), esp. pp. 64–141.

SUICER, JOHANN KASPAR (1620–84), author of the Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus. He was a Reformed theologian, a native of Frauenfeld in Switzerland. Educated at the French academies of Montauban and Saumur (1640–43), he taught Latin, Greek, and Hebrew at Zürich from 1644 and was professor of Greek at the Collegium Carolinum from 1660 to 1683. After publishing several works on Greek linguistics, he brought out his famous Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus e Patribus Graecis Ordine Alphabetico in 1682 (2 vols., Amsterdam), of which a second enlarged edition appeared in 1728. The work, which shows immense erudition and extensive reading of patristic literature, is still indispensable to students of the vocabulary of the Greek Fathers and of Greek ecclesiastical institutions.

His son, JOHANN HEINRICH SUICER (1646–1705), who in 1683 succeeded his father at the Collegium Carolinum, wrote a Compendium Physicae Aristotelico-Cartesianae (Amsterdam, 1685) and other works.

A. Schweizer–P. Schweizer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), p. 149 f.

SUIDAS (c. A.D. 1000), 'Greek lexicographer'. The traditional supposition that the Greek Lexicon which passes under this name was the work of a certain 'Suidas' is, however, prob. mistaken, the name (properly ἡ Σοῦδα) being apparently derived from a Lat. word meaning 'fortress', i.e. an armoury of information. The Lexicon, both a dictionary and an encyclopaedia, was compiled c. 1000 from many ancient texts, abridgements, and scholia (Homer, Aristophanes, the Palatine Anthology, an epitome of Hesychius of Miletus), including several sources now lost, and also drew, for its lexical entries, on glossaries and word-lists. Much of its historical material came from the Chronicle of *George Hamartolos (9th cent.) and the Excerpts of Constantine Porphyrogenitus (912–59). Its contents are largely of indifferent merit, but certain items stand apart as of great historical value. The whole work is an important witness to the interests and learning of late Byzantine culture.

Editio princeps of the lexicon [by D. Chalcondyles], Milan, 1499; modern crit. ed. by Ada Adler (5 vols., Lexicographi Graeci, Leipzig, 1928–38). F. Dölger, Die Titel des sog. Suidaslexikons (Sb. (Bayr.), 1936, Heft 6); S. G. *Mercati, 'Intorno al titolo dei lessici di Suida-Suda e di Papia' in Atti della Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Serie ottava, Memorie, Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, x (1962), pp. 3–50. A. Adler in P.W., Zweite Reihe, iv (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 675–717, s.v.

SULPICE, St. See Saint-Sulpice.

SULPICIUS SEVERUS (c. 360 – c. 420), historian and hagiographer. Sulpicius was a rising advocate in Aquitaine until his wife's death, his friend *Paulinus of Nola's example, and *Martin of Tours's exhortations led to his conversion to asceticism (c. 394). He settled on an estate in Southern Gaul where he wrote his Life of St. Martin, a literary tour de force, which was highly influential on later hagiography. Although composed within Martin's life-time, it comprises a disciple's interpretation rather than a historical representation: many contemporaries rejected Sulpicius' portrayal of Martin as a man of God whose authenticity was attested through miracles and visions. Later Sulpicius added 3 letters, which include an account of Martin's death and funeral, and the Dialogues (c. 405), where Martin's thaumaturgical powers are favourably compared with those of the Egyptian ascetics. Sulpicius also wrote a Chronicle (published after 404), which portrays sacred history from the Creation to A.D. 400 in classical style, utilizing pagan works as well as Christian, and showing a critical regard for chronology. According to *Gennadius, Sulpicius was a priest, and in his old age he was temporarily inclined towards *Pelagianism; this statement suggests that he was still alive in the 420s.

Editio princeps of his collected works by V. Giselinus (Antwerp, 1574); also ed. H. da Prato (2 vols., Verona, 1741–54), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 95–248, with 'carmina' attributed to him in lxxiv, 671 f.; works also ed. C. Halm (C.S.E.L., i, 1866). Ed. for C.C. in preparation. Eng. tr. by A. Roberts in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, xi (1894), pp. 3–122. Crit. ed. of his Chronicle, with Fr. tr, by A. Lavertujon (2 vols., Paris, 1896–9); Life of St. Martin ed., with Fr. tr. and commentary, by J. Fontaine (S.C., cxxxiii–cxxxv; 1967–9); for other works on the life, see bibl. to Martin, St. The principal source for his life are the letters of Paulinus of Nola. J. Bernays, Ueber die Chronik des Sulpicius Severus (1861). F. Mouret, Sulpice Sévère à Primulac (1907). P. Hyltén, Studien zu Sulpicius Severus (Lund, 1940). Id., 'Critical Notes on the "Chronica" of Sulpicius Severus' in Traditio, xix (1963), pp. 447–60. S. Prete, I Chronica di Sulpicio Severo. Saggio storico-critico (Collezione 'Amici delle Catacombe', xxiv; 1955). H. Montefiore, 'Sulpicius Severus and Titus' Council of War' in Historia, xi (Wiesbaden, 1962), pp. 156–70. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 421–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 231. [A.] Kappelmacher in P.W., iv A (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 863–71, s.v. 'Sulpicius (103)'.

SUMMA. Originally a title of reference books on various subjects, the term, as used by medieval writers, came to denote a compendium of theology, philosophy, or canon law. These compendia were normally used as handbooks in the Schools, much like the earlier *Sentences. The 'Summae' divide their subjects into a great number of questions, usually following a more or less generally accepted order, and use the dialectical method of evolving a theme by affirmation and contradiction. The most famous 'Summae' are the 'Summa Theologica' and the 'Summa contra Gentiles' of St. *Thomas Aquinas; but well-known Summae were also produced by *William of Auxerre, *Alexander of Hales, St. *Albertus Magnus, and many others.

'SUMMA THEOLOGICA'. The chief dogmatic work of St. *Thomas Aquinas (q.v.). It is a vast structure of treatises, questions, and articles, which falls into three parts. The First Part ('Prima') treats of God considered in Himself and as the principle of creation, the first half of the Second Part ('Prima Secundae') of God as the end of man, its second half ('Secunda Secundae') of man's return to God, and the Third Part ('Tertia') of Christ as the way of man to God. The First and Second Parts date from 1265 to 1271, the Third from 1271 onwards. The concluding sections of the Tertia, which deal with the Sacraments and the Last Things, were left unfinished, the missing parts being supplied by *Reginald of Piperno, who used the relevant parts of St. Thomas's 'Commentary on the Sentences' for their completion.

For bibl. see Thomas Aquinas, St.

SUMMI PONTIFICATUS. The *encyclical issued by *Pius XII on 20 Oct. 1939 expounding the bearing of Catholic principles on such matters as the growth of secularism, the brotherhood of man, the state and the family, state-worship and international confidence, and *Catholic Action, and summoning Christians to a renewed devotion to the *Sacred Heart.

Lat. text in A.A.S., xxxi (1939), pp. 413–53, with Eng. tr., pp. 538–64. Further Eng. tr., under the title Darkness over the World, made by R. A. *Knox from the Lat. (*Catholic Truth Society pamphlet, 1939), repr. in G. D. Smith (ed.), Selected Letters and Addresses of Pius XII (C.T.S., 1949), pp. 3–45.

SUMNER, CHARLES RICHARD (1790–1874), Bp. of *Winchester. A younger brother of J. B. *Sumner (q.v.), he was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1814. In 1820 he was introduced to George IV, to whom he owed his subsequent rapid preferment. Having been appointed Chaplain to the King, he was made Canon of *Worcester in 1822 and of *Canterbury in 1825. In 1826 he was consecrated to the see of *Llandaff, which he held in plurality with the deanery of *St. Paul's, and in 1827 he was translated to Winchester by order of the King. He lost the royal favour by voting for the *Catholic Emancipation Bill in 1829, an action he regretted in later life. He was an *Evangelical in his sympathies and as such opposed R. D. *Hampden's appointment to the see of *Hereford. He lent his support, however, to S. *Wilberforce and to G. Moberly (1803–85), Bp. of Salisbury. In 1850 he strongly protested against the restoration of the RC hierarchy. A very capable and successful administrator, he furthered in his diocese the establishment of Poor Schools, better conditions for the agricultural labourers, and the building of churches and parsonages. His literary works include The Ministerial Character of Christ Practically Considered (1824) and an annotated translation of J. *Milton's De Doctrina Christiana (2 vols., 1825). In 1869 he resigned his see through ill-health, to be succeeded by S. Wilberforce.

Life by his son, George Henry Sumner (London, 1876). W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 165–8.

SUMNER, JOHN BIRD (1780–1862), Abp. of *Canterbury. Elder brother of C. R. *Sumner, he was born at Kenilworth and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1801. In 1802 he became assistant master at Eton, and was ordained in 1803. After holding several benefices he was nominated Bp. of *Chester in 1828. Though a convinced Evangelical, he voted for the *Catholic Emancipation Bill in 1829. Later he opposed the *Oxford Movement. He was an able administrator of his diocese, which he enriched by causing many churches and schools to be built. In 1848 he was appointed Abp. of Canterbury. Though rejecting the theology of R. D. *Hampden's Bampton Lectures, he did not oppose his consecration as Bp. of *Hereford, in which he himself took part. In the controversy concerning the *Gorham Case he denied that Baptismal Regeneration was a fundamental doctrine of the C of E. In 1852 it fell to him to preside over the Upper House of *Convocation when, for the first time for 135 years, it met again for business. His numerous writings, which were highly esteemed in Evangelical circles, include Apostolical Preaching (1815), based on the Pauline Epp.; A Treatise on the Records of the Creation (2 vols., 1816), founded on the Mosaic account in Genesis; and The Evidence of Christianity (1824), in which he argued from the vitality of Christianity to its Divine origin; as well as several volumes of Sermons.

G. H. Sumner, Life of Charles Richard Sumner (1876), pp. 402–5. W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 168–70, s.v.

SUN, Canticle of the. See Canticle of the Sun.

SUNDAR SINGH, Sadhu (1889 – *c.*1929), an Indian Christian and mystic. Born of wealthy Sikh parents, he was converted to Christianity by a vision on 18 Dec. 1904, baptized in the C of E at Simla in 1905, and donned the robe of a Sadhu (i.e. 'holy man') in an endeavour to present Christianity in a Hindu form. In his early travels he covered the Punjab, Kashmir, Baluchistan, and Afghanistan, and in 1908 made his first visit to evangelize Tibet. A visit to Madras in 1908 introduced him to the world at large, and his fame was enhanced by travels in the West in 1920 and 1922. He expected death at 33, the age at which Christ died, and was disappointed that he lived on. Despite ill-health, he persisted in his strenuous work in Tibet. He was last heard of in April 1929.

B. H. *Streeter and A. J. Appasamy, The Sadhu (1921); C. F. Andrews, Sadhu Sundar Singh (1934); C. J. Davey, The Yellow Robe. The Story of Sadhu Sundar Singh (1950), with further refs.; A. J. Appasamy, Sundar Singh (1958).

SUNDAY. Its English name derives from the old pagan 'dies solis' (Gk. ἡλίου ἡμέρα), the day consecrated to the sun, which was given a Christian interpretation and referred to Christ, the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. 4. 2). In Rev. it is called the Day of the Lord, κυριακὴ ἡμέρα (1. 10), the Latin translation of which, 'Dominica', is the name used in the calendars of the W. Church. Already in NT times Sunday began to replace the Jewish Sabbath. St. *Paul and the Christians of Troas assembled on the first day of the week 'to break bread' (Acts 20. 7) and the Apostle bids his converts put by their alms on this day (1 Cor. 16. 2). The chief reason for the substitution of Sunday for the Sabbath was the commemoration of the Resurrection, mentioned already by St. *Ignatius, which gives the day its joyful character; thus there is to be no fasting or kneeling on this day. *Justin Martyr connects it also with the first day of Creation, and St. *Isidore of Seville, much later, with the Coming of the Holy Ghost. Sunday also came to be associated with the Three Divine Persons and esp. dedicated to the Trinity, so that, e.g., the *Preface of the Trinity came to be used on all Sundays without a Preface of their own—a custom now abandoned in the RC Church.

The observance of Sunday as a day of rest consecrated esp. to the service of God began to be regulated by both ecclesiastical and civil legislation from the 4th cent. It was enjoined by the Council of *Elvira (c. 306; can. 21), and by *Constantine in a law promulgated in 321, commanding abstention from work, including legal business, for townspeople, though permitting farm labour. The Council of *Laodicea (c. 380; can. 29) enjoined abstention from work as far as possible. From the 6th to the 13th cents. the ecclesiastical legislation became more and more strict, enforcing also assistance at Mass, and was helped by the infliction of severe penalties by the civil authorities, e.g. by the Anglo-Saxon king Ine and by *Alfred the Great. From the 13th cent. onwards the custom of allowing dispensations became widespread. Present-day Catholic practice in the W. requires the faithful to hear Mass on Sundays and to abstain from *servile work, except in cases where either or both would cause grave inconvenience, e.g. when no church is available at a reasonable distance, or where pressing needs make relaxation from servile work undesirable.

The Protestant Churches did not at first introduce special Sunday legislation; but the abuse of Sunday soon led to a reaction. In England the new attitude to Sunday was much influenced by Nicholas Bound's True Doctrine of the Sabbath (1595), which identified the Christian Sunday with the Jewish Sabbath. Despite King James's defence of the traditional Sunday pleasures in his *Book of Sports (1618), rigorist views gained ground and found classic expression in the legislation of the Long Parliament and the *Westminster standards. While the Restoration brought much relaxation, the Act of 1677, by reducing Sunday labour, furthered its rigorist observance. The early 18th cent. was marked by greater liberty, but through the influence of the Evangelical Revival stricter observance was once more enforced by the Act of 1781. In the 19th cent. Sunday was still a day mainly devoted to duties of piety, but the increasing secularization of life in the present century has considerably reduced its religious observance, while, on the other hand, considerations of social well-being have made the cessation of work on Sunday a matter increasingly encouraged by the civil authorities. See also Sabbatarianism.

J. A. Hessey, Sunday. Its Origin, History and Present Obligation (Bampton Lectures for 1860; 1860). T. *Zahn, Geschichte des Sonntags vornehmlich in der alten Kirche (1878). H. B. Porter, The Day of Light. The Biblical and Liturgical Meaning of Sunday (Studies in Ministry and Worship, ~~xvi~~; 1960). W. Rordorf, Der Sonntag. Geschichte des Ruhe- und Gottesdiensttages im ältesten Christentum (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xliii; 1962; Eng. tr., 1968). B. Botte, O.S.B., and others, Le Dimanche (Lex Orandi, xxxix; 1965). A. Barry in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 1042–53, s.v. 'Lord's Day'; O. Zöckler in P.R.E., xviii (1906), pp. 521–9, s.v. 'Sonntagsfeier'; J. Gaillard, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., iii (1957), cols. 948–82, s.v. 'Dimanche'.

SUNDAY LETTER. In ecclesiastical calendars that one of the seven letters A to G, allotted to the days of the year in rotation (1 Jan. = A, &c.), which coincides with the Sundays in a given year. Knowledge of it enables the user to discover at a glance on what day of the week any calendarial date in that year will fall. It is ascertained by a simple arithmetical calculation, as described, e.g., in the 'Table to Find Easter Day' prefixed to the BCP. A leap year necessarily has two Sunday letters, the change in the BCP calendar falling on 29 Feb., but in older forms of the calendar on 25 Feb. (vi. Kal. Mar.; hence 'bissextile years').

SUNDAY SCHOOLS. Schools, mainly for children, in which instruction, now primarily religious instruction, is given on Sunday; they are usually held in conjunction with a parish or congregation. Although there are isolated earlier examples of schools for poor children on Sundays, the movement owed its success to Robert *Raikes (q.v.), who, along with the local incumbent (T. Stock), engaged four women in 1780 to instruct the children of *Gloucester in reading and the Church Catechism on Sundays. Partly owing to the publicity which Raikes gave to the enterprise in his Journal, his example was soon followed elsewhere, both in Europe and in America. In 1785, on the initiative of William Fox (1736–1826), a Baptist merchant, the Sunday School Society was formed to give financial support to individual Sunday Schools, most of whom then had paid teachers. Its central committee had an equal number of Anglicans and Nonconformists. The Sunday School Union, also an interdenominational body, was founded in 1803, to help with supplies of books and materials for Sunday Schools staffed by voluntary teachers in the London area. In other large towns similar associations, known as 'auxiliaries', were formed, affiliated to the central union. This was supported esp. in Evangelical and Nonconformist circles.

With the increase of general education in the 19th cent. the Sunday Schools devoted themselves more exclusively to religious education. Partly as a result of the *Oxford Movement, there grew up a desire among Anglicans to introduce more specifically C of E teaching, and in 1843 a new society, the Sunday School Institute, was formed. It was incorporated into the *National Society in 1936.

As standards of education advanced after the 1870 Act, more education was needed for the Sunday School teachers who, from c. 1840, were mainly voluntary workers. Under the auspices of the Sunday School Union a training college for teachers was founded in 1907 at Selly Oak, Birmingham (Westhill); the Sunday School Institute opened St. Christopher's College, Blackheath, in 1909 for similar purposes. This latter has become the St. Christopher's College Education Trust, which exists to promote religious education. In 1966 the (National from 1921) Sunday School Union became the National Christian Education Council.

The Sunday Schools of the C of E are partly organized on a diocesan basis; those sponsored by the National Christian Education Council are on a national basis. The Church of England Board of Education and the National Society offer advice and material assistance.

A number of histories of individual schools have been written but there is little on the movement as a whole. Catharine R. Newby, The Story of Sunday Schools. Robert Raikes and After [1930; very brief]; D. P. Thomson (ed.), The Sunday School in the Modern World [c. 1924]; G. H. Archibald, The Modern Sunday School. Its Psychology and Method [1926]. T. W. Laqueur, Religion and Respectability. Sunday Schools and Working Class Culture 1780–1850 (1976). J. Ferguson (ed.), Christianity, Society and Education. Robert Raikes, Past, Present and Future (1981). W. C. R. Hicks in Chambers's Encyclopaedia, xii (ed. 1950), p. 284 f., s.v. See also lives of Raikes, R.

SUPEREROGATION, Works of. In RC *moral theology, acts which are not enjoined as of strict obligation, and therefore are not simply good as opposed to bad, but better as opposed to good ('opera meliora'). Thus the '*counsels of evangelical perfection' are held to be not of duty but of supererogation. The term, which goes back to the Latin translation of Lk. 10. 35 ('quodcumque supererogaveris'), was probably not used in its present technical sense until the Middle Ages, when 'opera supererogationis' were treated in the works of *Alexander of Hales, St. *Thomas Aquinas, and others. The doctrine, for which the story of the rich young ruler (Mt. 19. 16–22) and St. Paul's teaching on virginity (1 Cor. 7) are usually adduced in evidence, was repudiated by the Reformers and in the Anglican Article XIV, which asserts that 'Works of Supererogation cannot be taught without arrogancy and impiety'.

Commentaries on the *Thirty-Nine Articles, cited s.v., Art. XIV, esp. E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles, ii (1897), pp. 424–38.

SUPERINTENDENTS. In the reformed Church of Scotland, the officials appointed under the *First Book of Discipline (1560) to oversee the districts roughly corresponding to the old dioceses. They would appear to have been temporary office-bearers chosen, owing to the great dearth of ministers, to settle and organize the churches under their care. It has been much disputed whether their appointment implies that the Church of Scotland was originally Episcopalian. While they enjoyed a measure of superiority over other ministers, they differed from diocesan bishops in being admitted to office by fellow-presbyters, in not possessing exclusive power of ordination, and in being subject to the control and censure of the other ministers regularly associated with them.

In the *Lutheran Churches, which in this matter supplied a model for the Scottish superintendents, Church officials of this name were created from an early date for similar reasons and with similar functions. In the Scandinavian countries the title of 'Bishop' was retained. In accordance with the principles of Lutheran polity they were to be appointed by, and responsible to, the civil powers. See also General Superintendent.

SUPERIOR. One who has authority over others by virtue of his ecclesiastical rank. The term is commonly used of the heads of the religious orders and congregations, though it is not in general use in those (esp. older) orders of monks and canons which consisted originally of independent houses. In some of the more recent bodies of religious, esp. of women, it has become a title.

SUPPER, The Last. See Last Supper.

SUPPRESSION OF THE MONASTERIES. See Dissolution of the Monasteries.

SUPRALAPSARIANISM (or 'Antelapsarianism'). The form of the *Calvinistic doctrine of *Predestination which maintains that God decreed the election and non-election of individual men before the *Fall of *Adam. *Calvin himself regarded Divine Predestination as an inscrutable mystery; for though he held that the elect, being sinners, were favoured beyond their merit, and that the non-elect, being also sinners, received just treatment acc. to their merit, he did not presume to elaborate the whole subject. It was his followers who boldly asserted such doctrines as supralapsarianism. Though logical consistency may appear to favour the supralapsarian position, the milder *sublapsarian doctrine (q.v.) has been generally dominant among Calvinists, esp. since the Synod of *Dort (1618).

SUPREMACY, Act of. The Act passed in Nov. 1534 (26 Hen. VIII, c. 1) confirming to the King and his successors the title of 'the only supreme head in earth of the Church of England, called Anglicana Ecclesia'. It was repealed by *Mary (1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 8) and the repeal was confirmed by *Elizabeth I. But Elizabeth's new Act of Supremacy (1 Eliz., c. 1), the first act of her reign (1559), restored the Henrician legislation in a revised form. The monarch's title just quoted was dropped, however, and the Queen declared to be 'the only supreme governor of this realm, and of all other her highness's dominions and countries, as well in all spiritual or ecclesiastical things or causes as temporal'. The election of bishops by congé d'élire was restored, and an oath of obedience to the Crown in things ecclesiastical as well as civil imposed on all clergymen and public officials. The act was an assertion of the monarch's responsibility before God for the welfare of the Church, and annexed 'for ever' the power of reforming abuses to the Crown.

The text of the Act of 1534 is repr. in Gee–Hardy, p. 243 f. (No. lv); the repeal by Mary of this and other ecclesiastical legislation of the previous reigns is pr. ib., pp. 385–415 (No. lxxvi), esp. p. 390; and the Act restoring the Queen's Supremacy under Elizabeth, ib., pp. 442–58 (No. lxxix).

SURIN, JEAN JOSEPH (1600–65), French mystic and spiritual writer. In 1616 he entered the *Jesuit Order, where he came under the influence of Louis Lallemant (1587–1635). Having been sent as a man of great spiritual power to Loudun in 1636 to exorcize some *Ursulines believed to be possessed by the devil, he underwent in the result a series of mysterious trials and sufferings which have been variously interpreted as possession or as a purely pathological state. These experiences, which went on for 20 years without, however, completely precluding his activities as a preacher, writer, and spiritual director, were followed by a period of mystic exaltation. His principal work, the Catéchisme spirituel (1659), published without his knowledge, was, in its Italian translation, placed on the *Index in 1695 during the controversy between F. *Fénelon and J. B. *Bossuet. Surin's spiritual doctrine, which was expressed in Les Fondements de la vie spirituelle (1667), Dialogues spirituels (1704–9), and several other works, insists on the necessity of purification by self-abnegation and suffering. It advocates the practice of the presence of God and the prayer of contemplation in which the soul, abandoned to the direction of the Holy Spirit, loses itself in the love of God. The Fondements was published by E. B. *Pusey in a version 'adapted' for C of E readers in 1844.

List of works with notices of edd. and translations to date in Sommervogel, vii (1896), cols. 1704–16, and ix (1900), col. 868. Modern edd. of his Correspondance by M. de Certeau, S.J. (Paris, 1966) and of his Guide spirituel pour la perfection [left unfinished at Surin's death and first publd. in 1801] by id. (ib., 1963). H. M. Boudon, L'Homme de Dieu. En la personne du R. Père Jean-Joseph Seürin (Chartres, 1683; modern ed., 2 vols., Lyons, 1826). É. De Greeff, 'Succédanés et concomitances psychopathologiques de la "Nuit obscure" (Le cas du père Surin)' in Études Carmélitaines, xxiii. 2 (1938), pp. 152–76, with other articles on Surin by M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J., J. de Guibert, S.J., and F. Achille-Delmais, pp. 177–89 and 235–9. M. de Certeau, S.J., 'Jean-Joseph Surin' in The Month, ccx (1960), pp. 340–53. Bremond, v (1920), pp. 148–310; Pourrat, iv (ed. 3, 1928), pp. 85–107, with note on edd. of his works. M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2834–42, s.v., with further reff.

SURPLICE (Lat. superpelliceum, 'over a fur garment'). A liturgical vestment of white linen, with wide sleeves. It was originally a loose choir vestment substituted for the narrow-sleeved alb because it was better suited for wear over the fur coats customary in northern countries, hence its name. From the 12th cent. it came to be the distinctive dress of the lower clergy and to be used by priests outside Mass. At first a tunic reaching to the feet, it became steadily shorter until, in the 18th cent. on the Continent, it just covered the hips, the sleeves also being reduced in size. This form, usually called the *cotta, was until recently widely used in the RC Church beside the older, wide-sleeved form, reaching to the knees. The surplice is worn by all clerics and is also used by laymen, e.g. in choir, when serving Mass, acting as acolytes, &c. In the C of E the BCP of 1552 made it the only prescribed vestment of the clergy, but the '*Ornaments Rubric' ordering it was removed in later editions. Its use caused much controversy in the reign of *Elizabeth I, but was insisted upon by Abp. M. Parker in his Advertisements. Can. 58 of 1604 ordered the wearing of the surplice by ministers during Divine service and when administering the sacraments, and can. 17 enjoined it also on students in colleges other than clerics on certain days. Can. B 8 of 1969 prescribes its use by ministers at Morning and Evening Prayer and for the Occasional Offices and gives it as one of the alternative vestments of the celebrant at the Eucharist. The question whether a surplice should be worn by a cleric when preaching in the pulpit was widely agitated in the 19th cent. in connexion with the Ritualist Movement. Its use in the C of E is now almost, if not quite, universal. See also Vestiarian Controversy.

Braun, L.G., pp. 135–48. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 343 f., s.v. V. Staley in P.B.D. (1912), p. 774 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Ornaments Rubric.

SURPLICE FEES. The fees which are payable to the incumbent of a parish for marriages and burials. They are his by right, whoever performs the service, and he pays income-tax on them as part of the income of the benefice.

SURROGATE. In ecclesiastical usage, the word is applied esp. to a clergyman or other person appointed by the bishop as his deputy to grant licences for marriages without banns.

SURSUM CORDA (Lat., 'Lift up your hearts'). In the Eucharistic liturgy the words addressed by the celebrant to the congregation immediately before the *Preface. The reply is: 'Habemus ad Dominum', traditionally translated, 'We lift them up unto the Lord'. Its use, which is universal, is attested as early as St. *Hippolytus of Rome (c. 215) and St. *Cyprian (252) in the W. and as St. *Cyril of Jerusalem (c. 350) in the E.

Jungmann, M.S., ii (ed. 1958), pp. 138–44; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 110–15. C. A. Bouman, 'Variants in the introduction to the Eucharistic Prayer' in V.C., iv (1950), pp. 94–115.

SUSANNA, Book of. In the English Bible one of the smaller Books of the *Apocrypha. In the LXX it follows the Book of Daniel (of which the *Vulgate reckons it the thirteenth chapter); in the *Old Latin it comes immediately before Daniel. There is no agreement among scholars as to whether it was originally written in Greek, Hebrew, or Aramaic. The Book tells in 64 verses of the false accusation of adultery brought against Susanna by two elders, her condemnation, and her final deliverance by the sagacity of Daniel. In the Christian era the incident became the symbol of the saved soul, and as such is to be met with already in the paintings of the *Catacombs and on early *sarcophagi. It became again a favourite subject of art in the Renaissance, esp. the bathing scene, which has also been painted by P. P. Rubens, *Rembrandt, and others, as well as by many modern artists.

Gk. texts in H. B. *Swete (ed.), The Old Testament in Greek, iii (ed. 1912), pp. 576–85, and A. Rahlfs (ed.), Septuaginta, ii (Stuttgart, 1935), pp. 864–70. Eng. tr., with commentary and reff. to other edd. of texts, by D. M. Kay in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 638–51. W. H. Daubney, The Three Additions to Daniel. A Study (1906), pp. 101–77. W. Baumgartner, 'Susanna. Die Geschichte einer Legende' in Archiv für Religionsgeschichte, xxiv (1926), pp. 259–80; id., 'Der weise Knabe und die des Ehebruchs beschuldigte Frau', ib., xxvii (1929), p. 187 f., both repr. in his Zum Alten Testament und seiner Umwelt (Leiden, 1959), pp. 42–67; F. Zimmermann, 'The Story of Susanna and its original language' in Jewish Quarterly Review, N.S., xlviii (1957–1958), pp. 237–41. On early representations in art, H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 1742–52, s.v. 'Suzanne', with reff. See also Catholic commentaries to Daniel and bibl. to Apocrypha.

SUSANNA, St. (3rd cent.), Roman martyr. Acc. to legend, she was a woman of noble birth and great beauty, a niece of Pope Caius (283–96), and was put to death for refusing to marry a pagan relative of *Diocletian. Her 'Acta' seem to be a working-over of what was orig. an edifying tale. Since the 5th cent. her name has been attached to one of the *tituli at Rome. Feast day, 11 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. II (1734), pp. 624–32, with part 2 of the Acta and other material; part 1, ib., Feb. III (1658), pp. 61–4. L. *Duchesne, 'Les Légendes de l'Alta Semita' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxxvi (1916–17), pp. 27–56, esp. pp. 33–42; J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hftt. 1 and 2; 1918), pp. 70–4; P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, vii (S.T., xlix, 1928), pp. 185–202.

SUSO, HENRY. See Henry Suso.

SUTTON, CHRISTOPHER (c. 1565–1629), devotional writer. Educated at Hart Hall and Lincoln College, *Oxford, he held several livings in the eastern counties. In 1605 he became a Canon of *Westminster and in 1618 of *Lincoln. His devotional books, written with much fervour, enjoyed great popularity. The most used was Godly Meditations upon the Most Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (1613), in which, deprecating controversy, he sought to defend a doctrine of Christ's presence in the Eucharist midway between *Transubstantiation and the teaching of H. *Zwingli, maintaining that while consecration effected no change in the substance of the elements it radically altered their use. The book was reissued by J. H. *Newman with a fresh preface in 1838 and became popular for some years with the *Tractarians. Sutton's Disce Mori (1600) and Disce Vivere (1608) were also reissued in the 19th century.

His Disce Vivere was repr. from the 1602 ed. with a Memoir of his Life by J. E. Tyler (1847), pp. iii–xxii.

SUVERMERIAN. A word applied by the Saxon Reformers to certain Swiss Protestant extremists. It arose from an attempted Latinization (Swermeros) of the Germ. Schwärmer ('fanatical enthusiasts'). In modern times it was brought to general notice through its (apparently somewhat inaccurate) use by C. H. Smyth of the Eucharistic doctrine of T. *Cranmer in Cranmer and the Reformation under Edward VI (1926).

On the term see review of C. H. Smyth by E. W. Watson in J.T.S., xxviii (1926–7), p. 204.

SWAINSON, CHARLES ANTHONY (1820–87), English theologian. A native of Liverpool, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a Fellow of Christ's College in 1841. He was ordained priest in 1844 and was appointed principal of the theological college at *Chichester in 1854. In 1864 he became Norrisian professor of divinity at Cambridge, was elected master of Christ's College in 1881, and vice-chancellor of the university in 1885. In 1858 he published his *Hulsean Lectures on The Creeds of the Church, in which he discussed the authority of the Creeds on the basis of Biblical teaching and in their relation to private judgement. It was followed in 1875 by his important work, The Nicene and Apostles' Creeds, which was the fruit of many years' work on MSS. in Continental libraries. It included an account of the *Athanasian Creed, which Swainson dated between 860 and 870 and believed to consist of two separate documents. In 1884 appeared his edition of The Greek Liturgies, a standard collection of texts, parts of which are still indispensable to the student of Greek liturgiology.

S. Cheetham in D.N.B., lv (1898), p. 191 f., s.v.

SWASTIKA (Skt. svastika, 'well-being', 'fortune'; Lat. crux gammata; Fr. croix gammée; Germ. Hakenkreuz). A symbol of great antiquity, in the form of a cross of equal arms each of which is bent in the shape of a hook. It was probably in origin a charm for attracting good luck and averting misfortune and has also been explained as a symbol of fertility or as representing the wheel of the sun, though the latter interpretation has been commonly rejected in recent times. It appears already on the vases of Mussiân Tepe (nr. Susa, in Elamite country) c. 4000–3000 B.C., among the German tribes c. 1000 B.C., and is found as a widespread ornament in China, Japan—esp. in Buddhist art—and America in the Christian era. From the middle of the 3rd cent. A.D. it appears in the Roman catacombs, but apparently without any symbolic or Christian reference. It is also to be found on medieval embroidery and brasses, e.g. at Lewknor, Oxfordshire. In modern times, owing to the mistaken idea that it is an old Teutonic sign confined to the Aryan peoples, it was adopted as the official symbol of the National Socialist Party in Germany, with special emphasis on its anti-Semitic significance.

T. Wilson, 'The Swastika. The earliest known Symbol and its Migrations' in Annual Report of . . . the . . . Smithsonian Institution for the Year ending June 30, 1894 (Washington, D.C., 1896), pp. 757–1011, with bibl. J. Lechler, Vom Hakenkreuz. Die Geschichte eines Symbols (1921; ed. 2, 1934). O. Hupp, Runen und Hakenkreuz. Eine archäologische Studie mit heraldischen Schlussfolgerungen (1921).

SWEDEN, Christianity in. The evangelization of Sweden started in the 9th cent., when at the request of some Swedish nobles St. *Anskar (801–65) was sent from the Frankish court. His work, however, was destroyed by civil wars. The systematic conversion of the country began in the 11th cent., largely from England, and was not complete till the middle of the 12th. In 1104 the see of *Lund received metropolitical rank, while *Upsala became an archbishopric in 1164. In the later Middle Ages the position of the bishops and clergy was highly privileged. They were exempt from civil burdens and from the oath to the civil authority, while at the same time they amassed great riches and held considerable political power. The greatest figure in the ecclesiastical history of the time was St. *Bridget of Sweden (c. 1303–73), founder of the *Brigittine Order.

The Reformation in Sweden was gradual, and of an entirely individual character. The national leader, Gustavus Vasa, who in 1521 headed the war of independence against Denmark, was no doubt led to join the movement by the undue wealth and influence of the clergy. But although in 1524 relations were formally broken off with the Roman Curia, and Olaus *Petri, a pupil of *Luther, began to teach under the protection of Gustavus, the ancient episcopal succession was deliberately kept through Petrus Magni, who in that year was consecrated Bp. of Västeras at Rome, and the old forms of service were retained for many years. A tentative Swedish Mass appeared in 1531, but did not immediately replace the Latin Mass, portions of the two being freely interchanged. In general, the result of the policy of Olaus Petri and of his brother Laurentius Petri (Abp. of Upsala, 1531–73) was the establishment of Lutheran dogma concurrently with the retention of Catholic Church order; and the Swedish Church, though holding the basic doctrine of justification by faith, has never used the word 'Lutheran' in its official title.

King John III (reigned 1569–92) made some attempts to reunite the Swedish Church with Rome, but these were unsuccessful, as were also the Calvinist designs of his successor, Charles IX, under whom, in 1593, the Swedes for the first time adopted the *Augsburg Confession, and so formally committed themselves to Lutheran dogma. In the Swedish Constitution of 1809 it was provided that the King and members of the Government must belong to the Swedish Church.

In the 19th cent. the Swedish Church suffered from a wave of *latitudinarianism, which was succeeded, about the time of the abolition of the Test Acts in 1858, by an evangelical revival which encouraged the growth of dissenting chapels, and in the Church itself almost destroyed sacramental religion.

The 20th cent. has seen the beginnings of a Church revival, partly through sympathetic intercourse with England. The recognition of the Church as the Mystical Body of Christ, of the value of the historic ministry, of the sacraments, and of liturgical worship, began to reappear, though Lutheran dogma is considered more fundamental than Church order, and the closest kinship is felt with the Lutheran bodies of Finland, Norway, Denmark and Germany. Outstanding 20th cent. Swedish theologians have included Abp. N. *Söderblom, who played a leading part in the early history of the *Ecumenical Movement, and Bp. G. *Aulén and Anders Nygren (1890–1978), who both did much to revive Lutheran theology. In the Biblical field, Ivan Engnell (1907–64) attracted attention as one of the leaders of the *Traditio-critical school.

The Church of Sweden numbers the overwhelming majority of the population among its members. Of the rest, the largest number belong to the Swedish Mission Society, the members of which, in spite of nominal adherence to the Swedish Church, have their own preachers and sacraments. Other bodies with a substantial number of adherents are the *Pentecostalists, the National Evangelical Society, *Salvationists (though these use the sacraments of the Church of Sweden), and RCs.

The state, while tolerating all religions, gives special protection to the Established Church, which controls religious teaching in the state schools. It has its own Kyrkomöte, or Convocation, without the consent of which no laws on Church matters may be passed by Parliament.

In English there is a good survey by J. *Wordsworth, The National Church of Sweden (Hale Lectures, 1910; 1911). Other general works by J. H. Swinstead, The Swedish Church and Ours (1921), and H. M. Waddams, The Swedish Church (1946). R. Murray, A Brief History of the Church of Sweden. Origins and Modern Structure (Stockholm, 1961). L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches. A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965). C. J. A. Oppermann, The English Missionaries in Sweden and Finland (C.H.S., 1937), with bibl. Eng. tr. of the Handbok för Svenska Kyrkan (the service book containing the orders for administering the Sacraments, the forms for Morning and Evening Prayer and the Occasional Offices) by E. E. Yelverton, The Swedish Rite (Translations of Christian Literature, Series III, Liturgical Texts, S.P.C.K., 1921). Id., The Mass in Sweden. Its Development from the Latin Rite from 1531 to 1917 (H.B.S., lvii; 1920). C. M. Butler, The Reformation in Sweden (New York, 1883). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia. Eine Sammlung von Selbstdarstellungen der christlichen Kirchen, ii, Die skandinavischen Länder, pt. 1, Die Kirche in Schweden (5. Lieferung des Gesamtwerkes; 1935), with bibl. H. Reuterdahl, Svenska Kyrkans Historia (4 vols., Lund, 1838–66). H. Holmquist–H. Pleijel (edd.), Svenska Kyrkans Historia, ii [1274–1521] (1941); iii [1521–1611] (1933); iv (1) [1611–32] (1938); v [1680–1772] (1935); vi (2) [1809–23] (1946). Y. T. Brilioth–H. Holmquist, Handbok i Svensk Kyrkohistoria (3 vols., Stockholm, 1940–8; revised ed., 1952–9). B. Gustafsson, Svensk Kyrkohistoria (ib., 1957). C. A. Cornelius, Svenska Kyrkans Historia efter Reformationen (2 parts, Upsala, 1886–7). J. Martin, Gustave Vase et la Réforme en Suède (1906); H. Biaudet (ed.), Le Saint Siège et la Suède durant la seconde moitié du XVIe siècle. Notes et documents [1570–6] (Helsingfors, 1906); id., Le Saint Siège et la Suède durant la seconde moitié du XVIe siècle. Études politiques [1570–6] (Paris, 1907). A. Palmquist, Die Römisch-Katholische Kirche in Schweden nach 1781, i [1783–1820] (Publications of the Swedish Society of Church History, New Series, viii; 1954), ii [1820–73] (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1958, part 8). Numerous specialized studies in H. Pleijel (ed.), Samlingar och Studier till Svenska Kyrkans Historia (Stockholm, 1940 ff.). There are also many vols. devoted to specific aspects of Swedish Church history in the Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift (Uppsala, 1865 ff.). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), pp. 167–87, iv (1961), pp. 325–35. H. Holmquist–G. Aulén in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xviii (1906), pp. 17–43, s.v. 'Schweden'; S. Göransson–H. Lyttkens in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 1592–1604, s.v. 'Schweden'.

SWEDENBORG, EMANUEL (1688–1772), orig. Swedberg, Swedish scientist and mystical thinker. He was the son of Jesper Swedberg, who later became professor of theology at Upsala and Bp. of Skara. After studying at Upsala and extensive travels in England (where he was influenced by Henry *More, J. *Locke, and I. *Newton) and elsewhere he was appointed by Charles XII to a post on the Swedish Board of Mines (1716). Endowed with unusual mental fertility and inventiveness and considerable mathematical ability, he anticipated many subsequent hypotheses and discoveries (nebular theory, magnetic theory, machine-gun, aeroplane). He is also claimed as the founder of crystallography. As time went on he became increasingly concerned to show by purely scientific (esp. physical) analysis that the Universe had a fundamentally spiritual structure, notably in Prodromus Philosophiae Ratiocinantis de Infinito et Causa Finali Creationis (1734). In the next years further proof of this supremacy of the spiritual was found in biological and physiological studies.

In 1743–5 Swedenborg's outlook underwent a sudden development. He became conscious of direct contact with the angels and the spiritual world, partly in dreams and supernatural visions, but also in his normal waking life. He felt that the Lord was commissioning him to make known his doctrines to mankind at large. The agency was to be the New Church, organized not as a body separate from the existing Churches, but as a spiritual fraternity of all those of whatever ecclesiastical allegiance who accepted his doctrines. In 1747 he resigned his position on the Board of Mines and embarked on intensive study of the Scriptures. He spent the rest of his life in Sweden, Holland, and London, writing assiduously in defence of his teachings, but also maintaining his purely scientific interests to the end. He died in London on 29 March 1772 and was buried in the Swedish Church in Princes Square. In 1908 his remains were removed to Stockholm by arrangement with the Swedish Government.

Among the earliest disseminators of his teaching were two C of E clergymen, Thomas Hartley (d. 1784), rector of Winwick, Cheshire, and John Clowes (1743–1831), vicar of St. John's, Manchester. Lancashire has remained a centre of Swedenborgian influence in England. Clowes (esp.) was averse to a new organization and, like Swedenborg himself, wished to propagate the teaching in the existing churches. The formal creation of the New Jerusalem Church was the work of five ex-Wesleyan preachers in London (7 May 1787). Since 1815 conferences have been held annually. In U.S.A., the first congregation was formed in Baltimore in 1792, and a General Convention of the New Jerusalem met in 1817 at Philadelphia. In 1890 a smaller, separate body of Swedenborgians, which in 1897 took the name of General Church of the New Jerusalem, was established, with headquarters at Bryn Athyn, Pa. There are also bodies of Swedenborgians on the Continent of Europe and in Australia. They claim a world membership of about 50,000.

Swedenborg's combination of pantheistic and theosophic doctrines does not admit of brief summary. Of his voluminous expositions the most comprehensive was Arcana Coelestia (8 vols., 1756). Among others were The Earths in the Universe (1758), The New Jerusalem and its Heavenly Doctrine (1758), Heaven and Hell (1758), Divine Love and Wisdom (1763; perhaps the best epitome of his system), The Apocalypse Revealed (1766), and The True Christian Religion (1771). Among his earliest critics was I. *Kant, whose Träume eines Geistersehers (1766) was directed against him.

Photo-lithographed ed. of his works by R. L. Tafel (10 vols., Stockholm, 1869–70); also ed. in 18 vols., ib., 1901–16. Posthumous Tracts tr. from Lat. into Eng. by J. J. G. Wilkinson (London, 1847). A facsimile ed. of his Memorabilia seu Diarium Spirituale ab Anno 1747 ad Annum 1765 was publ. at Stockholm (3 vols., 1901–5); Eng. tr. of the Diary by G. Bush–J. H. Smithson (5 vols., London, 1883–1902). J. Hyde, A Bibliography of the Works of Emanuel Swedenborg Original and Translated (1906). The Swedenborg Concordance. A Complete Work of Reference to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg Based on the Original Latin Writings of the Author, Compiled, Edited and Translated by J. F. Potts (6 vols., London, 1888–1902). R. L. Tafel (ed. and tr.), Documents Concerning the Life and Character of Emanuel Swedenborg (2 vols., bound in 3, 1875–7). W. White, Swedenborg. His Life and Writings (1856); G. Trobridge, A Life of Emanuel Swedenborg. With a Popular Exposition of his Philosophical and Theological Teachings (1912). S. Toksvig, Emanuel Swedenborg. Scientist and Mystic (1949). E. Benz, Swedenborg in Deutschland. F. C. Oetinger und Immanuel Kants Auseinandersetzung mit der Person und Lehre Emanuel Swedenborgs (Auflage 2000; 1947); id., Emanuel Swedenborg. Naturforscher und Seher (1948). C. O. Sigstedt, The Swedenborg Epic. The Life and Works of Emanuel Swedenborg (New York, 1952). I. Jonsson, Swedenborgs Korrespondenslära (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Stockholm Studies in Literature, x; 1969), with extensive bibl. and summary in English. Popular life by E. A. Sutton, The Happy Isles (1938). L. B. de Beaumont in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 129–32, s.v.

SWETE, HENRY BARCLAY (1835–1917), Biblical and patristic scholar. He was educated at King's College, London, and Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. From 1882 to 1890 he was professor at King's College, London, and from 1890 until 1915 Regius professor of divinity at Cambridge. He achieved great success in fostering theological study, esp. at Cambridge; and among the many co-operative projects with which he was directly concerned were the Journal of Theological Studies (1899 ff.), the series of Cambridge Patristic Texts and the Cambridge Handbooks of Liturgical Study, the Central Society of Sacred Study (C.S.S.S., for the encouragement of theological study among Anglican clergy), and *A Patristic Greek Lexicon (eventually publd. 1961–8). His own writings include 2 vols. on the History of the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit (1909, 1912), editions of *Theodore of Mopsuestia's commentary on the Minor Epistles of St. Paul (1880–2) and of the text of the *Septuagint (3 vols., 1887–94), and commentaries on St. Mark (1898) and the Apocalypse (1906). He also edited Essays on the Early History of the Church and Ministry (posthumous, 1918).

'M. B. K.'–'H. G.'–'J. F. B.-B.', Henry Barclay Swete. . . . A Remembrance (1918); this reprints, with additions, on pp. 163–92, a bibliography of Swete's publd. works by C. H. *Turner–A. Rogers, orig. publd. in J.T.S., xix (1918), pp. 1–19. J. H. Srawley in D.N.B., 1912–1921, pp. 520–2.

SWIFT, JONATHAN (1667–1745), Dean of St. Patrick's, *Dublin (from 1713), and English satirist. Only the more definitely religious aspects of his career can be noted here. Ordained priest in Ireland in 1695, he remained faithful to the C of E and opposed alike to the N. Irish and Scottish *Presbyterians and to English Dissenters. In politics he was a Whig, but was persuaded to write against the *Occasional Conformity Act (1708) and frequently found difficulty in supporting his party in its leanings towards Nonconformists. His great powers of satire were used to religious ends in his Argument to Prove the Inconvenience of Abolishing Christianity (1708). He hated injustice and condemned the English misgovernment of Ireland, attacking even the Irish Bishops, but retaining the confidence of the common people. He wrote pamphlets against G. *Burnet, Bp. of *Salisbury, and A. *Collins, the *Deist. He is most popularly remembered as the author of Gulliver's Travels (1726). His works (nearly 100) were, with one exception, published anonymously.

Principal edd. of his works by J. Hawkesworth (14 vols., London, 1755–79), with account of life of the author in vol. i, pp. 9–40; by T. Sheridan (17 vols., ib., 1784), with life as vol. i, also issued separately; by W. Scott (19 vols., Edinburgh, &c., 1814), with memoirs as vol. i; of his prose works by Temple Scott (12 vols., London, 1897–1908), with biog. introd. by W. E. H. Lecky in vol. i, pp. xiii–xci; by H. Davis (14 vols., Oxford, 1939–68); of his poems by H. Wilson (3 vols., Oxford, 1937; ed. 2, 1958), with bibl.; and of his correspondence by F. E. Ball (6 vols., London, 1910–14) and H. Williams (5 vols., Oxford, 1963–5). Lives and studies by L. Stephen ('English Men of Letters': 1882); C. van Doren (London, 1931); W. D. Taylor (ib., 1933); R. Quintana (ib., 1936; revised 1956); J. M. Murray (ib., 1954); I. Ehrenpreis (ib., 1962 ff.); D. Donoghue (Cambridge, 1969); and 'Tercentenary Tribute', ed. A. N. Jeffares (London, 1967). R. W. Jackson, Jonathan Swift, Dean and Pastor (1939); L. A. Landa, Swift and the Church of Ireland (Oxford, 1954); C. Looten, La Pensée religieuse de Swift et ses antinomies (1935). H. Teerink, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of Jonathan Swift (The Hague, 1937; revised by A. H. Scouten, Philadelphia, 1963). J. J. Stathis, A Bibliography of Swift Studies, 1945–1965 (Nashville, Tenn., 1967). H. Williams in C.B.E.L., ii (1940), pp. 581–96. L. Stephen in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 204–27.

SWISS GUARD (Guardia Svizzera Pontificia). The military guardians of the Papal Palace. The corps was instituted by Pope *Julius II (1503–13), with whom the cantons of Zürich and Lucerne entered into an agreement to supply 250 guardsmen. It now consists of about 100 men, recruited from all the Swiss cantons. The parade uniform of the Guard, which was designed by *Michelangelo, is composed of tunic, breeches, and stockings of wide and gaily coloured red, yellow, and dark blue stripes. See also Noble Guard, Palatine Guard.

P. Krieg, Die päpstliche Schweizergarde (Zürich, 1948). J. Repond, Le Costume de la garde suisse pontificale et la renaissance Italienne (Rome, 1917). E. Hampoole, O.P., 'The Papal Swiss Guards' in The American Catholic Quarterly Review, xxxvii (1912), pp. 286–309 and 369–87. E. D. McShane in N.C.E., xiii (1967), p. 840 f., s.v., with illustr.

SWITHIN, St. (d. 862), also 'Swithun', Bp. of *Winchester. Little is certainly known of his life, contemporary evidence attesting only his existence as Bishop of Winchester from 852. He appears, however, to have been the trusted adviser of Egbert, King of Wessex, whose son, Ethelwold, he educated. Originally buried 'humbly' outside the walls of the minster, in 971 his body was translated to a shrine in the cathedral which had been rebuilt by *Ethelwold, and his cult seems to date from this period. In 1093 his relics were again translated, but they disappeared when his shrine was destroyed at the Reformation (1538). The popular belief that the weather on St. Swithin's day (15 July) will be that of the next forty days may have arisen from a similar attribution to the feast of SS. Processus and Martinian, which coincides with the anniversary of St. Swithin's death (2 July).

The principal sources for the legends are the works emanating from the milieu of the Winchester community after its reform by Ethelwold, notably the lives by Lanfrid, Wulfstan and *Aelfric, and a life of uncertain date formerly attributed to *Goscelin. Part of Lanfrid's life is pr. in AA.SS., Jul. I (1719), pp. 328–30; the remainder is ed. P. E. Sauvage in Anal. Boll., iv (1885), pp. 367–410; Wulfstan's life is ed. A. Campbell, Frithegodi Monachi breviloquium vitae beati Wilfredi et Wulfstani Cantoris narratio metrica de Sancto Swithuno (Zürich, 1950), pp. 63–177. Aelfric's Old English life ed. and tr. W. W. Skeat, Aelfric's Lives of Saints (E.E.T.S., lxxvi and lxxxii; 1881–5), pp. 440–73. The life attributed to Goscelin ed. P. E. Sauvage in Anal. Boll., vii (1888), pp. 373–380. On the 971 translation see also R. N. Quirk, 'Winchester Cathedral in the tenth century' in Archaeological Journal, cxiv (for 1957; 1959), pp. 28–68. Brief account by F. Bussby, Saint Swithun (issued by the Friends of Winchester Cathedral, 1971). See also other works cited s.v. Winchester.

'SWORD OF THE SPIRIT'. A RC social movement inaugurated by Card. A. *Hinsley in 1940. It was designed as an organization for unifying international Catholic social efforts by 'prayer, study, and action' with a view to promoting justice in war and in the peace which was to follow, on the basis of *Pius XII's 'Five Peace Points' and the requirements of the *Natural Law. These aims were shared by Christians of other denominations and were stated in a letter to The Times (21 Dec. 1940) signed by the Abps. of Canterbury (C. G. *Lang) and York (W. *Temple), Card. Hinsley, and the Moderator of the Free Churches (W. H. Armstrong). The collaboration between RCs and other groups was, however, restricted in 1941, when full membership of the 'Sword' was confined to RCs and the non-RC communions set up a separate organization under the title 'Religion and Life', the two movements being connected by a Joint Committee. In 1965 the 'Sword of the Spirit' became the Catholic Institute for International Relations.

SYLLABUS ERRORUM. A set of eighty theses, already condemned in earlier pronouncements (encyclicals, allocutions, etc.) of *Pius IX and promulgated as erroneous with '*Quanta Cura' (q.v.) on 8 Dec. 1864. The suggestion of comprehensive attack on modern errors seems to have originated with V. G. Pecci, Bp. of Perugia (later *Leo XIII), at the Council of Spoleto in 1849. The basis of the Syllabus was a list of 85 errors in a Pastoral Instruction (1860) of O. P. Gerbet, Bp. of Perpignan (1853–64), which, modified in turn into a catalogue of 61 theses with corresponding censures, was approved by an assembly of Bishops at Rome in 1862.

The Syllabus was disposed under ten heads dealing with: I, Pantheism, Naturalism and Absolute Rationalism (1–7); II, Moderate Rationalism (8–14); III, Indifferentism and Latitudinarianism (15–18); IV, Socialism, Communism, secret societies, Bible societies and Liberal-clerical societies (various earlier documents); V, The Church and its Rights (19–38); VI, Civil Society and its relation to the Church (39–55): VII, Natural and Christian Ethics (56–64); VIII, Christian Marriage (65–74); IX, The Temporal Power of the Pope (75–6); and X, Modern Liberalism (77–80). The last (the 80th) of the rejected propositions is the (often misunderstood) thesis that the 'Roman Pontiff can and ought to reconcile and adjust himself with progress, liberalism and modern civilization' (80). The covering letter issued with the Syllabus and 'Quanta Cura' seemed to make it dogmatically binding.

Its issue was greeted with a storm of protest, e.g. from W. E. *Gladstone. In France publication of the Syllabus and Encyclical was forbidden on 1 Jan. 1865, though the prohibition was withdrawn shortly afterwards. F. A. P. *Dupanloup's La Convention du 15 septembre et l'encyclique du 8 décembre (1865), which purported to interpret each condemnation in the light of its original context, did much to mitigate consternation. Many of its fundamental doctrines were embodied in the Dogmatic Constitution, 'De Fide Catholica' at the *Vatican Council of 1870. In the later years of the 19th cent. the Syllabus was the bulwark of the Ultramontane party in the RC Church.

Text in A.S.S., iii (1867), pp. 168–76, and in Pii IX Pontificis Acta, Pars Prima, iii (no date), pp. 701–17; repr. in Denz.-Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 577–84 (Nos. 2901–80). D. McElrath, O.F.M., The Syllabus of Pius IX. Some Reactions in England (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, xxxix; 1964). J. B. Bury, History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (ed. R. H. Murray, 1930), esp. Lectures i and ii, pp. 1–46.

SYLVESTER, St., Bp. of Rome from 314 to 335. He filled the see of Rome at a very important era in the history of the Church, but very little is known of him. He occupies, however, an important place in later legend, which asserts that he baptized Emp. *Constantine (cleansing him from physical leprosy) at the Baptistery of the *Lateran and established the Lateran church as the cathedral of Rome on territory given him by the Emperor. He is also the reputed recipient of the *Donation of Constantine, which provided him with wide temporal rights over the Church. Though he did not himself attend the Council of *Nicaea (325), he was represented by two legates, Vitus and Vincentius. Feast day, 31 Dec.

Jaffé, i, pp. 28–30. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 170–201; see also pp. cix–xx. W. Levison, 'Konstantinische Schenkung und Silvester-Legende' in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, ii (S.T., xxxviii; 1924), pp. 159–247, with full refff. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 115–30. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2068–75, s.v. 'Silvestre I'; A. Amore, O.F.M.-C. M. Carpano in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xi (Rome, 1968), cols. 1077–82, s.v. 'Silvestro I'. See also bibl. to Donation of Constantine.

SYLVESTER II (c. 940–1003), Pope from 999. Gerbert is important both as a Churchman and as a scholar. Educated at the *Benedictine monastery of Aurillac (in the département of Cantal), Gerbert enjoyed the patronage of the Bp. of Vich (Catalonia), with whom he went to Rome in 970 or 971. His encounter there with the Emp. Otto I (962–973) was decisive for his future life, which was to be spent within the orbit of the German Empire. Gerbert went to *Reims (972–83), first as a student and then as a master in the cathedral school. For a year he was abbot of *Bobbio. Then he returned to Reims. On the deposition of his predecessor, he became Abp. of Reims from 991 to 997; in 998 he became Abp. of Ravenna and a year later Pope. He owed these promotions to the Emps. Otto II (973–83) and Otto III (983–1002), who both regarded him as a loyal servant of the Empire in the troubled country outside Germany, while his difficulties at Reims reflected the decline of the imperial influence in Eastern France after the last of the Carolingian kings had been replaced by Hugh Capet in 987.

His choice of the name Sylvester on his election as Pope was a conscious imitation of *Sylvester I, who had long been regarded as the pattern of papal co-operation with the Emperor. Otto III, as the new Constantine, would restore the universal Roman Empire, while the Church under Sylvester would recover its original purity. The reality of his rule was not wholly divorced from this ideal. He opposed *simony and upheld clerical *celibacy and did much to strengthen the Church in eastern Europe. Archbishoprics were established in Gniezno (Poland) and Esztergom (Hungary), and *Stephen of Hungary was given papal recognition as king.

Gerbert's scholarly interests covered both the trivium* and the quadrivium*. The chronicler Richer asserts that he taught the complete logica vetus in the school of Reims; if this is so, Gerbert was the first master in Europe to use a substantial part of the logical works of *Aristotle and *Boethius as a practical system of education. Richer also describes his victory over a master from Magdeburg in a court debate before Otto II at Ravenna. Gerbert's surviving work consists of a short logical tractate, De rationali et ratione uti, and a considerable body of mathematical material, some of which may well be derived from his stay in Vich, which was close to the resources of Arabic Spain. The Eucharistic treatise attributed to him is almost certainly the work of Heriger of Lobbes. Gerbert's pupils at Reims included *Abbo of Fleury and *Fulbert of Chartres, who gave his teaching further currency in the 11th century.

Opera Omnia in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxix, 57–338; also ed. by A. Olleris (Clermont, 1867); Opera Mathematica ed. N. Bubnov (Berlin, 1899). Die Briefsammlung Gerberts von Reims ed. F. Weigle (M.G.H., Die Briefe der Deutschen Kaiserzeit, ii; 1966), with introd. Eng. tr. of Letters by H. P. Lattin (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, lx; New York, 1961). Jaffé, i, pp. 496–501. Richer, Historia, esp. iii. 43–65, and iv. 99–108 (ed. R. Latouche, vol. ii: Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au Moyen Age, xvii, 1964, pp. 50–80 and 312–32). F. Picavet, Gerbert, un pape philosophique d'après l'histoire et d'après la légende (1879); J. Leflon, Gerbert. Humanisme et chrétienté au Xe siècle (1946), with full bibl. P. E. Schramm, Kaiser, Rom und Renovatio (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, xvii; 1929; repr. with additional notes, Darmstadt, 1957), i, pp. 96–101, 161–76, ii, pp. 64–67. On his scholastic achievement, besides the Opera Mathematica, cited above, see A. van de Vyver, 'Les Œuvres inédites d'Abbon de Fleury' in R. Ben., xlvii (1935), pp. 125–69, esp. pp. 158–69, and R. W. Southern, The Making of the Middle Ages (1953), esp. pp. 65 f., 175–8, 208. Mann, v (1910), pp. 1–120. É. Amann in Fliche-Martin, vii (1940), pp. 68–77. Id. in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2075–83, s.v. 'Silvestre II'; H. P. Lattin in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 858–69, s.v., both with bibl.

SYLVESTRINES. A small religious order which follows a rule akin to that of St. *Benedict, but with special emphasis on the vow of poverty. It was founded in 1231 by St. Sylvester Gozzolini (d. 1267; feast day, 26 Nov.). Its houses, which are independent of the confederation of Benedictine Congregations, have been mainly confined to Italy, though since 1855 it has conducted a mission in Ceylon. It also has three houses in U.S.A. and scattered foundations elsewhere.

[P. Helyot], Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, vi (1718), pp. 170–8; Heimbucher, i, p. 211 f., with bibl. M. Papi in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 302 f., s.v. 'Benedictines, Sylvestrine'.

SYMEON. See Simeon.

SYMMACHUS (prob. later 2nd cent.), translator of the Gk. version of the OT reproduced in the 4th column of *Origen's Hexapla. Hardly anything is known of his life. According to *Eusebius (H. E., vi. 17) and *Jerome (De Vir. Ill., 16) he was an *Ebionite, but *Epiphanius (De Mensuris et Ponderibus, xvi) speaks of him as a Samaritan who became a Jewish proselyte. From *Irenaeus' silence it has been argued that Symmachus was later than his time, and it is a matter of dispute whether Symmachus' translation or that of *Theodotion was the earlier. Unlike *Aquila, Symmachus preferred a readable style and palatable rendering to verbal accuracy, and he modified the anthropomorphic expressions of the Hebrew text. The extant fragments of his work are therefore of limited value for critical purposes.

G. *Mercati, L'età di Simmaco l'interprete e S. Epifanio (Modena, 1892). H. B. *Swete, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 49–53. H. J. Schoeps, 'Symmachusstudien. [I.] Der Bibelübersetzer Symmachus als Ebionitischer Theologe' in Coniectanea Neotestamentica, vi (Uppsala, 1942), pp. 65–93; II. 'Mythologisches bei Symmachus' in Biblica, xxvi (1945), pp. 100–111; III. 'Symmachus und der Midrasch', ib., xxix (1948), pp. 31–51; all repr. in Aus frühchristlicher Zeit (Tübingen, 1950), pp. 82–119. D. Barthélemy, O.P., Les Devanciers d'Aquila (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, x; Leiden, 1963), esp. pp. 261–5. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 94–99. J. Gwynn in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 748 f., s.v. 'Symmachus (2)'.

SYMMACHUS, St. (d. 514), Pope from 498. A native of Sardinia, Symmachus was appointed Pope by the majority to oppose the concessions to the Emp. and Patr. of *Constantinople advocated by the party of his predecessor, Anastasius II, which elected against him the archpriest Laurentius. As the validity of the election of Symmachus was confirmed by the Gothic King, *Theodoric, the partisans of Laurentius cast suspicion upon the Pope's personal character, accused him of simony and of celebrating Easter at the wrong date, and occupied most of the Roman churches. In 501 the King summoned a council of bishops (the 'Palmary Synod') to Rome to deal with these charges, but Symmachus, who had been attacked on the way, refused to appear. The synod, on the other hand, declared itself incompetent to pronounce him guilty and asserted him to be the rightful Pope. Theodoric, however, allowed Laurentius to return to Rome, and Symmachus was restricted to St. Peter's, though he had the support of the majority of the people and, among others, the Abps. of Milan and *Ravenna. The troubles, which led to much bloodshed in the city, lasted till 506. In 507, owing to the good offices of the Alexandrine deacon Dioscurus, Theodoric withdrew his opposition. During the latter part of his reign Symmachus devoted himself to the defence of the Catholic faith against the *Henoticon of *Zeno, upheld by Emp. Anastasius, and against the *Manichaeans, whom he expelled from Rome. He confirmed the primatial rights of *Arles over the Gallican and Spanish Churches and sent the pallium to *Caesarius, its archbishop, who was thus the first bishop outside Italy to receive the privilege. He also liberally assisted the poor and the African Catholics who were persecuted by the Arians, and embellished many Roman churches, esp. St. Peter's. Among his liturgical innovations were the singing of Gloria in excelsis on Sundays and the feasts of martyrs (but only by bishops). During his reign *Dionysius Exiguus compiled his collection of Latin canons, and the so-called 'Symmachian Forgeries', a collection of writings intended to prove from spurious precedents that the Pope cannot be judged by any man, were also issued. Feast day, 19 July.

Epistolae et Decreta in A. Thiel (ed.), Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum Genuinae, i (Brunswick, 1867), pp. 641–738; Acts of the Synods held in Rome in 499, 501, and 502 also ed. T *Mommsen in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xii (1894), pp. 395–455. Jaffé, i, pp. 96–100. Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), p. 370 f. (Nos. 1678–82). L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 260–8; see also pp. cxxxiii–cxl. W. von Pölnitz, O.S.B., 'À propos des synodes apocryphes du pape Symmaque' in R.H.E., xxxii (1936), pp. 81–8; A. Alessandrini, 'Teodorico e Papa Simmaco durante lo scisma laurenziano' in Archivio della R. Deputazione Romana di Storia Patria, lxvii (1944), pp. 152–207; G. B. Picotti, 'I sinodi romani nello scisma laurenziano' in Studi storici in onore di Gioacchino Volpe, ii (Florence, 1958), pp. 741–86. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, ii (1933), pp. 87–129; Fliche–Martin, iv (1937), pp. 341–52. É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2984–90, s.v. 'Symmaque (Saint)'; G. Schwaiger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ix (1964), cols. 1217–19, s.v.; J. Chapin in N.C.E., xiii (1969), p. 876 f., s.v. Further bibl. in Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 463 f.

SYNAGOGUE (Gk. συναγωγή). It would appear that the Jews introduced synagogues as regular meeting-places for worship during the Babylonian exile (6th cent. B.C.), when they could no longer take part in the Temple worship at Jerusalem. In NT times synagogues were well established, and they have remained a characteristic feature of Jewry down to the present day.

The worship of the synagogue, unlike that of the Temple, was non-sacrificial. It consisted chiefly of readings from Scripture, accompanied by prayers, canticles, and sometimes a sermon. The most important piece of furniture was the 'Ark', a kind of cupboard in which the sacred rolls of the Law were kept. At least ten males were required for public worship, and certain officials were responsible for the various duties.

There is ample evidence in the Gospels that the Lord took part in synagogue worship and frequently taught or preached in the synagogue (e.g. Lk. 4. 16: 'as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day'; also Mt. 13. 54 and Jn. 6. 59). In the early Church, St. *Paul is reported as going into the synagogue (e.g. Acts 17. 1–2), and it seems to have been his normal practice to preach the Gospel in the synagogue first in the places he visited on his missionary journeys, and to turn to the Gentiles only after the Jews had failed to respond to his teaching (Acts 13. 46). In James 2. 2 the Greek word συναγωγή is still applied to the assembly in which Christians gathered for worship, but in post-Biblical times it came to be used of Jewry in general, as contrasted with the Christian Church. Ruins dating from the 1st cent. A.D., which prob. include a synagogue, have been discovered at Masada, W. of the Dead Sea. Other early examples include those excavated at *Dura Europos (q.v.), Beth Alpha in Palestine, and Tell Hûm, the site of *Capernaum.

Among early studies C. *Vitringa, De Synagoga Vetere Libri Tres (Franeker, 1696; abridged Eng. tr., 1842). W. O. E. Oesterley–G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (1907); I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913), pp. 444–510 ('Organisation des jüdischen Gottesdienstes'); S. Krauss, Synagogale Altertümer (1922); A. Menes, 'Tempel und Synagogue' in Z.A.T.W., 1 (1932), pp. 268–76. J. Morgenstern, 'The Origin of the Synagogue' in Studi Orientalistici in onore di Giorgio Levi della Vida, ii (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto per l'Oriente, lii; 1956), pp. 192–201. H. Kohl–C. Watzinger, Antike Synagogen in Galiläa (1916); E. L. Sukenik, Ancient Synagogues in Palestine and Greece (Schweich Lectures for 1930; 1934); id. [tr. from the Heb. by H. Danby], The Ancient Synagogue of Beth Alpha (fol., Jerusalem–Oxford, 1932). R. Krautheimer, Mittelalterliche Synagogen (1927). Y. Yadin, Masada. Herod's fortress and the Zealots' Last Stand (Eng. tr. from Heb., 1966), pp. 180–91. G. *Dalman in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 7–19, s.v. 'Gottesdienst, Synagogaler'; W. Schrage in T.W.B., vii (1964), pp. 798–850, s.v. συναγωγή, with extensive bibl.; L. I. Rabinowitz and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xv (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 579–629, s.v.

SYNAGOGUE, The Great. Acc. to Jewish tradition, a legislative body of 120 members which was established in *Jerusalem in the time of *Ezra and *Nehemiah (5th cent. B.C.). Its activities were held to have been largely concerned with the fixing of the canon and text of the Hebrew Scriptures. The grounds for supposing that such a permanently constituted body ever existed, however, are unconvincing, the oldest reference to it being in the Jewish treatise Pirqe Aboth (3rd cent. A.D.).

A. *Kuenen, 'Over de Mannen der Groote Synagoge' in Verslagen en Mededeelingen der Koninklijke Akademie van Wetenschapen, Afdeeling Letterkunde, vi (Amsterdam, 1877), pp. 207–48*. S. Krauss, 'The Great Synod' in J.Q.R., x (1898), pp. 347–77. J. A. Selbie in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 643 f., s.v.; W. Bacher in J.E., xi (1905), pp. 640–3, s.v.; both with bibl.

SYNAPTE (Gk. συναπτή, 'joined together'). In the E. Church, a prayer constructed in the form of a *litany (i.e. a series of suffrages 'linked together'), used in the Liturgy and other services. It consists of short petitions said by the deacon, to which choir or congregation respond with *Kyrie eleison, while at the end there is a closing prayer by the priest.

SYNAXARION (Gk. συναξάριον). (1) In the E. Church, a short account of a saint or feast appointed to be read at the early morning service of *Orthros. (2) The book which contains, inter alia, these passages, arranged acc. to the calendar ('The Greater Synaxarion'). (3) Another book which merely enumerates the feasts to be observed every day, with a reference to the appropriate Biblical lessons ('The Lesser Synaxarion'). Confusion arises through these various uses, and H. *Delehaye recommends that the word be confined to senses (1) and (2). See also Menologion.

SYNAXIS (Gk. σύναξις, 'an assembly' or 'congregation', a word cognate with and equivalent to συναγωγή, 'synagogue', the use of which was avoided by Christian writers, doubtless on account of its Jewish associations). The term is applicable to any assembly for public worship and prayer, inclusive of the Eucharist or 'liturgical synaxis', and is so used in the E. Church. In the W. it was used in early times esp. of the 'aliturgical synaxis', or non-Eucharistic service, consisting of Psalms, lessons from Scripture, and prayers, out of which the Divine *Office and pre-anaphoral rite (Vormesse, 'Pre-Mass') are held to have developed.

SYNCELLUS (a hybrid word: Gk. σύν + Lat. cella; i.e., literally, a person who shares a cell with someone else). In the Byzantine Church, an ecclesiastic who lived continually with a bishop, esp. in the capacity of a domestic chaplain and in order to bear witness to the purity of the bishop's moral life. In the W. St. *Augustine of Canterbury is said by *Leo III to have been the syncellus of St. *Gregory the Great. In later times the word was used of a dignitary associated as counsellor with a prelate who subsequently succeeded to his office.

SYNCELLUS, GEORGE (fl. c. 800). See George Syncellus. He is often referred to simply as 'Syncellus'.

SYNCRETISM. The attempt to combine different or opposite doctrines and practices, esp. in reference to philosophical and religious systems. The term came into prominence in the 17th cent., when it was applied to the teaching of G. *Calixtus, who undertook to unite the Reformation Churches in Germany with each other and with the Catholic Church on the basis of the Apostles' Creed and the doctrine of the first five centuries. It is also frequently applied to the unifying cultural forces in the Mediterranean civilization of the Hellenistic and Roman periods, and in the history of religion to any fusion of various beliefs and practices, e.g. to some tendencies in pre-Christian Judaism. In the RC theology of grace the term is used of attempts to combine *Thomist and *Molinist teaching.

SYNDERESIS. See Synteresis.

SYNEISAKTAI. See Subintroductae.

SYNERGISM. The teaching of P. *Melanchthon that in the act of conversion the human will can co-operate with the Holy Spirit and God's grace. By insisting that the primary cause of such conversion is the Holy Spirit and not the will Melanchthon rebutted the charge of *Pelagianism which his opponents raised against him. His teaching had many points of contact with the *Semi-pelagianism (*Cassian, &c.) of the 5th cent. The long controversy provoked by Melanchthon ended only with the publication of the 'Formula of *Concord' in 1577.

SYNESIUS (c. 370 – c. 414), Bp. of Ptolemais. A native of Cyrene and descended from an ancient family, he was brought up a pagan and studied at Alexandria under the celebrated *Neoplatonist philosopher, *Hypatia. In 403 he married a Christian wife, with the blessing of *Theophilus, Patr. of Alexandria. Having won the confidence and affection of his fellow-Alexandrians by a successful embassy to the Imperial court at *Constantinople, he was chosen c. 410 Bp. of Ptolemais, although probably as yet not even baptized. At first he hesitated, wishing to continue living with his wife and to retain certain of his philosophical beliefs, e.g. in the pre-existence of the soul and the eternity of the world; but eventually, without engaging himself to give up either his wife or his doctrines, he was consecrated by Theophilus. A series of domestic and other tragedies marked his episcopate, though he did not survive to witness the murder of Hypatia in 415.

Synesius's writings, all from his pre-Christian period but breathing a sincere spirituality, include De Providentia, a political pamphlet describing life at Constantinople; De Regno, a speech depicting the ideal Roman Emperor, delivered before Arcadius in 399; De Dono Astrolabii, a book with which he accompanied the gift of an astrolabe; Calvitii Encomium, a satire on the sophists in the form of a eulogy on baldness; Dion, a defence of a life of learning and the enjoyment of reasonable pleasures against the advocates of extreme asceticism; and De Insomniis, on the causes and meanings of dreams. Synesius also wrote many letters, as well as a collection of hymns in the Doric dialect.

Only complete ed. by D. *Petavius (Paris, 1612), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxvi, 1021–1756. Modern ed. (without Letters and Hymns) by J. G. Krabinger, Landshut, 1850; of Letters, with Lat. tr., in R. Hercher (ed.), Epistolographi Graeci (Paris, 1873), pp. 638–739. Crit. ed. of hymns by N. Terzaghi (2 vols., Rome, 1939–44; with commentary). Eng. tr. of Letters by A. FitzGerald (London, 1926); of Essays and Hymns by id. (2 vols., London, 1930). On Synesius's life and works, studies by Alice Gardner (London, 1886), W. S. Crawford (ib., 1901), G. Grützmacher (Leipzig, 1913), J. C. Pando (Catholic University of America, Patristic Studies, lxiii; 1940), and C. Lacombrade (Paris, 1951). J. Stiglmayr, S.J., 'Synesius von Kyrene, Metropolit der Pentapolis' in Z.K.T., xxxviii (1914), pp. 509–63. K. Treu, Synesios von Kyrene. Ein Kommentar zu seinem 'Dion' (T.U., lxxi; 1958). H. I. Marrou, 'Synesius of Cyrene and Alexandrian Neoplatonism' in A. Momigliano (ed.), The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century (Oxford, 1963), pp. 126–50. A. dell'Era, Appunti sulla tradizione manoscritta degli inni di Sinesio (Temi et Testi, xvi; 1969). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 110–22; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 282 f. T. R. Halcomb in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 756–80, s.v. 'Synesius (2)'; W. Möller–G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 235–9, s.v.; H. von Campenhausen in P.W., Zweite Reihe, iv (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1362–5, s.v. 'Synesios'.

SYNOD. See Council; also following entry.

SYNODICAL GOVERNMENT. The system of government of the C of E introduced by the Synodical Government Measure of 1969, which took effect the following year. This was designed to achieve a more effective and coherent system, to give a greater part to the laity, and to avoid the delays caused by the dual control of the *Convocations and the *Church Assembly.

Under the Measure a General Synod took over the powers of the Church Assembly, which ceased to exist, and also some of those of the Convocations, though these remained in being. It is comprised of the members of the Upper Houses of the Convocations of Canterbury and York, a House of Clergy consisting of the two Lower Houses of the Convocations, somewhat reduced in size, and a House of Laity of not more than 250 elected members. The House of Laity of the General Synod is elected by members of the Houses of Laity of the Deanery Synods. The General Synod is required to meet at least twice a year. Matters concerning doctrinal formulae, the services of the Church and the administration of the Sacraments can be approved only in terms proposed by the House of Bishops.

Diocesan Conferences were replaced by Diocesan Synods, consisting of the Bishop, the House of Clergy, and the House of Laity. Members of the two latter are elected by the respective House of Deanery Synods. The functions of the Diocesan Synods remain the same as those of the previous Diocesan Conferences, but the number of members is considerably smaller, so that all parishes are not directly represented. The former Ruridecanal Conferences were replaced by Deanery Synods, which became the connecting link between the diocese and the parish. The base of the whole system remains the parochial church council, the functions of which are fundamentally unchanged, though the relationships with the diocese and diocesan and deanery synods are emphasized.

SYNODICON. The term is applied:

(1) In a general sense to a synodal act or a collection of such acts (e.g. W. *Beveridge's Synodicon, 1672).

(2) To a liturgical text for use in the E. Church on the 'Feast of *Orthodoxy'. Composed by Patr. Methodius I c. 843 for the new feast, it was worked over by Sergius II c. 1000 and since then has been frequently modified by excising old names and inserting new ones. Its form is akin to a litany, and it contains a series of praises for the heroes of orthodoxy and for Emperors and bishops, followed by anathemas against numerous heresies. In modern times it is not customary to recite it publicly in extenso.

(2) The text of the Synodicon is pr. in Mansi, xiii (Florence, 1767), cols. 812–20 (under the year 1027); also in J. P. Migne, PG, cxx, 728–36. In its current official form it is contained in editions of the *Triodion for the First Sunday in Lent (e.g., ed. Rome, 1879, pp. 240–6). J. Gouillard, Le Synodikon de l'Orthodoxie. Édition et Commentaire (1967).

SYNOPTIC PROBLEM, The. The problem of the literary relations between the three 'Synoptic Gospels' (Mt., Mk., Lk.), which arises from the occurrence of a large amount of common subject-matter and often similar phrasing in more than one Gospel. That this parallelism, of varying degrees of closeness, must be accounted for by their literary interdependence is nowadays almost universally held by scholars. There is also wide, but less complete, agreement:

(1) That Mk. is the earliest of the three Gospels and was used as a framework by both Mt. and Lk.;

(2) That the non-Marcan material common to Mt. and Lk. is derived from a single lost source, known to critics as '*Q' (q.v.);

(3) That the authors of Mt. and Lk. used further sources for the matter peculiar to each of them. Whether these sources were written or oral, and whether each of the Evangelists had one or more than one source, is debated. Without prejudging this question, scholars commonly use the letters 'M' and 'L' to denote this material.

Among the many elaborations and modifications of these widely accepted theories are:

(1) The *Proto-Luke Theory orig. propounded by B. H. *Streeter;

(2) The view, officially upheld by the RC *Biblical Commission, and defended by B. C. Butler, O.S.B., and W. R. Farmer, that Mt. was the earliest Gospel. The common non-Markan material in Mt. and Lk. is then explained by Lk.'s having derived it from Mt.

(3) The view that the Lucan 'Passion Narrative' is from a source independent of that of those of Mt. and Mk. The disproportionate length of the Passion Narratives in any case suggests that they once had a separate existence.

(4) The belief that the 'Infancy Narratives' in Mt. 1 f. and Lk. 1 f. (which have no counterpart in Mk.) are entirely independent.

H. J. Holtzmann, Die synoptischen Evangelien. Ihr Ursprung und ihr geschichtlicher Charakter (Leipzig, 1863); J. C. Hawkins, Horae Synopticae (Oxford, 1899); [Oxford] Studies in the Synoptic Problem, ed. W. *Sanday (ib., 1911); B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924); J. *Chapman, Matthew, Mark and Luke (ed. J. M. T. Barton, 1937); B. C. Butler, O.S.B., The Originality of St. Matthew (Cambridge, 1951); L. Vaganay, Le Problème synoptique. Une hypothèse de travail (Bibliothèque de théologie. Série III. Théologie biblique, i; 1954); W. R. Farmer, The Synoptic Problem. A Critical Analysis (New York, 1964); E. P. Sanders, The Tendencies of the Synoptic Tradition (Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series, ix; Cambridge, 1969). For parallel texts of the three Gospels in English see H. F. D. Sparks, A Synopsis of the Gospels. The Synoptic Gospels with Johannine Parallels (1964); for the Greek text, A. *Huck, Synopse der drei ersten Evangelien (1892 and later; 9th ed., with Eng. introd., etc., by F. L. Cross, 1935; 13th ed., Germ. and Eng., by H. Greeven, Tübingen, 1981). K. Aland, Synopsis Quattuor Evangeliorum locis parallelis evangeliorum apocryphorum et patrum adhibitis (Stuttgart, 1964).

SYNTERESIS, also 'Synderesis'. A technical term used by St. *Thomas Aquinas (e.g. 'De Veritate', q. 17. a. 2) and other Scholastic theologians for our knowledge of the first principles of moral action. It appears to derive from a scribal error in St. *Jerome's 'Commentary on Ezekiel' (on Ezek. 1. 7), where συντήρησις (not attested elsewhere in this sense) occurs as a corruption of συνείδησις, the normal Greek word for 'conscience'. The medieval mystics, e.g. Master *Eckhart, sometimes identify it with the mysterious ground of the soul where the mystic union takes place.

H. Appel, Die Lehre der Scholastiker von der Synteresis (1891); O. Renz, Die Synteresis nach dem heiligen Thomas von Aquin (1911); O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et morale aux xiie et xiiie siècles, ii (1948), pp. 103–349.

SYRIAC. The Syriac language is a branch of Aramaic which was spoken in *Edessa and its neighbourhood from shortly before the beginning of the Christian era. It was extensively used in the early Church owing to the active Christian communities in those parts. From an early date it was employed in translations of the Bible (see Diatessaron; Old Syriac; Peshitta; Syro-hexaplar), translations of other works from the Greek, and for original Syriac compositions. After the religious divisions in the 5th cent. it continued in general use among both the East Syrians (*Nestorians) and the West Syrians (*Monophysites or *Jacobites). Like *Hebrew, its alphabet is derived from the so-called Phoenician alphabet and is fundamentally consonantal. There are three forms of script: Estrangelo, Nestorian, and Jacobite (or Serto).

The surviving literature, which dates mainly from the 2nd to the 13th cents. A.D., is almost wholly Christian. The Syriac Versions of the Bible are of exceptional value to the textual critic of the Scriptures on account of their early date and the natural accuracy of Syriac scholars. A large number of Gk. patristic works survive only in Syriac. These (generally very literal) versions sometimes make it possible to recover the Greek with an approach to certainty. Among the most important Syriac authors were *Aphraates, St. *Ephrem Syrus, *Philoxenus, *Jacob of Edessa, *Moses bar Kepha and *Bar Hebraeus. One of the outstanding literary genres was that of liturgical poetry: besides Ephrem, *Jacob of Serugh and *Narsai are pre-eminent in this field. When Arabic became the current vernacular, Syriac increasingly became an artificial language.

The most important collections of Syriac MSS. are now preserved in the *Vatican and the British Museum. Notable editors of Syriac texts include the *Assemani, W. *Cureton, W. Wright, G. *Bickell, R. Duval, P. Bedjan, Cong. Orat., I. E. Rahmani, E. W. Brooks, R. Graffin, F. Nau, J. B. Chabot, and A. *Baumstark.

The chief modern collections of printed texts include many items in the series Horae Semiticae (London, 1903 ff.); others issued by the Text and Translation Society (London, 1902 ff.); others in P.O.; Patrologia Syriaca (Paris, 1894 ff.); C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri (Paris, Leipzig, &c., 1907 ff.); also texts and translations in Woodbrooke Studies. Christian Documents in Syriac, Arabic, and Garshūni, ed. and tr. by A. Mingana (7 vols., Cambridge, 1927–34). C. Moss, Catalogue of Syriac Printed Books and Related Literature in the British Museum (posthumously publd., London, 1962). Thesaurus Syriacus by R. P. Smith (2 vols., Oxford, 1879; supplement by J. P. Margoliouth, 1927); Lexicon Syriacum by C. Brockelmann (Edinburgh–Berlin, 1895; ed. 2, Halle, 1928). Compendious Syriac Dictionary by J. P. Margoliouth (Oxford, 1903). Dictionary of the Dialects of Vernacular Syriac by A. J. Maclean (ib., 1901). Lexicon to Syriac NT by W. Jennings–U. Gantillon (ib., 1926). Kurzgefasste syrische Grammatik by T. Nöldeke (Leipzig, 1880; Eng. tr. as Compendious Syriac Grammar by J. A. Crichton, 1904); shorter Syrische Grammatik by C. Brockelmann (Berlin, &c., 1899; many subsequent edd.); Grammatik der neusyrischen Sprache by T. Nöldeke (Leipzig, 1868); Grammar of the Dialects of Vernacular Syriac by A. J. Maclean (Cambridge, 1895). R. Duval, Traité de grammaire syriaque (1881). G. Bickell, Conspectus Rei Syrorum Literariae (Münster, 1871); W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894); R. Duval, La Littérature syriaque (1899); A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur mit Ausschluss der christlich-palästinensischen Texte (1922); J. B. Chabot, Littérature syriaque (1935). I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (Rome, 1958; ed. 2, 1965). L'Orient syrien (12 vols., Paris, 1956–67). On Palestinian Syriac, see F. C. *Burkitt, 'Christian Palestinian Literature' in J.T.S., ii (1901), pp. 174–85, with bibl. Id., 'The Old Lectionary of Jerusalem', ib., xxiv (1923), pp. 415–24. A. Vööbus in E.B. (ed. 1968), xxi, pp. 586–90, s.v. 'Syriac Literature'.

SYRIAC VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE.

(1) Old Testament. The principal are: (a) The Peshitta* version, made originally by Jews, probably in the early 2nd cent., for the Jewish community at *Edessa. Used only by the primitive Christian community of Edessa, it was later revised in certain parts (notably in the Psalter and the Prophets) under the influence of Greek Christianity so as to harmonize with the Septuagint. (b) The Syro-Hexaplar, a close rendering of *Origen's text of the Septuagint made at Alexandria c. 616–17 by the *Monophysite bishop, Paul of Tella.

(2) New Testament. In early times the Gospels were known in two forms: (a) The Evangeliôn da-Mĕhallĕtē, or 'Gospel of the Mixed', a Syriac version of *Tatian's *Diatessaron; and (b) the Evangeliôn da-Mĕpharrĕshē, or 'Gospel of the Separated' (i.e. the four Gospels), known as the 'Old Syriac'. It is probable that the 'Gospel of the Separated' was made not earlier than 200, and that the 'Syriac Diatessaron' is prior to and independent of it. It exists in two MSS.—the 'Curetonian' and the 'Sinaitic'. There is also evidence for the existence of an Old Syriac version of Acts and the Pauline Epistles. The Old Syriac NT is generally held to have been the basis of the NT Peshitta revision.

Subsequently to the Peshitta, two further versions of the NT were made: (c) the Philoxenian*, in 508, which included the books omitted from the Peshitta canon, and (d) the Harklean*, in 616, a revision of the Philoxenian and more literal than its predecessor in rendering the Greek. With the exception of the books omitted from the Peshitta, the Philoxenian version has perished.

The Peshitta remains the authorized version of the Syriac-speaking Churches.

Introductory account in B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 3–98, incl. contribution by S. P. Brock. A. Vööbus, Studies in the History of the Gospel Text in Syriac (C.S.C.O., cxxviii; Subsidia, iii; 1951). M. Black, 'The Syriac Versional Tradition' in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, v; 1972), pp. 120–59, with full reff. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 834–84, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', vi. 'Versions syriaques'. For further bibl. see artt. on separate items cited above.

SYRIAN CATHOLICS.

A body of *Uniat Christians descended from the Syrian *Jacobites (Monophysites). In the latter part of the 16th cent. relations were established between the Syrian Jacobite Church and the Papacy, which led to some conversions in the 17th cent., and the election of a Catholic, Andrew Akhijan, to the see of Aleppo in 1656. The Catholics had, however, a precarious existence and seem to have virtually disappeared soon after 1700. The present Church traces its existence to the accession of Mar Michael Garweh, who had become a RC, to the Abpric. of Aleppo in 1783, since when a Catholic minority has co-existed with the Jacobites in Syria. In 1830 their existence as a separate body was formally recognized by the Turks. The Patr., Ignatius Ephrem II Rahmani (1898–1929), became known in the W. as a scholar of distinction through his edition of the Testamentum Domini (1899). The seat of the Patriarchiate is Beirut. Their membership in the Middle East is about 74,000, with a further 5,000 in Europe and North and South America.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc., revised ed., 1935), pp. 163–79; further revised as The Christian Churches of the East, i (1961), pp. 147–57. W. de Vries, S.J., 'Dreihundert Jahre syrisch-katholische Hierarchie' in Ostkirchliche Studien, v (1956), pp. 137–57. S. Vailhé, A.A., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 1430–3, s.v. 'Antioche, V. Patriarcat syrien catholique'; I. Ziade, ib., xiv (pt. 2; 1946), cols. 3017–3088, s.v. 'Syrienne (Église)', esp. cols. 3023 f. (Droit Canonique), 3025–8 (Liturgie, with reff. to edd. of texts), and 3078–3080 (Hiérarchie); G. Khouri-Sarkis in N.C.E., xiii (1969), pp. 901–5, s.v. 'Syrian Rite'. For edd. of liturgical texts see also A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (ed. 3, 1953), p. 244 f.

SYRIAN ORTHODOX.

The body of Orthodox Christians who trace their descent to that part of the Patriarchate of *Antioch which refused to accept the decisions of the Council of *Chalcedon about the Person of Christ, on the ground that they made too many concessions to the *Nestorians. Their doctrinal position is thus the same as that of the *Armenian, *Coptic and *Ethiopian Churches. In the West they are frequently described as *Jacobites (after *Jacob Baradaeus, who organized the Church in the 6th cent.) or *Monophysites (qq.v. for the early history of the Syrian Orthodox Church).

During the 14th cent. the numbers of Syrian Orthodox were greatly reduced by the Mongol invasions; at the end of the 18th cent. they were further diminished by the establishment of a separate *uniat patriarchate of Antioch (see Syrian Catholics); at the turn of the present cent. they suffered from massacres at the hands of the Turks. They may number c. 200,000 in the Middle East, 50,000 in N. and S. America, and perhaps something over a million in South *India (*Malabar Christians), where the local head of the Church has, since 1964, had the title 'Catholicos of the East'. The seat of the patriarchate, after many peregrinations over the centuries, is now in Damascus. There are 23 archdioceses, including one in America. Since 1960 the Syrian Orthodox Church has been a member of the *World Council of Churches.

The liturgical language is Syriac, the normal anaphora being that of St. *James, and the Church has a rich literary heritage (see Syriac). Ignatius Ephrem Barsaum (Patriarch, 1933–57) was the author of a valuable history of Syrian Orthodox literature in Arabic (Aleppo, ed. 2, 1956; Syriac translation, Qamishlieh, 1967).

O. H. Parry, Six Months in a Syrian Monastery, being the Record of a Visit to the Head Quarters of the Syrian Church in Mesopotamia, with some account of the Yazidis or Devil Worshippers of Mosul and El Jilwah, their Sacred Book (1895). B. Spuler, Handbuch der Orientalistik, Abteilung I, Band viii, Abschnitt 2 (Leiden, 1961), pp. 170–216. D. Attwater, The Christian Churches of the East, ii (London, 1961), pp. 204–18; A. K. Arvanites, Ἐπίτομος ἱστορία Συρο-Ιακωβιτικῆς Ἀρμενικῆς καὶ Αἰθιοπικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (Athens, 1967), pp. 5–51; A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 167–235. W. de Vries, S.J., Sakramententheologie bei den syrischen Monophysiten (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxv; 1940). P. Krüger in E. Hammerschmidt and others, Symbolik des Orthodoxen und Orientalischen Christentums (Stuttgart, 1962), pp. 142–59. Helga Anschütz, 'Die heutige Situation der westsyrischen Christen (Jakobiten) im Tur 'Abdin im Südosten der Türkei' in Ostkirchliche Studien, xvi (1967), pp. 150–99; id., 'Zur Gegenwartslage der syrischen Christen im Tur 'Abdin, im Hakkarigebiet und im Iran' in Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, Supplementa, i (1969), pp. 483–501. Current information in the annual 'Chronique' in Proche-Orient Chrétien (Jerusalem, 1951 ff.).

SYRIAN TEXT of the NT, The. The name applied by B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort to an edition of the Greek text of the NT which was made, as they held, in or near *Antioch in Syria c. A.D. 300, and of which *Lucian of Antioch was the probable author. See also Lucianic Text.

SYRO-CHALDAEANS. An alternative name for the Chaldean Christians, i.e. the descendants of the ancient *Nestorian Church now in communion with the see of Rome.

SYRO-HEXAPLAR, The. The translation into *Syriac of the Greek text of the *Septuagint contained in *Origen's *Hexapla, which was made in 616–17 by Paul, the *Jacobite Bp. of Tella in Mesopotamia. It was produced with great care and accuracy, preserving Origen's critical symbols, which have disappeared from nearly all the Greek MSS. copied from the original Hexapla. It is thus an important witness to the text of the OT.

The complete text, in two volumes, was still known to A. Masius in the 16th cent., but of these only the second (Job–Mal.) survives, in the *Ambrosiana; it was ed. by A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, vii (Milan, 1874; photolithographic text). Most of the surviving remnants of other books are ed. by P. de *Lagarde, Bibliothecae Syriacae (Göttingen, 1892), pp. 1–256. Further texts in W. Baars, New Syro-Hexaplaric Texts, edited, commented on and compared with the Septuagint (Leiden, 1968). On the liturgical use of the Syro-Hexaplar, cf. A. *Baumstark, Nichtevangelische syrische Perikopenordnungen des ersten Jahrtausends (Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, iii; 1921), pp. 88–100. C. Van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 879–80, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', VI. v. 5.

SYRO-MALABAR CHURCH. See Malabar Christians.

SYZYGY (Gk. συζυγία, 'pair'). A word current among the *Gnostics, notably *Valentinus, for a pair of cosmological opposites, e.g. male and female. It was held that the universe had come into being through the interaction of such opposites (somewhat after the fashion of the *Hegelian doctrine of thesis and antithesis).

T

TABERNACLE (Jewish), sometimes also called the 'tent of meeting'. The portable shrine said to have been constructed under *Moses' direction during the wilderness wanderings.

The fullest account of its structure is contained in Exod. 25–31 and 35–40, where it is described as consisting of an inner shrine (the 'Holy of Holies') which housed the *Ark and an outer chamber (the 'Holy Place') which contained the seven-branched lampstand, the table for the *shewbread, and the altar of incense. These were surrounded by an enclosure in which stood the altar of sacrifice and the whole was set up in the midst of the camp. Acc. to modern Biblical critics this description is the work of the Priestly school of scribes [*P], of far later date than Moses, and reflects the structure of the Temple of *Solomon.

There is an independent and briefer account in Exod. 33. 7–10, which critics attribute to one of the earlier, pre-Exilic sources [*E]. Acc. to this account it was set up outside the camp and was the centre towards which the people directed their worship; at its door was to be seen the pillar of cloud, the symbol of the Divine presence.

Theologically the Tabernacle was held to embody the presence of God in the midst of His people, the symmetry and harmony of its parts to express the Divine perfection, and the careful gradation of the courts and of the service to reflect the Divine holiness. In the NT the imagery of the Tabernacle was used by the writer of the Ep. to the Hebrews to explain the meaning of the atoning work of Christ (cf. Heb. 9. 1–10. 25).

The principal material is to be found in comm. on Exodus, cited s.v., ad locc., and in discussions on the *Pentateuch, q.v. Studies devoted to the Tabernacle include W. Neumann, Die Stiftshütte in Bild und Wort (1861); C. Schick, Die Stiftshütte, der Tempel in Jerusalem und der Tempelplatz der Jetztzeit (1896), pp. 3–51. E. Sellin, 'Das Zelt Jahwes' in Alttestamentliche Studien Rudolf Kittel zum 60. Geburtstag dargebracht (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, xiii; 1913), pp. 168–92; R. Hartmann, 'Zelt und Lade' in Z.A.T.W., xxxvii (1918), pp. 209–44, esp. pp. 209–35; [G.] von *Rad, 'Zelt und Lade' in Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, xlii (1931), pp. 476–98. J. Morgenstern, 'The Tent of Meeting' in Journal of the American Oriental Society, xxxviii (1918), pp. 125–39; id., 'The Ark, the Ephod and the Tent' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xvii (1942–3), pp. 153–265, and xviii (1943–4), pp. 1–52, esp. pp. 17–47 of the latter vol. M. F. Cross, 'The Tabernacle. A Study from an Archaeological and Historical Aspect' in The Biblical Archaeologist, x (1947), pp. 45–68. There is also a popular reconstruction in English by W. Brown, The Tabernacle and its Priests and Services described and considered in relation to Christ and the Church (1871). A. Rothkoff in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xv (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 679–88, s.v.

TABERNACLE (Christian). The ornamental receptacle for the vessels containing the Blessed Sacrament in the churches of the Roman rite. Derived from the Lat. tabernaculum (='tent') and used of a variety of canopied structures in the church building, the word came to be applied esp. to the box set in the middle of the altar which, from the 16th cent. onwards, gradually superseded earlier types of receptacles used for this purpose, e.g. hanging *pyxes and *Sacrament-houses. Acc. to current RC legislation, the Tabernacle may stand on the High Altar, but an altar in a side chapel is preferred. It has to be suitably decorated and covered with a veil; by tradition a lamp is kept burning before it.

F. Raible, Der Tabernakel einst und jetzt. Eine historische und liturgische Darstellung der Andacht zur aufbewahrten Eucharistie (1908). Braun, C.A., ii (1924), pp. 632–47. E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (1942). J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., xiv (1914), p. 424. See also other works cited under Reservation.

TABERNACLES, The Feast of. With the *Passover and *Pentecost, one of the great feasts of the Jewish year. By some critics it is supposed to have been originally a New Year festival, but in the earliest Biblical accounts it is described as 'the feast of ingathering, at the end of the year' (Exod. 23. 16 RV), i.e. the harvest-home. It lasted for seven days (Deut. 16. 13–15) and was followed by a solemn eighth day of 'holy convocation' (Lev. 23. 33–6). During the feast the people dwelt in booths (i.e. 'tabernacles') in commemoration of the sojourn in the wilderness (Lev. 23. 42–3; cf. Neh. 8. 14–15). The last and greatest feast of the year, it was sometimes referred to as 'the feast' par excellence (cf. Jn. 5. 1 RV margin).

W. O. E. Oesterly–G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (1907), pp. 368–74; G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era, the Age of the Tannaim, ii (Cambridge, Mass., 1927), pp. 43–51; W. O. E. Oesterley, 'Early Hebrew Festival Rituals' in S. H. Hooke (ed.), Myth and Ritual (1933), pp. 111–46, esp. pp. 120–46; ed. 2 (1967), esp. pp. 54–70. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 397–407, with bibl. p. 458 (Eng. tr., ed. 2, 1965, pp. 495–502, with bibl. p. 551). S. *Mowinckel, Psalmenstudien, esp. vols. ii and iii (Skrifter utgiv av Videnskapsselskapet i Kristiania, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1921, No. 6 (1922), and 1922, No. 1 (1923)); id., Offersang og Sangoffer (1951), esp. pp. 143–71 (Eng. tr., The Psalms in Israel's Worship (Oxford, 1962), esp. i, pp. 118–30). N. H. Snaith, The Jewish New Year Festival. Its Origins and Development (1947), passim; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel (Cardiff, 1955). E. Kutsch and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xv (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 495–502, s.v. 'Sukkot'.

TABLE, Communion. See Communion Table.

TABLE PRAYERS. A term apparently first found in the 19th cent. for the prayers from the Communion service said at the altar (or 'Holy Table') when there was no administration of the Communion. In all the forms of the English BCP provision is made (in slightly varying form) for such prayers. The term seems to be no longer in use.

TABLET, The. RC weekly, founded in 1840 in London by Frederick Lucas, a barrister and recent convert. It was later edited by the Rev. H. (later Cardinal) Vaughan. With the Dublin Review (1836) it is one of the two oldest RC periodicals in England.

'"The Tablet" through a Hundred Years' in The Tablet, clxxv (1940), p. 469 f. There is also other information on the history of the paper in this centenary issue of 18 May 1940.

TABORITES. The extreme party of *Hussites, so named from Mount Tabor, their fortified stronghold south of Prague. They gained ascendancy after the death of King Wenceslaus (1419) and, under their leader Žižka, began to spread the 'Kingdom of God' by force of arms. Through Žižka's military genius and the fanatical devotion of his followers the far superior armies sent against them were repeatedly defeated. After Žižka's death (1424) they split into two main parties, the more moderate of which joined the Catholics after the Compactata of Prague (1433; see *Utraquism); the radicals, under Procopius the Bald, suffered a crushing defeat at Lipany in 1434.

The Taborites scorned all reasoned theology. They had no churches and kept no feast days; they rejected *transubstantiation; their priests wore lay clothes and blessed bread and wine at an ordinary table while the people said the Lord's Prayer. They professed extreme social doctrines, demanding the abolition of oaths, courts of justice, and all worldly dignities, and shrank from no cruelty in carrying out their ideas. After the Battle of Lipany the party disappeared from history.

F. C. Heymann, John Žižka and the Hussite Revolution (Princeton, 1955). J. Macek, Tábor v husitském revolučním hnuti (2 vols., 1955–6); id., The Hussite Movement in Bohemia (Eng. tr., 1965). H. Kaminský, A History of the Hussite Revolution (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1967), esp. pp. 278–494. P. de Vooght, 'L'Hérésie des taborites sur l'eucharistie (1418–1421)' in Irénikon, xxxv (1962), pp. 340–9. See also bibl. to Huss.

TACITUS, CORNELIUS (c. 55–120), Roman historian. Despite his eminence as a historian and man of letters, nothing is known of Tacitus beyond allusions in his writings and some correspondence from the younger Pliny. His surviving works, in their probable chronological order, are: (1) Life of Agricola, Tacitus' father-in-law (c. 98); (2) the Germania (98); (3) Dialogus de Oratoribus (prob. c. 100; previously held to be earlier); (4) his Histories (finished by c. 116); and (5) his Annals (roughly same date).

In his Annals, XV. 44, Tacitus mentions the persecution of the Christians by *Nero, who, he says, made them scapegoats for the fire of Rome (A.D. 64). Though Tacitus himself held them guiltless of this charge, he believed their religion a pernicious superstition (exitiabilis superstitio). He asserts that some were thrown to dogs, some crucified, and some burned in Nero's gardens. The passage contains one of the earliest witnesses in non-Christian literature to the Crucifixion.

Modern ed. of his works by E. Koestermann (Teubner ed., 2 vols., 1936; ed. 3, 1969–70); Eng. tr. by A. J. Church–W. J. Brodribb (3 vols., 1864–9). Opera Minora, ed. H. Furneaux (O.C.T., 1900); Annales, ed. C. D. Fisher (ib., 1906), and Historiae, ed. id. (ib., 1910). G. Boissier, Tacite (1903); C. Marchesi, Tacito (Messina and Rome, 1924); C. W. Mendell, Tacitus, the Man and his Work (New Haven–London, 1957); R. Syme, Tacitus (2 vols., Oxford, 1958). A. Profumo, Le fonti ed i tempi dello incendio neroniano (1905), passim. See also bibl. to Nero.

TAIT, ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (1811–82), Abp. of *Canterbury. Of Presbyterian upbringing, Tait was educated at Glasgow university and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was confirmed by Bp. R. *Bagot in 1830. From 1834 to 1842 he was a Fellow of Balliol. In 1841 he was one of the Four Tutors who publicly protested against Tract 90 (see Tractarianism), and henceforward, despite personal friendship with many of its leaders, he was strongly opposed to the Anglo-Catholic Movement. In 1842 he succeeded T. *Arnold as headmaster of Rugby and in 1849 became Dean of Carlisle. In 1856, at the personal request of the Queen, he was appointed Bp. of London, where his Broad Church sympathies became much more prominent. He joined the other Bishops, however, in publicly deprecating Essays and Reviews (1860). In 1858 he had alienated the sympathies of the High Church party by withdrawing the licence of Alfred Poole, curate of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, for his practice of hearing confessions. In 1868 he succeeded C. T. *Longley as Abp. of Canterbury. Though a staunch upholder of the Establishment in England, he came to the view that W. E. *Gladstone's policy in *Ireland was inevitable, and used his gifts of statesmanship to secure the best terms possible for the disestablished Church of Ireland. He sought, but without success, to abolish the recitation of the *Athanasian Creed in Divine service (1871–2). The *Public Worship Regulation Act (1874) was mainly his creation, though he objected to its final form and later became convinced that its practical working was a failure.

Life by R. T. *Davidson (son-in-law)–W. Benham (2 vols., London, 1891). P. T. Marsh, The Victorian Church in Decline. Archbishop Tait and the Church of England 1868–1882 (1969). W. H. Fremantle in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 292–9.

TAIZÉ COMMUNITY, an interdenominational and ecumenical monastic order founded in 1940 by Roger Schutz (b. 1915). While working on a dissertation about early Christian monasticism at the University of Lausanne, Schutz had become convinced of the need for some form of traditional monasticism within Protestantism. In 1940 he acquired a house at Taizé, nr. *Cluny in SE. France, in which he sheltered Jews and other refugees until 1942. With the German occupation of that part of France he moved to Geneva and began living a community life with Max Thurian and others. In 1944 they moved to Taizé and the first seven brothers took solemn vows in 1949. The community includes members of various denominations.

The Rule of Taizé, composed in 1952, provides for a life similar to that of other monastic orders, except that the members dress as laymen (in church they wear a white hooded robe) and recite only three offices a day. They run a guest house, a retreat house, and a printing press, and have organized a large-scale milk-producing co-operative and a co-operative farm. Their main work, however, lies in the promotion of Christian unity. The large Church of the Reconciliation was built by international teams of young volunteers of the German Reconciliation Movement between 1960 and 1962.

P. C. Moore, Tomorrow is too late. Taizé, an Experiment in Christian Community (1970).

TALBOT, EDWARD STUART (1844–1934), Bp. of *Winchester. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where in 1866 he was elected a Student. In 1870 he became first Warden of Keble College, Oxford. Nearly twenty years later he exchanged academic for parish work; and from 1888 to 1895 he had a very successful incumbency as vicar of Leeds. In 1895 he became Bp. of *Rochester, where his main work was the division of the diocese and the creation of the see of *Southwark, of which he was enthroned bishop in 1905. From 1911 to 1924 he was Bp. of *Winchester. Closely associated in his earlier years with C. *Gore, he was theologically a member of the School of Lux Mundi (1889), to which he had contributed the essay on 'The Preparation in History for Christ', and throughout his life exercised great influence in furthering moderate High Church principles. Like other members of the Lux Mundi School, he was a keen advocate of social reform.

His three sons were:

(1) EDWARD KEBLE TALBOT (1877–1949), who joined the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield in 1910 (Superior, 1922–40).

(2) NEVILLE STUART TALBOT (1879–1943), who, after army service in the Boer War, became Chaplain of Balliol College, Oxford (1909), Bp. of Pretoria (1920), and Vicar of St. Mary's, Nottingham (1933). He contributed an essay on 'The Present Situation' to Foundations*.

(3) GILBERT TALBOT (1891–1915), who was killed in action (30 July 1915) on the Ypres salient. 'Talbot House' (popularly '*Toc H', q.v.) was founded in his memory.

There is much autobiographical material in Edward Stuart Talbot's Memories of Early Life (1924). Life by Gwendolen Stephenson (London, 1936). A. Mansbridge, Edward Stuart Talbot and Charles Gore (1935), pp. 1–27 and 71–90. John Sankey in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 844 f.

Edward Keble Talbot's Retreat Addresses, ed. Lucy Menzies (London, 1954), with introd., pp. 7–16; miscellaneous writings in G. P. H. Pawson, C.R. (ed.), Edward Keble Talbot. His Community and his Friends (ib., 1954), with memoir, pp. 11–33. Memoir of Neville Stuart Talbot by F. H. Brabant (ib., 1949).

TALL BROTHERS, The (Gk. ἀδελφοὶ μακροί). The four monks, Dioscorus (Bp. of Hermopolis Minor), Ammonius, Eusebius, and Euthymius, who led the *Origenist Movement in Egypt at the end of the 4th cent. In 399 they made their way from the *Nitrian Desert to Alexandria to defend Origenist views against their new opponent, Theophilus, Patr. of Alexandria. Failing to get satisfaction, they proceeded to *Constantinople, where they continued their propaganda and even gained the support of St. *Chrysostom.

The chief source is *Sozomen, Hist. Eccl. viii. 12.

TALLEYRAND-PÉRIGORD, CHARLES MAURICE DE (1754–1838), Prince of Benevento, Bp. of Autun, and statesman. Ordained priest in 1779, he was made Bp. of Autun in 1789. After a short hesitation, he joined the cause of the Revolution and became a member of the Constitutional Assembly, taking the oath to the *Civil Constitution and consecrating persons prepared to do likewise to fill the vacated bishoprics. In 1791 he was constrained to resign his see, and in 1792 was excommunicated. The same year he undertook an embassy to London to win support for the Revolution, but shortly afterwards lost the favour of the Government and had to flee to the U.S.A. Regaining favour, in 1796 he became Foreign Minister. After the *Concordat of 1801 *Pius VII readmitted him to lay communion. Henceforward he was Napoleon's principal agent in making treaties, except between 1809 and 1814, when he was in disgrace. In 1814 he took charge of the provisional Government, and in that year and the next he was instrumental in preserving the territorial integrity of France in the peace treaties. He retired from active political life in 1815, but later lent his support to Louis Philippe (1830–48) in his bid for the throne, and was by him made Ambassador to England, a post which he held from 1830 to 1834. On his death-bed he signed, in the presence of the Abbé F. A. P. *Dupanloup, a solemn repudiation of his errors and misdeeds against the Church.

[C. J. V. A.] de Broglie (ed.), Mémoires du Prince de Talleyrand (5 vols., 1891–2; Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1891–2). Mémoires also ed. P. Léon (7 vols., 1953–5). G. Pallain (ed.), Correspondance inédite du Prince de Talleyrand et du Roi Louis XVIII pendant le congrès de Vienne (1881; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1881); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand. La mission de Talleyrand à Londres en 1792 (1889); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand. Le ministère de Talleyrand sous le Directoire (1891); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand. Ambassade de Talleyrand à Londres, 1830–1834 (pt. 1, 1891). P. Bertrand (ed.), Lettres inédites de Talleyrand à Napoléon, 1800–1809 (1889). Full life by G. Lacour-Gayet (3 vols., Paris, 1928–32). Other modern studies include those of A. Duff Cooper (London, 1932), A. F. Saint-Aulaire (Paris, ~~1936~~; Eng. tr., 1937) and L. Madelin (Paris, 1944; Eng. tr., 1948). L. S. Greenbaum, Talleyrand, Statesman Priest (Washington, 1970). C. Brinton, The Lives of Talleyrand (1937), with bibliographie raisonnée.

TALLIS, THOMAS (d. 1585), organist and composer, the 'Father of English Cathedral Music'. He was organist of Waltham Abbey before its dissolution in 1540, and soon after was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. By this time his unprinted compositions were already in use, but his first works to be printed were 5 anthems, which appeared in 1560. He lived in his later years on the income of leases granted him by Queens *Mary (1557) and *Elizabeth I (1577) and the monopoly granted by Elizabeth to Tallis and W. *Byrd of music-printing for 21 years. His vocal works are his principal compositions. They are mostly set to Latin words, but also include a number of settings of the Anglican service, which, in their simplicity of form, are a reaction against the complications of plainchant, and also mark the point at which the ancient modes were changing into the modern keys. Tallis's 'Responses', taken from a complete service and popularized in the 19th cent., are his best-known compositions. He also wrote several hymn tunes, some of which, in certain instances adapted, appear in modern hymn-books.

P. Doe, Tallis (Oxford Studies of Composers, iv; 1968). E. H. Fellowes–D. W. Stevens in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), viii (1954), pp. 294–300, s.v., with list of his works. H. Davey in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 348–51.

TALMUD. The Jewish compilations which embody the *Mishnah, or oral teaching of the Jews, and the *Gemara, or collection of discussions on the Mishnah. The two main forms of Talmud, the Babylonian and the Palestinian, are similar in method and construction, but by no means identical in content. Neither contains Gemara (commentary) on all Tractates of the Mishnah. The material in the Gemara is extremely varied, and comprises both *Halacha and *Haggadah (whereas the Mishnah on which it comments is primarily Halachic). The so-called Minor Tractates and Additional Tractates are a kind of appendix to the Babylonian Talmud, and they contain material of great importance. The Palestinian and Babylonian Talmuds were formed during the 5th cent. (the Palestinian earlier than the Babylonian), but work continued on the Babylonian Talmud after that time, and both include material that went back much earlier.

Best standard edd. of texts, Talmud Babli in 20 vols., Wilna, 1880–6; Eng. tr. ed. by I. Epstein (35 vols., London, 1935–52), with Eng. tr. of Minor Tractates ed. A. Cohen

(2 vols., 1965); Germ. tr. of the Talmud, with variae lectiones, by L. Goldschmidt (9 vols., Berlin, 1897–1935); Talmud Yerushalmi in 8 vols., Wilna, 1922; first tr., into Fr., by M. Schwab (11 vols., Paris, 1878–89). S. Schechter, Studies in Judaism, Second Series (1908), pp. 102–25; Third Series (1924), pp. 143–237; D. Wright, The Talmud (1932). H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (1887; ed. 5, 1930; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1945). J. Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 64–69. M. Berlin–S. J. Zevin, Enṣiklopedia Talmudith (Hebr., Jerusalem, 1947 ff.; Eng. tr., Jerusalem, 1969 ff.).

TAMBARAM CONFERENCE. The Missionary Conference, convened by the International Missionary Council, which met at Tambaram, nr. Madras, from 12 to 29 Dec. 1938. Its membership of 471, drawn from 69 different countries and all the more important non-RC communions, was esp. remarkable for its strong representation from the younger Churches, the white delegates being actually in a slight minority. The chairman of the Conference was John R. *Mott, with Dr. William Paton as Secretary.

The Tambaram Series: I. The Authority of the Faith; II. The Growing Church; III. Evangelism; IV. The Life of the Church; V. The Economic Basis of the Church; VI. The Church and the State; VII. Addresses and other Records [with list of members]. 7 vols. (all 1939).

TAMETSI. The Tridentine decree (Sess. XXIV, cap. i; 1563) prescribing the formal mode of celebrating matrimony. It aimed at suppressing clandestinity and was passed after long debates by a majority of 133 to 59. It laid down that in places where the decree was promulgated, a marriage between baptized persons (whether Catholics or not) was valid only when it took place in the presence of the parish priest or of the local Ordinary, or a priest appointed by one of these, and at least two witnesses. As its effect in Protestant countries would have been to reduce all unions between men and women to illicit cohabitations, it was prescribed that before coming into operation in any parish the decree had to be formally published in that parish. Hence it was normally not published in Protestant countries, e.g. it was never brought into operation anywhere in England, Scotland, or Wales. None the less it led to many complications and in 1908 it was finally superseded by other provisions of Ne Temere (q.v.).

The text is pr. in the edd. of the decrees of the Council of Trent, e.g. in Concilium Tridentinum. Diariorum, Actorum, Epistularum, Tractatuum Nova Collectio. Edidit Societas Goerresiana, ix, ed. S. Ehses (Freiburg i.Br., 1924), p. 968 f.; also, with Fr. tr., in Hefele–Leclercq, x (pt. 1; 1938), pp. 554–8. The principal part is also pr. in Denn.–Bann. (ed. 1952), p. 344 f. (Nos. 990–2). See also works on Matrimony by RC authors and bibl. to Trent, Council of.

TAMMUZ. A Babylonian deity, commonly regarded as the equivalent of the Greek Adonis. Originally associated with Sun-worship, the deity became the Divine personification of the annual decay and revival of vegetation in autumn and spring. The chief feature of the cultus was ceremonial lamentation, a reference to which occurs at Ezek. 8. 14.

S. [H.] Langdon, Tammuz and Ishtar (1914). M. Witzel, O.F.M., Tammuz-Liturgien und Verwandtes (Analecta Orientalia, x; 1935). A. Moortgat, Tammuz. Der Unsterblichkeitsglaube in der altorientalischen Bildkunst (1949). S. H. Hooke, Babylonian and Assyrian Religion (1953), esp. pp. 36–46. T. G. Pinches in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), 187–91, s.v., with bibl.; K. Preisendanz in P.W., Reihe 2, iv (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2139–48, s.v.

TANNER, THOMAS (1674–1735), English antiquary and divine. Born at Market Lavington, Wilts, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he formed a lifelong friendship with E. *Gibson; he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1696. In 1695 he published his Notitia Monastica, an erudite account of the medieval religious houses in England and Wales (enlarged edition publd. by his brother, John Tanner, in 1744). In 1698 he became private chaplain to John Moore, then Bp. of *Norwich, who appointed him chancellor of his diocese in 1701. Having become Canon of *Ely in 1713, he returned to Oxford as Canon of *Christ Church in 1724. In 1732 he became Bp. of *St. Asaph. His second great work, the Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica, an enlargement of J. Leland's De Scriptoribus, was published posthumously by D. *Wilkins in 1748. Based on extensive research into medieval bibliography, it aims at giving a comprehensive account of all British writers down to the beginning of the 17th cent., and has long remained the standard work on the subject. He bequeathed to the *Bodleian Library a choice of his printed books and the whole of his valuable collection of MSS., a large number of which had formerly belonged to Abp. W. *Sancroft. His MSS. include a number of important papers relating to the time of the civil wars.

A. Hackman (ed.), Catalogi Codicum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Bodleianae Pars Quarta. Codices Viri Admodum Reverendi Thomae Tanneri (1860). C. McNeill, The Tanner Letters. Original Documents and Notices of Irish Affairs in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries Extracted from the Collection in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (Dublin, 1943). D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 199–207 and passim. W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 359–62.

TANQUEREY, ADOLF ALFRED (1854–1932), dogmatic theologian. Born at Blainville, Normandy, he was educated at Saint-Lô, Coutances, *Saint-Sulpice de Paris and Rome. In 1878 he was ordained priest and entered the Society of Saint-Sulpice. He taught at Rodez from 1879 to 1887, at Baltimore, U.S.A., from 1887 to 1902, and at Saint-Sulpice de Paris from 1902 to 1905. From 1915 to 1926 he was superior of the Solitude (a training centre for novices) at Issy, retiring to Aix in 1927.

His Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae (3 vols., 1894–6) and his Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pastoralis (3 vols., 1902–5), condensed in his Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae (1911) and his Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pastoralis (1913), had a wide circulation. They provide a large body of useful and generally reliable information within a manageable compass. His other published works include Précis de théologie ascétique et mystique (1923–4) and contributions to various Catholic periodicals.

F. Cimetier in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), col. 47 f.

TANTUM ERGO. The last two verses of St. *Thomas Aquinas's Eucharistic hymn '*Pange lingua gloriosi', and the principal hymn often used at *Benediction in the RC Church. The practice of inclining the head at the words 'veneremur cernui' is general, but not laid down in any rubrics. There are several English translations, the best-known beginning 'Therefore we, before Him bending'.

TARASIUS, St. (d. 806), Patr. of *Constantinople from 784. He was an uncle or great-uncle of *Photius and chief secretary of the Empress Irene II, at whose instigation, though only a layman, he was uncanonically elected patriarch. He at once embarked on a policy of restoring good relations between the Byzantine Church and the W. and persuaded the Empress to convoke, in concert with the Pope, *Hadrian I, a General Council which sat at *Nicaea in 787 under his own presidency. After its successful conclusion he became involved in a series of difficulties, consequent on his supposed tolerance of simony and his lack of energy in the divorce affair of Irene's son, Constantine VI. On being violently attacked for laxity by *Theodore of Studios and his rigorous monks, he deposed the priest who had performed the ceremony of Constantine's second marriage. In 802 he crowned as Emperor Nicephorus, who had dethroned Irene. After his death he was venerated as a saint. Feast day, 25 Feb.

A few of his letters and a sermon which have survived are repr. from J. D. *Mansi in J. P. Migne, PG, xcviii, 1423–1500. V. Grumel, A.A., Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. i, fasc. ii (Istanbul, 1936), pp. 12–22, Nos. 350–73. Lat. tr. of life by his disciple Ignatius, pr. in AA.SS., Feb. III (1658), pp. 576–90, repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., 1385–1424; Gk. text first ed. by I. A. Heikel in Acta Societatis Scientiarum Fennicae, xvii (Helsingfors, 1891), pp. 389–439. Theophanes, Chronographia (ed. C. de Boor, i, Leipzig, 1885, pp. 457–63, 470 f., 480 f., 500). R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 54–7, s.v. 'Taraise'; D. Stiernon in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xii (Rome, 1969), cols. 127–31, s.v. 'Tarasio', with further bibl. See also works cited under Nicaea, Second Council of.

TARGUM. The name, meaning 'interpretation', given to the Aramaic translations or paraphrases of the OT made when Hebrew had ceased to be the normal medium of speech among the Jews. They were the outcome of the explanatory oral matter which for a long time had been added to the Scripture lections in the worship of the *synagogue. Officially sanctioned Targums were produced first in Babylon and later in Palestine, the most famous being the Targum of Onkelos on the *Pentateuch, and the Targum of Jonathan on the Prophets, both of which were in use in the 3rd cent. A.D. The recently discovered MS. of a Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch in the Vatican Library (Neofiti I), although itself late, takes the Targum tradition back to the first cent. A.D., possibly earlier. All the books of the OT were so treated except Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, which already contained large sections in Aramaic.

Editio princeps of Targum of Onkelos, Bologna, 1482. Modern ed. by A. Berliner (Berlin, 1884). Both the Targum of Onkelos and that of Jonathan are pr. in the London *Polyglott. M. Ginsburger (ed.), Das Fragmententhargum (Thargum Jeruschlami zum Pentateuch) (1899); id. (ed.), Pseudo-Jonathan (Thargum Jonathan ben Usiël zum Pentateuch nach der Londoner Handschrift (Brit. Mus. add. 27031) (1903); A. Diez Macho, M.S.C. (ed.), Neophyti I (Textos y Estudios, vii–xii; Madrid, 1968–79, incl. Eng. tr.); F. Praetorius (ed.), Das Targum zum Buch der Richter in jemenischer Überlieferung (1900); J. F. Stenning (ed.), The Targum of Isaiah (1949; incl. Eng. tr.). R. H. Melamed, 'The Targum to Canticles according to six Yemen MSS. compared with the "Textus Receptus" (ed. de Lagarde)' in J.Q.R., N.S., x (1919–20), pp. 377–410; xi (1920–1), pp. 1–20; xii (1921–2), pp. 57–117. P. [E.] Kahle, Masoreten des Westens, ii (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, 3. Folge, xiv; 1930), pp. 1*–13* and 1–66 ('Das Palästinische Pentateuchtargum'). Id., The Cairo Geniza (Schweich Lectures, 1941), esp. pp. 118–32. B. J. Roberts, The Old Testament Text and Versions (Cardiff, 1951), pp. 197–213 (ch. xiv: 'The Aramaic Targumim'). J. Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature. An Introduction to Jewish Interpretations of Scripture (Cambridge, 1969). E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, i (ed. 4, 1901), pp. 147–56, with bibl. M. Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi and the Midrashic Literature (2 vols., 1886–1903).

TARSICIUS, St. (3rd–4th cent.), martyr. Tradition states that he was killed in *Rome by the mob while bearing the Blessed Sacrament rather than surrender it to profanation. He is first mentioned in one of *Damasus' Epigrammata, where a comparison with St. *Stephen (Acts 6) suggests that he may have been a deacon. Acc. to a 6th cent. tradition, he took the Sacrament as an acolyte to certain Christian prisoners. His relics were originally located in the catacombs of S. Callisto, though they were later claimed by San Silvestro in Capite. Feast day, Aug. 15. A fraternity dedicated to him, fostering the cult of the Blessed Sacrament, received Papal approval in 1920. The incident of his death figures in N. *Wiseman's Fabiola.

AA.SS., Aug. III (1737), p. 201. A. Ferrua, S.J. (ed.), Epigrammata Damasiana (Rome, 1942), Elogium 15, pp. 117–19, with refs. J. M. Lambert, Étude historique et critique sur saint Tharsicius, acolyte (Rome, 1890). J. Wilpert, Die Papstgräber und die Cäciliengruft in der Katakombe des hl. Kallistus (1909), pp. 92–4 and 96–8; O. *Marucchi, 'La questione del sepolcro del papa Zeffirino e del martire Tarsicio in seguito ad una ultima scoperta' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archaeologia cristiana, xvi (1910), pp. 205–25.

TARSUS. Pompey made this ancient city of Asia Minor the capital of the Roman province of Cilicia in 67 B.C. It became the seat of a famous *Stoic philosophical school and was the birthplace of St. *Paul (Acts 9. 11; 21. 39; 22. 3). In Christian times it was an episcopal see, and included among its bishops Helenus (fl. c. 250), the opponent of *Paul of Samosata, and *Diodore (Bp. 378 – c. 390), the Antiochene exegete and theologian.

H. Goldman (ed.), Excavations at Gözlü Kule, Tarsus (3 vols. of text + 3 vols. of plates, Princeton, 1950–63). W. M. *Ramsay, The Cities of St. Paul (1907), pp. 85–244. W. C. van Unnik, 'Tarsus of Jeruzalem. De Stad van Paulus' Jeugd' in Mededelingen der koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, xv (1952), pp. 141–89; Eng. tr. as Tarsus or Jerusalem. The City of Paul's Youth (1962) [argues that although Paul was born at Tarsus, it was at Jerusalem that he was brought up and educated]. W. Ruge in P.W., Zweite Reihe, iv (pt. 2; 1932), cols., 2413–39, s.v. 'Tarsos (3)'.

TASSO, TORQUATO (1544–95), Italian poet. Educated at *Venice and Padua, he published his first poem Rinaldo in 1562, and in 1565 entered the service of Cardinal Luigi d'Este at Ferrara. Here most of his time was given to his great epic Gerusalemme liberata, a poem on the First Crusade, written in the grave style characteristic of the *Counter-Reformation and completed in 1574. From that time he suffered much from religious scruples as well as from the criticisms directed against his work. As he became increasingly tormented by a kind of persecution mania and subject to violent outbursts, the Duke of Ferrara had him confined in an asylum in 1579. During this imprisonment he composed numerous prose dialogues on philosophical subjects. On his liberation in 1586, he went to Mantua and from there to various other Italian cities, spending his last years in writing Gerusalemme conquistata (1592), an attempt to satisfy the critics of the earlier work, to which it is much inferior, and the Sette giornate, a blank-verse epic of the Creation. He died shortly before receiving the crown of the Poet Laureate intended for him by *Clement VIII.

The best collected ed. of his works is that of G. Rosini, 33 vols., Pisa, 1821–32. There are crit. edd., by L. Bonfigli, of Gerusalemme liberata (Scrittori d'Italia, Bari, 1930); of Gerusalemme conquistata (2 vols., ib., 1934); and of Rinaldo (ib., 1936). Gerusalemme liberata, Aminta and selections of other works, ed. L. De Vendittis (Turin, 1961). A number of his works have been translated into English. A. Solerti, Vita di Torquato Tasso (3 vols., Turin, 1895); E. Donadoni, Torquato Tasso. Saggio critico (2 vols., Florence, 1920); L. Tonelli, Tasso (Storia e pensiero, Turin, 1935); A. Banfi and others, Torquato Tasso. Comitato per le celebrazioni di Torquato Tasso Ferrara 1954 (Milan, 1957). Life in Eng. by R. Milman (2 vols., London, 1850); W. Boulting, Tasso and his Times (1907); C. P. Brand, Torquato Tasso. A Study of the Poet and his Contribution to English Literature (Cambridge, 1965). C. Previtera, La poesia e l'arte di Torquato Tasso (Messina–Milan, 1936); G. Getto, Interpretazione del Tasso (Naples, 1951). Id. in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1784–94, s.v., with bibl. U. Bosco in Enciclopedia italiana, xxxiii (1937), pp. 308–317, with extensive bibl.

TATE, NAHUM (1652–1715), and BRADY, NICHOLAS (1659–1726), authors of the New Version of the Psalms (1696). Both were Irish Protestant clergymen, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, Brady also at Christ Church, Oxford. Tate, who had written the second part of Absalom and Achitophel (1682) under J. *Dryden's direction, besides a large number of works of indifferent merit, including alterations of some of Shakespeare's plays, became Poet Laureate in 1692. Brady was chaplain to William III, Mary, and Queen *Anne, and held a number of benefices; among his works was a translation of *Virgil's Aeneid in blank verse (1726). Their joint work, the New Version, is a versification of the Psalter acc. to the artificial taste of the period, sacrificing the literal method of previous versions to the principle of contemporary literary refinement. There are, however a number of simpler and more poetical pieces, such as 'Through all the changing scenes of life' (Ps. 34) and 'As pants the hart' (Ps. 42), which have made their way into modern hymn-books. Two slightly differing editions of the version, which were both printed in 1698, were the standard texts of later reissues. This New Version, though at first not favourably received, gradually supplanted the older rendering of T. *Sternhold and J. Hopkins. It was constantly reprinted during the next hundred years and down to the early 19th cent. was in almost universal use.

W. Hunt in D.N.B., vi (1886), p. 192 f., s.v. 'Brady'; H. L. Bennett, ib., lv (1898), p. 379 f., s.v. 'Tate'. W. J. Austin–J. Ralf, The Lives of the Poets-Laureate (1853), pp. 196–222, esp. pp. 214–19; on the other works of Tate, E. K. Broadus, The Laureateship. A Study of the Office of Poet Laureate in England with some account of the Poets (1921), pp. 88–101, and C.B.E.L., ii (1940), p. 428 f. Nicholas Brady's sermon Church-Musick Vindicated, preached on St. Cecilia's day, 1697, is repr., with introd. by J. E. Phillips, Jr., Two St. Cecilia's Day Sermons (Augustan Reprint Society, xlix; Los Angeles, 1955).

TATIAN (c. 160), Christian Apologist and *rigorist. A native of Assyria, he was educated in Greek rhetoric and philosophy. He became a Christian in Rome between 150 and 165 and was a pupil of St. *Justin Martyr, but soon showed leanings to independent opinions. About 172 he went into the E., where he is said to have founded the ascetic sect of the *Encratites. He is the author of an apology, usually called 'Oratio ad Graecos'. It is a passionate defence of the venerable age and Divine purity of Christianity combined with a violent attack on Greek civilization, which is represented as a mass of evil, incompatible with the Christian Faith. His chief claim to fame is the '*Diatessaron' (q.v.), a history of the life of Christ compiled from the four gospels which was used in the Syriac Church until the 5th cent., when *Rabbula of Edessa perhaps replaced it by the *Peshitta version because its author was considered a heretic. Among his literary opponents were St. *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Clement of Alexandria, St. *Hippolytus and *Origen. It is possible that the memory of him in the Syriac Church was preserved under the name of *Addai (q.v.).

The best edd. of Tatian's 'Oratio ad Graecos' are those by J. C. T. Otto (Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, vi; Jena, (1851), E. *Schwartz (T.U., iv, Hft. 1; 1888), E. J. Goodspeed (Die ältesten Apologeten (1914), pp. 266–305) and, with Eng. tr., by Molly Whittaker (Oxford, 1982; incl. other fragments). Eng. tr. by B. P. Pratten in A.N.C.L., iii (1867), pp. 3–48. M. Elze, Tatian und seine Theologie (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, ix; 1960), with full bibl. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 262–73; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 71–4. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 220–8. E. Fascher in P.W., Zweite Reihe, iv (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2468–71, s.v. 'Tatianus (9)'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 59–66, s.v. 'Tatien'; F. Bolgiani in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1807–12, s.v. 'Taziano'. See also bibl. to Diatessaron.

TATTAM, HENRY (1789–1868), Coptic scholar. He held a succession of Anglican benefices, and in 1845 was appointed Archdeacon of Bedford. On travels in Egypt he recovered from the *Nitrian desert several important Coptic and Syriac MSS., now in the British Museum, among them the 5th cent. codex of the *Old Syriac text of the Gospels which W. *Cureton identified in 1847 and published in 1858.

Miss Platt (stepdaughter), Journal of a Tour through Egypt, the Peninsula of Sinai, and the Holy Land in 1838, 1839 (2 vols., privately printed, 1841–2). W. Wright, Catalogue of the Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum, acquired since the Year 1838, iii (1872), esp. pp. xi–xiii and xvi–xxv. T. Cooper in D.N.B., lv (1898), p. 386 f., s.v., for full list of his works.

TAULER, JOHANN (c. 1300–61), German *Dominican mystic. He entered the Order of Preachers at Strassburg in 1315, where he prob. came under the influence of Master *Eckhart and *Henry Suso. He later became famous as a preacher and director, esp. of nuns, and during the Black Death in 1348 devoted himself completely to the sick, a fact which still more increased his popularity. During a stay at Basle (1338–43) he was brought into close relations with the '*Gottesfreunde'. His popularity caused many spurious works to be ascribed to him; but, apart from two letters, only a number of sermons can be regarded as certainly genuine. They contain his mystical teaching, which, firmly grounded in *Thomist doctrine, is eminently practical. He emphasizes the indwelling of God in the human soul, and describes in detail the Mystic Way, which he conceives as consisting chiefly in the practice of the virtues, esp. humility and abandonment to the will of God. Union is to be desired not so much for its own sake as for the results it produces in the soul, which are an increase of charity and the strength to lead a life of suffering and self-sacrifice. His sermons were highly esteemed by M. *Luther.

Editio princeps of his sermons, Leipzig, 1498; fuller edd. of his works, Basle, 1522 (repr., Frankfurt, 1966), Cologne, 1543; Lat. tr., ib., 1548. First crit. ed. of his sermons by F. Vetter (Deutsche Texte des Mittelalters, xi; 1910); also ed. after the important Cod. Vindobonensis 2744, with variants of other edd., by A. L. Corin (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liége, xxxiii, xlii, &c., 1924 ff.). G. I. Lieftinck, De Middelnederlandsche Taulerhandschriften (Groningen, 1936), with selected texts and facsimiles. Eng. tr. of selected passages by Susanna Winkworth (London, 1857) and by Eric Colledge and Sr. M. Jane, O.P., Spiritual Conferences (St. Louis–London, 1961). C. Schmidt, Johannes Tauler von Strassburg. Beitrag zur Geschichte der Mystik und des religiösen Lebens im vierzehnten Jahrhundert (Hamburg, 1841). H. S. *Denifle, O.P., Taulers Bekehrung kritisch untersucht (Quellen und Forschungen zur Sprach- und Culturgeschichte der Germanischen Völker, xxxvi; 1879). A. Chiquot, Histoire ou légende? Jean Tauler et le 'Meisters/Buoch' (Strassburg–Paris [1922; here ascribed to Rulman Merswin]). D. Helander, Johann Tauler als Prediger (Lund, &c., 1923). A. Kron, Tauler als Redner (Forschungen und Funde, xxi; 1928). K. Grunewald, Studien zu Johannes Taulers Frömmigkeit (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und Renaissance, xliv; 1930). F. W. Wentzlaff-Eggebert, Studien zur Lebenslehre Taulers (Abh. (Berl.), 1939, Hft. 15). E. Filthaut, O.P. (ed.), Johannes Tauler. Ein Deutscher Mystiker. Gedenkschrift zum 600. Todestag (Essen, 1961). I. Weilner, Johannes Taulers Bekehrungsweg. Die Erfahrungsgrundlagen seiner Mystik (Regensburg, 1961). J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (1949), pp. 36–54, with bibl., pp. 114–17. Quétif-Échard, i, pp. 677–9. P. Pourrat, P.S.S., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1946), cols. 66–79, s.v., with bibl.

TAUROBOLIUM. A rite first found in the West in connexion with the worship of Venus and later particularly associated with that of Cybele and Attis, in which the recipient descended into a ditch and was bathed in the blood of a bull slain above him. It appears to have originated in Asia Minor and spread to the West in the 2nd cent. A.D. The view that it influenced the Christian theology of Baptism (*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule, K. *Lake) seems wholly unfounded. It rested on a single late text taurobolio criobolioq. in aeternum renatus (I.L.S., 4152), which (if there is any connexion) may well have borrowed from Christianity.

A description of the rite is to be found in *Prudentius, Peristephanon, x, lines 1011–50. H. Oppermann in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 1; 1934), 16–21, s.v. 'Taurobolia'.

TAUSEN, HANS (1494–1561), Reformer, the 'Danish Luther'. A peasant's son, he became a *Hospitaller at Antvorskov, and travelling abroad was attracted by the teaching of the Dutch humanists. In 1523 he studied at *Wittenberg, where he came under the influence of M. *Luther. The result was that on his return to *Denmark he was imprisoned for teaching novel doctrines. After his release he preached reform at Viborg, discarded his religious habit, and, on becoming chaplain to King Frederick I (1526), he married and proceeded to employ Danish in the Church services. In 1529, following his appointment by the King to preach at Copenhagen, he secured the support of the Danish National Assembly (Herredag) against J. Rönne, Bp. of Roëskilde. A Confession of Faith in 43 articles was then drawn up by Tausen and his supporters. Three years later, when Rönne had turned the Herredag against him, Tausen was convicted of heresy, but as he saved the bishop from the violence of the enraged mob, his only punishment was a warning to modify his opinions. In the immediately following years Tausen's Confession was set aside in favour of the more moderate *Augsburg Confession, which was made the basis of the Danish Reformation. In 1542 Tausen was appointed to the see of Ribe.

Selections of his Writings ed. H. F. Rördam (Copenhagen, 1870). L. Schmitt, S.J., Johannes Tausen oder der dänische Luther (Cologne, 1894). N. K. Andersen, Confessio hafniensis. Den københavnske Bekendelse af 1530 (thesis; Copenhagen, 1954). K. E. Bugge (ed.), Tro og tale. Studier over Hans Tausens Postil (ib., 1963). F. Nielsen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 459–62.

TAVERNER'S BIBLE. The English translation of the Bible issued in 1539 by Richard Taverner (1505?–75). It was a revision of *Matthew's Bible of 1537. As Taverner was a good Greek scholar, but not a Hebraist, his work was far better in the NT than in the OT. The edition never became popular, as M. *Coverdale's officially sponsored '*Great Bible' (1539) appeared in the same year.

H. H. Hutson–H. R. Willoughby, 'The Ignored Taverner Bible of 1539' in The Crozer Quarterly, xvi (1939), pp. 161–76. B. F. *Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (1868), pp. 110–13, 269–71, with Taverner's variants collated with other edd. of the Bible, pp. 408–13. Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), p. 24. On Taverner himself, A. *Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. 3 by P. Bliss), i (1813), cols. 419–24; A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., lv (1898), pp. 393–6.

TAX-COLLECTOR, TAX-GATHERER. Terms used in the modern versions of the Bible to replace Publican (q.v.).

TAYLOR, ALFRED EDWARD (1869–1945), Anglican philosopher. Educated at New College, Oxford, he was successively Fellow of Merton College (1891–8), Lecturer in Greek and philosophy at Owens College, Manchester (1896–1903), professor of logic and metaphysics at McGill University, Montreal (1903–8), and professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrews (1908–24) and at Edinburgh (1924–41). Though a commentator and philosophical man of letters rather than an original systematic thinker he became a considerable intellectual and religious power. His writings, most of which are packed with information and suggestive judgements, include The Problem of Conduct (1901), Elements of Metaphysics (1903), Plato. The Man and his Work (1926), The Faith of a Moralist (2 vols., 1930; *Gifford Lectures at St. Andrews for 1926–8), Philosophical Studies (1934; with studies of Aeschines, Proclus, St. *Thomas Aquinas, Francis *Bacon and others); The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938), and Does God Exist? (1945). He also contributed the art. 'Theism' to J. *Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics (vol. xii, 1921) and that on 'The Vindication of Religion' to Essays Catholic and Critical* (1926).

W. D. Ross, 'Alfred Edward Taylor, 1869–1945' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxxi (1945), pp. 407–22, with bibl of his works, pp. 422–4; D. M. MacKinnon in D.N.B. 1941–1950, p. 864 f., s.v.

TAYLOR, JAMES HUDSON (1832–1905), founder of the *China Inland Mission. He was a medical man who felt the call to be a missionary (1849) and sailed for China in 1853 under the auspices of the Chinese Evangelization Society. Despite many obstacles, among them ill-health which forced him to return in 1860, he carried on his work for China, and in 1865 founded the interdenominational China Inland Mission (q.v.). In 1866, accompanied by his family and a small staff, he went back to China, where he travelled extensively, heroically facing many difficulties, and conforming as much as possible to Chinese habits of life. A man of indomitable faith and great personal devotion, he carried the missionary work into the heart of the country and ensured its continuance by recruiting a large number of helpers. His books include China; its Spiritual Need and Claims (1865), A Retrospect (1894), and Union and Communion (1894).

H. and G. Taylor (son and daughter-in-law), Hudson Taylor in Early Years. The Growth of a Soul (1911); idd., Hudson Taylor and the China Inland Mission. The Growth of a Work of God (1918); abridged ed., Biography of James Hudson Taylor (1965). Idd., Hudson Taylor's Spiritual Secret (1932). M. Broomhall, The Man Who Believed God. Hudson Taylor (1936); J. C. Pollock, Hudson Taylor and Maria. Pioneers in China (1962).

TAYLOR, JEREMY (1613–67), Anglican bishop and writer. He was a native of Cambridge and educated at Gonville and Caius College, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1633. Having been ordained in the same year he went to London to preach in the place of a friend; there he attracted the notice of Abp. W. *Laud, who nominated him to a fellowship at All Souls, Oxford, in 1635. Shortly afterwards he was appointed chaplain to *Charles I. Owing to his friendship with the Franciscan, Christopher *Davenport, he was suspected of Roman tendencies, of which he cleared himself in a 'Gunpowder Sermon' at Oxford in 1638. In the same year he was made rector of Uppingham, which he left in 1642 to become a chaplain in the Royalist army. After imprisonment for a short time he retired in 1645 to Wales, where he lived as chaplain to Lord Carbery at Golden Grove. Many of Taylor's best works were written here, among them The Liberty of Prophesying (1647), a plea for *toleration; the two devotional treatises, The Rule and Exercise of Holy Living (1650) and The Rule and Exercise of Holy Dying (1651); The Golden Grove (1655); and the Unum Necessarium (1655), a treatise on sin and repentance. In 1658 he went to Lisburn in NE. Ireland as a lecturer, and in 1660 was appointed Bp. of Down and Connor and vice-chancellor of Dublin university, which he restored to order. In the same year he published his Ductor Dubitantium, a comprehensive manual of *moral theology. In 1661 he received the further see of Dromore. His episcopate was much troubled by the *Presbyterians, who refused submission and whom he treated with considerable harshness, as also the RCs, against whom he wrote his Dissuasive from Popery (1664), a violent invective against Roman Catholicism.

Taylor's fame today rests almost entirely on his devotional writings, esp. Holy Living and Holy Dying. They are characteristic expressions of Anglican spirituality in their balanced sobriety and their insistence on a well-ordered piety which stresses temperance and moderation in all things. They have become classics esp. for their beautiful prose, combining transparent lucidity with rhetorical vigour and powerful imagery, qualities which also made him one of the most celebrated preachers of his day. He was less felicitous as a theologian. The Unum Necessarium roused a violent controversy by reason of its alleged *Pelagianism and minimizing treatment of Original Sin. In his controversial writings he defended Episcopalianism against the Presbyterians (Of the Sacred Order and Offices of Episcopacy, 1642) and attacked the RC doctrine of *Transubstantiation (The Real Presence . . . proved against . . . Transubstantiation, 1654), himself holding a view of the *Real Presence which comes near to the *Receptionist or *Virtualist doctrines. The work he accounted of most value was his Ductor Dubitantium, a compendium of casuistry based on both RC and Continental Protestant authors, and intended to guide the Anglican clergy in the practice of confession. Feast day in some Anglican Churches, 13 Aug.

Whole Works, ed. R. *Heber (15 vols., London, 1822), with life of author by id., vol. i, pp. ix–cciii; rev. by C. P. Eden (10 vols., ib., 1847–54), with life by R. Heber, vol. i, pp. ix–ccl. Modern lives by E. Gosse ('English Men of Letters', 1904), W. J. Brown ('English Theologians', 1925), and C. J. Stranks (London, 1952). T. Wood, English Casuistical Divinity During the Seventeenth Century with Special Reference to Jeremy Taylor (1952). F. R. Bolton, The Caroline Tradition of the Church of Ireland with special reference to Bishop Jeremy Taylor (1958). H. T. Hughes, The Piety of Jeremy Taylor (1960). H. B. Porter, Jeremy Taylor Liturgist (1613–1667) (Alcuin Club Collections, lxi; 1979). The liturgy which Taylor composed for Anglican congregations under the Commonwealth is repr. by W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (ib., xl; 1958), pp. 183–200, with comm., pp. 19–36.

TAYLOR, JOHN (1694–1761), Dissenting divine and Hebrew scholar. After studying at the academy at Whitehaven for the training of Presbyterian and Congregational ministers, he was ordained by dissenting ministers and worked at *Norwich, where he founded the Octagon Chapel (1754). In 1757 he was appointed divinity tutor at Warrington Academy. His greatest work of scholarship was his Hebrew Concordance, publd. by subscription in 1754–7. Based on that of J. Buxtorf, it was designed to serve also the purpose of a lexicon, and marked an important advance in the study of Hebrew roots. In matters of theology, Taylor tended increasingly towards an *Arian view of the Person of Christ and to a denial of the fact of Original Sin. His influential Scripture Doctrine of Original Sin (1740), which had a wide circulation in England, Scotland, and America, did much by undermining the foundations of the *Calvinistic system to prepare the way for the *Unitarian Movement in American Congregationalism.

A. Gordon in D.N.B., lv (1898), p. 439 f., with reff.

TEACHING OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, The. See Didache.

TE DEUM. A Latin hymn to the Father and Son, in rhythmical prose. Since the 9th cent. tradition has assigned its composition to Sts. *Ambrose and *Augustine at the latter's baptism, but this account of its authorship is almost universally rejected by modern scholars.

On the basis of an attribution to Bishop 'Nicet' in some MSS., Dom G. *Morin and A. E. Burn ascribed it to *Niceta of Remesiana; more recently E. Kähler has followed P. Cagin in emphasizing its liturgical character and has argued that it derives from the text of a *Paschal Vigil Service. Verses 22 ff. are suffrages, appended at an early date to the original. Its use in the offices is already referred to in the Rules of St. *Caesarius of Arles and of St. *Benedict, and in the RC Church it has remained an integral part of *Mattins (now of the *Office of Readings), at least on greater festivals. The BCP prescribes its use daily at Mattins, with the *Benedicite as an alternative. It has often been set to music for use on occasions of thanksgiving, e.g. G. F. *Handel's 'Dettingen Te Deum'.

J. *Wordsworth, The 'Te Deum' (1902). A. E. Burn, The Hymn Te Deum and its Author (1926). E. Kähler, Studien zum Te Deum und zur Geschichte des 24. Psalms in der alten

Kirche (Göttingen, 1958). P. Cagin, O.S.B., L'Euchologie latine, i, Te Deum ou Illatio? Contribution à l'histoire de l'euchologie latine à propos des origines du Te Deum (Solesmes, 1906). G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Nouvelles recherches sur l'auteur du Te Deum' in R. Bén., xi (1894), pp. 49–77; id., 'Le Te Deum, type anonyme d'anaphore latine préhistorique ?', ib., xxiv (1907), pp. 180–223. P. Siffrin in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1862 f., s.v., with bibl.; M. Huglo in N.C.E., xiii (1967), p. 954 f., s.v.

TE IGITUR (Lat., 'Thee, therefore'), usually regarded as the opening words of the *Canon of the Roman Mass, and hence also the name for the first section of the canon. It asks God to accept and bless the Eucharistic offerings, and offers intercession for the whole Church, including the Pope, the Diocesan Bishop (these two mentioned by name), and all the faithful. The representation of the Crucifixion immediately preceding it in *Missals was apparently in origin a pictorial elaboration of the initial T of Te Igitur.

A. Ebner, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte und Kunstgeschichte des Missale Romanum im Mittelalter (1896), pp. 443–9; V. Leroquais, Les Sacramentaires et les missels manuscrits des bibliothèques publiques de France (4 vols., 1924), esp. vol. i, pp. xxxiii–xxxvii, with reff. Jungmann, M.S. (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 185–90; Eng. tr., ii (1955), pp. 147–52.

TEILHARD DE CHARDIN, PIERRE (1881–1955), French theologian and scientist. Born near Clermont in central France, he entered the Jesuit novitiate at Aix-en-Provence in 1899, and was ordained priest in 1911. During this long training he studied theology but was also strongly attracted to the natural sciences, especially geology and palaeontology. After service in the First World War, he was able to devote himself to his scientific studies. For many years he worked in China and gained a notable reputation as a palaeontologist. His last years were spent in the United States of America. At the time of his death he had published only scientific papers, for he had not been able to obtain permission for the publication of his religious and theological works. These appeared from 1955 onward and at once made a powerful impression as a new synthesis of science and religion. Le Phénomène humain (1955; Eng. tr., The Phenomenon of Man, 1959) is probably his best-known work and contains the essence of his ideas. The universe is seen as an evolutionary process in which the movement is always towards systems of greater complexity. Correlated with this movement towards complexity is the movement towards higher levels of consciousness. The whole process has included several critical moments or thresholds at which leaps to new levels have been made. Such thresholds were the emergence of life on earth and then the emergence of rational self-conciousness in man. This latter emergence has special significance, since it means that evolution no longer takes place in accordance with the laws of nature only, but that man now takes part in directing it. The whole process moves towards a fulfilment in which all things will be gathered up in God. Teilhard's philosophical theology is reflected in his devotional writings, notably Le Milieu divin (1957; Eng. tr., 1960). For him, matter has a sacramental character, and the whole universe is in process of 'Christification' as a consequence of the Incarnation. Though he has been criticized for the philosophical weaknesses of his work and for an uncritical optimism, Teilhard's thought is a remarkable effort to relate the Christian tradition to the contemporary scientific understanding of nature.

Collected edition of his works, Paris, 1955 ff. Eng. tr. of other individual works include Letters from a Traveller (1962); The Future of Man (1964), and Hymn of the Universe (1965). The standard biography is C. Cuénot, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin. Les grands étapes de son évolution (1958; Eng. tr., 1965). Other studies include C. Tresmontant, Introduction à la pensée de Teilhard de Chardin (1956; Eng. tr., Baltimore, Md., 1959); G. Crespy, La Pensée théologique de Teilhard de Chardin (1961); H. de Lubac, S.J., La Pensée religieuse du Père Pierre Teilhard de Chardin (1962); id., La Prière du Père Teilhard de Chardin (1964; Eng. tr., 1965); C. F. Mooney, S.J., Teilhard de Chardin and the Mystery of Christ (1966). Joan E. Jarque, Bibliographie générale des œuvres et articles sur Pierre Teilhard de Chardin parus jusqu'à fin décembre 1969 (Fribourg, 1970). Works on Teilhard de Chardin have also been listed annually since 1956 in the Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu.

TEILO, St. (6th cent.), patron saint and Bp. of *Llandaff. It is difficult to deduce from the mass of mutually conflicting later traditions anything certain about his life. He is credited with having been consecrated bishop at *Jerusalem while on a pilgrimage to Palestine and (a less unlikely tradition) with having visited St. *Samson at Dol. He is also said to have succeeded St. *Dubritius in the see of Llandaff when the latter retired to Bardsey in 495. His reputation for piety and pastoral devotion was such that three churches laid claim to possess his bones. The dispute was settled (it is said) when two additional identical corpses were provided supernaturally. Feast day, 9 Feb.

An account of his life is included in the Liber Landavensis (first publd. by W. J. Rees for the Welsh MSS. Society, 1840, pp. 92–111; re-ed. by I. G. Evans from the Gwysaney MS., 1893, pp. 97–117). Lat. text also publd. with crit. notes by J. Loth, 'La Vie de saint Teliau d'après le livre de Llandaf' in Annales de Bretagne, ix (1893), pp. 81–5, 277–86, 438–46, and x (1894), pp. 66–77. G. H. Doble, Saint Teilo ('Welsh Saints', iii; Lampeter, 1942), repr. in his Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (Cardiff, 1971), pp. 162–206. C. L. Brooke in Nora K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), esp. pp. 214 f., 219 f., 224–6 and 236–8.

TEINDS. The Scottish equivalent of *tithes. Regarded as the patrimony of the Church and a separate estate and not a burden on the land, they were payable by the *heritors to the minister of a parish, at first in kind and later in money. The system was terminated by Act of Parliament in 1925.

TELEMACHUS, St. Acc. to *Theodoret (Hist. Eccl. v. 26), Telemachus was an E. monk who, seeking to put an end to the gladiatorial shows at Rome, entered the arena in person on 1 Jan. 391 to separate the combatants, and was killed by the spectators. The act is said to have led the Emp. Honorius to abolish the games. In the *Hieronymian Martyrology he is called 'Almachius'. Feast day, 1 Jan.

The sole sources are Theodoret, H.E., v. 26, and a note in the Hieronymianum. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Saint Almachius ou Télémaque' in Anal. Boll., xxxiii (1914), pp. 421–8. G. *Morin, 'Le Dragon du Forum romain, sa légende et son histoire' in R. Bén., xxxi (1919), pp. 321–6. J. P. Kirsch in D.H.G.E., ii (1914), col. 630 f., s.v. 'Almachius', with further bibl. St. Telemachus is also the subject of an unpublished poem by C. G. *Rossetti.

TELEOLOGY (Gk. τέλος, 'end'). The word, probably coined by C. *Wolff in 1728, denotes the science of ends or final causes. It is esp. applied to the doctrine, inherent in every organic and nonmechanistic interpretation of the universe, that it embodies design and purpose. This doctrine, taught by *Plato and *Aristotle, acc. to whom God is both the First Cause and the Last End of the world, was taken over by Christian theology and forms the basis of the modern argument from design (also known in the 18th cent. as the 'physico-theological argument' and by recent philosophers as the 'teleological argument') for the existence of God. In its classic form (e.g., in W. *Paley's Evidences), it sets out from the observation that every biological species is apparently designed to serve its own needs, and argues therefrom to an intelligent Creator. Under the influence of C. *Darwin, E. *Haeckel, and the general trend of 19th cent. science, the traditional form of the argument has been abandoned. While teleological arguments for the existence of God are no longer fashionable among philosophers, there has in recent times been a renewal of interest in teleological explanations in science, after a long period when only mechanistic explanations were tolerated.

For a modern presentation of the teleological argument see W. R. Matthews, The Purpose of God (1935). C. Taylor, The Explanation of Behaviour (1964).

TELESIO, BERNARDINO (1508–88), Italian humanist. A native of Cosenza, nr. Naples, he studied philosophy, mathematics, and natural science at Padua and Rome, becoming a strong critic of the *Aristotelian philosophy. At Rome he enjoyed for a while the patronage of *Paul IV, who offered him the Archbishopric of Cosenza. In 1566 he returned to Naples and founded a scientific society ('Academia Telesiana'). His doctrines, much influenced by the early Greek nature philosophers (esp. Parmenides), were based on an extreme empiricism; but he gradually built up a speculative system in which the Aristotelian doctrine of matter and form was replaced by one of matter and force. His principal treatise was De Rerum Natura iuxta Propria Principia (pt. i, Rome, 1565; pt. ii, Naples, 1587); others were De Somno, De Cometis et Lacteo Circulo, and De Iride (ed. together, A. Persius, Venice, 1590). Among his disciples were T. *Campanella and G. *Bruno (qq.v.). In 1606 most of his writings were placed on the *Index.

Modern ed. of De Rerum Natura by V. Spampanato (vol. i, Modena, 1910; vol. ii, Genoa, 1913; vol. iii, Rome, 1923); also ed. L. de Franco (Cosenza, [1965] ff.). Modern studies by F. Fiorentino (2 vols., Florence, 1872–4), E. Troilo (Modena, 1910; ed. 2, Rome, 1924), G. *Gentile (Bari, 1911; ed. 2, 1923), N. C. Van Deusen (New York, 1932), and G. Soleri (Brescia, 1944). N. Abbagnano. Bernardino Telesio e la filosofia del rinascimento (1941). E. Zavattari, La visione della vita nel rinascimento e Bernardino Telesio (1923). N. Van Deusen, 'The Place of Telesio in the History of Philosophy' in Philosophical Review, xliv (1935), pp. 417–34. Überweg, iii, pp. 38, 42 f., with bibl. p. 631. G. Soleri in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1873–5, s.v.

TELESPHORUS (d. c. 137), Bp. of Rome from c. 127. St. *Irenaeus (ap. Eusebius, H.E., V. xxiv. 14) mentions that he always observed Easter on Sundays, as against the *Quartodeciman practice, and that he suffered death by martyrdom (Haer., III. iii. 3). He is thus the only 2nd cent. Pope whose martyrdom is well attested. Feast day, in the E., 22 Feb.; in the W., 2 or 5 Jan.

Jaffé, i, p. 6. The principal authority is L.P. (Duchesne), i, p. 129 f. E. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), col. 82, s.v. 'Télesphore'.

TELL EL-AMARNA TABLETS. A collection of ancient inscribed clay tablets, discovered in 1887 at Tell el-Amarna, the site of the former royal city of Akhenaton, Egyptian ruler of the early 14th cent. B.C. They are written in *cuneiform script, mostly in Akkadian, and consist chiefly of letters, many of them from Canaanite kings to their Egyptian suzerain, complaining of the attacks on Palestine of invading forces from the north and the east. Among the letters are some from an early ruler of Urusalim (i.e. *Jerusalem) named Abdi-Ḫiba.

Edd. of the Tablets in Cuneiform by O. Schroeder (2 vols., Leipzig, 1914–15); in transliteration with Eng. tr. by H. Winckler (London, 1896); in transliteration with Germ. tr. by J. A. Knudtzon (Vorderasiatische Bibliothek, ii, 1908–1915); in transliteration with Eng. tr. by S. A. B. Mercer (2 vols., Toronto, 1939), with bibl. information about scattered tablets, i, p. xiii f. On the site, T. E. Peet–C. J. Woolley, The City of Akhenaten, i (Egyptian Exploration Society, 1923), ii (ib., 1933) and iii (in two parts, ib., 1951). W. M. F. Petrie, Syria and Egypt from the Tell el-Amarna Letters (1898). W. F. Albright in C.Anc.H. (ed. 3), ii, ch. xx [No. 51 in fascicle ed. (1966), pp. 3–23], with full bibl.

TEMPERANCE (Lat. temperantia, used by Cicero to render *Plato's σωφροσύνη), restraint of the appetites and passions in accordance with reason. One of the four *cardinal virtues, and indeed, acc. to the moralists, the most fundamental of them as that on which the other three depend, it was inculcated by the Gk. philosophers, esp. Plato and the *Stoics. In the NT, the Gk. noun σωφροσύνη, translated in the AV by 'soberness' or 'sobriety', occurs three times (Acts 26. 25, 1 Tim. 2. 9 and 15), in each case as an adjunct to godliness. The adjective σώφρων, translated indiscriminately as 'sober', 'temperate', or 'discreet', is listed among the attributes proper to a bishop (1 Tim. 3. 2 and Tit. 1. 8), to old men (Tit. 2. 2) and aged women (Tit. 2. 5). (Elsewhere in the NT, the AV 'temperance' is a rendering of ἐγκράτεια, 'self-control'.)

For the Christian, temperance in its physical aspects is linked with the need for self-control of the body, regarded as a 'temple of the Holy Ghost'. The Gk. teaching influenced *Origen and the *Cappadocian Fathers, while the conception was developed, under the influence of Cicero, esp. by St. *Ambrose and St. *Augustine; it was further elaborated by St. *Thomas Aquinas. Moral theologians commonly subdivide it into several other virtues, e.g. abstinence, chastity, and modesty. The 'temperance societies', founded to foster abstinence from alcoholic drinks, date from the 19th century.

A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 94–9, s.v.

TEMPLARS, or 'Knights Templar'. The 'Poor Knights of Christ and of the Temple of Solomon', one of the two chief Military Orders of medieval Christendom, with headquarters successively in *Jerusalem, Acre and *Cyprus. The original nucleus consisted of Hugh de Payens, a knight of Champagne, and eight companions, who in 1118 bound themselves by a solemn vow to protect pilgrims from bandits on the public roads of the Holy Land. They were given quarters at the site of Solomon's *Temple, At first they lived on alms, but in 1127 Hugh journeyed to the West to obtain ecclesiastical approbation and recruits, and their fortunes (then perhaps at a low ebb) quickly improved. At the Council of Troyes (1128) approval was given to the rule of the Order, said to have been drawn up by St. *Bernard, who dedicated to Hugh his treatise 'de laude novae militiae'. The Order contained four ranks of 'knights', 'serjeants', 'squires' and 'chaplains'.

The Templars soon rose in influence and wealth, acquiring property and setting up their organization in most parts of Christendom. In the 12th cent. *Crusader states, the professional forces of the Templars and *Hospitallers played an increasingly important part in campaigns, and from 1149 onwards various castles came into the Templars' hands. The Grand Master of the Temple was largely responsible for the disaster which overtook the Crusaders in 1187, but then and later the knights of the Order fought bravely. The Order became still more important in the 13th cent., providing an even higher proportion of troops and acquiring even more castles; in 1217–18 they built Castle Pilgrim, and in 1240–3 they rebuilt Safed, the largest Christian fortress in the East, bought by the Templars in 1168. However, the Military Orders behaved increasingly as allies rather than vassals of the rulers, and they were often at odds with each other. At the fall of Acre (1291) the Templars fought fiercely and their Grand Master was killed.

Meanwhile great wealth had been accumulated by the Templars; this was deposited in their 'temples' in Paris and London, and the integrity and credit of the Order led it to be much trusted as a banking house. The same wealth led to its early ruin after the loss of Acre. Already the Council of *Lyons (1274) had witnessed an attempt to end the rivalry of the Templars and Hospitallers by incorporating them into a single Order; but even in 1306 the last Grand Master, James de Molay, opposed such a scheme. Philip the Fair of France in 1305 made a formal treaty against Pope *Boniface VIII with the General Visitor of the French Templars, but he soon found the temptation of the Order's great wealth too strong. Aided by a renegade Templar, he brought charges of sodomy, blasphemy and heresy against the Order, and enlisted the aid of Pope *Clement V. Both the King and the *Inquisition used torture freely to obtain confessions; many knights died under torture or at the stake. Clement V finally suppressed the Order at the Council of *Vienne in 1312; James de Molay was burnt in Paris in 1314, and the Order's possessions (except those in Spain and Portugal) were given to the Hospitallers, The innocence of the Templars, vigorously championed by *Dante, has been a matter of prolonged controversy, but is now generally admitted.

The headquarters of the English branch of the Order was for a long time in London, S. of the Strand (now the Inner and Middle Temple). The orig. Temple Church, dating from 1185, was, in common with other churches of the Templars, a round structure on the model of the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. A nave (or choir) was added in 1240.

Rule ed. H. de Curzon (Société de l'Histoire de France. Paris, 1886), and, with Germ. tr., ed. G. Schnürer (Studien und Darstellungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte. Im Auftrage der Görres-Gesellschaft und in Verbindung mit der Redaktion des Historischen Jahrbuches, iii, Hftt. 1–2; 1903). Marquis d'Albon (ed.), Cartulaire général de l'ordre du Temple, 1119?–1150 (1913; fasc. complémentaire, 1922); E. G. Léonard, Introduction au cartulaire manuscrit du Temple (1150–1317) constitué par le marquis d'Albon (1930). Other docc. in H. Michelet (ed.), Procès des Templiers (Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France, Première Série Histoire politique, 2 vols., 1841–51). B. A. Lees (ed.), Records of the Templars in England in the Twelfth Century. The Inquest of 1185, with Illustrative Charters and Documents (1935). Most of the older literature is controversial. In English there are two studies, by C. G. Addison, The History of the Knights Templars, the Temple Church and the Temple (1842; revised ed., 1852), and G. A. Campbell, The Templars. Their Rise and Fall (1937), with bibl. Other more important works include K. Schottmüller, Der Untergang des Templer-Ordens (2 vols., 1887); H. Prutz, Entwicklung und Untergang des Tempelherrenordens (1888); M. Lavocat, Procès des frères et de l'ordre du Temple d'après des pièces inédites publiées par M. Michelet et des documents imprimés anciens et nouveaux (1888); J. Gmelin, Schuld oder Unschuld des Templerordens? (2 vols., 1893); H. Finke, Papsttum und Untergang des Templerordens (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, iv and v; 1907). G. Lizerand, Clément V et Philippe IV le Bel (1910), passim; id. (ed.), Le Dossier de l'affaire des Templiers (incl. Fr. tr. and introd.; Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au moyen âge, 1923). J. Piquet, Des Banquiers au moyen âge. Les Templiers. Étude de leurs opérations financières (1939). G. Bordonove, Les Templiers (1963). T. W. Parker, The Knights Templars in England (Tucson, Arizona, 1963). M. Dessubré, Bibliographie de l'ordre des Templiers, imprimés et manuscrits (Bibliothèque des Initiations Modernes, v; 1928). J. B. Richard in E.B. (ed. 1968), xxi, pp. 822–5, s.v.

TEMPLE, The. Although the idea of a national shrine of the Jews at *Jerusalem was conceived by *David, the first Temple dates from the reign of *Solomon (c. 970–c. 930 B.C.). This building became the central sanctuary of Jewish religion, and here alone, acc. to the legislation of *Deuteronomy, could sacrificial worship be offered. It was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.; its rebuilding was envisaged by *Ezekiel, and effectively undertaken at the instigation of *Haggai and *Zechariah in 520 B.C. This structure (the 'Second Temple') suffered desecration at the hands of *Antiochus Epiphanes in 167 B.C., but two years later it was rededicated under *Judas Maccabaeus. The grandest of Temple buildings was put up by *Herod the Great, his chief motive being a bid for popular approval. This was the Temple standing in Christ's time, the scene of the Cleansing, and of His teaching during the days before the Betrayal. In Roman times the custody of the Temple was left in the hands of the *High Priest, assisted by priests officiating by rota. With the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70 the Temple worship ceased. The site is now occupied by a Moslem shrine. See also Jerusalem; Dome of the Rock.

All attempted reconstructions of the Temple are necessarily highly conjectural. The more important reliable modern discussions include W. Nowack, Lehrbuch der hebräischen Archäologie, ii (1894), pp. 25–53 and 71–83, with full bibl. reff. to earlier literature. K. Möhlenbrink, Der Tempel Salomos. Eine Untersuchung seiner Stellung in der Sakralarchitektur des alten Orients (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 4, vii; 1932). J. P. Hollis, The Archaeology of Herod's Temple (London thesis, London, 1934). P. L. Garber, 'Reconstructing Solomon's Temple' in Biblical Archaeologist, xiv, No. 1 (1951), pp. 2–24, with photographs of model and further reff. J. Parrot, Le Temple de Jérusalem (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, v; 1954; Eng. tr., 1957). T. A. Busink, Der Tempel von Jerusalem von Salomo bis Herodes. Eine archäologisch-historische Studie unter Berücksichtigung des Westsemitischen Tempelbaus (Studia Francisci Scholtem Memoriae dicta, iii, etc.; Leiden, 1970 ff.). [A.] Edersheim, The Temple. Its Ministry and Services as they were at the Time of Jesus Christ [1900]. Y. Yadin and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xv (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 942–88.

TEMPLE, FREDERICK (1821–1902), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Santa Maura in the Ionian Islands, he was educated at Blundell's School, Tiverton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where B. *Jowett, A. C. *Tait, and W. G. *Ward were among his tutors. He was much interested in the *Tractarian Movement, but never attached himself to it; and, gradually welcoming liberal principles, he condemned the attempted censure of both W. G. Ward and R. D. *Hampden. In 1846 he was ordained deacon and in 1847 priest, both by S. Wilberforce. He continued to teach for a time at Balliol, where he became an advocate of educational reform. From 1857 to 1869 he was Headmaster of Rugby; he did much to increase the prestige of the school and also became increasingly prominent in the education movement. In 1860 he wrote on 'The Education of the World' for Essays and Reviews (q.v.). This paper, though wholly inoffensive from the standpoint of orthodoxy, brought him much obloquy through the extremism of some of his fellow-contributors. Hence, when in 1869 he was offered the Bishopric of *Exeter, the nomination was received with fierce opposition, but he was consecrated on 21 Dec. 1869 and, characteristically, only consented to withdraw his essay from future editions of Essays and Reviews after the event. In his diocese he did much to foster Church Schools and was also a leading figure in the temperance movement. In 1885 he was translated to London; here he played an important part in the *Lincoln Judgement (1890). In his later years he became increasingly involved in conflict with the High Church party. In 1897 he was translated to *Canterbury. His archiepiscopate was marked by the notable *Lambeth Conference of 1897 and the issue of the *Lambeth Opinions (q.v.) of 1899–1900. His writings include an impressive set of *Bampton Lectures on The Relations between Religion and Science (1884) and several vols. of sermons.

E. G. Sandford (ed.), Memoirs of Archbishop Temple by Seven Friends (2 vols., 1906); last section (Editor's Supplement), with extracts from other parts, repr. as E. G. Sandford, Frederick Temple. An Appreciation (1907).

TEMPLE, WILLIAM (1881–1944), Abp. of *Canterbury. The second son of F. *Temple, he was successively Exhibitioner of Balliol College (1900), Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford (1904), Headmaster of Repton (1910), Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly (1914), Canon of Westminster (1919), Bp. of Manchester (1921), Abp. of *York (1929), and Abp. of Canterbury (1942). While still a layman, he formed lasting interests in educational and social work, esp. through the Workers' Educational Association and the Student Christian Movement. He contributed to Foundations (1912; q.v.) and was among the leaders of the 'Life and Liberty Movement', calling for a degree of autonomy for the C of E which was substantially granted by the Enabling Act (1919). In 1923 he became a member (from 1925, Chairman) of the Archbishops' Commission which in 1938 produced the report on Doctrine in the Church of England. As Abp. of York (1929–42) he became increasingly prominent in the national life, esp. through his lively concern with social, economic, and international questions, though remaining independent of organized parties, both political and religious. He also gave whole-hearted support to the *Faith and Order and *Life and Work Movements and to the *Ecumenical Movement generally. In 1941 he was active in calling, and presided over, the *Malvern Conference. His short period as Abp. of Canterbury (23 Apr. 1942–26 Oct. 1944) was overshadowed by the War of 1939–45 and by ill-health, but it was remarkable, inter alia, for his participation, with Card. A. *Hinsley and the Moderator of the Free Church Council, in the issue of a statement of principles which should guide a post-war settlement, and for his public speeches and broadcasts.

Temple was trained as a philosopher under E. *Caird, and the Neo-*Hegelian position from which he set out coloured all his later thinking, though he gradually developed into an independent thinker and philosopher of some significance. His principal works include Mens Creatrix (1917), Christus Veritas (1924), and Nature, Man and God (*Gifford Lectures for 1932–3 and 1933–4; 1934), Readings in St. John's Gospel (1939; Second Series, 1940; devotional studies) and Christianity and Social Order (Penguin Special; 1942). Of his other published works, many originated as lectures or addresses.

Life by F. A. Iremonger (London, 1948). Some Lambeth Letters, 1942–1944 (selected from W. Temple's correspondence), ed. F. S. Temple (1963). O. C. Thomas, William Temple's Philosophy of Religion (1961); R. Craig, Social Concern in the Thought of William Temple (1963); J. D. Carmichael-H. S. Goodwin, William Temple's Political Legacy (1963). F. A. Iremonger in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 869–73, s.v.

TEMPORALE. The section of a *Missal or *Breviary (sometimes made into a separate book) which supplies the variable parts of the *Masses, *Offices, and a few other closely connected services, for the whole of the ecclesiastical year, except in so far as they are provided for in the *Sanctorale.

TEMPTATION. The etymology of the Lat. word (temptatio), of which the Heb. (נִסָּיוֹן) and Greek (πειρασμός) equivalents are neutral in flavour, suggests 'trying 'or 'proving'. This primary sense is retained in the ideas of the children of Israel's tempting God (Ex. 17. 2) and of God's tempting *Abraham (Gen. 22. 1), and in Jas. 1. 2 f.: 'Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trial of your faith worketh patience.' Perhaps it was by an extension of this usage that the word was applied to the persecutions of the early Christians. It is also possible that this is the meaning of the word in the *Lord's Prayer.

Elsewhere in the NT, as in present-day usage, the word has the implication of incitement to sin. St. *Augustine distinguished temptation which tended to issue in sin (tentatio deceptionis or seductionis) from temptation which merely put to the proof (tentatio probationis). Both he and St. *Gregory the Great divided the former into the three stages of suggestion, delight, and consent (suggestio, delectatio, consensus). In this, the classical sense, temptation seems to be part of universal experience which already attacked our first parents before the *Fall. But, although St. *Paul warns his readers against committing acts which though innocent in themselves might be a temptation to others, he nowhere implies that inclination to wrongful action is sinful before consent.

Acc. to St. *James, temptation is inherent in free-will, but God does not permit it beyond what the soul can bear. He warns his readers against regarding God as its author (Jas. 1. 13). The three traditional sources of temptation are the world, the flesh, and the devil. Although in the OT the tempter is regularly depicted as personal, the Lord also points to the weakness of the flesh as a cause of temptation (Mt. 26. 41), while St. James holds that lust is its main source (Jas. 1. 14 f.).

Modern psychologists, who frequently interpret sin mainly as psychological disorder, often teach that the forms of temptation rooted in the appetites are primarily natural instincts, which as such ought, at least to some extent, to be satisfied. They are apt to regard many forms of mental temptation, notably those, which may lead to scruples and illusions, as of a much more serious nature. Since temptation is heightened by resistance, they frequently advocate circumvention rather than direct defence as the best means of avoiding repression. For the Christian moralist, the fundamental ethical facts remain unaffected by these psychological analyses. Rightly appreciated, these analyses can be of positive service to him in assisting him to a better estimation of the roots of moral action and enabling him to see where moral responsibility really lies.

See also the following entry.

The subject is regularly treated in works on Moral Theology. J. H. Horn, Πειρασμός. Die Versuchung des Gläubigen in der griechischen Bibel (Beiträge zum Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Vierte Folge, xx; 1937). R. Brouillard in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 116–27, s.v. 'Tentation', with bibl.; H. Seesemann in T.W.B., vi (1959), pp. 23–37, s.v. πεῖρα κτλ., with further bibl.

TEMPTATION OF CHRIST. The Temptation of Christ in the wilderness after His baptism is recorded in Mk. 1. 13, Mt. 4. 1–11, Lk. 4. 1–13. Three particular temptations are described in Mt. and Lk., viz. (1) to use His power as Son of God to turn stones into bread to satisfy His hunger; (2) to cast Himself down from a pinnacle of the Temple, i.e. to put God to an arbitrary test and to stage a spectacular miracle; and (3) to obtain from the devil power over all the kingdoms of the world by falling down and worshipping him, i.e. to desert His true mission for the sake of power unworthily obtained. In Lk. the last two temptations are related in the reverse order. It is a matter of Christian faith that though Christ was 'tempted in all points like as we are', He was 'yet without sin' (Heb. 4. 15). The Fathers understood the narrative of the Temptation of Christ both retrospectively as a typological recapitulation of Adam's temptation and prospectively as linked to the coming Passion. They also saw it as foreshadowing the continuing conflict between the Lord and Satan in the mission of the Church. The theme has long been a subject of special meditation in Lent, and in the W. Church an account of the Temptation has provided the Gospel for the First Sunday in Lent from the 5th cent. onwards.

H. J. C. Knight, The Temptation of Our Lord considered as related to the Ministry and as a Revelation of His Person (Hulsean Lectures, 1905–6; 1907). F. *Spitta, Zur Geschichte und Litteratur des Urchristentums, iii (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 1–108 ('Die Versuchung Jesu'); P. Ketter, Die Versuchung Jesu nach dem Berichte der Synoptiker (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, vi, Hft. 3; 1918); H. J. Vogels, 'Die Versuchungen Jesu' in Biblische Zeitschrift, xvii (1926), pp. 238–55; E. Fascher, Jesus und der Satan. Eine Studie zur Auslegung der Versuchungsgeschichte (Hallische Monographien herausgegeben O. Eissfeldt, x; 1949). R. Schnackenburg, 'Der Sinn der Versuchung Jesu bei den Synoptikern' in Th.Q., cxxxii (1952), pp. 297–326. E. Best, The Temptation and the Passion. The Markan Soteriology (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, ii; Cambridge, 1965), pp. 3–60. M. Steiner, O.F.M., La Tentation de Jésus dans l'interprétation patristique de saint Justin à Origène (Études bibliques, 1962). H. Seesemann in T.W.B., vi (1959), pp. 33–7, s.v. πεῖρα κτλ. C. III. Die Versuchungen Jesu', with bibl. See also commentaries to the Gospels.

TEMPUS CLAUSUM (Lat., 'closed time'). The seasons in the Christian year in which owing to their solemn and penitential character marriages may not normally be solemnized. The prohibition is already found for *Lent in the 52nd canon of the Council of *Laodicea (4th cent.). Later it was extended to *Advent (Council of Beneventum in 1091) and from the first of the *Rogation Days to the first Sunday after *Pentecost (Council of Nîmes, 1284). There was, however, no uniform practice until the Council of *Trent, which defined the forbidden season as extending from the first Sunday of Advent to the *Epiphany and from *Ash Wednesday to *Low Sunday (Sess. 24, cap. 10). Acc. to the *Codex Iuris Canonici it extends only from the first Sunday of Advent to Christmas Day and from Ash Wednesday to Easter Day (CIC, can. 1108). This legislation does not refer to the marriage ceremony itself, which may take place at any time of the year; until 1960 it prohibited the use of the Nuptial Mass and Blessing. These are now also permitted and the only restriction is the request that the secular celebrations associated with marriage should be restricted in Lent.

TEN ARTICLES, The (1536). The first Articles of faith issued by the C of E during the Reformation period. They were adopted by *Convocation in 1536 at the desire of *Henry VIII. The three Sacraments of Baptism, Penance, and the Eucharist are upheld. The Eucharistic presence is called both corporal and substantial, but *transubstantiation is not mentioned. Justification is said to be attained by contrition and faith joined with charity. Images are to be retained as representative of virtue, but are not to be worshipped. The intercession of the saints may be sought. Prayers and Masses for the dead are enjoined. The Articles were superseded in 1537 by 'The *Bishops' Book' (q.v.).

Text in C. Hardwick, A History of the Articles of Religion (1851), pp. 231–48, with discussion, pp. 39–59.

TEN COMMANDMENTS, The. See Commandments, The Ten.

TEN THOUSAND MARTYRS, The. Two groups of 'Ten Thousand Martyrs' are named in the '*Roman Martyrology': (1) On 22 June, In monte Ararath, passio sanctorum martyrum decem millia crucifixorum. The reference here is a purely legendary record of 10,000 soldiers, crucified with their leader, Acacius, on Mount Ararat. Some of their reputed relics were brought to the W. at the time of the *Crusades. (2) On 18 Mar., Nicomediae sanctorum decem millium martyrum qui pro Christi confessione gladio percussi sunt. This entry would seem to relate to those who suffered at the beginning of the *Diocletianic Persecution (303). Though the number has doubtless been rounded to a conventional figure and is almost certainly exaggerated, both *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., VIII. vi) and *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecut., XV) indicate that it was very large.

The legends will be found with commentary in AA.SS., Jun. IV (1707), pp. 175–88, and Mar. II (1668), p. 617.

TEN TRIBES, The. Ten of the twelve Hebrew tribes at the death of *Solomon (c. 930 B.C.) separated from the tribes of Judah and Benjamin to form the kingdom of Israel, while the two latter formed the kingdom of Judah. When Israel was conquered by the Assyrians in 721, though the bulk of the population remained in Palestine, many of the more prosperous of the people were deported to Assyria (2 Kgs. 17. 1–6). The descendants of those who were deported doubtless became merged in the Gentile population of the Assyrian Empire, though some of them at a later date may have accounted themselves part of the Jewish *Diaspora. The theory upheld by '*British Israelites' that the lost Ten Tribes were the ancestors of the British nation has no sound basis.

TEN YEARS' CONFLICT, The (1833–43). In the Church of *Scotland, the conflict which culminated in the *Disruption of 1843. The struggle, which arose out of the claim of certain of the laity to an effective say in the choice of their ministers, began in 1833, when a motion in the General Assembly that a majority of dissentient voices should veto the presentee of the patron was lost by a narrow margin. In the Assembly of 1834, however, the Popular party gained the ascendancy over the 'Moderates' and, on the motion of Lord Moncreiff, the Veto Act passed. The new situation created great legal difficulties, and when the Veto Act was applied, e.g. at Auchterarder and Marnoch, and the patron and his presentee brought their cases into the law courts, the Scottish Court of Session (1838) and later the House of Lords (1839) pronounced the Veto Act ultra vires. The Assembly, dominated by the evangelical popular party now led by T. *Chalmers, were none the less defiant. In 1841 the Popular party deposed ministers of the Strathbogie Presbytery who adhered to the law of the land, and in their 'Claim of Rights' (1842) they affirmed the Church's spiritual independence. The government of the day continued to regard the Popular party as rebellious subjects, and in 1843 the climax came when about one-third of the ministers and members of the Church seceded and formed the *Free Church of Scotland (q.v.).

R. Buchanan, The Ten Years' Conflict (2 vols., 1849). See also works cited under Scotland, Christianity in.

TENEBRAE. The popular name for the special form of *Mattins and *Lauds provided for the last three days of *Holy Week. Until 1955 it was sung by anticipation on the three preceding evenings. The name (lit. darkness) prob. derived from the ceremony of extinguishing the lights in church one by one during the service. The only light was provided by a set of 15 (since the later Middle Ages) candles fitted on a '*hearse' placed before the altar; one candle was extinguished at the end of each Psalm until only that at the apex remained; this was hidden behind the altar at the end of the *Benedictus (signifying Christ's death). After 1955 tenebrae was no longer anticipated, and certain modifications were introduced, notably the omission of the *Miserere (Ps. 51), with which the service had previously closed. Several of the tenebrae texts have survived in the offices provided for the mornings of *Good Friday and *Holy Saturday in the 1971 Breviary.

H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 238–73. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du haut moyen âge, iii (S.S.L., xxiv; 1951), pp. 313–20. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., xiv (1912), p. 506, s.v.

TENISON, THOMAS (1636–1715), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at *Norwich and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, he was ordained privately in 1659 by B. *Duppa, and after other parochial work was appointed in 1680 to St. Martin-in-the-Fields, where he gained a considerable reputation as a preacher. In 1687 he engaged in a public controversy with Fr. Andrew Pulton, S.J. At the same time he made zealous efforts to reunite the more moderate Protestant Nonconformists with the C of E, though he supported the protest of the *Seven Bishops against the *Declaration of Indulgence. In 1692 he became Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1695 Abp. of Canterbury, where he at once revived the Archbishop's Court. In 1701 he took a prominent part in the foundation of the *S.P.G. He fell into disfavour under *Anne, because of his pronounced Whig and *Low Church views, and for the same reasons was a zealous supporter of the Hanoverian succession. J. *Evelyn wrote in praise of his generosity, modesty, prudence, and piety, while J. *Swift spoke of him as 'a very dull man who had a horror of anything like levity in his clergy, especially of whist'. Besides sermons and pamphlets, he wrote The Creed of Mr. Hobbes examined (1670) and Baconia, or Certain Genuine Remains of Lord Bacon (1679).

Memoirs of the Life and Times of the Most Reverend Father in God, Dr. Thomas Tennison [1715]. E. [F.] Carpenter, Thomas Tenison, Archbishop of Canterbury. His Life and Times (C.H.S., 1948). W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 57–60.

TEPHILLIN (תְּפִלִּין). The Jewish name for *phylacteries. It is the plural of tephillah, a 'prayer'.

TERAPHIM. Religious images, mentioned in Gen. 31. 19 and 31. 30–5, which were popularly venerated by the Israelites in pre-exilic times. The narrative of 1 Sam. 19. 13 would imply that at least their upper part had human shape. They are now generally held to have been household gods of some kind, used also for purposes of divination (Ezek. 21. 21, Zech. 10. 2). In Jgs. 17. 5 and Hos. 3. 4 they are associated with the *ephod, and are perhaps regarded as legitimate implements of religion, but in 2 Kgs. 23. 24 their use is condemned by Josiah. There is no mention of them in later times.

See commentaries to Biblical passages cited and works cited s.v. Ephod. P. R. Ackroyd, 'The Teraphim' in Expository Times, lxii (1950–1), pp. 378–80. G. F. Moore in E.Bi., iv (1903), col. 4974 f., s.v.; W. Baudissin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 514–18, s.v., with refs.

TERCE, SEXT, NONE. Together with *Prime, the 'Little Hours' of the Divine Office, appointed to be recited at the third, sixth, and ninth hours respectively. The old Jewish times for prayer played a considerable part in the devotion of the early Christians (cf. Acts 3. 1, 10. 9), and are attested as hours of private prayer by *Clement of Alexandria, *Cyprian, and others. It was not until the 5th cent., however, that, under the influence of monasticism, the public recitation of prayers at these three times became general. Acc. to the *Breviary of *Pius V (1568), Terce, Sext, and None, which were all of like structure, consisted of three Psalms, preceded by Pater, Ave, versicle, and (almost) unchanging hymn, and followed by a chapter with responsory, prayer, and the usual concluding versicles. The same general pattern was preserved in the Breviary of *Paul VI. Since 1971, however, only one mid-day office has been obligatory, and the time of day at which it is said dictates which of the three offices (Terce, Sext, or None) should be chosen. Supplementary Psalms are provided for any who wish to say all three offices.

The principal work is contained in histories of the Breviary, q.v. C. Callewaert, 'De Parvis Horis Romanis ante Regulam S. Benedicti' in Collationes Brugenses, xxix (1929), pp. 481–92, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 119–26. L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, ii (1933), pp. 527–37 ('Die kleinen Horen'); M. Righetti, Manuale di storia liturgica, ii (Milan, 1946), pp. 584–6. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 97 f., s.v. 'None'; id., ib., xiii (1912), p. 747 f., s.v. 'Sext'; id., ib., xiv (1912), p. 514 f., s.v. 'Terce'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1554–7, s.v. 'None'; id., ib., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1396–9, s.v. 'Sexte et Tierce'.

TERESA OF ÁVILA, the commonly used name of Teresa of Jesus, St. (1515–82), Spanish *Carmelite nun and mystic. Teresa was descended from an old Spanish family. She was educated by *Augustinian nuns and in 1535 entered the Carmelite monastery of the Incarnation ('mitigated observance') at Ávila. A mysterious illness obliged her to return to her family, but on her recovery she re-entered her convent, where she began to lead a rather lax life. On the advice of her confessor she resumed mental prayer, but it was not until 1555 that she was finally converted to a life of perfection, while praying before a statue of Christ scourged at the pillar. Her mystic life began soon afterwards with Divine locutions, her first ecstasy, and an intellectual vision of Christ. In 1560 she received much valued spiritual counsel from St. *Peter of Alcántara. In order to lead a more mortified life she wanted to found a house where the primitive rule would be strictly observed. This plan she carried out in the face of strong opposition and in 1562 the convent of St. Joseph was founded at Ávila. Here she wrote The Way of Perfection (for her nuns), having recently completed her Life, a spiritual autobiography written under obedience. The subsequent years from 1567 to her death were filled with labours for the establishment of houses of the primitive rule ('Discalced Carmelites') both for nuns and for friars, an undertaking in which she received much assistance from St. *John of the Cross (q.v.). Despite violent opposition from the Calced Carmelites and several of the ecclesiastical authorities, her work proceeded, and at the same time her religious life deepened until it reached the state of 'spiritual marriage' (1572). In the intervals between her foundations she wrote, under obedience to her confessors, Foundations, The Interior Castle, and several smaller books. After her last foundation at Burgos (1582) under the greatest difficulties and privations, she fell ill and died at Alba de Tormes on 4 Oct. She was canonized in 1622 and her feast is kept on 15 Oct. In 1970 she was declared a *Doctor of the Church.

St. Teresa's importance is twofold. Her work in reforming the Carmelite Order has survived in the great number of Discalced houses which venerate her as their foundress. She was a woman of strong character, shrewdness, and great practical ability. As a spiritual writer her influence was epoch-making, because she was the first to point to the existence of states of prayer intermediate between discursive meditation and ecstasy ('quiet' and 'union') and to give a scientific description of the entire life of prayer from meditation to the so-called mystic marriage. Her combination of mystic experience with ceaseless activity as a reformer and organizer makes her life the classic instance for those who contend that the highest contemplation is not incompatible with great practical achievements.

Editio princeps of her works by L. de León (Salamanca, 1588; incomplete); crit. edd. by Silverio de Santa Teresa, O.C.D. (6 vols., Burgos, 1915–19; Letters, 3 vols., 1922–4, in 'Biblioteca Mística Carmelitana', i–ix; Eng. tr. by E. A. Peers of the Works, 3 vols., 1946, and of the Letters, 2 vols., 1951) and by Efrén de la Madre de Dios, O.C.D., Otilio del Niño Jesús, O.C.D. and O. Steggink, O.Carm. (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, lxxiv, cxx and clxxxix; 1951–9; with editio minor, ib., ccxii, 1962; ed. 2, 1967). Autobiography also tr. into Eng. by J. M. Cohen (Penguin Classics, 1957). Early lives by Diego de Yepes (Madrid, 1587) and F. de Ribera, S.J. (Salamanca, 1590; Lat. tr., Cologne, 1620). AA.SS., Oct. VII (1845), pp. 109–790, with Lat. tr. of life by F. de Ribera, pp. 539–725. Crisógono de Jesús, O.C.D., Santa Teresa de Jesús. Su vida y su doctrina (1936; ed. 2, 1942); Silverio de Santa Teresa, O.C.D., Santa Teresa, síntesis suprema de la raza (1939; Eng. tr., 1947); E. A. Peers, Mother of Carmel. A Portrait of St. Teresa of Jesus (1945); id., Saint Teresa of Jesus and other Essays and Addresses (1953), pp. 15–135; Marcelle Auclair, La Vie de sainte Thérèse d'Avila (1950; Eng. tr., 1953); O. Leroy, Sainte Thérèse d'Avila. Biographie spirituelle (Études Carmélitaines, 1962); E. W. T. Dicken, The Crucible of Love. A Study of the Mysticism of St. Teresa of Jesus and St. John of the Cross (1963). Father Thomas, O.C.D.–Father Gabriel, O.D.C. (edd.), St. Teresa of Ávila. Studies in her Life, Doctrine and Times (1963). Sancta Teresia a Iesu, Doctor Ecclesiae. Historia, Doctrina, Documenta (Ephemerides Carmeliticae, xxi, Nos. 1–2; 1970), with introd. by G. M. Garrone. G. Etchegoyen, L'Amour divin. Essai sur les sources de sainte Thérèse (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, iv; 1923). R. Hoornaert, Ste Thérèse écrivain. Son milieu, ses facultés, son œuvre (1922; Eng. tr. of 3rd ed., abridged, 1931). E. A. Peers, Handbook to the Life and Times of St. Teresa and St. John of the Cross (1954); Efrén de la Madre de Dios, O.C.D.–O.Steggink, O.Carm., Tiempo y vida de Santa Teresa (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, cclxxxiii; 1968). Popular account in V. Sackville-West, The Eagle and the Dove (1943), pp. 7–100. M. Jiménez Salas, Santa Teresa de Jesús: Bibliografía fundamental (Cuadernos bibliográficos, vi; 1962). Pourrat, iii, pp. 187–268. P. Pourrat, P.S.S., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 552–73, s.v. 'Thérèse, Sainte', with full bibl. on early sources. O. Steggink, O. Carmi, in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 1013–16, s.v.

TERESA OF LISIEUX, St. (1873–97), *Carmelite nun. The youngest daughter of Louis Martin, a devout watchmaker of Alençon, she was drawn towards religious perfection at an early age. In spite of opposition, she obtained permission to enter the Carmelite convent at Lisieux at the age of 15. She was professed in 1890, and was assistant novice-mistress from 1893. In 1896 she was prevented from joining the Carmelites in *China by the first of a series of haemorrhages. She died of tuberculosis on 30 Sept. 1897.

At the command of her superiors she wrote her autobiography, L'Histoire d'une âme. The spread of her fame was largely due to the decision of the prioress to circulate a revised version of this, together with details of her death, to all Carmelite houses. Miracles of healing and prophecy were soon reported in sufficient number to realize her promise, 'Je vais faire tomber un torrent de roses.'

By 1907 an account of them was appended to her biography. Proceedings for her beatification were initiated in the court of Bayeux in 1910 and moved to Rome in 1918, her cause being exempted from the fifty years' delay imposed by Canon Law. On 25 Apr. 1923 her beatification was proclaimed by *Pius XI and her bones solemnly translated to the convent. On 17 May 1925 she was canonized under the name of 'St. Teresa of the Child Jesus and the Holy Face'. Her feast is kept on 3 Oct.

Owing to the continued increase in the number of pilgrims of all nations, it was decided in 1926 to erect a large basilica at Lisieux. The popularity of her cult was largely due to the appeal to the ordinary people of her age, to whom her life showed that the attainment of sanctity was practicable, not only through extreme mortification, but through continual renunciation in small matters. She is popularly known in England as 'The Little Flower' from the sub-title of her autobiography. In 1929 Pius XI named her patroness of foreign missions and all works directed to Russia. In 1947 she was joined with *Joan of Arc as patroness of France.

Her autobiography, adapted by Mother Agnes, was first publd. at Lisieux in 1899; many subsequent edd.; Eng. tr., 1901; more recent tr. by T. N. Taylor, 1927. Facsimile of her autobiography and other related docc., + 3 vols. of Introduction, Notes et Tables, Table des Citations, publd. at Lisieux, 1956. Eng. tr. of autobiography, based on the facsimile, by R. [A.] *Knox, London, 1958. Letters ed. A. Combes, Lisieux, 1948; Eng. tr., New York, 1948. Pluies des roses (6 vols., Lisieux, 1913–25). Collection of photographs, with commentary by François de Sainte-Marie, O.C.D., Le Visage de Thérèse de Lisieux (2 vols., 1961; Eng. tr. as The Photo Album of St. Thérèse of Lisieux, 1962). A. P. Laveille, Sainte Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus (1873–1897), d'après les documents officiels du Carmel de Lisieux (1925; Eng. tr., 1928). The large number of other lives include studies by H. Petitot, O.P. (1922; Eng. tr., 1927), H. U. von Balthasar (Olten, 1950; Eng. tr., 1953), V. Johnson (London, 1953), Ida F. Görres (Freiburg, 1958; Eng. tr., 1959), P. Descouvement (Paris, 1962), and J. Norbury (London, 1966). A. Combes, Introduction à la spiritualité de sainte Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus (1946; enlarged ed., 1948; Eng. tr. of 1946 ed., 1950); id., Sainte Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus. Contemplation et apostolat (1949). Id., Le Problème de L'Histoire d'une âme et des œuvres complètes de S. Thérèse de Lisieux (1950); id., Sainte Thérèse de Lisieux et sa mission (1954; Eng. tr., 1956); id., De Doctrina Spirituali Sanctae Theresiae a Iesu Infante (Spiritualitas, vi; Rome–Paris, 1967), and other works by this author.

TERMINISM. (1) The doctrine that God has ordained a definite period or 'term' in the life of every individual at the end of which he loses his opportunity of achieving salvation. The belief was defended by J. G. Böse (c. 1662–1700) in his De Termino Salutis (1698) and much cherished in *Pietist circles, and also upheld by Adam Rechenberg (1642–1721); but it met with fierce opposition from orthodox *Lutherans. (2) By philosophers, the word is occasionally used as another name for *Nominalism (q.v.).

TERRITORIALISM. A theory of Church government formerly held by certain Protestant theologians, acc. to which the civil authority had the right to determine the religious doctrines of its subjects. It is summarized in the formula cuius regio eius religio.* The opposite view was often known as *Collegialism.

TERSANCTUS. An alternative name for the *Sanctus ('Holy, Holy, Holy'), sung or recited in the *Eucharistic Liturgy. The word is sometimes used also for the *Trisagion in the *Reproaches on *Good Friday.

TERSTEEGEN, GERHARD (1697–1769), German Protestant devotional writer. Born at Moers, near Düsseldorf, he underwent a conversion in a circle of *Pietists at the age of 20. Under the influence of ascetic and *Quietist ideas, he retired into solitude and earned his living as a ribbon weaver. Having established in 1727 his Pilgrims' Hut at Otterbeck, near Mülheim, in order to realize his spiritual ideals in a kind of religious community, he abandoned his profession in 1728 and devoted himself entirely to the career of a director of souls and devotional meetings. Besides many translations, chiefly from French Quietist writers, he published poems and hymns under the title Geistliches Blumen-Gärtlein inniger Seelen (1729) and, from 1733 to 1753, Auserlesene Lebensbeschreibungen heiliger Seelen, a set of selected biographies of Catholic mystics, in which, however, he explicitly denounced their 'sensual religion'. His influence spread throughout Germany, Holland, and Scandinavia, though his activities were temporarily hampered by the Prussian anti-conventicle laws of 1740. His piety was highly individualistic, e.g. he refused to partake of Holy Communion together with worldly or godless people. Today he is chiefly known for his hymns, remarkable for their poetical charm and a deep spirituality which expresses itself esp. in adoration of the Divine Majesty and a tender love for the Saviour. Many of them, e.g. 'Brunn alles Heils' ('Thee fount of blessing') and 'Gott ist gegenwärtig' ('Lo, God is here'), have been translated into English.

Gesammelte Schriften, 8 vols., Stuttgart, 1844–6; separate collections of his Dichtungen, ed. E. W. Schimmelbusch, 3 vols., Düsseldorf, 1897, and of his Geistliche Lieder, ed. W. Nelle, Gütersloh, 1897. Modern anthology ed. T. Klein, Munich, 1925. Various of his hymns tr. into Eng. by Frances Bevan, Hymns of Ter Steegen, Suso and Others (1895); id., Hymns of Ter Steegen and Others (1897). The basic study is that of G. Kerlen (Mülheim a.d. Ruhr, 1851). W. Blankenagel, Tersteegen als religiöser Erzieher (Emsdetten, 1934). In Eng. there is a life by H. E. Govan (London, 1898, with selections of his writings) and a popular sketch by W. E. Oliphant (publd. by the *Salvation Army, London, 1905). E. Simons in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 530–7, s.v.

TERTIANSHIP. In the *Jesuit Order a 'third year' of probation (the *novitiate constitutes the first two) before admission to final vows; it is usually undergone a few years after ordination. It is intended to rekindle and deepen the candidate's spirituality after long years of study, and includes the full 30 days' *Spiritual Exercises. Study of the Jesuit Constitutions and a variety of pastoral experiences form part of the course. It has sometimes been described as the 'Schola Perfectionis'.

TERTIARY. Member of a 'Third Order' (q.v.). The institution came into existence in the 13th cent., when the need was felt to afford lay people opportunities for self-dedication in religion in accordance with the spirit of the great *Mendicant orders. The term 'tertiary' is popularly used only of those members living in the world, to distinguish them from 'Regular Tertiaries' who live in community. Acc. to RC canon law 'Secular Tertiaries are those persons who in the world strive after Christian perfection, under the guidance, and in harmony with the spirit, of some Order, in a manner compatible with life in the world and acc. to rules approved by the Holy See' (CIC, can. 702). The most important are the *Franciscan,

*Dominican, and *Carmelite Tertiaries, who are assisted by priests of their respective First Orders. They have to make a *novitiate and are clothed with the habit of the order, which, however, is now worn only on prescribed occasions and hardly ever in public, a *scapular worn under the ordinary clothes taking its place. Tertiaries observe a rule and recite a liturgical *office, usually the Divine Office or the Little Office of Our Lady, or certain other prescribed prayers. They also keep special fasts and have their own spiritual privileges, such as *indulgences. They are not bound by vow, but make a solemn promise; they may not leave the order or join another without grave cause, nor may they belong to more than one at a time. Normally, but not always, they form chapters under the leadership of one of their number. The aims of the Third Orders differ acc. to the spirit of their First Orders. Thus, e.g., the Franciscans are specially interested in the practice of charity and social works. Dominican Secular Tertiaries are now technically known as members of Lay Fraternities, even when they are in Orders. For the practices of 'Regular Tertiaries', see Third Order.

TERTULLIAN, QUINTUS SEPTIMIUS FLORENS (c. 160–c. 225), African Church Father. Brought up in Carthage as a pagan, Tertullian received a good education in literature and rhetoric; he may have practised as a lawyer, though identification with the jurist Tertullian is improbable. He was converted to Christianity before 197. Acc. to St. *Jerome he became a priest, but there are other indications that he remained a layman. Eventually he joined the *Montanist sect. The detailed chronology of his life and works has recently been much disputed.

Tertullian was the author of a long list of apologetic, theological, controversial, and ascetic works in Latin, as well as of a few writings in Greek. In the 'Apologeticum' (c. 197) and other early apologetic writings he appeals for the toleration of Christianity, attacking pagan superstition, rebutting charges against Christian morality, and, to him the chief point, claiming that Christians were no danger to the state but good and useful citizens. In these works he is less concerned with theology than with the Greek Apologists whom he had read, though 'De testimonio animae' affirms the witness of natural instinct to the existence of God. In moral and disciplinary works addressed to Christians (e.g. 'De spectaculis', 'De corona militis', 'De idololatria', 'De paenitentia'), he emphasizes rather the separation from pagan society, which was necessary in order to escape contamination from its immorality and idolatry. Many occupations (including military service) and social institutions are barred, and in the last resort martyrdom must be accepted; the blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church. Tertullian may well be the editor of the 'Passio SS. Perpetuae et Felicitatis'.

His theological writings are mostly polemical in origin and form. In the early 'De praescriptione haereticorum' he disposes of all heresy in principle: the one true Church, visible in history through the episcopal succession (here he follows *Irenaeus), alone possesses the authentic tradition from Christ and the apostles, and alone has authority to interpret Scripture. It need not argue. Yet he himself frequently argued against Gnostic dualism and spiritualism: against Hermogenes, the *Valentinians, *Marcion, and in 'De carne Christi', 'De resurrectione mortuorum' and 'Scorpiace'. Against Marcion he defended the identity of the one God of the Old and New Testaments and His activity throughout history, both just and loving, and the identity of Jesus Christ, truly the incarnate Word of God, with the Messiah of prophecy. Against the unidentified '*Praxeas' he tried to expose the unscriptural and unhistorical implications of *modalism and to formulate a positive doctrine of the Trinity without falling into the opposite error of *subordinationism. In these respects his thought and language powerfully influenced Christianity. 'De baptismo', which is liturgically valuable, also raises the problem of *infant baptism, which Tertullian disliked. But his later 'De anima', a pioneer work in Christian psychology, which advocated *Traducianism, prepared the way for that pessimistic doctrine of the Fall and *Original Sin which came, through Augustine, to dominate Latin theology.

The rigorist strain in Tertullian, and the opposition which it evoked in Carthage, took him into Montanism, with its heightened eschatological expectations, its emphasis upon the immediacy of the Spirit (Paraclete) and ecstatic prophecy, its asceticism, and, at least by implication, a perfectionist and potentially sectarian doctrine of the Church which challenged the more institutional one that he had earlier helped to establish against *Gnosticism. All this, but especially the rigorism, is evident in the extant Montanist works, e.g. 'De monogamia', 'De exhortatione castitatis', 'De jejunio' and 'De pudicitia'. This last was written in the 220s against Pope *Callistus's disciplinary leniency with sexual sin or against a Bp. of Carthage who was imposing the same policy. His understanding of the other aspects of Montanism might have been clearer if 'De ecstasi', 'De paradiso' and 'De spe fidelium' had survived.

Tertullian's style is brilliant, masterful, and difficult. In argument he employs every rhetorical and sophistical device (his ambience is the elaborate Second Sophistic); he devastates opponents with ridicule and cleverly undermines their reasoning. Yet, though often unfair and superficial in controversy, he grapples thoughtfully with the moral and religious problems of his time. Legal knowledge helped him to formulate, but did little to determine, his theology, except perhaps in his legalistic conception of reward and punishment. Though influenced by *Stoicism and willing to use philosophy as a tool, he distrusted it as a source of truth. Christianity is revelation, act and gift of God. So his theology is fundamentally Scriptural, and, while his exegesis can be perverse in attack, for theological construction he generally prefers a literal and historical interpretation to an allegorical one. If, as seems probable, a Latin Bible was available to him, the creation of a Latin theological terminology must not be too readily attributed to him. But his influence upon language and thought was sufficient to justify the title of Father of Latin theology.

Except for the Apologeticum, MSS. are scarce. The damaged 'Codex Agobardinus' (Par. lat. 1622; 9th cent.) contains 13 of the 31 extant works; 'Codex Trecensis' (Troyes, Bibliothèque Municipale, 523; 12th cent.) is important for 5 works. The 16th cent. editors used several MSS. now lost. Collected writings containing 22 works, by Beatus *Rhenanus (Basle, 1521); ed. by J. Gagnaeus (Paris, 1545) added nine. Good notes in ed. N. Rigaud (ib., 1634). Modern edd. by F. Oehler (3 vols., Leipzig, 1853–4, with comm.), A. Reifferscheid and others (C.S.E.L., xx, xlvii, lxx, lxxvi, &c.; 1890 ff.) and E. Dekkers, O.S.B., and others (C.C., Series Latina, i–ii, &c.; 1954 ff.). Eng. tr. of works by P. Holmes and others (A.N.C.L., vii, xi, xv, and xviii; 1868–70). Commentaries on individual works, with edd. of text, include De anima, ed. J. H. Waszink (Amsterdam, 1947; valuable for Tertullian generally); Adversus Praxean, ed. E. Evans (London, 1948, with Eng. tr.); De carne Christi, ed. id. (ib., 1956, with Eng. tr.); De resurrectione carnis, ed. id. (ib., 1960, also with Eng. tr.); De praescriptione, ed. R. F. Refoulé, O.P. (S.C., xlvi; 1957, with Fr. tr.); De spectaculis, ed. E. Castorina (Florence, 1961); Ad nationes, i, ed. A. Schneider (Bibliotheca Helvetica Romana, ix; Rome, 1968, with Fr. tr.); there are also commentaries in the Eng. trr. of Adversus Hermogenem by J. H. Waszink (A.C.W., xxiv; 1956) and De patientia and De paenitentia by W. P. Le Saint, S.J. (ib., xxviii; 1959).

C. Guignebert, Tertullien. Étude sur ses sentiments à l'égard de l'empire et de la société civile (1901); P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, i (1901), pp. 177–461; A. d'Alès, S.J., La Théologie de Tertullien (1905); J. Lortz, Tertullian als Apologet (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, ix–x; 1927–8); E. Dekkers, O.S.B., Tertullianus en de Geschiednis der Liturgie (1947); B. Nisters, Tertullian. Seine Persönlichkeit und sein Schicksal (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, xxv; 1950); C. Becker, Tertullians Apologeticum. Werden und Leistung (Munich, 1954); R. Braun, 'Deus Christianorum'. Recherches sur le vocabulaire doctrinale de Tertullien (Paris thesis; 1962), with good bibl.; J. Moingt, S.J., Théologie trinitaire de Tertullien (Théologie, lxviii–lxx; 1966); T. P. O'Malley, S.J., Tertullian and the Bible (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, xxi; 1967); T. D. Barnes, Tertullian. A Historical and Literary Study (Oxford, 1971), esp. on chronology (with bibl.). On his language and style see also H. Hoppe, Syntax und Stil des Tertullian (1903); E. Löfstedt, Zur Sprache Tertullians (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. I, Bd. xvi, No. 2; 1920); A. Beck, Römische Recht bei Tertullian und Cyprian (Schriften der Königsberger Gelehrten Gesellschaft, Geisteswissenschaftliche Klasse, vii, Hft. 2; 1930), pp. 39–132; G. Säflund, De Pallio und stilistische Entwicklung Tertullians (Skrifter utgivna av Svenska Institutet i Rom, 8°, viii; Lund, 1955); R. D. Sider, Ancient Rhetoric and the Art of Tertullian (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 377–442; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 148–63; J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 246–340; Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), pp. 1–7 (Nos. 1–36), all with further bibl. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 130–171, s.v. 'Tertullien'; M. Pellegrino in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 2025–33, s.v. 'Tertulliano'.

TEST ACT, The. The Act (25 Car. II, c. 2) passed in 1673 requiring all holders of office under the crown (inter alia) to receive the sacrament of the Eucharist acc. to the usage of the C of E, to take the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance to the King, and to make the '*Declaration against Transubstantiation'. Among its first effects was the resignation by *James (II), Duke of York, of his post of Lord High Admiral. The Act was in force till 1829.

Text in Gee–Hardy, No. cxx, pp. 632–40; part also in Bettenson, pp. 405–7.

TESTAMENT, Old and New. See Old Testament and New Testament.

TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD IN GALILEE, also known as The Epistle of the Apostles (Epistula Apostolorum). This *apocryphal document, dating from c. 150 and written in the form of an encyclical sent out by the eleven Apostles after the Resurrection, purports to record conversations between the Apostles and the Risen Christ. It was written in Greek, but survives, as far as is known, only in *Ethiopic, *Coptic (in an incomplete form), and, in the case of a single leaf, in Latin. It was apparently directed against the *Gnostics and probably emanated from Egypt or Asia Minor. It is to be distinguished from the Testamentum Domini (q.v.).

C. Schmidt, Gespräche Jesu mit seinen Jüngern nach der Auferstehung (T.U., xliii, 1919); review by G. Bardy in R. Bibl., xxx (1921), pp. 110–34. Eth. text, ed., with introd. and Fr. tr., by L. Guerrier–S. Grébaut in P.O., ix (1913), pp. 141–236 (fasc. 3). Eng. tr. with short introd. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 485–503. Germ. tr., with introd. by H. Duensing, in Schneemelcher, i (1959), pp. 126–55; Eng. tr., i (1963), pp. 189–227. A. A. T. Ehrhardt, 'Judaeo-Christians in Egypt, the Epistula Apostolorum and the Gospel to the Hebrews' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Evangelica, iii (T.U., lxviii; 1964), pp. 360–82. M. Hornschuh, Studien zur Epistula Apostolorum (Patristische Texte und Studien, v; 1965). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 124 f., with bibl.; J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 150–3.

TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS, The. A pseudepigraphical writing modelled on the 'Testament of *Jacob' in Gen. 49. It professes to relate in its 12 books the message that each of the 12 sons of Jacob gave to his descendants on his death-bed. Its purpose is chiefly to give moral encouragement and spiritual consolation to its readers, whose confidence is claimed by revelations ex post facto prophetic of the later history of the different Israelite tribes. The work survives in Greek, and also in Armenian and Slavonic versions. It is a matter of dispute whether the Greek was the original or was itself a translation from Hebrew or Aramaic. Also disputed is the question whether the work was Christian in origin or Jewish (in which case the obviously Christian passages are explained as interpolations). The most prominent exponent of the latter point of view in modern times is R. H. *Charles, who argued that the work was originally written in Hebrew and that the bulk of it dates from the latter part of the 2nd cent. B.C. Of the view that the Testaments were Christian in origin, adapting and incorporating traditional Jewish material, the outstanding modern representative is M. de Jonge, who dates them c. A.D. 200. The question of the date of the work is of importance, since it can be maintained that if it is pre-Christian, 'the book . . . has achieved a real immortality by influencing the thought and diction of the writers of the New Testament, and even those of our Lord' (Charles). On the other hand, if the Testaments are Christian, 'what they illustrate is not the preparation of Christianity, but the social and religious life of the early Christian Church' (de Jonge).

Editio princeps of Gk. text by J. E. *Grabe (ed.), Spicilegium SS. Patrum, i (Oxford, 1698), pp. 145–253; the ed. of A. *Gallandi is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, ii, 1037–1150. Crit. edd. by R. Sinker (Cambridge, 1869, with appendix, ib., 1879), R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1908), and M. de Jonge (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, i; Leiden, 1964, ed. 2, 1978). Eng. tr. by R. H. Charles (London, 1908); also, with notes and other material, in id., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 282–367. M. de Jonge, The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Theologische Bibliotheek, xxv; Assen, Holland, 1953; also publ. by the Manchester University Press), with detailed bibl. p. 170 f. C. Burchard–J. Jervell–J. Thomas, Studien zu den Testamenten der Zwölf Patriarchen. Drei Aufsätze, ed. W. Eltester (Beiheft zur Z.N.T.W., xxxvi; 1969). J. Becker, Untersuchungen zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Testamente der zwölf Patriarchen (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums, viii; 1970). M. de Jonge (ed.), Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, iii; Leiden, 1975). R. Sinker, A Descriptive Catalogue of the Editions of the Printed Text of the Versions of the Testamenta XII Patriarcharum (Cambridge, 1910).

TESTAMENTUM DOMINI. A short early Christian treatise professing to be in the words of Christ Himself. It contains detailed regulations on matters of ecclesiastical order and church building, and a complete liturgy. It was originally written in Greek, probably in the 4th–5th cents., but survives only in a Syriac translation made in the 7th cent. apparently by *Jacob of Edessa. It was probably a private compilation and hence does not represent the official practice of any Church. Later it became incorporated in a collection known as the 'Clementine Octateuch' which circulated among the Syrian *Monophysites.

The work has close literary connexions with Hippolytus's Apostolic Tradition*, the Apostolic Constitutions*, and other early Church Orders. Editio princeps of complete Syr. text by Mgr. Ignatius Ephraem II Rahmani (Mainz, 1899; with Lat. tr.). J. Cooper–A. J. Maclean, The Testament of the Lord (1902; Eng. tr. with useful notes). F. X. Funk, Das Testament unseres Herrn und die verwandten Schriften (1901). É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 194–200.

TETRAGRAMMATON, The. The technical term for the four-lettered Hebrew name of God יהוה (i.e. YHWH or JHVH). Owing to its sacred character, from c. 300 B.C. the Jews tended to avoid uttering it when reading the Scriptures, and substituted 'Adonai' (i.e. the Hebrew word for 'Lord'), whence the rendering Κύριος of the *Septuagint, Dominus of the *Vulgate, and 'the LORD' of the AV and RV. When vowel points were put into Hebrew MSS. those of 'Adonai' were inserted into the letters of the Tetragrammaton, and since the 16th cent. the bastard word 'Jehovah', obtained by fusing the vowels of the one word with the consonants of the other, has become established. The original pronunciation is now commonly thought to have been 'Yahweh' or 'Jahveh' and both these forms are frequently found in scholarly works. The name is undoubtedly very ancient and was certainly in use by c. 850 B.C., as it occurs on the *Moabite Stone. Some scholars have held that its original form was 'Yah' (cf. Exod. 15. 2 [RV margin] and Ps. 68. 4). The traditional explanation of the meaning of the name as connected with the verb 'to be' is given in Exod. 3. 14 f. (cf. 6. 2 f.).

S.R. *Driver, 'Recent Theories on the Origin and Nature of the Tetragrammaton' in Studia Biblica. Essays in Biblical Archaeology and Criticism, i (1885), pp. 1–20. C. F. *Burney (ed.), The Book of Judges (1918), 'Yahweh or Yahu originally an Amorite Deity', pp. 243–8. G. R. *Driver, 'The Evidence for the Name "Yahweh" outside the Old Testament' in D. C. Simpson (ed.), Old Testament Essays. Papers read before the Society for Old Testament Studies . . . (1927), pp. 18–24. T. J. Meek, Hebrew Origins (Haskell Lectures for 1933–4; 1936), pp. 98–110. W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity (Baltimore, 1940), esp. pp. 197–9. O. Eissfeldt, 'El and Yawheh' in Journal of Semitic Studies, i (1956), pp. 27–37; F. M. Cross, Jr., 'Yahweh and the God of the Patriarchs' in H.T.R., lv (1962), pp. 225–59; E. C. B. Maclaurin, 'YHWH. The Origin of the Tetragrammaton' in Vetus Testamentum, xii (1962), pp. 439–63, with reff. R. de Vaux, O.P., 'The Revelation of the Divine Name YHWH' in J. I. Durham–J. R. Porter (edd.), Proclamation and Presence. Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies (1970), pp. 48–75.

TETRAPOLITAN CONFESSION, The. A Protestant Confession of Faith drawn up by M. *Bucer and W. *Capito conjointly at the Diet of *Augsburg (1530) and presented to the Emperor on 9 July 1530, in the name of the four S. German cities of Strassburg, Memmingen, Lindau, and Constance. Its purpose was to prevent a rupture in German Protestantism. Its doctrinal formulae, though they had some *Zwinglian affinities, were based on those of the Augsburg Confession, a copy of which had been secretly transmitted to its compilers.

The text is in H. A. Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 740–70. Eng. tr., with introd. and bibl., in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 51–88. E. F. K. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 559–64, s.v. 'Tetrapolitana, confessio', with bibl.

TETRATEUCH (Gk. τετρα- 'four' + τεῦχος 'book'). The name often given to the first four books of the *Pentateuch (Gen.–Num.), all of which appear to have been compiled from the same three sources and on the same editorial principle, i.e. '*P' has been taken as the framework and material from *J' and '*E' fitted into it. In Deut. this is plainly not so. Thus, on this view, the major dividing line in the earlier part of the OT is to be placed at the end of Num. and Deut. is to be regarded as the first volume of a '*Deuteronomic History' which extends as far as II Kings.

M. Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, i (Halle/Saale, 1943), pp. 180–216. The name 'Tetrateuch' appears to have been coined by I. Engnell, Gamla Testamentet. En traditionshistorisk inledning, i (Stockholm, 1945), p. 209. See also S. *Mowinckel, Tetrateuch—Pentateuch—Hexateuch (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xc; 1964).

TETZEL, JOHANN (c. 1465–1519), German preacher of *indulgences. About 1490 he became a *Dominican friar at Leipzig. In 1516, when the indulgence was issued for the rebuilding of *St. Peter's, Rome, Tetzel was made subcommissary for the regions of Madgeburg and Halberstadt. His rough-and-ready eloquence commended it widely, but his commercialism and the extravagance with which he supported the popular opinion that a mere money payment could be applied with unfailing effect to deliver a soul from purgatory caused great scandal. Though not permitted to preach at *Wittenberg (as the indulgence had been forbidden in Saxony), Tetzel preached at the neighbouring town of Jüterbog, which lay just outside Saxony, and after hearing him here M. *Luther was stimulated to the issue, on 31 Oct. 1517, of his Ninety-Five Theses. Tetzel took up the challenge in two sets of counter-theses. The attempt of C. von *Miltitz in 1519 to restrain Tetzel in the interests of conciliation proved a failure.

The best modern study is that of N. Paulus (Mainz, 1899), with other works of this author cited in Schottenloher, vide infra. P. Mandonnet, O.P., 'Jean Tetzel et sa prédication des indulgences' in Revue thomiste, vii (1899), pp. 481–496, and viii (1900), pp. 178–93. H. G. Ganss in C.E., xiv (1912), pp. 539–41, s.v. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, ii (1935), pp. 324–6 (Nos. 21132–74). See also works cited s.v. Indulgences.

TEUTONIC ORDER. The order of German knights (ordo fratrum domus hospitalis Sanctae Mariae Theutonicorum Ierosolymitani) grew out of a hospital community founded before Acre in 1190. In 1198 it was converted into a military order with the rule of the *Templars and confirmed as such by the papacy. In 1245 it received a rule of its own. The order, made up of knights, priests and lay brothers, was active and richly endowed in Palestine and Syria, but soon it also sought to advance the frontiers of Christendom elsewhere. After a brief and abortive interlude in Hungary (1211–25) the fourth Grand Master, Hermann of Salza, planned a new sphere of action for his knights in Prussia, having received an invitation from Duke Conrad of Masovia to fight and subdue the heathen Prussians. In the Golden Bull of Rimini (1226) the Emperor *Frederick II conferred princely powers on the Grand Master and gave almost limitless rights over future conquests to the order. In 1231 the knights crossed the Vistula and set about building their first castles. From the very beginning their missionary enterprise was compromised by their aristocratic interest in lordship and government. From 1236 onwards the order also expanded in Livonia, but the heathen Lithuanians remained an unconquered threat to its land-communications. The seat of the Grand Masters, at first at Montfort in Palestine, was moved from Acre to Venice in 1291 and to Marienburg on the Nogat in 1309. From the later thirteenth century onwards the order gave itself more and more to the administration of its territories, their colonization by German immigrants—not always at the expense of the subject Prussians—and the development of prosperous towns. When Lithuania accepted Latin Christianity and entered into a personal union with the Polish kingdom in 1386 the knights' crusading task finally lost its meaning. They succumbed to a Polish-Lithuanian army at the battle of Tannenberg (1410) and henceforth had to face increasing disaffection from their noble vassals and towns. In 1525 the Grand Master, *Albert of Prussia, resigned his office and became the first ecclesiastical prince to secularize his territory for dynastic ends when he embraced *Lutheranism. Soon afterwards the order also lost its possessions in Livonia and the Grand Masters now resided at Mergentheim in Swabia supervising their South-German bailiwicks. The order still met needs, if only to provide a suitable abode for the younger sons of RC nobles. Suppressed by Napoleon, it survived under the protection of the Hapsburgs in Austria and until 1918 the Grand Master was usually one of the Archdukes. From about 1840 it found its vocation once more in hospital work, especially military hospitals, but also in schools. The institution of serving sisters, who had held a humble place in the order's medieval statutes, was revived. Clerical rather than knightly, the community resumed its charitable work after 1945. It has, however, remained conscious of its long martial past.

E. Joachim-W. Hubatsch (edd.), Regesta Historico-Diplomatica Ordinis S. Mariae Theutonicorum. 1198–1525 (4 vols., Göttingen, 1948–50; Register zu Pars I und zu Pars II, 1965). For details of other printed sources see Mayer and Lampe, cited below. E. Caspar, Hermann von Salza und die Gründung des Deutschordensstaats in Preussen (Tübingen, 1924). M. Tumler, Der Deutsche Orden im Werden, Wachsen und Wirken bis 1400 (Vienna [1955]). K. Wieser, O.P. (ed.), Acht Jahrhunderte Deutscher Orden in Einzeldarstellungen (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, i; Bad Godesberg [1967]). B. Schumacher, 'Die Idee der geistlichen Ritterorden im Mittelalter' in Altpreussische Forschungen, i (1924), pp. 5–24, repr. in H. Beumann (ed.), Heidenmission und Kreuzzugsgedanke in der deutschen Ostpolitik des Mittelalters (Wege der Forschung, vii; Darmstadt, 1963), pp. 364–85; F. Blanke, 'Die Entscheidungsjahre der Preussenmission (1206-1274)' in Z.K.G., xlvii (1928), pp. 18–40, repr. in H. Beumann, op. cit., pp. 389–416; H. Patze, 'Die Frieden von Christburg vom Jahre 1249' in Jahrbuch für die Geschichte Mittel- und Ostdeutschlands, vii (1958), pp. 39–91, repr. in H. Beumann, op. cit., pp. 417–83, with additional note, p. 484 f. K. Górski, 'The Teutonic Order in Prussia' in Medievalia et Humanistica, xvii (1966), pp. 20–37. A. B. Boswell in C.M.H., vii (1932), pp. 248–69. F. L. Carsten, The Origins of Prussia (Oxford, 1954), esp. pp. 52–72. M. Biskup, 'Polish Research Work on the History of the Teutonic Order State Organization in Prussia (1945–1959)' in Acta Poloniae Historica, iii (Warsaw, 1960), pp. 89–113. H. E. Mayer, Bibliographie zur Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (Hanover, 1960), p. 4 (No. 57), p. 6 (Nos. 118–20), p. 87 (No. 1624), and p. 169 f. (Nos. 3622–47), with addenda in H.Z., Sonderheft, iii (169), p. 708; K. H. Lampe, Bibliographie zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens bis 1959, i, Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, 3 (Bad Godesberg, 1970).

TEWKESBURY ABBEY. The place derives its name from Theoc, a hermit of the 8th cent. In 980 it became a cell of the Benedictine abbey of Cranborne and in 1103 independent. The magnificent abbey church, now the parish church of Tewkesbury, was completed in 1123. It underwent restoration by G. G. *Scott in 1875–9, and of recent years the fabric has been much repaired.

Annales Monasterii de Theokesberia, 1066–1263, ed. H. R. Luard, Annales Monastici, i (Rolls Series, 1864), pp. 43–180, with introd. pp. xv–xxvii. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, ii (ed. 1819), pp. 53–87. A Cursory Disquisition on the Conventual Church of Tewkesbury and its Antiquities (1818). J. H. Blunt, Tewkesbury Abbey and its Associations (1875); H. J. L. J. Massé, The Abbey Church of Tewkesbury with some Account of the Priory Church of Deerhurst, Gloucester (1900), pp. 3–102. Rose Graham in W. Page (ed.), V.C.H., Gloucester, ii (1907), pp. 61–6, with refft.

TEXTE UND UNTERSUCHUNGEN. The abbreviated title of the series of Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur, the famous studies of early Christian literature. The first series, containing 15 vols., was published from 1882 onwards under the original editorship of O. von Gebhardt and A. *Harnack. A new series ('Neue Folge', 1897–1906), also comprising 15 vols., made the Texte the organ for publishing studies subsidiary to the edition of the Greek Fathers issued by the Prussian Academy (Die Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteller). A third series ('Dritte Reihe'), edited by A. Harnack and C. Schmidt, was begun in 1907. Among its most notable publications are A. Resch's Agrapha* (1906), A. Harnack's Marcion* (1920), F. Loofs' Paulus von Samosata (1924), and W. Till's edition of the Gnostic writings in Berlin Papyrus 8502 (1955).

TEXTUAL CRITICISM. The critical study of the text of an ancient writer whose work has come down in MS. from the period before the invention of printing. Few scribes are able to copy a text exactly; it follows that the more often a text is copied and the greater the number of resulting MSS., the greater variation there is likely to be between them. The work of the textual critic is therefore to compare and evaluate the differences in the MSS. (usually known as different 'readings') in order to reconstruct the history of the text through its various stages and ultimately to establish the original text as it left the hands of the author.

The great majority of the extant Hebrew MSS. of the OT, representing the so-called *Massoretic text, have relatively few variations, and these are for the most part only minor. But there is good reason to suspect that this situation is due to an authoritative text having been decided on at the beginning of the Christian era and having subsequently been copied with the very greatest care. The *Septuagint Greek MSS., however, display not only considerable differences among themselves, but also a large number of instances in which they agree in differing from the Hebrew; from this observation critics have deduced that the LXX translation was made from a different (and prob. earlier) text than that which has survived in the Massoretic text. This deduction has recently been confirmed by the discoveries at Qumran (see Dead Sea Scrolls). Among the Hebrew MSS. there discovered are several representing a type of text which lies behind the LXX, as well as others of pre-Massoretic type.

In the NT the problems are of another kind. The variations between the MSS. are both very numerous and in some instances very considerable, occasionally involving whole passages, e.g. the end of Mark, q.v. Study of the MSS. has revealed that in general (but only very generally) three main types of text are to be distinguished; and by using the evidence of the ancient versions (Latin, *Syriac, *Coptic, &c.) and quotations in the early Fathers it has been possible to a great extent to localize and date these types. They are: (1) a type associated with *Alexandria, which goes back to an archetype which must be put early in the 2nd cent.; (2) a *Western type (so called by F. J. A. *Hort because the chief witnesses to it are the Latin versions and Fathers), which can be traced back to c. A.D. 150; and (3) a type associated with *Antioch and *Constantinople (the so-called 'Koine' or *Byzantine or *Syrian text) which appears to be a systematic revision undertaken towards the end of the 3rd cent. This last type of text became standard in the Greek-speaking Church of the medieval period. It is found in the majority of the extant Greek MSS. of the NT and was the text of the first printed edition (see Textus Receptus).

Some of the works of ancient and medieval Christian writers have survived in many MSS.; others only in a few or even a single MS.; but in these cases the problems confronting the textual critic and the methods used in dealing with them resemble those encountered in the NT.

Modern editors of texts, whether Biblical or otherwise, are accustomed to print as the text of their edition either the text of a single MS. or a text which they themselves have constructed from the total material available; in either case it is usual to accompany the text with a statement of variant readings found in other MSS. and elsewhere (e.g. versions and quotations). This is normally printed at the foot of the page and is known as a '*critical apparatus'.

In the broadest sense, the history of textual criticism may be said to have started in the pre-Christian period with the labours of the Alexandrian critics on the texts of the classical authors. Of the early Christian critics the most outstanding was *Origen, whose *Hexapla was a landmark in OT text-critical history. At the Renaissance, Robert *Stephanus I edited and printed a number of editions of the Bible in Latin, in Greek, and in Hebrew, and also of some of the Fathers. In the 17th and 18th centuries the *Maurists were justly famous for their editions of many Patristic texts. J. J. *Griesbach (1745–1812) is often regarded as the founder of NT textual criticism as the term is understood today; and he was followed by C. *Tischendorf (1815–74), whose edition of the NT, although published in its final form as long ago as 1894, is still a standard work of reference. In the development of the textual criticism of the OT important stages were marked by the publication of B. *Kennicott's Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum cum variis lectionibus (1776–80) and R. Kittel's Biblia Hebraica (Leipzig, 1905–6; ed. 3 by P. Kahle, Stuttgart, 1929–37), which is still being revised. The later years of the 19th cent. witnessed the inauguration of two large-scale undertakings in editing the Fathers on the most modern critical principles, namely the Berlin corpus of Greek Fathers ('G.C.S.') and the Vienna corpus of Latin Fathers ('C.S.E.L.'), to be followed in the earlier years of the 20th cent. by the first volumes in the two oriental series, Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium and Patrologia Orientalis.

The belief that textual criticism has radically altered the text lying behind the traditional translations of the Bible has been one of the factors prompting the production of modern versions in recent times. An example of the results of textual criticism in the NT is afforded by Mk. 9. 29. The AV, based on the textus receptus, reads: 'And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting'. It now seems clear that the words 'and fasting' were not part of the original Gk. text, and they are therefore omitted from the English text of scholarly versions from the RV onwards. But the resulting changes in the text, at least so far as the NT is concerned, are by no means so fundamental as is often supposed.

Useful introduction to Biblical textual criticism by F. C. *Burkitt in E.Bi., iv (1903), cols. 4977–5031, s.v. 'Text and Versions'. On the OT, B. J. Roberts, The Old Testament Text and Versions. The Hebrew Text in Transmission and the History of the Ancient Versions (Cardiff, 1951); E. Würthwein, Der Text des Alten Testaments. Eine Einführung in die Biblia Hebraica von Rudolf Kittel (1952; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1957); Eissfeldt, pp. 669–719. On the NT, F. H. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament (1861; ed. 4, by E. Miller, 2 vols., 1894); K. *Lake, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford Church Text Books, 1900; ed. 4, 1908); C. R. Gregory, Textkritik des neuen Testamentes (3 parts, Leipzig, 1900–9); id., Canon and Text of the New Testament (1907), pp. 297–528; F. G. Kenyon, Handbook to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament (1901; ed. 2, 1912); B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament. Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration (Oxford, 1964; ed. 2, 1968). See also bibl. to Greek (Biblical and Patristic).

TEXTUS RECEPTUS (Lat., 'the Received Text'). The Greek text of the NT ordinarily contained in printed editions down to the later decades of the 19th cent. It takes its name from a casual phrase in the preface of the 2nd (1633) *Elzevir edition ('Textum ergo habes, nunc ab omnibus receptum, in quo nihil immutatum aut corruptum damus'). This text, which closely followed that of T. *Beza (1565), was substantially that of D. *Erasmus (1516), the *Complutensian Polyglott (NT printed 1514, publd. 1522) and esp. R. *Stephanus (1550). It is in substance the *Byzantine text contained in the great majority of the MSS. and underlies the AV of the English Bible. See Textual Criticism.

THADDAEUS, St. Mentioned in Mt. 10. 3 and Mk. 3. 8 (some MSS. read *Lebbaeus), he is usually identified with the Apostle *Jude (q.v.). He is, however, sometimes identified with *Addai, one of the Seventy, who plays an important part in the *Abgar legend. Feast day of the latter, in the E. Church, 21 August.

Passio, which purports to be the work of Abdias, a disciple of St. Thaddaeus and first Bp. of Babylon, pr. in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, i (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 273–8, with introd. pp. cvi–cx.

THADDAEUS, The Doctrine of. See Addai, The Doctrine of.

THANKSGIVING, General. See General Thanksgiving.

THEANDRIC ACTS (Gk. θεανδρικαὶ ἐνέργειαι). The term was coined by *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite (Ep. 4) to denote the characteristic activity of the God-man. It was often misused by *Monophysites and *Monothelites (e.g. *Severus of Antioch) in support of their theories of the one nature and the one will in Christ, but was defended by St. *Maximus the Confessor as presupposing the two natures, whose union and interaction it was meant to emphasize.

THEATINES, religious order. Founded in Rome in 1524, as 'Clerks Regular of the Divine Providence', by two members of the Roman Oratory of Divine Love, St. *Cajetan and Gian Pietro Caraffa (Bp. of Chieti, or 'Theate'; afterwards Pope *Paul IV), the order aimed at the reform of the Church from the grave abuses and scandals then corrupting it. The Theatines were not allowed to have any property, or to beg; they observed the strictest austerity of life; and their habit was distinguished from that of the secular clergy only by their white socks. Within ten years other houses of Theatines had been established in Italy, and the order soon spread into Spain and Central Europe. By their zeal and piety they played an important part in the *Counter-Reformation. In 1583 a congregation of Theatine nuns was founded in Italy under the direction of the Theatine fathers; but the order never obtained wide extension.

G. B. del Tufo, Historia della religione de' padri chierici regolari (2 vols., 1609–16); G. Silos, C.R., Historia Clericorum Regularium a Congregatione Condita (3 parts, Rome and Parma, 1650–66). B. Ferro, C.R., Istoria delle missioni de' chierici regolari teatini (2 vols., Rome, 1704–5). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 97–106. F. Andreu, C.R., in E.C., ii (1953), cols. 1814–17, s.v. 'Teatini'. See also lives of St. Cajetan and Pope Paul IV, cited s.vv.

THEBAIC VERSION. See Sahidic.

THEBAID, The. The upper part of the Nile valley (named after its capital, Thebes) which from the 3rd cent. onwards was the cradle of Christian monasticism. Acc. to St. *Jerome the first ascetic in the region was St. *Paul of Thebes (c. 230–341). The monks, who at first practised the most extreme asceticism and lived as solitaries, became increasingly organized into communities, mainly through the efforts of St. *Antony and St. *Pachomius.

THEBAN LEGION, The. The Christian legion from the *Thebaid which acc. to tradition was massacred under the Emp. Maximian at St.-Maurice-en-Valais. See Maurice, St.

THECLA, St. An early Christian virgin. The tradition concerning her derives from the 'Acts of *Paul and Thecla' (q.v. for details), acc. to which she was converted by St. Paul at Iconium. W. M. *Ramsay and others have contended that these 'Acts' contain a nucleus of genuine history, though it is difficult to separate fact from legend. A large church was built over Thecla's supposed tomb at Meriamlik, near Seleucia, and she was greatly venerated in both E. and W., though apparently never much in Rome. Feast day in the W., 23 Sept. (suppressed in the RC Church in 1969); in the E., 24 Sept.

The main bibl. on St. Thecla is listed under Paul and Thecla, Acts of. Fr. tr., with notes, of material on the miracles, by A. J. Festugière, O.P., Collections grecques de miracles. Sainte Thècle . . . (1971), pp. 11–82. L. Radermacher, Hippolytus und Thekla. Studien zur Geschichte von Legende und Kultus (Sb. (Wien), clxxxii; 1916), pp. 51–69 and 121–6. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Les Recueils antiques de miracles des saints. § 7. Les Miracles de Ste Thècle' in Anal. Boll., xliii (1925), pp. 49–57, with reff. M. Armellini, 'Das wiedergefundene Oratorium u. Coemeterium der H. Thecla an der Via Ostiensis' in R.Q., iii (1889), pp. 343–53. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2225–36, s.v. 'Thècle (Sainte)', with reff.

THEISM (from Gk. Θεός, 'God'). The term, prob. first emplyed by R. *Cudworth in the preface to his Intellectual System (1678), was originally used as an opposite to 'atheism', and only later acquired its present definite meaning to denote a creed distinct also from *Pantheism and esp. from *Deism (q.v.). Theism, as the word is currently employed, may be said to denote a philosophical system which accepts a transcendent and personal God who not only created but also preserves and governs the world, the contingency of which does not exclude miracles and the exercise of human freedom. Theism, therefore, leaves room for the Christian revelation and is in various forms the view of the world common to all orthodox Christian philosophers, and, in a less perfect form, also required by the Jewish and Mohammedan religions. Apart from certain aberrations, usually of a pantheistic character, Theism was the basis of Christian philosophy down to modern times. Relegated to the background by the Deistic philosophy of the 18th cent. and the *Hegelianism and materialism of the 19th, it has again found many competent and convinced exponents in the modern world.

Modern works defending Theism include R. Flint, Theism (Baird Lecture for 1876; 1877); A. J. *Balfour, The Foundations of Belief (1895); A. C. *Fraser, Philosophy of Theism (*Gifford Lectures for 1894–6; 2 vols., 1895–6); F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life (1912), passim; A. J. Balfour, Theism and Humanism (Gifford Lectures for 1914; 1915); C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), and other works; W. R. Sorley, Moral Values and the Idea of God (Gifford Lectures for 1914 and 1915; 1918); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is. A Study in Traditional Theism (1943; with new introd. and appendix, 1966); A. M. Farrer, Finite and Infinite (1943); D. J. B. Hawkins, The Essentials of Theism (1949); H. D. Lewis, Our Experience of God (1959); E. L. Mascall, The Openness of Being: Natural Theology Today (Gifford Lectures, 1970–1; 1971). M. Heinze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 585–95, s.v. 'Theismus'; A. E. *Taylor in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 261–87, s.v. See also bibl. to God and Philosophy of Religion.

THEMISTIANS. See Agnoetae.

THEOBALD (d. 1161), also 'Tedbald', Abp. of *Canterbury. A descendant of a Norman family, he became a monk at *Bec, prior in 1127, and abbot in 1137. In 1138 he became Abp. of Canterbury, receiving the *pallium at Rome, where he attended the Second *Lateran Council (1139). In the struggle between Stephen and Matilda he hesitated for some time, but finally decided in Stephen's favour and crowned him in 1141. As Innocent II had made *Henry of Blois, and not himself, Papal legate, frequent disputes arose, e.g. over the consecration of the future St. *William of York, whose appointment as archbishop Theobald opposed, and over questions of jurisdiction with the monks of Christ Church, Canterbury. Though Henry was not reappointed legate on the death of Innocent (1143), the office was not conferred on Theobald till c. 1150, and then probably at the recommendation of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, who highly valued him. When, in 1148, he defied Stephen and attended the Council of *Reims, his property was seized and he himself exiled. In consequence *Eugenius III laid England under an interdict, but the king and country were reconciled in the same year. In 1151 Theobald, as Papal legate, held a Council in London. In 1152 he refused to crown Stephen's son, Eustace, and had to flee to Flanders. Soon recalled, he reconciled Stephen and Henry of Anjou in 1153. On Stephen's death (1154), he crowned Henry king and recommended to him the future St. Thomas *Becket as chancellor. His own secretary, *John of Salisbury, was his chief adviser during his last years. Theobald was of a deeply religious nature as well as an able administrator, and during his pontificate the position and influence of the Church in England were greatly strengthened.

Some of his letters are pr. among the correspondence of John of Salisbury (q.v.). Brief 'Compendium Vitae', written at Bec, pr. among the works of *Lanfranc (q.v.); ed. J. A. Giles, i (Oxford, 1844, pp. 337–9, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cl, 733 f.). A. Saltman, Theobald of Canterbury (University of London Historical Studies, ii; 1956), with text of charters, &c. W. Hunt in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 113–18, with refl.

THEOCRACY (Gk. θεοκρατία, 'government by God'). The term was coined by Flavius *Josephus (Contra Apionem, ii. 16) to denote the political organization of the Jewish people, as the purest example of a theocracy. Before the institution of the kingship in Israel, Jehovah was the supreme ruler of the Hebrews, whose laws constituted at the same time religious and civil obligations. Even after the election of a king this state of things virtually remained in force, the kings being vicegerents of Jehovah and under His immediate guidance, while a more complete theocracy was created after the Exile, when the monarchy disappeared. A theocratic form of government was also known to many ancient peoples, e.g. in Egypt and Tibet, where kings appeared as representatives or even incarnations of the Deity, and it is intrinsic in *Islam. In the history of Christianity attempts at the realization of the theocratic ideal were made by the medieval Popes, esp. *Gregory VII, and again by J. *Calvin at Geneva. The influence of the OT model of government on Calvinist political doctrines is the source of the theocratic features in O. *Cromwell's Commonwealth and in Scottish Presbyterianism.

THEODICY (Gk, Θεός, 'God', and δίκη, 'justice'), etymologically the justification of God. The word was coined by G. W. *Leibniz, who used it as the title of his Essais de théodicée sur la bonté de Dieu (1710), and since then it has been applied to that part of natural theology which is concerned to defend the goodness and omnipotence of God against objections arising from the existence of evil in the world. The question itself, i.e. the origin and meaning of evil, has occupied philosophers and theologians from early times. Attempts at solving it have been made in many religions, e.g. in Brahmanism, Buddhism, and *Manichaeism, both on dualistic and on pantheistic lines, and in the philosophic systems of *Plato and the *Stoics. *Origen explained it by the abuse of the freedom of the creatures, an interpretation since then developed in many forms, notably by St. *Thomas Aquinas. The problem, less prominent in very religious eras, was much discussed in the period of the *Enlightenment, and Leibniz's work was an answer to P. *Bayle's brilliantly developed thesis that the existence of evil is incompatible with the goodness and omnipotence of God. Leibniz, who, in contrast to St. Thomas, regarded this world as the best of all possible worlds, held that evil is a necessary element like the shade in a picture, throwing into relief the beauty and harmony of the whole. This optimistic view was shared by most 18th cent. thinkers, e.g. by Lord Shaftesbury and A. Pope. In the 19th cent. Theodicy came to be more and more regarded in connexion with the entire complex of *Natural Theology, of which it is now sometimes used as a synonym.

THEODORA I (c. 500–47), wife of *Justinian I, who married her in 523. Solemnly crowned coregnant Empress in 527, she exercised a very great influence upon the complicated theological controversies of the time. Her sympathies were on the side of the *Monophysite party, and it was probably mainly through her influence that Justinian adopted his reactionary religious policy, which, esp. in the dispute over the *Three Chapters, sought to conciliate the Monophysites even at the expense of the *Chalcedonian decrees. Although, acc. to the (unreliable) evidence of the 'Anecdota' of *Procopius, she had lived a very dissolute life in her earlier years, she was undoubtedly a woman of outstanding intellect and learning, and as Empress she is said to have been a moral reformer. Her firm character was shown in her vigorous support of her husband in the Nika insurrection (532). Her portrait in mosaic is to be seen in the church of San Vitale at *Ravenna.

C. Diehl, Théodora. Impératrice de Byzance (Paris, ed. 3, c. 1904); H. Stadelmann, Theodora von Byzanz (2 vols., Dresden, 1927). W. G. Holmes, The Age of Justinian and Theodora, esp. i (1905), pp. 321–49, and ii (1907), passim. Other studies by M. Brion (Paris, 1934; Eng. tr., 1936), H. Lamb (London, 1953), and C. M. Franzero (ib., 1961). L. *Duchesne, 'Les Protégés de Théodora' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxxii (1915), pp. 57–79.

THEODORE THE LECTOR (early 6th cent.), Church historian who lived at *Constantinople. He wrote two historical treatises: (1) a 'Tripartite History', composed of extracts from the Histories of *Socrates, *Sozomen, and *Theodoret; and (2) a work composed by himself carrying the history down to the time of Justin I (d. 527). The former work has survived in part, but of the latter only fragments have been preserved.

Of the 'Tripartite History' (4 Books), Bks. I and II survive in Cod. Marc. 344 and excerpts in Cod. Bodl. Barocc. 142. In the 7th–8th cent. an Epitome of the Church History (2, above) was compiled; fgmts. of this are embodied in the Byzantine Chronographers. Fgmts. of Theodore, first publd. by H. *Valesius (1673), repr. from 1720 ed. (Valesius–Reading) in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (1), 165–228. New fragments ed. by E. Miller (1876), A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus (1901), and F. Diekamp (1903). There is a complete critical text ed. G. C. Hansen (G.C.S., 1971). J. Bidez, La Tradition manuscrite de Sozomène et la Tripartite de Théodore le Lecteur (T.U., xxxii. 2b; 1908), pp. 35–72 and 76–80. H. G. Opitz in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1869–81, s.v. 'Theodorus (48)'.

THEODORE OF MOPSUESTIA (c. 350–428), Antiochene theologian and Biblical exegete. He studied rhetoric at *Antioch under Libanius; but in 369, with his friend St. John *Chrysostom, he entered the school of *Diodore in a monastery at Antioch, where he remained for nearly ten years. In 392 he became Bp. of Mopsuestia. The rest of his life he spent in his see, gaining a wide reputation for learning and orthodoxy. In his Biblical commentaries he used scientific, critical, philological, and historical methods, following Diodore in rejecting the Alexandrian use of allegorical interpretations. His account of the Fall of man includes positions superficially like those of *Pelagianism. His doctrine concerning the Incarnation was condemned at the Councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Constantinople (553). But the recovery in modern times of certain of his works, which have been preserved in Syriac, has shown that he has sometimes been judged unjustly. His terminology, as is only to be expected in one who wrote before the Council of *Chalcedon, is not always precise on questions of Christology. His psychological analysis of human personality, influenced by a hostile reaction against *Apollinarianism, seems to have dictated certain *Nestorian formulae; however, he tried sincerely to explain them in a Catholic sense.

The texts of Theodore's works are scattered. Collection of his commentaries on NT ed. O. F. Fritzsche (Zürich, 1847), repr., together with commentaries on the Twelve Prophets and others, from A. *Mai (ed.), Nova Patrum Bibliotheca, vii, pt. 1 (Rome, 1854), and other material, in J. P. Migne, PG, lxvi, 9–1020. Crit. edd. of his Commentaries on Minor Epp. of St. Paul (fragmentary) by H. B. *Swete (2 vols., Cambridge, 1880–2); fragments on St. Paul collected in K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche aus Katenenhandschriften gesammelt (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xv; 1933), pp. 113–212; commentary on Pss. i–lxxx ed. R. Devreesse (S.T., xciii; 1939); fragments of Gk. text of comm. on St. John's Gospel ed. id., Essai sur Théodore de Mopsueste (ib., cxli; 1948), appendix, pp. 287–419; Syr. text ed. from Paris MS. by J. B. Chabot (Paris, 1887); crit. text, with Lat. tr., by J. M. Vosté, O.P. (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, Series quarta, iii, 1940). Catecheses (Syr. text and Eng tr.) ed. A. Mingana (Woodbrooke Studies, v (on Nicene Creed), 1932; and vi (on the *Lord's Prayer and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Eucharist), 1933); also photographically repr. from MS. Mingana Syr. 561 (Selly Oak Colleges' Library, Birmingham) with Fr. tr. and introd. by R. Tonneau, O.P.–R. Devreesse (S.T., cxlv; 1949). L. Pirot, L'Œuvre exégétique de Théodore de Mopsueste (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici, 1913). J. M. Vosté, O.P., 'Le Commentaire de Théodore de Mopsueste sur Saint Jean, d'après la version syriaque' in R. Bibl., xxxii (1923), pp. 522–51; U. Wickert, Studien zu den Pauluskommentaren Theodors von Mopsuestia als Beitrag zum Verständnis der Antiochenischen Theologie (Beiheft zur Z.N.W.T., xxvii; 1962). More general studies by F. A. Sullivan, S.J. (Analecta Gregoriana, lxxxii; 1956), R. A. Greer (London, 1961), R. A. Norris (Oxford, 1963), and G. Koch (Münchener Theologische Studien. II. Systematische Abteilung, xxxi; 1965). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 312–22; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 319–22. H. B. Swete in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 934–48, s.v. 'Theodorus (26)'; H. G. Opitz in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1881–90, s.v. 'Theodorus (49)'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 235–79, s.v.

THEODORE OF RAÏTHU (fl. c. 550), monk at the monastery of Raïthu on the Gulf of Suez. He was the author of a Προπαρασκευή (Praeparatio), defending the Christological formulae of St. *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444) and of the *Chalcedonian Council (451) alike and attacking the doctrines of his contemporaries, *Severus of Antioch and *Julian of Halicarnassus. The treatise outlines the chief Christological heresies from *Manes to Severus, while in its later sections it deals with specifically philosophical problems. J. P. Junglas has argued (perh. mistakenly) that Theodore was also the author of the 'De Sectis' traditionally ascribed to *Leontius of Byzantium.

The only complete pr. text of the 'Praeparatio' is the crit. ed. in F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, No. 117, 1938), pp. 185–222, with introd. pp. 173–84. Portions of the text in J. P. Migne, PG, xci, 1484–1504. J. P. Junglas, Leontius von Byzanz (Paderborn, 1908), pp. 16–20. W. Elert, 'Theodore von Pharan und Theodor von Raithu' in T.L.Z., lxxvi (1951), cols. 67–76. M. Richard in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 282–4, s.v.

THEODORE OF STUDIOS, St. (759–826), monastic reformer. The son of pious parents of *Constantinople, he early came under the influence of his uncle, St. Plato, abbot of Saccudium, under whose direction he embraced the religious life c. 780. He was ordained priest by the patriarch *Tarasius in 787, and in 794 was made abbot of Saccudium in the place of Plato, who resigned in his favour. In 796 he was one of the most influential opponents of the adulterous marriage of Constantine VI and separated from the communion of Tarasius who had tolerated it. The result was that his monks were scattered and he himself was banished to Thessalonica; but in the next year he was recalled after the Emperor's mother, Irene, had deposed her son. In 799 he and the greater part of his community went from Saccudium, where they had been exposed to the raids of the Saracens, to the old monastery of *Studios at Constantinople which had become almost extinct. The energy and organizing genius of Theodore soon made it the centre of the monastic life of the E. The sermons in which he expounded to his monks the principles of the religious life embody his austere and noble ideals. In the controversy under the next Emp., Nicephorus I (802–11), about the reinstitution of the priest Joseph, who had blessed Constantine's second marriage, by the new patriarch, Theodore was again banished (809). From his exile he appealed to Pope *Leo III, but without success. After the Emperor's death in 811 Theodore returned.

In 813 Leo V ascended the throne and, reviving the *Iconoclastic policy of Constantine V, exiled Theodore, its most vigorous opponent. In 815 Theodore was taken to Metopa in N. Phrygia, and subsequently to Boneta in Anatolia and to Smyrna, where he was closely confined and frequently ill-treated, though he succeeded in writing numerous letters (many of them still extant) to encourage his followers. He also sent appeals to the Pope, Paschal I, who wrote to the Emperor on the question of image-worship. After Leo's assassination in 820, Theodore was recalled by his successor, Michael, who pursued a policy of toleration, but prohibited image-worship in the capital. Theodore therefore could not permanently return to his monastery and spent his last years outside Constantinople, largely on the peninsula of Tryphon. A man of austere sanctity and iron will, a vigorous defender of the independence of the Church, and a genius in religious legislation, Theodore of Studios was one of the finest representatives of Byzantine monasticism. His writings include a 'Short' and a 'Long Catechesis', an Exposition of the Liturgy of the Presanctified, a number of spiritual orations, a list of canonical penances, several polemical works directed against the Iconoclasts, and poetry and correspondence. He is widely venerated esp. in the E. Feast day, 11 Nov.

There is no complete ed. of his works, that projected by the *Maurists not having been carried through. His letters and various dogmatic works ed. J. *Sirmond, Opera Varia, v (Venice, 1696); further texts ed. A. *Mai, N.P.B., v (Rome, 1849), with notice by L. *Allatius in vol. vi (ib., 1853), part 2, pp. 158–68; these items are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xcix. Further letters and fragments ed. J. P. Cozza Luzi, N.P.B., viii (Rome, 1871), part 1, pp. 1–244, and sermons, ib., ix (ib., 1888), part 1, pp. 1–318 ('Short Catechesis'), and part 2, pp. 1–217 ('Long Catechesis'); hymns ed. J. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra Spicilegio Solesmensi, i (Paris, 1876), pp. 336–80. Crit. ed. of some of his poetry, with Germ. tr. and comm., by P. Speck (Supplementa Byzantina, i, 1968), with detailed bibl. Modern studies by C. Thomas (Osnabrück, 1892), G. A. Schneider (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, v, Hft. 3; 1900), Alice Gardner (London, 1905), [B.] E. Marin ('Les Saints'; 1906), and A. P. Dobroklonskij (in Russian; 2 vols., Odessa, 1913–14). I. Hausherr, S.J., 'Saint Théodore Studite, l'homme et l'ascète' in Orientalia Christiana, vi (1926), pp. 1–87. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 491–5, with bibl. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 287–98, s.v. 'Théodore (16), Le Studite', with further refs.

THEODORE OF TARSUS, St. (c. 602–90), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was an Asiatic Greek, educated at *Tarsus and *Athens. While not yet a subdeacon he was recommended to Pope *Vitalian for the Abpric. of Canterbury by *Hadrian, an African monk to whom the see had been offered. Vitalian consecrated him in 668; but the Pope, fearing that his orthodoxy might be corrupted by his Greek upbringing, arranged for *Benedict Biscop and Hadrian to accompany him to Britain. After a visitation of the whole of England, he set about reforming the government of the Church by dividing dioceses and extending the episcopate. In 673 he summoned, and presided over, the first important synod of the whole English Church at *Hertford, and in 680 he held another great synod at *Hatfield, where a declaration of orthodoxy was drawn up and forwarded to Rome at the request of Pope *Agatho. By such methods he unified the English Church and established the metropolitical authority of the see of Canterbury. He also did much to prepare the way for the parochial system. His active interference in the diocese of York created serious difficulties with St. *Wilfrid (q.v. for details). Though he remained throughout his life a devoted scholar, none of his writings survive. The 'Penitential' traditionally attributed to Theodore is of a later date. Feast day, 19 Sept.

The principal sources are *Bede, H.E., esp. iv. 1–v. 8; cf. notes in ed. B. Colgrave–R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1969), ad locc.; and Eddius's life of St. Wilfrid, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, i (R.S., 1879), pp. 1–103. The Penitential was first pr. in full by F. W. H. Wasserschleben, Die Bussordnungen der abendländischen Kirche (Halle, 1851), pp. 182–219, with other decrees, pp. 145–81; Penitential also in A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 173–213; other decrees of his archiepiscopate, pp. 114–72. P. Fournier, 'Les Capitula du Pseudo-Théodore et le décret de Burchard de Worms' in Florilegium ou recueil de travaux d'érudition dédiés à M. le marquis Melchior de Vogüé (1909), pp. 241–55; F. Liebermann, 'Zur Herstellung der Canones Theodori Cantuariensis' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, xliii (Kanon. Abt., xii; 1922), pp. 387–409; P. W. Finsterwalder, Die Canones Theodori Cantuariensis. Über ihre Überlieferungsformen (Untersuchungen zu den Bussbüchern des 7., 8., und 9. Jahrhunderts, i; 1929); G. Le Bras, 'Notes pour servir à l'histoire des collections canoniques, V: "Judicia Theodori"' in Revue historique de Droit français et étranger, Série 4e (1931), pp. 95–115. W. Stubbs in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 926–32, s.v. 'Theodorus (7)'; W. Hunt in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 122–6; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 229–31, s.v. 'Théodore (6) de Cantorbéry'.

THEODORET (c. 393–c. 466), Bp. of Cyrrhus. A native of *Antioch, he was educated in its monastery schools. After distributing his property among the poor, he entered the monastery of Nicerte c. 416. Consecrated Bp. of Cyrrhus in Syria against his will in 423, he governed his diocese with great wisdom and munificence, at the same time indefatigably fighting paganism and heresy. He soon became involved in the Christological controversy between *Nestorius and *Cyril of Alexandria, in the latter of whose anathematisms he believed he detected a new version of *Apollinarianism. As a personal friend and admirer of Nestorius, he became one of the foremost defenders of the Antiochene Christology, and in a polemical work against Cyril maintained a duality in Christ and accepted the title '*Theotokos' only in a figurative sense. After the Council of *Ephesus (431) he continued to oppose Cyril and the decision of the Council, though Cyril accepted (433) a declaration of faith which had prob. been composed (432) by Theodoret himself. In 448, when accused by Cyril's successor, *Dioscorus, of dividing Christ 'into two Sons', he drew up another confession of faith in which he plainly asserted the unity of Christ and anathematized anyone who did not recognize the BVM as θεοτόκος. In spite of this, Dioscorus anathematized him and obtained Imperial edicts forbidding him to leave his diocese (448) and to come to the Council held at Ephesus in 449 unless summoned. This council, the so-called '*Latrocinium', deposed Theodoret, who was forced into exile. The new Emp., Marcian, summoned him to the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where he reluctantly anathematized Nestorius. It seems that he spent his last years in the peaceful administration of his diocese. A century later his writings against Cyril became the subject of the '*Three Chapters Controversy' and were condemned by the Council of *Constantinople in 553.

Only a comparatively small number of Theodoret's works has come down to us. In his 'Graecarum Affectionum Curatio', one of the finest Christian apologies, he places side by side the Christian and the pagan answers to the fundamental religious questions such as the nature of God and of man, sacrifice, the end of the world, &c. The 'Eranistes' is a treatise against the *Monophysites which asserts the immutability and impassibility of the Divine nature in Christ and the unconfused co-existence of the Divine and human natures in Him. His exegetical works, which deal with a large number of OT Books, e.g. the *Octateuch, Kings and Chronicles, Psalms, Song of Solomon, and the Major and Minor Prophets, are among the finest specimens of the Antiochene School and remarkable for their lucidity and erudition. His historical works include a 'Religious History', i.e. a collection of biographies of monks, a 'Church History', which continues the work of *Eusebius down to 428, and is esp. valuable for the numerous authentic documents used in it, and a 'Compendium of Heretical Fables', which gives information on *Arianism, Nestorianism, and *Eutychianism.

Theodoret's Christological opinions have been a matter of controversy, but it seems to be conceded by most scholars that he held Nestorian views at least till 434–5 and possibly until Chalcedon, but abandoned them at the latest after 451.

Collected works ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J. (4 vols., Paris, 1642); suppl. vol. ed. J. *Garnier, S.J. (Paris, 1684), repr. with additions by J. L. Schulze and J. A. Noesselt in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxx–lxxxiv. There are separate editions of the Graecarum Affectionum Curatio by J. Raeder (Leipzig, Teubner, 1904), and, with Fr. tr., by P. Canivet, S.J. (S.C., lvii; 2 vols., 1958), Eccl. Hist. by T. *Gaisford (Oxford, 1854) and L. Parmentier (G.C.S., 1911; ed. 2 by F. Scheidweiler, 1954), his Commentary on Isaiah by A. Möhle (Mitteilungen des Septuaginta-Unternehmens der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, v, Berlin, 1932), his Correspondence, with Fr. tr., by Y. Azéma (S.C., xl, xcviii, and cxi; 1955–65), Eranistes by G. H. Ettlinger (Oxford, 1975), and Historia religiosa, with Fr. tr. by P. Canivet–Alice Leroy-Molinghen (S.C., ccxxxiv, cclvii; 1977–9). There is also a Fr. tr. of De Providentia Orationes with full introd. by Y. Azéma (1953). N. N. Glubokovskii, The Blessed Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrrhus (in Russian, 2 vols., 1890). M. Richard, 'L'Activité littéraire de Théodoret avant le Concile d'Éphèse' in R.S.P.T., xxiv (1935), pp. 83–106; id., 'Notes sur l'évolution doctrinale de Théodoret', ib., xxv (1936), pp. 459–81; id., 'Théodoret, Jean d'Antioche et les moines d'Orient' in Mélanges de Science Religieuse, iii (1946), pp. 147–56, and other works of this author. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (S.T., clxxiii; 1953), pp. 174–84: 'Theodoret of Cyrrhus and Basil of Seleucia (the time of their death)', esp. pp. 174–80. P. Canivet, Le Monachisme Syrien selon Théodoret de Cyr (Théologie Historique, xlii; 1977). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 219–47; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 339–341. H. G. Opitz in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1791–1801; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 299–325.

THEODORIC (c. 455–526), King of the Ostrogoths from 475, and ruler of Italy from 493. Having spent his boyhood and youth as a hostage at *Constantinople, he became successively the powerful ally and insatiable enemy of Emp. *Zeno, until he was commissioned by the latter (487) to overthrow the usurper Odoacer, then King in Italy. Having achieved this end, Theodoric proceeded to rule, in effective independence of the Emperors, over his subject Arian Goths and Catholic Romans. He refrained from persecuting national or religious minorities, carried out legal, social, and economic reforms, and patronized the arts; and his reign of 33 years was marked by great prosperity. Under the name of Dietrich von Bern (i.e. 'Theodoric of Verona') he figures in the Nibelungenlied.

The chief source for his life is the Cassiodori Senatoris Variae ed. by T. *Mommsen, M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xii (1894). T. Hodgkin, Theodoric the Goth. The Barbarian Champion of Civilisation (Heroes of the Nations, 1891); M. Brion, Théodoric roi des Ostrogoths 454–526 (1935); W. Ensslin, Theodorich der Grosse (1947). A. Nagl in P.W., Zweite Reihe, v (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1745–73, s.v. 'Theodorich (4)'.

THEODORIC OF CHARTRES. See Thierry of Chartres.

THEODOSIAN CODE, The. In 435, abandoning a more ambitious project, *Theodosius II instructed a commission to codify, with any necessary adaptations to new circumstances, all general constitutions enacted since *Constantine I. The Code, compiled in Latin, was promulgated to the E. on 15 Feb. 438, with effect from 1 Jan. 439, and was accepted as authoritative by the W. Henceforward, E. and W. legislated separately and the Code was still used by the W. after its supersession in the E. by *Justinian. The laws are arranged chronologically under topical tituli in 16 books. Book XVI, which deals with religious affairs, contains the laws that banned paganism and penalized heresy, as well as those regulating the position of the clergy and determining the relation between Church and state.

The standard ed. is that of T. *Mommsen–P. M. Meyer (2 vols., Berlin, 1905); Books I–VIII also ed. P. Krüger (ib., 1923–6). Eng. tr., with commentary, by C. Pharr (Princeton, 1952). W. K. Boyd, The Ecclesiastical Edicts of the Theodosian Code (New York, 1905). J. Gaudemet in D.D.C., vii (1965), cols. 1215–46, with bibl.

THEODOSIAN COLLECTION, The. The compilation of esp. canonical documents in the *Verona Chapter MS. LX (58), subscribed with the name of Theodosius the Deacon. It contains inter alia an epistle from a Roman synod under *Damasus in 372 to the Catholic bishops in the E., 10 canons of the Council of *Carthage of 421, a Paschal cycle, some letters sent from the Council of *Sardica to Egypt, the 'Historia Acephala' relating to St. *Athanasius, and some important documents concerning the *Melitian Schism at Alexandria. As none of these items is found elsewhere, the collection is one of unique interest. Among other items (27 in all, acc. to the usual reckoning) are the canons of *Nicaea and other Councils in various Latin versions. Some of its contents were published by S. *Maffei, its discoverer, and later instalments have been issued by the *Ballerini, F. *Maassen, C. H. *Turner, and E. *Schwartz. The thesis, first propounded by Turner, that the Collection goes back to the mission sent by Carthage to the E. in 419 in connexion with the Apiarius affair has received a wide measure of acceptance.

[F.] S. Maffei, 'Monumenti ecclesiastici del quarto secolo Cristiano non più venuti in luce: conservati in Codice antichissimo del Capitolo Veronese' in Osservazioni letterarie, iii (Verona, 1738), pp. 7–92; text repr. in Maffei's Istoria teologica (Trent, 1742), pt. 2, pp. 254–72, with description, pp. 75–7. P. Ballerini–G. Ballerini (edd.), Leonis Magni Opera, iii (Venice, 1757), pp. cxxiv–cxxix, 105–27, 434–46, 581–622, 649–53. F. Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, i (1870), pp. 546–51. A. Reifferscheid, 'Bibliotheca Patrum Latinorum Italica', section 'LX. 58. memb. 8. foliorum 126. Saec. VIII' in Sb. (Wien), xlix (1865), pp. 35–40. C. H. Turner, 'The Verona Manuscripts of Canons: The Theodosian MS. and its Connection with St. Cyril' in The Guardian, I (pt. 2; 1895), p. 1921 f.; cf. also E.O.M.I.A., i (fasc. 2, pt. 3, 1930), p. 623 f. A. Spagnolo, 'Intorno all'origine dei testi di diritto canonico contenuti in un codice della Biblioteca Capitolare di Verona' in Atti della R. Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, xxxii (1896), pp. 509–24. E. Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius', part II, in Nachr. (Gött.), 1904, pp. 357–91; id., 'Ueber die Sammlung des Cod. Veronensis LX' in Z.N.T.W., xxxv (1936), pp. 1–23. W. Telfer, 'The Codex Verona LX (58)' in H.T.R., xxxvi (1943), pp. 169–246.

THEODOSIUS I (the 'Great'), Roman Emperor from 379 to 395. After repelling barbarian attacks on Britain and suppressing revolt in Africa, his father, the Spanish general, Count Theodosius, was executed, for reasons now unknown, in 376. In 379, however, his son was created co-Augustus by Gratian. In secular affairs he defeated and pacified the Goths after their victory at Hadrianople (378). Ecclesiastically he continued Gratian's policy and founded the orthodox Christian state. *Arianism and other heresies became legal offences, sacrifice was forbidden, and paganism almost outlawed. The Emperor's penitent submission to St. *Ambrose after the massacre at Thessalonica (390) foreshadows *Canossa. The senatorial attempt to restore at Rome the 'Altar of Victory' (384) failed, and Theodosius sealed his work by defeating Arbogast's puppet-king, Eugenius, who would have tolerated paganism.

The principal sources include Aurelius Victor, Epitome, 48; Pacatus, Panegyricus Theodosio Aug. dictus; and St. Ambrose, De Obitu Theodosii Oratio and Ep. 51. 4; and the 5th-cent. Church Historians. A. Güldenpenning and J. Ifland, Der Kaiser Theodosius der Grosse (1878); G. Rauschen, Jahrbücher der christlichen Kirche unter dem Kaiser Theodosius dem Grossen (1897). W. Ensslin, Die Religionspolitik des Kaisers Theodosius d. Gr. (Sb. (Bayr.), 1953, Hft. 2). N. Q. King, The Emperor Theodosius and the Establishment of Christianity (1961). G. T. Stokes in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 959–64, s.v. 'Theodosius (2) I'.

THEODOSIUS II (401–50), grandson of *Theodosius I, E. Roman Emperor from 408. He is significant in religious history by his foundation of the university of Constantinople (425), his summoning of the Council of *Ephesus (431), and his enactment of the *Theodosian Code (q.v.). Though pious by nature, he was politically incompetent, being dominated at one stage by *Simeon Stylites, and later in his reign by his minister, Chrysaphius, who secured his support for the *Monophysites. He died on 28 July 450 after a fall from his horse.

A. Güldenpenning, Geschichte des oströmischen Reiches unter den Kaisern Arcadius und Theodosius II (1885). G. T. Stokes in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 964–7, s.v. 'Theodosius (3) II'.

THEODOTION (2nd cent.), translator of the Gk. version of the OT placed in *Origen's *Hexapla next after the LXX. Hardly anything is known of his life. St. *Irenaeus (Haer., III. xxi. l) refers to him as a Jewish proselyte; St. *Jerome (De Vir. Ill., liv) as an *Ebionite Christian; and *Epiphanius (De Mensuris et Ponderibus, 17) as a follower of *Marcion. His version of the OT has much in common with the LXX, so much so that it is often regarded as a free revision rather than an independent rendering. It has special value for the study of Jer. and Job, where it was used by Origen to make good the many gaps in the LXX text, while for Daniel from the 4th cent. onwards the Church used it in preference to the LXX.

H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 42–9. D. Barthélemy, O.P., Les Devanciers d'Aquila (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum. x; Leiden, 1963), esp. pp. 144–67. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 83–94. J. Gwynn in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 970–9, s.v.

THEODOTUS (2nd cent.), *Gnostic. A follower of *Valentinus, he is known from the fragments preserved by *Clement of Alexandria in the Excerpta ex Theodoto found among Clement's writings.

The Excerpta are printed in all the editions of Clement. Separate editions by R. P. Casey ('Studies and Documents', 1934) and F. M. M. Sagnard, O.P. (S.C., 1948; excellent notes).

THEODOTUS, the Cobbler or Leather-seller (2nd cent.), Adoptionist *Monarchian. He came from Byzantium to Rome under Pope *Victor (c. 189–198), proclaiming that Jesus was a man who was anointed with the Holy Ghost at His baptism and thus became Christ. He was excommunicated by Victor. His disciples, who were known as 'Theodotians', included his namesake, 'Theodotus the Money-changer' (early 3rd cent.), who was condemned by Pope *Zephyrinus (198–217).

The primary sources are *Hippolytus, Philosoph., vii. 35 f. and x. 23 f., and *Eusebius, H.E., v, 28. See also *Epiphanius, Haer., 54 f., where the sect is described under the name of 'Melchisedekians'. A. *Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 311–18, s.v. 'Monarchianismus'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 513–16, s.v. 'Melchisédéciens'.

THEODOTUS (d. c. 445), Bp. of Ancyra. At first a supporter of *Nestorius, he became one of his most determined adversaries, taking a prominent part on the Cyrilline side at the Council of *Ephesus (431). At the (Nestorian) Council of Tarsus (432) he was anathematized. Among his writings were: (1) Six books against Nestorius (lost); (2) an 'Explanation of the Creed of Nicaea', maintaining that Nestorian teaching was already condemned by the Creed of 325; and (3) various 'Sermons' (partly lost), incl. one for *Christmas (which was read at the Council of Ephesus) and another for the *Purification (εἰς τὰ φῶτα). These last are important early witnesses to the existence of these two Feasts. A long panegyric ascribed to him on 'The Martyrdom and Miracles of St. *George' is certainly spurious.

He is not to be confused with St. Theodotus of Ancyra, a martyr in the *Diocletianic Persecution, commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 18 May.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxvii, 1309–1432 (from A. *Gallandi). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 197–200. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 328–30.

THEODULF (c. 750–821), Bp. of Orléans. A native of Spain and of Gothic descent, he attracted the attention of *Charlemagne, who made him abbot of *Fleury and Bp. of Orléans (before 798). In 798 he was sent, together with Leidrad of Lyons, as a royal legate on a visitation tour to the South of France. He took part in the trial of St. *Leo III in 800 and in the same year received the pallium. After the death of Charlemagne he was accused of conspiracy with King Bernard of Italy against Louis the Pious, and was deposed in 818 and exiled to Angers.

Theodulf was one of the leading theologians of the Frankish Empire. Among his writings are a work on the Holy Ghost, 'De Spiritu Sancto', in which he defended the *Filioque, and a treatise on Baptism, and probably also expositions of the Mass and the Creed. He was, moreover, a poet of ability. His 'Carmina', with their descriptions of the court of Charlemagne, are of great historical interest, as is also his 'Versus contra Judices', in which he recorded his impressions of his visitation of 798 and sharply criticized the harshness of the Frankish law. Of his hymns the 'Gloria, laus et honor' ('All glory, laud and honour') became the *Palm Sunday Processional of the W. Church. As a bishop he was devoted to his diocese, in which he carried out many reforms. He introduced parish schools, raised the standard of worship, and did much for ecclesiastical architecture and art. He favoured esp. the production of illuminated MSS. of the Bible and sought to improve the text of the *Vulgate. There are strong grounds for attributing to him the authorship of the '*Caroline Books'.

His works, ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J. (Paris, 1646), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cv, 191–380. The best edition of his Poems is that of E. Duemmler in M.G.H., Poetae, i (1881), pp. 437–581 (text pp. 445–581). Studies by L. Baunard (Orléans, 1860) and C. Cuissard (in Mémoires de la Société Archéologique et Historique de l'Orléanais, xxiv (1892), pp. 1–351). H. Liebeschütz, 'Theodulf of Orleans and the Problem of the Caroline Renaissance' in D. J. Gordon (ed.), Fritz Saxl 1890–1948. A Volume of Memorial Essays from his Friends in England (1957), pp. 77–92. Raby, pp. 171–7; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 202–4. Manitius, i (1911), pp. 537–43. See also bibl. to Caroline Books.

THEOGNOSTUS (d. c. 282), *Alexandrian ecclesiastical writer. He was head of the *Catechetical School, probably in succession to *Dionysius and before (not after, as *Philip of Side asserts) Pierius. He elaborated a system of theology on *Origenist lines in seven books of *Hypotyposes, (Ὑποτυπώσεις), of which an account is preserved by *Photius (Cod. 106). Quotations also survive in St. *Athanasius (Ep. iv ad Sarapionem, 11; De Decretis, 25) and St. *Gregory of Nyssa (Contra Eunom., III. iii). Despite his subordinationist language on the Son (derived from Origen), Athanasius could appeal to his support against the *Arians.

The fragments are printed in J. P. Migne, PG, x, 235–242. A. *Harnack,' Die Hypotyposen des Theognost' (T.U., xxiv. 3; Leipzig, 1903). L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria: Theognostus, Pierius, Peter (1908), pp. 1-43.

THEOLOGIA CRUCIS (Lat., 'Theology of the Cross'). The name given by Martin *Luther to the theological principle that our knowledge of the Being of God must be derived from the study of Christ in His humiliation and the sufferings He underwent on the cross. He opposed it to a theologia gloriae ('theology of glory') which would maintain with the *Scholastic theologians that a true knowledge of God can be obtained from the study of nature.

THEOLOGIA GERMANICA. A late 14th cent. anonymous mystical treatise, apparently written at Sachsenhausen, nr. Frankfurt a.M., by a priest of the *Teutonic Order. In its mystical doctrine it follows the Dionysian tradition of the great Dominicans, Master *Eckhart and J. *Tauler, counselling poverty of spirit and abandonment to God as the means of transformation by love into participation of the Divine nature. Martin *Luther, who supervised its first printed editon (1518), was much influenced by the book in his early period, and found in it his own opposition to good works and his views on individual religion. Later it was enthusiastically admired by the *Pietists, and, in the English translation of Susanna Winkworth, had a considerable vogue in Great Britain. The treatise has frequently been suspected of pantheism, but apart from a few misleading expressions its doctrine would seem to be perfectly orthodox and is now generally recognized as such by Catholic theologians.

Crit. ed. of text by F. Pfeiffer (Stuttgart, 1851); Eng. tr. by Susanna Winkworth, pref. by C. *Kingsley (London, 1854); rev. by J. Bernhart (New York, 1949; London, 1950), with introd. pp. 9-109. F. G. Lisco, Die Heilslehre der Theologia deutsch (1857): Maria Windstosser, Étude sur la 'Théologie germanique' (1911); J. Paquier, Un Mystique allemand au XIVe siècle. L'orthodoxie de la Théologie germanique (1922). K. Müller, 'Zum Text der Deutschen Theologie' in Z.K.G. (1930), pp. 307-35. G. Baring, 'Neues von der "Theologia Deutsch" und ihrer weltweiten Bedeutung' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, xlviii (1957), pp. 1-11, with summary in English. Id., Bibliographie der Ausgaben der 'Theologia Deutsch' (1516-1961) (Baden-Baden, 1963). F. Cohrs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 626-31.

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES (Anglican). In these Colleges candidates receive their final preparation for ordination. Before the 19th cent. various attempts were made to establish theological colleges in England, notably by Matthew Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter, in 1609, by G. *Burnet, Bp. of Salisbury (d. 1715), and by T. *Wilson, Bp. of Sodor and Man, in 1700; but nothing in the way of a permanent foundation was accomplished. Edinburgh Theological College was founded in 1810 and is thus the oldest surviving theological college in the Anglican Communion. In England, G. H. Law, Bp. of *Chester, founded St. Bees' College for non-university men in 1816, and in 1825 the *C.M.S. started a college at Islington for those of its candidates who were not graduates. Neither of these colleges has survived. The oldest existing seminary in England is the Queen's College, Birmingham, which was founded in 1828 for medical and theological students, and in 1934 was reconstituted for theology alone. Chichester Theological College was established in 1839, and after that date others followed rapidly. In recent years, however, owing to the decline in the number of ordination candidates and a desire to conserve resources, some theological colleges have closed (e.g. *Ely in 1964, and St. Aidan's, Birkenhead, and Bishop's College, Cheshunt, in 1969) and some have amalgamated (e.g. Wells and Salisbury in 1971). There have also been amalgamations with theological colleges of other denominations, notably the amalgamation in Birmingham between the Queen's College and Handsworth College (Methodist).

F. W. B. Bullock, A History of Training for the Ministry of the Church of England in England and Wales from 1800 to 1874 (St. Leonards-on-Sea, 1955). Id., The History of Ridley Hall, Cambridge (2 vols., 1941-53), with much general information, esp. Introduction on 'Theological Colleges of the Church of England before 1875' in vol. i, pp. 1-17. Theological Colleges for Tomorrow. Being the Report of a Working Party appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, to consider the problems of the Theological Colleges of the Church of England (1968). A notable history of a particular foundation is [W.] O. Chadwick, The Founding of Cuddesdon (1954). S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H., pp. 587-91, s.v.

THEOLOGICAL VIRTUES, The. A title given to the three virtues of *faith, *hope, and *charity, which are grouped together by St. *Paul (1 Cor. 13. 13; cf. 1 Thess. 1. 3, Gal. 5. 5-6, Col. 1. 4-5) as the bases of the Christian life. They are so named in contradistinction to the 'natural' or 'Cardinal Virtues' (q.v.). Their place in the life of grace and their relations to each other were much studied by the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas Aquinas.

A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2739-99, s.v. 'Vertu', esp. cols. 2782-4 ('vii, Vertus théologales').

THEOLOGISCHE LITERATURZEITUNG. A German theological periodical, founded in 1876 by E. *Schürer and A. *Harnack largely in the interests of *Ritschlian theology and devoted entirely to reviews of current theological literature. It was published fortnightly till the end of 1938, and from 1939 monthly.

THEOLOGY (Gk. θεολογία), lit. the 'science of God'. In its Christian sense it is the science of the Divinely revealed religious truths. Its theme is the Being and Nature of God and His creatures and the whole complex of the Divine dispensation from the Fall of Adam to the Redemption through Christ and its mediation to men by His Church, including the so-called natural truths of God, the soul, the moral law, &c., which are accessible to mere reason. Its purpose is the investigation of the contents of belief by means of reason enlightened by faith (fides quaerens intellectum) and the promotion of its deeper understanding. In the course of time theology has developed into several branches, among them dogmatic, historical, and practical theology. The methods of classification of the sub-disciplines, however, fluctuate in different theological systems.

See also Natural Theology; Revelation and Tradition; and Catholic (section 5).

THEOPASCHITES (Gk. θεοπασχῖται, i.e. 'those who hold that God suffered'), a name applied, already by their contemporaries, to a group of 6th-cent. *Monophysite theologians. They first appeared at *Constantinople in 519, where their supporters (John Maxentius and some Scythian monks) defended the formula 'One of the Trinity was crucified'. Their orthodoxy was upheld by the Emp. *Justinian and *Leontius of Byzantium. The formula was rejected, however, by the Patr. of Constantinople and (with some hesitation) by Pope *Hormisdas.

THEOPHANY. An appearance of God in visible form, temporary and not necessarily material (cf. e.g. Exod. 33. 20 ff.). Such an appearance is to be contrasted with the *Incarnation, in which there was a permanent union between God and complete manhood (body, soul, and spirit). In early Christian times the word was in regular use in an orthodox sense, e.g. for the Feast of the *Epiphany in the *Gelasian Sacramentary.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS. A *Deistic sect founded in France during the reign of the Directory under the patronage esp. of the Director L. M. La Réveillère-Lépeaux (1753–1824). Its tenets were set forth in a pamphlet by J. B. Chemin-Dupontès (Paris, Sept. 1796) under the title of Manuel des théophilanthropes, the three articles of its creed being belief in God, virtue, and immortality. At first the movement seemed likely to spread and was given the use of ten churches in Paris by the Directory; but after the re-establishment of Catholicism by the *Concordat of 1801 it soon lost ground, and in 1802 Napoleon restored its churches to Catholic worship. Some attempts were made to revive it later in the 19th cent., but without success.

J. Brugerette in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1, 1946), cols. 518–23, s.v.

THEOPHILUS, St. (later 2nd cent.), Bp. of *Antioch and one of the 'Christian *Apologists'. Of his writings, only his 'Apology', in three books addressed to Autolycus, has survived. Its purpose was to set before the pagan world the Christian idea of God and the superiority of the doctrine of *creation over the immoral myths of the Olympian religion. Theophilus developed the doctrine of the *Logos a stage further than any of his Christian predecessors, distinguishing between the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, the intelligence of the Father, and the λόγος προφορικός, the Word brought forth externally in order to create. He is also the first theologian to use the word *Triad' (τριάς) of the Godhead. Among his (lost) treatises were writings against *Marcion and Hermogenes. F. *Loofs endeavoured to show that considerable portions of his work against Marcion were incorporated in *Irenaeus's 'Treatise Against Heresies', but his contention has won little support.

The sole MS. authority for the 'Ad Autolycum' is Cod. Marcianus 496 (saec. xi), all other known MSS. being direct descendants. Editio princeps by J. Frisius and C. Gesner (Zürich, 1546). Crit. edd. by J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum, viii (ed. 3, Jena, 1861) and R. M. Grant, with Eng. tr. (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1970). J. P. Migne, PG, vi, 1023–1168. Earlier Eng. tr. in A.N.C.L., vol. iii (1867), pp. 49–133. F. Loofs, Theophilus von Antioch und die anderen theologischen Quellen bei Irenäus (T.U., xlvi (2); 1930). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 302–15; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 75–7. E. Rapisarda in E.C., xi (1953), col. 1952 f., s.v.

THEOPHILUS (d. 412), Patriarch of Alexandria from 385. He was the uncle of St. *Cyril, who succeeded him. In his first years as patriarch he took an active part in suppressing the remnants of paganism in his city, in 391 destroying the temple of Serapis; but later his main ambition seems to have been the furtherance of the prestige of his see, sometimes by unscrupulous methods. A fierce campaign against *Origenism, involving him in an attack on the *Tall Brothers, was encouraged by jealousy of the see of *Constantinople and St. *Chrysostom, its bishop. The *Copts and Syrians, who consider him a saint, celebrate his feast on 15 and 17 Oct. respectively.

Works ed. by A. *Gallandi in Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, vii (1770), pp. 601–53, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 29–68 and 401–4. Further letters, ib., PL, xxii, 758–69, 773–90, 792–812, and 813–28. M. Richard, 'Une Homélie de Théophile d'Alexandrie sur l'institution de l'Eucharistie' in R.H.E., xxxiii (1937), pp. 46–56; id., 'Les Écrits de Théophile d'Alexandrie' in Le Muséon, lii (1939), pp. 35–50. A. Favale, S.D.B., Teofilo d'Alessandria (345 c.–412). Scritti, vita e dottrina (Biblioteca del 'Salesianum', xli; 1958). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 115–17; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 281. H. G. Opitz in P.W., 2. Reihe, v (pt. 2, 1934), cols. 2149–65. R. Delobel–M. Richard in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 523–30, s.v., with further reff.

THEOPHYLACT (11th cent.), Byzantine exegete. A native of Euboea, he was a pupil of Michael *Psellus, and for a time tutor of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, son of Michael VII. About 1078 he was made Abp. of Achrida in the country of the Bulgarians, whose lack of civilization was a source of constant suffering to him, as is revealed in his letters. His principal work is a series of commentaries on several OT Books and on the whole of the NT except Rev. They are marked by lucidity of thought and expression and closely follow the Scriptural text. At the same time they insist on practical morality in the manner of St. *Chrysostom, whom Theophylact took as a model. In matters of exegesis Theophylact was largely influenced by earlier writers such as the so-called '*Oecumenius', esp. in Acts and the Catholic Epistles, as well as by his contemporary, *Euthymius Zigabenus. In the question of the Schism he adopted a conciliatory position, defending in his Περὶ ὧν ἐγκαλοῦνται Λατῖνοι the Catholic attitude to *Images and the use of Unleavened *Bread in the Eucharist. Among his other works are many homilies, still partly unprinted, letters, a book on the 'training of princes' (παιδεία βασιλική), largely drawn from older sources, written for his pupil, a panegyric on the Emp. Alexis Comnenus, and two iambic poems.

Works [ed. F. Foscari], 4 vols., Venice, 1754–63, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxiii–cxxvi; prefaced by useful 'Dissertatio' by J. F. Bernard Maria de Rubeis, O.P., repr. in PG, cxxiii, 9–130. Alice Leroy-Molinghen, 'Les Lettres de Théophylacte de Bulgarie à Grégoire Taronite' in Byzantion, xi (1936), pp. 589–92; id., 'Prolègomènes à une édition critique des "Lettres" de Théophylacte de Bulgarie', ib., xiii (1938), pp. 253–62. P. Gautier, 'Le Discours de Théophylacte de Bulgarie à l'Autocrator Alexis Ier Comnène (6 janvier 1088)' in Revue des Études Byzantines, xx (1962), pp. 93–130, incl. Gk. text and Fr. tr. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 649–51. R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 536–8, s.v.

THEOSOPHY (Gk. Θεός, 'God', σοφία, 'wisdom'). In its wider application the term has been used for any intuitive knowledge of the Divine, and as such covers a number of religious and philosophical systems closely akin to pantheism and natural mysticism. Thus the teaching of Buddha, *Plotinus, and the *Gnostics in antiquity, and of John Scotus *Erigena, J. *Boehme (the 'Teutonic Theosopher'), E. *Swedenborg, and others in more modern times may be called Theosophy.

In a more restricted sense the word is now commonly applied to the movement instigated by the Russian adventuress, H. P. Blavatsky, who, together with Col. H. S. Olcott, founded the Theosophical Society in New York in 1875. Three years later they went to India, and in 1882 Adyar (near Madras) became their headquarters. After Mme Blavatsky's death (1891) Mrs. A. Besant was made its leader. It soon spread to Europe, where it gained adherents in many countries, esp. in Germany (see Anthroposophy). Theosophy purports to derive its teaching from Indian sacred books, such as the Upanishads and Sutras, and from Indian Mahatmas. A mixture of pantheism, magic, and rationalism, it teaches the transmigration of souls, the brotherhood of men irrespective of colour and creed, and complicated systems of psychology and cosmology. Theosophists deny both a personal God and personal immortality, but advocate universal toleration of all religions as well as of atheism. They regard Christ as purely human and consequently deny the validity of the Christian Revelation.

The very extensive Theosophical literature includes the studies of H. S. Olcott, Theosophy. Religion and Occult Science (1885); H. P. Blavatsky, The Key to Theosophy (1889); id., The Secret Doctrine (ed. 2, 3 vols., 1888–97), and many other studies by this author; Annie Besant, The Ancient Wisdom. An Outline of Theosophical Teachings (1897); id., Popular Lectures on Theosophy [1910], and many other works of this author; C. W. Leadbeater, An Outline of Theosophy (1902), and many other works of this author; Lilian Edger, The Elements of Theosophy (1903); Ethel M. Mallet, First Steps in Theosophy (1905). Critical studies include R. Guénon, Le Théosophisme. Histoire d'une pseudo-religion (Bibliothèque Française de Philosophie; 1921); T. Mainage, O.P., Les Principes de la théosophie. Étude critique (1922; Eng. tr., 1927); W. S. Urquhart, Theosophy and Christian Thought [1922]; L. de Grandmaison, La Théosophie et l'anthroposophie (1939). P. Oltramare, L'Histoire des idées théosophiques dans l'Inde (Annales du Musée Guimet. Bibliothèque d'Études, xxiii and xxxi; 1906–23). Josephine Ranson, A Short History of the Theosophical Society (Adyar, 1938). C. J. Ryan, H. P. Blavatsky and the Theosophical Movement. A Brief Historical Sketch (Point Loma, California, 1937). T. Besterman, A Dictionary of Theosophy (1927). There is also much information about the modern theosophical movement in the lives of Annie Besant by 'Geoffrey West' [pseud.] (London, 1929), Gertrude M. Williams (ib. [1931]), T. Besterman (ib., 1934), A. H. Nethercot (2 vols., ib., 1960–1963), and C. P. Ramaswani Aiyar (Delhi, 1963). The numerous periodical publications of the Theosophical Society include Theosophist (Madras, 1879 ff.) and the Theosophical Quarterly (35 vols., New York, 1903–38). Annie Besant in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 300–4, s.v. 'Theosophical Society'; P. Oltramare, ib., pp. 304–15, s.v.; J. Brugerette in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 540–52, s.v. 'Théosophie'.

THEOTOKION (Gk. θεοτοκίον). In the E. Church, a stanza of liturgical hymnography addressed to the BVM (*Theotokos). The concluding verse in a series of *troparia usually takes the form of a theotokion.

THEOTOKOS (Gk. Θεοτόκος, Lat. Deipara), the 'God-bearer', title of the BVM. The word was used of the Virgin by the Greek Fathers from *Origen onwards (perh. even by *Hippolytus) and increasingly became a popular term of devotion. In 429 it was attacked by *Nestorius and his supporters as incompatible with the full humanity of Christ, and the word 'Christotokos' proposed in its place. It found, however, a zealous champion in St. *Cyril of Alexandria and was formally upheld at the Councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451). Henceforward its orthodoxy was generally undisputed in the Church. In the W. the usual equivalent in practice was not Deipara, which corresponded to it etymologically, but Dei Genitrix ('Mother of God'), with its somewhat different emphasis.

J. H. *Newman, Select Treatises of St. Athanasius (ed. 2, 1881), ii, 204–15. F. J. Dölger in Antike und Christentum, i (1929), pp. 118–23 ['Zum Theotokos-Namen']; H. Rahner, S.J., 'Hippolyt von Rom als Zeuge für den Ausdruck Θεοτόκος' in Z.K.T., lix (1935), pp. 73–81; cf. id., ib., lx (1936), pp. 577–90.

THERAPEUTAE (Gk. θεραπευταί, 'physicians', 'devotees', hence 'those who worship God'), a pre-Christian monastic community of Egyptian Jewish ascetics. The only real authority for their practice and beliefs is *Philo's De Vita Contemplativa, where they are contrasted with the *Essenes, who lived a more active life. They were severe in their discipline, abjured money, and lived in seclusion near Alexandria and above Lake Mareotis. They prayed at sunrise and at sunset; devoted themselves assiduously to the allegorical study of the OT; and met together only for Sabbath-worship and during the great festival corresponding to Pentecost, when bands of men and women danced and sang throughout the night. Virtually nothing is known of their history. Their interest lies largely in their being an example of a pre-Christian monastic system. *Eusebius (H.E., II. xvii) mistakenly regarded them as a Christian sect.

F. C. *Conybeare (ed.), Philo: About the Contemplative Life, or the Fourth Book of the Treatise concerning Virtues (1895; text, with defence of its genuineness). P. E. Lucius, Die Therapeuten und ihre Stellung in der Geschichte der Askese. Eine kritische Untersuchung der Schrift De Vita Contemplativa (Strassburg, 1879; maintained that Philo's treatise was a 3rd-cent. Christian forgery). P. Wendland, 'Die Therapeuten und die philonische Schrift vom beschaulichen Leben' in Jahrbücher für classische Philologie, Supplementband, xxii (1896), pp. 693–772. G. Vermes, 'Essenes—Therapeutai—Qumran' in Durham University Journal, liii (1960), pp. 97–115; H. G. Schönfeld, 'Zum Begriff "Therapeutai" bei Philo von Alexandrien' in Revue de Qumran, iii (1961–2), pp. 219–240; G. Vermes, 'Essenes and Therapeutai', ib., pp. 495–504. J. *Moffatt in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 315–19, with bibl.

THERESA OF ÁVILA, St. See Teresa of Ávila, St.

THÉRÈSE OF LISIEUX, St. See Teresa, St., of Lisieux.

THERMARION (Gk. θερμάριον). In the E. Church, a vessel for the warm water used in the Eucharistic rite for mixing with the species of wine after its consecration and in the washing of altars at their dedication.

THESSALONIANS, Epistles to the. The two Epp. were most probably written by St. Paul from Corinth on his first visit to the city (c. 51) and are the earliest of his letters, unless it be argued that Gal. was written before them. A notable feature of the First Epistle, remarkable for the affectionate solicitude of the Apostle for his converts, is his desire to set their minds at rest on the fate of the dead members of the community. He assures them that, at the Second Coming of Christ, those who have died in the Lord will rise first and then, together with the living, be united to Christ; he declines, however, to make pronouncements on the time and circumstances of these events, but bids his readers watch and be sober.

The Second Epistle, following shortly afterwards, was also occasioned by the eschatological preoccupations of the Thessalonians, many of whom had become over-excited by their belief in the immediately impending *Parousia and neglected their ordinary duties. Paul reminds them of his former teaching, according to which the apostasy and the 'Son of Perdition' (see Antichrist) must come first, but teaches that there is still something or someone 'that restraineth' (2. 6, τὸ κατέχον; 2. 7, ὁ κατέχων). This has been very differently interpreted; the most widely accepted critical explanation regards the term as referring to the Roman Empire under Claudius, whereas in the more traditional view it applies to a supernatural power, such as e.g. St. *Michael.

The authenticity of the First Epistle, once questioned by F. C. *Baur, is now generally accepted. That of the Second Epistle is still rejected by some scholars, despite its early attestation as one of St. Paul's letters by the time of St. *Irenaeus and its place in the *Muratorian Canon as well as in *Marcion's collection. The chief objections are the alleged incompatibility of the eschatological teaching of the two epp. and their different tone, particularly in view of the fact that, if both are genuine, they must have been written the one shortly after the other.

The more valuable Patristic commentaries include those of St. John *Chrysostom (PG, lxii, 391–500); *Theodore of Mopsuestia (fragments, ib., lxvi, 931–6) *Theodoret (ib., lxxxii, 628–73) and *John of Damascus (ib., xcv, 905–29); further list in D.T.C., cited below. Modern commentaries include those of J. *Calvin (Strassburg, 1540; modern Eng. tr., 1961) and J. *Jewel (London, 1583); also those of G. G. Findlay (Camb. Bib., 1891; revised commentary for Camb. Bib., Gk. text, 1904), G. Milligan (Cambridge, 1908), E. von *Dobschütz (K.E.K., x, ed. 7, 1909), M. *Dibelius (Hb. N.T., iii, pt. 2, 1911, with Philippians, pp. 1–43), J. E. Frame (I.C.C., 1912), A. Plummer (2 vols., London, 1918), E. J. Bicknell (West. Comm., 1932), W. Neil (Moff. Comm., 1950), B. Rigaux, O.F.M. (Études Bibliques, 1956), C. Masson (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, xi a; Neuchâtel, 1957), L. Morris (New London Commentaries, 1959), D. E. H. Whiteley (New Clar. Bib., 1969), and A. L. Moore (New Cent. Bib., 1969). F. C. Baur, Paulus, der Apostel Jesu Christi. Sein Leben und Wirken, seine Briefe und seine Lehre (1845), pp. 480–99 (Eng. tr., vol. ii, 1875, pp. 85–97). W. *Wrede, Die Echtheit des zweiten Thessalonicherbriefs (T.U., xxiv, Hft. 2; 1903). W. Hadorn, Die Abfassung der Thessalonicherbriefe in der Zeit der dritten Missionsreise des Paulus (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xxiv, Hftt. 2–3; 1919). L. M. Dewailly, O.P., La Jeune Église de Thessalonique (Lectio divina, xxxvii; 1963). C. H. Giblin, S.J., The Threat to Faith. An exegetical and theological Re-examination of 2 Thessalonians 2 (Analecta Biblica, xxxi; 1967). D. Buzy-A. Burnot in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 573–610, s.v. 'Thessaloniciens (Épitres aux)'.

THESSALONICA. The modern Salonica in Macedonia, it was founded c. 315 B.C. by Cassander, perhaps on the site of the ancient Thermae, and called after his wife, Thessalonica (step-sister of Alexander the Great). Under the Romans it became the virtual capital of the province and an important centre of trade. In the first Civil War it was the headquarters of Pompey and the Senate. Its rulers were known as 'politarchs' (cf. Acts 17. 6). In A.D. 50 or 51 St. *Paul visited the city, preached on three 'Sabbaths' in the synagogue, and founded the second Christian community in Europe, chiefly from the Greeks and proselytes (Acts 17), which was renowned for its orthodoxy and steadfastness in the succeeding period. (For his two letters to the *Thessalonians, see previous entry.) Their early martyrs included St. Agape, with her sisters Chionia and Irene, St. Agathopus, and St. Demetrius (later the patron of the city). Acc. to *Origen (on Rom. 16. 23), the first Bp. of Thessalonica was Gaius (cf. 1 Cor. 1. 14, Acts 19. 29). In the late 4th or early 5th cent. the creation of a Papal vicariate of Thessalonica enabled Rome to retain ecclesiastical control of Illyria, which had been transferred politically to the Eastern Empire. In 732 *Leo III, the Isaurian, made Thessalonica and all Illyrian sees dependent on the Patriarchate of *Constantinople.

Notable Abps. of later date included St. Joseph, brother of St. *Theodore of Studios, Basil of Achrida (1145–c. 1169), Eustathius of Thessalonica (d. c. 1193) and *Gregory Palamas. From 1430 to 1912 Thessalonica was governed by the Turks, and many of its beautiful churches, which still preserve much of their old mosaic work, were turned into mosques. Since 1912 the city has again been Greek. It is the seat of a Greek Orthodox metropolitan. A Latin Vicariate Apostolic was established in 1926.

C. Diehl–M. Le Tournai–H. Saladin, Les Monuments chrétiens de Salonique (Monuments de l'art byzantin, iv; text + vol. of plates, 1918). L. *Duchesne, 'L'Illyricum ecclésiastique' in B.Z., i (1892), pp. 531–50; S. L. Greenslade, 'The Illyrian Churches and the Vicariate of Thessalonica, 378–95' in J.T.S., xlvi (1945), pp. 17–30. A. E. Vacalopoulos, A History of Thessaloniki, tr. into Eng. by T. F. Carney (Thessalonica, 1963). E. Oberhummer in P.W., 2te Reihe, vi (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 143–63.

THEUDAS. The leader of an unsucessful insurrection, mentioned in a speech attributed to *Gamaliel in Acts 5. 36. The reference raises two difficulties: (1) Josephus (Ant. XXV. v. 1), the only other ancient writer to mention Theudas, describes an insurrection by a leader of this name in A.D. 45 or 46; this is considerably later than the time at which Gamaliel is represented as speaking. (2) The passage in Acts clearly states that Theudas raised his rebellion before the rebellion of Judas of Galilee, which was 'in the days of the taxing', i.e. A.D. 6 or 7. Biblical critics have sometimes explained this mistake as due to an inaccurate use by St. Luke of the passage in Josephus which describes the execution of the sons of Judas of Galilee after the rebellion of Theudas. This hypothesis involves supposing that Acts was written after the publication of Josephus's Antiquities, c. A.D. 94, unless St. Luke was following a source later used by Josephus.

M. Krenkel, Josephus und Lukas (1894), pp. 162–74. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, ii (1922), pp. 312 (H. Windisch), and 356 (H. J. Cadbury and Editors). S. J. Case in D.A.C., ii (1918), p. 575 f., with bibl. reff.

THIERRY OF CHARTRES (d. after 1151), medieval philosopher and theologian. A Breton by birth and a younger brother of *Bernard of Chartres, he became a 'Magister' of the school of *Chartres in 1121 and c. 1124 went to *Paris, where he counted *John of Salisbury among his pupils. In 1136 he became Archdeacon of Dreux and in 1141 succeeded *Gilbert de la Porrée as Archdeacon and Chancellor of Chartres. In 1148 he took part in the synod of *Reims which condemned Gilbert and also attended the Diet of Frankfurt in the following year. At some date between 1151 and 1156 he retired into a monastery, prob. *Cistercian, and nothing further is known of his life.

Thierry of Chartres was one of the leading and most original exponents of the Platonist tendencies of the school of Chartres. In his treatise 'De Sex Dierum Operibus' he interpreted the Genesis account of creation acc. to *Plato's 'Timaeus', regarding the Divine form as the form of all things ('forma divina omnium rerum forma est'), without, however, understanding the Platonic formulae in a *Pantheistic sense. In the work of creation he assigned the four *Aristotelian causes to the Persons of the *Trinity, the Father being the efficient cause, the Son the formal, and the Holy Ghost—also identified with Plato's world-soul—the final cause, whereas Divinely created matter was the material cause. In his commentaries on *Boethius's 'De Trinitate' he further developed his Trinitarian doctrine, tending here to interpret it in a rationalistic way as capable of being deduced from the consideration of the unity, the Father, which leads to equality, the Son, and thence to the bond between the two, the Holy Ghost. He also wrote a commentary on Cicero's 'De Inventione' and made a collection of texts for the study of the seven liberal arts known as the 'Heptateuchon'.

Thierry's 'De Sex Dierum Operibus' was ed. by B. Hauréau in Notices et extraits des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, xxxii (pt. 2; 1888), pp. 167–86; repr. in id. (ed.), Notices et extraits de quelques manuscrits latins de la Bibliothèque Nationale, i (1890), pp. 45–70; also ed. by N. M. Haring in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxii (1956), pp. 184–200, with full discussion, pp. 137–82. The three commentaries on Boethius's De Trinitate have also been ed. by N. M. Haring, ib.: the 'Glossa' (Anonymus Berolinensis), xxiii (1957), pp. 266–325, with introd., pp. 257–65; the 'Lectiones' (Paris Bibl. Nat. MS. Lat. 14489), xxv (1959), pp. 124–226, with introd. pp. 113–23; and the 'Librum hunc', xxvii (1961), pp. 80–134, together with a fragment of a commentary on Boethius's De Hebdomadibus, pp. 134–6, and introd., pp. 65–79. Extracts from his commentary on Cicero's 'De Inventione' have been pr. by W. H. D. Suringar, Historia Critica Scholiastarum Latinorum, i (Leyden, 1834), pp. 213–52; P. Delhaye in Mediaeval Studies, xi (1949), pp. 97–9; N. M. Haring, ib., xxvi (1964), pp. 281–6, with introd., pp. 271–80; and Mary Dickey in Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, vi (1968), pp. 1–41, passim. The Prologue of the 'Heptateuchon' ed. E. Jeauneau in Mediaeval Studies, xvi (1954), pp. 171–5; the plan is pr. and discussed in A. Clerval, Les Écoles de Chartres au moyen-âge (1895), pp. 220–3. See also pp. 254–9, and on his followers pp. 188–94. A. Vernet, 'Une Épitaphe inédite de Thierry de Chartres' in Recueil de travaux offerts à M. Clovis Brunel, ii (Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société de l'École des Chartes, xii; 1955), pp. 660–70. Überweg, ii, pp. 233–5, with further bibl. p. 704; Manitius, iii, pp. 198–202; E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 145–8, with bibl. p. 621 f.

THIRD ORDERS. Religious organizations affiliated usually to one of the *Mendicant orders, and so called to distinguish them from the First and Second Orders, of fully professed men and women, respectively. A member of a Third Order may be either living in the world, and is then usually called a *Tertiary' (q.v.), or in community. The latter, or 'Regular Tertiaries', date from the later 13th cent., and arose from the desire of great numbers of 'Secular Tertiaries' to lead a community life. At first these convents followed the special rule for seculars of their respective orders; but from the 15th cent. many of them took vows. Today all members of the regulated Third Orders live under vows, and, in the case of nuns, are often as strictly enclosed as their Sisters of the Second Orders. Both Brothers (or Fathers) and Sisters of the Third Orders devote themselves to all kinds of works of mercy, esp. nursing, teaching, and missionary activities. The most important Third Orders belong to the religious families of *Franciscans and *Dominicans, but others, e.g. *Carmelites, *Servites, and *Augustinian Friars, also have a large number of convents of Regular Tertiaries. For the rules and practices of 'Secular Tertiaries', see entry Tertiary.

THIRD ROME. A title given esp. by Russian Christians to Moscow in the belief that the privileges which formerly belonged to *Rome and *Constantinople (the 'New Rome') had been committed to the city. The first instance of its use appears to be in a letter of the monk Philotheus to the Grand Duke Basil III (1505–33).

THIRLBY, THOMAS (1506?–70), successively Bp. of *Westminster (1540), *Norwich (1550), and *Ely (1554). A Cambridge man who was favoured by T. *Cranmer, he became a chaplain to *Henry VIII, and first and only bishop of the new see of Westminster (suppressed 1550). In 1549 he opposed the First Prayer Book of *Edward VI and the Act of *Uniformity, but accepted them when passed, despite his strong Catholic sympathies. He was naturally in high favour under *Mary, but under *Elizabeth I refused the Oath of Supremacy and was deposed and afterwards imprisoned.

T. F. Shirley, Thomas Thirlby, Tudor Bishop (C.H.S., 1964). T. Cooper in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 135–8, s.v., with reff.

THIRLWALL, CONNOP (1797–1875), historian and Bp. of *St. Davids. After a very precocious childhood he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1818. After studying law in Lincoln's Inn he entered on an ecclesiastical career, and in 1828 was ordained priest. In 1832 he was appointed assistant tutor at Trinity College, but in 1834 he was compelled to resign owing to his denunciation of compulsory attendance at chapel in the course of the controversy over the admission of Dissenters to the universities. In the same year he was offered the living of Kirby Underdale, Humberside, where he began his chief work, the History of Greece (8 vols., 1835–44). In 1840 Lord Melbourne appointed him Bp. of St. Davids. He learned Welsh, restored Church life in his diocese, and took part in all the ecclesiastical questions of the day in a liberal and unbiased spirit. He supported the grant to *Maynooth (1845) and the removal of the civil disabilities of the Jews (1848), and urged the disestablishment of the Irish Church (1869). He also permitted Bp. J. W. *Colenso to preach in his diocese. His important 'Charges', delivered between 1842 and 1872 (publd. in Remains Literary and Theological, 3 vols., 1877–8), deal with these and other subjects such as the question of Essays and Reviews*, the *Ritualist controversy, and the *Vatican Council.

Thirlwall's Letters, Literary and Theological, ed. J. J. S. Perowne–L. Stokes (London, 1881); his Letters to a Friend [a young Welshman] ed. A. P. *Stanley (ib., 1881). Modern life by John Connop Thirlwall (great-great-great-nephew) (London, 1936). G. Rees, 'Connop Thirlwall: Liberal Anglican' in Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales, xiv (1964), pp. 66–76. J. W. Clark in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 138–41.

THIRTEEN ARTICLES, The (1538). A MS. in Latin entitled A Book containing Divers Articles de Unitate Dei et Trinitate Personarum, de Peccato Originali, &c. which was discovered among some papers that belonged to Abp. T. *Cranmer. It appears to have been drawn up as a basis for negotiations, or was perhaps a record of doctrines actually agreed upon, between a small body of conservative *Lutheran divines, invited to England by *Henry VIII in 1538, and an English committee of three bishops and four doctors. The articles were closely modelled upon the *Augsburg Confession.

Text in C. Hardwick, A History of the Artıcles of Religion (1851), pp. 251–63, with discussion, pp. 60–73. See also bibl. to Cranmer, T.

THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES, The. The set of doctrinal formulae finally accepted by the C of E in its attempt to define its dogmatic position in relation to the controversies of the 16th cent. The earlier stages were the *Ten Articles (1536), the *Bishops' Book (1537), the *Six Articles (1539), the *King's Book (1543), and the *Forty-Two Articles (1553). In 1563 Convocation, by slightly revising the last named, issued the first text of the Thirty-Nine Articles. But, before they were printed, No. 29 ('Of the Wicked which eat not the Body of Christ') was excised, probably to conciliate the Romanists, and a preamble to No. 20, asserting the authority of the Church to decree rites and ceremonies, was added. Both alterations are attributed to *Elizabeth I personally. In 1571 No. 29 was restored, as the Romanists had now finally seceded. In their final form the Articles gained synodical approval through Convocation.

The Thirty-Nine Articles are not a statement of Christian doctrine in the form of a creed, nor the exposition of a creed already accepted. They are, rather, short summaries of dogmatic tenets, each article dealing with some point raised in current controversies and laying down in general terms the Anglican view. Though not ostensibly vague, they avoid unduly narrow definition. Much variety of interpretation has been put upon many of them without improperly straining the text, and probably this licence was deliberately intended by their framers. They seek esp. to define the Anglican position with regard to medieval corruptions of Catholic teaching, to orthodox RC doctrine, to *Calvinism, and to *Anabaptist teachings. Among typical points it may be noticed that Art. 28 excludes both *Transubstantiation (in the sense in which it is there defined) and *Zwinglian Eucharistic doctrine, but can be interpreted in terms either of a doctrine of the *Real Presence or of *Receptionism. Art. 6 declares that 'Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation'; the Creeds are to be accepted because they may be proved by Scripture (Art. 8); and General Councils are declared to be not of themselves infallible (Art. 21). Predestination is discussed in Art. 17, the masterly ambiguity of which is seen when it is compared with other professions of faith such as the Presbyterian *Westminster Confession (1647). The position of the Sovereign and civil power in relation to the Church is set out in the concluding Articles.

Subscription to the Articles has never been required of any but the clergy and, until the 19th cent., members of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Since 1865 the clergy have been required only to affirm that the doctrine of the C of E as set forth in the BCP and the Articles is agreeable to the Word of God, and to undertake not to teach in contradiction of them, instead of giving a more particular subscription as before.

E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1896–7); B. J. Kidd, The Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1899). E. J. Bicknell, A Theological Introduction to the Thirty-Nine Articles (1919; ed. 3 by H. J. Carpenter, 1955; chiefly of doctrinal interest). For *Tractarian views on the Articles, J. H. *Newman, Tract 90 (1841), and A. P. *Forbes, The Thirty-Nine Articles (1867).

THIRTY YEARS WAR, The (1618–48). The series of religious and political wars fought out in Central Europe in the 17th cent. Foremost among its manifold causes were the decay of the *Holy Roman Empire and the continued religious unrest after the Peace of *Augsburg in 1555. The war began with the revolt of the Bohemians against the Emperor, and the '*Defenestration of Prague'. The first part of the war (1618–23) was carried on chiefly in Bohemia and the Palatinate. The Bohemians, who had set up Frederick V of the Palatinate, the so called 'Winter King', in opposition to Emp. *Ferdinand II, were defeated in the Battle at the White Hill (1620) by the armies of the Catholic League under the Imperial general, Tilly, and Maximilian of Bavaria. Frederick was put to the ban of the Empire, Maximilian conquered the Upper Palatinate, and this stage of the war ended with the capture of the Calvinistic stronghold of Heidelberg by Tilly (1622) and the restoration of Catholicism in the conquered territories.

War broke out anew in 1623. Shifting to Lower Saxony, it was conducted with Dutch and English support, with Wallenstein as the chief leader on the Imperial side. After his victory, in 1626, over Ernest of Mansfeld, and Christian IV of Denmark's defeat at the hands of Tilly (1626), the Peace of Lübeck was concluded in 1629. In the same year the Emperor issued the Edict of Restitution which ordered the restoration of all ecclesiastical property unlawfully appropriated by the Protestants since 1552. Its strict execution roused much opposition among the Protestants, while many Catholics were alienated from the Emperor by the extravagances of Wallenstein's army. In 1630 Wallenstein himself was dismissed.

The third stage of the war, which now became a European conflict, began with the landing of *Gustavus Adolphus in Pomerania in 1630. Encouraged by Cardinal A. J. du P. *Richelieu, whose anti-Hapsburg policy led him to support all opponents of the Imperial power at Vienna, the Swedish invasion was a mainly political adventure, though it incidentally saved German Protestantism. In 1631 Tilly conquered Magdeburg, but he was defeated in the same year at Breitenfeld and killed in 1632. Wallenstein, who had been recalled by the Emperor, was defeated in the battle at Lützen, but Gustavus Adolphus himself was killed (1632). The next two years were taken up with negotiations, while the Protestant leader, Bernard of Weimar, took Ratisbon and laid waste Bavaria without opposition from Wallenstein, who was murdered in 1634. In the same year Imperial and Bavarian troops gained a decisive victory at Nördlingen, which led to the treaty of Prague (1635) between the Emperor and the majority of the Protestant estates.

The Swedes, however, continuing to resist, were now openly joined by France and the war entered on its final and most violent stage (1635–48). After years of fighting with varying success in E. and W. Germany, the French position became increasingly advantageous, esp. owing to the weakening of Spain by internal discord. The demand for peace in Germany grew increasingly insistent and in 1644 negotiations were opened with the French at Münster and with Sweden at Osnabrück, and the Peace of *Westphalia (q.v.) was at last concluded in 1648. As a result the ecclesiastical state of the Empire as it was in 1624 was restored, except for the secularization—a term then used for the first time—of a considerable part of ecclesiastical property, which was distributed among the several powers as compensation for their participation in the war. The decrees of the Religious Peace of Augsburg were reinforced and extended to the *Calvinists, and Catholics and Protestants given equal political rights.

Among the chief effects of the Thirty Years War was an enormous strengthening of the power of France. The corresponding weakening of Germany and Spain hastened the final breaking-up of the Empire and decided the future of Europe in succeeding centuries. The religious, moral, and economic anarchy which it produced in Central Europe had the same far-reaching consequences, and accounts for much in the subsequent religious and social developments on the Continent.

Important docc. pr. in the collection of Briefe und Acten zur Geschichte des Dreissigjährigen Krieges in den Zeiten des vorwaltenden Einflusses der Wittelsbacher . . . herausgegeben durch die histor. Commission bei der Königl. Academie der Wissenschaften (11 vols., Munich, 1870–1909). Modern studies include A. Gindely, Geschichte des Dreissigjährigen Krieges (4 vols., 1869–80); also a shorter study by the same author with the same title (Das Wissen der Gegenwart, i, iii, v; 1882; Eng. tr., 2 vols., New York, 1884; London, 1885); S. R. Gardiner, The Thirty Years War (Epochs of Modern History, 1874); M. Ritter, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Gegenreformation und des Dreissigjährigen Krieges (1555–1648), iii (1908); H. G. R. Reade, Sidelights on the Thirty Years War (3 vols., 1924); C. V. Wedgwood, The Thirty Years War (1938); G. Pagès, La Guerre de Trente Ans (1939; Eng. tr., 1970); G. Franz, Der Dreissigjährige Krieg und das deutsche Volk (1940; ed. 3, 1961); S. H. Steinberg, The 'Thirty Years War' and the Conflict for European Hegemony 1600–1660 (1966), esp. pp. 91–122. A. W. Ward in C.M.H., iv (1906), pp. 1–255 and 364–433, with bibl. to date, pp. 801–72, incl. good discussion of sources; E. A. Beller in New Cambridge Modern History, iv (1970), pp. 306–58. H. G. Koenigsberger in H. Trevor-Roper (ed.), The Age of Expansion [1968], pp. 143–74, with bibl. p. 346.

THOLUCK, FRIEDRICH AUGUST GOTTREU (1799–1877), German Protestant theologian. He was educated at Breslau and Berlin, where he studied esp. oriental languages, but under the influence of *Pietist friends and J. A. W. *Neander he turned to theology. From 1820 to 1826 he lectured at Berlin and in 1826 became professor at Halle university, where he remained to his death, except for a short appointment as embassy chaplain at Rome from 1827 to 1829. In 1823 appeared his influential work Die Lehre von der Sünde und dem Versöhner, oder die wahre Weihe des Zweiflers, which was widely translated and did much to check the spread of Rationalism in Germany. It was followed by a commentary on Romans (1824), a collection of the writings of oriental mystics (Blütensammlung aus der morgenländischen Mystik, 1825), and further commentaries on St. John (1827), the Sermon on the Mount (1833), and Hebrews (1836), which are written from a moralist and apologetic rather than an exegetical point of view. His other works include the devotional Stunden christlicher Andacht (1839), Die Propheten und ihre Weissagungen (1861), which was highly valued by E. B. *Pusey, and a history of Rationalism (1865). Tholuck, who through his pastoral work among the students exercised a profound influence on his contemporaries, was a representative of the '*Vermittlungstheologie' (q.v.), combining personal piety with far-reaching disregard of dogma. Despite their theological divergences, he was a lifelong friend of Pusey, who had become aquainted with Tholuck in 1825, and whose first work, The Theology of Germany (1828), is largely based on Tholuck's ideas.

Gesammelte Werke (11 vols., Gotha, 1862–73). Life by L. Witte (2 vols., Bielefeld and Leipzig, 1884–6); briefer sketches by M. Kähler (Halle, 1877) and C. H. Rennecke (Rostock, 1878). M. Schellbach, Tholucks Predigt. Ihre Grundlage und ihre Bedeutung für die heutige Praxis (Theologische Arbeiten, iii; 1956). K. Toiviainen, August Tholuckin Teologinen Antropologia (Suomalaisen Teologisen Kirjallisuusseuran Julkaisuja, lxxx; Helsinki, 1968), with summary in German. M. Kähler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 695–702.

THOMAS, St., Apostle. He is mentioned as one of the Twelve in all four Gospels. In St. John, where his name is translated as Δίδυμος (Gk., 'twin'), he appears in three episodes, viz. offering to die with Jesus on His way to Bethany (Jn. 11. 16), interrupting the last discourse with his question 'We know not whither thou goest, how know we the way?' (14. 5), and, lastly, doubting the Resurrection unless he were to touch the wounds of the Risen Lord (20. 25–8). After Christ's appearance he confesses his faith in the words 'My Lord and my God' and is thus the first to confess explicitly His Divinity. Acc. to an early tradition mentioned by *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., III. i) and others, he evangelized the Parthians, whereas another tradition, derived from the Gnostic 'Acts of *Thomas' (where he is called 'Judas Thomas', as generally by the Syrians), asserts that he brought the Gospel to *India, where he was martyred. The Syrian Christians of *Malabar, who call themselves 'Christians of St. Thomas', have a tradition which they strongly defend that they were evangelized by the Apostle, who later was martyred and buried at Mylapore, nr. Madras. The 'Thomas Cross', an ancient stone cross (6th–8th cent.) with a problematical inscription, is preserved in the church which marks the place where his body is held to have rested before its translation to *Edessa in the 4th cent. His relics are now supposed to be at Ortona in the Abruzzi, where they are still venerated. In the *Roman Martyrology the place where he died is given as Calamina. As yet it has not been identified, but it has sometimes been connected with Mylapore. Feast day: 3 July in the RC Church, the ASB, and the Syrian Church; 21 Dec. in the BCP and some modern Anglican rites (and formerly in the RC Church), 6 Oct. in the Greek Church.

For the several apocryphal writings that have circulated under his name, see the following entries.

For discussions of the evidence in the NT, see commentaries on the Gospels. For later traditions, see bibl. to Thomas, Acts of.

THOMAS, Acts of (Περίοδοι Θωμᾶ). An apocryphal book of great length which recounts in 13 'Acts' the missionary activities of the Apostle Thomas ('Judas Thomas'). It tells how Gundaphorus, one of the kings of India, wishing for a magnificent palace, sent his merchant Abbanes to Syria to obtain a skilled architect. At *Jerusalem Abbanes met Jesus, the carpenter's son, who recommended to him His 'slave', Thomas, and Thomas agreed to go back with him to Syria.

Thomas gave away to the poor the large sums of money with which Gundaphorus provided him, and soon convinced him that his money was being used to build a far nobler palace in heaven than the earthly building for which it had been intended. Gundaphorus and many others were thereupon converted. After further missionary work, accompanied by healing miracles, in the neighbouring lands of King Misdaeus, Thomas was persecuted for his success in persuading Mygdonia to cease marriage relationships with her husband, Charisius, and finally was pierced with spears. The Apostle's bones were taken back shortly afterwards to Mesopotamia. Contained in the 'Acts' are four poems,—an 'Ode to Sophia' (6, 7), two hymns relating to Baptism (27) and the Eucharist (50), and a famous Hymn to the Redeemer (108–13; formerly, but probably wrongly, called the 'Hymn of the Soul' and now more usually known as the 'Hymn (or Song) of the Pearl').

The work, which was in origin a *Gnostic composition and apparently written before the middle of the 3rd cent., survives in several Syriac and Greek MSS. The complicated relation of the Syriac and Greek texts is held by most scholars to point to a Syriac original. If so, the most likely place of origin is *Edessa. Parts of the Acts survive also in Latin and Ethiopic; and there exists also an Armenian version. It would appear that from the surviving texts most of the Gnostic elements have been removed to make the work acceptable to Catholic readers, though its origin is betrayed, e.g., by its continual depreciation of marriage.

Syriac text ed. W. Wright, Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles (1871), i, pp. 171–333; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 146–298; Eng. tr. of older fragments by Mrs. Agnes Smith Lewis, The Mythological Acts of the Apostles (Horae Semiticae, iv; 1904), pp. 223–41. Further Eng. tr., based on that of Wright, with introd. and commentary, by A. F. J. Klijn (Supplement to Novum Testamentum, v; 1962). Best ed. of the Gk. text in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, ii (pt. 2; Leipzig, 1903), pp. 99–291. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 364–438. Germ. tr., with introd., by G. Bornkamm in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 297–372; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 425–531. A. A. Bevan, The Hymn of the Soul contained in the Syriac Acts of St. Thomas (re-edited with Eng. tr.; Texts and Studies, v, No. 3, Cambridge, 1897); G. Hoffmann, 'Zwei Hymnen der Thomasakten' in Z.N.T.W., iv (1903), pp. 273–309; J. E. Ménard, 'Le Chant de la perle' in Rev. S.R., xlii (1968), pp. 289–325. F. C. *Burkitt, 'The Original Language of the Acts of Judas Thomas' in J.T.S., i (1900), pp. 280–90; id., 'Another Indication of the Syriac Origin of the Acts of Thomas', ib., iii (1902), pp. 94–6. G. E. Medlycott, India and the Apostle Thomas. An Inquiry, with a critical analysis of the Acta Thomae (1905), pp. 213–97. F. Wilhelm, Deutsche Legenden und Legendare. Texte und Untersuchungen zu ihrer Geschichte im Mittelalter (1907). J. Dahlmann, S.J., Die Thomas-Legende und die ältesten historischen Beziehungen des Christentums zum fernen Osten im Lichte der indischen Altertumskunde (Stimmen aus Maria Laach, Ergänzungsheft, cvii; 1912). J. N. Farquhar, 'The Apostle Thomas in North India' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, x (1926), pp. 80–111; id., 'The Apostle Thomas in South India', ib., xi (1927), pp. 20–50. G. Bornkamm, Mythos und Legende in den apokryphen Thomas-Akten (1933). R. H. *Connolly, 'A Negative Golden Rule in the Syriac Acts of Thomas' in J.T.S., xxxvi (1935), pp. 353–7. D. S. Margoliouth, 'Some Problems of the "Acta Judae Thomae" ' in Essays in Honour of Gilbert Murray (1936), pp. 249–59. A. Dihle, 'Neues zur Thomas-Tradition' in Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, vi (1963), pp. 54–70. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 579–84; J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), p. 139 f., with bibl.; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 37–41. G. Bornkamm in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 316–23, s.v. 'Thomas (1)'.

THOMAS, Apocalypse of. An apocryphal eschatological treatise, probably written by a *Manichaean at the end of the 4th cent. and referred to in the *Gelasian Decree. It had long been lost, but was rediscovered early in this cent. and edited by P. Bihlmeyer in 1911. This Latin text is probably the original. There exist several Anglo-Saxon versions.

Text ed. on the basis of MS. Monacensis Clm 4563 by P. Bihlmeyer, O.S.B., 'Un Texte non interpolé de l'Apocalypse de Thomas' in R. Bén., xxviii (1911), pp. 270–82. It was also ed. by M. Förster from two Anglo-Saxon revisions of the text in 'Der Vercelli-Codex CXVII nebst Abdruck einiger altenglischer Homilien der Handschrift' in Festgabe für Lorenz Morsbach (Studien zur englischen Philologie, 50; 1913), pp. 20–179; this text being pr. pp. 116–37. A reconstructed text is the basis of the trs. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 555–62. See also id., 'Revelatio Thomae' in J.T.S., xi (1909–10), pp. 288–90 A. de Santos Otero in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), p. 568 f.; Eng. tr., ii (1965), p. 798 f., with Eng. tr. of text from Bihlmeyer, pp. 799–803.

THOMAS, Gospel of. This apocryphal Gospel, orig. written in Greek, was found in a Coptic version among the papyri dug up at *Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1945–6. It is now preserved in the Coptic Museum at Old Cairo. The Greek original perhaps dates from c. 150, the Coptic, which contains some additions, from c. 400. In its heading, the Gospel professes to have been written down by 'Didymus Judas Thomas'. It is not, like the canonical Gospels, historical in form, but consists of a series of pithy sayings and parabolic discourses of Jesus. Some of its 114 items have points of contact with the sayings in 'Q' (q.v.), though, where parallels exist, the sayings in Thomas are secondary. It has been thought possible that it preserves a few sayings of the Lord not found in the canonical Gospels which ultimately go back to genuine tradition; but its contents hardly warrant the extravagant claims made for it when it first became generally known in 1959. The Greek *Oxyrhynchus papyri, Nos. 1, 654 and 655, preserved fragments of a Greek text which agrees closely, though not exactly, with the Coptic version of the Gospel of Thomas found at Nag Hammadi. The work is apparently of Gnostic provenance.

The Coptic text was orig. issued in a photographic edition by Pahor Labib at Cairo in 1956. Ed. princeps of printed text, with Eng. tr., by A. Guillaumont and others, London, 1959. Coptic text, with German tr. and comm., by J. Leipoldt (T.U., ci; 1967). R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas (1960), with bibl. B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospel of Thomas (1961); H. E. W. Turner and H. Montefiore, Thomas and the Evangelists (Studies in Biblical Theology, xxxv; 1962). W. Schrage, Das Verhältnis des Thomas-Evangeliums zur Synoptischen Tradition und zu den Koptischen Evangelienübersetzungen (Beihefte zur Z.N.T.W., xxix; 1964). H. Puech in Schneemelcher, i (1959), pp. 199–223; Eng. tr., i (1963), pp. 278–307.

THOMAS, Infancy Gospel of. An apocryphal writing extant in two Greek recensions as well as in Aramaic, Ethiopic, Georgian, Latin, Slavonic and Syriac versions. It is probably not the work mentioned by St. *Hippolytus (Ref., v. 7) and *Origen (Hom. I in Luc.). It professes to record miracles performed by Christ in His childhood (in Greek text A between the ages of five and twelve; other versions vary considerably). The alleged miracles are primarily displays of power, often without theological point or moral justification, so that the Lord appears callous and irresponsible. They are probably drawn from folk-tales; one incident was reproduced by *Marcosian Gnostics (*Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., I. xx. 1) but appears also in the Testament of Our Lord in Galilee* (4) and so gives no certain clue to the date of the work.

The two Gk. texts and the Lat. version ed. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853), pp. 134–70; ed. 2 (1876), pp. 140–80; Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 49–65, with appendix from other sources, pp. 66–70 (but pp. 14–16 are now outdated). Eng. tr. of Gr. text A, with some other matter, and introd. by O. *Cullmann, in Schneemelcher, Eng. tr., i (1963), pp. 388–401. Syriac text ed., with Eng. tr., by W. Wright, Contributions to the Apocryphal Literature of the New Testament (1865), pp. 1–16 of the Syriac; Eng. tr., pp. 6–11. Gk. text also ed., with Fr. tr., by C. Michel–P. Peeters, S.J. (edd.), Evangiles apocryphes (Textes et Documents pour l'Etude du Christianisme; 1911), pp. 162–189, with introd., pp. xxiii–xxxii; Fr. tr. of Lat. and Syriac texts ib., ii (1914), pp. 290–311. M. R. James, 'The Gospel of Thomas' in J.T.S., xxx (1929), pp. 51–4.

THOMAS AQUINAS, St. (c. 1225–74), also 'Doctor Communis' and 'Doctor Angelicus', *Dominican philosopher and theologian. He was born at Roccasecca, the youngest son of Count Landulf of Aquino, who was related to the Emperor and the King of France. At the age of five he was sent to the neighbouring *Benedictine school at *Monte Cassino, where he was destined by his parents for the abbacy. In 1240 he proceeded to Naples to finish his arts course. Here he was attracted to the ideal of an intellectual apostolate and resolved to seek admission to the recently founded Dominican Order. His family, who strongly opposed his intention, held him prisoner for 15 months at Roccasecca, but without weakening his determination; and in April 1244 he joined the Order. From the autumn of 1245 until 1248 he was at *Paris, where he came under the powerful influence of St. *Albertus Magnus, who introduced him to *Aristotle; and in 1248 he accompanied Albert to the newly established Dominican studium generale at Cologne. (The chronology of this part of his life is, however, somewhat uncertain.) In 1252 he returned to Paris and became lecturer at the Dominican Convent of St.-Jacques. Here he wrote his 'Contra Impugnantes Dei Cultum' in defence of the Mendicant Orders, then being attacked by the secular doctors of the University of Paris, led by William of St.-Amour. He became Master of Theology in 1256. In 1259 he was sent to Italy, where he taught as 'lector curiae' at Anagni and Orvieto (1259–65), at Santa Sabina and the Dominican studium generale at Rome (1265–7), and at Viterbo (1267–1269). He was recalled to Paris in 1269. Here he combated the opposed philosophical doctrines of *Siger of Brabant, John *Peckham, and Stephen Tempier, Bp. of Paris. In 1272 he moved to Naples to set up a Dominican school, where he laboured hard at his 'Summa Theologica'. He died on 7 Mar. 1274 at the *Cistercian monastery of Fossanuova on his way to the Council of *Lyons. Several propositions drawn from his writings were condemned by Tempier in 1277, by Abp. *Kilwardby (a Dominican) in 1277, and by Abp. Peckham in 1284. The *Franciscan Order for a time forbade its members to study his works. In 1278 the General Chapter of the Dominicans officially imposed his teaching on the Order, and in 1323 he was canonized by *John XXII. His body rests at Toulouse. Feast day, 28 Jan. (formerly, 7 Mar.).

The extent of St. Thomas's writings, esp. in view of their compact thought and expression, is immense. From his first Paris period come several writings of less intrinsic importance, among them 'De Ente et Essentia' (1252–3; against *Avicebron), the 'Commentary on the Sentences' (1254–6, still influenced by the older Scholastic teaching), and the 'Quaestiones Disputatae de Veritate' (1256–9). The next group of writings embody his philosophy, which is expounded in the form of Commentaries esp. on Aristotle ('De Interpretatione', 'Analytica posteriora', 'Metaphysica', 'Ethica', 'De Anima', 'Parva Naturalia', 'De Generatione et Corruptione', 'Politica', and others). He also commented on the '*Liber de Causis' (prob. after 1268, q.v.), *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite ('De Divinis Nominibus') and *Boethius ('De Hebdomadibus', 'De Trinitate'). Much of his theology and spirituality is contained in his exegetical Commentaries on the Gospels (known as the 'Catena Aurea'), the Epistles, Isaiah, Jeremiah, the Psalms, and Job. His work found its culmination in the two 'Summae'. The earlier 'Summa contra Gentiles', of which the autograph survives in the *Vatican, was designed as a text-book for missionaries. Apparently written at the instigation of *Raymond of Peñafort, it contained a defence of natural theology against the Arabians. The '*Summa Theologica' (q.v.), the highest achievement of medieval theological systematization and the accepted basis of modern RC theology, was the latest of his works and unfinished at his death. The 'Quaestiones Disputatae' and 'Quaestiones Quodlibetales' go over parts of the ground of the 'Summae', often in fuller detail. Among St. Thomas's other writings are 'De Substantiis Separatis' (against Avicebron), 'De Unitate Intellectus contra Averroistas' (against Siger of Brabant), and 'De Regimine Principum' (partly spurious).

St. Thomas's philosophy received its characteristic shape under the influence of the recently recovered metaphysical writings of Aristotle. He thus carried to completion a process already well advanced by St. Albert. The way for the abandonment of much traditional Platonist teaching had, indeed, been already prepared in the previous century by the conceptualism of *Abelard and others. To secure a correct text of Aristotle, St. Thomas persuaded his friend, *William of Moerbecke, to revise the existing translations or prepare new ones. Yet St. Thomas was never rigidly bound by the dicta of Aristotle. And at a deeper level he continued to uphold many fundamental Platonist doctrines which had come down from St. *Augustine and Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite.

Fundamental in St. Thomas's teaching is his sharp distinction between reason and faith. If in a large area reason is paramount, many of the fundamental Christian verities (the Trinity, the Incarnation, the creation of the world in time, original sin, purgatory, the resurrection of the body, etc.) lie wholly beyond its province. But while such doctrines cannot be established by reason they must not be considered contrary to reason. Indeed, up to a point reason can often indicate their probability and rebut arguments designed to overthrow them. Such doctrines reach us through revelation, which is embodied in Scripture and in the consistent teaching of the Fathers. As their province is that of faith, where primacy (principalitas) belongs to the will, not to the intellect, their acceptance by the believer is a matter for moral decision. On the other hand, such truths as the existence of God, His eternity and simplicity, His creative power and providence, can be discovered by the natural reason altogether apart from revelation.

In his theory of knowledge, St. Thomas accepts the Aristotelian maxim that, since all knowledge presupposes an essential likeness between knower and known and man's nature is corporeal as well as intellectual, cognition necessarily sets out from sense-perception (nihil in intellectu quod non prius fuerit in sensu). This belief gave St. Thomas's arguments for the existence of God their characteristic shape. An argument to be valid for us must start from the facts of the natural world. It is true that, since essence and existence are identical in God, God's existence is a necessary consequence of His nature, i.e. for a purely intelligent being (the angels, or God Himself) the *ontological argument would be valid. But for the human intellect such an argument necessarily fails, since man cannot obtain that clear notion of God which the argument presupposes. On the other hand, it is possible to construct arguments of absolute cogency for the being of God on the basis of sense-perception. St. Thomas elaborates these with great detail, most fully in the 'Summa contra Gentiles' (I. 12 and 13) and the 'Summa Theologica'. For an account of these, see Quinque Viae.

Running through St. Thomas's system is the Aristotelian antithesis of potency and act. He held that the idea of 'primary matter' or pure potency, existing without form, was self-contradictory, a notion which even God could not bring into being. God, on the other hand, was 'pure act' (actus purus), since in Him every possible perfection was wholly realized. Intermediate in the scale of being were created things, composed of potency and act.

Closely related is the other Aristotelian antithesis of matter and form. Matter is the principle of individuation. While all the individuals in a species have the same form, the matter is proper to each particular individual. In the case of the angels, which are non-material beings, dwelling in the ninth and highest heaven, the empyreum or primum mobile, the normal principle of individuation is wanting. Hence acc. to St. Thomas, after *Avicenna, each angel is a separate species (quot sunt ibi individua, tot sunt ibi species).

Less original, but no less thoroughly elaborated, was St. Thomas's theology. The Incarnation and the Sacraments claimed his special interest. On controverted matters he tended to follow the tradition of his Order, and by the sharpened form which he imposed on Dominican tenets did much to propagate them. Against the Franciscans he maintained that the Incarnation would not have taken place apart from the Fall and that the BVM was not immaculately conceived. He paid much attention to the conditions governing Christ's human knowledge. He held that all seven Sacraments were instituted by Christ, that the Eucharist was the highest of them (sacramentum sacramentorum), and that as the ultimate purpose of the Sacrament of Order was the Eucharist, the Priesthood was the highest of the seven orders, and the Episcopate therefore not a separate order. For the elaboration of the doctrine of transubstantiation, which had been formally defined at the Fourth *Lateran Council of 1215 shortly before his time, he employed the Aristotelian philosophy of substance and accidents. The *concomitance of the Body and Blood of Christ in both Eucharistic species afforded theological justification for communion in one kind.

According to his disciple and confessor, Ptolemy of Lucca, writing between 1312 and 1317, St. Thomas composed the office for the newly instituted Feast of *Corpus Christi at the request of Pope Urban IV. This statement, however, does not accord with what is known of the history of the early texts of the office, and there must remain slight doubt whether St. Thomas composed the hymns '*Lauda Sion Salvatorem', '*Pange lingua gloriosi', and 'Verbum supernum prodiens'.

The RC Church has accepted the substance of St. Thomas's teaching as an authentic expression of doctrine. He was declared 'Doctor of the Church' by *Pius V in 1567. After a period of eclipse, a new era for Thomism was inaugurated by Leo XIII's bull Aeterni Patris (1879; q.v.), which enjoined his study on all theological students. In 1880 he was made patron of all Catholic Universities and on 29 June 1923, the sixth centenary of his canonization, his authority as a teacher was reiterated by *Pius XI in Studiorum Ducem. The *Codex (CIC, cans. 589. 1 and 1366. 2) makes the study of St. Thomas obligatory on all students of philosophy and theology. Among the classic exponents of Thomism were John *Capreolus ('Princeps Thomistarum'; c. 1380–1444), Thomas *Cajetan (1469–1534), Sylvester of Ferrara (1474–1528), and *John of St. Thomas (1589–1644).

The principal modern edd. of his works are those of Parma, 25 vols., 1852–75; the 'Vives' ed. by S. E. Frettè and others (34 vols., Paris, 1871–80), and the sumptuous critical ed. 'iussu impensaque Leonis XIII' (Rome, 1882 ff.). The large number of editions of selections and individual works include an editio minor of the Leonine text of the Summa contra Gentiles (Rome, 1934), and the Summa Theologica by P. Caramello (4 vols., ib., 1948); Scriptum super Libros Sententiarum, ed. P. Mandonnet, O.P.–M. F. Moos, O.P. (4 vols., Paris, 1929–47); Quaestiones Disputatae, ed. R. Spiazzi, O.P., and others (2 vols., Turin–Rome, 1949); Quaestiones Quodlibetales, ed. R. Spiazzi, O.P. (ib., 1949); Opuscula Theologica, ed. R. A. Verardo, O.P., and others (2 vols., ib., 1954); Opuscula Omnia necnon Opera Minora, i. Opuscula Philosophica, ed. J. Perrier, O.P. (Paris, 1949); Super Librum de Causis Expositio, ed. H. D. Saffrey, O.P. (Textus Philosophici Friburgenses, iv–v; 1954); Expositio super Librum Boethii de Trinitate, ed. B. Decker (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, iv; Leiden, 1959); Quaestiones de Anima, ed. J. H. Robb (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, xiv; Toronto, 1968). There are a vast number of edd. and trr. of individual works and selections, and a very extensive modern literature. General studies concerned expressly with the Angelic Doctor include those of C. Jourdain (2 vols., Paris, 1858), K. Werner (3 vols., Ratisbon, 1858–9), P. Rousselot, [S.J.] (Paris, 1908; Eng. tr., 1935), A. D. Sertillanges, O.P. (Les Grands Philosophes, 2 vols., 1910; ed. 2, 1940; and other works of this author), M. *Grabmann (Kempten, 1912; ed. 7, Munich, 1946), F. Olgiati (Pubblicazioni della Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Serie Prima, i, fasc. 1; 1923; Eng. tr., 1925), E. de Bruyne (Études philosophiques et religieuses, 1928), H. Meyer (Bonn, 1938; Eng. tr., 1944), G. Vann, O.P. (London, 1940), G. K. *Chesterton (London, 1943), R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P. (Paris, 1946), M. D. Chenu, O.P. (Université de Montréal. Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales, xi; 1950; Eng. tr., with bibl. additions, Chicago [1964]), F. C. Copleston, S.J. (Harmondsworth, 1955), and J. A. Weisheipl, O.P. (Garden City, N.Y., 1974; Oxford, 1975). K. Foster, O.P., The Life of Saint Thomas Aquinas. Biographical Documents, translated and edited with an introduction (1959). M. Grabmann, Die echten Schriften des hl. Thomas von Aquin (B.G.P.M., xxii, Hftt. 1–2; 1920; ed. 2, as Die Werke des Hl. Thomas von Aquin, ib., 1931; ed. 3, ib., 1949). É. *Gilson, Le Thomisme. Introduction à la philosophie de saint Thomas d'Aquin (1919; ed. 5, revised, 1948; Eng. tr., The Christian Philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas, 1957), with catalogue of St. Thomas's

Works by I. T. Eschmann, O.P., pp. 381–430, with details on editions. C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), pp. 233–91. L. Schütz, Thomas-Lexikon (Paderborn, 1881; ed. 2, 1895); R. J. Deferrari–M. I. Barry, C.D.P., A Lexicon of St. Thomas Aquinas based on the Summa Theologica and selected passages of his other works (5 fascc., Baltimore, Md., 1948–9); idd., A Complete Index of The Summa Theologica of St. Thomas Aquinas (ib., 1956). P. Mandonnet, O.P.–J. Destrez, O.P., Bibliographie thomiste (Bibliothèque thomiste, i; 1921); V. J. Bourke, Thomistic Bibliography, 1920–1940 (St. Louis, Mo., 1945). P. Wyser, O.P., Thomas von Aquin (Bibliographische Einführungen in das Studium der Philosophie herausgegeben v. I. M. Bochenski, xiii–xiv; 1950); id., Der Thomismus (ib., xv–xvi; 1951). P. A. Walz, O.P., and others, in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 618–761, s.v. 'Thomas d'Aquin'; R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., ib., cols. 823–1024, s.v. 'Thomisme'; C. Fabro, C.P.S., in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 252–97, s.v. 'Tommaso d'Aquino'; H. F. Dondaine and others in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), xii (1965), cols. 119–34, s.v. 'Thomas v. Aquin'; W. A. Wallace–J.A. Weisheipl in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 102–15, s.v.; all with extensive bibl. There are also a number of periodicals very largely devoted to studies connected with St. Thomas, esp. the Revue Thomiste (1893 ff.); a selection of others is listed s.v. Scholasticism. Current bibl. is also listed in the Bulletin of R.T.A.M.

THOMAS BECKET OF CANTERBURY, St. See Becket, St. Thomas.

THOMAS BRADWARDINE See Bradwardine, Thomas.

THOMAS OF CANTILUPE, St. See Cantilupe, St. Thomas of.

THOMAS OF CELANO (c. 1190–1260), the earliest of St. *Francis's biographers. Having joined St. Francis's band of friars c. 1214, he wote two Lives of the saint (d. 1226), the first in 1228 at the command of *Gregory IX and the second in 1246–7 at the instance of the General of his order. They were followed in 1250–3 by the 'Tractatus de Miraculis S. Francisci'. Written in the rhythmical prose that delighted his age, these biographies were deservedly admired for their elegance, but their historicity has been challenged in modern times. Thomas was also the author of the 'Legend' of St. *Clare and, acc. to an uncertain tradition, of the *Dies Irae (q.v.).

Crit. edd. of Thomas's two lives and miracles of St. Francis by Eduardus Alenconiensis, O.F.M.Cap. (E. d'Alençon, Rome, 1906), and by the Franciscans of Quaracchi in Analecta Franciscana, x (1926–41), pp. 1–331, with introd. pp. iii–xlii. Eng. tr. of the two lives of St. Francis by A. G. F. Howell (London, 1908). For further edd. see bibl. to Francis, St., and for edd. of legend of St. Clare, see bibl. to Clare, St. V. Facchinetti, Tommaso da Celano, il primo biografo di S. Francesco (Quaracchi, 1918). J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of St. Francis of Assisi (Publications of the University of Manchester, No. cclxxiv, Historical Series, No. lxxix; 1940), esp. pp. 61–81 and 110–28. M. Bihl, O.F.M., 'Disquisitiones Celanenses' in A.F.H., xx (1927), pp. 433–96, xxi (1928), pp. 3–54 and 161–205. A. G. Little, 'Some Recently Discovered Franciscan Documents and their Relation to the Second Life of Celano and the Speculum Perfectionis' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xii (1926), pp. 147–78. F. De Beer, O.F.M., La Conversion de saint François selon Thomas de Celano. Étude comparative des textes relatifs à la conversion en Vita I et Vita II (1963). See also bibl. to Dies Irae.

THOMAS CHRISTIANS. See Malabar Christians.

THOMAS OF HEREFORD, St. See Cantilupe, St. Thomas of.

THOMAS A JESU (1564–1627), spiritual author. Influenced by the writings of St. *Teresa, Díaz Sánchez de Ávila entered the *Carmelite Order in 1587, and he soon held the offices of professor of theology at Seville, prior at Saragossa, and provincial of Old Castile. After establishing a strictly eremitical life in several Carmelite monasteries, he was called to Rome in 1607 by *Paul V, in order to further the missionary activities in his order; but his efforts were frustrated by the opposition of the Spanish and Italian superiors. The literary results of the enterprise, however, the treatises Stimulus Missionum (1610) and De Procuranda Salute omnium Gentium (1613), in which he outlined his missionary theory, contributed largely to the foundation of the Congregation 'De *Propaganda Fide' (1622). His works on mysticism, De Contemplatione Divina (1620) and Divinae Orationis Methodus (1623), are remarkable for the clarity and sureness of their doctrine, presenting the teaching of St. Teresa in the form of Scholastic treatises.

Opera Omnia, publd. in 2 vols. bound in 1, Cologne, 1684. B. M. Zimmerman, C.D., Les Saints déserts des Carmes déchaussés (1927), pp. 46–60. E. A. Peers, Studies of the Spanish Mystics, ii (1930), pp. 279–306, with bibl. pp. 447–452. S. Salaville, A.A., 'Un Précurseur de la Propagande et un apôtre des missions, le P. Thomas de Jésus' in Études carmélitaines, v (1920), pp. 301–23. José de Jesús Crucificado, O.C.D., 'El Tomás de Jesús, escritor místico' in Ephemerides Carmeliticae, iii (1949), pp. 305–49, and iv (1950), pp. 149–206; Gabriel de Ste-Marie-Magdaleine, O.C.D., 'Thomas de Jésus et la contemplation acquise' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xxv (1949), pp. 3–17.

THOMAS À KEMPIS (c. 1380–1471), ascetical writer. Thomas Hemerken, acc. to the usual and most probable tradition the author of the '*Imitation of Christ' (q.v.), was born at Kempen, nr. Cologne, of poor parents. After education at Deventer at the school of the *Brethren of the Common Life, he entered in 1399 the house of the *Canons Regular at the Agnietenberg, nr. Zwolle (one of the daughter-houses of *Windesheim), of which his elder brother, John, was co-founder and prior, and in 1406 took the habit. Here he lived for almost the whole of the rest of his life, writing, preaching, and copying MSS., and widely sought after as a spiritual adviser. His writings, though of many different kinds—ascetical, homiletic, poetical, biographical, &c.—are all pervaded by the devotional spirit which finds its classic expression in the 'Imitation'. They include Orationes et Meditationes de Vita Christi, Vallis Liliorum, and Hospitale Pauperum. Feast day in the American BCP (1979), 24 July.

Opera et Libri Vite Fratris Thome a Kempis by H. Rosweyden, ed. [P. Danhausser] (Nuremberg, 1494); revised ed. by H. Sommalius, S.J. (Antwerp, 1601); crit. ed. by M. J. Pohl (7 vols., Freiburg i.Br., 1902–22; vol. 8 wanting). Eng. tr. from ed. by M. J. Pohl of Prayers and Meditations on the Life of Christ by W. Duthoit (London, 1904); of The Founders of the New Devotion by J. P. Arthur (ib., 1905); of The Chronicle of the Canons Regular of Mount St. Agnes by id. (ib., 1906); of Sermons to the Novices Regular by V. Scully, C.R.L. (ib., 1907); and of Meditations and Sermons on the Incarnation, Life and Passion of Our Lord by id. (ib., 1907). S. Kettlewell, Thomas à Kempis and the Brothers of the Common Life (2 vols., 1882). F. R. Cruise, Thomas à Kempis. Notes of a Visit to the Scenes in which his Life was spent, with some account of the examination of his relics (1887). V. Scully, C.R.L., Life of the Venerable Thomas à Kempis (1901); D. Butler, Thomas à Kempis. A Religious Study (1908). J. Mooren, Nachrichten über Thomas à Kempis, nebst einem Anhange von meistens noch ungedruckten Urkunden (Krefeld, 1855). See further bibl. to Imitation of Christ.

THOMAS OF MARGA (9th cent.), *Nestorian historian. In 832 he entered the celebrated Nestorian monastery of Beth-'Abhe, c. 25 miles E. of Mosul. Later he became secretary to the Patriarch Abraham (837–50), by whom he was created

Bp. of Marga. Finally he became Metropolitan of Beth-Garmai. He wrote c. 840 his Book of Governors, a history of his monastery, but embodying also biographies of monks from various places in Mesopotamia; it is one of the chief authorities for the earlier history of the Nestorian Church.

Thomas's 'Book of Governors' (Liber Supcriorum), ed. E. A. W. Budge (2 vols., London, 1893; Syr. text with Eng. tr. in vol. ii) and P. Bedjan, Cong. Miss. (Paris, 1901). W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894), p. 219 f.; A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 233 f.

THOMAS MORE, St. See More, St. Thomas.

THOMISM. The systematized expression of the (esp. philosophical) doctrines of St. *Thomas Aquinas (q.v.), particularly as developed in the RC Church in the *Dominican Order.

THOMPSON, FRANCIS (1859–1907), RC poet. A native of Preston, he was originally intended for the priesthood and educated at Ushaw, but later unsuccessfully studied medicine at Manchester. In 1885 he went to London, where he lived for three years in almost complete destitution, occasionally selling newspapers and matches. In 1888 his poetic gifts were discovered by Wilfrid Meynell, then editor of the Catholic magazine Merry England, who remained his friend and benefactor throughout his life. His first volume of Poems, published in 1893, contained the exquisite cycle 'Love in Dian's Lap', dedicated to Alice *Meynell, and his best-known poem, 'The Hound of Heaven', almost autobiographical in its arresting description of the pursuit of the soul by God. His Sister Songs (1895) and New Poems (1897) contain the magnificent 'Orient Ode', 'The Mistress of Vision', and 'To any Saint', poems in which the asceticism of the mystic, the beauty of the liturgy, and a sacramental conception of nature are blended into a unity. His poetry, though sometimes marred by an excessive use of neologisms, archaic words, and difficult allusions, has close affinities with that of the '*Metaphysical School' of the 17th cent. Its occasional obscurity rarely prevents it from conveying the central thought, and in its profound spirituality and love of children and the simple things of life has a genuine Franciscan ring, fostered by the poet's long stay (1893–7) near the Franciscan monastery at Pantasaph. After 1897 he wrote almost no more poetry. Among his prose works are Health and Holiness; A Study of the Relations between Brother Ass the Body and his Rider the Soul (1905; with Preface by G. *Tyrrell), a Life of St. Ignatius Loyola and an Essay on Shelley (the last two both posthumous, 1909).

Works (3 vols., London, 1913). Further prose material identified and ed. by T. L. Connolly, S.J., Literary Criticisms by Francis Thompson (New York, 1948) and The Real Robert Louis Stevenson and other Critical Essays by Francis Thompson (ib., 1959), incl. full bibl. of Thompson's works, pp. 353–98; The Man Has Wings. New Poems and Plays by Francis Thompson, ed. id. (Garden City, N.Y., 1957). E. Meynell, The Life of Francis Thompson (1913); R. L. Mégroz, Francis Thompson (1927); Viola Meynell, Francis Thompson and Wilfrid Meynell (1952); R. M. Gautrey, 'This Tremendous Lover.' An Exposition of Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven (1932). J. C. Reid, Francis Thompson. Man and Poet (1959). P. Danchin, Francis Thompson. La vie et l'œuvre d'un poète (1959). P. van K. Thomson, Francis Thompson. A Critical Biography (1961). J. Walsh, Strange Harp, Strange Symphony. The Life of Francis Thompson (New York, 1967; London, 1968). E. Meynell in D.N.B., 1901–1911, p. 502 f.

THORESBY, JOHN (d. 1373), Abp. of *York. After executing several missions for W. Melton, Abp. of York (1317–40), and holding a number of ecclesiastical positions, he became Master of the Rolls in 1341 and Keeper of the Privy Seal in 1345, and was employed by Edward III to treat with France in 1346 and with Scotland in 1357, and to be guardian of the kingdom in 1355. In 1347 he became Bp. of *St. Davids, and in 1349 of *Worcester. From 1349 to 1356 he was Chancellor of England, and from 1351 to 1373 Abp. of York. It was mainly through his instrumentality that the ancient dispute as to the respective privileges of Canterbury and York was settled, the Pope directing, on 22 Feb. 1354, that the Abp. of York should be the 'Primate of England' and the Abp. of Canterbury the 'Primate of All England'.

A few of his Constitutions are printed in D. *Wilkins (ed.), Concilia Magnae Britanniae et Hiberniae, iii (1737), pp. 663, 666–79; his will in J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, iii (R.S., 1894), pp. 281–4. W. H. Dixon–J. Raine (edd.), Fasti Eboracenses. Lives of the Archbishops of York, i (1863), pp. 449–94, with eight of his letters, pp. 377–80. Life by Thomas Stubbs (14th cent.) in J. Raine, op. cit., ii (R.S., 1886), pp. 419–21. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 280–2, s.v., with further reff. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1863 f.

THORN, Conference of (1645). A conference (colloquium caritativum), of 26 *Catholic, 28 *Lutheran, and 24 *Calvinist theologians, convened in the Rathaus at Thorn on 28 Aug. 1645 on the proposal of Vladislav IV, King of Poland (1632–48), to bring about religious reunion. Among the participants were J. A. *Comenius, A. *Calovius, and G. *Calixtus (who on being rejected by the Lutherans ranked himself a Calvinist). Though discussions continued until the end of Nov., no result was achieved, largely because the Lutherans believed that the Catholics' only interest was to sever them from the Calvinists and the Protestant cause. Hence it was described as in fact colloquium irritativum.

Acta Conventus Thoruniensis Celebrati Anno 1645 (Warsaw, 1646); F. Jacobi, 'Das liebreiche Religionsgespräch zu Thorn 1645' in Z.K.G., xv (1895), pp. 345–63. B. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 745–51.

THORNDIKE, HERBERT (1598–1672), Anglican theologian. Probably a native of Suffolk, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1620. Ordained priest c. 1627, he held various offices in his college. In 1642 he became rector of Barley in Herts, but was ejected in 1643, as also from his fellowship at Trinity in 1646. In 1660 he was reinstated in both offices, and in the following year was appointed Prebendary of *Westminster. His first important theological work was his Discourse of the Government of Churches (1641), in which he defended the Apostolic origin of episcopal government against the Presbyterians. It was followed by the treatise Of Religious Assemblies and the Public Service of God (1642), upholding the worship of the C of E against the Puritans. In A Discourse of the Right of the Church in a Christian State (1649) he endeavoured to elucidate the relations between Church and State, stressing the supranational character of the former but conceding to the latter a certain authority over it. From 1652 to 1657 he helped in editing B. *Walton's Polyglott Bible, working chiefly on the Syriac texts. His principal work is An Epilogue to the Tragedy of the Church of England (1659), which consists of three parts: I, The Principles of Christian Truth; II, The Covenant of Grace; III, The Laws of the Church. In it he looks for a unified Christendom on the basis of the first six General Councils, conceding a certain superiority to the Pope with prescriptive rights over the W. Church. The third part contains his Eucharistic teaching. He rejects what he calls the 'Socinian' (=*Zwinglian), *Calvinistic, and *Lutheran doctrines as well as *Transubstantiation, to which, however, he is more sympathetic than most of his contemporaries. Acc. to his own view, the mystical but objective Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ is added to the substance of bread and wine by the consecration, which, however, is not effected by the words of Institution, but by the use of prayer. Thorndike's significance was for long forgotten, until he was rediscovered by the *Tractarians.

Works in L.A.C.T. (6 vols., bound in 9, 1844–54; with Life in vol. vi by A. W. Haddan, pp. 153–266). T. A. *Lacey, Herbert Thorndike, 1598–1672 (1929). J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 290–2.

THORVALDSEN, BERTEL (1770–1844), Danish sculptor. Educated at the School of Art at Copenhagen, in 1797 he went to Rome, where he lived until 1838. His art is saturated with the classical ideal of beauty, which is prominent also where he deals with Christian subjects. His most famous religious work is the monumental group of Christ and His Apostles (1821–42) in the Frue Kirke at Copenhagen; the beautiful figure of the Risen Christ, His hands extended in blessing, has often been imitated. Among his other religious works are the tomb of Pope *Pius VII in St. Peter's (1830) and an Entrance of Christ into Jerusalem.

J. M. Thiele, Den Danske Billedhugger Bertel Thorvaldsen og hans Vaerker (4 vols., Copenhagen, 1831–50); id., Thorvaldsens Biographi (4 vols., ib., 1851–6; much abridged Eng. adaptation by M. R. Bernard, 1865); E. Plon, Thorvaldsen. Sa vie et son œuvre (1867; Eng. tr., 1874); S. Müller, Thorvaldsen. Hans Liv og hans Vaerker (Copenhagen, 1893); T. Oppermann, Thorvaldsen (3 vols., ib., 1924–1930). The numerous smaller studies include that of S. Trier (Copenhagen, 1903). 'A. P.'–H. Vollmer in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart begründet von U. Thieme–F. Becker, xxxiii (ed. H. Vollmer, 1939), pp. 94–100, s.v. 'Thorvaldsen', with detailed bibl.

THOU, JACQUES AUGUSTE DE. See De Thou, Jacques Auguste.

THREE CHAPTERS, The (τὰ τρία κεφάλαια). The three subjects condemned by the Emp. *Justinian in an edict of 543–4, viz. (1) the person and works of *Theodore of Mopsuestia, (2) the writings of *Theodoret against *Cyril of Alexandria, and (3) the letter of *Ibas of Edessa to Maris. As all three were considered sympathetic to *Nestorius, Justinian issued the edict in the hope of conciliating the *Monophysites by a display of anti-Nestorian zeal. The E. patriarchs assented, but in the W. the Emperor's interference was unpopular, and on the ground that it was opposed to the *Chalcedonian decrees, Pope *Vigilius refused at first to approve the edict. After being summoned to *Constantinople, however, Vigilius eventually issued in 548 his 'Iudicatum' to *Menas, the Patr. of Constantinople; this condemned the Three Chapters, but upheld the Chalcedonian decisions. After a storm of protest in the W., Vigilius deemed it best to withdraw his 'Iudicatum' and await a General Council. At the Fifth General Council, which met at *Constantinople in 553, the Three Chapters, and indirectly Vigilius, were condemned, though the Council also asserted the intention of the E. to remain in communion with Rome. In a 'Constitutum', issued in 554, Vigilius declared his submission to the Council's decision and his successor, Pelagius I, followed his example, though a serious schism in the W. resulted. Justinian's policy, which was in fact an attack on the *Antiochene theology and the decisions of Chalcedon, failed even of its purpose of reconciling the Monophysites.

The main documents will be found with the Acta of the Fifth General Council, pr. in the Conciliar collections. Latin theologians who wrote expressly in defence of the 'Three Chapters' include *Facundus of Hermiane and Fulgentius *Ferrandus [Ep. vi], qq.v., also Pope Pelagius I (556–61). L. *Duchesne, L'Église au sixième siècle (1925), pp. 185–218. R. Devreesse, 'Le Début de la querelle des Trois-Chapitres' in Rev. S.R., xi (1931), pp. 543–65. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 1–156, passim. C. Moeller, 'Le Chalcédonisme et le néochalcédonisme en Orient de 451 à la fin du VIe siècle' in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 637–720. H. M. Diepen, O.S.B., Les Trois Chapitres au Concile de Chalcédoine. Une étude de la christologie de l'Anatolie ancienne (Oosterhout, 1953). Id., Douze Dialogues de christologie ancienne (Rome, 1960), passim. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1868–1924, s.v. 'Trois-Chapitres (Affaire des)'. See also bibl. to Constantinople, Second Council of (553).

THREE CHILDREN, Song of the. See Song of the Three Children.

THREE DENOMINATIONS, The. A title applied to the *Presbyterian, *Congregationalist, and *Baptist Churches, the ministers of which in London and Westminster formed an association in 1727 for the purpose of joint political action.

THREE HOURS' SERVICE, The. An extra-liturgical service on Good Friday. It is held during the three hours of the Lord's Passion from noon till 3 p.m., and usually consists of seven sermons on the Seven Words from the Cross, with the intervals filled with hymns and prayers. The service was instituted by the *Jesuits on the occasion of an earthquake at Lima in 1687.

It appears to have been introduced in the C of E by A. H. *Mackonochie in the 1860s; there is a record of such a service in *St. Paul's Cathedral, London, in 1876. It came to be widely observed esp. in Anglican churches as well as in some RC churches, though since the middle of the 20th cent. its popularity has declined.

A. Mesia, S.J., Devoción á las Tres Horas de Agonia de Nuestro Redentor Jesú Cristo (1687; Eng. tr., London, 1806, reprinted with historical introd. by H. Thurston, S.J., as The Devotion of the Three Hours' Agony on Good Friday, 1899). G. M. Bosworth, 'A Note on the History of the Three-Hour Devotion' in C.Q.R., cliv (1953), pp. 86–91.

THREE WITNESSES, The. See Johannine Comma.

THUNDERING LEGION, The. When in the Danubian campaigns of the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius (172) a sudden rainstorm saved the Roman army from drought and defeat, Christians (e.g. *Justin, *Tertullian, *Eusebius) attributed this to the prayers of Christian members of the 'Legio XII Fulminata', claiming that the Emperor had admitted this in a letter to the Senate. The miracle is also referred to by pagan writers, e.g. Dio Cassius, though without reference to the Christian setting. On the column of M. Aurelius, in Rome, Jupiter Pluvius is represented as the benefactor. The mistranslation 'thundering' for 'thunderstruck' led to the elaboration that a thunderbolt had destroyed the enemy. As the name 'Fulminata' for the Legion dates from the time of Augustus (d. A.D. 14), it had no connexion originally with the incident here mentioned. The 'Thundering Legion' again appears in the legend of the Forty Martyrs of *Sebaste (q.v.).

Good discussion of the legend, with text and Eng. tr. of the letter of Marcus Aurelius to the Senate and further refs., in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, part 2, i (1885), pp. 469–76. G. T. Stokes in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 1023 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2692–703, s.v. 'Fulminata' (Légion XII[e])'.

THURIBLE (Lat. thus or tus, 'incense'). A metal vessel for the ceremonial burning of *incense. In the usual form of thurible the container is suspended on chains from which it can be swung during the incensation. The thurible is also known as a 'censer'.

Rohault, v (1887), pp. 149–69. Braun, A.G., pp. 598–632, with plates 126–37. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 21–33, s.v. 'Encensoir'; A. Weckwerth in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 1012 f., s.v. 'Rauchfass'.

THURIFER. A person appointed to carry the *thurible at religious ceremonies and services. He is sometimes attended by a boy bearing the incense-boat (the 'boat boy'), sometimes he carries this also himself.

THURNEYSEN, EDUARD (1888–1974), Swiss Protestant theologian. A native of Wallenstadt, after working among the Christian youth at Zürich he was pastor successively at Leutwil in Aargau (1913), Bruggen near St. Gall (1920), and the Münster at Basel (1927). From 1913 onwards he was intimately associated with K. *Barth, and largely contributed to the elaboration of the *Dialectical Theology, with the pastoral and social applications of which he was esp. concerned. His writings include Dostojewski (1921), Komm' Schöpfer Geist (sermons, in collaboration with K. Barth, 1924; Eng. tr., 1934), Christoph Blumhardt (1926), Das Wort Gottes und die Kirche (collected essays, 1927), and Die Lehre von der Seelsorge (1948). He was also one of the editors of the Barthian periodical Zwischen den Zeiten (1923 onwards).

Gottesdienst — Menschendienst. Eduard Thurneysen zum 70. Geburtstag am 10. Juli 1958 (Zollikon, 1958), with bibl. of his works to date, pp. 333–50, and correspondence between Thurneysen and Barth 1921–5 and introd. by Barth, pp. 7–173; Eng. tr. of correspondence and Barth's introd. by J. D. Smart, Revolutionary Theology in the Making (1964), pp. 65–249. Wort und Gemeinde. Probleme und Aufgaben der praktischen Theologie. Eduard Thurneysen zum 80. Geburtstag (Zürich, 1968), with bibl. of his works, 1958–68, pp. 521–6.

THURSDAY, Holy or Maundy. See Maundy Thursday.

THYATIRA, city in N. Lydia. It is one of the 'Seven Churches' addressed in Rev. (2. 18–29) and the birthplace of St. Paul's convert Lydia, 'a seller of purple' (Acts 16. 14), one of the industries for which the town was noted. In Rev. its Christian community is upbraided for tolerating a 'Jezebel' in their midst who teaches them 'to commit fornication and to eat things sacrificed to idols' (2. 20), probably an adherent of the sect of the *Nicolaitans who introduced pagan elements into Christian worship. In the beginning of the 3rd cent. Thyatira was a stronghold of *Montanism. Its bishop, Sozon, took part in the Council of *Nicaea (325), and another bishop, Basil, is mentioned in 879. The modern city, named Ak-Hissar, has a small Christian population.

W. M. *Ramsay in H.D.B., iv, pp. 757–9, s.v.; id., The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 316–53.

TIARA, extra-liturgical Papal headdress. First mentioned in the 'Vita' of Pope Constantine (708–715), it was in its original form a kind of white Phrygian cap, called 'camelaucum', worn as a sign of the Papal prerogative. Not later than the 11th cent. a coronet was placed round its lower rim, to which were added in the 13th cent. two lappets hanging down at the back. Under *Boniface VIII the tiara was adorned with a second coronet, possibly to symbolize the twofold power of the Papacy, and under Benedict XI (1303–4) or *Clement V (1305–14) a third coronet was added. At the same time the tiara increased in bulk, and in the 15th cent. it attained its modern shape resembling a beehive. It was worn by, or carried in front of, the Pope at important non-liturgical functions such as Papal processions and at solemn acts of jurisdiction, e.g. solemn dogmatic definitions, but it has not been used since the death of *Paul VI.

Braun, L.G., pp. 498–508. E. Müntz, 'La Tiare pontificale du VIII[e] au XVI[e] siècle' in Mémoires de l'Institut National de France. Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, xxxvi (1898), pp. 235–324; C. Sachsse, 'Tiara und Mitra der Päpste' in Z.K.G., xxxv (1914), pp. 481–501; P. E. Schramm, 'Zur Geschichte der päpstlichen Tiara' in H.Z., clii (1935), pp. 307–12. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., xiv (1913), p. 714 f., s.v.

TICONIUS. See Tyconius.

TIELE, CORNELIS PETRUS (1830–1902), Dutch theologian. A *Remonstrant pastor, he became professor of religious history, a chair specially founded for him, at *Leyden university, and here during the years of his professorship (1877–1901) exercised a great influence on the development of the study of comparative religion, esp. in Holland. Among the best known of his many books are Geschiedenis van den Godsdienst tot aan de Heerschappij der Wereldgodsdiensten (1876; Eng. trans. by J. E. *Carpenter as Outlines of the History of Religion, 1877) and his *Gifford Lectures on The Elements of the Science of Religion (1897–9). The fruit of a vast knowledge of ancient languages and history and prodigious industry, they became widely used on account of their lucid and orderly arrangement.

P. D. Chantepie de la Saussaye, 'Cornelis Petrus Tiele, 16 December 1830–11 Januari 1902' in Koninklijke Akademie van Wetenschappen, Jaarboek 1902, pp. 125–54. S. Cramer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 766–75.

TIERCE. See Terce.

TIGURINUS, Consensus. See Consensus Tigurinus.

TIKHON (1866–1925). Basil Ivanovitch Belavin, the first Patriarch of the Russian Church since 1700. The son of a village priest, he studied theology at the ecclesiastical academy of St. Petersburg and was successively Bp. of Lublin in 1897, of N. America in 1898, of Yaroslav in 1907, and of Vilna in 1914. In Apr. 1917 he became metropolitan of Moscow, and in Nov. 1917 was elected Patriarch, though with very circumscribed powers, by the Panrussian Council. Though not an eminent scholar or Church politician, his courage and humility gave him the moral authority needed in the subsequent difficult years. In 1919 he anathematized all who persecuted the Church and called upon the people to resist, but in the same year he imposed neutrality on the clergy in the civil war between the Reds and the Whites and refused to give his blessing to the latter. Owing to resistance to the state policy of confiscating Church property during the famine of 1921–2 he was placed under arrest, but, owing to English political pressure, he was not brought to trial. During his absence the state-supported schismatic 'Living Church' was set up, which called a council in 1923 to depose him and gained many adherents. In the same year Tikhon signed a declaration professing loyalty to the Soviet Government, which gained him less intolerable conditions, and he was allowed to live in the Don monastery at Moscow and to officiate in the churches of the capital. Owing to his personal influence many schismatics returned to the Patriarchal Church, and his death was the occasion of great popular demonstrations of veneration and affection.

Prince P. M. Volkonsky, 'La Reconstitution du patriarcat en Russie. Mgr Tykhon, patriarche de Moscou et de toute la Russie' in É.O., xx (1921), pp. 195–219. M. d'Herbigny, S.J., Après la mort du patriarche Tykhon. Les patriarcats de Constantinople et de Moscou. Projets anglo-orthodoxes de Concile Œcuménique. Grecs et Russes en Europe et en Amérique (Orientalia Christiana [Analecta], xv, vol. iv, no. 2; 1925). A. Wuyts, S.J., Le Patriarcat russe au concile de Moscou de 1917–1918 (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxix; 1941). M. Spinka, The Church in Soviet Russia (New York–London, 1956). R. Rössler, Kirche und Revolution in Russland. Patriarch Tichon und der Sowjetstaat (1969).

TIKHON OF ZADONSK, St. (1724–83), Russian bishop and spiritual writer. The son of a village sexton, his childhood was passed in extreme poverty. He studied at the seminary in Novgorod, where he subsequently became professor, taking monastic vows in 1758. In 1761 he was appointed assistant bishop in the Novgorod diocese, and in 1763 Bp. of Voronezh. He resigned in 1767 and retired into seclusion, settling in 1769 at the Zadonsk monastery, where he remained for the rest of his life. Both as diocesan bishop and in retirement Tikhon displayed a vivid pastoral concern and spent much of his time helping those in distress and destitution. He was a fluent writer, the collected edition of his works running to fifteen volumes. Like many members of the Russian Church in the 18th cent., he was considerably influenced by the West, and among his favourite authors included the Lutheran Johann *Arndt and the Anglican Joseph *Hall; but he possessed at the same time a deep understanding of the ascetic and mystical traditions of E. Orthodoxy. Feast day, 13 August.

Eng. tr. of extracts from his life and writings in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 182–241. N. Gorodetzky, Saint Tikhon Zadonsky, Inspirer of Dostoevsky (1951), with full bibl.

TILLEMONT, LOUIS SÉBASTIEN LE NAIN DE (1637–98), French Church historian. He was educated at *Port-Royal under P. *Nicole, and early developed a taste for history, beginning research work at the age of 18. Leaving Port-Royal in 1656, in 1661 he entered the seminary of Beauvais, but was not ordained priest till 1676. He then returned to Port-Royal, but had to leave it in 1679 and retired to his estate at Tillemont, nr. Paris. Though of *Jansenist leanings, he did not take part in the controversy, but divided his time between his studies and works of piety. His fame as an ecclesiastical historian rests on his Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles (16 vols., 1693–1712), a work of enormous erudition, following the development of the Church from the beginnings of Christianity to the year 513. Its narrative consists almost entirely of patristic material, linked together by a minimum of connecting text, with questions of chronology, authorship, &c., relegated to the learned critical notes appended to each volume. For comprehensiveness the work has never been surpassed, though its lack of elegance in style and arrangement has prevented it from finding a wider public. Tillemont also wrote a separate treatise on the history of the Emperors and other princes during those same centuries (6 vols., 1690–1738). His materials for a Life of St. *Louis were not published until 1847–51 (6 vols.).

[M. Tronchai, Tillemont's secretary,] Idée de la vie et de l'esprit de Mr. Le Nain de Tillemont (Nancy, 1706); repr., with Réflexions de M. Le Nain de Tillemont sur divers sujets de morale (Cologne, 1711). B. Neveu, Un Historien à l'école de Port-Royal. Sébastien Le Nain de Tillemont, 1637–1698 (Archives internationales d'histoire des idées, xv; 1966). Bremond, iv (1920), pp. 258–80. A. Momigliano, 'La formazione della moderna storiographia sull'impero romano', sect. 2, in Rivista storica italiana, Ser. v, i (1936), pp. 38–44, with reff.; repr. in Contributo alla Storia degli Studi Classici (1955), pp. 110–16. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1029–33, s.v.

TILLICH, PAUL (1886–1965), Protestant theologian. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he studied at Berlin, Tübingen and Halle (1904–8). During the First World War he served as an army chaplain. In 1924 he became professor of theology at Marburg, in 1925 at the Technical Hochschule at Dresden, and in 1929 professor of philosophy at Frankfurt. Compelled by his connexion with the Religious Socialists to leave Germany in 1933, he settled in the U.S.A., where he was appointed professor of philosophical theology at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. In 1940 he became an American national. He became professor at Harvard Divinity School in 1955 and in 1962 Nuveen Professor of Theology at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

Tillich was a prolific writer and exercised great influence. His aim was to bridge the gap between Christian faith and modern culture. To do this he employed the 'method of correlation', acc. to which the content of the Christian revelation is stated as answering the questions arising out of the cultural situation. This situation was interpreted by Tillich in terms of *existentialism, ontology and Jungian psychology. His works include Das System der Wissenschaften (1923), Kirche und Kultur (1924), Die religiöse Lage der Gegenwart (1926; Eng. trans., 1932), The Interpretation of History (1936), The Protestant Era (1948), The Shaking of the Foundations (sermons, 1948), The Courage to Be (lectures, 1952), Love, Power, and Justice (lectures, 1954), The New Being (sermons, 1955), The Eternal Now (sermons, 1963), and Morality and Beyond (1963); the most important is prob. his Systematic Theology (3 vols., 1951–64).

Works ed. R. Albrecht (14 vols., Stuttgart, 1959–75). W. Leibrecht (ed.), Religion and Culture. Essays in Honor of Paul Tillich (New York, 1959); K. Hennig (ed.), Der Spannungsbogen. Festgabe für Paul Tillich zum 75. Geburtstag (1961). Studies ed. C. W. Kegley–R. W. Bretall (New York, 1952), by R. A. Killen (Amsterdam diss.; Kampen, 1956), C. Rhein (Stuttgart, 1957), K. Hamilton (London, 1963), G. H. Tavard (ib., [1963]), J. H. Thomas (ib., 1963), A. J. McKelway (Richmond, Va., 1964; London, 1966), ed. T. A. O'Meara, O.P.–C. D. Weisser, O.P. (Dubuque, Iowa, [1965]), J. L. Adams (New York, 1965), D. H. Kelsey (New Haven–London, 1967), C. J. Armbruster, S.J. (New York, 1967), A. M. Macleod (London, 1973), W. and Marion Pauck (ib., 1977 ff.), and A. Thatcher (Oxford, 1978).

TILLOTSON, JOHN (1630–94), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at, and later Fellow of, Clare Hall, Cambridge. In 1661 he was present at the *Savoy Conference, as a watcher on the Nonconformist side. In 1688 he helped the *Seven Bishops to draw up their reasons for refusing to read the *Declaration of Indulgence of *James II. In 1689 he was appointed Dean of *St. Paul's, and in the same year became a member of the commission for revising the BCP and the *Canons. He wished to be rid of the *Athanasian Creed and held *Zwinglian doctrines about the *Eucharist. The advocates of the policy of comprehension for Nonconformists proposed him in 1689 as *Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation, but he was heavily defeated. In 1691, with some reluctance through the circumstances of W. *Sancroft's deposition, he accepted the see of Canterbury. His archiepiscopate was undistinguished. His policy was dictated by hatred of the RC Church and a desire to include all Protestant dissenters other than *Unitarians in the C of E. A famous preacher, he was a pattern on which the 18th cent. divines modelled their sermons. He was the first married Abp. of Canterbury since M. *Parker.

Sermons, ed. R. Barker (14 vols., 1695–1704), and as Works, ed. with life by T. Birch (3 vols., 1752). The Golden Book of Tillotson. Selection ed. by J. *Moffatt (1926). L. G. Locke, Tillotson. A Study in Seventeenth-Century Literature (Anglistica, iv; Copenhagen, 1954). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 392–8.

TIMOTHY, St. St. *Paul's companion on his Second Missionary Journey and later one of his most intimate friends and the addressee of two of his epp. A native of Lystra, he was the son of a mixed marriage between a Jewess, Eunice, and a heathen, and was circumcised by St. Paul (Acts 16. 3) in order to placate the Jews. Among the missions with which the Apostle entrusted him were that to the *Thessalonians to encourage them under persecution (1 Thess. 3. 2) and that to *Corinth to confirm the converts in the faith (1 Cor. 4. 17). His name appears joined with that of St. Paul in the salutations of seven of the Epistles. He became his representative at *Ephesus (1 Tim. 1. 3) and, acc. to *Eusebius, the first bishop of that city. The 4th cent. Acta S. Timothei, of which there has been some confirmation from recent excavations, narrate his martyrdom on 22 Jan. 97 at the hands of the pagans when he opposed the 'Katagogia', the licentious festivities of Diana. His supposed relics were translated to *Constantinople in 356. Feast day, 26 (formerly 24) Jan.; in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 22 Jan.

Gk. text of Acta ed. H. Usener (Bonn. diss. [1877]). R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, ii (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 372–400, with further notes in Ergänzungsheft (1890), p. 86 f. W. Michaelis, Die Gefangenschaft des Paulus in Ephesus und das Itinerar des Timotheus (Neutestamentliche Forschungen, Reihe 1, Hft. iii; 1925). H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Les Actes de saint Timothée' in Anatolian Studies Presented to William Hepburn Buckler, ed. W. M. Calder–J. Keil (Manchester, 1939), pp. 77–84, repr. in Mélanges d'hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, xlii; 1966), pp. 408–15. A. *Jülicher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 781–8, s.v. 'Timotheus, der Apostelschüler'; R. A. Falconer in D.A.C., ii (1918), p. 582 f., s.v.; E. Fascher in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1342–54, s.v. 'Timotheus (20)'. See also introductions to commentaries cited in following entry, and commentaries to Acts, &c.

TIMOTHY AND TITUS, Epistles to. The term 'Pastoral Epistles', under which these three Epistles attributed to St. *Paul are generally known, dates from the 18th cent.; it was prob. first used by the German theologian, Paul Anton, in lectures delivered at Halle in 1726–7. If genuine, the Epistles must have been written at a period in St. Paul's life not covered by the account in Acts, since they presuppose a release from his first imprisonment and further missionary activities. The First to Timothy professes to have been sent from Macedonia, that to Titus while its author was on a journey to Nicopolis, and the Second to Timothy during another imprisonment at Rome, shortly before the author's death.

The chief subjects dealt with in the Epistles are the appointment and duties of Church ministers, and certain doctrinal difficulties. In 1 Tim. the author begins by exhorting his disciple to deal firmly with innovators and teachers of false doctrine (ch. 1); he returns to the subject in ch. 4, in 2 Tim. 2. 15–4. 8, and Tit. 3. 9–11. Many explanations have been offered about the nature of these false teachers, but all that seems clear is that the errors envisaged were some form of Judaizing speculations. The remainder of the Epistles is concerned with Church organization and the inculcation of Christian virtues. 1 Tim. orders the institution of public prayers (2. 1–8), defines the position of men and women in the community (2. 9–15), describes the qualities necessary for bishops and deacons (3), gives instructions for the enrolment of widows and the rule of elders (5), and concludes with various moral exhortations. In 2 Tim. the author encourages the disciples not only to stand fast against false teachers but also to endure every difficulty and to preach the word 'in season [and] out of season'. The Ep. to Titus deals with the qualities required in elders (1), the duties of various classes in society (2), and sums up the Christian virtues (3).

The Pastorals are valuable for the light they shed on contemporary Church organization and discipline, which they show still in a fluctuating state. The 'bishops' (ἐπίσκοποι) have not yet reached the monarchical position of the time of St. *Ignatius, and they appear to be indistinguishable from 'elders' (πρεσβύτεροι: Tit. 1. 5 and 1. 7); the term 'deacon' (διάκονος) seems to mean only 'helper, assistant' and not yet to denote a definite grade in the order of ministry.

Since F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (1807) and F. C. *Baur (1835) the authenticity of the Pastorals has frequently been denied by NT critics, though their Pauline authorship had been unquestioningly received from the time of St. *Irenaeus and *Tertullian. The chief arguments brought against their authenticity are that they cannot be fitted into the framework of St. Paul's life as known from Acts, and that their vocabulary is different from that of the other Pauline letters. On the other hand the existence of Pauline elements is too clear to be denied, and E. *Renan and others have suggested that a number of genuine Pauline fragments formed the basis on which a later editor worked, prob. at the beginning of the 2nd cent. P. N. Harrison claimed to have identified five such fragments (2 Tim. 1. 16–18, 3. 10 f., 4. 1, 2a, 5b, 6–8, 18b, 19, 21b, 22a; 4. 13–15, 20, 21a; 4. 16–18; 4. 9–12, 22b; Tit. 3. 12–15); but other scholars have differed as to which pieces are to be regarded as Pauline.

The Epp. were the subject of commentaries by St. John *Chrysostom (PG, lxii, 501–700), *Ambrosiaster (PL, xvii, 461–503), and J. *Calvin (Geneva, 1563; modern Eng. tr., 1964). Important modern commentaries include those of F. D. E. Schleiermacher (on 1 Tim., Berlin, 1807), F. C. Baur (Stuttgart, 1835), H. P. *Liddon (on 1 Tim., privately printed, 1877; publd., London, 1897), B. *Weiss (K.E.K., N.T., xi, ed. 5, 1885), J. H. *Bernard (Camb. Bib., Gk. text, 1899), M. *Dibelius (Hb. N.T., iii, pt. 2, 1913, pp. 133–222), R. St. J. Parry (Cambridge, 1920), W. *Lock (I.C.C., 1924), E. F. Scott (Moff. Comm., 1936), C. Spicq, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1947; ed. 4, 2 vols., 1969), with detailed bibl., C. K. Barrett (Oxford, 1963), J. N. D. Kelly (Black's N.T. Comm., 1963), G. Holtz (Theologischer Handkommentar zum Neuen Testament, xiii; 1965) and A. T. Hanson (Cambridge, 1966). Pauli Antonii . . . Exegetische Abhandlung der Pastoral-Briefe Pauli an Timotheum und Titum, im Jahr 1726 und 1727 öffentlich vorgetragen, nunmehr aber nach bisheriger Methode treulich mitgetheilet von J. A. Meyer (2 parts, Halle, 1753–5). J. B. *Lightfoot, Biblical Essays (1893), pp. 397–418 ('The Date of the Pastoral Epistles'). P. N. Harrison, The Problem of the Pastoral Epistles (1921), with full bibl., pp. 179–84; id., Paulines and Pastorals (1964); W. Michaelis, Pastoralbriefe und Gefangenschaftsbriefe. Zur Echtheitsfrage der Pastoralbriefe (Neutestamentliche Forschungen, Reihe I, Hft. vi; 1930). A. T. Hanson, Studies in the Pastoral Epistles (1968). C. F. D. Moule, 'The Problem of the Pastoral Epistles: A Reappraisal' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlvii (1965), pp. 430–52. W. Lock in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 743–9; C. Spicq, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1966), cols. 1–73, s.v. Pastorales (Épîtres)'.

TIMOTHY (d. 517), Patr. of *Constantinople. He was in charge of the cathedral ornaments of Constantinople till 511 when, on the deposition of Macedonius II, the Emp. Anastasius I made him patriarch. After some initial hesitation, he became a strong defender of the *Monophysite doctrine and in 512 provoked a riot through adding to the '*Trisagion' the Monophysite formula 'Who wast crucified for us'. At a synod in 515 he formally condemned the Chalcedonian teaching and afterwards worked in conjunction with *Severus of Antioch. The regular use of the *Nicene Creed in the Liturgy at Constantinople is ascribed by *Theodore the Lector to Timothy; it had probably been introduced earlier at Antioch by *Peter the Fuller.

The Gk. text of his work Περὶ τῶν προσερχομένων τῇ ἁγίᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ('De Receptione Haereticorum') was first pr. by J. Meursius, Varii Divini, i (Leyden, 1619), pp. 111–30; also pr., with Lat. tr., by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, iii (Paris, 1686), pp. 377–424, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (1), 11–74. V. Grumel, A.A. (ed.), Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, i. Les Actes des patriarches (1932), pp. 80–83 (Nos. 193–205). É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), col. 1139 f., s.v. 'Timothée de Constantinople'.

TIMOTHY AELURUS (d. 477), *Monophysite Patriarch of Alexandria. His name 'Aelurus' (Gk. αἴλουρος, 'weasel') was given him by his opponents because of his small stature. He became patriarch in 457 after his predecessor Proterius had been lynched by the mob, but, being unacceptable to the majority of bishops, was banished by the Emp. Leo I in 460. During his exile he wrote much to propagate Monophysitism, but also anathematized *Eutyches because, unlike Eutyches, he held that the Body of Christ was of the same substance as other human bodies. He was recalled to Alexandria by the Emp. Basiliscus in 475, where he died before another decree of banishment by the Emp. *Zeno could be carried out. Of his writings three letters are extant in a Syriac translation. A collection of treatises and letters against the Council of *Chalcedon, also in Syriac, goes under his name, as well as an Armenian version of a similar work. In the *Coptic Church he is venerated as a saint, his feast day being 31 July.

Sermo and fragments ascribed to him by A. *Mai are printed among the works of Timothy (III) of Alexandria in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (1), 269–76. J. Lebon, 'La Christologie de Timothée Aelure, archevêque monophysite d'Alexandrie, d'après les sources syriaques inédites' in R.H.E., ix (1908), pp. 677–702; id. in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, i (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 425–580. G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iv (1937), pp. 279–87. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 79–82. H. G. Opitz in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1355–7, s.v. 'Timotheos (24)'.

TINDAL, MATTHEW (1655–1733), one of the leading *Deists. Educated at Lincoln and Exeter colleges, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1678. For a short time in *James II's reign he became a RC, but returned to the C of E at Easter 1688. He called himself a 'Christian Deist', and his book, The Rights of the Christian Church asserted against the Romish and all other Priests who claim an Independent Power over it (1706), written in defence of a rationalistic and *Erastian position, created a considerable stir. Author, publisher, and printer were prosecuted, but four editions were printed. Tindal then issued A Defence of the Rights of the Christian Church (1709), which was burned, together with H. *Sacheverell's sermon, in 1710 by the common hangman, by order of the House of Commons. It was denounced for several years, as it was thought to undermine the Christian religion. He replied at the end of his life by Christianity as old as the Creation, or the Gospel a Republication of the Religion of Nature (1730), which became the 'Bible' of Deism. It sought to show that, common to all rational creatures 'there's a law of nature or reason, absolutely perfect, eternal, and unchangeable; and that the design of the Gospel was not to add to, or take from this law', but to free men from superstition.

E. C[urll], Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Matthew Tindal . . . with a History of the Controversies wherein he was engaged (1733); The Religious, Rational, and Moral Conduct of Matthew Tindal . . . in a letter to a Friend by a Member of All Souls College (1735). J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers that have Appeared in England in the Last and Present Century, i (1754), pp. 144–76. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, i (1876), pp. 134–63. G. C. Joyce in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), pp. 535–7, s.v. 'Deism'. L. Stephen in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 403–5.

TINDAL, WILLIAM. See Tyndale, William.

TINTERN ABBEY, on the River Wye. It was founded by Walter de Clare in 1131 for French

*Cistercian monks from the Abbey of L'Aumône. The magnificent abbey church was built in the late 13th cent., but the subsequent history of the monastery was uneventful, and when it was dissolved in 1536 there were only 13 monks left. The ruins of Tintern Abbey, in scenery which inspired W. *Wordsworth to one of his finest poems, are among the most beautiful in England. The roofless church, with its delicately traced windows, shows the transitional Gothic style to perfection. The rest of the abbey has, for the most part, disappeared.

W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, v (ed. 1825), pp. 265–73. [C. Heath,] Descriptive Accounts of Tintern Abbey: Selected from the Most Esteemed Writers on that Beautiful Ruin: with . . . a correct translation of the charters of the Earls of Pembroke and Norfolk, whose ancestors founded the Monastery in the Year 1131 (1798). O. E. Craster, Tintern Abbey, Monmouthshire (1956). On the daughter house of the same name in Co. Wexford, see P. H. Hore, History of the Town and County of Wexford (1901), pp. 3–151.

TIPPET (Lat. liripipium). A broad black scarf worn by Anglican clergy in choir over the surplice. It may be of silk if its wearer is a graduate, but in other cases is of stuff. It was evolved, it seems, from the long ends of the hood which hung down from the shoulders in front, and was not originally confined to the clergy. There has been much dispute as to what vesture was denoted by the word in the 16th and 17th cents., some antiquarians holding that it was then used of a garment identical with the ordinary graduate's hood, except in the matter of shape and material. Can. 74 of 1604 ordered all the clergy to wear the tippet as part of their ordinary apparel, and can. 58 allowed non-graduates to wear it as a substitute for the hood. The word is not used in the 1969 canons, which order the minister to wear a scarf at Morning and Evening Prayer, and a scarf or stole for the Occasional Offices and the Eucharist, adding that when a scarf is worn, the minister may also wear the hood of his degree (B 8). The custom of confining the tippet to dignitaries and chaplains has never had any authority.

TISCHENDORF, CONSTANTIN (1815–1874), NT textual critic. From 1859 he was professor of theology at Leipzig. Between 1840 and 1860 he visited many libraries in Europe and the Near East in search of MSS., the most famous of his finds being his dramatic discovery of the *Codex Sinaiticus (q.v.). Besides careful editions of several important Biblical MSS. (e.g. of *Codex Ephraemi, 1843–5; *Codex Amiatinus, 1850; Codex Claromontanus, 1852), he published between 1841 and 1869 eight editions of the Greek text of the NT with a full critical apparatus of the variant readings. The last edition of this work, the 'octava critica maior', remains by reason of the abundance of its data a standard book of reference for the text of the NT.

J. E. Volbeding, Constantin Tischendorf in seiner fünfundzwanzigjährigen schriftstellerischen Wirksamkeit (1862). C. R. Gregory, 'De Tischendorfio', prefixed to the editio octava critica maior of Tischendorf's Gk. N.T., iii (1894), pp. 3–22, with list of his works. L. Schneller (son-in-law), Tischendorf-Erinnerungen. Merkwürdige Geschichte einer verlorenen Handschrift (1927; Eng. tr., 1939 [popular]). G. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 788–97, s.v., with bibl.

TISSOT, JAMES JOSEPH JACQUES (1836–1902), French Bible illustrator. Having studied art at Paris, he became a painter of fashionable women. When the Commune seized power in 1871 he fled to England. Here he became known by his caricatures for Vanity Fair and as a portrait and genre painter. Later he returned to Paris, where his art underwent a complete change owing to an experience of conversion, and henceforth he devoted himself to the illustration of the Life of Christ, for which purpose he made comprehensive studies in Palestine. His Vie de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ (1896) is a series of some 350 water-colours, representing the scenes of the Gospel in a fresh and unconventional style which abandons the traditional types. It was followed by an unfinished sequence of illustrations to the OT which, however, are inferior in quality to the earlier work.

An edition of the OT (Gen.–Job, with some additions) in Fr., incorporating Tissot's illustrations, was publd., with preface by A. D. Sertillanges, 2 vols., Paris, 1904; with text in English, 2 vols., London, 1904. J. Laver, 'Vulgar Society'. The Romantic Career of James Tissot, 1836–1902 (1936). Unsigned art. in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart begründet U. Thieme–F. Becker, xxxiii (ed. H. Vollmer, 1939), pp. 218–20, s.v., with detailed bibl.

TITHES. The clergy were maintained in early times by receiving one-quarter of the offerings of the laity, the remaining three-quarters going to the upkeep of the fabric of the church, to the relief of the poor, and to the bishop. At a date which cannot be precisely determined this system was superseded by tithes, the payment of a tenth part of all the produce of lands. At first the owner of the land might pay the tithe to what clergy he pleased. Probably they were usually paid to the bishop, who distributed them among his clergy. But, as the parochial system developed, the tithes of each parish were allotted to its own 'parson', often by the action of the lord of the manor, who in this way provided the endowment necessary for securing the right to build a church on his estate. In time this allocation of tithes became the general law. In England we find the payment of tithes strongly enjoined by a synod held in 786, and enforced by law in 900. Tithes were of three sorts: 'praedial', of the fruits of the ground, 'personal', of the profits of labour, and 'mixed', arising partly from the ground and partly from the industry of man. They were further divided into 'great' and 'small', the 'great' being the tithes of the major crops (wheat, oats, &c.) and the 'small' the tithes of minor produce (lambs, chickens, &c.).

The incumbent, when entitled to the whole tithes of a parish, was termed a '*rector'. By the system of appropriations the tithes of a parish appropriated belonged to the 'appropriator'. He was compelled to provide and endow a clergyman to reside in the parish and perform the ecclesiastical duties. The endowment of this clergyman, called the 'vicar', usually took the form of a portion of the glebe, together with the small tithes, because they were troublesome to collect. If there were both a rector (or appropriator) and a vicar, the rector normally had the great tithes and the vicar the small.

Originally and in theory all land in England was subject to tithe, but for varying reasons many lands were discharged from payment. The most frequent method of payment came to be by composition, or a fixed annual money payment in lieu of tithe. This became so general that the amount of the payment was fixed by legislation, dependent on the varying price of corn. In 1918, however, an Act of Parliament stabilized the value of tithe for seven years, irrespective of any fluctuation in the price of corn, and in 1925 steps were taken to extinguish all tithe rent charges by ordering that of the £105 which by the 1918 Act every £100 of tithe was worth, £4 10s. should be paid into a sinking fund, which by the end of a period of eighty-five years would have accumulated sufficient funds to redeem the whole of the tithe rent charges in the country. This process was accelerated in 1936 by a further Act which immediately extinguished all tithe rent charges and authorized the Treasury to issue in return tithe redemption stock to such an amount as would yield interest equivalent to the rent charge. In return an annuity was charged upon the land, for a period of sixty years, of £91 11s. 2d. for every £100 of tithe rent charge on agricultural land, and of £105 on non-agricultural land. The Tithe Act of 1951 made certain procedural amendments, with particular reference to the provision of an annuities register, apportionment of annuities and compensation for extinguished rent charges. Further legislation in 1962 (Finance Act, section 2) provided for voluntary (and in some cases also compulsory) redemption of annuities charged under the 1936 Tithe Act. The Corn Rents Act of 1963 empowered the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to make a scheme for the apportionment and redemption of corn rents; where such a scheme is produced it operates in place of the 1936 Tithe Act. The annuities which remain are collected by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; they are a state tax on certain lands which will disappear by 1996. Thus there is now in England no such thing as tithe.

The payment of tithe has been held to be enjoined not merely by ecclesiastical law but by natural and divine law—by natural law because it is essential to the maintenance of religion, which is enjoined by the natural law; by divine law because the payment of tithes is specifically ordered in the OT, and implied in the NT (e.g. Deut. 14. 22; Mt. 10. 10, 23. 23; 1 Cor. 9. 7). But it is also held that, though tithes must be paid by natural and divine law, it is a matter for the Church to determine by whom they shall be paid and of what they shall consist. Hence it would appear that the natural and divine law is not broken if tithes as such are abolished, provided that there be some offerings or oblations in their stead sufficient to maintain the practice of religion. That these arguments have lost most of their strength in the secularized society of modern times is reflected in the recent legislation mentioned above.

The classic study is J. *Selden, The History of Tithes (1618). G. Constable, Monastic Tithes from their Origins to the Twelfth Century (Cambridge, 1964). On the practical aspects of the older legislation, J. Godolphin, Repertorium Canonicum: or An Abridgement of the Ecclesiastical Laws of this Realm (ed. 2, London, 1680), pp. 344–464, and R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2 by W. G. F. Phillimore), ii (1895), pp. 1147–1237; and for the modern legislation, H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 450–99; Ecclesiastical Law. Being a Reprint of the Title Ecclesiastical Law from Halsbury's Law of England, Third Edition (1957), pp. 457–68 (Nos. 996–1011); and R. W. Frazier, The Tithe Act, 1936, and the Rules Thereunder (1936). H. W. Clarke, A History of Tithes (1891). E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H., pp. 592–7, s.v.; ed. 3, with supplement (1948), pp. 607–12.

TITIAN (c. 1476–1576), Tiziano Vecellio or Vecelli, Venetian painter. He was a pupil of Gentile and Giovanni Bellini and in his early years much influenced by Giorgione, though he cultivated a more monumental style. To this period belongs what is perhaps his most religious work, the Tribute Money (c. 1515), esp. famous for the face of Christ with its impressive blending of sweetness and majesty. After Bellini's death (1515), Titian became the acknowledged head of the Venetian school and was connected with many European monarchs, e.g. *Charles V and Francis I. One of his most famous paintings of this time is the Assumption (Venice), a monumental work of high craftsmanship but without deeper religious feeling, whereas the Ecce Homo (1543), the Crowning with Thorns (Louvre), and the stirring St. Peter Martyr (destroyed in 1867) are fraught with tragic emotion. In his later years his compositions are remarkable for an increasing devotion to dramatic effects. His St. Sebastian (Leningrad), the Entombment (Louvre; another at the Prado), and the Annunciation (Venice) are all vivid scenes with much beauty in colouring and form, though lacking the interior spirit characteristic of medieval religious painting.

Reproductions of his paintings (in black and white), with introd. by O. Fischel (Klassiker der Kunst, iii, 1904; ed. 5, enlarged [c. 1947]). Detlev Baron von Hadeln, Tizians Handzeichnungen (1924; Eng. tr., with additional reproductions, 1927). H. Tietze, Tizian. Leben und Werk (2 vols., Phaidon Press, Vienna, 1936, vol. 2 being plates with reprod., some in colour; this latter vol. also publd., with introd. in English, Phaidon Press, London, 1937). F. Valcanover, Tutta la pittura di Tiziano (2 vols., Milan, 1960; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1965). Other modern studies include those by J. A. Crowe–G. B. Cavalcaselle (2 vols., London, 1877), G. Gronau (Berlin, 1900; Eng. tr., 1904), W. Suida (Rome, 1933), D. Cecchi (Milan, 1955; Eng. tr., 1957), G. A. dell'Acqua (Milan, 1956), and Elizabeth Ripley (London, 1962). E. Panofsky, Problems in Titian, mostly iconographic (Wrightsman Lectures, 1969). A. Venturi, Storia dell'arte italiana, ix (1928), pp. 93–386. T. Hetzer in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart begründet von U. Thieme–F. Becker, xxxiv (ed. H. Vollmer; 1940), pp. 158–72, s.v. 'Vecellio, Tiziano', with detailed bibl.

TITLE (Lat. titulus). At least since the 3rd cent., this term has been used to designate the older churches of *Rome. As several clergy were attached to each titulus, all of whom were provided with revenues for their personal maintenance, allocation to a 'Title' at ordination came to mean the provision of maintenance, which otherwise was the personal responsibility of the Pope or ordaining bishop. From this, the term has acquired the general sense of a definite spiritual charge or office with guarantee of maintenance, without appointment to which a bishop may not ordinarily ordain a man, unless he is prepared personally to support him until such time as he can prefer him to a 'Living'. The C of E rule concerning Titles is contained in can. C 5 of the 1969 Canons.

J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hftt. 1 and 2; 1918); L. *Duchesne, 'Les Titres presbytéraux et les diaconies' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, vii (1887), pp. 217–43.

TITUS, St. A disciple of St. *Paul, who calls him 'my true child after a common faith' (Tit. 1. 4 RV). He first appears on the journey to the Apostles' Council at *Jerusalem (Gal. 2. 1) and was later sent on difficult missions to *Corinth (2 Cor. 8. 6, 16 f., 23) and left behind in Crete to organize the Church there (Tit. 1. 5). Thence the Apostle ordered him to meet him at Nicopolis in Epirus (Tit. 3. 12) and afterwards sent him to Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4. 10). He is believed to have returned to Crete, of which, acc. to *Eusebius, he was the first bishop. His body was reputed to rest at Gortyna, the ancient capital of the island. After the invasion of the Saracens in 823, the head was brought to *Venice, where it has since been venerated in St. Mark's. Feast day in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 25 Aug.; in the Latin Church, 4 Jan. In the RC Church the feast was transferred to 6 Feb. by *Pius IX to avoid coincidence with the Octave of the Holy Innocents, but has now been joined with that of St. Timothy on 26 Jan.

The main literature is to be found in commentaries to the Epistle addressed to Titus, cited s.v. Timothy and Titus, Epistles to. C. K. Barrett, 'Titus' in E. E. Ellis–M. Wilcox (edd.), Neotestamentica et Semitica. Studies in honour of Matthew Black (1969), pp. 1–14. R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, ii (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 401–6. A. von *Harnack, 'Der apokryphe Brief des Paulusschülers Titus "De Dispositione Sanctimonii" ' in Sb. (Berl.), 1925, pp. 180–213. A. *Jülicher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 798–800, s.v.; E. Fascher in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1579–86, s.v. 'Titus (4)'.

TITUS, Epistle to. See Timothy and Titus, Epistles to.

TITUS (4th cent.), Bp. of Bostra. Little is known of his life except that he was involved in a controversy with the Emp. *Julian, who ordered his expulsion, and that he took part in a synod at *Antioch, in 363, which sent a letter to the Emp. *Jovian recognizing the Nicene Creed. His name has survived through his authorship of a voluminous treatise against the *Manichaeans. In its first part he gives the Christian solution of the problem of evil based on the ideas of Divine Providence and human free will; in the second he defends the OT and denounces the Manichaean falsifications of the NT. The first half of the treatise is preserved in the Greek original, but the whole now exists only in a Syriac version. Both were edited in 1859 by P. A. de *Lagarde, who recognized in the Greek text an interpolation which has been identified as a work of *Serapion of Thmuis. Titus is also the author of a work on St. Luke in the form of homilies, fragments of which have survived in later catenae.

Gk. text first publd. by J. *Basnage, Thesaurus Monumentorum Ecclesiasticorum et Historicorum, i (Antwerp, 1725), pp. 56–162; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG, xviii, 1065–1204; crit. ed. by P. A. de Lagarde (Berlin, 1859). Syriac text ed. id. (ib., 1859). J. Sickenberger, Titus von Bostra. Studien zu dessen Lukashomilien (T.U., xxi, Hft. 1; 1901). R. P. Casey, 'The Text of the Anti-Manichaean Writings of Titus of Bostra and Serapion of Thmuis' in H.T.R., xxi (1928), pp. 97–111. A. *Baumstark, 'Der Text der Mani-Zitate in der syrischen Übersetzung des Titus von Bostra' in Oriens Christianus, xxviii (1931), pp. 23–42. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 269–73; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 311. R. P. Casey in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1586–91, s.v. 'Titus (5) v. Bostra'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), col. 1143 f., s.v. 'Tite de Bostra'.

TOBIT, Book of. One of the apocryphal books of the OT. It relates the story of Tobit, a pious Jew of the captivity of Nineveh, who, in pursuit of his good works, became poor and blind in his old age. He prayed to God to deliver him, and, remembering a debt due to him from a friend in Media, sent his son Tobias there with a companion who later revealed himself as the angel *Raphael. With the assistance of the angel, Tobias rescued his kinswoman, Sarah, from the power of a demon, and married her. Raphael recovered the debt and then enabled Tobias to heal the aged Tobit of his blindness. Tobias's dog (5. 16) is the only dog favourably mentioned in Scripture.

The chief purpose of the story is to inculcate that God is faithful to such Jews as are faithful to Him and to recommend virtue, esp. almsgiving and the burial of the dead. The book exists in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Aramaic, and Hebrew versions. Its original language was Aramaic or Hebrew, and its date probably c. 200 B.C. Until modern times it was generally regarded as historical, but many now consider it a piece of folklore and find in it traces of Persian demonology. The more conservative view would admit an historical kernel, enriched by additions and legendary traits. Owing to its intrinsic charm Tobit has been one of the most popular books of the Bible. It was frequently quoted by the Fathers from the time of St. *Polycarp (Phil. 10), and was a favourite subject of Christian art, its principal scenes being represented in the Catacombs.

The Gk. text is pr. in edd. of the Septuagint (q.v.); for edd. of the Lat. text see bibl. to Old Latin Versions, also A. Neubauer, cited below; Hebr. text ed. S. *Münster (Basle, 1542); Hebr. and Syriac text also in B. *Walton's London Polyglott of 1657; Aramaic text ed. A. Neubauer (Oxford, 1878). Modern commentaries include those of D. C. Simpson in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 174–241, A. Schulte (Biblische Studien, xix, Hft. 2; 1914), M. M. Schumpp, O.P. (Exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament begründet J. Nikel, xi; Münster i.W., 1933), and F. Zimmermann (Jewish Apocryphal Literature; New York, 1958). J. Müller, Beiträge zur Erklärung und Kritik des Buches Tobit (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., xiii, 1908, pp. 1–53). D. C. Simpson, 'The Chief Recensions of the Book of Tobit' in J.T.S., xiv (1913), pp. 516–30. J. Gamberoni, Die Auslegung des Buches Tobias in der griechisch-lateinischen Kirche der Antike und der Christenheit des Westens bis 1600 (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, xxi; 1969). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, [1954]), pp. 258–84, with bibl. p. 534. A. Clamer in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1153–76, s.v. 'Tobie (Livre de)', with further refr.

TOC H. A Christian fellowship embracing men of all ages over 16, of all classes, denominations, and political opinions. Its Women's Association covers the same ground among women. It originated in Talbot House, a soldiers' club opened in 1915 at Poperinghe in Belgium under the Rev. P. T. B. Clayton, M.C., a C of E chaplain, and named after Lt. Gilbert Talbot, son of E. S. *Talbot (q.v.). In 1920 Toc H (the army signallers' method of pronouncing T H) was refounded in London and spread rapidly through Britain and English-speaking countries. It was incorporated by Royal Charter, 14 Dec. 1922. It is organized in branches and has a number of residential houses ('Marks'). The close fellowship finds its natural outlet in a great variety of Christian social service.

P. T. B. Clayton, Tales of Talbot House. Everyman's Club in Poperinghe and Ypres, 1915–1918 (1919); P. W. Monie, Toc H under Weigh [1927]. M. Harcourt, Tubby Clayton. A Personal Saga (1953).

TOKEN, Communion. See Communion Tokens.

TOLAND, JOHN (1670–1722), *Deistical writer. He was a RC Irishman who became a Protestant at the age of 16. In 1687 he entered Glasgow university, and after spending some time in English Protestant families, probably as tutor, was sent to

*Leyden, where he studied Divinity under F. Spanheim. In 1694 he went to Oxford, where in 1695 he finished his Christianity not Mysterious (publd. 1696). In it he asserted that neither God Himself nor His revelation is above the comprehension of human reason, and attributed the mysteries of Christianity to the intrusion of pagan conceptions and the machinations of priestcraft. The work roused great indignation and was condemned and caused to be burned by the Irish Parliament in 1697, and Toland fled from Ireland, whither he had returned, to England to avoid imprisonment. In 1698 he published a Life of Milton. A passage of this book, which was believed to cast doubt on the authenticity of the NT, caused great scandal, and Toland replied in his Amyntor, or a Defence of Milton's Life (1699), stating that the passage in question referred to the apocryphal writings, of which he gave a remarkable list. In 1701 he defended the Act of Succession in his book Anglia Libera, which won him the favour of the Electress Sophia, and during the next years he visited several times the courts at Hanover and Berlin. He was admitted to the intimate circle of the Prussian Queen Sophie Charlotte, to whom he addressed several letters (Letters to Serena, 1704), one of which became famous through its attempt to prove that motion is essential to matter. From 1707 to 1710 he travelled on the Continent and, after returning to England, wrote many polemical pamphlets, directed esp. against *High Churchmen and Jacobites. In 1718 appeared his Nazarenus, a treatise on the *Ebionites, and in 1720 Tetradymus, a collection of essays dealing, among other things, with the natural explanation of Scripture miracles. In the same year he published his Pantheisticon, a kind of pagan liturgy in imitation of Christian services, in which he expounded a *pantheistic creed, the term 'pantheist' having first been used by him in 1705. Though not an original thinker, Toland was one of the most influential representatives of Deism, and his books largely contributed to later discussions on the relations between reason and revelation and the genuineness of the NT books.

A Collection of Several Pieces of Mr. John Toland, now first published from his Original Manuscripts (2 vols., 1726), with Memoir of his Life and Writings [by P. Desmaizeaux], vol. i, pp. iii–xcii. An Historical Account of the Life and Writings of the late Eminently Famous Mr. John Toland by one of his most intimate friends (1722). G. Berthold, John Toland und der Monismus der Gegenwart (1876); A. Lantoine, Un Précurseur de la franc-maçonnerie: John Toland, 1670–1722 (1927). F. H. Heinemann, 'John Toland and the Age of Enlightenment' in Review of English Studies, xx (1944), pp. 125–46, with supplementary note, ib., xxv (1949), pp. 346–9; G. R. Cragg, From Puritanism to the Age of Reason. A Study of Changes in Religious Thought within the Church of England 1660 to 1700 (Cambridge, 1950), pp. 136–55; J. G. Simms, 'John Toland (1670–1722), a Donegal Heretic' in Irish Historical Studies, xvi (1969), pp. 304–20. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, i (1876), pp. 101–11, and passim. Id. in D.N.B., lvi (1898), pp. 438–42. G. C. Joyce in H.E.R.E., iv (1911), p. 534 f., s.v. 'Deism'. Bibliography by G. Carabelli (2 vols., Florence, 1975–8).

TOLEDO, Councils of. Some 30 ecclesiastical Councils took place at Toledo (Concilia Toletana) between the 5th and 16th cents., the canons of the earlier of which are preserved in the *Hispana Collection. They include the 'First' (400), directed against *Priscillianism; the 'Third' (589), when King *Recared formally renounced the *Arian Creed; the 'Fourth' (633), under St. *Isidore of Seville, which issued important liturgical regulations; and the 'Twelfth' (681), which established the primacy of the See of Toledo in the Spanish Church. For the liturgy of Toledo, see Mozarabic Rite.

Crit. ed. of the canons of the earlier Councils (1–17) in J. Vives (ed.), Concilios visigóticos e hispano-romanos (España Cristiana: Textos, i; 1963), pp. 19–33, 42–52, 107–45, 186–324, 344–69, 380–474, 482–537. An earlier ed. is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxiv, 327–562. Eng. tr. of some of the canons, with introd., in E. H. Landon, A Manual of the Councils of the Holy Church (ed. 2 by P. Landon), ii [1893], pp. 151–69. On the first, third, fourth, and twelfth councils, Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 122–5; iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 222–8, 279–81, and 540–6. Raimón d'Abadal, 'Els concilis de Tolede' in Homenaje a Johannes Vincke para el 11 de mayo 1962, i (1962–1963), pp. 21–45. J. A. de Aldama, S.J., El Símbolo Toledano I (Analecta Gregoriana, vii; 1943); J. Madoz, S.J., 'Le Symbole du IVe concile de Tolède' in R.H.E., xxxiv (1938), pp. 5–20. A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1176–1208, s.v. 'Tolède (Conciles de)'; I. Escribano Alberca in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 189–91, s.v. See also works cited under Spain, Christianity in.

TOLEDO, Rite of. An alternative name for the *Mozarabic Rite (q.v.), the use of which now survives in one of the chapels of Toledo cathedral.

TOLERATI (Lat., 'tolerated persons'). The technical name in *canon law for those excommunicate persons with whom the faithful are permitted to have intercourse of a non-religious kind. They are thus distinguished from the vitandi.

TOLERATION. Religious toleration is the leaving undisturbed of those whose faith and practice are other than one's own. It is generally held to merit commendation when it issues from respect for the natural rights of the human person to freedom of belief, but condemnation when it is due to mere indifference.

Christianity, which claims to be the only true religion, has always been dogmatically intolerant. Dissent ('heresy') within its own ranks has been anathematized time and again in the history of the Church. St. *Augustine went so far as to demand corporal punishment for heretics and schismatics; and this became the normal procedure in the Middle Ages, when, owing to the intimate connexion between Church and state, Catholic and citizen were virtually synonymous terms, and the heretic was thus considered a revolutionary endangering the foundations of society. The regular penalty in the Middle Ages was death.

The Renaissance, with its religious indifference, and the Reformation, by its revolt against the authority of the Papacy, established the conditions for the future development of the practice of toleration. The Reformers themselves, however, e.g. M. *Luther, T. *Beza, and esp. J. *Calvin, were as intolerant to dissentients as the RC Church, and the maxim of the Peace of *Augsburg (1555) ('cuius regio eius religio'), which recognized only one religion, either Catholicism or Lutheranism, in a state to the exclusion of all others, was virtually the principle adopted also in England under *Elizabeth I in favour of the C of E. In the 17th cent. the most notable instances of practical toleration were the colonies of Maryland, founded by Lord Baltimore in 1632 for persecuted Catholics, which offered asylum also to Protestants, and of Rhode Island, founded by Roger *Williams (q.v.).

In England the advocates of religious toleration long continued to be in a minority, but it was demanded esp. by *Baptists, *Congregationalists, and *Quakers, and defended by J. *Milton in his Areopagitica (to the exclusion, however, of RCs) and by such divines as W. *Chillingworth, J. *Hales, and J. *Taylor and the *Latitudinarians. It virtually became the policy of the state by the Act of Toleration (q.v.) of 1689, which excluded only RCs and Unitarians. In the same year J. *Locke published his first Letter concerning Toleration, to be followed by three others, denying the state all right of interference in religious matters and demanding toleration for all except RCs and atheists.

In the 18th cent. the prevalent religious indifferentism of the *Enlightenment led to the demand of equal liberty for all religions, and the view of life, enunciated by such writers as J.-J. *Rousseau and *Voltaire in France and G. E. *Lessing in Germany and proclaimed by the American Bill of Rights of 1776, became general. In the 19th cent. it became the accepted policy of most European states. Within the RC Church, however, the latter part of the 19th cent. witnessed a heightened authoritarianism exemplified in the *Syllabus of Errors of 1864 and the declaration of Papal *Infallibility in 1870, followed by the condemnation of *Modernism in 1907. The ensuing reactions prompted a gradual readjustment in the interpretation of ecclesiastical authority within the RC Church. Recently the growing pressure of the *Ecumenical Movement has brought about a reconsideration of the practical rights of bona fide heretics and the Second *Vatican Council gave some expression to a consequent increase of tolerance in the Declaration on Religious Freedom ('Dignitatis Humanae', 7 Dec. 1965), which emphasizes man's natural right to believe as his conscience prescribes. For all denominations, however, it has become apparent that the principle of freedom for religion is easily changed into that of freedom from religion, and the modern problem is not so much one of toleration for other religious convictions as that of the preservation of religion in view of the general indifference and secularization of life.

Collection of extracts, in Fr. tr., from writers defending religious toleration from the Reformation onwards, with introd., ed. J. Leclerc, S.J.–M. F. Valkhoff, Les Premiers Défenseurs de la liberté religieuse (2 vols. [1969]). F. Ruffini, La libertà religiosa, i. Storia dell'idea (Turin, 1901; no more publ.; Eng. tr. 1912); A. Vermeersch, S.J., La Tolérance (Louvain, 1912; Eng. tr., 1913). A. F. Carrillo de Albornoz, The Basis of Religious Liberty (1963). N. Paulus, Protestantismus und Toleranz im 16. Jahrhundert (Freiburg i.B., 1911). J. Leclerc, S.J., Histoire de la tolérance au siècle de la réforme (Théologie, xxxi; 2 vols., 1955; Eng. tr., 1960). R. H. Bainton, The Travail of Religious Liberty (Philadelphia [1951]; London, 1953). W. K. Jordan, The Development of Religious Toleration in England (4 vols., 1932–40).

TOLERATION, Edict of (313). See Milan, Edict of.

TOLERATION ACT. The Act of 1689 (1 Will. & Mary, c. 18) granting freedom of worship to dissenters on certain prescribed conditions. Its real purpose was to unite all Protestants under William III against the deposed RC *James II. It exempted from the penalties of existing statutes against conventicles persons who took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy (though Dissenters continued to be barred from civil office until 1828; see Corporation and Test Acts) and relieved dissenting ministers from religious disabilities provided that, in addition to the oaths, they signed the *Thirty-nine Articles (except two requiring Infant Baptism). *Quakers might make an *affirmation instead of taking the oaths. Roman Catholics and disbelievers in the Trinity did not benefit under this Act.

Text in Gee–Hardy, pp. 654–64 (No. cxxiii).

TOLSTOY, LEO (1828–1910), Russian novelist and social reformer. From 1845 to 1847 he studied at the university of Kazan, but did not take a degree. Under the influence of J.-J. *Rousseau's writings he became an enthusiast for social reform, anxious to relieve the miseries of the serfs. In 1851 he joined the Russian army. His Tales from Sebastopol (1855) at once attracted literary notice. In this period he also began the serial publication of his autobiographical fragments (1852–6), describing the mental struggles of his youth. He left the army in 1855 and from 1857 to 1861 travelled in Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland, and England, studying educational methods and writing in support of reforms; and he established schools on his estates in which the children were given the utmost liberty. In 1862 he married Sophia Behrs, by whom he had 13 children. In the next years there followed his two most famous novels, War and Peace (1864–9) and Anna Karenina (1873–7). After 1877 he renounced his literary ambitions, believing them to be incompatible with his deepest convictions. All his later works were on moral and religious subjects and his output was considerable. He was deeply influenced by a close study of A. *Schopenhauer's writings and became very critical of the formalism of the Orthodox Church, which eventually excommunicated him in 1901. He sought to live in great simplicity, renouncing his property and the happiness of family life, engaging in manual labour and striving ceaselessly for the relief of social distress during the great famine of 1891–2. In 1895 he actively took up the cause of the persecuted *Doukhobors, writing in their defence his last great novel, Resurrection (1899).

Tolstoy's religious teaching in its latest phase claimed to be a following of the Gospels when the miraculous and other irrelevancies are set aside. The key was to be found in the *Sermon on the Mount, which could be resolved into five wholly new commandments, viz.: (1) the suppression of anger, even righteous indignation, and living in peace with all men; (2) the complete exclusion of sex relationships outside marriage; (3) the wrongfulness of oaths; (4) non-resistance to evil and the consequent refusal to act as judges or police officers; (5) unreserved love of one's enemies. These, and not the doctrines of the Atonement, the Resurrection, the Trinity and personal immortality, were the central tenets of the Christian message. He did not accept the divinity of Christ and he believed that man's greatest good consisted in the fulfilment of God's will that men should love one another. The increase of love in individuals would do away with the evils of the existing order and lead to the establishment of the kingdom of God in the world.

Eng. tr. of his works ed. L. Wiener (24 vols., London–Boston, Mass., 1904–5, incl. life by the translator in vol.

xxiv, pp. 205–317, and bibl. to date of works in Eng., Germ., and Fr., pp. 403–35; but includes some works not by Tolstoy); better Eng. tr., mainly by A. Maude–Louise Maude (Tolstoy Centenary Edition, ed. A. Maude, 21 vols., London, 1928–37). Life by A. Maude, 2 vols., London, 1908–10; abridged ed., ib., 1918; full life also repr. in Centenary ed., vols. i–ii. Many of his works have also been translated separately. C. A. Behrs's Recollections of Count Tolstoy were tr. into Eng. by C. E. Turner (London, 1893); the Reminiscences of Tolstoy by his son, Count Ilya Tolstoy, were tr. into Eng. by G. Calderon (ib., 1914); a number of articles on Tolstoy by members of his family collected by R. Fülöp-Miller were tr. into Eng. under the title Family Views of Tolstoy, ed. A. Maude (1926); Tolstoy Remembered by his son Sergei Tolstoy, orig. publd. in Moscow, 1949, was tr. into Eng. in 1961. A life, written with Tolstoy's co-operation, by P. Birukoff was publd. in 4 vols., Moscow, 1906–23; Eng. tr. of vol. i, 1906; an abridged version was tr. into Eng. in 1911. There is a wide range of studies on Tolstoy; those available in English include the works of R. Rolland (Paris, 1911; Eng. tr., 1911), D. Leon (London, 1944, also with bibl.), E. J. Simmons (Boston, 1946; London, 1949), H. Troyat (originally called L. Tarassov; Paris, 1965; Eng. tr., New York, 1967; London, 1968; Penguin ed., 1970) and R. F. Christian (Cambridge, 1969). I. Berlin, The Hedgehog and the Fox. An Essay on Tolstoy's View of History (New York, 1957). G. Steiner, Tolstoy or Dostoevsky. An Essay in Contrast (1960). G. W. Spence, Tolstoy the Ascetic (1967). E. J. Simmons, Introduction to Tolstoy's Writings (1969).

TOME OF DAMASUS, The. A collection of 24 canons endorsed by a Roman synod (prob. the important one of 382 at which St. *Ambrose assisted) and subsequently sent by Pope *Damasus to Paulinus, then recognized at Rome as the legitimate Bp. of Antioch. In some MSS. the canons are appended to the Creed of *Nicaea. Twenty-three of them are dogmatic, anathematizing the principal Trinitarian and Christological heresies of the 4th cent. (without, however, naming *Apollinarius or *Marcellus of Ancyra). The ninth is disciplinary, condemning the translation of bishops, and was directed against *Melitius of Antioch. The influence of St. Ambrose may be detected in the 24th canon, which condemns tritheistic or *subordinationist interpretations of the Trinity.

The text is first found in *Arnobius Junior, Conflictus de deo trino et uno, ii. 32 (repr. in PL, liii. 319–22), and (in Gk.) in *Theodoret, H.E., v. 11. The Latin and Greek texts are critically edited in E.O.M.I.A., I. ii (1), 1913, pp. 281–96. Lat. text also repr in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33; 1965), pp. 68–70 (Nos. 152–77). P. Galtier, 'Le "Tome de Damase": date et origine', in Rech. S.R., xxvi (1936), pp. 385–418, 563–78.

TOME OF LEO, The. The letter sent by Pope *Leo I (Ep. 28) to *Flavian, Patr. of *Constantinople, on 13 June 449, also called Epistola Dogmatica. Basing himself on the teaching of the Fathers, esp. *Tertullian and St. *Augustine, St. Leo expounds with remarkable clarity, precision, and vigour the Christological doctrine of the Latin Church. Acc. to it Jesus Christ is One Person, viz. the Divine Word, in whom are two natures, the Divine and the human, permanently united, though unconfused and unmixed. Each of these exercises its own particular faculties, but within the unity of the Person. Hence follows the '*communicatio idiomatum', so that it can truly be said that the Son of Man descended from heaven, and that the Son of God was crucified. The letter, which was directed esp. against the heresy of *Eutyches, was given formal authority by the Council of *Chalcedon (451) as the classic statement of the Catholic doctrine of the Incarnation: 'Peter has spoken through Leo'. Later it was constantly used in the controversies with the Monophysites.

Text in P. and H. *Ballerini's ed. of Leo, i (1753), cols. 793–838, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, liv, 755–82. Crit. ed. in A.C.O., II. 2. i (1932), pp. 24–33; also by C. Silva-Tarouca, S.J. (Rome, 1932), Gk. text in A.C.O., II. 1. i (1933), pp. 10–20; on this cf. G. L. Prestige, 'The Greek Translation of the Tome of St. Leo', in J.T.S., xxxi (1929–30), p. 183 f. P. Mouterde, S.J., 'Les Versions syriaques du tome de saint Léon' in Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph, Beyrouth, xvi (1932), pp. 121–65, with Syr. text pp. 146–65.

TOMMASI, GIUSEPPE MARIA (1649–1713), liturgical scholar. The eldest son of the Duke of Palma, he resigned his claims as heir in favour of his younger brother in 1664 and entered the Order of the *Theatines, in which he was professed in 1666. After studying at Messina, Rome, and Palermo, he was ordained priest in 1673 and henceforth devoted himself completely to Biblical, patristic, and above all liturgical studies, leading at the same time a life of great austerity. Of his numerous publications, many of them under the pseudonym of 'J. M. Carus', his editions of the ancient *Sacramentaries and *Missals are esp. valuable. They include the Codices Sacramentorum Nongentis Annis Vetustiores (1680), which comprises Gallican books and contains the editiones principes of the '*Missale Gothicum' and the '*Missale Francorum', the Responsalia et Antiphonaria Romanae Ecclesiae a Sancto Gregorio Magno disposita (1686), and Antiqui Libri Missarum Romanae Ecclesiae (1691), as well as several editions of the Psalter and of Biblical texts used in the liturgy of the first ten centuries. A project for a reformed and much simplified *Breviary was probably written in 1706 (ed. J. W. Legg in the publications of the *Church Historical Society, 1904). Tommasi was made a cardinal in 1712 and beatified in 1803. Commemoration, 24 Mar.

An edition of his works was begun by J. Bianchini (Rome, 1741; vol. i (in parts) only publd.); new ed. by A. F. Vezzozi, Theatine (7 vols., ib., 1747–54); continued with his Institutiones Theologicae, ed. id. (4 vols., ib., 1769), with life prefixed to vol. i. Opuscoli inediti, ed. G. *Mercati (S.T., xv; 1905). Lives by A. Borromeo (Venice, 1713) and D. Bernino (Rome, 1714). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (1953), col. 2428 f., s.v.

TONGUES, Gift of. See Glossolalia.

TONSURE. The shaving of all or part of the head, traditionally a distinctive feature of monks and clerics in the RC Church; it was formerly prescribed by Canon Law (cf. CIC, 136) for all clerics, except in places where, as in England and U.S.A., it was not in accordance with popular usage. The cutting of the hair, a religious ceremony of many E. peoples, became a generally received custom in 4th and 5th cent. monasticism and thence was introduced into the W. as the form of admission to the clerical state, distinct from Minor Orders, in the 6th and 7th cents. From the 16th cent. onwards it became customary to shave only a small space on the crown of the head of the secular clergy and in modern times the shaving of some hair during the admission of a layman to the clerical state became purely symbolic. It has no place in the 1972 Rite of Admission to the *Clerical State. Among monks various congregations now follow different customs in the matter.

Classic study by G. Chamillard, De Corona, Tonsura et Habitu Clericorum Locuples cum veterum tum recentiorum Canonum, Pontificarumque Constitutionum etc. Collectio (Paris, 1659). E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, ii (Rouen, 1700), pp. 294–301 (Lib. I, cap. viii, art. 7: 'De Tonsura Clericali'); id., De Antiquis Monachorum Ritibus

(Lyons, 1690), pp. 723–35 (Lib. V, cap. vii: 'De Tonsura et Rasura Fratrum'). There is a useful appendix by J. Smith to his ed. of *Bede, H.E. (Cambridge, 1722), pp. 705–15 (Appendix No. IXb: 'De Tonsura Clericorum'), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xcv, 327–32. The best modern study is that of P. Gobillot, 'Sur la tonsure chrétienne et ses prétendues origines païennes' in R.H.E., xxi (1925), pp. 399–451. F. E. Warren in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1989 f., s.v.; C. Neudecker–A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xix (1907), pp. 836–9, s.v. 'Tonsur'; J. A. MacCulloch in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), p. 385 f., s.v.; A. Michel in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1228–35, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2430–43, s.v. See also commentaries on the Codex Juris Canonici, ad loc.

TOPHET. A place or object in the valley of Hinnom, immediately to the south-west of *Jerusalem, where human sacrifices were burned by idolatrous Israelites in the worship of Moloch (2 Kgs. 23. 10, Jer. 7. 31, &c.).

TOPLADY, AUGUSTUS MONTAGUE (1740–1778), author and hymn writer. He was a native of Farnham, Surrey, and educated at Westminster School and *Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained priest in 1764 and in 1768 became vicar of Broad Hembury in Devonshire. At first he fell under J. *Wesley's influence, but in 1758 he was converted to extreme *Calvinist opinions and henceforward bitterly attacked Wesley. His position was set out in his most important prose work, The Historic Proof of the Doctrinal Calvinism of the Church of England (1774), in which he developed his subject from the *Apostolic Fathers downwards. He also wrote on the same subject *The Church of England Vindicated from the Charge of Arminianism (2 vols., 1769). Toplady, however, is remembered esp. for his hymns, of which he published several collections. His well-known 'Rock of Ages' first appeared in the Gospel Magazine in 1775, though the tradition that he wrote it while sheltering in the Mendips from a storm is without foundation.

Works publd. 6 vols., London, 1794, with memoir [by W. Row] in vol. i, pp. 1–125; new ed., 6 vols., ib., 1825. Separate ed. of his Hymns and Sacred Poems on a Variety of Divine Subjects (London, 1860). Life by T. Wright ('The Lives of British Hymnwriters', ii; 1911). Modern study by G. Lawton in preparation. H. L. Bennett in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 57–9.

TORAH. The English equivalent of the Heb. תּוֹרָה, usually translated 'Law'. The word probably comes from a root meaning 'throw', 'shoot', 'direct', 'instruct'. Although it could be used of the teaching of the Prophets (e.g. Is. 8. 16), of the precepts of parents (e.g. Prov. 1. 8, 4. 2), and of the utterances of wise men (e.g. Prov. 13. 14), for all of which the OT writers characteristically claim a Divine origin, it was pre-eminently the function of the priests to give 'torah' or instruction on the Will of God (e.g. Jer. 18. 18), and it was for their failure in, or misuse of, this aspect of the priestly office that the Prophets denounced them (e.g. Mic. 3. 11, Zeph. 3. 4). By a natural development, 'torah' came to be used also of written collections of such priestly decisions (e.g. Hos. 8. 12), and so of the Pentateuch as containing the Mosaic legislation, as well as of individual laws within that legislation (e.g. Lev. 7. 1).

TORGAU ARTICLES, The. A memorandum summarizing the disciplinary and ceremonial demands of the four Reformers, M. *Luther, P. *Melanchthon, J. *Bugenhagen, and J. *Jonas. It was compiled in Mar.-Apr. 1530, and handed in by the Kurfürst John to the Diet of *Augsburg. The name is misleading, as no gathering at Torgau of the four theologians mentioned ever took place.

Text in Corpus Reformatorum, xxvi (1858), pp. 171–200. T. Brieger, 'Die Torgauer Artikel' in Kirchengeschichtliche Studien Hermann Reuter zum 70. Geburtstag gewidmet (1888), pp. 265–320. See also bibl. to Augsburg Confession.

TORQUEMADA, JUAN DE (1388–1468), 'Turrecremata', Spanish theologian. In 1403 he entered the *Dominican Order. In 1417 he accompanied his provincial to the Council of *Constance and from there went to Paris to finish his studies. Having been prior of the houses of his order at Valladolid and Toledo, he was made master of the Sacred Palace by *Eugenius IV in 1431 and Papal theologian at the Council of *Basle in 1433. He took an active part in the negotiations with the Bohemians and with the Greeks on the question of reunion, was created Cardinal of St. Sixtus in 1439, and till the end of his life had a decisive share in ecclesiastical Papal policy. His most important works are the 'Commentarii in Decretum Gratiani' (publd. 1519) on canon law, and the 'Summa de Ecclesia' (publd. 1489), a systematic treatise on the Church, defending the infallibility and plenitude of the spiritual power of the Pope, but taking only a moderate view of his temporal power. An edition of his treatise De Veritate Conceptionis B. Virginis (publd. 1547; rejecting the *Immaculate Conception) was issued by E. B. *Pusey in 1869.

Modern edd. of his Apparatus super decretum Florentinum Unionis Graecorum, ed. E. Candal, S.J. (Concilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, ii, fasc. 1; 1942); Oratio Synodalis de Primatu, ed. id. (ib., iv, fasc 2; 1954), and of his Tractatus contra Madianitas et Ismaelitas by N. L. Martínez-V. P. Gil (Burgos, 1957). S. Lederer, Der spanische Cardinal Johann von Torquemada, sein Leben und seine Schriften (1879). J. F. Stockmann, Joannis de Turrecremata, O.P., Vita eiusque Doctrina de Corpore Christi Mystico (Bologna, 1951); K. Binder, Wesen und Eigenschaften der Kirche bei Kardinal Juan de Torquemada O.P. (Innsbruck, 1955); P. Massi, Magistero infallibile del Papa nella teologia di Giovanni da Torquemada (Scrinium Theologicum, viii; 1957). Quétif-Echard, i, pp. 837–43. A. Michels in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1235–9. Further bibl. in Fliche-Martin, xiv (parts 1–3; 1962), p. 286 f. (note 4 f.).

TORQUEMADA, TOMAS DE (1420–98), Spanish Grand Inquisitor. A nephew of Juan de *Torquemada, he entered the Dominican Order at Valladolid at an early age. He subsequently became prior at Segovia, an office he retained for 22 years, and confessor to *Ferdinand and *Isabella of Spain. As Christianity in the country was at that time much troubled by the great numbers of Jewish Marranos and Mohammedan Moriscos, *Sixtus IV, in 1478, permitted the monarchs to establish the *Inquisition in their realm. After being made assistant inquisitor in 1482, Torquemada was appointed Grand Inquisitor in 1483. He set up tribunals in various cities and in 1484 laid down directions for the guidance of Inquisitors which he later expanded in his chief work, 'Compilación de las Instrucciones de la santa Inquisición' (publd. 1576). His methods, which have often been accused of inhuman cruelty, were in accordance with the customs of his time which included torture in its normal judicial procedure. The number of burnings during his term of office, formerly greatly exaggerated, is now usually given as about 2,000. Torquemada was also chiefly responsible for the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492 as an alternative to their being baptized.

E. de Molènes (ed.), Documents inédits. Torquemada et l'Inquisition, la Jurisprudence du Saint-Office, l'Enfant de la Guardia, le Cœur et l'Hostie, Sortilèges et vénéfices, Sentences et autodafés, l'Expulsion des Juifs, les Procès à la mort (1897). R. Sabatini, Torquemada and the Spanish Inquisition (1913); E. Lucka, Torquemada und die spanische Inquisition (1926); T. Hope, Torquemada, Scourge of the Jews (1939). Quétif-Échard, i, p. 892 f.

TORRES, FRANCISCO, also 'Turrianus' (c. 1504–1584), patristic scholar and RC controversialist. After studying at Salamanca he went to Rome, where he became a well-known controversial author. From 1562 to 1563 he was at the Council of *Trent as Papal theologian. In 1563 he brought out the first edition of the '*Apostolic Constitutions', attributing them to St. *Clement of Rome. In 1566 he entered the *Jesuit Order, and later was appointed professor at the Roman College, where he was one of the scholars entrusted with the revision of the official *Vulgate. He sought to defend the authenticity of the '*Apostolic Canons', the *False Decretals, and the 80 *Nicene Canons, all of them spurious, as well as that of the (genuine) Acts of the Sixth and Seventh General Councils. He was a very voluminous writer, but he had little critical sense. In his controversial writings he upheld the *Immaculate Conception, the superiority of the Pope over Councils, and the Divine origin of episcopal authority.

Sommervogel, viii (1898), cols. 113–26. J. P. Grausem, S.J., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), col. 1239 f., s.v., with bibl.

TOSEFTA (Heb., 'supplement'). A collection of early Jewish traditions of the same character as and contemporary with, but not incorporated in, the *Mishnah (q.v.). It contains so-called baraita material (i.e. material which pre-dates the formation of the Mishnah, but was not included in the Mishnah). Like the Mishnah it has six main divisions, each of which is subdivided into tractates. It contains a much larger proportion of *Haggadic elements than the Mishnah.

Eng. trans. of the Tractates Sanhedrin (S.P.C.K., 1919), Berakoth (id., 1921) and Sukkah (id., 1925), in each case with the corresponding Mishnah Tractate. J. Z. Lauterbach in J.E., xii (1906), pp. 206–8.

TOTAL DEPRAVITY. A term in common use esp. in *Calvinism to express the extreme wretchedness of man's condition as the result of the *Fall. It emphasizes the belief that this result was not a mere loss or deprivation of a supernatural endowment possessed by unfallen man, but a radical corruption or depravation of his whole nature, so that apart from Christ he can do nothing whatever pleasing to God. Even his reason has been radically vitiated, so that, acc. to Calvinism, all natural knowledge of God (such as obtains in the system of St. *Thomas Aquinas) is held to be impossible.

TOTAL IMMERSION. See Submersion.

TOTEMISM. A phenomenon partly social, partly magical (or, acc. to some, religious), found among primitive peoples, by which the members of a tribe believe themselves to be associated with and named after a species of animal or plant. It is commonly held that the totem has a holy and sacrosanct nature and is therefore an object of worship, and that its flesh is untouchable save at a tribal feast where the eponymous animal is ritually slain and eaten by the members of the tribe who thus identify themselves with their god. A theory has been put forward that totemism is an early phase of all religion, and it has been suggested that the prevalence of animal and plant names among Canaanite place-names and the fact that the tribes of Israel were descended from Leah ('wild cow') and Rachel ('ewe') indicate a totemic ancestry for the religion of the Hebrews and therefore for Christianity; but the evidence for this thesis is altogether too slender to give it any show of probability.

J. G. Frazer, Totemism and Exogamy. A Treatise on Certain Early Forms of Superstition and Society (4 vols., 1910; Supplementary vol., Totemica, 1937). A. R. Radcliffe-Brown, 'The Sociological Theory of Totemism', repr. in his Structure and Function in Primitive Society (1952), pp. 117–32. C. Lévi-Strauss, Le Totémisme aujourd'hui (1962; Eng. tr., 1964), with bibl. W. R. *Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites. The Fundamental Institutions (1889; ed. 3 rev. by S. A. *Cook, 1927). E. S. Hartland in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 393–407, s.v.

TOUCHING FOR THE KING'S EVIL. See King's Evil, Touching for the.

TOWER OF BABEL. See Babel, Tower of.

TRACT (Liturgical). The chant formerly sung or recited at Mass on certain penitential days instead of the *Alleluia. It is already mentioned in the oldest Roman *Ordines. It was originally the Psalm chanted after the second Lesson, but this was later supplanted by the Alleluia, though preserved on days of penance and mourning. It differed from the *Gradual in that it was chanted without a responsory (Lat. tractim, 'straight through'), but acc. to recent scholars its name is probably not derived from this, as formerly assumed, but is connected with the Greek εἰρμός ('train', 'series'), a technical term of Greek musical theory denoting a typical tune by which the several parts of a hymn are joined together. Some tracts such as that of the First Sunday in *Lent and of *Palm Sunday preserved almost the whole Psalm, whereas most others were reduced to a few verses. The tract was said on the Sundays from Septuagesima till Easter and on the Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays of Lent; also on the Saturdays in Ember Weeks (when it replaced the Gradual), and in Masses for the Dead. It was suppressed by the Ordo Missae of 1969.

Jungmann, M.S. (ed. 1958), i, pp. 550–52 (Eng. tr., i (1951), p. 430 f.). On the musical settings, H. Hucke in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, xiii (1966), cols. 607–12, s.v. 'Tractus', with bibl.; M. Huglo in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 221 f., s.v.

TRACT (Propagandist) (Lat. tractare, 'to treat of the matter'). A pamphlet, usually issued with a religious or moral purpose. Its early history is obscure, but many medieval works, e.g. the lesser English works of J. Wycliffe, come under this heading. The religious controversies of the 16th and 17th cents. stimulated the production of tracts which often (e.g. under the Commonwealth) reached vast proportions. The abusive Marprelate Tracts (1588) are an instance from the age of *Elizabeth I. The *Bangorian Controversy also inspired a number of tracts. On the Tracts for the Times (1833–45) see foll. entry. Various tract societies have been formed, among them the *S.P.C.K. (1698) and the *Religious Tract Society (1799).

TRACTARIANISM. A name for the earlier stages of the *Oxford Movement, derived from the Tracts for the Times issued under its aegis. The purpose of the tracts was to disseminate Church principles 'against Popery and Dissent'. The first, written by J. H. *Newman and published with two others on 9 Sept. 1833, was a 4-page leaflet entitled 'Thoughts on the Ministerial Commission respectfully addressed to the Clergy' and containing a defence of the Apostolic Succession. Others followed rapidly and on 21 Dec. appeared E. B. *Pusey's first tract ('Thoughts on the Benefits of the System of Fasting enjoined by our Church'; No. 18 of the series). The other tract writers included J. *Keble, J. W. Bowden (1798–1844), A. P. *Perceval, R. H. *Froude, C. *Marriott, and I. *Williams. They secured a wide circulation, and their influence, as the first public utterances of the Oxford Movement, was enormous. Their form gradually changed from brief leaflets to learned treatises. On 25 Jan. 1841 Newman's famous Tract 90 ('Remarks on Certain Passages in the Thirty-Nine Articles') appeared; the storm which it provoked brought the series to an end.

The Tracts were issued in bound volumes as follows: vol. i, numbers 1–46 (1834); ii, numbers 47–70 (1836); iii, numbers 71–77 (1836); iv, numbers 78–82 (1838); v, numbers 83–88 (1840). For the reputed authors of the Tracts see the lists by H. P. *Liddon in Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, iii (1894), Appendix, pp. 473–80, and J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men (1891), Appendix D, pp. 475–6. R. D. Middleton, 'Tract Ninety' in J.E.H., ii (1951), pp. 81–101. See also bibl. on Oxford Movement.

TRACTATUS ORIGENIS (Lat., 'Tractates of Origen'). A collection of twenty Homilies on the Scriptures, nineteen of them on OT texts, first publd. in 1900 by P. *Batiffol and A. *Wilmart, O.S.B. In the 10th-cent. Orléans MS. and the 12th-cent. St.-Omer MS. where they are preserved, they are ascribed to *Origen. Batiffol held that their Gk. originals were really the work of Origen; but it is now generally agreed, following G. *Morin's earlier view, that they were the work of *Gregory, Bp. of Elvira (q.v.).

P. Batiffol–A. Wilmart, O.S.B., Tractatus Origenis de Libris SS. Scripturarum (Paris, 1900). G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Les Nouveaux Tractatus Origenis et l'héritage littéraire de l'évêque espagnol Grégoire d'Illiberis' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, v (1900), pp. 145–61. Hugo Koch, 'Zu Gregors von Elvira Schrifttum und Quellen' in Z.K.G., li (1932), pp. 238–72. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 370.

TRACTORIA. Originally a 'letter of summons' (from Lat. trahere, 'to convey', i.e. by the cursus publicus or postal service), the word was applied also to letters containing the decisions of Councils. It is used esp. of the (lost) 'Epistola Tractoria' of *Zosimus (417–18), in which that Pope reversed his previous support of *Pelagianism.

The chief fragments of Zosimus's Ep. Tractoria are preserved in *Augustine, Ep. 190. 23, and in *Prosper of Aquitaine, Auctoritates, cap. 9; repr. with others in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 693–5.

TRADITIO-HISTORICAL CRITICISM (Germ. Überlieferungsgeschichte). The study of the development of texts and motifs (often with particular reference to oral transmission), the circumstances in the life of the community in which they were created and its cultural background. In Biblical criticism the term goes back at least to H. *Gunkel, but it is most commonly used by Scandinavian scholars, esp. I. Engnell and those whom he has influenced. Despite the claims of some of its proponents, it is hard to see that it is a different discipline from Form-Criticism (q.v.) in the wider sense of that term.

I. Engnell in Svenskt Bibliskt Uppslagsverk (ed. 2), ii (1962), cols. 1254–61, s.v. 'Traditionshistorisk metod'; Eng. tr. as 'The Traditio-Historical Method in Old Testament Research' in his Critical Essays on the Old Testament (1970), pp. 3–11. K. Koch, Was ist Formgeschichte? (Neukirchen, 1964), esp. pp. 159–62; Eng. tr. (1969), pp 80–2.

TRADITIO SYMBOLI (Lat., the 'delivery' or 'handing over of the Creed'). During early times candidates for baptism, who were mainly adults, were subjected to a long course of instruction before admission to the sacrament. Their training was both practical and doctrinal, as in modern 'Confirmation classes', and the latter part of it consisted of explanations of the Creed. This was the 'delivery' or traditio, made by the teacher to the candidates, who thus 'received the creed' into their own keeping. At their baptism they were required to recite and profess the Creed, thus 'returning it' (redditio symboli) to the presiding bishop. The ceremony has been restored in the 1972 RC Order for Adult Baptism.

For main literature see histories of Baptism, cited s.v. J. Barbet–C. Lambot, O.S.B., 'Nouvelle Tradition du symbole de rit gallican' in R. Bén., lxxv (1965), pp. 335–45.

TRADITION. In the early Christian Fathers, tradition (παράδοσις, traditio) means the revelation made by God and delivered by Him to His faithful people through the mouth of His prophets and apostles. It does not mean something 'handed down' but something 'handed over'. Similarly in the NT the word, or its corresponding verb, is applied equally to the betrayal of Christ by *Judas to the Jews, and to the delivery of Christian teaching by St. *Paul to his converts. The tradition was at first called 'apostolic', because delivered by the apostles to the Churches which they founded, and later also 'ecclesiastic', because delivered again in each generation by the Church's teachers to their people. Its substance was held to consist of the central facts and beliefs crystallized in the creeds of the great orthodox bishoprics. From the beginning of the 3rd cent. the tradition was sometimes expressly identified with the Gospel record contained in Scripture. The occasional references in early Christian literature to an 'unwritten tradition' left by the apostles appear to relate not to any body of information independent of Scripture, but to the evidence of primitive Christian institutions and customs which confirms Scriptural teaching.

In a more modern sense, tradition means the continuous stream of explanation and elucidation of the primitive faith, illustrating the way in which Christianity has been presented and understood in past ages. It is, that is, the accumulated wisdom of the past. Sometimes, again, it means simply customs and ideas which have grown up imperceptibly and been accepted more or less uncritically. All tradition in these modern senses needs to have its true value proved by the double test—(1) whether it is in accordance with the principles embodied in divine revelation, and (2) whether it can be justified by right reason.

In the Reformation era the relation of unwritten tradition to the Scriptural revelation was the subject of acute controversy between Protestants and Catholics. As against the Protestant belief in the sole sufficiency of the Bible, the Council of *Trent (Sess. iv. 8; 8 Apr. 1546) laid down that Scripture and tradition were to be received as of equal authority (pari pietatis affectu ac reverentia). In recent years it has been argued that, contrary to popular belief, the Tridentine decision did not imply that Scripture and tradition were the two sources (fontes) of revelation, and some RC writers have held that all revelation is materially contained in the Scriptures. The Dogmatic Constitution on Revelation of the Second *Vatican Council minimizes the distinction, stating that Scripture and tradition 'flow from the same divine wellspring, merge into a unity and tend to the same end' (Section 9).

J. B. *Bossuet, Défense de la tradition et des saints pères (2 vols., 1763); J. B. *Franzelin, Tractatus de Divina Traditione et Scriptura (Rome, 1870); J. Bainvel, De Magisterio Vivo et Traditione (Paris, 1905). M. Winkler, Der Traditionsbegriff des Urchristentums bis Tertullian (1897). G. L. Prestige, 'Tradition' in Fathers and Heretics (1940), pp. 1–46; W. *Sanday and N. P. *Williams, Form and Content in the Christian Tradition. A Friendly Discussion (1916); C. H. *Turner, Catholic and Apostolic (1931). A. M. *Fairbairn, Catholicism: Roman and Anglican (1899). A. Deneffe, S.J., Der Traditionsbegriff (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, Heft xviii; 1931); O. *Cullmann, La Tradition. Problème exégétique, historique et théologique (1953); Y. M. J. Congar, O.P., La Tradition et les traditions (2 vols., 1960–3; Eng. tr., 1966); R. P. C. Hanson, Tradition in the Early Church (1962); J. R. Geiselmann, Die Heilige Schrift und die Tradition (Quaestiones Disputatae, xviii; 1962; Eng. tr., 1966); J. P. Mackey, The Modern Theology of Tradition (1962); id., Tradition and Change in the Church (Dublin, 1968); De Scriptura et Traditione, ed. C. Balić, O.F.M. (Rome, 1963); F. F. Bruce, Tradition Old and New (Exeter, 1970).

TRADITION OF THE INSTRUMENTS. See Instruments, Tradition of the.

TRADITIONALISM. In its strict sense a theory proposed by a group of 19th-cent. RC thinkers, acc. to which all metaphysical, moral, and religious knowledge is based on a primitive revelation of God to man handed down in an unbroken tradition. Denying to human reason the power of attaining by itself to any truths, esp. those of natural theology, it makes an act of faith in a revealed tradition the origin of all knowledge. It was historically a reaction from 18th-cent. rationalism in the direction of the other extreme and flourished chiefly in France and Belgium. Among its advocates were L. G. A. de Bonald (1754–1840) and F. R. de *Lamennais and of esp. influence was the latter's Essai sur l'indifférence en matière de religion (4 vols., 1817–23) with its doctrine of the 'sens commun'. To restore belief to the modern world the Traditionalists aimed at removing it from discussion by individual reason and at imposing it by the authority of the common consent of mankind, which, acc. to Lamennais, is invested with infallibility. Modified forms of the doctrine were held by L. E. M. Bautain (1796–1867), A. Bonnetty (1798–1879), and G. C. *Ubaghs (q.v.) and the philosophers of the Louvain school. Though the insistence on the social nature of man and on the importance of tradition in religion were orthodox elements in the teaching of Traditionalism, its fundamental distrust of human reason could not but eventually lead to scepticism. It was officially condemned by a number of decrees, and finally ruled out as a possible Catholic system by the constitution 'De fide catholica' at the *Vatican Council of 1870.

The word is also used less strictly by liberal theologians, usually with a more or less opprobrious nuance, of what they consider unduly conservative beliefs.

The condemnations of E. Bautin and A. Bonnetty are conveniently repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 553 f. (Nos. 2751–6) and 562 f. (Nos. 2811–14). J. Lupus, Le Traditionalisme et le rationalisme examinés au point de vue de la philosophie et de la doctrine catholique (3 vols., Liège, 1858). J. Henry, 'Le Traditionalisme et l'ontologisme à l'université de Louvain (1835–1865)' in Annales de l'Institut Supérieur de Philosophie [at Louvain], v (1924), pp. 41–149, with bibl. reff. S. A. Matczak in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 228–30, s.v.

TRADITORS. The name given in Africa in early times to Christians who surrendered the Scriptures when their possession was forbidden in the persecution of *Diocletian. The controversy between Catholics and *Donatists which followed the persecution was centred chiefly in the refusal of the Donatists to recognize *Caecilian, Bp. of Carthage, on the ground that he had been consecrated by traditors.

TRADUCIANISM (Lat. tradux, 'shoot', 'sprout'). The theory acc. to which the human soul is transmitted by the parents to the children. The term is sometimes restricted to the crudely materialistic view which asserts that this happens in the physical act of generation; it is then distinguished from opinions which refrain from dogmatizing on this point, collectively styled 'Generationism'. Traducianism was advocated by some of the Fathers, e.g. St. *Gregory of Nyssa and esp. *Tertullian in his 'De Anima' (chs. 23–41), in order to explain *Original Sin, and also by St. *Augustine, though he understood it as a spiritual generation. Pope Anastasius II condemned the theory in his ep. to the Gallican bishops (498). In the Middle Ages *Creationism (q.v.) was the almost universally accepted doctrine, but in the 19th cent. Traducianism was revived in a modified form by several RC theologians, e.g. A. *Rosmini, who argued that the parents generate a sensitive soul which God changes by illumination into a spiritual one. The theory in its crude form is incompatible with the spiritual nature of the soul, and even in the attenuated form of Generationism is widely held to be heretical.

A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (part 1; 1946), cols. 1350–65.

TRAHERNE, THOMAS (c. 1636–74), English *Metaphysical poet and divine. Probably a native of Hereford, he entered Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1652, which he left after taking his degree in 1656. In 1657 he became rector of Credenhill, nr. Hereford, and in 1667 private chaplain to Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and 'minister' in the parish of Teddington. Only one work, Roman Forgeries (1673), a controversial treatise on forged documents of the RC Church, appeared before his death. His Christian Ethics, issued in 1675 and until recently almost unknown, is an eloquent description of Christian virtue, though sometimes over-subtle in discussing theological niceties. In 1699 a friend published a little devotional book of Traherne, A Serious and Pathetical Contemplation of the Mercies of God, but his poems, for which he is now famous, remained in MS. until they were publd. by B. Dobell in 1903. They were followed in 1908 by four Centuries of Meditations, a collection of reflections on ethics and religion.

Traherne, who was an ardent admirer and constant reader of the *Neoplatonist 'Hermes Trismegistos', is the least orthodox of the metaphysical poets. From his essentially optimistic and 'vitalistic' conception of experience, the elements of sin and suffering are almost entirely excluded. His poetry, remarkable for a penetrating sense of the glory of nature and childhood, is clearly pantheistic in feeling. Among his more famous poems are 'The Rapture' and 'An Hymn upon St. Bartholomew's Day'.

Centuries, Poems, and Thanksgivings, ed. H. M. Margoliouth (2 vols., Oxford, 1958). Poems, Centuries and Three Thanksgivings, ed. Anne Ridler ('Oxford Standard Authors', 1966). Modern ed. of Christian Ethics by G. R. Guffey, with introd. by C. L. Marks (New York, 1968). Studies by G. E. Willett (Cambridge, 1919), [Hilda] Q. Iredale (Oxford, 1935), Gladys I. Wade (Princeton, N.J., 1944), and K. W. Salter (London, 1964). A. L. Clements, The Mystical Poetry of Thomas Traherne (Cambridge, Mass., 1969).

TRANSCENDENTALS. In *Scholastic philosophy, the transcendentals (transcendentalia, transcendentia) were those properties which belonged to all objects, whatever their nature. St. *Thomas Aquinas held that there were six: reality (res), being (ens), truth (verum), goodness (bonum), being something (aliquid), and unity (unum). They were so named on the ground that they 'transcended' the Aristotelian categories.

TRANSENNA (Lat., properly a 'net'). In ecclesiastical architecture, a wall, usually of marble, which is pierced with holes in a regular pattern. Apart from purely ornamental purposes, transennae were also used to surround the tomb of a martyr (e.g. in the confessio), and thus to enable the worshipper to see it, and sometimes also touch it, through the grating.

TRANSFIGURATION, The. The appearing of the Lord in glory during His earthly life, related in the first three Gospels (Mt. 17. 1–13, Mk. 9. 2–13, Lk. 9. 28–36), and alluded to in 2 Pet. 1. 16–18. This vision of the Lord, transfigured, with *Moses and *Elijah, was witnessed by Sts. *Peter, *James, and *John, and is described by the Evangelists as an historic event, with striking agreement as to the main outline and understandable differences in the details which they record. Tradition locates it on Mount Tabor, but many scholars prefer Mount Hermon, and some have even suggested the Mount of *Olives. The event was significant as showing the testimony of the Jewish Law and Prophets to the Messiahship of Christ, as furnishing a further Divine proclamation of His Sonship, and as foreshadowing His future glory. The Feast of the Transfiguration is observed on 6 Aug. It originated in the E. Church, where it appears to have been at first a local and unofficial feast, but it had become widely adopted before A.D. 1000. In the W., where the feast was not introduced till a much later date, its general observance goes back to 1457, when *Callistus III ordered its universal celebration in commemoration of the victory gained over the Turks at Belgrade on 6 Aug. 1456.

L. P. Crawfurd, The Transfiguration. A Manifestation of God in Man (1912); G. H. Boobyer, St. Mark and the Transfiguration Story (1942); H. Riesenfeld, Jésus transfiguré. L'Arrière-plan du récit évangélique de la transfiguration de Notre-Seigneur (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, xvi; 1947); A. M. *Ramsey, The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ (1949). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 13–39.

TRANSITORIUM. A prayer in the *Ambrosian Rite corresponding to the *Communion Anthem in the Roman Mass. It is apparently so named because the celebrant passes over (transit) to the south side of the altar to recite it.

TRANSLATION. In ecclesiastical contexts the word is used in various senses:

(1) The transference of the relics of a saint either from their original place of burial into an altar tomb or shrine, or from one shrine to another. The solemnities connected with it frequently gave rise to a new liturgical feast. Thus the translation of St. Thomas *Becket, observed on 7 July, commemorates the reburial of the saint's relics at *Canterbury on 7 July 1220.

(2) The transference to a different day of a feast when a particular season (e.g. *Holy Week) prohibits its observance, or a feast of higher rank occurs on the same day. Acc. to the Calendarium Romanum of 1969 the Sundays of Lent and Eastertide, all days in Holy Week and the last eight days of Advent take absolute precedence, and the impeded feast is transferred to the nearest free day.

(3) In canon law the transference of a cleric from one ecclesiastical office to another. The translation of a bishop from one see to another was forbidden by can. 15 of the Council of *Nicaea (325), but the decree was never rigorously adhered to, and in the Middle Ages the translation of bishops became one of the prerogatives of the Popes and the practice has continued down to modern times.

TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS. See Metempsychosis.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION. In the theology of the *Eucharist, the conversion of the whole substance of the bread and wine into the whole substance of the Body and Blood of Christ, only the *accidents (i.e. the appearances of the bread and wine) remaining. The word was in widespread use in the later part of the 12th cent., and at the Lateran Council of 1215 belief in Transubstantiation was defined as de fide; but the elaboration of the doctrine was not achieved till after the acceptance of the *Aristotelian metaphysics later in the 13th cent., when it found classic formulation in the teaching of St. *Thomas Aquinas. At the Council of *Trent (sess. xiii, cap. 4) the medieval doctrine was reaffirmed, but with a minimum of technical philosophical language. Since the 15th cent. the

E. Church has used the word μετουσίωσις to denote an essentially identical doctrine and has on occasion given it formal approval, e.g. at the Synod of *Jerusalem (1672); but many modern Orthodox theologians avoid the term, because of its close associations with Latin Scholasticism. See also Declaration against Transubstantiation.

For main bibl. see works cited s.v. Eucharist. H. Jorissen, Die Entfaltung der Transsubstantiationslehre bis zum Beginn der Hochscholastik (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, xxviii, Heft 1; 1965), with bibl. J. F. McCue, 'The Doctrine of Transubstantiation from Berengar through Trent: The Point at Issue' in H.T.R., lxi (1968), pp. 385–430. J. de Ghellinck, 'A propos du premier emploi du mot transsubstantiation' in Rech. S.R., ii (1911), pp. 466–9, 570–2, iii (1912), pp. 255–9. A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1396–1406, s.v.

TRAPPISTS. Since the early 19th cent. the popular name for the main branch of the *Cistercians of the Strict Observance, who were centred on *La Trappe until the restoration of Cîteaux as the mother-house in 1892. The reform was originally introduced to La Trappe in 1662 by A. J. Le B. de *Rancé, who became regular abbot in 1664. From an early date, however, he began to add austerities of his own to existing reformed rules, and an unauthorized edition of these Règlements first appeared in 1671, eventually followed by a more official version of Constitutions de la Trappe. They were always meant for domestic use, though other houses adopted certain of the practices of La Trappe, and successive canonical Visitors approved these variations from the norm of the Strict Observance; they were never intended as the basis of a new order or congregation. Expelled at the time of the French Revolution, the community of La Trappe kept together until it could return in 1817. By this time Rancé's prescriptions, stiffened under the stern leadership of Abbot Augustin Lestrange, became the standard rule for most new or revived houses of the Strict Observance. But, as the Order spread throughout the world, it split into three Congregations, which were only united by papal decree in 1893. There are now over 4,000 monks throughout the world, in more than sixty houses, ranging from Japan and Australia, Africa and U.S.A. to Western Europe, including one house in each of England, Scotland, and Wales. The habit is white, with a black scapular (lay brothers used to wear brown).

The most important change in recent years has been the abolition of lay brothers as a separate class after the Second *Vatican Council. Other changes seem likely, but the basic austerities remain the same: perpetual silence; total abstinence from meat, fish and eggs; rising at 2 a.m. for the Night Office; common dormitory of palliasses laid on plank beds, &c. Manual labour remains compulsory, but study (which was banned by Rancé) is now encouraged, and the monks play an active part in ecumenical activities. The principal occupation is still the Divine Office, which accounts for some seven hours a day. Nuns of the Strict Observance are sometimes called Trappistines; they, as well as some affiliated congregations, come under the direction of the monks.

E. de Mier, Los Trapenses. Apuntes históricos de la Trapa (Madrid, 1912). A. Le Bail, O.S.B., L'Ordre de Cîteaux. 'La Trappe' (Les Ordres religieux, 1924); C. Grolleau–G. Chastel, L'Ordre de Cîteaux. La Trappe (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux, 1932). A. Limagne, Les Trappistes en Chine (Paris, 1911). F. L. Holmes, The Voice of Trappist Silence (New York, 1941). Life in a modern Trappist monastery in the U.S.A. is well depicted in the autobiography of Thomas Merton, The Seven Storey Mountain (New York [1948]), publd. in England under the title, Elected Silence (London, 1949), and other works of this author. Y. Estienne, Les Trappistines. Cistercienes de la stricte observance (1937). Heimbucher, i, pp. 363–73. M. R. Flanagan in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 261–4, s.v. See also works cited under Cistercian Order, La Trappe, and Rancé, A. J. Le B. de.

TRAVERS, WALTER (c. 1548–1635), *Puritan divine. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and elected a Fellow of Trinity in 1567. Having formed a friendship with T. *Beza on a visit to Geneva, Travers returned to England an acknowledged leader of the movement of Reform. Owing to his unwillingness to subscribe the *Thirty-Nine Articles, he was refused a licence to preach and returned to the Continent, where he was ordained to serve the English congregation at Antwerp. In 1581 he became afternoon lecturer at the Temple and two years later would have been made Master had he not declined to receive orders in the C of E. Continuing as afternoon lecturer, he was soon engaged in a controversy with R. *Hooker, the new Master, which lasted until he was inhibited by J. *Whitgift. In 1594 he was made first provost of *Trinity College, Dublin. His principal work, the Ecclesiasticae Disciplinae et Anglicanae Ecclesiae ab illa Aberrationis plena e verbo Dei et dilucida Explicatio (publd. anon. at La Rochelle in 1574 and simultaneously in an Eng. trans. by T. *Cartwright), in which he defended the Presbyterian form of Church government as of Dominical institution, exercised a determinative influence on the policy of the Puritan Reformers, who came to accept it as authoritative.

S. J. Knox, Walter Travers: Paragon of Elizabethan Puritanism (1962), with reff. J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, ii (1884), pp. 262–4, 291 f., 302–5, 355 f., with Appendix on the Disciplina, pp. 631–3. R. G. Usher in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 601, s.v.

TRAVERSARI, AMBROGIO (c. 1386–1439), also Fra Ambrogio, Italian humanist. In 1400 he entered the *Camaldolese Order at the monastery of Sta Maria degli Angioli at Florence, and in 1431 became its General. A scholar of refined taste, he was fired by his possession of a splendid collection of Greek patristic MSS. to translate many of the Greek Fathers into Latin. He also fostered movements for reforming the Church and for bringing about reunion between E. and W. Though never formally canonized, he is commemorated on 20 Nov.

Epistolae et Orationes, ed. P. Canneto, with life by L. Mehus, Florence, 1759. F. P. Luiso, Riordinamento dell'Epistolario di Ambrogio Traversari con lettere inedite e note storico-cronologiche (3 fascc., Florence, 1898–1903). Twelve further letters ed. L. Bertalot in R.Q., xxix (1915), pp. *91–*106. Further letters in G. *Mercati, Ultimi contributi alla storia degli umanisti, fasc. i. Traversariana (S.T., xc; 1939). A. Dini Traversari, Ambrogio Traversari e i suoi tempi (Florence, 1912), incl. text of the Hodoeporicon. C. Somigli, Camaldolese, Un amico dei Greci. Ambrogio Traversari (Arezzo, 1964). Id. in E.C., xii (1954), col. 453 f., s.v., with bibl. For his part at the Council of Florence, and his trr. into Gk., see works cited under Florence, Council of.

TREACLE BIBLE, The. A popular title for M. *Coverdale's 'Great Bible' (q.v.; 1539) from its rendering of Jer. 8. 22, 'There is no more triacle [AV, 'balm'] in Gilead'.

TRECANUM (from Gk. τρικάνων, 'triple canon'). In the *Gallican liturgy the title of the Communion chant. It consisted in an act of faith in the Trinity. The name is found already in pseudo-*Germanus of Paris.

TRE FONTANE. This monastery, now *Trappist, is some 3 miles south of Rome and the traditional site of St. *Paul's martyrdom. Acc. to legend, St Paul's head, on severance from his body, rebounded from the ground at three points, from which issued the three springs that give the site its name.

Dom Marie Gabriel [Montbet], Abbé d'Aiguebelle, L'Abbaye des Trois Fontaines située aux Eaux-Salviennes, près de Rome, et dédiée aux saints martyrs Vincent et Anastase (1869). A. Sartorio, 'L'abbazia cistercense delle Tre Fontane' in Nuova Antologia, clxvii (5) (1913), pp. 50–65.

TREGELLES, SAMUEL PRIDEAUX (1813–75), Biblical scholar. A boy of exceptional talent, he devoted his spare time while at the Neath Abbey Iron Works, W. Glamorgan, to learning Greek, Hebrew, Aramaic, and Welsh. Returning to his native Falmouth, he joined the *Plymouth Brethren, although he subsequently became a *Presbyterian. In 1838 Tregelles formed the design for a new critical text of the NT which should replace the '*textus receptus', and thenceforward he was engaged in the collation of Greek texts, making very extensive travels for the purpose. An Account of the Printed Text of the Greek New Testament appeared in 1854, to be followed by the publication of all the NT, with the exception of Rev., by 1870. From 1862 Tregelles was in receipt of a Civil List pension.

F. G. Kenyon, Handbook to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament (1901), pp. 82–100 passim and 248 f. E. C. Marchant in D.N.B., lvii (1899), p. 170 f.; C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 90–5, s.v., with further refl.

TREMELLIUS, JOHN IMMANUEL (1510–80), Hebrew scholar. The son of a Ferrarese Jew, he was educated at the university of Pavia and converted to Christianity in 1540 through the influence of R. *Pole. In 1541 he was persuaded by *Peter Martyr to become a Protestant and, leaving Italy, he taught at Strassburg under Johannes *Sturm. After the peace of *Schmalkalden he came to England at the invitation of Abp. T. *Cranmer (1547), and in 1549 succeeded Paul Fagius as the King's Reader of Hebrew at Cambridge university. Having returned to the Continent on the death of *Edward VI (1553), he became professor of OT studies at the university of Heidelberg in 1561. In 1577 he was expelled by Louis VI, the Lutheran Count Palatine, on account of his *Calvinistic opinions, and finally appointed by the Duc de Bouillon as a teacher of Hebrew at his newly founded college at Sedan. Tremellius's greatest work is his translation of the Old and New Testaments into Latin from Hebrew and Syriac respectively. This was long the standard Protestant Latin translation of the Bible. The NT (Syriac text with Lat. tr.) appeared in 1569; the OT (Lat. tr. only) in 5 parts between 1575 and 1579. Among his other works are a Hebrew and Greek Catechism (1551) and a Chaldean and Syriac Grammar (1569).

W. Becker, Immanuel Tremellius, ein Proselytenleben im Zeitalter der Reformation (1887). T. J. Ney in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 95–8, s.v.

TRENCH, RICHARD CHENEVIX (1807–86), Abp. of *Dublin. Educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1832. For a brief time he was curate at Hadleigh to H. J. *Rose and later (1841–4) to S. *Wilberforce at Alverstoke. He became rector of Itchenstoke (1844–5), professor of divinity at *King's College, London (1846–58), Dean of *Westminster (1856–1863), and finally Abp. of Dublin (1863–1884). His two books on the Gospels, Notes on the Parables of our Lord (1841) and Notes on the Miracles of our Lord (1846), at once scholarly and stimulating, created a fresh interest in the Gospels in many quarters. Trench also took a keen interest in philology, the fruits of which included his Study of Words (1851) and Synonyms of the NT (1854). He also exercised a decisive influence in the early stages of the Oxford English Dictionary. In addition, he wrote much religious poetry. As Abp. of Dublin he vigorously opposed W. E. *Gladstone's proposals for disestablishing the Irish Church. His other publications included Sacred Latin Poetry (1849) and many volumes of sermons and poetry.

Letters and Memorials [ed. by M. Trench] (2 vols., 1888). J. Bromley, The Man of Ten Talents. A Portrait of Richard Chenevix Trench 1807–86 (1959). R. Bayne in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 191–4.

TRENT, Council of (1545–63). This Council, reckoned by RC theologians the Nineteenth *Œcumenical Council, was the most impressive embodiment of the ideals of the *Counter-Reformation.

The spread of Protestantism and the drastic need of moral and administrative reforms within the RC Church led to widespread demand among Catholics for a Universal Council, but disputes between *Charles V and others who favoured such action, and the Popes, who were generally averse from it, long prevented a move. At last *Paul III summoned a council to Mantua for 23 May 1537, but the plan fell through owing to French resistance. In 1538 further proposals for a council at Vicenza were frustrated by the unexpected indifference of the Emperor. In 1542 the Pope again convoked the Council, this time to Trent. After yet another postponement it eventually met on 13 Dec. 1545. At the outset it was a very small assembly, composed of three legates, one cardinal, four archbishops, twenty-one bishops, and five generals of orders.

Period I (1545–7; Sessions I–VIII). As it was decided that voting should be by individual heads rather than (as at *Constance, 1415) by nations, the pro-Papal Italian bishops had a preponderating influence. The principal preliminary, whether the Council should first discuss dogma or disciplinary reform, was settled by the compromise that the subjects should be treated concurrently.

At Session III (4 Feb. 1546), the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed was formally reaffirmed as the basis of faith. At Session IV (8 Apr. 1546) the equal validity of Scripture and *Tradition as sources of religious truth, the sole right of the Church to interpret the Bible, and the authority of the text of the *Vulgate were asserted. The decrees of Session V (17 June 1546) on *Original Sin and of Session VI (13 Jan. 1547) on *Justification and Merit struck at the root of the Protestant system. No decision was reached, however, on the points in dispute on these matters in the Catholic schools. At Session VII (3 Mar. 1547) the theology of the Sacraments in general was defined. The institution of all seven by Christ and their necessity to salvation were affirmed. Baptism and confirmation were also treated in detail and a number of decrees on administrative reforms were also passed.

Meanwhile, renewed political tension between Charles V and the Pope hindered progress. An epidemic at Trent offered a pretext for transferring the Council to *Bologna (Session VIII, 11 Mar. 1547). The Council was now virtually suspended for four years, until *Julius III (1550–5) reconvoked the assembly to Trent.

Period II (1551–2; Sessions IX–XIV). Important decisions were reached at Session XIII (11 Oct. 1551) on the *Eucharist and at Session XIV (25 Nov. 1551) on *Penance and Extreme *Unction. *Transubstantiation was affirmed and the *Lutheran, *Calvinist, and *Zwinglian Eucharistic doctrines repudiated. The Protestants present demanded renewed discussion of the subjects previously defined, the release of the bishops from their oaths of allegiance to the Papacy, and the supremacy of General Councils over the Pope.

The revolt of the princes against Charles V led to the suspension of the Council on 28 Apr. 1552. Under the austere and violently anti-Protestant *Paul IV (1555–9, Caraffa) there was no hope of its reassembly, and it first met again ten years later under his more tolerant successor, *Pius IV.

Period III (1562–3; Sessions XV–XXV). When the Council reassembled on 18 Jan. 1562, all hope of conciliating the Protestants had gone and the *Jesuits were now a strong force. The proceedings were henceforward hampered by struggles between the Papal and the opposition bishops, Imperial, Spanish, and French. A far-reaching plan of reform, devised by the Emp. Ferdinand II and advocated by the Cardinal of Lorraine (a Guise), failed. The papal party owed its success largely to the diplomatic skill of the legate, Cardinal G. Morone. At Session XXI (16 July 1562) the subject of Eucharistic Communion was treated and the presence of the undivided Christ under either species (concomitance) and the denial of the chalice to the laity affirmed. Session XXII (17 Sept. 1562) issued a series of important definitions on the sacrificial doctrine of the Mass. Session XXIII (15 July 1563) dealt with Orders and Session XXIV (24 Nov. 1563) with the Sacrament of Matrimony. Other work was done on the reform of the *Index and the residence of bishops. Of great practical significance was the legislation establishing clerical seminaries and regulating the appointment of bishops, provincial and diocesan synods, preaching of sermons, &c. Finally, Session XXV (3–4 Dec. 1563) dealt cursorily with *Purgatory, the Invocation of *Saints, the veneration of *relics and *images, and *Indulgences.

The Council ended on 4 Dec. 1563. The decrees were confirmed in a body on 26 Jan. 1564 by Pius IV, who in the same year published the 'Profession of the Tridentine Faith', a brief summary of doctrine, generally known as the *Creed of Pius IV.

Several important works, which the Council recommended or initiated but could not effectually carry through, were handed over to the Pope for completion. The revision of the *Vulgate, ordered at Trent in 1546, was concluded under *Clement VIII in 1592; and *Pius V founded the Congregation of the Index in 1571 to carry out other unfinished work, having himself issued the *Catechism of the Council of Trent (1566) and revised the *Breviary (1568).

Though the Council failed to satisfy the Protestants and its reforms were less comprehensive than many Catholics had hoped for, it had established a solid basis for the renewal of discipline and the spiritual life in the RC Church, which emerged from Trent with a clearly formulated doctrinal system and an enhanced religious strength for the subsequent struggle with Protestantism.

The Acta of the Council ed. A. Theiner (2 vols., Leipzig, 1874); the decrees have frequently been repr.; the more important are readily accessible in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 363–427 (Nos. 1500–1870). Eng. tr. of canons and decrees by J. Waterworth (London, 1888). The principal collections of documents are J. Le Plat (ed.), Monumentorum ad Historiam Concilii Tridentini Illustrandam Spectantium Collectio (7 vols., Louvain, 1781–7) and the Concilium Tridentinum. Diariorum, Actorum, Epistolarum, Tractatuum nova Collectio. Edidit Societas Goerresiana (Freiburg i.Br., 1901 ff.). S. Kuttner (ed.), Decreta septem priorum sessionum Concilii Tridentini sub Paulo III Pont. Max. (Washington, 1945), reproducing in facsimile the autograph of A. Massarelli, Secretary of the Council, with important introduction. H. Jedin, Das Konzil von Trient. Ein Ueberblick ueber die Erforschung seiner Geschichte (1948). J. Olazarán, S.J. (ed.), Documentos inéditos tridentinos sobre la Justificación (Madrid, 1957). Early histories by P. *Sarpi, *Servite (under the pseudonym of P. S. Polano), Historia del Concilio Tridentino (London, 1619; Eng. tr. by Nathaniel Brent, Warden of Merton College, Oxford, Oxford, 1620; very hostile), and S. Pallavicino, S.J., Istoria del Concilio di Trento (2 vols., Rome, 1656–7; reply to preceding work). Full account of recent work in Hefele–Leclercq, ix (by P. Richard, 2 parts, 1930–1) and x (pt. 1, by A. Michel, 1938); H. Jedin, Geschichte des Konzils von Trient (4 vols. in 5, 1949–75; Eng. tr., 1957 ff.); G. Schreiber (ed.), Das Weltkonzil von Trient. Sein Werden und Wirken (2 vols., 1951). Shorter study by K. D. Schmidt, Studien zur Geschichte des Konzils von Trient (1925). Older works include L. Maynier, Étude historique sur le Concile de Trente (1874); J. A. Froude, Lectures on the Council of Trent, delivered at Oxford, 1892–3 (1896); H. Swoboda, Das Konzil von Trient. Sein Schauplatz, Verlauf und Ertrag (Festgabe der österreichischen Leo-Gesellschaft zum XXIII. Internationalen Eucharistischen Kongress; 1912). R. V. Laurence in C.M.H., ii (1903), pp. 639–89, with bibl. pp. 818–24. L. Cristiani in Fliche–Martin, xvii (1948), pp. 13–242. A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1414–1508, s.v. 'Trente (Concile de)'; H. Jedin in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 271–8, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to Counter-Reformation.

TRENTAL. A set of thirty *Requiem Masses for the repose of a soul, whether said on a single or on successive days. The word was also formerly in occasional use for a Mass or other service (also 'Month's Mind') on the thirtieth day after death or burial.

TREUGA DEI. See Truce of God.

TRIAD (Gk. τριάς). A word first used of the *Trinity in the Godhead by *Theophilus of Antioch, who names as the Triad 'God and His Word and His Wisdom' (ad Autol., ii. 15).

TRIDENTINE. Having reference to the Council of *Trent (Concilium Tridentinum), 1545–63.

TRIDUUM SACRUM (Lat., 'the sacred three days'). The three concluding days of *Holy Week commemorating the Last Supper, Passion, and Death of Christ, i.e. *Maundy Thursday (evening only, acc. to modern RC reckoning), *Good Friday, and *Holy Saturday.

TRIERS, The. The body of commissioners, appointed by O. *Cromwell under an Act of 20 Mar. 1654, 'for the approbation of all public preachers and lecturers before their admission to benefices'. It consisted of 38 members, 29 clerics and 9 laymen, drawn from various religious bodies.

The Act is pr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 577–82 (No. cxi).

TRIMMER, SARAH (1741–1810), authoress, known as 'Good Mrs. Trimmer'. Sarah Kirby was born at Ipswich, where her father, J. J. Kirby (1716–74), was an artist of some standing. While still a young girl, she counted many famous men among her friends, e.g. Dr. S. *Johnson, T. Gainsborough, and W. Hogarth. She married in 1762 and had six sons and six daughters, whom she educated herself except for the boys' classics. She later interested herself esp. in the establishment of *Sunday schools, a project which she ventilated in her book The Oeconomy of Charity (1786). In 1793 began her connexion with the *S.P.C.K., which published two of her books in the same year, The Abridgment of the Old Testament and The Abridgment of the New Testament, which were designed as text-books for charity schools. The best known of her writings, The History of the Robins (1786; originally in Fabulous Histories), long remained a favourite children's book for the better classes, whereas her numerous school books were intended for the instruction of the poor. She was a woman of great piety and assiduous in visiting the poor.

Some Account of the Life and Writings of Mrs. Trimmer (2 vols., 1814) contains mainly extracts from her private journals. Elizabeth Lee in D.N.B., lvii (1899), p. 231 f.

TRINITARIAN. A person who believes in the doctrine of the Holy *Trinity, esp. as contrasted with a *Unitarian. In the 15th and 16th cents., however, the word was occasionally applied to those who held heretical, as opposed to orthodox, views on the Trinity.

TRINITARIANS (Order of the Most Holy Trinity). This order was founded in 1198 at Cerfroid in the diocese of Meaux by St. *John of Matha (d. 1213) and St. Felix of Valois (d. 1212) with the approval of *Innocent III. Its members, also known as 'Mathurins', followed an austere form of the *Augustinian Rule, wearing a white habit with a cross 'flory' (upright red, crossbar blue) on the *scapular and cappa. They devoted themselves esp. to the ransoming of countless captives to which one third of their revenue was devoted; at the height of their influence in the 15th cent. they possessed about 800 houses. In 1596 a reform called the Barefooted Trinitarians was started in Spain by Fr. Juan Bautista of the Immaculate Conception. It became a distinct order and is the only body of Trinitarians that now survives (with under 500 members; headquarters at St. Crisogono in Trastevere, Rome). The brethren are engaged in education, nursing, and pastoral work. Nuns of the same name, devoted to works of mercy, have been affiliated to the order from early times. The Barefooted Trinitarian Sisters date from 1612.

Acta Ordinis S. Trinitatis, vol. i (Rome, 1919–23) includes important primary docc. P. Deslandres, L'Ordre des Trinitaires pour le rachat des captifs (2 vols., Toulouse, 1903). Antoninus ab Assumptione, Ord. Trinit., Les Origines de l'ordre de la Très Sainte Trinité d'après les documents (Rome, 1925). Id., Ministrorum Generalium Ordinis SS. Trinitatis Series (Isola del Liri, 1936). Id., Diccionario de Escritoris Trinitarios de España y Portugal (2 vols., Rome, 1898–9), and other works of this author. Heimbucher, i, pp. 448–55, and ii, 658, with reff. to earlier literature.

TRINITY, Doctrine of the. The central dogma of Christian theology, viz. that the One God exists in Three Persons and One Substance. This doctrine is held to be a mystery in the strict sense, in that it can neither be known by unaided human reason apart from revelation, nor cogently demonstrated by reason after it has been revealed. On the other hand it is maintained that, though the mystery is above reason, it is not contrary to it, for it is not incompatible with the principles of rational thought.

Though the word 'Trinity', first used in its Greek form τριάς by *Theophilus of Antioch (c. A.D. 180), is not found in Scripture, the conception is there both implicitly and explicitly. Christian theology has seen adumbrations of the doctrine in such OT texts as the narrative of the apparition of the three men to *Abraham (Gen. 18), the threefold *Sanctus of *Isaiah's vision (Is. 6. 3), and the frequent mention of God, His Wisdom, and His Spirit, side by side in the Sapiential Books. It is held to be explicitly taught in some passages of the NT, esp. in the baptismal formula of Mt. 28. 19, where the singular εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, used in connexion with the Three Persons each linked with the other by καί, seems to indicate clearly the Unity in Trinity. Other passages from the *Synoptics, if less convincing, are also sometimes adduced in evidence, such as the threefold manifestation of the Divinity at the baptism of Christ in the Jordan (Mt. 3. 16) and the *Annunciation (Lk. 1. 35), whereas in the Johannine discourses after the Last Supper the mutual relations between the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost ('*Paraclete') are brought out with great clarity (cf. esp. Jn. 14. 11, 16 f., and 26). In the Epp. the Trinitarian formula is employed in 1 Pet. 1. 2 and 2 Cor. 13. 14; and in 1 Cor. 12. 4–6 the juxtaposition of 'the same Spirit', 'the same Lord', and 'the same God, who worketh all things in all' seems to indicate at least implicitly a co-equal Trinity.

This NT teaching was taken over by the early Church and set out in creeds, expressions of the rule of faith, and doxologies, as well as in the individual confessions of faith of martyrs, without regard to the theological problems involved. Where the doctrine was elaborated, as e.g. in the writings of the *Apologists, the language remained on the whole indefinite, and, from a later standpoint, was even partly unorthodox. Sometimes it was not free from a certain *subordinationism; more rarely, as in the case of *Hermas, the Persons of the Trinity, esp. the Second and the Third Persons, were confused. The former tendency was chiefly due to the insistence of the Fathers that the First Person was the principle of the other Two and that the generation of the Son was a 'voluntary' act against the emanationist vagaries of the *Gnostics. Such considerations led *Origen to the subordinationism which marked one side of his teaching; but on the other hand he was the first theologian to formulate the doctrine of the Eternal Generation of the Son, so that St. *Athanasius, no less than his opponents, was able to appeal to his authority. At the Council of *Nicaea (A.D. 325) and at *Constantinople (A.D. 381) the dogma was defined in its simplest outlines in the face of pressing heresies. Against *Sabellianism the real distinction, and against *Arianism and *Macedonianism the co-equality and co-eternity, of the Three Divine Persons were affirmed. The Persons differ only in origin in that the Father is ungenerated, the Son is generated by the Father, and the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father through the Son (a doctrine later repudiated by *Photius in favour of the procession of the Spirit from the Father only), and the Inner-Trinitarian Procession thus resembles, as it were, a straight line.

In the W., the doctrine was developed in a somewhat different manner. Starting not from the difference of the Persons, as did many of the more philosophically minded Greek Fathers, but from the unity of the Substance, it readily safeguarded the co-equality of the Persons. The Procession of the Holy Ghost was attributed equally to the Father and the Son, and so, in the W., the Trinitarian symbol was not the line, but the triangle. The chief exponent of the teaching of the Latin Church during the patristic period was St. *Augustine, esp. in his 'De Trinitate', whose great contribution was the comparison of the two processes of the Divine Life (the later 'Filiation' and 'Spiration') to the analogical processes of human self-knowledge and self-love. His conception of the generation of the Son as the act of thinking on the part of the Father was based on *Tertullian, whereas the explanation of the Holy Ghost as the mutual love of the Father and the Son was the fruit of his own reflections. This so-called 'psychological theory of the Trinity' was taken over from him and developed by medieval Scholasticism. In its more formal aspects, medieval teaching on the Trinity reasserted the doctrines of the *Athanasian Creed (q.v.). It received classical exposition in the writings of St. *Thomas Aquinas.

The Trinitarian teaching thus elaborated by the Scholastics, though challenged in the 17th cent. by *Socinianism and *Unitarianism, has remained the common inheritance of subsequent W. theology.

Discussions of the doctrine of the Trinity figure in all works on Christian Dogmatics and in writings concerned with the nature of God. Modern studies devoted to the subject as a whole include F. C. *Baur, Die christliche Lehre von der Dreieinigkeit und Menschwerdung Gottes in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (3 vols., 1841–3); T. de Régnon, S.J., Études de théologie positive sur la Sainte Trinité (4 vols., 1892–8); J. R. *Illingworth, The Doctrine of the Trinity apologetically considered (1907); J. Lebreton, S.J., Histoire du dogme de la Trinité (Bibliothèque de Théologie Historique, 2 vols., 1910–28; Eng. tr. of vol. i; 1939); E. Hugon, O.P., Le Mystère de la Très Sainte Trinité (1912); A. E. J. Rawlinson (ed.), Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation (1928); P. Galtier, S.J., De SS. Trinitate in se et in nobis (Paris, 1933); A. d'Alès, S.J., De Deo Trino (ib., 1934); G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), passim; L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Trinity (Croall Lectures, 1942–3; 1943); C. Welch, The Trinity in Contemporary Theology (1953); R. S. Franks, The Doctrine of the Trinity (1953); C. C. Richardson, The Doctrine of the Trinity (New York, 1958); A. W. Wainwright, The Trinity in the New Testament (1962); K. *Rahner, 'Der dreifaltige Gott als transzendenter Urgrund der Heilsgeschichte' in J. Feiner–M. Löhrer (edd.), Mysterium Salutis, ii (1967), pp. 317–401; separate Eng. tr., The Trinity (1970). G. Bardy–A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1545–1855, s.v. 'Trinité', with detailed bibl.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN. The (one) College in the University of *Dublin, founded in 1591. Membership was long confined to Anglicans but religious tests were eventually abolished in 1873. Since 1904 women have been admitted to degrees. The College is governed by a Provost and Fellows and is represented in Seanad Eireann. The library has a very valuable collection of Irish and other MSS., among them the 'Book of *Kells', and the 'Book of *Armagh' (qq.v.).

J. P. Mahaffy, J. W. Stubbs, R. Ball, T. K. Abbott, U. R. Burke, W. M. Dixon and E. P. Wright, The Book of Trinity College, Dublin (1892); J. P. Mahaffy, An Epoch in Irish History. Trinity College, Dublin, its Foundation and Early Fortunes, 1591–1660 (1903). Constantia Maxwell, A History of Trinity College, Dublin, 1591–1892 (Dublin, 1946); K. C. Bailey, A History of Trinity College, Dublin, 1892–1945 (ib., 1947). G. D. Burtchaell and T. U. Sadleir (edd.), Alumni Dublinenses. A Register of the Students, Graduates, Professors and Provosts of Trinity College, in the University of Dublin (1924; revised and continued, 1935).

TRINITY SUNDAY. The first Sunday after *Pentecost or *Whitsun. It was not till the Middle Ages that the Sunday was at all widely observed as a separate feast in honour of the Holy Trinity. Its observance, introduced to mark the conclusion of the liturgical commemorations of the life of Christ and the descent of the Holy Spirit by a celebration embracing God in all three Persons, was universally enjoined by Pope *John XXII in 1334. The feast became specially popular in England, perhaps by its association with St. Thomas *Becket, who was consecrated bishop on that day (1162). The restriction of the feast to a single day by the absence of an octave is appropriate to the Unity of the Godhead which the feast commemorates. In the *Sarum Missal and in the BCP, as well as in the ancient rites of the *Carmelite and *Dominican orders, Sundays are reckoned after Trinity and not after Pentecost as was usual in the Roman Rite until 1969.

A. Klaus, O.F.M., Ursprung und Verbreitung der Dreifaltigkeitsmesse (1938). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., 'Le Culte de la Trinité dans la liturgie de la fête de la Trinité' in E.L., xlv (1931), pp. 270–8. P. Browe, S.J., 'Zur Geschichte des Dreifaltigkeitsfestes' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, i (1950), pp. 65–81.

TRIODION (Gk. τριῴδιον). In the E. rite, the liturgical book containing the variable portions of the services from the 4th Sunday before *Lent till the Saturday before *Easter. It is so named because during this season the *canons ordinarily contain only three odes (ᾠδαί) instead of the usual nine.

Eng. tr. by Mother Mary and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Lenten Triodion (1978). H. J. Schulz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), col. 363 f.

TRIPLE CANDLESTICK. The candlestick used until 1955 in the Latin Rite at the 'Lumen Christi', in the liturgy of *Holy Saturday, to hold the three candles which were successively lighted in the course of the procession up to the altar. It was commonly mounted on a long pole. A triple candlestick is also used in the E. Church for episcopal blessings.

TRISAGION (Gk. τρισάγιον, 'thrice holy'). The refrain 'Holy God, Holy and mighty, Holy and immortal, have mercy upon us' is a characteristic feature of *Orthodox worship. It is solemnly chanted in all E. liturgies before the lections, except at certain great feasts, and is recited at most other services, e.g. burials and during the procession of the shroud on Good Friday. It occurred also in the *Gallican liturgy, and in the Roman Rite it is sung as part of the *Reproaches on Good Friday. The earliest datable occurrence of the word is in the Acts of the Council of *Chalcedon (451).

A. *Baumstark, 'Trishagion und Qeduscha' in J.L.W., iii (1923), pp. 18–32. L. Brou, O.S.B., 'Études sur la liturgie mozarabe. Le Trisagion de la Messe d'après les sources manuscrites' in E.L., lxi (1947), pp. 309–34.

TRITHEISM. The heretical teaching about the Trinity which denies the unity of substance in the Three Divine Persons. The name is esp. applied to the teaching of a group of 6th-cent. *Monophysites, the best known of whom was John Philoponus, the commentator on *Aristotle. By his identification of person and nature Philoponus was led to affirm three Divine substances in the Trinity. His tritheism, however, seems to have been of a speculative rather than a practical character, for he did not actually abandon his Christian faith. In the Middle Ages the extreme *Nominalism of *Roscellinus and the exaggerated *Realism of *Gilbert de la Porrée caused both these Schoolmen to be accused of teaching tritheistic doctrines; and they were condemned by the Councils of *Soissons (1092) and of *Reims (1148) respectively. Gilbert's doctrines later influenced *Joachim of Fiore and issued in the clear definition of the numerical unity of the Divine Nature by the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215). A more recent exponent of tritheistic teaching was A. Günther, who, in his struggle against *Hegelian pantheism, affirmed the existence of three absolute realities in the Trinity, distinct from each other and bound together only by a unity of origin. Popular ideas about the Trinity, in intention orthodox, often tend to be tritheistic in expression.

TRITHEMIUS, JOHANNES (1462–1516), Abbot of Sponheim, so named from his birthplace, Trittenheim, on the Moselle. After harsh treatment at the hands of his stepfather, he fled to Würzburg, where his intellectual powers developed rapidly and he came into close contact with the humanist movement. A chance visit to the monastery of Sponheim in 1482 led him to join the community, and in 1483 he was elected its abbot. He rapidly brought about its reform, collecting a library of MSS. which soon made it one of the most famous in Europe. In 1506, however, through dissensions caused by the stringency of his discipline, he was induced to resign his abbacy, and for his last ten years he presided over the Scottish abbey of St. Jakob at Würzburg. His writings include many useful historical compilations, e.g. De Viris Illustribus Germaniae (1495); works on natural science and magic, e.g. Steganographia (publd. 1606); and some fine sermons.

Theological writings first publd. at Mainz, 1604 and 1605; Historical writings at Frankfurt, 1601; Letters at Dresden, 1536. Studies by I. Silbernagl (Landshut, 1868), W. Schneegans (Kreuznach, 1882), and P. Lehmann (Sb. (Bayr.), 1961, Heft 2). P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1862–7.

TRITO-ISAIAH. The name coined by B. *Duhm in 1892 for the author of the last eleven chapters of Isaiah (56–66), in the belief that they were written by a later prophet than the 6th-cent. 'Deutero-Isaiah' who wrote chs. 40–55. The term is also in current use for chs. 56–66 themselves, even when they are not held to be the work of a single individual.

TRIUMPHANT, The Church. The body of Christians in heaven, i.e. the perfected saints, distinguished from those still on earth (*militant) and those in *Purgatory (*expectant). See Communion of Saints.

TRIVIUM. The medieval name for the group of three sciences consisting of grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic, which together constituted the inferior group of the *Seven Liberal Arts.

TROAS. A city of NW. Asia Minor visited several times by St. Paul. It was on his first visit here that he saw the vision of 'a man of Macedonia' which led him to carry the Gospel into Europe (Acts 16. 8–11).

TROELTSCH, ERNST (1865–1923), theologian and philosopher. A native of Augsburg, he taught theology successively at Göttingen (1891–2), Bonn (1892–4), and Heidelberg (1894–1915). From 1915 until his death he was professor of the history of philosophy and civilization at Berlin. In theological outlook he was much influenced by A. *Ritschl, in philosophy by the Neo-Kantians Wilhelm Windelband (1848–1915) and Heinrich Rickert (1863–1936) and in the religious understanding and assessment of culture by W. *Dilthey.

Troeltsch's principal works were Vernunft und Offenbarung bei Johann Gerhard und Melanchthon (1891), Die Absoluiheit des Christentums und die Religionsgeschichte (1901), Psychologie und Erkenntnistheorie in der Religionswissenschaft (1905), Die Bedeutung des Protestantismus für die Entstehung der modernen Welt (1906; Eng. trans., Protestantism and Progress, 1912), Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1912; Eng. trans., 2 vols., 1931), Augustin, die christliche Antike und das Mittelalter (1915), Der Historismus und seine Probleme (1922), and Christian Thought. Its History and Application (1923). Among close students of Troeltsch in Great Britain were F. *von Hügel and C. C. J. *Webb.

Gesammelte Schriften, 4 vols., Tübingen, 1912–25. Studies by E. Vermeil (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, ii; 1922), E. Spiess (Paderborn, 1927), W. [E.] Köhler (Tübingen, 1941), J. J. Schaaf (ib., 1946), W. Bodenstein (Gütersloh, 1959), I. E. Alberca (Münchener Theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, xxi; 1961), W. F. Kasch (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xxxiv; 1963), M. Wichelhaus (Heidelberger Forschungen, ix; 1965), and B. A. Reist, Toward ..a Theology of Involvement (Philadelphia–London, 1966). Überweg, iv, pp. 600–5, with bibl. p. 722.

TROPARION (Gk. τροπάριον). In the E. Church, a generic term to designate a stanza of religious poetry. In particular it is applied to the *apolytikion, which is often known as the 'troparion of the day'.

E. [J.] Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (1949), pp. 144–52. L. Clugnet, Dictionnaire grec-français des noms liturgiques (1895), pp. 153–5, s.v. τροπάριον. Bardenhewer, iv,, pp. 130–2 ('Tropariendichter'). A. Raes, S.J., in E.C., xii (1954), col. 571 f.

TROPE. In the W. Church, a short series of words added as an amplification and embellishment to the text of the Mass or of the Breviary Office to be sung by the choir. Tropes became less popular in the 13th cent. and gradually went out of use. The 'Troper' was at first a collection of such pieces; but later the word was used of a Book of Sequences. The oldest known Troper, the St.-Martial Troper (Cod. Par. 1240), dates from the 10th century.

C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister (edd.), Tropen des Missals im Mittelalter (A.H.M.A., xlvii and xlix; 1905–6). Ritva Jonsson and others (edd.), Corpus Troporum (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, xxi, xxii, etc.; 1975 ff.). W. H. *Frere, The Winchester Troper (H.B.S., viii; 1894), with introd. L. Gautier, Histoire de la poésie liturgique au moyen âge, i. Les Tropes (1886). J. Handschin, 'Trope, Sequence, and Conductus' in A. Hughes, O.S.B. (ed.), Early Medieval Music up to 1300 (New Oxford History of Music, ii; 1954), pp. 128–74. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), esp. pp. 275–81. B. Stäblein in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, xiii (1966), cols. 797–826, s.v. 'Tropus', with extensive bibl.

TROPHIMUS, St. (1) Acc. to Acts 20. 4, 21. 29, a Gentile disciple of St. *Paul. He was an Ephesian, who accompanied the Apostle on part of his Third Missionary Journey and to *Jerusalem, where St. Paul's introduction of him into the Temple was the chief ground for the riot. He is also mentioned at 2 Tim. 4. 20 ('Trophimus I left at Miletum sick'). In the Gk. *Menology he is reckoned one of the Seventy (cf. Lk. 10. 1) and commemorated with St. Aristarchus (cf. Acts 19. 29, &c.) and St. *Pudens on 14 Apr.

(2) St. Trophimus, traditionally reckoned the first Bp. of Arles, is a quite independent figure. He is first mentioned in 417 in an Ep. of Pope *Zosimus to Patroclus, Bp. of Arles, as an early preacher of the Gospel sent from Rome to Gaul. Acc. to St. *Gregory of Tours he was one of the Bishops who came to Gaul with St. *Dionysius of Paris. He was later identified with the Trophimus of the NT and since the Middle Ages has been highly venerated at Arles. Feast day, 29 Dec.

(1) See comm. to Acts, cited s.v., and to Titus, Epistle to, cited s.v. Timothy and Titus, Epistles to. W. F. Boyd in D.A.C., ii (1918), p. 620 f., s.v.

(2) L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, i (1894), p. 246 f., with refl. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), esp. pp. 347 f. and 449 f. L. Levillain, 'Saint Trophime, confesseur et métropolitain d'Arles et la Mission des Sept en Gaule. Étude d'un texte de Grégoire de Tours et d'un passage de la Passion de Saint Saturnin' in Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, xiii (1927), pp. 145–189. S. A. Bennett in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 1055, s.v.

TRUCE OF GOD (Lat. pax, treuga Dei). In medieval times, a suspension of hostilities ordered by the Church on certain days and during certain seasons. The institution goes back to attempts to remedy the feudal anarchy of the 11th cent. By a canon of the Council of Elne of 1027, the conduct of hostilities between Saturday night and Monday morning was forbidden. At a later date *Advent and *Lent were also brought within the Truce.

TRULLAN SYNOD. The synod held in 692 by the E. bishops to pass disciplinary canons to complete the work of the Fifth (553) and Sixth (680) General Councils (hence its other name of Πενθέκτη, 'Quinisext', or Fifth-Sixth, Council). It sat in the domed room ('trullus') of the Emp. Justinian II's palace at *Constantinople, where the Sixth General Council (681) had also met. The disciplinary decrees of the synod were rejected by the Pope and, though by no means completely observed in the E., served to accentuate the growing division between W. and E. practice. They are sometimes quoted (wrongly) as having been passed by the Sixth General Council, and as such seem to have received some sort of recognition by Pope *Hadrian I (772–95). The subjects legislated on included clerical marriage, ecclesiastical dress, the age of ordination, and affinity and other impediments to matrimony.

There survive only the Council's allocution to the Emperor and the 102 Canons, with the signatures of the participants of the Council. Hardouin, iii, cols. 1645–1712; Mansi, xi (Florence, 1765), cols. 929–1006. Text of canons also pr. in Lauchert, pp. 97–139. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 560–81. L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIe siècle (1925), pp. 477–80. L. Bréhier in Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 193–196 and 475 f. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1581–97, s.v. 'Quinisexte (Concile)'. See also bibl. to Sergius I.

TRUMPETS, Feast of. A Jewish feast kept on the first day of the seventh month (i.e. Tishri, Oct.), the observance of which is ordained in Lev. 23. 24 and Num. 29. 1. It is now regarded by the Jews as New Year's Day ('Rosh ha-Shanah').

TRURO. The Anglican diocese of Truro was created in 1877, out of the Archdeaconry of Cornwall, previously in the diocese of *Exeter. Until Anglo-Saxon times the Cornish Church had been independent, and it is probable that the British bishops who assisted in St. *Chad's consecration (664) were Cornish. In 931 the Cornish Church was finally incorporated with the English Church and Cornwall became an English diocese. In 1027 it was annexed to the see of *Crediton, and in 1050 the see of the united diocese was fixed at Exeter. In 1877, when Truro became the see of the reconstituted diocese, E. W. *Benson became its first bishop. The fine cathedral church of St. Mary, designed by J. L. *Pearson in the Early English style and incorporating the south aisle of the old parish church, was begun in 1880 and completed in 1910. The Community of the Epiphany, founded in London c. 1880 by G. H. Wilkinson, the second Bishop of Truro, when Vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, London, has its mother house at Truro.

A. B. Donaldson, The Bishopric of Truro. The first twenty-five years, 1877–1902 (1902); H. M. Brown, A Century for Cornwall. The Diocese of Truro, 1877–1977 (Truro, 1976).

TÜBINGEN. The university for Württemberg, founded in 1477, soon grew in importance and numbered many celebrities among its early teachers, e.g. G. *Biel and P. *Melanchthon (1514–18). When Württemberg was made Protestant by Duke Ulrich in 1534–5, Tübingen became a centre of *Lutheran orthodoxy and increased the number and standard of its students through the famous 'Stift', a kind of public school at which later G. W. F. *Hegel and F. W. J. *Schelling were educated. In the 18th cent. G. C. Storr founded the older 'Tübingen School' of theology. Its chief characteristic was a 'Biblical Supranaturalism', which put the guarantee of Christ and the Apostles in the place of the orthodox Protestant doctrine of the inspiration of Scripture and regarded the Bible as the exclusive source and law book of Christianity, from which the tenets of faith were to be derived by purely deductive methods. In the early part of the 19th cent. another school of theology was formed under the influence of Hegel, F. C. *Baur being its leader and chief representative (see Tübingen School). In 1817 a Catholic faculty of theology was opened which soon became one of the most important centres of Catholic scholarship in Germany, counting among its members J. A. *Möhler and K. J. *Hefele and, in recent times, K. Bihlmeyer and K. *Adam. The Catholic school has been characterized by a combination of the historical and speculative methods, and by its emphasis on the need for relating modern thought to the data of the faith.

J. Haller, Die Anfänge der Universität Tübingen 1477–1537 (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1927–9). H. *Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, ii (ed. F. M. Powicke–A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 278–80, with full bibl. H. Hermelink, Die theologische Fakultät in Tübingen vor der Reformation 1477–1534 (1906). Accounts of the Catholic theological school at Tübingen will be found in E. Vermeil, Jean-Adam Möhler et l'école catholique de Tubingue, 1815–1840 (1913), the special number of Th.Q. to mark the 450th anniversary of the foundation of the university (Th.Q., cxxviii; 1927, pp. 1–220), and J. R. Geiselmann, Die katholische Tübinger Schule. Ihre theologische Eigenart (Freiburg, etc., 1964).

TÜBINGEN SCHOOL. A school of German NT theologians founded by F. C. *Baur. Among its most prominent members were Eduard Zeller, who edited its organ, the Tübinger Theologische Jahrbücher (1842–57), and A. *Hilgenfeld, who continued it as the Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie (1858–1914). The principal endeavour of the School was to apply G. W. F. *Hegel's conception of development to primitive Christianity. The early Church was to be divided into 'Petrinists' (Jewish Christians) and 'Paulinists' (Gentile Christians), the cleavage between them being healed only in the later 2nd cent. ('Catholicism'). This state of things is reflected in the books of the NT, several of which represent the views of one or other of the parties, the bulk, however, being products of the 2nd cent. synthesis and therefore of practically no historical value for the period to which they profess to refer. These theories were expressed most vigorously in A. *Schwegler's Nachapostolisches Zeitalter (1846), which assigns to Mk. a date later than St. *Justin Martyr, and sees in Baptism and the Episcopate substitutes introduced by the Judaizers for circumcision and the aristocracy of Israel respectively. The school was at the height of its influence in the forties of the 19th cent., but it soon lost its prestige through the discrepancy between its axioms and historical fact. A. *Ritschl, who for a time belonged to the group, later founded a school of his own. Since A. *Harnack the Tübingen position has been generally abandoned.

The chief sources are, besides the writings of its leading members (qq.v.), the Theologische Jahrbücher mentioned above. R. W. Mackay, The Tübingen School and its Antecedents (1863). E. Zeller, Vorträge und Abhandlungen (1865), pp. 267–353 ('Die Tübinger historische Schule). H. Harris, The Tübingen School (Oxford, 1975).

TUCKNEY, ANTHONY (1599–1670), *Puritan divine. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1619. In 1633 he became vicar of Boston, Lincs. In 1643 he was nominated to the *Westminster Assembly, where as chairman of committee he took a leading part in the drawing-up of its doctrinal formularies, the section on the Decalogue in the 'Larger Catechism' being his work. He then became master successively of Emmanuel (1645) and St. John's (1653) colleges, Cambridge, and in 1656 also Regius professor of divinity. After the Restoration he was superseded in his mastership and his chair, and passed the rest of his life in retirement. He published little and his chief works are posthumous, but his four letters to B. *Whichcote, published with the replies as an appendix to the latter's Moral and Religious Aphorisms (1753), illustrate the strength of his Puritan convictions, his fear of the rationalistic tendencies of the *Cambridge Platonists, and his charity towards the opinions of his opponents.

Forty Sermons upon Several Occasions, ed. by his son, Jonathan Tuckney (London, 1676); Praelectiones Theologicae, ed. id. (Amsterdam, 1679), with short biogr. preface by W. D[illingham] (no pagination). 'Eight Letters of Dr. Anthony Tuckney and Dr. Benjamin Whichcote' are appended to Whichcote's Moral and Religious Aphorisms, ed. S. Salter (1753; separate pagination), with preface, pp. i–xl. J. *Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century, ii (1872), pp. 47, 53–5, and 59–84; J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, iii (1911), pp. 529–32, 576–8, 591–4 and passim. F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists. A Study (1926), pp. 54–9. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 286–8.

TULCHAN BISHOPS (Gaelic tulachan, 'little hillock'). Term contemptuously applied to the titular bishops introduced by the Scottish *Presbyterians after the Covenant of Leith (1572). They were to be responsible to the General Assembly; but, evading ecclesiastical control, they became merely tools of the lay nobles who drew the revenues of their sees. On his return from Geneva (1574), A. *Melville condemned episcopacy in any form as unscriptural and incompatible with a pure Church. The bishops had disappeared by 1580.

TULLOCH, JOHN (1823–86), Scottish theologian. Ordained in the Church of Scotland, he became in 1854, after several years' parochial work, Principal and professor of theology at St. Mary's College, St. Andrews. From about 1875 he was the most prominent member of his Church, and in 1878 was elected *Moderator. He is chiefly remembered for the prominent part he took in trying to awaken a spirit of liberal orthodoxy in the Church of Scotland. He sought to defend its comprehensiveness in doctrine and did not wish its members to be bound to the letter of its credal formularies. His most important treatise was his Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century (2 vols., 1872).

Memoir by Mrs. [M. O. W.] Oliphant (Edinburgh, 1888). T. Bayne in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 307–10.

TUNICLE. In the W. rite the outer liturgical garment of the *subdeacon. Until 1968 it was also worn by the bishop under his *dalmatic and *chasuble. It seems to have developed out of the ordinary overcoat (tunica) of the later Empire, though without the usual girdle. St. *Gregory I (Ep. ix. 26) suppressed it at Rome, but it survived in other places and was reintroduced at Rome c. 1000. Its further development was closely parallel with that of the dalmatic. The tunicle formerly differed from it in possessing no clavi or stripes of coloured material and in having narrower sleeves, but the two garments came to be identical. When the office of subdeacon was suppressed in the RC Church the garment was rendered obsolete.

Braun, L.G., pp. 247–305. J. Braun, S.J., Handbuch der Paramentik (1912), pp. 108–19; id. in C.E., xv (1912), p. 87 f., s.v. 'Tunic', with bibl.

TUNKERS, also known as Dunkers, Dunkards (from Old Germ. tunken, 'to dip') and as German Baptists, a Protestant sect so named from its distinctive baptismal rite. Originating in Germany in 1708 under Alexander Mack (1679–1735), they quickly gathered adherents in Germany, Holland, and Switzerland; but persecution compelled them to emigrate to America (1719–29), where they have been settled ever since. In the 1880s the Tunkers became divided into Progressives and Conservatives ('Old Church'). They reject infant baptism, insist on total immersion, accompany the celebration of the Lord's Supper with an agape, refuse to take oaths or to bear arms, discourage litigation, and disallow statistics as savouring of pride. Since 1908 their official title has been 'Church of the Brethren'.

D. F. Durnbaugh (ed. and tr.), European Origins of the Brethren. A source book on the beginnings of the Church of the Brethren in the early eighteenth century (Elgin, Ill. [1958]). M. G. Brumbaugh, A History of the German Baptist Brethren in Europe and America (Mount Morris, Ill., 1899). J. L. Gillin, The Dunkers. A Sociological Interpretation (Columbia University thesis; New York, 1906). J. H. Moore in S. M. Jackson (ed.), The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, iv (1909), pp. 24–7; E. Boardman in E.B. (ed. 1969), iv, p. 156 f., s.v. 'Brethren, Church of the'.

TUNSTALL, CUTHBERT (1474–1559), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at Cambridge and Padua. His interest in learning won him the friendship of Abp. W. *Warham, who appointed him his chancellor c. 1508. After holding a series of preferments and being employed on various political missions by *Henry VIII, he was made Bp. of London in 1522 and translated to Durham in 1530. In the divorce question he was one of the counsel of the Queen, but during the following years, though continuing sympathetic to Catholic doctrine, he lacked strength of purpose. He yielded in the matter of the Royal Supremacy after first opposing it, and introduced into his diocese the religious changes confirmed by Parliament. In 1537 he was made president of the Council of the North, but continued to take an active part in ecclesiastical affairs, writing in favour of auricular confession, using his influence to keep the '*Bishops' Book' (1537) as Catholic as possible, and assisting with the preparation of the '*Great Bible' of 1539. Under *Edward VI his position became more and more difficult. In 1547 he voted against the abolition of *chantries, and in 1549 against the Act of *Uniformity and the Act permitting priests to marry. In 1551 he was imprisoned in his house in London, where he wrote his treatise De Veritate Corporis et Sanguinis Domini Nostri Jesu Christi in Eucharistia (publd. at Paris, 1554), a careful exposition of Catholic Eucharistic doctrine. In 1552 he was tried by a lay commission for high treason and deprived of his bishopric, but reinstated by *Mary in 1554, when he refrained from taking part in the persecution of Protestants. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he refused to take the Oath of Supremacy and declined to consecrate M. *Parker to the Abpric. of Canterbury (1559). He was then deprived of his see and kept a prisoner under the care of Parker in *Lambeth Palace, where he died shortly afterwards.

The Register of his Durham episcopate was ed. and calendared by Gladys Hinde (Surtees Society, clxi for 1951; 1952; pp. 1–131, with introd., pp. xi–xxxv). A collection of Certain Godly and Devout Prayers written by Tunstall in Lat. were translated into Eng. by Thomas Paynell, Augustinian Friar (London, 1558; ed. R. Hudleston, O.S.B., 'Orchard Books', extra series, i, 1925). Full life by C. Sturge (London, 1938). Brief sketch by G. H. Ross-Lewin (Typical English Churchmen, series ii, 1909, pp. 135–66). A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 310–15; H. Gee in D.E.C.H., pp. 603–5, s.v. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1913–15; B.R.U.C., pp. 597–8 and 684–5.

TURNER, CUTHBERT HAMILTON (1860–1930), *Patristic and NT scholar. Educated at *Winchester and at New College, Oxford, he was a Fellow of Magdalen from 1889 until his death. In 1920 he was elected Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis at Oxford in succession to W. *Lock; he was the first layman to hold the office. An early interest in chronology bore fruit in 'The Day and Year of St. *Polycarp's Martyrdom [Saturday, 22 Feb. 156]', in Studia Biblica, ii (1890), pp. 105–55; this was followed by a comprehensive article 'Chronology of the NT' in J. *Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible, i (1898). His main life-work was Ecclesiae Occidentalis Monumenta Iuris Antiquissima, a very painstaking and accurate edition of the early Latin ecclesiastical canons. Six fascicules (1899–1930) appeared at intervals during his life; the 7th fascicule came out in 1939, leaving the work incomplete. His writings also include a revision of C. *Gore's The Church and the Ministry (1919), an important essay on 'The Apostolic Succession' in Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918; ed. H. B. *Swete), some papers on 'Marcan Usage' in the Journal of Theological Studies, and 'St. Mark' in the S.P.C.K. Commentary (1928).

Catholic and Apostolic. Collected Papers by . . . Cuthbert Hamilton Turner, ed. by H. N. Bate (1933), with Memoir by id., pp. 1–65. H. N. Bate in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 861–4.

TURRECREMATA, JUAN DE; TOMÁS DE. See Torquemada, Juan de; Tomás de.

TUTIORISM. The system of moral theology (also termed Rigorism), acc. to which, in cases of doubt or perplexity, the 'safer opinion' (opinio tutior; i.e that in favour of the moral principle) must be followed unless there is a degree of probability amounting to moral certitude in the 'less safe opinion' (opinio minus tuta; i.e. that against the principle). A kind of Tutiorism was the normal position held by Catholic moral theologians before the notion of 'probability' achieved its full development in the 17th and 18th cents. As against *Probabilism, many of the Jansenists (e.g. P. *Nicole) maintained Tutiorist doctrines; but the system was obsolescent by 1690, when the *Inquisition included statements of Tutiorism in a list of condemned rigorist propositions. Its critics urge that the system, if strictly practised, would render life intolerable, its requirement of absolute certainty before taking action making moral decisions in many cases impossible.

TWELFTH NIGHT. The evening preceding Twelfth Day (the *Epiphany), twelve days after *Christmas, formerly kept as a time of merry-making and associated with many old customs such as taking down the Christmas decorations. In Herefordshire there was a tradition of lighting twelve bonfires, representing the Twelve Apostles, to secure a blessing on the fruits of the earth, and similar practices prevailed elsewhere. The 'Twelfth Cake' was an ornamented cake made for the occasion, containing a bean or coin, the drawer of which became the 'King' or 'Queen' of the festivities.

TWELVE APOSTLES, Teaching of the. See Didache.

TWELVE ARTICLES, The. The main charter of the *Peasants' Revolt, in the form of 'Twelve Articles' adopted at Memmingen in Mar. 1525. Among the peasants' demands were the right to appoint their own pastors, control over tithes, abolition of serfdom, proper rights in the matters of fishing (in streams, but not in ponds), game, and woodcutting, just conditions of work and rent, justice in the courts and abolition of Todfall ('heriot', i.e. the usage whereby the landlord appropriated the most valuable chattel of a deceased tenant). For the most part the claims were moderate, esp. when compared with the extremities to which the peasants soon pushed their demands; and in a final article it was stated that nothing would be required except in so far as it could be shown to conform with the will of God. M. *Luther formally professed his agreement with the Articles, though he opposed the attempt to achieve their demands by revolt.

Text in H. Böhmer, Urkunden zur Geschichte des Bauernkrieges und der Wiedertäufer (H. *Lietzmann (ed.), Kleine Texte, No. 50/51, 1910), pp. 3–10; Eng. tr. in Kidd, No. 83, pp. 174–9.

TWELVE GREAT FEASTS, The. In the E. Church, the twelve principal feast days in the liturgical year: *Epiphany (6 Jan.), *Presentation of Christ in the Temple (2 Feb.), *Annunciation of the BVM (25 March), *Palm Sunday, *Ascension Day, *Pentecost, *Transfiguration (6 Aug.), *Dormition of BVM (15 Aug.), *Nativity of BVM (8 Sept.), Holy *Cross (14 Sept.), *Presentation of BVM in the Temple (21 Nov.), and *Christmas Day (25 Dec.). *Easter Day, the 'Feast of Feasts', stands in a class by itself, and is not reckoned as one of the twelve.

TWELVE PATRIARCHS, Testaments of the. See Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs.

TYCHICUS. A disciple of St. *Paul. He was a native of Asia (Acts 20. 4) who accompanied St. Paul on his third missionary journey and in his captivity; and he was the bearer of the letters to Colossae (Col. 4. 7 f.) and *Ephesus (Eph. 6. 21 f.). He is also referred to at 2 Tim. 4. 12 and Tit. 3. 12. Several cities claim him as bishop, while some martyrologies make him a deacon. Feast day in the E., 8 Dec.; in the W., 29 Apr.

TYCHON, Patriarch. See Tikhon, Patriarch.

TYCONIUS (d. c. 400), *Donatist theologian. He seems to have been a layman of considerable importance in his community, but was attacked for his catholicizing views by the Donatist bishop, Parmenian (c. 378), and condemned by a Donatist Council at *Carthage c. 380; he remained, however, a member of his sect. His condemnation was probably caused by two works, 'De Bello Intestino Libri Tres' and 'Expositiones Diversarum Causarum', now lost, in which he seems to have taught that the Church must be a society spread over the whole earth and contain both good and bad. Tyconius's chief work was his 'Liber Regularum' (c. 380), which propounded seven rules for the interpretation of Scripture, which St. *Augustine, who greatly esteemed him despite his being a Donatist, incorporated in his 'De Doctrina Christiana'; hence they played an important part in medieval exegesis. His Commentary on Rev. no longer exists in its original form, but it is quoted and used by a number of subsequent commentators, notably *Primasius, *Bede, and the Spanish presbyter, Beatus of Liebana (c. 776). Fragments of an anonymous commentary on Rev. in a Turin MS. (Codex F. iv. 18; formerly at *Bobbio) appear to be directly derived from Tyconius's commentary.

Editio princeps of the 'Liber Regularum' by J. J. Grynaeus, Monumenta Patrum Orthodoxographa (Basle, [1569]), pp. 1352–87; the 'Rules' are also repr. from a later ed. in J. P. Migne, PL, xviii, 13–66. Discussion and crit. text in F. C. *Burkitt, The Book of Rules of Tyconius (Texts and Studies, iii, pt. 1; Cambridge, 1894). The Turin Fragments of Tyconius' Commentary on Revelation, ed. F. Lo Bue (ib., New Series, vii; 1963). On his commentary on the Apocalypse see also J. Haussleiter, 'Die lateinische Apokalypse der alten Afrikanischen Kirche' in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altkirchlichen Literatur, iv (1891), pp. 1–244. T. Hahn, Tyconius-Studien (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, vi, Hft. 2; 1900). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, v (1920), pp. 165–219. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 495–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 373. E. Dinkler in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 849–56, s.v. 'Ticonius'.

TYNDALE, WILLIAM (1494?–1536), translator of the Bible and Reformer. A native of Gloucestershire, he studied from 1510 to 1515 at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and later at Cambridge. About 1522 he conceived the project of translating the Bible; but when C. *Tunstall, Bp. of London, refused his support, Tyndale went to Germany and settled at Hamburg (1524), never to return to his own country. The printing of his first translation, which was begun at *Cologne in 1525, was interrupted by the local magistrates, but completed at Worms the same year. On its arrival in England in 1526, it was bitterly attacked by Abp. W. *Warham, C. Tunstall, and T. *More. Tyndale spent most of his remaining years in the English House at Antwerp, where he frequently revised the NT. His other writings include A Prologue on . . . Romans (1526), Parable of the Wicked Mammon (1528), and Obedience of a Christian Man (1528). In theology he insisted on the authority of Scripture, and like M. *Luther, on justification by faith, though his Eucharistic teaching resembled that of H. *Zwingli. He wrote also against T. *Wolsey and the 'Divorce' (Practice of Prelates, 1530) and against T. More, his ablest opponent. Besides his frequently revised NT, Tyndale printed translations of the Pentateuch (1530) and Jonah (1531), and left Josh.–2 Chr. in MS. His Biblical translations, made direct from the Greek and Hebrew into straightforward, vigorous English, remain the basis of both the AV and the RV. In 1535 he was arrested, imprisoned at Vilvorde, nr. Brussels, and strangled and burnt at the stake prob. on 6 Oct. 1536. Feast day in some Anglican Churches, 6 Oct.

Collection of his works publd. London, 1573. Doctrinal Treatises ed. H. Walter (*Parker Society, 1848); selections from his works ed. S. L. Greenslade (London, 1938) and G. E. Duffield (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, i; 1964). Modern lives by R. Demaus (London [1872]), J. F. Mozley (ib., 1937) and C. H. Williams (ib., 1969). Tyndale Commemoration Volume, reproducing substantial parts of Tyndale's Revised Testament of 1534 (London, 1939), with brief life by J. F. Mozley, pp. 224–40, and essay on 'Tyndale's Influence on English Literature' by J. R. Coates, pp. 241–55. E. I. Carlyle in D.N.B., lvii (1899), pp. 424–30. See also bibl. to Bible (English Versions).

TYPES (Gk. τύποι, 'examples', 'figures'). In theology, the foreshadowings of the Christian dispensation in the events and persons of the OT. Just as Christ Himself could refer to *Jonah as a symbol of His *Resurrection, so St. *Paul found in the Israelites' crossing of the *Red Sea (1 Cor. 10. 1–6) the 'type' of baptism, while to the author of the Ep. to the Hebrews *Melchizedek was the foreshadowing of Christ (Heb. 7). A Christian type differs from an allegory in that the historical reference is not lost sight of. Types are looked upon, however, as having a greater significance now than was apparent in their pre-Christian OT context. Typology, with an increasingly allegorical emphasis, was much employed in the early Church, esp. by the *Alexandrine Fathers, for whom almost everything in the OT was capable of interpretation by this method.

G. W. H. Lampe–K. J. Woollcombe, Essays on Typology (Studies in Biblical Theology, xxii; 1957). J. Daniélou, S.J., Sacramentum Futuri. Études sur les origines de la typologie biblique (1950; Eng. tr., 1960). A. C. Charity, Events and their Afterlife. The Dialectics of Christian Typology in the Bible and in Dante (Cambridge, 1966). W. J. Phythian-Adams, The Fulness of Israel. A Study of the Meaning of Sacred History (Warburton Lectures for 1935–1937; 1938); L. Goppelt, Typos. Die typologische Deutung des Alten Testaments im Neuen (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xliii; 1939); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., The Throne of David. A Study of the Fulfilment of the Old Testament in Jesus Christ and His Church (1941); P. Lundberg. La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, x; 1942); P. Grelot, Sens chrétien de l'ancien testament (Bibliothèque de théologie, Série 1; théologie dogmatique, iii; 1962). A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament (1965).

TYPICON (Gk. τυπικόν). In the E. Church, a liturgical manual which indicates how the services are to be recited during the ecclesiastical year, with directions as to the rules to be followed when two or more feasts fall on the same day.

TYPOS, The. The Imperial edict issued by Constans II in Sept. 647 or 648 to supersede *Heraclius's *Ecthesis. With a view to securing peace, it forbade anyone to assert either *Monothelite or *Dyothelite beliefs, and required that teaching should be limited to what had been defined in the first Five Oecumenical Councils. The refusal of Pope *Martin I (649–55; q.v.) to accept it led to his deposition.

The text is preserved in the Acts of the Lateran Council of 649; pr. in Hardouin, iii, col. 824 f., with Lat. tr. cols. 823–6. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 432–4 Fliche–Martin, v (1938), p. 166. See also bibl. to Martin I.

TYRANNICIDE. The murder of a tyrant whose rule has become insupportable. On the ethical question, three opinions have been current among Christians:

(1) Those who hold that the sixth commandment is to be interpreted as forbidding killing in any form, e.g. in police action or in war, naturally believe Tyrannicide to be included in the prohibition.

(2) Those who (e.g. on the basis of Rom. 13. 1 f.) hold that force is by Divine authority wholly invested in the de facto civil government also believe Tyrannicide to be morally unjustifiable.

(3) Those who hold that rebellion, including Tyrannicide, is defensible and right in circumstances where, if the oppressor were an alien, war would be justified, and provided that the grievance is considerable, that the circumstances offer no milder means of redress, and that the killing is not simply an act of revenge. Such is the general view of Catholic moral theologians.

A. Bride in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1988–2016, s.v.

TYRE AND SIDON. The two chief cities of the Phoenicians, on the coast of Syria. In OT times they carried on a lucrative maritime trade, and the Israelites knew them as rich heathen neighbours, whence in the time of King Ahab (c. 875–853 B.C.) the worship of the Tyrian *Baal was introduced into Israel, and combated by *Elijah (1 Kgs. 16. 31 ff., 18. 18 ff.). In the Gospels inhabitants of the region of Tyre and Sidon are mentioned among the multitudes attracted to Christ (Lk. 6. 17), and He Himself visited the district and healed the daughter of a Gentile woman there (Mk. 7. 24–30). In His comparison of the final judgement on these two cities with that being incurred by the towns of Palestine (Mt. 11. 22), it would appear that Tyre and Sidon represented the heathen world. Tyre was held by the *Crusaders, 1124–1291.

F. C. Eiselen, Sidon. A Study in Oriental History (Columbia University Oriental Studies, iv; New York, 1907); W. B. Fleming, The History of Tyre (Columbia University thesis; ib., x; 1915); Nina Jidejian, Tyre through the Ages (Beirut, 1969). [E.] Honigmann in P.W., Zweite Reihe, ii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2216–29, s.v. 'Sidon'; L. Hennequin in Dict. Bibl., Supp', iii (1938), cols. 439–47, s.v. 'Fouilles en Phénicie, 88. Saida (Sidon)' and '90. Sour (Tyr)', with reff. to reports of recent excavations; [O.] Eissfeldt in P.W., Zweite Reihe, vi (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1876–1907, s.v. 'Tyros (3)'.

TYRRELL, GEORGE (1861–1909), English *Modernist theologian. He was a native of Dublin, of Evangelical upbringing, and educated at Trinity College. At an early age he had come under High Church influence, esp. that of R. *Dolling, and was later received into the RC Church (1879). In 1880 he entered the *Jesuit novitiate and in 1891 was priested and became lecturer in moral theology at *Stonyhurst. In 1896 he was transferred to Farm Street, the principal church of his order in London, where he was a sought-after confessor and made a name by writing, publishing two collections of Meditations, Nova et Vetera (1897) and Hard Sayings (1898), and a series of Lectures, On External Religion (1899). His friendship with F. *von Hügel led to his acquaintance with the writings of H. *Bergson, M. *Blondel, L. *Laberthonnière, and A. *Loisy, which contributed to his increasing hostility to *Scholasticism and his stress on the anti-intellectual and experiential aspects of religion. From 1899 he moved further and further from traditional RC orthodoxy, notably in an article on hell, entitled 'A Perverted Devotion', which appeared in the Weekly Register (1899). Though its publication led to his removal from Farm Street and his retirement to the Jesuit mission house at Richmond in N. Yorks, Tyrrell did not cease to feel a strong attraction to the devotional aspects of Catholicism, for which he continued to work as a keen apologist. In 1900 he wrote Oil and Wine (printed 1902; new preface, 1907), another book of meditations, but its immediate publication was prohibited by his episcopal superiors on account of its immanentist tendencies. In 1901 he published The Faith of the Millions and in 1903 his Lex Orandi, his last work to appear with an '*Imprimatur'. After he had in vain asked for his secularization (1905), the final rupture with the Society of Jesus came in 1906, following the publication of extracts from an anon. 'Letter to a Professor' by the Corriere della Sera. This writing, in which he contrasted living faith with dead theology, he published with amplifications in 1906 as A Much Abused Letter. Though expelled from his order and suspended 'a divinis', Tyrrell continued his literary activities. Lex Credendi (1906) is for the most part a devotional exposition of the 'Our Father' with a strong anti-intellectual and anti-theological bias, and Through Scylla and Charybdis (1907) a collection of essays which reflected his increasing sympathy with a thoroughgoing symbolism. After *Pius X's issue of the encyclical 'Pascendi', Tyrrell wrote two letters of protest to The Times of 30 Sept. and 1 Oct. 1907; they drew upon him the minor excommunication. In 1908 Tyrrell published his Medievalism, a bitter attack on Card. D. J. *Mercier and a violent denunciation of the contemporary RC Church. His posthumous work, Christianity at the Cross-Roads (1909), questioned whether Christianity was the final religion and held out hopes of a universal religion of which Christianity was but the germ. Many of his articles were published under assumed names. Tyrrell died with the last rites of the Church, but was refused Catholic burial. His remains were deposited in the Anglican churchyard at Storrington, where H. *Bremond took part in the funeral.

Maude D. Petre, Autobiography and Life of George Tyrrell (2 vols., 1912); id., Letters (1920); id., Von Hügel and Tyrrell. The Story of a Friendship (1937). J. L. May, Father Tyrrell and the Modernist Movement (1932); A. Loisy, Georges Tyrrell et Henri Bremond (1936); J. J. Stam, George Tyrrell 1861–1909 (Utrecht, 1938). J. Ratté, Three Modernists (1968), pp. 143–256, with further bibl. pp. 354–6. R. [G.] Chapman, 'The Thought of George Tyrrell' in Essays & Poems presented to Lord David Cecil (1970), pp. 140–68. T. M. Loome, 'A Bibliography of the Published Writings of George Tyrrell (1861–1909)' in Heythrop Journal, x (1969), pp. 280–314, xi (1970), pp. 161–9. J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., 1901–1911, ii, pp. 542–5, s.v.

U

UBAGHS, GERHARD CASIMIR (1800–75), chief representative of the *Traditionalist *Ontologism of Louvain. He became professor of philosophy at Louvain in 1834 and from 1846 onwards was editor of the Revue Catholique, the principal organ of Ontologism. Among his most important works are his Logicae seu Philosophiae Rationalis Elementa (1834), Ontologiae seu Metaphysicae Generalis Elementa (1835), and Theodiceae seu Theologiae Naturalis Elementa (1841) in which he expounds a mitigated Traditionalism acc. to which the knowledge of metaphysical and moral truths is based on a primitive Divine teaching handed on by oral tradition. This teaching he combined with the Ontologist doctrine of the direct contemplation of God by the intellect in the 'objective ideas'. Though his books were not placed on the *Index, his teaching was censured by the *Holy Office on 21 Sept. 1864, and soon afterwards Ubaghs submitted and resigned his chair. See also Traditionalism.

J. Jacops, 'Notice sur la vie et les travaux de M. le Chanoine G. C. Ubaghs, Professeur Émérite à la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université Catholique de Louvain' in Annuaire de l'Université Catholique de Louvain (1876), pp. 417–66. A. Simon, 'Le Cardinal Sterckx et la condamnation de Ubaghs en 1843' in Collectanea Mechliniensia, xxxi (1946), pp. 639–644; id., Le Cardinal Sterckx et son temps (1792–1867), ii (Wetteren, 1950), pp. 162–97, passim. J. Henry in Biographie nationale publiée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, xxv (1930–2), p. 890 f., s.v. See also works cited under Traditionalism.

UBERTINO OF CASALE (1259–c. 1330), a leader of the '*Spiritual Franciscans' (q.v.). He became a *Franciscan in 1273, studied at *Paris, and returned to Italy as a preacher and lecturer. Here *John of Parma and Peter John *Olivi, then leading figures among the Spirituals, with whom he became acquainted, gained a strong influence on him. In 1305 he wrote his principal work, 'Arbor vitae crucifixae Jesu Christi', a collection of apocalyptic ideas and thoughts on the Church and society, full of invective against *Boniface VIII and Benedict XI. From 1306 to 1308 he was chaplain to Cardinal N. Orsini, pontifical legate in N. and Central Italy, and in 1310 was called to *Avignon by *Clement V to defend the Spirituals in the controversy on poverty. Having failed to obtain the erection of convents and provinces for his party, he was allowed, in 1317, to be transferred to the *Benedictines of Gembloux. In 1322 *John XXII asked his opinion in the question of 'theoretical poverty', then a matter of dispute between the *Dominicans and the Franciscans. Two years later he was still at the *Curia, in the service of Cardinal Orsini. He fled, however, in 1325, probably because accused of heresy; in 1328 he was prob. among the Franciscans who accompanied Louis the Bavarian on his journey to Rome; and in 1329 he seems to have preached against John XXII at Como. Nothing is known of his death. He is mentioned by *Dante in canto xii of the 'Paradiso', and was venerated by the *Fraticelli of the 15th century.

His Arbor Vitae Crucifixae Jesu was pr. at Venice, 1485. F. Callaey, L'Idéalisme franciscain spirituel au XIVe siècle. Étude sur Ubertin de Casale (Université de Louvain. Recueil de travaux publiés par les membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, fasc. 28; 1911). E. B. d'Isegem, O.M.Cap., 'L'Influence d'Ubertin de Casale sur les écrits de S. Bernardin de Sienne' in Collectanea Franciscana, v (1935), pp. 5–44. M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty (1961), esp. pp. 174–6, 184–97. See also P. Godefroy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), 2021–34, s.v.

UBIQUITARIANISM. The doctrine held by M. *Luther and many of his followers that Christ in His human nature is everywhere present. Luther employed it, e.g., in his two writings Das diese Worte Christi, 'Das ist mein Leib', noch fest stehen wider die Schwarmgeister (1527) and Bekenntnis vom Abendmahl Christi (1528), to uphold his belief in the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist; and it was formally defended by J. *Brenz at a Lutheran synod at Stuttgart in 1559.

UDALL, JOHN (c. 1560–92), also 'Uvedale', *Puritan pamphleteer and Hebrew scholar. Matriculating at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1578, he was chiefly educated at Trinity College, where he became strongly inclined to Puritanism. While curate of Kingston-on-Thames (1584–8) he was charged before the Court of *High Commission in 1586 for his criticism of Episcopacy. In 1588 he published anonymously a widely read pamphlet on The State of the Church of England, laid open in a Conference between Diotrephes a Bishop, Tertullus a Papist, Demetrius a Usurer, Pandochus an Innkeeper and Paul a Preacher of the Word of God. Suspected of complicity in the *Marprelate Tracts, he was summoned before the Privy Council in 1589. In 1590, on his refusal to clear himself on oath, he was found guilty of the authorship of A Demonstration of the Truth of that Discipline which Christ hath Prescribed for the Government of His Church [1588]; but the sentence of death was not executed. He died in prison in Southwark, shortly after his pardon had been procured.

He published several volumes of his sermons, including Amendment of Life [1584], The True Remedy against Famine and Wars [1588], and The Combat between Christ and the Devil (1588). In 1593 his Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy (anon.) was published posthumously. In the same year there appeared at *Leyden his Key to the Holy Tongue, which comprised a Hebrew Grammar translated from Petrus Martinius and a Hebrew dictionary of his own compilation; the work was highly valued by *James I.

The State of the Church of England was repr. by E. Arber (The English Scholar's Library of Old and Modern Works, v; 1880); A Demonstration of the Truth of that Discipline which Christ hath Prescribed, also ed. id. (ib., ix; 1880). S. Lee in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 4–6, s.v., with reff.

UDALL, NICHOLAS (c. 1505–56), also 'Uvedale', reformer and dramatist. Born at Southampton, he was admitted a scholar of *Winchester in 1517 and of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1520, where he became a probationary Fellow c. 1525. His *Lutheran sympathies prob. forced him to leave Oxford in 1529 and prevented his proceeding to M.A. until 1534. In 1533 he joined John Leland (d. 1552) in the composition of verses for the coronation of Anne Boleyn. He was appointed Headmaster of Eton in 1534, but dismissed in 1541 on charges of complicity in the theft of silver images and college plate and of unsuitable behaviour, which led to a short imprisonment in the Marshalsea. In 1547, with the patronage of Catherine Parr, he was appointed to assist with Princess (later Queen) *Mary in translating the first volume of the Paraphrases of *Erasmus (publ. 1548). Through the favour of *Edward VI he became a Canon of *Windsor in 1551 and in 1553 he became rector of Calborne (Isle of Wight). Possibly because of his association with Mary over the translation of Erasmus's Paraphrases he remained in favour in the next reign, continuing to write for the Court stage and c. 1555 becoming Headmaster of *Westminster (in succession to Alexander *Nowell).

Udall is a significant example of the influence of Protestantism on the new humanist movement. His other published works include translations of Erasmus's Apophthegms (1542), of *Peter Martyr's Tractatio de Sacramento Eucharistiae (c. 1550), and of T. Gemini's Compendiosa Totius Anatomiae Delineatio (1553). His play Ezekias, performed before *Elizabeth I in 1564, has been lost. His Ralph Roister Doister, however, a Christmas comedy, originally written for a London school, prob. between 1545 and 1552 (publd. 1567), although lost since the 16th cent., was recovered in the early 19th cent. and has been frequently reprinted.

Ralph Roister Doister ed. for the Shakespeare Society by W. D. Cooper (London, 1847), with memoirs of Nicholas Udall, pp. xi–xxxiv. Later edd. include those of W. C. Hazlitt (London, 1874), W. H. Williams–P. A. Robin (London, 1901), J. S. Farmer (ib., 1906, with notes on his other dramatic works), C. G. Child (ib., 1913; with introd.) and G. Scheurweghs (Materials for the study of Old English Drama, ed. H. de Vocht, xvi; Louvain, 1939), with biographical introd. pp. xi–l. N. Pocock (ed.), Troubles Connected with the Prayer Book of 1549 (Camden Society, New Series, xxxvii; 1884), pp. xx–xxv. S. Lee in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 7–9, s.v. F. S. Boas–A. W. Reed in C.B.E.L., i, p. 519 f.

U.I.O.D.G. (sometimes I.O.D.G), i.e. the initial letters of (ut) in omnibus Deus glorificetur ('that God may be glorified in all things'), one of the mottoes of the *Benedictine Order. It occurs in the 'Rule of St. Benedict', ch. 57.

ULLATHORNE, WILLIAM BERNARD (1806–1889), RC Bp. of Birmingham. He was a direct descendant of St. Thomas *More. After over three years as a cabin-boy, Ullathorne entered the *Benedictine monastery at *Downside in 1824. He was ordained priest in 1831 and, in 1832, volunteered for the mission in *Australia, of which he was made *Vicar General. He organized the RC Church there, working esp. among the convicts, whose cause he defended vigorously during a stay in England. His tract The Catholic Mission in Australasia (1837), as the first popular attack on the convict system, earned him much hostility in Australia. In 1840 he returned to England and in the next year was put in charge of the Benedictine mission at Coventry, where, with the help of Mother Margaret Mary Hallahan (1803–68), the future foundress of the *Dominican convent at Stone, he developed the religious life of the RC parish. Having repeatedly refused a see in Australia, he was appointed *Vicar Apostolic for the Western District of England in 1846. Transferred to the Central District in 1848, he took an active part in the negotiations for establishing the hierarchy in England. During these years he worked together with Cardinal N. *Wiseman to bring about the fusion of the old Catholics with the recent Oxford converts and the Italian priests of the modern congregations, taking up an intermediate position and forming a firm friendship with J. H. Newman. On the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850 he became Bp. of Birmingham, and later engaged in the controversies about the Rambler and E. B. *Pusey's Eirenicon (1866). At the *Vatican Council, though a firm *Ultramontane, he occupied an independent position and was a member of the deputation on ecclesiastical discipline. In 1888 he resigned his see and became titular archbishop. His most popular work, the Autobiography, ending with the year 1851, which was written in 1868–9 and revised in the last year of his life, was published together with his letters in 1891–2.

[E.] Cuthbert Butler, O.S.B., The Life and Times of Bishop Ullathorne (2 vols., 1926); id., The Vatican Council. The Story told from inside in Bishop Ullathorne's letters (2 vols., 1930). T. Cooper in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 19–21.

ULPHILAS (c. 311–83), Apostle of the Goths. Of Cappadocian ancestry, he was completely at one with the Goths, among whom he was born, in both language and sympathy. He spent much of his life as a young man at *Constantinople, and c. 341 was consecrated bishop in the city by *Eusebius (formerly Bp. of Nicomedia), then bishop of the capital. Shortly afterwards he returned to his native country to spend the rest of his life as a keen missionary, at first beyond the confines of the Empire, and later among the Goths settled in Moesia II. He translated the Bible into the *Gothic language for the first time, omitting (acc. to *Philostorgius) only the Books of Kings, as their warlike deeds might have a bad influence upon a nation so fond of war as the Goths. Through his connexions with Eusebius of Nicomedia, he was led into *Arianism; and it was esp. through his influence that for several centuries the Goths continued attached to that heresy. A confession of faith, *Homoean in character, of which Ulphilas was the author, has survived in an imperfect form.

Auxentius, Bp. of Dorostorum, Epistola de Fide, Vita et Obitu Ulfilae, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Supplementum, ed. A. Hamman, O.F.M., i (1958), cols. 703–7; with text of creed, col. 707. The text of the Creed is also pr., less satisfactorily, in A. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole (ed. 3, 1897), § 198 (p. 270 f.). G. Waitz, Über das Leben und die Lehre des Ulphila (1840); F. Kauffmann, Aus der Schule des Wulfila (Texte und Untersuchungen zur altgermanischen Religionsgeschichte, i; 1899). E. A. Thompson, The Visigoths in the Time of Ulfilas (Oxford, 1966), passim. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2048–57. s.v. 'Ulfila'. For works on his version of the Bible see bibl. to Gothic Version.

ULRICH, St. (c. 890–973), Bp. of Augsburg from 923. He took a very prominent part in the political and ecclesiastical history of his times, upholding a high standard of clerical morality and giving his strong support to the policy and reforms of the Emp. Otto I. He is the first person who is known to have been formally canonized by a Pope, John XV pronouncing him a saint at the *Lateran synod of 29 Jan. 993. A considerable cultus developed around him. In the cent. after his death, a forged letter was put into circulation in which he was represented as opposed to clerical celibacy. Feast day, 4 July.

A Sermo Synodalis of Ulrich is repr. from P. *Labbé in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxv, 1071–4. The 'Epistola de Continentia Clericorum' ascribed to him is ed. L. von Heinemann in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, i (1891), pp. 254–60. The principal source for his life is the biography by his contemporary, Gebhard, Provost of Augsburg Cathedral, pr. in AA.SS., Jul. II (1721), pp. 97–131; also ed. G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), pp. 377–425. The life by Bernard of *Reichenau (d. 1248), tr. into German c. 1200, ed. in Germ. and Lat. by J. A. Schmeller (Munich, 1844). Studies by P. I. Braun (Augsburg, 1796; see also other works by the same author), J. N. Stützle (ib., 1860), C. Raffler (ib., 1866), U. Schmid (ib., 1901) and P. Doerfler (ib., 1955). K. Haupt, 'Die Ulrichsvita in der mittelalterlichen Malerei' in Bischof Ulrich und der Augsburger Religionsfriede. Neue Quellenforschungen zum Augsburger Gedenkjahr 955+1555+1955 (Zeitschrift des historischen Vereins für Schwaben, lxi; 1955), pp. 1–159, incl. illustr. E. W. Kemp, Canonization and Authority in the Western Church (1948), p. 57 f. A. Vogel–A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 211–13, s.v.; F. Zoepfl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 454–6, s.v., with bibl.

ULRICH, St. (d. 1154). See Wulfric, St.

ULTRAMONTANISM. The name widely given to a tendency in the RC Church which favours the centralization of authority and influence in the papal *Curia, as opposed to national or diocesan independence. The word is found as early as the 11th cent., but opinions differ as to whether it was used in an ecclesiastical as distinguished from a geographical sense before the rise of *Gallicanism in France in the 17th cent. In this cent. and the next, Ultramontanism became a definite point of view which gained more and more power as national and centrifugal movements such as Gallicanism, *Jansenism, and *Josephinism became discredited either as involved in definite heresy or as lending countenance to the new liberal and anti-Christian movements of which the French Revolution of 1789 was the logical and most systematic expression. The 19th cent., therefore, saw the triumph of the Ultramontane cause, since there rallied to it all those elements in the RC Church which were most opposed to the rising theological liberalism of the age. In France the Gallican party was overpowered by the reproach of having conformed to the Revolution; in Germany the Ultramontanes seized the part of defenders of the Church against the interference of the state in spiritual affairs; in England the new missionary element among the RCs, little hampered by national traditions of the past, had every inducement, in spite of opposition from the hereditary RC families, to support to the utmost the policy of the Curia. The stages of the triumph of Ultramontanism were roughly as follows:

1814. The revival of the *Jesuit Order, which was always the mainstay of curial as opposed to local authority.

1864. The issuing by Pius IX of the Syllabus, in which Catholicism and any form of liberalism were held to be incompatible.

1870. The declaration by the *Vatican Council that the Pope is infallible when he makes, by virtue of his office, a solemn pronouncement on faith or morals. (This declaration, though not conceding the claim of administrative infallibility which many Ultramontanes would have wished, marks a substantial triumph for their point of view.)

F. Nielsen, Pavedømmet i den nittende Hundredaar (2 vols., 1876, ed. 2 revised, 1895–8; Eng. tr., The History of the Papacy in the XIXth Century, 2 vols., 1906); J. B. Bury, History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (1930); J. D. Holmes, The Triumph of the Holy See. A Short History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (1978). R. Aubert in Fliche–Martin, xxi (1952), pp. 262–310, with bibl.

U.M.C.A. The (Anglican) Universities' Mission to Central Africa. It was founded in response to an appeal by D. *Livingstone in the Senate House at Cambridge in 1857 and has received continuous support from members of the universities. The first expedition was led by C. F. Mackenzie, who was consecrated Bp. of South Africa on the way out, but died in Nyasaland within two years of sailing up the Zambezi river. In 1864 the second bishop, W. G. Tozer (Bp. 1863–73), moved the Mission to the island of Zanzibar. Reports from the Mission were instrumental in rousing opinion against the slave trade, which was centred at Zanzibar; in 1873 the Sultan was persuaded to abolish it, and the foundation-stone of the cathedral was laid on the site of the slave market. In the same year work was re-established on the mainland; it extended through what are now Tanzania, Malawi and Zambia. Owing to the climate there was a high rate of mortality among the missionaries, and from the first the training of a native ministry has been in the forefront of the Mission's work. The first African (a former slave given to Bp. Tozer by the Sultan) was ordained deacon in 1879. The bulk of the clergy, as well as some of the bishops, in the countries served by the Mission are now nationals. The Community of the Sacred Passion, founded by Bp. F. *Weston of Zanzibar in 1910, has African and British nuns.

The formation in the 1950s of the Provinces of East and Central Africa cut across the area of the Mission's activities. In 1965 the U.M.C.A. joined with the *S.P.G. to form the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (*U.S.P.G.).

R. Keable, Darkness or Light (1912); G. H. Wilson, History of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa (1936); The History of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa: vol. i by A. E. M[ary] Anderson-Morshead, covering 1859–96 (1897; ed. 5, covering 1859–1909, 1909); vol. ii by A. G. Blood, covering 1907–32 (1957); vol. iii by id., covering 1933–57 (1962).

UNA SANCTA (Lat., 'One Holy'). Two of the *notes of the Church in the Nicene Creed, and often used, esp. in quite recent times, substantivally for the Church, usually with emphasis upon its corporate aspect.

UNAM SANCTAM. The Bull (so named from its opening words) which *Boniface VIII issued on 18 Nov. 1302 during his quarrel with Philip IV of France, declaring that there was 'One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church' outside which there was 'neither salvation nor remission of sins'. It strongly emphasized the position of the Pope as the Supreme Head of the Church; and it maintained that to reject his authority was to cease to belong to the Church. It further declared that the 'temporal sword' and the 'spiritual sword' were alike committed to the Church. Of these the spiritual sword was in the hands of the clergy, while the temporal sword was delegated to the secular authority, to be wielded on behalf of the Church and under its direction. Since what was spiritual was greater than what was temporal, the temporal power was to be subject to the spiritual, which was itself subject only to the judgement of God. As the authority of the spiritual power had been divinely granted to St. *Peter and his successors, to oppose it was to oppose the law of God Himself. The Bull concluded by affirming that it was necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff. Although the text of the Bull contained nothing new, it brought to a point the ever-growing claims of the Papacy and marks the zenith of medieval Papal ecclesiastical polity.

Crit. ed. of text in G. Digard–M. Faucon–A. Thomas–R. Fawtier (edd.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Ser. 2, iv), iii (1921), No. 5382, cols. 888–90; operative portions in Mirbt, No. 372, p. 210 f.; Eng. tr. in Bettenson, pp. 159–61. T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933), esp. ch. xii, pp. 313–37; J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'État au temps de Philippe le Bel (S.S.L., viii; 1926), esp. pp. 79–91, 150–5.

UNCIAL SCRIPT. A form of majuscule script used for books in Greek and Latin from about the 4th to the 8th cents. A.D. Greek examples are the *Codices Sinaiticus, Vaticanus and Alexandrinus; Latin examples are the Codex of *Eusebius of Vercelli and the *Codices Fuldensis and Amiatinus (qq.v.). Its name is derived from a passage in *Jerome's preface to Job, but its present meaning is that assigned to it by the *Maurist authors of the Nouveau Traité de diplomatique (1765).

UNCONDITIONED, The. The term used by William Rowan Hamilton (1805–65) for the supposed entity which was the condition of the universe and by some equated with God.

UNCREATED LIGHT. In the *Hesychast system, the mystical light of God's visible Presence (also known as the Light of Tabor) which the soul was held to be capable of apprehending by submitting to an elaborate process of ascetic purification and devotion. Its attainment was considered the highest end of man on earth. See also Hesychasm.

UNCTION. The process of anointing with oil with a religious significance, usually by a bishop or priest, e.g. at the *Coronation of a monarch. In the RC and Eastern Orthodox Churches Unction is used both at *Baptism and *Confirmation. The word is most commonly applied, however, to the Sacrament of the Unction (or Anointing) of the Sick. This rite was long known in the W. Church as 'Extreme Unction' (unctio extrema), the word 'extreme' being explained either by the fact that it was the last of the three Sacramental Unctions or because it was normally administered only when the patient was in extremis. The 'Constitution on Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council recommended the title 'Anointing of the Sick' and this has been adopted in the Ordo issued in 1972 ('Ordo Unctionis Infirmorum eorumque Pastoralis Curae').

In the NT the anointing of the sick is referred to in Mk. 6. 13 and Jas. 5. 14 f. There is a prayer for the Blessing of Oil in St. *Hippolytus, Apostolic Tradition, 5, and in the Euchologion of St. *Serapion of Thmuis (d. c. 365). From the 5th cent. references are more frequent. *Innocent I, in his Ep. to Decentius of Eugubium (416), describes the rite of unction with both spiritual and physical effects from which those undergoing canonical *penance are excluded. In St. *Caesarius of Arles the rite is found in connexion with the reception of Holy Communion; *Bede represents it as a well-established custom; and from the 10th cent. it is frequently discussed in connexion with the theology of the Sacraments. Since *Peter Lombard, the first known author to use the term 'extreme unction', it has been numbered among the *Seven Sacraments. According to developed medieval doctrine, as expounded by St. *Thomas Aquinas, the remote matter of the Sacrament is the oil consecrated by the bishop, its proximate matter the anointing of the five senses, its form prayer and its minister the priest.

In the first seven cents. recovery from illness was commonly expected as a result of unction. In the early Middle Ages, however, the rite became so closely connected with repentance and the whole penitential system that it was commonly postponed until death was approaching, and in practice bodily recovery was not ordinarily looked for. The 1972 RC Ordo lays much greater emphasis on healing and underlines the position of sickness in the normal life of Christians and its part in the redemptive work of the Church. The Ordo provides for a blessing of the room (with *Holy Water if desired), a brief address, a penitential act (which may include sacramental *confession), the reading of one of a selection of Scriptural passages, with commentary if circumstances permit, intercession for the sick person and his attendants, and the laying on of hands in silence; the patient is then anointed on the forehead and hands with a formula in two parts, to each of which he replies 'Amen'; the rite closes with a collect asking for healing, the *Lord's Prayer, and a special blessing. Normally oil blessed by the bishop on *Maundy Thursday is used, but in cases of necessity the priest administering the Sacrament may bless the oil. In the past olive oil was required, but oil from any plant may now be used. The Sacrament may be administered to all who are seriously ill, more than once during the same illness if a new crisis arises, to old people who are weak but not ill, and to children old enough to appreciate the nature of the Sacrament.

In the Greek Church the rite is called Euchelaion (Gk. εὐχέλαιον, 'oil of prayer') and administered in church by seven, five, or three priests. Here its primary end is held to be the physical cure, though it is in fact frequently received as a preparation for Communion even by those who are not ill.

In the First English BCP (1549) a form of unction was included in the Order for the Visitation of the Sick for use 'if the sick person desire'. It contained an accompanying prayer for healing of body and mind, forgiveness, and spiritual strengthening. In 1552 and later versions of the BCP there has been no provision for unction. In modern times a desire for its restoration has been widely expressed in the Anglican Communion. The revised Scottish and American Prayer Books (1929) and most later Anglican liturgies, incl. the South African Prayer Book (1954), make provision for unction of the sick. In Britain in 1935 a 'Form of Unction and the Laying on of Hands' was approved by the Convocations of *Canterbury and *York 'for provisional use subject to due diocesan sanction'.

Modern works include F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., The Anointing of the Sick in Scripture and Tradition, with some Consideration of the Numbering of the Sacraments (C.H.S., lxxvii; 1904); J. Kern, S.J., De Sacramento Extremae Unctionis Tractatus Dogmaticus (Ratisbon, 1907); J. B. Bord, L'Extrême-Onction d'après l'épître de saint Jacques (v. 14–15) examinée dans la tradition (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique; 1923). A. Chavasse, Étude sur l'onction des infirmes dans l'église latine du IIIe au XIe siècle, i. Du IIIe siècle à la réforme carolingienne (Lyons, 1942). P. Murray, 'The Liturgical History of Extreme Unction' in Studies in Pastoral Liturgy, ii, ed. V. Ryan, O.S.B. (Dublin, 1963), pp. 18–38 [based on unpublished second part of Chavasse's work]. B. Poschmann, Busse und Letzte Ölung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, ed. M. Schmaus and others, iv, fasz. 3; Freiburg i.Br., 1951), pp. 125–38; Eng. tr., revised, by F. Courtney, S.J., Penance and Anointing of the Sick (1964), pp. 234–57. C. de Clercq, 'Ordines Unctionis Infirmi des IXe et Xe siècles' in E.L., xliv (1930), pp. 100–22; P. Browe, S.J., 'Die letzte Ölung in der abendländischen Kirche des Mittelalters' in Z.K.T., lv (1931), pp. 515–61; H. B. Porter, 'The Origin of the Medieval Rite for Anointing the Sick or Dying' in J.T.S., N.S., vii (1956), pp. 211–25; id., 'The Rites for the Dying in the Early Middle Ages', ib., x (1959), pp. 43–62 and 299–307. A special number of Maison-Dieu, No. 113 (1973), 'Le Nouveau Rituel des malades', incl. bibl. by J. C. Didier, pp. 81–85. E. Jacquemier, 'L'Extrême-Onction chez les Grecs' in É.O., ii (1898–9), pp. 193–203. K. M. Rallis, Περὶ τῶν μυστηρίων τῆς μετανοίας καὶ τοῦ εὐχελαίου κατὰ τὸ δίκαιον τῆς ὀρθοδόξου ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (1905). T. Spáčil, S.J., Doctrina Theologiae Orientis Separati de Sacra Infirmorum Unctione (Orientalia Christiana, xxiv, Hft. 2; No. 74; 1931), with bibl. A. Chavasse, 'Prières pour les malades et onction sacramentelle' in A. G. Martimort (ed.), L'Église en prière (ed. 3 [1965]), pp. 596–612. C. Ruch–L. Godefroy in D.T.C., v (1913), cols. 1897–2022, s.v. 'Extrême-Onction'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (1922), cols. 1029–37, s.v. 'Extrême-Onction', and ib., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2116–30, s.v. 'Onction'; E. Cothenet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. vi (1960), cols. 701–32, s.v. 'Onction'; M. Fraeyman in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 585–91, s.v. 'Krankensalbung'; T. A. Vismans, O.P., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2988–92, s.v. 'Ziekenzalving', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Spiritual Healing and Visitation of the Sick.

UNDERHILL, EVELYN (1875–1941), exponent of the mystical life. The daughter of a distinguished barrister, she was educated at *King's College, London, and later travelled much on the Continent. In 1907 she underwent an experience of religious conversion and in her spiritual struggles turned to the study of the mystics. The first literary fruit of her newly awakened interest was her well-known book Mysticism (1911; ed. 13, 1940). Its range extended from St. *Teresa to J. *Boehme and from Christian mystical experience to *Neoplatonist speculations, and its comprehensive approach to religious experience at once made it a standard work. In 1911 she came under the influence of F. *von Hügel, and about the same time began to undertake individual spiritual direction. Among her books of this period are The Path of Eternal Wisdom (1911) and The Spiral Way (1912), symbolic interpretations of the *Stations of the Cross and the Mysteries of the *Rosary, both published under the pseudonym 'John Cordelier'. They were followed by The Mystic Way (1913), Practical Mysticism (1914), The Essentials of Mysticism (1920) and The Life of the Spirit and the Life of To-day (1922). From 1924 onwards she was a much sought-after retreat conductor, and in 1927 she was made a Fellow of King's College, London. Worship (1936) embodied her general outlook in a broad review of the subject. Among her translations and editions were The Cloud of Unknowing (1912), Walter Hilton's Scale of Perfection (1923) and Eucharistic Prayers from the Ancient Liturgies (1939). She also wrote a study of *Jacopone da Todi (1919). In her later years she was a keen pacifist.

The Letters of Evelyn Underhill, edited with an Introd. by C. [W. S.] *Williams (1943). Collected Papers of E. Underhill, ed. L. Menzies (1946). Life by Margaret [B.] Cropper (London, 1958). Further study by C. J. R. Armstrong (ib., 1975). Marjorie Vernon in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 897 f.

UNIAT CHURCHES. The Churches of Eastern Christendom in communion with *Rome, which yet retain their respective languages, rites, and canon law in accordance with the terms of their union; these last in most cases provide for *Communion in both kinds, *baptism by *immersion and marriage of the clergy. The term 'Uniat' (Lat. Unio, so Polish Unia) was first used by the opponents of the Union of *Brest-Litovsk 1595), and has been consistently disowned by the Churches concerned. The main groups covered by the designation are the *Maronites (united 1182), the *Syrians under the Patriarch of *Antioch, and the *Malankarese (1930), all of the Antiochene rite; the *Armenians under the Patriarch of Cilicia (united 1198–1291 and 1741); the *Chaldeans (1551 and 1830) and the *Malabarese (before 1599) of the Chaldean rite; the *Copts (1741) and *Ethiopians (1839), both of the Alexandrine rite, and of the Byzantine rite the Polish *Ruthenians (1595), the *Hungarians (1595), the Yugoslavs (1611), the Podcarpathian Ruthenians (1646), the *Rumanians (1701), the Melkites (1724), and certain Bulgars (1860) and *Greeks (1860). Of these the largest body is the Ukrainians. The term is also applied to the Italo-Greek-Albanian community of S. Italy which, although never separated from Rome, is permitted to follow similar practices. In 1946 the Uniat Church in the Ukraine, and in 1948 that in Rumania, were suppressed and their faithful forced to join the *Russian and Rumanian Orthodox Churches respectively. The total number of Uniats is prob. over twelve millions. See also under separate groups.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, 1937), revised as The Christian Churches of the East, i (London, 1961). C. de Clercq, Les Églises unies d'Orient (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses; 1934). S. Gaselee, The Uniats and their Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, xvi; 1925). B. J. Kidd, The Churches of Eastern Christendom from A.D. 451 to the Present Time [c. 1927], ch. xviii, pp. 457–63 and 521 f. J. Hajjar, Les Chrétiens uniates du Proche-Orient (1962). On the Melkites and Uniats of S. Italy, A. *Fortescue, The Uniate Eastern Churches, ed. G. D. Smith (1923).

UNIFORMITY, Acts of. There were four: (1) The Act of 1549. This Act (2 & 3 Edw. VI, c. 1), passed on 21 Jan. 1549, imposed the exclusive use of the First BCP of *Edward VI from the ensuing *Whitsunday (9 June) in the 'celebration of the Lord's Supper, commonly called the Mass' and in all public services. Holders of benefices who did not comply were punishable for a first offence with forfeiture of a year's income and six months' imprisonment, for a second offence with deprivation and a year's imprisonment, and for a third offence with imprisonment for life. Penalties of the same order were imposed for depraving or speaking against the Book. The public services were to be in English with the exception that at the universities 'for the encouragement of learning' all services other than the Mass might be said in Latin, Greek, or Hebrew; and in private use of the Book everyone was at liberty to use these languages as he wished. Only eight bishops and three lay peers voted against the Bill.

(2) The Act of 1552 (5 & 6 Edw. VI, c. 1). The First Book, which was a compromise, having proved a failure, this further Act was passed on 9 Mar.–14 Apr. 1552. It stated that owing to doubts occasioned by the interpretation of the 'very godly order' of the first Act the Book had been revised; and its use was ordered from *All Saints' Day following. Absence from church on Sundays and Holy Days by all not reasonably hindered was now made punishable by ecclesiastical censures and attendance at any other form of service by imprisonment.

(3) The Act of 1559 (1 Eliz. I, c. 2). This Act, after repealing the legislation of the previous reign reimposing the forms of worship in use under *Henry VIII, ordered the use of the Book of 1552, with a few catholic modifications, from 24 June 1559. The penalties for depraving the Book were increased, and absence from church made punishable by a fine of twelve pence as well as ecclesiastical censures. Such ornaments of the church and the minister were to be retained 'as was in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of' Edward VI 'until other order shall be therein taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty'.

(4) The Act of 1662 (13 & 14 Car. II, c. 4). As part of the Restoration settlement, a Bill for reintroducing the BCP passed the Commons in July 1661, but as the *Convocations did not complete the revision of the Book until December, the Bill was again considered in 1662. The Book itself (i.e. the 1662 BCP still in use), which was annexed to the Bill, was not discussed by either Commons or Lords. The Bill received the Royal Assent on 19 May. Before the ensuing St. *Bartholomew's Day (24 Aug.), all ministers were required publicly to assent to the Book, from which day its exclusive use was ordered. Ministers not episcopally ordained by that date were to be deprived. All ministers and schoolmasters were also required to make a declaration of the illegality of taking up arms against the King and to repudiate the *National Covenant (q.v.). Some 2,000 Presbyterian ministers who refused to conform were ejected from their livings.

This Act still remains on the Statute Book. It has been modified at a few points by the '*Clerical Subscription Act' (1865, q.v.), the '*Universities Test Act' (1871, q.v.), the 'Table of Lessons Act' (1871), the 'Act of Uniformity Amendment Act' (1872; see following art.) and more radically by the Church of England (Worship and Doctrine) Measure (1974; see Alternative Services).

The texts are pr. in Gee–Hardy as follows: (1) pp. 358–66 (No. lxix); (2) pp. 369–72 (No. lxxi); (3) pp. 458–67 (No. lxxx); and (4), pp. 600–19 (No. cxvii), with further reff.

UNIFORMITY, Act of, AMENDMENT ACT (1872). More generally known as the 'Shortened Services Act'. This Act (35 & 36 Vict., c. 35), passed by Parliament after its approval by the *Convocations of *Canterbury and *York, provided for the optional use of shortened forms of Morning and Evening Prayer, as additional services, in parish churches on Sundays and certain other days, and in cathedrals on any day, and as substitutes for the full services in parish churches on week-days. The chief omissions sanctioned were the Exhortation 'Dearly beloved brethren', all but one of the appointed *Psalms, one of the *Canticles, and the State Prayers. It also provided that Morning Prayer, the Litany, and the Communion Service might be recited separately. The Act was repealed by the Church of England (Worship and Doctrine Measure), 1974.

For exact details see the 'Schedule' to the Act, printed in R. *Phillimore, Ecclesiastical Law (ed. 2, 1895), i, pp. 757–61.

UNIGENITUS (1343). The Bull of *Clement VI, issued on 27 Jan. 1343, which gave official approval to the teaching of the Schoolmen that *Indulgences owed their efficacy to the Pope's dispensation of the accumulated *merit of the Church. In 1518 Cardinal T. de Vio *Cajetan accused M. *Luther of contravening its contents.

Text in Corpus Iuris Canonici, ed. A. Friedberg, ii (Leipzig, 1881), cols. 1304–6. Abbreviated text in Mirbt, No. 385, pp. 224–5.

UNIGENITUS (1713). The Constitution of *Clement XI, publd. 8 Sept. 1713, condemning 101 propositions extracted from P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales sur le Nouveau Testament. About half these propositions contain doctrine previously condemned in the works of M. *Baius (1567) and C. *Jansenius (1653). Most of the others are reactionary criticisms of modern developments in Catholic faith and practice. Many French Jansenists appealed from Clement's verdict to a 'future Council'.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, xxi (1871), No. clxxxvii, pp. 567–75; abbrev. text in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 489–98 (Nos. 2400–2502). J. Parguez, La Bulle Unigenitus et le jansénisme politique (1936); J. F. Thomas, La Querelle de l'Unigenitus (1950). J. Carreyre, P.S.S., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2061–2162, s.v. 'Unigenitus (Bulle)'.

UNION OF BREST. See Brest-Litovsk, Union of.

UNION OF CHRISTENDOM. See Reunion.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, New York City. An institution for the training of ministers founded in 1836, by the independent action of 'New School' Presbyterians, for 'men of moderate views' of any denomination. It has always encouraged critical studies and advocated toleration. Temporarily under Presbyterian control after 1870, in 1892–3 it reclaimed its independence and refused to dismiss the 'heretic' professor, C. A. *Briggs. Its professors have been outstanding men, and have recently included many British (esp. Scots) scholars.

UNITARIANISM. A type of Christian thought and religious observance which rejects the doctrines of the Trinity and the Divinity of Christ in favour of the unipersonality of God. Unitarians have no formal creed. Originally their teaching was based on Scriptural authority, but J. *Martineau (1805–1900) in England and T. *Parker (1810–1860) in U.S.A. led the way from Biblical to rational Unitarianism. Hence reason and conscience have now become the criteria of belief and practice for Unitarians. Owing to their belief in the abiding goodness of human nature, they are critical of the orthodox doctrines of the *Fall, the *Atonement, and eternal punishment.

Though the unipersonality of God was voiced in the early Church in the various forms of *Monarchianism, modern Unitarianism dates historically from the Reformation era. It soon attracted adherents among those of extreme reforming views, esp. in the sects. Probably its earliest exponent was Martin Cellarius (1499–1564), a pupil of J. *Reuchlin, who defended Unitarian views in De Operibus Dei (Strassburg, 1527). Other early Unitarians were J. *Valdés (at least in sympathy), M. *Servetus, and B. *Ochino. As an organized community, it became established in the 16th–17th cents. in Poland, Hungary, and England.

In Poland George Blandrata, a Piedmontese physician, became leader of an active group of Unitarians in 1558. They continued to grow until 1565, when anti-Trinitarians were excluded from the synod of the Reformed Church and henceforward compelled to hold their own synods as the 'Minor Church'. From 1579 until his death (1604) Faustus *Socinus led the party. In 1605 the *Racovian Catechism (q.v.) was issued. Towards the middle of the 17th cent. they had to face strong opposition. In 1638 the *Jesuits secured the suppression of the Unitarian college at Racow; in 1658 Socinians were expelled from the realm and all traces of Unitarianism disappeared from Poland.

In Hungary also Blandrata, who arrived in the country in 1563, was largely responsible for the spread of anti-Trinitarianism, and the King himself, John Sigismund, was converted. But after Sigismund's death (1570) the sect was persecuted. In 1638 the Unitarians put forward a common confession and were recognized as a legitimate religion.

In England John *Biddle (q.v.; 1615–62) is generally reckoned the father of Unitarianism. He published Unitarian tracts and in 1652–4 and 1658–62 held conventicles in London. Rather more than a hundred years later J. *Priestley defended Unitarian principles in his Appeal to the Serious and Candid Professors of Christianity (1770). But until T. *Lindsey seceded from the C of E in 1773 and formed for the first time a Unitarian denomination, there was only one other Unitarian conventicle in England. In 1774 Lindsey opened Essex Chapel in London. Penal Acts continued in force against Unitarians until 1813. In the 18th cent. Unitarian views were also widely accepted by Dissenting congregations, esp. among the English *Presbyterians. The long disputes as to the endowments of chapels, once orthodox but now in the hands of the Unitarians, were ended in 1844 by the *Nonconformist Chapels Act, which allowed the Unitarians to keep chapels founded on an Open Trust where over 25 years' usage could be proved for their opinions. In the later 19th cent. much influence was exercised by J. Martineau, who insisted that the term 'Unitarian' could be only the name of the belief of individuals and should never be adopted as the restrictive title of a denomination. In 1888 Manchester College was moved from London to Oxford with the aim of establishing it there as a college of liberal education without denominational ties. The *Hibbert Trust (founded 1853) devoted its income to promoting public lectures on comparative religion and similar subjects and to supporting a journal of liberal theology (the Hibbert Journal, 1902–68). The first quarter of the 20th cent., however, witnessed a swing towards more radical Unitarianism in some quarters. In 1925 the British and Foreign Unitarian Association (founded in 1825) and the National Conference (long the stronghold of the anti-dogmatic party) united into the 'General Assembly of Unitarian and Free Churches', the British and Foreign Unitarian Association remaining in existence only as a legal custodian of funds. From this time the Unitarians in England have been a distinctive and organized denomination, whose numbers have dwindled markedly in recent years.

In America the first definitely Unitarian congregation was King's Chapel, Boston. In 1785 it adopted a form of the American liturgy, revised to meet the needs of Unitarians. In the early 19th cent. Unitarianism was also adopted in *Congregationalist Churches. The American Unitarian Association was formed in 1825 and in 1865 the first National Conference of Unitarian Churches. The ethical and philosophical aspects of Unitarianism were emphasized in different ways by W. E. *Channing (1780–1842) and R. W. *Emerson (1803–82). Before the end of the 19th cent. Unitarianism in America had become a very liberal or rationalistic movement, accepting scientific methods and ideas and recognizing the truth of non-Christian religions. It came to exercise an influence disproportionate to the number of its adherents largely through the Divinity School at Harvard University as reconstituted by Charles W. Eliot (1869–1909). In 1961 the American Unitarian Association joined with the Universalist Church of America to form the Unitarian Universalist Association.

Collection of the works of F. Socinus, J. Crellius, J. Stichling, and L. Wolzogen in the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum quos Unitarios Vocant (8 vols., Amsterdam, 1656). F. S. Bock, Historia Antitrinitariorum, maxime Socinianismi et Socinianorum (2 vols., Königsberg, 1774–8). F. Trechsel, Die Protestantischen Antitrinitarier vor Faustus Socin (2 vols., 1839–44); O. Fock, Der Socinianismus nach seiner Stellung in der Gesammtentwickelung des christlichen Geistes (2 vols., Kiel, 1847). J. H. Allen, An Historical Sketch of the Unitarian Movement since the Reformation (New York, 1894). J. E. *Carpenter (ed.), Freedom and Truth. Modern Views of Unitarianism (1925). H. Gow, The Unitarians ('The Faiths', 1928). E. M. Wilbur, A History of Unitarianism. Socinianism and its Antecedents (Cambridge, Mass., 1946); id., A History of Unitarianism in Transylvania, England, and America (ib., 1952). K. Twinn (ed.), Essays in Unitarian Theology (1959). R. Wallace, Antitrinitarian Biography: or Sketches of the Lives and Writings of Distinguished Antitrinitarians . . . to the Close of the Seventeenth Century. To which is prefixed a History of Unitarianism in England during the same period (3 vols., 1850). G. Bonet-Maury, Des origines du christianisme unitaire chez les Anglais (1881; Eng. tr., 1884). Herbert John McLachlan, Socinianism in Seventeenth-Century England (1951); Herbert McLachlan, The Unitarian Movement in the Religious Life of England. Its Contribution to Thought and Learning. 1700–1900 (1934); R. V. Holt, The Unitarian Contribution to Social Progress in England (1938). C. G. Bolam, J. Goring, H. L. Short, and R. Thomas, The English Presbyterians from Elizabethan Puritanism to Modern Unitarianism (1968). H. McLachlan, The Methodist Unitarian Movement (Publications of the University of Manchester, Historical Series, xxxiii; 1919). J. H. Allen in J. H. Allen–R. Eddy, A History of the Unitarians and the Universalists in the United States (American Church History Series, x; 1894), pp. 1–249; G. W. Cooke, Unitarianism in America. A History of its Origin and Development (Boston, Mass., 1902). S. Persons, Free Religion. An American Faith (New Haven, 1947). C. Wright, The Liberal Christians. Essays on American Unitarian History (Boston [1970]). W. J. Kühler, Socinianisme in Nederland (Leiden, 1912); J. C. van Slee, De Geschiedenis van het Socinianisme in Nederlanden (Haarlem, (1914). S. Kot, Ideologja polityczna i społeczna Braci Polskich zwanych Arjanami (Warsaw, 1932; Eng. tr., Socinianism in Poland, Boston, Mass. [1957]). J. E. Carpenter in H. E. R. E., xii (1921), pp. 519–27, s.v. (also issued separately, London, 1922).

UNITAS FRATRUM. The Latinized form of the Czech jednota bratrská ('society of brethren'), the title assumed by the branch of the *Hussites known as the *Bohemian Brethren (q.v.).

UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST. A Church in the U.S.A. formed in 1957 by the union of the Evangelical and Reformed Church with the Congregational Christian Churches. The Evangelical and Reformed Church was itself the result of a union in 1934 between the Evangelical Synod of North America and the Reformed Church of America. The former of these bodies was composed mainly of immigrants from Germany who were in sympathy with the Union of Lutheran and Reformed (Calvinist) traditions ordered by King Frederick of Prussia in 1817; the latter drew on refugees driven from the Palatinate region of Germany as a result of the devastations of the *Thirty Years' War and on the Reformed Churches of Switzerland and Holland. The Congregational Christian Churches were formed by a union in 1931 between the *Congregational National Council and the Christian Churches, the latter being a small group of Churches holding similar principles of Churchmanship. Negotiations between the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches were authorized in 1942. After various legal difficulties the United Church of Christ was formed in a Uniting General Synod on 25 June 1957; its constitution came into force in 1961. About 85 per cent. of the Congregational Christian Churches and nearly all the Evangelical and Reformed Churches joined to form the United Church of Christ, which has nearly 2 million members. The union has a particular significance owing to the wide differences in styles of Churchmanship, as well as in historical and social background, of the two bodies participating.

D. Horton, The United Church of Christ. Its Origins, Organization and Role in the World Today (New York [1962]). D. Dunn [and others], A History of the Evangelical and Reformed Church (Philadelphia [1961]). G. G. Atkins–F. L. Fagley, History of American Congregationalism (Boston, Mass. [1942]). J. R. Willis in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 415–17.

UNITED FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. The Church formed in 1900 by the union of the *United Presbyterian Church and the *Free Church of Scotland. In 1929 the greater part of the United Free Church of Scotland joined with the Established Church of Scotland. A small minority, however, remained outside this union; it retained the name 'United Free Church of Scotland', for five years adding 'Continuing' to its title. For training of its ministry it shares the Scottish Congregational College in Edinburgh. It ordains women, and has about 12,000 communicant members.

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH. The branch of Methodism formed in 1907 by the union of the *Methodist New Connexion, the *Bible Christians, and the *United Methodist Free Churches (qq.v.), and itself embodied in the *Methodist Church (q.v.) in 1932.

The possibility of reunion in Methodism was discussed throughout the 19th cent. and towards its end negotiations between various bodies took place. In 1901 the third Methodist Ecumenical Conference recommended that reunion in British Methodism was desirable and in 1902 active steps to that end were taken. Although other Methodist Churches were consulted and agreed in principle to the plan of reunion, only the above-named three Churches took part in the union of 1907.

The constitution accepted for the new Church closely followed that common to all branches of Methodism. Central government was in the hands of a conference meeting annually and presided over by a president elected each year. The missionary and social activities of the uniting Churches were maintained and increased.

The success of the union increased the desire for wider reunion in Methodism, and proposals in this direction were made by the Wesleyan Conference in 1913. In 1932 the United Methodist Church finally united with the *Wesleyan and *Primitive Methodist Churches to form a Methodist Church including almost the whole of English Methodism.

See foll. entry and bibliography to Methodist Churches.

UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES. One of the bodies which went to form the *United Methodist Church in 1907. It originated in the amalgamation of smaller communities which had broken away from *Wesleyan Methodism. In every case the reason for division was not doctrinal but constitutional, the Free Churches embodying the most democratic elements of Methodism.

The Protestant Methodists, formed in 1827, arose from discontent of long standing with the government of the Methodist Church. The great power vested in the annual Conference of ministers was oppressive to those who wished the laity to have a share in the government of their Church, and feeling ran high when Dr. Jabez *Bunting (q.v.) asserted at the Conference: 'Methodism knows nothing of democracy; Methodism hates democracy as it hates sin.' The immediate occasion of their secession was trifling—the erection of an organ at Brunswick Chapel, Leeds. After much dissension the Protestant Methodists were founded at Leeds, with a few associated societies, mostly in Yorkshire.

The next group, the Wesleyan Methodist Association, was formed in 1835 through a dispute about the founding of a Theological Institution for the training of ministers. The principal ground of offence was that the Conference had acted contrary to its constitution and not consulted the people before taking a step of such importance; objection to the theological institution as such was of secondary importance. The expulsions which followed led to the formation of the new democratic association. In 1836 it was joined by the 'Protestant Methodists' and a year later by a small body of secessionists at Derby.

Further dissension was brought to a head at the Wesleyan Conference of 1849. For some years Methodism had been disturbed by the circulation of anonymous pamphlets, known as the Fly Sheets, containing accusations of favouritism, narrowness, and the mismanagement of Connexional funds against the predominant party in Methodism. Vigorous and, as some thought, unjust steps were taken to discover their authors, and finally, in the Conference of 1849, three ministers were expelled for refusing to answer questions. At the same time some 80,000 members left the Wesleyan Church. At first they were content to agitate for reform in Wesleyanism; but when it became apparent that they would not gain their end, a separate body, the Wesleyan Reformers, was formed.

After several years of discussion, largely on the subject of their constitution, the 'Wesleyan Methodist Association' and the 'Wesleyan Reformers' united in 1857, taking the name of the 'United Methodist Free Churches'. Peace and a settled constitution contributed to solid progress both in England and in foreign missions. As early as 1837 the Wesleyan Association had commenced work in Jamaica, and in 1851 the first missionary had been sent to Australia. In both West and East Africa missions were established and maintained in spite of much hardship. From 1864 stations were supported in China.

The constitution adopted by the United Methodist Free Churches reflects the opposition to autocratic rule by the ministry which led to their separation from the parent Church. The annual Assembly, unlike the Wesleyan Conference, was not composed wholly of ministers. It was composed, with the exception of a very small number of officials elected at the previous Assembly, of representatives elected by their own circuits. In organization an endeavour was made to combine the congregational with the connexional system, and great authority was given to the circuits in dealing with their own affairs, e.g. the Assembly did not determine the circuits to which ministers should be appointed.

In 1907 the United Methodist Free Churches united with the *Methodist New Connexion and the *Bible Christians to form the *United Methodist Church.

G. Eayrs in W. J. Townsend–H. B. Workman–G. Eayrs (edd.), A New History of Methodism, i (1919), pp. 514–51.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. The Church formed in Scotland in 1847 by the union of two earlier groups, the *United Secession Church and the Relief Synod. The latter body had been formed in 1761 after difficulties over the system of patronage in the Church of Scotland. In 1900, apart from a very small minority (the *Wee Frees), the United Presbyterians united with the Free Church of Scotland to form the *United Free Church of Scotland.

UNITED REFORMED CHURCH. The Church formed in 1972 by the union of the *Congregational Church of England and Wales with the *Presbyterian Church of England. In 1981 the majority of the *Disciples of Christ in Britain joined the union.

UNITED SECESSION CHURCH. The Church formed in Scotland in 1820 by the fusion of the 'Old Lights' and the 'New Lights', the two groups into which the *Burghers divided in the later 18th cent. In 1847 it united with the Relief Synod to form the *United Presbyterian Church (q.v.).

UNITED SOCIETY FOR CHRISTIAN LITERATURE. A Society founded in 1935 by the fusion of the *Religious Tract Society (q.v.), the Christian Literature Society for India and Africa (founded 1858), and the Christian Literature Society for China (founded 1884) for the spread of the Christian faith through literature in Britain and overseas. It is the proprietor of the general and religious publishing house, the Lutterworth Press, Guildford.

G. Hewitt, Let the People Read. A Short History of the United Society for Christian Literature, Religious Tract Society, 1799, Christian Literature Society for India and Africa, 1858, Christian Literature Society for China (British Support), 1887 (1949). Annual Reports (London, 1937 ff.).

UNITED SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL. See U.S.P.G.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Christianity in. The founding of England's colonies on the N. American mainland was inextricably bound up with religious thought and practices. The C of E, brought by the Virginia Company to Jamestown (1607), became established from Maryland southwards, and in a limited way in New York. It did not, however, flourish. Without American Bishops, the Church was supervised by resident Commissaries, but as they lacked full episcopal powers candidates for ordination had to travel to England. By the time of the Revolution (1776) the C of E in the American colonies had assumed a polity which was virtually congregational, and the local vestry, a self-perpetuating body, became of great importance.

In the central and northern colonies religion was a more live issue. During the 17th cent. the dominant voices in theology were indebted to English *Puritanism. In the decade after 1630 the followers of W. *Ames and W. *Perkins migrated to Massachusetts Bay, where they developed the Federal or Covenant Theology in its fullest form. Because of their relative isolation, these colonial divines did not make the compromises forced on Englishmen during the Civil War and Commonwealth. They emphasized the great doctrines of the Reformation: God's majestic sovereignty, man's complete depravity, the irresistibility of predestined grace, and God's justice in withholding that grace. They underlined the importance of the sermon and insisted on the need for conscious inward experience of God's grace in prospective Church members; they worked in close conjunction with the secular authorities in New England.

At first the Churches in Massachusetts Bay thought of themselves as non-separating *Congregationalists, but within a generation this fiction was replaced by full Congregational polity. Harvard College was founded in 1636 to educate both clergy and laity. The spiritual rigour of the colonists gave way in later generations and the failure of many to meet the tests for admission to Church membership led to the *Half-Way Covenant (1662). This provided that baptized members who professed the faith, even in the absence of a dramatic religious experience, could have their children baptized. These Half-Way members, however, could not participate in the Lord's Supper or vote on important matters.

There was little vital theological development outside the Bay Colony. The story of the *Pilgrim Fathers and Plymouth Colony (founded 1620) is one of courage and endurance, while Roger *Williams (c. 1604–83) is remembered for his struggles for toleration and religious freedom in Rhode Island (founded 1636). William *Penn (1644–1718) and his 'Holy Experiment' led to the development of Pennsylvania (founded 1682) as a refuge for *Quakers and others not content with the religious climate in New England and the South. Maryland, whose religious history is complex, began in 1634 with a strong RC population, passed through a Puritan period, and finally saw the establishment of the C of E in 1702.

The 18th-cent. religious scene differed from that of the 17th as the colonies moved from the period of their foundation towards stability and maturity. A new element of diversity, however, was introduced by immigrant groups (French, Scottish-Irish, German), who brought new ways of worship. As a result the *Baptist, *Methodist (after the 1760s), *Presbyterian, *Lutheran and Dutch Reformed Churches became increasingly important and the century was a period in which de facto religious pluralism emerged. Even the C of E gained new vigour through the missionary efforts of the *S.P.G., though efforts to create an American hierarchy were unsuccessful.

In the 18th cent. the dominant note in American theology became increasingly evangelical, and revivalism developed as the chief means of achieving evangelistic goals. The First *Great Awakening (c. 1726–70) enlivened religious life in the colonies and was perhaps the first real inter-colonial movement. While it established sectional aspects, a common concern for the nature of the conversion experience is clear. Contemporary movements in the U.S.A. were parallel to, and influenced by, continental *Pietism and English *Evangelicalism. Prominent among the leaders were Jonathan *Edwards (1703–58) and George *Whitefield (1714–1770), who accompanied John *Wesley to the U.S.A. in 1736 and made six subsequent visits, preaching from Maine to Georgia. In 1769 Wesley sent the first officially appointed lay missionary to America and in subsequent decades Methodism flourished in Maryland and Virginia as a society loosely associated with the C of E. In 1773 the first Methodist Conference was held, and in 1784 Wesley appointed a Superintendent for America, thus bringing about the decisive break of Methodism from the C of E. In the meantime the growth of revivalism had brought about a reaction, and both the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists became divided over its theological and ecclesiastical implications.

While *Enlightenment thought affected the American mind, religious liberalism in the form of *Deism made little headway. The Revolution (1776) led to the disestablishment of state Churches (C of E in the South and Congregational in the North) and forced religious life into a denominational mould. At first Church membership fell, but it was increased by the Second Great Awakening (c. 1795–1835). In the West and South Baptists as well as Methodists multiplied; in New England and the Central States Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Baptists flourished, and at the same time the C of E in America developed into the independent *Protestant Episcopal Church (q.v.). At the end of the 18th cent. *Unitarianism as a religious movement developed out of liberal Congregationalism, and in 1825 the American Unitarian Association was formed. The chief appeal of Unitarian doctrines was in the towns and among intellectuals.

The period of the second Great Awakening marked the opening of an era of social reform, including the anti-*slavery movement. Churchmen were active in the creation of reform agencies, such as the American Tract Society, the American Bible Society and the American Home Missionary Society. In 1801 the Congregationalists and Presbyterians arranged for exchange of clergy among themselves through a Plan of Union which provided for co-operation in home missionary work and on the western frontier. On the other hand, friction among the Presbyterians over the methods of evangelism used on the frontier by the 'New Light' leaders (revivalists pressing for immediate conversion) and opposed by the more orthodox elements led to the foundation of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in 1805.

The principal theological exponent of the Second Great Awakening was Charles Grandison Finney (1792–1875; Professor and President of *Oberlin College, 1835–75). He evolved new techniques to heighten the emotional circumstances of the revival, developed a clear *Arminian position on grace, insisted that the converted become active in works of Christian benevolence, and elaborated doctrines which became known as Perfectionism.

By 1800 *Millenarianism had entered American theology on an unprecedented scale. Some groups predicted the Second Coming for 'about 1834' and gathered converts to wait for the end of earthly things. Others coupled Millenarianism with Perfectionism and formed *Utopian communities to perfect themselves and their institutions as a model for the larger society. At the same time evangelical orthodoxy was much influenced by Scottish Common Sense philosophy and an attempt to escape the influence of John *Locke and David *Hume. The half-century before the Civil War witnessed a remarkable increase in the number of Church colleges. Denominational lines hardened; in 1837 conservative Presbyterians abrogated the Plan of Union and the denomination split.

In the South, after 1830 the Churches turned their attention to the defence of slavery, which, it was argued, had Biblical sanction. James H. Thornwell (1812–62), a South Carolina Presbyterian, was a prominent apologist for Southern civilization. Theological differences, slavery, and sectional conflict led to further divisions within the Presbyterian fold in 1857 and 1861. The Baptists and Methodists both divided in 1845. During the Civil War (1861–6) an Episcopal Church was created in the Confederate States. In 1864 the two Southern Presbyterian groups merged to form the 'Presbyterian Church in the U.S.'; the two Northern bodies merged in 1862–70 as the 'Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.'

After the Civil War, Protestantism became increasingly confined to white, middle-class, Anglo-Saxon Americans, to whom the Third Great Awakening (c. 1875–1914) was addressed. It produced great preachers such as D. L. *Moody (1837–99), Bp. P. *Brooks (1835–93), and T. De Witt Talmage (1832–1902), who were concerned mainly with personal or class morality and benevolent activities such as foreign missions which grew rapidly in the last quarter of the 19th cent. At the same time religious Liberalism emerged as an attempt to relate American theology to such currents of modern thought as evolution, *higher criticism, and new philosophical ideas. Horace

*Bushnell (1802–76) served as the theological father of the movement; other leaders included C. A. *Briggs (1841–1913), Shailer Mathews (1863–1941) at the Chicago Divinity School, and the philosopher John Fiske (1842–1901). A new generation also asked how religion was related to society, especially the social problems caused by industrialism, and from this trend within Liberalism arose the Social Gospel movement which flourished between c. 1890 and the First World War.

Orthodox evangelicals reacted sharply to the rise of Liberalism and American theology became a battleground between the defenders of the old order (sometimes called *Fundamentalists, q.v.) and the Liberals (often described as *Modernists). Denominations were riven and heresy trials multiplied. By the First World War (1914–18), Fundamentalism had become identified with a rural–urban split in American life; Fundamentalists tended to be anti-Negro and conservative in politics. Billy Sunday (1862–1935), a baseball star turned evangelist, became their popular spokesman; their theologians reached back to Charles *Hodge (1797–1878) and included Reuben A. Torrey (1856–1928) and J. Gresham Machen (1881–1937), both of Princeton Theological Seminary. In a broad sense, even in the 1970s as many as a third of the American Protestant community may be described as Fundamentalist in their opposition to the National and *World Councils of Churches.

Neo-Orthodoxy developed in Protestant circles after 1920 as a response to domestic troubles and European theological developments. Reinhold *Niebuhr (1892–1971) and his brother H. R. Niebuhr (1894–1962) wrestled with questions of social justice and the ideas of Karl *Barth and other continental theologians. The movement gained currency in the 1930s, and one of its fruits has been a return to Biblical theology without sacrificing concern for history or social ethics. While post-War America produced no theologians of the stature of the Niebuhr brothers or of Paul *Tillich (1886–1965), it witnessed a great surge of piety, which brought new members to the Churches and gave at least the appearance of spiritual health and vigour. Seeds of controversy, however, were soon visible beneath this apparent revival of faith, and the preaching of such teachers as Harvey Cox (b. 1929), Paul Van Buren (b. 1924) and T. J. J. Altizer (b. 1927) posed many challenging questions to Christianity in America in terms both of the meaning and of the importance of the Gospel in the so-called 'post-Christian' world. Slums, racial tension and violence, war and military policies, capitalism, the re-interpretation of Christian 'myths' and new ways of comprehending world religions are all issues blended in their teaching. But despite these efforts to make the teaching of the Churches relevant to the problems of the age, all the leading Protestant Churches have experienced increasing difficulty in holding their younger members, many of whom have been attracted by interdenominational and non-denominational 'Jesus Movements'.

The rapid rate of social and cultural change in America at least partially accounts for the appearance of a number of religious sects outside the main stream of Christian life. In the 19th cent. such bodies ministering to those on the fringes of society included the *Disciples of Christ (1809), the *Mormons (1830) and the *Christian Scientists (1875), all of which matured into denominational form with the passage of time. In modern America the dispossessed have been attracted to movements which stress belief in complete justification freeing their adherents from all taint of sin and hold that the Second Coming is at hand. Such groups include the *Seventh-Day Adventists and *Jehovah's Witnesses, and also the Holiness Churches (such as the Church of the Nazarene, founded 1895) and the *Pentecostal Churches (such as the Church of God, of Cleveland, Tenn., founded 1907), in which the gift of tongues is a prominent feature.

Black Americans have tended to stand apart from white society, even in religious organization. Though Negroes have always had some part in the white Churches, they have felt unwanted and there has been a tendency in Protestant tradition to establish specifically Negro Churches. Of the 11 million members of Black Churches in 1960, c. 70 per cent. were Baptist and 22 per cent. Methodist. As in the religion of dispossessed Whites, the emphasis has been highly other-worldly and eschatological, though in the 20th cent. increasingly activist roles have been adopted. The 'Negro spiritual' songs, which reach extremes of emotionalism, have characterized their worship. The clerical vocation has, since the Civil War, been a path to position and power, and the ranks of the clergy have provided many of the leaders of Black America, such as Martin Luther *King (1929–68).

While the number of Protestant denominations in America exceeds 250, this diversity is more apparent than real, and there has been a marked tendency towards co-operation and unity. The National Council of Churches (1950) is composed of 34 bodies numbering c. 42 million American Christians, and in recent years there have been various mergers: the Congregationalists with the Evangelical and Reformed Church in the *United Church of Christ (1957: 2 million members); the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the United Presbyterian Church of North America in the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (1958; 3 million members); and the Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren in the United Methodist Church (1968: 11 million members). The American Lutheran Church (1960) and the Lutheran Church in America (1962) are the product of mergers of six Churches involving over 5 million members. Meantime in 1961 the Unitarians and Universalists united to form the Unitarian Universalist Association. A much wider approach to the question of reunion was embodied in the Consultation on Church Union which was set up as a result of a sermon preached by Carson Blake in 1960, 'A Proposal Toward the Reunion of Christ's Church'. The Consultation on Church Union seeks 'a church truly reformed, truly evangelical, and truly Catholic'. It held its first session in 1962 and came to include nine Protestant denominations (including three Black Churches), whose polity ranged from Episcopal, through Presbyterian to Congregational. In 1970 it produced a Plan of Union. This, however, met with widespread opposition, and in 1972 the United Presbyterians withdrew from the Consultation. In recent years there has been less enthusiasm for Church unions among Protestant bodies than in the previous decade and in 1973 the Plan of Union was set aside.

While RCs worshipped in America almost from the beginning, they were few in number until after 1820 when their community was increased by Irish and German immigrants. The first RC bishop (J. *Carroll) was consecrated in 1790 and in 1829 the American RC Bishops held their first Provincial Council at *Baltimore. The next decade witnessed the rise of anti-Catholic antagonism among the older immigrants against the religion of the newcomers; this antagonism was strong in the 1850s, and 1880s and after the First World War. Nevertheless the RC community grew from 4 million in 1870 to 12 million in 1900 and by 1920 they numbered one-sixth of the population. The numbers of clergy and religious orders grew equally rapidly. In 1908 Pope *Pius X removed the American Church from the jurisdiction of the Sacred Congregation of *Propaganda, and its missionary status ended.

Within the RC Church in America there were bitter disputes over the parochial schools system which developed in the 19th cent. but never reached all RC children. Higher education for RCs, however, expanded, with the foundation of Fordham, St. Louis, Georgetown, and in 1889 the *Catholic University of America. At the same time the diversity of the immigrant groups who were strongly RC led to ethnic and cultural friction; each group demanded a ministry in its own language and opposed accommodation with American society. The Liberals, who wanted some form of accommodation and supported *Americanism, were defeated.

After 1920 American RCism entered a new phase. Immigration restriction terminated the influx of European RCs and the Church underwent a period of stabilization and growth. As a group American RCs rose socially and economically. The nomination in 1928 of a RC, Al Smith, as a candidate for the Presidency, was a landmark; the election of President John F. Kennedy in 1960 completed the integration of RCs into American political life.

In America, as elsewhere, RCism experienced considerable stimulation as a result of the Second *Vatican Council. The reforms which followed the Council have, however, combined with dramatic social changes to make the RC Church deeply divided on such issues as *abortion, clerical *celibacy, and in Church government on the distribution of power between the parish clergy, local bishops and the hierarchy. The RC Church in America numbers nearly 50 million members.

The Eastern *Orthodox community in America numbers about three and a half millions. Their beginnings may be traced to the Russian occupation of Alaska in the 19th cent., but most of them arrived after 1900 in the waves of immigration from central and southern parts of E. Europe and Russia. They are mainly of Russian and Greek extraction and are concentrated in Pennsylvania and the area around the Great Lakes.

Among the older works, the most useful is The American Church History Series, ed. P. *Schaff and others (13 vols., New York, 1893–7); also R. Baird, Religion in the United States of America. Or an Account of the Origin, Progress, Relations to the State and Present Condition of the Evangelical Churches in the United States (Glasgow, 1844); L. W. Bacon, A History of American Christianity (1899). More modern surveys include W. W. Sweet, The Story of Religions in America (New York, 1930; revised ed. [1939]), with bibl.; W. L. Sperry, Religion in America (Cambridge, 1945); W. S. Hudson, The Great Tradition of the American Churches (New York [1953]); id., Religion in America. A Historical Account of American Religious Life (ib., 1965); H. S. Smith–R. T. Handy–L. A. Loetscher, American Christianity. An Historical Interpretation with representative documents (2 vols., ib. [1960–63]); E. S. Gaustad, A Religious History of America (ib. [1966]); id., Historical Atlas of Religion in America (ib. [1962]); S. E. Ahlstrom, A Religious History of the American People (New Haven–London, 1972), with bibl.; R. T. Handy, A History of the Churches in the United States and Canada (Oxford, 1976). J. W. Smith–A. L. Jamison (edd.), Religion in American Life: vol. i, The Shaping of American Religion (Princeton, 1961); vol. ii, Religious Perspectives in America (ib., 1961); vol. iv, N. R. Burr, A Critical Bibliography of Religion in America (2 pts., ib., 1961). Latourette, vi (1941), pp. 175–456, with bibl. pp. 463–96, and vii (1945), pp. 122–56.

Extracts from the works of a number of American Puritans ed. P. Miller–T. H. Johnson, The Puritans (New York, 1938). P. Miller, The New England Mind. The Seventeenth Century (ib., 1939); id., The New England Mind. From Colony to Province (Cambridge, Mass., 1953); id., Errand into the Wilderness (ib., 1956). E. S. Morgan Visible Saints. The History of a Puritan Idea (New York, 1963). A. Heimert, Religion and the American Mind. From the Great Awakening to the Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1966). W. G. McLoughlin, New England Dissent, 1630–1833. The Baptists and the Separation of Church and State (2 vols., ib., 1971). W. R. Cross, The Burned-over District. The Social and Intellectual History of Enthusiastic Religion in Western New York, 1800–1850 (Ithaca, N.Y., 1950). T. L. Smith, Revivalism and Social Reform in Mid-Nineteenth-Century America (New York [1957]). W. G. McLoughlin, Jr., Modern Revivalism. Charles Grandison Finney to Billy Graham (ib. [1959]). K. Cauthen, The Impact of American Religious Liberalism (ib. [1962]). K. K. Bailey, Southern White Protestantism in the Twentieth Century (ib. [1964]). D. H. Reimers, White Protestantism and the Negro (ib., 1965). M. de W. Howe, The Garden and the Wilderness. Religion and Government in American Constitutional History (Chicago–London [1965]). R. T. Handy, A Christian America. Protestant Hopes and Historical Realities (New York, 1971).

W. C. Barclay, History of Methodist Missions (6 vols., New York, 1949 ff.); F. S. Bucke (ed.), The History of American Methodism (3 vols., New York [1964]). L. J. Trinterud, The Forming of an American Tradition. A Re-Examination of Colonial Presbyterianism (Philadelphia [1949]); L. A. Loetscher, The Broadening Church. A Study of Theological Issues in the Presbyterian Church since 1869 (ib., 1954); E. T. Thompson, Presbyterians in the South (3 vols., Richmond, Va., 1963–73). A. R. Wentz, A Basic History of Lutheranism in America (Philadelphia, 1955). F. W. Meuser, The Formation of the American Lutheran Church. A Case Study of Lutheran Unity (Columbus, Ohio, 1958). E. C. Nelson–E. L. Fevold, The Lutheran Church among Norwegian-Americans (2 vols., Minneapolis [1960]). E. T. Elliott, Quakers on the American Frontier. A History of the Westward Migrations, Settlements, and Developments of Friends on the American Continent (Richmond, Ind., 1969). S. Persons, Free Religion. An American Faith (New Haven, 1947); C. Wright, The Liberal Christians. Essays on American Unitarian History (Boston [1970]). R. Peel, Christian Science. Its Encounter with American Culture (New York, 1958). J. T. Ellis (ed.), Documents of American Catholic History (Milwaukee [1956]; ed. 2 [1962]). Id., American Catholicism (Chicago [1956]; ed. 2, Chicago–London [1969]). T. T. McAvoy, C.S.C., A History of the Catholic Church in the United States (Notre Dame–London [1969]). J. T. Ellis, Catholics in Colonial America (Baltimore–Dublin [1965]). R. D. Cross, The Emergence of Liberal Catholicism in America (Cambridge, Mass., 1958).

Current statistical information is contained in the Federal Council Year Book (New York, 1916 ff.; with various titles, now Yearbook of American Churches, 1933 ff.). Church History, published by the American Society of Church History (Scottsdale, Pa., 1933 ff.), contains scholarly articles and reviews. See also bibl. to the various denominations.

UNITIVE WAY, The (Via Unitiva). The third and last stage of the spiritual life. Acc. to Christian mystical writers, when the soul has been purified in the *Purgative and enlightened in the *Illuminative Way it enters on the Way of Union with God. It is generally held, however, that there is no hard-and-fast dividing line, and elements from the illuminative and even purgative stages may appear also in the unitive life. Its special marks are found in the habitual practice of the virtues, frequently to a heroic degree, and the graces of passive *contemplation.

'UNIVERS, L''. The organ of the violently *Ultramontane opinions of Louis *Veuillot, who took over its editorship in 1843. Though many Catholics were offended by its virulent tone, it forced the anticlerical French Government to make some concessions to the Church, esp. in the much-debated issue of religious education. In later days its claims for the Church and the Papacy exceeded those commonly defended even at Rome. The paper was suppressed by the French Government in 1860 for publishing *Pius IX's encyclical 'Nullis certe', but it was revived in 1867, only to be again suppressed in 1874.

UNIVERSALISM. (1) The anti-nationalist teaching of certain of the later Hebrew prophets (e.g. *Deutero-Isaiah, *Jonah) that God's purposes covered not only the Jewish race but also at least some men of other nations.

(2) The doctrine, also known as ἀποκατάστασις, that hell is in essence purgative and therefore temporary and that all intelligent beings will therefore in the end be saved. See Apocatastasis.

UNIVERSALS. In metaphysics, general concepts, representing the common elements belonging to individuals of the same genus or species. The medieval doctrine of universals traces its origin to Greek philosophy, esp. to *Porphyry's 'Introduction to the Categories of Aristotle', which poses three questions: viz., whether the universals exist substantially or only in the human mind; if the former, whether they have bodies or are disembodied beings; and lastly, whether they exist separated from the objects of sense or only in them. These problems were combined with the question treated by *Boethius whether the universals are things ('res') or only names ('voces', 'nomina'), and acc. to the answer given philosophers subscribed to the systems of either *Realism or *Nominalism (qq.v.) which were developed in manifold variations during the Middle Ages. Among the best-known representatives of early Realism are John Scotus *Erigena, St. *Anselm, and *William of Champeaux; in the 13th cent. St. *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus developed a doctrine which has come to be known as 'Moderate Realism'. Among the Nominalist opponents of the earlier forms of Realism were *Roscellinus and *Abelard, whilst the Realist system of the 13th cent. was attacked by *William of Occam, Gabriel *Biel, and others.

UNIVERSITIES' MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA. See U.M.C.A.

UNIVERSITY TESTS ACT (1871). By this Act (34 & 35 Vict., c. 26) it was laid down that no person taking any degree other than a degree in divinity, or holding lay academical or collegiate office, should henceforward be required to subscribe any article or formulary of faith.

UNKNOWABLE, The. A term applied by H. *Spencer in his First Principles (1862) to the ultimate cause of all things. In a new effort to reconcile science with religion, Spencer assigned to the former the sphere of the knowable, to the latter that of the unknowable, though he held that both science and religion agreed 'in the assertion of a Reality utterly inscrutable in nature'. See also Agnosticism.

UNKNOWING, The Cloud of. See Cloud of Unknowing, The.

UNLEAVENED BREAD. See Bread, Leavened and Unleavened.

UPPER ROOM, The. See Cenaculum, The.

UPSALA. Long after the introduction of Christianity into *Sweden by St. *Anskar, Old Upsala (now a neighbouring town to the north) continued a centre of pagan religious rites. Old Upsala Church was built on and contains remains of a pagan temple, probably that mentioned by *Adam of Bremen. In 1164 Pope *Alexander III made it the head of an ecclesiastical province, separate from *Lund. The see was transferred from Old Upsala to its present site (Aros) under Abp. Folke (1274–7). The cathedral, still the largest church in Sweden, dates from 1287 to 1435. The archbishop, who from the middle of the 15th cent. until the Reformation bore the title of 'Primate of Sweden' ('Primas Sueciae'), is still accorded a certain primacy, though his position is now only that of a 'primus inter pares'. The university, modelled on that of *Bologna, was founded in 1477, and became in the 19th cent. the home of a liberal and 'Low Church' theology as contrasted with the orthodoxy of Lund. Among its most notable bishops of recent times was N. *Söderblom (d. 1931). The *World Council of Churches held its fourth Assembly in Upsala in 1968.

The 'Historia Pontificum Metropolitanae Ecclesiae Upsalensis' of Johannes Magnus Gothus (Rome, 1560) is conveniently pr. in the Scriptores Rerum Svecicarum Medii Aevi, iii (pt. 2; Upsala, 1871), pp. 1–97, with other material pp. 97–102. G. Kallstenius, Blad ur Uppsalasangens Historia (Stockholm, 1913). N. J.-E. Söderberg, Studier till Uppsala Domkyrkas Historia (3 pts., Kyrkohistoriska Föreningen Skrifter, Ser. 1, Arg. xxxv and xxxvi; 1936–7). G. Boëthius–A. L. Romdahl, Uppsala Domkyrka, 1258–1435 (1935). C. Annerstedt, Upsala Universitets Historia [1477–1792] (3 vols. in 6 parts, 1877–1914, + register by E. Colliander, 1931; in Swedish). H. Lundh (ed.), Uppsala Stads Historia (3 vols., Uppsala, 1953–8), esp. i, pp. 369–427, ii, pp. 220–41, and iii, pp. 409–17. G. Armfelt in C.E., xv (1912), p. 207 f., s.v. 'Upsala, Ancient See of'; K. Hoeber, ib., p. 208, s.v. 'Upsala, University of'; S. Göransson in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 475 f., s.v. 'Uppsala, Royal University of'. See also works cited under Sweden, Christianity in.

URBAN II (c. 1042–99), Pope from 1088. Odo of Lagery studied at *Reims under St. *Bruno, who afterwards became his most trusted adviser. Having early been canon and archdeacon, c. 1070 he entered the monastery of *Cluny, where he became prior. He was later called to Rome by *Gregory VII, who made him Cardinal Bp. of Ostia in 1080. Sent as Papal legate to France and Germany, he held a synod at Quedlinburg in Saxony in 1085, at which the *antipope, Guibert of Ravenna (Clement III), was anathematized. Elected to the Papacy in 1088, he expressed his intention of adhering closely to the principles of Gregory VII, which he did, though in a more measured and diplomatic form than his predecessor. The three great difficulties of his pontificate were the antipope, the interference of secular princes in the question of *investiture, and the simony and incontinence of the clergy. Owing to the presence in the city of Guibert and his followers, Urban could not at first enter Rome. He held a Council at Melfi in 1089 which promulgated 16 canons against simony, lay investiture, and clerical marriage. In the same year his position was temporarily strengthened by the marriage of his ardent supporter, Matilda of Tuscany, with Guelph V of Bavaria, which enabled Urban to enter Rome and expel Guibert. The latter was brought back, however, by *Henry IV in 1090, and Urban was once more an exile in S. Italy. But from 1093 Henry's power began to weaken, esp. through the defection of his son Conrad, who went over to the Pope and was crowned king of Italy. In the same year Urban re-entered Rome and took possession of the *Lateran in 1094. In 1095 he held two Councils at Piacenza and *Clermont, whose chief object was the general reform of the Church, esp. on the subjects of simony and clerical marriage. At Clermont the '*Truce of God' was proclaimed a law of the Church, and Philip I of France, who had put away his queen Bertha and married Bertrada, wife of the Count of Anjou, was anathematized. Having received an appeal for help against the Seljuk Turks from the Greek Emperor, Alexius I Comnenus, Urban proclaimed the First *Crusade. His call, which was received with enthusiasm by the people, initiated the great medieval Crusading movement that was to become a source of strength and prestige to the Papacy. Having returned to Rome in 1096 he held a synod at the Lateran and, in 1098, one at Bari with the object of healing the E. schism. At the latter St. *Anselm defended the *Filioque clause against the Greeks. Urban died in 1099 before the news of the capture of *Jerusalem by the Crusaders could reach him. His cult was sanctioned in 1881. Feast day, 29 or 30 July.

304 of his letters are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cli, 283–552. Jaffé, i, pp. 657–701, and ii, pp. 713 and 752 f. Life by Peter of Pisa in L.P. (Duchesne), ii (1892), p. 293 f. Brief modern study by M. F. Stern, Zur Biographie des Papstes Urbans II (1883); full life by L. Paulot, Un Pape français. Urbain II (1903). A. Becker, Papst Urban II. (1088–1099) (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, xix; 1964 ff.). B. Leib, Rome, Kiev et Byzance à la fin du XIe siècle. Rapports religieux des Latins et des Gréco-Russes sous le pontificat d'Urbain II (1924). W. Holtzmann, 'Die Unionsverhandlungen zwischen Kaiser Alexios I und Papst Urban II im Jahre 1089' in B.Z., xxviii (1928), pp. 38–66. R. Crozet, 'Le Voyage d'Urbain II et ses négotiations avec le clergé de France (1095–1096)' in Revue historique, clxxv (1937), pp. 271–310. Mann, vii (1910), pp. 245–346; A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1946), pp. 199–337, both with bibl. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1, 1912), pp. 337–465. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2269–85, s.v. 'Urbain II'; G. Mollat in E.C., xii (1954), col. 905 f., s.v. 'Urbano II'. See also works cited under Crusades.

URBAN V (1309–70), Pope from 1362. Guillaume de Grimoard, born at Grisac in Languedoc of a noble family, became a *Benedictine monk at the priory of Chirac and studied at *Paris and *Avignon. After ordination, he taught canon law at Montpellier and Avignon and later became Vicar General at Clermont and Uzès. In 1352 Clement VI named him Abbot of St.-Germain d'Auxerre and entrusted him with several legations in Italy; in 1361 he was appointed Abbot of St.-Victor at Marseilles; and in 1362 was elected Pope. In many ways the best of the Avignon Popes, Urban seriously undertook the reform of the Church, esp. with regard to the distribution of benefices. He made peace with Barnabo Visconti in 1364, and endeavoured to suppress the condottieri in France and Italy, but without success. His plans for a Crusade against the Turks, despite the temporary occupation of Alexandria by Peter de Lusignan in 1365, came to nothing. In 1365 the German Emperor, Charles IV, urged him to return to Rome, and after Cardinal Albornoz had reconquered the States of the Church, Urban went to Italy in 1367, disregarding the remonstrances of the French court and cardinals, who feared the loss of their influence on the *Curia. He was enthusiastically received by the Roman people and began at once to restore the badly neglected city and to establish discipline among clergy and laity. In 1368 he crowned the consort of Charles IV German Empress, and in 1369 received the Greek Emperor, John V Palaeologus, into communion. In the same year Perugia revolted and war broke out between England and France, two facts which added weight to the wish of Urban's advisers to go back to Avignon. Against the admonitions of St. *Bridget, who foretold his early death if he were to leave Rome, he returned to France in 1370, where he died soon after. Urban was a great benefactor of the universities and generously assisted poor scholars. His cult was confirmed in 1870. Feast day, 19 Dec.

A. Fierens–C. Tihou (edd.), Lettres d'Urbain V, 1362–1370 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, ix and xv; 1928–32); P. Lecacheux–G. Mollat (edd.), Lettres secrètes et curiales du pape Urbain V (1362–1370) se rapportant à la France (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. 3, 1955); M. Dubrulle (ed.), Les Registres d'Urbain V (ib., 1926 ff.; fasc. 1 only publd. to date); M. H. Laurent (ed.), Urbain V (1362–1370). Lettres communes (ib., 1954 ff.); D. T. Leccisotti (ed.), Documenti Vaticani per la storia di Montecassino. Pontificato di Urbano V (Miscellanea Cassinese, xxviii; Montecassino, 1952); J. Prochno (ed.), Acta Urbani V. (1362–1370) (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas illustrantia, iii; 1944; index by Věra Jenšovská, 1954); A. L. Tăutu (ed.), Acta Urbani PP. V (1362–1370) (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, Series III, vol. xi; 1964). A. Fierens (ed.), Suppliques d'Urbain V, 1362–1370 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, vii; 1914). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat, i (1914), pp. 349–414. Modern lives by J. B. Magnan (Paris, 1862), M. Chaillon ('Les Saints', 1911), and E. de Lanouvelle (Paris, 1928, with bibl.). J. M. Prou, Étude sur les relations politiques du pape Urbain V avec les rois de France Jean II et Charles V (Bibliothèque des Hautes Études, lxxvi; 1888). J. P. Kirsch, Die Rückkehr der Päpste Urban V und Gregor XI von Avignon nach Rom (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, vi; 1898), pp. 1–165. É. Delaruelle, 'La Translation des reliques de saint Thomas d'Aquin à Toulouse (1369) et la politique universitaire d'Urbain V' in Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique, lvi (1955), pp. 129–46. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (ed. 10, 1965), pp. 116–29, with bibl.; Eng. tr. (from ed. 9 of 1949; 1963), pp. 52–58. R. Webster, O.S.B., in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 214–16, s.v.; G. Mollat in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2295–2302, s.v. 'Urbain V', with extensive bibl.; G. Tabacco in E.C., xii (1954), col. 908 f., s.v. 'Urbano V'.

URBAN VI (1318–89), Pope from 8 Apr. 1378. Bartolommeo Prignano became Abp. of Acerenza in 1363 and was translated to Bari in 1377. On the death of *Gregory XI (1378), under whom he had been head of the Papal chancery, he was elected Pope under pressure from the Roman populace, who demanded an Italian. Hitherto he had been an ecclesiastic noted for his austerity and his aptitude for affairs, but his pontificate became a series of grave imprudences and extravagances, frequently attributed to partial mental derangement. During the first months of his reign he estranged the cardinals by his violent and overbearing manner, his irritation culminating in the threat to establish an Italian majority in the Sacred College. The French members, therefore, in Aug. 1378 announced the nullity of the election on account of its having been performed under duress, and in Sept., by electing Clement VII (Robert of Geneva) as antipope, began the *Great Schism in the West. Among Clement's adherents was Queen Joanna of Naples, whom Urban excommunicated (1380), putting in her place Charles of Durazzo. With him, too, he soon began to quarrel, and personally led an expedition against him during which he was captured (1383–4). After his escape, Urban had six of his cardinals tortured and five of them executed for conspiracy. From that time the conquest of Naples became his chief preoccupation, but a second expedition in 1386 was frustrated by the unreliability of his troops. He appointed the *Holy Year to be celebrated every 33 years and on 6 Apr. 1389 extended the Feast of the *Visitation of the BVM to the whole Catholic Church (decree publd. by Boniface IX, 9 Nov. 1389).

The principal authority is *Dietrich of Niem (d. 1418), De Schismate, Book I (ed. G. Erler, Leipzig, 1890), pp. 7–123. 'Aktenstücke zur Geschichte des Papstes Urban VI' mitgeteilt von H. B. Sauerland in Hist. J., xiv (1893), pp. 820–32. L. Macfarlane, 'An English Account of the Election of Urban VI, 1378' in Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, xxvi (1953), pp. 75–83, incl. text. T. Lindner, 'Papst Urban VI' in Z.K.G., iii (1879), pp. 409–28 and 524–46. N. Valois, 'L'Élection d'Urbain VI et les origines du Grand Schisme d'Occident' in Revue des Questions Historiques, xlviii (1890), pp. 353–420; R. Jahr, Die Wahl Urbans VI. 1378 (Diss., Halle, 1892). W. Ullmann, The Origins of the Great Schism (1948); O. Přerovský, L'elezione di Urbano VI e l'insorgere dello scismo d'Occidente (Miscellanea della Società Romana di Storia Patria, xx; 1960). Pastor, i (1891), pp. 117–37. G. Mollat in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2302–5, s.v. 'Urbain VI', with detailed bibl.

URBAN VIII (1568–1644), Pope from 1623. Maffeo *Barberini, descendant of one of the oldest Florentine families, distinguished himself early by his literary activities. Having been twice Papal Nuncio in France he became titular Abp. of *Nazareth in 1604, Cardinal in 1606, and Bp. of Spoleto in 1608. In 1617 *Paul V appointed him legate of *Bologna and prefect of the Segnatura di Giustizia. He was elected in 1623, and, though essentially a 'political' Pope, was a zealous promoter of ecclesiastical reforms. By canonizing and beatifying a number of saints, e.g. Elizabeth of Portugal (1625) and Francis *Borgia (1624), and by approving new religious orders such as the *Visitation (1626) and St. *Vincent de Paul's *Lazarists (1632), he encouraged the religious life. He fostered missionary efforts by founding the Urban College of *Propaganda in 1627 and in the same year gave its final form to the bull '*In coena Domini' which consisted of a number of excommunications against heretics and others, ordered to be read on every *Maundy Thursday. His decrees on *Canonization (1625; confirmed by brief of 1634) are the basis of the present law, and the revisions he introduced into the *Breviary in 1632 remained in force till the Breviary Reform of *Pius X (1912). He also revised the *Missal and the *Pontifical and much reduced the number of *Feasts of Obligation (1642). Under him G. *Galilei was condemned for the second time (1633), and the '*Augustinus' of *Jansenius declared heretical by the bull 'In eminenti' of 1642. Urban, who was much interested in military matters, had St. Angelo and Civitavecchia fortified and built the new Fort Urban. From 1625 he favoured the policy of Cardinal *Richelieu against the House of Hapsburg and deprived the Catholic League of sufficient subsidies against the Protestant powers, an attitude that earned him the unfounded reproach of sympathizing with *Gustavus Adolphus and estranged the Emperor; on the other hand he tried to prevent the alliance between France and Sweden (1631), thus straining his relations with Richelieu. Urban's greatest fault was his nepotism, which lost him the sympathies of the Romans and involved him in an unfortunate war against the Duke of Parma (1642–4). He established close contact with the English Court through *Henrietta Maria by means of his agents, G. Panzani (1634) and G. Conn (1638), in a vain endeavour to re-establish the RC Church in England. Urban VIII was a highly gifted classical scholar. His Latin poems were published at Paris in 1623 and often reprinted.

The official acts of his pontificate are pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, xiii (Turin, 1858), xiv (ib., 1858), and xv (ib., 1858), pp. 1–428. Modern introd. in Eng. by W. N. Weech, Urban VIII (Lothian Prize Essay for 1903; 1905). F. *Gregorovius, Urban VIII im Widerspruch zu Spanien und dem Kaiser (1879). A. Leman, Urbain VIII et la rivalité de la France et de la Maison d'Autriche de 1631 à 1635 (Mémoires et Travaux publiés par les professeurs des Facultés Catholiques de Lille, xvi; 1920). R. Quazza, 'L'elezione di Urbano VIII nelle relazioni dei diplomatici mantovani' in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, xlvi ('1922' [1923]), pp. 5–47. O. Pollak, Die Kunsttätigkeit unter Urban VIII (2 vols., Quellenschriften zur Geschichte der Barockkunst in Rom, 1928–[31]). R. Aubanel, Le Génie sous la tiare. Urbain VIII et Galilée (1929). G. Hofmann, S.J., Griechische Patriarchen und römische Päpste. Untersuchungen und Texte, iii. 1. Theophanes III Patriarch von Jerusalem und Papst Urban VIII (Orientalia Christiana, xxx, Pt. 1 [No. 84]; 1933). J. Grisar, 'Päpstliche Finanzen, Nepotismus und Kirchenrecht unter Urban VIII' in Xenia Piana (Rome, 1943), pp. 207–366 (also separately publd. as Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae xiv; 1943). L. Ceyssens, O.F.M., La Première Bulle contre Jansénius. Sources relatives à son histoire (1644–1653) (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, ix–x; 1961–2). A. Kraus, Das päpstliche Staatssekretariat unter Urban VIII. 1623–1644 (R.Q., Supplementheft, xxix; 1964). Pastor, xxviii and xxix (both 1938). M. Ott in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 218–21, s.v.; R. Ciasca in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 912–16, s.v. 'Urbano VIII'; V. Ponko, Jr., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 482 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Thirty Years War.

URBI ET ORBI (Lat., 'to the City [i.e. of Rome] and for the World'). A phrase used esp. of the solemn blessing which the Pope imparts from time to time from the balcony of one of the Roman basilicas (now from *St. Peter's church). The custom, which fell into abeyance after 1870, was revived by *Pius XI after his election in 1922.

URBS BEATA HIERUSALEM. A 6th–7th cent. hymn celebrating the Heavenly Jerusalem in terms suggested by Rev. 21. In medieval Breviaries it was the office hymn for the dedication of a church. In the revised Roman Breviary of 1632, its crude rhythm was changed into quantitative iambic metre beginning 'Coelestis Urbs Jerusalem', and much of its beauty was lost. The earlier text was restored in 1971. As printed in modern Breviaries and Hymnals it consists of two parts, the first four stanzas (with an added doxology) being used for *Vespers, the second part, beginning 'Angularis fundamentum' (in the revised version: 'Alto ex Olympi vertice') for *Lauds. Of the many Eng.

translations of the original hymn, J. M. *Neale's 'Blessed City, heavenly Salem' is probably the best known.

Text, with introd., notes, and reff., in A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), No. 119, pp. 377–80. H. Ashworth, O.S.B., '"Urbs Beata Ierusalem". Scriptural and Patristic Sources' in E.L., lxx (1956), pp. 238–41.

URBS SION AUREA. A set of extracts from the 'Hora novissima, tempora pessima' of *Bernard of Cluny (q.v.) in use as a well-known hymn ('Jerusalem the golden'). The familiar Eng. rendering is by J. M. *Neale. The hymn is not to be confused with that of the preceding entry.

URGESCHICHTE (Ger.), 'pre-history'. A term much used in the *Dialectical Theology for events which, from the standpoint of faith, are seen to be the means of God's direct supernatural revelation to man, though viewed from the human angle they appear merely as historical occurrences. This use of the word apparently derives from F. *Overbeck.

URIEL. Acc. to Jewish apocryphal writings, one of the four chief *archangels. In the Bk. of *Enoch he is said to have charge of Tartarus.

URIM AND THUMMIM. Prob. originally 'lots', used in early Heb. divination to interpret the will of God to the people. There are several reff. in the OT, and from the *Septuagintal text of 1 Sam. 14. 41 it would seem that the lots were cast so as to yield a negative or affirmative answer to the question posed. Their nature is not stated; but the Arabic custom of divination by headless arrows, with the alternatives written on them, may indicate the procedure followed.

Their divinatory use is nowhere mentioned after the time of *Solomon, presumably because it was replaced by the living voice of the Prophets, who disapproved of all mechanical oracles (cf. Hos. 4. 12), and Ez. 2. 63 and Neh. 7. 65 expressly suggest that such divination had ceased in post-exilic times. The inclusion of Urim and Thummim in the breastplate worn by the *High Priest in later times (cf. Ex. 28. 30, Lev. 8. 8) was prob. a traditional survival. They were numbered by the Rabbis among the five things no longer possessed by the Second Temple. By the time of *Josephus they were so little understood as to be confused with the breastplate itself.

Etymologically the meaning of the words, which was unknown to the ancient translators of the Bible, is obscure. In RV marg. they are rendered 'the Lights and the Perfections'. It has been suggested (G. R. *Driver) that 'Urim' is to be connected with a word meaning 'to give oracular response'.

R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 204–6, with bibl. p. 447; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), p. 352 f., with bibl. p. 544. A. R. S. Kennedy in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 838–41, s.v.; G. F. Moore in E.Bi., iv (1903), cols. 5235–7, s.v., with bibl.; E. F. Kautzsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 328–36, s.v., also with bibl. See also works cited under Ephod.

URMARCUS (Ger.), 'primitive Mark', a supposed early and lost draft of St. *Mark's Gospel. The case for its existence is based partly on apparent signs of revision in the Gospel as we have it, partly on the study of the other *Synoptists (Mt. and Lk.), which (it is argued) presuppose knowledge of a variant, and earlier, form of Mk. The theory, which has been defended in various forms by J. *Weiss, H. von Soden, E. Wendling, and W. Bussmann, has never had much following in England (rejected by F. C. *Burkitt, B. H. *Streeter, V. Taylor).

E. Wendling, Urmarcus (1905); id., Die Entstehung des Marcus-Evangeliums (1908). F. C. Burkitt, The Gospel History and its Transmission (1906), pp. 40–61. N. P. *Williams, Studies in the Synoptic Problem (ed. W. *Sanday, 1911), pp. 387–421 (a critique of Wendling). A. E. J. Rawlinson, The Gospel according to St. Mark (West. Comm., 1925), p. xli f. See also other commentaries to Mark, Gospel of St., cited s.v.

URSACIUS (fl. c. 335–71), Bp. of Singidunum (now Belgrade). Leader with *Valens, Bp. of Mursa, of the *Arians in the W. See Valens.

URSULA, St. The legend of the martyr St. Ursula and her 11,000 virgins developed from the veneration of some nameless virgin martyrs at *Cologne. Its earliest basis is a 4th–5th cent. inscription formerly at Cologne, acc. to which a certain Clematius restored an old basilica on the site where holy virgins had shed their blood for Christ. The next mention of the martyrs occurs in a sermon of the 8th or 9th cent. in honour of several thousand virgins who had perished in the persecution of Maximian. Acc. to a later form of the story, Ursula, whose name now came to be affixed to their leader, was a British princess who, accompanied by 11,000 virgins, went on a pilgrimage to Rome, and on her return was massacred with her companions at Cologne by the Huns. This legend was a favourite of the Middle Ages, and the discovery, in 1106, of a burial ground near the church of St. Ursula, believed to contain the relics of the martyrs, gave rise to many further embellishments. St. Ursula became the patron of many educational institutions; in modern times her name is chiefly known through the teaching order of the *Ursulines (q.v.). In the Roman liturgy her feast is now kept only locally. Feast day, 21 Oct.

Texts ed., with full discussion, by V. de Buck, S.J., in AA.SS., Oct. IX (1885), pp. 73–303. W. Levison, 'Das Werden der Ursula-Legende' in Bonner Jahrbücher, cxxxii (1927), pp. 1–164; also separately issued, Cologne, 1928. Extensive reff. to other literature in the discussion of Levison's book by M. Coens in Anal. Boll., xlvii (1929), pp. 89–110. Studies in English include M. (Mrs. T. F.) Tout, 'The Legend of St. Ursula and the Eleven Thousand Virgins' in Historical Essays by Members of Owens College, Manchester, ed. T. F. Tout–J. Tait (1902), pp. 17–56. Good modern popular study by J. Solzbacher–Veronika Hopmann, Die Legende der hl. Ursula. Die Geschichte der Ursula-Verehrung (Cologne, 1964). On the representation of the legend in art, G. de Tervarent, La Légende de sainte Ursule dans la littérature et l'art du moyen âge (2 vols., 1931). A. Poncelet, S.J., in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 225–8, s.v.

URSULINES. The oldest and most considerable teaching order of women in the RC Church. It was founded at Brescia in 1535 by St. *Angela Merici as a society of virgins dedicated to Christian education, but living in their own homes. Approved by *Paul III in 1544, community life and simple vows were introduced in 1572 by *Gregory XIII at the instigation of St. *Charles Borromeo. In 1612 *Paul V allowed the Ursulines of Paris solemn vows and strict enclosure, and convents erected on these lines and following the modified Rule of St. *Augustine multiplied, esp. in France and Canada. The growth of the order was temporarily stopped by the French Revolution but continued again in the 19th cent. In 1900, at a Congress at Rome of Ursulines from all over the world, the union was effected of a great number of convents belonging to different congregations in the 'Roman Union'. In 1953 the 'Canadian Union' of Ursulines was formed of all convents founded from Quebec, and in 1957 the German Ursulines formed a federation which received Papal approval. One of the most famous members of the order was the mystic, Marie *Guyard ('Mary of the Incarnation'), foundress of the house at Quebec.

Annales de l'ordre de Ste Ursule . . . avec une préface par M. C. Ste-Foi (2 vols., Clermont-Ferrand, 1857). V. Postel, Histoire de sainte Angèle Merici et de tout l'ordre des Ursulines depuis sa fondation jusqu'au pontificat de S.S. Léon XIII (2 vols. bound in 1, 1878). M. Aron, Les Ursulines (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux; 1937: Eng. tr., New York, 1947). Marie de Chantal Gueudré, O.S.U., Histoire de l'ordre des Ursulines en France [to the French Revolution] (2 vols., 1958–60). T. Ledóchowska, Angèle Merici et la Compagnie de Sainte-Ursule (2 vols., Rome, 1968). H. Albisser, Die Ursulinen zu Luzern. Geschichte, Leben und Werk, 1659–1847 (Stans, 1938). Les Ursulines des Trois Rivières (3 vols., Three Rivers, Canada, 1888–98; vol. 4, Quebec, 1911); Les Ursulines de Québec (4 vols., Quebec, 1864–6). P. G. Roy, A travers l'histoire des Ursulines de Québec (Lévis, 1939). C. J. Beaumier, L'Union romaine des Ursulines d'après les documents pontificaux (Three Rivers, 1951). Heimbucher, i, pp. 628–39, and ii, p. 661, with bibl. M. V. Boschet, O.S.U., in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 380–7, s.v. 'Orsoline', with further bibl.; D. Dunkerley and others in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 491–5, s.v., with bibl.

USAGERS. The section of the *Nonjurors who in 1719 accepted the Communion Service which had been newly drawn up by J. *Collier, T. *Brett, and T. Deacon on the basis partly of the primitive Christian liturgies and partly of the 1549 BCP. They were so named from four 'usages' which the new rite contained, viz. (1) the *mixed chalice; (2) prayers for the dead; (3) a prayer for the descent of the Holy Ghost on the elements (see Epiclesis); and (4) an Oblatory prayer. The schism between the 'Usagers' and 'Non-usagers' was healed in 1732.

J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors. Their Lives, Principles, and Writings (1902), pp. 290–308, 321 f., 443–5; H. Broxap, The Later Non-Jurors (1924), pp. 35–65 and passim.

USE. In liturgiology, a local modification of the standard (esp. the Roman) rite. In Latin Christendom such uses arose partly through the absorption of *Gallican features by the Roman Rite as it spread through Europe and partly through later local developments in the Roman Rite itself. These uses, which differed from the Roman Rite only in details, were gradually consolidated and codified in metropolitan and diocesan cathedrals and in some of the religious orders and, after ritual books came to be printed, were often used over wide areas. In the Preface to the BCP of 1549, where the five uses of *Hereford, *York, *Lincoln, *Bangor, and *Salisbury are referred to, it was ordered that 'from henceforth all the whole realm shall have but one use'. In the RC Church all uses, except those which could prove an existence of two centuries (notably the *Ambrosian use at Milan, the *Mozarabic use at Toledo, and those of some religious orders), were abolished by the Council of *Trent.

U.S.P.G. The United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was formed in 1965 by the amalgamation of the S.P.G. and the U.M.C.A. (qq.v.). It continues to work in the areas previously covered by these societies.

USSHER, JAMES (1581–1656), Abp. of *Armagh. Educated at the newly founded *Trinity College, Dublin, he was ordained in 1601 and appointed chancellor of St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1606 and first professor of divinity at Dublin in 1607. Subsequently he became Bp. of Meath (1621) and Abp. of Armagh (1625). A scholar and historian of vast learning, he was intimate with most of the English writers and divines of the day and was an authority on such diverse topics as the letters of St. *Ignatius of Antioch (of which he distinguished the 7 genuine from the later spurious ones, whose existence had previously discredited them all) and the early history of Ireland. Although a *Calvinist in theology, he was not unfriendly with W. *Laud, and advised *Charles I against the execution of Strafford. After the Irish rebellion of 1641 he remained in England, endeavouring to bring about a reconciliation between Churchmen and Dissenters. So great was his repute for scholarship, tolerance, and sincerity that on his death he was given a state funeral in *Westminster Abbey by O. *Cromwell. See also Irish Articles (1615).

Ussher's published writings include: A Discourse of the Religion anciently professed by the Irish (1623); Gotteschalci et Prædestinatianæ Controversiæ . . . Historia (1631); Britannicarum Ecclesiarum Antiquitates (1639); The Original of Bishops (1641); Polycarpi et Ignatii Epistolæ (1644); A Body of Divinity (1645; publd. by J. Downham); De Romanæ Ecclesiæ Symbolo Apostolico . . . Diatriba (1647); De Græca Septuaginta Interpretum Versione Syntagma (1655); Chronologia Sacra (1660; ed. T. *Barlow); The Power communicated by God to the Prince (1661); Historia Dogmatica Controversiæ inter Orthodoxos et Pontificios de Scripturis (1690; ed. H. *Wharton). His Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti (1650–4) are said to be the source of the dates later inserted in the margins of the AV of the Bible (edd. 1701 onwards).

Works ed. C. R. Elrington–J. H. Todd (17 vols., Dublin–London, 1847–64), with life by C. R. Elrington in vol. i, pp. 1–324. Selected extracts from his writings by P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism (1935), pp. 69–71 (No. xxxii), 134–7 (No. lxviii), 257 f. (No. cxi), 286–8 (No. cxxvi), 488–494 (No. ccxi), 608 f. (No. cclxxvi), 649 (No. cccvi), and 691 f. (No. cccxxvii). Early lives by N. Bernard (Ussher's chaplain; London, 1656) and R. Parr (also chaplain; ib., 1686, mainly important for letters). Modern studies by J. A. Carr, The Life and Times of James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh (1895), and R. B. Knox, James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh (Cardiff, 1967). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 64–72.

USUARD, Martyrology of. The most widely circulated of the *martyrologies in the Middle Ages and the basis of the current '*Roman Martyrology'. Its compiler, Usuard (d. c. 875), who was commissioned for the work by Charles the Bald, was a Benedictine monk of the abbey of *St.-Germain-des-Prés at Paris. He seems to have based his work on the somewhat earlier Martyrology of *Ado of Vienne (d. 875). It was edited at Paris in 1718 by Dom Jacques Bouillart from a MS. contemporary with its compiler and possibly the autograph.

The most important earlier edd. are those of J. Molanus (Louvain, 1563 and 1573, and Antwerp, 1583) and J. B. du Sollier, S.J. (AA.SS., Jun. VII, 1714, and Venice, 1745, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxiii, 453–992, and cxxiv, 9–860). Crit. ed., with commentary, by J. Dubois, O.S.B. (Subsidia Hagiographica, xl; 1965). H. *Quentin, O.S.B., Les Martyrologes historiques du moyen âge (1908), passim (see index). P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Sur les éditions de l'Usuard de Jean Molanus' in Anal. Boll., lxx (1952), pp. 327–33. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2313–16, s.v. 'Usuard'.

USURY. The exacting of interest was forbidden in the OT in the case of Jewish debtors (Ex. 22. 25, Deut. 23. 19 f.). The NT is not explicit on the subject, but during the patristic age all lending on interest was forbidden to clerics by the Councils of *Arles (314) and *Nicaea (325). The first Council of *Carthage (348) and the Council of Aix (789) objected to this method of making profit even in the case of laymen; and in the Decree of *Gratian, and subsequently at the Third *Lateran Council (1179) and the Second of *Lyons (1274), the practice was formally condemned, though it was allowed to the Jews by the Fourth Lateran Council of 1215. The condemnation was justified by the medieval view of money as solely a medium of exchange for articles of consumption, the use of which is adequately repaid by the return of a sum equal to that which was lent. This doctrine, founded on *Aristotle's theory of the 'barren' nature of money, was elaborated by the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas Aquinas (S.T., II/IIae, q. 78, art. 1) and held sway in the RC Church till the 19th cent. It was re-stated, e.g., by *Benedict XIV in 1745.

With the rise of capitalism the principle had to be gradually abandoned. M. *Luther and H. *Zwingli, as well as the 16th-cent. Anglican divines, still condemned the lending of money for interest, but J. *Calvin permitted it in the case of wealthy debtors, and the civil legislation, which had hitherto followed canon law, began to provide for moderate charges of interest in England in 1571, in Germany in the same century, but in many Continental countries much later, in France e.g. not until 1789. Today money is no longer thought of, as in the Middle Ages, as a barren means of exchange but as capital productive of wealth like other property. Since the exaction of a reasonable interest for its loan has been tolerated by the Christian Church, the term 'usury' has tended to be restricted to excessive rates.

Modern studies include M. Weber, 'Die protestantische Ethik und der "Geist" des Kapitalismus' in Archiv für Sozialwissenschaft und Sozialpolitik, xx (1905), pp. 1–54, and xxi (1905), pp. 1–110; Eng. tr., London, 1930; E. *Troeltsch, Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1911; abridged Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1931); R. H. Tawney, Religion and the Rise of Capitalism (Holland Memorial Lectures for 1922; 1926). T. P. McLaughlin, C.S.B., 'The Teaching of the Canonists on Usury (XII, XIII and XIV Centuries)' in Mediaeval Studies, i (1939), pp. 81–146, and ii (1940), pp. 1–22. B. N. Nelson, The Idea of Usury (Princeton, N.J., 1949; revised ed., Chicago–London, 1969), with bibl. J. T. Noonan, Jr., The Scholastic Analysis of Usury (Cambridge, Mass., 1957). T. F. Divine, S.J., Interest. An historical and analytical study in economics and modern ethics (Milwaukee, 1959), pp. 3–116. J. Dow in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 550–5, s.v. 'Usury (Christian)'; A. Bernard–G. Le Bras–H. du Passage, S.J., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2316–90; s.v. 'Usure', with reff.

UTICA, The Martyrs of. A group of early African martyrs of uncertain date who suffered at the Massa Candida (lit. 'White Farm'). The place, misunderstood as 'White Lump', gave rise to the legend that in the time of Valerian (c. 258) they were thrown alive into slaking quicklime and their bodies reduced to a white mass of powder. Acc. to St. *Augustine (Serm. 306, preached on their anniversary) there were 153 (cf. Jn. 21. 11), and the massacre took place at Utica, 35 miles from Carthage, though the *Roman Martyrology increases the number to 300 and assigns it to Carthage. *Prudentius, who extols the purity (candor) of their souls reflected in the whiteness (candor) of their bodies, prob. had a decisive influence on the legend. Feast day, 24 Aug.

Prudentius, Peristephanon, xiii, lines 76–87; Augustine, Sermones, cccvi and cccxi. 10; also Sermones post Maurinos reperti, ed. *G. Morin, O.S.B. (Miscellanea Agostiniana, i; Rome, 1930), p. 645 f. (No. xiv); also Enarrationes in Pss., xlix. 9, and cxliv. 17; and among the Ps.-Augustinian sermons No. cccxvii. P. Monceaux, 'Les Martyrs d'Utique et la légende de la "Massa Candida"' in Revue archéologique, Sér. 3, xxxvii (1900), pp. 404–11; F. P. de' Cavalieri, 'I martiri della Massa Candida' in Nuove Note agiografiche (S.T., ix; 1902), pp. 39–51. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2649–53, s.v. 'Massa Candida', and xv (pt. 2; 1953), col. 2878 f., s.v. 'Utique'; G. D. Gordini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (Rome, 1967), cols. 4–6, s.v. 'Massa Candida'.

UTILITARIANISM. The doctrine in ethics which identifies the good with happiness and maintains those actions to be right which bring the greatest happiness to the greatest number. In principle it was maintained by T. *Hobbes, B. de Mandeville, D. *Hume, and C. A. Helvetius, but it came into prominence with J. Bentham, J. S. Mill, and the Philosophical Radicals. H. *Rashdall sought to interpret the Christian ethic as an 'Ideal Utilitarianism'.

J. S. Mill's classic defence of the doctrine was originally publd. in three articles in Fraser's Magazine, lxiv (1861; pt. 2), pp. 391–406 (Oct.), 525–34 (Nov.), 659–73 (Dec.); they were reissued in book form as Utilitarianism (1863). L. Stephen, The English Utilitarians (3 vols., 1900). E. Albee, A History of English Utilitarianism (1902). D. Baumgardt, Bentham and the Ethics of Today, with Bentham manuscripts hitherto unpublished (Princeton, 1952). Good account by A. W. Hastings in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 558–67.

UTRAQUISM. The Hussite doctrine that the laity, like the clergy, should receive the Holy Communion under the forms of both bread and wine (sub utraque specie). It was first formally defended by Jacob of Mies, a professor of the university of Prague, in 1414. John *Huss did not personally press the thesis, but, despite condemnation at the Councils of *Constance (1415) and *Basle (1432), it was maintained by his followers, including the more moderate group of them (who were also called *Calixtines, from their demand for the cup, calix). Communion in both kinds was conceded to the laity by the Compactata of Prague (1433), which, though formally cancelled by *Pius II in 1462, were maintained by the Bohemian Diet until 1567.

See bibl. to Calixtines.

UTRECHT, Declaration of. The Profession of Faith which is the doctrinal basis of the *Old Catholic Church. It was drawn up by an assembly of the Old Catholic bishops at Utrecht on 24 Sept. 1889. Professing adherence to the beliefs of the primitive Church, esp. as formulated in the decrees of the *Oecumenical Councils down to A.D. 1000, it is mainly concerned with controverting the specific doctrines of the RC Church. Among the formulae repudiated are the decrees on the Papacy of the *Vatican Council of 1870, the dogma of the *Immaculate Conception, the encyclicals '*Unigenitus' and '*Auctorem fidei', and the *Syllabus of 1864. Positively it maintains the sacrificial element in the *Eucharist and the *Real Presence, though without mention of the propitiatory nature of sacrifice or of *transubstantiation.

The text is printed in the Report of the *Lambeth Conference for 1930, pp. 142–4.

UVEDALE, JOHN and NICHOLAS. See Udall, John and Nicholas.

V

VAISON, Councils of. Two important ecclesiastical synods were held at Vaison (Dept. Vaucluse, SE. France):

(1) On 13 Nov. 442. It enacted ten canons which provided inter alia that clergy should receive the *chrism at Easter from their own bishops (can. 3), that any unwilling to accept the judgements of their Bishop should resort to the Synod (can. 5) and that there should be no intimacy with those hostile to the Bishop (can. 6). It also regulated the adoption of children (cans. 9 and 10). Acc. to St. *Ado, Abp. of Vienne (9th cent.), his predecessor, Nectarius of Vienne, presided at the Council.

(2) On 5 Nov. 529. It enacted five canons of liturgical import, ordering the frequent repetition of *Kyrie Eleison in the Office and at Mass (can. 3), the regular use of prayer for the Pope (can. 4) and of Sicut erat after Gloria Patri (can. 5). Twelve Bishops were present, among them St. *Caesarius of Arles.

(1) Hardouin, i, cols. 1787–90; Mansi, vi (Florence, 1761), col. 451 f.; C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 94–104. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 454–60.
(2) Hardouin, ii, col. 1105 f.; Mansi, viii (Florence, 1762), cols. 725–8; C. de Clercq (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511–A. 695 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii A; 1963), p. 82 f. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 2; 1908), pp. 1110–15.

VALDÉS, JUAN DE (?1490–1541), Valdesso, Spanish religious writer and humanist. A native of Cuenca in New Castile, he studied at Alcalá, fled from the Spanish *Inquisition to Italy in 1531, and became camerario to *Clement VII in 1533. From 1534 he lived in Naples, where he became the spiritual centre of a group of prominent men and women anxious for reforms and spiritual revival in the Church, among them Giulia Gonzaga and Vittoria Colonna. Though at least outwardly he remained a Catholic, his conception of personal religion and interiority was largely Protestant in character and later had wide appeal for the Reformed traditions. After his death various of his friends, incl. *Peter Martyr and B. *Ochino, left the RC Church. Besides an important work on the Spanish language, Diálogo de la lengua (publd. 1737), he wrote a number of religious works, expounding Christian doctrine and the Scriptures. Among these are the Diálogo de doctrina cristiana (1529) and the Alfabeto cristiano (1536). He also translated the Hebrew Psalter into Castilian. His Las ciento diez divinas consideraciones, published in Italian in 1550, was translated into English by N. *Ferrar (1638).

His brother, ALFONSO DE VALDÉS (?1490–1532), who became Latin Secretary to the Emp. *Charles V, was a noted humanist and admirer of D. *Erasmus. After the Sack of Rome in 1527, he wrote the Diálogo de Lactancio y un arcediano (otherwise, Diálogo de las cosas acaecidas en Roma) (prob. first publd. 1529; Eng. tr. 1590) to justify the event; it vigorously attacks the Papacy for its part in contemporary international politics and for the corrupt state of the Church over which it presided, esp. the Curia, setting in contrast the fundamentals of New Testament Christianity as Erasmus interpreted them. The same themes recur in his Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón (1529), where he attacks religion that has become a matter of empty outward forms, devotion to inanimate objects, and good works undertaken on a quid pro quo basis. It contains a powerful apologia for lay Christianity as embodied in an ideal ruler. The work was long, but erroneously, attributed to Juan de Valdés.

Modern crit. edd. of Juan de Valdés, Diálogo de la lengua by Cristina Barbolani de García (Messina–Florence, 1967), which J. M. Lope Blanch (Clásicos Castalia, xi; 1969) follows; also by J. F. Montesinos (Clásicos Castellanos, lxxxvi; 1928); of his Alfabeto cristiano by B. *Croce (Bari, 1938); photographic repr. of the 1529 ed. of his Diálogo de doctrina cristiana with introd. and notes by M. Bataillon (Coimbra, 1925); further ed. of this work, with his tr. of the Psalter, by D. Ricart (Mexico, 1964). Edd. of Las ciento diez divinas consideraciones by L. Usoz y Río (Reformistas Antiguos Españoles, xvii; 1863), E. Cione (Milan, 1944) and, following MS. of Juan Sánchez (1558), by J. I. Tellechea Idígoras (Salamanca, 1975). Unpublished letters to Card. Gonzaga, ed. J. F. Montesinos (Anejos de la Revista de Filología Española, xiv; 1931). Modern life of Juan de Valdés by E. Cione (Bari, 1938; ed. 2, Naples, 1963), with good bibl. J. E. Longhurst, Erasmus and the Spanish Inquisition: The Case of Juan de Valdés (Albuquerque, New Mexico, 1950). M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne (1937; revised Sp. tr., Mexico–Buenos Aires, 1966), ch. 7; id., Erasmo y el Erasmismo (Barcelona, 1977), pp. 245–85. Domingo de Sta. Teresa, O.C.D., Juan de Valdés, 1498(?)–1541 (Analecta Gregoriana, lxxxv; 1957). P. McNair, Peter Martyr in Italy (Oxford, 1967), esp. pp. 17–28. J. H. Bakhuizen van den Brink, Juan de Valdés, réformateur en Espagne et en Italie 1529–1541 (Geneva, 1969). J. C. Nieto, Juan de Valdés and the Origins of the Spanish and Italian Reformation (ib., 1970; revised Sp. tr., 1979).
Modern edd. of Alfonso de Valdés, Diálogo de Lactancio by J. F. Montesinos (Clásicos Castellanos, lxxxix; 1928) and of Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón by id. (ibid., xcvi; 1929). M. Bataillon, 'Alonso de Valdés, auteur du "Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón"' in Homenaje ofrecido a Menéndez Pidal, i (1925), pp. 403–15; id., Érasme et l'Espagne (cited above), ch. 8.

VALDES, PETER. See Waldensians.

VALENCE, Councils of. Of the many Councils held at Valence in Dauphiné, the three most important were:

(1) 12 July 374. A Council of thirty bishops, summoned to deal with various disciplinary problems, among them the refusal of Acceptus to become Bp. of Forum Iulii (Fréjus). It issued four disciplinary canons. Can. 1 forbade the ordination of digamists, can. 2 easy penance to lapsed virgins, and can. 3 absolution until death to those who had lapsed into idolatry or received second baptism. Can. 4 dealt with clerics who falsely accused themselves of crime to escape office.

(2) c. 530. Its Acts are lost, and it is uncertain whether it was held before or after the Council of *Orange (529). Like the latter, it was directed against *Pelagianism and *Semi-Pelagianism. Its president was *Cyprian of Toulon, who represented St. *Caesarius of Arles.

(3) 8 Jan. 855. The Council was convoked by the Emp. Lothair (817–55) to try the Bp. of Valence on various counts. It then proceeded to discuss *Predestination, upholding against *Hincmar of Reims and the Council of *Quiercy (853) 'Double Predestination' and rejecting the view that the redemptive work of Christ extended to the whole human race.

(1) Hardouin, i, cols. 795–8; Mansi, iii (Florence, 1759), cols. 491–500; Lauchert, pp. 181–3. C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314 – A. 506 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 35–45. Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 2; 1907), p. 982.
(2) Hardouin, ii, col. 1103 f.; Mansi, viii (Florence, 1762), cols. 723–6. C. de Clercq (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511 – A. 695 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii A; 1963), p. 82 f. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 2; 1908), p. 1110, with further reff. See also works cited s.v. Orange, Council of.
(3) Hardouin, v, cols. 87–96; Mansi, xv (Venice, 1770), cols. 1–16. Hefele–Leclercq, iv (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 204–10, and iv (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1326 and 1390–8, with further reff. See also works cited s.v. Hincmar.

VALENS (4th cent.), Bp. of Mursa, who with *Ursacius, Bp. of Singidunum, was an *Arian leader in the W. Pupils of *Arius, they became bitter enemies of St. *Athanasius, whom they opposed, e.g. at the Council of Tyre in 335. After retracting their charges at the Council of Milan in 347, owing to a temporary change in the policy of the Emp. Constantius, they resumed their opposition to him at *Arles in 353 and at Milan in 355, and at Sirmium (357) maintained the extreme Arian ('Anomoean') position. Again in acc. with Imperial policy they took up a compromising attitude in 359 at the Synod of *Ariminum, where they were responsible for the victory of the *Homoean party. Though frequently excommunicated in the W. Church, they seem to have retained considerable influence at the court of Constantius. The last mention of Valens dates from 367.

There are scattered reff. in *Hilary of Poitiers, Athanasius, *Socrates, and *Sozomen. Fragments of a treatise of Hilary, 'Adv. Valentem et Ursacium', known to St. *Jerome (De Vir. Ill., 100), survive; text in J. P. Migne, PL, x, 627–724; crit. ed. by A. L. Feder, S.J., in C.S.E.L., vol. 65 (1916), pp. 39–193.

VALENTINE, St. The commemoration formerly observed on 14 Feb. appears to refer to two Valentines: a Roman priest martyred on the Flaminian Way under the Emp. Claudius (c. 269) and a Bp. of Terni (Interamna) who was taken to Rome and martyred, and whose remains were later conveyed back to Terni. Though the surviving accounts of both martyrdoms are clearly legendary, there are indications that each contains a nucleus of fact; and it is just possible that the kernel of truth in the two legends refers to a single person. The traditional association of St. Valentine's day with courtship and the choosing of a 'Valentine' of the opposite sex is connected perhaps with certain customs of the pagan festival of Lupercalia (mid-Feb.) at Rome, or with the natural season, not with any tradition concerning either saint of the name.

'Acta' of both SS. Valentine in AA.SS., Feb. II (1658), pp. 751–62. Note on the SS. Valentine in Anal. Boll., xi (1892), pp. 471–3. E. M. Fusciardi, Vita di S. Valentino, V. e M., patrono di Terni. Con messa, novena, triduo e preghiere (Terni, 1936). O. *Marucchi, Il cimitero e la basilica di S. Valentino (1890); R. Krautheimer–S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, iv (Rome, 1970), pp. 289–311 (in English). A. Amore in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), col. 598 f.

VALENTINUS (2nd cent.), *Gnostic theologian and founder of the sect of Valentinians. Acc. to St. *Irenaeus and others he was a native of Egypt whose disciples claimed that he had been taught by Theodas, a pupil of St. *Paul. He lived at Rome from c. 136 to c. 165 and had hopes of being elected Bishop 'on account of his intellectual force and eloquence' (quia et ingenio poterat et eloquio; *Tertullian, Adv. Valentinianos, iv), but was passed over, seceded from the Church and later perhaps went to *Cyprus.

Valentinus produced a variety of writings, including perhaps the Evangelium Veritatis* recently recovered in a Coptic version at *Nag Hammadi. A few other fragments remain; but his most influential production was a systematic theology known to us only in the developed and modified form given to it by his disciples. It appears to have been based on the *Ophite system and to incorporate *Platonic and Pythagorean elements. The spiritual world or 'pleroma' comprises thirty 'aeons' forming a succession of pairs (*syzygies); these are said to have been originally conceived as aspects of the divinity, but in the later systems appear like distinct deities. The visible world owes its origin to the fall of Sophia, the youngest of these, her ultimate offspring being the *Demiurge, identified with the God of the OT. Redemption was effected by the aeon Christ, who united himself with the man Jesus (either at his conception or at his baptism) to bring man the saving knowledge ('gnosis') of his origin and destiny. This gnosis, however, is given only to the spiritual men or 'pneumatics', i.e. the Valentinians, who through it enter the 'pleroma', whereas other Christians (called 'psychics' after 1 Cor. 2. 14 etc.) by faith and good works attain only to the middle realm of the Demiurge; the rest of mankind (called 'hylics', as engrossed in matter) are given over to eternal perdition.

Valentinus was probably the most influential of the Gnostics and had a very large following (frequentissimum collegium inter haereticos; Tertullian, op. cit., i). Several of his disciples founded schools of their own. They included, in the E., *Theodotus, and in the W., Ptolemaeus, *Heracleon, Florinus, and Marcus (see Marcosians).

The Coptic texts from Nag Hammadi (see under Gnosticism) include the Evangelium Veritatis (q.v.) as well as other works which were influenced, though not written, by Valentinus, esp. the Gospel of *Philip. The chief Christian sources are Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., i, passim, and iii. 4; Tertullian, Adv. Valentinianos; *Clement of Alexandria, Stromateis (several reff.) and Excerpta ex Theodoto; *Hippolytus, Ref., vi. 20–55; Pseudo-Tertullian, Adversus Omnes Haereses, iv [= De Praescriptione, xlix]; *Eusebius, H.E., iv. 11; *Epiphanius, Haer., xxxi, xxxiii f., and lvi. Most of these, together with other material on the Valentinians, are conveniently collected, with brief introduction, by W. Förster, Gnosis, i (Zürich, 1969), chapters 8–13 (Eng. tr., Oxford, 1972, pp. 121–243). Earlier collections of fragments, with introd., in A. *Hilgenfeld, Die Ketzergeschichte des Urchristenthums (1884), pp. 283–316, 461–522, and in W. Völker, Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (1932), pp. 57–141. The latest comprehensive study is still that of F. M. M. Sagnard, O.P., La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de saint Irénée (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxxvi; 1947). Other important studies include G. Heinrici, Die valentinianische Gnosis und die heilige Schrift (1871); R. A. *Lipsius, 'Valentinus und seine Schule' in Jahrbücher für protestantische Theologie (1887), pp. 585–658; O. *Dibelius, 'Studien zur Geschichte der Valentinianer' in Z.N.T.W., ix (1908), pp. 230–47, 329–40; C. Barth, Die Interpretation des Neuen Testaments in der valentinianischen Gnosis (T.U., xxxvii, Hft. 3; 1911); W. Foerster, Von Valentin zu Herakleon. Untersuchungen über die Quellen und die Entwicklung der valentinianischen Gnosis (Beihefte zu Z.N.T.W., vii; 1928); G. Quispel, 'The Original Doctrine of Valentine' in V.C., i (1947), pp. 43–73; and G. C. Stead, 'The Valentinian Myth of Sophia' in J.T.S., N.S., xx (1969), pp. 75–104. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 358–64; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 101, for further bibl. R. A. Lipsius in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 1076–99, s.v. 'Valentinus (1)'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2497–2519, s.v. 'Valentin'.

VALERIAN, St. (d. c. 460), Bp. of Cemele (now Cimiez, nr. Nice) in S. Gaul. He was probably a monk of *Lérins before he became bishop. The only facts known of his life are that he was present at the Councils of Riez (439) and *Vaison (442), and upheld the ancient jurisdictional claims of the see of *Arles against Pope *Leo the Great. He was the author of twenty homilies which, apart from one already known ('De bono disciplinae'), were discovered by J. *Sirmond in a *Corbie MS. early in the 17th cent. Their subjects are mainly moral and ascetic. Written in a highly rhetorical but effective style, they are valuable for the light they throw on the history of their age. Valerian was also the author of an 'Epistola ad Monachos de Virtutibus et Ordine Doctrinae Apostolicae'. Theologically he seems to have inclined to *Semi-Pelagianism. Feast day, 23 July.

'Homiliae' and 'Epistolae', first ed. J. Sirmond, S.J., Paris, 1612; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lii, 691–758. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 572 f. C. F. Arnold in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 418–20; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (part 2; 1950), cols. 2520–22, s.v.

VALESIUS, HENRICUS (1603–76), French historian. Henri de Valois was a native of Paris who, after being educated by the *Jesuits at Verdun and Paris, spent nearly all his life in the capital. In 1630 he abandoned a career in law to devote himself exclusively to learning. In his earlier years he issued editions of many classical authors, including Ammianus Marcellinus (1636). In 1650 he began an intensive study of the early ecclesiastical historians, which bore fruit in his celebrated editions of the Church histories of *Eusebius (1659), *Socrates and *Sozomen (1668), and *Theodoret and *Evagrius (1673).

His edd. of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Evagrius were reissued at Amsterdam, 3 vols., 1695–1700, and are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG (see under separate authors); they were revised by W. Reading (3 vols., Cambridge, 1720). His minor works ed. P. Burmann, Henrici Valesii . . . Emendationum Libri Quinque et de Critica Libri Duo (Amsterdam, 1740). Life by his brother, Adrian Valesius, was appended to a Lat. tr. of his ed. of Eusebius, Socrates, &c., publd. at Paris, 1677, pp. i–viii; repr. in G. Bates, Vitae Selectorum Aliquot Virorum (London, 1681), pp. 719–33; by P. Burmann, op. cit. (no pagination); and by W. Reading, op. cit., iii, pp. 615–22. E. *Schwartz (ed.), Eusebius Werke, Band ii, Teil 3 (G.C.S.; 1909), pp. xliii–xlv. H. Hurter, S.J., Nomenclator Literarius Theologiae Catholicae, iv (Innsbruck, 1910), cols. 173–7. P. Lejay in C.E., xv (1912), p. 263 f., s.v. 'Valois, Henri'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 2526 f., s.v. 'Valois, Henri de'.

VALIDATION OF MARRIAGE. A marriage null by reason of defective consent or some diriment impediment can be validated in canon law (a) by simple renewal of consent or (b) by dispensation. Simple renewal of consent is sufficient when the marriage is null because of defective consent or when the impediment has ceased to exist. If the nullity was well known, the renewal must be public; if secret, it may be private. But if the marriage is null because of a persisting removable diriment impediment, the marriage may be validated by a simple dispensation followed by renewal of consent. In certain cases, esp. where a renewal of consent is difficult to obtain, a marriage can be validated by a sanatio in radice (q.v.).

VALLA, LORENZO (c. 1406–57), Italian humanist. Ordained priest in 1431, he accepted a chair of eloquence at Pavia, but he had to leave the city in 1432 owing to quarrels with the jurists of the university. After several years of wandering from place to place, c. 1436 he was received by King Alfonso I of Naples, who was his protector for the next ten years. In 1447 he went to Rome, where he became 'scriptor' and later Apostolic Secretary, and in 1450 professor of eloquence at the university.

His first earliest work of importance, De voluptate (1431), is a dialogue between representatives of the *Stoic, *Epicurean, and Christian views, in which he defends the pleasure of the senses as the greatest good, though not perfectly attainable in this life. Valla soon became one of the first exponents of modern historical criticism. He proved the spuriousness of the '*Donation of *Constantine' in De falso Credita et Ementita Constantini Donatione Declamatio (1440), which also contained a bitter attack on the temporal power of the Papacy. He also undertook a critical comparison between the *Vulgate and the Greek NT in Collatio Novi Testamenti (1444). He was a violent opponent of Scholasticism, the method of which he ridiculed in Dialecticae Disputationes contra Aristotelicos (printed 1499). In De libero arbitrio (printed 1493) he denies the possibility of understanding the harmony of God's omnipotence with human free will, and De Professione Religiosorum (not printed until 1869) was a sustained critique of the ideals of the religious life. His De Elegantiis Linguae Latinae (1442) long remained a standard work on humanist Latin.

Valla's novel and audacious views, which caused him to be suspect of heresy, had a deep influence on Renaissance scholars and also on the Reformers; and his writings were held in high esteem, esp. by M. *Luther.

Works, publ. Basle, 1540; anastatic repr., 2 vols., Turin, 1962. Modern edd. of his De Constantini Donatione, with Eng. tr. by C. B. Coleman (New Haven, 1922) and by W. Schwahn (Teubn. ed., 1928) and of his De Libero Arbitrio by M. Anfossi (Opuscoli Filosofici: Testi e Documenti Inediti o Rari Pubblicati da Giovanni Gentile, vi; Florence, 1934); previously unpubl. recension of Collatio Novi Testamenti ed. by A. Perosa (Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento, Studi e Testi, i; Florence, 1970), and Defensio Questionum in Philosophia (hitherto unpubld.) ed. G. Zippel 'L'Autodifesa di Lorenzo Valla per il processo dell'inquisizione napoletana (1444)' in Italia Medioevale e Umanistica, xiii (1970), pp. 59–94. G. Mancini, Vita di Lorenzo Valla (1891). L. Barozzi–R. Sabbadini, Studi sul Panormita e sul Valla (Pubblicazioni del R. Istituto di Studi Superiori Practici di Perfezionamento in Firenze, Sezione di Filosofia e Filologia, xxv; 1891). J. Vahlen, 'Laurentii Vallae Opuscula Tria' in Sb. (Wien), lxi (1869), pp. 7–66, 357–444, and lxii (1869), pp. 93–149; also publd. separately, ib., 1869. M. v. Wolff, Lorenzo Valla (1893). W. Schwahn, Lorenzo Valla (Diss., Berlin, 1896). G. Antonazzi, 'Lorenzo Valla e la Donazione di Costantino nel secolo XV con un testo inedito di Antonio Cortesi' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, iv (1950), pp. 186–234. F. Gaeta, Lorenzo Valla. Filologia e storia nell'umanesimo italiano (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Storici in Napoli, viii; 1955). G. Radetti, 'La religione di Lorenzo Valla' in Medioevo e Rinascimento. Studi in onore di Bruno Nardi, ii (Florence [1955]), pp. 595–620. J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, ii (1908), pp. 60–70, with reff. R. Montano in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 522 f., s.v., with bibl.

VALLARSI, DOMENICO (1702–71), editor of St. *Jerome's writings. He was a native of *Verona, where he spent most of his life. His edition of Jerome (11 vols., 1734–42), was considerably superior to that of the *Maurists (Paris, 1693–1706) and, except for individual works, has not been superseded.

His ed. of the works of Jerome was repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxii–xxx; the ed. of the works of St. *Hilary, in which Vallarsi assisted F. S. *Maffei (Verona, 1730), was repr. ib., ix, x; the first vol. of his ed. of the works of *Rufinus (Verona, 1745; vol. 2 not publd.) was repr. ib., xxi, 45–632. L. Federici, Elogi istorici de' più illustri ecclesiastici veronesi, iii (Verona, 1819), pp. 134–48. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 2525, s.v.

VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT, The. See Jehoshaphat, The Valley of.

VALLUMBROSAN ORDER. A religious order, so named from the mother-house at Vallombrosa, some 20 miles E. of Florence. The order was founded c. 1036 by St. *John Gualbert (d. 1073) to follow the *Benedictine Rule, and confirmed by Victor II in 1055. After the death of their founder, the Vallumbrosan monks spread rapidly, having more than 50 abbeys at the end of the 12th cent. and over 80 by 1500, most of them in Italy. In the 15th cent. a reform of the order through *Cassinese Benedictines was instigated by *Eugenius IV, and another was effected in the 17th cent. by Bl. John Leonardi. The mother-house at Vallombrosa was burnt by the soldiers of *Charles V in 1527. After being rebuilt in 1637, it was plundered by Napoleon's troops in 1808 and finally suppressed by the Italian Government in 1866. Owing to these misfortunes the order declined, though it still has a few houses in Italy, governed by abbots who are now elected and hold office for four years.

The Vallumbrosan rule is based on that of St. Benedict, but with greater stress on austerity and penance. It represents a mixture of the cenobitic and eremitic life; and as it is strictly contemplative, enforcing perpetual silence, poverty, and enclosure, the manual work is done by lay brothers, the Vallumbrosan monks, indeed, being among the first to adopt this institution. The order has been noted for its contributions to ascetical literature, art, and science, and for a time counted *Galileo among its novices.

There exists also an order of Vallumbrosan nuns, who trace their origin to St. Bertha Bardi (d. 1163), but whose real foundress was St. Humilitas (d. 1310); they still have a few houses, at Florence and elsewhere in Italy.

F. Tarani, L'ordine vallombrosano (Florence, 1921). N. Vasaturo, O.S.B.V., 'L'espansione della Congregazione Vallombrosana fino alla metà del secolo XII' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xvi (1962), pp. 456–85; J. R. Gaborit, 'Les Plus Anciens Monastères de l'Ordre de Vallombreuse (1037–1115). Étude archéologique' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, lxxxvi (1964), pp. 451–90, lxxxvii (1965), pp. 179–208. T. Sala, Dizionario storico biografico di scrittori, letterati ed artisti dell'ordine di Vallombrosa (Florence, 1929). Heimbucher, i, pp. 320–5. R. Webster, O.S.B., in C.E., xv (1912), p. 262 f., s.v., with reff. to earlier litt.; E. Baccetti in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 526, s.v. 'Vallombrosans', with further bibl.

VALOIS, HENRI DE. See Valesius, Henricus.

VALOR ECCLESIASTICUS. The official valuation of ecclesiastical and monastic revenues made in 1535. It became necessary through the legislation of *Henry VIII, and esp. the second *Annates Act of 1534 (26 Hen. VIII, c. 3), whereby the first-fruits of every benefice, which had formerly been paid to the Pope, together with a tenth of the annual income, were appropriated to the crown. Its importance to the ecclesiastical historian, with its details of every benefice, may be compared with that of the Domesday Survey of 1086 to the student of secular history. It became popularly known as the 'King's Books'.

It was ed. by J. Caley for the Record Commission (6 vols., 1810–34), with general introd. by J. Hunter in vol. i, pp. i–viii. A. Savine, 'English Monasteries on the Eve of the Dissolution' in Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, ed. P. Vinogradoff, i (1909), pp. 1–217, esp. Book I, pp. 1–75. [M.] D. Knowles, The Religious Orders in England, iii (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 241–54. S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 609, s.v.

VAMPING HORN. A species of trumpet used in churches for humming harmonies ('vamping') to fill out the insufficient body of sound from the other instruments. Its use dates from the latter half of the 17th cent. and it survived in a few places till the middle of the 19th. Examples may be seen at East Leake (Notts) and Charing (Kent). The notion that vamping horns were used for summoning the congregation to church seems erroneous.

VAN DEN STEEN, CORNELIS CORNELISSEN. See Cornelius a Lapide.

VAN ESPEN, ZEGER BERNHARD (1646–1728), Belgian canonist. A native of Louvain, he was ordained priest in 1673 and became professor of canon law at Louvain university in 1675. His comprehensive knowledge soon made him a much-consulted adviser of princes and bishops, and his works, the most important of which is Jus Ecclesiasticum Universum (2 vols., 1700), are remarkable for their learning and lucidity. Van Espen vigorously defended *Gallican theories and was an ardent upholder of secular power against religious authority. In the question of the 'Chapter of Utrecht' he gave his opinion in favour of the validity of the ordination of a *Jansenist bishop, an act which led to his suspension a divinis and deprivation of his academic functions in 1728. Summoned by the Abp. of Utrecht to retract, he fled to the Jansenist colony at Amersfoort, where he died soon afterwards. All his works were placed on the *Index in 1704, and again in 1714 and 1732.

Best collected ed. of works [by J. Barre] (4 vols., 'Louvain' [Paris], 1753); [id.,] Supplementum ad Varias Collectiones Operum clar. viri Z. B. van Espen (Brussels, 1758). Anon. life by G. du Parc de Bellegarde (Louvain, 1767; also appended to supplementary vol. of works [separate pagination]). M. Nuttinck, La Vie et l'œuvre de Zeger-Bernard Van Espen (Université de Louvain. Recueil de travaux d'histoire et de philosophie. IVe Série, xliii; 1969), with bibl. E. [W.] Kemp, 'Zeger Bernhard Van Espen' in Theology, xlix (1946), pp. 194–200, with further reff. A. Depreester in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 457–61, s.v. 'Espen'.

VAN EYCK, HUBERT (c. 1366–1426) and JAN (c. 1390–1441), Flemish painters. They were natives of Maeseyck, in the diocese of Liège. Hubert later went to Ghent, where he began the famous altar-piece, The Adoration of the Lamb, for the cathedral of St. Bavon. Jan, who was probably a pupil of his brother, became court painter of Philip the Good of Burgundy in 1425 and settled at Bruges.

The Adoration, which Jan finished in 1432, is one of the masterpieces of Christian art, combining the allegorical treatment of the Middle Ages with a hitherto unknown naturalism and delight in picturesque detail. The work, based on the Apocalypse, consists of over 200 figures, grouped on several panels round the central figure of the Lamb, standing on the altar and adored by processions of saints. The work has had a varied history. It was hidden from the Protestant iconoclasts from 1566 to 1587 and in 1794 transferred to Paris. In 1816 the central piece was restored to Ghent and in 1821 its side parts removed to Berlin, whence they were brought back to Ghent in 1919.

J. van Eyck also painted several Madonnas and other works. All are remarkable for their brilliant colouring, produced by a new technique. Though he had hardly any disciples, his influence was paramount among the painters of N. and W. Europe for a hundred years and may be traced down as far as the naturalism of P. P. Rubens and *Rembrandt.

The very extensive literature includes general studies of the two brothers by W. H. J. Weale (London, 1908; ed. 2, assisted by M. W. Brockwell, ib., 1912), E. Durand-Gréville (Brussels, 1910), [W.] M. Conway (London, 1921), A. Schmarsow (Kunstgeschichtliche Monographien, xix; 1924), H. Beenken (Munich, 1941), and L. Baldass (Phaidon Press, London, 1952). The existence of Hubert van Eyck has occasionally in modern times been emphatically denied, notably by E. Renders, Hubert van Eyck. Personnage de légende (1933); id., Jean Van Eyck. Son œuvre, son style, son évolution et la légende d'un frère peintre (Bruges, 1935); and id., Jean Van Eyck et le polyptyque. Deux problèmes résolus (ib., 1950). This thesis has been more tentatively accepted by others. The legend on the painting ascribing the Adoration of the Lamb to Hubert has been subject to much critical examination; the results of various laboratory tests conducted under the direction of P. Coremans were publd. at Antwerp, 1953. There is much other controversial literature on the subject. Good reprods., with commentary by L. van Puyvelde (Paris–Brussels, 1946; Eng. tr., 1947). O. Kerber, Hubert van Eyck. Die Verwandlung der mittelalterlichen in die neuzeitliche Gestaltung (1937). C. de Tolnay, Le Maître de Flémalle et les Frères Van Eyck (Brussels, 1939). J. Lejeune, Les Van Eyck, peintres de Liège et de sa cathédrale (Liège, 1956). E. Panofsky, Early Netherlandish Painting (Charles Eliot Norton Lectures, 1947–8; Cambridge, Mass., 1953), i, pp. 178–246, with notes, pp. 427–57, and illustrations, ii, plates 109–68. Useful bibl. reff. in M. W. Brockwell, The Van Eyck Problem (1954).

VAN MANEN, WILLEM CHRISTIAAN (1842–1905), Dutch Biblical critic. After studying at Utrecht and holding pastorates in the Dutch Reformed Church, he was professor of Old Christian literature and NT exegesis at *Leyden from 1885 till his death. He was also co-editor of the Theologisch Tijdschrift. The opinions of van Manen, who was among the most radical Biblical critics of the 19th cent., attracted attention more as curiosities than for their intrinsic importance. He maintained, e.g., that all the NT writings belong to the Sub-Apostolic period. His methods are most fully exhibited in his Paulus (3 vols., 1890–6), in which he rejected the authenticity of St. Paul's Epistles, arguing that they were the creation of a group of theologians who sought to transform primitive Christianity, which was originally a movement in Judaism, into a universal religion, with a system closely akin to *Gnosticism. He admitted that there was a historic St. Paul, totally unlike the author of the Epp., but why he was taken by this school as its patron must, van Manen held, remain an insoluble mystery. Van Manen's views became widely known in Great Britain through his contributions to the Encyclopaedia Biblica (ed. T. K. *Cheyne and J. S. Black, 1899–1903).

T. Whittaker, The Origins of Christianity with an Outline of van Manen's Analysis of the Pauline Literature (1904; ed. 3, 1914, with additional prologue, pp. xi–xxxii; ed. 4, revised, 1933). A. Meyer in R.G.G. (ed. 2), iii (1929), col. 1958 f., s.v. 'Manen, W. C. van'.

VAN MILDERT, WILLIAM (1765–1836), Bp. of *Durham. Of Dutch descent, he was appointed Regius professor of divinity at Oxford in 1813, made Bp. of *Llandaff in 1819, Dean of *St. Paul's (in plurality) in 1820, and Bp. of Durham in 1826. He was the last Bp. of Durham with palatine rank, and was one of the founders of the university of Durham (1832). His chief works were An Historical View of the Rise and Progress of Infidelity (*Boyle Lectures, 2 vols., 1806) and an elaborate edition of the Works of D. *Waterland (10 vols., 1823–8), prefaced by a Life.

A Collection of his Sermons on Several Occasions and Charges (Oxford, 1838), with Memoir by C. Ives, pp. 3–158. G. F. A. Best, 'The Mind and Times of William Van Mildert' in J.T.S., N.S., xiv (1963), pp. 355–70. W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., lviii (1899), p. 1333 f.

VANE, HENRY (1613–62), English politician. To distinguish him from his father, Henry Vane (1589–1655), he is commonly known as 'the Younger'. He was educated at Westminster and at Magdalen College, Oxford, and for a time travelled abroad, esp. in France and Switzerland, where he found encouragement for his already latent anti-episcopal and anti-monarchical views. On returning to England he decided to emigrate to America, where he became Governor of Massachusetts (1636). Before long he came back again and was appointed co-treasurer of the Navy, elected M.P. for Hull and made a knight (1640). In the Long Parliament he was a vigorous and bitter opponent of W. *Laud and Strafford, and one of the commissioners chiefly responsible for the *Solemn League and Covenant. He strongly disliked, however, the Presbyterian system of state-enforced discipline. He became a member of the Council of State in 1649 and its president in 1652, but latterly lost influence, owing to his opposition to O. *Cromwell's dictatorial methods. At the Restoration he was arrested, imprisoned, tried, and executed on Tower Hill, 14 July 1662.

[G. Sikes,] The Life and Death of Sir Henry Vane (1662). Modern lives by J. K. Hosmer (London, 1888), W. W. Ireland (ib., 1905), and J. Willcock (ib., 1913). C. H. Firth in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 116–29.

VANGEON, HENRI LÉON. See Ghéon, Henri.

VÁSQUEZ, GABRIEL. See Vázquez, Gabriel.

VATICAN. The modern Papal residence in Rome on the ancient 'Mons Vaticanus', once adorned with the Circus of Nero. A Papal domicile is said to have been erected near the court of the old basilica of St. Peter's by Pope *Symmachus (498–514). An earlier residence on the site was rebuilt by *Innocent III (c. 1200) and extended by Nicholas III (1277–80). During the *Avignonese captivity (1308–77) it fell into disrepair; but as the *Lateran palace had also been seriously damaged by fire in 1309, the Vatican became the principal Papal residence after the return in 1377. The first *conclave was held here in the following year. Little of the existing building is earlier than the 15th cent. In 1410 *John XXIII restored the covered passage to the Castle of S. Angelo and in 1447 *Nicholas V began an extensive plan of building which included administrative offices and residences for the cardinals. This programme was actively carried into effect by Nicholas's successors. *Sixtus IV erected the *Sistine Chapel (1473–81), Innocent VIII the Belvedere (c. 1490), *Julius II and *Leo X Bramante's cortile and the stanze of *Raphael, and *Paul III the Sala Regia. (For the building of the basilica, see St. Peter's.) The present palace was completed by *Clement VIII (d. 1605), the Braccio Nuovo (designed by Raffael Stern) by *Pius VII in 1821. By the Law of *Guarantees (13 May 1871) the Vatican, the Lateran, and the Papal villa at *Castel Gandolfo were granted extraterritoriality, and additional privileges were conceded by the *Lateran Treaty of 1929. The celebrated Library ('Bibliotheca Apostolica Vaticana') is administered by a Cardinal Prefect. Among its more famous collections of MSS. are the Palatini (presented by the Elector Maximilian on the capture of Heidelberg; 1623), the Reginenses (formerly the property of Queen *Christina of Sweden; 1690), and the Ottoboniani (purchased by *Alexander VIII, Ottoboni; incorporated, 1746). See also Codex Vaticanus.

Much information is to be found in the many good guides to the Vatican palace, intended in the first place for tourists. There are also countless monographs on the various collections. Modern general works include C. Cecchelli, Il Vaticano. La basilica, i palazzi, i giardini, le mura [1928]; F. Ehrle, S.J.–H. Egger, Der vaticanische Palast in seiner Entwicklung bis zur Mitte des XV. Jahrhunderts (Studi e Documenti per la Storia del Palazzo Apostolico Vaticano, ed. F. Ehrle, S.J.–H. Egger, ii; 1935); G. Fallani–M. Escobar (edd.), Vaticano (Florence [1946]); and D. Reidy de Camps, I palazzi vaticani (Roma Cristiana, ed. C. G. Paluzzi, xviii; [1967]). The catalogues of Gk. MSS. collections are listed in M. Richard, Répertoire des bibliothèques et des catalogues des manuscrits grecs (Publications de l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, i; 1948), p. 92 f.; the Lat. ones by P. O. Kristeller, Latin Manuscript Books before 1600. A List of the Printed Catalogues and Unpublished Inventories of Extant Collections (ed. 3, New York [1965]), pp. 209–14 and 279 f. There are also numerous studies on Vatican MSS. in S.T. P. M. Baumgarten in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 276–302, s.v.; G. Caraci and others in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1040–1140, s.v. 'Vaticano'. See also bibls. to St. Peter's, Rome; Sistine Chapel.

VATICAN COUNCIL, The First. The Council held at Rome in 1869–70 and reckoned in the RC Church as the Twentieth *Oecumenical Council. Convoked by *Pius IX by a bull of Indiction dated 29 June 1868, it was planned to deal with a vast variety of subjects including faith and dogma, ecclesiastical discipline and canon law, religious orders, oriental Churches and foreign missions, and the relations between the Church and the civil powers. Even before the Council began, two bodies of opinion stood out clearly. The majority party, usually designated the '*Ultramontanes', were in favour of the heightening of Papal authority and of the definition of Papal Infallibility. They included such distinguished laymen as W. G. *Ward in England and L. *Veuillot in France, and, among members of the Council, Abps. H. E. *Manning of Westminster and V. A. Dechamps of Malines, and Bps. L. Pie of Poitiers and I. von Senestrey of Ratisbon. The liberal minority was represented by J. H. *Newman in England and J. J. I. von *Döllinger in Bavaria, and, among the members of the Council, by F. *Dupanloup, Bp. of Orléans, and most German and many Austrian and American bishops. Of the governments none except the Russian, which forbade the Catholic bishops to attend, interfered with the Council; the French attitude, one of benevolent neutrality, was largely influenced by E. Ollivier (1825–1913), the French premier, who later embodied his views in L'Église et l'État au concile du Vatican (2 vols., 1879).

After elaborate preparations the Council began with a pre-synodal congregation on 2 Dec. 1869 at which Pius IX nominated the presidents. It was followed by the issue of the brief 'Multiplices inter' which established the procedure, acc. to which the Pope had the right of proposing questions (ius proponendi), though bishops might suggest subjects for discussion to congregations set up for this purpose. Four Deputations—on dogma, on ecclesiastical discipline, on religious orders, and on the oriental Churches—were appointed.

The business of the Council was opened by Pius IX on 8 Dec. 1869 in the presence of nearly 700 bishops. It began with a discussion on the schema 'De Fide' which had been drawn up against rationalism, naturalism, materialism, pantheism, and kindred errors. While this schema, which was criticized as too cumbrous, was being revised by the Deputation on dogma, the Council discussed matters of ecclesiastical discipline with special reference to canon law and repeatedly listened to the desire for a reform of the *Breviary.

In Feb. 1870 the procedure, which had proved very slow, was hastened by new regulations. Long debates were prevented by the application of closure and the quicker method of voting by standing up was adopted. Both measures were later much criticized by the minority. The revised constitution on Faith, 'Dei Filius', was laid before the Council on 1 Mar., and after detailed discussion was promulgated in its final form on 24 Apr. It consists of a proœmium deploring the pantheism, materialism, and atheism of the time, followed by four chapters on God the Creator of all things, on Revelation, on Faith, and on Faith and Reason. The respective spheres of reason and faith were defined, esp. with a view to excluding *Traditionalism and other doctrines anathematized in the appended canons.

The public announcement that the question of Papal Infallibility was to be discussed at the Council had been made on 6 Mar. After some controversy it was decided that this subject and the Primacy of the Pope, both of which divided the members of the Council, should be dealt with before the other points of the schema 'De Ecclesia'. From 27 Apr. the Deputation on dogma worked on the schema 'De Romano Pontifice'; and the debate on the 'opportunity' of the definition, which lasted from 13 May to 3 June, was ended by closure. In the debate on the Primacy which followed, the point to which the minority esp. objected was the definition of the Pope's jurisdiction as ordinary, immediate, and truly episcopal. In the debate on Infallibility, the minority party desired to see the Pope's Infallibility linked more closely with the Infallibility of the Church by the use of some such expression as St. *Antonino of Florence's formula that the Pope 'using the counsel and seeking for the help of the universal Church' cannot err. The Infallibility debate was closed on 4 July. On 13 July the definition received 451 placets, 88 non-placets, and 62 placets juxta modum, and at the Fourth Public Session on 18 July the constitution '*Pastor Aeternus' was passed by 533 placets to 2 non-placets, the remainder of the minority having abstained from voting. The definition as finally accepted disappointed the extremists of both sides. It stated plainly the Infallibility of the Roman Pontiff, affirming that his definitions are 'irreformable of themselves, and not from the consent of the Church', but it restricted this Infallibility only to those occasions 'when he speaks ex cathedra, that is, when in discharge of the office of Pastor and Doctor of all Christians, by virtue of his supreme Apostolic authority he defines a doctrine regarding faith or morals to be held by the Universal Church'.

On 19 July, the day after the promulgation, war broke out between France and Prussia, and the removal of the French troops from Rome and the Italian occupation of the city brought the Council to an end. It was formally suspended on 20 Oct. 1870.

The definitions of the Council, which were accepted by all the minority bishops, roused serious opposition only in Germany and Austria. In these countries some small groups organized themselves as the 'Old Catholics', and in Germany the opposition of Bismarck to the increased consolidation of Papal power issued in the Kulturkampf. J. J. I. von Döllinger, who had vigorously opposed the Council throughout, esp. in his articles in the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung and his book The Pope and the Council (1869), also refused to submit and was excommunicated, though he did not join the Old Catholic body. The chief result in Austria was the renouncing of the Concordat by the state.

In the RC Church itself, the result of the definition of the Papal Primacy and Infallibility was the final settlement of the controversies that began at the Council of *Constance (1415) and had been sustained by *Gallican theologians in later times, while the constitution 'Dei Filius' provided the principles on which Catholicism was soon to make its stand against the infiltration of *Modernism into its own ranks.

Acta et Decreta Sacrosancti Concilii Oecumenici Vaticani cum permultis aliis Documentis ad Concilium eiusque Historiam Spectantibus auctoribus Presbyteris S.J. e Domo BVM sine Labe Conceptae ad Lacum (Collectio Lacensis Conciliorum Recentiorum, vii; Freiburg i.Br., 1892); Mansi (continuation), xlix–liii (Arnhem–Leipzig, 1923–7). Some of the more important decrees are also pr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 586–601 (Nos. 3000–3075); also in Mirbt, pp. 456–66 (No. 605 f.). E. Cecconi, Storia del concilio ecumenico vaticano (2 vols. in 4 parts, to end of second session 1872–9; all publd.). J. *Friedrich, Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils (3 vols., 1877–87); T. Granderath, S.J., Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils, ed. K. Kirch, S.J. (3 vols., 1903–6). F. Mourret, Le Concile du Vatican (1919). E. Campana, Il concilio vaticano (2 vols., Lugano, 1926). [E.] C. Butler, O.S.B., The Vatican Council. The Story Told from Inside in Bishop Ullathorne's Letters (2 vols., 1930). R. Aubert, Vatican I (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, xii; 1964). T. *Mozley, Letters from Rome on the Occasion of the Oecumenical Council, 1869–1870 (1891; hostile). H. E. Manning, The True Story of the Vatican Council (1877). E. Ollivier, L'Église et l'État au concile du Vatican (2 vols., 1879). A. Vacant, Études théologiques sur les constitutions du concile du Vatican, d'après les actes du concile (2 vols., 1895). R. Aubert in Fliche–Martin, xxi (1952), pp. 311–67, with bibl. supplement [c. 1964], pp. 541–7. J. Brugerette–É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2536–85, s.v. 'Vatican (Concile du)'.

VATICAN COUNCIL, The Second (1962–5). The proposal to hold this Council was apparently entirely due to Pope *John XXIII, who attributed the idea of convening such an assembly to a sudden inspiration of the Holy Spirit. He defined its immediate task as renewing the religious life of the Church and bringing up to date its teaching, discipline and organization, with the unity of all Christians as the ultimate goal.

On 25 Jan. 1959 at *St. Paul's Outside the Walls John first made public his intention to summon a Council. Preparatory commissions and secretariats were set up by the motu proprio of 5 June 1960 and the Council was formally summoned by the Apostolic Constitution 'Humanae Salutis' of 25 Dec. 1961. The norms and procedures of the Council were settled by the Apostolic Constitution 'Appropinquante Concilio' of 5 Sept. 1962.

Session I. 11 Oct.–8 Dec. 1962. Already on the second day of the Council the assembled prelates adjourned to elect their own commission members in place of those on the prepared list, and thus indicated their independence of the Roman *curia. On 20 Oct. the Council issued a 'Message to Humanity', but when it adjourned in Dec. it had reached no formal decision.

John XXIII died on 3 June 1963 and was succeeded on 21 June by *Paul VI, who announced on his election his intention to continue the Council.

Session II. 29 Sept.–4 Dec. 1963. On 30 Oct. votes were taken which shewed support for the *collegiality of the Bishops, the Divine Right of the Episcopal College and the restitution of the Diaconate as a separate and permanent order. After the close of the session the Council promulgated a Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy and a decree on the Instruments of Social Communication.

During the recess Paul VI made an ecumenical journey to the Holy Land and met the *Oecumenical Patriarch, *Athenagoras (4–6 Jan. 1964). On 17 May 1964 the Secretariat for Non-Christian Religions was set up.

Session III. 14 Sept.–21 Nov. 1964. At the close of this session the Council promulgated the Dogmatic Constitution on the Church, the Decree on Ecumenism, and the Decree on the Eastern Catholic Churches; and the Pope proclaimed the BVM to be the 'Mother of the Church'.

Session IV. 14 Sept.–8 Dec. 1965. In an Apostolic Constitution on 15 Sept. ('Apostolica Sollicitudo') the Pope formulated the norms for the new episcopal synod which was to be established to assist him to govern the Church. On 28 Oct. the following documents were promulgated: the Decree on the Bishops' Pastoral Office in the Church, the Decree on the Appropriate Renewal of the Religious Life, the Decree on Priestly Formation, the Declaration on Christian Education, the Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions. To these were added on 18 Nov. the Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation and the Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity. The Pope also announced the beginning of the reform of the Roman curia and the introduction of the process for the beatification of *Pius XII and John XXIII. On 4 Dec. a 'Service of Prayer (Sacra Celebratio) for Promoting Christian Unity' took place at St. Paul's Outside the Walls. In this the delegated observers and guests took part. On 7 Dec. were promulgated: a Declaration on Religious Freedom, the Decree on the Ministry and Life of Priests, the Decree on the Church's Missionary Activity, and the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World. The next day the Council was solemnly closed.

For legislation implementing the decisions of the Second Vatican Council, see Paul VI.

Acta Synodalia Sacrosancti Concilii Oecumenici Vaticani Secundi (4 sections in 25 vols. + index, Vatican City, 1970–1980). The Constitutiones, Decreta, Declarationes were issued ib., 1966. They are also printed in A.A.S., lvi (1964), pp.97–157; lvii (1965), pp. 5–112; lviii (1966), pp. 673–744, 817–64 and 929–1120. The Acts of the various commissions appointed after the Council are contained in subsequent volumes of A.A.S. Convenient Eng. tr. of the official documents by W. M. Abbott, S.J.–J. Gallagher (London–Dublin, 1966). There have been a large number of commentaries on individual degrees. Commentary on the complete collection ed. H. Vorgrimler, Das Zweite Vatikanische Konzil, Dokumente und Kommentare (3 vols., Freiburg, etc., 1966–8; abridged Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1967–9). Three supplementary vols. of L. Th. K. (ed. 2) are devoted to the Council, incl. Latin text and German tr. of documents (1966–8).

VAUDOIS. See Waldenses.

VAUGHAN, CHARLES JOHN (1816–97), Dean of *Llandaff. Educated at Rugby under T.*Arnold and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1841. From 1844 to 1859 he was Headmaster of Harrow, where he greatly improved the discipline and prestige of the school. After declining the Bpric. of *Rochester he became vicar of Doncaster in 1860, where he undertook to prepare graduates for ordination. He carried on this work all through his life, so that by his death over 450 young men, popularly known as 'Vaughan's Doves', had gone through his training. In 1869 he became Master of the Temple, where he strenuously upheld the traditional Christian beliefs against contemporary critical views. In 1879 he became Dean of Llandaff, where his sympathies with Nonconformity gained him considerable influence in S. Wales, and he took an active part in the foundation of the University College at Cardiff (1883/4). Vaughan was a notable preacher who combined force and lucidity of expression with warmth of feeling and conviction. Among his numerous publications are commentaries on Rom. (1859), Phil. (1885), and Heb. (1890) and collections of sermons, including Lessons of Life and Godliness (1862) and Words from the Gospels (1863).

Vaughan left strict instructions that no biography should be published. Brief sketch by F. D. How, Six Great Schoolmasters (1904), pp. 138–80 ('Charles J. Vaughan, D.D., Headmaster of Harrow, 1844–1859'). R. R. Williams, 'A Neglected Victorian Divine, Vaughan of Llandaff' in C.Q.R., cliv (1943), pp. 72–85. C. E. Vaughan in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 159–61.

VAUGHAN, HENRY (1622–95), 'Silurist', English poet. Born near Brecon of an ancient Welsh family, in 1638 he was entered at Jesus College, Oxford, where he was an ardent supporter of *Charles I. He left without taking a degree, studied medicine in London and c. 1645 began to practise at Brecon, and from c. 1650 at his native place Newton-by-Usk. About this time a spiritual transformation took place in his life, partly due perhaps to the death of a brother and a severe illness. The poetical outcome was the Silex Scintillans (2 parts, 1650 and 1655), a collection of spiritual poems, influenced by G. *Herbert, which are marked by an atmosphere of intense and sustained religious fervour. The first volume of Silex was followed in 1652 by The Mount of Olives, a small collection of prayers and meditations, and in 1654 by Flores Solitudinis, translations from J. E. Nieremberg (1595–1658) and St. *Eucherius, with a Life of St. *Paulinus of Nola by Vaughan himself. Apparently through the neglect of his works by the public, he published nothing after the second volume of the Silex except a heterogeneous collection of verse which was brought out by one of his friends, 'J. W.' (prob. John Williams), under the title Thalia Rediviva, in 1678. Vaughan is usually numbered among the '*metaphysical' poets of the 17th cent., but his style is simpler and his thought less abstract than that of e.g. J. *Donne or T. *Traherne. He exercised a considerable influence on W. *Wordsworth, whose 'Ode on Intimations of Immortality' reflects Vaughan's poem, 'The Retreat'.

A. B. Grosart (ed.), The Works . . . of Henry Vaughan (4 vols., 1871), with 'Essay on the Life and Writings of Henry Vaughan' in vol. ii, pp. ix–ci; work also ed., with full crit. app., by L. C. Martin (2 vols., Oxford, 1914; ed. 2, 1957). E. K. Chambers (ed.), The Poems of Henry Vaughan, Silurist (2 vols., 1896), with introd. by H. C. Beeching in vol. i, pp. xvii–lii. F. E. Hutchinson, Henry Vaughan. A Life and Interpretation (1947), with reff. R. Sencourt, Outflying Philosophy. A Literary Study in the Religious Element in the Poems and Letters of John Donne and in the Works of . . . Henry Vaughan [1925], pp. 133–238. E. Blunden, On the Poems of Henry Vaughan. Characteristics and Intimations (1927); E. Holmes, Henry Vaughan and the Hermetic Philosophy (1932); R. Garner, Henry Vaughan. Experience and the Tradition (Chicago, 1959); E. C. Pettet, Of Paradise and Light. A Study of Vaughan's Silex Scintillans (Cambridge, 1960); R. A. Durr, On the Mystical Poetry of Henry Vaughan (Cambridge, Mass., 1962). E. L. Marilla, A Comprehensive Bibliography of Henry Vaughan (University of Alabama Studies, No. 3; 1948). See also works cited under Metaphysical Poets.

VAUGHAN, HERBERT (1832–1903), Abp. of *Westminster. Descended from an old English RC family, Vaughan was ordained to the priesthood at Lucca in 1854. For a time he was vice-president of the seminary of St. Edmund's College, Ware. Having conceived the idea of founding a college in England to train missionaries, he toured S. America in 1863–5 to raise money for the purpose. In 1866 he founded St. Joseph's College, Mill Hill, whose members were commissioned to work among the coloured population of the United States. At the height of the controversies prior to the First Vatican Council he bought the Tablet (1868) and for three years acted as editor, championing the *Ultramontane cause. In 1872 he was appointed Bp. of Salford, and in 1892 Abp. of Westminster. He became a cardinal in 1893. The most notable events of Vaughan's archiepiscopacy were his obtaining the permission of the authorities at Rome for RCs to attend the ancient English universities, the building of *Westminster Cathedral (begun 1895), the discussions regarding *Anglican ordinations, which ended in their condemnation by *Leo XIII (1896), and his activities in connexion with the Education Bill of 1902, which recognized his main thesis, viz. that all schools, whether sectarian or public schools, are equally the concern of the state.

Of Vaughan's family, six of his eight brothers became priests, and all six sisters entered convents. His eldest brother, ROGER WILLIAM BEDE VAUGHAN (1834–83), was educated at *Downside and entered the *Benedictine Order in 1851. Appointed Prior of St. Michael's, Belmont, nr. Hereford, in 1862, in 1873 he was consecrated with the title of Abp. of Nazianzus as coadjutor to the Abp. of Sydney, whom he succeeded in 1877. BERNARD JOHN VAUGHAN (1847–1922), who was educated at Stonyhurst and entered the *Jesuit Order in 1866, was a notable preacher. Several volumes of his Sermons have been published.

S. Leslie (ed.), Letters of Herbert Cardinal Vaughan to Lady Herbert of Lea, 1867 to 1903 (1942). Life of Herbert Vaughan by J. G. Snead-Cox (2 vols., London, 1910; abridged ed., 1934). Modern study by A. McCormack (London, 1966). J. G. Snead-Cox in D.N.B., 1901–11, iii (1912), pp. 550–4.
Of Roger William Bede Vaughan there is a memoir [by J. C. Hedley] in The Downside Review, iii (1884), pp. 1–27; T. Cooper in D.N.B., lviii (1899), p. 177 f. Life of Bernard John Vaughan by C. C. Martindale, S.J. (London, 1923).

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, RALPH. See Williams, Ralph Vaughan.

VÁZQUEZ, GABRIEL (1549–1604), less correctly Vásquez, Spanish theologian. From his birthplace, Belmonte, he is sometimes known as Bellomontanus. He became a *Jesuit in 1569, and taught moral theology in the universities of Madrid, Ocaña, and Alcalá. He spent six years (1585–91) in Rome, but returned thence to Alcalá, where he taught till his death. His most important work is his commentary (Commentarii ac Disputationes) on the Summa of St. *Thomas Aquinas (8 vols. in all; 1598–1615), largely directed in its details against the theses of his co-Jesuit, F. *Suarez. In the discussion then raging as to the doctrine of grace, he opposed to the *Congruism of F. Suarez and R. *Bellarmine a strictly *Molinist position. His learning was immense; but it was often squandered on the discussion of useless questions and the defence of eccentric theories.

A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la assistencia de España, iv (1913), pp. 68–73. F. Stegmüller, 'Zur Prädestinationslehre des jungen Vásquez' in B.G.P.M., Supplementband iii (Halbband 2; 1935), pp. 1287–1311. J. A. de Aldama, S.J. (ed.), 'Un parecer inédito del P. Gabriel Vázquez sobre la doctrina augustiniana de la gracia eficaz' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xxiii (1949), pp. 515–20. Sommervogel, viii (1898), cols. 513–19. J. Hellin, S.J., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2601–10, s.v., with further bibl.

VECCHIONI. The members of an ancient guild at Milan officially known as the 'Scuola di S. Ambrogio' and consisting of 10 old men and 10 old women. Four of them (two of each sex) make public offerings of bread and wine on behalf of the laity at the solemn celebration of the (*Ambrosian) Liturgy in Milan Cathedral. The ceremony is a survival of the primitive offerings in kind by the faithful at Mass.

VEDAST, St. (d. 539), also 'Vaast', Bp. of Arras. He was ordained to the priesthood at Toul, where he was deputed to prepare King *Clovis I, returning from his victory over the Alemanni, for baptism. For a time he assisted St. *Remigius in his mission work among the Franks at *Reims. About 499 he was consecrated Bp. of Arras, where he successfully established Christianity; and he was also charged with the diocese of Cambrai. He was venerated in England as 'St. Foster' (cf. the church of St. Vedast in Foster Lane, London). Feast day, 6 Feb.

Two medieval lives, the one ascribed to St. Jonas of Bobbio (7th cent.), the other by *Alcuin, in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 792–80; crit. ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 399–427. Id., 'Die ältere V. Vedastis und die Taufe Chlodovechs' in Mittheilungen des Instituts für österreichische Geschichtsforschung, xiv (1893), pp. 427–42. Gertrude Sparrow Simpson–W. Sparrow Simpson, The Life and Legend of S. Vedast (1896); E. Guilbert, S. Vaast, fondateur de l'église d'Arras (Arras, 1928).

VEIL (1), Christian headdress. The veil, which was the customary feminine headdress among many ancient peoples, was worn by the Roman matron as a mark of distinction from the unmarried woman. In the Christian Church it was given to consecrated virgins by the bishop from the 3rd cent., as the symbol of their spiritual marriage to Christ. Since then it has come to be considered the most important part of the religious habit of women (cf. the expression 'to take the veil'). In most orders and congregations the veil of the professed sister is black, that of the novice white, but other colours, e.g. blue, are possible. Some modern congregations, such as the Sisters of Charity of St. *Vincent de Paul, dispense with it altogether. In the C of E female candidates usually wear a white veil at *Confirmation.

VEIL (2), liturgical cloths for covering various objects, e.g. the *chalice veil (q.v.), the veil used for the *ciborium while containing the sacred species, and the *humeral veil (q.v.). Acc. to a custom of the W. Church, traceable as far back as the 11th cent., all crucifixes, statues, and pictures were veiled during *Passiontide. In the Middle Ages the veiling lasted throughout *Lent, when the veils were usually white. In modern RC practice veiling is no longer obligatory; when used, it is from *Vespers preceding *Palm Sunday to the *Gloria in excelsis of the *Paschal Vigil Service, and violet veils are used except for the crucifix on the high altar on *Maundy Thursday, which is veiled in white.

VENANTIUS FORTUNATUS (c. 530–c. 610), Latin poet. A native of Treviso, near *Venice, he was educated at *Ravenna. About 565 he set out on a pilgrimage to the tomb of St. *Martin of Tours, in gratitude for the curing of an eye-complaint. On the way he was well received at the court of Sigebert of Austrasia at Metz, where he stayed until 567. By the time he had completed his pilgrimage, North Italy had been overrun by the Lombards, and Venantius settled at Poitiers. He became acquainted with the former Queen *Radegunde, by then a nun, and Agnes, the Abbess of her community; he entered the service of the community, first as steward and, after his ordination, as chaplain. He later became a friend of St. *Gregory of Tours, who encouraged him to publish collections of his poetry. Towards the end of the 6th cent. he was elected Bp. of Poitiers.

Venantius Fortunatus was the author of eleven books of occasional verse, including epigrams, elegies, panegyrics and epitaphs, as well as some hymns; a long metrical life of St. Martin of Tours, prose lives of St. Hilary of Poitiers, St. Germanus of Paris, Radegunde and various local celebrities; the 'De Excidio Thoringiae', a touching lament on the extinction of the royal house of Thuringia and a moving monument to his friendship with Radegunde, and the hymns which stand out as the true expression of his genius. Venantius may be regarded 'not as the last of the Roman but as the first of the medieval poets' (Raby). The technique of his poetry was that of classical antiquity handled with exceptional formal skill, but the emotional and cultural content were imbued with the Christianized spirit of the Middle Ages. He was the first Christian poet to express himself in terms of erotic mysticism, and his hymns are steeped in the Catholic spirit and Catholic symbolism. The two greatest of them, '*Vexilla Regis' and '*Pange lingua gloriosi', became an integral part of the Passiontide Office of the W. Church.

Editio princeps of his poems publ. Cagliari, 1573; fuller edd. of his works by C. Brouwer, S.J. (Mainz, 1603), and M. A. Luchi, O.S.B. (2 vols., Rome, 1786–7), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxviii, 59–592, with addition, cols. 592–6; crit. ed. by F. Leo–B. Krusch in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi iv (2 ptt., 1881–5). W. Meyer, Der Gelegenheitsdichter Venantius Fortunatus (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., iv, Nr. 5; 1901). G. M. Dreves, Hymnologische Studien zu Venantius und Rabanus Maurus (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, III. Reihe, Nr. 3; 1908), pp. 1–54. R. Koebner, Venantius Fortunatus. Seine Persönlichkeit und seine Stellung in der geistigen Kultur des Merowinger-Reiches (1915). D. Tardi, Fortunat. Étude sur un dernier représentant de la poésie latine dans la Gaule mérovingienne (Paris thesis, 1927). S. Blomgren, Studia Fortunatiana (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1933, Filosofi, Språkvetenskap och Historiska Vetenskaper, i, 1933 (in Band 2 of 1933), and ib., 1934, iii, 1934 (in Band 2 of 1934)). B. de Gaiffier, 'S. Venance Fortunat, évêque de Poitiers. Les témoignages de son culte' in Anal. Boll., lxx (1952), pp. 262–84. Raby, pp. 86–95, with bibl. p. 489. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 367–77; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 499–501; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 128–40.

VENERABLE. (1) In the RC Church, a title bestowed on a departed person when a certain stage in the process of *Beatification has been reached. In 1913 *Pius X fixed this stage as the publication of the official decree that the subject of the process had exercised all the virtues to an heroic degree or had suffered martyrdom. Formerly the title was popularly given on the introduction of the case before the Sacred Congregation of Rites, and was the occasion for great celebrations; but now all that is then allowed is a special service of thanksgiving. In a less limited sense the word is used of other persons of marked holiness of life, esp. the 'Venerable *Bede'.

(2) In the C of E, the proper address of an *archdeacon.

VENERATION OF THE CROSS. A ceremony of the Latin Rite for *Good Friday, sometimes also called Creeping to the Cross, in which clergy and people solemnly venerate a crucifix, usually at the entrance to the sanctuary. It originated in the veneration of the relics of the true cross in *Jerusalem (mentioned in the 'Pilgrimage of Etheria'). Subsequently the custom was transferred to Rome with relics of the Cross deposited in the church of Santa Croce in Gerusalemme, and then it spread to churches which had no relics. The prayers were originally of an extra-liturgical character and appear to date from the Carolingian era. An early description of the ceremony occurs in the Regularis Concordia. An analogous ceremony, consisting in a solemn procession, veneration, and elevation of the cross, takes place in the E. Church on *Holy Cross Day (14 Sept.) and on the 3rd Sunday in Lent.

H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 345–62. Lilli Gjerlow, Adoratio Crucis. The Regularis Concordia and the Decreta Lanfranci (Oslo, 1961).

VENI CREATOR (Lat. 'Come, Creator'). A hymn to the Holy Ghost, prob. composed in the Frankish Empire in the 9th cent. and frequently attributed to *Rabanus Maurus. It was used as the Vespers Hymn of *Whitsuntide from the 10th cent., and from the 12th cent. came to be substituted during the Octave of the feast for the usual hymn of Terce, 'Nunc Sancte nobis Spiritus'. It is also widely used outside Pentecost, e.g. at the ordination of priests and of bishops. The best known English version is that of Bp. John *Cosin, 'Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire', included since 1662 in the Anglican *Ordinal (to replace the earlier version in the 1550 Rite). Other versions of the 'Veni Creator' are due to J. *Dryden, R. *Mant, F. W. *Faber, and E. *Caswall.

Crit. text by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, ii (A.H.M.A., I; 1907), p. 193 f. S. G. Pimont, Les Hymnes du bréviaire romain, ii (1884), No. xx, pp. 125–43. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'L'Hymne et la Séquence du Saint-Esprit' in La Vie et les Arts liturgiques, x (1924), pp. 395–401, repr. in his Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), pp. 37–45. Raby, p. 183.

VENI SANCTE SPIRITUS. The *Sequence, sometimes called the 'Golden Sequence', for *Whitsunday. Its authorship is now usually attributed to Stephen *Langton (not *Innocent III). The most popular Eng. transs. are those of J. M. *Neale ('Come, Thou Holy Paraciete') and E. *Caswall ('Holy Spirit, Lord of Light').

Crit. text with notes by C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister, Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche, insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (A.H.M.A., liv; 1915), pp. 234–9. H. Thurston, S.J., 'Notes on Familiar Prayers. IV, The Veni, Sancte Spiritus of Cardinal Langton' in The Month, cxxi (1915), pp. 602–16, repr. in his Familiar Prayers (ed. J. H. Crehan, S.J., 1953), pp. 54–72. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), pp. 37–45 ('L'Hymne et la Séquence du Saint-Esprit'). Raby, pp. 342–4.

VENI, VENI, EMMANUEL ('O come, O come, Emmanuel'). The origins of both the words and the music of this well-known hymn (A.M. 49, E.H. 8), a versification of the *O-Antiphons (q.v.), are very obscure. The words have been traced back to the Psalteriolum Cantionum Catholicarum (Cologne, 1710). (J. M. *Neale's ascription of it to the 12th cent. seems wholly unfounded.) The tune, which first appeared in the Hymnal Noted (1854), is possibly founded on a reminiscence of a plainsong phrase.

The text of the words is pr. in H. A. Daniel (ed.), Thesaurus Hymnologicus, ii (Leipzig, 1844), p. 336, and in J. M. Neale (ed.), Hymni Ecclesiae e Breviariis quibusdam et Missalibus Gallicanis, Germanis, Hispanis, Lusitanis desumpti (Oxford, 1851), p. 57 f. P. *Dearmer, Songs of Praise Discussed (1933), p. 43 f. For other Eng. trr. see J. Julian in J. Julian (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (ed. 2, 1907), p. 74, s.v. 'Antiphon', with additional note p. 1551; J. Mearns, ib., p. 1721, s.v.

VENIAL SIN. In moral theology, a sin which, though it disposes the soul to death and is the greatest of all evils except *mortal sin (q.v.), unlike mortal sin, does not wholly deprive the soul of sanctifying grace. On the basis of 1 Jn. 5. 16 the Fathers posited two classes of sins (mortalia seu capitalia as opposed to levia; St. *Augustine) differing in gravity, but the modern distinction goes back to the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas Aquinas (S. Theol., II (1), qq. 88, 89). It was formally approved (against M. *Luther) at the Council of *Trent (Sess. VI, cans. 23, 25, 27). Acc.

to the theology of Penance, there is no obligation to confess venial sins when resorting to the Sacrament.

VENICE. The present see of Venice goes back to the bishopric, founded in 774, on the isle of Olivolo, later known as Castello. It belonged to the patriarchate of Grado, the relations of which to the see of Castello were finally settled under Marco II Michele (1225–35). In 1327 Jacopo Albertini, Bp. of Castello, who was an adherent of Louis of Bavaria, crowned Louis with the *Iron Crown and was deposed in consequence. Half a century later Giovanni Piacentini (1376–78) met with the same fate for supporting the antipope Clement VII. Angelo Corrario, Bp. of Olivolo from 1380 to 1390, became (Latin) Patr. of *Constantinople and in 1406 Pope under the name of Gregory XII. Owing to constant disputes between the patriarch of Grado and the see of Olivolo both were suppressed and replaced by the patriarchate of Venice in 1451, St. Lawrence Giustiniani being the first Patr. of Venice (1433–56). The *Tridentine reforms were introduced into the diocese by Giovanni Trevisano (1560), and later by Laurentius Priuli (1591–1600), who restored the cathedral and founded a seminary. The patriarchate was reorganized in 1818. Among its most important prelates of recent times were the learned Thomist, D. Agostini (1877–91), Giuseppe M. Sarto (1893–1903), later Pope *Pius X, and Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli (1953–8), later Pope *John XXIII.

The most famous church of Venice is San Marco, originally the chapel of the Doges. Destined to receive the relics of St. *Mark, it was begun c. 830 and completed in 883. Burned down in 976, it was rebuilt after the model of the Basilica of the Apostles at Constantinople from 1063 to 1071. Its plan forms a Greek cross of equal arms, the centre and each of the arms being surmounted by a dome. The interior is richly decorated with many-coloured marbles and mosaics, dating from the end of the 11th to the 17th cents. The retable of the high altar is the famous Pala d'oro, a magnificent 10th cent. piece of goldsmiths' and jewellers' art, with additions dating from the 12th to the 15th cents., representing Christ surrounded by angels, prophets, and saints. The treasury contains a unique collection of plate and jewellery, mostly of Byzantine origin. Immediately in front of the church stands the celebrated campanile, built in 1329 and rebuilt in 1910 after its fall in 1902. Since 1807 San Marco has been the cathedral church of the patriarchate in place of S. Pietro di Castello.

Among other famous Venetian churches are the *Franciscan Santa Maria Gloriosa (1250–1338), for which *Titian painted an Assumption, and the *Dominican SS. Giovanni e Paolo (1333–90), with the tombs of the Doges. Of the many religious orders that have houses in Venice the *Armenian Benedictine Congregation of the *Mechitarists is esp. remarkable; their convent on the island of San Lazzaro is a centre of Armenian education.

G. Cappelletti, Storia della repubblica di Venezia dal suo principio sino al suo fine (13 vols., 1850–5); S. Romanin, Storia documentata di Venezia (10 vols., 1853–61). W. C. Hazlitt, The Venetian Republic. Its Rise, its Growth, and its Fall, 421–1797 (2 vols., 1900); H. Kretschmayr, Geschichte von Venedig (3 vols., 1905–34); E. Musatti, Storia di Venezia (2 vols., 1914–15); A. Battistella, La repubblica di Venezia ne' suoi undici secoli di storia (1921); R. Cessi, Storia della repubblica di Venezia (Bibliotheca Storica Principato, xxiii and xxvi; 1944–6). E. Hutton, The Pageant of Venice (1922). J. Morris, Venice (London, 1960); M. Muraro–A. Grabar (Eng. tr. by J. Emmons), The Treasures of Venice (1963). F. Ughelli, Ord. Cist., Italia sacra, v (Rome, 1652), cols. 1225–1406; P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum. Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis Monasteriis Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, vii (pt. 2; Berlin, 1925), esp. pp. 1–26 and 124–99. G. Capelletti, Le chiese d'Italia, ix (1853), pp. 105–489. F. Schillmann, Venedig. Geschichte und Kultur Venetiens (1933). There are copious illustrations in La basilica di San Marco in Venezia, ed. F. Ongania with various others (15 vols., 1881–6); O. Demus, The Church of San Marco in Venice (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, vi; 1960). Archivio veneto (Venice, 1871 ff.). V. Piva–P. Paschini–M. Muraro in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1205–21, s.v. 'Venezia', with further bibl.; R. Cessi and others in E.B. (ed. 1968), xxii, pp. 964–73, s.v.

VENITE. Ps. 95 [Vulg. 94], from its first words ('Venite exultemus'). In the Rule of St. *Benedict (ch. 9), it is prescribed at the 'vigil' (i.e. the night service which became commonly known as *Mattins), whence it found its way into the Roman and Sarum *Breviaries, and in 1549 it was set in its familiar place in the BCP at the beginning of Mattins. The version of the BCP is that of the '*Great Bible'. The stern language of the concluding four verses led the revisers of the BCP of 1927–8 to propose their excision, and in the ASB the last three verses are replaced by Ps. 96.13.

VENN, HENRY (1725–97), *Evangelical divine. In 1749 he was elected a Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge, and after holding several curacies he became vicar of Huddersfield from 1759 to 1771. Here his piety and zeal made a great impression and he became one of the founders of the *Clapham Group. His The Complete Duty of Man (1763) was very popular in his day. Forced by ill-health to retire from Huddersfield in 1771, for the rest of his life he held the living of Yelling in Cambs. His son, John Venn (1759–1813), also a prominent Evangelical and rector of Clapham from 1792 till his death, was one of the founders of the *C.M.S.

H. Venn (grandson, ed.), The Life and a Selection from the Letters of the late Rev. Henry Venn (1834), with Memoir of his life mainly by John Venn (son), pp. 1–57, and list of his works, pp. 58–60. M. [M.] Hennell, John Venn and the Clapham Sect (1958). J. Venn in D.N.B., lviii (1899), p. 207 f. See also bibl. s.v. 'Clapham Sect'.

VERGER. Strictly the official who carries a mace or 'verge' (Lat. virga) before a dignitary. Today the term is commonly used for one who takes care of the interior fabric of the church. In the *Sarum Rite the verger headed the procession. The form 'virger', formerly also in general use, has been occasionally revived in a few places.

VERGIL. See Virgil.

VERGILIUS OF SALZBURG, St. See Virgilius of Salzburg, St.

VERMIGLI, PIETRO MARTIRE. See Peter Martyr.

VERMITTLUNGSTHEOLOGIE. A school of 19th cent. German Protestant theologians. The name derives from a memorandum drawn up by

F. Lücke in 1827 and published in 1828 in the first issue of the Theologische Studien und Kritiken, the leading organ of the movement. Among its chief representatives were J. A. W. *Neander, K. I. *Nitzsch, F. A. G. *Tholuck, J. P. *Lange, I. A. *Dorner, R. *Rothe, H. L. *Martensen, and W. *Beyschlag. All endeavoured in various ways to combine the traditional Protestantism of the Reformation Confessions with modern science, philosophy and theological scholarship. Most of them owed much to F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. The mediating aspirations of the school were vigorously attacked by A. *Ritschl and his disciples, and, more recently, by the theologians of the school of K. *Barth.

F. Traub in R.G.G. (ed. 2), v (1931), cols. 1548–51, s.v. For further bibl. see under separate representatives of the school.

VERNAZZA, BATTISTA (1497–1587), *Augustinian canoness and mystic. She was the daughter of Ettore Vernazza, the friend and disciple of St. *Catherine of Genoa (who was Battista's godmother). From 1510 till her death she lived in a convent at Genoa. She wrote letters, some verses, many 'Spiritual Discourses' or homilies, and some 'Colloquies' on her mystical experiences. She is believed to be the final redactor of the Life and so-called Works of St. Catherine, and the writer of the 'Spiritual Dialogue' which they incorporate.

Opere spirituali della Vergine di Cristo Donna Battista da Genova, ed. D. Gaspare da Piacenza, 3 vols., Venice, 1588; additional vol. iv, Verona, 1602; ed. 6, 6 vols., Genoa, 1755. F. *von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion as Studied in Saint Catherine of Genoa and her Friends, i (1908), pp. 336–67. Umile Bonzi de Genova, O.F.M.Cap., 'La Vénérable Battista Vernazza' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xvi (1935), pp. 147–79. G. I. Scatena, C.R.L., in E.C., xii (1954), col. 1286 f., s.v., with further bibl.

VERONA. The beginnings of Christianity in Verona are described in the legendary 9th cent. 'Carmen Pipinianum', which gives a list of its churches and of its early bishops. As its first bishop the city venerates St. Euprepius (probably 3rd cent.). Its first historically attested bishop is Lucilius, who took part in the Council of *Sardica in 343. Its patron is St. *Zeno (c. 362–c. 371). Among its later bishops were Nottingus (c. 840), who opposed the monk *Gottschalk; Francesco Condulmer (1439), who founded the College of Acolytes; and L. Lippomano (1548–58), who was one of the presidents of the Council of *Trent. An important synod was held at Verona in 1184, which introduced the episcopal inquisition. Till 1752 the see was suffragan of *Aquileia, then of Udine, and since 1818 of *Venice. Among the famous churches of the city are the cathedral (12th cent.), which possesses a celebrated collection of MSS. in the Chapter Library and also houses *Titian's painting of the Assumption; S. Zeno Maggiore, also 12th cent.; and the 13th cent. *Dominican church, S. Anastasia. The city suffered severely in the spring of 1945 in the Second World War but has since been splendidly restored.

'Annales Veronenses Antiqui', ed. C. Cipolla, in Bullettino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano, xxix (1908), pp. 7–81. F. S. *Maffei, Verona illustrata (4 vols., Verona, 1731–2). G. Venturi, Compendio della storia sacra e profana di Verona (Verona, 1820); C. Cipolla, Compendio della storia politica di Verona (ib., 1899); A. M. Allen, A History of Verona (1910); L. Simeoni, Verona (Rome, 1929). F. Ughelli, Italia sacra, v (Rome, 1653), cols. 523–1090. P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum. Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis Monasteriis Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, vii (pt. 1; Berlin, 1923), pp. 212–304. G. B. G. Biancolini, Notizie storiche delle chiese di Verona (8 vols., 1749–71). On the Council of 1184, Hardouin, vi, pt. 2, cols. 1881 f.; Mansi, xxii (Venice, 1778), cols. 487–94; Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1117–27. G. Turrini in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1289–98, s.v., with further bibl.

VERONICA, St. A woman of Jerusalem who, acc. to a legend (prob. of French origin) first found in its present form in the 14th cent., offered her head-cloth to the Lord to wipe the blood and sweat from His face on the way to Calvary. He returned it with His features impressed upon it.

The name is applied in a late version of the 'Acts of *Pilate' to the woman 'diseased with an issue of blood' (Mt. 9. 20–22). In this account she is said to have cured the Emp. Tiberius with a miraculous portrait of Christ. *Giraldus Cambrensis mentions that she had long wanted to see Him, and that, accepting a cloth, He returned it with His features impressed upon it. He applies the word 'veronica' to the cloth, suggesting vera εἰκών ('true image') as its etymology. *Matthew Paris also applies the name to the portrait, but says that it was so called after the woman at whose request the Lord's features were impressed upon it. A portrait professing to be the original imprint, which seems to have been at Rome since the 8th cent., was translated by *Boniface VIII to St. Peter's in 1297. The relic at Rome was greatly venerated throughout the Middle Ages, esp. in the 14th and 15th cents., and Milan and Jaen also claimed possession of the original head-cloth. The incident now occupies a recognized position in the *Stations of the Cross. Although St. Veronica is not mentioned in the Roman martyrology, her feast is kept on 12 July.

The identification of Veronica with the woman 'with an issue of blood' occurs in ch. vii of the Acts of Pilate (ed. C. Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha, ed. 2, Leipzig, 1876, p. 239, with note; Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament, 1924, p. 102); the account of the cure of the Emp. Tiberius is preserved in the Lat. legend of the Death of Pilate (text in C. Tischendorf, op. cit., p. 456 f.; Eng. tr. in M. R. James, op. cit., p. 157 f., with further information, p. 158 f.). Giraldus Cambrensis, Speculum Ecclesiae, cap. vi (Opera, ed. J. S. Brewer, R.S., 1873, p. 278 f.); Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard, iii (R.S., 1876), p. 7 f. AA.SS., Feb. I (1668), pp. 449–57, and Jul. III (1723), pp. 273–9. E. von Dobschütz, Christusbilder. Untersuchungen zur christlichen Legende (T.U., xviii; 1899), ch. 4, 'Die Veronica-Legende', pp. 197–263, with docc. and bibl. pp. 250*–335* and 157–203. K. Pearson, Die Fronica. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Christusbildes im Mittelalter (Strassburg, 1887); J. Palme, Die deutschen Veronicalegenden des XII. Jahrhunderts, ihr Verhältnis unter einander und zu den Quellen (Prague, 1892). P. Perdrizet, 'De la Véronique et de sainte Véronique' in Seminarium Kondakovianum (Prague, 1932), pp. 1–15. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2962–6, s.v. 'Véronique': A. P. Frutaz in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1299–1303, s.v. See also works cited under Pilate, Acts of.

VERSICLE. A short sentence, often taken from the Pss., which is said or sung antiphonally in Christian worship. It is answered by a 'response' on the part of the congregation or other half of the choir. Thus, in the services of *Mattins and *Evensong in the BCP, the words 'O Lord, open Thou our lips' and 'And our mouth shall shew forth Thy praise' are respectively versicle and response.

VESPERALE. (1) A liturgical book containing the psalms, hymns, &c., used at *Vespers with their appropriate chants. For convenience the corresponding items at *Compline are also commonly added.

(2) In the W. Church, the cloth spread over the altar when not in use to keep the white linen altar-cloths free from dirt and dust. The name is derived from the circumstance that the front part of it used to be turned back when the altar was being censed at Vespers. It is now removed before the service.

VESPERS. The Evening Office of the W. Church. Together with *Lauds it is the oldest of the '*Day hours', but it was originally part of the Night Office, also called 'lucernarium' (Gk. λυχνικόν), because candles were lit at its celebration. From the time of St. *Benedict the office was recited earlier in the evening, before dark, and since the later Middle Ages in the afternoon and until recently in *Lent even before midday. Until the recent rearrangement of the Offices, the structure of Vespers resembled that of Lauds, with five Psalms (in the Monastic Breviary, four), with their antiphons, followed by a short lesson (capitulum), hymn, the canticle *Magnificat, collect and concluding versicles. On the ferias of Advent and Lent, on certain Vigils and Ember Days the 'preces feriales' were added after the Magnificat. In the 1971 Breviary a hymn is followed by two Psalms, a NT canticle, a short lesson, short response, Magnificat with antiphon, intercessions, *Lord's Prayer, collect and blessing. Acc. to the present RC rite, all Sundays and solemn feasts have a first and second Vespers; in the case of concurrence of the first and second Vespers of two succeeding feasts, the celebration is governed by the rules regulating the rank of the feasts. Vespers is, together with Lauds, the most important Day Office and is frequently celebrated with great solemnity, culminating in the chanting of the Magnificat, during which the celebrant censes the altar. The service of Evensong in the BCP was partly formed on the model of Vespers, with important additions from *Compline.

P. *Batiffol, Histoire du bréviaire romain (1893), esp. pp. 84–8 (ed. 3, 1911, pp. 108–14; Eng. tr., 1912, pp. 70–4). C. Callewaert, Sacris Erudiri (1940), No. v, 'Vesperae Antiquae in Officio praesertim Romano', pp. 91–117. 'D. G. M.' [perh. Dom G. *Morin] in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2939–49, s.v. 'Vêpres'; P. C. Langeveld, O.S.B.–A. Hollaardt, O.P., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2798–2808, s.v. See also works cited under Breviary.

VESPERS, Sicilian. See Sicilian Vespers.

VESTIARIAN CONTROVERSY, The. The dispute concerning clerical dress begun under *Edward VI, which under *Elizabeth I became one of the foundations of the *Puritan party. Already discussed before the publication of the First BCP of Edward VI (1549), the question of vestments became acute when John *Hooper, on being nominated to the Bpric. of *Gloucester (1550), refused to be consecrated in the surplice and rochet prescribed in the BCP. Although he eventually agreed to wear the appropriate vestments on public occasions, considerable laxity seems to have existed for the rest of the reign.

The restoration of vestments in 1559, and esp. the vestments in the Chapel Royal, excited opposition. Acc. to the Interpretations of 1560, an order apparently issued by the Bishops, a cope was to be worn in the celebration of Holy Communion and a surplice at other times. Strong opposition to any vestments was voiced in the Convocation of 1563. After the failure of M. Parker's attempts in 1564 to reach a compromise with the most learned of the returned exiles, he issued his Advertisements (q.v.) in 1566 and required the use of a 'four-cornered cap, a scholar's gown priestly and in the church a linen surplice' and a cope in cathedral and collegiate churches. Thirty-seven of the London clergy who refused to promise compliance were deprived. Serious disturbances followed. Parker tried to enforce the Advertisements in other dioceses, but, with the Bishops divided, laxity remained. Polemical literature and some bitterness continued throughout the reign.

The controversy was of purely ministerial origin, concerning a subject which one party regarded as indifferent and therefore fit for the legislation of the magistrate and the other a matter of real importance because of its connexion with Popery. In the end most of the latter group, on the advice of the Continental reformers, acquiesced. Such opposition as remained was based less on the use of vestments as such than on the claim to freedom of conscience against the attempts of the Bishops to enforce conformity, and before the end of the 16th cent. had become merged in the disputes about Church government.

W. H. *Frere, The English Church in the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I (1904), pp. 54–6, 59, 111–25. See also lives of Parker, Matthew, cited s.v.

VESTMENTS. The distinctive dress worn by the clergy when performing the liturgical and other services of the Church. This dress did not, as formerly believed, derive from the vestments of the Aaronic priesthood, but originated in the ordinary secular costume of the world of antiquity in which the early Church grew up. During the first centuries a better kind of dress was probably set aside for the sacred functions, but the development of a specific priestly costume took place only between the 4th and 9th cents., one of the chief reasons being the abandonment of long tunics and mantles by laymen and their continued use in the Church. By the 10th cent. the principal liturgical vestments and their use had been established in the W. From the 10th to the 13th cents. further minor additions and alterations were made. The *surplice was introduced as a substitute for the *alb on many occasions, the *chasuble came to be almost reserved to the celebration of Mass, and the *tunicle became the distinctive vestment of the *subdeacon. In the same period the bishops, owing to their enhanced importance in the medieval world, received additional vestments such as *sandals, *mitre, and *gloves. Since the 13th cent. the vestments have varied in form and material, the general tendency being towards reducing their size for the sake of convenience. The *Liturgical Movement, however, advocated a return to the 'Gothic' style, based on late medieval models. Subsequently there has been a revival of the earlier more flowing and ample style, which is now generally used.

The precise shape and adornment of vestments are largely dependent on the artistic style and taste of the period. In the past the RC Church has regulated the material and colour in some detail, but much is now left to the judgement of local conferences of bishops. In the Middle Ages the several Eucharistic vestments were endowed with symbolic meaning, being variously interpreted as signifying the Passion of Christ or the priestly virtues. From the 9th cent. onwards they were regularly blessed. Until 1969 special prayers were provided for recitation while they were being put on.

The principal vestments of the E. Church are similar to those of the W., though tunicle, dalmatic, and some others are not represented, whereas there is no equivalent of *epigonation and *epimanikion in the W. For the use of vestments in the C of E, see Cope, Eucharistic Vestments, and Ornaments Rubric.

J. Braun, S.J., Die liturgische Gewandung im Occident und Orient nach Ursprung und Entwicklung, Verwendung und Symbolik (1907). H. Norris, Church Vestments. Their Origin and Development (1949; uncritical). C. E. Pocknee, Liturgical Vesture, Its Origins and Development (1960). F. E. *Brightman in D.E.C.H., p. 611 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2989–3007, s.v. 'Vêtement', with bibl.; G. Cope in J. G. Davies (ed.), A Dictionary of Liturgy and Worship (1972), pp. 365–83, s.v.

VESTRY. A room in or attached to a church in which the vestments, vessels, and other requisites for Divine worship are kept and in which the clergy vest. From the fact that it was here that the parishioners formerly met to transact the business of the parish, the word came to be used both of the body of parishioners and of the actual meeting. By the Local Government Act of 1894 and subsequent legislation, the vestries in the C of E lost all their powers except those concerned with the administration of the church and of ecclesiastical charities. In 1921 the administration of the church passed to the newly formed *Parochial Church Councils, though the vestries continue to share with the Parochial Church Meeting the right of electing *churchwardens. In the *Protestant Episcopal Church of the U.S.A. every parish has a 'vestry', consisting of the incumbent, two wardens, and a number of 'vestrymen'. This vestry is responsible for the financial administration of the parish and exercises control over the appointment of the incumbent (subject to the bishop's approval).

VEUILLOT, LOUIS (1813–83), *Ultramontane French journalist. Born at Boynes in Loiret, of poor parents, he entered journalism in 1831, editing the Mémorial de la Dordogne at Périgueux from 1832 to 1836 and the Charte de 1830 at Paris from 1836 to 1838. Converted at Rome to a living Catholic faith in 1838, in 1843 he became editor until his death of the Univers*, a newspaper at that time of little importance, which increased in authority and acquired an international significance through his defence of the Church. The violence of his views led to his imprisonment in 1844. From 1860 to 1867 the Univers was suspended for continual opposition to the Austrian policy of Napoleon as endangering the temporal sovereignty of the Pope, but Veuillot continued in books and pamphlets to advocate his views, esp. his dislike of attempts to reconcile religion with modern ideas and his belief in Papal Infallibility. During the First *Vatican Council he was so closely in the confidence of the Pope that the Univers became an almost official organ. During the siege of 1870 Veuillot elected to remain in Paris.

His brilliant and incisive style, together with his single-minded devotion to Catholicism, made him one of the foremost defenders of the Church in 19th cent. France. In his original stand for the freedom of Catholic teaching he was supported by the majority of French Catholics, but from c. 1844, when he defended the temporal sovereignty of the Papacy, and esp. when he advocated Papal Infallibility, he was opposed not only by free-thinkers but also by moderate Catholics such as F. *Dupanloup. His published works include Le Parfum de Rome (1861), Les Satires (1863), Les Odeurs de Paris (1866) and Rome pendant le Concile (2 vols., 1872), as well as 18 vols. of Mélanges (1842–75).

Collected ed. of his works by François Veuillot, nephew (39 vols., Paris, 1924–38). The primary life is that by Eugène Veuillot (brother), continued by François Veuillot (4 vols., Paris, 1899–1913). The numerous other studies include those of E. Tavernier, Veuillot's secretary and later editor of L'Univers (Paris, 1913), E. Lecigne (ib., 1913), G. Bontoux (ib., 1914), M. M. McDevitt (ib., 1935), François Veuillot (ib. [1937]), and M. L. Brown, Jr. (Durham, N.C. [1977]). E. Gauthier, Le Vrai Louis Veuillot [1939]; id., Le Génie satirique de Louis Veuillot [1953]. P. Fernessole, Les Origines littéraires de Louis Veuillot, 1813–43 (1923); id., Bibliographie de la jeunesse de Louis Veuillot, 1813–43 (2 parts of a thesis, 1923). W. Gurian, 'Louis Veuillot' in Catholic Historical Review, xxxvi (1951), pp. 385–414. E. Tavernier in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 394–6, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2799–835, s.v.

VEUSTER, JOSEPH DE. See Damien, Father.

VEXILLA REGIS. The Latin hymn by *Venantius Fortunatus celebrating the mystery of Christ triumphant on the tree of the Cross. In the Roman Rite it is sung at *Vespers during *Holy Week and on the *Exaltation (14 Sept.) of the Holy Cross. The fine Eng. trans., 'The royal banners forward go', is due to J. M. *Neale.

Crit. ed. by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, ii (A.H.M.A., I; 1907), p. 284; text, with notes and introd., also in A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), No. 34, pp. 173–7. S. G. Pimont, Les Hymnes du bréviaire romain, iii (1884), No. xiii, pp. 30–46. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 135–7, with reff.

VIA APPIA. See Appian Way.

VIA DOLOROSA. The route in *Jerusalem which Christ is believed to have followed from the judgement-hall of *Pilate, where He received the sentence of death, to Mount *Calvary, the site of the Crucifixion. It is marked by fourteen 'Stations of the Cross', and it is the traditional custom for *Franciscans resident in Jerusalem to conduct devotions along it every Friday.

VIA MEDIA (Lat., 'the Middle Way'). A term in use esp. by J. H. *Newman and other *Tractarians for the *Anglican system as a middle road between 'Popery' and 'Dissent'. This conception of Anglicanism is already found in English divines of the 17th cent., e.g. G. *Herbert and S. *Patrick.

VIA OSTIENSIS. See Ostian Way.

VIANNEY, J.-B. M., St. See Curé d'Ars, The.

VIATICUM (Lat., 'provision for a journey'; Gk. ἐφόδιον). The Holy Communion given to those in likelihood of immediate death to strengthen them with grace for their journey into eternity. Acc. to W. usage it can be given at any time of the day and the ordinary regulation requiring fasting (until 1955, from the preceding midnight) is dispensed.

P. Browe, S.J., 'Die Sterbekommunion im Altertum und Mittelalter' in Z.K.T., lx (1936), pp. 1–54 and 211–40. G. Grabka, O.F.M.Conv., 'Christian Viaticum: a study of its cultural background' in Traditio, ix (1953), pp. 1–43. A. Bride in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2842–58, s.v.

VICAR (Lat. vicarius, 'a substitute'). In the C of E, the priest of a parish where the *tithes have been appropriated. The institution goes back to medieval times, when churches were appropriated, e.g. to monasteries, which received the revenues, and employed first one of their monks to perform the duties of the *rector, and later a secular priest, called a vicar, who acted as the substitute for the religious house. For his maintenance about one-third of the tithes were set apart ('Vicarial' or 'small tithes'), the remainder ('Rectorial' or 'great tithes') being reserved for the monastery. When the monasteries were dissolved, the King granted the rectorial tithes to others, who became known as lay impropriators or lay rectors. As the parish priest a vicar has exactly the same spiritual status as a rector, and the forms of *institution and *induction are identical, since in both cases he holds his full spiritual jurisdiction from the bishop. He also holds the freehold of church, churchyard, vicarage, and glebe, with the exception of the chancel, of which the freehold, though not the possession, is commonly said to belong to the rector. In common parlance the title 'Vicar' is also used of incumbents who are legally '*Perpetual Curates' (q.v.).

VICAR APOSTOLIC. The name given to a RC titular bishop in Christian and missionary countries where the normal hierarchy is not established (e.g. Cambodia, Liberia, Kuwait) or the ordinary jurisdiction of the bishop is impeded. He performs the spiritual functions of a diocesan bishop and has generally the same rights and delegated powers. The RC community in England was ruled by Vicars Apostolic until the '*Papal Aggression' of 1850.

B. Hemphill, O.S.B., The Early Vicars Apostolic of England 1685–1750 (1954).

VICAR OF CHRIST, The. A title of the Roman Pontiff dating from the 8th cent. From the 13th cent. it completely superseded the older title, 'Vicar of St. *Peter'. It expresses his claim to universal jurisdiction in virtue of Christ's words to St. Peter, 'Feed my lambs. . . . Feed my sheep' (Jn. 21. 15 ff.). Down to the 9th cent. other bishops sometimes called themselves Vicars of Christ, though probably not as a formal title.

A. *Harnack, 'Christus Praesens — Vicarius Christi. Eine kirchengeschichtliche Skizze' in Sb. (Berl.), 1927, pp. 415–46. M. Maccarrone, Vicarius Christi. Storia del titolo papale (Lateranum, N.S., xviii; 1952), with reff.

VICAR GENERAL. An official whom a bishop deputes to represent him in the exercise of his jurisdiction. He may appoint more than one Vicar General or none at all, acc. to circumstances. In early times his functions were mostly performed by the *archdeacons, but by the end of the 13th cent. the office had become well established and its duties were exactly defined in the *Sext of *Boniface VIII. No member of a *mendicant order was permitted to fill the office.

In the C of E the office is nowadays ordinarily committed to the *Chancellor of the Diocese, together with that of *Official Principal. In *Sodor and Man, however, it survives as a separate office. Each archbishop also has a Vicar General who holds a court for the confirmation of bishops which 'praeconizes' opposers to appear and produce evidence against the validity of the election or the qualifications of the elected candidate. In the RC Church the office is in regular use. For the present legislation, see CIC, cans. 366–71.

M. A. Campagna, Il vicario generale del vescovo. Una sinossi storica e commento (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, lxvi; Washington, D.C., 1931). E. Fournier, Les Origines du vicaire général (1922; also in id., L'Origine du vicaire général et des autres membres de la Curie diocésaine, 1940, pp. 283–400).

VICELIN, St. (c. 1090–1154), 'Apostle of Holstein'. A native of Hameln, he studied at the Paderborn cathedral school and from 1123 to 1126 in France. He was ordained priest by St. *Norbert in 1126 and in the same year was sent by Adalbero, Bp. of Bremen, as a missionary to the pagan Wagrians. From 1127 he worked in Holstein, and despite constant revolts of the Wend population founded the monasteries of *Augustinian Canons at Neumünster and Faldera and a great number of other churches. After the unfortunate Crusade of the Wends in 1147 had destroyed all his labours, he was consecrated Bp. of Oldenburg in 1149, but not recognized by Henry the Lion. The ensuing political dissensions darkened his last years until he became completely paralysed two years before his death. Feast day, 12 Dec.

The principal sources are Helmold of Bosau, Chronica Slavorum, capp. 42–79 (ed. B. Schmeidler, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1909, pp. 84–149), and a metrical life ascribed to Sidon of Neumünster and a letter of the same Sidon (pr. by B. Schmeidler, ib., pp. 219–45). R. Hampt, Nachrichten über Wizelin den Apostel der Wagern und seine Kirchenbauten (3 vols., 1913–16). F. Hestermann, Sankt Vizelin, Apostel der Holsten und Wagrier (Dülmen i.Westf., 1926).

VICO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (1668–1744), Italian jurist and philosopher. The son of a Neapolitan bookseller, he was educated in a *Jesuit school and at Naples University, where he became Prof. of Rhetoric in 1697. In 1734 he was appointed historiographer to Charles III. He died after a period of mental disturbance.

Vico's chief work was his Principii di una scienza nuova d'intorno alla natura comune delle nazioni (1725; ed. 2, much enlarged, 1730). The treatise was one of the first attempts in modern times to expound a philosophy of history. Vico replied to R. *Descartes's attack on the value of historical study; he drew a distinction between the method and nature of natural science and those of history and maintained that mathematics was not a description of the general structure of reality but only the application of man-made rules; history, on the other hand, describes the behaviour of men and to that extent is amenable to human understanding. 'The world of civil society has certainly been made by men, and its principles are therefore to be found in the modifications of our human mind.' He considers it strange 'that philosophers should have bent all their energies to the study of the world of nature, which, since God made it, He alone knows, and that they should have neglected the study of the world of nations, which, since men made it, men could come to know'. The two keys to this understanding of the past were, he maintained, the nature of language and the nature of ritual or myth. Classical people, for instance, used language differently from his contemporaries, and he held that their metaphors and poetry revealed their outlook on life. Similarly, the ancient myths, so far from being inventions or pretty stories, are the means of conveying deep truths. These views, which have now become basic tenets of comparative anthropology, were revolutionary in the early 18th cent., and they enabled Vico to show that much of the 'Natural Law' which J. J. *Rousseau and others tried to project back into primitive times was incompatible with the outlook of the early writings we possess. He also believed that the examination of legal institutions demonstrated the purposes for which they were intended, the kind of society from which they emanated, the stage of growth which the society had reached and the kind of vision current in the society. From his researches in this field he was able to show that cultures could be differentiated in such a way as to make it seem inconceivable that a Hebrew Psalm had come from, say, a Roman background. He was also led to hold a class-war view of history and to adopt a cyclical theory of the rise and fall of society. Also implicit in his writings is the important distinction between demonstrable, scientific knowledge (the German 'Wissen') and the knowledge that comes through experience or revelation or even metaphysical intuition, such as knowing what it is to be a soldier, or understanding the outlook of a civilization (the German 'Verstehen').

Vico's philosophy of history began to be appreciated in the later 18th cent., and in modern times has exercised a considerable influence on such thinkers as B. *Croce, who interpreted him on Hegelian lines. There has been a revival of interest in recent years.

Collected ed. of Vico's works by G. Ferrari, 6 vols., Milan, 1835–7; fuller ed. by G. de Steffano, 8 vols., Naples, 1858–1869; works also ed. G. *Gentile–F. Nicolini–B. Croce (Scrittori d'Italia, xi, lxvii, cxii, cxiii, cxxxv, clx–clxii, clxviii, clxxiv, and clxxxiii; Bari, 1914–41). Eng. tr. of autobiography by M. H. Fisch–T. G. Bergin (Ithaca, N.Y., 1944), and of Scienza nuova by idd. (ib., 1948; revised ed., 1968). R. Flint, Vico (Blackwood's Philosophical Classics, ix; 1884). B. Croce, La filosofia di Giambattista Vico (Saggi Filosofici, ii; Bari, 1911; Eng. tr. by R. G. Collingwood, 1913). H. P. Adams, The Life and Writings of Giambattista Vico (1935). G. Tagliacozzo (ed.), Giambattista Vico. An International Symposium (Baltimore [1969]). G. Gentile, Studi vichiani (Messina, 1915). B. Croce, Bibliografia vichiana, ed. F. Nicolini (2 vols., Naples, 1947–8); E. Gianturco, A Selective Bibliography of Vico Scholarship (1948–68) (Florence, 1968). Überweg, iii, pp. 341, 346 f., 628 f.

VICTIMAE PASCHALI (Lat., 'To the Paschal Victim'). The Easter *Sequence in the W. Church. It is a short, dramatic hymn celebrating Christ's triumphant conquest of death, and was composed by *Wipo (d. c. 1050), a hymn-writer of Burgundy (or Swabia).

Crit. ed. of text in C. Blume, S.J. (ed.), Sequentiae Ineditae. Liturgische Prosen des Mittelalters, iv (A.H.M.A., xxxiv; 1900), No. 23, p. 27 f. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 372–4, with reff.

VICTOR I, St. (d. 198), Pope from 189. Acc. to the '*Liber Pontificalis' he was an African by birth. His name is chiefly connected with the *Quartodeciman controversy, for the settlement of which he ordered synods to be held throughout Christendom. He himself assembled a Council at *Rome and threatened *Polycrates of Ephesus and other bishops of Asia Minor with excommunication if they refused to give up their practice of keeping *Easter on 14 Nisan instead of the following Sunday. When he actually carried out his threat, St. *Irenaeus and other bishops blamed his severity, but the fact that the churches in Asia Minor remained in communion with Rome would suggest that the Pope took back his sentence. The whole incident is an important step in the history of the Papal supremacy. Among other incidents of Victor's pontificate were the deposition of the presbyter Florinus for defending *Valentinian doctrines and the excommunication of the leather merchant, *Theodotus, the founder of Dynamic *Monarchianism. Acc. to St. *Jerome, Victor was the first Latin ecclesiastical writer, but it seems that he wrote nothing but his encyclicals, which would naturally have been issued in both Latin and Greek. Though venerated as a martyr in the Liturgy, he appears to have died before the persecution under Septimius Severus. Feast day, 28 July.

Jaffé, i, p. 11 f. The principal authorities are L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i (1886), p. 137 f., and *Eusebius, H.E., v. 23 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, i (1930), esp. 19–22. Christine Mohrmann, 'Le Conflit pascal au IIe siècle. Note philologique' in V.C., xvi (1962), pp. 154–71. Fliche–Martin, ii (1935), pp. 90–3, with bibl. p. 87. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 2862 f., s.v.; A. Amore, O.F.M., in E.C., xii (1954), col. 1541 f., s.v. 'Vittore I'. See also bibl. to Paschal Controversy and Quartodecimans.

VICTOR (5th cent.), presbyter of *Antioch. He wrote a Gk. commentary on Mk., really a compilation from earlier exegetical writings (*Origen, *Titus of Bostra, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Chrysostom, Cyril of Alexandria) on Mt., Lk., and Jn. He was also the author of a similar work on Jer., preserved only in catena fragments.

No critical, or even complete, text exists. Older editions of Victor's Commentary on Mk. by P. Possinus, S.J. (Rome, 1673), C. F. Matthaei (Moscow, 1775), and J. A. *Cramer, Catenae in Evangelia S. Matthaei et S. Marci (Oxford, 1840), pp. 259–447. Modern discussion of problems in J. Reuss, Matthäus-, Markus- und Johannes-Katenen nach den handschriftlichen Quellen untersucht (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xviii, Hftt. 4–5; 1941), pp. 118–41. H. Smith, 'The Sources of Victor of Antioch's Commentary on Mark' in J.T.S., xix (1918), pp. 350–70. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 255–7. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2872–4, s.v.

VICTOR, St. (d. 554), Bp. of Capua from 541. He was the author of many writings, including a treatise on Noah's ark ('Reticulus') and a *Paschal cycle; but his most celebrated work is a Harmony of the Gospels, made on the basis of the *Vulgate text, the so-called *Codex Fuldensis (q.v.). Feast day, 17 Oct.

Apart from the 'Codex Fuldensis', Victor's writings survive only in fragments. Texts collected by J. B. *Pitra from 'De Reticulo seu de Arca Noe' in Spicilegium Solesmense, i (1852), pp. 287–9; from 'De Cyclo Paschali', ib., pp. 296–301; from 'De Resurrectione Domini', ib., p. liv. Bardenhewer, v, p. 277 f. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2874–6. See also bibl. to Codex Fuldensis.

VICTOR (late 5th cent.), 'Vitensis', Bp. of Vita in N. Africa. He wrote 'Historia Persecutionis Africanae Provinciae', a history of the persecution of the Catholic Church in Africa by the Arian Vandals under Gaiseric and Huneric (429–84). Its 2nd and 3rd books, based on contemporary material and the author's own experiences, are of special value as giving not only a trustworthy account of the historical events, but also a vivid picture of the political and religious civilization of the country. The work, which was written c. 485 in exile, contains several official documents, notably the 'Notitia Africae' of 484, i.e. a list of the Catholic bishops of the African Vandal Empire. The 'Passio Septem Monachorum', added to the history in some older editions, is not by Victor but belongs to a later period.

Editio princeps of his 'Historia' by Jehan Petit, Paris, c. 1500. Later ed. by T. *Ruinart, O.S.B., Paris, 1694, repr., with dissertations by J. *Sirmond, S.J., and others, in J. P. Migne, PL, lviii, 125–434. Crit. edd. by C. Halm in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, iii (pt. 1; 1879), and M. Petschenig in C.S.E.L., vii, 1881. A. Schönfelder, De Victore Vitensi Episcopo (Breslau Diss., 1899). H. I. Marrou, 'Diadoque de Photiké et Victor de Vita' in Revue des Études anciennes, xlv (1943), pp. 225–32. C. Courtois, Victor de Vita et son œuvre (Algiers, 1954). H.-J. Diesner, 'Sklaven und Verbannte, Märtyrer und Confessoren bei Victor Vitensis' in Philologus, cvi (1962), pp. 101–120. L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, iii (1910), pp. 625–45; Eng. tr. (1924), pp. 430–41. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 550–2. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 2881 f., s.v.

VICTORINES. The *canons regular of the former abbey dedicated to St. *Victor at *Paris. The house was founded by *William of Champeaux (the most famous scholar of his day and teacher of *Abelard) and built in 1113 at the cost of King Louis VI. The 'customs' of the house, which were drawn up under the influence of St. *Bernard, acquired considerable prestige. But though the Victorines enjoyed great respect, they never became large in numbers. Many famous scholars, mystics, and poets were found in their ranks, esp. during the 12th cent., among them *Adam of St.-Victor, *Hugh of St.-Victor, *Richard of St.-Victor, and *Walter of St.-Victor (qq.v.). The abbey was secularized at the outbreak of the French Revolution.

F. Bonnard, Histoire de l'abbaye royale et de l'ordre des chanoines réguliers de Saint-Victor de Paris (2 vols., [1904–8]). J. Chatillon, Théologie, Spiritualité et Métaphysique dans l'œuvre oratoire d'Achard de Saint-Victor (Études de Philosophie médiévale, lviii; 1969), esp. pp. 53–85. Heimbucher, i, pp. 413–16.

VICTORINUS, St. (d. c. 304), Bp. of Pettau (Poetovio) in Pannonia. Acc. to St. *Jerome he was martyred, probably under *Diocletian. Victorinus is the earliest known exegete of the Latin Church, but nearly all his works are lost, probably on account of his *millenarianist tendencies, which caused them to be condemned as apocryphal by the '*Decretum Gelasianum'. He followed *Origen and other Greek commentators, but St. Jerome finds fault with both his style and his erudition. Of his many commentaries only that on Rev. survives. It has come down in a 15th cent. *Vatican MS. (Ottob. lat. 3288 A) and in a working-over of it by St. Jerome. The treatise 'De Fabrica Mundi', though not, as formerly believed, part of his commentary on Gen., is almost certainly also to be assigned to him. The attribution of the Pseudo-Tertullianic 'Adversus omnes haereses' (De Praescr., 46–53), to Victorinus (A. *Harnack) is improbable. Acc. to E. *Schwartz, however, Victorinus translated it from a Greek original. Feast day, 2 Nov.

The only crit. text is that of J. Haussleiter in C.S.E.L., xlix (1916). Older texts, with prolegomena, partly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, v, 281–344. E. Schwartz, Zwei Predigten Hippolyts (Sb. (Bayr.), 1936, Heft 3), p. 43. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 657–63; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 182 f. Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), pp. 16–18 (Nos. 79–83). J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 614–19; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 2882–7; M. Schuster in P.W., Zweite Reihe, viii (1958), cols. 2081–5, s.v. 'Victorinus (23)'.

VICTORINUS AFER, CAIUS (or FABIUS) MARIUS (4th cent.), rhetor and theologian. A native of Africa, he taught in Rome, where he gained a great reputation. About the middle of the century he became a Christian, resigned his rhetorship under *Julian in 362 (an event which excited much comment, and contributed towards determining *Augustine to follow his example in 386), and wrote theological works against the *Arians. The notorious obscurity of his manner of writing is very largely due to the fact that he was translating difficult philosophical Greek into Latin in an attempt to make use of a form of 4th cent. *Neoplatonic metaphysics to elucidate and defend the Nicene doctrine of the Trinity. Recent research has shown that it is probable that he was closely following *Porphyry's development of the thought of *Plotinus in a direction very different from that taken by later Neoplatonists. The result is a philosophical theology of great power, though restricted in its influence because of the difficulty of the language and thought. Both in method and in conclusions he occasionally anticipates Augustinian positions, e.g. in his treatment of the Pauline doctrine of *justification.

In his pagan period Victorinus commented extensively on Cicero; translated some writings of *Aristotle and the 'Isagoge' of Porphyry, and prob. also part of Plotinus's 'Enneads'; and wrote some original philosophical works. His Christian writings include 'Liber de Generatione Verbi Divini', 'Adversus Arium Libri IV', 'De Homoousio Recipiendo', 'In Epistolas B. Pauli', 'Liber ad Justinum Manichaeum', and 'De Verbis Scripturae'. He also wrote some poems, among them three Hymns to the Trinity and 'De Machabaeis'.

Apart from the collected edition in J. P. Migne, PL, viii, 993–1310, which is a compilation from earlier edd. of particular works by J. *Sirmond, S.J., J. *Mabillon, O.S.B., A. *Mai and others, the first complete ed. is that of P. Henry, S.J.–P. Hadot (C.S.E.L., lxxxiii, etc.; 1971 ff.). His treatises on the Trinity also ed. P. Henry, S.J., with Fr. tr. by P. Hadot (S. C., Ixviii-Ixix; 1960), and Ars grammatica ed., with Italian tr., by I. Mariotti (Florence, 1967). Older studies by G. Koffmane (Breslau diss., 1880) and G. Geiger (2 parts, Metten, 1888–9). E. Benz, Marius Victorinus und die Entwicklung der abendländischen Willensmetaphysik (1934). P. Hadot, Marius Victorinus. Recherches sur sa vie et ses œuvres (1971). Id., Porphyre et Victorinus (2 vols. [1968]). A. *Souter, The Earliest Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul (1927), pp. 8–38. P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, iii (1905), pp. 373–422. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 460–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 368 f. C. *Gore in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 1129–38, s.v. 'Victorinus (6)'; P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2887–2954, s.v.

VICTRICIUS, St. (c. 330–c. 407), Bp. of Rouen from c. 380. At the age of 17 he entered the army. Becoming a Christian not long afterwards, he renounced the military profession as incompatible with his new faith and, acc. to St. *Paulinus of Nola, narrowly escaped execution on a charge of desertion. He is next heard of as Bp. of Rouen, where he became a zealous defender of the faith against pagans and heretics, and undertook mission work as far afield as Flanders, Hainault, and Brabant. He visited Rome, and also in his later years Britain to settle some ecclesiastical dispute. He was the recipient from Pope *Innocent I c. 405 of a celebrated decretal ('Liber Regularum') on disciplinary matters. One of his sermons, 'De laude sanctorum', survives. He became the close friend of St. Paulinus of Nola and of St. *Martin of Tours. Feast day, 7 Aug.

The Liber de Laude Sanctorum is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 443–58; crit. ed. by [E. P.] Sauvage–A. Tougard (Paris, 1895). The principal source for his life is the two letters by Paulinus of Nola, Epistolae, xviii (ed. W. Hartel, C.S.E.L., xxxix, 1894, pp. 128–37) and xxxvii (ib., pp. 316–23). The letter from Innocent to Victricius is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 469–81. E. Vacandard, Saint Victrice, évêque de Rouen ('Les Saints', 1903). Further study by J. Mulders, S.J. (Rome diss., Nijmegen, 1956). A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Un Manuscrit oublié de l'opuscule de saint Victrice' in R. Bén., xxxi (1919), pp. 333–42, with reff. E. de Moreau, 'S. Victrice de Rouen, apôtre de la Belgica Secunda' in Revue belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, v (1926), pp. 71–79. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2954–6, s.v. 'Victrice de Rouen'; S. Prete in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xii (Rome, 1969), cols. 1310–15, s.v. 'Vittricio'.

VIDI AQUAM (Lat., 'I beheld water'). In the W. Church, the anthem sung in Eastertide during the aspersing of the congregation at the principal Mass on Sundays, in place of the *Asperges sung during the rest of the year. The words are based on a combination of verses from Ezek. 47.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), p. 479 f.

VIEIRA, ANTÓNIO (1608–97), Portuguese theologian. Of humble origins, Vieira was born in Lisbon, but when he was six his family moved to Bahia in Brazil. Here he was educated by the *Jesuits and entered the Society of Jesus in 1623. From an early age he was drawn towards missionary work, but in 1641 he was sent back to Lisbon. His preaching gained him considerable influence at court and King John IV appointed him preacher of the royal chapel in 1644 and sent him on a number of (not altogether successful) diplomatic missions. On Vieira's advice the King organized a chartered company (incorporated in 1649) for the Brazilian trade, financed by Jewish capital; the capital invested was to be exempted from confiscation by the *Inquisition. The Company was unpopular, but it was able to protect its shipping from the attacks of the Dutch and the Dutch were ejected from North East Brazil in 1654. In the meantime some of the unpopularity of the Company became attached to Vieira and he was saved from dismissal from the Jesuits only at the insistence of the King.

In 1652 Vieira was sent by the Jesuits to refound the missions to the Maranhão and Grão Pará which had lapsed on the death of the last missionaries in 1649. His most notable achievement in this field was the conversion of the Nheengaíbas on the island of Marajó. His persistent attempts to uphold the freedom of the Amerindians against the attempts of the colonists to exploit them created difficulties, especially after the death of John IV in 1656, and in 1661 he was compelled to return to Portugal. After a palace revolution he was arraigned before the Inquisition on account of a work in which he prophesied the resurrection of John IV; he was imprisoned for two years and suffered much humiliation. In 1669 he went to Rome to plead his own cause and on behalf of the Jews converted to Christianity (the 'New Christians' as they were called). In Rome his preaching won him fame, and he was later invited by Queen Christina of Sweden to be her confessor. The Pope imposed a seven-year ban on Inquisitorial trials and autos-da-fé in Portugal (1674) and Vieira returned to Portugal with a brief (1675) exempting him from the jurisdiction of the Portuguese Inquisition. After his request to be allowed to return to the Maranhão had been rejected, in 1681 he sailed for Bahia, where he spent the rest of his life. From 1688 to 1691 he was Visitor-General of the Brazil and Maranhão missions, and he continued to espouse the cause of the Amerindians. He also edited his sermons and worked on his Clavis Prophetarum, an unfinished opus devoted to the consummation of Christ's kingdom on earth.

His Sermões were publ. in 15 vols., Lisbon, 1675–1748; Obras escolhidas, ed. A. Sergio–H. Cidade (12 vols., Lisbon, 1951–4); Cartas, ed. J. L. d'Azevedo (3 vols., Coimbra, 1925–1928). Standard life by id. (2 vols., Lisbon, 1918–20). I. Lins, Aspectos do Padre Antônio Vieira (Rio de Janeiro, 1956; ed. 2, 1962). R. Cantel, Les Sermons de Vieira. Étude du style (1959); id., Prophétisme et messianisme dans l'œuvre d'Antônio Vieira (1960). S. Leite, S.J., História da Companhia de Jesus no Brasil, ix (Rio de Janeiro, 1949), pp. 192–363. In English there is a brief sketch by C. R. Boxer (London, 1957).

VIENNE, Council of (1311–12). The Fifteenth *Oecumenical Council, summoned by *Clement V in 1308 primarily to deal with the question of the *Templars, who were being accused of heresy and immorality by those who coveted their wealth. The Council, which eventually met at Vienne on 16 Oct. 1311, also aimed at providing assistance for the Holy Land and reforming the Church. The majority of the Council at first held that the evidence against the Templars was insufficient. But owing to the transference of the Papacy to *Avignon the Council was under French dominance; and, when Philip IV of France appeared with an army before Vienne in Feb. 1312, the Pope by an administrative ordinance suppressed the Order in the bull 'Vox Clamantis' (22 Mar. 1312), and this was promulgated at the next session of the Council. The King then undertook to go on a Crusade within six years. On the question of *Franciscan poverty the Council decided in favour of the more austere party. It also issued a large number of miscellaneous decrees, relating inter alia to the *Beguines and the *Inquisition, which were later partly incorporated in the '*Clementines' by *John XXII. Another decree sought to further the missionary objects fostered by R. *Lull by providing for studia in oriental languages (Arabic, Chaldee and Hebrew, and prob. also Greek) to be set up in five universities (*Paris, *Oxford, Salamanca, *Bologna and the Roman Court). In the event Philip IV never went on the Crusade, but appropriated to his own use the tithe levied for the purpose, and also managed to obtain much of the property of the Templars.

Hardouin, vii, cols. 1321–62; Mansi, xxv (Venice, 1782), cols. 367–426. F. Ehrle, S.J., 'Zur Vorgeschichte des Concils von Vienne' in Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, ii (1886), pp. 353–416 and 672, and iii (1887), pp. 1–195. Id., 'Ein Bruchstück der Acten des Concils von Vienne', ib., iv (1888), pp. 361–470. Hefele–Leclercq, vi (pt. 2; 1915), pp. 643–719, with bibl. to date. E. Müller, Das Konzil von Vienne, 1311–1312. Seine Quellen und seine Geschichte (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, xii; 1934), with further refs. J. Lecler, S.J., Vienne (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, viii; 1964). J. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2973–9, s.v. See also works cited under Templars.

VIGIL. Nocturnal services of prayer, frequently ending with the Eucharistic celebration, were common in the first Christian cents. and are attested by *Pliny in his letter to Trajan (c. 111–13) and described in the 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae'. Without parallel in the public worship of the Synagogue, the reason for their introduction was possibly the widespread belief that the Second Coming would take place at midnight. Vigils were kept esp. before *Easter, when, acc. to *Tertullian, they lasted throughout the night (Ad uxor., ii. 4), and *Whitsun, as well as before Sundays and the feasts of the martyrs, in which cases they normally comprised only the beginning (Vespers) and the end of the night. From the latter of these services, which began at the first cock-crow, the offices of *Mattins and *Lauds developed. From the 4th and 5th cents., on account of frequent abuses, the Vigils of the people became restricted to the early hours, i.e. before nightfall. From the 8th cent. the custom of anticipating the Vigils became prevalent. At first confined to the afternoon of the preceding day, fast, office, and Mass of the Vigil were gradually transferred to the morning (c. 14th cent.), so that the whole day became a 'profestum'. In the C of E there are 16 feasts which in the BCP are provided with a Vigil, the list closely following that of the *Sarum Rite. Acc. to modern RC practice Vigils have never been observed for feasts introduced later than the 12th cent., with the one exception of the Feast of the *Immaculate Conception, to which *Leo XIII assigned a Vigil in 1879. By the Roman Calendar of 1969 all Vigils except that of Easter were abolished, all that remained being a special Evening Mass for the days before Christmas and Whitsun and the Feasts of the Nativity of St. *John the Baptist, St. *Peter and St. *Paul, and the *Assumption of the BVM.

A. Gastoué, Les Vigiles nocturnes (Science et Religion, ccxcv; 1908). W. Caspari, 'Untersuchungen zum Kirchengang im Altertum, II' in Z.K.G., xxix (1908), pp. 125–53, esp. pp. 130–53. C. Callewaert, 'De Vigiliarum Origine' in Collationes Brugenses, xxiii (1923), pp. 425–66, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), No. xxxi, pp. 329–33. C. Marcora, La vigilia nella liturgia. Ricerche sulle origini e sui primi sviluppi (Sec. I–VI) (Archivio Ambrosiano, vi; 1954). A. *Baumstark–O. Heiming, [O.S.B.,] Nocturna Laus. Typen frühchristlicher Vigilienfeier und ihr Fortleben vor allem im römischen und monastischen Ritus (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxxii; 1957). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xv (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 3108–13, s.v. 'Vigiles'; P. C. Langeveld, O.S.B., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2815–24, s.v. 'Vigilie', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Mattins.

VIGILANTIUS (fl. c. 400), a presbyter of Aquitaine. Most of our knowledge of him comes from his bitter opponent, St. *Jerome, who nicknamed him 'Dormitianus' (i.e. 'the dormant', instead of 'the vigilant'). He was a native of Calagurris in Aquitania. Having paid Jerome a visit at *Bethlehem which ended in a quarrel, Vigilantius on his return to the W. attacked Jerome as an *Origenist. Jerome replied with his 'Contra Vigilantium' (406), accusing his adversary of rejecting such practices as the cult of the saints and martyrs, the observance of vigils, and celibacy and monasticism. As Jerome's writings against him are full of invective and his opponent's replies have not survived, the justice of these allegations cannot be assessed. It is possible that Vigilantius did not go further than attack certain excesses which threatened the practice of asceticism at that period.

Jerome also attacked him in Epp. 61 (ad Vigilantium) and 109 (ad Riparium). A. Réville, Vigilance de Calagurris. Un chapitre de l'histoire de l'ascétisme monastique (Paris, 1902). G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2992–4, s.v.

VIGILIUS (d. 555), Pope from 537. Of a noble Roman family, he was a deacon in 531, when Boniface II nominated him his successor. The nomination, however, was nullified in 532 as uncanonical and in 535–6 Vigilius became *apocrisiarius at the court of *Constantinople. Here, induced, it is said, by the Empress *Theodora, he promised his help to restore the deposed *Monophysite patriarch, Anthimus, and to condemn the Council of *Chalcedon. In 537 the legitimate Pope Silverius was deposed with the help of the Byzantine commander Belisarius, and Vigilius consecrated in his place. The new Pope, however, neither reinstalled Anthimus nor did he favour Monophysitism. The letter addressed by him to the deposed Monophysite patriarchs Anthimus, Severus, and Theodosius is probably a forgery, and in letters to *Justinian and *Menas of Constantinople he decisively upheld the doctrine of Chalcedon. A letter which he addressed to Profuturus, Bp. of Braga, in 538 provides important evidence for the early history of the *canon of the Roman Mass (q.v.). The Emperor's religious policy soon involved him in the *Three Chapters Controversy (q.v.) raised by Justinian's edict of 543–4, which condemned writings of *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret, and *Ibas of Edessa. Vigilius, in accordance with the opinion of the W., refused at first to assent to the condemnation, in which he saw a repudiation of Chalcedon. But, brought to Constantinople by order of Justinian, he repudiated the Three Chapters after considerable resistance and waverings in his 'Iudicatum' of 548, though not without reservations in favour of the Council of Chalcedon. His capitulation met with violent opposition in the W. The Pope was even excommunicated at a synod at Carthage, presided over by its bishop, Reparatus, and in consequence he retracted the 'Iudicatum'. After his protest against another Imperial edict in 551 he fled to Chalcedon, and in 553 refused to preside at the Council of *Constantinople. He again declined to condemn the Three Chapters in the 'Constitutum', in the drawing-up of which his deacon, the future Pope Pelagius I, had a large share. The Council, however, finally condemned the Three Chapters, leaving intact the authority of Chalcedon. Pressed by the Emperor, who would not allow him to return to Rome unless he accepted the decrees of Constantinople, Vigilius consented to them after six months' consideration and departed for Italy in 555, dying before he reached Rome.

The case of Pope Vigilius was adduced at the *Vatican Council by the opponents of Papal *Infallibility. It is generally held by RC theologians that Infallibility was not involved and that the condemnation of the Three Chapters was in itself justified on account of their *Nestorian tendencies, though inopportune under the circumstances.

Correspondence and decrees in J. P. Migne, P.L., lxix, 12–328. E. *Schwartz, I. Vigiliusbriefe. II. Zur Kirchenpolitik Justinians (Sb. (Bayr.), 1940, Heft 2), pp. 1–32. Jaffé, i, pp. 117–24. L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 296–302. F. Savio, S.J., 'Il Papa Vigilio (537–555)' in Civiltà cattolica, 18a Ser., xii (1903), pp. 5–26, 551–64 and 660–78. A. Chavasse, 'Messes du Pape Vigile (537–555) dans le sacramentaire léonien' in E.L., lxiv (1950), pp. 161–213; lxvi (1952), pp. 145–215. L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIe siècle (1925), pp. 151–218. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, ii (1933), pp. 229–286; Fliche–Martin, iv (1937), pp. 457–79. G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 633–40, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2994–3005, s.v., with further bibl.; F. X. Murphy in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 664–7, s.v. See also bibl. to Three Chapters.

VIGILIUS (fl. c. 500), Bp. of Thapsus. Banished from Africa in 484 by the Arian king, Huneric, he fled to Constantinople. His chief work, 'Against Eutyches', attacks *Monophysitism and defends the *Tome of St. *Leo and the *Chalcedonian Definition. Of several anti-Arian works, only the 'Dialogue against Arians, Sabellians, and Photinians' is extant. Other writings, notably a 'De Trinitate', have been wrongly attributed to him, while P. *Quesnel held that he was the author of the *Athanasian Creed.

Works ed. P. F. Chifflet, S.J. (Dijon, 1664), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxii, 93–544. G. Ficker, Studien zu Vigilius von Thapsus (1897). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 553–7. G. Ficker in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 640–4, s.v.; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3005–8.

VILATTE, JOSEPH RENÉ (1854–1929), '*episcopus vagans'. A Frenchman by birth, he joined the RC Church on several separate occasions, to leave it each time for a different Protestant denomination. In 1892, on the authority of an apparently forged bull, he was consecrated at Colombo in Ceylon by Abp. Alvarez, a schismatic from the Church of Antioch, as *Old Catholic bishop in America, and took the name of 'Mar Timotheos'. He himself consecrated a large number of bishops who have been recognized by no other Christian body. In 1898 he ordained 'Father *Ignatius' to the priesthood at Llanthony.

J. Parisot, O.S.B., Monseigneur Vilatte, fondateur de l'Église Vieille-Catholique aux États-Unis d'Amérique (Tours, 1899). H. R. T. Brandreth, O.G.S., Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (ed. 2, 1961), pp. 47–69, with bibl. pp. 126–9.

VILMAR, AUGUST FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN (1800–60), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Solz in Kurhessen, he held a number of pastoral and administrative appointments until in 1855 he was appointed professor of theology at Marburg. He was a vigorous opponent of all forms of rationalism, upholding dogmatic and confessional Lutheranism by opposing to the prevalent 'theology of rhetoric' (as he termed it) a 'theology of facts' (Theologie der Tatsachen). He defended the retention of the ancient creeds in worship. In addition to a widely read Geschichte der deutschen Nationalliteratur (1845; ed. 26, 1905), he wrote many theological works, largely dealing with the contemporary situation in Church politics. He also compiled a hymn-book (Kleines evangelisches Gesangbuch, 1838) embodying improved ideals in hymnology.

Selected Essays ed. K. Ramge, Munich [1939]. Studies by J. H. Leimbach (Hannover, 1875) and W. Hopf (2 vols., Marburg, 1912–13). P. Dietz, Dr. August Friedrich Christian Vilmar als Hymnolog (ib., 1899). J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 649–61, s.v.; K. Scholder in R.G.G. (ed. 2), vi (1962), cols. 1401–3, s.v.

VINCENT, St. (4th cent.), the proto-martyr of Spain. Acc. to a tradition of the late 4th cent. onwards, referred to by St. *Augustine and by *Prudentius, St. Vincent was educated and ordained deacon by Valerius, Bp. of Saragossa, and suffered in the *Diocletianic persecution. The details surrounding his death were considerably developed in later times. Feast day, 22 Jan.

Prudentius, Peristephanon, v; St. Augustine, Sermones, 274–7; Sermo in Natali S. Vincentii Martyris attributed to *Leo I (Sermo XII in J. P. Migne, PL, liv, 501–6). A 'Passio Sancti Vincentii Levitae', which Ruinart suggested was used by St. Augustine, is printed in T. *Ruinart, O.S.B., Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 387–404; various 'Acta S. Vincentii Martyris' in Anal. Boll., i (1882), pp. 259–78, incl. the 'Passio Brevior', more prob. used by St. Augustine, pp. 260–2. AA.SS., Jan. II (1647), pp. 397–414. S. Hurault, Saint Vincent, martyr, patron de vignerons et son culte dans le diocèse de Châlons (Châlons-sur-Marne, 1910). P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, viii (S.T., lxv; 1935), pp. 117–25. Marquise de Maillé, Vincent d'Agen et saint Vincent de Saragosse. Étude de la 'Passio S. Vincentii Martyris' (Melun, 1949). A. de Waal, 'Zum Kult des hl. Vinzenz von Saragossa' in R.Q., xxi (1907), pp. 135–8. T. Moral in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xii (Rome, 1969), cols. 1149–55, s.v. 'Vincenzo di Saragozza', with further bibl.

VINCENT OF BEAUVAIS (c. 1190–1264), medieval encyclopaedist. He probably entered the *Dominican Order at Paris c. 1220 and moved to Beauvais c. 1229. Later he was brought into close relations with King *Louis IX and lived, at least for a time, at the monastery of Royaumont, nr. Paris. His encyclopaedia, the 'Speculum Maius', composed between 1247 and 1259, consisted of three parts—a 'Speculum Naturale', a 'Speculum Doctrinale', and a 'Speculum Historiale'—and set out to be a compendium of the whole range of knowledge accessible to his time, in 80 books and 9,885 chapters. He is estimated to have drawn upon some 450 authors and 2,000 writings. A supposed fourth part of the 'Speculum', a 'Speculum Morale', is by a later writer. His other writings include a treatise (compiled at the behest of Queen Margaret), 'De eruditione seu modo instruendorum filiorum regalium'.

His Speculum Historiale was publd. at Strassburg by J. Mentelin, 4 vols., 1473; Mentelin's son-in-law, A. Rusch, also publd. at Strassburg the Speculum Historiale, 3 vols., c. 1473, and the Speculum Doctrinale and the Speculum Naturale separately not later than 1478; the Speculum Morale was publd. by J. Mentelin, ib., 1476. The Speculum Maius ed. 4 vols. bound in 3, Venice, 1591. The latest, and least satisfactory, ed. is that by the Benedictines of *Douai, 4 vols., Douai, 1624. Collected Opuscula publd. at Basle, 1481. Crit. ed. of the De Eruditione by A. Steiner (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication No. 32; Cambridge, Mass., 1938). Parts of Vincent's works are still unpubld. B. L. Ullman, 'A Project for a New Edition of Vincent of Beauvais' in Speculum, viii (1933), pp. 312–26, with discussion of existing edd. J. B. Bourgeat, Études sur Vincent de Beauvais (Paris thesis, 1856). L. Lieser, Vincenz von Beauvais als Kompilator und Philosoph. Eine Untersuchung s. Seelenlehre im Speculum Maius (1928). A. L. Gabriel, The Educational Ideas of Vincent of Beauvais (Texts and Studies in the History of Mediaeval Education, iv; Notre Dame, Ind., 1956; revised German tr., Frankfurt, 1967). Quétif-Échard, i, pp. 212–40. Überweg, ii, p. 380, with bibl. p. 733. H. Peltier in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3026–33, s.v.

VINCENT FERRER, St. (c. 1350–1419), *Dominican mission preacher. In 1367 he entered the Dominican house at Valencia, his native town. Through his close acquaintance with Cardinal Pedro de Luna (afterwards *Benedict XIII) he became for a time a warm enthusiast for the *Avignonese Papacy, and later was Benedict XIII's confessor at Avignon. From 1399 to 1409 he undertook a highly effective series of missionary travels, visiting such centres as Marseilles, Geneva, Lausanne, and Freiburg, and collecting around him large crowds of followers, many of whom were stirred to flagellation and other severe forms of penance. He is credited with having performed a large number of miracles. In his later years he took a prominent part in the movement for ending the Papal schism. He died at Vannes in Brittany. He was canonized in 1455. Feast day, 5 Apr.

Works ed. P. H. D. Fages, O.P. (2 vols., Paris, 1909). Process of canonization, also ed. id., ib., 1904; id., Notes et documents de l'histoire de saint Vincent Ferrier (1905). Id., Histoire de saint Vincent Ferrier (2 vols., 1894). M. M. Gorce, O.P., Saint Vincent Ferrier, 1350–1419 (Paris thesis, 1923); id., Les Bases de l'étude historique de saint Vincent Ferrier (Thèse Complémentaire, Paris, 1923). S. Brettle, San Vicente Ferrer und sein literarischer Nachlass (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, x; 1924). H. Finke, 'Die Quaresma-Predigten des heiligen Vicente Ferrer, 1413' in Festschrift Gustav Schnürer zum 70. Geburtstag gewidmet (1930), pp. 24–38. H. *Ghéon, Saint Vincent Ferrier (1940; Eng. tr., 1939). J. M. de Garganta, O. P.–V. Forcada, O.P., Biografía y escritos de San Vicente Ferrer (Madrid, 1956). M. M. Gorce, O.P., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3033–45, s.v. 'Vincent Ferrier (Saint)'.

VINCENT OF LÉRINS, St. (d. before 450), the author of the 'Commonitorium'. Little is known of his life. He became a monk on the island of *Lérins, where as a *Semi-Pelagian he opposed *Augustinianism, and was probably the object of *Prosper of Aquitaine's 'Responsiones ad capitula objectionum Vincentianarum' (the 'objectiones' themselves have not been preserved). Vincent's 'Commonitorium', which was written under the pseudonym 'Peregrinus' to provide a guide in the determination of the true Catholic faith, embodies the famous *Vincentian Canon (q.v.). Despite his emphasis on tradition he maintained that the final ground of Christian truth was Holy Scripture, and that the authority of the Church was to be invoked only to guarantee its right interpretation. He did not, however, preclude a development in matters of doctrine, maintaining that in the process of history the truth of Scripture often became more fully explicated. Feast day, 24 May.

Among the innumerable edd. of the 'Commonitorium' the more recent include those of A. *Jülicher (Freiburg i.Br., 1895), G. Rauschen (Florilegium Patristicum, v; Bonn, 1906) and R. S. Moxon (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1915). Of the older texts, the best was the 17th cent. ed. by E. *Baluze (Paris, 1663, also 1669, 1684; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, l, 637–86). Eng. trr. by C. A. Heurtley (N.P.N.C.F., ser. 2, xi, 1894, pp. 123–59), T. H. Bindley ('Early Church Classics', 1914) and others. Excerpta Vincentii Lirinensis según el Códice de Ripoll, No. 151, ed., with introd., by J. Madoz, S.J. (Estudios Onienses, ser. 1, vol. i; Madrid, 1940). Id., El concepto de la tradición en S. Vicente de Lerins (Analecta Gregoriana, v; Rome, 1933). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 579–82; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 454 f., both with bibl. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3045–55, s.v.; G. Madoz, S.J., in E.C., xii (1954), col. 1440 f., s.v. 'Vicenzo di Lérins'; all with bibl.

VINCENT DE PAUL, St. (c. 1580–1660), founder of the *Lazarist Fathers and the 'Sisters of Charity'. Born of a peasant family at Ranquine in SW. France, he studied theology at Toulouse and was ordained priest in 1600. Captured by pirates in 1605, he was for two years a slave in Tunisia, but in 1607 escaped to *Avignon. In 1609 he went to Paris and here, coming under the influence of P. de *Bérulle, resolved to devote his life entirely to works of charity. From 1613 to 1625 he was tutor in the household of Count de Gondi, General of the galleys, where he did much to relieve the lot of the prisoners. During this time he founded Confraternities of charity for both men and women, and in 1625 the Congregation of the Mission, usually called 'Lazarists' (or 'Vincentians'), for the giving of missions esp. among country people and for the training of the clergy. Eight years later he carried out a project cherished already by St. *Francis de Sales, by founding, together with St. Louise de Marillac, the 'Sisters of Charity', the first congregation of women without enclosure entirely devoted to the care of the sick and the poor. In 1643 the Queen Regent, Anne of Austria, appointed him a member of Louis XIV's Council of Conscience during the King's minority, and during the Wars of the Fronde he used his influence to become the organizer of far-reaching relief work among the suffering populations. St. Vincent de Paul was also one of the most uncompromising opponents of *Jansenism and took an active part in furthering its condemnation. He was canonized in 1737. Feast day, 27 Sept. (formerly, 19 July). In 1833 the 'Society of St. Vincent de Paul', a lay association for personal service of the poor, was founded by A. F. *Ozanam and others.

P. Coste, C.M. (ed.), Saint Vincent de Paul, correspondance, entretiens, documents (14 vols., 1920–5); Eng. trr. of selected letters and addresses as St. Vincent de Paul and Mental Prayer (1925), of further letters (1937), and of the Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul to the Sisters of Charity (4 vols., 1938–40), all by J. Leonard, C.M. L. Abelly, La Vie du vénérable serviteur de Dieu, Vincent de Paul (1664). P. Collet, La Vie de saint Vincent de Paul (2 vols., 1748). U. Maynard, Saint Vincent de Paul. Sa vie, son temps, ses œuvres, son influence (4 vols., 1860); L. E. Bougaud, Histoire de saint Vincent de Paul (2 vols., 1889; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1899). Ella K. Sanders, Vincent de Paul. Priest and Philanthropist (1913). P. Coste, C.M., Le Grand Saint du grand siècle, Monsieur Vincent (3 vols., 1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1934–5). Other studies by A. Loth (Paris, 1880), É. de Broglie ('Les Saints', 1897), H. Déplanque (Paris, 1936); J. Calvet (Paris, 1948; Eng. tr., 1952), with bibl., Mildred V. Woodgate (Dublin, 1958), L. Cognet and L. von Matt (Bruges, 1959; Eng. tr., 1960), and Mary Purcell (London, 1963). Bremond, iii (1921), pp. 222–57, with reff.; Eng. tr., iii (1936), pp. 193–222; Pourrat, iii (1925), pp. 575–86; Eng. tr., iii (1927), pp. 387–94.

VINCENT, WILLIAM (1739–1815), Dean of *Westminster. He was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, and, after holding several ecclesiastical appointments, became headmaster of Westminster in 1788. He took a special interest in the religious education of the pupils, and in 1801 published his Defence of Public Education in reply to charges brought against headmasters of neglecting this duty. In 1802 he was made Dean of Westminster, among his chief activities being the restoration of Henry VII's Chapel in Westminster Abbey (1807–21). He is known esp. for his works on comparative geography and ancient navigation, including his commentary on Arrian's Voyage of Nearchus (1797) and The Periplus of the Erythraean Sea (2 parts, 1800 and 1805).

Collection of his Sermons on Faith, Doctrines and Public Duties (London, 1817), with life by R. Nares (previously publd. in substance in The Classical Journal, xiii (1816), pp. 221–6, and xiv (1816), pp. 190–215) prefixed to the Sermons, pp. xi–lxxv; further vol. of Sermons ed. W. Thornton (London, 1836). G. Le G. Norgate in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 363–5.

VINCENTIAN CANON, The. The threefold test of Catholicity laid down by St. *Vincent of Lérins in his 'Commonitorium' (II. 3), viz. quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est ('what has been believed everywhere, always, and by all'). By this triple test of oecumenicity, antiquity, and consent, the Church is to differentiate between true and false traditions. The order of the tests is to be noted, as the canon was very frequently misquoted with 'antiquity' (quod semper) first by English writers in the 19th century.

VINCI, LEONARDO DA. See Leonardo da Vinci.

VINCIBLE IGNORANCE. In moral theology, the converse of *invincible ignorance (q.v.).

VINEAM DOMINI SABAOTH. The Constitution issued by *Clement XI on 16 July 1705 against the French *Jansenists. Besides confirming the three earlier Papal bulls—'*Cum Occasione' (1653), 'Ad Sanctam' (1656), and 'Regiminis Apostolici' (1664)—it maintained that the Pope could determine questions of historic fact (the case in point being whether or not certain propositions, condemned by the Pope, were in fact contained in Jansen's Augustinus) as well as matters of doctrine, and that when such a determination had been made by the Pope, it must be accepted 'by the heart' of the believer, and not merely received 'with a respectful silence'. As its issue was believed to infringe the liberties of the French clergy, Louis XIV accompanied its promulgation in France with a Declaration maintaining the prerogatives of the bishops.

The orig. text, which incorporates the earlier bulls mentioned above, is pr. in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, xxi (Turin, 1871), pp. 233–6; part repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 489 (No. 2390). M. Ott in C.E., xv (1912), p. 445 f., s.v.; B. Matteucci in E.C., xii (1954), col. 1446 f., s.v. See also works cited under Gallicanism and Jansenism.

VINEGAR BIBLE. A popular name for the fine folio edition of the Bible, printed at Oxford in 1716–17 by John Baskett (d. 1742), the King's Printer. The headline of Lk. 20 reads 'The Parable of the Vinegar' instead of 'The Parable of the Vineyard'.

Darlow–Moule, i (ed. A. S. Herbert, 1968), p. 244.

VINES, RICHARD (1600?–56), *Puritan divine. Educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he became a good Greek scholar, he was a schoolmaster at Hinckley (c. 1624–42) and non-resident rector of Weddington (1628–42) and Caldecote, Warwickshire (1630–42). On 30 Nov. 1642 he preached on the fast day before the House of Commons and in the next few years took a leading part in the reform of Church government and liturgy. In 1643 he was nominated a member of the *Westminster Assembly, where he became a member of the committee which drafted the Confession; he was also intruded as rector of St. Clement Danes. In 1644 he became Master of Pembroke College, Cambridge, whence Benjamin Laney had been ejected. In the same year he was put on the Parliamentary Committee of Accommodation, and, though episcopally ordained, defended *Presbyterian ordinations. He was opposed, however, to lay elders as Church governors. In 1645 he was present at negotiations between King and Parliament at Uxbridge for peace and also exchanged his London rectory for that of Watton, Herts. In 1648 he took part in the written discussion on episcopacy with *Charles I in the Isle of Wight; but though he and the King held each other in mutual esteem and he himself had become opposed to the growing power of the *Independents, he felt too deeply committed to Presbyterianism to moderate his views. In 1649 he opposed the abolition of the kingly office and the House of Peers, and being ejected from Pembroke College and Watton Rectory he became minister of St. Lawrence Jewry. Several of his sermons were published, mostly posthumously, but they scarcely represent his great learning and theological powers.

XII Sermons Preached upon Several Public Occasions: By . . . Mr. Richard Vines (1658), To which is adjoined the Sermon preached at his funeral by Mr. Thomas Jacomb (originally publd. 1656; sep. pagination). S. Clarke, The Lives of Sundry Eminent Persons in this Later Age (1683), pp. 48–56. B. Brook, The Lives of the Puritans, iii (1813), pp. 230–5. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 369–71, s.v.

VINET, ALEXANDRE RUDOLF (1797–1847), Swiss Reformed theologian. A native of Ouchy, nr. Lausanne, from 1817 he taught French language and literature at Basle, where he came under the influence of W. M. L. *De Wette, and was ordained minister in 1819. He became professor of practical theology in 1837 at Lausanne, where he remained till 1847, when he attached himself to the newly constituted Free Church in Canton Vaud. He was a strenuous defender of liberty of worship and the separation of Church and state and advocated these principles in his Mémoire sur les libertés des cultes (1826), Essai sur la manifestation des convictions religieuses (1842), and Du socialisme considéré dans son principe (1846). His conception of Christianity was thoroughly individualistic, the seat of religion being the conscience and dogma important only in so far as it issued in moral action. Vinet gave forceful expression to these views in his sermons, collected in Discours sur quelques sujets religieux (1831 and 1841), which have had a lasting influence on Swiss and French Protestants, owing to their combination of classic form with modern scholarship and warmth of feeling. Shortly after his death appeared his brilliant *Études sur Blaise Pascal (1848), with whom Vinet had certain affinities in his emphasis on the heart as the chief organ of religion and in his use of psychology in apologetics. Other formative influences on his theology were I. *Kant and T. *Erskine. He has sometimes been designated the 'Swiss Schleiermacher'.

Œuvres publ. under the auspices of the Société d'Édition Vinet, founded 23 April 1908, with introd. by various authors (Lausanne and Paris, 1910 ff.). Selections ed. P. Bridel, La Pensée de Vinet (Lausanne, 1944), with refft. E. Rambert, Alexandre Vinet. Histoire de sa vie et ses ouvrages (1875). Laura M. Lane, The Life and Writings of Alexander Vinet (1890). L. Molines, Études sur Alexandre Vinet. Critique littéraire (1890). P. T. Fuhrmann, Extraordinary Christianity.

The Life and Thought of Alexander Vinet (Philadelphia, 1964). A. Ruegg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 680–92, s.v., with further bibl.

VIO, THOMAS DE. See Cajetan, Thomas de Vio.

VIRET, PIERRE (1511–71), early Protestant Reformer. A native of Orbe in Switzerland, he studied theology at Paris. In 1531 he came under the influence of the Reformer G. *Farel, who ordained him a preacher, and in 1533 Viret became his assistant at Geneva. From 1536 onwards he worked in the interests of Protestantism, mainly in Lausanne. In 1559 he was appointed a preacher in Geneva but two years afterwards went to France, where at Nîmes, Lyons, Orange, and elsewhere he took an active and leading part in the affairs of the French Reformed Church. The chief of his writings was his Instruction chrestienne en la doctrine de la Loy et l'Évangile (3 vols., Geneva, 1564), a popularized version of Calvinistic doctrine in dialogue form.

His letters were publ. in A. L. Herminjard (ed.), Correspondance des réformateurs (9 vols., 1866–97), passim. J. Barnaud (ed.), Quelques Lettres inédites de Pierre Viret (1911). Pierre Viret d'après lui-même. Pages extraites des œuvres du réformateur à l'occasion du 4e centenaire de sa naissance (Lausanne, 1912). Quatre Sermons français sur Esaïe 65 (mars 1559), ed. H. Meylan (Publications de la Faculté de Théologie, Université de Lausanne, iii; 1961). J. Barnaud, Pierre Viret. Sa vie et son œuvre (1911). P. Godet, Pierre Viret (Lausanne, 1892). H. Vuilleumier, Notre Pierre Viret (ib., 1911). R. D. Linder, The Political Ideas of Pierre Viret (Geneva, 1964). C. Schmidt–C. Schetzler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 693–5, s.v.

VIRGER. See Verger.

VIRGIL (70–19 B.C.), Roman poet. Publius Vergilius Maro, the son of a rich citizen of Mantua, was educated at Cremona, Milan and Rome, with a view to a political career. He soon abandoned rhetoric and politics to study philosophy under the Greek *Epicurean Siron, near Naples (?49–45 B.C.). He intended, after completing the Aeneid, to devote himself to philosophy. He was the author of ten pastorals, Bucolica (?45–37 B.C.), known as the Eclogues (i.e. occasional poems); the Georgics (36–31 B.C.), on Italy and its agricultural wealth, the fourth book of which deals with the ordered civil life of the beehive and how it may be restored to life by a magical process of sacrifice, and culminates in the story of Orpheus's descent into the Underworld to recover his wife Eurydice; and the (unfinished) Aeneid (26–19 B.C.), an epic in 12 books on the foundation of Rome by the exiled Trojan. This work is a fusion of Homer's two poems, Iliad and Odyssey, into a prophetic sequel, looking forward to the inauguration of a golden age by Aeneas's descendant, the Emp. Augustus, under the providential guidance of Jupiter. It was at first criticized as plagiaristic, but by the time of the Emp. Tiberius's death (A.D. 37) the Aeneid was recognized as the epic of Rome and had become the staple of literary education in the Roman West.

Virgil's language and style were widely influential in the next 1500 years and frequently imitated, with Christians writing Virgilian centos to tell Biblical stories. The Emp. *Constantine tried to appropriate the Fourth ('Messianic') Eclogue as a prophecy of Christ, born of a virgin (l. 6: iam redit et virgo), and *Lactantius went some way towards accepting such a view (Inst., I. xix. 5; VII. xxiv. 1). This, and the fact that Virgil was nicknamed Parthenias (Gk. παρθένος, 'virgin') and lived at Parthenope (Naples), led to the alteration of the spelling of his name. St. *Jerome protested against the facile Christianization of Virgil, and St. *Augustine made him his chief target in his De Civitate Dei. During the last period of serious pagan opposition at Rome, and in the struggle over the 'Altar of Victory' in the Senate House (A.D. 384), the pagans came to regard Virgil as a philosophical authority and a source of oracles (Sortes Vergilianae). But in the subsequent period whatever in Virgil resisted Christianization was explained by *allegory (e.g. by *Fulgentius, *John of Salisbury, and *Dante).

Later Christian writers accorded Virgil a unique position among pagan authors, partly because of their naïve acceptance of the *Sibylline Oracles and of the Sibylline Fourth Eclogue, but also because of the poet's genuine qualities. The pietas of Aeneas (his loyal devotion to his gods, to his father, wife and son, and to his city and its 'remnant', his companions), his responsibility and warmth of emotion, his consideration for Dido (far beyond that of any similar heroes in pagan myth), his goodness and wisdom in spite of lapses and errors, and his eventual faith in Providence, evince a moral standard with appeal to Christians. Aeneas's creator could be taken as anima naturaliter Christiana, separated only by a few years from the faith for which he was ready. In the Divine Comedy* Dante makes Virgil his guide through Hell and Purgatory, but excludes him from salvation. Virgil sinks back to Limbo, but only after hearing that he has mediated the light of faith to Statius, and after seeing Beatrice's cortège in the Earthly Paradise.

The numerous editions of Virgil's works include those by O. Ribbeck (4 vols., Leipzig, 1859–68; revised, Teub., 3 vols., 1894–5; and editio minor by W. Janell, ib., 1920), R. Sabbadini (2 vols., Rome, 1930), and R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1969). Commentaries by J. Conington–H. Nettleship (3 vols., London, 1858–71; ed. 4, vols. i–ii, 1881–84; ed. 5 revised by E. Haverfield, vol. i only, 1898); also on the Aeneid: Book i by R. G. Austin (Oxford, 1971), Book ii by id. (ib., 1964), Book iii by R. D. Williams (ib., 1962), Book iv by R. G. Austin (ib., 1955), Book v by R. D. Williams (ib., 1960), and Book vi by E. Norden (Leipzig, 1903; ed. 4, Stuttgart, 1957) and H. E. Butler (Oxford, 1920). General studies include W. Y. Sellar, Virgil (Oxford, 1877); T. R. Glover, Studies in Virgil (1904); T. Frank, Vergil. A Biography (1922); W. F. J. Knight, Roman Vergil (1944); and D. R. Dudley (ed.), Virgil (Studies in Latin Literature and its Influence, 1969). R. Heinze, Virgils epische Technik (Leipzig, 1903); G. N. Knauer, Die Aeneis und Homer. Studien zur poetischen Technik Vergils (Hypomnemata, vii [1964]). Studies more specifically concerned with his religious significance include J. B. Mayor–W. W. Fowler–R. S. Conway, Virgil's Messianic Eclogue. Its Meaning, Occasion, and Sources (1907); T. F. Royds, Virgil and Isaiah. A Study of the Pollio with translations, notes, and appendices (1918); C. Bailey, Religion in Virgil (1935). K. H. Schelkle, Virgil in der Deutung Augustins (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, xxxii; 1939); H. J. Rose, The Eclogues of Vergil (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1942), pp. 162–217. D. Comparetti, Virgilio nel medio evo (2 vols., Leghorn, 1872; Eng. tr., 1895); V. Zabughin, Vergilio nel Rinascimento italiano da Dante a Torquato Tasso (2 vols., Bologna [1921–3]); J. W. Spargo, Virgil the Necromancer (Harvard Studies in Comparative Literature, x; Cambridge, Mass., 1934). M. N. Wetmore, Index Verborum Vergilianus (New Haven, Conn.–London, 1911); J. F. Mountford–J. T. Schultz, Index rerum et nominum in Scholiis Servii et Aelii Donati tractatorum (Ithaca, 1930). K. Büchner in P.W., Zweite Reihe, viii (pt. 1; 1955), cols. 1021–64, s.v.

VIRGILIUS OF SALZBURG, St. (c. 700–84), 'Apostle of Carinthia'. An Irishman—the Gaelic form of his name was 'Fergal'—he was one of the most learned men of his age, esp. in mathematical matters. The facts of his early life are uncertain; but acc. to one tradition he was at first a monk of Aghaboe, where he later became abbot. Having made his way to the Continent in 743, for several years he governed the diocese of Salzburg without becoming bishop. St. *Boniface, who disapproved of this ecclesiastical arrangement no less than of some of Virgilius's scientific doctrines, in 748 accused him to Pope *Zacharias for heretical views about the spherical shape of the earth and the existence of the antipodes. Virgilius was, however, eventually consecrated to the see of Salzburg in either 755 or 767 (the sources are not clear). In 772 he took advantage of the fact that the inhabitants of Carinthia were seeking protection from the Avars to secure conversion of the Alpine Slavs, and in 774 he dedicated the first cathedral at Salzburg. Under the pseudonym Aethicus Ister he wrote a fictitious cosmography, which claimed the authority of St. *Jerome. He has been held in continuous repute in his diocese and was canonized by *Gregory IX in 1233. Feast day, 27 Nov.

The 'Gesta Sancti Hrodberti Confessoris' attributed to Virgilius, ed. by F. M. Mayer in Archiv für Oesterreichische Geschichte, lxiii (1882), pp. 606–8. A 12th cent. life ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, xi (1854), pp. 86–95; of greater historical importance is the epitaph by *Alcuin, ib., Poetae, i (1881), p. 340. L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Les Saints irlandais hors d'Irlande (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, xvi; 1932), ch. xi, pp. 170–2. F. S. Betton, S.J., St. Boniface and St. Virgil. A Study from the Original Sources of Two Supposed Conflicts (Benedictine Historical Monographs, ii; Washington, 1927). H. Krabbo, 'Bischof Virgil von Salzburg und seine kosmologischen Ideen' in Mittheilungen des Instituts für Oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung, xxiv (1903), pp. 1–28; H. Löwe, 'Ein literarischer Widersacher des Bonifatius. Virgil von Salzburg und die Kosmographie des Aethicus Ister' in Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur in Mainz. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, 1951, pp. 899–988 (Nr. 11). É. Amann in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3093–7, s.v.

VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST, The. The belief that Jesus Christ had no human father, but was conceived by the Blessed Virgin Mary by the power of the Holy Spirit, is clearly stated in the two narratives of Christ's Infancy recorded in the Gospels (Mt. 1 f. and Lk. 1 f.), and has been a consistent tenet of orthodox Christian theology. It is also implied in the *Apostles' Creed. It has generally been regarded by Christian theologians as altogether congruous with the Catholic doctrine of the *Incarnation, with its stress on the uniqueness of Christ.

In early times the fact was questioned only by a few heretical sects (*Psilanthropists, *Adoptionists). Within the last hundred years, however, it has been challenged by a number of liberal theologians on such grounds as: (1) a general suspicion of everything miraculous and in particular the belief that the LXX of Is. 7. 14 (παρθένος, 'virgin'), as an inexact rendering of the Heb., gave rise to, or at least promoted, the legend; (2) the absence of reference to the Virgin Birth in other parts of the NT, notably the Christological teaching of the Epp. and the Fourth Gospel; and (3) the contention that it would have been more congruous with the full Humanity of Christ for His Birth to have been like that of other men. It is answered: (1) that belief in miracle is integral to the Christianity of the NT and, as regards the supposed influence of Is. 7. 14, the more circumstantial account of the Birth of Christ in Lk. (as contrasted with that in Mt.) is in no way associated with this OT passage; (2) it was the kind of fact which from its nature would at first have become known in the Church much less rapidly than the public facts of the Lord's life; and (3) it is rash to suppose that the Son of God needed two parents in order to assume human nature. Yet it should be observed that the acceptance of Christ's Divine Sonship is not theologically dependent on the fact that He was not the son of Joseph, and in any case the doctrine of the Virgin Birth is to be clearly distinguished from that of the Incarnation itself.

Modern works defending the traditional belief include C. *Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895), pp. 3–68; W. M. *Ramsay, Was Christ born at Bethlehem? A Study on the Credibility of St. Luke (1898); J. Orr, The Virgin Birth of Christ (1907); G. H. Box, The Virgin Birth of Jesus (1916); J. G. Machen, The Virgin Birth of Christ (1930); and T. Boslooper, The Virgin Birth (1962). The belief was rejected by P. Lobstein, Études christologiques. Dogme de la naissance miraculeuse du Christ (1890; Eng. tr., 1903); also by P. W. Schmiedel in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 2954–66, s.v. 'Mary', and H. Usener, ib., cols. 3340–52, s.v. 'Nativity (-Narratives)'. A useful critical examination of the NT evidence in V. Taylor, The Historical Evidence for the Virgin Birth (1920; no conclusion drawn and belief must be determined by dogmatic considerations). J. A. MacCulloch in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 623–6, s.v., with bibl. See also commentaries to Gospels, ad locc., and bibl. to Incarnation.

VIRGIN MARY, The Blessed. See Mary, The Blessed Virgin.

VIRTUALISM. A form of *Eucharistic doctrine acc. to which, while the bread and wine continue to exist unchanged after consecration, the faithful communicant receives together with the elements the virtue or power of the Body and Blood of Christ. Its classical exponent was J. *Calvin.

VIRTUES, Cardinal. See Cardinal Virtues.

VIRTUES, Theological. See Theological Virtues.

VISIGOTHIC RITE, The. Another name, used e.g. by Dom M. Férotin (1855–1914), for the *Mozarabic Rite, derived from its use in Spain when the country was dominated by the Visigoths (5th–7th cents.).

VISITANDINE ORDER. See Visitation, Order of the.

VISITATIO LIMINUM APOSTOLORUM. See Ad Limina Apostolorum.

VISITATION, Episcopal. Episcopal Visitations are designed for the periodic inspection of those temporal and spiritual affairs of a diocese under the bishop's control. From the 6th cent., such visitations were regulated by several ecclesiastical councils. Triennial visitation, which was the usual medieval practice, was exacted by the Anglican *Canons of 1603 (can. 60); the 1969 canons are less specific. Biennial visitation is the minimum stipulated by the Council of *Trent. In the later Middle Ages, when the work of visitation was already conducted by commissaries of the bishop, there developed elaborate legal forms centring in the presentation of offenders by both clergy and laity, to whom articles of inquiry had been previously administered. The cases were then tried by canon law in much the same form as that of the *consistory court. The Abps. of *Canterbury and *York have the right to visit all the dioceses within their respective provinces, e.g. W. *Laud in 1634 instituted a visitation of all his suffragan dioceses. See also Charge.

C. R. Cheney, Episcopal Visitation of Monasteries in the Thirteenth Century (Manchester, 1931).

VISITATION OF OUR LADY, The. The feast, formerly observed on 2 July, commemorates the Blessed Virgin's visit to her cousin *Elizabeth, recorded in Lk. 1. 39–56. It made its first appearance in the 13th cent., when it was introduced into the *Franciscan Order by the General Chapter of 1263 at the instigation of St. *Bonaventure. Its extension to the universal Church in order to obtain the end of the Great Schism was decided upon by *Urban VI and prescribed by Boniface IX in 1389, but accepted only by the part of the Church under his obedience. The Council of *Basle, in 1441, again ordered its celebration, and *Pius V finally established it for the whole RC Church. In 1969 it was moved to 31 May. In the C of E, 2 July was inserted as a *Black Letter Day into the calendar of the 1662 BCP.

R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 40–61. F. G. Holweck in C.E., xv (1912), p. 480 f., s.v.; G. Löw, C.SS.R.–W. Wehr in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 1499–1502, s.v. 'Visitazione di Maria Santissima'.

VISITATION ORDER, also known as the Visitandines. The order of contemplatives founded in 1610 by St. *Francis of Sales and St. *Jane Frances de Chantal. It was designed to include women unable to bear the austerities of the older orders and devoted itself to the special cultivation of humility, gentleness, and sisterly love. Originally the Visitandines were a congregation with simple vows. Only the novices were strictly enclosed, while the professed sisters went out on works of mercy, esp. nursing the sick. But this innovation was received unfavourably by the Abp. of Lyons, D. S. de Marquemont, who refused to admit the sisters to his diocese unless they kept to the enclosure. St. Francis gave way, and on 23 Apr. 1618 Pope *Paul V constituted the congregation an order with full privileges ('Ordo Visitationis BMV'). It was solemnly approved by *Urban VIII in 1626. The 'constitutions' drawn up by St. Francis were an adaptation of the *Augustinian Rule, with the characteristic substitution of the *Little Office of Our Lady for the Canonical Hours. Since that time the Order has remained primarily contemplative. The mother-house at Annecy has a primacy of honour among the houses of the order, but each house retains its independence and is under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop. The most notable saint of the order is St. *Margaret Mary Alacoque, whose visions had a large share in the institution of the Feast of the *Sacred Heart.

C. F. Ménestrier, S.J., Projet de l'histoire de l'ordre de la Visitation de Sainte-Marie (Annecy, 1701). La Visitation Sainte-Marie (Les Grands Ordres religieux, Paris, 1923); E. Lecouturier, La Visitation (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux, 1935). F. A. *Gasquet, O.S.B., The Order of the Visitation. Its Spirit and its Growth in England [1910]. F. M. de Chaugy, Les Vies des quatre premières mères de l'ordre de la Visitation Sainte-Marie (1659; repr. as vol. i of the Œuvres historiques de la Mère Françoise-Madeleine de Chaugy, 1892); also other works by this author. For the early history of the order see also The Life of Jeanne Charlotte de Bréchard by the Sisters of the Visitation, Harrow (1924). Heimbucher, i, pp. 641–6, with bibl. R. Perrin, O.S.F.S., in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 481–3, s.v.; M. L. Lynn, V.H.M., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 719–21, s.v.

VISITATION OF THE SICK, The. The 'Order for the Visitation of the Sick' in the BCP follows in arrangement that in the *Sarum *Manual, but with considerable omissions, e.g. of the *Seven Penitential Psalms formerly recited on the way to the sick person's house. In the 1662 Book the minister of the parish, after an opening versicle and response on entering the sick person's presence, says the Lord's Prayer, followed by further versicles and responses, collects for the sick man's faith, repentance, and perseverance, an exhortation (added in 1549, and partly based on the Homilies of 1547), a profession of faith in the articles of the Apostles' Creed in an interrogatory form, an exhortation to confession of sin, followed by a form prescribed for priestly absolution, a further collect for the sick man's forgiveness, Psalm 71, 'O Saviour of the world', a final collect, and the Blessing (in the form in Num. 6. 24–26). Four occasional collects are appended. In the 1549 Book provision was also made for the *unction of the sick man, but this has been omitted since 1552. In the 1927–28 Book the service was much revised and modernized. The 'Communion of the Sick' included in the BCP from 1549 onwards as a separate item provides for a celebration in the sick-room (as against Communion from the Reserved Sacrament), with a special collect, Epistle (Heb. 12. 5), and Gospel (Jn. 5. 24).

In the RC Church the 1972 'Order for Anointing the Sick and their Pastoral Care' (Ordo Unctionis Infirmorum eorumque Pastoralis Curae) provides for a comparable rite consisting of prayers, readings from Scripture, Psalms and a blessing, with laying on of *hands if desired. In cases of serious illness this is followed by unction and Communion, and, when death approaches, by Viaticum and the Commendatio animae (called in the new Ordo Commendatio morientium). The 1972 Ordo replaces similar provisions contained in the *Rituale (Tit. V, cap. iv).

F. Procter–W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1919), esp. pp. 622–9. C. Harris, 'Visitation of the Sick' in W. K. L. Clarke–C. Harris (edd.), Liturgy and Worship. A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932), pp. 472–541; id., 'The Communion of the Sick, Viaticum, and Reservation', ib., pp. 541–615. Forms of Service for 'Unction and the Laying-on of Hands' and for 'the Laying-on of Hands without Unction' were approved by both Houses of the *Convocation of Canterbury on 6 June 1935; they are repr. in A. F. Smethurst–H. R. Wilson (edd.), Acts of the Convocations of Canterbury and York . . . passed since . . . 1921 (1948), pp. 72–83; for somewhat similar provision made by both Houses of the Convocations of York, see ib., pp. 83–6. See also bibl. to Unction and Spiritual Healing.

VITALIAN (d. 672), Pope from 657. Despite the strained relations between Rome and *Constantinople during the *Monothelite controversy, he kept on good terms with the E. during the earlier part of his pontificate, exchanging the customary compliments with the E. Emp. Constans II at his consecration, and receiving him at Rome in 663. Later, however, Vitalian's name was removed from the *Diptychs at Constantinople for his adhesion to 'Dyothelite', i.e. orthodox, views. It was he who consecrated *Theodore of Tarsus Abp. of *Canterbury in 668. Feast day, 27 Jan.

Jaffé, i (1885), pp. 235–7. L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 343–5. Mann, i (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 1–16, with notes on sources. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, ii (1933), pp. 580–586, 588 f., 600, and 681 f. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2, 1950), cols. 3115–17, s.v. 'Vitalien'.

VITALIS, St. St. *Ambrose relates that in 393 he discovered at *Bologna, with the assistance of the local bishop, Eusebius, the bones of Sts. Agricola and Vitalis which lay buried in the Jewish cemetery there, and that both Vitalis and Agricola (whose slave Vitalis was) had suffered death together. The cult of Vitalis spread rapidly through W. Christendom and famous churches were dedicated to his honour at *Ravenna (5th cent.; rebuilt in 6th) and *Rome (5th cent., formerly the basilica of the titulus Vestinae). Two historically valueless later accounts of the death of St. Vitalis exist, in one of which he is associated not with Agricola but with his wife Valeria. Feast days: Vitalis and Valeria, 28 Apr.; Vitalis and Agricola, 4 Nov.

F. Savio, S.J., 'Due lettere falsamente attribuite a S. Ambrogio' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, iii (1897), pp. 153–77. On the legend associating St. Vitalis with Agricola, see also AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 233–53; H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'L'Hagiographie ancienne de Ravenne' in Anal. Boll., xlvii (1929), pp. 5–30, esp. pp. 7–10; id., Les Origines du culte des martyrs (ed. 2, Subsidia Hagiographica, xx; 1933), esp. pp. 324 f. and 328 f. On the legends associating St. Vitalis with Valeria, id., 'Trois Dates du calendrier romain' in Anal. Boll., xlvi (1928), sect. 2, 'Saint Vital (28 avril)', pp. 55–9.

VITALIS, ORDERICUS. See Ordericus Vitalis.

VITANDI (Lat., 'persons to be avoided'). The technical name in *canon law for those excommunicated persons with whom members of the Church are debarred from having any kind of intercourse. They are distinguished from the tolerati, with whom relations of a personal kind are allowed. Unless he has laid violent hands on the person of the Pope, in which case ipso facto he is vitandus, an offender acquires this status only when he has been expressly so named by the Roman see. For these rulings see CIC, cans. 2258, 2259 and 2343.

VITORIA, FRANCISCO DE (c. 1485–1546), Spanish theologian. He entered the *Dominican Order c. 1502 and studied at the Convent of San Pablo, Burgos, and from 1506 to 1512, partly under Peter Crockart (d. 1514), at Paris, where he was ordained priest in 1509. There he taught arts and philosophy at the Convent of St. James from 1512 to 1517, and in 1523 became 'doctor theologiae'. After his return to Spain he lectured on theology at Valladolid from 1523 to 1526, and from 1526 held the first chair of theology at the university of Salamanca.

Vitoria may be considered a forerunner of the '*Salmanticenses'. By substituting the '*Summa Theologica' of St. *Thomas for *Peter Lombard's 'Sentences' as the theological textbook, he inaugurated a new school at Salamanca which, under his pupils Dominic *Soto, Andreas de Vega (1498–1560), Melchior *Cano, and others, became the chief university in Europe in the 16th cent. for the study of Scholasticism. A humanist as well as a philosopher and theologian, he developed a method which, without disregarding philosophical speculation, made the Scriptures and the Fathers the foundation of theological teaching. He is often also regarded today as the 'Father of International Law', and at some points H. *Grotius was dependent on him. In his famous 'Relectiones', lectures given between 1527 and 1540, he dealt inter alia with the chief problem of his day in international morality, viz. the conquest of the Indies. He was critical of the Spanish methods of colonization in America and also laid down the conditions of a just war. On this last matter, basing himself on St. *Augustine and St. Thomas, he confined legitimate warfare to the redressing of a wrong received; and, indeed, he went further than St. Thomas in holding that no war would be permissible if it should bring serious evil to Christendom and the world at large.

The early edd. of Vitoria's writings are very rare, and part of his work is still unpubld. Modern edd. of his commentary on the Secunda Secundae of St. Thomas by V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P. (Bibliotheca de Teólogos Españoles, ii–vi and xvii; 1932–52); of the sections 'De Indis' and 'De Jure Belli' of his Relectiones Theologicae XII (orig. publd. at Lyons, 1557) by H. F. Wright, with introd. by E. Nys, and Eng. tr. and photographic reproduction of the 1696 ed. (The Classics of International Law; Washington, D.C., 1917); the Relectiones also repr. from various early edd., with photographic reprod. of MSS., by L. G. A. Getino (3 vols. [Madrid,] 1933–5) and ed., with Spanish tr., by T. Urdanoz, O.P. (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1960). V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., Los manuscritos del Maestro Fray Francisco de Vitoria [1928]. C. Barcia Trelles, Francisco de Vitoria, fundator del derecho internacional (Valladolid, 1928); L. G. A. Getino, El Mro. Francisco de Vitoria (1930); J. B. Scott, Francisco de Vitoria and his Law of Nations (The Spanish Origin of International Law; 1934); V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P., Francisco de Vitoria (Barcelona, 1939). F. Stegmüller, Francisco de Vitoria y la doctrina de la gracia en la escuela salmantina (Biblioteca histórica de la Biblioteca Balmes, Ser. 2, x; 1934). Bruno de S. José, O.C.D., El Dominico Burgalés P. Maestro Fray Francisco de Vitoria y Compludo (1485–1546) (Burgos, 1946). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain. A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). R. C. Gonzales, O.P., Francisco de Vitoria. Estudio bibliográfico (Buenos Aires, 1946). Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 128–30. V. Beltrán de Heredia, O.P.–J. G. Menéndez-Rigada, O.P., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3117–44, s.v.; C. H. McKenna in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 727 f., s.v.

VITRINGA, CAMPEGIUS (c. 1659–1722), Biblical exegete. A native of Leeuwarden in Friesland, he was educated at Franeker and *Leyden Universities and in 1680 was offered a teaching post at Franeker. Here he lectured with great success for the rest of his life, repeatedly refusing to leave the town for a more prominent position at Utrecht. His fame rests on his Biblical exegesis, which, though inspired by the *Calvinistic orthodoxy of his age, succeeded in interpreting the sacred text with unusual freshness and penetration. His principal work was a commentary on Isaiah (2 vols. fol., Leeuwarden, 1714, 1720). Among his other writings were De Synagoga Vetere (1696; Eng. trans., The Synagogue and the Church, 1842) and Anakrisis Apocalypseos Ioannis Apostoli (1705).

E. F. Kautzsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 705–8, s.v., with bibl.

VITUS, St. (d. perh. 303), martyr. The common legend about him is much later, and exists in several forms. He is generally supposed to have been born of pagan parents in Lucania, S. Italy, and secretly brought up as a Christian by Crescentia, his nurse, and Modestus, her husband, all three being martyred under *Diocletian. St. Vitus is invoked against sudden death, hydrophobia, and the convulsive disorder known as St. Vitus's dance. The association of his cultus with bodily health appears already in the Gelasian Sacramentary, and an early S. Italian Gospel pericope appointed for his feast (Mt. 9. 35–10. 1) connects him with the cure of sickness and of demonic possession. He is one of the 14 *auxiliary saints. Feast day, 15 June.

AA.SS., Jun. II (1699), pp. 1013–42; B.H.L., ii. pp. 1257–9 (Nos. 8711–23), and Suppl., p. 308 f. Text of the Translatio S. Viti also ed. F. Stentrup in F. Philippi (ed.), Abhandlungen über Corveyer Geschichtsschreibung (Veröffentlichungen der historischen Kommission für Westfalen, 1906), pp. 51–100 (text, pp. 75–100). J. Oswald in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 825–7, s.v.

VLADIMIR, St. (956–1015), the Apostle of the Russians and Ruthenians. Though he was a grandson of St. Olga, he was brought up a pagan. In 978 he took Kiev from his elder brother, and subsequently conquered Polotsk, subjugated large districts of White Russia, and was involved in many other wars. Having assisted the Greek Emp. Basil II in quelling a revolt, he married c. 987 the Emperor's sister Anne. Henceforth he was an ardent promoter of Christianity and erected many churches and monasteries; but his work of evangelism owed much of its success to physical compulsion, and those who refused baptism were heavily punished. Vladimir's later years were troubled by insurrections of his sons by his former pagan wives, and he died on an expedition against one of them. Feast day, 15 July.

The principal authority is the chronicle attributed to Nestor, monk of Kiev (11th–12th cent.); Eng. tr., with introd. and notes of edd. in Russian and Germ. and Fr. trr., by S. H. Cross in Harvard Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, xiii (1930), pp. 77–309 (text, pp. 178–214). N. de Baumgarten, Saint Vladimir et la conversion de la Russie (Orientalia Christiana, vol. xxvii, fasc. 1; Num. 79; 1932), with full bibl. I. Dujčev in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xii (Rome, 1969), cols. 1323–9, s.v., with further bibl.

VOETIUS, GISBERT (1589–1676), Dutch Reformed theologian. A native of Heusden in Holland, he was educated at the university of *Leyden, where he was deeply influenced by F. *Gomar. Having been preacher at Vlijnen (1611) and Heusden (1617), he took a prominent part in the Synod of *Dort (1618), everywhere combating *Arminianism and defending an uncompromising *Calvinistic predestinationism. In 1634 he was appointed professor of theology and oriental languages at Utrecht, and in 1637 also pastor of the Reformed Church there. A man of strong convictions and violently hostile to everything Catholic, he was involved in frequent controversies. He defended strict Calvinism against the freer school represented by J. *Cocceius, carried on bitter and often unfair attacks against R. *Descartes, and at the end of his life quarrelled with J. de *Labadie because of his separatist tendencies. Though of great influence during his lifetime, Voetius did not form a theological school. His writings include Politica Ecclesiastica (4 vols., Amsterdam, 1663–76) and Diatribae de Theologia (Utrecht, 1668).

Life by A. C. Duker (3 vols.+index vol., Leyden, 1897–1915). M. Bouwman, Voetius over het Gezag der Synoden (1937). J. J. van Oosterzee–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 717–25.

VOLTAIRE, pseudonym of François-Marie Arouet (1694–1778), French writer. His burning desire for social reform and his biting pen made him the most celebrated of the French 'Philosophes'. Educated by the Paris *Jesuits, throughout his life he was violently opposed to the Catholic Church, in whose institutions he saw nothing but deceit, superstition and fanaticism; on the other hand he undertook the defence of *Deism with, as Lanson wrote, 'determination, warmth and courage'. After a quarrel with the Chevalier de Rohan, Voltaire was exiled in London from 1726 to 1729. His Lettres philosophiques or Lettres sur les Anglais (1734) held up an idealized picture of England as a land of rationalist philosophy, just social institutions and religious toleration, as an object-lesson to the French reader. He also praised J. *Locke and I. *Newton, the authors who, with Samuel *Clarke, had the greatest influence on his Deism, although whenever possible he reduced metaphysical problems to matters of ethics. An attack on B. *Pascal, whom Voltaire selected as representative of the strain in Christianity most opposed to his own ethical optimism, was added to the letters as an appendix. When the book was publicly burnt in Paris, he fled to Cirey in Lorraine, the country house of Madame du Châtelet, where he wrote his (posthumously publd.) Traité de métaphysique (1734) and Éléments de la philosophie de Newton (1737), and completed several of his most successful plays, among them Mahomet (1742), as well as the blasphemous epic on St. *Joan of Arc, La Pucelle (1739; publd. 1755). From 1750 to 1752 he lived at the court of Frederick II of Prussia, and in 1758 bought the estate of Ferney, on the Swiss frontier, where he led the life of a country gentleman. The problem of *theodicy always preoccupied him. At first inclined towards the solution of G. *Leibniz, he then violently rejected it, delivering its coup de grâce in Candide (1759); after this he attempted to set aside metaphysical inquiry for positive social action, taking up in particular the cause of the victims of religious intolerance, such as the Huguenot Jean Calas. During the last fifteen or so years of his life his views came increasingly into conflict with those of the younger generation of 'Philosophes', notably P. H. D. d'Holbach (1723–1789), who were materialists and atheists and considered Voltaire's Deism retrograde. Voltaire bitterly attacked atheism not, as is sometimes maintained, because he regarded belief in the existence of God and personal immortality as necessary simply for the government of the masses, but out of a pragmatic conviction that without these beliefs human existence would be one of meaningless anarchy. The Irish Catholic writer Alfred Noyes once described Voltaire as a true son of the Church 'whose criticisms, like those of Erasmus, were only letters to the family'. While this view is clearly untenable, it should nevertheless not be overlooked that the belief in absolute moral values which Voltaire's Deism subserved, his championship of religious toleration, and even the faint stirrings of personal faith which occasionally diversified his scepticism, were qualities often sadly lacking in the official institutions and representatives of Christianity in his day.

Voltaire's Complete Works are being newly ed. by T. Besterman and others (Geneva, 1968 ff.); they are expected to run to some 150 vols. Individual works have frequently been ed. and tr., incl. Correspondence, ed. T. Besterman (107 vols., Geneva, 1953–65). The extensive literature includes, besides the well-known life by J. Morley (London, 1872), studies by G. Lanson ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1906), H. N. Brailsford (H.U.L., 1935), N. L. Torrey (New York, 1938), R. Naves (Paris, 1942), P. [J.] Gay (Princeton, N.J., 1959), and Ira O. Wade (ib., 1969). R. Pomeau, La Religion de Voltaire (1956; new ed., 1969), and other works of this author. G. Bengesco, Voltaire. Bibliographie de ses œuvres (4 vols., 1882–90); Mary M. H. Barr, A Century of Voltaire. A Bibliography of Writings on Voltaire, 1825–1925 (New York, 1929); id., Quarante Années d'Études Voltairiennes . . . 1926–1965 (1968). C. Constantin in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3387–3471, s.v.

VOLUNTARY. A piece of music played on the organ at the beginning or end of (and, occasionally, during) a religious service. Those played at the beginning and close are sometimes distinguished as the In- and Out-Voluntaries.

VOLUNTARYISM. Esp. in *Scotland, the doctrine that the Church ought to be spiritually independent of the State. It rests on the theses that the establishment of a particular denomination is unjust and that State endowments are devitalizing.

VON HARNACK, ADOLF. See Harnack, Adolf.

VON HOFMANN, J. C K. See Hofmann, J. C. K.

VON HÜGEL, Baron FRIEDRICH (1852–1925), RC theologian and philosopher. He was born at Florence, the elder son of Carl Alexander Anselm, Baron von Hügel (1795–1870), and of Elizabeth, née Farquharson, a Scottish Presbyterian lady who was a convert to the RC Church. After a cosmopolitan education he settled in England in 1867. In 1870 an attack of typhus left him deaf and permanently weakened in health. After a religious crisis he was brought to a firm faith at Vienna through the influence of Raymond Hocking, a Dutch *Dominican (1870). He married in 1873 and for the rest of his life lived at Hampstead (1876–1903) and Kensington (1903–25), though he constantly travelled abroad. In 1884 he met for the first time the Abbé Henri Huvelin at *Paris, who made a profound spiritual impression on him.

Meanwhile von Hügel had become a keen student of science (esp. geology), philosophy, Biblical criticism and religious history. Having become convinced of the critical view of the OT, he defended it in 1897 in a Congress at Fribourg (Switzerland). He found himself in growing accord with the cultural and liberalizing tendencies in the RC Church and several of the leaders of the *Modernist Movement (A. *Loisy, G. *Tyrrell) became his lifelong friends. In 1905 he founded the London Society for the Study of Religion, which brought him into touch with thinkers and scholars of the most diverse views. In 1908 he published The Mystical Element of Religion as studied in St. Catherine of Genoa and her Friends. This was followed in 1911 by an article on St. John's Gospel in the Encyclopaedia Britannica (ed. 11) and in 1912 by his book Eternal Life. In 1921 appeared his Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion; a Second Series followed in 1926, after his death. He was appointed *Gifford Lecturer at Edinburgh for 1924–6, but owing to ill-health was unable to deliver the course; portions of it were published posthumously in The Reality of God (1931).

Among the problems with which von Hügel constantly wrestled were the relation of Christianity to history (in which field he found a kindred spirit in E. *Troeltsch), the place of human culture in the Christian life, the Christian conception of time, and the significance of eschatology for the modern world. He saw the Institutional, the Intellectual, and the Mystical as the three abiding elements in religion. In his earlier life he had much sympathy with the activist philosophy of M. *Blondel, but believing that the essence of religion was 'adoration', he came in his later years to emphasize the Divine transcendence and the 'givenness' of faith. 'The Baron' became one of the chief religious influences in cultured circles in England, more so outside the RC Church than within it, though his 'Modernism' escaped formal condemnation. The confidence which he inspired as a spiritual counsellor may be clearly discerned in his published correspondence.

Von Hügel's Selected Letters, 1896–1924, ed. B. Holland (1927), with Memoir by id., pp. 1–68; Letters from Baron Friedrich von Hügel to a Niece, ed. Gwendolen Greene (1928), with introd., pp. vii–xlv. Much of his correspondence with G. Tyrrell is pr. in Maude D. Petre, Von Hügel and Tyrrell. The Story of a Friendship (1937). Life by M. de la Bedoyère (London, 1951). Studies by L. V. Lester-Garland (London, 1933), A. H. Dakin (ib., 1934), M. Nédoncelle (Paris thesis, 1935; Eng. tr., 1937), J. Steinmann (Paris, 1962), J. J. Heaney (Washington, D.C., 1968; London, 1969), J. P. Whelan, S.J. (London, 1971) and L. F. Barmann (Cambridge, 1972). C. C. J. *Webb in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 874–6.

VORSTIUS (Konrad von der Vorst) (1569–1622), *Arminian theologian. He was a native of *Cologne. After abandoning his early intention of entering business, he studied theology at Heidelberg, and later proceeded to Basle and Geneva, where he greatly impressed T. *Beza by his abilities. In 1596 he accepted a teaching post at Count Arnold of Bertheim's academy at Steinfurt. Certain of his writings gave rise to a charge of Socinianism; but having successfully cleared himself before the Theological Faculty at Heidelberg, he continued to teach at Steinfurt, where his reputation rose from year to year. In 1610, after the death of J. Arminius, he accepted, after much hesitation, a call by J. Uitenbogaert to the vacant chair at *Leyden. In the same year he had issued a treatise against R. *Bellarmine and also a work, Tractatus Theologicus de Deo, sive de Natura et Attributis Dei, which at once provoked attention on account of its rationalist tendencies. Strict Calvinists led by F. *Gomar pronounced it heretical; the Heidelberg theologians, and even A. *Saravia, professed themselves shocked; and when *James I's attention was drawn to it he drew up a list of its theological errors and instructed Ralph Winwood, British Ambassador at The Hague, to oppose Vorstius's appointment. Vorstius in consequence found himself compelled to retire from Leyden to Gouda (1612). Meanwhile he increased suspicion by translating certain of the works of F. *Socinus; and at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19) he was condemned as a heretic and banished from the territory of the States-General. He was the author of a long series of writings, including a commentary on most of St. Paul's Epp. (posthumous, 1631). He was more sympathetic to the Fathers than most Protestant theologians of his age.

A. Schweizer, 'Conradus Vorstius. Vermittlung der reformirten Centraldogmen mit den socinianischen Einwendungen' in Theologische Jahrbücher, xv (1856), pp. 435–86, and xvi (1857), pp. 153–84. J. C. G. Neudecker–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 762–4, s.v. See also bibl. to Dort, Synod of.

VOSS, GERHARD JAN (1577–1649), Dutch humanist theologian. Born in Germany, he was educated at *Leyden, where he formed a lifelong friendship with H. *Grotius. In 1600 he became rector of the high school at Dort and in 1615 regent of the College of the States-General at Leyden. Though his scholarly temper was averse to the religious controversies of the time, he became involved in the disputes between the *Remonstrants and their opponents; and as himself suspected of Remonstrant leanings, he was compelled to resign his post in 1619. In 1622 he accepted a professorship of rhetoric and chronology, and later also of Greek, at Leyden university. He twice refused a call to Cambridge, but accepted a non-residential prebend at *Canterbury Cathedral from Abp. W. *Laud, being installed in 1629, and made a D.C.L. at Oxford. In 1632 he was appointed professor of general and Church history at the newly founded Athenaeum at Amsterdam.

Voss's Historia Pelagiana (1618), Dissertationes Tres de Tribus Symbolis (1642), and Libri IV de Theologia Gentili (1642) were all solid contributions to learning. In the second he decisively disproved the traditional authorship of the *Athanasian Creed. He was also one of the first scholars to apply the historical method to Christian dogmatics.

His son, ISAAK Voss (1618–89), who became a residentiary Canon of Windsor in 1673, was also a classical and ecclesiastical historian of much erudition. He edited Pomponius Mela (1658), Marcus Junianus Justinus (1664) and Catullus (1684) and also zealously defended the genuineness of St. *Ignatius's Epistles.

Collected ed. of G. J. Voss's Opera, publd. in 6 vols., Amsterdam, 1695–1701. P. Colomesius (ed.), Gerardi Joan. Vossii et Clarorum Virorum ad eum Epistolae (London, 1690). J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, ii (1908), pp. 307–9. C. Sepp–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 764–8.

On Isaak Voss see J. E. Sandys, op. cit., p. 322 f., with refs.; S. G. de Vries in P. C. Molhuysen–P. J. Blok (edd.), Nieuw Nederlandsch Biografisch Woordenboek, i (1911), cols. 1519–25, s.v. T. Seccombe in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 392–6.

VOTIVE MASSES. In the past Latin Missals have provided Votive Masses for a wide variety of occasions and objects, such as the election of a Pope or the restoration of peace, or in honour of particular mysteries, such as the Passion of our Lord. In the 1970 Roman Missal there are 15 Votive Masses, including those of the Trinity, the Holy Spirit, the Blessed Sacrament, the BVM, *Angels, St. *Joseph, the Apostles, St. *Peter and St. Paul, and All Saints. Their purpose is defined as to encourage the piety of the people, and this consideration alone is to govern their use. They may be said at the discretion of the celebrant on any day on which there is no feast or obligatory memoria, though the trend of contemporary practice is to discourage the celebration of Votive Masses in favour of observing the ecclesiastical calendar. The Solemn Votive Masses (for a 'grave cause'), which were usually prescribed by the bishop, have now been replaced by prayers or Masses for Various Occasions (46 of these, some with alternative texts) which may be said on any days except *Solemnities and the Sundays of Advent, Lent, and Eastertide, while the *Ritual Masses (q.v.) provide for particular needs, such as marriage (see Nuptial Mass).

VOWEL POINTS. In common with some other Semitic languages *Hebrew was originally written without signs for the vowels. In course of time their absence was remedied by using certain of the existing consonants as vowel letters as well as consonants, and later, when the language was no longer spoken and there was a danger of the true pronunciation being forgotten, by introducing 'vowel points'. These vowel points are dots or strokes, superimposed upon the consonantal text. In the Babylonian and Palestinian systems the signs are exclusively superlinear, but in the Tiberian system, which prob. grew out of the Palestinian, the signs came to be placed above, below and within the consonants. The developed Tiberian system, which largely replaced the earlier systems, is attributed to the *Massoretes. It was probably completed by c. A.D. 900. Unvocalized texts are still produced, notably for synagogue use. Similar points are used to harden the pronunciation of certain consonants and to distinguish the letters 'Sin' (שׂ) and 'Shin' (שׁ), which are otherwise identical. See also Hebrew (Tongue).

VOWS. Solemn and voluntary promises to perform something not otherwise required but believed to be acceptable to the person to whom the vows are made. Such promises to the Deity are common in many religions, esp. in a propitiatory connexion.

In the OT vows are sometimes explicitly dependent upon the performance of certain favours by Jehovah (e.g. the oath of Jacob at Bethel, Gen. 28. 20–22; Hannah's dedication of Samuel, 1 Sam. 1. 11); others appear to have been made unconditionally (cf. Ps. 132. 2–5). In the former case the vow was conceived less as a payment than as an offering of thankfulness (cf. the custom which still survives in some countries of vowing the model of a ship after deliverance from shipwreck). The special kind of vows made by the *Nazarites (q.v.) were prob. in origin an extension of such vows of self-dedication as are found in Ps. 132 and in *Saul's prohibition against eating before sundown (1 Sam. 14. 24). The obligation to fulfil a vow once undertaken could be very solemn, as appears in the case of Jephthah's daughter (Jg. 11. 30–39). This obligation was emphasized in the Law (Deut. 23. 21–3), though it was recognized that things unlawful should not be offered to Jehovah even in fulfilment of a vow (Deut. 23. 18). In Lev. 27. 1–8' ('*P'; c. 5th cent.), however, a system was elaborated whereby persons under vows might evade a direct offering of themselves by the payment of a fixed sum; things vowed might be redeemed by the payment of their value together with an extra sum in compensation.

In the NT Christ condemned the Jewish rule which enabled a man to escape his duty to his parents on the pretext of a vow (Mk. 7. 9–13), thus emphasizing that the matter of a vow pleasing to God must itself be acceptable. St. *Paul is recorded to have been under a vow on his own account on one occasion (Acts 18. 18) and on another occasion to have joined others in fulfilling one (Acts 21. 23 f.). Vows of virginity, which were taken from a very early date, may be implied in 1 Cor. 7.

Acc. to Catholic moral theologians a vow to be valid must be freely made by a person who has a sufficient use of reason, be within the bounds of possibility of performance and tending to some future good. By definition it cannot relate to matters of precept. With the development of monasticism the threefold vow of poverty, chastity, and obedience, taken on entering the religious life, came to occupy special prominence. Those most commonly taken outside religious profession include vows to go on a pilgrimage, vows of chastity, and vows dedicating property, but they may cover a variety of subjects. A vow may be private, in which case it is usually taken with the consent of a confessor, or public, when it is accepted in the name of the Church by a legitimate authority, such as an Abbot receiving a vow of profession. Since c. the 13th cent. *canon law has also distinguished between 'simple' and 'solemn' vows. The exact scope of the distinction is disputed, but acc. to a common view the solemnity of vows is determined by their irrevocable acceptance. In practice the distinction is determined in the RC Church by whether a vow is instituted and accepted as solemn by the Church. Actions opposed to simple vows are prohibited under pain of sin; those contrary to solemn vows are, acc. to canon law, invalid. Thus a marriage attempted by a person under solemn vows is regarded as non-existent.

P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3182–281, s.v. 'Vœu, Vœux de Religion'.

VOYSEY, CHARLES (1828–1912), Theistic preacher. He was educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. After ordination in the C of E he held a number of curacies in London and elsewhere, at one of which (St. Mary's, Victoria Docks) he preached a sermon denying the doctrine of eternal punishment. From 1864 to 1871 he was vicar of Healaugh, nr. Tadcaster. Here his heterodox opinions led to his citation before the Chancellor of *York, and the sentence of deprivation which followed was upheld on his appeal to the Privy Council. Removing to London, Voysey began holding services in St. George's Hall, Langham Place, and founded the 'Theistic Church', whose headquarters from 1885 were in Swallow Street, off Regent Street. On Voysey's death some of his followers formed a schism, the 'Free Religious Movement'.

D. Wright in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 545 f., s.v.

VULGATE. The Latin version of the Bible (editio vulgata) most widely used in the West. It was for the most part the work of St. *Jerome, and its original purpose was to end the great differences of text in the *Old Latin MSS. circulating in the latter part of the 4th century.

Jerome began his work, at the request of Pope *Damasus in 382, with a revision of the Gospels which was completed in 384. Here he seems to have used as the basis of his revision a Greek MS. closely akin to the *Codex Sinaiticus. That he revised the remaining books of the NT is unlikely.

In revising the Latin text of the OT, Jerome began with the Psalms. If the '*Roman Psalter' (q.v.) is his, then this is his earliest Psalter revision. What is certain is that c. 392 he completed the '*Gallican Psalter', using as his basis Origen's *Hexaplaric text of the *Septuagint. Further work on other books of the OT on the same lines convinced him that a satisfactory version could only be made by working directly from the Hebrew original and making a completely fresh translation, which should be entirely independent of the Greek. This translation occupied him intermittently for some 15 years and included a third recension of the Psalter (the 'Hebrew Psalter'). The 'Hebrew Psalter', however, never won general acceptance; the 'Gallican Psalter' was adopted for liturgical use and came to be included in Vulgate MSS. and so became standard in the printed texts.

Jerome's translations had at first to face considerable opposition through the long and sacred associations of the earlier texts; both the old and the new versions remained in use together for some time, but the excellence of Jerome's work was gradually recognized. When (prob. in the 6th cent.) the various books came to be collected into a single Bible (the Vulgate as we know it), it consisted of Jerome's translation from the Hebrew of the Jewish canonical books except the Psalter; the Gallican Psalter; Jerome's translation of Tobit and Judith; Old Latin translations of the rest of the Apocrypha; Jerome's revision of the Gospels; and a revised text of Acts, Epistles, and Rev. Various suggestions have been made about the identity of the reviser or revisers of the latter part of the NT, but all that can be said with certainty is that the earliest evidence for its existence is found in quotations in the writings of *Pelagius and his circle. The first unambiguous reference to a collection of Biblical books within one cover occurs in the work of *Cassiodorus (Institutes, I. xii. 3); the oldest known MS. containing the whole Vulgate is the *Codex Amiatinus.

From the first, the translations which came to form the Vulgate were liable to easy corruption by reminiscence of Old Latin readings, esp. in the NT. Confusion was also caused by the practice of inserting into Old Latin MSS. the more important of Jerome's corrections; the NT contained in the Book of *Armagh provides an example of the type of 'mixed' text which resulted. Attempts to standardize the text were made from the time of Cassiodorus onwards: notable among these were that associated with the name of *Alcuin and the work of *Theodulf of Orleans. A fresh, but corrupt, standard text (the 'Exemplar Parisiense') was put forth by the University of Paris in the 13th cent. Further efforts to preserve a standard text were made by the various '*Correctoria' (q.v.).

The first printed edition was the *Mazarin (or 'Gutenberg') Bible (1456). A great many printed editions followed. The first critical text was that of Robert *Stephanus (Paris, 1528). At its Fourth Session (8 Apr. 1546) the Council of *Trent pronounced the Vulgate the only authentic Latin text of the Scriptures, and an edition eventually issued under the authority of *Sixtus V in 1590 was intended to be definitive. As, however, it contained many errors, existing copies, as far as possible, were called in and a revised text issued in 1592 by *Clement VIII, with some 3000 corrections. Since, however, Sixtus had declared in his Bull authorizing the 1590 edition that that alone was the approved edition and its text was unalterable, the revised edition of 1592 bore the title-page: Biblia Sacra Vulgatae Editionis Sixti Quinti Pont. Max. jussu recognita atque edita, though it is commonly known as the 'Clementine edition'.

Later research has shown that the Clementine edition departs at many points from Jerome's text, and several attempts have been made to revise it. An emended text was printed by D. *Vallarsi in 1734; but owing to Papal prohibitions against further emendation of the Bible he included it in his edition of Jerome as the 'Divina Biblioteca'. A fresh edition projected by R. *Bentley was never completed. A critical edition of the NT, begun by John *Wordsworth (d. 1911) and H. J. White (d. 1934), was publd. in the years 1889–1954. In 1908 *Pius X appointed a Commission with F. A. *Gasquet as president to produce a new edition. Publication began with Genesis at the Vatican Press in 1926, and is in progress. A handy, two-volume edition, prepared by R. Weber, O.S.B., and four collaborators, was publd. by the Württemberg Bibelanstalt at Stuttgart in 1969.

Editions of the Clementine Vulgate are innumerable. Besides the two critical texts (Papal Commission; J. Wordsworth–H. J. White) and the two Stuttgart volumes, there is a convenient students' edition, Novum Testamentum Latine. Editio Minor (Oxford, 1911), by H. J. White. S. Berger, Histoire de la Vulgate pendant les premiers siècles du moyen âge (1893). F. Stummer, Einführung in die lateinische Bibel (1928). H. *Quentin, O.S.B., Mémoire sur l'établissement du texte de la Vulgate, i, Octateuque (Collectanea Biblica Latina, vi; Rome–Paris, 1922). J. *Chapman, O.S.B., Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908); H. J. Vogels, Vulgatastudien. Die Evangelien der Vulgata, untersucht auf ihre lateinische und griechische Vorlage (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, xiv, Hftt. 2–3; 1928); H. Glunz, Britannien und Bibeltext. Der Vulgatatext der Evangelien in seinem Verhältnis zu irisch-angelsächsischen Kultur des Frühmittelalters (Kölner anglistische Arbeiten, xii; 1930); id., History of the Vulgate in England from Alcuin to Roger Bacon. Being an Inquiry into the Text of some English Manuscripts of the Vulgate Gospels (1933). C. H. *Turner (ed.), The Oldest Manuscript of the Vulgate Gospels [St. Gall MS. 1395] (1931; Turner prob. overestimated the importance of this MS.). Beryl Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (1941; ed. 2, 1952), passim. H. F. D. Sparks, 'The Latin Bible' in H. W. Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 100–27. R. Loewe, 'The Medieval History of the Latin Vulgate' in The Cambridge History of the Bible, ii (ed. G. W. H. Lampe; Cambridge, 1969), pp. 102–54; H. F. D. Sparks, 'Jerome as a Biblical Scholar', ib., i (ed. P. R. Ackroyd–C. F. Evans; 1970), pp. 510–41, esp. pp. 517–26. B. Fischer, O.S.B., 'Das Neue Testament in lateinischer Sprache' in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, v; 1972), pp. 1–92. W. E. Plater–H. J. White, A Grammar of the Vulgate (1926). H. J. White in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 873–90, s.v. See also Codex Amiatinus and Codex Fuldensis.

W

WACE, HENRY (1836–1924), Dean of *Canterbury. He was educated at Rugby and Brasenose College, Oxford, and ordained in 1862. In 1863 he became a regular contributor to The Times and, after holding several ecclesiastical appointments, was made chaplain (1872), and later preacher (1880), of Lincoln's Inn. In 1879 he was *Bampton Lecturer at Oxford. In 1883 he was appointed principal of *King's College, London, and in 1896 rector of St. Michael's, Cornhill. From 1903 till his death he was Dean of Canterbury. Wace was a staunch Evangelical and supporter of the Reformation settlement, an admirer of M. *Luther, and equally opposed to the modern methods of 'higher criticism' of the Bible and to the High Church attempts at revising the BCP. He was the editor, with W. Smith, of the Dictionary of Christian Biography (4 vols., 1880–6), with P. *Schaff of the second series of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers (14 vols., 1890–1900), and with C. A. Buchheim of Luther's Primary Works (1896). His own writings include lectures on The Gospel and its Witnesses (1883), Sermons on the Sacrifice of Christ (1898), and The Bible and Modern Investigations (1903), as well as numerous articles in newspapers and periodicals.

A. Cochrane in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 876 f., s.v.

WADDING, LUKE (1588–1657), *Franciscan historian. A native of Waterford, he made his profession in the Franciscan Order at Matozinhos, nr. Oporto, in 1608, studied at Lisbon and Coimbra, and was ordained priest in 1613. In 1617 he became president of the Irish College at Salamanca, and in 1618 theologian to the Spanish Embassy sent to Rome to promote the definition of the *Immaculate Conception. His studies led to his Legatio Philippi III et IV pro definienda controversia Immaculatae Conceptionis (1624). In 1625 he took over the new friary of St. Isidore in Rome, which he developed into a college for Irish Franciscans. The establishment of the Ludovician College for Irish secular clergy followed in 1627. He served as consultor to the *Holy Office, was appointed a member of the commission set up to reform the *Breviary (1629) and the *Missal (1631), and advised the Sacred Congregation of the *Propaganda over the reorganization of the RC Church in Ireland, to which he was largely instrumental in securing the dispatch of a Papal Nuncio. In 1652 he was a member of the commission set up by *Innocent X to investigate *Jansenism. His principal works were the Annales Ordinis Minorum (8 vols., 1625–1654; ed. 3, 25 vols., 1931–5), a monumental collection of material on the history of the Franciscan Order to 1540, with its subsidiary Scriptores Ordinis Minorum (1650; new ed., 1906), which is still indispensable for students of Franciscan history; and his edition of the works of *Duns Scotus (16 vols., 1639; new ed., 26 vols., 1891–5).

B. Jennings, O.F.M. (ed.), Wadding Papers 1614–38 (Irish Manuscripts Commission, Dublin, 1953); id., 'Some Correspondence of Father Luke Wadding, O.F.M.' in Collectanea Hibernica, ii (1959), pp. 66–94. Life by Francis Harold (nephew) originally printed in Epitome to Annales (Rome, 1662), prefixed to Annales, i (ed. 2, Rome, 1731), pp. i–clxxx. J. A. O'Shea, O.S.F., The Life of Father Luke Wadding (Dublin, 1885). F. Casolini, Luca Wadding, O.F.M. L'annalista dei Francescani (Milan, 1936). G. Cleary, Father Luke Wadding and St. Isidore's College, Rome (Rome, 1925). Father Luke Wadding. Commemorative Volume, edited by the Franciscan Fathers of Dún Mhuire, Killeney (1957). C. Mooney, O.F.M., 'The Writings of Father Luke Wadding, O.F.M.' in Franciscan Studies, xviii (1958), pp. 225–39. Edith Pásztor, 'Luca Wadding, editore della "Vita Anselmi episcopi Lucensis"' in A.F.H., liv (1961), pp. 303–28. B. Millett, O.F.M., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 761 f. s.v., with further bibl.

WAILING WALL, known in Jewish tradition as the 'Western Wall', in *Jerusalem. Originally part of the *Temple structure erected by *Herod the Great, since the 7th cent. it has formed the western wall of the Haram-es-Sherif ('The Noble Sanctuary'), which is the third most holy place in the world to Muslims after Mecca and Medina. The wall has been venerated by Jews since the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. They have been accustomed, prob. since the Middle Ages, to lament at this wall the downfall of the Temple and the Holy City and to pray, esp. on the *Sabbath, for their restoration; it is this custom which has given rise to the popular name.

WAKE. A vigil, and hence a holiday. The name (from Lat. vigilia) was originally applied to the all-night *vigil kept, from Anglo-Saxon times onwards, before certain holy-days, but it early came to refer to the feasting and merry-making on the holy-day itself, and then (by the 16th cent.) to a fair held annually at the festival of the local patron saint. The word survives as the name of annual local holidays of two or three days observed by a whole town or village in the Northern and West Midland districts of England. In Ireland a wake is a vigil and feast at a funeral.

WAKE, WILLIAM (1657–1737), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, he went to Paris as chaplain of the English ambassador in 1682, an office to which he owed his acquaintance with *Gallicanism. After his return to England in 1685 he held various ecclesiastical appointments, being made Canon of Christ Church in 1689 and Dean of *Exeter in 1703. In 1705 he became Bp. of *Lincoln and in 1716 Abp. of Canterbury. From 1717 to 1720 he was engaged in negotiations with representatives of Gallicanism, notably L. E. *Dupin, on a plan of reunion between the C of E and the French Church, in which both parties showed themselves ready for concessions. The death of Dupin in 1719, however, checked the project, which would probably have proved unacceptable in any case to both the English and the French clergy. A man of liberal views, Wake was in sympathy with the Nonconformists, and even advocated changes in the BCP to meet their difficulties, though he opposed, in 1718, a bill for modification of the *Corporation and *Test Acts. Among his numerous writings the most important is The State of the Church and Clergy of England (1703), a history of English ecclesiastical synods which was intended as a reply to F. *Atterbury's theories of Convocation. His Principles of the Christian Religion (1700), a commentary on the Church Catechism, became very popular. Wake bequeathed his valuable collections and library to Christ Church, which also possesses a large number of his unpublished manuscripts.

Definitive Life by N. Sykes (2 vols., Cambridge, 1957). J. H. Lupton, Archbishop Wake and the Project of Union (1717–20) between the Gallican and Anglican Churches (1896); E. Préclin, L'Union des Églises gallicane et anglicane. Une tentative au temps de Louis XV. P.-F. le Courayer (de 1681 à 1732) et Guillaume Wake (1928). J. H. Lupton in D.N.B., lviii (1899), p. 445 f., s.v., with reff.

WALAFRID STRABO (c. 808 – 49), i.e. 'Walafrid the Squinter', German theological writer. Educated at the monastery of *Reichenau, and later under *Rabanus Maurus at *Fulda (where he established a lifelong friendship with *Gottschalk), he became Abbot of Reichenau in 838. Before long he was compelled to flee to Speyer, apparently because he had supported Lothair against Charles the Bald on the latter's accession in 840. In 842, however, he was restored to his monastery. He wrote a large number of works, both in poetry and prose, and both secular and religious. Of his theological treatises the most important is his De Exordiis et Incrementis quarundam in Observationibus Ecclesiasticis Rerum, a handbook on matters of liturgical and archaeological interest, of great value for the light it throws on the religious practice of his time. The Glossa Ordinaria* (q.v.) was in the past assigned to him. His poems include the lives of a number of saints.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL, cxiii, cxiv; crit. edd. of his verse, with the Visio, by E. Duemmler in M.G.H., Poetae, ii (1884), pp. 259–473; of his Liber de Exordiis et Incrementis by G. Knoepler (Munich, 1890). A. Jundt, Walafrid Strabon. L'homme et le théologien (Paris thesis; Cahors, 1900); L. Eigl, Walahfrid Strabo. Ein Mönch- und Dichterleben (Vienna, 1908). H. Sierp, 'Walafried Strabos Gedicht über den Gartenbau' in K. Beyerle (ed.), Die Kultur der Abtei Reichenau, ii (1925), pp. 756–72. On other aspects of his life and work, K. Beyerle, ib., i (1925), pp. 92–108, K. Künstle, ib., ii (1925), pp. 706–10, and A. Bergmann, ib., pp. 712–38. K. Beyerle, 'Das Briefbuch Walahfrid Strabos' in Historische Aufsätze Aloys Schulte zum 70. Geburtstag gewidmet (1927), pp. 82–96. B. Bischoff, 'Eine Sammelhandschrift Walahfrid Strabos' in Aus der Welt des Buches. Festgabe zum 70. Geburtstag von Georg Leyh (Beiheft zum Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, lxxv; 1950), pp. 30–48; revised in his Mittelalterliche Studien, ii (Stuttgart, 1967), pp. 34–51. J. de Blic, S.J., 'L'Œuvre exégétique de Walafrid Strabon et la Glossa Ordinaria', ib., xvi (1949), pp. 5–28. M. L. W. Laistner, Thought and Letters in Western Europe A.D. 500 to 900 (1931), pp. 193, 230 f., 252, 260, 276, and 284–7. J. Szövérffy, Weltliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters, i (1970), pp. 571–89. H. Peltier in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3498–3505, s.v. 'Walafrid Strabon'; P. Nober in E.C., xii (1954), cols. 961–3, s.v. 'Valafrid Strabone', for further bibl.

WALBURGA, St. (c. 710 – 79), sister of St. *Willibald and St. Winnebald (d. 761) and Abbess of Heidenheim. Born in England and educated at the abbey at Wimborne, she went at the wish of St. *Boniface to assist in his mission work in Germany. On Winnebald's death she assumed the direction of his double-monastery at Heidenheim, and remained there till her death. Her feast day is observed on 25 Feb. and 1 May. The coincidence of the latter date with an old pagan feast commemorating the beginning of summer, with rites protecting from witchcraft, has given to 1 May the name 'Walpurgis [i.e. Walburga's] Night', e.g. in Goethe's Faust.

AA.SS., Feb. III (1658), pp. 511–72; extracts 'Ex Wolfhardi Haserensis Miraculis S. Waldburgis Monheimensibus' also ed. O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xvi (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 535–55. Francesca M. Steele, The Life of Saint Walburga [1921]. M. Coens, 'Le Séjour légendaire de sainte Walburge à Anvers d'après son office à la collégiale de Zutphen' in Anal. Boll., lxxx (1962), pp. 345–60. A. Bang-Kaup in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), col. 928, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to St. Willibald, for whom the sources are historically more reliable.

WALCH, JOHANN GEORG (1693–1775), German Protestant theologian. In 1718 he became professor in the philosophical, and in 1724 in the theological, faculty at Jena. He belonged to the Orthodox School. Among his many writings was Historische und theologische Einleitung in die religiösen Streitigkeiten welche sonderlich ausser der ev.-lutherischen Kirche entstanden (5 vols., 1733–6). He also produced an edition of M. *Luther's works in 24 vols. (1740–52). Two of his sons, Johann Ernst Immanuel Walch (1725–78) and Christian Wilhelm Franz Walch (1726–84), were also distinguished theologians.

W. Moeller–G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 792–7; xxiv (1913), p. 624.

WALDEN, ROGER (d. 1406), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Essex, he rose to a position of importance in the *Channel Islands and held livings at Fenny Drayton, Leicestershire, and Burton in Kendale. In 1387 he became Archdeacon of *Winchester and from then onwards, under court influence, advanced rapidly. From 1387 to 1392 he was treasurer of Calais. In 1395 he was created Treasurer of England and, continuing to hold numerous other preferments, Dean of *York. On *Arundel's banishment in 1397 Richard II secured his provision to the see of Canterbury from the Pope; but when Arundel returned with Henry of Lancaster (1399), Walden's property was plundered and his register destroyed. On 10 Jan. 1400 he was committed to the Tower on a charge of complicity in the Epiphany plot against Henry IV, but liberated about a month later. In 1405 he succeeded Robert Braybrooke as Bp. of London. He died at Much Hadham, Herts, on 6 Jan. 1406. A MS. collection of chronological tables (Cotton MS. Julius B. XIII), known as the 'Historia Mundi', has been wrongly attributed to him.

J. H. Wylie, History of England under Henry the Fourth, iii (1896), pp. 123–8. J. Tait in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 24–6, s.v., with further reff.

WALDENSES, also 'Vaudois'. This small Christian community, which still survives in Piedmont ('Chiesa Evangelica Valdese'), had its origin in the 'poor men of Lyons' organized in the 12th cent. by Peter Valdes (formerly, but incorrectly, spelt Waldo) of Lyons, from whom it took its name. The view that 'Waldenses' was derived from the Lat. vallis ('valley') is a more recent invention. The obscurities which surround the early history of the community have been increased by the claims of the Waldenses themselves and of some older Protestant historians on their behalf that they preserved a pure and uncorrupted form of primitive Christianity. It was argued that their Church was founded by St. *Paul on his way to Spain (so *Olivetan, T. *Beza); or that their separate existence dated from the time of *Constantine (d. 337), when the Catholic Church was corrupted by *Sylvester's acceptance of temporal wealth and power (so certain of the early Waldenses, as reported by the inquisitor Moneta); or (a less fantastic view) that their origin was to be traced to the reforming work of *Claudius of Turin (J. Leger, A. Muston). Hardly more probable is the view that they were an offshoot of the *Albigenses (G. S. Faber).

Valdes was a rich merchant of Lyons who died at an unknown place and date between 1205 and 1218. (The name Peter is prefixed only in sources later than c. 1368.) In or soon after 1173 he was moved by hearing from a jongleur the story of St. Alexis (a 5th cent. Roman patrician who left a wealthy bride for a life of mendicancy and almsgiving in Syria), and by Christ's words recorded in Mt. 19. 21, to distribute his property among the poor. Having provided for and separated from his wife, and having placed his daughters in Robert of Arbrissel's abbey of *Fontevrault, he became an itinerant and mendicant preacher; he quickly attracted a following of both men and women. The earliest Waldensian preaching was directed against both the worldliness of the clergy and the dualist heresy of the *Cathars. At the Third *Lateran Council (1179) Valdes and his followers sought ecclesiastical recognition and produced vernacular translations from the Bible; Pope *Alexander III expressed approval of Valdes' vow of voluntary poverty, but Valdes and his companions were forbidden to preach except by invitation of the clergy. Valdes soon ceased to obey this prohibition. In spite of the meticulous orthodoxy of the profession of faith which Valdes made c. 1179–80 to Cardinal Henry of Albano, the Council of Verona (1184), under Pope Lucius III, placed the Cathars and the 'poor men of Lyons' equally under the ban of excommunication. Valdes and his followers therefore increasingly organized themselves apart from the Church, ignored its decrees and sanctions, and appointed their own ministers. They tended to doubt the validity of sacraments administered by unworthy ministers and to avoid on scriptural grounds such practices as prayers for the dead and the veneration of saints and relics. Above all they insisted on the right and duty of preaching. They also refused to take oaths or to countenance killing, whether judicially or in warfare. They thus came to stand apart both from the Church and from lay society.

The Waldensians grew rapidly in numbers, esp. among the lower classes. They spread first in S. France and Spain, and then in Germany, Piedmont and Lombardy. After Valdes' death they developed no central leadership or organization, though there were informal connections between the Waldensians in different regions. From the time of Pope *Innocent III, and esp. with the growth of the *Inquisition, they suffered severe persecution, and in Lombardy, France, and Spain their numbers dwindled. In Italy, however, and particularly in the mountain valleys of Savoy and Piedmont, Waldensian communities survived in the face of harassment by the House of Savoy. They also persisted in Germany, despite such attempts to suppress them as those of *Conrad of Marburg (1231–3) and such propaganda as the preaching of the Franciscan Berthold of Regensburg (d. 1272) and the writings attributed to *David of Augsburg. From Germany they expanded into Bohemia, Poland and Hungary. In Bohemia Waldensian preachers later became associated with the *Hussites, although Waldensians and Hussites were in important respects dissimilar, the former denying but the latter accepting the authority of the RC Church.

In the 16th cent. contact was quickly made with the Reformers. In 1522 the Bohemian Hussites (then often known as 'Waldenses') made overtures to M. *Luther. A little later the Waldenses proper of the Cottian Alps approached the S. German and Swiss Reformers. In 1532 a synod was held at Chanforans in the valley of the Angrogne which was attended by Protestant representatives, among them G. *Farel and Olivetan. It adopted a new Confession of Faith which included the doctrine of predestination; formally renounced all recognition of the RC Church; accepted clerical marriage; and ordered communal worship to be henceforth open and public. For a brief space they enjoyed in Piedmont a relative measure of freedom and built many churches ('temples'). A fierce attack was made on them under Charles Emmanuel II, Duke of Savoy, which, largely through J. *Milton's famous sonnet (1655), aroused much feeling in England and led to O. *Cromwell's proclamation of a solemn fast and active intervention. The outcome was twenty years' liberty, secured at last by the 'Patente of Turin' (14 Feb. 1664). After the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) many were compelled to cross the mountains in terrible conditions to Switzerland. Their outward circumstances improved in the 18th cent., but they were still not allowed to hold real property or to have physicians of their own faith. After some vacillation, Napoleon granted them a constitution in May 1805, which was abolished, however, by Victor Emmanuel in 1814; and it was not until 1848 that Charles Albert gave them real political and religious freedom. Meanwhile they received much active encouragement from various non-Roman Churches. Their existence was brought to the notice of many Englishmen by W. S. Gilly's Narrative of an Excursion to the Mountains of Piedmont and Researches among the Vaudois or Waldenses (1824), and J. C. Beckwith (1789–1862), an officer who lost a leg at Waterloo, was induced by this book to settle among them and devote his life to their welfare. Beckwith established 120 schools and secured the reintroduction of the Italian language (in place of French) in their services. Their membership today is said to be about 20,000. Their ministers have long been known as '*barbes' (q.v.). They possess a theological school which was founded at Torre Pellice near Turin and moved in 1861 to Florence and in 1920 to Rome.

The earliest evidence for Valdes is to be found in the Chronicle of the 'Anonymus Laudunensis', ed. A. Cartellieri–W. Stechele (Leipzig, 1909), pp. 20–22. See also A. Lecoy de la Marche (ed.), Anecdotes historiques, légendes et apologues tirés du recueil inédit d'Étienne de Bourbon (1887), pp. 290–93. Other sources in J. Fearns (ed.), Ketzer und Ketzerbekämpfung im Hochmittelalter (Göttingen, 1968), pp. 38–51; A. Dondaine, O.P., 'Aux origines du valdéisme. Une profession de foi de Valdès' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xvi (1946), pp. 191–235, incl. text; T. J. Pons (ed.), Actes des synodes des Églises vaudoises 1692–1854 (Torre Pellice, 1948). G. Gonnet (ed.), Enchiridion Fontium Valdensium, i (Collana della Facoltà Valdense de Teologia, Rome, 1958), with full bibl.; Vaudois Languedociens et Pauvres Catholiques, with introd. by M. H. Vicaire, O.P. (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, ii; 1967). Classic works by S. Morland, The History of the Evangelical Churches of the Valleys of Piedmont (1658; the author had been Cromwell's emissary to Piedmont), and J. Leger, Histoire générale des Églises évangéliques de Piémont, ou Vaudoises (Leyden, 1669). More recent studies include W. Jones, The History of the Waldenses (1812; revised ed., 2 vols., 1816); A. Monastier, Histoire de l'Église vaudoise depuis son origine, et des Vaudois du Piémont jusqu'à nos jours (2 vols., 1847; Eng. tr., 1848); A. Muston, L'Israël des Alpes. Première histoire complète des Vaudois du Piémont et de leurs colonies (4 vols., 1851; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1857); W. Dieckhoff, Die Waldenser im Mittelalter. Zwei historische Untersuchungen (1851); J. J. *Herzog, Die romanischen Waldenser (1853); J. A. Wylie, History of the Waldenses [1880]; A. Bérard, Les Vaudois. Leur histoire sur deux versants des Alpes du IVe siècle au XVIIIe (Lyons, 1892). More critical works include Ernesto Comba, Storia dei Valdesi (Torre Pellice, 1923; revised ed., 1930); J. Jalla, Histoire des Vaudois des Alpes et de leurs colonies (Pignerol, 1926); H. Grundmann, Religiöse Bewegungen im Mittelalter (Historische Studien, cclxvii; 1935; repr. with additional material as ed. 2, 1961); G. Koch, Frauenfrage und Ketzertum im Mittelalter (Forschungen zur mittelalterlichen Geschichte, ix; 1962). Christine Thouzellier, Catharisme et valdéisme en Languedoc à la fin du XIIe et au début du XIIIe siècle (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de Paris, Série 'Recherches', xxvii; 1966; ed. 2, 1969). K. V. Selge, Die ersten Waldenser (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxxvii; 2 vols., 1967). W. Erk (ed.), Waldenser. Geschichte und Gegenwart (Frankfurt a.Main, 1971). G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, ii (1967), pp. 445–50, 452–85. G. B. Watts, The Waldenses in the New World (Durham, N.C., 1941). J. H. Todd, The Books of the Vaudois. The Waldensian Manuscripts preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin (1865). A. Armand-Hugon–G. Gonnet, Bibliografia valdese (Torre Pellice, 1953). H. Grundmann, Bibliographie zur Ketzergeschichte des Mittelalters, 1900–1966 (Sussidi eruditi, xx; 1967), pp. 41–45. H. Böhmer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 799–840, s.v. 'Waldenser', with details of sources and bibl. to date; W. F. Adeney in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 663–73, s.v. 'Waldenses'; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2586–2600, s.v. 'Vaudois'.

WALDENSTRÖM, PAUL PETER (1838–1917), Swedish preacher and Free Churchman. As a young man he held various teaching appointments. In 1864 he was ordained a pastor. Attaching himself to the revivalist movement of C. O. Rosenius (d. 1868), he succeeded him as editor of the Pietisten, a widely circulating revivalist newspaper. In various writings between 1872 and 1875 he put forward a theory of the *Atonement inconsistent with *Lutheran orthodoxy: man had to be reconciled to God, not God to man, and God sent His Son, not in wrath but in love. He also rejected the doctrine that when Christ died His atoning work was finished. A long controversy ensued, and Waldenström became the founder of the largest sectarian movement in Sweden. In 1905 he took over the direction of the separatist Swedish Mission Society (Svenska Missionsförbundet), which, besides work in Sweden, established missions in the Congo, China, and Chinese Turkestan. From 1884 to 1905 he was a member of the Swedish Riksdag.

Collected Sermons, 2 vols., Stockholm, 1918–19; Memoirs, 1838–75, ed. B. Nyrén (ib., 1928). There are English translations by J. G. Princell, with notes and introdd., of Waldenström's meditations on The Blood of Jesus (Chicago, 1888) and on The Reconciliation (ib., 1888). Studies by N. P. Ollén (Stockholm, 1917), ed. A. Ohldén (Uppsala, 1917), E. Leufvén (ib., 1920), E. Newman (Stockholm, 1932), and W. Bredberg (Uppsala, 1948). C. Olsson, Försoningen enlight C. O. Rosenius och P. Waldenström (1928). E. Beyreuther in R.G.G. (ed. 3), vi (1962), col. 1534, s.v.

WALES, Christianity in. The early history of Christianity in Wales is obscure. The archaeological and literary evidence for the period before 500 is slight, but the writings of *Gildas (d. c. 570) (though he names no single ecclesiastic of his own times) have been held to suggest continuity of belief and organization from late Roman times. The 6th cent. is known as 'The Age of the Saints' (i.e. monks), but their lives, compiled at least five centuries later, are unsafe foundations for detailed historical reconstruction. In SE. Wales Cadoc (founder of the monastery of Llancarfan), *Dubricius, and *Illtyd were apparently followed elsewhere in the south by a more ascetic group, *Teilo, Padarn and *David; Seiriol, Cadfan, Cybi and *Deiniol were active in the north. According to the lives of these saints their journeys along the western sea-routes linked *Scotland, *Ireland, Cornwall and Brittany with Wales; tombstones provide independent evidence of this activity. The monasteries they founded (esp. *Bangor Iscoed) were at first very large and were the religious centres of large districts; in time they came into the hands of smaller communities (clasau) of often hereditary clergy, clerical marriage being widespread in Wales. Those on the coast were despoiled by the Norsemen. At some of the 6th cent. monastic foundations the title of abbot was from the first merged in that of bishop, and four of them (*Llandaff, *St. Asaph, *St Davids and Bangor) eventually emerged as territorial bishoprics, though others (esp. Llanbadarn Fawr) are said to have been ruled by abbot-bishops for some time. There are, however, many gaps in the Welsh episcopal lists until the 12th century.

The meeting of British bishops with St. *Augustine c. 603 failed to produce any union between the *Celtic and Roman missions. After the Synod of *Whitby (664) the Welsh Church eventually adopted the Roman date for Easter from 768, but it generally resisted the claims of *Canterbury to supremacy over Wales and maintained closer contacts with the Celtic Church in Ireland, Scotland and Brittany than with England.

The Norman conquest of England and the subsequent conquest of parts of Wales by Norman lords reopened the Church in Wales to English and Continental influences. Abp. *Anselm won the first successes in the long struggle to subject all four Welsh sees to Canterbury; this was eventually achieved despite the efforts of *Giraldus Cambrensis. Twelfth cent. bishops began the definition of diocesan and parochial boundaries: parishes in the north were generally large and in episcopal patronage; those in the south were small and in lay or monastic patronage. The system of *tithes was instituted, and by the end of the 13th cent. an administrative and judicial organization was in being and clasau replaced by cathedral chapters. Leadership in learning passed from notable individual families (esp. that of Sulien) to the religious houses. Latin monasticism came to Wales when the early Norman invaders founded *Benedictine houses (e.g. Chepstow, c. 1071) on the borders of the S. and SE.; later Normans founded some *Cistercian houses (e.g. *Tintern), but the Cistercians' initial austerity and their lack of Norman connexions appealed strongly to the Welsh princes, who gave them a ready welcome and liberal endowments at Strata Florida (1164) and elsewhere. Houses of other orders were also established.

Pressure from the last native Welsh prince, Llewelyn ap Gruffydd (d. 1282), led the Welsh bishops to support Edward I, whose conquest of Wales was followed by a relatively stable and prosperous half-century for the Welsh Church. But plague and economic depression, and resentment at the exploitation of ecclesiastical revenues and appointments in the interests of the English state, led many of the Welsh secular clergy and religious to support the revolt of Owain Glyn Dwr against Henry IV in 1400. Its failure strengthened the position of the secular administration and the bishops (many of them English). The pre-*Reformation Church in Wales suffered to a special degree from inertia; *Lollardy, humanism and *Lutheranism made little impression, and the religious houses became seriously undermanned.

The Tudor monarchs enjoyed the advantage of Welsh descent; higher clergy and parvenu gentry accepted their policies, and the breach with Rome and the *Dissolution of the monasteries (whose lands found ready buyers) aroused little opposition; the greatest upheaval was caused by *Mary Tudor's brief attempt to impose clerical *celibacy. *Elizabeth I appointed resident, active, Welsh-speaking bishops, who imposed the 1559 settlement. The *Counter-Reformation made little impact in Wales, though some families of gentry remained *recusant and a few RCs were executed. The educational standards of the Welsh clergy were improved; medieval Welsh students had frequented Oxford, where Jesus College, founded in 1571, developed spontaneously into a college for Wales attended by future Welsh clergy. Nine-tenths of the output of the Tudor and Stuart printing presses in Wales consisted of religious works, esp. the *Welsh Bible and Prayer Book, authorized by an Act of 1563; Welsh became the language of Protestantism in Wales and a rift gradually developed between the anglicized squires and clergy and their Welsh-speaking parishioners.

The foundation of the 'gathered' Church at Llanfaches (west of Chepstow) in 1639 represents the faint beginnings of Nonconformity, which spread from England. Wales was mainly Royalist in the Civil War, but a more rapid growth of sects followed the Commonwealth's Act for the Propagation of the Gospel in Wales (1650) and the consequent activities of such new 'saints' as the *Fifth Monarchist Vavasor Powell (1617–70) from Heyop (near Knighton). After the Anglican reaction of 1660–2, Nonconformists (mainly in the SE.) formed only 5 per cent. of the population in 1676; these were mostly *Baptists and *Independents, with some *Presbyterians and *Quakers, but in and after 1682 many Welsh Quakers and Baptists emigrated to Pennsylvania. The Welsh sees were poor and for well over a century after the Restoration they were usually held by absentees hopeful of translation: that of Llandaff was for some time held with the Deanery of *St. Paul's. The undoubted distinction as scholars of such bishops as B. *Hoadly, T. *Tanner, S. *Horsley and E. *Copleston did not benefit their dioceses, and no Welsh bishop between 1715 and 1870 could preach in Welsh when appointed. Lay impropriation of tithes ensured that most parish clergy remained poor and ill-educated, though Bp. T. Burgess of St. Davids tried to raise the standards of the clergy by the foundation of St. David's College, Lampeter, in 1822. Great work had also been done in promoting popular education by Griffith Jones (q.v.).

In the early 19th cent. the influence of the Church was at its lowest ebb. *Methodism, preached by H. *Harris, organized by Thomas Charles (1755–1814) and assisted by the popular hymns of William Williams of Pantycelyn (1717–1791), spread widely, but its adherents remained within the Church until the (predestinarian) *Calvinistic Methodists (the only Christian denomination to originate in Wales) broke away in 1811. The (abortive) proposal to amalgamate the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph in the 1840s was unpopular, while the zeal and teaching of *Tractarian clergy (such as I. *Williams) met with little sympathy. While the Church failed to adapt to a great increase in population, Nonconformity grew: in 1800 there were 50 Nonconformist chapels in the diocese of Llandaff, but in 1850 there were some 550. A split developed in Wales: the landowners and many ironmasters were English-speaking, Anglican and Tory; the tenant farmers and the new miners and industrial workers were Welsh-speaking, Nonconformist and radical. Nonconformists appear to have formed about three-quarters of the Church- or chapel-going population in 1851, but there was an Anglican revival under Bps. C. *Thirlwall at St. Davids (1840–74), T. Vowler Short at St. Asaph (1846–70), A. Ollivant at Llandaff (1849–82) and J. C. Campbell at Bangor (1859–90). In Llandaff, the most industrialized diocese, Dissent and the Church under the Evangelical Ollivant at first co-operated, esp. in the religious revival of 1859, but the co-operation ended after 1862. The Temperance Movement (mainly Nonconformist) won a victory with the Welsh Sunday Closing Act of 1881, only recently and partly set aside.

The Disestablishment of the Irish Church (1869), the Englishness of the Church in Wales, and Nonconformist fears that the reviving Church might become the largest single religious body in Wales, led to demands for the disestablishment of the Welsh Church, whose privileged position led to a tithe war, e.g. in Flintshire, in 1886–8, and to disputes over education. The demand for disestablishment was ably resisted by A. G. Edwards (1848–1937), Bp. of St. Asaph from 1889, and John Owen, Bp. of St. Davids 1897–1926; but Nonconformist numbers increased again with the religious revival of 1904 (from which the Church stood aloof), and an Act of 1914 disestablished the Welsh Church. (In parliament three English bishops, including C. *Gore, supported the measure.) With financial safeguards added by the Welsh Church (Temporalities) Act of 1919, disestablishment took effect in 1920, when a separate province was created. There are six dioceses (Monmouth, and Swansea and Brecon having been carved out of Llandaff and St. Davids respectively); the bishops are nominated by electors representing various elements in the Church, and one of the diocesans is elected by his fellows to the rank of Archbishop of Wales, A. G. Edwards (1920) being the first. The Church in Wales is no longer Eglwys Loegr (an 'alien Church') over-dependent on the landowners, and it provides regular services in Welsh as well as in English; after 1920 it increased in both influence and numbers. Welsh Nonconformity lost a unifying objective, and modern Welsh nationalism has turned to secular objectives. Of Free Church bodies the Calvinistic Methodists are the most numerous; their Church is Presbyterian in government and is a member of the World Presbyterian Alliance. The Baptists and Independents also remain strong, but among Wesleyans there has been a particularly marked decline in numbers. The RCs are a small but vigorous community, recruited chiefly from Irish immigrant stock in the SE.; there is a RC Abp. of Cardiff and a Bp. of Menevia.

See also Welsh Bible and Prayer Book.

There are a number of studies in Welsh. Works in English include A. G. Edwards, Landmarks in the History of the Welsh Church (1912); J. E. de Hirsch-Davies, A Popular History of the Church in Wales from the Beginning to the Present Day (1912); D. A. Jones, A History of the Church in Wales (Carmarthen, 1926). A. W. Wade-Evans, Welsh Christian Origins (Oxford, 1934). D. Walker (ed.), A History of the Church in Wales (Penarth, 1976). E. G. Bowen, The Settlements of the Celtic Saints in Wales (Cardiff, 1954; ed. 2, 1956). Nora K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958). Lives of St. Dubricius, St. Illtyd, St. Paulinus, St. Teilo and St. Oudoceus, by G. H. Doble, orig. publd. between 1942 and 1944, collected and ed. by D. S. Evans, Lives of the Welsh Saints (Cardiff, 1971), with introductory essay and extensive reff., pp. 1–55. G. Williams, The Welsh Church from Conquest to Reformation (1962). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272 (1946 ff.). L. Thomas, The Reformation in the Old Diocese of Llandaff (Cardiff, 1930). E. T. Davies, Religion in the Industrial Revolution in South Wales (Pantyfedwen Lectures, 1962; Cardiff, 1965). C. A. H. Green, The Setting of the Constitution of the Church in Wales (1937). P. M. H. Bell, Disestablishment in Ireland and Wales (C.H.S., 1969), pp. 226–329. J. E. de Hirsch-Davies, Catholicism in Mediaeval Wales (1916). D. Attwater, The Catholic Church in Modern Wales. A Record of the Past Century (1935). T. Rees, History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales from its Rise to the Present Time (1861; enlarged ed., 1883). H. E. Lewis, Nonconformity in Wales (1904). G. F. Nuttall, The Welsh Saints 1640–1660 (Cardiff, 1957). There is also much information in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Church of England and Other Religious Bodies in Wales and Monmouthshire (Parliamentary Papers, England, 1910, vols. xiv–xix [Cd. 5432–9]) and many relevant entries in The Dictionary of Welsh Biography down to 1940 under the auspices of the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion (1959). Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales (1947 ff.). See also bibl. to Celtic Church; also to Methodism, &c.

WALL, WILLIAM (1647–1728), Anglican theologian. Educated at Queen's College, Oxford, he became vicar of Shoreham, Kent, in 1674, and rector of Milton-next-Gravesend in 1708. His chief work is The History of Infant Baptism (2 vols., 1705). Designed to combat the arguments of the *Baptists against Infant Baptism, it consisted in a learned exposition of the teaching of the Fathers, supported by ample quotations and taking into account recent controversies. It has remained the English classic on the subject. His other works include Brief Critical Notes, especially on the Various Readings of the New Testament Books (1730) and Critical Notes on the Old Testament (1734).

The History of Infant Baptism . . . Together with Mr. Gale's Reflections, and Dr. Wall's Defence, ed. H. Cotton (4 vols., Oxford, 1835–6), with introd., vol. i, pp. v–xxvii; an abridged ed. of the History was publ. by W. H. Spencer (London, 1848). T. Cooper in D.N.B., lix (1899), p. 97, s.v., with reff.

WALLOON CONFESSION (1561), The. See Belgic Confession, The.

WALSINGHAM (Norfolk), place of pilgrimage. A replica of the Holy House of *Nazareth, said to have been built there in the 11th cent., made the Walsingham pilgrimage one of the most important in England in the Middle Ages. The shrine was destroyed in 1538, but the pilgrimage has been revived in the present century both by Anglicans and RCs.

D. *Erasmus, Pilgrimages to Saint Mary of Walsingham and Saint Thomas of Canterbury, tr. into Eng. by J. G. Nichols (1849), pp. 11–43 and 82–110. The Foundation of the Chapel of Walsingham, orig. pr. by Richard Pynson (c. 1493), repr. in H. Huth (ed.), Fugitive Tracts Series, i (1875), No. 2 (separate pagination). H. P. Feasey, O.S.B., Our Ladye of Walsingham. A History of the World-renowned Shrine and Priory of the Blessed Virgin at Walsingham in Norfolk (Weston-super-Mare, 1901); H. M. Gillet, Walsingham and its Shrine (1934); J. C. Dickinson, The Shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham (1956). [J.] C. Stephenson, Walsingham Way (1970). J. Lee Warner, 'Walsingham Priory' in The Archaeological Journal, xiii (1856), pp. 115–33; T. J. Pettigrew, 'Walsingham Priory' in The Journal of the British Archaeological Association, xxxvi (1880), pp. 129–36. J. C. Cox in V.C.H., Norfolk, ii, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 394–401, with reff.

WALTER, HUBERT. See Hubert Walter.

WALTER DE STAPELDON. See Stapeldon, Walter de.

WALTER OF ST.-VICTOR (d. after 1180), prior of the *Augustinian Canons of St.-Victor (see Victorines). He was the author of a highly controversial work, 'Contra Quatuor Labyrinthos Franciae' (after 1179), which was directed chiefly against *Abelard (whom he believed to have written the 'Sententiae Divinitatis'), *Peter Lombard, Peter of Poitiers (d. 1205), and *Gilbert de la Porrée. Its violent attack on the dialectical method had little effect on his contemporaries.

The 'Contra Quatuor Labyrinthos Franciae', ed. P. Glorieux, in A.H.D.L.M.A., xix for 1952 (1953), pp. 187–335. H. *Denifle, O.P., 'Die Sentenzen Abaelards und die Bearbeitungen seiner Theologia vor Mitte des 12. Jhs. I. Walter von St. Victor und die Sententiae Divinitatis' in Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, i (1885), pp. 404–17. R. Studeny, S.V.D., 'Walter of St.-Victor and the Apologia de Verbo Incarnato' in Gregorianum, xviii (1937), pp. 579–85. J. Chatillon, 'Un Sermon théologique de Gauthier de Saint-Victor égaré parmi les œuvres du Prieur Richard' in Revue du Moyen Âge latin, viii (1952), pp. 43–50. P. Glorieux, 'Mauvaise Action et mauvais travail. Le "Contra quatuor labyrinthos Franciae" ' in R.T.A.M., xxi (1954), pp. 179–93. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Le Mouvement théologique du XIIe siècle (Études d'Histoire des Dogmes et d'ancienne Littérature ecclésiastique, 1914), pp. 158–60 and 268 f. (ed. 2, Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, x, 1948, pp. 260–3 and 404 f.).

WALTON, BRIAN (c. 1600–61), Bp. of *Chester and editor of the 'London *Polyglot Bible'. He was educated at Magdalene College and Peterhouse, Cambridge, and ordained in 1623. In 1628 he became rector of St. Martin's Orgar in London, where he took an active part in the controversy between the clergy and the citizens on the subject of the city tithes. His over-zealous defence of the claims of the clergy, added to his pronounced Laudian sympathies, led to his being accused in Parliament and deprived of his livings (1641). After a short term of imprisonment he resided at Oxford for some years. The Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, which is among the first books in England to have been printed by subscription, was begun in 1653, and its six vols. of OT, Apocrypha, NT, and appendices were completed in 1657. Altogether nine languages are represented, though no individual book of the Bible is printed in more than eight versions. The work, which has not yet been superseded, is esp. useful because of its lucid arrangement. It was criticized by J. *Owen in his Considerations, to which Walton replied in an able defence entitled The Considerator Considered (1659). Walton's merits as a scholar were officially recognized at the Restoration, when he was appointed Bp. of Chester in 1660.

H. J. Todd, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Right Rev. Brian Walton, Lord Bishop of Chester (2 vols., 1821). A. Fox, John Mill and Richard Bentley. A Study of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament, 1675–1729 (1954), pp. 47–9 and passim. D. S. Margoliouth in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 268–71, s.v.

WALTON, IZAAK (1593–1683), English author. A native of Stafford, he went to London, where he settled as an ironmonger in the parish of St. Dunstan (c. 1614) and soon became a friend of the vicar, J. *Donne. A strong High Churchman and Royalist, he retired from business after the battle of Marston Moor (1644), and spent most of the rest of his life as a welcome guest in the families of many eminent ecclesiastics, e.g. with G. *Morley, Bp. of Winchester, at Farnham Castle. His Compleat Angler (1653) breathes the simplicity, charm, and gentle piety of his nature-loving soul. He made a notable contribution to Christian biography in his Lives of J. Donne (1640), H. Wotton (1651), R. *Hooker (1665), G. *Herbert (1670), and R. *Sanderson (1678). Based on personal knowledge and extensive investigation, they are remarkable for their beauty of expression and sincerity and for their author's understanding of his subjects. They are also valuable to the historian as contemporary documents.

R. H. Shepherd (ed.), Waltonia. Inedited Remains in Verse and Prose of Izaak Walton (London, 1878). The Compleat Angler, the Lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert and Sanderson, with Love and Truth and Miscellaneous Writings, ed. G. [L.] Keynes (London, 1929). Lives also ed. G. Saintsbury (World's Classics, 1927) and S. B. Carter (London, 1951), with introd., pp. xi–xxi. S. Martin, Izaak Walton and his Friends (1903). T. Zouch, The Life of Isaac Walton; including Notices of his Contemporaries (1823); E. Marston, Thomas Ken and Izaak Walton. A Sketch of their Lives and Family Connection (1908), pp. 81–213; D. Novarr, The Making of Walton's Lives (Ithaca, N.Y., 1958). C. J. Sisson, The Judicious Marriage of Mr. Hooker and the Birth of The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1940), pp. ix–xiv and passim. J. [E.] Butt, Biography in the hands of Walton, Johnson, and Boswell (Los Angeles, 1966), pp. 1–18. Id., 'A Bibliography of Izaak Walton's Lives' in Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, ii (1930), pp. 329–40. A. Lang [–X.] in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 273–7.

WANDERING JEW, The. A Jew who, acc. to popular legend, taunted Christ on His way to crucifixion and was doomed to wander over the earth till the Last Day. The legend, which first appeared in a pamphlet published in 1602, professedly at *Leyden, immediately became popular throughout the Protestant world and was known in Britain by 1625. Recorded meetings with the Jew in various places and at various dates range from one at Hamburg in 1542 (mentioned in the original pamphlet) to one at Salt Lake City in 1868; but whether they were purely fictitious or some impostor played the part is uncertain. There existed in the 13th cent. a somewhat similar legend. Roger of Wendover, e.g., chronicles that some natives of Armenia who visited England in 1228 alleged that St. *Joseph of Arimathaea had been recently seen in their own country under the name of 'Cartaphilis', and that he had confessed to having taunted Christ as He went to His death.

M. D. Conway, The Wandering Jew (1881). L. Neubaur, Die Sage vom Ewigen Juden untersucht (1884; revised ed., 1893); G. Paris, Légendes du moyen âge (1903), pp. 149–221. W. Zirus, Der ewige Jude in der Dichtung vornehmlich in der englischen und deutschen (Palaestra, clxii; 1928), and other works of this author. G. K. Anderson, The Legend of the Wandering Jew (Providence, R.I., 1965); also earlier artt. by the same author.

WAR, Christian Attitude to. It has always been recognized that in a world wholly governed by Christian principles war would be ruled out as at variance with the moral teaching of Christ, esp. as contained in the *Sermon on the Mount (Mt. 5–7), and the theology of the *Incarnation. But since Christians are also citizens of a secular order in which the exercise of force is necessary to maintain the authority of law it has been widely, but far from universally, held that the method of war and the active participation of Christians in it are on occasion morally defensible and even praiseworthy. In early times, when the form of civil government was essentially pagan, some ecclesiastical enactments were made which seemed to forbid Christians to take part in military service (St. *Hippolytus's Ap. Trad., 17–19; *Nicaea, can. 12), while *Tertullian (De Corona Militis; from his *Montanist period) and *Lactantius (Div. Inst., VI. xx. 16) also expressly condemned it. On the other hand, there were numbers of Christians in the army from the 2nd cent. onwards (see Thundering Legion, also Theban Legion).

From the time of *Constantine, Christians were less troubled by scruples about participation in war. St. *Augustine defended it when undertaken for the good of society (Ep. 138, ad Volusianum), arguing that it was justified when the end of war is peace (Ep. 189, ad Bonifacium). The *Crusades are the classic instance of warfare in defence of supposed religious ends. But the constant wars of all kinds in which Christians in the Middle Ages found themselves engaged led to a discrimination by moral theologians between wars in which a Christian legitimately could and could not take part. *Thomas Aquinas lays down three conditions for a 'just war': viz., (i) it must be on the authority of the sovereign (auctoritas principis); (ii) the cause must be just (justa causa); and (iii) the belligerents should have a rightful intention (recta intentio), intending the advancement of good or the avoidance of evil (S.Th., II. ii, q. 40, de bello). Similar lists of conditions were drawn up by other medieval moralists. F. de *Vitoria (d. 1546) insisted on the further condition, of which much has been made by recent Catholic moralists, that the war must be waged by 'proper means' (debito modo). The Anglican Reformers dealt with the subject briefly in the *Thirty-Nine Articles (art. 37; note justa bella in the Latin text).

In modern times 'Absolute Pacifism', i.e. the doctrine that warfare is in all circumstances forbidden by the Gospel, has been upheld by the *Anabaptists, the *Quakers and L. *Tolstoy. In comparatively recent times, esp. in Great Britain, it has been widely defended on humanitarian, and sometimes even on frankly hedonistic, grounds as well as on Christian principles. Leading exponents of it in the inter-War years (1918–39) were C. J. Cadoux, H. R. L. *Sheppard, and C. E. Raven. Another group of (mainly RC) moralists (F. Stratmann, G. Vann, E. I. Watkin, E. *Gill) argued against the permissibility of participation in modern warfare on the ground that a 'just war' is nowadays not possible, since, e.g., the means (bombing of civilians, &c.) are never 'proper' (debito modo). The development of total methods of warfare during the Second World War (1939–1945), culminating in the use of nuclear weapons, gave new perspectives to the debate. In Great Britain the most widely based expression by Christians of opposition to war has been in the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (a secular organization founded in 1958), in which such leading Churchmen as G. K. A. *Bell, Canon L. J. Collins of *St. Paul's, and Donald (later Lord) Soper aligned themselves with a wide spectrum of political opinion. The Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament gained wide publicity in the early 1960s through the Easter Marches from Aldermaston, but it has since tended (like similar organizations in other Western countries) towards fragmentation and replacement by more avowedly political movements. While the question of the legitimacy of the use of force, and the kind of force which may be used, are still questions of debate and misgiving among Christians, the main stream of Christian thought has not supported the modern pacifist movements, on the ground that there are even worse evils than physical destruction.

C. J. Cadoux, The Early Christian Attitude to War (1919); F. Stratmann, O.P., Weltkirche und Weltfriede (1924; Eng. tr., The Church and War, 1928); H. R. L. Sheppard, We Say No! (1934); R. Regout, S.J., La Doctrine de la guerre juste de saint Augustin à nos jours (1935); J. Eppstein, The Catholic Tradition of the Law of Nations (1935); G. H. C. Macgregor, The New Testament Basis of Pacifism (1936); C. E. Raven, War and the Christian (1938); H. Beevor, Peace and Pacifism (1938); N. Micklem, May God Defend the Right! (1939); G. Vann, O.P., Morality and War (1939); R. *Niebuhr, Why the Christian Church is not Pacifist (1940); This War and Christian Ethics. A Symposium ed. by A. Sampson (1940); J. Lasserre, La Guerre et l'évangile (1953; Eng. tr., 1962); R. H. Bainton, Christian Attitudes to War and Peace. A historical summary and critical re-evaluation (New York [1960]; London, 1961); Joan D. Tooke, The Just War in Aquinas and Grotius (1965); J. W. Douglass, The Non-Violent Cross. A Theology of Revolution and Peace (1968); F. H. Russell, The Just War in the Middle Ages (Cambridge, 1975).

WAR, Participation of the Clergy in. Since the Middle Ages clerics in *major orders have been expressly forbidden to take a direct part in the shedding of blood. The prohibition was based on the grounds that it was unseemly for the ministers of the altar to shed blood and that the military life was detrimental to the discharge of pastoral duties. This teaching is embodied in the present RC canon law (CIC, can. 141). In the modern state, however, clerics are permitted to conform to the force majeure of military law both in peace-time and in war. The C of E has commonly upheld the medieval discipline, though ecclesiastical penalties have not been imposed on the few clerics who have entered the services and such clerics have been allowed to resume their clerical life when the war has ended.

WARBURTON, WILLIAM (1698–1779), Bp. of *Gloucester. After being apprenticed for five years to an attorney, he decided on an ecclesiastical career and was ordained priest in 1727. He held various livings, was made Dean of Bristol in 1757 and Bp. of Gloucester in 1759. As an editor of Shakespeare and the friend and champion of A. Pope, he played a conspicuous part in the literary world of his time and became involved in innumerable controversies. His first theological work of importance was The Alliance between Church and State (1736), a defence of the existing Establishment, in which, following the principles of J. *Locke, he argued that while the Church, by accepting the protection of the state, must abandon its own independence, the toleration of those who differ from it in doctrine and worship should be allowed. In his most famous book, The Divine Legation of Moses (2 vols., 1737–41), he professed to uphold the Divine origin of the Mosaic Law against the *Deists by the singular argument that it contained no doctrine of eternal life. The doctrine of future rewards and punishments being essential to the well-being of humanity, its absence from the OT can only be explained by a special Divine inspiration. This eccentric argumentation involved him in a series of controversies. The 'enthusiasm' of *Methodism being esp. repugnant to him, he published in 1762 The Doctrine of Grace against J. *Wesley. Warburton's works are remarkable for paradox rather than for scholarship, and his arrogance in the conduct of his literary feuds made him many enemies. He is, however, more creditably remembered for having preached against the slave trade as early as 1766.

Works, ed. R. Hurd (7 vols., London, 1788); id., A Discourse by Way of General Preface to the Quarto Edition of Bishop Warburton's Works, Containing some Account of the Life, Writings and Character of the Author (1794). J. S. Watson, Life of Warburton (1863). J. N. *Figgis, 'William Warburton' in W. E. Collins (ed.), Typical English Churchmen from Parker to Maurice (1902), No. 9, pp. 215–53. A. W. Evans, Warburton and the Warburtonians. A Study in some Eighteenth-Century Controversies (1932). R. W. Greaves, 'The Working of the Alliance: a comment on Warburton' in G. V. Bennett–J. D. Walsh (edd.), Essays in Modern English Church History in memory of Norman Sykes (1966), pp. 163–80, with further reff.

WARD, MARY (1585–1645), foundress of the Institute of the '*English Ladies' (q.v.). Born at Mulwith, N. Yorkshire, she entered the Convent of the *Poor Clares of *St.-Omer in 1606. In 1609, wanting a more active life, she founded, with five other Englishwomen, a religious congregation on the model of the *Jesuit Order, seeking to provide for the education of and an active apostolate among women. After opening houses in Liège, *Cologne, Vienna, and elsewhere, she went to Rome in 1629 to secure Papal approval for her enterprise. As her project was conceived on untraditional lines, involving freedom from enclosure and the choir office, as well as from episcopal jurisdiction, and thus ran counter to the decree of *Pius V enjoining solemn vows and strict enclosure on all religious houses of women, her institute was suppressed in 1630, and in 1631 she herself was imprisoned in the Convent of Poor Clares at Munich. On regaining her liberty she returned to Rome, and after securing the approval of *Urban VIII reopened her houses on slightly different lines. Later she went back to England, where she spent her remaining years. Among her foundations is the present Bar Convent at *York, orig. established near *Fountains in 1642 and transferred to Micklegate Bar in 1686.

M. C. E. Chambers–H. J. Coleridge, The Life of Mary Ward, 1585–1645 ('Quarterly Series', xxxv and lii; 1882–5). Other lives by M. Salome, I.B.V.M. (London, 1901), anon., with introd. by F. A. *Gasquet (ib., 1909), and Mary Oliver, I.B.V.M. (New York, 1959; London, 1960 [popular]). M. Philip, I.B.V.M., Companions of Mary Ward (1939).

WARD, SETH (1617–89), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1640, but was deprived of his fellowship in 1644 for his opposition to the '*Solemn League and Covenant'. In 1649, however, he took the oath to the English Commonwealth when he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and was one of the group of natural scientists at Oxford which foreshadowed the Royal Society, of which he later became one of the original members. The fruits of his scientific studies included two works In Ismaelis Bullialdi Astronomiae Philolaicae Fundamenta Inquisitio Brevis (1653) and Astronomia Geometrica (1656), in which he expounded a theory of planetary motions, and a philosophical controversy with T. *Hobbes. Resigning his professorship in 1660, he subsequently held several ecclesiastical offices. He was consecrated Bp. of *Exeter in 1662 and translated to Salisbury in 1667. In 1671 he became Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, being the first Anglican bishop to hold this office. In both dioceses he did much for the improvement of the cathedral. He was also a determined opponent of the dissenters and as a vigorous supporter of the *Conventicle and *Five Mile Acts he was so severe that the Nonconformists brought an unsuccessful petition against him in 1669. Among his theological works are A Philosophical Essay towards an Eviction of the Being and Attributes of God (1652) and Seven Sermons (1673); he also edited several works of Samuel Ward, Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge (d. 1643), a strong *Calvinist, to whom Seth was not related.

Life by W. Pope (London, 1697), repr. with brief addenda, but some omissions, in S. H. Cassan, Lives and Memoirs of the Bishops of Sherborne and Salisbury (1824), pt. 2, pp. 31–163; also ed. J. B. Bamborough (Luttrell Society Reprints, xxi; 1961). Further points and corrections by J. E. B. Mayor, 'Seth Ward' in Notes and Queries, 2nd Series, vii (1859), p. 269 f. E. I. Carlyle in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 336–40.

WARD, WILFRID (1856–1916), biographer and RC critic. The son of W. G. *Ward, he was trained for the priesthood but, not finding his vocation there, took up literary work. After controversial writings against H. *Spencer and F. *Harrison, he first wrote his father's Life in two separate books, W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889) and W. G. Ward and the Catholic Revival (1893). A biography of Card. N. Wiseman followed in 1897. Under his direction the Dublin Review (of which he became editor in 1906) rose to distinguished rank among the quarterlies. In his Life of J. H. *Newman (dealing almost wholly with the RC period of his life; 2 vols., 1912) he showed considerable sympathy with the *Modernist Movement, and in so far departed from the rigidly orthodox opinions of his father.

Last Lectures, ed. Josephine and Maisie Ward (widow and daughter) (1918), with introd. study by his widow, pp. vii–lxxi. Maisie Ward, The Wilfrid Wards and the Transition (2 vols., 1934–8). Shane Leslie in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 552 f.

WARD, WILLIAM GEORGE (1812–82), theologian and philosopher. He held a fellowship of Balliol College, Oxford, from 1834 to 1845, during which period he became an ardent follower of J. H. *Newman. He was among the keenest of logicians, and pushed *Tractarian principles to their furthest extremes. In 1844 he published The Ideal of a Christian Church, strongly praising the RC Church. In 1845 he was deprived of his degrees for heresy and in the same year entered the RC Church. From 1851 to 1858 he was lecturer in moral philosophy at St. Edmund's College, Ware. In later life he was a supporter of the *Ultramontane party, upholding Papal Infallibility and maintaining fiercely anti-liberal views. He successfully opposed Newman's scheme to open a RC college in Oxford. In the last thirty years of his life he was constantly engaged in controversial writing.

Wilfrid Ward [q.v.], W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889) and W. G. Ward and the Catholic Revival (1893). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 344–8.

WARHAM, WILLIAM (c. 1456–1532), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1475. After taking his doctor's degree, in 1488 he went to London, where he practised in the Court of *Arches. A rapid career followed. He was in turn moderator in the civil law school at Oxford (c. 1490), precentor of *Wells (1493), Master of the Rolls (1494), and Archdeacon of Huntingdon (1496), and employed on several notable commercial and diplomatic missions, esp. between 1496 and 1502, when he became Bp. of London. Nominated Abp. of Canterbury by *Julius II in 1503, he received the pallium in 1504, after having been made Lord Chancellor by Henry VII in the same year. From this time he took a leading part in all affairs of national importance. He was also a recognized patron of the New Learning. In 1506 he negotiated a marriage for the King to Margaret of Savoy (which, however, did not take place), and in the same year was elected chancellor of Oxford university. In 1509 he crowned *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, and in 1515 conferred the cardinal's hat on T. *Wolsey, who in the same year replaced him as Lord Chancellor.

After Wolsey's appointment as Papal legate (1518) official friction between archbishop and legate was continuous, though their personal relations remained friendly. In 1527 he was Wolsey's assessor in the secret inquiry into the validity of the King's marriage, and later the chief of the counsel for the Queen, whom, however, he in no way assisted. In 1530 he signed the petition to the Pope asking him to grant the King the divorce, his attitude in the matter being probably decided by the King's threat to destroy all ecclesiastical authority in the country unless his wishes were complied with. When, in 1531, the English clergy were bidden to acknowledge Henry as the Supreme Head of the Church, Warham introduced the amendment 'so far as the law of Christ will allow'. In 1532 he formally though ineffectually protested against all Acts of Parliament prejudicial to the authority of the Pope. He was a generous benefactor, esp. to scholars (D. *Erasmus, &c.), but without sympathy for the Protestant movement.

The principal sources are the State Papers and Calendars of the State Papers of the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII. The only life is that in W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, vi (1888), pp. 155–421. Mary Bateson, 'Archbishop Warham's Visitation of Monasteries, 1511' in E.H.R., vi (1891), pp. 18–35. J. Gairdner in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 378–83; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1988–92, s.v.

WARTBURG. The 12th cent. castle near Eisenach in Thuringia where M. *Luther was hidden for safety after being seized (with his own connivance) by the Elector *Frederick III on his way home from the Diet of *Worms in 1521. In his letters he described the Wartburg as his '*Patmos'; and during his ten months' residence he prepared his translation of the NT and also issued a number of polemical works.

WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY. See Jehovah's Witnesses.

WATER. See Holy Water.

WATERLAND, DANIEL (1683–1740), Anglican theologian. He was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1704 and Master in 1713. In 1717 he was appointed chaplain to the King and in 1722 chancellor of the diocese of *York. In the following years he received many preferments, becoming a Canon of *Windsor in 1727 and Archdeacon of Middlesex in 1730. He took an active part in the theological controversies of his time, esp. those on the Divinity of Christ and the Trinity, on *Deism, and on the *Eucharist. His principal works were A Vindication of Christ's Divinity (1719), directed against S. *Clarke; Eight Sermons in Defence of the Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ (1720), his most popular work, in which he argued that the Divinity of Christ in no way impaired the unity of the Godhead; *A Critical History of the Athanasian Creed (1723), in which he maintained that St. *Hilary of Arles was the author of the Creed; Scripture Vindicated (finished 1732), against M. *Tindal's Christianity as Old as the Creation, in which he defended the OT accounts of the Fall, of the origin of circumcision, and of the sacrifice of Isaac against the attacks of the Deists; The Nature, Obligation and Efficacy of the Christian Sacraments (1732); and his Review of the Doctrine of the Eucharist (1737). In this last work he sought to steer a middle course between the high views of the *Real Presence represented by T. *Brett and other *Nonjurors, and the minimizing opinions of *Socinians and Deists. The Eucharist was a commemorative and representative service, which possessed a sacrificial aspect from the remembrance of Christ's death, and the sacramental Presence was to be understood as the virtue and grace of the Lord's Body and Blood communicated to the worthy receiver. Waterland was a theologian of considerable learning, widely read not only in the Fathers but also in RC and Continental Protestant theologians, though hostile alike to philosophy and mysticism. His influence did much to restore sound Trinitarian teaching against the Arianizers, and his intermediate position in the Eucharistic controversy was for long widely accepted in the C of E.

Collected ed. of his Works publd. in 10 vols., Oxford, 1823, with 'Review of the Author's Life and Writings' by W. *van Mildert as vol. i, pt. 1. R. T. Holtby, Daniel Waterland 1683–1740. A Study in Eighteenth Century Orthodoxy (Carlisle, 1966). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., lix (1899), pp. 446–8.

WATSON, RICHARD (1737–1816), Bp. of *Llandaff. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1760. In 1764 he was elected professor of chemistry, a subject of which he then knew nothing but in which he soon became an adept, and in 1769 a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1771 he became Regius Professor of Divinity. In 1776 he published a reply to E. *Gibbon's attack on Christianity which Gibbon himself commended for its candour. In 1779 he was made Archdeacon of *Ely, and in 1782 Lord Shelburne offered him, as a known opponent of the American War, the see of Llandaff. Proposals for radical ecclesiastical reforms, including a redistribution of church revenues, brought him into disfavour with the government and put an end to his hopes of a better see. He settled at Calgarth Park in Westmorland, where he devoted himself largely to forestry and agriculture. He continued to write, issuing in 1796 An Apology for the Bible against T. *Paine, and in 1798 a work encouraging resistance to the French claims. He was one of the most versatile men of his age.

Anecdotes of the Life of Richard Watson . . . written by himself at different Intervals and revised in 1814, ed. Richard Watson, son (London, 1817). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 24–7, with further reff.

WATTS, ISAAC (1674–1748), Nonconformist hymn-writer. A native of Southampton, he was educated at the local grammar-school, where his unusual abilities induced a local benefactor to offer him a university education. He preferred, however, to enter the Dissenting Academy at Stoke Newington (1690–4), the high educational standard of which left a permanent mark on his mind. After holding a post as a private tutor, he was appointed assistant (1699) and then full pastor (1702) to the *Independent congregation at Mark Lane, London. But Watts's health deteriorated from 1703 onwards, and his pastoral duties devolved increasingly on his assistant. In 1712 he resigned and spent the rest of his life at Abney Park, Stoke Newington. In his later years he seems to have inclined towards *Unitarianism. In 1719 he opposed the imposition of the doctrine of the *Trinity on dissenting ministers.

Watts deservedly merits a very high place among English hymn-writers. His hymns reflect his strong and serene faith and did much to make hymn-singing a powerful devotional force, esp. in Nonconformity, where hitherto the use of music in worship, apart from the *Metrical Psalms, had been regarded with suspicion. They include many still in common use, among them 'Jesus shall reign where'er the sun', 'When I survey the wondrous Cross', and 'Our God, our help in ages past'. The two principal collections were Hymns and Spiritual Songs (1707) and The Psalms of David (1719). His other writings include Horae Lyricae (1706; poems), Divine Songs (1715; the first children's hymn-book), The Improvement of the Mind (1741), and a number of educational manuals, among them a Logic (1725).

Works ed. D. Jennings–P. *Doddridge (6 vols., London, 1753), 'with some account of the Author's life and character' in vol. i, pp. iii–x; repr. with corrections (6 vols., ib., 1810–1811), with memoirs of the Life of the Author by G. Burder, vol. i, pp. ix–lxxx. New ed. of his Horae Lyricae (London, 1837), with memoir by R. Southey, pp. i–lii. Abridged ed. of his A Guide to Prayer (originally publd. 1715) by H. Escott (London, 1948). Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707–1748, ed. Selma L. Bishop (London, 1962). T. Gibbons, Memoirs of the Rev. Isaac Watts (1830); T. Milner, The Life, Times and Correspondence of the Rev. Isaac Watts (1834); E. P. Hood, Isaac Watts. His Life and Writings, his Homes and Friends

[c. 1875]. A. P. Davis, Isaac Watts. His Life and Works (New York, 1943; London, 1948). B. L. Manning, The Hymns of Wesley and Watts (1942), pp. 78–105. H. Escott, Isaac Watts Hymnographer (1962). H. L. Bennett in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 67–70.

WAYNFLETE, WILLIAM. See William of Waynflete.

WAZO (980/90–1048), Bp. of Liège. Educated at the abbey school of Lobbes, he was appointed head of the cathedral school of Liège in 1008 on the recommendation of *Notker, and dean in 1015. Later he became provost, and in 1042 he was elected bishop. A man of great energy and austere habits, he was a faithful adherent of the Emperor Henry III, whose rights he defended against Henry I of France. In the incipient conflict between Papacy and empire, however, he upheld the superiority of the spiritual authority, denied the Emperor the right to interfere in the appointment of bishops, and generally defended the independence of the Church. Having warned Henry before the Synod of Sutri that no one could judge the Pope save God, he regarded the deposition of Gregory VI as unjustifiable.

The chief source is the account written shortly after his death by Anselm of Liège, which forms the last part of Anselm's continuation of the Gesta Episcoporum Tungrensium et Leodiensium begun by Heriger of Lobbes; it is ed. R. Koepke in M.G.H., Scriptores, vii (1846), pp. 210–34; repr. from E. *Martène in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlii, 725–64. A. Bittner, Wazo und die Schulen von Lüttich (Breslau Diss., 1879). R. Huysmans, Wazo van Luik in de Ideeënstrijd zijner Dagen (Nijmegen, 1932). C. Hoerschelmann, Bischof Wazo von Lüttich und seine Bedeutung für den Beginn des Investiturstreites (Frankfurt a.M. diss.; Düsseldorf, 1955). A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, i (S.S.L., vi; 1924), pp. 113–28. C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 32–4, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3520–4, s.v. 'Wazon de Liège'.

WEARMOUTH and JARROW. The twin *Benedictine abbeys between the Tyne and the Wear, of St. Peter at Wearmouth and St. Paul at Jarrow, founded respectively in 674 and 682 by St. *Benedict Biscop, soon became one of the chief centres of learning and culture in W. Christendom. Benedict himself and Ceolfrid, deputy Abbot of Jarrow, who made numerous journeys to Rome, were great collectors of books which formed the nucleus of the celebrated library at Jarrow. The '*Codex Amiatinus' (q.v.) was written at Jarrow at the end of the 7th cent. The abbeys were made widely known through the writings of the Venerable *Bede (d. 735), who was educated in them and carried on the traditions of scholarship. In 867–70 they were destroyed by the Danes, but restored c. 1074 by Aldwin, former prior of Winchcombe. He and two of his friends settled there for a time, and soon the monasteries began to flourish once more, later becoming cells to the priory of *Durham. The houses were secularized at the Reformation, and today part of their site is occupied by the parish churches.

J. Raine (ed.), The Inventories and Account Rolls of the Benedictine Houses or Cells of Jarrow and Monk-Wearmouth (Surtees Society, xxix; 1854). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 501–4. H. E. Savage, 'Jarrow Church and Monastery' in Archaeologia Aeliana, xxii (1900), pp. 30–60. Rosemary Cramp, 'Excavations at the Saxon Monastic Sites of Wearmouth and Jarrow, co. Durham: an interim report' in Medieval Archaeology, xiii (for 1969; 1971), pp. 21–58. Margaret E. Cornford in V.C.H., Durham, ii, ed. W. Page (1907), pp. 81–5, with reff.

WEBB, BENJAMIN (1819–85), ecclesiologist. In 1838 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, and while still an undergraduate founded with J. M. *Neale the *Cambridge Camden Society for the revival of ecclesiology. In this and other ways he did much to promote the revival of ritual that followed the *Oxford Movement, though Webb himself was a strictly moderate ceremonialist and never wore the Eucharistic vestments. From 1862 till his death he held the living of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, London, which became famed for its music and parochial organizations. See also foll. entry.

C. C. J. *Webb, 'Benjamin Webb' in C.Q.R., lxxv (1913), pp. 329–48. Id. in D.N.B., lx (1899), p. 96 f., with further reff.

WEBB, CLEMENT CHARLES JULIAN (1865–1954), *Anglican religious philosopher. The son of Benjamin *Webb (q.v.), he was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford. From 1889 to 1922 he was a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and from 1920 to 1930 (the first) Oriel (now Nolloth) Professor of the Philosophy of the Christian Religion at Oxford. His philosophical writings include Problems in the Relations of God and Man (1911) and two sets of *Gifford Lectures, God and Personality (1918) and Divine Personality and Human Life (1920). His standpoint was in essentials that of orthodox Theism, with stress on the ultimate significance of personality against the *pantheism of *Hegelian Idealism. Webb also made important contributions to the study of medieval philosophy, incl. critical editions of *John of Salisbury's Policraticus (2 vols., 1909) and Metalogicon (1929). Among his other writings were Religious Thought in the Oxford Movement (1928), John of Salisbury (1932), and A Study of Religious Thought in England from 1850 (1933; Olaus Petri Lectures).

C. C. J. Webb, Religious Experience. A Public Lecture delivered . . . on Friday 19 May 1944, . . . with a Foreword by L. W. Grensted . . . together with a Bibliography of his published Writings (1945). F. M. Powicke in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 1026–8.

WEDNESDAY (originally so named in English after the Norse god, 'Woden' or 'Odin'). From early times, as is shown by the *Didache (8. 1), Wednesday, the day on which the Lord was betrayed, was together with *Friday a Christian fast day, and long remained so in *Embertide. In the time of *Tertullian (De Oratione, 14), the Eucharist was celebrated on both these days in Africa, as was the custom later elsewhere. In Alexandria, however (Soc., H.E., v. 22), and also in Rome until the 5th cent., there was only a service of prayers and lessons similar to the Ante-Communion of the BCP, and the Liturgy of the *Presanctified is still the principal service of the E. Orthodox Churches on Wednesdays and Fridays in *Lent.

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xi; 1959), pp. 136–48.

WEE FREES. The minority of the *Free Church of Scotland which refused to countenance the action of the rest of their number in uniting in 1900 with the *United Presbyterian Church to form the *United Free Church.

WEEK. The week as a liturgical institution derived from the Jewish observance of the *Sabbath day. The conception of a day of rest specially dedicated to God was taken over by the first Christians, but soon transferred to the first day of the week (Acts 20. 7, 1 Cor. 16. 2) in honour of the *Resurrection. The Jewish fasts on Tuesday and Thursday were translated to *Wednesday, the day of the Betrayal, and *Friday, the day of the Crucifixion (Didache 8). Thursday as a day of rejoicing on account of the *Ascension and of the Institution of the Eucharist came into prominence in the early Middle Ages. About the same time *Saturday began to be dedicated to the BVM, and later other days, too, had their particular devotion, e.g. Monday became the day of the Holy Souls.

Possibly in NT times (cf. Rev. 1. 10), and certainly very early, the first day of the week was known as ἡ ἡμέρα κυριακή or τοῦ Κυρίου ('the Lord's Day'), but the other days retained their Jewish designations, viz. ἡμέρα δευτέρα ('second day', i.e. 'Monday'), &c. In Latin these became dies dominica, feria secunda, &c., with sabbatum for Saturday. As fast days, Wednesday and Friday came to be known in the W. as 'stationes' (see Station Days). The planetary names, which had been introduced into Roman usage shortly before the Christian era, were occasionally used by early Christian authors, but almost entirely in writings intended for non-Christians. They did not come into general Christian currency till late in the 3rd cent. The English names are the Teutonic equivalents of the Roman planetary names.

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xi; 1959). J. A. Jungmann, S.J., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 841–3, s.v.

WEEK, Holy. See Holy Week.

WEEKS, Feast of. The Jewish celebration (Exod. 23. 16) of the completion of the grain harvest. It was held on the 50th day (hence the Greek title 'Pentecost') after the offering of the barley-sheaf at the feast of unleavened bread (i.e. in the late spring or early summer). Two loaves of leavened bread were presented as a 'wave-offering', accompanied by a 'peace-offering', a 'burnt-offering', and a 'sin-offering'. The fullest account in the OT of the ceremonies surrounding it is in Lev. 23. 9–21. In later times the feast was regarded both by Jews (e.g. *Maimonides) and Christians (e.g. *Jerome, *Augustine) as commemorating the Giving of the Law on Sinai (Exod. 20).

R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 395–7; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 493–5.

WEIGEL, VALENTIN (1533–88), *Lutheran mystical writer. From 1567 he was pastor at Zschopau, nr. Chemnitz. Not till the 17th cent., however, when from 1609 onwards his writings (not all genuine) were printed at Halle, did his doctrines become generally known. These books consisted esp. of attacks on the 'Bibliolaters' (Buchstabentheologen) and of cosmological speculations incompatible with dogmatic Lutheranism. In the history of mysticism his ideas, largely the outcome of the prolonged study of such writers as *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and *Paracelsus, are important for the considerable influence which they exercised on J. *Boehme.

Sämtliche Schriften, ed. W.-E. Peuckert–W. Zeller (Stuttgart, 1962 ff.). J. O. Opel, Valentin Weigel (Leipzig, 1864). A. Israel, M. Valentin Weigels Leben und Schriften (Zschopau, 1888). H. Maier, Der mystische Spiritualismus Valentin Weigels (Beiträge zur Forderung christlicher Theologie, xxix, Hft. 4; 1926). A. Koyré, 'Un Mystique protestant. Maître Valentin Weigel' in Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses [viii] (1928), pp. 227–48 and 329–48. F. Schiele, 'Zu den Schriften Valentin Weigels' in Z.K.G., xlviii (1929), pp. 380–9. H. Längin, 'Grundlinien der Erkenntnislehre Valentin Weigels' in Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, xli (1932), pp. 435–78. W. Zeller, Die Schriften Valentin Weigels (Historische Studien, cclxx; 1940). F. Lieb, Valentin Weigels Kommentar zur Schöpfungsgeschichte und das Schrifttum seines Schülers Benedikt Biedermann (Zürich, 1962), pp. 17–46 and 143–53, with reff. R. H. Grützmacher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 37–44, s.v.

WEISS, BERNHARD (1827–1918), German NT critic and theologian. Educated at the universities of Königsberg, Halle, and Berlin, he became professor of NT exegesis at Kiel (1863–77) and Berlin (1877–1908). In his Lehrbuch der biblischen Theologie des NT (1868; Eng. trans., Biblical Theology of the NT, 1882–3), he distinguished in the NT a number of different doctrinal systems which he analysed and classified under four heads (Teaching of Jesus, Original Apostolic Christianity, Paulinism, Post-Paulinism). His critical foundations were on the whole conservative, though he upheld the priority of Mk. before it was generally accepted. His Das Leben Jesu (1882; Eng. trans., The Life of Christ, 1883) became a standard book. He was also the author of a long series of studies and commentaries on the books of the NT, esp. the Gospels, and undertook many of the later editions of the commentaries of H. A. W. *Meyer. These were notable for their careful exegesis, their attention to the history of interpretation, and their interest in the *Synoptic Problem. He also issued a critical edition of the NT text (3 parts, 1894–1900; ed. 2, 1902–5).

His autobiography, Aus neunzig Lebensjahren, 1827 bis 1918, ed. Hansgerhard Weiss (Leipzig, 1927). Theologische Studien (Festschrift to Weiss on his 70th birthday, with contributions by C. R. Gregory, A. *Harnack and others, Göttingen, 1897).

WEISS, JOHANNES (1863–1914), German NT scholar. The son of Bernhard *Weiss, he was educated at the universities of Marburg, Berlin, Göttingen, and Breslau, and became Privatdozent at Göttingen in 1888 and associate professor in 1890, full professor at Marburg in 1895 and at Heidelberg in 1908. His Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes (1892) was the first attempt at a consistent eschatological interpretation of the Gospel, defending the thesis that the central purpose of Christ's mission was to proclaim the imminence of a transcendental Kingdom of God, in which He Himself was to be manifested as the Messiah. He further elaborated this view in his Kommentar zum Lukasevangelium (1893) and elsewhere. In Paulus und Jesus (1909), Christus, die Anfänge des Dogmas (1909), and in his last and most comprehensive work, Das Urchristentum (1917; completed by R. Knopf; Eng. trans. by F. C. Grant and others, 1937), he traced the growth of early Christianity. In his article 'Literaturgeschichte des NT' in Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart (1912), he expounded for the first time the principles of *Form-criticism which were elaborated later by M. *Dibelius, his successor at Heidelberg, R. *Bultmann, his pupil, and others. He also edited, and contributed to, Die Schriften des Neuen Testaments (1905 ff.).

Eng. tr. of Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes as Jesus' Proclamation of the Kingdom of God, with introd., by R. H. Hiers–D. L. Holland (1971), with list of Weiss's major works, pp. 138–42. F. C. *Burkitt, 'Johannes Weiss. In Memoriam' in H.T.R., viii (1915), pp. 291–5. K. Prümm, S.J., 'Johannes Weiss als Darsteller und religionsgeschichtlicher Erklärer der Paulinischen Botschaft' in Biblica, xl (1959), pp. 815–36; R. Schäfer, 'Das Reich Gottes bei Albrecht Ritschl und Johannes Weiss' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, lxi (1964), pp. 68–88, with further reff.

WELLHAUSEN, JULIUS (1844–1918), Biblical critic and orientalist. A native of Hameln, he studied under H. G. A. *Ewald at Göttingen, where he became Privatdozent in 1870. In 1872 he became professor of OT at Greifswald, but in 1882 resigned his chair on conscientious grounds. In the same year he became Privatdozent in Semitics at Halle and later Professor in Semitics at Marburg (1885–92) and Göttingen (1892–1913). After original study of the texts of *Samuel (1871) and other parts of the OT, he devoted the greater part of his life to *Higher Criticism on lines foreshadowed by E. Reuss. He elaborated the problem of the structure of *Genesis by a close analysis of *J and *E (qq.v.), while his thesis on the relative dating of the component documents of the Pentateuch, acc. to which *P (the 'Priestly Code') was the latest, completely transformed OT studies. It sought to establish the gradual development of Hebrew religion from a nomadic stage through that of the Prophets to the religion of the Law. In his later years he devoted himself largely to a critical study of the NT on similar lines. He upheld the priority of the Gospel of St. *Mark over '*Q', its composite nature and its original Aramaic form. In spite of his insight into philological problems, his conclusions in the NT field met with less ready acceptance, though his pregnant commentaries on the Gospels laid down many of the lines for the later development of *Form-criticism.

His most important works on the OT are Die Geschichte Israels (1878; ed. 2 issued as Prolegomena zur Geschichte Israels, 1883; Eng. tr., 1885) and Die Komposition des Hexateuchs und der historischen Bücher des Alten Testaments (1885). His chief works on the NT were Das Evangelium Marci (1903), Einleitung in die drei ersten Evangelien (1905) and Kritische Analyse der Apostelgeschichte (1914).

K. Marti (ed.), Studien zur semitischen Philologie und Religionsgeschichte Julius Wellhausen zum siebzigsten Geburtstag am 17. Mai 1914 gewidmet (Beiheft Z.A.T.W., xxvii; 1914). E. *Schwartz, 'Julius Wellhausen' in Nachr. (Gött. Gesch. Mitt., 1918), pp. 43–70. M. Kegel, Los von Wellhausen! (1923; Eng. tr., Away from Wellhausen!, 1924). W. Baumgartner, 'Wellhausen und der heutige Stand der alttestamentlichen Wissenschaft' in Theologische Rundschau, ii (1930), pp. 287–307. H. *Gunkel in R.G.G. (ed. 2), v (1931), cols. 1820–2, s.v., with bibl.

WELLS. According to local tradition a church of secular canons was founded at Wells by King Ine c. 705. In 909 this church became the cathedral of the newly created diocese of the Somerset people. Its endowments were greatly increased by Bp. Giso (1061–88), who reorganized the canons under a modified form of the rule of St. *Chrodegang. After the removal of the see to *Bath in 1088 the establishment at Wells fell into neglect, but Bp. Robert of Lewes (1136–66) refounded the chapter on the lines of St. *Osmund's constitution at *Salisbury and endowed 24 *prebends, later increased to 54, of which 49 survived the Reformation. To settle legal questions arising from the surrender of the deanery and the alienation of capitular properties at the time of the Reformation, Elizabeth I granted a charter to Wells in 1591 which also had the effect of assimilating its constitution partly to that of a New Foundation church (see Cathedral).

The present cathedral was begun c. 1186 and the main structure was consecrated on 23 Oct. 1239; it lies to the north of the earlier Saxon church. The octagonal chapter house, the east end of the quire, the Lady chapel, and the central tower were added in the first half of the 14th cent., and the cloisters in the 15th. The magnificent 13th cent. west front has more than 370 figures (angels, saints, kings and queens) and reliefs. There are *misericords with fine 15th cent. woodwork and a 14th cent. astronomical clock. The most striking interior feature is the inverted arches (14th cent.) by which the piers of the tower are strengthened.

The Theological College, founded in 1840, was moved to Salisbury and united with the theological college there in 1971.

The Vicars' Close and Hall, the moated Palace, the old Deanery, and the four great gates erected by Bp. Beckington form, with the cathedral, a unique group of mediaeval ecclesiastical buildings.

W. H. B. Bird–W. P. Baildon, (edd.), Calendar of the Manuscripts of the Dean and Chapter of Wells (Historical Manuscripts Commission, 2 vols., 1907–14). D. S. Bailey (ed.), Wells Cathedral Chapter Acts Book 1666–83 (ib., 1973). For the Statutes of Wells, A. Watkin, O.S.B., Dean Cosyn and Wells Cathedral Miscellanea (Somerset Record Society, lvi; 1941). E. A. Freeman, History of the Cathedral Church of Wells (1870); H. E. Reynolds (ed.), Wells Cathedral. Its Foundation, Constitutional History and Statutes (1881); C. M. Church, Chapters in the Early History of the Church of Wells, A.D. 1136–1333 (1894); P. *Dearmer, The Cathedral Church of Wells (1898). T. S. Holmes, 'The Cathedral of Wells' in V.C.H., Somerset, ii (ed. W. Page (1911), pp. 162–9. For editions of Episcopal Registers see bibl. to Bath and Wells.

WELLS, EDWARD (1667–1727), mathematician and theological writer. Having graduated from Christ Church, Oxford, in 1690, he held several pastoral appointments, becoming rector of Bletchley in 1716. Between 1709 and 1719 he published an edition of the Greek text of the NT, with an Eng. trans. and notes, in which for the first time a complete NT was printed with the textus receptus* abandoned in favour of readings from better MSS.

His Historical Geography of the Old and New Testament (orig. publd. as two separate works, 3 vols., 1708), repubd. in 2 vols., Oxford, 1801; his The Rich Man's Duty to Contribute Liberally to the Building, Rebuilding, Repairing, Beautifying, and Adorning of Churches (ed. 2, 1717), repubd. Oxford, 1840, with introd. by J. H. *N[ewman], pp. iii–vi. T. Cooper in D.N.B., lx (1899), p. 227 f., s.v., with reff.

WELSH BIBLE AND PRAYER BOOK. In 1567 the New Testament first appeared in Welsh, translated from the Greek mainly by William Salesbury (c. 1529–95). It served as the basis for the complete Bible published in 1588 by William Morgan (c. 1547–1604), Bp. of *St. Asaph. This was revised by Richard Parry (1560–1623; Morgan's successor in the see of St. Asaph), probably with the help of John Davies (1570–1644), his chaplain, and published in 1620. This Bible, which used the language of the bards, was an important formative influence on the Welsh prose language. It is the Welsh Bible in general use today. A modern Welsh translation of the NT was issued in 1975; the OT is in preparation.

The English Prayer Book of 1559 was translated into Welsh by Richard Davies (1501–81), Bp. of *St. Davids, and appeared in 1567. The Psalms were translated direct from the Hebrew, and the first lesson continued to be read in English. A translation of the new Book of 1662 which was provided for in the Act of *Uniformity appeared in 1664. Minor revisions were made at intervals until 1841. In 1956 the Governing Body of the Church in Wales approved a Canon authorizing 'Experimental Use of Proposed Revisions of the Book of Common Prayer' for periods not exceeding ten years. Revisions authorized for such use and later revised include Baptism (authorized 1961; final form, 1971), Burial Service (authorized 1962; final form, 1974) and a Eucharistic Rite (authorized in 1966 for use in 1967; final form, 1981). A complete new Prayer Book appeared in 1984.

J. Ballinger, The Bible in Wales (1906), with bibl. of Welsh Bibles [by J. I. Jones] appended (separately paged pp. 1–90). Darlow–Moule, iv (1911), pp. 1657–85. S. L. Greenslade in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible [iii] (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 170–72. Life of Bp. Morgan by W. Hughes (London, 1891). A. O. Evans, A Chapter in the History of the Welsh Book of Common Prayer, or Letters which were written preparatory to the Revised Edition of 1841 (3 vols., Bangor, 1922), with general introduction, i, pp. xiii–xxxix. W. Muss-Arnolt, The Book of Common Prayer among the Nations of the World (1914), pp. 69–76 (ch. vii, 'Richard Davies and the Welsh Translations'). The Eng. text of the 1966 Communion Rite, which was issued in Welsh and Eng., is pr., with introd., in C. O. Buchanan (ed.), Modern Anglican Liturgies, 1958–1968 (1968), pp. 160–72. A. O. Evans, A Memorandum on the Legality of the Welsh Bible and the Welsh Version of the Book of Common Prayer (Cardiff, 1925).

WENCESLAS, St. (c. 907–29), Bohemian prince and martyr. The son of Duke Wratislaw and Drahomira, he received a good Christian education, supervised by his grandmother, St. Ludmilla. After the death of his father (c. 920) his mother became regent, but her violent actions so estranged the people that Wenceslas took over the government, probably c. 922. Himself a man of much piety, he worked for the religious and cultural improvement of his people, which he sought to bring into closer connexion with the W. world, and for this reason entertained friendly relations with Germany. It is likely that it was this policy, as well as the dissatisfaction of the pagan elements among his subjects, which led to his being murdered by his brother Boleslav, prob. in 929. He was soon venerated as a martyr, and Boleslav himself had his relics translated to the Church of St. Vitus, at Prague, c. 932. From 985 his feast is known to have been observed in Bohemia, whose patron he became. From the year 1000 his picture appeared on Bohemian coins, and the Crown of St. Wenceslas came to be the symbol of Czech independence. The name of the saint has become familiar in England through J. M. *Neale's Christmas carol 'Good King Wenceslas', but its contents are wholly imaginary. Feast day, 28 Sept.

AA.SS., Sept. VII (1760), pp. 770–844. J. Pekař, Die Wenzels- und Ludmila-Legenden und die Echtheit Christians (1906), with modern ed. of texts. Other primary texts listed in B.H.L., ii (1900–1901), pp. 1273–5, Nos. 8821–44, and Suppl. (1911), p. 311 f. P. Devos, S.J., 'Le Dossier de S. Wenceslas dans un manuscrit du XIIIe siècle' in Anal. Boll., lxxxii (1964), pp. 87–105, with text pp. 106–31. A. Naegle, Der heilige Wenzel, der Landespatron Böhmens (1928); F. Dvornik, Život svatého Václava (1929; Germ. tr., 1929). C. Parrott, 'St. Wenceslas of Bohemia' in History Today, xvi (1966), pp. 225–33. R. Turek-V. Ryneš in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, xii (Rome, 1969), cols. 991–1000, s.v., 'Venceslao', with extensive bibl.

WERBURGH, St. (d. c. 699), English abbess. The daughter of the Mercian king, Wulfhere, and St. Ermenilda, Werburgh entered the *Benedictine abbey of *Ely, where she became abbess, and was later instigated by King Ethelred to reform the monasteries of nuns in his kingdom. She also established new monasteries at Trentham and Hanbury (in Staffordshire) and at Weedon (in Northants). She was renowned for her holy life and many miracles were reported to have occurred at her tomb. For fear of the Danes her body was removed to *Chester in 875. Her shrine, of which fragments are still to be seen in Chester Cathedral, was destroyed during the reign of *Henry VIII. The life by *Goscelin is almost entirely legendary. Feast day, 3 Feb.

Life by Goscelin pr. in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), pp. 386–90; Florence of Worcester, Chronicon ex Chronicis (ed. B. Thorpe, London, i, 1848, p. 32). Metrical life by Henry Bradshaw (d. 1513), orig. publ. 1521, ed. by E. Hawkins (Chetham Society Old Series, xv; 1848) and C. Horstmann (E.E.T.S., Original Series, lxxxviii; 1887). J. Tait (ed.), The Chartulary or Register of the Abbey of St. Werburgh, Chester, i (Chetham Society New Series, lxxix; 1920), pp. viii–xiv.

WESEL, JOHN OF. See John of Wesel.

WESLEY, CHARLES (1707–88), eighteenth child of Samuel, and brother of John, *Wesley. Educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford, he became an active member of the Oxford *Methodists. After ordination in 1735 he accompanied his brother to Georgia (also 1735), where he acted as secretary to Governor Oglethorpe; he returned to England in 1736. Like John he came under the influence of Peter Böhler and the *Moravians and experienced conversion on Whitsunday (21 May) 1738. Entering on the itinerant ministry in the next year, he occupied himself in preaching and travelling until 1756. Eventually, in 1771, he settled in London, where he took turns in preaching at the City Road Chapel. He was the most gifted and indefatigable hymn-writer that England has ever known (over 5,500 hymns in all), and like his brother understood their immense importance for missionary, devotional, and instructional purposes. The first collection, entitled Hymns and Sacred Poems (with the original form of 'Hark! the herald angels sing' and 'Hail the day that sees Him rise'), appeared in 1739, to be quickly followed by others, all professedly the joint work of the two brothers. Other favourites include 'Jesu, Lover of my soul', 'Love divine, all loves excelling', the Advent hymn 'Lo! He comes, with clouds descending', and the Eucharistic hymn 'Author of life divine'. Charles Wesley stayed faithful to the C of E, irritated by John's ordinations. Both are commemorated on 24 May in the ASB; on 3 Mar. in the American BCP (1979).

His Journal, with selections from his Correspondence and Poetry, ed. T. Jackson (2 vols., London, 1849), with introd. in vol. i, pp. iii–xliv; first part (1736–9) also publd. in The Finsbury Library [1919]. J. Telford (ed.), The Treasure

House of Charles Wesley. A Short Anthology of the Evangelical Revival (1933). T. Jackson, The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley (2 vols., 1841). J. Telford, The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley ([1887]; revised ed., 1900); J. Whitehead, The Life of the Rev. John Wesley . . . To which is prefixed . . . the Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley, i (1893), pp. 97–374. Other studies by D. M. Jones (London [1919]), F. L. Wiseman (New York, 1932; London, 1933), and F. C. Gill (London, 1964). J. E. Rattenbury, The Evangelical Doctrines of Charles Wesley's Hymns (1941); B. L. Manning, The Hymns of Wesley and Watts (1942), pp. 32–77; R. N. Flew, The Hymns of Charles Wesley. A Study of their Structure (1953); F. Baker, Charles Wesley's Verse. An Introduction (1964). W. F. Lofthouse in R. Davies–G. Rupp (edd.), A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, i (1965), pp. 113–44. R. Green, The Works of John and Charles Wesley. A Bibliography; containing an exact account of all the publications issued by the Wesley Brothers (1896). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 298–302.

WESLEY, JOHN (1703–91), founder of the *Methodist Movement. The fifteenth child of the Rev. Samuel Wesley (1662–1735), rector of Epworth, Humberside, and his wife Susannah, he was educated at the Charterhouse and *Christ Church, Oxford. In 1726 he was elected to a fellowship at Lincoln College, Oxford, and also acted for a time (1727–9) as curate to his father. At Oxford he gathered round him a group of earnest, devout, and scholarly Christians who became known as the 'Holy Club', 'Bible Moths', or 'Methodists', and included his brother, Charles *Wesley, and G. *Whitefield (qq.v.). At this period he came much under the influence of W. *Law (whom he visited), H. *More (d. 1687), and other mystics. In 1735 he set out with his brother Charles on a missionary journey to Georgia under the auspices of the *S.P.G., but his preaching (esp. against the slave-trade and gin) and inexperience alienated the colonists and he soon returned home (1737). His friendship with the *Moravian, Peter Böhler, who convinced him that he lacked 'that faith whereby alone we are saved', and a visit (1738) to the Moravian colony at *Herrnhut, had a profound effect on his religious life. He had the experience of conversion on 24 May 1738 at the reading of M. *Luther's Preface to the Ep. to the Romans at a meeting in Aldersgate Street. Henceforth his professed object was 'to promote as far as I am able vital practical religion and by the grace of God to beget, preserve, and increase the life of God in the souls of men', and the rest of his life was spent in evangelistic work.

Finding the churches closed to him, Wesley began field-preaching to the Kingswood colliers in 1739. His success soon led him to organize a body of lay pastors to follow up his evangelism. After 1742 Wesley widened the sphere of his activity, covering the whole of the British Isles, among his chief centres being the Foundery at Moorfields, Bristol, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Macclesfield. His annual journeyings averaged 8,000 miles on horseback; he wrote thousands of letters and preached innumerable sermons; and despite the hostility of many Churchmen he was nearly always greeted with enthusiasm. In 1744 he held a conference of lay preachers which later became an annual event, and for which a legal constitution was eventually provided in 1784. In 1747 he visited Ireland for the first time; in 1751 he made the first of twenty-two visits to Scotland. From small beginnings in 1760 the Methodist system gradually developed also in America. In 1768 a Methodist Chapel was opened in New York. The needs of this new field induced Wesley to ordain Dr. Thomas Coke (1747–1814), a Welshman and graduate of Jesus College, Oxford, Superintendent or Bishop, and also to instruct Coke to ordain Francis *Asbury (1745–1816) in America as his colleague. Wesley himself still wished the Movement to take place within the C of E, but an increasingly independent system grew up. At the time of Wesley's death there were 294 preachers and 71,668 members in Great Britain, 19 missionaries and 5,300 members on mission stations, and 198 preachers and 43,265 members in America. Less of a *Calvinist than most of his followers, Wesley's opposition to the strict Calvinist view of election had led to a break with G. Whitefield in 1741.

Wesley was a man of the greatest courage and persistence, with a vast capacity for leadership and organization. His personality was magnetic, his piety and charity uncontestable. His conversation was admired by Dr. Samuel *Johnson. His marriage with Maria Vazeille, a widow of very different temperament from his own, proved unhappy. Although Charles Wesley was a more gentle and attractive character and Whitefield a greater preacher, John Wesley was the central figure in the rise of Methodism and one of the greatest Christians of his age. Feast day (with Charles), in the ASB, 24 May; in the American BCP (1979), 3 Mar.

Wesley himself ed. a collection of his works, 32 vols., Bristol, 1771–4; the more important later edd. include ed. 3, by T. Jackson, 14 vols., London, 1829–31, and ed. 11, also by T. Jackson, 15 vols., ib., 1856–62, with life by J. Becham in vol. i, pp. i–xlix. The standard ed. of his Journals, which extend from 1735 to 1790, is that of N. Curnock, 8 vols., London, 1909–16; of his Letters by J. Telford, 8 vols., ib., 1931; of his Sermons by E. H. Sugden, vol. i only publd., ib., 1921. Collection of extracts, with introd., by A. C. Outler (New York, 1964). Lives by T. Coke–H. Moore (London, 1792), J. Whitehead (2 vols., ib., 1793–6), R. Southey (2 vols., ib., 1820, and many later edd.), H. Moore (2 vols., ib., 1824–5), L. Tyerman (3 vols., ib., 1870–71; with much fresh material), R. D. Urlin (ib., 1870), J. Telford (ib., 1886), J. H. Overton (ib., 1891), R. Green (*Religious Tract Society, 1905), C. T. Winchester (London, 1906), W. H. Fitchett (ib., 1906), G. Eayrs (ib., 1926), W. H. *Hutton ('Great English Churchmen', 1927), G. C. Cell (New York, 1935), R. Pike (London, 1938), M. Schmidt (2 vols., Zürich, 1953–66; Eng. tr., 1962 ff.), Ingvar Haddal (Oslo, 1956; Eng. tr., 1961), and V. H. H. Green (London, 1964). There is also a series of important studies by J. S. Simon (5 vols., London, 1921–34). Maldwyn [L.] Edwards, John Wesley and the Eighteenth Century. A Study of his Social and Political Influence (1933). J. B. Green, John Wesley and William Law (1945). W. R. Cannon, The Theology of John Wesley, with special Reference to the Doctrine of Justification (New York, 1946); H. Lindström, Wesley and Sanctification. A Study in the Doctrine of Salvation (Stockholm, 1946). W. L. Doughty, John Wesley, Preacher (1955). C. W. Williams, John Wesley's Theology Today (1960). A. B. Lawson, John Wesley and the Christian Ministry. The Sources and Development of his Opinions and Practice (1963). R. C. Monk, John Wesley, his Puritan Heritage (1966). F. Baker, John Wesley and the Church of England (1970). Maldwyn [L.] Edwards, Family Circle. A Study of the Epworth Household in Relation to John and Charles Wesley (1949). V. H. H. Green, The Young Mr. Wesley (1961). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 303–14. Crit. ed. of Works by F. Baker and others (Oxford, 1975 ff.) See also works cited under Methodism.

WESLEY, SAMUEL SEBASTIAN (1810–76), English composer and organist. He was a son of the composer Samuel Wesley (1766–1837), who was himself a son of Charles *Wesley. A boy soprano of the Chapel Royal from 1819, he afterwards became organist of *Hereford Cathedral (1832–5), of *Exeter Cathedral (1835–42), of Leeds Parish Church (1842–9), of *Winchester Cathedral (1849–65), and of *Gloucester Cathedral (1865–76). He conducted the Three Choirs' Festival in 1834 and four times from 1865 to 1874. His compositions include such well-known anthems as 'The Wilderness' and 'Blessed be the God and Father'.

G. W. Spink, 'Samuel Sebastian Wesley: A Biography' in The Musical Times, lxxviii (1937), pp. 44–6, 149 f., 239 f., 245–7, 438 f., and 536–8. E. Walker, A History of Music in England (1907), pp. 263–6. F. G. Edwards in D.N.B., lx (1889), pp. 320–2, s.v.; H. S. Oakeley in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. 5 by E. Blom, ix (1954), p. 265 f., with list of his publd. works.

WESLEYAN METHODISTS. See Methodism and other artt. there listed.

WESSEL (c. 1420–89), Dutch theologian. (He is also known as Gansfort, the name 'Wessel' having been given to him at his baptism; the designation 'John Wessel', by which he is sometimes described, appears to have arisen through confusion with *John of Wesel.) Educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer, he was influenced by *Plato, St. *Augustine, and St. *Thomas Aquinas. For 16 years he studied and taught at Paris, where he defended the side of *Nominalism against *Realism, more, however, it appears, on ecclesiastical than on philosophical grounds. Later he visited Italy, where he came into contact with the Renaissance humanism, and finally returned home for his last years. He is commonly regarded by German Protestant writers as one of the 'Reformers before the Reformation', since in his attitude to the Papacy, to the authority of the Church, and to the superstitious tendencies of his age, he shared many of the sentiments of M. *Luther.

A collection of his writings ed. M. Luther (n. pl. d. [c. 1521]); later ed., Basle, 1522. Complete works publ. Groningen, 1614. E. W. Miller, Wessel Gansfort. Life and Writings (2 vols., Papers of the American Society of Church History, i and ii; New York and London, 1917), with Eng. tr. by J. W. Scudder of his Correspondence in vol. i, pp. 231–333, of his treatise 'concerning the Blessed Sacrament of the Eucharist and the Hearing of the Mass' in vol. ii, pp. 3–70, and of the Farrago, pp. 75–315, and full bibl. C. Ullmann, Reformatoren vor der Reformation, book 4, vol. ii (ed. 2, 1866), pp. 236–557; Eng. tr. (1885), pp. 263–615. J. *Friedrich, Johann Wessel (1862). M. van Rhihn, Wessel Gansfort (The Hague, 1917); id., Studiën over Wessel Gansfort en zijn Tijd (1933). A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance. History of the 'Devotio Moderna' (New York, 1925), ch. 6.

WESSENBERG, IGNAZ HEINRICH VON (1774–1860), *Febronianist reformer. Educated at Augsburg by ex-Jesuits, and later at Dillingen (where he struck up a friendship with J. M. Sailer, 1751–1832) and Würzburg, in 1795 he made the acquaintance of K. v. Dalberg (1744–1817). In 1802, though only a subdeacon, he was appointed by Dalberg, now Coadjutor Prince-Bp. of Constance, his *vicar general. He became an increasingly warm advocate of Febronianist principles and aimed at the creation of a National German Church, largely independent of Rome. As early as 1802 he began a monthly review, Geistliche Monatsschrift (1802–4), which was replaced after two years by the less aggressive Konstanzer Pastoralarchiv (1804–27). Among his reforms were the raising of standards in the clerical seminaries, frequent gatherings of the clergy for mutual encouragement, bi-weekly religious instruction in the state schools, systematic provision for the blind and deaf-mute, and the establishment of an interconfessional house of refuge. His *Josephinistic principles and writings met with much opposition at Rome. In support of his cause he accompanied Dalberg to Paris in 1811 and in 1814–15 attended the Congress of Vienna as Dalberg's deputy, but without positive result. During his absence in Vienna, Rome separated the Swiss portion of the diocese from Constance and shortly afterwards brought pressure on Dalberg to depose Wessenberg. Though Dalberg obeyed, he sought Wessenberg's appointment as his Coadjutor with the right of succession. The acceptance of this proposal by the Government of Baden was invalidated by Rome. When, on Dalberg's death (1817), the chapter elected Wessenberg as vicar and administrator of the diocese, *Pius VII again resisted the appointment and refused Wessenberg an audience at Rome. From now onwards Wessenberg, in open disobedience to the Pope, acted as administrator until 1827, when the diocese of Constance, which had been suppressed in 1821 by the bull 'Provida sollersque', was incorporated into that of Freiburg. In 1833 he retired into private life. Wessenberg was a very voluminous writer. His publications included a large treatise, Die grossen Kirchenversammlungen des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts in Bezug auf die Kirchenverbesserung (4 vols., 1840), but they lacked solidity and are without enduring value.

Life by J. Beck (Freiburg i.Br., 1862; put on *Index on 11 June 1866). A. Rösch, Das religiöse Leben in Hohenzollern unter dem Einfluss des Wessenbergianismus, 1800–1850 (1908). K. Aland, 'Wessenberg-Studien' in Zeitschrift für die Geschichte des Oberrheins, xcv (1943), pp. 550–620, xcvi (1948), pp. 450–567; id., 'Das Schrifttum I. H. v. Wessenbergs', ib., cv (1957), pp. 475–511. W. Müller, 'Wessenberg in heutiger Sicht' in Zeitschrift für Schweizerische Kirchengeschichte, lviii (1964), pp. 293–308. M. Ott in C.E., xv (1912), p. 590 f.; W. Müller in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 1064–8, s.v., with bibl.

WEST AFRICA, Christianity in. The first Europeans arrived on the coast of W. Africa at the end of the 15th cent., but for the most part until the 19th cent. they were involved in the slave trade rather than evangelization. The Portuguese, however, undertook missionary work in Angola, where a Bishopric was established in 1596, and the Prefecture of the Congo was set up in 1640. The success of this mission declined after the beginning of the 18th century.

The abolition of the slave trade in the early 19th cent. and the exploration of previously unknown parts of Africa was followed by sustained missionary activity by Churches of all denominations. When freed slaves from Sierra Leone began to go back to their homes in W. Nigeria, *C.M.S. missionaries went with them. The British Government expeditions up the Niger in 1854 and 1857 were accompanied by S. A. Crowther, who in 1864 was consecrated Bishop of the Niger Territories, the first African Bishop in the Anglican Communion. A small *Methodist mission came to Nigeria at an early date, to be followed by *Presbyterians from Scotland in 1846 and *Baptists (originally from the U.S.A.) in 1850. Other denominations came later in the 19th cent. The Methodists also set up missions in Gambia, Ghana and Dahomey. On the death of Crowther in 1891 the appointment of a European as his successor led to a schism and the formation of the first of the independent African Churches in the area. RC missionary societies established posts in practically every part of West Africa during the second half of the 19th cent., a prominent part being played by the *White Fathers, the Holy Ghost Fathers and the Society of African Missions. The RC Church enjoyed a favoured position in the Belgian Congo, though international agreement when the Congo Free State was set up in 1884 had provided for religious liberty and both the Baptists and the Presbyterians established missions in the 19th cent. In French territory an active part was taken not only by RCs but also by French Evangelicals, of whom the most famous was A. *Schweitzer, and in French West Africa an Anglican mission from the *West Indies (under *S.P.G. direction) operated. The missions in Liberia (RC, Episcopalian and Protestant) were almost exclusively American in origin.

During the present cent., in W. Africa as elsewhere, there has been growth in co-operation between the non-RC Churches engaged in missionary work, following the *Edinburgh Conference of 1910, and the establishment of independent national Churches to match the independence which most W. African states achieved after the Second World War. The work of the Basel Mission in Ghana was interrupted during the First World War, but after this war the Presbyterians and the returned Basel missionaries joined to form the Presbyterian Church of the Gold Coast, which became completely independent in 1950. The RC hierarchy replaced the older *Vicariates in Ghana and Nigeria in 1950, in the Ivory Coast in 1955 and in the Congo in 1959. In 1951 the existing Anglican dioceses, except Liberia, were organized into the Province of West Africa, with a constitution, coming into force in 1963, which made it entirely independent of the C of E. In 1959 the Scottish Presbyterians transferred their responsibilities to the Eastern Nigerian Synod of the Presbyterian Church, while independent Methodist Conferences were established in Ghana in 1961, Nigeria in 1962 and Sierra Leone in 1967.

The growth towards union of the Churches has been marked by the establishment of a number of regional Christian Councils. The movement went furthest in Nigeria, where a project for union between Anglicans, Presbyterians and Methodists (similar to that of the Church of *South India) was agreed and expected to come into force in 1965. It was postponed owing to objections by the Methodists.

A characteristic feature of the scene in W. Africa has been the rapid rise of a large number of independent African Churches, mainly of a messianic, *Pentecostal type.

J. Du Plessis, The Evangelisation of Pagan Africa. A History of Christian Missions to the Pagan Tribes of Central Africa (Cape Town, &c. [c. 1930]), pp. 61–249. C. P. Groves, The Planting of Christianity in Africa (Lutterworth Library, xxvi, xliii, xliv and 1; 1948–58), esp. i, pp. 197–218 and 275–311; ii, pp. 1–78 and 212–47. J. M. Todd, African Mission. A historical study of the Society of African Missions whose priests have worked on the coast of West Africa and inland, in Liberia, the Ivory Coast, Ghana, Togoland, Dahomey and Nigeria, and in Egypt, since 1856 (1962). R. M. Wiltgen, S.V.B., Gold Coast Mission History 1471–1880 (Techny, Ill., 1956). F. L. Bartels, The Roots of Ghana Methodism (Cambridge, etc., 1965). N. Smith, The Presbyterian Church of Ghana, 1835–1960 (Accra, 1966). F. J. A. Ajayi, Christian Missions in Nigeria 1841–1891 (1965). Ruth M. Slade, English-Speaking Missions in the Congo Independent State (1878–1908) (Académie royale des Sciences coloniales. Classe des Sciences morales et politiques. Mémoires in-8°, Nouvelle série, xvi, fasc. 2; Brussels, 1959). J. B. Webster, The African Churches among the Yoruba 1888–1922 (Oxford, 1964). H. W. Turner, History of an African Independent Church (2 vols., ib., 1967). Latourette, v, pp. 419–60, and vii, pp. 238–49; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, v (1963), pp. 478–94. See also bibl. to C.M.S.

WEST INDIES, Christianity in the. The earliest evangelization in the West Indies was carried out by the RC missionaries who came with the colonists from the end of the 15th cent. When Pope *Alexander VI assigned the western world to the king of Spain (1493), he did so with the intention that the indigenous people should be instructed in the Catholic religion and large numbers of priests and religious went to work among the Indians. A bishopric was established at San Domingo in 1511 and further organization soon followed. The aboriginal population was, however, largely exterminated and replaced by Negro slaves from West Africa. Great efforts were made to see that the slaves were baptized, though the cruelty with which they were treated led to antagonism and revolts.

In the early part of the 17th cent. the British began to settle in various of the islands (St. Kitts in 1623, etc.), and they acquired others as a result of capture, Jamaica being ceded in 1670. In the islands ruled by the British the Anglican Church was established. It ministered to a large part of the white population, but in the 17th and 18th cents. made only isolated attempts to evangelize the natives, e.g. by the building of *Codrington Missionary Training College, Barbados, in 1714–1742. In spite of the antagonism of the planters, other bodies undertook active work among the slaves. The *Moravians arrived in 1732 and established a number of schools. *Methodist preaching began with the arrival of Nathaniel Gilbert in 1760; the Methodist mission, though at first particularly unpopular, was promoted by the Wesleyan Missionary Society from England and eventually met with considerable success. In 1883 two independent Methodist Conferences were set up in the West Indies, but owing to financial difficulties the Wesleyan Missionary Society had to resume responsibility in 1904. Work continued under the Missionary Society until 1967, when an independent Methodist Conference of the West Indies was again established, with its headquarters at Antigua. The first Baptist place of worship was opened in 1791 by George Liele, who came from the U.S.A.; by 1813 responsibility for the work had been assumed by the British Baptists, but by 1842 the mission declared itself independent. In 1824 *Presbyterians arrived from the U.S.A.; they devoted themselves particularly to the East Indians of Trinidad.

By the beginning of the 19th cent. the Anglican Church began to take its responsibilities to the Negroes more seriously. In 1808 the Bp. of London, whose diocese included the West Indies, issued a circular to all clergy recommending that Sunday Schools should be set up for the education of Negro children. In 1824 the first two bishoprics of Jamaica and Barbados were established, and by 1854 the work of evangelization was so far advanced that the Church in the West Indies was able to assume responsibility for the Rio Pongas Mission in West Africa. Later in the century the Anglican Church was disestablished everywhere except in Barbados. The Province was constituted in 1883. It elects its own bishops, makes its own canons and regulations by synodical action and administers its own finances.

In those areas which were originally Spanish or French the RC Church retained its predominance. Though the RC Church was proscribed for a period in Jamaica, when Trinidad and Tobago were ceded to Britain in 1802 it was agreed that no change should be made in the status of the RC Church. The 19th cent. saw the creation of three *Vicariates Apostolic for the British West Indies in 1837, as well as the establishment of a bishopric at Port of Spain in 1820 (now an archbishopric). In 1894 the *Jesuits from England, who had been active in Jamaica, handed over responsibility for their work to the Province of Maryland, U.S.A.

After the liberation of the slaves (1833), the Churches were faced with the task of evangelizing the Orientals, esp. Indians and Chinese, brought to the islands to supply cheap labour. These peoples were much less ready to accept Christianity than the Negroes, and have to a considerable degree retained their own religions.

In the 20th cent. in the West Indies as elsewhere all the Churches have endeavoured to build up native ministries, and there have been attempts by most of the non-RC communities to join in *ecumenical discussion. The most significant development in this field was the formation in 1965 of the United Theological College of the West Indies at Kingston, Jamaica, in which ten denominations (incl. Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists) are concerned. Also important in this century has been the remarkable expansion of the *Pentecostal Churches.

A. Caldecott, The Church in the West Indies (Colonial Church Histories, 1898). J. B. Ellis, The Diocese of Jamaica (1913). T. Farrar, Notes on the History of the Church in Guiana [1892]. H. L. Clarke, Constitutional Church Government in the Dominions beyond the Seas and other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924), pp. 259–315. F. X. Delany, S.J., A History of the Catholic Church in Jamaica B.W.I. 1494–1929 (New York, 1930). F. D. Walker, The Call of the West Indies. The Romance of Methodist Work and Opportunity in the West Indies and Adjacent Regions [1933]. E. A. Payne, Freedom in Jamaica. Some Chapters in the History of the Baptist Missionary Society [1933]. Latourette, v, pp. 48–61, and vii, pp. 162–4, with bibl. notes.

WESTCOTT, BROOKE FOSS (1825–1901), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at King Edward VI's School at Birmingham under J. Prince Lee, where he became the lifelong friend of J. B. *Lightfoot and E. W. *Benson, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Ordained in 1851, in 1852 he became assistant master under C. J. *Vaughan at Harrow, where he published a series of theological works, including the 1st edition of his History of the New Testament Canon (1855), the Introduction to the Study of the Gospels (1860), and a History of the English Bible (1868). In 1869 he left Harrow for a residentiary canonry at *Peterborough Cathedral, which he retained when, in 1870, he was elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Here he prepared together with F. J. A. *Hort the celebrated critical edition of the Greek NT, published in 1881. It was followed by his three great commentaries on St. John's Gospel (1881), on the Epp. of St. John (1883), and on the Ep. to the Hebrews (1889), the fruit of his Cambridge lectures. At the same time he devoted much of his energy to the training of his students and to the encouragement of missions, the Cambridge Clergy Training School (now 'Westcott House') and the Cambridge Mission to Delhi owing their existence to his inspiration and direction. From 1883, when he resigned his canonry at Peterborough, he combined his chair with a canonry at *Westminster. In 1890 he was consecrated Bp. of Durham. In the diocese he made social problems his special concern, and one of the most notable events of his episcopate was his mediation in the coal strike of 1892. He also continued the plan inaugurated by J. B. Lightfoot whereby six or eight ordinands read for a year at Auckland Castle, and himself lectured to them each week. In 1892 he published his doctrinal work, The Gospel of Life, based on his Cambridge lectures, which was followed by several volumes of collected sermons and addresses, among them The Incarnation and Common Life (1893) and Christian Aspects of Living (1897).

Arthur Westcott (son), Life and Letters of Brooke Foss Westcott (2 vols., 1903). Shorter life by J. Clayton ('Leaders of the Church, 1800–1900', ed. G. W. E. Russell, 1906); brief sketch by A. G. B. West, Memories of Brooke Foss Westcott (1936). Bishop Westcott Memorial Lectures: C. K. Barrett, Westcott as Commentator (1958 Lecture; Cambridge, 1959); H. Chadwick, The Vindication of Christianity in Westcott's Thought (1960 Lecture; ib. [1961]); [W.] O. Chadwick, Westcott and the University (1962 Lecture; ib., 1963); D. Newsome, Bishop Westcott and the Platonic Tradition (1968 Lecture, ib., 1969). V. H. Stanton in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 635–41.

WESTERÅS, The Ordinance of. The regulations passed by the Diet of Westerås, which Gustavus Vasa assembled on 24 June 1527 to carry through the Protestant Reformation in *Sweden. Their effect was to transfer to the crown the enormous power hitherto possessed by the Swedish episcopate, to alienate its property, and to make the Church completely subservient to the King.

Text in Svenska Riksdagsakter jämte andra handlingar som höra till statsförfattningens historia under tidehvarfvet 1521–1718, i, ed. E. Hildebrand-O. Alin (1837), pp. 89–95; Eng. tr. in Kidd, pp. 234–6 (No. ci). See also works on the Reformation in Sweden, cited under Sweden, Christianity in.

WESTERN TEXT OF THE NT. An early form of the Greek text of the NT, so named by B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort because the chief authorities for it were of Western provenance, viz. some Graeco-Latin MSS., the *Old Latin, and quotations in the Latin Fathers. Since Westcott and Hort's day, many fresh and geographically widely separated evidences of a similar text have been found, e.g. the Sinaitic *Old Syriac, and for a time textual critics designated all these texts collectively as 'Western'. But as it is becoming clear that these other recently recovered texts are less closely related than are the Graeco-Latin manuscripts and their Latin allies among themselves, the term 'Western' is now tending to be confined to the witnesses to which Westcott and Hort originally applied it.

The Western text reflects changes, some accidental and others deliberate, which the NT text suffered before A.D. 150. In contrast with the *Caesarean, *Neutral, and *Byzantine texts, which seem to be consciously revised witnesses, the Western is apparently an unrevised text. Scholars are now agreed (against Westcott and Hort) that it cannot be disregarded in attempting to reach the original NT text. Though it cannot be made the basis, its readings have often to be considered and sometimes adopted.

In the Gospels the peculiarities of the Western text often arose from the desire to make the texts of the various Gospels identical in places where they are similar. Through this tendency to assimilate parallel passages, many omissions as well as additions to the original text have resulted. In some cases, however, the Western text probably preserves the correct text against other witnesses, e.g. at Mt. 9. 34, 21. 44; Lk. 22. 19b–20, 62, 24. 12, 40; Jn. 12. 8; Rom. 16. 25–27; and it has sometimes resisted the tendency to assimilate passages where other witnesses have succumbed. In the Gospel of Luke there is a notable passage preserved only in the Western text: after 6. 4 *Codex Bezae records that the Lord found a man working on the Sabbath and said to him, 'Man, if thou knowest what thou doest, blessed art thou; but if thou knowest not, thou art accursed and a transgressor of the law.' It is, however, in Acts that the differences between the Western text and the other texts are at their greatest. In this Book no agreement has been reached among scholars as to how far each is original. In the Epistles differences are much smaller, but here, as in the Gospels, the Western text is sometimes clearly correct.

Important discussions in B. F. Westcott–F. J. A. Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek, ii (1881); B. H. *Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924); F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, Part 1, vol. iii (1926; The Text of Acts, by J. H. Ropes); C. H. *Turner, 'Western Readings in the Second Half of St. Mark's Gospel' in J.T.S., xxix (1928), pp. 1–16; A. C. Clark, The Acts of the Apostles (1933); G. D. Kilpatrick, 'Western Text and Original Text in the Gospels and Acts' in J.T.S., xliv (1943), pp. 24–36; A. F. J. Klijn, 'A Survey of the Researches into the Western Text of the Gospels and Acts (1949–1959)' in Novum Testamentum, iii (1959), pp. 1–27, 161–73. E. J. Epps, The Theological Tendency of Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis in Acts (Cambridge, 1966). M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., Introduction à l'étude du Nouveau Testament, Deuxième Partie, i: La Critique textuelle; ii: La Critique rationnelle (1935), pp. 42–82, 389–409. G. Zuntz, The Text of the Epistles. A Disquisition upon the Corpus Paulinum (Schweich Lectures, 1946; 1953), pp. 84–159.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. Acc. to a legend, not mentioned by *Bede and prob. of 13th cent. origin, a Benedictine abbey was founded in Thorney Island in 616 and miraculously consecrated by St. *Peter, the patron of the Church. The abbey is mentioned in a charter of *Offa, dated 785, of which, however, the authenticity has been challenged. Acc. to *William of Malmesbury it was restored by St. *Dunstan. The rebuilding and restoration of the abbey were undertaken by *Edward the Confessor in commutation of a vow to go on a pilgrimage to Rome, the new choir and transepts being dedicated in 1065. The nave, begun c. 1100, was completed by 1163, when, after the canonization of Edward the Confessor (1161), his relics were translated to a shrine in the choir. A much larger chapel at the East End seems to have been undertaken in 1220, when various extensions were planned. Henry III in 1245 began the erection of the present church in the French style. By 1269, when the relics of Edward the Confessor were translated to the shrine behind the High Altar, the eastern part of the church had been completed. Work on the nave, continued in 1375, was finished c. 1505. By 1519 the chapel planned by Henry VII as a shrine for *Henry VI had been added. The western towers, designed by C. *Wren and modified by N. Hawksmoor (1661–1736), were completed between 1740 and 1750. The present choir-screen (reredos) was erected in 1867 after the designs of G. G. *Scott (d. 1878).

The Benedictine foundation of Edward the Confessor soon became one of the richest abbeys in the country, largely through the veneration accorded to the last Anglo-Saxon king. As a royal foundation it occupied a special position in relation to the reigning sovereigns, and it was under the protection of the Holy See. From pre-Norman times until the reign of *James I it enjoyed wide rights of *sanctuary. Abbot Laurence (abbot c. 1158–75) obtained the right to wear a mitre and complete exemption from the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London. Notable Abbots included Edwin (abbot 1047–71), Gilbert Crispin (abbot 1085–1117), Simon Langham (abbot 1349–62), Nicholas Lytlington (abbot 1362–86), and John Islip (abbot 1500–32).

In 1540 the monastery was dissolved and a collegiate church under a Dean with twelve prebendaries was founded, W. Boston (abbot 1532–1540) becoming the first Dean (1540–49). The abbey became a Royal *Peculiar, retaining its independence of the see of London. At the same time most of the monastic quarters, rebuilt after a fire in 1298, were appropriated for the school founded by *Henry VIII in 1540. In the same year a bishopric was established under T. *Thirlby, covering most of the county of Middlesex; it was suppressed in 1550. A Benedictine community under J. Feckenham (d. 1584) was reinstated by *Mary in 1556; it was dissolved in 1559 when *Elizabeth I restored the collegiate church. From the time of J. Dolben (Dean 1662–83) to that of S. *Horsley (Dean 1793–1801) the Deanery was held in conjunction with the see of *Rochester. In 1840 the number of Prebendaries was reduced from twelve to six. Notable Deans include L. *Andrewes (Dean 1601–5), J. *Williams (Dean 1620–45), J. *Ireland (Dean 1816–42), R. Chenevix *Trench (Dean 1856–63) and A. P. *Stanley (Dean 1864–81). J. Thynne, sub-dean from 1834 to 1880, did much to improve the standard of worship in the abbey.

Notable features in the abbey include the fan-vaulting in the chapel of Henry VII, the chantry of Abbot Islip, the mosaic pavement in the sanctuary, the Coronation Chair and Stone of *Scone (q.v.), the mural paintings of St. Christopher and the Incredulity of St. Thomas in the south transept, the 11th cent. chapel of the Pyx in the cloisters and the tombs of numerous sovereigns from Henry III to George II and celebrities of all kinds, esp. since the 18th cent. Since the time of William I, who chose the place because of its association with Edward the Confessor, it has been the traditional place for the coronation of the sovereign, the abbot or dean having a special part in the ceremony. Until 1547 the House of Commons frequently sat in the 13th-cent. octagonal Chapter House. Almost throughout its history the abbey has retained a unique position as a centre of the national life.

A. P. Stanley, Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey (1868); H. F. Westlake, Westminster Abbey (2 vols., 1923); id., The Story of Westminster Abbey (1924); W. R. Lethaby, Westminster Abbey Re-examined (1925); J. Perkins, Westminster Abbey. Its Worship and Ornaments (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxxiii, xxxiv, and xxxviii; 1938–52); id., Westminster Abbey. Benedictine Monastery and Collegiate Church [1945]; A. Fox, Westminster Abbey [1951]. [F.] E. Carpenter (ed.), A House of Kings. A History of Westminster Abbey (1966), with bibl.; E. Abbott–J. Betjeman–A. L. Rowse–G. Zarnecki–J. Pope-Hennessy–K. Clark, Westminster Abbey (1972). W. R. Lethaby, 'Medieval Paintings at Westminster' in the Proceedings of the British Academy, xiii (1927), pp. 123–51; W. A. Pantin, 'Medieval Westminster' in J. McCann, O.S.B., and C. Cary-Elwes, O.S.B. (edd.), Ampleforth and its Origins (1952), pp. 29–52. R. B. Rackham, C.R.–L. E. Tanner in D.E.C.H. (ed. 1948), pp. 645–50. Cf. also W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 265–330.

WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY (1643). The synod appointed by the Long Parliament to reform the English Church. A bill passed on 15 Oct. 1642 convening a body of divines having failed to receive the Royal Assent, Parliament issued on 12 June 1643 an ordinance to the same effect. The conference consisted of 151 nominated members—30 lay assessors (named first) and 121 divines. Among the laymen were such notable persons as J. Pym, J. *Selden, Bulstrode Whitelock, and H. Vane. The ecclesiastics were carefully selected from men of widely diverse views. They fell into four groups: (1) Episcopalians, a group of four bishops (R. Brownrigg of *Exeter, J. Prideaux of *Worcester, J. *Ussher of *Armagh, and T. Westfield of Bristol) and five D.D.s (D. Featley, H. *Hammond, R. Holdsworth, G. *Morley, and R. *Sanderson); (2) Presbyterians, much the largest group, which included E. *Calamy, E. *Reynolds (later Bp. of *Norwich), A. *Tuckney, W. Twisse, and R. *Vines; (3) a small group of Independents of disproportionate influence, through the favour of Oliver *Cromwell and the Army—among them were Thomas Goodwin and Philip Nye; and (4) Erastians such as J. *Lightfoot. Out of loyalty to the King the Episcopalians practically never attended the sessions. It should be noted that despite its importance in the history of the Presbyterian Churches, the Assembly was in no sense a creation of Presbyterianism, nor indeed a Church court at all.

It met originally on 1 July 1643 in the Henry VII Chapel of *Westminster Abbey. When the autumn weather set in, it moved to the Jerusalem Chamber, which was thereafter its regular meeting-place. After the adoption of the *Solemn League and Covenant (q.v.), it was increased by five clerical and three lay Commissioners from Scotland. Between 1 July 1643 and 22 Feb. 1649 it held 1163 sessions; but the last mention of the presence of the Scottish Commissioners is on 9 Nov. 1647. Under the Commonwealth meetings continued at very irregular intervals down to 1653, mainly for the trial of ministers. The Assembly was never formally dissolved.

The Assembly began by revising the *Thirty-Nine Articles. But the appearance of the Solemn League and Covenant led to the construction of a wholly new formula, the celebrated *Westminster Confession (q.v.). At the same time the Assembly prepared the Directory of Public *Worship (q.v.) and the two *Westminster Catechisms (q.v.). The proceedings were long delayed by violent controversies between Presbyterians and Independents over the Sacraments and the jurisdiction of Church courts, and between Presbyterians and Erastians over Church censures.

Although only partially and temporarily accepted in England, the documents issued were approved by the Church of Scotland and came into general use throughout the Presbyterian world. In the present constitution of the Church of Scotland they are expressly mentioned as subordinate standards.

A. F. Mitchell, The Westminster Assembly (1883); W. Beveridge, A Short History of the Westminster Assembly (1904); S. W. Carruthers, The Everyday Work of the Westminster Assembly (1943).

WESTMINSTER CATECHISMS. The two Catechisms ('Larger' and 'Shorter') compiled by the *Westminster Assembly. They were completed in the autumn of 1647 and, with slight changes, approved by Parliament on 15 Sept. 1648. Meanwhile the Larger Catechism had been adopted by the General Assembly at Edinburgh on 20 July, the Shorter on 28 July.

The Larger Catechism, partly based on J. *Ussher's Body of Divinity (1645), was mainly the work of A. *Tuckney. It is in essence a popular restatement of the teaching of the *Westminster Confession. It suffers from being in places unnecessarily elaborate, e.g. in its specification of what is commanded and forbidden in the Ten Commandments.

The Shorter Catechism, which came to fill a much more important place in *Presbyterianism, was probably also largely the work of A. Tuckney, who was assisted by John Wallis. It opens with the well-known Question and Answer: 'What is the chief end of man?' 'Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever.' Its didactic usefulness is increased by its method, since the answer always embodies the question and forms a sentence complete in itself. It has been in regular use among *Congregationalists and *Baptists as well as Presbyterians.

The Catechisms have often been reprinted. Convenient text in T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith. The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 183–234 and 261–78. The Shorter, with Latin translation, is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii (1882), pp. 676–704.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL. The cathedral of the RC Abp. of Westminster, dedicated to the *Precious Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ. The building was proposed in 1865, begun in 1895 under Card. H. *Vaughan and opened for his funeral in 1903. It was consecrated by Abp. (later Card.) Francis Bourne in 1910. It was designed by J. F. Bentley (1839–1902) in early 'Christian-Byzantine style' and executed mainly in red brick. The principal features are the spaciousness of the nave, the massive ciborium over the High Altar, the interior decoration of marble and mosaic (still incomplete), and the domed campanile, 284 ft. high.

W. de l'Hôpital, Westminster Cathedral and its Architect (2 vols., 1919). Westminster Cathedral, ed. by the Administrator (1930); A Popular Guide to Westminster Cathedral (*Catholic Truth Society [1930]). Westminster Cathedral. Guide to the architecture and interior, the history and pastoral functions of the Metropolitan Cathedral of Westminster, with preface by John Betjeman [1968]. See also Life of H. Vaughan (cited s.v.) and E. Oldmeadow, Francis Cardinal Bourne (2 vols., 1940–4), passim.

WESTMINSTER CONFESSION. The profession of *Presbyterian faith set forth by the *Westminster Assembly. Originally the Assembly had been directed to revise the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E in a Puritan direction and changes were made with the help of the *Lambeth Articles of 1595 and the *Irish Articles of 1615. But when Art. XV was reached, the *Solemn League and Covenant appeared, presupposing uniformity of doctrine between England and Scotland, and under Scottish influence Parliament ordered the suspension of the revision on 12 Oct. 1643 and the framing of 'a Confession of Faith for the three Kingdoms, according to the Solemn League and Covenant'. The task was entrusted to a large commission; it took 27 months in all and was completed on 4 Dec. 1646. After revision it was finally approved by Parliament on 20 June 1648. Meanwhile the General Assembly at Edinburgh had ratified it on 27 Aug. 1647.

The Confession expounded in 33 chapters all the leading articles of the Christian Faith from the creation of the world to the last judgement. It taught emphatically the Calvinistic doctrine of election, though it recognized freedom of the will and 'the liberty or contingency of second causes' in the Divine decrees. It distinguished the two covenants, that of works made with *Adam and his posterity and that of grace made in Christ with believers, with its offer of free salvation on condition of faith. The distinction between the invisible and the visible Church was upheld. Great stress was laid on the identification of the Jewish Sabbath with the Christian Sunday (dies dominica) and the due observance of the Sabbath rest.

The Confession at once established itself as the definite statement of Presbyterian doctrine in the English-speaking world. It exercised a deep influence on other groups of Calvinists. Several of the 17th cent. *Baptist Confessions are simply adaptations of it.

S. W. Carruthers, The Westminster Confession of Faith. Being an Account of the Preparation and Printing of its Seven Leading Editions (Presbyterian Historical Society of England. Extra Publications No. 2 [1937]), with crit. ed. of text, pp. 89–157. G. S. Hendry, The Westminster Confession Today. A Contemporary Interpretation (1960). Text, with Lat. vers., also pr. in H. B. Smith–P. Schaff (edd.), The Creeds of the Evangelical Protestant Churches (1887), pp. 598–673.

WESTON, FRANK (1871–1924), Anglican Bp. of Zanzibar. After several years' work in slum parishes in England, he joined the *U.M.C.A. in 1898, and was appointed principal of St. Andrew's Training College, Kiungani, in 1901. Here he learned to live among Africans as one of themselves, and to understand their point of view as few Englishmen have done. In 1908 he was consecrated to the see of Zanzibar. He is chiefly remembered for the occasions on which he figured in controversy. Of these the most notable were (1) the *Kikuyu Dispute (1913), and (2) his severance of relations with the Bp. of Hereford (J. *Percival) in 1915, after the appointment of B. H. *Streeter to a canonry at Hereford. In 1920 he largely inspired the appeal for Christian unity put out by the *Lambeth Conference, and in the same year appeared his protest against forced labour in Africa, entitled Serfs of Great Britain. In 1923 he presided at the Second Anglo-Catholic Congress, where his personality made a great impression. Of his writings the most important is The One Christ (1907), an expression of the *Kenotic view of the Incarnation.

H. Maynard Smith, Frank, Bishop of Zanzibar (1926). Brenda C. Cross, 'The Christology of Frank Weston' in J.T.S., N.S., xxi (1970), pp. 73–90. H. M. Smith in D.N.B. (1922–1930), p. 902 f.

WESTPHALIA, Peace of (1648). The treaty terminating the *Thirty Years' War. Strictly it was a pair of treaties concluded by the Empire on 24 Oct. 1648: the one with France at Münster in Westphalia and the other with Sweden and the Protestant states at Osnabrück. Besides many territorial decisions, the *Augsburg Formula of 'cuius regio eius religio' was accepted as the basis of ecclesiastical settlement. The principle was to apply also to the *Calvinists, but with the proviso that in the hereditary dominions of the Hapsburgs the situation on 1 Jan. 1624 (in Württemberg, Baden, and the Palatinate on 1 Jan. 1618) should be regulative. Princes were restrained from changing their religion and the Roman see restricted from interference in religious matters in Germany. These last two provisions led to *Innocent X's bull, 'Zelo Domus Dei' (26 Nov. 1648), strongly denouncing the treaty. In the long run its constitutional, territorial, and ecclesiastical changes helped to hasten the dissolution of the *Holy Roman Empire.

Text of Treaty of Münster pr. in J. Dumont, Corps universel diplomatique du droit des gens, vi (pt. 1; Amsterdam, 1738), pp. 450–61; of that of Osnabrück, ib., pp. 469–90. Treaty of Münster also pr., with introd., in H. Vast, Les Grands Traités du règne de Louis XIV, i (1893), pp. 1–64. Pope Innocent X's Bull 'Zelo Domus Dei' pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, x (Turin, 1868), pp. 603–6. Eng. tr. of the religious clauses of the Peace and of Innocent's Bull in S. Z. Ehler–J. B. Morall (edd.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 189–98. J. G. von Meiern (ed.), Acta Pacis Westphalicae Publica oder Westphälische Friedens-Handlungen und Geschichte (6 vols., Hanover, 1734–6, + Register, 1740). [J. Dumont (ed.)] Négociations secrètes touchant la paix de Munster et d'Osnaburg: ou Recueil général des préliminaires, instructions, lettres, mémoires etc. concernant ces négociations depuis leur commencement en 1642 jusqu'à leur conclusion en 1648 (4 vols., The Hague, 1725–6). Acta Pacis Westphalicae. Im Auftrage der Vereinigung zur Erforschung der Neueren Geschichte, ed. M. Braumbach–K. Repgen (Munich, 1962 ff.). J. S. Pütter, Geist des Westphälischen Friedens . . . historisch und systematisch dargestellt (1795). F. Kopp–E. Schulte, Der Westfälische Friede. Vorgeschichte, Verhandlungen, Folgen (1940). F. [O.] Dickmann, Der Westfälische Frieden (Münster i.W., 1959). M. Ritter, 'Das römische Kirchenrecht und der Westfälische Friede' in H.Z., ci (1908), pp. 253–82. J. B. Sägmüller, 'Der Begriff des exercitium religionis publicum, exercitium religionis privatum und der devotio domestica im Westfälischen Frieden' in Th. Q., xc (1908), pp. 255–79. See also works cited under Thirty Years War.

WESTWARD POSITION. The practice of the celebrant of the Eucharist standing on the east side of the altar and facing the people appears to have been customary until about the 8th or 9th cent., when the *Eastward position was generally adopted. Since c. 1947 the westward position has been gradually restored in the RC Church, and an Instruction of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites of 26 Sept. 1964 enjoined that altars should be free-standing in order that the celebrant might be able to face the people. The westward position is also used in some C of E churches.

WETSTEIN, J. J. See Wettstein, J. J.

WETTE, W. M. L. DE. See De Wette, W. M. L.

WETTSTEIN, JOHANN JAKOB (1693–1754), NT critic. A native of Basle, where he became a Protestant pastor, he was twice removed from his office on the charge of *Socinianism. From 1733 onwards he was professor at Amsterdam. His edition of the Greek NT (2 vols., 1751–2), which marked a great advance on its predecessors, included in the critical apparatus innumerable important variants, hitherto unrecorded, and also the sigla for denoting the MSS. since then in common use. On a visit to England in search of MSS. in 1716, he made the acquaintance of R. *Bentley, who gave him considerable encouragement, though a rupture occurred between them a few years later.

C. L. Hulbert-Powell, John James Wettstein (C.H.S. [1938]).

WEYMOUTH NEW TESTAMENT. An English version of the NT, published in 1903 under the title The New Testament in Modern Speech. It was the work of R. F. Weymouth (1822–1902), a *Baptist who was for several years headmaster of Mill Hill School. Besides the translation, each book is provided with a short introduction, and there are footnotes to the text.

WHARTON, HENRY (1664–95), English medievalist. A native of Worstead in Norfolk, he was educated at Caius College, Cambridge. In 1686–7 he assisted W. *Cave in the compilation of his Historia Literaria, and in 1688 published several controversial writings, among them A Treatise on the Celibacy of the Clergy and The Enthusiasm of the Church of Rome, as well as an edition of Reginald *Pecock's Treatise proving Scripture to be the Rule of Faith. In the same year he became domestic chaplain to Abp. W. *Sancroft and began the work which made him famous, the Anglia Sacra. Though committed by his connexion with Sancroft to the cause of the *Nonjurors he took the oaths in 1689. He thus estranged his former friends without gaining the favour of the new authorities, and his ecclesiastical career thereby came to an end. In 1691 he published the two volumes of his Anglia Sacra, which placed him among the founders of English medieval scholarship. They contain a history, down to the Reformation, of the English sees whose cathedrals were served by regulars. The first volume deals with the dioceses and gives editions of medieval chronicles, whereas the second is chiefly a collection of medieval texts bearing on the lives of English bishops. In it are printed for the first time, e.g., *William of Malmesbury's 'Life of St. *Wulfstan' and *John of Salisbury's 'Life of St. *Anselm'. The work, which is still indispensable to medieval studies, was severely criticized by G. *Burnet, who disparaged antiquarian erudition. Among its defects are rather arbitrary abbreviations of the sources and minor inaccuracies, but these do not detract from its importance. A third volume, intended to deal with the cathedrals served by secular clergy, and only partly finished, is inferior to the other two. Many of his unpublished MSS. are preserved in *Lambeth Palace Library.

Fourteen Sermons preached . . . before William Sancroft . . . in the Years MDCLXXXVIII, MDCLXXXIX (1697), with life of the author (no pagination); One and Twenty Sermons Preached . . . in the Years MDCLXXXIX, MDCXC (1698). 'Excerpta ex Vita MS. Henrici Whartoni, A.M., a seipso scripta' printed in G. D'Oyly, The Life of William Sancroft, ii (1821), pp. 103–74. D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), ch. vii, pp. 175–96. W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 404–7.

WHATELY, RICHARD (1787–1863), Anglican Abp. of *Dublin. Educated at Oriel College, Oxford, he became successively Fellow of Oriel (1811), vicar of Halesworth (1822), principal of St. Alban Hall, Oxford (1825), Drummond professor of political economy (1829), and Abp. of Dublin (1831). He was one of the best known of the '*Noetics', an anti-*Erastian, and an anti-*Evangelical; and almost certainly the author of Letters on the Church by an Episcopalian (1826), which had considerable influence on J. H. *Newman, for a time his vice-principal at St. Alban Hall. Later Whately became a vigorous opponent of the *Tractarians. His best-known writings were his Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte (1819), an attempted reductio ad absurdum of the principles of D. *Hume; his Elements of Logic (1826), over many generations a standard textbook for students; his Elements of Rhetoric (1828); and his Introductory Lectures on Political Economy (1831–2). As Abp. of Dublin he took an active part in the religious and political life of *Ireland, and did valuable work as a Commissioner of National Education. It was on his advice that Lord John Russell nominated R. D. Hampden (q.v.) to the Regius Professorship of Divinity at Oxford.

E. J. Whately (daughter; ed.), Miscellaneous Remains from the Commonplace Book of Richard Whately (1864). Id., Life and Correspondence of Richard Whately (2 vols., 1866). W. J. Fitzpatrick, Memoirs of Richard Whately . . . with a Glance at his Contemporaries and Times (2 vols., 1864). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 423–9.

WHEATLY, CHARLES (1686–1742), English divine. Educated at St. John's College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of his college in 1707. He resigned his fellowship in 1713 and held various parochial appointments until his death. He is remembered by his commentary on the BCP, first published in 1710 as The Church of England Man's Companion, or a Rational Illustration of the Harmony . . . and Usefulness of the Book of Common Prayer and a standard work until well into the 19th cent. He also wrote The Nicene and Athanasian Creeds (1738).

Fifty Sermons on Several Subjects and Occasions (3 vols., London, 1746), with preface by J. Berriman in vol. i (no pagination); his A Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, ed., with notes, by G. E. Corrie (Cambridge, 1858). E. I. Carlyle in D.N.B., lx (1899), p. 435.

WHICHCOTE, BENJAMIN (1609–83), Provost of King's College, Cambridge. A native of Stoke, Salop, he entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, in 1628, becoming Fellow in 1633 and tutor in 1634. Ordained deacon and priest simultaneously in 1637, he was appointed Sunday afternoon preacher at Trinity Church, Cambridge, where his preaching met with immediate success. On his marriage (1643) he retired to a college living at North Cadbury, Somerset. The following year, as a result of the Parliamentary reform of the University, he returned as Provost of King's College, but alone among the newly appointed heads of houses avoided subscribing to the *National Covenant. Vice-Chancellor for 1650–1, in 1655 he advised O. *Cromwell on the question of toleration of the Jews. At the *Restoration he was ejected by royal command, but was restored to favour in 1662 on accepting the Act of *Uniformity. From 1662 he held the cure of St. Anne's, Blackfriars, until the church was burnt in 1666. In 1668 he was appointed vicar of St. Lawrence Jewry; while the church was being rebuilt he preached frequently before the Corporation of London in the Guildhall Chapel.

Whichcote was one of the leading *Cambridge Platonists (q.v.). A sermon preached at the Commencement of 1650 involved him in a controversy with his old tutor and friend, A. *Tuckney. Averse to the pessimistic view of human nature prevalent among the *Puritans, he exalted man as a child of reason. He saw in reason the test of Scripture, maintained that some matters on which good men disagreed were insoluble, and pleaded for freedom of thought; and he was charged at different times with *Latitudinarianism, *Arminianism, and *Socinianism. His works, nearly all posthumous, include Θεοφορούμενα Δόγματα, or Some Select Notions of B. Whichcote (1685), Select Sermons (with preface by the third Earl of Shaftesbury, 1689), Several Discourses (ed. by J. Jeffery, 1701) and Moral and Religious Aphorisms (ed. by J. Jeffery, 1703).

Works (4 vols., Aberdeen, 1751), with short life in vol. i, pp. i–viii; selections from his Select Sermons and Aphorisms in E. T. Campagnac (ed.), The Cambridge Platonists (1901), pp. 1–75, with introd., pp. ix–xxvii; his Moral and Religious Aphorisms, ed. S. Salter (London, 1753), with 'Eight Letters of Dr. Antony Tuckney and Dr. Benjamin Whichcote' appended (separate pagination), with introd. preface, pp. i–xl; Aphorisms reprinted (London, 1930), with introd. by W. R. *Inge, pp. iii–x. J. *Tulloch, Rational and Religious Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century, ii (1872), ch. ii, pp. 45–116; B. F. *Westcott, 'Benjamin Whichcote' in A. Barry (ed.), Masters in English Theology (1877), pp. 147–173. F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists. A Study (1926), ch. ii, pp. 50–86. J. D. Roberts, From Puritanism to Platonism in Seventeenth Century England (The Hague, 1968). J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, iii (1911), pp. 296 f., 531 f., 567–70, 589–96 and passim. Id. in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 1–3. See also other works cited under Cambridge Platonists.

WHISTON, WILLIAM (1667–1752), mathematician and theologian. Educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, he was appointed chaplain to J. Moore, Bp. of *Norwich (1696), and vicar of Lowestoft (1698). In 1703 he succeeded I. *Newton as Lucasian professor of mathematics at Cambridge. His Arianizing views, however, caused him to be expelled from the university in 1710, and in 1747 he finally deserted the C of E and joined the *General Baptists. He wrote a large number of treatises, many of them of a startlingly paradoxical kind, which include his New Theory of the Earth (1696), Accomplishment of Scripture Prophecies (1708; in which he affirms that all prophecies have but one meaning), Primitive Christianity Revived (4 vols., 1711), *Life of Samuel Clarke (1730), and Primitive New Testament (1745). He is best remembered now by his translation of *Josephus, with many useful notes and dissertations (1737; very often reprinted).

The principal sources for his life are the Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Mr. William Whiston . . . written by himself (1733) and his An Account of the Convocation's Proceedings with Relation to Mr. Whiston (1711). L. Stephen in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 10–14, s.v.; G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 629 f.

WHITAKER, WILLIAM (1548–95), *Puritan divine. A nephew of A. *Nowell, he was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where in 1571 he was elected to a Major Fellowship. In 1580 he became Regius professor of divinity and in 1586 master of St. John's College. A strict *Calvinist, he exercised a wide influence by his devotion to learning and his impartiality. A strong anti-Romanist, he held that the Pope was *antichrist and attacked the writings of R. *Bellarmine and T. *Stapleton. In the last year of his life he was mainly responsible for drafting the *Lambeth Articles, though at one or two points J. *Whitgift softened the extreme Calvinism of Whitaker's original text. His writings include Greek versions of the BCP (1569) and of Nowell's Larger Catechism (1573).

Opera Theologica (2 vols., Geneva, 1610), with life [by A. Assheton] in vol. i, pp. 698–704. R. Churton, The Life of Alexander Nowell (1809), esp. pp. 325–34; J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, ii (1884), pp. 293, 322–6, 339 f. and passim.

WHITBY, The Synod of (664). (The Old English name was Streanæshalch.) The chief question settled at this synod was the date of Easter (see Paschal Controversy), which divided the Christians of Northumbria from those in the South. The former, represented by King Oswy and the bishops St. *Colman and St. *Cedd, followed the Irish custom, which claimed to be the custom of St. *John, whereas the latter, led by St. *Wilfrid, had adopted the Roman system. The accounts of the proceedings of the synod given by *Bede and Eddius state that, while Colman appealed to the custom of St John, Wilfrid quoted the authority of St. *Peter and the decisions of the Council of *Nicaea. The controversy was settled by King Oswy, who decided to follow St. Peter, as being the keeper of the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Thus England severed her connexion with the old Irish Church in favour of Rome, and, though the *Celtic Churches still hesitated for some time before accepting the decision, the Synod of Whitby virtually ended the Paschal Controversy in the West.

The principal sources are Bede, H.E., iii. 25 (cf. notes to ed. C. Plummer, Oxford, 1896, i, pp. xxxix–xli, ii, pp. 146 and 188–92), and Eddius's life of St. Wilfrid, x, ed., with Eng. tr., B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1927), pp. 20–23, and notes pp. 156–8. Hardouin, iii, cols. 993–8; Mansi, xi (Florence, 1765), cols. 67–72; A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (edd.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 100–6. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 193–200. J. L. G. Meissner, The Celtic Church in England after the Synod of Whitby (1929), pp. 7–18 (ch. 2, 'The Synod of Whitby and its Immediate Results'). P. Grosjean, S.J., 'La Date du Colloque de Whitby' in Anal. Boll., lxxviii (1960), pp. 233–74. H. Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972), pp. 103–113. See also works cited under Paschal Controversy.

WHITBY, DANIEL (1638–1726), English divine. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1664, he was appointed in 1668 to a prebendal stall at *Salisbury, and in 1669 became rector of St. Edmund's church in that city. He gained notoriety for his hostility to Popery, for his desire for reconciliation with the Nonconformists, and for his provocative writings, the best-known of which were The Protestant Reconciler (1682; subsequently publicly burnt at Oxford) and Last Thoughts (1727). This last showed that Whitby was a *Unitarian in his later years. His most considerable work was a Paraphrase and Commentary on the NT (2 vols., 1703). He also wrote in defence of B. *Hoadly in the *Bangorian Controversy.

Extracts from Whitby's writings in P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism. The Thought and Practice of the Church of England, Illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935), Nos. 57, 95, 118, 294, pp. 116 f., 221 f., 270–2, and 634 f. A. A. Sykes, 'A Short Account of Dr. Whitby. To which is Added, A Catalogue of his Works' prefixed to ed. 2 of Whitby's Last Thoughts (1728), pp. i–xvi. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 28–30, s.v., with reff.

WHITCHURCH, EDWARD (d. 1561), *Protestant printer. A citizen of London, he became a warm adherent of the Reformed doctrines and in 1537 associated himself with R. *Grafton (q.v.) for circulating *Matthew's Bible (printed at Antwerp). In 1538 he and Grafton gave M. *Coverdale financial assistance in printing his NT at Paris and in 1539 published the *Great Bible at Greyfriars House in London. Seven editions had appeared by 1541, some copies bearing Whitchurch's, others Grafton's, name. In 1543, with six other printers, they were imprisoned for Protestantism, but released four weeks later. In the last years of *Henry VIII's reign they continued to print religious books such as *Primers. Under *Edward VI Whitchurch printed both the First (1549) and Second (1552) Prayer Books.

E. G. Duff, A Century of the English Book Trade (1905), p. 169, s.v. H. R. Plomer, A Short History of English Printing, 1476–1900 (1915), pp. 57–9. Lucy E. Osborne, 'The Whitchurch compartment in London and Mexico' in Library, Fourth Series, viii (1928), pp. 301–11. S. Lee in D.N.B., lxi (1900), p. 30 f., s.v. See also bibl. under Grafton, R., and Great Bible.

WHITE FATHERS (Fr. Pères Blancs). The Society of Missionaries of Africa was founded by Abp. Charles Lavigerie (1825–92) at Algiers in 1868. It is composed of secular priests and co-adjutor brothers living in community without vows, but bound by solemn oath to lifelong work in the African mission and obedience to their superiors. They wear a white tunic and a mantle or burnous with a rosary round the neck. Their constitutions were approved by the Holy See in 1885 and confirmed in 1908. The White Fathers devote themselves to a thorough four years' preparation of the Africans for baptism and to the subsequent training of converts for trades, agriculture, missionary work, and for the priesthood. They began their missions in Algeria and Tunisia but soon extended them to Central and E. Africa, often meeting with violent opposition. Apart from their missionary achievements the White Fathers have done much for the abolition of slavery, for the improvement of agriculture, and for the scientific exploration of Africa.

T. Frey, Die Gesellschaft der Missionare von Afrika in ihrem 50-jähr. Bestehen (Trier, 1918). J. Bouniol. W.F., The White Fathers and their Missions ([1929]; based on T. Frey, op. cit.). La Société des Missionnaires d'Afrique (Pères Blancs) (Les Ordres religieux; 1924); P. Lesourd, Les Pères Blancs du Cardinal Lavigerie (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux; 1935); D. Attwater, The White Fathers in Africa (1937); G. D. Kittler, The White Fathers (1957). W. Burridge, W.F., Destiny Africa. Cardinal Lavigerie and the Making of the White Fathers (1966). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 623–30. L. Volker in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 894 f., s.v. See also bibl. to West Africa.

WHITE FRIARS. The *Carmelite friars, so called from their white cloaks and *scapulars. The term has been applied, less accurately, to the *Premonstratensians or White Canons.

WHITE LADIES. A name popularly given to the following religious orders, from their white habits: (1) The Sisters of the Presentation of Mary, a teaching order founded at Theuyts, Ardèche, in France in 1796, by Marie Rivier, for the education of young girls. The mother-house is at Saint-Andéol, Ardèche. Since 1853 they have been established also in Canada. (2) The *Magdalens (q.v.). (3) In medieval England the *Cistercian nuns, the designation still surviving here and there in the place-name 'Whiteladies'.

WHITE MONKS. The *Cistercian monks, so named from the colour of their habit, which was of undyed wool.

WHITE SISTERS. (1) The Congregation of the Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa was founded by Abp. C. Lavigerie in 1869 to assist the *White Fathers (q.v.) and was recognized by the Pope in 1909. They have simple perpetual vows, no lay sisters, and devote themselves chiefly to teaching, nursing, and the training of native sisters. They are under the spiritual direction of the White Fathers, who are also responsible for their safety in the missions.

(2) The Congregation of the Daughters of the Holy Ghost, usually called White Sisters from their white habit, was founded at St.-Brieuc in Brittany in 1706. Its chief objects are the education of children and the care of the sick. They spread rapidly esp. during the 19th cent., but were driven from many of their houses in France by the legislation of 1902. They have numerous convents in Belgium, England, and the U.S.A.

(1) Heimbucher, ii, pp. 630–2, with bibl. G. Cottino in E.C., viii (1952), col. 1105 f., s.v. 'Missionarie di Nostra Signora d'Africa'. See also works cited s.v. White Fathers.
(2) C. Lemercier, Notice sur la congrégation des Filles du Saint-Esprit, 1706–1850 (Saint-Brieuc, 1888). Heimbucher, ii, p. 499 f. J. T. Murphy in C.E., vii (1910), p. 417 f., s.v. 'Holy Ghost, Religious Congregations of the'.

WHITE, FRANCIS (c. 1564–1638), Bp. of *Ely. Educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, he was ordained priest in 1588, and after filling several livings was appointed Dean of *Carlisle in 1622. He became bishop successively of Carlisle (1626), *Norwich (1629), and Ely (1631). He was a prominent anti-Papist disputant. In 1617 he published The Orthodox Faith and Way to the Church (1617), in answer to a RC treatise entitled White dyed Black, and in 1622 he was engaged by *James I to support W. *Laud in presenting the Anglican case in a formal dispute with the Jesuit, 'John *Fisher'. His final works, A Treatise of the Sabbath Day (1635), dedicated to Laud, and An Examination and Confutation of . . . a Briefe Answer to a late Treatise of the Sabbath Day (1637; the unnamed author of the Brief Answer was Richard Byfield, c. 1598–1664) were both written to refute the *Sabbatarian tendencies of his time.

Extracts from White's works repr. in P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism. The Thought and Practice of the Church of England, Illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935), pp. 8 f., 46, 58 f., 132–4, 415, 437, 441 f., 514 f., 559, 573 f., 634. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lxi (1900), p. 34 f., s.v., with reff.

WHITE, JOSEPH BLANCO (1775–1841), theological writer. Born in Seville of an Irish RC family, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1800; but, becoming troubled by religious doubts, he came to England in 1810 and later became an Anglican. For a time he was attached to Oriel College, Oxford, where he became intimate with R. *Whately and was well known among the *Tractarians. Later he was again afflicted with doubts and, under the influence of J. *Martineau, became a *Unitarian. His writings include the Letters from Spain (1822), Practical and Internal Evidence against Catholicism (1825), and Second Travels of an Irish Gentleman in Search of a Religion (1833), and the sonnet 'Night and Death'.

Spanish translation of selections from his works, with introd. and extensive bibl., by V. Llorens (Barcelona, 1971). J. H. Thom, The Life of the Rev. J. B. White (3 vols., 1845).

WHITE, WILLIAM HALE. The real name of 'Mark *Rutherford' (q.v.).

WHITEFIELD, GEORGE (1714–70), *Methodist evangelist. Born at *Gloucester of humble parentage, he was sent as a servitor to Pembroke College, Oxford, where he came under the influence of John and Charles *Wesley. He was ordained deacon in 1736 and followed the Wesleys to Georgia, where he founded an orphanage. On returning to England shortly afterwards, primarily to obtain priest's orders, he began large open-air meetings. His fervent and eloquent preaching soon attracted notice and his evangelistic tours, during which he collected large sums for his Georgian orphanage, met with a remarkable response, esp. in South Wales and Scotland. His activities were frowned on by ecclesiastical authority, esp. as his markedly *Calvinist theology appeared less orthodox than that of the Wesleys. In 1739 he began the publication of his Journal. In 1741 he set up a chapel at Moorfields, Bristol, and later, through the patronage of Selina, Countess of *Huntingdon, opened a Tabernacle in Tottenham Court Road, London. His labours, which included several visits to America, wore down his health and he died a relatively early death. He was the most striking orator of the Methodist revival, but less successful as an organizer than the Wesleys. His theology was more rigid and made a less general appeal, but his influence in awakening the religious conscience of the 18th cent. went very deep.

His Journal and collections of his sermons have frequently been reprinted. Works pr. in 6 vols., London, 1772, with life by J. Gillies prefixed; this life was also issued separately, London, 1772. Other studies by R. Philip (London, 1837), J. R. Andrews (ib., 1864), J. P. Gledstone (ib., 1871), L. Tyerman (2 vols., ib., 1876–7), A. D. Belden (ib., [1930]), S. C. Henry (New York [1957]), O. Riecker (Wuppertal, 1962), and A. A. Dallimore (2 vols., London, 1970–80). R. Austin, 'Bibliography of the Works of George Whitefield' in Proceedings of the Wesley Historical Society, x (1916), pp. 169–84 and 211–23. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 85–92; G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 630 f., s.v.

WHITGIFT, JOHN (c. 1530–1604), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Queens' College and Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of Peterhouse in 1555 (like M. *Parker, he was not a Marian exile); he was ordained in 1560, and became later Lady Margaret (1563) and Regius (1567) professor of divinity, master of Pembroke Hall (1567), master of Trinity College (1570), Dean of *Lincoln (1571), and Bp. of *Worcester (1577). His opposition as master of Trinity and Regius professor to the *Puritan, T. *Cartwright, had brought him to the notice of *Elizabeth I, who in 1583 nominated him Abp. of Canterbury in succession to the Puritan, E. *Grindal. His desire for a strong and unified C of E, impervious alike to Papal and extreme Puritan influence, was reflected in his 'Six Articles' of 1583. In repressing Puritanism (*Marprelate Tracts, &c.) he made great use of the Ecclesiastical Commission, summoning before it suspects for interrogation on oath. He also vigorously opposed the attempt of the extreme Puritans in 1584–1585 to impose upon the Church a Presbyterian form of government. A determined advocate of episcopacy and ritual uniformity, he was theologically a *Calvinist (*Lambeth Articles of 1595). In his later years he concerned himself with various administrative reforms, e.g. fostering learning among the clergy, abolishing non-residence, and reforming the ecclesiastical courts. He is commemorated by the Whitgift schools and almshouses at Croydon, which he founded and endowed.

Works ed. J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 3 vols., 1851–3), with biographical memoir in vol. iii, pp. v–xxiii. Early life by G. Paule, Controller of his Household (London, 1612). The fullest source, however, is the life by J. *Strype (London, 1718; new ed., 3 vols., Oxford, 1822). P. M. Dawley, John Whitgift and the Reformation (Hale Lectures; New York, 1954; London, 1955); V. J. K. Brook, Whitgift and the English Church (1957). J. F. H. New, 'The Whitgift–Cartwright Controversy' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, lix (1968), pp. 203–11. [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956), passim. S. Lee in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 129–37; W. H. *Frere in D.E.C.H., p. 630 f., s.v.

WHITSUNDAY. The Feast of the Descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles on the 50th day after Easter (see Pentecost). It ranks, after *Easter, as the second festival in the Church. Its celebration at *Jerusalem in the late 4th cent. is described in the 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae'. In the W., the Vigil of Pentecost soon became a secondary date for baptisms with a ceremonial closely resembling that of the *Paschal Vigil Service, except for the omission of the blessing of the new fire and the candle. The association of the Vigil of Pentecost with Baptism survived in the RC Church until 1955. That the feast itself was kept with an *Octave from early times is shown by the '*Apostolic Constitutions' (v. 20) and the *Gelasian and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, though the following Sunday was never reckoned as the Octave Day, and in the Roman Rite the whole Octave was dropped in 1969. In the BCP the Monday and Tuesday after Whitsunday are '*Red Letter Days' and the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday are *Ember Days. The liturgical colour is red. In the RC Church the Sundays between Whitsunday and Advent were until 1969 reckoned as 'Sundays after Pentecost'. For the current division of the ecclesiastical year, see Year.

R. Cabié, La Pentecôte. L'Évolution de la cinquantaine pascale au cours des cinq premiers siècles [1965]. J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Pfingstoctav und Kirchenbusse in der römischen Liturgie' in Miscellanea Liturgica in honorem L. Cuniberti Mohlberg, i (Bibliotheca Ephemerides Liturgicae, xxii; 1948), pp. 169–82. G. Kretschmar, 'Himmelfahrt und Pfingsten' in Z.K.G., lxvi (1956), pp. 209–53. E. Venables in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1618 f., s.v. 'Pentecost'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 260–74, s.v. 'Pentecôte'; R. Cabié in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2196–2204, s.v. 'Pinksteren', with extensive bibl.

WHITTIER, JOHN GREENLEAF (1807–92), American *Quaker poet. After working as a journalist up to the age of 25, he became the poet-seer of the Anti-Slavery Movement, writing many poems in the cause of liberation, and suffering from mob-violence and political hate. His fervent Christianity, which shone through all his work, was esp. evident in such poems as 'The Crucifixion', 'The Call of the Christian', and 'My Soul and I'. He was the author of several hymns, among them 'Dear Lord and Father of mankind', 'Immortal love, for ever full', and 'O Lord and Master of us all'.

Collected ed. of his Works, 7 vols., London, 1888–9; Poetical Works also publd. Cambridge, Mass., 1895, with biog. sketch by H. E. S[cudder], pp. xi–xix, and ed. W. G. Horder, London, 1892; ed. 2, ib., 1904. Selected Poems (World's Classics, 1913). S. T. Pickard, Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1894; London, 1895). Other studies by W. S. Kennedy (Boston, Mass., 1882; also New York, 1892), F. H. Underwood (Boston, 1884), T. W. Higginson ('English Men of Letters', 1902), G. R. Carpenter ('American Men of Letters', Boston, 1904), G. K. Lewis (London, [1913]), A. Mordell (Boston, 1933), A. Rowntree (London [1947]), J. B. Pickard (New York, 1961; London, [1963]), and E. Wagenknecht (New York, 1967). Bibliography by T. F. Currier (Cambridge, Mass., 1937). W. M. Payne in W. P. Trent–J. Erskine–S. P. Sherman–G. van Doren (edd.), A History of American Literature, ii (Cambridge, Eng., 1919), pp. 42–54, with good bibl. by F. H. Ristine, pp. 436–51.

WHITTINGHAM, WILLIAM (c. 1524–79), Dean of *Durham. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1545 and two years later moved to Christ Church. His *Calvinistic views having forced him to flee from England in *Mary's reign, he took a leading part in the organization of the English congregation at Frankfurt, where he supported J. *Knox against R. *Cox, and, on Knox's defeat, followed him to Geneva. Here he succeeded him as minister in 1559, although he had apparently received no ordination of any kind. Returning to England in the following year, he was made Dean of Durham in 1563. His iconoclasm and repeated failures to conform to the BCP led eventually to an attempt by E. *Sandys, Abp. of *York, to deprive him on the ground that he had not been validly ordained, but he died before the proceedings were concluded. His chief literary work was in the field of Biblical translation. In 1557 he published at Geneva an English version of the NT and he also took a leading part in the production of the *Geneva Bible, remaining behind to supervise its completion when most of the translators returned to England on Mary's death. He also rendered into metre a number of Psalms, the Lord's Prayer, and the Decalogue. He was prob. the author of A Brief Discourse of the Troubles begun at Frankfort, A.D. 1554 (1574).

A Brief Discourse of the Troubles at Frankfurt, repr. from the blackletter ed. of 1575 (London, 1846), with introd. by J. P[etheram], pp. iii–xiv, also repr. in D. Laing (ed.), The Works of John Knox, iv (1855), pp. 9–40, and ed. by E. Arber ('A Christian Library', i; 1907). Contemporary life ed. from MS. by A. *Wood in *Bodleian Library, Oxford (MS. Wood E 64, Art. 5) by M. A. Everett Green in The Camden Miscellany, vi (1871), pp. 1–40, with other relevant material, pp. 41–6. J. H. Colligan, The Honourable William Whittingham of Chester (?1524–1579) (1934). Brief notes on the question of his ordination in E. Denny, The English Church and the Ministry of the Reformed Churches (*Church Historical Society, Tract lvii; 1900), pp. 59–62, with reff. A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 150–3. S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 632 f., s.v.

WHOLE DUTY OF MAN, The. This devotional manual, first published c. 1658 and formerly very widely used, contains seventeen discourses, mainly on matters of Christian morals, 'one whereof being read every Lord's Day, the whole may be read over thrice in the year'. The identity of the author is not known with certainty, but among those to whom it has been ascribed are H. *Hammond (who certainly contributed the prefatory letter signed 'H. H.'), J. *Fell, and (with most probability) R. *Allestree. Its moral standards are exacting, though adapted to life in the world.

WICHERN, JOHANN HINRICH (1808–81), founder of the German *Innere Mission. A native of Hamburg, he studied theology at Göttingen and Berlin, where he came under the influence of J. A. W. *Neander and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. After his return to Hamburg he was deeply moved by the neglect from which the children suffered in the poor quarters of the city, and in 1833 founded an institute, the Rauhes Haus, based on the principle of family education, to provide for their spiritual and material needs. Under Wichern's powerful personality and educational gifts the house soon began to expand, and in 1842 he established a training-house of helpers. From 1844 he edited a periodical, Die Fliegenden Blätter aus dem Rauhen Hause, which became the central organ of all charitable undertakings in the German Protestant Churches. At his suggestion all these activities were co-ordinated in the central organization of the Innere Mission at the first congress of the Evangelical Churches (Erster evangelischer Kirchentag) at *Wittenberg in 1848. In 1857 he was entrusted with the Prussian prison reform, and in 1858 he founded the Johannisstift at Spandau, nr. Berlin, on the model of the Rauhes Haus. In the wars of 1864, 1866, and 1870–1 he and his 'Brothers' organized a service of assistance to the wounded, the Felddiakonie. In 1872 Wichern returned to the Rauhes Haus, where his last years were spent in illness.

Collected writings ed. J. Wichern (son)–F. Mahling (6 vols., Hamburg, 1901–8); also ed. P. Meinhold (5 vols. in 7, Berlin, 1958–71). Selections ed. K. Janssen (3 vols., Gütersloh, 1956–62). Diaries of his earlier years ed. M. Gerhardt with title Der junge Wichern (1925). Lives by F. Oldenberg (2 vols., Hamburg, 1882–7) and M. Gerhardt (3 vols., ib., 1927–31). M. Hennig, Das Lebenswerk Wicherns (ib., 1908). F. J. Leenhardt, La Mission intérieure et sociale de l'Eglise d'après Wichern, 1808–1881 [1931]. R. Kramer, Nation und Theologie bei Johann Hinrich Wichern (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte Hamburgs, ii; 1959); Helga Lemke, Wicherns Bedeutung für die Bekämpfung der Jugendverwahrlosung (ibid., vii; 1964). H. Rahlenbeck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 219–24; K. Janssen in R.G.G. (ed. 3), vi (1962), cols. 1678–80, s.v.

WICLIF, JOHN. See Wycliffe, John.

WIDOWS. In NT times widows had an acknowledged claim to the charity of their fellow-Christians (Acts 6. 1). Before long they acquired, like virgins, a recognized status and privileges in the Church, though they do not seem to have been ordained or to have taken specific vows. 1 Tim. 5. 3–16, which contains a detailed account of what was expected of widows, restricted the privileges to those over 60, younger women being recommended to remarry. The early history of the office was closely connected with that of the *Deaconess (q.v.).

J. Mayer (ed.), Monumenta de Viduis Diaconissis Virginibusque Tractantia (Florilegium Patristicum, xlii; Bonn, 1938), with bibl. C. H. *Turner, 'Ministries of Women in the Primitive Church. Widow, Deaconess and Virgin in the First Four Christian Centuries', in The Constructive Quarterly, vii (1919), pp. 434–59, esp. pp. 435–42 and 457–9; repr. in Catholic and Apostolic, ed. H. N. Bate (1931), No. xi, pp. 316–51, esp. pp. 317–28 and 349–51. J. Viteau, 'L'Institution des diacres et des veuves' in R.H.E., xxii (1926), pp. 513–537. L. Bopp, Das Witwentum als organische Gliedschaft im Gemeinschaftsleben der alten Kirche (Mannheim, 1950).

WIED, HERMANN VON. See Hermann of Wied.

WILBERFORCE, ROBERT ISAAC (1802–57), *Tractarian divine. The second son of W. *Wilberforce, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1826 and was brought into close association with J. H. *Newman and R. H. *Froude. He gradually acquired an extensive theological knowledge which made him one of the most learned of the Tractarians. In 1841 he was appointed Archdeacon of the East Riding. By Oct. 1843 he was in close personal relations with H. E. *Manning, then rector of Lavington, and carried on with him an extended theological correspondence which was largely concerned with the Roman claims. On 1 Nov. 1854 he was received into the RC Church at Paris. At the time of his death he was preparing for the priesthood. Besides the Life of his father, which he published in conjunction with his brother Samuel in 1838, his writings include The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1848), The Doctrine of Holy Baptism (1849), and The Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1853).

A. R. Ashwell–Reginald G. Wilberforce, Life of the Right Reverend Samuel Wilberforce (3 vols., 1880–2), passim. D. Newsome, The Parting of Friends. A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning [1966]. F. Legge in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 201–4, s.v., with further reff.

WILBERFORCE, SAMUEL (1805–73), successively Bp. of *Oxford and *Winchester. The third son of W. *Wilberforce, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and in 1828 ordained deacon. From 1830 to 1840 he was rector of Brighstone in the Isle of Wight. The repute of his eloquence and pastoral efficiency led to his appointment by the Prince Consort, in 1840, as one of his chaplains, which was the beginning of his influence at court. After holding the living of Alverstoke in Hants from 1840, he was appointed Dean of *Westminster in 1845 and later in the same year Bp. of Oxford. Though at first viewed with suspicion by both *Evangelicals and *Tractarians, esp. E. B. *Pusey, he soon gained general confidence by the many reforms he introduced in his diocese. He encouraged the building of churches and the formation of Anglican sisterhoods, and himself founded Cuddesdon Theological College (1854). He also established the system of Lenten missions and interested himself in the education of the poor. The effective methods of pastoral administration adopted in his diocese were widely imitated elsewhere. In 1869 Wilberforce was translated to Winchester. One of his main achievements in his last years was his initiation of the revision of the AV.

E. P. Baker (ed.), Bishop Wilberforce's Visitation Returns for the Archdeaconry of Oxford in the year 1854 (Oxfordshire Record Society, xxxv; 1954); R. K. Pugh–J. F. A. Mason (edd.), The Letter-Books of Samuel Wilberforce 1843–68 (ib., xlvii; 1970). Life by A. R. Ashwell–Reginald G. Wilberforce [son] (3 vols., London, 1880–2), incl. extensive extracts from his diaries and correspondence. Shorter life, based on the above, by R. [G.] Wilberforce (London, 1888). Further lives by G. W. Daniell (London, 1891), R. G. Wilberforce ('Leaders of the Church, 1800–1900', ed. G. W. E. Russell, 1905), J. C. Hardwick, Lawn Sleeves (Oxford, 1933), and S. Meacham (Cambridge, Mass., 1970). D. Newsome, The Parting of Friends. A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning [1966]. J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, ii (1888), pp. 1–70. F. Legge in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 204–8; G. W. E. Russell in D.E.C.H., pp. 633–6, s.v.

WILBERFORCE, WILLIAM (1759–1833), philanthropist and advocate of the abolition of the slave trade. A native of Hull, he was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1780 he became M.P. for Hull, later for Yorkshire, and formed an intimate friendship with W. Pitt, whose devoted supporter he became. In 1784–5 he travelled on the Continent. Under the influence of his NT reading he was converted to *Evangelicalism and determined to lead henceforth a strictly Christian life. In this purpose he was guided by John *Newton, who opposed his wish to take Holy Orders and persuaded him to serve the cause of Christianity in Parliament, a vocation for which he was particularly well fitted by his oratorical gifts. In 1787 he founded a society for the reformation of manners. About the same time, under the influence of T. *Clarkson, he began to interest himself in the slave trade, which he determined to take up in Parliament. In 1797 he settled at Clapham, where he became a prominent member of the '*Clapham Sect'. His Practical View of the Prevailing Religious System of Professed Christians (1797), a call to take seriously the duties of a Christian, esp. those of repentance and hatred of sin, enjoyed great popularity and established his reputation as the acknowledged leader of the Evangelical party. He contributed generously to the charities of Hannah *More and helped in the foundation of the *Church Missionary Society (1798) and the *Bible Society (1803). Throughout these years the abolition of the slave trade continued to be his chief concern, and after many vicissitudes the Bill, which had repeatedly been refused passage in the Lords, finally became law in 1807. Later he supported the movement for the complete abolition of slavery, which was effected by the Emancipation Act of 1833, shortly before his death. In 1813 he defended *Catholic Emancipation; he also advocated the introduction of English missionaries into *India and long championed the cause of *Sunday observance. In 1825 he resigned his seat in Parliament owing to failing health. Feast day in the ASB, 29 July; in the American BCP (1979), 30 July.

William Wilberforce had four sons and three daughters. For Robert Isaac Wilberforce and Samuel Wilberforce see preceding entries. HENRY WILLIAM WILBERFORCE (1807–73), his youngest son, was received into the RC Church in 1850. From 1854 to 1863 he edited the Catholic Standard.

William Wilberforce's Family Prayers, ed. Robert Isaac Wilberforce (son; London, 1834); Correspondence, ed. id.–Samuel Wilberforce (sons; ib., 1840); Private Papers, ed. A. M. Wilberforce (ib., 1897). The principal authority is the life by Robert Isaac Wilberforce–Samuel Wilberforce (5 vols. bound in 3, London, 1838; condensed ed., ib., 1868). The best modern study is that of R. Coupland (Oxford, 1923). Other lives by J. S. Harford (London, 1864), J. C. Colquhoun (ib., 1866), J. Stoughton (ib., 1880), and O. Warner (ib., 1962). L. Stephen in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 208–17.

WILFRID, St. (634–709), Bp. of *York. He was the son of a Northumbrian thegn, and was educated at the monastery of *Lindisfarne. Dissatisfied, however, with the *Celtic way of religious life, he studied the Roman form at *Canterbury and in 653 he set out for Rome itself; on the first part of the journey he was accompanied by St. *Benedict Biscop. After he had spent three years at Lyons, where he received the tonsure in the Roman manner, he returned to England and, being made Abbot of *Ripon, introduced the Benedictine Rule. At the Synod of *Whitby (664) he was largely responsible for the victory of the Roman party in the question of dating *Easter. Shortly afterwards he was consecrated Bp. of York at Compiègne by twelve Frankish bishops, to avoid consecration by the Celtic bishops whom he regarded as schismatical. On his return (666), which had been delayed, he found his see occupied by St. *Chad and retired to Ripon, but was put in possession of it by St. *Theodore of Canterbury in 669. When in 678 Theodore divided the diocese of York into three sees without Wilfrid's consent, he departed for Rome to appeal against the high-handed procedure, spending a year on the way preaching in Frisia. Though the synod, assembled by the Pope, declared in his favour, on his return to England he was imprisoned, and later retired to Sussex, where he carried out successful missionary work among the heathen population (681–6). Having become reconciled to Theodore, he was once more reinstated in his see, which he held from 686 to 691. When disputes with King Aldfrith compelled him to flee again, the King of Mercia asked him to administer the vacant see of *Lichfield. When, in 703, a synod called by Abp. Brihtwold of Canterbury decreed that he should resign his see of York and retire to Ripon, he went once more to Rome to appeal to the Holy See. Though his claims were completely vindicated, he agreed, on his return, to resign in favour of St. *John of Beverley, contenting himself with the see of *Hexham, and spending the last years of his life in his monastery at Ripon. A cosmopolitan churchman, a notable missionary, and a great defender of Papal authority, Wilfrid, despite many setbacks, succeeded in bringing England into closer touch with Rome, and in replacing the existing Celtic usages in the N. of England by the Roman liturgy, and Celtic by Benedictine monasticism. Feast day, 12 Oct.

Life by his disciple, Eddius Stephanus of Ripon, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, i (R.S., 1879), pp. 1–103, with introd., pp. xxxi–xxxviii; modern ed., with Eng. tr. and notes, by B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1927). Later authorities include *Bede, H.E., v. 19, notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 315–29; metrical life by Frithegode (10th cent.), and life by *Eadmer, with 'Breviloquium Vitae Sancti Wilfridi' also ascribed to Eadmer, printed in J. Raine, op. cit., pp. 105–59, 161–226, and 227–37 respectively, with introd. pp. xxxix–l, and notes on further sources, p. 1 f.; modern ed. of Frithegode's life by A. Campbell (Turin, 1950). B. W. Wells, 'Eddi's Life of Wilfrid' in E.H.R., vi (1891), pp. 535–50. G. F. Browne, Theodore and Wilfrith (1897); J. S. Fletcher, The Life and Work of St. Wilfrid of Ripon, Apostle of Sussex (Chichester, 1925); W. H. *Hutton, St. Wilfrid (York Minster Historical Tracts, No. 5; 1927). Eleanor S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (New York, 1948), pp. 101–214. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 187–200, 209–11, 280–308, 367–416, and 432 f. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (The Oxford History of England, ii; 1943; ed. 3, 1971), pp. 123 f., 132–45. H. [M. R. E.] Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972), esp. pp. 129–47. J. Raine in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 1179–85. See also Hexham.

WILKES, PAGET (1871–1934), Protestant missionary in Japan. The son of an Anglican clergyman, Wilkes was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he associated with the Oxford Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, well known in his day for its evangelistic fervour and missionary zeal. In 1897 he sailed for Japan under the *C.M.S. to work with B. F. Buxton, the C.M.S. pioneer. Here he formed the idea of a Japanese Evangelistic Band (J.E.B.) which, free of ecclesiastical organization, would be directed towards aggressive evangelism and the spread of Scriptural holiness; and in 1903 the J.E.B. was established under the name of the 'One by One Band' of Japan, with its centre at Kobe. Apart from a few visits to England, Wilkes spent all his active life in Japan, pursuing his missionary work with unabating fervour. His best-known works (translated into many languages) are The Dynamic of Service (1920), The Dynamic of Faith (1921), The Dynamic of Redemption (1923).

M. W. Dunn Pattison (Wilkes's sister), Ablaze for God: The Life Story of Paget Wilkes (1936). Shorter life by I. R. G. Stewart (London, 1957).

WILKINS, DAVID (1685–1745), editor of the 'Concilia'. His parentage was German and his name anglicized from Wilke. After studying at several Continental universities, he became professor of Arabic at Cambridge in 1724. His patron, Abp. W. *Wake, had meanwhile made him Librarian at *Lambeth Palace and in due course secured for him several promotions, including the rectory of Hadleigh, a prebend at *Canterbury, and the archdeaconry of Suffolk. A pioneer in oriental studies and in Anglo-Saxon, Wilkins was a versatile, though by modern standards somewhat inaccurate, scholar. His reputation rests principally upon his Concilia Magnae Britanniae et Hiberniae (4 vols., 1737), a monumental collection of documents which remains a standard source work for the British and Irish ecclesiastical councils.

D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 276–84. E. F. Jacob, 'Wilkins's Concilia and the Fifteenth Century' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th Ser., xv (1932), pp. 91–131. J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., lxi (1900), p. 260 f., s.v., with reff.

WILKINS, JOHN (1614–72), Bp. of *Chester. Born at Fawsley, Northants, he studied at New Inn Hall and at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1637 he was appointed Vicar of Fawsley, but soon resigned and held a succession of private chaplaincies. He became increasingly interested in the new scientific movement. In 1638 he published The Discovery of a World in the Moon, which argued the moon's habitability; in 1640 followed A Discourse concerning a New Planet, maintaining that the earth was a planet. From not later than 1645 he was a regular member of the group which met in London for the furtherance of scientific knowledge (R. *Boyle's 'Invisible College'). As his sympathies during the Civil War had been with the Parliamentarians, the Visitors made him Warden of Wadham College, Oxford, in 1648. Here his tolerant disposition won warm approval and attracted to Oxford a brilliant group of scientists, including many of his former London associates, which used to meet in Wilkins's rooms in Wadham. In 1659 he was appointed Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, but he was deprived at the Restoration (1660). He was given a succession of benefices, among them the Rectory of Cranford, Greater London (1660), the Vicarage of St. Lawrence Jewry, London (1662), and the Deanery of the collegiate church of *Ripon (1663). But his chief interests remained the furtherance of science and philosophy; and when the Royal Society received its charter from *Charles II (15 July 1662), Wilkins, who had been largely instrumental in its foundation, became its first secretary. In 1668 he became Bp. of Chester, where he advocated the toleration of dissenters. Wilkins was a strong upholder of natural theology. He held that it was the conflicting contentions of fanatics and sceptics which were the main cause of unbelief. His writings include Mathematical Magick, or the Wonders that may be performed by Mechanical Geometry (1648), A Discourse concerning the Gift of Prayer (1649), An Essay towards a real Character and a Philosophical Language (1668), and On the Principles and Duties of Natural Religion (1678; posthumous).

P. A. Wright Henderson, The Life and Times of John Wilkins (1910). Barbara J. Shapiro, John Wilkins 1614–1672. An intellectual biography (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1969). F. Sanders in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 264–7.

WILLEHAD, St. (d. 789), Bp. of Bremen. A native of Northumbria, he was probably educated at *York. Apparently inspired by the examples of St. *Boniface and St. *Willibrord, he set out with the approval of King Alchred and a Northumbrian synod for missionary work in Frisia between 765 and 774 and for a time preached at Dockum. In 780 *Charlemagne sent him to preach to the Saxons at Wigmodia near the North Sea; but shortly afterwards his work was brought to an end by an insurrection under the Saxon chief, Widukind, in 782. After a journey to Rome, he returned for a time to Willibrord's abbey of Echternach, where he devoted himself to copying MSS. Later, when Charlemagne had restored peace, Willehad resumed his activities at Wigmodia. In 787 he was consecrated Bishop at Worms and took up his residence at Bremen, where he built a cathedral which was dedicated to St. Peter on 1 Nov. 789. A few days later he succumbed to a fever. Feast day, 8 Nov.

The principal source is a life written prob. soon after 838 at Echternach (commonly, but apparently erroneously, attributed to St. *Anskar); best ed. in AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), pp. 842–6; Book of Miracles by St. Anskar, ib., pp. 847–51, with valuable introd. by A. Poncelet, S.J., ib., pp. 835–42. O. H. May (ed.), Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Bremen, i, Lieferung 1 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hannover, Oldenburg, Braunschweig, Schaumburg-Lippe und Bremen, xi; 1928), pp. 1–4. Modern lives by E. Wulf (Breslau, 1889) and A. Tappehorn (Dülmen, 1901). G. Niemeyer, 'Die Herkunft der Vita Willehadi' in Deutsches Archiv, xii (1956), pp. 17–35. G. H. Klippel–A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 302–4, s.v. In English there is an article by J. Gommack in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 1186 f., s.v.

WILLIAM I (?1028–87), Duke of Normandy and King of England ('the Conqueror'). The illegitimate son of Duke Robert I (d. 1035), William after a stormy minority won and kept firm control of his duchy, whence in 1066 he was able to conquer England, which he ruled with equal firmness. In Normandy he presided over a continuing ecclesiastical revival in the archdiocese of Rouen: capitular organization developed under strong bishops (cf. *Odo of Bayeux) who were themselves almost all of aristocratic blood, and many new monastic houses (e.g. *Bec) were founded by William himself and by his greater subjects.

William had sought and obtained Pope *Alexander II's blessing in 1066; his relations with Rome were generally constructive and co-operative, and though he rejected *Gregory VII's demand for fealty (?1080), that Pope held the king in high regard for the support which he gave to reform. There was no conflict over lay *investiture, which William continued to practise; the episcopate in England was largely Normanized, several bishops (e.g. *Stigand) and abbots being deposed by canonical process, and the prelates nominated and invested by William were in most cases efficient and reputable. In co-operation with Abp. *Lanfranc the king saw to the implementation of papal legislation on *simony, clerical immorality, and diocesan administration. As in Normandy (esp. at Lillebonne, 1080) William himself presided at important reforming councils. By a far-reaching writ of c. 1072 William removed certain pleas (offences against the 'moral law') from the jurisdiction of the (lay) courts of the hundred to that of the Church courts.

William founded monastic houses at Caen (in penance for his marriage within the prohibited degrees) and Battle (in gratitude for his victory at Hastings). He knew how to use the sanctions of the Church to strengthen himself, and his domestic life was above reproach (no bastard can be attributed to him). Energetic, courageous, majestic, brutal and avaricious, he exercised an enduring influence on three important provinces of the Church which he ruled at a critical time.

M. Fauroux (ed.), Recueil des Actes des Ducs de Normandie de 911 à 1066 (Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie, xxvi; 1961), pp. 242–453 (nos. 92–234); H. W. C. Davis and R. J. Whitwell (edd.), Regesta Regum Anglo-Normannorum 1066–1154, i (Oxford, 1913), pp. 1–76 (nos. 1–288b). Early description of the Norman Conquest by William's Norman chaplain, William of Poitiers, Gesta Guillelmi ducis Normannorum et Regis Anglorum; mod. ed., with Fr. tr., by Raymonde Foreville (Les Classiques de l'histoire de France, xxiii; 1952). Well-known assessments by two contemporaries, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicler ('E') and the Monk of Caen, and by *Ordericus Vitalis, easily available in Eng. tr. in D. C. Douglas–G. W. Greenaway (edd.), English Historical Documents 1042–1189 (English Historical Documents, ed. D. C. Douglas, ii; 1953), pp. 163–4, 279–80, 280–289. Documents on the Church, ib., pp. 601–5, 624–49; *Eadmer's summary of William's attitude to the Church in his Historia Novorum (ed. M. Rule, R.S., 1894, p. 9 f.). E. A. Freeman, History of the Norman Conquest of England (6 vols., Oxford, 1867–79 [to be used with caution]). F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (ed. 3, ib., 1971), pp. 584–667. Modern studies by F. M. Stenton ('Heroes of the Nations', 1908; rev. ed., 1925), M. de Bouard (Paris, 1958), D. C. Douglas (London, 1964; with full bibl.), and F. Barlow ('Teach Yourself History', 1965). Of other recent anniversary works, D. J. A. Matthew, The Norman Conquest (1966) has most on the Church in England. C. Morris, 'William I and the Church Courts', E.H.R., lxxxii (1967), pp. 449–63. See also bibl. on Lanfranc.

WILLIAM OF AUVERGNE (c. 1180–1249), also 'William of *Paris', French Scholastic philosopher and theologian. In 1223 he became a Canon of *Notre-Dame, and in 1228 Bp. of Paris. He was a protector of the *Mendicant Orders, an adversary of pluralism, and an influential personality at the court of St. *Louis. His prolific writings mainly form a vast philosophico-theological encyclopaedia, 'Magisterium Divinale' (between 1223 and 1240), consisting of 'De Trinitate', 'De Universo', 'De Anima', 'Cur Deus Homo', 'De Fide et Legibus', 'De Sacramentis', and 'De Virtutibus'. William drew esp. on *Aristotelian material, then available in the commentaries of *Avicebron and *Avicenna, which he used, however, with considerable freedom and severity. He largely prepared the way for later Scholasticism by teaching a moderate form of *Realism, being among the first Schoolmen to recognize a real distinction between essence and existence, but his efforts to combine *Neoplatonism with Aristotelian ideas did not always issue in a coherent synthesis. He strongly opposed the superstitions, esp. on the subject of astronomy, rife among his contemporaries.

Collected ed. of his Works publd. at Nuremberg, 2 vols., 1496; the most complete ed. is that of J. B. Le Féron (anon., 2 vols., Orleans–Paris, 1674; anastatic repr., 2 vols., Frankfurt, 1963). His treatise De Bono et Malo was first ed. by J. R. O'Donnell, C.S.B., in Mediaeval Studies, viii (1946), pp. 245–99, and Tractatus de Gratia by G. Corti (Corona Lateranensis, vii; 1966). The De Immortalitate Animae, an anonymous work prob. wrongly ascribed to him, ed. G. Bülow (B.G.P.M., ii, Hft. 3; 1897). N. Valois, Guillaume d'Auvergne . . . Sa vie et ses ouvrages (1880). M. Baumgartner, Die Erkenntnislehre des Wilhelm von Auvergne (B.G.P.M., ii, Hft. 1; 1893). A. Masnovo, Da Guglielmo d'Auvergne a S. Tomaso d'Aquino (3 vols., 1930–45). J. Kramp, S.J., 'Des Wilhelm von Auvergne "Magisterium Divinale"' in Gregorianum, i (1920), pp. 538–616; ii (1921), pp. 42–103 and 174–95, incl. text. A. Landgraf, 'Der Traktat De Errore Pelagii des Wilhelm von Auvergne' in Speculum, v (1930), pp. 168–80. E. *Gilson, 'La Notion d'existence chez Guillaume d'Auvergne' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xv for 1946 (1942), pp. 55–91; P. Glorieux, 'Le Tractatus Novus De Poenitentia de Guillaume d'Auvergne' in Miscellanea Moralia in Honorem Arthur Janssen, ii (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, Ser. I, iii [1949]), pp. 551–65. A. Forest, 'Guillaume d'Auvergne, critique d'Aristote' in Études médiévales offertes à M. le Doyen Augustin Fliche (1953), pp. 67–79. Überweg, ii, pp. 363–6, with bibl. p. 730 f. P. Vernet in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1967–76, s.v. 'Guillaume d'Auvergne', with bibl.

WILLIAM OF AUXERRE (d. 1231), Scholastic theologian. At one time Archdeacon of Beauvais, he later taught at *Paris. He became a member of the Commission appointed by *Gregory IX in 1231 to examine and amend the physical treatises of *Aristotle, the reading of which had been unreservedly forbidden by the university of Paris in 1210. He is himself important as one of the first to make use of the doctrines of the newly discovered Aristotle, esp. in his chief work, the 'Summa Aurea'. This, though still influenced by the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard and accepting the validity of the *Ontological Argument soon to be rejected, showed much originality, and, in its turn, influenced John of Treviso, one of the first Dominican theologians.

The Summa Aurea was publd. at Paris, 1500 and 1518, and Venice, 1591; his other works remain unpubld. P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maitres en théologie de Paris au XIIIe siècle, i (1933), p. 293 f. C. Ottaviano, Guglielmo d'Auxerre (d. 1231). La vita, le opere, il pensiero (Rome [1930]). W. Breuning, Die hypostatische Union in der Theologie Wilhelms von Auxerre, Hugos von St. Cher und Rolands von Cremona (Trier Theologische Studien, xi; 1962), pp. 1–161; W. H. Principe, C.S.B., William of Auxerre's Theology of the Hypostatic Union (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, vii; Toronto, 1963), incl. relevant texts. P. Mandonnet, O.P., 'Date de la mort de Guillaume d'Auxerre (3 Nov. 1231)' in A.H.D.L.M.A., vii (1935), pp. 39–46. Überweg, ii, p. 363, with bibl. p. 730. G. Gál, O.F.M., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 921 f., s.v.

WILLIAM OF CHAMPEAUX (c. 1070–1121), Scholastic philosopher. After studying under *Anselm of Laon, and (probably) hearing *Roscellinus at Compiègne, he began to teach in the cathedral schools of Paris, whence he was driven (1108) by *Abelard's ridicule of his exaggerated *realism. In retirement at the (then) priory of Saint-Victor, he appears to have modified his extreme doctrines, and by his lectures there to have laid the foundations of the *Victorine school. In 1113 he became Bp. of Châlons. In his last years he seems to have abandoned the distinctive tenets of realism altogether, though without elaborating any significant philosophical alternative.

Some of William of Champeaux's writings in J. P. Migne, PL, clxiii, 1039–72. G. Lefèvre, Les Variations de Guillaume de Champeaux et la question des universaux. Étude suivie de documents originaux (Travaux et Mémoires de l'Université de Lille, vi, No. 20; 1898; mainly texts). H. Weisweiler, S.J., Das Schrifttum der Schule Anselms von Laon und Wilhelms von Champeaux in deutschen Bibliotheken (B.G.P.M., xxxiii, Hftt. 1–2; 1936), incl. a number of texts. O. Lottin, O.S.B., Psychologie et morale aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles, v (1959), esp. pp. 189–227. Überweg, ii, pp. 209–11, with bibl. p. 701 f. C. H. Lohr in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), col. 1130 f., s.v. 'Wilhelm v. Champeaux', with further bibl.

WILLIAM OF CONCHES (c. 1080 – c. 1154), medieval philosopher. He was a pupil of *Bernard of Chartres, whose efforts to encourage the study of the profane sciences and literature in the interests of a Christian humanism he sought to further. His writings, of which the 'Philosophia Mundi' and the 'Dragmaticon' became the most popular, deal mainly with natural philosophy. The former treatise was attacked by *William of St.-Thierry for its supposed *Modalistic view of the Trinity. William of Conches's other writings include glosses on Priscian's 'Institutiones Grammaticae', *Plato's 'Timaeus', Macrobius's 'In Somnium Scipionis', and *Boethius's 'De Consolatione Philosophiae'. A work on ethics, 'Moralium Dogma Philosophorum', has also been attributed to him.

The only ed. of the 'Dragmaticon' is that of G. Gratarolus publd. under the title Dialogus de Substantiis Physicis . . . confectus a Willelmo Aneponymo . . . [and other works] (Strassburg, 1567), pp. 1–312. The 'Philosophia Mundi' is pr. among the works of *Bede in PL, xc, 1127–78, and among those of *Honorius of Autun, ib., clxxi, 39–102. Part of the text of his gloss on Boethius was ed. C. Jourdain in Notices et extraits des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Impériale, xx (pt. 2; 1862), pp. 40–82; J. M. Parent, O.P., La Doctrine de la création dans l'École de Chartres (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, viii; 1938), pp. 115–77, incl. further extracts of the text of the gloss on Boethius, pp. 124–36, and of that on the 'Timaeus', pp. 142–77. Glosae super Platonem ed. É. Jeauneau (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Âge, xiii; 1965). The 'Moralium Dogma Philosophorum' is pr. among the works of *Hildebert of Lavardin in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxi, 1007–56; modern ed., attributing it to William of Conches, by J. Holmberg (Arbeten utgivna met Understöd av Vilhelm Ekmans Universitetsfond, Uppsala, 1929). R. L. Poole, Illustrations of the History of Medieval Thought in the Departments of Theology and Ecclesiastical Politics (1884), pp. 346–59 (Excursus VI on the Writings of William of Conches). M. *Grabmann, Handschriftliche Forschungen und Mitteilungen zum Schrifttum des Wilhelm von Conches und zu Bearbeitungen seiner naturwissenschaftlichen Werke (Sb. (Bayr.), 1935, Hft. 10); H. Flatten, Die Philosophie des Wilhelm von Conches (Koblenz, 1929); T. Gregory, Anima Mundi. La filosofia di Guglielmo di Conches e la Scuola di Chartres (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Filosofia dell'Università di Roma, iii; [1955]). L. Thorndike, 'More Manuscripts of the Dragmaticon and Philosophia of William of Conches' in Speculum, xx (1945), pp. 84–7. M. D. Chenu, 'Nature ou histoire? Une controverse exégétique sur la création au XIIe siècle' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xx (for 1953; 1954), pp. 25–30. B. Lawn, The Salernitan Questions (Oxford, 1963), esp. pp. 50–56 and 205 f. (revised Ital. tr., 1969, pp. 70–75 and 233 f.). The attribution to William of Conches of a 'Tertia Philosophia' partly pr. by C. Ottaviano, Un brano inedito della "Philosophia" di Guglielmo di Conches (Collezione di Testi Filosofici inediti e rari i; Naples, 1935), pp. 19–52, has been disproved by T. Gregory, 'Sull'attribuzione a Guglielmo di Conches di un rimaneggiamento della Philosophia Mundi' in Giornale critico della Filosofia italiana, xxx (1951), pp. 119–25. Überweg, ii, p. 237 f., with bibl. p. 704.

WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY (c. 1090 – c. 1143), the chief English historian of his generation. He appears to have spent most of his life at the monastery at *Malmesbury, where he was offered, but declined, the abbacy in 1140. His work, though credulous and often careless in its chronology, has literary merit. His two most important books were his 'Gesta Regum Anglorum' (1120) and his 'Gesta Pontificum Anglorum' (1125), which, as their titles imply, dealt respectively with the secular and ecclesiastical history of England. They were considerably revised both by William himself and, after his death, by others. His 'Historia Novella', which continues the 'Gesta Regum', is a contemporary narrative also of first-rate historical importance. It goes up to the year 1142 and is unfinished. William also wrote several theological works, including a treatise on 'The Miracles of the Virgin' and an abridged edition of the 'De Ecclesiasticis Officiis' of *Amalarius of Metz.

Most of his Works, collected from various edd., in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxix, 945–1774, with fragments also pr. ib., cxxvii, 375–84. Crit. edd. of his De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum by N. E. S. A. Hamilton (R.S., 1870); of his Vita Sancti Dunstani in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Memorials of Saint Dunstan (ib., 1874), pp. 250–324, with introd., pp. xxxv–xxxvii; of his De Gestis Regum Anglorum by id. (2 vols., ib., 1887–9), with introd. prefaces in vol. i, pp. ix–cxlvii, and vol. ii, pp. xv–cxlii, with reff.; of his Vita Wulstani by R. R. Darlington (first full ed., Camden Society, 3rd Series, xl; 1928); Eng. tr. by J. H. F. Peile (Oxford,1934); modern ed., with Eng. tr., of his Historia Novella (also incl. in R.S. ed. of De Gestis Regum Anglorum) by K. R. Potter (London, 1955). Modern Eng. tr. of his work 'On the Antiquity of the Church of *Glastonbury', by H. F. Scott Stokes (Glastonbury, 1932). H. Farmer, O.S.B., 'William of Malmesbury's Life and Works' in J.E.H., xiii (1962), pp. 39–54, with reff.; id., 'William of Malmesbury's Commentary on Lamentations' in Studia Monastica, iv (1962), pp. 283–311.

WILLIAM OF MOERBEKE (c. 1215–86), translator of Gk. philosophical and scientific writings. Nothing is known of his early career. A Dominican, he was sent to Thebes (c. 1259) and Nicaea (1260); from this period his earliest translations (*Aristotle, De partibus animalium and Meteorologica) are dated. He appears as papal penitentiary under Clement IV (1265–8), and continued to be attached to the papal curia until 1278, when he was appointed Abp. of Thebes. His translations of Aristotle include works not hitherto translated into Latin from the Greek—the Politics, Rhetoric and Poetics—as well as revisions of existing translations based on the use of Greek MSS., including the Posterior Analytics and Metaphysics (book xi translated for the first time). He also translated a number of commentaries on Aristotle, including works by Alexander of Aphrodisias, Ammonius, Johannes Philoponus, Simplicius and Themistius, and the Elementatio theologica of Proclus. Many of his translations were made at the request of *Thomas Aquinas. His translation of the Elementatio theologica enabled Aquinas to discover the true nature of the Liber de Causis*. He was a friend of *Witelo.

His translations are listed, with notes of editions, in P. Glorieux, La Faculté des arts et ses maîtres au XIIIe siècle (Études de philosophie médiévale, lix; 1971), pp. 169–72, and in Alexandre de Aphrodise, De fato ad imperatores, version de Guillaume de Moerbeke, ed. P. Thillet (ib., li; 1963), pp. 29–35. M. *Grabmann, Guglielmo di Moerbeke, O.P., il traduttore delle opere di Aristotele (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, vol. xi, Collectionis totius, n. 20; 1946). L. Minio-Paluello, 'Guglielmo di Moerbeke, traduttore della Poetica d'Aristotele (1278)' in Rivista di Filosofia neo-scolastica, xxxix (1947), pp. 1–17; repr., with other articles, in his Opuscula. The Latin Aristotle (Amsterdam, 1972), pp. 40–86. D. A. Callus, O.P., 'Les Sources de Saint Thomas. État de la question' in P. Moraux and others, Aristote de Saint Thomas d'Aquin. Journées d'études internationales. Chaire Cardinal Mercier, 1955 (1957), pp. 93–174.

WILLIAM OF NORWICH, St. (1132–44), supposed victim of a Jewish ritual murder. A tanner's apprentice at *Norwich, he was enticed from home on Monday in Holy Week 1144 and on Holy Saturday, six days later, his body was found with marks of violence in a neighbouring wood. Acc. to Thomas of Monmouth, a monk of Norwich and the only authority for the legend, William had been crucified and murdered by the Jews during the Passover. This story was substantiated by a converted Jew, Theobald, who asserted that, acc. to Jewish religious tradition, a Christian must be sacrificed every year to obtain the deliverance of the people. This is the first known case of the blood accusation against the Jews; but as the authorities took no action, the account is open to much suspicion.

The cult of William of Norwich dates from the translation of his body from the chapter-house of the monks, where it had been buried, to the cathedral (1151) amidst a wave of religious enthusiasm. Many visions and miracles were reported to have taken place at his tomb, and throughout the Middle Ages he enjoyed great popularity. Feast day at Norwich, 26 Mar.; commemoration elsewhere, 25 Mar.

The Life by Thomas of Monmouth was ed., with Eng. tr., full introd., and notes, by A. Jessopp–M. R. James (Cambridge, 1896). John Capgrave's version of the Legend, which depends on Thomas of Monmouth, is repr. in AA.SS., Mar. III (1668), p. 590 f. M. D. Anderson, A Saint at Stake. The Strange Death of William of Norwich 1144 (1964). R. Webster in C.E., xv (1912), p. 635 f., s.v.

WILLIAM OF OCCAM (or OCKHAM) (c. 1285–1347), philosopher, theologian and polemicist, 'Venerabilis inceptor'. A native of Ockham in Surrey, William early entered the *Franciscan Order and studied and taught at *Oxford. He never became a regent master, but remained an 'inceptor' (hence his title), prob. owing to the accusation of teaching dangerous doctrines made by John Lutterell, the chancellor of the University. Lutterell went to *Avignon in 1323 and denounced Occam for maintaining heretical positions. Occam was summoned there by Pope *John XXII, and a commission of six theologians was set up to examine the charges. It censured 51 propositions taken from his works, but no formal condemnation followed. Occam's philosophical and theological writings were composed during his periods at Oxford and Avignon. They include commentaries on parts of the 'Organon' of *Aristotle, a 'Summa Logicae', a Commentary on the '*Sentences' and seven '*Quodlibets'. In 1327 the Minister General of the Franciscans, Michael of Cesena, was summoned to Avignon in connexion with the dispute on Franciscan poverty. He charged Occam to examine the papal constitutions on this subject. Occam concluded that the Pope, John XXII, had taken up heretical positions. In 1328 he fled from Avignon and joined Louis of Bavaria, under whose protection he remained until 1347. In 1331 he was sentenced to expulsion from his order and to perpetual imprisonment, having been excommunicated since 1328. To this period of his life belong his polemical writings against the Pope and in favour of Louis. In 1332/3 he wrote his 'Opus nonaginta dierum', a violent attack directed against the Pope on the question of poverty. During the next years other writings against the Pope and in favour of the Imperial policy followed, among them 'Dialogus super Dignitate Papali et Regia', of which the first part was completed before the death of John XXII in Dec. 1334, 'Octo questiones' (1340–41), 'Breviloquium de principatu tyrannico' (c. 1340–42), and 'Tractatus de Imperatorum et Pontificum Potestate' (c. 1347). The tradition that he lived until 1349, and that towards the end of his life he took steps to be reconciled to the Church, has been shown to rest on evidence that will not withstand critical examination.

William of Occam was a vigorous, critical and independent thinker, and at the same time a theologian in the Augustinian-Franciscan tradition. He contributed to the development of formal logic, and a logician's approach runs through all his work. He made much use of the principle of economy ('Occam's razor'). He eliminated the notion, then generally accepted, of the existence of *universals. Only individual things exist, and they are directly apprehended by the mind. This intuitive knowledge is naturally caused. On the theological side much of Occam's thinking is determined by his resolute attempt to eliminate anything that limited God's omnipotence and freedom. He considered that the doctrine of eternal ideas in the Divine mind in accordance with which the world was created and ordered limited God's freedom. He made a distinction between the absolute power (potentia absoluta) of God and His ordained power (potentia ordinata). God could have created a different order, provided that it did not violate the law of contradiction. The moral order is dependent on the Divine fiat. But God's omnipotence cannot be philosophically proved. It has to be accepted on faith through revelation. The same is true of His omniscience. Occam also criticized the traditional proofs of the existence of God as not philosophically demonstrable. In short, he destroyed the conception of the relationship between theology and philosophy elaborated in the 13th century.

Occam came to be called the 'Princeps nominalium', and, while modern students of his works have shown that his philosophical position was not that of *Nominalism as the word is usually understood, but rather of conceptualism, the traditional name is best retained. Occam's radical criticism of the prevailing *Realism and his rethinking of the relationship between theology and philosophy marked the beginning of what was later characterized as the 'via moderna' as opposed to the 'via antiqua' represented by the *Thomists and *Scotists. It is also now generally agreed that 'by his interest in singulars rather than universals, intuition rather than abstraction, and induction rather than deduction, he prepared the ground for a more scientific approach to reality' (Gál). His theological influence was still felt in the 15th cent., notably by G. *Biel, through whom M. *Luther came to regard himself as a follower of Occam. His political theories played an important part in the development of the *Conciliar Movement in the 14th and 15th cents. He refused to acknowledge that the Pope had any right to determine the validity of the election of the Emperor. The Emperor had the right and the duty to depose a heretical Pope.

Most of his philosophical and theological treatises were frequently printed in the 15th and 16th cents., and some are available in photographic reprints. Crit. edd. of his Opera Philosophica et Theologica for the Franciscan Institute by G. Gál, O.F.M.–S. Brown, O.F.M. (St. Bonaventure, N.Y., 1967 ff.) and of his Opera Politica by J. G. Sikes and others (Manchester, 1940 ff.). There are also modern editions of his 'De Imperatorum et Pontificum Potestate' by C. K. Brampton (Oxford, 1927); of his 'De Sacramento Altaris', with Eng. tr., by T. B. Birch (Burlington, Ia., 1930); of his 'Breviloquium de Principatu Tyrannico' by L. Baudry (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxiv; 1937) and by R. Scholtz (Schriften des Reichsinstituts für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, viii; 1944); of his 'Tractatus de Praedestinatione et de Praescientia Dei et de Futuris Contingentibus' by P. Boehner, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, ii; 1945); of his 'Summa Logicae' by id. (ib., Text Series, ii; 1951 ff.); of his 'Expositionis in Libros Artis Logicae Prooemium et Expositio in Librum Porphyrii De Praedicabilibus' by E. Moody (Franciscan Institute Publications, 1965). M. *Grabmann (ed.), Quaestio de Universali secundum Viam et Doctrinam Guilelmi de Ockham . . . ex Cod. Vatic. Palat. 998 (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam Illustrantia, Series Scholastica, x; 1930); The 'Tractatus de Principiis Theologiae' formerly attributed to Occam, ed. L. Baudry (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxiii; 1936), and the 'Tractatus de Successivis' also attributed to him, ed. P. Boehner, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, i; 1944). Eng. tr. of selection of Occam's Philosophical Writings by id. (London, 1957). L. Baudry, Guillaume d'Occam (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxxix, &c.; 1949 ff.), with good bibl. E. A. Moody, The Logic of William of Ockham (1935). G. de Lagarde, La Naissance de l'esprit laique au déclin du moyen âge, iv–vi (1942–6); revised ed., iv–v (1962–3). P. Boehner, O.F.M., Collected Articles on Ockham, ed. E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, Philosophy Series, xii; 1958). H. Junghans, Ockham im Lichte der neueren Forschung (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, xxi; 1968). J. Miethke, Ockhams Weg zur Sozialphilosophie (1969). Wilhelm Ockham (1349–1949). Aufsätze su seiner Philosophie und Theologie (Franziskanische Studien, xxxii; 1950), with bibl. for the period 1919–49 by V. Heynck, O.F.M., pp. 164–83; J. P. Reilly, 'Ockham Bibliography: 1950–1967' in Franciscan Studies, xxviii (1968), pp. 197–214. L. Baudry, Lexique philosophique de Guillaume d'Ockham (1958). Überweg, ii, pp. 571–83, with bibl. p. 781 f.; E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1954), pp. 489–99. J. P. Reilly in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 1142–5, s.v. 'Wilhelm v. Ockham'; G. Gál, O.F.M., in N.C.E., xiv (1967), pp. 932–5, s.v. Recent works by A. S. McGrade (Cambridge, 1974) and G. Leff (Manchester, 1975).

WILLIAM OF ST.-THIERRY (c. 1085–1148), theologian and mystical writer. Of noble family, he was born at Liège, probably educated at Laon, in 1113 entered the *Benedictine Abbey of St.-Nicasius at Reims, and in 1119 or 1120 he was elected Abbot of St.-Thierry near Reims. In 1130 he took part in the first General Chapter of the Benedictines of the province of Reims, held at St.-Médard, near Soissons, and he appears to have held an influential position among the Benedictine Abbots of the area. Before his election as Abbot he made the acquaintance of St. *Bernard, with whom he formed a close friendship. He was long anxious to join St. Bernard at *Clairvaux, being dissuaded by the resistance of St. Bernard himself; in 1135 he resigned his abbacy and joined a group of Cistercian monks from Igny who were establishing a house at Signy in the Ardennes.

Although he was drawn to the contemplative life, William devoted much of his energies to theological study. His first two treatises, De contemplando Deo and De Natura et dignitate amoris, discuss the rapport between knowledge and love. After completing his first exposition on the Song of Songs, which he discussed with St. Bernard when both were ill at Clairvaux, he turned to the Epistle to the Romans and the problem of grace: in what way does God give us His love and how do we receive it? In answer to his questions St. Bernard drafted for him the De Gratia et libero arbitrio (1128), and in the same year William dedicated to Bernard his own De Sacramento Altaris, on man's encounter with God in the Eucharist. Before leaving St.-Thierry he also compiled a treatise De Natura Animae et Corporis in which he tried to synthesize the teaching of the E. and W. Fathers on the relation of the body and soul. In 1138 he wrote to St. Bernard pointing out the defects of Peter *Abelard's views on the Trinity and Redemption; he urged St. Bernard to take up his pen against Abelard, and in defence of orthodoxy he himself wrote his Disputatio adversus Abelardum and attacked the teaching of *William of Conches in De Erroribus Guillielmi de Conches. These works were followed by two treatises on faith, Speculum Fidei and Aenigma Fidei, written between 1140 and 1144. After he went to Signy he also wrote a second, much more individualistic, commentary on the Song of Songs and completed his Meditativae orationes. The last years of his life were devoted to a synthesis of his doctrine and experience in the famous Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei de Vita Solitaria, known as the 'Golden Letter', which has often been attributed to St. Bernard. His final work was devoted to a life of St. Bernard, which he never completed. All his works, both ascetical and didactic, were remarkable for their wide knowledge of the Bible and the Fathers, Eastern as well as Western.

Opera ed. B. Tissier, Ord. Cist., Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, iv (Bonnefontaine, 1662), pp. 1–237; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxx, 201–726; other works among those of St. Bernard, ib., clxxxii, 531–3, and clxxxiv, 307–436. Modern edd. by M. M. Davy of his Meditativae Orationes, with Fr. tr. (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1934), of the Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxix; 2 vols., 1940–49), of his De Contemplando Deo and De Natura et Diginitate Amoris (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1953), of his Commentary on the Song of Songs (ib., 1958), and of his Speculum Fidei and Enigma Fidei (ib., 1959); modern edd. by J. M. Déchanet, O.S.B., of his Speculum Fidei, with Fr. tr. (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité médiévale, 1946) and of his Commentary on the Song of Songs, with Fr. tr. by M. Dumortier, O.C.S.O. (S.C., lxxxii; 1962); modern ed. by J. Hourlier, O.S.B., of his De Contemplando Deo and Oratio Domni Willelmi, with Fr. tr. (S.C., lxi; 1959). Fr. tr. of Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei, with important notes, by J. M. Déchanet, O.S.B. (Paris, 1956). Eng. tr. of his works by Sr. Penelope, C.S.M.V., and others (Cistercian Fathers Series, iii, vi, etc.; Shannon, 1970 ff.).

Life by an anonymous author (d. 1148), ed. A. Poncelet, S.J., 'Vie ancienne de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry' in Mélanges Godefroid Kurth, i (1908), pp. 85–96. A. Adam, Guillaume de Saint-Thierry. Sa vie et ses œuvres (Lyons thesis; Bourg, 1923). J. M. Déchanet, O.S.B., 'Aux sources de la spiritualité de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry' in Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum, v (1938), pp. 187–98, 262–78; id., Guillaume de Saint-Thierry. L'homme et son œuvre (Bibliothèque Médiévale; 1942); M. M. Davy, Théologie et Mystique de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry, i. La Connaissance de Dieu (Études de Théologie et d'histoire de la Spiritualité, xiv; 1954; all publd. to 1972). L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Spiritualité de Cîteaux (1955; Eng. tr., 1958), chs. iv and v. J. M. Déchanet, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1241–63, s.v. 'Guillaume de Saint-Thierry', with bibl.

WILLIAM OF TYRE (c. 1130–85), Abp. of Tyre, historian. He was born in Palestine, prob. of European (poss. Italian) parents of the merchant class, ordained priest before 1161 and studied in Europe before 1163. After returning to Tyre, he was appointed Archdeacon of Tyre in 1167 by Amaury, king of Jerusalem (1163–74), with an enhanced stipend on condition that he wrote the official 'History' of the reign ('Gesta Amalrici'). In 1168 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to *Constantinople and in 1169 summoned to Rome to answer charges of an obscure nature preferred by his Archbishop. He was appointed tutor to Amaury's son Baldwin (later Baldwin IV) in 1170 and Chancellor in 1174. In May 1175 he was consecrated Abp. of Tyre. In the next few years he took an important part in government. He led the ecclesiastical delegation from Jerusalem to the *Lateran Council of 1179, where he obtained some restriction of the independence of the military orders from the local hierarchy, and was entrusted by *Alexander III with a mission to Constantinople in connexion with the union of the East and West. On his return to Palestine (1180) political intrigue denied him power and promotion. He continued, and prob. in 1182 revised, his 'History', adding the prologue in 1184.

William of Tyre's Historia Rerum in Partibus Transmarinis Gestarum, comprising the 'Gesta Regum' (begun c. 1170) and the 'Gesta Amalrici', covers the period from 1095 (Preaching of the First *Crusade) to 1184. It is the primary authority from 1127 (where Fulcher of Chartres ends), and from c. 1144 is a contemporary record. Although the chronology is at times confused, the work is marked by insight, tolerance, impartiality and the careful sifting of evidence from a wide range of sources, as well as by the clear delineation of the physical and mental features of the characters portrayed. Unlike most medieval chronicles, it is arranged under topics, not chronologically. It was translated into French in the 12th or 13th cent., and in this form had a wide circulation and many continuations. Another work by William of Tyre, the 'Gesta Orientalium Principum', partly based on the Arabic chronicle of Said-ibn-Batrik (d. 940), Patr. of Alexandria, has been lost.

Lat. text of History first printed at Basle, 1549; repr. from ed. of J. Bongars (Hanover, 1611) in J. P. Migne, PL, cci, 200–892; Lat. text, with Old Fr. tr. [ed. A. Beugnot–A. Prévost] in Recueil des historiens des croisades. Historiens occidentaux, i (Paris, 2 pts., 1844); Eng. tr., with notes and full bibl., by E. A. Babcock–A. C. Krey (2 vols., 'Records of Civilization', xxxv; 1943), with introd., vol. i, pp. 3–49; 13th cent. Fr. version, ed. P. Paris (2 vols., Paris, 1879). A. C. Krey, 'William of Tyre. The Making of an Historian in the Middle Ages' in Speculum, xvi (1941), pp. 149–66. R. B. C. Huygens, 'La Tradition manuscrite de Guillaume de Tyr' in Studi Medievali, 3ª serie, v (1964), pp. 281–373. F. Lundgreen, Wilhelm von Tyrus und der Templerorden (Historische Studien, Hft. xcvii; 1911); M. Salloch, Die lateinische Fortsetzung Wilhelms von Tyrus (Berlin Diss.; 1934). H. E. Mayer, 'Zum Tode Wilhelms von Tyrus' in Archiv für Diplomatik, v/vi (1959–60), pp. 182–201. R. C. Schwinges, Kreuzzugsideologie und Toleranz. Studien zu Wilhelm von Tyrus (Stuttgart, 1977).

WILLIAM OF WAYNFLETE (c. 1395–1486), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated possibly at Winchester College and New College, Oxford, in 1420 he was ordained priest and also appointed master of St. Mary Magdalen Hospital, nr. Winchester. He was made provost of the newly founded Eton College by *Henry VI in 1442. On Henry's recommendation he succeeded Cardinal H. *Beaufort as Bp. of Winchester in 1447, and in 1448 obtained licence for founding a hall at Oxford, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, in order to foster the study of theology and philosophy; in 1457 it was refounded as Magdalen College. As a moderate Lancastrian and a favourite of the King, he took an increasingly prominent part in public affairs. He treated with Jack Cade in 1450 and made terms with the Yorkists in 1452. In 1456 Henry appointed him Chancellor, and in the next year he was assessor in the trial of Bp. R. *Pecock.

He resigned the Chancellorship in 1460 and soon afterwards acquiesced in the accession of Edward IV, receiving the royal pardon in 1466, in 1469, and again in 1471, after renewed support of Henry VI. Thenceforward he was frequently at court and finished building Eton College and Magdalen.

There is a short panegyrical life by J. Budden (Oxford, 1602; repr. by W. Bales (ed.), Vitae Selectorum Aliquot Virorum qui Doctrina, Dignitate aut Pietate Inclaruere (London, 1681), pp. 51–89); some further information added by P. *Heylyn in Memorial of Bishop Waynflete, ed. J. R. *Bloxam (Caxton Society, 1851). Fuller modern life by R. Chandler (London, 1811). I. S. Leadham in D.N.B., lx (1899), pp. 85–9, s.v. 'Waynflete'; A. F. Leach in D.E.C.H., p. 619 f., also s.v. 'Waynflete'; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 2001–3, s.v. 'Waynflete, William' [correcting Leach].

WILLIAM OF WYKEHAM (1324–1404), Bp. of *Winchester. He was born of a poor family at Wickham, Hants, and educated at Winchester. He passed c. 1343 from the service of the Constable of Winchester Castle into that of Edward III, who appointed him chaplain and rector of Irstead, Norfolk, in 1349. In 1356 he became clerk of the royal works at Henley and Easthampstead and surveyor of the works at Windsor. He was also responsible for the erection of Queenborough Castle in the Isle of Sheppey. Although not priested until 1362, between 1357 and 1363 he was presented to a large number of benefices, mostly without cure of souls. In 1364 he became Keeper of the Privy Seal. Elected Bp. of Winchester in 1366, he was consecrated in 1367 and became Chancellor in the same year. Being blamed for the disasters of the French war, he was driven from office during an attack of anti-clericalism in 1371. He devoted himself to the organization of his diocese, the reform of abuses, esp. in religious houses, and the plans for his future academic foundations. In 1376, owing to the hostility of John of Gaunt, he was accused in Parliament of malversation. Although found guilty on only one minor count, he was deprived of the temporalities of his see and also expelled from court. Although restored to favour before the death of Edward III and declared guiltless by Richard II in 1377, he took little further interest in politics. As a member of the commission of regency appointed in 1386 and as Chancellor from 1389 to 1391, he endeavoured to exercise a moderating influence both on the lords appellant and the King. He also restrained the persecution of the *Lollards by Abp. *Arundel, though he had little sympathy with J. *Wycliffe's teaching.

At Oxford he founded a college of 100 members dedicated to St. Mary, but soon known as New College, for which he obtained a royal and papal charter of foundation in 1379 (formally opened, 1386). At Winchester he established a school for 70 poor scholars to feed his Oxford foundation (papal bull, 1378; royal charter, 1382). This college, which was the first independent and self-governing school in the country, was opened in 1394.

His episcopal Register, ed. T. F. Kirby (2 vols., Hampshire Record Society, 1896–9). G. H. Moberly, Life of William of Wykeham (1887), with two brief lives written shortly after his death, the one prob. by Dr. Thomas Aylward, one of his executors, the other perh. by Robert Heete (d. 1422), pp. 286–92 and 293–308 respectively. [T. Martin,] Historica Descriptio Complectens Vitam ac Res Gestas Beatissimi Viri Guiliemi Wicami (London, 1597). R. Lowth, The Life of William of Wykeham (1758; short supplement, 1759). M. E. C. Walcott, William of Wykeham and his Colleges (1852), esp. 'The Life of William of Wykeham', pp. 3–100. G. C. Heseltine, William of Wykeham. A Commentary (1932), with bibl. W. [G.] Hayter, William of Wykeham (1970). J. Tait in D.N.B., lxiii (1900), pp. 225–31; A. F. Leach in D.E.C.H., pp. 659–61, both s.v. 'Wykeham'.

WILLIAM OF YORK, St. (d. 1154), Abp. of *York. William Fitzherbert, of noble birth, was a chaplain of King Stephen and by 1138 (prob. by 1130) Canon and Treasurer of York Minster. Elected Abp. of York by a majority of the Chapter in 1142, he received the temporalities of the see from the king, but, being accused of simony by the *Cistercians, was refused consecration by *Theobald, Abp. of *Canterbury. Both sides appealed to Innocent II, who, in 1143, decided that William might be consecrated if he was cleared by the oath of himself and the Dean of York. Prob. consecrated by *Henry of Blois in 1143, he ruled his diocese conscientiously, but failed to obtain from Card. Hincmar the *pallium which Lucius II sent to him in 1145 before the Pope's death. Forced to go to Rome in 1147, he sold some of the treasures of York for his expenses. Prob. under the influence of St. *Bernard, *Eugenius III suspended him from the exercise of his episcopal functions until the Dean of York (now Bp. of *Durham) cleared him in person, having previously done so by proxy. After William's relatives had attacked the abbey of *Fountains, where Henry Murdac, the rival candidate, was abbot, William was deposed by the Council of *Reims in 1147. Taking refuge with Henry of Blois, he lived in great austerity at *Winchester until the death of Eugenius in 1153, when he appealed for restoration. On the death of Henry Murdac in the same year, Anastasius IV restored him and gave him the pallium. As he entered York in 1154, the bridge collapsed, but the travellers escaped uninjured, supposedly through his sanctity and prayers. He promised restitution to Fountains and was respected in his diocese. He died a month after his return, possibly by poison. Buried in York Minster, he was regarded as a martyr and miracles were reported at his tomb. He was canonized by *Honorius III in 1227; his relics were translated to a shrine behind the High Altar in 1284. The St. William window in York Minster was erected to his honour in 1421. Feast day, 8 June; that of his translation, 8 Jan., until 1478 when it was transferred to the first Sunday after *Epiphany. His cult remained local.

The earliest sources, besides the letters of St. Bernard (q.v. for edd.), are the contemporary accounts by William of Newburgh, Historia Rerum Anglicarum (ed. R. Howlett, i, R.S., 1884, pp. 55–7 and 79–81) and (up to 1153) John of Hexham's continuation of *Simeon of Durham's Historia Regum (Symeonis Monachi Opera Omnia, ed. T. Arnold, ii, R.S., 1885, pp. 306 f., 311, 313–21). An anonymous life, preserved in a 13th cent. MS. in the Harleian collection (2, fols. 76–88), is pr. in J. Raine, Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, ii (R.S., 1886), pp. 270–91, with introd. p. xviii f.; the account in the chronicle attributed to Thomas Stubbs (14th cent.), pr. ib., pp. 388–97, is mainly based on the anonymous life; additions to Hugh the Chanter are pr. ib., pp. 220–7; also an account of certain miracles 'out of a table in the Revestry in the Cathedral Church of York' are ed. from a Bodleian MS., ib., pp. 531–80. R. L. Poole, 'The Appointment and Deprivation of St. William, Archbishop of York' in E.H.R., xlv (1930), pp. 273–81; [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., 'The Case of Saint William of York' in The Cambridge Historical Journal, v (1935–37), pp. 162–77 and 212–14, with bibl., repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 76–97; C. H. Talbot, 'New Documents in the Case of Saint William of York', in The Cambridge Historical Journal, x (1950–2), pp. 1–15; A. Morey, 'Canonist Evidence in the Case of St.

William of York', ib., p. 352 f. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xix (1889), pp. 173–6, s.v. 'Fitzherbert, William'.

WILLIAMS, CHARLES WALTER STANSBY (1886–1945), poet and theological writer. Educated at *St. Albans and at University College, London, he worked from 1908 until his death in the London publishing business of the Oxford University Press. After some early poetry and plays, of which he later came to think poorly, he began to publish novels, largely devoted to supernatural themes, among them War in Heaven (1930), Descent into Hell (1937) and All Hallows' Eve (1944); and also a play, Thomas Cranmer of Canterbury, written for the Canterbury festival of 1936. Of his theological writings prob. the most significant was The Descent of the Dove (1939), an unconventional and penetrating study of the Church as governed by the activity of the Holy Spirit in history. His poetic achievement culminated in his two volumes on the Arthurian theme, Taliessin through Logres (1938) and The Region of the Summer Stars (1944), in which he employed an original and highly personal technique to interpret the interrelation of romantic and theological ideas. Both in London and later in Oxford (in 1939–45) Williams by his life and writings did much, like his fellow-Anglicans T. S. *Eliot and C. S. Lewis (1898–1963), to commend Christianity in a Catholic and sacramental form to many who would have been unmoved by conventional apologetic.

Williams's unfinished prose work 'The Figure of Arthur' was edited, with a commentary on his Arthurian poems, by C. S. Lewis and publd. as Arthurian Torso (1948). Collected Plays, with introd. by J. Heath-Stubbs (1963). Selected essays ed., with biogr. and critical introd., by Anne Ridler (London, 1958). Essays Presented to Charles Williams, by Dorothy [L.] Sayers and others, with preface by C. S. Lewis (1947). Alice M. Hadfield, An Introduction to Charles Williams (1959). C. Moorman, Arthurian Triptych. Mythic Materials in Charles Williams, C. S. Lewis, and T. S. Eliot (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1960), esp. pp. 38–101. Mary McD. Shideler, The Theology of Romantic Love. A Study in the Writings of Charles Williams (New York [1962]). G. W. S. Hopkins in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 958 f., s.v.

WILLIAMS, ISAAC (1802–65), *Tractarian poet and theologian. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Oxford, where he was drawn into the Tractarian Movement through the influence of J. *Keble. He was ordained priest in 1831, became tutor of Trinity College in 1832 and dean in the next year, and about the same time curate to J. H. *Newman at St. Mary's. Besides contributing poetry to the Lyra Apostolica (1836) he wrote the famous Tract 80 on 'Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge', which lost him the election to the chair of poetry (1842). The defeat caused him to withdraw from Oxford and spend the rest of his life in retirement, occupied chiefly with writing sermons and poetry. Among his best-known poetical writings are The Cathedral (1838), interpreting Gothic architecture as a symbol of Christian doctrine, and The Baptistery (1842), containing an attack on the RC Church. He also wrote a Devotional Commentary on the Gospel Narrative (8 vols., 1869–70).

The Autobiography of Isaac Williams, ed. Sir G. Prevost (1892). O. W. Jones, Isaac Williams and his Circle (1971). W. P. Courtney in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 408–11.

WILLIAMS, JOHN (1582–1650), Abp. of *York. Descended from an ancient Welsh family, he was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1603. Through the patronage of *James I and Chancellor Ellesmere, he received a large accumulation of benefices, including the Bpric. of *Lincoln (1621), and in addition the Lord Keepership. His accommodating and intriguing character occasioned the dislike of *Charles I and W. *Laud, leading to heavy fines in 1637 and 1639 in the Star Chamber. During the Long Parliament Williams headed a party of compromise in the Lords and, recovering royal favour, was translated to York in 1641. He proved an assiduous royalist throughout the Civil War, but was allowed to spend his last years in retirement in Wales.

J. E. B. Mayor (ed.), 'Letters of Archbishop Williams, with documents relating to him' in Antiquarian Communications; Being Papers Presented at the Meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, ii (1864), pp. 25–66, iii (1879), pp. 61–106; B. H. Beedham (ed.), 'The Unpublished Correspondence between Archbishop Williams and the Marquis of Oxford' in Archaeologia Cambrensis, Ser. 3, xv (1869), pp. 305–43. J. Hacket, Scrinia Reserata. A Memorial Offered to the Deservings of John Williams (1693). Life by A. Philips (Cambridge, 1700). R. D. Roberts, Mitre and Musket. John Williams, Lord Keeper, Archbishop of York, 1582–1650 (1938), with bibl. R. B. Knox, 'The Social Teaching of Archbishop John Williams' in Studies in Church History, viii (ed. G. J. Cumings–D. Baker; 1972), pp. 179–85. S. R. Gardiner in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 414–20.

WILLIAMS, JOHN (1796–1839), missionary of the *L.M.S. Born in London, after a commercial education he was accepted in 1816 by the L.M.S., which had chosen the Pacific Isles for its earliest work. In 1817 he sailed for Eimeo, one of the Society Islands, near Tahiti, and in 1818 for Huahine, where he opened a chapel and also published a code of laws. In 1822 he went further afield, visiting the Cook Islands and translating portions of the Bible into the Raratongan language. His sphere of activity also embraced the Friendly Islands. On 20 Nov. 1839 he landed at Dillon's Bay, Erromanga, to be promptly killed and eaten by the natives in retaliation for cruelties once inflicted on them by some English sailors. He is chiefly notable for the burst of missionary enthusiasm that the news of his death aroused in England. A succession of ships of the name John Williams have been employed in furthering the evangelization of the Pacific Islands.

There is much autobiographical material in his A Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands (1837). E. Prout, Memoirs of the Life of the Rev. John Williams (1843). Other lives by J. J. Ellis (London [1890]), C. Northcott (ib., 1939), and B. Mathews (ib., 1947). E. I. Carlyle in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 423–5.

WILLIAMS, NORMAN POWELL (1883–1943), Anglican theologian. Educated at *Durham School and at Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Magdalen College in 1906. In 1909 he was ordained priest. From 1909 to 1927 he was Chaplain-Fellow of Exeter College, and from 1927 until his death Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church. A leading Anglo-Catholic theologian, he expounded his main positions in his contributions to Essays Catholic and Critical ('The Origins of the Sacraments', 1927), Northern Catholicism ('The Theology of the Catholic Revival', 1933), and The Study of Theology ('What is Theology?', 1939). Among his principal works were The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (1927; *Bampton Lectures for 1924) and The Grace of God (1930).

E. W. Kemp, N. P. Williams (1954; memoir, with sermons). Id. in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 959 f., s.v.

WILLIAMS, RALPH VAUGHAN (1872–1958), English composer. The son of an Anglican priest, he was born at Down Ampney, Glos. (from which he named a hymn tune), and received his musical training at the Royal College of Music and at Trinity College, Cambridge; later he studied abroad with Max Bruch and Ravel. Apart from four years of active service during the First World War (1914–18), his life was devoted to composition, teaching, conducting, and the promotion of public interest in music. Recognition of his genius was at first slow, but long before his death he had become a much-loved national figure and was acclaimed as one of the most eminent and original of all English composers. His enthusiasm for folk song and his work in that field made a distinctive contribution to English music, and markedly influenced his own style and outlook. He composed works of every kind, including nine symphonies, six operas, and many songs and choral works.

Although Vaughan Williams held only one ecclesiastical appointment, being for about three years organist at St. Barnabas' in Lambeth (1895–1897), he was music editor of *The English Hymnal, and helped in the preparation of Songs of Praise* and The Oxford Book of Carols. He wrote a number of hymn tunes, among them the notable Sine Nomine ('For all the saints'); his occasional works include the Te Deum* in G for the enthronement at *Canterbury of C. G. *Lang and a Festival Te Deum for the coronation of George VI. He also composed a *Mass in G minor, organ pieces, *canticle settings, and *anthems. He himself was a man of mystical inclination who did not fit comfortably into the Anglican choral tradition, and his many settings of liturgical and biblical texts may better be described as religious music than as Church music designed for performance in choir.

Vaughan Williams's National Music (Flexner Lectures, 1932; publd. 1934) was repr., with other essays, 1963. His correspondence with Gustav Holst was ed. by Ursula Vaughan Williams (widow) and Imogen Holst, Heirs and Rebels (1959). M. Kennedy, The Works of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1964); Ursula Vaughan Williams, R. V. W. A Biography of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1964); these two works were written in accordance with the express wish of Vaughan Williams. H. [J.] Foss, Ralph Vaughan Williams. A Study (1950), incl. Vaughan Williams's 'Musical Autobiography', pp. 18–30; P. M. Young, Vaughan Williams ('Contemporary Composers', 1953); F. Howes, The Music of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1954); I. Day, Vaughan Williams ('The Master Musicians Series', 1961). Frank Howes in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 1006–9; H. Ottaway in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, xix (1980), pp. 569–80, both s.v. 'Vaughan Williams, Ralph'.

WILLIAMS, ROGER (c. 1604–83), champion of religious toleration. Educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, and apparently ordained in the C of E, he sailed for N. America in 1630 in search of religious liberty. When he discovered that restrictions on religious freedom existed also at Boston, he set up a schismatic Church. He soon found himself in conflict with the civil powers, and in 1635 was ordered to leave Massachusetts and took refuge with the Indians who dwelt beyond the confines of the state, where he founded a settlement to which he gave the name 'Providence' (1636). In 1639 he established there the first Baptist church in the colonies. In 1643 he came back to England to try to secure a title for the new colony, and in the following year his friend, Sir Henry *Vane, procured him the desired charter, and Williams returned. While in England he published anonymously his vigorous pamphlet in defence of religious liberty, The Bloody Tenent of Persecution (1644). The constitution of his colony (later 'Rhode Island') included wide religious latitude, and when the *Quakers came to America in 1656 Williams granted them political toleration, though he sharply attacked their doctrines. He was the friend of the American Indians and learnt the language of the Narragansett tribe.

Complete Writings ed. J. H. Trumbull and others for the Narragansett Club (6 vols., Providence, R.I., 1866–74; facsimile repr., with additional matter in vol. vii; New York, 1963). Studies by O. S. Straus (New York, 1894), E. J. Carpenter (ib., 1909), A. B. Strickland (Boston, Mass. [c. 1919]), Emily Easton (ib., 1930), J. E. Ernst (New York, 1932), S. H. Brockunier (ib., 1940), P. Miller (ib., 1953), and Ola E. Winslow (ib., 1957). J. E. Ernst, The Political Thought of Roger Williams (University of Washington Publications in Language and Literature, vi. 1; 1929); E. S. Morgan, Roger Williams. The Church and the State (New York [1967]). M. Calamandrei, 'Neglected Aspects of Roger Williams' Thought' in Church History, xxi (1952), pp. 239–58. S. H. Brockunier in Dict. Amer. Biog., xx (1936), pp. 286–9, s.v.

WILLIAMS, ROWLAND (1817–70), Anglican scholar. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1839. Ordained priest in 1843, he was appointed tutor at King's College, and, in 1850, vice-principal and professor of Hebrew at St. David's College, Lampeter. In 1856 he published his most important work, Christianity and Hinduism. In 1860 Williams contributed an article dealing with Biblical criticism to Essays and Reviews*, which caused him to be prosecuted for heterodoxy by the Bp. of Salisbury (W. K. *Hamilton). The Court of *Arches having sentenced him to one year's suspension, the sentence was annulled by the Privy Council in 1864. Having left Lampeter in 1862, he retired to the living of Broad Chalke, nr. Salisbury.

Life and Letters of Rowland Williams, D.D., ed. by his widow (2 vols., 1874). Id. in D.N.B., lxi (1900), pp. 450–3.

WILLIBALD, St. (700–86), Bp. of Eichstätt. He was related through his mother to St. *Boniface. After education at an otherwise unknown monastery at Waltham in Hants, he made a pilgrimage to Rome in 722 with his father, St. Richard, who died on the way at Lucca, and his brother, St. Winnebald (Wynbald). In 724 he set out from Rome for the East (Sicily, Cyprus, Palestine, Tyre, *Constantinople), where he met with much courteous treatment from the Moslems. He eventually arrived back at *Monte Cassino in 730, where he spent the next ten years in retirement. In 740 he was again in Rome, whence Gregory III sent him to Germany. Boniface ordained him priest (741) and shortly afterwards Bp. of Eichstätt (742). Before 750, with the assistance of Winnebald, who had in the meantime been an active missionary in Thuringia, he founded a double monastery at Heidenheim in Württemberg, of which his sister, St. *Walburga (q.v.), became Abbess after Winnebald's death. He continued until his death actively consolidating the Church in Franconia. His body still lies in the cathedral of Eichstätt. Feast day, 7 July.

St. Willibald's life of St. Boniface is pr. in the collections of the early lives of St. Boniface, cited s.v.; there is an Eng. tr. by G. W. Robinson (Harvard Translations, Cambridge, Mass., 1916). St. Willibald's Vita is contained in the 'Hodoeporicon', an early and reliable history of his travels, written by a nun of Heidenheim who was a relative of St. Willibald; text, with introd., and other material, in AA.SS., Jul. II (1731), pp. 485–519; better ed. O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 86–106; Eng. tr. by C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 153–77. F. Heidingsfelder (ed.), Die Regesten der Bischöfe von Eichstätt (Veröffentlichungen der Gesellschaft für Fränkische Geschichte, VI. Reihe, 1915 ff.), pp. 1–15 [1915]. W. Grothe, Der heilige Richard und seine Kinder (Berlin diss., 1908). B. Bischoff, 'Wer ist die Nonne von Heidenheim?' in Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, xlix (1931), p. 387 f. [the nun's name was Hugeburc, concealed under a cryptogram in Clm. 1086]. M. Coens, 'Légende et miracles du roi S. Richard' in Anal. Boll., xlix (1931), pp. 353–84 (text of Vita Sancti Richardi, pp. 385–97; but the introd. contains information and valuable texts on St. Willibald). W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures, 1943; Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 43 f. and 81. A. M. Cooke in D.N.B., lxii (1900), p. 12 f., s.v.; A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 338–40, s.v.

WILLIBRORD, St. (658–739), 'Apostle of Frisia'. A native of Northumbria, he was educated by the monks of *Ripon under the direction of St. *Wilfrid. In 678 he went to the Irish abbey of Rathmelsigi (probably Mellifont, Co. Louth), where he remained for 12 years and was ordained priest. In 690, with about a dozen companions, he made his way as a missionary to W. Frisia. In 693, on a visit to Rome, he secured Papal support for his mission, and on a second visit, in 695, was consecrated Abp. of the Frisians by Pope *Sergius. On his return *Pepin granted him a site for his cathedral just outside Utrecht, and in 698 he founded the monastery of Echternach in Luxemburg which became an important missionary centre. In 714 he was temporarily driven from Utrecht by Duke Radbod, but despite this and other difficulties Willibrord continued his mission work with success, receiving at one stage the co-operation of St. *Boniface and making his way as far as *Denmark, Heligoland, and Thuringia. Feast day, 7 Nov.

The Society of St. Willibrord, founded c. 1910, exists to promote closer relations between the C of E and the *Old Catholic Churches.

Prose and metrical lives by *Alcuin pr. in AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), pp. 435–57, with other primary material, pp. 458–500, and excellent introd. by A. Poncelet, S.J., pp. 414–35, incl. reff. to earlier works; prose life of Alcuin also ed. id. in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vii (pt. 1; 1913), pp. 81–141. 'Miracula' also ed. W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxx (pt. 2; 1934), pp. 1368–71, with further reff. A. Grieve, Willibrord, Missionary in the Netherlands, 691–737 (1923), with English tr. of Alcuin's prose life, pp. 97–126; Eng. tr. also in C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 3–22. G. H. Verbist, Saint Willibrord, apôtre des Pays-Bas et fondateur d'Echternach (Université de Louvain. Recueil des Travaux publiés par les membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, Sér. 2, lix; 1939). Further lives by M. A. Erens, O.Praem. (Tongerloo, 1939), and C. Wampach (Luxembourg, 1953). W. Levison, 'St. Willibrord and his Place in History' in Durham University Journal, xxxii (1939–40), pp. 23–41; id., England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures 1943; Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 53–69. Facsimile ed. of The Calendar of St. Willibrord, ed. H. A. Wilson (H.B.S., lv; 1918). G. Kiesel, Der heilige Willibrord im Zeugnis der bildenden Kunst (Luxembourg, 1969).

On the Society of St. Willibrord see G. Huelin, St. Willibrord and his Society (1960), pp. 49–77.

WILMART, ANDRÉ (1876–1941), *Patristic scholar. A native of Orléans, he studied under P. Batiffol, with whom he published the Tractatus Origenis (1900). In 1901 he entered the *Benedictine Order at *Solesmes and was ordained priest in 1906. His demonstration (1906) that the Tractatus were the work of *Gregory of Elvira helped to establish his reputation. From now on he contributed constantly to the Revue Bénédictine. His main interests were Latin patristics (esp. the Carolingian epoch) and also Latin (esp. *Gallican) liturgies, here stimulated by his friendship with E. *Bishop. His longer works include L'Ancien Cantatorium de l'église de Strasbourg (1928), an edition of twelve sermons of St. *Augustine in the Miscellanea Agostiniana (vol. i, 1930), and Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen âge latin (1932). In the field of liturgy special importance attaches to his contention that the letters attributed to St. *Germanus, hitherto a primary authority for the Gallican rite, were spurious; to his edition of the *Bobbio Missal (1924); and to his work on medieval books of private prayers.

Lettres de Jeunesse et Lettres d'Amitié, ed. G. de Luca–M. L. Baud (Uomini e Dottrine, vi; 1963). J. B. Odier–L. Brou, O.S.B.–A. Vernet, Bibliographie sommaire des travaux du père André Wilmart (Sussidi Eruditi, v; 1953), with biogr. introd. pp. 7–10, docc. on his life pp. 13–27, and list of obituary notices p. 10.

WILSNACK. A former place of pilgrimage nr. *Wittenberg. After a fire in the church of Wilsnack in 1383 three consecrated hosts were said to have been found unharmed, but marked with drops of blood. The alleged miracle, followed by striking answers to prayer and other extraordinary events, soon drew to the spot crowds of pilgrims, which made of the small village a prosperous town. Though frequently suspected of fraud, e.g. by J. *Huss (1405) and *Nicholas of Cusa (1451), the pilgrimage was encouraged by *Eugenius IV (1447) and *Nicholas V (1453), and continued to flourish until, in 1552, Wilsnack became Protestant and the miraculous hosts were burned by Joachim Ellefeld, an Evangelical preacher.

E. Breest, 'Das Wunderblut von Wilsnack, 1383–1552. Quellenmässige Darstellung seiner Geschichte' in Märkische Forschungen, xvi (1881), pp. 193–248. B. Hennig, 'Kurfürst Friedrich II und das Wunderblut zu Wilsnack' in Forschungen zur Brandenburgischen und Preussischen Geschichte, xix (pt. 2; 1906), pp. 73–104. G. Wentz in Germania Sacra, herausg. vom Kaiser-Wilhelm-Institut für deutsche Geschichte, i (pt. 2; 1933), pp. 116–19, with full bibl. p. 7 f. G. Kawerau in P.R.E., xxi (1908), pp. 346–50, s.v.

WILSON, THOMAS (1663–1755), Bp. of *Sodor and Man. Born at Burton, Cheshire, he was educated at Trinity College, *Dublin, for the medical profession. After ordination as deacon in 1686, he became curate to his uncle at Newchurch Kenyon, Cheshire (1687), and chaplain to the ninth Earl of Derby (1692). In 1697, after refusing a valuable plurality, he was persuaded by the Earl of Derby to accept the see of Sodor and Man. He was consecrated in 1698, installed in St. German's cathedral, Peel, and, taking up his residence at Kirkmichael, held the bishopric for the rest of his long life. He promptly set himself to raise the standards of spiritual life and pastoral efficiency in the island, and was also active as church-builder, farmer and founder of public libraries under the scheme of T. *Bray. His assiduous administration of Church discipline, based on his Ecclesiastical Constitutions of 1704, which inflicted public penance for slander, perjury, immorality and other offences, drew him into acrimonious legal disputes, notably during the governorship of Alexander Horne (1713–23), on whose wife Wilson had imposed penance for slander. In 1722 he suspended his archdeacon, R. Horrobin, for heresy, and on Horrobin's appeal to the governor Wilson was convicted and imprisoned for a time. When in 1724 the case was finally decided in his favour, Wilson was offered, but declined, the see of *Exeter in compensation. Theologically he had many affinities with the *Nonjurors. His devotional writings, esp. his Sacra Privata (posthumous, ed. C. Cruttwell, 1781), long enjoyed a wide circulation; and his Principles and Duties of Christianity (projected 1699, first printed 1707; 'the Manx Catechism') was the first book printed in Manx. Many of his sermons were also published.

He was commemorated in the Isle of Man by the 'Bishop Wilson Theological College' (closed, 1943) at Kirkmichael.

Works ed. C. Cruttwell (2 vols., London, 1781), with life by id., vol. i, pp. iii–xcvi; also in L.A.C.T. (7 vols. bound in 8, 1847–63), with life by J. *Keble, vol. i (pts. 1 and 2). H. Stowell, The Life of . . . Thomas Wilson (1819). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 248–51.

WINCHELSEA, ROBERT OF (c. 1245–1313), theologian and Abp. of *Canterbury. He studied arts at *Paris, becoming Master, and in 1267 Rector, of the University. There he was strongly influenced by the teaching of St. *Thomas Aquinas; he may have attended his lectures at the convent of St. Jacques. Winchelsea had returned to England by c. 1283, when he was appointed Canon of *St. Paul's and Archdeacon of Essex. He studied theology at Oxford, where he was Chancellor in 1288. His theological teaching, which was concerned with the doctrine of the Trinity, survives in a series of quaestiones disputatae, some of which he delivered at St. Paul's, and two quodlibeta*. In 1293 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury. As Archbishop he was an energetic upholder of ecclesiastical rights; he soon became involved in a struggle with Edward I, chiefly on the subject of taxation of the clergy, forbidden by *Boniface VIII's bull '*Clericis laicos' of 1296. His refusal to contribute towards the expenses of the French war led to the temporary confiscation of his property in 1297 and won him praise from the Pope. His strong hostility to the King's Treasurer, Walter Langton, Bp. of *Lichfield, caused further deterioration in his relations with Edward; but the King revenged himself on Winchelsea when, in 1305, his vassal Bertrand de Got became Pope as *Clement V and at his remonstrances suspended the Archbishop, who then made his way to the Papal court at Bordeaux. After Edward I's death in 1307, Winchelsea returned to his see at the request of Edward II, but soon found himself again in opposition to the King. Despite ill-health, he continued to take an active part in politics during his last years, and assisted the barons in their struggle against Edward by frequent excommunication of their enemies. Though insisting on his official dignity, in his personal life he was affable and cheerful, of ascetic habits and regular in his spiritual duties, a hard worker and a zealous administrator of his diocese. Miracles were said to have taken place at his tomb in Canterbury Cathedral, but several efforts at obtaining his canonization came to nothing.

Registrum Roberti Winchelsey, Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis, ed. Rose Graham (*Canterbury and York Society, li and lii; 1942–56). A. G. Little–F. Pelster, S.J., Oxford Theology and Theologians c. A.D. 1282–1302 (O.H.S., xcvi; 1934), esp. pp. 122 f. and 137–45. C. Smith, O.S.B., 'Some Aspects of the Scholastic Career of Archbishop Winchelsey' in Dominican Studies, vi (1953), pp. 101–26. P. Glorieux in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 3553, s.v., for reff. to MS. sources. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 155–61, s.v., with reff. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 2057–9, s.v., with further reff.

WINCHESTER. Apart from legends of very dubious authority, the history of Christianity in Winchester begins with the transference of the bishopric of Wessex thither from *Dorchester, Oxon., c. 670. The political importance of the city, coupled with the fame of St. *Swithin (852–62), assisted the growth in power of the see. St. *Ethelwold (Bp. 963–84) replaced the secular canons, who had formerly ruled the cathedral, by *Benedictine monks, under a prior, with the bishop as titular abbot. He and his successor, St. *Alphege (984–1005), enlarged the cathedral. Recent excavations have revealed extensive remains of the Anglo-Saxon cathedral, including the place where St. Swithin was prob. originally buried. Half a century later the cathedral was wholly rebuilt in the Norman style by Walkelin (1070–98) on an adjacent site. Of this building the transepts survive, but the remainder was gradually transformed from Norman to Gothic. *Henry of Blois (1129–1171), the brother of King Stephen, made valuable gifts of ornaments and furnishings to the Cathedral. He also brought up from the crypt or from the site of the Old Minster the remains of Saxon kings now in the mortuary-chests around the *presbytery; erected six episcopal residences, incl. Wolvesey Castle, now in ruins, and Farnham Castle, which was razed by Henry II, but subsequently rebuilt, and was later again restored by Bp. G. *Morley during the reign of *Charles II; and founded the Hospital of St. Cross, the best extant example of a medieval English almshouse. Godfrey de Lucy (1189–1204) built the retro-choir and Lady chapel of the cathedral in the Early English style (much altered later). The perpendicular nave was the work of William of Edington (1345–66) and *William of Wykeham (1367–1404), who also founded the college (1387–1393). Their successors were commemorated by a series of splendid *chantry chapels near the shrine of St. Swithin in the retro-choir. The magnificent stone reredos dates from the later part of the 15th cent. At the Dissolution (1539) William Kingsmill, the last prior, became the first Dean of the new foundation.

The see of Winchester ranks fifth among the English bishoprics (after *Canterbury, *York, London, and *Durham) and the bishop always has a seat in the House of Lords (irrespective of his seniority). He is also Prelate of the Order of the Garter and Provincial Chancellor of Canterbury. Among former Bps. of Winchester of note are Henry *Beaufort (1404–47), *William of Waynflete (1447–86), Richard *Foxe (1501–28), T. *Wolsey (1529–30), S. *Gardiner (1531–50 and 1553–55), L. *Andrewes (1619–26), B. *Duppa (1660–2), G. Morley (1662–84), C. R. *Sumner (1827–69), S. *Wilberforce (1869–73), E. H. *Browne (1873–1890), R. T. *Davidson (1895–1903), H. E. *Ryle (1903–10), E. S. *Talbot (1911–24), and C. F. Garbett (1932–42). During the reign of Henry VII (1485–1509) the *Channel Islands were separated from the diocese of Coutances and transferred first to Salisbury and then to Winchester, but it was not until the reign of Queen *Elizabeth I in 1568 that they were effectively united with the rest of the diocese. The diocese was reduced in size in 1877, when the parliamentary divisions of East and Mid Surrey were separated from Winchester and joined to *Rochester, and much more drastically when the new sees of *Guildford and Portsmouth were created in 1927. It now comprises most of Hants (except the SE. and the Isle of Wight), a small part of Dorset, and the Channel Islands.

C. Deedes (ed.), Registrum Johannis de Pontissara, Episcopi Wyntoniensis A.D. MCCLXXXII–MCCCIV (*Canterbury and York Society, xix and xxx; 1915–24); A. W. Goodman (ed.), Registrum Henrici Woodstock Diocesis Wintoniensis A.D. 1305–16 (ib., xliii–xlv; 1940–51); F. J. Baigent (ed.), The Registers of John de Sandale and Rigaud de Asserio, Bishops of Winchester, 1316–1323 (Hampshire Record Society, [viii]; 1897); F. T. Kirby (ed.), Wykeham's Register (ib., [xi and xii]; 1896); F. T. Madge–H. Chitty (edd.), Registrum Thome Wolsey Cardinalis Ecclesiae Wintoniensis Administratoris (Canterbury and York Society, xxxii; 1926); H. Chitty–H. E. Malden (edd.), Registra Stephani Gardiner et Johannis Poynet Episcoporum Wintoniensium (ib., xxxvii; 1930). G. W. Kitchin–F. T. Madge (edd.), Documents Relating to the Foundation of the Chapter of Winchester A.D. 1541–1547 (Hampshire Record Society, [i]; 1889); W. R. W. Stephens–F. T. Madge (edd.), Documents Relating to the History of the Cathedral Church of Winchester in the Seventeenth Century (ib., [x]; 1897). G. W. Kitchin (ed.), Compotus Rolls of the Obedientiaries of St. Swithun's Priory, Winchester (ib., [v]; 1892). W. de Gray Birch (ed.), Liber Vitae. Register and Martyrology of New Minster and Hyde Abbey, Winchester (ib., [vi]; 1892). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, esp. i (ed. 1817), pp. 189–218. 'Thomae Rudborne Monachi Wintonienis Historia Major de Fundatione et Successione Ecclesiae Wintoniensis' and other material in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i (1691), pp. 179–326; 'Annales Monasterii de Wintonia (A.D. 519–1277)' also in H. R. Luard (ed.), Annales Monastici, ii (Rolls Series, 1865), pp. 1–125, with introd. pp. ix–xxix. A. W. Goodman (editor into English), Chartulary of Winchester Cathedral (Winchester, 1927); id.–W. H. *Hutton (edd.), The Statutes Governing the Cathedral Church of Winchester given by King Charles I (Oxford, 1925). The Pipe Roll of the Bishopric of Winchester for the Fourth Year of the Pontificate of Peter des Roches, 1208–1209, ed. under the supervision of H. Hall (Studies in Economics and Political Science, ed. W. A. S. Hewins; 1903); N. R. Holt (ed.), The Pipe Roll of the Bishopric of Winchester 1210–1211 (Manchester [1964]). S. Gale, The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Winchester (1715); J. Milner, The History Civil and Ecclesiastical and Survey of the Antiquities of Winchester (2 vols. bound in one [1798]), esp. ii, pp. 11–157; J. Britton, The History and Antiquities of the See and Cathedral Church of Winchester (1817). S. H. Cassan, The Lives of the Bishops of Winchester from Birinus, the first Bishop of the West Saxons, to the Present Time (2 vols., 1827). R. Willis, 'The Architectural History of Winchester Cathedral' in Proceedings of the Annual Meeting of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland at Winchester, September, MDCCCXLV (1846), No. 2. J. Vaughan, Winchester Cathedral. Its Monuments and Muniments [c. 1919]. N. Pevsner–D. Lloyd, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight (The Buildings of England, 1967), pp. 659–90. R. N. Quirk, 'Winchester Cathedral in the Tenth Century' in Archaeological Journal, cxiv (1957), pp. 28–68. M. Biddle, 'Excavations at Winchester, 1969' in Antiquaries Journal, 1 (1970), pp. 277–326, esp. pp. 311–21. On the Priory of St. Swithun, Winchester, New Minster and Nunnaminster, or the Abbey of St. Mary, Winchester, J. C. Cox in V.C.H., Hants and Isle of Wight, ii, ed. H. Doubleday–W. Page (1903), pp. 106–26; on the Cathedral, C. R. Peers–H. Brakspear, ib., v, ed. W. Page (1912), pp. 50–9. C. W. C. Oman in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 643–7, s.v. There are also numerous articles in the Papers and Proceedings of the Hampshire Field Club (Southampton, 1885–1955; Winchester, 1956 ff.) and the Winchester Cathedral Record (Winchester, 1932 ff.). Winchester Studies, ed. M. Biddle (Oxford, 1976 ff.).

WINDESHEIM, near Zwolle, in Holland. Here a house of *Augustinian Canons was established in 1387 under the direction of *Florentius Radewyns by six of G. de *Groote's disciples who had received their religious formation at Eemstein, a foundation of the community of John *Ruysbroeck (q.v.). Their constitutions were approved by Boniface IX in 1395, and under their second great prior, John Vos (1391–1424), they formed, with three other Dutch monasteries, the 'Congregation of Windesheim'. They were joined in 1413 by the seven houses of the Groenendael Congregation, and in 1430 by the Congregation of Neuss. Throughout the 15th cent. the congregation grew rapidly, esp. in the Netherlands, W. and N. Germany, and Switzerland. Their fervent aspirations to religious perfection, notably under the saintly priors I. *Busch (d. c. 1480) and John Mauburnus ('John of Brussels', d. 1501), became an example to many other communities.

The Canons of Windesheim were the chief monastic representatives of the '*Devotio Moderna' (q.v.). Their influence also reached out to the secular clergy and the laity, whom they exhorted to frequent Communion and veneration of the Blessed Sacrament. They included many fine scholars, copyists, and illuminators, and among their members were Thomas à Kempis, the probable author of the Imitation of Christ, and G. *Biel, the 'last German Schoolman'. In the 16th cent. the Congregation suffered great losses and all the Dutch houses were destroyed, Windesheim itself in 1581. It was reorganized under a Prior General in 1573 and continued to exist in Belgium and the Catholic parts of Germany until the secularization of the monasteries in 1802.

Statuta Capituli Windesemensis ([Windesheim], 1508); Ordinarius Divini Officii pro Ordine Canonicorum Regularium Capituli sive Congregationis Wyndesemensis (Deventer, 1521); Regula Beati Augustini Episcopi cum Constitutionibus Canonicorum Regularium Capituli Windesemensis (Utrecht, 1553); Acta Capituli Windeshemensis [1387–1611], ed. S. van der Woude (Kerkhistorische Studien behorende bij het Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, vi; The Hague, 1953), with detailed bibl. reff. I. Busch, Chronicon Windesemense, ed. H. Rosweyde., S.J., Antwerp, 1621; also ed. K. Grube, Geschichtsquellen der Provinz Sachsen und angrenzender Gebiete, xix (1886), pp. 1–375. J. C. van Slee, De Kloververeeniging te Windesheim (Leiden, 1874); J. G. R. Acquoy, Het Kloster te Windesheim en zijn Invloed (3 vols., Utrecht, 1875–1880). H. Schmidt–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 363–8, s.v. 'Windesheim, Das Kloster von'. See also bibl. to Brethren of the Common Life and Devotio Moderna.

WINDISCH, HANS (1881–1935), NT scholar. He became a Privatdozent at Leipzig in 1908. Later he held professorships at *Leyden (1914–29), Kiel (1929–35), and Halle (1935). He was a leading member of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule. Among his writings were Taufe und Sünde im ältesten Christentum bis auf Origenes (1908); Die Frömmigkeit Philos und ihre Bedeutung für das Christentum (1909); Der Sinn der Bergpredigt (1929), and commentaries on the Catholic Epistles (Hb. N.T., 1911; ed. 2, 1930) and Heb. (ib., 1913; ed. 2, 1931), and on 2 Cor. (K.E.K., 1924).

WINDSOR, St. George's Chapel. The 'Royal Free Chapel of Windsor', constituted by Edward III to take charge of the shrine of the Order of the Garter (founded c. 1348), received its statutes from William of Edington, Bp. of *Winchester (1346–1366), on 30 Nov. 1352. Originally it was designed to consist of a warden (later 'Dean'), 12 canons, 13 vicars, 4 clerks, 6 choristers, 24 poor knights and a verger; but the ideal was never fully realized. The present fine perpendicular chapel, with its elaborate stone vaulting, dates from 1475–1508. In 1840 the canons were reduced to four (later to three), while the minor canons, as the vicars came to be called, have also been gradually reduced to three. The chapter is under the direct jurisdiction of the Sovereign, which is exercised through the Lord Chancellor. Until the Marriage Act of 1822, the Dean possessed the right of granting faculties for marriage licences and for proving wills.

W. H. St. J. Hope, Windsor Castle. An Architectural Survey, ii (1913), pp. 375–477. S. L. Ollard, Fasti Wyndesorienses. The Deans and Canons of Windsor (Historical Monographs relating to St. George's Chapel, ed. S. L. Ollard, 1950); E. H. Fellowes, The Vicars or Minor Canons of His Majesty's Free Chapel of St. George in Windsor Castle (ib. [1945]); id., Organists and Masters of the Choristers of St. George's Chapel in Windsor Castle (ib. [1939]). E. A. Jones, The Plate of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (ib., 1939); M. F. Bond, The Inventories of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, 1384–1667 (ib., 1947); A. K. B. Roberts, St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, 1348–1416. A Study in early Collegiate Administration (London thesis, ib. [1947]); J. N. Dalton (ed.), The Manuscripts of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, posthumously publd. by M. F. Bond (ib., 1957); S. M. Bond (ed.), The Monuments of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (ib., 1958); id. (ed.), The Chapter Acts of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, 1430, 1523–1672 (ib., 1966), and other volumes in this series. H. W. Blackburne–M. F. Bond, The Romance of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (1933). W. St. J. Hope in V.C.H., Berks, iii, ed. W. Page–P. H. Ditchfield–J. H. Cope (1923), pp. 36–41. S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), pp. 667–9, s.v.

WINDTHORST, LUDWIG (1812–91), German Catholic politician. The descendant of a well-known Hanoverian family, he studied law at Göttingen and Heidelberg and settled as a lawyer at Osnabrück in 1836. In 1848 he became Councillor at the Hanoverian supreme Court of Appeal at Celle, and in 1849 entered on a political career, twice becoming Minister of Justice (1851–3 and 1862–5). Having acquiesced in the enforced union of Hanover with Prussia in 1866, he became a member of the N. German Diet in 1867 and later of the German Reichstag. In 1871 he helped to found the *Centre Party, whose leader he remained till his death. The growth of the party, which was constantly harassed by the bitter opposition of O. von Bismarck, was due chiefly to his devotion and initiative. He played a prominent part in the *Kulturkampf, and, after Bismarck's change of policy, was reconciled to the Chancellor in 1879. He had a considerable share in the negotiations for the repeal of the *May Laws, and, after Bismarck's retirement (1888), his relations with the new Emperor, William II, became very friendly. His last political success was the defeat of the School Bill in 1891.

Ausgewählte Reden (3 vols., Osnabrück, 1901–2). There is much primary material in K. Bachem, Vorgeschichte, Geschichte und Politik der Deutschen Zentrumspartei, ii–ix (1927–32). Studies by J. N. Knopp ('Männer der Zeit', hrsg. J. Zeitler, Dresden, 1898), E. Hüsgen (Cologne, 1907), and W. Spael (Osnabrück, 1962). G. Bazin, Windthorst. Ses alliés et ses adversaires [1896]. F. Rachfahl in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, lv (1910), pp. 97–104, s.v.; J. W. Headlam in E.B. (ed. 11), xxvii (1911), p. 715 f., s.v.

WINE. Wine is frequently mentioned in the Bible and appears to have been in everyday use in Palestine in NT times. The vine figures in the Lord's teaching (e.g. John 15. 1) and the miracle of the turning of water into wine at Cana (John 2. 1–11) has been taken to foreshadow the use of wine in the *Eucharist. Apart from certain ascetic sects who used water (see Aquarians), wine has traditionally been held to be one of the essential materials for a valid Eucharist, though some have argued that unfermented grape-juice fulfils the Dominical command. The words of administration in the Eucharist imply that the consecrated wine conveys to the communicant the Blood of Christ, but RC theologians have held that both the Body and the Blood are present in each of the Eucharistic species (see Concomitance and Communion in both kinds).

From the earliest period it has been the custom to mix water with the wine in the Eucharist; it is taken for granted by *Justin, *Irenaeus, and *Hippolytus, while by the time of *Cyprian a mystical meaning was given to the practice. The only important exception is furnished by the *Armenians, whose practice was condemned by the *Trullan Synod. In the C of E the admixture was not ordered after 1549, though its use was known in the 17th cent. and was generally revived in the 19th. It was sanctioned by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1892, and referred to by the proposed Prayer Book of 1928 as 'an ancient tradition of the Church'.

Provided that the wine is wholesome, its colour has always been held a matter of indifference, though white has been favoured since the 16th cent., when *purificators became common.

A conscientious abstinence from wine has led to the use of grape-juice by *nonconformists, a use earlier sanctioned by W. *Durandus in his Rationale. This matter became an issue in the *Anglican-Methodist Conversations which began in 1956, and the Report of 1963 advised that during Stage One each Church should follow its own usage.

V. Zapletal, O.P., Der Wein in der Bibel (Biblische Studien, xx, Heft 1; 1920). P. Lebeau, S.J., Le Vin Nouveau du Royaume. Étude exégétique et patristique sur la Parole eschatologique de Jésus à la Cène (Museum Lessianum, Section Biblique, v; 1966), with bibl. A. *Harnack, Brod und Wasser. Die eucharistischen Elemente bei Justin (T.U., vii, Heft 2, 1891, pp. 115–44). A. Scheiwiler, Die Elemente der Eucharistie in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, iii, Heft 4; 1903). J. J. Farraher–T. D. Terry, 'Altar Wine' in American Ecclesiastical Review, cxlvi (1962), pp. 73–88. See also works cited s.v. Aquarians and Eucharist.

WINER, JOHANN GEORG BENEDIKT (1789–1858), German theologian. From 1832 he was professor of theology at Leipzig. His celebrity rests on his NT Greek grammar (Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Sprachidioms), first publd. in 1822. It went through a large number of editions, and was several times translated into English, e.g. by W. F. *Moulton (1870). Its elaborate collection of material is still valuable, though Winer's conclusions have been largely invalidated by increased knowledge of Hellenistic Greek.

G. Lechler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 368–71, s.v.

WINFRID or WINFRITH, St. See Boniface, St.

WINIFRED, St. (d. c. 650), in Welsh 'Gwenfrewi', the patron saint of N. Wales. Acc. to legends (late and not worthy of credence) she was a maiden of great beauty and attainments, who was sought in marriage by the Prince Caradog of Hawarden. For refusing his advances, she was wounded (or killed) by him, but miraculously healed (or restored to life) by her uncle, St. *Beuno. A spring marked the scene, the present Holywell (Welsh, 'Tre Ffynnon') in Clwyd, and here Winifred established a nunnery of which she became abbess. In 1138 her relics were translated to Shrewsbury and in 1398 her feast was ordered to be observed throughout the province of *Canterbury. Holywell, for many centuries a famous place of pilgrimage, has continued to attract sufferers down to modern times; Dr. S. *Johnson saw people bathing there on 3 Aug. 1774. Feast day, 3 Nov.

The principal sources include a life preserved principally in the Brit. Mus. MS. Cott. MS. Claud. A. 5, attributed to Elerius, a monk, in the year 660 (actually c. 12th cent.), pr. in W. J. Rees, Lives of the Cambro-British Saints (Published for the Welsh MSS. Society, 1853), pp. 198–209, and a life by Robert, prior of Shrewsbury, principally preserved in the Bodleian MS. Laud. Misc. 114, saec. XII (c. 1139); they are both pr. in AA.SS., Nov. I (1887), pp. 702–8 and 708–31 respectively, with introd. and other material, pp. 691–701 and 732–59. Eng. tr. of life attributed to Elerius, with abridgment of life by Robert of Shrewsbury, by J. Dalton (London, 1857). Collection of later material, mainly in English, ed. C. de Smedt, S.J., in Anal. Boll., vi (1887), pp. 305–52. Life by Philip Metcalfe, S.J. (no place, 1712; modern ed. by H. Thurston, S.J., London, 1917).

WIPO (d. c. 1050), hymn-writer. Apparently a native of Burgundy or Swabia, he became priest and chaplain to the Emps. Conrad II and Henry III. He wrote much verse, the greater part of which has been lost. There survive a 'Tetralogus', a eulogy of *Henry II (d. 1024); his 'Proverbs', a series of maxims for Prince Henry; and, best known, the '*Victimae paschali laudes', the *sequence for Easter Day. His 'Gesta Chuonradi Imperatoris' is one of the principal sources for the reign of the Emp. Conrad II (1024–39).

Crit. ed. of his works by H. Bresslau (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum Scholarum, Hanover and Leipzig, 1915), with introd. and reff. Eng. tr. of 'Gesta Chuonradi' in T. E. Mommsen–K. F. Morrison, Imperial Lives and Letters of the Eleventh Century (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxvii; 1962), pp. 52–100. G. H. Pertz, 'Über Wipos Leben und Schriften' in Abh. (Berl.) for 1851 (1852), pp. 215–33. W. Pflüger, 'Wipos Vita Chuonradi Imperatoris' in N.A., ii (1877), pp. 129–55; R. Holtzmann, 'Wipo und die schwäbische Weltchronik', ib., xxxv (1910), pp. 55–104. Raby, pp. 217–19; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 372–4.

WISDOM. In the OT wisdom, whether human or divine, occupies a prominent place. Fundamental to the OT teaching about human wisdom is the repeated affirmation that 'the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom' (e.g. Ps. 111. 10 and Prov. 1. 7). Human wisdom, of which *Solomon is the foremost representative, is essentially practical, and the terms 'wisdom' and 'wise' are used to cover a diversity of activities ranging from ability as a carpenter (Ex. 36. 4) to the fundamental principles of virtuous living (Ecclus. 1. 10–12). Similarly, divine wisdom is manifested in creation and in God's guidance of nations and individuals (Wisd. 10–19). It is more than a mere quality and tends increasingly to become a *hypostasis, so esp. in Prov. 8 and Wisd. 7. 22 ff. The so-called 'Wisdom Literature' is generally reckoned to include Job, Prov., Eccles., Ecclus. and Wisdom (qq.v.).

In the NT Divine Wisdom is incarnate in Christ, whom St. Paul calls 'the wisdom of God' (I Cor. 1. 24), 'in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden' (Col. 2. 3). At the same time wisdom is intimately connected with the Holy Ghost, one of whose gifts it is (I Cor. 12. 8). Among the Fathers most use 'Wisdom' as a synonym for the Incarnate Word or *Logos, but some (e.g. *Theophilus of Antioch and *Irenaeus) equate 'Wisdom' with the Third Person of the Trinity. In *Gnostic thought, which saw in Wisdom a Divine emanation and a cause of the creation and redemption of the world, the conception played an important part, and was understood in various systems as the spouse of the Logos, the mother of the Demiurge, &c.

In modern times Wisdom has again become a subject of speculation in connexion with the Deity in the thought of Russian authors such as V. *Soloviev and S. *Bulgakov. These authors distinguish a created from an uncreated wisdom, which together form the unity of God and the world, and which, in their teaching, is closely connected with the Platonic World-soul, the *Theotokos, and the Holy Ghost.

U. Wilckens–G. Fohrer in T.W.B., vii (1960–64), pp. 465–529, s.v. σοφία.

WISDOM OF SOLOMON, The. This *Deuterocanonical Book, which has been variously divided, may conveniently be considered in three parts. The opening chapters (1. 1 – 6. 8) describe the different destinies awaiting the righteous and the wicked. In opposition to the 'ungodly', who maintain that, since this life is all, the only sensible course is to live for pleasure, the writer maintains that the righteous will be rewarded by a blessed immortality, while the ungodly will certainly be punished. Some scholars regard this section as a reply to Eccles. (cf. Wisd. 2. 1–10 and Eccles. 1.11, 3. 19–22 and 9. 7–9). The second part (6. 9–9. 18) contains the meditation on Wisdom which has given the Book its name. Wisdom is 'the breath of the power of God, and a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty' (7. 25), and she comes forth from God to dwell among men that she may make those who receive her 'friends of God, and prophets' (7. 27); and the section ends with *Solomon's prayer for Wisdom (9). The last part of the Book (10–19) gives a review of Israel's history down to the *Exodus, interrupted in 13–15 by a description of the origin and evils of idolatry. The good fortune of Israel's forefathers and the disasters overtaking their enemies, attributed in 10 to the activity of Wisdom, are used to illustrate the theories that 'by what things their enemies were punished, by the same things they in need were benefited' (11. 5), and that 'that wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished'.

The ascription of the Book to Solomon is now generally regarded as a literary device. The Book shows the blending of Jewish religion and Greek philosophy characteristic of Alexandrian theology and was almost certainly written by an Alexandrian Jew. It was written at a time when orthodox Judaism was under attack (2. 12, 19 f.), and 14. 16–17 seem to show knowledge of Emperor-worship. Most 19th cent. scholars dated the Book in the Ptolemaic period, either in the 1st or 2nd cent. B.C.; more recently there has been a tendency to date it in the 1st cent. A.D.—perhaps c. A.D. 40, in the reign of Caligula. The unity of the Book has been challenged by some critics, but their case is not established.

The Book has had a great influence on Christian thought. Many critics explain the undoubted resemblances to it in passages of the Pauline Epistles (e.g. Rom. 9. 21–23, cf. Wisd. 12. 12–18; Eph. 6. 11–17, cf. Wisd. 5. 17–20) as due to direct use made of it by St. Paul, and there may be reminiscences of it in Heb. (e.g. 1. 3, cf. Wisd. 7. 26), Jas. (2. 6, cf. Wisd. 2. 10), 1 Pet. (1. 6 f., cf. Wisd. 3. 5 f.), and Jn. (17. 3, cf. Wisd. 15. 3). In later writers the terms used of the Divine Wisdom are freely applied to Christ and so passed into the vocabulary of Christian theology.

Modern commentaries include those of W. J. Deane (Oxford, 1881), F. W. Farrar in H. *Wace, Apocrypha, i (Speaker's Commentary, 1888), pp. 403–534, J. A. F. Gregg (Camb. Bib., RV, 1909), A. T. S. Goodrick (Oxford Church Bible Commentary, 1913), S. Holmes in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 518–68, F. Feldmann (Die heilige Schrift des Alten Testamentes, vi, Abh. 4; 1926), J. von Fichtner (H.A.T., Reihe 2, vi; 1938), and J. Reider (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, New York, 1959). P. Heinisch, Die griechische Philosophie im Buch der Weisheit (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, i, Hft. 4; 1908); H. Bückers, C.SS.R., Die Unsterblichkeitslehre des Weisheitsbuches (ib., xii, Hft. 4; 1938). C. Larcher, O.P., Études sur le Livre de la Sagesse (Études Bibliques, 1969). J. M. Reese, O.S.F.S., Hellenistic Influence on the Book of Wisdom and its Consequences (Analecta Biblica, xli; 1970). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York [1949], London [1954]), pp. 313–51, with bibl. p. 535. L. Bigot in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 703–44, s.v. 'Sagesse (Livre de)', with further bibl. See also works cited s.v. Apocrypha.

WISEMAN, NICHOLAS PATRICK STEPHEN (1802–65), English cardinal. The son of Anglo-Irish parents, he was rector of the English College at Rome from 1828 to 1840. His considerable knowledge of oriental languages also secured him a position at the *Vatican Library. On a visit to England in 1835–6, he gave some lectures on the RC faith which attracted much attention. In 1840 he returned to England as coadjutor to Bp. Walsh, *Vicar Apostolic of the Midland District, and from 1847 to 1850 he was himself Vicar Apostolic of the London District. When in 1850 the RC hierarchy was restored in England, Wiseman was appointed cardinal and the first Abp. of Westminster. His original pastoral letter, sent 'From the Flaminian Gate' (7 Oct. 1850), aroused in England great fears and hostility, but on his return to England from Rome he succeeded by tact in allaying suspicion. A believer in *Ultramontane methods of devotion, he was much opposed by the older school of English RCs. His attitude towards the *Oxford Movement was always sympathetic, although latterly the policy for which he was officially responsible, esp. under the influence of H. E. Manning, became more rigid. His eagerness for a religious culture on a Catholic basis is seen in his foundation of the Dublin Review (q.v.) in 1836. Wiseman also published a widely read novel, Fabiola, or the Church of the Catacombs (1854). R. Browning's Bishop Blougram's Apology was said to have been directed against him.

W. *Ward, The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman (2 vols., 1897). Modern life by B. Fothergill (London, 1963). C. Kent in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 234–6.

WISHART, GEORGE (c. 1513–46), Scottish Reformer. The facts of his early life are obscure. Charged with heresy in 1538, he fled to England, where a similar accusation was preferred against him in 1539. After travelling on the Continent and studying for some time at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, he returned to Scotland in 1543 and was probably the Wishart who approached the English government in 1544 with a view to the murder of Card. D. *Beaton. In 1544 he began active propaganda on behalf of Reformed doctrines, going from place to place in great danger of his life and denouncing current abuses. In this work he was assisted by J. *Knox. He was apprehended by Bothwell at Ormiston in Jan. 1546, soon afterwards transferred to Edinburgh Castle, and burnt by Beaton at St. Andrews on 1 Mar. 1546. He made an English translation of the '*Helvetic Confession' which was published posthumously (prob. 1548).

The primary authorities include J. Knox, History of the Reformation in Scotland (ed. W. C. Dickinson, 2 vols., London, 1949, vol. i, pp. 60–72), and for his trial and death, Robert Lindesay of Pitscottie (c. 1532–c. 1578), Historie and Chronicles of Scotland (ed. Æ. J. G. Mackay, Scottish Text Society, xlii and xliii, with glossary and index, lx, 1899–1911, vol. ii, pp. 52–82, with notes, p. 421 f.), and J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments (ed. G. Townsend, vi, 1846, pp. 625–36). Notes by D. Laing appended to his ed. of The Works of John Knox, i (The Wodrow Society, 1864), pp. 534–7. C. Rogers, 'Memoir of George Wishart, the Scottish Martyr' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society [Original Series], iv (1876), pp. 260–3, with his Eng. tr. of the Helvetic Confession, pp. 319–28. Æ. Mackay in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 248–51.

WITCHCRAFT. The malevolent exercise of preternatural powers, esp. by women, attributed to a connexion with demons. The narrative of the witch of Endor (1 Sam. 28. 7–25) and the condemnations of witchcraft in the Old (Exod. 22. 18, Deut. 18. 10) and New Law (Gal. 5. 20) have sometimes been adduced as Scriptural proof of its existence. In the patristic age *Tertullian (Apol., 22) and St. *Augustine (De Civ. Dei, xxi. 6) believed in it. On the other hand, the belief was opposed by many of the Fathers, e.g. St. *Hippolytus, St. *Chrysostom, and St. *Caesarius of Arles.

In the early Middle Ages, *Charlemagne punished the persecution of witches, which had been a feature of the old Roman Law; *Rabanus Maurus and many bishops of the 10th and 11th cents. wrote against it, and *Gregory VII forbade the killing of women for supposed crimes such as causing storms and epidemics. But the popular superstition, resting in part on old pagan beliefs, did not die out, and it was given a fresh impetus by Arabic and Jewish magic introduced into Europe through the *Crusades and by the exaggerated teaching of the *Cathari on the evil principle; and on occasion it influenced the speculations of the Schoolmen. Popes Alexander IV (1258), and later *John XXII (1320), permitted the *Inquisition to deal with cases of witchcraft if connected with heresy, and, esp. in Germany, secular courts also punished these supposed crimes with exile and often with cruelty and burning. Mass persecutions, however, began to take place only in the later 15th cent. In 1484 Innocent VIII encouraged the Inquisitors to take severe measures against witches, and the appearance of the Malleus Maleficarum ('Hammer of Witches') in 1487 or 1488, which described their alleged practices such as witches' sabbaths, intercourse with the devil, transformation into animals and malicious spells cast on men and cattle, greatly increased superstition and persecution. The 16th cent. Reformers, with their often exaggerated belief in the power of the devil, further contributed to the evil, as did the unrest stirred up by the religious wars. In England large numbers of women were hanged for witchcraft during the Commonwealth, and only at the end of the 17th cent. did persecution begin to lessen, though it had been repeatedly denounced for over a hundred years, e.g. by the Calvinist doctor, J. Weyer, in his De Praestigiis Daemonum (1563), the Jesuit F. von Spee in Cautio Criminalis (1631), and many others. Under the influence of the *Enlightenment the persecution of witches practically ceased. The last trials for witchcraft in England took place in 1712, in *Scotland in 1722, and on the Continent in Switzerland in 1782 and in Posen in 1793.

M. Summers, The History of Witchcraft and Demonology ('History of Civilization', 1926), with bibl.; id., The Geography of Witchcraft (ib., 1927). Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft collected by H. C. Lea, arranged and ed. A. C. Howland (3 vols., Philadelphia and London, 1939). C. [W. S.] *Williams, Witchcraft (London, 1941); P. Hughes, Witchcraft (ib., 1952); [E.] G. [S.] Parrinder, Witchcraft (Harmondsworth, 1958); Lucy [P.] Mair, Witchcraft [1969]. J. Français, L'Église et la sorcellerie (Bibliothèque de Critique religieuse, 1910). G. L. Kittredge, Witchcraft in Old and New England (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1928). W. Notestein, A History of Witchcraft in England from 1558 to 1718 (Washington and London, 1911). C. L'E. Ewen (ed.), Witch Hunting and Witch Trials. The Indictments for Witchcraft from the Records of 1373 Assizes held for the Home Circuit, A.D. 1559–1736 (1929); id., Witchcraft and Demonianism. A Concise Account derived from Sworn Depositions in the Courts of England and Wales (1933); id., Witchcraft in the Star Chamber (privately printed, 1938). A collection of material on witchcraft in Elizabethan and Jacobean England ed., in modernized form, by Barbara Rosen, Witchcraft (Stratford-upon-Avon Library, vi; 1969). E. Peel–P. Southern, The Trials of the Lancashire Witches. A Study of Seventeenth-Century Witchcraft (Newton Abbot [1969]). A. Macfarlane, Witchcraft in Tudor and Stuart England. A regional and comparative study (1970). K. Thomas, Religion and the Decline of Magic. Studies in popular beliefs in seventeenth century England (1971), pp. 435–583. P. Séjourné in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2394–2417, s.v. 'Sorcellerie'.

WITELO (b. c. 1230), medieval philosopher and scientist. A native of Silesia, he studied philosophy and science at Padua (c. 1260–8) and later went to Viterbo, where he became the friend of the translator of *Aristotle, *William of Moerbeke, to whom he dedicated his treatise on optics, 'Perspectiva' (between 1270 and 1277). On his later life there is no certain information. Two of his other treatises, 'De Natura Daemonum' and 'De Primaria Causa Paenitentiae', have recently been discovered, but the further works of Witelo which are cited in the 'Perspectiva' are still unknown.

Witelo's 'Perspectiva', which had a great influence on later scientists, e.g. J. *Kepler, is based for the greater part on the Arabic scholar, Alhazen. It is esp. interesting on account of its psychological doctrines, which are akin to modern views on association and the subconscious. In its metaphysical teaching it is *Neoplatonist, recognizing two orders of being, intellectual substances and corporeal things, which are connected by the bond of causality and both emanate from the Divine Light. His theories on the dynamics of light, which he regards as the first of sensible forms ('lumen . . . primum omnium formarum sensibilium'), have much in common with the doctrines of Robert *Grossteste and Roger *Bacon.

C. Baeumker, Witelo, ein Philosoph und Naturforscher des XIII. Jahrhunderts (B.G.P.M., iii, Hft. 2; 1908), incl. text of the Liber de Intelligentiis, pp. 1–71, and of the Perspectiva (previously publd. at Nuremberg, 1535 and 1551, and at Basle, 1572), pp. 127–79. Id., 'Zur Biographie des Philosophen und Naturforschers Witelo' in Hist J., xxxiii (1912), pp. 359–61. A. Birkenmajer, 'Études sur Witelo' in the Bulletin international de l'Académie Polonaise des Sciences et des Lettres. Classe de Philologie, Classe d'Histoire et de Philosophie for 1918 (1920), pp. 4–6; for 1919, 1920 (1922–4), pp. 354–60; for 1922 (1925), pp. 6–9. C. Baeumker, 'Zur Frage nach Abfassungszeit und Verfasser des irrtümlich Witelo zugeschriebenen Liber de Intelligentiis' in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, i (S.T., xxxvii; 1924), pp. 87–102. A. C. Crombie, Robert Grosseteste and the Origins of Experimental Science 1100–1700 (Oxford, 1953), pp. 213–32. Überweg, ii, pp. 474–7, with bibl. p. 761.

WITNESSES, The Three. See Johannine Comma.

WITTENBERG, since 1922 officially known as Lutherstadt Wittenberg, the cradle of the *Reformation. At its university (founded, 1502; united with that of Halle, 1815) M. *Luther became professor in 1508. On 31 Oct. 1517 he affixed his Ninety-Five Theses to the door of the Schlosskirche, declaiming against the medieval doctrine of *Indulgences; and at the beginning of 1522 Protestant public worship was celebrated here for the first time, in the parish church. The *Augustinian monastery in the town, where Luther lived first as a monk and later with his family, is now fitted up as a museum (Lutherhaus). Both Luther and P. *Melanchthon are buried in the Schlosskirche.

W. Friedensburg, Geschichte der Universität Wittenberg (Halle, 1917).

WITTENBERG, Concord of (1536). An agreement reached by *Lutheran and *Zwinglian theologians in the disputed doctrine of the *Eucharist. After a preliminary conference between M. *Bucer and P. *Melanchthon at Cassel in Dec. 1534, a large and representative body of divines, including M. *Luther himself, met in May 1536 at Wittenberg, where a doctrinal statement drawn up by Melanchthon, which set forth an essentially Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist, though without insistence on *ubiquity, was accepted. The reunion thus achieved soon collapsed, however, largely through the refusal of the Swiss Zwinglians to accept the 'Concord'.

Text pr. among P. Melanchthon's collected works ed. C. G. Bretschneider, iii (Corpus Reformatorum, iii; Brunswick, 1836), cols. 75–7; mostly repr. in Kidd, p. 318 f. (No. 127); Eng. tr. of most of text in D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, ii (1909), p. 46 f. T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 383–99, s.v. 'Wittenberger Konkordie'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 381 (Nos. 39213a–39216).

WOLFENBÜTTEL FRAGMENTS, The. The title under which G. E. *Lessing issued between 1774 and 1778 seven extracts from the long (unpubld.) work in which H. S. *Reimarus (1694–1768; q.v.) had attacked historic Christianity. The most famous of them was the last, entitled Von dem Zwecke Jesu und seiner Jünger (1778), in which Reimarus interpreted the purpose of Christ's work, as set down in the Gospels, in terms of *eschatology. Widespread attention was again drawn to it by A. *Schweitzer's Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906; Eng. trans., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910).

For bibliography see Reimarus, H. S.

WOLFF, CHRISTIAN (1679–1754), less correctly 'Wolf', German philosopher. In 1706 he became professor of mathematics and natural science at Halle, then a stronghold of *Pietism. In an attempt to systematize the principles of G. W.

*Leibniz, he developed a comprehensive system of philosophy. His supreme confidence in reason offended the Pietists, who eventually persuaded Frederick William I to expel him from Halle in 1723, urging on the monarch that the spread of Wolff's teaching would be subversive of military discipline, since its determinism would justify desertion from the army. Wolff spent his exile at *Marburg. On the accession of Frederick the Great (1740), one of the new king's first acts was to recall Wolff, who re-entered Halle on 6 Dec. 1740 in triumph. Wolff's system won great popularity and was in substance that taught in most of the German universities in the latter half of the 18th cent. It also provided the background of the Critical Philosophy of I. *Kant. Wolff wrote a very long series of treatises (in form textbooks), the earlier ones in German and the later in Latin. Among the latter were a Logic (1728), an Ontology (1730), a Cosmology (1731), Psychologies (1731–4), a Natural Theology (1736–7), an Ethics (1750–3), and an Economics (1750). Together they covered nearly the whole field of speculative philosophy.

Gesammelte Werke photographically reprod. with introd. by J. École and H. W. Arndt (Hildesheim, 1962 ff.). Wolff himself assembled his Kleine Schriften, 6 vols., Halle, 1736–40. Autobiography first ed. by H. Wuttke, Leipzig, 1841. The 1764 ed. of Wolff's Jus Gentium methodo scientifica pertractatum (orig. publ. in 1749) was photographically reproduced, together with useful introd. by O. Nippold and Eng. tr. by J. H. Drake (2 vols., Classics of International Law, xiii; Oxford, 1934). Wolff finds a place in all histories of modern German philosophy. Studies on his general doctrines by F. W. Kluge (Breslau, 1831), H. Pichler (Leipzig, 1910), J. Baumann (ib., 1910), and E. Kohlmeyer (Göttingen, 1911). W. Arnsperger, Christian Wolff's Verhältnis zu Leibniz (1897). M. Campo, Cristiano Wolff e il Razionalismo Precritico (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, Serie Prima. Scienze Filosofiche, xxx; 2 vols., 1939). J. Birke, Christian Wolffs Metaphysik und die zeitgenössische Literatur- und Musiktheorie: Gottsched, Scheibe, Mizler (1966). Überweg, iii, pp. 448–54, with bibl., p. 703. H. Stephan in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 452–64.

WOLFGANG, St. (c. 924–94), Bp. of Ratisbon. Of Swabian descent, he was educated at the celebrated monastery of *Reichenau on an island in Lake Constance and later became a teacher in the cathedral school at Trier. In 964 he entered the Benedictine Order at *Einsiedeln. Consecrated to the see of Ratisbon in 972, he soon became an ardent and successful reformer. His feast (31 Oct.) is widely observed in Central Europe.

The principal sources are the works of two monks of St. Emmeran, Ratisbon: Arnold of Vohburg on St. Emmeran, Book ii (written c. 1037), and a life of St. Wolfgang by Otho (written c. 1052), which is more lively but less reliable; the best edition of both these sources, with other material, and introd. and commentary by H. *Delehaye, S.J., in AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 527–97. Festschrift to mark the ninth centenary of his death, ed. J. B. Mehler (Ratisbon, 1894). Other modern studies by I. Zibermayr (Linz, 1924) and O. Häfner (Rottenburg a/N., 1930). K. Bugmann, O.S.B., 'Der Mönch Wolfgang' in Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, lxxviii (1968), pp. 9–27, with full reff. A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 494–6, s.v.; U. Schmid in C.E., xv (1912), p. 682 f., s.v.

WOLSEY, THOMAS (c. 1474–1530), cardinal. Of middle-class birth, he was educated at *Oxford, elected Fellow of Magdalen College c. 1497, and ordained priest in 1498. He soon held a number of benefices, becoming one of the domestic chaplains of Henry Dean, Abp. of *Canterbury, in 1501, and chaplain to Henry VII c. 1507. He retained the royal favour under his successor, *Henry VIII, became a privy councillor in 1511, and Bp. of *Lincoln in 1514. In 1514 he was also appointed Abp. of *York, and in 1515 was created cardinal. A month later he was made Lord Chancellor of England, now wielding an almost royal power. His main interest was foreign politics, in which he frequently changed sides, skilfully holding the balance of power between the Empire and France, in a boldly conceived attempt to make England the arbiter of Europe. Though he himself was in favour of friendship with France, he had to sign a secret treaty of alliance with the Emperor (1521). The latter, however, on the death of *Leo X (1521), as well as on that of Hadrian VI (1523), failed to exercise his influence to get Wolsey elected Pope. In the meantime the cardinal, though retaining the royal favour, had made himself enemies throughout the country by his ruthless methods of obtaining money for the war with France, as well as by his arrogance and pomp. When, in 1527, Henry began to take steps to obtain his divorce, Wolsey, though opposed to the scheme, endeavoured by all means to further the King's wishes. His plan to induce the Pope to cede to himself authority to decide the case proved a failure, however, and the cardinal, unable to obtain the Papal dispensation necessary for the divorce, was blamed by Anne Boleyn and, through her, incurred the King's displeasure. In 1529 he pleaded guilty to a praemunire, being the first English prelate to accept the jurisdiction of a secular court. In the same year he had to resign the Great Seal and to give up all his property to the King, though later his archbishopric was restored to him. His last months, devoted to his diocese and to deeds of charity, were embittered by the knowledge that the King intended to suppress the two colleges he had founded at Ipswich and Oxford. Of these the latter, the present *Christ Church (q.v.), survived in somewhat different form. Owing to a denunciation by his Italian doctor he was arrested on a charge of high treason in Nov. 1530, but died soon afterwards on his way to London. A statesman rather than a Churchman, Wolsey had devoted his life to the aggrandizement of his king and country, fostering the development of royal absolutism in politics as well as in ecclesiastical matters; but his dream of making England the chief factor in European politics remained unrealized in his age.

Registrum Thome Wolsey Cardinalis Ecclesie Wintoniensis Administratoris transcribed by F. T. Madge–H. Chitty, ed., with introd., by H. Chitty (*Canterbury and York Society, xxxii; 1926). The primary sources for his official policies are the calendars of the state papers for the reign of Henry VIII (cited s.v.). Important docc. connected with the divorce in S. Ehses (ed.), Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII. von England (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte . . . herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, ii; Paderborn, 1893). The primary authority for his personal life is the record of George Cavendish (1500–c. 1561), pr. as The Negotiations of Thomas Wolsey, the Great Cardinall of England (1641); this life has very frequently been republished; crit. ed. by R. S. Sylvester (E.E.T.S., ccxliii; 1959; also, with modernized spelling, New Haven–London, 1962). The best modern life is that of A. F. Pollard (London, 1929). Other lives by R. Fiddes (London, 1724), J. Grove (4 vols., ib., 1742–4), M. *Creighton (ib., 1888), E. L. Taunton (ib., 1902), H. *Belloc (ib., 1930), and J. Ferguson (ib., 1958). T. W. Cameron, 'The Early Life of Thomas Wolsey' in E.H.R., iii (1888), pp. 458–77; J. *Gairdner, 'The Fall of Cardinal Wolsey' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, N.S., xiii (1899), pp. 75–102. Id. in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 325–43, s.v.; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 2077–80, s.v. See also bibl. to Henry VIII.

WOOD, ANTHONY (1632–95), antiquary and historian of *Oxford. In his later years he called himself 'Anthony à Wood'. He lived for most of his life in a house opposite the gate of Merton College, of which he became a member in 1647. He was an assiduous collector of facts, and, though his judgements were often prejudiced, his writings contain a mine of information about the university of Oxford and very many of its otherwise little-known members. In 1674 he issued Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis, printed in two folios at the expense of John *Fell, and in 1691–2 his Athenae Oxonienses; An Exact History of all the Writers and Bishops who have had their Education in the University of Oxford from 1500 to 1690, to which are added the Fasti or Annals of the said University for the same time (also in two folios).

His Athenae Oxonienses . . . to which are added the Fasti, or Annals of the said University, ed. P. Bliss (5 vols., London, 1813–20), with his autobiography in vol. i, pp. i–cxxv, and T. *Hearne's account of him, pp. cxxvii–cxxx. His Survey of the Antiquities of the City of Oxford (composed in 1661–6), ed. A. Clark (O.H.S., xv, xvii, xxvii; 1889–99); The Life and Times of Anthony Wood, Antiquary of Oxford, 1632–1695, described by himself, ed. id. (ib., xix, xxi, xxvi, xxx, xl; 1891–1900); abridged ed. by L. Powys (London, 1932). A. Clark in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 349–53.

WOODARD, NATHANIEL (1811–91), founder of the 'Woodard Schools'. He was born at Basildon Hall, Essex, educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and ordained in 1841. While a curate in East London he became convinced of the necessity of establishing public schools which would provide a sound middle-class education on a definite Anglican basis. When, in 1847, he was appointed curate at New Shoreham, he founded his first day school, and in 1848 outlined his ideas in his Plea for the Middle Classes, which aroused much controversy, but also received warm approval. In the same year he established the St. Nicolas Society for the realization of his plans, and many schools were founded, among them St. Nicolas's, Lancing (1848), and St. John's, Hurstpierpoint (1850). Woodard's organizing abilities, combined with his devoted service, won him wide moral and financial support, esp. among High Churchmen, and in recognition of his work he was made Canon of Manchester and Rector of St. Philip's, Salford, in 1870. In 1873 he founded Denstone, the first of the Midland schools, in 1880 King Alfred's School, Taunton, and in 1887 a girls' school at Bangor (N. Wales).

Life by J. Otter (London, 1925). K. E. *Kirk, The Story of the Woodard Schools (1937); B. Heeney, Mission to the Middle Classes. The Woodard Schools 1848–1891 (1969). J. A. Atkinson in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 383–5; A. L. Woodard in D.E.C.H., p. 649, s.v.

WOOLMAN, JOHN (1720–72), American *Quaker preacher. A native of Northampton, nr. Burlington, N.J., U.S.A., he led a long campaign against slavery from 1743 till his death, constantly travelling among the Quaker communities in America in support of Negro rights. In 1772 he crossed to England to further the interests of his cause and died at *York a few weeks after his arrival. His writings, remarkable for their unadorned sincerity and restrained but strong religious feeling, are among the best literary expressions of the Quaker ideal. The best-known, his Journal (1774), records Woolman's 'Life, Gospel-Labours and Christian Experiences' from 1756 till his death.

The Journal, as well as Woolman's other writings, has been often reprinted. J. G. *Whittier issued an edition, with Introduction (1871). Journal and Essays also ed., with biographical introd., by Amelia M. Gummere (1922). W. Teignmouth Shore, John Woolman. His Life and our Times (1913); Janet Whitney, John Woolman, Quaker (1943).

WOOLSTON, THOMAS (1670–1733), *Deistical writer. Educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of his college in 1691 and after ordination held a succession of college appointments. In various writings he defended the *Origenistic modes of exegesis of the OT, and in some polemical writings upheld the *Quakers as their modern exponents. His provocative methods led to the loss of his fellowship in 1721, whereupon Woolston announced his intention of founding a new sect. He entered the lists on the Deistical side in the controversy between A. *Collins and Edward Chandler (c. 1668–1750, Bp. of *Durham from 1730) with his A Moderator between an Infidel and an Apostate (1725). This was soon followed by two supplements in which he maintained that the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection were allegories.

Collection of his Works in 5 vols., London, each work being separately paginated and dated, incl. [T. Stackhouse?,] The Life of Mr. Woolston, with an Impartial Account of his Writings (London, 1733); C. C. Woog, De Vita et Scriptis Thomae Woolstoni (Leipzig, 1743). *Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Mr. William Whiston, containing Memoirs of Several of his Friends also Written by himself (ed. 2, 1749), pp. 231–5. J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers that have Appeared in England in the Last and Present Century, i (1754), pp. 126–43. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century (2 vols., 1876), esp. vol. i, pp. 230–8; E. Sayous, Les Déistes anglais et le christianisme principalement depuis Toland jusqu'à Chubb, 1696–1738 (1882), pp. 122–45. A. Gordon in D.N.B., lxii (1900), pp. 437–9.

WORCESTER. The diocese was founded c. 680 on the initiative of St. *Theodore of Canterbury for the tribe of the Hwicce, when the diocese of Mercia was divided into five. The first cathedral, which was dedicated to St. Peter, was richly endowed by the Mercian kings. The secular canons, who originally served it, were gradually replaced by *Benedictine monks (c. 974–7) under St. *Oswald, who also built a new cathedral. This church, which was dedicated to the BVM, was completed in 983. Destroyed by the Danes in 1041, it was rebuilt (1084–9) by St. *Wulfstan, but the only remaining parts of his work are the crypt and a few walls, much of it having perished by fire and by the fall of the central tower in 1175. In 1218 the cathedral, which contained the tomb of King *John between the shrines of St. Oswald and St. Wulfstan, was restored and reconsecrated. In the course of time several alterations were made in its structure, the choir being a particularly fine example of the Early English style, whereas the nave, re-done in the 14th cent., shows chiefly Perpendicular work. From 1497 to 1534 the see was held by absentee Italian bishops who were the King's representatives at Rome. The monastery was suppressed in 1540 and a secular chapter founded in 1542, the last of the priors, Henry Holbeach, becoming the dean. The size of the diocese was much reduced in 1541 and 1542 by the foundation of the sees of *Gloucester and Bristol. Among the better-known Bps. of Worcester are, besides those already named, St. *Dunstan, *Wulfstan (d. 1023), T. *Bourchier,

H. *Latimer, J. *Hooper, E. *Sandys, J. *Whitgift, G. *Morley, J. *Gauden, J. *Earle, E. *Stillingfleet, and C. *Gore. Every third year the Three Choirs' Festival is held at Worcester.

Episcopal Register for the periods of vacancy of the See ('Registrum Sede Vacante'), 1301–1435, ed. J. W. Willis Bund (Worcestershire Historical Society, 3 vols., 1893–7); Registers of Godfrey Giffard [Bp. 1268–1301], ed. id. (ib., 2 vols., 1902); of William Ginsborough [Bp. 1303–7], ed. id. (ib., 1907); of Walter Reynolds [Bp. 1308–13], ed. R. A. Wilson (ib., 1927); of Thomas de Cobham [Bp. 1317–27], ed. E. H. Pearce (ib., 1930); of Wolstan de Bransford [Bp. 1339–49] ed. R. M. Haines (ib., 1966). E. S. Fegan (ed.), Journal of Prior William More [1518–36] (ib., 1914). J. M. Wilson, The Liber Albus of the Priory of Worcester. Parts i and ii, Priors John de Wyke, 1301–17, and Wulfstan de Bransford, 1317–39 (ib., 1919). M. Hollings (ed.), The Red Book of Worcester containing Surveys of the Bishop's Manors and other Records chiefly of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries (ib., 4 pts., 1934–50). J. M. Wilson (ed.), Accounts of the Priory of Worcester for the Year . . . 1521–2, and J. H. Bloom–S. G. Hamilton, A Catalogue of the Rolls of Obedientiaries (ib., 1907); J. M. Wilson–C. Gordon (edd.), Early Compotus Rolls of the Priory of Worcester (ib., 1908); S. G. Hamilton (ed.), Compotus Rolls of the Priory of Worcester of the XIVth and XVth Centuries (ib., 1910). C. Price (ed.), Liber Pensionum Prioratus Wigorn. Being a Collection of Documents Relating to Pensions from Appropriated Churches and other Payments Receivable by the Prior and Convent of Worcester and to the Privileges of the Monastery (ib., 1925). J. Atkins, The Early Occupants of the Office of Organist and Master of the Choristers of the Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Virgin Mary, Worcester (ib., 1918). R. R. Darlington (ed.), The Cartulary of Worcester Cathedral Priory (Register I) (Publications of the Pipe Roll Society, lxxvi for 1962–3; 1968). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 567–622. W. Thomas, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of Worcester: with an Account of the Bishops thereof from the Foundation of the See to the Year 1660 (1736). J. Noake, The Monastery and Cathedral of Worcester (1866). E. F. Strange, The Cathedral Church of Worcester (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1900). W. M. Ede, The Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Virgin Mary of Worcester. Its Monuments and their Stories (Worcester, 1925). R. Willis, 'The Architectural History of the Cathedral and Monastery at Worcester' in The Archaeological Journal, xx (1863), pp. 83–132, 254–72, and 301–18. M. M. C. Calthorp in V.C.H., Worcs, ed. J. W. Willis-Bund–W. Page, ii (1906), pp. 94–112, and F. M. Stenton–H. Brakspear, ib., iv (1924), pp. 394–408. H. W. Yeatman-Biggs in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 649–53, s.v.

WORCESTER HOUSE DECLARATION (1660). See Declarations of Indulgence.

WORD OF GOD. See Logos.

WORDSWORTH, CHRISTOPHER (1807–85), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was the youngest son of Christopher Wordsworth (1774–1846), Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and thus a nephew of W. *Wordsworth, the poet. After a brilliant career at his father's college at Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow in 1830. From 1836 to 1844 he was Headmaster of Harrow, and later held various ecclesiastical appointments till consecrated Bp. of Lincoln in 1869. Throughout his life he remained a conservative High Churchman, with great veneration for the early Church Fathers. He compiled a Commentary on the whole Bible (NT, 1856–60; OT, 1864–70) which had a wide circulation in its day, being esp. valued for its large range of homiletic material. In *patristics, perhaps his most important study was St. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome (1853), a reply to C. C. J. *Bunsen's book (1852). He also wrote a series of hymns, published in The Holy Year (1862), of which several are still in frequent use, among them 'Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost', 'Hark! the sound of holy voices', 'See the Conqueror mounts in triumph' and 'Songs of thankfulness and praise'.

He publd. a collection of his works as Miscellanies Literary and Religious (3 vols., 1879). J. H. Overton-Elizabeth Wordsworth (daughter), Christopher Wordsworth, Bishop of Lincoln, 1807–1885 (1888). A. C. Benson, The Leaves of the Tree. Studies in Biography (1911), ch. 11, 'Bishop Wordsworth of Lincoln', pp. 260–83. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., lxiii (1900), pp. 9–11.

WORDSWORTH, JOHN (1843–1911), Bp. of *Salisbury. The elder son of Christopher *Wordsworth, Bp. of *Lincoln (q.v.), he was educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, became a Fellow of Brasenose College in 1867, and a prebendary of Lincoln in 1870. One of the best Latin scholars of his day, he worked assiduously from 1878 onwards at producing a critical edition of the *Vulgate NT (Mt. to Rom. publd. 1889–1911; minor edition of whole NT, 1911). In 1881 he was *Bampton Lecturer, and from 1883 to 1885 the first Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture. From 1885 till his death he was Bp. of Salisbury. As a bishop he proved an invaluable adviser to Abp. E. W. *Benson (with whom he was intimate) and an enthusiastic worker in the cause of Reunion, esp. with the *Swedish and *Old Catholic Churches. To the latter end he published two treatises on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, De successione episcoporum in ecclesia anglicana (1890) and De validitate ordinum anglicanorum (1894). In 1897 he composed the Latin Responsio sent by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in reply to '*Apostolicae curae'. His other writings include The Ministry of Grace (1901) and The National Church of Sweden (1911).

Life by E. W. Watson (London, 1915). Id. in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii, pp. 705–7.

WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM (1770–1850), English poet. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and went in 1791–2 to France, where he became a radical in politics and sympathized with the revolutionaries. In these years he went through a period of moral laxity and religious unbelief. After his return to England he devoted himself entirely to poetry. In 1797 began his friendship with S. T. *Coleridge, and in 1798 the two published jointly Lyrical Ballads, which contain the famous 'Lines written . . . above Tintern Abbey'. Wordsworth's chief aim in this collection, which was a landmark in English poetry, was to bring out the deeper spiritual meaning in everyday persons and events, a task for which he was particularly fitted by his capacities for minute observation and for the detection of the emotional qualities in commonplace things. In 1799 he settled at Grasmere. Among his later works are The Prelude, his spiritual autobiography (completed 1805), and the Poems in Two Volumes (1807), containing the famous 'Ode to Duty' and 'Ode on the Intimations of Immortality'. In the poetry written after 1810 there is a marked decline of poetic power, e.g. in much of The Excursion (1814), on which he had been working for many years. The great inspiration of Wordsworth's art was nature, which he invested with spiritual qualities; this process at times brought his thought near to *pantheism. In his later years, however, he returned to a more orthodox form of creed. His Ecclesiastical Sonnets (1822), which give an account of the Church in England from the introduction of Christianity to the reign of

*Charles I, are an eloquent expression of his devotion to the C of E, containing, at the same time, a fair appreciation of medieval English Catholicism. He was in sympathy with the *Oxford Movement and esp. with J. *Keble, whose Christian Year he admired. Having been little valued in his youth, Wordsworth's genius came to be recognized in his later years, and he was made Poet Laureate in 1843.

Edd. of Poems publd. by Wordsworth himself include those of 1807 (2 vols., London; reprinted by T. Hutchinson, 1897, and ed. H. Darbishire, Oxford, 1914), 1827 (5 vols., London), 1832 (4 vols., London), and 1849–50 (7 vols., ib.). Important posthumous ed. in 6 vols., London, 1857; repr. as the Centenary Edition, 6 vols., 1870; edd. by J. Morley (London, 1888), by E. Dowden (7 vols., London, &c., 1892–1893), by T. Hutchinson (Oxford, 1895; not quite complete), by [D.] W. Knight (8 vols., London, 1896), and by E. de Selincourt (6 vols., Oxford, 1940–4). Prose Works, ed. A. B. Grosart (3 vols., London, 1876) and [D.] W. Knight (2 vols., ib., 1896). [D.] W. Knight (ed.), Letters of the Wordsworth Family from 1787 to 1855 (3 vols., 1907). E. de Selincourt (ed.), The Early Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth (1787–1805) (Oxford, 1935); id. (ed.), The Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth. The Middle Years (2 vols., ib., 1937) and The Later Years (3 vols., ib., 1939). Id. (ed.), Journals of Dorothy Wordsworth (2 vols., 1941). Christopher *Wordsworth, Memoirs of William Wordsworth (2 vols., 1851). Other studies by J. Searle [i.e. Philips] (London, 1852), E. P. Hood (ib., 1856), F. W. H. Myers ('English Men of Letters', London, 1881), J. M. Sutherland (London, 1887), Elizabeth Wordsworth (ib., 1891), W. Raleigh (ib., 1903), D. W. Rannie (ib., 1907), E. H. Sneath (Boston, 1912), W. Harper (2 vols., London, 1916), A. Beatty (University of Wisconsin Studies in Language and Literature, xvii; 1922), H. W. Garrod (Oxford, 1923; ed. 2, 1927), C. H. Herford (London, 1930), H. Read (Clark Lectures, 1929–30; London, 1930; ed. 2, 1949); Elsie Smith (Oxford, 1932), H. I'Anson Fausset (London, 1933), E. C. Batho (Cambridge, 1933), Helen Darbishire (Clark Lectures, 1949; Oxford, 1950), F. [N.] W. Bateson (London, 1954), J. Jones (ib., 1954), Mary Moorman (2 vols., Oxford, 1957–65). J. F. Danby (London, 1960), G. H. Hartman (New Haven–London, 1964), C. Salvesen (London, 1965), M. Rader (Oxford, 1967), and G. Durrant (Cambridge, 1969). H. M. Margoliouth, Wordsworth and Coleridge 1795–1834 (H.U.L., 1953). A. D. Martin, The Religion of Wordsworth (1936). T. J. Wise, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of William Wordsworth (1916); J. V. Logan, Wordsworthian Criticism (Columbus, Ohio, 1947); E. F. Helney–D. H. Stam, Wordsworthian Criticism 1945–1959 (New York, 1960). H. King–E. de Selincourt in C.B.E.L., iii (1940), pp. 165–72.

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, The. The 'fellowship of Churches which accept our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour', formally constituted at *Amsterdam on 23 Aug. 1948. The organization arose from the fusion of the two earlier movements, '*Life and Work' and '*Faith and Order', the first practical steps being taken at their respective conferences at *Oxford and *Edinburgh in 1937. A further stage was reached at a conference at Utrecht in 1938, when a constitution was drawn up and a provisional organization ('The World Council of Churches in Process of Formation') established. Because of the Second World War the formal constitution was delayed until 1948. At that time it was decided that the International Missionary Council (see Edinburgh Conference, 1910) should be considered as being in association with the World Council of Churches; it was finally integrated in 1961. Also in 1961 the constitution of the World Council of Churches was amended, so that the Council was defined as 'A fellowship of churches which confess the Lord Jesus as God and Saviour according to the Scriptures and therefore seek to fulfil together their common calling to the glory of the one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit'. The Council is served by a Presidium, a representative Assembly meeting at six- or seven-yearly intervals, a Central Committee meeting annually, and executive and departmental committees. Assemblies have been held at Amsterdam (1948), *Evanston, Ill. (1954), New Delhi (1961), *Upsala (1968), and Nairobi (1975). The headquarters of the World Council of Churches is in Geneva.

At its formation in 1948 the Council had 144 member Churches; by 1981 the number had risen to 301. With the exception of the RC Church and the *Unitarians, the Council includes all the main denominations of the Western world, nearly all the Eastern *Orthodox Churches (incl. since 1961 the Patriarchate of Moscow) and about 200 other Churches in the non-Western world, mainly in Asia and Africa. Although the RC Church is not a member, since 1961 the Vatican has appointed accredited observers to Assemblies; in 1965 a Joint Working Group was established between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches to discuss questions of common concern, and in 1968 the RC Church accepted full membership of the Faith and Order Commission. Also in 1968 a joint secretariat was created linking the World Council of Churches' work in the area of social and international justice with that of the Pontifical Commission on Justice and Peace.

While much of the Council's work is advisory, it has created a number of administrative units, of which the largest is the Division of Inter-Church Aid, Refugee and World Service; this body carries out an extensive programme of service to refugees and migrants and the victims of famine and other disasters. Other units with administrative responsibility are the Theological Education Fund, the Christian Medical Commission, the Agency for Christian Literature Development, the Education Renewal Fund and the Ecumenical Development Fund. The Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, formed in 1947 and enjoying consultative status with the United Nations, is an integral part of the World Council of Churches, as is the Ecumenical Institute at *Bossey which also serves as a Graduate School of Geneva University.

G. K. A. *Bell, The Kingship of Christ. The Story of the World Council of Churches (Harmondsworth, 1954). D. P. Gaines, The World Council of Churches. A Study of its background and history (Peterborough, N.H. [1966]). W. A. Visser 't Hooft, 'The Genesis of the World Council of Churches' in Ruth Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), The History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (ed. 2, 1967), pp. 697–724; H. Krüger, 'The Life and Activities of the World Council of Churches' in H. E. Fey (ed.), The Ecumenical Advance (1970), pp. 29–62. See also other works cited under Ecumenical Movement.

WORLD EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP. See Evangelical Alliance.

WORMS, Concordat of (1122), also the 'Pactum Calixtinum'. The agreement which was reached between Pope *Callistus II and the Emp. Henry V through the mediation of the German princes on 23 Sept. 1122; it ended the *Investiture Controversy. The Emperor's 'Precept' to the Church explicitly renounced all investiture by ring and staff in his dominions, and granted canonical election and free consecration. The Pope's 'Privilege' to Henry conceded that elections of bishops and abbots in the German kingdom were to take place (without simony or violence) in the Emperor's presence, and that before his consecration the elect was to receive the regalia from the Emperor by investiture with the sceptre. In cases of dispute the Emperor, with the counsel or judgement of the metropolitan and comprovincials, was to lend his assent and aid to the sanior pars. However, in the other parts of the Empire (i.e. Italy and Burgundy) no form of election in the Emperor's presence was granted; and consecration of the elect was to precede his investiture by the Emperor with the regalia, which should follow within six months.

Text ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Leges, ii (1837), p. 75 f.; conveniently repr. in Mirbt, p. 161 f. (No. cccv), with bibl. reff.; Eng. tr. in Bettenson, p. 154 f., and in S. Z. Ehler–J. B. Morrall (edd.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), p. 48 f. W. Fritz (ed.), Quellen zum Wormser Konkordat (Kleine Texte, clxxvii; 1955). E. Bernheim, Zur Geschichte des Wormser Concordates (1878); D. Schäfer, Zur Beurteilung des Wormser Konkordats (Abh. (Berl.), 1905, Hft. 1); E. Bernheim, Das Wormser Konkordat und seine Vorurkunden hinsichtlich Entstehung, Formulierung, Rechtsgültigkeit (Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Staats- und Rechtsgeschichte, lxxxi; 1906); H. Rudorff, Zur Erklärung des Wormser Konkordats (Quellen und Studien zur Verfassungsgeschichte des Deutschen Reiches, i, Hft. 4; 1906). See also works cited under Investiture Controversy.

WORMS, Diet of (1521). The most celebrated of the long series of Imperial diets held at Worms, at which M. *Luther defended his doctrines before the Emp. *Charles V. It took place in the Bischofshof from 27 Jan. to 25 May. The Papal legate, *Aleander, who had arrived at Worms on 30 Nov. 1520, having put the case against Luther on 13 Feb. 1521, Luther was then summoned and arrived on 16 Apr. On 18 Apr. he made his final refusal to recant his doctrines, acc. to an early tradition concluding his answer with the famous words 'Hie stehe ich. Ich kan nicht anders. Gott helff mir. Amen.' Charles V having announced on the following day his resolve to take firmer measures against his doctrines, Luther departed from Worms on 26 Apr. On 25 May his teachings were formally condemned in the Edict of Worms.

Many of the primary docc. are pr. in P. Balan (ed.), Monumenta Reformationis Lutherana ex Tabularils S. Sedis Secretis, 1521–1525 (Ratisbon, 1883); extracts from these and other collections, with further reff., in Kidd, pp. 79–89 (Nos. xxxix–xlvi). J. Friedrich, 'Der Reichstag zu Worms im Jahre 1521 nach den Briefen des päpstlichen Nuntius Hieronymus Aleander' in Abh. (Bayr.), hist. Cl., xi, Abt. 3 (1870), pp. 55–146. T. Brieger, Aleander und Luther, 1521. Die vervollständigten Aleander-Depeschen nebst Untersuchungen über den Wormser Reichstag (Quellen und Forschungen der Reformation, i; 1884); A. Hausrath, Aleander und Luther auf dem Reichstage zu Worms (1897). N. Paulus, 'Zur Geschichte des Wormser Reichstages von 1521' in Hist. J., xxxix (1919), pp. 269–77. P. Kalkoff, Der Wormser Reichstag von 1521 (1922), with full reff. Detailed bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1938), pp. 12–14 (Nos. 27923–50), with reff. to other lists of specialized items, and on the Edict of Worms, ib., iv (1938), p. 753 f. (Nos. 44534–42). See also works cited under Aleander; Luther, M.; and Reformation.

WORMS, Disputation of (1540–1). The colloquy arranged, after the failure of the Conference of *Hagenau (q.v.), with a view to reuniting the Catholics and Protestants in Germany. The conference met on 25 Nov. 1540, with eleven representatives on each side. After a long debate on procedure, it was finally agreed that one theologian should speak for each party, J. *Eck being selected by the Catholics and P. *Melanchthon by the Protestants. In Jan. 1541 an agreed formula was reached on the disputed matter of *original sin; but on 18 Jan. it was decided to end the discussions at Worms in view of the forthcoming Reichstag at *Ratisbon.

L. von *Pastor, Die kirchlichen Reunionsbestrebungen während der Regierung Karls V (1879), pp. 198–217. W. Friedensburg, 'Zur Geschichte des Wormser Convents, 1541' in Z.K.G., xxi (1901), pp. 112–27. O. Clemen, 'Epigramme auf Teilnehmer am Wormser Religionsgespräch 1540/41', ib., l (1931), pp. 441–54. G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908) pp. 489–92, s.v. Wormser Religionsgespräche I'. Further bibl. in Schottenl her, iv (1938), p. 538 f. (Nos. 41404–16).

WORMS, Synod of (1076). The synod convened by the Emp. *Henry IV to defend his claims during the *Investiture controversy with Pope *Gregory VII. Henry invited to the assembly, which met on 24 Jan. 1076, the Abps. of Mainz and Trier and a large number of other (mainly German) bishops. It issued a strong anti-Papal statement, charging Gregory with many serious crimes and calling upon the people of Rome to depose him; and an offensively worded letter was despatched by Henry to the Pope personally. As a result, the Pope excommunicated Henry shortly afterwards.

Relevant texts ed. L. Weiland in M.G.H., Leges, Sect. iv, Constitutiones et Acta Publica Imperatorum et Regum, i (1893), pp. 106–13. G. Meyer von Knonau (ed.), Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV und Heinrich V, ii (1894), pp. 613–28. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, iii (S.S.L., xvi; 1937), pp. 50–9, with important notes. See also works cited under Investiture Controversy.

WORSHIP, Directory of Public (1645). The 'Directory for the Public Worship of God', compiled by the *Westminster Assembly (q.v.), was designed on *Presbyterian principles to replace the BCP. An Ordinance requiring its use was passed by both houses of Parliament on 4 Jan. 1645. For the most part it contained general instructions rather than set forms of service. The principal service consisted of prayers, two lessons, Psalms and a sermon. The Holy Communion was to follow the morning sermon, with the people seated round the Holy Table. Instructions were provided for Baptism, visitation of the sick, and a form of marriage, but the burial of the dead was to be performed without ceremony, and feast days, apart from Sunday, were abolished. Penalties for using the BCP or failure to follow the Directory were imposed on 26 Aug. 1645.

The 'Ordinance for taking away the Book of Common Prayer, and for establishing and putting into execution of the Directory for the Public Worship of God' [incl. text of Directory] is pr. in C. H. Firth–R. S. Rait (edd.), Acts and Ordinances of the Interregnum, 1642–1660 (1911), pp. 582–607.

WOUNDS, The Five Sacred. Though the Passion narratives of the Gospels expressly record only the opening of the Lord's side, the piercing of His hands and feet, a normal practice in contemporary crucifixions, is attested in the Resurrection appearances (Lk. 24. 39 and Jn. 20. 20 and 27). Devotion to the Five Wounds developed in the Middle Ages, esp. under the influence of St. *Bernard's love for the human Person of the Lord and His Passion, and was fostered by the *stigmatization of St. *Francis of Assisi. Preference was soon given to the wound in the side from which the Church and the Sacraments, esp. Baptism ('water') and Eucharist ('blood'), were said to have sprung, and which led gradually to the cult of the *Sacred Heart. In the 14th and 15th cents. prayers to the Five Wounds became numerous in popular religious literature. A feast was instituted which is still observed in some places on the fourth Friday in *Lent; *Portugal adopted the emblem on her coat of arms, the members of the *Pilgrimage of Grace wore it on their clothes, and the 'wells of pity' were engraved on many English rings in the 15th cent. Today the devotion is fostered esp. by the *Passionists, and their Rosary of the Five Wounds approved by the Popes in 1823 and 1851.

L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Dévotions et pratiques ascétiques du moyen âge (Pax, xxi; 1925), pp. 78–128 (Eng. tr., 1927, pp. 80–130). A. Franz, Die Messe im deutschen Mittelalter (1902), pp. 155–61 and 703 f. R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 84–91. G. F. Holweck in C.E., xv (1912), p. 714 f., s.v.; O. Schmucki–E. Sauser in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 1249–51, s.v. 'Wunden Christi', with further bibl. See also works cited under Sacred Heart and Stigmatization.

WRATH OF GOD, The. An anthropomorphic phrase for the Divine attitude towards sin. Wrath is predicated of God only metaphorically, as the human passions have no equivalents in the purely spiritual Divine substance. The expression is frequent in the Bible, esp. in the OT (e.g. Exod. 15. 7, Ps. 2. 12), where wrath is attributed to God not only when He punishes sinners but also when He sends trials to the just (e.g. Job 14. 13). In the NT the wrath of God is particularly connected with the Judgement on the Last Day, which St. *Paul calls the 'day of wrath' (Rom. 2. 5, cf. ib. 1. 18 and Mt. 3. 7), a conception elaborated in the Book of Rev., esp. under the metaphors of the 'wrath of the Lamb' (6. 16) and the 'wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God' (19. 15).

Patristic discussion in *Lactantius' De Ira Dei. A. *Ritschl, De Ira Dei (Bonn, 1859). F. W. Weber, Vom Zorne Gottes (Erlangen, 1862; with introd. essay by Franz *Delitzsch). M. Pohlenz, Vom Zorne Gottes. Eine Studie über den Einfluss der griechischen Philosophie auf das alte Christentum (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xii; 1909). A. T. Hanson, The Wrath of the Lamb (1957). G. Bornkamm, 'Die Offenbarung des Zornes Gottes (Rom. 1–3)' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiv (1935), pp. 239–62. See also comm. to Romans, cited s.v., ad loc. H. Kleinkert–O. Grether–J. Fichtner–E. Sjöberg–G. Stählin–O. Procksch in T.W.B., v (1954), pp. 382–448, s.v. ὀργή, with bibl.

WREDE, WILLIAM (1859–1906), German NT scholar. He was professor of NT at Breslau from 1895 till his death. In his chief contribution to NT studies, Das Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien (1901), he challenged the current critical view that St. Mark's Gospel was an unadorned record of historic fact and almost uninfluenced by the dogmatic beliefs of its author. Wrede also maintained that Jesus in His earthly life did not claim to be the Messiah, and that the Gospel story is a reading-back of later beliefs about His Person into the narrative. In a small book on St. *Paul (Paulus, 1905), written in a similar vein of scepticism, he maintained that the Christian religion received its essential form largely through St. Paul's radical transformation of the teaching of Christ. Of his many writings on NT literary problems perhaps the most important was Die Echtheit des zweiten Thessalonicherbriefes (1903).

Wrede's Vorträge und Studien, ed. Adolf Wrede (brother; Tübingen, 1907), with introd., pp. iii–xiv. A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (ed. 2, 1913), pp. 368–89 (Eng. tr. of ed. 1, 1910, pp. 328–49). J. *Kaftan, Jesus und Paulus. Eine freundschaftliche Streitschrift gegen . . . Wrede (1906). G. Strecker, 'William Wrede zur hundertsten Wiederkehr seines Geburtstages' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, lvii (1960), pp. 67–91, incl. list of his works. A. *Jülicher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 506–10.

WREN, CHRISTOPHER (1632–1723), architect of *St. Paul's Cathedral. Educated at Wadham College, Oxford, he was elected to a fellowship at All Souls in 1653 and in 1657 appointed professor of astronomy at Gresham College, London. Three years later he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and in 1661 assistant, and later full, surveyor-general. He was one of the founders, and from 1680 to 1682 president, of the Royal Society. He soon proved himself a consummate draughtsman, with as keen a grip on practice as on theory. His architectural designs for the chapel of Pembroke College, Cambridge (1663), and the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford (1664), having disclosed his marked ability, he was chosen, after the Great Fire of 1666, as one of the rebuilders of the city. Besides his greatest work, St. Paul's Cathedral, begun in 1675 and completed in 1716, Wren was also responsible for building 52 churches, 36 company halls, the Monument (1671–8), the Chelsea Hospital (1682), Trinity College Library, Cambridge (1677), and perh. the (Old) Ashmolean Museum, Oxford (1683), in addition to other important works.

Parentalia: or Memoirs of the Family of the Wrens: . . . but chiefly of Sir Christopher Wren. . . . Compiled by his son Christopher (London, 1750), pp. 181–368; Life and Works of Sir Christopher Wren, from the Parentalia or Memoirs of his son Christopher [ed. E. J. Enthoven] (London and New York [1903]). J. Elmes, Memoirs of the life and works of Sir Christopher Wren (1823). Other studies by Lucy Phillimore (London, 1881), Lena Milman (ib., 1908), L. Weaver (ib., 1923), G. [F.] Webb (ib., 1937), J. Summerson (ib., 1953), E. F. Sekler (ib., 1956), Margaret [D.] Whinney (ib., 1971) and K. Downes (ib., 1971). Sir Christopher Wren, A.D. 1632–1723. Bicentenary Memorial Volume published under the Auspices of the Royal Institute of British Architects (1923). P. Waterhouse and others, Sir Christopher Wren, 1632–1723 (1923). Publications of the Wren Society (20 vols., Oxford, 1924–43). F. C. Penrose in D.N.B., lxiii (1900), pp. 80–94.

WROTH, WILLIAM (c. 1575–1642), the first Welsh Nonconformist pastor. Educated at Oxford, he became rector of Llanfaches, to the west of Chepstow, in 1611, and after a sudden conversion in 1620 became famous as a Puritan preacher. In 1635 he was summoned before the Court of *High Commission, but his case was delayed. In 1639, however, after he had ceased to hold his living, he established at Llanfaches with some associates the first separatist church in Wales.

WULFILA. See Ulphilas.

WULFRIC, St. (d. 1154), also 'St. Ulrich', anchorite. He was born at Compton, nr. Bristol, and ordained priest to the charge of Deverill, nr. Warminster. After a conversion attributed to an interview with a beggar, who told him the contents of his purse and prophesied a life of sanctity for him, he returned to Compton. He was enclosed c. 1125 in a cell at Haselbury, Somerset, where he practised very severe austerities and became renowned for his prophecies and miracles, e.g. that at his prayers the suit of mail which he wore was once cut with scissors as cloth. The statement that he was a *Cistercian seems to rest on a confusion. His cult was mainly confined to the south-west of England, and he was never formally canonized. Feast day, 20 Feb.

Earliest account, written during his lifetime, by Henry of Huntingdon, Historia Anglorum, ix. 23 (ed. T. Arnold, R.S., 1879, p. xxix f.). Life by John, Abbot of Ford, prob. written between 1180 and 1190, ed. M. Bell, O.S.B. (Somerset Record Society, xlvii; 1933), with full introd.

WULFSTAN (d. 1023), Bp. of London from 996 to 1002 and Abp. of *York from 1002; homilist and law-writer. (He is not to be confused with the Wulfstan of the foll. entry.) He probably came from the eastern Danelaw, and was a monk, though it is not known where. He held the see of *Worcester as well as that of York from 1002 to 1016, and was a prominent royal counsellor. Wulfstan was a distinguished writer in Old English, probably surpassed only by his correspondent, *Aelfric. He was the author of numerous homilies (the exact canon is disputed), which are simple practical hortatory expositions of essential doctrines; the best-known, though not the most typical, bears the Latin rubric 'Lupi Sermo ad Anglos quando Dani maxime prosecuti sunt eos, quod fuit anno 1014'; this vividly depicts the miseries of the time and ascribes them, in traditional style, to God's anger at the sustained wickedness of all classes. His longest work is his 'Institutes of Polity, Civil and Ecclesiastical', an interesting attempt at a general work of political theory which is mainly concerned with the duties of the different ranks and classes of society. Wulfstan composed much of the legislation issued after 1008 by Kings Ethelred II and Canute, and drafted or influenced various private law-codes. There is much similarity of ideas and even of wording between these codes and Wulfstan's other writings. A number of MSS. have survived which were either written or annotated by Wulfstan. He was a learned man of orderly mind, a conscientious prelate who stamped an ecclesiastical reformer's mark on Old English law. He was regarded as a saint at Ely (where he was buried); but his cult did not spread or become official.

Homilies ed. A. [S.] Napier (Sammlung Englischer Denkmäler in kritischen Ausgaben, iv, Abt. 1; 1883) [no more publd.] and Dorothy Bethurum (Oxford, 1957), with introd. and notes; crit. ed. of 'Sermo Lupi ad Anglos' by Dorothy Whitelock (Methuen's Old English Library, 1939; ed. 3, 1963), with introd. 'Institutes of Polity' ed. K. Jost (Schweizer Anglistische Arbeiten, xlvii; 1959). The Laws of Ethelred II and Canute are ed., with modern Eng. tr., by A. J. Robertson, The Laws of the Kings of England from Edmund to Henry I (Cambridge, 1925), pp. 45–219. Wulfstan's Canons of Edgar separately ed. by R. Fowler (E.E.T.S., cclxvi; 1972). K. Jost, Wulfstanstudien (Schweizer Anglistische Arbeiten, xxiii; 1950), with detailed bibl. Dorothy Whitelock, 'Archbishop Wulfstan, Homilist and Statesman' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fourth Series, xxiv (1942), pp. 25–45; more specialized artt. by id., 'A Note on the Career of Wulfstan the Homilist' in E.H.R., lii (1937), pp. 460–5; id., 'Wulfstan and the so-called Laws of Edward and Guthrum', ib., lvi (1941), pp. 1–21; id., 'Wulfstan and the Laws of Cnut', ib., lxiii (1948), pp. 433–52; id., 'Wulfstan's Authorship of Cnut's Laws', ib., lxx (1955), pp. 72–85; id., 'Wulfstan at York' in J. B. Bessinger, Jr.–R. P. Creed (edd.), Medieval and Linguistic Studies in Honor of Francis Peabody Magoun, Jr. (1965), pp. 214–31.

A Wulfstan Manuscript containing Institutes, Laws and Homilies. British Museum Cotton Nero A I, ed. H. R. Loyn (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, xvii; Copenhagen, 1971); N. [R.] Ker, 'The Handwriting of Archbishop Wulfstan' in P. Clemoes–Kathleen Hughes (edd.), England Before the Conquest. Studies in Primary Sources presented to Dorothy Whitelock (Cambridge, 1971), pp. 315–31.

WULFSTAN, St. (c. 1009–95), also 'Wulstan', Bp. of *Worcester. After ordination he spent some 25 years in a monastery at Worcester, where he became greatly respected for his humility and asceticism. Elected Bp. of Worcester in 1062, he accepted the office with extreme reluctance, but having resigned himself to it, administered the diocese with great effectiveness till his death. Largely through uncertainty as to the status of the see of Worcester in relation to *Canterbury and *York, Wulfstan found himself opposed at the beginning of his episcopate to both archbishops; but later *Lanfranc was won by the simple goodness of Wulfstan, and together they suppressed the slave trade between England and Ireland. In the secular struggles of the time he assisted *William I against the barons and William II against both the barons and the Welsh. His Life was written by Coleman, a monk of Worcester. Feast day, 19 Jan.

The Old English Life by Coleman, written between 1095 and 1113, has not survived; a Lat. rendering by *William of Malmesbury ed. R. R. Darlington (Camden Society, 3rd Series, xl; 1928; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1934). [R. W. *Church,] 'St.Wulstan' in Lives of the English Saints [ed. J. H. *Newman] (London, 1844; ed. 2, by A. W. Hutton, v [1901], pp. 3–50). J. W. Lamb, Saint Wulstan, Prelate and Patriot. A Study of his Life and Times (C.H.S., 1933), with bibl.

WÜRTTEMBERG CONFESSION, The. A Protestant confession of faith in 35 articles, compiled in 1552 by J. *Brenz on the model of the *Augsburg Confession for presentation to the Council of *Trent. It contained some *Calvinist elements, but it was predominantly Lutheran, with certain approximations (in view of its purpose) to the specifically Catholic position. Use was made of it by Abp. M. *Parker in preparing the Thirty-Eight Articles of 1563 (see Thirty-Nine Articles).

Text in H. Heppe (ed.), Die Bekenntnisschriften der altprotestantischen Kirche Deutschlands (Cassel, 1855), pp. 491–554. J. Rauscher (ed.), Württemberg und das Augsburgische Glaubensbekenntnis (Blätter für Württembergische Kirchengeschichte, iv; Stuttgart, 1930), pp. 70–89. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, i (1877), pp. 343 f. and 627–9, with table illustrating the connexion with the Thirty-Nine Articles. See also works cited s.v. Thirty-Nine Articles.

WYCLIFFE, JOHN (c. 1330–84), English philosopher, theologian and reformer. John Wycliffe was probably a member of the Wycliffe family who owned property near Richmond in N. Yorks. He was a Fellow of Merton in 1356, Master of Balliol (c. 1360–61), and Warden of Canterbury Hall (later incorporated into *Christ Church), Oxford (1365–7); his expulsion from Canterbury Hall by Abp. Simon Langham in favour of a monastic establishment led to a bitter lawsuit and lasting disenchantment with monasticism. Wycliffe was rector of Fillingham (1361–8), of Ludgershall (1368–84) and of Lutterworth (1374–84), but until 1381 he lived mainly in Oxford, from 1363 in Queen's College. He was in the service of the Black Prince and of John of Gaunt after 1371, acting as envoy in negotiations with the Curia in 1374 and as propagandist for the government in 1376 and 1378; Gaunt and the Black Prince's widow protected him against ecclesiastical censures in 1377, 1378 and probably in 1382.

Wycliffe's early reputation was as a philosopher. Reacting against the prevailing scepticism of Oxford thought, which divorced the spheres of natural and supernatural knowledge, he returned to the philosophical realism of St. *Augustine and R. *Grossteste; in his Summa de Ente (c. 1365–72) he argued that individual beings derived from God through a hierarchy of universals and were therefore in essence changeless and indestructible. From the beginning his philosophy was religious in character, and it was fed by a sense of the spiritual sterility of scepticism. As a theologian he sought inspiration in the Bible and the Fathers rather than in the speculation of the schools, and he fulfilled his doctoral obligations by an unprecedented, if unoriginal, series of lectures commenting on the whole Bible. His growing repugnance at the religious institutions of his time led to his gradual elaboration, on the basis of his philosophy, of a concept of the Church which distinguished its eternal, ideal reality from the visible, 'material' Church, and denied to the latter any authority which did not derive from the former. In his De Civili Dominio (1375–6) he maintained that secular and ecclesiastical authority depended on grace and that therefore the clergy, if not in a state of grace, could lawfully be deprived of their endowments by the civil power. This doctrine was condemned in 1377 by Pope Gregory XI on the initiative of the English Benedictines, though Wycliffe escaped any punishment. In his De Ecclesia, De Veritate Sacrae Scripturae and De Potestate Papae (1377–8) he maintained that the Bible, as the eternal 'exemplar' of the Christian religion, was the sole criterion of doctrine, to which no ecclesiastical authority might lawfully add, and that the authority of the Pope was ill-founded in Scripture; and in De Apostasia (c. 1382) he denied, in violent terms, that the religious life had any foundation in Scripture, and appealed to the government to reform the whole order of the Church in England. The friars in particular were the object of his denunciation. At the same time in De Eucharistia he attacked the doctrine of *transubstantiation as philosophically unsound and as encouraging a superstitious attitude to the Eucharist; he sought to free the Eucharist of the popular cult which conceived of it as miraculous and to inculcate a consciousness of its moral and spiritual effects.

These publicly proclaimed doctrines gradually lost him substantial support in Oxford and reduced his following to a small but loyal group of scholars, prob. with some friends at court. His Eucharistic doctrine was the breaking-point. It was condemned by the University in 1381; and after Wycliffe's public refusal to comply in his Confessio had created scandal, and the Peasants' Revolt, popularly though erroneously attributed to his teaching, had magnified the affair, a wide range of his doctrines and the persons of his followers (though not Wycliffe himself) were condemned by Abp. W. *Courtenay at the Blackfriars Council (the '*Earthquake Synod') in 1382. Wycliffe had to retire to Lutterworth, where he revised his works and produced a prolific series of pamphlets attacking his enemies. After his death the continued activity of his disciples, who, as they gained less educated support, became known as Lollards (q.v.), led to further condemnations of Wycliffe's doctrine in 1388, 1397, and finally at the Council of *Constance in 1415.

Wycliffe aimed at propagating his views widely and was an energetic preacher in Latin and in English, as his surviving sermons show. Though he wrote in English, probably none of the English works attributed to him is really his. He apparently played no direct part in the translation of the Bible undertaken by his disciples *Nicholas of Hereford and John *Purvey, among others (c. 1380–92), though he undoubtedly inspired the project.

Wycliffe's philosophical influence in Oxford was considerable for at least a generation; his later influence in England, whether on the Lollards or in general, is problematical. However, his philosophical and theological writings from c. 1380 exercised a major influence on Czech scholars, esp. John *Huss, and many of them survive only in Czech MSS. Though the 16th-cent. Reformers appealed to Wycliffe, his preoccupations were largely different from theirs. Outside the field of philosophy his ideas were not original and can be compared with the similar views of contemporary European reformers. His importance lies in his role in propagating them. Feast day in the ASB, 31 Dec.

Most of Wycliffe's works are published by the Wyclif Society (35 vols., London, 1883–1914); his Tractatus de Officio Pastorali, ed. G. V. Lechler (Leipzig, 1863); Trialogus, ed. id. (Oxford, 1869); De Iuramento Arnaldi, ed. id., Johann von Wiclif, ii (Leipzig, 1873), pp. 575–9; De Christo et suo Antichristo, ed. R. Buddensieg (Gotha, 1880); Summa de Ente, ed. S. H. Thomson (Oxford, 1930); Tractatus de Trinitate, ed. A. du P. Breck (Boulder, Colorado, 1962); other controversial pieces preserved in the Fasciculi Zizaniorum attributed to T. *Netter, ed. W. W. Shirley (R.S., 1858); minor works ed. I. H. Stein in Speculum, vii (1932), pp. 87–94; viii (1933), pp. 503–10; and in E.H.R., xlvii (1932), pp. 95–103. The English tracts ed. T. Arnold, Select English Works (Oxford, 1867–71), and F. D. Matthew, English Works . . . hitherto Unprinted (E.E.T.S., lxxiv; 1880), are probably not by Wycliffe. Valuable modern studies include G. [V.] Lechler, Johann von Wiclif und die Vorgeschichte der Reformation (2 vols., Leipzig, 1873; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1878; revised ed., with additional material [1884]); H. B. Workman, John Wyclif (2 vols., Oxford, 1926); and K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity ('Teach Yourself History', [1952]), the best biography. J. A. Robson, Wyclif and the Oxford Schools [Cambridge, 1961). Beryl Smalley, 'John Wyclif's Postilla super totam bibliam' in Bodleian Library Record, iv (1953), pp. 186–205; id., 'John Wyclif's Postilla on the Old Testament and his Principium' in Oxford Studies presented to Daniel Callus (Oxford Historical Society, New Series, xvi; 1964), pp. 253–96; id., 'The Bible and Eternity: John Wyclif's Dilemma' in Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, xxvii (1964), 73–89; G. A. Benrath, Wyclifs Bibelkommentar (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxxvi; 1966). J. H. Dahmus, The Prosecution of John Wyclif (New Haven, Conn.–London, 1952). L. J. Daly, S.J., The Political Theory of John Wyclif (Jesuit Studies, Chicago, 1962). G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, ii (1967), pp. 494–573. B. L. Manning in C. Med. H., vii (1932), pp. 486–507 (ch. xvi), with good bibl. pp. 900–7. E. Delaruelle–E. R. Labande–P. Ourliac in Fliche–Martin, xiv (4e partie; 1964), pp. 943–88. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 2103–6, with bibl. See also bibl. to Lollardy.

WYCLIFFITES. See Lollardy.

WYNFRITH, St. See Boniface, St.

WYTTENBACH, THOMAS (1472–1526), Swiss Reformer. A native of Biel (Bienne), Switzerland, after studying at *Tübingen, he became a lecturer at Basel, where H. *Zwingli was one of his pupils. Here he came under the influence of the Humanist movement and the new methods of Biblical study. After long ecclesiastical disputes at Biel, he eventually settled there as pastor in 1515 and from 1523 publicly supported the Reformation. Marriage in 1524 led to his deposition. Wyttenbach died soon afterwards, and it was left to his successor at Biel, Jakob Würben, to carry through the Reformation in the city.

F. A. Haller–H. Hermelink in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 574–7, s.v.

X

XAVIER, St. FRANCIS. See Francis Xavier, St.

XIMÉNEZ DE CISNEROS, FRANCISCO (1436–1517), Cardinal Abp. of Toledo. A native of Torrelaguna in Castile, after studying at Alcalá de Henares and Salamanca, he spent some years in Rome, returning to Spain in 1465 with a letter from *Sixtus IV which provided him with the archpriestship of Uzeda in 1473. His diocesan, Carillo, Abp. of Toledo, who was offended by the appointment, incarcerated him, but in 1480 eventually gave way. Ximénez, restored to his benefice, promptly exchanged it for a chaplaincy in the diocese of Siguenza, where Cardinal Mendoza (later Abp. of Toledo) made him his vicar general. After fulfilling this office with distinction, he unexpectedly gave it up to become an *Observantine friar and entered the convent of San Juan de los Reyes at Toledo, recently founded by *Ferdinand and *Isabella. His life of extreme austerity soon attracted large crowds of penitents and he took refuge in a remote monastery, living for considerable periods as an anchorite.

In 1492 a new epoch in his life began when he reluctantly accepted the office of confessor to Queen Isabella, to whom he had been recommended by Mendoza. His advice was soon sought on affairs of state as well as on strictly spiritual matters. In 1494 he was appointed under the Queen's influence Provincial of the *Franciscans in Castile and in the face of formidable opposition carried through drastic reforms esp. among the *Conventuals. On the death of Mendoza (1495), he succeeded, again with great reluctance, to the Archbishopric of Toledo, the primatial and most influential see in Spain, and an office which carried with it the High Chancellorship of Castile. Behind the outward splendour of his position, Ximénez continued to live a severely ascetic life. In 1499 he followed the court to Granada, where he was active in promoting measures to convert the Moors.

On the death of Isabella (24 Nov. 1504), Ferdinand resigned his title of King of Castile, and Ximénez was faced with the delicate political task of establishing concord between Ferdinand and his son-in-law, the Archduke Philip of Burgundy, who succeeded to the throne. Ferdinand eventually agreed to retire from Castile. On the sudden death of Philip in 1506, Ximénez found himself the virtual ruler of Castile, until Ferdinand returned from Naples in Aug. 1507, bringing for the Archbishop a cardinal's hat. In 1509 he led a Spanish force to Oran in Morocco for purposes partly religious and partly territorial. On the death of Ferdinand (23 Jan. 1516), Ximénez became regent of Castile during the minority of the later *Charles V (q.v.). Intrigues at home and in Flanders, where Charles was then living, made his position extremely difficult, but his vigorous measures enabled him to maintain his authority. On his way to meet Charles, who had landed in Asturias and virtually dismissed him from his office, he died at Roa on 8 Nov. 1517, not without a suspicion of poison.

In addition to his services to the Church, Ximénez was a zealous patron of learning. In 1500 he founded on a lavish scale out of his private income the university of Alcalá (opened 1508), to which he brought distinguished scholars from Paris, Bologna, and Salamanca. At Toledo he revived the *Mozarabic Rite and endowed a chapel in the cathedral for its survival. His chief contribution to scholarship was the famous *Complutensian Polyglott (q.v.; Lat. 'Complutum', i.e. Alcalá).

P. Gayangos–V. de la Fuente (edd.), Cartas del Cardenal Don Fray Francisco Jimenez de Cisneros, dirigidas á Don Diego Lopez de Ayala (1867); V. de la Fuente (ed.), Cartas de los Secretarios del Cardenal D. Fr. Francisco Jimenez de Cisneros durante su Regencia en los años de 1516 y 1517 (1875). The other principal materials are to be found in Alvaro Gómez de Castro, De Rebus Gestis a F. Ximenio Cisnerio (fol., 'Compluti' [Alcalá], 1569). There is also an account written by a member of the Cardinal's household, J. de Vallejo, Memorial de la vida de Fray Francisco Jimenes de Cisneros, first ed. A. de la Torre y del Cerro (Madrid, 1913). Other early lives by E. de Robles (Toledo, 1604), M. Baudier (Paris, 1635; Eng. tr., 1671), P. de Quintanilla y Mendoza (Palermo, 1653), J. Marsollier (Toulouse, 1694), and [V.] E. Fléchier (Paris, 1693; also 2 vols., Amsterdam, 1693). Important modern studies by C. J. *Hefele (Tübingen, 1844; Eng. tr., 1860) and [Jerónimo López de Alvarez de Toledo y del Hierro,] Conde de Cedillo (3 vols., Madrid, 1921–8). Other studies by J. P. R. Lyell (London 1917, with good bibl.), R. Merton (ib., 1934) and J. García Mercadal (ed. 2, Madrid, 1941). W. Starkie, Grand Inquisitor. Being an Account of Cardinal Ximines de Cisneros and his Times (1940; popular). L. F. de Retana, C.SS.R., Cisneros y su siglo (2 vols., 1929–30). J. García Oro, O.F.M., Cisneros y la reforma del clero español en tiempo de los reyes católicos (1971).

XYSTUS. See Sixtus.

Y

YAH, abbreviation of *Yahweh (q.v.). This form of the word is confined to poetical passages in the OT.

YAHWEH. The Hebrew proper name of the Deity, traditionally rendered in English as '*Jehovah'. It probably represents the correct original pronunciation of the *Tetragrammaton (q.v.).

YEAR, Liturgical. In the W. the Christian year is based on the week and the two festivals of *Easter and *Christmas. Easter, by its Passover connexion, forms a link with the Jewish liturgical calendar, which is lunar; Christmas was fixed in the 4th cent. to coincide with the pagan observance of the winter solstice which, acc. to the Roman calendar, fell at that time on 25 Dec., and thus is a link with the Roman civil year which began on 1 Jan., and is solar.

The liturgical year begins with the period leading up to Christmas. The ASB reckons nine Sundays before Christmas, but in most calendars the year starts on *Advent Sunday. There are four Sundays in Advent and either one or two Sundays after Christmas bridge the gap to the *Epiphany (6 Jan.). Acc. to the calendar introduced in the RC Church in 1969, the 'Sundays of the Year' begin after Epiphany and are numbered consecutively, excluding the period from the beginning of *Lent to *Whitsunday. There are thus 33 or 34 'Sundays of the Year' (acc. to the date of Advent), six Sundays of Lent, and eight Sundays of Eastertide (the last being Whitsunday). The C of E retains the general pattern of the numeration of Sundays previously current in the whole W. Church: Sundays 'after Epiphany' are reckoned until *Septuagesima, *Sexagesima and *Quinquagesima (called in the ASB the 9th, 8th and 7th Sundays 'before Easter'); *Ash Wednesday introduces the forty days of Lent, with its six Sundays; and five Sundays 'after Easter' lead up to *Ascension Day with its following Sunday and Whitsunday. The RC Church used to number the Sundays 'after Pentecost' to Advent, and this usage is adopted in the ASB and some other modern liturgies; in the BCP, as in the *Sarum Use, they are reckoned 'after *Trinity', i.e. the Sunday after Pentecost.

The liturgical year of the Orthodox Church of the East, which is based on Easter, falls into three parts: *triodion (the ten weeks before Easter), *pentecostarion (the paschal season), *octoechos (the rest of the year).

N. Nilles, S.J., Kalendarium Manuale Utriusque Ecclesiae Orientalis et Occidentalis (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1896–7). K. A. H. Kellner, Heortologie oder das Kirchenjahr und die Heiligenfeste in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1901). J. Dowden, The Church Year and Kalendar (1910). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., Les Origines liturgiques (1906). A. A. McArthur, The Evolution of the Christian Year (1953). J. van Goudoever, Biblical Calendars (Leiden, 1959), esp. parts two and three. J. Pascher, Das liturgische Jahr (Munich, 1962). G. *Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy [1945], ch. xi, pp. 303–96; A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (ed. 3 by B. Botte, O.S.B., 1953), ch. ix, pp. 168–93 [Eng. tr., 1958, pp. 152–74]. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., iii (1908), pp. 158–66, s.v. 'Calendar'; T. A. Vismans, O.P.–A. Hollaardt, O.P., in L.W., ii (1962), cols. 1303–10, s.v. 'Kerkelijk jaar', with further bibl.

YEW SUNDAY. A medieval name for *Palm Sunday, so called because branches of yew were carried in the liturgical procession.

YIDDISH. A language used by Ashkenazi Jews which originated in the 10th century from a combination of German city dialects. Approximately 10 per cent. of its vocabulary is drawn from *Hebrew (and *Aramaic), 5 per cent. from Romance, Slavic, and international elements. Four periods of the language may be roughly designated: Earliest Yiddish, to 1250; Old Yiddish, 1250–1500, when the first contact with Slavs and Slavic-speaking Jews was made; Middle Yiddish, 1500–1700, a period of expansion; and Modern Yiddish, from 1700 onwards. It has a considerable literature, extending back to the Old period, and is still spoken and written. The Hebrew alphabet is used for writing Yiddish.

U. Weinreich in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xvi (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 789–98, s.v., with bibl.

Y.M.C.A. ('Young Men's Christian Association'). An association founded in London in 1844 by George Williams (1821–1905) out of his meetings for prayer and Bible-reading. It has always had an essentially lay and interdenominational character, and in recent years has become increasingly inter-confessional. Its object is to win young men and boys for Jesus Christ by uniting them in fellowship through activities designed to develop and train their powers of body, mind, and spirit, and to enable them to serve God and their fellows. Full members are committed to the Christian way of life, including the obligations of witness and service; Associate members are not bound by the same obligations, but share the facilities provided, although they do not control policy or management. Most Y.M.C.A.s do their work in club buildings in which provision is made for social amenities, for programmes of religious, educational, and physical activities, and in many large cities for hostels as well. But an increasingly important sphere of Y.M.C.A. work lies in its service to the wider community—men and women of H.M. Forces at home and overseas, apprentices and trainees, its farm training and sea training schemes, its residential college courses for industrial leadership, its national camps and holiday centres. The membership of the World's Alliance of Y.M.C.A.s numbers between three and four millions. Its extensive work for prisoners of war and displaced persons as well as for belligerents in two World Wars has been deservedly praised. See also Y.W.C.A.

L. L. Doggett, History of the Young Men's Christian Association (New York, 1922). C. P. Shedd and others, History of the World's Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations (S.P.C.K., 1955). R. C. Morse, History of the North American Young Men's Christian Association (New York, 1913); C. H. Hopkins, History of the Y.M.C.A. in North America (ib., 1951). C. Binfield, George Williams and the Y.M.C.A. (1973).

YOGA. A Sanskrit word meaning 'union', and by extension 'contemplation'. The name is applied in a technical sense to an Indian, not necessarily Hindu, system of religious philosophy aiming at the union of the soul with the Divine Spirit by means of concentration to the exclusion of all sense-perception. The earliest known description of the system occurs in the Upanishads (5th cent. B.C.); the technique was fully developed by Patanjali in the Yogasutras (either 2nd cent. B.C. or 5th cent. A.D.). The term is used more loosely to describe a system of health culture involving ascetic aspects and postures, usually in connexion with meditation, which has developed in modern times, esp. in the Western world.

R. Garbe in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 831–3, s.v.

YOM KIPPUR (יוֹם כִּפּוּר) The Hebrew name of the *Day of Atonement (q.v.).

YONGE, CHARLOTTE MARY (1823–1901), novelist. She was born at Otterbourne, near *Winchester, where she lived throughout her life. Imbued by her father with great devotion to the Church, she taught for 71 years in the village Sunday school. When in 1835 J. *Keble became vicar of Hursley (with which parish Otterbourne was then united) she soon fell under his influence, became an enthusiastic supporter of the *Oxford Movement, and determined to apply her remarkable talents as a storyteller to spreading the faith in fiction. Her first success was The Heir of Redclyffe (1853). Among those which followed were Heartsease (1854), The Daisy Chain (1856), The Trial (1864), The Pillars of the House (1873), and Magnum Bonum (1879). Miss Yonge also wrote Lives of Bp. J. C. *Patteson (2 vols., 1873) and of Hannah *More (1888), and from 1851 onwards she edited The Monthly Packet, a periodical which aimed esp. at commending Anglican ideals to young women. She issued in all some 160 books.

Collected ed. of her Novels and Tales (16 vols., London, 1879–80). C. Coleridge, Charlotte Mary Yonge. Her Life and Letters (1903), with text of her autobiography of her childhood and early youth, pp. 1–119, and list of her works, pp. 355–68. Ethel Romanes, Charlotte Mary Yonge. An Appreciation (1908). Georgina Battiscombe, Charlotte Mary Yonge. The Story of an Uneventful Life (1943). M. Mare–A. C. Percival, Victorian Best Seller. The World of Charlotte M. Yonge (1947). G. Battiscombe and others, A Chaplet for Charlotte Yonge (1965), incl. genealogical tables and bibl.

YORK. From the late 1st to the early 5th cent. A.D. York ('Eboracum') was ruled by the Romans, who made it their military headquarters in Britain; *Constantine the Great was first acclaimed there in 306. The first mention of a Bp. of York occurs in the acts of the Council of *Arles (314). The original Christian community was destroyed in the Saxon invasions, though Roman buildings still stood to determine the lay-out of the new town when Christianity was restored in the 7th cent. In 625 St. *Paulinus was consecrated Bp. of York; he baptized the Northumbrian King, *Edwin, in 627 and received the *pallium in 631, but in 633 there was another pagan invasion; Paulinus fled to *Rochester, and York came under the care of the Celtic bishops of *Lindisfarne. The see was finally restored in 664 with the consecration of *Wilfrid, who reintroduced Roman usages and favoured *Benedictine monasticism. Among the early Bps. was St. *John of Beverley. In 735, under *Egbert, the brother of the King, the see was raised to archiepiscopal dignity and its archbishops became the primates of the Northern Province, as *Gregory the Great had originally intended. Egbert also founded the famous School of York; its pupils included his successor Ethelbert and the famous scholar *Alcuin of York. From 867 to 954 York was ruled by kings of Scandinavian origin and monasticism disappeared north of the Humber. Later English kings regarded the Abps. of York (e.g. St. *Oswald, *Wulfstan) as useful agents in a dubiously loyal region, and appointed them from outside the North; from 972 to 1016 the impoverished Abps. also held the rich see of *Worcester and used its revenues in the North. They fostered the four great secular minsters (York itself, *Ripon, *Beverley and *Southwell) which served as local centres of Church life, but it was only after the Norman Conquest that monasticism in the North revived with new foundations, of which St. Mary's (Benedictine, 1089), just outside the wall of York, was the richest.

Under the first Norman Archbishop, Thomas of Bayeux (1070–1100), began the long drawn out struggle for precedence between *Canterbury and York. In 1071, in a discussion at Rome between *Lanfranc of Canterbury and Thomas of York, Pope *Alexander II decided in favour of the former, who was to consecrate the Archbishops of York and receive their oath of obedience. But in 1118 Thurstan, Abp. elect of York, refused to submit and appealed to *Callistus II, who in 1119 consecrated him and released him and his successors from the supremacy of Canterbury. The controversy continued for two centuries, its influence being shown in the opposition of Abp. Roger (1154–81) to Abp. T. *Becket, and was finally settled by Innocent VI (1352–62), who decided that the Abp. of Canterbury was to have precedence and the title of 'Primate of All England', and that the Abp. of York should be styled 'Primate of England'. Either archbishop was allowed to carry his cross in the other's province. Only after this decision did some Abps. of York accept translation to Canterbury, T. *Arundel (1396) being the first, and A. M. *Ramsey (1961) the ninth.

At the height of its prosperity medieval York (much larger than Roman York) contained well over 40 parish churches (12 were pre-Norman; a few were demolished before 1410), nine religious houses, the great hospital of St. Leonard, several lesser hospitals and 16 chapels. The city was one of the two largest provincial towns in England and long remained important as a regional capital. The Archbishop's role in regional affairs was most strikingly shown when Abp. Thurstan (1119–40) commanded the army which defeated the Scots at the Battle of the Standard (1138). Other medieval Abps. included connexions of the royal family (*William of York, 1143–7 and 1153–4; Geoffrey Plantagenet, 1191–1212), members of great northern families (Alexander Neville, 1374–88; Richard le *Scrope, who was executed for rebellion; George Neville, 1465–1476), and civil servants who were cardinals (J. *Kempe, C. *Bainbridge and T. *Wolsey).

There is evidence of *Lollard views in early 16th-cent. York, but the city was deeply conservative during the Reformation; it admitted R. *Aske, leader of the *Pilgrimage of Grace, without difficulty in 1536 and the cathedral clergy conducted him to the high altar, where Aske made his oblation. The Reformation brought not only the end of the York *Use, the dissolution of religious houses and of the city's hundred or more chantries, with consequent losses of buildings, furnishings and books, but also the demolition of 14 parish churches and (after 1580) the end of the famous medieval drama of York. The house of the abbot of St. Mary's (the 'King's Manor') became (1539) the seat of the royal Council of the North, of which the Archbishops were members and sometimes Presidents. Elizabethan York contained a few active *recusants, esp. women (see M. *Clitherow). Puritanism became strong in York in the 17th cent., but the city supported *Charles I until its surrender to Parliament after a short siege in 1644; Methodism took firm root in the 19th cent. Among post-Reformation Abps. were E. *Grindal, E. *Sandys, L. Blackburne, 1724–43 (whose enemies accused him of buccaneering), T. *Herring, C. G. *Lang, and W. *Temple.

No churches in York can be traced back to Roman times, though Roman materials were reused in several. The alignment of St. Michael-le-Belfrey, unlike that of the adjoining Minster, follows the Roman street-plan. Since it lies near the centre of the Roman fortress, it may conceivably cover the wooden church and later stone basilica of King Edwin, of which no traces have been found under the present Minster. The Saxon cathedral, wherever it lay, was destroyed by the Normans during the rebellion of 1069. Abp. Thomas began and Abp. Roger completed the great Norman church which preceded the present York Minster, rebuilt on the same site between c. 1227 and 1472. Like its predecessors it was dedicated to St. Peter. There were four restorations in the 19th cent. The foundations of the Central Tower and West Front, which rest on Roman rubbish, were strengthened between 1967 and 1972. York contains much distinguished medieval glass, esp. in All Saints', North Street, and in the Minster, the windows of which were restored after 1945 under the guidance of Dean E. Milner-White (d. 1963).

Little remains of the medieval Archbishops' palace, which stood north of the Minster, near the site of the Roman legionary commandant's house. Abp. Young (1561–8) began its destruction; it was replaced by the present palace at Bishopthorpe.

In the 11th cent. York put forward claims to supremacy over English dioceses to its south and over dioceses in *Scotland. For four centuries it had only two English suffragans (*Durham and *Carlisle) until the addition of *Sodor and Man and the transfer of *Chester from Canterbury in 1542; the creation of new sees (beginning with Ripon, 1836) has at last brought the number of suffragans up to and beyond the twelve envisaged over thirteen centuries earlier by Gregory the Great.

A university was founded at York in 1963. There is no faculty of theology, but the Borthwick Institute of Historical Research specializes in work on ecclesiastical archives.

Registers of Walter Gray [Abp. 1215–55], ed. J. Raine (Surtees Society, lvi; 1872); of Walter Giffard [Abp. 1266–79], ed. W. Brown (ib., cix; 1904); of William Wickwane [Abp. 1279–85], ed. id. (ib., cxiv; 1907); of John le Romeyn [Abp. 1286–96] and Henry Newark [Abp. 1296–99], ed. id. (ib., cxxiii and cxxviii; 1913–17); of Thomas Corbridge (Abp. 1300–4], ed. id. (ib., cxxxviii and cxli; 1925–8); and of William Greenfield [Abp. 1306–15], ed. id.–A. H. Thompson (ib., cxlv, cxlix, cli, clii, and cliii; 1931–40). J. Raine (ed.), The Fabric Roll of York Minster (ib., xxxv; 1859). 'York Statutes' in H. Bradshaw–C. *Wordsworth (edd.), Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral, ii (1897), pp. 90–135. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi, pt. 3 (ed. 1830), pp. 1172–1209. J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops (3 vols., R.S., 1879–94). W. H. Dixon–J. Raine, Fasti Eboracenses. Lives of the Archbishops of York, i (1863). J. W. Lamb, The Archbishopric of York. The early years (1967). Janet M. Cooper, The Last Four Anglo-Saxon Archbishops of York (Borthwick Papers, xxxviii; 1970); D[ecima] L. Douie, Archbishop Geoffrey Plantagenet and the Chapter of York [Abp. 1191–1212] (St. Anthony's Hall Publications, ib., xviii; 1960); D. M. Palliser, The Reformation in York 1534–1553 (Borthwick Papers, xl; 1971); A. G. Dickens, The Marian Reaction in the Diocese of York (St. Anthony's Hall Publications, xi and xii; 1957). F. Drake, Eboracum, or the History and Antiquities of the City of York (1736), esp. Book II, 'The History and Antiquities of the Church of York', pp. 399–627. A. Raine, Mediaeval York. A topographical survey based on original sources (1955). V.C.H. Yorks. The City of York, ed. P. M. Tillott (1961), esp. pp. 337–419; A. Stacpole, O.S.B., and others (edd.), The Noble City of York (York, 1972). J. Browne, The History of the Metropolitan Church of St. Peter, York (2 vols., 1847). R. Willis, 'The Architectural History of York Cathedral' in Memoirs Illustrative of the History and Antiquities of the County and City of York, Communicated to the Annual Meeting of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland held at York, July 1846 (1848), No. 9. W. R. Lethaby, 'Archbishop Roger's Cathedral at York and its stained glass' in The Archaeological Journal, lxxii (1915), pp. 37–48. A. H. Thompson, The Building of York Minster (York Minster Historical Tracts, No. 2; 1927). G. E. Aylmer–R. [C.] Cant (edd.), A History of York Minster (Oxford, 1977). H. Gee in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 662–6, s.v.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. See Y.M.C.A.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. See Y.W.C.A.

YOUNG, PATRICK (1584–1652), Biblical and Patristic scholar. He was educated at St. Andrews. After incorporation at Oxford in July 1605, he was ordained and became a chaplain at All Souls College. A year or two later he settled in London, where he was appointed Royal Librarian and prob. assisted *James I in preparing the Latin edition of his Works which appeared in 1619. From 1623 to 1647 he was rector of Hayes, Greater London. In 1633 he published from the *Codex Alexandrinus, which had reached the Royal Library from Cyril *Lucar in 1628, the editio princeps of St. *Clement of Rome's Ep. I ad Cor. and in 1637 a folio Catena Graecorum Patrum in Jobum on the basis of two Bodley MSS.; but these works, though important, embody only a fraction of his great erudition. On his title-pages he Latinized his name as 'Patricius Junius'.

Letters calendared and ed. J. Kemke (Sammlung Bibliothekswissenschaftlicher Arbeiten, ed. K. Dziatzko, xii; 1898), with life, pp. v–xxix. 'Catalogus Librorum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Wigorniensis' made in 1622–1623 by Patrick Young, ed. I. Atkins–N. R. Ker (Cambridge, 1944). Life in T. Smith, Vitae Quorundam Eruditissimorum et Illustrium Virorum (London, 1707; sep. pagination). A. H. Millar in D.N.B., lxiii (1900), p. 385 f.

YULE. The word, of Teutonic ancestry, which etymologically seems to imply 'noise' or 'clamour', was prob. originally applied to a Scandinavian feast of obscure origin, possibly connected with the turn of the year, and hence in Old English to the season of Dec. and Jan. In later usage it came to denote *Christmas and its attendant festivities. Except in the north of England the term is now archaic, but it is still found in compounds such as 'yule-log' connected with old-fashioned Christmas celebrations. Until the middle of the 19th cent. it was also used as an exclamation of joy and revelry at Christmastide.

YVO, St., of Chartres. See Ivo, St., of Chartres.

Y.W.C.A. ('Young Women's Christian Association'). This is a very similar movement to the *Y.M.C.A. (q.v.). It was founded in 1855 by two women simultaneously—Miss Robarts, who in the south of England began a Prayer Union, and Lady Kinnaird, who in London opened homes and institutes for young business women. The two organizations united in 1877.

Anna V. Rice, A History of the World's Young Women's Christian Association (New York, 1948). F. Kinnaird in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 838–41, s.v. 'Young Women's Christian Association'.

Z

ZABARELLA, FRANCESCO (1360–1417), Italian canonist. Having studied jurisprudence at *Bologna, he taught canon law at Florence from 1385 to 1390 and at Padua from 1390 to 1410, being at the same time employed in both the Paduan and the Venetian diplomatic services. Called to Rome by Boniface IX to tender advice in the matter of the Great Schism, he took part in the Council of *Pisa in 1409. Though not in major orders, in 1410 he received the Bpric. of Florence, which he resigned on being created cardinal by *John XXIII in 1411. After supporting John at the Council of Rome in 1412–13, he conducted the negotiations with the Emp. Sigismund for the Council of *Constance. His courageous conduct at the Council, which he continued to attend after John XXIII had fled (1415), contributed largely to the final healing of the schism. Though a supporter of John, he advised the Pope to abdicate, and until his death made continuous efforts to bring about the election of a new Pope. His collection of proposals for ending the schism entitled 'De schismate' (1402–8) was first printed in 1545. It was placed on the *Index, however, because it asserted the supremacy of the General Council over the Pope. His writings on canon law, the 'Lectura super *Clementinis' and the 'Commentaria in libros *Decretalium', long remained standard works.

G. Vedova, Memorie intorno alla vita ed alle opere del cardinale F. Zabarella (Padua, 1829). G. Zonta, Francesco Zabarella (Padua, 1915). W. Ullmann, The Origins of the Great Schism. A Study in Fourteenth-century Ecclesiastical History (1948), pp. 191–231; B. Tierney, Foundations of the Conciliar Theory. The Contribution of the Medieval Canonists from Gratian to the Great Schism (Cambridge, 1955), esp. pp. 220–37. See also works cited under Constance, Council of.

ZACCHAEUS. The chief 'publican' (tax-collector), who was the subject of an incident related in Lk. 19. 1–10. Having climbed a sycamore tree to see Christ pass through *Jericho, he was called by name to come down and give Him lodging in his house.

ZACHARIAH. The father of St. *John the Baptist. A Jewish priest, he received a vision in the *Temple promising him and his aged wife, *Elisabeth, a son, who would be 'filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb' (Lk. 1. 15). He celebrated the birth of the child and the coming redemption of Israel in the '*Benedictus'. Acc. to later tradition he was murdered in the Temple at the command of Herod. Feast day, 5 Nov.

ZACHARIAS, St. (d. 752), Pope from 741. He was a Greek of Calabria by birth. Revising the policy of his predecessor, Gregory III, he gave up the alliance with Duke Trasamund of Spoleto, and, through his personal influence, induced Liutprand, King of the Lombards, to return four cities and all her patrimonies to the Church. He also obtained a twenty years' truce, caused the King to abandon his attack on *Ravenna and persuaded him to restore what he had already taken of its possessions. His relations with the Frankish kingdom were very cordial, esp. through the influence of St. *Boniface, to whose missionary activities and reforms he gave full support. He confirmed the deposition of the last Merovingian, Childeric III, and had *Pepin and his consort solemnly anointed by Boniface. In the matter of images he vigorously denounced the *Iconoclastic policy of the Emp. Constantine Copronymus, to whom he addressed two important letters on the subject. Zacharias held synods at Rome in 743 and 745, the latter confirming the condemnation of the two heretics, Adalbert and Clement, by St. Boniface. He made a Greek translation of the 'Dialogues' of St. *Gregory the Great which was widely read in the E. Feast day in E., 5 Sept.; in W., formerly 15 Mar.

Two Letters ed. W. Gundlach in M.G.H., Epistolae, iii (1892), pp. 479–87, 709–11. Jaffé, i, pp. 262–70. L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 426–39. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, ii (1933), esp. 710–23 and 731–40; O. Bertolini, Roma di fronte a Bisanzio e ai Longobardi (1941), pp. 493–513; id., 'I Rapporti di Zaccaria con Costantino V e con Artavasdo nel racconto del biografo del papa e nella probabile realtà storica' in Archivio della Società romana di Storia patria, lxxviii (1955), pp. 1–21. Mann, i (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 225–88; Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 419–23, with reff.

ZACHARIAS SCHOLASTICUS (d. after 536), also 'Zacharias of Mitylene' and 'Zacharias Rhetor', *Monophysite divine. He was a native of Maiuma, nr. Gaza, and hence known, with *Procopius and *Aeneas of Gaza, as one of the 'Gaza Triad'. About 492 he became a lawyer at *Constantinople and is known to have been in later life Bp. of Mitylene. His most important work was a Church History, valuable for the years 450–91. It survives in *Syriac embedded in a later compilation. Zacharias was also the author of biographies of *Severus of Antioch, Peter the Iberian and others; of a dialogue, 'De Opificio Mundi', directed against the *Neoplatonists; and of a Disputation against the *Manichees.

His 'De Opificio Mundi', the only writing of Zacharias which survives complete in Gk., was ed., with Lat. tr. and notes, by C. Barth (Leipzig, 1655; with Aeneas of Gaza's 'De Immortalitate Animae', pp. 164–326); it was repr. from the ed. of A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv, 1011–44. Better edd. by J. F. Boissonade (Paris, 1836) and Maria M. Colonna (Naples, 1973). A Gk. fragment of his Disputation against the Manichees is pr., with Lat. tr., by J. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra et Classica Spicilegio Solesmensi parata, v (pt. 1; Rome, 1888), pp. 66–71. His 'Church History', incorporated in a later Syriac Chronicle in which alone it survives, ed. J. P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca, iii (Leyden, 1870), pp. 1–340; crit. ed., with Lat. tr., by E. W. Brooks (C.S.C.O., Syriaci Scriptores, Series III, v–vi; 1919–24); Eng. tr. by F. J. Hamilton–E. W. Brooks (London, 1899). Syriac trr. of lives of Severus of Antioch ed. J. Spanuth (Wissenschaftliche Beilage zum Programm des Königlichen Gymnasiums zu Kiel; Göttingen, 1893); also ed., with Fr. tr., by M. A. Kugner in P.O., ii (1907), pp. 5–115; of an Egyptian monk named Isaias, ed. J. P. N. Land, op. cit., pp. 346–56; also ed. E. W. Brooks, Vitae Virorum apud Monophysitas Celeberrimorum (C.S.C.O., Syriaci Scriptores, Series III, xxv; 1907), pp. 3–16, with Lat. tr., pp. 3–10; of a fragment of life of Peter the Iberian, ib., p. 18, with Lat. tr., p. 12. M. A. Kugener, 'La Compilation historique de Pseudo-Zacharie le Rhéteur' in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, v (1900), pp. 201–14 and 461–80; id., 'Observations sur la vie de l'ascète Isaïe et sur les vies de Pierre l'Ibérien et de Théodore d'Antinoë par Zacharie le Scolastique' in B.Z., ix (1900), pp. 464–70. T. Nissen, 'Eine christliche Polemik gegen Julians Rede auf den König Helios', ib., xl (1940), pp. 15–22. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (S.T., clxxiii; 1953), pp. 194–204 (No. XXI: 'Zacharias of Mitylene'). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 112–16. G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 593–8, s.v. 'Zacharias Scholasticus'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3676–3680, s.v. 'Zacharie le Rhéteur'.

ZADOKITE FRAGMENTS. See Dead Sea Scrolls.

ZAHN, THEODOR (1838–1933), NT and Patristic scholar. Born at Mörs, he was Privatdozent (1868) and Extraordinary Professor (1871) at Göttingen and Professor successively at Kiel (1877), Erlangen (1878), Leipzig (1888) and Erlangen (again, 1892). He retired in 1909. His standpoint was that of sober conservatism and all his work was characterized by vast erudition and great thoroughness. His long series of studies on the NT *Canon, embodied in his Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (2 vols., 1888–92) and the successive fascicles of Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (10 parts, 1881–1929), contained much pioneer work. He edited a Commentary on the NT, to which he himself contributed the volumes on Mt. (1903), Lk. (1913), Jn. (1908), Acts (2 vols., 1919–21), Rom. (1910), Gal. (1905) and Rev. (2 vols., 1924–1926); he also wrote an Introduction to the NT (2 vols., 1897–9; Eng. trans., 3 vols., 1909). His studies in the field of Patristics included Marcellus von Ancyra (1867), Der Hirt des Hermas untersucht (1868), Ignatius von Antiochien (1873) and the Acta Joannis (1880). With A. *Harnack and O. von Gebhardt he edited Patrum Apostolicorum Opera (ed. major, 1875–8; ed. minor, 1877). Among his many works addressed to a less specialized public were Geschichte des Sonntags vornehmlich in der alten Kirche (1879) and Skizzen aus dem Leben der alten Kirche (1894).

Festschriften for Theodor Zahn, Leipzig, 1908, with contributions by N. Bonwetsch and others; and ib., 1928, with contributions by P. Bachmann and others. Zahnbibliographie (ib., 1918). E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen, i (1925), last item (28 pp.). A. Meyer in R.G.G. (ed. 2), v (1931), col. 2070 f., s.v.

ZEALOTS. A Jewish party of revolt. Acc. to *Josephus (Bell. Jud., IV. iii. 9), they were followers of John of Gischala who, after resisting the Romans in Galilee, escaped to *Jerusalem, where they wrested the city from the more moderate party and inspired the fanatical resistance which led to its destruction by the Romans in A.D. 70. They have been commonly identified with (1) the followers of Judas of Gamala who led a revolt at the time of the census of Quirinius (A.D. 6) and who, acc. to Josephus, was the 'author of the fourth sect of Jewish philosophy' whose members 'agree in all things with the Pharisaic notions' but 'have an inviolable attachment to liberty, and say that God is their only ruler and lord' (Antiq., XVIII. i. 6) and (2) the Sicarii who, in the unsettled period before the outbreak of the Jewish war, tried to achieve their ends by assassinating their political opponents and whose refusal to surrender to the Romans at Masada is vividly described by Josephus (Bell. Jud., VII. viii. 2–ix. 1). There is, however, no good reason for either of these identifications. The epithet ζηλωτής ('zealot'), applied in Lk. 6. 15 to Simon, one of the Twelve, is an accurate translation of an Aramaic word, derived from a root meaning 'to be zealous', which in Mk. 3. 18 is transliterated καναναῖος ('Cananaean'); it may mean that Simon belonged to the Zealot party, which in that case must have been already in existence in the lifetime of Jesus. But it may equally well be a description of his character, 'the zealous'.

The chief refs. in Josephus are Antiq., XVIII. i. 6, and Bell. Jud., IV. iii. 9, IV. iv. 7 and VII. viii. 1. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, i (ed. 4, 1910), pp. 617–34; but cf. F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake in idd. (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, i (1920), pp. 421–5 (Appendix A: 'The Zealots'). W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots and Josephus. An Inquiry into Jewish Nationalism in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1956). M. Hengel, Die Zeloten. Untersuchungen zur jüdischen Freiheitsbewegung in der Zeit von Herodes I. bis 70 n.Chr. (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Spätjudentums und Urchristentums, i; Leiden–Cologne, 1961). M. Smith, 'Zealots and Sicarii, their Origins and Relation' in H.T.R., lxiv (1971), pp. 1–19; M. Borg, 'The Currency of the Term "Zealot"' in J.T.S., N.S., xxii (1971), pp. 504–12. See also commentaries on Mt. 10. 4. K. Kohler in J.E., xii (1906), pp. 639–43, s.v.; A. Stumpff in T.W.B., ii (1935), pp. 886–9, s.v. ζηλόω, 'C. Der Zelotismus'.

ZECHARIAH, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets. The Book falls into two distinct sections, chs. 1–8 and 9–14.

The former, written by Zechariah himself, dates from the spring of 519 B.C. (1. 7) and the winter of 518/17 B.C. (7. 1). The Jews had returned from exile c. 537, but the *Temple was not yet restored. After a short introductory prophecy (1. 1–6) there follow accounts of eight visions: (1) 1. 7–17, four horsemen who report that the whole earth is quiet; nevertheless the prophet declares that God will soon end the desolation of Jerusalem; (2) 1. 18–21, four horns broken by four smiths, signifying the destruction of heathen powers; (3) 2. 1–13, a man with a measuring line who shows that the future glory of Jerusalem will not be confined by a city wall; (4) 3. 1–10, the cleansing of Joshua the High Priest from his 'filthy garments' (i.e. the removal of the nation's guilt) and his investiture with new dignity; (5) 4. 1–14, a seven-branched candlestick, supplied with oil from two olive trees. These are explained as two 'sons of oil', i.e. anointed persons who are prob. the High Priest and the Davidic prince (see art. Messiah). The latter seems to be identified with the person of Zerubbabel, the contemporary head of the royal line of Judah, who is exhorted to complete the restoration of the Temple; (6) 5. 1–4, a flying roll symbolizing the curse which will light on evil-doers; (7) 5. 5–11, a woman, named 'Wickedness', carried away in an ephah (a large dry measure) from the holy land to a far country; and (8) 6. 1–8, four chariots representing four winds (or spirits) carrying God's judgement to the corners of the earth. Joshua the High Priest (perhaps the original text referred also, or only, to Zerubbabel here) is to be crowned as Messiah (6. 9–15). In chs. 7–8 Zechariah declares that the observance of fasts should give place to true righteousness and prophesies the future glory of Judah when the *Diaspora should be gathered in and the Gentiles seeking God should voluntarily join themselves to the Jews.

Chs. 9–11 and 12–14 both begin (like the following Book of *Malachi) with the descriptive title massah, i.e. prophetic utterance (AV and RV, 'burden'). They are prob. both anonymous prophecies, not only different in style from chs. 1–8, but also reflecting the circumstances of an age later than Zechariah. They contain examples of a developed eschatology (e.g. ch. 14) and allude to events which are best explained by reference to the history of the *Maccabees (e.g. 9.13, which refers to strife between Jews and Greeks).

Commentaries by H. G. Mitchell (I.C.C. on Hag., Zech., Mal., and Jon., 1912, pp. 81–362), W. E. Barnes (Camb. Bib., RV, 1917), and M. Bic (Berlin, 1962), and on chs. 1–8 by A. Petitjean (Paris–Louvain, 1969). K. Marti, 'Die Zweifel an der prophetischen Sendung Sacharjas' in Studien zur semitischen Philologie und Religionsgeschichte Julius Wellhausen zum siebzigsten Geburtstag . . . gewidmet (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxvii; 1914), pp. 279–97; J. Kremer, Die Hirtenallegorie im Buche Zacharias auf ihre Messianität hin untersucht (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, xi, Hft. 2; 1930); L. G. Rignell, Die Nachtgeschichte des Sacharja. Eine exegetische Studie (Lund, 1950). B. Stade, 'Deuterozacharja. Eine kritische Studie' in Z.A.T.W., i (1881), pp. 1–96; ii (1882), pp. 151–72 and 275–309; W. Staerk, Untersuchungen über die Komposition und Abfassungszeit von Zach. 9 bis 14 (Inaugural Diss., Halle, 1891); B. Heller, 'Die letzten Kapitel des Buches Sacharja im Lichte des späteren Judentums' in Z.A.T.W., xlv (1927), pp. 151–5. P. Lamarche, S.J., Zacharie ix–xiv. Structure littéraire et messianisme (Études Bibliques, 1961); B. Otzen, Studien über Deuterosacharja, tr. into Germ. by H. Leisterer (Acta Theologica Danica, vi; Copenhagen, 1964). Eissfeldt, pp. 429–40.

ZENO, St. (d. c. 375), Bp. of *Verona from 362. Beyond the fact that Zeno was an African by birth, very little is known of him. His sermons ('Tractatus') have affinities with the writings of such Africans as *Tertullian and *Cyprian, but, as they did not come into circulation until the earlier Middle Ages, they were unknown to St. *Jerome and *Gennadius. The 8th cent. Life by the Veronese presbyter Coronatus is devoid of historical value. He is commonly represented in art with a fish. Feast day, 12 Apr.

Editio princeps of his sermons by A. Castellanus, O.P.–J. de Lenco (Venice, 1508); more accurate ed. by P. and H. *Ballerini (Verona, 1739), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xi, 253–528; crit. ed. by B. Löfstedt (C.C., Series Latina, xxii; 1971). A. Bigelmair, Zeno von Verona. Habilitationsschrift (1904). A. Grazioli, 'S. Zenone di Verona' in Scuola cattolica, lxvii (1940), pp. 174–99; B. Pesci, O.F.M., 'De Christianarum Antiquitatum Institutionibus in Sancti Zenonis Veronensis Episcopi Sermonibus' in Antonianum, xxiii (1948), pp. 33–42. M. F. Stepanich, O.F.M., The Christology of Zeno of Verona (Catholic University of America, Studies in Sacred Theology, Series 2, ix; 1948). G. Bardy in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3685–90, s.v. 'Zénon', with bibl.

ZENO (c. 450?–91), Emperor of the E. from 474. His life was a tissue of treachery and violence, and his reign a succession of disastrous wars against his relations and ministers, and against the Ostrogoths (see Theodoric). He took an active, but ill-advised, part in attempting to remedy some of the evil consequences of the *Monophysite heresy; but his *Henoticon (482) did nothing to bring about the reunion for which it was devised, and occasioned a new schism between Constantinople and Rome.

Accounts from his reign in E. Stein–J. R. Palanque, Histoire du Bas Empire, i (1959), pp. 360–64, ii (1949), pp. 7–76, and in A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire, i (Oxford, 1964), pp. 224–30. E. W. Brooks, 'The Emperor Zenon and the Isaurians' in E.H.R., viii (1893), pp. 209–38. R. J. Neumann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 663–5, s.v.

ZEPHANIAH, Book of. This prophecy claims to have been delivered by Zephaniah, a descendant of (King?) Hezekiah, in the reign of Josiah, King of Judah (d. 608 B.C.). The prophet announces the approaching judgement of all nations including Judah in the coming Day of the Lord, but he holds out the hope of future conversion among the heathen and of a faithful remnant among the Jews (1. 2–3. 8). He concludes by encouraging Jerusalem to rejoice in the loving providence of God (3. 9–20). The prophecy, as originally delivered, probably belongs to the years immediately before the reformation of Josiah in 621 B.C., and gives some valuable information on religion and society in Jerusalem and Judah at that time. From the religious point of view, the Book is evidence of Zephaniah's deep moral sense, of his awareness of the sin of his people, and of his implicit faith in the justice of God in the expected day of judgement. The opening words of the well-known Christian hymn '*Dies irae, dies illa' are taken from the *Vulgate version of 1. 15–16.

Commentaries by A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, on Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1896, pp. 95–139), J. M. P. Smith (I.C.C. on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912, pp. 159–263), G. G. V. Stonehouse (West. Comm. on Zeph., Nah., and Hab., 1929, pp. 1–72), J. H. Eaton (on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., London, 1961, pp. 119–59), and L. Sabottka (Biblica et Orientalia, xxv; Rome, 1972). F. Schwally, 'Das Buch Ssefanjâ, eine historisch-kritische Untersuchung' in Z.A.T.W., x (1890), pp. 165–240; C. H. *Cornill, 'Die Prophetie Zephanjas' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 1916, pp. 297–332. [J.] G. [H.] Gerleman, Zephanja textkritisch und literarisch untersucht (Lund thesis, 1942). D. L. Williams, 'The Date of Zephaniah' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxii (1963), pp. 77–88. Eissfeldt, pp. 423–5. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets.

ZEPHYRINUS, St. (d. 217), Pope. He succeeded St. *Victor as Bp. of Rome in 198, but despite his long pontificate relatively little is known of him. His critic, St. *Hippolytus, described him as a simple man without education (ἀνὴρ ἰδιώτης καὶ ἀγράμματος). In his office he was closely associated with his deacon, *Callistus, who succeeded him as Pope. Hippolytus charged him with laxity in enforcing discipline and failure to assert his authority sufficiently in repressing the heresies (esp. *Sabellianism) then prevalent in the Roman Church. Zephyrinus excommunicated, however, the two *Theodoti who defended the cause of 'Dynamic *Monarchianism'. He is traditionally commemorated (on insufficient grounds) as a martyr. Feast day, 26 Aug.

Jaffé, i, p. 12. L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i (1886), p. 139 f. A. v. *Harnack, 'Die älteste uns im Wortlaut bekannte dogmatische Erklärung eines römischen Bischofs (Zephyrin bei Hippolyt, Refut. IX. 11)' in Sb. (Berl.), 1923, pp. 51–7; B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Cas du pape Zéphyrin' in R. Bén., xxxviii (1926), pp. 321–30; K. G. Preysing, 'Echtheit und Bedeutung der dogmatischen Erklärung Zephyrins (Hippolyt, Philos. IX. 11, 3)' in Z.K.T., lii (1928), pp. 225–30. J. Wilpert, 'Beiträge zur christlichen Archäologie', xii, 'Das Mausoleum des hl. Zephyrin' in R.Q., xxii (1908), pp. 183–195; O. *Marucchi, 'La questione del sepolcro del papa Zefirino e del martire Tarsicio in seguito ad una ultima scoperta' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, xvi (1910), pp. 205–25; P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, iv (S.T., xxiv; 1912), sect. iv, 'Del sepolcro di S. Zefirino', pp. 69–76. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, i (1930), pp. 22–4 and 38–40. Fliche–Martin, ii (1935), esp. p. 103. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 109. É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), col. 3690 f., s.v.; E. Josi in E.C., xii (1954), col. 1785 f., s.v. 'Zefirino'.

ZIGABENUS, EUTHYMIUS. See Euthymius Zigabenus.

ZILLERTHAL EVANGELICALS. A body of Protestants, resident in the Zillerthal, one of the principal valleys of the Tyrol, who seceded from the RC Church in 1829 and the following years. Religious and social boycott from the RC clergy and laity culminated in a decree from the provincial estates of the Tyrol, ordering all nonconformists to leave the country. On appeal to Frederick William III of Prussia in 1837, they were allowed to sell their possessions and settle at Erdmannsdorf in Prussian territory, where they were assisted by a grant from the Prussian government.

F. C. Arnold in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 675–8, with bibl.

ZINZENDORF, NIKOLAUS LUDWIG GRAF VON (1700–60), founder of the *Herrnhuter 'Brüdergemeine'. A native of Dresden, he was educated at A. H. *Francke's Adelspädagogium and at *Wittenberg university (1716–19). He then travelled in Holland and France, where Card. L. A. *de Noailles became his friend, and in 1721 he entered the service of the Saxon Government. His chief interest, however, was evangelization. He organized religious assemblies in his home, and from 1722 received on one of his estates Protestant emigrants from Austria, many of whom were descendants of the *Bohemian Brethren. Giving up his Government post in 1727, he henceforward devoted himself entirely to the spiritual care of this colony, called Herrnhut. Before long he was attacked as an innovator by *Lutheran orthodoxy, but his beliefs were examined and approved in 1734, though he was subsequently exiled from Saxony in 1736. During the following years he travelled in Europe and America, accompanied by a band of disciples called the Pilgrims' Community. In 1737 he received *Moravian episcopal consecration from the Berlin court preacher, D. E. Jablonski, and later founded communities in the Baltic Provinces, Holland, England, the W. Indies, and N. America. He was permitted in 1747 to return to Saxony, where, during the next two years, the Herrnhuter passed through a period of emotional upheaval. From 1749 to 1755 he propagated his ideas in England, the Moravian Episcopal Church ('Unitas fratrum') having been recognized by Act of Parliament in 1749. His last years were spent in pastoral work at Herrnhut.

Opposed alike to the unbelieving rationalism and the barren Protestant orthodoxy of his time, Zinzendorf proclaimed a 'religion of the heart', based on an intimate fellowship with the Saviour, whose Person, conceived as creator, sustainer, and redeemer of the world, completely dominated his theology. The striving for a felt experience of this fellowship was not always free from excessive emotionalism, which showed itself in many of his poems and in the almost playful Herrnhut cult of the Five Wounds. Originally meaning to realize his religious ideals within the framework of the different Protestant Churches, he was forced by cirumstances to give his work a separate organization, though he continued it in close connexion with Lutheranism. His emphasis on the place of feeling in religion infused new life into Protestant orthodoxy and, esp. through F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, profoundly influenced 19th cent. German theology.

Hauptschriften photographically reproduced from contemporary editions, ed. E. Beyreuther–G. Meyer (6 vols., Hildesheim, 1962–3, with Ergänzungsbande zu den Hauptschriften, ib., 1964 ff.). Zinzendorf published his autobiography under the title Περὶ ἑαυτοῦ. Das ist naturelle Reflexiones über allerhand Materien [c. 1748]. Life by A. G. Spangenberg (8 Thle., [Barby,] 1772–5; abridged Eng. tr., 1838; Germ. photographically repr. in the series of Materialien und Documente on Zinzendorf, ed. E. Beyreuther–G. Meyer, Reihe 2, vols. i–viii; Hildesheim–New York, 1971). L. K. von Schrautenbach, Der Graf von Zinzendorf und die Brüdergemeine seiner Zeit (written in 1782; ed. F. W. Kölbing, Gnadau, 1851). Modern lives by [E. V.] F. Bovet (2 vols., Paris, 1860; Eng. tr., 1865) and J. R. Weinlick (Nashville, Tenn., 1956). H. Plitt, Zinzendorfs Theologie (3 vols., 1869–1871). B. Becker, Zinzendorf im Verhältniss zu Philosophie und Kirchentum seiner Zeit (1886). O. Uttendörfer, Zinzendorfs Weltbetrachtung (1929); id., Zinzendorfs religiöse Grundgedanken (Herrnhut, 1935); and other writings by id. W. Bettermann, Theologie und Sprache bei Zinzendorf (1935). L. Aalen, Den Unge Zinzendorfs Teologi (Oslo, 1952), with bibl. E. Beyreuther, Zinzendorf und die sich allhier beisammen finden (Marburg an der Lahn, 1959); id., Zinzendorf und die Christenheit 1732–1760 (ib., 1961); id., Studien zur Theologie Zinzendorfs (Neukirchen–Vluyn Kries Moers, 1962). A. J. Lewis, Zinzendorf the Ecumenical Pioneer. A Study in the Moravian Contribution to Christian Mission and Unity (1962). H. Ruh, Die christologische Begründung des ersten Artikels bei Zinzendorf (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, vii [1967]). B. Becker–J. T. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 679–703, s.v.; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3695–3704, s.v.; E. Beyreuther in R.G.G. (ed. 3), vi (1962), cols. 1913–16, s.v., with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Moravian Brethren; also histories of Pietism, cited s.v.

ZION. The citadel of *Jerusalem, taken by *David from the Jebusites (2 Sam. 5. 6–7). It was probably situated on the eastern ridge of the city, south of the site of the *Temple. The name came to signify God's holy hill at Jerusalem (Ps. 2. 6), Jerusalem itself (Is. 1. 27), and allegorically the heavenly city (Heb. 12. 22, Rev. 14. 1).

ZITA, St. (c. 1215–72), the patroness of domestic servants. At the age of 12 she entered the service of the Fatinelli family at Lucca, where she remained till her death. Misunderstood and maltreated at first, she later won, by her religious fervour, the respect, and even veneration, of the family. She was canonized in 1696. Feast day, 27 Apr.

The principal authority is the life by Fatinellus de Fatinellis (anon.) printed in AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 499–509; see also Propylaeum ad Dec. (1940), p. 158 f., with further reff. Modern lives by A. Guerra (Lucca, 1875) and J. G. Ledóchowski (Vienna, 1911). On the ref. to St. Zita in *Dante's Inferno, see F. P. Luiso, L'Anziano di Santa Zita (Lucca, 1927); cf. B. de Gaiffier in Anal. Boll., xlviii (1930), p. 229 f.

ZONARAS, JOHANNES (12th cent.), Byzantine canonist and historian. After holding high positions at *Constantinople in the Imperial administration, he retired from the court during the reign of John II Comnenus (1118–43) and spent the rest of his life in monastic retirement on the small island of Niandro. The chief of his writings, a universal History (Ἐπιτομὴ τῶν Ἱστοριῶν) in 18 books, preserves much material that would otherwise be lost. It extends to 1118, and includes events of which Zonaras was himself an eyewitness. He also wrote a Commentary on Greek *canon law, starting with the *Apostolic Canons, notable for the aptness and directness of his comments. It is possible that portions of the canonical writings traditionally attributed to *Balsamon are also to be ascribed to Zonaras. His other works include a commentary on the poems of St. *Gregory of Nazianzus and a hymn to the Blessed Virgin (Κανὼν εἰς τὴν ὑπεραγίαν Θεοτόκον).

His Epitome of History, ed. M. Pinder–R. Büttner-Wobst (3 vols., C.S.H. Byz., 1841–97); also by L. Dindorf (6 vols., Teubn., 1868–76). Collected ed. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxxiv and cxxxv, 9–438. G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, i (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, x; ed. 2, 1958), pp. 344–6; H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 656 f., both with bibl. P. Meyer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 715–19; É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3705–8, both s.v.

ZOROASTRIANISM. The system of religious doctrine ascribed to Zoroaster (Zarathustra) which in later times became the dominant religion of Iran and under the Sassanian dynasty (A.D. 211–640) the official State teaching.

Of Zoroaster himself next to nothing is known with certainty. The Gathas (as contrasted with the later and mainly legendary Avesta*, q.v.) probably incorporate historical material on his life. From these it would seem that his sphere of activity was what is now North Eastern Iran, Western Afghanistan and the Turkmen Republic of the U.S.S.R. His dates have long been widely disputed, but there is now a measure of agreement that he probably lived c. 628–551 B.C., his age being traditionally 77 years.

Zoroaster's teaching was apparently not a creation of his own, but at most a reform of earlier doctrines. He taught that the world was made by one 'Wise Lord' (Ahura Mazda or Ormuzd) with the help of his Holy Spirit (Spenta Mainyu) and six other divine spirits or attributes of God. These spirits work against the Evil Spirit (Angra Mainyu or Ahriman), who is also helped by six other spirits and tempts man to wrong. After the life on earth of a virgin-born Saviour (Saoshyant) God will finally triumph over evil, and all souls eventually pass over the 'bridge of decision' (from which some must first fall into purifying flames) and enjoy eternal bliss. Zoroaster stressed the importance of discovering and setting forth the truth, and showed the value of mercy; yet he allowed his king Vistashpa to use force in propagating his ideas. His religious ideas proved too exalted for the next generation in Persia, which reverted to polytheism, but they are sometimes held to have influenced *Judaism and, less probably, Christianity and *Islam. In a modified form they have been partly preserved by the Parsees.

There is a very considerable literature, much of it publd. in Bombay. General studies include those of A. V. W. Jackson, Zoroaster the Prophet of Ancient Iran (New York–London, 1899), and id., Zoroastrian Studies (New York, 1928); J. H. Moulton, Early Zoroastrianism (Hibbert Lectures for 1912; 1913), and id., The Treasure of the Magi. A Study of Modern Zoroastrianism (1917); M. N. Dhalla, Zoroastrian Theology from the Earliest Times to the Present Day (New York, 1914); id., Zoroastrian Civilization from the Earliest Times to the Downfall of the last Zoroastrian Empire, 651 (ib., 1922), and other works; J. Hertel, Die Zeit Zoroasters (Indo-Iranische Quellen, i; 1924), and other more specialized works of this author; M. M. Dawson, The Ethical Religion of Zoroaster (New York, 1931); E. Herzfeld, Zoroaster and his World (2 vols., Princeton, N.J., 1947); J. Duchesne-Guillemin, The Western Response to Zoroaster (Oxford, 1958); id., La Religion de l'Iran ancien (1962); id., Symbols and Values in Zoroastrianism. Their survival and renewal (New York [1966]); R. C. Zaehner, The Dawn and Twilight of Zoroastrianism (1961); W. Hinz, Zarathustra (Stuttgart, 1961). A. J. Carnoy in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 862–8, s.v., with bibl.

ZOSIMUS (d. 418), Bp. of Rome from 417. He was a Greek by birth. His brief pontificate was marked by blunders, which are in sharp contrast with the high claims he made for his office. Thus his unconsidered attempt to establish a vicariate of Arles, in disregard of already existing metropolitical rights in Gaul, had to be abandoned by his successor. His policy also twice suffered defeat in Africa. Led by St. *Augustine, the African Church compelled him to retract in his *Tractoria his favourable judgement of *Pelagianism; and he was again out-manœuvred when, citing as *Nicene and therefore of oecumenical authority a canon which properly belonged to the Council of *Sardica (343), he tried to quash the sentence passed on the African priest *Apiarius by the Bp. of Sicca. Several of his letters survive. Feast day, 26 Dec.

Epp. ed. P. *Coustant, O.S.B., Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, i (1721), cols. 933–1006; repr. J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 639–704; see also Suppl. (ed. A. Hamman, O.F.M.), i (1958), col. 797 f. L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i, p. 225 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, i (1930), pp. 344–60. F. Floëri, 'Le Pape Zosime et la doctrine augustinienne du péché originel' in Augustinus Magister. Congrès International Augustinien, Paris, 21–24 Septembre 1954. Communications, ii [1954], pp. 755–61. G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iv (1937), pp. 248–51. Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), p. 359 f. (Nos. 1644–7). É. Amann in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3708–16, s.v.

ZOSIMUS (later 5th cent.), Greek historian. He held an administrative post at *Constantinople. His history of the Roman Empire, in six Books, going down to 410 and probably written after 425, is one of the primary sources for the secular history of the 4th cent. Though based throughout on earlier histories, it has a special interest because, without intentional distortion of facts, Zosimus consistently developed a pagan and anti-Christian view of his subject-matter, attributing, e.g., the decline of the Empire as much to the neglect of the old religion as to any political cause. His account of ecclesiastical affairs also serves as an occasional corrective to the better-known accounts in Christian writers.

Ed. princeps of Gk. text by F. Sylburg (Frankfurt, 1590). Crit. edd. by L. Mendelssohn (Leipzig, 1887), with prolegomena; and, with Fr. tr. and introd., by F. Paschoud (Collection des Universités de France, 1971 ff.). Eng. tr. by J. J. Buchanan–H. T. Davis (San Antonio, Texas, 1967). F. Paschoud, Cinq Études sur Zosime (1975). W. von Christ, Geschichte der griechischen Literatur (ed. W. Schmid–O. Stählin), II. ii (ed. 6, 1924), p. 1037 f.

ZUCCHETTO. The small round skull-cap used by certain RC ecclesiastics. It has been customarily worn since the 13th cent., and varies in colour with the different grades of the hierarchy, the *Pope wearing white, *cardinals red, *bishops violet, and others black. It is worn at *Mass, except during the *canon.

ZÜRICH CONSENSUS. See Consensus Tigurinus.

ZWICKAU PROPHETS. A group of early *Anabaptists which sought to realize the rule of the elect in a community at Zwickau, an industrial town in Saxony. The chief were N. *Storch, T. Drechsel, and M. Thomä. They claimed immediate Divine inspiration, maintained apocalyptic ideas, and rejected infant baptism and other traditional doctrines and practices. They removed to *Wittenberg, where they established themselves at Christmastide 1521. Here they gained the interest of P. *Melanchthon, and their followers rapidly grew in influence; but they were promptly put down by M. *Luther on his return to Wittenberg in March 1522.

Brief reports on the Zwickau Prophets drawn up for the Kurfürst Friedrich by P. Melanchthon and N. von Amsdorf, ed. C. G. *Bretschneider, Corpus Reformatorum, i (Halle, 1834), cols. 533–55. N. Müller, 'Die Wittenberger Bewegung, 1521 und 1522' in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, vi (1908/9), pp. 161–226, 261–325, 385–469, vii (1909/10), pp. 185–224, 233–93, 353–412, viii (1910/11), pp. 1–43; also separately issued, Leipzig, 1911. H. S. Bender, 'Die Zwickauer Propheten, Thomas Müntzer und die Täufer' in Theologische Zeitschrift, viii (1952), pp.262–78. Id. in The Mennonite Encyclopedia, iv (Scottdale, Pa., 1959), p. 1050 f., s.v.

ZWINGLI, ULRICH (or HULDREICH) (1484–1531), Swiss Reformer. A native of Wildhaus in the Toggenburg valley, canton St. *Gall, Switzerland, he was educated at Berne (1496–8), Vienna (1498–1502), and Basle (under T. *Wyttenbach, 1502–6). He was ordained priest in 1506, and from 1506 to 1516 was pastor at Glarus. Already a devoted admirer of D. *Erasmus, he gave himself up at Glarus largely to humanistic studies, taught himself Greek and prob. the rudiments of Hebrew, learned St. Paul's Epp. by heart, and read the Fathers. In 1513 and 1515 he served as military chaplain to Swiss mercenaries in the Papal service and was present at the Battle of Marignano (13–14 Sept. 1515). In 1516 he left Glarus for *Einsiedeln, where the pilgrimage abuses at the famous shrine quickened his desire for reform; he also deepened his knowledge of the Greek NT with the aid of D. Erasmus's newly published editio princeps (1516) and improved his technique as a preacher. On 11 Dec. 1518 he was elected People's Preacher at the Old Minster in Zürich, where he remained for the rest of his life. Here, in an important office, he sought to carry through his political and religious ideals and met with strong local support. The rupture with ecclesiastical authority came gradually. The real beginning of the Reformation in Switzerland was Zwingli's lectures on the NT in 1519. Attacks in his sermons on Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, and Monasticism soon followed. He seems to have owed little directly to M. *Luther, of whose influence he always betrayed some jealousy. In April 1522 appeared his first Reformation tract, Von Erkiesen und Fryheit der Spysen, and later in the same year (22 Aug.) Architeles, advocating the liberation of believers from the control of the Papacy and bishops. The Bp. of Constance's Vicar General (Johann *Faber), sent to Zürich to deal with the situation, was silenced in a public disputation on 29 Jan. 1523, when Zwingli successfully upheld 67 theses before an audience of some 600. The sole basis of truth was the Gospel, and the authority of the Pope, the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Invocation of Saints, times and seasons of fasting, and clerical celibacy were rejected. The city council gave Zwingli their full support and the Minster Chapter was reconstituted in independence of episcopal control. Matters were carried further at a second disputation on 26 Oct. 1523, which led to Zwingli's Eine kurze christliche Inleitung, expounding for the clergy the relations between the Gospel and the Law. Shortly afterwards steps were taken to abolish the Mass (eventually suppressed at Zürich in Apr. 1525) and remove images and pictures from churches. On 2 Apr. 1524 Zwingli publicly celebrated his marriage with Anna Meyer (née Reinhard) in the cathedral.

It was at this stage that Zwingli began to develop his characteristic Eucharistic teaching ('Zwinglianism'). In 1522 he still accepted the traditional view of the Eucharist, but in a letter to Matthäus Alber of Reutlingen (16 Nov. 1524) he upheld a purely symbolic interpretation, which he developed further in Commentarius de Vera et Falsa Religione (1525). The ensuing conflict with Luther led to the fruitless Colloquy of *Marburg (Sept.–Oct. 1529). Every form of the carnal presence of Christ in the Eucharist, whether by *transubstantiation, *consubstantiation, or *impanation, was rejected as 'Capernaitic' (Jn. 6. 51–3, 59). To Zwingli's great disappointment, the division went so deep that any union of the Protestant forces was impossible. In these years he was also engaged in active disputes with the *Anabaptists and acquiesced when the Council of Zürich put one of their leaders to death by drowning in 1527.

Meanwhile the movement had spread to other parts of Switzerland. In a public theological disputation at Berne in Jan. 1528 Zwingli successfully upheld ten theses (see Berne Theses*), and the canton joined the movement. Basle, St. Gall, and Schaffhausen followed shortly afterwards. The movement met, however, with fierce resistance elsewhere, notably in the Five Forest Cantons (Lucerne, Zug, Schwyz, Uri, Unterwalden). War was only just avoided in 1529 and finally broke out in 1531, when the Forest Cantons made a sudden and unexpected descent on Zürich. They were met by a small force at Cappel, where Zwingli, who as chaplain carried the banner, was killed (11 Oct. 1531).

Collected edd. of his works by R. Walther, 4 vols., Zürich, 1539; 4 vols., ib., 1545, and 3 vols., ib., 1581; ed. M. Schuler–J. Schulthess (8 vols., ib., 1829–42); ed. E. Egli–G. Finsler and others (Corpus Reformatorum, lxxxviii ff.; 1904 ff.). Zwingli Hauptschriften also ed. F. Blanke and others (Zürich, 1940 ff.). Selections of his writings tr. into Eng. by S. M. Jackson (Philadelphia, Pa., 1901); also by G. W. Bromiley, Zwingli and Bullinger (Library of Christian Classics, xxiv; 1953), pp. 47–279, with introd., pp. 13–40. Life by O. *Myconius, written in 1532, publd. Basle, 1536. Modern lives by R. Christoffel (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, i; 1857; Eng. tr., 1858), J. C. Mörikofer (2 vols., Leipzig, 1867–9), R. Staehelin (2 vols., Basle, 1895–7), S. M. Jackson (New York–London, 1901), O. Farner (4 vols., Zürich, 1943–60), and G. R. Potter (London, 1976). Shorter studies by O. Farner (Emmishofen, 1917; Eng. tr., 1952), and J. Rilliet (Paris, 1959; revised Eng. tr., 1964). A. Baur, Zwinglis Theologie. Ihr Werden und ihr System (2 vols., 1885–9). W. Köhler, Zwingli und Luther. Ihr Streit über das Abendmahl nach seinen politischen und religiösen Beziehungen (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, vi and vii; 1924–1953), and other works of this author. J. V. Pollet, O.P., Huldrych Zwingli et la Réforme en Suisse d'après les recherches récentes (1963). R. C. Walton, Zwingli's Theocracy (Toronto [1967]). F. Büssner, Das katholische Zwinglibild von der Reformation bis zum Gegenwart (Zürich–Stuttgart [1968]). H. Sasse, This is My Body. Luther's Contention for the Real Presence in the Sacrament of the Altar (Minneapolis, 1959), esp. pp. 116–33. G. W. Locher, Die Zwinglische Reformation im Rahmen der europäischen Kirchengeschichte (Göttingen, 1979). Zwingliana. Mitteilungen zur Geschichte Zwinglis und der Reformation, herausgegeben von der Vereinigung für das Zwinglimuseum in Zürich (Zürich, 1897 [1904] ff.). G. Finsler, Zwingli-Bibliographie (Zürich, 1897); U. Gäbler, Hulrych Zwingli im 20. Jahrhundert. Forschungsbericht und annotierte Bibliographie 1897–1972 (Zürich, 1975). E. Güder–R. Stähelin–E. Egli in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 774–815, s.v.; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3716–44, s.v.; J. V. M. Pollet, O.P., ib., cols. 3745–3928, s.v. 'Zwinglianisme'.

Chronological List of Popes and Antipopes

Antipopes are indicated by indenting the names to the right in [ ]

until c. 64	St. *Peter
	*Linus
	*Anacletus
fl. c. 96	*Clement I
	Evaristus
	Alexander I
*c.*117–*c.*127	Sixtus I
*c.*127–*c.*137	*Telesphorus
*c.*137–*c.*140	Hyginus
*c.*140–*c.*154	*Pius I
*c.*154–*c.*166	Anicetus
*c.*166–*c.*175	Soter
175–89	Eleutherius
189–98	*Victor I
198–217	*Zephyrinus
217–22	*Callistus I
[217–*c.*235	*Hippolytus]
222–30	Urban I
230–5	Pontian
235–6	Anterus
236–50	*Fabian
251–3	*Cornelius
[251	*Novatian]
253–4	Lucius I
254–7	*Stephen I
257–8	*Sixtus II
259–68	*Dionysius
269–74	Felix I
275–83	Eutychianus
283–96	Caius
296–304	Marcellinus
308–9	Marcellus I
310	Eusebius
311–314	*Miltiades
314–35	*Sylvester I
336	Mark
337–52	*Julius I
352–66	*Liberius
[355–65	Felix II]
366–84	*Damasus I
[366–7	Ursinus]
384–99	*Siricius
399–401	Anastasius I
402–17	*Innocent I
417–18	*Zosimus
418–22	*Boniface I
[418–19	Eulalius]
422–32	*Celestine I
432–40	Sixtus III
440–61	*Leo I
461–8	Hilarus
468–83	*Simplicius
483–92	Felix III (II)
492–6	*Gelasius I
496–8	Anastasius II
498–514	*Symmachus
[498, 501–5	Laurentius]
514–23	*Hormisdas
523–6	John I
526–30	Felix IV (III)
530–2	Boniface II
[530	Dioscorus]
533–5	John II
535–6	*Agapetus I
536–7	Silverius
537–55	*Vigilius
556–61	Pelagius I
561–74	John III
575–9	Benedict I
579–90	Pelagius II
590–604	*Gregory I
604–6	Sabinianus
607	Boniface III
608–15	Boniface IV
615–18	Deusdedit or Adeodatus I
619–25	Boniface V
625–38	*Honorius I
640	Severinus
640–2	John IV
642–9	Theodore I

649–55 *Martin I[1]
654–7 Eugenius I
657–72 *Vitalian
672–6 Adeodatus II
676–8 Donus
678–81 *Agatho
682–3 Leo II
684–5 Benedict II
685–6 John V
686–7 Cono
[687 Theodore]
[687 Paschal]
687–701 *Sergius I
701–5 John VI
705–7 John VII
708 Sisinnius
708–15 Constantine
715–31 *Gregory II
731–41 Gregory III
741–52 *Zacharias
752 Stephen II
752–7 *Stephen II (III)
757–67 Paul I
[767–9 Constantine]
[768 Philip]
768–72 *Stephen III (IV)
772–95 *Hadrian I
795–816 *Leo III
816–17 Stephen V
817–24 Paschal I
824–7 Eugenius II
827 Valentine
827–44 Gregory IV
[844 John]
844–7 Sergius II
847–55 *Leo IV
855–8 Benedict III
[855 *Anastasius Bibliothecarius]
858–67 *Nicholas I
867–72 Hadrian II
872–82 John VIII
882–4 Marinus I
884–5 Hadrian III
885–91 Stephen VI
891–6 *Formosus
896 Boniface VI
896–7 Stephen VII
897 Romanus
897 Theodore II
898–900 John IX
900–3 Benedict IV
903 Leo V
[903–4 Christopher]
904–11 Sergius III
911–13 Anastasius III
913–14 Lando
914–28 John X
928 Leo VI
928–31 Stephen VIII
931–5 John XI
936–9 Leo VII
939–42 Stephen IX
942–6 Marinus II
946–55 Agapetus II
955–64 *John XII
963–5 Leo VIII
964–6 Benedict V
965–72 John XIII
973–4 Benedict VI
[974 & 984–5 Boniface VII]
974–83 Benedict VII
983–4 John XIV
985–96 John XV
996–9 Gregory V
[997–8 John XVI]
999–1003 *Sylvester II
1003 John XVII
1004–9 John XVIII
1009–12 Sergius IV
1012–24 Benedict VIII
[1012 Gregory]
1024–32 John XIX
1032–44 Benedict IX
1045 Sylvester III

[1] After Martin's banishment his successor was elected and consecrated.

1045 Benedict IX
[for the second time]
1045–6 Gregory VI
1046–7 Clement II
1047–8 Benedict IX
[for the third time]
1048 Damasus II
1048–54 *Leo IX
1055–7 Victor II
1057–8 Stephen X
[1058–9 Benedict X]
1059–61 Nicholas II
1061–73 *Alexander II
[1061–72 Honorius II]
1073–85 *Gregory VII
[1080, 1084–1100 Clement III]
1086–7 Victor III
1088–99 *Urban II
1099–1118 *Paschal II
[1100–2 Theodoric]
[1102 Albert]
[1105–11 Sylvester IV]
1118–19 Gelasius II
[1118–21 Gregory VIII]
1119–24 *Callistus II
1124–30 Honorius II
[1124 Celestine II]
1130–43 Innocent II
[1130–8 Anacletus II]
[1138 Victor IV]
1143–4 Celestine II
1144–5 Lucius II
1145–53 *Eugenius III
1153–4 Anastasius IV
1154–9 *Hadrian IV
1159–81 *Alexander III
[1159–64 Victor IV[1]]
[1164–8 Paschal III]
[1168–78 Callistus III]
[1179–80 Innocent III]
1181–5 Lucius III
1185–7 Urban III
1187 Gregory VIII
1187–91 Clement III
1191–8 *Celestine III
1198–1216 *Innocent III
1216–27 *Honorius III
1227–41 *Gregory IX
1241 Celestine IV
1243–54 *Innocent IV
1254–61 Alexander IV
1261–4 Urban IV
1265–8 Clement IV
1271–6 *Gregory X
1276 Innocent V
1276 Hadrian V
1276–7 John XXI[2]
1277–80 Nicholas III
1281–5 *Martin IV
1285–7 Honorius IV
1288–92 Nicholas IV
1294 *Celestine V
1294–1303 *Boniface VIII
1303–4 Benedict XI
1305–14 *Clement V
1316–34 *John XXII
[1328–30 Nicholas V]
1334–42 *Benedict XII
1342–52 *Clement VI
1352–62 Innocent VI
1362–70 *Urban V
1370–8 *Gregory XI
1378–89 *Urban VI
[1378–94 Clement VII]
1389–1404 Boniface IX
[1394–1423 *Benedict XIII]
1404–6 Innocent VII
1406–15 Gregory XII
[1409–10 *Alexander V]
[1410–15 *John XXIII]
1417–31 *Martin V
[1423–9 Clement VIII]
[1425–30 Benedict XIV]
1431–47 *Eugenius IV
[1439–49 Felix V]
1447–55 *Nicholas V

[1] No account was taken of the previous antipope, who had resisted for a very short time.
[2] No Pope bearing the name of John XX ever existed.

1455–8	*Callistus III
1458–64	*Pius II
1464–71	Paul II
1471–84	*Sixtus IV
1484–92	Innocent VIII
1492–1503	*Alexander VI
1503	Pius III
1503–13	*Julius II
1513–21	*Leo X
1522–3	*Hadrian VI
1523–34	*Clement VII
1534–49	*Paul III
1550–5	*Julius III
1555	Marcellus II
1555–9	*Paul IV
1559–65	*Pius IV
1566–72	*Pius V
1572–85	*Gregory XIII
1585–90	*Sixtus V
1590	Urban VII
1590–1	Gregory XIV
1591	Innocent IX
1592–1605	*Clement VIII
1605	Leo XI
1605–21	*Paul V
1621–3	Gregory XV
1623–44	*Urban VIII
1644–55	*Innocent X
1655–67	*Alexander VII
1667–9	Clement IX
1670–6	Clement X
1676–89	*Innocent XI
1689–91	*Alexander VIII
1691–1700	Innocent XII
1700–21	*Clement XI
1721–4	Innocent XIII
1724–30	*Benedict XIII
1730–40	Clement XII
1740–58	*Benedict XIV
1758–69	*Clement XIII
1769–74	*Clement XIV
1775–99	*Pius VI
1800–23	*Pius VII
1823–9	Leo XII
1829–30	Pius VIII
1831–46	*Gregory XVI
1846–78	*Pius IX
1878–1903	*Leo XIII
1903–14	*Pius X
1914–22	*Benedict XV
1922–39	*Pius XI
1939–58	*Pius XII
1958–63	*John XXIII
1963–78	*Paul VI
1978	*John Paul I
1978–	*John Paul II

ADDENDA

HUME, GEORGE BASIL (1923–), Abp. of *Westminster. The son of Sir William Hume (1879–1960), a distinguished Scottish *Presbyterian physician, Hume was brought up as a Catholic by his mother, a devout RC of French extraction. He was educated at *Ampleforth College and joined the *Benedictine Community there in 1941, being professed in 1942. He read Modern History at St. Benet's Hall, Oxford, and went on to post-graduate study at Fribourg University in Switzerland, gaining a Licentiate in Theology. After his ordination as priest in 1950, he taught Modern Languages in the school at Ampleforth and then was a housemaster from 1955 until he was elected Abbot in 1963. In 1976 Pope *Paul VI nominated him Abp. of Westminster and made him a cardinal later in the same year. He quickly became a national leader, widely respected both within and beyond his own communion. In 1979 he became Chairman of the European Bishops' Conference. His book, Searching for God (1977), which is based on the regular addresses which as Abbot he gave to the monks at Ampleforth, is packed with spiritual insights of universal application.

JOHN PAUL I (1912–78), Pope from 26 Aug. to 28 Sept. 1978. Albino Luciani was born at Forno di Canali, near Belluno, SW of *Venice. He was the son of a poor labourer. Ordained priest in 1936, he served as curate at Belluno and taught in the seminary there. After the Second World War he studied at the *Gregoriana, writing his doctoral thesis on A. *Rosmini-Serbati. In 1958 he was consecrated Bp. of Vittorio Veneto by *John XXIII and he took part in the Second *Vatican Council. In 1969 *Paul VI nominated him Patriarch of Venice and in 1973 created him a cardinal. At Venice he acted as host to five ecumenical conferences, including the meeting of the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission which produced an Agreed Statement on *Authority. His election as Pope was surprising in its swiftness (the *Conclave had lasted only one day), but it was quickly welcomed on account of his warmth and simplicity. He did away with the traditional papal coronation, being installed simply by receiving the *pallium. His choice of name reflected his devotion to his two immediate predecessors and his intention to carry on their work. His death after only 33 days was a profound disappointment to the millions of people who had been drawn to him by the warmth of his personality.

The official documents of his pontificate are pr. in A.A.S., lxx (1978), pp. 677–776 and 797–903.

JOHN PAUL II (1920–), Pope from 1978. Karol Wojtyla, the son of a Polish soldier, was born in the industrial town of Wadowice, not far from Cracow. His family was poor. In 1938 he entered the Jagiellonian University at Cracow. During the German occupation of *Poland he worked in a quarry and then in a chemical factory. Recognizing a vocation to the priesthood in 1942, he began studying theology; he completed his studies at the seminary in Cracow after the end of the Second World War and was ordained in 1946. He then went to the Angelicum (the *Dominican university) in Rome, where he obtained a doctorate for a thesis on St. *John of the Cross. On his return to Cracow he served as a parish priest and university chaplain. He also lectured on ethics and moral theology. In 1958 *Pius XII nominated him titular Bp. of Omri and auxiliary to the Administrator Apostolic of Cracow; in 1964 *Paul VI appointed him Abp. of Cracow and in 1967 made him a cardinal. When the Second *Vatican Council was announced, he became a member of the Preparatory Commission and he attended all four Sessions of the Council. He also served on various post-Conciliar Commissions and from 1971 he was a permanent member of the Council of the Roman Synod of Bishops. He became known in the W. through his lectures in America and elsewhere, and in 1976 he attended the *Eucharistic Congress at Philadelphia. In Poland, with Cardinal Stefan Wyszinski, the Primate, he was a leading figure in the Church's struggle against the Communist Government.

When he was elected Pope on the death of *John Paul I in 1978, he was the first non-Italian to hold that office since *Hadrian VI (Pope 1522–3). He began his pontificate with a simple ceremony of inauguration similar to that used by his predecessor and immediately made clear his support for the changes brought about by the Second Vatican Council and his abhorrence of any kind of triumphalism. Early in 1979 he went to *Mexico to open the Latin American Bishops' Conference at Puebla. On that occasion he set the pattern for his later foreign visits, kissing the ground of the country, celebrating Mass in the open air in front of vast crowds, and showing himself freely to the people, from whom he received enormous applause. Later in 1979 he visited Poland (where dramatic scenes of welcome were tolerated by the Government), *Ireland, the *United States of America, and then Turkey, where, for the first time in modern history, the Pope and the *Oecumenical Patriarch attended each other's Liturgy, though not sharing in the Communion. In 1980 he went to Africa (Zaire, Congo, Ghana, Ivory Coast, Kenya, and Upper Volta), *France, *Brazil, and Germany, and early in 1981 to the Philippines and *Japan. An attempt to assassinate him in Rome on 13 May 1981 was followed by a long convalescence. In 1982, however, he resumed his travels and was the first Pope ever to visit Britain.

In Mexico at the beginning of his pontificate John Paul II appeared cautious in his approach to 'Liberation Theology' and insisted that politics was the business of the laity. While he continued to condemn the use of violence, his commitment to the pursuit of human rights and human dignity was made clear in his first encyclical, 'Redemptor hominis' (1979), which called for a reordering of social and economic structures; it has been reiterated in 'Dives in misericordia' (1980) and 'Laborem exercens' (1981; issued to mark the ninetieth anniversary of '*Rerum novarum'). He has, nevertheless, consistently declined to allow any concessions in the Church's attitude to birth-control and abortion, and during his pontificate action has been taken against RC theologians whose teaching has been held unorthodox. In the spiritual life of the Church he has stressed the importance of traditional discipline, the Eucharist, and the place of the BVM.