LLOYD, CHARLES (1784–1829), Bp. of Oxford from 1827. After a brilliant career at Christ Church, Oxford, where he was in turn lecturer, tutor, and censor, he was appointed Regius professor of divinity in 1822, an office which he retained until his death. In his theological position he in several ways anticipated the *Oxford Movement and J. H. *Newman, E. B. *Pusey, and R. H. Froude all came under his influence. He is said to have emphasized, as Tract 90 did later, the importance of distinguishing between the decrees of the Council of *Trent and many popular aspects of the modern RC system, and insisted in a way then quite unusual upon the primitive and medieval elements in the BCP. He was the tutor, friend and counsellor of the statesman Sir Robert Peel.

R. Garnett in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 411–14.

LLULL, RAMÓN. See Lull, Raymond.

L.M.S. The 'London Missionary Society' was founded in 1795 by a body of *Congregationalists, *Anglicans, *Presbyterians, and *Wesleyans who combined to promote Christian missions to the heathen. The first 29 missionaries under its auspices sailed to Tahiti in 1796. It was one of its principles that no form of denominationalism should be preached by its members, but that decisions about the form of church government be left to those whom they should convert. In recent times the Society, which carried on extensive work in *China, *India, S.E. Asia, S. and E. Africa and the *South Sea Islands, has been maintained almost exclusively by Congregationalists. Since 1966 its work has been the responsibility of the *Congregational Council for World Mission.

R. Lovett, The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795–1895 (2 vols., 1899); N. Goodall, A History of the London Missionary Society, 1895–1945 (1954). A. J. Hanna, 'The Role of the London Missionary Society in the Opening Up of East Central Africa' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, v (1955), pp. 41–59.

LOCK, WALTER (1846–1933), Warden of Keble College, Oxford. Educated at Marlborough and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he became a Fellow of Magdalen in 1869 and one of the original tutors of Keble in 1870. In 1873 he was ordained priest. From 1895 to 1919 he held the Dean Ireland chair of Exegesis and from 1919 to 1927 the Lady Margaret chair of Divinity. From 1897 to 1920 he was also Warden of Keble. One of the liberal post-Tractarian theologians, he contributed the essay on 'The Church' to Lux Mundi (1889). His writings, all in a lucid and graceful style, include a biography of John *Keble (1893), a commentary on the *Pastoral Epistles (1924), and an attractive collection of Oxford Memories (1932).

D. C. Simpson in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 240 f.

LOCKE, JOHN (1632–1704), English philosopher. A native of Wrington, Avon, he was educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he was deeply influenced by the works of R. *Descartes, whose emphasis on reason made a lasting impression on him. In 1666 he became acquainted with Lord Ashley, later first Earl of Shaftesbury, who made him his secretary, and with whom he moved to London. In 1675 he went to France, returning to England in 1679, but after the fall of Shaftesbury escaped to Holland in 1683, where he remained till 1689. After the accession of William and Mary he once more returned to London. After the *Exclusion Controversy, he had been expelled from his Studentship at Christ Church (1684); from 1691 till his death he lived in the manor house of Oates, in Essex.

Locke was the foremost defender of free inquiry and toleration in the later 17th cent. His system is a combination of Christian rationalism and empiricism. In the Letters concerning Toleration (1689, 1690, and 1692) he pleaded for religious liberty for all except atheists and RCs, who were excluded because he held them to be a danger to the state. His ideal was a national Church with an all-embracing creed that made ample allowance for individual opinion, on the ground that human understanding was too limited for one man to impose his beliefs on another. In 1690 he published his Two Treatises of Government, expounding the principles of the Whig Revolution of 1688. They were hardly profound, but their historical importance was great through their influence in the following century. The substance of his philosophical thought is contained in the famous Essay concerning Human Understanding (1690). In it he attacks the Platonist conception of 'innate ideas'. The human mind is a tabula rasa and all our ideas come from experience, i.e. from sensation or reflexion, knowledge through reason being, acc. to him, a 'natural revelation'. Pure reality cannot be grasped by the human mind; consequently there is no sure basis for metaphysics, and substance is 'an uncertain supposition of we know not what'. The spirituality of the soul, though not certain, is at least probable; the existence of God, on the other hand, can be discovered with certainty by reason, and His law gives men their rule of conduct.

Locke's religious ideas were further developed in The Reasonableness of Christianity as Delivered in the Scriptures (1695). Here he maintains that the only secure basis of Christianity is its reasonableness, though he accepts the miracles recorded in Scripture as proofs of its Divine origin. Reason, however, has the last word in the acceptance of the supernatural and the interpretation of Scripture. The essence of Christianity is the acknowledgement of Christ as the Messiah, who was sent into the world chiefly to spread the true knowledge of God and of our duties. All other doctrines are secondary and incapable of conclusive proof. The book roused much controversy, among its critics being John Edwards (1637–1716), J. *Sergeant and Thomas Burnet (1635–1715). In his last years Locke devoted himself to the study of Scripture; the outcome was two posthumous works, A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul (1705–7) and A Discourse on Miracles (1706).

Many collected edd. of his Works. They include 3 vols., fol., London, 1714; and ed. E. Law, Bp. of Carlisle, 4 vols., London, 1777. The best ed. of the Essay, with introd. and notes, is that of A. C. *Fraser (2 vols., Oxford, 1894); also conveniently ed. by J. W. Yolton (2 vols., 1961). An Early Draft of Locke's Essay [MS. dating from 1671]. Together with excerpts from his Journal, ed. R. I. Aaron–J. Gibb (Oxford, 1936). A somewhat later draft, also from 1671, publd. by B. Rand (Cambridge, Mass., 1931). Three sets of early writings publd. for the first time by W. von Leyden, Essays on the Law of Nature. The Latin text with a translation, introduction and notes, together with transcripts of Locke's shorthand in his Journal for 1676 (Oxford, 1954). Two Tracts on Government, ed., with Eng. tr., by P. Abrams (Cambridge, 1967). Crit. edd. of his Two Treatises of Government by P. Laslett (ib., 1960; ed. 2, 1967) and of the original Latin text of his Epistola de Tolerantia (which was originally publd. anonymously in 1689) by R. Klibansky, with Eng. tr. by J. W. Gough (Oxford, 1968). The Reasonableness of Christianity, with A Discourse of Miracles and part of A Third Letter concerning Toleration, abridged, with introd., by I. T. Ramsey (1958). The standard life of Locke is that of H. R. Fox Bourne (2 vols., London, 1876). The best modern life, with material from the Lovelace Collection, is that of M. Cranston (London, 1957). Other general studies by A. C. Fraser ('Blackwood's Philosophical Classics', 1890), R. I. Aaron ('Leaders of Philosophy', Oxford, 1937; ed. 3, 1971), and D. J. O'Connor (Harmondsworth, 1952). H. MacLachlan, The Religious Opinions of Milton, Locke and Newton (Publications of the University of Manchester, cclxxvi, Theological Series, vi; 1941), pp. 67–114. J. W. Gough, John Locke's Political Philosophy (Oxford, 1950). J. W. Yolton (ed.), John Locke: Problems and Perspectives (Cambridge, 1969); id., John Locke and the Compass of Human Understanding. A Selective Commentary on the 'Essay' (ib., 1970). J. Dunn, The Political Thought of John Locke. An Historical Account of the Argument of the 'Two Treatises of Government' (ib., 1969). J. Harrison–P. Laslett, The Library of John Locke (Oxford Bibliographical Society Publications, N.S., xiii; 1965; ed. 2, 1971). H. O. Christophersen, A Bibliographical Introduction to the Study of John Locke (Skrifter utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi. Hist.-filos. Kl., 1930, No. 8). Überweg, iii, pp. 351–69, 685–7. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), pp. 27–36; E. S. de Beer–R. I. Aaron in E.B. (ed. 1968), xiv, pp. 188–93, s.v.

LOCULUS. (1) The commonest type of tomb in the *catacombs, in the form of a horizontal rectangular niche. The loculi are cut, one above another, in the sides of the corridors. Each is closed at the front by a tile or marble slab which bears the epitaph. (2) A name sometimes given to the hole ('sepulchre') containing the relics in a fixed altar.

On (1) H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1934–43, s.v., with reff. E. Diehl, Inscriptiones Latinae Christianae Veteres (3 vols., Berlin, 1925–31), esp. vol. ii, pp. 222–32 and 279–86.

LOGIA (Gk. λόγια, 'sayings'). In NT criticism the term is applied to a supposed collection of the sayings of Christ which circulated in the early Church. The use of the word in this connexion derives from the statement of *Papias that 'Matthew compiled the logia (τὰ λόγια) in the Hebrew language, and each person interpreted them as he was able'. As many scholars have held that the reference here is to the lost document '*Q' (q.v.) which was drawn upon by Mt. and Lk., the term has often been used as a synonym for 'Q'. The word is also used of the '*Sayings of Jesus' (q.v.) discovered at *Oxyrhynchus in 1897 and 1904.

LOGOS (Gk. Λόγος, 'Word' or 'Reason'), used esp. in Christian theology with reference to the Second Person of the Trinity. The term was known both in pagan and in Jewish antiquity. Heraclitus (c. 500 B.C.) conceived of the Logos in a pantheistic way as the universal reason governing and permeating the world, and the Stoics took over the idea and popularized it. In the OT God's word was not only the medium of his communication with men: what God said had creative power (Gen. 1, vv. 3, 6, 9, etc., Ps. 33. 6), and by the time of the Prophets the Word of the Lord was regarded as having an almost independent existence (1 Sam. 15. 10; Is. 55. 11; Jer. 23. 29). In the *Targums the Word was used as a means of speaking of God without using his name (see Memra). In Hellenistic Judaism the concept of the Logos as an independent *hypostasis was further developed, and the Logos also came to be associated with the figure of Wisdom (Wisd. Sol. 9. 1–2; 18. 15). *Philo to some extent combined the Greek and the Biblical concepts: for him the Logos is the divine pattern from which the material world is copied, the divine power in the cosmos, the divine purpose or agent in creation and an intermediary between God and man.

In the NT the term in its technical sense is confined to the Johannine writings (Jn. 1. 1 and 14; 1 Jn. 1. 1; and Rev. 19. 13). In the Prologue of the Gospel the Logos is described as God from eternity, the Creative Word, who became incarnate in the man, Jesus Christ of Nazareth. Though it is clear that the author was influenced by the same background of ideas as Philo, his identification of the Logos with the Messiah was entirely new.

In Patristic times teaching about the Logos found in the Johannine writings was taken up by St. *Ignatius and developed by the Apologists of the 2nd cent., who saw in it a welcome means of making the Christian teaching compatible with Hellenistic philosophy. *Justin Martyr, e.g., held that the Logos was generated by an act of will of the Father with a view to creation, and *Theophilus, following the Stoics, distinguished the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, i.e. the Logos immanent in God before creation, from the λόγος προφορικός, i.e. the Logos externalized as the instrument of creation. *Clement of Alexandria made the Logos doctrine a chief part of his teaching, whilst *Irenaeus pointed out the dangers of going into too detailed speculations. St. *Athanasius is among the first to give a comprehensive and completely satisfactory presentation of the Christian Logos conception by linking it up with the whole doctrine of Redemption. St. *Augustine connected it with the image of the Trinity in the human soul. The whole complex of earlier teaching was eventually systematized in the teaching of the Schoolmen, esp. in the Summa of St. *Thomas Aquinas.

A. Aall, Der Logos. Geschichte seiner Entwickelung in der griechischen Philosophie und der christlichen Literatur (2 vols., 1896–9). J. Réville, La Doctrine du Logos dans le quatrième évangile et dans les œuvres de Philon (1881). J. Lebreton, Histoire du dogme de la Trinité des origines au concile de Nicée, i (1910), pp. 41–73; Eng. tr., i (1939), pp. 40–60. G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), esp. ch. 6. W. Nestle, Vom Mythos zum Logos. Die Selbstentfaltung des griechischen Denkens von Homer bis auf die Sophistik und Sokrates (Stuttgart, 1940; ed. 2, 1942). C. Andresen, Logos und Nomos. Die Polemik des Kelsos wider das Christentum (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxx; 1955). W. Kelber, Die Logoslehre von Heraklit bis Origenes (Stuttgart, 1958). T. F. Glasson, 'Heraclitus' alleged Logos Doctrine' in J.T.S., N.S., iii (1952), pp. 231–8, with reff. W. R. *Inge in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 133–8, s.v.; H. Leisegang in P.W., xiii (1926), cols. 1035–81, s.v.; H. Kleinknecht and others in T.W.B., iv (1942), cols. 76–140, s.v. λέγω &c.; A. Michel in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950, cols. 2639–72), s.v. 'Verbe'; R. J. Tournay, O.P., and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 425–97, s.v.

LOISY, ALFRED FIRMIN (1857–1940), French *Modernist Biblical scholar. A native of Ambrières (Marne), he came of farming stock. Educated at the diocesan seminary at Châlons-sur-Marne and at the *Institut Catholique in Paris, he was ordained priest in 1879. After a short time as a country curé, he returned to Paris at the instigation of L. *Duchesne, who inspired him with zeal for historico-critical study. It was to the critical study of the Bible that Loisy devoted himself, and in this sphere he came to feel the need for a radical renewal of conventional ecclesiastical teaching. Although by 1886 his own faith in traditional Catholicism had been severely strained he remained in the RC Church in the hope of modernizing her teaching. In 1890, when he was appointed Professor of Sacred Scripture at the Institut Catholique, he was already publishing the results of his critical studies, which were arousing both enthusiasm and suspicion. In 1893 he was dismissed from his professorship and urged to confine himself to oriental languages. From this time he received encouragement from his friends E. I. Mignot (1842–1918), Abp. of Albi, and F. *von Hügel. From 1894 to 1896 he was chaplain to the *Dominican nuns and their school at Neuilly; here he had ample time to work out a new apologetic for Catholicism. From 1900 he taught at the École Pratique des Hautes Études.

In 1902 Loisy published L'Évangile et l'Église; it took the form of a reply to A. *Harnack's Wesen des Christentums (1900), but it was in effect a sensationally novel defence of Catholicism. As against Harnack, who sought to base Christianity on the teaching of the historic Jesus apart from later dogmatic accretions, Loisy maintained that its essence was to be sought in the faith of the developed Church as expanded under the guidance of the Spirit. The fact that Christ did not found a Church or institute Sacraments did not detract from their central place in the Christian life. The book was welcomed in some quarters, but also violently attacked. It was condemned by the Abp. of Paris and by a few other French bishops, but the Papacy refrained from intervening. When, however, in the following year Loisy published not only Autour d'un petit livre, which dealt with the controversy that had arisen, but also Le Quatrième Évangile, Pope *Pius X, who had just succeeded *Leo XIII, placed both these books and other works of his on the *Index. In 1904 Loisy reluctantly made a formal act of submission, resigned his lectureship at the École Pratique des Hautes Études, and retired to the country. In 1906 he abandoned his priestly functions. A final breach with the Church came after the papal acts of 1907 which condemned modernism. In 1908 Loisy published Simples Réflexions sur le décret du Saint-Office Lamentabili sane Exitu et sur l'encyclique Pascendi Dominici gregis, as well as the second volume of his great work Les Évangiles synoptiques (2 vols., 1907–8). Two months later he was excommunicated.

From 1909 to 1930 Loisy was professor of the history of religions at the Collège de France. He was a prolific writer and during this period he published major works on Christian origins and on the comparative history of religions, such as Les Actes des Apôtres (1920) and Essai historique sur le sacrifice (1920), and smaller books in which he foreshadowed his own religious and moral philosophy, notably La Religion (1917; ed. 2, 1924). In his autobiographical writings, Choses passées (1913) and Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire religieuse de notre temps (3 vols., 1930–1), he sought to justify his part in the modernist movement and to interpret its history. After his break with the Church, his work as a Biblical critic, despite the brilliance of style and learning which characterized it, was generally regarded as erratic and recklessly conjectural. His final views on the NT are summed up in La Naissance du christianisme (1933), in which he treated the Gospels not as historical documents but as catechetical and cultural literature with but slight historical basis. The works of his last years, however, attacked the proponents of the Christ-myth theories and appear more in line with his earlier Christian faith. Since 1968 many volumes of his private papers have been accessible in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris. They emphasize that he was a mystic, with a pastoral sense, as well as a savant, and reveal the complexity of his character as well as the range of his interests and friendships.

R. Marlé, S.J., Au cœur de la crise moderniste. Le dossier inédit d'une controverse. Lettres de Maurice Blondel, H. Bremond, Fr. von Hügel, Alfred Loisy, Fernand Mourret, J. Wehrlé (1960). Contemporary accounts by [H. *Bremond], Un Clerc qui n'a pas trahi, published under the pseudonym Sylvain Leblanc (1931); M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., M. Loisy et le modernisme (1932); and A. Houtin (d. 1926) and F. Sartiaux (d. 1944), Alfred Loisy. Sa Vie, son œuvre, ed. E. Poulat (1960). M. D. Petre, Alfred Loisy: His Religious Significance (1944); F. *Heiler, Der Vater der katholischen Modernismus, Alfred Loisy (Munich, 1947); R. de Boyer de Sainte Suzanne, Alfred Loisy entre la foi et l'incroyance [1968], with some unpubl. letters. A. R. Vidler, The Modernist Movement in the Roman Catholic Church (1934), pp. 67–139; id., A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures for 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), esp. pp. 20–56. J. Ratté, Three Modernists (1968), pp. 43–141, with bibl. p. 353 f. J. Bonsirven, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 530–44. See also other works cited s.v. Modernism.

LOLLARDY. A 'Lollard' was originally a follower of J. *Wycliffe; later, the name was applied somewhat vaguely to anyone seriously critical of the Church—knights who hankered after Church property, dissatisfied tenants of an oppressive abbey, parishioners who refused to pay tithes, and apocalyptic visionaries. The original meaning of the term would appear to be a 'chanter' and so a 'mumbler of prayers' (cf. Middle Dutch lollen or lullen, 'to sing'); but possibly it comes from the Latin lolia ('tares'). Its first use occurs in 1382 (as a term of contempt) and its first official use in 1387.

The Lollards, following Wycliffe, based their teaching on personal faith, Divine election, and, above all, the Bible. The Scriptures were the sole authority in religion and every man had the right to read and interpret them for himself. The Lollards commonly attacked clerical *celibacy, *transubstantiation, *indulgences, and *pilgrimages; and they held that the validity of priestly acts was determined by the priest's moral character and that endowments, the Pope, and the hierarchy were all unscriptural. They propagated their teaching by various unlicensed preachers.

The movement went through several phases. For about twenty years it enjoyed some academic support, though in 1382 Abp. W. *Courtenay condemned Wycliffe's teachings and deprived Lollardy of a base at Oxford. (See Nicholas of Hereford and Repington, P.) Following the accession of *Henry IV and the return of Abp. T. Arundel, rigorous persecution, esp. the passing of the statute De Haeretico Comburendo (1401) and the burning of W. *Sawtrey, caused most of the early leaders to recant. (See Purvey, J.) After Sir J. *Oldcastle's rising in 1414, and another attempted rising in 1431, the movement went underground. Recent research into heresy cases suggests that (despite the attention given to it by Bp. R. *Pecock) Lollardy declined after the middle of the 15th cent., but revived after c. 1490; early Tudor heresy trials reveal significant pockets of Lollardy composed mostly of craftsmen and town workers, esp. in the Chilterns, London and Essex, Coventry and parts of the North.

Lollardy, while powerful enough to inhibit Catholic reforms in the 15th cent., at no time won over the governing classes in strength, and thus could not achieve a reformation unaided; but it contributed to the English Reformation by providing areas and minds receptive to *Lutheranism, and its influence continued in the movement now seen as its direct heir, the congregational dissent of the 17th cent. Lollardy was also powerful in Scotland and exercised an important influence on the development of the *Hussite rising in Bohemia.

J. *Gairdner, Lollardy and the Reformation in England (4 vols., 1908–13). R. L. Poole, Wycliffe and Movements for Reform (1889); H. B. Workman, John Wyclif: A Study of the English Medieval Church (2 vols., 1926). B. L. Manning, The People's Faith in the Time of Wyclif (1918); K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginning of English Nonconformity (1952). A. G. Dickens, Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York 1509–1558 (1959). J. A. F. Thomson, The Later Lollards 1414–1520 (Oxford, 1965). Margaret E. Aston, 'Lollardy and Sedition 1381–1431' in Past and Present, No. 17 (1960), pp. 1–44; id., 'Lollardy and the Reformation: Survival or Revival?' in History, xlix (1964), pp. 149–70; id., 'John Wycliffe's Reformation Reputation' in Past and Present, No. 30 (1965), pp. 23–51. K. B. McFarlane, Lancastrian Kings and Lollard Knights (posthumous; Oxford, 1972), esp. pp. 139–232. Anne Hudson (ed.), Selections from English Wycliffite Writings (Cambridge, 1978).

LOMBARD, PETER. See Peter Lombard.

LONDON. See Bow Church, Brompton Oratory, St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey and Westminster Cathedral.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY. See L.M.S.

LONGINUS, St. (prob. from Gk. λόγχη, 'lance'). The name traditionally given to the soldier who pierced the side of Christ with his spear. It can be traced back to the apocryphal 'Acts of *Pilate', one version of which also gives it to the centurion who, standing by the Cross, confessed Christ as the Son of God. In the later forms of the legend the two persons are often confused. *Bede, who is followed by many medieval authors, among them the author of the *Golden Legend, reports that he was martyred for his faith at Caesarea in Cappadocia in A.D. 58 and gives as his feast, which occurs in several old martyrologies, 15 Mar. In the E. his feast is observed on 16 Oct.

'Acta' of Longinus the soldier and of Longinus the centurion pr. in AA.SS., Mar. II (1668), pp. 376–90. 'Martyrium Sancti Longini Centurionis' of *Hesychius of Jerusalem pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xciii, 1546–60; Gk. text of 'Martyrium . . . Sancti Longini Centurionis' in *Simeon Metaphrastes, ib., cxv, 32–41. The cultus of the centurion (unnamed) in Cappadocia is attested by *Gregory of Nyssa, Ep., xvii (PG, xlvi, 1061). K. Burdach, 'Der Longinus-Speer in eschatologischem Lichte' in Sb. (Berl.), 1920, pp. 294–321. F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, iv (1934), pp. 81–94 ('Die Blutsalbung des Soldaten mit der Lanze im Passionsspiel Christus Patiens'). Rose J. Peebles, The Legend of Longinus in Ecclesiastical Tradition and in English Literature and its Connection with the Grail (Diss., Bryn Mawr College Monographs, Monograph Series, ix; 1911).

LONGLAND, JOHN (1473–1547), Bp. of *Lincoln. After a long period of study at Oxford, where he became Fellow of Magdalen, Longland was made Dean of *Salisbury in 1514 and Bp. of Lincoln in 1521. He was a staunch upholder of the royal supremacy, and as *Henry VIII's confessor took a prominent part in furthering the divorce proceedings with Catherine of Aragon. A preacher and a humanist of considerable repute, he enjoyed the warm friendship of D. *Erasmus.

'Injunctions of John Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, to certain Monasteries in his Diocese', from his Register, ed. E. Peacock in Archaeologia, xlvii (pt. 1; 1882), pp. 49–64; further extracts in A. Clark (ed.), Lincoln Diocese Documents, 1450–1544 (E.E.T.S., Original Series, cxlix; 1914), pp. 133–244 and 245–54, incl. text of Longland's directions for publication in his diocese of Henry VIII's repudiation of the Pope's Supremacy, pp. 188–91. His Benedictional, ed. R. M. Woolley (H.B.S., lxiv; 1927). H. Maynard Smith, Henry VIII and the Reformation (1948), passim, and other works cited s.v. Henry VIII. J. H. Lupton in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), p. 120 f.; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1160–62.

LONGLEY, CHARLES THOMAS (1794–1868), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he taught for several years. In 1829 he was appointed headmaster of Harrow. Later he became Bp. of *Ripon (1836) and of *Durham (1856) and Abp. of *York (1860) and of Canterbury (1862). At Ripon he aroused much feeling through his suppression of the 'Romanizing' at E. B. *Pusey's newly built church of St. Saviour's, Leeds. At Canterbury he proceeded as far as he could against J. W. *Colenso without provoking a conflict with the law. The most memorable event of his archiepiscopate was the first *Lambeth Conference.

A. M. G. Stephenson, The First Lambeth Conference 1867 (C.H.S., 1967). G. C. Boase in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), p. 121 f.

LOOFS, FRIEDRICH (1858–1928), historian of doctrine. He studied at Leipzig, where under A. *Harnack he became a keen student of the history of dogma, and at Göttingen, where A. *Ritschl stimulated his more systematic interests. From 1882 to 1887 he taught at Leipzig. In 1887 he became extraordinary, and in 1888 full, professor at Halle, where he remained till his death. He took a prominent part in Lutheran ecclesiastical affairs, becoming a member of the Saxon Consistory in 1910. Among many important essays in patristic subjects are a monograph on *Leontius of Byzantium (1887), his significant Leitfaden zur Dogmengeschichte (1890), works on the 'Sacra Parallela' of St. *John of Damascus (1892) and *Eustathius of Sebaste (1898), a collection of the then known Nestoriana (1905), and a comprehensive study of *Paul of Samosata (1924). He also took an active part in opposing E. *Haeckel's materialism in his Anti-Haeckel (1900; Eng. trans., 1903). An original interpretation of *Nestorian teaching was presented in Nestorius and his Place in the History of Christian Doctrine (1914), the substance of four lectures delivered at London in 1913.

Autobiographical notice in Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen (ed. E. Stange), ii (1926), pp. 119–60, with bibl.

LOPEZ, GREGORY (1611–91), first native Chinese bishop. His native name was A-lu. Born of pagan parents in the city of Fogan in NE. Fukien, he embraced Christianity when he grew up, and was baptized by the *Franciscans. He studied for a time at Manila, where in 1651 he joined the *Dominican Order. In 1656 he was ordained the first Chinese priest. His success and zeal led the French bishops in Tonkin and Siam to induce Clement X to offer him the titular bishopric of Basilea in N. Africa and the office of vicar-apostolic of Nanking. Lopez, however, modestly declined the promotion. In 1679 *Innocent XI repeated the offer of a bishopric; but now the Dominicans at Manila demanded a European associate to advise Lopez, who again declined, this time on the ground that such an associate would limit his freedom. He was eventually consecrated in 1685 at Canton at the hands of Italian Franciscans. Later he was promoted to the new see of Nanking, but did not live to employ the title. There was no further native RC bishop in China until 1918.

Quétif–Échard, ii, p. 708 f.; Eng. tr. by A. C. Moule in The New China Review, i (Hong Kong, 1919), pp. 480–7; suppl. note by id., ib., iii (1921), p. 138 f. J. de Moidrey, S.J., La Hiérarchie catholique en Chine, en Corée, et au

Japon, 1307–1914 (Variétés sinologiques, No. 38; 1914), pp. 22–4. B. M. Biermann, O.P., Die Anfänge der neueren Dominikanermission in China, pt. 1 (1927), esp. pp. 90–2 and 129–33. See also works cited s.v. China.

LORD OF HOSTS (Heb. יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת). This Divine title occurs in the OT no less than 282 times, all except 36 of them in the Prophetical writings. In its earliest usage among the Hebrews, it was probably based on the belief that it was their God *Jehovah who led and defended their armies against their enemies (cf., e.g., Ex. 7. 4, where the forces of Israel are described as 'the hosts of the Lord'), but in later times its reference was to God's dominion in majesty and power over the angels and other celestial beings and, a fortiori, His supremacy over the destinies of men. In the LXX the term is variously rendered as κύριος σαβαώθ (e.g. Is. 1. 9, which is quoted in the NT at Rom. 9. 29 and there translated into Eng. as 'Lord of Sabaoth'), κύριος τῶν δυνάμεων (e.g. Ps. 23. 10; Eng. versions 24. 10), and κύριος παντοκράτωρ (e.g. Hag. 1. 2). This last was rendered in Latin as Deus omnipotens, hence the English 'Almighty God'.

S. R. *Driver in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 137 f.; E. Kautzsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 620–27, s.v. 'Zebaoth', with bibl.; H. *Gunkel in R.G.G. (ed. 2), v (1931), col. 2085 f.

LORD OF MISRULE. See Misrule, Lord of.

LORD'S DAY, The. A Christian appellation of *Sunday, based on Rev. 1. 10 (ἡ κυριακὴ ἡμέρα). In recent times it has been used (esp. by Protestants) when special stress is laid on the sacred character of the day. In the 17th–18th cents., however, the title 'Lord's Day' (without the article) was fairly widely used as an ordinary name for the day, and not only among *Puritans. The Lord's Day Observance Society, founded in 1831 by Daniel Wilson, Bp. of Calcutta, has as its two principal objects the diffusion of information about the blessings of Sunday and the promotion of its observance as a weekly day of rest and worship.

LORD'S PRAYER, The (Lat. Oratio Dominica or Pater Noster), the prayer, 'Our Father', taught by the Lord to the Apostles. In the NT it is given in two slightly different forms, viz. in Mt. 6. 9–13, in the teaching on prayer in the *Sermon on the Mount, and in Lk. 11. 2–4, where Christ gives it to His disciples in answer to their request 'Lord, teach us to pray'. The form in Mt. is that universally used by Christians; that in Lk. is shorter. A concluding doxology was probably added in early times, for it occurs in the *Didache, and, in a longer form, corresponding to that in the BCP, in the Liturgy of St. *Chrysostom; it was taken over into some Gospel MSS.

The Lord's Prayer is usually divided into the address and seven petitions, the first three asking for the glorification of God, the latter four being requests for the chief physical and spiritual needs of man. As a prayer given to the Church by the Lord Himself, it has always been regarded by Christians as uniquely sacred.

From early times the Lord's Prayer was taught to the *catechumens at *Baptism and used in the Liturgy. St. *Cyprian already calls it 'the public and common prayer'. It has also regularly found a place in the celebration of the Eucharist. The first witness to it in this connexion is St. *Cyril of Jerusalem (c. 350). Acc. to St. *Augustine and to the *Ambrosian and *Mozarabic Liturgies, it was said after the Breaking of the Bread, immediately before the *Kiss of Peace and the Communion. St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604), however, following the Greek Liturgies, placed it at the end of the Canon, before the Breaking of the Bread. He also appears to have held the opinion that the Apostles used the Lord's Prayer to consecrate the Eucharist. In the BCP, since 1552, it has followed the Communion. The ASB provides for its use either here or before or after the Breaking of the Bread. In the Divine *Office the Prayer has also occupied a prominent place. It is mentioned as part of *Lauds and *Vespers by the Synod of Gerona of 517, and St. *Benedict prescribed it in his rule for all the Canonical Hours.

The *Breviary of 1568 laid down that it should be said before every Office except *Compline and before the ferial prayers. In Paul VI's Breviary of 1971 it is said after the NT *Canticles and the intercessions and before the collect at Morning and Evening Prayer.

The Lord's Prayer has played a prominent part in Christian devotion. *Tertullian called it the 'epitome of the whole Gospel' (breviarium totius evangelii) and St. Augustine the source of all other prayers. It has been frequently expounded either in commentaries on the Gospels or in separate treatises, notably by St. *Thomas Aquinas and St. *Teresa of Ávila.

The version of the Lord's Prayer traditionally used by English-speaking Catholics and Protestants alike owed its general acceptance to an ordinance of *Henry VIII in 1541. It follows closely the form of the Prayer in W. *Tyndale's version of the NT. The concluding Doxology, however, which was not traditional in the liturgical tradition of Western Christendom, is first found in the Scottish BCP of 1637, whence it was taken over in many places in the revision of 1662.

Patristic commentaries include Tertullian, De Oratione, i–x, *Origen, De Oratione, esp. xxii–xxx, Cyprian, De Dominica Oratione, and Augustine, De Sermone Domini in Monte, ii. 15–39. F. H. Chase, The Lord's Prayer in the Early Church (Texts and Studies, I, 3; Cambridge, 1891); O. *Dibelius, Das Vaterunser. Umrisse zu einer Geschichte des Gebets in der alten und mittleren Kirche (Giessen, 1903). G. Walter, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der griechischen Vaterunser-Exegese (1914). P. Fiebig, Das Vaterunser. Ursprung, Sinn, und Bedeutung des christlichen Hauptgebetes (Gütersloh, 1927). E. Lohmeyer, Das Vater-unser (1946; ed. 3, 1952; Eng. tr., 1965). J. Lowe, The Interpretation of the Lord's Prayer (Evanston, Ill., 1955; expanded, and revised by C. S. C. Williams, Oxford, 1962). J. Carmignac, Recherches sur le 'Notre Père' (1969), with extensive bibl. T. W. Manson, 'The Lord's Prayer' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxviii (1955–6), pp. 99–113, 436–48. J. Haussleiter in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 431–45, s.v. 'Vaterunser'; E. *Nestle–J. C. Lambert in D.C.G., ii (1908), pp. 57–63, s.v., with full bibl. p. 60; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2244–55, s.v. 'Oraison dominicale'.

LORD'S SUPPER, The. A title for the Holy Communion, now used esp. among Protestants. It is taken from 1 Cor. 11. 20 (τὸ κυριακὸν δεῖπνον), where the rendering 'Lord's Supper' is found in the English version of J. *Wycliffe (1382). Its occurrence in the title of N. *Ridley's Brief Declaration of the Lord's Supper, written in 1554 while its author was in prison, helped to popularize the name. See also Eucharist.

LORETO, near Ancona in Italy, is the site of the Holy House, alleged to have been inhabited by the BVM at the time of the *Annunciation and to have been miraculously transported by angels from *Nazareth to Tersatz in Dalmatia in 1291 and thence by the same agency to Loreto in 1295. The earliest attestation of the legend is an account of the sanctuary written c. 1470. The whole story is now commonly regarded as unhistorical, not least by RC writers of unquestioned orthodoxy. See also Litany of Loreto.

The traditional account in H. Tursellinus, Lauretanae Historiae Libri V (1597), and P. V. Martorelli, Teatro istorico della S. Casa Nazarena (3 vols., fol., 1732–5). Somewhat more critical, J. A. Vogel, De Ecclesiis Recanatensi et Lauretana (1859; but written in 1806), and Mgr Leopardi, La Santa Casa di Loreto (Lugano, 1841). The attack on the tradition, led by H. Grisar, S.J., at the Munich Congress in 1900, was brought to a conclusion by C. U. J. Chevalier, Notre-Dame de Lorette. Étude historique sur l'authenticité de la Santa Casa (1906). G. Hueffer, Loreto. Eine geschichtskritische Untersuchung der Frage des heiligen Hauses (2 vols., 1913–21). F. da Morrovalle, O.F.M. Cap., L'archivio storico della Santa Casa di Loreto. Inventario (Vatican City, 1965), with extensive reff. H. Thurston in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 454–6, s.v. 'Santa Casa di Loreto'.

LORIC OF ST. PATRICK. See Breastplate of St. Patrick.

LORSCH, *Benedictine Abbey near Worms. Founded in 764 with monks sent by *Chrodegang of Metz from *Gorze, it enjoyed the special favour of *Charlemagne and became one of the largest and best endowed abbeys in Germany. Under St. *Bruno (brother of the Emp. Otto I), in the middle of the 10th cent. it was a centre of the Gorze reform movement. Later it declined in importance. It became *Cistercian in 1232 and *Premonstratensian in 1248. In the Carolingian age there was built up one of the largest libraries in Europe, which is of great importance for the transmission of patristic texts. Considerable remains survive among the Palatine MSS. in the *Vatican Library and among the Laudian MSS. in the *Bodleian Library in Oxford.

Codex Laureshamensis, ed. K. Glöckner (Arbeiten der historischen Kommission für den Volksstaat Hessen; 3 vols., Darmstadt, 1929–36). K. Hallinger, O.S.B., Gorze–Kluny. Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter (Studia Anselmiana, xxii–xxv; 1950–1), pp. 180–215. Laurissa Jubilans. Festschrift zur 1200-Jahrfeier von Lorsch (Darmstadt, 1964). Medieval library catalogue pr. in G. Becker, Catalogi Bibliothecarum antiqui (Bonn, 1885), pp. 82–125. C. Wolff in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 1147 f., s.v.

LOSSKY, VLADIMIR (1903–58), Russian lay theologian. The son of the philosopher Nicolas Lossky, he studied first at the University of St. Petersburg and then, after expulsion from Russia by the Soviet government in 1922, at Prague and the *Sorbonne. The latter years of his life were largely spent in U.S.A. and Paris. He became one of the leading exponents of Orthodox thought to the western world and a vigorous opponent of the sophiological doctrines of S. *Bulgakov. He devoted his concluding years to the study of *Eckhart, but his work on this subject was unfinished at the time of his death. His published writings include Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944; revised Eng. tr., 1957); Théologie négative et connaissance de Dieu chez Maître Eckhart (1960); Vision de Dieu (Neuchâtel, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); À l'Image et à la ressemblance de Dieu (1967; Eng. tr., 1974); and, with L. Ouspensky, The Meaning of Icons (Boston, Mass., 1952).

O. Clément, 'Vladimir Lossky, un théologien de la personne et du Saint-Esprit' in Messager de l'Exarchat du Patriarche russe en Europe occidentale, xxx–xxxi (1959), pp. 137–206.

LOS VON ROM (Germ., 'free from Rome'). A vigorous anti-Roman Movement begun in Austria in 1897 and fostered by the Pan-German party, who aimed at the incorporation of an Austria, freed from the Pope, into Germany under the protection of the Protestant Hohenzollern Emperors. The Movement, which owed its name to the shout of a student at the Deutscher Volkstag at Vienna (1897), came to have its centre at Innsbruck. Its chief organization was the 'Ulrich-Hutten-Bund', and among its principal leaders were G. von Schönerer, V. Eisenkolb, and Superintendent F. Meyer. Its influence was increased by the unsatisfactory situation of the Church in Austria, e.g. the unwieldy size of the dioceses, the lack of German priests, and esp. the anti-clerical spirit of the secondary schools. Though most of those who left the RC Church (up to 1914 c. 75,000) became nominal Protestants, the Movement was essentially anti-Christian, as the Pan-Germans favoured a neo-pagan 'German' religion, an aim later realized on a much greater scale by the National Socialists. From Austria parallel Los von Rom movements spread to other countries, e.g. *Poland (see Mariavites), *France, *Belgium, Ceylon, and *Mexico, but with comparatively little success.

P. Bräunlich, Berichte über den Fortgang der 'Los von Rom-Bewegung' (I. Reihe, Hftt. 1–10, II. Reihe, Hftt. 1–10; 1899–1910). F. Lau in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 451–5, s.v.; K. Algermissen in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 1153–5.

LOTZE, HERMANN (1817–81), logician and metaphysician. A native of Bautzen, he studied medicine and philosophy at Leipzig. After teaching for a short time at Leipzig (1839–42), he became Prof. of Philosophy at Göttingen (1842; full Prof. 1844), where he remained until called to Berlin (1881) shortly before his death. He combined a firm belief in the reign of scientific law with conviction of the need for metaphysics, and opposed alike the theory of a specific Lebenskraft in nature ('vitalism') and the a priori constructions of the German Idealists (F. W. J. von *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel). He was insistent that philosophy must be rooted in the natural sciences, in which he retained his interest until his death. He had a firm faith in *theism; and, believing in the validity of moral judgements, he became an early exponent of 'value philosophy'. His doctrines, first formulated in his Metaphysik (1841) and Logik (1843), were elaborated in a semi-popular form in his Mikrokosmus (3 vols., 1856–64; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1885). He devoted his later years to the elaboration of a System der Philosophie, of which only two volumes were publd., the Logik (1874; Eng. tr. by B. *Bosanquet, 1884) and Metaphysik (1879; Eng. tr. by id., 1884).

Lotze's main Works have been reissued, with introds., in the Philosophische Bibliothek. Kleine Schriften, ed. by D. Peipers, 3 vols., 1885–91. T. M. *Lindsay, 'Hermann Lotze' in Mind, i (1876), pp. 363–82. E. Pfleiderer, Lotze's philosophische Weltanschauung nach ihren Grundzügen (1882); E. von *Hartmann, Lotzes Philosophie (1888); H. Jones, A Critical Account of the Philosophy of Lotze (1895); R. Falckenberg, Hermann Lotze (1901); M. Wentscher, Hermann Lotze (vol. i, 1913), and other works; P. Gese, Lotzes Religionsphilosophie (1916); E. E. Thomas, Lotze's Theory of Reality (1921). Überweg, iv, pp. 299–308 and 703–5, with full bibl.

LOU, TSENG-TSIANG (1871–1949), Chinese statesman and Benedictine monk and abbot. His baptismal name was Jean-Jacques and at confirmation he took the further name of René. The son of a Protestant catechist, he was born at Shanghai and educated at Shanghai and Peking. He was successively secretary to the Chinese Legation at St. Petersburg (1893–1906), Minister at The Hague (1907–11) and at St. Petersburg (1911–12), and Foreign Minister (1912–20; with brief interruptions). In 1912 and 1915 he was also Prime Minister and from 1922 to 1927 Chinese Minister at Berne. In Oct. 1911 he was received into the RC Church. After the death of his wife (a Belgian whom he had married in 1899) in 1926, he entered the *Benedictine Abbey of St.-André, near Bruges (1927), where he was later professed as Dom Pierre Célestin Lou. In 1946 he was appointed Titular Abbot of St.-Pierre-de-Gand by *Pius XII. His intention of returning to the East to establish a Benedictine Congregation in China was prevented by ill health. As a Christian statesman he had been a reformer not a revolutionary. In the sphere of religion he saw in Christianity the fulfilment of Confucianism, finding St. *John's doctrine of the *Logos paralleled by Lao-Tse's teaching of the Tao. He believed Classical Chinese to be the appropriate liturgical language for the worship of his countrymen. His writings include Souvenirs et pensées (1945; Eng. tr. as Ways of Confucius and of Christ, 1948) and La Rencontre des humanités (1949; posthumous).

Wu Ching-Hioung, Dom Lou. Sa vie spirituelle [1949]; E. Neut, O.S.B., Jean-Jacques Lou, Dom Lou (Supplement to numbers 192–3 of Synthèses, Brussels, 1962).

LOUIS OF GRANADA. See Luis of Granada.

LOUIS I (778–840) (the Pious or le Débonnaire). The third son of *Charlemagne (d. 814), by whom he was appointed king of Aquitaine in 781 and joint emperor in 813. His reign was marked by growing political disturbance, caused chiefly by his struggles with his sons. In 817 he associated Lothair with him in the Empire and gave subordinate kingships to his younger sons, Pepin and Louis. This arrangement was upset by the King's second marriage to Judith and the subsequent birth of another son, Charles, upon whom Louis showered all his favour. He was deposed by the assembly of Compiègne in 833 and compelled by the bishops to appear in a penitent's garb. He was restored, however, at Metz in 835 and survived till 840. In spite of his weak and indecisive character, Louis had undoubted religious interests and was a patron of learning, and in his reign much of the real work of the Carolingian scholars came to fruition. He furthered ecclesiastical reorganization in many parts of Germany and the monastic reforms of *Benedict of Aniane, as well as St. *Anskar's missionary work in Scandinavia.

J. F. Böhmer, Die Regesten des Kaiserreichs unter den Karolingern (ed. 2 by E. Mühlbacher, 1908), pp. 234–412. Life by Theganus, written in 835, ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, ii (1829), pp. 589–603; further early life by an anonymous writer known as the 'Astronomer', ib., pp. 604–48; Eng. tr. of the latter, with introd. and notes, by A. Cabannis (Syracuse, N.Y., 1961). B. Simson, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches unter Ludwig dem Frommen (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 2 vols. in one, 1874–6). F. L. Ganshof, 'Louis the Pious Reconsidered' in History, xlii (1957), pp. 171–80. F. Lot–C. Pfister–F. L. Ganshof, Les Destinées de l'empire en occident de 395 à 888 (1928), pp. 473–97. Eleanor S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, 1962), pp. 20–57. Fliche–Martin, vi (1937), pp. 201–28 and 247–66, with further bibl. J. Semmler in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 1183–5, s.v. 'Ludwig I, der Fromme', with extensive bibl.

LOUIS IX, St. (1214–70), King of France. Born at Poissy, he was the son of Louis VIII (d. 1226) and Blanche of Castile (d. 1252), who acted as regent during his minority. In 1226 he was crowned at *Reims and in 1234 he married Margaret of Provence. In 1242 he defeated an attempt by Henry III of England to recover the lost Angevin territories in western France. Having resolved during an illness in 1244 to take the cross, he sailed in 1248 and captured the Egyptian port of Damietta in 1249; but owing to floods and lack of co-operation the crusaders were routed in 1250 and Louis IX taken prisoner. Securing his own release by the surrender of Damietta and that of his men by the payment of their ransoms, he proceeded to Syria in 1250 to fortify the strongholds still in Christian hands. He returned to France in 1254, imposed peace on Flanders in 1256 and signed the Treaties of Corbeil with Aragon in 1258 and of Paris with Henry III in 1259, the terms of both illustrating his desire for equity and a lasting settlement. Between 1258 and 1265 he several times arbitrated between Henry III and his barons. Having planned a further crusade in 1267, he embarked on 1 July 1270 and landed at Tunis, where he died of dysentery on 25 Aug.

In his austere and prayerful private life, his energy, his determination that every man should have his due, and the paramount consideration which he gave to the defence of the Holy Land, Louis embodied the highest ideals of medieval kingship. He reformed the administration of France, frequently meting out justice himself. He built the *Sainte-Chapelle in Paris (1245–8) for the *Crown of Thorns which he had acquired from the Emp. Baldwin II in 1239, endowed various religious houses and supported the theological college founded by Robert de *Sorbon in 1257. He was canonized by *Boniface VIII in 1297. Feast day, 25 Aug.

The instructions which St. Louis compiled for his son, known as Les Établissements de saint Louis, were ed. P. Viollet (Société de l'Histoire de France, 4 vols.; 1881–6). The principal authority is the life by J. de *Joinville (q.v. for edd. and translations). Life by William of Saint-Pathus, written some time between 1302 and 1307, ed. H. F. Delaborde (Collection de textes pour servir à l'étude et à l'enseignement de l'histoire; 1899); Miracles by the same author ed. P. B. Fay in Les Classiques français du moyen âge, lxx; 1931. Lives by Geoffrey of Beaulieu, O.P., and William of Chartres, O.P., his confessors and chaplains, pr., with other material, in AA.SS., Aug. V (1741), pp. 275–672. B.H.L., pp. 747–50 (Nos. 5034–52), and Suppl., p. 201 f. Classic lives by L. S. Le N. *Tillemont, Vie de saint Louis, first ed. in full, J. de Gaulle (6 vols., Société de l'Histoire de France; 1847–51) and H. Wallon (2 vols., Paris, 1875); modern life by Margaret W. Labarge (London, 1968), with bibl. C. Petit-Dutaillis in C. Med. H., vi (1929), pp. 331–61 (ch. 10, 'Saint Louis'), with bibl. pp. 904–8.

LOURDES, a famous French place of pilgrimage in the Department of Hautes-Pyrénées. In 1858 the 14-year-old peasant girl, *Bernadette Soubirous, had visions of the BVM in the grotto of a rock at Lourdes in which the Virgin told her that she was the Immaculate Conception. At the same time a spring appeared; miraculous healings were soon reported to have taken place; and the faithful began to flock to Lourdes. In 1862 the pilgrimage received official ecclesiastical recognition, a church was built above the grotto, and beside it from 1883 to 1901 the magnificent church of the Rosary. The crypt of the Basilica of the Immaculate Conception (above the grotto) and a vast underground church dedicated to Pope *Pius X were consecrated by the future Pope *John XXIII in 1958. Millions of pilgrims have visited the shrine, a medical bureau has been established to investigate the character of the cures, and an enormous literature, much of it controversial, has sprung up around it. In 1891 a local feast of the apparition of Our Lady of Lourdes (11 Feb.) was sanctioned, and extended to the universal Church by Pius X in 1907; since 1969 its observance has been optional.

L. Cros, S.J., Histoire de Notre-Dame de Lourdes d'après les documents et les témoins (3 vols., 1925–6); id., Lourdes 1858, ed. P. M. Olphe-Galliard, S.J. [1957]. R. Laurentin, Lourdes. Histoire authentique des apparitions (6 vols., 1961–4). There is also a very large number of popular studies such as J. Jørgensen, Lourdes (Copenhagen, 1910; Eng. tr., 1914); R. Laurentin, Sens de Lourdes (ed. 2, 1958; Eng. tr., 1959). G. Bertrin in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 389–91, s.v. See also bibl. to Bernadette, St.

LOVE. In Christian theology, the principle of God's action and man's response. Of the words used in Greek for 'love', neither φιλία ('dutiful' or 'filial affection') nor ἔρως ('passionate emotion') is adequate to the Christian conception, which the NT expressed by ἀγάπη, a word hardly used before except occasionally in the LXX. The noun ἀγάπη (see Agape) was translated into Lat. as caritas, and hence (esp. in the AV) passed into English as '*charity'; the RV and most later English versions have preferred 'love', which has always been used for the cognate verbal form.

In the OT the loving character of God was recognized, notably by *Hosea, but it was only in the NT that the doctrine that love constitutes the essential nature of God was developed (e.g. 1 Jn. 4. 8). Love, as the bond between the Father and the Son, is particularly associated with the Holy Spirit by St. *Augustine and other writers. The OT commandments that man should love God (e.g. Deut. 6. 5) and his neighbour (Lev. 19. 18) are joined together by Christ (Mk. 12. 29–31), but the peculiarly Christian character of the love required is emphasized by the Lord's description of the demand for love as a 'new commandment' (Jn. 13. 34). This Christian love is the greatest of the *theological virtues (1 Cor. 13. 13; Col. 3. 14). In 1 Cor. 13. 1–8 its manifestations are described; it is a matter of the will rather than the emotions, and it appears (1 Jn. 5. 3) to consist in keeping God's commandments. This supernatural love, however, is, acc. to St. Augustine, a gift of God and can be obtained only by accepting His grace. Later theologians have elaborated on the nature of Christian love, but all are agreed that it is an essential element in the Christian life, while the mystics have particularly stressed that it is a prerequisite for prayer.

A. Nygren, Den Kristna Kärlekstanken genom tiderna. Eros och Agape (2 vols., 1930–6; Eng. tr. (Agape and Eros), in 3 vols., 1932–9, pt. i by A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., and pt. ii, 2 vols., by P. S. Watson; new tr. by P. S. Watson, 1953). C. E. Raven, Jesus and the Gospel of Love (Albert Robertson Lectures for 1931; 1931). J. Burnaby, Amor Dei. A Study of the Religion of St. Augustine (Hulsean Lectures for 1938; 1938). H. Riesenfeld, 'Étude bibliographique sur la notion biblique d''ΑΓΑΠΗ' in Coniectanea Neotestamentica, v (Uppsala, 1941), pp. 1–32. M. C. *D'Arcy, S.J., The Mind and Heart of Love (1945). Hélène Pétré, Caritas. Étude sur le vocabulaire latin de la charité chrétienne (S.S.L., xxii; 1948). V. Warnack, Agape. Die Liebe als Grundmotiv der neutestamentlichen Theologie (1951). P. Gilleman, S.J., Le Primat de la charité en théologie morale. Essai méthodologique (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 1; 1952; Eng. tr. [1959]). C. S. Lewis, The Four Loves (1960). C. Spicq, O.P., Agapè dans le Nouveau Testament. Analyse des textes (3 vols., Études Bibliques, 1958–9; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1963–5). G. Quell–E. Stauffer in T.W.B., i (1933), cols. 20–55, s.v. ἀγαπάω; Eng. tr. of this art., with bibl., by J. R. Coates (London, 1949). F. Prat and others in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols., 508–691, s.v. 'Charité'.

LOVE, CHRISTOPHER (1618–51), *Puritan minister. A native of Cardiff, he was converted at the age of 14 by W. Erbury (1604–54), who enabled him to study at New Inn Hall, Oxford (1635–9). In 1639 he went to London, where he refused to be ordained by a bishop. After an unsuccessful attempt to secure *Presbyterian ordination in Scotland, he returned to England (c. 1641) and was imprisoned at Newcastle for his outspoken criticisms of the BCP. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War he became chaplain to Colonel J. Venn's regiment and was ordained. Through his zeal for Presbyterianism he incurred the hostility of the *Independents, and in 1651 was accused of conspiracy with *Charles Stuart (II) and *Henrietta Maria for the overthrow of the Commonwealth. He was executed on Tower Hill after having disclosed the plot. Among his writings are The Debauched Cavalier (1642), England's Distemper (1645), and several posthumous collections of Sermons.

Sixteen of his Sermons on 2 Pet. 1. 10 were publd. under the title A Treatise of Effectual Calling and Election (London, 1653), and another twenty-seven sermons preached shortly before his death as The Combat between the Flesh and Spirit (ib., 1654). Select Works (2 vols., Glasgow, 1805–6); Remains of Christopher Love, ed. W. Ward–E. Davies (London, 1807), with sketch of his life, pp. iii–xii. His Several Petitions to Parliament and his last Speech and Prayer, with other material, publd. as Mr. Love's Case (London, 1651). The Life, Trial and Martyrdom of the Rev. Christopher Love (The Gospel Atlas, No. 1 [1855]), with various of his letters. B. Brook, The Lives of the Puritans, iii (1813), pp. 115–38. W. A. Shaw in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), p. 155 f.

LOW CHURCHMEN. The group in the C of E which gives a relatively unimportant or 'low' place to the claims of the episcopate, priesthood, and sacraments, and generally approximates in its beliefs to those of Protestant Nonconformists. The term 'Low Churchman', which dates from the early 18th cent., was coined in contrast to '*High Churchman', but orig. used of the *Latitudinarian (liberal) group. It went out of use; when revived in the mid-19th cent. it was applied to the *Evangelicals, whereas the liberal group then came to be dubbed '*Broad Churchmen'. See also Evangelicalism.

LOW MASS. In the W. Church, the simplified form of Mass, until recently the form in most frequent use. It grew up in the Middle Ages, when the practice of each priest saying a Mass daily became common and the elaborate ceremonial and considerable number of assistants traditionally required for the Liturgy were no longer practicable. In a Low Mass, where the celebrating priest had no ministers to assist him except a single server, he read both the *Epistle and *Gospel himself, and no part of the service was sung. Except in cathedral and capitular churches, Low Mass was the usual form of celebration except on Sundays and greater feast days; and even on these days all except one of the Masses in any church was usually a Low Mass. The current RC Ordo Missae, however, no longer uses the term; it requires that all Masses celebrated with the people shall be community Masses with full participation; if there is no deacon or *lector some other lay person may read the first two lessons, and it is urged that there should be singing at all Masses. In the E. Low Masses have never been known, though some *Uniat bodies adopted a somewhat similar form of celebration. See also High Mass.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 279–306; Eng. tr. (1951), pp. 212–33.

LOW SUNDAY. The first Sunday after Easter, probably so called in contrast to the 'high' feast of Easter Sunday itself. In Latin it used to be termed Dominica in albis. In the RC Church it is now officially designated the second Sunday in Eastertide.

LOWDER, CHARLES FUGE (1820–80), vicar of St. Peter's, London Docks. Educated at Exeter College, Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1844, and in 1851 became curate at the *Anglo-Catholic parish of St. Barnabas, Pimlico. In 1856 he joined the staff of St. George's in the East, where he took a leading part in the first regular mission work in East London, with A. H. *Mackonochie as his colleague from 1858. The advanced ceremonial led to fierce riots. His mission work expanded, however, and he built the church of St. Peter's, London Docks (1860–6). Known always as 'Father Lowder', he was the means of bringing many thousands of East Londoners to the Christian faith.

Anonymous life by Maria Trench (London, 1881). W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), p. 187; S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H., p. 342 f. Study by L. E. Ellsworth (London, 1982).

LOWTH, ROBERT (1710–87), Bp. of London. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford. From 1741 to 1750 he was professor of poetry at Oxford, and later Bp. successively of *St David's (1766), of Oxford (also 1766), and of London (1777). His chief contributions to Biblical learning arose from his study of the forms of Hebrew poetry. In his De sacra poesi Hebraeorum Praelectiones Academicae (1753; J. D. *Michaelis added notes in 1775; Eng. trans. of this expanded revision, 1793) he recognized the existence of 'parallelism' as a regular device of the Hebrew poet. In a controversy with W. *Warburton, Lowth defended the extreme antiquity of the Book of *Job. His commentary on *Isaiah (1778) pointed the way to later criticism of that Book.

Sermons and Other Remains of Robert Lowth, ed. P. Hall (London, 1834), with introductory Memoir, pp. 1–42. Short Memoirs of the Life and Writings of . . . Robert Lowth (London, 1787). W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), pp. 214–16.

LOYOLA, St. IGNATIUS. See Ignatius Loyola, St.

LUBBERTUS, SIBRANDUS (1556/7–1625), Dutch *Calvinist theologian. Educated at *Wittenberg, *Marburg, Geneva (where he sat under T. *Beza), and Basle, in 1585 he became professor of dogmatics at Franeker university, combining his duties in the faculty with pastoral work. Before long he was one of the foremost upholders of orthodox Calvinism in Holland against the rising *Arminianism. In 1607 he took a prominent part in the Hague Conference which was planning the suppression of Arminian doctrines and also corresponded extensively with theologians (among them A. *Melville and G. *Abbot) to warn them against Arminius' teaching. At the Synod of *Dort (1618), at which he was a prominent defender of the Calvinist position, he was appointed to the Commission preparing the new version of the OT. His works were for the most part controversial. He attacked the Arminianism of P. Bertius in his Epistolica Disceptatio de Fide Justificante, nostraque coram Deo Justificatione (1612), C. *Vorstius in two writings (1611, 1613), and the Pietas Ordinum Hollandiae et Westfrisiae of H. *Grotius (1613) in his Responsio ad Pietatem Grotii (1614). He also wrote several treatises against the RC Church and *Socinianism.

His other writings include De Principiis Christianorum Dogmatum (1591; ed. 2, 1595), De Papa Romano (1594), De Ecclesia (1609), and De Jesu Christo Servatore contra Faustum Socinum (1611). S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), p. 653 f., s.v., with bibl.

LÜBER, THOMAS. See Erastianism.

LUCAR, CYRIL (1572–1638), Patriarch of *Constantinople. He was a Cretan by birth. After studying at *Venice and Padua, where he came into contact with Latin thought, he became *syncellus to Meletios Pegas, Patr. of *Alexandria, whom he succeeded in 1601. His presence at the Synod of *Brest-Litovsk in 1596 had already turned him against Rome and the *Jesuits, and he now became more and more friendly disposed towards the Reformed Churches. His sympathies towards the C of E were expressed in his despatch of *Metrophanes Critopoulos to study at Oxford in 1617. In 1620 he was appointed Patr. of Constantinople, an appointment as welcome to the Protestants, esp. the Dutch, as disagreeable to the Jesuits. In 1623, 1633 (twice), and 1634 he was removed from the patriarchal throne, but later restored, partly through the help of the English and Dutch ambassadors, particularly Sir Thomas Roe (1621–8) and Cornelius van Haga. Through the former he presented the famous '*Codex Alexandrinus' to King *Charles I in 1628. With the support and encouragement of the *Calvinist theologian Antoine Léger, a translation of the Bible into the vernacular for the use of his flock was begun, and eventually published in Geneva in 1638; and in 1629 there was published at the same place a Confessio Fidei, to which Cyril had appended his signature. This reinterprets the traditional E. Orthodox faith in thoroughly Calvinistic terms. Eight years later his enemies accused him of inciting the Cossacks against the Turkish government, and he was put to death on the orders of the Sultan Murad. He was the first important theologian of the E. Church since the fall of Constantinople in 1453; but his sympathies with Calvinism, in which he saw a legitimate way of clarifying and purifying Orthodox faith and life, led to the condemnation of his teaching by synods held at Constantinople (1638, 1642), *Jassy (1642), and *Jerusalem (1672). He remains, however, the most brilliant and politically outstanding Greek Patriarch and national leader ('ethnarch') of the 17th century.

For his 'Confession', see E. Kimmel, Libri Symbolici Ecclesiae Orientalis (Jena, 1843), pp. 24–44; Eng. tr. in J. N. W. B. Robertson, The Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Jerusalem (1899), pp. 185–215. Sermons 1598–1602, ed. Keetje Rozemond (Leiden, 1974). E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique ou description raisonnée des ouvrages publiés par des Grecs au dix-septième siècle, iv (1896), pp. 161–521. G. A. Hadjiantoniou, Protestant Patriarch. The Life of Cyril Lucaris (1572–1638), Patriarch of Constantinople (1961). S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), pp. 259–88. P. Meyer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 682–90, with full bibl., and C. Emereau in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1003–19, s.v., with bibl.

LUCIAN OF ANTIOCH, St. (d. 312), theologian and martyr. A presbyter of *Antioch, he founded an influential theological school of which both *Arius and *Eusebius of Nicomedia were members; indeed his *subordinationist teaching seems to have been the immediate source of the Arian heresy. Only a few fragments of his writings have survived; but the second of the four Creeds put forward by the Council of *Antioch in 341 was perhaps his composition. He was a keen Biblical student, who revised the Greek text (see Lucianic Text). His reputation for sanctity was not less than his fame as a scholar; and after enduring many tortures he was martyred at Nicomedia in 312. The long-prevalent view that he was a pupil of *Paul of Samosata has been disputed by F. *Loofs and G. Bardy. Feast day in E., 15 Oct.; in W., 7 Jan.

Fgmts. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae (ed. 2, iv, 1846), pp. 3–10 (texts), 11–17 (notes). Eusebius, H.E., VIII. xiii. 2 and IX. vi. 3; Jerome, De Vir. Illustr., 77. 'Vita' in *Philostorgius, H.E. (ed. J. Bidez in G.C.S., pp. 184–201). G. Bardy, Recherches sur Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936). A. d'Alès, 'Autour de Lucien d'Antioche' in Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph, Beyrouth, xxi (1936), pp. 185–199. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 279–85; Altaner–Stuiber (1966) p. 214 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 142–4. G. Bardy in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), 1024–31; A. Vaccari, S.J., in E.C., vii (1951), col. 1625 f. See also bibl. to Lucianic Text.

LUCIAN OF SAMOSATA (c. 115 – c. 200), pagan satirist. His interest to the student of early Christianity lies chiefly in some references in his 'Alexander of Abonuteichos' and esp. in 'De Morte Peregrini'. The latter treats of the philosopher Peregrinus, a historical person who exchanged paganism for Christianity and was even imprisoned for his faith; but later he apostatized and became a cynic. Being expelled from Rome he made his way to Athens, where he burned himself at a stake during the Olympic Games, in order, as he said, to crown an exemplary life by an exemplary death. In his account of Peregrinus's life, Lucian depicts the Christians as kindly but credulous. He describes the generosity with which they looked after their fellow-believer, Peregrinus, when imprisoned; but, believing that the philosopher was an impostor, he scoffs at their simplicity.

The '*Philopatris' (q.v.), which purports to be a work of Lucian and directly attacks Christianity, is of much later date, prob. 10th century.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Florence, 1496; modern edd. by C. Jacobitz (4 vols., Leipzig, 1836–41; 3 vols., Teub., 1852–3, and subsequent edd.), J. Sommerbrodt (3 vols. in 5 parts, Berlin, 1886–99; incomplete, but good critical apparatus), and M. D. Macleod (Oxford, 1972 ff.). Eng. tr. (repr. text from Teub. edd. of C. Jacobitz and N. Nilén), by A. M. Harmon and others (8 vols., Loeb, 1913–67). M. Croiset, Essai sur la vie et les œuvres de Lucien (1882). J. Bompaire, Lucien écrivain (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxc; 1958); J. Schwartz, Biographie de Lucien de Samosate (Collection Latomus, lxxxv; 1965). M. Caster, Lucien et la pensée religieuse de son temps (1937; with bibl.). H. D. Betz, Lukian von Samosata und das Neue Testament. Religionsgeschichtliche und paränetische Parallelen (T.U., lxxvi; 1961), with bibl. on Lucian, pp. 218–51. A. *Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 659–66, s.v.; [R. W. O.] Helm in P.W., xiii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1725–77, s.v.

LUCIANIC TEXT. The text of the Gk. Bible, as revised by *Lucian of Antioch (q.v.). Its marks are the elimination of barbarisms and obscurities, the conflation of variant readings, intelligibility and smoothness. Quotations in the Fathers indicate that it very soon became the accepted standard text in Syria, Asia Minor, and *Constantinople. The researches of F. J. A. *Hort and H. von Soden in the NT indicate that Lucian's text is now represented by the great body of the surviving Gk. MSS. and is thus embodied in the 'Textus Receptus' (q.v.) and the AV. See also Byzantine Text and Syrian Text of the NT.

B. M. Metzger, Chapters in the History of New Testament Textual Criticism (New Testament Tools and Studies, iv; Leiden, 1963), pp. 1–41 ('The Lucianic Recension of the Greek Bible'), with bibl. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 157–71. G. Mercati, 'Di alcune testimonianze antiche sulle cure bibliche di S. Luciano', in Biblica, xxiv (1943), pp. 1–17. M. Spanneut, 'La Bible d'Eustathe d'Antioche — contribution à l'histoire de la "version lucianique" ' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, iv (T.U., lxxix; 1961), pp. 171–90.

LUCIFER (Lat., 'light-bearer'), in Is. 14. 12 (Vulgate, followed by AV), an epithet of the King of Babylon. Taken in conjunction with Lk. 10. 18 it was used as a synonym for the devil by St. *Jerome and other Fathers. With the use of the word in classical mythology for the planet Venus may be compared the RV rendering 'day star' in Is. 14. 12. The imagery is applied to Christ in 2 Pet. 1. 19 (φωσφόρος, 'day star'), Rev. 22. 16 (ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ πρωϊνός, 'the morning star') and in the *Exultet.

LUCIFER (d. 370 or 371), Bp. of Cagliari. A fiercly anti-Arian theologian, at the first session of the Council of Milan (354) he resisted the proposal to condemn *Athanasius with such vehemence that the Arians prevailed on the Emp. Constantius to confine him for three days in the Imperial Palace. His personal altercations with the Emperor which followed led to his banishment first to Palestine and later to the Thebaid (Egypt). During his exile he addressed several violent writings to Constantius with the evident, but unsuccessful, intent of courting martyrdom. They include 'De non conveniendo cum haereticis', 'De regibus apostaticis', and 'De S. Athanasio'. Soon after the accession of *Julian, in common with the exiled bishops generally, he was released (362). He then made his way to Antioch, where he vigorously resisted all conciliatory action towards repentant Arians, and by consecrating Paulinus, an Antiochene presbyter, bishop, created an unfortunate schism. A little later, it appears, he went back to his see. Whether or not he was ever formally excommunicated is uncertain, though this is suggested by passages in St. *Ambrose and St. *Augustine, and St. *Jerome refers to his followers as 'Luciferians'.

His writings survive in the single MS. Cod. Vat. 133 (s. ix/x). J. P. Migne, PL, xiii. 767–1038. Modern edd. by W. Hartel (C.S.E.L., xiv; 1886) and by G. F. Diercks (C.C., Series Latina, viii; 1978). G. Krüger, Lucifer Bischof von Cagliari und das Schisma der Luciferianer (1886); F. Piva, Lucifero di Cagliari contro l'imperatore Costanzo (Trent, 1928); G. Thörnell, Studia Luciferiana (Uppsala, 1934). C. Zedda, 'La teologia trinitaria di Lucifero di Cagliari' in Divus Thomas, lii (Piacenza, 1949), pp. 276–329. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 469–77; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 367. E. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1032–44.

LUCINA. Several pious women of this name figure in the early traditions and legends of the Roman Church. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis* (s.v. *Cornelius, A.D. 251–3), a certain Lucina removed the bodies of Sts. *Peter and *Paul from their resting-place at the *catacombs ('ad Catacumbas') and laid that of St. Paul in her own property on the *Ostian Way. It appears that she or another Lucina was buried in another property, the 'Crypt of Lucina', on the *Appian Way. G. B. *de Rossi sought to identify the Lucina who gives her name to the crypt with *Pomponia Graecina (1st cent.; q.v.).

J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 80–4; H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (ed. 2, 1927), pp. 179–89. G. Belvederi, 'Le cripte di Lucina' in Riv.A.C., xxi (1945), pp. 121–64. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 2636–61, s.v. 'Lucine (Crypte de)'; A. P. Frutaz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1951), col. 1175. See also bibl. to Pomponia Graecina.

LUCIUS. In legend, the first Christian king of Britain. Acc. to an early form of the story (based apparently on a statement in the '*Liber Pontificalis' that a British king, Lucius, sent a request to the Pope that he might become a Christian), Lucius successfully appealed to Pope Eleutherus (174–89) for Christian teachers to be sent to Britain, and together with large numbers of his subjects received baptism at their hands; the heathen temples were converted into Christian churches; the heathen priesthood abandoned their pagan functions for the Christian ministry; and Lucius is said to have died at *Gloucester in 156. In later times (9th to 16th cent.) the legend was considerably embellished. King Lucius becomes the son of *Simon of Cyrene, is converted by St. *Timothy, and goes as a missionary to Rhaetia, where he establishes himself as the first Bp. of Chur and is martyred by stoning. The details of the later story are apparently due to the conflation of legends about the King of Britain with independent traditions about a Lucius of Chur, who was possibly a historical person. A. *Harnack suggested that the statement in the 'Liber Pontificalis' is due to a confusion between 'Britain' and 'Britis', a name for *Edessa, and that the king mentioned was really *Abgar IX of that city.

The story is related by *Bede, H.E., i. 4 and v. 24 (cf. notes to ed. C. Plummer, ii, Oxford, 1896, p. 14, with useful refl.); *William of Malmesbury, De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesiae, ii, and *Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britanniae, iv. 19 and v. 1. A. Harnack, 'Der Brief des britischen Königs Lucius an den Papst Eleutherus' in Sb. (Berl.), 1904, i, pp. 909–16. A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, i (1869), p. 25 f. V. Berther, 'Der hl. Lucius' in Zeitschrift der Schweizerischen Kirchengeschichte, xxxii (1938), pp. 20–38, 103–24; I. Müller, 'Die Verehrung des hl. Lucius im 9.–12. Jh.', ib., xlviii (1954), pp. 96–126; id., 'Zur karolingischen Hagiographie. Kritik der Luciusvita' in Schweizer Beiträge zur allgemeinen Geschichte, xiv (1956), pp. 5–28. J. Gammack in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 754–6, s.v. 'Lucius (16)'.

LUCY, St. Acc. to tradition, she was a native of Syracuse who openly proclaimed her Christian faith by distributing her goods to the poor at the height of the *Diocletianic persecution. For this act she was denounced to the authorities by the young man to whom she had been betrothed by her parents, and suffered martyrdom in 303. She was much venerated in the early Church, as is shown by her inclusion in the *Canon of the Roman and *Ambrosian Mass. Her acta were utilized by St. *Aldhelm in Tractatus de Laudibus Virginitatis, 42 and in his poem De Laudibus Virginum. There is also a long poem by *Sigebert of Gembloux in her honour. Feast day, 13 Dec.

The details of the acta (prob. 5th–6th cent., surviving in various Gk. and Lat. recensions) from which the story derives are untrustworthy. The Gk. passio was ed. by G. di Giovanni (Palermo, 1758), C. Barreca (Rome, 1902) and G. R. Taibbi (Istituto Siciliano di Studi Bizantini e Neogreci. Testi e Monumenti, Testi vi; 1959); the Lat. passio frequently, e.g. in A. Beaugrand, Sainte Lucie (1882). The most reliable authority for her early cult appears to be an inscription described by P. Orsi, 'Insigne epigrafe del cimitero di S. Giovanni in Siracusa' in R.Q., ix (1895), pp. 299–308. S. L. Agnello, 'Recenti esplorazioni nelle catacombe siracusane di S. Lucia' in Riv. A.C., xxx (1954), pp. 7–60, xxxi (1955), pp. 7–50. G. Goyau, Sainte Lucie (1921); O. Garana, S. Lucia nella tradizione, nella storia, nell'arte (Syracuse, 1958). Collection of pictures ed. M. Capdevila, Iconografia de Santa Lucía (Barcelona, 1949). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 2616–18, s.v. 'Lucie (Sainte)'.

LUDLOW, JOHN MALCOLM FORBES (1821–1911), the founder of *Christian Socialism. Educated in France, where he got to know F. C. M. Fourier and other Socialist pioneers, he came to London in 1838, and in 1843 he was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. In a letter to F. D. *Maurice from *Paris after the Revolution of 1848, he insisted that 'the new Socialism must be Christianized'. He soon became active in literary propaganda, helped to form some co-operative associations for production, which, however, were short-lived, and was largely responsible for promoting the Industrial and Provident Societies Act of 1852. Later he co-operated with Maurice in the founding of the Working Men's College, where he taught for many years. Although overshadowed in public estimation by Maurice and C. *Kingsley, Ludlow was the real founder of the movement and remained its organizer and co-ordinator. A member of the C of E, he believed in Socialism as the truest expression of democracy, but was also convinced that Christian Socialism was possible only if political and industrial emancipation were accompanied by an education spiritual and moral as well as intellectual. Ludlow was well versed in law, politics, and economics, and an accomplished linguist. His influence did much to prevent in England the antagonism between the Church and Socialism that exists in most other countries.

Life by N. C. Masterman (Cambridge, 1963). Sir Norman Moore in D.N.B., 1901–1911 (1912), p. 487 f., s.v. See also works cited under Christian Socialism.

LUDOLF, HIOB (1624–1704), also spelled 'Leutholf', German orientalist. A native of Erfurt, after studying there and at *Leyden he travelled extensively to increase his linguistic knowledge. Having met with an Abyssinian scholar in Italy, he induced him to teach him *Ethiopic. His record of what he learnt of the pronunciation of the language is valuable, since at that date Ethiopic was still spoken in places in Abyssinia. From 1652 to 1678 he was in the employment of the Duke of Saxe-Gotha. In 1683 he visited England to try to establish trade with Abyssinia, but, owing to obstacles raised by the Abyssinian Church, met with no success.

For the rest of his life he devoted himself to study. His many publications did much to introduce to the W. a knowledge of Ethiopic sources and history, which did not advance appreciably till the work of A. *Dillmann. They include a Grammatica Aethiopica (1661; ed. 2, much enlarged and improved, 1702), a Historia Aethiopica (1681), and a Commentarius ad suam Historiam Aethiopicam (1691). In the last-named the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St. *Hippolytus was first made accessible to W. scholars.

His correspondence with Leibniz (mainly on linguistic subjects) was ed. by A. B. Michaelis (Göttingen, 1755). Eng. tr. of his 'New History of Ethiopia' by 'J. P., Gent.' (London, 1682). J. Fleming, 'Hiob Ludolf. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der orientalischen Philologie' in Beiträge für Assyriologie, i (1890), pp. 537–58, ii (1894), pp. 63–110 incl. extracts of docc. in Ethiopic, with Germ. tr. C. F. Bauer, Hiob Ludolf. Der Begründer der äthiopischen Sprachwissenschaft und des äthiopischen Buchdrucks (1937; brief, with specimens of his Ethiopic type and bibl.). E. Ullendorff, The Ethiopians (1960), pp. 9–11.

LUDOLF OF SAXONY (d. 1378), also 'Ludolf the *Carthusian', spiritual writer. Little is known of his life. The often repeated assertion that he was at one time a *Dominican is first found in the 16th cent. In 1340 he became a Carthusian at Strassburg and in 1343 Prior of the Charterhouse at Coblenz, but in 1348 he resumed his status as an ordinary monk and spent the rest of his life at Mainz and Strassburg. His two principal works are a 'Commentary on the Psalms' and his celebrated 'Vita Christi'. The latter is not a biography but a meditation on the life of Christ, with doctrinal, spiritual, and moral instructions as well as prayers and extensive Patristic citations; it became very popular. It was first printed in 1474 at Strassburg and Cologne, and has been very frequently re-issued in a great many languages.

His Comm. on the Psalms was first printed by J. Wimpfeling at Speyer c. 1491. Best modern ed. of his Vita Christi by L. M. Rigollot (Paris, 1878). Mary Immaculate Bodenstedt, The Vita Christi of Ludolphus the Carthusian (Catholic University of America, Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Latin Language and Literature, xvi; Washington, D.C., 1955), with bibl. Pourrat, ii (1923), pp. 484–8. A. Passmann, O.F.M.Cap., 'Probleme um Ludolf von Sachsen' in Archives de l'Église d'Alsace, N.F. iii (1949–50), pp. 13–34. A. Mougel, O.Cart., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 416.

LUGO, JOHN DE (1583–1660), Spanish *Jesuit. After studying law at Salamanca till 1603, he entered the Society in that year. From 1611 he taught philosophy at several Spanish colleges, and from 1616 theology at Valladolid. Called to Rome in 1621, he soon achieved international fame as a theologian, and was made cardinal by *Urban VIII in 1643. During these years were published his chief works, De Incarnatione (1633), De Sacramentis in Genere (1636), De Virtute Fidei Divinae (1646), Responsa Moralia (1651). An independent thinker, Lugo is chiefly important for his teaching on faith and on the sacrifice of the Mass. He held that God gives light sufficient for salvation to every soul, so that all men of good will can find among the errors of their human religious or philosophical systems the elements of Divine truth which will enable them to be saved. In his Eucharistic teaching he emphasized the element of destruction as the distinctive characteristic of sacrificial worship. He held that in the act of Consecration, Christ's human nature is in some manner 'destroyed' by being changed into a lower state from which the normal human activities are excluded and the primary object of its existence is henceforward to be consumed as food. His contributions to dogmatic theology, combined with his luminous exposition of many problems of moral theology, caused St. *Alphonsus Liguori to regard Lugo as 'the most important theologian after St. *Thomas Aquinas'.

Works listed in Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 176–80, and ix (1900), col. 619 f. L. G. Hellín, S.J., Praedestinatio apud Ioannem Cardinalem de Lugo (Analecta Gregoriana, xii; 1938). D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, ii (1909), pp. 373–7. P. Bernard in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), col. 1071 f.

LUIS OF GRANADA (1504–88), Spanish spiritual author. Luis Sarriá, who was born at Granada, was professed there as a *Dominican in 1525. He studied at the college of San Gregorio in Valladolid, where he became a close friend of Bartolomé de Carranza, later Primate of Spain and a victim of the Spanish Inquisition. Back in Andalusia, he spent 11 years at Córdoba (1534–45), restoring the Dominican convent and studying works of devotion. He read the Imitation of Christ and was long thought, probably wrongly, to have translated it into Spanish. He became a disciple of *John of Ávila and himself came to be one of the most widely admired preachers of his day. He was prior of Badajoz by c. 1547. In 1555 he was invited to go to Portugal by the Cardinal Infante Henry and scarcely ever returned to Spain. Provincial of the Portuguese Dominicans from 1556 to 1560, he acted as confessor to the great of the land and later included the Duke of Alba among his penitents. He refused the Archbishopric of Braga, recommending instead his fellow-Dominican *Bartholomew of the Martyrs; his own life he gave to prayer, writing and preaching. His fame and importance rest on his books of spiritual guidance, esp. the Libro de la oración y meditación ('Book on Prayer and Meditation', 1554) and the Guía de pecadores ('Guide for Sinners', 1556–7). He sought to give spiritual guidance to laymen as well as religious. He urged the practice of Christian virtues, which he saw as bringing a sense of confidence, Christian wisdom, liberation from sin, illumination and transformation by the Holy Spirit. He attributed great importance to the interior life, to mental as distinct from vocal prayer, and saw outward ceremonies as unimportant compared with the inner religious life, which was the life of grace. He drew his ideas from many sources, but was particularly indebted to G. *Savonarola and the *Erasmus of the Enchiridion, and stood in the tradition that linked them. His concern with interiority led to his books being placed on the Spanish *Index in 1559, but his ideas largely survived in the revised version published in 1567. He much admired, and was admired by, the Jesuits. Besides other ascetical works, he also wrote lives of John of Ávila and Bartholomew of the Martyrs. His works enjoyed a wide circulation in Spanish and in translation, Italian, French and English, esp. in his own and the following century. He wrote exceptionally fine Spanish prose, and his writings include superb renderings of passages of Scripture.

Collected edd. of his works by D. Sánchez (Madrid, 1679); crit. ed. by J. Cuervo [Arango y Rodríguez Trelles], O.P. (4 vols., Madrid, 1906–8). Id., Biografía de Fr. Luis de Granada (ib., 1895), and other works by the same author. E. A. Peers, Studies of the Spanish Mystics, i (1927), pp. 31–76. M. Bataillon, 'De Savonarole à Louis de Grenade', Revue de Littérature Comparée, xvi (1936), pp. 23–39. Id., Érasme et l'Espagne (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, xxi; 1937; extended treatment in Spanish tr. 2 vols., 1950; ed. 2, 1966: see index s.v. Granada, Fr. Luis de). Fidel de Ros, O.F.M.Cap., 'Los misticos del Norte y Fray Luis de Granada' in Archivo Ibero-Americano, vii (1947), pp. 5–30, 145–65. R. L. Oechslin, O.P., Louis de Grenade ou la rencontre avec Dieu (1954; Eng. tr., 1962). M. Llaneza, Bibliografía del V.P.M. Fr. Luis de Granada, O.P. (4 vols., Salamanca, 1926–8). Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 285–91. Pourrat, iii (1925), pp. 143–53; Eng. tr., iii (1927), pp. 95–101. M. H. Lavocat in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 935–9, s.v. 'Louis de Grenade', with further bibl.

LUKE, St., Evangelist; acc. to tradition the author of the Third Gospel and of *Acts. Several facts of his life can be gathered from the Pauline Epp. and from Acts, if the 'we-sections' (Acts 16. 10–17; 20. 5–21. 18; 27. 1–28. 16) are parts of his travel journal. Acc. to Col. 4. 14 he was a physician, and it has been inferred from Col. 4. 11 that he was a Gentile (an inference corroborated by his idiomatic Greek). He accompanied St. Paul on his Second Missionary Journey from Troas to Philippi (Acts 16. 10–17) and on the Third from Philippi to *Jerusalem (Acts 20. 5–21. 18), and he went with him to Rome, where he stayed during his captivity (Col. 4. 14, 2 Tim. 4. 11, Philem. 24). If a variant in *Codex Bezae at Acts 11. 28 is correct, he would have been one of the first members of the Christian community at *Antioch, a hypothesis made plausible by his interest in and detailed information about the early Antiochene Christians and supported by statements in *Eusebius, St. *Jerome, and others. Acc. to a tradition recorded in the *Anti-Marcionite Prologues, St. Luke was unmarried, wrote his Gospel in Greece, and died at the age of 84. *Origen is the first to identify him with 'the brother' of 2 Cor. 8. 18, a view followed by the Anglican collect for his feast. In 356–7 Constantius II had his relics translated from Thebes in Boeotia to *Constantinople, where they were preserved at the Church of the Apostles, built soon afterwards. The Acta of his alleged martyrdom are legendary.

St. Luke is the patron of doctors. Acc. to later legends he was one of the Seventy of Lk. 10. 1, the unnamed disciple of *Emmaus (Lk. 24. 13–35), and a painter, and in the Middle Ages a picture of the BVM in *Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome, was ascribed to him. He is therefore also the patron of artists. Feast day, 18 Oct.

For bibl., see works cited under foll. entry.

LUKE, Gospel of St. The third of the Synoptic Gospels. From the end of the 2nd cent., its authorship has been attributed to St. *Luke (q.v.), the companion of St. *Paul, on the authority of St. *Irenaeus and *Tertullian. This statement has been generally accepted on the grounds that there is no reason why a Gospel should have been falsely assigned to a comparatively unimportant personage. The date is doubtful. Some scholars, among them A. *Harnack, put it before the death of St. Paul (64), because Acts, which it precedes, contains indications of a date prior to the martyrdom of the Apostle. A serious objection to this view is the prediction, in 19. 43 f. and 21. 20, 24, of the fall of *Jerusalem (70) in much more precise terms than in any of the other Gospels, which has led many scholars to assign to the Gospel a date between A.D. 70 and 100.

The author sets out his method and purpose in a brief Prologue (1. 1–4): in this he claims to have collected his material from eye-witnesses (among whom conservative scholars commonly see the BVM as the principal authority for the Birth Stories in chs. 1–2). Acc. to most modern critics, the Gospel is composed of two main sources, *Mark and the so-called '*Q'; and the material peculiar to Lk. (either including or excluding the Birth Stories) is commonly assigned to a third source called L. Some scholars (following B. H. *Streeter) have argued that the present Gospel is made up of an original first draft, which they call 'Proto-Luke', consisting of Q and L, to which sections of Mk. were added later. More recent studies have tended to concentrate not only on trying to disentangle the oral tradition behind the written sources (see Form-Criticism) but also on investigating the use that the author made of these sources and so to shed light on his own theological understanding of his subject (see Redaction Criticism).

The Gospel is written in idiomatic Greek, and the author is careful to translate all Hebrew and Aramaic terms. Its outstanding characteristic is its insistence on the life, death and teaching of Christ as a message of universal salvation addressed to all men, not only the Jews (e.g. 3. 6 and 24. 47). The author is concerned to relate Christianity to Roman history (cf. his careful dating at 3. 1 f.) and presents his material in the most favourable light from the point of view of the Roman authorities. Thus Pilate is recorded three times as saying that he finds no fault in Jesus (23, vv. 4, 14, 22) and responsibility for the Crucifixion is placed unequivocally on the Jews. Passages peculiar to Lk. stress the Lord's kindness and human understanding, e.g. the Parable of the Prodigal (15. 11–32), his words to the women of Jerusalem (23. 27–31), and the promise to the good thief (23. 43); his care for outcasts; and an austere devotion to poverty, in the first *Beatitude (6. 20) and the Parable of Dives and Lazarus (16. 19–31). There are also a remarkable number of references to women not found in the other Gospels, e.g. *Elizabeth (1. 5–66), the woman who was a sinner (7. 37–50), the widow of Nain (7. 11–17), and the woman in the crowd who blessed Christ's Mother (11. 27), while it is Mary, not *Joseph, who plays the principal part in the Birth Stories. Luke assigns a more prominent place to prayer in his picture of Christ than do the other Evangelists (e.g. 3. 21) and he constantly stresses the activity of the Holy Ghost in the Incarnation (1. 35), in the events of the Lord's life (4, verses 1, 14, 18), and as the guide and inspiration of the Christian community (11. 13, 12. 12).

Patristic works on the Gospel include the Homilies of *Origen on chs. 1–4 and commentaries in Greek by *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theophylact and *Euthymius Zigabenus, and in Lat. by *Ambrose, *Bede and *Walafrid Strabo. Modern commentaries by A. Plummer (I.C.C., 1896), J. *Wellhausen (Berlin, 1904), T. *Zahn (in his own Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, iii; 1913), E. Klostermann (Hb.N.T., ii. 1; 1919), M. J. *Lagrange (Études Bibliques, 1921), B. S. Easton (Edinburgh, 1926), H. Balmforth (Clar. Bib., 1930), W. Manson (Moff. Comm., 1930), J. M. Creed (London, 1930) and A. R. C. Leaney (Black's N.T. Comm., 1958; ed. 2, 1966). W. K. Hobart, The Medical Language of St. Luke (1882); A. Harnack, Lukas der Arzt (1906; Eng. trans., Luke the Physician, 1907); B. *Weiss, Die Quellen des Lukasevangeliums (1907); H. J. Cadbury, The Style and Literary Method of Luke (1920); H. McLachlan, St. Luke, the Man and his Work (1920); A. T. Robertson, Luke the Historian in the Light of Research (1920); B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), pp. 199–270; V. Taylor, Behind the Third Gospel. A Study of the Proto-Luke Hypothesis (1926); H. J. Cadbury, The Making of Luke-Acts (1927); H. Conzelmann, Die Mitte der Zeit. Studien zur Theologie des Lukas (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xvii; 1954; Eng. tr., 1960). C. K. Barrett, Luke the Historian in Recent Study (A. S. Peake Memorial Lecture, 1961). Helmut Flender, Heil und Geschichte in der Theologie des Lukas (Beiträge zur Evangelischen Theologie, xli; 1965; Eng. tr., 1967). L. Cerfaux–J. Cambier, S.D.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 545–94, s.v. 'Luc (Évangile selon Saint)', with extensive bibl.

LULL, RAYMOND, also Llull (c. 1233–c. 1315), lay missionary and philosopher. Of well-to-do parents, Lull was born in Majorca, which had recently been recovered after three centuries under *Islamic rule. He was educated as a knight and became seneschal to the son of James I of Aragon, later James II of Majorca. He married and had two children. At the age of 30 he had a vision of Christ crucified, which led him to devote himself wholly to His service. His chief mission was the conversion of Islam. On the advice of St. *Raymond of Peñafort he remained in Majorca studying Arabic and Christian thought for nine years. During this time he composed his first work, the 'Book of Contemplation'; it was written in Arabic and translated into Catalan. This period of his life culminated in a vision on Mt. Randa (c. 1274), in which the form in which he was to set out his ideas was revealed to him; he worked this out in his 'Art of Finding Truth'. In 1276 he persuaded James II to set up a place of study at Miramar in Majorca where 13 *Franciscans could study oriental languages. The next decade of his life is obscure. From 1287 onwards, when he made his first visit to Paris, he was engaged in constant travel, visiting the courts of France, Aragon and the Pope, trying to win support for his plans for converting Islam, elaborating his ideas, and writing a large number of books and tracts. On three occasions he went on missions in North Africa. His one practical success was the decree of the Council of *Vienne (1311–12) establishing studia of oriental languages in five universities. The often repeated statement that he died a martyr's death at Bougie in N. Africa, stoned by the populace, does not rest on any contemporary evidence.

Lull's basic aim in his writings was the conversion of Islam and of the Jews, 'that in the whole world there may not be more than one language, one belief, one faith' (Blanquerna, c. 94). With this aim he elaborated an approach by which he hoped to convince them by rational argument, without recourse to the authority of Scripture. In his Art (in its final elaboration, Ars generalis ultima, finished in 1308), he attempted to relate 'all forms of knowledge (including religious belief) to the manifestations of God's "Dignities" [i.e. Divine Attributes] in the universe, taking for its point of departure the monotheistic vision common to Judaism, Islam and Christianity, and their acceptance of a broadly Neoplatonic exemplarist world-picture, and arguing . . . analogically up and down "the ladder of being"' (R. D. F. Pring-Mill). In his exposition Lull made extensive use of diagrams and of the representation of philosophical terms by letters of the alphabet, which, rightly combined, could, he held, provide the solution to any problem. He had no training in the scholastic theology of the universities and his works seemed difficult and strange to many, but for a few they had a strong attraction, and his writings were widely diffused. Among those whom he influenced was *Nicholas of Cusa.

As a mystic Lull has been considered the forerunner of St. *Teresa and St. *John of the Cross. His conception of the mystic life centres in the contemplation of the Divine perfections, which is achieved by the purification of memory, understanding, and will, and results in action for the greater glory of God. He was one of the most ardent defenders of the *Immaculate Conception in the Middle Ages. His cult, which developed soon after his death, was hindered by the ecclesiastical authorities owing to the difficulties in his teaching, but it was approved by *Pius IX in 1847. Interest in him has been steadily growing in recent times.

First crit. ed. of his Latin Opera by I. Salzinger (8 vols., 'i–vi' and 'ix–x', Mainz, 1721–48); Opera Latina also ed. by F. Stegmüller (i–v, Majorca, 1959–67); continued by H. Harada, O.F.M., and H. Riedlinger (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, etc.; 1975 ff.). Obres, ed. M. Obrador y Bennásar and others (Majorca, 1906 ff.). Obres essencials ed. M. Batllori, S.J. (2 vols., Barcelona, 1957–[60]), incl. life. Liber Predicationis Contra Judaeos, ed. J. M. Millás Vallicrosa (Madrid–Barcelona, 1957). Eng. trr. from the Catalan by E. A. Peers of his Blanquerna. A Thirteenth-Century Romance (London [1926]), The Book of the Lover and the Beloved (ib., 1923), The Art of Contemplation (ib., 1925), The Tree of Life (ib., 1926) and The Book of the Beasts (ib., 1927). The principal authority for his life is a contemporary Life surviving in Lat. and Catalan. Lat. text ed. by B. de Gaiffier, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xlviii (1930), pp. 130–78, with refs. E. A. Peers, Ramón Lull. A Biography (1929), with full bibl. refs. E. W. Platzeck, Raimund Lull. Sein Leben, seine Werke, die Grundlagen seines Denkens (Bibliotheca Franciscana, v–vi; Düsseldorf, 1962–4). J. N. Hillgarth, Ramón Lull and Lullism in Fourteenth-Century France (Oxford Warburg Studies, 1971). M. C. Díaz y Díaz, Index Scriptorum Latinorum Medii Aevi Hispanorum (Madrid, 1959), pp. 348–84. E. Longpré, O.F.M., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1072–1141, s.v., with full bibl. R. D. F. Pring-Mill in E.B. (ed. 1968), xiii, p. 173 f., s.v. 'Llull, Ramón'.

LULLUS, St. (d. 786), Bp. of Mainz. Like St. *Boniface an Anglo-Saxon, he was educated and ordained deacon at *Malmesbury. Proceeding to Rome and then to Germany, he became closely associated with Boniface, on whose behalf he went on a mission to Pope *Zacharias in 751. Having been promised by *Pepin the Younger succession to Boniface in the see of Mainz, he was consecrated a *chorepiscopus c. 752. After Boniface's death (754), however, a long dispute ensued between Lullus and Sturmius, the Abbot of *Fulda, when Lullus attempted to end the exemption of Fulda from the jurisdiction of Mainz and its direct dependence on Rome, which his predecessor had secured; and Lullus did not receive the pallium till c. 781. After his failure over Fulda, Lullus founded a separate monastery at Hersfeld, where he was afterwards buried. His influence and reputation for learning are reflected in his large correspondence with many of the leading figures of his time. Feast day, 16 Oct.

Letters of St. Boniface and St. Lullus ed. M. Tangl (M.G.H., Epistolae Selectae, i; 1916). J. F. Böhmer–C. Will (edd.), Regesten zur Geschichte der Mainzer Erzbischöfe, i (Innsbruck, 1887), pp. 34–45. Life by *Lambert of Hersfeld pr. among the latter's works (ed. O. Holder-Egger, Hanover, &c., 1894), pp. 305–40. T. Schieffer, 'Angelsachsen und Franken' in Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur [in Mainz]. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, Jahrg. 1950, No. 20, pt. 2, II, 'Erzbischof Lul und die Anfänge des Mainzer Sprengels', pp. 1471–1529. J. Hörle, 'Breviarium Sancti Lulli — Gestalt und Gehalt' in Archiv für Mittelrheinische Kirchengeschichte, xii (1960), pp. 18–52. For Lullus's Profession of Faith see W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures for 1943; 1946), Appendix II, pp. 233–40; text repr. in T. Schieffer, op. cit., pp. 1535–9. W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 757–61.

LUNA, PEDRO DE. See Benedict XIII.

LUND. Constituted a bishopric suffragan to Hamburg-Bremen in the middle of the 10th cent., it was established as an independent archbishopric in 1104. Apart from a brief period from 1133 onwards, it continued to possess its archiepiscopal status till the see was suppressed in 1536. The university dates from 1668. In the 19th cent. its theological faculty stood for a conservative and 'High Church' tradition in contrast to the liberalizing theology of *Upsala. From 15 to 28 Aug. 1952 it was the scene of a Conference of the *Faith and Order Commission of the *World Council of Churches on 'The Church, Ways of Worship and Intercommunion'.

L. Weibull (ed.), Diplomatarium Diocesis Lundensis. Lunds Arkestifts Urkundsbok (Lund, 1900 ff.). Studies on the Cathedral by O. Rydbeck (Lund, 1915), E. H. G. Wrangel (ib., 1923), and E. Newman (2 vols., Stockholm, 1946). M. J. J. Weibull, Lunds Universitets Historia (ed. L. Weibull–C. G. Weibull; Lund, 1918). The Transactions of the Third World Conference on Faith and Order held at Lund, Aug. 1952, ed. O. S. Tomkins (London, 1953).

LUPERCALIA. A pagan fertility festival which continued to be observed on 15 Feb. in Christian Rome until *Gelasius I superseded it in 494 with the Feast of the *Purification (2 Feb.).

LUPUS, St. (c. 383–479), Bp. of Troyes. After seven years in wedlock with Pimeniola, the sister of St. *Hilary of Arles, he and his wife agreed to separate and devote themselves more strictly to religion. Having made his way to *Lérins, Lupus there embraced the monastic life in 426. Shortly afterwards (427), however, he accepted the bishopric of Troyes, and held the see for some fifty years. The supposition that he was associated with St. *Germanus of Auxerre in his mission to Britain against the *Pelagians in 429 rests on insufficient evidence, and the story that by his entreaties he preserved his country from the ravages of *Attila and his Huns is almost certainly fictitious. Feast day, 29 July.

Two of his letters, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxviii, 63–8, survive. His Life (prob. 8th cent. and of little value) has been ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vii (1920), pp. 284–302.

LUPUS, SERVATUS (c. 805–62), Abbot of Ferrières. Born in the diocese of Sens, he entered the abbey of Ferrières at an early age. About 829 he went to *Fulda, where he studied under *Rabanus Maurus and met *Gottschalk (q.v.), with whom he remained in contact throughout his life. In 836 he returned to Ferrières, was presented at the court of *Louis the Pious, and gained the favour of the Empress Judith. In 840 he became Abbot of Ferrières. He took part in many synods, among them Germigny (843), and even in some military enterprises. His comparatively few writings include a 'Life of St. Wigbert' (836) and a disputed 'Life of St. Maximin of Trier' (839). His collection of 132 letters, addressed to famous correspondents such as Benedict III, Charles the Bald, *Hincmar of Reims, and Rabanus Maurus, are a primary source for the history of his era. They also provide evidence of his search for good texts of the works of the Fathers and of classical Latin authors. A number of manuscripts written, corrected and annotated in his hand, have survived. His principal theological work, the 'Liber de Tribus Questionibus' (c. 850), which arose out of the controversy provoked by Gottschalk, defended an integral *Augustinianism, though in a less rigid sense than Gottschalk. He affirmed that in fallen man freewill left to its own powers was capable only of evil, that there was a predestination to hell as well as to eternal life, and that the text of 1 Tim. 2. 4, acc. to which it is God's will that all men should be saved, is to be interpreted in a restricted sense as applying only to the elect. The work is supplemented by the 'Collectaneum de Tribus Questionibus', a body of materials of interest for its wide acquaintance with the Fathers. Towards the end of his life he numbered *Heiric of Auxerre among his pupils.

Collected ed. of his works by É. *Baluze (Paris, 1664; ed. 2, Antwerp, 1710, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxix, 427–700). Crit. edd. of his Vita Wigberti by O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 36–43, and of his letters by E. Dümmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, vi (1925), pp. 1–126, and by L. Levillain (Les Classiques de l'histoire de France publiés . . . sous les auspices de l'Association Guillaume Budé, x and xvi; 1927–35). Eng. tr. by G. W. Regenos (The Hague, 1966). F. Sprotte, Biographie des Abtes Servatus Lupus von Ferrières (1880). E. von Severus, O.S.B., Lupus von Ferrières. Gestalt und Wert eines Vermittlers antiken Geistesgutes an das Mittelalter im IX. Jahrhundert (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xxi; 1940). W. Levison, 'Eine Predigt des Lupus von Ferrières' in Kultur- und Universalgeschichte Walter Goetz zu seinem 60. Geburtstage dargebracht (1927), pp. 3–14; repr. in Aus Rheinischer und Fränkischer Frühzeit (Düsseldorf, 1948), pp. 557–66. C. H. Beeson, Lupus of Ferrières as a Scribe and Text Critic. A Study of his Autograph Copy of Cicero's De Oratore . . . with a Facsimile of the Manuscript (The Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication iv; Cambridge, Mass., 1930). Elisabeth Pellegrin, 'Les Manuscrits de Loup de Ferrières. A propos du MS. Orléans 162 (139) corrigé de sa main' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, cxv (for 1957; 1958), pp. 5–31. Z. C. Snijders, Het Latijn der Brieven van Lupus van Ferrières (Amsterdam, 1943). Eleanor S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, 1962), pp. 161–201. Manitius, i (1911), pp. 483–90.

LUTHER, MARTIN (1483–1546), founder of the German Reformation. The son of a miner at Mansfeld in Saxony, he was educated at the Cathedral School at Magdeburg, at Eisenach, and at Erfurt university (1501–5), where he studied esp. philosophy. In 1505 he entered the monastery of the *Augustinian Hermits at Erfurt, in fulfilment of a vow made during a thunderstorm. He was ordained priest in 1507, and in the following year was sent as lecturer to the recently founded university of *Wittenberg, continuing his studies and lecturing on moral philosophy. In 1510 he was sent to Rome on affairs of his order. Soon after his return to Wittenberg in 1511 he became doctor of theology and professor of Scripture, holding this post till his death. In 1515 he was made vicar of his order, an office entailing the charge of 11 Augustinian monasteries.

From now onwards his teaching diverged increasingly from the traditional Catholic beliefs and began to assume a characteristic shape. He was influenced by the *Nominalism taught at the contemporary universities and the exaggerated pessimism prevalent in the Augustinian Order; but the chief factor in its development seems to have been his own passionate and melancholy nature.

Anxiety about his own salvation caused him many scruples; and the fact that the routine of the religious life failed to bring him confidence and relief led him at last to give up such of his regular religious duties as the daily celebration of Mass and the recital of the Divine Office. About this time took place also the so-called 'Turmerlebnis' ('Tower experience', usually dated between 1512 and 1515). This took the form of a sudden revelation which convinced him of the essence of the Gospel, namely that faith alone justifies without works, and gave him a belief destined to become the corner-stone of his creed. He found support for this doctrine in certain passages in St. *Augustine's anti-*Pelagian writings as well as in the mystics, esp. J. Tauler and the Theologia Germanica, with their emphasis on the nothingness of man before God. From 1516 he gradually came to deny, as a consequence of his belief that faith entails the certitude of salvation for every Christian, the necessity for the mediatorial function of the Church and the priesthood. When in 1517 J. *Tetzel preached on the *Indulgences granted by *Leo X for contributions to the renovation of *St. Peter's in Rome, the crisis came. Against the Indulgences Luther drew up his famous 95 theses, which he affixed to the door of the Schlosskirche at Wittenberg. Within a fortnight they had spread throughout Germany, where they were welcomed esp. by the Humanists and other circles desiring the reform of the Church.

In the fierce conflict which soon arose, the attack on Luther was conducted at first esp. by J. *Eck. The ecclesiastical authorities hoped to settle the affair by means of monastic discipline; but at the chapter of the order, held at Heidelberg in 1518, Luther conducted a disputation in the course of which he won over several of his brethren and the Dominican M. *Bucer, and the rift only grew greater. In the same year Luther was tried in Rome for spreading heretical doctrines. He was also summoned before Card. *Cajetan at Augsburg but, refusing to recant, he fled to Wittenberg under the protection of his prince, the Elector *Frederick III of Saxony. Negotiations with the Papal camerarius, C. von *Miltitz, achieved nothing more than a promise from Luther that he would keep silence if his opponents did the same. At a disputation held with Eck at Leipzig in 1519 he denied both the primacy of the Pope and the infallibility of the General Councils.

In 1520 the break with the medieval Church was completed by his three celebrated reforming writings of that year. The first, An den christlichen Adel deutscher Nation, was addressed to the German princes, whom he invited to take the reform of the Church into their own hands, and to abolish tributes to Rome, the celibacy of the clergy, Masses for the dead, pilgrimages, religious orders, and other Catholic practices and institutions. The tremendous success which greeted this pamphlet led him to issue his De Captivitate Babylonica Ecclesiae (publd. in Latin and German, Von der babylonischen Gefangenschaft der Kirche). He considered that the Babylonian captivity of the Church consisted in the denial to the laity of Communion in both kinds, and in the doctrines of *Transubstantiation and the Sacrifice of the Mass. Only Baptism and the Eucharist were held to be Sacraments. In the last of the trilogy, Von der Freiheit eines Christenmenschen, he proclaimed the liberation of the Christian by faith, which frees him from the obligation of performing good works. By the bull '*Exsurge Domine' of 15 June 1520, 41 of Luther's theses were censured as heretical; his writings were ordered to be destroyed; and he himself was threatened with the ban if he did not retract within 60 days. Luther replied by burning the bull together with a number of Catholic books, and was duly excommunicated by the bull 'Decet Romanum Pontificem' of 3 Jan. 1521.

Summoned before the Diet of *Worms in 1521, where he again refused to recant, Luther was put under the ban of the Empire. The Elector of Saxony, however, fearing for his safety, arranged a simulated attack on him and had him brought to the *Wartburg, nr. Eisenach, where he spent the next eight months fighting his doubts as to the rightfulness of his action as temptations of the devil, and regarding his condemnation by Church and State as trials sent to confirm his mission. He also wrote many pamphlets, e.g. against monastic vows and the Sacrifice of the Mass. Much the most enduring of his literary productions begun in this period was his fine translation of the Bible. The first version in German from the original text, it is remarkable for its power and warmth. In its successful use of popular speech, it brought the Bible to life in the German language, and made it henceforward a dominant influence in German religion. It also contributed largely to the formation of the modern German tongue.

While Luther was living in seclusion at the Wartburg his ideas spread rapidly throughout the country. Hand in hand with the revival of popular religious enthusiasm went the abandonment of many traditional practices. Priests married, monks and nuns left their monasteries. *Carlstadt, however, joined the *Anabaptists and, seeking to destroy all altars, images, and crucifixes, proceeded to such lengths that, in 1522, Luther found it necessary to leave the Wartburg and return to Wittenberg to restore order with the help of the secular authorities. He resumed his lectures and abolished many Catholic practices, including private Mass, Confession, and fasts. In 1524 he finally discarded his religious habit, and in the next year, shortly after the death of the Elector, who had discountenanced marriages between priests and religious, married the former *Cistercian nun, Catherine von Bora. In the same year he advised the German princes to wage war against the peasants who had risen in arms, an attitude which cost him the sympathies of a large section of the population. (See Peasants' Revolt, The.)

The religious and political situation, however, continued to favour the spread of his teaching. His noble German hymns, which gave the congregation a larger part in the service, won many for his innovations; and his work was facilitated esp. by the decision of the Diet of *Speyer in 1526, which established the right of the princes to organize national Churches. Already the movement had spread to other countries. But now differences among the Reformers began to be serious. At the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529), a deep cleavage between Luther and H. *Zwingli on the nature of the Eucharistic Presence revealed itself. In 1530, though prevented from appearing at the Diet of *Augsburg on account of the ban of the Empire, he approved of the comparatively conciliatory '*Augsburg Confession' (Confessio Augustana), drawn up by P. *Melanchthon, but discountenanced all further attempts at restoring union with the Catholic Church. In the *Schmalkalden Articles (1537) the doctrinal differences between Luther and Rome were further emphasized. In 1539 he sanctioned the bigamous marriage of *Philip of Hesse, in a written document, though he later endeavoured to minimize his responsibility for this action. His last years were darkened by the increasing dissensions among his adherents which could be subdued only by placing the cause of doctrinal unity in the hands of the secular authorities.

Apart from his three writings of 1520, Luther published a great number of works, mostly small occasional pamphlets, with no attempt at a systematic elaboration of his doctrine. Among them is the treatise De Votis Monasticis (1521), in which he presented the religious life as it appeared to him after he had broken away from it. His passionate reply to *Henry VIII's Defence of the Seven Sacraments, entitled Contra Henricum Regem Anglicum (1522), lost him the sympathies of England. His views on the incapability of the human will to follow the good are laid down in De Servo Arbitrio (1525), a reply to *Erasmus's De Libero Arbitrio. His Kleiner Katechismus and Grosser Katechismus (both 1529) were designed to propagate his teaching among the people. From 1529 to his death his disciples wrote down the Tischreden, conversations at table with his family and friends, in which he developed all his favourite ideas. His writings contain many passages of deep religious feeling, but he also gives free play to his love of abuse and obscenities and his hatred of the Papacy, the bitterest attack on which was his last work, Wider das Papsttum zu Rom, vom Teufel gestiftet (1545).

Luther's character, very complex in itself, has attracted both fervent admiration and violent enmity. His deep emotions completely controlled his powers of judgement. His great command of language and his successful oratory won him a wide popular hearing, but in controversy he had few scruples as to the character of his arguments, and to attempt to assess conflicting evidence dispassionately was quite foreign to his nature. His central doctrines were a mirror of his temperament and of his own experiences. His deep pessimism led him to affirm the total depravity of mankind and the uselessness of human reason, whereas his personal need for a 'gracious God' created the doctrine of the imputation of Christ's merits by faith alone, without any human co-operation. Even Baptism could not restore man's freedom for the good. The movements of concupiscence which remain after Baptism he held to be mortal sins. Man is, in fact, wholly under the power of evil and can do nothing but sin. Justification is something which is accomplished in man by a kind of legal fiction, acc. to which God regards sinful man as righteous, owing to the merits of Christ, though in reality he remains as sinful as before. In the hymn, 'Aus tieffer Not schrey ich zu dyr', Luther expressed his thought: 'Es ist doch unser Tun umsonst, auch in dem besten Leben' ('All we do is in vain, even in the best life'). But the complete uselessness and even sinfulness of all human activity which would logically follow from such teaching were never admitted either by Luther himself or by his followers. The negative attitude to religious human effort, however, showed itself in the growing dichotomy of interior religion and exterior behaviour, with the consequence that Luther left the latter, including all outward manifestations of religion, to be entirely regulated by the secular powers. See Lutheranism.

The standard critical ed. of Luther's works is the 'Weimarer Ausgabe' ed. J. C. F. Knaake and others (Weimar, 1883 ff.). It contains his writings, lectures, table talk, correspondence, and material on his tr. of the Bible. Selected docc. on Luther's mental development to 1519, ed. O. Scheel (Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, Reihe ii, Hft. 9; 1911). Eng. tr. of complete works ed. J. Pelikan and H. T. Lehmann (55 vols., St. Louis, Mo., and Philadelphia, 1955 ff.); also of selected 'Reformation Writings' by B. L. Woolf (2 vols., 1952–6); other selections from his letters by Margaret A. Currie (London, 1908) and in P. Smith, The Life and Letters of Martin Luther (1911) and 'Letters of Spiritual Counsel' ed. and tr. T. G. Tappert (Library of Christian Classics, xviii; 1955), 'Lectures on Romans' ed. and tr. by W. Pauck (ib., xv; 1961); 'Early Theological Works', ed. and tr. by J. Atkinson (ib., xvi; 1962), and 'On Free Will', by P. S. Watson (ib., xvii; 1970). Modern Eng. tr. of Comm. on Gal. ed. id. (London, 1953). Older Eng. tr. of his 'Primary Works', ed. H. Wace–C. A. Buchheim (London, 1896), is still useful.

Modern historical and biographical studies include G. [G. B.] Ritter, Luther. Gestalt und Tod (1922; ed. 6, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963); J. Lortz, Die Reformation in Deutschland, i (1939; revised ed., 1949; Eng. tr., 1968); R. H. Bainton, Here I Stand. A Life of Martin Luther (1951); R. H. Fife, The Revolt of Martin Luther (New York, 1957); F. Lau, Luther (Berlin, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963); and E. H. Erikson, Young Man Luther. A Study in Psychoanalysis and History (1959). A. G. Dickens, Martin Luther and the Reformation ('Teach Yourself History', 1967). R. Friedenthal, Luther. Sein Leben und seine Zeit (1967; Eng. tr., 1970); H. G. Haile, Luther. A Biography (New York, 1980; London, 1981).

On his theology, T. Harnack, Luther's Theologie mit besonderer Beziehung auf seine Versöhnungs- und Erlösungslehre (2 vols., 1862–86) and K. Holl, Gesammelte Aufsätze, Bd. i, Luther (1921); Bd. iii, Der Westen (1928), are still indispensable. P. S. Watson, Let God be God! An Interpretation of the Theology of Martin Luther (1947); [E.] G. Rupp, The Righteousness of God. Luther Studies (Birkbeck Lectures, 1947; 1953); G. Ebeling, Luther. Einführung in sein Denken (Tübingen, 1964; Eng. tr., 1970); I. D. K. Siggins, Martin Luther's Doctrine of Christ (1970). Seminal essays on specific doctrines by W. von Lowenich, Luthers Theologia Crucis (Munich, 1929; ed. 4, 1954); G. F. Wingren, Luthers lära om kallelsen (Lund, 1942; Eng. tr., The Christian's Calling, Philadelphia, 1957; London, 1958); R. Prenter, Spiritus Creator. Studier i Luthers Theologi (Copenhagen, 1946; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1953); J. Heckel, Lex charitatis. Eine juristische Untersuchung über das Recht in der Theologie Martin Luthers (Abh. (Bayr.), N.F., xxxvi; 1953); E. Bizer, Fides ex auditu. Eine Untersuchung über die Entdeckung der Gerechtigkeit Gottes durch Martin Luther (Neukirchen, 1958). A useful tool is K. Aland, Hilfsbuch zum Lutherstudium (Gütersloh, [1956]).

Index of Luthers Schriften, ed. G. Kawerau (Halle, 1917; ed. 2, Leipzig, 1929). Recent publications listed in the Jahrbuch der Luthergesellschaft (Wittenberg, 1920 ff.).

J. Köstlin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 720–56, s.v.; J. Paquier in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1146–335, s.v.; J. Mackinnon in E.B. (ed. 14), xiv (1929), pp. 491–8; H. Bornkamm–G. Ebeling in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 480–520, s.v., with extensive bibl.; E. G. Rupp in E.B. (1968 ed.), xiv, pp. 436–43, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to Reformation.

LUTHERANISM. The teaching of M. *Luther found early systematic expression in several formularies of which the chief were his own Catechisms (1529), the Augsburg Confession* (1530), the *Articles of Schmalkalden (1537), and the *Formula of Concord (1577), all of which were combined in the Book of Concord of 1580 (qq.v.). In these the Scriptures are affirmed to be the sole rule of faith, to which the Creeds and other traditional statements of belief are all subordinated. The principal Lutheran tenet is *justification by faith alone (sola fide). As *Original Righteousness, which at the creation was an integral part of human nature, was irretrievably lost by the Fall, man was henceforward no longer free to do the good but now lives in bondage to the rule of sin. Redemption consists in his justification by faith in Christ, by reason of which, though in fact as great a sinner as before, he is accounted righteous in the sight of God without co-operation on his part. The strongest emphasis was laid on the all-pervading action of God, and hence the soteriological aspects of Christianity became central. The danger of a thoroughgoing *quietism which might have been expected from the denial of human freedom was averted by the practical sense of the Reformer and by subsequent developments which interpreted Luther's own doctrines with greater latitude than their supporters usually readily admitted.

In the later 16th and early 17th cents. these doctrines were elaborated in a scholastic mould which gave it a severely intellectual cast. Against this scholastic 'Orthodoxy' the *Pietism of the later 17th cent. strongly reacted. Even the sola fide teaching was abandoned and the necessity of personal sanctification emphasized. In the 18th cent. Rationalism made great inroads into Lutheranism and led to an increasing depreciation of all supernatural elements in Christianity, though here again the movement of N. L. von *Zinzendorf and of the *Herrnhuters was a reaction on Pietist lines. In the 19th cent. German Lutheranism underwent a crisis when Frederick William III of Prussia decreed (1817) the union between Lutherans and Reformed in his kingdom. The formation of the 'Altlutheraner' in 1830 and an increasing doctrinal imprecision on the part of the state Church were the results. This development was fostered by a growing interest in Biblical criticism, which threatened to remove the Lutheran foundations. In modern times, however, several factors have combined to bring about a revival of Lutheran orthodoxy, notably the teaching of K. *Barth, who, though a *Calvinist, has exercised a powerful influence on all Continental Protestant bodies, and the persecution of Christianity by the Third Reich, which produced a great renewal of the religious spirit among both pastors and congregations. See also Confessing Church.

After the end of the Second World War (1945) attempts were made to unite all the Lutheran Churches in Germany in a 'United Evangelical Lutheran Church of Germany'(VELKD, Vereinigte Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirche Deutschlands) inside the looser framework of the new federal '*Evangelical Church in Germany' (EKD, Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland); the latter, which was formally constituted in July 1948 at Eisenach under the presidency of Theophil Wurm, Bp. of Württemberg, embraces Lutherans, Calvinists, and 'United'. By the end of 1949 all the Lutheran Churches in Germany except those of Oldenburg and Württemberg (but not of course the Lutheran majorities in the 'United Churches', e.g. of Prussia) had joined the former. Its original Chairman was Hans Meiser, Bp. of Bavaria, its Vice-Chairman, Hans Lilje, Bp. of Hanover, who in 1949 was also elected Vice-Chairman of the Council of the 'Evangelical Church in Germany'.

Apart from Germany, where Lutheranism had been accepted by two-thirds of the population before the end of the 16th cent., and where there are still over 35 million Lutherans, Lutheranism became the official religion in the Scandinavian countries (for details see Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Christianity in). From all these countries Lutherans migrated to the *United States of America and *Canada. The earliest of them arrived in the 17th cent., but the first substantial numbers of settlers came in the first three quarters of the 18th cent. The majority of them were German-speaking, but they and their descendants had become Americanized before the arrival of the next influx of Lutherans from Europe in the period from the middle of the 19th cent. to the beginning of the First World War. The variety of the backgrounds of the Lutherans who came to America, as well as the spaces in time of their arrival, led to a proliferation of Lutheran bodies in the U.S.A. Gradually, however, and esp. in the present cent., there have been series of mergers between the various American Lutheran bodies, who are now mainly comprised in the American Lutheran Church (which came into being in 1960) and the Lutheran Church in America (1962), which together number six million people. There has also been missionary activity which has led to the establishment of Lutheran Churches in Australia and Latin America. Most Lutheran Churches of the world were loosely affiliated in 1923 in the 'Lutheran World Convention', which in 1947 developed into the 'Lutheran World Federation'. Members of this body belong to the *World Council of Churches.

In Europe, Lutheranism has usually been organized in state Churches, the head of the state being at the same time the chief authority of the Church, and it has thus contributed to the modern growth of state absolutism and nationalism. Religious questions are settled either by secular legislation or by a consistorium appointed by the government. There is only one order of clergy, normally examined and provided for by the government. The superior officials in the German Lutheran Churches (until 1918 appointed by the state) are the '*General Superintendents', though under the Third Reich the title of 'Bishop' was revived; this had been kept in *Denmark and *Sweden. Both clergy and laity are organized in synods. The worship varies in the different countries; but its principal feature is always the sermon, set in the framework of a vernacular Liturgy. Holy Communion used to be received rarely, preferably on Good Friday. Lutheranism has always favoured a sound elementary and secondary education as well as theological and Biblical studies, and such modern branches of Biblical knowledge as *Textual Criticism, *Higher Criticism and *Form Criticism have been to a very great extent the creation of Lutheran scholars.

Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche, ed. by the Deutscher Evangelischer Kirchenausschuss (Göttingen, 1930; ed. 5, 1963). There is a collection of early Lutheran confessions pr., with Eng. tr., in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 1–189, with comment in vol. i (1877), pp. 211–353. Eng. tr. of a number of primary docc. in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966). 16th cent. 'Kirchenordnung', ed. E. Sehling (Leipzig, and later Tübingen, 1902 ff.). W. Elert, Morphologie des Luthertums (2 vols., 1931–2; Eng. tr., Saint Louis, 1962 ff.); id., Der christliche Glaube. Grundlinien der lutherischen Dogmatik (1940; ed. 3 by E. Kinder, 1956); id., Das christliche Ethos. Grundlinien der lutherischen Ethik (1949). E. Schlink, Theologie der lutherischen Bekenntnisschriften (1940; ed. 3, 1948; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1961); P. Althaus, Die christliche Wahrheit. Lehrbuch der Dogmatik (2 vols., 1947–8). E. Kinder, Der evangelische Glaube und die Kirche. Grundzüge des evangelisch-lutherischen Kirchenverständnisses (1958; ed. 2, 1960). C. [J. I.] Bergendoff, The Church of the Lutheran Reformation. A Historical Survey of Lutheranism (Saint Louis, 1967). I. A. *Dorner Geschichte der Protestantischen Theologie (1867; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1871); P. Tschackert, Die Entstehung der lutherischen und der reformierten Kirchenlehre samt ihren innerprotestantischen Gegensätzen [to 1580] (1910); H. Leube, Kalvinismus und Luthertum im Zeitalter der Orthodoxie (vol. i only publd., 1928); H. E. Weber, Reformation, Orthodoxie und Rationalismus (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Reihe 2, Bde. xxxv, li, parts 1 and 2 only publd., 1935–51); H. Stephan, Geschichte der evangelischen Theologie seit dem Idealismus (Sammlung Töpelmann, Reihe 1, ix; 1938); id., Luther in den Wandlungen seiner Kirche (ed. 2, 1951). E. Fischer, Zur Geschichte der evangelischen Beichte (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, viii, Hft. 2, and ix, Hft. 4; 1902–3); E. *Troeltsch, Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1912), pp. 427–605 (Eng. tr., 1931, ii, 461–576). R. Rocholl, Geschichte der Evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland (1897). A. L. Drummond, German Protestantism since Luther (1951). A. Jundt, Histoire résumée de l'Église luthérienne en France (1935). A. R. Wentz, A Basic History of Lutheranism in America (Philadelphia, 1955). V. Fern, The Crisis in American Lutheran Theology. A Study of the Issue between American Lutheranism and Old Lutheranism (New York, 1927). A. R. Wentz (ed.), The Lutheran Churches of the World, 1952 (Geneva, 1952). S. Grundmann, Der Lutherische Weltbund. Grundlagen, Herkunft, Aufbau (1957). J. Bodensieck (ed.), The Encyclopedia of the Lutheran Church (3 vols., Minneapolis, 1965). H. E. Jacobs in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 202–4, s.v.; H. Fagerberg and others in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 530–48, s.v. 'Luthertum', with bibl. See also bibl. to preceding entry, Reformation and to individual countries where Lutherans are the main religious body.

LUX MUNDI. A 'Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation' published in 1889 by a group of Oxford Anglican teachers under the editorship of C. *Gore, then Principal of Pusey House. The other contributors included H. S. *Holland, E. S. *Talbot, R. C. *Moberly and F. *Paget. Its purpose was 'to put the Catholic faith into its right relation to modern intellectual and moral problems'. At the time interest in the book was directed esp. to a few pages in Gore's own essay on 'The Holy Spirit and Inspiration', in which by accepting in principle the new critical views of the OT, he definitely broke with the conservative position of E. B. *Pusey and the *Tractarians. For this reason the book caused grave distress to many of the older school of High Churchmen, e.g. H. P. *Liddon.

LUXEUIL. The abbey, established c. 590 by St. *Columbanus on the site of the Roman Luxovium (about 20 miles north-east of Vesoul), soon became the most important in France. The abbey of *Corbie was founded c. 660 by some of its monks. Destroyed in 732 by the *Saracens, under *Charlemagne it was re-established, henceforward under the *Benedictine Rule. The abbey ceased to exist in 1790, though the abbey church is still in use as a parish church.

'Chronicon Luxoviense Breve' (from origins to 1039), ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iii (1839), pp. 219–21. H. Baumont, Étude historique sur l'abbaye de Luxeuil, 590–1790 (Luxeuil, 1895); E. de Beauséjour, L'Église abbatiale de Luxeuil (Besançon, 1891). Lectionary of Luxeuil [Par. lat. 9427], ed. P. Salmon, O.S.B. (Collectanea Biblica Latina, vii and ix; Rome, 1944–53). Mélanges colombaniens. Congrès International d'Études Colombaniennes. Luxeuil, 20–23 juil. 1950 (Paris, 1951). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), cols., 2722–87, s.v., with full bibl.

LXX. An abbreviation in common use for the *Septuagint (q.v.).

LYCH-GATE (Old Eng. lic [cf. Ger. Leiche], 'corpse'). The roofed gateway to a churchyard beneath which the coffin is set down to await the arrival of the officiating minister.

LYING. A lie is a statement not in accordance with the mind of the speaker, made with the intention of deceiving. In the OT the practice of lying is denounced as an attribute of sinners (Lev. 19. 11, Ps. 5. 6, Prov. 6. 17), though it is sometimes recorded of otherwise righteous people, e.g. of *Abraham (Gen. 20. 2), *Jacob (Gen. 27. 32), and *David (1 Sam. 21. 2). These lies, however, are usually regarded as excusable because they were told in cases of necessity without the intention to hurt. In the NT the standard is higher, and lying is so abhorrent that for the disciple a simple affirmation of the truth is to take the place of an oath (Mt. 5. 37). St. Paul, too, exhorts Christians to put away falsehood (Eph. 4. 25, Col. 3. 9), and in the Bk. of Rev. the virgins who follow the Lamb are praised because 'in their mouth was found no lie' (14. 5). The NT teaching is followed by the Fathers, though with slight divergences. Some of them, e.g. *Origen, St. *Hilary, St. *Jerome and St. *Chrysostom, held that a lie may be lawful, e.g. in order to save an innocent man from death. St. *Augustine, however, and following him St. *Thomas Aquinas, hold that lying is always sinful, because it perverts the nature of human speech, which is meant to express man's thought, not to disguise it. Acc. to St. Thomas lies are never lawful, and even 'officious' lies, i.e. those told for the benefit of someone without the intention of deceiving, and 'jocose' lies, told for amusement, are reprehensible. St. Thomas admits, however, that in certain cases it may be prudent to hide the truth under some 'dissimulation'. In modern times the problem of the lawfulness of lying in these cases, when, e.g., human life would be endangered or a secret violated not only by speaking the truth but also by preserving silence, has given rise to several theories attempting a solution. They either permit *mental reservation (q.v.) or assert that not everyone has the right to the truth (so, e.g., H. *Grotius and S. *Pufendorf), or, what seems most in agreement with common sense, that there may arise conflicts of duty in which the choice of a lie is a lesser evil. These, however, are exceptional cases which do not prejudice the general obligation of speaking the truth, without which an ordered human society which is built on mutual trust would become impossible.

LYNDHURST, Act of Lord. The Act (5 & 6 Will. IV, c. 54) passed in 1835 making all future marriages within the *prohibited degrees (e.g. marriage with a deceased wife's sister) ipso facto null and void, and not voidable (as had been the previous rule) only by an explicit pronouncement of the ecclesiastical courts.

LYNDWOOD, WILLIAM (c. 1375–1446), English canonist and Bp. of *St. Davids. Educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, he became Fellow of Pembroke Hall and later migrated to Oxford. In 1414 he was appointed by Abp. H. *Chichele his *Official Principal; in 1426 he became *Dean of the Arches; in 1432 Keeper of the Privy Seal; in 1434 Archdeacon of Stow; and in 1442 Bp. of St. Davids. He was closely associated with Chichele in his proceedings against the *Lollards. His celebrated Provinciale (completed 1430) is a digest in five books of the synodical constitutions of the province of Canterbury from Abp. S. *Langton (1222) down to Abp. H. Chichele (1416), with glosses, and remains a standard authority on English ecclesiastical law, and his text of the constitutions is that generally used for official purposes. As F. W. *Maitland pointed out, Lyndwood regarded the law of the C of E as dependent on the Papal codes and held that local constitutions must be interpreted in accordance with Papal law. Similarly the Archbishop's legislative and jurisdictional authority is superior to that of the provincial councils, but the Archbishop himself is bound by the legatine constitutions.

The latest and best ed. of Lyndwood's Provinciale is that publd. at Oxford, 1679. Text of Canons (only) repr. by J. V. Bullard–H. Chalmer Bell, London, 1929. F. W. Maitland, Roman Canon Law in the Church of England (1896), pp. 1–50. C. R. Cheney, 'William Lyndwood's Provinciale' in The Jurist, xxi (1961), pp. 405–34. J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), pp. 340–2. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1191–3; B.R.U.C., pp. 379–81 and 679.

LYNE, JOSEPH LEYCESTER. See Ignatius, Father.

LYONS, Council of (1245). Acc. to RC numbering the 13th *Oecumenical Council. The Council was convoked by *Innocent IV to deal with what, in his opening sermon, he called the five wounds of the Church, viz. the bad lives of the clergy and faithful, the danger of the Saracens, the Greek Schism, the invasion of Hungary by the Tatars, and the rupture between the Church and the Emp. *Frederick II. The bishops present, who did not greatly exceed 150, came chiefly from France, Italy, and Spain. The principal achievement of the Council was the formal deposition of the Emperor, who had been repeatedly excommunicated for having imprisoned cardinals and bishops on their way to a Council convoked by *Gregory IX, for being suspect of heresy through his association with the Saracens, and for pursuing a violently anti-ecclesiastical policy in Sicily. The objections of Thaddaeus of Suessa, Frederick's ambassador, that the accused had not been cited to the Council, that it was wholly irregular for the Pope to be plaintiff and judge at once, and that the Council was not truly oecumenical, were overruled. At the last session the *Dominicans and *Franciscans were charged with the publication of the decree throughout Christendom. The Council also enjoined the preaching of a Crusade for the liberation of the Holy Land from the Saracens, which, however, came to nothing.

Hardouin, vii, cols. 375–406; Mansi, xxiii (1779), cols. 605–86. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1633–79. J. B. Martin, Conciles et bullaires du diocèse de Lyon (Lyons thesis; 1905), pp. 252–83 and 624–9. H. Wolter, S.J.–H. Holstein, S.J., Lyon I et Lyon II (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, vii; 1966), pp. 11–128, 245–67. Contemporary accounts of the Council in the 'Brevis nota eorum quae in primo Concilio Lugdunensi Generali gesta sunt' (repr. in Mansi, loc. cit., cols. 610–13), and by *Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, under the year 1245 (ed. H. R. Luard, iv, R.S. 1877, pp. 430–79). M. Tangl, 'Die sogenannte Brevis Nota über das Lyoner Concil von 1245' in Mitthei-lungen des Instituts für Oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung, xii (1891), pp. 246–53. T. G. von Karajan, 'Zur Geschichte des Concils von Lyon 1245' in Denkschriften der kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Phil.-hist. Kl., ii (Vienna, 1851), pp. 67–100, with texts, pp. 103–17. S. Kuttner, 'Die Konstitutionen des ersten allgemeinen Konzils von Lyon' in Studia et Documenta Historiae et Iuris, vi (Rome, 1940), pp. 70–131. F. Vernet in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1361–74, s.v. 'Lyon (Ier Concile œcuménique de)', with detailed bibl. See further bibl. to Gregory IX and Innocent IV.

LYONS, Council of (1274). Acc. to RC numbering the 14th *Oecumenical Council. It was convoked by *Gregory X to bring about the union with the Greek Church, the liberation of the Holy Land, and the reform of morals. It was attended by about 500 bishops, 60 abbots, and 1000 other prelates. Among its better-known members were St. *Albert the Great, St. *Bonaventure, St. Philip Benizi, General of the *Servites, and the *Dominicans, Humbert de Romanis and Peter of Tarentaise, the future Innocent V. St. *Thomas Aquinas died on the way to the Council. The desire of the Greeks for reunion with Rome arose chiefly from their fear of Charles of Anjou, who sought to become Latin Emp. of Constantinople. The legates of the Greek Emperor, Michael VIII Paleologus, presented letters declaring their adherence to the obedience of the RC Church and to the articles of faith which the Apostolic nuncios had asked them to subscribe, and at the High Mass, at which St. Bonaventure preached the sermon, they repeated three times the *Filioque of the Creed. Besides defining in detail the *Double Procession of the Holy Ghost, the Council gave rulings about the election of the Pope in *conclave, suppressed some of the newly founded mendicant orders while approving esp. the Dominicans and *Franciscans, and deposed several prelates. Its principal achievement, the union of the Churches, proved ephemeral; it came to an end in 1289.

Hardouin, vii, cols. 669–722; Mansi, xxiv (1780), cols. 38–136. Hefele–Leclercq, vi (pt. 1; 1914), pp. 153–209. J. B. Martin, Conciles et bullaires du diocèse de Lyon (Lyons thesis, 1905), pp. 403–61 and 651–6. H. Wolter, S.J.–H. Holstein, S.J., Lyon I et Lyon II (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, vii; 1966), pp. 129–241, 268–87. E. Göller, 'Zur Geschichte des zweiten Lyoner Konzils und des Liber Sextus' in R.Q., xx (1906), pp. 81–7. M. Villain, 'La Question de l'union des Églises entre Grecs et Latins depuis le concile de Lyon jusqu'à celui de Florence' in R.H.E., xvii (1921), pp. 260–305, 515–32, xviii (1922), pp. 20–60. A. Fliche, 'Le Problème oriental au second concile œcuménique de Lyon (1274)' in O.C.P., xiii (1947), pp. 475–85. S. Kuttner, 'Conciliar Law in the Making. The Lyonese Constitutions (1274) of Gregory X in a MS. at Washington' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, ii (Lateranum, N.S., xv; 1949), pp. 39–81, with useful reff. R. W. Emery, 'The Second Council of Lyons and the Mendicant Orders' in Catholic Historical Review, xxxix (1954), pp. 257–71. D. J. Geanakoplos, Emperor Michael Palaeologus and the West (Cambridge, Mass., 1959), esp. pp. 258–76. A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, x (1950), pp. 487–503, with bibl. F. Vernet–V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1374–1410, s.v. 'Lyon (IIe Concile œcuménique de)', with detailed bibl.; M. Jugie, A.A., in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 1398–1401, s.v. 'Lione, Secundo Concilio'.

LYONS, Rite of. The minor local variations to the fused *Gregorian Sacramentary which developed in the course of the Middle Ages and are peculiar to Lyons. They were swept away in the 18th cent. but some of them were restored by *Pius IX in 1863. In 1904 the Congregation of *Rites approved a Missale Romanum in quo antiqui ritus Lugdunenses servantur. The Pontifical High Mass is characterized by great splendour, the bishop being assisted by six priests (in *chasubles), seven deacons (in *dalmatics), seven sub-deacons (until their suppression, in *tunicles), seven acolytes (in *albs), and seven clerics (in capes).

D. Buenner, O.S.B., L'Ancienne Liturgie romaine. Le rite lyonnais (1935). A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 1–154. R. X. Redmond in N.C.E., viii (1967) pp. 1112–14, s.v. 'Lyonese Rite'.

LYRA. See Nicolaus of Lyra.

M

MAASSEN, FRIEDRICH (1823–1900), historian of early canon law. He began life as an advocate in N. Germany; but, finding himself debarred from public office through his conversion to the RC faith in 1851, he decided to devote himself to academic teaching, and later held professorships at Innsbruck (1857), Graz (1860), and Vienna (1871). He was at first a strong opponent of the decrees of the *Vatican Council on Papal Infallibility, but in the *Kulturkampf he strenuously defended the claims of the RC Church. Of the first importance were his studies in the history of the ecclesiastical canons, embodied in his Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters (Bd. I, 1870 [all published]), which were the basis of the later researches of E. *Schwartz, C. H. *Turner and others. Among his other writings were his Pseudoisidorstudien (1885).

Obituary notice by R. von Scherer in Hist. J., xxi (1900), pp. 640–2. N. Grass, 'Österreichische Kanonistenschulen aus drei Jahrhunderten' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxxii. Kanonistische Abteilung, xli (1955), pp. 290–411, esp. pp. 300–48. R. Naz in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 687–9, s.v.

MABILLON, JEAN (1632–1707), *Maurist scholar. He entered the *Benedictine Order at St.-Remy in 1653 and spent most of his life (from 1664) at *St.-Germain-des-Prés. Prob. the most erudite and discerning of all the Maurists, he rendered immense services to historical research. In his De Re Diplomatica (1681), conceived as a reply to attacks on the authenticity of early charters by the *Bollandist, D. *Papebroch, he put the study of palaeography and diplomatic on a scientific footing. In all, he produced some twenty folio works, including an edition of St. *Bernard (1667); the Acta of the Benedictine saints (with J. L. *d'Achéry; 9 vols., 1668–1701); the first four volumes of the Benedictine Annales (to A.D. 1066; 1703–7); and several collections of documents including a set of the *Ordines Romani. The attacks made by the *Trappist, J. A. Le B. de *Rancé, on the engagement of religious in scholarly pursuits provoked his Traité des études monastiques (1691).

T. *Ruinart, O.S.B., Abrégé de la vie de Dom Jean Mabillon (1709; mod. ed. in 'Collection Pax', xxxv, 1933). [R. P. Tassin, O.S.B.,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (1770), pp. 205–69. Later lives by M. Jadart (Reims, 1876), E. de Broglie (2 vols., Paris, 1888), and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B. (2 vols., Paris, 1953–7). Mélanges et documents publiés à l'occasion du 2e centenaire de la mort de Mabillon (Archives de la France Monastique, v; 1908). M. D. Knowles, O.S.B., 'Jean Mabillon' in J.E.H., x (1959), pp. 153–73, repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 213–39. H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 427–724, s.v. See also works cited under Maurists.

MACARIUS, St., of Alexandria (4th cent.), Egyptian hermit. (He is often confused with St. *Macarius of Egypt, q.v.) He retired into the desert at the age of 40 and seems to have lived near St. *Antony. He was persecuted by the Arian Patr. of Alexandria and, like Macarius of Egypt, was a miracle-worker of repute. A monastic rule has been ascribed to him, probably erroneously. Feast day, 2 (or 19) Jan.

On the various Macarii see C. Butler, The Lausiac History of Palladius, ii (1904), p. 193 f. The early authorities for Macarius the Alexandrian are *Palladius, Hist. Laus., 18, and *Rufinus, Hist. Mon., 29, and H.E., ii. 4. Coptic Life, ed. by E. Amélineau in Annales du Musée Guimet, xxv (1894), pp. 235–61. Writings ascribed to him in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxiv ('Rule', cols. 967–70 [Lat.], 'Sermo de Exitu Statuque Animarum post hanc Vitam', 385–92). See also E. Amann in D.T.C., ix (1926), col. 1440 f., s.v.

MACARIUS, St., of Egypt (c. 300–c. 390), also known as Macarius the Great. Our knowledge of him derives chiefly from the Apophthegmata Patrum*, *Rufinus's translation of the Historia Monachorum and *Palladius's Lausiac History. He was a native of Upper Egypt who, at about the age of 30, founded a colony of monks in the desert of Scetis (Wadi-el-Natrun), which became one of the chief centres of Egyptian monasticism. Renowned for his sanctity and miracles, he was ordained priest c. 340. He certainly knew, and seems to have been much influenced by, the great St. *Antony; and, as a staunch supporter of *Athanasius, he suffered a brief period of exile under Athanasius's Arian successor, Lucius. Feast day, 15 (or 19) January.

None of the early sources mentions any works by Macarius of Egypt (although writings ascribed to him fill the greater part of a volume of J. P. Migne's Patrologia Graeca); and the Fifty Homilies traditionally attributed to him (ὁμιλίαι πνευματικαί) are still of uncertain authorship. J. Stiglmayr and, more recently, Werner Jaeger have attempted to trace in the writings of Ps.-Macarius the influence of *Gregory of Nyssa. Other scholars, notably Louis Villecourt, G. L. Marriott, Hermann Dörries and G. Quispel, have pointed to the heavily mystical and possibly heretical emphases in the Ps.-Macarian corpus, and have suggested that the influence of *Gnostic and *Messalian circles was of greater importance. In any case, it seems probable that the writings attributed to Macarius were written in Syria, not Egypt.

Palladius, Historia Lausiaca, xvii; Rufinus, Historia Monachorum, xxviii; Apophthegmata Patrum, s.v. Μακάριος. The Fifty Homilies first printed by J. Picus (Paris, 1559); reprinted in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxiv, 449–822; critical text by H. Dörries, E. Klostermann and M. Kroeger (Patristische Texte und Studien, iv; 1964). Eng. tr. by A. J. Mason, London, 1921. Other items in the Pseudo-Macarian corpus include Macarii anecdota. Seven unpublished homilies of Macarius, ed. G. L. Marriott (Harvard Theological Studies, v; 1918); Neue Homilien des Makarius/Symeon I: Aus Typus III, ed. E. Klostermann and H. Berthold (T.U., lxxii; 1961); and Makarios/Symeon. Reden und Briefe, ed. H. Berthold (2 vols., G.C.S., 1973). Further works also in PG, xxxiv. Crit. Latin text of the (spurious) Ep. ad filios Dei [PG, xxxiv, 406–10], ed. A. Wilmart, O.S.B., in Revue d'ascétique et de mystique, i (1920), pp. 58–83. New and fuller text of the 'Great Letter' [Ep. ii, PG, xxxiv, 409–42], ed. W. Jaeger, Two Rediscovered Works of Ancient Christian Literature: Gregory of Nyssa and Macarius (Leiden, 1954), pp. 233–301.

J. Stiglmayr, S.J., Sachliches und Sprachliches bei Makarius (Innsbruck, 1912). L. Villecourt, O.S.B., 'La Date et l'origine des "Homélies spirituelles" attribuées à Macaire' in Comptes Rendus des séances de l'Académie des Inscriptions et des Belles-Lettres (Paris, 1920), pp. 250–8; id., 'La Grande Lettre grecque de Macaire. Ses formes textuelles et son milieu littéraire' in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, xxii (1920–1), pp. 29–56; J. Stiglmayr, S.J., 'Pseudo-Makarius und die Aftermystik der Messalianer' in Z.K.T., xlix (1925), pp. 244–

260; G. L. Marriott, 'The Messalians; and the Discovery of their Ascetic Book' in H.T.R. xix (1926), pp. 191–8; H. Dörries, Symeon von Mesopotamien. Die Überlieferung der messalianischen 'Makarius'-Schriften (T.U., lv, Hft. 1; 1941); E. Klostermann, Symeon und Makarius (Abh. (Berl.), 1943, Hft. 11; 1944); G. Quispel, Makarius, das Thomasevangelium und das Lied von der Perle (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, xv; 1967); R. Staats, Gregor von Nyssa und die Messalianer (Patristische Texte und Studien, viii; 1968); E. A. Davids, Das Bild vom neuen Menschen. Ein Beitrag zum Verständnis des Corpus Macarianum (Salzburg, 1968); H. Dörries, Die Theologie des Makarios/Symeon (Abh. (Gött.), Folge 3, ciii; 1978). A. Guillaumont in Dict. Sp., x (1980), cols. 11–13, s.v. 'Macaire l'Égyptien'; V. Desprez, O.S.B.–Mariette Canévet, ib., cols. 20–43, s.v. 'Macaire (Pseudo–Macaire)'.

MACARIUS, St. (d. c. 334), Bp. of *Jerusalem from c. 313. A strong upholder of orthodoxy against *Arianism, he was present at the Council of *Nicaea (325), where it has been suggested (F. J. A. *Hort) that he took a prominent part in drafting the Creed and also (with less probability) that he had a 'passage of arms' on the privileges of his see with his metropolitan, *Eusebius of Caesarea (A. P. *Stanley, followed by J. B. *Lightfoot). Soon after the Council he was commissioned by *Constantine to build the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem after St. *Helena's *Invention of the Cross (326). Later he and his fellow-bishops of Palestine received a further letter from Constantine providing for the erection of a church at Mamre. Feast day, 10 Mar.

Constantine's letters to Macarius are preserved in Eusebius, Vita Constantini, iii. 30–2 and 52 f. F. J. A. Hort, Two Dissertations (1876), p. 59. A. P. Stanley, Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church (1861), p. 193 f.

MACARIUS MAGNES (4th–5th cent.), Christian apologist. Nothing is known of his life, unless he is to be identified with the Bp. of Magnesia who was the accuser of Heraclides of Ephesus at the Synod of the *Oak (403). He was the author of an apology in five books known as the 'Apocriticus', Μονογενὴς ἢ Ἀποκριτικὸς πρὸς Ἕλληνας περὶ τῶν ἀπορουμένων ἐν τῇ Καινῇ Διαθήκῃ ζητημάτων καὶ λύσεων, in which the objections which a learned and clever Neoplatonist (perhaps *Porphyry) had raised against the Christian faith were (not altogether effectively) attacked. In the 9th cent. the treatise was used by the *Iconoclasts in defence of their doctrines, and in the 16th cent. it was quoted by F. *Torres from a copy in the *Marciana. Later the MS. was lost and the text not recovered till 1867, when a defective MS. was found at Athens; but this appears now to have also been lost. There also survive fragments of a (spurious) series of 'Homilies on Genesis' ascribed to the same writer.

Text of 'Apocriticus' ed. C. Blondel [–P. Foucart] (Paris, 1876). L. *Duchesne, De Macario Magnete et Scriptis ejus (Paris, 1877, with text of the spurious Gen. fragments, pp. 39–43). Eng. tr. of 'Apocriticus' by T. W. Crafer (1919). On the MS. tradition G. Schalkhausser, Zu den Schriften des Makarios von Magnesia (T.U., xxxi, Hft. 4; 1907). T. W. Crafer, 'Macarius Magnesius. A Neglected Apologist' in J.T.S., viii (1906–7), pp. 401–23, 546–71. G. *Mercati, Nuove note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica (S.T., xcv; 1941), pp. 49–84 ('Per l'Apocritico di Macario Magnete'). J. W. J. Palm, Textkritisches zum Apokritos des Makarios Magnes (Scripta minora Regiae Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, 1959/60, No. 4; 1961). Bardenhewer, iv (1924), pp. 189–95. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 766–71; G. Bardy in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1456–9.

MACARIUS OF MOSCOW (1816–82), Metropolitan of Moscow. Michael Bulgakov, son of a country priest, was educated at the seminary of Kursk and at the ecclesiastical academy of Kiev. After finishing his studies he became a monk, taking the name of Macarius, and later was appointed assistant lecturer in ecclesiastical and civil history at Kiev. From 1842 to 1857 he was professor of dogmatic theology at the academy of St. Petersburg. In 1857 he was appointed Bp. of Tambov, in 1859 transferred to Kharkov, and in 1868 to Vilna. He became Metrop. of Moscow in 1879. He is the best representative of 19th cent. Russian theologians. His two most important works, which were translated into several languages, were the Introduction à la théologie dogmatique orthodoxe (1847) and Théologie dogmatique orthodoxe (5 vols., 1845–53). They reflect the official orthodoxy which was imposed on the Russian Church by Protasov to counteract Protestant influences, and are based on the Scriptures, the tradition as recognized by the Orthodox Church, and on arguments from reason. He also wrote a comprehensive History of the Russian Church (12 vols., 1857–82), which he traces from its beginnings to the Council of Moscow of 1667.

Life by T. Titov (2 vols., Kiev, 1895–8, in Russian). M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), col. 1443 f., s.v. 'Macaire Bulgakov'; P. Mailleux in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 861 f., s.v. 'Bulgakov, Macarius'.

MACAULAY, ZACHARY (1768–1838), Anglican Evangelical and philanthropist and father of Thomas Babington Macaulay (1800–59), the historian. At the age of sixteen he went to Jamaica, where he became manager of an estate which used slave labour. Disgust at the conditions under which the slaves worked determined him to wage war on the practice of slavery, and on returning to England in 1792 he made the cause of abolition his main concern. In 1793 he became governor of the colony of Sierra Leone, where he remained intermittently until 1799. A member of the '*Clapham Sect', he became deeply interested in the work of the *B.F.B.S. and of the *C.M.S. From 1802 to 1816 he edited the Christian Observer, the organ of the Clapham Sect. He was also one of the founders of London University.

Viscountess Knutsford [M. J. Holland, granddaughter], Life and Letters of Zachary Macaulay (1900). C. Z. Booth, Zachary Macaulay. His Part in the Movement for the Abolition of the Slave Trade and of Slavery (1934). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxiv (1893), pp. 418–20. See also bibl. to Clapham Sect.

MACCABEES. The celebrated Jewish family, which was mainly instrumental in freeing Judaea from the Syrian yoke, and thus at a very critical period of its history stemming the threatened destruction of Judaism by the advance of Hellenism. The revolt was begun in 168 B.C. at Modin, where Mattathias, then an aged priest, killed an apostate Jew who was about to offer a pagan sacrifice. The struggle was carried on by his five sons, three of whom in turn, *Judas (who alone in the *Apocrypha is given the epithet 'Maccabaeus', Gk. Μακκαβαῖος, meaning perhaps 'hammerer' or 'extinguisher'), Jonathan, and Simon, led the Jews in their struggle. Acc. to *Josephus (Antiq., XII. vi. 1), Mattathias was the great-great-grandson of Hasmon, and they are thus often known as the 'Hasmonaeans'.

The principal authority for the history of the family, besides Josephus, is I and II Macc. (see following entry). E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, i (ed. 4; 1901), pp. 200–301, with genealogical table, p. 779. A. W. Streane, The Age of the Maccabees (1898) A. Momigliano, Prime linee di storia della tradizione maccabaica (1930). E. Bickermann, Die Makkabäer (1935; Eng. tr., New York, 1947). W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots, and Josephus. An Inquiry into Jewish Nationalism in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1956). A. A. Bevan, 'The Origin of the Name Maccabee' in J.T.S., xxx (1929), pp. 190–3; R. Marcus, 'The Name Makkabaios' in The Joshua Starr Memorial Volume (Jewish Social Studies, Publications, v; New York, 1953), pp. 59–65. F. M. Abel, O.P., 'Topographie des campagnes machabéennes' in R. Bibl., xxxii (1923), pp. 495–521; xxxiii (1924), pp. 201–17, 371–87; xxxiv (1925), pp. 194–216; xxxv (1926), pp. 206–22 and 510–33.

MACCABEES, Books of. Four Books, so called after the hero of the first two, *Judas Maccabaeus, are found in certain MSS. of the *Septuagint, of which the first two are included in the *Canon of the Greek and Latin Churches and the *Apocrypha of the English Bible. (A fifth Book, contained in the Ambrosian *Peshitta (B. 21 Inf.) and thus designated by Henry Cotton (1789–1879), appears to be merely a Syriac version of *Josephus, The Wars of the Jews, book vi.)

The First Book consists of a history of the Jews from the accession of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175 B.C.) to the death of Simon Maccabaeus in 135 B.C. After a brief note on the reign of Alexander, it describes the desecration of the *Temple and the resistance of Mattathias the priest, continued by his sons, Judas, Jonathan and Simon Maccabaeus. It closes with the escape of Simon's son, John Hyrcanus, on a note of reassurance for the future. Extant only in Greek, though written in Hebrew (known to St. *Jerome, Prol. Gal. ad Lib. Reg.), it appears to have been the work of a Palestinian Jew of nationalist sympathies, prob. c. 100 B.C. It is the primary historical source for the period.

The Second Book describes the history of the Maccabean wars from the close of the reign of the Syrian king Seleucus IV (176 B.C.) to the victory of Judas Maccabaeus over Nicanor and the death of the latter (161 B.C.). It is an epitome of a larger work by Jason of Cyrene (otherwise unknown; 2. 23) and appears to have been written in Greek by a Jew of *Pharisaic sympathies some time after the composition of Book I and before A.D. 70, perhaps at Alexandria. Of little historical value, it has a marked devotional note, emphasizing the care of God for His people in all things.

The Third Book describes the attempt of Ptolemy IV to enter the Sanctuary of the Temple (217 B.C.), his frustration, and his unsuccessful attempt to take vengeance on the Jews of Egypt. It appears to have been written in Greek, prob. by an Alexandrian Jew between 100 B.C. and A.D. 70, and is prob. thus named on the analogy of the events described with those of the Maccabaean period. Listed in the Biblical catalogue in the *Apostolic Canons (can. 85), the Book appears to have been held in high esteem in the early Church, but its canonicity is now admitted only by the Syriac Church.

The Fourth Book is a Greek philosophical treatise addressed to Jews on the supremacy of devout reason over the passions, illustrated by examples from the history of the Maccabees. The work was erroneously attributed to Josephus by *Eusebius, '*Suidas' and others. It was prob. written by a Hellenistic Jew of Alexandria at some time later than Book II and before A.D. 70.

The Books of the Maccabees contain important doctrinal teaching on immortality (2 Macc. 7. 9, 23, 37 and 4 Macc.), the value of suffering as a means of expiation (2 Macc. 7. 37 f.) and prayers for the dead (2 Macc. 12. 43–5). This last passage has played an important part in the defence of the doctrine of *Purgatory.

The Gk. text of I–IV Macc. is pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, iii (1894), pp. 586–762, and other edd. of the LXX; crit. ed. of Syriac text of IV Macc. by R. L. Bensly (Cambridge, 1895). H. Cotton, The Five Books of Maccabees in English, with notes (Oxford, 1832). Modern commentaries on I and II Macc. by W. O. E. Oesterley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 59–124 (on I Macc.), and J. Moffatt, ib., pp. 125–54 (on II Macc.), C. Gutberlet (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, viii, Hfft. 3–4; 1920, on I Macc.; ib., x, Hfft. 3–4; 1927, on II Macc.), H. Bévenot, O.S.B. (Das Heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments, 1931), F. M. Abel, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1949), with bibl., and S. Zeitlin (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, 1950, on I Macc.; 1954, on II Macc.); also on I Macc. by W. Fairweather–J. S. Black (Cambridge Bible, 1897) and J. C. Dancy (Oxford, 1954); on III Macc. by C. Emmet in R. H. Charles (ed.), op. cit., pp. 155–73, and on IV Macc. by R. B. Townshend, ib., ii, pp. 653–85, and A. Dupont-Sommer (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, cclxxiv; 1939), and on III and IV Macc. by M. Hadas (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, New York, 1953). D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'Le Texte grec des deux premiers Livres des Machabées' in R. Bibl., xxxi (1922), pp. 31–54. Id.–B. Sodar, O.S.B. (edd.), Les Anciennes Traductions latines des [I and II] Machabées (Anecdota Maredsolana, iv; 1932). J. *Wellhausen, 'Ueber den geschichtlichen Wert des Zweiten Makkabäerbuchs im Verhältnis zum Ersten' in Nach. (Gött.), 1905, pp. 117–63. B. Niese, Kritik der beiden Makkabäerbücher (1900). E. J. B. Bickerman, 'The Date of Fourth Maccabees' in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday. English Section (New York, 1945), pp. 105–12. R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York [1949], London [1954]), pp. 461–522 [on I and II Macc.], with bibl. on I–III Macc., p. 537 f., and on IV Macc., p. 540; Eissfeldt, pp. 576–82 and 613–15, with further bibl. pp. 771 and 774. A. Lefèvre in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 597–612, s.v. 'Maccabées (Livres I et II de')'; J. B. Frey, ib., i (1928), cols. 428–30, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament, 12. Le IIIe Livre des Machabées', with bibl., and cols. 445–7, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament, 14. Le IVe Livre des Machabées', also with bibl. See also bibl. to Apocrypha.

MACCABEES, Feast of the Holy. The feast formerly kept in the W. Church on 1 Aug. to commemorate the seven Jewish brethren whose sufferings and deaths are described in 2 Macc. 7. The incident, which is doubtless referred to in Heb. 11. 35, struck the imagination of the early Christians and was celebrated by many of the Church fathers, notably St. *Gregory of Nazianzus (Serm. 15) and St. *Augustine (Serm. 300–2). The reputed relics of the martyrs were honoured at Antioch, the scene of their deaths, and later at S. Pietro in Vincoli in Rome (see Lammas Day, also observed on 1 Aug.).

M. Maas, 'Die Maccabäer als christliche Heilige' in Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, xliv (1900), pp. 145–56; H. Bévenot, O.S.B., 'The Holy Machabees' in The Month, cl (1927), pp. 107–14. On the early veneration of the Maccabees at Antioch, where the cultus prob. originated, see also H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2375–9, s.v. 'Antioche (archéologie), IV; La Basilique et le culte des Macchabées'; cf. ib., x (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 724–7. H. Bévenot, O.S.B., in L.Th.K., vi (1934), col. 818, s.v. 'Makkabäische Brüder'.

MACDONALD, GEORGE (1824–1905), Scottish novelist and poet. Educated at the university of Aberdeen and at Highbury College, London, he became a *Congregationalist minister, but in 1853 left the ministry to devote himself to literature. His writings, largely based on the life and customs of NE. Scotland, include the novels David Elginbrod (1863), Alec Forbes of Howglen (1865), Malcolm (1875), and Donal Grant (3 vols., 1883). In his books MacDonald reveals firm religious faith, moral enthusiasm, and Christian optimism. He was also the author of several religious books, including Unspoken Sermons (1867, 1885, 1889) and The Miracles of our Lord (1886).

The Poetical Works of George MacDonald (2 vols., 1893). His Romance, Lilith (1895), was ed. by Greville MacDonald (son) (1924), with introd., pp. ix–xx. C. S. Lewis (ed.), George MacDonald. An Anthology (1946). J. M. Bulloch, 'A Bibliography of George MacDonald' in the Aberdeen University Library Bulletin, v (1925), pp. 679–747, also issued separately (1925). J. Johnson, George MacDonald. A Biographical and Critical Appreciation (1906). Greville MacDonald (son), George MacDonald and his Wife (1924). Ronald MacDonald (son), 'George MacDonald: A Personal Note' in F. Watson (ed.), From a Northern Window. Papers, Critical, Historical and Imaginative (1911), pp. 55–113. A. Matheson in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 513–15. S. J. Looker in C.B.E.L., iii, p. 494 f.

MACE, DANIEL (d. c. 1753), NT textual critic. Little is known of his life beyond the fact that he was a *Presbyterian clergyman who ministered at Newbury from 1727 till his death. He anticipated conclusions which only met with general acceptance among textual critics over a century later, e.g. he disproved the authenticity of the text known as the *Johannine Comma (1 Jn. 5. 7). His results were incorporated in The New Testament in Greek and English (2 vols., 1729), to which a reply in defence of the textus receptus* was issued shortly afterwards by L. Twells (d. 1742).

H. McLachlan, 'An Almost Forgotten Pioneer in New Testament Criticism', Hibbert Journal, xxxvii (1939), pp. 617–25. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxv (1893), p. 68 f.

MACEDONIUS (d. c. 362), Bp. of *Constantinople. In the divisions which followed the death of *Eusebius of Nicomedia (c. 341) he was one of the rival claimants to the see, and seems to have gained possession of it c. 342. He strongly supported the *Semi-Arian cause and defended his position at the Council of *Seleucia in 359. In 360 he was deposed by the Arian Council of Constantinople. From the end of the 4th cent. onwards he has been regarded as the founder of the '*Pneumatomachi' (q.v.) and thus caused the sect to be known as the 'Macedonians'; but it is doubtful how far this association is correct, as it seems clear that disputes about the Divinity of the Holy Spirit did not arise until after Macedonius's deposition. It is not known whether he left any writings.

F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 41–8, s.v.; G. Bardy in D.T.C., ix (1926), cols. 1464–78, s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to Pneumatomachi.

MACHUTUS [otherwise Malo, Maclovius, Maclou], St. (d. c. 640), early Breton saint. Acc. to tradition, he was of either Welsh or Breton descent, and trained in the monastic life by St. *Brendan. He settled at Aleth, opposite the present town of St.-Malo, and is said to have lived an ascetic life, preached with great success, and founded several monasteries in the surrounding districts. One tradition asserts that he accompanied St. Brendan on his journey to *Iona. Feast day, 15 Nov.

Two Lives (both c. A.D. 850–900) exist, the one by the deacon Bili of Aleth, ed. by F. Plaine, O.S.B., in Bulletins et Mémoires de la Société archéologique du département d'Ille-et-Vilaine, xvi (1883), pp. 167–256; the other by an Anon. of Saintes, ed. by A. de La Borderie, ib., pp. 267–93. For texts cf. also F. Lot, Mélanges d'histoire bretonne (1907), pp. 294–329 and 331–430; and id., 'Les Diverses Rédactions de la vie de saint Malo', ib., pp. 97–206. L. *Duchesne, 'La Vie de saint Malo. Étude critique' in Revue celtique, xi (1890), pp. 1–22. A. Poncelet, 'Une Source de la vie de S. Malo par Bili' in Anal. Boll., xxiv (1905), pp. 483–6. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1293–1318, s.v. 'Malo (Saint)'.

MACKAY, ALEXANDER MURDOCH (1849–1890), *C.M.S. Missionary in Uganda. The son of a Free Church minister, he was educated at Edinburgh, and in 1873 he obtained a post as a draftsman in Berlin. His thoughts had long turned to missionary work, however, and in 1876 he was accepted by the C.M.S. for work in Africa. Having embarked for Victoria Nyanza, he finally reached Uganda in 1878 after constructing 230 miles of road. His printing of part of the Scriptures in Swahili interested King Mtesa, and he was granted permission to carry on missionary work. Soon, however, he met with opposition both from RCs and from Moslems. In 1884, when King Mtesa was succeeded on the throne of Uganda by Mwanga, Mackay was threatened with expulsion, but allowed to remain by reason of his engineering skill. The Christians meanwhile had to face fierce persecution, and many were slain. In 1887 Mackay was expelled, and settled at Usambiro on the southern end of Lake Victoria, where he reduced the vernacular of Uganda to writing, and then translated the Scriptures into it.

A. M. Mackay, Pioneer Missonary of the C.M.S. Uganda, by his sister [Mrs. J. W. Harrison] (1890). A. H. Millar in D.N.B., xxxv (1893), p. 118.

MACKINTOSH, HUGH ROSS (1870–1936), Scottish theologian. After a distinguished university career at Edinburgh, he studied at *Marburg, specializing in philosophy. He was ordained in 1897, and after some years of effective and diligent pastoral work at Tayport and at Beechgrove Church, Aberdeen, he was appointed professor of systematic theology at New College, Edinburgh, in 1904. Here he exercised great influence as a teacher. He showed marked sympathy with the Liberal Movement in German Protestant theology and made it one of his chief objects to make German doctrines better known in Britain. In 1932 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. Among his written works the more important are The Doctrine of the Person of Christ (1912), in which he showed himself critical of the *Chalcedonian Christology and defended a modified *Kenotic doctrine, The Christian Experience of Forgiveness (1927), and Types of Modern Theology (1937, posthumous).

Sermons (1938), with Memoir by A. B. Macaulay, pp. 1–33, and list of his chief publications, p. ix. J. W. Leitch, A Theology of Transition. H. R. Mackintosh as an approach to Barth (1952). D. M. Baillie in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 581 f.

MACKONOCHIE, ALEXANDER HERIOT (1825–87), *Anglo-Catholic leader. Educated at Wadham College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1849, and served in turn under W. J. *Butler at Wantage (1852–8) and C. F. *Lowder at St. George's in the East (1858–62). By 1862, when he was put in charge of the newly built church of St. Alban's, Holborn, he was recognized as an advanced 'ritualist', and from 1867 onwards was constantly prosecuted by the *Church Association for his ceremonial practices (e.g. the *mixed chalice and *altar lights). He eventually resigned in 1882, though he worked unofficially in the parish from 1883 until his sudden death in the Highlands in Dec. 1887.

E. A. Towle, A. H. Mackonochie (1890); H. Reynolds, Martyr of Ritualism. Father Mackonochie of St. Alban's, Holborn (1965). W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., xxxv (1893), p. 185 f.

MACLAREN, ALEXANDER (1826–1910), *Baptist preacher and expositor. Trained at Glasgow University and Stepney College, after twelve years as minister in Southampton (1846–58) he moved to Manchester and from the pulpit of Union Chapel (1858–1903) achieved a world-wide reputation by his sermons and writings. Twice President of the Baptist Union (1875; 1901), he also presided at the first Congress of the Baptist World Alliance in 1905.

G. G. Atkins (ed.), The Best of Alexander Maclaren (New York, 1949), with introd. pp. vii–xix (London, 1950, with introd. pp. 7–22). G. Eayrs, An Index to Expositions of Holy Scripture by Alexander Maclaren [1912], with an Appreciation of Dr. Maclaren by W. R. *Nicoll (repr. from the British Weekly), pp. v–xviii. D. Williamson–J. H. Shakespeare, The Life of Alexander Maclaren [1910]; E. T. McLaren (cousin and sister-in-law), Dr. McLaren of Manchester. A Sketch (1911). A. Gordon in D.N.B., 1901–1911, p. 534, with list of publications.

MACLEOD, NORMAN (1812–72), Scottish divine. Educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh (under T. *Chalmers), he travelled on the Continent before his ordination in 1838. After holding appointments at Loudoun, Ayrshire, and Dalkeith, he became minister of the Barony Church, Glasgow, in 1851, and in 1857 chaplain to Queen Victoria, with whom he was a great favourite. In 1869 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was one of the most prominent and respected parochial ministers in Scotland in the 19th cent. Besides being the editor of the successful periodical Good Words (from 1860), he was the author of several books, among the best-known being his Reminiscences of a Highland Parish (1867).

Memoir by his brother, Donald Macleod (2 vols., London, 1876). Shorter study by J. Wellwood ('Famous Scots Series', Edinburgh and London [1897]). T. Hamilton in D.N.B., xxxv (1893), p. 217 f.

MACRINA, St. (c. 327–79), the elder sister of St. *Basil the Great and St. *Gregory of Nyssa. She is sometimes known as 'Macrina the Younger' to distinguish her from 'Macrina the Elder', her paternal grandmother. By her strength of character she exercised a deep influence upon her brothers, esp. in winning Basil from a promising secular career for the Christian priesthood. She also established a flourishing community on the family estate in Pontus. The chief source for knowledge of her life is Gregory of Nyssa's Vita Macrinae Junioris, which also preserves a vivid account of their meeting on her deathbed. Her competence as a theologian is attested by the same writer's De Anima ac Resurrectione. Feast day, 19 July [of Macrina the Elder, 14 Jan.].

For the Vita see J. P. Migne, PG, xlvi, 959–1000. Crit. ed. by Virginia W. Callahan in Gregorii Nysseni Opera, ed. W. Jaeger and others, viii, Part 1 (Leiden, 1952), pp. 347–414. There is an Eng. tr., with introd., by W. K. L. Clarke (1916). F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, iii (1932), pp. 81–116 ('Das Anhängekreuzchen der hl. Makrina und ihr Ring mit der Kreuzpartikel').

MADAURAN MARTYRS, The (2nd cent.), first reputed Christian martyrs in Africa. The four martyrs, all of whom had Punic names (Namphamo, Miggin, Lucitas, Samae), supposedly suffered at Madaura in 180. Our knowledge of them comes from Maximus of Madaura, a pagan grammarian of the late 4th cent., who inveighs against the populace for deserting the pagan cults and visiting the tombs of such uncultured barbarians. But J. H. Baxter has argued that the evidence is very insecure.

Maximus's letters and St. *Augustine's reply are contained in S. Augustini Opera (ed. Ben.), Epp. xvi, xvii. See also J. B. *Lightfoot, Ignatius, vol. i, pp. 506–8 (Note C). J. H. Baxter, 'The Martyrs of Madaura, A.D. 180' in J.T.S., xxvi (1924–5), pp. 21–37.

MADEBA MAP. A map of Palestine and the Near East in coloured mosaics, uncovered in 1896 in the church at Madeba to the east of the Dead Sea. It almost certainly dates from the 6th cent. and it throws important light on the history of Palestinian topography.

M. J. *Lagrange, 'La Mosaïque géographique de Mâdaba' in R. Bibl., vi (1897), pp. 165–84. M. Avi-Yonah, The Madaba Map (Jerusalem, 1954). P. B. Bagatti, O.F.M., 'Il significato dei musaici della scuola di Madaba (Transgiordania)' in Rivista di Archeologia cristiana, xxxiii (1957), pp. 139–60. H. Donner–H. Cüppers, 'Die Restauration und Konservierung der Mosaikkarte von Madeba' in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins, lxxxiii (1967), pp. 1–33. R. T. O'Callaghan, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 627–704, s.v. 'Madaba (Carte de)', with bibl.

MADONNA, Ital. for 'My Lady'. A designation of the BVM, used esp. with reference to statues and pictures of her, e.g. 'The *Sistine Madonna'. The Madonna lily is the White Lily (Lilium candidum), which on account of its pure whiteness is a frequent emblem of Mary in art.

MADRAS CONFERENCE (1938). See Tambaram Conference.

MADRIGAL (apparently from early Ital. mandriale, 'pastoral'). The word denotes originally a type of poetry, and then, from its musical setting, a polyphonic song without instrumental accompaniment. In the 16th cent. the madrigals were adapted to devotional purposes, esp. in Italy, where G. P. da *Palestrina wrote his Madrigali Spirituali, much used by St. *Philip Neri in his popular services at the Oratory. In England the madrigals are usually entirely secular.

A. Einstein, The Italian Madrigal (3 vols., Princeton, 1949). E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (1921), and other works of this author. J. Kerman, The Elizabethan Madrigal (New York, 1962). E. J. Dent in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. 5, by E. Blom, v (1954), pp. 488–98, with bibl.

MAFFEI, FRANCESCO SCIPIO (1675–1755), polyhistorian. A native of *Verona, he studied under the *Jesuits at Parma, fought in the Spanish Succession War, and became the friend of *Benedict XIV. He took a lively and practical interest in a variety of problems, attacking duelling (1710) and magic (1754) and defending the theatre (1713), which he actively fostered. His historical work centred on his native city, and he published Verona illustrata (4 vols., Verona, 1731–2). In the contemporary controversies on grace, he attacked the *Jansenists in De Haeresi Semipelagiana (Rovereto, 1743) and other writings. His defence of usury in Dell'impiego del danaro (Verona, 1744) provoked Benedict XIV's encyclical of 1 Nov. 1745; but Maffei's work was not actually condemned and a 2nd edition appeared in 1746. In 1712 he rediscovered the ancient manuscripts in the Chapter Library of Verona. An examination of them led Maffei to a much clearer understanding of the development of Latin script than had been reached by J. *Mabillon, which he set out in Istoria Diplomatica (Mantua, 1727). He used these MSS. for his edition of *Hilary of Poitiers (2 vols., Verona, 1730, a revision of the text of P. *Coustant) and other treatises. He also edited for the first time the 'Historia Acephala', a primary source for the Life of St. *Athanasius, from Cod. Ver. LX (58) (Osservazioni letterarie, iii (1738), pp. 60–83).

Opere (ed. A. Rubbi), 21 vols., Venice, 1790. Opuscoli letterarii di Scipione Maffei con alcune sue lettere edite e inedite (Venice, 1829). Modern ed. of Opere drammatiche e poesie by A. Avena (Bari, 1928) and of his Epistolario (1700–1755) by C. Garibotto (2 vols., Milan, 1955). L. Traube, Vorlesungen und Abhandlungen (ed. F. Boll), i (1909), pp. 43–8; cf. also W. Telfer, 'The Codex Verona LX (58)' in H.T.R., xxxvi (1943), pp. 169–246, esp. pp. 228–31. G. Silvestri, Un Europeo del settecento, Scipione Maffei (Treviso, 1954; ed. 2, Verona, 1968 [popular]); A. Momigliano, 'Gli studi classici di Scipione Maffei' in Giornale Storico della Letteratura Italiana, cxxxiii (1956), pp. 363–83, repr. with further bibl. in Secondo contributo alla storia degli studi classici (1960), pp. 255–71.

MAGDALENE, ST. MARY. See Mary Magdalene, St.

MAGDALENES. In reference to St. *Mary Magdalene, the word has often been applied to reformed prostitutes. As a title it was widely adopted in the Middle Ages by religious communities consisting of penitent women ('*White Ladies'), to whom others of blameless lives often joined themselves. These communities, widely established in the 13th cent. in Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, often followed the Rule of St. *Augustine, though many German houses were affiliated to *Dominicans and *Franciscans. They are now almost extinct. The 'Magdalonettes', an order of Magdalens founded for the reformation of women in 1618 by Père Athanase Molé, a *Capuchin, is also extinct.

MAGDEBURG, Centuriators of. See Centuriators of Magdeburg.

MAGI, The. The first Gentiles to believe in Christ (Mt. 2. 1–12). Guided by a mysterious star, they came from the East to *Bethlehem with gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh for the Christ Child. They are called in the NT μάγοι (sages). The idea that they were kings first appears in Christian tradition in *Tertullian, who calls them fere reges ('almost kings'; Adv. Jud., 9 and Adv. Marc., iii. 13), and it became general from the 6th cent., on the basis of the implied reference in Ps. 72 (71). 10. The NT account says nothing of their number. *Origen is the first to give it as three, probably on account of their three gifts, and this has become the general tradition. Their names, Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar, are first mentioned in the 6th cent. Excerpta Latina Barbari and later in a quotation of *Bede from the Collectanea et Flores. In the Middle Ages they were venerated as saints, and the Milanese claimed to possess their relics, brought from *Constantinople in the 5th cent. These were taken to Germany by *Frederick Barbarossa in 1162, and are now enshrined in *Cologne Cathedral. The Adoration of the Magi early became one of the most popular subjects of representation in art, the first extant painting being in the 'Cappella greca' of the Priscilla Catacomb dating from the 2nd cent. See also Epiphany.

H. Kehrer, Die hl. drei Könige in Literatur und Kunst (2 vols., 1908–9). P. V. M. Benecke in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 203–6, s.v.; F. Homes Dudden in D.C.G., ii (1908), pp. 97–101, s.v., with bibl. J. Michl and others in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iii (1959), cols. 566–9, s.v. 'Drei Könige' with bibl. For iconography, H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (1931), cols. 980–1067, s.v. 'Mages'.

MAGNIFICAT. The Song of Praise (Lk. 1. 46–55) sung by the BVM when her cousin *Elizabeth had greeted her as the mother of the Lord. It is so named from the opening word of the Latin text, 'Magnificat anima mea Dominum' ('My soul doth magnify the Lord'). From a very early date, probably since St. *Benedict, it has been the canticle of *Vespers of the W. Church, and its importance is emphasized by its special antiphons and the censing of the altar at solemn Vespers. It has been adopted at Evensong in the BCP. In the Greek Church it is sung daily in the morning office (the *Orthros), except on certain great feasts, and it is followed by the *Benedictus (but in practice this last is usually omitted). Its language, which is steeped in the poetic tradition of the OT, shows notable resemblances to that of the 'Song of Hannah' (1 Sam. 2. 1 ff.); this fact, among others (notably that at Lk. 1. 46 a few Latin MSS. read et ait Elisabeth, instead of et ait Maria) has led some scholars to argue that Luke attributed it originally to Elizabeth and not to Mary.

H. P. *Liddon, The Magnificat. Sermons in St. Paul's (1889). A. *Harnack, 'Das Magnificat der Elisabet (Luc. 1, 46–55) nebst einigen Bemerkungen zu Luc. 1 und 2' in Sb. (Berl.), 1900, pp. 538–56. S. Benko, 'The Magnificat. A History of the Controversy' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxvi (1967), pp. 263–75, with reff. L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1269–72, s.v. 'Évangile et commission biblique', with bibl. A. E. Burn in D.C.G., ii (1917), pp. 101–3, s.v.; H. T. Henry in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 534–6. See also comm. to Luke, Gospel of St., cited s.v.

MAGNUS, St. (1) Martyr. The supposed existence of the saint of this name occurring in the Roman martyrology for 19 Aug., where he is asserted to have suffered in the Decian persecution, seems to have arisen from a blunder. In Latin lists 'St. Andrew the Tribune', who in Greek calendars is described as the 'Megalomartyr' (μεγαλομάρτυς, i.e. the Great Martyr), became Andreas Tribunus Magnus Martyr; and this description was later erroneously understood to refer to two saints, Andrew the Tribune and Magnus the Martyr.

(2) (d. c. 750), Apostle of the Allgäu, Bavaria. Very little is known about him, as the one surviving Life, in which his relations with St. *Gall and St. *Columbanus are described, is obviously so full of anachronisms and errors as to make it of little value for historical purposes. Feast day, 6 Sept.

(3) (d. 1116), son of Earl Erlin, ruler of the Orkneys. Having been captured by the Norwegian king, Magnus Barefoot, he escaped to Malcolm III of Scotland (d. 1093), and later lived in the house of a British bishop. During the latter part of his life he devoted himself to prayer and penance. After Magnus Barefoot's death he returned to the Orkneys, where he shared the government with his cousin Hakon, who treacherously killed him. Because of his saintly life he was soon venerated as a martyr though he did not die for the faith. He is supposed to have appeared to Robert Bruce before the battle of Bannockburn (1314) and promised him victory. Feast day, 16 Apr.

MAHOMETANISM. See Islam.

MAI, ANGELO (1782–1854), Italian philologist and palaeographer. Born of poor parents, he was educated at the Collegium Romanum and for a time belonged to the *Jesuit Order. In 1813 he was appointed custodian of the *Ambrosiana at Milan, and in 1819 prefect of the *Vatican library. In 1838 he became cardinal. He was renowned esp. as a reader of *palimpsests. He published four large collections of classical and theological texts, chiefly based on unpublished MSS. in the Vatican and Ambrosian libraries, viz. Classicorum Auctorum (10 vols., 1828–38), Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio (10 vols., 1830–8), Spicilegium Romanum (10 vols., 1839–44), and Nova Patrum Bibliotheca (8 vols., 1844–71; vols. 9 (1888) and 10 (1905) added later by J. Cozza-Luzi).

Letters ed. G. Cozza Luzi (Bergamo, 1883) and G. Gervasoni (Florence, 1954 ff.). Lives by B. Prina (Bergamo, 1882) and G. Poletto (Bergamo, 1882; ed. 2, Siena, 1886). A. Bonnetty, Table alphabétique analytique et raisonnée de tous les auteurs sacrés et profanes qui ont été découverts et édités récemment dans les 43 vol. publiés par le cardinal Mai (1850). G. Cozza-Luzi, 'I grandi lavori del cardinale Mai' in Bessarione, Ser. 2, vii (1904), pp. 103–33; viii (1905), pp. 59–74; ix (1905), pp. 308–17; x (1906), pp. 169–82. G. Gervasoni, L'ambiente letterario milanese nel secondo decennio dell'ottocento. Angelo Mai alla Bibliotheca Ambrosiana (Fontes ambrosiani, xi, Florence, 1936), with full bibl. S. Timpanaro, 'Angelo Mai' in Atene e Roma, N.S., i (1956), pp. 3–34. Bergomum. Bollettino della civica biblioteca, vol. xxviii, no. 4. Numero speciale dedicato alle celebrazioni in onore del Card. Angelo Mai nel centenario della morte (1954). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt.1; 1931), cols. 1196–1202, s.v.

MAID OF KENT. See Barton, Elizabeth.

MAID OF ORLEANS. See Joan of Arc, St.

MAIER, JOHANNES. See Eck, Johann.

MAIMONIDES, MOSES (1135–1204), Jewish philosopher. He is known to Jewish writers as 'Rambam' (the consonants being the initial letters of 'Rabbi Moses ben Maimon'). Born at Cordova, he received a comprehensive education from his father, a learned *Talmudist. During an anti-Jewish persecution (1149) he fled and settled in Fez, where he wrote his 'Epistle on Apostasy' to strengthen his co-religionists against Mohammedanism. In 1165 he had to leave Morocco and, after a brief stay in Palestine, finally settled at Fostat (Cairo), where he became head of the Jewish community. In 1168 he completed his commentary on the *Mishnah, known as the Siraj or 'Luminary'; it was a notable contribution to exegesis and scholarship. He brought out c. 1180 his 'Mishneh Torah' in Hebrew, a Talmudic code in fourteen parts arranged by subject matter, which was often commented on; it consists of a classification of Jewish religious doctrines, their interpretation by the masters, and their moral and philosophical implications. All his other works were written in Arabic. In 1190 appeared his principal treatise, the 'Guide for the Perplexed' (Dux Neutrorum sive Dubiorum). Its purpose was to achieve a working harmony between reason and faith. Its three parts treat of: (1) the idea of God; (2) the arguments for the existence of God, His manifestations, the world of spirits, the creation of the world in time, and prophecy; and (3) the interpretation of *Ezekiel's vision, the problem of evil, the end of creation, Divine Providence, and Divine knowledge. Maimonides' aim was to achieve a synthesis of the data of the Jewish revelation and the findings of human reason proposed by *Aristotle. His work had a profound influence on the Christian thought of the Middle Ages, esp. on St. *Albert the Great and St. *Thomas Aquinas.

Maimonides' works have been repeatedly repr. from the 15th cent. onwards, but there is no collected ed. The principal ed. of his 'Guide' (Arab. text) is that of S. Munk, with Fr. tr. (3 vols., Paris, 1856–66); Eng. trr. by M. Friedländer (3 vols., London, 1881–5) and S. Pines (Chicago, 1963). Eng. tr. (in progress) of the Mishneh Torah by J. J. Rabinowitz, H. Danby, H. Klein, and others (Yale Judaica Series, ed. J. Obermann, New Haven, Conn., 1949 ff.). Eng. tr. from various works by A. Cohen as The Teachings of Maimonides (1927). Studies by D. Yellin–I. Abrahams (London, 1903), L. G. Levy ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1911; new ed. 1932), J. Müntz (Frankfurt am Main, 1912; Eng. tr., Boston, 1935), A. Heschel (Berlin, 1935), and S. Zeitlin (New York, 1935). W. Bacher–M. Brann–D. Simsonsen–J. Guttmann, Moses ben Maimon. Sein Leben, seine Werke und sein Einfluss. Zur Erinnerung an den siebenhundertsten Todestag des Maimonides (2 vols., 1908–14). I. Epstein (ed.), Moses Maimonides, 1135–1204. Anglo-Jewish Papers in connexion with the eighth centenary of his birth (1935), with bibl. of Eng. works, pp. 231–48. S. W. Baron (ed.), Essays on Maimonides. An Octocentennial Volume (New York, 1941). A. Rohner, O.P., Das Schöpfungsproblem bei Moses Maimonides, Albertus Magnus und Thomas von Aquin (B.G.P.M., xi, Hft. 5; 1913), pp. 1–44. L. Roth, The Guide for the Perplexed. Moses Maimonides (1948). B. Z. Bokser, The Legacy of Maimonides (New York, 1950). D. J. Silver, Maimonidean Criticism and the Maimonidean Controversy 1180–1240 (Leyden, 1965). Überweg, ii, pp. 339–41, with bibl. p. 727. L. I. Rabinowitz and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xi (Jerusalem, 1972), pp. 754–81, s.v.

MAISTRE, J. COMTE DE. See De Maistre, J.

MAITLAND, FREDERIC WILLIAM (1850–1906), historian. The grandson of S. R. *Maitland, he was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1876. In 1884 he was appointed reader in, and in 1888 Downing professor of, English law at Cambridge. In his Roman Canon Law in the C of E (1898) he maintained against nearly all previous writers, including W. *Stubbs (who was convinced by Maitland's arguments), that in the Middle Ages the English secular courts recognized the Roman canon law as binding on the English clergy apart from its re-enactment in the English synods. His crucial instance was the legitimation of natural-born children by subsequent matrimony. He also contributed the chapter on 'The Anglican Settlement and the Scottish Reformation' to the Cambridge Modern History (vol. ii, ch. 16) and was the author of a large number of other historical writings.

Collected Papers, ed. H. A. L. Fisher (3 vols., Cambridge, 1911); some of these, with additions, ed. H. D. Hazeltine–G. Lapsley–P. H. Winfield, as Selected Essays (ib., 1936); Selected Historical Essays, chosen and with introd. by Helen M. Cam (ib., 1957); Letters, ed. C. H. S. Fifoot (ib., 1965). A. L. Smith, Frederick William Maitland. Two Lectures and a Bibliography (Oxford, 1908). Fuller life by H. A. L. Fisher (Cambridge, 1910). H. E. Bell, Maitland. A Critical Examination and Assessment (1965). J. R. Cameron, Frederick William Maitland and the History of English Law (Norman, Oklahoma [1961]). B. F. Lock in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 552–5.

MAITLAND, SAMUEL ROFFEY (1792–1866), ecclesiastical historian. He was educated at St. John's and Trinity Colleges, Cambridge, and called to the bar, but soon abandoned the idea of a legal profession. In 1821 he was ordained deacon in the C of E (previously he had been a Nonconformist), and from 1823 to 1827 was Perpetual Curate of Christ Church, *Gloucester. He then travelled abroad for some years, taking a keen interest in missionary work among the Jews. In 1838 he was appointed *Lambeth librarian. Maitland was a student of immense industry with a great variety of interests. Among his many writings were: Facts and Documents illustrative of the History, Doctrine, and Rites of the Ancient Albigenses and Waldenses (1832), a work which was occasioned by a controversy with the *Irvingites; The Dark Ages (1844); and Essays on Subjects connected with the Reformation in England (1849). The two works last named had first appeared in the British Magazine, of which Maitland took over the editorship from H. J. *Rose in 1839.

A. Jessopp in D.N.B., xxxv (1893), pp. 371–4, s.v., with notes on MS. sources.

MAJOR ORDERS. The higher grades of the Christian ministry in contradistinction from the *Minor Orders (q.v.). From the time of *Innocent III, the *subdiaconate was accounted a major order and the diaconate and priesthood reckoned as the other two to preserve the original number of three in all. Previously the episcopate was commonly reckoned as an order distinct from the priesthood, and in modern times the Second *Vatican Council implied a ministry comprising the episcopate, priesthood and diaconate. In 1972 the subdiaconate was suppressed. Acc. to RC practice no one can receive major orders who has not previously received the lesser ministries; those on whom they are conferred are bound to celibacy and the recitation of the Divine Office.

MAJORISTIC CONTROVERSY. The controversy aroused among the German Protestants in 1551 through the teaching of Georg Major (or Maier; 1502–74) to the effect that the performance of good works was necessary to a Christian man's salvation. This teaching was promptly attacked by M. *Flacius, N. Amsdorf (1483–1565), and others as opposed to the *Lutheran doctrine of *justification by faith only. Though Major elaborated further, and perhaps modified, his teachings, he continued to hold that good works were necessary, though he allowed that they were only a token of man's justification (which was by faith alone). He received very little support from his contemporaries.

G. Major's Werke were ed. in 3 vols., Wittenberg (1569–70; many works omitted). O. Ritschl, Dogmengeschichte des Protestantismus, ii (1912), esp. pp. 371–98. G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 85–91, s.v. 'Major, Georg'.

MAJUSCULE SCRIPT. See Uncial Script.

MALABAR CHRISTIANS. A title applied to a group of Christians living in Kerala in SW. *India, also known as 'Thomas Christians'. They claim that their Church was founded by St. *Thomas the Apostle, who is held to have been martyred near Madras; a shrine of St. Thomas near Madras is marked by a cross bearing a 7th-cent. Pahlavi inscription. Though the tradition is not impossible, there is no certain evidence earlier than the assertion of *Cosmas Indicopleustes that there were Christians in India before 550. These early Christians were probably originally from E. Syria, with which India conducted considerable trade; their bishops came from the *Nestorian Patriarch of Baghdad, and Syriac was used exclusively in liturgical worship. When the Portuguese arrived at the end of the 15th cent. they were originally friendly towards the 'Syrians'. At the Synod of *Diamper in 1599 the Malabar Christians renounced Nestorius and allied themselves with Rome. Interference with their customs, esp. by the *Jesuits, caused a breach with the W. in 1653; but, largely as a result of the ministrations of the *Carmelites, about two-thirds of them returned to communion with Rome in 1662. They use a slightly revised form of the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari and still form the largest body of Malabar Christians.

Those who did not return to Rome in 1662 joined themselves to the *Jacobites and adopted the West Syrian Antiochene liturgy. They were prevented by the Portuguese from receiving a bishop from Mesopotamia, but eventually they obtained a *Monophysite bishop from the Patriarch in Homs. From 1816 to 1836 they were in close touch with the Anglican Church and received missionaries from the *C.M.S. Until recently, they have been constantly disturbed by internal dissensions, and at the end of the 19th cent. there was a further split, the reforming party constituting themselves the 'Mar Thoma' Church, which has maintained close links with the C of E and later the Church of *South India. There were also various attempts to obtain union with Rome; after the secession of Mar Ivanios in 1925 more serious negotiations were opened and in 1930 the *Malankarese Uniat Church (q.v.) came into being. The Syrian Orthodox (Jacobite) Church in India now has its own Catholicos, but recognizes the Patriarch as the supreme head of the Church. It is one of the most highly literate communities in India and is active in missionary work in Africa and in most parts of Asia.

The best account is that of L. W. Brown, The Indian Christians of St. Thomas (Cambridge, 1956). Earlier works include M. Geddes, The History of the Church of Malabar from the Time of its first being discovered by the Portuguese in the Year 1501 (tr. from the Portuguese into English, London, 1694). J. F. Raulin, Historia Ecclesiae Malabaricae cum Diamperitana Synodo (Rome, 1745). T. Whitehouse, Lingerings of Light in a Dark Land; being researches into the past history and present condition of the Syrian Church of Malabar (1873); W. Germann, Die Kirche der Thomas- christen (Gütersloh, 1877); F. E. Keay, A History of the Syrian Church of India [1938]. N. J. Thomas, Die Syrisch-Orthodoxe Kirche der Südindischen Thomas-Christen (Das östliche Christentum, Neue Folge, xix; 1967). J. Vellian (ed.), The Malabar Church. Symposium in honour of Rev. Placid Podipara, C.M.I. (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clxxxvi; 1970). P. J. Podipara, C.M.I., The Thomas Christians (1970). P. Cheriyan, The Malabar Syrians and the Church Missionary Society 1816–1840 (Kottayan, 1935). R. H. *Connolly, 'The Work of Menezes on the Malabar Liturgy' in J.T.S., xv (1914), pp. 396–425, 569–89, with addition by E. *Bishop, pp. 589–93. L. K. Ananthakrishna Ayyar, Anthropology of the Syrian Christians (Ernakulam, 1926). G. B. Howard, The Christians of St. Thomas and their Liturgies (1864; with trr. of several liturgies). A. J. Maclean in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 178–80, s.v. 'Syrian Christians, 9'. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1704–45, s.v. 'Malabres (Rites)'; E. Tisserant, ib., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 3089–3162, s.v. 'Syro-Malabare (Église)'; adapted into Eng. as Eastern Christianity in India (1957). See also bibl. to India, Christianity in, and Thomas, Acts of.

MALACHI, Book of. The last of the 12 *Minor Prophets and the last Book of the OT, acc. to the English order. The Heb. 'Malachi' (מַלְאָכִי) means 'my messenger', and the word is probably not to be considered the actual name of the prophet, although a few scholars hold that one of *Ezra's assistants was so called. The writer, whoever he was, begins by emphasizing the love of God for His people (1. 2–5), which is reciprocated only by insincere worship and empty, corrupt, and unworthy priestcraft (1. 6–2.9); he then condemns the practice of mixed marriages and divorce (2. 10–16); he announces that a day of judgement will surely come (2. 17 – 3. 6) and that happiness and prosperity can be restored only by the regular payment of tithes and other dues (3. 7–12); he touches on the age-long problem of innocent suffering and the ultimate reward of the righteous (3. 13 – 4. 3); and in conclusion he exhorts his readers to keep the law of *Moses (4. 4–6).

The language and thought of the Book are those of the age following the Exile (i.e. after 538), and the Jewish *Temple has evidently been rebuilt. Contemporary Jewish expectations for the future may be seen in the role given to *Elijah (4. 5; cf. Lk. 1. 17). The prophecy about the messenger who shall prepare the way of the Lord in 3. 1 is applied in the Gospels to *John the Baptist (Mk. 1. 2), while the reference to the 'pure offering' in 1. 11 is often taken in Christian tradition as a prophecy of the *Eucharist.

Commentaries by W. E. Barnes (Camb. Bib., RV, 1917), J. M. P. Smith (I.C.C. on Hag., Zech., Mal., Jon., 1912; separate pagination). A. von Bulmerincq, Einleitung in das Buch des Propheten Maleachi (Acta et Commentationes Universitatis Dorpatensis B. Humaniora, i, pt. 2; iii, pt. 1; vii, pt. 1; 1921–6); id., Kommentar (ib., xv, pt. 1; xix, pt. 1; xxiii, pt. 2; xxvi, pt. 1; xxvii, pt. 2; 1929–32). K. Elliger, 'Maleachi und die kirchliche Tradition' in E. Würthwein–O. Kaiser (edd.), Tradition und Situation. Studien zur alttestamentlichen Prophetie Artur Weiser zum 70. Geburtstag . . . dargebracht (Göttingen, 1963), pp. 43–48. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets.

MALACHY, St. (1094–1148), Abp. of *Armagh. He was one of the foremost figures in *Ireland in the Middle Ages. A strong supporter of Roman practices and customs, he became involved in a long struggle between the pro- and anti-Roman parties, and was for several years unable to secure possession of the see of Armagh to which he had been nominated in 1129. In 1139 he set out for Rome to seek the *pallium from Innocent II, and on the way met St. *Bernard at *Clairvaux, who became his close friend and biographer. Though the Pope received him favourably, he refused to grant the pallium until assured of the real situation in Ireland. On the return journey St. Malachy again visited Clairvaux, and taking thence four of its monks, introduced the *Cistercian Order into Ireland. In 1148 he was dispatched on a second visit to Rome to obtain the pallium, but died at Clairvaux on the way in the arms of St. Bernard. Feast day, 3 Nov.

Best ed. of life by St. Bernard is that in S. Bernardi Opera, iii, ed. J. Leclercq, O.S.B.–H. M. Rochais, O.S.B. (Rome, 1963), pp. 297–378; Epitaph and hymn, ib., pp. 517–26. Eng. tr. of life, with good introd., by H. J. Lawlor (S.P.C.K. texts, 1920). É. Vacandard, 'Un Évêque d'Irlande, au XIIe siècle. Saint Malachie O'Margair' in R.Q.H., lii (1892), pp. 5–72. A. Gwynn, S.J., 'St. Malachy of Armagh' in Irish Ecclesiastical Record, lxx (1948), pp. 961–78; lxxi (1949), pp. 134–48, 317–31. J. Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Documents on the Cult of St. Malachy' in Seanchas Ardmhacha. Journal of the Armagh Historical Society, iii (1959), pp. 318–32. Popular modern life by A. J. Luddy (Dublin, 1930). J. F. Kenney, Sources of the Early History of Ireland, i (New York, 1929), pp. 764–7, with further bibl.

MALACHY, Prophecies of. The so-called Prophecies of Malachy, which are contained in a document apparently composed in 1590, have no connexion with St. *Malachy except their erroneous attribution to him. They purport to give a concise motto for every Pope from Celestine II (1143–4) to 'Peter II' at the end of the world (In persecutione extrema S.R. Ecclesiae sedebit Petrus II Romanus). *Pius IX, e.g., corresponded with crux de cruce; *Pius X with ignis ardens; *Pius XII was pastor angelicus; *John XXIII, pastor et nauta; and *John Paul II is de labore solis. Esp. inappropriate was the description of *Benedict XIV as a 'rustic animal' (animal rurale).

Text first pr. by A. Wion, O.S.B., Lignum Vitae, Ornamentum et Decus Ecclesiae, i (Venice, 1595), pp. 307–11. M. J. O'Brien, An Historical and Critical Account of the So-Called Prophecy of St. Malachy (Dublin, 1880), incl. text. Also ed., with introd. and comm., by P. Bander (Gerrards Cross, 1969). A. *Harnack, 'Über den Verfasser und den Zweck der Prophetia Malachie de Summis Pontificibus (1590)' in Z.K.G., iii (1879), pp. 315–24. H. Thurston, S.J., The War and the Prophets (1915), pp. 120–41 ('The So-Called Prophecy of St. Malachy'). R. Thibaut, S.J., La Mystérieuse Prophétie des Papes (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de Namur, x; 1951).

MALALAS, JOHN. See John Malalas.

MALANKARESE CHURCH. The group of *Malabar Christians (q.v.) who entered into communion with Rome in 1930. An unsuccessful attempt of a section of the Jacobite Malabarese at reunion with the W. was made c. 1870 by their Bishop, Mar Dionysius IV. The group, which eventually became *Uniat in 1930, consisted of Mar Ivanios (who had shortly before been raised to the rank of metropolitan) and his suffragan, Mar Theophilus, with some 10,000 followers. By the papal constitution Christo pastorum principi of 11 June 1932, Trivandrum was made the metropolitan see. They retain their ancient Antiochene rite.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wisc. [1935]), pp. 196–99. M. Ivanios, 'The Malabar Reunion' in Pax, xxi (1931), pp. 1–4. See also bibl. to Malabar Christians.

MALCHION (3rd cent.), *Antiochene presbyter. He was head of the Hellenic rhetorical school at Antioch and chosen for his orthodoxy and great learning to interrogate *Paul of Samosata at the Council of Antioch (c. 270). He successfully forced Paul to reveal his heretical doctrines and, acc. to St. *Jerome, himself composed the synodical letter which condemned them.

The chief early authorities are *Eusebius, H.E., VII. 29 f., and *Jerome, De vir. ill., 71. The (scattered) fragments of Malchion's Dialogue with Paul, taken down in shorthand, have been collected by F. *Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (T.U., xliv, No. 5; 1924), pp. 334–7. Cf. also G. Bardy, Paul de Samosate (1923), and H. de Riedmatten, O.P., Les Actes du procès de Paul de Samosate (Paradosis, vi; Fribourg, 1952). Brief art. by G. Bardy in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), col. 1765 f., s.v.

MALDONADO, JUAN (1533–83), 'Maldonatus', Spanish theologian and exegete. After being educated at the university of Salamanca, he entered the *Jesuit Order in 1562. In 1564 he became professor at the Jesuit Collège de Clermont at Paris, where his theological lectures attracted enormous audiences. In 1574 the *Sorbonne attacked his teaching as heretical; and, though vindicated by the Bp. of Paris in 1576, he withdrew from Paris. His work went far towards rescuing Catholic theology from the barbarous language and barrenness of ideas then prevalent, and his commentaries on the Gospels (2 vols., 1596–7) are held in deservedly high repute. All his writings were published posthumously, and some of those attributed to him are to be treated with caution, as they appear to be inaccurate reproductions of notes taken down at his lectures.

Opera Varia Theologica, publ. in 3 vols. (Paris, 1677), with short life in vol. iii. R. Galdos, S.J. (ed:), Miscellanea de Maldonato anno ab eius nativitate quater centenario, 1534?–1934 (Madrid, 1947), with life, pp. 11–16, and bibl., pp. 17–21, and certain of his Orations. J. M. Prat, S.J., Maldonat et l'université de Paris au XVIe siècle (Paris, 1856); J. I. Tellechea Idigoras, La Inmaculada Concepción en la controversia del P. Maldonado, S.J., con la Sorbona (Victoriensia, vii; Vitoria, 1958), with docc. and bibl. A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, ii (1905), pp. 357–65. J. Iturrioz, 'Maldonado en Salamanca' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xvi (1942), pp. 221–34. Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 403–14, and ix (1900), col. 631. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1772–6, s.v. 'Maldonat'.

MALEBRANCHE, NICOLAS (1638–1715), French philosopher. He became an *Oratorian in 1660. His most important works are Recherche de la vérité (1674) and Traité de la nature et de la grâce (1680). Some of his positions derive from *Augustine and *Descartes, but his system is profoundly original. He denied that any action of matter upon mind was possible, and explained sensation as the effect of a new creative act in the mental order to correspond with things in the physical creation ('*Occasionalism'). His principle of simplicité des moyens (that God exhibits His omnipotence by acting always in the simplest possible way) led him into a form of *Ontologism, in which God was the immediate cause of all human knowledge, and the 'place of our ideas'; consequently, he taught that our first and simplest idea is that of the infinite. Again, the complexity of the natural creation as a whole was justified in his system solely by the fact of its being eternally ordained (as the simplest possible means) towards the Incarnation of the Word and the reign of grace. A. *Arnauld, J. B. *Bossuet, and F. *Fénelon wrote against various aspects of his doctrine during his lifetime.

Crit. ed. of Malebranche's works by A. Robinet (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques; 20 vols.+index, Paris, 1958–1970). Besides various older trr. of Malebranche's writings, there is a good Eng. tr. of the Dialogues on Metaphysics and on Religion by M. Ginsberg ('Library of Philosophy', 1923). E. A. Blampignon, Études sur Malebranche d'après des documents manuscrits, suivie d'une correspondance inédite (1862). Studies by L. Ollé-Laprune (2 vols., Paris, 1870–2), H. Joly ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1901), R. W. Church (London, 1931), M. Guéroult ('Philosophie de l'Esprit', 3 vols., 1955–9), P. Blanchard (Paris, 1956), G. Dreyfus (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1958), S. Nicolosi (Padua, 1963), G. Rodis-Lewis ('Les Grands Penseurs', 1963), Beatrice K. Rome (Chicago, 1963), S. Banchetti (Milan [c. 1963]), L. Verga (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Contributi, serie terza, scienze filosofiche, ix; Milan, 1964). J. Vidgrain, Le Christianisme dans la philosophie de Malebranche (1923); H. Gouhier, La Philosophie de Malebranche et son expérience religieuse (1926). Malebranche nel terzo centenario della nascita. Pubblicazione a cura della Facoltà di Filosofia dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore (Rivista di Filosofia Neo-Scolastica, Supplemento speciale al volume xxx; Milan, 1938). Y. de Montcheuil, Malebranche et le quiétisme (Théologie, x; 1946). A. Robinet, Système et existence dans l'œuvre de Malebranche (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1965). Malebranche. L'Homme et l'œuvre, 1638–1715, by A. Robinet and others (Centre International de Synthèse, 1967). Überweg, iii, pp. 265–8, with bibl., p. 663 f. J. Wehrlé in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1776–1804, s.v.; G. Rodis-Lewis in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 110–12, s.v.

MALINES CONVERSATIONS. The meetings of a group of Anglican and RC theologians held at Malines between 1921 and 1925 under the presidency of Cardinal D. J. *Mercier. The initiative came from Lord *Halifax. The others who took part were, on the Anglican side, J. A. *Robinson, W. H. *Frere, C. *Gore, and Dr. B. J. Kidd (the Warden of Keble College, Oxford), and on the Roman side Mgr. J. E. van Roey, the Abbé F. Portal, P. *Batiffol, and the Abbé H. Hemmer; and all the meetings except the first took place with the cognizance of the Holy See and the Abp. of *Canterbury. It was agreed that the Pope should be given primacy of honour; that the Body and Blood of Christ are indeed taken in the Eucharist; that the Sacrifice of the Eucharist is a true sacrifice, but after a mystical manner; that Episcopacy is by Divine law; and that Communion in both kinds is a matter of discipline not of dogma. The more Protestant sections of the C of E viewed the Conversations with great suspicion, and the publication of the Report was long delayed for fear that it might fan the opposition to the Revised Prayer Book. Lord Halifax, however, published it early in 1928. Though the Conversations issued in no tangible result and further progress was hindered by *Pius XI's encyclical '*Mortalium Animos' (1928), they indirectly stimulated the movement for co-operation between the C of E and the RC Church.

Lord Halifax, The Conversations at Malines, 1921–5 (1930); W. H. *Frere, Recollections of Malines (1935); G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (1935), ch. lxxix; J. G. Lockhart, Viscount Halifax, vol. ii (1936), chs. xviii–xxii. J. de Bivort de la Saudée, Anglicans et Catholiques (2 vols., Brussels, 1949), with docc. in vol. ii. H. Hemmer, Monsieur Portal, prêtre de la mission (1855–1926) (posthumously pub., 1947; Eng. tr. and ed. by A. T. Macmillan, 1961), pp. 121–68.

MALLEOLUS (or MALLEUS) HAERETICORUM (Lat., 'Hammer of the Heretics'). A title applied to various persons who contended vigorously with heretics, among them St. *Antony of Padua, St. Peter *Canisius, and Johann *Faber (1478–1541).

MALMESBURY. The town, formerly the seat of a *Benedictine abbey, traces its origin to the Scottish or Irish monk Maildulf, who founded a school there c. 635. It developed into a monastery under his pupil, St. *Aldhelm, who became its first abbot and later Bp. of *Sherborne. The house flourished under him and his successors, and enjoyed the favour of many English kings, Athelstan, *William the Conqueror, and later Richard II and Henry V, among them. Throughout the Middle Ages it remained one of the principal English monasteries and sent its mitred abbots to Parliament; its most famous member was the historian, *William of Malmesbury. The monastery was dissolved in 1539. The principal portions of the abbey that remain now form the parish church of St. Mary and St. Aldhelm.

J. S. Brewer and C. T. Martin (edd.), Registrum Malmesburiense (R.S., 2 vols., 1879–80). R. H. Luce, Pages from the History of the Benedictine Monastery of Malmesbury (Devizes, 1929). H. Breakspear, 'Malmesbury Abbey' in Archaeologia, lxiv (1913), pp. 399–436. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 253–64. A. Watkin, O.S.B., in V.C.H., Wilts., iii, ed. R. B. Pugh–Elizabeth Crittall (1956), pp. 210–31.

MALO, St. See Machutus, St.

MALTA, KNIGHTS OF. See Hospitallers.

MALTESE CROSS. A black cross of eight points on a white ground, so named because it was adopted by the Knights of Malta, i.e. the *Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem.

MALVERN CONFERENCE. The Anglican Conference which met at Malvern, 7–10 Jan. 1941, under the presidency of Abp. W. *Temple, to consider in the light of the Christian faith the crisis confronting civilization. In its 'findings', which were esp. concerned with the relation of the Church to economic life, the Conference asserted its belief that the continued private ownership of the industrial resources of the country imperilled the Christian doctrine of man, and it urged that the C of E should radically reform its own economic and administrative system.

The Resolutions were issued as a leaflet entitled The Life of the Church and the Order of Society by the *Industrial Christian Fellowship. Most of the papers read were printed in Malvern 1941 (1941).

MAMERTINE PRISON. A building in the centre of Rome consisting of two cells, one above the other, in which, acc. to tradition, St. *Peter was imprisoned and converted his two gaolers, Processus and Martinianus. It was certainly in use as a prison from Republican times. The small church of San Giuseppe dei Falegnami now stands above the site.

H. Grisar, S.J., 'Der mamertinische Kerker und die römischen Traditionen vom Gefängnisse und den Ketten Petri' in Z.K.T., xx (1896), pp. 102–20. L. *Duchesne, 'Le Forum Chrétien' in Mélanges de littérature et d'histoire religieuses publiés à l'occasion du jubilé épiscopal de Mgr de Cabrières, i (1899), II, 'La Prison mamertine', pp. 128–31. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1356–60, s.v.

MAMERTUS, St. (d. c. 475), Abp. of Vienne in Gaul from c. 461. He was the brother of *Claudianus Mamertus (q.v.). For consecrating a Bishop of Die and overriding the attempted settlement of the conflicting claims of the sees of Arles and Vienne (450), he received a rebuke from Pope Hilary (464). He is esp. remembered for having introduced (c. 470) the 'litanies' on the days immediately preceding *Ascension Day as an act of intercession against earthquakes and other perils, a practice which led later to the institution of the *Rogation Days. Feast day, 11 May.

*Avitus, Homilia de Rogationibus (PL. lix, 289–94). AA.SS., Mai. II (1680), pp. 629–31. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., ix (1910), p. 580. See also bibl. to Rogation Days.

MAN, Isle of. See Sodor and Man.

MANASSES, Prayer of. This short book in the OT *Apocrypha consists of a penitential prayer put into the mouth of Manasseh, King of Judah (2 Kgs. 21. 1–18). Though the prayer contains no reference to Manasseh by name (apart from the heading) and in content resembles some of the *Penitential Psalms, there are some indications that it was composed with Manasseh's situation, as described in 2 Chron. 33. 12 f., in view. In some early Greek Bibles it is found among the Biblical *Canticles appended to the Psalter, and its use in the early Christian Church is attested by its embodiment in the *Didascalia and the *Apostolic Constitutions. All that can be said with certainty about its date is that it must be earlier than that of the Didascalia (early 3rd cent.). It is a matter of dispute whether it was orig. written in a Semitic language (Hebrew, Aramaic or Syriac) or in Greek. In printed *Vulgates, since the time of *Clement VIII (1592–1605) it has formed an appendix. In the E. Church it is recited in Great *Compline during Lent and on the eves of certain great feasts.

The numerous edd. of the LXX text include that of H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, iii (1894), pp. 802–4. The Syriac text from the Didascalia ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by F. Nau in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, xiii (1908), pp. 134–41. H. E. *Ryle in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 612–19. H. Volz, 'Zur Überlieferung des Gebetes Manasse' in Z.K.G., lxx (1959), pp. 293–307, with reff. H. Schneider, 'Der Vulgata-Text der Oratio Manasse' in Biblische Zeitschrift, N.F. iv (1960), pp. 277–82. R. H. Pfeiffer, New Testament Times, with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York [1949], London [1954]), pp. 457–60. F. Prat, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., iv (1908), cols. 654–83, s.v. 'Manassé (Prière de)'; J. B. Frey, ib., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 442–5, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament 13'. See also bibl. to Apocrypha.

MANDAEANS (also known as the Nasoreans and Christians of St. John). A *Gnostic sect which originated as a small community to the east of the *Jordan in the 1st or 2nd cent. A.D., and still survives south of Baghdad. Their extant writings, the chief of which is the Ginza or 'Treasure', date from the 7th or 8th cent. and are a farrago of inconsistent teachings, mostly akin to *Manichaean dualism. They taught that man's soul, unwillingly imprisoned in the body and persecuted by demons, will finally be freed by the redeemer, Manda da Hayyê, the personified 'Knowledge of Life' (sometimes also called Hibel, or Enos Uthra), who was himself once on earth and defeated the powers of darkness, and hence can guide souls through the heavenly spheres. These notions may be of Christian origin and really refer to Jesus Christ, though the sect has been very hostile to Christianity since Byzantine times. To assist man to prepare for his ascension after death, frequent baptism is enjoined. As St. *John the Baptist plays a large part in Mandaean writings (esp. in those dating from the Islamic period), some scholars have held that the sect must trace its ancestry to the Baptist himself (cf., e.g., Acts 19. 2 f.). But the dating is very uncertain, and the Mandaeans are more probably a late offshoot of Christianity than pre-Christian.

Modern crit. edd. of several Mandaean texts by M. Lidzbarski, incl. Das Johannesbuch der Mandäer (2 parts, Giessen, 1905–15), Mandäische Liturgien (Abh. (Gött.), xvii, Hft. 1; 1920), and Ginza, der Schatz oder das grosse Buch der Mandäer (Quellen der Religionsgeschichte, xiii; 1925 [Germ. tr.]). Eng. tr., with notes, of The Canonical Prayerbook of the Mandaeans by Ethel S. Drower (Leiden, 1959). W. Brandt, Die mandäische Religion. Ihre Entwicklung und ihre geschichtliche Bedeutung (1889); id., Mandäische Schriften (1893). S. A. Pallis, Mandaeische Studier, i (all publd., Copenhagen, 1919; Eng. tr., London–Copenhagen, 1926). H. Odeberg, Die mandäische Religionsanschauung (Uppsala, 1930). Ethel S. Drower, The Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran. Their Cults, Customs, Magic, Legends, and Folklore (1937); id., The Secret of Adam. A Study of Naṣoraean Gnosis (Oxford, 1960). K. Rudolph, Die Mandäer (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, N.F., lvi, lvii; Göttingen, 1960–61). E. Segelberg, Maṣbūtā. Studies in the Ritual of the Mandaean Baptism (Uppsala, 1958). On the language, T. Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik (1875); Ethel S. Drower and R. Macuch, A Mandaic Dictionary (Oxford, 1963); R. Macuch, Handbook of Classical and Modern Mandaic (Berlin, 1965). S. A. Pallis, Essay on Mandaean Bibliography, 1560–1930 (London–Copenhagen, 1933). K. Kessler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 155–83, s.v. 'Mandäer'; J. Schmitt in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 758–88, s.v. 'Mandéisme', with bibl.

MANDE, HENDRIK (c. 1360–1431), one of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He came under the influence of G. *Groote and *Florentius Radewyns and, at some date after 1390, entered the monastery at *Windesheim, where he was subject to visionary experiences. Here he wrote in Flemish twelve mystical tracts which embodied and developed many of J. *Ruysbroeck's ideas.

The chief source is Ian *Busch, Chronicon Windeshemense (ed. K. Grube, Halle, 1886), pp. 122–35. G. Visser, Hendrik Mande. Bijdrage tot de Kennis der Noord-Nederlandsche Mystiek (The Hague, 1899; with reprint of five of Mande's writings). Anthology in B. Spaapen, Hendrik Mande (Tielt, 1951). L. Schulze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 183–8.

MANDYAS (Gk. μανδύας). A form of cloak worn by monks and bishops in the E. Church. The ordinary monastic mandyas is black; bishops and abbots wear a larger mandyas, usually of purple, with a train extending behind.

MANES (or MANI) AND MANICHAEISM. It is impossible to state in brief compass the facts relating to the life of Manes (or, acc. to the usual W. form of his name, 'Manichaeus'), the founder of Manichaeism, as the relatively late sources of his life are mutually contradictory in their details. The chief sources are: (1) the writings of certain of the Church Fathers, notably St. *Ephraem Syrus, *Titus of Bostra, *Serapion of Thmuis, and esp. St. *Augustine of Hippo (who was himself a Manichee for nine years before his conversion); (2) a report of a reputed dialogue between Manes and a bishop, Archelaus, the so-called 'Acta Archelai', which was issued by one Hegemonius; (3) references in various medieval Mohammedan historians who came across Manichaeism in Babylonia, notably Al-Biruni; (4) a collection of Manichaean documents, discovered in 1904–5 at Turfan and elsewhere in Chinese Turkestan, and published by F. W. K. Müller and others; (5) another collection of Manichaean documents of the 3rd and 4th cents. found in Egypt in 1930 and published by C. Schmidt, H. J. Polotsky, and others, which, if not from Manes himself, embody the teaching of his earliest disciples; and (6) a biography of Manes, prob. translated from a Syriac original, recently discovered in Egypt. This casts a new light on his evolution as a young man, in the environment of a Persian Gnostic sect, the *Elkesaites.

From our extant sources it would seem that Manes (c. 216–276) was born near Seleucia-Ctesiphon, the capital of the Persian Empire, that he began his own special teaching in 240, that opposition from the *Zoroastrians forced him into exile in India, and that he propagated his teaching rapidly by preaching far and wide in the E., that in 242 he returned to the capital and may have approached Sapor I, who first gave him active support and then attacked him, and that under his second successor, Bahram I, he was put to death by being flayed alive, and his disciples banished.

Manes' system was a radical offshoot of the Gnostic traditions of E. Persia. Deeply influenced by St. *Paul (Manichaeism struck Christians as a 'Pauline heresy'), Manes transformed the cramped, ritualist views of the Judaeo-Christian sect in which he had been brought up into a coherent body of Gnostic dogma, uncompromisingly dualistic, consequential, and deeply conscious of having 'unveiled' truths of universal validity. It was based on a supposed primeval conflict between light and darkness. It taught that the object of the practice of religion was to release the particles of light which Satan had stolen from the world of Light and imprisoned in man's brain and that Jesus, Buddha, the Prophets, and Manes had been sent to help in this task. For the Manichaean believer, the whole physical universe was mobilized to create this release. The Gnostic myth of salvation has seldom been presented on so grandiose a cosmic scale, worked out in rigorous detail; every phase of the movements of the sun, moon and stars was a stage in the deliverance of the believer's soul, and every ritual act of the individual had resonance among the heavenly bodies.

To achieve this release, severe asceticism, including vegetarianism, was practised. There existed in the sect a hierarchy of grades professing different standards of austerity; the 'Elect' were supported by the 'Hearers' in their determined missionary endeavours and in an otherworldly state of perfection. The Manichaeans' enemies attributed to them many abominable practices, but St. Augustine, with his exceptional opportunities for being well informed, nowhere criticized their morals.

The sect spread rapidly. It appears to have been established in Egypt before the end of the 3rd cent., and at Rome early in the 4th. In the later 4th cent. Manichaeans were numerous in Africa. How far the sect directly influenced such heretics as the *Albigensians, *Bogomiles, and *Paulicians is disputed; for some similarities of practice would account for the charges of 'Manichaeism' laid against them. On the other hand, the Turfan fragments attest its survival in Chinese Turkestan down to the 10th cent.; and, as the 'Doctrine of Light', it still flourished in 13th cent. Fukien.

Convenient collection of texts ed. A. Adam, Texte zum Manichäismus (Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, clv; 1954; enlarged ed., 1969). The texts discovered in Egypt in 1930, which were reported in 1933, were shared mainly between the *Chester Beatty Collection and the Berlin Academy; those in the former collection have been ed. by H. J. Polotsky, Manichäische Homilien (Stuttgart, 1934) and C. R. C. Allberry, A Manichaean Psalm-Book, Part II (ib., 1938), and those in the latter by C. Schmidt and others, Kephalaia, 1. Hälfte (ib., 1940), all with introductions by H. Ibscher. On the recently recovered life of Manes, A. Henrichs–L. Koenen, 'Ein griechischer Mani-Codex (P. Colon. inv. nr. 4780)' in Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik, v (1970), pp. 97–216. The first critical study of the subject was Isaac de Beausobre, Histoire critique de Manichée et du manichéisme (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1734–9). Important later works include F. C. *Baur, Das manichäische Religionssystem (1831); G. Flügel, Mani, seine Lehre, seine Schriften (1862). E. Rochat, Essai sur Mani et sa doctrine (Geneva, 1897). F. Cumont–M. A. Kugener, Recherches sur le manichéisme (2 vols., 1908–12). P. Alfaric, Les Écritures manichéennes (2 vols., 1918–19). F. C. *Burkitt, The Religion of the Manichees (Donnellan Lectures for 1924; 1925). A. V. W. Jackson, Researches in Manichaeism (Columbia University Indo-Iranian Series, xiii; 1932). H. C. Puech, Le Manichéisme (1949). G. Widengren, Mani und der Manichäismus (Urban-Bücher, lvii; Stuttgart [1961]; Eng. tr. 1965). L. J. R. Ort, Mani. A religio-historical description of his personality (Leiden, 1967), with extensive bibliography. F. Decret, Aspects du manichéisme dans l'Afrique romaine. Les controverses de Fortunatus, Faustus et Félix avec Saint Augustin (Études Augustiniennes, 1970). P. Brown, 'The Diffusion of Manichaeism in the Roman Empire' in Journal of Roman Studies, lix (1969), pp. 92–103. K. Kessler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 193–228, s.v. 'Mani, Manichäer'; A. *Harnack–F. C. *Conybeare in E.B. (ed. 11), xvii (1911), pp. 572–8, s.v. 'Manichaeism'; H. J. Polotsky in P.W., Suppl. Band vi (1935), cols. 240–71, s.v. 'Manichäismus'; J. Ries in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 153–60, s.v. 'Manichaeism'.

MANIPLE. A strip of silk, two to four inches wide and a little over a yard in length, sometimes worn over the left arm by the ministers at Mass. In origin it was a handkerchief carried, as pagan and Christian monuments attest, in the left hand. It was first used liturgically in Rome, but in the 6th cent. is found in *Ravenna, and by the 9th cent. was in use all over Europe. In the Middle Ages it was sometimes worn by all clerks, but in post-Tridentine times it came to be confined to those who had attained at least the rank of *subdeacon. Its colour accords with that of the liturgical season and until recently it usually carried three crosses. The use of the maniple was made optional on 3 May 1967, and it is not mentioned in the 1969 Ordo Missae.

Braun, L.G., pp. 515–61. J. H. Crehan, S.J., 'The Bishop's Maniple' in Downside Review, lxxxiv (1966), pp. 280–84. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 601 f.

MANNA. The food miraculously provided for the *Israelites on their pilgrimage through the wilderness from Egypt to the *Holy Land (Exod. 16). It was a white substance which fell along with the dew, and was collected every morning except on the *Sabbath, for which an additional portion was gathered on the previous day. In Jn. 6 Christ speaks of Himself as the True Bread of life, apparently in contrast to the manna given in the wilderness, but in 1 Cor. 10. 3 and elsewhere the manna is regarded as a type of the Christian Eucharist.

P. Borgen, Bread from Heaven. An Exegetical Study of the Concept of Manna in the Gospel of John and the Writings of Philo (Supplement to Novum Testamentum, x; 1965). See also comm. on Exodus and John, Gospel of, cited s.vv.

MANNERS-SUTTON, CHARLES (1755–1828), Abp. of *Canterbury. A grandson of the Duke of Rutland, he was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. In 1791 he became Dean of *Peterborough and in 1792 Bp. of *Norwich. In 1794 he was appointed Dean of *Windsor in commendam* and lived on intimate terms with the family of George III. In 1805 he became Abp. of Canterbury. A High Churchman of the old school, he was dignified, gracious, and highly respected. He was opposed to RC emancipation, but favoured concessions to dissenters. He gave his active support in the foundation of the *National Society (for the education of the poor) in 1811, and guided and helped the *S.P.C.K. He also used his influence on behalf of the foundation of the Anglican episcopate in *India.

A. W. Rowden, The Primates of the First Four Georges (1916), pp. 380–426. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), p. 57 f.

MANNING, HENRY EDWARD (1808–92), Abp. of *Westminster. The youngest son of William Manning, M.P., he was educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford. His early ambition was for a parliamentary career, but his father's bankruptcy compelled him to accept a clerkship in the Colonial Office. In 1832 he was elected to a fellowship at Merton College, and in the same year he returned to Oxford and was ordained deacon. In Jan. 1833 he went as curate to John Sargent, rector of Lavington, whom he succeeded in May, and whose daughter Caroline (d. 1837) he married in Nov. In 1841 he became Archdeacon of *Chichester. Manning, who had begun life as an Evangelical, now gradually swung round to the *Tractarian side. He contributed No. 78 to the Tracts for the Times, and after J. H. *Newman's secession (1845) he was looked on as one of the leaders of the *Oxford Movement. He had disapproved, however, of the contents of Tract Ninety, and on 5 Nov. 1843 preached a strongly anti-Papal sermon before the University. The *Gorham Judgement destroyed his faith in Anglicanism and in 1851 he was received into the RC Church. Two months later he was (re-)ordained priest by N. *Wiseman, and after studying for two years at Rome, was made provost of the Westminster Metropolitan Chapter in 1857. In 1865 he succeeded Wiseman as Abp. of Westminster. At the *Vatican Council (1869–1870) he was a staunch supporter of Papal *Infallibility, taking a vow to do his utmost to secure its promulgation. His bitter hostility to the admission of RCs to the universities and other differences completely alienated him from Newman after 1866. After 1875, when he was made a cardinal, he was prominent in social work of all kinds, and in 1889 mediated successfully in the London Dock Strike. His body was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery, but was later brought back to Westminster Cathedral, which he had founded.

Official life by E. S. Purcell (2 vols., London, 1896; cynical, also inaccurate). In a similar vein L. Strachey, Eminent Victorians (1918), pp. 3–115 ('Cardinal Manning'). Other lives by A. W. Hutton (London, 1892, with list of Manning's works; rev. ed., 'English Leaders of Religion', 1894) and S. Leslie (ib., 1921). J. Fitzsimons (ed.), Manning: Anglican and Catholic (1951). V. A. McClelland, Cardinal Manning. His Public Life and Influence 1865–1892 (1962). J. E. C. Bodley, Cardinal Manning [and other Essays] (1912), pp. 1–65. D. Newsome, The Parting of Friends. A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning (1966). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 62–8; A. W. Hutton in E.B. (ed. 11), xvii (1911), pp. 589–91.

MANSE. The dwelling-house, especially in *Scotland, of a minister. When his residence in it is obligatory and it is used for the purposes of his ministry, the rates and taxes are payable by the Church as occupier as well as owner. In the old Church of Scotland, if the manse was not in a state of tenantable repair, an allowance in lieu of rent called 'manse maill' was paid to the incumbent by the *heritors, but by Act of Parliament, 1925, the rights of property have been transferred to the General Trustees of the Church.

MANSEL, HENRY LONGUEVILLE (1820–1871), Anglican divine. He was successively scholar (1839) and tutor (1844) of St. John's College, Oxford. In 1859 he became the first Waynflete professor of moral and metaphysical philosophy at Oxford, in 1866 (somewhat incongruously) Regius professor of ecclesiastical history, and in 1868 Dean of *St. Paul's. He delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures in 1858 on The Limits of Religious Thought, in which he argued that the human intellect acquired its knowledge of the nature of God from supernatural revelation alone. His contentions, which had been reached esp. from study of the doctrines of Sir William Hamilton, provoked much hostile criticism, notably from F. D. *Maurice and J. S. Mill. Mansel's other writings include Artis Logicae Rudimenta (1849), a widely used compendium of logic based on H. *Aldrich's manual; The Limits of Demonstrative Science (1853); the article 'Metaphysics' in the 8th edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica (1857); and a set of lectures on the Gnostic Heresies (1875; issued by J. B. *Lightfoot). His witty pen was often employed in matters of domestic controversy in the university, e.g. Phrontisterion, or, Oxford in the 19th Century (1852), a satire on the University Commission of 1850.

A collection of Mansel's Letters, Lectures and Reviews, including the Phrontisterion, ed. H. W. Chandler (London, 1873). The Phrontisterion was repr. in Three Oxford Ironies, ed. G. Gordon (London, 1927), pp. 77–102, with introd., pp. 17–23. J. W. *Burgon, The Lives of Twelve Good Men, ii (1888), pp. 149–237. W. R. Matthews, The Religious Philosophy of Dean Mansel (Friends of Dr. Williams's Library, 10th Lecture; 1956). K. D. Freeman, The Role of Reason in Religion. A Study of Henry Mansel (The Hague, 1969). D. Cupitt, 'What was Mansel trying to do?' in J.T.S., N.S., xxii (1971), pp. 544–7, with reff. to other recent works; D. W. Dockrill, 'The Doctrine of Regulative Truth and Mansel's Intentions', ib., xxv (1974), pp. 453–65. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 81–83.

MANSI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO (1692–1769), canonist and Abp. of Lucca. A native of Lucca, where he spent most of his life, he was professed a Clerk Regular of the Mother of God in 1710 and in 1765 was elected Abp. of Lucca. In 1724 he published Tractatus de Casibus et Censuris Reservatis, his only considerable original work. But he issued a vast series of publications in which his own part usually did not go beyond annotations (some 90 folio vols. have Mansi's name on their title-pages). The most celebrated was his edition of the Councils. In its original shape it was designed as a supplement to N. Coleti's collection (1728–33) and issued in 6 vols. (1748–52). Its success encouraged Mansi to produce his well-known 'Amplissima', the Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio (31 vols., 1759–98). It goes down to the Council of *Florence, but Mansi himself supervised only the first 14 vols. Its only real merit is its completeness. The editing is poor and uncritical and the older editions are often to be preferred. Among earlier scholars whose writings (in whole or part) Mansi re-edited were C. *Baronius (1738–56), J. A. *Fabricius (1754), *Pius II (Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini, 1755), and E. *Baluze (1761).

H. *Quentin, O.S.B., J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900). Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 111–14. A. Boudinhon in C.E., ix (1910), p. 609 f.

MANT, RICHARD (1776–1848), Bp. of Down, Connor, and Dromore. Educated at Winchester and Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in 1798 and ordained deacon in 1802. After holding several livings, he was appointed Bp. of Killaloe and Kilfenoragh in 1820 and of Down and Connor in 1823 (with Dromore from 1842). His best known work, which he prepared with G. D'Oyly (d. 1846), was an edition of the Bible with notes selected from Anglican divines (1814). His other writings include an annotated Book of Common Prayer (1820) and, the fruit of wide research, a History of the Church of Ireland (1840). He was also the author of 'Bright the vision that delighted' and other well-known hymns, as well as of much indifferent poetry.

Memoirs by [E.] Berens (London, 1849) and Walter Bishop Mant (Dublin, 1857). Detailed list of his publd. works in H. Cotton (ed.), Fasti Ecclesiae Hibernicae, iii (Dublin, 1849), pp. 213–17. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 96–8.

MANTEGNA, ANDREA (1431–1506), Italian painter. Adopted as a child by the painter Francesco Squarcione, he received an artistic education from early youth. His series of fresco paintings representing the Martyrdom of St. James and St. Christopher (1448–57), in the Church of the Eremitani at Padua (almost completely destroyed by bombing in March 1944), established his reputation as the first painter of the city. A second sequence, finished in 1474, treats of scenes from the Life of Marquess Lodovico Gonzaga, and the third, now at Hampton Court, the Triumph of Caesar (1484–92). A distinct line of development is noticeable in his altar pictures. His earliest works follow the traditional side-by-side grouping of single saints' figures, e.g. St. Luke's Altar (1453–4) of St. Giustina's at Padua, now in the Brera at Milan; but his later altar-pieces, e.g. that of San Zeno at Venice (1455–9), which exhibit Venetian influence in their closely knit composition, the triptych of the Adoration of the Magi (c. 1464), the Madonna della Vittoria (1495–6, Louvre), and the Madonna and Saints (1497), show considerable freedom of composition. One of his last works, the famous Dead Christ in the Brera of Milan, is remarkable for its virtuosity in foreshortening the body. Mantegna's copper engravings, which are among the earliest Italian specimens of this technique, are remarkable for the austerity of their style.

Paintings and engravings (in black and white) ed., with introd., by G. Knapp (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, xvi; 1910); smaller collection of plates in colour ed., with introd., by R. H. Wilenski, Mantegna and the Paduan School ('The Faber Gallery', 1947). E. Tietze-Conrat, Mantegna. Paintings: Drawings: Engravings (1955). P. Kristeller, Andrea Mantegna (Berlin–Leipzig, 1902; Eng. tr., 1901), with plates and original docc. C. Yriarte, Mantegna. Sa vie, sa maison, son tombeau, son œuvre dans les musées et les collections (1910). G. Fiocco, L'arte di Andrea Mantegna (Bologna, 1927); id., Mantegna (Milan [1937]), with plates and bibl. E. Camesasca, Mantegna (Milan, 1964). Other studies by H. Thode (Künstler-Monographien ed. H. Knackfuss, xii; 1897), Maud Cruttwell (London, 1901), and W. Boeck (Heimbücher der Kunst ed. F. Winkler, Burg b.M. [1942]), with plates. G. Fiocco in U. Thieme–F. Becker (founders), Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart, xxiv (ed. H. Vollmer; 1930), pp. 37–43, s.v., with detailed bibl.

MANTELLETTA. In the W. Church a short mantle open in front and reaching to the knees which, since 1969, has been reserved to prelates of the Roman *Curia and Protonotaries supra numerum.

The principal legislation governing the dress of senior members of the RC hierarchy is contained in the Instruction 'Ut sive sollicite' issued by the Papal Secretariate of State, 31 Mar. 1969, printed in A.A.S., lxi (1969), pp. 334–40. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 611, s.v.; P. Siffrin, O.S.B., in E.C., vii (1951), col. 1985 f., s.v.

MANTELLONE. A purple-coloured mantle of silk or wool, until 1969 worn by certain lesser prelates of the Papal court. It was fastened at the neck, reached to the ground and had slits through which the arms were placed.

G. Felici in E.C., vii (1951), col. 1986 f., s.v. T. Ortolan in D.T.C., iii (1908), col. 1972, s.v. 'Cour romaine'. See also bibl. to previous entry.

MANTUM. A red mantle of the Pope which from the 11th to the 14th cents. played an important part in the Papal elections, since the investiture with it (the so-called immantatio) expressed the transference to the Pope of his right to govern the Church.

MANUAL ACTS, The. The rubrics in the 1662 BCP require the celebrant of Holy Communion at the consecration to take the paten into his hands, to break the bread, lay his hand upon it, and to perform corresponding acts at the consecration of the wine. In 1549 the rubrics were less detailed, while from 1552 to 1662 they were omitted altogether, though some of the traditional ceremonies at the consecration no doubt continued. In the *Ridsdale case (1875–7) the Privy Council held that the rubric at the head of the Prayer of Consecration requiring the priest to break the bread 'before the people' meant that he must not intentionally so stand at the consecration as to prevent the congregation from seeing the manual acts. This decision was reaffirmed in substance in the *Lincoln Judgement (q.v.). It is now rarely observed except among extreme Evangelicals. The problem no longer arises where the *westward position has been adopted. See also 'North End', The.

V. Staley, The Manual Acts (*Alcuin Club Prayer Book Revision Pamphlets, iv; 1913).

MANUALE (Lat., 'a book of handy size'). In the Middle Ages the usual name for the book containing the forms prescribed to the parish priest for the administration of the sacraments. It now commonly goes by the name of the *'Rituale' (q.v.).

MANUSCRIPTS OF THE BIBLE. Writing in the ancient world was usually either on papyrus (made from the stems of the papyrus plant which once flourished in the marshes of the Nile; see Papyrology) or on specially prepared skins of animals ('parchment' or 'vellum'). For short communications, such as a letter or a business contract, a single sheet would be sufficient; but for longer items, such as a philosophical treatise or most Books of the Bible, a number of sheets would be joined together to form either a roll or a 'codex' (in which the sheets were first folded in quires and then sewn together as in a modern book).

The earliest part of the OT about the writing of which we have any definite information is the Book of *Jeremiah; this is clearly stated to have been written on a roll both in its first edition (Jer. 36. 2, 4, 6, &c.) and its second (Jer. 36. 32), though whether a papyrus or a parchment roll is not stated. It seems that the roll was the normal form of book used among the Jews at the time (cf. Ezek. 2. 9, 3. 3) and it continued so until well into the Christian era. The 'book' handed to the Lord in the synagogue at Nazareth will have been a roll because he is said to have 'opened' (lit. 'unrolled') it, and, after reading, rolled it up again before giving it back to the attendant (Lk. 4. 17–20). The evidence of the *Dead Sea Scrolls proves that both parchment and papyrus were used, but that parchment was preferred, particularly for Biblical Books; especially noteworthy here is the celebrated Isaiah roll (DS. Isa^{A}) found in Qumran Cave I, which, apart from a few small lacunae, has been preserved complete, and is dated in either the 1st or the 2nd cent. B.C. Some time later the Jews adopted the codex for private use, the earliest surviving examples being the British Museum Pentateuch (c. A.D. 850), the Cairo Prophets (A.D. 895), and the Leningrad Codex of the whole OT (A.D. 1008), though for reading in synagogue they have remained faithful to the parchment roll to the present day.

The first Greek translations of the OT Books are likely to have been written on papyrus, since they seem to have been made in Egypt, the home of papyrus. The only certain survivals from the pre-Christian period are fragments from two papyrus rolls (Pap. Rylands Gr. 458 and Pap. Fouad 266), both containing portions of Deuteronomy and both dated 2nd–1st cent. B.C. From c. A.D. 100 come the fragments of Genesis now at Yale (Pap. Yale 1); these are thought to be Christian in origin and to have been part of a codex, not a roll. In any case, the many Christian Biblical fragments datable in the 2nd and 3rd cents. A.D., whether of OT or NT Books, are without exception all from codices: outstanding in this group are those in the *Chester Beatty collection. During the 4th cent. there was a tendency for parchment to replace papyrus, at least for MSS. written for public reading in church. Acc. to *Eusebius (Vit. Const., iv. 36), the Emp. *Constantine gave instructions c. A.D. 330 for the preparation of 'fifty copies of the sacred scriptures . . . to be written on fine parchment . . . by professional scribes' for the new churches which he was building in *Constantinople. There is no reason to suppose that any of these fifty copies has survived, but a very good idea of what they must have been like can be gained from the appearance of the *Codex Sinaiticus or the *Codex Vaticanus, both of the 4th cent. Such MSS. might contain the whole Bible or only a part of it; their text is arranged in columns (two, three, or even four, to a page); and they were called 'uncials' because written in the formal uncial script, roughly equivalent to our 'capitals'. About the beginning of the 9th cent. a new style of script was introduced (known as 'minuscule'; see Cursive Script); the use of this script made it possible to accommodate the whole of the NT in one convenient volume. There are altogether some six or seven thousand Greek MSS. of different parts of the Bible accessible today (some as late as the 17th cent. and written on paper); the great majority of them are minuscules.

The oldest known Latin Biblical MS. is the 4th-cent. Codex Vercellensis; this is a sumptuous volume, written in uncial with silver ink on purple parchment, and contains an almost complete *Old Latin text of the Gospels. Even more substantial is the Old Latin 'Lyons Heptateuch' (Codex Lugdunensis, 5th–6th cent.), which contains about a third of Genesis, half of Exodus, three-quarters of Leviticus, and the whole of Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua and Judges, except the last chapter and a half of Judges. Of St. Jerome's *Vulgate, the most ancient relic is the fragmentary 5th cent. Codex Sangallensis of the Gospels; the most ancient complete Bible is the *Codex Amiatinus, written in Northumberland at the very end of the 7th cent. All these are parchment codices, and the script of all of them is uncial. As in the East, minuscule types of script were developed, the most influential being that associated with the ecclesiastical reforms of *Charlemagne and known as 'Carolingian minuscule' (see Carolingian Schools); this in turn provided the basis for yet further developments until the invention of printing. The extant Latin MSS. are even more numerous than their Greek counterparts (well over 8,000). One of them is said to be the largest book in the world, Codex Gigas, written in Bohemia in the 13th cent. and now at Stockholm, which is c. 20 inches wide and over 36 inches high and contains not only the Bible but a variety of other works as well. Also in the 13th cent. the use of very thin parchment and small writing made it possible to accommodate the text of the whole Bible within single conveniently sized volumes which are termed 'pocket Bibles'.

Of the *Old Syriac version only two MSS. are known (the 'Curetonian' and the 'Sinaitic'), both of the Gospels and both incomplete; but of the *Peshitta and the later *Syriac versions there are many, dating from the 5th cent. onwards. Among the MSS. and fragments in the various *Coptic dialects several have been dated as early as the 4th cent. (e.g. the sub-Akhmimic papyrus of St. John). Of the *Armenian version(s) well over a thousand MSS. are known to exist; of the *Gothic, only the remains of some half a dozen of the Gospels and Pauline Epistles in the NT and in the OT only fragments of Gen. 5, Ps. 52. 2–3, and Neh. 5–7. A mid-10th-cent. translation of the Gospels into West Saxon is preserved in four MSS. of the 11th and two of the 12th centuries.

Finally, there are 'bilingual' MSS.: these are of three kinds. Either the secondary text is written immediately above the primary text, or the two texts are copied in two parallel columns on the same page, or they are arranged to face one another on opposite pages. The first ('interlinear') arrangement is found, e.g., in the Codex Bœrnerianus of the Pauline Epistles, where the Latin is a more or less word-for-word equivalent of the Greek underneath; in the Codex Claromontanus (also of the Paulines) the Greek and Latin are in parallel columns; and in the *Codex Bezae they are on opposite pages.

For the use of Biblical MSS. in preparing a text, see Textual Criticism.

F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895; revised by A. W. Adams, 1958). B. J. Roberts, The Old Testament Text and Versions (Cardiff, 1951). C. H. Roberts, 'The Codex' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xl (1954), pp. 169–204; T. C. Skeat, 'Early Christian Book Production: Papyri and Manuscripts' in G. W. H. Lampe, The Cambridge History of the Bible, ii (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 54–79. K. Aland, Kurzgefasste Liste der griechischen Handschriften des Neuen Testaments (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, i; 1963). C. Van Puyvelde, O.S.B.–B. Botte, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 793–835, s.v. 'Manuscrits bibliques'. See also bibl. to Massoretes and individual MSS. and subjects referred to above.

MAPHRIAN (Syriac mafriano, 'one who bears fruit', i.e. 'a consecrator'). The title of the bishop of the *Jacobite Syrians who holds rank immediately after the Patriarch.

MARAN, PRUDENTIUS (1683–1762), *Maurist scholar. Born at Sézanne, he entered the Benedictine Order at St.-Faron, near Meaux, in 1703. Later he moved to *St.-Germain-des-Prés, where he co-operated with A. A. Touttée (1677–1718) in his edition of St. *Cyril of Jerusalem (publd. 1720). In 1734 he was driven from St.-Germain-des-Prés for supposed leanings to *Jansenism. From 1737 until his death he was at the abbey of Blancs-Manteaux. Of his patristic editions his masterpiece was his edition of St. *Justin Martyr and the other *Apologists (1742), with learned prolegomena. He also completed the editions of St. *Cyprian, begun by É. *Baluze (1726), and of St. *Basil, begun by Julien Garnier (1730). His other writings (anon.) include a Dissertation sur les Semi-ariens (1722; in defence of Touttée's edition of St. Cyril) and La Divinité de Jésus Christ prouvée contre les Hérétiques et les Déistes (3 vols., 1751).

[R. P. Tassin, O.S.B.,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (Brussels, 1770), pp. 741–9. J. Baudot, O.S.B., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1933–6, s.v. See also bibl. to Maurists.

MARANATHA. This Aramaic word, which occurs at 1 Cor. 16. 22, was understood by the Christian Fathers as 'The Lord has come', but it is probably more correctly rendered by the imperative 'O Lord, come' (cf. Rev. 22. 20). Its use by St. *Paul reflects the strong eschatological hopes of the early Church.

See Commentaries to 1 Cor. 16. 22 and Didache, x. 6 (the only other literary occurrence of the word). J. A. T. Robinson, 'Traces of a Liturgical Sequence in 1 Cor. 16. 20–24', in J.T.S., N.S. iv (1953), pp. 38–41; C. F. D. Moule, 'A Reconsideration of the Context of Maranatha' in New Testament Studies, vi (1960), pp. 307–10; B. Botte, O.S.B., 'Maranatha' in A. M. Dubarle, B. Botte and others, Noël–Épiphanie. Retour du Christ (Semaine Liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge; Lex Orandi, xl; 1967), pp. 25–42. J. H. Thayer in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 241–3; and esp. K. G. Kuhn in T.W.B., iv (1942), pp. 470–5.

MARBECKE, JOHN. See Merbecke, John.

MARBURG, Colloquy of (1529). The meeting convoked by *Philip of Hesse with a view to achieving unity between the Saxon and the Swiss Reformers. It met in the castle at Marburg-on-the-Lahn on 1–3 Oct. 1529, with M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon representing the Saxons, and H. *Zwingli, J. *Oecolampadius, and M. *Bucer the Swiss. In 14 of the 15 'Marburg Articles' which Luther, commissioned by Philip of Hesse, had drawn up, agreement between the two parties was reached: but the conference failed through Zwingli's refusal to accept the Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist ('*Consubstantiation') contained in the remaining article. Shortly after the conference had dispersed, Luther revised these articles. In this form, as the 'Articles of *Schwabach', they became the first of the Lutheran Symbolic Books and thus led to the *Augsburg Confession (q.v.) of 1530.

Text in H. Heppe (ed.), Die fünfzehn Marburger Artikel vom 3. Oktober 1529 nach dem wieder aufgefundenen Autographen der Reformatoren als Facsimile veröffentlicht (Cassel, 1847; ed. 2, 1854). 'Relatio Rodolphi Collini de Colloquio Marburgensi' in Zuinglii Opera, ed. M. Schuler–J. Schulthess, iv (Zürich, 1841), pp. 173–82, mostly repr. in Kidd, No. 109, pp. 247–54. A. Erichson, Das Marburger Religionsgespräch . . . nach ungedruckten Strassburger Urkunden (Strassburg, 1880); W. Köhler, Das Marburger Religions-Gespräch. Versuch einer Rekonstruktion (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, No. 148, 1929). Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 533 f. (Nos. 41337a–62). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 248–55, s.v.,

MARBURG, University of. Founded by *Philip, Landgraf of Hesse, in 1527, it was the first Protestant university established in Europe. Its theological faculty, esp. since the middle of the 19th cent., has been famous through its long line of distinguished professors (including W. *Herrmann, K. *Budde, A. *Harnack, C. Mirbt, R. *Otto, H. Hermelink, F. *Heiler, R. *Bultmann). The university was also the centre of an influential philosophical school (the 'Marburg School'), which on Neo-Kantian principles conceived of religion as purely immanental. The chief representatives of this school were H. Cohen, P. Natorp, E. Cassirer, and (in his first phase) N. Hartmann.

Die Philipps-Universität zu Marburg, 1527–1927. Fünf Kapitel aus der Geschichte der Universität Marburg, 1527–1866, von H. Hermelink und S. A. Kaehler; Die Universität Marburg seit 1866 — in Einzeldarstellungen (Marburg, 1927). F. Gundlach (ed.), Die akademischen Lehrer der Philipps-Universität in Marburg von 1527 bis 1910 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen und Waldeck, No. 15, Marburg, 1927). W. Zeller in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 733–7, s.v.

MARCA, PIERRE DE (1594–1662), French canonist. After filling several important civil offices, he was commissioned by the King to publish his Dissertationes de Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (1641). A defence of *Gallicanist doctrines, it was put on the *Index in the following year. In 1642 he was ordained priest (having been widowed in 1631); but though nominated by the King in 1643 to the Bpric. of Conserans, he did not obtain Papal confirmation until 1647. In 1652 he became Abp. of Toulouse and in 1662, shortly before his death, Abp. of Paris. A much enlarged edition of the Dissertationes was issued in 1663 by É. *Baluze, but this too was put on the Index in 1664.

Early lives by É. Baluze, in the form of 'Epistola ad Clarissimum et Eruditissimum Virum Samuelem Sorberium', prefixed to his ed. of Marca's Dissertationes de Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (Paris, 1663), pp. 1–32; and P. de Forget, prefixed to his collection of Marca's Dissertationes Posthumae (Paris, 1669). F. Gaquère, Pierre de Marca, 1594–1662. Sa vie, ses œuvres, son gallicanisme (1932). J. Carreyre in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1987–91; G. Mollat in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 726–9, s.v.

MARCAN HYPOTHESIS, The. The theory that St. Mark's is the earliest of the four Gospels and that in its presentation of the life of Christ the facts of history are set down with a minimum of disarrangement, interpretation, and embellishment. The Hypothesis was first put on a seemingly secure footing in 1835 by K. *Lachmann, who based his case on an analysis of the literary relationship between the three *Synoptic Gospels. It was adopted almost at once by C. H. Weisse (1801–66) and C. G. Wilke (1788–1854) and in the latter part of the 19th cent. became very generally accepted. Later study, though leaving the literary priority of Mark generally unchallenged, has tended to discover a much greater element of theological interpretation in the Gospel.

MARCELLA, St. (325–410), Christian ascetic. Of a noble Roman family, she determined to devote herself, after the early death of her husband, to a life of charitable works, study, and asceticism. Her palace on the Aventine Hill became a centre of Christian influence and St. *Jerome once referred to her as 'the glory of the ladies of Rome'. She suffered bodily ill-treatment at the hands of the Goths when they captured Rome in 410 and died from its effects. Feast day, 31 Jan.

Practically all our information is derived from the Epp. of St. Jerome, esp. Ep. 127 (J. P. Migne, PL, xxii, 1087–95). F. Cavallera, St. Jérôme. Sa vie et son œuvre, I. i (S.S.L., i; 1922), pp. 85–9 and 114–19.

MARCELLINA, St. (c. 330–c. 398), the sister of St. *Ambrose. After the death of her father, she assisted her mother in the education of her brother, and was consecrated a virgin by Pope *Liberius in 353. Later she lived at Milan with her brother, who tried to dissuade her from her excessive austerities. St. Ambrose dedicated to her his three sermons 'De Virginibus'. Feast day, 17 July.

For Ambrose's three sermons, De Virginibus, see J. P. Migne, PL, xvi, 187–232. Marcellina was also the recipient of Ambrose's three Epp., 20, 22, and 41 (ib., 994–1002, 1019–26, and 1115–21), and she is mentioned in his De Excessu Satyri, 33 and 76. A Lat. panegyric, pr. by B. Mombritius, is repr. in AA.SS., Jul. IV (1725), pp. 234–8.

MARCELLUS (d. c. 374), Bp. of Ancyra and a strong supporter of the *Homoousion at the Council of *Nicaea. In 336 he was deposed from his see on the ground of certain statements in his work against the Arian *Asterius. He was restored on the death of *Constantine (337), but c. 339 again expelled. The W. accepted his orthodoxy at Councils held at Rome c. 340 and at *Sardica in 343, on the ground that the offending passages were merely conjectures. The E. was more critical of his orthodoxy and here the Nicene party found his support embarrassing. Marcellus taught that in the Unity of the Godhead the Son and the Spirit only emerged as independent entities for the purposes of Creation and Redemption. After the redemptive work is achieved they will be resumed again into the Divine Unity and 'God will be all in all'. The clause in the *Nicene Creed, 'whose Kingdom shall have no end', was inserted to combat his teaching. The Creed which Marcellus embodied in his Ep. to Pope *Julius (in *Epiphanius, Haer. lxxii) is generally considered a primary witness for the history of the *Old Roman Creed.

Fragments coll. by C. H. G. Rettberg (Göttingen, 1794); crit. ed. by E. Klostermann in Eusebius' Werke, vol. 4 (G.C.S., 1906), pp. 183–215 (129 items). T. *Zahn, Marcellus von Ancyra (1867); F. *Loofs, 'Die Trinitätslehre von Marcellus von Ancyra' in Sb. (Berl.), 1902, pp. 764–81; W. Gericke, Marcell von Ancyra (1940). M. Richard, 'Un Opuscule méconnu de Marcel évêque d'Ancyre' in Mélanges de Science religieuse, vi (1949), pp. 5–28 (attributes to Marcellus the 'De S. Ecclesia' ascribed to Anthimus of Nicomedia). J. M. Fondevila, S.J., 'Ideas cristológicas de Marcelo de Ancyra' in Estudios Eclesiásticos, xxvii (1953), pp. 21–64. F. Scheidweiler, 'Wer ist der Verfasser des sog. Sermo maior de fide?' in B.Z., xlvii (1954), pp. 333–57 (attributes to Marcellus the Sermo major de fide usually ascribed to St. *Athanasius). M. Tetz, 'Zur Theologie des Markell von Ankyra' in Z.K.G., lxxv (1964), pp. 217–70, and lxxix (1968), pp. 3–42. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 117–22; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 289. J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Maryland, 1960), pp. 197–201. M. D. Chenu, O.P., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2, 1927), cols. 1993–8, s.v. 'Marcel d'Ancyre'.

MARCIAN (396–457), the soldier who by his marriage with *Pulcheria, the sister of the Emp. *Theodosius II, became the E. Emperor in 450. His financial reforms made his reign one of considerable prosperity. Theologically his rule was marked by his successful repression of *Monophysitism, Marcian himself attending personally at the sixth session of the Council of *Chalcedon (451) and even resorting to arms to enforce its theological decrees. He stood in good relations with Pope *Leo I (440–61), his correspondence with whom has survived.

E. Stein–J. R. Palanque, Histoire du Bas-Empire, i (1959), pp. 311–15 and 351–3; A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire, i (Oxford, 1964), pp. 217–21. F. H. B. Daniell in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 815 f., s.v. 'Marcianus (8)'; W. Ensslin in P.W., xiv (pt. 2, 1930), cols. 1514–29, s.v. 'Marcianus (34)'; H. Chirat in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 192 f., s.v.

MARCIANA. The famous library at Venice, named after St. *Mark, the patron saint of the city. The nucleus of the library was the valuable collection of (largely Greek) MSS. made in the 15th cent. by Cardinal *Bessarion. Besides a very large number of important classical, Biblical, and patristic MSS., the library contains the autographs of Bessarion's 'Encomium on Trebizond' and of P. *Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent, as well as many early printed works. Since 1904 the library has been housed in the Palazzo della Zecca (the Mint).

J. Valentinelli (ed.), Bibliotheca Manuscripta ad S. Marci Venetiarum. Codices Latini (6 vols., 1868–73); A. M. Zanetti–A. Bongiovanni, Graeca D. Marci Bibliotheca Codicum Manu Scriptorum per Titulos Digesta (1740); C. Castellani (ed.), Catalogus Codicum Graecorum qui in Bibliothecam D. Marci Venetiarum inde ab ann. MDCCXL. ad haec usque tempora inlati sunt (1895). H. Omont, Inventaire des manuscrits grecs et latins donnés à Saint-Marc de Venise par le cardinal Bessarion en 1468 (1894). H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Catalogus Codicum Hagiographicorum Graecorum Bibliothecae D. Marci Venetiarum' in Anal. Boll., xxiv (1905), pp. 169–256.

MARCION (d. c. 160), heretic. He was a native of Sinope in Pontus and a wealthy shipowner. Acc. to *Hippolytus (Syntagma ap. *Epiphanius, Haer., 42) he was the son of a Bishop who excommunicated him on grounds of immorality. Making his way to Rome, c. 140, he attached himself to the local orthodox Church. In the next few years he worked out his system and began to organize his followers as a separate community; and in 144 he was formally excommunicated. From now on, apparently from Rome as a centre, he devoted his gifts as an organizer to the propagation of his views and established compact communities over a large part of the Empire which admitted converts of every age, rank, and background. His many and widely scattered orthodox opponents (among them *Dionysius of *Corinth, *Irenaeus of Lyons, *Theophilus of *Antioch, Philip of Gortyna, *Tertullian at Carthage, Hippolytus and *Rhodo at Rome, *Bardesanes at *Edessa) sufficiently attest Marcion's success. His followers were certainly the chief danger to the Church from dogmatic unorthodoxy in the latter half of the 2nd cent. By the end of the 3rd cent. most of the Marcionite communities had been absorbed in *Manichaeism, but they continued to exist in small numbers down to a much later date.

Marcion's central thesis was that the Christian Gospel was wholly a Gospel of Love to the absolute exclusion of Law. This doctrine, which he expounded esp. in his 'Antitheses', led him to reject the OT completely. The Creator God or *Demiurge, revealed in the OT from Gen. 1 onwards as wholly a God of Law, had nothing in common with the God of Jesus Christ. Study of the OT indicated that this Jewish God constantly involved himself in contradictory courses of action, that he was fickle, capricious, ignorant, despotic, cruel. Utterly different was the Supreme God of Love whom Jesus came to reveal. It was His purpose to overthrow the Demiurge.

Acc. to Marcion, this contrast of law and grace was fully understood by St. *Paul alone, the Twelve Apostles and Evangelists being largely blinded to the truth by the remnants of Jewish influence. Hence for Marcion the only Canonical Scriptures were ten of the Epp. of St. Paul (he either rejected or did not know the *Pastorals) and an edited recension of the Gospel of St. *Luke. He seems to have encouraged in his disciples a close study of the Bible and to have rejected all *allegorical methods of exegesis. He even exercised a certain influence on the history of the Catholic Bible. His brief introductions ('Prologues') to the Pauline Epp. found their way into Latin Biblical MSS. of orthodox provenance, while his rejection of three of the Gospels was an important factor in compelling the Church to differentiate between true and spurious works and construct its own *Canon. His Christology was *Docetic. Christ, who was an emissary of the Father, suddenly appeared preaching and teaching in the Synagogue at *Capernaum. His Passion and Death were the work of the Creator God.

Marcion's writings have all been lost; but it is possible to deduce a good deal about them and to reconstruct much of his Biblical text, esp. from Tertullian. He has often been reckoned among the *Gnostics, but it is clear that he would have had little sympathy with their mythological speculations. He inculcated a severe morality and some of his followers suffered in the persecutions.

Marcion is discussed in all histories of early Christian doctrine. The chief ancient sources are Irenaeus, Tertullian (esp. 'Adv. Marcionem' and 'De Praescriptione Haereticorum'), *Clement of Alexandria, *Origen, *Adamantius, and the anti-heretical writers generally. The standard modern work, with full analysis of sources and attempted reconstruction of Marcion's Biblical text, is A. *Harnack, Marcion. Das Evangelium vom fremden Gott (T.U., xlv; 1921); its value as a history is not seriously affected by its attempt to see in Marcion a precursor of classical Protestantism. Id., Neue Studien zu Marcion (ib., xliv, Hft. 4; 1923). E. C. Blackman, Marcion and his Influence (1948). J. Knox, Marcion and the New Testament. An Essay in the Early History of the Canon (Chicago, 1942). M. J. *Lagrange, 'Saint Paul ou Marcion', in R. Bibl., xli (1932), pp. 5–30. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 371–6; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 106 f. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 816–24; G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 266–77; É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2009–32; G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 862–77, s.v. See also bibl. to Gnosticism and following entry.

MARCIONITE PROLOGUES, The. A set of short introductory prologues to each of the Pauline Epistles which are to be found in a majority of the best MSS. of the *Vulgate. That they originated in *Marcionite circles is now generally admitted. H. *Lietzmann explains the unexpected introduction of heretical prologues into the Vulgate on the supposition that it was Marcionite teachers at Rome who first translated the Pauline Epistles from Greek into Latin in the latter part of the 2nd century.

Text pr. in J. *Wordsworth–H. J. White, Novum Testamentum Latine, ii (1913–41), at the head of each Epistle, and in A. *Harnack, Marcion (T.U., xlv; 1921), pp. 136*–8*. D. de Bruyne, O.S.B., 'Prologues bibliques d'origine marcionite' in R. Bén., xiv (1907), pp. 1–16; A. Harnack, 'Der marcionitische Ursprung der ältesten Vulgata-Prologe zu den Paulusbriefen' in Z.N.T.W., xxiv (1925), pp. 204–18. The Marcionite provenance of the Prologues, which is now accepted by most scholars, has been contested by W. Mundle, 'Die Herkunft der "marcionitischen" Prologe zu den paulinischen Briefen' in Z.N.T.W., xxiv (1925), pp. 56–77, and M. J. *Lagrange, 'Les Prologues prétendus marcionites' in R. Bibl., xxxv (1926), pp. 161–73. K. T. Schäfer, 'Marius Victorinus und die marcionitischen Prologe zu den Paulusbriefen' in R. Bén., lxxx (1970), pp. 7–16.

MARCOSIANS, the followers of the *Gnostic Marcus, a disciple of *Valentinus. Acc. to *Irenaeus, from whom our knowledge of the sect is derived, they flourished in the Rhône valley in the middle of the 2nd cent. Irenaeus represents Marcus as a charlatan, who made use of magical devices esp. to deceive women to be his prophetesses, and his followers as indulging in elaborate sacramental rites and fantastic speculations about numbers. As Scriptures they used the 'Acts of *Thomas' and other apocryphal books. They represent Gnosticism in its later and most decadent phase.

Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., I. 7–14 (ed. W. W. Harvey), is the sole source; both *Hippolytus, Ref., vi. 39–55, and *Epiphanius, Haer., xxxiv, refer explicitly to Irenaeus. F. M. M. Sagnard, O.P., La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de St. Irénée (1947), pp. 358–86. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 827–9, s.v., and É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (1926), cols. 1960–2, s.v.

MARCUS, *Gnostic heretic. See preceding entry.

MARCUS AURELIUS (121–80), Roman Emperor from 161. The adopted son of his predecessor, Antoninus Pius (138–61), whose daughter, Faustina (d. 175), he had married, he cherished a noble ideal of life, in essentials a tempered form of *Stoicism. He was deeply concerned for the moral strength and material prosperity of the Empire, and devoted his whole energies to its interests. This firmness of purpose brought him into conflict with the Christian Church, which not only proclaimed an ethic irreconcilable with that of Stoicism, but, in its uncompromising resistance to the official state religion and its inculcation of principles recognizing the equality of Roman and barbarian alike, was radically opposed to Marcus's political ideals. A number of Christian writers addressed 'Apologies' to him, including *Athenagoras and (probably) *Theophilus of Antioch, whose works survive, and *Miltiades, Claudius *Apollinaris and *Melito, Bp. of Sardis, whose apologies are lost. Marcus Aurelius set down his ideals of conduct in Greek in his twelve books of 'Thoughts' or 'Meditations', a work of sincerity and deep feeling but without philosophical originality. In form they are essentially occasional utterances, composed at intervals in the course of his official duties and campaigns.

Editio princeps of his 'Thoughts' by G. Xylandrus (Zürich, 1558). Crit. ed., with English tr. and commentary, by A. S. L. Farquharson (posthumously publd. by J. Sparrow; 2 vols., Oxford, 1944). Other convenient edd. by J. Stich (Teubn., 1882), with Eng. tr., by C. R. Haines (Loeb, 1916), and with Fr. tr., by A. I. Trannoy (Collection des Universités de France, 1939). Convenient Eng. tr. by J. Jackson (World's Classics [1906]). Critical studies of his life by H. D. Sedgwick (New Haven–London, 1921), G. Loisel (Paris, 1929), A. S. L. Farquharson ed. D. A. Rees (Oxford, 1951), and A. Birley (London, 1966); studies also by E. *Renan (vol. vii of his Histoire des origines du christianisme, 1882; Eng. tr. [1904]), C. C. Dove (London, 1930), F. H. Hayward (ib., 1935), and J. Lindsay (ib., 1936). M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., 'Marc-Aurèle' in R. Bibl., N.S., x [xxii] (1913), pp. 243–59, 394–420, and 568–87. J. Dartigue-Peyrou, Marc-Aurèle dans ses rapports avec le christianisme (Paris thesis, 1897). W. Weber in C. Anc. H., xi (1936), pp. 340–76, with bibl., p. 895. P. von Rohden–H. von Arnim in P.W., i (1894), cols. 2279–309, s.v. 'Annius (93)'.

MARCUS DIADOCHUS. The reputed author of a 4th cent. sermon against the *Arians. It has been suggested that the name 'Marcus' arose out of a MS. confusion for 'Blessed Diadochus' (μακάριος Διάδοχος). He is not to be identified, however, with *Diadochus of Photice.

The sermon is printed in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 1149–66. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 186.

MARCUS EREMITA. See Mark the Hermit.

MAREDSOUS. The seat of a Belgian *Benedictine abbey, founded in 1872 as a daughter house of *Beuron in Germany. It is a noted centre of scholarship and publishes the Revue Bénédictine (from 1890; originally, from 1884, the Messager des fidèles) and the collection Anecdota Maredsolana (from 1893). Dom Columba *Marmion was Abbot from 1909 to 1923. After the war of 1914–18, Maredsous separated from Beuron and became one of the constituent abbeys in the newly constituted 'Belgian Congregation' of the order.

L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1939), col. 1744, with good bibl. A. Pratesi in E.C., viii (1952), col. 61 f., s.v.

MARGARET, St., of Antioch (in Pisidia). She is also known as St. Marina. A reputed martyr of the *Diocletianic persecution, of whom, however, nothing certain is known. From an early date she was honoured in the E. Church, and from the 7th cent. also in the W., though devotion to her did not become popular in the W. till the 12th. In more recent times she has been included among the fourteen *Auxiliary saints, and is invoked esp. by women in travail. In art she is often represented with a dragon (representing the devil). Many of the numerous legends which have gathered round her have also attached themselves to St. *Pelagia (q.v.). Feast day in the W., 20 July; in the E., 17 July.

AA.SS., Jul. V (1727), pp. 22–44. B.H.L., p. 787 f. (Nos. 5303–13). H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905), pp. 222–34. J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, viii (Rome, 1967), cols. 1150–60, s.v. 'Marina'. See also bibl. to Pelagia, St.

MARGARET, 'The Lady' (1443–1509), Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby. She was the daughter of the 1st Duke of Somerset and was married to *Henry VI's half-brother, Edmund Tudor, the Earl of Richmond, in 1455. He died in 1456 before the birth of his son, the later Henry VII. Before 1464 she married a distant cousin, Lord Henry Stafford, and after his death Lord Stanley, later Earl of Derby (?1473). She had a considerable part in the insurrection which ended in the decisive victory of Bosworth (1485) and in the accession of her son as Henry VII, for whom she had arranged a marriage with Elizabeth of York to reconcile the rival houses. She used her important position as the King's mother mostly for religious and educational interests. In 1495 she became acquainted with J. *Fisher, whom she later chose as her spiritual director. Under his guidance she took religious vows and gave herself up to a life of prayer and good works, reciting the Divine Office as well as the Office of Our Lady and hearing several Masses every day. She also was a 'Sister' of many religious houses, among them *Charterhouse, *Durham, and *Westminster. Fisher also encouraged the foundations by which her name still survives in the older universities. She established the Lady Margaret professorships (originally readerships) at Oxford (1502) and Cambridge (1503) as well as a preachership at Cambridge (1504), and she founded Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1505. Her other foundation, St. John's College, Cambridge, was completed only after her death.

Her translation from the Fr. of the Imitation of Christ*, Book iv, was orig. publd. by Richard Pynson at London, 1503; reissued by Wynkyn de Worde, ib., c. 1504. There is a very fine repr. of the latter pr. at Campden, Glos., and publd. at London, 1904. C. H. Cooper, Memoir of Margaret Countess of Richmond and Derby (posthumously publd. by J. E. B. Mayor, Cambridge, 1874), with orig. docc. Other lives by Caroline A. Halstead (London, 1836), Margaret Domville (ib., 1899), and Enid M. G. Routh (ib., 1924). H. A. Tipping in D.N.B., iv (1885), p. 48 f., s.v. 'Beaufort, Margaret'.

MARGARET CLITHEROW, St. See Clitherow, Margaret.

MARGARET MARY ALACOQUE, St. (1647–1690), *Visitandine, chief founder of devotion to the *Sacred Heart (q.v.). After an unhappy childhood—she was for years unable to leave her bed, and later had to suffer much from unsympathetic relatives—she entered the Convent of the Visitation at Paray-le-Monial in central France in 1671, where she subsequently became Novice Mistress and Assistant Superior. Here she received several revelations of the Sacred Heart, the first in Dec. 1673, and the final one 18 months later. The visions revealed to her the form of the devotion, the chief features being Holy Communion on the *First Friday of each month, the Holy Hour on Thursdays, and the Feast of the Sacred Heart. Her visions were at first treated with contempt by her superiors, who regarded them as delusions, but under the influence of her temporary confessor, Bl. Claude de la Colombière, S.J. (d. 1682), the opposition softened and eventually ceased. The devotion, however, was not officially recognized till 75 years after her death. She was beatified in 1864 and canonized in 1920. Feast day, 16 (formerly 17) Oct.

Crit. ed. of Vie et œuvres de la bienheureuse Marguerite-Marie Alacoque by L. Gauthey (ed. 3 [definitive ed.], 3 vols., Paris, 1915; including the best text of her autobiography, also publd. separately, 1920). Eng. tr. of her autobiography by V. Kerns (1961). The standard lives are those by J. J. Languet (Paris, 1729; ed. L. Gauthey, 1890; Eng. tr. in the series 'The Saints and Servants of God', ed. F. W. *Faber, 1850), E. Bougaud (Paris, 1874; Eng. tr., New York, 1920), and A. Hamon, S.J. (Paris, 1907; vol. i of his Histoire de la dévotion au sacré-cœur; frequently publd. separately). Among the better-known popular lives is that of Mgr. M. Deminuid ('Les Saints', 1912); in English there are lives by G. Tickell, S.J. (London, 1869), and A. Barry, C.SS.R. (London [1890]). P. Blanchard, Ste Marguerite-Marie. Expérience et doctrine (1962). Pourrat, iv, pp. 402–19. See also bibl. to Sacred Heart.

MARGARET OF SCOTLAND, St. (c. 1045 – 93), wife of Malcolm III of Scotland, and granddaughter of the English king, Edmund Ironside. She was probably born in Hungary. In 1067, after the battle of Hastings, she left England with her mother and sister and found refuge at the court of Malcolm, to whom she was married in 1070, despite a leaning to the religious life. At her instigation many abuses were reformed, and synods held to regulate the Lenten Fast and Easter Communion and the observance of the prohibited degrees in marriage. Her great personal piety found expression in her practice of prayer and fasting, in her charity to the poor, and in the royal benefactions to religion in her lifetime, which included the foundation of the Church of the Holy Trinity at Dunfermline. She was canonized by *Innocent IV in 1250. She died on 16 Nov., in some places observed as her feast day. There seems no satisfactory explanation of the date of her feast day in the *Roman Martyrology of 1584, namely 10 June, to which, after being transferred to 8 July, it was restored by *Innocent XII in 1693 (at the request of the deposed *James II to mark the birthday of his son).

Life by Turgot, her confessor and later Bp. of St. Andrews, pr. in AA.SS., Jun. II (1698), pp. 328–35. Eng. tr. by W. Forbes-Leith, S.J. (ed. 2, Edinburgh, 1884). Modern ed. of the life in [J.] Pinkerton's Lives of the Scottish Saints, revised and enlarged by W. M. Metcalfe, ii (Paisley, 1889), pp. 159–182; Eng. tr. by W. M. Metcalfe, Ancient Lives of Scottish Saints (ib., 1895), pp. 298–321. Modern lives and studies by S. Cowan (Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1911), Lucy Menzies (London, 1925), T. R. Barnett (Edinburgh and London, 1926), A. M. D. Henderson-Howat (London, 1948), and an anonymous life (London and Edinburgh, 1911). W. M. Bryce, 'Saint Margaret of Scotland and her Chapel in the Castle of Edinburgh' in The Book of the Old Edinburgh Club, v (Edinburgh, 1912), pp. 1–66.

MARHEINEKE, PHILIPP KONRAD (1780–1846), Protestant theologian. From 1811 till his death he was professor at Berlin, and from 1820 in charge also of the important Dreifaltigkeitskirche. A warm admirer of the philosophy of G. W. F. *Hegel, then exercising a dominating influence on all aspects of German culture, Marheineke sought to invoke its support for the Christian faith, though not without radically transforming it. He professed to be, in Hegelian language, a 'theologian of the concept' (Begriffstheologe), as opposed to a 'theologian of faith' (the standpoint of traditional historic Christianity) or 'of feeling' (F. D. E. *Schleiermacher). Characteristic of his theological method and attitude was his thesis that 'the Church is the truth (Wahrheit) of the State, the State the reality (Wirklichkeit) of the Church'. The Protestant and Catholic Confessions were to be united in a higher Hegelian synthesis. His writings include a Symbolik (3 vols., 1810–14, which brought him into conflict with J. A. *Möhler), a history of the German Reformation (2 vols., 1816), and Die Bedeutung der Hegelschen Philosophie in der christlichen Theologie (1842). Much of his most characteristic teaching was formulated in his lectures, many of which were published by his pupils soon after his death.

His theological lectures were ed. by S. Matthies–W. Vatke (4 vols., Berlin, 1847–9). A. Weber, Le Système dogmatique de P. C. Marheineke (Strassburg, 1857). Margaret E. Ihle, P. K. Marheineke. Der Einfluss der Philosophie auf sein theologisches System (Diss., Leipzig, 1938). G. Frank in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 304–9, s.v.

MARIA LAACH ('Maria ad lacum'), *Benedictine abbey some 15 miles north-west of Coblenz, founded in 1093. The fine Romanesque church, with five towers and a dome, was completed in 1156. In 1802 the troubles of the French Revolution brought the life of the monastery to an end; in 1815 the buildings passed into the possession of the Prussian state; and in 1820 they became private property. In 1863 they were recovered for ecclesiastical purposes by the *Jesuits, who used them as a centre of studies until 1872. They finally reverted to the Benedictines of the *Beuron Congregation in 1892. The monks have actively prosecuted liturgical studies, edited the Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (1921–38), and taken an active part in fostering the *Liturgical Movement.

A. Schippers, O.S.B., Das Laacher Münster (1927), and other works by this author. H. Emonds, O.S.B. (ed.), Enkainia. Gesammelte Arbeiten zum 800jährigen Weihegedächtnis der Abteikirche Maria Laach am 24. August 1956 (Düsseldorf [1956]). T. Bogler, O.S.B. (ed.), Benedikt und Ignatius. Maria Laach als Collegium maximum der Gesellschaft Jesu 1863–1872–1892 (Liturgie und Mönchtum, Laacher Hefte, xxxii; 1963). I. Herwegen, O.S.B., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 658.

MARIANA, JUAN (1536–1623 [?1624]), Spanish *Jesuit. He joined the order in 1554, and held teaching appointments at Rome (1561–4), Sicily (1564–9), Paris (1569–74), and Toledo (from 1574). He became famous by his book De Rege et Regis Institutione (1559), justifying tyrannicide. The book encouraged the belief that the Jesuits were responsible for the assassination of *Henry IV of France and the *Gunpowder Plot in England, and in 1610 the Jesuit General, C. *Aquaviva, expressly forbade members of the order to teach this doctrine. Mariana is also one of the foremost historians of Spain (the 'Spanish Livy'). In 1592 he issued his Historia de rebus Hispaniae and in 1601 Historia general de España (2 vols.).

An Eng. tr. of his History of Spain was publd. at London, 1699. G. Cirot, Études sur l'historiographie espagnole. Mariana historien (Bibliothèque de la Fondation Thiers, viii; 1905). M. Ballesteros-Gaibrois, Juan de Mariana (2 vols., Santander, 1938–9). J. Laures, S.J., The Political Economy of Juan de Mariana (New York, 1928); M. B. Amzalak, As teorias monetários do Padre João de Mariana (1944). G. Lewy, Constitutionalism and Statecraft during the Golden Age of Spain. A Study of the political philosophy of Juan de Mariana, S.J. (Geneva, 1960). F. Asensio, 'El profesorado de Juan de Mariana y su influjo en la vida del escritor' in Hispana, liii (1953), pp. 581–639. Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 547–67. A. Lehmkuhl in C.E., ix (1910), p. 659 f., s.v.; E. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2336–8, s.v.; C. Testore, S.J., in E.C., viii (1952), col. 146 f., s.v., with bibl.

MARIANISTS. The 'Society of Mary', of Bordeaux (to be distinguished from the *Marists, q.v.). The congregation, which was founded at Bordeaux in 1817 by the theologian William Joseph Chaminade (1761–1850), and recognized by the Pope in 1865 and again in 1891, consists of priests and laymen. It was instituted to fight religious indifference, and its members, who devote themselves esp. to educational work, add to the three vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience a fourth, promising stability in the service of the BVM, originally expressed in the daily recitation of the *Rosary and of the *Little Office of Our Lady. The congregation, which is governed by a Superior General with his seat at Nivelles (Belgium), spread rapidly in many European countries as well as in America and Asia. The members of the female Institute, the 'Daughters of Mary', founded in 1816, also devote themselves to education; their constitutions were finally confirmed in 1888.

Lives of the founder by J. Simler (Paris, 1901), H. Rousseau, S.M. (ib., 1913), G. Goyau (ib., 1914), and Katherine Burton (Milwaukee, 1949). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 445–7. G. J. Ruppel, S.M., in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 214–16, s.v., with bibl.

MARIAVITES. A Polish sect, founded in 1906 by J. Kowalski, a priest of Warsaw, and Felicia Kozlowska, a *Tertiary sister (d. 1922), on their excommunication from the RC Church. Many years earlier the latter had laid claim to private revelations and these formed the doctrinal basis of the new communities. Their name is derived from their profession of great devotion to the BVM ('qui Mariae vitam imitantur'). They acknowledged the first seven *Oecumenical Councils, accepted the '*Filioque' as a 'theological opinion', and incorporated into their practice many ascetic elements, combined with some unconventional arrangements about the marriage of the clergy. Relations having been established with the *Old Catholics, in 1909 Kowalski was consecrated a bishop by the Abp. of Utrecht; and in 1911 they were officially recognized by the Duma. But after a few brief years of prosperity their numbers and influence declined, their discipline deteriorated, and in 1924 the Old Catholics severed communion with them.

K. Gajowski, Mariavitensekte. Einige Blätter aus der neuesten Kirchengeschichte Russisch-Polens (Cracow, 1911); A. Rhode, Bei den Mariaviten. Eindrücke von einer neuen romfreien katholischen Kirche (1911). J. Peterkiewicz, The Third Adam (1975). R. Janin, 'Les Mariavites et l'orthodoxie' in É.O., xxx (1927), pp. 216–20; M. Niwinski, 'Les Mariavites de Pologne' in Revue apologétique, liv (1932), pp. 570–80. E. Appolis, 'Une Église des derniers temps.

L'Église Mariavite' in Archives de Sociologie des Religions, No. xix (1965), pp. 51–67. I. Rhode in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 752–4, s.v. 'Mariaviten'.

MARIOLATRY. A term derived from 'Maria' and 'latria' (Gk. λατρεία, worship), denoting erroneous attribution of Divine honours to the BVM. An early instance of it is found in the 4th cent., when the sect of the *Collyridians was condemned by St. *Epiphanius for offering sacrificial worship to Mary. A more recent example is the cult of the BVM in the Eucharist, advocated by the Franciscan *Recollect, Z. de Someire, and condemned by *Benedict XIV. By Protestants the word is often employed in an abusive sense of what they consider the excessive devotion to the BVM in the RC Church.

MARIOLOGY. The systematic study of the person of the Blessed Virgin *Mary and of her place in the economy of the *Incarnation.

MARISCO, ADAM DE. See Adam of Marsh.

MARISTS. The 'Society of Mary' was founded at Lyons in 1824 by the Ven. Jean Claude Marie Colin (1790–1875). It was approved by *Gregory XVI in 1836, when the first 20 Marists took simple perpetual vows and the W. Pacific was allotted to them as their special mission field, and finally sanctioned in 1873. It spread rapidly in many European countries, in N. America, and esp. in Australia and New Zealand, and was introduced into England by N. *Wiseman in 1850. The congregation comprises priests and lay brothers whose main activities are educational and missionary work. Their rule, which is based on that of the *Jesuits, aims esp. at fostering devotion to the BVM. Several other institutes are connected with the Marists, among them the Marist School-brothers founded in 1817 by the Ven. Marcellin Joseph Benedict Champagnat and approved by the Holy See in 1863 and 1903, the Marist Sisters (Sisters of the Holy Name of Mary), founded by Colin in 1816 for the education of young girls, and the Third Order of the Society of Mary, founded in 1850 for persons living in the world, with its seat in Rome.

There is a brief life of Colin by G. Goyau (Paris, 1910). Heimbucher, pp. ii, 374–7, with bibl. J. F. Sollier, S.M., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 751 f., s.v. 'Mary, Society of'.

MARITAIN, JACQUES (1882–1973), French *Thomist philosopher. A native of Paris, he studied at the *Sorbonne, where he came under the influence of H. *Bergson. He was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1906. After a short period devoted to biology at Heidelberg (1907–8), he turned to the study of St. *Thomas Aquinas, whose philosophy he sought to relate to modern culture. He held professorial chairs successively at the *Institut Catholique in Paris (1914–33), at the Institute for Mediaeval Studies in Toronto (1933–45) and at Princeton (1948–52). From 1945 to 1948 he was French Canadian ambassador to the Holy See. In 1961 he went to live with the *Little Brothers of Jesus in Toulouse and in 1970 he became a Little Brother himself.

In his numerous books Maritain endeavoured to apply the classical doctrines of Thomist philosophy in turn to metaphysics and theoretical philosophy, moral, social and political philosophy, the philosophy of education, history and culture, as well as to art and poetry. He also wrote on the relations of philosophy to religious experience and mysticism. His principal works include La Philosophie bergsonienne (1914; Eng. tr., New York, 1955; a critique of his former master); Distinguer pour unir, ou Les degrés du savoir (1932; Eng. tr., 1959); Humanisme intégral (1936; Eng. tr., 1938); La Philosophie morale (1960; Eng. tr., 1964), and Le Paysan de la Garonne (1966; Eng. tr., 1968), in which he sought to present a synthesis of his views on life.

Festschrift for his Sixtieth Birthday (New York, 1943); Jacques Maritain. Son œuvre philosophique (Bibliothèque de la Revue Thomiste [1949]), both with lists of works. Studies by G. B. Phelan (London, 1937), E. L. Allen (ib., 1950), J. Croteau, O.M.I. (Ottawa, 1955), H. Bars (Paris, 1959), N. Morra (Milan, 1961), L. F. de A. Sampaio, C.R. (Paris, 1963), and G. Forni (Bologna [1965]). His ninetieth birthday was marked by a special issue of New Scholasticism, xlvi (1972), pp. 1–128, incl. list of his works, pp. 118–28.

MARIUS MERCATOR (early 5th cent.), a Latin Christian writer, probably of African birth. A friend and disciple of St. *Augustine, he wrote c. 418 at Rome against *Pelagius. Some ten years later, when in Constantinople, perhaps as the agent of Pope *Celestine (422–432), he again wrote in defence of orthodoxy, this time attacking both *Nestorians and Pelagians. A collection of his writings, compiled about 100 years after his time, has survived in a Vatican MS. (Cod. Vat. Pal. 234). It consists largely of Mercator's translations of and replies to Nestorius's writings, made (acc. to E. *Schwartz) for the Latin-speaking monks of Thrace, and is one of the more important sources for our knowledge of Nestorius's doctrines.

Writings ed. J. *Garnier, S.J. (Paris, 1673; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xlviii), on the basis of a Beauvais MS., since lost. Another ed. by É. *Baluze (Paris, 1684) from Vat. Pal. 234. Crit. text, with discussion, by E. Schwartz in A.C.O., I. v (1), pp. 5–70 (only the texts on pp. 3–36 belong to Marius Mercator; the remainder, incl. the Counter-Anathematisms of Nestorius, commonly ascribed to him, appear to be of much later date). S. Prete, Mario Mercatore, polemista antipelagiano (Scrinium Theologicum, xi; Turin, 1958). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 525–9. W. Eltester in P.W., xiv (1930), cols. 1831–5; C. Vogel in E.C., viii (1952), col. 166.

MARK, St., Evangelist. John Mark, the cousin of St. *Barnabas (Col. 4. 10), a Jew, set out with St. Barnabas and St. *Paul on their first missionary journey, but for reasons which failed to satisfy St. Paul turned back (Acts 12. 25, 13. 5, 13, 15. 37 f.). Afterwards he accompanied Barnabas on a mission to Cyprus (Acts 15. 39), and he was in Rome with St. Paul (Col. 4. 10, Philem. 24, 2 Tim. 4. 11) and St. *Peter (1 Pet. 5. 13), whose 'interpreter' (ἑρμηνευτής), acc. to *Papias, he was; and it was no doubt in Italy, if not at Rome itself, that he wrote his Gospel. Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., II. xvi. 1 and xxiv. 1), he afterwards went to *Alexandria and was its first bishop, while in later tradition he is also associated with *Venice. The tradition that Mark was κολοβοδάκτυλος (prob. 'stump-fingered', i.e. of Mark himself, and not an allusion to the brevity of his Gospel) is found in the *Anti-Marcionite Prologue and in St. *Hippolytus, Haer., vii. 30. Feast day, 25 Apr.

The processional Major Litanies (Litaniae Majores) traditionally observed at Rome on 25 Apr. (but abolished in 1969) appear to have arisen quite independently of the feast. They go back to the time of St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604), when they were introduced as a Christian substitute for the pagan robigalia on that day.

AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 344–58, and Sept. VII (1760), pp. 379–90. On the Major Litanies, see L. *Duchesne, Christian Worship (Eng. trans., ed. 1919), p. 288.

MARK, Gospel of St. The Gospel was known in the 1st cent. and, acc. to the view at present most widely held, was used by both Matthew and Luke (see Marcan Hypothesis). The earliest definite tradition about it is due to *Papias. He states that the Gospel was written by St. *Mark, who drew his information from the teaching of St. *Peter. The connexion of Mark with Peter has earlier testimony in 1 Pet. 5. 13. Later tradition follows the statements of Papias.

The external tradition about the Gospel must be controlled by the internal evidence of the Book itself. It seems that the author had considerable knowledge of Palestine and yet was not bound by narrow Jewish sympathies. The same double background is reflected in the traces of both Aramaic and Latin which the Greek of the Gospel betrays. The Latinisms support the presumption, based on the traditional connexion with Peter, that the Gospel was written in Rome, as also does Mark's dating of the Crucifixion on the 15th *Nisan, in agreement with the Roman view in subsequent controversy. Whether or not there is to be found in the Gospel such a particular interest in Peter as might have been expected if the Petrine origin described by Papias is to be maintained is a matter of dispute among critics. The date suggested by the Gospel itself is early; not all those who had known the Lord personally were dead (cf. 9. 1).

There seems to be no good reason why the Gospel should not have been written by John Mark, esp. as it is unlikely that tradition would wrongly have assigned a Gospel to so unimportant a character. It has been suggested that the account of the young man in *Gethsemane (14. 51 f.) is the 'artist's signature', and that Mark is referring to himself.

The Gospel is written in 'Koine *Greek', i.e. in the popular language that was the lingua franca of the E. Mediterranean. It is the least polished of the Gospels, though the author shows considerable talent and power in writing narrative. His style is Semitic in colouring, and it may be that in places Mark was translating an Aramaic document; in any case much of the material of the Gospel seems to bear a Palestinian stamp.

The work is arranged as a continuous narrative and the simple outline of events corresponds with that implied in the speeches attributed to Peter and Paul in Acts. The story opens with the preaching of *John the Baptist, represented as the fulfilment of prophecy. After the Baptism and Temptation of the Lord, the Messianic ministry at once begins. Disciples are called, miracles are performed, teaching is given, chiefly in the form of parables. The whole emphasizes the idea of fulfilment; the Kingdom of God, though still the object of hope, is also present in the person of the Messiah (who chooses rather the title '*Son of Man') and among those who follow Him. A turning-point in the narrative is reached at 8. 27 ff., with the confession of Peter that Jesus is the Messiah. From that point the burden of the Lord's teaching is that as Messiah He must suffer, die, and rise from the dead. The story of the Passion includes the account of the Last Supper and describes the death of Christ as the fulfilment of OT prophecy. The Crucifixion is followed by the Resurrection; but Mark's Gospel concludes abruptly at 16. 8, perhaps because Mark intended it to end there, perhaps because its end has been lost. 16. 9–20 is one of the two early supplements added to the Gospel. They do not appear in the oldest MSS., but are undoubtedly of early date. See also Aristion.

The Patristic and Medieval Commentators paid scant attention to St. Mark's Gospel, probably because of its brevity and the inclusion of nearly all its matter in the other Synoptics. Those who commented on it include *Victor of Antioch, *Theophylact, and *Euthymius Zigabenus among the Greeks and *Bede among the Latins. In modern times, on the other hand, it has attracted close attention from all students of the Gospels. Commentaries include those of E. P. Gould (I.C.C., 1896), H. B. *Swete (London, 1898), J. *Wellhausen, (Berlin, 1903), E. Klostermann (Hb.N.T., 1907; ed. 4, 1950), M. J. *Lagrange (Études bibliques, 1911), A. *Loisy (Paris, 1912), W. C. Allen (Oxford Church Biblical Commentary, 1915), A. E. J. Rawlinson (West. Comm., 1925), E. Lohmeyer (K.E.K., ed. 10; 1937), J. [D.] Schniewind (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, i; Göttingen, 1937), V. Taylor (London, 1952; ed. 2, 1966), S. E. Johnson (Black's N.T. Comm., 1960), P. Carrington (Cambridge, 1960), and D. E. Nineham (Pelican Gospel Commentaries, 1963; revised ed., 1968).

Other studies include E. Wendling, Die Entstehung des Marcus-Evangeliums. Philologische Untersuchungen (1908). B. W. Bacon, The Gospel of Mark. Its Composition and Date (New Haven, Conn., 1925). R. H. Lightfoot, The Gospel Message of St. Mark (1950). A. M. Farrer, A Study in St. Mark (1951; ed. 2, 1966). T. A. Burkill, Mysterious Revelation. An Examination of the Philosophy of St. Mark's Gospel (Ithaca, N.Y., 1963). E. Haenchen, Der Weg Jesu. Eine Erklärung des Markus-Evangeliums und der kanonischen Parallelen (Berlin, 1966). See also bibl. to Synoptic Problem.

MARK, Liturgy of St. The traditional Greek Eucharistic Liturgy of the Church of *Alexandria, formerly used by the Egyptian *Melchites. It survives in three late MSS., the Cod. Rossanensis (Vat. gr. 1970; saec. xiii), the Rotulus Vaticanus (Vat. gr. 2281; saec. xiii), and the Rotulus Messanensis (Cod. Messin. gr. 177; saec. xii). Behind these texts, all much altered by foreign influences (*Constantinople and/or *Jerusalem), lies a primitive local Egyptian text, in which the great intercessory prayer stood before the *Preface and there was no *Benedictus at the end of the *Sanctus. In 1928 a fragment of the authentic text of the Liturgy was recovered on a Strassburg Papyrus (4th–5th cent.). A modified form of the rite in Coptic (known alternatively as 'The Coptic Liturgy of St. Mark' or 'of St. Cyril') is still in use among the Coptic *Monophysites; another form of it, in Ethiopic, among the Abyssinians.

Text in E. *Renaudot, Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio, i (Paris, 1716), pp. 131–65; in C. A. Swainson, The Greek Liturgies (1884), pp. 2–73; and in Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 115–88. Papyrus fragment of authentic text ed. M. Andrieu–P. Collomp, 'Fragments sur payprus de l'anaphore de saint Marc' in Rev. S.R., viii (1928), pp. 480–515; text repr. in Florilegium Patristicum, fasc. vii, 1 (ed. 2 by J. Quasten, 1935) pp. 44–8; shorter fragment ed. C. H. Roberts, Catalogue of the Greek and Latin Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, iii (Manchester, 1938), pp. 25–8 (Papyrus No. 465). A. Gastoué–H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 1182–1204, s.v. 'Alexandrie (liturgie)', with full bibl.; A. *Fortescue in C.E., i (1907), pp. 303–6, s.v. 'Alexandrine Liturgy'; A. Raes, S.J., in E.C., i (1949), cols. 769–73, s.v. 'Alessandria d'Egitto, 5. Il rito alessandrino'.

MARK THE HERMIT (fl. c. 431), ascetical writer. Very little is known of his life. He is said to have been a disciple of St. *Chrysostom (like his contemporary, *Nilus the Ascetic), but this is not certain. He may at one period of his life have been abbot of a community near Ancyra; later he was a hermit, possibly in Palestine or in Egypt. His writings, for the most part of a practical character, include treatises 'On Repentance', 'On the Spiritual Law', and 'On Those who suppose Justification is from Works'. His vigorous attack on human merit in the last-named writing commended him to older Protestant theologians. A work 'On Temperance' (Κεφάλαια νηπτικά), which is ascribed to him, is certainly spurious; and another 'On Fasting' (Περὶ νηστείας) is of doubtful authenticity.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL, lxv, 893–1140. Partial ed. by F. *Ducaeus, S.J., in his Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, i (Paris, 1624), pp. 869–984 (repr. from the ed. of G. Morel, Paris, 1563). The Gk. text of 'De Jejunio' and of his 'De Melchisedek' were first publd. by B. M. Remondini (Rome, 1748). His 'Adversus Nestorianos', first publd. from a 13th cent. Jerusalem MS. by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus at St. Petersburg in 1891, was issued in an improved text by J. Kunze, Marcus Eremita (Leipzig, 1895; important study, esp. on Mark's Baptismal Creed), pp. 6–30; further ed. by A. Rocchi in Mai, N.P.B., x, pt. 1 (1905), pp. 201–47. Bardenhewer, iv (1924), pp. 178–86; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 334; M. Geerard, Clavis Patrum Graecorum, iii (Turnhout, 1979), pp. 184–8. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1964–8, s.v. 'Marc l'Ermite'; J. Gribomont, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., x (1980), cols. 274–83, s.v. 'Marc le Moine'.

MARKS OF THE CHURCH. See Notes of the Church.

MARMION, COLUMBA (1858–1923), Abbot of *Maredsous. He was an Irishman by birth, who, though he lived mainly surrounded by French culture, retained his Irish characteristics and sympathies till his death. In 1886 he entered the Benedictine house at Maredsous; in 1899 he became prior of the Abbey of Mont-César at Louvain; and from 1909 till his death was Abbot of Maredsous. Basing his teaching on the Christocentric teaching of St. *Paul, he drew largely on the patristic and liturgical traditions of *Benedictine monasticism, without at the same time failing to appreciate *Thomist theology. He was an unusually gifted spiritual writer and director, whose main works, the fruit of series of spiritual addresses, are Le Christ, vie de l'âme (1918, over 100,000 copies issued; Eng. tr., 1922), Le Christ dans ses mystères (1919; Eng. tr., 1924), and Le Christ, idéal du moine (1922; Eng. tr., 1926).

Life by R. Thibaut (Maredsous, 1929; Eng. tr., 1932). M. M. Philipon, O.P., La Doctrine spirituelle de Dom Marmion (1954; Eng. tr., 1956).

MARNIX, PHILIPP VAN (1540–98), Baron de Sainte-Aldegonde, Dutch *Calvinist theologian and statesman. Between 1562 and 1569 he won fame by his Protestant and nationalist writings, of which the most celebrated was the bitterly satirical De bïenkorf der heilige roomsche kerche (1569; Eng. trans. by G. Gilpin, 1579). About 1566–7 he took up arms as an anti-Spanish leader, and formed a close friendship with William the Silent, whose constant adviser he became. He was made the first burgomaster of Antwerp in 1584, but lost his political influence in the next year by his surrender of the town to Alexander of Parma. A personal disciple of J. *Calvin and T. *Beza, his theology was rigidly Calvinist. Down to his death he was engaged on a Dutch version of the Bible.

Œuvres de P. de Marnix de Sainte-Aldegonde, with introd. by E. Quinet (9 vols., Brussels, 1857–60); Godsdienstige en Kerkelijke Geschriften, ed. J. J. van Toorenenbergen (3 vols., The Hague, 1871–91). A. A. van Schelven, Marnix van Sint Aldegonde (Utrecht, 1939). W. A. Nolet, Marnix als Theoloog. Historische Inleiding (1948), with bibl. F. van Kalken–T. Jonckheere, Marnix de Sainte-Aldegonde (Neuchâtel [1952]). Facsimile of the Catalogue of the Library of Philips van Marnix van Sint-Aldegonde sold by auction (July 6th), Leiden, Christophorus Guyot, 1599 (Nieuwkoop, 1964), with introd. in Eng. T. Schott–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 347–55, s.v.

MARONITES. A Christian community of Syrian origin, the greater part of whom still live in their native land of Lebanon, though some are to be found elsewhere in Syria and Palestine, and there are colonies also in Cyprus, Alexandria, and the U.S.A. Since 1182 they have been in formal communion with the RC Church.

By their own theologians it is claimed that their existence can be traced back to St. Maro, a friend of St. *Chrysostom (d. 407), whose disciples shortly after his death founded the monastery on the Orontes that now goes by his name, and that the modern Maronites derive directly from this foundation. It seems certain, however, that their origin does not go back beyond the 7th cent., and that their existence as a separate body arose out of their adoption of *Monothelite doctrines and their consequent excommunication at the Council of *Constantinople in 680. Their monastery on Mt. Lebanon was destroyed by the Arab invasion at the beginning of the 10th cent. Since their union with Rome in the 12th cent., relations with the W. have been continuously maintained. In 1584 *Gregory XIII founded a Maronite college in Rome, which was later the home of the *Assemani and several other notable scholars. In the 19th cent. they suffered severe treatment at the hands of the Turks and the Druses. Today they constitute the largest single religious body in the Lebanon.

As a *Uniat body they possess their own liturgy, which is in essence an Antiochene rite in the Syriac language, in parts modified by Latin influences. They employ several (Syriac) anaphoras, of which the oldest, known from its opening word as the 'Sharrar', has links with the Nestorian anaphora of '*Addai and Mari'. Their hierarchy consists of a *patriarch (whose see town is Bkerké in Lebanon), 10 bishops (Aleppo, Baalbek, Beirut, Cairo, Cyprus, Damascus, Sarba, Sidon, Tripoli, Tyre), an Apostolic Exarch in U.S.A., an Auxiliary bishop in Brazil and three titular bishops.

T. Anaissi (ed.), Bullarium Maronitarum (Rome, 1911). P. Dib (ed.), Quelques Documents pour servir à l'histoire des Maronites (1945). M. *Lequien, O.P., Oriens Christianus, iii (Rome, 1740), cols. 1–100. P. Dib, L'Église maronite, vol. i, 'L'Église maronite jusqu'à la fin du moyen âge' (1930). Id., Étude sur la liturgie maronite [c. 1920]. Id. in Codificazione Canonica Orientale, Fonti, fasc. viii (Rome, 1932), pp. 90–116; P. Sfair, ib., fasc. xii, Ius Particolare Maronitarum (ib., 1933). G. J. Mahfoud, L'Organisation monastique dans l'Église maronite (Bibliothèque de l'Université Saint-Esprit, Kaslik, Jounieh, Liban, i; Beyrouth, 1967). M. Hayek, Liturgie maronite. Histoire et textes eucharistiques (1964). J. Feghali, Histoire du droit canonique de l'Église maronite (Bibliothèque de la faculté de droit canonique de Paris; 1962 ff.). P. Raphael, Le Rôle du Collège maronite romain dans l'orientalisme aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Beyrouth, 1950). A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 389–423. P. Dib in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1–142, s.v., with full bibl.; P. Sfair–A. Raes, S.J., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 177–84, s.v. 'Maroniti', with bibl. E. El-Hayek in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 245–53, s.v. 'Maronite Rite'; on canon law, C. de Clercq in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 811–29, s.v. 'Maronite (Droit canonique)'.

MAROT, CLÉMENT (c. 1497–1544), French hymn-writer. Having entered the service of Marguerite d'Angoulême ('Margaret of Navarre'), he was brought into contact with an early form of *Huguenot teaching, and in 1527 openly avowed his adhesion to Protestantism. In 1535 he was compelled to flee to Ferrara, but became reconciled to Catholicism in the next year. His French version of some selected Psalms (1538) was warmly welcomed (despite the religious vacillations of its compiler) by the French Protestants, who were in great need of a hymn-book. He soon became suspect once more of Protestant sympathies and this time took refuge at Geneva. When, in 1562, T. *Beza added to a collection of 49 of Marot's Psalms the remaining 101, the first complete Protestant Psalter in verse was brought into being.

Œuvres de Clément Marot, ed. G. Guiffrey (5 vols., Paris, 1875–1931; vol. i, life of Marot, ed. by R. Yve-Plessis, vols. iv and v ed. by J. Plattard). Crit. ed. by C. A. Mayer of his Épitres (London, 1958), Œuvres satiriques (ib., 1962), Œuvres lyriques (ib., 1964) and Œuvres diverses (ib., 1966) and of his translation of the Psalter by S. J. Lenselink (Assen, etc., 1969). O. Douen, Clément Marot et le psautier huguenot (2 vols., 1878–9); P. A. Becker, Clement Marot. Sein Leben und seine Dichtung (1926); J. Rollin, Les Chansons de Clément Marot. Étude historique et bibliographique (1951); C. A. Mayer, La Religion de Marot (Travaux d'Humanisme et de Renaissance, xxxix; Geneva, 1960). Id., Bibliographie des œuvres de Clément Marot (ib., x and xiii; 1954). M. A. Screech, Marot évangélique (Geneva, 1967).

MARPRELATE TRACTS, The. A series of violent and frequently scurrilous *Puritan tracts attacking *Episcopacy, issued under the pseudonym of Martin Marprelate in 1588 and 1589. They were prob. occasioned by the decree of Abp. J. *Whitgift in 1586 requiring ecclesiastical approval for all publications. The titles (abbreviated) of the seven which survive are The Epistle, The Epitome, Hay any Work for Cooper, Minerall and Metaphysical School-points, Theses Martinianae, The Just Censure and Reproof and The Protestation. They appear to have been published successively at Molesey (nr. Kingston-on-Thames), Fawsley House (nr. Daventry, Northants), Wolston Priory (Warwickshire), Coventry and in or near Manchester. Among those accused of writing them were Job Throckmorton (1545–1601; prob. one of the authors) and J. *Udall, who both denied the charges, and J. *Penry, who was executed. Replies were published by T. Cooper, Bp. of Winchester, R. *Bancroft, J. Lyly and T. Nash. The tracts themselves, though prob. the most brilliant prose satire of the period, by their violence aroused hostility rather than sympathy for the Puritan party.

Modern ed. of Tracts with hist. notes by W. Pierce (London, 1911). Facsimile of original ed., Leeds, 1967. See also W. Pierce, An Historical Introduction to the Marprelate Tracts (1908). There is a useful account of the Marprelate Controversy in The Works of Thomas Nashe, ed. R. B. McKerrow–F. P. Wilson, v (Oxford, 1958), pp. 34–65. D. J. McGinn, John Penry and the Marprelate Controversy (New Brunswick, 1966). J. D. Wilson–A. F. S. Pearson in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 688–94.

MARRIAGE. See Matrimony.

MARRIAGE LICENCES. Licences to dispense with the necessity of *banns have been granted by bishops since the early 14th cent. The power to issue such licences was confirmed to them in 1534 by the Peter's Pence Act (25 Hen. VIII, c. 21). In 1753 Lord *Hardwicke's Marriage Act (26 Geo. II, c. 23) enacted that marriages solemnized without banns or licence should be void according to the secular law although acc. to Anglican Church law they were irregular but valid. It was repealed in 1823 when the Marriage Act of that year (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) declared clandestine marriages valid, but the officiating minister a felon.

Acc. to Canon B 34 of the 1969 Canons, marriage licences may be issued by those having episcopal authority or the commissary for faculties, vicars-general of the Archbishops and Bishops sede plena or sede vacante, the guardian of the spiritualities, or *ordinaries exercising the right of episcopal jurisdiction in the several jurisdictions respectively, but in practice they are generally granted by *surrogates appointed by the chancellor. They are entirely a matter of grace. The 1949 Marriage Act requires that before a licence is granted one of the parties shall swear before the surrogate that he knows of no impediment or suit pending in any court to bar the marriage and that one of the parties has for the past fifteen days had his abode in the parish or chapelry in which the marriage is to be solemnized, or that the church or chapel in which the marriage is to be solemnized is the usual place of worship of one of the parties.

The power to grant special licences to marry at any time and in any church, chapel or other suitable or convenient place was exercised in both provinces by the Abps. of *Canterbury as legati nati. It was confirmed to them by the Peter's Pence Act, and specifically reserved in the Marriage Act of 1823. The fee is now £29.

By the Marriage Act of 1836 (6 and 7 Will. IV, c. 85) superintendent registrars were authorized to issue licences for marriages in the office of a registrar or a nonconformist place of worship. The Marriage Act of 1949 (12 and 13 Geo. VI, c. 76) extended this provision to C of E churches and chapels in which banns may be called, provided that the consent of the minister of the church or chapel is obtained and the marriage is solemnized by a clergyman.

The rulings mentioned do not apply to Scotland, where the law is completely different.

R. Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (ed. 2, 1895), pp. 607–17; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8, 1937), pp. 547–51.

MARRIOTT, CHARLES (1811–58), English divine. He was educated at Exeter and Balliol Colleges, Oxford, and in 1833 was elected a Fellow of Oriel, where he became closely associated with several of the *Tractarian leaders and a devoted disciple of J. H. *Newman. After Newman seceded to the RC Church Marriott remained with E. B. *Pusey a leader in Oxford of the High Church Movement. As a religious counsellor he exercised a wide influence, esp. on young men. From 1839 to 1841 he was the first principal of Chichester Theological College, and from 1850 to 1855 vicar of the University Church at Oxford. From 1841 onwards he collaborated with Pusey and J. Keble in producing the Library of the Fathers, and bore the chief burden of the work of direction.

J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888), i, 296–373 (No. 3: 'The Man of Saintly Life'); R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1891), ch. 5. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 196–8.

MARROW CONTROVERSY, The. A protracted controversy in the Church of *Scotland arising out of the condemnation by the *General Assembly in 1720 of The Marrow of Modern Divinity, a book written in 1645 by 'E. F.', a 'poor inhabitant' of London (apparently not Edward Fisher, fl. 1627–55), and republished in 1719. The book, which advocated strongly *Calvinist doctrines, was held to favour *Antinomianism.

MARSH, HERBERT (1757–1839), Bp. of *Peterborough. Educated at King's School, *Canterbury, and St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1779, he studied in Germany under J. D. *Michaelis. Here he became conversant with the prevalent critical methods, esp. as applied to the Gospels, and after his return translated into English Michaelis's Introduction to the New Testament (4 vols., 1793–1801), adding a 'hypothesis' of his own on the mutual relations of the Gospels for which he was much attacked by the more conservative English theologians. In 1805 he preached a series of sermons against the *Calvinist doctrines of *justification and the inamissibility of grace which provoked a violent controversy with the *Evangelicals. In 1807 he was elected Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge, holding the post until his death. His lectures on Biblical criticism (1809–16), among the first to popularize German critical methods in England, were enthusiastically listened to by the University and The History of Sacred Criticism (1809) was based on the first of his courses. In 1814 he issued A Comparative View of the Churches of England and Rome, and in 1815 Horae Pelasgicae (Part I, all publd.), a learned study of the origin and language of the Pelasgi. In 1816 he was appointed Bp. of *Llandaff and three years later translated to Peterborough. The early years of his episcopate were marked by controversy arising from his anti-Evangelical measures and his refusal to license clergy of Calvinist beliefs. His profound and extensive erudition, his clear and active mind, his belief in the Establishment, his ideal of rigid uniformity in matters of doctrine and liturgical practice, and his capacity for business made him the foremost English bishop of his age.

E. Venables in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 211–15.

MARSIGLIO (or Marsilius) OF PADUA (c. 1275–1342), Italian scholar and author of the 'Defensor Pacis'. After studying at Padua, he went to Paris c. 1311 to devote himself to medicine, was made rector of the university in 1313, and, after a period in N. Italy and Avignon, practised medicine and possibly studied theology in Paris from 1320. In 1324 he completed the 'Defensor Pacis', his principal work. When, in 1326, his authorship became known he fled to the Emperor, Louis of Bavaria, who had just been excommunicated. In 1327 *John XXII condemned five propositions of the 'Defensor' and excommmunicated its author. From 1327 to 1329 Marsiglio accompanied the Emperor to Rome, where he was made Imperial Vicar. After the failure of Louis's policy he spent the remainder of his life at the court of Munich.

The 'Defensor Pacis' is one of the most challenging works produced in the Middle Ages. Acc. to Marsiglio, the state is the great unifying power of society to which the Church must be completely subordinated. It derives its authority from the people, who retain the right to censure and depose the Ruler. The Church, on the other hand, has no inherent jurisdiction whether spiritual or temporal. All her rights in this regard are given her by the state, which may withdraw them at will. She may own no property, but only use what the state lends her; her hierarchy is not of Divine but purely human institution; St. Peter was never given the primacy, and the Papacy owes its prerogatives chiefly to the *Donation of the Emp. *Constantine (a document the authenticity of which Marsiglio did not doubt). The principal authority in all ecclesiastical matters is the *General Council, which should be composed of priests and laymen. These ideas, which ran counter to the whole medieval conception of society, have led to Marsiglio of Padua's being claimed as a forerunner of the Reformers, modern democracy, and even totalitarianism.

The 'Defensor Pacis' was first printed in 1522 and put on the *Index in 1559.

Crit. edd. of the Defensor Pacis by C. W. Previté-Orton (Cambridge, 1928), with introd. and notes, and by R. Scholz (Fontes Iuris Germanici Antiqui in Usum Scholarum; Hanover, 1933). The Defensor Minor was ed. by C. K. Brampton (Birmingham, 1922). A. Gewirth, Marsilius of Padua, the Defender of Peace (2 vols., Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, xlvi; New York, 1951–6, with Eng. tr. of Defensor Pacis in vol. 2). E. Emerton, The Defensor Pacis of Marsiglio of Padua. A Critical Study (Harvard Theological Studies, viii; 1920). F. Battaglia, Marsilio da Padova e la filosofia politica del medio evo (Studi filosofici, seconda serie, iv; Florence, 1928); G. de Lagarde, La Naissance de l'esprit laïque au déclin du moyen-âge, ii (Saint-Paul-Trois-Châteaux, 1934); rev. ed., iii (Louvain, 1970.) A. Checchini–N. Bobbio (edd.), Marsilio da Padova. Studi raccolti nel VI centenario della morte (Pubblicazione della Facoltà di Giurisprudenza della R. Università di Padova, iii; 1942). H. Segall, Der 'Defensor Pacis' des Marsilius von Padua. Grundfragen der Interpretation (Historische Forschungen, ii; Wiesbaden, 1959). C. Pincin, Marsilio (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Scienze Politiche dell'Università di Torino, xvii; 1967). Jeannine Quillet, La Philosophie politique de Marsile de Padoue (L'Église et l'État au Moyen Age, xiv; 1970). J. Haller, 'Zur Lebensgeschichte des Marsilius von Padua' in Z.K.G., xlviii (1929), pp. 166–97. G. de Lagarde, 'Marsile de Padoue et Guillaume de Nogaret' in Revue historique de Droit français et étranger, sér. 4, xi (1932), pp. 463–90; C. W. Previté-Orton, 'Marsilius of Padua' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxi (1935), pp. 137–83, with bibl. notes; R. Scholz,'Marsilius von Padua und die Genesis des modernen Staatsbewusstseins' in H.Z., clvi (1937), pp. 88–103. A. P. d'Entrèves, The Medieval Contribution to Political Thought (1939), chs. 3 and 4, pp. 44–87. A. Gewirth, 'John of Jandun and the Defensor Pacis' in Speculum, xxiii (1948), pp. 267–72, establishing that Marsiglio was the sole author. N. Rubinstein, 'Marsilius of Padua and Italian Political Thought of his Time' in J. R. Hale and others (edd.), Europe in the Late Middle Ages (1965), pp. 44–75. J. Rivière in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 153–77, s.v. 'Marsile de Padoue', with bibl.

MARTÈNE, EDMOND (1654–1739), liturgist. In 1672 Martène made his profession as a *Benedictine at the *Maurist house at *Reims and was later sent to *St.-Germain-des-Prés to be trained under J. L. *d'Achéry and J. *Mabillon. Of his many writings the chief is his De antiquis ecclesiae ritibus (3 vols., Rouen, 1700–2), a large collection of liturgical texts, with disquisitions on their historical significance. This he supplemented in 1706 by a Tractatus de antiqua ecclesiae disciplina. From 1708 till 1715 he worked on the Gallia Christiana, travelling extensively with Ursin Durand (d. 1773) through France and Belgium in search of MSS. and other materials. Later the two scholars visited many religious houses of the Netherlands and Germany for documents, which were embodied in their Veterum scriptorum et monumentorum ecclesiasticorum et dogmaticorum amplissima collectio (9 vols. fol., 1724–33). He was also sole compiler of the Annales Ordinis S. Benedicti, vol. vi (1739), begun by Mabillon.

[R. P. Tassin,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (1770), pp. 542–63. H. Wilhelm-U. Berlière, Nouveau Supplément à l'histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ii (Maredsous, 1931), pp. 48–57. J. Daoust, Dom Martène. Un géant de l'érudition bénédictine (Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1947). Bremond, vi (1922), ch. 6: 'Dom Martin et Dom Martène', pp. 177–266. H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2297–322.

MARTENSEN, HANS LASSEN (1808–84), Danish Protestant theologian. He was a native of Flensburg, studied theology at Copenhagen university (1827–32), and after further studies in Germany and at Paris he became lecturer at Copenhagen in 1838 and professor of systematic theology in 1840. From 1854 till his death he was Bp. of Seeland as successor of J. P. Mynster. His chief purpose was to set forth a harmonious view of all the departments of human life with Christ at its centre. He was greatly influenced by F. E. D. *Schleiermacher, G. W. F. *Hegel, and esp. F. X. von Baader (1765–1841). In 1840 he published a study of Master *Eckhart, and in 1841 Grundrids til Moralphilosophiens System, an introduction to the study of moral philosophy. In 1849 appeared Martensen's principal work, Den Christelige Dogmatik (Eng. trans., 1866), which rests on the principle of the harmony between faith and knowledge, in the light of which he interpreted the *Lutheran system of doctrine. His interest in theosophical speculation is noticeable in Den Christelige Ethik (3 vols., 1871–8, Eng. trans., 1873–81). In the course of this work he treated of the existence of corporality in the Godhead, which he conceived as the principle of order in nature and a plenitude of forces and potencies. This notion found full expression in a work on *Jacob Boehme (1881; Eng. trans., 1885), in which he placed beside the Trinity a fourth elemental principle, the Uncreated Light. Martensen also took part in many controversies. In 1843 he attacked the *Baptists in a treatise on Baptism. After the publication of his work on Christian Doctrine he became involved in a lengthy controversy with S. *Kierkegaard and his disciples, who, as defenders of the irreconcilable antagonism between faith and reason, attacked Martensen's harmonizing theology. He also wrote against Catholicism, Katholizismus und Protestantismus (1874), and published many volumes of sermons.

Coll. of his lesser works ed. Julius Martensen, Copenhagen, 1885, with detailed bibl. Eng. tr. of his Jacob Boehme (London, 1885); new ed., with notes by S. Hobhouse (ib., 1949). Correspondence with J. A. *Dorner, ed. posthumously, 2 vols., Berlin, 1888. Martensen wrote some autobiographical reflections, publd. Copenhagen, 1882–3 (German tr., 3 vols., 1883–4). Lives by V. Nannestad (Copenhagen, 1897) and S. Arildsen (vol. i, all publd., ib., 1932). P. Madsen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 373–9.

MAR THOMA CHURCH. See Malabar Christians.

MARTHA, St. The sister of *Mary and *Lazarus, who received Christ in her house during His ministry. From the incident related in Lk. 10. 38–42, she is commonly regarded as typifying the 'active' Christian life as contrasted with Mary, who typifies the 'contemplative'. Acc. to a medieval legend, Martha, Mary, and Lazarus came to the south of France and founded churches at Marseilles, Aix, *Avignon, and other places. Feast day in E., 4 June; in W., 29 July.

On the legend, besides the collections of docc. listed under Mary Magdalene, q.v., L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancien Gaule, i (1894), pp. 310–44 ('La Légende de sainte Marie-Madeleine', esp. sect. 3, pp. 325–9, 'La Légende de sainte Marthe'); G. de Manteyer, 'Les Légendes saintes de Provence et le Martyrologe d'Arles–Toulon' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xvii (1897), pp. 467–89; G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'La Formation des légendes provençales. Faits et aperçus nouveaux' in R. Bén., xxvi (1909), pp. 24–33, with reff. to earlier lit.; E. Vacandard, 'La Venue de Lazare et Marie-Madeleine en Provence' in R.Q.H., c (1924), pp. 257–305; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1929), cols. 2044–86, s.v. 'Lazare', with detailed bibl.; V. Saxer in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, viii (Rome, 1967), cols. 1204–15, s.v. 'Marta di Betania'. See also bibl. to Lazarus.

MARTIN, St. (d. 397), Bp. of Tours and a patron saint of France. He was born in either 316 or 335, more probably the former. The son of a pagan, Martin early became a *catechumen. He served in the Roman army until, after he had given half his cloak to a beggar at Amiens, a vision of Christ impelled him to baptism and the religious life. Obtaining his discharge, he visited Pannonia, Milan (from which he was driven by its Arian bishop, *Auxentius), and Illyricum. In 360 he joined *Hilary at Poitiers and founded the monastery of Ligugé, the first in Gaul. Becoming Bp. of Tours c. 372, he encouraged the spread of monasticism in Gaul, his own foundation outside Tours being particularly influential, and set himself to evangelize the hitherto neglected countryside, into which he introduced a rudimentary parochial system. His protest against the execution of *Priscillian by Maximus c. 386 raised important issues in the relations between Church and state. Apart from letters, he wrote nothing. His life was recorded by his friend *Sulpicius Severus. *Gregory of Tours preserves some independent information, prob. derived from local sources. Feast day in W., 11 Nov.; in E., 12 Nov.

The Vita by Sulpicius, to which are appended three Epistulae and two Libri Dialogorum, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 159–222; crit. ed. by C. Halm (C.S.E.L., i; 1866, pp. 108–216); further ed. for C.C. in preparation. Mod. ed. of the life, with full introd. and Fr. tr., by J. Fontaine (S.C. cxxxiii–cxxxv; 1967–9). Cf. also Gregory of Tours, Hist. Franc. (i. 36–8, 43). A. Lecoy de la Marche, St. Martin (Tours, 1881). Saint Martin et son temps. Mémorial du XVIe centenaire des débuts du monasticisme en Gaule 361–1961 (Studia Anselmiana, xlvi; Rome, 1961). The thesis of E. C. Babut, in his St. Martin de Tours (1912), denying all historical value to the Life by Sulpicius, is severely criticized by H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'St. Martin et Sulpice Sévère', in Anal. Boll., xxxviii (1920), pp. 1–136; cf. also C. Jullian, 'Remarques critiques sur les sources de la vie de S. Martin' in Revue des Études anciennes, xxiv (1922), pp. 37–47, 123–8, 229–35, and 306–12, and xxv (1923), pp. 49–55, 139–43, and 234–49. Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 89–121

(ch. iv: 'Sulpicius Severus and St. Martin of Tours'); E. Griffe, 'La Chronologie des années de jeunesse de saint Martin' in Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique, lxii (1961), pp. 114–18; J. Fontaine, 'Sulpice Sévère a-t-il travesti Saint Martin de Tours en martyr militaire?' in Anal. Boll., lxxxi (1963), pp. 31–58. Other lives by P. Monceaux (Paris, 1926, with tr. of Sulpicius's Life; Eng. tr., 1928) and A. Regnier ('Les Saints', 1907). J. Costanza, La leggenda di S. Martino nel medio evo (Palermo, 1921). J. Fournée, Enquête sur le culte populaire de saint Martin en Normandie (Nogent-sur-Marne, 1963). É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 211–14, s.v.; H. G. J. Beck in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 303 f., s.v.

MARTIN, St. (c. 520–80), Abp. of Braga. He was a Pannonian by birth. After becoming a monk in Palestine, he travelled to Spain, where he became successively Abbot and Bp. of Dumio and later Abp. of Braga. He was active in furthering the conversion of the remaining *Arians in Portugal to Catholicism. He wrote a letter to a bishop, Boniface, 'De Trina Mersione', opposing the Spanish practice of using one immersion only at baptism, which, adopted probably through fear of Arianism, he considered to smack of *Sabellianism. He also wrote several moral treatises, among them the 'Formula Vitae Honestae' and the 'De Ira' (both based on *Seneca), and also compiled an important collection of canons, the so-called 'Capitula Martini', relating to the duties and status of clergy and laity. A sermon 'De correctione rusticorum' has considerable interest for the light it throws on the older pagan beliefs of the country population of Portugal. Feast day, 20 Mar.

J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 17–52 (from A. *Gallandi), and lxxxiv, 574–86 ('Capitula Martini'). Mod. crit. ed. of Works by C. W. Barlow (New Haven, Conn., 1950); Eng. tr., with introd., by id. (Fathers of the Church, lxii, 1969, pp. 3–109). C. P. *Caspari, Martin von Braccaras Schrift De Correctione Rusticorum (Christiania, 1883), with imp. introd. The chief authorities for his life are St. *Gregory of Tours and *Venantius Fortunatus; also St. *Isidore of Seville, De Vir. Ill., 35. E. Bickel, 'Die Schrift des Martin von Bracara Formula Vitae Honestae' in Rheinisches Museum, N.F., lx (1905), pp. 505–51. J. Madoz, S.J., 'Una nueva recensión del De Correctione Rusticorum de Martino de Braga' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xix (1945), pp. 335–53; id., 'Martín de Braga. En el XIV centenario de su advenimiento a la Peninsula (550–1950)', ib., xxv (1951), pp. 219–42. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 379–88; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 492 f. É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 203–7.

MARTIN I, St. (d. 655), Pope from 649. He was a vigorous opponent of the *Monothelites. Before his election as Pope had been confirmed from Constantinople by the Emp. Constans II, Martin had condemned Monothelitism at a Synod at the *Lateran in 649. When Constans found Martin unwilling to sign the *Typos, he tried to induce his exarch, Olympius, to seize the Pope's person, but in vain. Olympius's successor, Theodore Calliopas, did so, however, and after a year in captivity at Naxos on the way, Martin arrived at Constantiople in Dec. 654. Here he was condemned to exile, though the sentence was commuted to banishment to the Chersonesus (Crimea), where he died soon afterwards. He is the last of the Popes who is venerated as a martyr, and is actually mentioned by name in the *Canon of the Mass in the *Bobbio Missal. Feast day, 13 Apr.; in E., also 20 Sept.; in W., formerly 12 Nov.

A few of his letters and privilegia repr. from G. D. *Mansi in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxvii, 119–211; others calendared in P. Jaffé (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, i (ed. G. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 230–4. L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 336–40. *Anastasius Bibliothecarius in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxix, 586–604. P. Peeters, S.J., 'Une Vie grecque du pape S. Martin I' in Anal. Boll., li (1933), pp. 225–62, with text. W. M. Peitz, S.J., 'Martin I und Maximus Confessor. Beiträge zur Geschichte des Monotheletenstreites in den Jahren 645–68' in Hist. J., xxxviii (1917), pp. 213–36 and 429–58. E. Caspar, 'Die Lateransynode von 649' in Z.K.G., li (1932), pp. 75–137. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 435–61. E. Michael, S.J., 'Wann ist Papst Martin I bei seiner Exilierung nach Constantinopel gekommen?' in Z.K.T., xvi (1892), pp. 375–80. L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIe siècle (1925), pp. 441–53. L. Bréhier in Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 166–72. Mann, i (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 385–405. É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 182–94; C. M. Aherne in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 300 f., both s.v.

MARTIN IV (c. 1210–85), Pope from 1281. Simon de Brie (or Brion) was a native of Touraine. After being canon and treasurer at St. Martin's at Tours, he was appointed Chancellor of France by *Louis IX in 1260. In 1261 Urban IV created him Cardinal-priest of St. Cecilia. As Papal legate he conducted the negotiations for the crown of Sicily with Charles of Anjou and presided over several French synods, including that held at Bourges in 1276. In 1281 he was elected Pope at Viterbo against his will through the influence of Charles of Anjou, on whom he remained dependent throughout his pontificate. He restored Charles to the influential position of Roman Senator of which Nicholas III had deprived him, and with a view to assisting the planned attack on the Greek Empire he excommunicated in 1281 its Emperor, Michael Palaeologus, thus destroying the union between the Latin and Greek Churches achieved at the Council of *Lyons in 1274. His unpopularity with the Roman people led to his expulsion from the city, and he died at Perugia. He was a supporter of the *Franciscan Order, whose privileges he extended by the bull 'Ad fructus uberes' in 1281.

Les Registres de Martin IV, 1281–1285 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Ser. 2, xvi; 1935). Two contemporary biographies repr. in L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 459–65. N. Backes, Kardinal Simon de Brion (Papst Martin IV) (Breslau Diss., Berlin, 1910), with bibl. p. 10 f. Mann, xvi (1932), pp. 171–356. R. Sternfeld, 'Das Konklave von 1280 und die Wahl Martins IV. (1281)' in Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, xxxi (1910), pp. 1–53. É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 194–7, s.v.

MARTIN V (1368–1431), Pope. Oddo (Otto) *Colonna, a man of simple tastes and free from intrigue, was unanimously elected Pope at the Council of *Constance in 1417. His reign marked the end of the Great Schism, the Anti-pope Clement VIII submitting to him in 1429. Three years after his election Martin entered Rome, then in a ruinous condition, and restored its churches and other public buildings. In the Papal States he also re-established order with the help of his relatives, among whom he distributed honours and offices. He greatly strengthened the Papal power by dissolving the Council of Constance in 1418, and that of Pavia and Siena in 1424. In the following years he curtailed the liberties of the Church of France and increased the influence of the Papacy in England, though he failed to secure the repeal of the Statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire. His attempts at suppressing the *Hussites and at restoring union with the Greek Church were also unsuccessful.

E. v. Ottenthal, 'Die Bullenregister Martin V. und Eugen IV.' in Mittheilungen des Instituts für Oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung, Ergänzungsband, i (1885), pp. 401–589, esp. pp. 401–568. K. A. Fink, Verzeichnis der in den pápstlichen Registern und Kameralakten Martins V. vorkommenden Personen, Kirchen und Orte des Deutschen Reiches (Repertorium Germanicum, iv; 3 parts, 1943–58). F. Baix, La Chambre apostolique et les 'Libri Annatarum' de Martin V, 1417–1431 (pt. 1, Introduction et Textes; Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, xiv; 1942). P. Partner, The Papal State under Martin V. The administration and government of the temporal power in the early fifteenth century (1958). K. A. Finke, Martin V. und Aragon (Historische Studien, cccxl; 1938). J. Haller, 'England und Rom unter Martin V.' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, viii (1905), pp. 249–304; K. A. Finke, 'Martin V. und Bologna (1428–1429)', ib., xxiii (1931–2), pp. 182–217. M. Dykmans, S.J., 'D'Avignon à Rome. Martin V et le cortège apostolique' in Bulletin de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, xxxix (1968), pp. 203–310, with texts. Pastor, i, pp. 208–82. G. Mollat in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 197–202, s.v.; K. A. Fink in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 301 f., s.v. See also R. G. Davies in E.H.R., xcii (1977), pp. 309–44.

MARTIN, GREGORY (d. 1582), Biblical translator. One of the original scholars of St. John's College, Oxford, he became a tutor in the household of Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk. On the Duke's imprisonment for Catholicism, Martin escaped to *Douai, where he joined W. *Allen. In 1573 he was ordained priest. After some time in Rome he returned to Douai in 1578, where he spent most of the rest of his life translating the *Vulgate into English. He described the religious life and organized charities of Rome in a work written in 1580–1, entitled 'Roma Sancta', which remained unpublished until 1969. He died on 28 Oct. 1582, the year in which the NT appeared at Reims. See also Douai–Reims Bible.

The MS. of his Roma Sancta (now in the National Library of Australia), ed. by G. B. Parks (Rome, 1969), with introd. on 'The Life and Works of Gregory Martin', pp. xi–xxxii. T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 277–9; B. Ward in C.E., ix (1910), p. 727 f., s.v., both with further bibl. reff.

MARTINEAU, JAMES (1805–1900), *Unitarian divine. He was the brother of Harriet Martineau (1802–76). Educated at Norwich Grammar School, he was converted in 1822 and in the same year entered Manchester College at York. After work as a Unitarian minister at Dublin and Liverpool, during which he became increasingly interested in problems of philosophy, he became professor of philosophy (1840) at, and afterwards principal of, Manchester New College (1869), but continued his pastoral activities. He was a strong and ardent upholder of the theist position against the negations of physical science and elaborated the 'Design argument' with the modifications made necessary by the Darwinian theory of evolution; and did much to convince many of his contemporaries of all shades of theological belief that the Monism of H. *Spencer and the Materialism of John Tyndall (1820–93) did not cover all the facts. In Types of Ethical Theory (2 vols., 1885) and in A Study of Religion (2 vols., 1888) he found powerful arguments for theism in the facts of the moral consciousness and the existence of the laws of nature. He inspired great confidence through his intense moral earnestness, his passionate faith in God, and his massive power of reasoning. He also did much for the organization of the Unitarian body in England and Ireland.

Martineau's other writings include A Study of Spinoza (1882), The Seat of Authority in Religion (1890), and some collections of Hymns and 'Home Prayers'.

Essays, Reviews and Addresses. Selected and revised by the Author (4 vols., 1890–1). Life and Letters, ed. J. *Drummond–C. B. Upton (London, 1902). A. H. G. Craufurd, Recollections of James Martineau (1903). Other lives by A. W. Jackson (London, 1900) and J. E. *Carpenter (ib., 1905). H. *Sidgwick, Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. Herbert Spencer and J. Martineau (1902; posthumous), pp. 313–74. A. Gordon in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 146–51. A. M. *Fairbairn in E.B. (ed. 11), xvii (1911), pp. 797–800, s.v.

MARTYN, HENRY (1781–1812), Anglican missionary. He was born at *Truro and studied at St. John's College, Cambridge (1797–1801), of which he became a Fellow in 1802. His acquaintance with C. *Simeon awakened his interest in missionary work, and having been ordained deacon in 1803, he became a chaplain of the East India Company at Calcutta in 1805. Besides doing missionary work among the natives he translated the NT into Hindustani and Persian, the Psalms into Persian, and the BCP into Hindustani. He also prepared a translation of the NT into Arabic. On his way back from Persia he died at Tokat, where he was given Christian burial by the *Armenian clergy. His life of devotion to the cause of the missions made a great impression in Gt. Britain and he became the hero of several literary publications. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 19 Oct.

Journals and Letters of the Rev. Henry Martyn, ed. S. *Wilberforce (2 vols., London, 1837). Lives by J. Sargent (London, 1819) and G. Smith (ib., 1892); more popular accounts by Jessie Page (ib., [1891]) and C. E. Padwick (ib., 1922). Unsigned article in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 315–17.

MARTYR (Gk. μάρτυς, 'witness'). The term was originally used of the Apostles as witnesses of Christ's life and resurrection (e.g. Acts 1. 8, 1. 22), but with the spread of persecution it was reserved to those who had undergone hardships for the faith, and finally it was restricted to those who had suffered death. The age before *Constantine was the classic period of martyrs, esp. the era of *Diocletian. As martyrdom usually involved severe physical and moral sufferings before the execution, those who had remained steadfast were soon accorded particular honours by the Church. From the earliest time martyrdom, the 'baptism of blood', was considered an equivalent of normal baptism where this had not been received. Since the end of the 2nd cent. the anniversary of the martyr's death (natalis, i.e. his [heavenly] birthday) was kept as a feast with a liturgical celebration at his tomb; and later churches were frequently built on the site. The fame of the martyrs often spread beyond their city and country. They were venerated as powerful intercessors, their relics were sought after, and their lives widely read and often embellished by numerous legends.

In the Roman liturgy Martyrs rank before all other saints. The liturgical colour is red, to signify that they shed their blood for the faith, and acc. to RC practice until 1969 relics of martyrs had to be contained in every consecrated altar.

H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Subsidia Hagiographica, xx; 1912); id., Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921). O. Michel, Prophet und Märtyrer (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xxxvii, Hft. 2; 1932); H. von Campenhausen, Die Idee des Martyriums in der alten Kirche (1935); E. Günther, Μάρτυς. Die Geschichte eines Wortes (1941); M. Lods, Confesseurs et martyrs. Successeurs des prophètes dans l'Église des trois premiers siècles (Cahiers théologiques, xli; [1958]); J. Jeremias, Heiligengräber in Jesu Umwelt (Mt. 23, 29; Lk. 11, 47). Eine Untersuchungen zur Volksreligion der Zeit

Jesu (Göttingen, 1958); N. Brox, Zeuge und Märtyrer. Untersuchungen zur frühchristlichen Zeugnis-Terminologie (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, v; Munich, 1961). T. Klauser, Christlicher Märtyrerkult, heidnischer Heroenkult und spätjüdische Heiligenverehrung (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, xci; [1960]). W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965). M. M. Hassett in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 736–40, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2359–512, s.v.; E. Peterson–A. P. Frutaz–S. Indelicato in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 233–44, s.v. 'Martirio e martire'. H. Strathmann in T.W.B., iv [1939], pp. 477–520, s.v. μάρτυς.

MARTYR, PETER. See Peter Martyr.

MARTYRIUM (Gk. μαρτύριον). A church built over the tomb or relics of a *martyr or occasionally a church built just in honour of a martyr. The cleric in charge of such a church was sometimes known as the 'martyrarius'.

A. Grabar, Martyrium. Recherches sur le culte des reliques et l'art chrétien antique (Collège de France. Fondation Schlumberger pour les Études byzantines, 2 vols., 1946; Album, 1943). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2512–23, s.v.

MARTYROLOGY. An official register of Christian martyrs. As distinct from individual 'Passions' describing the martyrdoms of those who have suffered for the Christian faith, martyrologies are collective in structure. The earliest are calendars, merely naming the martyr and the place of martyrdom under the day of the festival. They may be local, like the calendars of Rome (354) and Carthage (c. 505), or general, like the '*Hieronymian Martyrology' (q.v.) and the 'Breviarium Syriacum' (441). The later 'historical' martyrologies, notably those of *Bede (c. 730), *Florus of Lyons, *Rabanus, *Ado, and *Usuard (all 9th cent.), add stories of martyrs from sources of varying value. The '*Roman Martyrology' (q.v.; 1584) is a revision of Usuard's. The practice of reading in choir at *Prime the martyrology for the day is already laid down by *Chrodegang of Metz and in the Aachen Capitula of 817, and until recently was preceptive in religious houses.

The standard source is the magisterial ed. and discussion of the 'Hieronymian Martyrology' in AA.SS., Nov. II, i (1894); new ed. by H. *Quentin, O.S.B., with important notes by H. *Delehaye, S.J., in AA.SS., Nov. II, ii (1931). H. Achelis, Die Martyrologien. Ihre Geschichte und ihr Wert (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., iii, Hft. 3; 1900); H. Quentin, O.S.B., Les Martyrologes historiques du moyen âge (1908). R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie (1953), pp. 11–106. B. de Gaiffier, 'De l'usage et de la lecture du martyrologe. Témoignages antérieurs au XI[e] siècle' in Anal. Boll., lxxix (1961), pp. 40–59. H. Delehaye, S.J., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 741 f., s.v.; H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2523–619, s.v.; A. Bugnini, C.M., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 244–58, s.v. 'Martirologio'. See also bibl. to separate Martyrologies and authors mentioned above.

MARTYRS, Acts of the. See Acts of the Martyrs.

MARTYRS, Era of the. See Diocletianic Era.

MARTYRS, Four Crowned. See Quattro Coronati.

MARUCCHI, ORAZIO (1852–1931), Italian archaeologist. Under the influence of G. B. *De Rossi, the *catacombs of Rome became the chief object of his research. In 1879 he founded the 'Collegium Cultorum Martyrum' and in quick succession became Scriptor of the *Vatican Library, director of the *Lateran Museum, lecturer on Christian archaeology at several institutes, and, after De Rossi's death (1894), editor of the Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana. As secretary of the pontifical 'Commissione di Archeologia Sacra', he conducted the excavations of many famous tombs, such as the 'Coemeterium Valentini' (1876 ff.) and parts of the Catacomb of *Priscilla. Owing to the considerable diversity of his interests, his work was sometimes wanting in precision in its details. Among his principal writings are Éléments d'archéologie chrétienne (1900–3) and Le Catacombe romane (1903; ed. 2, 1933), besides a great number of contributions to learned periodicals.

The second edition of Marucchi's Le catacombe romane was publ. posthumously by E. Josi [1933], with biogr. introd., pp. xix–xxxi. C. Cecchelli, 'Scrittori contemporanei di cose romane. Orazio Marucchi' in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, lii (1929; stampato nel 1931), pp. 381–406, with list of his works, pp. 407–52. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2619–38, s.v.

MARY, The Blessed Virgin, the Mother of Christ. The place accorded to her in Catholic and Orthodox theology and devotion issues from her position as Mother of the Redeemer. She is accounted pre-eminent among the *saints (q.v.).

In the NT the Blessed Virgin figures prominently in the birth stories of Mt. (1–2) and esp. Lk. (1–2). Though mentioned several times during Christ's public ministry, she remains mainly in the background; acc. to the Fourth Gospel she reappears at the foot of the Cross (Jn. 19. 25). In the Upper Room at Jerusalem she witnessed the growth of the early Church (Acts 1. 14). Both her maternity and her virginity are stated in the Gospels; she conceived and gave birth to Jesus (Lk. 1. 31–33) without losing her virginity (Mt. 1. 20 and 23; Lk. 1. 34 f.). See Virgin Birth.

In the earliest patristic writings Mary is mentioned only rarely, and then usually in conjunction with *Eve. *Justin Martyr (d. c. 165) contrasts her obedience with the disobedience of Eve, and the same theme is developed by *Irenaeus (d. c. 202). Her perpetual virginity was first asserted in the apocryphal Book of *James; it may have been taught by Irenaeus and *Clement of Alexandria, but was certainly held by *Athanasius, who used the term 'ever virgin' (ἀειπάρθενος); and, though contested by *Jovinian, it was accepted by orthodox Fathers of the East and West from the 5th cent. onwards. The development of Marian doctrine received considerable impetus at the Council of *Ephesus (431), which upheld the title *Theotokos (θεοτόκος). This expression was prob. in use among Alexandrian theologians from *Origen onwards; it became common in the 4th cent.; and, though it was contested by *Nestorius as being Christologically incorrect, it was defended by *Cyril of Alexandria and became generally accepted after 431. In the W., where at this time Mary played a lesser role than in the E., she was esp. associated with the Church; St. *Ambrose held her to be a type of the Church, in that in giving birth to Christ she also brought forth Christians who were formed in her womb with Him. In the 6th cent. the doctrine of the corporeal *Assumption of Mary was formulated in orthodox circles by *Gregory of Tours (d. 594); it had previously been found in apocryphal documents dating from the late 4th cent. onwards. Also in the 6th cent. the feast of the Assumption of the BVM became more widely observed, and sermons preached on the occasion, e.g. by Theoteknos of Livias (between 550 and 650) and by *Germanus of Constantinople, emphasized her power in heaven. Belief in the Assumption seems to have spread in both E. and W. without arousing opposition in the pre-Reformation period; it was defined for RCs in 1950. The doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM, on the other hand, was a matter of dispute throughout the Middle Ages. In England *Eadmer wrote a treatise in defence of the doctrine, which had been denied by his master, *Anselm of Canterbury; Eadmer sought to solve the problem of the universal transmission of *original sin in the sexual act by teaching the 'passive' conception, that is, that only Mary herself, without reference to the parental act, was without stain of original sin from the moment of her conception; he argued that because God could do it and because it was fitting, He also did do it. This teaching was developed in more stringently scholastic terms by *Duns Scotus and led to a long-drawn-out controversy. The doctrine of the Immaculate Conception was defended by the *Franciscans and later the *Jesuits against the *Dominicans; it was defined for RCs in 1854.

In modern times, esp. in the 19th and 20th cents., efforts have been made to secure a papal definition of Mary as 'Mediatrix of All Graces' and 'Co-Redemptress'. The former description was widely popularized by St. *Alphonsus Liguori, and Pope *Benedict XV sanctioned a Mass and Office of the BVM under this title. At the Second *Vatican Council, however, a chapter on Mary was added to the Constitution on the Church, against the wishes of those who sought a separate document on her. The chapter is remarkable for its restraint, its insistence on Scripture and the Fathers, and its stress on Mary's complete dependence on her Son.

The Marian doctrine of the Orthodox Church is very similar to that of the RC Church, though the corporeal assumption of the BVM has not been made a dogma and the immaculate conception is denied. The Reformers, esp. M. *Luther, stressed the humility of Mary and attacked her glorification by the RC Church. Among all Protestant bodies there was a strong reaction against excessive devotion to her. In the C of E the *Thirty-Nine Articles forbade the invocation of saints, incl. the BVM, but the *Caroline divines insisted on her holiness, and A. *Stafford could call her 'fountain of grace'. Since the *Oxford Movement certain Anglican theologians have accorded the BVM an increasingly important place which has come to differ little from the RC position. On the Continent also there has been a tendency among German Protestant theologians to restore an element of Marian doctrine.

Belief in the efficacy of Mary's intercession and hence direct prayers to her is prob. very old. It is attested in a Greek form of the well-known prayer 'Sub tuum praesidium' found in a papyrus dating from the late 3rd–early 4th cent. After the Council of Ephesus devotion to the Theotokos became so strong that her name was even substituted in the official service books in place of that of the Lord at the end of some of the liturgical prayers. In the W. St. *Thomas Aquinas formulated the doctrine of the '*hyperdulia' proper to her, which, though infinitely inferior to the 'latria' (worship of adoration) due to her Son, surpasses that befitting angels and saints.

Liturgical devotions in the W. came to include the '*Little Office of Our Lady' as well as the Saturday Mass and Office. Popular piety found expression in the *Hail Mary, *Rosary, *Angelus, May and October devotions, and pilgrimages, esp. to *Lourdes and *Fatima. Since the Second Vatican Council, however, these practices have come to occupy a less prominent place in the RC Church. In the Orthodox Church Marian devotion is expressed in the *Acathistus hymn and the Theotokia or short prayers to the Theotokos following the invocation of the Trinity which came into use in the 8th century.

The first Marian feast was called the Commemoration (μνήμη) of St. Mary and was kept in many places on the Sunday before Christmas; this developed into the feast of the Assumption (15 Aug.). The other major feasts of the BVM are the *Nativity (8 Sept.), the *Annunciation (25 March), the *Purification (2 Feb.; since 1960 called the Presentation of Christ), and the *Visitation (2 July; in the RC Church now 31 May). The calendar of the BCP retains all of these except the Assumption (which is retained in the Oxford University Calendar), but only the Annunciation and the Purification have a proper Collect, Epistle and Gospel. The RC Church has also observed a number of minor feasts, incl. the (*Seven) Sorrows of the BVM (15 Sept.), the Presentation of St. Mary in the Temple (21 Nov.), Our Lady of the Snows (5 Aug.; now renamed the 'Dedication of the Basilica of St. Mary'), Our Lady of Mt. *Carmel (16 July; now reduced to a permitted memorial) and the Holy Name of Mary (12 Sept.; now suppressed). Since 1969 the RC Church has also observed 1 Jan. as the 'Solemnity of Holy Mary, the Mother of God' in place of the *Circumcision. The ASB has a general feast of the BVM on 8 Sept.; the American BCP (1979) on 15 Aug.

The earliest recorded vision of the BVM is supposed to be that of *Gregory Thaumaturgus (d. c. 270), recorded in a panegyric almost certainly by *Gregory of Nyssa. The most famous modern apparitions are those of Lourdes and Fatima; lesser ones are those of *La Salette, Beauraing in Belgium (1932–33) and Banneux, also in Belgium (1933); in all these the recipients were children. The apparition which resulted in the striking of the popular 'miraculous medal' took place in 1830; the visionary was Catherine Labouré, a 'Daughter of Charity' of St. *Vincent de Paul. See also Loreto and Walsingham.

Classic discussions include St. Thomas Aquinas, S.T., iii, qq. 27–30, and P. *Canisius, De Beata Maria Virgine (Ingoldstadt, 1577). Modern general studies from the RC position include P. Sträter, S.J., Katholische Marienkunde (3 vols., Paderborn, 1948–51); H. du Manoir, S.J., Maria. Études sur la Sainte Vierge (1949 ff. [8 vols. to 1971]); K. McNamara (ed.), Mother of the Redeemer. Aspects of Doctrine and Devotion (Dublin, 1959); Hilda [C.] Graef, Mary. A History of Doctrine and Devotion (2 vols., 1963–5). Less substantial works by E. Schillebeeckx, O.P., Maria, Moeder van de verlossing (Antwerp, 1954; Eng. tr., 1964); R. Laurentin, La Question mariale (1963; Eng. tr., 1965); id., La Vierge au concile (1965). C. Miegge, La Vergine Maria (Torre Pellice, 1950; Eng. tr., 1955; a Protestant critique of the RC position). E. L. Mascall–H. S. Box (edd.), The Blessed Virgin Mary. Essays by Anglicans (1963). S. Beissel, S.J., Geschichte der Verehrung Marias in Deutschland während des Mittelalters (1909); id., Geschichte der Verehrung Marias im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (1910). R. Schimmelpfennig, Die Geschichte der Marienverehrung im deutschen Protestantismus (Paderborn, 1952). R. Caro, S.J., La Homiletica Mariana Griega en el Siglo V (Marian Library Studies, N.S., iii–v; Dayton, Ohio, 1971–3). Periodicals include Marianist (Dayton, Ohio, 1905 ff. [suspended 1922–6]), Marianum (Rome, 1939 ff.), Marian Studies (Paterson, N.J., 1950 ff.), Ephemerides Mariologicae (Madrid, 1951 ff.). A. J. Maas, S.J., in C.E., xv (1912), pp. 464–72, s.v. 'Virgin Mary, The Blessed'; H. Thurston, S.J., ib., pp. 459–64, s.v. 'Virgin Mary, Devotion to the'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1982–2043, s.v. 'Marie, Mère de Dieu'; C. P. Ceroke and others in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 335–86, s.v. 'Mary, Blessed Virgin'. See also works cited under Assumption, Immaculate Conception, and other feasts.

MARY, Gospel of. An apocryphal *Gnostic Gospel. Two pages of the original Greek survive in a 3rd cent. *Oxyrhynchus papyrus, now in the John Rylands Library, Manchester (Pap. Ryl. III. 463). An incomplete papyrus MS. of the 5th cent. in Berlin (Pap. 8502) contains some eight pages (out of a total of eighteen) of a *Coptic (Sahidic) translation. In the Gospel *Mary [Magdalene] describes a vision in which the progress of the Gnostic through the seven planetary spheres is explained.

Greek. text ed. by C. H. Roberts in his Catalogue of the Greek and Latin Papyri in the John Rylands Library Manchester, iii (Manchester, 1938), pp. 18–23, incl. Eng. tr. and notes. Copic text ed., with Germ. tr. and introd., by W. Till, Die gnostischen Schriften des koptischen Papyrus Berolinensis 8502 (T.U., lx; 1955), pp. 24–32 and 62–79; Eng. tr. in R. M. Grant, Gnosticism (1961), pp. 65–8. H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 251–5; Eng. tr., i, pp. 340–44.

MARY, Gospel of the Birth of. An apocryphal book containing a narrative of the birth of the BVM to St. *Joachim and St. *Anne, her life in the Temple from the age of 3 to 12 years, her betrothal to St. *Joseph, the *Annunciation, and the *Virgin Birth of Christ. It is a Latin work of the Middle Ages, though in a preface sometimes attached to it it is attributed to St. *Jerome, who is stated to have composed it after a Hebrew original. Its compiler drew largely on the canonical Gospels and other sources, esp. the Book of *James (the 'Protevangelium').

The text is taken over almost bodily in the '*Golden Legend' (q.v.). Crit. ed. by C. *Tischendorf (ed.), Evangelia Apocrypha (ed. 2, Leipzig, 1876), pp. 113–21. Brief summary of contents in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), p. 79 f. Bardenhewer, i, p. 536 f.

MARY OF EGYPT, St. (5th cent.), penitent. She was the subject of many elaborate and widely popular legends. After a career of infamy at Alexandria as an actress and courtesan, she is said to have been converted on the threshold of the Holy Sepulchre at *Jerusalem and fled to the desert east of Palestine to expiate her sins. Here she is recorded to have lived a life of complete isolation for forty-seven years, and then made the acquaintance of a priest, Zosimus, who gave her communion and prepared her for death. Feast day in the E., 5th Sunday in Lent (also 1 Apr.); in the W., 2 (also 3 and 9) Apr.

The earliest account of St. Mary of Egypt is in *Cyril of Scythopolis' 'Life of St. Cyriacus'. This material was developed in legendary fashion by *Sophronius of Jerusalem (7th cent.). AA.SS., Apr. I (1675), pp. 67–90, with Gk. text, pp. xiii–xxi (of which Lat. tr., pp. 76–82). F. Delmas, 'Remarques sur la vie de Ste Marie l'Égyptienne' in É.O., iv (1900–1), pp. 35–42; id., 'Encore Ste Marie l'Égyptienne', ib., v (1901–2), pp. 15–17. A. T. Baker, 'Vie de Sainte Marie l'Égyptienne' in Revue des langues romanes, lix (1916–17), pp. 145–401. 13th cent. life by Rutebeuf ed., with introd. on the legend, by B. A. Bujila (University of Michigan Contributions in Modern Philology, xii; Ann Arbor, 1949). K. Kunze, Studien zur Legende der heiligen Maria Aegyptiaca im deutschen Sprachgebiet (Philologische Studien und Quellen, xlix; 1969), esp. ch. 1. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2128–36, s.v. 'Marie l'Égyptienne', with bibl.

MARY OF THE INCARNATION, Blessed (1566–1618). See Acarie, Madame.

MARY OF THE INCARNATION, Ven. (1599–1672). See Guyard, Marie.

MARY MAGDALENE, St. A follower of Christ out of whom He is said to have cast 'seven devils' and who ministered to Him in Galilee (Lk. 8. 2). Later she stood by His cross at the Crucifixion (Mk. 15. 40), with two other women discovered the empty tomb and heard the angelic announcement of His *Resurrection (Mk. 16. 1 ff., &c.), and was granted an appearance of the Risen Christ early on the same day (Mt. 28. 9, Jn. 20. 11 ff.). From early times she has been identified with the 'woman which was a sinner' who anointed Christ's feet in Simon's house (Lk. 7. 37), and with Mary the sister of *Martha, who also anointed Him (Jn. 12. 3); but the Gospels give no real support to either identification and they have now been abandoned by the RC Church. Acc. to early legend in the E. Church, St. Mary Magdalene went to *Ephesus with St. *John and died there, whence her body was later taken to *Constantinople. In the W. a very popular but late and quite unfounded legend had arisen by the 9th cent. that she, with Martha and *Lazarus, came to the south of France by sea, and in the Middle Ages her supposed tomb was venerated at Aix-en-Provence. Feast day, 22 July.

Popular modern lives include those of H. D. *Lacordaire (Paris, 1860; Eng. tr., 1880), Edith Olivier (London, 1934), V. McNabb, O.P. (ib., 1940), and R. Buckberger, O.P. (Paris [1952]; Eng. tr., 1954). [E. M. Faillon (ed.)], Monuments inédits sur l'apostolat de sainte Marie-Madeleine en Provence et les autres apôtres de cette contrée (publd. by J. P. *Migne, 2 vols., 1848); C. Chabaneau (ed.), Sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature provençale. Recueil des textes provençaux en prose et en vers relatifs à cette sainte (1887). Classic studies by J. *Faber Stapulensis (Paris, 1517 and 1519). AA.SS., Jul. V (1727), pp. 187–225. M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., 'Jésus a-t-il été oint plusieurs fois et par plusieurs femmes?' in R. Bibl., N.S., ix (1912), pp. 504–32. U. Holzmeister, S.J., 'Die Magdalenfrage in der kirchlichen Überlieferung' in Z.K.T., xlvi (1922), pp. 402–22 and 556–84. J. Sickenberger, 'Ist die Magdalen-Frage wirklich unlösbar?' in Biblische Zeitschrift, xvii (1926), pp. 63–74. Helen M. Garth, Saint Mary Magdalen in Mediaeval Literature (Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science. Series xlvii, No. 3; 1950). N. Hansel, Die Maria-Magdalena-Legende (Greifswalder Beiträge zur Literatur- und Stilforschung, xvi, Hft. 1; 1937). V. Saxer, Le Culte de Marie Madeleine en occident des origines à la fin du moyen âge (Cahiers d'archéologie et d'histoire, iii; 1959); cf. B. de Gaffier, S.J., in Anal. Boll., lxxviii (1960), pp. 161–8. For other works on the legend of her connexion with S. France, see bibl. to Martha, St. V. Saxer in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, viii (Rome, 1967), cols. 1078–1104, s.v. 'Maria Maddalena', with extensive bibl. See also commentaries to Gospels.

MARY MAGDALENE DE' PAZZI, St. (1566–1607), *Carmelite mystic. Born of a noble family of Florence, she entered the Carmelite convent in her native town in 1582 and was professed during a grave illness two years later. In 1598 she was made novice-mistress and later subprioress. During the first years after her profession she was severely tried by spiritual desolation, temptations, and physical sufferings, but from 1590 her life became a series of ecstasies during which she often gave spiritual counsels which were taken down by her fellow-nuns and published after her death. She was an ardent believer in the value of suffering for the spiritual life and the salvation of souls, and the last three years of her life were spent bedridden in constant pain and often in great spiritual aridity. She was canonized in 1669. Feast day, 29 May.

Works ed. L. M. Brancaccius, Florence, 1609; modern ed. under the direction of F. Nardoni (7 vols., Florence, 1960 ff.). Early lives in Italian by V. Puccini, Carmelite, her last confessor (first draft written in 1609; final version publd. Florence, 1621), and V. Cepari, S.J., also her confessor (written c. 1626; first publd., Rome, 1669); both translated into Lat. and pr., with introd. and other material, in AA.SS., Mai. VI (1688), pp. 177–351; Eng. tr. of life by V. Cepari in the series 'The Saints and Servants of God' (ed. F. W. *Faber, 1849). Modern studies by M. Vaussard ('Les Saints', 1925), Sister Maria Minima di Gesù Sacramentato, O. Carm. (Florence, 1941; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1958), and E. Ancilli, O.C.D. (Rome, 1967). Pourrat, iii, pp. 349–51 and 369–73.

MARY MAJOR, Church of St. See Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome.

MARY, Queen of Scots (1542–87). She was the only child of James V, who died when she was a few days old, leaving her heiress to the throne of Scotland, of which she was crowned Queen in 1543. Her mother was Mary of Lorraine (or 'Mary of Guise', 1515–60). In 1548 she was sent to France for her education, and in 1558 married to the Dauphin Francis, becoming Queen Consort in 1559. After the early death of Francis (1560) she returned to Scotland (1561), where J. *Knox and his followers introduced the Reformation and thus stirred up bitter hatred against the RC Church. Mary had a series of stormy interviews with Knox, but he remained impervious to her arguments as well as her charm. In other quarters her policy of moderation won her many adherents, though it disappointed her Catholic subjects as well as the Pope. In 1565 she married her cousin Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley. The match was approved both by the Pope and *Philip of Spain, and by Darnley she became the mother of the future James VI of Scotland (*James I of England) in 1566. In 1566 Darnley instigated the murder of Mary's secretary, David Rizzio, of whom he had become jealous. This murder caused her complete estrangement from Darnley, who, in 1567, was assassinated by James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, who had become her favourite. In the same year Bothwell obtained a divorce from his wife and married Mary, after he had been tried for the murder of Darnley but found not guilty by judges who are generally held not to have been impartial. This marriage, which was concluded acc. to the Protestant rite, was denounced by the Pope and opposed by most European courts. How far she was implicated in the murder of Darnley is still disputed; the verdict depends chiefly on the contested authenticity of the so-called Casket Letters, purporting to have been written by Mary to Bothwell. Soon after this third marriage the Protestant lords rose against her, defeated her army at Carberry Hill, and imprisoned her in Lochleven Castle. Bothwell, whom she refused to give up, fled to Denmark; the rebellious lords established Protestantism as the religion of the country and suppressed Catholicism. In 1567 Mary signed her abdication and James VI was crowned king. In 1568 she escaped from Lochleven and raised an army, but was once more defeated at Langside. She fled to England, where she was imprisoned and tried by a commission, which produced the Casket Letters against her with a series of the most humiliating accusations against which she refused to defend herself. The commission of peers gave an open verdict, stating that nothing derogatory to her had been proved. This verdict restored her reputation, which had been gravely injured by the Bothwell marriage, and *Pius V wrote her a conciliatory letter. *Elizabeth I, however, who, on account of the legally ambiguous circumstances of her own birth, feared for the security of her throne as long as Mary was at liberty, continued to hold her in close captivity. There was a proposal, supported by the Catholic powers, to have her marriage with Bothwell annulled, to enable her to marry the Duke of Norfolk; but when a Catholic uprising in the north failed, the scheme came to nothing and Norfolk was executed (1572). For the next 14 years Mary was held a prisoner, guarded first by the Earl of Shrewsbury and later by Sir Amias Paulet. Her secret correspondence was watched by spies, and an unguarded letter, written in 1586, which implicated her in the Babington Plot, brought about her condemnation. She met her death at Fotheringay on 8 Feb. 1587 with great courage.

A. Labanoff, Lettres, instructions, et mémoires de Marie Stuart (7 vols., 1844); A. Teulet, Lettres de Marie Stuart (1859); Calendar of State Papers, Scotland. Modern rendering of the contemporary hostile account of the reign by George Buchanan (1506–82) by W. A. Gatherer (Edinburgh, 1958). J. H. Pollen, S.J., Papal Negotiations with Mary, Queen of Scots, etc. (Scot. Hist. Soc., xxxvii; 1901); id., A Letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, to the Duke of Guise (ib., xliii; 1904); id., Mary, Queen of Scots, and the Babington Plot (ib., 3rd Ser., iii; 1922). Modern studies by D. Hay Fleming (London, 1897), T. F. Henderson (2 vols., ib., 1905), F. Edwards, S.J. (ib., 1964), and Antonia Fraser (ib., 1969), with extensive bibl. On the Casket Letters controversy, W. Goodall, Examination of the Letters said to be written by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Bothwell (2 vols., 1754); T. F. Henderson, The Casket Letters (1890); A. Lang, The Mystery of Mary Stuart (1904); M. H. Armstrong Davison, The Casket Letters. A Solution to the Mystery of Mary Queen of Scots and the Murder of Lord Darnley (1965); G. Donaldson, The First Trial of Mary, Queen of Scots (1969). S. A. Tannenbaum–D. R. Tannenbaum, Marie Stuart, Queen of Scots (A Concise Bibliography) (Elizabethan Bibliographies, xxx–xxxii; New York, 1944–6). T. F. Henderson in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 373–90.

MARY TUDOR (1516–58), Queen of England from 1553. The daughter of *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, she was betrothed to the Dauphin of France in 1518, and in 1522 by the Treaty of Windsor to the Emp. *Charles V, who, however, married a Portuguese princess in 1526. The disgrace and unhappiness of her mother and the subsequent separation made a deep impression on her. In 1532 she was sent to Richmond, and, during Anne Boleyn's life and some time afterwards, she was in disfavour. She was excluded from the succession at the birth of *Elizabeth (1533), regarded as the King's bastard, and placed in the humiliating position of lady-in-waiting to Anne Boleyn's daughter. In 1536 she signed a document acknowledging Henry's religious supremacy and the illegitimacy of her mother's marriage, and so was received back into favour, under the influence of Jane Seymour. In 1537 she was godmother to the future *Edward VI, and during the next years lived quietly in retirement. After Henry's last marriage she was on affectionate terms with Catherine Parr, and in 1544 was given the second place in the succession, after Edward, during whose reign she continued to live in obscurity. She made a courageous stand against the demand of the Protector *Somerset that she should give up her chaplain and conform to the Established Church.

On Edward's death (1553) Mary became Queen, despite an effort of a small Protestant group to put Lady Jane Grey in her place. Her accession was welcomed with enthusiasm by the supporters of the old religion, and, acting on the advice of the Emperor, she at first showed leniency to her Protestant opponents though proscribing their religion. She was crowned by Stephen *Gardiner, Bp. of *Winchester, and soon afterwards betrothed to *Philip II of Spain despite the opposition of Parliament. In 1554 she displayed great courage in quelling Thomas Wyatt's plot, and resolved to rule henceforth with greater sternness. Among the many victims of the persecution following the plot were Jane Grey and her husband; and Elizabeth, who had possibly been implicated, was committed to the Tower. In July 1554 Philip landed in England, but the marriage proved a failure and was disliked by the people. Early in 1555 R. *Pole, who had arrived in England at the end of 1554, reconciled the country to the Papacy. In the same year Gardiner had the heresy laws and the Bishops' Courts restored, and the trials for heresy began, the steadfastness of the condemned greatly serving the cause of Protestantism. This persecution and her inability to have children lost her the affection of her people; Philip returned to the Continent; and in 1555 Mary also lost Gardiner, her trusted Chancellor. In 1555–6 T. *Cranmer, H. *Latimer, N. *Ridley, J. *Hooper, and others were burned as heretics; and new conspiracies, with Elizabeth at their centre, were discovered and severely quelled. In 1557 further measures were adopted against heretics; Philip, needing English aid against France, temporarily returned to the Queen; and war was declared on France in June, the French being defeated at St.-Quentin. But in 1558 Calais fell, a blow which severely damaged Mary's remaining prestige. From this time her health began to fail, and she died at St. James's Palace on 17 Nov. 1558.

P. F. Tytler, England under the Reigns of Edward VI and Mary, ii (1839), pp. 186–500. Modern lives by J. M. Stone (London, 1901), B. White (ib., 1935), and H. F. M. Prescott (ib., 1940), with bibl. J. D. Mackie, The Early Tudors, 1485–1558 (The Oxford History of England, vii; 1952), pp. 526–61. D. M. Loades, The Reign of Mary Tudor (1979). S. Lee in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 333–54.

MARYS IN THE NT. Besides (1) the Virgin *Mary and (2) St. *Mary Magdalene, there are four (or perhaps three) others. These are (3) 'The wife of Cleopas' (Jn. 19. 25), who stood by the Cross. Some have identified her with '[Christ's] mother's sister', who is mentioned immediately before, but different women are probably meant. (4) 'The mother of James and Joses' (Mk. 15. 40), who stood by the Cross and was a witness of the Empty Tomb (Mk. 16. 1). She may well be the same as (3); and if this is so, her sons *James and Joses may be identified with the *Brethren of the Lord of those names. (5) Mary of Bethany, the sister of *Martha and *Lazarus (Jn. 11. 1 ff.), who sat at Christ's feet when he visited their village (Lk. 10. 38 ff.). Acc. to Jn. 12. 1–3, during the last week of the Lord's life she 'anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with the hair of her head'. She has, particularly in the liturgy, been identified with Mary Magdalene (q.v.). (6) 'The mother of John *Mark' (Acts 12. 12).

MASKELL, WILLIAM (c. 1814–90), ecclesiastical antiquary. Educated at University College, Oxford, he became an extreme High Churchman and took holy orders in 1837. His two books, The Ancient Liturgy of the Church of England (1844) and Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae (1846), were important contributions to the revival of liturgical studies in the C of E. As chaplain to H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of Exeter, Maskell conducted the examination of G. C. *Gorham when the latter was presented to the vicarage of Brampford Speke; and the issue of the case led Maskell to secede to the Church of Rome in 1850. He never received Roman ordination, but devoted himself to antiquarian studies and public service in Cornwall.

J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), p. 413 f., s.v.

MASON, FRANCIS (1566–1621), Archdeacon of Norfolk. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and later had connexions with Merton and Brasenose Colleges. His best-known writing was his Of the Consecration of the Bishops in the C of E (1613), written with the encouragement of Abp. G. *Abbot in refutation of the recently fabricated *Nag's Head Fable. Composed in dialogue form and in an entertaining style and drawing on the records of *Lambeth Palace, it sought to establish the validity of the consecration esp. of M. *Parker. In reply to several attacks by RC writers, Mason revised and enlarged the work, and in this form it was reissued posthumously in a Latin translation by N. Brent in 1625. Its spirited defence of the C of E against Rome procured for him the title 'Vindex Ecclesiae Anglicanae'.

A. Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), ii (1815), cols. 305–8. B. Porter in D.N.B., xxxvi (1893), pp. 417–19.

MASS (Lat. missa). A title of the *Eucharist (q.v.). The word is a late form of missio (cf. late Lat. ascensa for ascensio, collecta for collectio), itself derived from mittere, 'to send'. (The older attempts to trace it back to a Heb. root may safely be dismissed.) St. *Avitus of Vienne (c. 500) refers to its use, in churches and in the law courts, for the dismissal of the people (ep. 1 to Gundobald, PL, lix, 199). The same use is attested by St. *Isidore of Seville (Etymol., VI. xix. 4). But the word had long been current also for the service from which the people were dismissed. St. *Ambrose (ep. 20; PL, xvi, 995) already applies to the Eucharist the expression 'missam facere' ('to perform the Mass'). The term was also used (less commonly) of other services, e.g., in the Rule of St. *Benedict, of the Divine Office. In the present Roman Rite, '*Ite, missa est' remains the regular form of dismissal at the end of Mass. The word was retained by T. *Cranmer in the 1549 BCP ('The Supper of the Lord and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass'), but disappeared from later editions. In modern times it has come to be associated with the doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice and in the C of E its use as a title of the Eucharist was revived by High Churchmen.

J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte des Wortes Missa' in Z.K.T., lxiv (1940), pp. 26–37. A. Pagliaro, 'Da missa est a missa "messa" ' in Atti della Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, Serie Ottava, Rendiconti. Classe di Scienze morale, storiche e filologiche, x (1955), pp. 104–35. Christine Mohrmann, 'Missa' in V.C., xii (1958), pp. 67–92, repr. in her Études sur le latin des Chrétiens, iii (1965), pp. 351–76. Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 230–33 (Eng. tr., i, 1951, pp. 173–5). A. *Fortescue in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 790–2, s.v. 'Mass, Liturgy of the. A Name and Definition'.

MASS, Music for the. Those parts of the service sung by the choir or congregation (known as the concentus*) may be divided into the chants for (1) the Ordinary of the Mass (the Kyrie, Gloria in excelsis*, Creed, Sanctus and Benedictus*, Agnus Dei* and Ite Missa est*) in which the words are always the same; and (2) the *Propers, in which the words vary acc. to the occasion. These have traditionally comprised the *Introit, *Gradual (replaced in the 1970 Missal by a *responsorial Psalm), *Offertory (dropped in 1970) and *Communion Anthem. The Gradual used to be followed by *Alleluia and a verse, replaced on Sundays in Lent and certain penitential days by a *Tract (verses of a Psalm); since 1970 the Alleluia has been sung after the second Biblical reading and immediately before the Gospel. *Sequences were common in the Middle Ages but their number was drastically reduced at the Council of *Trent and has been still further curtailed in recent years.

The oldest chant for the Ordinary is little more than an inflective recitative corresponding to that used in the accentus* (or parts of the Mass sung by the officiant), and the Ite missa est usually repeated the melody of the Kyrie. With the growth of polyphony from the 11th cent. onwards compositions for two or more voices began to appear. In the early 15th cent. the Sanctus and Agnus occur with a common musical arrangement, to be followed shortly by Gloria–Credo pairs, and later in the 15th cent. a complete series (or 'Mass-cycle') became common. England and France seem to have been in the van of this development, except that in England the Kyrie was not usually included. In the earliest examples the Gregorian chant forms a substratum of the composition, occurring as a canto fermo for one of the voices. The full development of polyphony in the 16th cent. led to the composition of very elaborate settings, such as those of G. P. *Palestrina and W. *Byrd. In the 18th cent. orchestral settings became popular on the Continent and eventually led to the introduction of music ostensibly designed for the Mass into the concert-hall. After the Reformation some of the choral parts of the Mass were preserved in Latin in the *Lutheran Church and it was for liturgical use that J. S. *Bach originally composed parts of his Mass settings. At about this time it became customary to divide the liturgical texts (esp. the Gloria in excelsis and the Creed) into a series of separate musical numbers, in order to provide a variety of movement; this practice continued in the RC Church until it was forbidden by *Pius X in 1903. As the music was elaborated it became increasingly divorced from the words of the liturgical texts and the Sanctus grew so long that it was often not completed by the time the celebrant reached the consecration; it then became usual to postpone the Benedictus until after the consecration. Against this background, the proponents of the *Liturgical Movement encouraged the revival of plainchant. In recent years, and esp. since the Second *Vatican Council, there has been increased emphasis on the need for music in which the congregation can take part.

The translation of the liturgy into the vernacular in England in the 16th cent. created a need for new musical settings to fit the new text, and these were provided by a succession of English composers such as J. *Merbecke, Orlando Gibbons (1583–1625), C. V. Stanford (1852–1924) and R. Vaughan *Williams (1872–1958). The use of musical settings for the Eucharist in the C of E, however, was largely confined to cathedral and *collegiate churches until the 19th cent., when the *Oxford Movement led to the introduction of *High Mass into parish churches, where the settings of Merbecke have been widely used. The recent modern-language liturgies have led to the composition of new musical settings, mostly designed for congregational singing, e.g. that of John Rutter.

P. Wagner, Geschichte der Messe, i. Bis 1600 (Leipzig, 1913 [all published]). O. Ursprung, Die katholische Kirchenmusik (Potsdam, 1931). W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958]. A. Hughes, O.S.B., 'The Enrichment of the Gregorian Cycle. Notes on the Music of the Ordinarium Missae' in Laudate, xxi (1943), pp. 78–85, xxii (1944), pp. 41–47. E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941; ed. 5 by J. A. Westrup, 1969). W. H. *Frere–H. C. Colles in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), v (1954), pp. 617–20, s.v. B. Stäbelin and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, ix (1961), cols. 147–218, s.v. 'Messe', with further bibl.

MASS OF THE CATECHUMENS. See Catechumens, Mass of the.

MASS OF THE FAITHFUL. See Faithful, Mass of the.

'MASSA CANDIDA' ('White Lump'). See Utica, The Martyrs of.

MASSILLON, JEAN-BAPTISTE (1663–1742), French *Oratorian preacher. A native of Hyères in Provence, he joined the Oratory in 1681, was ordained priest in 1691, and in 1696 was appointed by L. A. *de Noailles, Abp. of *Paris, Director of the Seminary of St.-Magloire at Paris. From 1699 he often preached before Louis XIV (who voiced the mot that whereas hitherto he had been very well satisfied with his preachers, after hearing Massillon he was very ill-satisfied with himself). In 1717 he was nominated Bp. of Clermont (consecrated 1718) and in 1719 became a Member of the Academy. He was one of the foremost preachers of a great generation, much respected even by leaders of the *Enlightenment (Voltaire, J. Le R. *d'Alembert). If his classical style fell short of the sublimity of J.-B. *Bossuet, his sermons were marked by unsurpassed brilliance, colour, and vehemence and he was unrivalled as a preacher of moral seriousness. Among his most celebrated sermons were the discourse 'On the Fewness of the Elect' (1704) and his series of *Lent sermons ('Le Petit Carême') delivered before Louis XV in 1718. He preached the funeral orations of C. de N. de Villeroy, Abp. of Lyons (1693), of Louis XIV 'le Grand' (1715; which began Dieu seul est grand) and of Liselotte of the Palatinate, Duchess of Orleans (1723). He spent his last twenty years in the devoted service of his diocese.

Sermons ed. by Joseph Massillon, Cong. Orat. (nephew), in 15 vols. (Paris, 1745–9); later ed. of his Œuvres complètes by E. A. Blampignon (Bar-le-Duc, 3 vols., 1865–7). M. A. Bayle, Massillon, étude historique et littéraire (1867). E. A. Blampignon, Vie de Massillon d'après des documents inédits (1879); id., L'Épiscopat de Massillon (1884); id., Massillon. Supplément à son histoire et à sa correspondance (1891); J. Janin, Massillon et l'éloquence de la chaire (1882); A. A. L. Pauthe, Massillon (1908). Other studies by J. de la Porte (Paris, 1820), A. Laurent (Tours, 1870) and F. Brunetière (Paris, 1882). Shorter works by E. Chazel (Paris, 1874), B. Attaix (Toulouse, 1882), and G. Chabert (Montauban, 1890). A. M. P. Ingold, L'Oratoire et le jansénisme au temps de Massillon (1880). S. J. Washington in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 435 f., s.v.

MASSORETES (from Heb. מסרת, Mas(s)oreth, prob. 'tradition'), Jewish grammarians who worked on the Hebrew text of the OT between about the 6th and 10th cents. A.D. There appear to have been two main centres of Massoretic activity, the Eastern (or Babylonian) and the Western (or Palestinian), of which the latter eventually gained the supremacy; the text of the Palestinian Massoretes thus finally became the recognized text form. In their endeavours to preserve a Biblical text free from accretion, alteration or corruption, the Massoretes provided marginal notes, which sometimes preserve careful reproductions of irregularities, and detailed instructions for copyists. They also provided at the end of the text alphabetical classifications of the Massoretic material (known as massorah finalis), which constituted a kind of commentary and were likewise intended to act as a 'hedge' to the text; these later came to be printed at the end of Rabbinic Bibles. Among the best known aspects of the work of the Massoretes was their introduction into the text of the OT of *vowel points and accents, which were intended to show how words should be pronounced at a time when Hebrew was becoming less and less a spoken language. The system was based on the pronunciation of the Synagogues and Schools. The text which derives from the work of the Massoretes is known as the 'Massoretic text'.

C. D. Ginsburg (ed.), The Massorah compiled from MSS. (4 vols. in 3, 1880–1905). Modern scholars now hold that the Massorah is not and never existed as an independent corpus, but that it was essentially associated with a given text form. Thus the Leningrad MS. B.19a had its own Massorah; this has been edited by G. Weil in the new edition of the Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia by K. Elliger–W. Rudolph (Stuttgart, [1978]), and the Hebrew University Bible Project, based on the Aleppo codex, will contain the Massorah, magna and parva, as well as the text (cf. The Book of Isaiah, Sample Edition with introd. by M. H. Goshen-Gottstein, Jerusalem, 1965). The classic study is J. Buxtorf (the elder), Tiberias sive Commentarius Masorethicus Triplex (Basle, 1620). C. D. Ginsburg, Introduction to the Massoretico-Critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible (1897; repr. with prolegomenon by H. M. Orlinsky, New York, 1966). C. D. Ginsburg (ed.), Jacob ben Chajim's Introduction to the Rabbinic Bible (1865); id. (ed.), The Massoreth ha-Massoreth of Elias Levita (1867); these two works are repr. with prolegomenon by N. H. Snaith (New York, 1968); R. Butin (ed.), The Ten Nequdoth of the Torah (Baltimore, 1906; repr. with prolegomenon by S. Talmon, New York, 1969). S. Frensdorff, Die Massora Magna, i. Massoretisches Wörterbuch (Hannover–Leipzig, 1876; repr. with prolegomenon by G. E. Weil, New York, 1968). W. Wickes, A Treatise on the Accentuation of the Three so-called Poetical Books of the Old Testament, Psalms, Proverbs, and Job (Oxford, 1881); id., A Treatise on the Accentuation of the Twenty-One so-called Prose Books of the Old Testament (ib., 1887); these last two works were repr. with prolegomenon by A. Dotan (New York, 1970). P. Kahle, Der masoretische Text des Alten Testaments nach der Überlieferung der babylonischen Juden (1902); id., Masoreten des Ostens (1913); id., Masoreten des Westens (2 vols., 1927–30). G. E. Weil, Élie Lévita, humaniste et massorète (Studia Post-Biblica, vii; Leiden, 1963); id., Initiation à la Massorah. L'Introduction au Sépher Zikhronot d'Élie Lévjta (Leiden, 1964). Textus. Annual of the Hebrew University Bible Project (Jerusalem, 1965 ff.). A. Dotan in Encyclopedia Judaica, xvi (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1401–82, with detailed bibl.

MASTER OF MISRULE. See Misrule, Lord of.

MASTER OF THE SENTENCES, The (Lat. Magister Sententiarum). A title in use from the 12th cent. onwards for *Peter Lombard (d. c. 1160) on account of the central place which his 'Libri Sententiarum' occupied as a textbook in the medieval schools.

MATER ET MAGISTRA. The encyclical letter issued by Pope John XXIII 'On Recent Developments of the Social Question in the Light of Christian Teaching'. It was dated 15 May 1961 to commemorate the 70th anniversary of Rerum Novarum, but it was not published until 15 July of that year.

Text in A.A.S., liii (1961), pp. 401–64. J. N. Moody–J. G. Lawler, The Challenge of Mater et Magistra (New York [1963]); J.-Y. Calvez, S.J., Église et société économique (1963; Eng. tr. [1964]); J. F. Cronin, S.S., Christianity and Social Progress. A Commentary on Mater et Magistra (Baltimore–Dublin [1965]).

MATERIAL SIN. An action which though in itself ('materially') contrary to the Divine law is not culpable, because the agent acted either in ignorance (e.g. when someone takes another's property, believing it to be his own) or under external constraint. It is contrasted with '*Formal Sin' (q.v.).

MATHEW, ARNOLD HARRIS (1853–1919), *Old Catholic bishop. Educated for the Anglican ministry, he was ordained priest in the RC Church in 1878; but in 1892 he lost his status by a marriage and later was allowed to officiate in the C of E with the sanction of Abp. F. *Temple. On 28 Apr. 1908 he received episcopal consecration at Utrecht from the Dutch Old Catholic Church as their Archbishop in Great Britain. In 1910, however, he was repudiated by the Dutch Old Catholics on the ground that his consecration had been obtained under a misconception of the extent of his following in England (which appears to have been virtually non-existent). He continued to describe himself as 'Archbishop of the London Area' and (later) as 'Archbishop and Metropolitan of the English Catholic Church', and left irregular episcopal successions (see Episcopi Vagantes) which were repudiated by the *Lambeth Conference of 1920. See also Old Catholics.

A. H. Mathew, An Episcopal Odyssey. An Open Letter to His Grace the Right Hon. and Most Rev. Randall Thomas Davidson, D.D. . . . (privately printed, Kingsdown, Kent, 1915), with documents. H. R. T. Brandreth, O.G.S., Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (1947), pp. 12–30, with bibl. p. 71 f.

MATHURINS. Another name for members of the *Trinitarian Order (q.v.), founded for the redemption of Christian captives in 1198 by St. *John of Matha.

MATILDA OF MAGDEBURG, St. See Mechtild of Magdeburg, St.

MATINS. See Mattins.

MATRIMONY. The Christian conception of marriage, though it claims to be based on the natural law, differs sharply from earlier practice, whether Jewish or pagan, and also from modern secular usage, notably in the equality it gives to the woman and the indissolubility it ascribes to the marriage bond.

Early Hebrew law, which was founded on marriage by purchase, assigned a low status to the woman, who became in effect the property of her husband, though he could not sell her (Ex. 21. 7 f.). The woman could neither own nor inherit property and had no rights of divorce, while the man might divorce her for some 'uncleanness' (Deut. 24. 1). Polygamy was practised, sometimes with the consent of the wife, as in the case of Sarah (Gen. 16. 2), that the bond might be preserved, but in later Judaism there was a growing realization that monogamy represented the ideal.

Roman matrimonial practice was in many ways more influential in the formation of Christian doctrine. Though under the Empire divorce was readily available to both parties, the jurist Modestinus could define marriage as 'a life-long partnership, and a sharing of civil and religious rights' (consortium omnis vitae, divini et humani iuris communicatio, L. I, Dig. xxiii. 2), while the legal commonplace that it was not consummation but consent that made a marriage was equally agreeable to Christian belief. One part of Roman law, however, that there could be no marriage between bond and free, was repugnant to Christian sentiment and set aside in the 3rd century.

In His teaching about matrimony the Lord was concerned to restore it to its original place in God's plan, and therefore abrogated the Mosaic toleration of divorce (Mt. 5. 31 f., 19. 3–9; Mk. 10. 2–12; Lk. 16. 18) and condemned remarriage. The 'Matthean exception' permitting remarriage (19. 9), which conflicts with the other Gospels, the rest of the NT and the general tradition of the W. Church, is perhaps to be understood as an early gloss to render the Christian law easier. In Rom. 7. 2 f. and 1 Cor. 7. 10–14 St. *Paul reasserts the Lord's teaching, while in Eph. 5. 22–33 he brings in a new aspect, comparing the union with the relation between Christ and His Church. Like St. *Peter (1 Pet. 3. 1–7) he assigns the governance of the household to the husband, but emphasizes the duty of love towards the wife, who is an equal partner (1 Cor. 7. 3 f.). In 1 Cor. 7. 15 he states the '*Pauline Privilege', i.e. that where there had been a marriage between unbaptized, a partner who has been converted is not bound by the marriage bond if the unbelieving partner deserts by reason of the conversion. This principle has been developed in RC moral theology (CIC, 1120–7) and has on occasion been greatly widened.

While matrimony is exhibited in the NT as a wholly honourable estate, virginity is more highly commended (Mt. 19. 10–12, 1 Cor. 7, passim). A passage in the Apocalypse ('these are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins', Rev. 14. 4) is out of harmony with the rest of the NT and has not influenced the main stream of Christian belief; it bears signs of *Encratite influence.

The preface to the Marriage Service in the BCP aptly sums up the ends of marriage. It defines its purposes as the procreation of children, the avoidance of sin, and mutual society. The first of these, traditionally understood as the prime end, demands that the good of the children (bonum prolis) be put before all other considerations. This has led many Christian moralists to repudiate all methods of family limitation. The 'avoidance of sin', though founded on Scripture (1 Cor. 7. 2, 9), derives chiefly from the teaching of St. *Augustine, who concentrated on the negative aspects of the union and did not see in matrimony a means of grace. The reluctance of the BCP to entitle it a Sacrament (though it is so called in the *Homilies; 'Hom. against Swearing and Perjury, Part i') arises from the same hesitation of theologians to recognize as such a rite which did not appear to be manifestly productive of grace. But it was already reckoned a Sacrament by *Hincmar of Reims (d. 882), and from St. *Thomas Aquinas onwards the Schoolmen taught that it conferred grace. Its sacramental status is usually deduced from Eph. 5. 22–33, esp. 5. 32. Matrimony is accounted peculiar among the sacraments in that the parties themselves are ministers, the priest being only the appointed witness.

It was only in the 11th cent. that the claim of the Church to exclusive jurisdiction over matrimonial cases was conceded. The Reformation in England did not affect this, and the first breach with Canon Law was effected by Lord *Hardwicke's Marriage Act of 1753 (26 Geo. II, cap. 35), concerning clandestine marriages, and more notably by the Marriage Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Will. IV, cap. 85) establishing civil marriage. In 1857 the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act (20 & 21 Vict., cap. 85) abolished the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, and also allowed divorce a vinculo for adultery when allied to cruelty or desertion (hitherto it had been available only by Act of Parliament). This was modified by the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. V, cap. 19), granting divorce for adultery only, and that of 1937 (1 Edw. VIII & 1 Geo. VI, cap. 57), which widened the grounds of divorce to include desertion, cruelty and insanity. By the Divorce Reform Act of 1969 (17 & 18 Eliz. II, cap. 55) the 'irretrievable breakdown' of marriage became the sole ground of divorce. The old grounds of adultery, cruelty and desertion usually suffice to prove 'irretrievable breakdown', but the Act also provides that the parties may divorce by consent if they have been living apart for two years and that, if they have been separated for five years, there may be a divorce in spite of the objections of one of the spouses.

Civil legislation has not affected the belief of the Church, both Roman Catholics and Anglicans maintaining that indissolubility is of divine institution. Suits of nullity (i.e. to obtain a declaration that there has been no true marriage) are allowed on various grounds by RC courts. In the Orthodox Church divorce was already formally tolerated in Byzantine times and it is still recognized.

The principle that any Christian man or woman may marry has naturally been subjected to limitation (see Affinity). The lifelong character of Christian marriage prohibits bigamy, which was made a felony in England in 1604 (it is now classed as a misdemeanour). The minimum age for marriage, which has varied, was fixed by the Age of Marriage Act of 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. V, cap. 36) at 16 for both parties, marriage below this age being void. The various restrictions are divided by RC Canon Law into impedient and *diriment impediments (q.v.).

As the Church took over the Roman view of marriage as the consent of the parties a certain publicity has always been required. Apart from the period 1753–1823 English civil law has accepted the teaching of the canonists that clandestine marriages are valid but irregular (for RC Canon Law on this subject, see Ne Temere). The necessary publicity is secured by the publishing of *banns on three Sundays in the parishes of residence of both parties, and the celebration of marriage in one or the other (since the Marriage Measure of 1930 marriage may be celebrated in the usual place of worship of one party). Marriage may also be celebrated by licence, obtainable from *surrogates, or by special licence (normally only for weddings in non-parochial churches), obtainable from the Abp. of Canterbury, in virtue of his original legatine authority. Similar publicity is required for a civil marriage. Canon 62 of 1604 fixed the hours when marriages might be solemnized as between 8 a.m. and noon, but the latter was extended in 1886 to 3 p.m., and in 1934 to 6 p.m., and Convocation amended the Canon accordingly. The requirement that marriages should be solemnized only between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. was retained in the 1969 Canons (B 35). See also Marriage Licences.

Practice varies among the Christian bodies concerning clerical marriage. While the Orthodox Church preserves the primitive practice, that ordinands must either be already married or elect to remain celibate, the Roman Church (at least for all who follow the Latin rite) has enforced celibacy, while the Anglican Church (Art. xxxii) and Nonconformist bodies allow a free choice.

See also Divorce.

Studies free from technicalities by Anglican writers include O. D. Watkins, Holy Matrimony (1895); T. A. *Lacey, Marriage in Church and State (1912; rev. ed. by R. C. Mortimer, 1947); K. E. *Kirk, Marriage and Divorce (1933; rev. ed., 1948); by RC writers, G. H. Joyce, S.J., Christian Marriage (1933), and H. Rondet, S.J., Introduction à l'étude de la théologie du mariage [1960]. Official RC teaching in the Second *Vatican Council's Constitution 'Gaudium et Spes', Nos. 47–52, *Paul VI's encyclicals '*Humanae Vitae' (25 Jul. 1968) and 'Matrimonia Mixta' (31 Mar. 1970), and CIC, Cans. 1012–1143. G. *Perrone, De Matrimonio Christiano (3 vols., Rome, 1858). D. Palmieri, De Matrimonio Christiano (Paris, 1880). A. Esmein, Le Mariage en droit canonique (1891, ed. 2 by R. Génestal and J. Dauvillier, 2 vols., 1929–35). P. Gasparri, Tractatus Canonicus de Matrimonia (2 vols., 1891). E. Friedberg, Das Recht der Eheschliessung in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Leipzig, 1865). J. Freisen, Geschichte des canonischen Eherechts bis zum Verfall der Glossenlitteratur (Tübingen, 1888). K. Ritzer, O.S.B., Formen, Riten und religiöses Brauchtum der Eheschliessung in den christlichen Kirchen des ersten Jahrtausends (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxxviii; 1961). J. Zhishman, Das Eherecht der orientalischen Kirche (1863–5); A. Raes, S.J., Le Mariage. Sa célébration et sa spiritualité dans l'Église d'Orient (Collection Irénikon [1959]). On the comparative study of the institution, E. Westermarck, The History of Human Marriage (1891 [partly issued, Helsingsfors, 1889]; ed. 5, rewritten, 3 vols., 1921). F. Meyrick in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 1092–1114, s.v. 'Marriage'; L. Godefroy–G. Le Bras–M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 2, 1927), cols. 2044–335, s.v. 'Mariage'; various authors in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 407–75, s.v. 'Matrimonio'; R. Naz–C. de Clercq in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 731–802, s.v. 'Mariage', all with bibl.

MATTER. In medieval philosophy, the stuff underlying all material existence before it is determined and actualized by *form (q.v.). The conception is derived from *Aristotle, where it is used to explain the fact of change in the physical world. Since one substance passes into another, originates and decays, but never springs from nothing or turns into nothing, Aristotle postulated 'matter' (ὕλη) as a common substratum. It is the mere potentiality of physical being and becoming, and hence no immediate object for the intellect, but something that can be known only through the body in which it is actualized by the form.

The conception was developed and applied by the Schoolmen of the 13th cent. to the Sacraments. They substituted the terms 'matter' and 'form' for the older expressions 'things' and 'words'. The matter was the sensible element in the Sacraments, e.g. the water of *Baptism and the bread and wine of the *Eucharist. Though possessing a certain significance (cleansing and nourishing) in itself, the Sacramental matter or action needed for its perfection a more decisive determination, which it receives through the form, i.e. the accompanying words. The Scholastic terminology was accepted by Pope *Eugenius IV in his instruction to the Armenians and by the Council of *Trent; but it is not easily adapted to certain Sacraments, e.g. matrimony.

MATTHEW, St., Apostle and Evangelist. His name occurs in all four lists of the 12 Apostles (Mt. 10. 3, Mk. 3. 18, Lk. 6. 15 and Acts 1. 13). In Mt. 10. 3 he is described as a *publican. The call of Matthew by Christ is recorded in Mt. 9. 9 (in the parallel passages in Mk. 2. 14 and Lk. 5. 27 the name of the person called is given as 'Levi'). Acc. to *Papias he made a collection of Christ's sayings in Hebrew, and he is traditionally held to be the author of the First Gospel (see foll. entry).

Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., III. xxiv) St. Matthew preached to the Hebrews. Other traditions about his later life conflict and merit little credence. The Roman Martyrology states that he was martyred 'in Ethiopia', the Hieronymianum puts his death 'in Persia in the town of Tarrium' (perhaps Tarsuana east of the Persian Gulf, so A. von Gutschmid), while some apocryphal Greek Acts (prob. *Gnostic) state that he suffered in Pontus. In later times Salerno and other places laid claim to his relics. He is credited with a 6th-cent. apocryphal Lat. work on the Lord's Infancy (De Ortu Beatae Mariae et Infantia Salvatoris), an adaptation of the *Protevangelium of St. James. In Christian symbolism he has commonly (*Irenaeus, *Jerome, *Augustine) been allotted the figure of a man (cf. Rev. 4. 7) on the ground that his Genealogy (1. 1–17) emphasizes the Lord's human origin. In art he is depicted with a sword, a money-bag, or a carpenter's square. Feast day in the E., 16 Nov.; in the W., 21 Sept.

'Passio' in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet (edd.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, ii (pt. 1; Leipzig, 1898), pp. 217–62. AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 194–227. B. de Gaiffier, S.J., 'Hagiographie salernitaine. La translation de S. Matthieu' in Anal. Boll., lxxx (1962), pp. 82–110, with reff. to other works on the post-Biblical material.

MATTHEW, Gospel acc. to St. Traditionally held to be the oldest of the four, this Gospel stands first in the *Canon. It was prob. known to the author of the *Didache (perh. c. A.D. 100) and St. *Ignatius of Antioch (c. A.D. 110); and from the time of St. *Irenaeus onwards it was regularly ascribed to the Apostle *Matthew by name. *Papias (c. A.D. 130) records that Matthew wrote the 'Logia' (τὰ λογία) 'in the Hebrew tongue'; and if the reference be to our Gospel, this is still earlier evidence for its ascription to him. It is perhaps to be dated c. A.D. 80; but all the evidence is so indirect that it is consistent with any date between c. A.D. 65 and c. A.D. 100.

Modern scholars commonly hold that Mt. drew extensively on Mk., which he expanded with the aid of *'Q'. If so, the early tradition that the Gospel was written in 'Hebrew' (by which Aramaic was prob. meant) is untenable. The chief objection to its ascription to St. Matthew is the unlikelihood that an Apostle, who was an eye-witness of the events, would have taken as his principal source the work of St. Mark, whose material is in any case second-hand.

The subject-matter of the Gospel is: a *Genealogy of Christ (1. 1–17), an 'Infancy Narrative' (1. 18–2 end; quite independent of that of Lk.), the mission of St. *John Baptist (3. 1–12), the Baptism and Temptation of Christ (3. 13–4. 17), His Mission in Galilee (4. 18–15. 20), His work further afield including His revelation of His Messiahship to St. *Peter at *Caesarea Philippi (15. 21–18 end), His Last Journey to Jerusalem (19 f.), concluding with the account of His last week, Passion and Resurrection (21–28). From 3. 1 onwards, Mt. appears to derive the bulk of his narrative material from Mk. (almost all of Mk. is incorporated); but whereas in 3–13 Mt. interpolates long sections of 'discourse' into the Marcan framework, in the rest of his Gospel he follows Mk. much more closely. In addition to the (mainly discourse) material which is paralleled in Lk. (i.e. the 'Q' material), there are considerable sections peculiar to Mt. These last are often described as 'M'. In general, Mt. shows a tendency to group together similar material which is scattered in Lk., e.g. the contents of 'The *Sermon on the Mount' (Mt. 5–7).

Among the characteristics of the Gospel are the fullness with which it records the Lord's teaching; its special interest in the relation of the Gospel to Jewish Law, with its stress on Christianity as the 'New Law'; the special commission given to St. Peter (16. 17–20), and the record of the post-Resurrection appearances in Galilee (28). Its author is sometimes regarded as the most 'ecclesiastical' of the Evangelists (the only two occurrences of ἐκκλησία in the Gospels being at 16. 18 and 18. 17). The Gk. of the Gospel is 'correct, if rather colourless' (J. H. Moulton). Mt. avoids some of Mk.'s undignified words and is more concise, but much of Mk.'s unconscious and naïve artistry is lost. Of the three Synoptic Gospels it is the most suitable for public reading; and it has probably always been the best-known of them.

Patristic commentaries in Gk. include those of *Origen, St. John *Chrysostom, and *Peter of Laodicea; in Lat., those of *Hilary of Poitiers and St. *Jerome. Modern commentaries include those by T. *Zahn (Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, ed. id., i; 1903), J. *Wellhausen (Berlin, 1904), W. C. Allen (I.C.C., 1907), E. Klostermann (Hb.N.T., v, 1909, pp. 121–52; ed. 2, iii, 1927), A. H. McNeile (London, 1915), M. J. *Lagrange, O.P. (Études Bibliques, 1923; ed. 7, 1948), E. Lohmeyer–W. Schmauch (K.E.K., 1956), F. V. Filson (Black's N.T. Comm., 1960), and J. C. Fenton (Pelican Gospel Commentaries, 1963). B. W. Bacon, Studies in Matthew (1930); G. D. Kilpatrick, The Origins of the Gospel according to St. Matthew (1946). E. Massaux, Influence de l'évangile de saint Matthieu sur la littérature chrétienne avant saint Irénée (Louvain, 1950). A. M. Farrer, St. Matthew and St. Mark (The Edward Cadbury Lectures, 1953–4; 1954; ed. 2, 1966). K. Stendahl, The School of Matthew (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, xx; 1954). G. Bornkamm–G. Barth–H. J. Held, Überlieferung und Auslegung im Matthäusevangelium (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, i; 1960; Eng. tr., 1963). L. Vaganay in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 940–56. See also Synoptic Problem.

MATTHEW OF AQUASPARTA (c. 1240–1302), *Franciscan theologian. A native of Aquasparta near Todi in Umbria, he became a Franciscan c. 1254. By 1268 he was studying theology in Paris, and in due course he occupied one of the Franciscan chairs. He is also known to have taught in Bologna. In 1278 or 1279 he succeeded John *Peckham, under whom he had studied in Paris, as lector sacri palatii in Rome. In 1287 he became General of his Order, in 1288 Cardinal, and in 1291 Cardinal Bp. of Porto and Rufina. He stood high in the confidence of Boniface VIII, who entrusted him with political missions. His writings include sermons and Biblical commentaries, and a commentary on the Sentences as well as quodlibets and 'Quaestiones disputatae'. These last, which, like his other works, had little circulation, are perhaps the most important. They are notable for their clarity. They show him as a disciple of St. *Bonaventure in following the *Augustinian doctrine on divine illumination and innate ideas, and on the direct knowledge which the soul has of its essence. Matthew was not content to be a slavish follower, and in more than one respect, as in his view of our direct knowledge of the singular and posterior knowledge of the universal, he looks forward to *Duns Scotus.

His Quaestiones Disputatae have now all been publd. at Quaracchi in the Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, i (1903; ed. 2, 1957); ii (1914; ed. 2, 1957); xi (1935), incl. important introd. on his life and works by V. Doucet, O.F.M., pp. xi–clxiii; xvii (1956); and xviii (1959); except for the Quaestiones de Anima VI, ed. A. J. Gondras in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxxii for 1957 (1958), pp. 203–352, and the Quaestiones Disputatae de Anima XIII, ed. id. (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, l; 1961). Various sermons ed. C. Piana, O.F.M., and G. Gál, O.F.M. (Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, ix and x; Quaracchi, 1962). M. *Grabmann, Die philosophische und theologische Erkenntnislehre des Kardinals Matthaeus ab Aquasparta (Theologische Studien der Leo-Gesellschaft, xiv; 1906). Helen M. Beha, O.S.F., 'Matthew of Aquasparta's Theory of Cognition' in Franciscan Studies, xx (1960), pp. 161–204; xxi (1961), pp. 1–79, 383–465. Z. Hayes, O.F.M., The General Doctrine of Creation in the Thirteenth Century, with special emphasis on Matthew of Aquasparta (Munich, 1964). E. Brocchieri, La legge naturale nel pensiero di Matteo d'Acquasparta (Rovigo, 1967). P. Weber, 'La Liberté dans la théologie de Matthieu d'Aquasparta' in R.T.A.M., xxxiv (1967), pp. 238–54, with bibl. E. Longpré, O.S.B., in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 375–89, s.v.; G. Gál, O.F.M., in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 491, s.v.

MATTHEW PARIS (c. 1199–1259), medieval chronicler. He became a member of the Benedictine monastery of *St. Albans in 1217 and, as an expert scribe and illuminator, annalist of the monastery in 1236. His chief claim to fame lies in his Chronica Majora, a history of the world from the Creation to 1259. Its earlier sections are almost entirely a transcription of Roger of Wendover's Flores Historiarum, but its later pages are his own careful narration of contemporary events. The work is characterized by trenchant criticism of ecclesiastical abuses (in particular, Papal venality) and of Henry III's employment of foreigners in England, and was the fruit of his own experiences at St. Albans and his wide travels, both at home and abroad. Matthew was also the author of a Historia Anglorum sive Historia Minor, an abridgement of his longer history.

His Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard (7 vols., R.S., 1872–83); his Historia Anglorum, ed. F. Madden (3 vols., ib., 1866–9), with biogr. preface in vol. iii, pp. vii–liv; the part of the 'Gesta Monasterii Sancti Albani' which is prob. mainly his work, ed. H. T. Riley in Gesta Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani a Thoma Walsingham, i (ib., 1867), pp. 3–324. The section of his Historia Anglorum dealing with the period 1235–73 is tr. into Eng. by J. A. Giles (Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 3 vols., 1852–4). R. Vaughan, Matthew Paris (Cambridge Studies in medieval life and thought, new series, vi; 1958). V. H. Galbraith, Roger Wendover and Matthew Paris (lecture; 1944). W. Hunt in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 207–13, s.v. 'Paris, Matthew'.

MATTHEW'S BIBLE. This edition of the English Bible was issued in 1537. It was a revision of the work of W. *Tyndale, pieced out with Tyndale's unpublished MSS. and portions of M. *Coverdale's OT, with expository notes drawn from Conrad Pellican (1478–1556). Printed at Antwerp in 1537, it was dedicated to *Henry VIII, who licensed it for general reading. 'Thomas Matthew', the name of the supposed editor, was a mere alias for John *Rogers (q.v.).

S. L. Greenslade in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible. The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 150–2. W. T. Whitley, 'Thomas Matthew's Bible' in C.Q.R., cxxv (1937), pp. 48–69. Whitley's attempt to defend the existence of Thomas Matthew as a real person has been disposed of by J. F. Mozley, William Tyndale (1937), Appendix E. Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), p. 18 f. (No. 34).

MATTHIAS, St., Apostle. According to the tradition preserved in Acts 1. 15–26, he was chosen after the Ascension by lot to fill the vacancy in the Twelve left by the treachery of *Judas Iscariot, and it is implied that he had been a follower of Christ from the beginning of His ministry, but he is not mentioned elsewhere in the NT. Acc. to apocryphal traditions, he (or, acc. to some versions, *Matthew) preached the Gospel in Ethiopia, or among the 'Anthropophagi', while the *Gnostic *Basilides claimed that his own doctrines derived from a private tradition going back to St. Matthias. *Eusebius (H.E., I. xii. 3, II. i. 1) and St. *Epiphanius (Haer., i. 22) believed that he was one of the Lord's 'Seventy Disciples' (Lk. 10.1). Feast day in the W., 14 May (formerly 24, or, in leap year, 25 Feb.; 24 Feb. still observed in some Anglican Churches); in the Greek Church, 9 Aug.

AA.SS., Feb. III (1658), pp. 431–54. J. Renié, S.M., 'L'Élection de Mathias (Act. I. 15–26). Authenticité du récit' in R. Bibl., lv (1948), pp. 43–53; P. Gaechter, S.J., 'Die Wahl des Matthias (Apg. 1, 15–26)' in Z.K.G., lxxi (1949), pp. 318–46; K. H. Rengstorf, 'Die Zuwahl des Matthias (Apg. 1. 15 ff.)' in Studia Theologica, xv (1961), pp. 35–67. See also comm. on Acts (s.v.), esp. that of E. Jacquier (ed. 2, Paris, 1926), pp. 30–41.

MATTHIAS, Gospel of St. A lost apocryphal Gospel, mentioned by *Origen, Hom. I in Lc. and other early Christian writers. Perhaps it is to be identified with the treatise referred to by *Clement of Alexandria as 'the Traditions of Matthias' (Strom. II. ix. 45, &c.).

H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 224–8; Eng. tr., i, pp. 308–13. Bardenhewer, i (1913), pp. 529 f. and 532, with further bibl.

MATTINS. (1) In the W. the traditional *Breviary Office for the night, derived from the *Vigils of the primitive Church and so called (vigiliae) until the 11th cent. It was originally performed at midnight, but in the Rule of St. *Benedict it was prescribed for the 8th hour of the night, i.e. 2 a.m. In some religious orders one or other practice is still the custom, but since the Middle Ages the tendency to 'anticipate', i.e. to say Mattins on the evening before, steadily increased and became the rule for the secular clergy as well as for many regulars. In the 1971 Breviary it was replaced by the *Office of Readings (q.v.).

After the silent recitation of the *Paternoster, *Ave Maria and *Credo, Mattins opened with two versicles and responses, followed by the *Invitatory and a hymn which varied acc. to the season or feast. On Sundays and feasts of *semi-double rank and over, three *Nocturns followed (each consisting of a number of Psalms—in 1912 the number was fixed at three—with *antiphons, versicle, Paternoster and a short prayer called 'Absolutio', and three Lessons each preceded by a benediction); on simple feasts and ferias there was only one Nocturn (consisting of 12 Psalms, which were reduced by *Pius X to 9, and three Lessons); and Easter and Pentecost with their *octaves had only three Psalms and three Lessons. The office concluded with the *Te Deum, which was said on all Sundays except those of *Advent and from *Septuagesima to Palm Sunday, on all feasts and on the ferias in Eastertide. In choir it was often followed immediately by *Lauds, but in private recitation the latter might be said separately, and in that case Mattins was terminated by the collect of the day.

(2) The designation, retained in the 1549 Book, but dropped in 1552, is also in current use for the service of 'Morning Prayer' in the Anglican BCP. The office was based on the Medieval Mattins with supplements from *Prime. Its structure is in essence identical with that of *Evensong (q.v.) except that Ps. 95 is sung as an *Invitatory before the Psalms for the day (except on the 19th day of the month, when it is in the ordinary course of the Pss., and on *Easter Day, when a special anthem is ordered). Also on thirteen feast days in the year the *Athanasian Creed is ordered to be said in substitution for the *Apostles' Creed, but in modern times this rubric has been widely disregarded. Between the First (OT) and Second (NT) Lessons, the Canticle '*Te Deum' or as an alternative, mainly in penitential seasons, 'Benedicite' is said or sung and after the Second Lesson the *Benedictus (or Ps. 100, Jubilate Deo). The *Alternative Services, Morning Prayer, Series I (1967), permitted minor changes; Series II (1968) and II (Revised) (1971) introduced much more variety, which has been incorporated in the ASB. Here there is a wide choice of Canticles, and in the Shorter Form only one Canticle is used, varying according to the day of the week. If the Eucharist follows, most of the latter part of the Office may be omitted. The American BCP (1979) also provides for considerable flexibility.

(1) P. *Batiffol, Histoire du bréviaire romain (1895), pp. 90–9 (ed. 3, 1911, pp. 117–28; Eng. tr., 1912, pp. 75–83) and passim. J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Gebetsliturgie I. Die Entstehung der Matutin' in Z.K.T., lxxii (1950), pp. 66–79. J. M. Hanssens, S.J., Aux origines de la prière liturgique. Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, lvii; 1952).

(2) F. Procter–W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), esp. pp. 368–401. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, i (1915), esp. pp. lxxxv–xcii.

MATTINS OF BRUGES. The massacre of the French lodged in Bruges by the Flemish inhabitants at daybreak on 18 May 1302. Those who fell had been marked out by their inability to pronounce a prearranged Flemish shibboleth.

The principal authority is the contemporary author of the Annales Gandenses (ed. with Eng. tr. by Hilda Johnstone, London, 1951, pp. 23–5). E. Vanden Bussche, 'Les Matines de Bruges. Note pour l'histoire de Jean Breidel et Pierre de Coninc' in La Flandre. Revue des Monuments d'Histoire et d'Antiquités, xii (1881), pp. 319–28. J. Frederichs, 'Note sur le cri de guerre des Matines brugeoises' in Compte Rendu des séances de la Commission royale d'Histoire, Sér. 5, iii (1893), pp. 263–74. F. Funck-Brentano, Philippe le Bel en Flandre (1896), pp. 388–94. H. Pirenne, Histoire de Belgique, i (1900), p. 382, with note on sources; id. in C. Med. H., viii (1936), p. 339 f.

MAUNDY THURSDAY. The traditional English name for the Thursday preceding *Easter, derived from the first antiphon of the ceremony of the washing of the feet, 'mandatum novum' (Jn. 13. 34). Its special celebration in commemoration of the Lord's Institution of the Eucharist on that day is attested already for the 4th cent. by the Council of *Hippo (393). Two other traditional liturgical features are the Blessing of the Holy Oils and the Reconciliation of Penitents, though the latter has long been obsolete. Two or even three Masses were celebrated on the day in the early centuries, but the *Gregorian Sacramentary and the oldest Ordines Romani allow only one. In the W. Church since 1955 the Maundy Thursday Mass has normally been celebrated in the evening. White vestments are worn and the altar is adorned in festive manner. Before the Mass the tabernacle is emptied (any Hosts required for sick communion are taken to some other place of reservation without ceremony) because all are expected to receive Holy Communion from Hosts consecrated at this Mass. The Mass is marked by the solemn ringing at the Gloria in excelsis of all bells, which are henceforth silent until the *Paschal Vigil, and a special formula for the Consecration. A sermon is recommended and also the ceremony of foot-washing (see Pedilavium). After the Mass the Hosts needed for the Mass of the *Presanctified on Good Friday (which are consecrated at the Maundy Thursday Mass) are taken in solemn procession to the Altar of *Repose, where a watch is kept for some hours. The altars are stripped and holy water stoups emptied. In cathedral churches the Holy Oils are blessed during a special *Chrism Mass in the morning. The royal 'Maundy Ceremony' in England is an abbreviated survival of the Pedilavium. See also Green Thursday and Sheer Thursday.

H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Hebdomada Sancta, i (Rome, 1956), pp. 64–91; ii, part 1 (1957), passim; ii, part 2 (1957), pp. 710–777. J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week, its Services and Ceremonial (*Alcuin Club Collections, xxix; 1932), pp. 79–115. H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 274–325. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), No. 2, 'L'Hymne de la charité pour le Jeudi-Saint', pp. 26–36. W. J. O'Shea in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 105–7, s.v. 'Holy Thursday'.

MAURICE, St., Primicerius ('leader') of the *Theban Legion. Acc. to the 5th cent. 'Passio Agaunensium Martyrum', a composition of *Eucherius of Lyons, the Emp. Maximian (Caesar from 286 to 305) took an army to Gaul during *Diocletian's persecution, which included a wholly Christian 'Theban legion' (from the Thebaïd, Egypt) commanded by Mauricius. As it refused to sacrifice, it was massacred by Maximian at Agaunum (now St.-Maurice-en-Valais; not to be confounded with other places of the same name, e.g. St.-Moritz in the Engadine). The story, though unhistorical in this form, may spring from some action of Christian soldiers during Maximian's campaign against the Bagaudae (286). Feast day, 22 Sept.

The best text of the 'Passio Acaunensium Martyrum' is that ed. B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 20–41. Further details of edd. and other sources in B.H.L., pp. 841–4 (Nos. 5737–64), and suppl., p. 224 f. AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 308–403 and 895–926. Of the considerable literature the fullest account is that of J. Bernard de Montmélian, Saint Maurice et la légion thébéenne (2 vols., 1888; detailed but not entirely accurate); among the more reliable discussions is that of M. Besson, Monasticon Acaunense (Fribourg, 1913). L. Dupraz, Les Passions de S. Maurice d'Agaune. Essai sur l'historicité de la tradition et contribution à l'étude de l'armée pré-dioclétienne (260–286) et des canonisations tardives de la fin du IVe siècle (Studia Friburgensia, N.S., xxvii; Fribourg, 1961). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2699–729, s.v., with detailed bibl.

MAURICE, FREDERICK DENISON (1805–1872), Anglican divine. He was born at Normanstone, near Lowestoft, the son of a *Unitarian minister. After a boyhood spent among long and painful religious disputes in his family he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1823, where F. *Field was his tutor, with a view to becoming a barrister. In 1825 he migrated with his close friend, John Sterling, to Trinity Hall. Refusal to subscribe the *Thirty-Nine Articles excluded him from a degree and fellowship and he moved to London, where he wrote in defence of social reforms, criticizing the Benthamite materialism.

Having gradually accepted the Anglican faith, in 1830 Maurice went up to Exeter College, Oxford, and in 1834 was ordained to the curacy of Bubbenhall, Warwickshire. Here he wrote Eustace Conway (1834), an autobiographical novel, and Subscription No Bondage (1835), a pamphlet defending the imposition of religious tests at the universities. In 1836 he became chaplain of Guy's Hospital, where he lectured regularly on moral philosophy and wrote his most enduring book, The Kingdom of Christ; or Hints to a Quaker concerning the Principle, Constitution and Ordinances of the Catholic Church (1838). Its philosophical, yet fundamentally orthodox, presentation of theology was misunderstood and subjected to attacks from all ecclesiastical points of view. In 1840 he was elected Professor of English Literature and History at *King's College, London; in 1845 Warburtonian Lecturer (his lectures, The Epistle to the Hebrews, 1846, contained a reply to J. H. *Newman's Theory of Development); in 1846 Chaplain at Lincoln's Inn; and in 1846 Professor of Theology in the newly created Theological School at King's College.

Maurice, who had been deeply moved by the political events of 1848, now became actively interested again in the application of Christian principles to social reform. Acquaintance with J. M. F. *Ludlow led to the formation of the *Christian Socialists (q.v.), which brought him into close contact with C. *Kingsley and others. But his orthodoxy was constantly under suspicion and in 1853 his Theological Essays, in which he attacked the popular view of the endlessness of future punishment and maintained that in the NT '*Eternity' had nothing to do with time, provoked a crisis which resulted in his dismissal from King's College. In 1854 he started a 'Working Men's College' in London to promote his socialistic ideals. In What is Revelation? (1859) he made a fierce attack on the *Bampton Lectures of H. L. *Mansel (1858), who had defended Theism on the basis of the limitations of human reason and by implication repudiated philosophical theology. In 1860 he was appointed to the chapel of St. Peter's, Vere Street, and in 1866 Knightsbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy at Cambridge. In 1870 he became incumbent of St. Edward's, Cambridge. Among his other writings were *Three Letters to the Rev. W. Palmer (1842; defending the *Jerusalem Bishopric), The Lord's Prayer (1848), The Old Testament (1851), The Unity of the New Testament (1854), The Epistles of St. John (1857), The Gospel of St. John (1857), The Gospel of the Kingdom of Heaven (1864) and The Conscience. Lectures on Casuistry (1868). He also wrote a long article, 'Moral and Metaphysical Philosophy', originally published in the Encyclopaedia Metropolitana and later expanded and reissued in various forms. Many of his other writings were considerably revised in later editions.

In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 1 Apr.

Life and Letters, ed. by his son, Frederick Maurice (2 vols., 1884); C. F. G. Masterman, F. D. Maurice (1907); C. Jenkins, F. D. Maurice and the New Reformation (1938); M. B. Reckitt, Maurice to Temple. Scott Holland Memorial Lectures, 1946 (1947); F. Higham, F. D. Maurice (1947); A. R. Vidler, The Theology of F. D. Maurice (1948; publd. U.S.A., 1947, as Witness to the Light); id., F. D. Maurice and Company (1966), pp. 13–202; A. M. *Ramsey, F. D. Maurice and the Conflict of Modern Theology (1951); W. M. Davies, An Introduction to F. D. Maurice's Theology based on the first edition of The Kingdom of Christ (1838) and The Faith of the Liturgy and the Doctrine of the Thirty-Nine Articles (1860) (1964); F. M. McClain, Maurice. Man and Moralist (1972). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), pp. 77–104.

MAURISTS, The. The *Benedictine monks of the Congregation of St.-Maur. The Congregation, which takes its name from St. *Maurus (6th cent., q.v.), was founded in 1621, to represent in France the reform initiated in the Abbey of Saint-Vanne (Lorraine) in 1600. From 1672 onwards the Maurists devoted themselves largely to historical and literary works, and many of their productions in this field are monuments of scholarship, which constitute the chief glory of the Congregation. Among their members were J. *Mabillon, B. de *Montfaucon, R. Massuet, C. de la Rue, L. *d'Achéry, F. Aubert, and many others whose names are familiar to patristic students. Some of the monks became supporters of *Jansenism, and towards the end of the 18th cent. the Congregation suffered a tendency towards abusive relaxation of discipline. Suppressed in 1790 by the Revolutionary government, it was finally dissolved by *Pius VII in 1818.

E. *Martène, O.S.B., contd. by J. Fortet, O.S.B., Histoire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ed. G. Charvin, O.S.B. (Archives de la France Monastique, xxxi, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxv, xlii, xliii, xlvi, xlvii; 1928–43); id., Les Vies des Justes, ed. B. Heurtebize, O.S.B. (ib., xxvii, xxviii, xxx; 1924–6). [R. P. Tassin,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ordre de S. Benoît (Brussels, 1770); suppl. by U. Robert (Paris, 1881); further suppl. by H. Wilhelm–U. Berlière, O.S.B. (ib., 1908). Mémorial du XIVe centenaire de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés. Recueil de travaux sur le monastère et la congrégation de Saint-Maur (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1959). [M.] D. Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises (1963), pp. 33–62. C. McCarthy, The Lives of the Principal Benedictine Writers of the Congregation of St. Maur (1868). E. de Broglie, Mabillon et la société de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés à la fin du XVIe siècle, 1664–1707 (2 vols., 1888); id., La Société de l'abbaye de S.-Germain-des-Prés au XVIIIe siècle. Bernard de Montfaucon et les Bernardins 1715–1750 (2 vols., 1891). On the Maurist edition of the works of St. *Augustine, J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et Moyen Age, iii (Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, ix; 1948), pp. 412–84. Heimbucher, i, pp. 235–41, with further bibl. L. A. St. L. Toke in C.E., x (1911), pp. 69–72, s.v.; J. Baudot in D.T.C., x (1928), cols. 405–43, s.v.

MAURUS, St. (6th cent.), disciple of St. *Benedict of Nursia. Nothing certain is known of him. Acc. to a biography ascribed to his companion, Faustus of *Monte Cassino (acc. to H. *Delehaye and others a 9th cent. forgery by Abbot Odo of Glanfeuil), he made his way to France in 543, where he founded the abbey of Glanfeuil, afterwards St.-Maur-sur-Loire; and, after resigning the abbacy to Bertulf in 581, spent the rest of his life in solitude and contemplation. He is the patron of charcoal-burners, and is invoked against gout and other diseases. Feast day, 15 Jan.

Life ascribed to Faustus of Monte Cassino pr. in Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti*, i (Paris, 1668), pp. 275–98; also, with other material, in AA.SS., Jun. I (1643), pp. 1038–62. A. Giry, 'La Vie de saint Maur du Pseudo-Faustus' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, lvii (1898), pp. 149–52. B. F. Adloch, O.S.B., 'Die Benedictiner-Tradition über den hl. Maurus und Abt Odo von Glanfeuil' in Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benedictiner- und dem Cistercienser-Orden, xix (1898), pp. 310–26; id., 'Zur Vita S. Mauri', ib., xxvi (1905), pp. 3–22 and 202–26; id., ' "Les Légendes hagiographiques" und die "Vita Sancti Mauri" per Faustum', ib., xxviii (1907), p. 101, all with reff. to other lit. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1285–1319, s.v. 'Glanfeuil', with full discussion of authenticity of life, and bibl.

MAXIMILIAN, St. (d. 295), also Marmilian, martyr. It is recorded that he was executed at Theveste in Numidia, his native town, because he refused to serve in the Roman army. Feast day, 12 Mar.

'Acta' pr. in T. *Ruinart (ed.), Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 309–11; A. *Harnack, Militia Christi. Die christliche Religion und der Soldatenstand in den ersten Jahrhunderten (1905), pp. 114–17; and in R. Knopf (ed.), Ausgewählte Märtyrerakten (ed. 3 by G. Krüger; 1929), p. 86 f.; for earlier edd. see B.H.L., p. 850 (No. 5813). H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 104–10. C. J. Cadoux, The Early Christian Attitude to War (1919), pp. 149–51. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1133–7, s.v. 'Militarisme. XIII, le martyre du conscrit Maximilien', with bibl.

MAXIMUS, St. (d. 408/23). Nothing is known of his life, except that he was bishop of Turin, and that he died in the reign of Honorius and Theodosius the Younger (408–23). Confusion about the dates of his life has been caused by an arbitrary conjecture of C. *Baronius, who identified him with a Bp. Maximus who was present at synods in Milan in 451 and Rome in 465. Over 100 of his sermons survive, chiefly in a collection found in three early MSS. Some of them had a wide circulation in medieval homiliaries. They are for the most part short, pithily expressed, sometimes over-rhetorical, and marked by a strong popular appeal. They throw much light on the history of the liturgy and the survival of paganism in N. Italy. Feast day, 25 June.

Editio princeps (only 74 sermons), by J. Gymnicus (Cologne, 1535). The ed. of B. Bruni (Rome, 1784), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lvii, contains much spurious material; cf. Dekkers (ed. 2, 1961), pp. 51–8 (Nos. 220–6b). First crit. ed. by Almut Mutzenbecher (Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina, xxiii; 1962). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 458 f. M. R. P. McGuire in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 516.

MAXIMUS, St., 'Confessor' (c. 580 – 662), Greek theologian and ascetic writer. A member of the old Byzantine aristocracy, after holding the post of Imperial Secretary under the Emp. *Heraclius, c. 614 he became a monk (later abbot) of the monastery of Chrysopolis. During the Persian invasion (626) he fled to Africa. From c. 640 onwards he was a determined opponent of *Monothelitism. After Pyrrhus, the temporarily deposed Monothelite Patriarch of *Constantinople, had declared his defeat in a dispute at Carthage (645), Maximus procured the condemnation of the heresy by several African Synods, and also had a share in its condemnation by the *Lateran Council of 649. In 653 he was brought to Constantinople, where pressure was put upon him to obtain his adherence to the '*Typus' of Constans II. On his refusal he was exiled to Thrace. In 661 he was again brought to the capital and severely questioned; a probably true tradition says that on this occasion his tongue and his right hand were cut off. He was then exiled to the Caucasus, but died soon afterwards.

Maximus Confessor was a prolific writer on doctrinal, ascetical, exegetical, and liturgical subjects. His works include the 'Quaestiones ad Thalassium', 65 questions and answers on difficult passages of Scripture, the 'Ambigua', an exegetical work on *Gregory of Nazianzus, Paraphrases on the works of Pseudo-*Dionysius, several dogmatic treatises against the *Monophysites and Monothelites, the 'Liber Asceticus' and 'Capita de Caritate', and the 'Mystagogia', a mystical interpretation of the Liturgy. He maintained that the purpose of history was the Incarnation of the Son of God and the divinization (θέωσις) of man, which consisted in the restoration of the Image impaired by Original Sin. Man, created in an incorruptible nature devoid of passion, caused evil to come into the world by his desire for pleasure, which destroyed the dominion of reason over the senses; hence Christ had to redeem the race by pain to restore the equilibrium. It was through the Incarnate Word, the centre of Maximus's speculative as of his mystical doctrine, that man is not only freed from ignorance but given the power to practise virtue. The goal of the human life, attained through abnegation, is union with God by charity. Feast day in the W., 13 Aug.; in the E., 21 Jan. (also 13 Aug.).

Works ed. F. *Combefis, 2 vols., Paris, 1675 (the projected third vol. never appeared). The Scholia to St. Gregory of Nazianzus and the Ps.-Dionysius were first pr. in F. Oehler, Anecdota Graeca, i (Halle, 1857). All these repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xc and xci, and (scholia to Ps.-Dionysius), ib., iv, 15–432 and 527–76. His 'Computus Ecclesiasticus' is in J. P. Migne, PG, xix, 1217–80 (among the works of *Eusebius of Caesarea). Crit. ed. of 'Capita de Caritate' by A. Ceresa-Gastaldo, with Ital. tr. (Verba Seniorum, N.S., iii; Rome, 1963) and of 'Quaestiones ad Thalassium' by C. Laga and C. Steel (C.C., Series Graeca, vii, etc.; 1980 ff.). Eng. tr. of 'Liber Asceticus' and 'Capita de Caritate' by Polycarp Sherwood, O.S.B. (A.C.W., xxi; 1955). On the life of Maximus, repr. from Combefis in PG, xc, 68–109, cf. R. Devreesse, 'La Vie de saint Maxime le Confesseur et ses Recensions' in Anal. Boll., xlvi (1928), pp. 5–49. W. Lackner, 'Zu Quellen und Datierung der Maximosvita (BHG^3 1234)', ib., lxxxv (1967), pp. 285–316. H. U. von Balthasar, Kosmische Liturgie: Maximus der Bekenner. Höhe und Krise des griechischen Weltbildes (1941; ed. 2, 1961; Fr. tr., 1947); I. Hausherr, S.J., Philautie. De la tendresse pour soi à la charité selon Saint Maxime le Confesseur (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxxvii; 1952). P. Sherwood, O.S.B., An Annotated Date-List of the Works of Maximus the Confessor (Studia Anselmiana, xxx; 1952); id., The Earlier Ambigua of Saint Maximus the Confessor and his Refutation of Origenism (ib., xxxvi; 1955). L. Thunberg, Microcosm and Mediator. The Theological Anthropology of Maximus the Confessor (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, xxv; Lund, 1965). W. Völker, Maximus Confessor als Meister des geistlichen Lebens (Wiesbaden, 1965). Krumbacher, pp. 61–4; Bardenhewer, v, pp. 28–35; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 521–4. J. A. Wagenmann–R. Seeberg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 457–70; V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 448–59. Studies by A. Riou (Paris, 1973) and J. M. Garrigues (ib., 1976).

MAXIMUS THE CYNIC (4th cent.), intruded Bp. of *Constantinople. After a disreputable early life at *Alexandria, he conceived the idea of supplanting St. *Gregory Nazianzen, and with the support of Peter II, Bp. of Alexandria, went to Constantinople (379), where he ingratiated himself with Gregory, who even pronounced a panegyric on him in his presence. One night in 380, when Gregory was ill, he was consecrated to the see. He then set out immediately for Thessalonica to secure the recognition of the Emp. *Theodosius, but in this he was unsuccessful. The Council of *Constantinople of 381 (can. 4) declared that Maximus 'neither is nor was a bishop'. Meanwhile, Peter recognized what Maximus was worth and withdrew his support. However, Maximus convinced St. *Ambrose and others in the W., where only his version of events was known and believed, of his claims, and some W. synods threatened to break off all relations with the E. Church if Maximus were not restored to his see; but at the Council of Rome in 382 they were undeceived and abandoned him. He professed to combine belief in the Cynic philosophy with profession of the Nicene faith.

The chief sources are Gregory Naz., Orat., xxv; id., De Vita Sua (Poema de Seipso), ll. 745–1029; Ambrose, Ep. 13; *Sozomen, H.E., VII. ix; *Theodoret, H.E., V. viii. E. Venables in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 878–80.

MAX MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH (1823–1900), comparative philologist and religious writer. A native of Dessau in Germany, he was educated at the universities of Leipzig (1841–3) and Berlin (1844–5), and in 1845 went to Paris, where he began to work on an editio princeps of the Rig-Veda. In 1846 he came to England, and in 1848 went to Oxford to supervise its printing (6 vols., 1849–75). In 1850 he was appointed deputy, and in 1854 full, Taylorian professor of modern European languages. He was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1858. In 1859 he published his History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, important esp. for its studies in chronology. Having failed to secure the Sanskrit professorship at Oxford in 1860, he devoted himself largely to other studies, esp. to comparative philology, on which he lectured at the Royal Institution in 1861 and 1863. In 1868 he was appointed to the chair of comparative philology at Oxford, founded esp. for him. In 1875 he undertook the edition of The Sacred Books of the East, a series of translations of E. religious classics in 51 vols., over thirty of which are devoted to the religions of India. Much of his work on the comparative study of religions is embodied in The Origin and Growth of Religion (*Hibbert Lectures (1878) and the *Gifford Lectures from 1888 to 1892, on Natural Religion (1889), Physical Religion (1891), Anthropological Religion (1892), and Theosophy, or Psychological Religion (1893)). He also interested himself in comparative mythology, on which he wrote a large work, Contributions to the Science of Mythology (1897).

Max Müller was among the most learned and popular figures in post-*Tractarian Oxford. Through the influence of C. C. J. *Bunsen, his work also attracted the attention of the Queen and the Prince Consort. His wide range of interests, his facility of expression, and his readiness to put forward highly speculative (and often inadequately tested) theories made his writings congenial to the religious liberals of his age. Though mostly without permanent theological importance, they exercised a great influence on the ideas of the later 19th century.

A collected edition of his works appeared in 1898–1903. His Life and Letters (2 vols., London, 1902) were edited by his widow. A. A. Macdonell in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 151–7.

MAY LAWS. The legislation associated with Bismarck's Kulturkampf* and directed against the RC Church in Germany. These laws, passed in May 1873 under the direction of P. L. A. *Falk, were based on the theory of the absolute supremacy of the state. They limited the extent of the disciplinary powers of the Church, instituted a Supreme Ecclesiastical Court whose members were appointed by the Emperor and directly under state control, ordered all ordinands to pass through a state Gymnasium and to take a state examination (the 'Kultur-Examen'), and brought all ecclesiastical seminaries under state control. The laws, with others of a similar nature, were condemned by *Pius IX in the encyclical 'Quod nunquam' (1875) as subversive of the constitution and rights of the Church, and also strongly opposed by many German Protestants.

P. Hinschius, Die preussischen Kirchengesetze des Jahres 1873 (1873), with full text. Eng. tr. of the most important clauses in R. G. D. Laffan (ed.), Select Documents of European History, iii, ed. H. Butterfield (1931), p. 167 f. The encyclical 'Quod Nunquam' is pr. in Mirbt, No. 613, pp. 471–3, with further reff. See also bibl. to Kulturkampf.

MAYNE, St. CUTHBERT (1543–77), the first RC seminary priest executed in England. Born in Devon, he was ordained at the age of 18. At St. John's College, Oxford, he came under the influence of E. *Campion, and secretly became a RC. He then entered the English College at *Douai, where he was ordained to the RC priesthood. In 1576 he was sent on the English Mission and became chaplain to a landowner in Cornwall, passing as his steward. In 1577, however, a search was made, and Mayne was found concealed. On being tried at Launceston, he was sentenced to death. As it was difficult to find grounds for a capital charge, as the Act of Parliament making it high treason to receive orders abroad had not yet been passed, he was condemned on the alleged grounds of denying the Queen's spiritual supremacy, saying Mass, possessing a printed copy of a bull for a jubilee, and wearing an *Agnus Dei. He was executed at Launceston on 29 Nov. 1577. He was beatified in 1888 and was among the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales canonized on 25 Oct. 1970. The engraved portrait frequently reproduced as his likeness is prob. not authentic. Feast day, 29 Nov.

W. *Allen, A Brief History of the Glorious Martyrdom of Twelve Reverend Priests, Father Edmund Campion and his Companions ([1582]; ed. J. H. Pollen, S.J., 1908, pp. 104–10). R. A. McElroy, C.R.L., Blessed Cuthbert Mayne. Protomartyr of the English Seminaries (1929). E. S. Knox, Cong. Orat., in B. Camm, O.S.B. (ed.), Lives of the English Martyrs Declared Blessed by Pope Leo XIII in 1886 and 1895, ii (1905), pp. 204–22 and 656. T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), p. 161 f., s.v. for further reff.

MAYNOOTH COLLEGE. The 'Royal Catholic College' at Maynooth, Co. Kildare, 15 miles north-west of Dublin, established in 1795 by the Irish Parliament for the education of RC clergy for Ireland. The present building was erected by A. W. *Pugin from funds supplied by Parliament in 1846. Until the disestablishment of the (Anglican) Church of Ireland in 1869, when the payment was commuted, the College was supported by an annual grant, originally of £8,000 but in 1845 raised by Sir Robert Peel from £9,500 to £26,000.

J. Healy, Maynooth College. Its Centenary History (1895). D. Meeham, Window on Maynooth (Dublin, 1949). There was also a special issue of the Irish Ecclesiastical Record devoted to the 150th anniversary in Sept. 1945 (fifth series, lxvi, 1945, pp. 145–243).

MAZARIN, JULES (1602–61), French statesman and cardinal. A native of Piscina in the Abruzzi, he was educated by the *Jesuits and accompanied Jerome *Colonna to the university of Alcalá. On his return to Rome c. 1622, he graduated as a doctor of laws and became a captain in the army of the Colonna. His diplomatic skill soon attracted the attention of *Urban VIII, who in 1629 gave him the difficult task of ending the war of the Mantuan succession. From 1632 to 1634, and again from 1636 to 1640, he was vice-legate at *Avignon, where he warmly promoted French interests. In 1639 he became a naturalized Frenchman and in 1640 formally entered the service of Louis XIII. At the King's instigation he was created cardinal in 1641, and in 1642 he succeeded A. J. *Richelieu as prime minister. He continued Richelieu's policy and from now on practically ruled France till his death. It was widely believed that he married the Queen Mother, Anne of Austria. At the Peace of *Westphalia (1648) he was successful in enlarging French territory, but could not prevent the economic disintegration of his country or the civil wars of the Fronde (1648–53). He antagonized grands and parlementaires alike, and was attacked (mainly by the latter) in a series of venomous 'Mazarinades'. In 1651–2 he was temporarily banished. His refusal to allow his enemy de *Retz to reoccupy his see of Paris led to a long dispute with the Papacy. Towards the *Huguenots he pursued a policy of reconciliation, maintaining the edicts in their favour and employing their brilliant men in the service of France. In the *Jansenist controversy he furthered the acceptance of *Innocent X's constitution '*Cum Occasione' (1653). He maintained French influence in the Baltic, concluded a trade treaty with Oliver *Cromwell, continued the war against Spain with success, and eventually secured the marriage of Louis XIV to the Infanta, Maria Theresa, and the victorious Treaty of the Pyrenees (1659). Though he never received Major Orders, he held the see of Metz and a great number of abbeys, using their incomes to amass a large fortune. With part of this last he founded the Collège Mazarin for students from the four provinces which were added to France under his government, and bequeathed to it his valuable library. See also foll. entry.

Lettres du cardinal Mazarin pendant son ministère, ed. [P.] A. Chéruel–G. d'Avenel (9 vols., Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France publiés par les soins du Ministère de l'Instruction Publique, 1e sér., Histoire politique; 1872–1906). C. Moreau (ed.), Choix de Mazarinades (2 vols., Société de l'Histoire de France, 1853); id., Bibliographie des Mazarinades (2 vols., ib., 1850–51). Modern studies of Mazarin by A. Hassall ('Foreign Statesmen', 1903); K. Federn (Munich, 1922), with bibl.; U. Silvagni (Turin, 1928); and A. Bailly (Paris, 1935). H. Coville, Étude sur Mazarin et ses démêlés avec le pape Innocent X, 1644–1648 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Science historique et philologique, ccx; 1914). P. Jansen, Le Cardinal Mazarin et le mouvement janséniste français 1653–1659 d'après les documents inédits conservés dans les Archives du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France, 1967). G. Dethan, Mazarin et ses amis (1968), with unpublished letters. V. Tornetta, 'La politica del Mazzarino verso il Papato (1644–1646)' in Archivio storico italiano, xcix, Disp. iii–iv for 1941 (1942), pp. 86–116, and c, Disp. i–ii for 1942 (1943), pp. 95–134. E. H. Kossmann, La Fronde (Leidse historische Reeks, iii; Leiden, 1954). [P.] A. Chéruel, Histoire de France pendant la minorité de Louis XIV (3 vols., 1879); id., Histoire de France sous le ministère de Mazarin (3 vols., 1882), with reff. to earlier works. E. Lavisse, Histoire de France depuis les origines jusqu'à la révolution, vii (pt. 1; 1905), pp. 1–117, 'La Période mazarine'. G. Goyau in C.E., x (1911), p. 92 f., s.v.; V. L. Tapié in E.B. (ed. 1968), xv, p. 17 f.

MAZARIN BIBLE, The. So called from a copy in the library of Card. *Mazarin which first attracted the attention of scholars to this magnificent work, it is also known as the 'Gutenberg Bible', after J. *Gutenberg, its printer, or again as the '42-line Bible', from having that number of lines to each column. It is both the first full-length book ever printed, and the first printed edition of the Bible. Gutenberg contributed to it the technical inventions of making matrices and casting movable type from them; his experiments were financed by Johann Fust, a Mainz banker, and the design of the type-face was the work of Peter Schoeffer, a professional scribe. In 1455 this triple partnership was dissolved after a lawsuit; it is probable that the printing of the Bible occupied the years 1453–5 (one surviving copy bears notes that its 2 vols. had been rubricated and bound by 15 and 24 Aug. 1456). Following experiments with an earlier type (afterwards used by Gutenberg to print the '36-line Bible'), the text of the Latin *Vulgate began to be set up at Mainz on no less than six presses at once. During production, the number of copies to be printed was increased and parts therefore had to be re-set; also the number of lines per column was altered from 40 to 42 by filing down the body of the type, thus enabling more matter to be set in the same space.

Darlow–Moule, ii (1911), p. 905 f. See also works cited under Gutenberg, J.

MAZZOLINI, SYLVESTER. See Prierias, Sylvester.

MECHITARISTS. A community of *Uniat *Armenian monks, founded at *Constantinople in 1701. They live under a modified form of the *Benedictine Rule. Founded by Mechitar of Sebaste (1676–1749), an Armenian priest who had submitted to Rome and been ordained in the RC Church in 1696, the community was driven from Constantinople in 1703 and took refuge in Modon in the Morea, then Venetian territory. Upon the conquest of the Morea by the Turks, the Venetian senate gave the community the island of San Lazzaro, *Venice, where it settled in 1717. Another section of the community later established itself at Vienna. The Mechitarists devote themselves to study, education, and missionary work, and have issued many important Armenian publications from their printing-houses in Venice and Vienna. They use the Armenian liturgy.

V. Langlois, Notice sur le couvent arménien de l'île de S. Lazare (Venice, 1869; Eng. tr., Venice, 1874). V. Inglisian, Der Diener Gottes Mechitar von Sebaste. Stifter der Mechitaristen (der armenischen Benediktiner) und Kulturapostel der armenischen Volkes (Vienna, 1929) and other works of this author. Heimbucher, i, pp. 241–6. R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 497–502, s.v. 'Mékhitaristes'; E. El-Hayek in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 545, s.v.

MECHLIN, Conversations of. See Malines Conversations.

MECHTHILD, St. (c. 1210 – c. 1280), of Magdeburg, medieval German mystic and spiritual writer. Descended from a noble family in Saxony, in a desire for humiliations she left her home (c. 1230) and became a *Béguine at Magdeburg, where she led a life of prayer and penance. At the order of her *Dominican confessor she wrote down her visions (1250–69) under the title 'Das fliessende Licht der Gottheit'. Later she found refuge in the *Cistercian convent at Helfta (1270), where she added a further volume to her book. Her work, written in a forceful and poetic style, deeply influenced German medieval mysticism. Among her visions was a revelation of the *Sacred Heart. Her work, no longer extant in the original Low German, has survived in Middle High German and Latin translations.

She has often been confounded with St. MECHTILD OF HELFTA, or HACKEBORN, her contemporary. Feast day, 19 Nov.

The best text of her revelations is the Middle High German tr. of Henry of Nordlingen and the *Friends of God at Basle in 1344–5; the MS., discovered in 1860, was ed. by G. Morel (Ratisbon, 1869); Eng. tr. by Lucy Menzies (London, 1953), with introd. and bibl. J. Ancelot-Hustache, Mechtilde de Magdebourg, 1207–1282. Étude de psychologie religieuse (thesis, Paris, 1926). H. Neumann, 'Problemata Mechtildiana' in Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Litteratur, lxxxii (1948–50), pp. 143–72; id., 'Beiträge zur Textgeschichte des "Fliessenden Lichts der Gottheit" und zur Lebensgeschichte Mechthilds von Magdeburg' in Nachr. (Gött.) (1954), pp. 27–80, with bibl. reff. W. Preger, Geschichte der deutschen Mystik im Mittelalter, i (1874), pp. 91–112; Alice Kemp-Welch, Of Six Mediaeval Women (1913), pp. 57–82.

MEDE, JOSEPH (1586–1638), also 'Mead', Biblical scholar. He was a native of Berden in Essex and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1613, and where he remained for the rest of his life. He was a scholar of encyclopaedic knowledge. Though regarding the Pope as the antichrist, he admitted that the RC Church taught the principal doctrines of Christianity, and defended the sacrificial aspect of the Eucharist. Mede's best-known work, Clavis Apocalyptica (1627), is an interpretation of the Book of Rev. on the principle that its visions form an organic and related whole in chronological order; the Day of Judgement is a period of a thousand years of peace for the Church on earth. His millenarian doctrines were partly influenced by the astrological studies of his youth. Among his other writings are treatises Of the Name Altar (1637) and on The Apostasy of the Latter Times (1641).

Collected Works, 2 vols., London, 1648; enlarged ed. [by J. Worthington], 2 vols., ib., 1663–4; further extension, 2 vols., ib., 1672. Brief Life appended to his posthumously publd. Diatribae. Discourses on Divers Texts of Scripture (4 parts, 1643–52); Life, pt. iv, pp. 675 ff. [no pagination]. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), pp. 178–80, s.v. 'Mead'.

MEDINA, BARTOLOMEO (1527–80), Spanish *Dominican theologian. He taught theology first at the college of Alcalá, and from 1576 to his death as principal professor at the university of Salamanca; his main interest being centred upon commenting on St. *Thomas Aquinas. He has been given the title of 'Father of *Probabilism', though whether he was the real author of this doctrine is still a matter of controversy. His opinions on the subject are laid down in an essay inserted in his Commentary on the 'Prima Secundae' of St. Thomas, where he defends the view that of two opinions both of which are probable, though in an unequal degree, the less probable may be followed. This thesis was immediately taken up and defended by other Dominicans, esp. D. *Báñez, though in the subsequent development of the doctrine, in which the notion of the 'probable' was more and more enlarged, the *Jesuits had the main share in upholding it, whilst Dominican moralists came to reject it. See also Salmanticenses.

His Comm. on Summa Theol. II (2) was issued at Salamanca, 1577; on III, qq. 1–9, ib., 1578; and Breve Instruction de como se ha de administrar el sacramento de la penitencia (ib., 1580). I. G. Menéndez Reigada, 'El pseudo-probabilismo de Fray Bartolomé de Medina' in La Ciencia Tomista, xx (1928), pp. 35–57; M. M. Gorce, 'Le Sens du mot "Probable" et les origines du probabilisme' in Rev. S.R., x (1930), pp. 460–4; cf. J. de Blic, 'Barthélemy de Medina et les origines du probabilisme' in Ephemerides theologicae Lovanienses, vii (1930), pp. 46–83. M. M. Gorce in D.T.C., x (pt. i; 1928), cols. 481–5, s.v., with bibl.; T. Deman, ib., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 463–70, s.v. 'Probabilisme'.

MEDITATION. As the term is used by exponents of Christian spirituality, mental prayer in its discursive form. It is the type of mental prayer appropriate to beginners and as such accounted its lowest stage; and it is commonly contrasted with *Contemplation (q.v.). Its method is the devout reflection on a chosen (often Biblical) theme, with a view to deepening spiritual insight and stimulating the will and affections. Among the many methods of meditation advocated by modern schools of spirituality, that expounded by St. Ignatius Loyola in the Spiritual Exercises (originally intended for use by the novices of his Society) is widely used.

MEGILLOTH (Heb. מְגִלּוֹת, 'rolls'). The name given to five Books in the OT, all of them in the third and latest section of the OT *canon known as the 'Writings' ('*Hagiographa'), which were read by the Jews on certain feast days. They were the Song of *Solomon (read at the *Passover), *Ruth (at the Feast of *Weeks), the *Lamentations of Jeremiah (at the anniversary of the Chaldean destruction of *Jerusalem), *Ecclesiastes (at the Feast of *Tabernacles), and *Esther (at the Feast of *Purim).

MEINRAD, St. (d. 861), Patron of *Einsiedeln (q.v.). Born in the E. of *France, he became a monk at *Reichenau and for several years was active in teaching and pastoral work. In middle life he felt called to greater austerity, left his monastery and eventually settled at the spot in the Swiss forests where Einsiedeln ('hermitage') now stands, and here lived the life of a hermit for 25 years. A statue of the Virgin, given to him by a Benedictine abbess and placed in his chapel, is still venerated at Einsiedeln. He was put to death by two ruffians to whom he had given hospitality. His body was taken back to Reichenau and he became venerated as a martyr. Feast day, 21 Jan. His symbol is two ravens.

The earliest life was orig. ed. by S. Brandt (Basle, 1496); modern edd. by O. Holder-Egger in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 444–8, and O. Ringholz, O.S.B., Geschichte des fürstlichen Benediktinerstiftes U.L.F. Einsiedeln, i (Einsiedeln, etc., 1904), pp. 648–51; life written in 1378 by Gergius de Gengenbach, pr. ib., pp. 653–7. The Einsiedeln 'Blockbuch' of 1450, with legends of St. Meinrad, ed. G. Morell (ib., 1861); facsimile, with introd. by L. Helbling, O.S.B. (ib., 1961). K. Brandes, Der heilige Meinrad und Wallfahrt von Einsiedeln (ib., 1861; Fr. tr., 1861). O. Ringholz, O.S.B., Meinrads-Büchlein. Das Leben und Verehrung des Märtyrs von Einsiedeln (Einsiedeln, &c., 1905), pp. 1–80. Sankt Meinrad zum elften Zentenarium seines Todes 861–1961, ed. by the Benedictines of Einsiedeln, with preface by L. Helbling, O.S.B. (ib., 1961). See also works cited under Einsiedeln.

MEKITARISTS. See Mechitarists.

MELANCHTHON, PHILIPP (1497–1560), Protestant Reformer. His real name was 'Schwarzerd' and his mother was a niece of J. *Reuchlin. He studied at Heidelberg (from 1509) and *Tübingen (from 1512), and in 1518 became professor of Greek at *Wittenberg. Here he exercised a great influence, lecturing in the spirit of the Renaissance. He soon fell under the spell of M. *Luther, whose teachings he helped to cast into a more rational and systematic form. In 1519 he took part in the *Leipzig Disputation and a controversy with *Carlstadt followed. In 1521 he found himself the leader of the Reformation Movement during Luther's confinement in the Wartburg. The original edition of his Loci Communes (1521) was the first ordered presentation of Reformation doctrine. In the following years his energies were largely taken up with translating and commenting on the Bible. He took part in the Diet of *Speyer (1529) and the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529), at the latter strongly opposing the Eucharistic doctrine of H. *Zwingli. The leading figure at the Diet of *Augsburg (1530), he was mainly responsible for the Augsburg Confession, and great hopes were placed on his conciliatory spirit as a basis of restoring peace and unity. In 1537 he signed the *Schmalkaldic Articles with the reservation that he would accept the Papacy in a modified form. In his later years he was largely concerned in the organization of the Church of Saxony on a semi-episcopal basis and in the *Adiaphoristic, the *Cryptocalvinistic, and other controversies.

Melanchthon's attitude to Christianity was far more humanistic than that of most of the Reformers. He cared for learning as such, and left a deep mark on upper schools and universities, for which he wrote textbooks that lasted for several generations. His own doctrines went through many stages, which are reflected in the successive editions of his Loci Communes. His commentaries on Scripture broke new ground. They discarded the medieval 'four senses', treated the NT like the classics, and emphasized the need of history and archaeology for their understanding. He was always conciliatory, and at times even weak, for he advised both *Henry VIII and *Philip of Hesse to take two wives.

Collected Works and Letters ed. K. G. Bretschneider–E. Bindseil (Corpus Reformatorum, i–xxviii; Brunswick, 1834–1860), works omitted from this collection publd. as Supplementa Melanchthoniana (Leipzig, 1910 ff.). Selected Works ed. R. Stupperich (7 vols. in 8; Gütersloh, 1951 ff.). Separate modern edd. of Loci Communes by G. L. Plitt (Erlangen, 1864; rev. T. Kolder, ib., 1890; ed. 4, ib., 1925; Eng. tr. by C. L. Hill, Boston, Mass., 1944, and C. L. Manschreck, New York, 1965); of Der Unterricht der Visitatoren by H. *Lietzmann (1912); of Correspondence by O. Clemen (vol. i, all publd., 1926). Lives by R. Schaefer (Gütersloh, 1894), J. W. Richard (New York–London, 1898), G. Ellinger (Berlin, 1902), C. L. Manschreck (New York [1958]), and R. Stupperich (Berlin, 1960; Eng. tr., 1966). E. *Troeltsch, Vernunft und Offenbarung bei Johann Gerhard und Melanchthon (Göttingen Diss., 1891). H. Maier, An der Grenze der Philosophie (1909), pp. 1–139, 'Melanchthon als Philosoph'. O. Clemen, Studien zu Melanchthons Reden und Gedichten (1913). C. Hartfelder, Melanchthon als praeceptor Germaniae (1889). F. Hildebrandt, Melanchthon, Alien or Ally? (1946). P. Fraenkel, Testimonia Patrum. The Function of Patristic Argument in the Theology of Philip Melanchthon (Geneva, 1961). W. Maurer, Der junge Melanchthon zwischen Humanismus und Reformation (2 vols., Göttingen [1967–9]). W. Hammer, Die Melanchthonforschung im Wandel der Jahrhunderte (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, xxxv, xxxvi, xlix, etc.; 1967 ff.). Survey of works publd. 1945–65 by P. Fraenkel–M. Greschat (Geneva, 1967). O. Kirn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 513–48; J. Paquier in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 502–13; W. Maurer in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 834–41, s.v., with further bibl.

MELANIA, St. (c. 342 – c. 410), 'the Elder'. A Roman lady of aristocratic descent and great wealth, on the early death of her husband she adopted the ascetic life, left Rome in 372 for Egypt and Palestine, and founded a double monastery with *Rufinus of Aquileia on the Mount of *Olives. In 399 or 400 she returned to Italy. In 408 she fled before the Goths by way of Sicily and Africa to *Jerusalem, where she died.

The chief sources are the 'Life' of St. Melania the Younger (see below), and scattered reff. in *Palladius's Lausiac History and in the Epp. of *Jerome and *Paulinus of Nola. F. X. Murphy, C.SS.R., 'Melania the Elder: a Biographical Note' in Traditio, v (1947), pp. 59–77. W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 888 f. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

MELANIA, St. (c. 383–438), 'the Younger', grand-daughter of the preceding. She fled with her husband Pinian to Africa, where they founded two monasteries at Tagaste. Later they joined St. *Jerome and entered monasteries at *Bethlehem. After Pinian's death (431), Melania founded another monastery on the Mount of *Olives. She also visited *Constantinople, but returned to *Jerusalem to die. Feast day, 31 Dec.

Lat. life ed. [prob. H. *Delehaye, S.J.] in Anal. Boll., viii (1889), pp. 16–63 (incomplete); Gk. life ed. H. D[elehaye, S.J.], ib., xxii (1903), pp. 5–50, and, with Fr. tr., by D. Gorce (S.C., xc; 1962). Complete Lat. text, with Gk. text, ed. Card. M. Rampolla del Tindaro (Rome, fol., 1905; abridged Eng. tr. by E. Leahy, ed. H. Thurston, S.J., 1908). It is disputed whether the Gk. or Lat. text is the original; cf. A. d'Alès, 'Les Deux Vies de sainte Mélanie la Jeune' in Anal. Boll., xxv (1906), pp. 401–50. Lives by G. Goyau ('Les Saints', 1908) and Elina da Persico (Turin, 1909). W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 889, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 209–30, s.v. 'Mélanie la Jeune (Sainte)'.

MELCHIADES, St. See Miltiades, St.

MELCHIORITES. See Hoffmann, Melchior.

MELCHISEDECH. An alternative spelling of *Melchizedek (q.v.).

MELCHITES (or MELKITES). This term, derived from the Gk. form of the Syriac adjective mālkāyā, 'imperial', is used of those Christians of Syria and Egypt who, refusing *Monophysitism and accepting the Definition of Faith of the Council of *Chalcedon (451), remained in communion with the Imperial see of Constantinople as 'Emperor's men'. Today the term is applied to Christians of the Byzantine rite (whether Orthodox or *Uniat) belonging to the Patriarchates of Antioch, Jerusalem, and Alexandria. The Orthodox, most of whom are under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Antioch (resident in Damascus), number about ¾ million, while the Uniats (for whom there has been a separate hierarchy since 1684) number c. 400,000.

K. P. Karalevsky, Histoire des patriarcats melkites (Alexandrie, Antioch, Jérusalem) depuis le schisme monophysite du sixième siècle jusqu'à nos jours (tom. ii, fasc. 1; tom. iii, fascc. 1–2; all publd., Rome, 1909–11). A. *Fortescue, The Uniate Eastern Churches (1923), pp. 185–233. C. H. Malik in A. J. Arberry (ed.), Religion in the Middle East, i (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 297–346, and G. C. Anawati, ib., pp. 366–8. C. Karalevskij in D.H.G.E., iii (1924), cols. 563–703, s.v. 'Antioche'; R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 516–20, s.v.

MELCHIZEDEK. Acc. to Gen. 14. 18, the 'King of Salem' and 'Priest of the Most High God' who offered *Abraham bread and wine as he was returning from his defeat of the four kings. The only other mention of him in the OT occurs in Ps. 110. 4, where the King addressed is styled 'a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek'. Both these passages were used by the author of the Ep. to the Hebrews (6. 20; 7. 1 ff.) to prove the superiority of the priesthood of Christ, prefigured by Melchizedek, over that of Aaron and the Levites. From the time of *Clement of Alexandria (c. 200) onwards his offering of bread and wine has been regarded as a type of the Eucharist, esp. in the W., and *Cyprian argued from it the necessity of using wine, and not merely water, for the celebration of the Christian sacrifice. In the same connexion the name of Melchizedek was introduced into the Roman *Canon of the Mass, where his offering is mentioned together with those of Abel and Abraham as an acceptable sacrifice typifying that of Christ on the Cross. Another liturgical mention occurs in the first antiphon of the Second *Vespers of *Corpus Christi, where Christ is called in the words of Ps. 110 'Sacerdos in aeternum . . . secundum ordinem Melchisedech'. In the first Christian centuries several heretical interpretations of his person were condemned by the Fathers, e.g. the belief that he was a power of God superior to Christ (by St. *Epiphanius), that he was the Holy Ghost (by St. *Ambrose), and that he was an incarnation of the Logos (by *Marcus Eremita).

See Commentaries ad locc. G. Bardy, 'Melchisédech dans la tradition patristique' in R. Bibl., xxxv (1926), pp. 496–509, and xxxvi (1927), pp. 25–45; G. Wuttke, Melchisedek der Priesterkönig von Salem. Eine Studie zur Geschichte der Exegese (Beihefte zum Z.N.T.W., No. 5, 1927); A. Vaccari, S.J., 'Melchisedek, Rex Salem, proferens panem et vinum' in Verbum Domini, xviii (1938), pp. 208–14, 235–43; M. de Jonge–A. S. van der Woude, '11Q Melchizedek and the New Testament' in New Testament Studies, xii (1966), pp. 301–26. F. L. Horton, Jr., The Melchizedek Tradition.

A Critical Examination of the Sources to the Fifth Century A.D. and in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Cambridge, 1976).

On the 'Melchisedekians', described by Epiphanius (Haer., lv), see also G. Bardy in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 513–16, s.v. 'Melchisédéciens'.

MELITIAN SCHISMS. Two 4th cent. schisms go under this name:

(1) That due to Melitius (often, but wrongly, spelled 'Meletius'), Bp. of Lycopolis in Egypt. It arose out of Melitius's objections to the terms laid down by *Peter, Bp. of Alexandria, during a lull in the Diocletianic persecution c. 306, for the return of the lapsed to the Church. Thinking the conditions too lax, Melitius created disturbances, and ordained some of his supporters, whereupon he was excommunicated by Peter. After a further period of persecution, during which Peter was martyred and Melitius himself banished to the mines, he returned to Egypt and founded a schismatic Church with clergy of his own ordination.

The schism continued to flourish for several decades. At the *Council of Nicaea (325), where the matter was raised, it was determined that Melitian clergy should be allowed to continue their functions, but to be subordinate to *Alexander (who had meanwhile succeeded Peter). Their bishops, if legally elected, might take the places of the Catholic bishops when the latter died. Melitius himself was to retain the title of bishop, but to have no see. On the accession of St. *Athanasius (328), however, this arrangement broke down, as the Melitians, encouraged by *Eusebius of Nicomedia, again went into schism. Melitius was succeeded by John Arkaph of Memphis. The sect continued, and evidence for the life of Melitian monastic communities has come to light in a number of British Museum papyri. It seems to have survived as a small body down to the 8th cent.

(2) The 4th cent. schism at Antioch which followed the leadership of Melitius. See the next entry.

The chief authorities for the Egyptian Schism are the Melitian documents in the *Theodosian Codex (Ver. lx [58]); the papyri, ed., with introd., in H. I. Bell, Jews and Christians in Egypt (1924), pp. 38–99; scattered reff. in Athanasius; and *Epiphanius, Haer., lxviii. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius' in Nachr. (Gött.), 1905, pp. 164–87; F. H. Kettler, 'Der meletanische Streit in Ägypten' in Z.N.T.W., xxxv (1936), pp. 155–93. F. J. Foakes-Jackson in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), p. 538, s.v. 'Meletianism'; E. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 531–6; C. Vagaggini, O.S.B., in E.C., viii (1952), col. 640 f., s.v. 'Melezio (Melizio) di Licipoli'.

MELITIUS, St. (d. 381), Bp. of *Antioch from 360. He was translated from the see of Sebaste to Antioch in 360, and both *Arians and *Nicenes looked for his support. An orthodox inaugural sermon on Prov. 8. 22 led to his immediate exile by the Emp. Constantius; but when he returned in 362 under *Julian, he failed to secure the support of *Athanasius for his claim to the see. He was twice banished under Valens, from 365 to 366 and from 371 to 378, St. *Basil being unswerving in support for his claims, but Alexandria wavering and Rome hostile. He was finally restored in 378 and presided at the Council of *Constantinople of 381, during which he died. The schism at Antioch called by his name (not to be confused with the *Melitian Schism in Egypt half a century earlier) arose from the presence of two rival orthodox parties at Antioch which failed to co-operate. The supporters of *Eustathius (Bp. of Antioch c. 324–30) suspected the theology of Melitius and created the schism by securing the consecration of one Paulinus in 362. Though it lasted until after the death of Melitius, canonical right was on his side. Feast day, 12 Feb.

F. Cavallera, Le Schisme d'Antioche (1905), passim. G. Bardy, 'Le Concile d'Antioche (379)' in R. Bén., xlv (1933), pp. 196–213. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Kirchengeschichte des vierten Jahrhunderts' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiv (1935), pp. 129–213; repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, iv (1960), pp. 1–110. W. A. Jurgens, 'A Letter of Meletius of Antioch' in H.T.R., liii (1960), pp. 251–60. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 552–8, s.v., and E. Amann in D.T.C., x (1930), cols. 520–31, s.v., both with bibls.

MELITO, St. (d. c. 190), Bp. of Sardis. Apart from the fact that he made a visit to Palestine to visit the Holy Places, practically nothing is known of his life. He was described by *Polycrates (ap. *Eusebius, H.E., V. xxiv. 5) as one of the great lights of Asia and an upholder of *Quartodeciman practice, and the author of the '*Little Labyrinth' applauded him as an upholder of orthodox Christology. He was a prolific writer, but only fragments of his works were known until 1940, when C. Bonner published a work preserved in a papyrus shared between the *Chester Beatty collection and the University of Michigan. The work bore no title in this papyrus, but a further text found among the *Bodmer papyri (pubd. 1960) and also the Coptic and Georgian versions provide the title 'On the Pasch' (Περὶ Πάσχα, Peri Pascha). Its main theme is the new *Pasch inaugurated by Christ. The liturgical context appears to be the Quartodeciman Pasch, and there are interesting parallels with the Jewish Passover haggadah. There is much polemic against the Jews who crucified the Lord. The Christology of the work bears out Melito's reputation: he describes Christ as 'by nature God and man' (φύσει θεὸς ὢν καὶ ἄνθρωπος). There is an anti-Gnostic insistence on the true humanity of Christ and on the unity of the Old and New Covenants. Man was created a harmonious unity of body and soul, and Redemption consists in the restoration of this unity, which has been dissolved by sin and death. The surviving fragments of his other works include parts of an 'apology' addressed to the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius and a treatise on Baptism, which seems to owe something to Stoic sources. Melito's theology prob. influenced *Irenaeus and *Tertullian. Feast day, 1 Apr.

Crit. ed. with Fr. tr. of Peri Pascha and fragments of other works by O. Perler (S.C. cxxiii; 1966); and with Eng. tr. by S. G. Hall (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1979). Chester Beatty–Michigan papyrus of the Peri Pascha ed. C. Bonner (Studies and Documents, xii; Philadelphia–London, 1940); the Bodmer text by M. Testuz (Papyrus Bodmer xiii, Cologny–Geneva, 1960); and the Georgian version, with Eng. tr., by J. N. Birdsall in Muséon, lxxx (1967), pp. 121–38. Fragments also in J. C. T. Otto (ed.), Corpus Apologetarum, ix (Jena, 1872), pp. 374–8, 497–512; and in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2, Oxford, 1846), pp. 113–53. A. Wifstrand, 'The Homily of Melito on the Passion' in V.C., ii (1948), pp. 201–23; A. Grillmeier, S.J., '"Das Erbe der Söhne Adams" in der Homilia de Passione Melito's' in Scholastik, xx–xxiv (1949), pp. 481–502; F. L. Cross, The Early Christian Fathers, i (1960), pp. 103–9; R. Cantalamessa, O.F.M.C., 'Méliton de Sardes. Une christologie antignostique du IIe siècle' in Rev. S.R., xxxvii (1963), pp. 1–26; S. H. Hall, 'The Melito Papyri' in J.T.S., N.S., xix (1968), pp. 476–508. V. S. Pseftogas, Μελίτωνος Σάρδεων 'Τὰ περὶ τοῦ Πάσχα δύο' (Analecta Vlatadon, viii; 1971), with summary in French.

MELLITUS, St. (d. 624), Abp. of *Canterbury. Sent to England by St. *Gregory I in 601, he was consecrated by St. *Augustine missionary bishop for the East Saxons in 604, with London (where *Ethelbert built the church of St. Paul for him) as his headquarters. After some years, evangelization was arrested by the accession of kings of the East Saxons and of Kent who were hostile to Christianity, and Mellitus was forced to take refuge for a time in Gaul. In 619, soon after his return to England, he succeeded Laurentius as the third Abp. of Canterbury. Feast day, 24 Apr.

The main source is *Bede, H.E., i. 29 f. and ii. 3–7; cf. ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 78–90 passim. W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 90 f.

MELVILLE, ANDREW (1545–1622), Scottish *Presbyterian Reformer and theologian. He was born at Baldovie, nr. Montrose, and educated at St. Andrews, where he was the only member of the university who knew Greek. In 1564 he went to Paris to study oriental languages, and thence to Poitiers (1566), where he read civil law. The political troubles in France led him to retire to Geneva in 1569, where T. *Beza procured him the professorship of humanity at the Academy. On his return to Scotland in 1574 he became principal of Glasgow university. His educational reforms, which included a new plan of studies and the establishment of chairs in languages, science, philosophy, and theology, met with great success. He also took an active part in abolishing what was left of Episcopalianism. In 1575 he was entrusted with the drawing-up of the 'Second Book of *Discipline' (q.v.), which discarded the last traces of prelacy and was largely inspired by the Genevan model. In 1578 he was appointed commissioner for the visitation of St. Andrews, and in 1580 he became principal of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews. When Moderator of the General Assembly of 1582, he prosecuted R. Montgomery, one of the '*tulchan' bishops, who had accepted the see of Glasgow from the Duke of Lennox on condition that the bulk of the revenues should revert to the Duke. Thereby brought into opposition to *James VI [I], he was charged at Edinburgh in 1584 with treason, and fled to England to escape imprisonment and possible death. In 1585 he returned to Scotland, was again Moderator of the General Assembly in 1587, and became rector of St. Andrews in 1590. His attacks on the King's interference in religious matters led to the loss of his rectorship in 1597, but he was made Dean of the Theological Faculty at St. Andrews in 1599. After the accession of James to the English throne he again incurred the royal displeasure by insisting on the right of a free Assembly and was summoned to London in 1606. A sarcastic Latin poem on Anglican worship caused him to be charged before the Privy Council and confined to the Tower in 1607, whence he was released in 1611 on being offered the chair of Biblical theology at Sedan university. Here he spent the remaining years of his life. Though his bitter invective frequently marred the success of his work, his reform of the Scottish universities and of Scottish Presbyterianism are lasting achievements. Among his writings are Latin poems on Biblical subjects, the finest of which is the Carmen Mosis (1573); a treatise on Free-Will (1597); and a commentary on Romans (publd. 1850).

The standard modern work is the life by T. McCrie (2 vols. bound in 1; Edinburgh, 1819; ed. 2, 1823). Study by S. Mechie in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 37–48. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), pp. 230–7, with further refs.

MEMLING or MEMLINC, HANS (c. 1440–94), painter. A native of Seligenstadt on the Main, he was registered as a citizen of Bruges by 1465, and was among its wealthiest inhabitants. The legend that he became an inmate of St. John's Hospital is an 18th-cent. fabrication, though the Hospital possesses a fine collection of his works. His paintings, which are notable for their colour and harmony, include the Shrine of St. *Ursula, the Donne Triptych, formerly at Chatsworth and now in the National Gallery, London, as well as several Madonnas and other altarpieces.

Reproductions of his pictures, with introd. by K. Voll (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, xiv; 1909). Details of his 'Passionsaltar' at Lübeck ed. C. G. Heise (Hamburg, 1950). Studies by W. H. J. Weale (printed for the Arundel Society, 1865; also in the series 'The Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture', 1901, and, with H. C. Weale, in the series 'Masterpieces in Colour' [1909]), L. von Baldass (Vienna, 1942) and [K.] B. McFarlane (posthumously ed. E. Wind and G. Harriss; Oxford Studies in the History of Art and Architecture, 1971). M. J. Friedländer, Die altniederländische Malerei, VI (1928), pp. 9–70, with plates i–lxvi and suppl., XIV (1937), p. 102 f.; Eng. tr., VI (pt. 1; Leyden, 1971).

MEMORARE (Lat., 'Remember'). A widely used intercessory prayer addressed to the BVM. It is commonly ascribed to St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, prob. owing to a confusion with Claude Bernard ('The Poor Priest'; 1588–1641), who popularized the prayer; but its real author is unknown. The earliest known texts date from the late 15th cent. when they are embodied in a much longer prayer to the BVM. In 1846 Pope *Pius IX attached considerable indulgences to its recitation, and it is included in the 1849 ed. of the *Raccolta. The most popular Eng. version begins, 'Remember, O most loving Virgin Mary'.

N. Paulus, 'Das Alter des Gebetes Memorare' in Z.K.T., xxvi (1902), pp. 604–6. H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Memorare' in The Month, cxxxii (1918), pp. 269–78, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), No. ix, pp. 152–63, with refs.

MEMORIA. The name given in current RC liturgical documents to the least important of the three categories of *feast. The class is divided into obligatory and optional memoriae. See also Festum and Solemnitas.

MEMORIALE RITUUM. A Latin liturgical book, also known as the Rituale parvum, containing the forms traditionally used in the blessing of candles (for *Candlemas), ashes (for *Ash Wednesday), and palms (for *Palm Sunday), as well as the service for the last three days in *Holy Week in the shortened form usual in smaller RC parish churches. The book was first issued in 1725 by *Benedict XIII for use at Rome, and nearly a hundred years later (1821) approved by *Pius VII for the whole Church of the Roman rite. It has been rendered obsolete by *Pius XII's reordering of the Holy Week liturgy and subsequent changes.

P. Siffrin in E.C., viii (1952), col. 666 f., s.v.

MEMPHITIC. See Bohairic.

MEMRA (Aram. מֵימְרָא, 'word'). The word was used in a specifically theological sense in Jewish literature, esp. for the Divine creative Word (see Logos), manifesting God's power in the material world and in the human mind, and acting as His agent and as the mediator between God and men. In the *Targums 'Memra' is sometimes used where the OT has '*Jehovah', to avoid anthropomorphism. The Memra concept possibly underlies the 'Logos' or 'Word' of Jn. 1. 1–14.

MENAION (Gk. μηναῖον, from μήν, 'month'). In the E. Church, the name given to each of the twelve liturgical books (one for each month) which contain the variable parts of the Divine *Office for the immovable feasts. They correspond with the 'proprium sanctorum' in the W. The series begins with the Greek ecclesiastical year, in September. An appendix contains the rite for the saints which have no *proper office, corresponding to the 'commune sanctorum' of the Latin *Breviary. See also Menologion.

MENAS, St. (c. 3rd–4th cent.), Egyptian martyr. He was probably born and martyred in Egypt, but his story was apparently fused with that of a soldier executed in Phrygia under the Emp. *Diocletian, possibly another Menas, possibly St. Gordian. His reputed birthplace, to the south-west of Lake Mareotis, became an important pilgrimage centre, associated with miraculous cures by water. The church and town were excavated in 1905–8, and *ampullae bearing a figure of Menas between camels are common. He was held to be esp. the patron of merchants, and his cult spread to Constantinople, Rome, Gaul, and Germany. Feast day, 11 Nov.

'Acta S. Menae' (Gk. text, with Lat. tr.) in Anal. Boll., iii (1884), pp. 258–70. P. Devos, 'Un Récit des miracles de S. Ménas en copte et en éthiopien' in Anal. Boll., lxxviii (1960), pp. 154–60, with text; id., 'Le Juif et le Chrétien. Un miracle de saint Ménas', ib., pp. 275–308, with text and Fr. tr. The primary sources are the Reports of C. M. Kaufmann (3 vols., Cairo, 1906–8), who directed the Frankfurt expedition to the site. C. M. Kaufmann, Die Menasstadt und das Nationalheiligtum der altchristlichen Ägypter in der westalexandrinischen Wüste (1910); R. Miedema, De heilige Menas (Rotterdam, 1913). Margaret A. Murray, 'St. Menas of Alexandria' in Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, xxix (1907), pp. 25–30, 51–60, and 112–22 (with plates). H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'L'Invention des reliques de St. Ménas à Constantinople' in Anal. Boll. xxix (1910), pp. 117–50. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 324–97, s.v., with bibl.

MENAS, St. (d. 552), also Mennas, Patr. of Constantinople from 536. He was consecrated by the Pope *Agapetus (535–6) to succeed the *Monophysite, Anthimus. In 543 he presided over an anti-Origenist Council. At the beginning of the *Three Chapters' controversy (543) he subscribed with some hesitation to the Imperial Edict and forced his suffragans to do the same. But on their complaining to the vacillating Pope, *Vigilius (537–55), Menas was excommunicated, first in 547, and again in 551. In neither instance did the sentence last for long and he died in full communion with the Papacy. His patriarchate marks a high-water mark of Papal influence at Constantinople. Feast day, 25 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. V (1741), p. 164 f. The chief documents of Menas' patriarchate are calendared in V. Grumel, A.A., Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, I (i) (Socii Assumptionistae Chalcedonenses, 1932), pp. 94–8. W. M. Sinclair in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 902 f.

MENDICANT FRIARS. Members of those orders which were forbidden to own property in common. Unlike the monks, they work or beg for their living and are not bound to one convent by a vow of 'stability'. In the Middle Ages their activities were carried on chiefly in towns, and their privileges, esp. exemption from episcopal jurisdiction and extensive faculties for preaching and hearing confessions, aroused much hostility among the bishops and the secular clergy as well as in the universities. Opposition was particularly strong at *Paris, where it was led by William of St. Amour and where St. *Thomas Aquinas and St. *Bonaventure wrote in their defence. In 1256 the dispute was settled in their favour by Alexander IV.

Originally restricted to the *Franciscans and *Dominicans, the name and privileges of Mendicant Friars were given to the *Carmelites by *Innocent IV in 1245, to the Hermits of St. *Augustine by Alexander IV in 1256, and to the *Servites by *Martin V in 1424, several other orders following later. Acc. to the *Codex (can. 621), friars who are still mendicant in fact are allowed, with the permission of their superiors, to beg for alms in the dioceses where their houses are situated; in other dioceses they have to ask the permission of the bishop.

F. Vernet, Les Ordres mendiants (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses, 1933). L. Gillet, Histoire artistique des ordres mendiants. Étude sur l'art religieux en Europe du XIIIe au XVIe siècle (1912). Y. J. M. Congar, 'Aspects ecclésiologiques de la querelle entre mendiants et séculiers dans la seconde moitié du XIIIe siècle et le début du XIVe' in A.H.D.L.M.A., xxxvi for 1961 (1962), pp. 35–151, with further reff. See further bibl. under separate Mendicant Orders.

MENNONITES, the followers of Menno Simons (1496–1561), from whom they take their name. At one time parish priest in Dutch Friesland, he renounced his connexions with the RC Church in 1536 and joined the *Anabaptists, then suffering severe persecution and obloquy after the attempted Kingdom of the Saints at Münster. For twenty-five years he shepherded and reorganized the stricken companies in Holland and the neighbouring territories. His views, which were similar to those of the Swiss Brethren, included stress on believers' baptism, a connexional type of Church organization with an emphasis on the responsibilities and rights of the local congregation, a rejection of Christian participation in the magistracy, and non-resistance. John *Smyth and other English Separatist exiles in Holland were in friendly touch with Mennonites. In the 17th and 18th cents. the Mennonites became a numerous and influential community in Holland; certain branches adopted *Socinian views. The number of Mennonites in 1980 was said to be over 643,000. Of these there were about 25,500 in Holland, 10,000 in Germany, and perhaps 55,000 in the U.S.S.R. There were 89,000 in Canada, 228,000 in the United States (where there has been much internal division), and perhaps some 14,000 in Mexico.

Common ground of the different Mennonite communities is the rejection of Church organization, *Infant Baptism, and the *Real Presence in the Eucharist. Every congregation is independent and the Lord's Supper is administered by elders chosen by the community; and both men and women may preach. Most of them refuse military service and the taking of the oath and any public office. On the other hand, they recognize no common doctrine, so that some of them are practically Unitarian in their views while others hold the doctrine of the Trinity.

Anna Brons, Ursprung, Entwicklung und Schicksale der Altevangelischen Taufgesinnten oder Mennoniten in kurzen Zügen übersichtlich dargestellt (Norden, 1884). C. H. A. van der Smissen (ed.), Kurzgefasste Geschichte und Glaubenslehre der Altevangelischen Taufgesinnten oder Mennoniten (Summerfield, Ill., 1895). C. H. Wedel, Abriss der Geschichte der Mennoniten (4 vols., Newton, Kansas, 1900–4). J. C. Wenger, Glimpses of Mennonite History (Scottdale, Pa., 1940). R. Friedmann, Mennonite Piety through the Centuries. Its Genius and its Literature (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, vii; Goshen, Indiana, 1949); C. J. Dyck (ed.), An Introduction to Mennonite History (Scottdale, 1967). H. S. Bender, Two Centuries of American Mennonite Literature (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, i; Goshen, 1929). The Complete Writings of Menno Simons c. 1496–1561 translated from the Dutch by L. Verduin, ed. J. G. Wenger, with biography by H. S. Bender (Scottdale, Pa., [1956]). Further life of Menno Simons in English by J. Horsch (ib., 1916). The Mennonite Encyclopedia, ed. H. S. Bender and others (4 vols., ib., 1955–9). S. Cramer in P.R.E., xii (1903), pp. 594–616, s.v. 'Mennoniten'; cf. id., ib., pp. 586–94, s.v. 'Menno Simons'. W. J. Kühler in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 551–4, s.v., with bibl.

MENOLOGION (Gk. μηνολόγιον, from μήν, 'month'). In the E. Church, a liturgical book containing the lives of the saints, arranged by months throughout the ecclesiastical year (which begins with September). The word is used in a variety of senses, being applied to several distinct books current in the E. Church corresponding to the description just given, e.g. counterparts of the W. '*Proper of the Saints' (the 'Menaion', q.v.), '*Martyrology, and '*Acta Sanctorum'. One of the most celebrated menologia is that compiled by *Simeon Metaphrastes. The term has also been applied (in the W.) to private non-liturgical collections of the lives of saintly persons. See also Synaxarion.

[H. *Delehaye, S.J.,] 'Le Synaxaire de Sirmond' in Anal. Boll., xiv (1895), pp. 149–434; [id.,] 'Les Ménologes grecs', ib., xvi (1897), pp. 311–29; [id.,] 'Le Ménologe de Métaphraste', ib., xvii (1898), pp. 448–52. Id., AA.SS., Propylaeum ad Nov. (1902), pp. iv–lxxvi. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., x (1911), p. 191 f., s.v. 'Menologium'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 419–30, s.v. See also bibl. to Simeon Metaphrastes.

MENSA (Lat., 'table'). In early Christian times the word was applied esp. to the large tablets of stone set over or near a grave, and used apparently for receiving food for meals in memory of the deceased. A large number of such mensae have been recovered from N. Africa, and in recent times also from N. Germany (Bonn, Xanten). In Africa their use was widespread among the pagans, and the superstitious and unbecoming nature of the associated rites led St. *Augustine and other Christian theologians to denounce them.

The word is also in common use among liturgists for the flat stone which forms the top of an altar. Acc. to modern RC requirements, it should normally be of stone, but may be of other solid material (Ordo Missae, General Instruction, 263).

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 440–53, s.v. On the use of the word in the second sense, see Braun, C.A., i (1924), pp. 245–316, with pll. 41–5.

MENTAL PRAYER. See Meditation.

MENTAL RESERVATION. The conflict which may arise between the duty of telling the truth and that of keeping a secret has caused the development of the doctrine of mental reservation. RC moral theology distinguishes between restrictio pure mentalis ('strict mental reservation') and restrictio late mentalis ('wide mental reservation'). In the former a qualification is added mentally which completely alters the statement pronounced, so that the hearer is necessarily deceived; and in this form it was condemned by *Innocent XI in 1679. In the 'wide mental reservation', on the other hand, words are used which, acc. to the circumstances, are susceptible of more than one interpretation, without the speaker giving an indication as to the sense in which he uses them. The strict mental reservation may be used when the person who puts a question has no right to the truth, or else only where a professional secret is involved, as, e.g., in the case of a priest denying knowledge of a fact with the mental reservation 'apart from confession'. In instances such as these the deception of the hearer is allowable for a good reason and involves no sin on the part of the speaker. In an extreme form, it was developed by the *Jesuit theologian J. Caramuel, in his Haplotes de restrictionibus mentalibus (Leyden, 1672).

MERBECKE or MARBECK, JOHN (d. c. 1585), English divine and musician. Appointed organist at St. George's Chapel, *Windsor, in 1541, he was condemned to the stake for heresy in 1544, because he had written the first *concordance in English of the Bible. He was pardoned, however, through the influence of Bp. Stephen *Gardiner, and the concordance was published in 1550 with a dedication to *Edward VI. In 1550 he produced his Book of Common Prayer Noted, in which the plainchant is adapted to Edward VI's first (1549) liturgy. He continued his musical and theological studies for some years and apparently died about 1585. His son, Roger Merbecke (1536–1605), provost of Oriel College, Oxford, was chief physician to Queen *Elizabeth I.

E. H. Fellowes, The Office of the Holy Communion as set by John Merbecke (1949). Id. in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), v (1954), pp. 561–3, s.v. 'Marbeck'.

MERCATI, GIOVANNI (1866–1957), Prefect of the *Vatican Library. Born in 1866 at Villa Gaida in the province of Reggio Emilia, he was ordained priest in 1889, and from 1893 until 1919 was on the staff of the 'Bibliotheca *Ambrosiana' at Milan. In 1898 he was nominated Scriptor of the Greek Language at the Vatican Library, pro-Prefect in 1918, and Prefect in 1919. In 1936 he was created cardinal. Mercati wrote innumerable studies, esp. on matters of Patristic and palaeographical interest; and he was one of the editors of the Catalogue of the Vatican Gk. MSS. (1923 ff.).

His brothers, ANGELO MERCATI (1870–1955) and SILVIO GIUSEPPE MERCATI (1877–1963), were also distinguished scholars.

Mercati's chief papers to date assembled in Opere minori raccolte in occasione del settantesimo natalizio sotto gli auspicii de S.S. Pio XI., ed. A. M. Albareda, O.S.B. (S.T., lxxvi–lxxx; 5 vols., 1937–41), with biog. notice and bibliography [for years 1890–1941] in vol. lxxx. Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati (S.T., cxxi–cxxvi; 6 vols., 1946). Further list of his works in Nel novantesimo anno del cardinale Mercati 1866–1956 (Vatican, 1956), pp. 57–130. P. Simonelli, Il Card. Giovanni Mercati. Profilo biografico (Reggio Emilia, 1956). There was also a commemorative volume ed. L. Donati in La Bibliofilia, lx (1958; issued separately, Florence, 1959).

Angelo Mercati's Saggi di storia e letteratura collected at Rome, vol. i, 1951. Volumes in his honour in S.T., clxv, 1952, and Fontes Ambrosiani, xxx (Milan, 1956), with list of his works, pp. 7–25. Volumes in honour of S. G. Mercati in Studi Bizantini e Neoellenici, ix (1957), with list of his works, pp. ix–xxiii, and xi (1964), and Byzantion, xxxiv (1964).

MERCATOR, MARIUS. See Marius Mercator.

MERCEDARIANS. A religious order of men founded c. 1220 by St. *Peter Nolasco (hence also known as 'Nolascans') with the twofold object of tending the sick and rescuing Christians who had been taken prisoner by the Moors. They owed their rule to St. *Raymond of Peñafort. In addition to the usual three vows, a fourth was added pledging them to offer their own persons as hostages if needed for the redemption of Christian captives. They rapidly spread through W. Europe, and as some of their members accompanied Columbus to the New World, many of their houses became established in Latin America. A corresponding order of nuns was founded at Seville in 1568. In modern times the two orders have declined in numbers and influence. They took their name from their dedication to Our Lady of Mercy (Orden de Nuestra Señora de la Merced).

A. Remon, Mercedarian, Historia general de la orden de Nuestra Señora de la Merced Redención de Cautivos (2 vols., Madrid, 1618); M. Salmerón, Mercedarian, Recuerdos históricos y políticos de los servicios que los generales y varones ilustres de la religión de Nuestra Señora de la Merced, Redención de Cautivos (Valencia, 1646). M. Even, Une Page de l'histoire de la charité dans l'Église catholique. L'Ordre de la Merci pour la Rédemption des Captifs (ed. 2, revised and enlarged for the 7th centenary of the foundation of the Order; Rome, 1918). F. D. Gazulla Galve, Mercedarian, La orden de Nuestra Señora de la Merced. Estudios histórico-críticos, 1218–1317 (1934). P. N. Pérez, Mercedarian, Religiosos de la Merced que pasaron a la América Española, 1514–1777 (Seville, 1924). V. M. Barriga, Mercedarian, Los Mercedarios en el Perú en el siglo XVI. Documentos inéditos del Archivo General de Indias, i (Roma, 1933); id., Mercedarios ilustres en el Perú (2 vols., Arequipa, 1943–9). Heimbucher, i, pp. 571–6, with detailed bibl. A. Morales, Mercedarian, in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 669 f., s.v.

MERCERSBURG THEOLOGY. A school of thought originating in one of the smaller *Reformed Churches in America (the 'German Reformed Church'). It attempted to oppose the emotionalism of the mid-19th cent. by bringing American Protestant theology more into line with Continental European trends, restoring the faith of the early Reformers and stressing the importance of doctrine, esp. Christology and sacramental theology. The name derives from the small town of Mercersburg in the Appalachian foothills in Pennsylvania, in which Marshall College and the Theological Seminary of the German Reformed Church were situated. The movement originated with the work of J. W. *Nevin, who invited Frederick Rausch (1806–41) and P. *Schaff from Germany to join him. It came into prominence with the publication of Nevin's work, The Anxious Bench (1842), which attacked the current methods of revivalist preaching. The stress which Nevin and his colleagues laid on the need for liturgical renewal and their teaching about the 'Mystical Presence' of Christ in the Eucharist have led to comparisons with the *Oxford Movement in England, but it seems that the Mercersburg theologians drew their inspiration from contemporary thought in Germany. See also Nevin, J. W.

Extracts, mainly from the works of Nevin and Schaff, ed., with introd., by J. H. Nichols, The Mercersburg Theology (New York, 1966). L. J. Binkley, The Mercersburg Theology (Lancaster, Pa., 1953); J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology. Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961).

MERCIER, DÉSIRÉ JOSEPH (1851–1926), Belgian philosopher and prelate. Educated at Malines and Louvain and ordained to the priesthood in 1874, in 1877 he became Prof. of Philosophy at the Petit Séminaire at Malines and in 1882 first Prof. of Thomist Philosophy at Louvain. From the first he was an ardent promoter of the Thomist revival heralded by Aeterni Patris* (1879), esp. interesting himself in the application of Thomist principles to modern science. The new school ('Neo-Scholasticism') developed in conscious opposition both to the Scientific *Positivism of J. S. Mill and H. *Spencer and to the Neo-Kantian Idealism. Under Mercier's inspiration an Institute of Philosophy was founded at Louvain which gave a prominent place to experimental methods. Mercier expounded his own philosophical position in a tetralogy—Psychologie (1892), Logique (1894), Métaphysique (1894), and Critériologie (1899). He was also mainly responsible for the Revue Néoscolastique de Philosophie (1894 ff.).

In 1906 Mercier was made Abp. of Malines and in 1907 created a cardinal. He was in many ways a model prelate, ever concerned for the spiritual life of his clergy and people. He naturally had little interest in the activist philosophy of the *Modernist school; and in his Lenten Pastoral for 1908 he denounced G. *Tyrrell, who replied in his Medievalism (1908). During the World War of 1914–18 he strenuously upheld Belgian interests against the German invaders, and encouraged resistance by his own example. Prompted by his desire for the promotion of Christian unity, he was the leading spirit on the RC side in the Conversations at *Malines (1921, 1923, 1925, q.v.), which were cut short by his death.

Mercier's correspondence with the German Government during the occupation, 1914–18, ed. F. Mayence (Brussels, 1919; Eng. tr. as Cardinal Mercier's Own Story, 1920). His Œuvres pastorales were publd. in 7 vols., Brussels–Louvain, 1911–29. Commemorative vol. under the title Le Cardinal Mercier (1851–1926), publd. Brussels, 1927, with list of his works, pp. 341–72. Other lives include those by G. Ramaekers (Brussels, 1926), H. L. Dubly (Paris, 1927; Eng. tr., 1928), A. P. Laveille (Paris, 1927; Eng. tr., New York, 1928), J. A. Gade (New York, 1934), and A. Simon (Brussels, 1960). A. Bolton, A Catholic Memorial of Lord Halifax and Cardinal Mercier (1935), esp. pp. 109–37. J. J. Harnett, 'Désiré Mercier and the Neo-Scholastic Revival' in The New Scholasticism, xviii (1944), pp. 303–33. The centenary of his birth was marked by celebrations at Louvain; a commemorative vol. was prepared by L. de Raeymaeker and others, Le Cardinal Mercier. Fondateur de l'Institut Supérieur de Philosophie à l'Université de Louvain [1952]. A. Simon, Position philosophique du cardinal Mercier. Esquisse psychologique (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe de Lettres. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, deuxième série, lvi, fasc. 1; 1962).

MERCY, Corporal Works of. See Corporal Works of Mercy.

MERCY, Sisters of. See Sisters of Mercy.

MERCY, Spiritual Works of. See Spiritual Works of Mercy.

MERCY-SEAT. In the Jewish Temple, the covering of solid gold laid on the '*Ark of the Covenant' which was conceived to be God's resting-place. The Hebrew (כַּפֹּרֶת), Greek (LXX, ἱλαστήριον), and Latin (*Vulgate, propitiatorium) words are all connected with the idea of 'propitiation'. The AV rendering 'mercy seat' goes back to W. *Tyndale's version, following M. *Luther's Gnadenstuhl.

G. A. *Deissmann in E.Bl., iii (1902), cols. 3027–35, s.v.; J. Herrmann–F. Büchsel in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 319–24, s.v. ἱλαστήριον. See also bibl. to Ark (2).

MERIT. In the theological sense of the term, 'merit' designates man's right to be rewarded for a work done for God. The conception has its foundation in the Bible, where both in the OT and in the NT rewards are promised to the just for their good works (e.g. Exod. 23. 20–22, Deut. 5. 28–33 and passim. Mt. 5. 3–12, 6. 4, 6. 19 f., 7. 21). The term appears to have been first employed by *Tertullian, who already recognizes diversity of merit followed by diversity of reward, 'Quomodo multae mansiones apud Patrem si non pro varietate meritorum?' (Scorp. 6). This doctrine was endorsed by *Cyprian, *Augustine (partly), and the later Fathers, until the theology of merit was fully developed by the Schoolmen. These last distinguish two kinds of merit, meritum de condigno and meritum de congruo. *Condign merit confers a claim to reward due in justice to services rendered, whilst *congruous merit may only claim the reward on grounds of fitness. In the relation between God and man, condignity of merit in the strict sense is impossible owing to the creature's absolute dependence on the Creator. It is, however, admitted in the sense that God, by His free promise, has bound Himself to confer rewards on certain works. The following are the conditions to be fulfilled in order to obtain merit de condigno. The work must be morally good, be done freely, be assisted by actual grace, performed with a supernatural motive (whether with charity or whether faith alone is sufficient is contested by theologians) in the sphere of this life (in statu viae), be done in the state of grace, and, lastly, God must have promised to reward it. Merit de congruo is held to be conferred on similar conditions except for the state of grace, which is not considered always necessary.

The traditional doctrine of merit was repudiated by the Reformers, esp. by M. *Luther, who taught the sinfulness of all human works whether done before or after justification. Most subsequent Protestant theology has denied that merit is a valid Christian category. The medieval doctrine was reformulated by the Council of *Trent, which, while maintaining the impossibility of meriting the initial grace of justification, emphasized the reality of human merit, based on the supernatural life communicated by Christ as the Head to the members of His Mystical Body.

H. Schultz, 'Der sittliche Begriff des Verdienstes und seine Anwendung auf das Verständnis des Werkes Christi' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, lxvii (1894), pp. 7–50, 245–314, 553–614. K. H. Wirth, Der 'Verdienst'-Begriff in der christlichen Kirche (2 vols., 1892–1901; on Tertullian and Cyprian). P. de Letter, S.J., De Ratione Meriti secundum Sanctum Thomam (Analecta Gregoriana, xix; 1939). J. Kunze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xx (1908), pp. 500–8, s.v. 'Verdienst'; R. S. Franks in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 561–5, s.v. 'Merit (Christian)'; J. Rivière in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 574–85, s.v. 'Mérite', with extensive bibl.; C. S. Sullivan in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 683–6, s.v.

MERLE D'AUBIGNE, JEAN HENRI (1794–1872), Swiss historian of the *Reformation. The son of French Protestant refugee parents, he studied at Berlin under J. A. W. *Neander and W. M. L. *de Wette. After taking charge of the French Protestant church in Hamburg from 1819 to 1823, he became pastor to a congregation and court preacher at Brussels. In 1831 he returned to Geneva as professor of Church history in the new theological faculty. Here he wrote his Histoire de la Réformation du XVIe siècle (5 vols., 1835–53). Written in an easy and graphic style, the book won great popularity; but its author's enthusiasm sometimes overrode the demands of historical accuracy. His Histoire de la Réformation en Europe au temps de Calvin (8 vols., 1863–78) was a more finished, if less popular, work.

J. Winkler, Der Kirchenhistoriker Jean Henri Merle d'Aubigné (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, xii; 1968), with extensive bibl. –. Duchemin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 637–43.

MERRY DEL VAL, RAFAEL (1865–1930), Cardinal. The son of Don Rafael Merry del Val, secretary to the Spanish Legation in London, he was educated by the *Jesuits at Namur and Brussels, at Ushaw College, *Durham (1883–5), and at the Roman Accademia dei Nobili (1885–1891). He was ordained priest in 1888. Singled out by *Leo XIII for the Papal service, he became secretary to the commission which pronounced against *Anglican Ordinations (1896). In 1897 he was entrusted with important negotiations in *Canada on the schools question which arose out of the Manitoba Laws of 1890. In 1900 he became titular Abp. of *Nicaea. In 1903 he was created Cardinal and also Secretary of State by *Pius X, with whose intransigent policy (Loi de Séparation in France, anti-*Modernism) he became closely identified. After he had ceased to be Secretary of State, in acc. with custom, on the Pope's death, he became Secretary of the *Holy Office, where he unobtrusively exercised great influence. He had a strong pastoral sense; and he often regretted that his career gave him only limited scope (e.g. through spiritual correspondence) for its exercise. His tomb in the crypt of St. Peter's, Rome, near that of Pius X, is inscribed 'Da mihi animas. Caetera tolle.'

Life by P. Cenci (Rome, 1933, with preface by E. Pacelli, afterwards *Pius XII); popular life based on Cenci by V. Dalpiaz, Attraverso una porpora (1935; Eng. tr., 1937). Other studies by F. A. Forbes (London, 1932), Isabel F. de Lemus (Madrid, 1956), Marie C. Buehrule (London, 1957), and H. Mitchell (Paris, 1957).

MERSCH, EMIL (1890–1940), *Jesuit theologian. He was ordained priest at Louvain in 1917 and taught philosophy at Namur from 1920 to 1935. Throughout his life his aim was to construct a theological synthesis in terms of the 'Mystical Body of Christ'. In Le Corps mystique de Christ. Études de théologie historique (2 vols., Louvain, 1933; Eng. tr., The Whole Christ, Milwaukee, 1938; London, 1949), he traced the development of the doctrine of the Church, so understood, through history; in La Théologie du corps mystique (ed. J. Levie, S.J.; 2 vols., Louvain, 1946; posthumous; Eng. tr., 1951) he expounded the doctrine from a more systematic standpoint. He was killed at Lens in an air attack on 23 May 1940.

Memoir by J. Levie, S.J., prefixed to Mersch's La Théologie du corps mystique, I, pp. vii–xxxiii, with full list of Mersch's writings, pp. xxxi–xxxiii. Full ed. of his introd. to La Théologie du corps mystique, which was abridged in the 1946 ed., issued as Le Christ, l'homme et l'univers (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, lvii; 1962). G. Dejaifve, S.J., 'La Théologie du corps mystique du P. Em. Mersch' in Nouvelle Revue Théologique, lxxvii (1945), pp. 408–16.

MERSENNE, MARIN (1588–1648), French philosopher, scientist, and theologian. He was educated at the *Jesuit College at La Flèche, where he formed a lifelong friendship with his younger fellow-pupil, R. *Descartes. In 1611 he joined the *Minims and finally settled in 1620 at the convent of L'Annonciade at Paris. Though himself the author of several works, among them Quaestiones celeberrimae in Genesim (1623), L'Impiété des déistes (1624), and La Vérité des sciences (1624), 'Père Mersenne' (as he was universally known) fills a place in the history of modern philosophy which rests on the links that he forged by his friendship and correspondence between many of the leading French philosophers and scientists of his day. In this way he did much to foster the new scientific movement and also to prevent it from developing in an anti-religious direction.

Correspondance de Mersenne, crit. ed. by Mme P. Tannery and C. de Waard and others (Paris, 1932 ff.; ed. 2, 1969 ff.). Contemporary life by Hilarion de Coste (Paris, 1649; new ed. by B. T. de Sarroque, with unpublished letters, Paris, 1932). R. Lenoble, Mersenne ou la naissance du mécanisme (1943). H. Ludwig, Marin Mersenne und seine Musiklehre (1935). Series of articles on Mersenne in Revue d'histoire des Sciences et de leurs applications, ii (1948), pp. 5–89. Überweg, iii, pp. 172, 180–2, 649. E. Dumoutet in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), col. 788 f.

MESHA, Inscription of. See Moabite Stone.

MESONYKTIKON (Gk. μεσονυκτικόν). In the E. Church, the Midnight Office. There is no exactly corresponding service in the Roman rite.

MESROB, St. (c. 345–440), historian and Patr. of *Armenia. Over a long period he was co-adjutor-bishop to the patriarch Sahak, and on Sahak's death in 440 succeeded to the office, but died himself within less than six months. Zealous for a Christian national culture in Armenia, he made it one of his main objects to eliminate from Armenian life all traces of Syriac institutions. His ardent love of learning induced him to compose for the Armenians an alphabet which was adopted in 406; and, gathering round him a band of keen scholars (among them, acc. to a doubtful tradition, *Moses of Chorene), he sent some of his disciples as far as Rome in search of MSS. of the Scriptures and of ecclesiastical and profane writers. In the Armenian Bible, based on the Syriac and issued c. 410, Mesrob was himself the translator of the NT and Prov.; and later (c. 433) he assisted in its revision with the use of Gk. MSS. He also did much to encourage the development of monastic institutions. Feast days in the Armenian *menology, 19 Feb. and 25 Nov. (the latter also in W. calendars).

Armenian lives, of uncertain trustworthiness, by Koriun, his pupil (ed. Venice, 1833), and by Lazarus Pharbetzi. Many sermons, theological discourses, hymns, and other writings which pass under the name of *Gregory the Illuminator are prob. the work of St. Mesrob. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 197–201. J. Marquart, Über den Ursprung des armenischen Alphabets in Verbindung mit der Biographie des heiligen Mast'oc' (Vienna, 1917). F Feydit, Considérations sur l'alphabet de saint Mesrop (Studien zur armenischen Geschichte, xi; 1964). J. Karst in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 789–92. P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (Rome, 1967), cols. 374–9, s.v. 'Mesrop', with extensive bibl.

MESSALIANS, also known as the Euchites (Εὐχῖται), a pietistic mendicant sect. Their name is derived from a Syriac word which, like the corresponding Greek, means 'praying people'. They appear to have originated in Mesopotamia soon after the middle of the 4th cent. and to have spread to Syria, Asia Minor, Thrace, &c., and later to Egypt. They were attacked by *Amphilochius of Iconium, Flavian of Antioch, and St. *Epiphanius, and condemned at the Council of *Ephesus of 431. They survived, however, down to the 7th cent. They held that in consequence of Adam's sin everyone had a demon substantially united with his soul, and that this demon, which was not expelled by baptism, was completely liberated only by concentrated and ceaseless prayer, the aim of which was to eliminate all passion and desire. Those who had in this way become spiritual and perfect received an immediate vision of the Holy Trinity. The Messalians also laid great stress on the efficacy of ascetic practice. In recent years there has been much debate about the connections with Messalianism of the writings of *Diadochus, *Gregory of Nyssa and the Pseudo-*Macarius.

The earliest mention of the sect is in *Ephraem Syrus, Hom., xxii, against heresy; fuller details (but unreliable) in Epiphanius, Haer., lxxx ('Contra Messalianos'). The main sources are conveniently collected by M. Kmosko in the preface to his ed. of the 'Liber Graduum' in Patrologia Syriaca (ed. R. Graffin), iii (Paris, 1926), cols. clxxi–ccxciii. I. Hausherr, S.J., 'L'Erreur fondamentale et la logique du messalianisme' in O.C.P., i (1935), pp. 328–60. F. Dörr, Diadochus von Photike und die Messalianer (Freiburger Theologische Studien, xlvii; 1937); E. des Places, S.J., in his introd. to his ed. of Diadochus's Œuvres spirituelles (S.C., vb; 1955), pp. 12–22; H. Dörries, Symeon von Mesopotamien. Die Überlieferung der messalianischen 'Makarios' Schriften (T.U., lv, Hft. 1; 1941); R. Staats, Gregor von Nyssa und die Messalianer (Patristische Texte und Studien, viii; 1968). G. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xii (1903), pp. 661–4, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 792–5, s.v.; E. Peterson in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 841 f., s.v.; A. Guillaumont in Dict. Sp., x (1980), cols. 1074–83, s.v. See also other works cited under Macarius.

MESSIAH (מָשִׁיחַ, lit. 'anointed'). The term denotes a person invested by God with special powers and functions. It was rendered into Greek by χριστός (from χρίω, 'anoint'), from which the title '*Christ' derives.

In the OT the term could be applied to anyone set apart for any special function, such as the priest in Lev. 4. 3, 5, who is described as 'the priest that is anointed'. It was however used more particularly of the king, who was conceived as anointed by divine command (cf. 1 Sam. 10. 1); and his person, as 'the Lord's anointed', was held to be sacrosanct (1 Sam. 24. 6). After the promise made to *David through the prophet Nathan that the throne of his 'seed' should be established 'for ever' (2 Sam. 7. 12–13), the whole Davidic dynasty came to be regarded as especially chosen by God (2 Sam. 22. 51; Ps. 89. 35 f.). Nevertheless, the term could still be used of other people, such as the patriarchs (1 Chron. 16. 22) or even a pagan like Cyrus (Is. 45. 1). Under the later monarchy, when the kingdom was threatened by Assyria and Babylon, the appearance of a future king of the house of David, whose rule would be glorious, wise and secure, was foretold by *Isaiah and

*Jeremiah; and after Jerusalem had fallen *Ezekiel, in exile, had no doubt that the restored Israel in Palestine would be shepherded by 'my servant David' (Ezek. 34. 23 f.; 37. 24 f.). Immediately after the return from exile it seemed possible that the kingship might be restored in the person of the Davidic prince Zerubbabel (cf. Zech. 4. 6–10) in association with Joshua the *High Priest, but in the event it was the High Priests alone who became the secular rulers down to the time of the *Maccabees, from whom (and not from the Davidic line) the *Hasmonaeans, who ruled Palestine from the middle of the 2nd cent. until the middle of the 1st cent. B.C., were descended. But the hope of a king who should be both 'the Lord's anointed' and 'the son of David' never died and is reflected e.g. in the Psalms of *Solomon (17. 23–38).

In the NT the continued expectation of a deliverer who should be descended from the house of David and should restore the independence enjoyed under David is seen in such passages as Mt. 2. 4–6 and Acts 1. 6. According to the *Synoptic Gospels, the Lord was expressly proclaimed as the Christ or Messiah by the angels at His birth (Lk. 2. 11) and His fulfilment of this role is divinely attested before His birth (Lk. 1. 32–3) and, in different terms, at His baptism (Mk. 1. 11). In His public ministry His Messiahship was acclaimed at first only by demoniacs (Lk. 4. 41), and suspected by *John the Baptist (Mt. 11. 3). He himself did not at this period openly acknowledge His Messiahship. St. *Peter's explicit confession of Him as the Christ at Caesarea Philippi (Mk. 8. 29; Mt. 16. 16) seems to mark a turning-point; on this occasion the Lord did not disclaim the title and acc. to Mt. 16. 17 He acknowledged it fully. He still, however, charged His disciples that they should not tell anyone that He was the Christ (Mk. 8. 30; Mt. 16. 20), doubtless because of the current political implications of the title and the need to prepare the disciples for its fulfilment through the Passion and Resurrection rather than the immediate establishment of a visible *Kingdom of God. When at His trial Jesus was asked by the High Priest the direct question, 'Art thou the Christ?', He replied in the affirmative (Mk. 14. 61 f.). After His resurrection, He explicitly taught His own identity with the Messiah of the OT expectation (Lk. 24. 26 f.). Acc. to St. *John's Gospel He acknowledged it at a comparatively early stage in His ministry (Jn. 4. 26). See also Christology.

Among modern works: J. *Drummond, The Jewish Messiah (1877); V. H. Stanton, The Jewish and Christian Messiah (1886); W. *Wrede, Das Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien (1901; ed. 2, 1913); A. *Schweitzer, The Quest of the Historical Jesus (Eng. trans., 1910); E. F. Scott, The Kingdom of the Messiah (1911); W. *Bousset, Kyrios Christos (1913; ed. 2, 1921); A. Lukyn Williams, The Hebrew-Christian Messiah (1916); A. E. J. Rawlinson, The New Testament Doctrine of the Christ (1926); M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., Le Judaïsme avant Jésus-Christ (1931); A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., The Throne of David. A Study of the Fulfilment of the Old Testament in Jesus Christ and His Church (1941); W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah (1943); A. Bentzen, Messias, Moses Redivivus, Menschensohn (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, xvii; 1948; Eng. tr., 1955); S. *Mowinckel, Han som Kommer. Messiasforventningen i det Gamle Testament og på Jesu tid (Copenhagen, 1951; Eng. tr., He that Cometh, Oxford, 1956); Helmer Ringgren, The Messiah in the Old Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, xviii; 1956); J. Klausner, The Messianic Idea in Israel from its Beginning to the Completion of the Mishnah (Eng. tr. from Hebrew, 1956); J. Coppens, Le Messianisme royal. Ses origines. Son développement. Son accomplissement (Lectio divina, liv; 1968). V. H. Stanton in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 352–7, s.v.; W. Fairweather, ib., Extra Vol. (1904), pp. 295–302, s.v. 'Development of Doctrine in the Apocryphal Period. V: The Messianic Hope'; L. Dennefeld in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1404–1568, s.v. 'Messianisme'; A. Gelin in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 1165–1212, s.v. 'Messianisme'.

METAPHRAST, The. A traditional name for the Byzantine hagiographer, *Simeon (q.v.; fl. c. 960), also called Logothetes, derived from his 'metaphrase' of older versions of the saints' lives.

METAPHYSICAL POETS. The term was first applied by Dr. S. *Johnson to a group of 17th cent. poets (J. *Donne, G. *Herbert, T. *Traherne, H. *Vaughan, etc.) in a derogatory sense, implying boastful exhibition of wit and learning in fanciful 'conceits' and extravagant metaphors. During the 19th cent., and esp. in recent times, the Metaphysical Poets have come to be more favourably judged. Apart from their exaggerations of style, their works are of high poetical quality and considerable religious feeling, with a strong appreciation of Christian dogma and worship.

Metaphysical Lyrics and Poems of the Seventeenth Century. Donne to Butler. Selected and Edited by H. J. C. Grierson (1921), with introd. pp. xiii–lviii; The Metaphysical Poets, selected and ed. Helen [L.] Gardner (1957; ed. 2, Oxford, 1967). J. B. Leishman, The Metaphysical Poets. Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, Traherne (1934); Joan Bennett, Four Metaphysical Poets. Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, Crashaw (1934; ed. 2, 1953). Helen C. White, The Metaphysical Poets. A Study in Religious Experience (New York, 1936). Molly M. Mahood, Poetry and Humanism (1950). L. E. Berry, A Bibliography of Studies in Metaphysical Poetry 1939–1960 (Madison, Wis., 1964).

METAPHYSICAL SOCIETY, The. A society founded in 1869 by Sir James Knowles (1831–1908; editor successively of the Contemporary Review and, from 1877, of the Nineteenth Century), with the encouragement of Tennyson, to foster constructive debate between the leading exponents of science and religion. Among its members were H. Acland, H. *Alford, A. J. *Balfour, W. B. Carpenter, R. W. *Church, J. B. *Dalgairns, A. C. *Fraser, J. A. Froude, F. A. *Gasquet, W. E. *Gladstone, T. H. *Huxley, W. C. Magee, H. E. *Manning, J. *Martineau, F. D. *Maurice, J. Morley, J. B. *Mozley, M. *Pattison, G. Croom Robertson, J. R. *Seeley, H. *Sidgwick, A. P. *Stanley, Leslie Stephen, James Sully, and C. *Thirlwall. The last meeting of the society was held on 16 May 1880. Many of its members, however, were later prominent in the 'Synthetic Society' (1869–1908), founded with similar but rather more definitely religious interests.

A. W. Brown, The Metaphysical Society (New York, 1947).

METAPHYSICS. The name given by the Greek editors of *Aristotle to his 'First Philosophy', and by analogy to all philosophical treatises concerning cognate topics. The title was merely intended to indicate the position of the books on this subject in the Aristotelian corpus—τὰ μετὰ τὰ φυσικά, 'the [books] that succeed the Physics'. The precise scope of metaphysical inquiry is very hard to define. To Aristotelians, it is the study of being qua being; to idealists, that of the ultimate implication of experience, cognitional, volitional, and aesthetic; to modern realists, that of the most pervasive features of reality (self-consistency, spatial and temporal relatedness, causality, substantiality, &c.). Contemporary philosophy tends to be radically empiricist, and criticizes the notion of metaphysical inquiry on the ground that it involves the constant assertion of statements unverifiable in principle. More recent emphasis, however, has been upon the variety of language games and the status and meaningfulness of statements not empirically verifiable; this changed attitude provides new possibilities for theological and metaphysical discourse. Christian theology has historically tended to take a realist metaphysics more or less for granted (see Analogy; Thomas Aquinas, St.), but in Protestantism, both liberal (e.g. A. *Ritschl) and neo-orthodox (e.g. K. *Barth, E. *Brunner), the influence of I. *Kant's substitution of ethics for metaphysics has been considerable.

Since nearly the whole range of philosophical speculation has at different times been comprised under the term 'Metaphysics', the literature is virtually limitless. Good general orientations in A. E. *Taylor, Elements of Metaphysics (1903), and J. S. Mackenzie, Elements of Constructive Philosophy (1917). R. G. Collingwood, Philosophical Essays (2 vols., 1933–40). See also bibls. to such entries as Plato; Aristotle; Neoplatonism; Scholasticism; Descartes, R.; Spinoza, B.; Leibniz, G. W.; Wolf, C.; Kant, I.; Fichte, J. G.; Schelling, F. W. J. von; Hegel, G. W. F.; Lotze, H.; Dilthey, W.; Bradley, F. H.; Bosanquet, B.; Croce, B.; Pattison, A. S. Pringle; Heidegger, M.; Phenomenology; Existentialism. Recent works include A. Flew–A. MacIntyre (edd.), New Essays in Philosophical Theology (1955); S. E. Toulmin and others, Metaphysical Beliefs (1957); D. F. Pears (ed.), The Nature of Metaphysics (1957); G. Martin, Einleitung in die allgemeine Metaphysik (1957; Eng. tr., 1961); W. H. Walsh, Metaphysics (1963); M. Lazerowitz, Studies in Metaphilosophy (1964); E. E. Harris, The Foundations of Metaphysics in Science (1965); J. W. Yolton, Metaphysical Analysis (Toronto, 1967; London, 1968).

METEMPSYCHOSIS. The doctrine that souls migrate from one body into another until complete purification has been achieved. The belief is widespread, esp. in India, where it forms an integral part of Brahmanism and Buddhism; but it is also found in the later Jewish teaching of the *Cabbala and among many savage races. In pre-Christian Europe its most outstanding advocates were *Plato and Pythagoras, both of whom were probably influenced by Orphism, and the doctrine was generally accepted among the later Platonists, by whom the word μετεμψύχωσις was in current use. In the Christian era *Origen's doctrine of the pre-existence of souls often approached actual metempsychosis. It was frequently attacked, e.g. by St. *Augustine and by *Aeneas of Gaza, and it was implicitly condemned by the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439), which affirmed that souls go immediately to heaven, purgatory, or hell. In modern times belief in metempsychosis was revived by Giordano *Bruno, G. E. *Lessing, Charles Fourier, and others, and recently it has come to the fore through the spread of *Spiritualism and *Theosophy. Its attraction lies partly in its claim to provide a morally satisfying explanation of the inequalities of fortune and character among mankind, which it ascribes to deeds done in former lives. Belief in metempsychosis is fundamentally at variance with the Christian doctrine of the resurrection of the body.

METHODISM. The system of religious faith and practice promoted, orig. at Oxford in 1729, by John and Charles *Wesley and their followers. Since the organization of the movement as a separate denomination, the designation has been confined to members of this Church and the other Churches derived from it. The circumstances of the original application of the word 'Methodist' to the followers of the Wesleys (first recorded instance, 1733) have never been satisfactorily explained. The word is occasionally met with in a not dissimilar sense in the 17th century.

Most of the Methodist Churches, including the influential Methodist Episcopal Church of the U.S.A., are *Arminian in their theological sympathies. The '*Calvinistic Methodists' (q.v.) of Wales, however, are *predestinarian and federated with the Presbyterian Churches. See also Wesley, John and Charles; Whitefield, George; Bible Christians; Methodist Churches; Methodist New Connexion; United Methodist Church; and United Methodist Free Churches.

METHODIST CHURCHES. In 1784 J. Wesley (q.v.) made provision for the continuance as a corporate body of the 'Yearly Conference of the People called Methodists' by nominating under a deed poll 100 persons whom he declared to be its members and laying down the method by which their successors were to be appointed. The Conference had power to appoint preachers to the various 'Preaching Houses' (later 'chapels'), the ownership of which was vested in boards of trustees acc. to a model trust deed, which since 1763 had already specified Wesley's Notes on the New Testament (1754) and his four volumes of sermons as a doctrinal standard. Provision was made for the case of preachers who should be, like J. and C. *Wesley, clergy of the C of E, but in fact there were few such. On Wesley's death in 1791 the future relations of Methodism with the C of E were a matter of dispute, but the 'Plan of Pacification' adopted by the Conference of 1795 led to the administration of the sacraments (i.e. Baptism and esp. Holy Communion) in all Methodist chapels and the declaration that the admission of a preacher to 'full connexion with the Conference' conferred ministerial rights without any form of ordination. Ordination by the imposition of the hands of ministers was again adopted by the Conference in 1836.

The secession of the *Methodist New Connexion (q.v.) in 1797 was relatively small, the great majority of Methodists remaining in connexion with the Conference thus constituted by Wesley, and organized according to his principles in local societies and circuits. There were further small secessions in 1805, of a body mainly in the N. of England who later became the 'Independent Methodists', in 1810 of the followers of H. Bourne who became the *Primitive Methodist Church (q.v.) and in 1815 of those of W. Bryan, known as the *Bible Christians (q.v.). The causes were in both cases matters of discipline and polity, not of doctrine. Similar disagreements with the official policy arising out of such matters as the installation of an organ in a chapel at Leeds (1827) and the foundation of a theological college for the training of ministers (1835) led to the formation of the Wesleyan Methodist Association. A more serious controversy over the expulsion of three ministers in 1849 led to the formation of the Wesleyan Reformers. These two bodies united in 1857 as the *United Methodist Free Churches (q.v.). The original body of Methodists continued, considerably weakened by these latter secessions. In course of time more friendly relations between all branches of Methodism were re-established and all took part, with Methodist Churches abroad, in a decennial Ecumenical Conference (first held 1881). In 1907 the Methodist New Connexion, the Bible Christians, and the United Methodist Free Churches came together in a union as the *United Methodist Church (q.v.), and this itself reunited in 1932 with the original or 'Wesleyan' Methodist Church and the Primitive Methodist Church to form the Methodist Church in Great Britain as it now exists. The Calvinistic Methodists in Wales, followers of G. *Whitefield rather than of Wesley, are the only other substantial body bearing the Methodist name to remain separate.

The Methodist Church considers itself part of the Church Universal but claims no rights for its particular form of Church order iure divino, believing in the priesthood of all believers and following in organization the principles laid down by Wesley for the pastoral oversight of the societies of Methodists which had grown up as a result of his preaching. Though not usually so called, the resulting organization is in principle, in the judgement of at least one Methodist scholar (H. B. Workman), presbyterian. The supreme authority is the Conference, the legal successor of that originally constituted by Wesley, and now regulated in Statute law by the Methodist Church Union Act, 1929, and the Methodist Church Act, 1976. It consists of 288 ministers and 288 laymen for the most part elected by the District Synods; the ministers sit separately in 'Ministerial Session' to decide affairs concerning ministers, but decisions affecting the whole Church are taken by the full Conference ('Representative Session'). A minister as President and, for the Representative Session, a layman as Vice-President are elected annually by the Conference. The Conference delegates certain duties to the Synods, held twice yearly in each District, of which there are 32 in Great Britain, containing mostly about 20 or 30 Circuits in each; it also appoints ministers as Chairmen of each District and Superintendents of each circuit, the latter consisting normally of a number of local 'societies' (Wesley's term for the local bodies of Methodists), which form the several churches of the denomination. A distinction is made between those on the 'Community Roll' who may be in fact regular members of a congregation, and 'full members' who have been formally admitted to the Church. 'All those who confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour and accept the obligation to serve Him in the life of the Church and the world are welcome as full members of the Methodist Church.' Those who apply on this basis are admitted first for a probationary period and then (after baptism, if previously unbaptized) by a public service of reception into membership at which the Holy Communion is celebrated. Acc. to Wesley's system, which is peculiar to Methodism, 'All members shall have their names entered on a Class Book, shall be placed under the pastoral care of a Class Leader, and shall receive a Quarterly Ticket of Membership'. The weekly class-meeting for 'fellowship in Christian experience' has from the beginning been a valuable institution. On removing to another place a member receives a recommendation which entitles him to membership in another local society.

In each circuit there is a Circuit Meeting consisting of ministers and lay office-holders, including Class Leaders, and in each Society there is a Church Council on the same basis. A meeting of all Church members is held annually in each Society to appoint representatives to the Church Council and for fellowship and consultation, but it has few of the powers of a Church Meeting in the Congregational or Independent Churches. Ministers are not 'called' to particular churches, but may be invited, the appointment being made by authority of the Conference, which also regulates the whole organization of Districts and Circuits, sets up special enterprises (e.g. the *Anglican-Methodist Conversations, revision of the liturgy) and controls other central organizations and committees, which are responsible to it. It also governs the selection, training and ordination of ministers. The ordained ministry is open to women on virtually the same terms as men.

By tradition Methodism has an active concern with both evangelism and social welfare and by means of its centralized organization it is able to make co-ordinated efforts in these directions. Under the leadership of Hugh Price *Hughes (q.v.) the Methodist Forward Movement was active from 1885 in founding Missions in various parts of London, beginning with the East London Mission in Stepney, and in Manchester. Hughes's preaching at the West London Mission (from 1887) was a notable force in presenting Christianity as intimately concerned with social betterment and public morals: it was through his influence that the phrase 'the Nonconformist conscience' gained currency in connexion with the divorce suit involving C. S. Parnell (1846–91), and Hughes willingly accepted the phrase as a description of his standpoint. J. Scott Lidgett (1854–1953), founder in 1891 of the Bermondsey Mission and its Warden till 1949, was another outstanding figure.

Methodism outside Great Britain dates from the lifetime of Wesley, who in 1784 'set apart' T. Coke (1747–1814) and others for N. America, where by 1791 there were already 42,265 members of Methodist Societies, compared with 71,688 in Great Britain. With the growth of the U.S.A. (see U.S.A., Christianity in) Methodist numbers increased and now greatly exceed those in Britain. After the Civil War there were two main Churches, in North and South respectively, which were re-united in 1939. In 1968 the Methodist Church of the United States was joined by the Evangelical United Brethren to form the United Methodist Church; there are still also a number of smaller Methodist bodies. Wesley had 'set apart' Coke as 'Superintendent'; Coke, with others, ordained F. *Asbury (1745–1816) to the same office, and himself, against Wesley's opinion, took the title of 'bishop'; and American Methodism is largely 'episcopal' in possessing superintendents who are called bishops, though claiming no Episcopal Orders in the Catholic sense. There are also Methodist Churches under separate Conferences in *Ireland, Australasia (including Tonga, Fiji and Samoa), *New Zealand, *South Africa, Ghana, Italy, Nigeria, Ceylon, Upper *Burma, the Caribbean and the Americas (including *West Indies, Guyana, Panama, Honduras and Bahamas), Sierra Leone, Kenya, Hong Kong and Zimbabwe. In *Canada Methodists have entered the United Church of Canada, in S. India the Church of *South India, and in Zambia the United Church of Zambia. In N. India, Methodist Districts formerly related to the British Conference have entered the Church of *North India. In *Portugal, Gambia, the Ivory Coast, and Benin and Togo there are Methodist Districts in connexion with the British Conference, through the vigorous work of the (British) Methodist Missionary Society (founded 1813). In other parts of the world, notably S. America, S.E. Asia and N. India, are Churches resulting from the work of American Methodists. The world total of Methodist members c. 1980 was over 20 million, of whom some 10 million were in the U.S.A. and c. 530,000 in Great Britain. The total world Methodist community was estimated at over 49 million.

See also Anglican-Methodist Conversations.

W. J. Townsend–H. B. Workman–G. Eayrs (edd.), A New History of Methodism (2 vols., 1909); R. [E.] Davies–[E.] G. Rupp (edd.), A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain (1965 ff.). J. R. Gregory, A History of Methodism chiefly for the Use of Students (2 vols., 1911); R. E. Davies, Methodism (1963; revised 1976). J. Scott Lidgett–B. H. Reed (edd.), Methodism in the Modern World (1926). A. W. Harrison and others, The Methodist Church. Its Origin, Divisions and Reunion (1932). F. Baker, A Charge to Keep. An Introduction to the People Called Methodists (1947). H. Bett, The Spirit of Methodism (1937). R. F. Wearmouth, Methodism and the Common People of the Eighteenth Century (1945); id., Methodism and the Working Class Movements in England, 1800–1850 (1937); id., The Social and Political Influence of Methodism in the Twentieth Century (1957). W. J. Warner, The Wesleyan Movement in the Industrial Revolution (1930). M. Edwards, Methodism and England. A Study of Methodism in its Social and Political Aspects during the Period 1850–1932 (1943); also other works by this author. T. B. Shepherd, Methodism and the Literature of the Eighteenth Century (1940). W. W. Sweet, Methodism in American History (New York, 1933). E. S. Bucke (ed.), The History of American Methodism (3 vols., New York, 1964). I. F. MacLeister, History of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America (Syracuse, N.Y., 1934). G. G. Findlay–W. W. Holdsworth, The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society (5 vols., 1921–4). W. C. Barclay, History of Methodist Missions (6 vols., New York, 1949 ff.). J. Kent, The Age of Disunity (1966). R. Currie, Methodism Divided. A Study in the Sociology of Ecumenicalism (1968). H. Spencer–E. Finch, The Constitutional Practice and Discipline of the Methodist Church (1951; ed. 4, 1964), with text of historical docc. G. G. Findlay in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 603–12, s.v. 'Methodism'. See also bibl. to Primitive Methodist Church; Wesley, J.

METHODIST NEW CONNEXION. The group of Methodists which in 1797 seceded from the Wesleyan *Methodist Church and in the union of 1907 was incorporated in the *United Methodist Church.

This, the first of the Methodist secessions, originated six years after the death of *J. Wesley (1791). The leader of the 'reforming' movement which led to the disruption, Alexander *Kilham (q.v.), was ordained a minister in the Methodist Church in 1792. In the controversy on the relationship of Methodism to the C of E he strongly supported complete separation, contending that Methodists should have the right to receive Communion from their own preachers. He also desired the lay members of the Church to take a much greater part in its administration than government through Wesley's Conference of preachers allowed. Kilham embodied his proposals for reform in a booklet in which he also exposed what seemed to him abuses of the existing system. His writings and agitation led to his trial by the Wesleyan Conference of 1796 and expulsion.

In 1797 Kilham and his supporters summoned a Convention to negotiate with the Conference; but as the Conference's concessions did not affect the central issue, viz., the representation of the laity in the ruling courts of the Church, Kilham at once founded the 'New Itinerancy' or 'Methodist New Connexion'. When its second Conference was held, a year later, the denomination had 15 ministers. On Kilham's death in 1798 he was succeeded by William Thom; and, despite the early loss of its first leader and great poverty, the New Connexion rapidly grew. It differed from Wesleyan Methodism solely in the matter of Church government, and made neither doctrinal nor liturgical changes.

In 1907 the Methodist New Connexion united with the *Bible Christians and the *United Methodist Free Churches to form the United Methodist Church.

For bibl. see previous entry.

METHODIUS and CYRIL, Sts. See Cyril and Methodius, Sts.

METHODIUS OF OLYMPUS, St. (d. c. 311), bishop in Lycia. Very few biographical details are known. St. *Jerome's assertion (De Vir. Illus., lxxxiii) that he was also Bp. of Tyre, and probably, too, that of '*Leontius of Byzantium' (De Sectis, III. i) that he was Bp. of Patara, seem mistaken. He was apparently put to death in the concluding years of the *Diocletianic Persecution. Feast day in W., 18 Sept.; in E., 20 June.

One of the first assailants of *Origen—perhaps the reason for the absence of mention of him by *Eusebius—Methodius wrote extensively, though only a small portion of his works has been preserved. The 'Symposium, or Banquet of the Ten Virgins' (Συμπόσιον, ἢ Περὶ ἁγνείας) alone remains entire. Written in dialogue form after the manner of *Plato, it extols the excellence of virginity. At the end is a hymn to Christ as the Bridegroom of the Church. In a treatise on the Resurrection ('Αγλαοφῶν, ἢ Περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως) he upheld against Origen the identity of the resurrection body with that worn in this life. His work on Free-Will (Περὶ τοῦ Αὐτεξουσίου) is a defence of human liberty against the fatalism of the *Gnostics. Considerable portions of the Greek text of these two writings have come down. His other works, surviving only in Slavonic, include writings on the food laws of the OT, on the mystical interpretation of the references to leprosy in Lev. 13, and on the leech in Prov. 30. 15. His lost writings include an extensive work against *Porphyry, commentaries on Genesis and the Song of Songs, and a treatise on the Pythonissa directed against Origen.

Earliest collection of Methodius's writings ed. (with those of other Fathers) by F. *Combefis, Paris, 1644; the 'Symposium', however, was first publd. by L. *Allatius, Rome, 1656. Crit. ed. by G. N. Bonwetsch (G.C.S., xxvii; 1917). Slavonic version of 'De Autexousio', with Gk. texts, ed. A. Vaillant in P.O., xxii. 5 (1930). Collected works also in J. P. Migne, PG, xviii, 9–408. Eng. tr. by W. R. Clark in A.N.C.L., xiv (1869), pp. 1–230. Modern ed. of 'Symposium' by H. Musurillo, S.J., with Fr. tr. by V. H. Debidour (S.C., xcv; 1963); Eng. tr. by H. Musurillo (A.C.W., xxvii; 1958).

G. N. Bonwetsch, Die Theologie des Methodius von Olympus (1903); J. Farges, Les Idées morales et religieuses de Méthode d'Olympe (1929); M. Pellegrino, L'Inno del Simposio de S. Metodio Martire. Introduzione, testo critico e commento (Università di Torino. Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, x, fasc. 1; 1958). V. Buchheit, Studien zu Methodios von Olympos (T.U., lxix; 1958). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 334–51; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 215 f. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 909–11; É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1606–14; E. Beck in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 888–90, s.v. 'Metodio di Olimpo'.

METHUSELAH. The eighth in the list of antediluvian patriarchs in Gen. 5 and the longest lived (969 years; Gen. 5. 27). He appears in the parallel list in Gen. 4 as 'Methusael' (RV 'Methushael') (v. 18).

METRICAL PSALTERS. At the Reformation metrical psalmody was introduced in the French and Swiss Reformed Churches as a more Biblical form of musical worship than the German *Lutheran hymns. In England metrical versions of the Psalms first appeared under *Edward VI. They were issued by T. *Sternhold (d. 1549) and others. In 1556 the Marian exiles in Geneva, doubtless inspired by the work of C. *Marot (q.v.) and L. Bourgeois (c. 1510–?), published along with their Book of Common Order fifty-one metrical psalms composed by Sternhold, J. Hopkins (d. c. 1570), and W. *Whittingham (d. 1579). In 1562 the first complete Anglo-Genevan edition was printed in England. Until the middle of the 19th cent., when the use of metrical psalmody waned, many English versions were produced. The most widely used of these was the New Version of the Psalms (1696) of N. *Tate and N. Brady.

In Scotland the use of a metrical psalter, fostered by 'Sang Schules', became a permanent and characteristic feature of national worship. The Anglo-Genevan version was printed with additions in 1564 (with 105 tunes). An important harmonized edition followed in 1635. In 1650 in place of this Old Version the Scottish General Assembly adopted, in a much revised form, the simple, rugged and dignified version of Francis Rouse, which had earlier been commended by the *Westminster Assembly and approved by the English House of Commons. The Assembly made no provision, however, for music for the new book and gradually many of the old tunes were forgotten. A new edition, The Scottish Psalter (1929), with tunes true to the old tradition, is now in use in Scottish and other Presbyterian churches.

N. Livingston (ed.), The Scottish Metrical Psalter of A.D. 1635 reprinted in full from the original work . . . and . . . illustrated by Dissertations, Notes, and Facsimiles (Glasgow, 1864). F. Bovet, Histoire du psautier des Églises réformées (1872). O. Douen, Clément Marot et le psautier huguenot. Étude historique, littéraire, musicale et bibliographique (2 vols., 1878–9), with specimens of early melodies by various authors. H. Kling, 'Les Compositeurs de la musique du psautier huguenot genevois' in Rivista musicale italiana, vi (1899), pp. 496–530. M. Patrick, Four Centuries of Scottish Psalmody (1949).

METROPHANES CRITOPOULOS (1589–1639). A Greek monk of Mt. *Athos who was sent by Cyril *Lucar to study theology in England under the direction of G. *Abbot. From 1617 to 1622 he was at Balliol College, *Oxford, and then in London, partly with Abbot, until 1624. After visiting Universities and Protestant Churches in Germany (1624–7) and Switzerland (1627), he returned via *Venice (1627–30) to Egypt in 1631. In 1633 he became Metropolitan of Memphis in Egypt, and in 1636 Patriarch of Alexandria. In 1638 he signed the anathemas pronounced against Cyril Lucar for Calvinism. His works include a Ὁμολογία τῆς ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (ed. J. Horne, Helmstedt, 1661).

His Ὁμολογία τῆς ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (Wolfenbüttel MS. 1048) has also been ed. by H. Weissenborn in E. J. Kimmel, Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis, ii (Jena, 1850), pp. 1–213, and in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ii (Athens, 1953), pp. 489–561. Studies by J. A. Dietelmair (Altdorf, 1769), A. K. Demetracopoulos (Leipzig, 1870; Gk.), G. Mazarakes (Cairo, 1884; Gk.), M. Renieres (Athens, 1893), K. J. Dyobuniotes (ib., 1915), and I. N. Kamires (ib., 1937 and 1948). J. Kemke, Patricius Junius (Leipzig, 1898), pp. 124–30. F. H. Marshall, 'An Eastern Patriarch's Education in England' in Journal of Hellenic Studies, xlvi (1926), pp. 185–202. E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique . . . au XVIIe siècle, v (1903), pp. 192–218. V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1622–7, s.v.

METROPOLITAN. The title of a bishop exercising provincial, and not merely diocesan, powers. The organization of the early Church broadly followed that of the Roman Empire. Each city, with its territory, was governed by a bishop, and in each province the bishop of the civil metropolis (normally) came to possess rights over his comprovincial bishops, later called suffragans. These rights were determined by local custom before the Council of *Nicaea (325), whose 4th canon, in which the title metropolitan first appears, began the gradual process of legal definition. The duties and rights of a metropolitan have varied in time and place. Chief among them are the summoning and presidency of provincial synods, the visitation of dioceses, the care of vacant sees, some share in the appointment and consecration of suffragans and some disciplinary powers over them. Owing to *Diocletian's grouping of civil provinces into civil dioceses, metropolitans were in time subordinated to synods of the civil diocese or to a superior bishop (*exarch, *patriarch). The W. Church saw many conflicts between metropolitans and Popes, the latter being generally victorious (see Pallium). Provincial organization continues in episcopal Churches (*Canterbury, *York), though the metropolitical see is not always the civil capital. In the early Church, the metropolitan of some African provinces was the bishop senior by consecration. Metropolitans have commonly the titles of *archbishop and *primate.

At the present time, in the Church of Greece all diocesan bishops have the title Metropolitan, but in the Russian Church the title retains more or less its original meaning.

MEXICO, Christianity in. The pre-Spanish Aztec empire of Mexico appears to have had vague traditions of Biblical and Christian ideas, but their source cannot be traced. But within five years of the first Spanish invasion (1519) *Franciscan and other missionaries arrived. Conversions were numerous, though not always entirely voluntary, and Mexican Christians have, from the first, kept much of the old paganism under an outward profession of Christianity. Throughout Mexican history from the 16th cent. onwards, hardly any Christians of other denominations have entered the country to challenge the prevailing RCism.

Mexican independence was won in 1821, after many revolts, but the influence of the Church remained very powerful in the political and financial fields, until the measures of President Juárez, which separated Church and state, nationalized Church property and forbade the participation of the Church in state affairs. The constitution of 1917 further provided that the Church is incapable of owning property, that churches must be under state supervision, and that all priests must be Mexican-born and excluded from politics. These enactments were not put into force until 1926, when, after a stand against them by the clergy, action was taken which resulted in the closing of the churches, the deportation of the episcopate, and the execution of many priests and lay persons, upon suspicion of political activity directed against the government. In later years the ban against foreign ecclesiastics has been extended to non-RCs. Such restrictive measures, although remaining on the statute books, are not nowadays rigidly enforced.

M. Cuevas, Historia de la Iglesia en México (5 vols., Tlalpam, 1921–8). C. S. Braden, Religious Aspects of the Conquest of Mexico (Durham, N.C., 1930). J. Ramirez Cabañas, Las relaciones entre México y el Vaticano (Archivo histórico diplomático mexicano, xxvii, Mexico, 1928: docc. with notes). G. Decorme, La obra de los Jesuitas mexicanos durante la época colonial, 1572–1767 (Mexico, 1941). P. Ricard, La 'Conquête spirituelle' du Mexique. Essai sur l'apostolat et les méthodes missionnaires des ordres mendiants en Nouvelle-Espagne de 1523 à 1572 (thesis, Paris, 1933; Eng. tr., Berkeley, 1966). N. Farriss, Crown and Clergy in Colonial Mexico, 1759–1821: The Crisis of Ecclesiastical Privilege (1968). W. H. Callcott, Church and State in Mexico, 1822–1857 (Durham, N.C. [1926]). M. P. Costeloe, Church Wealth in Mexico. A study of the 'Juzgado de Capellanías' in the archbishopric of Mexico, 1800–1856 (Cambridge, 1967). On the post-1917 crisis, L. C. Balderrama, El clero y el gobierno de México (2 vols., Mexico, 1927), with docc.: C. S. Macfarland, Chaos in Mexico. The Conflict of Church and State (London and New York, 1935); W. Parsons, S.J., Mexican Martyrdom (New York, 1936). J. Bravo Ugarte, S.J., Bio-Bibliografía Eclesiástica Mexicana (1821–1943) (3 vols., Mexico, 1949). G. Baez Camargo–K. G. Grubb, Religion in the Republic of Mexico (Evangelical survey, London, 1935). J. M. Davis, The Economic Basis of the Evangelical Church in Mexico (ib. and New York, 1940). Latourette, iii, pp. 108–23; vi, pp. 72–7 passim and 113–15; and vii, pp. 176–81, with further reff.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961). pp. 303–10; v (1963), pp. 170–80.

MEYER, HEINRICH AUGUST WILHELM (1800–73), German NT scholar. Born at Gotha, he studied theology at the university of Jena and held various ecclesiastical offices at Hanover. The chief work of his life was his editorship of the well-known Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament (16 vols., 1832–52; Eng. trans., 20 vols., 1873–95), to which he himself contributed the Gospels, the Acts, and most of the Pauline epistles. It was highly praised for its completeness and philological exactness, and has been constantly revised and rewritten by a long series of distinguished scholars down to the present time. Meyer also published an edition of the text of the NT, with a trans. (2 vols., Göttingen, 1829), and a Latin version of the Symbolical Books of the *Lutheran Church (1830).

F. Düsterdieck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 39–42.

MEYNELL, ALICE CHRISTIANA GERTRUDE (1847–1922), née Thompson, poet and essayist. Having become a RC c. 1872, in 1877 she married Wilfrid Meynell, to whom she gave much help in his literary work. Throughout her life she contributed to several magazines a large number of essays, e.g. on contemporary authors such as Tennyson, Swinburne, and the Pre-Raphaelites. A great part of her work both in prose and verse has religion as its subject or background. Her verse, collections of which appeared at intervals from Preludes (1875) to the posthumously edited Last Poems in 1923, developed from the more emotional poetry of her earlier period to the subtle thought and restrained language of her riper years. In 1912 she published Mary, the Mother of Jesus, a collection of essays. Her writing was much appreciated by the most exacting critics of her time, among them men of such different views and temperament as G. Meredith and Coventry *Patmore.

The Poems of Alice Meynell. Complete Edition (1923); Selected Poems of Alice Meynell (1930), with introd. note by W[ilfrid] M[eynell], pp. vii–xi; selection of her Prose and Poetry. Centenary volume ed. by F. P., V. M., O. S., and F. M. (1947), with biog. and crit. introd. by V. Sackville-West, pp. 7–26. Viola Meynell (daughter), Alice Meynell. A Memoir (1929). A. K. Tuell, Mrs. Meynell and her Literary Generation (New York, 1925). F. Page in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 584–6. R. D. Coole–H. B. Grimsditch in C.B.E.L., iii, p. 348 f.

MICAH, Book of. The sixth of the *Minor Prophets. From Mic. 1. 1 it appears that the author after whom the book is named lived in the 8th cent. B.C. and began to prophesy (Mic. 1. 5–7) before the fall of *Samaria (721). The first three chapters are generally accepted as the genuine work of this author, who is mentioned by *Jeremiah (Jer. 26. 17–19) as preaching with some success. They foretell the destruction of Samaria and of *Jerusalem. The rest of the book is regarded by most critics as of later date. Chs. 4–5 predict the regeneration of the people and the advent of a *Messiah. Chs. 6–7 are mainly occupied with a dispute between Jehovah and his people; they are usually recognized as a collection of material from miscellaneous sources, the last section (7. 7–20) being identified as a prophetic liturgy.

The Book contains the first prophecy of the destruction of the *Temple (Mic. 3. 12) as a punishment for presumption on the trust in Divine protection. Mic. 6. 8 sums up true religion as justice, mercy and humble communion with God and the complaints of Jehovah in Mic. 6. 3–5 are the model on which have been formed the *Reproaches in the liturgy used in the W. Church on *Good Friday.

Commentaries by T. K. *Cheyne (Camb. Bib., AV, 1882), J. M. P. Smith (I.C.C. on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., Joel, 1912, pp. 5–156), and G. W. Wade (West. Comm. on Mic., Obad., Joel, Jon., 1925, pp. 1–66). H. *Gunkel, 'Der Micha-Schluss. Zur Einführung in die literaturgeschichtliche Arbeit am Alten Testament' in Zeitschrift für Semitistik und verwandte Gebiete, ii (1923), pp. 145–78. J. Lindblom, Micha literarisch untersucht (Acta Academiae Aboensis, Humaniora, vi, 2; 1929). W. Beyerlin, Die Kulttradition Israels in der Verkündigung des Propheten Micha (Göttingen, 1959). B. Renaud, Structure et attaches littéraires de Michée iv–v (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, ii; 1964). T. Lescow, Micha 6, 6–8. Studien zu Sprache, Form und Auslegung (Arbeiten zur Theologie, i, Heft 25; 1966). A. George in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 1252–63, s.v. Michée (Le Livre de)', with bibl. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets. Commentary by J. L. Mays (London, 1976).

MI-CARÊME. See Laetare Sunday.

MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL, St. He is mentioned four times in Scripture: twice in Dan. (10. 13 ff. and 12. 1), where he is represented as the helper of the Chosen People, once in Jude (v. 9), disputing with the devil over the body of *Moses, and once in Rev. (12. 7–9), fighting the dragon. He also plays an important part in the apocryphal literature, e.g. in the 'Assumption of *Moses', in '*Enoch', and in the 'Ascension of *Isaiah' (qq.v.), where he appears as 'the great captain' 'who is set over the best part of mankind'. In connexion with the Scriptural and apocryphal passages he was early regarded in the Church as the helper of Christian armies against the heathen, and as a protector of individual Christians against the devil, esp. at the hour of death, when he conducts the souls to God, a belief echoed in the Offertory of the Roman Mass for the Dead until 1970: 'Signifer S. Michael repraesentet eas in lucem sanctam'.

His cult originated in Phrygia, where he was chiefly venerated as a healer, and many hot springs were dedicated to him both in Greece and Asia. The cult soon spread to the W., and in the *Leonine Sacramentary St. Michael is named in four of the five Masses for 30 Sept. of a dedication festival of a basilica erected in his honour on the Via Salaria. This feast, which is kept throughout the W. Church on 29 Sept., is identical with that of the BCP of St. Michael and All Angels. (In the RC Church the day now commemorates St. *Gabriel and St. *Raphael, with St. Michael.) The cult of St. Michael in the W. Church received a strong impetus from the famous apparition on Mt. Garganus in the time of Pope *Gelasius (492–6), in commemoration of which a feast was kept in the RC Church on 8 May until 1960. Throughout the Middle Ages St. Michael enjoyed general veneration. His feast, 'Michaelmas Day', is connected with many popular usages and numerous churches are dedicated to him. He is usually represented with a sword, standing over, or fighting with, a dragon. Feast day in E., 8 Nov. See also Mont-St.-Michel.

AA.SS., Sept. VIII (1762), pp. 4–123. W. Lueken, Michael. Eine Darstellung und Vergleichung der jüdischen und der morgenländisch-christlichen Tradition vom Erzengel Michael (1898). O. Rojdestvensky, Le Culte de Saint Michel et le moyen âge latin (1922); A. M. Renner, Der Erzengel Michael in der Geistes- und Kunstgeschichte (Saarbrücken, 1927). J. Lemarié, O.S.B., 'Textes liturgiques concernant le culte de S. Michel' in Sacris Erudiri, xiv (1963), pp. 277–85. R. H. *Charles in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 362 f.; G. Löw, C.SS.R.–E. Josi et al., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 948–54; F. Spadafora–M. G. Mara in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (Rome, 1967), cols. 410–46.

MICHAEL CERULARIUS (d. 1058), Patr. of *Constantinople from 1043, to whose period of office the beginning of the schism between the E. and W. Churches is conventionally dated. Destined for a political career, he was deeply moved by the suicide of his brother in 1040 and suddenly became a monk. In outlook he was violently anti-Latin, fiercely attacking the *filioque and unleavened *bread in the Eucharist. The attempted mediation at Constantinople between a Roman legation, led by Cardinal *Humbert of Silva Candida, and the E. Emp., Constantine IX (Monomachus), failed; the Latins laid a bull of excommunication against the Easterns on the altar of *Santa Sophia; and Cerularius replied by anathemas (21 and 24 June 1054) and an encyclical embodying the Byzantine case. In his last years he probably took part in the political plot to put Isaac Comnenus on the throne in place of Michael VI (Stratiotikos).

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG, cxx, 719–820, with reff., but incl. also material of an anterior date. Some of his correspondence also pr. in C. Will (ed.), Acta et Scripta quae de Controversiis Ecclesiae Graecae et Latinae Saeculo Undecimo Composita Exstant (Leipzig–Marburg, 1861), pp. 65–85, 89–92, 153 f., and 172–204. V. Grumel, A.A. (ed.), Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, I. iii (1947), pp. 1–16 (Nos. 856–86). A. Michel, Humbert und Kerullarios (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte herausg. von der Görres-Gesellschaft, xxi and xxiii, 1925–30). Id., 'Verstreute Kerullarios- und Humbert-Texte' in R.Q., xxxix (1931), pp. 355–76. M. Jugie, A.A., Le Schisme byzantin (1941), pp. 187–246. A. Laurent, A.A., 'Le Titre de patriarche œcuménique et Michel Cérulaire à propos de deux de ses sceaux inédits' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, iii (S.T., cxxiii; 1946), pp. 373–86. É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1677–1703, s.v. 'Michel (4) Cérulaire', with detailed reff.; M. J. Higgins in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 796 f.

MICHAEL PSELLOS, See Psellos, Michael.

MICHAEL THE SYRIAN (1126–99), *Jacobite Patriarch of Antioch. He was a monk and later archimandrite of the monastery of Bar-Sauma; when he became Patriarch of Antioch in 1166 he had for some time to struggle against a rival supported by the Armenians. He compiled a chronicle covering the period from the creation to 1194/5. This work preserves many Syriac sources now lost and affords important evidence for the history of the Jacobite Church and for the *Crusades. The original Syriac was discovered in 1888; previously the Chronicle had been known only in a shortened Armenian version.

Syriac text of the Chronicle ed., with Fr. tr., by J. B. Chabot (4 vols., Paris, 1899–1910). Fr. tr. of Armenian version by V. Langlois (Venice, 1868). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 298–300. E. Tisserant in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1711–19, s.v. 'Michel (9) le Syrien'.

MICHAELIS, JOHANN DAVID (1717–91), German Protestant theologian. He was professor of oriental languages and theology at Göttingen from 1746 to his death, and is important chiefly for his studies in Hebrew and Arabic and his research work on the early versions of the Bible, esp. the *Peshitta. In 1750 he published his critical Einleitung in das NT, and from 1769 to 1791 his influential annotated translation of the OT in 13 volumes. In his famous Mosäisches Recht (6 vols., 1770–5; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1840) he treated the legislation of the Pentateuch as a human achievement, and thus appeared to deny its character as Divine Revelation. His rationalist methods as well as his comprehensive linguistic studies had a far-reaching influence on the development of German Biblical criticism.

Michaelis's correspondence was ed. by J. G. Buhle, 3 vols., Leipzig, 1794–6. J. M. Hassencamp, Leben des Herrn Johann David Michaelis, von ihm selbst beschrieben (Rinteln, 1793). Oration ('Festrede') by R. Smend (Göttingen, 1898). R. Kittel in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 54–6.

MICHELANGELO (1475–1564), Italian Renaissance artist. Michelangiolo Buonarroti was the son of the Podestà of the village of Caprese. In 1488 he became the pupil of the Florentine painters Domenico and Davide Ghirlandaio, but, following his attraction for sculpture, went the next year to Bertoldo, a disciple of Donatello, who introduced him into the circle of Lorenzo the Magnificent (de' Medici). Here he learnt to appreciate the classic ideal of sensuous beauty, which was for a long time to struggle in him with the ideal of religious asceticism represented by his older contemporary *Savonarola. In 1496 he went to Rome, where he did a Pietà (finished in 1501) in which Christian austerity and classic beauty are admirably harmonized. During a temporary stay at Florence he carved his famous David (1502–4) as a symbol of the deliverance of the city from Cesare Borgia. In 1505 *Julius II called him back to Rome to execute the Papal tomb. His design, which was on so grand a scale that it would have been almost impossible to carry it through in a lifetime, seems to have been meant to represent the three orders of Nature, Law, and Grace in their relation to the Papacy. Its most important finished work is the great figure of Moses representing to perfection the majestic wrath of the Law-Giver of the Old Dispensation.

Between 1508 and 1512, under pressure from Julius II, Michelangelo painted the celebrated frescoes on the ceiling of the *Sistine Chapel. Their subject is the praeparatio evangelica, leading from the Creation of the world through temptation and sin to the Prophets of the OT and the Sybils of the Gentiles. The two frescoes representing the 'Creation of Light' and the 'Creation of Man' are among the most grandiose paintings of all time, combining in the Creator human tenderness with stupendous force. The artist continued in Papal employment under *Leo X and his successors, executing for them parts of his plan for a mortuary chapel of the Medici in San Lorenzo with its famous figures of Night and Day, Morning and Evening, representing the frailty of human greatness. From 1534 to 1541 he was engaged on the Last Judgement in the Sistine Chapel. After the death of his friend Vittoria Colonna (1547), to whom he addressed many sonnets full of devotion and religious feeling, he was entrusted with the direction of the building of *St. Peter's, and he was engaged on this work till his death.

Editions of his letters by G. Milanesi (Florence, 1875) and in Eng. tr. by E. H. Ramsden (2 vols., London, 1963); of his poems by C. Frey (Berlin, 1897). His sonnets were repr., with Eng. tr. and introd., by J. A. Symonds (London, 1950). Collection of reproductions (in black and white), ed. F. Knapp (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, vii; 1906); of his paintings, ed. L. Goldscheider (Phaidon Press, London [1939]); of his sculpture, by id. (ib. [1940]); of his drawings, by K. Frey (3 vols., Berlin, 1909–11), and selections by L. Goldscheider (Phaidon Press, 1951; ed. 2, 1966); selection of his paintings, sculpture, and architecture (some in colour), ed. id. (ib., 1953). Lives by C. Vasari (Florence, 1550), ed. K. Frey (Munich, 1911) and P. Barocchi (5 vols., Milan–Naples, 1962); by A. Condivi (Rome, 1553), ed. A. Maraini (Florence, 1927); an Eng. tr. of the latter was publd. at London, 1903. Modern studies by J. [A.] Symonds (2 vols., London, 1892), C. Justi (Leipzig, 1900), H. Thode (6 vols. bound in 7, Berlin, 1902–13), K. Frey (vol. i only publd., Berlin, 1907), G. Brandes (2 vols., Copenhagen, London, etc., 1921–31), A. Venturi (Rome, 1926; Eng. tr., 1928), G. *Papini (Milan, 1949), Agnes Allen (London, 1953), C. de Tolnay (5 vols., Princeton, 1943–60), and F. Hartt (New York and London, 1965). J. Wilde, Italian Drawings in the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. Michelangelo and his Studio (1953). J. S. Ackerman, The Architecture of Michelangelo (2 vols., 1961); P. Portoghesi and B. Zevi (edd.), Michelangelo architetto (Turin, 1964). S. Colvin in E.B. (ed. 11), xviii (1911), pp. 362–9, s.v.

MICROLOGUS. An 11th cent. Roman Mass book, attesting several practices, e.g. the omission of Gloria in Excelsis in *Advent and *Septuagesima and the use of Placeat tibi after the dismissal, which later became universal in the Latin West. There is still never more than one *collect, the *Creed has not yet been introduced, *incense at the *Offertory is discouraged, and there is no Offertory prayer. The work was prob. composed by Bernold (c. 1054–1100), monk of Schaffhausen and strong defender of *Gregory VII (not, as was formerly held, by St. *Ivo of Chartres).

Editio princeps (incomplete), Paris, 1510. First complete ed. by J. Pamelius, Antwerp, 1560 (repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cli, 973–1022). S. B[aeumer], O.S.B., 'L'Auteur du Micrologue' in R. Bén., viii (1891), pp. 193–201, incl. text of two additional chapters, p. 200 f. G. *M[orin], O.S.B., 'Que "L'Auteur du Micrologue" est Bernold de Constance', ib., pp. 385–95; S. Bäumer, O.S.B., 'Der Micrologus ein Werk Bernold's von Konstanz' in N.A., xviii (1892–3), pp. 429–46. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., 'For a new edition of the Micrologus of Bernold of Constance' in Mélanges en l'honneur de Monseigneur Michel Andrieu (Revue des Sciences Religieuses, volume hors série; Strassburg, 1956), pp. 229–41. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 817–20, s.v. 'Bernold (de Constance) et le Micrologue', and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., ib., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 908–12, s.v. 'Micrologue'.

MIDDLE AGES, The. The era preceding the Renaissance, formerly taken to date from the fall of the W. Roman Empire in 476, but in more recent writers from c. 1100, and extending down to the end of the 15th cent. The conception of the 'medium aevum' is to be found in the writings of Flavio Biondo (1388–1463), and was in established use by 1467. Once viewed as a sterile period, it has come to be regarded as one of the most creative and fruitful periods in the world's history. For the historian of Christianity it has special interest as the age which approached most nearly the realization of Christendom as a cultural unity.

G. Gordon, Medium Aevum and the Middle Age (Society for Pure English, Tract xix; 1925).

MIDDLETON, THOMAS FANSHAWE (1769–1822), first Bp. of Calcutta. After graduating at Pembroke College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1792 and held a number of livings before being appointed vicar of St. Pancras in 1811. Three years later he was consecrated first Bishop of Calcutta, constituted as a vast diocese covering all the territories of the East India Company. His episcopate witnessed a great advance in Church life, including the foundation of the Bishop's College at Calcutta, a training college for missionaries in Asia, in 1820. Possessed of a somewhat chill exterior, Middleton was a man of great ability as well as a scholar of note, his chief work being The Doctrine of the Greek Article applied to the Criticism and Illustration of the New Testament (1808; revised ed. by H. J. *Rose, 1833).

C. W. Le Bas, Life of T. F. Middleton (2 vols., 1831). W. Wroth in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), pp. 363–5.

MID-LENT. See Laetare Sunday.

MIDRASH (Heb., 'investigation'). A Jewish term referring to exegesis, particularly of Scripture. The word appears in 2 Chr. 13. 22 and 24. 27 (EVV, 'commentary'), but has here scarcely acquired the later technical meaning, in which 'midrash' refers to the way in which exegetical material (both of *Haggadah and *Halacha) was attached to the text of Scripture (as opposed to *Mishnah, which refers to the repetition of exegetical material apart from the text of Scripture). Midrash is thus exegesis and exposition of Scripture in which both Haggadah and Halacha can occur. The word also came to be used as a way of referring to works of exegesis. Works which contain primarily Halachic exegesis are often known as halachic Midrashim, though technically they should be called Midrash Torah in which Halachah occurs. It originated in the period of the Soferim ('scribes'), of whom, acc. to Jewish traditions, *Ezra was the first. The earliest collections of Midrashim come, however, from the 2nd cent. A.D., although, since the scribes sought to preserve traditional material, much of their content is considerably older. Their study has illuminated many references in the Gospels to Jewish beliefs and practices and tended to confirm the general accuracy of the Gospel picture of contemporary Judaism.

Among the more important edd. are those of GEN. RABBAH by J. Theodor–C. Albeck (Berlin, 1912–29) and smaller Midrashim, ed. J. D. Eisenstein (New York, 1915) and S. A. Wertheimer (ed. 2, Jerusalem, 1950–3). The principal translations include: of the Tannaitic Midrashim, EXOD. tr. into Lat. by B. Ugolini, Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacrarum, xiv (Venice, 1752), cols. i–dlxxxvi; tr. into Eng. by J. Lauterbach (Philadelphia, Pa., 1933) and into German by J. Winter–A. Wünsche (Leipzig, 1909); LEV. tr. into Lat. by B. Ugolini, op. cit., cols. dlxxxvii–mdcxxx; of NUM. and DEUT. also into Lat. by id., op. cit., xv (ib., 1753), cols. i–dccccxvi; of the earliest exegetical Midrashim, MIDRASH RABBAH, into Eng. by H. Freedman–M. Simon and others (10 vols., London, 1939); into Germ. by A. Wünsche (8 vols., Leipzig, 1880–3); of the Homiletic Midrashim, Pesikta tr. into Germ. by A. Wünsche (Leipzig, 1885) and into Eng. by W. G. Braude (Yale Judaica Series, xviii; 2 vols., 1968). Smaller collections tr. into Germ. by A. Wünsche, 5 vols. (ib., 1907–10); other exegetical Midrashim, Lekah tobh (wrongly called Pesikta) on LEV.–DEUT. tr. into Lat. by B. Ugolini, op. cit., xv, cols. dccccxvi–mccxxvi, and xvi (ib., 1754); Midrash on Pss. into Germ. by A. Wünsche (2 vols., Trier, 1891–3) and into Eng. by W. G. Braude (Yale Judaica Series, xiii; 2 vols., 1959); on PROV. into Germ. by A. Wünsche (Leipzig, 1885). Index to Midrashic interpretations on the whole OT by A. Hyman, Torah ha-Kethubhah we-ha-mesurah (3 vols., Tel Aviv, 1937–40). L. Zunz, Die gottesdienstlichen Vorträge der Juden (1832; ed. 3, in Hebrew, Jerusalem, 1947). D. Hoffmann, Zur Einleitung in die halachischen Midraschim (Beilage zum Jahresbericht des Rabbiner-Seminars zu Berlin pro 1886–7 [1887]). W. Bacher, Die exegetische Terminologie der jüdischen Traditionsliteratur (2 parts [1899–]1905). H. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midraš (ed. 5, 1930), pp. 195–226 (Eng. tr., Philadelphia, Pa., 1945), pp. 201–34 and 331–49. M. Waxman, A History of Jewish Literature (revised ed., 1960), pp. 136–50.

MIGETIUS (8th cent.), Spanish heretic. The little that is known of him comes from the letters of his opponents, esp. *Elipandus. He seems, perhaps under *Priscillianist influences, to have taught the curious doctrine that God was revealed successively in David (as Father), in Jesus (as Son), and in St. Paul (as Holy Ghost). He was condemned at synods held at Seville in 782 and 785.

É. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1720–2, s.v. See also bibls. to Adoptianism and Elipandus.

MIGNE, JACQUES PAUL (1800–75), editor and publisher of theological literature. A parish priest near Orléans from 1824 to 1833, he then went to Paris, where he founded a printing-house and published an immense collection of religious texts and dictionaries, notably the Patrologia Latina, a corpus of Latin ecclesiastical writers up to *Innocent III (221 vols., 1844–64), and the Patrologia Graeca, of Greek writers to 1439 (162 vols., Greek text with Latin trans., 1857–66). He used many editions since superseded and printers' errors abound, but for most of the authors the collections remain the standard means of reference and citation. Migne's commercial activities were disliked by H. L. Quelen, Abp. of Paris (1817–39), but subsequent archbishops were more favourable. In 1868 his workshops and stereotype moulds were destroyed by fire.

A series of supplements to PL was edited by A. Hamman, O.F.M. (5 vols., Paris, 1958–74). Useful index to PG by F. Cavallera (Paris, 1912); to the same series there is also a more elaborate Index Locupletissimus by T. Hopfner (2 vols., ib., 1928–45). P. Glorieux, Pour revaloriser Migne. Tables rectificatives (Mélanges de Science religieuse, IX[e] Année, 1952. Cahier Supplémentaire). P. de Labriolle, 'Quelques Documents sur J. P. Migne, l'éditeur des deux Patrologies' in Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétiennes iii (1913), pp. 203–9. F. de Mely, 'L'Abbé Migne, l'homme et l'œuvre' in Revue archéologique, Sér. 5, i for Jan.–Jun. 1915 (1914), pp. 203–58. L. C. Sheppard, 'The Abbé Jacques-Paul Migne' in American Benedictine Review, vii (1956), pp. 112–28. L. Marchal in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1722–40, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 941–57, s.v.

MILAN, Edict of. Early in 313 the Emps. *Constantine and Licinius met at Milan and agreed to recognize the legal personality of the Christian Churches and to tolerate all religions equally. Their policy marked the triumph of Christianity over *persecution, but did not 'establish' the Church. The document commonly known as the 'Edict of Milan' (it is not an edict and was not issued at Milan) is to be found in divergent forms in *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecutorum, xlviii) and *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., x. 5).

O. Seeck, 'Das sogenannte Edikt von Mailand' in Z.K.T., xii (1891), pp. 381–6; H. Nesselhauf, 'Das Toleranzgesetz des Licinius' in Hist. J., lxxiv for 1954 (1955), pp. 44–61. N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (Raleigh Lecture for 1929; 1930), pp. 69–74 (full and valuable bibl.).

MILANESE RITE. See Ambrosian Rite.

MILDRED, St. (c. 700), Abbess of Minster-in-Thanet. Acc. to late and not wholly reliable sources (among them, *Goscelin, Thorn, *William of Malmesbury), she was the grand-daughter of Penda, King of Mercia, and daughter of St. Ermenburga, the foundress and abbess of the nunnery at Minster. She was sent for education to the convent of Chelles near Paris, whence, after resisting strong inducements to marriage, she returned to Minster, and became a nun at her mother's house, later succeeding her as abbess. After the destruction of Minster by the Danes in 1011, two of the monasteries at *Canterbury (St. Augustine's and St. Gregory's) laid claim to the possession of her relics; the resulting dispute provoked Goscelin's 'Libellus contra usurpatores S. Mildrithae'. Later her remains found their way to Deventer in Holland. Feast day, 13 July (more recently, 20 Feb.).

Life repr. from J. Capgrave, with introd. and other late material, in AA.SS., Jul. III (1723), pp. 512–23. Earlier material described in Hardy, i (pt. 1; 1862), pp. 376–84. B.H.L., ii, p. 870 (Nos. 5960–94). W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 914 f., s.v.

MILÍČ, JAN (d. 1374), pre-*Hussite reformer. After holding offices in the Imperial chancery of Charles IV, he abandoned (before the end of 1363) all his temporal interests and at Prague and elsewhere vigorously preached against the vices of the clergy. In 1367 he was imprisoned by the *Inquisition at Rome. His writings include a Libellus de Antichristo and many Latin sermons.

J. Loserth in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 68–72, s.v. 'Militsch von Kremsier'.

MILITANT, The Church. The body of Christians still on earth, as distinct from those in *Purgatory (*expectant) and those in *Heaven (*triumphant) (see Communion of Saints). Cf. the 'Prayer for the Church Militant' in the BCP.

MILL, JOHN. See Mills, John.

MILL, WILLIAM HODGE (1792–1853), English orientalist and High Church divine. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1814, he was from 1820 to 1838 the first principal of Bishop's College, Calcutta. Here he became keenly interested in Arabic and Sanscrit studies and assisted with the publication of works in the Indian vernaculars for spreading the Christian faith. Forced through ill-health to return to England in 1838, he became chaplain to Abp. W. *Howley and *Hulsean advocate (1839) and later Regius professor of Hebrew at Cambridge (1848). His support of the 'Cambridge *Camden Society' did much to further the interests of Tractarian principles at the university.

His Lectures on the Catechism, delivered in the Parish Church of Brasted, Kent, were posthumously ed. by B. *Webb, his son-in-law (1856), who also ed., with notes, a second ed. of his Five Sermons on the Temptation of Christ Our Lord in the Wilderness preached before the University of Cambridge in Lent 1844 (1873). C. Bendall in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), p. 400, s.v.

MILLENARIANISM. The belief in a future 'millennium', i.e. a thousand-year period of blessedness. The Christian concept may owe something to the Book of Daniel and to ideas popular in late pre-Christian Jewish apocalyptic literature, esp. 2 Esd., and the non-canonical Book of Enoch. The main source of the teaching is, however, the Book of Rev., ch. 20.

Its advocates fall into two groups, pre- and post-millennialists. The former maintain that the millennium will follow the Second Coming of Christ, but are divided as to whether it will be spent by the saints in heaven or upon earth: the latter believe that it precedes the Advent and, indeed, prepares the way for it by the spread of righteousness over the earth, a view which, in its modern form, owes much to Daniel Whitby (1638–1726).

In the early Church, Millenarianism was found among the *Gnostics and *Montanists, but was also accepted by more orthodox writers such as St. *Justin Martyr, St. *Irenaeus, and St. *Hippolytus of Rome, all of whom were pre-millennialists. Millenarianism came, however, increasingly to stress the carnal pleasures to be enjoyed during the thousand years of the saints' earthly reign and eventually a revulsion against the whole concept set in, initiated by *Origen and completed by St. *Augustine. For the next thousand years millenarian expectations were rarely met with, except among the *Joachimites and other sectarians of the 13th cent.

At the Reformation the *Anabaptists, as well as the *Bohemian and *Moravian Brethren, were Millenarians, while the 17th cent. Independents in England appear to have held similar views, largely influenced by Joseph *Mede (1586–1638). In Germany the Millenarian view gained its widest currency in the *Pietist Movement of the 17th and 18th cents., while in the 19th cent. new advocates of apocalyptic and millenarian ideas arose in the U.S.A. and in Great Britain, among them the *Irvingites, *Plymouth Brethren, and *Adventists, the last-named reviving the concept of a heavenly millennium after the Second Advent. Though Millenarianism has never been formally rejected by the larger Christian bodies, they have treated the subject with the greatest reserve.

L. Atzberger, Geschichte der christlichen Eschatologie innerhalb der vornicänischen Zeit (1896), passim. V. Ermoni, 'Les Phases successives de l'erreur millénariste' in R.H.Q., lxx (1901), pp. 353–88. L. Gry, Le Millénarisme dans ses origines et son développement [1904]. N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (1957). L. E. Froom, The Prophetic Faith of our Fathers (4 vols., Washington, D.C., 1946–54). R. Janin, A.A., 'Le Millénarisme et l'Église grecque' in É.O., xxvii (1928), pp. 201–210. J. Daniélou, S.J., 'La Typologie millénariste de la semaine dans le christianisme primitif' in V.C., ii (1948), pp. 1–16. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1181–95, s.v.; W. Bauer in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 1073–8, s.v. 'Chiliasmus'; R. Kuehner and J. P. Dolan in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 852–4, s.v., all with bibl. See also bibl. to Eschatology, Adventists, Jehovah's Witnesses, Plymouth Brethren, Seventh Day Adventists, etc.

MILLENARY PETITION. The petition presented in Apr. 1603 by the Puritans to *James I on his way from Scotland to London, in which they prayed to be relieved from their 'common burden of human rites and ceremonies'. It was so called from the thousand ministers whose wishes it professed to embody. The practices objected to included the cross in Baptism, *Confirmation, the surplice, the ring in marriage, the length of the service, the profanation of the Lord's Day, bowing at the name of Jesus, and the reading of the *Apocrypha in the lessons; but to avoid giving offence nothing was said against episcopacy as such. It was the immediate occasion of the *Hampton Court Conference (q.v.).

Text in T. *Fuller, The Church History of Britain from the Birth of Jesus Christ to the Year M.DC.XLVIII (1655), Book x, pp. 21–3 [Fuller's comments (p. 7; cf. also p. 23 f.) have very frequently been repeated]. Text also in Gee–Hardy, pp. 508–11 (No. 88). Useful note in S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Disgrace of Chief Justice Coke, i (1863), p. 163 (note 1). See also bibl. to Hampton Court Conference, James I, and Puritans.

MILLS, JOHN (1645–1707), NT textual critic. From 1670 to 1682 he was a fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, and from 1685 till his death principal of St. Edmund Hall. His edition of the Greek text of the NT, published in 1707, was a great advance on any of its predecessors, as Mills added to it a critical apparatus containing the readings of nearly 100 MSS. His correct name appears to have been 'Mills', not (as commonly given) 'Mill'.

D. *Whitby, Examen Variantium Lectionum J. Millii . . . in Novum Testamentum (Leyden, 1724; hostile). A. Fox, John Mill and Richard Bentley. A Study of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament 1675–1729 (1954), pp. 3–102. B. Porter in D.N.B., xxxvii (1894), pp. 388–90.

MILMAN, HENRY HART (1791–1868), Dean of *St. Paul's. After a brilliant career at Oxford, Milman was ordained in 1816 and in 1818 appointed rector of St. Mary's, Reading. In early life he was known esp. as a poet and writer of plays, and held from 1821 to 1831 the professorship of poetry at Oxford, where he was the immediate predecessor of J. *Keble. His History of the Jews (1829; anon.) first brought his name prominently before the theological world. The freedom and freshness with which it handled the OT narratives, treating the Jews as an oriental tribe and attaching relatively little weight to the influence of the miraculous, met with much criticism. In 1835 Peel made him rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster, and in 1849 he became Dean of St. Paul's. While in the latter office he published his well-known treatise on the History of Latin Christianity (1855), a work which, despite many blemishes in matters of detail, treated a vast subject with balance, candour, and sympathy, and did much to foster the intelligent study of medieval life and institutions. Among his other writings were editions of E. *Gibbon's Decline and Fall (1838) and of his Life and Correspondence (1839), a History of Christianity to the Abolition of Paganism in the Roman Empire (1840) and Annals of St. Paul's Cathedral (1868; posthumous).

The standard life is by his son, Arthur Milman (London, 1900; not entirely satisfactory). Shorter, but good, accounts which supplement the life, by A. P. *Stanley in Macmillan's Magazine, xix (1869), pp. 177–87; repr. in Stanley's Essays chiefly on Questions of Church and State (1870), pp. 572–91; [J. S. *Howson] in The Quarterly Review, cxxvi (1869), pp. 218–47; W. E. H. Lecky in The Edinburgh Review, cxci (1900), pp. 510–27; repr. in Lecky's Historical and Political Essays (1908), pp. 249–74; C. [H. E.] Smyth, Dean Milman (1949). R. Garnett in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 1–4.

MILNER, ISAAC. See Milner, Joseph.

MILNER, JOHN (1752–1826), RC apologist. Educated at the English College at *Douai, he was ordained priest in 1777. He soon returned to England as a zealous propagandist for his creed, where, however, his extreme claims in the matter of Catholic Emancipation alienated many of his co-religionists. In 1803 he was appointed titular Bp. of Castabala and *Vicar-Apostolic of the Midland District. As an enthusiastic *Ultramontane, he eagerly pressed the case for Papal Infallibility. His chief work, The End of Religious Controversy (written 1801–2; published 1818; new edition by L. Rivington, 1896), forcefully presented the RC case in a series of letters, and has gone through many editions.

F. C. Husenbeth, Life of John Milner (1862). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 14–16.

MILNER, JOSEPH (1744–97), *Evangelical divine. He was educated at Leeds grammar school and Catharine Hall, Cambridge. After ordination he was curate at Thorp Arch, W. Yorks (near Tadcaster), until 1768, when he moved to Hull. In 1770 he became an ardent Evangelical, and for the rest of his life was successively curate and vicar of North Ferriby on the Humber. Shortly before his death, mainly through the efforts of W. *Wilberforce, he was presented to the living of Holy Trinity, Hull. His History of the Church of Christ, largely put into shape and extended by his brother, Isaac Milner (1750–1820, from 1791 Dean of *Carlisle), was brought out in stages between 1794 and 1809. Though inaccurate and uncritical, it won great popularity. Among Joseph Milner's other writings were Gibbon's Account of Christianity Considered (1781) and Essays on Several Religious Subjects (1789). After his death many of his sermons (Practical Sermons, 4 vols., 1800–30) were published.

Life by Isaac Milner, prefixed to Joseph Milner's Practical Sermons (London, 1800). J. D. Walsh, 'Joseph Milner's Evangelical Church History' in J.E.H., ix (1959), pp. 174–87. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), p. 17 f.

MILTIADES (2nd cent.), early Christian *Apologist. *Tertullian (Adv. Valent., v) and *Eusebius (H.E., V. xvii. 1 and 5) mention him as having written against the pagans and the Jews, as well as against the *Montanists and *Valentinians; but all his works are lost. He wrote in Asia Minor.

Testimonia on Miltiades assembled in J. C. T. Otto (ed.), Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum Saeculi Secundi, ix (Jena, 1872), pp. 364–73. Bardenhewer, i (1913), pp. 284–6. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 916 f., s.v.; E. Amann in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), col. 1765, s.v.

MILTIADES, St. (d. 314), less correctly, Melchiades, Pope from 310 (or perhaps 311). Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis*, he was an African by birth. His pontificate was remarkable for *Constantine's victory over Maxentius and the issue of the 'Edict of *Milan'. In Oct. 313 he held a Council at the *Lateran at which *Donatism was condemned. J. B. *de Rossi believed, but on evidence now generally thought insufficient, that he had discovered his tomb in the Catacomb of St. Callistus. Feast day, 10 Dec.

L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 8 f., 74 f., 168 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 103–15. J. B. de Rossi, Roma sotterranea cristiana, ii (1867), pp. 188–90 and pl. xxiii. H. U. Instinsky, 'Zwei Bischofsnamen konstantinischer Zeit. I. Miltiades von Rom' in R.Q., lv (1960), pp. 203–6, with reff. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., x[1] (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1199–1203, s.v., and xiii (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1194–6, s.v. 'Pape'.

MILTITZ, CARL VON (c. 1480–1529), Papal nuncio. Born near Meissen of a noble Saxon family, after studying at Mainz, Trier, and *Cologne, he made his way to Rome, where he was appointed Papal chamberlain (c. 1514) and acted as agent of *Frederick the Wise (III), Elector of Saxony. After Card. T. de V. *Cajetan's attempts to silence M. *Luther had failed, Miltitz, as a German who knew the Germans, was deputed, on pretence of taking the coveted *Golden Rose to Frederick, to negotiate with the Reformer. At a first meeting, held at Altenburg (4–6 Jan. 1519), Luther agreed to cease from further action pending reference of the matter to a German bishop, but made no offer of recantation. Miltitz then proceeded to Leipzig, where, in the hope of restraining the movement, he disavowed and attacked J. *Tetzel. He soon discovered that nothing could be achieved by conciliation and two further meeting with Luther, at Liebenwerda (5 Oct. 1519) and Lichtenberg, near *Wittenberg (12 Oct. 1520), were fruitless. After a further visit to Rome, he returned to Germany, where he spent his last years at Mainz and Meissen. He was accidentally drowned in the Main on 20 Nov. 1529 and was buried in Mainz Cathedral.

H. A. Creutzberg, Karl von Miltitz, 1490–1529. Sein Leben und seine geschichtliche Bedeutung (Studien und Darstellungen aus dem Gebiet der Geschichte, vi, Hft. 1; 1907). P. Kalkoff, Die Miltitziade. Eine kritische Nachlese zur Geschichte des Ablassstreites (1911).

MILTON, JOHN (1608–74), poet and controversialist. The son of a scrivener, he was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and at Christ's College, Cambridge (1625–32), where he won a high reputation for his scholarship and literary gifts; his famous Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity (1629) belongs to this period. From 1632 to 1638 he lived on his father's estate at Horton in Buckinghamshire. Having abandoned his original intention of taking orders because of the 'tyranny' that had invaded the Church under Abp. W. *Laud, he devoted himself entirely to scholarship and literature. Among his finest poems of this period are L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, which are sometimes taken as expressing the two sides of his nature, torn between the desire for pleasure and the love of meditation and silence. In 'A Maske Presented at Ludlow Castle, 1634' [Comus] (pr. 1637), he sings the praises of chastity in a dramatic poem. In 1637 he wrote the monody Lycidas on the death of a friend, containing a sharp satiric allusion to the clergy, one of his main themes in later years. Next year he travelled in Italy, and after his return moved to London, where he spent many years in political and religious controversy. In 1641 he joined the *Presbyterians and took part in the famous '*Smectymnuus' affair, and about the same time wrote The Reason of Church Government Urged against Prelacy, a fierce attack on episcopacy in which he saw only an instrument of tyranny. In 1643 he married Mary Powell, a member of a strongly Royalist family. She left him shortly afterwards, and he returned once more to the question of the reform of the divorce laws, writing The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce (1643), in which he made a passionate appeal for the solubility of marriage on the grounds of incompatibility of character and declared the sanctity and sacramental character of marriage to be a clerical invention. The treatise, which roused a heated discussion, caused his break with the Presbyterians. Its publication without a licence from the censor led the case to be submitted to Parliament and drew from Milton his celebrated Areopagitica (1644) in defence of the freedom of the press. Parliament dropped the case, but the real success of Milton's pleading came only many years later. From this time his religious views tended more and more towards the *Independents, and he came to regard sects and schisms as a sign of health in the body politic. In 1645 he was reconciled to his wife, and in the same year published the first collection of his Poems. From 1649 Milton supported the new government. He defended the execution of the King in his Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (1649) and accepted a government post as secretary for foreign tongues, which involved chiefly the drafting of letters in Latin to foreign governments. In the same year he published Eikonoklastes, his reply to the royalist pamphlet Eikon Basilike*. In 1651 he wrote his Pro Populo Anglicano Defensio, an answer to the accusations of regicide levelled (esp. by *Salmasius) against the English people. It was followed by the Defensio Secunda (1654). In 1651 he became totally blind, and in 1652 he lost his wife. Despite his admiration for O. *Cromwell he disagreed with the ecclesiastical policy of his later years, which ran counter to Milton's main idea of a complete disestablishment of Churches everywhere. After Cromwell's death his chief preoccupation was to prevent the re-establishment of the monarchy, and after the Restoration he was for a short time imprisoned. With the fall of his religious and political hopes he turned once more to poetry, and from 1658 to 1665 wrote his greatest work, Paradise Lost (q.v., publd. 1667), in which he undertook to 'justify the ways of God to men' and to show the cause of evil and injustice in the world. In 1671 appeared its sequel, Paradise Regained, which dealt with the temptation of Christ in the wilderness, and Samson Agonistes, which is now thought to have been written before Paradise Lost. In the latter, which described in dramatic form the last hours of Samson 'before the prison in Gaza', the blind hero partly represented Milton himself, a trait that added poignancy to the masterly representation of the tragic death of the OT hero. Milton's theological testament is contained in the treatise De Doctrina Christiana, which was published posthumously. It contains much unorthodox doctrine, denying the coeternity and coequality of the Divine Persons as well as the dogma of creation ex nihilo, and asserting that matter is inherent in God. Despite his attachment to the Puritan party, his independent outlook can hardly be forced under a party label. His theological as well as his political opinions were highly individualistic and a strange blend of love of order and hierarchical values with the revolutionary ideas of a mind wishing to be a law to itself.

Collected ed. of his works in prose and verse by F. A. Patterson and others (18 vols. in 21 parts, New York, 1931–8, with index, 2 vols., ib., 1940). First ed. of his collected verse, 5 parts, fol., London, 1695; modern edd. include those by H. C. Beeching (Oxford, 1900), W. A. Wright (Cambridge, 1903), H. J. C. Grierson (2 vols., London, 1925), H. F. Fletcher (Boston, Mass., 1941), Helen Darbishire (2 vols., Oxford, 1952–5; London, 1958 and 1961), and J. Carey–A. Fowler (London, 1968); prose writings ed. J. *Toland (3 vols., fol., 'Amsterdam' [London], 1698); also ed. C. Symmons (7 vols., London, 1806), J. A. St. John (5 vols., London, 1848–1853), and D. M. Wolfe and others (8 vols., New Haven–London, 1953 ff.). Private Correspondence and Academic Exercises tr. into Eng. by P. B. Tillyard, ed., with introd., by E. M. W. Tillyard (Cambridge, 1932). S. *Johnson, The Lives of the English Poets, i (Dublin, 1779), pp. 137–230 (often reprinted). Helen Darbishire (ed.), The Early Lives of Milton (1932), with useful introd. J. M. French (ed.), The Life Records of John Milton (5 vols., New Brunswick, N.J., 1949–58). Standard life by D. Masson (6 vols., London, 1859–80; index, 1894). Other general studies include those by M. *Pattison ('English Men of Letters', 1879), W. Raleigh (London, 1900), E. M. W. Tillyard (ib., 1930), F. E. Hutchinson (ib., 1946), J. H. Hanford (ib., 1950), and W. R. Parker (2 vols., Oxford, 1968). J. H. Hanford, A Milton Handbook (1926); E. M. W. Tillyard, The Miltonic Setting, Past and Present (1938); id., Studies in Milton (1951). D. Saurat, La Pensée de Milton (Paris thesis, 1920), expanded and tr. as Milton, Man and Thinker (1925). Dora N. Raymond, Oliver's Secretary. John Milton in an Era of Revolt (New York, 1932); D. M. Wolfe, Milton in the Puritan Revolution (1941); A. Barker, Milton and the Puritan Dilemma, 1641–1660 (University of Toronto, Department of English, Studies and Texts, i; 1942). A. Sewell, A Study in Milton's Christian Doctrine (1939). H. F. Fletcher, The Use of the Bible in Milton's Prose (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, xiv, No. 3; 1929). Id., The Intellectual Development of John Milton (2 vols., Urbana, 1956–61); C. A. Patrides, Milton and the Christian Tradition (Oxford, 1966). Barbara K. Lewalski, Milton's Brief Epic. The Genre, Meaning, and Art of Paradise Regained (Providence, Rhode Island–London, 1966). R. D. Havens, The Influence of Milton on English Poetry (Cambridge, Mass., 1922). J. Bradshaw, A Concordance to the Poetical Works of John Milton (1894). D. H. Stevens, Reference Guide to Milton from 1800 to the Present Day (Chicago, 1930); addenda by H. F. Fletcher (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, xvi, No. 1; 1931); C. Huckaby, John Milton. A Bibliographical Supplement 1929–1957 (Duquesne Studies. Philological Series, i; Pittsburgh–Louvain, 1960; revised to cover period 1929–1968; 1969). G. Saintsbury in A. W. Ward–A. R. Waller (edd.), The Cambridge History of English Literature, vii (1911), pp. 95–141, with bibl. by G. A. Brown, pp. 413–23; further bibl. by D. H. Stevens in C.B.E.L., i, pp. 463–73. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 24–41.

MILVIAN BRIDGE, Battle of the. The battle on 28 Oct. 312 between the Emps. *Constantine and Maxentius (Emperor in Italy and Africa). Maxentius, who had made a sortie from Rome, met his rival advancing from the north, and after being outmanœuvred was defeated at the 'Saxa Rubra' on the Flaminian Way. On taking flight he was drowned in the Tiber some five miles nearer Rome at the Ponte Milvio (whence the battle is named, somewhat inaccurately). The battle was decisive for the history of Christianity, for it enabled Constantine to establish himself with Licinius as joint Emperor and thus prepared the way for the 'Edict of *Milan'.

N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (Raleigh Lecture for 1929; 1930), p. 65 f. (full and valuable bibl.).

MINIMS (Ordo Fratrum Minimorum). The order of friars founded in 1435 by St. *Francis of Paola. As their name indicates, they meant to practise humility as their chief virtue, regarding themselves as the least (minimi) of all religious. Their first rule, confirmed by *Alexander VI in 1493, was based on that of St. *Francis of Assisi, whereas the second one, sanctioned by the same Pope in 1501, was more or less independent. Its special characteristic is the fourth vow of perpetual abstinence not only from flesh meat and fish, but also from eggs, cheese, butter, and milk. The superiors of the Minims are called 'correctors', the 'corrector-general' being elected for 6 years, the 'corrector-provincial' for 3. The members of the order wear a black habit. The order spread quickly and had already 5 provinces in Italy, France, Spain, and Germany at the death of its founder. It reached its greatest expansion in the first half of the 16th cent., with about 450 convents, but suffered severely in the times of revolution and secularization from 1791 to 1870. Today it leads a precarious existence, mainly in Italy and Spain. A Second Order of enclosed nuns, founded in 1495, is almost entirely confined to Spain, but the *Third Order for people living in the world flourishes in S. America.

G. Moretti, Acta Capitulorum Generalium Ordinis Minimorum (2 vols., Rome, 1916). G. M. Roberti, Disegno storico dell'ordine dei Minimi (3 vols., 1902–22). P. J. S. Whitmore, The Order of Minims in seventeenth-century France (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, xx; 1967). S. Mortola, Martiri Minimi (Genoa, 1926). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 48–52, with bibl. L. Oliger, O.F.M., in C.E., x (1911), p. 325 f., s.v.; G. Moretti in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1036–40, s.v. 'Minimi', with bibl.

MINISTER (Lat., 'servant'). A person officially charged to perform spiritual functions in the Christian Church. As a general designation for any clergyman, it is used esp. in non-episcopal bodies. In the BCP it usually means the conductor of a service who may or may not be a priest. A Minister is also one who assists the higher orders in discharging their functions, and in this sense the *Deacon and *Subdeacon at *High Mass were known as the 'Sacred Ministers'. In yet another sense, the word is used semi-technically of one who 'administers' the outward and visible signs of a Sacrament. Thus, should a layman baptize in a case of necessity, he would in that case be the 'minister' of the Sacrament.

MINOR CANON. A cleric attached to a cathedral or collegiate church to assist in the rendering of the daily service. He holds a position analogous to that of a *canon, but is not a member of the *chapter. In cathedrals of the 'Old Foundation' the Minor Canons are often known as 'Vicars Choral'. Originally the corporation of Minor Canons at *St. Paul's Cathedral consisted of 12 members, but by the 'St. Paul's Minor Canonries Act' (1840; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113) the number was reduced to six (two retaining the title of 'cardinal').

MINOR ORDERS. The inferior degrees of the ministry, below the three *Major Orders of *bishops, *priests, and *deacons, to which, in the past, the W. Church added *subdeacons. These last were formally placed among the major orders by Pope *Innocent III in 1207; until then they were commonly reckoned as minor orders, as they still are in the E. Church. In the W. until 1972 there were four minor orders, viz. porters, *lectors, *exorcists, and *acolytes. They are first mentioned in a letter of Pope *Cornelius to Fabian of Antioch in 252. By the motu proprio 'Ministeria quaedam' of 1972 the minor orders, henceforth to be called 'ministeria', were reduced to two, lectors and acolytes alone surviving. In the E., since the *Trullan Council of 692, lectors and cantors have survived, whereas the other three—porters, exorcists, and acolytes—have been merged in the subdeaconate.

The rite by which minor orders are conferred differs essentially from ordination to holy orders. In the W. it has remained in essentials as laid down in the *Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua' (c. 450–500). It consists chiefly of a commission to exercise their office and the handing over of the *instruments. According to present RC usage they are conferred by a bishop (or his delegate), but an abbot who has received episcopal benediction or a major religious superior may confer them on his own subjects. Before 1972 the minor orders had become no more than transitory stages to the priesthood, but the order of acolyte and lector may now be conferred on laymen. To these offices have been assigned the former duties of the subdeacon (suppressed in 1972).

F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q. Suppl., vii; 1897). M. Andrieu, 'Les Ordes mineurs dans l'ancien rite romain' in Rev. S.R., v (1925), pp. 232–74.

MINOR PROPHETS, The. In the OT the authors of the twelve shorter Prophetic Books, as contrasted with the three Major Prophets—*Isaiah, *Jeremiah, and *Ezekiel. They are *Hosea, *Joel, *Amos, *Obadiah, *Jonah, *Micah, *Nahum, *Habakkuk, *Zephaniah, *Haggai, *Zechariah, and *Malachi. This, the usual order, is apparently based on chronological considerations. In the Greek Bible they were termed collectively the 'Twelve' (δωδεκαπρόφητον). (*Daniel, although placed in English Bibles between Ezekiel and Hosea, was assigned by the Jews to the *Hagiographa and was thus not included among the Prophetic Books at all.)

Modern commentaries on the Minor Prophets include those by E. B. *Pusey (London, 1860, with index vol. 1891), J. *Wellhausen (Skizzen und Vorarbeiten by id., v; Berlin, 1892), G. A. *Smith (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1896–8), R. F. Horton–S. R. *Driver (Cent. Bib., 2 vols. [1904–6]), K. Marti (K.H.A.T., Abt., xiii; 1904), A. van Hoonacker (Études Bibliques, 1908), E. Sellin (K.A.T., xii; 1922), T. H. Robinson–F. Horst (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. xiv; 1938), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xxiv–xxv; 1949), and H. W. Wolff (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, xiv; 2 vols., 1961–9). See also bibl. to individual Books.

MINORITES. An older name for the *Franciscan 'Friars Minor'. The street in the city of London called the 'Minories' takes its name from a convent of the 'Minoresses' (Minorite nuns).

MINSTER (Lat. monasterium, 'monastery'; cf. Ger. Münster). A name applied to certain cathedrals and other large churches in England, esp. the cathedrals of *York, *Lincoln, *Ripon, *Southwell, and *Lichfield, and the churches at *Beverley, Wimborne, &c. As a common noun it originally meant any monastic establishment or its church, whether strictly a monastery (e.g. the abbey at *Westminster) or a house or college of secular canons (which was also often called 'monasterium' in the Middle Ages), such as were all those mentioned above. In Anglo-Saxon England 'old minsters' founded by kings and bishops on their estates and staffed by groups of clergy living in community, were the centres of vast parishes, within which new churches, each served by a single priest, were created to serve smaller areas. One such minster is still recalled by Minster Street in Reading; Lambourn, Aylesbury, Bampton and Sonning were others in the same region.

MINUCIUS FELIX (2nd or 3rd cent.), author of the 'Octavius'. Apparently an African, he wrote in Latin an elegant defence of Christianity in the form of a conversation between Octavius, a Christian, and Caecilius, a pagan, who was converted by the argument. The book refutes the common charges against Christians (see Persecutions), argues the case for monotheism and providence, and attacks pagan mythology, but says little of specifically Christian doctrines. It is probably a 3rd cent. work, dependent on *Tertullian's 'Apology' (197), though some scholars believe it to be Tertullian's source.

The 'Octavius' survives in a poor text in Cod. Par. 1661 (saec. ix), where it appears as Bk. VIII of *Arnobius Adversus Nationes. Editio princeps in Works of Arnobius, ed. Rome, 1543. Crit. edd. by C. Halm (C.S.E.L., 1867), J. P. Waltzing (Louvain, 1903; ed. Teub., Leipzig, 1926), G. H. Rendell (Loeb, 1931), M. Pellegrino (Turin, 1950; with Introd. and Comm.), and J. Beaujeu (Collection des Universités de France, 1964). J. P. Migne, PL, iii, 193–652. Further Eng. trr. by R. E. Wallis in A.N.C.L., xiii (1869), pp. 451–517, and by J. H. Freese (Early Church Classics, 1918). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, i (1901), pp. 463–508. H. J. Baylis, Minucius Felix and his Place among the Early Fathers of the Latin Church (1928). C. Becker, Der 'Octavius' des Minucius Felix. Heidnische Philosophie und frühchristliche Apologetik (Sb. (Bayr.), Jahrgang 1967, Hft. 2). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 329–43; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 146–8, with bibl.

MINUSCULE SCRIPT. See Cursive Script.

MIRACLE. Acc. to the traditional view, a miracle is a sensible fact (opus sensibile) produced by the special intervention of God for a religious end, transcending the normal order of things usually termed the Law of Nature. The possibility of miracles began to be questioned with the rise of modern science in the 17th and 18th cents., with its ever growing tendency to regard the world in which we live as a closed system, subject to the laws of nature, and to exclude all interference from a higher power. Neither *pantheism (B. *Spinoza, G. W. F. *Hegel), which identifies God with the Law of Nature, nor *Deism (J. *Toland, M. *Tindal), which separates God from the world, nor 18th cent. thought as represented by the scepticism of D. *Hume, accorded a place to supernatural intervention. Thus the miracles of Scripture and Church history were normally regarded as facts within the sphere of natural explanation, misrepresented by credulous contemporaries, and the term 'miracle' came to be treated as a cover for human ignorance. Such views were widely held by rationalistic exponents of Christianity in the 19th cent., e.g. E. *Renan, D. F. *Strauss, T. H. *Huxley, and M. *Arnold.

In support of the traditional belief it is argued that on a genuinely theistic view miracles are not only possible but even probable, for if God is held to be the supreme First Cause responsible for, but not subject to, the Laws of Nature, it would be likely that He should, from time to time, act directly without the intervention of secondary causes. The latest developments in the field of science, which move further and further away from a hard-and-fast determinism, may indicate an approaching reconciliation between the Christian tradition and modern scientific research.

Whereas Protestant orthodoxy normally confines itself to belief in the miracles recorded in Scripture, Catholic orthodoxy claims that miracles have at all times occurred within the pale of the Church. The reputed cures at *Lourdes are among the best known, and acc. to RC *canon law (CIC, can. 2117), two to four well-authenticated miracles after death are required for the beatification of a saint, though belief in any of these miracles is not demanded of the faithful as de fide*.

J. B. *Mozley, Eight Lectures on Miracles [*Bampton Lectures] (1865); F. R. Tennant, Miracle and its Philosophical Presuppositions, Three Lectures (1925). C. S. Lewis, Miracles. A Preliminary Study (1947). A. Fridrichsen, Le Problème du miracle dans le christianisme primitif (Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses, xii; Strassburg, 1925). I. T. Ramsey, Miracles. An Exercise in Logical Mapwork (Inaugural Lecture, Oxford, 1952); J. S. Lawton, Miracles and Revelation (1959); C. F. D. Moule (ed.), Miracles. Cambridge Studies in their Philosophy and History (1965).

MIRACLE PLAY. See Mystery Play.

MIRARI VOS. *Gregory XVI's encyclical (15 Aug. 1832) condemning the social and political doctrines of F. R. de Lamennais and his circle. Without naming Lamennais it censured his writings in defence of social liberty as inciting to sedition and as contrary to the spirit of obedience inculcated by the Gospel, as well as his teaching on the liberty of worship and of the press as opposed to the maxims of the Church. Its reactionary standpoint foreshadowed the Syllabus Errorum of 1864. After Lamennais's reply in Paroles d'un croyant the Pope reiterated the condemnations in the encyclical 'Singulari Nos' of 25 June 1834.

Text of 'Mirari Vos' is pr. among the Acta Gregorii Papae XVI, ed. A. M. Bernasconius, i (Rome, 1901), pp. 169–74; text of 'Singulari Nos', ib., iii (Rome, 1902), pp. 356–8; the principal clauses are repr. in Denz.–Bann. (ed. 1952), p.

447 f. (Nos. 1613–16) and p. 448 f. (No. 1617) respectively, with reff. to other edd. of texts. See also bibl. to Lamennais.

MIRFIELD. See Community of the Resurrection.

MIRK, JOHN. See Myrc, John.

MISERERE. A common designation of Ps. 51 (Vulg. 50) derived from the initial word of the Latin version, 'Miserere mei, Deus'. The term is sometimes inaccurately applied to the '*misericord'.

MISERICORD (Lat. misericordia, 'mercy'). The projection on the underside of a hinged seat of a choir-stall, commonly said to have been designed to provide support to those incapable of standing for long periods during Divine worship. The term is also sometimes used of a room set apart in a monastery for the use of those monks whose health or age requires some relaxation of the observance of the rule.

F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, i, 'Misericords' (1910), with bibl. M. D. Anderson, Misericords (King Penguin Books, lxxii; 1954). G. L. Remnant, A Catalogue of the Misericords in Great Britain, with an essay on their iconography by M. D. Anderson (Oxford, 1969).

MISHNAH (Heb., מִשְׁנָה, 'repetition', hence 'instruction'). The term refers primarily to a method and form of Jewish exegesis of Scripture. It describes the way in which exegetical material was collected in its own right (as opposed to *midrash, in which the material was attached to texts of Scripture). Various collections of mishnaic material (mishnayot) were made, culminating in the authoritative Mishnah, attributed to Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi (c. 135–c. 220). This, in slightly different recensions, forms the basis of both the Palestinian and the Babylonian *Talmuds. The Mishnah is a redaction and collection of earlier material; apart from *Pirqe Aboth, it consists almost entirely of *Halachic material; and it is written in the Hebrew characteristic of Jewish scholars of the time. Each of the six divisions—Seeds (laws on agriculture), Festivals, Women (marriage laws), Injuries (civil and criminal law), Holy Things (ritual law), Purifications—is divided into parts ('Tractates'), the parts further subdivided into chapters, and the chapters into paragraphs. Among the Tractates are the well-known 'Yoma' (on the Day of *Atonement) and the 'Pirqe Aboth' (q.v.).

The Mishnah and Talmud have had an influence on the life of Judaism second only to that of the Scriptures, and its study is an essential part of Jewish education. Its authority rests on the view that the Oral Law was given to Moses on *Sinai at the same time as the Written Law and so is of Divine origin, a view originally peculiar to the *Pharisees, but which, through the leading part they took in the reorganization of Jewish life after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, became that generally accepted by Judaism. In a wider sense the word 'Mishnah' was used of the teaching and learning of the tradition and then of the tradition itself, the study of which goes back at least to the 2nd cent. B.C. See also Tosefta.

Editio princeps publd. at Naples, 1492. There is no crit. ed. of the Heb. text; the ed. with most comprehensive comm. is that publd. by Widow Romm and Brothers, Vilna, ed. 50, 6 vols., 1922. Mod. ed., with Eng. tr., by P. Blackman, 7 vols., London, 1951–6. There are many translations of the Mishnah into Western languages; good Eng. version by H. Danby, Oxford, 1933; with introd. and notes. Concordance to Heb. text by H. J. Kassowski (2 vols., Frankfurt a.M., 1927). C. Albeck, Untersuchungen über die Redaktion der Mischna (Veröffentlichungen der Akademie für die Wissenschaft des Judentums, Talmudische Sektion, ii; 1923). S. Rosenblatt, The Interpretation of the Bible in the Mishnah (Baltimore, 1935). H. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midraš (ed. 5, 1930), pp. 23–64; Eng. tr. (Philadelphia, 1945), pp. 26–64. The best general study is that by J. N. Epstein (in Hebrew; 2 vols., Jerusalem, 1948). J. Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 40–61. E. E. Urbach in Encyclopaedia Judaica, xii (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 93–109, s.v.

MISRULE, Lord of, also known as the Abbot (or Master) of Misrule. In medieval times, a person selected to preside over the Christmas revels and games. The custom was closely connected with the 'Feast of *Fools' kept at this season, it being the practice to nominate at the celebration a 'precentor of the fools' (praecentor stultorum). In a secularized form the institution survived till the 17th cent. See also Boy Bishop; Asses, Feast of.

E. K. Chambers, The Medieval Stage (1903), i, pp. 390–419 ('Masks and Misrule').

MISSA CANTATA (Lat., 'Sung Mass'). In the W. Church the form of celebrating Mass in which the celebrant and congregation sang the liturgical parts of the rite set to music for High Mass, but without *deacon and *subdeacon. It was in essence a simplification of High Mass, esp. used in places where there were insufficient ministers for the full ceremonial. Since the Second *Vatican Council the RC Church has encouraged singing at all Masses and the term has been rendered obsolete.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 273–9; Eng. tr. (1951), i, pp. 207–12.

MISSA CATECHUMENORUM. See Catechumens, Mass of the.

MISSA FIDELIUM. See Faithful, Mass of the.

MISSA ILLYRICA. A mass ordo published by M. *Flacius 'Illyricus' at Strassburg in 1557. Acc. to J. Braun, it was composed at Minden for the use of Bp. Sigebert (c. 1030). (F. *Cabrol's contention that it came from the Court of Charlemagne rests on a confusion between *Alcuin and the Ps.-Alcuin of the 10th cent.) It is characterized by the unusually large number of 'apologiae' (i.e. avowals of personal unworthiness interpolated into the Liturgy by the celebrant) at various points of the rite. Flacius, who argued that the rite was free from the corruptions of medieval Eucharistic doctrine, wrongly dated the Mass at c. 700. The stir which its publication created among 16th cent. theologians and liturgists was hardly justified by its contents.

The text is repr. in E. *Martène, De antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (Rouen, 1700), Lib. I, cap. 4, Ordo 4 (vol. i, pp. 481–513); also in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxviii, 1305–36. J. Braun, 'Alter und Herkunft der sog. Missa Illyrica' in Stimmen aus Maria Laach, lxix (1905, ii), pp. 143–55. F. Cabrol, O.S.B., 'La Messe de Flacius Illyricus' in R. Bén., xxii (1905), pp. 151–64. Id. in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1625–35, s.v. 'Flacius Illyricus (La Messe latine de)'.

MISSAL (Lat. Liber missalis, also Missale), The book usually containing everything to be sung or said at, with ceremonial directions for, the celebration of the *Mass throughout the year. As a liturgical book, the Missal began to make its appearance in the 10th cent. as a combination of the *Antiphonary, the *Gradual, the *Epistolary and *Evangeliary, and the *Ordo with the *Sacramentary. Its development was fostered by the custom of saying private Masses. The 1970 Missale Romanum omits the Biblical readings, which were issued separately in an independent *lectionary in 1969.

P. *Batiffol, Leçons sur la messe (ed. 2, 1919), pp. 1–10. A. Ebner, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte und Kunstgeschichte des Missale Romanum im Mittelalter. Iter Italicum (1896). J. Baudot, O.S.B., Le Missel romain. Ses origines, son histoire (2 vols., 1912). A. *Baumstark, Missale Romanum (Eindhoven, 1930). H. Grisar, S.J., Das Missale im Lichte der römischen Stadtgeschichte (1925). J. B. Ferreres, Historia del misal romano (Barcelona, 1929). O. Nussbaum, Kloster, Priestermönch und Privatmesse. Ihr Verhältnis im Westen, von Anfängen bis zum hohen Mittalalter (Theophaneia, xiv; 1961). W. H. I. Weale, Bibliographia Liturgica. Catalogus Missalium Ritus Latini . . . Impressorum (London, 1886; ed. H. Bohatta, 1948). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1431–68 and 1468–94, s.v. 'Missel' and 'Missel romain'; A. P. Frutaz–G. Ronci in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 831–41, s.v. 'Messale'.

MISSALE FRANCORUM. An incomplete Sacramentary, formerly thought to be of Gallican provenance, but now generally recognized to be closely related to the (Roman) *Gelasian Sacramentary. It contains rites of Ordination, of the blessing of virgins and widows, and of the consecration of altars, and eleven Masses, concluding with the Canon of the Roman Mass as far as Nobis quoque peccatoribus. The MS., which is in *uncials, was written in France c. 700. In the 13th cent. it was in the possession of the abbey of *St.-Denis and is now in the *Vatican Library (Reg. lat. 257).

The text has been edited by G. M. *Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; reprinted in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 317–40), and L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748). Crit. ed. by L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B. (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, ii; Rome, 1957).

MISSALE GALLICANUM VETUS. This is the name given to a MS. now in the *Vatican Library (Pal. lat. 493). It consists of fragments of two *Gallican *Sacramentaries written in the 8th cent. The first contains a Mass for the feast of St. *Germanus, formularies for the consecration of virgins and widows, together with a Mass and homily for use 'in symboli *traditione'. The second contains Masses for Advent, Lent, Easter and the Rogation days. The parts were bound with other material which came to be preserved at *Lorsch.

The text has been pr. by G. M. *Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 339–82), L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748) and J. M. *Neale–G. H. *Forbes (Burntisland, 1855). Crit. ed. by L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B. (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, iii; Rome, 1958).

MISSALE GOTHICUM. A *Gallican *Sacramentary, now in the *Vatican (Reg. lat. 317). It contains Masses of the season from Christmas Eve to Whitsunday interspersed with some for saints' days, and followed by Masses for the *Common of Saints, six Sunday Masses, and a fragment of a Mass for use on ferias described as 'romensis'. Some of its formularies are Roman, but the arrangement throughout is acc. to the order of the Gallican Mass. It was written in the scriptorium of *Luxeuil c. 700. The misleading title, 'Missale Gothicum', which was added to the MS. in the 15th cent., wrongly suggested to G. M. *Tommasi, its first editor, that it was from the province of Narbonne when under Visigothic rule. It was prob. drawn up for the Church of Autun.

Earlier editions by G. M. Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; reprinted in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 225–318), L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748), A. F. Vezzozi (Rome, 1747) and J. M. *Neale–G. H. *Forbes (Burntisland, 1855). Modern edd., with introduction and notes, by H. M. Bannister, H.B.S., lii (1917 for 1916) and liv (1919 for 1917), and L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B. (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, v; Rome, 1961). Facsimile edited by L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B., 2 vols. (Tafelband and Textband), Augsburg, 1929.

MISSALE SPECIALE. A smaller version, containing selections from the complete *missal, drawn up for special needs. The best known is that which came to be called the Missale Speciale Constantiense (of Constance), though liturgical evidence now indicates only a general affinity with Upper Rhineland uses. This edition is unsigned and undated, but printed with an imperfect state of the smaller of the two types cast for the 1457 Mainz Psalter, the first printed book with a date. Hence the discoverer of the first known copy of the Missale speciale, Otto Hupp, claimed the missal as the earliest book ever printed. But in 1967 Allan Stevenson showed from watermark evidence that batches of the same Basel-made papers used for the Missale speciale were being used for other books dating from 1472–4. Stevenson's work demonstrates that the missal was printed during 1473 and suggests Johannes Meister (Hans Koch; d. 1487), a little known journeyman at Basel, as the actual printer. Only four copies are known, plus some fragments, and a single copy of a shortened version, the Missale abbreviatum, which was completed first.

O. Hupp, Ein Missale Speciale, Vorläufer des Psalteriums von 1457 (1898); id., Zum Streit um das Missale Speciale Constantiense (1917). A. [H.] Stevenson, The Problem of the Missale Speciale (1967). F. A. Schmidt-Künsemüller, 'Der Streit um das Missale speciale. Ein Forschungsbericht' in Aus der Welt des Bibliothekars. Festschrift für Rudolf Juchhoff, ed. K. Ohly and W. Krieg (Cologne, 1961), pp. 51–89, with bibl. to 1960.

MISSIONS. Missionary enterprise, i.e. the propagation of the Christian faith among non-Christian people, was one of the main tasks of the Christian Church from its beginning. It was, indeed, implicit in the Lord's teaching (e.g. Mt. 28. 19; Lk. 24. 47). Apart from the labours of St. *Paul and the legendary missionary journeys attributed to the Apostles, unknown missionaries soon carried the Christian Gospel to the far corners of the Roman world (including Britain). In the early period one should notice *Pantaenus in 'India' (c. 190), St. *Gregory the Illuminator in Armenia (c. 312), the Arian *Ulphilas among the Goths (c. 325), *Frumentius in Abyssinia (c. 330) and the remarkable developments in the *Nestorian Church of the East, whose missionaries penetrated as far as Ceylon, *Malabar and *China (where the Church was esp. active during the 7th and 8th cents.). In the West, St. *Patrick's work in *Ireland (early 5th cent.) was followed by intensive *Celtic missionary enterprise embracing *Scotland (where St. *Columba established the monastery of *Iona, and further advance was made during the 5th to 7th cents. by St. *Ninian, St. *Kentigern, and St. Maol Rubh), Gaul (where St. *Columbanus worked), and England, where St. *Aidan's work in the North was supplemented in the South by the Roman missions of St. *Augustine and St. *Birinus (7th cent.). So successful was the evangelization of Great Britain that in the 8th cent. English missionaries took a prominent part in evangelizing the more pagan parts of Europe. Most notable was the work of St. *Willibrord (in Frisia) and St. *Boniface (in Thuringia and Hesse). The conversion of Scandinavia (where the task was long and difficult) also owed much to English missionary enterprise. Of the missionaries to *Sweden in the 9th cent. St. *Anskar is the most notable. The conquests of *Charlemagne (d. 814) were accompanied by the forcible baptism of the vanquished to the Christian faith. In Slavonic lands the chief missionaries were St. *Cyril and St. Methodius (9th cent.), *Bulgaria witnessing a struggle between the rival 'missionary' interests of Rome and Constantinople. This early stage of missionary enterprise culminated in the conversion of the *Poles, the Magyars (esp. through St. *Stephen in the 10th cent.), and the *Russians (esp. through St. *Vladimir, 986–1015).

The medieval period proper witnessed three aspects of missionary work:

(1) Efforts were made to convert the remaining heathen tribes in Europe. The task was gradually completed through the labours of St. *Adalbert (the martyr-apostle of Prussia), *Vicelin (among the Wends), Meinhard and Albert of Apeldern (in Livonia), the *Teutonic Knights and others.

(2) Missions among the Moslems were initiated. Though St. *Francis of Assisi may well claim to have begun this branch of missionary activity, the missions were overshadowed by the Crusades until the end of the medieval period. The need for more specific missionary work was urged, however, by the Spanish mystic, Raymond *Lull, who emphasized the need for studying oriental languages.

(3) Work was carried on further afield among Tartars, Chinese, and, to a lesser extent, Indians (e.g. Bishop Jordanus in the 14th cent.). In 1245 *Innocent IV sent two embassies, whilst a few years later St. *Louis IX sent a Franciscan, William of Rubruck, to the Mongols. The Emperor Kublai, whose court the Polo brothers visited at the end of the 13th cent., apparently asked for more information about Christianity, and, although his request went for the moment unanswered, missionaries very soon penetrated his dominions. The Franciscan, John de Monte Corvino, who worked for over thirty years in China until his death in 1328, made many converts, and even hoped to convert the Emperor himself. His work included a translation of the NT and Pss. The success of such missionary enterprise was impeded by the nationalist and isolationist policy pursued by the Ming dynasty, whilst in the Nearer East, for which *John XXII had appointed an archbishop with his seat at the Ilkhan's capital, Sultaniyah, in 1318, further advance was stayed by the invasions of Timur (1380–1405).

With the Reformation missionary enterprise slackened, particularly in the Reformed Churches which were busily engaged in establishing themselves against the attacks of the *Counter-Reformation, whilst the seas were chiefly the preserve of Roman *Spain and *Portugal. In addition, the ultra-Calvinist *predestinarianism held by some of the Churches was not conducive to further evangelism, while the rise of individualism, sponsored by the Reformation, was more likely to encourage civil strife between the denominations that had sprung up than to call forth a concerted effort to evangelize the non-Christian world. In the Roman Church, however, the Counter-Reformation brought with it a rebirth of missionary work. New gains were sought to counteract the losses in north-western Europe, and the *Dominicans, *Franciscans, *Augustinians and newly formed *Jesuits did heroic work in the Americas, in *India, *Japan, and China (where the RC Church flourished in the 17th cent.), whilst work was later begun in Africa. In 1622 Gregory XV formed the Congregatio de propaganda fide (popularly, the *Propaganda), which subsequently had the general supervision of all missionary work. In the 18th cent. the religious climate and political conditions in Europe brought missionary expansion temporarily to a standstill. But early in the 19th cent. the RC foreign missions, supported by such societies as the 'Association for the Propagation of the Faith' (founded 1822), experienced a powerful revival. Notable in this last period has been the prominence given to charitable and educational works and also the important part taken by women religious, who had hitherto been practically excluded from the apostolate abroad. It has been estimated that the number of converts to Catholicism from paganism in mission areas in the 19th cent. was over 8,000,000. In the present century a different approach was foreshadowed by Pope *Benedict XV in his encyclical 'Maximum illud' (1919); this was directed to the firm establishment of the Church locally, with clergy and hierarchy of its own, and aiming ultimately at self-sufficiency. The Second *Vatican Council's decree on the missionary activity of the Church ('Ad Gentes', 7 Dec. 1965) not only emphasized the missionary nature of the Church and the duty of mission incumbent on its members, but also laid stress on the need to understand peoples and cultures and to further their proper aspirations, and also on the necessity for adaptation, esp. in the sphere of liturgy.

In the Reformed Churches there was, at first, little activity, but gradually Societies sprang up. In England a Corporation for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England was founded in 1649, but more important was the establishment of the *S.P.C.K. (1698) and the *S.P.G. (1701), both largely inspired by Dr. Thomas *Bray. None the less, the main success and burden of missionary work rested with the *Moravians, who under the inspiration of Count N. L. *Zinzendorf regarded themselves as a missionary community, and the Danish–Halle missions in India. Through the influence of the *Evangelical Revival, fostered in England by the work of the *Wesleys and G. *Whitefield, a new impetus was given to evangelization on a world-wide scale, which has caused Prof. K. S. Latourette to speak of the 19th cent. as the 'Great Century' in this respect. The *Methodist Missionary Society dates its origin from 1786 and the *Baptist Missionary Society from 1792, the Baptist, W. *Carey, sailing for India in 1793. They were followed by the founding of the London Missionary Society (*L.M.S., 1795), the Church Missionary Society (*C.M.S., 1799), the *British and Foreign Bible Society (1804), and the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews (1809). In the meantime, similar organizations were springing up in America, Germany, France, Scandinavia, and Holland. The phenomenal expansion of the work saw the rise of innumerable Societies, most being specialized in their sphere of activity. Among the larger of these in England were the South American Missionary Society (1844), the Melanesian Mission (1846), and the *Universities' Mission to Central Africa (1859), the last-named being the outcome of the challenge sent out by D. *Livingstone. In 1965 it joined with the S.P.G. to become the *United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

The evangelistic missions held by D. L. *Moody in America and England were largely responsible for the rise of a distinctive feature in more modern missionary effort—the interdenominational Missionary Society. Of such Societies the largest was the *China Inland Mission (1865), founded by J. Hudson *Taylor, but many have in the 20th cent. reached large proportions, with work in most parts of the world.

In the present century the nature of missionary work has changed. In an era of rapid political advance the paternalism of the past was no longer possible. Medicine and education have increasingly become the responsibility of the state, and, though expatriate advice and financial assistance are still sought, the social elements in missionary work are largely channelled through such specialist bodies as Christian Aid. Native ministries are taking over responsibility in many areas and the establishment of indigenous Churches (e.g. the 'Nippon Sei Ko Kwai' in Japan) has been encouraged. A shortage of vocations to the priesthood in the Anglican communion has led to pressure for the ordination of women, esp. in Hong Kong and Africa. The importance of missionary work in the Anglican Church was emphasized at the *Lambeth Conference of 1958, which created the post of Anglican Executive Officer partly to co-ordinate missionary work, and at Toronto in 1963.

A feature of missionary activity in the last hundred years or so has been the co-operation between the non-RC denominations. A series of conferences, beginning in New York in 1854, culminated in the World Missionary Conference at *Edinburgh in 1910; this aimed at world-evangelization on an ecumenical basis. The International Missionary Council was founded in 1921 to further the same purpose; in 1961 it joined with the *World Council of Churches and became the Division of World Mission and Evangelism of the World Council of Churches.

K. S. Latourette, History of the Expansion of Christianity (7 vols., 1939–45); id., Christianity in a Revolutionary Age (5 vols., 1959–63). Also A. Grant, The Past and Prospective Extension of the Gospel (*Bampton Lectures for 1843; repr. 1910); G. Warneck, Geschichte der protestantischen Missionen (ed. 10, 1913; Eng. trans., ed. 7, 1901); Louise Creighton, Missions (H.U.L., 1912); C. H. Robinson, History of Christian Missions (1915); B. Arens, S.J., Handbuch der katholischen Missionen (1925); J. T. Addison, The Medieval Missionary (1936); H. Kraemer, The Christian Message in a Non-Christian World (1938); J. I. Parker, Interpretative Statistical Survey of the World Mission of the Christian Church (1938); G. Phillips, The Gospel in the World (1939); J. J. Considine, Across a World (1942); E. A. Payne, The Church Awakes (1942); M. S. Bates, Data on the Distribution of the Missionary Enterprise (1943); S. Bolshakoff, The Foreign Missions of the Russian Orthodox Church (1943); G. Phillips, The Transmission of the Faith (1946); S. Delacroix (ed.), Histoire universelle des missions catholiques (4 vols., 1956–9); A. Mulders, Missiegeschiedenis (1957); id., Missiologische Bestek. Inleidung tot de katholieke missiewetenschap (1962); S. [C.] Neill, Christian Missions (Pelican History of the Church, vi; 1964), with useful bibl. B. Till, Change and Exchange. Mutual Responsibility and the Church of England (1964); id. (ed.), Changing Frontiers in the Mission of the Church (1965). M. Jarrett-Kerr, C.R., Patterns of Christian Acceptance. Individual Response to Missionary Impact 1550–1950 (1972). Also reports of the International Missionary Conferences at Edinburgh (1910), Jerusalem (1928), and Tambaram (1938), and histories of individual missionary societies, missionary orders, and countries.

MIT BRENNENDER SORGE (Ger., 'with burning anxiety'). The German encyclical of *Pius XI ordered to be read from all Roman Catholic pulpits in Germany on *Palm Sunday, 21 Mar. 1937. In it the Pope, whose fear of Communism had induced him to make a Concordat with A. Hitler in 1933, gave unequivocal expression to his belief that Nazism is fundamentally unchristian. It denounced Nazi breaches of the Concordat and attacked the idea of a German National Church, the abolition of the OT from the schools, and other views typical of the '*German-Christians' which the Nazis were imposing on the Church.

Text in A.A.S., xxix (1937), ling. Ger., pp. 145–67; ling. Ital., pp. 168–88.

MITHRAISM. The cult of Mithras, an old Persian and Indian sun-god, which spread over the empire of Alexander the Great, is said to have reached Rome in 67 B.C. Commodus (180–92) made it an Imperial cult. Its monuments are very common in the frontier districts of the Roman Empire, for Mithras had a great appeal to soldiers. All creatures were supposed to be sprung from the bull which he had overcome and sacrificed before he ascended into heaven, where he guaranteed a blessed immortality to those who had been initiated into his mysteries—by baptism, purification by honey, and the use of bread, water, and wine consecrated by priests, called 'fathers', who enjoined a high moral code. The similarities with Christianity were so striking to *Tertullian that he tried to explain them by supposing that the devil had inspired a deliberate parody of the Christian sacraments. Possibly the resemblances are due partly to mutual influence, and also to common affinities with primitive religion and the meeting of a common need. Mithraism was almost completely superseded by Christianity in the 4th century.

F. Cumont, Textes et monuments figurés relatifs aux mystères de Mithra (2 vols., Brussels, 1896–9); M. J. Vermaseren (ed.), Corpus Inscriptionum et Monumentorum Religionis Mithraicae (2 vols., The Hague, 1956–60). F. Cumont, Les Mystères de Mithra (ib., 1900; ed. 3, 1913; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1903); an abridgement of Cumont's earlier work with addit. bibl. A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie (1903; ed. 2, 1910). F. Saxl, Mithras. Typengeschichtliche Untersuchungen (1931). M. J. Vermaseren, Mithras de geheimzinnige God (Amsterdam, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963). W. J. Phythian-Adams, Mithraism (Religions Ancient and Modern, 1915). A. D. Nock, 'The Genius of Mithraism' in Journal of Roman Studies, xxvii (1937), pp. 109–13. L. Patterson, Mithraism and Christianity (1921). H. S. Jones in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 752–9; E. Wüst in P.W., xv (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2131–55; K. Prümm, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 136–51, s.v. 'Mystères, VIII. Le Culte de Mithra'.

MITRE (Gk. μίτρα, 'turban'). The liturgical head-dress and part of the insignia of a bishop. In the E. Church it takes the form of a crown, decorated with medallions in enamel or embroidery; it is apparently derived from the crown of the Byzantine Emperors, and was not worn by bishops until after the fall of Constantinople (1453). In the Russian Church *archimandrites and certain *archpriests have the privilege of wearing a mitre, but in the Greek Church its use is restricted to bishops.

In the W. Church the mitre is shield-shaped and was originally always of white linen, but now the common material is embroidered satin, which is often jewelled. Two fringed lappets (infulae or fanones) hang down at the back. The mitre is not found before the 11th cent. and apparently took its origin in the '*camelaucum' of the Pope, an unofficial hat worn chiefly in procession. In certain cases permission to wear it has been granted to prelates other than bishops, notably to many *abbots and formerly to members of certain cathedral chapters, e.g. *Ravenna. It is worn in the W. Church at all solemn functions, but is removed during the prayers (cf. 1 Cor. 11. 4) and the *canon of the Mass. In modern practice, three types of mitre have been distinguished, viz. (1) the Precious Mitre, adorned with gold and precious stones, worn on Feasts and ordinary Sundays; (2) the Golden Mitre, of cloth-of-gold, worn in penitential seasons and when the Bishop has to remain seated during a sacred function; and (3) the Simple Mitre, of plain white silk or linen, worn at funerals, on Good Friday, at the blessing of the candles at *Candlemas, and on certain other occasions. Since 1968, however, only one mitre has been required in the RC Church.

Though the frontispiece of T. *Cranmer's 'Catechism' depicts bishops wearing mitres, this attire was rarely, if ever, used in the C of E from the Reformation to the 19th cent., except at *coronations (down to that of George III). Mitres were, however, regularly borne at the funerals of bishops.

J. Braun, L.G. (1907), pp. 424–98; P. Hofmeister, O.S.B., Mitra und Stab der wirklichen Prälaten ohne bischöflichen Charakter (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, Hft. 104; 1928), passim; T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte (Bonner Akademische Reden, No. 1 [1949]), pp. 17–22. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., x (1911), pp. 404–6, with illustrations; O. J. Blum in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 981 f., s.v. 'Miter', with further reff.

MIXED CHALICE. The practice of mixing water with wine for drinking was general in the ancient world. From allusions in the writings of *Justin Martyr, *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria and *Cyprian, it would appear that the ancient Church continued at the *Eucharist what had probably been the practice of the Lord at the *Last Supper; and, with the exception of the *Armenian, the historic Liturgies all enjoin or presuppose the mixture of water with the wine in the Eucharistic chalice. The First BCP of 1549 directed the continuance of this traditional usage; but the direction disappeared in the Book of 1552 and was not restored in 1662. The usage was not wholly abandoned, however, and its widespread revival during the 19th century was the subject of controversy between the adherents of the *Anglo-Catholic Revival and their opponents. The usage was declared to be not contrary to the law of the C of E by Abp. E. W. *Benson's *Lincoln Judgement (1890). See also Six Points.

MIXED MARRIAGE. A marriage between Christians of different religious allegiances. A marriage is so described esp. when one of the parties is a RC. Such marriages, which used to be tolerated only in exceptional cases, still require episcopal dispensation. The motu proprio 'Matrimonia mixta' (31 Mar. 1970) permitted more liberal arrangements than had formerly been allowed. See also Ne Temere.

MOABITE STONE (c. 850 B.C.). An inscription in Moabite (virtually a Hebrew dialect) discovered in 1868 by F. Klein at Dîbân, E. of the Dead Sea (the Biblical Dibon, Num. 21. 30, etc.; the Moabite capital), and commemorating the successes gained by Mesha, King of Moab, against Israel. The text, which has several points of contact with the Bible (particularly 2 Kgs. 3. 4–27, which gives an account of the same events from the Hebrew side), indicates a close kinship between the Moabite religion of Chemosh and the contemporary conception of *Yahweh in Israel. The stone was broken up by the local Bedouin during its removal; but a squeeze had already been taken and this, together with many fragments of the stone, are preserved in the Louvre at *Paris.

Crit. ed. of the text by G. A. Cooke, A Text-Book of North Semitic Inscriptions (1903), with Eng. tr. and comm., pp. 1–14; Eng. tr. and comm. also by E. Ullendorff in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Documents from Old Testament Times (1958), pp. 195–9, with bibl. S. Segert, 'Die Sprache der moabitischen Königsinschrift' in Archiv Orientální, xxix (1961), pp. 197–267, with extensive reff.

MOBERLY, ROBERT CAMPBELL (1845–1903), *Anglican theologian. He was the son of George Moberly, Bp. of Salisbury, 1869–85. Educated at New College, Oxford, he was Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford (1892–1903). He belonged to the school of High Churchmen which produced Lux Mundi (1889), to which he contributed 'The Incarnation as the Basis of Dogma'. His two principal works were Ministerial Priesthood (1897), a theological study of the Christian ministry, with a notable appendix on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, and Atonement and Personality (1901), perhaps the most original and profound study of the *Atonement in modern Anglican theology. His other writings include Sorrow, Sin and Beauty (1889), Christ our Life (sermons; 1902), Undenominationalism as a Principle of Primary Education (1902), and Problems and Principles (collected papers, 1904; posthumous).

His son, Sir WALTER HAMILTON MOBERLY (1881–1974), who held several distinguished academic and civil appointments, contributed the essays on 'The Atonement' and 'God and the Absolute' to Foundations* (1912).

Appreciations of R. C. Moberly by W. *Sanday in J.T.S., v (1903), pp. 481–99, and by W. H. Moberly [son], ib., vi (1905), pp. 1–19. H. S. *Holland, Personal Studies (1905), pp. 272–9. A. Clark in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 624–6.

MODALISM. In the early Church a form of unorthodox teaching on the Trinity which denied the permanence of the three Persons and maintained that the distinctions in the Godhead were only transitory. Among its leading exponents were *Praxeas, *Noetus, and Sabellius (see Sabellianism). It was a form of *Monarchianism (q.v.) and also known as *Patripassianism.

For bibl. see s.v. Monarchianism.

MODERATES. In the Church of *Scotland, the party in the ascendant in the second half of the 18th cent. which held a more moderate conception of doctrine and discipline than their opponents (the 'Evangelicals'). They sought to be friends of learning, culture, and order and emphasized morality rather than dogma. They were opposed to the abolition of lay patronage, insisting that presbyteries should induct patrons' presentees acc. to the law of the land, whether the people called them or not. The *Disruption of 1843 (q.v.) under T. *Chalmers was largely inspired by hostility to the principles of the Moderates.

MODERATOR. In *Presbyterian church courts the Moderator is the presbyter appointed primus inter pares to constitute the court and to preside over its proceedings. He has only a casting vote. In the lowest court, the *Kirk-session, the minister is Moderator ex officio. In *presbyteries and synods one of the members, as a rule a minister, is appointed Moderator for a term, generally six months. The Moderator of the *General Assembly is elected for a year. In the Church of Scotland, the Moderator of the General Assembly is given the courtesy title 'Right Reverend' during his period of office and afterwards is styled 'Very Reverend'. Although it is inaccurate to speak of him as the Moderator of the Church, he serves as its representative, wears distinctive dress, and in court precedence in Scotland he comes before the peers.

MODERN CHURCHMEN'S UNION. An Anglican society, founded in 1898 as the 'Churchmen's Union' (till 1928), for the advancement of liberal religious thought, esp. in the C of E. Among its aims are to uphold the comprehensiveness of the C of E and to maintain the legitimacy of doctrinal re-statement and the adjustment of the forms of worship in acc. with the believed requirements of modern discovery. Its policy has been marked by hostility to *Anglo-Catholic and RC ideals and (esp. latterly) to socialistic programmes of reform in Church or state. Among those who have taken a prominent part in the movement are H. *Rashdall, W. R. *Inge, E. W. Barnes (Bp. of Birmingham 1924; d. 1953), K. *Lake and W. R. Matthews (Dean of *St. Paul's, 1934–67). The Modern Churchman (1911 ff.), founded by H. D. A. Major (1871–1961; principal of Ripon Hall, Oxford, 1919–48), serves as an organ of the Union.

MODERN DEVOTION. See Devotio Moderna.

MODERNISM. A movement within the RC Church which aimed at bringing the tradition of Catholic belief into closer relation with the modern outlook in philosophy, the historical and other sciences and social ideas. It arose spontaneously and independently in several different countries in the later years of the 19th cent. In France, where it was most vigorous, it was fostered in its earlier years esp. by a number of professors at the *Institut Catholique at Paris, notably L. *Duchesne (who himself, however, stood apart from the Movement when it had developed) and his pupils. It reached the height of its influence in the first years of the present century. It was formally condemned by *Pius X in 1907.

The Modernists, having no common programme, differed widely among themselves. The leading ideas and tendencies to be found in the Movement were:

(1) The whole-hearted adoption of the critical view of the Bible, by this date generally accepted outside the RC Church. The Bible was to be understood as the record of a real unfolding of Divine truth in history. Abandoning artificial attempts at harmonizing inconsistencies, the Modernists recognized that the Biblical writers were subject to many of the limitations of other historians. They approached the Scriptural record with considerable independence, indeed often with much greater scepticism than the Protestant scholars. In the nineties they found encouragement in Leo XIII's two-edged Providentissimus Deus (1893).

(2) A strong inclination to reject the 'intellectualism' of the Scholastic theology and correspondingly to subordinate doctrine to practice. Many of the Modernists accepted a philosophy of 'action' (M. *Blondel) and welcomed the *Pragmatism of W. *James and the Intuitionism of H. *Bergson. They sought the essence of Christianity in life rather than in an intellectual system or creed.

(3) A teleological attitude to history, finding the meaning of the historic process in its issue rather than in its origins. Since the Church's growth took place under the guidance of the Spirit, the essence of the Gospel will lie in its full expansion rather than in its primitive historic kernel. This belief was sometimes reflected in an extreme historical scepticism about Christian origins. Thus, whether or not the historic Jesus founded a Church was a question of small importance and one to which we should never know the answer: the significant fact was that the seed then sown had developed into the worldwide institution for bringing men into touch with supernatural reality and saving their souls; the Mass was to be understood in its developed glory, and this would remain whether or not the historic Christ instituted it.

Among the leaders in the Modernist Movement were, in France, A. *Loisy, M. Blondel, E. I. Mignot (1842–1918; Abp. of Albi from 1899), L. *Laberthonnière, and Édouard Le Roy (1870–1954); in Italy, Romolo Murri (1870–1944) and A. *Fogazzaro; and in the British Isles, F. *von Hügel and G. *Tyrrell. In some ways von Hügel filled a special position in the Movement as the chief link between the Modernists in the different countries.

The accession of Leo XIII (Pope, 1878–1903) gave those who held liberal views considerable encouragement, for Leo had a real respect for learning and sought to abandon the isolationism of his predecessor. But his tolerance of Modernism prob. rested rather on grounds of expediency than on any personal sympathy with its ideals; and in his later years he became increasingly critical of the Movement. His successor, St. Pius X (Pope, 1903–14), wholly distrusted the Movement from the first. Officially described as the 'synthesis of all the heresies', Modernism was finally condemned in 1907 by the decree '*Lamentabili' and the encyclical 'Pascendi'. These decrees were carried into effect by the motu proprio 'Sacrorum Antistitum' (1910), imposing on all suspect clerics an Anti-Modernist oath. While the clergy who had been identified with the Movement were for the most part excommunicated, the laymen, such as von Hügel and Blondel, were generally left untouched.

With regard to the word 'Modernism', it should be noted that it was apparently not applied to the Movement until after the turn of the present century. In a wider sense the term 'Modernist' has been used more recently of radical critics of traditional theology in the non-RC Churches, esp. of the thought of those associated with the *Modern Churchmen's Union (q.v.).

For the official condemnation of Modernism, see bibl. to the decree, Lamentabili. Other primary sources for the history of the Movement are the works of A. Loisy (esp. Mémoires, 3 vols., 1930–1), G. Tyrrell and F. von Hügel (esp. Selected Letters, 1927). R. Marlé, S.J. (ed.), Au cœur de la crise moderniste. Le dossier inédit d'une controverse. Lettres de Maurice Blondel, H. Bremond, Fr. von Hügel, Alfred Loisy, Fernand Mourret, J. Wehrlé . . . (1960). Collection of extracts from the writings of the chief modernists translated into Eng., with introd., by B. M. G. Reardon, Roman Catholic Modernists (1970). The most comprehensive single study is J. Rivière, Le Modernisme dans l'Église. Étude d'histoire religieuse contemporaine (1929). E. Poulat, Histoire, dogme et critique dans la crise moderniste (1962). Good summary also in A. R. Vidler, The Modernist Movement in the Roman Church (Cambridge, 1934); id., A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures, 1968–9; ib., 1970). A. L. Lilley, Modernism. A Record and a Review (1908); P. *Sabatier, Les Modernistes (1909); J. Kübel, Geschichte des katholischen Modernismus (1909); J. Schnitzer, 'Der katholische Modernismus' in Zeitschrift für Politik, v (1912), pp. 1–218 (later issued separately with modifications, Berlin, 1912); A. Houtin, Histoire du modernisme catholique ('1913' [publd. 1912]); Maude D. Petre, Modernism. Its Failure and its Fruits (1918). L. da Veiga Coutinho, Tradition et histoire dans la controverse moderniste (1898–1910) (Analecta Gregoriana, lxxiii; 1954). P. Scoppola, Crisi modernista e rinnovamento cattolico in Italia [Bologna, 1961], with unpublished 'Petite Consultation sur les difficultés concernant Dieu' by F. von Hügel, pp. 365–92. M. Ranchetti, Cultura e riforma religiosa nella storia del modernismo (Turin, 1963; Eng. tr., 1969). A. L. Lilley in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 763–8, s.v.; J. Rivière in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2009–47, s.v. 'Modernisme'; R. Scherer in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 513–16, s.v. 'Modernismus'.

MOFFAT, ROBERT (1795–1883), pioneer missionary in *South Africa. Born at Ormiston, in Lothian, he was apprenticed as a gardener. Under *Wesleyan influence he was drawn to missionary work. In 1815 he became engaged to Mary Smith (1795–1870), his employer's daughter, who was to be a constant assistant in his work. Becoming a *Congregationalist he was accepted in 1816 as a candidate by the *London Missionary Society and sent to South Africa. He arrived at Cape Town in 1817 and proceeded northeast to Namaqualand, where he stayed over a year. Here he succeeded in converting the Hottentot chief known as Africaner, and by reconciling him to the British Government gained official support. From 1821 to 1830 he worked among the Bechuanas. In 1825 they began to lay out for him a new station at Kuruman, where a native convert organized the erection of a school-house. Moffat then began a translation of the Gospel of Lk. into Sechwana and in 1830 the printing started at Cape Town. This was the first of a series of translations which extended to hymns and other literature and which laid the foundations for subsequent missionary enterprise. Meanwhile he had established his first contact with the Matabele tribe (1829–30), to which other visits followed in 1835, 1854, 1857, and 1859–60. In 1839 he returned to England and in 1840 persuaded D. *Livingstone, his future son-in-law, to go out to Africa. In 1843 he returned to S. Africa, where he remained until 1870. In 1857 he completed his translation of the Bible. His publications include Missionary Labours and Scenes in Southern Africa (1842), Rivers of Water in a Dry Place (1863), and The Bible translated into Sechwana (1872).

J. P. R. Wallis (ed.), The Matabele Journals of Robert Moffat, 1829–60 (Government Archives of Southern Rhodesia, Oppenheimer Series, i; 2 vols., 1945); I. Schapera (ed.), Apprenticeship at Kuruman, being the Journals and Letters of Robert and Mary Moffat, 1820–28 (Central African Archives, Oppenheimer Series, v; 1951). J. S. Moffat (son), The Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat (1885). E. W. Smith, Robert Moffat. One of God's Gardeners (1925). Other lives by A. Manning (London, 1875), W. Walters (ib., 1881), D. J. Deane (ib., 1887), J. J. Ellis (ib., 1929), and C. Northcott (ib., 1961), with bibl. R. H. Vetch in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 97–101.

MOFFATT, JAMES (1870–1944), NT scholar. A native of Glasgow, where he was educated at the University and the Free Church College, he was ordained in 1896, and after some years in the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland taught at Mansfield College, Oxford, from 1911 to 1915 and at Glasgow from 1915 to 1927. From 1927 to 1939 he was professor of Church history in the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. Encyclopaedic and versatile, he became well known as a writer in many fields. His Introduction to the Literature of the NT (1911) is a comprehensive survey of contemporary NT scholarship. Of his translation of the Bible, which is written in a colloquial style, the NT appeared in 1913, the OT in 1924, and the whole was revised in 1935. Moffatt also edited a complete commentary on the NT (17 vols., 1928–49), for which his version is taken as the textual basis and to which he himself contributed the volumes on 1 Cor. and the General Epistles. Besides many other writings on Biblical matters and Church history, he also produced works on general English literature, among them a book on the novels of G. Meredith.

E. F. Scott in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 602 f., s.v.

MOGILA, PETER (1597–1646), Orthodox theologian. A Wallachian of noble birth, he studied at the university of Paris, and became abbot of a monastery at Kiev in 1627 and Metropolitan of Kiev in 1632. The most important of his writings was the 'Confession', the first draft of which he prepared at the behest of Abbot Kosslowski of Kiev with the aid of three bishops in 1638. A comprehensive survey of the faith of the Greek Orthodox Church, it was formally approved by the Synod of *Jassy (1642) and by the four E. Patriarchs (1643), was first published in 1645 as 'Ορθόδοξος ὁμολογία τῆς πίστεως τῆς καθολικῆς καὶ ἀποστολικῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἀνατολικῆς, and again approved by the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672. It remains one of the primary witnesses to Orthodox doctrine. Mogila also issued in 1645 his very widely circulated 'Catechism'.

The Gk. text of his Confession is pr., with modern Lat. tr., in E. J. Kimmel, Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis, i Jena, 1850), pp. 56–324; also, with introd., in J. Michalcescu, Θησαυρὸς τῆς Ὀρθοδοξίας. Die Bekenntnisse und die wichtigsten Glaubenszeugnisse der griechisch-orientalischen Kirche (Leipzig, 1904), pp. 22–122, and by I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ii (Athens, 1953), pp. 582–686. Early Lat. tr. in Par. gr. 1265, ed., with notes and imp. introd., by A. Malvy–M. Viller (Orientalia Christiana, x, fasc. 39; 1927). Eng. tr. of Gk. text by Philip Lodvel (orig. publd. 1762), ed. J. J. Overbeck (London, 1898). The classic study on Mogila is the work (in Russian) of S. Golubev (2 vols., Kiev, 1883–98). E. Picot in E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique . . . au XVIIe siècle, iv (1896), pp. 104–59. T. Ionesco, La Vie et l'œuvre de Pierre Movila, métropolite de Kiev (1944); O. Barlea, De Confessione Orthodoxa Petri Mohilae (Frankfurt a.M., 1948). A. Wenger, 'Les Influences du rituel de Paul V sur le Trebnik de Pierre Moghila' in Mélanges en l'honneur de Monselgneur Michel Andrieu (1956), pp. 477–99. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2063–81, s.v. 'Moghila', with full bibl.

MOHAMMEDANISM. See Islam.

MÖHLER, JOHANN ADAM (1796–1838), RC historian and theologian. He was educated at Ellwangen and the University of *Tübingen, and in 1819 ordained priest. In 1828 he became professor of Church history at Tübingen, later (1835) moving to Munich. Shortly before his death he was appointed Dean of Würzburg Cathedral. His work did much towards the needed theological revival within the Church, though his Symbolik, oder Darstellung der dogmatischen Gegensätze der Katholiken und Protestanten nach ihren öffentlichen Bekenntnisschriften (1832; Eng. tr., 1843), a treatise which sought to reckon with the situation created by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher in theology and G. W. F. *Hegel in philosophy, caused offence to many of his more conservative fellow-Catholics. He is perhaps the most considerable RC apologist since J. B. *Bossuet. His other works include Die Einheit der Kirche oder das Princip des Katholizismus (1825; Fr. tr. in 'Unam Sanctam', ii, 1939) and a Life of *Athanasius (2 vols., 1827), and, among posthumous writings, a commentary on Romans (1845) and a Church History (3 vols., ed. by P. B. *Gams, 1867–70).

Collected essays ed. J. J. I. *Döllinger, 2 vols., Ratisbon, 1839–40. Symbolik, ed. with comm. by J. R. Geiselmann (2 vols., Cologne–Olten, 1960–1). Studies by J. *Friedrich (Munich, 1894; with unpublished docc.), A. Knöpfler (ib., 1896), J. R. Geiselmann (Mainz, 1942; ed. 2, 1966, and Freiburg, 1955), and P. W. Scheele (Munich, 1964. P. Chaillet, S.J. (ed.), L'Église est une. Hommage à Möhler (1939). S. Bolshakoff, The Doctrine of the Unity of the Church in the Works of Khomyakov and Moehler (1946), pp. 217–62. J. A. Wagenmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 203–8; A. Fonck in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2048–63, s.v.; J. R. Geiselmann in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 521 f., s.v., with bibl.

MOLINA, LUIS DE (1535–1600), Spanish theologian. In 1553 he entered the *Jesuit Order, and later taught at Coimbra (1563–7) and Evora (1568–83). He then spent several years at Lisbon writing, and in 1588 published his Concordia liberi arbitrii cum gratiae donis. In 1590 he retired to Cuenca, where he remained until, in the year of his death, he was appointed professor of moral theology at Madrid.

The term 'Molinism' is used loosely by theologians to describe doctrines of grace of the kind elaborated in de Molina's Concordia (1588) and unified (in spite of divergences of detail) by the central tenet that the efficacy of grace has its ultimate foundation, not within the substance of the Divine gift of grace itself (ab intrinseco), but in the Divinely foreknown fact of free human co-operation with this gift. It is claimed that human free-will is not adequately safeguarded by any other system. The Divine foreknowledge of free human actions is held to imply a knowledge, peculiar to God Himself, of hypothetical future contingents; and it is maintained that this scientia conditionata or media is therefore fundamental.

The system, which was widely adopted by the *Jesuits, was soon attacked by conservative theologians, esp. the *Dominicans, and the ensuing controversies '*De Auxiliis' were the subject of a special Congregation in Rome (1598–1607). The points at issue, however, were left undecided and Molinism is still taught side by side with *Thomism and other established systems in the Catholic schools.

F. Stegmüller (ed.), Geschichte des Molinismus, i, Neue Molinaschriften [all publd.] (B.G.P.M., xxxii; 1935). E. Vansteenberghe in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2094–187, s.v. 'Molinisme', with detailed bibl. On Molina, J. Rabeneck, S.J., 'De Ludovici de Molina Studiorum Philosophiae Curriculo' in Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, vi (1937), pp. 291–302; id., 'De Vita et Scriptis Ludovici Molina', ib., xix (for 1950; 1951), pp. 75–145; id., 'Antiqua Legenda de Molina narrata examinatur', ib., xxiv (1955), pp. 295–326. V. Muñoz, Mercedarian, Zumel y el molinismo. Informe del P. Francisco Zumel, Mercedario, sobre las doctrinas del P. Luis Molina, S.J., presentado en julio de 1595 (1953). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain. A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). Sommervogel, v (1894), cols. 1167–79. J. Pohle in C.E., x (1911), pp. 437–41, s.v., with bibl.; F. Stegmüller in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 527–30, s.v. 'Molinismus', and col. 526, s.v. 'Molina', the latter with list of specialized artt.

MOLINAEUS, PETRUS. See Du Moulin, Pierre.

MOLINOS, MIGUEL DE (c. 1640–97), Spanish *Quietist. Born at Muniesa near Saragossa in Spain, he studied theology, obtained his doctor's degree, and was sent to Rome in 1663. Here he soon became one of the most celebrated confessors and spiritual directors, and the friend of many prelates, among them the future Pope *Innocent XI. His fame grew after the publication of his Spiritual Guide (Guida spirituale, che disinvolge l'anima e la conduce per l'interior camino all'acquisito della perfetta contemplazione e del ricco tesoro della pace interiore; 1675), in which he recommended the prayer of acquired contemplation and an excessive indifference of the soul. He was accused of error by the *Jesuits and the *Dominicans, with the result that his accusers were censured. In his account of the spiritual life, as expounded in his letters of direction rather than in the Guide, he found the state of perfection in perpetual union with and complete transformation into God, to which all external observances, mortifications, and even the resisting of temptation, were a hindrance. The soul, beginning with devotion to the Church and progressing to devotion to Jesus (who was deiformis non deus), finally rose superior to both in devotion to God alone. Hence the state of perfection was to be attained by the total annihilation of the will. In consequence of this doctrine the nuns whom he directed began to refuse to recite their office and go to confession, discarded their rosaries and holy pictures, and generally disturbed discipline in their houses. In 1685 the storm broke and Molinos was imprisoned. Two years later his teaching was condemned and, though he recanted, he was sentenced to life-long imprisonment on charges of immorality. Throughout his process and imprisonment he showed the imperturbable serenity of soul described in the Guide, and as the letters on which the charges against him were based have never been published, his life and character remain something of an enigma. His teaching had a great influence in *Pietist circles and was defended by A. H. *Francke and G. *Arnold.

His Letters are kept under seal in the archives of the *Holy Office. The basis of the charges was a set of 263 'Theses Damnandae', printed in Analecta Juris Pontificii, x (1869), cols. 574–94; the 68 errors condemned on 28 Aug. 1687 and inserted by Innocent XI on 19 Nov. 1687 in the bull Coelestis Pastor are pr. in Denz.–Bann. (ed. 12, 1913), Nos. 1221–88. Life by P. Dudon (very hostile; Paris, 1921), with bibl. J. Ellacura Beascoechea, Reacción española contra las ideas de Miguel de Molinos (Procesos de la Inquisición y refutación de los teólogos) (1956). M. Petrocchi, Il quietismo italiano del seicento (Storia e Letteratura, 20, 1948), passim; R. A. Knox, Enthusiasm (1951), pp. 295–318. J. Paquier in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2187–92, s.v.

MOMMSEN, THEODOR (1817–1903), historian of Rome and jurist. He was a native of Schleswig. After studying law at Kiel and taking part in the political agitation which led later (1864) to the separation of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark, he was professor in turn at Leipzig (1848), Breslau (1854), and Berlin (1858). He had also travelled widely in Italy collecting inscriptions. Between 1854 and 1856 he wrote his History of Rome (Eng. trans., 1862–6), and for twenty-five years edited the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum (vol. i, 1861). In 1884 appeared his Provinces of the Roman Empire (Eng. trans., 1886). He also wrote fundamental treatises on Roman Public Law, Roman Coinage, and Roman Criminal Law. He touched the field of NT studies in his treatment of Roman Law, and of Church History in his study of the relations between Church and state in the Persecutions; and he produced fine editions of the Liber Pontificalis* (1898) and some of the works of *Cassiodorus.

Gesammelte Schriften (8 vols. only publ., Berlin, 1905–13). E. *Schwartz (ed.), Mommsen und Wilamowitz. Briefwechsel, 1872–1903 (1935), with introd. pp. v–xviii; L. Wickert (ed.), Theodor Mommsen. Otto Jahn. Briefwechsel 1842–1868 (1962). L. M. Hartmann, Theodor Mommsen. Eine biographische Skizze (1908). L. Wickert, Theodor Mommsen. Eine Biographie (3 vols., 1959–69). Theodor Mommsen als Schriftsteller. Ein Verzeichnis seiner Schriften von Karl Zangemeister, ed. E. Jacobs (1905). A. Wucher, Theodor Mommsen. Geschichtschreibung und Politik (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, xxvi; 1956). G. P. Gooch, History and Historians in the Nineteenth Century (1913), pp. 454–65.

MOMMSEN CATALOGUE, The. Also known as the Cheltenham List. The early list of Biblical Books discovered in 1885 by T. *Mommsen in the *Phillipps MS. 12266 at Cheltenham (10th cent.) and first published in Hermes, xxi (1886), pp. 142–56. The list dates from the year 359. Notable points about it are the number of the Psalms (151, not 150), the order of the Gospels (Mt., Mk., Jn., Lk.), the omission of Heb., the inclusion of Rev., and an abridged list of the *Catholic Epp. (Jas. and Jude wanting). It is generally agreed that the list is of Western origin. The MS. is now in the Biblioteca Nazionale at Rome, Fondo Vittorio Emanuele 1235.

W. *Sanday, 'The Cheltenham List of the Canonical Books of the OT and NT and of the Writings of Cyprian' in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, iii, § vi (1891), pp. 217–325.

MONACHISM. See Monasticism.

MONARCHIANISM. A theological movement in the 2nd and 3rd cents. In its attempt to safeguard *Monotheism and the Unity ('Monarchy') of the Godhead, the movement became heretical, as it failed to do justice to the independent subsistence of the Son. There were two distinct groups of Monarchian theologians. (1) The '*Adoptionist' or 'Dynamic' Monarchians, who included *Artemon, two persons named *Theodotus, and perhaps also *Paul of Samosata. They maintained that Jesus was God only in the sense that a power or influence from the Father rested upon His human person. (2) The 'Modalist' Monarchians or *Sabellians, of whom the most notable were *Noetus, *Praxeas, and Sabellius. They held that in the Godhead the only differentiation was a mere succession of modes or operations. They were also called '*Patripassians', as it was a corollary of their doctrine that the Father suffered as the Son. The term 'Monarchian', in itself susceptible of a perfectly orthodox meaning, was brought into general use for such heretical teaching by *Tertullian (Adv. Praxean, iii and ix).

A. *Harnack, History of Dogma (Eng. tr.), iii (1897), ch. i, pp. 1–118. E. Evans in introd. to Tertullian, Adversus Praxean (London, 1948), pp. 6–31. A. Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 303–36, s.v.; J. *Chapman, O.S.B., in C.E., x (1911), pp. 448–51, s.v.; G. Bardy in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2193–209.

MONARCHIAN PROLOGUES, The. The short introductory narrative passages prefixed in many MSS. of the *Vulgate to each of the four Gospels. They contain brief accounts of the respective evangelists and of their supposed objects in writing the Gospels. Their Latin is very involved and their meaning uncommonly obscure; but it was obviously one of their purposes to inculcate a particular dogmatic position. Until the present century it was widely held that they were of 2nd–3rd cent. date and came from *Monarchian sources; hence their name. Most recent critics, however (e.g. J. *Chapman [who held that they were *Priscillianist and drawn up at *Lérins], D. de Bruyne, A. *Harnack and J. Regul), have put them in the 4th cent. or even later. Recent study has also made it probable that they are dependent on the *Anti-Marcionite Prologues (q.v.).

Text ed. by H. *Lietzmann in Kleine Texte, No. 1 (1908; ed. 4, 1933). P. Corssen, Monarchianische Prologe zu den vier Evangelien (T.U., xv, Hft. 1; 1896); J. Chapman, O.S.B., Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), pp. 217–88; A. *Baumstark, Note on 'Liturgischer Nachhall der "monarchianischen" Evangelienprologe' in J.L.W., xii (1932), pp. 194–7 (argues prologues of Roman origin, 3rd cent.); J. Regul, Die antimarcionitischen Evangelienprologe (Vetus Latina. Ergänzende Schriftenreihe aus der Geschichte der Lateinischen Bibel, vi; 1969), esp. pp. 40–74, incl. text, and 207–67.

MONASTERY. The house of a religious community. The Lat. monasterium, with its English form '*minster', was formerly vaguely applied to large churches, whether served by religious or by secular priests. The modern usage of confining the word to describe male religious establishments and calling those of the other sex 'convents' has no authority behind it.

MONASTIC BREVIARY. The *Breviary formerly used by monks and nuns following the Rule of St. *Benedict. It developed out of the directions given by St. Benedict in chs. 8–19 of his rule, and was revised by *Paul V (1608–11) on the lines of the Roman Breviary. Among its distinctive features were a different distribution of the Psalms, the omission of the *Nunc Dimittis at *Compline, and differences in the text of some of the hymns. It has been replaced by the four alternative forms of the *Office provided in the Thesaurus Liturgiae Monasticae Horarum (1977).

MONASTICISM. Christian Monasticism owes its origin to the desire of leading a life of perfection in greater security than is normally possible in the world. The chief aim of the monk, therefore, is personal sanctification by fulfilling the *Counsels of Perfection in the three vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Of these the last is the most characteristic of the *cœnobitic life, as the other two may also be practised in the world. The day of the monk is spent in the two activities of prayer and work (ora et labora), the 'Opus Dei', or Divine Office, being the centre and source from which both his private prayer and his work draw their inspiration. The scope of his work, originally restricted to manual labour, grew apace with the development of the monasteries, extending to copying MSS., teaching, art, and all kinds of scholarly research, so that in the Middle Ages the monks were among the chief teachers of Europe and an influential civilizing power.

Christian Monasticism originated in Egypt, where St. *Antony is usually regarded as its founder. It was introduced in the W. in the 4th cent. The first monks in Gaul, Italy, and elsewhere followed E. models, esp. the rules of *Pachomius and of *Basil, and neither *Martin of Tours nor John *Cassian made any substantial contribution to the old ideals, which were often marked by extreme austerity. A new departure was made by St. *Benedict (480–543), who produced his famous rule, the first detailed piece of monastic legislation adapted to European needs. It soon superseded all other rules, and from the 8th to the 12th cent. Benedictine Monasticism was the only form of the religious life known to the W. From then onwards there was a steady proliferation of monastic, canonical, and *mendicant orders, though the traditional form of monasticism continued with the Black (Benedictine) and White (*Cistercian) monks. In the 16th cent. the monastic life disappeared in the Reformed Churches, but it continued to flourish in RC countries until the French Revolution and Napoleonic conquests, when it came near to extinction. A revival took place in the mid-19th cent. in almost all the countries of W. and central Europe, except Scandinavia, and the monastic life was carried to N. America and elsewhere. It has continued to spread in the present century.

Monasticism also flourished throughout the Byzantine Empire, esp. in *Constantinople and its environs. Doctrine and practice were based on the desert fathers, St. Basil the Great and St. *Theodore of Studios, and its influence, within rather than upon society, was very great. Although monasticism in the East never divided into different vocations and orders, as it did in the West, there were two main forms of the one tradition: those of the coenobium and the small group of individuals (lavra, skete*), living respectively a community and an idiorhythmic (individual, personal) life. Monasticism spread with Christianity to the Slav countries, reaching Russia (Kiev) with St. Anthony c. 1050, and Moscow, after the Mongol invasions, with St. *Sergius in 1354. Every town had its coenobium, while the idiorhythmic skit with its spiritual guide preferred the forest. As in the West, the large and wealthy monasteries attracted the attention of governments; their revenues were used by Peter the Great and a general secularization took place in 1764. A strong revival in the 19th cent. continued until the virtual elimination of monasticism in Russia in 1917.

A special place in Orthodox monasticism is held by Mount *Athos (q.v.). This enclave has been joined by monks of every Orthodox nation, both coenobitic and idiorhythmic, and still exists with diminished numbers and resources.

See also under the various religious orders, Benedictine, Cistercian, &c., and Religious Orders in Anglicanism.

There is an immense literature; many of the principal items are listed under the separate Orders. Useful survey of existing Orders and Congregations in M. Heimbucher, Die Orden und Kongregationen der katholischen Kirche (ed. 3, 2 vols., 1933–4). P. Cousin, Précis d'histoire monastique [1956]. [M.] D. Knowles, From Pachomius to Ignatius. A Study in the Constitutional History of the Religious Orders (Sarum Lectures, 1964–5; Oxford, 1966); id., Christian Monasticism (1969). K. Heussi, Der Ursprung des Mönchtums (Tübingen, 1936). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City. An Introduction to the History of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Birkbeck Lectures for 1958–9, Oxford, 1966). A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient (C.S.C.O., clxxxiv and cxcvii; 1958–60). H. Dörries, Wort und Stunde, i (Göttingen, 1966), esp. pp. 145–301. A. J. Festugière, O.P. (ed.), Les Moines d'Orient (4 vols. in 5, 1961–5; primary texts translated into Fr., with introd.). B. Lohse, Askese und Mönchtum in der Antike und in der alten Kirche (Religion und Kultur der alten Mittelmeerwelt in Parallelforschungen, i; 1969). F. Prinz, Frühes Mönchtum im Frankenreich. Kultur und Gesellschaft in Gallien, den Rheinlanden und Bayern am Beispiel der monastischen Entwicklung (4. bis 8. Jahrhundert) (Munich, 1965). J. Ryan, S.J., Irish Monasticism. Origins and Early Development (1931). M. D. Knowles, The Monastic Order in England, 943–1216 (Cambridge, 1940; ed. 2, 1963); id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., ib., 1948–59). Id.–R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses, England and Wales (1953; revised ed., 1971); D. E. Easson Medieval Religious Houses, Scotland (1957); A. [O.] Gwynn–R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses, Ireland (1970). R. N. Hadcock, Map of Monastic Britain (1950; ed. 2, 1955); id., Map of Monastic Ireland (Dublin, 1960; ed. 2, 1965). On Orthodox monasticism, see also I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum. Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das östliche Christentum, Neue Folge, x–xi; 1953). J. M. Hussey, 'Byzantine Monasticism' in id. (ed.), C.Med.H. (ed. 2), iv (pt. 2, 1967), pp. 161–84, with bibl. pp. 439–43.

MONASTICON ANGLICANUM. The title under which Sir William *Dugdale published a vast collection of monastic charters and other sources relating to the history of English monasteries and collegiate churches in the Middle Ages.

It was a co-operative work based in the main on the collections of Roger Dodsworth, and issued in three vols. in 1655, 1661, and 1673 respectively.

The best ed. is that of J. Caley, H. Ellis, and B. Bandinel (6 vols., London, 1817–30; new ed., 8 vols., 1846).

MONE, FRANZ JOSEPH (1796–1871), German historian and liturgical scholar. He was a native of Baden and studied at Heidelberg university, where he was professor from 1819 to 1827. From 1827 to 1831 he taught at Louvain, returned to Heidelberg in 1831, and in 1835 was appointed director of the Baden Archives, a post he held till 1868. He did important research work on Latin medieval literature and early German history. His chief liturgical publication was his Lateinische und griechische Messen aus dem zweiten bis sechsten Jahrhundert (1850), which contains the text of eleven (properly, seven) Masses of the pure Gallican type, notable for the absence of all reference to the cycle of liturgical feasts. He also published a collection of medieval hymns, Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters (1853–5).

The 'Masses of Mone' are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxviii, 863–82; crit. ed. by L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B., Missale Gallicanum Vetus (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, iii; Rome, 1958), pp. 74–91. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'L'Âge et l'ordre des messes de Mone' in R. Bén., xxviii (1911), pp. 377–90.

MONICA, St. (c. 331–87), mother of St. *Augustine of Hippo (q.v.). (In the oldest MSS. the spelling is 'Monnica'.) Presumably a native of Tagaste, she was of Christian upbringing. Her husband, Patricius, a vir curialis, though a formal member of the Christian community, seems to have been of dissolute habits and a violent temper. At the age of forty Monica was left a widow. Of her three children (Augustine, Navigius, Perpetua), Augustine was the eldest; and, in acc. with a common custom of the time, Monica had him enrolled as a catechumen without having him baptized. Apprehensive at her son's waywardness she earnestly prayed for his conversion, and after Augustine had set out for Italy (383) she resolved to follow him. From *Rome she pursued him to Milan, where she came under the influence of St. *Ambrose, took a devout part in public worship and witnessed her son's conversion. She and Augustine then retired to Cassiciacum, where she appears as an interlocutor in the dialogues 'De Ordine' and 'De Beata Vita'. Having set out with Augustine on his return to Africa, she died at Ostia on the way.

A cult of St. Monica began to develop in the later Middle Ages and in 1430 *Martin V transferred her supposed relics from Ostia to Rome, where they rest in the church of S. Agostino. She has often been chosen as the patron of associations of Christian mothers. Feast day, 27 Aug. (formerly, 4 May, as in the American BCP, 1979).

The main source is St. Augustine, Confessions, Bk. IX. AA.SS., Mai. I (1680), pp. 473–92. Modern lives by É. H. Bougaud (Paris, 1865; Eng. tr. by Lady Herbert of Lea, 1894) and L. Cristiani (Paris, 1959). P. Henry, S.J., La Vision d'Ostie. Sa place dans la vie et l'œuvre de St. Augustin (1938). H. C. G. *Moule in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 932–4, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2232–56, s.v.; W. Hartke in P.W., Suppl., vi (1935), cols. 520–29, s.v. 'Monnica'.

MONISM. The philosophy which seeks to explain all that is in terms of a single reality. The term was first used by C. *Wolff. Typical exponents of different varieties of Monism are the earliest Greek philosophers, e.g. Thales of Miletus (who held that everything was a form of water), *Plotinus, B. *Spinoza, and G. W. F. *Hegel. Modern forms of Monism (E. *Haeckel) are often esp. concerned to eliminate the dualism of the physical and the psychical by postulating a reality transcending these, of which both are modes. Materialism is another form of Monism. All forms of Monism are in conflict with the Christian belief in a radical distinction between the various grades of being.

MONK. A word of uncertain origin popularly used of any member of a religious community for men, living under the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Though it has never acquired a clear-cut technical sense, its use is properly confined to those bodies in which community life is an integral element, and not extended to religious of the W. Church who belong to such later developments of the monastic ideal as *canons regular, *mendicants, and *clerks regular. See also Monastery, Monasticism.

J. Leclercq, O.S.B., Études sur le vocabulaire monastique du moyen âge (Studia Anselmiana, xlviii; 1961), pp. 7–38.

MONNICA, St. See Monica, St.

MONOGENES, The (Gk. μονογενής, 'only-begotten'). The hymn beginning Ὁ Μονογενὴς Υἱὸς καὶ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ addressed to the Triumphant Redeemer which forms the conclusion of the second *antiphon in the *Enarxis of the Byzantine Liturgies. It also occurs in the Liturgies of St. *James and St. *Mark, where it is found at the *Little Entrance, probably its original position. It is traditionally ascribed to the Emp. *Justinian (527–65).

Gk. text in Brightman, L.E.W., p. 365 f. J. Puyade, O.S.B., 'Le Tropaire Ὁ Μονογενής' in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, xvii (1912), pp. 253–67, with Syriac and Gk. text; V. Grumel, A.A., 'L'Auteur et la date de composition du tropaire Ὁ Μονογενής' in É.O., xxii (1923), pp. 398–418.

MONOLATRY (Gr. μόνος, 'single' + λατρεία, 'worship'). Restriction of worship to one god, when other gods may be held to exist. The term was introduced c. 1880 by J. *Wellhausen and taken up by W. R. *Smith. It has been held by some OT historians to be a necessary stage in the transition from polytheism to monotheism, and to have marked Israel's religious condition from the time of the *Sinai Covenant (Exod. 24) to that of the prophets.

MONOPHYSITISM (Gk. μόνος, 'only one', and φύσις, 'nature'). The doctrine that in the Person of the Incarnate Christ there was but a single, and that a Divine, Nature, as against the orthodox teaching of a double Nature, Divine and Human, after the Incarnation. Its adherents came into being as a distinct body immediately after the Council of *Chalcedon (451), which formally defined the Dyophysite doctrine. It represents an advanced type of *Alexandrian Theology (q.v.) and emerges as a distinctive form of doctrine after the agreement between St. *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444) and *John of Antioch (d. 441) in 433. An extreme form of it was condemned in the person of *Eutyches (d. 454) at the Council of Chalcedon, to which the Monophysites always remained implacably opposed. Among early Monophysite leaders were *Timothy Aelurus and *Peter the Fuller (qq.v.).

Many variant forms of Monophysitism soon developed. An extreme type was that held by the followers of *Julian, Bp. of Halicarnassus ('Julianists'), who taught the incorruptibility and immortality of the Body of the Human Christ from the first moment of the Incarnation; this group was dubbed by their opponents '*Aphthartodocetae', or 'Phantasiastae'. Opposed to them were the followers of *Severus, Patr. of Antioch, who held a doctrine much closer to Catholic teaching and whose only divergence from orthodoxy may have been terminological; they in turn were termed by the Julianists 'Corrupticolae'. What was really another form of Monophysite doctrine was the *Theopaschitism (q.v.) of the 6th cent.

During the later 5th and the 6th cents. many attempts were made at reconciling the Monophysites to the Catholics. The Emp. *Zeno (474–91) drew up the *Henotikon (q.v.) to replace the Chalcedonian definition; but his formula was rejected by the Pope as well as by the extremist Egyptian Monophysites and resulted in the *Acacian schism. *Justinian I (527–65) also earnestly sought to win them over, even attempting to make the Monophysite Anthimus Patr. of *Constantinople. But despite all these efforts the break became final when, in the 6th cent., Monophysitism consolidated itself in three great Churches: (1) the *Copts and *Abyssinians, (2) the Syrian *Jacobites, so called after their leader *Jacob Baradaeus, and (3) the *Armenians. All these bodies accept the fathers of the Church prior to Chalcedon, and in their official professions of faith and their liturgical documents even appear to confess the orthodox Christology but in Monophysite terms, though individual members have sometimes followed the heterodox teaching of Eutyches and his disciples.

In modern times the subject has attracted much attention. Important new work in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalcedon. Geschichte und Gegenwart (3 vols., 1951–4), notably the essays in Bd. i by J. Lebon, C. Moeller, and M. Richard; this treatise has full bibl. reff. W. H. C. Frend, The Rise of the Monophysite Movement (Cambridge, 1972). The radical differences between the Eutychian and Severian doctrines were first emphasized in J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (Louvain, 1909). R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère d'Antioche sur l'incorruptibilité du corps du Christ (ib., 1924). A. A. Luce, Monophysitism Past and Present. A Study in Christology (1920). W. A. Wigram, The Separation of the Monophysites (1923). G. Krüger in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 811–17, s.v.; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2216–51, s.v. 'Monophysisme', with bibl.; id., ib., cols. 2251–306, s.v. 'Monophysite (Église copte)'; id. in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1299–1302, s.v. 'Monofisiti'.

MONOTHEISM. Belief in one personal and transcendent God, as opposed to polytheism on the one hand and *pantheism on the other. Acc. to traditional Christian teaching it was the original religion of man revealed to our first parents, but subsequently lost by most men as a consequence of the Fall. In the 19th cent., under the influence of the newly aroused interest in comparative religion and natural science, this account of the beginnings of Monotheism was largely abandoned in favour of the evolutionary theory. Acc. to this view, defended by E. B. Tylor and many others, the religious beliefs of mankind have progressed from *animism by way of polytheism to Monotheism as the last link in a long chain of development. Today this theory is less widely held. It is pointed out that on the one hand neither *Judaism nor Christianity nor *Mohammedanism, the three great monotheistic religions properly so called, have grown up as developments of polytheism but rather in opposition to it, and the same may be said of the Monotheism of Greek philosophy. On the other hand, known polytheistic religions do not show signs of issuing in Monotheism, whereas, acc. to some scholars, there is evidence among primitive peoples for a residue of Monotheism, belief in the 'High God', inherited from a forgotten past. See also Henotheism.

It is sometimes alleged against Christianity that it does not profess pure Monotheism because of its dogma of the Holy *Trinity (q.v.). Christian orthodoxy, however, has consistently denied this charge, maintaining that though there are Three Persons in the One Godhead, yet, as the *Athanasian Creed affirms, there are 'not three Gods, but One God'.

The subject is regularly discussed in works on the Philosophy of Religion and Christian Doctrine. W. Schmidt, Der Ursprung der Gottesidee (12 vols., 1912–55). E. Peterson, Der Monotheismus als politisches Problem. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der politischen Theologie im Imperium Romanum (1935). W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity. Monotheism and the Historical Process (Baltimore, 1942; ed. 2, 1946). J. Royce in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 817–21, s.v. [philosophical]; P. Palazzini–L. Vannicelli in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1311–19, s.v. 'Monoteismo'; W. Holsten–F. Baumgärtel in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 1109–15, s.v. 'Monotheismus und Polytheismus'. See also bibl. to art. God.

MONOTHELITISM (Gk. μονοθελῆται, from μόνος, 'one', and θέλειν, 'to will'; the more correct, but less usual, spelling of the word is 'Monotheletism'). A 7th cent. heresy confessing only one will in the God-man. The heresy was of political rather than of religious origin, being designed to rally the *Monophysites to their orthodox (*Chalcedonian) fellow-Christians when division endangered the Empire, faced with Persian and later with Mohammedan invasions. In 624 conferences of the Monophysite leaders with the Emp. *Heraclius resulted in producing a formula seemingly acceptable to both, which asserted two natures in Christ but only one mode of activity (μία ἐνέργεια). The solution was referred to *Sergius, the Patr. of *Constantinople, who, having found a similar formula in the writings of St. *Cyril of *Alexandria, approved the Imperial expedient. When, by its means, Cyrus of Alexandria had reconciled a large number of Monophysites to the Church, its success seemed to prove its truth. It was vigorously rejected, however, by *Sophronius of *Jerusalem, whose opposition caused Sergius c. 634 to write to Pope *Honorius (q.v.). In two unguarded letters the Pope approved the Patriarch's conduct and himself used the unfortunate expression of 'one will' in Christ, which henceforth replaced the 'one energy'. Honorius's term was taken up in the '*Ecthesis' (Ἔκθεσις), probably drawn up by Sergius and issued by Heraclius in 638. This Ecthesis, the chief document of the Monothelites properly so called, forbids the mention of one or two energies and admits only one will (ἓν θέλημα) in Christ. In two Councils held at Constantinople in 638 and 639 the E. Church accepted the Ecthesis. But the successors of Honorius, Severinus, John IV, and Theodore I, all condemned Monothelitism, so that the Emp. Constans II, in order to obtain religious peace, withdrew the Ecthesis in 648, replacing it by another document, the so-called *Typos. In it he rejected both the monothelitic and the dyothelitic formulas and forbade their use. This, however, did not solve the problem, and the Typos was condemned at the *Lateran Council of 649. The controversy was finally settled by the Council of Constantinople in 680, which confirmed the decisions of a synod held at *Rome in 679. The Council condemned the Monothelitic formulas and their adherents, and proclaimed the existence of two wills in Christ, Divine and human, to be the orthodox faith.

Theologically, the issues at stake in the controversy were closely similar to those raised by Monophysitism (q.v.).

The main sources are preserved in the Acta of the 7th cent. Councils, pr. in the standard collections of J. *Hardouin and J. D. *Mansi; much material also in the writings of St. *Maximus Confessor and St. *Anastasius of Sinai (qq.v.). L. J. Tixeront, Histoire des dogmes, iii (1912), pp. 160–92. V. Grumel, A.A., 'Recherches sur l'histoire du monothélisme' in É.O., xxvii (1928), pp. 6–16, 257–77, xxviii (1929), pp. 19–34, 272–82, and xxix (1930), pp. 16–28. G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 401–13, s.v. 'Monotheleten', with full bibl.; id. in H.É.R.É., viii (1915), pp. 821–5, s.v.; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2307–23, s.v. 'Monothélisme'; A. Mayer, O.S.B., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1319–24, s.v. 'Monotelismo', with bibl.

MONSIGNOR, usually abbreviated Mgr. In the RC Church, an ecclesiastical title attached to an office or distinction ordinarily bestowed by the Pope. It is also used in some countries, e.g. France (in the form Monseigneur), as a regular style for archbishops and bishops.

MONSTRANCE. The vessel, also known as an 'ostensorium', used for exposing the Eucharistic Host for veneration. In its modern form it often consists of a frame of golden or silver rays in the centre of which is a receptacle with a glass window through which the Host may be seen by the people. When the cultus of the Blessed Sacrament began to spread in the later Middle Ages, the Host was at first venerated in the closed *ciborium, but later the bowl was elongated and made transparent, and by the 16th cent. the monstrance had assumed its present shape.

Braun, A.G. (1932), pp. 348–411, with plates 62–78. M. Andrieu, 'Aux origines du culte du saint-sacrement. Reliquaires et monstrances eucharistiques' in Anal. Boll., lxviii (1950), pp. 397–418.

MONTAGU, or MONTAGUE, RICHARD (1577–1641), successively Bp. of *Chichester and *Norwich. Educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, he held two country benefices before he was appointed Dean of *Hereford in 1616, and in the following year Canon of *Windsor. An eloquent but somewhat violent champion of the C of E, he claimed 'to stand in the gap against puritanism and popery, the Scylla and Charybdis of Ancient Piety'. His Appello Caesarem, a defence against charges of Popery and *Arminianism, was condemned by Parliament (1626), but this did not prevent its bringing Montagu into favour with *Charles I, who appointed him to the see of Chichester in 1628. At both Chichester and Norwich, whither he was translated in 1638, he showed himself a stern opponent of Puritanism, a faithful shepherd of his dioceses, and a follower of Abp. W. *Laud. An erudite if somewhat cumbrous scholar, his best known books, apart from his controversial writings, are Eusebii De Demonstratione Evangelica (1628) and De Originibus Ecclesiasticis (1636).

Extracts in P. E. More–F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), Nos. 3, 137, 160, 237. W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 266–70.

MONTAIGNE, MICHEL DE (1533–92), French essayist. Of noble family, he was born at the Château de Montaigne in Périgord, and received his earliest training from a German tutor with no knowledge of French, so that he might learn Latin as his mother-tongue. At the age of six he was sent to school at the Collège de Guienne, Bordeaux. Later he studied law, prob. at Toulouse. In his youth he came much under the influence of *Raymond of Sebonde's Theologia Naturalis, which his father had invited him to translate (publd. 1569). About 1556 he became a counsellor in the Cour des Aides at Périgueux which was incorporated soon afterwards in the Parlement of Bordeaux. In 1565 he married Françoise de la Chassaigne, who brought him a large dowry. In 1570 he sold his post as counsellor; in 1571 he retired to the Château de Montaigne which he had inherited on his father's death (1568); and in the next nine years he wrote most of the Essais for the first two Books (publd. 1580). In 1580 he set out on the extensive travels in Switzerland, Bavaria, the Tyrol, and Italy (where he spent much time at Rome and Lucca), described in his Journal de voyage (first publd. 1774). From 1581 until 1585 he held the mayoralty of Bordeaux. In 1588 he published a new edition of the Essais, adding as a Third Book those written after his resumption of leisure in 1585.

In his first group of Essais Montaigne propounded a scarcely christianized form of Neo-Stoic moral theory; but after undergoing a crisis of scepticism c. 1576, he inclined towards an Epicurean, or even a Cyrenaic, attitude to life, distinguished by certain reservations. The good life, he held, consisted in a due development of the whole of human nature, including its nobler aspects. In speculative matters he was an acute critic, but hardly a creative thinker; and his sceptical motto 'Que sais-je?' indicates his reluctance to accept any fixed position. Though his religious opinions were expressed with prudent reserve, he was always a professing Catholic; but he made no attempt to justify his faith otherwise than by a pragmatic appeal to tradition and to the power of Divine grace, which he does not at all relate to the workings and exigencies of human nature. His influence upon French and English thought was considerable (F. *Bacon, B. *Pascal). What especially impressed his more immediate posterity was his presentation of ancient philosophy as a self-sufficient ethical system, independent of religious principles and sanctions.

The best ed. of his complete works is that of A. Armaingaud (12 vols., Paris, 1924–41). Works also ed. A. Thibaudet–M. Rat (Paris, 1962). Eng. tr. of his works by D. M. Frame (London, 1958). Among the many modern edd. of his Essais, the standard text is that of F. Strowski and others

(5 vols., Bordeaux, 1906–33). An Eng. tr. of his Essais by J. Florio was publd. London, 1603; many subsequent edd., incl. that of J. I. M. Stewart (2 vols., London, 1931); further early Eng. tr. by C. Cotton (London, 1685; also frequently edited). Modern Eng. tr. by E. J. Trechmann (2 vols., London, 1927). The considerable modern literature includes studies by P. Bonnefon (Bordeaux, 1893), F. Strowski ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1906; ed. 2, 1931), J. Plattard (Paris, 1933), P. Villey ('Maîtres des littératures', 1933; and other works by this author), H. Friedrich (Bern, 1949; ed. 2, 1967) and D. M. Frame (London–New York, 1965). M. Dréano, La Pensée religieuse de Montaigne (Paris thesis, 1936); C. Sclafert, L'Ame religieuse de Montaigne (1951). C. Dédéyan, Montaigne chez ses amis anglo-saxons (Études de littérature étrangère et comparée, 2 vols. [c. 1946]). S. A. Tannenbaum, Michel Eyquem de Montaigne. A Concise Bibliography (New York, 1942). Überweg, iii, pp. 162–5, with bibl. p. 648. C. Constantin in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2338–44, s.v., with bibl.; R .A. Sayce in E.B. (ed. 1968), xv, pp. 768–70, s.v.

MONTALEMBERT, CHARLES RENÉ FORBES (1810–70), French RC historian. He was the son of a French émigré and born in London. An ardent religious *liberal who desired to see the Church freed of state control, he soon associated himself with the movement sponsored by F. R. de *Lamennais and H. *Lacordaire, and enthusiastically supported Lamennais's newspaper, L'Avenir. A journey to Rome to win Papal support, however, proved fruitless, and when in 1832 *Gregory XVI condemned liberalism in his '*Mirari Vos', Montalembert submitted and ceased to propagate his views, though he did not altogether abandon them. From 1848 to 1857 he sat in the French Chamber of Deputies, where he became a vehement champion of Catholic principles. His revived advocacy of liberal views, notably in Des intérêts catholiques au XIXe siècle (1852), in Le Correspondant, and at the Congress of Malines in 1863, made him an object of dislike to more reactionary Catholics. His historical writings were composed under the influence of the *Romantic Movement. Their style was polished and eloquent, and their purpose edifying, but as works of history they were uncritical. The best known is his Moines d'occident (5 vols., 1860–7; Eng. tr., 1896), which developed out of a study of the life of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux. A successful earlier work was his Vie de Ste Élisabeth de Hongrie (1836, Eng. tr., 1904).

Collected Works in 9 vols. (Paris, 1860–8). His addresses ed. by C. de Meaux (Montalembert's son-in-law; Paris, 3 vols., ed. 2, 1892). Lettres à un ami de collège [L. Cornudet] (Paris, 1873); much enlarged ed., Paris, 1905. Letters to F. R. de Lamennais, ed. by G. Goyau and P. de Lallemand (Paris [1932]). E. Lecanuet, Montalembert d'après son journal et sa correspondance (3 vols., 1895–1902). Shorter lives by Mrs. M. O. Oliphant (2 vols., London, 1873), L. Bouthors (Abbeville, 1896), V. Bucaille (Paris, 1927), and A. Trannoy (Paris, 1947). P. de Lallemand, Montalembert et ses amis dans le romantisme (1830–40) (1927); id., Montalembert et ses relations littéraires avec l'étranger jusqu'en 1840 (1927); A. Trannoy, Le Romantisme politique de Montalembert avant 1843 (1942). A. Latreille, 'Les Dernières Années de Montalembert' in Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, liv (1968), pp. 281–314. G. Goyau in C.E., x (1911), pp. 513–16; C. Constantin in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2344–55, s.v.

MONTANISM. An apocalyptic movement in the latter half of the 2nd cent. which is to be traced back to one Montanus in Phrygia. It lived in expectation of the speedy outpouring of the Holy Spirit (the Paraclete) on the Church, of which it saw the first manifestation in its own prophets and prophetesses. Montanus himself, who began to prophesy either in 172 (*Eusebius's Chronicle) or 156–7 (*Epiphanius, Haer., xlviii. 1), proclaimed that the Heavenly Jerusalem would soon descend near Pepuza in Phrygia. Closely associated with him were two women, Prisca and Maximilla.

The movement soon developed ascetic traits which became esp. prominent in an offshoot of Montanism in Roman Africa. Here, where c. 206 it won the allegiance of *Tertullian (q.v.), it disallowed second marriages, condemned the existing regulations on fasting as too lax, imposing a discipline of its own, and forbade flight in persecution. Tertullian also condemned the current penitential discipline for its leniency and termed the Catholics 'Psychics' (psychici), or 'animal men', as opposed to their own members, who were the 'Pneumatics' (pneumatici) or 'Spirit-filled'.

Certain elements in the movement (enthusiasm, ecstatic prophecy) had their parallels in primitive Christianity, and in modern times it has sometimes been regarded (e.g. by A. *Harnack) as an attempt to revert to primitive fervour in the face of a growing institutionalism and secularization of the Church. More probably the movement is to be understood as an early instance of the apocalyptic groups which have constantly sprung up in Christian history. It was attacked by a large number of orthodox writings most of which have unhappily been lost, among them those of Claudius *Apollinarius, *Miltiades, and *Rhodo. It was formally condemned by Asiatic Synods before A.D. 200 and also, after some hesitation, by Pope *Zephyrinus.

The chief sources are to be found in P. de Labriolle, Les Sources de l'histoire du montanisme (1913). Among Patristic writers they include *Hippolytus's Syntagma (lost in its orig. form; but in substance in later writers), Eusebius, H.E., V. xvi f., and Epiphanius, Haer., xlviii; and the later writings of Tertullian. G. N. Bonwetsch, Die Geschichte des Montanismus (1881); P. de Labriolle, La Crise montaniste (1913), with full bibl.; W. Schepelern, Montanismen og de Phrygiske Kulter (1920; Germ. tr., Tübingen, 1929). B. Poschmann, Paenitentia Secunda. Die kirchliche Busse im ältesten Christentum bis Cyprian und Origenes (1940), pp. 261–348. K. Aland, 'Der Montanismus und die kleinasiatische Theologie' in Z.N.T.W., xlvi (1955), pp. 109–16; J. M. Ford, 'Was Montanism a Jewish-Christian heresy?' in J.E.H., xvii (1966), pp. 145–58. T. D. Barnes, 'The Chronology of Montanism' in J.T.S., N.S., xxi (1970), pp. 403–8; id., Tertullian. A Historical and Literary Study (Oxford, 1971), esp. pp. 130–42. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 935–45, s.v. 'Montanus'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2355–70, s.v.; H. Bacht, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 578–80, s.v.

MONTBOISSIER, PETER OF. See Peter the Venerable.

MONTE CASSINO. The principal monastery of the *Benedictine Order, founded by St. *Benedict c. 529 when he migrated from *Subiaco; it lies midway between Rome and Naples. He and his sister St. *Scholastica were buried there. The buildings were destroyed by the Lombards c. 585, and the monks fled to the *Lateran basilica. The monastery was rebuilt by Abbot Petronax in 720, but was destroyed yet again by the Saracens in 884 and by the Normans in 1046. The house reached the peak of its prosperity under Desiderius (Abbot, 1058–87, later Pope Victor III) and Oderisius (1095–1105), when the church was consecrated (1071) and the fame of the scriptorium established. With varying prosperity it has remained the chief house of the order. In 1866 it was declared a national monument by the Italian government, with the monks as guardians.

The buildings were almost totally destroyed in 1944, but have been restored. The rebuilt abbey was reconsecrated by *Paul VI on 24 October 1964. See also Cassinese Congregation.

E. Gattula, O.S.B., Historia Abbatiae Cassinensis (2 pts., Venice, 1733); id., Ad Historiam Abbatiae Cassinensis Accessiones (2 pts., ib., 1734), with original sources. L. Tosti, O.S.B., Storia della badia di Monte-Cassino (3 vols., Naples, 1842–3). Series of specialized studies in Miscellanea Cassinese, ossia Nuovi contributi alla storia, alle scienze e arti religiose (Monte Cassino, 1897 ff.). Casinensia. Miscellanea di studi cassinesi pubblicati in occasione del XIV centenario della fondazione della badia di Monte-Cassino (Monte Cassino, 1929). T. Leccisotti, O.S.B., Montecassino. La vita. L'irradiazione (Florence, 1946), and other works of this author. H. Bloch, 'Monte Cassino, Byzantium, and the West in the Earlier Middle Ages' in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, iii (1946), pp. 163–224. Further bibl. in L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1913–16. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2451–84, s.v. 'Mont-Cassin'; A. Mancone, O.S.B., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1350–6, s.v.; V. Redlich, O.S.B., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 582–4, s.v., with bibl.; H. Bloch in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 1080–1082, s.v.

MONTEFIORE, CLAUDE JOSEPH GOLDSMID (1858–1938), Biblical student and prominent advocate of 'Liberal Judaism'. A Jew by religion, he was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, under B. *Jowett, with T. H. *Green as his tutor, who imbued him with an idealist outlook on life. His writings, based on a wide, rather than deep, learning, include a set of *Hibbert Lectures on The Origin and Development of the Religion of the Ancient Hebrews (1892); The Synoptic Gospels (2 vols., 1909; ed. 2, much revised, 1927); Liberal Judaism and Hellenism (1918); and Rabbinic Literature and Gospel Teachings (1930). In his insistence on the importance of the Rabbinic writings for the understanding of the NT, he was at one with his friend Israel *Abrahams (1858–1925), with whom he worked in close conjunction.

Speculum Religionis. Being Essays and Studies in Religion and Literature from Plato to von Hügel, with an introduction by F. C. Burkitt . . . presented . . . to . . . C. G. Montefiore (1929). Lucy Cohen, Some Recollections of Claude Goldsmid Montefiore (1940), with bibl. Lectures by W. R. Matthews (Southampton, 1956) and N. Bentwich (ib., 1966). H. Danby in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 624 f.

MONTES PIETATIS. In the later Middle Ages, charitable institutions for lending money in cases of necessity. The first was started by Michael Northburgh (d. 1361), Bp. of London, but failed because it charged no interest. From the middle of the 15th cent., Italian *Franciscans established many successful montes which charged a low contribution towards expenses. They were opposed esp. by the *Dominicans on the ground that they offended against the canonical prohibition of *usury, but were approved by *Leo X at the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1515. They then spread to the Low Countries, France, Spain, and Germany, but failed in England. In modern times they have been superseded in some countries by secular institutions with similar objects.

H. Holzapfel, O.F.M., Die Anfänge der Montes Pietatis (1462–1515) (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, xi; 1903). A. Parsons, O.F.M.Cap., 'Bernardine of Feltre and the Montes Pietatis' in Franciscan Studies, N.S., i (1941), pp. 11–32. U. Benigni in C.E., x (1911), pp. 534–6, s.v.; A. McPadden in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 1086 f., s.v.

MONTESQUIEU, CHARLES LOUIS JOSEPH DE SECONDAT, Baron de la Brède et de (1689–1755), French historian and philosopher. He was educated by the *Oratorians at Juilly and studied law at Bordeaux, where he became counsellor of the Parliament of the town in 1714, but soon embraced a literary career. In 1721 he published anonymously his Lettres persanes, a witty satire on European society which had a resounding success. The Lettres criticized Louis XIV's government and the Catholic Church, ridiculing esp. the dogmas of the *Trinity and of *Transubstantiation, and accusing Christianity of the worst crimes. In 1728 he was elected a member of the French Academy, and, after travelling several years in Europe and England, he wrote his Considérations sur les causes de la grandeur et de la décadence des Romains (also anonymous; 1734). Its thesis was that the history of empires was governed by moral and physical causes, and, apart from the writings of G. *Vico, it may be considered the first important work on the philosophy of history. In 1748 Montesquieu published at Geneva his most important work, the Espirit des lois (2 vols.), strongly influenced by J. *Locke and Viscount Bolingbroke, and defending the English principle of the division of powers as the safeguard of liberty and the way to an ideal form of government. In L'Esprit des lois he takes a more positive view of religion than in Lettres persanes, regarding Christianity as a powerful moral force in society which, though directly occupied only with the next life, makes for order and happiness in this; but he strongly attacked clerical celibacy and doctrinal intolerance, and the book was placed on the *Index in 1752. Montesquieu's ideas were later taken up and developed by A. de Tocqueville (1805–59).

The classic ed. of his works is that by E. Laboulaye (7 vols., Paris, 1875–9); more recent ed. by A. Masson and others (3 vols., Paris, 1950–5). Eng. tr. of works so far publd., 4 vols., London, 1777. The extensive literature on Montesquieu includes studies by L. Vian (Paris, 1878), A. Sorel ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1887; Eng. tr., 1887), J. Dedieu ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1913; also shorter study, 'Le Livre de l'étudiant', xii [1941]), G. Lanson ('Réformateurs sociaux', 1932), and R. Shackleton (Oxford, 1961). H. Barckhausen, Montesquieu, ses idées et ses œuvres d'après les papiers de La Brède (1907). F. T. H. Fletcher, Montesquieu and English Politics, 1750–1800 (1939). W. Struck, Montesquieu als Politiker (Historische Studien, ccxxviii; 1933). E. Vidal, Saggio sul Montesquieu (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Filosofia del Diritto dell'Università di Roma, xvii; 1950); with bibl. C. Rosso, Montesquieu moralista (Pisa, 1965). Pauline Kra, Religion in Montesquieu's Lettres persanes (Studies on Voltaire and the Eighteenth Century, lxxii; Geneva, 1970). D. C. Cabeen, Montesquieu. A Bibliography (New York, 1947), with supplement in Revue Internationale de Philosophie, ix (1955), pp. 409–34. A. Degert in C.E., x (1911), pp. 536–8, s.v.; C. Constantin in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2377–88, s.v.; R. Shackleton in E.B. (ed. 1968), p. 785 f.

MONTFAUCON, BERNARD DE (1655–1741), one of the foremost *Maurist patristic scholars. After embarking on a military career he joined the Maurist Benedictine congregation in 1676. He produced splendid editions of St. *Athanasius (3 vols., 1698), of the '*Hexapla' of *Origen (2 vols., 1713), and of St. *Chrysostom (13 vols., 1718–38). In his Collectio nova patrum et scriptorum graecorum (2 vols., 1706), he printed for the first time many previously unedited texts. His Palaeographia graeca (1708) virtually created the science of Greek palaeography. His other writings include his survey of MSS. in his Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum (2 vols., 1739), the work by which he is prob. best known, treatises incorporating masses of material on French historical antiquities and a defence (1699) of the Benedictine ed. of St. *Augustine against *Jesuit attacks.

E. de Broglie, La Société de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés au XVIIIe siècle: Bernard de Montfaucon et les Bernardins (2 vols., 1891). M. Valéry, Correspondance inédite de Mabillon et de Montfaucon avec l'Italie (3 vols., 1846). List of Montfaucon's works with short Life in [R. P. Tassin,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ii (Brussels, 1770), pp. 585–616. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2608–72; E. Peterson in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1374–6, for further bibl.

MONTH'S MIND. The *Requiem Mass until 1970 celebrated on the 30th day after death or burial. The custom of observing this day as the conclusion of a thirty-days mourning was known already to the Jews (cf. Num. 20. 29; Deut. 34. 8) and the Greeks. For the W. Church it is attested in the 'Dialogues' of St. *Gregory the Great (iv. 55) and the *Gelasian Sacramentary, which has a special Mass for it.

MONTINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See Paul VI.

MONT-ST.-MICHEL. The abbey and fortress of this name lie on a rocky island a mile or so off the north coast of France, near St.-Malo. An oratory is said to have been established there by St. Aubert, Bp. of Avranches (early 8th cent.), in obedience to the commands of an apparition of St. *Michael. In 966 a *Benedictine monastery was founded on the mount, to which a fortress was added later; and the sanctuary gradually became the most famous of all shrines dedicated to St. Michael. The monastery is now secularized, but the buildings remain, surmounted by a Gothic spire on which is a statue of St. Michael. St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall, is an English counterpart on a smaller scale and of less fame.

Millénaire monastique du Mont-Saint-Michel, ed. J. Laporte, O.S.B., and others (6 vols., 1967 ff.), with full bibl. reff. P. Gout, Le Mont-Saint-Michel. Histoire de l'abbaye et de la ville. Étude archéologique et architecturale des monuments (2 vols., 1910); G. Bazin, Le Mont-Saint-Michel (1933). H. J. L. J. Massé, A Short History and Description of the Church and Abbey of Mont S. Michel (Bell's Handbooks to Continental Churches, 1902). J. J. G. Alexander, Norman Illumination at Mont St. Michel 966–1100 (Oxford, 1970), with 'History of Abbey to c. 1100', pp. 1–21, incl. detailed bibl. reff.

MONTSERRAT (Lat. Mons Serratus). This celebrated mountain near Barcelona is surrounded by legends which locate there the Castle of the Holy Grail. The *Benedictine monastery, whose church enshrines the famous image of 'Our Lady of Montserrat', was founded at the beginning of the 11th cent. by Abbot Oliba of Ripoll (d. 1046) and raised to the rank of an abbey in 1409. In 1493 it joined the congregation of Valladolid, and soon became a popular place of pilgrimage. One of its most distinguished visitors was St. *Ignatius Loyola, who hung up his sword there after his conversion. Partly destroyed in the Napoleonic wars of 1811–12, and sacked by Spanish militia in 1820 and 1834, the abbey was abolished in 1835. It was restored, however, in 1844 and in 1862 affiliated to the congregation of *Subiaco, of which it is now the principal monastery in the Spanish province. Its monks are famous for their researches into Catalonian culture, ecclesiastical history and Scripture, their interest in sacred music and their extensive library. They also care for the numerous pilgrims who visit the shrine.

G. de Argais, La perla de Cataluña. Historia de Nuestra Señora de Montserrate (Madrid, 1677). M. Muntadas, O.S.B., Montserrat. Su pasado, su presente y su porvenir, ó lo que fué hasta su destrucción el año 1811, lo que es desde su destrucción y lo que será en adelante (Barcelona, 1867). A. M. Albareda, O.S.B., Historia de Montserrat (Montserrat, 1931; extended ed. 1946). Id., L'Abat Oliva, fundador de Montserrat (971[?]–1046) (ib., 1931). Analecta Montserratensia (Montserrat, 1918 ff.). A. Mundó, O.S.B., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1327–30, s.v. 'Monserrato', with bibl.

MOODY, DWIGHT LYMAN (1837–99), evangelist. The son of a bricklayer, he left his home at Northfield, Mass., in 1854 for work in Boston. After reception into the *Congregational Church in 1856, he moved to Chicago, where he prospered in business (which he abandoned in 1860) and entered on successful evangelical work in connexion with his Sunday School. During the Civil and Spanish wars (1861–5) he worked under the *Y.M.C.A., labouring particularly to evangelize the wounded. Returning to Chicago in 1865, he organized several state and international Sunday School teachers' Conventions, during which he met Ira David Sankey (1840–1908), who joined him in 1870 and regularly accompanied his preaching with singing and organ-playing. After a first visit to England in 1867, he returned with Sankey on a preaching tour from 1872 to 1875, in the course of which the 'Sankey and Moody Hymn Book' was published (1873) with many of the songs used by Sankey and other revivalists who found the hymns in use in England unsuited to their type of appeal. The tour through England, Scotland, and Ireland, which was supported by clergy of all denominations, met a wide and enthusiastic response. After conducting similar missions to Brooklyn, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, Moody founded the Northfield Seminary for Young Women in 1879 and the Mount Hermon School for Young Men in 1881. After a second tour in Great Britain from 1881 to 1884, during which he made his first appeal to the academic world, he began organizing annual student conferences for Bible study. In 1893 he organized a mission in connexion with the World Fair at Chicago, out of which grew the Bible Institute Colportage Association, for the production of cheap religious literature (founded 1895).

Moody's success as an evangelistic preacher was the fruit of his undaunted courage in pursuing converts in spite of all opposition, the frankness, vigour, and urgency of his appeal, and the use of the inquiry-room and other revivalist methods.

W. R. Moody (son), The Life of Dwight L. Moody [1900]. Recent studies by J. C. Pollock (London, 1963) and J. F. Findlay, Jr. (Chicago–London, 1969). L. A. Weigle in Dict. Amer. Biog., xiii (1934), pp. 103–6.

MOORE, AUBREY LACKINGTON (1848–1890), Anglican theologian. Educated at St. Paul's School and Exeter College, Oxford, he was successively Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford (1872–6), rector of Frenchay, Avon (1876–81), and tutor of Keble College (1881–90). His keen intellect, equally at home in philosophy and the natural sciences, and a rare depth of spiritual power made him one of the chief religious influences in Oxford. His publications included the essay on 'The Christian Doctrine of God' in Lux Mundi (1889), a collection of papers on Science and the Faith (1889), and Lectures on the History of the Reformation (1890; posthumous); but these books in no sense reflect his real abilities.

R. D. Middleton, 'Aubrey Moore' in Theology, li (1948), pp. 85–9. H. E. D. Blakiston in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), p. 342.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY. In current usage, the branch of philosophy which examines the goodness and rightness of human actions apart from any considerations derived from a supernatural revelation. The word is thus merely another name for what philosophers also term 'ethics'.

MORAL REARMAMENT (M.R.A.). The watchword of the campaign for moral and spiritual regeneration on the principle of the *Oxford Group, launched by F. N. D. *Buchman in June 1938. It won considerable public support and held its first Assembly at Interlaken, Switzerland, in Sept. 1938. After the Second World War further Assemblies were held at Caux-sur-Montreux, Switzerland.

T. Driberg, The Mystery of Moral Rearmament. A Study of Frank Buchman and his Story (1964). There is much information on the later history in Anne W. Gordon, Peter Howard. Life and Letters (1969).

MORAL THEOLOGY. A title used since the 17th cent. to denote the study of Christian character and conduct. As traditionally conceived, it treats of God as the one object and reward of human endeavour, and of the means by which He may be obtained; thus it sets out the basic rules of conduct and traits of character which are both obligatory in themselves and conducive to a healthy spiritual life. It commonly includes teaching on the means of grace, esp. the *Sacraments; more advanced training in spirituality is sometimes included, but sometimes presented under the separate heading of *ascetical theology.

The form of the science of Moral Theology (esp. its orientation towards man's true happiness) is largely derived from pre-Christian philosophers, esp. *Aristotle, as adapted by St. *Augustine and St. *Thomas Aquinas; its content derives partly from the Bible (esp. the *Decalogue and the *Sermon on the Mount), partly from Christian tradition, including the lives and teachings of the saints; it claims therefore to rest on Divine revelation, interpreted by reason and the tradition of the Church. The foundations of this system were laid by St. Augustine, and it attained completeness and precision during the Middle Ages; since the 17th cent. attempts have been made to apply it more closely to individual cases and circumstances by developing the science of *Casuistry.

The '*Didache' perhaps contains what can be called the earliest treatise of Moral Theology in its teaching of the Two Ways, and the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas gives an actual compendium of Christian moral teaching in the twelve 'Mandates'. *Clement of Alexandria produced guides to the Christian life in the 'Protrepticus' and 'Paedagogus', which give a detailed description of the morality of the true Christian. *Tertullian taught that the Will of God was the first principle of the moral life, and he and St. *Cyprian wrote several practical treatises on such subjects of Christian morality as Patience, Almsgiving, and Virginity. With the wholesale conversion of pagans in the 4th cent. strict moral teaching became particularly urgent. It was given in the E. by, among others, the *Cappadocian Fathers, St. *Basil and the two *Gregories, and by St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, esp. in his 'Catecheses'. In the W. St. *Ambrose produced a Christian counterpart to Cicero's 'De Officiis' in his 'De Officiis Ministrorum'. St. Augustine established charity as the fundamental principle of Christian morality, from which flow all other virtues, esp. in his 'Enchiridion' and 'De Moribus'; he also wrote smaller treatises on Marriage, Continence, and similar subjects. The moral teaching of antiquity was summed up by St. *Gregory I in his 'Moralium Libri XXV' and 'Liber Regulae Pastoralis', in which, at the same time, were laid the foundations of medieval developments.

The first indication of new needs was the appearance of the '*Penitential Books', dating from the 5th–7th cents. They deal in a practical way with the requirements of the newly converted barbarians and reflect the ensuing gradual attenuation of the penitential practice of the Church. The true founder of Moral Theology in the modern sense, however, is St. Thomas Aquinas. Building on St. Augustine and Aristotle, he devoted the whole of the second part of his 'Summa Theologica' to the subject of Moral Theology, treating it from the point of view of the speculative theologian, and linking it closely to the whole organism of natural and supernatural virtues and to the gifts of the Holy Ghost. At the same time precursors of modern casuistry made their appearance with *Raymond de Peñafort's famous 'Summa de Poenitentia' (c. 1225), a compilation of relevant passages from the Fathers, Councils, and Papal decisions, and a century later, with the even more practical so-called 'Summa Astensis' of an unknown Franciscan of Asti, in Italy (c. 1317). In the 14th and 15th cents. a large number of similar Summae were produced, usually arranged in alphabetical order, one of the most celebrated being the 'Summa Theologica Moralis' of St. *Antoninus of Florence, which proved a mine of information for all subsequent manuals of casuistry.

The modern period, which may be dated from the Council of *Trent, is marked in the RC Church esp. by the many commentaries on the 'Summa Theologica', by the controversies over different systems of morality, esp. *Probabilism (q.v.), and by the numerous special manuals and treatises on Moral Theology, produced largely by members of the *Dominican and *Jesuit Orders. This development was greatly fostered by the increased frequency of sacramental confession. Among the commentaries on the second part of the 'Summa' those by B. de Medina (1527–31), G. *Vázquez, F. de *Suarez, and D. *Báñez are held in great esteem by RC moralists, as is also the comprehensive work of the *Salmanticenses Cursus Theologiae Moralis (1665 ff.). Of the casuists M. de *Sa's Aphorismi Confessariorum (1595) was widely used, and J. de *Lugo's Disputationes scholasticae et morales (1644) is still frequently regarded as the classic textbook of casuistry. The most famous moral theologian of modern times, whose work received the special approval of the RC church, is St. *Alphonsus Liguori, whose Theologia Moralis (1753–5) finally established the milder Probabilist and *Equiprobabilist method for resolving doubtful cases against the harsher *Probabiliorism, at that time largely followed in France and Italy. Most modern RC handbooks on Moral Theology are strongly influenced by the Liguorian teaching. It should, however, be remembered that the various modern systems apply only to the comparatively unimportant sphere of uncertain cases, and that the great principles of Catholic Moral Theology are the same whatever the particular casuistic doctrines an author may follow.

In the C of E the problems of Moral Theology received the attention of many writers in the 17th and early 18th cents., notably Jeremy *Taylor and R. *Sanderson. The Catholic revival of the 19th cent. produced little more than adaptations of current RC handbooks, but more recently some serious efforts have been made to lay the foundations of a body of Moral Theology adapted to the needs of the Anglican Church. Meanwhile Protestant Christians have tended to dissociate themselves from the attempts to produce detailed systems of duties binding upon all Christians, esp. where (as commonly) this was made the basis of advice delivered by a priest on the occasion of *auricular confession. Writers of this school confine themselves to more general presentations of Christian duties, relying on the guidance of the Holy Spirit to interpret them in individual cases; they have generally relinquished the title 'Moral Theology' in favour of 'Christian Ethics'.

In recent years, the traditional presentations of Moral Theology have been more widely criticized, e.g. as (a) giving too little prominence to Biblical authority; (b) conceived mainly as handbooks for the clergy, while underestimating the responsibilities of Christians as such; (c) presenting minimum standards of obligation insufficiently connected with positive teaching on Christian ideals; (d) too individualistic; (e) too isolated from current philosophical discussions of ethical theory, and (f) too insensitive to rapid social changes, which have tended to raise new problems too quickly for solution by the traditional methods of casuistry, as well as throwing doubt upon some traditional rulings and even (for some) upon the whole concept of immutable Divine law. Not all these points are generally admitted; but attempts are being made to reappraise Biblical teaching; to replace the concept of the individual's true happiness by more Biblical and corporate ideals; to develop systems of Christian ethics as a bridge between philosophical theory and practical guidance; and, not least, to think constructively about the dilemmas and perplexities presented by modern secular society.

The traditional RC teaching is well represented by the work of A. Koch, Lehrbuch der Moraltheologie (Freiburg i.Br., 1905; Eng. tr. by A. Preuss, 5 vols., St. Louis, Mo., 1918–24), and H. Davis, S.J., Moral and Pastoral Theology (4 vols., 1935 + Supplement, 1936); see also R. C. Mortimer, The Elements of Moral Theology (1947; Anglican). For more recent RC treatment see G. Gilleman, S.J., Le Primat de la charité en théologie morale (Museum Lessianum, section théologique, 1; 1952; Eng. tr., 1959); B. Häring, C.SS.R., Das Gesetz Christi (Freiburg i.Br., 1954; ed. 8, 1967; Eng. tr., 3 vols., Cork, 1966); id., Toward a Christian Moral Theology (Notre Dame, Ind., 1966). Anglican books on the subject include several writings of K. E. *Kirk (esp. The Vision of God, 1931); also H. [M.] Waddams, A New Introduction to Moral Theology (1964). For Protestant treatment and relation with philosophical ethics see D. *Bonhoeffer, Ethik, ed. E. Bethge (Munich, 1949; Eng. tr., 1955); [R.] P. Ramsey, Basic Christian Ethics (New York, 1951; London, 1953); Helmut Thielicke, Theologische Ethik (3 vols. in 4, Tübingen, 1951–64; abridged Eng. tr. of vols. i and ii, 1968–9); G. F. Thomas, Christian Ethics and Moral Philosophy (New York, 1955); I. T. Ramsey (ed.), Christian Ethics and Contemporary Philosophy (1966). See also J. Macquarrie (ed.), A Dictionary of Christian Ethics (1967). J. M. Ramírez and others in N.C.E., ix (1967), pp. 1109–28, s.v.; B. Häring–W. Trillhaas in Sacramentum Mundi, ed. K. *Rahner, S.J., and others, iv (1969), pp. 122–33, s.v., both with further bibl.

MORALITY PLAY, or MORALITY. A form of drama, popular in the 15th and 16th cents., in which a moral truth or lesson was inculcated by the chief characters personifying various abstract qualities. It was a development from the earlier *Mystery Plays. Originally the interest of these plays was mainly religious, but from the end of the 15th cent. onwards they became more secular in character, though in their later form they were sometimes used, e.g., for defending Protestantism against Catholicism. 'Everyman', the best known of them, is a translation from a Dutch original. The name 'Morality', which is derived from the French, was not applied to them till the late 18th century.

A collection of English Miracle Plays, Moralities and Interludes [extracts] was ed., with useful introd., by A. W. Pollard (1890; ed. 8, 1927). H. Craig, English Religious Drama of the Middle Ages (1955), esp. pp. 321–53, with reff. See also bibl. to Mystery Plays; also to Drama.

MORAVIAN BRETHREN. The name in common use for the Protestant Church which is the direct continuation of the *Bohemian Brethren (q.v.) after their 'renewal' at *Herrnhut under Count N. L. von *Zinzendorf in 1722. From then on there was a strong *Pietist element in the community, a consequence of Zinzendorf's influence; and they also became closely linked to the *Lutheran Church, in which they considered themselves a group (ecclesiola).

From an early date they were active missionaries. In 1732 two brethren went out to the negroes of St. Thomas (West Indies) and in 1733 a mission was begun in Greenland. In 1738 Peter Bohler, one of their number, established a 'religious society' at Fetter Lane, London, where he exercised a deep influence on J. *Wesley (q.v.).

In theology the Moravians have always distrusted doctrinal formulae, the *Easter Litany (q.v.) tending to take the place of a dogmatic creed; but they give a limited recognition to the *Augsburg Confession. They have retained the offices of *Bishop, *Presbyter, and *Deacon; but these offices do not wholly correspond with their Catholic counterparts. In general they have stood for a simple and unworldly form of Christianity. They publish annually a 'Text Book', with appointed OT and NT texts for daily use, to foster fellowship among their groups. In their services the use of hymns, mainly of German origin, plays an important part. Their prayers for public use are prefixed to modern editions of The Moravian Hymn Book.

Until 1957 the Moravian Church was divided into four provinces, viz. (Continental) Europe, Britain, America North and South. The former mission fields have now become provinces, making 17 in all. Over a quarter of the total membership is concentrated in Tanzania.

D. Cranz, Alte und neue Brüder-Historie oder Kurzgefasste Geschichte der Evangelischen Brüder-Unität in den altern Zeiten und insonderheit in dem gegenwärtigen Jahrhundert (Barby, 1771; Eng. tr., 1780). E. A. Schweinitz, History of the Moravian Church known as Unitas Fratrum (Bethlehem, Pa., 1885); J. E. Hutton, Short History of the Moravian Church (London, 1895; enlarged ed., 1900); E. Langton, History of the Moravian Church (1956). J. T. Hamilton, History of the Moravian Church during the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries (Bethlehem, Pa.,1900). W. G. Addison, The Renewed Church of the United Brethren, 1722–1930 (1930). W. Marx, Die Saalkirche der deutschen Brüdergemeine im 18. Jahrhundert (Studien über christliche Denkmäler, xxii; 1931). H. Pleijel, Das Kirchenproblem der Brüdergemeine in Schweden. Eine kirchliche Studie (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. 1, Bd. xxxiii, Nr. 6; 1938). J. T. Hamilton, 'A History of the Unitas Fratrum or Moravian Church in the United States of America' in American Church History Series, viii (New York, 1895), pp. 425–508. J. J. Sessler, Communal Pietism among Early American Moravians (New York, 1933). Gillian L. Gollin, Moravians in Two Worlds. A Study of Changing Communities (1967). J. E. Hutton, A History of Moravian Missions [1922]. D. Cranz, Historie von Grönland enthaltend die Beschreibung des Landes und der Einwohner u. insbesondere die Geschichte der dortigen Mission der evangelischen Brüder zu Neu-Herrnhut und Lichtenfels (Barby, 1765; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1767; abridged ed. with continuation, 2 vols., 1820). R. T. Jenkins, The Moravian Brethren in North Wales (Y Cymmrodor, xlv; 1938). J. E. Hutton, 'The Moravian Contribution to the Evangelical Revival in England, 1742–1755' in T. F. Tout–J. Tait (edd.), Historical Essays by Members of the Owens College, Manchester. Published in Commemoration of its Jubilee, 1851–1901 (1902), pp. 423–52, with reff. E. R. Hassé in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), pp. 837–41, s.v. On the early history see also bibl. to Bohemian Brethren.

MORE, DAME GERTRUDE (1606–33), *Benedictine nun and spiritual writer. A direct descendant of St. Thomas *More, she entered the house of the English Benedictine congregation at Cambrai in 1623 as one of its first postulants. During her novitiate she was much troubled by scruples and temptations, which continued after she had made her vows, until she came under the direction of Dom Augustine *Baker. On account of her repute for sanctity she was nearly made abbess at the age of 23. She died four years later of smallpox. Her writings, which were published after her death as The Holy Practices of a Deuine Lover, or, the Sainctly Ideot's Deuotions (Paris, 1657) and Confessiones Amantis (Paris, 1658), contain affective meditations of considerable beauty and an apology for her way of prayer. See also, The Idiot.

Her Life, written by her director, Augustine Baker, was lost to sight until comparatively recent times. The first half of Baker's MS., recovered in Germany c. 1850, is in the possession of *Stanbrook Abbey, Worcs.; the whole Life, somewhat abbreviated by a copyist, has since been identified in another MS. now at *Ampleforth Abbey. The Life was first pr. by Dom Benedict Weld-Blundell in a volume entitled The Inner Life of Dame Gertrude More (London, 1911; the editor appears to have dealt rather freely with the text and, somewhat misleadingly, omitted to print Baker's name on the title-page). Modern edd. of her 'Devotions' by H. Collins (London, 1873), of the Holy Practices by H. Lane Fox, O.S.B., (ib., 1909), and of her 'Writings' by B. Weld-Blundell, O.S.B. (1911). Life by H. Collins (London, 1875).

MORE, HANNAH (1745–1833), religious writer and philanthropist. Born at Stapleton, Avon, from c. 1757 she attended a school established by her sisters in Bristol. About 1773 she came into contact with the literary circle of David Garrick (1717–79) and S. *Johnson, who encouraged her to publish plays and poems. After Garrick's death she devoted herself more to religious activities. She published a series of Sacred Dramas for the instruction of young persons in 1782 and Thoughts on the Importance of the Manners of the Great to General Society (anon.) in 1788; this last had a very wide circulation. In 1787 she became closely acquainted with W. *Wilberforce and also with J. *Newton, who became her spiritual adviser. Under Wilberforce's influence she established schools at Cheddar and in the neighbouring villages at a time when schemes of popular education were almost unprecedented; religious education was combined with a training in spinning, designed to relieve poverty. She also established friendly societies and other philanthropic organizations for the relief and education of adults. In spite of initial opposition her system of schools was finally commended by R. Beadon, Bp. of *Bath and Wells from 1802 to 1824. Four of the schools which she founded survived. Between 1793 and 1799 she wrote a large number of Tracts designed to counteract the influence of the French Revolution (collected under the title Cheap Repository Tracts). Moving to Barley Wood in 1802, she came into closer contact with the *Clapham Sect and in 1809 anonymously published Coelebs in Search of a Wife (2 vols.), the most popular of her books. Although suffering from ill-health during the last years of her life, she continued to write religious and moral treatises.

Collected ed. of her Works in 8 vols., London, 1801; revised ed., 11 vols., ib., 1830. William Roberts, Memoirs of the Life and Correspondence of Mrs. Hannah More (4 vols., 1834); Arthur Roberts (ed.), Letters of Hannah More to Zachary Macaulay (1860); selected letters ed. R. Brimley Johnson (London, 1925). Further contemporary life by H. Thompson (London, 1838); modern lives by C. M. *Yonge ('Eminent Women Series', 1888) and M. G. Jones (Cambridge, 1952, with list of 'Cheap Repository Tracts' ascribed to Mrs. More, p. 272 f.). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 414–20.

MORE, HENRY (1614–87), '*Cambridge Platonist'. Educated at Christ's College, of which he became a Fellow in 1639, he remained in Cambridge all his life, despite the fact that he was offered several rich preferments. His chief interests were theological, philosophical and ethical. Among his principal works were Antidote against Atheism (1653), Manual of Ethics (1666), Divine Dialogues (1668), and Manual of Metaphysics (1671). In these discursive writings he sought to vindicate theism and immortality against the materialism represented by T. *Hobbes. He emphasized in particular the instinctive reasonableness of Divine truth and affirmed the existence of a higher principle, 'more noble and inward than reason itself', which he termed the 'Divine Sagacity'. He held that it was possible to apprehend this higher truth only through the cultivation of a righteous disposition and a free intellect, though afterwards this intuitive instinct might be confirmed by the methods of reason. He also defended innate ideas and notions, and postulated the existence of a Spirit of Nature or 'anima mundi'. Despite his curiously superstitious leanings, he had a high reputation for learning and saintliness.

Works collected in 3 vols., fol., London, 1675–9. Modern ed. of selection of his philosophical works, with introd. and notes, by Flora I. Mackinnon (New York, 1925); philosophical poems ed. G. Bulloch (Publications of the University of Manchester, ccix; English Series, xx; 1931). Life by Richard Ward, rector of Belton (London, 1710; ed. M. F. Howard, ib., 1911). Recent studies by A. Lichtenstein (Cambridge, Mass., 1962) and S. Hutin (Studien und Materialien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, ii; 1966). J. Tulloch, Rational Theology in England in the Seventeenth Century, ii (1872), pp. 303–409; F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926), pp. 150–73. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 421–3.

MORE, St. THOMAS (1478–1535), Lord Chancellor of England. The son of Sir John More, he became a member of the household of Abp. J. Morton at the age of 13. His early study of the classics won his lifelong interest. At the desire of his father he began to study law in 1494 and was called to the bar in 1501. For three successive years he was lecturer at Furnival's Inn and in 1504 entered Parliament. About this time he felt drawn to the religious life, but finally decided that he was not called to celibacy; and he married in 1505, but without abandoning his strict manner of life and his religious practices. His house in Chelsea became a centre of intellectual life, being frequented by men like D. *Erasmus, J. *Colet, and W. *Grocyn. With the accession of *Henry VIII in 1509, his brilliant public career began. Made Under-Sheriff of London in 1510, he was sent as an envoy to Flanders in 1515 and there wrote his most famous work, the Utopia (publd. 1516). In it he described an ideal community living acc. to the natural law and practising a natural religion, with many satiric side-thrusts at contemporary abuses. In 1518 he was made Master of Requests and Privy Councillor, was knighted three years later, elected Speaker of the House of Commons in 1523, high steward of Oxford University in 1524, high steward of Cambridge University and chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in 1525, and finally, in 1529, appointed Lord Chancellor to succeed T. *Wolsey.

During these years, when the *Lutheran controversy had roused all Europe, More became involved through the need for an answer to M. *Luther's attack on Henry VIII's Assertio Septem Sacramentorum. Under the pseudonym of Gulielmus Rosseus More replied in his Responsio ad convitia Martini Lutheri (1523). Among his other controversial writings are English treatises on the veneration of saints and images and on the punishment of heretics. The turning-point in his fortunes came when he opposed the King in the matter of his divorce. Having tendered his resignation in 1532, an action that lost him almost his entire income, he lived in retirement for 18 months until, in 1534, he refused to take the oath on the Act of Succession and was confined in the Tower. Here he remained for 15 months, making his imprisonment an occasion of prayer and penance, and writing devotional books, the finest of which is the Dialogue of Comfort against Tribulation. On 1 July 1535 he was accused of high treason on the ground of having opposed the Act of Supremacy, and was beheaded on Tower Hill five days later (6 July). He was beatified by *Leo XIII in 1886 and canonized by *Pius XI in 1935. Feast day, formerly 9 July; now with J. *Fisher, 22 June. In the ASB he is commemorated on 6 July.

Eng. works ed. by his nephew William Rastell (London, 1557); Lat. works publd. at Louvain, 1565, and at Frankfurt a.M., 1689. Yale Edition of Complete Works, under the auspices of G. L. Carroll–J. B. Murray (New Haven–London, 1963 ff.). Eng. works also ed. W. E. Campbell (London, 1931 ff. [only 2 vols. publd.]). The Correspondence of Sir Thomas More, ed. Elizabeth F. Rogers (Princeton, 1947); further letters ed. H. S. Herbrüggen (Münster, 1966). The earliest Life, based on orig. documents, is that by William Roper, More's son-in-law (first pr., Paris, 1626; crit. text by Elsie V. Hitchcock, E.E.T.S., Original Series, cxcvii; 1935); other early Lives by Thomas Stapleton (Tres Thomae, Douai, 1588; Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett, 1928), Nicholas Harpsfield (d. 1575; Harleian MS. 6253; ed. E. V. Hitchcock, E.E.T.S., Original Series, clxxxvi; 1932), Cresacre More, his great-grandson [Antwerp, c. 1630], and 'Ro. Ba.', ed. E. V. Hitchcock–P. E. Hallett (E.E.T.S., Original Series, ccxxii; 1950). Modern Lives by T. E. Bridgett (London, 1891), H. *Bremond ('Les Saints', Paris, 1904), C. Hollis (London, 1934), R. W. Chambers (ib., 1935), L. Paul (ib., 1953), E. E. Reynolds (ib., 1953 and 1968), and A. Prévost ([Paris,] 1969). E. M. G. Routh, Sir Thomas More and his Friends, 1477–1535 (1934). G. Marc'Hadour, L'Univers de Thomas More. Chronologie critique de More, Érasme et leur époque (1477–1536) (De Pétrarque à Descartes, v; 1963). R. W. Gibson, St. Thomas More. A Preliminary Bibliography of his Works and of Moreana to the Year 1750 (1961). S. Lee in D.N.B., xxxviii (1894), pp. 429–49.

MORIN, GERMAIN (1861–1946), *patristic scholar. A native of Caen, in 1881 he became a Benedictine monk at Maredsous in Belgium. From 1907 to 1916, and again in his later years, he resided chiefly at Munich. He made many important original contributions to Latin patristics and liturgy, mostly in the Revue Bénédictine, and published an outstanding edition of the works of St. *Caesarius of Arles (1937–42). He also issued collections of previously unpublished sermons of St. *Jerome (1897, 1903) and of St. *Augustine (1917, 1930).

J. Madoz, S.J., 'La carrera científica de Dom G. Morin, O.S.B.' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xx (1946), pp. 487–507; P. Borella, 'Dom Germain Morin, O.S.B. (1861–1946)' in E.L., lxi (1947), pp. 55–76, with notes on Morin's writings.

MORIN, JEAN (1591–1659), *Oratorian theologian. The son of *Calvinist parents, he was converted to Catholicism in 1617 under the influence of P. de *Bérulle, became an Oratorian in the following year, and devoted his life almost wholly to studies in patristics and the text of the Bible. At the invitation of Pope *Urban VIII he spent nine months in Rome in 1639–40 as theological adviser in the matter of *orders during the attempts to reunite the E. and W. Churches. His works included De patriarcharum et primatum origine . . . atque antiqua et primigenia censurarum in clericos praxi (1626), Vetus Testamentum secundum LXX (3 vols., 1628), Exercitationes ecclesiasticae in utrumque Samaritanorum Pentateuchum (1631) and De Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (1655). A notable feature of the last-named work was its rejection of the view formerly widely held among Latin theologians that the Tradition of the *Instruments constituted the *matter of the Sacrament of Orders.

R. *Simon in Antiquitates Ecclesiae Orientalis cum Notis et Vita I. Morini (London, 1682), pp. 1–117 (hostile, Simon having then left the Oratory). P. Auvray, Cong. Orat., 'Jean Morin (1591–1659)' in R. Bibl., lxvi (1959), pp. 397–414. A. Molien in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2486–9. See also works cited under Oratorians (2).

MORISON, JAMES (1816–93), founder of the '*Evangelical Union'. Educated at Edinburgh university, he was trained for the ministry of the *United Secession Church. In 1839 he was appointed to the charge of Cabrach and in 1840 to a church at Kilmarnock. His preaching of the universal atonement of Christ and the publication of his beliefs in a short tract, The Question 'What must I do to be saved?' Answered (1840), led his teachings to be challenged as incompatible with the *Westminster Confession, and in 1841 he was expelled from the United Secession Church. In 1843, with three other ministers and nine laymen, he founded at Kilmarnock the 'Evangelical Union', and later was joined by others. In 1851 he left for Glasgow. He retired from active work in 1884.

Memorial Volume, ed. G. G[ladstone] (on occasion of Morison's ministerial jubilee; 1889). Lives by W. Adamson (London, 1898) and [W. H.] O. Smeaton (Edinburgh, 1901). A. C. Rutherford, Morisonianism examined and set aside (ed. 3, 1850), and J. B. Johnstone, Who are the Limitarians? or, Gospel-Grace versus Morisonian Exclusiveness (ed. 2, 1852). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), p. 57 f.

MORITZ, St. See Maurice, St.

MORLEY, GEORGE (1597–1684), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became rector of Mildenhall, Wilts, in 1641. He was ejected as a royalist in 1648 and was abroad until the Restoration, conducting services in many places for the Anglican exiles. Soon after his return (1660) he became Dean of Christ Church and later in the year Bp. of *Worcester. On 23 Apr. 1661 he preached the Coronation Sermon and in May took a prominent part at the *Savoy Conference. He was translated to Winchester in 1662. Despite his close associations with the High Church party, his theology was *Calvinistic. His writings, however, were short and mostly occasional. He was a great benefactor, notably to the diocese of Winchester, and rebuilt Wolvesey Palace. He was also the patron of T. *Ken, whom he made his chaplain in 1665.

A. Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), iv (1820), cols. 149–58. F. Bussby, 'An Anglican in Exile' in C.Q.R., clvi (1965), pp. 426–38; id., 'George Morley, Bishop of Worcester 1660–62' in Transactions of the Worcester Archaeological Society, N.S., xxxvii (1961), pp. 11–23; id., 'George Morley; Bishop of Winchester, 1662–1684' in C.Q.R., clviii (1967), pp. 432–42. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), pp. 74–8.

MORMONS. The popular name for the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints'. They were founded at Manchester, New York, in 1830, by Joseph Smith (1805–44), who claimed to have been given, through a revelation, the 'Book of Mormon', which is regarded as Scripture, along with the Bible. In 1843 Smith had another revelation sanctioning polygamy, and the lawfulness or otherwise of this practice is still a disputed point among Mormons. In 1844 Smith was killed by a mob. Brigham Young (1801–77) succeeded him and removed the headquarters of the sect to Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1847. The practice of polygamy brought them into conflict with the Federal Government until 1890, when the President of the Mormons advised his followers to conform to the law. Utah was admitted to the Union in 1896. In the U.S. census of 1936 they numbered just under 775,000, but by 1979 their numbers appear to have increased to over 2½ million.

The Mormons accept a modified form of the doctrine of the *Trinity. Their characteristic teaching has a strong *Adventist element; they hold that Israel will literally be gathered together and the ten tribes restored and that Christ will personally reign over a new earth. They maintain that after His resurrection Christ ministered briefly in America and that Zion will be built in the western hemisphere. They lay great stress on missionary activity, both in the U.S.A. and elsewhere, and each member of the Church is required to devote two years to this work at his own expense. They control considerable resources, since all members are expected to devote one tenth of their income to the Church.

The Book of Mormon, orig. publd. New York, 1830, ed. O. Pratt (Salt Lake City, 1903; Liverpool, 1909). The Pearl of Great Price. Being a Choice Selection from the Revelations, Translations, and Narrations of Joseph Smith (Liverpool, 1882; ed. J. E. Talmage, Salt Lake City, 1902). W. A. Linn, The Story of the Mormons from the Date of their Origin to the Year 1901 (1902); T. F. O'Dea, The Mormons (Chicago, 1957). N. F. Furniss, The Mormon Conflict 1850–1859 (New Haven, 1960), with bibl. reff. K. J. Hansen, Mormonism and the American Experience (1981).

On Joseph Smith, see Lucy Smith (mother), Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet and his Progenitors for many Generations (Liverpool, 1853). F. M. Brodie, No Man Knows my History. The Life of Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet (New York, 1946; London, 1963).

I. W. Riley in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 82–90, s.v. 'Saints, Latter Day', with analytical bibl.; T. F. O'Dea in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 525–7, s.v. 'Latter-Day Saints'.

MORNING PRAYER. See Mattins.

MORONE, GIOVANNI (1509–80), Bp. of Modena. He came of an old and distinguished family of Milan, where his father, Ieronimo Morone (d. 1529), was chancellor. In 1529 he was nominated Bp. of Modena by *Clement VII, but was prevented by the opposition of Cardinal Ippolito d'Este from taking possession of his see. After various diplomatic missions on behalf of the Pope, he became nuncio to Germany in 1536 and was present at the Diets of *Hagenau (1540), *Ratisbon (1541), and Speyer (1542). Like J. *Sadoleto, he showed considerable sympathy with the Reformers' grievances and tried to establish less embittered relations. In 1542 he was created cardinal and nominated with Paul Parisio and R. *Pole to preside over the forthcoming Council at *Trent, but though his reforming zeal did much to keep the prospect of the Council alive he did not eventually take part at the opening group of sessions. In 1557 he was incarcerated by *Paul IV in the Castel Sant'Angelo for supposed heresy on justification, the invocation of saints, and the veneration of relics. He was completely cleared of these charges under the more liberal *Pius IV, who employed him during the concluding sessions of the Council of Trent to win the goodwill of the secular powers needed to ensure the Council's success. In his later years he was employed on diplomatic missions to Genoa (1575) and Augsburg (1576), and in 1578–9, as Cardinal Protector of England, he took an active part in administering the *English College at Rome.

F. Dittrich (ed.), Nuntiaturberichte Giovanni Morones vom deutschen Königshofe, 1539, 1540 (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte. In Verbindung mit ihrem historischen Institut in Rom herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, i, Teil 1; 1892); W. Friedensburg (ed.), Nuntiatur des Morone, 1536–1538 (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, Abt. 1, Bd. ii; 1892); id. (ed.), Nuntiaturen Fabio Mignanelli's 1538–1539 und Giovanni Morone's Bischofs von Modena 1539 (ib., iii; 1893); id. (ed.), Nuntiatur Giovanni Morone's Bischofs von Modena, 1539 Juli–Oktober (ib., iv; 1893); L. Cardauns (ed.), Nuntiaturen Morones und Poggios, Legationen Farneses und Cervinis, 1539–1540 (ib., v; 1909); id. (ed.), Gesandtschaft Campegios, Nuntiaturen Morones und Poggios, 1540–1541 (ib., vi; 1910). The evidence of Alfonso Salmerone, S.J., given before the *Inquisition at Morone's trial is pr. in P. Tacchi Venturi, S.J., Storia della Compagnia di Gesù in Italia, i (1910), pp. 533–49. Modern life by N. Bernabei (Modena, 1885). G. Constant, La Légation du Cardinal Morone près l'empereur et le concile de Trent, avril–décembre, 1563 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, ccxxxiii; 1922). J. Grisar, 'Die Sendung des Kardinals Morone als Legat zum Reichstag von Augsburg 1555' in Zeitschrift des Historischen Vereins für Schwaben, lxi (1955), pp. 341–87. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., x (1911), p. 575 f.; P. Paschini in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1420–4; H. Lutz in N.C.E., ix (1967), p. 1150, all s.v. See also bibl. to Trent, Council of.

MORRIS, WILLIAM (1834–96), English artist and author. He was educated at Marlborough and Exeter College, Oxford, where contact with the *Oxford Movement stimulated his interest in the Middle Ages. In 1854 he almost became an RC. He then studied Anglican theology, but abandoning his plan of taking Orders, warmly embraced the intellectual and social movement associated with the names of T. *Carlyle, J. *Ruskin, and C. *Kingsley. Visits to N. France in 1854 and 1855 aroused his enthusiasm for French Gothic, and in 1856 he began to study under G. E. *Street. D. G. *Rossetti, however, persuaded him to give up architecture and, like his life-long friend, E. Burne-Jones, to devote his energies to painting. Meanwhile he had launched the Oxford and Cambridge Magazine (Jan. 1856), and in 1858 published a volume of poetry, The Defence of Guenevere, which was appreciated by a discriminating public. In 1861 he was one of the founders of a firm established to realize his ideal of giving artistic form to the objects of everyday life. In 1866 he began a series of romances, modelled on G. *Chaucer. The first, The Life and Death of Jason, was published in 1867; but it was the others, with the single title The Earthly Paradise (3 vols., 1868–70), that established his literary fame. In 1872 he published Love is Enough, a poem in medieval alliterative verse, in 1875 a very free translation of the Aeneid, and in 1876 the epic poem Sigurd the Volsung. In the following years he became increasingly convinced that the prerequisite of healthy art was a sound social life, and that this could be achieved only by the regeneration of society. In 1883 he became a member of the Democratic Federation and in 1884 the leader of the Socialist League, which sought to promote a social revolution and issued the periodical Commonweal. His *Dream of John Ball (1888) gives a philosophy of history. When his socialist ideas seemed destined to remain unfulfilled, he again turned to romances, dealing either with the remote past, as in The House of the Wolfings (1889), or with the distant future, as the Utopian News from Nowhere (1891). In 1890 he founded the famous Kelmscott Press, of which the finest production, the Kelmscott Chaucer, was completed in the year of his death. Morris's main ideal, to which all his various activities were devoted, was the reintegration of life and art, the unity of which he held had been broken up by the specialization and mechanization which had begun at the end of the Middle Ages.

Collected ed. of his works, 24 vols., London, 1910–15, with introd. by his daughter, May Morris, in vol. i, pp. ix–xxxi. Extracts from his writings also ed., with introd., by May Morris (2 vols., Oxford, 1936). The primary authority is the life by J. W. Mackail (2 vols., London, 1899). Modern studies by E. P. Thompson (ib., 1955), P. Thompson (ib., 1967) and P. Henderson (ib., 1967). H. H. Sparling, The Kelmscott Press and William Morris (1924). Anna A. von Helmholtz-Phelan, The Social Philosophy of William Morris (Durham, N.C., 1927). R. Watkinson, William Morris as designer (1967). T. Scott, A Bibliography of the Works of William Morris (1897). J. W. Mackail in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 197–203.

MORRISON, ROBERT (1782–1834), first Protestant Missionary in *China. He was a native of Morpeth in Northumberland, received an elementary education at Newcastle, and was apprenticed to a last-maker. In his spare time he studied theology. In 1798 he joined the *Presbyterian Church, and in 1803 went to London, where he entered the Hoxton Academy. In 1804 he became a member of the *L.M.S., went to the Missionary Academy at Gosport, and, after studying medicine and astronomy, as well as some Chinese, was ordained and sent to Canton in 1807. Here with great difficulty he secured lessons in Chinese, which could not then be taught to foreigners. In 1809 he became translator to the East India Company. In 1814 he published a Chinese grammar and a translation of the NT, based partly on an old *Jesuit version. In 1818 he finished a translation of the OT, and in 1818 he founded the Anglo-Chinese College at Malacca (charter, 1820). His chief work, the Chinese Dictionary, appeared in 6 vols. in 1821 and remained a standard work for a long time. It was followed, in 1823, by the publication of the whole Chinese Bible in 21 vols. In 1824 he went to England, but returned to Canton in 1826, where he spent the remaining years of his life. He also translated the BCP and a large number of hymns and tracts.

Memoirs of the Life and Labours of Robert Morrison, compiled by his widow, with critical notes on his Chinese works by S. Kidd (2 vols., 1839). M. Broomhall, Robert Morrison (1925). R. K. Douglas in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), p. 111 f.

MORTAL SIN. Acc. to Catholic teaching, mortal sin (cf. 1 Jn. 5. 16) consists in a deliberate act of turning away from God as man's last end by seeking his satisfaction in a creature. This frustration of God's purpose is held to involve the loss of sanctifying grace and eternal damnation. A sin in order to be mortal must be committed with a clear knowledge of its guilt and with full consent of the will, and must concern a 'grave matter'. It is required that where circumstances allow every mortal sin be confessed to a priest; but if such confession is impossible, the desire to do so and an act of contrition are sufficient for obtaining God's pardon. See also Venial Sin.

MORTALIUM ANIMOS. The Papal encyclical, issued on 6 Jan. 1928, 'On Fostering True Religious Unity', which forbade RCs to take part in such reunion movements as *Faith and Order.

Text in A.A.S., xx (1928), pp. 5–16.

MORTIFICATION. An ecclesiastical term used to describe the action of the 'killing' or 'deadening' of the flesh and its lusts (cf. Rom. 8. 13; also Col. 3. 5, Gal. 5. 24) through ascetic practices, and more particularly through the infliction of bodily discomfort and even bodily hurt. Fasting and abstention from pleasure are among the many means of mortification. Its chief aim is by breaking bad habits to lead men into better and holier ways.

MORTMAIN. A term used for land held by an ecclesiastical or other corporation that cannot be alienated. Statutes of Mortmain with the purpose of setting limitations on the Church's power of acquiring property date from an early period. In England, ch. 43 of Magna Carta as revised in 1217 attempted to deal with the problem. The drastic Statutum de viris religiosis (7 Edw. I, st. 2; 1279) forbade anyone under pain of forfeiture to buy, sell, or receive lands or tenements and thereby cause them to come into Mortmain (per quod ad manum mortuam terrae et tenementa hujusmodi deveniant quoquo modo). The laws, which met with indifferent success and were constantly evaded, were often re-enacted and altered. Of more recent statutes, that of 1736 imposing restrictions on the devising of property to ecclesiastical uses is commonly known as the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. II, c. 36). The law of Mortmain was repealed by the Charities Act 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. II, c. 58, s. 38).

Text of the third issue of Magna Carta (1217), ch. 43, is repr. in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Select Charters and other Illustrations of English Constitutional History (ed. 9, by H. W. C. Davis, 1913), p. 343; that of the Mortmain Act of 1279, with introd., ib., pp. 450–2; Eng. tr. of the latter in Gee–Hardy, p. 81 f. (No. xxviii). L. Shelford, A Practical Treatise on the Law of Mortmain and Charitable Uses and Trusts (1826), esp. pp. 1–266, with Eng. tr. of the relevant statutes in appendix. T. F. T. Plucknett, Legislation of Edward I (Ford Lectures, 1947; 1949), pp. 94–102. K. L. Wood-Legh, Studies in Church Life under Edward III (1934), esp. pp. 60–88 ('Alienations in Mortmain'). G. Gross, 'Mortmain in Medieval Boroughs' in American Historical Review, xii (1907), pp. 733–42; Helena M. Chew, 'Mortmain in Medieval London' in E.H.R., lx (1945), pp. 1–15. On more recent legislation, O. D. Tudor, On Charities (ed. 5, by H. G. Carter–F. M. Crashaw, 1929), pp. 413–72, with texts of the 1888, 1891, and 1892 Acts. W. Kahl, Die deutschen Amortisationsgesetze (1879). C. W. Sloane in C.E., x (1911), pp. 579–82, s.v.; G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 377, s.v. On mortmain in France, E. Magnin in D.D.C., i (1935), cols. 468–71, s.v. 'Amortissement', with bibl.

MORTON, THOMAS (1564–1659), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at *York and Halifax and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1586 and taught logic for several years. In 1598 he became rector of Long Marston, near York, and later Dean of *Gloucester (1606), Dean of *Winchester (1609), Canon of York (1610), Bp. of *Chester (1616), of *Lichfield and Coventry (1618), and of Durham (1632). On the abolition of episcopacy in 1646 he was deprived and lived for the rest of his life in retirement. He was a well-known anti-Roman controversialist, among his numerous writings being Apologia Catholica (1605), prob. written with the assistance of J. *Donne; A Catholic Appeal (1609); Of the Institution of the Sacrament of the Blessed Body and Blood of Christ (1631); and De Eucharistia Controversiae Decisio (1640).

Funeral Sermon by J. Barwick, Dean of St. Paul's, with Life of Morton appended (London, 1660). Another Life 'begun by R. B., Secretary to his Lordship [i.e. Richard Baddeley] . . . and finished by J. N., D.D., his Lordship's Chaplain [Joseph Naylor]' (York, 1669). P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), No. 206. R. B. Prosser in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), pp. 160–6.

MOSCHUS, JOHN (c. 550–619), 'Eukratas', spiritual writer. In c. 575 he retired from the world to the monastery of St. Theodosius, near *Jerusalem. Later he journeyed widely, visiting or settling at many notable centres of monasticism, among them Egypt, Mt. *Sinai, *Antioch, *Cyprus, and Rome. His 'Pratum Spirituale' (Λειμών, i.e. 'The Meadow') contains a large collection of anecdotes on the monastic life, derived from his personal experience and from communications of others. The book became extremely popular as a devotional manual and its text was continually added to and revised.

Gk. text, ed. by F. *Ducaeus in Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, ii (1624), pp. 1057–1169, and J. B. *Cotelerius, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, ii (Paris, 1681), pp. 341–456; supplemental chapters from MS. Par. Reg. 2464, pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvii. 2851–3112; Lat. tr. by St. Ambrose *Traversari, orig. publd. Venice, 1475, repr. in PL, lxxiv. 119–240. Fr. tr., by M. J. Rouët de Journel, S.J., with introd. and notes (S.C., xii; 1946). N. H. Baynes, 'The Pratum Spirituale' in O.C.P., xiii (1937), pp. 404–14; E. Mioni, 'Il Pratum Spirituale di Giovanni Mosco', ib., xvii (1951), pp. 61–4. E. Mihevc-Gabrovec, Études sur la Syntaxe de Ioannes Moschos (Ljubljana, 1960). H. Chadwick, 'John Moschus and his friend Sophronius the Sophist' in J.T.S., N.S., xxv (1974), pp. 41–74. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 131–5.

MOSES, the Founder and Lawgiver of Israel. Acc. to the *Pentateuchal narrative, he was born in Egypt at a time when Hebrew male children were under sentence of drowning and owed his life to being hidden in a basket and rescued by Pharaoh's daughter (Ex. 2. 1–10). After living the life of a shepherd in the desert for forty years, he received a Divine commission to rescue the Hebrews from the bondage of Egypt (Ex. 3). After much opposition from Pharaoh, which was met by the infliction of the ten plagues on the Egyptians, on the night of the *Passover Moses led the people out of Egypt (7–12). During the journey across the desert they frequently rebelled against Moses, but by his mediation they were given *manna for food as well as the Ten *Commandments. On reaching the Desert of Paran, Moses dispatched spies to the Promised Land. When exaggerated reports of the strength of the inhabitants were brought back, the Israelites again turned against Moses and incurred the Divine sentence that they should wander in the desert for forty years. Later Moses and *Aaron, because of their unbelief, were told that they would not enter the Promised Land (Num. 20. 12). Moses, however, was granted a sight of it from Mt. *Pisgah. Shortly afterwards he blessed the tribes of Israel (Deut. 33) and died on Mt. Nebo in Moab.

Acc. to the traditional view (nowhere, however, implied in the Pentateuch itself and not easily compatible with its record of Moses' own death), the whole narrative was the work of Moses and therefore self-authenticating. Modern scholars are almost unanimous in finding interwoven in these Books a number of independent documents of widely differing dates and varying degrees of historicity (see Pentateuch). Opinions on the reliability of the account, however, range widely from those which would regard the narrative about Moses as substantially true to those which deny the historical existence of Moses altogether (G. Hölscher, E. Meyer). The great majority of Biblical scholars would at least agree that some such commanding figure as Moses is presupposed by the unity of the Israelite tribes and that it is highly unlikely that the Hebrew people would have sought their beginnings in bondage unless such had been the fact. The dates assigned to Moses vary widely (see art. Exodus).

In Christian tradition Moses takes a prominent place. In the Gospels he appears at the Transfiguration Scene as the Representative of the Law (Matt. 17. 3 and parallels). In Heb. 3. 1–6 his mission is compared on a lower plane with that of Christ. A Jewish tradition preserved in the 'Assumption of *Moses', acc. to which St. *Michael and the Devil contested for the body of Moses, is alluded to in Ep. of Jude (ver. 9). In later tradition he became the subject of many, often extravagant, legends.

Besides commentaries on the Pentateuch and histories of Israel, P. Volz, Mose (Tübingen, 1907; ed. 2, 1932); H. Gressmann, Mose und seine Zeit (1913); E. Sellin, Mose und seine Bedeutung für die israelitisch-jüdische Religionsgeschichte (1922). M. Buber, Moses (Oxford, 1946); E. Auerbach, Moses (Amsterdam, 1953 [in German]). H. Cazelles and others, Moïse, l'homme de l'alliance (special issue of Cahiers Sioniens, 1955). H. Schmid, Mose. Überlieferung und Geschichte (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., cx; 1968). G. Widengren, 'What do we know about Moses?' in J. I. Durham–J. R. Porter (edd.), Proclamation and Presence. Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies (1970), pp. 21–47.

MOSES, The Assumption of (Ἀνάληψις or Διαθήκη Μωυσέως). A composite Jewish work, written in Hebrew or Aramaic during the first half of the 1st cent. A.D. It contained a speech of *Moses to *Joshua, prophesying the history of the Israelite nation, and probably also an account of Moses' death and taking up into heaven. It appears to have been the work of a *Pharisee who wished to protest against the rapid secularization of his party and recall it to the Law and the old ideals. It was soon translated into Greek, and a few phrases of this edition are probably preserved in Acts 7. 36 and Jude 9, 16, 18. Part of a Latin version, made from the Greek, survives; but for the rest, apart from one or two brief fragments, the work has been lost.

Lat. text discovered and publd. by A. M. Ceriani (ed.), Monumenta Sacra et Profana, i (Milan, 1861), pp. 55–64. Crit. ed. by R. H. *Charles, The Assumption of Moses translated from the Latin Sixth Century MS. (1897). Facsimile of Ceriani's text, with Fr. tr., notes and full introd., by E. M. Laperrousaz (Semitica, xix; 1970). R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 407–24. G. Hölscher, 'Über die Entstehung der "Himmelfahrt Moses" ' in Z.N.T.W., xvii (1916), pp. 108–27 and 149–58. G. Kuhn, 'Zur Assumptio Mosis' in Z.A.T.W., xliii (1925), pp. 124–9. K. Haacker, 'Assumptio Mosis—eine samaritanische Schrift?' in Theologische Zeitschrift, xxv (1969), pp. 385–405. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4; 1909), pp. 294–305, with bibl. J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 403–9, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament, 6', with bibl.

MOSES BAR KEPHA (c. 815–903), *Jacobite Bishop. A native of Balad in Mesopotamia, he was educated at a near-by monastery. He was elected Bp. of Mosul c. 863, and held office for about forty years, taking the episcopal name of Severus. He is said to have written commentaries on most Books of the Bible; parts of those on Gen., the Gospels and the Pauline Epistles survive. He also wrote a number of homilies and treatises on liturgical subjects which are largely still unpublished.

De Paradiso, Lat. tr. only, by A. Masius (Antwerp, 1569); Lat. tr. repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xci, cols. 481–608; Exposition on the Liturgy ed. R. H. *Connolly–H. W. Codrington, Two Commentaries on the Jacobite Liturgy (1913), with Eng. tr. pp. 24–90; part of his Hexaemeron ed., with Germ. tr., by J. Bakoš in Archiv Orientální, ii. (1930), pp. 327–61, 460–91. Germ. tr. of De Anima by O. Braun, Moses bar Kepha und sein Buch von der Seele (Freiburg i.Br., 1891). R. A. Aytoun, 'The Mysteries of Baptism by Moses bar Kepha compared with the Odes of Solomon' in Expositor, 8th Series, ii (1911), pp. 338–58, incl. Eng. tr. of text. J. M. Vosté, O.P., 'L'Introduction de Mose bar Kepa aux Psaumes de David' in R. Bibl., xxxviii (1929), pp. 214–28. J. Bakoš, 'Quellenanalyse der Zoologie aus dem Hexaëmeron des Môšê bar Kêp(h)â' in Archiv Orientální, vi (1934), pp. 267–71. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 281 f.

MOSES BEN MAIMON. See Maimonides.

MOSES OF CHORENE, *Armenian Christian scholar. According to Armenian tradition, he was a disciple, and perhaps also a nephew, of St. *Mesrob, and thus belonged to the latter part of the 5th cent. But the 'History of Armenia', with which his name is esp. associated, is in parts at least a much later work, and the balance of more recent critical opinion puts Moses in the 8th cent. The 'History' was written with an avowedly patriotic purpose; and though its contents seem much less reliable than older scholars used to suppose, it remains a work of the first importance for the primitive history of Armenia, not least through its incorporation of many literary remains of the pre-Christian period. Moses was also the author of a 'Geography', which, however, is little more than a revision of that of Pappus. Other writings attributed to him include a treatise on rhetoric, a 'Letter on the Assumption of the BVM', a homily on Christ's Transfiguration, and a collection of hymns used in Armenian Church worship.

Moses' collected works (Arm. text) publd. by the *Mechitarists of Venice in 1843 and 1865; the 'History' at Amsterdam, 1695, and again at Venice, 1881. Lat. tr. of History by W. and G. *Whiston (London, 1736); Eng. tr. by R. W. Thomson (Cambridge, Mass., 1978). A. Carrière, Moïse de Khoren et les généalogies patriarcales (1891); id., Nouvelles Sources de Moïse de Khoren (1893–4) and other works all defending Moses not before 7th–8th cents. F. C. *Conybeare, 'The Date of Moses of Khoren' in B.Z., x (1901), pp. 489–504 (defends authenticity of History). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 189–95. P. N. Akinian in P.W., Suppl., vi (1935), cols. 534–41.

MOSES MAIMONIDES. See Maimonides.

MOSHEIM, JOHANN LORENZ VON (1694–1755), ecclesiastical historian and divine. Educated at the university of Kiel, in 1723 he became professor of theology at Helmstedt and in 1747 at Göttingen, in the founding of which university he himself had taken an important part. His historical work was marked by a hitherto unprecedented objectivity and penetration and he may be considered the first of modern ecclesiastical historians. His Institutiones historiae ecclesiasticae (1726; Eng. tr. by J. Murdock, 1841) went through many editions and revisions. He was also an excellent preacher. His numerous writings include Sittenlehre der heiligen Schrift (5 vols., 1735–53), a Ketzer-Geschichte (2 vols., 1746–48), and De rebus Christianorum ante Constantinum Magnum Commentarii (1753).

K. Heussi, Die Kirchengeschichtsschreibung J. L. von Mosheims (1904); id., J. L. Mosheim (1906). N. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 502–6, with bibl.

MOSLEMS. See Islam.

MOSQUE OF OMAR. See Dome of the Rock.

MOTET. Term of uncertain origin (perhaps from the French mot, 'word', or Lat. motus, 'movement'). One of the most important forms of polyphonal chant. Probably of secular origin, it came into liturgical worship from the beginning of the 13th cent., either following or replacing the *Offertory at Mass. In its classical form it is founded on the Gregorian tones of the Mass to which it belongs. At first it was almost entirely restricted to France, the first known examples being in Philip de Vitry's 'Ars Compositionis de Motetis' (c. 1320). From c. 1400 it became popular also in other European countries, esp. Italy and Germany, and in England. From the end of the 15th cent. onwards the composition of motets made much progress and the development reached its height at the end of the 16th cent. with Orlando di Lasso, G. P. Palestrina, and others. In the later 17th cent. instrumental accompaniment was introduced, a practice which continued till the 20th cent., when a return to the older traditions was encouraged by a motu proprio of Pope *Pius X (1910).

H. Leichtentritt, Geschichte der Motette (1908). H. C. Colles in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), v (1954), pp. 912–15, with bibl.

MOTHER OF GOD. See Theotokos.

MOTHERING SUNDAY. The Fourth Sunday in Lent, also known as Laetare Sunday. The name has been referred (1) to the custom in some parts of England of paying a visit to one's mother on this day; or (2) to the practice of visiting the cathedral or mother church on this day; or (3) to the words occurring in the traditional *epistle for the day, 'Jerusalem . . . which is the mother of us all' (Gal. 4. 26).

MOTHERS' UNION, The. An organization of women in the C of E, which aims at upholding 'the sanctity of marriage' and developing in mothers a sense of responsibility in the training of their children. The Mothers' Union was founded in 1876, originally as a parochial organization, by Mary Elizabeth Sumner (née Heywood, 1828–1921), wife of George Henry Sumner (son of C. R. *Sumner), then rector of old Alresford, Hants. In 1885, after a speech by Mary Sumner at the Portsmouth Church Congress, the Bp. of *Winchester (Harold Browne) and the Bp. of Newcastle (Ernest Wilberforce) launched the Mothers' Union as a diocesan organization. The movement spread rapidly, the first branch overseas being founded in 1897. In 1882 the first number of the Mothers' Union Journal was issued (superseded in 1954 by Home and Family), to be followed in 1891 by Mothers in Council (edited until 1901 by C. M. *Yonge), which continued until 1951. In 1895 a Central Council was formed; this body framed a constitution and formulated the Union's objectives, which include the organization in every place of a band of mothers to unite in prayer and 'seek by their own example to lead their families in purity and holiness of life'. In 1909, after the Gorell Commission on Marriage, the Mothers' Union added to their object of upholding the sanctity of marriage an affirmation of 'the Christian principle of the permanence of the relationship between husband and wife'. The union was incorporated in 1910 and granted a royal charter in 1926. In 1930 the first Overseas Conference was held, with 38 diocesan Presidents and 400 members from overseas. The Mothers' Union now operates in 190 dioceses of the Anglican Communion, has 16,000 branches and over 450,000 members, as well as maintaining over a hundred workers overseas. It has long been customary to admit spinsters to associate membership, and in provinces where the Canons on Marriage have been revised, the original membership rule about divorce has been waived. Since 1925 the headquarters of the Mothers' Union has been at Mary Sumner House in Tufton Street, Westminster.

Mrs. Horace Porter, Mary Sumner. Her Life and Work (Winchester, 1921; ed. 2, London, 1928). Joyce Coombs, George and Mary Sumner. Their Life and Times (1965), esp. pp. 81–106; [W.] O. Chadwick, History of the Victorian Church, ii (1970), p. 192 f.

MOTT, JOHN RALEIGH (1865–1955), American *Methodist. After studying at Upper Iowa and Cornell universities, he became student secretary of the International Committee of the *Y.M.C.A. (1888), chairman of the executive committee of the Student Volunteer Movement, and then in 1895 general secretary of the World Student Christian Federation, for whose formation he was largely responsible. In 1901 he was appointed assistant general secretary of the Y.M.C.A. He is chiefly known for his zealous propaganda on behalf of missions, based upon the watchword 'The Evangelization of the World in our Generation', and he acted as chairman of the committee which called the first International Missionary Conference at *Edinburgh in 1910. His interest in the *Ecumenical Movement may be dated from this time; he took part in the *'Faith and Order' Conference at *Lausanne in 1927 and was Vice-President of the Edinburgh Conference in 1937. In the same year he was chairman of the '*Life and Work' Conference at Oxford. He played a considerable part in the foundation of the *World Council of Churches and was elected Honorary President at its first meeting in 1948. His numerous books, relating to missionary work, include The Evangelization of the World in this Generation (1900), The Present-Day Summons to the World Mission of Christianity (1932) and his collected Addresses and Papers (6 vols., New York, 1946–7).

B. Mathews, John R. Mott. World Citizen (1934). R. C. Mackie and others, Layman Extraordinary. John R. Mott 1865–1955 (1965), with extracts from his writings.

MOTU PROPRIO (Lat. 'on his own impulse'). A letter, addressed by the Pope either to the Church at large or to some part of it or to some particular persons, which has been written on his personal initiative and bears his personal signature.

F. Grat, Étude sur le Motu Proprio des Origines au Début du XVIe Siècle (Melun, 1945).

MOULE, HANDLEY CARR GLYN (1841–1920), Bp. of *Durham. He had a brilliant career at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1865. After a period as a master at Marlborough College (1865–7) he was ordained at *Ely and acted for some years as his father's curate at Fordington, Dorset, returning temporarily to Cambridge from 1873 to 1877. On the establishment of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, in 1881 as a theological college on *Evangelical principles, Moule became its first Principal and became a leading influence for Evangelicalism at Cambridge. In 1899 he was elected Norrisian Professor of Divinity and in 1901 he succeeded B. F. *Westcott as Bp. of Durham, where he continued to promote Evangelical ideals. His writings include Outlines of Christian Doctrine (1889), Veni Creator (1890), Charles Simeon (1892), Philippian Studies (1897), Colossian Studies (1898), Ephesian Studies (1900), and Christus Consolator (1915).

J. B. Harford (ed.), Letters and Poems of Bishop Moule [1922]. Life by J. B. Harford–F. C. Macdonald (London [1922]). J. Baird, The Spiritual Unfolding of Bishop H. C. G. Moule [1926]. W. *Lock in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 390 f.

MOULTON, JAMES HOPE (1863-1917), classical, Iranian and NT scholar. The eldest son of W. F. *Moulton, he was appointed tutor at the Wesleyan College at Didsbury, Manchester, in 1902 and Greenwood professor of Hellenistic Greek and Indo-European Philology at Manchester University in 1908. In 1915 he went to India to lecture on and pursue his studies of *Zoroastrianism. He lost his life through submarine action on the return journey in 1917.

In the field of the NT he did important work, esp. in bringing to bear on NT Greek the new evidence from non-literary papyri (the significance of which he had come to understand through the writings of A. *Deissmann). His brilliant 'Prolegomena' (vol. i, 1906) to his Grammar of New Testament Greek embodied many of his conclusions. In conjunction with G. Milligan he began in 1914 the issue of his important Vocabulary of the Greek Testament, illustrated from the Papyri and other non-literary Sources (completed in 1930). His other works included Early Zoroastrianism (*Hibbert Lectures for 1912; 1913). The second vol. of his Grammar of New Testament Greek (vol. ii: Morphology) was posthumously ed. by W. F. Howard (1929); the work was completed by a third vol. (Syntax) by N. Turner (1963).

Life by his brother [W. Fiddian Moulton] (London, 1919). Short sketch by H. K. Moulton (son) and others (ib., 1963). A. S. *Peake in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 391 f.

MOULTON, WILLIAM FIDDIAN (1835–98), Biblical student. Having entered the *Wesleyan ministry in 1858, he was at once appointed to a teaching post at Richmond College, which he held till 1874. In the latter year he became the first headmaster of the Leys School, Cambridge. He was one of the foremost authorities on NT Greek in his day. In 1870 he became secretary of one of the NT committees occupied on the *RV, and work in connexion with the RV filled a great part of his life. His published writings include a fresh Eng. trans. of J. G. B. *Winer's Grammar of NT Greek (1870) and, in conjunction with A. S. Geden, a Concordance (1897) to the Greek NT.

Memoir by W. Fiddian Moulton (son), with chapter on his biblical work and opinions by J. H. *Moulton (London, 1899). Shorter sketch by G. G. Findlay (ib., 1910). G. Le G. Norgate in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), p. 204 f.

MOUNT CARMEL. See Carmel, Mount.

MOUNT OF OLIVES. See Olives, Mount of.

MOVABLE FEASTS. Annual ecclesiastical feasts which do not fall on a fixed date in the secular calendar, but vary acc. to certain determined rules. Thus *Easter Day is the first Sunday after the ('ecclesiastical') full moon between 21 Mar. and 18 Apr., and a number of other feasts fall at a fixed number of days or weeks from Easter. *Advent Sunday is the Sunday falling on or nearest to 30 November.

MOWINCKEL, SIGMUND OLAF PLYTT (1884–1965), OT scholar. He was born at Kjerringøy and educated at the Cathedral School in Bergen and at the Universities of Oslo, Copenhagen, Marburg, and Giessen. His entire teaching career was spent in the University of Oslo, where he was successively dosent (1917–22), professor extraordinarius (1922–33), and professor ordinarius (1933–54). Of his many contributions to Old Testament study, the most noteworthy are related to the Psalms. In his Psalmenstudien (6 parts, 1921–4) the influence of H. *Gunkel's literary classification of the Psalms, and of V. Grønbech's interpretation of the thought and worship of 'primitive' peoples, is evident. The most influential of Mowinckel's hypotheses is that the Psalms which celebrate *Yahweh's kingship are parts of the liturgies of a pre-exilic festival in which the enthronement of Yahweh was annually celebrated, and that its themes provided the pattern of the later eschatological hope. He reiterated his views on the Psalter, with some modifications, in Offersang og sangoffer (1951, Eng. tr. The Psalms in Israel's Worship, 2 vols., 1962). In Han som kommer (1951, Eng. tr. He That Cometh, 1956) some of the results of his work on the Psalms are combined with those of his studies of prophecy (notably the problem of the Servant of Yahweh) and of the Son of Man to form a comprehensive survey of the *Messianic hope. He also made important contributions to the study of Ezra-Nehemiah—Statholderen Nehemia (1916), Ezra den skriftlærde (1916), Studien zu dem Buche Ezra-Nehemia (3 vols.; 1964–5), and to the problem of the *Hexateuch—Zur Frage nach dokumentarischen Quellen in Josua 13–19 (1946), Tetrateuch–Pentateuch–Hexateuch (1964), Erwägungen zur Pentateuch Quellenfrage (1964). Two posthumously published works are devoted to the early history of Palestine and of Israel—Palestina før Israel (1965) and Israels opphav og eldste historie (1967). He was responsible for the greater part of a translation (with commentary) of the Old Testament into Norwegian. His great academic achievement was combined with much practical service.

Lists of his works to 1944 in Norsk Teologisk Tidsskrift, xlv (1944), pp. 245–63, and from 1944 to 1964, ib., lxv (1964), pp. 261–77. D. R. Ap-Thomas, 'An Appreciation of Sigmund Mowinckel's Contribution to Biblical Studies' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxv (1966), pp. 315–25; A. S. Kapelrud, 'Sigmund Mowinckel and Old Testament Study' in Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, v (1966–7), pp. 4–29.

MOZARABIC CHANT. The music of the Mozarabic rite has been preserved in many MSS. from the 9th–11th cents., which enshrine chant possibly dating back to the 6th or 7th cent. The neums in which it is written, however, cannot now be read, because the Mozarabic chant had been ousted in most places by the Gregorian by 1089, before the four-line staff had come into use. At San Millán de la Cogilla 21 pieces, mostly from the Office of the Dead, survived and have been printed by C. Rojo and G. Prado. The music shows no outstanding difference in style from the Gregorian, though the early-10th-cent. Antiphoner of León suggests that it was rather more florid.

Traditional Mozarabic chant for the Ordinary of the Mass was printed in the Missal publd. by *Ximénez in 1500, but it is suspect of having been 'gregorianized' and is printed in a very debased style of notation. Comparison of the De manu inferni in Millán and Ximénez, however, reveals variants no greater than would normally be expected after a lapse of at least four centuries. Pater noster from the Ximénez Missal is clearly a primitive form in which the people reply 'Amen' to each clause.

C. Rojo, O.S.B.–G. Prado, O.S.B. (edd.), El canto mozárabe. Estudio histórico-crítico de su antigüedad y estado actual (Barcelona, 1929). The León Antiphoner was first publd. by the Benedictines of Silos at León in 1928; also ed. by L. Brou, O.S.B., and J. Vives (Monumenta Hispaniae Sacra, Serie Liturgica, V. i; Barcelona–Madrid, 1959); facsimile (ib., V. ii, 1953). G. Prado, O.S.B., 'Mozarabic Melodics' in Speculum, iii (1928), pp. 218–38. L. Brou, O.S.B., 'L'Antiphonaire wisigothique et l'antiphonaire grégorien au début du viiie siècle. Essai de musicologie comparée' in Annuario Musical, v (1950), pp. 3–10; id., 'L'Alleluia dans la liturgie mozarabe. Étude liturgico-musicale d'après les manuscrits de chant', ib., vi (1951), pp. 3–90; id., 'Notes de paléographie musicale mozarabe', ib., vii (1952), pp. 51–76; id., 'Le Joyau des antiphonaires latins. Le Manuscrit 8 des archives de la cathédrale de León' in Archivos Leoneses, viii (1954), pp. 7–114, and other articles in this issue. C. W. Brockett, Jr., Antiphons, Responsories and other Chants of the Mozarabic Rite (Musicological Studies, xv; New York [1968]). H. Anglès in A. Hughes, O.S.B. (ed.), Early Medieval Music up to 1300 (New Oxford History of Music, ii; 1954), pp. 81–91. R. G. Pauly in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 60–62, s.v. 'Mozarabic Rite, Chants of the'.

MOZARABIC RITE. The conventional name given to the liturgical forms which were in use in the Iberian Peninsula from the earliest times until the 11th cent. It is, however, a misnomer, for the term 'Mozarabic' is correctly applied only to that part of Spain which fell under Moorish rule after 711; but alternative names, such as Visigothic or Old Spanish, have not won general acceptance.

The early history of the rite is very obscure. From the conversion of the Visigothic King *Recared (589) until the Moorish revolt (711) we have the evidence of frequent national councils and of the writings of the Spanish fathers *Isidore (esp. his De ecclesiasticis officiis), *Leander, *Ildefonsus and others. Much attention was then paid to the establishment and promulgation of a uniform rite for the Mass and for the Offices. The Fourth Council of *Toledo, for instance, in 633 decreed that there should be unus . . . ordo orandi atque psallendi . . ., unus modus in missarum solemnitatibus, unus in vespertinis matutinisque officiis (can. 2). The practice of composing Masses, notably by three bishops of Toledo, Eugenius II (646–57), Ildefonsus (657–67) and Julian (680–90), led to increasing elaboration and prolixity in accordance with the literary taste of the day. The only extant service-book dating from the period before the Moorish invasion is the Verona Liber orationalis, but it is probable that the manuscripts of the 10th and 11th cents. faithfully preserve, for the most part, the essential features of the 7th-cent. liturgy.

The replacement of the Mozarabic by the Roman rite was a consequence of the Christian reconquest of Spain. The Cluniac monks brought the Roman rite with them into Catalonia. In Navarre it was introduced into the abbey of San Salvador at Leyre in 1067, in Aragon into the abbey of San Juan de la Peña in 1071. At the Council of Burgos in 1080 it was prescribed for the kingdoms of Castile and León. On the reconquest of Toledo (1085) there was resistance to the abolition of the Mozarabic rite and it was allowed to remain in use in the six old parishes of the city. Its preservation in modern times is due to Francisco *Ximenes de Cisneros, who became Abp. of Toledo in 1495. He founded the Corpus Christi chapel in the Cathedral and endowed chaplains to use the Mozarabic rite. He also caused a Missal and a Breviary to be printed (1500 and 1502). In recent times efforts have been made to re-introduce the rite more widely. A Mozarabic Mass was celebrated during the Second *Vatican Council.

The Mozarabic rite has close affinities with the *Gallican, from which many scholars hold that it is derived, although some would admit the possibility of African influence. There are also elements, such as the Procession of the Oblations, which appear to have been introduced direct from Byzantium, probably in the 6th cent. The rite is characterized by the use of formulas varying from day to day according to the calendar. A number of other features distinguish the rite. There are three lessons: the Prophecy, usually from the OT, as well as Epistle and Gospel. The dismissal of Catechumens and penitents before the Mass proper began was retained. There followed a chant called the 'Sacrificium', and two prayers, the 'Missa' and the 'Alia'. The first of these is described as 'a prayer of admonition (oratio admonitionis) addressed to the people that they may be stirred up to pray earnestly unto God'. The 'illatio', corresponding to the *Preface, differed at every Mass and was long and elaborate. The prayer 'post Pridie' is sometimes a form of epiclesis. The *fraction of the Host was made into seven or into nine (acc. to the Missal of Ximenez) pieces, representing the mysteries of the life of Christ, a practice also found in the *Celtic rites of the 10th and 11th cents.

In Spain there was a distinction, which has entirely disappeared in the Roman rite, between the secular (ordo cathedralis) and monastic Offices. The secular Office consisted only of *Vespers and *Mattins, with selected Psalms or portions of Psalms, which were sung, with refrains, as Responds and Antiphons. The monastic Office in its developed form appears to have had twelve Offices by day and twelve by night.

The principal service-books were the Psalter; Liber canticorum; Liber hymnorum; Antiphonarium, comprising antiphons and responds both for the Mass and for the Offices; Liber orationum, containing collects for the Offices; Liber missarum, corresponding to the *Sacramentary; and Liber ordinum, containing occasional Offices, Ordination rites and Votive Masses. These books are of an earlier type than the combination or mixture of elements found in the Roman Missal and Breviary. The process by which the printed Missale mixtum and Breviarium of Ximenes were compiled is still obscure, but these printed books preserve ancient texts not otherwise known, and also show the infiltration of the Roman rite.

The early Irish service books contain borrowings from the Mozarabic rite ('Spanish symptoms'), which most scholars believe to have been imported direct from Spain to Ireland. The Roman books include Mozarabic material in the prayers of the *Rituale for the dying and dead, which came in by way of the supplement *Hucusque to the Gregorian Sacramentary. At a later date the Mozarabic 'benedictio fontis' was used in compiling the *Baptismal Office of the 1549 BCP.

The editio princeps of the Missal was the Missale Mixtum secundum Regulam Beati Isidori, dictum Mozarabes (Toledo, 1500). Later ed. by A. Lesley, S.J., Rome, 1755; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxv. Editio princeps of the Breviary was the Breviarium secundum Regulam Beati Isidori (Toledo, 1502); also ed. F. A. Lorenzana, Madrid, 1775; repr., Rome, 1804; also in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxvi. M. Férotin, O.S.B. (ed.), Le Liber Ordinum en usage dans l'Église wisigothique et mozarabe de l'Espagne du cinquième au onzième siècle (Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica, v; Paris, 1904); id. (ed.), Le Liber Mozarabicus Sacramentorum et les manuscrits mozarabes (ib., vi; 1912); J. P. Gilson (ed.), The Mozarabic Psalter MS., British Museum, Add. 30851 (H.B.S., xxx; 1905); J. Vives–J. Claveras (edd.), Oracional Visigótico (Monumenta Hispaniae Sacra, Serie Liturgica, i; 1941); J. Pérez de Urbel, O.S.B.–A. Gonzalez y Ruiz-Zorrilla (edd.), Liber Commicus (ib., ii–iii; 1950–55). W. C. Bishop, The Mozarabic and Ambrosian Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, xv; 1924), pp. 1–97. W. S. Porter, The Gallican Rite, ed. F. L. Cross (1958). M. Ramos, S.J., Oratio Admonitionis. Contribución al estudio de la Antigua Misa Española (Biblioteca Teológica Granadina, viii; 1964). J. F. Rivera Recio (ed.), Estudios sobre la liturgia mozarabe (Toledo, 1965), incl. list of primary sources, with places of publ., by J. M. Pinell, O.S.B., pp. 109–64, and general bibl. by J. M. Mora Ontalba, pp. 165–87. T. C. Akeley, O.G.S., Christian Initiation in Spain c. 300–1100 (1967). Works by W. S. Porter listed by L. Brou, O.S.B., in E.L., lxi (1947), p. 280 f. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 390–491, s.v.; J. Pinell, O.S.B., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 1796–1825, s.v., with extensive bibl. See also works cited under Mozarabic Chant.

MOZLEY, JAMES BOWLING (1813–78), post-*Tractarian theologian. Educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where his brother, Thomas (q.v.), became a Fellow, he was himself elected to a fellowship at Magdalen in 1840. From the first he had taken a keen interest in the *Oxford Movement, and after the secession of J. H. *Newman in 1845 was for a time one of its foremost representatives in Oxford. Largely under the influence of the *Gorham case, he was led to modify his Tractarian beliefs in a more moderate direction, though he continued a strong Churchman. His books include On the Augustinian Doctrine of Predestination (1855) and On the Primitive Doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration (1856); but much of his most brilliant writing is to be found in his essays and articles, collected as Essays Historical and Theological (2 vols., 1878). His *Bampton Lectures on 'Miracles' (1865) were acclaimed a masterly contribution to a then very pressing issue. From 1871 till his death he was Regius professor of divinity at Oxford. From 1856 he also held the living of Old Shoreham in W. Sussex, where he died on 4 Jan. 1878.

Collected ed. of University and other Sermons (1876). Mozley's Essays Historical and Theological (2 vols., 1878; with biogr. introd., i, pp. xi–xlviii), and Letters (1885; also with biogr. introd. pp. 1–30), both ed. by his sister, Anne Mozley (1809–91). His fine sermon on 'The Reversal of Human Judgment', repr. in H. H. *Henson (ed.), Selected English Sermons ('The World's Classics', 1939), pp. 279–304. W. A. Greenhill in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), pp. 249–51.

MOZLEY, THOMAS (1806–93), divine and journalist. The brother of J. B. *Mozley, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (where J. H. *Newman was his tutor), and elected a Fellow of the College in 1829. He was ordained in 1831, and held a succession of parochial appointments. At the outset of the Tractarian Movement he was a keen supporter and wrote extensively for its organ, the British Critic, himself assuming the editorship from 1841 till its cessation in 1843. From 1844 onwards he was a constant contributor to The Times newspaper. His writings include Reminiscences, chiefly of Oriel College and the Oxford Movement (2 vols., 1882), valuable for the light it throws on many aspects of the *Oxford Movement, and Letters from Rome on the Occasion of the [*Vatican] Council, 1869–1870 (2 vols., 1891). Though a gifted writer, Mozley was apt to be inaccurate in his record of facts.

There is no Life, but much is to be gleaned from scattered reff. to him in the literature of the Oxford Movement. A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., xxxix (1894), p. 251 f., s.v.

MOZETTA. A short cape-like garment to which until 1969 a small hood was attached, worn by the Pope, cardinals, exempt abbots, abbots-general, and other privileged dignitaries. It came into use in the later Middle Ages. Its colour depends on the office of the wearer and the occasion on which it is worn.

Braun, L.G., p. 357 f.

MUGGLETONIANS. A sect founded c. 1651 by Ludowicke Muggleton (1609–98) and his cousin, John Reeve (1608–58), who claimed to be the 'two witnesses' of Rev. 11. 3–6. They denied the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and held that during the period of the Incarnation the government of heaven was left to *Elijah. Believing that God would never again interfere with the world after His revelation to Muggleton and Reeve, they condemned prayer and preaching. They also taught that matter was eternal and reason the creation of the devil. As a very small sect, the Muggletonians continued at least until 1868.

A. Jessopp, The Coming of the Friars and Other Historical Essays (1889), ch. vii, 'The Prophet of Walnut Tree Yard', pp. 302–43. W. T. Whitley in H.E.R.E., viii (1915), p. 871, s.v., with bibl.

MÜLLER, F. MAX. See Max Müller, Friedrich.

MÜLLER, GEORGE (1805–98), philanthropist and preacher. He was born near Halberstadt in Germany, but later became a British subject. Though intended for the ministry Müller was profligate as a youth until in 1825, while a student at Halle, he came into contact with a group of earnest Christians. Under their influence he experienced a sudden change and became a man of self-abnegation, devoting himself exclusively to religious work. In 1829 he came to London to take up an appointment with the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Forced by ill-health to leave London, in 1830 he moved to Teignmouth, where he associated himself with the *Plymouth Brethren, resigned from his previous appointment, and became a preacher to the local community. Believing that temporal as well as spiritual needs could be supplied through faith and prayer, he abolished pew rents and refused a salary, supporting himself and his charitable work with offerings from his followers. Two years later he moved to Bristol, where he devoted his life to the care of orphan children, relying on voluntary contributions which flowed in through the deep impression made by his Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller (Part i, 1837; ii, 1841). Starting with only a few children, he eventually had 2,000 under his care, accommodated in large houses at Ashley Down, near Bristol. At the age of 70, leaving this work in the hands of his daughter and her husband, James Wright, Müller set out with his second wife on a preaching mission to Europe, America, India, Australia, and China extending over 17 years. He died at Bristol.

Autobiography of George Müller compiled by G. F. Bergin, with preface and concluding chapter by A. T. Pierson (London, 1905). Mrs. [S. G.] Müller, Preaching Tours and Missionary Labours of George Müller (1883), with introd. by George Müller, pp. iii–xiv. E. K. Groves (nephew), George Müller and his Successors (1906). Lives by F. G. Warne (London [1898]; enlarged [1935]); A. T. Pierson (ib., 1899; with additions [1949]); W. H. Harding (ib., 1914), and Nancy Garton (ib., 1963). T. B. Johnstone in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), p. 208 f.

MÜLLER, JULIUS (1801–78), German Protestant theologian. He studied law at Breslau and Göttingen universities, but finding his spiritual aspirations unsatisfied, under the influence of F. A. G. *Tholuck, who urged him to come to Berlin (1823), he studied theology. In 1825 he was ordained pastor at Breslau. In 1831 he was appointed university preacher at Göttingen, and in 1835 professor of dogmatics at *Marburg. Here he upheld a conservative Protestant theology against the *Hegelianism of the *Tübingen School, esp. F. C. *Baur, and the Leben Jesu of D. F. *Strauss. In 1839 he was appointed to the chair of theology at Halle. In his principal work, Die christliche Lehre von der Sünde (vol. i, 1839; ii, 1844), he sought to interpret the fact of sin on the assumption of an extra-temporal fall occasioned by a free and intelligible act of decision on the part of each individual. As one of the most prominent theologians of his time he took a leading part in the negotiations for the Prussian Evangelical Union. In 1850 he founded, with A. *Neander and K. I. *Nitzsch, the Deutsche Zeitschrift für christliche Wissenschaft und christliches Leben; most of his contributions to it were collected in the Dogmatische Abhandlungen (1870).

Life by his son-in-law, L. Schultze (Bremen, 1879); also L. Schultze, D. Julius Müller als Ethiker und die Glaubensfrage mit Bezug auf das Apostolicum (1895). D. Hupfeld in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 529–34.

MÜLLER, LUDWIG (1883–1946), German *Reichsbischof. He was born at Gütersloh and educated at Münster i.W. When an army chaplain at Königsberg, he met Hitler (1926), who in 1933 made him his confidential adviser in Church matters; and, under strong Nazi pressure, he was elected Bp. of Prussia and also Reichsbischof. Resistance from the embryonic *Confessing Church to his Aryanizing policy led to his virtual supersession in 1935 by the appointment of H. Kerrl as Minister for Church Affairs, though Müller nominally remained in office. In 1936 he published a Germanized version of the Sermon on the Mount.

MUNGO, St. See Kentigern, St.

MUNIFICENTISSIMUS DEUS. The opening words and hence the name of the Apostolic Constitution issued by *Pius XII on 1 Nov. 1950 defining the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM (q.v.). The Pope declared it as a matter of divinely revealed dogma that the BVM 'having completed her earthly course was in body and soul assumed into heavenly glory', to deny which would incur the wrath of Almighty God and the Holy Apostles. The definition of the dogma aroused considerable opposition among members of the Eastern Churches and among some Anglicans who feared that it would impede any plans for union, though the statement of the doctrine was very moderate.

Text in A.A.S., xlii (1950), pp. 253–73. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Théologie de l'Assomption d'après la bulle "Munificentissimus Deus"' in Nouvelle Revue théologique, lxxii (1950), pp. 1009–27.

MÜNSTER, SEBASTIAN (1489–1552), Hebrew scholar. He studied at Heidelberg, *Tübingen, and Vienna and later entered the *Franciscan Order, which he abandoned for Protestantism. From 1529 until his death he taught at Basel. He produced the first German edition of the Hebrew Bible (2 vols., Basel, 1534–5; with a literal Latin version and notes), extensive use of which was made by M. *Coverdale for the OT of the *Great Bible (1539). His most widely read work, his Cosmographia Universalis (Basel, 1544), was a geographical description of the world after the manner of Strabo, written in German. He also issued Hebrew (1525) and Chaldee (1527) grammars.

Letters ed. K. H. Burmeister (Ingelheim am Rhein, 1964). Facsimile reprod. of his ed. of Ptolemy's Geographia (orig. publ. Basle, 1540) with introd. by R. A. Skelton (Amsterdam, 1966). V. Hantzsch, Sebastian Münster. Leben, Werke, wissenschaftliche Bedeutung (Abh. (Sächs.), xxiii, Hft. 3; 1898). A. Wolkenhauer, Sebastian Münsters handschriftliches Kollegienbuch aus den Jahren 1515–1518 und seine Karten (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., xi, Hft. 3; 1909). K. H. Burmeister, Sebastian Münster Bibliographie (Wiesbaden, 1964).

MÜNZER, THOMAS (c. 1490–1525), German *Anabaptist. A native of Stolberg in the Harz mountains, he studied at Leipzig and Frankfurt. In 1519 after an unsettled life he became confessor at a convent of nuns in Thuringia, and in the same year probably met M. *Luther at Leipzig. Under the influence of *Joachim of Fiore, J. *Hus, and others, he became a Protestant preacher at *Zwickau in 1520, demanding radical religious and social reform. He laid claim to immediate inspiration by the Holy Ghost and sought to establish a community of similarly inspired followers. After expulsion on account of the subversive tendencies of his preaching, he sought to establish in Bohemia a spiritual 'Church' among the Hussites, but was soon driven out again. In 1522 he seems to have had disputes with Luther at *Wittenberg, and in 1523 he went to Allstedt. Here he organized the first services in German, which reflect his learning and abilities as a translator. He proceeded to attack Luther, the Scriptural principle, and Infant Baptism, and preached revolt and wild threats against all his opponents. Driven from Allstedt at Luther's instigation (1524), he went to Mühlhausen in Thuringia, where he again preached open revolt. Once more expelled, he went to S. Germany, but returned to Mühlhausen after a few months and tried to link up his movement with the *Peasants' Revolt, placing himself at the head of the rebels. After the defeat at the battle of Frankenhausen (1525) he was captured and executed.

Schriften und Briefe ed. P. Kirn–G. Franz (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, xxxiii; Gütersloh, 1968). Briefwechsel, ed. H. Böhmer–P. Kirn (Leipzig–Berlin, 1931); Politische Schriften, ed. C. Hinrichs (Hallische Monographien, ed. O. Eissfeldt, xvii; 1950); [Selected] Schriften, ed. O. H. Brandt (Jena, 1933), with full introd. Modern ed. of his Deutsche Messen und Kirchenämter by O. J. Mehl (Grimmen, 1937). General studies by E. Bloch (Munich, 1922; ed. 5, Frankfurt am Main, 1962) with bibl.; J. Zimmermann (Berlin, 1925); and M. Bensing (Leipzig, 1965). E. W. Gritsch, Reformer without a Church. The Life and Thought of Thomas Muentzer 1488 [?]–1525 (Philadelphia, 1967). A. Lohmann, Zur geistigen Entwicklung Thomas Müntzers (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, xlvii; 1931). E. Sommer, Die Sendung Thomas Münzers. Taboritentum und Bauernkrieg in Deutschland (1948). G. Hinrichs, Luther und Müntzer. Ihre Auseinandersetzung über Obrigkeit und Widerstandsrecht (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxix; 1952). M. M. Smirin, Die Volksreformation des Thomas Münzer und der Grosse Bauernkrieg (1956). M. Bensing, Thomas Müntzer und der Thüringer Aufstand 1525 (Leipziger Übersetzungen und Abhandlungen zum Mittelalter, Reihe B, iii; 1966). H. J. Goertz, Innere und äussere Ordnung in der Theologie Thomas Müntzers (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, ii; Leiden, 1967). [E.] G. Rupp, Patterns in Reformation (1969), pp. 157–353. T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 556–66, s.v.; G. Franz in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), col. 1183 f.

MURATORI, LODOVICO ANTONIO (1672–1750), Italian historian and theological scholar. Born at Vignola, near Modena, he was educated by the Jesuits at Modena and, after becoming doctor utriusque juris (1694), was ordained priest in 1695. In the same year he became attached to the *Ambrosiana in Milan, where he remained until 1700, when the Duke of Modena offered him the post of archivist and librarian of his library. In 1716 he combined with his librarianship the position of Provost of Santa Maria della Pomposa, living in Modena until his death.

Muratori became involved in the diplomatic controversy between the Emperor and the Pope about the fief of Comacchio. It was in this connexion that he wrote his Piena esposizione de i diretti imperiali ed estensi sopra la città de Comacchio (Modena, 1712), a work of some judicial importance. He collaborated with G. W. *Leibniz on a projected history of the houses of Brunswick and da Este, which was never completed; his research on the subject, however, issued in the publication of a vast corpus of mediaeval sources of Italian history, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores (25 vols., Milan, 1723–51), which was followed by Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi (6 vols., 1738–48). He also published an important collection of liturgical documents under the title Liturgia Romana Vetus (2 vols., Venice, 1748; repr. Naples, 1760, and largely reproduced in various volumes of J. P. *Migne, Patrologia Latina); he printed the texts of the *Leonine, *Gelasian and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, followed by the '*Missale Gothicum', the '*Missale Francorum', the '*Missale Gallicanum Vetus', the 'Sacramentarium Gallicanum' (i.e. the *Bobbio Missal) and the First and Second '*Ordines Romani'. He was influenced by the historical method of the *Maurists and corresponded with J. *Mabillon and B. de *Montfaucon. His numerous theological works, often pseudonymous, provoked attacks on his orthodoxy: in 1748 the Spanish *Inquisition initiated proceedings against him, but he was protected by Pope *Benedict XIV. See also the following entry.

Collected Works ed. at Arezzo (13 vols., 1767–73) and at Venice (48 vols., 1790–1800). [Selected] Opere ed. G. Falco–F. Forti (La Letteratura Italiana, Storia e Testi, xliv; 2 vols., [1964]), with full introd. Epistolario, ed. M. Campori (14 vols., Modena, 1901–22). Trattato della carità cristiana e altri scritti sulla carità ed. P. G. Nonis [1961]. Life by his nephew, Gian Francesco Soli Muratori (Modena, 1756). G. Cavazzuti, Lodovico Antonio Muratori, 1672–1750 (1950). A. C. Jemolo, 'Il pensiero religioso di Ludovico Antonio Muratori' in Rivista trimestrale di Studi filosofici e religiosi, iv (1923), pp. 23–78. A. Vecchi, L'opera religiosa del Muratori (Accademia di Scienze, Lettere e Arti di Modena, 1955). S. Bertelli, Erudizione e storia in Ludovico Antonio Muratori (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Storici in Napoli, 1960). Miscellanea di Studi Muratoriani (Atti e Memorie della R. Deputazione di Storia Patria per le Provincie Modenesi, Serie VII, viii; 1933); Miscellanea di Studi Muratoriani (Modena, 1951). E. Raimondi, 'I padri maurini e l'opera del Muratori' in Giornale storico della Letteratura italiana, vol. cxxviii (1951), pp. 429–71, and cxxix (1952), pp. 145–78. E. Cochrane, 'Muratori: The Vocation of a Historian' in Catholic Historical Review, li (1965), pp. 153–72, with reff. L. Brandolini, C.M., 'La Pastorale dell'Eucharistia di Ludovico A. Muratori' in E.L., lxxxi (1967), pp. 333–75; lxxxii (1968), pp. 81–118. T. Sorbelli, Bibliografia muratoriana (2 vols., Modena, 1943–4). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 536–43, and F. Cognasso in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1523–7, with bibl.

MURATORIAN CANON. The oldest extant list of NT writings, discovered by L. A. *Muratori in an 8th-cent. *Ambrosiana MS. (J. 101 sup.). It is generally held to date from the (later) 2nd cent., because *Pius I, *Hermas, *Marcion, *Basilides and *Montanus are mentioned as contemporaries of the author. The list comprises 85 lines; the beginning and probably also the end are missing, for it starts with what must be the conclusion of a notice on St. Mark and continues with accounts of Luke and John, enumerated as the third and fourth Gospels respectively. It mentions all the NT books except Heb., Jas., and 1 and 2 Pet., and also the *Apocalypse of Peter and the Wisdom of *Solomon, though with a caveat. It rejects the 'Pastor' of Hermas, the Marcionite Epistles of St. *Paul to *Laodicea and *Alexandria, and a series of other *Gnostic and Montanist writings. The Canon is written in very bad Latin, full of orthographical and grammatical errors. Some scholars believe it to be a translation from the Greek; J. B. *Lightfoot and others have attributed it to St. *Hippolytus.

The Muratorian Canon was first published by Muratori in Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi, III (Milan, 1740), pp. 851–854. Facsimile ed. by S. P. *Tregelles, Canon Muratorianus (1867). Revised text by E. S. Buchanan in J.T.S., viii (1906–7), pp. 537–45. Commentaries, with text, in NT Handbooks, e.g. T. *Zahn in Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons, II. 1 (1890), pp. 1–143; B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the Canon of the New Testament (ed. 1, 1855), Appendix C. S. Ritter, 'Il Frammento muratoriano' in Riv. A.C., iii (1926), pp. 213–63, with text, pp. 245–54, and bibl., pp. 226–32. M. J. Lagrange, O.P., 'Le Canon d'Hippolyte et le Fragment de Muratori' in R. Bibl., xlii (1933), pp. 161–86. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 610–12; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 94 f. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 543–60, s.v. 'Muratorianum', with good photographic reproductions and full bibl.; G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 1399–1408, s.v.

MURILLO, BARTHOLOMÉ ESTEBÁN (1617–82), Spanish painter. Except for a period of study under D. R. Velázquez in Madrid, Murillo spent all his life in Seville. He is esp. known as the painter of the 'Immaculate Conception', which he executed more than twenty times. His other paintings include the 'Angels' Kitchen' (1646), the 'Birth of the Virgin' (1655), and the 'Holy Family' (1670), all in the Louvre, and two of the 'Madonna and Child', the one at Florence and the other at Rome.

Reproductions of his paintings (in black and white), ed. A. L. Mayer (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, xxii; 1913); small collection of plates in colour publd. by the Medici Society (London, 1954). C. Justi, Murillo (Leipzig, 1892; ed. 2, 1904). Other studies by A. F. Calvert (London, 1907), P. Lafond ('Les Grands Artistes' [1907]), S. Montoto (Seville, 1923), and A. Muñoz (Leipzig, 1943). C. B. Curtis, Velázquez and Murillo. A Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the Works of . . . Velázquez and Bartolomé Estebán Murillo (1888), pp. 109–352.

MYCONIUS, FRIEDRICH (1490–1546), *Lutheran Reformer of Thuringia. Born at Lichtenfels on the Main, he studied at Annaberg, where in 1510 he encountered J. *Tetzel on the subject of *indulgences. After entering the *Franciscan Order (14 July 1510) he was transferred to Leipzig, and in 1512 to Weimar. In his studies he found no satisfaction in the Scholastic theology, but was deeply impressed by the teaching of St. *Augustine. In 1516 he was ordained priest and soon became known in Weimar as a persuasive preacher. Growing sympathy with M. *Luther's attack on indulgences (1517) made his position difficult. In 1524 he left the Franciscan Order and in the same year was appointed by Duke Johann preacher at Gotha, where he married, reformed the schools, and exercised a powerful moral influence. In correspondence with Luther from 1525 and with P. *Melanchthon from 1527, he played a leading part in the Reform Movement. He was present at the Conferences at *Marburg (1529), *Wittenberg (1536), *Schmalkalden (1537), Frankfurt and Nuremberg (1539) and *Hagenau (1540). In 1538 he visited England on the embassy which hoped to win *Henry VIII for the *Augsburg Confession. He returned to Gotha in 1540.

Although known in his lifetime mainly as a preacher, Myconius also wrote extensively. His main work, Historia Reformationis, written in conjunction with J. Heller (ed. by E. S. Cyprian, 1715; modern ed. by O. Clemen, 1914), is a valuable contemporary source esp. for the movement in Thuringia. He also wrote tracts in the vernacular, among them Wie man die Einfältigen, und sonderlich die Kranken, im Christenthum unterrichten soll (1539).

H. U. Delius (ed.), Der Briefwechsel des Friedrich Mykonius (1524–1546) (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, xviii/xix; 1960); H. Ulbrich, Friedrich Mykonius 1490–1546. Lebensbild und neue Funde zum Briefwechsel des Reformators (ib., xx; 1962). P. Scherffig, Friedrich Mekum von Lichtenfels (Quellen und Darstellungen aus der Geschichte des Reformationsjahrhunderts, xii; 1909). O. Schmidt-G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 603–7, and xxiv (1913), p. 191. Schottenloher, ii (1935), p. 83 f. (Nos. 16188–211).

MYCONIUS, OSWALD (1488–1552), originally Geisshäusler, Swiss Reformer and humanist. It appears that the name 'Myconius' was given him by D. *Erasmus. A native of Lucerne, he studied at Basle from 1510 to 1514. In 1516 he went to Zürich, where he became the cathedral schoolmaster and induced the chapter to elect his friend, H. *Zwingli, as people's priest. From 1520 to 1522 he taught at Lucerne; but soon becoming an upholder of the Reformed cause, he was compelled, on account of his Protestant sympathies, to leave the city. In 1523 he was back in Zürich, where he collaborated closely with Zwingli in the propagation of the Reformation. In 1532 he became the successor of J. *Oecolampadius at Basle, remaining here for the rest of his life. His undogmatic temper, which found expression in a desire to reach a compromise with the Lutheran theologians on the matter of *Consubstantiation, aroused distrust among the stricter Zwinglians. Among his works are a Life of Zwingli (1536), the Basle Confession of 1534, and commentaries on several Biblical books.

K. R. Hagenbach, Johann Oekolampad und Oswald Myconius (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformierten Kirche, ii; 1859), pp. 309–462; P. Wernle, Calvin und Basel bis zum Tode des Myconius, 1535–52 (Programm zur Rektoratsfeier der Universität Basel, 1910). B. Riggenbach–E. Egli in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), p. 607 f.

MYRC, JOHN, also spelled 'Mirc' (fl. c. 1400), religious writer. Beyond the fact that he was the prior of the *canons regular of Lilleshall in Salop, nothing is known of his life. His surviving writings are his Liber Festialis, a collection of sermons for the more important festivals of the Christian year, beginning with the first Sunday in *Advent; a Manuale Sacerdotum; and Instructions for Parish Priests, an English poem written in rhyming couplets for the instruction of the clergy in their various duties. His works are important sources for the Church life of his age.

The works mentioned survive in several MSS. (Brit. Mus., Bod., Camb. Univ. Lib.). Early printed edd. of the 'Liber Festialis' by W. *Caxton (1483) and Wynkyn de Worde (1493). His 'Instructions for Parish Priests' were ed. by E. Peacock, with Introd. Note by H. Bradshaw, for the E.E.T.S. (Orig. ser., xxxi, 1868; rev. ed., F. J. Furnivall, 1902). M. Bateson in D.N.B., xxxviii (1893), p. 50 f., s.v. 'Mirk'.

MYSTERIES OF THE ROSARY. The fifteen subjects of meditation connected with the fifteen *decades of the *Rosary. They are divided into three groups of five, corresponding to the three *chaplets of which the devotion is composed, and known as the *Joyful, *Sorrowful, and *Glorious Mysteries (qq.v.). The whole in order forms an epitome of the lives of Christ and His Mother.

MYSTERY (or MIRACLE) PLAYS. The religious dramas ('mysteries') of the Middle Ages are commonly held to have developed from the dramatic parts of the Liturgy, esp. in the offices of *Holy Week and *Easter, though it has also been argued (O. Cargill) that they were composed by individual authors from Biblical and other sources. The most important and impressive were the Passion Plays, but the *Corpus Christi processions offered an occasion for an elaborate representation of Gospel stories, while Antichrist, the Parable of the Wise and Foolish Virgins, and the Last Judgement were other popular themes. Among the non-Biblical subjects adopted later were the legends of St. *Catherine, St. *Dorothy, St. *George, and the *Invention of the Cross. The plays were commonly performed out of doors, on temporary or fixed stages. From the 16th cent. there was a general decay; but since the 19th cent., largely through the success of the *Oberammergau Passion Play, there has been a widespread revival, esp. on the Continent, to which the plays of P. *Claudel in France and of H. von Hofmannsthal in Germany and Austria have contributed. See also Drama, Christian.

In addition to O. Cargill, Drama and Liturgy (Columbia University Studies in English and Comparative Literature, New York, 1930), and other works cited under Drama, Christian, Eleanor Prosser, Drama and Religion in the English Mystery Plays. A Re-evaluation (Stanford Studies in Language and Literature, xxiii; 1961). M. D. Anderson, Drama and Imagery in English Medieval Churches (Cambridge, 1963), esp. pp. 87–177. W. W. Greg, 'Bibliographical and Textual Problems of the English Miracle Cycles' in The Library, 3rd Series, v (1914), pp. 1–30, 168–205, 280–319, and 365–99. K. Young, 'Concerning the Origin of the Miracle Play' in The Manly Anniversary Studies in Language and Literature (1923), pp. 254–68; J. M. Manly, 'The Miracle Play in Mediaeval England' in Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature of the United Kingdom, New Series, vii (1927), pp. 133–53.

MYSTICAL THEOLOGY. In Catholic theology, the science of the spiritual life, in so far as this is dependent on the operation of Divine grace. It is commonly contrasted with *Ascetical Theology (q.v.), which treats of the spiritual life, so far as it can be pursued without supernatural assistance.

MYSTICISM. In general, an immediate knowledge of God attained in this present life through personal religious experience. It is primarily a state of prayer and as such admits of various degrees, from short and rare Divine 'touches' to the practically permanent union with God in the so-called 'mystic marriage'. The surest proof adduced by the mystics themselves for the genuineness of their experience is its effect, viz. its fruit in such things as an increase of humility, charity, and love of suffering. Mysticism is a widespread experience not only in Christianity but also in many non-Christian religions, e.g. Buddhism, Taoism, Hinduism, and Islam.

Distinctive of the Christian form of mysticism is its emphasis on two elements often absent elsewhere. In contrast to all pan-cosmic conceptions of the underlying Reality as an impersonal Unity, it recognizes that the Reality to which it penetrates transcends the soul and the cosmos. And in place of all notions of absorption of the soul into the divine ('Thou art in me and I am in Thee: and Thy attributes are my attributes' in the Egyptian Book of the Dead (ch. 64); much Oriental and *Neoplatonic religion), it posits that the union is one of love and will in which the distinction between Creator and creature is permanently retained.

Psycho-physical phenomena, such as dreams, locutions, trances, visions, and ecstasies, have been frequent concomitants of mystical experience. But while these are recognised by Christian spiritual writers as possible accessories of true mystical insight, they are not held to be essential to it, and indeed are considered to be sometimes hindrances to its proper realization. In the highest state of spiritual marriage they normally cease.

Christian thinkers have differed in their attitudes to mysticism. Some (esp. Protestant) theologians (E. *Brunner; R. *Niebuhr) hold it to be essentially anti-Christian on the ground that its close link with the Neoplatonic outlook seems nearer to pagan gnosis than to the Gospel's offer of salvation. It has also been suspected on account of its supposed pantheistic dangers (J. W. *Oman; P. E. More). But even if spiritual writers who uphold mysticism sometimes appear too ready to cut through the concrete historical and particular problems to which the Christian Gospel ministers, it would seem difficult to reject all that the Christian mystics have contributed to a deepened understanding of Christian Truth or to disregard the large extent to which their findings have influenced theology. On the other hand, to look upon mystical union as the very essence of Christianity (W. R. *Inge; N. *Berdyaev) must certainly be accounted an exaggeration.

A measure of mysticism is met with so widely in Christian life at its more serious levels that it is impossible to put the Christian mystics into a separate class. There are passages in St. *John's Gospel, St. *Paul's Epistles, and the Bk. of *Revelation which mark their authors as having personally enjoyed mystical experience. In any attempted list of Christian mystics the following would certainly have to be included: St. *Clement of Alexandria, St. *Gregory of Nyssa, St. *Augustine, *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, St. *Simeon the New Theologian, *Hugh of St.-Victor, St. *Bernard, St. *Mechthild, *Richard of St.-Victor, St. *Hildegard, St. *Francis of Assisi, St. *Bonaventure, St. *Gertrude 'the Great', *Eckhart, St. *Gregory Palamas, R. *Rolle, J. *Tauler, *Henry Suso, St. *Catherine of Siena, J. *Ruysbroeck, W. *Hilton, the author of the *Theologia Germanica, *Julian of Norwich, St. *Catherine of Genoa, S. *Franck, St. *Teresa of Ávila, St. *Luis of Granada, St. *John of the Cross, J. *Boehme, R. *Crashaw, G. *Foxe, H. *Vaughan, M. de *Molinos, F. *Fènelon, Mme *Guyon, W. *Law, St. Gemma *Galgani, St. *Grignion of Montfort, and Charles *de Foucauld.

All works on Christian spirituality are necessarily largely concerned with Mysticism. Books treating the subject historically include W. R. Inge, Christian Mysticism (Bampton Lectures for 1899; 1899); id., Studies of English Mystics (St. Margaret's Lectures for 1905; 1906); E. *Underhill, Mysticism (1911); id., Practical Mysticism (1914); id., The Mystics of the Church (1925) and other works; H. *Bremond, Histoire littéraire du sentiment religieux en France depuis la fin des guerres de religion jusqu'à nos jours (11 vols., index, 1916–36; Eng. tr., 1928 ff.); P. Pourrat, P.S.S., La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1918–28); [E.] C. Butler, O.S.B., Western Mysticism. The Teaching of SS. Augustine, Gregory and Bernard on Contemplation and the Contemplative Life (1922); K. E. *Kirk, The Vision of God (Bampton Lectures for 1928; 1931); [M.] D. Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961); Hilda [C.] Graef, The Story of Mysticism (1966). On some less well-known mystics, H. Thurston, S.J., Surprising Mystics (ed. J. H. Crehan, S.J., 1955).

Among philosophical discussions of the subject (from varying standpoints) may be mentioned J. [J.] *Görres, Die christliche Mystik (4 vols. in 5 parts, 1836–42); W. *James, The Varieties of Religious Experience (Gifford Lectures for 1901–2; 1902), pp. 379–429; E. Lehmann, Mystik i Hedenskab og Kristendom (Copenhagen, 1904; Eng. tr., 1910); F. *von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion, as studied in St. Catherine of Genoa and her Friends (2 vols., 1908); E. I. Watkin, The Philosophy of Mysticism (1920); M. *Grabmann, Wesen und Grundlagen der katholischen Mystik (Der katholische Gedanke, ii; 1922); J. Maréchal, S.J., Études sur la psychologie des mystiques (Museum Lessianum, Section philosophique, ii and xix; 1924–37; Eng. tr. of vol. i, 1924); E. Brunner, Die Mystik und das Wort. Der Gegensatz zwischen moderner Religionsauffassung und christlichen Glauben dargestellt an der Theologie Schleiermachers (1924); V. *Lossky, Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (Centre de recherches philosophiques et spirituelles, 1944; Eng. tr., 1957); H. Thurston, S.J., The Physical Phenomena of Mysticism (ed. J. H. Crehan, 1952).

Works of a more avowedly practical character include A. Saudreau, O.P., Les Degrés de la vie spirituelle (2 vols., 1896); id., La Vie d'union à Dieu et les moyens d'y arriver d'après les grands maîtres de la spiritualité (1900; Eng. tr. of ed. 3, 1927); id., L'État mystique, sa nature, ses phases (1903; Eng. tr., 1924); id., Les Faits extraordinaires de la vie spirituelle (1908). A. Poulain, S.J., Des grâces d'oraison (1901; Eng. tr., 1910); [M.] D. Knowles, What is Mysticism? (1967).

There are several periodicals devoted to the subject, including La Vie spirituelle (Paris, 1919 ff.; Dominican), Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique (Toulouse, 1920 ff.; Jesuit), Zeitschrift für Aszese und Mystik (Innsbruck–Würzburg, 1926 ff.; since 1947, Geist und Leben), Études carmélitaines (Paris, 1911 ff.); also Dictionnaire de spiritualité, ed. M. Viller, S.J., and others (1937 ff.).

R. M. *Jones and other writers in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 83–117, s.v. 'Mysticism' [in Christian and non-Christian religions]; A. Fonck in D.T.C., x (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2599–2674, s.v. 'Mystique (Théologie)'; T. Corbishley, S.J., in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 175–9, s.v.

N

NAASENES (Heb. נָחָשׁ, 'serpent'). A *Gnostic sect described by *Hippolytus (Haer., v. 6–17). It has sometimes been held that the name represents the Hebrew equivalent of the Greek *Ophites (q.v.).

See bibl. s.v. Ophites.

NAG HAMMADI PAPYRI. A collection of thirteen papyrus codices, found in 1945 in a jar buried in a pagan cemetery on the edge of Chenoboskion (Nag Hammadi) near the Nile, 60 miles below Luxor, and containing in all 49 Gnostic treatises. Eleven of the codices are complete, with their original leather bindings, and are dated variously in the period between the third and fifth cents. A.D. With the exception of one acquired by the Jung Institute in Zürich, all are preserved in the Coptic Museum in Cairo.

The treatises are written in *Coptic (predominantly in the Sahidic dialect) and were translated from the Greek. They constitute a Gnostic library and as such are the most important single contribution to our direct knowledge of Gnosticism. The collection is in process of publication.

For bibliography see Gnosticism.

NAG'S HEAD STORY, The. This tale was apparently fabricated early in the 17th cent. to discredit the validity of M. *Parker's episcopal consecration. It alleged that when Parker found himself unable to obtain regular consecration, some clerics met at the Nag's Head tavern in Cheapside, and that there J. *Scory, the deprived Bp. of *Chichester, and himself affirmed not to have been properly consecrated, constituted Parker and the others bishops by placing a Bible on the neck of each in turn with the words 'Take thou authority to preach the Word of God sincerely'. The story was first put into circulation by C. Holywood, S.J., in 1604; and though soon discredited, it continued to reappear in the controversial literature on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations till beyond the middle of the 19th cent.

Christopher [Holywood], S.J., De Investiganda Vera ac Visibili Christi Ecclesia Libellus (Antwerp, 1604), p. 17 f. The earliest attempt to discredit the story is that in F.* Mason, The Consecration of the Bishops of the Church of England (1613), p. 123 f. See also bibl. to Anglican Ordinations and Parker, M.

NAHUM, Book of. One of the twelve '*Minor Prophets'. It consists of 3 chapters in all. The main subject is the fall of Nineveh (612 B.C.), which is described in such detail and is regarded as so certain and so imminent that it is generally supposed that the Book may be dated shortly before this. The opening verses, 1. 2–9 (or 1. 2–2. 2), contain a psalm which, although it forms a fitting introduction to what follows, has no reference to the main subject of the Book; and on this ground, combined with its (imperfectly preserved) acrostic form, some attribute the psalm to an independent source. Various theories have been advanced to explain the one fact stated in connexion with the person of Nahum, that he was 'an Elkoshite' (1. 1). Some fix the site of Elkosh near Nineveh; others follow St. *Jerome and place it in *Galilee (cf. the derivation of *Capernaum as 'village of Nahum'); others again prefer a site in Judah.

Commentaries by A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, on Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1896, pp. 9–44), J. M. P. Smith (I.C.C. on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912, pp. 267–363), G. G. V. Stonehouse (West. Comm. on Zeph., Nah., and Hab., 1929, pp. 73–140), and W. A. Maier (St. Louis, 1959). W. R. Arnold, 'The Composition of Nahum 1–2:3' in Z.A.T.W., xxi (1901), pp. 225–65. P. Humbert, 'Le Problème du Livre de Nahoum' in Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses, xii (1932), pp. 1–15. A. Haldar, Studies in the Book of Nahum (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1946, pt. 7; 1947), with bibl. A. R. S. Kennedy in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 473–7; A. George in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 291–301, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to Minor Prophets.

NAME OF JESUS. In consequence of the close relation between name and person, the Name of Jesus is used in the NT as a synonym for Jesus Himself, denoting His character and authority. The disciples perform miracles and exorcisms 'in the name of Jesus', i.e. by His power (Mk. 9. 38 ff., Acts 4. 30, &c.), and regularly baptize in it (Acts 2. 38, 8. 16, &c.), and St. Paul esp. insists on its efficacy for our justification (1 Cor. 6. 11) and the obligation of Christians to venerate it above all other names (Phil. 2. 9 f.). This reverence for, and confidence in, the Name of Jesus has found expression in the Church from early times, e.g. in its use in exorcisms and the medieval custom of giving medals with the monogram 'IHS' (q.v.) to newly baptized infants. In the 15th cent. devotion to the Holy Name was popularized by the *Franciscans, St. *Bernardino of Siena and St. *Giovanni Capistrano, to whom also the Litany of the Holy Name, used since the 15th cent. and approved for the universal RC Church by *Leo XIII in 1886, possibly owes its origin. See also foll. entry.

W. Heitmüller, 'Im Namen Jesu' (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, i, Hft. 2; 1903). F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, Part I: The Acts of the Apostles, v (1933), pp. 121–40 ('The Name, Baptism, and the Laying on of Hands' by Silva New). A. Cabassut, O.S.B., 'La Dévotion au nom de Jésus dans l'Église d'occident' in La Vie spirituelle, lxxxvi (1952), pp. 46–69. J. Dupont, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 514–41, s.v. 'Nom de Jésus'.

NAME OF JESUS, Feast of the. This feast, which had been celebrated locally at the end of the Middle Ages, was officially granted to the *Franciscans in 1530 for commemoration on 14 Jan. The observance gradually spread until it was finally prescribed in 1721 by Innocent XIII for the whole RC Church on the Second Sunday after *Epiphany. The Office and Mass were composed by Bernardino dei Busti (d. 1500), while the celebrated office hymns, '*Jesu dulcis memoria', 'Jesu Rex admirabilis', and 'Jesu decus angelicum', were adapted from the work of a 12th cent. author. The date of the feast was again modified in the Latin Church by *Pius X, who fixed it for the Sunday between the *Circumcision (1 Jan.) and the *Epiphany (6 Jan.) or, if in any year there was no such Sunday, on 2 Jan. It was suppressed in the Roman Calendar of 1969. Acc. to late medieval practice in England, as embodied in the later forms of the *Sarum Rite, the feast was observed on 7 Aug., and this date is assigned to it in the calendar of the BCP. The American BCP (1979) places it on 1 Jan.

R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 62–83. G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., viii (1952), col. 1919 f., s.v. 'Nome di Gesù, Festa del'.

NANTES, Edict of. The edict which ended the French wars of religion, signed by *Henry IV at Nantes on 13 Apr. 1598. The *Huguenots were allowed free exercise of their religion except in certain towns, civil equality, and fair administration of justice, and were provided with a state subsidy for the support of their troops and pastors. Its terms were sometimes much infringed in the 17th cent., notably by A. J. du P. *Richelieu. It was finally revoked by Louis XIV on 18 Oct. 1685.

[E. Benoist], Histoire de l'édit de Nantes (24 books in 5 vols., Delft, 1693–5), with text of Edict in vol. i, pp. (62–94), and of Revocation in vol. v, pp. (184–6); Eng. tr. of Books 1–11 (2 vols., 1694), with Eng. tr. of text of Edict, i, pp. 526–562. Text of Edict repr. in J. Dumont (ed.), Corps universel diplomatique de droit des gens, v (Amsterdam, 1728), No. CCLII, pp. 545–57; extracts in Eng. tr. in Bettenson (1943), p. 302 f. Operative clauses of Revocation repr. in Mirbt, No. 536, p. 390 f. J. Orcibal, Louis XIV et les Protestants (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1951), esp. pp. 111–25. W. J. Stankiewicz, Politics and Religion in Seventeenth-Century France (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1960), pp. 52–91.

NARSAI (d. c. 503), also Narses, *Nestorian theologian. Born prob. in 399, he became head of the famous school of *Edessa, perhaps as early as 437. Owing to the growing hostility towards the followers of Theodore and Nestorius, c. 471 he fled to Nisibis, where the bishop, *Barsumas, asked him to stay and found a school. Narsai was one of the formative theologians of the Nestorian Church. He wrote an extensive set of commentaries on the OT, but these appear to have been completely lost. There survive, however, a large number of metrical homilies and some hymns, whose beauty gained for him the epithet 'Harp of the Spirit'. Some of his homilies (the 'Liturgical Homilies') afford important evidence for the early history of the E. Syrian rites of *Baptism and the *Eucharist.

Syriac text of Works ed. A. Mingana (2 vols., Mosul, 1905; editing partly in Syriac). 'Homilies on the Creation', ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by P. Gignoux in P.O., xxxiv (1968), pp. 415–716; 'Metrical Homilies on the Nativity, Epiphany, Passion, Resurrection and Ascension' ed., with Eng. tr., by F. G. McLeod, S.J., ib., xl (1979), pp. 3–193. Eng. tr. of four of the 'Liturgical Homilies', with critical discussions, by R. H. *Connolly (Texts and Studies, viii. 1; Cambridge, 1909). Fr. tr. of various homilies in L'Orient Syrien (12 vols., 1956–67), passim. A. Vööbus, History of the School of Nisibis (C.S.C.O., cclxvi; 1965), pp. 57–121. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 109–13. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 115–18. E. Tisserant in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 26–30; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 884–8.

NARTHEX (Gk. νάρθηξ, lit. 'a small case'). In a Byzantine church, the antechamber to the nave, from which it is separated by columns, rails, or a wall. *Catechumens, candidates for baptism, and penitents occupied the narthex. It is to be distinguished from the 'exonarthex', or porch, opening on to the street.

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (1935), col. 888 f., s.v.; M. Zocca in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1659–61, s.v. 'Nartece'.

NASHDOM, Bucks, Anglican Benedictine Abbey. After the submission to Rome of most of the Anglican Community on *Caldey Island in 1913, the remaining Anglicans continued at Pershore, where the Abbey House, since demolished, was blessed by the Bp. of Worcester in 1914. Shortly afterwards the only solemnly professed monk from Caldey became an RC, and the revival was thereafter under the guidance of the Revd. Denys Prideaux, who had lived at Caldey as an oblate. In 1922 he made his solemn profession and was installed as first abbot. In 1926 the Community moved to Nashdom, a Lutyens house at Burnham, Bucks. In 1939 an American Episcopal Priory was founded, now St. Gregory's Abbey, Three Rivers, Michigan. Among the writers of the Community the best known is Dom Gregory *Dix.

The Jubilee Book of the Benedictines of Nashdom (1964). P. F. Anson, The Call of the Cloister, revised ed. by A. W. Campbell (1958), pp. 183–94.

NASH PAPYRUS, The. The oldest surviving MS. of any portion of the Hebrew OT. It is a small fragment of papyrus, acquired by W. L. Nash in 1902, and perhaps to be dated (so W. F. Albright) as early as the 2nd cent. B.C. (and not 2nd cent. A.D., as was at first thought). It contains the Ten *Commandments in substantially the Deuteronomic text (Deut. 5. 6–21), with the 6th and 7th Commandments transposed (cf. Lk. 18. 20), followed by a brief introductory passage and then the *Shema. Points of contact with the *Septuagint indicate that it may have transmitted a text of the OT nearer to that of the original Hebrew than that in any of the standard Hebrew MSS. The fragment is in the Cambridge University Library (Or. 233).

S. A. *Cook, 'A Pre-Massoretic Biblical Papyrus' in the Proc. of the Soc. of Biblical Archaeology, xxv (1903), pp. 34–56 (with facsimile).

NASOREAN. See Nazarene.

NATALIS, ALEXANDER (1639–1724), Church historian. In 1655 he entered the *Dominican Order at Paris, where he spent nearly all his life. Possessed of strong sympathies with *Jansenism, he became one of the *Appellants who in 1714 opposed the '*Unigenitus'. The most important of his writings is his Selecta Historiae Ecclesiasticae Capita (24 vols., 1676–86), a treatise of great erudition; but though the earlier volumes had been praised by *Innocent XI in 1682, Natalis's treatment of the conflict between the Empire and the Papacy caused the whole work to be put on the *Index two years later. Natalis himself tried in vain to make the work unobjectionable by a revision in 1699, but it was only after this had been followed by two further banned editions that the work was finally removed from the Index in 1734. Among Natalis's other writings was a Theologia dogmatica et moralis (10 vols., 1694).

A. Hänggi, Der Kirchenhistoriker Natalis Alexander (1639–1724) (Studia Friburgensia, N.F. xi; 1955), with bibl. P. Mandonnet in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 769–72, s.v. 'Alexandre (Noël)', with bibl.

NATALITIA (Lat., 'birthday'). In the early cents. this word was used of the death-days of Christians, and esp. of martyrs, in the sense of their birthday into eternal life. In later Christian usage the word sometimes meant no more than 'anniversary', the *Gelasian Sacramentary, e.g., employing it of the anniversary of a bishop's consecration.

NATHANAEL. One of the first disciples of Jesus, who recommended him for his sincerity (Jn. 1. 47). He was a native of Cana (Jn. 21. 2) and his call is related in Jn. 1. 43–51. In spite of this his name is not included among those of the Twelve Apostles. From the 9th cent. he was identified with St. *Bartholomew by Elias of Damascus, *Ebedjesus, and other *Nestorians. In the W. this conjecture is first mentioned by *Rupert of Deutz in the 12th cent. The identification is now widely accepted by Biblical scholars.

See commentaries to John, Gospel of St.

NATIONAL ANTHEM, The. See God save the King.

NATIONAL APOSTASY, Sermon on. The sermon with this title preached by J. *Keble on 14 July 1833 in the church of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford, before the Judges of Assize and commonly regarded as the beginning of the *Oxford Movement (q.v.). Its aim was to promote action in defence of the Church, esp. in view of the proposed suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. The text was 1 Sam. 12. 23.

The Sermon was publd. at Oxford in 1833 immediately after delivery; repr., ed. R. J. E. Boggis, Torquay, 1931; also London [publd. A. R. Mowbray], 1931. Its traditional place as inaugurating the Oxford Movement appears to derive from a passage in J. H. *Newman's Apologia; cf. F. L. Cross, John Henry Newman (1933), Appendix IV, 'The Myth of July 14, 1833' (p. 162 f.).

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. See Church Assembly.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE EVANGELICAL FREE CHURCHES. An association of the Free Churches, formed in 1896 for mutual consultation, co-operation, and witness. It succeeded in uniting these Churches in action, as, e.g., against the Education Bill of 1902, and in the holding of joint missions in different parts of the country. It was merged in 1939 in the *Free Church Federal Council.

NATIONAL COVENANT, The (1638). The Covenant of the Scottish *Presbyterians inaugurated in the Greyfriars churchyard at Edinburgh on 28 Feb. 1638, as an answer to the attempt to impose on the Scottish Church the 1637 BCP. It consisted of the *King's Confession of 1581, with many additions by A. *Henderson and others, and concluded with an oath. See also Covenanters.

Text pr. in S. R. Gardiner (ed.), The Constitutional Documents of the Puritan Revolution (1889), pp. 54–64.

NATIONAL SOCIETY, The. The popular name of the Society formed in 1811 (incorporated 1817) as 'The National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church'. With the British and Foreign Schools Society (founded 1807), a mainly Nonconformist body, it was a principal agent in promoting popular education in England and Wales before the setting up by the State of School Boards in 1870. It sponsored A. Bell's system of teaching through monitors or pupil-teachers under a master, and worked by means of a model school (established in Baldwin's Gardens, London, in 1812) and by advice and grants-in-aid to diocesan and other local societies and to individual Church schools. A government grant was first received in 1833. It also undertook the training of teachers, St. Mark's College, Chelsea (now amalgamated with St. John's College, Battersea, as the College of St. Mark and St. John), being opened in 1841. After 1870 its schools (the 'National' Schools) remained in existence as 'non-provided' schools independent of the system of education under the School Boards; in 1902 these schools began to receive financial aid from the Local Authorities but remained distinct from the State Schools under the 'Dual System'. Under the Act of 1944 such schools became either 'Aided' or 'Controlled' by the Local Authority, with greater or less scope for distinctive Church teaching, respectively. In 1934 the Society received a Supplemental Charter and changed its full name to 'The National Society for the Promotion of Religious Education in accordance with the principles of the Church of England'. Its main activities up to 1948 included (1) the provision to diocesan and parochial authorities of expert advice and of facilities for exchange of information and co-ordination of action in all matters concerning religious education, esp. the legal position and efficient conduct of Church schools, and (2) the representation of Church opinion in educational matters to the government; it is also (3) trustee for St. Mark and St. John's and four other C of E training colleges for teachers, and for two C of E boarding schools and some other institutions, and (4) it assists the work of all C of E colleges of education, and the training of ordinands in matters connected with the teaching work of the clergy, arranges courses for Sunday School teachers, and engages in other miscellaneous activities.

In 1948 the C of E Council for Education was set up by the *Church Assembly. Under this Council are five Departmental Councils, including two (the Schools Council and the Children's Council) which are affiliated to the National Society. Some of the previous activities of the National Society then began to be taken over by the Departmental Councils, but the National Society still retains its independent status, and its General Secretary is also Secretary of the C of E Schools Council.

Much information in annual reports of the National Society (1811 ff.). C. K. F. Brown, The Church's Part in Education, 1833–1941, with Special Reference to the Work of the National Society (1942), with bibl. H. J. Burgess, Enterprise in Education. The Story of the Work of the Established Church in the Education of the People prior to 1870 (1958); id.–P. A. Welsby, A Short History of the National Society 1811–1961 (1961).

NATIVITY OF OUR LORD, Feast of the. See Christmas.

NATIVITY OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST. A feast observed on 24 June, at any rate since the 4th cent., to commemorate the miraculous birth of the Baptist, recorded in Lk. 1. It was one of the earliest feasts to find a place in the Christian calendar. St. *Augustine (Serm. 287. 4) explained the special appropriateness of the date selected, as after this Feast the days begin to get shorter, whereas after the Feast of Christ's Nativity they begin to grow longer (cf. Jn. 3. 30).

G. *Morin, 'La Date de la Saint-Jean. Solution d'un problème liturgique au IVe siècle' in Le Messager des Fidèles [later R. Bén.], v (1888), pp. 257–64. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2171–4.

NATIVITY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN. This feast, which is celebrated in the W. Church and by the Greeks on 8 Sept., is attested for the 8th cent. in the E. by two sermons of St. *Andrew of Crete. Though referred to in Rome by Pope *Sergius (687–701) and in some MSS. of the *Gelasian and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, it was not generally observed in the W. until the 11th cent. It has survived in the calendar of the BCP. The choice of 8 Sept. for the feast is unexplained.

F. G. Holweck in C.E. x (1911), p. 712 f.; G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1678–80; J. Adriaense, M.C.S., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 1981–3, s.v. 'Onze Lieve Vrouw Geboorte', with extensive bibl.

NATURAL LAW. An expression used with a wide variety of meanings, but in a theological context the law implanted in nature by the Creator which rational creatures can discern by the light of natural reason. It has been contrasted with the revealed law, though it was commonly held that the Commandments revealed in the *Decalogue (except that about Sabbath observance) were also precepts of the Natural Law. St. *Paul refers to the Natural Law in Rom. 2. 14 f., where he says that the Gentiles 'show that what the law requires is written in their hearts' although they do not have the *Torah or Mosaic Law. *Stoics believed in the Law of Nature, and in more recent times there have been philosophical doctrines that maintained the idea in some form or other. The only agreement about the content of the Natural Law has been that good is to be done and evil avoided, which is too abstract or general a principle to have much practical import. Modern philosophers have for the most part neglected or abandoned the whole theory. While it has been favoured more by Catholic than by Protestant theologians, there is now no theological consensus on the subject.

N. Micklem, The Theology of Law (1943); J. Dalby, The Catholic Conception of the Law of Nature (1943); A. R. Vidler–W. A. Whitehouse (edd.), Natural Law. A Christian Reconsideration (1946); A. P. d'Entrèves, Natural Law (1951; ed. 2, 1970). O. Gierke, Das deutsche Genossenschaftsrecht, iv (1913; Eng. tr., Natural Law and the Theory of Society, 1500–1800, 2 vols., 1934); H. A. Rommen, Die ewige Wiederkehr des Naturrechts (Leipzig, 1936; ed. 2, Munich, 1947; Eng. tr. The Natural Law, 1949); E. *Brunner, Gerechtigkeit. Eine Lehre von den Grundgesetzen der Gesellschaftsordnung (1943; Eng. tr., 1945). J. Messner, Das Naturrecht. Handbuch der Gesellschaftsethik, Staatsethik und Wirtschaftsethik (Vienna, 1950; ed. 4, 1960; Eng. trr. 1952 and 1965). J. Fuchs, S.J., Lex Naturae. Zur Theologie des Naturrechts (Düsseldorf, 1955; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1965). C. G. Haines, The Revival of Natural Law Concepts (Harvard Studies in Jurisprudence, iv; 1930). C. H. *Dodd, 'Natural Law in the New Testament' in Theology, xlix (1946), pp. 128–33 and 161–7; repr. in C. H. Dodd, New Testament Studies (1953), pp. 129–142.

NATURAL THEOLOGY. The body of knowledge about God which may be obtained by human reason alone without the aid of Revelation and hence to be contrasted with 'Revealed Theology'. The distinction was worked out in the Middle Ages at great length, and is based on such passages as Rom. 1. 18 ff., acc. to which man is capable of arriving at certain religious truths by applying his natural powers of discursive thought. In a definition of the First *Vatican Council (De fid. cath. cap. 2, can. 2) the possibility of this knowledge is explained by the dependence of the creature upon God. The chief objects of Natural Theology are God in so far as He is known through His works, the human soul, its freedom and immortality, and *Natural Law. Hence, strictly speaking, Natural Theology is part of philosophy and treated as such in the systems of Scholasticism. Reformation theology generally rejected the competence of fallen human reason to engage in Natural Theology; and in modern times this incompetence has been reasserted with emphasis by K. *Barth and the *Dialectical School. Modern theologians sympathetic towards the ideals of Natural Law often present their views under the heading of 'Philosophy of Religion' (q.v.).

NAUMBURG CONVENTION. A meeting of princes and representatives of the German Protestant leaders, held at Naumburg from 20 Jan. to 8 Feb. 1561, with a view to securing doctrinal unity, esp. in the matter of the *Eucharist. The proposed agreement on the basis of the *Augsburg Confession failed, as the *Calvinists stood by the 'variata' edition of 1540 and the *Lutherans by the 'invariata' of 1531. An invitation from the Pope to send legates to the Council of *Trent was rejected, nominally through objection to the form of address ('Dilecto filio') on the Papal letter, which was returned unopened.

J. H. Gelbke, Der Naumburgische Fürstentag, oder wichtige Urkunden und Acten den, wegen erneuerter Unterschrift der Augspurgischen Confession und Beschickung des Concilii zu Trident, von den protestantischen Fürsten und Ständen in Deutschland 1561 zu Naumburg an der Saale gehaltenen Convent betreffend (1793). R. Calinich, Der Naumburgische Fürstentag, 1561 (1870). G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 661–9. Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 462 (Nos. 40411–25).

NAVE. That part of a church, between the main front and the chancel and choir, which is assigned to the laity. It has often been separated from the sanctuary by a screen, and from the aisles by columns or pillars. The term is generally thought to be derived from the Lat. navis, 'ship', this being a symbol of the Church, but it may be a corrupt form of the Gk. ναός, 'temple'.

NAYLER, JAMES (c. 1618–60), *Quaker. Born near Wakefield, W. Yorks, from 1643 to 1651 he served with some distinction in the Parliamentary army, in which he was noted as an Independent preacher. He retired, perhaps with consumption, to a farm near his former home, where, shortly after joining the C of E, he was convinced by G. *Fox at the end of 1651 of the Quaker doctrine of the Inner Light. At the outset he was second only to Fox in the leadership of the movement. He was partially responsible for the conversion of the family of Judge Fell of Swarthmoor Hall, Cumbria, which soon became a noted centre of Quakerism. In 1652 he preached widely in the N. of England and was imprisoned at Appleby. From the summer of 1655 he was in sole charge of the flourishing London Society until June of the following year. About that time he came under the influence of a group of *Ranters, led by one Martha Simmonds (d. 1665), who, confusing the doctrine of the Inner Light with a belief in absolute unity with God, tried to worship him as Christ. At first Nayler resisted his devotees and set out to visit Fox, who was imprisoned in Launceston castle. Apprehended on the way as a Quaker, he was confined in the late summer of 1656 in *Exeter gaol. Here he was accredited with having raised a woman from the dead and in September, under the influence of Martha Simmonds, quarrelled with Fox. As soon as he was released (Oct. 1656) he proceeded to Bristol, which he entered with his followers in the manner that the Lord entered Jerusalem. After examination by a Committee of the second Protectorate Parliament, he was very severely punished for blasphemy. He appears to have repented by c. 1657, was released from prison by the Long Parliament in 1659, reconciled with Fox in 1660 and eventually restored to much of his former popularity. He wrote many tracts, among them How Sin is Strengthened and How it is Overcome (1657).

A Collection of Sundry Books, Epistles and Papers written by James Nayler (1716). M. R. Brailsford, A Quaker from Cromwell's Army (1927); E. Fogelklou, Koäkaren James Nayler. Ein Sällsam Gestalt i Religionens Historia (1929; Eng. tr., 1931). G. F. Nuttall, James Nayler. A Fresh Approach (lecture, 1954). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 130–3.

NAZARENE. The term has been applied in a Christian context in various senses. In several of these the form 'Nasorean' is also found.

(1) In the NT Christ is called 'Jesus the Nazarene', which is usually understood as the equivalent of 'from *Nazareth', i.e. the place of his residence (cf. Mt. 21. 11, Jn. 1. 45, Acts 10. 38). In Mt. 2. 23 it is said to have been prophesied that the Christ should 'be called a Nazarene', but the original ref. and meaning of this prophecy, which is not found in the OT, is doubtful. Perhaps the original ref. here was not to Nazareth (so M. Lidzbarski, R. *Reitzenstein), though it is so understood by the Evangelist. In Mt., Jn. and Acts the form is Ναζωραῖος, in Mk. Ναζαρηνός, while in Lk. both forms occur.

(2) The 'Nazarenes' appears as a Jewish term for the early Christians in Acts 24. 5, and continued to be so used for some centuries. It is sometimes met with in Jewish literature in the form 'Noserim'.

(3) 'Nazarenes' occurs also as a name given by 4th-cent. writers to groups of Christians of Jewish race in Syria, who continued to obey much of the Jewish Law though they were otherwise orthodox Christians. They used a version of the Gospel in Aramaic, known as the 'Gospel acc. to the *Hebrews' (which has hence sometimes been termed the 'Gospel of the Nazarenes'). The sect had no doubt existed from the earliest times of Christianity.

(4) The *Mandaeans (q.v.) are described as Nasoreans in some of their earliest literature.

On (1) G. F. Moore, 'Nazarene and Nazareth' in F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, I. i (1920), pp. 426–32. J. A. Sanders, 'NAZΩPAIOΣ in Matt. 2.23' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxxiv (1965), pp. 169–72. H. H. Schaeder in T.W.B., iv (1942), pp. 879–84, s.v. Ναζαρηνός with extensive bibl.

NAZARETH. The village in Galilee which was the home of the BVM and St. *Joseph, and where Christ was brought up and lived till the beginning of His ministry. It lies on a hill overlooking the valley of Esdraelon. It is not mentioned outside the NT. Today the town is a popular place of pilgrimage, many of its shrines having been rebuilt after their destruction by the Mohammedans in the Middle Ages. Among its more important sanctuaries are the 'Church of the Annunciation', believed to be erected over the house of Mary, the 'Church of the Nutrition' (now the Church of St. Joseph), on the traditional site of that of St. Joseph, and the beautiful 'St. Mary's Well'. See also Nazarene.

T. Tobler, Nazareth (Berlin, 1868); G. Le Hardy, Histoire de Nazareth et de ses sanctuaires. Étude chronologique des documents (1905). P. P. Viaud, Nazareth et ses deux églises de l'Annonciation et de St.-Joseph d'après les fouilles récentes (1910); C. Kopp, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte Nazareths' in Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society, xviii (1938), pp. 187–228 (useful bibl., pp. 224–8), xix ('1939–40'), pp. 82–119, 253–85, xx (1940), pp. 29–42, and xxi (1948), pp. 148–64. Id., Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 86–129; Eng. tr. The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 49–86. B. Bagatti, O.F.M., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 318–33, s.v. See also bibl. to previous entry.

NAZARITES (so AV; in RV, more correctly, 'Nazirites'). A body of Israelites specially consecrated to the service of God who were under vows to abstain from eating or drinking the produce of the vine, to let their hair grow, and to avoid defilement by contact with a dead body (Num. 6). Originally the vow seems to have been for life (e.g. that of *Samson), but later it was limited to a definite period. If the Nazarite suffered defilement by the sudden death of someone beside him, he must undergo purification by shaving and burning his hair and renewing his vow. St. *Paul demonstrated his loyalty to Judaism by joining with certain Jewish Christians who were completing such vows at Jerusalem (Acts 21. 23–6).

See commentaries on Num. 6. G. B. *Gray, 'The Nazarite' in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 201–11. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), p. 361 f., with bibl. p. 456 (Eng. tr., ed. 2, 1965, p. 466 f., with bibl. p. 549). W. R. *Smith–T. K. *Cheyne in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 3362–4, s.v.

NAZARIUS, St. A martyr whose body St. *Ambrose discovered in a garden outside Milan c. 395 and translated to the Church of the Apostles in the city, which was afterwards re-dedicated to St. Nazarius. In the same garden, St. Ambrose later discovered the body of another martyr, St. Celsus. Nothing else is known of the saints, the later '*Passions' being purely fictitious. The two saints appear together in the Ambrosian calendar on 28 July, and on 10 May there is also a feast of the 'Translation of St. Nazarius'.

The primary source is Paulinus, Vita S. Ambrosii, xxxii f. (PL. xiv, 38 f.). Text of 'Passions' in AA.SS., Jul. VI (1729), pp. 503–34. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1057–60, s.v. 'Milan: xxvii, Saint-Nazaire'.

NAZIRITES. See Nazarites.

NEAL, DANIEL (1678–1743), historian of the *Puritans. After being educated at Merchant Taylors' School, he trained for the dissenting ministry, studying at Utrecht and *Leyden. He returned to London in 1703 to be assistant (1704), and two years later (1706) full, pastor of the Independent congregation in Aldersgate Street, a position he retained until his death. Here he was recognized as one of the best Puritan preachers of his day. Of great historical interest are his History of New England, containing an Impartial Account of the Civil and Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Country to the Year of Our Lord 1700 (2 vols., 1720), and esp. his History of the Puritans, 1517–1688 (1732–8), both valuable compilations, though the latter suffers from a strong Puritan bias. Neal also wrote a book defending inoculation against smallpox (1722).

Neal's History of the Puritans was ed. J. Toulmin (5 vols., Bath, 1793–7; repr. London, 1822), with life in vol. i, pp. xvi–xxxiii. J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 134–6.

NEALE, JOHN MASON (1818–66), Anglican author and hymn-writer. He was educated at Sherborne and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became imbued with High Church ideals, and in 1839, with his lifelong friend B. *Webb, was one of the founders of the *Cambridge Camden Society (q.v.). Ordained in 1842, he was presented to the living of Crawley, W. Sussex, but ill-health prevented his being instituted, and he spent the next three winters in Madeira. From 1846 till his death he held the wardenship of Sackville College, E. Grinstead, at a salary of £28 a year, dividing his activities between his manifold literary work and the Sisterhood of St. Margaret which he founded in 1855. This community, whose rules were framed on those of St. *Francis of Sales' Visitation and St. *Vincent de Paul's Sisters of Charity, was founded esp. for the education of girls and the care of the sick, and though at first it met with violent opposition, and even rioting, from Protestant quarters, it developed into one of the leading religious communities in the C of E. Neale's ritualistic practices led to his inhibition by the Bp. of *Chichester (A. T. Gilbert) from 1847 to 1863.

Neale excelled as a hymn-writer. Among the favourites of his own compositions are 'O happy band of pilgrims' and 'Art thou weary' and of his translations from Lat. and Gk. hymns, 'Jerusalem the golden' and 'Christian, dost thou see them?' His collections have also played a decisive part in modern Anglican worship. In the Hymnal Noted (two parts, 1852 and 1854), 94 out of 105 hymns are from his pen, and Hymns, Ancient and Modern* owes very much to his inspiration. His Commentary on the Psalms, begun in Madeira and completed by R. F. Littledale (4 vols., publd. 1860–74), is in essence a compilation from patristic and medieval authors. The History of the Holy Eastern Church (publd. in 5 vols., 1847–73) is a useful collection of material. Neale was also the author of numerous children's books, which were written to present Christian teaching in a simple and attractive form. The warmth of his devotional nature comes out clearly in his sermons, largely inspired by medieval models. Worn out by his labours, he died at 48. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 7 Aug.

Selections from the Writings of John Mason Neale was publd., London, 1884. Letters selected and ed. Mary S. Lawson (daughter), London, 1910; Collected ,Hymns, Sequences, and Carols also ed. Mary S. Lawson, ib., 1914. Memoir by Eleanor A. Towle, ib., 1906. A. G. Lough, The Influence of John Mason Neale (1962). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 143–6, with further reff.

NEANDER, JOACHIM (1650–80), German hymn-writer. After a somewhat riotous student life, he was converted in 1670 by hearing T. Under-Eyck, the pastor of St. Martin's church at Bremen. In 1673–4, during a winter at Frankfurt, where he made the acquaintance of P. J. *Spener, he became an ardent adherent of the *Pietist Movement. Most of his hymns date from the years 1674 to 1679, when he was rector of the Latin School of Düsseldorf. They reflect not only his deep Pietist faith but also his intense love of the beauties of nature. Many of them have been translated into English, perhaps the best known being 'Praise to the Lord, the Almighty'.

His 'Hymns' were first ed. at Bremen, 1680; later edd., with additional hymns, include those of Berlin, 1707, and Amsterdam, 1725. J. F. Iken, Joachim Neander, sein Leben und seine Lieder (1880). J. Mearns in J. Julian (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (ed. 2, 1907), pp. 790–2. E. Simons in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 687–90, s.v.

NEANDER, JOHANN AUGUST WILHELM (1789–1850), ecclesiastical historian. David Mendel was a Jew by birth. After coming under the influence of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he was baptized in 1806 and took the name of Neander. At first interested in speculative theology, he soon turned to Church history and taught this subject at Berlin from 1813 till his death. His early works were monographs on *Julian the Apostate (1812), St. *Bernard (1813), *Gnosticism (1818), St. *Chrysostom (1822), and *Tertullian (1824); also Denkwürdigkeiten (1823–4). His General Church History (6 vols., 1826–52), which went down to c. 1450, followed. It was based on a wide study of original sources, somewhat uncritically treated however, and exercised great influence. Unlike J. L. *Mosheim, whose interest was in institutions, Neander paid most attention to persons, and made it his aim to discover in Church history the interpenetration of human life by the Divine. A convinced Protestant, though eirenic in temper, he regarded outward ordinances, esp. the priesthood, as dangerous to Christian simplicity. Neander also wrote on the Life of Christ (1837; in reply to D. F. *Strauss).

Collected ed. of Neander's works, 14 vols., Gotha, 1862–7. P. *Schaff, Saint Augustin, Melanchthon, Neander (1886), pp. 128–68; A. F. J. Wiegand, Neanders Leben (Erfurt, 1889). Commemorative discourse by A. *Harnack (Berlin, 1889). K. R. Hagenbach, 'Neander's Verdienste um die Kirchengeschichte' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, xxiv (1851), pp. 543–94. G. Uhlhorn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 679–87; K. Scholder in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), col. 1388 f., both s.v., with bibl.

NECTARIUS, St. (d. 397), Bp. of *Constantinople. He was born at Tarsus in Cilicia and rose to the office of praetor at Constantinople. Though unbaptized he was selected by *Theodosius I in 381 to succeed St. *Gregory Nazianzen in the imperial see. After baptism he was consecrated Bp. and presided over the final stages of the (2nd) *Oecumenical Council, then in session. J. Kunze suggested that Nectarius's formal profession of his faith at the Council in the words of the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed accounts for the association of this Creed with the Council. Despite his long episcopate, little is recorded of him. He died on 27 Sept. 397 and was succeeded by St. John *Chrysostom. A sermon by him on a certain St. Theodore, perhaps a martyr under *Julian (d. 363), survives. Feast day, 11 Oct.

*Socrates, H.E., V. viii, and *Sozomen, H.E., VII. xvi. His Sermon on St. Theodore will be found in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxix, 1821–40 (from Cod. Nann. 134, saec. xiii; repr. from A. *Gallandi). J. Kunze, Das Nicänisch-Konstantinopolitanische Symbol (1898). W. M. Sinclair in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 11–14.

NECTARIUS (1605–c. 1680), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 1661 to 1669. Educated by the monks of *Sinai, he became a monk and later studied under the Neo-Aristotelian Theophilus Corydalleus at *Athens. He was a vigorous opponent of all W. theology, attacking at once the Roman claims and the Calvinist doctrines of Cyril *Lucar. In 1662 he expressed his warm approval of the 'Confession' of Peter *Mogila, and in 1672 he took a prominent part in the Synod of *Jerusalem. His treatise against the Papacy (Περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ πάπα ἀντίρρησις) was published by his successor, *Dositheus, in 1682.

V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 56–8 with full bibl.

NEHEMIAH, Jewish leader of the post-exilic period. The cup-bearer to the Persian king, Artaxerxes (probably the first of that name, 'Longimanus'), he obtained leave to visit Palestine on a mission of help, and, accompanied by the escort provided by the king, arrived in *Jerusalem in 444 B.C. (Neh. 1 f.). Here, despite much hostility from the local officials and reports of a threatened attack from Samaria, he supervised the speedy completion of the rebuilding of the city walls (Neh. 2–6). Nehemiah's period of leave soon ended and he had to return to the Persian court. In 432 B.C., however, he made a second journey to Jerusalem, and now introduced some important moral and religious reforms, insisting, e.g., on *Sabbath observance and denouncing intermarriage between Jews and non-Jews (Neh. 13). His work was carried further by *Ezra (q.v.), who probably lived some fifty years later.

For bibl. see Comm. to Books of *Ezra and Nehemiah and other works cited s.v. H. H. Rowley, 'Nehemiah's Mission and its Background' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxvii (1955), pp. 528–61, repr. in Men of God (1963), pp. 211–45.

NEHEMIAH, Book of. See Ezra and Nehemiah, Books of.

NELSON, ROBERT (1656–1715), *Nonjuring layman. Convinced of pronounced Church principles by G. *Bull, who was his private tutor, he strongly disapproved of the Revolution of 1688 and went abroad to avoid it. When he returned in 1691, he made friends with many of the leading Nonjurors, and became one himself. He did not, however, altogether sever his connexions with the 'Conformists', and eventually returned to the Established Church in 1710, though remaining a Jacobite in his political sympathies. Throughout his life he generously supported many philanthropic objects, notably the *S.P.C.K. and the *S.P.G. His publications include a Companion for the Festivals and Fasts of the C of E (1704), a book which long continued very popular, and a Life of Bishop Bull (1713).

C. F. Secretan, Memoirs of the Life and Times of the pious Robert Nelson (1860). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 210–12.

NEMESIUS OF EMESA (fl. c. 390), Christian philosopher. Beyond the fact that he was Bp. of Emesa in Syria, nothing is known of his life. His treatise Περὶ Φύσεως Ἀνθρώπου ('On Human Nature') is an attempt to construct on a mainly *Platonic basis a doctrine of the soul agreeable with the Christian revelation. Probably through confusion with the similar title of St. *Gregory of Nyssa's anthropological treatise Περὶ Κατασκευῆς Ἀνθρώπου, Nemesius's book was often cited as Gregory's in the Middle Ages. It was much used by St. *John of Damascus and, in Latin revisions, by several of the Schoolmen, notably Sts. *Albertus Magnus and *Thomas Aquinas.

Gk. text first publd. by N. Ellebod (Antwerp, 1565; based on two inferior MSS.). Later edd. by J. *Fell (Oxford, 1671; mainly reprod. of Ellebod) and C. F. Matthaei (Halle, 1802); this last repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xl, 504–817. Eng. tr., with introd. and notes, by W. Telfer in Library of Christian Classics, iv (1955), pp. 201–466. Lat. tr. by N. Alfanus, Abp. of Salerno, ed. C. Burkhard (Teub., 1917). W. Jaeger, Nemesios von Emesa. Quellenforschungen zum Neuplatonismus und seinen Anfängen bei Poseidonios (1914). E. Skard, 'Nemesiosstudien' in Symbolae Osloenses, xv–xvi (1936), pp. 23–43; xvii (1937), pp. 9–25; xviii (1938), pp. 31–41; xix (1939), pp. 46–56; xxii (1942), pp. 40–8. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 275–80; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 224 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 351–55. E. Venables in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 16, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 62–7, s.v. 'Némésius d'Émèse'; E. Skard in P.W., Suppl., vii (1940), cols. 562–66, s.v. 'Nemesios'.

NEOCAESAREA, Council of. A Cappadocian Council of uncertain date (probably early 4th cent., before 325). It passed 15 canons concerned chiefly with disciplinary and marriage questions. Along with those of *Ancyra and *Gangra, the canons of this Council formed the earliest Greek corpus canonum (with the canons of *Nicaea prefixed). They were translated into Latin before A.D. 451, and thus became a constituent part of the canon law of both E. and W.

Hardouin, i, cols. 281–6; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 539–52. Canons also in Lauchert, p. 35 f.; crit. ed. of Lat. texts in E.O.M.I.A., II (pt. 1; 1907). Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 326–34.

NEOPHYTE (Gk. νεόφυτος, lit. 'newly planted'). The word occurs in 1 Tim. 3. 6 in the sense of 'newly converted' and was generally used in the early Church of the recently baptized. In acc. with St. Paul's admonition not to make a neophyte a bishop, the First Council of Nicaea (A.D. 325, can. 2) postponed the admission of neophytes to holy orders until the bishop deemed them sufficiently strong in the faith.

NEOPLATONISM. The philosophical system of *Plotinus (c. 205–70) and his successors. It drew its inspiration and ideas from *Plato, but its beliefs were more closely knit and its purposes more directly religious. In its earlier phases it was esp. centred at *Alexandria, which had long since displaced *Athens as the intellectual centre of the Roman world. The system soon spread to *Rome (where Plotinus himself taught from 244 onwards) and the rest of the Empire; and by the early 5th cent. it had gained a firm footing at Athens. Among its most outstanding representatives after Plotinus were *Porphyry (c. 232–c. 303; q.v.), *Iamblichus (c. 250–330; q.v.), Proclus (410–85, an encyclopaedic thinker, 'the Aristotle of Neo-Platonism' [E. R. Dodds]), Damascius (b. c. 480, head of the Academy when Justinian closed it in 529) and the Latin Neo-platonist, Chalcidius.

The main formative influences on Neoplatonism are somewhat obscure. Plotinus expresses his special indebtedness to *Ammonius Saccas, of whom, however, very little is known. While a sympathetic interest in Platonic doctrines had long existed among religious philosophers, both Jewish (*Philo) and Christian (*Pantaenus, *Clement of Alexandria, *Origen), at Alexandria, it is not clear that Plotinus himself drew directly on any of these thinkers. He has closer affinities with some of the later pagan philosophers, esp. Atticus and Albinus (2nd cent. A.D.) and Numenius of Apamea (c. 150–200), a Neo-Pythagorean, for whom Plato was 'Moses writing Attic Greek' (Μωυσῆς Ἀττικίζων).

The main purpose of the Neoplatonists was to provide a sound and satisfying intellectual basis for a religious and moral life. In the ultimate One which lies behind all experience, the dualism between Thought and Reality was to be overcome. This One can be known by man only by the method of abstraction. He must gradually divest his experience of all that is specifically human, so that in the end, when all attributes have been removed, only God is left. Yet the Neoplatonists were too serious to rest in a merely negative agnosticism, and maintained that the Absolute, which, as Plotinus said, 'has its centre everywhere but its circumference nowhere', could be reached by mystical experience.

The more ardent and thorough-going Neoplatonists were necessarily hostile to Christianity, esp. its doctrine of an Incarnation in history and its rejection of the ancient philosophies. On the other hand, Neoplatonist influences gradually made themselves felt on Christian theology. They came in partly from their diffusive impact on the whole of the later Roman world; for outside the circle of its professed adherents it was scarcely possible to distinguish the Neoplatonist elements from those which were Platonist and idealistic in a broader sense. For the influence of the latter see the entry Platonism. Instances of more specifically Neoplatonist influences in Christianity may be seen in the writings of St. *Augustine, *Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais, in those of the Pseudo-*Dionysius (who was esp. dependent on Proclus) and in the medieval thinkers who drew on the '*Liber de Causis' (q.v.).

E. R. Dodds, Select Passages Illustrating Neoplatonism (text, 1924; Eng. tr., 1923). A. Richter, Neo-Platonische Studien (5 vols., 1864–7); C. *Bigg, Neo-Platonism (1895); T. Whittaker, The Neo-Platonists (1901); P. Merlan, From Platonism to Neoplatonism (The Hague, 1953; ed. 2, 1960); W. Theiler, Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, x; 1966); Le Néo-platonisme. Colloques internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Sciences humaines (1971). A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1967), with extensive bibl. E. R. Dodds, Proclus' 'Elements of Theology' (1933; ed 2, 1963). Überweg, i, pp. 590–655, with bibl. pp. 186*–200*. W. R. *Inge in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 307–19. P. Hadot in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 334–6, s.v. See also bibliographies to Plotinus, Porphyry, and Iamblichus.

NEOSTADIENSIUM ADMONITIO. The reply made by the members of the 'Reformed' (*Calvinist) church at Heidelberg to the Lutheran 'Formula of *Concord' (1580). It was issued in 1581 by Z. Ursinus (1534–83) at Neustadt a.d. Haardt, whither the Heidelberg Calvinists had been forced to flee. It sets out in 12 chapters the more distinctive tenets of Calvinism.

Text pr. in Z. Ursinus's Opera Theologica (ed. 2 by Q. Reuter), ii (Heidelberg, 1612), cols. 893–1138. E. F. K. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), p. 709 f., s.v., with bibl.

NEOT, St. (c. 9th cent.), Saxon saint. He is known only from late and untrustworthy medieval legends, acc. to which he was a monk of *Glastonbury who in search of solitude retired to the place now known as St. Neot in Cornwall. He is said to have been visited and held in much honour by King *Alfred. After his death his relics are reputed to have found their way to St. Neots, Cambridgeshire. Feast day, 31 July.

Four principal lives survive: an Anglo-Saxon life (MS. Cotton Vespasian D. xiv), pr. by G. C. Gorham, The History and Antiquities of Eynesbury and St. Neot's in Huntingdonshire; and of St. Neot's in the County of Cornwall (1820), pp. 256–61; a 12th cent. Lat. life pr. by J. Whitaker, The Life of Saint Neot (1809), pp. 339–65, with extracts in G. C. Gorham, op. cit., pp. 261–3; a 13th–14th cent. anonymous Lat. life, from which the legends regarding his residence in Cornwall are derived, pr. in AA.SS., Jul. VII (1731), pp. 319–29; a 14th cent. metrical life, depending upon the last, pr. in J. Whitaker, op. cit., pp. 317–38. Study by G. H. Doble in 'Cornish Saints' Series, No. 21 (Exeter, 1929). Hardy, i (pt. 2), pp. 538–49. M. Bateson in D.N.B., xl (1894), p. 221 f.

NEPOMUK, JOHN OF. See John of Nepomuk.

NEPOTISM. The bestowal of office or patronage on one's relations. The term is used esp. of the widespread abuse of the practice by certain 16th cent. Popes, e.g. *Clement VII and the Medici, *Paul III and the Farnese. The practice was condemned by St. *Pius V in the bull 'Admonet Nos' (1567).

NEREUS AND ACHILLEUS, Sts. (perhaps 1st cent.), Roman martyrs. Their remains were buried in the Cemetery of St. *Domitilla on the Via Ardeatina. Acc. to the inscription by Pope *Damasus on their tomb they were soldiers, acc. to their legendary 'Acta', eunuchs in Domitilla's household. These 'Acta' assert that all three were transported to the island of Terracina, where Nereus and Achilleus were beheaded and Domitilla burnt. The church built over their tomb dates from the later 4th cent. Feast day, in conjunction with St. *Pancras (and, until 1969, also with St. Domitilla), 12 May.

Early Lat. tr. of Acta in AA.SS., Mai. III (1680), pp. 6–13, with introd., pp. 4–6, and other material, pp. 13–16. Gk. text first ed. A. Wirth (Leipzig, 1890); also ed., with Germ. tr., by H. Achelis (T.U., xi, Hft. 2; 1893). F. Schaefer, 'Die Acten der heiligen Nereus und Achilleus' in R.Q., viii (1894), pp. 89–119. G. B. *de Rossi, 'Scoperta della basilica di S. Petronilla. Col sepolcro dei martiri Nereo ed Achilleo nel cimitero di Domitilla' in Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, Ser. 2, v (1874), pp. 5–35; id., 'Insigni scoperte nel cimitero di Domitilla: I, notizie preliminari sul sepolcro di S. Petronilla: scoperta d'un singolare monumento del sepolcro-altare dei martiri Nereo ed Achilleo', ib., vi (1875), pp. 5–11. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix, Hft. 1–2; 1918), pp. 90–4 ('Titulus de Fasciola oder SS. Nerei et Achillei'). Agnese Guerrieri, La chiesa dei SS. Nereo ed Achilleo (Collezione 'Amici delle Catacombe', xvi; 1951). P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, ii (S.T., xxii; 1909), pp. 43–55 ('I SS. Nereo ed Achilleo nell'epigramma damasiano'). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 1111–23, s.v. 'Nérée et Achillée'.

NERI, St. PHILIP. See Philip Neri, St.

NERO, CLAUDIUS (A.D. 37–68), Roman Emp. from 54. The last Emp. descended from Augustus, Nero was the son of the aristocrat Domitius Ahenobarbus and of Agrippina, sister of the Emp. Caligula. After her remarriage to the Emp. Claudius in 49 Nero was adopted by his stepfather, and after Claudius' murder was proclaimed Emp. at the age of sixteen by the Praetorian Guard and accepted by the Senate. The first eight years of his reign under the sage guidance of *Seneca and the Praetorian Prefect Burrus saw an enlightened administration at home and the extension of Roman power in Britain and Armenia. But later under the unscrupulous advice of the Prefects Tigellinus and Nymphidius his relations with the administrative class were embittered, esp. after the extensive conspiracy of Piso in A.D. 65, which led to savage repression. Meanwhile Nero scandalized public opinion by the murder of his overbearing mother and the removal of his wife Octavia in favour of his mistress Poppaea, and by his undignified appearance as a singer and charioteer in public performances at Rome. His supposed share in the great fire that destroyed a large part of Rome in A.D. 64, his erection of the vast 'Golden House' on much of the devastated area, and the frequent execution of aristocrats on political charges, combined to undermine his popularity. During the great rebellion of the Jews in Palestine the Roman armies and generals in Spain and Gaul turned against Nero. Deserted even by the Praetorians he committed suicide on 9 June 68, exclaiming, 'What an artist dies in me!'

Though Nero accepted extravagant honours he always refused the titles of divinity at Rome. He was interested in oriental cults, esp. Magianism, and his empress Poppaea favoured Judaism. Hence, possibly, when Nero sought scapegoats for the fire of 64 he picked on the rival sect of Christians, as *Tacitus records (Annales, xv. 44. 3), punishing them not only for incendiarism but for 'hatred of the human race', a charge normally made against Jews, while later tradition makes Nero the formal author of the technique of all Christian persecutions. But Nero was the Caesar to whose jurisdiction St. *Paul appealed from the tribunal of Festus at Caesarea (Acts 25. 11), though Nero prob. did not hear the case himself. Later both St. *Peter and St. Paul were executed at Rome during the reign of Nero, acc. to a substantial tradition. After Nero's death there was a widespread belief that he would return, and 'false Neros' appeared in the eastern provinces. The myth is perhaps indicated by the references to the Beast in Rev. 13. 11–18, where the '*number of the Beast' corresponds to 'Neron Caesar' in Gk. notation. See also Tacitus and Number of the Beast.

The principal sources are Tacitus, Annales, xiii–xvi; *Suetonius, 'Nero'; and Dio Cassius, Hist., lxi–lxiii. M. P. Charlesworth (ed.), Documents illustrating the Reigns of Claudius and Nero (1939), pp. 31–42; E. Mary Smallwood (ed.), Documents illustrating the Principates of Gaius, Claudius and Nero (Cambridge, 1967). B. W. Henderson, The Life and Principate of the Emperor Nero (1903). A. [E. P. B.] Weigall, Nero, Emperor of Rome (1930); M. A. Levi, Nerone e i suoi tempi (Biblioteca Storica Universitaria, Serie II, i; Milan, 1949); G. Walter, Néron (Paris, 1955; Eng. tr., 1957); E. Radius, La vita di Nerone (Milan, 1963); J. Bishop, Nero. The Man and the Legend (1964); B. H. Warmington, Nero. Reality and Legend (1969); M. Grant, Nero (London, 1970). K. Heinz, Das Bild Kaiser Neros bei Seneca, Tacitus, Sueton und Cassius Dio (Bern diss., 1948). J. Beaujeu, 'L'Incendie de Rome en 64 et les Chrétiens' in Latomus, xix (1960), pp. 65–80, 291–311. A. Momigliano in C.A.H., x (1934), pp. 702–42, with bibl. pp. 978–84. [E.] Hohl in P.W., Suppl., iii (1918), cols. 349–94, s.v. 'Domitius Ahenobarbus'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 1124–50, s.v. 'Néron', with bibl. See also works cited under Persecutions and Tacitus.

NERSES, St. (d. c. 373), sixth *Catholicos of the *Armenian Church. A direct descendant of *Gregory the Illuminator, he was educated at Caesarea in Cappadocia and held office at the royal court. After the death of his wife he became an ecclesiastic, and, having been elected Catholicos (perh. c. 363), undertook the reform of the Armenian Church. At the Council of Ashtishat (c. 365) he promulgated a number of decrees, e.g. against marriages between relations and on fasting. He also founded many hospitals and orphanages. He was deposed and exiled for criticizing the dissolute life of King Arshak III. Though restored under Arshak's successor Pap (369), he also incurred the hostility of the new King, whom he censured for his immorality, and was poisoned by him during a meal. His son, St. *Isaac the Great (q.v.), became one of his successors. Feast day, 19 Nov.

J. Markwart, Die Entstehung der armenischen Bistümer. Kritische Untersuchung der armenischen Überlieferung (Orientalia Christiana, xxvii, 2 [No. 80]; 1932, pp. 139–236), esp. pp. 223–33. Fr. Tournebize in D.H.G.E., iv (1930), col. 297 f., s.v. 'Arménie'.

NESTLE, EBERHARD (1851–1913), Biblical scholar. From 1883 to 1898 he held professorships at Ulm and *Tübingen, and from 1898 appointments at the Evangelical Theological Seminary at Maulbronn. His early work was done on the text of the *Septuagint. He increasingly interested himself, however, in the NT, and in 1898 published the first edition of his Greek NT text, which, though somewhat mechanically constructed from the existing editions of C. *Tischendorf, B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. *Hort, and B. *Weiss, came to be very widely used. In 1904 this text was adopted by the *British and Foreign Bible Society in place of the *Textus receptus. Nestle also wrote many grammars and other aids to Biblical study.

Nestle's Gk. text of the NT in its successive German edd. has been constantly revised (ed. from the 10th ed., 1914, onwards, by his son Erwin Nestle, and from the 22nd ed. (1956) by K. Aland). The apparatus was radically altered in the 13th ed. (1927) and notable improvements were also made in the text in the 17th ed. (1941). Further revisions in the apparatus and text were made between the 22nd and 26th editions (1979) to include readings from the *Bodmer papyri. H. Haag in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 424–6, s.v.

NESTORIANISM. The doctrine that there were two separate Persons in the Incarnate Christ, the one Divine and the other Human, as opposed to the orthodox doctrine that the Incarnate Christ was a single Person, at once God and man. It was characterized by the rejection of the term *Theotokos (q.v.).

Nestorius (d. c. 451), from whom the heresy takes its name, was a native of Germanicia in Syria Euphratensis. He entered a monastery at *Antioch, where he became imbued with the principles of the Antiochene theological school, and prob. studied under *Theodore of Mopsuestia. Soon he acquired a great reputation as a preacher; and in 428, when the see of *Constantinople became vacant, *Theodosius II, overriding the claims of the local candidates, invited Nestorius to fill the see. Nestorius at once proclaimed himself a zealous upholder of orthodoxy, eager to rid the city of heretics and schismatics. When his chaplain Anastasius preached against the use of the Theotokos as savouring of heresy (*Apollinarianism), Nestorius gave him full support. A violent controversy developed round the propriety of a term which had long been used by theologians of the highest orthodoxy and was now gaining in popularity since it gave theological expression to the growing devotion to the Virgin as the Mother of God. Nestorius's opponents succeeded in winning the support of St. *Cyril of Alexandria and the Egyptian monks to their cause. Both sides having appealed to Rome, at a Council held there in August 430, Nestorius's teaching was condemned by Pope *Celestine and Cyril was commissioned to pronounce sentence of deposition on Nestorius, if he would not submit. In Nov. 430 Cyril took action and on 7 Dec. 430 delivered his sentence into Nestorius's hands by legates sent to Constantinople, condemning Nestorius in a set of twelve anathemas and requiring him to retract within ten days. Meanwhile the Emp. had arranged a General Council to meet at *Ephesus in the following summer. It assembled on 22 June 431 and pronounced sentence of deposition on Nestorius (see Ephesus, Council of). Theodosius eventually acquiesced in its decision and Nestorius was sent back to his monastery at Antioch. In 435 Theodosius had his books condemned, and in 436 Nestorius was banished to Upper Egypt, where he died several years later (date unknown).

Nestorius's principal writings were his letters and sermons, which, however, for the most part, survive only in fragments. He was also the author of an extensive treatise, publd. in his last years and known as the 'Bazaar of Heracleides'. This was discovered c. 1895 and first publd. in 1910. Written when the theological climate had completely changed, Nestorius is here claiming that his own beliefs were identical with those then being sustained (against the *Eutychians) by the orthodox. The twelve 'Counter Anathemas' long ascribed to Nestorius have been shown by E. *Schwartz to be of much later date.

Opinion is widely divided as to what the doctrine of Nestorius really was and how far it was heretical. His sustained objection to the term 'Theotokos' has traditionally been held to imply that he asserted not only two different natures, but also two different persons, in Christ, the one the man, born of Mary. But we must not overlook that he repeatedly affirmed the oneness of Christ, though he preferred to speak of conjunction (συνάφεια) rather than of union (ἕνωσις). His fear of the Monophysite tendencies, which were actually to come into the open a few years later, led him to reject Cyril's conception of a hypostatic union (ἕνωσις καθ' ὑπόστασιν), substituting for it a union of the will (κατ' εὐδοκίαν). The latter term certainly savoured of *Adoptianism, of which he was actually, though unjustly, accused. Certainly his zeal for upholding the integrity of the two natures, which he believed to be both self-subsisting and therefore incapable of being physically united in the Person of the God-man, caused him to fall into unguarded language, and the fact that his own friends finally abandoned him supports the view that, by trying to defend, he actually compromised the Antiochene Christology.

After the Council of Ephesus the E. Bishops who refused to accept the Formula of 433 gradually constituted themselves a separate Nestorian Church. It had its centre in Persia, where the Christian community ('East Syrians'), whose independence of Antioch had been recognized since the Synod of Markabta (424), claimed to go back to Apostolic times. Within the Empire at *Edessa (Urhay, the 'Athens of Syria') a strong school of Nestorian theology developed under *Ibas, who had supported Nestorius at Ephesus (Bp. of Edessa from 435). After *Chalcedon (451) the hostility of the Monophysites to the Edessene school led many Nestorianizers to migrate to Persian territory. From the later 5th cent. several of the Persian kings, notably Peroz (457–84), actively supported them and under *Zeno they were finally expelled from Edessa in 489. The Nestorian school at Nisibis, which had been founded by *Barsumas (a pupil of Ibas and Bp. of Nisibis from 457), thus gradually supplanted Edessa as the main seat of Nestorian culture. At one time it had as many as 800 students and it is said to have inspired *Cassiodorus's school at Vivarium.

The ecclesiastical centre and see of the Patriarch (the 'Catholicos'; from 498 he took the title of 'Patriarch of the East') was fixed at Seleucia-Ctesiphon on the Tigris. In 484 Babaeus or Babowai, Patr. from 457, was put to death on the ground of conspiring with Constantinople. From the early 6th cent. the Nestorian Church was active in missionary work and established Christian settlements in Arabia (see Cosmas Indicopleustes), *India (see Malabar Christians), and E. Asia (see Sigan-Fu Stone). Despite occasional persecution from the ruling power the Church continued over several centuries in a relatively flourishing condition. In the 6th cent. it owed much to the successful administration of Mar Aba I (540–52), a convert from *Zoroastrianism, while monasticism was put on a sound footing by Abraham of Kaskar (491–586), the founder of the monastery on Mt. Izala, near Nisibis, and Mar Babai the Great (569–628). The latter, a considerable theologian, also defined Nestorian principles in his Book of the Union (sc. of the Godhead and Manhood in Christ).

Within twenty years of Mohammed's death (632) the Arab conquest of Persia was complete (651). The Christians met with moderately good treatment under the Caliphate, constituting an ahl al dhimma ('people of protection'), whose religious freedom was theoretically guaranteed in return for payment of the poll tax. Nisibis, with Jundishapur and Merv, flourished as centres of Nestorian culture. In the short reign of Omar II, a zealous Mohammedan (717–20), the Nestorians were faced with a temporary persecution, owing to the rigid enforcement of Islamic laws. About 775 the Patriarchal see was moved from Seleucia-Ctesiphon to Baghdad, and the Patriarch was for some centuries a considerable political figure. Nestorians often held positions of authority in the government, and scholars such as Hunein ibn Ishaq (d. 877) played an important part in the transmission of Greek philosophic and scientific literature to the Arab world. *Thomas of Marga's Book of Governors (c. 840) bears testimony to the ascetic and historical interests of the 9th cent. Another period of repression occurred under Mutawakkil (847–61). Initially favoured by the Mongols, the Nestorian Church suffered drastic losses in the 14th cent. after the conversion of the Mongol dynasty to Islam in 1295. A remnant who escaped capture by Timur (Tamerlane) fled to the mountains of Kurdistan, where their descendants have survived until modern times under the name of *Assyrian Christians (q.v.).

The liturgical language of the 'Church of the East' (as the Nestorian Church has always called itself) is Syriac, and three anaphoras are employed, attributed to Theodore of Mopsuestia, Nestorius, and the apostles *Addai and Mari. The last of these retains a number of very primitive elements.

The chief documents bearing on the original Nestorian controversy, incl. most of the surviving fragments and letters of Nestorius himself, will be found in the printed edd. (J. *Hardouin, J. D. *Mansi, and others) of the acta of the Council of Ephesus (q.v.); crit. text now publd. by E. Schwartz in A.C.O. The 'Bazaar of Heracleides' was first brought to the general notice of scholars by J. F. Bethune Baker, Nestorius and his Teaching (1908; with extracts from the 'Bazaar' tr. [by R. H. *Connolly]). Syr. text of 'Bazaar' ed. for the first time by P. Bedjan (Paris, 1910); Fr. tr. by F. Nau (Paris, 1910); Eng. tr., with introd. and studies, by G. R. *Driver–L. Hodgson (Oxford, 1925). Nestorius's fragments are collected in F. *Loofs, Nestoriana (Halle, 1905). On the true authorship of the Counter-anathemas, commonly ascribed to Nestorius, cf. E. Schwartz, Die Gegenanathematismen des Nestorius (Sb. (Bayr.), 1922, Hft. 1). On the historical course of the conflict, L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, iii (1910), pp. 313–88 (very critical of Cyril's handling of Nestorius); M. Jugie, A.A., Nestorius et la controverse nestorienne (1912; more sympathetic to Cyril). J. P. Junglas, Die Irrlehre des Nestorius (Trier, 1912); F. Loofs, Nestorius and his Place in the History of Christian Doctrine (1914). R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (C.H.S., 1940), esp. pp. 107–201. L. I. Scipioni, O.P., Ricerche sulla cristologia del 'Libro di Eraclide' di Nestorio. La formulazione teologica e il suo contesto filosofico (Paradosis, xi; 1956); Luise Abramowski, Untersuchungen zum Liber Heraclidis des Nestorius (C.S.C.O., ccxlii; Louvain, 1963). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 2–5, 74–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 336–8. F. Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiii (1903), pp. 736–49, and xxiv (1913), pp. 239–44, both s.v. 'Nestorius'; A. J. Maclean in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 323–32, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 76–157, s.v. 'Nestorius'. L. I. Scipioni, Nestorio e il consilio di Efeso (Milan, 1974). See also bibl. to Ephesus, Council of.

The chief literature on the Nestorians from the next generation onwards is surveyed and annotated in J. S. *Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, iii (1; Rome, 1725; 'De Scriptoribus Syris Nestorianis'. The series opens with the Catalogue of *Ebed-jesu, with extensive annotation) and iii (2; Rome, 1728; 'Dissertatio de Syris Nestorianis'). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 194–242, 285–335. J. Labourt, Le Christianisme dans l'empire perse sous la dynastie sassanide, 224–632 (1904). F. Nau, 'L'Expansion nestorienne en Asie' in Annales du Musée Guimet. Bibliothèque de Vulgarisation, xl [1913], pp. 193–383. A. R. Vine, The Nestorian Churches (1937; popular). A. K. Arvanitis, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἀσσυριακῆς Νεστοριανικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (Athens, 1968). A. S. Atiyah, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 237–302. J. Joseph, The Nestorians and their Muslim Neighbors (Princeton Oriental Studies, xx; 1961). G. P. Badger, The Nestorians and their Rituals (2 vols., 1852; descriptive account of contemporary practice as seen by a missionary, with Eng. tr. of Nestorian liturgical texts). A. J. Maclean–W. H. Browne, The Catholicos of the East and his People. Being the Impressions of Five Years' Work in the 'Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission' (1892). J. B. Chabot (ed. and tr.), Synodicon orientale ou recueil des synodes nestoriens (Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, xxxviii; 1902). W. de Vries, S.J., Sakramententheologie bei den Nestorianern (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxxiii; 1947). P. Kawerau, 'Die nestorianischen Patriarchate in der neueren Zeit' in Z.K.G., lxvii (1955–6), pp. 119–31. E. Tisserant–É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 157–323, s.v. 'Nestorius. 2. L'Église nestorienne'; J. Dauvillier in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 292–388, s.v. 'Chaldéen, (droit)'; M. Jugie, A.A.–G. de Vries, S.J., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1780–7, s.v. 'Nestorio e nestorianesmo'. See also bibl. to Assyrian Christians.

NESTORIAN STONE, The. See Sigan-Fu Stone, The.

NE TEMERE. The decree (2 Aug. 1907) of the Sacred *Congregation of the Council, promulgated by *Pius X to come into force on 19 Apr. 1908, putting the matrimonial legislation of the RC Church on a new basis. It was designed to remedy the confusions created by the Tridentine Tametsi decree (q.v.) (1563). Earlier attempts at revision were Benedict XVI's Matrimonia quae in locis (4 Nov. 1741) exempting Belgium and Holland from the operation of Tametsi and Pius X's constitution Provida sapientiaque (18 Jan. 1906) suspending its application in Germany for mixed marriages and the marriages of non-Catholics. The new regulations of Ne Temere were to be of universal application. No marriage between persons baptized as Catholics or who have been received into Catholic communion is valid unless celebrated before the parish priest or the Ordinary or a priest delegated by one or other of these. The same ruling holds if only one of the contracting parties is a Catholic. Hence, while the RC Church declines to recognize marriages in which a RC is involved, if solemnized before a Protestant minister or merely by a civil contract, it does recognize the marriage of two non-Catholics. To make 'surprise marriages' (mariages à la gaulmine) impossible, the decree also laid down that the parish priest must formally ask and receive the consent of the parties. The rulings of Ne Temere, with minor modifications, were taken over into the *Codex (can. 1094–1103). In mixed marriages, however, local Ordinaries are empowered by *Paul VI's Matrimonia mixta (31 Mar. 1970) to dispense from the observance of this canonical form in cases of serious difficulty, provided there is some form of public ceremony.

Text in A.S.S., xl (1907), pp. 527–30. See also bibl. to Matrimony.

NETHERLANDS, Christianity in the. See Holland, Christianity in.

NETTER, THOMAS (c. 1377–1430), *Carmelite theologian. Born at Saffron Walden in Essex, he was sent by his superiors to study in Oxford, where he gained a reputation for sound scholarship ('Doctor praestantissimus'). In 1409 he was sent to the Council of *Pisa as the representative of King Henry IV, whose adviser he had become, and on his return to England took an active part in the struggle against the followers of J. *Wycliffe. Henry V chose him for his confessor and, after Netter had been elected Provincial of the English Carmelites in 1414, appointed him one of his mandatories to the Council of *Constance. In 1419 he was sent on a political mission to Poland. Later he became spiritual adviser to *Henry VI, his former pupil. The latter part of his life appears to have been chiefly taken up with the composition of his main work, 'Doctrinale antiquitatum fidei ecclesiae catholicae', in which he sought to refute the doctrines of Wycliffe and the *Hussites from the teaching of the Bible and the Fathers. The 'Fasciculi Zizaniorum' (a collection of anti-Wycliffite documents) is traditionally ascribed to him; it is probable that only the latter part of the compilation is his work.

The best ed. of his 'Doctrinale' is that of B. Blanciotti, Ord. Carm. (3 vols., Venice, 1757–9), with introd., vol. i, pp. ix–xviii. Life herein contained repr. in Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum, i (1909), pp. 298–303, 329–35, and 361–5. Earlier edd. of the 'Doctrinale', 3 vols., Paris, c. 1520–32, and 3 vols., Venice, 1571. Various letters, with brief introd., in B. Zimmerman, O.C.D. (ed.), Monumenta Historica Carmelitana, i (Lérins, 1907), pp. 442–82. The 'Fasciculi Zizaniorum' is ed. in part by W. W. Shirley (R.S., 1858). P. R. McCaffrey, Ord. Carm., The White Friars. An Outline Carmelite History with Special Reference to the English-Speaking Provinces (Dublin, 1936), pp. 143–51. J. A. Robson, Wyclif and the Oxford Schools (Cambridge, 1961), pp. 223–40. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 231–4; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1343–4.

NEUMANN, THERESE (1898–1962), of Konnersreuth in Bavaria, stigmatized visionary. After a normal childhood and youth, Therese Neumann lost her health in 1918 through overstrain in helping to put out a fire. Having become bedridden in the same year and blind in 1919, she regained her sight in 1923 on the day of the beatification of *Teresa of Lisieux. Two years later, on the day of the canonization of the same saint, she became able to walk again. During Lent 1926 she began to have visions of the Passion and received the *stigmata, which remained visible and bled on Fridays. She was reputed to have taken no solid food after 1922, and after 1927 no nourishment whatever except daily Holy Communion. After her visions she was usually in an abnormal state of absorption during which she was credited with supernatural faculties such as ability to read consciences and to discern the authenticity of relics. The events of Konnersreuth, which soon became a place of pilgrimage for the curious as well as the devout, were for years a topic of lively discussion; but the RC ecclesiastical authorities have abstained from any pronouncement on the case.

L. Witt, Das kleine Leben der stigmatisierten Jungfrau Therese von Konnersreuth (1927); F. Gerlich, Die stigmatisierte Therese Neumann (2 vols., 1927); F. X. Huber, Das Mysterium von Konnersreuth (1950). Among the many other sympathetic works those available in English include studies by R. W. Hynek (ed. 3, Prague, 1932; Eng. tr., 1932, with bibl.), C. E. Roy–W. A. Joyce (London, 1936), and J. Teodorowicz (Salzburg, 1936; Eng. tr., St. Louis, Mo., 1940). More critical studies by J. Deutsch, Aerztliche Kritik an Konnersreuth (1938); B. Poray Madeyski, Le Cas de la visionnaire stigmatisée. Thérèse Neumann de Konnersreuth (1940). Other studies by Hilda C. Graef (Cork, 1950) and P. Siwek, S.J. (Paris, 1950; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1954). P. Siwek in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 365 f., s.v.

NEUME. (1) From Gk. πνεῦμα, 'breath'. In plainsong, a prolonged group of notes, sung to a single syllable, esp. at the end of the '*Alleluia' and in the *responsories of the Mass. (2) From Gk. νεῦμα, 'sign'. The sign employed in the earliest plainsong to indicate the melody. These signs are probably derived from the accent-marks of the grammarians. They are thought to date from the 8th century.

NEUTRAL TEXT, The. The type of text of the Greek NT represented by the two MSS., *Codex Vaticanus and *Codex Sinaiticus, and so designated by F. J. A. *Hort because it was supposed to be less subject to corrupting influences of editorial revision than any other. There seems little doubt that the origin of the text is to be connected with Egypt (though either or both MSS. may have been actually written elsewhere); and some scholars have believed it to be the work of *Hesychius, an Alexandrian who is said to have revised the *Septuagint.

B. F. Westcott and F. J. A. Hort, The New Testament in the original Greek, i (1881), esp. pp. 126–30 ('The Neutral Text and its Preservation').

NEVIN, JOHN WILLIAMSON (1803–86), American Protestant theologian. He was a native of Pennsylvania, of *Presbyterian upbringing and Scottish descent. From 1823 to 1828 he studied at Princeton Theological Seminary, being for part of the time in charge of the classes of Charles *Hodge. In 1828 he published his widely used Summary of Biblical Antiquities (2 vols.). From 1830 to 1840 he was professor of Biblical literature at the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa. Here, under the influence of the writings of J. A. W. *Neander, he gradually abandoned the dogmas of Presbyterianism for a more liberal theology, and became closely associated with P. *Schaff. In 1840 he became professor of theology in the Mercersburg (Pa.) Theological Seminary, a 'German Reformed' institution, where, having transferred his allegiance from the Presbyterian to this Reformed Church, he gained an increasing influence. In 1843 he attacked the then prevailing methods of revivalist preaching in The Anxious Bench: A Tract for the Times. In 1844 Schaff joined him from Germany, and the theological doctrines for which both stood became known as the '*Mercersburg Theology'. In 1846 he published The Mystical Presence, a defence of a doctrine of the Eucharist which conceded a 'Real Presence' and advocated a more sacramental conception of Christianity than is ordinarily held among Protestants. In 1853 he retired into private life on account of weak health, but from 1861 to 1866 he again lectured at, and from 1866 to 1876 was president of, the reorganized Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Philadelphia.

T. Appel, The Life and Work of John Williamson Nevin (1889). J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology. Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961). W. W. Sweet in Dict. Amer. Biog., xiii (1934), p. 442 f.

NEW CHURCH. See Swedenborg, Emmanuel.

NEW ENGLISH BIBLE. See Bible (English Versions).

NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH. See Swedenborg, Emmanuel.

NEW ROME. A name for *Constantinople, which, acc. to *Sozomen (Hist. Eccl., ii. 3), was given to the city by the Emp. *Constantine himself. The Council of Constantinople of 381 lays down (can. 3) that 'the Bp. of Constantinople is to have honorary pre-eminence (ἔχειν τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς) after the Bp. of Rome, because Constantinople is New Rome (διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὴν νέαν Ῥώμην)'.

NEW TESTAMENT (Gk. Καινὴ Διαθήκη, Lat. Novum Testamentum). In the sense of 'new dispensation', a term denoting the Canonical Books belonging exclusively to the Church, in contradistinction to those styled *Old Testament (q.v.) which the Church shares with the Synagogue. The use of the word διαθήκη for the records of the OT dispensation has its roots in St. *Paul (2 Cor. 3. 14) and from *Tertullian onwards 'Novum Testamentum' came to be accepted as a technical term. The NT contains the four Gospels, Acts, the Pauline and the 'Catholic' Epistles, and the Book of Revelation. See also Canon of Scripture.

NEW YEAR'S DAY. In the pre-Christian era it was celebrated with great solemnity both by the Jews, who reckoned the year from the Feast of the New Moon at the end of Sept., and in the pagan empire. Acc. to the Julian Calendar, the Roman year began on 1 Jan., and the day was marked by the 'Saturnalia'. Christians were not only forbidden to participate in these festivities, but even had special fasts and Masses of expiation on the day, facts attested by the Second Council of Tours (567) and several Sacramentaries containing Masses and Offices 'ad prohibendum ab idolis'. The later Christian practice of reckoning the beginning of the year varied acc. to the different countries. In England from early times the year began with the Feast of the *Annunciation (25 Mar.), in Germany with *Christmas, and in France and the Low Countries with *Easter. Since *Gregory XIII's reform of the calendar in 1582, 1 Jan. came to be generally adopted as the first day of the year on the Continent, though this date was not accepted in England until 1752. In the E. *Orthodox Church, New Year's Day (here, 1 Sept.) is solemnized in many hymns, but in the W. until recent years the day had no liturgical significance, except for the fact of its coinciding with the Feast of the *Circumcision (q.v.). In the RC Church it was designated as the Octave of the Nativity of Christ in 1960; it is now also observed as the Solemnity of the Motherhood of the BVM. In England the custom of an informal 'watch-night' service, however, on the night of 31 Dec.–1 Jan. is often met with, esp. in the *Methodist Church.

F. Bünger, Geschichte der Neujahrsfeier in der Kirche (1911). R. L. Poole, 'The Beginning of the Year in the Middle Ages' in Proceedings of the British Academy, x (1921–1923), pp. 113–37; repr. in Studies in Chronology and History (Oxford, 1934), pp. 1–27.

NEW ZEALAND, Christianity in. The first Christian mission to the Maoris was established in 1814 at the Bay of Islands by Samuel Marsden (1764–1838), an Anglican chaplain in New South Wales. By the 1840s a large proportion of the Maoris had accepted Christianity. Extensive European colonization began, leading to the establishment of Churches of all the main denominations. The Anglican see of New Zealand was set up in 1841, with G. A. *Selwyn as the first bishop; it was soon divided and came to comprise nine sees. In 1928 a Maori (F. A. Bennett, 1871–1950) was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Aoteoroa to supervise work among the Maoris, and in 1978 the see (previously suffragan to Waiapu) was raised to diocesan status, with a Maori Bishop. The RC Church established two dioceses in 1848 and a Province (under the Abp. of Wellington) in 1896. In the population as a whole Anglicans are the largest body (29 per cent in 1976), followed by the *Presbyterians (18 per cent), RCs (15 per cent), and *Methodists (5 per cent). Among the Maoris the RCs come second to the Anglicans, followed by the Ratana Church, an indigenous body founded by the Maori healer T. W. Ratana (1870–1939).

W. Williams, Christianity among the New Zealanders (London, 1867); H. Jacobs, New Zealand ('Colonial Church Histories' [c. 1889]); H. T. Purchas, A History of the English Church in New Zealand (Christchurch and London, 1914). W. P. Morrell, The Anglican Church in New Zealand. A History (Dunedin, 1973). W. Yate, An Account of New Zealand: and of the Formation and Progress of the Church Missionary Society's Mission in the North Island (London, 1835). H. L. Clarke, Constitutional Church Government (1924), pp. 168–95. R. Dickson, History of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand (Dunedin, 1899); J. R. Elder, The History of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand (Christchurch, 1940). Latourette, v, pp. 177–97, and vii, pp. 190–192, with further bibl. reff.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 371–77, v (1963), pp. 253–7.

NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY (1801–90), *Tractarian leader and later Cardinal. He was brought up in the C of E under Evangelical influence. He entered Trinity College, Oxford, in June 1817, became Fellow of Oriel in 1822, and was ordained deacon in 1824. In 1825 he was appointed vice-principal of Alban Hall by R. *Whately, and in 1828 vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford. In 1832–3 he toured S. Europe and on returning became intimately associated with the *Oxford Movement, in which he was the leading spirit. His sermons in St. Mary's, published as Parochial and Plain Sermons (1834–42), had a profound influence on the religious life not only of Oxford but of the whole country. Their spirituality was based on a systematic study of the Fathers which bore fruit in The Arians of the Fourth Century (1833), whereas the Tracts for the Times* (1833–41), 24 of which came from his pen, were popular statements of his religious position. Directed 'against Popery and Dissent', they defended his thesis of the 'Via media', i.e. the belief that the C of E held an intermediate position, represented by the patristic tradition, as against modern Romanism on the one hand and modern Protestantism on the other. This belief received developed expression in his Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church (1837) and in his Lectures on Justification (1838). In the famous Tract No. 90 (1841) he advocated the interpretation of the *Thirty-Nine Articles in a sense generally congruous with the decrees of *Trent. The Tract, which caused a violent controversy, was condemned by the Hebdomadal Board, and R. *Bagot, Bp. of Oxford, imposed silence on its author. Meanwhile, from 1839 onwards, Newman began to have doubts about the claims of the Anglican Church, and from 1841 onwards he gradually gave up his position in Oxford, living from 1842 at the neighbouring village of Littlemore, which was at that date part of the ecclesiastical parish of St. Mary's. Here he set up a semi-monastic establishment and, during the next years, lived in retirement with a few friends. He resigned the incumbency of St. Mary's on 18 Sept. 1843, preaching a few days later a celebrated sermon in Littlemore church on 'The Parting of Friends'. On 9 Oct. 1845 he was received into the RC Church. Almost immediately afterwards he issued his Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine in defence of his change of allegiance.

Having been ordained in Rome, he established the Oratorians at Birmingham in 1849, was in Ireland as rector of the short-lived RC university in Dublin from 1854 to 1858, and, on his return to England, became involved in the affair of the Rambler, a periodical which published a disparaging review of a book by H. E. *Manning for which Newman was held responsible. This incident was the immediate cause of the rupture between the two men and of Newman's strained relations with Rome during the following years. In 1864 a controversy with C. Kingsley resulted in his Apologia pro vita sua, which, by its combination of frankness and delicacy, won him the sympathies of RCs and others alike. In the next year he wrote The Dream of Gerontius depicting the journey of the soul to God at the hour of death, an almost Dantesque poem inspired by the Requiem Offices. In 1870 he published A Grammar of Assent, the work which contains much of his ripest thought. It is esp. remarkable for its differentiation between real and notional assent, its analysis of the function of the conscience in our knowledge of God and of the role of the 'illative sense', i.e. the faculty of judging from given facts by processes outside the limits of strict logic, in reaching religious certitude. In 1877 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, and two years later *Leo XIII made him Cardinal-Deacon of St. George in Velabro.

Newman's thought was nourished by the Fathers rather than by the Schoolmen, and his main contribution to the thought of his age lay much more in the fields of psychological analysis and acute moral perception than in matters strictly theological. His fruitful use of the idea of development, in its application to the growth of Christian doctrine, and his profound insight into the nature and motives of religious faith, place him in the first rank of modern Christian thinkers. His ideals for Christian religious education were set forth in his Idea of a University (1852). Though unsuccessful in most of his undertakings in the RC Church during his lifetime, his genius has come to be more and more recognized after his death, and his influence both on the restoration of RCism in England and the advance of Catholic ideas in the C of E can hardly be exaggerated.

His more important writings have often been reissued, notably Parochial and Plain Sermons, The Idea of a University, the Apologia, and The Dream of Gerontius. For his earlier life, his autobiographical Apologia pro vita sua (q.v., 1864) is the fundamental source, though its scope is limited by its purpose of self-defence. Further primary material, for his Anglican period, in Anne Mozley, Letters and Correspondence of J. H. Newman during his Life in the English Church (2 vols., 1891); for his RC period (esp.), in W. Ward, The Life of John Henry Newman (2 vols., 1912). Letters and Diaries, ed. C. S. Dessain, Cong. Orat., et al. (1961 ff.). Autobiographical Writings, ed. with introd. by H. Tristram, Cong. Orat. (1955). There is also abundant material in the biographies of his associates in the Oxford Movement. Other lives by R. H. *Hutton ('English Leaders of Religion', London, 1891), W. Barry (London, 1904), H. *Bremond (Paris, 1906; Eng. tr., 1907), J. Lewis May (London, 1929), F. L. Cross (ib., 1933), R. Sencourt (pseud., ib., 1948), L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat. (Paris, 1952; Eng. tr., 1958), [L.] Meriol Trevor (2 vols., London, 1962), and C. S. Dessain, Cong. Orat. (ib., 1966). E. A. *Abbott, The Anglican Career of Cardinal Newman (2 vols., 1892; hostile); J. Guitton, La Philosophie de Newman (1933), with bibl.; G. C. Faber, Oxford Apostles (1933); D. Gorce, Newman et les pères [1934]; Maisie Ward, Young Mr. Newman (1948); R. D. Middleton, Newman and Bloxam (1947); id., Newman at Oxford (1950); Hilda [C.] Graef, God and Myself. The Spirituality of John Henry Newman (1967). T. Kenny, The Political Thought of John Henry Newman (1967). J. Coulson, Newman and the Common Tradition. A Study in the Language of Church and Society (Oxford, 1970). J. Rickaby, S.J., Index to the Works of John Henry Newman (1914). W. S. Lilly in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 340–51.

NEWTON, ISAAC (1642–1727), mathematician and natural philosopher. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1667 and in 1669 succeeded I. *Barrow as Lucasian Prof. of mathematics. In 1688–9 and 1703–5 he represented the university in the House of Commons. After 1694 he moved to London, being appointed Master of the Mint in 1699 and knighted by Queen *Anne in 1705. He had been a member of the Royal Society since 1672 and was its president from 1703 until his death.

Newton was the most eminent physicist of his day, and his work is a landmark in the study of mathematics. Among his principal achievements are the formulation of the law of gravitation, the discovery of the differential calculus, and the first correct analysis of white light. In his celebrated Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica (1687) he gives expression also to his religious convictions. Belief in God rests for him chiefly on the admirable order of the universe. He acknowledges the Divine transcendence, omnipotence, and perfection, and combats the pantheistic idea of a world soul. God is the Supreme Being, with complete authority over the material universe as well as over human souls, which owe Him absolute submission.

Though a conforming Churchman, Newton was not orthodox. He denied the doctrine of the Trinity on the ground that such a belief was inaccessible to reason. He was a friend of the *Cambridge Platonist, H. *More, whose millenarian interests he shared; some of his speculations in this field were embodied in his Observations on the Prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse of St. John (posthumous, 1733). His more exclusively scientific works include Optics (1704) and Arithmetica Universalis (1707).

Collected works ed. S. *Horsley (5 vols., London, 1779–1785). Crit. edd. of Papers and Letters on Natural Philosophy and Related Documents by I. B. Cohen (Cambridge, 1958), of Correspondence by H. W. Turnbull and others (7 vols., ib., 1959–77), of Unpublished Scientific Papers ed. and tr. by A. R. Hall–Marie B. Hall (ib., 1962), and of Mathematical Papers by D. T. Whiteside (ib., 1967 ff.). Sir Isaac Newton's Theological Manuscripts selected and ed. H. McLachlan (Liverpool, 1950). Classic life by D. Brewster (2 vols., London, 1855). More modern account by L. T. More (New York–London, 1934). Other lives by R. de Villamil (London [1931]), J. W. N. Sullivan (ib., 1938), E. N. da C. Andrade (ib., 1950), and S. I. Wawilow (Berlin, 1951), with bibl. F. Rosenberger, Isaac Newton und seine physikalischen Principien (Leipzig, 1895). L. Bloch, La Philosophie de Newton (Paris thesis, 1908). Hélène Metzger, Attraction universelle et religion naturelle chez quelques commentateurs anglais de Newton (1938). Newton Tercentenary Celebrations (Cambridge, 1947). F. E. Manuel, Isaac Newton Historian (Cambridge, Mass., 1963). Überweg, iii, pp. 371–3, with bibl. p. 687 f. R. T. Glazebrook in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 371–93. F. E. Manuel, The Religion of Isaac Newton (Oxford, 1974).

NEWTON, JOHN (1725–1807), Evangelical divine. The son of a shipmaster, he was impressed into naval service, in the course of which he was converted on 10 Mar. (N.S. 21), 1748. From 1755 to 1760 he was the surveyor of the tides at Liverpool. At this time he came under the influence of G. *Whitefield, and also began studying Latin, Hebrew, Greek, and Syriac. On being offered the curacy of Olney, he was ordained by the Bp. of *Lincoln in 1764. Here he collaborated with W. *Cowper in the production of the Olney Hymns (1779). In 1780 he was appointed rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, and held this post until his death. Among the better known of his hymns, which are remarkable for their directness and simplicity, are 'Glorious things of Thee are spoken' and 'How sweet the Name of Jesus sounds'. He was also the author of several prose works, including letters and sermons. In theology he was a pronounced *Calvinist and much influenced many leaders in the *Evangelical Revival, among them T. *Scott, W. *Wilberforce (whom he also aided in his campaign against slavery), C. *Simeon and Hannah *More.

Coll. ed. of his Works by R. Cecil (6 vols., London, 1808). Newton published much of his religious correspondence anonymously in Omicron (1774), Cardiphonia (2 vols., 1781), Letters to a Wife (2 vols., 1793), and Letters to the Rev. W. Bull (posthumous, 1847). Journal of a Slave Trader (John Newton) 1750–1754 ed. B. Martin–M. Spurrell (1962). F. J. Hamilton (ed.), 'Out of the Depths', being the Autobiography of the Rev. John Newton (1916). Memoir by R. Cecil (London, 1808). Other Lives by R. Bickersteth (ib., 1865), J. Bull (ib., c. 1868), and B. Martin (ib., 1950). H. L. Bennett in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 235–8.

NICAEA, First Council of (325). The first *Oecumenical Council, summoned by the Emp. *Constantine within a few months of his conquest of the Eastern provinces, primarily to deal with the *Arian Controversy. The acta of the synod (if such ever existed) have been lost, the only authentic documents surviving from the Council being the Creed, the Synodal Letter, and the collection of twenty Canons.

The Council, which had been orig. convened to Ancyra, assembled at Nicaea (now Iznik) in Bithynia in the early summer of 325 (traditionally 20 May). It appears to have begun with informal discussion between the Arians and orthodox which was followed by a solemn opening by Constantine himself. Constantine's main interest was to secure unity rather than any predetermined theological verdict. After the Emperor's opening speech, the presidency prob. passed to *Hosius of Cordova, who had accompanied Constantine from the W., though there is also some authority for the view that *Eustathius, Bp. of Antioch, presided. An Arian creed submitted by *Eusebius of Nicomedia was at once rejected. *Eusebius of Caesarea then laid before the Council the Baptismal Creed of his own Palestinian community, and this, supplemented by the word '*Homoousios', was received by the Council as orthodox. But the Creed formally promulgated by the Council was not this Creed but another, prob. a revision of the Baptismal Creed of *Jerusalem (see Nicene Creed). This Creed, with four anti-Arian anathemas attached, was subscribed by all the Bishops present except two (Theonas of Marmarica and Secundus of Ptolemais); and these last were deposed and banished. In the Arian struggle at the Council it would seem that *Athanasius, who was present as the deacon of his Bishop, *Alexander of *Alexandria, was the leading champion of orthodoxy. The Council also reached decisions on the *Melitian Schism in Egypt and the *Paschal Controversy (qq.v.). It closed on 25 July. Some modern scholars (E. *Schwartz and others) have argued that this closure was only an adjournment, and that a second and concluding session of the Council met in 327.

The number of bishops who attended the Council is not known, since the signature lists are defective. The traditional number, which goes back to a late writing of Athanasius (Ep. ad Afros, 2), is 318, probably a symbolical figure, based on the number of *Abraham's servants (Gen. 14. 14). Between 220 and 250 is more likely. The Council, however, became generally known as 'the synod of the 318 Fathers'. Apparently the only representatives from the W. apart from Hosius were two priests representing the Pope of Rome, and the Bps. of Carthage, Milan, Dijon, and two others.

It is difficult to integrate what we learn from the twenty genuine surviving Canons with our other information about the Council. Can. 6 laid down the precedence due to metropolitan sees, and was later constantly invoked in support of the claims of Rome; cans. 10–14 are a short penitential code, dealing with the treatment of the lapsed in the recent persecutions; can. 13 ordered that no one who sought it was to be refused the *viaticum; can. 19 dealt with the followers of *Paul of Samosata; can. 20 laid down that prayer should be said standing during the Paschal season. Before long these canons were universally accepted both in E. and W.; and several independent versions survive from the 4th and 5th cents. They were normally given pride of place in the canonical collections and, prob. through this cause, the canons of other Councils (notably *Sardica, q.v.) were apt to be cited as Nicene because they followed on without a break.

The genuine documents, together with a large collection of spuria, are pr. in all the principal Conciliar collections. Hardouin, i (1714), cols. 309–528; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 635–1082; Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 335–632. Text of Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 37–43; crit. text of Lat. versions in E.O.M.I.A., esp. I. ii (1904). W. *Bright, Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils (ed. 2, 1892), pp. 1–89. A. E. Burn, The Council of Nicaea (1925). P. Batiffol, 'Les Sources de l'histoire du concile de Nicée' in É.O., xxiv (1925), pp. 385–402, xxvi (1927), pp. 5–17. G. Bardy in Fliche–Martin, iii (1936), pp. 69–95, with good bibl. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Nicée et Constantinople (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, i; 1963), esp. pp. 15–136. On the lists of Bishops present, see paper by E. Honigmann, 'Recherches sur les listes de pères de Nicée et de Constantinople' in Byzantion, xi (1936), pp. 429–49, esp. pp. 429–39; id., 'Une liste inédite des pères de Nicée: Cod. Vatic. Gr. 1587, fol. 355r–357v', ib., xx (1950), pp. 63–71. G. Bardy, 'Sur la réitération du concile de Nicée (327)' in Rech. S.R., xxiii (1933), pp. 430–50. F. Haase, Die koptischen Quellen zum Konzil von Nicäa. Übersetzt und untersucht (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, x, Hft. 4; 1920). C. A. Bernoulli in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 9–18; G. Fritz in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 399–417, s.v. 'Nicée (1er Concile de)'; I. O. de Urbina, S.J., in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 432–4, s.v.

NICAEA, Second Council of (787). The Seventh General Council was convoked by the Empress Irene at the instigation of the Patr. *Tarasius of Constantinople in order to end the *Iconoclastic Controversy. Pope *Hadrian I accepted the invitation of the Empress and sent two legates on condition that the Iconoclastic Synod of Hieria (753) was condemned. The patriarchs of *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Jerusalem, then subject to the Caliphs, were unable to come and were each represented by two monks. The Council met on 17 Aug. 786 in the church of the Holy Apostles at *Constantinople, but was immediately broken up by iconoclastic soldiers and did not reassemble till 24 Sept. 787, this time in the church of St. Sophia at Nicaea, where Tarasius presided. The Council declared its adherence to the doctrine on the veneration (προσκύνησις) of images expounded by the Pope in his letter to the Empress, adding that they are honoured with a relative love (σχετικῷ πόθῳ), whereas absolute adoration (λατρεία) is reserved to God alone, the honour given to the image passing on to its prototype. The decree promulgating the doctrine was signed by all present and by the Empress and her son Constantine, and the iconoclasts were anathematized.

The 22 canons drawn up by the Council deal with disciplinary matters; they declare null the election by a secular authority of bishops, priests, and deacons, condemn simony, forbid priests to leave their diocese without permission of the bishop, enjoin simplicity of life on all clerics, and forbid the stay of women in bishops' houses and monasteries of men as well as the erection of double monasteries.

Hardouin, iv (1714), cols. 3–820; Mansi, xii (1766), cols. 951–1154, and xiii (1767), cols. 1–820. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 139–51. P. van den Ven, 'La Patristique et l'hagiographie au concile de Nicée de 787' in Byzantion, xxv–xxvii (1957), pp. 325–62. P. Henry, 'Initial Eastern Assessments of the Seventh Oecumenical Council' in J.T.S., N.S., xxv (1974), pp. 75–92. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 741–98. É. Amman in Fliche–Martin, vi (1937), pp. 114–20. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1932), cols. 417–41, s.v. 'Nicée (IIe Concile de)', with text of canons and Fr. tr. V. Laurent, A.A., in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 434 f., s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to Iconoclastic Controversy.

NICENE CREED, The. Two Creeds at present so named must be distinguished:

(1) The Nicene Creed properly so called, issued in 325 by the Council of *Nicaea (q.v.) and known to scholars as N. This Creed was drawn up at the Council to defend the Orthodox Faith against the *Arians and includes the word '*Homoousios'. Compared with later conciliar Creeds it is relatively short, concluding with the words 'And in the Holy Spirit'. Appended to it were four anathemas against Arianism, which came to be regarded as an integral part of the text. It was probably based on the Baptismal Creed of *Jerusalem (H. *Lietzmann), not, as older scholars held, through a misunderstanding of a statement of *Eusebius of Caesarea, on that of Caesarea in Palestine (F. J. A. *Hort, A. E. Burn, E. C. S. Gibson).

(2) In common parlance, the 'Nicene Creed' more often means the considerably longer formula which bears this title in the *Thirty-Nine Articles and is in regular use in the *Eucharistic worship of the Church, both in East and West. It is also known as the 'Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed', and is referred to as C. It differs from N. in that, inter alia, (1) the second section on the Person of Christ is longer; (2) the phrase in N. 'from the substance of the Father' (ἐκ τῆς οὐσίας τοῦ πατρός) as an explanation of 'Homoousios' is wanting; (3) the third section contains an extended statement on the status and work of the Holy Ghost; and (4) after this follow assertions of belief in the Church, Baptism, the Resurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Life. Also it has no anathemas. Since the time of the Council of *Chalcedon of 451 it has been regarded as the Creed of the Council of *Constantinople of 381; but the earliest authorities connecting it with Constantinople date from c. 449–50. If this tradition is to be accepted, it may have been put forward at the Council as a profession of faith by *Cyril of Jerusalem, or alternatively by *Nectarius (both of whom figured prominently there). But, apart from the want of any contemporary evidence, there are other grounds for dissociating the Creed from Constantinople. Its occurrence in St. *Epiphanius's Ancoratus (374) would be decisive if its position in this treatise were established; but there are grounds for believing that N., not C., originally stood in the text here. Whatever its origin, it is probable that, like N., it ultimately derives from the Baptismal Creed of Jerusalem.

Its use in Eucharistic worship after the Gospel apparently began at Antioch under *Peter the Fuller (476–88) and gradually spread through E. and W., though it was not adopted at Rome until 1014. In the early Middle Ages the *Filioque (q.v.) was added to it in the W. In the Roman Rite its use at Mass is confined to Sundays and greater Feasts. In the E. it is regularly used as a Baptismal Creed. It has been widely accepted in modern times as a proposed basis of Christian unity, e.g. in the *Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888).

Both Creeds, N. and C., are discussed in A. E. Burn, An Introduction to the Creeds and to the Te Deum (1899), pp. 72–123; id., The Nicene Creed (Oxford Church Text Books, 1909). I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Il simbolo niceno (Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Cientificas, 1947). J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; ed. 2, 1960), pp. 205–62. J. Burnaby, The Belief of Christendom. A Commentary on the Nicene Creed (1959). G. L. Dossetti, Il simbolo di Nicea e di Costantinopoli. Edizione critica (1967).

On (1), see also F. *Loofs, 'Das Nicänum' in Festgabe von Fachgenossen und Freunden Karl Müller zum siebzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht (1922), pp. 68–82; H. Lietzmann, 'Symbolstudien XIII' in Z.N.T.W., xxiv (1925), pp. 193–202, with 'Kritischer Epilog' by A. *Harnack, p. 203. Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 442–8.

On (2), F. J. A. Hort, Two Dissertations (1876), pp. 73–150 ('On the Constantinopolitan Creed and other Eastern Creeds of the Fourth Century'); J. Kunze, Das nicänisch-konstantinopolitanische Symbol (1898); E. C. S. Gibson, The Three Creeds (Oxford Library of Practical Theology, 1908), pp. 115–77. A. M. Ritter, Das Konzil von Konstantinopel und sein Symbol (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, xv; 1965), pp. 133–208.

On the use of the Nicene Creed [C.] at the Eucharist, cf. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'L'Introduction du symbole à la messe' in Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, ii (Museum Lessianum, Sect. hist., xiv; 1951), pp. 1003–27, and Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 591–606; Eng. tr., i, pp. 461–74.

NICEPHORUS, St. (c. 758–829), Patr. of *Constantinople. His father had occupied high office under the Emp. Constantine Copronymus and suffered in the *Iconoclastic Controversy for his defence of images. Nicephorus inherited his father's beliefs and represented the Emperor at the Second Council of *Nicaea (787). Later he withdrew from court life and founded a monastery on the Propontis whither he retired, but without himself becoming a monk. The Emp. Constantine VI and his mother, Irene, recalled him to Constantinople, where the Emp. Nicephorus made him Patriarch on the death of *Tarasius (806), though he was not yet in holy orders. In recompense for the Imperial favour the Emperor demanded his reinstatement of the priest Joseph, who had been deposed in 797 for blessing the adulterous marriage of Constantine VI. After some hesitation Nicephorus gave way, and at a synod held in 806 or 807 rehabilitated Joseph. After the death of the Emperor and of his son Stauracius (811), he renewed the original sentence against Joseph. In 813 he crowned the Emp. Leo V ('the Armenian'), who resumed the Iconoclastic policy of his predecessors in the 8th cent. Nicephorus resisted, but was abandoned by the majority of his bishops, who supported the Emperor. In 815 he was exiled and retired to his former monastery again, where he spent the remainder of his life. Despite the opposition of the *Studites, who could not forgive his weakness in the Adulterine Controversy, his relics were translated to Constantinople in 847, and he received the title of a confessor of the faith. Feast day in the Greek Church, 2 June; in the Latin Church, 13 Mar.

Among his writings on the Image controversy are 'Apologeticus Minor' and 'Apologeticus Major' (both 817) and 'Libri Tres Antirrhetici'. Of particular value is his 'Ἱστορία σύντομος or 'Breviarium Nicephori', a Byzantine history from 602 to 770, highly praised by *Photius for its accuracy and literary excellence. He also compiled a Chronicle, Χρονογραφία σύντομος, reaching from Adam to the year of his own death.

V. Grumel, A.A. (ed.), Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, i (fasc. 2; 1936), pp. 23–40 (Nos. 374–407). Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG, c, 169–1068; further 'Antirrhetici' in J. B. *Pitra (ed.), Spicilegium Solesmense, i (1852), pp. 302–504, and iv (1858), pp. 233–380; Opuscula Historica [i.e. his Ἱστορία σύντομος and Χρονογραφία σύντομος], ed. C. de Boor (Teub., 1880). Life by his pupil, the Deacon Ignatius, pr. in AA.SS., Mar. II (1648), pp. 704–27, Gk. text, with Lat. tr., pp. 294–321, and introd., p. 293; repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 41–160; also in C. de Boor, op. cit., pp. 139–217. P. J. Alexander, The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople. Ecclesiastical Policy and Image Worship in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford, 1958). A. J. Visser, Nikephoros und der Bilderstreit. Eine Untersuchung über die Stellung des Konstantinopeler Patriarchen Nikephoros innerhalb der ikonoklastischen Wirren (The Hague, 1952). V. Grumel, 'Les "Douze Chapitres contre les Iconomaques" de saint Nicéphore de Constantinople' in Revue des Études Byzantines, xvii (1959), pp. 127–35; R. M. Mainka, C.M.F., 'Zum Brief des Patriarchen Nikephoros I. von Konstantinopel an Papst Leo III.' in Ostkirchliche Studien, xiii (1964), pp. 273–81. Krumbacher, pp. 71–3. R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 452–5, s.v. 'Nicéphore de Constantinople'.

NICEPHORUS CALLISTUS (c. 1256–c. 1335), 'Xanthopoulos', Byzantine historian. Little is known of his life. Apparently a native of *Constantinople and a priest of *Santa Sophia, whose library he utilized for his works, at the end of his life he seems to have become a monk. He belonged to the party of the Emp. Andronicus II (reigned 1282–1328), whose ecclesiastical policy, in contrast to that of his father Michael Palaeologus, supported Greek orthodoxy against the Latinizers. His principal work, a 'Church History', narrates in 18 books the events from the birth of Christ to the death of the Emp. Phocas (610). At the end of the introduction there is a summary of five more books, probably never executed, which were to continue the narrative to the death of *Leo the Philosopher (912). The History has been held to rest on an anonymous 10th cent. work; it certainly draws extensively, either directly or through an unknown intermediary, on the Ecclesiastical Histories of *Eusebius, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Theodoret and *Evagrius. It is none the less an important source for certain of the early controversies and heresies as well as for the history of Byzantine legends, but its value throughout depends on that of the earlier material used. In 1555 it was translated into Latin and played an important part in the controversial literature of the time, furnishing material for the defence of images and relics. Among his other writings, several of them in iambics, are liturgical, exegetical, and hagiographical works.

His Church History was publd. in Lat. tr. by J. Lange, Basle, 1555; Gk. text with Lat. tr. by J. Lange, ed. F. *Ducaeus, 2 vols., Paris, 1630, repr. J. P. Migne, PG, cxlv, 559–1332, cxlvi, and cxlvii, 9–448; other works repr. ib., cxlvii, 449–634, with note from J. A. *Fabricius, ib., cxlv, 549–58. A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, 'Νικηφόρος Κάλλιστος Ξανθόπουλος' in B.Z., xi (1902), pp. 38–49, incl. a few texts. Progymnasmata, ed. J. Gettner, ib., xxxiii (1933), pp. 1–12 and 255–70 (text, pp. 7–12), with useful introd. G. Gentz, Die Kirchengeschichte des Nicephorus Callistus Xanthopulus und ihre Quellen, ed. F. Winkelmann (T.U., xcviii; 1966). Krumbacher, pp. 291–3. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 446–52, s.v.

NICETA, St. (d. c. 414), ecclesiastical writer. He was Bp. of Remesiana (Bela Palanka in Yugoslavia) from c. 370 onwards. His literary importance arises esp. from his contacts through his geographical situation with both E. and W. His writings, mainly ascribed to other authors in later times, have been largely restored to him by A. E. Burn (d. 1927). His Explanatio Symboli is a primary witness for the history of the *Apostles' Creed, containing, e.g., the oldest attestation for the words 'communio sanctorum'; De Diversis Appellationibus is a tract on the titles of Christ; De Ratione Fidei and De Spiritu Sancto are respectively directed against *Arianism and the *Pneumatomachoi; De Vigiliis and De Psalmodiae Bono are of liturgical interest. Both G. *Morin and A. E. Burn also ascribe to Niceta the authorship of the celebrated hymn '*Te Deum Laudamus'. Feast day, 22 June.

Crit. ed. of principal texts in A. E. Burn, Niceta of Remesiana. His Life and Works (1905); of 'De Vigiliis' and 'De Psalmodiae Bono' by C. H. *Turner in J.T.S., xxii (1920–1), pp. 305–20, and xxiv (1922–3), pp. 225–50. Instructio ad Competentes. Frühchristliche Katechesen aus Dacien ed. K. Gamber (Textus Patristici et Liturgici, i; Regensburg, 1964); Weitere Sermonen ad Competentes ed. id. (ib., ii, v; 1965–6). Eng. tr. of his works by G. G. Walsh, S.J. (Fathers of the Church, vii; 1949, pp. 3–76). W. A. Patin, Niceta, Bischof von Remesiana, als Schriftsteller und Theologe (1909). J. Zeiller, Les Origines chrétiennes dans les provinces danubiennes de l'empire romain (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxii; 1918), pp. 549–58. G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Nouvelles Recherches sur l'auteur du Te Deum' in R. Bén, xi (1894), pp. 49–77; id., 'Notes additionnelles à l'étude sur l'auteur du Te Deum', ib., 337–45; id.; 'Le Te Deum, type anonyme d'anaphore latine préhistorique?', ib., xxiv (1907), pp. 180–223. C. H. Turner, 'Niceta and Ambrosiaster, I' in J.T.S., vii (1905–6), pp. 203–19. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 598–605; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 391. Dekkers, Nos. 646–62. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 477–9; E. Peterson in E.C., viii (1952), col. 1838 f. See also bibl. to Te Deum.

NICETAS ACOMINATOS (d. after 1210), Byzantine scholar. A native of Chonia (i.e. Colossae; hence also 'Nicetas Choniates') and of wealthy family, he studied at *Constantinople, where he rose rapidly in the Imperial service. He was governor of the province of Philippopolis when the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa passed through on the Third *Crusade (1189). His dealings with the Crusaders at this time led him to become closely connected with the Eastern Court in the next years. On the Fall of Constantinople (1204) he fled to Nicaea, where he spent the rest of his life. His writings include a 'Treasury of Orthodoxy' (Θησαυρὸς Ὀρθοδοξίας), a comprehensive work in 27 books (written between 1204 and 1210) against contemporary heresies, intended to supplement *Euthymius Zigabenus's 'Panoplia Dogmatike'; and a History (Χρονικὴ Διήγησις) of the period 1180–1206 in 21 books covering the reigns of the last Comneni. The former is the main source for the Councils held between 1156 and 1166; the latter is esp. valuable for its account of the capture of Constantinople by the Latins in 1204. His elder brother, MICHAEL ACOMINATOS (c. 1140–c. 1215), who became Abp. of *Athens in 1175, was also a famous scholar, his writings including numerous sermons, verses and a collection of letters.

Collection of Nicetas's writings in J. P. Migne, PG, cxxxix, 287–1444, and cxl, 9–284; and of those of Michael, ib., 299–382. Germ. tr., with notes, of his History by F. Grabler (Byzantinische Geschichtsschreiber, vii–ix; 1958) and of his Discourses and Letters by id. (ib., xi; 1966). J. L. van Dieten, Zur Überlieferung und Veröffentlichung der Panoplia Dogmatike des Niketas Choniates (Zetemata Byzantina, iii; Amsterdam, 1970). Krumbacher, pp. 281–6 and 91–3 (on Nicetas); pp. 468–70 (on Michael). L. Petit, A.A., in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 189 f., s.v. 'Acominatos, Nicétas'; T. J. Shahan in C.E., i (1907), p. 239 f., s.v. 'Akominatos'; R. Bäumer in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 972 f., s.v. 'Niketas Choniastes', with reff.

NICHOLAS, St., Bp. of Myra in Lycia. Though one of the most popular saints in both the Greek and Latin Churches, scarcely anything is historically certain about him. Acc. to tradition, he was imprisoned during the *Diocletianic persecution and afterwards released and was present at the Council of *Nicaea. The latter supposition is most improbable, as he is not in any of the early lists of bishops present at the Council, nor referred to in the writings of *Athanasius. He is first definitely met with in the Church of 'St. Priscus and St. Nicholas', built by the Emp. *Justinian (d. 565) at *Constantinople. His cult became popular in the W. after the inhabitants of Bari claimed to have got possession of his remains on 9 May 1087.

St. Nicholas is regarded as the patron saint of sailors, and churches under his dedication are often built so that they could be seen off the coast as landmarks. He is also the patron saint of children, bringing them gifts on 6 Dec. (whence 'Santa Claus', an American corruption of 'Saint Nicholas'). And he is also the patron saint of Russia. His symbol is sometimes three bags of gold, the dowry he is supposed to have given to three girls to save them from degradation, sometimes three children standing in a tub at his side, a representation which has been variously explained. Feast day, 6 Dec.

N. C. Falconius (ed.), Sancti . . . Nicolae Acta Primigenia (Naples, 1751; Gk. text with Lat. tr.); more crit. ed. by G. Anrich, Hagios Nikolaos. Der heilige Nikolaos in der griechischen Kirche. Texte und Untersuchungen (2 vols., 1913–17). 12th cent. life by Norman poet Wace, ed. Mary S. Crawford (thesis, Philadelphia, 1923). K. Meisen, Nikolauskult und Nikolausbrauch in Abendlande (1931). Other modern studies by J. Laroche (Paris, 1893), E. Crozier (London, 1949), A. D. de Groot (Amsterdam, 1949; Eng. tr., The Hague, 1965) and C. W. Jones (Chicago–London, 1978). M. Ott in C.E., xi (1911), p. 63 f., s.v.; E. Josi and others in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 1848–51, s.v. 'Nicola di Mira'; N. Del Re–M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (Rome, 1967), cols. 923–48, s.v. 'Nicola, vescovo di Mira'.

NICHOLAS I, St. (d. 867), Pope from 858. He was one of the most forceful of the early medieval Popes. Of a noble Roman family, he entered the service of the Curia under Pope Sergius II (844–7) and was made subdeacon; having become deacon under *Leo IV (847–55), he gained a decisive influence in the affairs of the Holy See under Benedict III (855–8), and on his death he was elected to succeed him (858). One of the chief events of his rule was the long-drawn-out struggle with the E. Church over the deposition of Ignatius by the Emp. Michael III and the appointment of *Photius to the see of Constantinople. The latter, though at first seeking Rome's approval of his accession, became more and more embittered when Nicholas, refusing to sanction the illegality of the proceedings, anathematized him and restored Ignatius at the Synod at Rome in 863. The situation was further aggravated by the readiness of the Pope to respond, in 866, to the advances of the newly converted Bulgars, whom he tried to win over to the see of Rome and for whom he wrote his famous 'Responsa Nicolai ad consulta Bulgarorum', a kind of summary of Christian faith and discipline. To this supposed encroachment on his rights, Photius replied in 867 by declaring the Pope deposed, but was himself deprived of his office in the same year. In the W. Nicholas had to contend with similar difficulties in upholding the Papal authority. He vigorously defended the sanctity of marriage in the divorce case of Lothair II of Lorraine, deposing the two Abps. of *Cologne and Trier who had connived at his bigamous marriage, and effecting a temporary reconciliation between the king and his consort. He successfully asserted the supremacy of the see of Rome against Abp. John of *Ravenna, who, counting on Imperial support, had violated the rights of property of the Holy See and tyrannized over his subjects. Similarly *Hincmar of Reims was obliged to acknowledge the right of the Papacy to intervene in disputes. There are grounds for believing that the '*False Decretals' were already received in Rome during his pontificate, though probably not before 864, and that Nicholas himself was influenced by them in his attitude to Hincmar. Apart from his decisive effect on the prestige of the Papacy in political matters, Nicholas was a man of high personal integrity, fully conscious of the responsibilities which he owed to his position. Feast day, 13 Nov.

Letters pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxix, 753–1212. Crit. ed. by E. Perels in M.G.H., Epistolae, vi (1925), pp. 257–690. L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 151–72. Lives by J. Roy ('Les Saints', 1899; Eng. tr., 1901) and J. Richterich (Berne, 1903; by an *Old Catholic). F. Dvornik, The Photian Schism (1948), passim. A. Greinacher, Die Anschauungen des Papstes Nikolaus I über das Verhältnis von Staat und Kirche (Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, x; 1909); E. Perels, Papst Nikolaus I und Anastasius Bibliothecarius (1920); J. Haller, Nikolaus I und Pseudo-Isidor (1936). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (ed. 2, 1904), pp. 235–45 (Eng. tr., 1908, pp. 155–62). Mann, iii (1906), pp. 1–148. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., xi (1911), p. 54 f.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 506–26.

NICHOLAS V (1397–1455), Pope from 1447. Thomas Parentucelli, the son of a doctor of Sarzana, studied theology at *Bologna, where Bp., later Cardinal, Nicholas Albergati became his protector. Appointed Bp. of Bologna after Albergati's death (1444), he was Papal Legate at the Diet of Frankfurt, where he worked so successfully for the recognition of *Eugenius IV by the German princes that he was created Cardinal in 1446. In 1447 he was elected Pope. By his conciliatory spirit and great diplomatic skill he obtained the recognition of the Papal rights in the matter of benefices and bishoprics by the Concordat of Vienna in 1448 and, in the following year, put an end to the schism by receiving the submission of the antipope, Felix V, and that of the Council of *Basle before its dissolution. In thanksgiving for the restoration of unity he decreed a *Jubilee in 1450, and immediately after sent out his legates to reform abuses—Cardinal *Nicholas of Cusa and St. *Giovanni Capistrano to N. and S. Germany respectively, and Cardinal d'Estouteville to France. In 1452 he crowned Frederick III of Habsburg German Emperor (the last Imperial Coronation in Rome). At the same time he restored order in the States of the Church and suppressed the revolt of Stefano Porcaro (1453), who attempted to overthrow the papal régime and declare Rome a republic. After the fall of *Constantinople (1453) he tried in vain to incite the European princes to a crusade against the Turks, and anxiety for the state of Christendom probably hastened his death. An enthusiastic lover of arts and science, Nicholas restored many ruined churches, planned to rebuild the *Vatican and *St. Peter's, and founded the Vatican Library. He was the first, and probably the best, of the Renaissance Popes, of blameless personal life, free from nepotism and anxious to reconcile religion with the new learning.

The principal authorities are the lives by Vespasiano da Bisticci (d. 1498) in Vite di uomini illustri del secolo XV (ed. P. d'Ancona–E. Aeschlimann, Milan, 1951, pp. 21–47; Eng. tr. by W. G. and Emily Waters, The Vespaniano Memoirs, 1926, pp. 31–58) and B. *Platina, Vitae Pontificum (Venice, 1479; no pagination). J. Manetti (d. 1459), 'Vita Nicolai V' in L. A. *Muratori (ed.), Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, iii (pt. 2; Milan, 1734), cols. 907–60. Modern life by G. Sforza (Lucca, 1884; Germ. tr., 1887). K. Pleyer, Die Politik Nikolaus V (1927). Pastor, ii (1891), pp. 3–314, with bibl. Fliche–Martin, xv (1951), pp. 15–38. G. Mollat in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 541–8, s.v. 'Nicolas V'; G. Schwaiger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 979 f., s.v. 'Nikolaus V'; J. Gill, S.J., in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 443–5, s.v., all with further bibl.

NICHOLAS OF BASLE (d. c. 1395), medieval heretic. He was a *Beghard who preached and propagated his opinions esp. in the district round Basle. Claiming to be inspired, he taught that all those submitting to his direction were sinless and need not obey any authority. For many years he evaded the *Inquisition but was eventually seized and burned at the stake in Vienna. At one time he was identified (esp. by K. Schmidt) with the mysterious 'Friend of God from the Oberland' who plays an important part in the writings of the Strassburg ascetic, Rulman Merswin, but H. S. *Denifle has convincingly argued that this figure is a literary creation of Merswin himself.

K. Schmidt (ed.), Nicolaus von Basel. Leben und ausgewählte Schriften (1866); id., Nicolaus von Basel: Bericht von der Bekehrung Taulers (1875). H. S. Denifle, O.P., 'Der Gottesfreund im Oberland und Nikolaus von Basel. Eine kritische Studie' in Historisch-politische Blätter für das katholische Deutschland, lxxv (1875), pp. 17–34, 93–122, 245–66, and 340–54.

NICHOLAS BREAKSPEAR. See Hadrian IV.

NICHOLAS CABASILAS. See Cabasilas, Nicholas.

NICHOLAS OF CUSA (1401–64), German cardinal and philosopher. He was a native of the village of Cues, on the Moselle. After studying at Heidelberg (1416) and Padua (1417–23), where he became doctor of canon law, he entered Cologne university in 1425. Having been ordained priest in 1430, he was made Dean of St. Florin's at Coblenz in 1431. In 1433 he took part in the Council of *Basle as an advocate in a dispute concerning the possession of the archiepiscopal see of Trier. He also worked for the reconciliation of the *Hussites to the Church and in 1433 procured the acceptance of the *Calixtines by the Council. In the same year he wrote his famous work, De Concordantia Catholica, in which he outlined a comprehensive programme for the reform of Church and Empire. Though he originally favoured the Conciliar Movement, the revolutionary proceedings of the Council and its failure to bring about a union with the Greeks estranged him from the majority of its supporters. From 1437 he devoted himself entirely to the cause of the Pope, being sent in that year by *Eugenius IV to *Constantinople in the interests of reunion. In the following years he worked for the Papal cause at the Diets of Mainz (1441), Frankfurt (1442), and Nuremberg (1444). When in 1448 a reconciliation was effected between the Pope and the Empire which culminated in the Concordat of Vienna, *Nicholas V rewarded him by creating him cardinal. In 1450 he was appointed Bp. of Brixen (in the Tyrol) and Papal legate for the German-speaking countries. As such, besides publishing the Jubilee Indulgences, he was authorized to hold provincial synods and to visit monasteries and remove abuses. In 1452 he took possession of his diocese, where he worked with great zeal for the reform of the morals of clergy and people. When a conflict with Duke Sigismund forced him to leave his diocese, he went to Rome, where *Pius II appointed him in 1459 his vicar-general with the task of reforming and governing Rome and the patrimony of St. Peter. After an apparent reconciliation he returned to Brixen, but Sigismund soon declared war on him and besieged him in the fortress of Bruneck,which he was forced to surrender. He once more went to Rome, where he spent the rest of his life as Camerarius of the Sacred College.

In intellectual outlook Nicholas was a forerunner of the Renaissance. His principal work, De Docta Ignorantia (completed, 1440), was a defence of his two celebrated principles, 'docta ignorantia' and 'coincidentia oppositorum'. 'Docta ignorantia' was the highest stage of intellectual apprehension accessible to the human intellect, since Truth, which is absolute, one, and infinitely simple, is unknowable to man. Knowledge by contrast is relative, multiple, complex, and at best only approximate. The road to Truth therefore leads beyond reason and the principle of contradiction; it is only by intuition that we can discover God, the 'coincidentia oppositorum', wherein all contradictions meet. This description is meant to indicate that God is at once infinitely great and infinitely small, the maximum and the minimum, the centre and the circumference of the world, everywhere and nowhere, neither One nor Three, but Triune.

Nicholas's general cast of thought has many affinities with *Neoplatonism; and among those who esp. influenced him were St. *Augustine, Proclus (410–85) and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, and of medieval thinkers, esp. St.

*Bonaventure and Master *Eckhart. He held the common Platonist view that mathematics is the supreme science. He also had considerable critical gifts as a historian, rejecting e.g. the authenticity of the *False Decretals and of the *Donation of Constantine.

His other writings include an Apologia Doctae Ignorantiae, a reply to a charge of pantheism by John Wenck, professor of theology at Heidelberg; De Quaerendo Deum (1445); Idiotae Libri (1450), four dialogues on the ways that lead to wisdom and on the human soul; De Non Aliud (1462), an attempted synthesis of the *Aristotelian and *Platonist conceptions of God; and De Apice Theoriae (1463–4), a final summary.

Editio princeps of his collected works, 2 vols., Strassburg, c. 1490; until the present century the standard ed. was that issued in 3 vols., Basle, 1565. Crit. ed. under the auspices of the Heidelberg Academy, by E. Hoffmann, R. Klibansky, and others (21 vols., 1932 ff.). Further collection of 'Cusanus-Texte' in the Sb. (Heid.), ed. E. Hoffmann–R. Klibansky (1928–9, Hft. 3), G. Kallen (1935–6, Hft. 3), J. Koch (1935–6, Hft. 2), L. Bauer (1940–1, Hft. 4), J. Koch (1941–2, Hft. 1), id. (1942–3, Hft. 2), id. (1944–8, Hft. 3), G. von Bredow (1955, Hft. 2), E. Maschke (1956, Hft. 1), H. Hürten (1960, Hft. 2), etc. Philosophische Schriften, ed., with important introd., by A. Petzelt (Stuttgart, 1949 ff.), Philosophisch-Theologische Schriften, ed. L. Gabriel (3 vols., Vienna, 1964–7). Eng. tr. of 'De Visione Dei' by E. G. Salter (London, 1928) and of 'De Docta Ignorantia' by G. Heron, O.F.M. (ib., 1954); also of selected writings by J. P. Dolan, Unity and Reform (Notre Dame, Indiana, 1962). Substantial general studies by E. Vansteenberghe (Paris thesis, Lille, 1920, with detailed bibl.) and M. Patronnier de Gandillac, La Philosophie de Nicolas de Cues (Paris thesis [1941], with further bibl.; revised German ed., Düsseldorf, 1953). More popular introductions by H. Bett ('Great Medieval Churchmen', London, 1932) and P. Mennicken (Leipzig, 1932; ed. 2, Trier, 1950). J. Uebinger, Die Gotteslehre des Nikolaus Cusanus (1888). E. Vansteenberghe, Autour de la docte ignorance (Paris thesis, Münster i.W. [c. 1921]). J. Lenz, Die Docta Ignorantia oder die mystische Gotteserkenntnis des Nikolaus Cusanus in ihren philosophischen Grundlagen (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und Psychologie der Religion, iii; 1923); 'Cusanus-Studien' in Sb. (Heidelberg), by R. Klibansky (1929–30, Hft. 3), M. Honecker (1937–8, Hft. 2), Elisabeth Bohnenstädt (1938–9, Hft. 1), R. Cruetz (1938–9, Hft. 3), M. Honecker (1939–40, Hft. 2), O. Menzel (1940–1, Hft. 6), E. Hoffmann (1941–2, Hft. 4), G. Kallen (1963, Hft. 2), etc.; R. Haubst, Das Bild des Einen und Dreieinen Gottes in der Welt nach Nikolaus von Kues (Trierer theologische Studien, iv; 1952); id., Studien zu Nikolaus von Kues und Johannes Wenck aus Handschriften der Vatikanischen Bibliothek (B.G.P.M., xxxviii, Hft. 1; [1955]), esp. pp. 1–32; id., Die Christologie des Nikolaus von Kues (Freiburg, 1956). E. Meuthen, Die letzten Jahre des Nikolaus von Kues. Biographische Untersuchungen nach neuen Quellen (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, iii; 1958); id., Nikolaus von Kues 1401–1464. Skizze einer Biographie (Buchreihe der Cusanus-Gesellschaft, 1964). E. Colomer, S.J., Nikolaus von Kues und Raimund Lull. Aus Handschriften der Kueser Bibliothek (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, ii; 1961). P. E. Sigmund, Nicholas of Cusa and Medieval Political Thought (Cambridge, Mass., 1963). K. Jacobi, Die Methode der Cusanischen Philosophie (Munich, 1969). E. Zellinger, Cusanus-Konkordanz. Unter Zugrundelegung der philosophischen und der bedeutendsten theologischen Werke (Munich, 1960). E. F. Jacob, 'Nicolas of Cusa' in F. J. C. Hearnshaw (ed.), The Social and Political Ideas of Some Great Thinkers of the Renaissance and Reformation (1925), pp. 32–59; id., 'Cusanus the Theologian' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxi (1937), pp. 406–24. Mitteilungen und Forschungsbeiträge der Cusanus-Gesellschaft (Münster, 1961 ff.). Überweg, iii, pp. 72–89, with bibl. p. 636 f. E. Vansteenberghe in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 601–12, s.v. 'Nicolas (24) de Cusa'; R. Klibansky in Enciclopedia italiana, xxiv (1934), pp. 761–3, s.v. 'Niccolà da Cusa'; J. Koch in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 449–52, s.v. J. Hopkins, A Concise Introduction to the Philosophy of Nicholas of Cusa (Minneapolis, 1978).

NICHOLAS OF FLÜE, St. (1417–87), 'Brother Klaus', Swiss ascetic. The son of wealthy peasants, he distinguished himself as a soldier and later as a cantonal councillor and judge (1459). In 1467 he obtained the consent of his wife to leave her and their ten children, to lead the life of a hermit in the Ranft valley, near Sachseln, in Switzerland. Here, where he is said to have lived for 19 years with no food save the Eucharist, his reputation for sanctity attracted many visitors from all parts of Europe seeking his advice. His great influence showed itself in 1481, when a dispute between the delegates of the Swiss confederates at Stans that threatened to result in civil war was settled by his counsel. He was beatified in 1669 and canonized in 1947. Feast day, 21 Mar.; in Switzerland (of which he is the Patron Saint), 25 Sept.

Fundamental study by R. Durrer, Bruder Klaus. Die ältesten Quellen über den seligen Nikolaus von Flüe, sein Leben und seinen Einfluss (2 vols., Sarnen, 1917–21), orig. planned to mark the fifth centenary of his birth, with text of life by Henry of Gundelfingen (d. 1490) and other primary material. Other studies include those of J. Ming (4 vols., Lucerne, 1861–78), H. Federer ('Die Schweiz im deutschen Geistesleben', xiv; 1928), Agnes von Segesser (Fribourg, Switzerland, 1936), A. Andrey (Geneva, 1939), G. Méautis (Neuchâtel, 1940), C. Journet (Collection des Cahiers du Rhône, v; 1942; ed. 3, 1966) with texts, R. Centlivres (Geneva, 1947), A. Deuster (Bonn, 1950), and G. R. Lamb (London, 1955). Litterae Decretales in A.A.S., xl (1948), pp. 49–63. T. Boos in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 452 f., s.v., with reff.

NICHOLAS OF HEREFORD (d. c. 1420), *Lollard writer. Neither the date of his birth nor that of his death is known, but he was ordained priest in 1370. While a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, he became an ardent supporter of J. *Wycliffe, and by 1382 he was preaching Wycliffite doctrines. For this he was condemned and excommunicated. An expedition to Rome to appeal against the sentence was unsuccessful, and imprisonment followed. Escaping, he returned to England and resumed his Lollard activities. After a further term of imprisonment, he seems to have recanted c. 1391. He became a canon of *Hereford in 1394 and treasurer in 1397. In 1417 he resigned his preferment and was professed a *Carthusian monk. He prob. took a prominent part with J. *Purvey in the translation of the Bible into English.

The principal chronicle sources include the Fasciculi Zizaniorum (ed. W. W. Shirley, Rolls Series, 1858, pp. 289–329) and Henry Knighton, Chronicon (ed. J. R. Lumby, ii, ib., 1895, pp. 170–4). M. Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and Other Medieval Biblical Versions (1920), esp. pp. 232–6, 253–67, and 286–8; K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952), pp. 107–12 and 126–9; S. L. Fristedt, The Wycliffite Bible, i (Stockholm Studies in English, iv; 1953), pp. 115–18. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 418–20; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 913–15, s.v. 'Hereford, Nicholas'.

NICHOLAS OF LYRA (c. 1270–1340), *Franciscan scholar. A student of theology and later (after 1308) a regent master in the university of *Paris, Nicholas was the best-equipped Biblical scholar of the Middle Ages. In addition to a wide knowledge of the history of Christian exegesis, he knew Hebrew (but not Greek), and was familiar with the commentaries of many of the Jewish expositors, notably *Rashi. As against the current allegoristic interpretations of the Bible, he set himself to arrive at the exact and literal sense, and R. *Simon once stated that no one down to his day since the time of St. *Jerome had contributed as much to the understanding of the OT. Nicholas's principal work was his 'Postillae perpetuae in universam S. Scripturam'. It was the first Biblical commentary printed and became very popular. His commentaries have commonly been supposed, perhaps wrongly, to have greatly influenced M. *Luther ('Si Lyra non lyrasset, Lutherus non saltasset'). Nicholas also wrote on the *Eucharist, the *Beatific Vision, and other subjects.

Postilla Litteralis, first publ. Rome, 5 vols., 1471–2. P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maîtres en théologie de Paris au XIIIe siècle, ii (1934), pp. 215–31, with details of MSS. and edd. H. Labrosse, 'Sources de la biographie de Nicolas de Lyra' in Études Franciscaines, xvi (1906), pp. 383–404; id., 'Biographie de Nicolas de Lyre', ib., xvii (1907), pp. 489–505 and 593–608; id., 'Œuvres de Nicolas de Lyre. Sources bibliographiques', ib., xix (1908), pp. 41–52; id., 'Œuvres de Nicolas de Lyre. Catalogue des œuvres', ib., pp. 153–75 and 368–79, and xxxv (1923), pp. 171–87 and 400–32. C. V. Langlois, 'Nicolas de Lyre, frère mineur' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxvi (1927), pp. 355–400, with reff. H. Hailperin, Rashi and the Christian Scholars (Pittsburgh, 1963), pp. 137–246, with notes, pp. 282–357. P. Vernet in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1410–22, s.v. 'Lyre, Nicole de', with bibl.

NICHOLAS OF ORESME. See Oresme, Nicolas.

NICHOLAS OF TOLENTINO, St. (c. 1245–1306), *Augustinian friar. Born at Sant'Angelo in the March of Ancona, he made his profession as an Augustinian hermit c. 1253. His life was pious but uneventful, devoted to preaching and pastoral work among the poor and destitute and, it is recorded, graced by frequent miracles. His last thirty years were spent at Tolentino, where fragments of his body, which are reputed to bleed shortly before great calamities (e.g. in 1452 before the Fall of *Constantinople, in 1510 before the Reformation), are interred. He was canonized by *Eugenius IV in 1446. Feast day, 10 Sept.

The principal authority is the contemporary life by Pietro di Monte Rubiano, his fellow Augustinian hermit, written in 1326; repr. in AA.SS., Sept. III (1750), pp. 644–64, with other material, pp. 664–743, and introd., pp. 636–44. Popular modern lives by A. Tonna-Barthet (Paris, 1896), 'l'Abbé H. P.' (ib., 1899), E. A. Foran, O.S.A. (London, 1920), and N. Concetti (Tolentino, 1932). D. Gentili in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (1967), cols. 953–68, s.v. 'Nicola da Tolentino'.

NICHOLAS, HENRY (c. 1502–c. 1580), or Hendrik Niclaes, founder of the *Anabaptist sect of '*Familists' (q.v.). He was probably a native of Münster in Westphalia, of a devout RC family, and at an early age began to have visions. Later he became a mercer. After being imprisoned for heresy he went to Amsterdam c. 1531. Here in 1539 or 1540 he believed he had Divine communications commanding him to found a new sect, the 'Family of Love' or 'Familia Caritatis'. In 1540 he went to Emden, where he spent the next twenty years of his life and wrote a large number of books, the best known being the Mirror of Justice, which was published anonymously. In 1560 the authorities at Emden took steps against his sectarian activities, and he spent the last years of his life as a fugitive in several towns of Holland and Germany. His teaching, which was a kind of mystic pantheism with antinomian features, and was apparently much influenced by the Dutch Anabaptist, David Joris (d. 1556), found many adherents esp. in Holland and England, where he had travelled probably in 1552 or 1553. His books were all placed on the *Index.

F. Nippold, 'Heinrich Niclaes und das Haus der Liebe. Ein monographischer Versuch aus der Secten-Geschichte der Reformationszeit' in Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie, xxxii (1862), pp. 323–402 and 473–563. G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, 1962), esp. pp. 477–82. Charlotte Fell-Smith in D.N.B., xl (1894), pp. 427–31, with reff. to sources. See also bibl. to Familists.

NICLAES, HENDRIK. See Nicholas, Henry.

NICODEMUS. The Jew, learned in the Law and a member of the council of the *Sanhedrin, who came to Jesus by night and evoked the discourse narrated in Jn. 3. 1–15 on Christian rebirth. He is afterwards shown as a partial sympathizer with Christ (Jn. 7. 50) and as helping *Joseph of Arimathaea to give Him burial (Jn. 19. 39).

J. Graf, 'Nikodemus (Joh. 3. 1–21)' in Th.Q., cxxxii (1952), pp. 62–86; S. Mendrer, 'Nikodemus' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxxvii (1958), pp. 293–323 [in German, with synopsis in English]. See also comm. on John.

NICODEMUS OF THE HOLY MOUNTAIN, St. (c. 1749–1809), Greek monk and spiritual writer. Born on Naxos, in 1775 he was professed on Mount Athos, where he remained for almost all the rest of his life, devoting his energies to writing. His most important publications were the Philocalia (q.v.), on which he collaborated with St. Macarius Notaras of Corinth; and a commentary on Eastern Canon Law entitled the Pidalion or 'Rudder' (Leipzig, 1800), which he produced with the help of Hieromonk Agapios of Dimitsana. He urged the necessity for frequent communion at a time when this was not usual in the Greek Church. Deeply rooted in the tradition of the Greek Fathers, he was at the same time ready to borrow from the West, and he published Greek editions of RC writers, including the Spiritual Exercises of St. *Ignatius Loyola.

He was proclaimed a saint in the Eastern *Orthodox Church in 1955; feast day (in the E.), 14 July.

Eng. trr. by D. Cummings of 'The Rudder' (Chicago, 1957) and by E. Kadloubovsky and G. E. H. Palmer of 'Unseen Warfare' (1952), with important introd. by H. A. Hodges, pp. 13–67; the 'Unseen Warfare' (Ἀόρατος Πόλεμος; Venice, 1796) was the title given by Nicodemus to his translation into Greek of two Italian works, the Combattimento spirituale of L. Scupoli (1589) and the Sentiero del Paradiso attributed to Scupoli (1600); the Eng. tr. is based on the Russian revision of Theophan the Recluse (1815–94). C. Papoulidis, Nicodème l'Hagiorite (1749–1809) (Athens, 1967). V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 486–90; D. Stiernon in Dict. Sp., xi ('1981'), cols. 234–50, both s.v. 'Nicodème l'Hagiorite', with bibl.

NICOLAITANS. Sectaries mentioned in the NT only at Rev. 2. 6 and 2. 14 f., where they appear as the advocates of a return to pagan worship. It is possible that the word 'Nicolaitans' is allegorical, Nicolas being simply the Greek equivalent of Balaam (cf. Rev. 2. 14), arrived at by a fanciful etymology, and that the persons referred to in Rev. had no real existence as a sect. A *Gnostic sect of this name, however, is alluded to by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Tertullian; and Irenaeus affirms that they were founded by the Nicolas of Antioch mentioned in Acts 6. 5, though this is perhaps no more than a conjecture. Indeed, it is not impossible that all references to them in Christian tradition are merely deductions from Rev. At any rate, the sect seems to have come to an end by c. A.D. 200. In the Middle Ages the term was sometimes applied to married priests by the upholders of clerical celibacy.

A. von *Harnack, 'The Sect of the Nicolaitans and Nicolaus, the Deacon in Jerusalem' in Journal of Religion, iii (1923), pp. 413–22, esp. pp. 413–17, with refs. to earlier literature; M. Goguel, 'Les Nicolaïtes' in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, cxv (1937), pp. 5–36. See also comm. on Rev. 2. F. Sieffert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 63–8; R. W. Moss in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 363–6; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 499–506.

NICOLE, PIERRE (1625–95), French theologian and controversialist. A native of *Chartres, he studied philosophy and theology at *Paris, taking his theological degree (baccalaureus) in 1649. Subsequently he went to teach at *Port-Royal, where he formed a close friendship with A. *Arnauld, in collaboration with whom many of his works were written. He accompanied him to Paris in 1655, and later shared his exile in the Netherlands (1679), but returned to France in 1683, after submitting to the Abp. of Paris. A great number of his writings deal with the *Jansenist controversy and are directed against *Jesuit authors, but in general they were more moderate in tone than most Jansenist works. In 1658 he published a Latin version of B. *Pascal's Lettres provinciales, with additional articles on *Probabilism and on the Love of God, and later opposed the signature of the formularies (see Jansenism) in his Dix Lettres sur l'hérésie imaginaire (1664–5). At the same time he defended the doctrines of the *Real Presence and of *Transubstantiation in La Perpétuité de la foi de l'Église catholique touchant l'eucharistie (1664), directed against *Calvinism, and in 1665 published Apologie pour les religieuses de Port-Royal. The controversy with the Protestants was continued in Préjugés légitimes contre les calvinistes (1671), and the first version of his principal work, the Essais de morale, appeared from 1671 to 1678 (4 vols.). In these essays he showed great originality of outlook in his application of Christian teaching to the detail of everyday life. They are also penetrated by the pessimism which characterized Jansenist writers in their emphasis on the frailty of human nature and its incapacity for the good. His spiritual teaching, given in the Traité de l'oraison (1679), is strongly biased against mysticism. His last work was a refutation of *Quietism, Réfutation des principales erreurs des quiétistes (1695). Written at the instigation of J. B. *Bossuet, it was directed esp. against M. de *Molinos and Mme *Guyon. In the posthumous Traité de la grâce générale (2 vols., 1715) the Jansenist position is definitely abandoned, and he defends the universal saving will of God and the sufficiency of grace for all men.

Life by C. P. Goujet in the Continuation des essais de morale [de P. Nicole], xiv (2 pts., 'Luxembourg', 1732). Modern studies by E. Thouverez (Paris, 1926) and E. D. James [in English] (The Hague, 1972). Bremond, iv (1920), pp. 418–588. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xi (1931), cols. 634–46, s.v. See also bibl. to Jansenism and Port-Royal.

NICOLL, WILLIAM ROBERTSON (1851–1923), editor. Ordained in 1874 to the Free Church of Scotland, he became minister at Kelso in 1877. In 1885, however, he was compelled through ill-health to resign his charge and go south, and for the rest of his life devoted his energies to successful editorial work, mainly with the assistance of the publishing house of Hodder & Stoughton. From 1885 till his death he edited the Expositor, a semi-popular monthly journal in which he enlisted the help of many leading scholars. From 1886 Nicoll also issued the British Weekly, a penny weekly in which current policy and affairs were discussed from a Christian (mainly Nonconformist) standpoint, Nicoll himself regularly contributing to its columns under the pseudonym of 'Claudius Clear'.

Life and Letters ed. by T. H. Darlow (1925), with bibl. J. *Denney, Letters . . . to W. Robertson Nicoll, 1893–1917 [1925]. J. T. Stoddart in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 636 f.

NICOLÒ DE' TUDESCHI. See Panormitanus.

NICOMEDES, St., early Christian martyr. His name occurs in both the *Gelasian Sacramentary and the *Roman Martyrology under the date 15 Sept., but it is wanting from the oldest MSS. of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. From refs. in three 7th-cent. itineraries, it would appear that he was buried in a catacomb on the Via Nomentana near the wall of *Rome. There is mention in the 5th cent. of a titular church at Rome dedicated to him. Nothing certain, however, is known of his date or the circumstances of his death. In the BCP calendar (here 'Nicomede') his feast is observed on 1 June, the date of the dedication of a church at Rome rebuilt in the 7th century.

AA.SS., Sept. V (1755), pp. 5–12. E. Josi in E.C., viii (1952), col. 1863 f., s.v. 'Nicomede, Cimitero di', with bibl. refs. to archaeological papers by G. B. *de Rossi, O. *Marucchi, and others.

NIEBUHR, HELMUT RICHARD (1894–1962), American theologian. The younger brother of Reinhold *Niebuhr, he was professor in the Yale Divinity School from 1938 until his death. His thinking was formed under the very diverse influences of K. *Barth and E. *Troeltsch. From Barth he learned to be dissatisfied with the superficialities of liberal theology and stressed the importance of historical revelation. From Troeltsch he learned that every revelation is conditioned by the historical and cultural media in which it finds expression and he analysed the correlations between religious belief and social group in the United States. His writings include The Social Sources of Denominationalism (1929), The Kingdom of God in America (1937), The Meaning of Revelation (1941), Christ and Culture (1951), Radical Monotheism and Western Civilization (1960).

P. Ramsey (ed.), Faith and Ethics. The Theology of H. Richard Niebuhr (New York, 1957), incl. list of his works, pp. 291–9. J. D. Godsey, The Promise of H. Richard Niebuhr (Philadelphia, 1970).

NIEBUHR, REINHOLD (1892–1971), American theologian and writer on ethical and social problems. A native of Wright City, Mo., he was educated at Elmhurst College (1910) and Yale University (1914), and ordained in 1915. He was pastor at the Bethel Evangelical church of Detroit from 1915 to 1928, when he was appointed professor of Applied Christianity at the *Union Theological Seminary in New York City, remaining there until his retirement in 1960.

Influenced by K. *Barth and even more by E.

*Brunner, Niebuhr sought to return to the categories of the Biblical revelation and was critical both of liberal theology and of metaphysics. He reinstated the doctrine of original sin and aimed at expounding a 'vital prophetic Christianity'. He differed sharply from Barth in believing that Christianity has a direct prophetical vocation in relation to culture and for a generation his 'Christian realism' exercised an influential critique on American social and political institutions.

Niebuhr's principal work is The Nature and Destiny of Man (*Gifford Lectures for 1939; 2 vols., 1941–3). He has also expounded his views in innumerable addresses and essays. His other writings (often collections of papers) include Does Civilization need Religion? (1928), Moral Man and Immoral Society (1932), An Interpretation of Christian Ethics (1936), Beyond Tragedy (1938), Christian Realism and Political Problems (1954), The Self and the Dramas of History (1955), and Man's Nature and his Communities (1965).

D. R. Davies, Reinhold Niebuhr. Prophet from America (Modern Christian Revolutionaries; [1946]). C. W. Kegley–R. W. Bretall (ed.), Reinhold Niebuhr. His Religious, Social, and Political Thought (New York, 1956), incl. his 'Intellectual Autobiography', pp. 3–23. G. Harland, The Thought of Reinhold Niebuhr (ib., 1960). D. Lange, Christlicher Glaube und soziale Probleme. Eine Darstellung der Theologie Reinhold Niebuhrs (Gütersloh [1964]), with bibl. G. Hammar, Christian Realism in Contemporary American Theology. A Study of Reinhold Niebuhr, W. M. Horton, and H. P. Van Dusen (Uppsala, 1940), pp. 167–253. Bibliography by D. B. Robertson (Boston, Mass., 1979).

NIEHEIM, DIETRICH OF. See Dietrich of Nieheim.

NIEMÖLLER, MARTIN (1892–1984), German *Lutheran pastor. The son of a Westphalian pastor, he served as a submarine commander during the war of 1914–18. In 1924 he was ordained minister of the Protestant church in Westphalia and in 1931 appointed pastor at Berlin-Dahlem. He at first welcomed National Socialism, but later opposed it on account of its pagan tendencies and supported the '*Confessing Church'. His anti-Nazi religious activities led to his arrest in 1937 and confinement in a concentration camp. Several offers of release were made to him on certain conditions, but he preferred imprisonment to giving up his convictions. A strong character as well as a picturesque personality, he became the symbolical figure of the Protestant opposition to National Socialism. After the Second World War, Niemöller took a leading part in the 'Declaration of Guilt' at Stuttgart. From 1945 to 1956 he was head of the Foreign Relations Department of the *Evangelical Church in Germany and from 1947 to 1964 Kirchenpräsident of the Territorial Church of Hesse and Nassau. From the time of its foundation in 1948 he was a member of the Executive Council of the *World Council of Churches and from 1961 to 1968 one of the Presidents of the Council. He opposed the creation of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1949 and in the following decade excited criticism by his increasingly pacifist position. He travelled widely, but his influence in Germany declined.

Pastor Niemöller and his Creed (Eng. tr., with a foreword by the Bp. of Chichester [G. K. A. *Bell], 1939). Bekennende Kirche. Martin Niemöller zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. J. Beckmann–H. Mochalski (Munich, 1952), with Lebensbild by Wilhelm Niemöller, pp. 311–25; Bis an das Ende der Erde. Ökumenische Beiträge zum 70. Geburtstag von D. Martin Niemöller, ed. H. Krüger (ib., 1962). D. Schmidt, Martin Niemöller (Hamburg, 1959; Eng. tr., 1959). K. Robbins, 'Martin Niemöller, the German Church Struggle, and English Opinion' in J.E.H., xxxi (1970), pp. 149–70.

NIETZSCHE, FRIEDRICH WILHELM (1844–1900), German philosopher. The son of a Lutheran pastor in the Prussian province of Saxony, he was educated at the public school of Schulpforta, near Naumburg. In 1864 he went to Bonn university and in the following year to Leipzig, where he studied philology. In 1869 he accepted a professorship at Basle which he resigned in 1879, owing to ill-health. He had already published several books, among them Menschliches, Allzumenschliches (1878; Eng. trans. Human, All too Human, 1911), and now devoted himself entirely to literary activities, writing in quick succession Die fröhliche Wissenschaft (1882); Also sprach Zarathustra (1883–91; Eng. tr. Thus Spake Zarathustra, 1896); Jenseits von Gut und Böse (1886; Eng. tr. Beyond Good and Evil, 1907); Die Genealogie der Moral (1887); Der Antichrist (1888); and Der Wille zur Macht (posthumous, 1901). In the beginning of 1889 Nietzsche lost his reason, and, nursed first by his mother, then by his widowed sister, he died on 25 Aug. 1900 after being an invalid for nearly twelve years.

Nietzsche was a prophet rather than a systematic thinker. His chief work, Zarathustra, written in fine poetic language, consists entirely of aphorisms. In his years at Leipzig he came under the influence of the works of A. *Schopenhauer, whose atheism and depreciation of reason in favour of the will attracted him. On this atheistic and irrational foundation he constructed a philosophy of life by which he claimed to inaugurate a 'transvaluation of all values'. Acc. to this doctrine life is the will to power; but power, not as exercised collectively by the masses, but the power of the great individual whom he calls Übermensch ('superman'). The superman, though an ideal to be realized only in the future, has been adumbrated by personalities like Cesare Borgia and Napoleon; he may be described as a magnified man, disciplined and perfected in both mental and physical strength, serene and pitiless, ruthlessly pursuing his path of success and victory and without moral scruples. In order to make the superman possible the present values which are derived from Christianity must be abolished, since they are the portion of the weak and disinherited 'herd' who, by proclaiming humility, kindness, pity, and the like as virtues, have suceeded in putting themselves into power to the detriment of the strong.

There are several German edd. of Nietzsche's works, of which the best is the large octavo ed. of Leipzig, 1901–13, in 19 vols. (vols. i–viii, Werke, 1905–10; vols. ix–xvi, Nachlass, 1910–11; vols. xvii–xix, Philologica, 1910–13). Eng. tr. of 'Complete Works' ed. O. Levy in 18 vols., 1909–13. There are several collections of his Letters, from which a selection was publd. in Eng. tr. by O. Levy (New York, etc., 1921). Official life by Elisabeth Förster-Nietzsche, his sister (2 vols. bound in 3, Leipzig, 1895–1904; shorter versions as Der junge Nietzsche (1912; Eng. tr., 1912) and Der einsame Nietzsche (1914; Eng. tr. [1915])). Fullest life and account in English by M. A. Mügge (London, 1908, with bibl.). There are innumerable studies of his philosophy; they include those by H. Lichtenberger (Paris, 1898; Eng. tr., 1910), G. Brandes (various artt., collected in Eng. tr., London, 1914), F. Copleston, S.J. (Bellarmine Series, vii, London, 1942), W. A. Kaufmann (Princeton, N.J., 1950), F. A. Lea (London, 1957), M. *Heidegger (2 vols., Pfullingen, 1961), and R. J. Hollingdale (London, 1965), with bibl. H. W. Reichert–K. Schlechta, International Nietzsche Bibliography (University of North Carolina Studies in Comparative Literature, xxix; 1960). Überweg, iv, pp. 543–51, with bibl. pp. 716–20. H. Ellis in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 366–70; K. Schlechta in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 1475–9; E. Biser in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 960 f., with bibl.

NIGHT OFFICE. Another name for *Mattins, the liturgical *office formerly prescribed for the night.

NIGHTINGALE, FLORENCE (1820–1910), reformer of hospital nursing. She was born at Florence, whence her Christian name. At an early age she began to interest herself in nursing, and from c. 1844 undertook regular hospital visiting. On a journey to Egypt in 1849–50 she studied the nursing system of the Sisters of Charity of St. *Vincent de Paul at *Alexandria, and soon afterwards visited T. Fliedner's deaconesses at *Kaiserswerth, where she was trained for several months in 1851. In 1853 she was made head of a hospital for invalid gentlewomen in Harley Street. In 1854 she offered to go to the Crimea to organize the nursing of the sick and wounded English soldiers. She established her headquarters at Scutari, where the barrack hospital was in a state of indescribable neglect; but her indefatigable devotion soon improved conditions and considerably reduced the death-rate. She returned to England in 1856. In recognition of her services the Nightingale School and Home for Nurses was founded at St. Thomas's Hospital in 1860, though owing to her weakened health she could take no more than an advisory part in its work. Her experience was also placed at the disposal of the governments concerned in the American Civil War of 1861–4 and the Franco-German War of 1870–1. She took an active interest in the establishment of several nursing societies and in the sanitary reforms carried out in the Indian army as well as among Indians. Her chief work, Notes on Nursing (1859), went through many editions.

Lives by Sarah A. Tooley (London, 1904), E. T. Cook (2 vols., ib., 1913), I. Cooper Willis (ib., 1931) and [Mrs.] Cecil Woodham-Smith (ib., 1950). W. J. Bishop–S. Goldie, A Bio-Bibliography of Florence Nightingale (1962). S. Paget in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii, pp. 15–19.

NIHILIANISM. The Christological doctrine that Christ, in His human nature, was 'nothing', His essential Being being contained in His Godhead alone. It was defended by a number of 12th cent. theologians (among them Peter of Poitiers, d. 1205) who claimed to deduce it from the teaching of *Peter Lombard. It was condemned by Pope *Alexander III in 1170 and 1177.

E. Portalié in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 413–18, s.v. 'Adoptianisme [au XIIe siècle]'; G. H. Joyce, S.J., in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 370–2, s.v.

NIKON (1605–81), Patr. of Moscow. After a monastic education he married and became a secular priest, but separated from his wife, who entered a convent, and himself became a monk of the Solovietski monastery on the White Sea. A quarrel with the monks led him to transfer his membership to the Kojeozerski community, of which he became *hegumen (abbot) in 1642. On a journey to Moscow in 1646 the Tsar Alexis appointed him archimandrite of the Novospaski monastery at Moscow, and, three years later, Metropolitan of Novgorod; and when, in 1652, the Patr. of Moscow died, he was elected in his place by order of the Tsar. As Patriarch, Nikon at once began important reforms. One of his principal concerns was to carry through a much-needed revision of the Russian liturgy. He sought to bring the prescriptions of the service books into conformity with Greek usages and, taking expert advice, to eradicate many of their long-standing corruptions. He had such details settled as the making of the sign of the cross with three fingers instead of with two and the use of the threefold Alleluia. These reforms, which were carried out with the aid of the civil power, with great rigour, gained the Patriarch many enemies.

From 1652 to 1658 his influence with the Tsar was immense, but in the latter year, probably owing to his claims of complete independence in ecclesiastical matters, he fell from Imperial favour. After his resignation had been accepted by the Tsar, he retired to the monastery of the 'New Jerusalem' which he had founded. In the following years he tried to regain his position, but in 1667, at the Council of Moscow, he was finally deposed and sentenced to banishment. His liturgical reforms were sanctioned, however, and the formation of the schismatical sect of the *Old Believers followed. After 14 years of severe imprisonment Alexis' successor, Feodor II, recalled Nikon to Moscow, but he died on the way and was buried with patriarchal honours. Subsequently all decrees against him were revoked at the bidding of the Tsar, and he is now recognized as perhaps the greatest bishop of the Russian Church.

W. *Palmer, The Patriarch and the Tsar (6 vols., 1871–6), with Eng. tr. of numerous primary documents. The main literature, which is extensive, is in Russian. In Eng. there is a brief life [by R. Thornton] in Lives of Eminent Russian Prelates (1854), pp. 1–38. A. *Fortescue in C.E., xi (1911), p. 77 f., s.v.; J. Ledit, S.J., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 646–55, s.v. 'Nicon (1)'. See also works cited under Russia, Christianity in, and Old Believers.

NIL SORSKY, St. (1433–1508), Russian monk and mystic. Of noble Muscovite family, and for some years a monk of the monastery of St. Cyril Beloozero, in northern Russia, he visited Mt. *Athos, where he found his vocation in the contemplative life of *Hesychasm. Returning to Russia, in a forest hermitage not far from Beloozero he introduced a new form of the ascetic monastic life, that of the small group (skit) guided by a spiritual father (starets), for which he wrote a directory. His ideals were poverty, simplicity and contemplative prayer; though his influence was eclipsed at the time by that of *Joseph of Volokolamsk, he is regarded as the spiritual founder of the skit and starets in 18th–19th cent. Russia.

Fairy v. Lilienfeld, Nil Sorskij und seine Schriften (1963), incl. German tr. of his works. I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum. Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das Östliche Christentum, x–xi; Würzburg, 1953), pp. 107–14.

NILUS THE ASCETIC, St. (d. c. 430), Bp. of Ancyra, also (erroneously) known as 'Nilus of Sinai'. Acc. to the traditional account (*Nicephorus Callistus; a set of 'Narrationes'; Byzantine *Synaxaria), Nilus was a high officer at the *Constantinopolitan court who with his son, Theodulus, became a hermit on Mt. *Sinai. In 410, when the monks were attacked by hordes of robbers, Nilus escaped, but Theodulus was captured and sold into slavery. After many adventures both were ordained by the Bp. of Eleusa in Palestine who sent them back to Sinai.

In modern times this account has been generally rejected (K. Heussi and others). It appears that Nilus was in fact a native of Ancyra who studied at Constantinople, where he became the disciple of St. John *Chrysostom. He then became the founder and superior of a monastery near Ancyra, whence he conducted a large correspondence and exerted a wide influence on his contemporaries.

His writings deal mainly with ascetic and moral subjects. They include 'De Monachorum Praestantia', 'De Monastica Exercitatione', 'De Voluntaria Paupertate', and also a collection of 1061 letters (mainly genuine, but some of them epistolary only in form and in fact excerpts from other Patristic writers). The 'Tractatus ad Eulogium' and the 'De Oratione' attributed to him appear to belong to *Evagrius Ponticus, while the 'De Octo Vitiosis Cogitationibus' is a compilation from *Cassian. Nilus's ideal of the spiritual life is a 'Christian philosophy' (φιλοσοφεῖν κατὰ Χριστόν) based on a 'moderated poverty' (μέση ἀκτημοσύνη). Feast day, 12 Nov.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxix (unsatisfactory). The traditional account of Nilus is based on seven 'Narrationes de Caede Monachorum et de Theodulo Filio' (ib., cols. 589–694). F. Degenhart, Der hl. Nilus Sinaita. Sein Leben und seine Lehre vom Mönchtum (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, vi; 1915); K. Heussi, Untersuchungen zu Nilus dem Asketen (T.U., xliii, Hft. 2; 1917); F. Degenhart, Neue Beiträge zur Nilus-Forschung (1918; reply to preceding work); K. Heussi, Das Nilus Problem (1921; a further reply). I. Hausherr, S.J., 'Le Traité de l'oraison d'Évagre le Pontique (pseudo-Nil)' in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, xv (1934), pp. 34–93 and 113–70. J. Henninger, 'Ist der sogenannte Nilus-Bericht eine brauchbare religionsgeschichtliche Quelle?' in Anthropos, I (1955), pp. 81–148. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 161–178; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 334. J. Quasten, Patrology, iii (Utrecht–Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 496–504. M. T. Disdier in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 661–74; I. Hausherr, S.J., in E.C., viii (1952), col. 1882 f. J. Henninger, S.V.D., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 475–80, s.v. 'Nil le sinaïtique'.

NIMBUS. See Halo.

NIMROD. Acc. to Gen. 10. 8–10 Nimrod was the first of the 'heroes' and a 'mighty hunter before the Lord', and founded the Assyrian Empire. In Babylonian mythology he is paralleled by the figure of *Gilgamesh, the tyrant of Erech. The only other references to him in the Bible are at 1 Chr. 1. 10 and Mic. 5. 6.

NINE FRIDAYS. See First Fridays.

NINEVEH, Fast of. A two-weeks' pre-*Lenten fast kept esp. in the dissident Eastern Churches (*Nestorians, *Jacobites, *Copts, and *Armenians). It is usually observed about a month before Lent begins, except in the Armenian Church, where it immediately precedes the Lenten fast.

NINIAN, St. (c. 360–c. 432), Scottish missionary. The son of a converted chieftain of the Cumbrian Britons, he went as a youth to Rome, where he was instructed in the faith. After being consecrated bishop in 394, probably by Pope *Siricius, he set out to convert Scotland. Making the acquaintance of St. *Martin as he travelled through Tours on the way, he later dedicated to him the church which he founded at Whithorn, south of Wigtown. This church, called 'Candida Casa' (White House), probably on account of the colour of its stones, became a centre whence Ninian and his monks went out to convert the neighbouring Britons and Picts; and it long continued a seat of learning for the Welsh and Irish missionaries. In the Middle Ages Ninian's tomb in the church was a favourite shrine of pilgrimage. Feast day, 16 Sept.

There are two principal sources for his life: a summary notice in *Bede, H.E., III. iv. 1 (cf. notes in ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 128–30), and a more elaborate but less trustworthy 12th-cent. 'vita' by St. *Ailred, ed. J. Pinkerton, Vitae Antiquae Sanctorum qui habitaverunt in . . . Scotia (London, 1789), pp. 1–23. Life (14th cent.) in Old English in W. M. Metcalfe (ed.), The Legends of SS. Ninian and Machor (1904), pp. 40–83, with notes pp. 138–63, and Eng. tr. of life by Ailred, pp. 187–209. Modern studies by A. B. Scott (London, 1916) and M. Anderson (ib., 1964). W. D. Simpson, Saint Ninian and the Origins of the Christian Church in Scotland (1940). J. MacQueen, St. Nynia. A Study of literary and linguistic evidence (1961). A. O. Anderson, 'Ninian and the Southern Picts' in Scottish Historical Review, xxvii (1948), pp. 25–47. P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Les Pictes apostats dans l'Épître de S. Patrice' in Anal. Boll., lxxvi (1958), pp. 354–78; D. Fahy, 'The Historical Reality of Saint Ninian' in Innes Review, xv (1964), pp. 35–46.

NISAN. The opening month in the Jewish year, roughly corresponding to April. It was the month in which the *Passover was held, the Passover Lamb being slain in the afternoon of the 14th day of Nisan. The name appears to be Babylonian and to have been substituted by the Jews from the time of the Exile (6th cent. B.C.) for its older Hebrew name of 'Abib'.

NITRIAN DESERT. The region in Libya lying to the west of the mouths of the Nile, and celebrated as a centre of early Christian monasticism. In the latter part of the 4th cent. an enormous colony of hermits was founded here, chiefly under the influence of Ammon, one of the *Tall Brothers. Of the still extant Coptic monasteries, one, the 'Dēr as-Surjān', i.e. the 'Monastery of the Syrians', formerly possessed a valuable collection of *Syriac MSS. which were acquired partly by the *Assemani for the *Vatican Library (in 1707 and 1745), partly by H. *Tattam (1841 and 1843) and W. *Cureton (1847) for the British Museum.

H. G. E. White, The History of the Monasteries of Nitria and of Scetis, ed. W. Hauser (The Monasteries of the Wâdi 'n Natrûn, ii; Publications of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, vii; New York, 1932). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City. An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Oxford, 1966), passim.

NITZSCH, KARL IMMANUEL (1787–1868), German *Lutheran theologian. Educated at Schulpforta and *Wittenberg, he became Privatdozent of theology in 1810 and assistant preacher at the Schlosskirche at Wittenberg in 1811. In 1822 he accepted a professorship at Bonn university, and in 1847 was called to Berlin to succeed P. K. *Marheineke; here he was made provost of the Nicolaikirche in 1854. His principal works are the System der christlichen

Lehre (1829; Eng. trans. by R. Montgomery and J. Hennen, 1849) and Praktische Theologie (1847–1867). Nitzsch is one of the chief representatives of the German '*Vermittlungstheologie'. As an opponent of contemporary unbelieving rationalism he rejected a purely speculative interpretation of Christianity and emphasized esp. the immediacy of religious feeling, which, acc. to him, produces the foundations of religious knowledge. As a member of the Supreme Church Council he was an active promoter of the Evangelical Union of the Prussian Churches (1817).

Life by W. Beyschlag (Berlin, 1872). Friedrich Nitzsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 128–36, s.v.

NOAH (otherwise 'Noe'). A son of Lamech, and tenth in descent from *Adam. Acc. to the story in *Genesis (6–9), Noah and his family alone were saved in an ark of gopher-wood, when the rest of mankind were destroyed in the *Flood. He took with him into the ark specimens of all kinds of living creatures whereby the species were providentially preserved. From Noah, therefore, the entire surviving human race descended, through his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. To Noah is also attributed the discovery of viticulture (Gen. 9. 20).

Other races have traditions of a great flood in very early times. In classical literature the story of Noah is closely paralleled by the legend of Deucalion. See also Gilgamesh, The Epic of.

J. Fink, Noe der Gerechte in der frühchristlichen Kunst (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, iv; 1955). J. P. Lewis, A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish and Christian Literature (Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 3–41, 121–55. P. Lundberg, La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, x; Leipzig and Uppsala, 1942), pp. 73–116; J. Daniélou, S.J., Sacramentum Futuri. Études sur les origines de la typologie biblique (Études de Théologie Historique, 1950), pp. 55–94; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 69–112. See also comm. to Genesis cited s.v., and bibl. to Ark and Flood.

NOAILLES, L. A. DE. See De Noailles, L. A.

NOBILI, ROBERT DE. See De Nobili, Robert.

NOBIS QUOQUE PECCATORIBUS (Lat., 'To us sinners, also'). The opening words of the section of the Roman *Canon of the Mass in which the celebrant prays for admission into the company of the saints, several of whom he mentions by name. In the *Ambrosian Rite the words are in the variant form 'Nobis quoque minimis et peccatoribus'.

V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv, 1938), pp. 34–8 and 189–199, who defends the improbable thesis that the Nobis quoque peccatoribus, like Communicantes, was first introduced into the Roman Canon by Pope *Gelasius I (492–6). N. J. Abercrombie, 'Nobis quoque in the Roman Canon Missae' in J.T.S., N.S., iv (1953), p. 49 f. Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 309–22; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 248–59.

NOBLE GUARD. The bodyguard, consisting in all of 77 men of noble rank, which used to attend on the Pope at public functions. They were instituted by *Pius VII in 1801, but owing to political difficulties they did not come into effective being till later. They received the basis of their final constitution in 1815; they were disbanded in 1970. They wore impressive military uniform, and their commander was always a Roman prince. See Palatine and Swiss Guard.

G. Felice in E.C., vi (1951), col. 1203 f., s.v. 'Guardia nobile pontificia', with bibl. and illustr.

NOCTURN. A division of the traditional 'night office' (*Mattins, q.v.) of the *Breviary. In the 1568 Roman Breviary, on Sundays and all feasts above the rank of a *Simple, and in the Office of the Dead, there were three Nocturns. One Nocturn on Sundays consisted of twelve Psalms, the others of three Psalms, all with their antiphons, versicle, Paternoster and a short prayer called 'Absolutio', and three Lessons, each of which was preceded by a benediction. The Lessons for the first Nocturn were always taken from Scripture, those of the second were patristic or historical, and those of the third came from a homily on the Gospel of the day. On simple feasts and ferias there was only one Nocturn, consisting of twelve Psalms (reduced by *Pius X to nine), with antiphons &c., and three Lessons (one from Scripture, one historical and one a homily); during the *Octaves of Easter and *Pentecost there were only three Psalms and three Lessons. In the *Monastic Breviary there were two Nocturns with six Psalms each on ferias, and three Nocturns with twelve Psalms in all, three Canticles and twelve Lessons on Sundays and feasts. In earlier usage the term 'Nocturn' was applied to the whole of the night office, including *Lauds, and not limited to its constituent parts.

NOETICS (from Gk. νοητικός, 'pertaining to the mind or intellect'). A term applied to an early 19th cent. group of thinkers, Whigs in politics, who were members of the Senior Common Room of Oriel College, Oxford. The chief were E. *Copleston and E. *Hawkins (successively Provosts of Oriel College), R. *Whately and R. D. *Hampden. They freely criticized traditional religious orthodoxy, and sought to increase the comprehensiveness of the C of E. The later Noetics came into sharp conflict with the *Tractarians.

W. Tuckwell, Pre-Tractarian Oxford. A Reminiscence of the Oriel 'Noetics' (1909).

NOETUS (c. 200), heretic. Our knowledge of him comes chiefly from *Hippolytus (Haer., ix. 7–10; Cont. Noetum), acc. to whom he was a native of Smyrna. He was probably the first to teach *Patripassian doctrines, viz. that it was God the Father who in the Incarnation was born, suffered, and died. He also rejected the Logos doctrine, admitted only a purely allegorical interpretation of the Prologue of St. John's Gospel, and accused his opponents of ditheism. He was condemned by an assembly of presbyters at Smyrna c. 200. Hippolytus asserts also that through his disciple, Epigonus, Patripassian teaching made its way from Asia Minor to Rome.

Further reff. in Hippolytus, Haer., ix. 2, and x. 27; *Epiphanius, Haer., lvii; and *Theodoret, Haer. Fab., iii. 3. Crit. text of Hippolytus Contra Noetum, with discussion (much challenged), by P. Nautin, Paris, 1949. For further bibl. see under Monarchianism.

NOLASCANS. See Mercedarians.

NOMINALISM. The theory of knowledge which denies reality to universal concepts. In the controversy on *Universals, partly occasioned by the famous text in *Porphyry's 'Isagoge', which occupied medieval philosophers esp. in the 11th and 12th cents., a form of Nominalism was first evolved by *Roscellinus and later by *Abelard. It was directed against the Platonist *Realists who held that universals, such as genus and species, had a separate existence apart from the individuals which are tributary to them. In opposition to this teaching, Roscellinus carried the denial of the unity of species to a point which led him into *Tritheism. Abelard, on the other hand, though severely criticizing the doctrine of the separate existence of the universals, which he calls 'names' ('voces', 'nomina'), as opposed to 'things' ('res'), does not seem to have denied that the resemblances among individual things justify the use of universals for establishing knowledge, so that he has often been represented as a forerunner of Moderate Realism rather than as a Nominalist properly so called.

A different form of Nominalism appeared in the 14th cent.; this is usually associated with *William of Occam. He asserted that the universal is not found at all in reality, but only in the human mind ('in anima'), for every substance is radically individual. Acc. to him the resemblance between two men does not lead to the conclusion that they share a common nature; universals are only ways of conceiving or knowing individual things. Thus our first knowledge is an intuition of the individual, accompanying sensation. In its application to theology, which was made by Occam himself, but more esp. by Gabriel *Biel, Nominalism, which conceives God exclusively as omnipotence and mercy, denies the plurality of His attributes and the distinction between His Intellect and His Will. It simplifies His Being to such a degree that the reality of the Three Persons which depends on formal distinctions and real relations can be accepted only on the authority of faith. Nor can reason demonstrate that the First Cause of the existing universe is the One God. Thus Nominalism in its theological consequences withdrew almost all the data of faith from the realm of reason and paved the way for the disintegration of Scholasticism.

C. S. Barach, Zur Geschichte des Nominalismus vor Roscellin (1866). J. Reiners, Der Nominalismus in der Frühscholastik (B.G.P.M., viii. 5; 1910). M. H. Carré, Realists and Nominalists (Oxford, 1946). Gilson, pp. 499–520. A. Vigneaux in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 717–84. G. Küng in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 483–6, with bibl. See also bibl. to William of Occam and Biel, G.

NOMOCANON (Gk. νόμος, 'a law', and κανών, 'canon'). In the E. Church, a collection of ecclesiastical canons and Imperial laws, arranged acc. to subject-matter. The earliest (c. 600) derives from *John Scholasticus (q.v.). This is a later conflation of two legal collections, themselves compiled by John, viz. (1) a collection of canons arranged in 50 tituli, the outline of which is preserved in all subsequent editions of the Nomocanon, and (2) a collection of Imperial laws arranged in 87 capitula which are re-sorted acc. to the 50 headings of the Nomocanon.

NONCONFORMIST CHAPELS ACT, 1844. Introduced by Lord Lyndhurst, it laid down that where no particular religious doctrine or mode of worship is prescribed by the Trust Deeds, the usage of the congregation for the past twenty-five years is to be taken as conclusive evidence of what may properly be done in such meeting-houses.

The Act, which is entitled 'An Act for the Regulation of Suits Relating to Meeting Houses and other Property held for Religious Purposes by Persons Dissenting from the United Churches of England and Ireland' (7 and 8 Vict., cap. 45), is pr. in The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, xvii, ed. N. Simons (1845), p. 125 f.

NONCONFORMITY. Refusal to conform to the doctrines, polity or discipline of any Established Church. The term was originally used in the 17th cent. of those who, while at first agreeing with the doctrines of the C of E, nevertheless refused to conform to its discipline and practice, esp. in matters of ceremony. The execution of the 1662 Act of *Uniformity (q.v.) led to the Bartholomean Exodus, which marked the formal beginnings of separatism. The word is now applied generally to all dissenters, esp. those of Protestant sympathies. Among the groups to whom the term is commonly applied are the *Presbyterians (in England), the *Congregationalists, *Methodists, *Quakers, and *Baptists (qq.v.).

W. B. Selbie, Nonconformity. Its Origin and Progress (H.U.L. [1912]); H. Davies, The English Free Churches (ib., 1952); E. Routley, English Religious Dissent (Cambridge, 1960). S. Palmer, The Nonconformist's Memorial: Being an Account of the Ministers who were ejected or silenced after the Restoration (ed. 2, 2 vols., 1777–8). G. L. Turner (ed.), Original Records of Early Nonconformity under Persecution and Indulgence (3 vols., 1911–14). A. G. Matthews, Calamy Revised. Being a revision of Edmund *Calamy's Account of the Ministers and others ejected and silenced, 1660–2 (1934). H. W. Clark, History of English Nonconformity from Wiclif to the Close of the Nineteenth Century (2 vols., 1911). C. Burrage, The Early English Dissenters in the Light of Modern Research, 1550–1641 (2 vols., 1912). E. A. Payne, The Free Church Tradition in the Life of England (1944); J. W. Grant, Free Churchmanship in England, 1870–1940, with special reference to Congregationalism (1955). H. McLachlan, English Education under the Test Acts being the History of the Nonconformist Academies, 1662–1820 (Publications of the University of Manchester No. ccxiii; Historical Series No. lix; 1931). C. Ord in D.E.C.H., pp. 391–410, s.v.; W. F. Adeney in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 381–93, s.v.; T. F. Glasson in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), pp. 403–22, s.v. See also bibl. to separate nonconforming bodies.

NON EXPEDIT (Lat., 'It is not expedient'). The name given, from its opening words, to an official RC decree, issued on 29 Feb. 1868, forbidding Catholics in Italy to take part in the polling at civil elections. Its object was to counter the threat to the territorial possessions of the Papacy from the movement for a united Italy.

U. Benigni in C.E., xi (1911), p. 98 f., s.v.; R. Mori in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 486 f., s.v.; both with bibl., but neither gives ref. to text.

NONE. The last of the *Breviary Little Hours, appointed to be recited at the ninth hour, i.e. 3 p.m. In many orders it came to be said either immediately after the principal Mass (hence 'noon') or together with the other Little Hours. For the structure of the service, see Terce.

NONJURORS, The (English). The title is used of members of the C of E who after 1688 scrupled to take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to William and Mary on the grounds that by so doing they would break their previous oaths to *James II and his successors. They numbered nine bishops and some 400 priests, who were deprived of their livings, as well as a number of prominent laymen. The deprived bishops were Abp. W. *Sancroft of *Canterbury and Bps. T. *Ken of *Bath and Wells, F. Turner of *Ely, T. White of *Peterborough, W. Lloyd of *Norwich, R. Frampton of *Gloucester, J. Lake of *Chichester, W. Thomas of *Worcester, and T. Cartwright of *Chester, the last three of whom died before the sentence of deprivation against them could be carried out (1689). Since all were deprived by Act of Parliament and their successors appointed in the same way, with no attempt at canonical sentence, the Nonjuring clergy still regarded them as their lawful bishops, and many of the conforming clergy (including R. *South, J. *Sharp and W. *Beveridge) refused to accept their sees as being irregularly vacated. To ensure the succession of Nonjuring Bishops, Sancroft delegated his archiepiscopal powers to Lloyd on 9 Feb. 1692, and in 1694 G. Hickes and T. Wagstaffe were secretly consecrated (with the respective titles of Thetford and Ipswich) after the congé d'élire had been received from the exiled James II. The *Abjuration Oath of 1701 also helped to perpetuate the schism. The Nonjurors were divided on the question of the lawfulness of worshipping in their parish church; the majority preferred their own services, which were, of course, illegal. In 1716, after the death of Hickes, the controversy between *Usagers (q.v.) and Non-Usagers over questions of ritual produced a serious division which was not healed till 1732. From 1716 to 1725 they carried on abortive negotiations for union with the E. Churches. In addition to internal dissensions, the fear of a restoration of the Stuarts, esp. in the early Hanoverian period, considerably weakened their position. The last of the regular line of bishops, Robert Gordon, died in 1779, and, though an irregular line continued until the death of Charles Booth in 1805, during the latter part of the 18th cent. the Nonjurors virtually disappeared through absorption into the Established Church. Their guiding principles had been the sanctity of the Oath and the distinctive Anglican doctrine of the *Divine Right of Kings and the duty of passive obedience. They held a high conception of the Church as a spiritual society with its own laws, and laid particular emphasis on the external forms of worship, which tendencies link them with the *Caroline divines of the 17th and the *Tractarians of the 19th cents. They produced a number of good devotional writers. Among their more distinguished clergy were J. *Kettlewell, C. *Leslie, and W. *Law, well-known laymen being H. *Dodwell and T. *Hearne.

T. Lathbury, A History of the Nonjurors (1845); J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902); H. Broxap, The Later Nonjurors (1924). L. M. Hawkins, Allegiance in Church and State. The Problem of the Non-jurors in the English Revolution (Studies in Economics and Political Science, xcvii; 1928). The Nonjurors' liturgies of 1718 and 1734 are printed by W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, xl; 1958), pp. 273–316, with comm., pp. 71–135. S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 410–14, s.v.; C. J. B. Gaskoin in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 294–6, s.v.

NONNUS OF PANOPOLIS (c. 400). The probable author of two Greek poems in hexameters, the one, Διονυσιακά, a descriptive account of the journey of the god Dionysus to India, and the other a 'Paraphrase (μεταβολή) of the Fourth Gospel'. The latter, of which only part (3,750 lines) has survived, has a certain value for the light it throws on the text of the Bible, but is otherwise of scant interest. Nothing further is known of their author, and some unsuccessful attempts have been made to assign the 'Paraphrase' to otherwise known writers, e.g. to *Apollinarius of Laodicea.

Crit. texts of 'Paraphrase' ed. A. Scheindler (Teub., 1881) and of 'Dionysiaca' ed. A. Ludwich (ib., 1909) and R. Keydell (2 vols., Berlin, 1959); also with Eng. tr. by W. H. D. Rouse and notes by H. J. Rose and L. R. Lind (3 vols., Loeb, 1940); the 'Paraphrase', repr. from ed. D. Heinsius (Leyden, 1627), also in J. P. Migne, PG, xliii, 749–920. R. Janssen, Das Johannes-Evangelium nach der Paraphrase des Nonnus Panopolitanus (T.U., xxiii, Hft. 4; 1903). J. Golega, Studien über die Evangelien-Dichtung des Nonnus von Panopolis (1930). G. d'Ippolito, Studi nonniani. L'epillio nelle Dionisiache (Palermo, 1964). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 122–4; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 283. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 793–5; R. Keydell in P.W., xvii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 904–20.

NORBERT, St. (c. 1080–1134), founder of the *Premonstratensians and Abp. of Magdeburg. The younger son of a noble family of Xanten, Norbert early became subdeacon and canon of St. Victor's in his native town, but led a worldly life at the courts of Abp. Frederick I of Cologne and the Emp. Henry V. Having avoided the priesthood and declined the Bpric. of Cambrai in 1113, he was converted in 1115 when in danger of death during a thunderstorm. After some time in retirement at the abbey of Siegburg near Cologne, whose Abbot Cuno became his spiritual director, he was ordained priest in the same year, and, having taken the monastic habit, endeavoured to reform his brother canons at Xanten. These, who resented his zeal, accused him at the Synod of Fritzlar in 1118 of making innovations and of preaching without authorization; and in reply he resigned his canonry, sold his property, and went to Pope Gelasius II at St.-Gilles in Languedoc. After the Pope had given him permission to preach wherever he wished, he travelled as an itinerant preacher through N. France and soon became renowned for his eloquence and his miracles. In 1120, supported by Bartholomew, Bp. of Laon, he founded the Order of the Premonstratensians in the valley of Prémontré. He travelled in France, Belgium, and Germany, preaching everywhere, and successfully fighting the heresy of Tanchelm at Antwerp (1124). Early in 1126 he obtained at Rome the recognition of his order from Pope Honorius II, and in the same year was appointed Abp. of Magdeburg. His zeal for the reformation of his clergy and the recovery of alienated Church property made him many enemies and led to attempts against his life; but he won the confidence and favour of the Emp. Lothair II and accompanied him in 1132–3 to Rome, where he supported Innocent II against the antipope, Anacletus. He also prevented the outbreak of fresh quarrels about *Investiture, in recognition of which service the Pope extended his metropolitan jurisdiction to the whole of Poland. In 1133 Lothair made him Chancellor for Italy, but his activities were cut short by his early death. In 1582 he was canonized by *Gregory XIII. Feast day, 6 June.

The principal authority is a life written between 1157 and 1161, falsely attributed to Hugh of Prémontré, ed. R. Wilmans in M.G.H., Scriptores, xii (1856), pp. 663–706; excerpts, from a later redaction, in AA.SS., Jun. I (1695), pp. 819–58. R. Rosenmund, Die ältesten Biographieen des heiligen Norbert (1874). Modern lives by G. Madelaine, O.Praem. (Lille, 1886), F. A. Zák, O.Praem. (Vienna, 1900), and P. E. Valvekens (Brussels, 1943). Also by É. Maire ('Les Saints', 1922). Short study by M. Geudens, O.Praem. (London, 1886). P. Lefèvre, O.Praem., L'Épisode de la conversion de S. Norbert et la tradition hagiographique du "Vita Norberti" ' in R.H.E., lvi (1961), pp. 813–26.

NORIS, HENRI (1631–1704), cardinal and theologian. The descendant of an English family, he studied with the *Jesuits at Rimini, where he entered the Order of *Augustinian Hermits out of devotion to St. *Augustine. From the age of 27 he taught theology and Church history at Pesaro and Perugia, and from 1674 to 1692 at Padua. In 1692 Innocent XII called him to Rome, making him First Custodian of the *Vatican Library and, in 1695, creating him cardinal. His most important work is the Historia Pelagiana et Dissertatio de Synodo V Oecumenica (1673), a history of the *Pelagian controversy, followed by a defence of the Augustinian doctrine of grace (against that held by L. de *Molina). The book, though approved by the Holy See, raised a great deal of controversy, and, in 1676, was denounced to the Holy Office for renewing the errors of M. *Baius and C. *Jansenius. Noris was acquitted of heresy, but forty years after his death the Spanish *Inquisition renewed the accusation, placing the book on the *Index. His teaching was finally rehabilitated in 1748 by *Benedict XIV, who ordered Noris's books to be removed from the Index.

Collected works ed. P. and G. *Ballerini (4 vols., Verona, 1729–32), with life in vol. iv, pp. xiii–xlii; suppl. of letters in Ital. (Padua, 1741). F. Rojo, O.S.A., 'Ensayo bibliográfico de Noris, Bellelli y Berti' in Analecta Augustiniana, xxvi (1963), pp. 294–363, esp. pp. 296–330. F. Bonnard in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 796–802.

NORRIS, JOHN (1657–1711), English divine. He is generally reckoned the last of the *Cambridge Platonists. Educated at Winchester and Exeter College, Oxford, and later elected to a Fellowship at All Souls, he became rector of Newton St. Loe, Avon, in 1689. From 1691 until his death he was rector of Bemerton. His philosophy was mainly derived from the writings of N. *Malebranche, whose Recherche de la vérité (1674) made a great impression on him. Like Malebranche, he combined Cartesianism with a Platonic mysticism. His most elaborate work, his Essay towards the Theory of the Ideal or Intelligible World (2 vols., 1701, 1704), though tedious in its style, contained some penetrating criticisms of J. *Locke's Essay (1690). His other writings include an Account of Reason and Faith (1697), a reply to the *Deistic doctrines of J. *Toland's Christianity not Mysterious (1690).

In 1687 Norris issued A Collection of Miscellanies. Modern repr. of his Cursory Reflections upon a Book call'd An Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690), with introd. by G. D. McEwen (Augustan Reprint Society, xciii; 1961). F. I. MacKinnon, The Philosophy of John Norris of Bemerton (Philosophical Monographs, I, No. 2, New York, 1910). R. Acworth, La Philosophie de John Norris (Paris thesis; 2 vols., 1975). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 132–4.

'NORTH END', The. The position sometimes adopted at the Communion table by the celebrant of the *Eucharist in the C of E. It has been held to be required by certain rubrics in the BCP (see Eastward Position). It is now confined to pronounced Evangelicals; but where adopted, its use is generally defended with vigour on the ground that it rules out any ascription of a priestly or mediatorial function to the celebrant. Until comparatively recently, however, it was not a mark of doctrinal belief, such High Churchmen as C. *Wheatley and E. B. *Pusey having celebrated at the North End.

NORTH INDIA, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 29 Nov. 1970 by the union of six Christian bodies, viz. the *Anglican Church of *India, Pakistan and Ceylon in respect of 13 dioceses; the United Church of North India, itself a union of *Congregationalists and *Presbyterians dating from 1924; the circuits of the *Methodist Church linked with Britain and Australia; the *Baptists; the Church of the Brethren, which originated in Germany and was brought to India by American missionaries in 1895; and the *Disciples of Christ. The union, which was the fruit of negotiations extending back to a historic meeting at Tranquebar in 1919, was achieved by the act of a representative of each of the Churches involved reading his Church's resolutions of acceptance and assent to the Plan of Union. Thereafter, during the same inaugural Eucharist, six representative ministers from the united Church were joined by four ministers, one each from the *Mar Thoma Syrian Church, the Church of *South India, the Presbyterian Church of Assam, and a Baptist; these ten laid hands on each of three chosen ministers from the uniting Churches, who then jointly laid hands on all the other representative clergy present, thus uniting the ministries. Seven new bishops were consecrated next day by bishops from the Mar Thoma Church, the Church of South India, and a former Anglican bishop from the Church of North India. The Church of North India is divided into 22 dioceses, each with its own bishop. The presiding officer of the Synod has the title of Moderator.

NORWAY, Christianity in. Attempts were made by enlightened kings to introduce Christianity to Norway in the 9th and 10th cents., but without permanent success. Under St. *Olave (d. 1030) the country was finally converted, though largely at the point of the sword. In 1152 jurisdiction over the Norwegian Church, which had previously rested in the see of *Lund, was transferred to the Bp. of Nidaros (Trondheim).

Although suppression of the monasteries began under Christian II (1513–23), the Reformation in Norway was largely imposed by the Danish conquerors, when her independent existence ceased in 1537. Lutheranism became the state religion, in the radical form favoured by *Denmark rather than the more moderate form adopted by Sweden, and no other form of religion was recognized or tolerated until 1845. Since that date both RCism and Protestant dissent have to some degree spread their influence. In 1814 the Danish power was shaken off, and the country united to Sweden; and in 1905 Norway became once more an independent state. During the German occupation of 1940–5, the Church was a focus of resistance under the leadership of Eivind *Berggrav, Bp. of Oslo.

J. R. Keyser, Den Norske Kirkes Historie under Katholicismen (2 vols., Kristiania, 1856–8). A. C. Bang, Den Norske Kirkes Historie (ib., 1912). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia. Eine Sammlung von Selbstdarstellungen der christlichen Kirchen, Bd. ii, fasc. 6 (1936), with bibl. I. Welle, Norges Kirkehistorie (Oslo, 1948). E. Molland, Fra Hans Nielson Hauge tel Elvind Berggrav (1951; Eng. tr. as Church Life in Norway 1800–1950, Minneapolis, 1957). B. Hoye and T. M. Ager, The Fight of the Norwegian Church against Nazism (New York, 1943). L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches. A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), pp. 154–66; iv (1962), pp. 317–25. J. B. Metzler, Die apostolischen Vikariate des Nordens, ihre Entstehung, ihre Entwicklung und ihre Verwalter (Paderborn, 1919).

NORWICH. Although Eorpwald, King of East Anglia (d. 628), embraced the Christian faith, the real conversion of the country dates from the reign (631–4) of his half-brother Sigeberht, when Honorius, Abp. of *Canterbury (627–653), sent St. *Felix to evangelize the East Angles. About the same time St. Fursey (d. c. 650) founded a monastery, prob. at Burghcastle, on land provided by the King. In 673 St. *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury, divided the diocese between the North Folk and the South Folk, Dunwich remaining the see of the latter, while Elmham became a new see for Norfolk. There is a gap in the recorded succession of East Anglian bishops between 870 and 956, when the area was perhaps under the episcopal jurisdiction of London. Shortly before 1075, Herfast (Bp. 1070–85) moved his see from Elmham to Thetford, whence in 1094 Herbert of Losinga (Bp. 1091–1119) transferred it to Norwich. Here in 1096 he founded the Cathedral of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, poss. as a penance for simony, and constituted it a monastic church under the *Benedictine Rule. The limits of the diocese remained practically unchanged until 1837, when the archdeaconry of Sudbury was transferred to *Ely. In 1914 the archdeaconry of Suffolk was incorporated in the new diocese of St. Edmundsbury and Ipswich. The diocese of Norwich now corresponds roughly with the county of Norfolk.

The Cathedral is mainly a Norman building with a 15th cent. spire and fine 15th and 16th cent. vaulted roofs. The nave has an altar at the East end, behind which is the stone pulpitum, supporting the organ. The choir has an ambulatory with radiating chapels, and a semicircular apse. Here are the Jesus Chapel, St. Luke's Chapel, used as the parish church, and the Bauchun chapel, used as the Consistory Court. A bridge on the N. side is believed to have led to a chapel for relics. The Lady Chapel, at the extreme East, built by Walter de Suffield (Bp. 1245–57), was later ruined, but rebuilt in 1930–2. The two-storied cloisters are 14th cent. and contain a remarkable series of roof-bosses. The late Norman Bishop's throne in the basilican position behind the altar is unique in England. In the Cathedral Library is an exceptionally complete set of Obedientiary Rolls.

The Bp. of Norwich owes his unique position as a mitred Abbot to the fact that when *Henry VIII confiscated the episcopal revenues he substituted those of the Abbey of St. Benet, together with those of Hickling. Notable Bishops include, besides Herbert of Losinga (1091–1119) and Henry Despenser, the 'fighting bishop' (1370–1406), J. *Overall (1618–19), F. *White (1629–31), M. Wren (1635–8; uncle of Christopher *Wren), R. *Montague (1638–41), J. *Hall (1641–56), E. *Reynolds (1661–76), and A. *Sparrow (1676–85).

H. T. Riley, 'Norwich: The Bishop's Registry' in the First Report of the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts (1874), Appendix. p. 86 f.; id., 'Norwich: The Dean and Chapter', ib., pp. 87–9. A. Jessopp (ed.), Visitations of the Diocese of Norwich A.D. 1492–1532 (Camden Society, Second Series, xliii; 1888). J. F. Williams (ed.), Diocese of Norwich. Bishop Redman's Visitation, 1597. Presentments in the Archdeaconries of Norwich, Norfolk and Suffolk (Norfolk Record Society, xviii; 1946); T. F. Barton (ed.), The Registrum Vagum of Anthony Harison [secretary to Bp. John Jegson, 1603–17] (ib., xxxiii; 2 vols., 1963–4). H. W. Saunders (ed.), The First Register of Norwich Cathedral Priory (ib., xi; 1939); F. J. Williams–B. Cozens-Hardy (ed.), Extracts from the Two Earliest Minute Books of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich Cathedral, 1566–1649 (ib., xxiv; 1953). H. W. Saunders, An Introduction to the Obedientiary and Manor Rolls of Norwich Cathedral Priory (1930). Bartholomew de Cotton, 'Annales Ecclesiae Norwicensis' and continuation in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i (1691), pp. 397–417. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, iv (ed. 1823), pp. 1–24. F. Blomefield, An Essay towards the Topographical History of the County of Norfolk, iii (1806), pp. 445–671, and iv (1806), pp. 1–64. J. Britton, The History and Antiquities of the See and Cathedral Church of Norwich (1816). A. Jessopp, Norwich (Diocesan Histories; 1884); D. H. S. Cranage (ed.), Thirteen-Hundredth Anniversary of the Diocese of East Anglia (Norwich, 1930). H. Leeds, Norwich Cathedral Past and Present (1910); R. H. Mottram, The Glories of Norwich Cathedral (1948). D. J. Stewart (from Memoranda of R. Willis), 'Notes on Norwich Cathedral' in The Archaeological Journal, xxxii (1875), pp. 16–47 and 155–87. B. Dodwell, 'The Foundation of Norwich Cathedral' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th series, vii (1957), pp. 1–18. C. A. R. Radford, 'The Throne in Norwich Cathedral' in Archaeological Journal, cvi for 1959 (1961), pp. 115–32. J. C. Cox on 'The Cathedral Priory of the Holy Trinity, Norwich', in V.C.H. Norfolk, ii, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 317–28; also id. on the ecclesiastical history of the county, ib., pp. 213–317. Indices to wills in the consistory courts and other similar material also published by the Norfolk Record Society and the Norfolk and Norwich Archaeological Society.

NOTARIES. Specially appointed persons who confirm and attest the truth of any deeds or writings in order to render them authentic. It is a rule of *canon law that the evidence of one notary is equivalent to that of two witnesses; hence the signed statement of a notary is unchallengeable evidence in a court of law. In the Middle Ages their appointment lay with the Pope or his delegates, and their work was and remains international. By 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, sect. 3, the right of appointing notaries was transferred to the Abp. of *Canterbury who acted through his Master of Faculties. Nowadays the English notary, who is an ecclesiastical officer, is nominated by the judge of the provincial courts of Canterbury and *York.

G. Barraclough, Public Notaries and the Papal Curia. A Calendar and Study of a Formularium Notariorum Curie from the Early Years of the Fourteenth Century (1934), incl. text. C. J. Duerr, The Judicial Notary. A historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, cccxii; 1951). J. C. Brown, 'The Origin and Early History of the Office of Notary' in Juridical Review, xlvii (1935), pp. 201–40, 355–417. R. Naz in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 1015–20, s.v. 'Notaire', with bibl.

NOTES OF THE CHURCH, The. The four characteristic marks of the Church first enumerated in the so-called *Nicene Creed, i.e. one, holy, catholic, and apostolic. Though forming the opening words of *Boniface VIII's bull '*Unam Sanctam', they were not generally discussed until the Reformation, when RC theologians utilized them to discern the true Church among the rival claims of the different Christian Communions. Since then they have been employed as a particular mode of apologetics ('via notarum'). From about the middle of the 16th cent. treatises 'De notis Ecclesiae' became very numerous, though the notes were not at first confined to the four of the Creed. Thus St. Robert *Bellarmine enumerated as many as fifteen notes, though he held that these fifteen were ultimately reducible to four. Under the stress of controversy the positions were clarified and the exact meaning of the word defined. The term was taken over by the *Tractarians in order to demonstrate the Catholicity of the C of E, and a doctrine of the Church, based on its four notes, was elaborated with some fullness by W. *Palmer in his Treatise on the Church of Christ (2 vols., 1833). For a much earlier dispute about the notes of holiness and catholicity, see Optatus.

D. *Stone, The Notes of the Church (1910). G. Thils, Les Notes de l'Église dans l'apologétique catholique depuis la Réforme (Gembloux, 1937).

NOTH, MARTIN (1902–68), OT scholar. A native of Dresden, he was educated at the Universities of Erlangen, Rostock, and Leipzig. After serving as Privatdozent at Greifswald and Leipzig, he held chairs at Königsberg (1930–44) and Bonn (1945–65) and in the closing years of his life was Director of the Institut für Wissenschaft des Heiligen Landes in Jerusalem. He was a disciple of Albrecht Alt (1883–1956; professor in Leipzig), from whom he derived his interest in the archaeology and geography of Palestine and the social and political structure of early Israel. In Das System der zwölf Stämme Israels (1930) he argued that, in the period before the establishment of the Israelite monarchy, the tribes were organized as an amphictyony similar to those known in classical antiquity, and that we have no reliable knowledge of Israel before the emergence of this amphictyony as a sequel to the invasion of Canaan by the 'house of Joseph'. This hypothesis was further developed in his Geschichte Israels (1950, ed. 2, 1954; Eng. tr. 1958, ed. 2, 1960). His *traditio-historical researches are best represented by Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, i (all publd. under this title, 1943) and Überlieferungsgeschichte des Pentateuch (1948). Of special importance is his contention that Jos., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., and 1 and 2 Kgs. form a '*Deuteronomistic History', to which the bulk of Deut. is the preamble rather than the concluding section of the Pentateuch. He also wrote important commentaries on Exod. (1959, Eng. tr., 1962), Lev. (1962, Eng. tr., 1965), Num. (1966, Eng. tr., 1968), and Jos. (1938, ed. 2, 1953). Of his projected commentary on 1 and 2 Kgs., only sixteen chapters were complete at the time of his death (5 fascicles, 1964–8). His philological expertise is evident in Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der gemeinsemitischen Namengebung (1928); and his concern to relate Israel to its environment appears above all in Die Welt des Alten Testaments (1940, ed. 4, 1964; Eng. tr., 1966).

Many technical articles by Noth appeared in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästinavereins, of which he was editor 1929–63. Some of his most important essays are collected in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament, i (1957, ed. 2, 1960; Eng. tr. The Laws in the Pentateuch, 1966); ii, ed. H. W. Wolff (1969), with memoir by R. Smend, pp. 139–65, and list of Noth's works by H. Schult, pp. 166–205; two further volumes are projected.

NOTKER. Among several monks of the *Benedictine monastery of St. *Gall of this name the two best known are:

(1) Notker Balbulus (c. 840–912), 'the Stammerer'. He entered the monastery of St. Gall in his youth, was made librarian in 890, then guest-master, and finally master of the monastic school, where Solomon III, later Bp. of Constance, was among his pupils. He is famous for his literary work, esp. his compilation of *sequences and his introduction of them into the Liturgy. He also continued the 'Breviarium Regum Francorum' attributed to Erchanbert, wrote a metrical 'Vita' of St. Gall, and is the probable author of the 'Gesta Caroli Magni', a collection of stories about *Charlemagne circulated under the designation of 'a monk of St. Gall'. His biographer, Ekkehart IV, praises him as a vessel of the Holy Ghost, stammering of tongue but not of spirit. Soon venerated as a saint, his cult was approved by *Leo X for St. Gall in 1512 and for the diocese of Constance a year later. Commemoration, 6 Apr.

(2) Notker Labeo (c. 950–1022), called also 'Notker the German'. He entered the monastery of St. Gall as a boy and later became master of the monastic school, which office he retained till his death. To make Latin literature more accessible to his pupils, he took the unprecedented step of translating many classical and other writings into German, among them works by Cato, *Virgil, Terence, as well as the 'Job' and the 'Moralia' of St. *Gregory. All, however, are now lost except *Boethius's 'De consolatione philosophiae', Martianus Capella's 'De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii', *Aristotle's 'De categoriis' and 'De interpretatione', and the Psalter. He also wrote several works in Latin and a treatise on choral music in German. His vigorous style and his ability to translate philosophical terms into the as yet undeveloped Old High German have been deservedly admired.

(1) Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxi, 993–1178; Sequences also ed. C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister (A.H.M.A., liii; 1911); modern ed. of his poetical works, with full introd., by W. von den Steinen, Notker der Dichter und seine geistige Welt (Bern, 2 vols., 1948); ed. minor of his poetical works by id. (ib., 1960). 'Vita S. Galli' also ed. K. Strecker in M.G.H., Poetae, iv (pt. 2; 1923), pp. 1093–1108. The 'Gesta Caroli Magni' have frequently been edited; classical ed. by P. Jaffé, Monumenta Carolina (Bibliotheca Rerum Germanicarum, iv; Berlin, 1867), pp. 628–700; modern ed. by H. F. Haefele (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, Nova Series, xii; 1959). Eng. tr. by L. Thorpe, Two Lives of Charlemagne (Penguin Classics, 1969), pp. 93–172, with notes, pp. 189–99. Life of Notker by Ekkehart IV is pr. in AA.SS., Apr. I (1675), pp. 579–96, with process of canonization, pp. 596–604. Useful biographical note in L. *d'Achéry, O.S.B.–J. *Mabillon, O.S.B., Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti, v (Paris, 1635), pp. 11–22; repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 983–94. J. Schwalm–P. von Winterfeld, 'Zu Notker dem Stammler' in N.A., xxvii (1902), pp. 740–51. H. F. Haefele, 'Studien zu Notkers Gesta Karoli' in Deutsches Archiv, xv (1959), pp. 358–92. Raby (1953), pp. 211–15; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 282–99. G. Meyer von Knonau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 218–20, s.v. 'Notker, Mönche vom Kloster St. Gallen'; K. Langosch in Stammler, v (1955), cols. 735–75.

(2) Editions of his works by P. Piper (Germanischer Bücherschatz herausgegeben A. Holder, viii–x; Freiburg i.Br., 1882–3) and E. H. Sehrt–T. Starck (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek begründet von H. Paul, xxxii–xxxiv, xxxvii, xliii–xliii; 1933–55). P. [T.] Hoffmann, Die Mischprosa Notkers des Deutschen (Palaestra, lviii; 1910); id., Der mittelalterliche

Mensch gesehen aus Welt und Umwelt Notkers des Deutschen (1922). H. Naumann, Notkers Boethius. Untersuchungen über Quellen und Stil (Quellen und Forschungen zur Sprach- und Culturgeschichte der Germanischen Völker, cxxi; 1913). I. Schröbler, Notker III von St. Gallen als Übersetzer und Kommentator von Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiae (Tübingen, 1953). E. H. Sehrt, Notker-Glossar (Tübingen, 1962). Manitius, ii (1923), pp. 694–99; E. Karg-Gasterstädt in Stammler, v (1955), cols. 775–90.

NOTKER (c. 940–1008), Bp. of Liège. Of a noble Swabian family, he was perhaps educated at St. *Gall, but he was not provost there as stated by the 'Hildesheim Chronicle'. Nominated Imperial chaplain in Italy in 969, he was made Bp. of Liège by the Emp. Otto I in 972 and throughout his life defended German interests both in Italy and Lorraine. He established the temporal sovereignty of the bishops of his diocese, which he embellished with many fine buildings. At the same time he improved the moral and intellectual standard of his clergy and reformed the abbey of Lobbes. He was a great benefactor of the Liège schools, to which he attracted celebrated scholars. The many Lives of saints attributed to him are the works of his friend Abbot Heriger of Lobbes, to which he lent his name.

Works attributed to him in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxix, 1135–68. Anonymous Life, written in the late 12th cent. and incorporated in the 13th cent. 'Gesta Episcoporum Leodiensium' of Giles of Orval, ed. J. Heller in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxv (1880), pp. 57–63; also ed., with detailed introd., by G. Kurth in Compte Rendu des séances de la commission royale d'histoire, ou Recueil de ses bulletins, Sér. 4, xvii (Brussels, 1890), pp. 365–422. G. Kurth, Notger de Liège et la civilisation au Xe siècle (2 vols., 1905), with repr. of the Life in vol. ii, pp. 10–15. Manitius, ii (1923), pp. 219–22. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 807–9, s.v.

NOTRE-DAME, PARIS. The cathedral church of Paris. Built in the early French Gothic style on the Île de la Cité, it was begun in 1163 and consecrated in 1182; and became an accepted model for several other French cathedrals. The western front was added in 1200–20. The church was desecrated in the French Revolution, when the 'Feast of Reason' was celebrated in it in 1793, but it was reopened to Christian worship in 1795, at first for the '*Constitutional Church'. Victor Hugo's Notre-Dame de Paris (1831) awakened a fresh interest in its glories and from 1845 onwards its fabric was restored.

B. Guérard (ed.), Cartulaire de l'église Notre-Dame de Paris (Collection de Documents inédits sur l'Histoire de France, Sér. I, Collection des Cartulaires de France, iv–vii; 1850). F. de Guilhermy–E. Viollet-le-Duc, Description de Notre-Dame, cathédrale de Paris (1856). M. Aubert, Notre-Dame de Paris. Sa place dans l'histoire de l'architecture du XIIe au XIVe siècle (1920). P. *Batiffol, Notre-Dame de Paris dans l'histoire et dans la dévotion de la France (1917). A. Temko, Notre-Dame of Paris. The Biography of a Cathedral (1956). See also bibl. to Paris.

NOVALIS. The pseudonym of Friedrich Leopold Freiherr von Hardenberg (1772–1801), the German Romantic poet. To his parents, who belonged to the *Moravian sect, he owed the deep religious strain in his character which he never lost. He was educated at the universities of Jena, Leipzig (where he made friends with F. *Schlegel), and *Wittenberg. His poetic genius, inspired by passion for the girl Sophie von Kühn, found its best expression in the beautiful Hymnen an die Nacht (1800), evoked by grief at her early death (1797). His marked leanings towards Catholicism became apparent in this, as also in his essay Die Christenheit oder Europa (1799; publd. 1826). Later he studied geology under Prof. A. G. Werner (1750–1817), whom he immortalized as the 'Meister' in one of his two great unfinished prose romances, Die Lehrlinge zu Sais. His other chief work, Heinrich von Ofterdingen, records much of his spiritual history under the allegory of a search for a mysterious 'blue flower'. He died of phthisis on 25 Mar. 1801.

His works, mostly fragments, were ed. by his two associates, Ludwig Tieck and Friedrich Schlegel (2 vols., Berlin, 1802), often repr. Modern edd. by E. Heilborn (2 vols., Berlin, 1901), J. Minor (4 vols., Jena, 1907), P. Kluckhohn (4 vols., Leipzig [1929]), and E. Wasmuth (3 vols., Berlin, 1943). Correspondence with Friedrich and August Wilhelm, Charlotte and Caroline Schlegel ed. J. M. Raich (Mainz, 1880). Novalis has been the subject of innumerable studies in Germany, esp. from the literary standpoint. T. *Carlyle discusses him in a review of his collected works in The Foreign Review, iii (1829), pp. 97–141. A. Schubart, Novalis' Leben, Dichten und Denken (1887); E. Heilborn, Novalis der Romantiker (1901); E. Hederer, Novalis (Vienna, 1949); M. Dick, Die Entwicklung des Gedankens der Poesie in den Fragmenten des Novalis (Mainzer Philosophische Forschungen, vii; Bonn, 1967). W. *Dilthey, Das Erlebnis und die Dichtung (1906), pp. 201–82. In Eng. there is a popular introd. by P. Spring, Novalis, Pioneer of the Spirit (Winter Park, Florida, 1946). W. Müller-Seidel in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 1536–9, s.v.

NOVATIANISM. A rigorist schism in the W. Church which arose out of the *Decian persecution (A.D. 249–50). Its leader, Novatian, was a Roman presbyter and the author of an important (and completely orthodox) work on the doctrine of the Trinity. Details about the life of Novatian are limited and not entirely consistent. Apparently because disappointed by the election of *Cornelius as Pope (251), he joined the rigorist party, which deprecated concessions to those who had compromised with paganism, and was consecrated rival Bp. of Rome. Novatianist views were approved by *Antioch, but rejected by *Dionysius at Alexandria. Novatian himself suffered martyrdom under Valerian in 257–8.

Though doctrinally orthodox, the Novatianists were excommunicated. One of their bishops, Acesius, after accepting the *Nicene decisions on *Arianism and the *Paschal Controversy, was rebuked by *Constantine himself at the Council for persisting in schism. Can. 8 of Nicaea also elaborated the terms on which Novatianists could be received back into Catholic communion. A Novatianist Church persisted into the 5th cent. and, in isolated communities, even later.

The chief authority on Novatian is *Cyprian's 'Epistles'. Of the earlier edd. of the 'De Trinitate', the best is that of J. Jackson in his ed. of Novatian's works (London, 1728), pp. 1–250; this ed. repr. from A. *Gallandi, in J. P. Migne, PL, iii, 911–82. Modern crit. ed. of Novatian's works by G. F. Diercks (C.C., Series Latina, iv; 1972). Eng. tr. of 'De Trinitate' by H. Moore (Translations of Christian Literature, Series 2; 1919). A. d'Alès, S.J., Novatien. Étude sur la théologie romaine au milieu du troisième siècle (1924). M. Simonetti, 'Alcune osservazioni sul De Trinitate di Novaziano' in Studi in onore di Angelo Monteverdi, ii (Modena, 1959), pp. 771–83. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 624–35; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 170–72. A. *Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 223–42; H. Koch in P.W., xxxiii (1936), cols. 1138–56; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 816–849; J. Quasten in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), cols. 1062–4, s.v. 'Novatianismus'.

NOVELLO, VINCENT (1781–1861), Church musician. Born of mixed Italian and English parents, he was appointed organist of the Portuguese Embassy chapel as early as 1797, and from 1840 to 1843 was organist of the RC church in Moorfields. From 1849 till his death he lived at Nice. He was one of the founders of the London Philharmonic Society and of the Choral Harmonists' Society. He is esp. remembered for his editions of sacred music and for his rehabilitation of such great works as the Masses of J. Haydn and W. A. Mozart and the music of G. P. da *Palestrina in England. Among his chief publications were: A Selection of Sacred Music (2 vols., 1811), Twelve Easy Masses (3 vols., 1816), The Fitzwilliam Music (i.e. the Musical MSS. in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge; 5 vols., 1825), Purcell's Sacred Music* (5 vols., 1829).

M. Cowden Clarke (daughter), The Life and Labours of Vincent Novello [1864]. A Mozart Pilgrimage. Being the Travel Diaries of Vincent & Mary Novello in the Year 1829, transcribed by N. M. di Marignano, ed. Rosemary Hughes (1955). Short history of the firm of Novello, publishers and printers of music, founded by Vincent Novello in 1811, A Century and a Half in Soho (1961). P. M. Young in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), vi (1954), pp. 113–15.

NOVENA. In the W. Church, a term applied to a period of nine days' private or public devotion. by which it is hoped to obtain some special grace. The general observance of Novenas is quite modern, dating only from the 17th cent., though it is modelled on the nine days' preparation of the Apostles and the BVM for the descent of the Spirit at *Pentecost (Acts 1. 13 f.) and there are other instances of a nine days' preparation earlier. Novenas may be arranged either in circumstances of special peril or need, or as a recurrent devotion, and, in the RC Church, *indulgences have sometimes been attached to their observance.

J. Hilgers, S.J., in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 141–4, s.v.; P. K. Meagher in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 543 f., s.v.

NOVICE. A probationary member of a religious community. The period of probation generally lasts at least a year. During this time the Novice is under the authority of the superior, and wears the dress and follows the rule of the community. A novice may be dismissed from the community at any stage of his or her novitiate, and may also leave at any time without incurring ecclesiastical penalties. Admission to the novitiate, marked by the wearing of the habit of the community for the first time, is known as the 'clothing'. Usually admission to the novitiate takes place only after a period already spent as a '*postulant' (q.v.).

NOVUM RUBRICARUM (26 July 1960). The decree of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites instituting several liturgical reforms in the Roman rite, among them a new classification of the feasts and other days of the liturgical calendar, many details in the order and ceremonial of the Mass, and a revision of the regulations governing *votive Masses. They mark an important stage in the general liturgical reform inaugurated by *John XXIII.

Text in A.A.S., lii (1960), pp. 593–740.

NOWELL, ALEXANDER (c. 1507–1602), Dean of *St. Paul's. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1536. In *Mary's first Parliament he was returned as the member for Looe, but was not allowed to take his seat on the ground that he was already a member of *Convocation. After some years in exile during Mary's reign he returned on *Elizabeth's accession and in 1560 was appointed Dean of St. Paul's. He wrote three 'Catechisms'—the 'Large', the 'Middle', and the 'Small'. The last-named, published in 1572, so closely resembles that of the 1549 BCP that it has been argued that Nowell wrote this as well. The additions of 1604 to the BCP Catechism were certainly taken (by J. *Overall) in substance from Nowell's 'Small Catechism'. The 'Large Catechism' was probably approved by Convocation in 1563, though it was not printed till 1570.

Life by R. Churton (Oxford, 1809). W. Hunt in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 243–50.

NULLITY. In canon law the absence of legal validity from an act or contract, owing to the omission of an integral requirement. Thus a pretended marriage is invalidated from the outset through the existence of one or more *impediments, e.g. the relation of the parties to one another within the *prohibited degrees, the intention of one or both of the parties to form a union which was not indissoluble, or restraint on the free consent of one or both of the parties, though this last impediment may be rectified by the subsequent voluntary co-habitation of the parties.

In England the civil law still regards as of no legal effect marriages which were null from the beginning in canon law. Marriages which can be made void by a civil decree of nullity are, however, considered of full legal effect until dissolved by a Court. By the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1937, now embodied in the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1965, four specific grounds for such a civil law decree of nullity were recognized: (1) non-consummation of the marriage through the wilful refusal of the respondent; (2) insanity or epilepsy; (3) venereal disease in a communicable form in the respondent; and (4) pregnancy of the respondent by some other person than the petitioner. In (2), (3), and (4) the petitioner has to establish his ignorance of the facts at the time of marriage and must not have approved the marriage by sexual intercourse since discovering the defect. In 1971 epilepsy ceased to provide a ground for nullity. A difficult ecclesiastical problem is raised by (1), since it professes to establish the 'nullity' of a marriage on the ground of facts which have happened since the marriage. Provided that at least one of the parties has acted in good faith, the union remains, even after a sentence of nullity, a 'putative marriage' and the children are considered 'legitimate'. See also Matrimony and Divorce.

The Report of a Commission on the subject appointed by the Abpp. of *Canterbury and *York in 1949 at the request of the *Convocations was publd. under the title The Church and the Law of Nullity of Marriage (S.P.C.K., 1955).

NUMBER OF THE BEAST, The. The number 666 (or, acc. to some MSS., 616) in Rev. 13. 18. As in both Gk. and Heb. each letter of the alphabet represented a figure as well as a letter, every name could be represented by a number corresponding to the sum of its letters. Innumerable explanations have been given of the cryptogram. The most prob. is that '*Nero Caesar' is intended. In Heb. letters it adds up to 666 (with the form 'Neron') or to 616 (with 'Nero'). This is esp. appropriate for the 'man of sin' if 666 is read, since here each digit is one less than seven, the perfect number. St. *Irenaeus proposed 'Euanthas', 'Lateinos' or 'Teitan' (Adv. Haer., V. xxx. 3). The many ingenious attempts to refer it to such persons as Mohammed, M. *Luther, Napoleon or the Pope may be safely dismissed.

NUMBERS, Book of. The fourth Book of the *Pentateuch. Its English title, which follows that of the Greek and Latin versions, is explained by its two records of a census (1–4 and 26). The Hebrew title, 'Bemidhbar' (Heb. בְּמִדְבַּר, the fourth word, meaning 'in the wilderness'), is more appropriate, however, as the bulk of the Book narrates the experiences of the Israelites during their wilderness wanderings down to the time of *Joshua's appointment as *Moses' successor. The Book centres in the person of Moses and, besides its main narrative, contains large sections of miscellaneous laws and ceremonial directions. It includes the well-known episodes of the twelve spies (13), of the revolt of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram (16), and of Balaam's mission to Balak (22 f.). To the last of these there are references in the NT (2 Pet. 2. 15, Jude 11, Rev. 2. 14). The form of priestly blessing in 6. 24–6 is frequently used in the Christian Church.

Commentaries by H. Holzinger (K.H.C., Abt. iv; 1903), B. Baentsch (K.H.A.T., Abt. I, Bd. ii, on Ex., Lev., and Num.; 1903, pp. 443–699), G. B. *Gray (I.C.C., 1903), A. H. McNeile (Camb. Bib., RV, 1911), L. Elliott Binns (West. Comm., 1927), M. *Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, vii, 1966; Eng. tr., 1968), and N. H. Snaith (New Cent. Bib. on Lev. and Num., 1967, pp. 180–347). G. F. Moore in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 3439–49, s.v.

NUMINOUS. A word coined by R. *Otto to denote the elements of a non-rational and amoral kind in what is experienced in religion as the 'holy'. The Numinous is thus held to include feelings of awe and self-abasement (at the Mysterium Tremendum) as well as an element of religious fascination (the fascinans). Otto developed his psychological analyses for the first time in Das Heilige (1917; Eng. tr., 1923).

NUN. A member of a religious order or congregation of women living under the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience. In RC *Canon Law (CIC, 488, § 7) only those living under 'solemn vows' are accounted Nuns (moniales) in the technical sense, those under 'simple vows' being properly called 'sisters' (sorores). The *Carthusians require complete bodily integrity, but other orders receive widows and penitents by dispensation.

NUN OF KENT, The. See Barton, Elizabeth.

NUNS' RULE, The. See Ancren Riwle, The.

NUNC DIMITTIS. The Song of *Simeon (Lk. 2. 29–32), so named from its initial words in the *Vulgate version. It has formed part of daily prayers since the 4th cent., its use being already prescribed in the '*Apostolic Constitutions' (vii. 48). In the E. Rite it is said at *Vespers. In the Roman and many other W. breviaries its use is ordered at *Compline, whence it passed to the *Evensong of the BCP. In the former *Monastic Breviary it found no regular place, but its use at Compline in monastic houses is now recommended in the Thesaurus Liturgiae Monasticae Horarum (1977). It is also part of the celebrant's final devotions in the Liturgy of St. *Chrysostom, and in the Roman Rite it is sung at the *Candlemas Procession.

NUNCIO. A permanent diplomatic representative of the *Holy See accredited to a civil government and often of ambassadorial status. He acts also as a link between Rome and the Church of the state to which he is accredited. The Nuncio was originally a fiscal officer, charged with the collection of Papal tithe and other money contributions, and only from the time of the *Counter-Reformation have his functions been diplomatic. See also Apostolic Delegate; Legate, Papal.

NUPTIAL MASS. The wedding Mass which includes the celebration of the marriage and contains the nuptial blessing. It is a *ritual Mass, consisting of suitable lessons, chants and prayers. According to the present law of the RC Church, a Nuptial Mass may be celebrated even on Sundays and feast days; on these days the Mass of the day is said, though one lesson may be taken from the Nuptial Mass (except on a few feasts of the greatest liturgical importance) and the prayers of the nuptial blessing are inserted. Since 1966 a Nuptial Mass has been permitted at a *mixed marriage, though the non-RC partner may not receive Communion.

NUREMBERG DECLARATION, The. The statement of belief issued by a group of 14 German Catholic professors and teachers which met at Nuremberg on 25–6 Aug. 1870 in protest against the decrees of the *Vatican Council on the Papal claims (promulgated 18 July 1870). Those present included J. J. I. von *Döllinger (Munich), J. *Friedrich (Munich), W. C. Reischl (Munich), F. H. *Reusch (Bonn), J. F. von Schulte (Prague). The manifesto denied that the recent Vatican Council was a true Oecumenical Council, repudiated the relevant chapters of Pastor Aeternus, maintained that Papal infallibility would destroy civil liberties, and demanded an unfettered General Council which should meet north of the Alps. The declaration was later signed by 33 professors and teachers, priests and laymen. Its signatories formed the nucleus of the *Old Catholic Movement (q.v.).

The text is in J. F. von Schulte, Der Altkatholizismus (1887), pp. 14–16. C. B. Moss, The Old Catholic Movement (1948), p. 227 f.

O

OAK, Synod of the. The synod held under an Imperial order in July 403, at a suburb of *Chalcedon called 'The Oak'. Its object was to remove St. *Chrysostom from his see of *Constantinople. Held under the presidency of Paul, the Exarch of Heraclea (390–403), it was attended by 36 (or possibly 45) bishops, of whom all but 7 were from Egypt and all were Chrysostom's enemies. After Chrysostom had been condemned on several fabricated counts, ranging from favouring *Origenism to eating lozenges in church, the Emp. Arcadius (395–408) accepted the synod's decision and exiled Chrysostom to Bithynia. The riotous indignation of the people of Constantinople, together with the occurrence of an earthquake, frightened the Empress and Chrysostom was recalled a few days later.

'Acta' (prob. genuine) survive in *Photius, Cod. lix (PG, ciii, 105–13). Hardouin, i, cols. 1037–42; Mansi, iii (1759), cols. 1141–54; Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 137–54. P. Ubaldi, 'La sinodo "ad Quercum" dell'anno 403' in Memorie della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino. Serie secunda, lii (1903), Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, pp. 33–97. See also bibl. to Origenism.

OAKELEY, FREDERICK (1802–80), *Tractarian divine. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected to a chaplain-fellowship at Balliol in 1827, where the influence of W. G. *Ward, who became a Fellow in 1834, led to his accepting Tractarian teaching. From 1839 to 1845 Oakeley was in charge of the Margaret Chapel, London, on the site of the present church of All Saints, Margaret Street, and under his ministry the chapel became a centre of Tractarian worship in London. When the rift began to appear in the Oxford Movement, Oakeley was on the pro-Roman side; and on 29 Oct. 1845, three weeks after J. H. *Newman, he was received into the RC Church. Ordained priest in that Church in 1847, he was a canon of the diocese of Westminster from 1852 until his death. His writings include Whitehall Chapel Sermons (1837), The Church of the Bible (1857), Historical Notes on the Tractarian Movement (1865) and The Priest to the Mission (1871). He also wrote frequently for the British Critic* and the Dublin Review*.

In March 1880 Oakeley contributed 'Personal Recollections of Oxford from 1820 to 1845' to The Month, repr. in Miss L. M. Q. Couch (ed.), Reminiscences of Oxford (Oxf. Hist. Soc., xxii; 1892), pp. 301–45. There is no Life, but he figures extensively in the lit. of the Oxford Movement, e.g. in Wilfrid Ward, W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889), passim. C. R. Beazley in D.N.B., xli (1895), p. 286 f.

O-ANTIPHONS (also known as the Greater Antiphons). The *Antiphons sung before and after *Magnificat at *Vespers, acc. to Roman use, on the seven days preceding Christmas Eve, i.e. from 17 to 23 Dec. The name is derived from their initial 'O', viz. 'O Sapientia', 'O Adonai', 'O Radix Jesse', 'O Clavis David', 'O Oriens', 'O Rex gentium', and 'O Emmanuel'. The *Sarum Use began the Antiphons on 16 Dec., and provided an additional 'O' for 23 Dec., viz. 'O Virgo virginum', and this arrangement is reflected by the insertion of 'O Sapientia' for 16 Dec. in the calendar of the BCP. The authorship and date of composition of the Antiphons are alike unknown; but they were already in use by the 8th century.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Great Antiphons. Heralds of Christmas' in The Month, cvi (1905), pp. 616–31; A. Weber, 'Die sieben O-Antiphonen der Adventsliturgie' in Pastor Bonus, xix (1906–7), pp. 109–19; C. Callewaert, 'De groote Adventsantifonen O' in Liturgisch Tijdschrift, ii (1911–12), pp. 1–13, repr. in id., Sacris Erudiri (1940), pp. 405–18, with further bibl.; J. A. Cabaniss, 'A Note on the Date of the Great Advent Antiphons' in Speculum, xxii (1947), pp. 440–42. A. Hollaardt, O.P., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 1914–17, s.v., with further bibl.

OATES, TITUS (1649–1705), conspirator. The son of an *Anabaptist preacher, Oates owes his notoriety to the part he played in the '*Popish Plot'. In the unsettled state of the times he managed to inflame public opinion by spreading stories of alleged RC intrigues to assassinate *Charles II and place his brother, *James, on the throne. The public panic lasted from 1678 to 1681, and many innocent persons were condemned and executed on his false testimony.

T. Seccombe (ed.), Lives of Twelve Bad Men (1894), No. v, 'Titus Oates', by id., pp. 95–154. Jane Lane, Titus Oates (1949), with reff. and bibl. T. Seccombe in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 296–303.

OATH. Several Christian bodies, e.g. the *Waldensians, *Baptists, *Mennonites, and *Quakers, have interpreted Mt. 5. 33–7 as forbidding every oath; but the prohibition is more generally understood as primarily directed against the habit of promiscuous and unnecessary swearing such as prevailed among the Jews in the time of Christ.

Acc. to general Christian teaching, an oath, though not desirable, may be required by human weakness and is admissible for reasons of serious necessity. It must be concerned only with what one knows to be true, its object must be morally good, and in order to be valid it must be taken with the intention to swear. The taking of an oath is often surrounded with solemnity, ecclesiastical oaths, e.g., being sworn before the Crucifix and accompanied by the touching of the Gospel Book. An oath may be either assertory, i.e. referring to a fact past or present, or promissory, relating to the future; and in important matters it is held by moral theologians to be binding under grave sin.

J. E. Tyler, Oaths. Their Origin, Nature and History (1834). E. B. Tylor in E.B. (ed. 11), xix (1911), pp. 939–43, s.v.; N. Iung in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1940–56, s.v. 'Serment'.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE. See Allegiance, Oath of.

OBADIAH, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets and the shortest Book of the OT. It foretells the punishment of the Edomites, the traditional foes of the Jews, in the coming Day of the Lord. Reference to the destruction of Jerusalem in v. 11 would seem to require a date later than 586 B.C. for the final compilation of the Book, but modern scholars tend to divide it into a number of sections, which are variously dated from the 9th to the 5th cent. B.C. The similarities between vv. 1–15 and Jer. 49. 7–22 have suggested that one passage is dependent upon the other, unless both derive from an independent earlier prophecy.

Commentaries by T. T. Perowne (Camb. Bib., AV, Obad. and Jonah, 1883, pp. 8–42), J. A. Bewer (I.C.C. on Micah, Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912; sep. pagination), G. W. Wade (West. Comm. on Micah, Obad., Joel, and Jonah, 1925; sep. pagination), and J. H. Eaton (on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., London, 1961, pp. 35–48). W. Rudolph, 'Obadja' in Z.A.T.W., xlix (1931), pp. 222–31, with bibl. W. R. *Smith–T. K. *Cheyne in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 3454–62; P. E. Bonnard in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., viii (1972), cols. 693–701, s.v. 'Prophètes d'Israël', with bibl. See also bibl. to Minor Prophets.

OBEDIENCE. The moral virtue which inclines a man to carry out the will of his lawful superior. Its exercise is necessary for the upholding of the order established in the world by both natural and positive law. Absolute obedience is due only to God, whereas obedience to men is limited by the bounds of authority and by the claims of conscience. Spiritual writers distinguish three degrees of lawful obedience, viz. mere external obedience, willing submission to an order though its wisdom may be doubted, and blind obedience, i.e. submission of the personal judgement to that of the superior, except, of course, in cases of obviously sinful commands. Obedience is enjoined by Christ (Jn. 15. 10), who by His perfect obedience unto death (Phil. 2. 8, Heb. 5. 8) is its supreme example. It came to be one of the three *vows by which a religious binds himself to obey his superiors acc. to the rule and constitutions of his order or congregation. Acc. to RC canon law, canonical obedience is due from all cardinals, metropolitans, bishops, and exempt abbots to the Pope, and from all priests to their bishops. It is promised by oath (juramentum obedientiae) and may be enforced by punishment. In the C of E every cleric before *institution to a benefice is required to take an oath of obedience to the Bishop of the Diocese in all things lawful and honest.

OBEDIENTIARY. A now almost obsolete name of the permanent officials in a monastery, appointed by a superior. It was used, e.g., of the sacristan, the cantor, the cellarer, &c., but generally not of the prior and sub-prior.

OBERAMMERGAU, in Upper Bavaria. To express gratitude for the cessation of a plague in 1633, the villagers vowed to enact the Passion and Death of the Lord at intervals of ten years. Performances took place every tenth year from 1634 to 1674, and in the decimal years from 1680 onwards, the only exceptions being 1870, when it was omitted on account of the Franco-Prussian War; 1920, when world conditions led it to be postponed to 1922; and 1940. An extra performance took place in 1934 to commemorate the 300th anniversary of the first performance. The play, which takes some six hours, is produced and acted by some 700 natives of the village, and is repeated many times through the summer.

There are Eng. trr. of the Passion Play by Mary F. Drew (London, 1881; ed. 2, ib., 1910) and Maria Trench (anon., ib., 1890; ed. 2 with name of translator, ib., 1910). O. Günzler–A. Zwink, Oberammergau. Berühmtes Dorf—berühmte Gäste. 3 Jahrhunderte Passionsspiel im Spiegel seiner Besucher (1950). V. Heaton, The Oberammergau Passion Play (1970).

OBERLIN, JEAN FRÉDÉRIC (1740–1825), Lutheran pastor, educationist and philanthropist. Born and educated at Strassburg, Oberlin was pastor of Waldersbach (Ban de la Roche) in the Vosges from 1767 until his death. His people were poor, isolated and demoralized; Oberlin ministered faithfully to them all, incl. the Reformed and the Catholics. Having won their trust, he transformed the parish, initiating schemes of road and bridge building, introducing lending and savings banks and promoting new agricultural techniques. He established schools in the five villages and was a pioneer in kindergarten work based on child psychology.

Eclectic in outlook and indebted to both the *Enlightenment (esp. J. J. *Rousseau) and to mysticism (esp. E. *Swedenborg), he welcomed the French Revolution, with its republicanism and attack on privilege, and he tried to combine patriotic clubs with Christian worship; he was briefly imprisoned in 1794. His social and educational methods soon won international recognition; in particular, his principles of infant education were developed by Pestalozzi. He is commemorated by the Oberlin House in Potsdam and Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Life and collected Works ed. E. Hilpert and others (4 vols. bound in 2, Stuttgart, 1843), with Gedenkschrift in vol. i, life by E. Stöber in vols. ii–iii. The many other lives include those by Josephine E. *Butler (London, 1882), A. Stein (Halle, 1899), C. Leenhardt (Montauban, 1911), W. Kambli (Zürich, 1927), A. Stucki (Basel, 1945), J. P. Benoit (Strassburg, 1955), W. Heinsius (Lahr/Schwarzw., 1956), and Anna Katterfeld (Berlin, 1960). E. Parisot, Jean Frédéric Oberlin (1740–1826). Essai pédagogique (Nancy thesis; Paris, 1905); H. Strohl, Études sur Oberlin (Cahiers de la Revue d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses, xiii; 1926); Martha Buch, Die pädagogischen und sozialpädagogischen Ideen Johann Friedrich Oberlins (1932).

OBLATE (Lat. oblatus, 'offered'). The word has several ecclesiastical senses. (1) In the early Middle Ages, it was esp. applied to children dedicated to a monastery by their parents and placed there to be brought up. (2) Later, after this practice had been abandoned, it became widely used of laity who lived at a monastery or in close connexion with it, but who did not take full religious vows. (3) In modern times it has been adopted in the title of certain communities of the RC Church, e.g. the 'Oblates Regular of St. Benedict' (see foll. entry), the 'Oblates of Mary Immaculate' (founded 1816) and the 'Oblates of St. *Charles Borromeo' (founded by H. E. *Manning, 1857).

M. P. Deroux, Les Origines de l'oblature bénédictine (Vienne, 1927). U. Berlière, O.S.B., La Familia dans les monastères bénédictins du Moyen Âge (Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Mémoires, Collection in-8°, xxix, fasc. 2; 1931). J. Marchal, Le 'Droit d'Oblat'. Essai sur une variété de pensionnés monastiques (Archives de la France monastique, xlix; 1955). See also works cited s.v. Lay Brother.

OBLATES REGULAR OF ST. BENEDICT. The 'Oblates of Mary' were founded by St. *Frances of Rome (q.v.) in 1425 as an association of noble Roman ladies, affiliated to the White *Benedictines ('*Olivetans') of Sta Maria Nuova (afterwards Sta Francesca Romana). In 1433, with the approval of *Eugenius IV, St. Frances formed them into the Oblate Congregation of Tor de' Specchi, at the foot of the Capitol, Rome, where they still reside. Following her adaptation of the Benedictine Rule, they give themselves to prayer and good works, but without vows, strict enclosure, or giving up their property, and they make revocable promises of obedience to the Mother President. They wear black dresses with white gauze veils. Besides the original house in Rome, there are others in Switzerland and in the *United States of America.

Heimbucher, i, p. 310 f.

OBLATIONS (Lat. oblationes, oblata; Gk. προσφορά). In Christian usage, the term is applied both to the bread and wine offered for consecration in the Eucharist, and also to any other kind of gift (e.g. grapes, oil, cheese, altar cloths, &c.) presented by the faithful at Mass for the use of the clergy, the sick, the poor, the church, &c. In the Prayer for the Church Militant in the BCP, oblations, as distinguished from 'alms', originally meant money to be devoted to other purposes than the relief of the poor, but the authority of Bp. Simon *Patrick (1626–1707) can be invoked for interpreting 'oblations' here as meaning bread and wine. See also Offertory.

J. Dowden, '"Our Alms and Oblations": An Historical Study' in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 321–46; repr., with additions, in id., Further Studies in the Prayer Book (1908), pp. 176–222.

OBLIGATION, Feasts of. See Feasts of Obligation.

O'BRYAN, WILLIAM. See Bible Christians.

OBSCURANTISM. Active opposition, esp. from supposedly religious motives, to intellectual enlightenment. Christians have sometimes been charged with it by secular critics, and professing Christians have also sometimes made the charge against one another, but it has rarely, if ever, been admitted. The word probably derives ultimately from the famous Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum* (1515–17).

OBSERVANTINES (Fratres de Observantia), also 'Observants'. Those members of the *Franciscan Order who claimed to 'observe' exactly the primitive Rule of St. *Francis, as confirmed by Pope *Honorius III on 29 Nov. 1223. The movement, which started in Italy in 1368 as a protest against the lax and secularizing elements which had been present in the order almost from the first, drew its inspiration largely from the *Spiritual Franciscans. In 1517 they were finally separated from the Conventuals and declared the true Order of St. Francis. Later in the 16th cent. the Observantines became divided into several branches, among them the Reformed and the *Recollects, but these were all incorporated in 1897 into the single Order of Friars Minor by *Leo XIII's bull 'Felicitate quadam'. See also Conventuals.

Bernardin of Aquila, O.F.M., Chronica Fratrum Minorum Observantiae, ed. L. Lemmens, O.F.M. (Rome, 1902). Heimbucher, i, pp. 709–24. See also works cited under Franciscan Order and Recollects.

OCCAM, WILLIAM OF. See William of Occam.

OCCASIONAL CONFORMITY ACT, The. The Act, finally passed in 1711 (10 Anne, c. 6), to restrain Dissenters from receiving the Sacrament in the C of E to qualify for Government posts. It laid down that if after 25 March 1712 any civil or military officer in receipt of a salary, who had been obliged to receive the Sacrament, should after admission to office be discovered at a conventicle, he should forfeit £40, cease to hold office, and no longer be eligible for any employment in England. If, however, the convicted person conformed to the C of E for one year after his conviction, then his eligibility for office was restored. An earlier bill against occasional conformity (imposing still larger penalties) had been introduced into the Commons in 1702 and succeeding years, but always rejected by the Whig Lords. The Act of 1711 proved a failure in operation; and in 1719, to conciliate the Nonconformists, it was repealed by 5 Geo. I, c. 4.

Principal clauses of the Act in W. C. Costin–J. S. Watson (edd.), The Law and Working of the Constitution: Documents 1660–1914, i (1952), pp. 118–21.

OCCASIONAL OFFICES. In the BCP, the services which, in distinction from the constant offices of the Church (viz. *Mattins and *Evensong and the *Holy Communion), are used only as occasion may demand. They include *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Matrimony, *Visitation of the Sick, Communion of the Sick, Burial of the Dead, and the *Commination.

OCCASIONAL PRAYERS. In the BCP, the collection of eleven prayers prescribed for use 'upon several [i.e. appropriate] occasions' 'before the two final prayers of the Litany, or of Morning and Evening Prayer'. They include prayers for use in various times of adversity, two for the *Ember Weeks, and the 'Collect and Prayer for all Conditions of Men' (prob. by P. *Gunning, d. 1684). They first appeared in their present position at the 1661 revision of the BCP. In the proposed revision of 1928, many occasional prayers were added.

OCCASIONALISM (Lat. occasio, 'event'). The philosophical theory of the relation of mind to matter which denies that finite things have efficient causality and postulates that God always intervenes to bring about a change in matter when a change occurs in mind and vice versa. It was formulated to avoid the difficulties confronting the dualism of R. *Descartes. Among its principal exponents were A. *Geulincx (d. 1669) and N. *Malebranche (d. 1715); in the latter it assumed a form very near to *Pantheism. It never had any considerable following and soon suffered eclipse by G. W. *Leibniz's doctrine of 'Pre-established Harmony'. In the 19th cent. a form of occasionalism was revived by Hermann Lotze (1817–81).

J. Prost, Essai sur l'atomisme et l'occasionalisme dans la philosophie cartésienne (1907). M. Gueroult, Malebranche, ii (1959), esp. pp. 208–57. Überweg, iii, pp. 261–9, with bibl. p. 663 f. F. R. Tennant in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), p. 443 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Geulincx, A., and Malebranche, N.

OCCURRENCE. The falling of two feasts (or other commemorations) on the same day in the ecclesiastical calendar, e.g. the coincidence of *Christmas Day with a Sunday. In the W. Church the feast of higher rank is kept in such cases. The inferior one used normally to be 'commemorated' by the recitation of its proper *collect after that of the greater feast, but in some cases, where the one feast was of very high rank, the lesser was always entirely unnoticed. When the feast displaced was a Sunday or other great holy day, its service was read on the first free day following. Commemorations are now, however, no longer made.

OCHINO, BERNARDINO (1487–1564), Protestant Reformer. A native of Siena, he joined the *Observantine Franciscans and rose to be their general. In 1534 he transferred to the still more austere *Capuchins, of whom he was twice (in 1538 and 1541) the vicar-general. His preaching was so eloquent and moving that *Charles V said of him, 'That man is enough to make the stones weep.' Contact with *Peter Martyr (Vermigli) led him to accept Protestant doctrines, and in 1541 he became a Lutheran. He was cited before the *Inquisition, but escaped to Geneva. From 1545 to 1547 he was minister to the Italian Protestants at Augsburg. In the latter year T. *Cranmer invited him to England and secured for him a Prebend of *Canterbury and a royal pension, and Ochino gave himself up to writing The Usurped Primacy of the Bishop of Rome and the Labyrinth, the latter attacking the *Calvinistic doctrine of *Predestination. On *Mary's accession he returned to Switzerland and in 1555 was appointed a pastor at Zürich, but on account of his Thirty Dialogues (1563), which proved him unsound on the doctrine of the *Trinity and on monogamy, he was expelled from his office. He then went to Poland, but was not allowed to remain there, and died at Slavkow (Austerlitz) in Moravia.

Life by C. Benrath (Leipzig, 1875; ed. 2, 1892; Eng. tr. by H. Zimmern, 1876); this work contains a full analysis and list of Ochino's writings. R. H. Bainton, Bernardino Ochino (Florence, 1940). D. Bertrand-Barraud, Les Idées philosophiques de Bernardin Ochin, de Sienne (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, vii; 1924). B. Nicolini, 'Il pensiero di Bernardino Ochino' in Atti della Reale Accademia Pontaniana di Scienze Morali e Politiche, lix (1938), pp. 171–268. J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 350–3.

OCKHAM. See William of Occam.

'O COME, ALL YE FAITHFUL'. See Adeste Fideles.

'O COME, O COME, EMMANUEL'. See Veni, Veni, Emmanuel.

O'CONNELL, DANIEL (1775–1847), Irish politician. Educated at the colleges of *St.-Omer and *Douai (1792), he returned to England in 1793, entered Lincoln's Inn in the following year, and was called to the Irish bar in 1798. In 1800 he made his first appearance on a public platform, on behalf of the Irish Catholics, denouncing the Union. He soon became a successful lawyer, married in 1802, and from 1805 began to gain more and more influence as a Catholic leader. In 1813 he opposed the Bill of Emancipation introduced by H. Grattan which contained the royal veto for the election of bishops, a condition unacceptable to both Irish clergy and people though favoured by RCs in England. The next years were a long-drawn-out struggle between O'Connell and Sir R. Peel, who suppressed all Catholic organizations started by the former. In 1823, however, O'Connell formed the *Catholic Association with the object of securing Catholic emancipation by legal means. It quickly spread throughout the country and became so powerful an instrument that it was proscribed by Act of Parliament in 1825. But it continued its work under another name and under the leadership of O'Connell, who, in 1828, was returned as M.P. for Clare by the small freeholders of the county. The Roman Catholic Emancipation Act followed in the next year. From now onwards O'Connell began to work for the Repeal of the Union. He fought against Lord Grey's Coercion Bill of 1833 and, in 1840, founded his Repeal Association. From 1841 to 1843 he was Lord Mayor of Dublin, an office which he endeavoured to fill with complete impartiality. In 1843 he resumed his agitation for Repeal, holding a number of 'monster meetings' of which the most famous was that on the hill of Tara. In the same year he was arrested on a charge of creating disaffection and stirring up the people, and in 1844, after trial, condemned to a year's imprisonment. Though freed on appealing to the House of Lords, his health had suffered, and henceforward his policy, which wavered between Repeal and Federalism, lacked firmness. He also quarrelled with the Young Ireland Party. Acclaimed as the 'Liberator' by his countrymen, O'Connell's influence on Irish history was profound. He was a stirring orator who could sway the masses, but his agitation always stopped short of violence and was untarnished by selfish motives.

Life and Speeches of Daniel O'Connell, ed. John O'Connell (son) (2 vols., Dublin, 1846); Select Speeches, ed. id. (2 vols., ib. 1854–5); Correspondence, ed. W. J. Fitzpatrick (2 vols., London, 1888) and Maurice R. O'Connell (8 vols., Shannon, 1972 ff.). A. Houston, Daniel O'Connell. His Early Life and Journal, 1795–1802 (London, 1906). Other studies by W. Fagan (2 vols., Cork, 1847–8; ends 1837), M. F. Cusack (London, 1872), R. Dunlop ('Heroes of the Nations', New York and London, 1900), and D. Gwynn (ib. [c. 1930]). S. O'Faoláin, King of the Beggars, A Life of Daniel O'Connell, the Irish Liberator, in a study of the Rise of Modern Irish Democracy, 1775–1847 (1938). M. Tierney (ed.), Daniel O'Connell. Nine Centenary Essays (Dublin, 1949). A. [D.] Macintyre, The Liberator, Daniel O'Connell and the Irish Party 1830–47 (1965). L. J. McCaffrey, Daniel O'Connell and the Repeal Year ([Lexington] Kentucky, 1966). R. Dunlop in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 371–89.

OCTATEUCH (Gk. ὀκτα-, 'eight', + τεῦχος, 'book'). The first eight Books of the OT, i.e. the *Pentateuch with the three additional Books of *Joshua, *Judges, and *Ruth.

OCTAVARIUM. A collection of lessons, supplementary to those of the *Breviary, for use in the 2nd and 3rd *nocturns of the *Mattins of *Octaves which were of only local observance.

OCTAVE (Lat. octava, sc. dies, 'eighth day'; formerly used only in the plural). In Christian liturgical usage, the eighth day after a feast, reckoning inclusively, and so always falling on the same day of the week as the feast itself. The term is also applied to the whole period of these eight days, during which the observance of certain major feasts came to be continued.

The practice was prob. suggested by the OT usage of an eighth-day celebration of the 'Feast of Tabernacles' (Lev. 23. 36) and the 'Dedication of the Temple' (2 Chr. 7. 9), and first introduced under *Constantine (d. 337), when the dedication festivities of the basilicas at *Jerusalem and Tyre were extended over the same period. The first liturgical feasts to be dignified with an Octave were *Easter, *Pentecost, and, in the E., *Epiphany, the reason being possibly to provide a time of recollection for the newly baptized. From the 7th cent. saints' feasts also began to have Octaves, among the oldest being those of Sts. *Peter and Paul, St. *Lawrence, and St. *Agnes, which were long observed in the Roman rite. From the 12th cent., however, the custom was introduced of observing also the days between the first and the eighth day as well as the eighth day itself. The number of feasts with Octaves was also greatly increased during the Middle Ages; they were reduced, however, by the Breviary reforms of Popes *Pius V and *Pius X. By a decree of the Congregation of *Rites dated 23 Mar. 1955, all octaves were suppressed in the Latin rite except those of *Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost and the last of these was suppressed in 1969.

G. Löw, C.SS.R., in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 451–3, s.v. 'Ottava'.

OCTOECHOS (Gk. ὀκτώηχος [βίβλος], 'the book of eight tones'). A liturgical book in the E. Church which contains the variable parts of the services from the first Sunday after Whitsun till the tenth Sunday before Easter. Since these variable parts recur every eight weeks in the same order, only eight sets of tones (ὀκτὼ ἤχοι), one for each week, are provided; hence the name. This book is also known as the Paracleticē (Gk. παρακλητική, from παρακαλεῖν, to supplicate).

L. Tardo, L'antica melurgia bizantina (Grottaferrata, 1938), pp. 363–84. The Hymns of the Octoechus transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae, iii, v; Copenhagen, 1940–49). O. Strunk, 'The Antiphons of the Oktoechos' in Journal of the American Musicological Society, xiii (1960), pp. 50–67. I. Thomas in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 640 f., with bibl.

ODA, St. See Odo, St.

ODE. See Canticle.

ODES OF SOLOMON. See Solomon, Odes of.

ODILIA, St. (d. c. 720), also Othilia, the patroness of Alsace. She is said to have been the daughter of Adalricus, a Frankish lord, and been born blind but later miraculously received her sight. Having been granted by Adalricus his castle at Hohenburg (now the Odilienberg) above Obernai in the Vosges Mountains, she founded a large nunnery which she ruled as Abbess. In the Middle Ages the abbey was granted exceptional privileges and became a famous centre of pilgrimage (visited by *Charlemagne, Pope *Leo IX and perhaps Richard I of England). In the last hundred years it has again been much visited. The water of the well is said to cure diseased eyes. Feast day, 13 Dec.

Crit. edd. of 10th cent. Life (of little historical value) by C. Pfister in Anal. Boll., xiii (1894), pp. 5–32, and W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vi (1913), pp. 24–50, with useful introd. M. Sapet, 'Observations sur la légende de sainte Odile' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, lxiii (1902), pp. 517–36; C. Pfister, Pages alsaciennes (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, xl; 1927), pp. 87–119 ('La Légende de sainte Odile'), with refs. to the earlier works of the author. M. Barth, Die heilige Odilia, Schutzherrin des Elsass. Ihr Kult in Volk und Kirche (Forschungen zur Kirchengeschichte des Elsass, iv–v; 1938). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1921–34, s.v. 'Odile', with full bibl.

ODILO, St. (c. 962–1049), fifth Abbot of *Cluny. He entered the monastery in 991 and became abbot three years later. He was a man of high virtue as well as of great administrative abilities, under whose government the number of Cluniac houses rose from 37 to 65 and their influence spread throughout Christendom. The order was further strengthened by his plan of centralization, whereby most of the reformed monasteries were made directly dependent on Cluny. Odilo spent much of his time travelling in the interests of the Church and of his order, being highly esteemed by both Popes and Emperors; and the establishment of the '*Truce of God' for the South of France and Italy was largely his work. He has left a permanent mark on the Liturgy by introducing the commemoration of *All Souls' Day (2 Nov.), which, at first a local observance at Cluny, was soon extended to the whole W. Church. Though severe with himself he was gentle with others, and the great famines of the time, esp. between 1028 and 1033, gave scope to his charity, which saved many from death. He was canonized in 1063. Feast days, 1 or 2 Jan.; in the order, 29 Apr.

Collection of St. Odilo's works in M. Marrier, O.S.B. (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614; repr., 1915), cols. 338–408, with extracts of the life by his disciple Iotsaldus, monk of Cluny, cols. 1813–24, and life by *Peter Damian, cols. 315–32; works, with life by Iotsaldus and other biographical material, repr. from L. *d'Achéry, O.S.B.–J. *Mabillon, O.S.B.–T. Ruinart, O.S.B. (edd.), Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti, vi (pt. 1; Paris, 1701), pp. 631–710 (text of life by Iotsaldus, pp. 679–710), in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlii, 831–1038. E. Sackur, 'Handschriftliches aus Frankreich, II. Zu Iotsaldi Vita Odilonis und Verse auf Odilo' in N.A., xv (1889), pp. 117–26, with texts. Id., 'Ein Schreiben Odilo's von Cluni an Heinrich III vom Oktober 1046', ib., xxiv (1899), pp. 728–35, also with text. Crit. ed. of excerpts of life by Iotsaldus by G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 2; 1888), pp. 813–20. O. Ringholz, O.S.B., Der heilige Abt Odilo von Cluny in seinem Leben und Wirken (1885); J. Hourlier, O.S.B., Saint Odilon, abbé de Cluny (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, xl; 1964). C. de Valois in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 44–9, 163, s.v. 'Cluny'. See also bibl. to Cluny, Order of.

ODIUM THEOLOGICUM (Lat., 'theological hatred'). A proverbial expression for the ill-feeling to which theological controversy frequently gives rise.

ODO, St. (879–942), Abbot of *Cluny. The son of Abbo, a Frankish knight of Maine, he was born at Tours and brought up in the family of William, Duke of Aquitaine, who later (910) founded the abbey of Cluny. At the age of 19 he was instituted to a canonry at St. Martin's, Tours, and then made his way to Paris, where he studied under *Remigius of Auxerre. After returning to Tours he was deeply affected by reading the Rule of St. *Benedict and three years later gave up his canonry and was admitted by St. Berno to the monastery of Baume (909). On the foundation of Cluny in the next year, Berno put Odo in charge of the monastery school at Baume. In 927 he succeeded Berno as Abbot of Cluny, where he was mainly instrumental in raising the monastery to the high position it held in the next centuries. During his abbacy the monastic church of SS. Peter and Paul was completed and the influence of Cluny over other monasteries was greatly extended, largely through a privilege of John XI (931). On his first visit to Rome (936) he took an important part in the conflict between Hugh, 'King of Italy', and the Patrician Alberic, and also won over several Italian monasteries (S. Maria on the Aventine, *St. Paul's Outside the Walls, *Monte Cassino, *Subiaco) to Cluniac principles. His writings include a Life of Gerald of Aurillac, three books of moral essays ('Collationes'), some sermons, an epic ('Occupatio') on the Redemption and twelve choral antiphons in honour of St. *Martin. Feast day, 18 Nov. (by the Benedictines, 29 April).

Collection of his works pr. in M. Marrier, O.S.B. (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614; repr. 1915), cols. 65–264, with life of St. Odo by his disciple, John, monk of Cluny, ib., cols. 13–56; further collection of his works, from various sources, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxiii, 105–845, with life by John, cols. 43–86, and 12th cent. life by Nalgodus, monk of Cluny, cols. 85–104 (both repr. from L. *d'Achéry, O.S.B.–J. Mabillon, O.S.B. (edd.), Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti, v (1685), pp. 150–99). Odo's 'Occupatio' was first ed. A. Swoboda (Teub., 1900). Eng. tr. of Odo's life of Gerald of Aurillac and of John of Cluny's life of Odo by G. Sitwell, O.S.B., St. Odo of Cluny (1958). E. Sackur, 'Handschriftliches aus Frankreich, I. Zur Vita Odilo Abbatis Cluniacensis auctore Iohanne' in N.A., xv (1889), pp. 105–16. Modern life by [A.] du Bourg, O.S.B. ('Les Saints', 1905). A. Hessel, 'Odo von Cluni und das französische Kulturproblem im früheren Mittelalter' in H.Z., cxxviii (1923), pp. 1–25. A Cluny. Congrès scientifique. Fêtes et cérémonies liturgiques en l'honneur des saints abbés Odo et Odilon 9–11 juillet 1949. Travaux du congrès, Art, Histoire, Liturgie, publiés par la Société des Amis de Cluny (Dijon, 1950), passim. C. Schmitt, O.F.M., in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 65–7, s.v. 'Oddone', with bibl. See also bibl. to Cluny, Order of.

ODO, St. (d. 959), or 'Odo the Good', also 'Oda', Abp. of *Canterbury. He is said to have been the son of a Dane and originally a pagan. In 927 he became Bp. of Ramsbury. On Abp. Wulfhelm's death in 942, Odo at first declined the see of Canterbury offered him by King Edmund, on the ground of not being a monk; but on the king's persistence he received the *Benedictine habit from *Fleury and accepted the office. He was very active in restoring the cathedral buildings and in raising the morals and discipline of the clergy. He was also a staunch defender of the privileges of the Church. Feast day, 4 July.

Text of 'Constitutiones Odonis', a set of ten chapters dealing with matters of discipline and morals which Abp. Odo caused to be drawn up, ed. G. Schoebe, 'The Chapters of Archbishop Oda (942/6) and the Canons of the Legatine Councils of 786' in Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, xxxv (1962), pp. 75–83. Life by *Eadmer pr. in AA.SS., Jul. II (1721), pp. 67–73, where, however, it is wrongly ascribed to Osbern. More reliable information is to be found scattered in the contemporary life of his nephew, St. *Oswald, Abp. of York (q.v.). W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i (1860), pp. 360–81. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 421–3.

ODO (c. 1030–97), Bp. of Bayeux. He was a uterine half-brother of *William the Conqueror, who gave him the see of Bayeux while Odo was still a young man (1049/50). He was present at the Battle of Hastings (14 Oct. 1066). In 1067 he became Earl of Kent and for several years he was an active and trusted minister of William I. He appropriated many ecclesiastical lands which he distributed among his supporters until *Lanfranc secured their restoration to the see of Canterbury. In 1080 Odo was sent North to punish the Northumbrians for the murder of Walcher, Bp. of *Durham. In 1082 he fell into disgrace, apparently for having planned a military expedition to Italy, and was kept in prison until William was on his death-bed (1087). After his release he returned to Kent and under Rufus organized a rebellion designed to put his nephew, Duke Robert, on the throne (1088). When it failed he finally left his English estates and returned to Normandy. He set out with Robert on the First *Crusade in Sept. 1096, but died at Palermo.

Even in Normandy Odo was much engaged in temporal affairs, and in England his career was entirely that of a secular baron. But he had a good reputation as a bishop, and even *Ordericus Vitalis, though hostile to Odo, noted that virtues and vices were mixed in him. He developed the capitular organization and probably the cathedral school of his see, and supported monastic reform; he founded the priory of St. Vigor outside Bayeux, colonizing it with monks from *Mont-St.-Michel. He was a lavish patron of scholars and craftsmen; he rebuilt his cathedral (dedicated in 1077) and very probably commissioned the *Bayeux Tapestry.

There are references in E. A. Freeman, The History of the Norman Conquest of England (6 vols., 1867–79), F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943), and S. E. Gleason, An Ecclesiastical Barony of the Middle Ages. The Bishopric of Bayeux, 1066–1204 (Harvard Historical Monographs, x; 1936), esp. pp. 8–17. D. C. Douglas (ed.), The Domesday Monachorum of Christ Church, Canterbury (1944), esp. pp. 33–6, 54–8; id., 'The Norman Episcopate before the Norman Conquest' in Cambridge Historical Journal, xiii (1957), pp. 101–15, passim. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xli (1895), pp. 424–6; J. Brownbill in G. E. Cockayne, The Complete Peerage, ed. 2 by V. Gibbs and others, vii (1929), pp. 124–9.

OECOLAMPADIUS, JOHN (1482–1531), German Reformer. His real name was 'Hussgen'. A native of Weinsberg (Palatinate), in 1515 he was appointed cathedral preacher at Basle, where he soon showed strong reforming proclivities, but after championing M. *Luther's position for a time, he abandoned it, and in 1520 entered a monastery. He soon changed again, and in 1522 definitely threw in his lot with the Reformers. On his return to Basle in the same year, his influence led to the adoption of Reformation principles in the city, and in 1528 he secured their acceptance in the canton of Berne. In the latter year he also married. At the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529) he defended the Eucharistic doctrine of H. *Zwingli. He was not, however, a great theologian, and he owed his influence rather to the trust put in his leadership than to any theological gifts. The *Anabaptists for a time claimed that he shared their views, but in a disputation he disavowed their doctrines. His successor at Basle was O. *Myconius.

E. Staehelin (ed.), Briefe und Akten zum Leben Oekolampads (vol. i, 1499–1526, Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, x; vol. ii, 1527–93, ib., xix; 1927–34). Life by W. F. *Capito prefixed to his ed. of Oecolampadius' Comm. on Ezek. (Strassburg, 1534 [no pagination]); also to the ed. of Ioannis Oecolampadii et Huldrichi Zwingli Epistolae (Basle, 1536 [no pagination]); Eng. tr. in [H. Bennet], A Famous and Godly History (1561 [no pagination]). Modern lives by J. J. *Herzog (2 vols., Basle, 1843) and K. R. Hagenbach (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, ii, 1859, pp. 3–306).

E. Staehelin, Das theologische Lebenswerk Johannes Oekolampads (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, xxi; 1939). [E.] G. Rupp, Patterns in Reformation (1969), pp. 1–46. E. Staehelin, Oekolampad-Bibliographie (ed. 2, Nieuwkoop, 1963). W. Hadorn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 286–99, s.v.; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 947–51, s.v. 'Oecolampades'.

OECUMENICAL COUNCILS (Gk. οἰκουμένη, 'the whole inhabited world'). Assemblies of bishops and other ecclesiastical representatives of the whole world whose decisions on doctrine, cultus, discipline, &c., are considered binding on all Christians. Acc. to the teaching of most Christian communions outside the RC Church there have been no Oecumenical Councils since the schism between E. and W., the last being the Second of *Nicaea in 787. Acc. to present RC *canon law (CIC, cans. 222–9), an Oecumenical Council must be convened by the Pope, and its decrees have binding force only if sanctioned and promulgated by the Holy See; they are then infallible. As the oecumenicity of a Council is now held to depend on the co-operation of the Pope, the *Gallican doctrine that there can be an appeal from the Pope to a Council is inadmissible. The death of the Pope suspends the Council until it be reopened by his successor. As well as cardinals, archbishops and bishops, abbots and prelates nullius, and most generals of orders with solemn vows have the right to vote, and eminent theologians are usually invited in an advisory capacity.

Seven councils are commonly held both in E. and W. to be oecumenical. These are, with their dates and the chief subjects dealt with: (1) *Nicaea I (325, *Arianism); (2) *Constantinople I (381, *Apollinarianism); (3) *Ephesus (431, *Nestorianism); (4) *Chalcedon (451, *Eutychianism); (5) *Constantinople II (553, *Three Chapters Controversy); (6) *Constantinople III (680–1, *Monothelitism); (7) Nicaea II (787, *Iconoclasm).

The RC Church reckons the following 14 further Councils as possessing oecumenical authority: (8) Constantinople IV (869–70, *Photian Schism); (9) *Lateran I (1123, *Investiture Controversy); (10) Lateran II (1139, *Arnold of Brescia, &c.); (11) Lateran III (1179, Papal elections, &c.); (12) Lateran IV (1215, *Waldenses, &c.); (13) *Lyons I (1245, *Frederick II); (14) *Lyons II (1274, Reunion, &c.); (15) *Vienne (1311–12, *Templars); (16) *Constance (1414–17, *Schism—the oecumenicity of the Council before the election of *Martin V is disputed); (17) Ferrara-*Florence (1438–9, Union with the Greeks); (18) Lateran V (1512–17, Reform); (19) *Trent (1545–63, *Protestantism and Reform); (20) *Vatican I (1869–70, Papal Infallibility, &c.); (21) *Vatican II (1962–5, Renewal of the Church).

In the C of E the Thirty-Nine Articles assert that General Councils 'may err, and sometimes have erred, even in things pertaining unto God', and that what they ordain is to be tested by reference to Scripture (Art. 21). The Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum (1553) states that General Councils are regarded with honour and that the decisions of the first Four in particular are 'accepted and received with great reverence' (De Summa Trinitate et Fide Catholica, ch. 14). By 1 Eliz. I cap. 1 (sect. xxxvi) the powers of those assigned to correct ecclesiastical abuses were limited in matters of heresy by the decisions of the first Four Councils and the authority of the Canonical Scriptures. R. *Hooker and L. *Andrewes uphold the authority of the first Four, while the Book of Homilies ('against Peril of Idolatry', pt. ii), R. *Field and H. *Hammond accept the first Six. It appears, however, that such Councils are ultimately revered in the C of E on the ground that their decisions are acceptable rather than vice versa.

H. Chadwick, 'The Origin of the Title "Oecumenical Council"' in J.T.S., N.S., xxiii (1972), pp. 132–5.

OECUMENICAL PATRIARCH, The (Gk. οἰκουμενικὸς πατριάρχης, lit. 'patriarch of the whole inhabited world'). The style borne by the Abps. or Patrs. of *Constantinople since the 6th cent. It was occasionally used also of other prelates from the middle of the 5th cent. Its exact significance is nowhere officially defined, but the title has been attacked in the W. as incompatible with the claims of the see of Rome.

OECUMENIUS (6th cent.), author of the oldest extant Greek Comm. on Rev., to whom tradition has assigned the designations 'Rhetor' and 'Philosopher'. Little is known of his life, but he appears to have been a contemporary and supporter of *Severus of Antioch. His Comm., one of but three on the Apocalypse in Greek from the first millennium, was rediscovered by F. Diekamp and published by H. C. Hoskier in 1928. The exposition, vigorous, modest, but uneven, accepts the Apocalypse as a divinely inspired canonical Book, relevant not only for its immediate situation but for the understanding of the past and the future. It cites no earlier comm., but its authorities include St. *Athanasius, St. *Basil, St. *Gregory Nazianzen, and *Evagrius. This 6th-cent. expositor is not to be confused with Oecumenius, Bp. of Tricca in Thessaly (10th cent.), to whom commentaries on Acts, the Pauline and Catholic Epistles have been ascribed.

H. C. Hoskier (ed.), The Complete Commentary of Oecumenius on the Apocalypse (University of Michigan Studies. Humanistic Series, xxiii; 1928). F. Diekamp, 'Mittheilungen über den neuaufgefundenen Commentar des Oekumenius zur Apokalypse' in Sb. (Berl.) (1901) (2), pp. 1046–56; id., 'Neues über die Handschriften des Oekumenius-Kommentares zur Apokalypse' in Biblica, x (1929), pp. 81–4. A. Spitaler, 'Zur Klärung des Ökumeniusproblems' in Oriens Christianus, Ser. 3, ix (1934), pp. 208–15; additional notes by J. Schmid, ib., 216–18. J. Schmid, 'Ökumenios der Apokalypsen-Ausleger und Ökumenios der Bischof von Trikka' in Byzantinisch-neugriechische Jahrbücher, xiv (1938), pp. 322–30.

OEKONOMOS, CONSTANTINOS. See Oikonomos, Constantine.

OENGUS, St. (8th–9th cent.), Irish saint, commonly, though perhaps erroneously, called the *Culdee, author of the Félire, or Festology of Saints, known by his name. Of royal birth, he was educated at the monastic school at Clonenagh, Ireland, and lived as a hermit first at Disertbeagh, on the banks of the R. Nore, and later in a more solitary district, now known as Dysert Enos, nr. Maryborough. He is recorded to have communed with angels and attracted a crowd of disciples. He subsequently joined the fraternity of Tallaght, nr. Dublin, where, at first concealing his identity, he was employed on various menial duties. He collaborated with S. Maelruain (d. 787) on the compilation of the Martyrology of Tallaght, a prose catalogue of Irish saints, which is prob. the oldest of the Irish martyrologies. He began his own Festology at Clonenagh and finished it at Tallaght early in the 9th cent. Before his death in either 819, 824, or 839, he became both abbot and bishop. Feast day, 11 March.

W. Stokes (ed.), Félire Oengusso Céli Dé. The Martyrology of Oengus the Culdee (*Henry Bradshaw Society, xxix; 1905, with tr. and notes). Life from Colgan pr. in AA.SS., Mar. II (1668), pp. 85–8. 'The Life and Works of St. Aengusius Hagiographus, or St. Aengus the Culdee' in The Irish Ecclesiastical Record, v (1869), pp. 1–29, 73–81, and 97–108.

OFFA (d. 796), King of the Mercians from 757. He gained the throne after the short civil war which followed the death of Ethelbald and he gradually secured dominion, either directly or as overlord, over the whole of England south of the Humber. The result of the Battle of Otford with the Kentishmen in 776 is disputed, but at any rate by 785 his authority over Kent was established. In 779 he subjected the West Saxons near Bensington (Benson) in Oxfordshire. These conquests made him the most powerful English sovereign before the 10th cent. and in his charters he styled himself rex Anglorum or rex totius Anglorum patriae. The surviving portions of Offa's Dyke, constructed as a frontier against the Welsh, are an index of his military strength. He governed well, was respected by *Charlemagne and gave his support to the Church. His influence with the Pope permitted the creation of the new archbishopric at *Lichfield (787–8, suppressed 803). He appears to have been a generous benefactor of the monasteries, even though some of the charters displaying his grants must be discounted as forgeries. He is the reputed founder of the abbeys of *St. Albans and *Bath. In 787 his son Ecgfrith (d. 796) was anointed King of the Mercians—the first recorded consecration of an English king.

Charters printed in J. M. Kemble (ed.), Codex Diplomaticus Aevi Saxonici, i (1839), pp. 146–205, and in W. de Gray Birch (ed.), Cartularium Saxonicum. A Collection of Charters Relating to Anglo-Saxon History, i (1885), pp. 316–82; one, granting some land in Worcs to the Bishop, pr., with Eng. tr., in A. J. Robertson (ed.), Anglo-Saxon Charters (1939), pp. 3–5. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943), pp. 204–23. C. [F.] Fox, Offa's Dyke. A field survey of the western frontier-works of Mercia in the seventh and eighth centuries A.D. (1955). W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 68–71; W. Hunt in D.N.B., xlii (1895), pp. 2–5.

OFFERTORY. In the Eucharistic liturgy: (1) The worshippers' offering of the bread and wine (and water) to be consecrated. In the Roman and derived rites, including the Anglican liturgy, it takes place at a relatively late point in the service (after the lections and the Creed), viz. at what was originally the beginning of the 'Mass of the Faithful'. Until recently it was normally performed by the celebrant on behalf of the people; at Milan, however, representatives of the people (vecchioni*) continued to offer the gifts, and in the current Roman rite a group of the laity bring the bread and wine, as well as other gifts including money, to the altar while a chant is sung. In the Eastern rites, the offertory, with its elaborate cutting up and arranging of the bread, takes place at the *Prothesis at the outset of the whole service (see *Proskomide), the elements being solemnly brought to the altar at the '*Great Entrance' (ἡ μεγάλη εἴσοδος).

(2) The word is also used for the short anthem, first mentioned in St. *Augustine (Retract., II. xi), formerly sung in the Roman rite at the time of the act of offering. Originally a whole psalm, by the 8th cent. it had been reduced to one or two verses and it came to consist (except at *Requiem Masses) of only an antiphon, proper to each Mass. It is now frequently replaced by a hymn or other chant.

Full discussion, with bibl. reff., in Jungmann, M.S., ii (ed. 1958), pp. 3–125; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 1–100. Further discussion, with additional reff., in L. Eisenhofer–J. Lechner, Grundriss der Liturgik des römischen Ritus (ed. 1950), pp. 201–8. G. P. Wetter, Altchristliche Liturgien (2 vols., 1921–2), passim. L. Beauduin, O.S.B., 'L'Offertoire, jadis et aujourd'hui' in Questions liturgiques et paroissiales, vi (1921), pp. 30–45; B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'L'Offertoire', ib., xvii (1932), pp. 57–67; id., 'Quête et offertoire' in La Maison Dieu, vi (1950), pp. 121–40. A. Clark, 'The Function of the Offertory Rite in the Mass' in E.L., lxiv (1950), pp. 309–44. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1946–1962, s.v. 'Offertoire'; A. C. Clark in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 649–51, s.v.

OFFICE, Divine (Officium Divinum). In the W. Church, the daily public prayer of the Church which priests, religious and some clerics have a special obligation to recite. The practice of saying prayers at fixed hours of day or night was general among the Jews, from whom the primitive Christians took it over (cf. Acts 10. 9; 16. 25). The monks of Palestine, Egypt and Gaul appear to have been the first to organize a complete office, with determined times of reunion for the community, established formulas and the recitation of the whole Psalter. In cathedral and parish churches a simpler office developed, consisting of morning and evening prayers. In the Roman basilicas (which were served by regular communities), however, from the late 5th cent. onwards the traditional monastic office of the seven 'Day Hours' (viz. *Lauds, *Prime, *Terce, *Sext, *None, *Vespers, and *Compline) and the 'Night Office' (*Mattins) began to develop. The arrangement of the offices was fixed in detail by St. *Benedict, who named it the 'work of God' (opus Dei); for the most part he took as his basis the Roman basilican use. This use was later introduced in England (7th cent.), the Frankish kingdom (8th cent.) and Spain (11th cent.), becoming obligatory for all clergy. In its essential elements the office which had developed by c. 8th cent. is identical with that used in the RC Church until the recent revision of the *Breviary, all eight hours consisting of psalms, hymns, lessons, antiphons, responses and versicles, and prayers. At the Reformation their place was taken in the C of E by the two offices of Morning and Evening Prayer ('Mattins' and '*Evensong'). In the 1971 RC Breviary there has been a radical rearrangement of the Offices. See Breviary.

For bibl. see Breviary.

OFFICE, Holy. See Holy Office.

OFFICE HYMNS. *Hymns appear as a fixed part of the Monastic Office already in the Rule of St. *Benedict, though they were not generally used in the Roman liturgy until the 13th cent. The 1568 *Breviary provided a hymn to be sung at *Mattins (except duringt he last days of *Holy Week and a few other occasions) and at the Little Hours before, and at *Lauds, *Vespers and *Compline after, the Psalms. The hymns of the Little Hours and Compline were substantially the same throughout the year; those of the other hours varied acc. to feast and season. The 1971 Breviary places the hymns before the Psalms in all the offices; it provides two series of hymns for use at each office, which in the case of Lauds and Vespers are to be used on alternate weeks, in the case of the *Office of Readings acc. to whether the Office is said in the day or at night; and it allows conferences of bishops to introduce new hymns.

Many ancient Office Hymns are contained (in English versions) in modern hymnals, e.g. 'Lucis Creator Optime' ('O Blest Creator of the Light'; from Sunday Vespers), 'Te lucis ante terminum' ('Before the Ending of the Day'; from Compline), '*Pange, lingua, gloriosi Corporis mysterium' ('Of the glorious Body telling'; from the Vespers of *Corpus Christi).

OFFICE OF READINGS. The Office in the 1971 *Breviary which replaced *Mattins. It may be said at any time of the day. It opens with a versicle and response, followed by the *Invitatory (if it is the first Office of the day). A hymn is recited; then come three Psalms (or one Psalm divided into three parts) with antiphons, and two Lessons or Readings. The first of these Readings is taken from Scripture, the second from the works of one of the Fathers or some other Christian writer; on the feast of a saint it may come from the life of the saint commemorated. There are responsories after the Lessons. On Sundays and greater feasts the *Te Deum follows. The Office ends with the collect for the day.

OFFICIAL PRINCIPAL, also 'Official'. In ecclesiastical law, the person to whom a bishop formerly entrusted the exercise of his coercive jurisdiction, and hence nowadays the judge in an ecclesiastical court. Against his sentence there is no appeal to the bishop. Since the bishop also has the right of sitting with the Official Principal in the court (a practice in fact seldom adopted), the court is known as the '*Consistory Court' (the two together forming unum consistorium).

OIKONOMOS, CONSTANTINE (1780–1857), Greek scholar and theologian. A keen Greek patriot, his ecclesiastical career was more than once interrupted by political activities. He was the author of a very long and elaborate work on the *Septuagint entitled Περὶ τῶν ο′ Ἑρμηνευτῶν (i.e. On the Seventy Interpreters, Athens, 4 vols., 1844–9) which, though setting out from wrong premisses (e.g. belief in the inspired character of the Septuagintal text as against the Hebrew), contains many valuable investigations. Oikonomos also wrote several works on philology and the history of literature. He made it one of his chief aims to oppose W. influences, which had assumed increasing prominence in Greek religious life since the middle of the 18th century.

Works partly repr. by his son, Sophocles Oikonomos (3 vols., Athens, 1862–6). A. Papaderos, Metakenosis. Griechenlands kulturelle Herausforderung durch die Aufklärung in der Sicht des Korais und des Oikonomos (Meisenheim am Glan, 1970). P. Meyer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 299–304, s.v. 'Oekonomos'.

OILS, Holy. See Chrism.

OLAVE, St. (995–1030), OLAF HARALDSSÖN, Patron Saint of *Norway and King of Norway from 1016 to 1029. During his lifetime he was known as 'the Fat'. After some years spent fighting the Danes in England, where he was converted to the Christian faith, he returned to Norway in 1015, and by defeating Earl Sweyn at the battle of Nesje in 1016, became king of the country. The harshness of his methods provoked fierce resistance from his subjects and in 1029 the nobles, who had rallied round Canute the Great, forced him to flee to Russia; and when in the following year he tried to regain his kingdom he was killed at the battle of Stiklestad. His shrine at Nidaros (Trondheim) was a famous place of pilgrimage in the Middle Ages. Feast day, 29 July.

He is not to be confused with OLAF TRYGGVESSÖN (969–1000), King of Norway from 995.

Life by Augustine, Bp. of Trondheim (1161–88), pr. in AA.SS., Jul. IV (1731), pp. 113–15; also ed., with useful introd., by F. Metcalfe, Passio et Miracula Beati Olaui (Oxford, 1881). The Saga of St. Olave written by Snorre Sturlason (1172–1241) was ed. P. A. Munch–C. R. Unger (Christiania, 1853); also ed. O. A. Johnsen–J. Helgason (Norsk Historisk Kjeldeskrift-Institut, 2 vols., Oslo, 1941). Eng. tr. of Snorre Sturlason's Heimskringla or the Lives of the Norse Kings by E. Monsen–A. H. Smith (Cambridge, 1932), pp. 218–474. Modern lives by J. F. Vicary (London, 1886), C. Riesteren (Avignon, 1930), and O. Moberg (Lund, 1941). B. Dickins, 'The Cult of S. Olave in the British Isles' in Saga-Book of the Viking Society, xii (1945), pp. 53–80, with reff. G. Turville-Petre, The Heroic Age of Scandinavia (1951), pp. 140–64.

OLD BELIEVERS. The section of the Russian Orthodox Church which refused to accept the liturgical reforms of the patriarch *Nikon (d. 1681). They were excommunicated in 1667, called 'Raskolniki', i.e. schismatics, and violently persecuted, esp. during the first 80 years of the schism and again under Nicholas I (1825–55). They included a great body of peasants and many of the more devout priests, and received large reinforcements when Peter the Great (1682–1725), whom they believed to be the Antichrist, tried to Europeanize Russia. Since, however, no bishops seceded from the Established Church, they were left without a hierarchy and split up into two sections: the one, called 'Popovtsy', who sought for means of establishing their own priesthood, the other, 'Bezpopovtsy', who denied its necessity. The former had to be content with the ministrations of discontented priests coming to them from the Orthodox Church until, in 1846, a deposed bishop, Ambrose of Bosnia, joined them and established a hierarchy. From that time the Popovtsy steadily increased in number and importance (though part of them were reconciled to the Church) and they were officially recognized by the state in 1881. The Bezpopovtsy, on the other hand, split up into a great number of sects, many of them adopting the most extravagant doctrines and practices, but they remained a comparatively small minority.

The main literature is in Russian. Other works include F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, x; 1921), pp. 13–258, with reff.; F. Knie, Die russisch-schismatische Kirche (Graz, 1894); P. Pascal, Avvakum et les débuts du Raskol. La crise religieuse au XVIIe siècle en Russie (Paris thesis; Lignugé, 1938), with bibl. Baron A. von Stromberg in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 332–9, s.v. 'Sects (Russian)'. See further bibl. to Russia, Christianity in; also to Nikon.

OLD CATHOLICS. A group of small national Churches, consisting of Christians who have at various times separated from Rome. Since 1932 they have been in full communion with the C of E. They are composed of three sections:

(1) The Church of Utrecht, with three bishops, which separated from Rome in 1724 (see Holland, Christianity in).

(2) The German, Austrian, and Swiss Old Catholic Churches. This group of Churches was created from those Christians who refused to accept the dogmas of the Infallibility and universal ordinary jurisdiction of the Pope, as defined by the Vatican Council of 1870, and seceded from the RC Church shortly afterwards. The movement was temporarily strengthened by those who joined them for political reasons, owing to the strained relations between the Prussian Government and the Roman Curia (see Kulturkampf). Their organization was partly the work of Conferences, presided over by von *Döllinger at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875, and attended by members of the Old Catholic, Anglican, Orthodox, Lutheran, and other Churches, among the Anglican representatives being the Bps. of *Winchester (E. H. *Browne) and Gibraltar (C. W. Sandford), and H. P. *Liddon. The Old Catholics received their episcopal succession from the Church of Utrecht; the first German bishop, J. H. Reinkens (with see at Bonn), was consecrated in 1874, and the first Swiss bishop, E. Herzog (with see at Berne), in 1876. Owing to the opposition of the government, bishops were not consecrated for the Austrian communities till much later. A bishop of Warnsdorf (Bohemia) was consecrated in 1924 and of Vienna in 1925. In 1939 the three bishoprics of Bonn, Warnsdorf, and Vienna were united into one Church. They have since been separated.

(3) Some small groups of Slav origin. National Church movements among the Poles in U.S.A. (1897) and the Croats (1924) have resulted in the establishment of the 'National Polish Church', with four bishoprics in America and one in Poland, and of the 'Yugoslav Old Catholic Church' (see also Mariavites).

The doctrinal basis of the Old Catholic Churches is the 'Declaration of *Utrecht' (q.v.), agreed upon by the five Old Catholic bishops in 1889. The Old Catholics recognize the same seven *Oecumenical Councils as the E. Orthodox Church, and those doctrines accepted by the Church before the Great Schism of 1054. The bishops, as well as the rest of the clergy, are permitted to marry. All services are in the vernacular. In some countries Communion is given in both kinds. Auricular confession is not compulsory.

The Old Catholic communion formally recognized *Anglican ordinations in 1925, and entered into full communion with the C of E in 1932, on the basis of an agreement reached at Bonn on 2 July 1931. The American Episcopal Church, and most other Anglican Churches, have since also established intercommunion. Old Catholic bishops have several times taken part in the consecration of Anglican bishops in London, using their own formula (Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, &c.), and in 1937 Anglican bishops took part in the consecration of Andreas Rinkel as Abp. of Utrecht. There are no Old Catholic communities in any English-speaking country except U.S.A., where their work is entirely among Poles and other foreigners. Various small sects which sometimes call themselves 'Old Catholic' are not recognized by the Old Catholic Churches referred to above.

F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia. Eine Sammlung von Selbstdarstellungen der christlichen Kirchen, III, ii (1935), 'Die altkatholische Kirche'; C. B. Moss, The Old Catholic Movement. Its Origins and History (1948). J. M. *Neale, History of the So-called Jansenist Church of Holland (1853); J. F. von Schulte, Der Altkatholicismus. Geschichte seiner Entwicklung, inneren Gestaltung und rechtlichen Stellung in Deutschland (1887), with docc. and bibl.; Paulin Gschwind, Geschichte der Entstehung der christkatholischen Kirche der Schweiz (2 vols., Berne, 1904–10). E. W. Kemp, 'The Church of England and the Old Catholic Churches' in E. G. W. Bill (ed.), Anglican Initiatives in Christian Unity (1967), pp. 145–62. Quarterly periodical Revue internationale de Théologie (Berne, 1893–1910), with changed title Internationale kirchliche Zeitschrift (ib., 1911 ff.). See also the Reports of Old Catholic International Conferences. J. F. von Schulte in P.R.E. (ed. 3), i (1896), pp. 415–25, s.v. 'Altkatholizismus'; W. Küppers in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), cols. 295–9, s.v. 'Altkatholiken'; K. Algermissen in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), cols. 398–402, s.v. 'Altkatholiken'.

OLD LATIN VERSIONS, The. The Latin versions of the Scriptures in use in the Church before they were superseded by the *Vulgate. In S. Gaul and N. Africa a vernacular translation was needed sooner than in Rome (where the use of Greek continued until well into the 3rd cent. and all the earliest bishops bore Greek names), and the existence of the Scriptures in Latin in those two provinces is attested before the end of the 2nd cent. Several independent versions came into currency. One form, known as the 'African Old Latin', is very clearly defined. Its African provenance is proved by its use in the Biblical quotations in St. *Cyprian, and it is represented for example in the Gospels by the fragmentary 'Codex Bobiensis' ('k', 4th–5th cent., now at Turin; see Bobbio), less exactly by the 'Palatinus' ('e', 5th cent., at Vienna). The MSS. of the Old Latin differ greatly among themselves, and it was largely the desire to remedy the inconveniences arising out of such differences that led *Jerome (who asserted that there were almost as many different texts as MSS.) to undertake his Vulgate. For large parts of the Bible no MSS. are extant, and knowledge of the text derives entirely from such quotations as are preserved in the writings of the Fathers. See also Itala and Manuscripts of the Bible.

The fullest presentation of the evidence for the whole Bible is still Pierre *Sabatier, O.S.B., Bibliorum Sacrorum Latinae Versiones Antiquae, seu Vetus Italica (3 vols., fol., Reims, 1743[–9]; repr. Paris, 1751). This is being superseded by B. Fischer, O.S.B., and others (edd.), Vetus Latina (Freiburg i.Br., 1949 ff.); and for the NT only by A. *Jülicher and others (edd.), Itala. Das Neue Testament in altlateinischer Überlieferung (Berlin, 1938 ff.). Several of the chief MSS. were printed separately by the Clarendon Press in the series of Old Latin Biblical Texts (7 vols., 1883–1923). Old Latin text of the Heptateuch preserved at Lyons ed. U. Robert (2 vols., Paris, 1881, and Lyons, 1900), incl. facsimile. T. A. Marazuela, La Vetus Latina Hispana (Madrid, 1953 ff.). F. Stummer, Einführung in die lateinische Bibel (1928), pp. 4–76 ('Die lateinische Bibel vor Hieronymus'). H. Rönsch, Itala und Vulgata (1869; ed. 2, 1875; mainly philological); F. C. *Burkitt, The Old Latin and the Itala (Texts and Studies, iv, No. 3; Cambridge, 1896). H. von Soden, Das lateinische Neue Testament in Afrika zur Zeit Cyprians nach Bibelhandschriften und Väterzeugnissen (T.U., xxxiii; 1909). A. V. Billen, The Old Latin Texts of the Heptateuch (1925). H. F. D. Sparks in H. W. *Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 100–10. H. A. A. Kennedy in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 47–62, s.v. 'Latin Versions, The Old'. See also bibl. to Vulgate.

OLD-ROMAN CHANT, sometimes styled 'Old-Vatican', is found in five MSS. dated from 1071 to 1250. Most scholars (though not all) hold it to represent the Roman chant of the 8th cent. or earlier, without the changes made during the Carolingian revival. As in the *Ambrosian chant, the Old-Roman has many protracted passages of melody over a single syllable, known as melismata.

R. J. Snow in W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958], pp. 484–505.

OLD ROMAN CREED, The. An earlier and shorter form of the Apostles' Creed (q.v.), which at least from the end of the 2nd cent. was the official baptismal creed of the Church of Rome. It is first found, in an interrogatory form, in the Apostolic Tradition of St. *Hippolytus (d. 235), and an almost identical text, but in a declaratory form, is attested in the 4th cent. by *Marcellus of Ancyra (ap. *Epiphanius, Haer., 72. 3) and *Rufinus of Aquileia (Comm. in Symbol.). It is also found in Codex E of Acts in the *Bodleian (Laud. gr. 35) and in an 8th cent. MS. in the British Museum (Cotton. 2 A XX).

The subject is necessarily discussed in all books dealing with the history of the *Apostles' Creed (see bibl.). J. *Ussher, De Romanae Ecclesiae Symbolo Apostolico Veteri, aliisque Fidei Formulis (London, 1647). Modern studies dealing specifically with the Old Roman Creed include the brilliant essays by K. Holl, 'Zur Auslegung des 2. Artikels des sog. apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses' in Sb. (Berl.), 1919, pp. 2–11; A. *Harnack, 'Zur Abhandlung des Hrn. Holl: Zur Auslegung des 2. Artikels des sog. apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses', ib., pp. 112–16; H. *Lietzmann, 'Die Urform des apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses', ib., pp. 269–74. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Symbole romain au second siècle' in R. Bén., xxxix (1927), pp. 33–45; id., 'Les Origines du symbole romain' in R.T.A.M., ii (1930), pp. 5–20. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950), esp. pp. 100–66. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 82–90; Altaner–Stuiber (1967), pp. 85–87.

OLD SYRIAC VERSIONS, The. The Syriac translations of the NT which circulated in the Syriac-speaking Church before the construction of the *Peshitta ('Vulgate') version early in the 5th cent. Only two MSS. of these versions are known, both of the Gospels. The 'Curetonian' recovered by H. *Tattam from Egypt in 1842 was printed privately by W. *Cureton in 1848 and published in 1858. The 'Sinaitic' was found and photographed towards the end of the 19th cent. in the monastery of St. Catherine on Mt. *Sinai by Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson of Cambridge. (The latter is not to be confounded with the Greek *Codex Sinaiticus discovered by C. *Tischendorf.) The existence of an Old Syriac text of Acts is attested by St. *Ephraem Syrus's Commentary (which has survived, however, only in *Armenian). The readings of the Old Syriac NT are closely allied to those of the so-called *Western text, and in the Gospels are often under the influence of the *Diatessaron.

The best ed. of the Curetonian text (Sinaitic as apparatus) is in F. C. *Burkitt, Evangelion Da-Mepharreshe (2 vols., Cambridge, 1904), of the Sinaitic text (Curetonian as apparatus) that of Mrs. A. S. Lewis (London, 1910). Facsimile ed. of the Sinaitic text by A. Hjelt (Helsingfors, 1930). W. Cureton, Remains of a very antient Recension of the Four Gospels in Syriac (1858), and R. L. Bensly–J. R. *Harris–F. C. Burkitt, The Four Gospels in Syriac transcribed from the Sinaitic Palimpsest (with introd. by Mrs. A. S. Lewis, 1894). I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J. (ed.), Vetus Evangelium Syrorum et exinde excerptum Diatessaron Tatiani (Biblia Polyglotta Matritensia, iv; Madrid, 1967). A. Hjelt, 'Die altsyrische Evangelienübersetzung und Tatians Diatessaron besonders in ihrem gegenseitigen Verhältnis', in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, vii (pt. 1; 1903); Hjelt defends priority of Old Syriac over the Diatessaron. A. Vööbus, Studies in the History of the Gospel Text in Syriac (C.S.C.O., cxxviii; 1951); id., Early Versions of the New Testament (Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile, vi; Stockholm, 1954), esp. pp. 73–88. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 870–72, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions), III'.

OLD TESTAMENT (Gk. Παλαιὰ Διαθήκη, Lat. Vetus Testamentum). Term denoting the collection of Canonical Books which the Christian Church shares with the Synagogue. Traditionally it is divided into three parts, viz., the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings. The Law (*Torah) consists of the first five Books, i.e. the *Pentateuch; the 'Prophets' are divided into the 'Former Prophets' (i.e. most of the historical Books) and the 'Latter Prophets' (Is., Jer., Ezek., and the *Minor Prophets); and the 'Writings' are the remainder of the OT (incl. Dan., Ezra-Nehemiah and 1 and 2 Chron.). Like the NT, the OT Books are regarded as inspired in the Church, which from the time of *Marcion has consistently defended them against attacks.

OLDCASTLE, Sir JOHN (c. 1378?–1417), *Lollard leader and rebel. He was a knight of Herefordshire who became, by his marriage in 1408, Lord Cobham. In 1413 he was accused of heresy before Convocation, and upheld Lollard opinions. He was given forty days to recant, but escaped from the Tower of London before their expiration. He then put himself at the head of a conspiracy for a Lollard rebellion, which, however, collapsed. He remained in hiding till 1417, when he was captured and executed. He was reputed to have been the boon companion of the young Henry V, and this traditional figure of Sir John Oldcastle was the basis of Shakespeare's Falstaff.

W. T. Waugh, 'Sir John Oldcastle' in E.H.R., xx (1905), pp. 434–56 and 637–58; H. G. Richardson, 'John Oldcastle in hiding, Aug.–Oct. 1417', ib., lv (1940), pp. 432–8. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1953), pp. 160–83. J. Tait in D.N.B., xlii (1895), pp. 86–93. See also works cited s.v. Lollards.

OLDHAM, JOSEPH HOULDSWORTH (1874–1969), missionary statesman and leader of the *Ecumenical Movement. The son of Col. George Oldham, R.E., he was born in India and educated in Scotland and at Trinity College, Oxford. After a year as General Secretary of the British Colleges Christian Union (1896–7), he was secretary of the *Y.M.C.A. in Lahore (1897–1901). Invalided home, he studied theology at New College, Edinburgh, and at Halle in Germany. He was promoting missionary study for the *S.C.M. when, in 1908, he was appointed organizing secretary of the World Missionary Conference which met in *Edinburgh in 1910. He was secretary of the Conference's Continuation Committee and edited the International Review of Missions, launched in 1912. He worked to rescue German missions from wartime extinction, to restore relationships with German Churchmen, and to inaugurate the International Missionary Council (1921), of which he was joint secretary. His work for Africa is considered by many the outstanding feature of his career. Called on by the missionaries to pursue with the government the question of indentured labour in East Africa, he became progressively involved in helping to create a missionary policy in education and in voicing a missionary opinion in the debate on the political future of colonial territories. In 1934 he became chairman of the Research Commission of the Universal Christian Council for '*Life and Work'; he thus initiated the preparations for the *Oxford Conference of 1937 (q.v.) and arranged the 1938 conference at Utrecht which set up the provisional committee for a *World Council of Churches. As secretary first of the Council on the Christian Faith and the Common Life (1939–42) and then of the Christian Frontier Council (1942–5), he edited the Christian News Letter throughout the Second World War. He became an Anglican in mid-career and remained a layman.

Kathleen Bliss in D.N.B., 1961–1970, pp. 806–8, s.v.

OLIER, JEAN-JACQUES (1608–57), founder of the Society and seminary of *Saint-Sulpice (q.v.). A native of *Paris, he studied classics at the *Jesuit Collège de la Trinité at Lyons from 1617 to 1624, philosophy at the Collège d'Harcourt in Paris from 1624 to 1627 and theology at the *Sorbonne from 1627 to 1630. At an early age he was provided with ecclesiastical benefices and rose to become a popular preacher. Having made his way to Rome in 1630 to study Hebrew, he lost his sight. He was cured and converted to a life of godliness during a pilgrimage to *Loreto. He returned to Paris in 1631. Ordained priest in 1633, under the influence first of St. *Vincent de Paul and then of Père C. de *Condren, he conducted missions to Auvergne in 1634 and 1636–7 and to Brittany in 1638 and 1639. After an unsuccessful attempt at *Chartres, in 1641 he established a seminary at Vaugirard. In 1642 he took charge of the parish of Saint-Sulpice in Paris, which was in a degraded condition, hoping, with the assistance of the seminary which he transferred there, to Christianize the Sorbonne and reform the neighbourhood. Dividing the parish into eight districts, each under a priest, he established catechetical centres to educate the ignorant and combat *Calvinism and *Jansenism, founded homes for women, and did much to relieve distress. Among the rich he led the movement against duelling.

The seminary at Saint-Sulpice, which was marked by the close association of masters and students, became a model for other dioceses, to some of whom Olier lent priests to found similar seminaries. The society was not so much a religious congregation as a community of secular priests following a common life. In 1657 he sent priests from Saint-Sulpice to the colony in Montreal, which he had conceived as a community dedicated to the honour of the Blessed Virgin.

His spiritual teaching is in the tradition of St. Vincent de Paul and St. John *Eudes. His published writings include La Journée chrétienne (1655); Catéchisme chrétien pour la vie intérieure (1656); Explication des cérémonies de la grand' messe de paroisse selon l'usage romain ('1657'; really 1656); Introduction à la vie et aux vertus chrétiennes (1657); Traité des saints ordres (1675); Lettres spirituelles (1672); and Pietas Seminarii Sancti Sulpitii (1815).

Œuvres ed. J. P. *Migne (Paris, 1856). Modern lives by E. M. Faillon (2 vols., Paris, 1841; Eng. life by E. H. Thompson based entirely on that of Faillon, London, 1861), G. M. de Fruges (Paris [1904]), L. A. F. Monier, P.S.S. (vol. i only; posthumously publd. by E. L[évesque], Paris, 1914), P. Pourrat, P.S.S. (Paris, 1932), and A. Portaluppi (Milan, 1947). H. I. Ichard, P.S.S., Doctrine de M. Olier expliquée par sa vie et ses écrits (1889; ed. 2, 1891). C. Letourneau, La Mission de Jean-Jacques Olier et la fondation des grands séminaires en France (1906). Bremond, iii (1921), pp. 419–507. E. Lévesque in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 963–82, s.v., with detailed bibl.

OLIVER PLUNKET, St. See Plunket, St. Oliver.

OLIVES, Mount of. The highest point in the range of hills to the E. of *Jerusalem, rising to 2600 ft. above sea-level, and separated from the city by the Valley of Jehoshaphat through which flows the brook *Cedron. Near its foot is the Garden of *Gethsemane (q.v.). It was aptly described by A. P. *Stanley as in NT times 'The Park' of Jerusalem. From the frequent reff. in the Gospels it would appear that Christ often resorted to the Mt. of Olives. He was met here by the crowd on *Palm Sunday (Mk. 11. 1 and 11. 7), and from this mount He ascended to Heaven (Acts 1. 2–12). The traditional site of the Ascension was marked by a Church known as the 'Imbomon' (ἐν βωμῷ; prob. 'at the summit'), built by a matron Poemenia before 378. Another church on the slopes, the 'Eleona' (ὁ Ἐλαίων ; 'the olive yard'), also dating from the 4th cent., was built over a grotto where Christ was believed to have discoursed to the disciples on the Last Things (Mk. 13).

The most comprehensive study is H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem: II, Jérusalem nouvelle (1914), pp. 328–419 (iii, 'Les Sanctuaires du mont des Oliviers'). B. Bagatti, O.F.M.–J. T. Milik, Gli scavi del 'Dominus Flevit', pt. i (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, xiii; 1958); S. J. Saller, O.F.M., The Excavations at Dominus Flevit, pt. ii (ib., 1964). B. Bagatti, O.F.M., in Dict. Bibl. Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 688–99, s.v. 'Oliviers (Mont des)'.

OLIVETAN (c. 1506–38), Protestant Reformer. His real name was Pierre Robert; he is supposed to have been dubbed 'Olivetanus' from burning the midnight oil. A native of Noyon in Picardy and a cousin of J. *Calvin, he began his studies at Orléans in 1528. Here his adoption of *Lutheran doctrines forced him to flee to Strassburg, where he became a competent Hebrew and Greek scholar. From 1532 to 1535 he preached Reformation doctrines to the *Waldenses in Piedmont and for the purposes of his mission work translated the Bible into French. The OT was done direct from the Hebrew, but the *Apocrypha and NT were only a revision of the version of *Faber Stapulensis. He was materially assisted in this work by Calvin, who also contributed the prefaces. The version was published at Neufchâtel in June 1535. In his last years he helped Calvin in organizing the Reformation at Geneva.

Short study by C. A. Négrier (Montauban Diss., 1891). H. Kunze, Die Bibelübersetzungen von Lefèvre d'Étaples und von P. R. Olivetan (Leipzig Diss.; Dresden, 1935). G. Bonet-Maury in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), p. 363 f., s.v.

OLIVETANS ('The Order of Our Lady of Mount Olivet'). A branch of the *Benedictine Order founded in 1319 by Giovanni Tolomei (St. Bernard Ptolomei, d. 1348) at Monte Oliveto, near Siena. They joined the Benedictine Confederation in 1960. They follow a strict interpretation of the rule, for a period in their history were total abstainers from wine, and wear a white habit. They have now 24 houses, among them the Abbey of *Bec.

S. Lancellotti, Historiae Olivetae (Venice, 1623). Anthony of Braga's Chronicon Montis Oliveti (1313–1450) ed. P. Lugano, O.S.B. (Spicilegium Montolivetense i; Florence, 1901). P. Lugano, O.S.B., Origine e primordi dell'ordine di Montoliveto, 1313–1450 (ib., ii; 1903). J. I. Cummins, O.S.B., 'The Olivetan Constitutions' in Ampleforth Journal, ii (1897), pp. 149–64. Life of Giovanni Tolomei by B. M. Maréchaux, O.S.B. (Paris, 1888). Heimbucher, i, pp. 214–217, with bibl. J. C. Almond, O.S.B., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 244, s.v.

OLIVI, PETRUS JOANNIS (c. 1248–98), *Spiritual Franciscan. Born at Sérignan in Hérault, Languedoc, at the age of 12 he entered the *Franciscan Order and studied at *Paris. His zeal for the strict observance of the rule led him to be consulted by Nicholas III in 1279 about Franciscan poverty. As leader of the rigorists in the Order, he was accused of heresy in the General Chapter of Strassburg in 1282; and after examination by seven masters his works were censured in thirty-four propositions (1283). At the General Chapter of Montpellier (1287), however, he established his orthodoxy, which was confirmed at Paris in 1292. He became lector in various convents (Nîmes, Florence, Montpellier). After his death the Spiritual Franciscans accorded him exaggerated veneration, and though in the decretal 'Fidei Catholicae Fundamento' at the Council of *Vienne in 1311 certain propositions believed to be his (on the moment at which the Lord's body was transfixed by the lance; on the manner of the soul's union with the body; on infant baptism) were repudiated, his name was not mentioned. In 1326 *John XXII condemned his Postilla super Apocalypsim (publ. 1700). His other works include Quaestiones on the Sentences, Quodlibets*, Commentaries on Genesis, Job, the Psalms, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ezekiel, the Minor Prophets, the Four Gospels, and the Epp. to the Romans and Corinthians, Expositio Dionysii de Angelica Hierarchia and various works on the Franciscan Order.

'Quaestiones in Secundum Librum Sententiarum', ed. B. Jansen (Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, iv–vi; 1922–6); 'Quaestio de Angelicis Influentiis', ed. F. Delorme, O.F.M., in his ed. of St. *Bonaventure's 'Collationes in Hexaëmeron' (ib., viii; 1934), pp. 363–417; 'Quaestiones Quatuor de Domina', ed. D. Pacetti, O.F.M. (Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, viii; 1954); extracts from further works ed. F. M. Delorme, 'Textes franciscains, I. L'Explication littérale du Pater selon Pierre-Jean Olivi' in Archivio italiano per la Storia della Pietà, i (1951), pp. 181–203. F. *Ehrle, 'Petrus Johannis Olivi, sein Leben und seine Schriften' in Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte, iii (1887), pp. 409–552. B. Jansen, Die Erkenntnislehre Olivis (1921). R. Manselli, La 'Lectura super Apocalipsim' di Pietro di Giovanni Olivi. Ricerche sull'escatologismo medioevale (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, xix–xxi; 1955). L. Hödl, Die Lehre des Petrus Johannis Olivi O.F.M. von der Universalgewalt des Papstes. Eine dogmengeschichtliche Abhandlung auf Grund von edierten und unedierten Texten (Mitteilungen des Grabmann-Instituts der Universität München, i; 1958). E. Bettoni, O.F.M., Le dottrine filosofiche di Pier di Giovanni Olivi (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, nuova serie, lxxiii [1959]). C. Partee, O.F.M., 'Petrus John Olivi: Historical and Doctrinal Study' in Franciscan Studies, xx (1960), pp. 215–60. M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty (1961), esp. pp. 151–9, 171–4, 195–201 and 217–23. F. Callaey in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 982–91, s.v. 'Olieu', with bibl.; V. Heynck in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1149 f., s.v.; G. Gál, O.F.M., in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 219 f., s.v. 'Peter John Olivi'.

OLLÉ-LAPRUNE, LÉON (1839–98), French philosopher. From 1875 he was professor of philosophy at the École Normale Supérieure at Paris, where he became the leading lay exponent in France of a Catholic system of philosophy. He stressed the limits of a purely intellectual approach to the issues of philosophy along lines which had affinities with the teaching of J. H. *Newman in England, and in his emphasis on the part played by the will and the heart in cognition prepared the ground for such later influences in French culture as H. *Bergson, M. *Blondel, and the *Modernist Movement. His writings include La Philosophie de Malebranche (1870), De la certitude morale (1880), and La Philosophie et le temps présent (1890).

M. Blondel, Léon Ollé-Laprune. L'achèvement et l'avenir de son œuvre (Paris, 1923). Brief sketches by G. L. Fonsegrive, (Paris, 1898; also in the series 'Science et Religion', No. 628; 1912), M. Blondel (Paris, 1899) and L. Crippa (Brescia, 1947, with bibl.). E. Boutroux, 'Notice sur la vie et les œuvres de M. Léon Ollé-Laprune' in Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques de l'Institut de France, xxv (1907), pp. 207–42. G. Goyau in C.E., xi (1911), p. 246 f., s.v.; L. Crippa in E.C., ix (1952), col. 107 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Modernism.

OLSHAUSEN, HERMANN (1796–1839), Protestant theologian. He studied at Berlin, where he was greatly influenced by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and J. A. W. *Neander. In 1821 he became professor at Königsberg and in 1834 at Erlangen. His main interest was in NT exegesis, his chief work being a large-scale commentary on the NT (1830 ff.; Eng. trans., 4 vols., 1847–49). His brother, Justus Olshausen (1800–82), was an orientalist of some repute.

L. Pelt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 366–8, s.v.

OMAN, JOHN WOOD (1860–1939), *Presbyterian theologian. From 1889 to 1907 he was minister at Alnwick, Northumberland. From 1907 to 1935 he was professor at, and from 1925 to 1935 principal of, Westminster College, Cambridge. His early interest in F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, of whose Speeches on Religion he published a translation in 1893, indicates the direction of his thought. Holding the uniqueness and independence of the religious consciousness as an immediate, self-authenticating awareness of the Supernatural, he nevertheless insisted that it should not be isolated from other spheres of experience. In The Natural and the Supernatural (1931) he set forth a powerful philosophic justification of his position. Esp. important in this work is his treatment of the idea of the sacred, which differed notably from, as it had in fact antedated in his class-room teaching, R. *Otto's treatment of the 'Holy'. On the side of doctrine, Oman's theology might be said to be the theology of 'sincerity'. The inner authority of truth determined his understanding of personality, of sin and grace, of the Church, sacraments, and ministry. His other writings include his Vision and Authority (1902), The Church and the Divine Order (1911), Grace and Personality (1917).

Memoirs of the author by G. Alexander and H. H. Farmer prefixed to Oman's posthumously publd. Honest Religion (1941), pp. xv–xxv and xxvi–xxxii respectively. A Dialogue with God and Other Sermons and Addresses was also posthumously publd. by F. H. Ballard [son-in-law] (London [1952]). F. G. Healey, Religion and Reality. The Theology of John Oman (1965), with list of his works, pp. 153–5. Obituary note by F. R. Tennant in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxv (1939), pp. 333–8, with portrait. H. H. Farmer in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), p. 657 f.

OMAR, Mosque of. See Dome of the Rock.

OMBRELLINO. In the W. Church the small umbrella-like canopy of white silk carried over the Blessed Sacrament when it is moved informally from one place to another.

OMOPHORION. The long scarf, originally of wool and now a piece of embroidered white silk or velvet, about 10 inches wide, worn in the E. Church by Bishops round the shoulder and falling loose towards the ground. It corresponds to the *pallium in the Latin Church. It is worn at the Liturgy. There are two forms, a larger one worn until the end of the Epistle (when it is laid aside as a sign of self-effacement for the reading of the Gospel) and a shorter one from the *Cherubicon until the end of the service.

Braun, L.G., pp. 664–74.

ONEIDA COMMUNITY, The. A Christian communist society established in 1848 at Oneida, Madison County, N.Y., by John Noyes (1811–86). The body were also known as the Perfectionists, from their insistence that true sinlessness could be realized through communion with Christ. They also maintained that marriage was not a binding contract between husband and wife, but an arrangement under the control of the community. At first their activities were mainly agricultural, but later they included industry and the Community became a very prosperous body. In 1881 it was formed into a joint-stock company.

J. H. Noyes, History of American Socialisms (1870), pp. 614–45; C. Nordhoff, The Communistic Societies of the United States (1875), pp. 257–301; A. Estlake, The Oneida Community (1900); W. A. Hinds, American Communities (Oneida, N.Y., 1878), pp. 117–41 and 170 f.; R. A. Parker, Yankee Saint. John Humphrey Noyes and the Oneida Community (1935).

ONESIMUS, St. The Phrygian slave on whose behalf St. *Paul wrote his Ep. to *Philemon. St. Paul perhaps plays on his name, which means 'profitable', in Philem. ver. 11 ('which in time past was to thee unprofitable, ἄχρηστον, but now profitable, εὔχρηστον, to thee and to me'). Acc. to tradition, he suffered martyrdom. Feast day, in W., 16 Feb.; in E., 15 Feb. (also 22 Nov.).

W. *Lock in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 622. The NT Onesimus has often been identified with the Onesimus, Bp. of Ephesus, mentioned in *Ignatius, Ad Eph., i. 3; but the name is too common to make this more than a conjecture.

ONTOLOGICAL ARGUMENT, The. The a priori argument for the Being of God on the ground that the existence of the idea of God necessarily involves the objective existence of God. It was first elaborated by St. *Anselm, who urged that since by the very notion of God we mean 'that than which nothing greater can be conceived' (id quo nihil majus cogitari possit), if we were to suppose that God did not exist we should be involved in contradiction, since we could at once conceive of an entity greater than a non-existing God, namely a God who existed. The argument was criticized by St. *Thomas Aquinas, and also by I. *Kant, on the ground that existence is not a predicate. It has found modern defenders in R. *Descartes, G. W. F. *Hegel and C. C. J. *Webb.

The subject regularly finds a place in philosophical discussions of Christian apologetics, as well as in works on the philosophers mentioned above. Anselm's classic formulation of the argument is to be found in his Proslogion (J. P. Migne, PL, clviii, 223–42); Eng. tr. with repr. of the text from the ed. of Anselm's works by F. S. Schmitt, O.S.B., and full discussion, by M. J. Charlesworth (Oxford, 1965). C. C. J. Webb, Problems in the Relations of God and Man (1911), pp. 173–88. A. Koyré, L'Idée de Dieu dans la philosophie de St. Anselme (1923), passim. K. *Barth, Fides Quaerens Intellectum. Anselms Beweis der Existenz Gottes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Reihe 4, iii, 1931; ed. 2, Zollikon, 1958; Eng. tr., 1960). E. *Caird, 'Anselm's Argument for the Being of God' in J.T.S., i (1899–1900), pp. 23–39. A. Nemetz in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 699–701, s.v.

ONTOLOGISM. A philosophical system favoured by certain Catholic philosophers, chiefly in Italy and France, during the 19th cent. The name first appears in the Introduzione allo studio della filosofia (1840) of the Italian statesman V. *Gioberti, who, with A. *Rosmini, may be regarded as the principal exponent of the system. Ontologism claims descent from *Plato and *Augustine, and positions akin to those of the ontologists are common to the whole Augustinian tradition of philosophers (e.g. St. *Anselm, R. *Descartes, N. *Malebranche). In reaction from the sceptical trend of post-Kantian speculation, the ontologists asserted that God Himself is the guarantee of the validity of human ideas; that all human knowledge, itself a mode of truth, implies an immediate intuition of uncreated Truth; and that the idea of being, which is the first and simplest idea of all, is an immediate perception of absolute Being. A set of seven 'Errores Ontologistarum' was condemned by the *Inquisition on 18 Sept. 1861.

The condemned propositions are repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 567 (Nos. 2841–7). G. M. Sauvage in C.E., xi (1911), p. 259 f., s.v.; A. Fonck in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1000–61, s.v. 'Ontologisme', with full bibl.; D. Cleary in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 701–3, s.v. See also bibl. to Gioberti, V., and Rosmini-Serbati, A.

ONTOLOGY (from Gk. τὸ ὄν, stem ὀντ-, 'that which is'; λόγος, 'discourse'). The branch of metaphysics which deals with being in general as distinct from being such-and-such. It is closely connected with the theory of knowledge (epistemology), and also, if we may assume real things exist independently of the mind which knows them, contrasted with it. The relation of sensation to the object perceived, and the forms of unity of being, are the object of ontological studies. The repudiation of 'ontological thinking' (as illustrated by the famous *Ontological Argument) is general among most modern philosophers, notably among the disciples of I. *Kant and recent empiricists.

OPHITES and NAASSENES (Gk. ὄφις, Heb. נָחָשׁ, 'serpent'). A group of *Gnostic sects who attached special importance to the serpent; similar views were held by the Peratae, the Sethians and the Gnostic Justin. The serpent's reputation for wisdom fitted him to symbolize a higher god, the liberator and illuminator of mankind, while his twisting coils suggested the perpetual revolution of the universe and the cosmic power who moves it. Some sects worshipped the serpent, regarding the God of the Jews as a jealous oppressor who frustrated his promise of wisdom (Gen. 3. 14 f.; cf. the *Cainites); others however saw the serpent as a hostile power.

The principal sources are *Hippolytus, Haer., 5 (Naassenes, Peratae, Sethians, Justin); *Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., i. 30 (Ophites, Cainites); *Origen, Contra Celsum, vi. 24 ff. (Ophites). Convenient Eng. tr. in R. M. Grant, Gnosticism. An Anthology (1961), pp. 52–59, 89–92 and 104–15. R. A. *Lipsius, 'Ueber die ophitischen Systeme' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, vi (1863), pp. 410–57. A. Hönig, Die Ophiten (1889). R. *Reitzenstein, Poimandres (1904), pp. 81–101. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 80–8; G. Kretchmar in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), col. 1659; G. Quispel in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1178 f., all s.v.

OPTATUS, St. (fl. 370), Bp. of Milevis in N. Africa. Nothing is known of him save his treatise 'Against Parmenian the Donatist' (Bp. of Carthage), of which Books I–VI appeared about 367, and a revision, with Book VII, about 385. Book I relates the origins of *Donatism and II–VI argue that the Donatist sect cannot be the One, Holy, Catholic Church. The argument turns mainly on the lack of 'catholicity' among the Donatists, but Optatus also attacks their claim to 'holiness'. Book III has some treatment of the problem of Church and state; V discusses baptism; and VII offers repentant Donatists readmission to the Church. An appendix ('dossier') of important historical documents has deservedly received much attention from modern scholars. Optatus's telling arguments formed the starting-point for St. *Augustine's developed refutation of Donatism. Feast day, 4 June.

Editio princeps by J. *Cochlaeus (Mainz, 1549; based on a single indifferent MS.). Best of earlier edd. by L. E. *Dupin (Paris, 1700); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xi, 759–1556. Crit. ed. by C. Ziwsa (C.S.E.L., lvi; 1893). Eng. tr. with introd. and notes by O. R. Vassall-Phillips, C.SS.R. (London, 1917). S. Blomgren, Eine Echtheitsfrage bei Optatus von Mileve (Acta Academiae Regiae Scientiarum Upsaliensis, v; 1959). A. C. de Veer, A.A., 'A propos de l'authenticité du livre VII d'Optat de Milev' in Revue des Etudes Augustiniennes, vii (1961), pp. 389–91. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 491–4; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 371 f. H. W. Phillott in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 90–3, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1077–1084, s.v. 'Optat de Milève'; A. Stuiber in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 706 f., s.v.

On the 'dossier', see also D. Völter, Der Ursprung des Donatismus (1883); O. Seeck, 'Urkundenfälschungen des 4. Jahrhunderts. I. Das Urkundenbuch des Optatus' in Z.K.G., xxx (1909), pp. 181–227; L. *Duchesne, 'Le Dossier du donatisme' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, x (1890), pp. 589–650; N. H. Baynes, 'Optatus' in J.T.S., xxvi (1925), pp. 37–44 and 404–6. C. H. *Turner, 'Adversaria Critica: Notes on the Anti-Donatist Dossier and on Optatus, Books I, II', ib., xxvii (1926), pp. 283–96.

See also bibl. to Donatism.

OPTION. The right formerly possessed by an archbishop, when about to consecrate a bishop, of choosing within the latter's see some benefice to which he could act as patron at the next vacancy. The word is also used of the right of members of certain monastic chapters to secure at choice a particular benefice or title. *Cardinals can transfer by option, with Papal approval, to a title other than the one originally assigned to them.

OPUS DEI (Lat., 'the work of God'). An old *Benedictine designation of the Divine *Office, to express the belief that this, the monk's special duty of prayer, is his first responsibility to God.

Opus Dei is also the name of a RC organization, originally of lay people exclusively, devoted to fostering the application of Christian principles to daily living by those engaged in all walks of life. It was founded in 1928 in Madrid by José María Escrivá de Balaguer, an Aragonese priest, who became its president general. Two years later a branch for women was established, and priests are now admitted. Members are encouraged to retain their social position and to pursue their profession, and esp. in Spain they have exercised, not without criticism, considerable influence in public affairs. Corporately Opus Dei maintains a number of educational establishments, esp. residences for students and conference centres, in different parts of the world, and notably the university at Pamplona. It was definitively approved by the Holy See in 1950.

OPUS OPERATUM. See Ex opere operato.

ORACLES, Sibylline. See Sibylline Oracles.

ORANGE, Councils of. Two synods held at Orange ('Arausio') in the south of France in 441 and 529 respectively. The former, which took place under the presidency of St. *Hilary of Arles, issued 30 canons, which deal mainly with disciplinary matters. The latter is of great importance for its 25 dogmatic capitula. These capitula upheld many of St. Augustine's doctrines on the nature of grace as against the *Semi-Pelagianism then being advocated by *Faustus of Riez, though it repudiated any predestination of man to evil. Later these decrees were confirmed by Pope Boniface II (531).

On the Council of 441, Hardouin, i, cols. 1783–8; Mansi, vi (1761), cols. 433–52. C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314 – A. 506 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii; 1963), pp. 76–93. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 430–54, with bibl. reff. See also bibl. to Hilary of Arles.

On the Council of 529, Hardouin, ii, cols. 1097–1104; Mansi, viii (1762), cols. 711–24; C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511 – A. 695 (C.C., Series Latina, cxlviii A; 1963), pp. 53–76; 'capitula' also ed. A. *Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der alten Kirche (ed. 3 by G. L. Hahn; 1897), pp. 220–7 (par. 174), and ed. F. *Maassen in M.G.H., Legum Sectio III, Concilia, i (1893), pp. 44–54. Eng. tr. of principal clauses in Bettenson (ed. 2, 1963), p. 86 f. J. Ernst, 'Zur Erklärung des 22. Kanons von Orange' in Z.K.T., xix (1895), pp. 177–85. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., 'L'Origine des "Capitula" d'Orange 529' in R.T.A.M., vi (1934), pp. 121–42. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1087–1103, s.v. 'Orange (Deuxième Concile de)'.

ORANGISM. The movement defending the cause of Protestantism in Ireland, maintained by the Orange Association (founded 1795). The word Orange in this connexion probably derives directly or mediately from King William 'of Orange' (i.e. William III), and thus ultimately from the town of Orange in the South of France (cf. previous entry). Members of the Orange Association are known as Orangemen.

ORARION (Gk. ὡράριον). In the E. Church, the deacon's stole. It is a narrow band of material, worn over the left shoulder, and hangs straight down back and front; sometimes, before being left free to hang down in front, it is passed below the right arm, then attached once more to the left shoulder, and so hung down in front. While reciting prayers, the deacon holds it in his hand. At the time of Communion, it is crossed round the body.

ORATE, FRATRES (Lat., 'Pray, brethren'). The opening words and hence the name of the sentence addressed by the celebrant to the people at *Mass, immediately after the *Offertory. It asks the prayers of the people before the *Canon, and with the response emphasizes the unity of the congregation with the priest in the offering of the Sacrifice. The formula seems to have originated in Italy in the 11th century.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 103–12; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 82–90.

ORATORIANS. (1) THE ORATORY OF ST. PHILIP NERI. This, the original 'Oratory', grew out of the community of priests that had gathered round the saint (1564), the name being derived from the oratory at S. Girolamo, Rome, where they held their 'Exercises'. In 1575 they were erected into a congregation, and in 1612 their constitutions were sanctioned by *Paul V. The congregation spread quickly through Italy, Spain, South Germany, Poland, and South America. Though almost destroyed by the revolutions of the 18th and early 19th cents., they have revived in a number of countries. J. H. *Newman introduced them into England, founding the Oratory at Old Oscott in 1848 and a year later that in London, which moved to its present site in Kensington in 1854.

St. Philip's Oratory is a congregation of secular priests living in community without vows, those with private means supporting themselves. Each house is independent and elects its superior for three years. There is no central organization, though since 1958 there has been a 'Delegate of the Apostolic See' who acts as Visitor. The chief task of the Oratorians is to lead men to God by prayer, frequent popular preaching, and the Sacraments; and there is always a priest in the confessional. In conformity with the intentions of their founder, they lay stress not only on liturgy but also on attractive services, and esp. on good music; the modern 'oratorio' grew out of the laudi spirituali sung in their devotional exercises, of which many were composed by *Palestrina, one of the saint's penitents. The congregation has produced a number of scholars, among whom C. *Baronius and J. D. *Mansi are the best known.

(2) THE FRENCH ORATORY was founded in 1611 by P. de *Bérulle at Paris, and approved by Papal bull under the name of the 'Oratoire de Jésus-Christ' in 1613. It spread quickly through France and other European countries, esp. the Netherlands. Like the institute of St. Philip, it was intended for the sanctification of secular priests and for the rehabilitation of the priestly office among the laity. Though formed on the Italian model, the French Oratory differs mainly in that it is a centralized organization governed by a Superior-General. One of its chief activities was the training of priests in *seminaries, run on the lines laid down by the Council of *Trent. The popularity of the French Oratory was temporarily eclipsed by the *Jansenist propensities of some of its members, esp. the two Superior-Generals, Père A. L. de Sainte-Marthe (1672–96) and Père de la Tour (1696–1733). The Oratory was dissolved in the French Revolution, but re-established in 1852 by L. P. Pététot and A. J. A. *Gratry as 'Oratoire de Jésus-Christ et de Marie Immaculée'.

The Oratorians, who have been excellent educationists and directors, have contributed much to the furtherance of popular devotion in France. Despite the Jansenist troubles, the Christ-centred spirituality of their founder, Bérulle, has been one of the chief characteristics of the congregation. Many of its members have been distinguished for their holiness and scholarship, e.g. C. de *Condren, N. *Malebranche, J. B. *Massillon, and J. *Morinus. St. John *Eudes, though he later left the Oratory to found his own congregations, was deeply imbued with the Oratorian spirit.

(1) The principal material for the early history of the order is contained in the lives of St. Philip Neri, cited s.v. A. George, L'Oratoire ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques', 1928), pp. 1–33, with bibl. p. 231 f. R. Addington, Cong. Orat., The Idea of the Oratory (1966). C. Gasbarri, L'oratorio filippino (1957). P. Murray, O.S.B. (ed.), Newman the Oratorian (1969), with text of Newman's papers on the Oratory. Heimbucher, ii, pp. 562–6. H. Bowden in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 272–4, s.v. 'Oratory of Saint Philip Neri'. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

(2) L. Batterel (d. 1749), Mémoires domestiques pour servir à l'histoire de l'Oratoire (ed. A. M. P. Ingold–E. Bonnardet, 'Documents pour servir à l'histoire religieuse des XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles', 5 vols., 1902–11). M. Leherpeur, L'Oratoire de France (1926); A. George, op. cit., pp. 34–230, with bibl. pp. 232–7. A. [L. A.] Perraud, L'Oratoire de France au XVIIe et au XIXe siècle (1865). A. M. P. Ingold, L'Oratoire et la Révolution (1883), and other works of this author. Id., Essai de bibliographie oratorienne (2 vols., 1880–2). Bibliothèque oratorienne (13 vols., Paris, 1880–92). Bremond, iii (1921), esp. ch. 3, 'L'Oratoire', pp. 155–221. Heimbucher, ii, pp. 566–71. A. M. P. Ingold in C.E., xi (1911), p. 274 f., s.v.; A. Molien in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1104–38, s.v. 'Oratoire de Jésus (Congrégation de l')'. See also bibl. to Bérulle, P. de, and Gratry, A. J. A.

ORATORIO. The musical setting of a religious libretto for chorus, orchestra (or other accompaniment), and soloists, without (in modern practice) the use of dramatic action, scenery, or dresses, though these adjuncts were sometimes employed until c. 1730. Oratorio apparently derives from the dramatic services of St. *Philip Neri (d. 1595) at the *Oratory in Rome. The first known oratorio in the present sense was performed at Santa Maria in Vallicella in Rome in 1600. The most celebrated oratorios of the 18th cent. are those of G. F. *Handel, esp. his Saul (1738), Israel in Egypt (1739), Samson (1741), and Messiah (1742). In the 19th cent. the oratorio reached its greatest popularity, notably in England, but with few exceptions, such as F. Mendelssohn's St. Paul (1836) and Elijah (1846), the compositions of the period were of little value. In more recent times England alone has maintained a considerable interest in oratorio, largely through the influence of annual musical festivals and local amateur choral societies. Among the more significant modern works are Sir E. *Elgar's *Dream of Gerontius (1900) and Apostles (1903) and Benjamin Britten's War Requiem (1962).

The standard general work is A. Schering, Geschichte des Oratoriums (Kleine Handbücher der Musikgeschichte nach Gattungen, iii; 1911). Shorter study by F. Raugel, L'Oratorio (Paris, 1948). W. Dean, Handel's Dramatic Oratorios and Masques (1959), with general introd. W. S. Rockstro–E. Walker in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians

(ed. 5 by E. Blom), vi (1954), pp. 247–62, s.v., with bibl.; P. Damilano and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, x (1962), cols. 120–68, s.v. 'Oratorium'. D. F. Tovey in E.B. (ed. 11), xx (1911), pp. 161–4, s.v.

ORATORY (Lat. oratorium, 'place of prayer'). The term, used in antiquity for both churches and private chapels, has come to be restricted since the Middle Ages to places of worship other than the parish church. Their origin probably goes back to the chapels built over the tombs of the martyrs in early times. Their use became more frequent in the early Middle Ages, when churches tended to be restricted to cities, and places of worship were needed for the country districts.

For the legal position of oratories in the C of E see Private Chapels Act* (1871). In the RC Church their status has been regulated by Canon Law (CIC, 1188–96). This distinguishes three kinds of oratories, public, semi-public, and private. Public oratories, which may be erected for communities as well as for private individuals, are distinguished from the other two by the fact that all the faithful have right of access at least during the times of Divine Service. Like churches, they are canonically erected by the bishop and consecrated or blessed; all sacred functions, such as Masses, *Benediction, etc., may be performed in them. Semi-public oratories, on the other hand, which may be erected for religious communities or groups of lay people, are not freely accessible; such are, e.g., many convent chapels. The permission of the Ordinary is required for their erection, and for the most part all religious functions may be performed in them as in public oratories, but they are without certain privileges such as the right to a title, bells, burials, etc. Private oratories are rooms set apart for devotional purposes in private houses; no permission is required for their erection, but Mass may not be celebrated in them except on particular occasions with the permission of the Ordinary. For habitual celebration a Papal Indult is required, but it usually covers only one Mass a day and excludes the great feasts. The Blessed Sacrament may be reserved only if a Papal Indult has been granted.

ORATORY, The. The name is used absolutely of the *Oratorians (q.v.) or 'Congregation of the Oratory'. It is also often applied to churches belonging to the Congregation, e.g. the *Brompton Oratory, London.

ORDEALS (Lat. judicium Dei). A method of judicial trial among Teutonic peoples in which the innocence of the accused person was determined by the results of some physical test to which he was submitted. The result was regarded as the immediate judgement of God. Such Ordeals were pre-Christian in origin; but in Christian times they were sanctioned by the Church and conducted under the direction of the clergy. There were four kinds of Ordeal in Anglo-Saxon law. (1) That of hot iron, in which the accused carried a ball of hot iron in his hand for nine steps. (2) That of hot water, in which he plunged his arm into a cauldron either to the wrist or to the elbow, according to the gravity of the charge. After both of these the member was bound up and examined at the end of three days by the priest; and if the wound was festering, the man was held guilty. (3) That of cold water into which the man was thrown, his innocence being revealed by his sinking. And (4) that of the morsel, in which the accused was given a piece of bread or cheese an ounce in weight to swallow. If it stuck in his throat, he was found guilty. There was also the Ordeal by battle, though this was not used by the Anglo-Saxons, and that of walking blindfold between red-hot ploughshares. The Ordeal always took place after Mass, at which the accused had communicated. In England, the Ordeal began to be disused after the Norman Conquest, and rapidly disappeared after the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) had forbidden the clergy to take part in the practice.

Collection of primary material ed. P. Browe, S.J., De Ordaliis (Pontificia Universitas Gregoriana. Textus et Documenta in Usum Exercitationum et Praelectionum Academicarum, Series Theologica, ii and iv; 1932–3). H. C. Lea, Superstition and Force (Philadelphia, 1866; ed. 3, 1876), pp. 217–370 of ed. 3. F. Paletta, Le ordalie. Studio di storia del diritto e scienze del diritto comparato (R. Università di Torino. Istituto di Esercitazioni nelle Scienze Giuridico-Politiche, Memoria, vii; 1890). E. Vacandard, 'L'Église et les ordalies au XIIe siècle' in R.Q.H., liii (1893), pp. 185–200; id., Études de critique et d'histoire religieuse, Sér. i (1905), pp. 191–215 ('L'Église et les ordalies'). A. Esmein, Les Ordalies dans l'Église gallicane au IXe siècle (1898). S. Grelewski, La Réaction contre les ordalies en France depuis le IXe siècle jusqu'au décret de Gratien (Strassburg thesis, 1924). P. Fournier, 'Quelques Observations sur l'histoire des ordalies au moyen-âge' in Mélanges Gustave Glotz, ii (1932), pp. 367–76. Charlotte Leitmaier, Die Kirche und die Gottesurteile (Wiener Rechtsgeschichtliche Arbeiten, ii [1953]); H. Nottarp, Gottesurteilstudien (Bamburger Abhandlungen und Forschungen, iii; 1956). J. W. Baldwin, 'The Intellectual Preparation for the Canon of 1215 against Ordeals' in Speculum, xxxvi (1961), pp. 613–36. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 276–8, s.v.; A. E. Crawley and others in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 507–33, s.v., esp. P. Vinogradoff, pp. 519–21, s.v. 'Ordeal (Christian)'; A. Michel in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1932), cols. 1139–52, s.v. 'Ordalies'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2377–90, s.v. 'Ordalie', also with bibl.

ORDER OF THE COMMUNION, The. See Communion, The Order of the.

ORDER OF PREACHERS. See Dominican Order.

ORDERICUS VITALIS (1075–?1142), Anglo-Norman historian. He was the son of a French priest in the service of the first Norman earl of Shrewsbury and an English mother. Born near Shrewsbury in 1075, he went in 1085 as a novice to the Benedictine house of St.-Évroul(t) in Normandy; here he remained (apart from a few journeys, including at least one to England) for the rest of his life. He called himself 'Angligena' and never lost his love of England. Orderic wrote (in a model hand) an Ecclesiastical History in 13 books: books i and ii, which were written last, are a conventional plagiarized account from the birth of Christ onwards; books iii–vi, which were written first, began as a history of St.-Évroul but have a long digression on the Norman conquest of England; the remainder is a history of Orderic's own time. His rhythmic style is complex and subtle, his vocabulary is at times unusual, the work is ill-arranged and its chronology often unclear; but Orderic's interpretation of 'ecclesiastical history' (a term borrowed from *Bede) was wide. He gives an inimitable account of the feudal politics of North France and of Norman achievement throughout Christendom, and is altogether a prime source for the political and ecclesiastical history and customs of his time. His only rival among the historians of his day and region is *William of Malmesbury.

Editio princeps by A. Du Chesne (ed.), Historiae Normannorum Scriptores antiqui (Paris, 1619), pp. 319–925, repr. J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxviii, 17–984. Crit. ed. in five vols. (admirably indexed) by A. Le Prévost (Société de l'Histoire de France, 1838–55), with important Introd. in vol. v by L. Delisle; superseded by ed. with Eng. trans. by Marjorie Chibnall (6 vols., Oxford, 1969–80). J. Tessier, De Orderico Vitali (Paris thesis, Poitiers, 1872); Orderic Vital et l'abbaye de St-Évroul. Notice et travaux, publiés en l'honneur de l'historien normand (Alençon, 1912); H. Wolter, S.J., Ordericus Vitalis. Ein Beitrag zur Kluniazenischen Geschichtsschreibung (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte, Mainz, vii; 1955). L. Delisle, 'Notes sur les manuscrits autographes d'Orderic Vital', in Matériaux pour l'édition de Guillaume de Jumièges, ed. J. Lair (1910), pp. 7–27; Evelyn Jamison, 'The Sicilian Norman Kingdom in the Mind of Anglo-Norman Contemporaries', Proceedings of the British Academy, xxiv (1938), 237–85, esp. pp. 242–7; P. Rousset, 'La Description du monde chevaleresque chez Orderic Vital' in Le Moyen Âge, lxxv (1969), pp. 427–44.

ORDERS, Anglican. See Anglican Ordinations.

ORDERS, Holy. See Holy Orders.

ORDERS, Minor. See Minor Orders.

ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

I. Origins. The Ministry of the Christian Church traces its beginnings to the Lord's commissioning of the Twelve (Mt. 10. 1–5, Mk. 3. 13–19, Lk. 6. 12–16) and the Seventy (Lk. 10. 1) to the work of the kingdom. This Ministry, so far from coming to an end at His death, received a new power and wider responsibilities after Pentecost (Acts 2. 1–13), when the Twelve assumed direction of the primitive community (Acts 2. 14, 3. 1–10, 4. 23–31, etc.). From the first its external form was largely influenced by Jewish synagogal practice, which had itself been moulded by the OT, but its development was necessarily conditioned also by the practical needs of the nascent Church. The view that its structure followed secular and pagan models in the contemporary Hellenistic world no longer finds much favour. In the Apostolic band the place of leadership was assumed by St. *Peter (Acts 1. 15, 2. 37, 4. 8, 5. 8, 10. 1–11, 18, 15. 7; cf. Mt. 16. 16–18), and at the outset an attempt was made to preserve the original number by the election of *Matthias to remedy the defection of *Judas (Acts 1. 15–26).

II. Appointment of Ministers in the NT. The chief NT passages in which a reference to Ordination may be discovered are: (1) The appointment of the Seven by the laying on of hands (Acts 6). (2) The commissioning of *Barnabas and Saul with laying on of hands and prayer by the prophets and teachers at Antioch (Acts 13. 1–3). (3) The mention of 'bishops' (ἐπίσκοποι) by St. Paul in his speech at Miletus as men whom 'the Holy Ghost had appointed to tend the Church of God' (Acts 20. 28). (4) St. Paul's admonition to *Timothy not to neglect the gift (χάρισμα) bestowed on him by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery (1 Tim. 4. 14) and 'to stir up the gift which was in him through the laying on of his [St. Paul's] hands' (2 Tim. 1. 6). (5) St. Paul's warning to Timothy not to lay hands hastily on anyone (1 Tim. 5. 22). In such passages the act of Ordination would seem to be conceived as a function of the whole Church, acting through its existing Ministers; the rite is considered to convey to the candidate the gifts of the Spirit in such measure as he needs them for his new office and work.

III. Gradation in the Ministry. In the NT we discover several grades of ministry coexisting (1 Cor. 12. 28, Eph. 4. 11). A broad distinction seems to lie between a 'missionary' (also termed by modern scholars 'itinerant', 'apostolic', and 'charismatic', but the last term may be misleading) and a 'local' or 'settled' ministry. The former is represented by the 'Apostles' (a term used to cover more than the Twelve, Acts 14. 14, Rom. 16. 7, Gal. 1. 19) and also the '*Prophets' (q.v.; cf. *Didache 10. 7 and 13. 1–7), the latter by Bishops (1 Tim. 3. 2, Tit. 1. 7), 'Presbyters' (Acts 11. 30, 14. 23, 1 Tim. 5. 17, Jas. 5. 14), and 'Deacons' (Phil. 1. 1, 1 Tim. 3. 8). This second group in the NT is the nucleus of the traditional threefold ministry, though it should be observed that in the NT the terms 'Bishop' and 'Presbyter' seem often interchangeable. Other titles of ministers found in the NT are 'pastors', 'teachers', 'evangelists'.

By the middle of the 3rd cent. considerably more differentiation had come about. At Rome under Pope *Cornelius (251–3) there were, besides the Bishop, forty-six Presbyters, seven Deacons, seven Sub-deacons, forty-two Acolytes and fifty-two Exorcists, Readers and Door-keepers (*Eusebius, H.E., VI. xliii. 11). But it was long before uniformity was reached. The Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua* (prob. from Gaul, late-5th cent.) has nine distinct orders; St. *John of Damascus has five; *Innocent III has six. By the later Middle Ages it was the prevalent view that there were seven orders, but there were different methods of reckoning, largely through contending theories on the relation of the priesthood and the episcopate. For St. *Thomas, who held that the ultimate purpose of Holy Order lay in its relation to the Eucharist, the priesthood was the highest grade, since the priest possessed the power of consecrating the Sacrament; and this appears to be the view officially countenanced by the Council of *Trent, though since the Second *Vatican Council there has been an increased emphasis on the episcopate, in which the bishop is regarded as primarily sharing in the priesthood of Christ. During the Middle Ages a distinction came to be drawn esp. in the W. between the '*Major Orders' (Bishop, Priest, Deacon, Sub-deacon) and the *Minor Orders (Acolytes, Exorcists, Readers, Door-keepers). The distinction in modern speech between 'consecration' to the episcopate and 'ordination' to the other Orders was unknown in early times and has been dropped in the current official RC documents.

IV. Order as a Sacrament. Acc. to traditional Catholic theology the gift of Order is a Sacrament. The Council of Trent (Sess. xxii) defines it as a Sacrament instituted by Christ (can. 3) and as conveying the Holy Ghost (can. 4). Like Baptism Order is held to impart an indelible *character. Hence a cleric if degraded does not lose the gift of Order and on restoration is not 're-ordained'; and though the civil law may treat a cleric who has executed a deed of relinquishment under the Clerical Disabilities Act of 1870 as a layman, from the standpoint of the Church he remains a priest or deacon. But where there is grave doubt (e.g. through loss of records) whether ordination has been validly administered, it may be, and sometimes is, repeated 'conditionally'.

Despite the various grades in the ministry it is agreed that there is but a single Sacrament of Orders. It is widely denied, however, that the orders lower than the diaconate can be reckoned a Sacrament. In the Middle Ages they were commonly so regarded (St. Thomas, S.T., Suppl. 94, qu. 7, art. 3); but RC theologians now reject this view on the ground that they are of ecclesiastical (and not Divine) institution.

In the *Thirty-Nine Articles (art. 25) Orders is included among 'the five commonly called Sacraments' which 'are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel'. In the Protestant Churches the Sacramental nature of Orders is commonly denied.

V. The Recipient of Orders. The traditional view is that only a baptized and confirmed male person can be validly ordained. The candidate must be of good moral character and convinced that he has a Divine call ('vocation') to the office. For the Ordination to be regular the candidate must also be of due age (in the C of E normally 24 years for the priesthood, 30 for the episcopate; see Age, Canonical) and not be excommunicate; and (a matter esp. stressed by RC theologians) the *interstices must have been duly observed. The candidate also generally needs a '*title' to the cure of souls; in the C of E the principal exception is the tenure of Fellowships at Colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. By 28 & 29 Vict., cap. 122, an ordinand in the C of E is further required to make and subscribe a 'Declaration of Assent' to the Thirty-Nine Articles, to the BCP and to the Ordination Service, and to make Oaths of Allegiance to the Sovereign and of canonical obedience to the Bishop. The duties of the respective offices in the Anglican ministry are well set out in the *Ordinal. In the RC Church, the specific obligations incurred by the reception of Major Orders include, acc. to W. discipline, celibacy (q.v.) and the recitation of the Divine Office (q.v.).

VI. The Minister of Orders. Traditional theology also holds that the Sacrament of Orders can be validly conferred only by a duly consecrated Bishop, acting as the minister of Christ and the successor of the Apostles. The episcopate is thus held to create a historical link between the Church of Apostolic times and that of today and is both the means and assurance of the continuity of office and of the transmission of grace (see Apostolic Succession); and on these grounds the episcopate is held to be of the esse of the Church.

There is, however, a small body of evidence that in the early Church ordination was occasionally conferred by clerics other than Bishops. The 13th can. of *Ancyra may provide for ordination by presbyters (but the text is disputed); and it was sometimes allowed that suffering for the faith in time of persecution was the equivalent of ordination (e.g. St. *Hippolytus, Ap. Trad. x. 1).

Since the purpose of Ordination is to qualify a man for office in the Church, it might seem that outside the Church Orders could not be given. Such was the usual view of the early Church, and it is still that held in the East. But since the time of St. *Augustine, whose influence here was paramount, it has been generally maintained in the W. that, even when in heresy or schism, a Bishop can validly ordain (as he can validly baptize and validly celebrate the Eucharist). Hence the RC Church does not 're-ordain' Bishops and Priests from the Orthodox Church should they be received into communion with the Pope, but accepts their previous Ordination as valid. Similarly Priests of the RC Church who join the C of E are not re-ordained, though for certain technical reasons (see Anglican Ordinations) the RC Church does not recognize Ordinations conferred in the C of E.

VII. Rites of Ordination. The earliest known rite of Ordination is that in the Apostolic Tradition* of Hippolytus (c. 215); and from the 4th cent. several such rites survive, e.g. the Liturgy of St. Serapion, and those in the Apostolic Constitutions and the Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua. Traditionally Ordination has always taken place in the context of the Eucharist, but for long, esp. in the E., the rite continued very simple. In the W. it became the custom for the newly ordained presbyters to *concelebrate with the ordaining Bishop. Gradually elaborations were introduced esp. to signify the ordinand's new office. The Gospels were delivered to the Deacon (in earlier times to the Reader), while by the later Middle Ages the delivery of the Paten and Chalice with the elements prepared for the Mass to candidates for the priesthood had become sufficiently established for it to be regarded as the essence ('matter') of the rite (see Instruments, Tradition of the).

In 1968 the RC rites of ordination to the diaconate, priesthood and episcopate were all much simplified. Candidates for the diaconate and priesthood are examined after the Gospel; when both orders are to be conferred the examination of the priests follows that of the deacons. The bishop lays hands on each candidate for the diaconate in silence and then says the ordination prayer over them all, seeking the gifts of the Holy Spirit to enable them to exercise their office faithfully. After each candidate has been vested in *dalmatic and *stole, the bishop gives him the book of the Gospels with a charge to proclaim and live by it. In the case of candidates for the priesthood, the bishop is joined by other clergy in the laying on of hands, and a somewhat different formula is used in the ordination prayer. The bishop then anoints the hands of each candidate with *chrism and delivers to him the paten and chalice with the bread and wine offered by the people. In the ordering of bishops, which is always a separate ceremony, the co-consecrators join with the consecrating bishop in saying that part of the consecratory prayer held to be necessary for validity. While this prayer is being said the book of the Gospels is held over the head of the candidate. The consecrating bishop then anoints his head, delivers the Gospels to him, puts a *ring on his finger and a *mitre on his head and gives him a pastoral staff or *crosier. The consecratory prayer used in the ordering of a bishop is based on that found in the Apostolic Tradition of Hippolytus. In the new rite of ordination to the priesthood there is no mention of the power to forgive sins. For ceremonies of the ordination rites in the C of E, see Ordinal.

It became usual in both E. and W. for Bishops to be consecrated on a Sunday, e.g. the BCP orders that the rite is 'always to be performed upon some Sunday or Holy-day'. In the W. the ordination of Priests and Deacons became customary at the *Ember (esp. December) seasons; and until very recently this remained the practice of the C of E; of recent years the Feast of St. Peter has tended to replace Trinity Sunday. The BCP provides special prayers for daily use in the Ember Weeks on behalf of those to be admitted to Orders.

J. *Morin, Cong. Orat., De Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (Paris, 1655); J. B. *Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (1868), pp. 179–267 ('The Christian Ministry'); E. *Hatch, The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (*Bampton Lectures for 1880; 1880); C. *Gore, The Church and the Ministry (1888; new ed. by C. H. *Turner, 1919); F. J. A. *Hort, The Christian Ecclesia (1897); R. C. *Moberly, Ministerial Priesthood (1897); W. *Sanday, The Conception of Priesthood in the Early Church and in the Church of England (1898); J. *Wordsworth, The Ministry of Grace (1900); T. M. *Lindsay, The Church and the Ministry in the Early Centuries (1903); A. R. Whitham, Holy Orders (1910); D. *Stone, Episcopacy and Valid Orders in the Primitive Church (1910); H. B. *Swete (ed.), Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918; esp. essay on 'Apostolic Succession' by C. H. Turner). J. Tixeront, L'Ordre et les ordinations (1924); B. H. *Streeter, The Primitive Church studied with special reference to the Origins of the Christian Ministry (1939). H. B. Porter, Jr., The Ordination Prayers of the Ancient Western Churches (Alcuin Club Collections, xlix; 1967). D. N. Power, O.M.I., Ministers of Christ and His Church. The Theology of the Priesthood (1969). J. P. Whitney, The Episcopate and the Reformation (1917). J. N. Ainslie, The Doctrines of Ministerial Order in the Reformed Churches of the 16th and 17th Centuries (1940). A. C. *Headlam, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (Bampton Lectures for 1920; 1920). J. W. Hunkin, Episcopal Ordination and Confirmation in Relation to Inter-Communion and Reunion (1929); K. D. Mackenzie, The Case for Episcopacy (1929); C. Jenkins–K. D. Mackenzie (edd.), Episcopacy, Ancient and Modern (1930); R. Dunkerley (ed.), The Ministry and the Sacraments (1946); S. Neill, The Ministry of the Church (1947); T. W. Manson, The Church's Ministry (1948); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946); E. R. Fairweather, Episcopacy and Reunion (Toronto, 1952; London, 1953); K. M. Carey (ed.), The Historic Episcopacy in the Fullness of the Church (1954). N. Sykes, Old Priest and New Presbyter. The Anglican Attitude to Episcopacy, Presbyterianism and Papacy since the Reformation (1956). B. Kleinheyer, Die Priesterweihe im römischen Ritus. Eine liturgiehistorische Studie (Trier theologische Studien, xii; 1962). See also bibl. to art. Bishop.

ORDINAL (Lat. ordinale). (1) In the Middle Ages, a manual to acquaint the priest with the Office to be recited in acc. with variations in the ecclesiastical year.

(2) In the C of E, 'The Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons, according to the Order of the Church of England'. This use of the word dates only from c. 1600. There have been four English Ordinals. (i) The first was published in March 1550 ('1549'). It was the work of six Bishops and six other scholars, appointed by an Order in Council of 31 Jan. 1550, as decreed by Act of Parliament (3 & 4 Edw. VI, c. 12). Though bound up with copies of the BCP, neither this nor the later Ordinals is properly a part of the Book. It was modelled on the rite in the medieval *Sarum *Pontifical. Ordination was to take place on a Sunday or Holy Day. The Exhortation and Examination in the Ordering of Priests were mainly based on a draft by M. *Bucer. At the imposition of hands the formula was 'Receive the Holy Ghost. Whose sins thou dost forgive they are forgiven; whose sins thou dost retain they are retained. And be thou a faithful dispenser of the Word of God and of His Holy Sacraments. In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen'; and at the delivery of the Bible and the chalice with the bread, 'Take thou authority to preach the Word of God and to minister the Holy Sacraments in this congregation'. In the Consecration of Bishops the medieval ceremonies of anointing, putting on of gloves, and delivery of the ring and mitre were omitted. No provision was made for the minor orders. (ii) In 1552, the chief alterations were the omission of certain ceremonies, e.g., in the Ordering of Priests, the porrection of the *Instruments. (iii) In 1559 the changes were negligible except in the wording of the Oath (now of 'the Queen's Sovereignty' instead of 'the King's Supremacy'). (iv) In 1662 some important modifications were made, notably in the Ordering of Priests, the change of the formula accompanying the imposition of hands to 'Receive the Holy Ghost for the Office and Work of a Priest in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the Imposition of our hands. Whose sins, etc.' See also Alternative Services.

The 1550 Ordinal is printed in The Liturgies . . . of King Edward VI (ed. *Parker Society by J. Ketley, 1844), pp. 159–186, and in the Everyman's Library edition of the First and Second Prayer Books of King Edward VI (1910), pp. 291–317. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (1915), vol. i, pp. cxxx–cxli; vol. ii, pp. 928–1017. P. F. Bradshaw, The Anglican Ordinal. Its History and Development from the Reformation to the Present Day (*Alcuin Club Collections, liii; 1971).

ORDINARY. In canon law, an ecclesiastic in the exercise of the jurisdiction permanently and irremovably annexed to his office. Such jurisdiction extends over his rights of teaching, governing, adjudicating, and administering the Sacraments. In the RC Church the term is defined as including, besides the Pope who possesses a plenitude of immediate ordinary jurisdiction, all diocesan bishops, abbots, apostolic administrators or vicars, prelates or prefects with some territorial jurisdiction, their officials and vicars-general, and in the vacancy of a see, the vicar capitular or lawful administrator (CIC, 198, §§ 1–2). The meaning of the term in the BCP is not precisely determined; it may refer either to the Bishop or the Archdeacon. The parish priest may be regarded as possessing ordinary jurisdiction of an inferior kind, but he may not delegate it against the will of his superior ordinary.

ORDINARY OF THE MASS, The (Lat. Ordo Missae). A term widely used until the recent liturgical reforms to describe the invariable or almost invariable part of the *Mass, as distinguished from the parts which varied with the ecclesiastical calendar, called the *Proper. It comprised the preparatory prayers, the *Kyrie, *Gloria and *Creed, the *Preface and *Sanctus, the *Canon, *Paternoster, *Fraction and *Agnus Dei, part of the Communion and post-Communion devotions, and (until 1965) the *Last Gospel. The Canon, however, was sometimes distinguished from the Ordinary, the two together being termed the 'Ordinary and Canon of the Mass'. The 1970

Missale Romanum uses the term 'Ordo Missae' to describe the whole service of the Mass.

ORDINATION. See Orders and Ordination.

ORDINATIONS, Anglican. See Anglican Ordinations.

ORDINES ROMANI. The ancient collections of ceremonial directions for the performance of the Roman rite and thus the ancestors of the *Caeremoniale Romanum, the *Caeremoniale Episcoporum, and the *Pontifical. The first to be printed in modern times were edited by G. *Cassander in 1561 (Cologne) and more adequately by Melchior Hittorp in 1568 (also Cologne), but far more important was the collection of fifteen Ordines published by J. *Mabillon in his Musaeum Italicum, vol. ii (1689). The study of the Ordines was put on a new footing by M. Andrieu, who distinguished fifty, which he arranged according to their content: I–X the Mass; XI Baptism; XII–XIV the Office; XV–XIX monastic and other rituals for the ecclesiastical year; XX–XXXIII feasts of the year, esp. the ceremonies of Holy Week; XXXIV–XL Ordinations; XLI–XLIV dedication of churches; XLV–XLVIII coronation of the Emperor; XLIX funerals; L is the Ordo from the Romano-Germanic Pontifical of the 10th cent. entitled by Hittorp 'Ordo Romanus Antiquus'. These fifty Ordines have survived in various collections which partly overlap, and which can be dated between the 8th and the 10th cents. They correspond to Mabillon's Ordines I–IX (his X–XV are of later date). The earliest Ordines originated in Rome; perhaps the oldest is Ordo XI (=Mabillon III), which is probably based on the *Gelasian Sacramentary. They provide the earliest evidence for the development of the Roman rite and illustrate its diffusion throughout Europe. They began to circulate north of the Alps at the end of the 8th cent. and were adapted and greatly enlarged. In the form in which they developed north of the Alps, seen in the Romano-Germanic Pontifical of the 10th cent. (Ordo L), they influenced the rite of Rome itself. See also Pontifical.

Mabillon's text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxviii, 851–1408. Crit. ed. by M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du haut moyen âge (S.S.L., xi [introduction], xxiii [Ordines I–XIII], xxiv [Ordines XIV–XXXIV], xxxviii [Ordines XXXV–XLIX], and xxix [Ordo L]; 1931–61). Ordo Romanus Primus also ed., with Eng. tr., by E. G. C. F. Atchley (L.L.E., vi; 1905). C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au moyen âge (Biblioteca degli 'Studi Medievali', i [1966]), pp. 101–81. T. A. Vismans, O.P., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2061–6, s.v.

ORESME, NICOLAS (c. 1320–82), French medieval philosopher. He studied at Paris (from 1348), and after filling several ecclesiastical offices was appointed Bp. of Lisieux in 1377. His writings, which are partly in Latin, partly in French, treat of two separate branches of knowledge, viz. economics and politics, and natural science. In the former field his book De l'origine, nature et mutation des monnaies exercised great influence on the development of medieval economic ideas; in the latter, in De coelo et mundo, he carried further Buridan's theory of the earth's motion and met objections with arguments which partly anticipated N. *Copernicus. In other respects he was a forerunner of R. *Descartes (by laying the foundations of analytical geometry) and of G. *Galileo (in formulating the law of motion for falling bodies).

Modern edd. of his Tractatus de Origine, Natura, Jure et Mutationibus Monetarum, by M. L. Wolowski (Paris, 1864; Lat. and Fr. texts, together with biogr. introd.); and by C. Johnson (Medieval Texts, 1956), with Eng. tr.; of his De Proportionibus Proportionum and Ad Pauca Respicientes, with Eng. tr., by E. Grant (Madison, Milwaukee, and London, 1966); of his Tractatus de configurationibus qualitatum et motuum, with Eng. tr., by M. Clagett (ib., 1968); of his Quaestiones super Geometriam Euclidis, with Eng. paraphrase by H. L. Busard (Leiden, 1961), and of the French translations and commentary which he made of Aristotle at the request of King Charles V: Le Livre d'éthiques, by A. D. Menut (New York, 1940); Le Livre du ciel et du monde by A. D. Menut–A. J. Demony, C.S.B., in Mediaeval Studies, iii (Toronto, 1941), pp. 185–280, iv (1942), pp. 159–297, and v (1943), pp. 167–333, and, with Eng. tr., by A. D. Menut (University of Wisconsin Publications in Medieval Science, Madison, Wisconsin–London, 1968); Le Livre de yconomique by A. D. Menut in Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, N.S., xlvii (1957), pp. 783–853, also with Engl. tr.; and of Le Livre de politique by id., ib., lx (1970), part 6. [L.] F. Meunier, Essai sur la vie et les ouvrages de Nicole Oresme (Paris thesis, 1857). E. Bridley, La Théorie de la monnaie au XIVe siècle. Nicole Oresme (1906). E. Borchert, Die Lehre von der Bewegung bei Nicolaus Oresme (B.G.P.M., xxxi, Hft. 3; 1934); id., Der Einfluss des Nominalismus auf die Christologie der Spätscholastik nach dem Traktat De Communicatione Idiomatum des Nicolaus Oresme (ib., xxxv; Hftt. 4–5; 1940). G. W. Coopland, Nicole Oresme and the Astrologers. A Study of his Livre de divinations (Liverpool, 1952). A. D. Menut, 'A Provisional Bibliography of Oresme's Writings' in Mediaeval Studies, xxviii (1966), pp. 279–99; with supplementary note, ib., xxxi (1969), p. 346 f. Überweg, ii, pp. 595 f. and 599 f., with bibl. p. 784. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1405–10, s.v.

ORGANIC ARTICLES, The. The provisions of Napoleon (1802) to regulate public worship and the relations of Church and state in France. They included (1) governmental control over Papal documents entering France, and over the powers of ecclesiastical councils and synods; (2) a limited state control of seminaries and clergy, requiring inter alia the teaching of the *Gallican Articles; (3) state regulation of processions and clerical dress; and (4) state regulation of stipends and parish boundaries. Napoleon sought to defend this radical and sudden modification of the *Concordat (1801) on the ground that the Articles were supplementary and explanatory. The Pope objected to them from the first, and in fact the Articles were less and less enforced, though they were not finally repealed till the separation of Church and state in 1905.

The text is in C. Mirbt, No. 559, and J. E. C. Bodley, The Church in France (1906), pp. 121–34. Eng. tr. in F. Mourret, S.S., A History of the Catholic Church, tr. by N. Thompson, vii (1955), pp. 565–74. See also works cited under Concordat.

ORGANS. The use of an organ is recorded at *Malmesbury in the early 8th cent., and in the 10th cent. instances at *Glastonbury, *Winchester, and elsewhere are known. By the 13th cent. they were common in the larger parish churches and by the end of the Middle Ages almost universal. Their use was objected to by the more puritanically minded of the Reformers, notably E. *Grindal, and a motion in the Lower House of Canterbury Convocation on 13 Feb. 1562 for the removal of all organs from churches was defeated by a single vote. A petition of the Puritans in 1586 for the removal of cathedral organs was also unsuccessful, and organs thus survived till the middle of the 17th cent. In 1644, however, legislation for the destruction of organs and their cases was carried through, and in consequence very few pre-Commonwealth organs now exist. They were reintroduced after the Restoration (1660), among the most famous organ-builders being 'Father *Smith' and René (Renatus) Harris (?1640–?1715). In the 18th cent., barrel organs, with a limited selection of tunes, were widely used. J. S. *Bach was the greatest exponent of the small *Baroque organ. As instruments became larger, from c. 1887, the modern type of 'positive' (or stationary) organ evolved to give much the same effect as a larger instrument at a lower cost. Since c. 1930 pipeless or electronic organs have been installed in many churches.

E. J. Hopkins–E. F. Rimbault, The Organ, its History and Construction (1855); W. L. Sumner, The Organ. Its Evolution, Principles of Construction and Use (1952; ed. 3, 1962). P. Williams, The European Organ 1450–1850 (1966); C. Clutton–A. Niland, The British Organ (1963). J. *Stainer, The Organ [c. 1878]. A. M. Richardson, Modern Organ Accompaniment (1907). N. A. Bonavia-Hunt, The Church Organ (Church Music Monographs, No. 2; 1920). M. P. Conway, Playing a Church Organ (1949). E. Freeman, English Organ-Cases (1921). F. W. Thornsby, Dictionary of Organs and Organists (Bournemouth, 1912). Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), vi (1954), pp. 282–337.

ORIENS CHRISTIANUS. The title of two quite distinct publications.

(1) M. *Le Quien's work on the Eastern Church. It contains an enormous collection of geographical and historical material, arranged acc. to the four E. Patriarchates and, despite the inaccuracies incidental to a pioneer work of vast dimensions, has not been superseded. Le Quien worked on it from 1718 till his death in 1733, issuing a prospectus of the work in 1722; but it was not published till 1740, when it appeared in three folio volumes.

(2) A German periodical devoted to Oriental studies publd. at Leipzig under the direction of A. *Baumstark. It appeared in three series, viz. the Original Series, 8 vols., 1901–10; a 'Neue Serie', 14 vols., 1911–25; and the Third Series, 14 vols., 1927 ['1926']–1941. The periodical was revived on new lines, under the auspices of the Görres-Gesellschaft, and a Fourth Series publd. at Wiesbaden, 1953 ff.

On (1), H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2593–6, s.v. 'Le Quien'; S. Vailhé, A.A., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 188, s.v. 'Le Quien'.

ORIENTATION. The construction of a church so that its longer axis runs east and west. The earliest (4th cent.) basilicas in Rome had a façade to the east and an *apse for the altar at the west, so that the celebrant at the Eucharist, standing behind the altar, faced east. The high altar of Byzantine churches, on the other hand, was placed in an eastern apse, a practice followed later esp. in England, Germany, and Spain. Elsewhere custom has been more variable. Though orientation is derived historically from a pagan habit of praying towards the sunrise, Christians have seen in its adoption symbolic reference to Christ as the Rising Sun.

H. Nissen, Orientation. Studien zur Geschichte der Religion (3 Hftt., 1906–10), esp. pp. 391–459 ('Das Christentum'). F. J. Doelger, Sol Salutis. Gebet und Gesang im christlichen Altertum mit besonderer Rücksicht auf die Ostung in Gebet und Liturgie (Liturgische Forschungen, iv–v; 1920). O. Nussbaum, Der Standort des Liturgen am christlichen Altar vor dem Jahre 1000. Eine archäologische und liturgiegeschichtliche Untersuchung (2 vols., Theophaneia, xviii; 1965). E. Weigand, 'Die Ostung in der frühchristlichen Architektur' in Festschrift für Sebastian Merkle zu seinem 60. Geburtstage (1922), pp. 370–85. E. Peterson, 'La croce e la preghiera verso oriente' in E.L., lix (1945), pp. 52–68; L. Voelkl, '"Orientierung" im Weltbild der ersten christlichen Jahrhunderte' in Riv. A.C., xxv (1949), pp. 155–70. T. D. Atkinson in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 73–88, s.v. 'Points of the Compass'. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2665–9, s.v.

ORIGEN (c. 185–c. 254), Alexandrian Biblical critic, exegete, theologian and spiritual writer. The facts of his life are recorded by *Eusebius. He was born in Egypt, prob. at *Alexandria, where he received a thoroughly Christian education in the house of his parents. During the persecution in Alexandria in 202 when his father, Leonidas, was killed, he was prevented from seeking martyrdom only by a ruse of his mother, who hid his clothes. When peace was restored Origen was appointed by *Demetrius to be head of the *Catechetical School in Alexandria in place of *Clement, who had fled the city. He now began to lead a strictly ascetical life of fastings, vigils, and voluntary poverty, and even, acc. to Eusebius, mutilated himself, misinterpreting Mt. 19. 12 in a literal sense. He was well versed in the works of the Middle Platonists and studied pagan philosophy and literature under *Ammonius Saccas. He undertook several journeys, one to Rome, where he heard a sermon of St. *Hippolytus, and one to Arabia. When, in 215, troubles broke out in Alexandria in connexion with a visit of the Emp. Caracalla, he went to Palestine, where he was asked to preach by the Bps. of *Caesarea and *Aelia. As he was only a layman, this was regarded as a breach of the Alexandrian ecclesiastical discipline, in consequence of which he was recalled by his bishop, Demetrius. From c. 218 to 230 he devoted himself almost without interruption to literary activities. In 230 he went again to Palestine, where he was ordained priest by the same bishops who had invited him to preach on his previous visit. As a consequence Bp. Demetrius deprived him of his chair and deposed him from the priesthood, not, as later opponents asserted, for doctrinal offences, but because of the irregularity of his ordination. Origen left Alexandria and found a refuge at Caesarea (231), where he established a school which soon became famous, and where he continued his literary work and devoted himself to preaching. In 250, in the persecution of *Decius, he was imprisoned and subjected to prolonged torture, which he survived only a few years.

Origen was a very fertile author. Many of his writings have perished and most of the others survive only in fragments or in Latin translations. The main reasons for this almost complete loss of the originals are the later condemnation of his teaching and the exorbitant length and diffusiveness of his works. His chief work on Biblical criticism is his famous '*Hexapla' (q.v.). Among his many exegetical works are scholia on Exod., Lev., and Num., commentaries on almost all the books of the Bible, most of which survive only in small fragments, and many homilies, which are among the oldest examples of Christian preaching. Large portions of the Commentaries on Mt. and Jn., however, have been preserved, as well as considerable sections (in *Rufinus's Lat. trans.) of those on the Song of Solomon and Romans. Substantial sections of the Gk. original of the commentaries on Rom. and Ex., and a homily on 1 Kgs, were discovered at Toura, near Cairo.

The most important of Origen's theological works is the 'De Principiis' (Περὶ Ἀρχῶν), which covers a wide range of doctrinal topics in four books treating of God and the heavenly beings, of man and the material world, of free-will and its consequences, and of Holy Scripture. The original text has almost completely disappeared, and the work is extant only in the not very reliable Latin translation of Rufinus and the more faithful, but fragmentary, rendering of St. *Jerome. Of his other theological works nearly all are lost. His two ascetical works, 'Exhortation to Martyrdom', written during the persecution of Maximin in 235, and 'On Prayer', were much read in antiquity. He also wrote an important apologetic work against *Celsus (q.v.).

Origen was essentially a Biblical scholar whose thought was nourished on Scripture, the inspiration and integrity of which he affirmed esp. against the *Marcionites. He recognized a triple sense, literal, moral, and allegorical, of which he preferred the last. He justified this choice on many grounds, esp. the contention that the whole universe is pervaded with symbols and types of the invisible world. All things had a double aspect, one corporeal and sensible, which is accessible to all, the other spiritual and mystical, known only to the perfect. This led him to distinguish between two classes of Christians: the simple, who have to be satisfied with faith in Christ crucified, and the perfect, who ascend beyond this to the contemplation of the Word dwelling with the Father.

The point of departure of Origen's doctrinal teaching was faith in the unity of God, who is altogether transcendent. This unity in its fullest form is understood of God the Father. But the threefold nature of the godhead is also affirmed. The Son is eternally generated from the Father and manifests all His attributes. The Holy Ghost is also eternal, though His role in Origen's scheme of thought is far from clear and Origen is uncertain about His nature and His relation to the Father and to the Son. Origen's philosophical presuppositions ensure that for him the Son can be divine only in a lesser sense than the Father; the Son is θεός (god), but only the Father is αὐτόθεος (absolute God, God in himself). In his 'Treatise on Prayer' he taught that prayer ought to be addressed only to the Father through the Son. Yet his teaching and his faith are strongly positive with respect to the Son: He belongs eternally to the godhead: He is perfect mirror of the Father's goodness, love, truth, and all His other attributes, reflecting them in assimilable form to all the rest of the creation. Moreover in the more popular style of the homilies he himself addresses his prayers directly to Christ.

His philosophical speculations often issued in audacious theories, though, in the absence of the original texts, it is not always easy to say whether he held them as certain or merely stated them as hypotheses, or even simply repeated the ideas of other thinkers. He affirmed that creation was eternal in the belief that without an existing world God would have been inactive and not omnipotent. He held Him to be finite, because if He were infinite He could not think Himself. Among his most controverted theories was his teaching on souls and their destiny. All spirits were created equal, but through the exercise of their free-will they developed in hierarchical order and some fell into sin and so became either demons or souls, imprisoned in bodies. Death does not finally decide the fate of the soul, which may turn into a demon or an angel. This ascent and descent goes on uninterruptedly until the final '*Apocatastasis' (q.v.) when all creatures, even the devil, will be saved. There is also a strong current of mysticism in Origen. He held that true knowledge was the participation of the purified soul in the Wisdom of the Word and a way towards Deification and union with Christ. In the course of the disputes on *Origenism (q.v.) his teaching has often been misrepresented, and owing to the loss of the originals of most of his works, a satisfactory reconstruction of his authentic thought is not always possible.

The earliest printed editions were confined to Origen's Lat. works. Greek works ed. P. D. *Huet, Bp. of Avranches (2 vols., fol., Rouen, 1668; with important introd., still valuable, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xvii, 633–1284). The best complete ed. (without, however, the *Hexapla fragments) is still that of the *Maurist, C. de La Rue, O.S.B., 4 vols., fol., Paris, 1733–59 (vol. iv completed by his nephew, C. Vincent de La Rue, O.S.B.); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xi–xvii. Modern crit. ed. of separate texts in G.C.S., incl. Cont. Celsum (ed. P. Koetschau, 1899), Comm. in Jn. (ed. E. Preuschen, 1903), De Principiis (ed. P. Koetschau, 1913), Comm. in Matt. (ed. E. Klostermann–E. Benz–L. Früchtel, 1933–55), Hom. in Luc. (ed. M. Rauer, 1930; ed. 2, 1959); also, with Fr. tr., of Hom. in Jos., by A. Jaubert (S.C., lxxi; 1960), Hom. in Luc., by H. Crouzel, S.J., et al. (ib., lxxxvii; 1962), Comm. in Jn., by Cécile Blanc (ib., cxx, clvii, ccxxii, &c., 1966 ff.), and Contra Celsum by M. Borret, S.J. (ib., cxxxii, cxxxvi, cxlvii, cl, ccxxvii, 1967–76). R. Cadiou, Commentaires inédits des psaumes (1936). Text of Origen's 'Dialogue with Heracleides', discovered in 1941 on Toura papyrus, ed. J. Scherer (Publications de la Société Fouad Ier de Papyrologie. Textes et Documents, ix; Cairo, 1949; repr., with Fr. tr., S.C., lxvii; 1960). The '*Philocalia' (excerpts from Origen, collected by St. Gregory Nazianzen and St. Basil), ed. J. A. Robinson, Cambridge, 1893. For the Tractatus Origenis, see s.v. Eng. tr. (incomplete) of his collected works in A.N.C.L. Modern translations of Contra Celsum by H. Chadwick (Cambridge, 1953), of De Principiis by G. W. Butterworth (London, 1936), of De Oratione by E. G. Jay (ib., 1954), of De Oratione and Exhortatio ad Martyrium by J. J. O'Meara (A.C.W. xix; 1954), of De Oratione by J. É. L. Oulton and of 'Exhortatio ad Martyrium' and 'Dialogue with Heracleides' by H. Chadwick in Alexandrian Christianity (Library of Christian Classics, ii; 1954), pp. 169–458, incl. introd.; of Commentary and Homilies on the Song of Songs by R. P. Lawson (A.C.W., xxvi; 1957), and of Philocalia by G. Lewis (Edinburgh, 1911). Fr. tr. of Homm. on Ex. (S.C., xvi; 1947), Homm. on Numbers (ib., xxix; 1951), of Homm. on Cant. (ib., xxxvii; 1954).

Studies on Origen's life and work as a whole by E. R. Redepenning (2 vols., Bonn, 1841–6), E. de Faye (3 vols., Paris, 1923–8), J. Daniélou, S.J. (Paris, 1948; Eng. tr., 1955). R. Cadiou, Introduction au système d'Origène (1932); id., La Jeunesse d'Origène (1935). W. Völker, Das Vollkommenheitsideal des Origenes (1931); Hal Koch, Pronoia und Paideusis. Studien über Origenes und sein Verhältniss zum Platonismus (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, xxii; 1934); A. Lieske, Die Theologie der Logosmystik bei Origenes (1938). H. Crouzel, Théologie de l'image de Dieu chez Origène (Théologie, xxxiv; 1956); id., Origène et la 'connaissance mystique' (Museum Lessianum, section théologique, lxvi; 1961), and other works of this author; Marguerite Harl, Origène et la fonction révélatrice du Verbe Incarné (Patristica Sorbonensia, ii; 1958). P. Nemeshegyi, S.J., Paternité de Dieu chez Origène (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série 4, ii; 1960). B. Drewery, Origen and the Doctrine of Grace (1960). A. *Harnack, Der kirchengeschichtliche Ertrag der exegetischen Arbeiten des Origenes (T.U., xlii, Hft. 3; 1918). H. de Lubac, S.J., Histoire et esprit. L'Intelligence des Écritures d'après Origène (1950). R. P. C. Hanson, Origen's Doctrine of Tradition (1954); id., Allegory and Event. A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture (1959). N. R. M. de Lange, Origen and the Jews (1976). H. Crouzel, Bibliographie critique d'Origène (Instrumenta Patristica, viii; 1971). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 96–

194; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 197–209. Important art. by B. F. *Westcott in D.C.B., iv (1887; but art. dated 1882), 96–142. E. Preuschen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 467–88; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1489–1565. See also bibl. to Alexandrian Theology, Celsus, Hexapla.

ORIGENISM. The group of theories enunciated by, or attributed to, *Origen (q.v.). Among Origen's earliest opponents was *Methodius of Olympus, who rejected esp. his teaching on the pre-existence of souls and his denial of the identity between the mortal and the resurrection bodies. In the 4th cent. the attacks of the Anti-Origenists were directed mainly against the Trinitarian doctrine of the 'De Principiis'. He was further accused of teaching *metempsychosis and of interpreting the Scriptures only allegorically. But his supporters were also numerous. The martyr St. *Pamphilus wrote in his defence, and later, Sts. *Athanasius, *Basil, and *Gregory of Nazianzus esteemed him highly, and St. *Didymus endeavoured to prove his Trinitarian orthodoxy. The first great controversy was inaugurated by St. *Epiphanius (between c. 375 and 377), who, in his 64th heresy, gives a very one-sided account of Origen's doctrines. Epiphanius's attack was taken up by St. *Jerome. Having first been an ardent defender of Origen, Jerome changed his views in 395, on the occasion of a visit of Epiphanius to *Jerusalem, and attempted to obtain a condemnation of Origen from its bishop, John. In this he failed, and John even obtained a sentence of exile against Jerome from the secular authorities, which, however, was not carried out. For a time John and Jerome were reconciled through the good offices of *Theophilus of Alexandria, at that time an adherent of Origen. The peace was interrupted when, in 398, *Rufinus published in Rome his Latin translation of the 'De Principiis', in the preface of which he referred to Jerome's former Origenistic leanings. The controversy reached its climax when, in 400, a Council at Alexandria convoked by Theophilus, who had become an opponent, condemned Origenism. Pope Anastasius I and the Bps. of Palestine and Syria adhered to the condemnation, and Theophilus continued his campaign. In his Festal Letter of 402 he called Origen the 'hydra of heresies' and he expelled from their monasteries the famous '*Tall Brothers' (q.v.) and other supporters of Origenism, who found refuge with St. *Chrysostom at *Constantinople.

The controversy flared up again in the 6th cent., being described in detail in the 'Life of St. Sabas' by *Cyril of Scythopolis. Origenism had been propagated esp. in the New Laura, nr. Jerusalem, whose monks had separated from the Great Laura, but it found adherents also in the latter, and c. 542 it had strong partisans throughout Palestine. Its Palestinian opponents, however, obtained from the Emp. *Justinian the famous letter to Mennas, Patr. of Constantinople, in which Origen is numbered among the most pernicious heretics. At the Emperor's command a Council was convoked at Constantinople in 543, and an edict drawn up in accordance with Justinian's views giving a long list of Origenistic errors and their refutation, which was signed by Pope *Vigilius and the E. patriarchs. The Origenist monks at Jerusalem split into two parties: the Isochrists, who held that at the Apocatastasis all men would become equal to Christ, and the Protoctists, who seem to have regarded the soul of Christ not as equal to the other souls but as the most excellent of creatures. These latter, after renouncing the doctrine of the pre-existence of souls, made common cause with the orthodox against the Isochrists. The Origenistic controversy was ended by the Second Council of *Constantinople (553), when Origen's teaching was condemned, though it is uncertain whether the Council examined his case afresh or simply adhered to the decision of the synods of 543. All the bishops submitted except Alexander of Abila, who was deposed.

L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria, Theognostus, Pierius and Peter. A Study in the Early History of Origenism and Anti-Origenism (1908); K. Holl, 'Die Zeitfolge des ersten origenistischen Streits' in Sb. (Berl.), 1916, pp. 226–55, repr. in Gesammelte Aufsätze, ii (1928), pp. 310–35. F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert und das fünfte allgemeine Konzil (1899). A. Guillaumont, Les 'Képhalaia Gnostica' d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens (Patristica Sorbonensia, v; 1962). A. W. W. D. [prob. A. W. W. Dale] in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 142–56; N. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 489–93; A. d'Alès in Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique (ed. 4 by A. d'Alès), iii (1926), cols. 1228–58, s.v. 'Origénisme', with bibl.; G. Fritz in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1565–88, s.v. 'Origénisme'.

ORIGINAL RIGHTEOUSNESS (Justitia Originalis). Acc. to Catholic theology, God's gratuitous impartation to man of perfect rectitude in his original condition before the *Fall. The state of Original Righteousness in which man was first created is held to have included freedom from concupiscence, bodily immortality and impassibility, and happiness.

ORIGINAL SIN. In Christian theology, the state of sin in which mankind has been held captive since the *Fall (q.v.). Catholic theologians hold that its essential element is the loss of sanctifying grace. (It is also held by RCs that the BVM was by a special dispensation preserved from the stain of original sin: see Immaculate Conception.)

The Scriptural foundation of the doctrine is the Pauline teaching that 'through one man [i.e. Adam] sin entered into the world', so that 'by the trespass of the one the many died' (cf. Rom. 5. 12–21). The doctrine, the significance of which was obscured by other preoccupations in the age of the *Apostolic Fathers and the *Apologists, began to be developed in the struggle against the *Gnostic errors by St. *Irenaeus. As against the dualist systems of the heretics, he defended the teaching that evil came into the world through the sin of Adam. *Origen has the conception of man's fallen state, but in him it is bound up with speculations on the prenatal sins of souls. *Methodius, while attacking Origen's more speculative theses, argued that the full effects of the Fall could be seen in man's inherent corruptibility (φθορά). St. *Athanasius in his treatise 'De Incarnatione' anticipated later developments by teaching that the chief result of the sin of Adam, which consisted in the abuse of his liberty, was the loss of the grace of conformity to the image of God, by which he and his descendants were reduced to their natural condition (εἰς τὸ κατὰ φύσιν). *Didymus of Alexandria taught clearly the transmission of the stain of Original Sin by natural propagation, and St. *Chrysostom is explicit on the consequences of concupiscence. *Theodore of Mopsuestia seems to have been the only Greek Father of the first four cents. who explicitly denied it, placing sin entirely in the will without allowing for the possibility of a moral stain on human nature.

To try to answer whether the Greek Fathers taught the transmission of the guilt itself or only of its consequences is fruitless. At most their language is vague, and the precise formulation of the doctrine was reserved to the West. Here *Tertullian, St. *Cyprian, and St. *Ambrose taught the solidarity of the whole human race with Adam not only in the consequences of his sin but in the sin itself, which is transmitted through natural generation, and the so-called '*Ambrosiaster' found its Scriptural proof in Rom. 5. 12, translating ἐφ' ᾧ by in quo and referring it to Adam, 'in whom all have sinned'. In this he was followed by St. *Augustine, who in his 'Quaestiones ad Simplicianum' (396–7) and other pre-Pelagian writings taught that Adam's guilt is transmitted to his descendants by concupiscence, thus making of humanity a massa damnata and much enfeebling, though not destroying, the freedom of the will. In the struggle against Pelagianism the principles of the Augustinian doctrine were confirmed by many Councils, esp. the Second of *Orange (529).

With the existence of Original Sin firmly established the medieval theologians were particularly occupied with its nature and transmission. St. *Anselm of Canterbury was the first to open up new ways of thought, in which he was followed by the great 13th cent. Schoolmen. He defines Original Sin as the 'privation of the righteousness which every man ought to possess', thus separating it from concupiscence, with which the disciples of St. Augustine had often identified it. It is transmitted by generation, because the whole human race was present in Adam seminaliter. His ideas were not immediately taken up. Whilst *Abelard was condemned by the Council of Sens (1140) for refusing to recognize Original Sin as guilt, other 12th cent. theologians, e.g. *Peter Lombard, identified it with concupiscence. This latter conception was rejected in the next century by *Alexander of Hales and *Albert the Great, who distinguish a formal element, viz. privation of original righteousness, from the material element of concupiscence. All of them hold that it is transmitted by the concupiscence accompanying the conjugal act. St. *Thomas, who treated the subject five times (esp. in 'De Malo' and in 'Summa Theol.' II (1), qq. lxxxi–lxxxiv), brought in a new element by distinguishing, in the state of Adam before the Fall, 'pure nature' (pura naturalia) from the supernatural gifts which perfected it. Hence Original Sin consists in the loss of these supernatural privileges which had directed man to his supernatural end and enabled him to keep his inferior powers in submission to reason, a rectitude not natural to a being compounded of soul and body such as man. This conception entails a more optimistic view of man than that of St. Augustine and his successors in that it leaves to the reason, will, and passions of fallen man their natural powers. Acc. to St. Thomas, Original Sin is transmitted not as the personal fault of Adam but as a state of human nature, yet constituting a fault inasmuch as all men are regarded as members of one great organism of which Adam was the first mover. Thus through his sin his descendants incur a culpability similar to that of the hand which executes a murder, moved by the human will. The instrument of transmission is generation, regardless of the accompanying concupiscence.

The Thomist synthesis was not at once accepted everywhere. The old rigorous Augustinianism persisted among the *Franciscans, and esp. in the religious family of St. Augustine, whereas, on the other hand, the rationalist tendencies of Abelard were voiced by others who denied the guilt (reatus culpae), recognizing only its punitive consequences (reatus poenae). The more prominent Scholastics, however, such as *Duns Scotus, *William of Ockham, and their disciples, accepted the Thomist principles, but while defining Original Sin exclusively as lack of original righteousness (carentia justitiae originalis debitae), tended to eliminate the element of concupiscence.

In the subsequent controversy with the Reformers the teaching was made increasingly precise; to the exaggerated pessimism of M. *Luther and J. *Calvin, who equated Original Sin with concupiscence and affirmed that it completely destroyed liberty and persisted even after baptism, the Council of *Trent opposed the teaching of the Schoolmen, without, however, pronouncing on points still disputed by Catholic theologians. In re-stating the doctrine of St. Thomas, Dominic *Soto eliminated the element of concupiscence altogether from the definition and identified Original Sin with the loss of sanctifying grace. His views had a far-reaching influence, being accepted by authorities like F. *Suarez, R. *Bellarmine, and the *Salmanticenses, and are again widely discussed to-day. But the official decisions of the RC Church followed the teaching of the older theologians. In his condemnation of M. *Baius (1567), Pope *Pius V, going beyond Trent, sanctioned the Thomist distinction between nature and supernature in the state of Paradise, condemned the identification of Original Sin with concupiscence, and admitted the possibility of the right use of the freedom of the will in the unbaptized. In the 17th and 18th cents. the *Jesuits developed the doctrine along the lines of moderated optimism traced by the Schoolmen, whereas the French theologians of *Jansenist leanings, such as the circle of *Port Royal and J. B. *Bossuet, inclined towards the old Augustinian pessimism. From the 18th cent. onwards the influence of rationalism and natural science has tended to attenuate the dogma of Original Sin, which has been given up almost completely by Liberal Protestantism and Modernism, but is strongly reaffirmed by modern RC orthodox theologians and, in its Protestant version, esp. by K. *Barth and his school. Since the Second *Vatican Council the renewed emphasis on the corporate aspect of sin and redemption has had implications for the understanding of Original Sin. The teaching of St. Thomas Aquinas that Original Sin attaches to the nature of a man rather than to his person may be seen as providing a foundation for this line of thought, as his nature, in contrast to his incommunicable person, is what he has in common with the whole human race.

F. R. Tennant, The Origin and Propagation of Sin (Hulsean Lectures for 1901–2; 1902); id., The Sources of the Doctrines of the Fall and Original Sin (1903); id., The Concept of Sin (1912), passim; C. W. Formby, The Unveiling of the Fall (1923); N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (Bampton Lectures for 1924; 1927), with formularies repr., pp. 537–50. E. *Brunner, Der Mensch im Widerspruch (1937; Eng. tr., Man in Revolt, 1939). P. De Rosa, Christ and Original Sin (1967). L. Ligier, Péché d'Adam et péché du monde (Théologie, xliii and xlviii; 1960–1). K. Barth, Christus und Adam nach Röm. 5 (Theologische Studien, xxxv; 1952; Eng. tr., Scottish Journal of Theology, Occasional Papers, v; 1956). A. M. Dubarle, O.P., Le Péché originel dans l'Écriture (Lectio Divina, xx; 1958; Eng. tr., 1964). J. Gross, Entstehungsgeschichte der Erbsündendogmas von der Bibel bis Augustinus (Geschichte des Erbsündendogmas, i; 1960). H. Rondet, S.J., Le Péché originel dans la tradition patristique et théologique (1967; Eng. tr., 1972). R. M. Martin (ed.), La Controverse sur le péché originel au début du XIVe siècle. Textes inédits (S.S.L., x; 1930). A. Gaudel–M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 275–623, s.v. 'Péché originel', with bibl. cols. 605 f. and 623; S. Lyonnet, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 509–67, s.v. 'Péché (4)'; K. *Rahner in Sacramentum Mundi, iv (1969), pp. 328–34, s.v. See also bibl. to Augustine, St., Sin, and commentaries on Romans, Epistle to the.

ORNAMENTS RUBRIC, The. The common name for the ruling, inserted in the 1559 BCP at the beginning of the order for Morning and Evening Prayer, that the ornaments of the Church and the ministers should be those in use 'by the authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King *Edward VI'. The Act of *Uniformity of 1559, to which this Book was attached, added the qualification that such use should continue 'until other order shall be therein taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty, with the advice of her commissioners appointed and authorized under the great seal of England for causes ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this realm'. The interpretation of this rubric has been a vexed question since the 16th cent. The only explicit statement about the ornaments is contained in the Prayer Book of 1549, but it was long disputed whether the reference was to the provisions of this book. The *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have twice ruled that Abp. M. *Parker's *Advertisements' (1566) were the 'other order' foreshadowed in the Act; but their ruling has been widely contested, esp. since the Advertisements had no statutory authority, nor can they be regarded as overriding the later re-enactment of the rubric by Parliament in 1604 and 1662. The whole question seems too complex to permit of any certain solution.

The Ornaments of the Church and its Ministers. Convocation of Canterbury. Upper House Report No. 416. Report of the sub-committee appointed February 1907 to draw up a Historical Memorandum on the Ornaments of the Church and its Ministers (1908). J. T. Micklethwaite, The Ornaments of the Rubric (*Alcuin Club Tracts, i;, 1897). W. H. *Frere in D.E.C.H., pp. 425–7.

OROSIUS (early 5th cent.), Paulus Orosius, historian. A native of Braga, who as a young presbyter had written a 'Commonitorium' against *Priscillianism, in 414 he migrated to Africa, where he was befriended by St. *Augustine. Shortly afterwards Augustine sent him to Palestine to enlist St. *Jerome in the fight against *Pelagianism. When, however, the Council of Diospolis (in Palestine) of 415 upheld Pelagius, Orosius composed a 'Liber apologeticus', defending himself against the charge of heresy. In 416 he returned to the W. and in 417 undertook, at Augustine's request and in the spirit of his 'City of God', a 'Historia adversus Paganos' which, by insisting on both the providential control of history and the calamities of the past, attacked the pagan complaint that Rome's troubles were due to her abandonment of the gods. Books I–II reach to the foundation of Rome, III–VI to the birth of Christ, and VII to A.D. 417. Only after A.D. 378 is it of any real historical value.

Ed. by S. Haverkamp (Leyden, 1738), repr. with additions in J. P. Migne, PL, xxxi. Modern ed. of 'Historia' and 'Liber Apologeticus' by C. Zangemeister (C.S.E.L., vol. v, 1882; 'Historia' revised for Teub. ed., 1889); of 'Commonitorium' by G. Schepss (C.S.E.L., vol. xviii, 1889, pp. 149–57). Eng. tr. of 'Historia' and 'Liber Apologeticus' by I. W. Raymond (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, xxvi; 1936). J. Svennung, Orosiana (Upsala, 1922); H. Hagendahl, Orosius und Justinus (Göteborg, 1941). B. Lacroix, O.P., Orose et ses idées (Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'Études médiévales, xviii; 1965), with bibl. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 529–33; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 231 f. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1602–11, s.v. 'Orose'.

ORSISIUS, St. (d. c. 380), also 'Orsiesius' and 'Horsi-isi', ascetic and Abbot of Tabenne (an island in the Nile). He was a disciple and close friend of St. *Pachomius, who set him over the monastery of Chenobosci. On Pachomius's death (348) he succeeded him (after a few days' interval under Petronius) as *hegumen of Tabenne. The opposition to his strict rule led him to resign in favour of St. Theodore (d. 368), but he resumed the oversight of the monastery on the latter's death. He wrote a 'Doctrina de Institutione Monachorum' (probably in Coptic), which was commended by *Gennadius; it survives in a Latin version, probably the work of St. *Jerome. He was warmly supported by St. *Athanasius, from whom two letters to Orsisius survive. Feast day, 15 June.

Jerome's text of 'Doctrina de Institutione Monachorum' repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xl, 869–94; also in PL, ciii, 453–76. Text of Athanasius's two Epp. to Orsisius in id., PG, xxvi, 977–80. P. Ladeuze, Étude sur le cénobitisme pakhômien (Diss., Louvain, 1898), esp. pp. 155–255. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 85–7.

ORTHODOX CHURCH, The, also termed the 'Eastern', 'Greek', or 'Greco-Russian Church'. A family of Churches, situated mainly in E. Europe: each member Church is independent in its internal administration, but all share the same faith and are in communion with one another, acknowledging the honorary primacy of the Patriarch of *Constantinople (or *Oecumenical Patriarch).

At present the Orthodox communion consists of the following self-governing or *autocephalous Churches: (1) The four ancient *Patriarchates of Constantinople, *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Jerusalem; (2) five Patriarchates of more recent origin: *Russia, *Serbia, *Rumania, *Bulgaria, and *Georgia; (3) the Orthodox Churches of *Cyprus, *Greece, Czechoslovakia, *Poland, and *Albania. To these must be added certain 'autonomous' Churches, which are self-governing in most respects but do not enjoy full independence: *Finland, *China, *Japan, and the monastery of *Sinai. An autocephalous Orthodox Church of America is in process of formation.

Historically, what is today known as 'the Orthodox Church' developed from the Church of the E. Roman or Byzantine Empire; the predominant cultural influence upon Orthodoxy has thus been that of Greece. The Orthodox world first became limited on its E. side in consequence of the *Monophysite and *Nestorian schisms during the 5th–6th centuries; as a result the Patriarchates of Alexandria and Antioch were greatly reduced in numbers and importance. (It should be noted that the Monophysite Churches, such as the Syrian *Jacobite, the *Coptic, and the *Ethiopian, also call themselves by the title 'Orthodox'.) Then from the 9th century onwards (see Photius) there came an increasing estrangement between the two great sees of Rome and Constantinople, and this led eventually to an open and lasting schism. The final breach between Greek and Latin Christendom is usually assigned to the year 1054 (see Michael Cerularius), but in fact the schism was a gradual and complicated process, and its beginning cannot be exactly dated. The chief doctrinal points at issue between the two sides were the Papal claims and the *Filioque; on the level of liturgical usage great tension was caused by the question of 'azymes' (see Azymites; Bread, leavened and unleavened). Attempts at reconciliation were made by the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1438–9), but the Unions proclaimed at these two councils were never accepted by the Orthodox East at large and remained ineffective.

Bounded, as a result of these schisms, first on the eastern and subsequently on the western side, the Orthodox Church expanded to the north. A great missionary advance was inaugurated in the middle of the 9th century by Sts. *Cyril and Methodius, the 'Apostles of the Slavs'. Bulgaria, Serbia, and subsequently Russia were converted to the Christian faith largely through the efforts of Byzantine missionaries. In due course these Slav countries acquired national Churches of their own, independent of the Mother Church of Constantinople. Since the fall of Constantinople to the Turks (1453), the Church of Russia has been the largest and most influential member of the Orthodox communion, but the Oecumenical Patriarch continues to retain his honorary primacy. During the past five centuries Orthodoxy has suffered severely from outward oppression and persecution, first under the Ottoman Empire, and more recently under Communism.

The faith of the Orthodox Church is based primarily upon the dogmatic definitions of the seven *Oecumenical Councils. (The Orthodox do not recognize as Oecumenical any Council held since the Second of *Nicaea in 787.) Certain later Councils, although 'local' and not Oecumenical in character, have also exercised a decisive influence upon the expression of Orthodox doctrine. Most important among these are the Councils of Constantinople in 1341 and 1351, which endorsed the teaching of *Hesychasm concerning the divine light; and the Councils of *Jassy (1642) and *Jerusalem (1672), which clarified Orthodox doctrine regarding the Eucharist and the nature of the Church. Orthodox teaching on many points has never been explicitly formulated by any Council, but is found embodied in the liturgical texts used by the Church in worship.

Orthodox theology attaches the utmost significance to the role of Councils in the life of the Church. The highest outward authority, alike in doctrine and discipline, is the Oecumenical Council, attended by representatives from the whole Church. Orthodox are willing to regard the Pope of Rome as the chief bishop in Christendom, but they look on him merely as the 'first among equals' in the episcopal college, and do not assign to him a universal supremacy of jurisdiction. While deeply respecting the episcopal and priestly office, Orthodoxy also allows an active place to the laity, who are often prominent as theologians and preachers, and even at times as spiritual directors (see Staretz).

The Orthodox Church acknowledges the *seven sacraments, or 'mysteries' as they are termed: but Orthodox theologians attach less importance than RCs to the precise number seven, and no rigid distinction is drawn between these seven sacraments and other sacramental actions, such as monastic profession, the great blessing of the waters at Epiphany, burial of the dead, the anointing of a monarch, etc. Baptism is performed by immersion; chrismation (confirmation) is administered by the priest immediately after baptism, and children are taken to communion from infancy. The bread and wine in the Eucharist are considered to become, at the consecration, the true and real Body and Blood of Christ: some Orthodox employ the term *transubstantiation, but others prefer to avoid it. Devout Orthodox normally communicate only four or five times a year, after careful preparation and confession; but in Greece and other parts of the Orthodox world there is now a movement in favour of more frequent communion. Services are in principle held in the language of the people, but in many places (e.g. Greece and Russia) an archaic form is used, not the modern vernacular.

The veneration of *icons plays a notable part in Orthodox worship, both private and public. Prayers to the Mother of God and the saints are common in the liturgical texts. Orthodox believe in the bodily *Assumption of the BVM—although it has never been formally defined or proclaimed as a dogma—but they usually deny the RC teaching on her *Immaculate Conception. Intercession for the departed is much emphasized in Orthodox spirituality, but the doctrine of *purgatory, as developed in RCism, is not accepted.

Monasteries have been highly influential throughout Orthodox history; since the 10th cent. the chief monastic centre has been Mount *Athos. From the 6th cent. onwards bishops in the E. have been drawn from the ranks of the monastic clergy. Parish priests, on the other hand, are generally married; the Orthodox Church has never insisted upon the *celibacy of the clergy. Any candidate for ordination, however, who wishes to marry, must do so before becoming deacon; and if a priest's wife dies, he cannot marry again.

Largely isolated from the West for many centuries, the Orthodox Church has now become better known in W. Europe and America, chiefly as a result of large-scale emigration by Greeks and Russians during the past fifty years. (There are today at least 250,000 Orthodox in Britain, and some 3½ million in the United States.) The Patriarchate of Constantinople has from the start firmly supported the *Ecumenical Movement. Most other Orthodox Churches have been more reserved in their attitude towards reunion work, but virtually all of them are now represented on the *World Council of Churches. In recent years —and particularly since 1961—the Orthodox have begun to develop close and friendly contacts with the Monophysite or 'non-Chalcedonian' Churches.

Modern introductions by Orthodox authors include N. [M.] Zernov, Eastern Christendom. A Study of the Origin and Development of the Eastern Orthodox Church [1961]; J. Meyendorff, L'Église orthodoxe hier et aujourd'hui (1960; Eng. tr., 1962); T. [R.] Ware, The Orthodox Church (Harmondsworth, 1963).

Older studies: L. *Allatius, De ecclesiae occidentalis atque orientalis perpetua consensione (Cologne, 1648); P. *Rycaut, The Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches, Anno Christi, 1678 (1679); T. Smith, An Account of the Greek Church (1680); J. *Covel, Some Account of the Present Greek Church, with Reflections on their Present Doctrine and Discipline; Particularly in the Eucharist, and the Rest of their Seven Pretended Sacraments (Cambridge, 1722); J. G. King, The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church, in Russia (1772); J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church (5 vols., 1847–73); W. *Palmer, Dissertations on Subjects relating to the 'Orthodox' or 'Eastern-Catholic' Communion (1853); A. P. *Stanley, Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church (1861); B. J. Kidd, The Churches of Eastern Christendom from A.D. 451 to the Present Time (1927).

On theology and spirituality, V. *Lossky, Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944; Eng. tr., 1957); P. Sherrard, The Greek East and the Latin West (1959); F. [S. B.] Gavin, Some Aspects of Contemporary Greek Orthodox Thought (Hale Lectures for 1922: Milwaukee–London, 1923); S. *Bulgakov, The Orthodox Church (Eng. tr., 1935); P. Evdokimov, L'Orthodoxie (Bibliothèque Théologique, 1959); F. *Heiler, Urkirche und Ostkirche (Munich, 1937). St. *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (ed.), Φιλοκαλία τῶν ἱερῶν νηπτικῶν (Venice, 1782; Eng. tr., 1979 ff.). C. Androutsos, Δογματικὴ τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Ἀνατολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (Athens, 1907); J. N. Karmiris, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, i–ii (Athens, 1952–3); M. Jugie, A.A., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissidentium, i–iv (Paris, 1926–31).

Canon Law: St. Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain, Πηδάλιον . . . ἤτοι ἅπαντες οἱ ἱεροί, καὶ θεῖοι κανόνες (Leipzig, 1800; Eng. tr., The Rudder, Chicago, 1957).

Worship: C. A. *Swainson (ed.), The Greek Liturgies (Cambridge, 1884); S. Salaville, A.A., Liturgies orientales. Notions générales, éléments principaux (1932; Eng. tr., 1938); A. Schmemann, Introduction to Liturgical Theology (Eng. tr. from Russian, 1966); E. Hammerschmidt and others, Symbolik des orthodoxen und orientalischen Christentums (Symbolik der Religionen, x, xiv; Stuttgart, 1962–6). E. Mercenier, O.S.B., and others, La Prière des églises de rite byzantin (vol. i, Chevetogne, 1937, ed. 3, 1975; vol. ii in 2 parts, 1939–48, ed. 2 of part 1, 1953; vol. iii, 1972). J. *Goar, Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; ed. 2, Venice, 1730).

The question of reunion: W. J. *Birkbeck, Russia and the English Church during the last fifty years, i (all publd., 1895); J. A. Douglas, The Relations of the Anglican Churches with Eastern-Orthodox (1921); V. T. Istavridis, Ὀρθοδοξία καὶ Ἀγγλικανισμός (1963; Eng. tr., 1966). J. Kotsonis, Ἡ κανονικὴ ἄποψις περὶ τῆς ἐπικοινωνίας μετὰ τῶν ἑτεροδόξων (Intercommunio) (1957); M. Fouyas, Orthodoxy, Roman Catholicism, and Anglicanism (1972).

ORTHODOXY. As a religious system, right belief, as contrasted with heresy. The word is used esp. of those Churches in E. Christendom which are in communion with *Constantinople, collectively described in ancient times as the 'holy, orthodox, catholic, apostolic Eastern Church' (ἡ ἁγία ὀρθόδοξος καθολικὴ ἀποστολικὴ ἀνατολικὴ ἐκκλησία) to distinguish it from such separated bodies as the *Nestorians and *Jacobites. See also previous and following entries.

ORTHODOXY, Feast of. The feast established in 843 to celebrate the final downfall of the *Iconoclastic party and the restoration of the icons. Since then it has been solemnly kept in the E. Church both by Orthodox and *Uniats on the First Sunday of *Lent, and has come to commemorate the triumph of the right faith not only over Iconoclasm but over all heresies. A list of heretics, and another of several saints and pious emperors, is read out in the *Synodicon, and old triumphal hymns, composed by martyrs of the Iconoclast persecution, are chanted during the procession of crosses and icons.

ORTHROS (Gk. ὄρθρος, 'dawn'). The name in the E. Church for the morning *office which corresponds to *Mattins and *Lauds in the West.

ORTLIEB OF STRASSBURG (c. A.D. 1200), founder of an ascetic sect ('Ortlibarii'). Very little is known of him beyond the fact that his teaching was condemned by *Innocent III. His followers, who appealed against the tenets of the external Church to the inner authority of the Spirit, maintained the eternity of the world and unorthodox doctrines of the Trinity and the Incarnation. Their teaching had affinities with that of the *Waldenses and *Cathari; but in neither case has historic contact been established.

The principal source for the doctrines ascribed to the sect is the 'Anonymus of Passau contra Waldenses', pr. in the Bibliotheca Maxima Veterum Patrum, xxv (Lyons, 1677), pp. 262–77. W. Preger, Geschichte der deutschen Mystik im Mittelalter, i (1874), pp. 191–6; H. Reuter, Geschichte der religiösen Aufklärung im Mittelalter, ii (1877), pp. 237–40, with notes, p. 375 f. S. M. Deutsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 498–501, with bibl.; H. Grundmann in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1256 f., s.v. 'Ortlieber'. See also works cited under Joachim of Fiore and Waldenses.

O SALUTARIS HOSTIA (Lat., 'O Saving Victim'). The last two verses of St. *Thomas Aquinas's hymn 'Verbum Supernum Prodiens', written c. 1263 for use on the Feast of *Corpus Christi. In the RC Church it is frequently sung during the service of *Benediction. There are many English translations of the complete hymn, and still more of its two concluding verses, the most familiar being E. *Caswall's 'O Saving Victim! opening wide The gate of Heav'n to man below! &c.' (1849).

Crit. ed. of text by C. M. Dreves (ed.), Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, ii (A.H.M.A., 1; 1907), p. 588 f. Raby, p. 409 f., with bibl. p. 483.

O SAPIENTIA (Lat., 'O Wisdom'). The initial apostrophe of the first of the *O Antiphons. The words appeared in the *Sarum calendar as an entry against 16 Dec. Omitted from the calendar of the BCP of 1549, owing to the discontinuance of the Antiphons, they were restored in 1661. In non-English calendars the date is 17 Dec.

OSCULATORIUM. See Pax Brede.

OSIANDER, ANDREAS (1498–1552), Reformation theologian. Ordained priest at Eichstätt in 1520, he joined the *Lutherans in 1522 and took part in the *Marburg Colloquy of 1529 and the *Augsburg Diet of 1530. He was also one of the signatories of the *Schmalkaldic Articles (1537). In 1549 he became professor at Königsberg, where he published his De Justificatione (1550). A violent and bitter controversialist, he opposed Luther's doctrine of *justification by faith, maintaining that justification was not a mere imputation of Christ's merits, but a substantial transference of His righteousness to the believer. His other writings include a revised edition of the *Vulgate and a 'Harmony' of the Gospels, the first of its kind. His niece, Margaret Osiander, became the wife of T. *Cranmer (1532).

Study by W. Möller (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der lutherischen Kirche, ed. I. Hartmann and others, v; Elberfeld, 1870). E. Hirsch, Die Theologie des Andreas Osiander und ihre geschichtlichen Voraussetzungen (1919); G. Seebass, Das reformatorische Werk des Andreas Osiander (Einzelarbeiten aus der Kirchengeschichte Bayerns, xliv; 1967). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, ii (1935), pp. 107–9 (Nos. 16668–16712a). W. Müller–P. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 501–9, s.v.

OSMUND, St. (d. 1099), Bp. of *Salisbury. Norman by race, he followed William I to England. Later he became his chancellor and assisted with the compilation of Domesday Book. As a reward for his services he was created Bp. of Salisbury in 1078. An energetic and practical organizer, he gave the new see its cathedral (at *Sarum; not the present one at Salisbury which dates from 1225) and the constitution of its cathedral chapter, which became the model of many other foundations. Acc. to some authorities he also instituted the Sarum liturgical use; but the definitive formation of this is probably not older than Richard *Poore (dean and bishop, 1198–1228). He was canonized on 1 Jan. 1457. Feast day, 4 Dec.; in the Anglican S. African calendar, 16 July.

Vetus Registrum Sarisberiense alias dictum S. Osmundi Episcopi, ed. W. H. Rich Jones (2 vols., Rolls Series, 1883–1884). A. R. Malden (ed.), The Canonization of Saint Osmund from the Manuscript Records in the Muniment Room of Salisbury Cathedral . . . with introduction and notes (Wilts Record Society, 1901). The main chronicle sources include *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum Anglorum, esp. ii. 83 and v. 267 and 269 (ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton, Rolls Series, 1870, pp. 183 f., 424 f., and 428 f.), and *Simeon of Durham, Auctarium de Injusta Vexatione Willelmi I, xix, and id., Historia Regum, cixxiii and clxxxi (Opera, ed. T. Arnold, 2 vols., Rolls Series, 1882–5, vol. i, p. 193, and vol. ii, pp. 219 and 230). Modern Life by W. J. Torrance (London [c. 1919]). See also bibl. s.v. 'Salisbury, Use of'.

OSSERVATORE ROMANO (Ital., 'The Roman Observer'). A newspaper founded in 1861 and owned by the *Vatican. It publishes the official text and authorized Italian translation of *encyclicals and other papal documents, the pope's speeches, appointments of bishops, the announcements of consistories and various other official acts. In addition to news of religious interest, it publishes reports and comments on political and social events. It is issued daily except on Sundays.

OSSIUS. Probably the correct spelling of the name of the celebrated 4th cent. Bp. of Cordova commonly known as *Hosius (q.v.).

C. H. *Turner, 'Ossius (Hosius) of Cordova', in J.T.S., xii (1910–11), pp. 275–7.

OSTENSORY (Lat. ostensorium). A receptacle for showing objects of religious devotion to the people. The word is now commonly restricted to the *monstrance (q.v.), used for the exposition of the Blessed Sacrament; but in earlier times it was applied to other vessels with a transparent casing, e.g. those for the exposition of relics.

OSTIAN WAY, The (Lat. Via Ostiensis). The ancient road which led from Rome to the seaport of Ostia, 14 miles distant at the mouth of the Tiber on its left bank. On its west side, about two miles from the centre of Rome, lies the church of *St. Paul's outside the Walls. This site has been held to be the resting-place of the remains of St. *Paul at least from the end of the 2nd cent., for the presbyter *Gaius (c. A.D. 200) recorded that the tombs (τρόπαια) of Sts. Peter and Paul were located (respectively) in his day at the *Vatican and on the Ostian Way. The Bp. of Ostia is the senior cardinal-bishop.

* Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., ii. 25. 6–7.

OSTIARIUS. See Doorkeeper.

OSWALD, St. (c. 605–42), King of Northumbria, and martyr. The son of Ethelfrith, King of Northumbria, Oswald was forced to flee to Scotland when Edwin seized the kingdom after his father's death in 616. He was converted later to the Christian faith by the monks of St. *Columba at *Iona. Edwin was killed in 633; Oswald returned in 634 and, after erecting a wooden cross on the battlefield and commanding his soldiers to pray, defeated the British king, Caedwallon, at Heavenfield, near Hexham. Encouraged by his victory, he began to establish Christianity in his kingdom and appealed to Iona for missionaries. St. *Aidan was sent for the work, and having been given the isle of *Lindisfarne as his see, by his gentleness and with the co-operation of the king, who often acted as his interpreter, achieved the conversion of a large part of the country. In the eighth year of his reign Oswald was killed in battle by the pagan Penda of Mercia, who mutilated his body. His head, which was deposited in St. *Cuthbert's coffin in 875, was found at *Durham in 1827. He was honoured as a martyr not only by the English but also on the Continent throughout the Middle Ages. Feast day, 5 Aug.; in some places, 8 or 9 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., ii. 5, 14, 20, iii. 1–3, 6 f., 9–14, 23 f., and iv. 14; notes to ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), esp. pp. 86, 116, 119–24, 138, 140 f., 152–65. 11th cent. life by Drogo pr. in AA.SS., Aug. II (1735), pp. 94–103; life by Reginald of Durham (1162), most of which is pr. among the works of *Simeon of Durham ed. T. Arnold, i (R.S., 1882), pp. 326–85, with introd., p. xli. Elizabeth W. Grierson, The Story of the Northumbrian Saints (1913), pp. 3–41. B. Colgrave in C. F. Battiscombe (ed.), The Relics of Saint Cuthbert (1956), pp. 116–18, with further reff. J. Raine in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 163 f., s.v. 'Oswald (1)'; W. Hunt in D.N.B., xlii (1895), pp. 321–3, with further reff.

OSWALD, St. (d. 992), Abp. of *York. A Dane by birth, Oswald studied in the household of his uncle, Abp. *Odo of Canterbury, and later at the Benedictine monastery of *Fleury, where he was ordained. He returned to England in 959 and in 962 was consecrated Bp. of *Worcester by St. *Dunstan. He took an active part in the reform of abuses and established many monasteries, the most famous of which was the abbey of Ramsey in Cambridgeshire. In 972 he was made Abp. of York, though he retained the see of Worcester in order to promote his monastic reforms. The latter were seriously endangered by Elfhere, earl of Mercia, who broke up many of Oswald's communities, though he spared Ramsey. Besides reforming the morals of his clergy, he took pains to improve their theological knowledge and himself wrote two treatises and several synodal decrees. Feast day, 28 Feb.

The principal authority is an anonymous life, written within ten years of St. Oswald's death, prob. by a monk of Ramsey; it survives in only one MS. (Brit. Mus. Cotton MS., Nero E. i); ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, i (R.S., 1879), pp. 399–475, with introd., pp. lxv–lxvii. The life by *Eadmer, pr. ib., ii (R.S., 1886), pp. 1–59, adds a certain amount of information. Other lives, of little historical value, ib., pp. 60–97 and 489–512, with introd., pp. ix–xi. J. Armitage *Robinson, St. Oswald and the Church of Worcester (British Academy Supplementary Papers, v; 1919); E. H. Pearce, St. Oswald of Worcester and the Church of York (York Minster Historical Tracts, iv [1928]). [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B., The Monastic Order in England (1949), pp. 40–56. E. John, 'St. Oswald and the Tenth Century Reformation' in J.E.H., ix (1958), pp. 159–172. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 323–5, with further reff.

OSWIN, St. (d. 651), Anglo-Saxon King. After the murder of his father, Osric, King of Deira, by Caedwallon (634), Oswin was taken to Wessex for safety. Returning on the death of his kinsman St. *Oswald, King of Northumbria (642), he became King of Deira, while Bernicia, the northern part of Northumbria, passed under the rule of Oswald's brother, Oswy. When open conflict broke out with Oswy, Oswin took refuge at Gilling, near Richmond, N. Yorks, where he was murdered. He was a devout Christian and a close friend of St. *Aidan. His tomb at Gilling became a place of pilgrimage until, in the Danish invasions, it was removed to Tynemouth. Feast day, 20 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 14; notes to ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), p. 163 f. There is a 12th cent. life by a monk of *St. Albans resident at Tynemouth, based on the account of Bede, but with additional material on St. Oswin's translation and the miracles connected with him; it is mostly pr. in J. Raine (ed.), Miscellanea Biographica (Surtees Society, viii; 1838), pp. 1–59. Life [by F. W. *Faber] in The Lives of the English Saints [written at the suggestion of J. H. *Newman], 1844; ed. A. W. Hutton, iv (1901), pp. 240–70. J. Raine in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 165, s.v. 'Oswin (1)'; C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xliii (1895), p. 332 f.; W. Hunt in D.E.C.H., p. 428 f., s.v.

OTHILIA, St. See Odilia, St.

OTTLEY, ROBERT LAWRENCE (1856–1933), Anglican theologian. A native of Richmond in Yorkshire, he was educated at King's School, *Canterbury, and Pembroke College, *Oxford. After being vice-principal of Cuddesdon College from 1886 to 1890 he became Dean of Divinity at Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1890, and principal of Pusey House in 1893. From 1897 to 1903 he held the living of Winterbourne Bassett and from 1903 till his death he was Canon of Christ Church and Regius professor of pastoral theology at Oxford. His writings cover a wide range of theological subjects. In 1893 he issued a study of *Lancelot Andrewes and in 1896 The Doctrine of the Incarnation, a student's manual outlining the history of the doctrine from NT times to M. *Luther and R. *Hooker, with particular emphasis on the patristic period. In 1897 he published his *Bampton Lectures on Aspects of the Old Testament, in 1898 The Hebrew Prophets, and in 1905 The Religion of Israel. Christian Ideas and Ideals (1909), designed esp. for candidates for holy orders, contains much practical advice on the formation of the Christian character; and this theme was also taken up in The Rule of Life and Love (1913) and Christian Morals (1915).

OTTO, St. (1062/3–1139), Bp. of Bamberg, the 'Apostle of Pomerania'. Born of a noble family of Swabia, he entered the service of the Emp. *Henry IV before 1090, and was made chancellor in 1101. In 1102 Henry named him Bp. of Bamberg, but in 1105 he joined the party of Henry V and was consecrated in Rome in the following year. Though in the *Investiture controversy his sympathies were with the Pope, he tried to maintain a neutral attitude which led to his temporary suspension by Adalbert of Mainz at the Synod of Fritzlar in 1118. At the Congress of Würzburg (1121) he endeavoured to restore peace, which was finally obtained by the Concordat of *Worms in 1122. Throughout these years Otto devoted himself to the reform of his diocese, taking part in the foundation of over 20 monasteries and completing the cathedral. In 1124 he went on a missionary journey to Pomerania at the instigation of Duke Boleslas III of Poland, who had obtained the Pomeranians' promise to accept the Christian faith as a condition of the peace made between the two peoples in 1120. Having gained the confidence of the Pomeranians by his liberality, he converted many of the most important towns and, on a second journey four years later, also the greater part of the nobles, though a bishopric was not established till after his death. He was canonized in 1189. Feast day, 30 Sept.; in the Roman Martyrology, 2 July.

A. Ussermann, Episcopatus Bambergensis (Germania Sacra [iv], St. Blasien, 1802), pp. 50–95; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxiii. 1267–1314, with correspondence and other materials, cols. 1313–80. Lives by Ebo, monk of St. Michael's, Bamberg (d. 1163), and Herbord, also monk of St. Michael's, Bamberg (d. 1168; 'Dialogus de Vita Ottonis'), ed. R. Knöpke in M.G.H., Scriptores, xii (1856), pp. 774–83 [the latter, however, not complete text]; life by a monk of Prüfening (prob. slightly later than the other two), also ed. id., ib., pp. 883–903; other material, pp. 903–19, and introd., pp. 721–46. Full text of life by Herbord ed. O. Holder-Egger, ib., xv (pt. 2; 1888), pp. 1151–69. The Prüfening Vita also ed. A. Hofmeister (Denkmäler der Pommerschen Geschichte, i; 1924). B.H.L., ii, pp. 923–6 (Nos. 6392–47). Eng. tr. of Books II and III of life by Ebo, with additional matter from life by Herbord, by C. H. Robinson (S.P.C.K. Translations of Christian Literature, Series 2, Latin Texts; 1920, not wholly satisfactory). Modern life by G. Juritsch (Gotha, 1889). E. von Guttenberg, Das Bistum Bamberg, i (Germania Sacra, II. i; 1937), pp. 115–38. K. Löffler in C.E., xi (1911), p. 353 f., s.v.; F. J. Schmale in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1302 f., s.v.

OTTO OF FREISING (c. 1114/15–58), Bp. of Freising. He was the son of Leopold III, Margrave of the Eastern March (Austria), and of Agnes, daughter of the Emp. *Henry IV, and thus *Frederick Barbarossa's uncle. He studied at Paris under *Hugh of St.-Victor, and perhaps also at *Reims and *Chartres. His masters must have included *Gilbert de la Porrée, whose personality and teaching made a lasting impression on him. He entered the Cistercian abbey of Morimond in Champagne c. 1132 and became abbot c. 1136. Appointed Bp. of Freising in 1138, he reformed his diocese, took part in the Second *Crusade (1147–1148), and was one of the first theologians to introduce the study of *Aristotle into Germany. He is chiefly important as a historian, his principal works being 'Chronicon seu historia de duabus civitatibus' (1143–6) and 'Gesta Friderici' (1156–8). In the former he modified St. *Augustine's conception of the 'two cities', seeing their union in the Catholic Church as the continuation of the Roman Empire. In the latter he described the history of the first part of Barbarossa's reign, largely on the basis of original documents.

Crit. ed. of his Chronicon by A. Hofmeister (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, Hanover–Berlin, 1912); Gesta Friderici ed. G. Waitz–B. de Simson (ib., 1912) and by F. J. Schmale (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, xvii; 1965), with introd. and bibl. Eng. tr. of the Chronicon by C. C. Mierow (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies [ix]; 1928) and of the Gesta by id. (ib., xlix; 1953). A. Weissthanner, 'Regesten des Freisinger Bischofs Otto I' in Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, xiv (1958), pp. 151–222, with other articles on Otto in the same issue. A. Hofmeister, 'Studien über Otto von Freising' in N.A., xxxvii (1912), pp. 99–161, 633–768. Other studies on different aspects by J. Hashagen (Leipzig, 1900), J. Schmidlin (Freiburg i.Br., 1906), P. Brezzi in Bullettino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo e Archivio Muratoriano, liv (1939), pp. 130–328, E. F. Otto, J. Spörl, and J. Koch repr. from various sources in W. Lammers (ed.), Geschichtsdenken und Geschichtsbild im Mittelalter (Wege der Forschung, xxi; Darmstadt, 1961), pp. 247–77 and 298–349. Otto von Freising. Gedenkgabe zu seinem 800. Todesjahr, ed. J. A. Fischer (Freising, 1958). Manitius, iii (1931), pp. 376–88.

OTTO, RUDOLF (1869–1937), Protestant theologian. From 1904 to 1917 he was professor of systematic theology at Breslau, and from 1917 to 1929 at Marburg. His analysis of religion in Das Heilige (1917; Eng. tr., The Idea of the Holy, 1923) rested on a wide knowledge of *comparative religion, contemporary oriental thought, and the natural sciences. Its central theme was insistence on the part played by the *numinous in the religious consciousness. Despite its professed emphasis on the 'non-rational' moments in religion, Otto's understanding of religion had close affinities with that of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (whose Reden über die Religion he edited, 1899). His other writings include West-östliche Mystik (1926; Eng. tr., 1932) and Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934; Eng. tr., The Kingdom of God and the Son of Man, 1938).

H. Frick (ed.), Rudolf Otto Festgruss (1931); Rudolf Otto Gedächtnisfeier (1938). R. F. Davidson, Rudolf Otto's Interpretation of Religion (Princeton, 1947). A. Paus, Religiöser Erkenntnisgrund. Herkunft und Wesen der Aprioritheorie Rudolf Ottos (Leiden, 1966).

OUEN, St. (c. 610–84) (also Audoin or Owen), Abp. of Rouen. He was a native of Sancy, nr. Soissons, and spent part of his youth at the court of King Clothaire II. There he became the friend of St. *Eligius, whose Life (no longer extant in its orig. form) may be his work. Under Dagobert I he became referendary or chancellor. In 634 he founded a monastery called Resbac, the present Rebais, but was prevented from becoming a monk there by King Dagobert. After being ordained priest he was consecrated Bp. of Rouen in 641. He encouraged scholarship, founded many monasteries, and fought simony and other serious abuses. He was employed on several political missions by the Merovingian kings, among them the arrangement of a peace between the Franks of Austrasia and Neustria. He is remembered esp. by the famous church dedicated to him at Rouen, where his body was interred. Feast day, 24 Aug.

Crit. ed. of the life of St. Eligius ascribed to St. Ouen, ed. B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iv (1902), pp. 634–741. The earliest life of St. Ouen, dating from the 8th cent., ed. W. Levison, ib., v (1910), pp. 536–67; earlier ed. in AA.SS., Aug. IV (1739), pp. 805–9; one 9th cent. life is also pr. ib., pp. 810–19; a second was first ed. E. P. Savage in Anal. Boll., v (1886), pp. 67–146. Good modern study by E. Vacandard (Paris, 1902).

OUR FATHER. See Lord's Prayer.

OVERALL, JOHN (1560–1619), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Cambridge, where in 1581 he became a Fellow of Trinity College and from 1595 to 1607 was the Regius professor of divinity. In 1602 he succeeded A. *Nowell as Dean of St. Paul's, and in 1605 became *prolocutor of the Lower House of *Convocation. He was consecrated Bp. of *Coventry and Lichfield in 1614 and translated to Norwich in 1618. The section on the Sacraments in the BCP Catechism was drawn up by Overall on the basis of that in Nowell's 'Small Catechism' of 1572. He was also responsible for a set of canons on the relations of Church and state, compiled in 1606 with the *Gunpowder Plot in view and known as his 'Convocation Book'. *James I, however, prohibited its acceptance by Convocation, as Overall defended teaching on the *Divine right of kings which appeared to justify a successful rebellion and permit the institution of 'new forms of government' (can. 28); and the publication of the Book was delayed till 1690. Overall also assisted in the translation of the AV Bible.

His 'Convocation Book', orig. ed. W. *Sancroft, London, 1690, was repr. in the L.A.C.T., 1844. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xlii (1895), pp. 375–7; B. Blaxland in D.E.C.H., p. 429, s.v.

OVERBECK, FRANZ (1837–1905), Protestant theologian. He was born in St. Petersburg and taught Church History at Jena (1864–70) and 'critical theology' at Basle (1870–97). Holding that the Christian Gospel was wholly eschatological and world-negating, he came to reject completely historic Christianity and expounded in his lectures a 'secular Church history' (profane Kirchengeschichte) in which the course of ecclesiastical history was understood as a radical departure from the original revelation in Scripture. Liberal and apologetic theology were also alike essentially un-Christian. In his critique of immanental religious notions Overbeck has exercised considerable influence on the modern *Dialectical Theology. His writings include Über die Christlichkeit unserer heutigen Theologie (1873; ed. 2, 1903), Studien zur Geschichte der alten Kirche (1875), and Christentum und Kultur (posthumous, 1919). He was for many years a close friend of F. *Nietzsche.

Correspondence with F. Nietzsche ed. R. Oehler–C. A. Bernoulli (Leipzig, 1916). C. A. Bernoulli, Franz Overbeck und Friedrich Nietzsche. Eine Freundschaft (2 vols., Jena, 1908; with list of writings, i, pp. 439–44). E. Staehlin–M .Tetz (edd.), Overbeckiana. Übersicht über den Franz-Overbeck-Nachlass der Universitätsbibliothek Basel (Studien zur Geschichte der Wissenschaften in Basel, xii–xiii; 1962). K. *Barth, Die Theologie und die Kirche. Gesammelte Vorträge, ii (1928), pp. 1–25. E. Vischer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxiv (1913), pp. 295–302; P. Vielhauser in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 1750–52, s.v.

OVERSEAS AND OTHER CLERGY (MINISTRY AND ORDINATION) MEASURE, 1967. This Measure supersedes the *Colonial Clergy Act of 1874. Its main object is to regulate the exercise of their ministry within the provinces of *Canterbury and *York by clergymen ordained by bishops of Churches in communion with the C of E whose jurisdiction lies outside these two provinces, or by bishops of Churches whose Orders are recognized by the C of E. Permission to officiate, either temporary or permanent, may be given by the Abp. of Canterbury or York.

OVERSEAS MISSIONARY FELLOWSHIP. See China Inland Mission.

OWEN, JOHN (1616–83), *Puritan divine and statesman. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, but ejected in 1637 under W. *Laud's Statutes. In 1642 he obtained the living of Fordham in Essex, and in 1647 became pastor of Coggeshall. Originally a strong *Calvinist, he had come to believe with J. *Milton that 'new presbyter was but old priest writ large', and took up the more tolerant Independent position. His preaching won the ear of O. *Cromwell, who in 1651 made him dean of *Christ Church and in the following year vice-chancellor of the university. In 1654 he sat for a short time in Parliament, was one of Cromwell's *Triers and a member of the *Savoy Conference. The Restoration drove him to London, where he continued to preach and write until his death. He was a voluminous author, often in controversy with R. *Baxter, *Arminians, and *Anglicans, but always tolerant and fair. Many of his writings show deep spiritual insight and a firm grasp of NT Christianity.

Works ed. by T. Russell with memoir by W. Orme (21 vols., 1826) and by W. H. Goold with Life by A. Thomson (24 vols., 1850–55). J. *Moffatt, The Golden Book of John Owen (1904). Modern study by P. Toon (Exeter, 1971). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xlii (1895), pp. 424–8.

OXFORD. The ecclesiastical history of Oxford appears to begin with St. *Frideswide (d. 735), around whose shrine the town grew up. By the end of the 11th cent. there were secular canons at the Priory of St. Frideswide, who were replaced in the 12th cent. by *Augustinian canons. In 1129 Oseney Priory was founded outside the town, also for Augustinian canons, and in the latter half of the 13th cent. Rewley Abbey ('de regali loco') for *Cistercians. Throughout the Middle Ages Oxford was in the diocese of *Lincoln, but in 1542 *Henry VIII created the See of Oxford, selecting the suppressed Oseney Abbey as the cathedral church and appointing Robert King, the last abbot, as the (first) bishop. In 1546 the seat of the bishopric was transferred to King's (previously 'Cardinal') College, founded by T. *Wolsey around the St. Frideswide's Priory, which had been suppressed in 1524. The priory church then became the cathedral and the college was renamed '*Christ Church'. Since 1635 the bishop's official residence has been at the village of Cuddesdon, some six miles to the east of the city. Among notable recent bishops of Oxford have been S. *Wilberforce (1845–69), W. *Stubbs (1889–1901), F. *Paget (1901–11), C. *Gore (1911–19), T. B. *Strong (1925–37), and K. E. *Kirk (1937–54).

The origins of the university are also obscure. The traditional view that it was founded by *Alfred the Great rests on a manifestly forged passage, wrongly attributed to Asser's 'Life of Alfred'. The supposition, formerly popular, that it developed out of the monastic schools is also very unlikely. The university was probably in origin a secular foundation, whose beginnings go back to the latter half of the 12th cent. H. *Rashdall maintained that the creation of a Studium Generale at Oxford is to be ascribed to an edict of 1167, which forbade students to go abroad, and that it was modelled on the Studium at Paris. In 1214 the first reference to a chancellor is found; he derived his authority from the Bp. of Lincoln (in whose diocese Oxford then was). By c. 1230 Oxford was already a famous university. Between 1220 and 1270 came the Friars—*Black, *Grey, *White, and *Austin. Out of the boarding-houses under religious and secular control emerged the colleges, the first of which were Merton (founded outside Oxford, and removed to its present site, 1264) and Balliol (founded in 1263). In 1571 the university was incorporated by Act of Parliament, and from then until 1871 subscription to the *Thirty-nine Articles was required from all its members. In the 17th cent. its statutes were radically remodelled by W. *Laud; the next (and still continuing) era of far-reaching changes began with the institution of the first Honours Examinations in 1800 and the Report of a Royal Commission in 1852. Except at certain permanent private Halls, religious tests no longer exist. The close and continuous links of the university with the life of the Church are shown by its connexion with early *Lollardy, the trials of T. *Cranmer, N. *Ridley, and H. *Latimer in the University Church of St. Mary (1555), the zeal of such men as J. *Fell and R. *South before and after the Restoration, the early history of the *Wesleys, and the development of the '*Oxford Movement' in the 19th century.

In modern times theology has ceased to hold a dominant position in Oxford, but important contributions were made to theological studies by such scholars as J. *Wordsworth, S. R. *Driver, H. B. *Swete, W. *Sanday, C. H. *Turner, H. J. White (d. 1934; see Vulgate), B. H. *Streeter, N. P. *Williams, R. H. *Lightfoot and G. R. Driver. In the field of Patristics, it was mainly the work of Oxford scholars which went into the production of the Patristic Greek Lexicon (q.v.), and Oxford has been the meeting-ground of the International *Patristic Conferences which have met since 1951.

For works on Oxford Cathedral see bibl. to Christ Church. On the University, H. C. Maxwell Lyte, A History of the University of Oxford from the Earliest Times to the Year 1530 (1886); C. E. Mallet, A History of the University of Oxford (3 vols., 1924–7); H. Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, iii (ed. F. M. Powicke–A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 1–273; V.C.H., Oxford, iii, ed. H. E. Salter–Mary Lobel (1954). City of Oxford (The Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, 1939). V. H. H. Green, Religion at Oxford and Cambridge (1964). [R. W. Chapman], Some Account of the Oxford University Press, 1468–1926 (1926). The 'Oxford Historical Society', founded 1884 for the publication of material on the history of the University and City and neighbourhood, has issued over 100 vols. A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford to A.D. 1500 (3 vols., 1957–9; supplementary vol., A.D. 1501 to 1540, 1974). See also bibl. to Bodleian Library.

OXFORD CONFERENCE (1937). The second Conference of the '*Life and Work' branch of the *Ecumenical Movement held at Oxford, 12–26 July 1937, under the general title of 'Church, Community, and State'. There were 425 delegates representing all the more important religious bodies except the RC Church and the German Evangelical Church (then under Nazi control). It was agreed to take steps for the fusion of the 'Life and Work' Movement with that of '*Faith and Order', which held a Conference at *Edinburgh

(q.v.) a week or two later. The first assembly of the united bodies was held in 1948 at *Amsterdam (q.v.). See also World Council of Churches.

The Report of the Conference, under the general title, 'The Church, Community, and State' series, comprised a preliminary volume on The Church and its Function in Society, by W. A. Visser 't Hooft–J. H. *Oldham (1937); The Christian Understanding of Man, by T. E. Jessop and others (1938); The Kingdom of God and History, by H. G. Wood and others (1938); The Christian Faith and the Common Life, by N. Ehrenström and others (1938); Church and Community, by K. S. Latourette and others (1938); Church, Community, and State in Relation to Education, by F. Clarke and others (1938); The Universal Church and the World of Nations, by the Marquess of Lothian and others (1938); and The Churches Survey their Task, with introd. by J. H. Oldham (1937).

'OXFORD GROUP'. The religious movement founded by F. N. D. *Buchman (q.v.). Returning to England in 1920, Buchman visited Cambridge and from there went to Oxford; in both places his evangelism made a deep impression on a number of undergraduates and, esp. after 1926, his following increased, particularly at Oxford, where he received support from some senior members of the University. In 1929 Buchman visited South Africa, with a group of followers, some of them Oxford men; here the movement became known locally as 'the Oxford Group', a name it adopted into general use. Despite opposition, esp. from members of Oxford University, it obtained legal incorporation under this name in 1939, though it was still often referred to as 'Buchmanism' or 'the Group Movement'. The most rapid spread of the movement in England was in the early thirties; its appeal in the first instance was to the professional and upper classes. In 1938 the '*Moral Rearmament' movement was launched under Buchman's leadership, and more attention was then paid to national and international questions, and the support of trade unionists and industrial workers was sought. International assemblies were held in 1946 and the following years at Caux in Switzerland. The movement has permanent administrative headquarters in Los Angeles, London and Caux and is active in Western democratic (but esp. English-speaking) countries generally.

Buchman, referred to inside the movement as 'Frank', was regarded as the leader and pioneer of a new and more authentic form of Christian life; his influence and that of his immediate associates was great. The movement supports some whole-time workers, but it has no regular ministry or meeting-places of a denominational type. It works through personal contact, the writings of Buchman and others (e.g. A. J. Russell, For Sinners Only (1932), and more recently the books of Peter Howard) and its own publications in pamphlet or magazine form. It owns the Westminster Theatre in London. It holds meetings and conferences (or 'house parties') either in its own buildings or in premises hired ad hoc.

The movement has met with considerable opposition both for its allegedly disingenuous use of the name 'Oxford' and on religious grounds, e.g. that the conversions it secured were spiritually unsound and often only temporary, that its 'sharing' and 'guidance' were pressed on converts indiscriminately without any real attempt at the cure of souls, and that its leaders were unqualified for the task they assumed. It was urged, however, that the Group presented Christianity in a language and manner which enabled it to reach many whom the Church failed to attract and the movement has won the more or less qualified support of some Anglican bishops and clergy.

Of Buchman's own writings (1937 and after, mostly of little documentary importance), Remaking the World (1947), a collection of speeches on Moral Rearmament with an account of the development of the movement, may be considered typical. Popular expositions of Group principles include J. C. Winslow, Why I believe in the Oxford Group, with foreword by F. Westcott, Metropolitan of India (1934); Peter Howard, Ideas have Legs (1945); id., That Man Frank Buchman (1946); id., Frank Buchman's Secret (1961); G. A. West (Bp. of Rangoon), The World that Works (1945). A good short statement is J. P. Thornton-Duesbery, The Oxford Group. A Brief Account of its Principles and Growth (1947). Views by outsiders, necessarily critical, are H. H. *Henson, The Group Movement (1933; ed. 2, 1934); R. H. S. Crossman (ed.), Oxford and the Groups (1934); T. [E. N.] Driberg, The Mystery of Moral Re-Armament. A Study of Frank Buchman and his Movement (1964). Also G. Williamson, Inside Buchmanism (1950). W. H. Clark, The Oxford Group. Its History and Significance (New York, 1951), with bibl.

OXFORD MOVEMENT, The. The movement (1833–45) within the C of E, centred at Oxford, which aimed at restoring the High Church ideals of the 17th cent. Several causes contributed to its growth. The progressive decline of Church life and the spread of 'Liberalism' in theology were causing grave misgivings among Churchmen; on the other hand, the works of C. *Lloyd and others, coupled with the Romantic Movement, had led to a new interest in many elements in primitive and medieval Christianity. Among the more immediate causes were the fear that the *Catholic Emancipation Act (1829) would lead many Anglicans into the RC Church, the anxiety occasioned by the passing of the Reform Bill (1832) and the plan to suppress ten Irish bishoprics. The latter proposal evoked from J. *Keble on 14 July 1833 a sermon delivered in the university pulpit at Oxford on '*National Apostasy', which is usually regarded as the beginning of the Movement.

Its chief object was the defence of the C of E as a Divine institution, of the doctrine of the Apostolic Succession, and of the BCP as a rule of faith. These aims were realized esp. through the famous Tracts for the Times*, begun by J. H. *Newman in 1833. The Movement, whose acknowledged leaders were Keble, Newman, and E. B. *Pusey, soon gained many influential supporters, among them R. H. *Froude, R. W. *Church, R. I. *Wilberforce, C. *Marriott, and I. *Williams. The liberal party in the University and the bishops, however, soon began to attack it; among its early opponents were T. *Arnold, R. *Whately, and R. D. *Hampden. Within the Movement itself there gradually arose a party which tended more and more towards submission to Rome. In 1841 Newman published his famous Tract 90, which was condemned by many bishops, and in 1842 he retired to Littlemore.

After W. G. *Ward's book, The Ideal of a Christian Church (1844), had been censured by the Convocation of Oxford on 13 Feb. 1845, Ward, F. W. *Faber, and several of their circle were received into the Church of Rome, as was Newman in the autumn of the same year. But the majority remained in the C of E, and their views began to gain ground. In 1850 the *Gorham Case (q.v.) again brought about a number of conversions to RCism, among them being those of H. E. Manning and R. I. Wilberforce. The Movement, however, continued to spread despite the hostility of the press and of the government, which chose the majority of bishops from the ranks of its opponents. Its influence was exercised esp. in the sphere of worship and ceremonial, which came to play a much larger part in the life of the C of E than in the 18th and early 19th cents. At the same time the dignity and responsibility of the ministry were emphasized, not only in the directly religious but also in the social sphere, the slum settlements being among its most notable achievements. The institution of religious community life, too, is due to the Oxford Movement, being a natural result of the ideals it propagated. As a movement with close associations with a university it made considerable contributions to scholarship. In 1836 Keble, Newman, and Pusey began to edit the Library of the Fathers, and a few years later the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology was begun as a corpus of *Caroline theology. The principles of the Movement, esp. its concern for a higher standard of worship, gradually influenced not only all groups within the C of E but even many Non-conformists, and have decisively affected the pattern of contemporary Church life in Great Britain and beyond.

There is an immense literature. Besides the writings, tracts, and innumerable controversial pamphlets of the leaders and their opponents, the biographies supply much primary material. The three fundamental historical sources are J. H. Newman, Apologia pro Vita Sua (1864); H. P. *Liddon, Life of E. B. Pusey (4 vols., 1893–7), and R. W. Church, The Oxford Movement. Twelve Years, 1833–45 (1891). A contemporary account (partly written in self-defence) is W. *Palmer, A Narrative of Events connected with the Publication of Tracts for the Times (1843). Collections of contemporary material by [W.] O. Chadwick (ed.), The Mind of the Oxford Movement (1960), and E. R. Fairweather (ed.), The Oxford Movement (New York, 1964). Modern studies include S. Baring-Gould, The Church Revival (1914); S. L. Ollard, A Short History of the Oxford Movement (1915); E. A. *Knox, The Tractarian Movement (1933). P. Thureau-Dangin, La Renaissance catholique en Angleterre au XIXe siècle (3 vols., 1899–1906; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1914); C. P. S. Clarke, The Oxford Movement and After (1932); C. Dawson, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (1933). A. Härdelin, The Tractarian Understanding of the Eucharist (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis: Studia Historico-Ecclesiastica Upsaliensia, viii; 1965). W. H. Hutton in A. W. Ward–A. R. Waller (edd.), The Cambridge History of English Literature, xii (1915), pp. 253–78, with bibl., pp. 453–63; further bibl. by S. L. Ollard in C.B.E.L., iii, pp. 853–60. Id. in D.E.C.H., pp. 429–32; id. in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 585–9.

OXYRHYNCHUS PAPYRI. The collection of many thousand fragments of papyri, found from 1897 onwards at Oxyrhynchus, some 10 miles west of the Nile, near the modern Behnesa. It includes, besides documents of all kinds ranging from the late 1st cent. B.C. to the 7th cent. A.D., some very substantial fragments of Greek and Latin literary texts, both known and unknown, and of Christian literature. Among the last named the most celebrated are the MSS. (Nos. 1, 654 and 655) of '*Sayings of Jesus' (see Gospel of *Thomas); they also include, besides fragments of books of the Old and New Testaments and of apocryphal works, a letter of *Peter, the martyred Bp. of Alexandria (d. 311), found together with an ecclesiastical calendar of A.D. 535–6 (No. 1357), and a Christian hymn with musical notation which is the oldest known piece of ecclesiastical music (No. 1786; late 3rd cent.).

The papyri are being ed., with Eng. tr. and notes, by B. P. Grenfell, A. S. Hunt, and others for the Egypt Exploration Fund, later Society, Graeco-Roman Branch (London, 1898 ff. [vols. i–xlvii to date (1980)]. B. P. Grenfell–A. S. Hunt (edd.), Hellenica Oxyrhynchia (O.C.T., 1909). See also works cited under Papyrology.

OZANAM, ANTOINE FRÉDÉRIC (1813–53), French scholar and founder of the 'Society of St. *Vincent de Paul'. At the age of 18 he wrote a pamphlet against C. H. *Saint-Simon, and two years later, while studying law and literature at Paris, founded the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, an association of laymen for personal service among the poor. During his early years in Paris Ozanam made the acquaintance of R. de *Chateaubriand, C. F. R. *Montalembert, H. D. *Lacordaire, and other progressive thinkers who became closely associated with the revival of Catholicism in France. In 1839 he published a brilliant thesis on the philosophy of *Dante; in 1841 he became assistant professor of foreign literature at the Sorbonne, and simultaneously professor of rhetoric at the Collège Stanislas, then under the direction of A. J. A. *Gratry; and in 1844 full professor at the Sorbonne. On the basis of research in Italian libraries (1846) he edited some early *Franciscan poetry (Poètes franciscains en Italie au XIIIe siècle, 1852), of much importance for the history of medieval spirituality. Together with Lacordaire he founded the Ère nouvelle in 1848 as a mouthpiece of their ideas on Catholic socialism. In the next year he published his influential work La Civilisation chrétienne chez les Francs, in which he described the influence of the Church on the education of the Teutonic tribes. A keen advocate of political liberalism, he became the subject of many sharp attacks, and spent his last years away from public life in work for his Society and in travelling.

Collected ed. of his works, with preface signed J. J. Ampère, 8 vols., Paris, '1855', with life by H. D. Lacordaire (dated '1856') appended to vol. i [separate pagination]. Letters ed. L. Celier and others (Tournai, 1960 ff.). Life by his brother, Charles Alphonse Ozanam (Paris, 1879). The numerous other studies include those of Kathleen O'Meara (Edinburgh, 1876), C. Huit (Lyons, 1888), L. Baunard (Paris, 1913; Eng. tr., Dublin [1925]), G. Goyau and others (Paris, 1913; to mark the centenary of his birth), J. C. Crighton (Port-Louis, 1933), H. L. Hughes (London, 1933), the vol. issued by the Society of St. Vincent de Paul to mark the centenary of its foundation, L'Œuvre d'Ozanam à travers le monde, 1833–1933 (1933) and L. Celier (Paris, 1956). L. Curnier, La Jeunesse de Frédéric Ozanam (1888). J. Méjecaze, Fr. Ozanam et l'Église catholique (Toulouse thesis; Lyons–Paris, 1932); id., Fr. Ozanam et les lettres (ib., 1932). A. Foucault, La Société de Saint Vincent de Paul. Histoire de cent ans (1933). E. Galopin, Essai de bibliographie chronologique sur Antoine Frédéric Ozanam (1933). C. Constantin in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1706–10, s.v.; L. Chierotti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, ix (1967), cols. 1329–34, s.v.

P

'P'. The name usually given since J. *Wellhausen to the 'Priestly source' held to be embodied in the *Pentateuch. It is marked by a preponderance in general of ritual and ceremonial enactments over narrative (e.g. Exod. 25–40, Lev. (all), and much of Num.), a formal style sometimes rising to great dignity (e.g. the first account of Creation, Gen. 1. 1 – 2. 3), the avoidance of anthropomorphic or primitive ideas of God (contrast, e.g., Gen. 3. 8, '*J'), the use of a historical framework linking events by means of genealogies, and the inclusion of numerical information (sometimes historically improbable, e.g. Exod. 12. 37). The priesthood is conceived as limited to the sons of *Aaron (not merely to the tribe of Levi as in '*D'), and the divine Name 'Jehovah' (Yahweh; AV and RV 'the LORD') is used only after its revelation to Moses, related in Exod. 3 (not from the first as in 'J'). Although it is increasingly agreed that 'P' embodies earlier matter, in its final redaction it is the latest element in the Pentateuch, dating from the Exile (586–538 B.C.) or after, though not later than c. 400 B.C. See also Holiness, Code of.

For bibl. see Pentateuch.

PACELLI, EUGENIO. See Pius XII, Pope.

PACEM IN TERRIS. The encyclical letter of Pope *John XXIII, dated 11 Apr. 1963, on peace among nations based on truth, justice, charity and liberty, and the right organization of society. Addressed to all men of good will, it includes a plea for the ending of the arms race, a ban on nuclear weapons, and eventual disarmament.

Text in A.A.S., lv (1963), pp. 257–304. J. Newman, Principles of Peace. A Commentary on John XXIII's Pacem in Terris (Oxford, 1964).

PACHOMIUS, St. (c. 290 – 346), the founder of *coenobitic Christian monasticism. Fact and legend are much confused in the many late Lives. Pachomius was born, apparently in Upper Egypt, of pagan parents, served as an army conscript and, after his discharge in 313, was converted and baptized. Having been for a time the disciple of the hermit Palaemon, he founded a monastery at Tabennisi in the Thebaid near the Nile about 320, where his fame soon attracted large numbers of monks. Other foundations followed and at his death Pachomius was ruling as abbot-general over nine monasteries for men and two for women. His 'Rule', which influenced St. *Basil, John *Cassian, St. *Caesarius of Arles, and St. *Benedict, survives complete only in Latin translation. Feast day, 14 May in W.; 15 May in E.; in the Coptic Church, 9 May.

Coptic works ed. T. H. Lefort, Œuvres de S. Pachôme et de ses disciples (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Coptici, xxiii; 1956), pp. 1–36, with Fr. tr., ib., xxiv (1956), pp. 1–37. His Rule and eleven letters tr. into Lat. by St. *Jerome (PL, xxiii, 61–99); crit. ed. by A. Boon, O.S.B., Pachomiana Latina (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., vii; 1932), pp. 13–101, with Coptic fragments and Gk. excerpts of the Rule, ed. T. H. Lefort, pp. 155–82; Rule also ed. P. B. Albers (Florilegium Patristicum, xvi; Bonn, 1923). Lives in Greek ed. F. Halkin, S.J. (Subsidia Hagiographica, xix; 1932); Fr. tr. of 'Vita Prima', with full introd., by A. J. Festugière, O.P., Les Moines d'Orient, iv. 2 (1965); Coptic lives ed. T. H. Lefort (*Bohairic in C.S.C.O., Scriptores Coptici, Series tertia, vii; 1925; with Lat. tr., ib., 1936; *Sahidic, ib., viii; 1933; with Lat. tr., 1934). Fr. tr. of Coptic lives by L. T. Lefort, Les Vies coptes de saint Pachôme et de ses premiers successeurs (Bibliothèque du Muséon, xvi; 1943). Arabic life ed., with Fr. tr., by E. Amélineau, Histoire de saint Pakhôme et de ses communautés (Annales du Musée Guimet, xvii; 1889), pp. 335–711; Syriac life ed. P. Bedjan, Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, v (Paris, 1895), pp. 122–76; Lat. life, tr. from Gk. by *Dionysius Exiguus, ed. H. van Cranenburgh, O.S.B. (Subsidia Hagiographica, xlvi; 1969). There are also brief notices in *Palladius, Historia Lausiaca, 32, and *Sozomen, H.E., iii. 14. The considerable modern literature includes F. Ladeuze, Étude sur le cénobitisme pakhômien pendant le quatrième siècle et la première moitié du cinquième (1888); Pachomiana. Commémoration du XVIe centenaire de St. Pachôme l'Égyptien (348–1948). Texte des conférences prononcées à Alexandrie et au Caire et relation de la séance de clôture (Cairo, 1955). A. Veilleux, O.C.S.O., La Liturgie dans le cénobitisme pachômien au quatrième siècle (Studia Anselmiana, lvii; 1968). Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 262 f., with extensive bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xi (pt. 2; 1933), cols. 1807–31, s.v. 'Monachisme'; V. Monachino in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 511–14, s.v.

PACIAN, St. (4th cent.), Bp. of Barcelona. A Spaniard by birth, he warmly defended the Catholic doctrine of the forgiveness of sins against the *Novatianists, then a flourishing body in Spain. Besides three letters a short treatise, Paraenesis ad Poenitentiam, survives. Pacian is esp. remembered for the epigrammatic passage which occurs in one of his letters (Ep. i. 4), 'My name is Christian; my surname is Catholic' (Christianus mihi nomen est, catholicus vero cognomen). To his son, Flavius Dexter, who became pretorian prefect under Honorius, St. *Jerome dedicated his De Viris Illustribus. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Works first ed. by F. du Tillet (Paris, 1538), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xii, 1051–94. Modern edd. by P. H. Peyrot (Zwolle, 1896) and L. R. Fernández (Barcelona, 1958). A. Gruber, Studien zu Pacianus von Barcelona (1901; philological); R. Kauer, Studien zu Pacianus (1902). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 401–3; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 369 f., with bibl. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1718–21, s.v. 'Pacien'; G. Madoz, S.J., in E.C., ix (1952), col. 504 f.; K. Baus in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1332 f., both s.v., with further bibl.

PACIFISM. See War, Christian Attitude to.

PADRE. Popular designation of a chaplain in the Army, Navy, and Air Force and also used of all clergymen. Padre is the Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese for 'Father', and hence became a common title for a priest. The term is supposed to have been picked up by the British army in India.

PAEDOBAPTISM. See Infant Baptism.

PAENITEMINI. The opening word and hence the common name of the Apostolic Constitution of 17 Feb. 1966, which revised the rules of penitential observance in the RC Church. The days of *fasting were reduced to two: *Ash Wednesday or the first day of *Lent and *Good Friday. The penitential days were reduced to all Fridays (except when Holy Days of Obligation), Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent, and Good Friday, and episcopal conferences were empowered to vary these days and to substitute for the traditional *abstinence other forms of penance, esp. works of charity and piety.

Text in A.A.S., lviii (1966), pp. 177–98.

PAGET, FRANCIS (1851–1911), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at Shrewsbury and *Christ Church, Oxford, he became a Senior Student of Christ Church in 1873, Vicar of Bromsgrove in 1883, Regius professor of pastoral theology at Oxford in 1885, Dean of Christ Church in 1892, and Bp. of Oxford in 1901. He warmly supported the reinterpretation of Tractarian principles by the Lux Mundi group and himself contributed the essay on 'Sacraments' to the volume (1889). He also completed R. W. *Church's revision of J. *Keble's edition of R. *Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (1883–8) and wrote An Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's treatise (1899). His fine spirituality is reflected in his Spirit of Discipline (1891), which contains a notable essay on '*Accidie'. He also took an important part in ecclesiastical politics, and was one of the most influential members of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline (1904–6).

Stephen Paget and J. M. C. Crum, Francis Paget (1913). E. H. Pearce in D.N.B., 1901–11, iii (1912), p. 62 f.

PAGET, HENRY LUKE (1852–1932), Bp. of *Chester. Brother of the preceding, he was educated at Shrewsbury and *Christ Church, Oxford, ordained in 1877, and worked extensively in the East End of London, founding the Christ Church Mission at Poplar in 1879. Later he became Bp. of Ipswich (1906–9), of Stepney (1909–19), and of Chester (1919–32). Personal contact as a young man with E. B. *Pusey, J. H. *Newman, E. *King, and H. P. *Liddon had imbued him with the *Tractarian ideals; and he was a typical representative of the best Anglican pastors of his generation.

Elma K. Paget (widow), Henry Luke Paget. Portrait and Frame (1939).

PAGI, ANTOINE (1624–99), French Church historian. A native of Rognes in Provence, he studied with the *Jesuits at Aix and entered the Order of Conventual *Franciscans at an early age. He frequently filled the office of *Provincial. His principal work is the Critica historico-chronologica, a learned attempt to correct the errors contained in the Annals of C. *Baronius. The first volume of it appeared in 1689; the complete work, in 4 vols., was edited posthumously by his nephew, François Pagi, in 1705. Among his other writings are the Dissertatio hypatica (1682) on the Roman consuls, and a Latin edition of the sermons of St. *Antony of Padua (1685).

A. Teetaert, O.F.M.Cap., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), col. 1728 f., s.v.

PAGNINUS, SANTES (d. 1536), *Dominican scholar. A native of Lucca, he was the first modern scholar to render the whole Bible from the original languages. His Latin version, which he completed c. 1518, was remarkably literal. It was published at Lyons in 1528 (ed. 2, Cologne, 1541) and was extensively drawn on by M. *Coverdale in preparing the *Great Bible (1539). He was also the compiler of a Hebrew Lexicon.

G. Pagnino, Vita di S. Pagnino Lucchese, dell'ordine de' predicatori (Rome, 1653). T. M. Centi, 'L'attività letteraria di Santi Pagnini nel campo delle scienze bibliche' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xv (1945), pp. 5–51; J. D. Gauthier, S.J., 'Sanctes Pagninus, O.P.' in Catholic Biblical Quarterly, vii (1945), pp. 175–90. Quétif–Échard, ii, pp. 114–18.

PAIN BÉNIT. The blessed bread often, until recent times, distributed to the people after Mass in French and Canadian churches. It has as its counterpart among the E. Orthodox the so-called 'antidoron' (ἀντίδωρον, 'instead of the gift'), i.e. what remains of the loaves from which the Eucharistic Bread is cut. The antidoron is distributed at the end of the Liturgy, in theory only to those who have not received Holy Communion (hence its name), but in practice to all those present. Although not consecrated, the antidoron is regarded as sharing in some measure in the Eucharistic blessing. The modern French custom distinguishes carefully between the Eucharistic Bread and the pain bénit by assigning to the latter a special blessing and regarding it as at most a symbol of charity and spiritual unity.

PAINE, THOMAS (1737–1809), political reformer and author of the Rights of Man. He was a native of Thetford in Norfolk and, though confirmed in the C of E, was greatly influenced by the principles of the *Quakers, of which his father was a member. He was of an adventurous spirit, and after a chequered career as a sailor, staymaker, excise officer, and usher went to America in 1774 at the suggestion of Benjamin Franklin. There he became an editor, attacked slavery, and agitated for the emancipation of women. In 1776 he issued his pamphlet Common Sense in favour of American independence, which soon made him famous. During the American War he wrote a series of pamphlets entitled The Crisis. He also devoted himself to the invention of an iron bridge which he exhibited in England after his return in 1787. In 1791 he published the first part of his famous Rights of Man in reply to E. Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France. After the publication of the second part (1792) he fled to Paris to escape arrest. Here he was received with enthusiasm, but he lost his influence after the fall of the Girondists in 1793 and was arrested in the same year, after completing the first part of his Age of Reason (1794). He was released in 1794, having written the second part of his work in prison (publd. 1795). The Age of Reason, which aroused fierce opposition in both Britain and America, reflected the Quaker influence of his youth as well as that of contemporary *Deism in its negative estimate of revealed religion, whose beliefs and institutions are ridiculed as full of superstition and bad faith. In 1802 he returned to America, where he spent his last years in disappointment, having lost most of his former friends through his political opinions and his hostility to Christianity.

Collected Works ed. M. D. Conway (4 vols., New York–London, 1894–6) and P. S. Foner (2 vols., New York, 1945), with biographical introd. in i, pp. ix–xlvi. Modern edd. of Rights of Man (1937) and The Age of Reason (1938) in the 'Thinkers' Library'. The standard life is that of M. D. Conway (2 vols., New York–London, 1892). Modern studies by F. J. Gould (London, 1925), Mary A. Best (ib., 1927), H. Pearson (ib., 1937), H. [M.] Fast (ib., 1945), W. E. Woodward (ib., 1946), and A. O. Aldridge (Philadelphia, 1959; London, 1960). Ira M. Thompson, Jr., The Religious Beliefs of Thomas Paine (New York [1965]). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 69–79, with reff. to earlier works.

PAKISTAN, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 1 Nov. 1970 by the union of four Christian bodies, viz. the (*Anglican) Church of *India, Pakistan and Ceylon in respect of the dioceses of Lahore, Dacca and Karachi; the United *Methodist Church in Pakistan; the Scottish and English *Presbyterians of the United Church in Pakistan; and the Pakistani *Lutheran Church. The union, which was the fruit of negotiations extending back to the historic meeting at Tranquebar in 1919, was achieved by a representative of the four Churches concerned each reading his Church's resolution and assent to the Plan of Union. At the same inaugural Eucharist they were then joined by representatives of their sister Churches abroad and all eight laid hands on three Pakistani clergy, who, in turn, laid hands on the representatives of the five dioceses of the new Church, thus uniting the ministries. The head of the Church of Pakistan has the title of Moderator.

PALAMAS. See Gregory Palamas.

PALATINE GUARD. A corps of militia in the Papal service. It was created in 1850 by *Pius IX as the 'Guardia Palatina d'Onore' out of two existing bodies, the civici scelti and the capotori; but since 1870 their numbers have been greatly reduced. They were disbanded in 1970. A company used always to be stationed in the Cortile del Maresciallo during a Papal *conclave. Their dress was a uniform of dark blue and a peaked cap with a plume of feathers. See also Noble Guard, Swiss Guard.

G. Felici in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1204–6, s.v. 'Guardia palatina d'onore', with bibL and illustr.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND. A fund and society founded in London in 1865 for the purpose of surveying and mapping W. Palestine and excavating important sites. A similar fund, organized in Germany in 1887, surveyed Palestine east of Jordan. The most valuable work of the English society has been done at Lachish and Gezer. From 1865 to 1936 the society published a Quarterly Statement devoted to Biblical archaeology, which since 1937 has been continued as the Palestine Exploration Quarterly.

PALESTINIAN SYRIAC TEXT OF THE NT. A version of the NT in the Palestinian dialect of Syriac (properly called Christian Palestinian Aramaic), the place and date of whose origin are disputed. Its text is attested mainly in *lectionaries. The relatively primitive character of its readings is shown by the fact that they often agree with those of the *Codex Vaticanus (B) against the great majority of later MSS.

The principal texts are contained in P. de *Lagarde, Bibliotheca Syriaca (Göttingen, 1892), Agnes S. Lewis and Margaret D. Gibson, The Palestinian Syriac Lectionary of the Gospels (1899), Studia Sinaitica, No. vi (1897) and H. Duensing, Christlich-palästinisch-aramäische Texte und Fragmente nebst einer Abhandlung über den Wert der palästinischen Septuaginta (Göttingen, 1906). F. C. Burkitt, 'Christian Palestinian Literature' in J.T.S., ii (1900–1), pp. 174–85. Further bibl. in B. M. Metzger, Index to Periodical Literature on Christ and the Gospels (New Testament Tools and Studies, vi; 1966), pp. 94–96. F. Nau in Dict. Bibl., v (1912), cols. 1927–9, s.v. 'Syriaques (Versions), VI'; C. van Puyvelde, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 880–3 s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions), VI'.

PALESTRINA, GIOVANNI PIERLUIGI DA (c. 1525–94), Italian composer. He received his musical education at Rome and in 1544 became organist of the cathedral of his native town Palestrina. In 1551 Pope *Julius III appointed him musical instructor at the Cappella Giulia of St. Peter's with the title of 'Magister Capellae'. About this time St. *Philip Neri became his friend and confessor, and under his influence Palestrina devoted himself increasingly to the interests of the Church. In 1555 the Pope made him a member of the Papal choir despite his being married, but this office he had to resign a few months later under *Paul IV. In the same year he was appointed 'Maestro della Cappella' of St. John Lateran, where he composed among other things the famous Improperia, first performed in 1561. To this period also belongs the composition of his celebrated Missa Papae Marcelli.. From 1561 to c. 1567 he held a similar post at *Santa Maria Maggiore. In 1570 he was nominated Composer of the Papal Chapel, a post specially created for him and which he justified by producing an enormous number of Masses and motets. He also wrote music for St. Philip Neri's *Oratory, incl. many of his spiritual *madrigals. In 1571 he was appointed choirmaster of St. Peter's, a post he filled till his death. Among the best-known works of this last period of his life are the Motets to words taken from the Song of Songs, dedicated to *Gregory XIII, and the Mass Assumpta est Maria, first peformed in 1585.

Palestrina's music, coinciding with a time of vigorous ecclesiastical reforms, is deeply religious. In an age when ecclesiastical music had suffered greatly from secular influences, the austere polyphony of Palestrina's work won the approval of the Church authorities and became one of the most important factors in the subsequent development of sacred music.

Complete Works ed. T. de Witt–F. Epagne–F. Commer–F. X. Haberl (33 vols., Breitkopf–Härtel, Leipzig [1862–1907]); also ed. R. Casimiri–L. Virgili, etc. (Rome, 1939 ff.). G. Baini, Memorie storico-critiche della vita e delle opere di Giovanni Pierluigi Palestrina (2 vols., 1828). R. Casimiri, Nuovi documenti biografici (2 fascc., 1918–22). Other studies include those of M. Brenet (Paris, 1906), Z. K. Pyne (London, 1922), A. Cametti (Milan [1925]), F. Raugel (Paris, 1930), and H. Coates (London, 1938). K. G. Fellerer, Der Palestrinastil und seine Bedeutung in der vokalen Kirchenmusik des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts (1929). K. Jeppesen, Palestrinastil met scerligt henblik paa dissonansbehandlingen (1923; Eng. tr., The Style of Palestrina and the Dissonance, 1927, revised ed., 1946). H. K. Andrews, An Introduction to the Technique of Palestrina (1958). H. Coates in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), vi (1954), pp. 506–25, s.v.

PALEY, WILLIAM (1743–1805), author of the Evidences of Christianity. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where his unusual abilities, esp. in mathematics, attracted much attention, he was elected a Fellow in 1766 and soon became a much-sought-after lecturer. His first book, The Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy (1785), an expansion of his lectures on ethics, was at once adopted at Cambridge as a standard textbook. This was followed in 1790 by his Horae Paulinae, written to prove the historicity of the NT by a comparison of the accounts of St. *Paul in the Epistles and Acts; it was the only really original work which Paley wrote. In 1794 appeared the first edition of the famous View of the Evidences of Christianity. Though its arguments added little that was new, the work became extremely popular from its effective presentation of the facts and its pellucid style. In estimating its external and somewhat mechanical view of revelation, it must be remembered that Paley shared this with his age. His last book, Natural Theology (1802), covers in more thorough fashion parts of the same groundwork as the Evidences. In 1776 Paley became Rector of Musgrave, in Cumbria, and in 1782 Archdeacon of *Carlisle; but the *latitudinarianism of his younger days is said to have debarred him from the ecclesiastical preferment which usually fell to men of his abilities.

Editions of his Works with Life by A. Chalmers (5 vols., 1819), by Edmund Paley (son, 7 vols., 1825), by R. Lynam with memoir (4 vols., 1825), and in one vol. (1831). G. W. Meadley, Memoirs of William Paley (1809). M. L. Clarke, Paley. Evidences for the Man (1974). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 101–7.

PALIMPSEST (Gk. πάλιν, 'again'; ψάω, 'I rub'). A vellum or papyrus MS. from which the original writing has been erased or obliterated and the surface then used for some (usually quite different) writing. Of Biblical MSS., the best-known instance is the so-called *Codex Ephraemi ('C') of the Gk. NT. Many of the sheets of the original 5th cent. MS. (which appears to have contained a complete OT and NT) have been lost or thrown away, and the remainder cleaned and written over in the 12th cent. with some writings of St. *Ephraem Syrus. Formerly chemical reagents were much used to reveal the underlying writings, but it is now possible to secure in many cases at least equally successful results by photography, which has the great advantage that there is no risk of damage to the MS. Instances are known of 'double palimpsests', where the MS. has received three texts.

F. Mone, De Libris Palimpsestis tam Latinis quam Graecis (Carlsruhe, 1855). E. Chatelain, Les Palimpsestes latins (École Pratique des Hautes Études. Section des Sciences Historiques et Philologiques, 1904). A. Dold [O.S.B.], 'Palimpsest-Handschriften. Ihre Erschliessung einst und jetzt; ihre Bedeutung' in Gutenberg-Jahrbuch [xxv] (1950), pp. 16–24; also a number of other articles by this author (list of his works in Colligere Fragmenta. Festschrift Alban Dold zum 70. Geburtstag ed. B. Fischer, O.S.B.–V. Fiala (Texte und Arbeiten [the organ of the Palimpsest Institute founded by Dold at Beuron], i, Hft. 2; 1952), pp. ix–xx). K. Löffler–P. Ruf in Handbuch der Bibliothekswissenschaft begründet von F. Milkau, i (ed. 2 by G. Leyh, 1952), pp. 149–52. A. Dold, O.S.B., in E.C., ix (1951), cols. 632–5, s.v. 'Palinsesto', with bibl.

PALL. Originally the same word as *pallium, it has been applied to several kinds of cloth covering. In ecclesiastical usage it denotes esp. (1) the small linen cloth with which the chalice is covered at the Eucharist, stiffened in its modern form by a piece of cardboard; and (2) a cloth, commonly of black, purple, or white velvet, which is spread over the coffin at funerals.

PALLADIUS (c. 365–425), historian of early monasticism. Probably a native of Galatia, he spent several years with the monks of Egypt, where he was pupil of *Evagrius Ponticus. In 400 he returned to Asia Minor, where he became Bp. of Helenopolis in Bithynia. As a friend of St. *Chrysostom he was forced into exile in 406, though he returned to Asia Minor later (c. 412). Both St. *Jerome and St. *Epiphanius accused him of *Origenism, but it is not clear that the charge was well founded. His famous 'Lausiac History' (so named from its dedication to Lausus, the chamberlain of *Theodosius II) of the 'Friends of God' (φιλόθεοι, i.e. the monks), composed c. 419, is the most valuable single writing that survives for the history of early monasticism. If somewhat credulous about stories relating to the Egyptian monks, it is the work of a writer indubitably sincere and unquestionably religious. Palladius is probably also the author of a 'Dialogue' on the life of St. Chrysostom.

Gk. text of 'Lausiac History' first ed. J. Meursius, Leyden, 1616. New ed. by F. *Ducaeus in his Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, ii (Paris, 1624), pp. 893–1053; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxiv, 991–1262. These are all interpolated texts. Crit. text, with introd. and discussion, in [E.] C. Butler (Texts and Studies, vi, Nos. 1 and 2; Cambridge, 1898–1904). Eng. trr. by W. K. L. Clarke (Translations of Christian Literature, Series 1, Greek Texts; 1918) and by R. T. Meyer (A.C.W., xxxiv; 1965). The 'Dialogus' was first pr. by E. Bigot, Paris, 1680; repr. by B. de *Montfaucon in his ed. of Chrysostom, xiii (Paris, 1738), pp. 1–89, and in J. P. Migne, PG, xlvii, 5–82. Crit. ed. by P. R. Coleman-Norton (Cambridge, 1928). Eng. tr. by H. Moore (Translations of Christian Literature, Series 1, Greek Texts; 1921). 'De Gentibus Indiae et Bragmanibus' attributed to Palladius [only partly his work], ed. W. Berghoff (Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie, xxiv; 1967).

E. Preuschen, Palladius und Rufinus. Ein Beitrag zur Quellenkunde des ältesten Mönchtums (1897); R. *Reitzenstein, Historia Monachorum und Historia Lausiaca (1916); W. *Bousset, 'Komposition und Charakter der Historia Lausiaca' in Nach. (Gött.), 1917, pp. 173–217. E. *Schwartz, 'Palladiana' in Z.N.T.W., xxxvi (1937), pp. 161–204. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 148–57; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 238–40 (with bibl. of important artt. by R. Draguet and others). O. Zöckler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 609–12; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1823–30.

PALLADIUS, St. (5th cent.), early Irish missionary. Acc. to *Prosper of Aquitaine, he persuaded Pope *Celestine I (422–32) to send St. *Germanus, Bp. of Auxerre, to stamp out the *Pelagian heresy in Britain and was later himself consecrated by the same Pope, who sent him to the Irish as their first bishop. He worked in Wicklow, where the sites of three of his churches have been identified. His mission seems, however, to have met with little success and he eventually left for Scotland, where he probably died shortly afterwards. It is uncertain whether he was of British or Roman origin. Neither the medieval Scottish tradition that he did mission preaching in Scotland for twenty-three years nor the attempt (elaborated esp. by H. Zimmer) to identify him with St. *Patrick seems defensible. Feast day, 7 July.

The principal sources are the Chronicle of Prosper of Aquitaine (for edd. of which see art. Prosper) and material incorporated into the lives of St. Patrick. H. Zimmer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 214–18, s.v. 'Keltische Kirche' (Eng. tr. of art. by A. Meyer as The Celtic Church in Britain and Ireland (1902), pp. 32–9). J. B. Bury, St. Patrick and his Place in History (1905), esp. pp. 54–8, with note on Palladius, pp. 342–4, and full refl. L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Les Chrétientés celtiques (Bibliothèque de l'Enseignement de l'Histoire Ecclésiastique, 1911), pp. 38–41 (Eng. tr., 1932, pp. 29–31). J. L. G. Meissner, 'The British Tradition of St. Patrick's Life' in Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, xl (1932), pp. 356–84, esp, pp. 369–77; id. in W. A. Phillips (ed.), History of the Church of Ireland, i (1933), pp. 376–8 (Appendix E, 'The Mission of Palladius'). L. Bieler, 'The Mission of Palladius. A Comparative Study of Sources' in Traditio, vi (1948), pp. 1–32, incl. texts. G. T. Stokes in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 176 f., s.v.; C. R. Beazley in D.N.B., xliii (1895), p. 112 f. See also bibl. to Ireland, Christianity in, and Patrick, St.

PALLIUM. In ecclesiastical usage, the circular band of white woollen material with two hanging strips and marked with six dark purple crosses which is worn on the shoulders by the Pope and granted by him to archbishops (and occasionally also to other bishops) of the RC Church. It is held to symbolize the 'plenitude of the pontifical office' and participation in the authority of the Pope. Archbishops may not exercise certain forms of jurisdiction till it has been petitioned for and granted. It is made from the wool of lambs blessed on St. *Agnes' Day in the Church of St. Agnese fuori le mura while the *Agnus Dei is being sung, and, before dispatch, rests for a night on the tomb of St. *Peter in the Vatican basilica. The early history of the Pallium is very obscure. Derived from the imperial insignia, it seems to have been worn at first by archbishops and to have had no connexion with Rome, still less with the investment of Papal authority. At a later stage, after the Pope had himself assumed it, he seems occasionally to have sent it to individual prelates as a mark of special honour, and in this way its reception became much coveted. Not until the 9th cent. were all metropolitans required to petition for it. The Pallium naturally went out of use in the C of E at the *Reformation, though it still appears in some armorial bearings where it appears (as in a front or back view of the wearer) in the shape of the letter Y. See also Omophorion.

N. de Bralion, Cong. Orat., Pallium Archiepiscopale (Paris, 1648). P. de *Marca, De Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (ib., 1663), pp. 79–88. H. Thurston, S.J., The Pallium (Historical Papers ed. J. Morris, S.J., iv [c. 1893]). H. Grisar, S.J., 'Das römische Pallium und die ältesten liturgischen Schärpen' in S. Ehses (ed.), Festschrift zum elfhundertjährigen Jubiläum des Deutschen Campo Santo in Rom (1897), pp. 83–114. J. W. Legg, 'The Blessing of the Episcopal Ornament called the Pall' in Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, xv (1898), pp. 121–41. J. Wilpert, 'Der Parallelismus in der Entwicklung der toga und des pallium' in B.Z., viii (1899), pp. 490–2. T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte (Bonner Akademische Reden, i; Krefeld, 1948). P. Salmon, O.S.B., Étude sur les insignes du pontife dans le rit romain (Rome, 1955). Braun, L.G., pp. 620–76; Braun, L.P., pp. 143–51. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 427–9, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1937), pp. 931–40, s.v., with detailed bibl.; T. Klauser in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 7–9, s.v.

PALLOTTINI FATHERS, The. A society of RC priests, lay brothers, sisters and associates, founded in 1835 by Bl. Vincent Pallotti (1795–1850), an Italian of noble descent, who after ordination as priest (1818) devoted his life to apostolic work in Rome. Since 1854 the Fathers have been known as the 'Pious Society of Missions' (P.S.M.; Pia Societas Missionum). Their original aims closely resembled those of *Catholic Action, of which *Pius XI saw in Pallotti a forerunner. They work in Italy and many distant lands (*Brazil, N. America, *Australia) as well as in *Poland and Germany. The sisters (Congregatio Missionum Pallotinarum) were founded by Pallotti in 1843 as a separate Congregation. One of their chief interests is the reunion of Oriental Christians with the RC Church. To this end they have fostered since 1836 the observance of the Octave of the Epiphany as a special time of prayer.

[J. Hettenkofer], Historia Piae Societatis Missionum (Rome, 1935); id., Historia Societatis Apostolatus Catholici, 1935–1950 (ib., 1950). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 614–19, with detailed bibl. Life of Vincent Pallotti by F. Frank, S.A.C. (2 vols., Augsburg, 1952–63).

PALM SUNDAY (Dominica in Palmis). The Sunday before *Easter which introduces *Holy Week. The distinctive ceremonies of the day are the blessing of the palms and the procession, representing the Lord's triumphal entry into *Jerusalem a week before the Resurrection. The Palm Sunday procession is attested for Jerusalem as early as the 4th cent. by the 'Peregrinatio Etheriae' (see Etheria). In the W. it is first met with in the *Gallican 'Sacramentary of *Bobbio' (8th cent.), which also contains a blessing of the palms, to be carried as symbols of the victory of Christ and protection against the devil. In the Middle Ages the procession usually set out from one church and made its way to another, where the palms were blessed and distributed, and then returned to the church from which it had started. Frequently a representation of Christ, e.g. the Gospel book or a crucifix or a carved figure seated on a wooden ass, was carried in the procession. The use of the Blessed Sacrament for the purpose was ordered by Abp. *Lanfranc for the cathedral at *Canterbury c. 1078, and thence spread to Rouen and several places in England.

A very elaborate rite for the blessing of the palms developed during the early Middle Ages, similar in structure to the Mass. In the C of E the ceremony was abolished by an Order in Council in Jan. 1549 and has never been included in the BCP. In the RC Church it was radically simplified by the decree 'Maxima Redemptionis Nostrae Mysteria' of 16 Nov. 1955, and there have been a number of minor changes since. Acc. to the current rite there is a general blessing of the palms held by the people, if possible in a different building from that in which the Mass is to be celebrated. After the reading of the account of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem in one or other of the Gospels, and a short homily, the clergy and people process into the church, singing Psalms or the traditional 'Gloria, Laus' ('All Glory, Laud and Honour' by *Theodulph of Orléans) or some other chant. If it is not possible to process outside, there is at least a procession in the church before the main Mass of the day. The Mass which follows begins with the collect (with no *Introit, etc.) and includes the chanting of the Passion from one of the Gospels. The colour for the Mass and the procession is red. In the Byzantine rite the Liturgy is followed by a procession in which the celebrant carries the *icon of the day.

The texts for the Latin Rite are pr. in the Roman Missal with the rest of the Palm Sunday proper. H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols in 3, Rome, etc., 1956–7), with texts of the 1955 rite, relevant decrees and bibl. H. J. Gräf, S.V.D., Palmenweihe und Palmenprozession in der lateinischen Liturgie (Veröffentlichungen des Missionspriesterseminars St. Augustin, Siegburg, v; 1959), with extensive bibl. The pre-1955 rite is described in H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 191–237. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2060–4, s.v. 'Rameaux (Dimanche des)'.

PALMER, ROUNDELL (1812–95), First Earl of Selborne, Lord Chancellor, and High Churchman. Educated at Rugby, Winchester, and Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Magdalen in 1835. His brilliant abilities led him to rise rapidly in his profession; he was Lord Chancellor in 1872–4 and again in 1880–5. A devoted member of the C of E, he admired the leaders of the *Oxford Movement, actively supported I. *Williams's candidature for the Poetry Professorship, and expressed his belief that the condemnation of E. B. *Pusey's 1843 Sermon was illegal. Until 1869 he was opposed to the entrance of Dissenters to Oxford university. His writings include The Book of Praise (1863), a hymnal on historical principles, Notes on Some Passages in the Liturgical History of the English Church (1878), A Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment (1886), and Ancient Facts and Fictions concerning Churches and Tithes (1888). He also contributed the art. 'Hymns' to the 9th ed. of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Palmer's Letters to his Son on Religion were posthumously publd. London, 1898; also The Catholic and Apostolic Church. Letters to his Son, ib., 1899. Autobiographical Memorials, ed. by his daughter, Sophia M. Palmer (Part I, Family and Personal, 2 vols., London, 1896; Part II, Personal and Political, 2 vols., ib., 1898). E. G. W. Bill, Catalogue of the Papers of Roundell Palmer (1812–1895), first earl of Selborne (1967). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 150–4.

PALMER, WILLIAM (1803–85), Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford (from 1831), and *Tractarian theologian. His Origines Liturgicae (1832), a learned treatise on the history of the English liturgy, brought him into relations with J. *Keble, H. J. *Rose, and others who led the *Oxford Movement in the next years. A rigid High Churchman who was strongly opposed both to Popery and to Dissent, he expounded what he conceived to be the Anglican doctrine of the Church (roughly the so-called *Branch Theory) in his Treatise on the Church of Christ (2 vols., 1838) with learning and lucidity. When under the influence of such men as J. H. *Newman and esp. W. G. *Ward the Oxford Movement became less anti-Roman in its ideals, W. Palmer gave public expression to his misgivings in his Narrative of Events connected with the Publication of Tracts for the Times (1843). In 1846 he issued a reply to J. H. Newman's Doctrine of Development. The Roman Jesuit theologian, G. *Perrone, described him as 'theologorum Oxoniensium facile princeps'.

G. Goodwin in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 168–70, with reff.

PALMER, WILLIAM (1811–79), Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford (from 1832), and divine. Though for his day an extreme High Churchman, he took little direct part in the *Oxford Movement. In 1840 and 1842 he paid visits to Russia, provided with letters of commendation from the revered president of his college (M. J. *Routh), to explore the possibilities of intercommunion between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches, and did much to foster interest in the E. Church in Great Britain. Between these two visits he made strong protests against the proposed Anglo-Lutheran *Jerusalem Bishopric plan. Distressed by the *Gorham case, he tentatively considered seceding to the Orthodox Church; but deciding against this step because the Easterns insisted on his 'rebaptism', he eventually joined the RC Church in 1855. His writings include Dissertations on Subjects relating to the Orthodox or Eastern-Catholic Communion (1853), Notes of a Visit to the Russian Church in the Years 1840, 1841 (ed. J. H. *Newman; 1882), and works on Russian Church history and archaeology.

J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xliii (1895), p. 167 f.

PAMMACHIUS, St. (c. 340–410), Roman Christian. A senator of the Furian family, he was a friend of St. *Jerome, who dedicated to him several works, among them the Commentaries on the Minor Prophets (406) and on Daniel (407). After the death of his wife, the daughter of St. *Paula, he took the monastic habit and spent his possessions on works of piety, among them the famous hospital for pilgrims at Portus and the church of SS. Giovanni e Paolo (excavated in 1887) in Rome. Of a peace-loving character, he disapproved of the lack of moderation in Jerome's attack on *Jovinian and of the violent controversy between Jerome and *Rufinus on the subject of *Origen. His intervention in the *Donatist schism in Numidia, where he owned estates, earned him a laudatory letter from St. *Augustine (401). He died in the invasion of the Goths in 410. Feast day, 30 Aug.

The chief sources are St. Jerome, Epp., xlviii f., lvii, lxvi, lxxxiii f., and xcviii; St. Augustine, Ep. lviii, and *Palladius, Historica Lausiaca, cxxii. J. Pinius, S.J., in AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 555–63, incl. relevant texts of works cited above. On the tituli S. Pammachii, later SS. Johannis et Pauli, cf. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, ix; 1918), pp. 26–33. W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 178.

PAMPHILUS, St. (c. 240–309), disciple of *Origen. A native of Berytus, he received his education at *Alexandria, and later directed a theological school at *Caesarea in Palestine, where he was martyred. Having conceived a very high regard for the teachings of *Origen, he prepared during imprisonment in the persecution of Maximinus Daza an 'Apology' on his behalf. In this work he was much assisted by *Eusebius of Caesarea, who in turn held Pamphilus in immense veneration. Of the five books of the 'Apology' which are Pamphilus's own, only the first survives, and this in a Latin version of doubtful accuracy made by *Rufinus of Aquileia. After Pamphilus's martyrdom, Eusebius added a sixth book to the 'Apology', wrote Pamphilus's Life (now lost, except for a few fragments), and took for himself the name of 'Eusebius of Pamphilus' (ὁ τοῦ Παμφίλου). His large library survived at Caesarea until destroyed by the Arabs in the 7th cent. Feast day in the E., 16 Feb. (the day of his martyrdom); in the W., 1 June.

Rufinus's version of Bk. I of Pamphilus's Apology, with 'Admonitio' of C. de La Rue, in J. P. Migne, PG, xvii, 521–616. Fgmt. of Eusebius's Life in *Jerome, Adv. Rufin., i. 9. Eusebius, H.E., VII. xxxii. 25, and De Mart. Pal., xi. 3; Jerome, De Vir. Illustr., 75; *Photius, Cod. 118. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 287–92; G. Bardy in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1839–41.

PANAGIA (Gk. παναγία, 'all holy'). A favourite title of the BVM in the E. Church. The word is also used (1) of an oval medallion depicting the BVM which Orthodox bishops wear on the breast suspended on a chain; and (2) of bread (ἄρτος τῆς παναγίας) which is solemnly blessed in honour of the BVM. See also Encolpion.

PANCRAS, St. (d. 304), martyr. There are no reliable historical data about him. Acc. to an early tradition he was a Phrygian by race and a member of the Roman Church, who at the age of 14 was martyred on the Via Aurelia during the *Diocletianic persecution. Devotion to him became very popular, esp. in Rome, where his church gave one of the cardinals his title. Feast day, 12 May.

St. Pancras railway station in London is named after the dedication of the church of the parish in which it is situated.

His 'Acta' survive in several recensions both in Lat. and Gk. A Lat. text from several MSS. is pr., with discussion, in AA.SS., Mai. III (1680), pp. 17–22; other Lat. MSS. in Anal. Boll., ii (1883), pp. 289–91, and x (1891), pp. 53–6. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Hagiographica (S.T., xix; 1908), pp. 77–105 ('Della leggenda di S. Pancrazio Romano'), with Gk. text of 'Acta', pp. 109–12. B.H.L., p. 928 f. (Nos. 6420–28), and supplement, p. 242. S. Pesarini, 'Studi sopra alcune basiliche cristiane di Roma. I, La cripta di S. Pancrazio e la sua basilica sulla Via Aurelia' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, xxviii (1922), pp. 71–81; J. P. Kirsch, 'Le memorie dei martiri sulle Vie Aurelia e Cornelia. I, Gruppo del cimitero di S. Pancrazio, S. Pancratius' in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, ii (S.T., xxxviii; 1924), pp. 65–8. A. Nestori, 'La basilica di San Pancrazio in Roma' in Riv. A.C., xxxvi (1960), pp. 213–48. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1001–14, with reff.

PANENTHEISM (Gk. πᾶν, 'everything'; ἐν, 'in'; θεός, 'God'). The belief that the Being of God includes and penetrates the whole universe, so that every part of it exists in Him, but (as against *Pantheism, q.v.) that His Being is more than, and is not exhausted by, the universe. The word was coined by K. C. F. Krause (1781–1832) for his own system. N. *Malebranche's doctrines approximated to Panentheism.

PANGE LINGUA. The title of two famous Latin hymns, viz. the Passiontide hymn by *Venantius Fortunatus (d. c. 610) (Pange lingua gloriosi proelium certaminis), and the *Corpus Christi hymn by St. *Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274) (Pange lingua gloriosi corporis mysterium). On the latter see also Tantum ergo.

PANNYCHIS (Gk. παννυχίς). In the E. Church the liturgical preparation for a feast, and thus the counterpart of the *vigil in the W. It lasts through the whole night, in contrast with the ἀγρυπνία, a rite which occupies only part of the night. The word occurs already in St. *Athanasius (Apol. ad Const. 25).

PANORMITANUS (1386–1445), also known as Abbas Modernus and Siculus, canonist. A Sicilian by birth, Nicolò de' Tudeschi entered the *Benedictine Order c. 1400, and after studying under F. *Zabarella (1405–6), taught at Parma, Siena, and *Bologna. In 1425 he became abbot of Maniacio, near Messina, and in 1435 Abp. of Palermo (hence Panormitanus). He was sent to the Council of *Basle by Alfonso of Aragon, who was a contender for the throne of Naples against a nominee of *Eugenius IV; consequently Panormitanus usually supported the antipope, Felix V (by whom he was made a cardinal), defending in his Tractatus de Concilio Basiliensi the Pope's inferiority to a *General Council. Once Alfonso had obtained Naples in 1443, Panormitanus ceased to oppose Eugenius. His principal writings were his works on canon law, which included commentaries on the *Decretals of Gregory IX, on the *Sext, and on the *Clementines.

Many of his works were pr. in the 15th cent. Collected edd. 8 vols., Venice, 1592, and 9 vols., ib., 1617. J. Schweizer, Nicolaus de' Tudeschi, Archiepiscopus Panormitanus et S.R.E. Cardinalis. Seine Tätigkeit am Basler Konzil (Strassburg, 1924). C. Lefebvre in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 1195–1215, s.v., with extensive reff.

PANPSYCHISM. The doctrine advocated by G. T. *Fechner (1801–87) and other 19th cent. philosophers that everything in the universe is endowed with a measure of consciousness. It has found little favour with Christian theologians. A similar doctrine was expressly repudiated by St. *Thomas Aquinas (Sum. Theol. I, q. 18, a. 1).

C. Hartshorne in V. Ferm (ed.), A History of Philosophical Systems [1950], pp. 442–53, with bibl.

PANTAENUS, St. (d. c. A.D. 190). The first known head of the *Catechetical School at Alexandria. Probably a native of Sicily, he was converted from paganism to the Christian faith and taught at Alexandria (where he greatly influenced his more celebrated disciple, *Clement) from c. 180 till his death. It appears that he never composed any treatises. Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., V. x. 2), he preached the Gospel in 'India'. Feast day, 7 July; in the Coptic Church, 22 June.

J. Munck, Untersuchungen über Klemens von Alexandria (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, ii; 1933), pp. 151–204 [critique of W. *Bousset's theory of a 'Pantaenus Source' in Clement]. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 37–40. E. Peterson in E.C., ix (1952), col. 693 f.

PANTALEON, St. (d. c. 305), martyr. His name means 'the All-merciful' (παντελεήμων). Nothing is known with certainty about him. Acc. to one form of the legends, he was a physician to the Emp. Galerius at Nicomedia who, after having been converted to Christianity in his early years by his mother, was led into apostasy by the worldly attractions of court life. Reconverted by a Christian called Hermolaus, he suffered martyrdom when *Diocletian gave orders to purge the court of Christians. His cult has been very popular, esp. in the E.; and in the Middle Ages he was honoured as one of the patron saints of physicians, second only to St. *Luke. He was accounted one of the fourteen *Auxiliary Saints. Feast day, 27 July; also other dates.

Gk. text of 'Passio' in the works of *Simeon Metaphrastes pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cxv, 448–77; Lat. tr. of this, and other material, with commentary, in AA.SS., Jul. VI (1729), pp. 397–427. Further reff. in B.H.L., pp. 929–32 (Nos. 6429–48), and suppl., p. 243; B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957), pp. 166–9 (Nos. 1412z–1418c); B.H.O., p. 183 (Nos. 835–7). H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Subsidia Hagiographica, xx; 1912), p. 181 f. For popular account of the liquefaction of the relic of his blood, very similar to that recorded of St. Januarius (q.v.), I. R. Grant, The Testimony of Blood (1929), pp. 17–44. J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, x (Rome, 1968), cols. 108–17, s.v.

PANTHEISM (Gk. πᾶν, 'all', and θεός, 'God'). The belief or theory that God and the universe are identical. The word appears to have been coined by J. *Toland, the *Deist, in 1705 and to have been employed shortly afterwards by his opponents. Pantheistic systems, however, go back to very early times. It is a type of thought esp. found in Hinduism. Acc. as it interprets the universe in terms of God or God in terms of the universe, its attitude is religious or materialistic. Of the former type the most extreme representative in modern times was B. *Spinoza (1632–77) with his immanental formula, 'God or Nature' (Deus sive Natura). In the 19th cent. the German Idealists (F. W. J. von *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel) and the British *Absolute Idealists (F. H. *Bradley, B. *Bosanquet) taught philosophical doctrines akin to pantheism. Mysticism, with its passionate search for God in nature and desire for union with the Divine, has often verged on pantheism. Among Christian thinkers of pantheistic tendencies may be named *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, *Erigena and *Nicholas of Cusa; and such mystics as *Eckhart and Jacob *Boehme.

Collection of extracts from various authors, translated into Eng., by C. Hartshorne–W. L. Rees, Philosophers Speak of God (Chicago, 1953). C. E. Plumptre, History of Pantheism (2 vols., 1881); W. S. Urquhart, Pantheism and the Value of Life (1919). A. E. Garvie–F. Thilly–A. S. Geden in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 609–20, s.v.; F. A. Schalck in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1855–74, s.v. 'Panthéisme'; M. F. Sciacca in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 686–93, s.v. 'Panteismo'; S. Pfürtner in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 25–9, s.v. 'Pantheismus'.

PAPA ANGELICUS (also Pastor Angelicus). A belief which arose in Italy in the earlier half of the 13th cent. and is recorded by Roger *Bacon (Opus Tertium, xxiv), to the effect that a Pope would arise who would revive Apostolic simplicity and zeal in the Church and inaugurate a new age. It was developed in apocryphal writings and prophecies of the 14th cent., e.g. those of Telesphorus of Cosenza (1386). In St. *Malachy's prophecy the 106th Pope, i.e. *Pius XII (1940–58), is so designated.

'PAPAL AGGRESSION'. The name popularly given to the action of Pope *Pius IX making England and Wales, by Letters Apostolic, Universalis Ecclesiae (29 Sept. 1850), an ecclesiastical province of the RC Church, with a hierarchy consisting of an archbishop and twelve *suffragans all with territorial titles. The wording of the brief was provocative, e.g. by its reference to the C of E as 'the Anglican Schism'. An unexpected and almost fanatical storm of indignation spread through Great Britain under the leadership of Lord John Russell (1792–1878), culminating in the passing of the *Ecclesiastical Titles Act of 1851 (q.v.).

PAPAL LEGATE. See Legate, Papal.

PAPAL STATES. See States of the Church.

PAPEBROCH, DANIEL (1628–1714) (or van Papenbroeck), *Bollandist hagiographer. In 1659 he became J. Bollandus's assistant and continued till his death to take an active part in the compilation of the '*Acta Sanctorum', though he was forced to interrupt his work for a time by blindness. His name appears for the first time in 'Martius I' (1668), and for the last in 'Junius V' (1709), i.e. on 18 volumes in all. Bitter criticism from the *Carmelites, the foundation of whose order by *Elijah he denied, led to his denunciation at Rome and in Spain for heresy, and in 1695 14 volumes of the 'Acta' were put on the *Index. In a long introduction to 'Aprilis II' (1675), Papebroch subjected Merovingian charters to drastic criticism, which called forth J. *Mabillon's De Re Diplomatica (1681).

J. Pien, S.J., in AA.SS., Jun. VI (1715), pp. 3–21. H. *Delehaye, S.J., L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (1920), pp. 31–40; P. Peeters, S.J., L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (ed. 2, Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, deuxième série, liv, fasc. 5; 1961), esp. pp. 17–34. L. Traube, Vorlesungen und Abhandlungen, i (1909), pp. 18–23. H. Delehaye in Biographie nationale publiée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, xvi (1901), cols. 581–9, s.v. 'Papebrochius'. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1345–58, s.v. See also works cited under Bollandists.

PAPHNUTIUS, St. (d. c. 360), Bp. of the Upper Thebaid. He was an Egyptian monk, who had been a disciple of St. *Antony. He suffered such hardship and cruelty during the persecution by Maximin Daza (305–13) that at the Council of *Nicaea his mutilated body was an object of wonder and veneration to the assembled bishops. Acc. to *Socrates (H.E., i. 11) and *Sozomen (H.E., i. 23), he dissuaded the Council from ordering all clergy to put away their wives. Feast day, 11 Sept.

Gk. text of 'Passio' ed. H. *Delehaye, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xl (1922), pp. 328–43. Lat. tr. in AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 681–8. For his views on celibacy, G. *Bickell, 'Der Cölibat eine apostolische Anordnung' in Z.K.T., ii (1878), pp. 26–64, esp. pp. 57–62. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1358–61, s.v. 'Paphnuce'.

PAPIAS (c. 60–130), Bp. of Hierapolis in Asia Minor. Nothing is known of his life, apart from the statement of St. *Irenaeus that he was a 'man of long ago' (ἀρχαῖος ἀνήρ) and the disciple of one 'John' and a companion of St. *Polycarp. His work, Λογίων Κυριακῶν Ἐξηγήσεις ('Expositions of the Oracles of the Lord'), in five books survives only in quotations in Irenaeus and *Eusebius, and seems to have contained many oral traditions and legends. In the famous fragments on the origin of the Gospels of St. *Matthew and St. *Mark he states, on the authority of 'the Elder', that Mark, having become the interpreter of St. Peter, set down accurately (ἀκριβῶς), though not in order (οὐ μέντοι τάξει), everything that he remembered of the words and actions of the Lord, and that St. Matthew composed 'the oracles' (τὰ λόγια) in Hebrew, and that everyone translated them as best he could. Of his theology we only know that he held *Millenarian views, believing that there would be a period of a thousand years after the Resurrection during which the Kingdom of Christ would be set up on earth in a material form.

The fragments have often been repr., conveniently, with Eng. tr., in J. B. *Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers (ed. J. R. Harmer, 1891), pp. 514–35. T. *Zahn, 'Apostel und Apostelschüler in der Provinz Asiens' in id., Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, vi (1900), pp. 109–57. H. J. Lawlor, 'Eusebius on Papias' in Hermathena, xix [No. 43] (1922), pp. 167–222; K. Beyschlag, 'Herkunft und Eigenart der Papiasfragmente' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, iv (T.U., lxxix; 1961), pp. 268–80; J. Munck, 'Presbyters and Disciples of the Lord in Papias' in H.T.R., lii (1959), pp. 223–43; id., 'Die Tradition über das Matthäusevangelium bei Papias' in Neotestamentica et Patristica. Eine Freundesgabe, Herrn Professor Dr. Oscar Cullmann zu seinem 60. Geburtstag überreicht (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, iv; 1962), pp. 249–60. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 445–54; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 52 f. F. Wotke in P.W., xviii (pt. 3; 1949), cols. 966–76, s.v. 'Papias (2)'; E. Peterson in E.C., ix (1952), col. 781 f., s.v. 'Papia di Gerapoli'; M. Jourjon in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1104–9.

PAPINI, GIOVANNI (1881–1956), Italian author. In his early years he followed various trends of modern philosophy, esp. the *pragmatism of W. *James, and in his own periodicals, Leonardo (1902) and Lacerba (1913), as well as in several volumes of essays, treated metaphysical and moral questions with originality and often with violence. In 1912 he published Un uomo finito, a novel reflecting his interior struggle between his philosophical speculations and the desire for faith, which he at last resolved by acceptance of the Catholic creed. The outcome of his conversion was the Storia di Cristo (1921; Eng. tr., The Story of Christ, 1923), his most successful book, in which he traces the earthly life of Christ, His effect on His contemporaries and the uniqueness of His Person and message in the world of antiquity, with great poetical insight. It was followed in 1929 by a Life of St. *Augustine (Eng. tr., 1930), a psychological study, but less successful than the earlier work.

Correspondence with Giuseppe Prezzolini ed., with introd. by Prezzolini, Storia di un'amicizia (2 vols., 1966–8). A. Viviani, Gianfalco. Storia e vita (1934); M. Apollonio, Papini ('Guide di cultura contemporanea', 1944); R. Ridolfi, Vita di Giovanni Papini (1957).

PAPYROLOGY. The science of dealing with MSS. on papyrus. Papyrus is a writing material made out of the fibres of the stem of a water plant which formerly grew plentifully in the Nile. It was used in ancient Egypt and became the chief writing material in the Greco-Roman world from the 5th cent. B.C. (and probably earlier) to the 4th cent. A.D., when it gradually gave way to vellum. It was manufactured in sheets, which were glued together to form rolls of any desired length up to about 35 feet. This was the form in which many books of the NT were first written, and for pagan literature the roll predominates until the 4th cent. A.D. Such a roll would not contain more than a single Gospel. But from the latter part of the first cent. an alternative form, that of the 'codex', which could contain much more matter, came into use, and this was predominantly used for Christian books. In the codex, sheets of papyrus were folded in two and formed into quires, as in a modern printed book. Early codices were often composed of single quires, consisting of any number of folded sheets, from one to fifty or more; eventually it was found more convenient to form quires of not more than 8 sheets, making 16 leaves or 32 pages, and (as in modern books) to make up the codex from several such quires. The writing on a roll was in columns of about 2½ to 3½ inches wide, and was normally on one side of the roll only; the references in Ezek. 2. 10 and Rev. 5. 1 to something written 'within and without' are to a sealed document, not to a book.

Papyrus manuscripts have survived in few areas apart from the dry soil of Egypt, where they were first found in 1778; but it is only since 1877 that they have been discovered in any large numbers, and still more recently that they have become important for the Bible text.

Useful directory to the many series of published papyri in H. G. *Liddell–R. *Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon (rev. ed., 1940), pp. xliii–xlv, with additions in Supplement ed. E. A. Barker (1968), p. x f. Large collection of historical and legal documents assembled in L. Mitteis–U. Wilcken, Grundzüge und Chrestomathie der Papyruskunde (4 vols., 1912). A. S. Hunt–C. C. Edgar (edd.), Select Papyri (2 vols., Loeb, 1932–4); D. L. Page (ed.), Select Papyri, iii, Literary Papyri, Poetry (ib., 1941; revised ed., 1942). G. Milligan, Selections from the Greek Papyri (1910). General introd. to subject by W. Schubart, Einführung in die Papyruskunde (1917); E. G. Turner, Greek Papyri. An Introduction (Oxford, 1968). Lexicon by F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyrusurkunden (2 vols., 1925–7; suppl., 1931). Grammar by E. Mayser (2 vols.; Bd. ii in 3 parts; Berlin, 1906–34). Archiv für Papyrusforschung und verwandte Gebiete (begun by U. Wilcken, 1900 ff.). J. G. Winter, Life and Letters in the Papyri (University of Michigan Press, 1933). Vocabulary of NT Gk. usage by J. H. *Moulton–G. Milligan, The Vocabulary of the Greek Testament Illustrated from the Papyri and other non-literary Sources (1914–30). On the bearing of the papyri on NT studies, A. *Deißmann, Licht vom Osten (ed. 4, 1923), pp. 18–38; Eng. tr. (1927), pp. 24–50. C. H. Roberts, 'The Codex' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xl (1954), pp. 169–204; T. C. Skeat, 'Early Christian Book-Production: Papyri and Manuscripts' in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, ii (1969), pp. 54–79. C. H. Roberts–A. F. Shore in J. R. Harris (ed.), The Legacy of Egypt (ed. 2, Oxford, 1971), pp. 355–433. B. Botte, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1109–20, s.v. 'Papyrus bibliques'; C. H. Roberts in O.C.D. (ed. 2, 1970), pp. 778–80. See also bibl. to Bodmer Papyri, Chester Beatty Papyri and Oxyrhynchus Papyri.

PARABLE (Gk. παραβολή). The name given to similitudes drawn from nature or from human affairs, esp. those suggesting or containing a short narrative, which Christ used to convey a spiritual meaning. No sharp line distinguishes the Parables from the minor metaphors and similes which are a feature of His teaching, but between 30 and 40 distinct Parables can be recognized in the *Synoptic Gospels. In St. John's Gospel there are no Parables, though there are sayings of Christ, e.g. about Himself as the *Good Shepherd, of a similar character. A few of the Parables (e.g. that of the Sower) are found in all three Synoptists but most of them (e.g. the Lost Sheep and the Unclean Spirit) are either shared by Matthew and Luke or are found in Matthew alone (e.g. the Ten Virgins) or in Luke alone (e.g. the *Good Samaritan).

The Parables are one of the most distinctive features of Christ's teaching. They are not allegories, in which every detail has a meaning, nor yet simply anecdotes of which the purpose is to convey a purely moral lesson. They vary greatly in the closeness or otherwise of the story to the reality it is desired to illustrate. But there is one main point of comparison in each Parable, and apart from this the details may, or may not, have a particular meaning.

The most widely read of the older works was R. C. *Trench, Notes on the Parables of Our Lord (1841). More recent studies include: A. *Jülicher, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu (2 vols., 1888–99); A. T. Cadoux, The Parables of Jesus. Their Art and Use (1931); C. H. *Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom (1935); W. O. E. Oesterley, The Gospel Parables in the Light of their Jewish Background (1936); B. T. D. Smith, The Parables of the Synoptic Gospels (1937). T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus (1931), pp. 57–81. P. Fiebig, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu im Lichte der rabbinischen Gleichnisse des neutestamentlichen Zeitalters (1912). J. Jeremias, Die Gleichnisse Jesu (Zürich, 1947; Eng. tr., 1954; ed. 6, Göttingen, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); Eta Linnemann, Gleichnisse Jesu. Einführung und Auslegung (Göttingen, 1961; ed. 3, 1964; Eng. tr., 1966). Helmut Thielicke, Das Bilderbuch Gottes. Reden über die Gleichnisse Jesu (Stuttgart, 1957; Eng. tr., New York, 1959). F. Hauck in T.W.B., v [1955], pp. 741–59, s.v. παραβολή; A. George in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1149–77, s.v.

PARABOLANI (Gk. παραβολᾶνοι, 'those who disregard', sc. their lives; cf. Phil. 2. 30). They were an association of men, orig. at Alexandria but later also at *Constantinople, devoted to nursing the sick, who probably originated in a period of epidemics. They are mentioned in two laws of the 'Codex Theodosianus', XVI. 2 (de episcopis 42 and 43 of A.D. 416 and 418), reproduced in the 'Codex Justinianus', I. 3 (de episcopis 18).

Acc. to these laws, which fixed their number at 500, later at 600, we learn that the Parabolani were clerics under episcopal supervision and exempt from public duties. They were forbidden to visit theatres and law courts. They seem to have played a considerable part in the public life of Alexandria and are believed to have had a share in the murder of the philosopher *Hypatia (415). They also took part in the *Latrocinium of *Ephesus (449).

J. *Bingham, Origines sive Antiquitates Ecclesiasticae, liber 1, cap. ii, para. 9, and liber 3, cap. ix (vol. i, ed. 1708, p. 20 f., and ii, 1709, pp. 45–50). E. Venables in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1551 f., s.v.

PARACELSUS. The name coined for himself by Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim (1493–1541), Swiss physician. Educated at the university of Basle, he studied alchemy and chemistry under Abbot J. *Trithemius of Sponheim. He was appointed city physician at Basle, but his open opposition to the prevailing system of medicine, based on Galen and *Avicenna, forced him to leave in 1528. For the rest of his life he was moving from place to place. His great advances in therapeutics rested on his belief that its principles were to be derived from the study of nature and not from scholastic disputations. Yet his empiricism did not prevent his elaborating a mystical theosophy on a *Neoplatonic basis, in which he held that, just as we know nature only to the extent that we are ourselves nature, so we know God only in so far as we are God. Paracelsus also made important contributions to the study of chemistry.

Works ed. J. Huserum (4 parts, Basle, 1589–99). Crit. edd. by K. Sudhoff-W. Matthiessen, etc. (Munich–Berlin, and since the end of the Second World War, Wiesbaden; 1922 ff.) and by W. E. Peuckert (Darmstadt, 1965 ff.). Eng. tr. of his Hermetic and Alchemical Writings by A. E. Waite (2 vols., London, 1894) and of his Select Works by N. Guterman (ib., 1951). The very considerable literature on Paracelsus includes studies in English by F. Hartmann (London, 1877), Anna M. Stobbart (ib., 1911), J. M. Stillman (Chicago–London, 1920, with useful bibl.), J. Hargrave (London, 1951; more popular), and W. Pagel (Basle–New York, 1958). F. Mook, Theophrastus Paracelsus. Eine kritische Studie (1876); J. Ferguson, Bibliographia Paracelsica (5 parts, privately printed, Glasgow, 1877–93). K. Sudhoff, Versuch einer Kritik der Echtheit der paracelsischen Schriften (i, Bibliographia Paracelsica; ii, Paracelsus-Handschriften, 1894–9). K.-H. Weimann, Paracelsus-Bibliographie 1932–1960 mit einem Verzeichnis neu entdeckter Paracelsus-Handschriften (1900–1960) (Kosmosophie, ii; Wiesbaden, 1963). F. Strunz, Theophrastus Paracelsus, sein Leben und seine Persönlichkeit (1903), and other writings by the same author. C. G. Jung, Paracelsica. Zwei Vorlesungen über den Arzt und Philosophen Theophrastus (Zürich–Leipzig, 1942). L. Sendfelder in C.E., xi (1911), p. 468 f., s.v.; W. Pagel in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 65–7, s.v.

PARACLETE (Gk. παράκλητος, 'advocate'), Johannine epithet of the Holy Ghost. It is traditionally translated 'Comforter'. Though used of Christ in 1 Jn. 2. 1 and, by implication, in Jn. 14. 16, it is ordinarily applied to the Holy Spirit (Jn. 14. 16; 16. 7, &c.). *Origen interpreted the word as meaning 'Intercessor' where the reference is to the Lord, as 'Consoler' (for the loss of Christ) where it is to the Holy Ghost. This latter meaning, though not found outside the NT, may be defended by the context, and was indeed that generally accepted by the Fathers. But it describes the mission of the Holy Ghost, which is 'to strengthen and guide the Church into all truth' less fully than the renderings 'Helper', 'Counsellor', or the *Vulgate translation 'Advocate', preferred by many modern commentators. Several scholars are in favour of simply transcribing the Greek word as was done in several ancient versions of the NT.

Many important discussions will be found in Commentaries, ad locc.; cf., e.g., those of B. F. *Westcott, J. H. *Bernard and R. E. Brown on Jn., and of A. E. Brooke on 1 Jn. H. Saase, 'Der Paraklet im Johannesevangelium' in Z.N.T.W., xxiv (1925), pp. 260–77; H. *Windisch, 'Die fünf Johanneischen Parakletsprüche' in Festgabe Adolf Jülicher zum 70. Geburtstag (1927), pp. 110–37; G. Bornkamm, 'Der Paraklet im Johannesevangelium' in Festschrift R. Bultmann zum 65. Geburtstag überreicht (1949), pp. 12–35; C. K. Barrett, 'The Holy Spirit in the Fourth Gospel' in J.T.S., N.S., i (1950), pp. 1–15. O. Betz, Der Paraklet. Fürsprecher im häretischen Spätjudentum, im Johannes-Evangelium und in neu gefundenen gnostischen Schriften (Leiden–Cologne, 1963). J. Behm in T.W.B., v (1954), pp. 798–812, with bibl.

PARACLETICE. See Octoechos.

PARADIGM. The title given by M. *Dibelius and other *Form-critics to passages in the Gospels which contain narratives woven round a particular saying of Christ in order to drive its teaching home. They are held to have received their present literary form from their use as illustrations in preaching. Dibelius enumerates eight cases in St. *Mark's Gospel where the type is perfect, viz. the Sick of the Palsy (2. 1–12), the Question of Fasting (2. 18 f.), the Plucking of the Ears of Corn (2. 23–8), the Man with the Withered Hand (3. 1–5), the Relatives of Christ (3. 31–5), Christ's Blessing of the Children (10. 13–16), the Tribute Money (12. 13–17), and the Anointing in Bethany (14. 3–9).

M. Dibelius, From Tradition to Gospel (Eng. trans., 1934), ch. iii.

PARADISE. The word is probably of Persian origin (Zend pairidaêza), denoting an enclosed park or pleasure-ground. It is found in the Hebrew of the OT in its primary meaning three times (Neh. 2. 8, Eccles. 2. 5 and Song of Songs 4. 13). In the LXX, in addition it occurs in Gen. 2 and 3 as the Greek rendering of the 'garden' planted by God in Eden. In later Jewish literature it came more and more to signify a state of blessedness whether material (much of the *Rabbinic literature) or spiritual (so Ecclus. 24. 25–30 and Pss. Sol. 14. 2), and with this latter meaning the word is used in the NT, where it occurs three times. In Lk. 23. 43 it has been variously interpreted as referring either to the intermediate state of the just before the Resurrection (*Limbo) or as a synonym of the heaven of the blessed. In this second sense it is used in the two other NT passages, 2 Cor. 12. 4 and Rev. 2. 7. In patristic and medieval literature there was much speculation both as to the conditions of the primeval paradise and, esp. in later times, on the Intermediate State and the distinction between a terrestrial and a heavenly paradise. In modern popular usage paradise usually denotes the state of future bliss. See also Beatific Vision.

For 'paradise' as an architectural term see Parvis.

'PARADISE LOST'. The magnificent epic of J. *Milton (q.v.), describing the *Fall of Man and its consequences. It was the first original non-dramatic work of any importance to be written in English in blank verse. For vastness in conception and grandeur in treatment it is surpassed in modern literature only by Dante's Divina commedia. Its theology has been thought to show traces of Milton's *Arianism and his lack of sympathy with organized religion; but its main themes are those common to the main stream of Christian doctrine. Milton prob. did not complete it until 1667, and on 27 Apr. 1667 he disposed of the copyright for the sum of £5, with the contingency of three further instalments of the same sum if additional editions were needed.

Facsimile of first ed. prepared by J. Isaacs, pr. at the Golden Cockerel Press [Waltham St. Lawrence], 1937. Modern ed., with full notes, by A. W. Verity (Cambridge, 1910); cf. also edd. of Milton's Poetical Works, cited s.v. Milton, esp. that of Helen Darbishire, vol. i (Oxford, 1952). G. McColley, Paradise Lost. An Account of its Growth and Major Origins, with a Discussion of Milton's Use of Sources and Literary Patterns (Chicago, 1940); C. S. Lewis, A Preface to Paradise Lost (Ballard Matthews Lectures for 1941; 1942); [J. N.] D. Bush, Paradise Lost in Our Time (Ithaca, N.Y., 1945); J. S. Diekhoff, Milton's Paradise Lost. A Commentary on the Argument (New York, 1946). B. Ragan, Paradise Lost and the Seventeenth Century Reader (1947); A. J. A. Waldock, Paradise Lost and its Critics (1947); A. H. Gilbert, On the Composition of Paradise Lost (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1947); B. A. Wright, Milton's 'Paradise Lost' (1962); C. Ricks, Milton's Grand Style (Oxford, 1963); Helen Gardner, A Reading of Paradise Lost (Alexander Lectures, 1962; ib., 1965); D. H. Burden, The Logical Epic. A Study of the Argument of Paradise Lost (1967); J. M. Evans, Paradise Lost and the Genesis Tradition (Oxford, 1968). See also works cited s.v. Milton, John.

PARAGRAPH BIBLES. In 1755 a NT arranged in paragraphs (as opposed to the usual AV practice of arrangement in verses), with a revised text, was issued by J. *Wesley. In 1838 the *Religious Tract Society published an edition with the AV text in paragraphs; and other similar editions followed. It is the arrangement adopted in the *Revised Version and most other modern translations.

PARALIPOMENON (Gk. παραλειπομένων, 'of the things left out'), the name by which the two Books of *Chronicles are sometimes known to RCs. It is based on the *Vulgate title, which derives from the LXX, in which, e.g. in *Codex Vaticanus, the Books of Chronicles are entitled παραλειπομένων α' and παραλειπομένων β' respectively, a description which implies that the Books are supplementary to 1 and 2 Kings.

PARALLELISM, Poetic. This characteristic of Hebrew poetry was first analysed by R. *Lowth in his De sacra poesi Hebraeorum (Oxford, 1753). Such parallelism is not confined to the books of the Bible but it is also an essential element in other Near Eastern literature. Hebrew parallelism is ordinarily of three kinds:

(1) Synonymous Parallelism, which is the most usual form, consisting in the simple repetition of the same thought in slightly different words, e.g. 'Hear my crying, O God: Give ear unto my prayer' (Ps. 61. 1).

(2) Antithetical Parallelism, produced by contrasting the first member with the second. This form is very frequent in the Bk. of Prov., e.g. 'A merry heart doeth good like a medicine: But a broken spirit drieth the bones' (Prov. 17. 22).

(3) Synthetic Parallelism, in which the first member is developed or completed by a similar thought in the second (or third, in the case of triplets), e.g. 'The kings of the earth stand up: And the rulers take counsel together: Against the Lord and against His Anointed' (Ps. 2. 2).

Apart from these chief forms some commentators have claimed to find others, such as 'climactic', 'introverted', 'stairlike', and 'emblematic' Parallelism, but they are in general less easily discernible.

PARAPHRASES OF ERASMUS, The. The Commentary on the Gospels written by D. *Erasmus which *Edward VI in his *Injunctions of 1547 ordered to be set up in all parish churches 'in some convenient place' where the 'parishioners may most commodiously resort unto the same and read the same'. The section on St. John's Gospel was translated into English by the Princess *Mary.

PARASCEVE. See Preparation, Day of.

PARCLOSE. In ecclesiastical architecture, a screen or set of railings, usually standing at the east end of the *aisle of a church, for enclosing a *chantry altar for *requiems and one or more seats for members of the family of the deceased. After the Reformation these enclosures developed into the 'family pew'.

PARDON. (1) Another name for an '*Indulgence', found, e.g., in Art. 22 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles. In the later Middle Ages the right to share in an indulgence was hawked around Europe by the 'Pardoners', denounced by G. *Chaucer, W. Langland, and J. *Wycliffe. Such Pardons were a source of great profit to the ecclesiastical authorities and were frequently used to obtain money for building purposes, as for *St. Peter's, Rome, and the completion of *York Minster.

(2) In Brittany, the feast of the patron saint of a church at which an indulgence may be gained. These Pardons are held in many places between *Easter and *Michaelmas. The celebrations are preceded by Confession on the night before and start early in the morning with Mass, and much of the day is given to prayer. The most dramatic element in the proceedings is the procession round the church or village in which relics or other votive objects are carried and the pilgrims assist in their best national costumes. They are commonly accompanied by a village fair. Among the more famous Breton Pardons are those of St.-Jean-du-Doigt near Morlaix (24 June) and St.-Anne d'Auray in Morbihan (24 July).

PARIS. The city, which is first mentioned by Caesar as 'Lutetia Parisiorum', was a centre of Christianity at a very early date. Acc. to St. *Gregory of Tours, St. *Denis, its first bishop, was one of the seven bishops sent out by Pope *Fabian c. 250. During the invasion of the Huns it was protected by St. *Geneviève, who is still venerated as its patroness. From the end of the 5th cent. it increased considerably in political and religious importance. Many churches were built, and during the frequent absence of the Merovingian kings the episcopal power developed. In the 9th cent. *Notre-Dame and the abbey of *St.-Germain-des-Prés became the most powerful factors in its life. Under Hugh Capet (987–96) it became the official capital of France. The beginnings of its famous University date from the 12th cent., when *Peter Lombard taught at the Cathedral School of Notre-Dame, *Hugh and *Richard at St.-Victor, and *Abelard at Ste-Geneviève. The University as an established community of masters and pupils appears at the end of the 12th cent. It was styled 'Universitas magistrorum' in 1207 and received its statutes from *Innocent III in 1215. Many privileges were bestowed on it, making it a body independent of bishops, king, and Parliament. Between 1215 and 1225 developed the so-called 'nations', Gallicani, Normanni, Picardi, and Angli (the last being replaced by the Alemanni after the Hundred Years War), and soon afterwards the four faculties of theology, law, medicine, and arts. The early 13th cent. also saw the foundation of colleges, which originally provided lodging and food for poor students; the most famous of these was the *Sorbonne. Religious lived in the houses of their orders ('studia generalia'), the *Dominicans, e.g., at St.-Jacques. In the 13th cent. Paris was the chief centre of Scholasticism, counting among its teachers the *Franciscans *Alexander of Hales and St. *Bonaventure, the Dominicans St. *Albert the Great and St. *Thomas Aquinas, and the seculars *William of Auxerre, *Henry of Ghent and the *Averroist *Siger of Brabant. St. Albert, St. Bonaventure, and St. Thomas took part in the great controversy between the *Mendicant orders and the seculars, who, represented esp. by William of St.-Amour (d. c. 1273), were jealous of the growing influence of the religious, in whose favour the quarrel was decided by Alexander IV in 1256. The University continued to play an important part in the time of the W. Schism and of the Reform Councils, when some of its most learned men, such as J. *Gerson and Peter *d'Ailly, favoured the Conciliar party. At the end of the 14th cent. its decadence set in, caused by the general decline of Scholasticism as well as by the Schism and the war with England, in the course of which Paris was under English occupation from 1420 to 1436. Under Francis I and *Catherine de' Medici the city became the centre of the French Renaissance, supported by its bishop, (later Cardinal) Jean du Bellay (1532–1551). From 1568 to 1662 the see was occupied by the Gondi family, under whom occurred the massacres of St. *Bartholomew's Night (1572). It became an archdiocese in 1622. During the 17th cent. the city witnessed a religious regeneration brought about by the activities of St. *Francis de Sales, St. *Vincent de Paul, P. de *Bérulle, and P. *Olier, who counteracted *Jansenism and *Gallicanism, which numbered many adherents in the capital, esp. at the University. In the 18th cent. Paris became a centre of Rationalism and '*Enlightenment'; religion suffered its most serious eclipse during the Revolutions of 1789, 1830, and 1848. In the first of these the old University was abolished; a new one was established in 1806 by the combination of the three faculties of arts, medicine, and law, but without theology, which, since 1875, has been represented by the *Institut Catholique.

Paris has always been famous for its churches and monasteries, among the chief of which are Notre-Dame (q.v.) and the former Benedictine abbey of St.-Germain-des-Prés. Other famous religious houses were the Benedictine abbeys of *St.-Denis and St.-Maur-des-Fossés, the Augustinian monasteries of Ste-Geneviève and St.-Victor, and the houses of *Benedictine nuns, Montmartre and *Port-Royal, all of which perished in the Revolution of 1789. Foremost among modern churches are *St.-Sulpice with its 18 chapels, Notre-Dame-des-Victoires, a popular place of pilgrimage, La Madeleine, built in the form of a Greek temple, and the Sacré-Cœur on Montmartre, built in Byzantine-Romanesque style from 1875 to 1919.

See also Sainte-Chapelle, Sorbonne.

Primary sources in Histoire générale de Paris. Collection des documents (65 vols., 1866–1963). The many general works include M. Poëte, Une Vie de cité. Paris, de sa naissance à nos jours (4 vols., 1924–31); R. Barroux, Paris des origines à nos jours (1951); and three collections of essays in the series Colloques. Cahiers de civilisation, publd. under the direction of G. Michaud: Paris. Croissance d'une capitale (1961); Paris. Fonctions d'une capitale (1962); Paris. Présent et avenir d'une capitale [1964]. G. Monmarché, Paris (Les Guides bleus, ed. 1968); S. Rossiter (ed.), Paris (Blue Guides, 1968). On the University, H. *Denifle, O.P.–A. Chatelain (edd.), Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis (4 vols., Paris, 1889–97); idd. and others (edd.), Auctarium Chartularii Universitatis Parisiensis (4 vols., ib., 1894–1964). C. E. Du Boulay, Historia Universitatis Parisiensis (6 vols., ib., 1665–73). J. B. L. Crevier, Histoire de l'université de Paris, depuis son origine jusqu'à l'année 1600 (7 vols., 1761); E. Dubarle, Histoire de l'université, depuis son origine jusqu'à nos jours (2 vols., 1829). L. Liard, L'Université de Paris (Les Grandes Institutions de France, 1909). J. Bonnerot, L'Université de Paris du moyen âge à nos jours [1933]. L. Halphen and others, Aspects de l'université de Paris (1949). S. d'Irsay, Histoire des universités françaises et étrangères des origines à nos jours (2 vols., 1933–5), passim. The best account of the medieval university, with bibl., is that in H. *Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, i (ed. F. M. Powicke–A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 268–584. C. Jourdain, Histoire de l'université de Paris au XVIIe et au XVIIIe siècle (2 pts., 1862–1866). P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maitres en théologie de Paris au XIIIe siècle (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xvi–xviii; 1932–4). G. [A.] Leff, Paris and Oxford Universities in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries (1968), with bibl. On the ecclesiastical history, J. Lebeuf, Histoire de la ville et de tout le diocèse de Paris (15 vols., 1754–8). J. Rupp, Histoire de l'église de Paris (Bibliothèque Chrétienne d'Histoire, 1948). P. Pisani, L'Église de Paris et la Révolution (4 vols., Bibliothèque d'Histoire religieuse, 1908–11). G. d'Avenel, Les Évêques et archevêques de Paris depuis saint Denys jusqu'à nos jours (2 vols., Tournai, 1878). P. Dollinger–P. Wolff, Bibliographie d'histoire des villes de France (1967), pp. 195–209. G. Goyau in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 480–95, s.v. 'Paris, Archdiocese of'; P. Ferret, ib., pp. 495–8, s.v. 'Paris, University of'; A. P. Frutaz–G. Rupp–M. Briek–I. Cecchetti–E. Josi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 825–37, s.v. 'Parigi', with detailed bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1938), cols. 1696–1959, s.v. 'Paris [Histoire]', with full bibl.; cols. 1959–2074, s.v. 'Paris (La Bibliothèque Nationale)'; cols. 2074–2160, s.v. 'Paris (Manuscrits liturgiques de)'. See also works cited under France, Christianity in.

PARIS, MATTHEW. See Matthew Paris.

PARISH. In England, an area under the spiritual care of a C of E clergyman (the '*incumbent' or, in the correct meaning of the word, the 'curate'), to whose religious ministrations all its inhabitants are entitled. The incumbent, who receives his income wholly or in part from funds specially allocated to the parish, is nominated by the *patron of the benefice, and can only be removed from his cure in very exceptional cases ('freehold of the clergy'). The word comes from the Gk. παροικία, 'district', via the Late Lat. parochia. Originally the παροικία was the ecclesiastical area under the bishop (the modern 'diocese'), but from the later 4th cent. it came to be applied to the subdivisions of the diocese, which the bishop put in charge of resident presbyters. In England the establishment of the parochial system has been traditionally attributed to Abp. *Theodore (7th cent.); but it is now commonly held (after Ulrich Stutz) that its roots, including its form of patronage, must be sought in the relations (of Teutonic ancestry) of landlord and pagan priest in pre-Christian times, when the owner of land was bound to provide facilities for worship for his dependants, appointing a priest as his agent for the purpose. The compromise reached at the Third *Lateran Council of 1179, which gave the bishop the right of *institution, strengthened the incumbent against his patron, though once instituted he still preserved his freehold against his bishop.

From a very early date the English parish has also been an important unit of civil administration. Except in the N. of England, where a parish might contain more than one town, the parish and the township were normally conterminous. To meet the growth and changing distribution of population, esp. since the Industrial Revolution, many new parishes have been formed. An Act of 1710 (9 Anne, cap. 22) provided for 50 additional parishes in London; and the Church Building Acts of 1818 to 1884 and the New Parishes Acts of 1843 to 1884 enabled new parishes or districts to be created by Act of Parliament. The process, however, was slow and costly. It was drastically revised by the New Parishes Measure of 1943, the relevant provisions of which have now been superseded by the Pastoral Measure of 1968. This provides for the establishment in every diocese of Pastoral Committees which can submit proposals to the *Church Commissioners for the erection of new parishes or the alteration of existing ones. Such proposals, if approved, take effect on confirmation by an Order in Council. Since the abolition of Church Rates in 1868, the civil importance of the parish has much declined.

The custom of marking the boundaries by '*beating the bounds' on the *Rogation Days is still observed in some parishes.

P. D. Thomson, Parish and Parish Church. Their Place and Influence in History (Baird Lecture for 1935; 1948). A. *Gasquet, Parish Life in Medieval England (The Antiquary's Books, 1906); E. L. Cutts, Parish Priests and their People in the Middle Ages in England (1914). J. C. Cox, The English Parish Church. An Account of the Chief Building Types and of their Material during Nine Centuries (1914; with additional chapters by C. B. Ford, 1935). Id., The Parish Registers of England (The Antiquary's Books, 1910). E. Tyrrell-Green, Parish Church Architecture (1924). U. Stutz, Die Eigenkirche als Element des mittelalterlich-germanischen Kirchenrechtes (Basel Inaugural Lecture; Berlin, 1895; Eng. tr. by G. Barraclough, Mediaeval Germany, ii, 1938, pp. 35–70). E. Stolz, 'Παροικία, parochia und parochus', in Th.Q., lxxxix (1907), pp. 424–48; id., 'Zur Geschichte des Terminus Parochus', ib., xcv (1913), pp. 193–203; id., 'Parochus', ib., cvi (1926), pp. 1–8. P. de Labriolle, 'Paroecia' in Rech. S.R., xviii (1928), pp. 60–72. G. W. O. Addleshaw, The Beginnings of the Parochial System (St. Anthony's Hall Publications, iii; 1953); id., The Development of the Parochial System from Charlemagne (768–814) to Urban II (1088–1099) (ib., vi; 1954); id., Rectors, Vicars and Patrons in Twelfth and Thirteenth Century Canon Law (ib., ix; 1956). H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), esp. pp. 178–98. E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H., pp. 441–5, s.v. E. Isele–E. Walter–R. Bohren in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 398–407, s.v. 'Pfarrei', with detailed bibl.

PARISH CLERK. The church official, either a layman or in orders, but usually the former, who in England assists the priest, chiefly by making the responses of the congregation in the services, and sometimes in reading the epistle. He also helps in the general care of the church. The office, which is known from the time of St. *Augustine of Canterbury, could be held only by men of some education. Until 1921 the office was freehold, but since then the parish clerk is appointed and dismissed by the incumbent and the *Parochial Church Council acting jointly. In the old 'three-decker' pulpits, the lowest stage was assigned to the clerk.

The conditions of the appointment of (lay) Parish Clerks were laid down in the *Canons of 1604, can. 91; of persons in Holy Orders, in 7 & 8 Vict., c. 59. The present position is governed by Canon E 3 of 1969. J. Christie, Some Account of Parish Clerks, more especially of the Ancient Fraternity (Bretherne and Sisterne) of S. Nicholas, now known as the Worshipful Company of Parish Clerks (privately printed for the Company, 1893). J. Wickham Legg (ed.), The Clerk's Book of 1549 (*Henry Bradshaw Society, xxv; 1903), with good general introd., pp. xvii–lxii. P. H. Ditchfield, The Parish Clerk (1907). [E. G.] C. [F.] Atchley, The Parish Clerk, and his Right to Read the Liturgical Epistle (*Alcuin Club Tracts, iv; 1903).

PARKER, JOSEPH (1830–1902), *Congregationalist divine. A native of Hexham, he was for a time a *Wesleyan local preacher, but in 1852 returned to Congregationalism and became an assistant to John Campbell at the Moorfields Tabernacle in London. After ministering at Banbury (1853–8) and Manchester (1858–69), he accepted in 1869 a call to the Poultry Street Chapel, where his power and dramatic oratory in the pulpit attracted a large congregation. By 1874 he had completed the City Temple on Holborn Viaduct, and here ministered with great influence until his death. His publications include The People's Bible (25 vols., 1883–95); Ecce Deus (1867), a reply to J. R. Seeley's Ecce Homo; A Preacher's Life (1899), autobiographical; and many volumes of sermons. Throughout his life he was a strong advocate of temperance.

Lives by A. Dawson (London, 1901), W. Adamson (Glasgow–London, 1902), and G. H. Pike (London, 1904). A. Gordon in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 71–3, with further reff.

PARKER, MATTHEW (1504–75), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1527, Parker soon identified himself with the groups of moderate reformers. Under *Henry VIII and *Edward VI he received several preferments, and in the later reign took advantage of the permission to the clergy to marry. Under *Mary he was deprived, and lived in obscurity till 1559, when *Elizabeth I chose him for the vacant Abpric. of Canterbury. After accepting it with much reluctance, he was consecrated at *Lambeth Palace on 17 Dec. 1559 by four bishops who had held sees in Edward VI's reign. His main objects as primate were to preserve the settlement of 1559 from further change and to retain as far as possible the links with the past. To this end he took part in the issue of the *Thirty-Nine Articles and of the '*Bishops' Bible', and published in 1566 his '*Advertisements' on ritual matters, which commanded, inter alia, the use of the surplice. Henceforward he had to face considerable opposition from the Puritan party, which embodied its aims in the Admonition to Parliament (1572). Parker was a wise and tolerant, though hardly a forceful, archbishop, preferring scholarship to controversy. He issued editions of the works of many medieval chroniclers, among them Matthew of Westminster (1567–70), *Matthew Paris (1571) and Thomas of Walsingham (1574). The most considerable of his own writings was his De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae et Privilegiis Ecclesiae Cantuariensis cum Archiepiscopis eius lxx (1572). A large collection of the MSS. collected by or for him survives in the library of his college at Cambridge.

Correspondence from 1535 to 1575 ed. J. Bruce–T. T. Perowne (*Parker Society, 1853). Episcopal Register, Book I (1559–71) transcribed by E. Margaret Thompson and ed., with introd., by W. H. *Frere (*Canterbury and York Society, xxxv–xxxvi; 1928). The primary authority is the life by J. *Strype (London, 1711). Modern lives by W. M. Kennedy ('Makers of National History', 1908), Edith W. Perry, Under Four Tudors (1940; ed. 2, 1964), and V. J. K. Brook (Oxford, 1962). W. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1968), passim. J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 254–64; W. H. Frere in D.E.C.H., p. 445 f. See also bibl. to Anglican Ordinations and other works cited under Elizabeth I.

PARKER, THEODORE (1810–60), American *Unitarian preacher and reformer. The son of a New England farmer, he graduated at Harvard in 1836. Here he taught himself many oriental languages and began a translation of M. L. *de Wette's Einleitung in das Alte Testament (publd. 1843). In 1837 he was ordained first pastor of the parish (Unitarian) church in W. Roxbury, Mass. By 1841 he had come to hold much more liberal views than those of Unitarian orthodoxy and his associates consequently denounced him. In his Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion (1842) he maintained that the permanent essence of Christianity was the influence of Jesus and that belief in miracles was unnecessary. The work, which was widely read, won him some new followers esp. in Europe (among them J. *Martineau), but confirmed the orthodox Unitarians in their distrust of him. From 1845 till his death he ministered to a congregation at Boston, U.S.A. He became a fervent advocate of temperance, prison reform, and education for women, and the leader in Boston of the Anti-Slavery Crusade.

Collected works ed. Frances P. Cobbe (14 vols., London, 1863–74); also, better ed., but still incomplete, 15 vols., Boston, 1907–13. Lives by J. Weiss (New York, 1864), O. B. Frothington (Boston, 1874), J. W. Chadwick (ib., 1900), and H. S. Commager (ib., 1936; ed. 2, 1947). J. E. Dirks, The Critical Theology of Theodore Parker (New York, 1948).

PARKER SOCIETY, The. A society established in 1840 under the leadership of the Earl of *Shaftesbury and some other prominent *Evangelicals, including Edward Bickersteth of the *C.M.S., to issue 'the works of the Fathers and early writers of the Reformed Church'. Its publications include editions of the works and letters of M. *Parker (from whom it took its name), T. *Cranmer, J. *Jewel, and others. Like the contemporary 'Library of the Fathers' (q.v.) and 'Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology' (1841 ff.), of which it was a kind of Protestant counterpart, these publications were of great service to historical and theological learning.

PAROCHIAL CHURCH COUNCIL. A council set up in every parish in the C of E by the Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act of 1919, to give the laity a share in parochial administration. Its functions are defined by the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure of 1921 (subsequently amended, 1929, 1956 and 1969). At an annual parochial church meeting the qualified electors in every parish elect lay representatives to the Council, which also includes the incumbent, the churchwardens, and any lay members of a Deanery or Diocesan Synod, or the General Synod. It must meet at least four times a year. Its primary duty is 'to co-operate with the incumbent in promoting in the parish the whole mission of the Church, pastoral, evangelistic, social and ecumenical'. Most of the powers formerly possessed by the vestry and the churchwardens which relate to the financial affairs of the church, as well as the maintenance of its fabric and ornaments, have been transferred to the Parochial Church Council.

K. M. Macmorran, A Handbook for Churchwardens and Church Councillors (1921; revised ed. by K. J. T. Elphinstone, 1971).

PAROISSIEN. The name for various prayer-books in the vernacular designed for the use of the laity which have been published in France since the 17th cent. They usually contain, besides private devotional exercises, a considerable amount of liturgical matter, such as translations of the *Masses and *Vespers for Sundays and feasts, as well as the Holy Week services, often together with the proper musical notation. Though lineally descended from the medieval *Primers, the popularity of the Paroissien in the 17th cent. was chiefly inspired by the desire for vernacular forms of worship.

PAROUSIA (Gk. παρουσία, 'presence' or 'arrival'). In its English form, the word is employed (following NT usage) to denote particularly the future return of Christ in glory (the 'Second Coming') to judge the living and the dead, and to terminate the present world order. Primitive Christianity believed the event to be imminent and this belief has been revived from time to time in the history of the Church. The prevailing Christian tradition, while maintaining that the Lord's words attest the certainty of a final *General Judgement which will mark the end of the present order and the entry of redeemed humanity into the resurrection-life in heaven, has been opposed to speculation as to the exact time and manner of the Coming. It is believed that in the Judgement humanity will be confronted by the risen and glorified Christ. The supposition that Christ, when He returned, would first reign for a long period on earth (the *Millennium, q.v.) was held in some early Christian circles, but it has not been generally followed.

Besides the discussions of the NT evidence in the writings of J. *Weiss and A. *Schweitzer, cited in the entries s.vv., H. D. Wendland, Die Eschatologie des Reiches Gottes bei Jesus (1931); R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934; Eng. tr., 1938); J. Héring, Le Royaume de Dieu et sa venue. Étude sur l'espérance de Jésus de l'apôtre Paul (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, xxxv; 1937); E. Walter, Das Kommen des Herrn (Leben aus dem Wort, iv; 2 vols., 1941–7). T. F. Glasson, The Second Advent. The Origin of the New Testament Doctrine (1945); id., His Appearing and His Kingdom. The Christian Hope in the Light of History (1953). J. A. T. Robinson, Jesus and his Coming (1957). A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, xiii; 1966), with bibl. A. Feuillet, 'Le Sens du mot Parousie dans l'Évangile de Matthieu. Comparaison entre Matth. xxiv et Jac. v. 1–11' in W. D. Davies and D. Daube (edd.), The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology. In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd (Cambridge, 1956), pp. 261–80. A. Oepke in T.W.B., v (1954), pp. 856–69, s.v. παρουσία, πάρειμι; A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 1331–1419, s.v. 'Parousie', with extensive bibl.

PARSON. Properly, the holder of an ecclesiastical benefice who has full possession of its rights, i.e. a *rector. This use was general until the 17th cent., e.g. E. *Stillingfleet wrote in a charge of 1691: 'A vicar cannot appoint a vicar, but a parson may.' Its current use for any (esp. C of E) clergyman has now completely superseded its orig. sense.

The ecclesiastical use of the Lat. persona appears to date from the 11th cent., e.g. Council of *Clermont (1095), can. 3. Acc. to English legal writers (E. Coke, W. Blackstone) it derives from the view of the Parson as the legal 'person' by whom the property of God (or of the Patron Saint or of the church) in the parish was actually held; he was the person to sue or to be sued. C. D. *Du Cange, however, derives the usage from persona as equivalent to dignitas, meaning a 'personage' or 'dignitary', while H. Schaefer (Pfarrkirche und Stift im deutschen Mittelalter, 1903, para. 19), pointing out that persona was most frequently used of an absentee rector, often a layman, has suggested that the word is to be deduced from the use of persona as a role. The civil law sense seems the most likely origin of the English usage. See also Parish.

PARSONS, ROBERT (1546–1610), also 'Persons', *Jesuit missionary. After holding a Fellowship at Balliol College, Oxford (1568–74), Parsons left England and was received into the RC Church at Louvain; and in 1575 became a Jesuit at Rome. Chosen with E. *Campion to lead the Jesuit Mission to England in 1580, he was soon (1581) forced to flee to the Continent, where he spent the rest of his life. His diplomatic ability made him a trusted counsellor of Popes and other Catholic rulers (esp. *Philip II of Spain); he negotiated for political intervention on behalf of the persecuted English RCs, and this earned him the particular hatred of the English government. Though his political efforts bore little fruit, his ideas played a major part in shaping A Conference about the New Succession to the Crown of England (1594), which, despite *Elizabeth I's total ban on discussion, raised publicly the urgent problem of finding a Catholic successor, and the principles involved therein. Its plea for the rights of subjects led to its being reprinted in England in 1648 and 1681. Though Parsons was a skilled and trenchant controversialist, both against Anglicans and against opponents within the RC community, the most influential of his numerous published writings was a spiritual treatise, The Christian Directory (1582), which was adapted by E. Buny and reprinted over forty times before 1640 in England. His most enduring achievement was his work for education, notably his government of the *English College, Rome (1597–1610), and a major part in the foundation of the English Colleges at Valladolid, Seville, and *St.-Omer.

Facsimile of The Judgment of a Catholicke English-Man Living in Banishment for his Religion (1608) with introd. by W. T. Costello, S.J. (Gainesville, 1957). 'Memoirs', ed. by J. H. Pollen, S.J., in Catholic Record Society Publications, ii (1906), pp. 1–161, and iv (1907), pp. 1–161; 'Letters and Memorials', ed. L. Hicks, S.J., i [to 1588], ib., xxxix (1942). Id., 'Father Robert Persons S.J. and The Book of Succession' in Recusant History, iv (1958), pp. 104–37. T. G. Law in D.N.B., xliii (1895), pp. 411–18.

PARTICULAR BAPTISTS. The group of Baptists whose theology was essentially *Calvinistic as contrasted with the *Arminianism of the *General Baptists. Their polity was similar to that of the *Independents, but a considerable place was given to 'associations' of local Churches. The first Particular Baptist community in England was established at Southwark from 1633 onwards. In 1891 the General Baptists of the New Connexion joined the Baptist Union which had been formed among the Particular Baptists.

PARTICULAR JUDGEMENT. In Catholic theology, the judgement on each individual soul immediately on its separation from the body. It is thus prior to and quite distinct from the *General Judgement (q.v.) on the Last Day. In the bull 'Benedictus Deus' (1336) *Benedict XII upheld the teaching that the Particular Judgement admits the soul at once either to the *Beatific Vision, to *purgatory, or to *hell, thus excluding an intermediate state of sleep or partial happiness or suffering between the day of death and the final resurrection of the body, such as had been envisaged by certain older theologians, e.g. St. *Justin, *Tertullian, and St. *Ambrose. The chief Scriptural evidence for the doctrine is found in the Parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16. 19) and in Christ's words to the penitent thief (Lk. 23. 43). There is no universally accepted teaching as regards the circumstances of the Particular Judgement, but acc. to the common opinion of Catholic theologians, it occurs at the time of death and consists in an interior illumination which makes known to the separated soul its state in relation to God.

PARVIS (Fr., from Lat. paradisus). Originally the court in front of a cathedral or other large church, esp. when, as at *St. Peter's, Rome, surrounded by a colonnade. The word came to be also used of the portico of a church porch. In modern times it is often erroneously applied to the room over such a porch, apparently through a misunderstood reference in F. Blomefield's Norfolk (ii, p. 748; c. 1744), which mentions a school kept in the parvis of St. Martin's Church, Norwich, in 1300.

O.E.D., vii (1909), p. 517, s.v.

PASCAL, BLAISE (1623–62), French theologian, mathematician, and savant. The son of Étienne Pascal, President of the local court of exchequer and a man of culture, he was born at Clermont-Ferrand; his mother died when he was four and in 1631 his father transferred the family to Paris, until his appointment as Intendant of Normandy in 1639. Pascal was educated privately by his father together with his two sisters, Gilberte (b. 1620; in 1641 she married her cousin, Florin Périer) and Jacqueline (b. 1625). He showed great precocity, and in Rouen engaged in various mathematical experiments, incl. those which led to the invention of the barometer. Having been brought up to regard matters of faith as beyond reason, he came into contact with the *Jansenists in 1646 (his 'first conversion'), and in the next year secured the condemnation of an ex-*Capuchin friar who maintained that reason could comprehend the mysteries of faith. A few months later he entered into direct communication with *Port-Royal, but was not yet prepared to accept all its demands. Leaving Rouen in 1648, the family returned to Paris in 1650. In 1651 his father died, and shortly afterwards Jacqueline, despite the opposition of her brother, entered the convent of Port-Royal. Pascal continued his scientific pursuits and enjoyed the society of Paris. On 23 Nov. 1654 his 'definitive conversion' took place, when he discovered the 'God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob, and not of philosophers and men of science'; at the time he made a record of the experience which he carried on his person for the rest of his life. From 1655 he was a frequent visitor at Port-Royal-des-Champs. He was in bad health from 1658 until his death.

The condemnation of A. *Arnauld by the Sorbonne in 1655 prompted his famous attack on the *Jesuits in his Lettres écrites à un provincial, commonly known as his 'Lettres provinciales' (18 in all). The first was printed on 23 Jan. 1656, the rest followed shortly afterwards (1656–7). The first four and the last two were directly concerned with the immediate issue as a personal quarrel. The remaining twelve, attacking the Jesuit theories of grace (*Molinism) and moral theology (*Probabilism), were intended to expose the immoral character of their casuistry and to oppose to it the rigorist morality of the Jansenists, with its aim of restoring the disciplinary practices and austerity of the primitive Church. The work was condemned by the Congregation of the *Index in 1657 but continued to provoke violent controversy. The literary history of the Pensées begins with the publication of selections from his notes in 1670, eight years after his death; the remaining fragments were stuck into an album regardless of sequence; the whole has subsequently been frequently re-edited. The work was designed as a vindication of the truth of Christianity against the indifference of the libertins whom, though inaccessible to philosophical reasoning, Pascal hoped to convince by the presentation of facts and fulfilment of prophecy and by an appeal to the heart. Apart from its brilliant style, it owes its force to the wealth of personal experience and psychological perception which it embodies. The intention of writing such a book may have dated from his second conversion (1654), or more prob. from the time of the miraculous cure of his niece by the Holy Thorn (1656). At the time of his death only bundles of material had been collected.

Pascal's religion was centred on the Person of Christ as Saviour and based on his personal experience. Here, as in his scientific investigations, his thought was deeply influenced by his interest in experimental knowledge. Nourished on the *Augustinianism of Port-Royal, his deepest experience was that of man's tragic situation between greatness and misery, to escape from which he plunges into distractions. From this state only faith can free him, since human existence is confronted with the necessity of making a decision for or against God. The element of risk in the life of faith and emphasis on the will are characteristic of Pascal, who confesses that the 'heart has its reasons of which reason knows not'. He does not, however, thereby exclude the use of reason from demonstrating the truth of faith. His scientific works include Expériences nouvelles touchant le vuide (1647); Récit de la grande expérience de l'équilibre des liqueurs (by B. P., 1648), and Traités de l'équilibre des liqueurs et de la pesanteur de la masse de l'air (1647). Pascal was ridiculed by *Voltaire and the *Encyclopaedists of the 18th cent., but in the 19th cent. there came a revival of interest, which continues.

The standard ed. of Pascal's Œuvres complètes is that of L. C. Brunschvicg–F. Boutroux–F. Gazier (14 vols., Grands Écrivains de la France, Paris, 1904–14); modern ed. by J. Mesnard (5 vols., Bruges, 1964 ff.). There is also a convenient ed. by L. Lafuma (Paris, 1963). Good edd. of the Pensées by L. Lafuma (3 vols., Paris, 1951; Eng. tr. by A. J. Krailsheimer, Penguin Classics, 1966) and of the Lettres provinciales by L. Cognet (Paris, 1965; Eng. tr. by A. J. Krailsheimer, Penguin Classics, 1967). Photographic reproduction of the original MS. of his Pensées, with introd. by L. Lafuma, Paris, 1962. Of the large literature on Pascal, the following studies are among the most important: F. Strowski, Pascal et son temps (3 vols., 1907); H. F. Stewart, The Holiness of Pascal (Hulsean Lectures, 1914–15; 1915); J. Chevalier, Pascal ([1922]; Eng. tr., 1930); L. C. Brunschvicg, Le Génie de Pascal (1924); H. F. Stewart, The Secret of Pascal (1941); J. Russier, La Foi selon Pascal (2 vols., 1949); J. Mesnard, Pascal. L'Homme et l'œuvre (1951; Eng. tr., 1952); E. Mortimer, Blaise Pascal (London, 1959); J. H. Broome, Pascal (ib., 1965). E. Jovy, Études pascaliennes (8 vols., 1927–32). On Pascal's relation to Fr. thought in the present century, Dorothy M. Eastwood, The Revival of Pascal (1936). C. C. J. *Webb, Pascal's Philosophy of Religion (1929); H. F. Stewart, Pascal's Apology for Religion (1942). J. Mesnard, Pascal (Les Écrivains devant Dieu, 1965). G. Saintsbury–G. Chrystal in E.B. (ed. 11), xx (1911), pp. 878–81; C. Constantin in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2074–203; W. F. Cobb in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 652–8, s.v. See also bibl. to Port-Royal.

PASCH (Aram. פַּסְחָא, Gk. πάσχα, 'passover'). A name formerly in fairly wide currency in England both for the Jewish *Passover and for the Christian festival of *Easter (qq.v.). See also Passion.

PASCHAL II (d. 1118), Pope from 1099. Ranierus, a native of Galeata near *Ravenna, entered a S. Italian monastery as a boy. He was made cardinal priest of San Clemente by *Gregory VII, served as legate in Spain under *Urban II, and became Abbot of *St. Paul's Outside the Walls in Rome. As Pope he renewed the papal decrees against lay investiture in 1102, but died leaving the *Investiture Controversy still unsettled. By 1107 compromises had been reached with the kings of England and France, but with the Empire no settlement could yet be reached. Paschal supported the rebellion of the future Emp. Henry V against the latter's father *Henry IV, but Henry V in his turn practised investiture, and Paschal opposed him at successive councils; that of Troyes (1107) declared deposed those bishops who received investiture from laymen. At Rome in Feb. 1111 Paschal agreed to the renunciation by bishops of all regalia acquired since *Charlemagne, and Henry in return agreed to renounce investiture. This far-reaching proposal offended vested interests and was abortive; Henry took Paschal prisoner and at Ponte Mammolo (12 Apr. 1111) extorted concessions by which Paschal promised to forgive injuries, to grant investiture, and to crown Henry. This treaty aroused indignation, esp. among more advanced reformers; it was declared null and void by a council at Rome in 1112 and formally condemned by Paschal in 1116. Paschal took refuge from Henry at Benevento in 1117 and died at Rome on his return in January 1118.

Paschal maintained the links between Cluny and the Papacy, and in 1107 he confirmed the canon of the Council of *Clermont on the *Truce of God. His pontificate leaves a mixed impression on the historian, and in two respects he set unfortunate precedents. He condoned violence against passive supporters of Henry IV; and the support which he gave to *Bohemond I's attack on the Eastern Emp. Alexius in 1107–8 caused bitter resentment in Byzantium.

His Register has not survived; collection of letters in J. P. Migne, PL, clxiii, 31–448. Jaffé, i, pp. 702–72. L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 296–310. B. Monod, Essai sur les rapports de Pascal II avec Philippe Ier (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, clxiv; 1907). J. G. Rowe, 'Pascal II, Bohemond of Antioch and the Byzantine Empire' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlix (1967), pp. 165–202. M. J. Wilks, 'Ecclesiastica and Regalia: Papal investiture policy from the Council of Guastalla to the First Lateran Council, 1106–23' in Studies in Church History, vii (1971), pp. 69–85. Mann, viii (1910), pp. 1–119. A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1944), pp. 338–75, with bibl. C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xiv (1904), pp. 717–24, s.v. 'Paschalis II'; É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2057–74, s.v. 'Pascal II'; G. Mollat in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 902–4, s.v. 'Pasquale II'. See also bibl. to Investiture Controversy and Henry IV.

PASCHAL BAYLON, St. (1540–92), *Franciscan lay brother. The son of peasant parents, he was born at Torre Hermosa, on the borders of Castile and Aragon, on Whitsunday 1540, and christened 'Pascua' after the feast. From his seventh to his twenty-fourth year he minded his father's sheep, leading a life of austerity and prayerfulness which was graced (it is recorded) by various miracles. In obedience to a vision he entered the neighbouring convent of the Franciscans of the Alcantarine reform where he practised extreme mortification. Throughout his life he was particularly devoted to the cult of the Blessed Sacrament. During a mission to *France he defended the doctrine of the *Real Presence at the risk of his life, and was roughly handled by the *Calvinists. He was canonized in 1690 and on 28 Nov. 1897 he was declared by *Leo XIII in the encyclical 'Providentissimus Deus' (not to be confused with that of 1893 on the study of Scripture with the same title) patron of *Eucharistic Congresses and Associations. He is usually depicted in the act of adoration before the Host. Feast day, 17 May.

J. Sala, O.F.M. (ed.), Opúsculos de S. Pascual Bailón (Toledo, 1911), with useful introd. The primary authorities are the Spanish Chronicon del B. Fray P. Baylon de la Orden del P. S. Francisco by his friend J. Ximénez, Valencia, 1601, and the account written in connection with his canonization by C. de Arta (It. tr., Venice, 1673). Lat. tr. of abstracts of these pr. in AA.SS., Mai IV (1685), pp. 49–132. Modern studies by L. A. de Porrentruy, O.M.C. (Paris, 1899), and A. Groeteken, O.F.M. (Einsiedeln, 1909). P. M. Mansuy, O.F.M., Le Patron des congrès et des œuvres eucharistiques, saint Pascal Baylon (ed. 2, 1910).

PASCHAL CANDLE. In the W. Church, the candle placed on a separate large candlestick in the north side of the sanctuary which is lighted, esp. at liturgical functions, during Eastertide. During the *Paschal Vigil Service, after the blessing of the New Fire, the celebrant marks the candle with the sign of the Cross, the Greek letters *alpha and omega, and the date of the year, inserts five grains of incense in the cross, and then lights the candle from the New Fire. Since 1970 a simple blessing of the candle may be substituted. The deacon carries the lighted candle through the church, making three stations during which he sings 'Lumen Christi' ('Light of Christ'). When the deacon and celebrant reach the sanctuary, all the lights in the church are lit and the *Exultet is sung. The Paschal Candle has customarily been extinguished after the Gospel on *Ascension Day. Acc. to current RC practice it is taken to the baptistery at the end of Eastertide and lighted at all baptisms throughout the year.

U. Berlière, O.S.B., 'Le Cierge pascal' in Le Messager des Fidèles (later Rev. Bén.), v (1888), pp. 106–16; H. P. Feasey, O.S.B., 'The Paschal Candle' in The Ecclesiastical Review, xxxiv (1906), pp. 353–71; id., 'The Paschal Preconium', ib., xxxvi (1907), pp. 248–61; H. J. Heuser, 'The Tenebrae and the New Light of the Holy Fire', ib., pp. 225–31. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1559–1571, s.v. 'Pâques'. See also bibl. to Exultet.

PASCHAL CHRONICLE. See Chronicon Paschale.

PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES. Among the many controversies in the early Church over the complex question as to how to settle the date of *Easter (the Christian 'Passover' or 'Pasch') were:

(1) Whether Easter should be observed, after the Jewish manner, on a fixed day of the lunar month (14 Nisan) or always on (the following) Sunday. The former practice was the ancient tradition in Asia Minor. On this dispute, see Quartodecimanism.

(2) The divergences arising from the *Antiochene and *Alexandrian methods of determining the 'Paschal Moon', the Antiochenes being content to accept the Jewish reckoning, whereas at Alexandria an independent calculation was made. Acc. to Alexandrian practice, Easter was always put after the vernal equinox. The decision at *Nicaea (325) in favour of Alexandrian practice was generally accepted, except by a small group of schismatics (*Audiani, Protopaschites).

(3) Differences in the 4th and 5th cents. between the Roman and Alexandrine methods of computation, through the use of divergent 'paschal cycles', Alexandria having long accepted the *Anatolian 19-year cycle, whereas Rome used an older 84-year cycle. Further, while the Alexandrians allowed Easter to be kept on the 15th of the month if a Sunday, it was never observed at Rome before the 16th; also the latest date for keeping Easter at Alexandria was 25 Apr., but at Rome 21 Apr. Thus we learn from St. *Ambrose (Ep. 23) that in 387 Easter was observed in Gaul on 21 Mar., in Italy on 18 Apr., and at Alexandria on 25 Apr. From the 5th cent., Rome increasingly followed the Alexandrian computation, which was formally adopted in the W. by *Dionysius Exiguus (525); but as late as 455 there had been seven days' difference between the Alexandrian and the Roman Easter.

(4) Until the time of *Charlemagne (c. 742–814), considerable uncertainty existed in Gaul, owing to the adoption of Victorius of Aquitaine's Paschal Tables (drawn up in Rome in 457, but never much used in the City) with their cycle of 532 years.

(5) The possession by the Celtic Churches of their own method of computation led to a long quarrel in the British Isles after the arrival of the Roman missionaries. As late as 651 Queen Eanfleda, who followed the Roman rule, was keeping *Palm Sunday and fasting on the same day that her husband, Oswy, King of Northumbria, was celebrating Easter (*Bede, H.E., iii. 25). The Roman custom was accepted for Northumbria by the Synod of *Whitby (664), and imposed on the whole of England by Abp. *Theodore in 669.

A large number of the older works on the subject are listed by H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1571–4, s.v. 'Pâques'. Since the researches of L. *Duchesne and B. Krusch, earlier works are of only historical interest. L. Duchesne, 'La Question de la Pâque au concile de Nicée' in R.Q.H., xxviii (1880), pp. 1–42. B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie. Der 84-jährige Ostercyclus und seine Quellen (1880). Id., 'Die Einführung des griechischen Paschalritus im Abendlande' in N.A., ix (1883), pp. 99–169. J. Schmid, Die Osterfrage auf dem ersten allgemeinen Konzil von Nicäa (Vienna, 1905). E. *Schwartz, Christliche und jüdische Ostertafeln (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., viii, Hft. 6; 1905); id., 'Osterbetrachtungen' in Z.N.T.W., vii (1906), pp. 1–33. Useful survey by C. W. Jones in his introduction to his edition of Bede's Opera de Temporibus (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, xli; 1943), pp. 3–122. V. Grumel, A.A., 'Le Problème de la date pascale aux IIIe et IVe siècles' in Revue des Études Byzantines, xviii (1960), pp. 163–78. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1948–70, s.v. 'Pâques, Les Controverses pascales'. See bibl. to Easter and Quartodecimanism.

PASCHAL LAMB. Originally, the lamb eaten at the Jewish *Passover. The lambs were sacrificed in the *Temple on the afternoon of 14 *Nisan, then taken by the people to their homes and eaten during the night (cf. Exod. 12). The fulfilment of the Jewish Passover in Christ (cf. 1 Cor. 5. 7, 'Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us'; Jn. 1. 29, 'Behold the Lamb of God') has made Him for Christians the 'Paschal Lamb'. See also Lamb.

PASCHALTIDE, the period in the ecclesiastical year immediately after *Easter. It is devoted to the celebration of the victory of the Risen Christ, who by His Passion has overcome sin and death and brought the Church into existence. The liturgy is characterized by the frequent recitation of *Alleluia, and there are certain other features peculiar to the season, such as the singing of *Vidi Aquam in place of Ps. 51 during the *Asperges. The proper colour for Paschaltide is white. In the RC Church it extends from Easter Sunday to *Pentecost; the C of E follows the practice, dating from the Middle Ages, of reckoning Eastertide from Easter Sunday to the Saturday before *Trinity Sunday. See also Pentecost.

PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE, the principal celebration of Easter, traditionally observed during the night of *Holy Saturday/Easter Sunday. In the 2nd cent. there is clear evidence that there was a single festival celebrating both the Passion and the Resurrection of Christ, and the same situation is prob. reflected in various NT passages (e.g. 1 Cor. 5. 7 f.). The Peri Pascha of *Melito of Sardis supports the suggestion that this unitary feast developed out of a Christianized observance of the Jewish *Passover ritual. By the time of *Tertullian (d. c. 225) the observance lasted throughout the night and was closely associated with *Baptism, an association prob. already discernible in Rom. 6. The elaborate description of the rite of Baptism in *Hippolytus's Apostolic Tradition is almost certainly that of a Paschal Vigil Service, in which the Baptism at cockcrow is followed by the Eucharist. In the 4th cent., with the development of the liturgical year and the separate observance of *Good Friday, the main emphasis of the Paschal Vigil Service came to centre upon the Resurrection. About the same time the *Paschal Candle, with its symbolism of light, was introduced. In the W. Church the service was put back to the Saturday afternoon in the 10th cent. and to the Saturday morning in the 14th, thereby losing the point of much of its symbolism. Only with the revision of the Holy Week liturgy in the RC Church in 1951 was the Paschal Vigil Service restored to the late evening of Holy Saturday.

The Paschal Vigil Service has been subjected to various modifications through the ages, but the basic pattern has remained. Acc. to the present RC rite, the celebrant blesses the New Fire outside the church, marks the Paschal Candle with the sign of the Cross, the Greek letters *alpha and omega, and the date of the year, and then lights it from the New Fire. (Since 1970 a simpler blessing of the Candle has been permitted.) The deacon (or in his absence the celebrant) carries the lighted Candle through a darkened church, making three stations during which he sings 'Lumen Christi' ('Light of Christ'); candles held by members of the congregation are lit from the Paschal Candle. When the procession reaches the sanctuary the lights in the church are lit. The deacon then sings the *Exultet, after which the people's candles are laid aside. Nine scriptural readings normally follow, interspersed with responsorial Psalms or periods of silence. Of the seven OT readings the first three record the story of creation, *Abraham's sacrifice of *Isaac, and the crossing of the Red Sea during the *Exodus; the other four are prophecies of redemption. (Some may be omitted.) The NT readings are the passage about Christ's resurrection and our Baptism in Rom. 6. 3–11, followed by a solemn *Alleluia, and one of the Gospel accounts of the Resurrection. A homily is then delivered. The next part of the service is connected with Baptism and normally takes place round the *font, to which a procession is made behind the Paschal Candle. During the procession the *Litany of the Saints is sung. The Baptismal Water is then blessed; during the blessing the Paschal Candle is lowered into the water and raised again. Baptism is administered to any candidates and if a bishop (or priest with a faculty to *confirm) is present, any newly baptized adults are confirmed. (If there are no candidates for Baptism, it is permitted to use a simple blessing of the water.) All present then renew their baptismal vows in answer to questions put by the celebrant, who sprinkles the people with the newly blessed water. The service concludes with the remaining parts of the Easter Eucharist, during which the newly baptized make their Communion.

For bibliography see Easter.

PASCHASINUS (c. 440), Bp. of Lilybaeum (now Marsala) in Sicily. Pope *Leo the Great assisted him when his diocese was devastated by the Vandals. When asked by Leo his opinion in the *Paschal Controversy, he replied in favour of the Alexandrian as against the Roman usage. In 451 he was one of the Papal legates at the Council of *Chalcedon, where he vigorously objected to the presence of *Dioscorus. Nothing is known about him after the Council.

The chief source is his correspondence with Leo ('Leo', Ep. 3, 'De Paschate anni 444' and Leo, Ep. 88) and scattered references in the Acta of Chalcedon (q.v.).

PASCHASIUS RADBERTUS, St. (c. 790–865), *Benedictine theologian. He entered the monastery at *Corbie under its abbot, Adalhard, whom he accompanied into Saxony in 822. Elected abbot 843/4, he attended the Council of Paris in 847, but resigned in 849 and henceforth devoted himself entirely to study. His works include, besides a Life of abbot Adalhard, a Commentary on the Book of Lamentations, notable for its concentration on the literal sense, and a Commentary on St. Matthew, in which he made careful use of earlier authorities. This was the main source of the *Glossa ordinaria. He is best known, however, for his treatise 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' (831, revised 844), which was composed for the instruction of the Saxon monks. This work is the first doctrinal monograph on the Eucharist. In maintaining the real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist, Radbertus specified it further as the flesh born of Mary, which had suffered on the Cross and risen again, and which is miraculously multiplied by the omnipotence of God at each consecration. At the same time he insisted on the spiritual mode of this Presence, but without defining it, though there seem to be indications of his implicit acceptance of the later doctrine of *transubstantiation. By eating this flesh men are incorporated into the mystical Body of Christ which is the Church. Radbertus's doctrine was sharply attacked by *Ratramnus and *Rabanus Maurus, who opposed to his emphatic realism, which was sometimes marred by unfortunate comparisons and illustrations, their more spiritual conceptions of the Divine presence. It is now generally accepted that he was the author of Pseudo-*Jerome's ep. ix, 'Cogitis me', an important document in the history of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM in the West. Feast day, 26 Apr.

Collection of his works ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J. (Paris, 1618); repr. with additional works from other sources in J. P. Migne, PL, cxx. Crit. edd. of his Poems by L. Traube in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 38–53, with further notes, p. 746 f.; of various 'Epistolae' (incl. extracts of his works) by E. Duemmler, ib., Epistolae, vi (1925), pp. 133–49; and of his 'Epitaphium Arsenii' by id. (Abh. (Berl.), aus den Jahren 1899 und 1900 (1900), Hft. 2); and of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by B. Paulus, O.S.B. (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xvi; 1969); also of 12th–13th cent. life of Paschasius, ed. O. Holder-Egger, M.G.H., Scriptores, xv (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 452–4. A. Ripberger (ed.), Der Pseudo-Hieronymus-Brief IX 'Cogitis Me'. Ein erster marianischer Traktat des Mittelalters von Paschasius Radbert (Spicilegium Friburgense, ix; 1962). Studies, mainly of his Eucharistic doctrine, by E. Choisy (Geneva, 1888), H. Peltier (Strassburg thesis; Amiens, 1938), W. Kahles (Emsdetten, 1938), and C. Gliozzo (Palermo, 1945). H. Weisweiler, S.J., 'Paschasius Radbertus als Vermittler des Gedankengutes der karolingischen Renaissance in den Matthäuskommentaren des Kreises um Anselm von Laon' in Scholastik, xxxv (1960), pp. 363–402. D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, i (1909), pp. 216–22; J. Geiselmann, Die Eucharistielehre der Vorscholastik (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, xv, Hftt. 3–4; 1926), passim: see index. H. Peltier in D.T.C., xiii (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1628–39, s.v. 'Radbert, Paschase'.

PASSION, The (Lat. passio, lit. 'suffering'). The term is used absolutely of the Lord's Redemptive Suffering during the last days of His earthly life, and esp. of His Crucifixion. The word 'Pasch' or 'Passover' (Gk. Πάσχα), commonly applied in the early Church to the joint annual commemoration of the Redemptive Death and Resurrection of Christ (i.e. to 'Good Friday' and 'Easter' together), was often held by a false etymology to be derived from the Greek πάσχω ('to suffer)'. See also Paschal Vigil Service, Passion Sunday, Passiontide.

PASSION, Musical Settings of the. From at least the 4th cent. the Gospel narratives of the Passion were recited in church during *Holy Week with musical settings, St. *Gregory Nazianzen, e.g., recording such a recitation with choruses interspersed. During the Middle Ages all or part of the narrative was chanted to plainsong, and in the 15th cent. motet choruses were added. About 1525 Johann Walther (1496–1570), M. *Luther's musical adviser, produced a Passion in German, the first to be written in a vernacular language, while in the next cent. Heinrich Schütz (1585–1672) developed the practice of assigning the characters to different vocal soloists. From the end of the 17th cent. lyric poems were sung in comment and chorales were added to be sung by the congregation; and an orchestra was also introduced. The greatest Passions of this type were the 'St. John Passion' (1723) and esp. the 'St. Matthew Passion' (1729) of J. S. *Bach.

[L.] O. Kade, Die ältere Passionskomposition bis zum Jahre 1631 (Gütersloh, 1893). W. Lott, 'Zur Geschichte der Passionskomposition von 1650–1800' in Archiv für Musikwissenschaft, iii (1921), pp. 285–320. B. Smallmann, The Background of Passion Music. J. S. Bach and his Predecessors (1957). C. S. Terry–W. L. Smoldon in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (ed. 5 by E. Blom), vi (1954), pp. 577–87, s.v. 'Passion Music', with bibl.; B. Stäblein and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, x (1962), cols. 886–933, with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Oratorio, Bach and other individual composers.

PASSION PLAYS. See Drama; also Oberammergau.

PASSION SUNDAY. The fifth Sunday in Lent, sometimes called *Judica Sunday from the *Introit for the day. In the RC Church it was suppressed as a separate observance in 1969. In the C of E, the title was printed in the 1928 BCP and is widely used. For the liturgical usages which began on this day, see Passiontide.

PASSIONAL (Lat. Liber Passionarius). The word is used for various Latin liturgical books:

(1) The series of lections from the Lives or Acts of the Saints read at *Mattins on their feast days.

(2) A book containing the narratives of the Lord's Passion from the four Gospels.

(3) The particular *Evangeliarium, also known as 'King Aethelstan's Book', on which the English kings from Henry I to Edward III took the Coronation Oath. It contained the Gospel of St. John complete, followed by the Passions of Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

PASSIONISTS. The popular name for the members of the 'Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ'. The congregation was founded by St. *Paul of the Cross, who drew up its rule in 1720 and erected the first house, the 'Retreat' on Monte Argentaro, in 1737. After some mitigations the rule was approved by *Benedict XIV in 1741 and 1746, and in 1769 confirmed by *Clement XIV, who at the same time conferred the privileges of the old orders on the new congregation. It soon spread throughout Europe and beyond. In 1841 the Passionists came to England, where they were the first religious after the Reformation to lead a strict community life and wear their habit in public. Among them was Fr. Dominic Barberi, who received J. H. *Newman into the RC Church. The Passionists stress the contemplative life as the foundation of their apostolic work; and they take a further fourth vow promising to further the memory of Christ's Passion in the souls of the faithful. Their chief activities are the giving of missions and retreats. Their habit is black with the badge of the Passion, a white heart with the inscription 'Jesu XPI Passio', surmounted by a cross. The Passionist nuns, founded by St. Paul of the Cross together with Mother Mary Crucifixa in 1771, are strictly enclosed and contemplative; they, too, take a vow to practise devotion to the Passion.

F. Ward, C.P., The Passionists (New York, 1923). Gaëtan du Saint Nom de Marie, C.P., S. Paul de la Croix et l'Institut des Passionnistes (Tirlemont, 1934). E. Zoffoli, C.P., I Passionisti. Spiritualità, apostolato (1955). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 341–5. A. Devine, C.P., in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 521–5, s.v.; C. J. Yuhaus, C.P., in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 1066–8, s.v.

PASSIONS. The detailed and professedly contemporary accounts of the early Christian martyrdoms. They are commonly distinguished from the '*Acts' (q.v.), in which the narrative follows (or, at least, is intended to give the impression of following) the shorthand report taken down for official purposes.

PASSIONTIDE. Traditionally the last two weeks of Lent, extending from *Passion Sunday to *Holy Saturday. It was customary during this period for all crucifixes, pictures, and images in church to be veiled in purple (the crucifix only being unveiled on *Good Friday), and for the '*Gloria Patri' to be omitted from the Psalms, the *Introit, and the *Venite. Since 1969 in the RC Church Passion Sunday as such has been dropped from the calendar and the observance combined with that of *Palm Sunday; the veiling of crucifixes etc. is optional and in any case confined to *Holy Week; and there are no observances peculiar to the period as a whole. In English pre-Reformation practice the Lenten array of unbleached linen gave place in Passiontide to a deep red as the liturgical colour, but in modern usage Lenten purple continues throughout, except on *Palm Sunday, *Maundy Thursday, and Good Friday.

PASSOVER. The Jewish festival celebrated every spring in connexion with the *Exodus. Acc. to the account of its institution in Exod. 12, a lamb is to be slain in each household and its blood sprinkled on the lintel and door-posts of the house in memory of the fact that when the first-born in Egypt were slain, the Lord 'passed over' the houses which were so marked. In the Deuteronomic account (Deut. 16) the sacrifice is no longer to be performed in private houses but 'at the place where the Lord thy God shall place his name' [i.e. the *Temple]. In both these passages and elsewhere in the OT and the papyri in which the Passover is mentioned, the eating of the *Paschal lamb is associated with the use of unleavened bread. Many modern scholars, following J. *Wellhausen, have argued that the original setting of the Passover was the sacrifice of firstlings in a nomadic community; this festival is held to have become joined with an originally independent ceremony concerned with unleavened bread, which derived from an agricultural rite associated with the beginning of the barley-harvest. J. B. Segal, however, has argued, on the basis of certain similarities with the ritual of the feast of *Tabernacles, that the Passover itself was an agricultural feast celebrated at the time when the work begun at Tabernacles was reaching fruition. Whatever its origin, by later Biblical times Passover had come to be the principal Jewish festival of the year, celebrated on the night of 14/15 Nisan. After the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70, the Jews continued to observe the feast in a modified form which omitted the sacrifice of a lamb, using only a bone in its place. Details of the later observance were laid down in the *Mishnah tractate Pesahim.

Whether the *Last Supper was a Passover Meal (as the chronology of the Synoptic Gospels would suggest) or not (as St. John), it is clear that the Eucharist was instituted at Passover time, and Christian writers from St. *Paul (1 Cor. 5. 7) onwards have stressed that the death of Christ was the fulfilment of the sacrifice foreshadowed by the Passover. It is probable also that the earliest celebrations of the Christian Easter (the *Paschal Vigil service) developed from the Jewish Passover rite, while the account of the Exodus and the institution of the Passover have from a very early date provided one of the readings in the Paschal liturgy of the W. Church. See also Eucharist, Paschal Lamb.

T. H. Gaster, Passover. Its History and Traditions (New York, 1949; London, 1958). J. B. Segal, The Hebrew Passover from the Earliest Times to A.D. 70 (London Oriental Series, xii; 1963). The early history is discussed in all commentaries on Exodus and Leviticus. Good summary in G. B. *Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament (1925), esp. pp. 337–97. For post-OT period, W. O. E. Oesterley–G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue (1907), pp. 355–66. Christine Mohrmann, 'Pascha, Passio, Transitus' in E.L., lxvi (1952), pp. 37–52. J. Jeremias in T.W.B., v (1954), pp. 895–903, s.v. πάσχα. For discussions on the relation of the Last Supper to the Passover, see Last Supper.

PASTOPHORION. (Gk. παστοφόριον). In the E. Church, the sacristy adjacent to the apse, used at least from the end of the 4th cent. (Apostolic Constitutions, VIII. xiii) for the reservation of the Sacrament.

PASTOR AETERNUS. The title (from its opening words) of the 'First Dogmatic Constitution on the Church of Christ', issued at the concluding session of the First *Vatican Council on 18 July 1870. It defined the primacy and infallibility of the Pope.

Text in A.S.S., vi (1870), pp. 40–7, and in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentiorum. Collectio Lacensis, vii (Freiburg i.Br., 1890), cols. 426–32; also pr. Denz.–Schön. (ed. 32, 1963), pp. 595–601 (Nos. 3050–3075), and, with Eng.

tr., in [E.] Cuthbert Butler, O.S.B., The Vatican Council, ii (1930), pp. 276–95.

PASTOR OF HERMAS. See Shepherd of Hermas.

PASTOR, LUDWIG (1854–1928), historian of the Popes. He was a native of Aachen and, though his father had been a Protestant, was brought up a Catholic after his mother had become a widow. At the age of 19 he conceived the plan of writing a history of the Popes. After studying at Louvain, Vienna, and other universities he continued his researches at Rome. In 1880 he became lecturer at Innsbruck university, where he was appointed professor in 1887. In 1901 he became director of the Austrian Historical Institute in Rome, and in 1920 Austrian ambassador to the Holy See. His principal work is the Geschichte der Päpste seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (16 vols., 1886–1933), which has been translated into several languages. Based on extensive research in the archives of over 200 European cities, it aims at giving in vivid language a balanced representation of the history of Catholicism in modern times.

Diaries, Letters, and Memoirs ed. W. Wühr (Heidelberg, 1950), with bibl. pp. 918–20. Eng. tr. of his Geschichte der Päpste by F. I. Antrobus, Cong. Orat., R. F. Kerr, Cong. Orat., E. Graf, O.S.B., and E. F. Peeler (40 vols., 1891–1953). Appreciations by J. P. Dengel in Hist. J., xlix (1929), pp. 1–32; W. Goetz in Historische Zeitschrift, cxlv (1932), pp. 550–63 (cf. ib., cxlvi, 1932, pp, 510–15); and A. Pelzer in R.H.E., xlvi (1951), pp. 192–201, with reff. F. Engel-Janosi, Die diplomatische Mission Ludwig von Pastors beim heiligen Stuhle, 1920–1928 (Sb. (Wien), ccliv, Abh. 5; 1968). F. Cognassi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 925–8, s.v.

PASTORAL EPISTLES, The. A common designation for the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, q.v.

PASTORAL LETTERS (Lat. litterae pastorales). Official Letters addressed by a bishop to all members of his diocese. Many RC bishops make a practice of publishing such letters to be read from the pulpit, e.g. at the beginning of *Lent. They are commonly distinguished from 'encyclical letters' (litterae encyclicae) from a bishop, addressed only to his clergy.

PASTORAL STAFF. Another name for the *Crosier (q.v.). The distinction drawn by many 19th cent. antiquarians between the staff and the crosier was without authority. See Crosier.

PASTORALIA. The branch of theology concerned with the principles regulating the life and conduct of the parish priest. Among the subjects which it normally includes are: (1) the methods of public worship and administration of the Sacraments; (2) preaching and sermon construction; (3) the care of the sick and dying; (4) the study of moral theology. All exponents of the subject are agreed that the personal training of the pastor himself in prayer and devotion to his calling are the pre-condition of all success.

PATARENES. The term 'Patareni' first appears in the 1050s at Milan as the designation of an extreme reforming movement enjoying considerable support at Rome; it contended first for clerical *celibacy and soon also for the extirpation of *simony. The derivation of the term is uncertain, but it is widely supposed to be from the name of the rag-pickers' quarter in Milan. Led initially by the clerks Arialdus and Landulf, the Patarenes played an important part in Milanese politics; they invited Roman intervention in the hitherto largely independent Ambrosian church and violently resisted every manifestation of secular power over its affairs. Matters came to a head in 1071 when the Emp. *Henry IV invested a new archbishop. Under a new, lay leader, named Erlembald, the Patarenes demanded a free canonical election, propagated their movement elsewhere in Lombardy, and became Pope *Gregory VII's allies against Henry. With Erlembald's death in 1075 they suffered a crippling blow, but the movement persisted at Milan into the early 12th century.

In the 1170s the name Patareni reappeared as a general label for heretics, especially the *Cathari in Italy, e.g. in can. 27 of the *Third Lateran Council (1179). It long remained current, with many variations of spelling, to describe both western heretics and the *Bogomils of Bosnia and Dalmatia.

C. Violante, La Pataria milanese e la riforma ecclesiastica, i (Istituto storico Italiano per il medio evo, Studi storici, xi–xiii; 1955). Id., 'I laici nel movimento patarino' in I laici nella 'societas christiana' dei secoli xi e xii (Miscellanea del Centro di studi medioevali, v; 1968), pp. 597–697. H. E. J. Cowdrey, 'The Papacy, the Patarenes and the Church of Milan' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, xviii (1968), pp. 25–48. J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (Cambridge, 1932), pp. 80–2, 143–57. On the 12th cent. Patarenes, A. Borst, Die Katharer (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, xii; 1953), p. 250 f. É. Amann in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 224–6, s.v. 'Patarins', with details on sources; C. Violante in N.C.E., x (1967), p. 1084 f., s.v.

PATEN. The dish, now usually of silver or gold, on which the bread is placed at the celebration of the Eucharist. In the early centuries patens were of sufficient size to take the large loaves offered by the people and distributed at the Communion, but their modern counterparts in the W. are usually quite small, esp. where, as is always the case in the RC Church, wafer bread is used. The corresponding vessel in the E., the *discos (δίσκος), is larger and often possesses a foot.

Rohault, iv [1887], pp. 154–67, with plates cccxv–cccxvii. Braun, A.G., pp. 197–246, with plates 41–7. W. W. Watts, Catalogue of Chalices and other Communion Vessels (Victoria and Albert Museum, 1922), pp. 39–46. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 2392–414, s.v. 'Patène'.

PATER NOSTER. See Lord's Prayer, The.

PATMORE, COVENTRY KERSEY DIGHTON (1823–96), poet. He was educated privately and began to write poetry at an early age. In 1846 he was appointed supernumerary assistant in the printed book department of the British Museum and filled this post for nearly 20 years. He married the daughter of a *Congregationalist minister in 1847, and in 1854 and the following years there appeared the various parts of The Angel in the House, a set of poems forming a panegyric on married love. After the death of his wife in 1862, he went to Rome, where in 1864 he was received into the RC Church and in the same year married a second time. In 1877 he published The Unknown Eros, a collection of odes, some of them of great musical beauty and almost mystical depth. In 1880 he lost his second wife and in the following year married for the third time. His last book, Rod, Root, and Flower (1895), consists chiefly of meditations in prose on the same lines as the mystical poems in The Unknown Eros. It probably contains much of the substance of Sponsa Dei, a work he destroyed. As a religious poet Patmore is often of impressive beauty, though his conception of 'the relation of the soul to Christ as his betrothed wife' is sometimes unduly laboured.

Collected edd. of his Poems, 4 vols., London, 1879; repr., 2 vols., ib., 1886; London, 1906, with introd. by B. Champneys, pp. xvii–xlvii, and ed. F. Page (Oxford Edition of Standard Authors, London, 1949). B. Champneys, Memoirs and Correspondence of Coventry Patmore (2 vols., 1900). Other studies by E. Gosse (London, 1905), O. [H.] Burdett (ib., 1921), F. Page (ib., 1933), Derek [C.] Patmore (ib., 1949), E. J. Oliver (ib., 1956), and J. C. Reid (ib., 1957). R. Garnett in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 249–52. B. I. Evans in C.B.E.L., iii, p. 270 f.

PATMOS. The small island in the Aegean off the coast of Asia Minor on which St. *John the Divine saw the *Apocalypse (Rev. 1. 9; the sole NT ref.). Acc. to a tradition found in St. *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer., V. xxx), *Eusebius (H.E., III. xviii) and St. *Jerome (De Vir. Ill., 9), John was exiled to Patmos under *Domitian (A.D. 81–96) and returned to *Ephesus under Nerva (A.D. 96–8). The apocryphal 'Acts of *John' (q.v.) narrate several miracles which the Apostle performed at Patmos. In 1088 St. Christodulus, who had been granted a bull by the Emp. Alexis Comnenus (1081–1118), founded a monastery on a peak in the middle of the island, which rapidly grew in importance; it has survived to the present day. The monastery amassed a valuable collection of MSS. and, though many have since been dispersed (the famous 9th cent. codex of *Plato is in the *Bodleian), a substantial number remain. The Abbot is directly subject to the Patr. of *Constantinople. A grotto in the hill-side (τὸ σπήλαιον τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως) is pointed out as the place where St. John received his vision.

Primary docc. in F. Miklosich–J. Müller (edd.), Acta et diplomata graeca medii aevi, vi (Vienna, 1890). V. Guérin, Description de l'ile de Patmos et de l'ile de Samos (1856), pp. 1–120; W. E. Geil, The Isle called Patmos (1897). H. F. Tozer, The Islands of the Aegean (1890), pp. 178–98. G. Hofmann, S.J., Patmos und Rom. Darstellung der Beziehungen zwischen dem griechischen Johanneskloster und der römischen Kirche (Orientalia Christiana, fasc. 41; 1928). Catalogue of the MSS. of the monastery by J. Sakkelion (Athens, 1890). J. Frings, 'Das Patmosexil des Apostels Johannes nach Apc. 1, 9' in Th.Q., civ (1923), pp. 20–31. F. C. *Conybeare in H.D.B., iii (1900), p. 693 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiii (pt. 1; 1938), cols. 2424–2440, s.v.; J. Schmidt in P.W., xviii (pt. 4; 1949), cols. 2174–2191, s.v.; G. Campos, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 73–81, s.v. See also Comm. to Revelation, Book of.

PATON, JOHN GIBSON (1824–1907), missionary to the New Hebrides. Born at Kirkmanhoe, near Dumfries, of parents who belonged to the rigid '*Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland', he gained his education under great difficulties. After ten years as a missionary in a poor part of Glasgow, he offered himself in 1857 as an assistant to John Inglis, the sole missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in foreign work, for service in the New Hebrides. He arrived with his wife at Aneityum on 30 Aug. 1858; shortly afterwards they moved to the island of Tanna, where they were the only white people in a land of very primitive savages. In the next year his wife gave birth to a child and both died. In 1861, after many trials, he just escaped with his life from Tanna and made his way to New South Wales. Here he successfully aroused interest in missionary work in the New Hebrides; and after a visit to Scotland, where he married again, he returned to the Pacific on mission service in 1865. From 1866 to 1881 he had his headquarters on the island of Aniwa, subsequently at Melbourne. His autobiography, written in the form of notes, was put into shape by his brother, the Rev. James Paton (1843–1906), and from its publication in 1889 did much to stimulate support for his cause.

The principal material is to be found in his own works. Popular life by C. D. Michael (London [1912]). Sir Everard im Thurn in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii (1912), p. 77 f.

PATON, WILLIAM (1886–1943), *Presbyterian minister and writer on missionary subjects. Born in London, he was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, and Westminster College, Cambridge. In 1911 he became Missionary Secretary to the *Student Christian Movement in England; he maintained a keen interest in missionary and ecumenical activities throughout his life. His earliest books on this subject are Jesus Christ and the World's Religions (1916) and Social Ideas in India (1919). From 1922 to 1927 he was General Secretary of the National Christian Council of India, Burma, and Ceylon, and subsequently held the position of Secretary to the International Missionary Council and Editor of the International Review of Missions. Among his later publications are Alexander Duff (1922), The Faiths of Mankind (1932), World Community (1938), The Message of the World-wide Church (1940), and The Church and the New Order (1941).

Life by Margaret Sinclair (London, 1949). N. Micklem in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 662–3.

PATRIARCH (Biblical). Literally the father or ruler of a family or tribe. In the Scriptures the term is applied to the antediluvian fathers of the human race, and, more frequently, to *Abraham, *Isaac, *Jacob, and the twelve sons of Jacob (Gen. 12–50; cf. Acts 7. 8 f., Heb. 7. 4). In Acts 2. 29 the word is applied to *David.

R. de Vaux, O.P., 'Les Patriarches hébreux et les découvertes modernes' in R.Bibl., liii (1946), pp. 321–48, lv (1948), pp. 321–47, and lvi (1949), pp. 5–36; H. H. Rowley, 'Recent Discovery and the Patriarchal Age' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxii (1950), pp. 44–79. W. McKane, Studies in the Patriarchal Narratives (Edinburgh, 1979). H. Cazelles in Dict. Bibl., Supp., vii (1966), cols. 81–156, s.v.

PATRIARCH (Ecclesiastical). A title dating from the 6th cent., for the bishops of the five chief sees of Christendom: *Rome, *Alexandria, *Antioch, *Constantinople, and *Jerusalem. Their jurisdiction extended over the adjoining territories, and included the right of ordaining the '*metropolitans', i.e. bishops of the principal sees under them, of trying the same when accused, and of hearing appeals from their judgements. The earliest bishops exercising such powers, though not so named, were those of Rome (over the whole or part of Italy), Alexandria (over Egypt and Libya), and Antioch (over large parts of Asia Minor). These three were recognized by the Council of *Nicaea (325). But at *Chalcedon (451) Jerusalem secured recognition as well as Constantinople, whose jurisdiction over Thrace, Asia, and Pontus was exercised henceforward in spite of protests from Rome. The title Patriarch has been given in more recent times to the heads of certain other *autocephalous Churches in the E. (*Russia, *Serbia, *Rumania, *Bulgaria, *Georgia).

See also Oecumenical Patriarch.

PATRIARCHS, The Testaments of the Twelve. See Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, The.

PATRICK, St. (prob. c. 390 – c. 460), 'Apostle of the Irish'. Patrick was born in Britain, the son of a local decurio (member of a town council) called Calpornius, who was also a deacon of the church, and who had a property near the village (vicus) of Bannavem Taburniae, of which the site is unknown. Patrick was brought up as a Christian, though in no tradition of strong piety. At the age of sixteen he was captured by Irish pirates and spent six years as a herd among 'the children of the wood of Foclut', in a district in ancient Ireland called Tirawley, in the vicinity of the modern Killala in the north of Co. Mayo. In his captivity he turned earnestly to God, and eventually received a Divine message that he was to escape. He made his way to some port 200 miles away, no doubt on the SE. coast of Ireland, persuaded some sailors (perhaps on a raiding expedition) to give him a passage, and landed somewhere on the coast of Britain. After adventures in which he felt himself sustained and protected by Divine help, he separated from the sailors and returned to his kinsfolk, a changed man. He underwent training for the Christian ministry, which must have consisted mainly of learning a rather conservative rule of faith and acquiring an intimate knowledge of the Latin Bible; it did nothing to compensate for his lack of higher education, the absence of which he regretted all his life. It is likely that he received this training in Britain, not in Gaul, though he must have paid at least one visit to Gaul, probably a short one. At some point he was sent from Britain as 'bishop in Ireland' (his own title, Epistle 1), and he spent the rest of his life there, evangelizing, conciliating local chieftains and educating their sons, ordaining clergy, and instituting monks and nuns. It is probable that he set up his episcopal see at *Armagh. One of his letters has survived, written in Latin to a British chieftain called Coroticus, whose identity is disputed. Towards the end of his life Patrick wrote, also in Latin, a moving personal account of his spiritual pilgrimage, called his Confession, perhaps in response to a serious attack on his character and career which was certainly made on him at some point during his episcopacy. He probably died about 460. The place of his burial is unknown; it was certainly not Armagh.

Discussions on the chronology of St. Patrick's life centre on the reference in the chronicle of *Prosper of Aquitaine to the sending of *Palladius by Pope *Celestine I (422–31) to be 'first bishop to the Irish believing in Christ'. Though there is no certain connection between Palladius and Patrick, it is generally agreed that Patrick's mission to Ireland cannot be much later than 431. The date of his birth is inferred from this date, and the date of his death therefore is not likely to have been later than c. 460. The date 493, found in the Irish Annals, is no longer generally accepted.

These few facts about St. Patrick were embellished by his biographers, of whom the earliest lived in the second half of the 7th cent. The stories of his education in Gaul at *Lérins or Auxerre (under Amator or *Germanus), of his being sent to Ireland by Pope Celestine, of his encounter with the 'High King' of Ireland, Laoghaire, of his visits to Saul or to Slemish, of his vigil on Croagh Patrick, are all derived from much later tradition or legend whose value remains uncertain. Many of them are contained in the Book of *Armagh. It is difficult to ascribe to a period as early as the 5th cent. the composition of the '*Breastplate' or any of the collections of canons attributed to Patrick. Feast day, 17 Mar.

See also St. Patrick's Purgatory.

Lat. Writings ed. N. J. D. White in Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, xxv (1905), pp. 201–326; popular ed. by id., 'Texts for Students', iv, 1918; Eng. tr. by id., ib., v, 1918, and, with Life by Muirchu (7th cent.) and full notes, id., St. Patrick. His Writings and Life (Translations of Christian Literature, Series v, 1920); with fuller apparatus criticus by L. Bieler (ed.), 'Libri Epistolarum Sancti Patricii Episcopi. Introduction, Text and Commentary' (linguistic), in Classica et Mediaevalia. Revue danoise de Philologie et d'Histoire, xi (1950), pp. 1–150, and xii (1951), pp. 79–214. Eng. tr. of his writings by id. (A.C.W., xvii; 1953). W. Stokes, The Tripartite Life of Patrick with other Documents relating to that Saint (R.S., 1887); Kathleen Mulchrone, The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick (Dublin, 1939; text and introd. only publd.). L. Bieler, Codices Patriciani Latini. A Descriptive Catalogue of Latin Manuscripts Relating to St. Patrick (Dublin, 1942), with additions in Anal. Boll., lxiii (1945), pp. 242–56. J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (New York, 1929), pp. 331–56 and passim (see index). J. H. Todd, St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1864); J. B. Bury, The Life of St. Patrick and his Place in History (1905); E. MacNeill, St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1934); T. F. O'Rahilly, The Two Patricks. A Lecture on the History of Christianity in Fifth Century Ireland (Dublin, 1942); L. Bieler, The Life and Legend of St. Patrick. Problems of Modern Scholarship (1949); J. Carney, The Problem of St. Patrick (Dublin, 1961); D. A. Binchy, 'Patrick and his biographers: ancient and modern' in Studia Hibernica, ii (1962), pp. 7–173; R. P. C. Hanson, Saint Patrick. His Origins and Career (Oxford, 1968). Christine Mohrmann, The Latin of Saint Patrick (Dublin, 1961).

PATRICK, SIMON (1625–1707), Bp. of *Ely. A native of Gainsborough, Lincs., he was educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of the '*Cambridge Platonist', John *Smith. In 1648 he was ordained a Presbyterian minister; but the study of H. *Hammond and H. *Thorndike determined him to seek episcopal ordination. In 1654 he received holy orders from J. *Hall, Bp. of *Norwich, and became successively vicar of Battersea (1658), rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden (1662), and Dean of *Peterborough (1679), which he held together with his previous living. He was a prominent and sincere *Latitudinarian. In 1687 he resisted the reading of the *Declaration of Indulgence, and in 1688 took the Oath of Allegiance to William and Mary. In the same year he was appointed Bp. of *Chichester. He was translated to Ely in 1691. As bishop he was a warm supporter of the *S.P.C.K., which he helped to found, and of the *S.P.G. He wrote extensively.

In 1664 he published The Parable of the Pilgrim, an allegory similar to, but not influenced by, J. *Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. He commented on and paraphrased all the books of the OT from Genesis to the Song of Solomon (10 vols., 1695–1710), and wrote many controversial treatises against both *Nonconformists and RCs, among them A Friendly Debate between a Conformist and a Nonconformist (1669), A Full View of the Doctrines and Practices of the Ancient Church (1688), and Texts Examined which Papists cite out of the Bible (also 1688). He also published a number of devotional books.

Works, incl. his autobiography, which was first publd. Oxford, 1839, but excluding his commentaries, ed. A. Taylor, 9 vols., Oxford, 1858. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 45–7.

PATRIMONY OF ST. PETER, The. The estates belonging to the Church of Rome. Although the Church of Rome had long been wealthy, persecutions had prevented the acquisition of permanent property until an edict of *Constantine (Cod. Theod., XVI. ii. 4) made it legal to leave property to the Church. In the following period, up to 600, economic conditions encouraged large donations of land and commendations. Parallels between the patrimonium ecclesiae and the patrimonium principis suggest that the *Donation of Constantine, though forged, represented the truth in substance and that much Imperial property was given to the Church. By gifts and inheritance the patrimony came to include lands in Sicily (confiscated by the Emp. *Leo III in 730), Illyria, Gaul, Corsica, Sardinia, around Hippo in Africa, as well as vast estates in Italy. They were governed by a centralized administration which facilitated the extension of Papal influence. The revenues were employed not only for administrative purposes, but widely for the relief of the poor, redemption of captives and later for defence. As the further patrimonies were conquered, Popes concentrated on the defence of the regions round Rome, esp. the exarchate of *Ravenna and the Duchy of Rome. When the castle of Sutri was captured in 727, the Lombard king Luitprand 'restored' it 'as a gift to the Blessed Apostles Peter and Paul'. In 753 *Stephen II appealed for protection to *Pepin, King of the Franks, who agreed to give the Pope certain lands to be conquered from the Lombards. By the Donations of 754 and 756 Pepin gave to St. Peter territory in the exarchate of Ravenna, the Duchy of Rome and the districts of Venetia and Istria, and, renouncing the Byzantine authority, founded the papal states independent of any temporal power.

The term was applied in medieval usage to the environs of Rome. It is used loosely for the *States of the Church (q.v.) as a whole.

The primary sources include the *Liber Censuum and the *Liber Pontificalis (qq.v.). P. Fabre, De Patrimoniis Romanae Ecclesiae usque ad Aetatem Carolinorum (Paris thesis; Lille, 1892). G. Schnürer, Die Entstehung des Kirchenstaates (1894). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (1898; ed. 2, 1904; Eng. tr., 1908). A. Crivellucci, 'Delle origini dello stato pontificio' in Studi storici, x (1901), pp. 3–39, 289–329, xi (1902), pp. 37–86, 409–39, xii (1903), pp. 113–40, 413–52, xiv (1905), pp. 3–27. E. Spearing, The Patrimony of the Roman Church in the Time of Gregory the Great (posthumously ed. Evelyn M. Spearing, 1918). H. Grisar, S.J., 'Ein Rundgang durch die Patrimonien des heiligen Stuhles um das Jahr 600' in Z.K.T., i (1877), pp. 321–60; id., 'Verwaltung und Haushalt der päpstlichen Patrimonien um das Jahr 600', ib., pp. 526–63. R. Macaigne, L'Église mérovingienne et l'état pontifical (1929). E. Griffe, 'Aux origines de l'état pontifical à propos de la donation de Constantin et de la donation de Quierzy (753–755)' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, liii (1952), pp. 216–31; id., 'Aux origines de l'état pontifical; Charlemagne et Hadrien Ier (772–795)', ib., lv (1954), pp. 65–89; id., 'Aux origines de l'état pontifical. Le Couronnement impérial de l'an 800 et la Donatio Constantini', ib., lix (1958), pp. 193–211. R. Aigrain in Fliche-Martin, v (1938), pp. 543–53, with bibl. G. Schnürer in C.E., xiv (1912), pp. 257–61, s.v. 'States of the Church, I', with bibl.; O. Bertolini in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 957–60, s.v. 'Patrimonio di S. Pietro'. See also works cited under Pepin.

PATRIPASSIANISM. A form of *Monarchianism (q.v.) which arose in the early 3rd cent. and held that God the Father suffered as the Son. It is also known as '*Sabellianism'.

PATRISTIC CONFERENCES. International conferences on Patristic Studies have met in Oxford at four-year intervals beginning in 1951. The first five conferences were convened by F. L. Cross (1900–1968), then Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and canon of Christ Church. Besides fostering patristic scholarship on a broad basis, the conferences were of importance in bringing together scholars of different religious allegiance at a time when RCs were not taking part in *ecumenical gatherings.

Proceedings of the second and subsequent conferences have been published under the title Studia Patristica (T.U., lxiii–lxiv, 1957; lxxviii–lxxxi, 1961–2; xcii–xciv, 1966; cvii–cviii, 1970–72; cxv–cxvii, 1975–76).

PATRISTIC GREEK LEXICON, a dictionary of words used by the Greek Fathers and for the most part not covered by the ordinary Greek-English lexica. The project for such a lexicon was initiated in 1906 by the Central Society of Sacred Study under its Warden, H. B. *Swete. Some eighty contributors (mainly C of E clergymen) agreed to read volumes of J. P. Migne, Patrologia Graeca, and other texts and to note the occurrence of words on individual slips. They worked under the guidance of a 'Committee of Direction', which included, besides Swete himself, T. B. *Strong, W. *Sanday and C. H. *Turner. In 1915 D. *Stone was appointed first editor, to be succeeded in 1941 by F. L. Cross and in 1948 by G. W. H. Lampe. The lexicon, on which in due course a full-time staff was employed, was published in five fascicles between 1961 and 1968.

PATRISTICS. The branch of theological study which deals with the writings of the Fathers (patres). Sometimes the title 'Fathers' is given to important Christian writers of all ages down to the 13th cent., when the 'Schoolmen' took their place. In stricter usage it belongs to those teachers who wrote between the end of the 1st cent. (when the NT had been almost, if not quite, completed) and the close of the 8th cent.; and this is the period commonly termed the 'Patristic Age'. The study of Patristic literature is closely allied both with Church history and with the history of early doctrine, since this literature is the chief evidence both for the events and for the ideas of these times. The leading Fathers were the authors of much work vital to Christianity. They defended the Gospel against heresies and misunderstandings; they composed extensive commentaries on the Bible, explanatory, doctrinal, and practical, and published innumerable sermons, largely on the same subject; they exhibited the meaning and implications of the *Creeds; they recorded past and current events in Church history; and they related the Christian faith to the best thought of their own age.

The earliest essays in Patristic study were the catalogues of Christian writers compiled by St. *Jerome, *Gennadius of Marseilles, St. *Isidore of Seville, St. *Ildefonsus of Toledo, and *Photius. Later similar catalogues are due to *Sigebert of Gembloux, *Honorius of Autun, and the Anonymus Mellicensis (of Melk in Lower Austria, c. 1135), and to (pseudo-) *Henry of Ghent. The more imp. early printed collections include the Bibliotheca SS. Patrum (ed. M. de La Bigne, 8 vols., Paris, 1575, with later suppl.; more comprehensive new ed., 14 vols., Cologne, 1618, suppl. 1622; further extended as Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 27 vols., Lyons, 1677) and those of F. *Ducaeus, L. *d'Achéry, J. *Sirmond, J. B. *Cotelier, and F. *Combefis. A new era in the editing of Patristic texts was inaugurated by the *Maurists (q.v.). Later collections are due to J. E. *Grabe, B. de *Montfaucon, and A. *Gallandi, and, in the 19th cent., to M. J. *Routh, A. *Mai (contd. by J. Cozza-Luzi) and J. B. *Pitra. J. P. *Migne's vast Patrologiae ('Latina' and 'Graeca') incorporated nearly all the Gk. and Lat. texts hitherto in print. The chief recent collections, edited on modern critical principles, are the Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum ('C.S.E.L.', Vienna, 1866 ff.), Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte (Leipzig, 1897 ff.), the Patrologia Orientalis (ed. R. Graffin and F. Nau, Paris, 1907 ff.), the Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium (C.S.C.O., Paris, 1903 ff.), and Corpus Christianorum, ed. by the Monks of Steenbrugge, Belgium (Turnhout, 1953 ff.). Of Eng. trr. of the Fathers, the principal series are *The Library of the Fathers (1838 ff.), The Ante-Nicene Christian Library (28 vols., 1886–1900), Ancient Christian Fathers (Westminster, Md.–London, 1946 ff.), and Fathers of the Church (72 vols., Washington, D.C., 1947 ff.). Good Fr. edd. of many Patristic texts in Sources chrétiennes (Paris, 1941 ff.). For modern Patrologies, see foll. entry. J. de Ghellinck, Patristique et moyen-âge (3 vols., 1946–8); B. Altaner, 'Der Stand der patrologischen Wissenschaft und das Problem einer neuen altchristlichen Literaturgeschichte' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, i (S.T., cxxi, 1946), pp. 483–520. On the knowledge of Gk. Patristic literature in the West, see P. Courcelle, Les Lettres grecques en occident (1943), and A. Siegmund, Die Überlieferung der griechischen Literatur in der lateinischen Kirche bis zum 12. Jahrhundert (1949). Bibliographia Patristica, i ff., ed. W. Schneemelcher (Berlin, annually, for 1956 ff.). On the Greek of the Fathers, see s.v. Greek. See also Patristic Conferences and Patrology.

PATROLOGY. In older English writers, the term Patrology was synonymous with *Patristics (q.v.), esp. in its doctrinal aspects, but it is now in current use for a systematically arranged manual on the patristic literature.

Among older works, the most ambitious are the compendia of J. A. *Fabricius (q.v.). The principal recent patrologies are A. *Harnack, Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur bis Eusebius (3 vols., 1893–1904) and O. *Bardenhewer, Patrologie (1894; Eng. trans., 1908) and Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (5 vols., 1902–31). The latter is supplemented by B. *Altaner, Patrologie (1938; ed. 6, 1960; Eng. tr., 1960; revised by A. Stuiber, 1966). J. Quasten, Patrology. I: The Beginnings of Patristic Literature (Utrecht, 1950); II: The Ante-Nicene Literature after Irenaeus (ib., 1953); III: The Golden Age of Greek Patristic Literature (ib., 1960). Other works include J. A. *Möhler, Patrologie (i [all publd.], 1840); I. Fessler, Institutiones Patrologiae (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1850–1; ed. 2 by B. Jungmann, 1890–6); F. Cayré, A.A., Précis de patrologie (2 vols., 1927–30; ed. 3, 3 vols., 1945); B. Steidle, O.S.B., Patrologia (Freiburg i.Br., 1937); F. L. Cross, The Early Christian Fathers (1960). For the Lat. Fathers, cf. also P. de Labriolle, Histoire de la littérature latine chrétienne (1920; new ed. by G. Bardy, 1947; Eng. tr., 1924) and the invaluable Clavis Patrum Latinorum (ed. E. Dekkers, O.S.B., in Sacris Erudiri, iii, Steenbrugge, 1951; ed. 2, 1961). Clavis Patrum Graecorum (ed. M. Geerard, Turnhout, 1974 ff.).

PATRON SAINT. A saint who, by tradition or otherwise, has been chosen as the special intercessor and advocate in heaven of a particular place, person, or organization. The custom of having patron saints for churches arose from the practice of building churches over the tombs of martyrs. The expression 'titular' is also used in the same sense. Since the middle of the 19th cent. the traditional celebration of the patronal feasts of churches has been widely revived in the C of E. See also Dedication of Churches.

PATTESON, JOHN COLERIDGE (1827–71), Bp. of Melanesia. Educated at Eton (where he came under the influence of G. A. *Selwyn) and Balliol College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1853. In 1855 at Selwyn's persuasion he set out for the *South Seas, to found the Melanesian Mission. He toured the islands in the Southern Cross, learnt many of the languages, founded a college on Norfolk Island for the training of native boys, and was remarkably successful in his pastoral and educational work. In 1861 he was consecrated the first Bp. of Melanesia. On 20 Sept. 1871 he was murdered on the island of Nukapu, where he had landed alone, in revenge for the kidnapping of some of the inhabitants by white men a few months earlier. His fate made a deep impression in England and aroused much interest in missionary work and in the labour conditions of Polynesia. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 20 Sept.

The standard life is that of Charlotte M. *Yonge (2 vols., London, 1874 [1873]); modern life by J. Gutch (ib., 1971). W. H. Fremantle in D.N.B., xlvii (1895), pp. 53–6; R. W. Codrington in D.E.C.H., p. 450 f., s.v.

PATTISON, ANDREW SETH PRINGLE-(1856–1931), until 1898 Andrew SETH, Scottish philosopher. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, at Edinburgh University, and at Berlin, Jena, and Göttingen, where he studied under H. Lotze. After holding chairs at Cardiff (1883–7) and St. Andrews (1887–91), he became Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh (1891–1919). He showed marked sympathy with German Idealism (I. *Kant, and esp. G. W. F. *Hegel) but he sought to free it from *pantheism and to safeguard the claims of the human person. He held that 'God or the Absolute', although not Himself an individual among others, was the source of individuation. His chief writings were Scottish Philosophy (1885), Hegelianism and Personality (1887), The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy (Gifford Lectures for 1912–13; 1917), The Idea of Immortality (1922), and Studies in the Philosophy of Religion (1930).

Pattison's The Balfour Lectures on Realism was posthumously ed. by G. F. Barbour (1933), with memoir, pp. 3–46. Memoir by J. B. Cooper in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxii (1931), pp. 447–61; J. B. Baillie, 'Pringle Pattison as Philosopher', ib., pp. 461–89. J. Laird in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 678 f.

PATTISON, MARK (1813–84), Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1832 he entered Oriel College, then suffering from E. *Hawkins's removal of J. H. *Newman, R. H. *Froude, and R. I. *Wilberforce from their tutorships, and, being mainly dependent on his own resources, came to assimilate a wide range of largely out-of-the-way knowledge. Before long he came under the religious influence of Newman, contributed to some of his translations for the Library of the Fathers, and from about 1838 to 1848 was a keen *Tractarian. Later his enthusiasm for the Oxford Movement declined and with it his faith in institutional Christianity. He became keenly interested, however, in educational and university reform, and did good work among his pupils and as a university examiner. In 1861 he was elected Rector of Lincoln College. His very extensive writing largely took the form of essays and articles on literary subjects, but his *Isaac Casaubon (1875) was an enduring contribution to the history of modern scholarship. His posthumous Memoirs (1885) reflect the fierce anti-Tractarianism of his last years.

A selection of his Essays was publd. by his friend, Henry Nettleship (2 vols., 1889). L. A. Tollemache, Recollections of Pattison (1885). V. H. H. Green, Oxford Common Room. A Study of Lincoln College and Mark Pattison (1957). J. Sparrow, Mark Pattison and the Idea of a University (Cambridge, 1967). R. C. Christie in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 58–63.

PAUL, St. (d. c. A.D. 65), the 'Apostle of the Gentiles'. Born during the first years of the Christian era, the future St. Paul, originally 'Saul', was the son of a Jew of the tribe of Benjamin, possessed of Roman citizenship and a native of Tarsus in Cilicia. He was brought up a *Pharisee (Acts 26. 5) and had his education, in part at least, at *Jerusalem, where he studied under the famous Rabbi *Gamaliel (Acts 22. 3). This, and his life 'in the Jews' religion' (Gal. 1. 14), brought him his experience of the Law and a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, as well as his well-known habit of arguing from isolated texts. As a Jew of the Dispersion he spoke and wrote Greek. He had probably received a better formal education than any other NT writer or Apostle.

Within a few years of the Crucifixion, St. Paul came in contact with the new 'Way' of the followers of Jesus, almost certainly in Palestine, and, meeting it with intense opposition, assisted at the martyrdom of St. *Stephen, when he guarded the clothes of those who stoned him (Acts 7. 58). On a mission to Damascus to arrest some Christians and bring them to Jerusalem for trial occurred the decisive event. The story of his conversion is told three times in Acts, viz. at 9. 1–19, 22. 5–16, and 26. 12–18. Acc. to these accounts, which vary only in details, St. Paul saw a great light and heard the words: 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?', and, in reply to his question, 'Who art thou, Lord?', received the answer 'I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest', words which, through their identification of Christ with His followers, contain in germ the future characteristic Pauline doctrine of the Church.

The call to the Christian life and apostolate was at once accepted. Soon afterwards he received Baptism and the imposition of hands from Ananias (Acts 9. 17 f.) and then departed to Arabia (Gal. 1. 17; not mentioned in Acts), perhaps to prepare himself by solitude and prayer for his future ministry. Three years later he returned to Damascus, whence he was compelled to make a secret escape from the hostility of Aretas, the Nabataean king, by being let down the city wall in a basket (Acts 9. 23–5; 2 Cor. 11. 32 f.). After a visit to Jerusalem, where he was received, not unnaturally, with suspicion until *Barnabas allayed doubts, he went to Caesarea, Syria, and Cilicia (Acts 9. 30; Gal. 1. 21–4). Nothing is known of his activities until Barnabas a few years later fetched him from Tarsus to enlist his help in the conversion of *Antioch (Acts 11. 25 f.). About A.D. 44 the two Apostles went to Jerusalem during a famine to take food to the Christian community. (For the question whether this visit is to be identified with that recorded in Gal. 2. 1–10, see Galatians; in the traditional view the visit of Gal. 2 is to be identified with that of Acts 15.) It has been suggested that the ecstasy mentioned in 2 Cor. 12. 2–4 took place during this period, perhaps as the immediate preparation for St. Paul's apostolate in the pagan world.

After his return (Acts 12. 25) the 'prophets and teachers' of the Church at Antioch, following an inspiration of the Holy Ghost, sent him and Barnabas out on the so-called First Missionary Journey. They set sail for Cyprus, accompanied by John *Mark. During this journey Barnabas, hitherto the leader, ceded his place to Paul (the change in name from Saul at this point, Acts 13. 9, may indicate this reversal of roles). After leaving *Cyprus the Apostles went to Asia Minor where, to Paul's great disappointment, Mark left them. At Antioch of Pisidia Paul preached after his custom in the synagogue, and was opposed by the Jews. Openly proclaiming his intention of turning to the Gentiles, he won some converts (Acts 13. 48), and at Lystra, where he healed a cripple, the pagans even mistook him and Barnabas for gods (14. 11 f.). Here as elsewhere the Jews stirred up trouble, but their opposition only served to confirm Paul in his mission and convince him that 'through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God' (14. 22). The Apostles returned overland to Antioch (c. A.D. 49) where they described to the Christian community the success of their work among the Gentiles (14. 27).

The rapid growth of Gentile Christianity raised serious issues for the nascent Church. With its relations with Judaism as yet undefined, St. Paul found himself faced with opposition from Jewish Christians who came to Antioch asserting that without circumcision Gentiles could not be saved. Accordingly he and Barnabas went up to Jerusalem to discuss the question with Peter, James, and the other Apostles (Acts 15). The decrees of this first Council of the Church (the exact import of which is much debated) were at any rate in principle a victory for Paul. The Law was not to be imposed on Gentile Christians and his Mission to the Gentiles was recognized by the Jerusalem Church (Gal. 2. 6–9; Acts 15). After the Council ended he returned to Antioch.

Having separated from Barnabas, St. Paul now set out on his Second Missionary Journey, accompanied by Silas. He revisited the Churches in the interior of Asia Minor, founded on his first journey, and from Lystra he took *Timothy with him (Acts 16. 1–3). (It was at this point, according to those who take the 'North Galatian' view [see Galatians], that he evangelized the Galatians.) Frustrated by Divine intervention, as he believed, from going on to Bithynia, he responded to a dream vision bidding him cross over to Macedonia and thus extend the sphere of his ministry to Europe (Acts 16. 9 f.). Having reached Philippi he and his companions stayed in the house of Lydia, his first Macedonian convert (Acts 16. 15). The exorcism of a maid possessed with a 'spirit of divination' led to his imprisonment, but having converted his jailer and family he was publicly freed by the magistrates when they learned that he was a Roman citizen (16. 38 f.). From Philippi he went to Thessalonica and Beroea, where he converted many Gentiles; but in both places troubles were stirred up by the Jews and he was forced to leave. At *Athens, where he was confronted on Mars' Hill with a philosophically interested audience, he changed his method of preaching, but with ill success (Acts 17. 16–34). His teaching was met with unwonted indifference and he went to *Corinth, where he stayed for a long time. The fact that this stay was during *Gallio's proconsulship (Acts 18. 12) enables us to establish the chronology of St. Paul's travels with tolerable accuracy, since an inscription determines this date as 51 or 52. At Corinth he founded a flourishing Church, wrote to the *Thessalonians, and after 18 months of strenuous work returned to Antioch.

Soon afterwards he set out on his Third Missionary Journey. First he went to *Ephesus (Acts 19. 1), where he completed the conversion of catechumens who had received only the 'Baptism of John (Baptist)'. Here he stayed for two years, teaching in the 'School of Tyrannus' (Acts 19. 10), working many miracles and, despite strenuous opposition, gaining a large number of converts. The communities in the hinterland (Colossae, *Philadelphia, Hierapolis, *Laodicea) which were later to be such prominent centres of Christian life probably owe their beginnings to St. Paul's long stay at Ephesus. Here he also wrote 1 *Corinthians. Eventually driven from the city by riots of the silversmiths, whose trade in shrines of the goddess Diana was seriously threatened by the spread of Christianity, he went to Macedonia, where *Titus brought him consoling news from Corinth (2 Cor. 7. 6 f.). He then spent three months in Achaia (Acts 20. 1–3), probably at Corinth (A.D. 57), where it is likely that he wrote *Romans to prepare the way for the visit he was already planning to the capital (Rom. 15. 22–4). He then set out for Jerusalem with the delegates of the Churches of Asia and Greece with contributions collected to relieve the poverty of the mother Church (1 Cor. 16. 3 f.; Rom. 15. 25–6). On the way he bade farewell at Miletus to the Elders of the Church of Ephesus who had come to meet him, and predicted his imprisonment (Acts 20. 22 f.).

At Jerusalem he was met by the anticipated hostile reception. Accused of teaching transgression of the Law, he was beaten by the mob and only rescued by Roman soldiers who put him under protective arrest in the castle (Acts 21. 27–36), whence, addressing the crowd, he recounted his conversion. His mention of his mission to the Gentiles again provoked a tumult and the chief captain only desisted from his decision to examine his prisoner by scourging on learning that he was a Roman citizen. Brought before the *Sanhedrin (Acts 22. 30), St. Paul skilfully divided Pharisees and Sadducees by referring to the doctrine of the resurrection (Acts 23. 1–10). Information of a plot against Paul's life led the chief captain to send him under strong escort to the governor Felix at Caesarea (23. 23 f.), where he was treated leniently. His trial, however, was deferred for two years, and not resumed until Felix was succeeded by Festus (A.D. 59). St. Paul now appealed to Caesar, i.e. for a trial at Rome. Before embarking he was brought before the Jewish King Agrippa, whom he deeply impressed (Acts 25. 13–27). On the voyage to Rome he suffered shipwreck before Malta, the details of which are described at length in Acts 27. After wintering in Malta, where he is said to have cured many sick people, he reached Rome, where he was kept in mitigated custody in a house of his own. According to many scholars, he wrote one or more of the so-called '*Captivity Epistles' (Phil., Col., Philem., and Eph.) while awaiting his trial, though it has also been argued that some or all of them were written during an earlier imprisonment at Ephesus or from Caesarea.

Acts ends with the statement that St. Paul remained in captivity in Rome for two years. For the remainder of his life we depend on material to be gleaned from the *Pastoral Epp. and tradition. Acc. to St. *Clement of Rome, writing about 30 years after his death (Ep. i. 5), he went to the 'limits of the Occident' (τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως), a statement which (unless τῆς δύσεως is to be taken as a defining genitive) would give point to his own assertion (Rom. 15. 24 and 28) that after visiting Rome he proposed to go on to Spain; and several of the Fathers (e.g. *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Epiphanius, *Chrysostom, and *Jerome) accept the tradition of this visit to Spain. If the Pastoral Epp. are genuine, they were presumably written after his return from Spain. They would imply that he revisited Ephesus, Macedonia, and Greece, and was finally once more arrested, perhaps at Troas (cf. 2 Tim. 4. 13). According to tradition, he was martyred at Rome in the *Neronian persecution (acc. to *Eusebius, in A.D. 67). *Tertullian (De Praescr., xxxvi) adds that he was beheaded.

Acc. to a tradition, first found in the apocryphal Acts of St. Paul (see next entry) and repeated by St. *Gregory the Great and the itineraries of the 7th and following cents., the scene of St. Paul's martyrdom was on the left bank of the Tiber, about three miles from Rome; this place, known as Ad Aquas Salvias, was renamed *Tre Fontane from the legend that when St. Paul's head bounced three times three fountains sprang forth. His body was then taken to a cemetery on the *Ostian Way nearer Rome, belonging to a Christian matron Lucina, and buried on the site of the present basilica of S. Paolo fuori le Mura. On 29 June 258, when the Christian tombs were threatened with desecration in the Valerianic persecution, it was apparently transferred for a time, along with that of St. Peter, to a locality described as 'Ad Catacumbas' on the *Appian Way. After its return to its former resting-place, the Emp. *Constantine erected the famous basilica on the site (see St. Paul's outside the Walls). A joint feast for the two Apostles on 29 June is observed in both E. and W. By the 7th cent. it was customary, in addition to the Mass at the Vatican for the two Apostles on 29 June, to observe a special commemoration for St. Paul on the following day.

St. Paul is the most powerful human personality in the history of the Church. From the decisive revelation on the way to Damascus his life was dominated by an ardent devotion to Christ, who was henceforward the centre both of his preaching and teaching and of his personal faith and life. For the sake of Christ he strove to make himself 'all things to all men' (1 Cor. 9. 22), exposed himself to all kinds of dangers, and took upon himself the care of his many Churches.

In his Epistles, nearly all written to meet the needs of the moment, St. Paul laid the foundations (for the most part unbeknown to himself) on which subsequent Christian theology has built. His doctrine was first worked out in the struggle against the Judaizers, to whose rigid conception of the *Mosaic Law he opposed the freedom of the Gospel as the only efficacious means of salvation. Sinful humanity is redeemed and justified by Divine grace through faith in Jesus Christ, who by His Life, Death, and Resurrection abrogated the old Law and ushered in the new era of the Spirit (esp. Gal. and Rom.). Christ is not only the Messiah in whom the OT promises are fulfilled, but the eternal, pre-existent Son of God through whom all things were created (Phil. 2. 6; Col. 1. 15–17) and who, after the humiliations of His earthly life and His sacrificial Death on the Cross, was exalted to the right hand of God and receives the homage of all creation (Phil. 2. 9–11). As such He is the Head of a new and redeemed humanity, the New 'Israel of God' (Gal. 6. 16), in which Jew and Gentile are made one (Eph. 2. 14–19), the Church; and at the same time He is identified with the Church as His Mystical Body so that St. Paul can claim to fill up in his flesh what is lacking in the afflictions of Christ 'for his body's sake, which is the Church' (Col. 1. 24). Thus the sufferings of the members of the Church become the sufferings of Christ and contribute to the perfection of the Body; and the true Christian no longer lives his own life, but Christ lives in him (Gal. 2. 20), transforming him into the likeness of his Saviour already in this life, and fully in the resurrection.

This new life, which is no longer 'according to the flesh' (κατὰ σάρκα), by which St. Paul ordinarily means man in his fallen state, but 'according to the Spirit' (κατὰ πνεῦμα), begins in Baptism. Through Baptism the believer shares in Christ's death and resurrection (Rom. 6. 3–6) and is enabled to meet the moral and spiritual demands of this new life through the power of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5. 16), sent by God into his heart (Gal. 4. 6) as a personal guide and friend. It is the fellowship or communion of the Holy Spirit (Phil. 2. 1), bound together by the bond of charity (Col. 3. 14). This fellowship is both maintained and expressed in the Eucharist, the Christian sacrifice, the 'communion of the body of Christ' (1 Cor. 10. 16, κοινωνία τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ), and the memorial of His death (1 Cor. 10. 16–21, 11. 20–34), and it will be fully realized at the end of the ages when the Lord shall return in glory, a glory in which the faithful both living and dead will share (1 Thess. 4. 13–17). Its essential mark is love, which will continue in the life of glory, when prophecies shall be done away and tongues shall cease, and we shall no longer see in a mirror darkly, but face to face (1 Cor. 13). The urgency of its proclamation is the greater for St. Paul in view of his expectation (stressed in his earlier Epp.) of the speedy return of Christ to judge the world.

The influence of Pauline thought has permeated all subsequent theology. His doctrine of grace, predestination and free-will, less emphasized in the Greek Church, was developed and expanded by St. *Augustine in his struggle with *Pelagius and came again to the fore in the controversy between *Gottschalk and *Hincmar of Reims. The Augustinian interpretation of St. Paul's teaching on grace has furnished the principal points in the controversies between *Thomism and *Molinism, *Jansenism and the *Jesuit theologians, *Calvinism and *Arminianism. St. Paul's doctrine of *justification by faith also provided the foundation of *Lutheranism, and his predestinationism gave Calvinism its central dogma. In the 17th cent. H. *Grotius and others made a new approach to St. Paul by an exegesis which sought to exclude doctrinal considerations, and this ideal was increasingly upheld during the 18th and 19th cents. The brilliant reconstruction of the beginnings of Christianity by the *Tübingen School also created a lively interest in St. Paul, the effects of which are still felt. During the last century Paul came to be widely regarded as the creator of the whole doctrinal and ecclesiastical system presupposed in his Epp. Some scholars, however, held that he was not a little influenced by Hellenism and the Mystery Religions. More recent scholarship has led to a fuller recognition of his inheritance from the primitive Church as well as of the essentially Hebraic character of his thought. See also Conversion of St. Paul.

From the vast literature only a few works can be mentioned. Among the principal are: W. J. *Conybeare and J. S. *Howson, The Life and Epistles of St. Paul (2 vols., 1851); A. *Sabatier, L'Apôtre Paul (1871; Eng. tr., 1891); W. M. *Ramsay, St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen (1895) and other works; W. *Wrede, Paulus (1905); A. *Deissmann, Paulus (1911; ed. 2, 1925; Eng. tr., 1926); K. *Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St. Paul. Their Motive and Origin (1911); P. Gardner, The Religious Experience of St. Paul (1911); A. H. McNeile, St. Paul. His Life, Letters, and Christian Doctrine (1920); T. R. Glover, Paul of Tarsus (1925); W. L. Knox, St. Paul and the Church of Jerusalem (1925); id., St. Paul (1932); A. D. Nock, St. Paul (1938); W. L. Knox, St. Paul and the Church of the Gentiles (1939); G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Life of Paul (1966). G. Bornkamm, Paulus (Stuttgart, 1969; Eng. tr., 1971).

Among studies in his theology: O. Pfleiderer, Der Paulinismus (1873; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1877); A. B. *Bruce, St. Paul's Conception of Christianity (1894); F. Prat, S.J., La Théologie de saint Paul (2 vols., 1908; Eng. tr., 1926–7); C. H. *Dodd, The Meaning of Paul for To-day (1920); C. A. A. Scott, Christianity according to St. Paul (1927); A. M. Hunter, Paul and his Predecessors (1940). Studies on special subjects: O. Pfleiderer, The Influence of the Apostle Paul (1885, *Hibbert Lectures); A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der paulinischen Forschung von der Reformation bis auf die Gegenwart (1911; Eng. tr., Paul and his Interpreters, 1912). H. A. A. Kennedy, St. Paul and the Mystery-Religions (1913); W. H. P. Hatch, The Pauline Idea of Faith in its Relation to Jewish and Hellenistic Religion (Cambridge, Mass., 1917); A. Deissmann, The Religion of Jesus and the Faith of Paul (1923); A. Schweitzer, Die Mystik des Apostels Paulus (1930; Eng. tr., The Mysticism of Paul the Apostle, 1931); L. Cerfaux, La Théologie de l'Église suivant saint Paul (Unam Sanctam, x; 1942); W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (1948); L. Cerfaux, Le Christ dans la théologie de saint Paul (1951); J. Munck, Paulus und die Heilsgeschichte (Acta Jutlandica, xxvi. 1; 1954; Eng. tr., 1959); E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament (1957); H. J. Schoeps, Paulus. Die Theologie des Apostels im Lichte der jüdischen Religionsgeschichte (Tübingen, 1959; Eng. tr., 1961; cf. A. D. Nock in Gnomon, xxxiii (1961), pp. 581–90); H. [N.] Ridderbos, Paulus. Ontwerp van zijn Theologie (Kampen, 1966; Eng. tr., 1977).

Studia Paulina. In Honorem J. de Zwaan (Haarlem, 1953); Studiorum Paulinorum Congressus Internationalis Catholicus 1961 . . . completo undevicesimo saeculo post S. Pauli in Urbem Adventum (Analecta Biblica, xvii–xviii; 1963). B. M.

Metzger, Index to Periodical Literature on the Apostle Paul (New Testament Tools and Studies, i; 1960). E. Fascher in P.W., Supplementband, viii (1956), cols. 431–66.

PAUL, Acts of St. An apocryphal Book, written in Greek and put into circulation in the latter half of the 2nd cent. Unlike most apocryphal 'Acts', it appears to have been the work of an orthodox Christian. It was compiled in Asia Minor, and is contained in its completest form in Coptic in a Heidelberg papyrus which C. Schmidt pieced together in 1904 from some 2000 fragments. Its reconstruction proved that a number of short treatises which had circulated independently and had been known to earlier scholars were all parts of this single work, among them the 'Martyrdom of St. Paul', the 'Acts of *Paul and Thecla', and the 'Third Ep. of St. Paul to the *Corinthians' (qq.v.). Several passages of the Gk. text have long been known, the most important of them one publd. by C. Schmidt in 1936 from the Hamburg Public Library. It is now established that the work made use of the 'Acts of *Peter'.

The Acts, which were designed to glorify St. Paul's achievements, were based on the canonical Acts of the Apostles and Pauline Epistles. The author, however, had little regard for historical truth, and it was doubtless the romancing character of the Acts rather than any heretical bias in their teaching that caused him, as *Tertullian relates (De Baptismo, 17), to be deprived of his office of presbyter. The Acts were used by *Origen, *Hippolytus, and *Cyprian.

Older ed. of texts in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet (edd.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, i (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 23–44, 104–17, and 235–72. Coptic text ed. C. Schmidt, Acta Pauli aus der Heidelberger koptischen Papyrushandschrift Nr. 1 (1904; with facsimile in separate Tafelband, 1904, and Zusätze, 1905); id., 'Ein neues Fragment der Heidelberger Acta Pauli' in Sb. (Berl.), 1909, pp. 216–20; id., ΠΡΑΞΕΙΣ ΠΑΥΛΟΥ. Acta Pauli nach dem Papyrus der Hamburger Staats- und Universitäts-Bibliothek (Veröffentlichungen aus der Hamburger Staats- und Universitäts-Bibliothek, N.F., ii; 1936). Further fragment ed. G. D. Kilpatrick–C. H. Roberts in J.T.S., xlvii (1946), pp. 196–9. Two further fragments among the *Bodmer papyri described by R. Kasser in Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, xl (1960), pp. 45–57. Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 270–99, with important Appendix [by J. W. B. Barns] in id., '1953 reprint (corrected)', pp. 570–8. L. Vouaux, Les Actes de Paul et ses lettres apocryphes. Introduction, textes, traduction et commentaire (1913). E. Peterson, 'Einige Bemerkungen zum Hamburger Papyrusfragment der Acta Pauli' in V.C., iii (1949), pp. 142–62. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 130–2. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 554–64; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 136 f. Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 221–41, with Germ. tr. 242–68, and addition by R. Kasser, pp. 268–70; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 322–90.

PAUL, Apocalypse of St. An apocryphal apocalypse, written in Greek and dating from the latter half of the 4th cent., which describes in detail what St. Paul saw when he was taken up into the 'third heaven' (2 Cor. 12. 2). It narrates that St. Paul was led into paradise, where in the city of God he met all the blessed —in one quarter the *Prophets, in another the *Holy Innocents, in another *Abraham, *Isaac, and *Jacob, and in the fourth those who had wholeheartedly devoted themselves to God. The treatise, which was known to St. *Augustine (c. 416), became very popular, and was translated into Latin, Syriac, Coptic, and Ethiopic. It also enjoyed a great vogue in the Middle Ages, being quoted by *Dante (Inferno, 2. 28). The 'Apocalypse of St. Paul' of *Gnostic origin, mentioned by St. *Epiphanius (Haer., xxxviii. 2), appears to have been an independent work of which nothing has survived.

Gk. text in C. *Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 34–69. Crit. ed. by M. R. James (ed.), Apocrypha Anecdota (Texts and Studies, ii, No. 3; Cambridge, 1893), pp. 11–42. Syr. text ed. G. Riciotti in Orientalia, ii (Rome, 1933), pp. 1–25, 120–49. Lat. text ed. in several recensions, with full discussion, by T. Silverstein (Studies and Documents ed. K. *Lake–S. Lake, iv, 1935). Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 525–55. C. H. Kraeling, 'The Apocalypse of Paul and the Iranische Erlösungsmysterium' in H.T.R., xxiv (1931), pp. 209–44; R. P. Casey, 'The Apocalypse of Paul' in J.T.S., xxiv (1933), pp. 1–32. H. Duensing in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 536–9, with further reff.; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 755–98. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 146–9. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 615–20; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 142 f.

PAUL, Clerks Regular of St. See Barnabites.

PAUL, Martyrdom of St. An apocryphal account of the death of St. *Paul dating from the latter part of the 2nd cent. It forms the concluding section of the 'Acts of *Paul' (q.v.). It describes how St. Paul was brought into the presence of *Nero at Rome, sentenced to death, and led to execution by the prefect, Longus, and the centurion, Cestus (who were converted). The 'Martyrdom' survives in the two Greek MSS. which also contain the 'Acts of *Peter'.

Two Gk. texts with a Lat. tr. in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet (edd.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, i (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 104–17. Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 293–6. For further items see bibl. to Paul, Acts of.

PAUL AND THECLA, Acts of Sts. An apocryphal work describing the adventures of Sts. *Paul and *Thecla, which was part of the 'Acts of *Paul' (q.v.). Its great popularity in the early Church is shown by its existence not only in the original Greek, but also in five separate Latin translations, as well as in Syriac, Armenian, Slavonic, and Arabic. The 'Acts' describe how St. Paul, after his flight from Antioch in Pisidia (Acts 13. 51), arrived at Iconium, where in the house of Onesiphorus he preached the benefits of chastity and thereby won St. Thecla away from Thamyris, to whom she was betrothed. In consequence, Paul was charged before the civil authorities and beaten, while Thecla was condemned to death by burning, but miraculously saved. Other incidents in various parts of Asia Minor are described in the lives of both Paul and Thecla, and the 'Acts' conclude with the record of Thecla's death at Seleucia. It is not impossible that the 'Acts' contain a kernel of historical truth.

Gk. text pr. in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet (edd.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, i (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 235–72. A fragment of a 4th cent. Gk. papyrus was ed., with Eng. tr., by C. H. Roberts, The Antinoopolis Papyri (1950), pp. 26–8 (No. 15). Syr. text ed. W. Wright, Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles (1871), i, pp. 128–69; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 116–45. Ethiopic text ed., with Eng. tr., by E. J. Goodspeed in American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, xvii (1900–1), pp. 65–95. Armenian text publd. at Venice, 1874; Eng. tr. of this text by F. C. *Conybeare, The Apology and Acts of Apollonius and other Monuments of Early Christianity (1894), pp. 61–88, with introd., pp. 49–60. For important Coptic text, see Paul, Acts of. Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 272–81. W. M. *Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire before A.D. 170 (1893), pp. 375–428. C. Holzhey, Die Thekla-Akten. Ihre Verbreitung und Beurtheilung in der Kirche (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchen-historischen Seminar München, Reihe II, vii; 1905). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 561–4. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 227–9 and 243–51; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 330–3 and 353–64, incl. trans. of text.

PAUL III (1468–1549), Pope from 1534. Alessandro Farnese was educated at Rome and Florence at the court of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and created cardinal-deacon by *Alexander VI in 1493. He held numerous benefices, among them the Bprics. of Parma and Ostia, became Dean of the Sacred College under *Leo X, and was unanimously elected to the Papacy on 13 Oct. 1534. Though in his personal life a typical Renaissance Pope—he had three sons and a daughter, was much given to worldly pleasures, and indulged in unlimited nepotism—he was an efficient promoter of the inner reform of the Church. He created as cardinals men of virtue and scholarship such as R. *Pole, G. P. Caraffa (later *Paul IV), and G. *Morone, established ecclesiastical commissions to draw up plans for the reform of the Church, and favoured the new orders, e.g. the *Ursulines, the *Barnabites, and esp. the *Jesuits which he approved in 1540 by the bull '*Regimini militantis Ecclesiae'. In 1542 he restored the *Inquisition, and above all fought hard against the opposition to a General Council which finally opened at *Trent in 1545. He was, however, less successful in his political efforts to check the spread of Protestantism. The religious colloquies in Germany and the wars of the Emperor whom he supported could not restore unity, and the bull which he published against *Henry VIII in 1538 alienated England still further from Rome. His last years were darkened by the death of his son and the revolt of his grandson, Ottavio, who took the part of the Emperor against him. Like his immediate predecessors, Paul III was a friend of art and scholarship. He appointed prominent theologians to the chairs of the Roman university, enriched the *Vatican Library with valuable MSS., and made *Michelangelo architect-in-chief of *St. Peter's.

The best collection of his bulls is that in the Bullarum Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, vi (Turin, 1860), pp. 173–401. There is a good modern study by C. Capasso (2 vols., Messina, 1923–4 [on wrappers '1925']). L. Cardauns, 'Paul III, Karl V und Franz I in den Jahren 1535 und 1536' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken herausgegeben vom koenigl. Preussischen Historischen Institut in Rom, xi (1908), pp. 147–244. L. Dorez, La Cour du Pape Paul III d'après les registres de la Trésorerie Secrète (Collection F. de Navenne) (2 vols., 1932). W. Friedensburg, Kaiser Karl V und Papst Paul III (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte No. 153; 1932). W. H. Edwards, Paulus III oder die geistliche Gegenreformation (1933). Pastor, xi and xii (1912), with full bibl. J. F. Loughlin in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 579–81, s.v.; L. Marchal in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 9–20, s.v., with detailed bibl.; C. L. Hohl in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 13 f. See also bibl. to Trent, Council of.

PAUL IV (1476–1559), the first of the *Counter-Reformation Popes (from 1555). Giovanni Pietro (Giampietro) Caraffa came of a distinguished Neapolitan family. Having been brought by his uncle, Oliviero Caraffa (1430–1511), into close relations with the *curia, he became possessed from early life with a keen enthusiasm for the reform of abuses. From 1504 to 1524 he was Bp. of Chieti (Theate), sitting in 1520 on the commission at Rome appointed to deal with the affair of M. *Luther. In 1524 he resigned his bishopric in order to found, in conjunction with St. *Cajetan, the *Theatine Order, which was named after him and in which he continued to be one of the chief movers. In 1536 he became Abp. of Naples and was created cardinal, and in 1542 he reorganized the *Inquisition. Finally in 1555 he was elected Pope. Despite his age he acted with great determination, though his actions in his later years seem to have been motivated more by a lust for power and the advancement of his relatives than by devotion to the highest needs of the Church. His unpopularity was increased by his political sympathies, hatred of Spain making him quarrel with *Mary Tudor; and his opposition to anything savouring of *Protestantism was so violent that its effect was only to consolidate the Protestant forces.

The best collection of his bulls is that in the Builarum Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, vi (Turin, 1860), pp. 489–566. R. Ancel, O.S.B. (ed.), Nonciatures de France. Nonciatures de Paul IV [to 4 July 1557] (Archives de l'Histoire Religieuse de la France, 2 vols., 1909–11). A. Caraccioli, Collectanea Historica de Vita Pauli Quarti (Cologne, 1612). C. Bromato, Theatine, Storia di Paolo IV (2 vols., Ravenna, 1748–53). G. M. Monti, Ricerche su Paolo IV Carafa (Benevento, 1925). G. Duruy, Le Cardinal Carlo Carafa (1519–1561). Étude sur le pontificat de Paul IV (1882). L. Riess, Die Politik Pauls IV und seiner Nepoten (Historische Studien, lxvii; 1909). There is also a series of important articles by R. Ancel, listed in D.T.C. (vide infra). Pastor, xiv (1924), pp. 56–426, with full bibl. to date of German ed. G. Mollat in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 20–3, s.v., with detailed bibl.; H. Jedin in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 736–8, s.v. 'Paolo IV'; G. Schwaiger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), cols. 200–2, s.v.

PAUL V (1552–1621), Pope from 1605. Camillo Borghese was a descendant of a noble Sienese family. He studied law at Perugia and Padua, was created Cardinal in 1596, Papal Vicar in 1603, and elected and crowned Pope in May 1605. The first years of his reign were troubled by the conflict with *Venice, whose government had attacked ecclesiastical immunities and liberties by promulgating two laws (1604 and 1605) which forbade the erection of religious buildings without the consent of the Senate and the donation or sale of secular property to the Church. After a refusal to repeal these laws, the Pope excommunicated the Senate and put the city under the *interdict. In the theological controversy which ensued, he was defended by R. *Bellarmine and C. *Baronius against the *Servite, P. *Sarpi, who in the interests of Venice denied all temporal power and privileges to the Church. About the same time the English question became once more acute in consequence of the Oath of Allegiance required by *James I, which the Pope condemned in two Briefs in 1606 and 1607. This step gave rise to a dispute between the archpriest, G. *Blackwell, who defended the Oath, and the *Jesuits, who insisted on the right of the Pope to depose kings, and later between James I himself and Bellarmine. In his Continental policy Paul V preserved a neutral attitude between the two rival powers France and Spain, whom he tried to reconcile in order to present a united Christian front to the Turks. After futile efforts at re-establishing the Roman Church in Russia, he lived to see the beginnings of the *Thirty Years War in Germany. He died of a stroke soon after the celebrations of the Catholic victory in the Battle of the White Mountain. A man of blameless life (except for his nepotism) and a skilful canonist, he endeavoured from the beginning of his reign to enforce the decrees of the Council of *Trent. He fostered the work of the Congregations devoted to education and care of the sick as well as the missions, notably those in Africa and *Canada; and many popular saints were canonized or beatified by him, among them *Charles Borromeo and *Frances of Rome. He was greatly devoted to the city of Rome, among the works which he carried through being the completion of *St. Peter's and the extension of the *Vatican Library.

Life by A. Bzovius, O.P. (Rome, 1626). [C. P. Goujet], Histoire du pontificat de Paul V (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1765). E. Cornet, Paolo e la Repubblica Veneta. Giornale dal 22 ottobre 1605–9 giugno 1607. Corredato di note e documenti (Vienna, 1859). P. Pirri, S.J., L'interdetto di Venezia del 1606 e i Gesuiti. Silloge di documenti con introduzione (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., xiv; 1959). A. Nürnberger, 'Papst Paul V und das venezianische Interdict' in Hist. J., iv (1883), pp. 189–209 and 473–515; id., 'Documente zum Ausgleich zwischen Paul V und der Republik Venedig' in R.Q., ii (1888), pp. 64–80, 248–76, and 354–67. C. P. de Magistris, Per la storia del componimento della contesta tra la Repubblica Veneta e Paolo V, 1605–1607. Documenti (posthumously publd., Turin, 1941). J. M. Pou y Marti, O.F.M., 'La intervención española en el conflicto entre Paulo V y Venecia (1605–1607)' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, ii (Lateranum, N.S., xv; 1949), pp. 359–81. Pastor, xxv and xxvi (1937), with full bibl. to date of German ed. J. F. Loughlin in C.E., xi (1911), p. 581 f., s.v.; L. Marchal in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 23–37, s.v., with detailed bibl. G. B. Picotti in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 738–41, s.v. 'Paolo V'. See also bibl. to Sarpi, P.

PAUL VI (1897–1978), Pope from 1963. Giovanni Battista Montini, the son of a wealthy landowner and editor of the Catholic daily, Il cittadina di Brescia, was a delicate child; he was educated at home and attended the diocesan seminary only as circumstances permitted. After his ordination in 1920 he went to the *Gregorian University at Rome. He served for a few months at the nunciature in Warsaw in 1923 and then took up office in the Papal Secretariate of State, where he remained for over thirty years. At first he was particularly active among the students of Rome. In 1931 he became a domestic prelate and in 1938 he accompanied E. Pacelli (the future *Pius XII) to the *Eucharistic Congress at Budapest. After the death of L. Maglione, the Secretary of State, in 1944, Pius XII appointed no successor and Montini, as pro-secretary for the internal business of the Church, discharged his business directly under the Pope. In this capacity he was responsible for Papal relief work during the Second World War, and he played a large part in the organization of the *Holy Year in 1950 and the Marian Year in 1954. In 1954 he was made Abp. of Milan. Here he did much to restore and rebuild churches destroyed during the War, as well as trying to deal with the acute social problems of a highly industrialized diocese. In 1958, on the death of Pius XII, his name was widely mentioned as a candidate for the Papacy. Pope *John XXIII, shortly after his election, created Montini a Cardinal; he continually brought him forward at the Second *Vatican Council, during the first session of which Montini was a member of the Secretariate appointed to examine the questions raised by members of the Council. On the death of John XXIII in 1963 he was elected Pope. He quickly promised to continue the Council and declared his intention of pursuing the same policy as his predecessor.

Within three weeks of his election he had convened the Second Session of the Vatican Council, which he opened on 29 Sept. 1963. Before the opening of the Session he had issued a revised Ordo Concilii to expedite business, and introduced a number of procedural reforms, such as the admission of certain laymen and the establishment of a press committee. In Nov. 1963 he enlarged the Conciliar Commissions to make them more representative. Before the meeting of the Third Session in 1964, he also admitted some women, both religious and lay, as auditors. He refused to intervene in the Third Session when he was asked to overrule a decision postponing a vote on the schema on religious liberty, but on his own authority he modified the Decree on Ecumenism and he declared the BVM 'Mother of the Church', despite the fact that the Fathers of the Council had refused to attribute the title to her. At the Fourth Session he announced that he was establishing a permanent 'Synod of Bishops', which would have deliberative as well as consultative powers at the Pope's discretion, and on the day before the closing of the Council he took part in a historic gesture of friendship with the Eastern *Orthodox Church: before the Mass on 7 Dec. 1965 a joint declaration was read in which Pope Paul VI and Patriarch *Athenagoras expressed their regret for the events of 1054, when Cardinal *Humbert and the Patriarch *Michael Cerularius had excommunicated each other, and after the Mass the Pope exchanged embraces with the Patriarch's envoy. [For the decrees of the Council, see Vatican Council, the Second.]

At the close of the Vatican Council Paul VI proclaimed an extraordinary Jubilee or Holy Year, to be observed from 1 Jan. to *Whitsunday (29 May) 1966, in order that the faithful might be familiarized with the teaching of the Council and that the life of the Church might be renewed. He also established a number of Post-Conciliar Commissions to put into effect the wishes of the Council and confirmed the permanent Secretariates for the Promotion of Christian Unity, for Non-Christian Religions, and for Non-Believers. The most radical reforms of his pontificate have largely come into being through the workings of these Post-Conciliar Commissions; they have included the publication of a completely new Missal in 1970, with its accompanying lectionary, and a new *Breviary in 1971, which together have involved a reordering of the Mass and *Office, new *Eucharistic Prayers in the Mass and the use of the vernacular; other reforms, such as that of the *Canon Law, have been put in hand. The Pope's own encyclicals have appeared more conservative; the more important have included 'Mysterium Fidei' (3 Sept. 1965) reaffirming the traditional doctrine of the Eucharist, and '*Humanae Vitae' (25 July 1968) on birth control. The decree on *Mixed Marriages 'Matrimonia Mixta' (31 Mar. 1970) was less far-reaching than many had hoped.

Paul VI has undertaken a number of journeys abroad. In Jan. 1964 he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, during which he embraced the Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople; in Dec. of the same year he attended the Eucharistic Congress at Bombay; in 1965 he travelled to the United States to address the United Nations General Assembly and to plead for peace, a subject which has frequently figured in his public utterances; in 1967 he made a pilgrimage to *Fatima; in 1968 he went to Bogotá for a Eucharistic Congress, in 1969 to Uganda, and in 1970 to the Philippines and Australia. In each case he was the first Pope to have visited the countries concerned.

Official docc. are to be found in the A.A.S. for the years of his pontificate.

PAUL OF CONSTANTINOPLE, St. (d. 350). A native of *Thessalonica, he succeeded Alexander in the see of *Constantinople in 336. He was soon displaced by the Arian *Macedonius, who had the support of the Emp. Constantius; and though he regained his see he was soon after removed again and went into exile in the W. Under pressure from Constans, the Emp. of the W., he again recovered his see, but after the death of Constans (350) he was once again exiled, first to Singara in Mesopotamia, then to Emesa, and finally to Cucusus in Armenia, where he was strangled. He was a zealous upholder of orthodoxy and a close associate of St. *Athanasius and Pope *Julius. Feast day in E., 6 Nov.; in W., 7 June.

The literary reff. to Paul are scattered. W. Telfer, 'Paul of Constantinople' in H.T.R., xliii (1950), pp. 31–92, with reff.

PAUL OF THE CROSS, St. (1694–1775), founder of the *Passionists. Paul Francis Danei was the eldest son of an impoverished noble family, who led a life of prayer and great austerity in the world until, in 1720, a vision inspired him to found a religious order in honour of the Passion of our Lord. In a 40-days' retreat he drew up its rule, which is in substance that still followed by his congregation. In 1725 he obtained permission to receive novices from *Benedict XIII, who ordained him and his brother priests in 1727. He then retired to Monte Argentaro, where, faced with great difficulties (desertion of novices, threat of war), he laboured as a missionary among the people. In 1737 the first Passionist 'Retreat' was opened. In 1744 St. Paul moved to the second house near Vetralla, was elected Superior-General three years later, and from 1769 till his death lived in Rome. He was one of the most celebrated preachers of his age, esp. on account of his stirring meditations on the Passion, and famous as a miracle-worker and spiritual director. He was canonized in 1867. Feast day, formerly 28 Apr., now 19 Oct.

Lettere di S. Paolo della Croce, ed. Amadeo della Madre del Buon Pastore, C.P. (4 vols., Rome, 1924). The primary life is that by the Bl. Vincenzo Maria Strambi, C.P. (Rome, 1786; Eng. tr., 'Saints and Servants of God', 2 vols., 1853). Modern studies include those by Pius a Spiritu Sancto [A. Devine], C.P. (Dublin–London, 1867; revised ed., London, 1924), F. Liphold (Dülmen, 1930), Gaëtan du S. Nom de Marie [J. Cajetan], C.P. (Tirlemont, 1934), Father Edmund [J. E. Burke], C.P. (Dublin, 1946), with bibl., C. Almeras (Bruges, 1957; Eng. tr., New York, 1960), and E. Zoffoli, C.P. (Rome, 1963). Gaëtan du S. Nom de Marie, Oraison et ascension mystique de S. Paul de la Croix (Museum Lessianum, 1930); id., Doctrine de S. Paul de la Croix sur l'oraison et la mystique (ib., 1932). A. Devine, C.P., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 590, s.v.; E. Zoffoli, C.P., in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, x (Rome, 1968), cols. 231–57, s.v. 'Paolo della Croce', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Passionists.

PAUL THE DEACON (c. 720 – c. 800), also 'Paulus Levita' or 'Warnefridi', 'Father of Italian History', chronicler. Of noble Lombard descent, he received an exceptionally good education, prob. at the court of Pavia, where he later taught Adelperga, the daughter of King Desiderius (756–74). After the conquest of Lombardy in 774 by *Charlemagne, he was banished to *Monte Cassino, where he became a monk. In 782 he visited Charlemagne on behalf of a brother implicated in a revolt at Friuli in 776. Received with honour on account of his learning and culture, he remained in Francia until c. 786 composing a history of the diocese of Metz ('Gesta Episcoporum Mettensium') and various didactic works. After his return to Monte Cassino he undertook his most important work, the 'Historia Gentis Langobardorum', an incomplete history in five books from 568 to the death of Luitprand (744). Based largely on documents no longer extant, it is the principal source for the Lombard history of the period, being esp. valuable for Franco-Lombard relations and its vivid picture of the life of the time. His 'Historia Romana', supplementing and continuing the 'Breviarium' of Eutropius to 553, which was undertaken at the request of Adelperga, is of much less historical value. In his later years he composed some important liturgical works, including a compilation of lessons for the Night Office and, at the request of Charlemagne, a collection of Homilies ('*Homiliarium') which were ordered to be used throughout the Empire. He also wrote a life of St. *Gregory and various epitaphs and poems, including 'Ut queant laxis'. An Expositio super Regulam S. Benedicti attributed to him has been shown to be the work of Hildemar (9th cent.).

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL, xcv, 433–1710. Crit. ed. of his 'Historia Langobardorum' by L. Bethmann–G. Waitz in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Langobardicarum et Italicarum Saec. vi–ix (1879), pp. 12–187; and of Books i–xvii of his 'Historia Romana' by A. Crivellucci (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, li; 1914); of his poetry by K. Neff (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, iii, Hft. 4; 1908); and of his Life of Gregory I by H. Grisar, S.J., in Z.K.T., xi (1887), pp. 158–73. The Comm. on the Rule of St. Benedict was first publd. by the monks of Monte Cassino (Monte Cassino, 1880). There is an Eng. tr. of his 'Historia Langobardorum' by W. D. Foulke (Philadelphia and New York, 1907). L. J. Engels, Observations sur le vocabulaire de Paul Diacre (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, xvi; Nijmegen, 1961). T. *Mommsen, 'Die Quellen der Langobardengeschichte des Paulus Diaconus' in N.A., v (1879), pp. 51–103; A. Crivelluci, 'Per l'edizione della Historia Romana di Paolo Diacono' in Bullettino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano, No. 40 (1921), pp. 7–103. K. Gamber, 'Il sacramentario di Paolo Diacono. La redazione del Gelasiano S.VIII in Pavia' in Rivista di storia della Chiesa in Italia, xvi (1962), pp. 412–38. W. Hafner, Das Basiliuskommentar zur Regula S. Benedicti. Ein Beitrag zur Autorenfrage karolingischer Regelkommentare (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xxiii; 1959), passim. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 186–9, with reff. P. Paschini in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 730–2, s.v. 'Paolo Diacono'.

PAUL THE HERMIT, St. See Paul of Thebes, St.

PAUL OF SAMOSATA (3rd cent.), heretical Bp. of *Antioch. A native of Samosata who became a man of considerable wealth, he was Procurator Ducenarius to Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra (overthrown, 272) and c. 260 became Bp. of Antioch. His teaching on the Person of Christ was condemned at two, or possibly three, Synods at Antioch and in 268 he was deposed from his see. He taught a form of Dynamic *Monarchianism, in which the Godhead was a closely knit Trinity of Father, Wisdom and Word and until creation formed a single *hypostasis. In Christology he was a precursor of *Nestorius, holding that from the Incarnation the Word rested upon the human Jesus as one person upon another, and that the Incarnate Christ differed only in degree from the Prophets. In the course of the controversy the famous '*Homoousios' first came into dispute. The chief sources for the conflict are: (1) a synodal letter of the Antiochene Synod of 268, partly preserved by *Eusebius (H.E., VII. xxx); (2) a stenographic report of a disputation at this Synod between Paul and an *Origenist presbyter of Antioch named Malchion; and (3) the so-called 'Hymenaeus Epistle', a letter addressed to Paul by Hymenaeus and five other Bishops. The extant fragments of Paul's 'Addresses to Sabinus' are probably fabrications. Paul's followers ('*Paulianists'; q.v.) long survived his death.

G. Bardy, Paul de Samosate. Étude historique (S.S.L., iv; 1923; new ed. 1929); F. *Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (T.U., xl, Hft. 5; 1924); H. de Riedmatten, O.P., Les Actes du procès de Paul de Samosate. Étude sur la christologie du IIIe au IVe siècle (Paradosis vi; 1952). Collection of fragments in H. de Riedmatten, op. cit., pp. 135–58 (superseding that of H. J. Lawlor in J.T.S., xix (1917–18), pp. 20–45 and 115–21). A. v. *Harnack, 'Die Reden Pauls von Samosata an Sabinus (Zenobia?) und seine Christologie' in Sb. (Berl.), 1924, pp. 130–51. E. *Schwartz, Eine fingierte Korrespondenz mit Paulus dem Samosatener (Sb. (Bayr.), 1927, Hft. 3). P. Galtier, [S.J.,] 'L'ὁμοούσιος de Paul de Samosate' in Rech. S.R., xii (1922), pp. 30–45. M. Richard, 'Malchion et Paul de Samosate. Le Témoignage d'Eusèbe de Césarée' in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, xxxv (1959), pp. 325–38. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 275–9; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 214. G. Bardy in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 46–51.

PAUL THE SILENTIARY. See Paulus Silentiarius.

PAUL OF THEBES, St. (d. c. 340), traditionally the first Christian hermit. Acc. to St. *Jerome's Vita Pauli, the sole authority, Paul was a native of the Thebaid. During the *Decian persecution (249–51) he fled to the desert, where he lived for some hundred years a life of prayer and penitence in a cave. St. *Antony is said to have visited him when 113 years old and later to have buried him, wrapping him in the mantle which he had himself received from St. *Athanasius.

The details of this narrative, which find no corroboration from other sources, are open to considerable suspicion. In later art, Paul is commonly represented with a palm tree or two lions. Feast day, 15 Jan.

Jerome's Vita Pauli (J. P. Migne, PL, xxiii, 17–28) is prob. the source of the various Gk. and Oriental Lives; cf. J. Bidez, Deux Versions grecques inédites de la vie de Paul de Thèbes, publiées avec une introduction (Ghent, 1900). On his possible identification with a 'Paul of Oxyrhynchus' cf. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'La Personnalité historique de S. Paul de Thèbes' in Anal. Boll., xliv (1926), pp. 64–9.

PAULA, St. (347–404), Roman matron. At the age of 33, then a mother of five children (among them St. *Eustochium), this Roman lady of noble birth dedicated herself to a life of devotion. In 385 she and Eustochium both followed St. *Jerome to Palestine; and after visiting the Holy places and the hermits in the Egyptian deserts, from 386 she settled permanently in *Bethlehem, where she founded a convent of monks and another of nuns. Feast day, 26 Jan.

Her character is vividly described by Jerome in Ep. 108, written shortly after her death (J. P. Migne, PL, xxii, 878 ff.).

PAULIANISTS. The followers of *Paul of Samosata. Presumably because they repudiated the *Trinity, the 19th canon of the Council of *Nicaea (325) required that they should be rebaptized on being received back into Catholic communion.

PAULICIANS. The members of a sect of the Byzantine Empire. Their name may be derived from St. *Paul, whom they held in special veneration, or, more probably, from *Paul of Samosata, with whom they had affinities. The origins of the sect are obscure; their true founder seems to have been Constantine of Mananali, a *Manichaean village near Samosata, who established a community at Kibossa in Armenia under Constantius II (641–68). Under Constantine Pogonatus they were persecuted and their founder was stoned (c. 684). In the 9th cent. they suffered again under Emp. Leo the Armenian, and the Empress Theodora tried to exterminate them. In consequence many of them assisted the Saracens in their raids on the Empire and adopted Mohammedanism. Those who sought refuge in Bulgaria seem to have amalgamated with the *Bogomils in the 10th cent. It seems that they ceased to exist as an independent sect in the 12th century.

The Paulicians professed a Dualistic doctrine, distinguishing between the good God, the Lord of Heaven and creator of souls, and the evil God, the Demiurge and ruler of the material universe. Holding all matter to be evil they denied the reality of Christ's Body and of the Redemption and considered Christ's most important work His teaching. From this contempt of His Body they were led to reject the Cross and all images. Instead they honoured the Book of the Gospels. Like *Marcion, they repudiated the OT and held St. *Luke and the Pauline Epp. in particular esteem. Originally they were organized in four grades of apostles, prophets, itinerants, and copyists, but later only the latter two remained, the itinerants being the superiors and the copyists being entrusted with transcribing the Sacred Books and keeping order in church. Their dualistic doctrines seem frequently to have led to grave moral disorders.

The primary sources include Petrus Siculus, 'Historia Haereseos Manichaeorum qui et Pauliciani' in J. P. Migne, PG, civ, 1239–1304; id., 'Sermones contra Paulicianos', ib., 1305–50. *Euthymius Zigabenus, 'Panoplia Dogmatica, tit. xxiv', ib., cxxx, 1189–1244. K. Ter-Mkrttschian, Die Paulikianer im byzantinischen Kaiserreiche und verwandte ketzerische Erscheinungen in Armenien (1893; with Armenian sources). F. C. *Conybeare, The Key of Truth. Manual of the Paulician Church of Armenia (1898). H. Grégoire, 'Les Sources de l'histoire des Pauliciens' in Académie Royale de Belgique. Bulletins de la Classe des Lettres, 5e série, xxii (1936), pp. 95–114, 224–6; id., 'Précisions géographiques et chronologiques sur les Pauliciens', ib., xxxiii (1947), pp. 289–302, with reff.; F. Scheidweiler, 'Paulikianerprobleme' in B.Z., xliii (1950), pp. 10–39 and 366–84; M. Loos, 'Deux Contributions à l'histoire des Pauliciens', in Byzantinoslavica, xvii (1956), pp. 19–57, xviii (1957), pp. 202–17. Nina G. Garsoïan, The Paulician Heresy. A Study of the Origin and Development of Paulicianism in Armenia and the Eastern Provinces of the Byzantine Empire (Publications in Near and Middle East Studies, Columbia University, Series A, vi; The Hague, 1967). F. C. Conybeare in E.B. (ed. 11), xx (1911), pp. 959–62, s.v.; R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 56–62, s.v. 'Pauliciens'. See also works cited under Manes and Manichaeism.

PAULINE PRIVILEGE. The privilege conceded by St. *Paul (1 Cor. 7. 15) to the partner of a heathen marriage to contract a new marriage on becoming a Christian; if the other (non-Christian) partner wished to separate or put serious obstacles in the way of the convert's faith and practice. There is little evidence of its exercise in the earliest times, but its use is attested by *Chrysostom and *Ambrosiaster. The right gradually became established in *canon law and is now provided for in the *Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 1120–7). See also Divorce.

G. H. Joyce, S.J., Christian Marriage (1933), ch. xi. G. Oesterlé in D.D.C., vii (1965), cols. 229–80, s.v. 'Privilège paulin', with bibl.

PAULINUS, St. (c. 726–802), Bp. of *Aquileia. Born not far from Friuli, he became an assiduous and learned scholar. In 776 *Charlemagne summoned him to the Frankish court, where he made the close acquaintance of *Alcuin and other leading men of learning, and in 787 appointed him Patr. of Aquileia. Here he took a leading part in ecclesiastical affairs, notably in the relations between the Byzantine Church and the W. He also took a prominent share in the suppression of *Adoptianism, notably at the Councils of Regensburg (792), Frankfurt (794), and Friuli (796), and in the conversion of the pagans in the Tyrol and adjacent provinces. His writings include two anti-Adoptianist works—'Libellus Sacrosyllabus contra Elipandum' and 'Libri iii contra Felicem'. He was a poet of no mean order, and was one of the first to give the rhythmical an equal place with metrical verse, as in the lament for Heric, duke of Friuli. Feast day, 28 Jan. (otherwise, 11 Jan. and 2 Mar.).

Works ed. J. F. Madrisius, Cong. Orat. (Venice, 1737), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xcix, 9–683. Modern ed. of his Epp. by E. Dümmler in M.G.H., Epistolae, iv (1895), pp. 516–27; of his Poems by id., ib., Poetae, i (1881), pp. 123–48, with suppl., ib., ii (1884), p. 689 f.; further poems ed. K. Strecker, ib., iv (pt. 2, 1923), pp. 911–14, and vi (pt. 1, 1951), pp. 208–25. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 194–202; id., Weltliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters, i (1970), pp. 471–7. Raby (1953), pp. 168–71. J. Reviron in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 62–7, s.v., with bibl.

PAULINUS, St. (353/4–431), Bp. of Nola. The son of a noble and wealthy family at Bordeaux, Paulinus seems to have received a good education, counting among his teachers the famous *Ausonius. After a short public career and a few years of cultured leisure, he was baptized by St. Delphinus, Bp. of Bordeaux, in 390, and, in agreement with his Spanish wife, Therasia, retired from the world and began to distribute his enormous fortune to the Church and the poor. On a journey to Spain he was ordained priest at Barcelona in 394 on the insistence of the people. Shortly afterwards he settled at Nola, near the tomb of St. Felix, where he and his wife founded a home for monks and poor and themselves led a life of great austerity. Here, in 409, Paulinus was made bishop. His widespread correspondence kept him in touch with several famous Christians of his time, many of whom were his intimate friends, such as St. *Martin of Tours, St. *Ambrose, St. *Augustine, and Pope Anastasius I. Apart from his letters, many of which survive, his poetic works have attracted special attention and place him beside *Prudentius as the foremost Christian Latin poet of the patristic period. Most of his poems were written for the annual celebrations in honour of St. Felix and are of great interest as throwing light on the cult of saints and popular customs of that time. Paulinus still uses the old classical forms with great skill, but fills them with the new Christian spirit of hope and charity, the combination of old and new being one of the greatest charms of his poetry. Feast day, 22 June. See also Bells.

Early edd. of his works by F. *Ducaeus, S.J.–H. Rosweyde, S.J. (Antwerp, 1622), J. B. Le Brun (2 vols., Paris, 1685), and L. A. *Muratori (Verona, 1736). Muratori's text is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxi. Crit. ed. by W. Hartel (C.S.E.L., xxix and xxx; 1894). Passages dealing with churches of Nola ed., with commentary and Eng. tr., by R. C. Goldschmidt (Amsterdam, 1940). Eng. tr. of Letters by P. G. Walsh (A.C.W., xxxv–xxxvi; 1967). Life by A. Baudrillart ('Les Saints', 1905). Other studies by A. Buse (Ratisbon, 1856), F. Lagrange (Paris, 1877; ed. 2, 2 vols., 1882), P. Fabre (Strassburg, 1948), and id. (Paris, 1949). P. Courcelle, 'Paulin de Nole et saint Jérôme' in Revue des Études latines, xxv (1947), pp. 250–80. Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 63–88. Raby, pp. 168–71, with bibl., p. 473. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 569–82. K. Löffler in C.E., xi (1911), p. 585 f.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 68–71, s.v., with bibl.; E. Rapisarda in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 701–3, s.v. 'Paolino, vescovo di Nola', also with bibl.

PAULINUS, St. (d. 358), Bp. of Trier. He was a disciple of St. Maximin, whom he succeeded in the see of Trier. A strong opponent of Arianism, he was banished after the Synod of *Arles of 353 to Phrygia, where he died in exile. His relics were brought back to Trier in 396, where they have since remained. Feast day, 31 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 668–79, with 8th–9th cent. life, pp. 676–9. S. A. Bennett in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 232, s.v. 'Paulinus (4), St.'

PAULINUS, St. (d. 644), Bp. of *York. In 601 he was sent to England by Pope *Gregory to reinforce the mission of St. *Augustine; and when in 625 *Edwin, King of Northumbria, married Ethelburga of Kent, Paulinus was consecrated bishop and went with her to York. As a result of his preaching, Edwin and his chiefs accepted Christianity at the assembly of Goodmanham (627). A cathedral was begun at York, and, assisted by *James the Deacon, Paulinus taught the faith there until 633, when, upon Edwin's defeat by the heathen Cadwallon, he returned with Ethelburga to Kent and became Bp. of *Rochester. Feast day, 10 Oct.

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., i. 29; ii. 9, 12–14, 16–18, 20; iii. 1; iv. 23; v. 24; notes to ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), esp. pp. 93 f., 100 f., 117 f., 161 f. Hardy, i, pt. 1 (1862), p. 229 f. R. H. Hodgkin, A History of the Anglo-Saxons, i (1935), pp. 273–80. H. M. R. E. Mayr-Harting, 'Paulinus of York' in Studies in Church History, iv (ed. G. J. Cuming) (Leiden, 1967), pp. 15–21. J. Raine in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 248 f., s.v., with reff.; W. H. *Hutton in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 451, s.v.

PAULISTS. The popular name for members of 'The Missionary Society of St. Paul the Apostle in the State of New York', founded by I. T. *Hecker in 1858 to further the work and interests of the RC Church in the U.S.A. Its members live under a rule based on that of the *Redemptorists, of which order Hecker had previously been a member. Through the supposed connexion of Hecker with *Americanism, the Society was under suspicion for a time.

Heimbucher, ii, pp. 619–21. V. F. Holden in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 29 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Americanism and Hecker, I.T.

PAULUS OROSIUS. See Orosius.

PAULUS SILENTIARIUS (6th cent.; a silentiarius was an usher who maintained silence in the Imperial Palace), Christian poet. He wrote during the reign of *Justinian (Emp. 527–65). His principal work, a hymn to mark the consecration of *Santa Sophia at *Constantinople on 24 Dec. 562, gives a full description (ἔκφρασις) of the church and pulpit (ἄμβων) in fluent hexameters, and is of great interest for the history of Byzantine art. Paulus also wrote some 80 epigrams, preserved in the Greek anthology. A poem on the Baths of Pythia in Bithynia has also, but wrongly, been ascribed to him.

Paulus's Ecphrasis and Ambo, ed. I. Bekker (C.S.H. Byz., 1837); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi, 2119–58 and 2251–64, with C. D. *du Cange's commentary on the former, also repr. from Bekker, cols. 2159–252. Crit. ed. in P. Friedländer, Johannes von Gaza und Paulus Silentiarius (1912), pp. 225–65, with notes pp. 266–305. Epigrams ed., with Ital. tr. and commentary, by G. Viansino (Turin, 1963). K. Praechter, 'Zum Bädergedichte des Paulos Silentiarios' in B.Z., xiii (1904), pp. 1–12. S. G. *Mercati, 'Intorno all'autore del carme εἰς τὰ Ἰνθίους Θερμά (Leone Magistro Choirosphaktes)' in Rivista degli Studi orientali, x (1923–5), pp. 212–48. W. von Christ, Geschichte der griechischen Literatur, ii (ed. 6 by W. Schmid–O. Stählin, 1924), pp. 977 f. and 980.' Bardenhewer, v, p. 24 f. W. Peck in P.W., xviii (pt. 4; 1949), cols. 2363–72, s.v. 'Paulus 10'.

PAULUS, HEINRICH EBERHARD GOTTLOB (1761–1851), German orientalist and theologian. He was professor of oriental languages at Jena from 1789 to 1793, and of exegetical theology from 1793 to 1803. After other appointments, he held the chair of exegesis and ecclesiastical history at Heidelberg from 1811 to 1844. His most important works were Leben Jesu als Grundlage einer reinen Geschichte des Urchristenthums (2 vols., 1828) and an Exegetisches Handbuch über die drei ersten Evangelien (3 vols., 1830–3), in which he made a fruitless attempt to reconcile belief in the substantial accuracy of the Gospel narrative with disbelief in the miracles and the supernatural. His influence gradually waned before the more radical scepticism of D. F. *Strauss.

He publd. his autobiographical Skizzen aus meiner Bildungs- und Lebens-Geschichte (Heidelberg, 1839). Frh. C. A. von Reichlin-Meldegg (Paulus' son-in-law), H. E. G. Paulus und seine Zeit (2 vols., 1853). A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906), pp. 48–56; Eng. tr. (1910), pp. 48–57. K. F. A. Kahnis–P. Tschackert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 88–92.

PAX. See Kiss of Peace and foll. entry.

PAX BREDE (also Pax or Osculatorium). A small plate of ivory, metal, or wood, with a representation of the Crucifixion or other religious subject on the face and a projecting handle on the back, formerly used at Mass for conveying the *Kiss of Peace (q.v.) esp. to those in choir and to the laity. It was kissed first by the celebrant and then by the others who received it in turn. Pax bredes came into general use in the later Middle Ages prob. under *Franciscan influence. They have been rendered obsolete by the current regulations concerning the Kiss of Peace.

Jungmann, (ed. 1958), ii, p. 408 f. (Eng. tr., ii, p. 328 f.). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (1910), cols. 128 f., s.v. 'Baiser. vi: Osculatorium'.

PEACE OF THE CHURCH, The. The term is applied:

(1) To the new situation in the Church when persecution ceased with the 'Edict of *Milan' in 313; also, in a more specialized sense,

(2) To the temporary cessation of the *Jansenist conflict in 1668, brought about when Pope Clement IX accepted the submission of the four French bishops (28 Sept.) and Louis XIV ordered all parties to the dispute to refrain from further conflict. The settlement, also known as the 'Clementine Peace' ('Pax Clementina'), was formally ratified by Clement IX in four briefs dated 19 Jan. 1669.

PEACOCK, REGINALD. See Pecock, Reginald.

PEAKE, ARTHUR SAMUEL (1865–1929), Biblical scholar. The son of a *Primitive Methodist minister, he was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and in 1890 elected a Fellow of Merton. In 1892 he was appointed tutor in charge of the curriculum at the newly-founded Hartley Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, where his influence was such that he raised the whole standard of the ministry of the Methodist Church. In 1904 he also became the first occupant of the Rylands Chair of Biblical Criticism and Exegesis at Manchester University. An accurate, balanced, and cautious scholar, he possessed a vast knowledge of current Biblical literature. The works by which he is best remembered are The Bible, its Origin, its Significance, and its Abiding Worth (1913), The Problem of Suffering in the Old Testament (1904), and esp. his editorship of a Commentary on the Bible in one volume (1919). He also took an active part in the ecclesiastical affairs of the Free Churches and the reunion movement among Methodist bodies and beyond. He was never ordained.

Supplement to Peake's Commentary, ed. A. J. Grieve (London, 1936). The so-called new edition of Peake's Commentary, ed. M. Black and H. H. Rowley (1962), is a completely new work. A collection of his minor works, mainly obituary notices of other scholars, ed. W. F. Howard, under the title Recollections and Appreciations (London, 1938). Memoir of Peake by his eldest son, Leslie S. Peake (ib., 1930). Life by J. T. Wilkinson (ib., 1971); id. (ed.), Arthur Samuel Peake 1865–1929. Essays in Commemoration (1958). C. H. *Dodd in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 657 f.

PEARSON, JOHN (1613–86), Bp. of *Chester. He was educated at Eton and Queens' College, Cambridge, and ordained in 1639. During the Civil War he supported the Royalist cause, under the Commonwealth lived in semi-retirement in London, and after the Restoration became Master successively of Jesus College (1660) and of Trinity College (1662), Cambridge, and also (from 1661) Lady Margaret professor of divinity. At the *Savoy Conference in 1661 he championed the cause of episcopacy. In 1673 he became Bp. of Chester. He was perhaps the most erudite and profound divine of a learned and theological age. His classical Exposition of the Creed (1659), in origin a series of lectures extending over several years at St. Clement's, Eastcheap, reveals his firm grasp of fundamental principles, his delight in clear and accurate statement, and his judicious and sober temper, while the notes which illustrate the text reflect his remarkable knowledge, esp. of the Christian Fathers. Addressed to a more scholarly public is his Vindiciae Epistolarum S. Ignatii (1672), an elaborate defence of the authenticity of the Epp. of St. *Ignatius against the attacks of J. *Daillé, of which the conclusions have only been strengthened by the intensive work of later scholars. Pearson also wrote a great number of minor works, largely concerned to uphold the position of the C of E against Rome and Nonconformity.

Life by E. Churton, prefixed to Pearson's Minor Theological Works (2 vols., Oxford, 1844), i, pp. xiii–cxxxvi. S. Cheetham, 'John Pearson' in A. Barry (ed.), Masters in English Theology (1877), pp. 213–40. E. Fraenkel (ed.), Aeschylus, Agamemnon, i (Oxford, 1950), pp. 40–4 and 78–85. F. Sanders in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 168–73.

PEARSON, JOHN LOUGHBOROUGH (1817–1897), architect. His work, which was mainly geometrical-gothic and ecclesiastical, was characterized by accurate scholarship, refined detail, elegant proportion, and noble vaulting. The best-known example is *Truro Cathedral (1880). Among his other notable churches are St. Peter's, Vauxhall (1864), St. Augustine's, Kilburn (1870), St. John's, Red Lion Square (1874), and St. Stephen's, Bournemouth (1889). He was also a careful and conservative restorer of many ancient churches, and practically rebuilt the front of the north transept of *Westminster Abbey.

J. E. Newberry, 'The Work of John L. Pearson, R.A.', in The Architectural Review, i (1897), pp. 1–11, 69–82. Memoir of 'The Late John Loughborough Pearson, R.A.', in Journal of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Ser. 3, v (1898), pp. 113–21. P. Waterhouse in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 255–8.

PEASANTS' REVOLT, The. The insurrection of the German peasants in 1524–6. It arose from the economic distress of a large part of the German peasantry which had produced such movements as the Bundschuh (from 1493) on the Upper Rhine and the Armer Konrad in Württemberg. They were stimulated by the doctrines of certain of the Reformers, esp. T. *Münzer, which incited the peasants to seek greater freedom by violent means, and supported also by townspeople and a number of knights and apostate priests dissatisfied with the existing order of things. They set out their grievances in the *Twelve Articles drawn up at Memmingen (Mar. 1525), demanding inter alia the abolition of certain taxes and of serfdom, and the freedom of election of their pastors. To these religious privileges were soon added, and before long mob violence began to rage. Devoid of proper leadership, the peasants burned down castles and monasteries and proposed to destroy all authority. M. *Luther, who at first had attempted to mediate between landlords and peasants, was soon disgusted with the brutality of the rebels, and in 1525 issued his famous pamphlet Wider die mördischen und räubischen Rotten der Bauern. His advocacy of their merciless extermination cost him much of his popularity. The movement was ruthlessly stamped out by the armies of the Schwäbischer Bund, the union of Protestant princes, in the same year. The last remnants fled into the mountains of Salzburg and the Tyrol, where they survived for another year. The war resulted in a further deterioration of the lot of the peasants and in a consolidation of the power of the Lutheran princes.

O. H. Brandt (ed.), Der grosse Bauernkrieg. Zeitgenössische Berichte, Aussagen und Aktenstücke (1925); G. Franz (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte des Bauernkrieges (Munich, 1963). Id., Der deutsche Bauernkrieg (1933; ed. 5, 1958). A. F. Pollard in C.M.H., ii (1903), ch. vi: 'Social Revolution and Catholic Reaction in Germany', esp. pp. 174–97; bibl. pp. 752–4. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), pp. 52–80 (Nos. 34765–35241). Brief art., with bibl., by F. Zoepfl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), ii (1958), col. 58 f. Cf. also G. Franz in R.G.G. (ed. 3), i (1957), cols. 927–30, s.v. 'Bauernkrieg'.

PECKHAM, JOHN (c. 1225–92), also Pecham, Abp. of *Canterbury. He was born at Patcham (formerly Pecham), E. Sussex, and prob. educated at Lewes. He proceeded to the University of *Paris, where he studied in the faculty of arts, and then transferred to *Oxford, where he joined the *Franciscans c. 1250. Between 1257 and 1259 he returned to Paris to study theology, and here from c. 1269 to c. 1271 he occupied the Franciscan chair of theology. He played a prominent part in defending his Order against the attacks of secular masters. He returned to Oxford c. 1272 as lector in theology in the Franciscan convent, and in 1275 he was appointed Provincial. From 1277 to 1279 he was lector sacri palatii in Rome. In 1279 he succeeded Robert *Kilwardby, O.P., as Abp. of Canterbury, being the Papal candidate in opposition to Robert Burnell, Bp. of *Bath and Wells, who was the nominee of Edward I. He promptly inaugurated a vigorous policy of ecclesiastical reform. At a provincial Council at Reading on 30 July 1279 he legislated against pluralities and other abuses, in conformity with the decrees of the Second Council of *Lyons. At another Council at Lambeth (1281) he sought to suppress abuses concerning the Eucharist. At the parliament of 1285 he entered negotiations for a settlement of differences between ecclesiastical and secular authorities, esp. the question of disputed jurisdiction, which led to the issue of the writ 'Circumspecte agatis'. He also concerned himself with raising the standard of the clergy; took active steps to encourage preaching; and reformed the financial administration of many religious houses. He made visitations of all the dioceses in his Province, and his zeal brought him into conflict with some of his suffragans, e.g. St. Thomas *Cantilupe of Hereford.

In theology Peckham was an upholder of the Franciscan tradition; he strongly opposed the teaching of St. *Thomas Aquinas on the unity of form in man, even going so far as to insist on its condemnation as heretical (1286). His writings include a commentary on Book I of the Sentences, three *Quodlibets, commentaries on Lamentations and on St. John's Gospel, as well as works concerning the Franciscan Order. He also produced a French adaptation of Pseudo-*Dionysius for Queen Margaret of France. He had scientific interests and wrote a standard treatise on optics, the 'Perspectiva Communis', which was influenced by Roger *Bacon. He was a gifted poet; his best-known composition was the 'Philomena', a lyrical meditation arranged on the plan of the seven liturgical hours, which was translated into several vernaculars.

Registrum Epistolarum Fratris Johannis Peckham, ed. C. T. Martin (3 vols., R.S., 1882–5); a more complete ed. of his Register [up to 1285; the part covering the remainder of his primacy is prob. lost] ed. F. N. Davis and others (Canterbury and York Society, lxiv–lxv; 1968–9). For edd. of Works see A. Teetaert, Ord. Cap., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 100–40, s.v. 'Pecham', with bibl., esp. cols. 107–25, and F. J. E. Raby in C.B.E.L., i (1940), p. 295 f., and supplement (1957), p. 163 f. Decima L. Douie, Archbishop Pecham (Oxford, 1952). M. D. Knowles, O.S.B., 'Some Aspects of the Career of Archbishop Pecham' in E.H.R., lvii (1942), pp. 1–18; 178–201. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 190–7. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1445–7, with bibl.

PECOCK, REGINALD (c. 1393–1461), Bp. of *Chichester. A Welshman by birth, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow. In 1431 he was appointed master of Whittington College, London, and subsequently, through court influence, Bp. of *St. Asaph in 1444 and of Chichester in 1450. His antagonism to the Yorkist party and his theological writings having made him unpopular, he was accused of heresy in 1457, and although he recanted, he was deprived of his bishopric and confined in Thorney Abbey, where he died probably in 1461.

Pecock's thought, which is embodied in his best-known work The Repressor of Overmuch Wijting [i.e. Blaming] of the Clergy, written to controvert the *Lollards, is notable for its very marked emphasis on the 'law of kind', 'written in mennis soulis with the finger of God', to which the Scriptures are merely subordinate and supplementary. Much of his work is an apologia for the Church against the Lollards, of whose doctrines he gives a penetrating analysis. Although his writings were medieval in form, Pecock's critical faculty and his use of the English language make him one of the most significant figures of the 15th century.

There are modern edd. of 'The Repressor' by C. Babington (2 vols., R.S., 1860), his 'Book of Faith' by J. L. Morison (Glasgow, 1909), 'The Donet' by E. V. Hitchcock (E.E.T.S., clvi, 1921), 'The Follower to the Donet' by id. (ib., clxiv, 1924), and of 'The Rule of Christian Religion' by W. C. Greet (ib., clxxi, 1927). Life by J. Lewis (London, 1744). V. H. H. Green, Bishop Reginald Pecock. A Study in Ecclesiastical History and Thought (Thirlwall Prize, 1941; 1945), incl. bibl. E. F. Jacob, 'Reynold Pecock, Bishop of Chichester' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxxvii (1951), pp. 121–53; E. H. Emerson, 'Reginald Pecock: Christian Rationalist' in Speculum, xxxi (1956), pp. 235–42. A. M. Cooke in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 198–202; B.R.U.O., iii (1959), pp. 1447–9.

PECTORAL CROSS. A cross of precious metal worn on the breast and suspended by a chain which goes round the neck. In the C of E its use is almost exclusively confined to bishops; but in the RC Church cardinals and abbots also wear it. In the E it is worn by *archimandrites, *archpriests, and in Russia even by simple priests: there, the distinctive emblem of the episcopate is not the pectoral cross but the *encolpion, although the bishop wears a pectoral cross as well as an encolpion on certain formal occasions, esp. when officiating in church.

PECULIAR, a place exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which it is situated; it may be a parish, a group of parishes or a chapel. At one time or another there have been six types of Peculiars: Monastic Peculiars, where great abbeys and certain religious orders were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction; Royal Peculiars, usually where churches were situated on lands connected with a royal castle or palace (e.g. St. George's Chapel, *Windsor, and *Westminster Abbey), and which are exempt from any jurisdiction other than that of the Sovereign; Archiepiscopal Peculiars, linked with rights claimed by archbishops to exercise jurisdiction where they had manors or palaces; Episcopal Peculiars, where bishops owned residences in dioceses other than their own; and Cathedral Peculiars, in which cathedral chapters had jurisdiction over their property and instituted clerks. Apart from the Royal Peculiars, most of the rights and privileges of the others have been removed, so that they now come under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop, although the holders of some of them retain the title of Dean (e.g. Bocking, Battle, Stamford).

PECULIAR PEOPLE, The, also 'Plumstead Peculiars'. A small sect of faith-healers, founded in London in 1838. On the basis of Jas. 5. 14 they reject medical aid, and in cases of illness rely on anointing with oil and prayer. They are mostly humble folk, held in high respect by their neighbours.

M. Sorrell. The Peculiar People (Exeter, 1979).

PEDILAVIUM (Lat., 'washing of the feet'). The ceremony of the washing of the feet performed in the liturgy on *Maundy Thursday. It is attested by the 17th Synod of Toledo in 694 and for 13th cent. Rome in (Mabillon's) tenth Ordo Romanus. When the Maundy Thursday Mass came to be celebrated in the morning, the Pedilavium remained as a separate service, confined to cathedral and abbey churches. Pope *Pius XII's Holy Week Ordinal placed it in the restored evening Mass immediately after the homily and recommended its observance in all churches. During the singing of antiphons, twelve men are led into the sanctuary, where the celebrant solemnly washes and dries the feet of each in turn. When the ceremony was observed apart from the Mass, it began with the recital of the Gospel narrative (Jn. 13).

T. Schäfer, O.S.B., Die Fusswaschung im monastischen Brauchtum und in der lateinischen Liturgie. Liturgiegeschichtliche Untersuchungen (Texte und Arbeiten, Abt. I, Hft. xlvii; Beuron, 1956). A. Malvy, S.J., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 16–36, s.v. 'Lavement des pieds'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2002–9, s.v. 'Lavement (Lavage liturgique de la tête, des mains, des pieds)'.

PEDROG, St. See Petrock, St.

PEEL PARISH. In the C of E a term used for a *parish set up under the New Parishes Act, 1843, passed when Sir Robert Peel was Prime Minister, or one of the subsequent Acts on this subject. Under this legislation a district not containing any existing parish church might be set up as a separate parish, with the consent of the Bishop, under a scheme drawn up by the *Ecclesiastical (since 1948 *Church) Commissioners; the patronage is in the hands of the Crown and the Bishop alternately.

PÉGUY, CHARLES PIERRE (1873–1914), French writer. He came of a peasant and artisan family of Orléans, and was educated at Paris at the École Normale Supérieure and the *Sorbonne; but he gave up his studies to manage a bookshop in the rue de la Sorbonne, which became a centre of intellectual activity. At first an ardent socialist and Dreyfusard, he later became a mystical nationalist with a strong sympathy for medieval Catholicism. His philosophy was much influenced by H. *Bergson. His attachment to France found early expression in the drama Jeanne d'Arc (1897), publd. in collaboration with Marcel Baudouin under the pseudonym 'Pierre Baudouin'. As an anti-clerical he remained estranged from his Catholic contemporaries and, though his Medievalism and Incarnationalism led him to uphold the alliance of Christianity with socialism, he was distrusted by republicans and socialists alike because of his pessimism on the future of the secular order. In the Cahiers de la Quinzaine (founded by Péguy, 1900) he endeavoured to vindicate his position as an ardent Catholic and a socialist, himself contributing to it Notre Patrie (1905), De la situation faite au parti intellectuel dans le monde moderne (1906), Le Mystère de la charité de Jeanne d'Arc (1910; Eng. tr., 1950), Victor-Marie, Comte Hugo (1911), Le Mystère des Saints Innocents (1912; Eng. tr., 1956), L'Argent (1913), and other items. He had a strong faith in the Eucharist, which domestic circumstances made it impossible for him to receive. Despite his unusual style and the remoteness of some of his preoccupations, he exercised a deep influence on later French Catholic writers, esp. in regard to politics. He lost his life in the Battle of the Marne on 5 Sept. 1914.

Eng. tr. of selections from Péguy's works by A. and J. Green, Charles Péguy: Basic Verities (1943), and Charles Péguy: Men and Saints (1947). J. and J. Tharaud, Notre Cher Péguy (2 vols., 1926); D. Halévy, Péguy et les Cahiers de la Quinzaine (1941; Eng. tr., 1946); R. Rolland, Péguy (2 vols., 1944); J. Delaporte, Connaissance de Péguy (2 vols., c. 1944); Yvonne Servais, Charles Péguy. The Pursuit of Salvation (1953); A. Dru, Péguy (London, 1956); Marjorie Villiers, Charles Péguy. A Study in Integrity (1965), with bibl.; P. Duployé, O.P., La Religion de Péguy (Bibliothèque Française et Romane, Série C, Études littéraires, x [1965]); N. Jussem-Wilson, Charles Péguy (London, 1965); H. A. Schmitt, Charles Péguy. The Decline of an Idealist ([Baton Rouge,] 1967); T. Quoniam, La Pensée de Péguy (1967).

PELAGIA, St. (d. c. 311), virgin and martyr. Her name occurs in the canon of the *Ambrosian Mass of Milan, and her fate is known from mentions of her in St. *Ambrose (PL, xvi, 229–32 and 1093) and in St. *Chrysostom (PG, I, 579–85). She was a 15-year-old girl of *Antioch who, when during one of the persecutions (probably that under *Diocletian) her house was surrounded by soldiers, threw herself out of a window into the sea to preserve her chastity. Feast day, 9 June.

To the name of this historical person a legend became attached of a 4th cent. actress of Antioch who was suddenly converted by St. Nonnus, Bp. of *Edessa, and went to *Jerusalem in men's clothes, where she lived as a recluse in a grotto of the Mt. of *Olives practising severe penances. Feast day, 8 Oct.

The story of a third Pelagia, a virgin martyr of *Tarsus, seems to be a combination of the former two. This Pelagia is supposed to have been burned to death for refusing to become the mistress of the Emperor. Her feast is also on 8 Oct. in E. calendars, in the Roman martyrology on 4 May. H. Usener's attempt to explain the cultus of Pelagia as a Christian adaptation of the myth of Astarte has been severely handled by H. *Delehaye.

The legend of St. Pelagia appears to have close connexions with that of St. *Margaret (q.v.).

For the legends, besides the items cited in the text, see B.H.G. (ed. 3, 1957), Nos. 1478–80, and B.H.L., Nos. 6605–6611. H. Usener, Legenden der hl. Pelagia (1879); H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905), pp. 222–34; Eng. tr. (1907), pp. 197–206. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., xi (1911) p. 601 f.; J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, x (Rome, 1968), cols. 432–7, both s.v.

PELAGIANISM. Theologically, Pelagianism is the heresy which holds that man can take the initial and fundamental steps towards salvation by his own efforts, apart from Divine *Grace. Historically, it was an ascetic movement composed of disparate elements united under the name of the British theologian and exegete Pelagius, who taught in Rome in the late 4th and early 5th cents.

In essence, Pelagianism was a lay movement, aristocratic in tone and membership, which arose in the circles in Rome which admired St. *Jerome in the 380s. It enjoyed considerable popularity in Sicily, where many of its Roman adherents had estates and where it produced a local theologian, the anonymous writer sometimes called the 'Sicilian Briton'. Pelagius's great contribution to the movement was to supply a theology vindicating Christian asceticism against the charge of *Manichaeism by emphasizing man's freedom to choose good by virtue of his God-given nature. He does not seem to have been greatly interested in the doctrine of Original Sin; the denial of the transmission of Original Sin seems to have been introduced into Pelagianism by Rufinus the Syrian, who influenced Pelagius's supporter *Celestius.

In 409 or 410, when Rome was menaced by the Goths, Pelagius and Celestius left Italy for Africa, whence Pelagius soon moved to Palestine. Celestius was subsequently accused by Paulinus of Milan (the biographer of St. *Ambrose) of denying the transmission of Adam's sin to his descendants. He was condemned by a Council at *Carthage in 411 and went to *Ephesus. Soon afterwards St. *Augustine began to preach and write against Pelagian doctrine, though he continued to treat Pelagius himself with respect until 415. In that year Pelagius was accused of heresy by the Spanish priest *Orosius, who had been sent by Augustine to Jerome at Bethlehem. Pelagius, however, succeeded in clearing himself at a diocesan synod at *Jerusalem and at a provincial synod at Diospolis (Lydda). The African bishops, however, condemned Pelagius and Celestius at two councils at Carthage and Milevis in 416 and persuaded Pope *Innocent I (410–17) to excommunicate them. Celestius went to Rome and so impressed Innocent's successor, *Zosimus (417–19), that he reopened the case. The Africans stood firm and at the Council of Carthage on 1 May 418 they issued a series of nine canons affirming in uncompromising terms the so-called 'Augustinian' doctrine of the *Fall and Original Sin. Meanwhile, on 30 April the Emp. Honorius (395–423), perhaps under African pressure, had issued an imperial decree denouncing Pelagius and Celestius. Soon afterwards Pope Zosimus decided against them and by his 'Epistola Tractoria' (418) he reaffirmed the judgement of his predecessor.

Pelagius himself had little inclination to continue the struggle. He disappears from history and his subsequent fate is unknown. However, a new defender of Pelagianism appeared in *Julian of Eclanum, who conducted a literary debate of great bitterness with Augustine, which ended only with Augustine's death in 430. In 429 Celestius appealed to *Nestorius to intercede for him with Pope *Celestine I, but he and his supporters, like Nestorius, were condemned at the Council of *Ephesus in 431. Pelagian influence continued in the W. in Britain, where the intervention of *Germanus of Auxerre was needed to eradicate it, and in Gaul, where the situation was complicated by the movement misleadingly called '*Semi-Pelagianism'. This was a rejection of Augustine's extreme predestinarian views without any corresponding approval of Pelagius. Controversy continued in Gaul during the 5th cent., and a satisfactory theological formula was reached only at the Second Council of *Orange in 529 through the influence of *Caesarius of Arles. The issues raised by Pelagianism, however, continually reappeared during the Middle Ages, only to break out afresh at the *Reformation.

See also Semi-Pelagianism.

Owing to Pelagius's condemnation his extensive writings have been largely lost or transmitted under other names. The most considerable surviving work is his 'Commentary on St. Paul's Epp.' (on all thirteen, but not Heb.; written in Rome before 410), which has come down in a worked-over form ascribed to Jerome (PL, xxx, 645–902) and to *Primasius of Hadrumetum (ib., lxviii, 413–686). The orig. text was discovered by A. *Souter and ed. by him with introd. (Texts and Studies, ix. 1–3; Cambridge, 1922–31; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Supplement, i, ed. A. Hamman, O.F.M. (1958), cols. 1110–1374). Other works which are certainly the work of Pelagius are his 'Ep. ad Demetriadem', addressed to a Roman lady of high standing who became a nun (wrongly incl. among the works of Augustine and Jerome, PL, xxx, 15–45, and xxxiii, 1099–1120), and the short 'Libellus Fidei ad Innocentium Papam' (ib., xlviii, 488–91). G. de Plinval has defended as indisputably the work of Pelagius a small collection of Epp. and other writings brought together in C. P. *Caspari, Briefe, Abhandlungen und Predigten (Christiania, 1890), pp. 3–167 (with comm. pp. 223–389 and hence known as the 'Corpus Casparianum'), as well as a number of other lesser writings. Most of the other works attributed to Pelagius in modern times are repr. in PL, Supplement, i, cols. 1375–1570, with introd. cols. 1101–9; for further details see also Altaner–Stuiber, cited below.

The classic account of the subject is H. *Noris, Historia Pelagiana (Padua, 1673; with strong *Jansenist leanings). Modern studies include A. Souter, The Earliest Latin Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul (1927), pp. 205–30; G. de Plinval, 'Recherches sur l'œuvre littéraire de Pélage' in Revue de Philologie, de Littérature et d'Histoire anciennes, Sér. 3, viii (1934), pp. 9–42; id., Pélage. Ses écrits, sa vie et sa réforme (Lausanne, 1943); id., Essai sur le style et la langue de Pélage, suivi du traité inédit De Induratione Cordis Pharaonis (Collectanea Friburgensia, Nouvelle Série, xxxi; 1947); J. Ferguson, Pelagius (Cambridge, 1956); T. Bohlin, Die Theologie des Pelagius und ihre Genesis (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1957, No. 9); J. N. L. Myres, 'Pelagius and the End of Roman Rule in Britain' in Journal of Roman Studies, 1 (1960), pp. 21–36; S. Prete, Pelagio e il pelagianesimo (Brescia, 1961); J. Morris, 'Pelagian Literature' in J.T.S., N.S. xvi (1965), pp. 26–60; id., 'The Literary Evidence' in M. W. Barley–R. P. C. Hanson (edd.), Christianity in Britain, 300–700 (Leicester, 1968), pp. 55–73; R. F. Evans, Pelagius. Inquiries and Reappraisals (1968), and other works of this author; P. Brown, 'Pelagius and his Supporters: Aims and Environment' in J.T.S., N.S. xix (1968), pp. 93–114; id., 'The Patrons of Pelagius', ib., xxi (1970), pp. 56–72. H. Zimmer, Pelagius in Irland. Texte und Untersuchungen zur patristischen Litteratur (1901). Useful collection of texts in A. Bruckner, Quellen zur Geschichte des pelagianischen Streites (Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, Reihe 2, vii; 1906). H. J. Frede, Pelagius, Der irische Paulustext, Sedulius Scottus (Vetus Latina. Die Reste der Altlateinischen Bibel. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, iii; 1961), pp. 9–58. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 513–15; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 374–7. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 747–74, s.v. 'Pelagius und der pelagianische Streit' [at end of the volume]; R. Hedde, O.P.–É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 675–715. See also works cited under Augustine, St.

PELICAN. The image of the Pelican, 'vulning herself' with her beak to feed her young with her blood, has been widely used in Christian symbolism to typify the Lord's redeeming work, esp. as mediated through the Blessed Sacrament. Well-known instances are the first line of the 6th stanza of '*Adoro te devote', and the figure of the Pelican on the column in the quadrangle of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. At *Durham the Blessed Sacrament used to be reserved in a silver Pelican suspended over the high altar.

W. Lampen, O.F.M., '"Pie Pelicane, Jesu Domine"' in Antonianum, xxi (1946), pp. 68–92. A. P. Frutaz in E.C., ix (1952), col. 1088 f., s.v. 'Pellicano'. See also works cited under Iconography.

PENANCE. Of the earliest history of the Sacrament of Penance very little is known. By the 3rd cent. there had emerged a developed system of public Penance which was regarded as a 'second Baptism'. After the sinner, voluntarily or under threat of excommunication, had asked the Bishop for Penance, he was enrolled in the order of *penitents, excluded from Communion, and committed to a severe course of prayer, fasting, and almsgiving. At the end of a period whose length was determined by the gravity of the sin, the sinner was reconciled and rejoined the congregation of the faithful. Certain inhibitions, however, attached to him for life, e.g. he must not be a soldier and he might not marry. The outstanding characteristics of this system were: (1) the enrolment into the distinct order of penitents, (2) it could be undergone only once in a lifetime, and (3) the enforcement of life-long continence. Because of these characteristics the system broke down, and Penance was usually postponed until the eve of death.

In consequence, a new system was developed through the influence of *Celtic or *Anglo-Saxon monk-missionaries, which was administered by means of the *Penitential Books (q.v.). This differed from the earlier system in the absence of the three features mentioned above; but the Penance remained public, long, and arduous, even in the new. Confession of the details of sin, which had probably never been public in the old system, was secret. Absolution, at any rate at the start of the new system, was withheld until completion of the Penance. Gradually it was pushed back until it was granted on confession and before the Penance was begun. From this developed the modern 'private Penance', with its confession, absolution, and light formal penance. The private Penance received its charter at the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), which required every Christian to confess his sins in Penance at least once a year. The new RC rite of Penance (1973) includes provision for a general absolution to be given in some circumstances without previous confession of sins.

Penance means 'poena', i.e. punishment. It was apparently the doctrine of the early Church that sins must be atoned for in part by the punishment of the sinner, on the ground that it was better to endure the punishment in this world than in the next. Though the essential part played in the redemption of sin by Christ's *Atonement on the Cross was never overlooked, yet great weight was always attached to the amends offered by the penitent, and the use of the word '*satisfaction' for the Penance as well as its relative severity reflected this belief. But from the first another idea was also present, viz. that the practice of asceticism controlled and eradicated the passions which led to the sin, and by enforcing a semi-retirement from the world shielded the sinner from further temptations. Hence the Penance is often called a 'heavenly medicine', which heals the wounds inflicted by sin. These ideas are carried over into the Celtic system, together with the more secular purpose of enforcing obedience to the law and exercising over barbarians a moderating and civilizing influence. The Penance consisted generally of fasts (of greater or less severity), continence, pilgrimages, floggings, and imprisonment. Owing to the grave inconvenience and interruption to ordinary life occasioned by long and arduous Penances, the system of commutation grew up. A Penance of years or a lengthy pilgrimage could be compressed into a single day by the payment of money or its place taken by the repeated repetition of the Psalter in a position of physical discomfort. From this idea of commutation probably developed the later practice of *indulgences. This practice also owes much to the greater doctrinal precision of the *Schoolmen, who distinguished between 'culpa' and 'poena', and between 'poena damnationis' and 'poena temporalis', the last alone being the object of Penance. 'Culpa' and 'poena damnationis' were held to be removed by contrition and absolution, whereas 'poena temporalis' required the Penance of the sinner or its equivalent drawn from the treasury of *Merit.

Useful historical account in O. D. Watkins, A History of Penance (2 vols., 1920). J. A. Jungmann, S.J., Die lateinischen Bussriten in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Forschungen zur Geschichte des innerkirchlichen Lebens, iii–iv; 1932). The many RC dogmatic treatises include D. Palmieri, S.J., Tractatus de Poenitentia (Rome, 1879), and P. Galtier, S.J., De Poenitentia (Paris, 1923; ed. 2, Rome, 1950). J. Morinus [*Morin], Commentarius Historicus de Disciplina in Administratione Sacramenti Poenitentiae (Paris, fol., 1651). Modern studies on the early history of penance include P. *Batiffol, 'Les Origines de la pénitence' in Études d'Histoire et de Théologie positive, i (1902), pp. 43–222. G. Rauschen, Eucharistie und Busssakrament in den ersten sechs Jahrhunderten der Kirche (1908), pp. 105–200. B. Poschmann, Die abendländische Kirchenbusse im Ausgang des christlichen Altertums (Münchener Studien zur historischen Theologie, vii; 1928); id., Die abendländische Kirchenbusse im frühen Mittelalter (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, xvi; 1930); id., Paenitentia Secunda. Die kirchliche Busse im ältesten Christentum bis Cyprian und Origenes (Theophaneia, i; 1940); id., Busse und letzte Ölung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, iv, Fask. 3, 1951), pp. 1–123; Eng. tr. [1964], pp. 1–232, incl. additional bibl. P. Galtier, S.J., L'Église et la rémission des péchés aux premiers siècles (1932); id., Aux origines du sacrement de pénitence (Analecta Gregoriana, liv; 1951), and other works by this author; R. C. Mortimer, The Origins of Private Penance in the Western Church (1939). C. Vogel, La Discipline pénitentielle en Gaule des origines à la fin du VIIe siècle (1952). H. Karpp, Die Busse. Quellen zur Entstehung des altkirchlichen Busswesens (Traditio Christiana, 2 vols., Zürich, 1969; Fr. tr., 1970). P. Anciaux, La Théologie du sacrement de pénitence au XIIe siècle (Louvain, 1949). M. Thurian, La Confession (Collection Communauté de Taizé, 1953; Eng. tr., 1958). P. Anciaux, Le Sacrement de la pénitence (Questions de Morale, 1957). W. Telfer, The Forgiveness of Sins. An Essay in the history of Christian doctrine and practice (1959). J. [T. A.] Gunstone, The Liturgy of Penance (Studies in Christian Worship, vii; 1966). J. Fitzsimons (ed.), Penance: Virtue and Sacrament (1969). E. J. Hanna in C.E., xi (1911), pp. 618–35; E. L. van Becelaere –O. D. Watkins in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 711–20, s.v.; É. Amann–A. Michel–M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 722–1138, s.v. 'Pénitence'; A. Mayer, O.S.B.–A. Gennaro, O.S.B.–A. Raes, S.J.–M. Federici in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1104–33, s.v. 'Penitenza'; P. Palmer–P. E. McKeever in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 73–83, s.v.

PENINGTON, ISAAC, the 'Younger' (1616–79), also spelled Pennington, *Puritan and *Quaker. He was the eldest son of Sir Isaac Penington (c. 1590–1661), Lord Mayor of London (1642–4), and educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge. After years of religious perplexity, during which he attached himself for a time to the *Independents, he heard George *Fox speak near Luton in 1657 and, together with his wife, joined the Quaker body. His conversion was an important accession of strength to the Quakers, who hitherto had had no one of his station in their ranks. From 1658 Quaker worship took place at 'The Grange', his house at Chalfont St. Peter. After 1660 he was imprisoned several times; his house and other property confiscated; and his health progressively undermined by the severity of prison life. At Jordans, Chalfont St. Giles, where he was buried, a meeting-house that still survives was built on his property. He wrote many books and pamphlets, all of them in a spirit quite free from controversial bitterness, which were of great assistance in the building up of the new Quaker Society.

Works (2 parts, London, 1681, 1680). J. G. Bevan, Memoirs of the Life of Isaac Pennington; to which is added a review of his writings (1807). M. Webb, The Penns and Peningtons of the 17th Century (1867). C. F. Smith in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 297–300.

PENITENTIAL BOOKS. A set of books containing directions to confessors in the form of prayers, questions to be asked, and exhaustive lists of sins with the appropriate penance prescribed. Of *Celtic origin, they spread with the Celtic and Anglo-Saxon missions all over Europe, the best known being that ascribed to Abp. *Theodore (668–90). They were far more flexible than the ancient penitential system, which they practically superseded, and their wide use and popularity effected a degree of uniformity in discipline. See also Penance.

Selection of texts, with discussion, pr. by F. W. H. Wasserschleben (Halle, 1851) and H. J. Schmitz (vol. i, Mainz, 1883; vol. ii, Düsseldorf, 1898). The Irish Penitentials, ed. L. Bieler with appendix by D. A. Binchy (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, v; 1963). Eng. trr. (various items) by J. T. McNeill–Helena M. Gamer (Records of Civilization, xxix; New York, 1938). F. W. H. Wasserschleben, Beiträge zur Geschichte der vorgratianischen Kirchenrechtsquellen (1829); E. Friedberg, Aus deutschen Bussbüchern (1868). T. P. Oakley, English Penitential Discipline and Anglo-Saxon Law in their Joint Influence (Studies in History, Economics, and Public Law ed. by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University, cvii, fasc. 2; New York, 1923); id., 'The Cooperation of Mediaeval Penance and Secular Law' in Speculum, vii (1932), pp. 515–24; id., 'Cultural Affiliations of Early Ireland in the Penitentials', ib., viii (1933), pp. 489–500, id., 'The Penitentials as Sources for Mediaeval History', ib., xv (1940), pp. 210–23. L. Bieler, 'Interpretationes Patricianae', iv, in Irish Ecclesiastical Record, cvii (1967), p. 9 f. D. A. Binchy, 'St. Patrick's First Synod' in Studia Hibernica, viii (1968), pp. 49–59. C. Vogel, Les "Libri Paenitentiales" (Typologie des sources du moyen âge occidental, xxvii; 1978). J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, i (Records of Civilization, xi; 1929), pp. 235–44. G. Le Bras in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1160–79, s.v. 'Pénitentiels'; C. Vogel in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1131–3, s.v. 'Penitenziali, Libri'; J. Lahache in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 1337–43, s.v. 'Pénitentiels'.

PENITENTIAL PSALMS. See Seven Penitential Psalms.

PENITENTIARY. In the RC Church a Penitentiary in general is a cleric charged with oversight of the administration of the Sacrament of *Penance in a particular area. A Canon Penitentiary is a member of a cathedral chapter specially empowered to hear confessions through the whole diocese. The 'Grand Penitentiary' is the *Cardinal who presides over a tribunal which deals with all important matters affecting the Sacrament.

E. Göller, Die päpstliche Pönitentiarie von ihrem Ursprung bis zu ihrer Umgestaltung unter Pius V. (Bibliothek des Kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, iii–iv and vii–viii; 1907–11). R. Naz in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 1327–34, s.v. 'Pénitencerie'; P. Lumbreras in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 87 f., s.v.

PENITENTS. In the ancient system of public *penance (q.v.), Penitents were segregated from the rest of the congregation by wearing a special robe, having close-cropped hair and worshipping apart in the Church. Here, towards the west end of the nave, placed between the *catechumens and the faithful, they received from the bishop special laying-on of hands each Sunday. In the E. Church, though not in the W., the order of Penitents may have been divided into four stages, though the prevalence of this procedure has been contested by F. X. Funk and E. *Schwartz. The Penitent remained in the order till he was readmitted to Communion. Certain disabilities attached to him for life.

The disciplinary regulations controlling the exercise of Penance in the early Church will be found in the primitive collections of canons (for bibl. see Canon Law). E. Vacandard, La Pénitence publique dans l'Église primitive (2 vols., 1903). F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, i (1897), pp. 151–209; E. Schwartz, Bussstufen und Katechumenatsklassen (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft in Strassburg, vii; 1911). G. Mead in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 1591–6, s.v. 'Penitence, iii: The Penitential Stations' (useful collection of material, but assumes older view). See also bibl. to Penance.

PENN, WILLIAM (1644–1718), *Quaker and founder of Pennsylvania. The eldest son of Admiral Sir William Penn (1621–70), who captured Jamaica from the Dutch (May 1655), he was for a time an undergraduate at Christ Church, Oxford, whence he was sent down in 1661 for refusal to conform with the restored Anglicanism. After some years of travel abroad he was admitted in 1665 a student at Lincoln's Inn. A sermon of Thomas Loe, an Oxford tradesman with whom he had been acquainted since boyhood, which he heard at Cork in 1665, had a decisive influence and henceforward he attached himself to the Quakers. He soon began writing in defence of his newly won faith and in 1668 his The Sandy Foundation Shaken, an attack on the orthodox doctrines of the *Trinity and *Atonement and the *Calvinistic account of *Justification, led to his imprisonment in the Tower. During his confinement he wrote No Cross, No Crown (1669), a recognized classic of Quaker practice. In 1670 his acquittal at the Old Bailey by the jury, who gave a verdict against the ruling of the Court and were forthwith imprisoned, led to the famous 'Bushell's Case', in which twelve judges unanimously upheld the jury's rights and declared their imprisonment illegal. During the 'seventies Penn became increasingly interested in the foundation of a colony in America which would assure liberty of conscience for Quakers and others, and eventually in 1682 he obtained by letters patent grants of East New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In the same year he founded the 'Free Society of Traders of Pennsylvania', drew up a constitution for the colony which permitted all forms of worship compatible with monotheism and religious liberty, and himself sailed for America. After establishing the colony he returned to England in 1684. Believing that *James II, with whom he had had relations from the days of his father's admiralship, was a true advocate of toleration, he expressed the Quakers' thanks for the *Declaration of Indulgence (1687) in a loyal address and followed it with a pamphlet, Good Advice to the Church of England, Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters. For a short time after the Revolution he was held to bail as one of James's adherents. In 1692 he was deprived by an order in council of the Governorship of Pennsylvania and in his enforced leisure wrote The Fruits of Solitude. In 1693 he resumed his practice of itinerant preaching and in 1696 wrote his Primitive Christianity, upholding the identity of Quaker principles with those of the early Church. In 1699 he paid a second visit to Pennsylvania, intending to settle there for good, but in 1701 the proposal to introduce legislation changing the status of the province into a Crown Colony brought him back to England, where he lived successively at Kensington, Knightsbridge, Brentford, and Field Ruscombe (near Twyford). He is buried at Jordans, near Chalfont St. Giles. His prolific writings were almost all occasional.

Collected ed. of his works (2 vols., fol., London, 1726), with life, written by Joseph Besse eight years after Penn's death, pr. anon. in vol. i, pp. 1–150. Other lives by T. Clarkson (2 vols., London, 1813), S. M. Janney (Philadelphia, 1851; ed. 2, 1856; with many useful original docc.); W. Hepworth Dixon (London, 1851; popular and inaccurate in detail); J. Stoughton (ib., 1882); A. G. Buell (New York, 1904); Mrs. Colquhoun Grant (London, c. 1907); Mabel R. Brailsford (ib., 1930); B. Dobrée (ib., 1932); C. E. Vulliamy (ib., 1933); W. I. Hull (ib., 1937); W. W. Comfort (Philadelphia, 1944) and Catherine O. Pearce (ib.–New York, 1957; London, 1959). V. Buranelli, The King and the Quaker. A Study of William Penn and James II (Philadelphia, 1962). Mary M. Dunn, William Penn. Politics and Conscience (Princeton, 1967). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 311–20; R. W. Kelsey in Dict. Amer. Biog., xiv (1934), pp. 433–7. See also bibl. to Friends, Society of.

PENNINGTON, ISAAC. See Penington, Isaac.

PENRY, JOHN (1559–93), *Brownist. Of Welsh descent, he was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and St. Alban's Hall, Oxford. After leaving Oxford, he quickly came into conflict with the bishops on account of his *Puritan ideas. His Equity of an Humble Supplication in the behalf of the Country of Wales, that some Order may be taken for the Preaching of the Gospel among those People (1587), an attack on the C of E, angered Abp. J. *Whitgift, who brought him before the Court of High Commission. In 1588, when the scurrilous *Marprelate tracts appeared, Penry was suspected of being their author, and in consequence of these suspicions early in 1590 fled to Scotland, where he remained for nearly three years. On his return to England in the autumn of 1592 he became an adherent of the Separatist Church of R. *Browne. Now considered a danger to the Church, he was hanged on 29 May 1593, on an ill-grounded charge of treason.

An Account of Penry's Trial, in Lat. (but with extracts from his works in English), together with a collection of citations apparently collected for his trial and which Penry intended to present to Queen *Elizabeth I, the original MS. of his defence against his first indictment and some of his final remarks to Lord Burghley on the day of his execution, were ed., with introd., by C. Burrage (Oxford, 1913). The Note-Book containing the passages mainly responsible for his condemnation, ed. A. Peel (Camden Society, 3rd Series, lxvii; 1944). Lives by J. Waddington (London, 1854), H. M. White (ib., [1899]; popular), and W. Pierce (ib., 1923, with good bibl.). D. J. McGinn, John Penry and the Marprelate Controversy (New Brunswick, 1966). S. Lee in D.N.B., xliv (1895), pp. 346–50. See also bibl. to Marprelate Tracts.

PENTATEUCH (Gk. πεντα, 'five' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A title in general use among Biblical scholars for the five 'Books of *Moses', *Genesis, *Exodus, *Leviticus, *Numbers, and *Deuteronomy. Most Biblical critics hold that these books are compiled from previously written documents dating from the 9th to the 5th cent. B.C., though recent research has tended to concern itself with the oral traditions before they assumed written form. See also entries '*J', '*E', '*P', and '*D', and Holiness, Code of.

D. C. Simpson, Pentateuchal Criticism (1924). G. von *Rad, Das formgeschichtliche Problem des Hexateuchs (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, 4. Folge, xxvi; 1938), repr. in his Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (Munich, 1958), pp. 9–86; Eng. tr. in The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays (1966), pp. 1–78; M. *Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichte des Pentateuch (Stuttgart, 1948; Eng. tr., Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1972); I. Engnell, 'Moseböckerna' in Svenskt Bibliskt Uppsalagsverk, ii (ed. 2, 1962), cols. 152–65; Eng. tr., 'The Pentateuch', in Critical Essays on the Old Testament (1970), pp. 50–67.

PENTECOST (Gk. πεντηκοστή, the 'fiftieth day'). The Greek name given to the Feast of *Weeks (e.g. Tob. 2. 1; *Josephus, Ant., XVII. x. 2), so called because it fell on the 50th day after *Passover. At this feast the first-fruits of the corn harvest were presented (Deut. 16. 9) and, in most later times, the giving of the Law by Moses was commemorated. As the Holy Ghost descended on the Apostles on this day (Acts 2. 1), the name was applied by the Church to the feast celebrating this event, popularly called *Whitsunday (q.v.). In early times, e.g. in the *Nicene canons (can. 20), the word 'Pentecost' was also used for the whole period between Easter and Whitsunday, i.e. the Paschal time, during which no fast was allowed, prayer was only made standing, and the *Alleluia was sung more frequently. For further liturgical details see Whitsunday.

F. Lohse in T.W.B., vi (1959), cols. 44–53, s.v. πεντηκοστή, with reff.; M. Delcor in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 858–79, s.v. 'Pentecôte (la Fête de la)'. For the Hebrew feast, see also Weeks, Feast of; for the Christian, see Whitsunday.

PENTECOSTALISM. The modern Pentecostal movement is characterized by belief in the possibility of receiving the same experience and gifts as did the first Christians 'on the day of Pentecost' (Acts 1.1–4). Its adherents emphasize the corporate element in worship (often marked by great spontaneity) and lay special stress on the practice of the gifts listed in 1 Cor. and recorded in Acts (e.g. speaking in tongues or 'glossolalia', prophecy, healing, and exorcism). Most of them claim that the 'power' to exercise these gifts is given initially in an experience known as 'baptism in the Holy Spirit', normally regarded as distinct from conversion and from sacramental (or water) *Baptism, and the movement came to be distinguished by the claim (first made in 1900) that 'Spirit baptism' is normally signified by the recipient's breaking into tongues.

In the early years of the 20th cent. experiences of 'Spirit baptism' were reported among various interdenominational revivalist or Holiness groups in America; those occurring in Los Angeles in 1906 attracted widespread attention. Of the many specifically Pentecostal Churches which came to be formed, one of the earliest was the 'Church of God', commonly designated of Cleveland, Tenn., to distinguish it from other bodies taking the same name. The 'Church of God in Christ', the largest Black Pentecostal Church, was originally a Holiness body which adopted Pentecostal teaching in 1907. The largest Pentecostal body in America is the 'Assemblies of God', an affiliation of Churches formed in 1914.

Pentecostalism in Britain is usually dated from a visit to Sunderland in 1907 of T. B. Barratt, a *Methodist minister from Oslo who claimed to have received 'Spirit baptism' in New York. In 1915 the 'Elim Foursquare Gospel Alliance' came into being under George Jeffreys in Ireland, and in 1924 the 'Assemblies of God in Great Britain and Ireland' was constituted by c. 70 independent assemblies. In 1953 immigrants from Jamaica established in Britain the 'New Testament Church of God', an offshoot of the Cleveland 'Church of God'. Pentecostalism also spread early from America to other W. European countries. It is now expanding in the Third World, esp. in Indonesia, among the African Independent Churches, and above all in Latin America.

Since c. 1960 the Pentecostal movement has come to be widely represented not only by the 'classical' Pentecostal Churches, but also within the main Christian denominations, incl. since c. 1967 the RC Church. Pentecostalism was originally a 'religion of the poor'; the adherents of this 'Neo-Pentecostalism' or 'Charismatic Renewal Movement' are mainly middle-class.

N. Bloch-Hoell, The Pentecostal Movement—its Origin, Development, and Distinctive Character (Oslo, 1964). J. Hollenweger, Enthusiastisches Christentum. Die Pfingstbewegung in Geschichte und Gegenwart (Wuppertal, 1969; Eng. tr., 1972). D. Gee, The Pentecostal Movement. A Short History and an Interpretation for British Readers (1941; revised ed., Wind and Flame, Croydon, 1967). M. J. C. Calley, God's People. West Indian Pentecostal Sects in England (1965). [H.] V. Synan, The Holiness-Pentecostal Movement in the United States (Grand Rapids, Michigan [1971]).

PENTECOSTARION (Gk. πεντηκοστάριον). In the E. Church, the liturgical book which contains the variable prayers and lections for the season between *Easter and the Sunday after *Pentecost inclusive.

PEPIN III (714–68), 'Pepin the Short', Frankish king. The son of *Charles Martel, he was educated by the monks of *St.-Denis, near *Paris, and with his brother, Carloman, succeeded to his father's office of Mayor of the Palace of the Frankish Kingdom in 741. In 747 Carloman retired into a monastery, leaving Pepin sole ruler. With the assent of Pope *Zacharias he was elected king by the nobles in 751 in place of the purely nominal Merovingian, Childeric III, and anointed by St. *Boniface. In 754 the ceremony was repeated by the Pope himself, *Stephen (II) III, from whom he received the title 'patricius' in exchange for his promise to win back for him the exarchate of *Ravenna and the rights and territories of the Roman republic. Having defeated the Lombards under Aistulf in the same year and again in 756, Pepin fulfilled his promise by giving to the Pope the territories drawn up in the no-longer-extant document called the 'Donation of Pepin'. He thus laid the foundation of the States of the Church and constituted himself and his successors protectors of the Holy See. Throughout his reign he took an active part in the ecclesiastical reforms inaugurated by St. Boniface and thereby considerably increased the prestige of the Church among his people. He died at St.-Denis on 24 Sept. 768 and was succeeded by his son *Charlemagne. See also Patrimony of St. Peter.

A. Dopsch–J. Lechner–M. Tangl–E. Mühlbacher (edd.), Die Urkunden Pippins, Karlmanns und Karls des Grossen (M.G.H. Diplomata Karolinorum, i; 1906), pp. 1–60. The Fourth Book of the Chronicle of Fredegar with its Continuations, translated from the Latin, with introd. and notes, by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (1960), esp. pp. 97–121. G. Paris, 'La Légende de Pépin "le Bref"' in Mélanges Julien Havet (1895), pp. 603–32. M. Tangl, 'Die Epoche Pippins' in N.A., xxxix (1914), pp. 259–77, with reff. to earlier works. E. Caspar, Pippin und die römische Kirche (1914); C. Rodenburg, Pippin, Karlmann und Papst Stephan II (Historische Studien, clii; 1923). L. Levillain, 'L'Avènement de la dynastie carolingienne et les origines de l'État pontifical (749–757)' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, xciv (1933), pp. 225–95. E. Perels, 'Pippins Erhebung zum König' in Z.K.G., liii (1934), pp. 400–11. O. Bertolini, 'Il problema delle origini del potere temporale dei papi nei suoi presupposti teoretici iniziali: il concetto di "Restitutio" nelle prime cessioni territoriali (756–757) alla chiesa di Roma' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, i (Lateranum, N.S., xiv; 1948), pp. 103–71.

PERCEVAL, ARTHUR PHILIP (1799–1853), *Tractarian theologian. He was educated at Oriel College, and from 1821 to 1825 held a fellowship at All Souls, Oxford. In 1824 he became rector of East Horsley in Surrey; from 1826 until deprived in 1850 he was a royal chaplain. In the early stages of the *Oxford Movement he was one of its chief supporters, being present at the celebrated conference at Hadleigh in July 1833. In his Churchman's Manual, a set of questions and answers conceived as a supplement to the *Catechism in the BCP and issued shortly after the Conference, he stressed the Apostolic Succession and thus produced a useful complement to No. 1 of the Tracts for the Times. In 1842 he published A Collection of Papers Connected with the Theological Movement of 1833, largely in defence of J. H. *Newman's 'Tract No. 90'. He had himself been the author of Tracts Nos. 23, 35, and 36. Queen Victoria deprived him of his chaplaincy because of his opposition to the *Gorham Judgement (1850).

A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., xliv (1895), p. 368.

PERCIVAL, JOHN (1843–1918), Bp. of *Hereford. Elected Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1858, he became successively first headmaster of Clifton College (1862), president of Trinity College, Oxford (1878), headmaster of Rugby (1887), and Bp. of Hereford (1895). He was keenly interested in religious and secular education, and did much to promote the university extension movement and the higher education of women; and as headmaster of Clifton exercised a great spiritual influence on his school. During his latter years he sought to further the cause of reunion between the C of E and the Nonconformist Churches, and met with the opposition both of *Convocation and of his own clergy when he invited Nonconformists to receive Communion in Hereford Cathedral.

W. *Temple, Life of Bishop Percival (1921). G. F. Bradby in D.N.B., 1912–1921, p. 432 f.

PERCY, JOHN. See Fisher the Jesuit.

PEREGRINATIO ETHERIAE (or Silviae). See Etheria, Pilgrimage of.

PERFECTION. The primary meaning of the term is completeness and in an absolute sense it may be attributed only to God. In the OT, however, Job is described as a 'man that was perfect' (Job 1. 1) and in the NT perfection is frequently enjoined on the Christian. According to Mt. 5. 48 the perfection required of man is related to that of God ('Be ye therefore perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect'). In some passages (e.g. Phil. 3. 15 and Heb. 6. 1) it would appear that perfection is in some degree realizable even in this life. In Col. 3. 14 charity is described as 'the bond of perfection'. The close association of perfection and charity was developed in detail by later writers, esp. F. *Suarez.

With the spread of Christianity in the 4th cent. and the development of the monastic life, a two-fold standard of perfection came to be widely accepted. 'Religious Perfection', involving the practice of the so-called '*Counsels of Perfection', was distinguished from 'Christian Perfection' made possible by Baptism. At the same time, the *Pelagian view of perfection as the crown of human endeavour led to a compensating emphasis on the need for Divine *Grace. When the Council of *Trent laid down that perfect obedience to the Divine Law was possible, it made it clear that the perfection envisaged was only that accommodated to the fallen state of man and to be distinguished from the perfect law of love.

In general, the Reformers held that perfection is possible in this life only through imputation of the perfection of Christ to the believer. Among the *Methodists, however, the idea of perfection has played a central part. The *Wesleys persistently sought perfection and held that every Christian believer could be perfected in the love of God and man and wholly delivered from sin. Acc. to Methodist spiritual writers the entrance on the way of perfection takes place some time after conversion; it is instantaneous, and those who receive the experience, known as the 'Great Salvation', are thereby convinced that all sin has been completely and permanently rooted out in them. Those that are made perfect in this way pray constantly without interruption, they feel nothing but love, and are restored to the original image of God.

St. *Thomas Aquinas, De Perfectione Vitae Spiritualis; F. Suarez, De Statu Perfectionis; J. Wesley, Plain Account of Christian Perfection (1766); R. Garrigou-Lagrange, Perfection chrétienne et contemplation (1923); R. N. Flew, The Idea of Perfection in Christian Theology (1934).

PERFECTION, Counsels of. See Counsels of Perfection.

PERFECTIONISTS. See Oneida Community.

PERGAMUM. The town was situated c. 50 miles north of Smyrna and c. 15 miles from the sea, on a hill 1000 feet above the surrounding plain. In the 2nd cent. B.C. it became one of the greatest centres of art and culture in the ancient world, reaching the height of its glory in the reign of Eumenes II (197–159). This Eumenes erected the great altar of Zeus the Saviour (now in the Pergamon Museum, Berlin) with the frieze depicting the gods and goddesses of Hellas hurling back the earth-born giants, typifying the triumph of civilization over barbarism. To the same period belongs the invention of parchment ('pergamena carta') as a substitute for papyrus.

To the NT student the chief interest of Pergamum lies in its being one of the 'Seven Churches' in Rev. (2. 12–17). Here it is referred to as the place 'where Satan's throne is' and 'where Satan dwelleth' (2. 13). As Pergamum was the first city in Asia to receive permission to worship the living ruler, the allusion here is presumably to Emperor-worship. This permission had been granted by Octavian (Augustus) in 29 B.C., although the temple was not erected until 19 B.C. Pergamum was also one of the chief centres of the worship of the healing god Aesculapius, and a large 'Aesculapium' was uncovered by German excavators in 1928; further excavations began in 1958. The modern town is known as Bergama.

Inscriptions and other antiquities in Altertümer von Pergamon, publd. by the Königliches Museum at Berlin (10 vols. + plates, var. dates, 1885–1937; vol. xi ff. publd. by the Deutsches Archäologisches Institut at Berlin, 1968 ff.). T. Wiegand, Bericht über die Ausgrabungen in Pergamon in 1927 (Abh. (Berl.), 1928, Hft. 3); id., Zweiter Bericht über die Ausgrabungen in Pergamon, 1928–32: Das Asklepieion (ib., 1932, Hft. 5). Pergamenische Forschungen, ed. E. Boehringer and others (1968 ff.). G. Cardinali, Il regno di Pergamo (Studi di Storia Antica Pubblicati da Giulio Beloch, v; 1906). E. V. Hansen, The Attalids of Pergamon (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, New York, 1947), with bibl. pp. xix–xxii. M. Yenim, Pergame à travers les âges (Izmir, 1961). W. M. *Ramsay, Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904), pp. 281–315. Id. in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 749–52, s.v.; W. Zschietzschmann in P.W., xix (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1235–63 (Nachträge, s.v. 'Pergamon').

PERICOPE (Gk. περικοπή, 'section'). A passage from the Scriptures, esp. one appointed to be read in the Church services. The use of such prescribed portions of Scripture in the Eucharist appears to date from the 4th–5th cents. In earlier times, both in E. and W., the passages were selected at choice by the officiating clergy. See also Lectionary.

Περικοπή for a section of the Bible occurs as early as St. *Justin, Dial. c. Tryph., lxv. 3. W. Caspari in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 131–59, s.v. 'Perikopen', where the writer shows that the word was first used as a liturgical term by Protestant writers of the 16th century.

PERICOPE ADULTERAE, i.e. Jn. 7. 53–8. 11. These verses, which narrate the Lord's compassionate dealing with the woman taken in the act of adultery, are certainly not part of the original text of St. John's Gospel. They are not found in any of the early Greek MSS., with the one exception of *Codex Bezae, and they are also wanting in many of the more important MSS. of the Syriac, Latin, and Coptic versions. Nor does any Greek commentator before *Euthymius Zigabenus (c. A.D. 1118) discuss the passage. On the other hand, there are no sufficient reasons for doubting the historicity of the incident the passage records. The Lord's dealings with the woman and her accusers are wholly of a piece with other incidents in the Gospels; and the facts that it is definitely referred to in a passage in the 3rd cent. Didascalia Apostolorum* (ii. 24; ed. R. H. *Connolly, p. 76), and was perhaps known to *Papias, point to its primitiveness. In the *Ferrar group of MSS. the passage is placed after Lk. 21. 38; this fact, together with certain stylistic similarities, have led to the suggestion that the passage belongs to St. Luke.

The passage is discussed in comm. on St. John's Gospel, cited s.v. John, Gospel of St. H. J. Cadbury, 'A Possible Case of Lukan Authorship (John 7. 53–8. 11)' in H.T.R., x (1917), pp. 237–44. H. Riesenfeld, 'Perikopen de adultera i den fornkyrkliga traditionen' in Svensk Exegetisk Årsbok, xvii (1953), pp. 106–18; Eng. tr. in The Gospel Tradition (Philadelphia, 1970; Oxford, 1971), pp. 95–110.

PERIPATETIC (Gk. περιπατητής, 'one who walks about'). A philosopher of the school of *Aristotle. The name was adopted in reference to Aristotle's practice of teaching while moving about in a covered walk (περίπατος) in the Lyceum at Athens.

PERKINS, WILLIAM (1558–1602), *Puritan theologian. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he was a Fellow from 1584 to 1594, he soon became prominent in the university by his preaching, lectures, and writings as a vigorous anti-Romanist theologian and a supporter of Puritan principles. His writings, mainly occasional, were marked by candour, an honest desire to understand his opponents, and, despite his use of the traditional scholastic methods which still survived at Cambridge, an evident concern for history. They include his Reformed Catholike (1597) on the Roman controversy, which W. Bishop, titular Bp. of *Chalcedon (d. 1624), answered in his Reformation of a Catholic Deformed by W. Perkins (2 pts., 1604, 1607), and De Praedestinationis Modo et Ordine (1598), which evoked a reply from J. *Arminius in the same year. His works were held in high repute throughout the 17th cent. by theologians with Calvinist sympathies. They also include An Exposition of the Lord's Prayer (1582) and An Exposition of the Symbol or Creed of the Apostles (1595).

The numerous collected edd. of his works (all very incomplete) include those publd. at Cambridge, 1603; ib., 1605; 3 vols., fol., ib., 1608–9, and 3 vols., fol., London–Cambridge, 1612–13. Modern collection of extracts, ed., with introd., by I. Breward (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, iii; Sutton Courtenay, Berks, 1970). 'A Discourse of Conscience' (orig. publd. 1596) and 'The Whole Treatise of Cases of Conscience' (publd. 1606) also ed. T. F. Merrill (Nieuwkoop, 1966), with introd. Rosemary A. Sisson, 'William Perkins, Apologist for the Elizabethan Church of England' in Modern Language Review, xlvii (1952), pp. 495–502. J. B. Mullinger in D.N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 6–9, with list of his works.

PERPETUA, St. (d. 7 Mar. 203), African martyr. When in 202 Septimius Severus forbade conversions to Christianity, Perpetua and other African catechumens were imprisoned and, after their baptism, condemned to execution in the arena at Carthage. The Passion of St. Perpetua is a contemporary account, possibly edited by *Tertullian, which records, besides the story of her martyrdom, the interesting visions of Perpetua and the priest, Saturus. The basilica of Sts. Perpetua and Felicitas was among the most important in Carthage. Feast day, formerly 6 Mar. (transferred to make 7 Mar. free for St. Thomas *Aquinas); since 1969, 7 Mar.

Crit. ed. of Lat. text of Passio by J. A. *Robinson (Texts and Studies, i, No. 2, Cambridge, 1891). Text also ed., with Eng. tr., by W. H. Shewring (London, 1931). Gk. text first ed. from a Jerusalem MS. by J. R. *Harris–S. K. Gifford, London, 1890 (Harris's defence of the priority of the Gk. text has been generally rejected by later scholars; cf. J. A. Robinson, loc. cit., pp. 2–15). Lat. and Gk. texts also ed. by C. I. M. I. van Beek (Florilegium Patristicum, xliii; Bonn, 1938). Lat. text repr., with Eng. tr. by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 106–31. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, La Passio SS. Perpetuae et Felicitatis (R.Q. Supplementheft, v; 1896). A. Fridh, Le Problème de la Passion des saintes Perpétue et Félicité (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, xxvi; 1968). V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità cristiana, xiv; 1938), pp. 161–8. E. R. Dodds, Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety (Wiles Lectures, 1963; Cambridge, 1965), pp. 47–53, with reff. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 682–6; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 92. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., vi (1909), p. 29, s.v. 'Felicitas and Perpetua'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 393–444, s.v. 'Perpétue et Félicité (Saintes)', with bibl. E. Peterson–A. Amore–E. Josi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1191–3.

PERPETUAL CURATE. The name given, before the passing of the Pastoral Measure, 1968, to a clerk who officiated in a parish or district to which he had been nominated by the *Impropriator and licensed by the Bishop. Exemption from the Appropriation of Benefices Act, 1402 (4 Hen. IV, c. 12) was allowed to benefices granted ad mensam monachorum and in certain other cases. When, after the dissolution of the monasteries, these exempt parishes passed to *lay rectors, these rectors were obliged to nominate some particular person to the *Ordinary for his licence to serve the cure. Curates thus licensed became perpetual, removable only by revocation of the licence of the Ordinary. Perpetual curacies were not formerly adjudged ecclesiastical *benefices, but were declared to be so by the *Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict., c. 106, s. 124). Those augmented from *Queen Anne's Bounty were declared (1 Geo. I, Stat. 2, c. 10, s. 4) perpetual cures and the incumbents bodies politic. Under the Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict., c. 70, s. 9 and 17), the ministers of new churches of separate parishes, ecclesiastical districts, consolidated chapelries and district chapelries also were perpetual curates, as were the ministers appointed to new districts or parishes under the Church Building and New Building Acts (1 & 2 Will. IV, c. 38, s. 12; 2 & 3 Vict., c. 49, s. 2; and 6 & 7 Vict., c. 37, s. 12). Perpetual curates obtained possession of their benefices by licence from the Bishop without Institution or Induction. They were commonly styled '*vicars', a title now enjoyed of right under the Pastoral Measure, 1968.

PERRONE, GIOVANNI (1794–1876), Italian theologian. He joined the *Jesuit Order in 1815 and in 1824 was made professor of dogmatic theology in the Roman College, a post which he held (not quite continuously) till his death. His Praelectiones Theologicae (9 vols., 1835–42) were one of the most widely used books on Catholic dogmatics in the 19th century.

His numerous other writings include De Immaculato B.V. Mariae Conceptu (Rome, 1847), Il protestantesimo e la regola di fede (3 vols., 1853), De Matrimonio Christiano (3 vols., Rome, 1858) and De Romani Pontificis Infallibilitate (Turin, 1874). Sommervogel, vi (1895), cols. 558–71. T. Lynch (ed.), 'The Newman–Perrone paper on Development' in Gregorianum, xvi (1935), pp. 402–47; F. Cavallera, S.J., 'Le Document Newman–Perrone et le développement du dogme' in Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique, xlvii (1946), pp. 132–42. W. Kasper, Die Lehre von der Tradition in der römischen Schule (Freiburg, 1962), pp. 29–181.

PER SALTUM (Lat., 'by a leap'). A term used of the conferring of a particular rank of orders when the candidate has not previously received the lower grades, e.g. of the ordination of a man to the priesthood who is not already a deacon. In canon law it is held that such ordinations are valid, though they are held to be gravely irregular and to preclude the person so ordained from proceeding further. They are prohibited in the C.I.C., can. 977. In early times, however, ordinations per saltum were of common occurrence. See also Interstices.

PERSECUTION. See Toleration.

PERSECUTIONS, Early Christian. The Roman government commonly tolerated such foreign religions as were no danger to morality and discipline; and though it did not recognize all religious bodies as legal corporations, it did not always suppress unrecognized religions. Since national religions were respected, Christianity at first sheltered under Jewish privileges, but as the distinction became clear and Gentile Christians refused Emperor-worship, their loyalty might be suspected; and before they were sufficiently numerous to appear politically dangerous, they earned dislike by aloofness from society, while misunderstandings among non-Christians about the *Agape and the *Eucharist aroused scandal. Persecution by the state began almost accidentally and remained intermittent. Until 250 its extent was determined more by local feeling than by Imperial policy. Its legal basis remains obscure, since Ulpian's collection of anti-Christian measures has perished. Although *Orosius popularized the notion of ten persecutors (numbered below), on the analogy of the ten plagues of Egypt, the truth is much less simple. Most of the persecutions were sporadic, while some, e.g. that of *Polycarp, are difficult to fit into the pattern at all.

(1) *Nero, says *Tacitus, used Christians as scapegoats for the fire of Rome (A.D. 64; see artt. *Peter, *Paul). There is no evidence of persecution outside Rome (anticipated by 1 *Pet.), unless *Rev. is of this date. But, though Nero's victims were condemned for arson and not for holding a particular creed, a precedent was set for treating Christians generally as criminals, and condemning them 'for the Name' [i.e. of Christ] by summary magisterial jurisdiction (coercitio). Some hold that Nero explicitly forbade Christianity.

(2) *Domitian (95) executed Flavius Clemens and *Glabrio and banished *Domitilla for 'atheism'. They were perhaps Christians, but his motives were political and personal. Rev. refers to wider persecution, probably in this reign, for refusal to worship the Emperor.

(3) Trajan's correspondence with *Pliny (112) reveals Christian trials in Bithynia. Trajan would not tolerate Christianity altogether (*Ignatius), but ordered Pliny not to search for the Christians. This restriction was binding on all magistrates.

Under Hadrian and Antoninus Pius (117–61) toleration tended to outweigh repression. Churches held property, but by grace, not law. It is possible, but improbable, that they were regarded as burial clubs (see Catacombs). The authenticity of Hadrian's rescript forbidding the execution of Christians unless guilty of a specific crime is doubtful, since contemporary acts of *martyrs suggest that persistent profession of Christianity was sufficient ground for condemnation.

(4) *Marcus Aurelius disliked Christians and sanctioned severe persecution at Lyons (177).

Another martyr was the Apologist, *Justin. *Celsus and Fronto give explanations of the current anti-Christian feeling. Christians wished to whitewash this 'good' Emperor (*Thundering Legion), but it was the bad Commodus who gave them rest (180–92).

(5) Under Septimius Severus, *Tertullian appealed for toleration. Severus forbade fresh conversions (*Perpetua), but was not an active persecutor. A long period of peace followed his death in 211, broken only momentarily by

(6) Maximinus Thrax (235). Perhaps his motive was to reverse the policy of his hated predecessor, Alexander Severus, who was apparently well disposed towards the Christians.

(7) *Decius changed the situation. His order (250) that all his subjects should sacrifice to the state gods under pain of death, though partly inspired by the desire for a mass demonstration of religious loyalty, was a systematic attack on Christianity, which might by now be considered a serious threat to the state. Many were punished and many apostatized; but the Church recovered under such leaders as *Cyprian.

(8) Valerian's method was less wholesale. In 257 Christians were forbidden to assemble and many bishops were arrested. Next year, Valerian ordered the execution of all clergy and laymen of high rank who would not abjure. But Gallienus (260) cancelled these measures, restored Church property, and ushered in a long peace. For, despite Orosius,

(9) Aurelian did not seriously trouble the Church.

(10) *Diocletian (284–305) continued the policy of toleration until 303, when, influenced probably by Galerius, he ordered that all churches should be destroyed and the Scriptures burnt. A stronger edict in 304 sanctioned the bloodshed from which he at first shrank. This persecution, described by *Lactantius and *Eusebius, continued after Diocletian's abdication, its intensity varying according to the policy of the rulers who shared the Empire. In the W. Constantius did little; in Syria Maximin proved ferocious. Bloodshed, however, failed to achieve its purpose and sickened the people. In 311 the dying Galerius issued an edict of toleration, Maximin was eventually forced to follow his example (312), and *Constantine and Licinius proclaimed complete religious liberty (see Milan, Edict of). Though Licinius (322–3) and *Julian (361–3) launched new attacks, substantial toleration had been assured. Before long toleration turned to privilege and the Church committed itself to the coercion of belief (*Theodosius I).

The question of the extent of the persecutions, the civil status of the Church in pre-Nicene times, and the legal enactments under which persecution was carried out, have been the subject of much discussion; and the matter is dealt with in all histories of the Early Church.

Introductory account in H. B. Workman, Persecution in the Early Church (36th Fernley Lecture, 1906). P. Allard, Histoire des persécutions pendant les deux premiers siècles (1885), followed by four further vols. with similar titles (5 vols. in all, 1885–90); T. *Mommsen, 'Der Religionsfrevel nach römischem Recht' in Historische Zeitschrift, lxiv (1890), pp. 389–429; W. M. *Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire before A.D. 170 (1893); M. Conrat, Die Christenverfolgungen im römischen Reiche vom Standpunkt des Juristen (1897); C. Callewaert, 'Les Premiers Chrétiens furent-ils persécutés par édits généraux ou par mesure de police?' in R.H.E., ii (1901), pp. 771–97; iii (1902), pp. 5–15, 324–48, 601–14; A. Linsenmayer, Die Bekämpfung des Christentums durch den römischen Staat bis zum Tode des Kaisers Julian (1905); L. H. Canfield, The Early Persecutions of the Christians (Studies in History, Economics and Public Law, ed. by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University, iv. 2; New York, 1913). H. M. Last, 'The Study of the "Persecutions"' in Journal of Roman Studies, xxvii (1937), pp. 80–92. H. Grégoire, with the collaboration of P. Orgels, J. Moreau, and A. Maricq, Les Persécutions dans l'empire romain (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe de Lettres, et des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, xlvi, Brussels, 1950; ed. 2, ib., lvi, fasc. 5, 1964). A. N. Sherwin-White, 'The Early Persecutions and Roman Law Again' in J.T.S., N.S., iii (1952), pp. 199–213. J. Moreau, La Persécution du christianisme dans l'Empire romain (Mythes et Religions, 1956). W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church. A Study of a Conflict from Maccabees to Donatus (Oxford, 1965), with bibl. R. Freudenberger, Das Verhalten der römischen Behörden gegen die Christen im 2. Jahrhundert (Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und Antiken Rechtsgeschichte, lii; 1967).

A. *Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 823–8, s.v. 'Christenverfolgungen'; H. M. Gwatkin in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), pp. 742–9, s.v. 'Persecution (Early Church)'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iv (1921), cols. 1565–1648, s.v. 'Droit persécuteur'; J. Vogt–H. Last in R.A.C., ii (1954), cols. 1159–1228, s.v. 'Christenverfolgung'.

PERSEVERANCE. In addition to its general meaning, the word is used technically in connexion with the doctrine of *predestination, to mean steady continuance, after conversion, in the faith and life proper to the attainment of eternal life. St. *Augustine held that God bestowed on those elected to salvation, not only the initial call to be baptized and accept the Christian faith, but also the gift of such final perseverance. *Calvinism maintained that the elect could be certain that God would never allow them to fall away from Him. Outside Calvinism it would generally be held that none can be personally certain of persevering to the end and that the gift must be sought by prayer and effort.

PERSIA, Christianity in. See Nestorianism.

PERSON OF CHRIST. See Christology, also Incarnation.

PERSONS, ROBERT. See Parsons, Robert.

PERTH, Articles of (1618). Five articles forced on the Church in *Scotland at Perth in 1618 by *James I. They required (1) kneeling at Communion; (2) the observance of Easter and Christmas; (3) Confirmation; (4) provision for administering Communion to the dying in their houses; and (5) Baptism on the Sunday following the child's birth. In 1621, much to the horror of older Scottish Churchmen, the articles were carried with a majority through the Scottish parliament.

The text will be found in J. *Spottiswoode, The History of the Church of Scotland (1655), p. 538 f.

PERUGINO, PIETRO VANNUCCI (c. 1446–1523), Italian painter of the Umbrian school. He studied first at Perugia and afterwards at Florence under Verrocchio, where he learned the art of composition and perspective in which he became a master. In 1482 he painted the Delivery of the Keys to St. Peter in the *Sistine Chapel. (His other frescoes in the Chapel gave way to *Michelangelo's Last Judgement.) The devotional warmth of his style soon caused a great demand for his religious pictures, and among his masterpieces were the Adoration of the Holy Child (1491), the Vision of St. Bernard

(c. 1494), and the Preparation for the Tomb (1495). In 1496 he completed his greatest work, the well-known fresco of the Crucifixion in Sta. Maria Maddalena dei Pazzi at Florence. After that his art showed a marked decline.

Reproductions of his paintings (in black and white) ed. W. Bombe (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, v; 1914), with introd. pp. ix–xxxiii; paintings also reprod., with introd. by E. Camesasca (Milan, 1959). F. Canuti, Il Perugino (2 vols., Siena [1931]), also with reproductions, and bibl. i, pp. 395–407. Other studies include those by G. C. Williamson (London, 1900), E. Hutton (London [1906]), F. Knapp (Bielefeld–Leipzig, 1907), U. Gnoli (Spoleto [1923]), and J. Alazard ('Les Grands Artistes', Paris, 1927). W. Bombe in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart begründet von U. Thieme–F. Becker, xxvi (ed. H. Vollmer; 1932), pp. 450–2, s.v., with bibl.; P. J. Murray in E.B. (ed. 1968), xvii, pp. 720–22.

PESHITTA, The. From the early 5th cent., the official text of the Bible in Syriac-speaking Christian lands. (The word 'Peshitta' means literally 'simple', or, as applied to a text, 'current'.) The NT portion was held by F. C. Burkitt to have been the work of *Rabbula, Bp. of Edessa from 412 to 435. If so, it was probably produced partly to provide a version of the Gospels to supplant the '*Diatessaron', then in common use, which was objected to both for its artificial form and as the work of a heretic (*Tatian). It now seems more likely that the process of revision which produced the Peshitta NT had already begun before the end of the fourth cent. The NT did not include the Book of Rev. or the four lesser *Catholic Epistles (2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn., and Jude). A large number of MSS. have survived, the oldest dating from the 5th cent. The origins of the Peshitta OT are shrouded in obscurity, but in part it would seem to be the work of Jews, and in the Pentateuch, at least, there appear to be links with the *Targums.

Older edd. of NT by E. Widmanstadt (Vienna, 1555) and J. Leusden–C. Schaff (Leiden, 1709). Best ed. of Peshitta Gospels by P. E. *Pusey–G. H. Gwilliam (Oxford, 1901); complete ed. of NT ed. *British and Foreign Bible Society, London, 1905–20. Editions of the OT include the London *Polyglott (1657) and that of S. Lee (London, 1823). A critical edition is being prepared by the Peshitta Institute, Leiden (a sample, covering Song of Songs, Tob. and 4 Edras, was issued in 1966). L. Haefeli, Die Peshitta des Alten Testaments (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, xi, Hft. 1; 1927), with full bibl. A. Vööbus, Investigations into the Text of the New Testament used by Rabbula of Edessa (Contributions of Baltic University, lix; Pinneberg, 1947); id., Researches on the Circulation of the Peshitta in the Middle of the Fifth Century (ib., lxiv; 1948); id., Studies in the History of the Gospel Text in Syriac (C.S.C.O., cxxviii; 1951), pp. 46–60. M. Black, 'Rabbula of Edessa and the Peshitta' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxiii (1951), pp. 203–10; id., 'The New Testament Peshitta and its Predecessors' in Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas, Bulletin i (1950), pp. 51–62. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 843–55 and 872–5, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)'.

PETAVIUS, DIONYSIUS (1583–1652), Denis Pétau, *Jesuit historian and theologian. A native of Orléans, he studied at Paris where I. *Casaubon aroused his interest in the Fathers. In 1602 he was appointed a lecturer at Bourges; he resigned in 1604 and returned to Paris. In the following year he became a Jesuit. He became professor of rhetoric at Reims (1609), La Flèche (1613), and finally at the Collège de *Clermont at Paris (1618), where in 1621 he was given the chair of Dogmatic Theology. He lived at Paris for the rest of his life, one of the most brilliant and learned scholars of his age. His Opus de Doctrina Temporum (2 vols., 1627), in substance a thorough revision and expansion of J. J. *Scaliger's De Emendatione Temporum (1583), was a fundamental contribution to the study of ancient chronology; in 1633 he issued an abridged edition with the title Rationarium Temporum. He also published notable editions of the writings of *Synesius (1612; new ed., 1633) and St. *Epiphanius (1622; not superseded until K. Holl's edition of 1915–33).

Petavius was also an outstanding dogmatic theologian, strictly orthodox in doctrine but one of the first to accept the idea of doctrinal development (here he influenced J. H. *Newman) and to concede the imperfections of much Patristic teaching judged by later standards. His vast and still valuable De Theologicis Dogmatibus (vols. i–iii, 1644; vol. iv, 1650) was unfinished at the time of his death. G. *Bull's famous Defensio Fidei Nicaenae (1685) was written primarily to defend the orthodoxy of pre-Nicene teaching on the Trinity against Petavius's criticisms. His De la pénitence publique et de la préparation à la communion (1644) was an attack on A. *Arnauld's Fréquente Communion (1643).

The primary source is the life [by F. Oudin, S.J.] in [J. P.] Nicéron, *Barnabite, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire des hommes illustres dans la république des lettres, xxxvii (1737), pp. 81–234. Full life by J. C. Vital Châtellain (Paris, 1884). Shorter study by J. Martin ('Science et religion. Les Grands Théologiens', fasc. 545; 1910). P. Galtier, S.J., 'Petau et la préface de son "De Trinitate" ' in Rech. S.R., xxi (1931), pp. 462–76. P. Di Rosa, S.J., 'Denis Petau e la cronologia' in Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, xxix (1960), pp. 3–54. L. Karrer, Die historisch-positive Methode des Theologen Dionysius Petavius (Münchener theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, xxxvii; 1970). Sommervogel, vi (1895), cols. 588–616. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 743 f., s.v. 'Pétau'; P. Galtier, S.J., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1313–37, s.v. 'Petau'.

PETER, St., Prince of the *Apostles. Our knowledge of his life and personality is derived chiefly from the Gospels, Acts, St. Paul's Ep. to the *Galatians, and tradition. Acc. to the Gospel of St. John (1. 44) he was a native of *Bethsaida, a village near Lake Tiberias, and in the Johannine account (1. 35–42) he is introduced to the Lord by his brother *Andrew and given the name 'Cephas', the Aramaic equivalent of the Greek 'Peter' (πέτρα, 'rock'). In the Gospels of Matthew (4. 18–20) and Mark (1. 16–18) he and Andrew, who are described as 'fishers', are together called from their fishing to follow Jesus. In St. Luke's Gospel (5. 1–11) there is a variant account of this incident, in which Peter, at the Lord's command, catches a large draught of fishes. Some time later he is formally called to become one of the Twelve [Apostles] and in all the lists of the Twelve he is named first. He is present on all the occasions when only a small 'inner group' is admitted, viz. at the raising of Jairus's daughter (Mt. 9. 18–26), at the *Transfiguration (Mt. 17. 1–8), and at the Agony in the Garden (Mt. 26. 37). He usually takes the lead and is the mouthpiece of the disciples, as when he says that they could not 'go away' (Jn. 6. 66–9). After his confession of faith at *Caesarea Philippi (Mt. 16. 13–20), when he professes his belief that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, he receives the promise 'Thou art Peter, and on this rock will I build my church', together with the keys of heaven and the power of binding and loosing (ver. 18 f.). (The precise interpretation of this passage, on which the claims of the Papacy have been based, has been the subject of much controversy.) Together with John, Peter is entrusted with the preparations for the *Last Supper, during which the Lord reaffirms his pre-eminence (Lk. 22. 31 f.). On the way to the Mount of Olives, his boast that he will never leave his Lord is answered by Christ's prediction that before the end of the night he will deny Him thrice (Mt. 26. 33 f.). At the arrest of Jesus, Peter strikes off the ear of a servant of the high priest (Jn. 18. 10). Having followed the Lord to the court of the high priest, he is accused of being one of His followers; he denies three times that he knows Him, then remembers His prediction and repents bitterly (Mt. 26. 69–75). After the Resurrection he goes to the Sepulchre as soon as the women report that it is empty (Lk. 24. 12) and is later favoured with a special appearance of the risen Christ (Lk. 24. 34). Acc. to the Johannine account, when the Lord appears to him and other disciples at the Sea of Tiberias, he makes a triple protestation of his love to Christ and receives the charge to feed His sheep and the prediction of his martyrdom.

After the Ascension Peter immediately takes the lead of the Apostles in designating the successor of Judas (Acts 1. 15–22) and throughout the first half of Acts he appears as their head. He speaks on the day of *Pentecost (Acts 2. 14–41); he is the first of the Apostles to perform a miracle in the name of Jesus (3. 1–10); he is the speaker when brought before the *Sanhedrin with John (4. 1–21); and he pronounces the condemnation of Ananias and Sapphira (5. 1–11). He also is the greatest miracle-worker among the Apostles, whose shadow even heals the sick (5. 15); he opens the Church to the Gentiles by admitting Cornelius (10. 1–11. 18), and his authority is again evident at the Apostles' Council at Jerusalem (15. 7–11). Of the later years of his Apostolate outside Palestine very little is known. His visit to *Antioch is mentioned in Gal. 2. 11–21 by St. Paul, who sharply rebukes him for giving way to the demands of the Jewish Christians to dissociate himself from the Gentiles. Possibly he visited Corinth, as a party of 'Cephas' existed in that city (1 Cor. 1. 12).

The tradition connecting St. Peter with Rome (q.v.) is early and unrivalled. Against it can be placed only the silence of the NT; but even here Rom. 15. 20–22 may point to the presence of another Apostle in Rome before St. Paul wrote, while the identification of 'Babylon' in 1 Pet. 5. 13 (see Peter, Epistles of) with Rome seems highly probable. St. *Clement of Rome (1 Clem. 5) conjoins Peter and Paul as the outstanding heroes of the Faith and prob. implies that Peter suffered martyrdom (μαρτυρήσας). St. *Ignatius uses words (Rom. 4. 2) which suggest that Peter and Paul were the Apostles of special authority for the Roman Church, and St. *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer., III. i. 2; III. iii. 1) states definitely that they founded that Church and instituted its episcopal succession. Other early witnesses to the tradition are *Gaius of Rome and *Dionysius of Corinth, both cited by *Eusebius (H.E., II. xxv. 5–8), who also (H.E., III. i. 2 f.) quotes a statement of *Origen that Peter was crucified head downwards, having requested this form of death. The later tradition (first found in St. *Jerome) which attributes to him an episcopate (or apostolate) in Rome of twenty-five years preceding his martyrdom is less well supported. His death is placed by Eusebius in the reign of *Nero (54–68) and was prob. in the *persecution of 64—not, as Eusebius himself asserts (Chron.), in 68. That he and St. Paul suffered on the same day is perhaps a mistaken deduction from their common feast (prob. date of translation of their relics, not of martyrdom) on 29 June. The American BCP (1979) provides a feast of the Confession of St. Peter on 18 Jan. See also Lammas Day.

The tradition, which is found in *Papias, that St. Peter's memoirs lie behind the Gospel of St. Mark, is accepted by many modern scholars (see Mark, Gospel of St.). For the Epistles, see Peter, Epistles of. There are historical grounds for believing that his tomb in St. Peter's, Rome, is authentic (see St. Peter's, Rome). See also the following entries and Quo Vadis?

Modern studies with discussion of the main historical questions by F. J. Foakes Jackson, Peter, Prince of Apostles (1927) and O. Cullmann, Petrus. Jünger, Apostel, Märtyrer (Zürich, 1952; Eng. tr., 1953). The best comprehensive discussions tend to be in dictionaries. Popular studies by A. T. Robertson (New York, 1933, with bibl.), J. A. Findlay (London, 1935) and J. Lowe, St. Peter (three lectures, Oxford, 1956). C. H. *Turner, 'St. Peter in the New Testament' in Theology, xiii (1926), pp. 66–78; repr. in id., Catholic and Apostolic (1931), pp. 181–205. Works on the question of Peter's connexion with Rome include H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (1915; ed. 2, Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, i; 1927); A. Schlatter, Petrus und Paulus nach dem ersten Petrusbrief (1937); J. Munck, Petrus und Paulus in der Offenbarung Johannis (Copenhagen, 1950); K. Heussi, Die römische Petrustradition in kritischer Sicht (Tübingen, 1955), and other works of this author; T. Klauser, Die römische Petrustradition im Lichte der neuen Ausgrabungen unter der Peterskirche (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen. Geisteswissenschaften, xxiv [1956]). See also other works cited under St. Peter's, Rome. J. Dauvillier, Les Temps apostoliques (Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en occident, publiée sous la direction de G. Le Bras, ii; 1970), pp. 144–50 and 273–93, with good bibl. F. H. Chase in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 756–79, s.v. 'Peter (Simon)'; P. W. *Schmiedel in E.Bi., iv (1903), cols. 4559–627, s.v. 'Simon Peter'; F. Sieffert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 186–212, s.v. 'Petrus, der Apostel'; K. *Lake in E.B. (ed. 11), xxi (1911), pp. 285–8, s.v.; S. J. Case in D.A.C., ii (1918), pp. 191–201, s.v.; E. Fascher in P.W., xix (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1335–61, s.v. 'Petrus (121)'; P. de Ambroggi, E. Josi, and others in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1400–27, s.v. 'Pietro apostolo'.

PETER, Acts of St. An apocryphal Book composed in Greek c. 150–200, perhaps in Asia Minor, which internal evidence shows to have been dependent on the 'Acts of *John'. Apart from the 'Martyrdom of St. Peter' which forms part of it and survives in Greek as well as in several versions, it is preserved in toto in Latin in a Vercelli MS. A Coptic fragment also survives which describes St. Peter's miraculous treatment of his paralytic daughter. In the Martyrdom are recorded both the '*Quo Vadis?' incident and the crucifixion of St. Peter head downwards. In places its teaching has a *Docetic ring, perhaps occasioned by the writer's limited theological capacities rather than by any connexion with unorthodox circles.

Lat. text of 'Martyrdom' in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet (edd.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, i (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 1–22; Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 330–6. Lat. text ('Actus Vercellenses'; a variant form describing Peter's victory over Simon Magus in the Roman forum), together with the Gk. text on opposite pages where it corresponds, in R. A. Lipsius–M. Bonnet, op. cit., pp. 45–103; corrections by C. H. *Turner in J.T.S., xxxii (1931), pp. 119–33; Eng. tr. in M. R. James, op. cit., pp. 304–30. Coptic fragment ed. C.

Schmidt, Die alten Petrusakten im Zusammenhang der Apokryphen Apostelliteratur nebst einem neuentdeckten Fragment (T.U., xxiv, Hft. 1; 1903), pp. 3–7, with Germ. tr., pp. 7–10; Eng. tr. from the Germ. in M. R. James, op. cit., pp. 300–2. Further Gk. fragment in B. P. Grenfell–A. S. Hunt, The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, vi (1908), pp. 6–12. L. Vouaux, Les Actes de Pierre (1922; text, Fr. tr. and comm., with good bibl.). C. Schmidt, 'Studien zu den alten Petrusakten' in Z.K.G., xliii (1924), pp. 321–48, xlv (1926), pp. 481–513. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 177–88, with Germ. tr. pp. 188–221; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 259–322. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 133–5. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 550–4. É. Amann in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 496–501.

PETER, Apocalypse of St. This, the most important of the apocryphal apocalypses, dates from the early 2nd cent. Small portions of it have survived in quotations in *Clement of Alexandria and others, and in some scattered fragments (e.g. those discovered at Akhmîm in Egypt in 1886–7); and an Ethiopic version, in a modified form, was published by S. Grébaut in 1910. The Apocalypse describes how the Lord granted to the Apostles a vision of their brethren in the next world and of their rewards. Both Clement and the *Muratorian Fragment held it to be Scripture; and acc. to *Sozomen (5th cent.) it was still read in his day on *Good Friday in some Palestinian churches.

Akhmîm fragment of Gk. text ed. A. Lods in Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission Archéologique Française du Caire, ix (1892), pp. 224–8; repr. by E. Klostermann, Apocrypha, i (Kleine Texte, ed. H. *Lietzmann, iii, 1921), pp. 8–12; Eng. tr. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 507–10; there is a small Gk. papyrus fragment in the *Bodleian Library (MS. Gr. th. f. 4 (P)); Eng. tr. in M. R. James, op. cit., p. 510; cf. M. R. James, 'The Rainer Fragment of the Apocalypse of Peter' in J.T.S., xxxii (1931–2), pp. 270–9, with text. Ethiopic text ed. S. Grébaut in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, xv (1910), pp. 199–208, 307–16, 425–33, with Fr. tr., pp. 208–14, 316–323, 433–9; mainly tr. into Eng. in M. R. James (ed.), The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 510–20; cf. M. R. James, 'A New Text of the Apocalypse of Peter' in J.T.S., xii (1910–11), pp. 36–54. Eng. tr. of the extracts from Clement of Alexandria, *Methodius of Olympus, *Macarius Magnes, etc., in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), p. 505 f. Sozomen, H.E., vii. 19. M. R. James, 'The Recovery of the Apocalypse of Peter' in C.Q.R., lxxx (1915), pp. 1–36. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 610–15; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 141 f. C. Maurer in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 468–83; Eng. tr., ii (1964), pp. 663–83. É. Amann in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 525–7, with bibl.

PETER, Epistles of St. There are two Epistles ascribed to St. *Peter in the NT.

(1) The First Epistle of Peter was written from *Rome (if this is the city referred to in 5. 13 as 'Babylon') to Christian communities in 'Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia' (1. 1), i.e. all lands in what is now Asia Minor, to encourage them under persecution. The author reminds his readers that, as the chosen people of God, they are heirs to the glorious promises made to Israel of old and insists on the central place in the Christian plan of salvation of Christ's redeeming death and resurrection, at once the basis of the Christian life and the great example to those in suffering (1. 2–25). As believers, they are called to love one another, to advance in grace, to live soberly and humbly, to look for the coming of Christ, and esp. to witness by their good lives in their heathen surroundings, whence trials are constantly awaited (2–5).

The Epistle was sent to Asia Minor by the hands of Silvanus (5. 12). If tradition is correct in attributing it to St. Peter, its terminus ad quem is the date of his death, i.e. probably c. 65. Its Petrine authorship, however, has been often questioned. It is urged that its literary style is not that of a Galilean fisherman; that passages in the Epistle reflect Pauline teaching; and that persecution of the Church in Asia Minor at so early a date is otherwise unattested. These objections, however, are far from conclusive and critical opinion is still in the balance. External evidence for ascribing it to St. Peter goes back to St. *Irenaeus (adv. Haer. IV. xix. 1) and *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. III. 18 [110]).

(2) The Second Epistle, though it is written as if by St. Peter, with a ref. to his presence at the *Transfiguration (1. 18; cf. Mk. 9. 2), is markedly different from the First in contents and manner, e.g. in the treatment of redemption with which it opens. Its main message is a warning against false and ungodly teachers, upon whom the future judgements of God are prophesied from the OT and Jewish writings. The chief passage in which this warning is given (2. 1–3. 3) is parallel to Jude 4–18, from which it is almost certainly borrowed.

There are several indications that the Epistle is of a late date. Thus the passage (3. 3 ff.) dealing with the delay of the Coming of the Lord presupposes that the first generation of Christians had passed away. The author classes the Epp. of St. Paul as 'scripture' (3. 16), a position which they apparently did not attain until some considerable time after the Apostle's death. It is first definitely referred to by *Origen (in *Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., VI. xxv. 8) in the 3rd cent., and he writes of it as of disputed authenticity. It also has some close points of literary contact with the 'Apocalypse of *Peter' (q.v.). These indications of date, and the difference in style and interest from 1 Peter, make it virtually impossible to hold that St. Peter was the author. The Epistle was received into the *Canon with considerable hesitation. Its date is probably the second or third Christian generation, perhaps c. A.D. 150.

Modern commentaries on BOTH EPP. include those of C. Bigg (I.C.C., 1901, with Jud., pp. 1–304), H. *Windisch (Hb. N.T., iv, Th. 2, 1911, on the Catholic Epp.; ed. 2, xv, 1930, pp. 50–105; ed. 3, by H. Preisker, 1951, with addenda, pp. 152–63), J. *Moffatt (Moffatt Comm., 1928, on General Epp., pp. 85–213), J. W. C. Wand (West. Comm., 1934, with Jud., pp. 1–186), C. Spicq, O.P. (Sources Bibliques, 1966), and J. N. D. Kelly (Black's N.T. Comm., on Pet. and Jude, 1969); on 1 PET. only, by F. J. A. *Hort (London, 1896; on 1 Pet. 1.1–2.17 only), J. H. B. Masterman (ib., 1900), E. G. Selwyn (ib., 1946), F. W. Beare (Oxford, 1947, ed. 3, 1970) and C. E. B. Cranfield (London, 1950); on 2 PET. only, by J. Chaîne (Études Bibliques, ed. 2, 1939, on Catholic Epp., pp. 1–96). R. Perdelwitz, Die Mysterienreligion und das Problem des I. Petrusbriefes (1911). B. H. *Streeter, The Primitive Church (1929), pp. 115–30. F. L. Cross, 1 Peter. A Paschal Liturgy (1954). F. *Spitta, Der zweite Brief des Petrus und der Brief des Judas (1885); J. B. Mayor, The Epistle of St. Jude and the Second Epistle of St. Peter (1915). F. H. Chase in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 779–96 (on 1 Pet.) and 796–818 (on 2 Pet.); M. E. Boismard, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 1415–55 (on 1 Pet.) and J. Schmitt, ib., cols. 1455–63 (on 2 Pet.), both s.v. 'Pierre'.

PETER, Gospel of St. An early apocryphal Gospel of which the only surviving section is contained in an 8th cent. MS. discovered at Akhmîm in Egypt in 1886–7 (now at Cairo). Acc. to *Serapion, Bp. of Antioch (c. 190), it was in use at Rhossus in his time, and in the next century *Origen knew of its existence. It seems to have been a largely legendary work, the author of which had strong antipathies to the Jews and was *Docetic in his theological standpoint. It was probably written in Syria about the middle of the 2nd cent.

Editio princeps of the Akhmîm fragment ed. A. Lods in Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission Archéologique Française du Caire, ix (1893), pp. 218–24, with facsimiles in plates II–VI. Text also ed., with introd., notes, and Eng. tr., by H. B. *Swete (London, 1893); among many other edd., convenient reprint in E. Klostermann, Apocrypha, i (Kleine Texte ed. H. *Lietzmann, iii; 1908), pp. 4–8. Eng. tr. of extracts [Origen, In Matt., x. 17; Serapion ap. *Eusebius, H.E., VI. xii. 2–6; Eusebius, H.E., III. iii. 2; *Theodoret, Haer. Fab., ii. 2] in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), p. 13 f. Fr. tr. of complete text, with full commentary and bibl., by L. Vaganay (Études Bibliques, 1930). J. A. *Robinson in id.–M. R. James, The Gospel according to Peter and the Revelation of Peter (1892), pp. 13–36. O. Perler, 'L'Évangile de Pierre et Méliton de Sardes' in R. Bibl., lxxi (1964), pp. 584–90. C. Maurer in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 118–24; Eng. tr., i, pp. 179–87.

PETER, Liturgy of St. A Mass combining elements from the Byzantine and Roman rites which was probably drawn up for the use of Greek communities in Italy, but may have been put together only as a literary experiment. The canon is that of the Roman Mass. It was first published, apparently from Vat. graec. 1970 (saec. xii), by G. Linden in Apologia pro Liturgia Petri Apostoli et Commentarius in eandem cum Missa Apostolica Petri Apostoli (Antwerp, 1589, and Paris, 1595).

Text in C. A. Swainson, The Greek Liturgies (1884), pp. 191–203. Brightman, L.E.W., i, p. xci, with reff. to other editions. H. W. Codrington, The Liturgy of St. Peter. With Preface and Introduction by P. de Meester, O.S.B. (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, Hft. 30; 1936). J. M. Hanssens, S.J., 'La Liturgie romano-byzantine de saint Pierre' in O.C.P., iv (1938), pp. 235–58; v (1939), pp. 103–50.

PETER, Martyrdom of St. See Peter, Acts of St.

PETER, Patrimony of St. See Patrimony of St. Peter.

PETER, Preaching of St. (Gk. Κήρυγμα Πέτρου). A treatise, of which but few fragments survive, purporting to be the work of the Apostle St. *Peter, but probably dating from the earlier half of the 2nd cent. It was very popular in the early Church and known in its entirety to *Clement of Alexandria. Apparently intended for missionary propaganda, it emphasized the superiority of Christian monotheism to the current beliefs of Greeks and Jews. *Origen thought that it was possibly genuine in whole or in part.

Fragments collected by A. *Hilgenfeld, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem Receptum, iv (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 52–67, incl. introd. and notes. Fragments from Clement of Alexandria pr. in E. Klostermann, Apocrypha, i (Kleine Texte ed. H. *Lietzmann, iii, 1908), pp. 13–16; Eng. tr. of these latter in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 16–19. E. von Dobschütz, Das Kerygma Petri kritisch untersucht (T.U., xi, Hft. 1; 1893). A. Hilgenfeld, 'Das Κήρυγμα Πέτρου (καὶ Παύλου)' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xxxvi (1893), pp. 518–41. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 547–50.

PETER OF ALCÁNTARA, St. (1499–1562), founder of the Spanish *Discalced Franciscans. A native of Alcántara, in Extremadura, he studied at Salamanca (c. 1511–15) and took the habit of the *Observantist Franciscans in 1515. Ordained priest in 1524, he became superior of different houses and, from 1538 to 1541, provincial of the Extremaduran province of St. Gabriel, whose strictness he increased by the addition of several constitutions. On the expiration of his office he retired to a hermitage near Lisbon where he was soon joined by other like-minded friars, so that he could establish several communities, which were later (1561) erected into a province. Having returned finally to Spain c. 1553, he realized his exalted ideals of austerity in a little convent at el Pedroso del Acím, founded c. 1557, on which his congregation, the 'Alcantarines', was subsequently modelled. Soon he became much sought after as a spiritual director. He gave much valued spiritual guidance, together with encouragement and help in her reform of the *Carmelite Order, to St. *Teresa, who first met him in 1558 and greatly revered him. She admired both Peter of Alcántara and *Luis de Granada as writers on prayer. A small Tratado de la oración y meditación (prob. c. 1556) bearing Peter's name was much printed and translated. Whether this work was composed by him independently of Luis de Granada's Libro de la oración y meditación or represents a summary of the latter made by Alcántara (and perhaps reworked by Granada), or whether the Tratado was expanded by Granada into his Libro, are questions still vigorously discussed. Peter of Alcántara was canonized in 1669. Feast day, 19 Oct.

Eng. trs. of the Tratado by G. Willoughby (Brussels, 1632; ed. 2, Liverpool, 1843), G. F. Bullock (ed. G. S. Hollings) (London, 1905) and D. Devas (ib., 1926). Lives by F. Marchese (Rome, 1667), Juan de San Bernardo (Naples, 1710) and A. Barrado Manzano, O.F.M. (Madrid, 1965). Cf. also AA.SS., Oct. VIII (1866), pp. 623–809. Estudios sobre San Pedro de Alcántara en el IV centenario de su muerte (1562–1962) (Archivo Ibero-Americano, xxii; 1962), with full bibl. Popular life by J. Piat (Paris, 1959). Dependence of the Tratado on the Libro was asserted by J. Cuervo, O.P., in his Life of Luis of Granada (Madrid, 1895) and in Revista de archivos, bibliotecas y museos, xxxviii (for 1918; 1919), pp. 293–359; xl (for 1919; 1920), pp. 1–68, 355–417; it was denied by Michel-Ange, O.Cap., ib., xxxv (for 1916; 1917), pp. 139–222; xxxvi (for 1917; 1918), pp. 145–99, 321–68; reasserted by Ubald d'Alençon in Études Franciscaines, xxxv (1923), pp. 198–213, who is answered by Michel-Ange, ib., xxxvi (1924), pp. 63–83, 141–66. Barrado in his Life (op. cit.), takes the same side as Michel-Ange. A. Teetaert, O.Cap., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1793–1800, s.v. 'Pierre d'Alcantara', with bibl.

PETER OF ALEXANDRIA, St. (d. prob. 311), Bp. of Alexandria from 300. Peter is described by *Eusebius as 'a model bishop, remarkable alike for his virtuous life and for his keen study of the Scriptures'. He survived the persecution of *Diocletian, and drew up rules governing the readmission to the Church of those who had lapsed from Christianity under the influence of fear or torture. When, in 306, persecution began again, Peter went into hiding, and another bishop, *Melitius, subsequently claimed authority over Alexandria. It seems that Peter came back to his see when peace was restored in 311, but was beheaded in the persecution of Maximin shortly afterwards. Feast day in E., 24 Nov.; in W., 26 Nov.

Fragments in M. J. *Routh (ed.), Reliquiae Sacrae (ed. 2, Oxford, 1846), iv, pp. 19–82. J. P. Migne, PG, xviii, 449–522. Eng. tr. by J. B. H. Hawkins in A.N.C.L., xiv (1869), pp. 269–332, incl. introd. For more recently discovered fragments, cf. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 212 f. Eusebius, H.E., VII. xxxii. 31; VIII. xiii. 7; and IX. xiv. 2. L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria. Theognostus, Pierius and Peter (1908), pp. 58–86. W. Telfer, 'St. Peter of Alexandria and Arius' in Anal. Boll., lxvii (1949), pp. 117–30. P. Devos, 'Une Passion grecque inédite de S. Pierre d'Alexandrie et sa traduction par Anastase le Bibliothécaire', ib., lxxxiii (1965), pp. 157–87, incl. texts. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 239–47; J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 113–18.

G. Fritz in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1802–4; F. H. Kettler in P.W., xix (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1281–8, s.v. 'Petros I'.

PETER DE BRUYS (d. c. 1140), medieval heretic. He is known through the writings of *Peter the Venerable and *Abelard. It would appear that he was a priest who was deprived of his office and then began to preach in Dauphiné and Provence. He rejected infant baptism, the Mass, church buildings (because every place is equally suitable for prayer), prayers for the dead, the veneration of the Cross (as being the instrument of crucifying Christ afresh) as well as large parts of the Scriptures and the authority of the Church. He gained a considerable number of followers, called 'Petrobrusians', who ill-treated priests and incited monks to marry. His teaching was frequently condemned, e.g. by the second *Lateran Council in 1139. He himself was thrown into the flames at St.-Gilles, near Nîmes, by the people infuriated at his burning the crosses.

The principal sources are Peter the Venerable, 'Tractatus adversos Petrobrusianos Haereticos' (crit. ed. by J. Faerns (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, x; 1968)), and Peter Abelard, 'Introductio ad Theologiam', ii. 4 (PL, clxxviii, 1056). [J.J.] I. von *Dollinger, Beiträge zur Sektengeschichte des Mittelalters, i (1890), pp. 75–97 ('Petrus von Bruys und Heinrich von Toulouse'); E. Vacandard, 'Les Origines de l'hérésie albigeoise' in R.Q.H., lv (1894), pp. 50–83, esp. pp. 67–72. J. Kramp, S.J., 'Chronologisches zu Peters des Ehrwürdigen Epistola adversus Petrobrusianos' in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, i (S.T., xxxvii; 1923), pp. 71–9. J. C. Reagan, 'Did the Petrobrusians Teach Salvation by Faith Alone?' in The Journal of Religion, vii (1927), pp. 81–91, with reff. F. Vernet in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1151–6, s.v. 'Bruys, Pierre de'.

PETER OF CANDIA. See Alexander V.

PETER CANISIUS, St. See Canisius, St. Peter.

PETER THE CHANTER (d. 1197), medieval theologian. Prob. of a knightly family from Hodenc-en-Bray in the Beauvaisis, he was educated at *Reims and *Paris, where he taught theology from 1173 or earlier. In 1183 he became precentor of *Notre-Dame in Paris, and in 1197 dean of Reims. His works include glosses on all the books of the OT and NT, a collection of quaestiones known as the Summa de Sacramentis, and a work on virtues and vices, the Verbum abbreviatum. Peter was one of the most influential masters at Paris in the late 12th cent.; he concentrated on practical questions of ethics, and by his discussion of concrete cases for the guidance of confessors he contributed much to the elaboration of the doctrine of circumstances to be observed in the administration of *penance. It is probable that Peter's views were influential in the reform programme of the *Lateran Council of 1215, notably in his strong condemnation of the use of *ordeals in the administration of justice. One respect in which his views did not prevail was his advocacy of life imprisonment and not the death penalty for heretics.

Verbum abbreviatum ed. G. Galpin, O.S.B. (Mund, Switzerland, 1639), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, ccv, cols. 21–554. Summa de Sacramentis ed. J. A. Dugauquier (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, iv, vii, xvi, xxi, etc.; 1954 ff.). For editions of his other works, see F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, iv (Madrid, 1954), pp. 248–75. F. S. Gutjahr, Petrus Cantor Parisiensis. Sein Leben und seine Schriften (Graz, 1899). J. W. Baldwin, Masters, Princes, and Merchants. The Social Views of Peter the Chanter and his Circle (2 vols., Princeton, 1970).

PETER CELESTINE, St. See Celestine V.

PETER CHRYSOLOGUS, St. See Chrysologus, St. Peter.

PETER CLAVER, St. (1581–1654), 'Apostle of the Negroes'. A native of Verdu in Catalonia, he entered the *Jesuit novitiate at Tarragona in 1601. While studying at Palma, Majorca, he was inspired by St. Alphonsus Rodríguez with a longing to convert the heathen in the New World. In 1610 he landed at Cartagena in what is now Colombia and at once began ministering to the slaves who were brought over in terrible conditions from W. Africa. In 1615 he was ordained priest. He declared himself 'the slave of the negroes for ever' and, despite much opposition from slave owners and people of fashion, he championed their cause and devoted himself for long years to their temporal and spiritual welfare. He is said to have instructed and baptized over 300,000 negroes. He was canonized by *Leo XIII in 1888. Feast day, 9 Sept.

J. Fernández, S.J., Apostólica y penitente vida de el V.P. Pedro Claver (Saragossa, 1666). Other Lives by B. G. Fleuriau (Paris, 1751; Eng. tr., 1849), J. Charruau (Paris, 1914), G. Ledos (Paris, 1923), and A. Valtierra, S.J. (Bogotá, 1954; Eng. tr., 1960). A. Lunn, A Saint in the Slave Trade. Peter Claver (1935).

PETER COMESTOR (d. c. 1179), Biblical scholar. Acc. to *Henry of Ghent he was a native of Troyes, where he was Dean of the cathedral from 1147 to 1164. Between 1164 and 1168 he became Chancellor of the University of *Paris, and in 1169 he retired to the monastery of St.-*Victor. His chief works are his 'Historia Scholastica', his Gloss on the Four Gospels, and his Sermons. The 'Historia' is a continuous history from the Creation to the end of the period covered by Acts, based on the text of the OT, the Gospels, and Acts, with many Scriptural quotations and literal and allegorical explanations frequently reflecting the tenets of contemporary science. The works of the Fathers and of pagan authors are used to fill up the gaps of the Biblical narrative. The 'Historia' became the standard work on Biblical history for the Middle Ages and was frequently annotated and commented on, e.g. by Stephen *Langton. In matters of theology he belonged to the school which adopted a more critical attitude to the Sentences of *Peter Lombard. He was known as the 'Magister Historiarum'.

The 'Historia Scholastica', first pr. at Strassburg c. 1470, is repr. from the ed. of E. Navarro, O.S.B. (Madrid, 1699), in J. P. Migne, PL, cxcviii, 1049 (text 1053)–1722; the 'Sermons' are to be found ib., cxcviii, 1721–1844, and ib., clxxi, passim; details of MSS. and editions in M. M. Lebreton, 'Recherches sur les manuscrits contenant des sermons de Pierre le Mangeur' in Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Publications de l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes. Bulletin d'Information, ii for 1953 (1954), pp. 25–44; iv for 1955 (1956), pp. 35–6. Crit. text of the 'Tractatus De Sacramentis' with full bibl. by R. M. Martin, O.P. (as appendix in S.S.L., xvii; 1937). R. M. Martin, O.P., 'Notes sur l'œuvre littéraire de Pierre le Mangeur' in R.T.A.M., iii (1931), pp. 54–66; A. Landgraf, 'Recherches sur les écrits de Pierre le Mangeur', ib., pp. 292–306, 341–72; S. R. Daly, 'Peter Comestor: Master of Histories' in Speculum, xxxii (1957), pp. 62–73. See also B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (1941; rev. ed., 1951), ch. v and passim. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 763 f., s.v.; N. Iung in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1918–22, s.v. 'Pierre Comestor'.

PETER'S CHAINS, Feast of St. See Lammas Day.

PETER DAMIAN, St. (1007–72), reformer and *Doctor of the Church. Born at *Ravenna of poor parents, he had to tend the swine in his youth; but when his intelligence was recognized he was sent to study at Faenza and Parma. In 1035 he entered the *Benedictine hermitage at Fonte Avella, where he began to lead a life of extreme austerity. About 1043 he was chosen prior and spent the next years founding new monasteries and reforming old ones; and before long he became famous as an uncompromising preacher against the worldliness and simoniacal practices of the clergy. In 1057 he was made Cardinal Bishop of *Ostia much against his will, and as such took a prominent part in the work of ecclesiastical reform and the struggle against the various antipopes, esp. Honorius II. Though he seems to have been relieved of his cardinalate by *Alexander II, he was sent several times on diplomatic missions to France and Germany. He died on a journey back from his native town, Ravenna, which he had reconciled to the Pope.

During his life Peter enjoyed great authority in the Church, owing to his learning, zeal, and integrity. In his numerous writings he enjoined strict monastic discipline and severe mortification, and denounced immorality and simony. He also treated of doctrinal matters, esp. *purgatory, the *Eucharist, and the validity of the Sacraments administered by simoniacal priests. The last of these he defended at a time when the teaching of the Church on this point was still in flux. He was never formally canonized, but since his death a local cult has existed in several places, and in 1828 Leo XII extended his feast to the universal Church, at the same time pronouncing him a 'Doctor of the Church'. He is said to have adopted the title Damian in gratitude to his brother of that name who had arranged for his education. His writings include 'Liber Gomorrhianus' (against clerical marriage), 'Liber Gratissimus' (in defence of the validity of simoniacal ordinations) and 'Disceptatio Synodalis'. Feast day, 21 Feb.

Works ed. C. Cajetan (4 vols., Rome, 1606–40), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxliv and cxlv. Better ed., 4 vols., Venice [–Bassano], 1783. Crit. ed. of his 'Liber Gratissimus' by L. de Heinemann in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum in Saeculis XI et XII, i (1891), pp. 15–75; of his 'De Divina Omnipotentia' and other opuscula by P. Brezzi–B. Nardi (Florence, 1943); of his 'Vita Beati Romualdi' by G. Tabacco (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, xciv; 1957); of his hymns by G. M. Dreves, S.J., Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, i (A.H.M.A., xlviii; 1905), pp. 29–78; and of his Opera Poetica by Margareta Lokrantz (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, xii; 1964). Eng. tr. of Selected Writings on the Spiritual Life by Patricia McNulty (1959). K. Reindel, 'Studien zur Überlieferung der Werke des Petrus Damiani' in Deutsches Archiv, xv (1959), pp. 23–102; xvi (1960), pp. 73–154; xviii (1962), pp. 317–417. Life by his disciple, John of Lodi, O.S.B., pr. in the ed. of his works by C. Cajetan, i, pp. v–xviii; repr. in A.A.SS., Feb. III (1658), pp. 416–27, and in J. P. Migne, PL, cxliv, 113–46. Modern studies by F. Neukirch (vol. i only [to 1059], Leipzig, 1875), J. Kleinermanns (Steyl, 1882), R. Biron, O.S.B. ('Les Saints', 1908), F. Dressler (Studia Anselmiana, xxxiv; 1954, with bibl.), and J. Leclercq, O.S.B. (Uomini e Dottrine, viii; 1960). J. A. Endres, Petrus Damianus und die weltliche Wissenschaft (B.G.P.M., viii, Hft. 3; 1910). J. J. Ryan, Saint Peter Damiani and his Canonical Sources (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies. Studies and Texts, ii; 1956). Studi su san Pier Damiano in onore del Cardinale Amleto Giovanni Cicognani (Faenza, 1961), incl. bibliography of works on Peter Damian, 1950–60, pp. xxi–xxiv. J. Gonsette, S.J., Pierre Damien et la culture profane (Essais philosophiques, vii; 1965); R. Bultot, La Doctrine du mépris du monde, iv. Le XIe siècle. I. Pierre Damien (1963). J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (1932), pp. 95–120. Raby, pp. 250–6; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 393–8. Überweg, ii, pp. 187–9; Manitius, iii, pp. 68–75. G. Bareille in D.T.C., iv (1911), cols. 40–54, s.v. 'Damien (2), Saint Pierre'; P. Palazzini in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1377–80, s.v. 'Pier Damian', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Gregory VII.

PETER THE FULLER (d. 488), *Monophysite Patr. of *Antioch. Acc. to an uncertain tradition, recorded by a 6th cent. monk, Alexander of Cyprus, Peter had been a monk of the convent of the *Acoemetae at *Constantinople, where he practised the trade of a fuller. Expelled for his Monophysite leanings, he went to *Chalcedon, but after a brief stay returned and became known to the Emp. *Zeno the Isaurian, whom he accompanied to Antioch c. 470. Here he joined the *Apollinarians and violently opposed Martyrius, Bp. of Antioch, a supporter of the Chalcedonian Definition. During an absence of Martyrius, in search of assistance against the Apollinarians in Constantinople, Peter, backed by Zeno, had himself made bishop in his place (470). *Gennadius of Constantinople, however, obtained a decree of exile against him which was commuted to imprisonment in the convent of the Acoemetae. In 475 he succeeded in regaining his see, but in 477 he was once more deposed and interned, this time with the *Messalians. In 482 he gave his assent to Zeno's '*Henoticon' and again became Patr. of Antioch, where he remained till his death. At a Council he succeeded in inducing his bishops to assent to the Emperor's formula. He is chiefly remembered for his addition to the *Trisagion of the Monophysite clause ὁ σταυρωθεὶς δι' ἡμᾶς ('who was crucified for us'). Acc. to *Theodore Lector he also introduced the recitation of the *Nicene Creed at the *Eucharist, the solemn blessing of the *chrism, and the commemoration of the *Theotokos at every service.

Theodore Lector, H.E., i. 20–2 (repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (1), 175–8). E. Venables in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 338–40, s.v. 'Petrus (10)'; G. Fritz in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1933–5, s.v. 'Pierre le Foulon'.

PETER GONZALES, St. See Elmo, St.

PETER THE HERMIT (1050?–1115). He was one of the most eloquent preachers of the First *Crusade, inaugurated by *Urban II in 1095 at the Council of *Clermont. In 1096 he led a band of enthusiastic country folk as far as Civitot, where most of them were killed by the Turks while he had gone back to *Constantinople to ask for help from the Emp. Alexius. On his return he collected the survivors, with whom he joined the main army under *Godfrey of Bouillon. During the siege of Antioch (1098) he made an unsuccessful attempt to escape but later apparently regained his reputation and entered Jerusalem with the victorious army. On his return to Europe he became prior of the *Augustinian monastery of Neufmoutier (Huy), which he had helped to found. After his death he became the hero of many legends. The story, repeated by *Anna Comnena, that it was he who conceived the idea of the Crusades on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem is an invention. Commemoration on 8 July.

P. d'Outreman, S.J., La Vie du vénérable Pierre l'Hermite (Mons, 1632; mod. ed., Clermont, 1895). H. Hagenmeyer, Peter der Eremite (1879; Fr. tr., 1883). Y. Le Febvre, Pierre l'Ermite et la croisade (Amiens, 1946). See also works cited under Crusades.

PETER OF LAODICEA (c. 7th–8th cent.), Gk. Patristic writer and reputed Commentator on the Gospels. His name is attached to extracts from Gospel commentaries in two late MSS., though in others the passages are anonymous. In 1908 C. F. G. Heinrici argued that they were actually the work of this author; but further investigation has made this improbable. The only undoubted work of Peter's to survive is a short 'Exposition of the Lord's Prayer'.

The 'Expositio in Orationem Domini' and other fragments in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (2), 3321–36. The surviving portions of his supposed Comm. on Mt., ed. C. F. G. Heinrici (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung des Neuen Testamentes, v; 1908). M. Rauer, Der dem Petrus von Laodicea zugeschriebene Lukaskommentar (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, viii, Hft. 2; 1920). Krumbacher, p. 136 f. R. Devreesse in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., i (1928), cols. 1165–7, s.v. 'Chaînes exégétiques grecques'.

PETER LOMBARD (c. 1100–60), the 'Master of the Sentences'. He was born near Novara in Lombardy, and after studying in Italy went to *Reims and c. 1134 to *Paris, where he taught at the Cathedral School. In 1148 he opposed *Gilbert de la Porrée at the Council of Reims, and in 1159, shortly before his death, was appointed Bp. of Paris. His Commentaries on the Psalms and on the Pauline Epistles were written before and after 1148 respectively, and his chief work, the 'Sententiarum libri quatuor', probably 1155–8. This last work, to which he owes his fame, is arranged in four books, on (1) the Trinity, (2) the Creation and Sin, (3) the Incarnation and the Virtues, and (4) the Sacraments and the Four Last Things. It contains a wealth of quotations from the Latin Fathers, esp. Sts. *Augustine and *Hilary, as well as (of the Greeks) from St. *John of Damascus, hitherto almost unknown in the W. After Peter Lombard's death the book was violently attacked by *Walter of St.-Victor on the ground of its *Abelardian Christological '*Nihilianism', i.e. the doctrine that Christ acc. to His humanity is nothing (quod Christus secundum quod est homo non est aliquid), which, however, was apparently given only as an opinion. Later, under the influence of *Joachim of Fiore's 'Liber de vera et falsa philosophia', which attacked Peter Lombard's Trinitarian teaching, efforts were made to have the work censured at the Fourth *Lateran Council in 1215, with the result that Joachim's doctrine was rejected and the 'Sentences' pronounced orthodox. After this rehabilitation it became the standard textbook of Catholic theology during the Middle Ages, despite the early rejection of several opinions advanced in it, e.g. the identification of the Holy Spirit with the virtue of charity. Its teaching on the Sacraments marked an important development; Peter Lombard is one of the first to insist on the number seven, to distinguish them (like *Alexander of Hales later) from the *sacramentals, and to clarify the conception by asserting the efficacy and causality of the sign. The book, which owed its success chiefly to its lucid arrangement, its comprehensiveness, and its absence of individuality, was commented on by nearly all theologians of repute and even versified. It was finally superseded as a textbook by the 'Summa' of St. *Thomas Aquinas, but in the 17th cent. commentaries were still produced, among the last being that of the *Jesuit, J. M. de Ripalda (1635).

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL, cxci and cxcii. Crit. ed. of the text of the Sentences in the ed. of the Commentary on them by St. *Bonaventure, Opera, ed. by the Franciscans at Quaracchi, i–iv (Quaracchi, 1882–9); Sentences ed. separately (Spicilegium Bonaventurianum iv–v; 1871 ff.). J. N. Espenberger, Die Philosophie des Petrus Lombardus und ihre Stellung im zwölften Jahrhundert (B.G.P.M., iii, Hft. 5; 1901). O. Baltzer, Die Sentenzen des Petrus Lombardus (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, viii, Hft. 3; 1902). F. Stegmüller (ed.), Repertorium Commentariorum in Sententias Petri Lombardi (2 vols., Würzburg, 1947). Miscellanea Lombardiana pubblicata a chiusura delle celebrazioni centenarie organizzate in Novara per onorare Pietro Lombardo a cura del Pontificio Ateneo Salesiano di Torino (Novara, 1957), esp. D. Van den Eynde, O.F.M., 'Essai chronologique sur l'œuvre littéraire de Pierre Lombard', pp. 45–63. P. Delhaye, Pierre Lombard (Montreal–Paris, 1961). There is an important series of artt., mainly by J. de Ghellinck, S.J., listed by id. in D.T.C., vide infra. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Le Mouvement théologique du XIIe siècle (1914), pp. 73–244 (ed. 2, Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, x; 1948, pp. 113–373). Überweg, ii, pp. 274–6, with bibl. p. 710 f. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1941–2019, s.v. 'Pierre Lombard', with good bibl. R. Seeberg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 630–42, s.v. 'Lombardus, Petrus'; J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in C.E., xi (1911), p. 768 f., s.v.

PETER MARTYR, St. (c. 1200–52), Inquisitor. Born at *Verona (hence known also as Veronensis) of parents of the *Cathari sect, received into the *Dominican Order in 1221 at *Bologna by St. *Dominic himself, and eventually elected prior of several houses, he was appointed *Inquisitor for N. Italy by Pope *Gregory IX in 1251. He gained a great reputation as a preacher and wonder-worker, and successfully reconciled large numbers of Cathari, at the same time forcing others into exile. While journeying from Como to Milan he was attacked by two assassins, one of whom clove his head with an axe and stabbed his companion. After commending himself and his murderer to God, he wrote on the ground in his own blood (so tradition affirms) the words 'Credo in Deum', received another blow, and died. Fra *Angelico has depicted him in a famous painting in the convent of S. Marco, Florence, with wounded head, his finger to his lips. Feast day, 29 Apr. He was the patron of Inquisitors.

Life by Thomas Agni de Lentino, O.P., written before 1257, pr. from a redaction made c. 1517 in AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 686–719; other material, pp. 678–86; Gerard de Fracheto, O.P. (d. 1271), Vitae Fratrum Ordinis Praedicatorum, ed. B. M. de Reichert, O.P. (Monumenta Ordinis Praedicatorum, i, Rome, 1897), pp. 236–48. Life by P. T. Campana (Milan, 1741). F. T. Perrens, 'Saint Pierre Martyr et l'hérésie des Patarins à Florence' in Revue historique, ii (1876), pp. 337–66. G. Meersseman, O.P., 'Études sur les anciennes confréries dominicaines, II. Les confréries de saint Pierre Martyr' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxi (1951), pp. 51–196, with docc. A. Dondaine, O.P., 'Saint Pierre Martyr', ib., xxiii (1953), pp. 66–162, with reff. V. J. Koudelka–A. Šilli in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, x (Rome, 1968), cols. 746–62, s.v. 'Pietro de Verona', with further bibl.

PETER MARTYR (1500–62), an Anglicized form of 'Pietro Martire Vermigli', Reformer. He was born at Florence, the son of Stefano Vermigli (a follower of *Savonarola), who, having lost several children, vowed to dedicate any that lived to St. Peter Martyr (see previous entry). After education at Fiesole by the *Augustinians and joining that order, he became in 1530 abbot of the Augustinians at Spoleto, and in 1533 prior of St. Petrus-ad-aram at Naples. He was now a serious student of the Bible, and was much impressed by a reading of M. *Bucer's Commentaries on the Gospels and Psalms, and H. *Zwingli's De vera et falsa religione. The sympathy with the Reformers which he displayed in his lectures led him to be accused of error and prohibited from preaching, though the prohibition was removed on appeal to Rome, through the help of R. *Pole and other friends. In 1542, however, he was forced to flee from Italy and take refuge at Zürich and Basel, and lastly at Strassburg, where, with Bucer's help, he was appointed professor of theology (1542). Here he married Catherine Dammartin, a nun. At T. *Cranmer's invitation he came to England with B. *Ochino in 1547, was given a government pension of 40 marks, made Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1548), and took part in a great disputation (1549) on the Eucharist. He was consulted on the BCP of 1552, and was one of the commissioners for the reform of canon law. In 1553 his wife died, and was buried in *Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, near the tomb of St. *Frideswide, but, at the order of Cardinal Pole, the body was subsequently disinterred. (In 1561 her remains were mingled with the supposed relics of St. Frideswide and buried at the north-east end of the cathedral; hence N. *Sanders' epigram 'hic requiescit religio cum superstitione'.) At *Mary's accession, Martyr was imprisoned, but after six months was allowed, through S. *Gardiner's influence, to go to Strassburg, where he was reappointed professor of theology (1554). In 1556, owing to opposition to his Eucharistic views, he removed to Zürich, where he became professor of Hebrew, maintaining a long correspondence on English affairs with J. *Jewel, R. *Cox, John Parkhurst, and Edwin *Sandys.

Some of his correspondence is included in the Zürich Letters, ed. H. Robinson (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1842–5). The primary source is J. Simler, Oratio de Vita et Obitu (Zürich, 1563; it was also appended to the collection of Martyr's miscellaneous works publd. under the title Loci Communes Sacrarum Literarum, Zürich, 1583; Eng. tr. of the latter, with the Oratio appended, by A. Marten, London, 1583). F. C. Schlosser, Leben des Theodor de Beza und des Peter Martyr Vermilli (Heidelberg, 1809), pp. 363–514. Further life by C. Schmidt (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der Reformirten Kirche, vii; Elberfeld, 1858). J. C. McLelland, The Visible Words of God. An Exposition of the Sacramental Theology of Peter Martyr Vermigli, A.D. 1500–1562 (1957). P. McNair, Peter Martyr in Italy. An Anatomy of Apostasy (Oxford, 1967). A. Gordon in D.N.B., lviii (1899), pp. 253–6, s.v. 'Vermigli'.

PETER MOGILA. See Mogila, Peter.

PETER MONGO (d. 490) (Gk. Μογγός, 'hoarse'), *Monophysite Patr. of *Alexandria. In 477 he was elected the successor of the Monophysite, *Timothy Aelurus. The Emp. *Zeno forced him to abandon his see temporarily, but he was restored on accepting the *Henoticon. Rejecting the decisions of *Chalcedon, he remained a staunch supporter of *Acacius, the schismatic Patr. of *Constantinople. While his acceptance of the Henoticon annoyed the extreme Monophysites in Alexandria, his endeavours to placate them by a Monophysite interpretation of it also offended the orthodox. The compromise served, however, to maintain peaceful relations with Constantinople during the patriarchate of Acacius. Euphemius, who became Patr. of Constantinople in 490, had his name erased from the *diptychs and intended to depose him, an action prevented by Mongo's death.

The sources include *Evagrius, H.E., iii, *Zacharias Scholasticus, H.E., v, and Theophanes, Chronogr., 194. T. Niggl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 370 f., s.v., with bibl.

PETER NOLASCO, St. (c. 1189–c. 1256), *Mercedarian. The facts of his life are much contested. Acc. to a late tradition he took part in the *Crusade against the *Albigensians and became the tutor of James I of Aragon. He is usually regarded as the joint-founder, with St. *Raymond of Peñafort (from whom they received the rule), of the order of Mercedarians for the ransom of Christian prisoners from the Saracens. He redeemed 400 captives on a journey to Valencia and Granada, and went himself twice to Africa as ransomer. He ceased to rule the order after 1249, giving place to William of Bas. In 1628 he was canonized by *Urban VIII. Feast day, 28 (formerly 31) Jan.; now suppressed.

Lives by F. Zumel, Mercedarian, pr. in AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 981–8, F. Olignano, Mercedarian (Naples, 1668), F. Colombo (Madrid, 1674) and P. N. Pérez, Mercedarian (Barcelona, 1915; It. tr., 1921). See also bibl. to Mercedarians and Raymond of Peñafort.

PETER'S PENCE (Lat. denarii S. Petri), also 'Rome-Scot', an ecclesiastical tax formerly paid in England to the Pope. It was first paid by King *Offa after the visit of the two Papal legates concerned in the erection of the Archbishopric of *Lichfield in 787, and appears to have been continued by Offa's successors. *William of Malmesbury records that it was paid by King Aethelwulf (d. 858), the father of *Alfred the Great. After a lapse it was renewed by William I. At one time a levy, collected at midsummer on all but the poorest houses, in the 12th cent. it was commuted by the Bishops to an annual sum of £199 6*s.* 8*d.* It was finally abolished by *Henry VIII in 1534.

Act forbidding the payment (25 Hen. VIII, c. 21) repr. in Gee–Hardy, pp. 209–32 (No. 53). P. Fabre, 'Recherches sur le denier de saint Pierre en Angleterre au moyen âge' in Mélanges G. B. de Rossi (Supplément aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, xii; 1892), pp. 159–82; O. Jensen, 'The "Denarius Sancti Petri" in England' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, New Series, xv (1901), pp. 171–247. W. E. Lunt, Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, xix; New York, 1934), i, pp. 65–71, with documents, ii, pp. 55–81; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England to 1327 (Studies in Anglo-Papal Relations during the Middle Ages, i; Mediaeval Academy of America Publication No. 22; 1939), pp. 3–84; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (ib., ii; Mediaeval Academy of America Publication No. 74; 1962), pp. 1–53; 717–20, all with reff. E. W. Watson in D.E.C.H., p. 457 f.

PETER OF TARANTAISE, St. (d. 1175). (Not to be confounded with Pope Innocent V (1276), also 'Peter of Tarantaise'.) A native of the Dauphiné, at the age of 20 he became a *Cistercian monk at the Abbey of Bonnevaux, founded by St. *Bernard, where he lived a life of great piety. In 1142 he was appointed Abp. of Tarantaise (Moutiers, in Savoy), and with great difficulty thoroughly reformed his diocese, founding many hospitals. His practice of distributing free bread and soup ('May Bread') in the weeks before harvest is said to have survived until the Revolution. In 1155 he sought release in flight, but being discovered as a lay brother in a Swiss monastery he was compelled to return to his see. He stood high in the confidence of the Popes and was commissioned to try to reconcile Prince Henry (later Henry II) of England and Louis VII of France. Feast day, 8 May.

AA.SS., Mai. II (1680), pp. 320–45, incl. life by Godfrey, Abbot of Hauteville, written at the request of Pope Lucius

III and completed before 1185. J. M. Chevray, La Vie de saint Pierre II, archevêque de Tarentaise (1841). H. Brultey, Saint Pierre de Tarentaise. Ses miracles, ses reliques, son culte (Besançon, 1874). Un Moine de Tamié [i.e. A. Dimier], Saint Pierre de Tarentaise. Essai historique (Ligugé, 1935). L. F. Barmann, S.J., 'Peter of Tarentaise. A Biographical Study of the Twelfth Century' in Revue de l'Université d'Ottawa, xxxi (1961), Section Spéciale, pp. 96*–125*.

PETER THE VENERABLE (c. 1092–1156), eighth Abbot of *Cluny. A descendant of the noble family of Montboissier, he was educated at the monastery of Sauxillanges of the congregation of Cluny, under whose abbot St. *Hugh he made his profession at the age of 17. After being prior at Vézelay and Domène (1120), he was elected abbot of Cluny in 1122. Against much opposition he carried through important reforms, esp. in the financial and educational spheres, in the two general chapters of 1132 and 1146 by enforcing the detailed constitutions which he had drawn up for the congregation. His interest in the pursuit of studies at Cluny brought about a controversy with his intimate friend, St. *Bernard, who wished to see the monastic life confined to prayer and manual work. In 1130 Peter supported Innocent II against the antipope Anacletus II, himself a Cluniac monk, and in 1140 he gave shelter to *Abelard first at Cluny and later at the priory of St.-Marcel-de-Chalon. Between his numerous journeys, which took him twice to Spain (in 1142–3), twice to England, and six times to Rome, he frequently retired to a hermitage to devote himself to study and meditation. He was the first to have the *Koran translated into Latin (completed 1143) and himself wrote against the Muslims. His works, among which are treatises against *Peter de Bruys and against the Jews (c. 1140), a number of sermons, and some poems, show comparatively little acquaintance with the Fathers but profound knowledge of the Scriptures, and a preference for the literal sense which causes him to avoid allegorical speculations. His moderation and gentleness earned him the veneration of his contemporaries, though in the eyes of posterity he was eclipsed by the great figure of his friend, St. Bernard. Though honoured as a saint, he was never canonized. Commemoration in several martyrologies is on 29 Dec.

Collected ed. of his works, Paris, 1522 (very incomplete); further collection, incl. text of statutes of Cluny during his time, in M. Marrier, O.S.B. (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614), cols. 621–1420; works repr., with additions from E. *Martène and elsewhere (details in D.T.C., vide infra), in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxix, 61–1054. Crit. edd. of his letters, with introd., by G. Constable (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1967), and of his 'Contra Petrobrusianos Hereticos' by J. Fearns (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, x; 1968). Life by his friend, Rudolphus, pr. from a MS. no longer known in E. Martène, O.S.B.–U. Durand, O.S.B. (edd.), Veterum Scriptorum et Monumentorum Amplissima Collectio, vi (Paris, 1729), cols. 1187–1202; repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 15–28. Further life in M. Marrier, op. cit., cols. 589–602, repr. with other biogr. material in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 27–62. J. H. Pignot, Histoire de l'ordre de Cluny depuis la fondation de l'abbaye jusqu'à la mort de Pierre-le-Vénérable, iii (1868), pp. 47–609. Other modern studies by J. d'Avenel (Paris, 1874), M. Demimuid (ib., 1876), and J. *Leclercq, O.S.B. ('Figures monastiques'; Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1946), with bibl. Festschrift commemorating the 8th centenary of his death ed. G. Constable–J. Kritzeck (Studia Anselmiana, xl; 1956). J. Kritzeck, Peter the Venerable and Islam (Princeton Oriental Studies, xxiii; 1964), incl. text of his writings against the Muslims. M. Manitius, 'Zu Petrus' von Cluny patristischen Kenntnissen' in Speculum, iii (1928), pp. 582–7. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Le Poème apologétique de Pierre le Vénérable et les poèmes connexes' in R.Bén., li (1939), pp. 53–69. M. D. Knowles, 'Peter the Venerable' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxix (1957), pp. 132–45. Manitius, iii, pp. 136–44. G. Grützmacher in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 222–6, s.v. 'Petrus der Ehrwürdige'; P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2065–81, s.v. 'Pierre le Vénérable'. See also bibl. to *Peter de Bruys.

PETER OF VERONA, St. See *Peter Martyr, St.

PETERBOROUGH. At the Saxon village of Medehamstede, which had existed on the site, a monastery was established c. 655, Peada, son of Penda, King of the Mercians, being one of its founders. After the monastery church had been destroyed by the Danes in 870, it was rebuilt c. 970 by *Ethelwold, Bp. of *Winchester, who dedicated it to St. Peter, and hence the village came to be called 'Peterborough'. This church being accidentally burnt in 1116, the foundations of a new church were laid in the following year. It was completed in 1237 and consecrated by R. *Grossteste, Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1541 became the cathedral of the newly constituted diocese. It embraces eight periods of construction from Norman to Perpendicular. Catherine of Aragon was buried here in 1536 and *Mary Queen of Scots in 1587, Mary's body being removed to *Westminster Abbey in 1612. In 1895 the site of a cruciform Saxon church was discovered under the south transept.

Chronicon Petroburgense, ed. T. Stapleton (Camden Society, xlvii; 1849). Chronicle of Hugh Candidus, ed. J. Sparke, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Varii (London, 1723), separate pagination; mod. ed. by W. T. Mellows (ib., 1949). G. Butler, Statutes of Peterborough Cathedral (1853; Eng. tr.). W. T. Mellows (ed.), Peterborough Local Administration. Parochial Government before the Reformation. Churchwardens' Accounts 1467–1573 with supplementary documents 1107–1488 (Northampton Record Society, ix; Kettering, 1939); id., Peterborough Local Administration. The Last Days of Peterborough. Being Part I of Tudor Documents, a Series relating chiefly to the Surrender of the Monastery, the Administration of its Temporalities during the Interregnum before the Establishment of the Cathedral, the Early Government of the Cathedral by the Dean and Chapter, and the Tudor Bishops of the Diocese of Peterborough (ib., xiii; 1947); id., Peterborough Local Administration. The Foundation of Peterborough Cathedral, A.D. 1541. Being Part II of Tudor Documents (ib., xii; 1941). S. Gunton, The History of the Church of Peterborough (1686). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 344–404. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of Lincoln, Ely, Oxford and Peterborough (1730), pp. 475–540. W. D. Sweeting, The Cathedral Church of Peterborough (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). J. C. Cox in V.C.H., Northampton, ii, ed. R. M. Serjeantson–W. R. D. Adkins (1906), pp. 83–95, with reff. G. F. Assinder in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 455–7, s.v.

PETITE ÉGLISE. The body of French Catholics who refused to recognize the *Concordat of 1801 (q.v.) and separated themselves from the communion of the Pope. Its members, who were known by various names, such as 'Illuminés' and 'Fidèles', remained faithful to a number of exiled bishops who had resisted the Pope's order to resign their old dioceses, and met in private houses for worship. When at the restoration, between 1817 and 1818, all schismatic bishops were reconciled to the Holy See except the Bp. of Blois, he came to be regarded as the head of the Petite Église till his death in 1829, which left them without a bishop. From that date their number rapidly decreased, esp. after their last priest died in 1847. By 1900 the schism had practically ceased to exist.

C. De Clercq in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 1438–47, s.v.

PETRARCH, FRANCESCO (1304–74), Italian poet and humanist. He spent part of his youth at Carpentras, near *Avignon, where his father had settled after being exiled from Florence for embracing, like *Dante, the cause of the White Guelphs. After studying law at Montpellier from 1319 to 1323 and at *Bologna from 1323 to 1325, he received minor orders at Avignon in 1326 which enabled him to hold several benefices. In 1327 he first saw Laura, who was to inspire his most famous poems collected in the 'Canzoniere'. From 1330 to 1337 he journeyed through N. France, Germany, and Italy, visiting many scholars and copying classical MSS. until, in 1337, he settled down to a life of solitude at Vaucluse, where most of his important works were written. His poems on Laura and his epic 'Africa' (begun in 1338) on Scipio Africanus won him the poet's crown in 1341. In the following year he wrote the treatise 'De Contemptu Mundi', consisting of three dialogues between himself and St. *Augustine, who seeks to turn the poet's mind from the transitory things of this world to thoughts of eternal life. In 1347 Petrarch joined the short-lived republican movement of Cola di *Rienzo and in 1350 began his famous friendship with Boccaccio. In the following years he was employed on several political embassies, e.g. to the Emp. Charles IV at Prague (1356). The last years of his life were spent again in retirement at Padua and the neighbouring village of Arquà. His religious nature, which was often in conflict with the sensuousness of the fame-loving poet and the passion of the scholar for pagan culture, found expression in several Latin treatises. 'De Otio Religioso' (begun in 1347), dedicated to the Carthusians of Montrieu, is a panegyric on the contemplative life; 'De Vita Solitaria' (1356) is a praise of solitude; and in the 'De Remediis Utriusque Fortunae' (1358–66) the ageing poet meditates on the transitoriness of human life. His last great poetical work, the 'Trionfi', strongly influenced by Dante's Divina commedia, celebrates in allegorical form the triumph of the Divine over all things and the ultimate redemption of man from the dominion of the senses.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Basel, 1496 (Lat. works only); fuller ed. [by J. Herold] (4 vols. bound in 1, ib., 1554). A. Hortis (ed.), Scritti inediti di Francesco Petrarca (Trieste, 1874). Crit. text in the Edizione nazionale delle opere di Francesco Petrarca by various edd. (Florence, 1926 ff.). Crit. edd. of Prose, with Italian translation, by G. Martellotti and others (Letteratura Italiana, Storia e Testi, vii; 1955), incl. 'De Vita Solitaria', pp. 286–591, 'De Otio Religioso', pp. 594–603, and 'De Remediis Utriusque Fortunae', pp. 606–45; also of 'De Otio Religioso' by G. Rotondi (S.T., cxcv; 1958). Eng. tr. of his sonnets by W. D. Foulke (London, 1915) and J. Auslander (ib., 1931), and of his 'De Vita Solitaria' by J. Zeitlin (Urbana, Ill., 1924). The fullest account in Eng. is E. H. R. Tatham, Francesco Petrarca . . . His Life and Correspondence (2 vols., 1925–6). The very extensive literature includes general studies by F. 'de Sanctis (Naples, 1869; ed. B. *Croce, 1907; also ed. among de Sanctis's works, by N. Gallo, Turin, 1952, and E. Bonara, Bari, 1955), L. Geiger (Leipzig, 1874), G. Koerting (ib., 1878), J. H. Robinson (New York–London, 1898; with Eng. tr. of extracts of his letters), H. C. Hollway-Calthorp (London, 1907), Maud F. Jerrold (ib., 1909), L. Tonelli (Milan, 1930), H. W. Eppelsheimer (Frankfurt a.Main, 1934) and U. Bosco (Turin, 1946; revised ed., Bari, 1961). P. de Nolhac, Pétrarque et l'humanisme (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes-Études. Sciences Philologiques et Historiques, xci; 1892; revised ed., Bibliothèque Littéraire de la Renaissance, Nouvelle Série, i and ii; 1907). J. H. Whitfield, Petrarch and the Renaissance (1943). Collection of essays by M. A. Potter (posthumous, Harvard Studies in Romance Languages, iii; 1917) and E. H. Wilkins (Chicago, 1961, and other works of this author), as well as a large number of commemorative volumes. A. S. Bernardo, Petrarch, Scipio and the 'Africa' (Baltimore [1962]). The Catalogue of the Petrarch Collection Bequeathed by W. Fiske [to the Cornell University Library], compiled by Mary Fowler (1916), contains extensive bibl. to date. E. Carrara in Enciclopedia italiana, xxvii (1935), pp. 8–23, s.v. 'Petrarca', with full bibl.; P. G. Ricci in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1288–99, s.v. 'Petrarca', with more recent bibl.

PETRI, OLAUS (1493–1552), Swedish Reformer. The son of a blacksmith of Örebro, he was educated at *Wittenberg and, returning home imbued with strict *Lutheran views, was made master of the chapter school at Strengnäs, and later appointed city clerk at Stockholm (1524). Gaining the favour of Gustavus Vasa, by whom he was later made chancellor (1531), he became the leading exponent of doctrinal change in Sweden. After his marriage in 1525 he produced a continuous stream of tracts, pamphlets, and a book of homilies, which were widely read. In 1529 he published the first Swedish service book, Een Handbock pää Swensko. The latter years of his life (after 1539) were spent in retirement.

His brother, LAURENTIUS PETRI (1499–1573), was also a leading Reformer. He took a prominent part in the translation of the NT into Swedish (1526) and was appointed the first Protestant Abp. of *Upsala (1531).

Collected Works (4 vols., Upsala, 1914–17). The Manual of Olavus Petri (ed. E. E. Yelverton, Church Historical Society, 1953). Lives by R. Holm (Upsala, 1917), H. Schück (Stockholm, 1893) and R. Murray (ib., 1952). S. Ingebrand, Olavus Petris Reformatoriska Askådning (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Studia Doctrinae Christianae Upsaliensia, i; Lund, 1964). J. E. Berggren, 'Olaus Petris reformatoriska grundtankar' in Upsala Universitets Årsskrift (1899), pp. 1–17. C. J. I. Bergendoff, Olaus Petri and the Ecclesiastical Transformation in Sweden (New York, 1928).

PETROBRUSIANS. See Peter de Bruys.

PETROCK, St. (6th cent.) also 'Pedrog', 'the captain of Cornish saints' (T. *Fuller). He is said to have been the son of a Welsh chieftain who after studying in Ireland (where he is said to have instructed St. *Kevin) made his way to Cornwall and founded monasteries at Padstow (i.e. 'Petrockstowe') and Bodmin. It is almost impossible to disentangle the facts of his life from the extravagant embellishments of later times. In 1177 his relics were stolen from Bodmin by a Breton canon and given to the abbey of St.-Méen, but Henry II secured their restoration. Many churches in Cornwall and Devon bear his dedication; and he is also venerated in Brittany as St. Perreux. He is commonly represented with a stag. Feast day, 4 June.

14th cent. life by John of Tynemouth repr. in AA.SS., Jun. I (1695), pp. 400–2. P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Vies et miracles de S. Pétroc' in Anal. Boll., lxxiv (1956), pp. 131–88 and 470–96, incl. texts and further refs. G. H. Doble, Saint Petrock, Abbot and Confessor ('Cornish Saints' Series, No. 11 [c. 1929]), with Eng. tr. of Life in MS. Bibl. Nat. Lat. 9889. C. W. Boase in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 326 f.

PETRONIUS, St. (early 5th cent.), Bp. of *Bologna. He was perhaps the son of Petronius, a praefectus praetorio in Gaul (402–8). He appears to have made a pilgrimage to Palestine in early life, visiting the monks and holy places, and after becoming Bp. of Bologna (c. 432) to have erected a church, dedicated to St. Stephen, modelled on the *Constantinian buildings in *Jerusalem. Various extant writings have been assigned to him, mostly incorrectly. His cultus at Bologna rapidly developed after the appearance of a historically worthless 'Life' in the 12th cent., and in 1141 his relics were discovered. The present church of St. Petronius, a fine Gothic structure, was begun in 1390; the latest work is of the 17th cent. Feast day, 4 Oct.

*Gennadius, De Viris Illustribus, xli. The 12th-cent. life with later material is pr. in AA.SS., Oct. II (1768), pp. 422–470, incl. good introduction. Ital. tr., with other docc., by Maria Corti (Bologna, 1962). Full study by F. Lanzoni (Rome, 1907). Id., 'Le fonti della Vita S. Petronii' in Romagna, vii (1910), pp. 269–77. F. H. B. Daniell in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 328 f.

PEW. At first the customary postures of the worshippers in the W., as to this day in E. churches, were standing and kneeling, and no seats were provided for the congregation. Later on, as a concession to the infirm, stone seats were attached to the walls, or, more rarely, to the piers of the nave; and by the end of the 13th cent. many English churches appear to have been equipped also with a number of fixed wooden benches. These were often known as 'pews' (probably derived from the Latin 'podium') and meaning a seat raised up above floor-level. Such pews, even in village churches, were sometimes elaborately carved, at the ends and on the back, with figures of saints, symbols of the Passion of Christ, or grotesque animals. As fine a set as any in England is to be seen at Fressingfield, in Suffolk.

A. Heales, The History and Law of Church Seats or Pews (2 vols., 1872). J. C. Cox, Bench Ends in English Churches (1916). G. W. O. Addleshaw–F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 86–98. See also J. M. *Neale, The History of Pews (Paper read before the *Cambridge Camden Society, 22 Nov. 1841; 1841; Suppl., 1842; ed. 3, incl. suppl. and additions, 1843).

PFAFF FRAGMENTS OF IRENAEUS. Four fragments first publd. in S. *Maffei's Giornale de' letterati d'Italia in 1713 by C. M. Pfaff (d. 1760), who alleged that he had found them in the Turin library and believed them to be written by St. *Irenaeus. Among other subjects they dealt with 'true Gnosis' and the 'new oblation' (i.e. the Eucharist). Though their Irenaean authorship was constantly challenged from the outset, they were regularly quoted and discussed down to the end of the 19th cent., when A. *Harnack showed convincingly that they were a fabrication of Pfaff himself. He proved that they made use of the (late) *Textus Receptus of the NT and of the defective printed editions of the Greek text of Irenaeus current in the early 18th cent., as well as reflecting Pfaff's own theological tenets, e.g. the *Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist.

A Harnack, Die Pfaff'schen Irenäus-Fragmente als Fälschungen Pfaffs nachgewiesen (T.U., xx, Hft. 3; 1900), a magisterial monograph. On Pfaff himself, cf. E. Preuschen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 233–7, with useful bibl.

PFLUG, JULIUS VON (1499–1564), Bp. of Naumburg. Of Saxon descent, he was educated at Leipzig, *Bologna, and Padua, and appointed Provost of Zeitz in 1522 and Dean of Meissen in 1537. His humanistic sympathies made him eager for peace with the Protestants and to that end he took part in several conferences, e.g. at Leipzig in 1534 and at *Ratisbon in 1541. He indicated his willingness even to tolerate a married clergy and communion in both kinds. In 1541 he was elected Bp. of Naumburg-Zeitz, but as the Elector Johann Friedrich of Saxony refused to acknowledge him, he was unable to take possession of his see till after the Elector's defeat at Mühlberg in 1547. The 'Interim of *Augsburg' (1548; q.v.) was largely Pflug's work. His rule was much disturbed by the Protestantism in his diocese. In his theology he was much influenced by G. *Contarini.

Correspondence, ed. J. V. Pollet, O.P. (Leiden, 1969 ff.). Schottenloher, ii (1935), p. 138 (Nos. 17222–17232b). G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 260–3; L. Cristiani in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1366–9, both s.v. See also bibl. to Augsburg (Interim of).

PHANAR, The. The official residence and court of the *Oecumenical Patriarch at *Constantinople. It is in the Greek quarter of the city, on the Golden Horn.

PHARISEES (Heb. פְּרוּשִׁין, 'separated ones'; Gk. Φαρισαῖοι). A Jewish religious party. The name occurs in *Josephus and in rabbinic sources, as well as in the NT. It is, however, far from certain that the Perushin, who are attacked in rabbinic sources as a separatist sect, are to be identified with the Pharisaioi of Josephus and the NT.

Josephus (Ant. XIII. v. 9) records the existence of the Pharisees as a distinct group in the time of Jonathan *Maccabaeus, c. 145 B.C., though some scholars hold that the term is here applied retrospectively. They opposed John Hyrcanus I (135–104 B.C.) for religious reasons and instigated a revolt against Alexander Jannaeus (103–76 B.C.), but they were favoured by Alexander's widow, Alexandra (76–67 B.C.). They refused to swear allegiance to *Herod on one occasion, but were respected by him. Unlike the *Sadducees, who tried to apply the Mosaic Law precisely as it was given, the Pharisees allowed some interpretation of it to make it more applicable to different situations, and they regarded these oral interpretations as of the same level of importance as the Law itself. They exerted their influence through the development of education, and fostered synagogue worship. They gradually secured a large following among the common people, who admired their austerity and shared their hatred of the pagan rulers and the sacerdotal caste.

In the Gospels the Pharisees appear as the chief opponents of the Lord, whom they attacked, e.g., for forgiving sins, breaking the Sabbath, and consorting with sinners. Christ repeatedly denounced their purely external observance of the Law, their multitude of formalistic precepts which even they themselves could not keep (e.g. Mt. 23. 13–36), and their self-righteousness (Lk. 18. 9–14). During the Passion they remained in the background, when their place was taken by the Sadducees. After the Resurrection they appear less hostile to the nascent Church than the Sadducees; they share its belief in the resurrection and a retribution in the next world, in angels, in human freedom and Divine Providence; and it was a Pharisee, *Gamaliel, who publicly defended the Apostles before the Sanhedrin (Acts 5. 34–40).

After the fall of *Jerusalem (A.D. 70) the Pharisees disappear from history; but their influence survived in the teaching of the Rabbis and the *Mishnah. Several modern scholars have questioned whether the Pharisees depicted in the Gospels are representative of the party as a whole.

J. *Wellhausen, Die Pharisäer und die Sadducäer (1874). A. T. Robinson, The Pharisees and Jesus (The Stone Lectures for 1915–16, Studies in Theology, 1920). L. Finkelstein, The Pharisees. The Sociological Background of their Faith (2 vols., Philadelphia, Pa., 1938; ed. 3, 1962). I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels (2 vols., 1917–24). A. Finkel, The Pharisees and the Teacher of Nazareth. A Study of their Background, their Halachic and Midrashic Teachings, the Similarities and Differences (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Spätjudentums und Urchristentums, iv; Leiden, 1964). J. W. Bowker, Jesus and the Pharisees (Cambridge, 1973). W. Foerster, 'Der Ursprung des Pharisäismus' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiv (1935), pp. 35–51. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, ii (ed. 4, 1907), pp. 449–75, with bibl. pp. 447–9. T. W. Manson, 'Sadducee and Pharisee—The Origin and Significance of the Names', in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxii (1938), pp. 144–59, esp. pp. 153–9. A. E. F. Sieffert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 264–92, s.v. 'Pharisäer und Sadducäer'; D. Eaton in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 821–9, s.v.; A. Michel and J. Le Moyne, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 1022–1115, s.v.; R. Meyer–H. F. Weiss in T.W.B., ix ('1969'), pp. 11–51, s.v. φαρισαῖος, with full reff.

PHELONION (Gk. φελόνιον). The E. form of the *chasuble. In shape it is somewhat like the W. Gothic vestment, but is gathered up in front instead of at the sides, so that when in use it looks more like a *cope.

Braun, L.G., pp. 234–9.

PHENOMENALISM. (1) The belief that what we term physical objects have no existence except as experienced as 'sense data' in men (or animals) who perceive them.

(2) The theory that such objects, though they may in reality exist, can be known only as the experiences ('sense data') which they occasion in us.

(3) As used by E. *Caird and N. Kemp Smith, the theory of knowledge expounded in, or implied by, The Critique of Pure Reason of I. *Kant, on the basis of his fundamental distinction between appearance and reality.

PHENOMENOLOGY (Gk. τὰ φαινόμενα, 'appearance', and λογία, 'discourse'), lit. 'the science of phenomena'. The term was occasionally employed by I. *Kant in its literal sense. By G. W. F. *Hegel, whose first large philosophical treatise bore the title Phänomenologie des Geistes (1807), it was applied to the description of the stages whereby the mind (Geist) develops from naïve consciousness (for Hegel, sense perception) to absolute knowledge. In recent times, however, it has been used esp. of the philosophical doctrines of Edmund Husserl (1859–1938) and his school. Acc. to Husserl phenomenology is a descriptive science concerned with the discovery and analysis of essences and essential meanings. It professes to exclude all metaphysical questions; but much in Husserl's first elaboration of the science tended towards a *Platonic realism. These Platonist elements were developed by his disciples and used e.g. by Max Scheler and Johannes Hessen for the defence of a Christian metaphysic of an *Augustinian (non-Thomistic) type. Husserl himself in his later writings embraced a form of Subjective Idealism.

Husserl, who already employed the phenomenological method in parts of the Logische Untersuchungen (2 vols. in 3, 1900; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1970), developed it in academic lectures in the years 1900–13 and systematically elaborated it in the programmatic Ideen zu einer reinen Phänomenologie und phänomenologischen Philosophie (1913; Eng. tr. by W. R. Boyce Gibson, Ideas, 1931). The chief organ of the Phenomenological Movement was the Jahrbuch für Philosophie und phänomenologische Forschung (11 vols., 1913–30). Phenomenology was the most influential movement in German Philosophy in the period 1910–33; but Husserl's Jewish ancestry brought it into disrepute under the Nazis and he had few followers at the time of his death. In the succeeding period, however, it has enjoyed renewed favour and the American periodical, Philosophy and Phenomenological Research (1940 ff.) was founded by M. Farber as a successor to the Jahrbuch. See also Existentialism.

Until his last years Husserl showed reluctance to publish. His later writings include Vorlesungen zur Phänomenologie des inneren Zeitbewusstseins (ed. M. *Heidegger, 1928; Eng. tr., The Hague, 1964), Formale und transzendentale Logik (1929; Eng. tr., ib., 1969) and Erfahrung und Urteil (1939). His works are being ed. from the Husserl Archiv at Louvain under the direction of H. L. Van Breda, Husserliana (The Hague, 1950 ff.); Eng. tr. of Cartesianische Meditationen from vol. i, by D. Cairns (The Hague, 1960) and of Die Idee der Phänomenologie from vol. ii, by W. P. Alston and G. Nakhnikian (ib., 1964). Among Scheler's chief works were Der Formalismus in der Ethik und die materiale Wertethik (2 pts., 1913–16), Vom Ewigen im Menschen (collected essays, 1921; Eng. tr., 1960), Die Wissensformen und die Gesellschaft (1926) and Die Stellung des Menschen im Kosmos (1928). J. Hessen, Augustins Metaphysik der Erkenntnis (1931). A. Metzger, Phänomenologie und Metaphysik (1933). M. Farber, The Foundation of Phenomenology. Edmund Husserl and the Quest for a Rigorous Science of Philosophy (Cambridge, Mass., 1943). S. Strasser, Het Zielsegrip in de Metaphysische en empirische Psychologie (Louvain–Nijmegen, 1950; Eng. tr. from German, Pittsburgh–Louvain, 1957); id., Das Gemüt. Grundgedanken zu einer phänomenologischen Philosophie und Theorie des menschlichen Gefühlslebens (Utrecht, 1956). H. Spiegelberg, The Phenomenological Movement. A Historical Introduction (Phaenomenologica, v–vi; The Hague, 1960, with supplement, 1965). J. J. Kockelmans, A First Introduction to Husserl's Phenomenology (Pittsburgh–Louvain, 1967); id., Edmund Husserl's Phenomenological Psychology. A Historico-Critical Study (ib., 1967), and other works of this author. E. Duplacy, La Philosophie de Max Scheler (2 vols., 1959); J. R. Staude, Max Scheler 1874–1928. An Intellectual Portrait (New York–London, 1967).

PHILADELPHIA. A city of the Roman province of Asia. It was the seat of one of the '*Seven Churches of Asia', addressed in Rev. 2–3, and was there commended for its faithfulness and given promises for the future (3. 7–13). The circumstances in which this Church was founded are unknown. In the 14th cent. the city was a Christian stronghold and withstood several sieges by the Turks.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 391–412, with notes, p. 446. Id. in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 830–2, s.v.

PHILADELPHIANS. A religious sect which flourished at the end of the 17th cent. Their doctrines derived ultimately from J. *Boehme, whose notions were eagerly adopted by John Pordage (1607–81), rector of Bradfield, Berks. There gathered round Pordage, who was ejected from his living by the *Triers in 1655, but reinstated in 1660, a group of followers who shared his enthusiasm for Boehme, the chief of them being a Mrs. Jane Leade (1623–1704), who from her childhood had experienced visions which from 1670 she recorded in a diary entitled A Fountain of Gardens. In 1670 the group was organized as the Philadelphian Society for the Advancement of Piety and Divine Philosophy, the term 'Society' being preferred to 'Church' as its members were to retain their respective ecclesiastical allegiances. They professed a kind of nature pantheism, imbued with esoteric and pseudo-mystical teachings, and held that their souls were immediately illuminated by the Holy Spirit. Its headquarters later removed from Bradfield to London. A certain Francis Lee (1661–1719), who had been a Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, but refused the oaths on William III's accession, was much impressed by Mrs. Leade's writings, which he had come across in Holland, and, becoming an ardent disciple, was instrumental in spreading Philadelphian doctrines on the Continent. A formal confession of belief was drawn up in 1703; but the Society rapidly declined after Mrs. Leade's death in 1704.

A number of Mrs. Jane Leade's works were reissued in the 19th cent., incl. The Wars of David and other works, repr. 1816 and 1886; The Revelation of Revelations, repr. 1884, and The Wonders of God's Creation, repr. 1887. W. T. Whitley in H.E.R.E., ix (1917), p. 836 f., s.v., with bibl.

PHILARET, THEODORE NIKITICH ROMANOV (c. 1553–1633), Patr. of Moscow and founder of the Romanov dynasty. Under his cousin, Theodore I (d. 1598), the last Tsar of the House of Rurik, he fought against the Swedes in 1590, and in 1593–4 conducted negotiations with the Emp. Rudolph II. Banished into a monastery by Boris Godunov (1598–1605), Theodore's successor, he was released by Pseudo-Dimitri I, who made him Metropolitan of Rostov. In 1610 he was imprisoned by the Poles. On their expulsion his son Michael was elected Tsar (1613), but Philaret was not freed until the truce of Deulino in 1619. In the same year he was made patriarch and until his death remained the virtual ruler of Russia, introducing measures to stop the migration of the serfs from the land into the steppes and reorganizing the army. A zealous reformer, he made it his aim to establish a seminary in each diocese and to encourage the study of theology. He also founded the Patriarchal Library.

R. N. Bain, The First Romanovs (1905), pp. 47–61. P. Pascal, Avvakum et les débuts du Raskol. La crise religieuse au XVIIe siècle en Russie (Paris thesis, Ligugé, 1938), esp. pp. 25–30. R. N. Bain in E.B. (ed. 11), xxi (1911), p. 373 f., s.v. See also bibl. to Russia, Christianity in.

PHILARET DROZDOV (1782–1867), Russian theologian and Metropolitan of Moscow. Educated at the Trinity Monastery, near Moscow, he became lecturer at its academy in 1803, and in 1808 took the monastic habit. In the same year he was called to the academy at St. Petersburg as professor of philosophy, and subsequently taught most branches of theology at the Ecclesiastical Academy. His rise to high office took place very rapidly. In 1818 he became a member of the Holy Synod, in 1820 Bp. of Jaroslav, and in 1821 he was transferred to Moscow with the title of Archbishop, which was changed into that of Metropolitan in 1826. He was an exemplary bishop, famous for his sermons and the wise administration of his diocese as well as for his profound influence in Church and state. He was the author of many theological works, but his best-known writing is his Christian Catechism of the Orthodox Catholic Eastern Greco-Russian Church (1823). It is composed of three parts, dealing with (1) the Nicene Creed, (2) the Lord's Prayer and the Beatitudes, and (3) the Decalogue. It underwent several redactions through the attempt of the procurator, Protasov, an opponent of the infiltration of *Lutheran teaching into the Russian Church, to eliminate its supposedly Protestant elements which Philaret had imbibed in his youth esp. through the works of T. Prokopovich (1681–1736). Though its doctrinal authority has been contested by other sections of the E. Church, it had a great influence on 19th cent. Russian theology and has frequently been commented on.

Eng. tr. of his Christian Catechism conveniently repr. from the trans. of R. W. Blackmore in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, ii (1877), pp. 445–542. Fr. tr. of Selected Sermons by A. Serpinet (3 vols., Paris, 1866); Germ. tr. of his Christian Catechism by Dr. Blumenthal (Frankfurt a.M., 1872). C. Kern, 'Philarète, métropolite de Moscou. Cinquante ans de gloire épiscopale' in Istina, v (1958), pp. 133–60, 261–82, 389–414. M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1376–95, with bibl. (mainly Russian). See also bibl. to Russia, Christianity in.

PHILASTER, St. (d. c. 397), more correctly 'Filaster', Bp. of Brescia and anti-heretical writer. After travel undertaken for the purpose of preaching the Gospel and of confounding the *Arians and other heretics, he became Bp. of Brescia towards the end of the 4th cent. About 385 he wrote a treatise designed to refute 28 Jewish and 128 Christian heresies. This work, which may have been partly based on the 'Syntagma' of *Hippolytus, suffers from clumsy arrangement and a certain lack of proportion. Thus, the number of those stigmatized includes not only such notable heretics as *Simon Magus but also persons whose sole aberration was to believe that the stars occupied a fixed place in the sky instead of being set in position every evening by God. Despite its limitations, however, the book seems to have filled a real need in the W., and was freely used by St. *Augustine. He was succeeded in his see by St. *Gaudentius. Feast day, 18 July.

Liber de Haeresibus first ed. by J. Sichard (Basle, 1528); later edd. by J. A. *Fabricius (Hamburg, 1721), P. Galeardi (Brescia, 1738; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xii, 1111–1302), by F. Marx (C.S.E.L., 1898) and by F. Heylen in C.C., ix (1957), pp. 207–324, with reff. R. A. *Lipsius, Zur Quellenkritik des Epiphanios (1865); id., Die Quellen der ältesten Ketzergeschichte neu untersucht (1875), pp. 91–137. P. C. Juret, 'Étude grammaticale sur le latin de S. Filastrius' in Romanische Forschungen, xix (1906), pp. 130–320. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 481–5.

PHILEAS, St. (d. c. 307), Bp. of Thmuis in Lower Egypt. Of noble birth and great wealth, he was imprisoned, tried before the prefect, Culcianus, and executed at *Alexandria. A Roman official, Philoromus, suffered at the same time. A letter to his flock from his dungeon (in *Eusebius, H.E., VIII. x) and the acta of his trial survive. The authenticity of the acta has in the past been challenged. Recently, a further almost contemporary text of his defence has been found among the *Bodmer papyri (q.v.). Feast day, 4 Feb.

The chief authority is Eusebius, H.E., VIII. ix. 7 f. and x (with additions in *Rufinus's Lat. version). Epistle (from Eusebius, l.c.) and acta pr. in R. Knopf–G. Krüger (edd.), Ausgewählte Martyrerakten (Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, N.F., iii; 1929), pp. 111–16. Lat. version pr. in T. *Ruinart, O.S.B. (ed.), Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera (Paris, 1689), pp. 323–5. The Bodmer papyrus text of his apology ed. V. Martin, Papyrus Bodmer XX (Geneva, 1964). F. Halkin, S.J.,

'L' "Apologie" du martyr Philéas de Thmuis (Papyrus Bodmer XX) et les Actes latins de Philéas et Philoromus' in Anal. Boll., lxxxi (1963), pp. 5–27, incl. texts. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Les Martyrs d'Égypte', ib., xl (1922), pp. 5–154 and 299–364, esp. pp. 299–314. M. Simonetti, Studi agiografici (1955), pp. 109–32 ('Sugli Atti di Filea e Filoromo'). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 247–9. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 703–9, s.v. 'Philéas et Philorome', with bibl.

PHILEMON. The recipient of St. *Paul's brief epistle of that name. He was a Christian of Colossae or the neighbourhood, whose slave, *Onesimus, had run away, and somehow came to meet St. Paul, either in *Rome or, if G. S. Duncan is right, in *Ephesus. St. Paul sent Onesimus, now a Christian and therefore a 'beloved brother', back to his master with this epistle, which was a tactful plea for his forgiveness. The letter was undoubtedly written and sent with the Ep. to the *Colossians. Acc. to tradition, Philemon and his wife, Appia, were martyred at Colossae. Feast day, 22 Nov.

Modern commentaries on the Ep. include those of J. B. *Lightfoot (London, 1875, with Col., pp. 369–412), M. R. Vincent (I.C.C., 1897, with Phil., pp. 171–94), M. *Dibelius (Hb.N.T. Lfg. 21, 1911; ed. 2, xii, 1927; ed. 3 by H. Greeven, 1953, with Col. and Eph., pp. 101–8), E. Lohmeyer (K.E.K., ix, Hft. 2, ed. 8, 1930, with Phil. and Col., pp. 171–92, with bibl. p. 194; ed. 14, 1968, pp. 261–88), E. F. Scott (Moffatt Comm., 1930, with Col. and Eph., pp. 95–115), and C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge, 1957, with Col., pp. 1–42 and 140–9). J. Knox, Philemon among the Letters of Paul. A New View of its Place and Importance (Chicago, 1935; ed. 2, 1959; London, 1960). E. R. Goodenough, 'Paul and Onesimus' in H.T.R., xxii (1929), pp. 181–3. G. S. Duncan, St. Paul's Ephesian Ministry (1929), pp. 72–5. P. Benoît, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 1204–11, s.v., with extensive bibl.

PHILIBERT, St. (d. 684), founder and first abbot of *Jumièges. Under the influence of St. *Ouen he took the monastic habit at Rebais, of which he became abbot. Led by the refractory character of his monks to retire to Neustria, he here founded the monastery of Jumièges on some land given him by Clovis II. In 674 his reproval of Ebroin, the mayor of the palace, for gross injustice was followed by his expulsion, and he retired first to Poitiers and later to the island of Her (now Noirmoutier, orig. 'Hermonasterium'), where he established another monastery. Feast day, 20 August.

The principal source is the 9th-cent. life by the monk Ermentarius, pr. in AA.SS., Aug. IV (1739), pp. 75–80; also ed. R. Poupardin, Monuments de l'histoire des abbayes de Saint-Philibert (Collection de textes pour servir à l'etude et à l'enseignement de l'histoire, xxxviii; 1905), pp. 3–18, with full discussion; also ed. W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, v (1910), pp. 583–604, with discussion, pp. 568–83. 'Vita et Miracula in Translationibus' also by Ermentarius in AA.SS., loc. cit., p. 68, in R. Poupardin, op. cit., p. 1 f., and ed. Levison, op. cit., pp. 604–6. The much later 'Liber Miraculorum' also in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 81–95, and in R. Poupardin, op. cit., pp. 19–70. Modern life by L. Jaud (Paris, 1910). See also bibl. to Jumièges.

PHILIPS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT. (1) PHILIP THE APOSTLE is mentioned in the Synoptic Gospels and in Acts 1. 13 as one of the Twelve, but Jn. alone supplies any details. Jn. 1. 43–51, where he is described as 'from *Bethsaida', describes how he obeyed the call of Jesus and then persuaded *Nathanael to appear before Jesus. In Jn. 6. 5–7 Philip, present at the feeding of the 5,000, observes that two hundred pennyworth of bread would not provide even a scanty meal for those assembled. Philip is again referred to in Jn. 12. 21 f., and Jn. 14. 8 f. records his request to Jesus, 'Show us the Father', and its answer. The Apostle's subsequent career is obscure, and in legend is confused with that of Philip the Evangelist. *Polycrates of Ephesus connects him with Asia and declares that he died, apparently from natural causes, at Hierapolis; but other traditions describe him as having suffered crucifixion so that, in medieval art, his symbol—when not loaves, as suggested by Jn. 6—is a tall cross. Feast day in the E, 14 Nov.; in the W (jointly with St. *James the Less), 1 May, transferred in the RC Church to 11 May in 1955 and to 3 May in 1969.

(2) PHILIP THE EVANGELIST was one of the Seven '*Deacons' whose appointment is recorded in Acts 6. He preached in Samaria and was successful in winning over the Samaritans from belief in the sorceries of *Simon Magus to Christianity (Acts 8. 5–13). After the conversion and baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch Philip went on a missionary tour from Ashdod northwards and settled at Caesarea (Acts 8. 26–40). Here at a later date he entertained St. *Paul (Acts 21. 8). Uncertainty shrouds the latter years of Philip. One tradition makes him Bp. of Tralles, in Lydia. Feast day in E., 11 Oct.; in W., 6 June.

(3) PHILIP THE TETRARCH. One of the sons of *Herod the Great, he was ruler from 4 B.C. to A.D. 34 of 'the region of Ituraea and Trachonitis' (Lk. 3. 1). Acc. to *Josephus (Antiq. XVIII. iv. 6), he ruled with moderation, simplicity and good sense.

PHILIP, Gospel of. A *Gnostic treatise preserved in *Coptic among the papyri found at *Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1945–6, in the same codex as the Coptic Gospel of *Thomas. The work is a series of reflections on the quest for salvation, loosely linked by catch-phrases; it contains no narrative, and only a few incidents and sayings attributed to Christ. It shows marked Jewish influence, but also traces of Greek philosophy, and reflects *Valentinian doctrine in valuing the marriage bond as symbolizing a man's union with his true self. It dates from the 2nd, or perhaps the 3rd, cent., and is apparently unconnected with the Gospel of Philip quoted by *Epiphanius (Haer., xxvi. 13).

Photographic ed. by P. Lahib, Coptic Gnostic Papyri in the Coptic Museum at Old Cairo, i (Cairo, 1956), plates 134–45. The best ed. is that of J. E. Ménard (Paris, 1967), with Fr. tr. and reff. to earlier lit. Eng. tr., with introd. and comm., by R. McL. Wilson (London, 1962). H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 194–9; Eng. tr., i, pp. 271–8.

PHILIP THE ARABIAN, Roman Emperor from 244 to 249. He celebrated in 248 with the utmost magnificence the thousandth anniversary of Rome's foundation, but was harassed by invasions and revolutions, and met his death when fighting against *Decius in 249. *Eusebius records that Philip was a Christian and gives an edifying story of his submission to a bishop (later identified with *Babylas of Antioch) who debarred him from church until he had made confession of his sins. But Philip was probably commended by Christian writers simply because they detested his rival Decius, though a tradition that *Origen addressed a letter to him and another to his wife may testify to Philip's sympathetic interest in Christianity.

The ancient authorities include Eusebius, H.E., vi. 34, and *Zosimus, H.E., i. 19–22. H. M. D. Parker, A History of the Roman World from A.D. 138 to 337 (1935), pp. 150–7. E. Stein in P.W., x (pt. 1; 1917), cols. 755–70, s.v. 'Julius (Philippus) 386'.

PHILIP II (1527–98), King of Spain and Naples (1556), and of Portugal (1580). His marriage in 1554 to *Mary Tudor (d. 1558) gave him a short-lived influence in English affairs. The main object of his reign was the defence of the Catholic faith against Protestantism, a task he undertook in the interests of religion as well as of royal absolutism. This double motive sometimes brought him into conflict with the Papacy and the Reformers alike. In the beginning of his reign he had a quarrel with Pope *Paul IV, who was forced to give in, and a war with the French, who were defeated. In Spain he suppressed *Lutheranism, mainly through the instrument of the *Inquisition, and subdued the Moriscoes. The Turks were defeated in the battle of *Lepanto (1571) and Portugal conquered in 1580. In the Low Countries he was less successful and, chiefly through the reckless cruelty of Alva, lost the northern provinces in his attempt to uproot Calvinism. Still less successful were his efforts in *Elizabeth I's reign to regain England for Catholicism, which culminated in the destruction of the Armada (1588) and the decline of Spanish sea power. His ambitions in France, which he hoped to save from Protestantism by putting his daughter Isabella on the throne, were frustrated by the conversion of *Henry IV. He was undoubtedly a man of great industry and of real devotion to duty, his religion, his country, and his family, but also cold and suspicious, and lacking in the gentler qualities of mercy and forgiveness. His character has in turn been blackened and whitewashed by historians and poets (Schiller, 'Don Carlos') according to their prejudices. The Escurial is a fitting expression of his personality.

Much of his correspondence has been publd. in the Colección de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, esp. vols. ii–vi, xxvii–xliii, l f., lxviii, and lxxxvii–cii (Madrid, 1843–92), passim; incl. the Correspondencia de Felipe II con sus embajadores en la corte de Inglaterra 1558 á 1584 as vols. lxxxvii and lxxxix–xcii, 1886–8; detailed list in L. Pfandl, see below, pp. 558–60. W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Philip II, King of Spain (2 vols., 1855, vol. 3, 1858). H. Forneron, Histoire de Philippe II (4 vols., 1880–2). M. A. S. Hume, Philip II of Spain ('Foreign Statesmen', 1897). C. Bratli, Filip II af Spanien (Copenhagen, 1909; Fr. tr., 1912). L. Pfandl, Philipp II. Gemälde eines Lebens und einer Zeit (1938), with full bibl. M. Tomás, Felipe II, rey de España y monarca del universo (Saragossa, 1939). R. Altamira y Crevea, Ensayo sobre Felipe II hombre de estado: su psicología general y su individualidad humana (Publicaciones del Instituto de Historia, Ser. 1, num. xvi; Mexico, 1950). J. Casson, La Vie de Philippe II (Vies des hommes illustres, No. xxix; 1927). W. T. Walsh, Philip II (New York and London, 1938). J. H. Mariéjol, Master of the Armada: the Life and Reign of Philip II of Spain (Eng. tr. from Fr.; 1933). R. B. Merriman, The Rise of the Spanish Empire in the Old World and the New, iv (1934). J. Lynch, 'Philip II and the Papacy' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, xi (1961), pp. 23–42. Id., Spain under the Hapsburgs, i (Oxford, 1964), pp. 167–348, passim; J. H. Elliott, Imperial Spain (1963), pp. 242–85. H. G. Koenigsberger, 'The Statecraft of Philip II' in European Studies Review, i (1971), pp. 1–21.

PHILIP (1504–67), Landgraf of Hesse. He was the ablest of the German princes who supported M. *Luther. Declared of age in 1518, he led the suppression of the *Peasants' Revolt (1525) and, though there seems to have been no popular sympathy for it, determined to introduce the Reformation into Hesse. In 1527 he founded the university of *Marburg as a school for Protestant theologians. Two years later he signed the Protest of *Speyer and summoned the Conference of Marburg, which failed, however, to bring about an understanding between M. Luther and H. *Zwingli on the subject of the Real Presence in the Eucharist. Philip's policy of uniting the Protestant princes was more successful. In 1530 the *Schmalkaldic League was founded with himself and the Elector of Saxony as leaders, but the dissension between the two Protestant parties largely hampered its striking power. This, as well as the whole cause of Protestantism, was further impaired by Philip's bigamous marriage (1540), which had been approved by Luther. Seriously compromised among his own followers, Philip now made peace with the Emperor and thereby lost his leadership of the Protestant party. His policy during the next years was wavering, resulting in the Schmalkalden War (1546–7), at the end of which he was imprisoned. Set free in 1552, he devoted his remaining years to the work of reunion between Catholics and Protestants.

Philip of Hesse figures prominently in all works on the *Lutheran Reformation. Festschrift zum Gedächtnis Philipps des Grossmütigen ed. Verein für hessische Geschichte und Landeskunde (Cassel, 1904). W. W. Rockwell, Die Doppelehe des Landgrafen Philipp von Hessen (1904). H. Grundmann, Landgraf Philipp von Hessen auf dem Augsburger Reichstag 1530 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, No. 176; 1959). R. Hauswirth, Landgraf Philipp von Hessen und Zwingli (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, xxxv; 1968). Brief sketch by H. J. Hillerbrand (Reformation Essays and Studies, i; St. Louis, Mo., 1967). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iii (1936), pp. 190–8 (Nos. 30326–30483). T. Kolde in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 296–316; W. Heinemeyer in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), col. 332 f., both with bibl.

PHILIP NERI, St. (1515–95), the 'Apostle of Rome'. Son of a Florentine notary, he was educated by the *Dominicans of San Marco and later became a business apprentice. Resolving to give himself entirely to God, he went to Rome in 1533. Here he undertook the education of the two sons of a Florentine countryman, leading at the same time a very austere life. In 1535 he began to study philosophy and theology, but after three years sold his books and gave himself up to works of charity and instruction, spending the nights in prayer, mostly in the *catacomb of St. Sebastiano on the *Appian Way. Here he experienced in 1544 the ecstasy which is believed to have miraculously enlarged his heart. In 1548 he became the co-founder of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Trinity for the care of pilgrims and convalescents which, in the year of the *Jubilee, 1575, assisted 145,000 pilgrims. In 1551, after being ordained, he went to live in a community of priests at San Girolamo, where his confessional soon became the centre of his apostolate and where he held spiritual conferences for men and boys often combined with visits to the Seven Churches. From these activities, which attracted more and more priests to the community, sprang the Congregation of the Oratory (see Oratorians), probably so called from the room at San Girolamo where the meetings were held. By 1575, when the Oratory was finally approved by *Gregory XIII, Philip Neri had become the most popular figure in Rome. His advice and direction were sought by Popes and cardinals no less than by the common people, and in 1593 he prevented a serious conflict between France and the Holy See by insisting on the absolution of *Henry IV. His chief characteristics were his gentleness and gaiety. Venerated as a saint during his lifetime, he was canonized by Gregory XV in 1622. Feast day, 26 May.

Il primo processo per San Filippo Neri, ed. G. Incisa della Rocchetta–N. Vian, with the collaboration of C. Gasbarri (S.T., cxci, cxcvi, ccv, ccxxiv; 1957–63). The Canonization Process supplied the main material for the first and fundamental life, written in Lat., by A. Gallonio, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1600; repr. in AA.SS., Mai. VI (1688), pp. 463–524). An Ital. tr., said to be clearer and more complete, was publd. at Rome, 1601. Other early lives by P. J. Bacci, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1622; ed. G. F. Ricci, 1678; Eng. tr., Paris, 1659; Eng. tr. of ed. of 1837 by F. W. *Faber (Saints and Servants of God, 2 vols., 1847); new ed. of Eng. tr. by F. I. Antrobus, Cong. Orat. (2 vols., 1902)), G. Crispino (Naples, 1675; Eng. tr. of last part by F. W. Faber, 1850) and J. Bernabei, Cong. Orat., pr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 524–649. The standard modern work is that of L. Poncelle–L. Bordet (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1932), with full discussion of sources. Other modern lives include those of M. A. Bayle (Paris, 1859), A. Capecelatro (2 vols., Naples 1879; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1882; abridged ed. of Eng. tr., 1926), R. F. Kerr, Cong. Orat. (London, c. 1903; new ed., 1927), V. J. Matthews, Cong. Orat. (London, 1934), M. V. Magni (Florence, 1937), A. Baudrillart ('Les Saints', 1939), M. Jouhandeau (Paris, 1957; Eng. tr., 1960), and M. Trevor (London, 1966). C. Gasbarri, Cong. Orat.. in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, v (Rome, 1964), cols. 760–99, s.v. 'Filippo Neri'. See also bibl. to Oratorians (1).

PHILIP SIDETES (early 5th cent.), historian. A native of Side, in Pamphylia, early in the 5th cent. he removed to *Constantinople, where he became the friend of St. *Chrysostom, who ordained him deacon. After having become a priest he was three times an unsuccessful candidate for the patriarchate. He wrote a voluminous historical work, Χριστιανικὴ Ἱστορία, in 36 books which, to judge by *Socrates, appears to have been a hotch-potch of miscellaneous learning and to have dealt with the whole period from the creation of the world until A.D. 430. Only small fragments of this work remain, including the much-discussed assertion that *Papias had stated that *John the Divine and his brother, *James, were martyred by the Jews. A defence of Christianity against *Julian the Apostate, mentioned by Socrates, seems to be wholly lost.

The fragment on the Alexandrian *Catechetical School was publd. by H. *Dodwell in his Dissertationes in Irenaeum (Oxford, 1689), p. 488; on this cf. C. de Boor, 'Zur Kenntnis der Handschriften der griechischen Kirchenhistoriker. Codex Baroccianus 142' in Z.K.T., vi (1884), pp. 478–94, esp. p. 487 (variant readings). Id., Neue Fragmente des Papias, Hegesippus und Pierius . . . aus der Kirchengeschichte des Philippus Sidetes (T.U., v, Hft. 2; 1888), pp. 165–84. E. Bratke, Das sogenannte Religionsgespräch am Hof der Sasaniden (ib., xix, Hft. 3; 1899), esp. pp. 157–64. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (S.T., clxxiii; 1953), pp. 82–91 ('Philippus of Side and his "Christian History" (written about 434–439)'). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 135–7. [H. G.] Opitz in P.W., xix (pt. 2; 1938), col. 2350 f., s.v. 'Philippos 41'.

PHILIPPIANS, Epistle to the. One of the so-called '*Captivity Epistles' of St. *Paul, the authenticity of which is solidly attested by antiquity and almost unanimously accepted by modern scholars. It is addressed to the Christian community at Philippi in Macedonia, the first of the Churches founded by St. Paul in Europe, to which he was united by ties of particular affection and tenderness. Acc. to the Apostle's own account (2. 25 and 4. 18), the Philippian Epaphroditus had come with presents from the community to relieve his needs during his imprisonment. This is generally held to refer to his captivity in *Rome; and, though some scholars, e.g. G. S. Duncan, believe it to have been at *Ephesus, and E. Lohmeyer at the Palestinian *Caesarea, the reff. to the Praetorian guard and to the members of 'Caesar's household' would seem to favour the traditional opinion. Its date has also been a matter of discussion. Some, e.g. J. B. *Lightfoot, assign it to the beginning of his captivity, whereas most critics place it at the end of his process of appeal, mainly on the grounds that internal evidence suggests a considerable missionary activity of the Apostle in Rome and a long drawn-out trial, soon to be brought to a happy conclusion. The unity of the Epistle has been contested, e.g. by A. *Loisy, because of the sudden attack on the Judaizers in 3. 1b ff., but the apparent break has been explained by others as due to the informal character of the letter (which follows the successive emotions of the writer) or on other grounds.

After thanking the Philippians for their assistance (1. 1–11), St. Paul tells them of the success of his preaching in his captivity (1. 12–18) and asks them to make his joy perfect by charity, self-denial, and humility, of which Christ is the sublime example (1. 19–2. 11). He, too, wishes to give them joy and therefore promises to send them *Timothy and Epaphroditus (2. 12–30). After warning them against Judaizers he again exhorts them to lead a blameless life of peace and concord (3. 1–4. 7) and ends with a doxology and salutations (4. 8–23).

Despite its personal character the Epistle contains in 2. 5–11 a Christological passage of great doctrinal importance. These verses present Christ who, pre-existing 'in the form of God', was 'found in fashion as a man' and 'humbled Himself', and was consequently 'highly exalted' by God, as the sublime example of humility. There have been different interpretations of the passage, bearing esp. on the sense of ἁρπαγμός (AV, 'robbery'; RV, 'prize') in v. 6 and of ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε (AV, 'made Himself of no reputation'; RV, 'emptied Himself') in v. 7. Acc. to the Greek Fathers of the first five cents., ἁρπαγμός is to be taken in its passive sense, as 'prey', and the meaning of the passage is that Christ did not cling to His Divine equality as to a prey which he might lose, but voluntarily renounced it when taking the form of a man. The Latin Fathers, on the other hand, took the term in its active sense as 'robbery'. Either interpretation is doctrinally correct, though the former is generally held to be the better exegesis. As regards the other difficulty, the Fathers of the first five cents. are almost unanimous in referring the ἐκένωσε of v. 7 to the Divine Will of the Word, understanding the Incarnation as an act of humility and self-abnegation on the part of the Divine Son. Some modern exegetes, on the other hand, following *Pelagius and *Ambrosiaster, understand it of the human will, because, acc. to them, the virtues of humility and self-abnegation are incompatible with the Divine perfections. For modern Protestant interpretations, see Kenotic Theory.

Modern commentaries include those of J. B. Lightfoot (London, 1868), M. R. Vincent (I.C.C., with Philem., 1897, pp. 1–54), M. *Dibelius (Hb.N.T., 1911, with Thess.; ed. 3, xi, 1937, pp. 59–98), E. Lohmeyer (K.E.K., ix, Hft. 1, ed. 8; 1928), K. *Barth (Munich, 1928; ed. 6, 1947; Eng. tr., 1962)

F. W. Beare (Black's N.T. Comm., 1959; ed. 2, 1969), R. P. Martin (London, 1959), and J. Gnilka (Herders theologischer Kommentar zum neuen Testament, x, fasc. 3; Freiburg, 1968). P. Feine, Die Abfassung des Philipperbriefes in Ephesus (1916). R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi. Philippians ii. 5–11 in recent interpretation and in the setting of early Christian worship (Society of New Testament Studies Monograph, iv; Cambridge, 1967). J. Murphy-O'Connor, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 1211–33, s.v., with extensive bibl.

PHILIPPISTS. The followers of the *Lutheran theologian, Philip *Melanchthon ('Dr Philippus'), also known as '*Crypto-Calvinists' and '*Synergists' (qq.v.).

PHILIP'S LENT. St. A name in use in the E. Church for the period from 15 Nov. to 24 Dec., i.e. the counterpart of *Advent in the W. Church. It is so named because it begins on the day following the Feast of St. Philip (14 Nov. in the E.).

PHILLIMORE, ROBERT JOSEPH (1810–85), English judge. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became a prominent Anglican High Churchman, numbering among his friends W. E. *Gladstone, G. A. *Denison, and H. P. *Liddon. In 1841 he was called to the bar at the Middle Temple. He held a succession of ecclesiastical appointments and in 1867 became *Dean of Arches. In 1868, in the case against A. H. *Mackonochie, in which he had first appeared as defending counsel, he delivered judgement declaring the legality of altar lights and of kneeling during the prayer of consecration. The Judicature Act of 1875 caused him to resign his ecclesiastical judgeship. Deeply learned, he was the author of several legal writings, and his Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (2 vols., 1873; ed. 2, 1895) remains a standard treatise. His other writings include Thoughts on the Law of Divorce in England (1844) and Commentaries upon International Law (4 vols., 1854–61).

His son, W. G. F. PHILLIMORE (High Court Judge, 1897–1913, and Lord Justice of Appeal, 1913–16), also appeared as counsel in many ritual cases.

R. J. Phillimore himself published a collection of The Principal Ecclesiastical Judgements delivered in the Court of Arches, 1867 to 1875 [by himself] (1876). W. P. W. Phillimore–W. G. F. Phillimore, Genealogy of the Family of Phillimore (Devizes, 1922), pp. 240–52. J. A. Hamilton in D.N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 186–8; G. Crosse in D.E.C.H., p. 458. On W. G. F. Phillimore, John, Baron Sankey, in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 677 f.

PHILLIPPS, AMBROSE LISLE. See De Lisle, Ambrose Lisle March Phillipps.

PHILLIPPS MANUSCRIPTS, The. The famous collection of MSS. assembled at Cheltenham in the 19th cent. by the antiquary, Sir Thomas Phillipps (1792–1872). Phillipps, who had been educated at Rugby and University College, Oxford, began his collection by purchasing the bulk of the Meerman Collection at The Hague in 1824. Later acquisitions included the 9th cent. MSS. of Professor van Ess of Darmstadt, the Muschenbroek Collection of Chronicles and other documents on Dutch history, the Williams Collection (incl. Bp. Gundulf's Bible), the Knaresborough MSS. on Mexico, many MSS. on the history of Wales and of Ireland, as well as some Gk. MSS. (incl. an illuminated 10th–11th cent. Dioscorides). His library was orig. located at Middle Hill, near Broadway, Worcs., whence Phillipps transferred it to Thirlestane House, Cheltenham, in 1862. The collection passed at his death into the hands of his younger daughter, Mrs. Fenwick. The MSS. have since been gradually sold, the greater part of the Meerman Collection being now in the Staatsbibliothek at Berlin. See also Mommsen Catalogue.

Phillipps, who had installed a printing press at Middle Hill, printed his own catalogue in fol., successive sections appearing as the collection grew: Catalogus Librorum Manuscriptorum in Bibliotheca D. Thomae Phillipps (1824–[1867]). A. N. L. Munby, Phillipps Studies (5 vols., 1951–60).

PHILLPOTTS, HENRY (1778–1869), Bp. of *Exeter. He was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and in 1795 elected a Fellow of Magdalen. From 1805 to 1826 he held a number of benefices in the diocese of *Durham. In 1828 he was appointed Dean of *Chester, and in 1830 Bp. of Exeter. An old-fashioned High Churchman, he was throughout his episcopate in sympathy with the *Oxford Movement (q.v.). He greatly desired to raise the standard of public worship and in 1844 ordered the surplice to be worn at all ministrations in his diocese, though the order raised so fierce a storm that it had to be withdrawn. His refusal to institute G. C. *Gorham (q.v.), who had been presented to the living of Brampford Speke, on the grounds of his denial of baptismal regeneration, gave rise to one of the most famous ecclesiastical law-suits in the 19th cent. He was also a champion of the revival of religious orders in the Anglican Church and aided the efforts of E. B. *Pusey for the sisterhood at Devonport founded by Miss P. L. *Sellon.

A Life was begun by R. N. Shutte (vol. i only, London, 1863 [to 1832]; publication was suspended on an injunction granted to Phillpotts). Brief sketch by E. C. S. Gibson in W. E. Collins (ed.), Typical English Churchmen (1902), pp. 299–323. Full life by G. C. B. Davies (C.H.S., 1954), with bibl. J. C. S. Nias, O.G.S., Gorham and the Bishop of Exeter (ib., 1951). J. A. Hamilton in D.N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 222–5.

PHILO (c. 20 B.C.–c. A.D. 50), Jewish thinker and exegete. He belonged to a prosperous priestly family of Alexandria; but nothing is known of his life except that in 39 he took part in an embassy to *Rome, described in his Legatio ad Caium, to plead the religious rights of the Jews with Emp. Caligula. He was the most important figure among the Hellenistic Jews of his age and a fertile author. His numerous writings include: (1) Philosophical works, written in his youth, among them De Aeternitate Mundi, Quod omnis probus liber sit, and De Providentia; (2) Exegetical writings on the *Pentateuch, incl. Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesim et Exodum and Legum Allegoriae; and (3) Historical and apologetic writings, incl. De Vita Mosis, De Vita Contemplativa (on the *Therapeutae, q.v.), and Contra Flaccum (against Flaccus, Procurator of Egypt, A.D. 32–8).

In his religious outlook Philo was essentially an eclectic. He reproduced a variety of doctrines, gathered from contemporary philosophical systems as well as from Jewish sources, without welding them into an harmonious whole. His most influential achievement was his development of the allegorical interpretation of Scripture which enabled him to discover much of Greek philosophy in the OT, and to combine the respect of his religion for the Pentateuchal law with his personal aspirations towards a more spiritual interpretation of it. In his theological ideas also, Greek and Jewish elements were interwoven. On the one hand he emphasized the complete transcendence of God, whom he asserted to be above virtue, above knowledge, and even above the Good, while on the other he maintained that God was the Father who governed the world as well as each individual soul by His Providence. He accorded a central place in his system to the *Logos, who was at once the creative power which orders the world and the intermediary through whom men know God. It was the Logos who spoke to *Moses in the burning bush, and who is represented in the OT under the figure of the *high priest. As a spiritual leader, Philo stands in the tradition of the philosophical mystics. The highest grade of the inner life is ecstasy, which conveys the felt Presence of God to the soul.

Philo's influence was esp. strong in the Alexandrine school of theology. *Clement and *Origen used him freely, and through them and later through St. *Ambrose and other Latin Fathers his allegorical interpretation of Scripture became an accepted form of Biblical exegesis in the Christian Church. His influence on the Logos doctrine of the Fourth Gospel and of the Apologists, notably St. *Justin, has often been alleged, but in recent times the differences between the Christian and the Philonic conceptions have been very widely admitted.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Paris, 1522; much improved ed., with Lat. tr., by T. Mangey (2 vols., London, 1742); crit. ed. by L. Cohn–P. Wendland–S. Reiter (6 vols., Berlin, 1896–1915; index by I. Leisegang, 2 pts., 1926–30); also ed. R. Arnaldez, J. Pouilloux and C. Mondésert, S.J. (Paris, 1961 ff.). Eng. tr. by F. H. Colson–G. H. Whitaker–R. Marcus (Loeb, 10 vols. + 2 supplementary vols., 1929–62). 'De Vita Contemplativa' also ed., with full notes, by F. C. Conybeare (Oxford, 1895); 'In Flaccum' ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Box (London, 1939).

J. *Drummond, Philo Judaeus (2 vols., 1888); H. A. A. Kennedy, Philo's Contribution to Religion (1919); E. R. Goodenough, An Introduction to Philo Judaeus (New Haven, Conn., 1940; ed. 2, Oxford, 1962); H. A. Wolfson, Philo. Foundations of Religious Philosophy in Judaism, Christianity and Islam (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1947). J. Daniélou, S.J., Philon d'Alexandrie (1958). R. Arnaldez and others, Philon d'Alexandrie. Colloques nationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Lyon, 11–15 septembre 1966 (1967). E. Bréhier, Les Idées philosophiques et religieuses de Philon d'Alexandrie (Paris thesis, 1907; ed. 2, Études de Philosophie médiévale, viii; 1925). J. Pascher, Ἡ Βασιλικὴ Ὁδός. Der Königsweg zu Wiedergeburt und Vergottung bei Philo von Alexandreia (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, xvii, Hftt. 3–4; 1931). I. Heinemann, Philos griechische und jüdische Bildung (1932). F. Geiger, Philon von Alexandreia als sozialer Denker (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, xiv; 1932). E. R. Goodenough, The Politics of Philo Judaeus (New Haven, Conn., 1938), with General Bibliography of Philo by H. L. Goodhart–E. R. Goodenough, pp. 127–321. W. Völker, Fortschritt und Vollendung bei Philo von Alexandrien (T.U., xlix; 1938). H. E. *Ryle, Philo and Holy Scripture (1895). E. Stein, Die allegorische Exegese des Philo aus Alexandreia (Beiheft zur Z.A.T.W., li; 1929); id., Philo und der Midrasch (ib., lvii; 1931). P. Katz, Philo's Bible. The Aberrant Text of Bible Quotations in some Philonic Writings and its Place in the Textual Tradition of the Greek Bible (1950). S. Sandmel, Philo's Place in Judaism (Cincinnati, 1956). E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4; 1909), pp. 633–716. A. Edersheim in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 357–89, s.v.; C. Siegfried–J. Z. Lauterbach in J.E., x (1905), pp. 6–19, s.v.; E. Schürer–C. Bigg in E.B. (ed. 11), xxi (1911), pp. 409–13, s.v.; H. Leisegang in P.W., xx (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 1–50, s.v. 'Philon (41)'; C. Mondésert, S.J., and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 1288–1351; R. Arnaldez in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 287–91, s.v.

PHILOCALIA. A title meaning 'Love of what is beautiful', applied in particular to two works:

(i) The Philocalia of *Origen: an anthology from his writings, compiled by Sts. *Basil the Great and *Gregory of Nazianzus during 358–9, and containing many passages which would otherwise have been lost in the original Greek.

(ii) The Philocalia of Sts. Macarius Notaras and *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain, first published at Venice in 1782. This is a collection of ascetic and mystical writings dating from the 4th to the 15th century, dealing in general terms with the teaching of *Hesychasm and more particularly with the *Jesus Prayer. Translated into Slavonic by Paissy Velichkovsky (1793) and into Russian by Bishop Theophan the Recluse (enlarged ed. in 5 vols., 1876–90), the book has exercised an important influence throughout the modern Orthodox world.

Convenient ed. of the Greek text of (i) by J. A. *Robinson The Philocalia of Origen (Cambridge, 1893). There is a partial Eng. tr. of (ii) by E. Kadloubovsky and G. E. H. Palmer, Writings from the Philokalia on Prayer of the Heart (1951); idd., Early Fathers from the Philokalia (1954), both from Theophan's Russian text. New Eng. tr. by G. E. H. Palmer, P. Sherrard and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Philokalia (1979 ff.).

PHILOCALIAN CALENDAR, The. A name sometimes given to the list of Roman bishops (also known as the '*Liberian Catalogue') compiled by the '*Chronographer of 354' (q.v.). It takes this name from the fact that part of the document in which it occurs was illuminated by the artist, Furius Dionysius Philocalus (prob. better Filocalus).

On Filocalus, also known for his skilful incision of *Damasus' metrical inscriptions, see H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1594–1600, s.v. For further bibl. see s.v. Chronographer of 354.

PHILOMENA, St. She was formerly held to be a virgin martyr of the early Church. Her cultus dates from 1802, when a loculus* was found in the Catacomb of St. Priscilla, near Rome, closed with three tiles on which were painted the letters LUMENA/PAX TE/CUM FI, which, arranged in the right order, read 'Pax tecum Filumena'. Taken in conjunction with an *ampulla supposed to have contained blood, the bones found in the tomb were held to be those of a martyred Christian virgin. She came to be venerated as a saint when many miracles took place at the translation of her relics to Mugnano in 1805. A proper Office and Mass were granted to her by *Pius IX in 1855, and she temporarily became one of the most popular saints on account of the devotion to her of the *Curé d'Ars. Subsequent research, however, has cast grave doubt on the connexion between the relics and the tiles, which seem to have belonged to another grave, so that nothing seems known about the saint venerated under this name. Feast day, 11 Aug.; suppressed 1960.

The identification was first made by F. di Lucia, Relazione istorica della translazione del sacro corpo di Santa Filomena (ed. 4, 1833). It was refuted by A. de Waal, 'Die Grabschrift der Philumena aus dem Coemeterium der Priscilla' in R.Q., xii (1898), pp. 43–54; O. *Marucchi, 'Osservazioni archeologiche sulla iscrizione di S. Filomena' in Miscellanea di Storia ecclesiastica e di Studi ausiliari, ii (1904), pp. 365–86; id., 'Studio archeologico sulla celebre iscrizione di Filumena scoperta nel cimitero di Priscilla' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archaeologia cristiana, xii (1906), pp. 253–300. F. Trochu, La 'Petite Sainte' du curé d'Ars. Sainte Philomène (Lyons, 1924). In Eng. there is a popular mainly devotional, account by Cecily Hallack (Dublin [1936]). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1600–2, s.v. 'Filumena', with detailed bibl.

PHILOPATRIS. A Greek dialogue, formerly thought to be a veiled attack on Christianity by *Lucian of Samosata. The scene is laid at *Constantinople, where one Triephon, converted to the Christian faith, is transported into the third heaven and engages in a discussion on paganism, which concludes with reflections on the political situation of the time. The work, long assigned to the reign of *Julian (361–3), has been commonly put since B. G. Niebuhr in the time of Nicephorus Phocas (963–9).

The text is pr. in many edd. of the works of Lucian of Samosata (q.v.), e.g. that of C. Jacobitz, iii (Teub. ed. of 1886, pp. 411–25); also ed. C. B. Hase appended to his ed. of the History of Leo the Deacon (C.S.H. Byz., xxv; 1828), pp. 324–42. B. G. Niebuhr, Kleine historische und philologische Schriften, ii (1843), pp. 73–8 ('Ueber das Alter des Dialogus Philopatris'). E. von Dobschütz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 363–5, s.v.; there is a summary of this art. in English in E.B. (ed. 11), xxi (1911), p. 439, s.v.

PHILOSOPHIC SIN. Acts of sin held to violate the natural order of reason without consciously transgressing the Divine law, and hence not to merit the punishments meted out to offences against the latter. The theory that sin under such conditions is possible presupposes the existence of a distinction between the Divine and natural moral law of contestable validity and was censured by Pope *Alexander VIII on 24 Aug. 1690.

Pope Alexander VIII's condemnation of 24 Aug. 1690 is pr. in C. Duplessis d'Argentré (ed.), Collectio Judiciorum de Novis Erroribus, iii (Paris, etc., 1736), p. 365; main clauses repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 479 f. (No. 2290 f.). H. Beylard, 'Le Péché philosophique. Quelques précisions historiques et doctrinales' in Nouvelle Revue théologique, lxii (1935), pp. 591–616 and 673–98. T. Deman, O.P., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 255–72, s.v. 'Péché. IX', with bibl. col. 275.

PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION. The notion of the philosophy of religion as a distinct discipline was the creation of the Aufklärung*. The term is first met with in Germany in the last years of the 18th cent. Early occurrences in titles are J. C. G. Schaumann, Philosophie der Religion (1793), and J. Berger, Geschichte der Religionsphilosophie (1800). Properly its aim, as the expression implies, is the philosophical investigation of the particular group of phenomena covered by the terms 'religion' and 'religious experience'. It studies the essence, content, origin, and, to some extent, value of religion as a factor in human life, and examines the claims of religion to be true. The '*natural theology' of earlier writers could be considered as philosophy of religion in the broadest sense, but whereas natural theology was regarded as the prelude to revealed theology, the philosophy of religion takes no cognizance of this distinction.

The philosophy of religion has taken many forms. D. *Hume's Dialogues concerning Natural Religion (1779) and I. *Kant's Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft (1793) are two very different examples of the rationalist 18th cent. approach to religion. G. W. F. *Hegel's posthumously published Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Religion (1832, ed. 2, 1840; Eng. tr., 1895) is the most celebrated of the many works on the philosophy of religion that have come out of the tradition of speculative idealism. In the latter part of the 19th cent. there was a tendency to move away from the speculative style of philosophy. Thus history is the controlling idea in O. Pfleiderer's Religionsphilosophie (1878), while H. Höffding's Religions Filosofi (1901; Eng. tr., 1906) centres on the notion of value. In the 20th cent., still newer types of philosophy of religion have been developed. C. Hartshorne applied the insights of *process philosophy to the problems of religion, while K. *Jaspers constructed a 'philosophical faith' on the basis of an *existentialist type of thought. More recently still, the philosophy of religion has been understood as the analysis of religious language.

As a distinct discipline, the philosophy of religion has been cultivated for the most part by philosophers with religious leanings. Catholic theologians have more commonly envisaged the matters at issue from the standpoint of natural theology and *Thomist metaphysics. While some liberal Protestants have been attracted to the philosophy of religion, the more orthodox Protestant tradition, believing that the knowledge of God can be had only from revelation, has been suspicious of philosophical studies of religion.

J. Baillie, Our Knowledge of God (1939); E. Bevan, Symbolism and Belief (Gifford Lectures [='G.L.'], 1938); W. G. de Burgh, Morality and Religion (G.L., 1938); E. *Brunner, Religionsphilosophie evangelischer Theologie (1926; Eng. tr., 1937); J. *Caird, An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion (1880); A. Caldecott–H. R. Mackintosh (edd.), Selections from the Literature of Theism (1904); C. A. Campbell, On Selfhood and Godhood (G.L., 1957); V. A. Demant, The Religious Prospect (1939); D. M. Emmet, The Nature of Metaphysical Thinking (1945); F. [B.] Ferré, Basic Modern Philosophy of Religion (New York, 1967; London, 1968); C. Hartshorne, Man's Vision of God and the Logic of Theism (New York, 1941); J. Hick, Philosophy of Religion (Englewood Cliffs, N.Y., 1963); F. *von Hügel, Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion (1921); id., Second Series (1926); K. Jaspers, Der philosophische Glaube angesichts der Offenbarung (1962; Eng. tr., 1967); G. H. Joyce, S.J., Principles of Natural Theology (1923); H. D. Lewis, Philosophy of Religion (1965); J. Macquarrie, God-Talk. An Examination of the Language and Logic of Theology (1967); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is. A Study in Traditional Theism (1943); id., Existence and Analogy. A Sequel to He Who Is (1949); id., The Openness of Being: Natural Theology Today (G.L., 1971); W. R. Matthews, God in Christian Thought and Experience (1930); J. W. *Oman, The Natural and the Supernatural (1931); A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy (G.L., 1917); N. Smart (ed.), Historical Selections in the Philosophy of Religion (1962); A. E. *Taylor, art. 'Theism' in H.E.R.E., xii (1921), pp. 261–87; id., The Faith of a Moralist (G.L., 2 vols., 1930); id., Philosophical Studies (1934); W. *Temple, Nature, Man and God (G.L., 1934); F. R. Tennant, Philosophical Theology, vol. i: The Soul and its Faculties (1935), vol. ii: The World, the Soul and God (1937); E. *Troeltsch, Gesammelte Schriften (4 vols., 1912–25); C. C. J. *Webb, Problems in the Relations of God and Man (1911); id., Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915); id., God and Personality (G.L. i, 1918); id., Divine Personality and Human Life (G.L., ii, 1920); W. F. Zuurdeeg, An Analytical Philosophy of Religion (New York, 1958; London, 1959).

PHILOSTORGIUS (c. 368–c. 439), *Arian ecclesiastical historian. A native of Borissus in Cappadocia Secunda, Philostorgius became a follower and warm admirer of *Eunomius (q.v.) and spent most of his active life in *Constantinople. His principal work, a 'History of the Church' from the Arian standpoint for the period c. 300–430, survives only in fragments, esp. in the 'Passion of Artemius' (Artemius was an Arian martyr, c. 362), and in an epitome by *Photius, who writes very disparagingly of its author. His work was inaccurate and biased, but what survives is of value through its use of excellent sources as well as on account of Philostorgius's descriptions of several of the chief Arian personalities.

Editio princeps of fragments by J. Gothofredus (Geneva, 1643); they are also pr. in J. P. Migne, PG, lxv, 459–624; crit. ed., with important introd., by J. Bidez (G.C.S., xxi; 1913). Text of 'Vita Constantini', incorporating further passages from Philostorgius, in H. G. Opitz, 'Die Vita Constantini des Codex Angelicus 22' in Byzantion, ix (1934), pp. 535–93; J. Bidez, 'Fragments nouveaux de Philostorge sur la vie de Constantin', ib., xi (1935), pp. 403–37, incl. text. P. *Batiffol, Quaestiones Philostorgianae (thesis, Paris, 1891). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 132–5. G. Fritz in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1495–8, s.v.

PHILOXENIAN VERSION OF THE NT. The Syriac version of the NT made from the Greek in 508 for *Philoxenus (q.v.) by Polycarp, a *chorepiscopus. Unlike the *Peshitta, it contained the four lesser Catholic Epistles (2 Pet., 2 & 3 Jn., Jude) and the Book of Rev. In 616 it was drastically revised throughout by Thomas of Harkel, and its original text has thus been almost completely lost, apart perhaps from that of the four lesser Catholic epistles and Rev., for which a version different from, and earlier than, the *Harklean survives. For the rest of the NT, however, the surviving manuscripts do not take us back behind Thomas of Harkel's revision. J. White, the editor of this revised text (see Harklean Version), was under the impression that Thomas confined his corrections to the margin, and so he called the text 'Versio Philoxeniana'; in this he has been followed (probably mistakenly) by several modern scholars.

Editio princeps of the four 'Philoxenian' Epps. by E. *Pococke, Leyden, 1630; modern ed. by J. Gwynn, Text and Translation Society, London–Oxford, 1909. 'Philoxenian' text of Rev. first discovered and publd. by J. Gwynn, The Apocalypse of St. John in a Syriac Version hitherto Unknown (Dublin–London, 1897). J. Lebon, 'La Version philoxénienne de la Bible' in R.H.E., xii (1911), pp. 414–36. A. Vööbus, 'New Data for the Solution of the Problem concerning the Philoxenian Version' in Spiritus et Veritas [Festschrift C. Kundzinš] (Eutin, 1953), pp. 169–86. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 875–8, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', v. 1, with bibl.

PHILOXENUS (c. 440–523), Bp. of Mabbug (Hierapolis), to which office he was appointed in 485 by *Peter the Fuller. Along with his contemporary, *Severus, he was one of the leading thinkers and writers of the nascent *Monophysite Church. His extensive writings, in Syriac, include a set of thirteen 'Discourses on the Christian Life', several works on the Incarnation and a number of exegetic and ascetic works. He also conducted a large correspondence which has partly survived. See also preceding entry.

Philoxenus's remains have been publd. in a variety of places. The more important collections include an edition of his Discourses, with Eng. tr., by E. A. W. Budge (2 vols., London [1893]–1894; from Brit. Mus. MSS.); his 'Tractatus de Trinitate et Incarnatione' ed., with Lat. tr., by A. Vaschalde (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, Ser. 2, xxvii; 1907), and 'Dissertationes Decem de Uno e Sancta Trinitate Incorporato et Passo', also with Lat. tr., by M. Brière in P.O., xv (1927), pp. 441–542 [2 Diss. only so far publd.]. More recently a Letter sent to a friend has been ed. by E. Olinder (Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift, lvi, 1950, No. 1); a Letter to Patricius of Edessa has been ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Lavenant, S.J., in P.O., xxx (1963), pp. 725–873; and a Letter to the Monks of Senoun ed. by A. de Halleux (C.S.C.O., ccxxxi, Scriptores Syri, xcviii, 1963, with Fr. tr. C.S.C.O., ccxxxii, Scriptores Syri, xcix, 1963). Rhythmical life by Eli of Qartamin ed. by id. (C.S.C.O., ccxxxiii, Scriptores Syri, c; 1963; Fr. tr. C.S.C.O., ccxxxiv, Scriptores Syri, ci; 1963), with further reff. A. de Halleux, O.F.M., Philoxène de Mabbog. Sa vie, ses écrits, sa théologie (Louvain, 1963). W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894), pp. 72–6; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 157–61. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 417–21. G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1894), pp. 367–70; E. Tisserant in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1509–32; A. de Halleux in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 479, s.v.

PHILPOT, JOHN (1516–55), Reformation divine. Few facts are known with certainty about Philpot's life. After being educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, where he held a Fellowship from 1534 to 1539, he went abroad and developed doubts of the traditional Catholic doctrines. A controversial discussion with a *Franciscan friar near Padua almost led to his seizure by the *Inquisition. At an unknown date under *Edward VI (1547–53) he became Archdeacon of Winchester. An attack on *Transubstantiation in the first Convocation of Mary's reign (1553) was followed by imprisonment. In Oct. 1555, despite E. *Bonner's defence, he was convicted, and on 18 Dec. burnt at *Smithfield. Besides many occasional writings dealing with current controversies he translated some of J. *Calvin's Homilies and *Chrysostom 'Against Heresies'.

Extant works, with account of his 'Examination' taken mainly from J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, ed. R. Eden (*Parker Society, 1842), with biogr. introd., pp. i–xxii. W. A. J. Archbold in D.N.B., xlv (1896), p. 226 f.; C. P. S. Clarke in D.E.C.H., p. 459.

PHOCAS, St. (d. 117), Bp. of Sinope in Pontus. A martyr of this name who suffered under Trajan by suffocation in a bath is commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 14 July. He has constantly been confused with 'St. Phocas the Gardener', commemorated in the W. Church on 23 July and in the E. on 22 Sept., who is stated to have been martyred in the *Diocletianic Persecution, as well as with St. Phocas of Antioch, named in the Roman Martyrology on 5 Mar. St. Phocas the Gardener was the subject of a panegyric pronounced in 400 by Asterius, Bp. of Amasea. When the various traditions had become fused, the cult of St. Phocas became very popular, esp. among seafaring people, perhaps through a superficial resemblance of his name to φώκη, 'seal'. Several attempts (for the most part unconvincing) have been made in recent times by students of folk-lore to connect the cultus of St. Phocas with pagan myths.

Gk. text of Asterius's panegyric on Phocas the Gardener in AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 294–9. K. Lübeck, 'Der hl. Phocas von Sinope' in Hist. J., xxx (1909), pp. 743–61. C. Van de Vorst, 'Saint Phocas' in Anal. Boll., xxx (1911), pp. 252–72, with discussion of the relation of the various saints of this name and full reff. to earlier lit.; various primary texts, ib., pp. 272–95.

PHOCYLIDES, Pseudo-. The name given to the author of 230 hexameters inserted into the work of Phocylides of Miletus (6th cent. B.C.). The strictly ethical character of the poem, combined with the absence of specifically Jewish allusions, and esp. of all ref. to Jewish ceremonial law, has suggested that the author was a Christian (A. *Harnack); on the other hand, there is no mention of Christ or of anything definitely Christian, while the moral teaching seems closely to follow that of the OT. The poem may have been written at any time within the period of the Judaeo-Hellenistic civilization up to c. A.D. 150. It was widely used as a school-book in the Byzantine period and has survived in many MSS.

Crit. ed. by T. Bergk, Poetae Lyrici Graeci (Leipzig, 1843), pp. 342–55. Eng. tr. by W. Hewett (Watford, 1840). J. Bernays, Ueber das phokylideische Gedicht. Ein Beitrag zur hellenistischen Litteratur (1856); cf. review by A. Harnack in T.L.Z., x (1885), col. 160. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, iii (ed. 4, 1909), pp. 617–22, with bibl.

PHOEBADIUS, St. (d. c. 395), also 'Fiari', Bp. of Agen (Agennum) in Guyenne. A friend of St. *Hilary of Poitiers, he was a strong opponent of *Arianism and attacked the *Sirmian formula of 357 in his 'Liber contra Arianos' (partly based on *Tertullian). In 359 he signed the formula of *Ariminum, but vigorously denounced the Council when he realized its import. A work, 'De Fide Orthodoxa contra Arianos', also passes under his name, but this probably belongs to *Gregory of Elvira. Feast day, 26 April.

J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 13–30. *Jerome, De Viris Illustribus, cviii.

PHOENIX (Gk. φοῖνιξ), a gorgeously arrayed mythical bird which was the subject of several legends in antiquity, notably one to the effect that after living five or six hundred years it burnt itself to ashes and then came back to life again with renewed youth. From St. *Clement of Rome (Ep. ad Cor., xxv) and *Tertullian (De Res. Carnis, xiii) onwards, Christian writers frequently regarded it as an image of the Resurrection. A poem on the religious significance of the phoenix, De Ave Phoenice, is prob. the work of *Lactantius; it enjoyed wide popularity and in its turn influenced the Anglo-Saxon poem, The Phoenix, contained in the *Exeter Book and at one time attributed to *Cynewulf. In Christian art the phoenix was occasionally (though somewhat rarely) used from *Constantinian times, representations of it being found, e.g., in the Roman churches of Sts. *Cosmas and Damian, St. Praxedes and St. Cecilia.

F. Schöll, Vom Vogel Phönix (Akademische Rede; Heidelberg, 1890). J. Hubaux–M. Leroy, Le Mythe du phénix dans les littératures grecque et latine (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, lxxxii; 1939). R. van den Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix according to Classical and Early Christian Traditions (Eng. tr. by I. Seeger, Leiden, 1972). A. Ferrua, S.J., 'Tre note d'iconografia paleocristiana. I. La Fenice sul rogo' in Miscellanea Giulio Belvederi (Collezione 'Amici delle Catacombe', xxiii; 1954), pp. 273–7, with further refs. Edd. of the Anglo-Saxon poem by A. S. Cook (ed.), The Old English Elene, Phœnix, and Physiologus (1919), pp. 47–73, with introd., pp. xxv–lvi, and N. F. Blake (Manchester, 1964); on its relationship with the De Ave Phoenice, O. F. Emerson, 'Originality in Old English Poetry' in Review of English Studies, ii (1926), pp. 18–31; J. E. Cross, 'The Conception of the Old English Phoenix' in R. P. Creed (ed.), Old English Poetry (Providence, R.I., 1967), pp. 129–52. R. St. J. Thackeray in D.C.A., ii (1880), p. 1633, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 682–91, s.v. 'Phénix'.

PHOS HILARON (Gk. φῶς ἱλαρόν). In the E. Church, the hymn sung at 'Hesperinos' (the counterpart of the W. *Vespers) during 'the lighting of the lamps' and the central item in the office. It is found already in St. *Basil (De Spir. Sanct. 73). The ASB and the American BCP (1979) provide for its use in Evening Prayer. Translations include J. *Keble's 'Hail! gladdening light' and R. S. *Bridges' 'O gladsome light, O grace'.

Text pr., with Lat. tr., in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, iii (Oxford, 1815), p. 299, with notes, pp. 300–4; and in H. A. Daniel, Thesaurus Hymnologicus, iii (Leipzig, 1846), p. 5, repr. by J. Julian in id. (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (1892), p. 894, s.v., with list of Eng. trr.

PHOTINUS (4th cent.), heretic. A pupil of *Marcellus of Ancyra, he became Bp. of Sirmium c. 344. He was recognized as a man of learning and eloquence. Though involved in the condemnation of Marcellus by a Council of Antioch c. 345, he retained his see until 351, when he was deposed and exiled after his errors had been exposed at a Council called by the Emp. Constantius at Sirmium. None of his writings have survived and his doctrine is variously described by his detractors. It was clearly a form of *Sabellianism. Acc. to St. *Augustine, he denied the pre-existence of Christ, though he allowed that He was born of the Virgin and was endowed with superhuman excellences. His followers, the 'Photinians', were formally condemned at the Council of *Constantinople in 381.

The primary sources are scattered. D. *Petavius, De Photino Haeretico eiusque Damnatione (Paris, 1636). Bardenhewer, iii, p. 123 f. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 372–4, and G. Bardy in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1532–6, both s.v.

PHOTIUS (c. 810–c. 895), Patriarch of *Constantinople. Of a noble Constantinopolitan family, he received a good education and gave up his original plan of entering a monastery for the career of a scholar and statesman. Close relations with the court made him the first Imperial Secretary and, in 838, Imperial Ambassador to Baghdad. When the Emp. Michael III deposed Ignatius, Patr. of Constantinople, in 858, Photius, still a layman, was appointed his successor. He was consecrated by his friend, Gregory Asbestas, Abp. of Syracuse, whom Ignatius had himself deposed. On Ignatius' refusal to abdicate, Michael and Photius sent an embassy to Pope *Nicholas I, asking for legates to a synod at Constantinople which, besides regulating the *Iconoclastic Controversy, should also settle the dispute of the two Patriarchs. Nicholas's legates exceeded their powers, probably under pressure from the Eastern court, and took part in the Synod of 861, which deposed Ignatius. In 862 the Pope, in letters to Photius and to Michael III, blamed his legates' conduct and complained that his former letter had been tampered with at Constantinople; and, at a synod at Rome (863), annulled the proceedings at Constantinople. He maintained that Ignatius was still Patriarch; and after the arrival of an embassy from Ignatius declared Photius deposed and his friend, Gregory Asbestas, deprived of the priesthood and of all ecclesiastical offices. All clerics promoted by Photius were also deposed, and the deposition of Ignatius declared null and void. This assertion of Papal authority naturally gave great offence at Constantinople. Photius himself kept silence, but the Emperor wrote a strongly worded letter to the Pope, who in 865 declared himself ready to reopen the case. A reconciliation was prevented by the dispute whether Christianity in *Bulgaria, then being converted, was to depend on Rome or on Constantinople. In 867 Photius, in an encyclical, denounced the presence of Latin missionaries in Bulgaria as an intrusion, and also gave an exposition of his objections to the *Filioque clause in the creed. In the same year, at a Council at Constantinople, sentence of deposition was pronounced against the Pope, who was declared anathema and excommunicated.

With the accession of Basil (867), the murderer and successor of the Emp. Michael, the situation changed. Ignatius was reinstated, and a sentence of a Council at Rome in 869, anathematizing Photius, was confirmed by the Council of Constantinople of 869–70, later counted as the 8th General Council by the Latins. The restored harmony between E. and W. was of short duration. When Ignatius consecrated an archbishop and bishops for the Bulgarians (870) he was threatened by the Pope with excommunication. This action at Rome assured his continuance in his see, and it was only after Ignatius's death (877) that Photius, by order of the Emperor, once more became Patriarch. At a council held at Constantinople in 879–80 the Papal legates seem to have approved Photius and annulled the decision of the Council of 869–70. (That the Papal legates acted thus in 879–80 is maintained by most modern scholars following F. Dvornik, against the earlier view of e.g. J. *Hergenröther and K. J. *Hefele.)

The causes of the renewed outbreak of the controversy are obscure. When Leo VI became Emperor (886) he at once deposed Photius, who was perhaps excommunicated by Pope *Formosus in 892, though Dvornik holds that the relevant Papal letter had been falsified at Constantinople by the anti-Photian party. After his deposition Photius disappears from history; he died at the Convent of Armeniaki towards the end of the 9th cent. Though his schism is only one among many similar episodes in the history of the relations between the Greek and Latin Churches, it had grave consequences for the future. It accentuated the conflict between the Roman claim to be the centre of unity for Christendom and the Greek conception of the five patriarchates of almost equal status. Moreover, Photius was the first theologian to accuse Rome of innovating in the matter of the Filioque. Hence in the 13th and 14th cents. the name of Photius became the watchword of those who opposed the union of the two Churches.

Photius was a scholar of wide interests and encyclopaedic knowledge. His most important work, his 'Bibliotheca' or 'Myriobiblion', is a description of several hundred books, often with exhaustive analyses and copious extracts. It is an invaluable mine of information, as a great number of the works mentioned in it are now lost. The 'Amphilochia', written during his first exile, deals mainly with exegetical and doctrinal problems; his treatises against the *Manichaeans are chiefly concerned with the *Paulicians. The 'Treatise on the Holy Ghost', written after his second deposition, has furnished all subsequent Greek theologians with their objections to the W. dogma. The 'Nomocanon', which is sometimes attributed to him, is not really his, though he may have re-edited it. A number of his homilies and letters have also been preserved. In the Greek Church Photius is venerated as a Saint; feast day, 6 Feb.

The only collected ed. of Photius's writings is that of J. P. Migne, PG, ci–civ, which Migne prepared with the help of J. B. Malou, Bp. of Bruges, and J. Hergenröther. Modern edd. of his 'Bibliotheca', with Fr. tr., by R. Henry (Collection Byzantine, 8 vols., 1959–77), and of his 'Homilies' by B. Laourdas (Thessalonica, 1959). Eng. tr. of his 'Homilies', with comm., by C. Mango (Cambridge, Mass., 1958). Other sources include J. Hergenröther, Monumenta Graeca ad Photium eiusque Historiam Pertinentia (Ratisbon, 1869), and A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Φωτιακά (St. Petersburg, 1897). Earlier works are now superseded by F. Dvornik, The Photian Schism. History and Legend (1948), with full bibl., incorporating the results of Dvornik's earlier papers on the subject. Of the older works, J. Hergenröther, Photius, Patriarch von Konstantinopel (3 vols., 1867–9), is still valuable. V. Grumel, A.A., 'La Liquidation de la querelle photienne' in É.O., xxxiii (1934), pp. 257–88. F. Halkin, S.J., 'La Date de composition de la "Bibliothèque" de Photius remise en question' in Anal. Boll., lxxxi (1963), pp. 414–17. Krumbacher, pp. 73–9 and 515–24. É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1536–1604, with bibl.; K. Ziegler in P.W., xx (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 667–737, s.v. 'Photios (13)'; F. Dvornik in N.C.E. xi (1967), pp. 326–9, s.v., with further bibl.

PHYLACTERY (Gk. φυλακτήριον; Heb. Tephillin). A small leather case containing vellum strips inscribed with four passages from the OT, viz. Ex. 13. 1–10, Ex. 13. 11–16, Deut. 6. 4–9, Deut. 11. 13–21. They have been worn by orthodox Jews from pre-Christian times on the forehead and arm during morning prayer on all days except the Sabbath and certain festivals, to remind them of their obligation to keep the law. The *Pharisees and scribes were condemned by Christ for their ostentatious broadening of their phylacteries (Mt. 23. 5).

There is a brief monograph by G. Langer, Die jüdischen Gebetsriemen (1931). H. L. Strack–P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, iv (1928), pp. 250–76 (Elfter Exkurs, 'Die Tephillin oder Gebetsriemen'). K. G. Kuhn, Phylakterien aus Höhle 4 von Qumran (Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-Historische Klasse, Jahrgang 1957, Abh. 1; 1957). A. R. S. Kennedy in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 869–74, s.v. See also commentaries to Ex., Deut., and Mt.

PHYSICO-THEOLOGICAL ARGUMENT. The name commonly applied in the 18th cent., e.g. by I. *Kant, to the *Teleological Argument for the existence of God. In 1713 William Derham (Canon of Windsor from 1716; d. 1735) published two series of *Boyle Lectures under the title Physico-Theology; or, a Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God from His Works of Creation, which won great popularity and, through translations issued a few years later in Italian, French, and Dutch, probably did much towards bringing the expression into general currency.

'PIA DESIDERIA.' P. J. *Spener's book which aimed at fostering a religious revival in German Protestantism and thus created the *Pietist Movement. Written in German, it was published in 1675 at Frankfurt, where Spener was then pastor. He stated his main immediate objectives under the head of six 'simple proposals' (einfältige Vorschläge), viz. (1) an intensified study of the Bible, aiming at enhanced personal devotion as the chief end; (2) a fuller exercise by the laity of their spiritual priesthood; (3) emphasis on the practical, as opposed to the merely intellectual, side of Christianity, culminating in the spirit of love; (4) the manifestation of charity in religious controversy, which by the sympathetic presentation of truth should seek to win the heart rather than to gain controversial victory; (5) the reorganization of theological studies at the universities and the establishment of higher standards of religious life among both professors and students; (6) the reform and revival of preaching with a view to edification. The author also looked forward to an age of prosperity for the Church when these ideals would be largely realized, after the conversion of the Jews and the fall of Papal Rome. Spener further developed his programme in Das geistliche Priesterthum (1677) and Allgemeine Gottesgelehrtheit (1680).

Convenient Eng. tr., with introd., by T. G. Tappert (Philadelphia, 1964). For other bibl. see Spener, P. J.

PIARISTS. An order of Clerics Regular for the education of the young. Their name derives from the last word of their Latin designation, 'Regulares pauperes Matris Dei scholarum piarum'. They were founded in 1597 by St. *Joseph Calasanctius, who in that year opened the first free elementary boys' school in Europe, to educate the children at large in the streets of Rome. The school, which in 1612 counted 1,200 children, was a great success, and its teachers were recognized as a congregation by *Paul V in 1617. In 1621 Gregory XV made it an order, whose members added to the three vows of religion a fourth to devote themselves to the education of the young. In 1622 it received all the privileges of the *Mendicant orders. In 1645, owing to the intrigues of one of its members, the order was degraded into an association. In 1656, however, it was once more set up as a congregation, and in 1669 Clement IX restored it as an order with all its former privileges. From that time it flourished in many parts of Central, E. and S. Europe, esp. in Spain, as well as in Latin America. After the dissolution of the *Jesuit Order the Piarists rendered esp. valuable services to the Church in carrying on Catholic education. They are governed by a Praepositus Generalis, helped by four Assistants General, who all reside in Rome. In their teaching they pay particular attention to mathematical studies.

L. Picanyol (Piarist), Brevis Conspectus Historico-Statisticus Ordinis Scholarum Piarum (Rome, 1932). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 121–30, with further bibl. L. Picanyol in E.C., iii (1950), cols. 1438–41, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari, iii, Chierici Regolari Poveri della Madre di Dio delle Scuole Pie', also with bibl. See also ed. of letters and lives of St. Joseph Calasanctius cited s.v.

PICA. See Pie.

PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA, GIOVANNI (1463–94), Italian nobleman, scholar, and mystical writer. After studying at *Bologna he spent some years wandering among schools of learning in Italy and France and collecting a library. Besides being a good classic, he knew also Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic; and he was the first to seek in the *Cabbala a clue to the Christian mysteries. His vivid imagination led him to many unorthodox views, several of which found expression in a set of 900 theses on a great diversity of topics which he proposed to defend in 1486. As, however, some of them appeared to Innocent VIII definitely heretical, Pico abandoned the enterprise, and for the rest of his life lived in great simplicity. On his deathbed he was clothed in the *Dominican habit by G. *Savonarola.

Collections of his works (2 parts, Bologna, 1495–6), with life by his nephew Giovanni Francesco Pico prefixed [no pagination]; also Venice, 1498; much improved ed., Paris, 1601 (repr. life [no pagination]). Crit. ed. of his 'De Hominis Dignitate', 'Heptaplus', and 'De Ente et Uno' by E. Garin (Edizione Nazionale dei Classici del Pensiero Italiano, i, Florence, 1942), of his 'Disquisitiones Adversus Astrologiam Divinatricem' by id. (ib., ii and iii; 1946–52), and of his Carmina Latina by W. Speyer (Leyden, 1964). His 'Liber de Imaginatione' ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Caplan (Cornell Studies in English, ix; 1930). The life by his nephew, three of his letters and certain other works were tr. into Eng. by Sir Thomas *More (London, [c. 1510]; modern ed. with introd. by J. M. Rigg, London, 1890; also among the works of Sir Thomas More). Modern studies by G. Semprini (Todi, 1921), E. Anagnine (Bari, 1937), L. Gautier Vignal (Paris [1937]), E. Garin (Pubblicazioni della R. Università degli Studi di Firenze, Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, serie 3, v; 1937), P. M. Cordier (Paris, 1957), E. Monnerjahn (Wiesbaden, 1960), and G. di Napoli (Collectio Philosophica Lateranensis, viii; Rome [1965]). A. Dulles, Princeps Concordiae. Pico della Mirandola and the Scholastic Tradition (Harvard Phi Beta Prize Essay for 1940; Cambridge, Mass., 1941). A. J. Festugière, O.P., 'Studia Mirandulana' in Archives d'Histoire doctrinale et littéraire du Moyen Âge, vii (vol. for 1932; 1933), pp. 143–50, with text of 'De Ente et Uno', pp. 208–24, and Fr. tr., pp. 225–50. P. Kibre, The Library of Pico della Mirandola (New York, 1936). Überweg, iii, p. 20 f., with bibl. p. 629*. B. Nardi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1351–5, s.v.; C. B. Schmitt in N.C.E., xi (1967), p. 347 f., s.v.

PIE, or PICA. The name given in England in the 15th cent. to the Ordinale or Directorium, the book of directions for saying the service, and relating its various parts, esp. the *occurrence and *concurrence of *movable and immovable feasts. This work, which took the place of the modern Ordo recitandi divini officii or Kalendar, is censured in the Preface to the 1549 BCP (since 1662 headed 'Concerning the Service of the Church') for 'the number and hardness of its rules'.

PIERRE D'AILLY. See D'Ailly, Pierre.

PIETÀ. A representation, often in sculpture, of the BVM lamenting over the dead body of Christ, which she holds on her knees. Of 13th cent. German origin, it reached its perfection in Renaissance Italy, as may be seen from the famous work by *Michelangelo in St. Peter's, Rome.

F. Röhrig in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 497 f., s.v., with bibl.

PIETISM. A 17th cent. movement in the German *Lutheran Church, started by P. J. *Spener (q.v.) with the purpose of infusing new life into the lifeless official Protestantism of its time. Spener was convinced that by its exclusive stress on dogmatic orthodoxy, Lutheranism had ceased to be a living faith, and with a view to reform put forth a set of six proposals for restoring true religion in his Pia Desideria (1675). The movement began with religious meetings in his house. He instituted devotional circles for prayer, Bible reading, &c., and proclaimed the universal priesthood of all the faithful, without, however, intending to separate from the Church. The movement quickly won support from a large body of pastors and in P. *Gerhardt it found a hymn-writer whose compositions did much to spread its ideals. But a clash with the orthodox became inevitable when his friend and disciple, A. H. *Francke (d. 1727), attacked the Leipzig theologians, demanding the conversion of lectures into devotional meetings and condemning wholesale philosophy, doctrine, and homiletics. Francke had to leave Leipzig, but before long a new university was founded by Frederick III at Halle (1694) which for several years was the centre of the movement. A body, chiefly of younger theologians, helped to carry the movement throughout Protestant Germany. Through want of consistent leadership, however, the movement took on different aspects in the different districts. In Halle it developed into a hard-and-fast system of penance, grace, and rebirth, while at *Herrnhut, in the settlement of Spener's godson, Count von *Zinzendorf, it consisted chiefly in personal devotion to the Redeemer. In its various forms Pietism has lasted into the present century, and has affected many similar movements in other countries, J. *Wesley's *Methodism among them. In modern times German theologians have differed widely in their assessments of Pietism. It was vigorously attacked, in common with other forms of mysticism, by A. *Ritschl and his school.

The literature is nearly all in German, the standard work being A. Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus (3 vols., 1880–6). H. Schmid, Die Geschichte des Pietismus (1863); [F.] A. [G.] *Tholuck, Geschichte des Rationalismus, i, Geschichte des Pietismus und des ersten Stadiums der Aufklärung (1865), pp. 9–91; H. Heppe, Geschichte des Pietismus und der Mystik in der reformierten Kirche, namentlich der Niederlande (1879). E. Sachsse, Ursprung und Wesen des Pietismus (1884). H. Weigelt, Pietismus-Studien (Arbeiten zur Theologie, II. Reihe, iv, 1965 ff.), with extensive bibl. F. E. Stoeffler, The Rise of Evangelical Pietism (Studies in the History of Religions, ix; 1965), esp. pp. 180–246. C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 774–815, s.v. 'Pietismus' [at end of the vol.]; E. S. Waterhouse in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 6–9, s.v.; M. Schmidt–M. Stallmann in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 370–83, s.v. 'Pietismus'; F. W. Zeeden in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 499–501, s.v. 'Pietismus', with full bibl. See also bibl. to Spener, P. J., and Francke, A. H.

PIGHI, ALBERT (c. 1490–1542), theologian. A native of Kampen in Holland, he studied at Louvain and *Cologne and in 1523 was called to Rome by *Hadrian VI. Here he took a prominent part in writing on the main issues of his time. In 1525 he wrote a treatise Adversus Graecorum Errores (preserved in MS. in the *Vatican Library) to pave the way for reunion with the Orthodox Church. He also prepared a memorandum, since lost, on *Henry VIII's divorce project. His principal work, Hierarchiae Ecclesiasticae Assertio (Cologne, 1538), was an elaborate defence of *tradition as a source of Christian truth co-ordinate with Scripture. In his opposition to M. *Luther and J. *Calvin he emphasized human free-will to such an extent as to imperil belief in *Original Sin. On the other hand he formulated a doctrine of justification which had affinities with Luther's teaching and was repudiated at the Council of *Trent. At the Colloquy of *Ratisbon (1541) he took part on the Catholic side.

Correspondence ed. W. Friedensburg in Z.K.G., xxiii (1902), pp. 110–55. [A.] Linsenmann, 'Albertus Pighius and sein theologischer Standpunkt' in Th.Q., xlviii (1866), pp. 571–644. H. Jedin, Studien über die Schriftstellertätigkeit Albert Pigges (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, lv; 1931). É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2094–2104, s.v., with useful bibl.

PILATE, PONTIUS. The governor ('procurator') of Judaea from A.D. 26 to 36 under whom Christ was crucified. The Gospels represent him as at first well disposed towards Jesus, but as having finally yielded to the populace through fear of the consequences of an acquittal. The data as to his character contained in *Josephus and *Philo are in full accord with the NT narratives, their additional evidence showing him in anything but a favourable light. The tradition in *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., ii. 7) that he committed suicide may well be correct. Late legends embroidered this theme in the interest of Christianity, and also gave the name of his wife (Mt. 27. 19) as 'Claudia Procula'. In the *Coptic Church he is revered as a martyr (feast day, 25 June). See also foll. entry.

The principal authorities, apart from the NT, include Philo, Leg. ad Gaium, xxxviii; Josephus, Antiquitates, xviii. 3, and Bell. Jud., ii. 8 f. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, i (ed. 3, 1901), pp. 488–93, with reff. to earlier lit. M. J. Ollivier, O.P., 'Ponce Pilate et les Pontil' in R. Bibl., v (1896), pp. 247–54 and 549–60. M. *Dibelius, '"Herodes und Pilatus"' in Z.N.T.W., xvi (1915), pp. 113–26. U. Holzmeister, S.J., 'Wann war Pilatus Prokurator von Judaea?' in Biblica, xiii (1932), pp. 228–32. E. von Dobschütz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 397–401, s.v. 'Pilatus'. A. *Souter in D.C.G., ii (1908), pp. 363–6; É. Fascher in P.W., xx (pt. 2; 1950), col. 1322 f., s.v.

PILATE, Acts of. An apocryphal work giving an account of the trial, death, and resurrection of Christ. In some MSS. an independent treatise on the *Descent of Christ into *Hades is attached to it. From the 13th cent. onwards, the two together have been sometimes known as the 'Gospel of *Nicodemus'.

The first part, the 'Acts' proper, is generally held to be not earlier than the 4th cent., though references to the existence of Acts of Pilate in earlier writers, notably in *Justin Martyr (Apol., i. 35, 48), have led some scholars to contend that the book is based on a 2nd cent. original, and that this work may even have been founded on authentic records of Christ's trial. It seems more probable, however, that Justin was referring to an independent treatise. As it is known that fictitious accounts of the trial were put into circulation under the Emp. Maximin (early 4th cent.) in the interests of paganism, it is not impossible that the Acts of Pilate were compiled as a reply. The book draws extensively on the four canonical Gospels, to which it is evidently seeking to provide supplementary material, including fresh grounds for belief in Christ's *Resurrection.

The second part purports to have been written by the two sons of the aged *Simeon, Carinus and Leucius. It describes with much detail the effect of Christ's presence among the imprisoned souls in Hades (cf. 1 Pet. 3. 19, on which it is based).

The two documents were probably not united before the 5th cent. The work forms the basis of the medieval play-cycle on the *Harrowing of Hell and of the legends of St. *Joseph of Arimathaea and the Holy *Grail.

Lat. and Gk. recensions ed. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853), pp. 203–412 (ed. 2, 1876, pp. 210–434); Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 94–146. Further ed. of Lat. and Gk. in parallel cols. by P. Vannutelli (Rome, 1938). Coptic text ed. E. Revillout in P.O., ix (1913), pp. 57–132. Syriac text ed., with Lat. tr., by I. E. Rahmani, Studia Syriaca, ii (Charfat, 1908). Armenian text, retranslated into Lat. and Gk., by F. C. *Conybeare in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, iv (Oxford, 1896), pp. 59–132. R. A. *Lipsius, Die Pilatus-Akten kritisch untersucht (1871). S. Brock, 'A Fragment of the Acta Pilati in Christian Palestinian Aramaic' in J.T.S., N.S., xxii (1971), p. 157 f., with further reff. F. Scheidweiler in Schneemelcher, i (1959), pp. 330–58; Eng. tr., i (1963), pp. 444–84, incl. Eng. tr. of text. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 115–18. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 543–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 127 f. E. von Dobschütz in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 544–7, with bibl.

PILGRIM FATHERS, The. The English founders of the colony of Plymouth, Massachusetts, who sailed from Holland and England in the Mayflower in Sept. 1620. The title 'Pilgrim Fathers' is comparatively modern. In 1630 William Bradford, the Governor, wrote of his company as 'pilgrims' (with a ref. to Heb. 11. 13), and such language was gradually adopted in New England, e.g. on 22 Dec. 1798 a feast of the 'Sons' or 'Heirs of the Pilgrims' was held at Boston, at which the memory of 'the Fathers' was celebrated. In this way the phrase 'Pilgrim Fathers' eventually came into common use.

C. M. Andrews, The Colonial Period of American History (4 vols., 1934–8), esp. i, pp. 249–78, with full bibl. notes on primary sources.

PILGRIMAGES. Journeys to holy places undertaken from motives of devotion in order to obtain supernatural help or as acts of penance or thanksgiving. The practice of pilgrimage is common to most higher religions, e.g. Hinduism (Benares) and Islam (Mecca), and is due to the natural desire of men to visit the places where their great heroes have lived and died and to the deep-seated conviction that certain localities are particularly favoured by the Godhead. In Christianity the fact of the Incarnation is the sufficient explanation of the early custom of visiting the places consecrated by the presence of Christ. The practice received a strong impulse from the conversion of *Constantine, followed by the visit of the Empress *Helena to *Jerusalem (326), and later in the 4th cent. from the example of St. *Jerome. The 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae' (q.v.) is an illuminating account of one of these pilgrimages in the early Church. Almost on an equal footing with those to Palestine were pilgrimages to Rome, to the tomb of the Apostles, Peter and Paul ('ad limina Apostolorum'), which came to be much frequented by Anglo-Saxon princes and nobles. To these the growing veneration of saints and images soon added many others, the most famous being Santiago de *Compostela. From the 8th cent. the practice of imposing a pilgrimage in the place of a public penance added to the number of pilgrims, so that throughout the Middle Ages they were organized on a grand scale and provided for by special ecclesiastical and civil legislation. Abuses which had already called forth the censure of St. *Chrysostom and St. Jerome increased with the popularity of the devotion and were satirized by *Erasmus in his 'Religious Pilgrimage'. The Reformation marked a notable setback, but the growth of popular piety in the period of the *Counter-Reformation led to a revival of the practice. In modern times *Lourdes has acquired an unrivalled fame as a place of pilgrimage, and in England the restoration of the shrines of the BVM at *Walsingham has once more attracted Anglican, RC, and Orthodox worshippers.

P. Geyer (ed.), Itinera Hierosolymitana Saeculi iiii–viii (C.S.E.L., xxxix; 1898). Various texts also collected in Itineraria et Alia Geographica (C.C., Series Latina, clxxv–clxxvi; 1965). Further primary material publd. in The Library of the Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society, vols. i–xii (London, 1888–97). B. Kötting, Peregrinatio Religiosa. Wallfahrten in der Antike und das Pilgerwesen in der alten Kirche (1950). R. Roussel, Les Pèlerinages à travers les siècles (1954); R. Oursel, Les Pèlerins du moyen âge (1963); L. Bonilla, Los peregrinos. Sus origenes, ritus y religiones (1965); A. Kendall, Medieval Pilgrims (1970). L. de Sivry–M. Champagnac, Dictionnaire géographique, historique, descriptif, archéologique des pèlerinages anciens et modernes, publié par l'Abbé *Migne (2 vols., 1850–1). S. Heath, Pilgrim Life in the Middle Ages (1911). G. H. Jones, Celtic Britain and the Pilgrim Movement (Y Cymmrodor. The Magazine of the Society of Cymmrodorion, xxiii; 1912). Bede Camm, O.S.B., Forgotten Shrines (1910); id., Pilgrim Paths in Latin Lands (1923). L. Vázquez de Parga–J. M. Lacarra–J. Uría Ríu, Las peregrinaciones a Santiago de Compostela (3 vols., 1948–9). Bede Jarrett, O.P., in C.E., xii (1911), pp. 85–99, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 65–176, s.v. 'Pèlerinages aux lieux saints', with bibl.; id., ib., cols. 40–65, s.v. 'Pèlerinage à Rome'; J. Hasenfuss, A. Deissler and B. Kötting in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 941–6, s.v. 'Wallfahrt'; S. M. Polan, M. C. McCarthy and E. R. Labande in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 362–72.

PILGRIMAGE OF GRACE, The. A series of risings in Lincs, Yorks and other counties of the N. of England, which took place between Oct. 1536 and Feb. 1537. The rising in Yorks, which was the most serious, was called by the participants 'this pilgrimage of grace for the commonwealth'. The religious element in the risings varied, and has been variously assessed; the Lincs rising was characterized by H. A. L. Fisher as 'a great conservative demonstration'. The risings were not aimed at *Henry VIII personally, but the mixed grievances of the N. culminated in insurrection as a result of the widespread hatred of T. *Cromwell and of government innovations in ecclesiastical matters (esp. the *dissolution of the lesser monasteries, and the attacks on the Sacraments and on saints' days in the *Ten Articles). In Lincs and Yorks some peers and gentry took the lead. R. *Aske, who led the Yorks rebellion, assembled c. 30,000 men and treated with the government on equal terms; but promises of a parliament and a free pardon led him to disband his force and the King won him over at a private interview. Unrest, however, continued and might have become general, and it is unlikely that the King's intentions were at any stage honourable; a further outbreak in E. Yorks early in 1537 afforded a pretext for government action. At Henry's order over 200 rebels were hanged in the N. as a 'fearful spectacle' to others; Aske himself was charged with treason and hanged in chains.

M. H. Dodds–R. Dodds, The Pilgrimage of Grace, 1536–37, and the Exeter Conspiracy, 1538 (2 vols., 1915). M. Bateson, 'The Pilgrimage of Grace' in E.H.R., v (1890), pp. 330–45; id., 'Aske's Examination', ib., pp. 750–3; H. A. L. Fisher, The History of England from the Accession of Henry VII. to the death of Henry VIII. (The Political History of England, v, 1906), pp. 395–417; A. G. Dickens, 'The Yorkshire Submission to Henry VIII, 1541' in E.H.R., liii (1938), pp. 267–75; id., Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York 1509–1558 (1959), passim; id., 'Secular and Religious Motivation in the Pilgrimage of Grace' in Studies in Church History, iv (1967), pp. 39–64; C. S. L. Davies, 'The Pilgrimage of Grace Reconsidered' in Past and Present, no. 41 (1968), pp. 54–76; M. E. James, 'Obedience and Dissent in Henrician England: The Lincolnshire Rebellion 1536', ib., no. 48 (1970), pp. 3–78; G. R. Elton, 'Politics and the Pilgrimage of Grace' in Barbara C. Malament (ed.), After the Reformation: Essays in Honor of J. H. Hexter (Philadelphia, Pa., 1980), pp. 25–56.

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, The. The First Part of the masterpiece of J. *Bunyan (q.v.), prob. written not (as traditionally held) during his long imprisonment in Bedford gaol (1660–72), but during a second six months' confinement in 1676, was published in February 1678 (N.S.); a fresh edition, with many additions, appeared later in the same year; while the Second Part, depicting 'the manner of setting out of Christian's wife and children', did not appear until 1684. Attempts to identify an underlying medieval or Renaissance model have failed. Bunyan had but the most meagre historical knowledge and interests; and it is far more probable that the work owes everything to his own originality.

Its unrivalled place in the world's religious literature rests on its artless directness, its imaginative power, the homeliness and rusticity of its method and its plainness of style, which give it its universal appeal, even to the most simple-minded. The persons and incidents encountered by Christian on his journey from the 'City of Destruction' to the 'Heavenly City'—'Evangelist', 'Mr. Worldly-Wiseman', 'Mr. Legality' and his son 'Civility', Mr. 'Talkative, the son of Mr. Saywell, who dwelt in Prating Row', 'Mr. Facing-both-ways', and 'Greatheart', and, of places, the 'Slough of Despond', the 'Hill Difficulty', the 'House Beautiful' (supposed to have been modelled on an actual house in Houghton Park), the 'Valley of the Shadow of the Death', and 'Vanity Fair'—have become part and parcel of the language of religion in England.

The book, which circulated at first mainly in uneducated circles and whose supreme qualities were only gradually recognized, has appeared in a vast number of editions, and been translated into well over 100 languages. It has also been the subject of many adaptations (issued under similar titles), for the most part wholly without independent merit. The well-known hymn, 'He who would valiant be', is a modification of some lines sung by the pilgrims on the way to the 'Enchanted Ground'.

Good modern ed. by J. B. Wharey (Oxford, 1928; revised by R. Sharrock, 1960), with full discussion of earlier edd. and bibl. See also bibl. to Bunyan, J.

PILKINGTON, JAMES (c. 1520–76), Bp. of *Durham. A native of Lancs, he was educated at Pembroke Hall and St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1539 he was elected a Fellow, and in 1559 became Master, of St. John's College. In warm sympathy with the Reformation, he disputed at Cambridge, on 24 June 1549, against *Transubstantiation. During the Marian Persecution he lived principally at Protestant centres on the Continent. Returning to England from Frankfurt after Mary's death in 1558, he now became a prominent member of the Protestant party in the C of E. He took an active part in the revision of the BCP and, as Master of St. John's and Regius professor of divinity at Cambridge, upheld the tenets of Reformation theology in the university. Towards the end of 1560 he was appointed Bp. of Durham, thus becoming the first Protestant occupant of the see. His strong support of the Protestant cause in his diocese provoked much hostility and he and his family fled when the insurgents broke into Durham Cathedral during the Northern Rebellion of 1569. He upheld the temporal rights of his see with vigour, but failed as an administrator, allowing many of the buildings in his diocese to fall into decay. His writings include commentaries on *Haggai (Aggeus, 1560), *Obadiah (Abdias, publd. with a new edition of Aggeus, 1562), and *Nehemiah (1585, ed. posthumously by John Fox), as well as a treatise on 'The Burning of Paul's Church in London [4 June 1561] by Lightning'.

Works ed. J. Scholefield (*Parker Society, 1842), with biographical introd., pp. i–xvi. Episcopal Register ed. and calendared by Gladys Hinde (Surtees Society, clxi, 1952, pp. 140–82). J. Pilkington, The History of the Lancashire Family of Pilkington and its Branches from 1066 to 1600 (ed. 2, Liverpool, 1894), pp. 43–9, with portrait, and text of his will, pp. 94–7. C. W. Sutton in D.N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 293–5.

PILLAR SAINTS. See Stylites.

PIN, L. E. DU. See Dupin, L. E.

PIONIUS, St. (d. 250), martyr. He was executed at Smyrna during the *Decian persecution, having been arrested while celebrating the anniversary of the martyrdom of St. *Polycarp. The 'Acta Pionii', which describe his death, were known to *Eusebius, and are reliable documents. It was he who was responsible for the preservation of the 'Martyrium Polycarpi', but the attribution to him of the extant Life of St. Polycarp is probably incorrect, though its authenticity has been defended (e.g. by C. J. Cadoux). Feast day in the E., 11 Mar.; in Latin martyrologies, 1 Feb.

Eusebius, H.E., IV. xv. 46 f. The Greek 'Acta' (contemporary, but with slight 4th cent. revision) discovered by O. von Gebhardt in 1896 in the Cod. Ven. Marc. 359. Text in id., Acta Martyrum Selecta (1902), pp. 96–114; repr., with Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 137–67. Lat. text in AA.SS., Feb. I (1735), pp. 40–6. E. *Schwartz, De Pionio et Polycarpo (Göttingen, 1905); H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 28–59. L. Wohleb, 'Die Überlieferung des Pionios-Martyriums' in R.Q., xxxvii (1929), pp. 173–7. H. Grégoire–P. Orgels–J. Moreau, 'Les Martyres de Pionios et de Polycarpe' in Académie Royale de Belgique. Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, 5e Série, xlvii (1961), pp. 72–83. C. J. Cadoux, Ancient Smyrna (1938), pp. 306–10 note.

PIPPIN III. See Pepin III.

PIRCKHEIMER, WILLIBALD (1470–1530), German humanist. Born at Eichstätt, he studied Greek at Padua (1489) and Law at Pavia (1492). In 1497 he became a town councillor at Nuremberg, where his house soon became a centre of learning. In 1499 he led the Nuremberg contingent in the Swiss War, of which he wrote a famous history, Bellum Helveticum (first publd. 1610). After his return he devoted himself to the translation of the Greek classics and Fathers into Latin, as well as to historical, astronomical, and artistic studies. He became a friend of A. *Dürer and a defender of J. *Reuchlin. At the beginning of the Reformation he favoured M. *Luther, whose chief opponent, J. *Eck, he attacked in the virulent pamphlet Eccius Dedolatus, now generally acknowledged to be his work. He regretted, however, Luther's break with the Church. In 1521, under the influence of his brilliant and devout sister, Charitas, abbess of the convent of *Poor Clares at Nuremberg, he asked to be absolved from the ban of excommunication which he had incurred as a follower of the Reformer. In his later years he completely abandoned Luther. His last work is an apology for the persecuted convent of his sister, entitled Oratio Apologetica (1529).

Collected ed. of Pirckheimer's works ed. M. Goldas (Frankfurt a.M., 1610). Modern ed. of Eccius Dedolatus by S. Szamatólski (Berlin, 1891); of his writings on the Swiss War (from the autograph in the Brit. Mus.) and his Autobiography by K. Rück (Munich, 1895). Correspondence ed. E. Reicke (vol. i, Munich, 1940; vol. ii, ib., 1956). Lives by F. Roth (Halle, 1887) and E. Reicke ('Deutsche Volkheit', Jena, 1930). P. Drews, Willibald Pirckheimers Stellung zur Reformation (1887). L. W. Spitz, The Religious Renaissance of the German Humanists (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), pp. 155–96. F. List in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 405–9, with bibl.; K. Löffler in C.E., xii (1911), p. 109.

PIRMINIUS, St. (d. 753), perhaps 'Priminius', first Abbot of *Reichenau. He was probably of Visigothic nationality (not Frankish, Irish, or Anglo-Saxon). With the protection of *Charles Martel he founded Reichenau (724) and other monasteries among the Alamanni in Baden and in Alsace, which became important centres of religious and cultural development. His Scarapsus (also Dicta Pirmini), which circulated widely in Carolingian times, is of interest as the earliest document containing the *Apostles' Creed in its present form. Feast day, 3 Nov.

Life (9th cent.) and other material in AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 2–56. 'Dicta Abbatis Pirminii, de Singulis Libris Canonicis Scarapsus', ed. C. P. *Caspari in his Kirchenhistorische Anecdota, i (1883), pp. 149–93. G. Jecker, Die Heimat des hl. Pirmin des Apostels der Alamannen (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, xiii; 1927), with text of 'Dicta', pp. 34–73. F. Flaskamp, 'Zur Pirminforschung' in Z.K.G., xliv (1925), pp. 199–202. On his connexions with the Apostles' Creed, see J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950), esp. pp. 407–9. A. Köhler–A. *Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 409–12.

PIRQE ABOTH (Heb. פִּרְקֵי אָבוֹת, 'Sayings [lit. 'Sections'] of the Fathers'). A set of Jewish aphorisms on Wisdom, similar to those in Ecclus. They are assigned to some sixty different doctors and preserved in the *Mishnah as a separate tractate. Many are purely utilitarian, others are on a high moral level and constant stress is laid on the study of the Law. The collection appears to date from the period A.D. 70–170. There is no commentary on Pirqe Aboth in the main body of the Babylonian *Talmud, but it is the subject of commentary in one of the Minor Tractates, the so-called Aboth de Rabbi Nathan. There are several points of contact with the sayings in the Gospels.

Modern edition by C. Taylor (1877; ed. 2, 1900). Eng. trr. in R. H. *Charles, Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (1913), pp. 686–714; by W. O. E. Oesterley–G. H. Box (London, 1919), and in H. Danby, The Mishnah (1933), pp. 446–61. Eng. tr. of the Aboth de Rabbi Nathan by J. Goldin, The Fathers according to Rabbi Nathan (Yale Judaica Series, x; 1955).

PISA, Council of. It was convoked by the cardinals in 1409 in order to end the *Great Schism which had divided W. Christendom since 1378. Though both Popes held rival councils, *Benedict XIII at Perpignan and Gregory XII at Cividale near *Aquileia, the assembly at Pisa was fairly representative, comprising besides a number of prelates the ambassadors of most European princes. After declaring itself canonically convoked and *oecumenical, the Council deposed both Popes as schismatics and heretics and elected Cardinal Peter Philargi, who took the name of *Alexander V, promised to work for the reform of the Church, and dissolved the Council.

The authority of the Council of Pisa has been much discussed. It is not recognized by the RC Church as oecumenical, e.g. on the ground of its not having been convoked by the Pope, but it was defended by J. *Gerson and P. *d'Ailly and later by the *Gallicans. Though it did not end the Schism, which, on the contrary, became worse than before by the existence of three Popes, it is generally admitted that it paved the way for the final solution found at the Council of *Constance (1417).

Hardouin, viii, cols. 1–204; Mansi, xxvi (1784), cols. 1131–1256, xxvii (1784), cols. 1–502. Crit. ed. of the Acta by J. Vincke, in R.Q., xlvi (1941), pp. 81–331. Id., Briefe zum Pisaner Konzil (Beiträge zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, i; 1940); id., Schriftstücke zum Pisaner Konzil. Ein Kampf um die öffentliche Meinung (ib., iii; 1942). Hefele–Leclercq, vii (pt. 1; 1914), pp. 1–69. J. Lenfant, Histoire du concile de Pise, et de ce qui s'est passé de mémorable depuis ce concile jusqu'au concile de Constance (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1724). F. Bliemetzrieder, Das Generalkonzil im grossen abendländischen Schisma (1904), esp. pp. 221–329. L. Schmitz, 'Zur Geschichte des Konzils von Pisa 1409' in R.Q., ix (1895), pp. 351–75. O. Günther, 'Zur Vorgeschichte des Konzils von Pisa' in N.A., xli (1919), pp. 632–76. G. Mollat in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2128–30, s.v.; J. Vincke in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), col. 520 f., s.v. See also works cited under Conciliar Movement.

PISCINA (Lat., 'basin'). A niche in the wall usually on the S. side of the altar for the ablutions of the priest's hands and of the chalice and paten at Mass. It is usually furnished with a shelf to hold the cruets and has a drain (sacrarium) connected with the earth, to receive the water used for the ceremonies. The piscina is of medieval origin; in a few English parish churches and in the crypt of *Gloucester Cathedral, piscinas date back to the Norman period. Sometimes two piscinas were set side by side, the one perhaps being reserved for the washing of the priest's hands, the other for the cleansing of the sacred vessels. They are often richly decorated.

Rohault, iii (1883), pp. 140–4. F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 143–63.

PISGAH (Vulg. 'Phasga'). The mountain or mountain-range to the east of the river *Jordan where *Moses was granted a sight of the Holy Land at the end of his life and the promise made that his descendants would possess it (Dt. 34. 1–4). This revelation to Moses is the source of such phrases as a 'Pisgah view', a 'Pisgah prospect', for any vision or hope of which a man will not himself see the realization.

PISTIS SOPHIA. This curious work, a product of 3rd cent. Egyptian Christianity, is contained in a solitary *Coptic MS. in the British Museum (Add. 5114), formerly the property of Dr. Anthony Askew (d. 1774). It purports to record instructions given by Jesus to certain disciples at the end of a twelve-year sojourn upon earth after the Resurrection. With fantastic imagery, interspersed with jejune canticles, it relates the salvation of the personified 'Pistis Sophia' (i.e. 'Faith-Wisdom') from a demon named 'Self-Will'. Ascetic rules are appended which a man must follow if he is to escape the menace of evil powers and win through to the Kingdom of Light. In his own strange fashion the author emphasizes above all things the condescending Incarnation of Jesus, who is the greatest yet simplest of all Mysteries and in whom the contradictions of the universe are explained. The concluding chapters comprise a separate work of slightly earlier date. Both works appear to be translations from the Greek. Acc. to C. Schmidt, the MS. dates from the later 4th cent.

Text ed., with Lat. tr., by M. G. Schwartze–J. H. Petermann (Berlin, 1851); Fr. tr. by E. Amélineau (Paris, 1895); Eng. tr. by G. Horner, with introd. by F. Legge (London, 1924). Modern ed. of Coptic text by C. Schmidt (Copenhagen, 1925) and Germ. tr. by id. (Leipzig, 1925). A. *Harnack, Über das gnostische Buch Pistis Sophia (T.U., vii, Hft. 2, 1891, pp. 1–114). F. C. *Burkitt, 'Pistis Sophia' in J.T.S., xxiii (1921–2), pp. 271–80; id., 'Pistis Sophia and the Coptic Language', ib., xxvii (1925–6), pp. 148–57. H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, i (1959), pp. 174–83; Eng. tr., i (1963), pp. 250–9. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 354–6, 357 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 131 f. J. *Moffatt in H.E.R.E., x (1918), pp. 45–8, with full bibl. to date; G. Quispel in R.G.G. (ed. 3), v (1961), cols. 386–8, s.v.; H. Leisegang in P.W., xx (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1813–21, s.v.

PISTOIA, Synod of (1786). The Synod met under the presidency of Scipio de' *Ricci, Bp. of Pistoia-Prato, to give support to the policy of Leopold I, Grand Duke of Tuscany (1765–1790), who was strongly in favour of a reform of the Church along the lines pursued by *Gallicanism in France and *Josephinism in Austria-Hungary. The Synod adopted the Four *Gallican Articles of 1682, based the authority of the Church upon the consent of the body as a whole, and that of bishops upon the assent of their clergy in synod, and held that the jurisdiction of a diocesan bishop is independent of the Pope. It exalted the civil power, and also decreed alterations in religious practice, requiring that there should be one altar only in each church, and one Mass only each Sunday; it also condemned the use of Latin in services, and the cult of the *Sacred Heart. Not unnaturally the proposals aroused popular opposition as well as official displeasure. In 1790 Ricci resigned his see; but on the issue of the bull '*Auctorem Fidei', condemning 85 of the Pistoian articles, he recanted.

The acts of the synod were publd. in 1786 in Lat. and Ital. at Florence, and in Fr. at Pistoia; ed. 2 of the Lat. and Ital., Florence, 1788, and of the Fr., Pistoia–Paris, 1789. Mansi (cont. by J. B. Martin–L. Petit, A.A.), xxxviii (Paris, 1907), cols. 989–1282. Much primary information in de' Ricci's Memorie and in his letters. C. A. Bolton, Church Reform in 18th Century Italy (The Synod of Pistoia, 1786) (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, xxix; The Hague, 1969), esp. pp. 55–114. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2134–230, s.v. 'Pistoie (Synode de)', with bibl.; B. Matteucci in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 388–90, s.v. See also bibl. to Ricci, S. de' and Auctorem Fidei; also lives of Pius VI.

PITHOU, PIERRE (1539–96), *Gallican theologian. He came of a family of distinguished jurists. Brought up a Calvinist and called to the bar at Paris in 1560, he was converted to Catholicism in 1573. Later he received legal appointments from *Henry IV, whom he supported in his struggles with the League. Besides important political writings, which include his Satire ménippée (1593) and editions of several texts of the classics, he prepared for publication (in conjunction with his brother François) a text of the Corpus Iuris Canonici* (issued in 1687). In his treatise, Les Libertés de l'Église gallicane (1594), the leading principles of Gallicanism were formulated for the first time. His extensive collection of MSS., some of them of great value for the text of the early conciliar canons, is now in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris.

Collected ed. of Pithou's Opera Sacra, Iuridica, Historica, Miscellanea, Paris, 1609, with life by I. Mercerus, dated 1597, pp. 819–27. [P. J.] Grosley, Vie de Pierre Pithou; avec quelques mémoires sur son père, et sur ses frères (2 vols., 1756), vol. i, and vol. ii, pp. 1–105. L. de Rosanbo, 'Pierre Pithou' in Revue du Seizième Siècle, xv (1928), pp. 279–305; id., 'Pierre Pithou érudit', ib., xvi (1929), pp. 301–30. G. Goyau in C.E., xii (1911), p. 118 f., s.v.; J. Carreyre in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2235–8, s.v.

PITRA, JEAN BAPTISTE FRANÇOIS (1812–89), *patristic scholar. He was ordained priest in 1836, and his reputation as an archaeologist was soon established by his decipherment (1839) of the 'Inscription of Autun', a (probably 3rd cent.) grave-inscription. In 1843 he was professed as a Benedictine at *Solesmes, and for a short time he gave valuable co-operation to J. P. *Migne in the editing of his Patrologiae. He then travelled widely in search of MSS., in 1858 at the behest of *Pius IX visiting several Russian libraries. His knowledge of many branches of patristic and Byzantine literature was unrivalled. Having been created cardinal in 1863, in 1869 he was appointed Librarian of the *Vatican, in which capacity *Leo XIII employed him to catalogue the Palatine Greek codices in the library. His publications include Spicilegium Solesmense (4 vols., 1852–8) and Analecta Sacra (8 vols., 1876–91), both containing many previously unpublished patristic texts, and an important collection of canonical material, Iuris Ecclesiastici Graecorum Historia et Monumenta (2 vols., 1864–8).

Lives by F. *Cabrol, O.S.B. (Paris, 1893), and A. Battandier (ib., 1896). There is also a short biographical introd. by A. Battandier prefixed to the posthumously publd. vol. vi of the Analecta Sacra (Paris–Rome, 1891), pp. viii–xix. List of his works in F. Cabrol, O.S.B. (ed.), Bibliographie des Bénédictins de la Congrégation de France (Solesmes, 1889), pp. 37–52 and 197. M. Ott in C.E., xii (1911), p. 119 f.; P. Séjourné, O.S.B., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2238–45, s.v.

PIUS I, St. (d. c. 154), Bp. of *Rome from c. 140. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis* he was a native of *Aquileia and acc. to the *Muratorian Fragment he was the brother of *Hermas, the author of the 'Shepherd', but nothing certain is known of his pontificate. The tradition that he was a martyr has no early authority. Feast day, 11 July.

L.P. (Duchesne), i, p. 132 f. J. Barmby in D.C.B., iv (1887), p. 416 f., s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), col. 1612 f., s.v. 'Pie Ier'.

PIUS II (1405–64), (Aeneas Sylvius), Pope from 1458. Enea Silvio de' Piccolomini, born of a poor noble family at Corsignano (near Siena), studied at Siena and Florence, where he became one of the greatest representatives of the humanism of his age. In 1432 he went to the Council of *Basle as secretary of Cardinal D. Capranica, and later served several other prelates in the same capacity; and in 1435 he was sent on a secret mission to *Scotland by Cardinal N. Albergati. On his return to Basle in the following year his personal influence on the Council began to increase; he supported the adversaries of Pope *Eugenius IV and worked for the antipope, Felix V, who made him his secretary in 1439 after Enea had refused to take orders on account of his dissolute life. In the service of Felix he became an eloquent advocate of the *Conciliar Theory set forth in his Libellus Dialogorum de Concilii Auctoritate (1440). Crowned Imperial poet by the Emp. Frederick III in 1442, he became his secretary in the same year. In 1444 he wrote his much-admired love story, Euryalus and Lucretia. In 1445 he left the party of the antipope, was absolved of excommunication, and reconciled to Eugenius IV, to whom he now rendered valuable services by winning over the Emperor to his side and breaking up the Electors' League. At the same time he reformed his moral life and, in 1446, received holy orders. Appointed Bp. of Trieste by *Nicolas V in 1447, he was translated to Siena in 1450. From the fall of *Constantinople in 1453 he began to work enthusiastically for a *Crusade. In 1456 he was created cardinal by *Callistus III, whom, after a fierce conflict in the *conclave, he succeeded in 1458.

Pius II now subordinated all other interests to the war against the Turks, who became a daily increasing menace to Europe. When the Congress of Mantua (1459–60) had revealed the selfishness and lack of solidarity of the European princes, the Pope took the initiative in proclaiming a three-year Crusade. At the end of the Congress he promulgated the bull 'Execrabilis' (18 Jan. 1460), in which he condemned the practice of appealing to a General Council. He won a victory for these doctrines in Louis XI's repeal of the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges in 1461, but Bohemia under Podiebrad and a great number of German princes were in more or less open revolt against Pius, invoking his own former views in their support. This led him to publish his bull, 'In minoribus agentes' (26 Apr. 1463), in which occur the famous words 'Aeneam rejicite, Pium suscipite', retracting his earlier political doctrines. As he could not expect more than a strictly limited support from the European powers, Pius resolved, in 1463, to put himself at the head of the Crusaders, but he died at Ancona soon afterwards. His character and motives have been variously judged; but he was at least one of the best Popes of his age.

Opera, publd. Basle, 1551; Orationes Politicae et Ecclesiasticae, ed. G. D. *Mansi (3 pts. in 2 vols., Lucca, 1755–9); Epistolae, ed. R. Wolkan (Fontes Rerum Austriacarum, lxi, lxii, lxvii, and lxviii; 1909–18). 'Aeneae Silvii Piccolomini Senensis qui postea fuit Pius II P.M. Opera Inedita descripsit ex codicibus Chisianis vulgavit notisque illustravit J. Cugnoni' in Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, ser. 3, Memorie della Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, viii (1883), pp. 319–686. Selection of his writings ed. B. Widmer (Basle–Stuttgart, 1960). The standard (though incomplete) ed. of his Commentaries on the memorable events of his times is that publd. at Frankfurt, 1614; Eng. tr. by F. A. Gragg, with introd. and notes by L. C. Gabel (Smith College Studies in History, xxii, Nos. 1–2, xxv, Nos. 1–4, xxx, xxxv, xliii; Northampton, Mass., 1937–57). Abridged version ed. L. C. Gabel, Memoirs of a Renaissance Pope (London, 1960). Modern ed. of lives by Giovanni Antonio Campano and B. *Platina ed. G. C. Zimolo (Raccolta degli Storici Italiani, nuova edizione, Tomo iii, Parte 2; Bologna, 1964) and, with Eng. tr., of his De Gestis Concilii Basiliensis Commentariorum Libri II by D. Hay and W. K. Smith (Oxford, 1967). G. Voigt, Enea Silvio de Piccolomini, als Papst Pius der Zweite und sein Zeitalter (3 vols., 1856–63). W. Boulting, Aeneas Silvius . . . Orator, Man of Letters, Statesman and Pope (1908); Cecilia M. Ady, Pius II. . . . The Humanist Pope (1913). T. Buyken, Enea Silvio Piccolomini. Sein Leben und Wirken bis zum Episkopat (1931). G. Paparelli, Enea Silvio Piccolomini: Pio II (1950). R. J. Mitchell, The Laurels and the Tiara. Pope Pius II 1458–1464 (1962). B. Widmer, Enea Silvio Piccolomini in der sittlichen und politischen Entscheidung (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, lxxxviii; 1963). L. M. Veit, Pensiero e vita religiosa di Enea Silvio Piccolomini prima della sua consecrazione episcopale (Analecta Gregoriana, cxxxix; 1964). D. Maffei (ed.), Enea Silvio Piccolomini Papa Pio II. Atti del Convegno per il quinto centenario della morte e altri scritti (Siena, 1968). Pastor, iii (1894), with full bibl. to date. Fliche–Martin, xv (1951), esp. pp. 46–65, with bibl. E. Vansteenberghe in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2, 1935), cols. 1613–32, s.v. 'Pie II', with bibl.; G. B. Picotti in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1492–6, s.v. 'Pio II', with bibl.

PIUS IV (1499–1565), Pope from 1559. Gian Angelo Medici, son of a Milanese family, after studying medicine and law at Pavia, came to Rome in 1527 where he held several offices at the Curia. Having been made Abp. of Ragusa in 1545, he was created cardinal by *Paul III in 1549, and under Julius III (1550–55) was Papal legate in Romagna. Elected Pope in 1559, he reversed the anti-Imperial policy of his predecessor, *Paul IV, whose relatives he brought to trial. If he could be charged with nepotism this at least had beneficial results for the Church in the cardinalate of his nephew, St. *Charles Borromeo. Probably his greatest achievement was the reassembling and successful conclusion of the Council of *Trent (1562–3), whose decrees he began to put into execution during the last two years of his reign. He published a new *Index in 1564, prepared the edition of the 'Roman *Catechism', imposed the 'Professio Fidei Tridentina' on all holders of an ecclesiastical office, and reformed the *Sacred College. At the instance of the Emperor he conceded the chalice to the laity of Germany, Austria, Hungary, and several other countries (1564), to check the spread of Protestantism, a measure abolished by his successors. An unsuccessful attempt on his life was made in the last year of his pontificate, owing to the dissatisfaction of the heavily taxed subjects of the States of the Church.

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum S.R. Pontificum Taurinensis editio, vi (Naples, 1860), pp. 489–566, and vii (ib., 1882), pp. 1–422. Docc. also in J. Susta (ed.), Die römische Kurie und das Conzil von Trient unter Pius IV (4 vols., 1904–14). G. Constant, Concession à l'Allemagne de la communion sous les deux espèces. Étude sur les débuts de la réforme catholique en Allemagne, 1548–1621 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxxviii; 2 vols., 1923). J. Birkner, 'Das Konzil von Trient und die Reform des Kardinalkollegiums unter Pius IV' in Hist. J., lii (1932), pp. 340–55. Pastor, xv and xvi (1928), with bibl.; Fliche–Martin, xvii (1948), pp. 148–222. G. Constant in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1633–47, s.v. 'Pie IV', with bibl.; H. Jedin in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1496–8, s.v. 'Pio IV', with bibl. See also bibl. to Trent, Council of.

PIUS V, St. (1504–72), Pope from 1566. Michele Ghislieri entered the *Dominican Order at the age of 14, was ordained priest in 1528, and subsequently lectured in philosophy and theology and held the offices of novice master and prior in his order. Conspicuous for his zeal and austerity of life, he was made Commissary General of the *Inquisition in 1551 by Cardinal G. P. Caraffa, who, having become Pope under the name of *Paul IV, appointed him Bp. of Nepi and Sutri in 1556 and created him cardinal in the following year, at the same time making him 'Inquisitor General of Christendom'. He opposed vigorously the nepotism of Paul's successor, *Pius IV (1559–1565), on whose death he was unanimously elected Pope (1566). Throughout his short but important pontificate he worked zealously for the reform of the Church. Continuing to observe the ascetical practices of the religious life, he transformed his household into a model of regularity, a task in which he was generously assisted by St. *Charles Borromeo. He compelled bishops and clergy to accept the recommendations of the Council of *Trent, had the Roman *Catechism completed (1566) and translated into several languages, reformed the *Breviary (1568) and the *Missal (1570), and ordered a new complete edition of the works of St. *Thomas Aquinas (1570), whom he had declared '*Doctor of the Church' in 1567. In his struggle against the spread of the Reformation he made successful use of the Inquisition in Spain and Italy, but his excommunication of Queen *Elizabeth I in 1570 is generally considered a mistake, as it seriously aggravated the position of RCs in England. Politically his reign was marked by the decisive victory over the Turks of the combined Papal, Spanish, and Venetian fleets at *Lepanto in 1571. He was canonized in 1712. Feast day, 30 Apr. (formerly 5 May).

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum S.R. Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, vii (Naples, 1882), pp. 422–973. Epp. ed. F. Goubau (Antwerp, 1640); later collections of his Epp. ed. [J. L. A.] de Potter (Brussels, 1827), W. E. Schwartz (Paderborn, 1889), and L. Serrano, O.S.B. (4 vols., Madrid, 1914). The oldest life, anon. but almost certainly by Tommaso Porcacchi (d. 1585), ed., with other docc., by F. Van Ortroy in Anal. Boll., xxxiii (1914), pp. 187–215. Other early lives by G. Catena (Rome, 1586) and J. A. Gabutius (Rome, 1605; repr. in AA.SS., Mai. I (1680), pp. 617–714). Modern lives by J. Mendham (London, 1832), [A. F. P.] de Fallow (2 vols., Paris, 1844), C. M. Antony (London, 1911), G. Grente ('Les Saints', 1914), and Lillian Browne-Olf (Milwaukee, 1943). O. Braunsberger, S.J., Pius V und die deutschen Katholiken (Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, Ergänzungshft., cviii; 1912); C. Hirschauer, La Politique de St Pie V en France, 1566–1572 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, cxx; 1922). Pastor, xvii and xviii (1929), with full bibl. and notes on sources. R. Hedde, O.P.–É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1647–53, s.v. 'Pie V', with bibl.; H. Jedin in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1498–1500, s.v. 'Pio V', with bibl.

PIUS VI (1717–99), Pope from 1775. Giovanni Angelico Braschi, of a noble family of Cesena, was educated by the *Jesuits and, after having studied law, became secretary to Cardinal Raffo in 1740. Appointed Papal secretary and Canon of St. Peter's in 1755, he was ordained priest three years later. In 1766 *Clement XIII made him treasurer of the Roman Church, and his successor, *Clement XIV, created him cardinal in 1773. Elected Pope in 1775, his rule was marked by the struggle against the rising tide of atheism and secularism. Local Roman affairs, such as the draining of the Pontine marshes, the reorganization of the finances of the States of the Church, and the embellishment of the Vatican Museum and St. Peter's, at first claimed his attention. Before long he became involved in a struggle against 'Febronianism' (q.v.); and though Hontheim made his submission in 1778, his ideas led to practical results in the ecclesiastical reforms of Joseph II (see Josephinism), who forbade the Austrian bishops to apply for dispensations to Rome and secularized a great number of monasteries. A visit of Pius to Vienna, in 1782, remained without result; Joseph's example was followed by his brother, Leopold, Grand Duke of Tuscany; and Febronianist doctrines were adopted in 1786 at the Synod of *Pistoia under the leadership of Bp. Scipio de' *Ricci. In 1794 Pius formally condemned Febronian teaching in the bull '*Auctorem fidei' (q.v.). Meanwhile, under pressure from Catherine II, Pius, who had already granted Frederick II an exemption from the decree of suppression for individual Jesuits in Silesia, permitted the continuation of the *Jesuits in Russia (1783–4). In 1791, after Louis XVI had sanctioned the *Civil Constitution of the Clergy, a decree subjecting the French clergy to the secular authorities (1790), Pius condemned it as schismatical and heretical and suspended all priests and prelates who had taken the civil oath. In the same year France annexed the Papal territories of *Avignon and the Venaissin. The strained relations between the two powers led to the occupation of the States of the Church by Napoleon, and the occupation was terminated only by the Peace of Tolentino (1797), which required the surrender of Ferrara, Bologna, and the Romagna, and, in addition, many valuable MSS. and works of art. In the same year the French general, Duphot, was killed in an attempt to stir up revolution in Rome, whereupon Berthier occupied the city in the following year and declared it a republic. Pius VI was taken prisoner and, in spite of his age and infirmity, removed first to Siena and Florence, then (1799) to Bologna, and thence through several other places across the Alps to Briançon, Grenoble, and Valence, where he died. In his troubled reign Papal prestige was at its lowest before its regeneration in the 19th century.

Bullarii Romani Continuatio, coll. A. A. Barbèri, v–x (Rome, 1842–5). Collectio Brevium atque Instructionum SS. D. N. Pii Papae VI quae ad Praesentes Gallicanarum Ecclesiarum Calamitates pertinent (2 pts., Augsburg, 1796). [J. F. de Bourgoing], Mémoires historiques et philosophiques sur Pie VI et son pontificat (2 vols., [1798–1800]). P. P. Wolf, Geschichte der römischkatholischen Kirche unter der Regierung Pius des Sechsten (7 vols., 1793–1802). G. B. Tavanti, Fasti del S.P. Pio VI (3 vols., 1804). I. Bertrand, Le Pontificat de Pie VI et l'athéisme révolutionnaire (2 vols., 1879). J. M. Gendry, Pius VI (2 vols., [1906]). G. Soranzo, Peregrinus Apostolicus. Lo spirito pubblico e il viaggio di Pio VI a Vienna (Pubblicazioni della Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Serie V, xiv; 1937). A. Latreille, L'Église catholique et la Révolution française, i, Le pontificat de Pie VI et la crise française, 1775–1799 (1946). E. E. Y. Hales, Revolution and Papacy 1769–1846 (1960), pp. 45–129. Pastor, xxxix–xl (1952–3), with full refs. Fliche–Martin, xx (1949), pp. 17–158. G. Bourgin in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1653–69, s.v. 'Pie VI', with bibl.; A. Latreille in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 398–400, s.v.

PIUS VII (1740–1823), Pope from 1800. Gregorio Barnaba Chiaramonti took the *Benedictine habit at the age of 16. In 1775 *Pius VI appointed him abbot of San Callisto at Rome and, in 1782, Bp. of Tivoli. Three years later he was translated to Imola and created cardinal, and in 1800 elected Pope at Venice. The main problem confronting him concerned the relations between Church and state in France. By the *Concordat of 1801 (q.v.), negotiated between Napoleon and Cardinal *Consalvi, religion had been restored in France; but the success of the plan was vitiated by the secretly drawn-up *Organic Articles (q.v.), published simultaneously, against the Gallican tendencies of which the Pope protested in vain. A concordat with the Italian republic followed in 1803; and at the same time the Church in Germany was seriously threatened by extensive secularizations. In 1804 Napoleon was proclaimed Emperor and the Pope accepted his invitation to consecrate him in Paris, but did not obtain the hoped-for concessions. In 1805 Napoleon occupied Ancona, despite the protests of the Pope, who had to dismiss Consalvi in the following year. When, in 1808, a French army entered Rome, Pius VII considered himself a prisoner and refused negotiations, and in 1809 the States of the Church were incorporated into the French Empire. When Pius in protest excommunicated the responsible parties by the bull 'Quum memoranda', he was arrested and deported to Grenoble and thence to Savona. In 1811, separated from all his advisers, he assented to a new mode of the institution of bishops by the metropolitans without cognizance of the Pope, which had been propounded by the Council of Paris convoked by Napoleon in the same year. In 1812 he was brought to Fontainebleau, where, after a long illness and under pressure, he made far-reaching concessions to the Emperor, published by the latter in 1813 as the 'Concordat of Fontainebleau' and revoked by the Pope two months later. After the fall of Napoleon, Pius VII returned to Rome in 1814 and, in the same year, re-established the *Jesuit Order. The Congress of Vienna (1815) restored the States of the Church, which were reorganized by Consalvi. New concordats were concluded with Bavaria and Sardinia in 1817, with Naples and Russia in 1818, and with Prussia in 1821. In 1821 the Pope also published a bull against the *Carbonari, who were responsible for the revolution in Naples. Despite his political preoccupations, Pius VII favoured art and science; he made valuable additions to the *Vatican Library and established new chairs in the Roman College. His reign marks a transition between the troubles of the French Revolution and the quiet pontificates that were to follow.

Bullarii Romani Continuatio, coll. A. A. Barbèri, xi–xv (Rome, 1846–53). [A. F.] Artaud [de Montor], Histoire du Pape Pie VII (2 vols., 1836). Mary H. Allies, The Life of Pope Pius VII ('Quarterly Series', xvii; 1875). H. Chotard, Le Pape Pie VII à Savone (1887). J. Leflon, Pie VII. Des abbayes bénédictines à la papauté (1958). [J. O. B. de C.] d'Haussonville, L'Église romaine et le premier empire, 1800–1814 (5 vols., 1868–9). I. Rinieri, La diplomazia pontificia nel secolo XIX, i, 'Il concordato tra Pio VII e il Primo Console anno 1800–1802' (1902); id., Napoleone e Pio VII (1804–1813), vol. i, 1804–8, only publ. (1906). A. Latreille, L'Église catholique et la Révolution française, ii, L'Ère napoléonienne et la crise européenne, 1800–1815 (1950). E. E. Y. Hales, Revolution and Papacy 1769–1846 (1960), pp. 130–312, passim; id., Napoleon and the Pope. The Story of Napoleon and Pius VII (1962). L. Pasztor, 'Per la storia del "Concordato" di Fontainebleau' in Chiesa e Stato nell'ottocento. Miscellanea in onore di Pietro Pirri, ed. R. Aubert and others, ii (Padua, 1962), pp. 597–603. Fliche–Martin, xx (1949), pp. 161–376, with bibl. p. 9 f. G. Bourgin in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1670–83, s.v. 'Pie VII', with bibl.; J. Leflon in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 400–4.

PIUS IX (1792–1878), Pope from 1846. Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti was ordained priest in 1819, took part in a Papal mission to Chile in 1823–5, was appointed Abp. of Spoleto in 1827, Bp. of Imola in 1832, and created cardinal in 1840. On the death of *Gregory XVI (1846), who had estranged the Italian people by his oppressive measures, he was elected Pope because of his reputation as a partisan of liberal ideas. He inaugurated his reign with a general amnesty of political prisoners and exiles and showed himself favourable to the movement of national unity; but his concessions came too late, and when, in 1848, he refused to make war on Austria, he lost popular favour and, in November of the same year, was besieged by the revolutionaries in the Quirinal. He escaped to Gaeta, whence he addressed an appeal to the Catholic European powers for the restoration of the Papal State; this was effected after the occupation of Rome by the French army in 1849. From his return to Rome in 1850, Pius abandoned his liberal attitude in politics. He saw his temporal power gradually decrease, as the Romagna was lost in 1859 and Umbria and the Marches in 1860, until, after the seizure of Rome by Victor Emmanuel on 20 Sept. 1870, he was virtually deprived of all temporal sovereignty by the Law of *Guarantees of 13 May 1871, against which the Pope solemnly protested.

Though an apparent failure from a political point of view, the pontificate of Pius IX was marked by its spiritual and ecclesiastical achievements. The erection of many new dioceses and missionary centres, as well as the restoration of the hierarchy in England (1850) and Holland (1853) and the conclusion of *concordats with many European and American governments, testified to a vigorous life within the Church. His definition of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM in 1854 provided a stimulus to Catholic devotion, while the issue of the '*Syllabus errorum' and the encyclical '*Quanta cura' in 1864 supported the traditional beliefs of Catholicism by condemning contemporary rationalism, pantheism, religious liberalism, and other forms of modern philosophy. The most important event in his reign was the definition of Papal Infallibility by the First *Vatican Council of 1869–70; though this gave rise to the *Old Catholic schism and the *Kulturkampf in Germany, it may be argued that the increased authority it added to the Papacy on the spiritual plane in the end more than compensated for the loss in temporal dominion that marked Pius IX's pontificate. He was the first Pope whose reign exceeded the 25 years traditionally ascribed to the rule of St. Peter.

His Acta were publd., 7 vols., Rome [c. 1854–78]; the official docc. for the latter part of his pontificate are also in A.S.S. G. Maioli (ed.), Pio IX. Da vescovo a pontifice. Lettere al Card. Luigi Amat, agosto 1839–luglio 1848 (Collezione storica del Risorgimento, Ser. 2, xxxviii; 1949). The numerous lives include those by A. de Saint-Albin (Paris, 1860; ed. 2, 1870; new ed., with continuation, 3 vols., 1878), J. M. Stepischnegg (2 vols., Vienna, 1879), B. Castaldi (Rome, 1882), E. Clerici (Milan, 1928), F. Hayward (Paris, 1948), E. E. Y. Hales (London, 1954), A. Serafini (vol. i [covering 1792–1846] only publd., Vatican, 1958; based on unpubld. sources), and P. Fernessole (2 vols., Paris, 1960–3). R. Aubert, Le Pontificat de Pie IX, 1846–1878 (Fliche–Martin, xxi; 1952), with good bibl. R. Ballerini, S.J., Les Premières Pages du pontificat du Pape Pie IX (posthumously publd., 1909). A. M. Ghisalberti, Nuove ricerche sugli inizi del pontificato di Pie IX e sulla consulta di stato (Regio Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento italiano, Biblioteca Scientifica, Ser. 2, xxx; 1939). P. Pirri, S.J., Pio IX e Vittorio Emanuele II dal loro carteggio privato (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, viii, xvi, xvii, xxiv, xxv; 1944–61). D. Demarco, Pio IX e la rivoluzione romana del 1848 (Collezione storica del Risorgimento italiano, Ser. 2, xxxvi; 1947). A. B. Hasler, Pius IX. (1846–1878), Päpstliche Unfehlbarkeit und 1. Vatikanisches Konzil (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1977). G. Mollat in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1686–1716, s.v. 'Pie IX'; R. Aubert in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 405–8, s.v.

PIUS X, St. (1835–1914), Pope from 1903. Giuseppe Melchior Sarto, born of a poor family at Riese in Upper Venetia, entered the seminary at Padua in 1850, was ordained priest in 1858, became chaplain at Tombolo in the same year, and, in 1867, archpriest of Salzano. In 1875 he was made canon of Treviso, where he was also chancellor to the bishop and spiritual director of the episcopal seminary, and, in 1884, he was appointed Bp. of Mantua. In 1893 *Leo XIII created him cardinal and Patr. of *Venice. Elected Pope in 1903, he chose as his guiding principle 'instaurare omnia in Christo' (Eph. 1. 10, quoted in his encyclical of 4 Oct. 1903), with the implication that, in contrast to his predecessor Leo XIII, he intended to be a religious rather than a political Pope. Events, however, frequently forced him into political action. When, in 1905, the French government effected the separation of Church and state and proposed the formation of the 'associations cultuelles', which were to take possession of the remaining Church property and to be responsible to the civil authorities, Pius X condemned them in two encyclicals (1906), a brave step which, at the price of material ruin, secured the independence of the Church in France from state interference. In 1911 *Portugal followed the example of the French government.

In the field of social policy, Pius X laid down the principles of '*Catholic Action' in his encyclical 'Il fermo proposito' (1905). Social action and the solution of the labour problem were only parts, though important parts, of the whole of Catholic Action, while its chief aim was to restore Christ to His rightful place within the home, the schools, and society in general. In 1910 he condemned the 'Sillon', a French social movement which seemed to be attempting to spread and adapt the ideas of the French Revolution. He saw another grave danger, threatening the purity of Catholic doctrine itself, in the spread of *Modernism, which he condemned in the decree '*Lamentabili' and the encyclical 'Pascendi' of 1907, and again by a motu proprio ('Sacrorum antistitum') three years later which introduced the anti-Modernist oath, and as an antidote to the new errors particularly recommended the study of *Thomism.

In addition to these protective measures, Pius X undertook a series of difficult reforms. Among them were the codification of the new *canon law (promulgated under *Benedict XV in 1917), which occupied almost the whole of his reign, and administrative changes which involved esp. the *Roman Congregations. His interest in liturgical matters showed itself in the Breviary Reform and in his decrees on sacred music, notably the motu proprio of 1903 restoring the Gregorian chant to its traditional place in the Liturgy. Pius X became particularly popular as the 'Pope of frequent Communion', and by recommending daily Communion in the decree of 1905 and children's Communion a year later, he gave a lasting stimulus to the spiritual life of the faithful and laid the foundations of the modern *Liturgical Movement. He was venerated as a saint even during his lifetime, and many miracles have been attributed to his intercession. He was beatified in 1951 and canonized in 1954. Feast day, 21 Aug.

Acta publ. Rome, 5 vols., 1905–14. Letters, collected by N. Vian (Rome, [1955]). Lives by F. A. Forbes (London, 1918), R. Bazin (Paris, [1928]; Eng. tr., 1928), Katherine Burton (Dublin, 1951), C. Ledré (Paris, 1952), P. Fernessole (2 vols., ib. [1952–3]), and C. Maurras (ib. [1953]). An Eng. tr. of Card. R. *Merry del Val's Memories of Pope Pius X was publd. London, 1939. É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1716–40, s.v. 'Pie X', with reff.; G. Urbani in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1523–30, s.v. 'Pio X', with bibl.; C. Ledré in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 408–11, s.v.

PIUS XI (1857–1939), Pope from 1922. Achille Ambrogio Damiano Ratti was ordained priest in 1879, taught dogmatics at the Grand Seminary at Milan from 1883 to 1888, and in 1888 was elected to the College of Doctors at the *Ambrosian Library, of which he became prefect in 1907. While he was at Milan he applied himself to editing the *Ambrosian Missal and other texts. In 1912 he was made vice-prefect of the *Vatican Library. At the end of the war of 1914–18 he became Apostolic Visitor to Poland, in 1919 Nuncio and Titular Abp. of Lepanto, in 1921 Cardinal and Abp. of Milan, and in 1922 he was elected Pope. He made 'the restoration of all things in Christ', symbolized in the institution of the Feast of *Christ the King (1925), the chief object of his pontificate. His great encyclicals were directed to the same end: 'Divini illius magistri' (1929) deals with education; 'Casti connubii' (1930), which condemned contraception, sought to restore a proper respect for married life; while the best known, '*Quadragesimo Anno' (1931), is concerned with social problems. The most important political event of his reign was the *Lateran Treaty (1929; q.v.). The spiritual life of the Church was fostered by the celebration of the Jubilee in 1925 which became the occasion of many canonizations (incl. that of St. *Teresa of Lisieux and St. Peter *Canisius), by his support of the apostolate of the laity in the *Catholic Action Movement, and by several encyclicals recommending increased religious devotion. The last years of the Pope were overshadowed by the development of events in Europe, esp. the persecution of the Church in Germany (encyclical: '*Mit brennender Sorge') and the spread of atheism and neo-paganism.

His official acts are pr. in the A.A.S., xiv (1922), p. 158–xxxi (1939), p. 83. Eng. tr. of selected encyclicals to date, with introd., by J. H. Ryan (St. Louis, Mo.–London, 1927). A collection of his Scritti storici was publd., Florence, [c. 1932], with introd. by P. Bellezza, 'L'opera scientifica e letteraria di Achille Ratti', pp. vii–xlii; six of these essays were tr. into Eng. by E. Bulloch as Essays in History written between the Years 1896–1912 (London, [1934]). Discorsi, ed. D. Bertetto ([1960] ff.). P. Hughes, Pope Pius the Eleventh (1937). A. P. Frutaz in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1531–43, s.v. 'Pio XI', with list of some of the many lives of this Pope. G. Schwaiger in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 411–14, s.v. See also works cited under Lateran Treaty.

PIUS XII (1876–1958), Pope from 1939. Educated at the *Gregorian University and the Roman Seminary, Eugenio Pacelli was ordained priest in 1899 and entered the Papal Secretariat of State under *Leo XIII in 1901. In 1914 he was appointed Secretary of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs and, three years later, titular Abp. of Sardes and Apostolic *Nuncio to Bavaria. In this last capacity he took an active part in the peace efforts of *Benedict XV. In 1920 he became Nuncio to the German Republic at Berlin, where, as doyen of the Diplomatic Corps, he exercised considerable influence. In 1924 he concluded a favourable concordat with Bavaria, in 1929 a less satisfactory one with Prussia. In 1930 *Pius XI created him cardinal and appointed him Papal Secretary of State. In 1933 he promoted a concordat with the National Socialist German government, though its constant violations by Hitler and the deteriorating position of the Church in Germany soon created grave difficulties. Between 1934 and 1938 he undertook many journeys as Cardinal Legate to *Eucharistic Congresses in Europe and America, and on other missions.

On 2 Mar. 1939 Pacelli was elected Pope and took the name of Pius XII. His elevation, contrary to the tradition against electing the Papal Secretary of State, reflected the need for an experienced politician and diplomat to guide the Church through the grave dangers that threatened. His first encyclical, '*Summi Pontificatus' (20 Oct. 1939), appealed to mankind to restore to God His due place in the life of the world and to unite in the defence of Natural Law, while his 'Christmas Allocution' (1939) laid down the principles of a lasting peace in 'Five Peace Points', viz. (1) recognition of the right of every nation to life and independence; (2) true disarmament both material and spiritual; (3) institution of an international court to guarantee the peace; (4) recognition of the rights of minorities; and (5) the acquisition of a true Christian spirit among the nations. His alleged 'silence' in the face of Nazi atrocities has been the subject of criticism. The documents suggest that his experience of dealing with the German Government over Poland had convinced him that a public stand would only provoke worse persecution. Throughout the Second World War, and afterwards, he laboured to relieve distress, esp. among prisoners. In 1943 he issued the encyclical 'Mystici Corporis Christi' (29 June), emphasizing the unity of the Church in the Mystical Body of Christ. In the same year 'Divino Afflante Spiritu' (30 Sept.) stressed the need to follow the literal meaning of Scripture whenever possible, but, by also admitting the legitimacy of the study of literary forms, the encyclical opened the way for a more liberal approach to Biblical criticism by Catholic scholars. The encyclical 'Mediator Dei' (20 Nov. 1947) expressed sympathy with the desire for the use of the vernacular in liturgy and gave conditional support to the *Liturgical Movement. In 1951 he restored the *Paschal Vigil Service and in the following years gradually reformed the entire liturgy for *Holy Week. His Apostolic Constitution 'Christus Dominus' (16 Jan. 1953) standardized the relaxations in the *Eucharistic Fast which had been introduced during the War; together with the further relaxations permitted by his motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' (19 Mar. 1957), this made possible the widespread introduction of *Evening Masses. Other important acts of his pontificate included the creation of an unprecedentedly large number of cardinals (32 in 1946 and 24 in 1953), drawn from a wide variety of countries, 33 canonizations, the initiation of the excavations under *St. Peter's, Rome, the publication of the encyclical '*Humani Generis' (12 Aug. 1950) directed against certain modern tendencies in RC theology, and the definition of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM in the apostolic constitution '*Munificentissimus Deus' (1 Nov. 1950). He also attempted to foster relations with the Eastern *Orthodox and *Uniat Churches in the encyclicals 'Orientalis Ecclesiae Decus' (9 Apr. 1944) and 'Orientales Omnes Ecclesiae' (23 Dec. 1945).

Official docc. are printed in the A.A.S. for the years of his pontificate. Actes et documents du Saint Siège relatifs à la Seconde Guerre Mondiale, ed. P. Blet and others (Rome, 1965 ff.; Eng. tr., 1968 ff.). G. R. Pilote, Guide de consultation des discours du Pape Pie XII (Ottawa, 1963). Studies include those of O. Halecki (London, 1954), R. Galeazzi-Lisi (Paris, 1960) and P. Rassinier (ib., 1965). S. Friedländer, Pie XII et le IIIe Reich. Documents (1964; Eng. tr., 1966); C. Falconi, Il silenzio di Pio XII (Milan, 1965; Eng. tr., 1970).

PLACEBO (Lat., 'I will please'). A traditional title for the *Vespers of the Dead, derived from the *antiphon (Ps. 116 [114]. 9; Vulg. Placebo Domino in regione vivorum) with which the office used to open. See also Dirge.

PLACET. See Exequatur.

PLACIDIA, GALLA. See Galla Placidia.

PLAINSONG. The traditional music of the Latin rite is generally known as Gregorian Chant, after St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604), though his exact share, if any, in its codification is a matter of continuing controversy. But historical research distinguishes at least four non-Gregorian parallels or antecedents, *Ambrosian, *Gallican, *Mozarabic, *Old-Roman; and some authorities add a fifth, from Benevento in S. Italy. The ultimate origin of all these is now believed to be Antioch or Jerusalem. The form in which the Gregorian chant has been retained is generally agreed to be based on the older chant of Rome. This was modified by additions for new feasts, the pruning of long florid passages over single syllables and the incorporation of Gallican elements in the Frankish Empire at the time of the Carolingian revival of the 8th–9th centuries.

Plainsong is most easily described by its differences from modern music. 1. It is monodic. 2. It is purely vocal, and needs no instrumental accompaniment, though this has often been used for some centuries past. 3. It is founded upon verbal prose-rhythms and therefore lacks strict time-values (one modern school of thought disputes this contention). 4. Its scales or modes, instead of running up from C or A as do the modern major and minor, run from D, E, F, and G. These four modes were called 'authentic' and numbered 1, 3, 5, 7; four corresponding modes, beginning a fourth lower in the scale than their foregoing partners, were called 'plagal' and numbered 2, 4, 6, 8. The older melodies were all brought into line with this modal system in the Middle Ages. 5. It is printed now in square notes on a staff of four lines, after 14th cent. models. The neum notation in accentual signs, sometimes held to go back to the 6th cent., was mnemonic only and did not indicate pitch; but in the 10th cent. rudimentary staves appear.

For various reasons, incl. the growth of polyphony in the Middle Ages and the invention of printing, by 1600 or earlier the chant and its execution had reached a low stage of decadence. In the second half of the 19th cent. serious work on the restoration of the authentic texts was initiated; it was largely (but not entirely) due to studies carried out at the Benedictine Abbey of *Solesmes under the leadership of Dom Joseph Pothier (1835–1923).

The corpus of plainsong is contained chiefly in two books, the *Gradual for the Mass and the *Antiphonal for the Choir Office; other chants are found in the *Manuale, the *Pontifical, and the *Processional. Many transcriptions to English words have been made in the last 120 years, both in England and in the U.S.A.

[A.] Gatard, O.S.B., Plainchant (Church Music Monographs, iv; 1921). J. Smits van Waesberghe tr. into Eng., Gregorian Chant and its Place in the Catholic Liturgy [1948]. W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958]. P. Combe, O.S.B., Histoire de la restauration du chant grégorien d'après des documents inédits (Solesmes, 1969). W. H. *Frere in P. C. Buck (ed.), The Oxford History of Music. Introductory Volume (1929), pp. 133–63; G. Reese, Music in the Middle Ages (New York, 1940; London, 1941), pp. 57–197; H. Anglès in A. Hughes, O.S.B. (ed.), Early Medieval Music up to 1300 (New Oxford History of Music, ii; 1954), pp. 58–127.

PLANETA. An alternative name, found already in the Fourth Council of *Toledo (633; can. 28), for the *chasuble. The Lat. word perhaps comes from the Gk. πλανήτης, 'wanderer', as a garment originally worn when travelling.

PLANTIN BIBLES. See following entry.

PLANTIN, CHRISTOPHER (c. 1520–89), printer. Born of humble parents, prob. in Touraine, Plantin was brought up in Lyons, became a book-binder in Caen, and learned to print while living in Paris. Increasing pressure against printers suspected of heresy may account for his leaving France; in 1548 he settled in the wealthy commercial port of Antwerp. There, despite much competition and early difficulties arising from his connection with the *Familists, within a few years he built up the largest printing and publishing business in Europe. He established his commanding position through utilizing the best in all branches of publishing. The soundest texts, edited by some of the leading scholars of the age, printed with types and ornaments designed and cast by the most skilful craftsmen, and often illustrated by Flemish engravers, earned him fame. His most celebrated production was his Antwerp *Polyglot Bible in 8 folio volumes, 1569–72. He and his successors printed a great number of editions of the *Missal, *Breviary, and other liturgical books, in virtue of a monopoly granted to him within the dominions of the king of Spain. After his death the business descended by marriage to the Moretus family, which continued to operate it until 1876. Since then the establishment, with all its original contents—furniture, pictures, library, archives and fully equipped printing works—has been preserved by the city of Antwerp as a museum.

C. Clair, Christopher Plantin (London, 1960). L. [B.] Voet, The Golden Compasses. A History and Evaluation of the Printing and Publishing Activities of the Officina Plantiniana at Antwerp (2 vols., Antwerp, etc. [1969–72]).

PLATINA, BARTOLOMEO (1421–81), Italian humanist. Born at Piadena (hence 'Platina', his family name was Sacchi), near Mantua, he went to Florence in 1457 to study Greek under Argyropolis. Proceeding to Rome in 1462, he was patronized by *Pius II, but when Paul II succeeded in 1464, he lost favour and was imprisoned. He again came into favour under *Sixtus IV, who made him librarian of the *Vatican (1475), and it was while holding this office that he compiled his Lives of the Popes (Liber de vita Christi ac de vitis summorum pontificum omnium, Venice, 1479). The work is written in a flowing, readable style, but is uncritical. A mention in its pages of the prayers and curses of *Callistus III in 1456 against the Turks, followed by a reference in the same context to the appearance of Halley's comet, gave rise to the fable, frequently repeated in the 19th cent., that the Pope had excommunicated the comet.

The original MS. of his lives of the Popes, which has often been edited, is preserved in the Vatican (Cod. 2044). Eng. tr. with continuation to date by P. *Rycaut (London, fol., 1685); more modern tr. by W. Benham (ib., 2 vols. [1888]). G. J. Schorn, 'Die Quellen zu den Vitae Pontificum Romanorum des Bartolomeo Platina' in R.Q., xxvii (1913), pp. 3*–19* and 57*–84*.

PLATO (427–347 B.C.), Greek philosopher. He was a native of Athens, of a noble family, and destined for a political career. In his early years he was introduced to the doctrines of Heraclitus and in 407 (if not earlier) became a pupil of Socrates. Affection for his master and the love for philosophy turned him away from public life after Socrates' execution (399). He withdrew from Athens, taking refuge for a time with Eucleides at Megara. In the years 390–388 he travelled widely (Egypt, Cyrene, Magna Graecia, Sicily, &c.). Returning to Athens at a time which cannot certainly be fixed, he established a school on the outskirts of the city near the grove sacred to Academus (hence the 'Academy', which had a continuous life until its dissolution by *Justinian in A.D. 529). At the age of sixty (367) he was unexpectedly invited to take a part in politics. Dion, a leader at the court of the youthful Dionysius II (367–345), tyrant of Syracuse, was anxious to set up a liberal state on the model of the Republic and invited Plato to instruct Dionysius about the 'philosopher-king'. The enterprise met with small success and in 366 both Dion and Plato were forced to leave Syracuse. In 361 he paid a fruitless visit to Sicily to try to reconcile Dionysius with Dion. Apart from this Sicilian venture Plato seems to have spent the last forty years of his life at the Academy.

With the exception of a small collection of Epistles, Plato's writings are in the form of Dialogues, often with Socrates as the principal speaker and various critics or pupils, after whom the Dialogues are usually named, taking part in the discussion. It is often uncertain how far the speeches represent the real or supposed teaching of the interlocutors, and how far they voice Plato's own beliefs. Their literary artistry (directness, dramatic tensions, irony), intellectual breadth, and moral seriousness are supreme. There is no contemporary record of their chronological arrangement, which must be determined mainly by internal criteria. Evidence is sometimes afforded by the historic setting of the Dialogues, though here again it is apt to be doubtful how far Plato meant the history to be taken literally. More reliable criteria are the intrinsic probabilities of Plato's philosophic development, general considerations of subject-matter (e.g. the Dialogues in which Socrates is central are presumably to be put first), Plato's references back to earlier Dialogues (e.g. of the Timaeus to the Republic), and the growth of Plato's dramatic power. These evidences converge on conclusions about which there is a fair measure of agreement among scholars. The correctness of these conclusions is confirmed by philological ('stylometric') considerations (W. Lutoslawski) and, under the influence of Isocrates, the absence of stylistic hiatus in the later Dialogues.

The principal Dialogues, in their approximate order of composition, are:

(1) The Socratic Dialogues, a large group, including the Gorgias, Meno, Euthyphro, Apology, and Crito. Their common subject is the nature of virtue and whether or not it can be taught. The three last-mentioned are linked with the trial and death of Socrates. The Euthyphro deals with correct behaviour towards the gods (ὁσιότης), the Apology ('the Hellenic counterpart of Book II of the Imitation*', A. E. *Taylor) with the fear of doing wrong, and the Crito with the duty of loyalty to the state.

In the next four dialogues (2–5), Plato's philosophical and dramatic power is at its highest:

(2) Phaedo, on immortality. The divine and enduring soul which shares in the eternal Forms is here contrasted with the mutable human body.

(3) Symposium, on the nature of eros, true beauty, and the life of contemplation. The love of earthly beauty can lead the soul onwards to the love of wisdom and of the Form of beauty itself.

(4) Protagoras, on the nature of the good, whether virtue is one or many, and on the identity of knowledge and goodness.

(5) Republic, generally considered the supreme creation of Plato. Its twofold theme is the nature of right conduct and the ideal political state. Consideration of man's threefold psychological constitution leads to the famous description of the ideal city-state (the philosopher-king, the guardians, community of goods, etc.). The object of the moral quest is no longer a particular ethical Form but the Form of the Good (ἰδέα τἀγαθοῦ) as such, held to underlie all the changing and particular facts in the world. Book VII contains the well-known analogy of human life in which men who live in a cave see only the shadows of real objects (i.e. the Forms) cast on the opposite wall.

(6) Phaedrus, on persuasion and eros and their part in our perception of the Forms.

(7) Theaetetus, on the nature of knowledge (ἐπιστήμη), which is held to be judgement, i.e. the union of true opinion (δόξα) with reason (λόγος).

(8) Parmenides, on the relation of likeness and unlikeness, of the one and the many, expounded by the Eleatic philosophers. The Dialogue seems to be a direct attack on the theory of Forms; J. Burnet and A. E. Taylor, however, hold that it is really directed against the existence of sensibles. Perhaps its chief purpose is to parody some false method of argument.

(9) The pair Sophistes and Politicus (or Statesman). Their respective subjects (metaphysics; politics) differ widely, but the two Dialogues are closely connected and of the same date. The Sophistes examines the relation of being and becoming, posed by difficulties in the Eleatic teaching. It is argued that 'not being', no less than 'being', exists. The Politicus reiterates and develops the teaching of the Republic that good government should be left to experts.

(10) Philebus, on the nature of pleasure in its relation to the good life. The goodness of a thing lies in the unity of beauty, symmetry, and truth.

(11) Timaeus, on cosmology and natural science. Here, as in the Laws, the dialogue form has virtually been abandoned in favour of didactic exposition. The universe is described as a single living sphere, composed of soul and body. Besides the world and the model after which it was built there is a third entity, the receptacle (χώρα), in which the world becomes. The world itself is composed of the traditional four elements. Plato also gives an elaborate account of man and his various affections. Through a Latin translation by Chalcidius, known to the earlier Middle Ages, the Timaeus was for several centuries the best known of Plato's writings.

(12) Laws, on politics. This, the longest of the Dialogues, is in the form of a speech put into the mouth of an Athenian Stranger. The treatise, which was apparently left unfinished, reasserts the communistic teaching of the Republic, but with differences of detail. The constitution of the state must avoid the extremes of despotism and freedom. 'Examiners' and a 'Nocturnal Council' are to be in charge of the laws, which here occupy a more prominent place in the constitution than in the Republic and the Politicus. Great stress is laid on the importance of religious belief. Everyone is to be taught astronomy, since God's existence can be deduced from the study of the stars, while atheists who persist in their heresy are to be put to death.

In the earlier Dialogues the main emphasis is ethical. They insist inter alia that the cultivation of mind and will, 'goodness of soul', is the chief business of life; that this is attained by a rational insight into the nature of goodness, truth, and beauty; that morality and the claims of the enlightened conscience are to be respected in political life; and that the rational moral personality is created by the 'recollection' (ἀνάμνησις) of what the soul knows of these values. Since the soul naturally aims at what it believes to be good, wrongdoing is the pursuit of a falsely conceived good.

These doctrines are all based on a metaphysic, developed esp. in the later Dialogues, which contrasts the world of sense and everyday experience with a true and higher world of 'Ideas' (or better 'Forms'). These 'Forms' are 'present to' individual entities, and by grasping the eternal Forms and participating in them the soul attains its true well-being and is lifted above the flux of 'becoming'. The secret of human destiny is to be found in the soul's search for the good which it sees but does not possess.

Plato's two principal discussions of theology in the narrower sense are in the Timaeus and Book X of the Laws. The Timaeus describes how the Demiurge (δημιουργός, 'artisan' or 'craftsman'), who is assumed to be identical with God, brings the world into being, how He makes it as an image (εἰκών) of an eternal archetype, and how He enables it to share in His perfection by putting into it mind (νοῦς) or soul (ψυχή). Later critics disagreed as to whether (as *Aristotle held) the Timaeus taught that the world had a beginning (was γεννητός) or (as other members of the Academy maintained) was eternal. The Timaeus also contains Plato's exposition of time as a 'moving image of eternity'.

The Laws X embodies the earliest known exposition of natural theology, viz. a form of the *cosmological argument based on the belief that all motions ultimately require at their head a 'perfectly good soul' (ἀρίστη ψυχή). The existence of a second maleficent world-soul, identified with necessity (ἀνάγκη), is also defended. (1) Atheism, (2) the view that the gods are indifferent to human conduct, and (3) the notion that the gods can be deterred from the execution of justice by human offerings, are all rejected as morally pernicious. The evil consequences of wrong belief make it the duty of the state to impose orthodoxy, where necessary by force.

It remains obscure how Plato related the highest of the Forms (the 'Form of the Good') to God as the Supreme Soul. In the Timaeus the Forms are the thoughts of God (νοήματα Θεοῦ), but on the other hand, since God also created the universe after the pattern of the Forms, He would seem to be in some sense subordinate to them. On this matter Plato betrays no great concern for consistency. It was only among the more theologically interested Platonists of later times that the problem became a matter of debate.

TEXT. Editio princeps: Aldine, Venice, 1513. H. *Stephanus (3 vols., 1578; still used for refs. to Plato); the effective editor was Serranus, who also made the Lat. version. Other edd. by C. F. Herrmann–M. Wohlrab (6 vols., Teub., 1890–96), J. Burnet (Oxford Classical Texts, 5 vols., [1900–7]) and M. Croiset and others (14 vols. in 27 parts, Collection des Universités de France publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, Paris, 1920–64, incl. as vol. xiv a lexicon of Plato's philosophical and religious language by E. des Places, S.J., and Fr. tr.). Modern commentators on the dialogues have in most cases edited the Gk. text. Separate editions include those of Euthyphro, Apology, and Crito by J. Burnet (Oxford, 1924), Gorgias by E. R. Dodds (ib., 1959), Meno by R. S. Bluck (Cambridge, 1961), Phaedo by R. D. Archer-Hind (London, 1883; ed. 2, 1894) and J. Burnet (Oxford, 1911), Republic by J. Adam (2 vols., Cambridge, 1902; ed. 2, with introd. by D. A. Rees, 1963), Theaetetus by L. Campbell (Oxford, 1861, ed. 2, 1883), Sophist and Politicus by id. (ib., 1867), Philebus by R. G. Bury (Cambridge, 1897) and Laws by E. B. England (2 vols., Manchester–London, 1921).

TRANSLATIONS. Complete Eng. version by B. *Jowett (4 vols., 1871; ed. 2, 5 vols., 1875; ed. 4, revised, 4 vols., 1953). Other Eng. trr., with commentaries, of Phaedo by R. Hackforth (Cambridge, 1955), Republic by F. M. Cornford (Oxford, 1941), Theaetetus and Sophist by F. M. Cornford, Plato's Theory of Knowledge (1935), of Parmenides by A. E. Taylor (Oxford, 1934) and F. M. Cornford, Plato and Parmenides (1939), of Politicus by J. B. Skemp, Plato's Statesman (1952), of Philebus by R. Hackforth, Plato's Examination of Pleasure (Cambridge, 1945), and of Phaedrus by R. Hackforth (ib., 1952). There are also versions by A. E. Taylor of the Timaeus and Critias (London, 1929), Laws (ib., 1934), and Philebus and Epinomis (ib., 1956, posthumously publd. with introd. by R. Klibansky and A. C. Lloyd) and of Epistles by J. Harward (Cambridge, 1932). See also G. R. Morrow, cited below.

WORKS. On Plato's life, U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Platon (2 vols., Berlin, 1917–18; ed. 5, 1959); J. Stenzel, Platon der Erzieher (1928); P. Friedländer, Platon (2 vols., Berlin, 1928–30; ed. 2, 3 vols., 1954–60; Eng. tr., 1958–69, with extensive reff.); G. C. Field, Plato and his Contemporaries (1930); G. R. Morrow, Studies in the Platonic Epistles (Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, xviii, Nos. 3–4; 1935; ed. 2, New York, 1962, incl. Eng. tr. of text); H. Cherniss, The Riddle of the Early Academy (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1945); G. Ryle, Plato's Progress (Cambridge, 1966); L. Edelstein, Plato's Seventh Letter (Leiden, 1966); K. von Fritz, Platon in Sizilien und das Problem der Philosophenherrschaft (1968). General interpretations include W. Lutoslawski, The Origin and Growth of Plato's Logic (1897); C. Ritter, Platon (2 vols., Munich, 1910–23); A. E. Taylor, Plato. The Man and his Work (1926; ed. 4, 1937); id., A Commentary on Plato's Timaeus (Oxford, 1928); L. Robin, Platon (1935; revised ed., 1968); G. M. A. Grube, Plato's Thought (1935); R. Schaerer, La Question platonicienne (Neuchâtel, 1936; new ed. with postscript, 1969); J. Moreau, La Construction de l'idéalisme platonicien (1939); W. Jaeger, Paideia. Die Formung des griechischen Menschen, ii–iii (1944–7; Eng. tr., 1944–5); D. Ross, Plato's Theory of Ideas (Oxford, 1951); H. J. Krämer, Arete bei Plato und Aristoteles (Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philologisch-historische Klasse, Jahrgang 1959, 6. Abh.; 1959); W. Burkert, Weisheit und Wissenschaft. Studien zu Pythagoras, Philolaos und Platon (1962); I. M. Crombie, An Examination of Plato's Doctrines (2 vols., 1962–3); R. E. Allen (ed.), Studies in Plato's Metaphysics (1965); G. J. de Vries, A Commentary on the Phaedrus of Plato (Amsterdam, 1969). On Plato's religion, F. Solmsen, Plato's Theology (New York, 1942); O. Reverdin, La Religion de la cité platonicienne (1945); V. Goldschmidt, La Religion de Platon (1949); H. J. Krämer, Ursprung der Geistmetaphysik. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Platonismus zwischen Platon und Plotin (Amsterdam, 1964). See also works cited under Platonism and Neoplatonism.

DICTIONARIES. A. E. Taylor in E.B. (ed. 14), xviii (1929), pp. 48–64; H. Leisegang in P.W., xl (1950), cols. 2342–2537, both s.v.

PLATONISM. After the death of *Plato (q.v.), his nephew, Speusippus, succeeded him as head of the Academy at Athens (347–339) which with varying fortunes persisted until its closure by *Justinian in A.D. 529. But in the Hellenistic Age Plato's doctrines had a wide following which extended far beyond the direct influence of any institution. Their impact on later Judaism is to be seen in the Book of *Wisdom and the system of *Philo. In the 3rd cent. A.D. a thorough recasting of Plato's system ('*Neoplatonism') was elaborated by *Plotinus (205–70), whose disciple, *Porphyry (c. 232 – c. 305), developed it in conscious opposition to Christianity. Proclus, the last considerable head of the Academy and a celebrated commentator on Plato's writings, died in 485.

The beginnings of an interweaving of Platonism with Christian thought go back to *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen. Of perhaps even greater moment for the history of Christian theology was the fact that the thought of St. *Augustine was radically influenced, largely through *Victorinus Afer, by Platonic doctrines. The authority accorded to his teaching throughout the Middle Ages did much to secure for many Platonic notions a permanent place in Latin Christianity. Henceforward the Platonic Forms were regularly reinterpreted as the creative thoughts of God, as they had been by pagan Platonists from shortly before the beginning of the Christian era. The relevance of Platonism for Christian mysticism was appreciated by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and other spiritual writers, Eastern (St. *John Climacus) and Western (St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, the *Victorines). Other media through which Platonic doctrines reached the Medieval Church were *Boethius, who translated Porphyry into Latin, John Scotus *Erigena (q.v.), and a Latin version by Chalcidius of Plato's Timaeus. Even the supposed eclipse of Plato by *Aristotle as 'the Philosopher' par excellence in the 13th cent. was only apparent, for, as A. E. *Taylor and others have pointed out, St. Thomas's teaching remained fundamentally Platonist.

The Renaissance led to a revival of interest in Plato himself in such scholars as Marsilio *Ficino. In the 16th cent. there was a steady stream of Platonist influence on religion in England (J. *Colet, St. J. *Fisher, St. T. *More, R. *Hooker). In the 17th cent. the *Cambridge Platonists urged the return of Christian theology to 'its old loving nurse, the Platonic philosophy' and found in its doctrine of the inwardness of morality and religion the best antidote to the controversial aridities of contemporary *Calvinism and the secularism of T. *Hobbes. Strong Platonist influences were also present in many English theologians of the 19th cent. (B. *Jowett, F. D. *Maurice, C. Kingsley, the Lux Mundi School). Among recent philosophers A. N. Whitehead has defended a Platonist cosmology. On the other hand, Protestant orthodoxy on the Continent, with its distrust of natural reason, has commonly been hostile to Platonism and in the present century there has been much theological criticism of Greek metaphysics.

A. E. Taylor, Platonism and its Influence (1925); C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (1886); R. Klibansky, The Platonic Tradition during the Middle Ages (1939); W. R. *Inge, The Platonic Tradition in English Religious Thought (1926); A. Fox, Plato and the Christians (1957; selected passages). E. Cassirer, Die platonische Renaissance in England und die Schule von Cambridge (1932; Eng. tr., 1953). E. Hoffmann, Platonismus und christliche Philosophie (Zürich, 1960). H. I. Marrou, 'Synesius of Cyrene and Alexandrian Neoplatonism' in A. Momigliano (ed.), The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century (Oxford, 1963), pp. 126–50; P. Courcelle, 'Anti-Christian Arguments and Christian Platonism: from Arnobius to St. Ambrose', ib., pp. 151–92. A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge

History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), with extensive bibl. Le Néoplatonisme. Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Sciences humaines (1971). R. Arnou in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2258–392, s.v. 'Platonisme des Pères'.

PLAYS, Passion. See Mystery Plays; also Oberammergau.

PLENARY INDULGENCE. In modern RC theology an *Indulgence (q.v.) which is held to remit the whole of the temporal punishment due to an individual's sins. The petitioner may apply it either to himself or to the profit of a soul, or souls, in purgatory. As it is held that its efficacy depends on the perfection of the soul's disposition (of which no one can ever be certain), there is always an element of doubt as to whether a soul has profited to the full by a particular plenary indulgence. Acc. to RC canon law (CIC, can. 928), a plenary indulgence cannot normally be gained more than once on the same day; in recent times the Apostolic Constitution 'Indulgentiarum doctrina' (1 Jan. 1967) has made them obtainable far less frequently. The earliest known example of the issue of a plenary indulgence was the promise of *Urban II at the Council of *Clermont (1095) that all penance incurred by Crusaders who confessed their sins should be remitted. As the issue of plenary indulgences became more common in the 12th and 13th cents. it was much debated (St. *Albert the Great, St. *Thomas Aquinas, Pope *Hadrian VI) whether plenary indulgences covered penances which ought to have been enjoined as well as those that had actually been imposed. It was the former view which gradually became generally accepted. Nowadays plenary indulgences are normally granted for the recitation under prescribed conditions of certain prayers or for other devotional exercises.

PLETHON, GEORGIUS GEMISTUS. See Gemistus Plethon, Georgius.

PLINY'S LETTER ON THE CHRISTIANS TO TRAJAN. The famous letter (c. 112) in which the younger Pliny, as governor of Bithynia, asked the Emp. Trajan whether Christians should be punished 'for the name' or only for specific crimes. He had already, he stated, executed some Christians, but since further investigation of their customs had revealed their good character, he now hints at toleration (see Persecutions). This, as a principle, the Emp. Trajan would not allow, but he forbade the governor to initiate prosecutions or to act on anonymous accusations, and agreed that apostates might be pardoned. The letter throws valuable light on contemporary Christian practices, including a possible reference to an *agape.

Pliny, Letters, x. 96–7. Eng. tr. in J. Stevenson (ed.), A New Eusebius. Documents illustrative of the history of the Church to A.D. 337 (1957), pp. 13–16. L. Vidman, Étude sur la correspondance de Pline le Jeune avec Trajan (Rozpravy Československé Akademie Věd, lxx. 14; 1960), pp. 87–106, with further refl. A. N. Sherwin-White, The Letters of Pliny. A Historical and Social Commentary (Oxford, 1966), pp. 691–712.

PLOTINUS (c. 205–70), *Neoplatonist philosopher and mystic. He was a native of Lycopolis, and acc. to his friend and pupil, *Porphyry, became interested in philosophy at the age of 28 and was for eleven years a disciple of *Ammonius Saccas. He later accompanied the Emp. Gordian (d. 243) on an expedition to Persia to make himself acquainted with E. thought. After his return he established his own school in Rome in 244. At the age of 51 he began to write, and after his death Porphyry published his 54 treatises, arranging them in six Enneads (Gk. ἐννεάδες, 'groups of nine').

Owing to the difficulty of his style and subject-matter Plotinus has been variously interpreted, and it is disputed whether his thought is fundamentally pantheistic or tending towards Theism. He rejects the *Gnostic dualism as vigorously as the Christian conception of a historic Redemption, opposing to either his system of an intellectualist mysticism. Its main concern on the speculative side is with the relations between unity and multiplicity. At the summit of the hierarchy of beings there is the One (τὸ Ἕν) or the Good, the first principle, absolutely simple and self-sufficient, whose intimate life is incomprehensible. Beneath it is the intelligible world of ideas (Νοῦς), and on a still lower plane there is the World Soul (Ψυχή), the third member of the Plotinian Triad. This last is the intermediary between the intelligible and the material world, which, since matter holds the lowest place in the Plotinian system, is the furthest removed from the One. The World Soul has created all material things and orders the universe. Individual souls separate from this World Soul by a mysterious process. They are all homogeneous and have a capacity for the spiritual life, for, in their highest point, they are capable of contemplation.

Contemplation, which occupies a central position in Plotinus's system, is the most perfect activity, for by it souls can attain union with God. In order to reach this its last end the soul has to prepare itself by purity of heart and ascetical practices, turning away from all sensible things. It must devote itself to recollection, in which memory, sensibility, and discursive reasoning progressively disappear, until it reaches a state in which it 'feels' an ineffable Presence in an ecstasy of 'joyous stupor' and blissful plenitude. The chief difference between this so-called 'natural mysticism' and that of the orthodox Christian mystics is that, in Plotinus's system, union is reached by the unaided effort of the soul, whereas in Catholic teaching it is the work of Divine grace. Despite this fundamental difference Plotinus seems to have exercised indirectly much influence on Christian thought, esp. on St. *Augustine and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, and, through them, on the theologians and mystics of the Middle Ages.

Editio princeps of Gk. text of Enneads, Basle, 1580, with M. *Ficino's Lat. tr. Later edd. by F. Creuzer, 3 vols., Oxford, 1835; A. Kirchhoff, Teub., 2 vols., 1856; R. Volkmann, ib., 2 vols., 1883–4; E. Bréhier, Collection des Universités de France sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 7 vols., 1924–38, with Fr. tr. Crit. text edd. P. Henry, S.J.–H. R. Schwyzer (Museum Lessianum, Series Philosophica, xxxiii–xxxv, 1951–73; also Oxford, 1964 ff.); largely repr., with Eng. tr., by A. H. Armstrong (6 vols., Loeb, 1966 ff.). Eng. tr. of Enneads, with Porphyry's Life, by S. Mackenna (5 vols., London, 1917–30). W. R. *Inge, The Philosophy of Plotinus (Gifford Lectures, 1918; subjective); R. Arnou, Le Désir de Dieu dans la philosophie de Plotin (1921; ed. 2, 1967); E. Bréhier, La Philosophie de Plotin (1928; ed. 3, 1961); J. Guitton, Le Temps et l'éternité chez Plotin et saint Augustin (1933; ed. 3, 1959); P. Henry, S.J., Plotin et l'Occident (S.S.L., xv; 1934); G. Barion, Plotin und Augustinus. Untersuchungen zum Gottesproblem (1935); P. Henry, S.J., Études plotiniennes (2 vols., Museum Lessianum, Section philosophique, xx and xxi; 1938–41); A. H. Armstrong, The Architecture of the Intelligible Universe in the Philosophy of Plotinus. An Analytical and Historical Study (Cambridge, 1940). A. Dahl, Augustin und Plotin. Philosophische Untersuchungen zum Trinitätsproblem und zur Nuslehre (Lund, 1945); E. R. Dodds and others, Les Sources de Plotin (Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique, v; Geneva, 1960); R. Ferwerda, La Signification des images et des métaphores dans la pensée de Plotin (Groningen, 1965). J. N. Deck, Nature, Contemplation and the One. A Study in the Philosophy of Plotinus (Toronto, 1967); J. M. Rist, Plotinus: The Road to Reality (Cambridge, 1969). P. E. More, Hellenistic Philosophies (The Greek Tradition, ii; Princeton, N.J., 1923), pp. 172–259. H. R. Schwyzer in P.W., xli (1951), cols. 471–591, with bibl. See also bibl. to Neoplatonism.

PLUMSTEAD PECULIARS. See Peculiar People.

PLUNKET, St. OLIVER (1629–81), RC Abp. of *Armagh. Of noble family, he was born at Loughcrew, nr. Oldcastle, Co. Meath, and studied and later taught at Rome. In 1654 he was ordained priest, for some years acted as the representative of the Irish Bishops at Rome, and in 1669 was appointed Abp. of Armagh. Consecrated at Ghent, he returned to Ireland, where he administered his diocese energetically, raising the standards of education and morality in the face of constant hardship. During the persecutions which began in 1673 he remained in Ireland and in the fury engendered by the *Titus Oates Plot he was arrested (1679), tried in London, and executed for treason at Tyburn on 1 July (O.S.), 1681. His head, taken to Rome in 1684, has since 1722 been at Drogheda, where it is now venerated in the Blessed Oliver Plunket Memorial Church. He was canonised in 1975. Feast day, 11 July.

Report of his last speech and confession publd. at London, 1681; repr., with other papers, by E. Horne, O.S.B., in Downside Review, xxxix (1921), pp. 99–105. The Trial and Condemnation of Edw. Fitz-Harris . . . as also . . . of Dr. Oliver Plunket . . . (London, 1681), pp. 61–103. Another contemporary account of his martyrdom ('Vita et Mors Gloriosa Illustrissimi D. Oliverii Plunketti'), ed. by P. F. Moran in his Spicilegium Ossoriense, iii (Dublin, 1884), pp. 102–8. Memoirs compiled from orig. sources, also by P. F. Moran (Dublin, 1861). Other modern lives by 'A Sister of Notre-Dame' (London, 1920), H. [Mrs. T.] Concannon (London, 1935), and E. Curtis, O.C.S.O. (Dublin–London, 1963). A. Curtayne, The Trial of Oliver Plunkett (1953). R. Bagwell in D N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 442–5.

PLURALISM. The view that the world contains or consists of a plurality of things or states ultimately distinct, and hence the contradiction of '*Monism' (q.v.).

W. James, A Pluralistic Universe (1909); J. Ward, The Realm of Ends, or Pluralism and Theism (1911).

PLURALITIES ACT, 1838 (1 and 2 Vict., cap. 106). An Act forbidding any clergyman in the C of E simultaneously to hold more than one ecclesiastical benefice with cure of souls except, by dispensation of the Abp. of *Canterbury, in the case of two livings with a population of under 3,000 where the travelling distance between the churches was less than ten miles and the joint annual income under £1,000. The Act also provided more stringent regulations for residence. It was modified by the Pluralities Act, 1850, acc. to which the churches of benefices held in conjunction were to be under three miles apart and the annual value of one under £100; the Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885, which allowed the distance between the churches to be four miles and provided that the annual income of one should not exceed £200; and the Pluralities Measure, 1930, which raised the annual income permissible in cases of plurality to £400. The Benefices Act, 1898, and the Union of Benefices Measure, 1923, were concerned with the administration of the Act. The terms of the Act are virtually abrogated by the Pastoral Reorganization Measure, 1949.

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, ii (ed. 2, 1895), pp. 898–906; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Church and Clergy (ed. 8 by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 299–302.

PLUVIAL (Lat. Pluviale). An alternative name for the *cope, probably from its having been originally a rain-cloak. In its English form the word is now almost obsolete.

PLYMOUTH BRETHREN. A Christian religious body, so named because its first centre in England was established by J. N. *Darby (1800–82), a former Anglican priest, at Plymouth in 1830. They had been founded in *Ireland by Darby two or three years earlier. Among their early converts was S. P. *Tregelles, the Biblical scholar. Their teaching combines elements from *Calvinism and *Pietism and emphasis has often been laid on an expected *Millennium. Their moral outlook is *Puritanical and they renounce many secular occupations, allowing only those compatible with NT standards (e.g. medicine, handicrafts). They have no organized ministry, though great stress is laid on the Breaking of the Bread each Sunday, partly as a symbol of Christian union and partly as the appointed means of showing forth Christ's death. Their outlook on the Bible is conservative. They also stress the complete autonomy of the local church.

In spite of their emphasis on Christian unity as a principle, the Plymouth Brethren tended from the first to split into separate groups. Controversies on the human nature of Christ and subsequently on Church government led to the fundamental division in 1849 between the 'Open Brethren' and the 'Exclusive Brethren'; and within these groups there are several sub-divisions. Though numerically few, the Plymouth Brethren are widely distributed, esp. in Great Britain and Ireland, on the Continent of Europe (esp. Switzerland, France and Italy), and in the U.S.A., and are very active in missionary work, esp. in India, E. Asia, Central Africa, and S. America.

Collected Writings of J. N. Darby ed. W. Kelly (34 vols., London, [1867–c. 1900], with index [1902]); short modern life by W. G. Turner (London, 1926). A. Miller, "The Brethren" (commonly so-called). A Brief Sketch of their Origin, Progress and Testimony [1880]. J. S. Teulon, The History and Teaching of the Plymouth Brethren (S.P.C.K., [1883]). W. B. Neatby, A History of the Plymouth Brethren (1901). T. S. Veitch, The Story of the Brethren Movement. A Simple and Straightforward Account of the Features and Failures to Carry out the Principles of Scripture during the last hundred years [1933]; D. J. Beattie, Brethren. The Story of a Great Recovery (Kilmarnock, [1940]); H. H. Rowdon, The Origins of the Brethren, 1825–1850 (1967); F. R. Coad, A History of the Brethren Movement. Its Origins, its Worldwide Development and its Significance for the Present Day ([Exeter] 1968). J. McCulloch in H.E.R.E., ii (1909), pp. 843–8 s.v. 'Brethren (Plymouth)'.

PNEUMATOMACHI (Gk. πνευματομάχοι), 4th cent. heretics who denied the full Godhead of the Holy Ghost. They are perhaps the 'Tropici' of St. *Athanasius in his Epp. to *Serapion of Thmuis (between 355 and 361), but came to the fore only in 373, when *Eustathius of Sebaste became their head after breaking with his former friend St. *Basil the Great. They were condemned by Pope *Damasus in 374, and their teaching was repeatedly attacked by the three great *Cappadocian Fathers and St. *Didymus. The sect had reached its full development c. 380, containing a more conservative section which, while rejecting the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, accepted the consubstantiality of the Son, and a radical party, which denied also the latter. At the Council of *Constantinople (381; can. 1) they were anathematized. The historians *Socrates and *Sozomen, as well as the Latin Fathers St. *Jerome, *Rufinus, and others, regard *Macedonius (q.v.) as their founder, but as he disappeared from the forefront of theological controversy after his deposition in 360 and as his name does not occur in contemporary anti-Pneumatomachian writings, this statement seems to be unfounded. It is possible that after Macedonius's death his followers amalgamated with the Pneumatomachi, and that the identification is to be so explained. The sect disappeared after 383, when they became victims of the Theodosian anti-heretical laws.

T. Schermann, Die Gottheit des heiligen Geistes nach den griechischen Vätern des vierten Jahrhunderts (1901). H. Dörries, De Spiritu Sancto. Der Beitrag des Basilius zum Abschluss des trinitarischen Dogmas (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, xxxix; 1956), esp. pp. 94–120. J. P. Arendzen in C.E., xii (1911), p. 174; C. Vagaggini in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1641–3, both s.v. See also bibl. to Macedonius.

POCOCKE, EDWARD (1604–91), orientalist. Educated at Magdalen Hall and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he became a Fellow of the latter society in 1628 and was English chaplain at Aleppo from 1630 to 1635. Here he perfected his knowledge of Arabic, collected a large number of valuable MSS., and on his return was appointed by W. *Laud first professor of Arabic at Oxford. In 1648 he succeeded to the chair of Hebrew, but his royalist views led to his temporary suspension. His erudition was immense. He took an active part in the preparation of B. *Walton's '*Polyglott Bible' (1657), and in 1660, at the expense of R. *Boyle, published an Arabic edition of H. *Grotius's De veritate christianae religionis for the furtherance of Christianity among Moslems. In 1663 he issued the Arabic text (with a Latin translation) of the Historia Compendiosa Dynastiarum of *Bar Hebraeus (Abû-l-Faraǧ). He also published large parts of the BCP in Arabic.

L. Twells (ed.), The Theological Works of the Learned Dr. Pocock (2 vols., 1740), with full biography and correspondence. S. Lane-Poole in D.N.B. xlvi (1896), pp. 7–12.

POIMANDRES (Gk. ποιμάνδρης, apparently 'the Shepherd of Men'). The first treatise in the corpus of *Hermetic writings (q.v.), though in its text the name of Hermes does not occur. It describes a vision seen under the guidance of Poimandres, a semi-divine being who is termed 'the Mind of the Sovereignty' (ὁ τῆς αὐθεντίας νοῦς), and treats of the creation of the universe and man, the union of spirit with matter following the Fall, and the method of redemption by knowledge (γνῶσις). The writer's nearest associations are with *Gnosticism; but there are parallels with the NT, e.g. the description of the Divine as 'light' and 'life' and the doctrine that the Divine *Logos was active in creation (cf. Jn. 1. 2–4). At times the language closely approximates to that of the *Septuagint, which was certainly known to the author. The work was written in Egypt early in the Christian era, perhaps (C. H. *Dodd) not long after A.D. 100. It was first published in a Lat. rendering by Marsilius *Ficinus (*Venice, date uncertain; acc. to R. *Reitzenstein, 1463).

Text in Hermetis Trismegisti Poemander, ed. G. Parthey, Berlin, 1854; and (with much highly conjectural emendation) in W. Scott, Hermetica, i (1924); also ed. A. D. Nock, with Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière, Corpus Hermeticum, i (Collection des Universités de France, 1945), pp. 6–28. C. H. Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935), pp. 99–248. R. Reitzenstein, Poimandres. Studien zur griechisch-ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur (1904). E. Haenchen, 'Aufbau und Theologie des "Poimandres" ' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, liii (1956), pp. 149–91.

POINTS, Hebrew. See Vowel Points.

POIRET, PIERRE (1646–1719), French Protestant mystic. After being preacher at Heidelberg (1668) and Anweiler (1672), he resigned his office in 1676 and became the companion of the visionary, Antoinette *Bourignon, whose ideas he subsequently interpreted in L'Économie divine (7 vols., 1687). After her death in 1680, he lived at Amsterdam and from 1688 at Rijnsburg. He was a keen student of mysticism, esp. as found in his contemporaries, J. *Boehme and Mme *Guyon (whose works he edited in 1704), and, of earlier writers, of *Thomas à Kempis and J. *Tauler. He laid stress on the relevance of the Cartesian philosophy to the study of mysticism. His most important work, Bibliotheca mysticorum (1708), contains much valuable out-of-the-way information on minor writers on mystic subjects. After his death Poiret's influence was chiefly exercised through his disciple G. *Tersteegen, and, less directly, on the whole *Pietistic Movement.

M. Wieser, Peter Poiret. Der Vater der romanischen Mystik in Deutschland (1932). S. Cramer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 491–7, with discussion of sources and bibl.

POISSY, Colloquy of (Disputatio Pussicena). A Conference held in 1561 at Poissy (on the Seine, not far from Paris) between the French bishops under Cardinal F. de Tournon and the Protestant ministers led by T. *Beza, to consider the religious situation created by the progress of the Reformed doctrines. It had been summoned by *Catherine de' Medici. Among the Catholic spokesmen was J. *Laynez, the General of the *Jesuits, and among the Protestants *Peter Martyr. Though it failed to secure dogmatic agreement between the two parties on the Eucharist, it prepared the way for the edict of Jan. 1562, which gave official recognition and a measure of freedom to French Protestants.

H. Klipffel, Le Colloque de Poissy. Étude sur la crise religieuse et politique de 1561 (1867). J. Roserot de Melin, 'Rome et Poissy (1560–61)' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxxix (1921–2), pp. 47–151. H. O. Evennett, The Cardinal of Lorraine and the Council of Trent (Cambridge, 1930), esp. pp. 283–391. D. Nugent, Ecumenism in the Age of The Reformation: The Colloquy of Poissy (Cambridge, Mass., 1974). E. Lachenmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 497–504.

POLAND, Christianity in. Poland received Christianity in the latter half of the 10th cent., probably from Moravia. In 966 the Prince Mieczysław I was baptized, and in 1000 Gnesen became a metropolitan see. (The alleged earlier dependence of the Church on the see of Magdeburg seems to have been disproved by modern research.) There were strong anti-Christian outbreaks between 1034 and 1040 and many martyrdoms. Throughout the 11th and 12th cents. the country was devastated by civil wars and disorders, and the Synod of Leczyca (1180) had to take special measures against robbers of churches. The fact that the *Hildebrandine reforms (11th cent.) had been carried out by royal power in the teeth of the opposition of bishops and clergy had brought the Church strongly under state control, but early in the 13th cent. this control was shaken off and the Church was reorganized in conformity with current canon law. In the same century the Tartar invasions stirred up a revival of Christianity, which later (c. 1400) manifested itself in missions to Lithuania.

In the early 15th cent. some of the nobility supported the *Hussites and the *Inquisition was introduced. In the 16th cent. the *Reformation also made headway, esp. among the nobility, who had long chafed at the dual control of King and Church. A religious war followed, while internal reform of the Church was effectively prevented by the papal legate, J. F. Commendone; but by the Conference of Warsaw in 1573 mutual toleration was secured. After the Conference the RCs increased their influence by judicious reforms, while dissensions diminished the strength of their opponents. In 1595 the *Ruthenian Church renounced communion with *Constantinople and submitted to Rome, and shortly afterwards the *Armenians in Poland accepted *Uniat status.

In the 17th cent. the RC majority succeeded in making toleration a dead letter. In the 18th the Protestants, though not formally persecuted, were still under restrictions, until the Confederation of Radom (1767) provided for complete religious freedom. The continual wars acted to the detriment of religion and opened the way for the growth of *Freemasonry, which fomented anti-Church feeling. The partition of Poland in 1772–3 between Russia, Austria, and Prussia was a disaster for the RC Church. The Russians put endless restrictions upon RCs and in 1831 compelled the Uniat Easterns to give up their communion with Rome; Prussia also interfered with the freedom of its RC subjects; and Austria placed the RCs under strict state supervision, and prevented control from Rome. With the independence of Poland in 1919 the influence of the RC Church revived, though the Orthodox retained their hold on many of the eastern parts.

Both Orthodox and RC Churches suffered severely under German and Russian occupation in 1939–45, and the setting up of a Communist-controlled government in 1945 led to the continuance of severe difficulties, esp. for the RCs. In the period since the Second World War relations between the Polish government and the RC Church have often been strained, but esp. since the election of a Pole as Pope *John Paul II in 1978, the RC Church has enjoyed greater freedom in Poland than it does in other Communist countries.

See also Old Catholics and Mariavites.

K. Völker, Kirchengeschichte Polens (1930), with detailed bibll. F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, v. 2 (Lfg. 21, Die evangelischen Kirchen in Polen; 1938), also with detailed bibll. W. F. Reddaway and others (edd.), The Cambridge History of Poland (2 vols., 1941–50), esp. vol. i, chs. 2, 4, 16 and 19. V. Krasinski, Historical Sketch of the Rise, Progress and Decline of the Reformation in Poland (2 vols., 1838–40). K. Völker, Der Protestantismus in Poland auf Grund der einheimischen Geschichtsschreibung dargestellt (1910); T. Wotschke, Geschichte der Reformation in Polen (Studien zur Kultur und Geschichte der Reformation herausgegeben vom Verein für Reformationsgeschichte, fasc. i; 1911). P. Fox, The Reformation in Poland. Some Social and Economic Aspects (Baltimore, 1924). A. Rhode, Geschichte der evangelischen Kirche in Posener Lande (Marburger Ostforschungen, iv; Würzburg, 1956). B. Stasiewski, Reformation und Gegen-Reformation in Polen. Neue Forschungsergebnisse (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, xviii; Münster i.W., 1960), and other works of this author. J. Bois, 'L'Église orthodoxe en Pologne avant le partage de 1772' in Échos d'Orient, xii (1909), pp. 227–33, 292–7; id., 'Lutte de l'orthodoxie contre l'union en Pologne avant 1772', ib., pp. 349–54, and xiii (1910), pp. 25–34 and 87–94. L. Lescœur, L'Église catholique en Pologne sous le gouvernement russe, depuis le premier partage jusqu'à nos jours (1860; ed. 2, revised, 2 vols., 1876); E. Likowski, Geschichte des allmaeligen Verfalls der Unirten Ruthenischen Kirche im XVIII. und XIX. Jahrhundert unter polnischem und russischem Scepter (Germ. tr., 2 vols., 1885–7); id., Die ruthenisch-römische Kirchenvereinigung, genannt Union zu Brest (1904). T. Andrews, The Polish National Church in America and Poland (1953), passim. B. Stasiewski in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 471–86, s.v., with bibl. See also Ruthenian Churches.

POLE, REGINALD (1500–58), Abp. of *Canterbury. Of the blood royal by his mother, Margaret, Countess of Salisbury and niece of Edward IV, he was educated at the Sheen Charterhouse and Magdalen College, Oxford, and given ecclesiastical preferment by *Henry VIII while still in his teens and a layman. In 1521 he went to Padua, and for several years was in close contact with the later Italian Renaissance, corresponding with T. *More and D. *Erasmus, and visiting Rome and Paris. In 1530 Henry, anxious for help over his divorce, offered him the see of *York or *Winchester, but Pole declined both, and in 1534–6 wrote Pro Ecclesiasticae Unitatis Defensione, censuring the King's conduct. *Paul III summoned him in 1536 to confer about a general council, put him on a committee for the reform of discipline, and (after his ordination as deacon) created him a cardinal. In 1538 indignation at Rome over the destruction of *Becket's shrine caused Pole to be sent as legate on a fruitless mission to persuade Spain and France to break with England, and in 1539 an Act of Attainder was passed against him and his family. In 1541 G. *Contarini took counsel with Pole, before the Diet of *Ratisbon, with a view to conciliating the Protestants, whose views on justification were not unlike Pole's own; and in the following year he was one of the three legates appointed to preside at the Council of *Trent, which did not meet, however, until 1545. In 1547 he urged *Somerset to treat with the Holy See, and on Paul III's death (1549) was nearly elected Pope. On *Edward VI's death in 1553 *Julius III appointed him legate in England, and after the removal of his attainder he reached Dover in Nov. 1554, formally absolved Parliament from schism, and presided over a synod of both *convocations. On 20 Mar. 1556 he was ordained priest at the Greyfriars, Greenwich, and consecrated Abp. of Canterbury two days later. With the outbreak of war between *Paul IV (Caraffa) and *Philip of Spain, the Queen became the Pope's enemy, and the Pope cancelled Pole's legation, accusing him also of doctrinal unsoundness. He died only twelve hours after the Queen. Pole was a man of pure morals, sincere piety, and ascetic habits, and animated by a remarkable singleness of purpose.

Standard ed. of his Epistolae, incl. some other writings, ed. Card. A. M. Quirini (Brescia, 5 vols., 1744–57). J. *Gairdner, Letters and Papers of Henry VIII; Rawdon Brown, Calendar of State Papers. Venetian, vols. v and vi (both passim). Lives by L. Beccadelli (Lat., Venice, 1563; Eng. tr., 1766), T. Phillips (Oxford, 1764), Athanasius Zimmermann (Ratisbon, 1893), M. Haile (London, 1910), R. Biron and J. Barennes (Paris, 1922), and W. Schenk (London, 1950). D. Fenlon, Heresy and Obedience in Tridentine Italy. Cardinal Pole and the Counter Reformation (Cambridge, 1972). J. Gairdner in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 35–46.

POLITARCHS (Gk. πολιτάρχης). A comparatively rare title for magistrates in the Greco-Roman world, used in the NT only of the city magistrates of Thessalonica (Acts 17. 6, 8; AV, 'the rulers of the city'). The accuracy of St. *Luke's usage is proved by the occurrence of the word on several inscriptions which come from Thessalonica.

E. de W. Burton, 'The Politarchs' in The American Journal of Theology, ii (1898), pp. 598–632.

POLITIQUES. French political party which advocated religious toleration esp. after the Massacre of St. *Bartholomew's day (q.v.). They made an alliance with the *Huguenots and subsequently many of them supported *Henry IV.

POLYCARP, St. (traditionally c. 69–c. 155), Bp. of Smyrna. He seems to have been the leading Christian figure in Roman Asia in the middle of the 2nd cent., and his long life (about which unfortunately little is known) is thus an important link between the *Apostolic Age and the great Christian writers (e.g. St. *Irenaeus) who flourished at the end of the 2nd cent. A staunch defender of orthodoxy, he devoted much of his energy to combating such heretics as the *Marcionites and *Valentinians. A letter addressed to him by St. *Ignatius has survived, as well as his own 'Ep. to Philippians' (perhaps a combination of two epistles of different dates; so P. N. Harrison). The latter is important for its testimony to the NT, e.g. it quotes 1 Jn. 4. 3. At the end of his life, when Polycarp paid a visit to Rome to see the bishop, Anicetus, and to discuss, among other things, the date of keeping the *Easter festival, it was agreed that each Church should maintain its own custom and that Asia should continue the *Quartodeciman practice. Soon after his return to Smyrna, Polycarp was arrested during a public (pagan) festival and, proclaiming that he had served Christ for 86 years, he refused to recant his faith and was burnt to death. The traditionally accepted date of his death is 23 Feb. 155 or 156, but as *Eusebius places it in the reign of *Marcus Aurelius (161–80), some scholars have argued for a later period and have put the date of his birth correspondingly later. The 'Martyrium Polycarpi', written from Smyrna by request of the Church at Philomelium, gives an account of his trial and martyrdom. St. Irenaeus says that Polycarp 'had intercourse with John [the Apostle or Elder?] and with the rest of those who had seen the Lord'. Feast day, 23 Feb. (in W., formerly 26 Jan.).

Texts, incl. 'Martyrium Polycarpi', will be found in edd. of the Apostolic Fathers; with esp. valuable comm. and notes in ed. J. B. *Lightfoot (Part II, 3 vols., 1885). P. N. Harrison, Polycarp's Two Epistles to the Philippians (1936). On the date of the martyrdom, see C. H. *Turner in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, ii (1890), pp. 105–55 [defends 23 Feb. 155]; also H. Grégoire–P. Orgels, 'La Véritable Date du martyre de Polycarpe (23 févr. 177) et le Corpus Polycarpianum' in Anal. Boll., lxix (1951), pp. 1–38 [much contested]; H. I. Marrou, 'La Date du martyre de S. Polycarpe, ib., lxxi (1953), pp. 1–20. H. von Campenhausen, Polykarp von Smyrna und die Pastoralbriefe (Sb. (Heid.), 1951, Abhandlung 2; 1951); id., Bearbeitungen und Interpolationen des Polykarpmartyriums (ib., 1957, Abhandlung 3; 1957). H. Grégoire–P. Orgels–J. Moreau, 'Les Martyres de Pionios et de Polycarpe' in Académie Royale de Belgique. Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences morales et politiques, 5e Série, xlvii (1961), pp. 72–83. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 160–70; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 50–2. G. *Salmon in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 423–31, s.v.; G. N. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xv (1904), pp. 535–7, s.v. 'Polykarp'; G. Fritz in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2515–20, s.v. 'Polycarpe'; P. Meinhold in P.W., xxi (pt. 2; 1952), cols. 1662–93. See also entry Plontus and bibl. there cited.

POLYCHRONIUS (d. c. 430), Bp. of Apamaea in Syria. He was the brother of *Theodore, Bp. of Mopsuestia. A Biblical exegete of the Antiochene school, he wrote commentaries on Job, Daniel, and Ezekiel, of which considerable fragments survive, chiefly in catenae. It is probable that the fragments on other Books (Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, &c.) come from another writer of the same name. He expressly condemned the *Alexandrine method of allegorical exegesis.

Fgmts. on Job ed. P. *Young in Catena Graecorum Patrum in Jobum (London, 1637); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xciii, cols. 13–468. Other fgmts. ed. A. *Mai, whence repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, clxii (very rare). O. *Bardenhewer, Polychronius von Apamea (1879). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 322–4.

POLYCRATES (2nd cent.), Bp. of *Ephesus. He was the leading *Quartodeciman of Asia who, after assembling in synod about 190, sturdily opposed Pope *Victor in his attempts to secure that the feast of *Easter should be uniformly celebrated on a Sunday. In consequence, Victor withdrew from communion with Polycrates. The incident, which is all that is known of Polycrates, is an important illustration of the early claims of the Roman see.

Extracts from Polycrates' letter are preserved in *Eusebius, H.E., V. xxiv. 2–8 and III. xxxi. 3. E. Peterson in E.C., ix (1952), col. 1672 f.

POLYGLOT BIBLES. A 'Polyglot Bible' is a single Bible containing the text in a number of languages. Such Bibles were issued esp. in the 16th and 17th cents. The most celebrated is the '*Complutensian Polyglot', in 6 vols. (1522), produced under the patronage of Cardinal *Ximenes, containing the OT in Hebrew, Latin, and Greek, and the NT in Greek and Latin. Other Polyglot Bibles are those of Antwerp (1569–72) in 8 vols., adding the Syriac NT, with a Latin trans.; of Paris (1629–45) in 10 vols., adding the Arabic, with a Latin translation, and the *Samaritan Pentateuch; and of London (1657), by B. *Walton, in six vols., containing the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Persian, all with Latin translations, as well as the Samaritan Pentateuch, various *Targums, and selected readings of the *Codex Alexandrinus. 'Diglot Bibles' (Greco-Latin, Greco-Coptic, and later Coptic-Arabic) are known from the 5th cent. onwards, but there is no proof of early polyglots.

B. Hall, The Great Polyglot Bibles (Book Club of California, cxxiv; San Francisco, 1966). Darlow-Moule, ii (1911), pp. 1–36.

POMPONAZZI, PIETRO (1464–1525). The most outstanding philosopher of the Italian Renaissance. He taught successively at Padua, Ferrara, and *Bologna. Under the influence esp. of the Aristotelian commentator, Alexander of Aphrodisias (c. A.D. 200; whence Pomponazzi's disciples were termed 'Alexandrists'), he expounded *Aristotle in a way at variance with that of the regnant Scholasticism, maintaining, e.g., in his De immortalitate animae (1516) that it was possible to demonstrate by the natural reason the mortality of the human soul. He argued that the only sense in which one could speak legitimately of the immateriality and immortality of the soul was in reference to its capacity for reflective knowledge and conceiving universal concepts, a capacity which accorded it a status between the brutes on the one hand and the angelic beings on the other. Pomponazzi maintained, however, that these doctrines need cause no offence to the Christian, since they were merely the deductions of human reason and were transcended by the supernatural revelation made to the Church. Two later treatises, De Incantationibus and De Fato, were published posthumously at Basle.

Modern edd. of De Immortalitate Animae, with Ital. tr., by G. Morra (Bologna, 1954) and of De Fato, by R. Lemay (Lugano, 1957). Corsi inediti dell'Insegnamento Padovano, i. 'Super Libello de Substantia Orbis Expositio et Quaestiones Quattuor' (1507), ed. A. Poppi (Padua, 1966). Eng. tr. of De Immortalitate Animae, with introd., in E. Cassirer and others (edd.), The Renaissance of Man (Chicago, 1948), pp. 257–381, with bibl. p. 400. F. Fiorentino, Pietro Pomponazzi. Studi storici sulla scuola bolognese-padovana del sec. XVI (Florence, 1868; still important); id., Studi e ritratti della rinascenza (Bari, 1911), pp. 1–79. A. H. Douglas, The Philosophy and Psychology of P. Pomponazzi (ed. C. Douglas and R. P. Hardie, 1910); B. Nardi, Studi su Petro Pomponazzi (Florence, 1965). C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), pp. 313–43. L. Ferri, La psicologia di P. Pomponazzi, secondo un MS. della Bibl. Angelica di Roma (1877). B. Nardi in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1731–4, s.v.

POMPONIA GRAECINA (1st cent.), wife of Aulus Plautius, the conqueror of Britain, and prob. an early convert to Christianity. Acc. to *Tacitus (Annales, xiii. 32), she was accused by her husband of foreign superstition (superstitio externa), but acquitted. A Greek inscription to 'Pomponios Grecinos', perhaps a descendant, has been found in the catacomb of St. *Callistus. She has been identified (not very convincingly) by G. B. *de Rossi and others with the Roman matron *Lucina (q.v.) of the 'Crypt of Lucina'.

G. B. de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, i (1864), p. 319 f., and ii (1867), pp. 362–5. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 2; 1907), col. 2847 f., s.v. 'Aristocratiques (Classes), II', with bibl.

PONTIFEX MAXIMUS (Lat., 'Supreme Pontiff'). Originally a pagan title of the chief priest at Rome, *Tertullian used it satirically in one of his *Montanist writings (De pudicitia, 1) of the Pope, and from the 15th cent. onwards it was a regular title of honour for the Popes, and occasionally used also of other bishops. In later times the title has been confined to the Roman Pontiff. Cf. the Italian 'Sommo Pontefice' and the French 'Souverain Pontife'.

PONTIFICAL, the liturgical book of the W. Church containing the prayers and ceremonies for rites used by a bishop, e.g. *Confirmation and Holy Orders, the consecration of churches, etc. It does not, however, contain the Pontifical Mass. Pontificals developed from a combination of the directions in the ordines with the relevant formulae from *sacramentaries. The earliest attempts to combine these elements were made in the 9th cent. A very important stage was reached soon after the middle of the 10th cent., when a large collection of texts was put together, prob. at St. Alban's, Mainz; this has been named by its discoverer, M. Andrieu, the Romano-Germanic Pontifical. This book rapidly gained acceptance all over Europe and was received at Rome, where it came to be regarded as the Ordo Romanus. During the course of the 12th cent. it was adapted and brought up to date for use in the churches of Rome. Under *Innocent III a new recension was made, which was further developed under *Innocent IV. These books are known as the Pontificals of the Roman Curia. They gave way in the 14th cent. to a private compilation made c. 1293–5 by the canonist, William *Durandus, Bp. of Mende. This was a marked improvement on them by reason of its clear organization. It was divided into three books: the first relates to persons: confirmation, ordination, consecration of bishops, etc.; the second relates to things: consecration of churches, altars, etc.; and the third deals with rites for special functions, such as the consecration of holy oils, visitation, excommunication, etc. This compilation was the basis of the first printed Pontifical (Rome, 1485) and with minor modifications of the authoritative edition issued in 1596 by *Clement VIII, who forbade the use of any other Pontifical. A revision of part of the Pontifical was undertaken by a commission appointed by Pope *Pius XII; the revision of the remainder was ordained at the Second *Vatican Council. The revised rites have been appearing since 1961.

The substance of the Roman Pontificals is largely taken from the 'Ordines Romani' (q.v., incl. bibl.). C. Vogel–R. Elze (edd.), Le Pontifical romano-germanique du dixième siècle (S.T., ccxxvi–ccxxvii; 1963); M. Andrieu (ed.), Le Pontifical romain au Moyen Age (ib., lxxxvi–lxxxviii, xcix; 1938–41). W. H. *Frere–F. C. Eeles–A. Riley, Pontifical Services . . . with descriptive Notes and a Liturgical Introduction (*Alcuin Club Collections, iii, iv, viii, xii; 1901–8). P. de Puniet, O.S.B., Le Pontifical romain (2 vols., 1930–1; Eng. tr., 1932). C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au moyen âge (Biblioteca degli 'Studi Medievali', i [1966]), pp. 182–235. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1428–45; L. Brinkhoff, O.F.M., in L.W., ii (1968), cols. 2225–9, s.v., with extensive list of printed pontificals.

PONTIFICALS (Lat. Pontificalia). The insignia of the episcopal order worn by a prelate when celebrating Pontifical Mass. Those common to all prelates, as enumerated by *Pius VII in Decet Romanos (1823), are the buskins (silk leg-coverings), *sandals, *gloves, *dalmatic, *tunicle, *ring, *pectoral cross, and *mitre. The *Codex (CIC, §337, 2), however, refers to the *pastoral staff and the mitre as the characteristic 'insignia pontificalia'. Their use (and in some cases their suppression) is regulated by the motu proprio of *Paul VI and the Instruction of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, both of 1968. The word is also applied to episcopal functions at which these insignia are worn.

T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte (Lecture; 1948). P. Salmon, O.S.B., Étude sur les insignes du pontife dans le rit romain (Rome, 1955). M. Noirot in D.D.C., vii (1965), cols. 34–42, s.v. 'Pontificalia'.

PONTIUS, St. (d. c. 260), biographer of St. *Cyprian. He was Cyprian's deacon at Carthage and followed him into exile at Curubis. His Vita et Passio Cypriani, more an edifying panegyric than a work of history, is the earliest Christian biography. Feast day, 8 Mar. (He is to be distinguished from the Roman martyr St. Pontius [3rd cent.]; feast day, 14 May.)

Crit. text of Vita Cypriani ed. W. Hartel in C.S.E.L., iii (1) (1868), pp. xc–cx. Eng. tr. in A.N.C.L., viii (Writings of Cyprian, vol. i), pp. xiii–xxxi. A. *Harnack, Das Leben Cyprians von Pontius (T.U., xxxix, Hft. 3; 1913; perhaps overestimates the historical value of the Vita). P. Corssen, 'Das Martyrium des Bischofs Cyprian. II. Das Verhältnis des sog. Vita Cypriani zu den Cypriansakten' in Z.N.T.W., xv (1914), pp. 285–316, xvi (1915), pp. 54–92, 198–230; 'IV. Pontius' Verhältnis zu Cyprian als Mensch und Schriftsteller', ib., xviii (1917–18), pp. 118–39, and 'V. Der literarische Charakter und die Tendenz der Schrift des Pontius', ib., pp. 202–23 (defends authenticity of Vita against R. *Reitzenstein). M. Pellegrino in E.C., ix (1952), col. 175 f. s.v. 'Ponzio'.

PONTIUS PILATE. See Pilate, Pontius.

POOR CLARES (Fr., Clarisses), the 'Second Order' of St. *Francis, founded by him and St. *Clare between 1212 and 1214. It received its first rule in 1219 from Cardinal Ugolino (later *Gregory IX), and spread rapidly through Italy, and later all over Europe. In 1247 *Innocent IV sanctioned a second rule containing several moderations, esp. regarding poverty, and six years later a third and much stricter one, based on that of St. Francis and enjoining complete poverty both individual and corporate. This rule was not accepted by all convents, and in 1263 Urban IV sanctioned a milder one which was observed by the majority, those nuns who follow it being hence called 'Urbanists'. The order was thoroughly reformed in the 15th cent. by St. Colette, who restored the principle of strict poverty in her houses; and since then the Urbanists and the *Colettines have remained the two chief branches of the order. The majority of Poor Clare convents are strictly contemplative, devoted to prayer, penance, and manual work. They have the strictest enclosure, practise severe fasts and other austerities, rise for the Night Office, and are regarded as the most austere women's order of the RC Church. Their habit, which, like that of the Franciscans, has no *scapular, is of dark frieze with a cord girdle, and they wear a black veil and cloth sandals on bare feet.

Histoire abrégée de l'ordre de Sainte Claire d'Assise. Édition des Monastères des Clarisses Colettines à Lyon et à Tournai (1906). G. Daval, O.F.M., Les Clarisses (Les Grands Ordres religieux, 1924); J. Ancelot-Hustache, Les Clarisses (Les Grands Ordres monastiques, 1929). Santa Chiara d'Assisi. Studi e cronaca del VII centenario 1253–1953 (Assisi [1954]), esp. pp. 311–516, with bibl. Saint Clare and her Order. A Story of Seven Centuries by the author of 'The Enclosed Nun' (1912). E. Lempp, 'Die Anfänge des Clarissenordens' in Z.K.G., xiii (1892), pp. 181–245; L. Lemmens, O.F.M., 'Die Anfänge des Clarissenordens' in R.Q., xvi (1902), pp. 93–124. L. Oliger, O.F.M., 'De Origine Regularum Ordinis S. Clarae' in A.F.H., v (1912), pp. 181–209 and 413–47. E. Wauer, Entstehung und Ausbreitung des Klarissenordens besonders in den deutschen Minoritenprovinzen (1906); A. F. C. Bourdillon, The Order of Minoresses in England (Manchester University thesis; British Society of Franciscan Studies, xii; 1926); H. Concannon, The Poor Clares in Ireland, A.D. 1629–A.D. 1929 (Dublin, 1929). Heimbucher, i, pp. 815–28, with bibl. F. Casolini in Dict. Sp., v (1964), cols. 1409–22, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs, vi. Sainte Claire et les Clarisses, 2. Les Clarisses'. See also bibl. to Clare, St.

POOR MEN OF LYONS. The name under which Pope Lucius III condemned the *Waldensians (q.v.) in 1184.

POORE, RICHARD (d. 1237), Bp. of *Salisbury. His name also occurs in the forms Poor, Poure, and Le Poor. He came from a distinguished administrative family. He studied at the University of Paris under Stephen *Langton. Elected Dean of *Sarum, where his brother Herbert was bishop, c. 1197, he was twice unsuccessful as a candidate for the sees of *Winchester (1204) and *Durham (1213), but was elected Bp. of *Chichester in 1214 and translated to Salisbury three years later. In 1219 he removed his see from Old Sarum to its present site, and in the next year began the erection of the present cathedral, where he consecrated a temporary high altar in the Lady Chapel in 1225. About the same time he drew up the Salisbury Constitutions and probably gave the 'Use of Sarum' (q.v.) its final form. The diocesan statutes which he drew up as Bishop of Salisbury were the most widely influential of the English diocesan statutes of the 13th cent. In 1228 he was translated to the see of Durham. He was formerly, but quite erroneously, believed to be the author of the '*Ancren Riwle'.

Crit. ed. of the statutes which he drew up for the diocese of Salisbury, and reissued at Durham, in F. M. Powicke–C. R. Cheney (edd.), Councils & Synods with other documents relating to the English Church, ii, part 1: 1205–1265 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 57–96. See also W. H. Rich Jones (ed.), The Register of S. Osmund (2 vols., R.S., 1883–4), i, pp. 284–379, and ii, pp. 4–100 passim, and introd., ii, pp. xcviii–cxxxi passim. C. R. Cheney, English Synodalia of the Thirteenth Century (1941), pp. 51–89. On his conjectured authorship of the Ancren Riwle see bibl. s.v. H. E. D. Blakiston in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), pp. 106–9.

POPE, The (Gk. πάπας, Lat. papa, 'father'). The title, though now restricted to the Bp. of Rome, was in early times used in the W. of any Bishop. In the E. it was apparently confined to the Bp. of Alexandria, who was regularly styled πάπας; but in modern popular usage the word is applied in the Orthodox Churches to all priests (cf. the use of 'father', q.v., in the W.). At the Synod of Pavia on 20 Sept. 998 the Abp. of Milan was rebuked for calling himself 'Pope', and in 1073 *Gregory VII, in a Council at Rome, formally prohibited its use by any other Bishop than the Bp. of Rome.

B. Labanca, 'Del nome Papa nelle chiese cristiane di Oriente ed Occidente' in Actes du Douzième Congrès International des Orientalistes, Rome, 1899, III. ii (Florence, 1902), pp. 47–101, with bibl. P. de Labriolle, 'Papa' in Bulletin Du Cange, iv (1928), pp. 65–75.

POPE JOAN. See Joan, Pope.

POPE, WILLIAM BURT (1822–1903), *Wesleyan theologian. He was born at Horton in Nova Scotia, and after studying privately entered the Methodist Theological Institution at Hoxton in 1840. From 1842 he was a minister in several cities, including Dover, London, Manchester, and Leeds. In 1860 he became editor of the London Quarterly Review and in 1867 was appointed tutor of systematic theology at Didsbury. In 1876 he went to America as delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore, and in 1877 he presided over the Wesleyan Conference at Bristol. He resigned his tutorship at Didsbury College in 1886. He enjoyed a high reputation as a theologian in the Methodist Church. His principal work, the Compendium of Christian Theology (3 vols., 1875), contains an elaborate and sympathetic defence of the Methodist doctrine of Christian perfection. He also published several volumes of sermons and translations from the German.

Life by R. W. Moss (London, c. 1909). C. H. Irwin in D.N.B., 1901–1911, iii, p. 127.

POPERY. This hostile designation for the specific doctrines and practices of the RC Church is already found in 1534 in W. *Tyndale and has been in common use since.

POPERY, The Declaration Against. The declaration imposed by 30 Car. II, cap. I, St. II (3), 1677, requiring all Members of Parliament to denounce transubstantiation, the Mass, and the Invocation of Saints as idolatrous. It was abolished in 1778, when another and less exacting oath was substituted for it.

POPISH PLOT, The. The supposed plot to murder *Charles II which T. *Oates (q.v.) claimed that he had discovered in 1678. Despite the great sensation it created, it seems to have been a pure invention of Oates.

[F.] J. Pollock, The Popish Plot (1903; ed. 2, 1944). J. Kenyon, The Popish Plot (1972). See also bibl. to Oates, Titus.

POPPY HEADS. In ecclesiology, the ornamented finials at the tops of bench-ends, in form somewhat resembling a fleur de lys. They became common in the 15th cent., esp. in E. Anglia, where many fine examples can still be seen, and were widely copied. It is uncertain whether the name has any connexion with the poppy flower. Possibly it derives from the Fr. poupée, a 'figure-head' or 'puppet'.

J. C. Cox, Bench Ends in English Churches (1916), esp. pp. 12–16. F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, ii (1910), esp. p. 6 f.

PORPHYRY (c. 232–c. 303), *Neoplatonist philosopher. Of pagan family, possibly orig. called 'Malchus', he was brought up at Tyre, and in his youth visited Syria, Palestine and Alexandria. It is possible that he was at one time a Christian (so *Socrates and Aristocritus [5th cent.], followed by A. *Harnack; denied by J. Bidez), but he clearly did not hold the faith by the time of the persecution of the Emp. *Decius in 250. He studied philosophy at *Athens and was finally convinced of Neoplatonist principles by *Plotinus, whom he met at *Rome in 262. Just before the death of the latter (270) he went to Sicily, where he published many of his philosophical works, but towards the end of his life he returned to Rome and taught with considerable success, numbering *Iamblichus among his pupils.

After investigating with sympathetic interest the religious systems current in Asia, Porphyry adopted an attitude of scepticism towards all popular religion, marked by esp. bitterness against the Christians. In his Πρὸς Ἀνεβώ he pointed out the contradictions in popular superstition. Of more lasting significance was his treatise in fifteen books against the Christians (Κατὰ Χριστιανῶν); it was condemned to be burnt in 448 and survives only in fragments in works written mainly to refute it. Porphyry seems to have observed a certain restraint in his remarks about Christ Himself, whom he admired as a teacher; but he considered the apparent failure of His life proof that He was not divine, and he launched his most bitter invective against the Apostles and leaders of the Church, which he finally condemned for its lack of patriotism in resisting the religious revival fostered by the Emps. Decius and Aurelian. His exposure of the alleged inconsistencies of the Gospels and his attack on the OT (e.g. the date of the Book of *Daniel) was sufficiently forceful to draw detailed refutations from St. *Methodius of Olympus, *Eusebius of Caesarea, *Apollinarius of Laodicea and others.

His numerous philosophical works, primarily intended to draw the soul from contact with the sensible world and turn it to the contemplation of intelligible reality, are important not so much for their originality as for their clear exposition, development and preservation of much that was obscurely put in Plotinus and others. They include, besides various commentaries on the Categories of *Aristotle, Περὶ τῆς ἐκ λογίων φιλοσοφίας, Περὶ ἀγαλμάτων, Φιλόσοφος ἱστορία and Ἀφορμαὶ πρὸς τὰ νοητά. He also wrote a life of Plotinus and edited his works (after 300), and composed various treatises on astronomy, mathematics, grammar and rhetoric, a philological dissertation on Homer, a commentary on Ptolemy's Harmonica and on various other technical subjects. His 'Introduction to the Categories of Aristotle' (Εἰσαγωγή) became a standard work in the medieval schools.

No collected edition of Porphyry's works exists, the different items being printed in a variety of places; careful list in J. Bidez, op. cit. infra, pp. 63*–73*. Opuscula Selecta ed. A. Nauck (Teubn., 1886). For Porphyry's life the chief sources are his own 'Life of Plotinus' (crit. ed. in Plotini Opera, ed. P. Henry, S.J.–H. R. Schwyzer, Paris, i (1951), pp. 1–41) and the entry in *Suidas' Lexicon, s.v. The material is fully surveyed in J. Bidez, Vie de Porphyre avec les fragments des traités Περὶ Ἀγαλμάτων et De Regressu Animae (Université de Gand. Recueil de Travaux publiés par la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres, xliii; 1913). A. *Harnack, Kritik des Neuen Testaments von einem Philosophen des 3. Jahrhunderts (T.U., xxxvii, Hft. 4; 1911); id., Porphyrius 'Gegen die Christen', 15 Bücher. Zeugnisse, Fragmente und Referate (Abh. (Berl.), 1916, Hft. 1; acc. to Harnack and others, Porphyry was the pagan philosopher extensively cited in *Macarius Magnes' Apocriticus). D. Hagedorn–R. Merkelbach, 'Ein neues Fragment aus Porphyrios "Gegen die Christen" ' in V.C., xx (1966), pp. 86–90. H. Raeder, Porphyrios fra Tyros, Videnskabsmand og Mystiker (Studier fra Sprog- og Oldtidsforskning, No. 188, Copenhagen, 1942). P. de Labriolle, La Réaction païenne (1934), pp. 223–96. W. Theiler, Porphyrios und Augustin (Halle, 1933); repr. in Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, x; 1966), pp. 160–251. 'J. J. O'Meara, Porphyry's Philosophy from Oracles in Augustine (Paris, 1959). Überweg, i, pp. 597–9, 609–12, with bibl. p. 190* f. L. Vaganay in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2555–90, s.v. 'Porphyre', with bibl.; R. Beutler in P.W., xxii (pt. 1; 1953), cols. 275–313, s.v. 'Porphyrios'.

PORRECTIO INSTRUMENTORUM. See Instruments, Tradition of the.

PORTA SANTA. See Holy Door.

PORTAS. See Portiforium.

PORTER. See Doorkeeper.

PORTEUS, BEILBY (1731–1808), Bp. of London. Of American descent, he was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and after holding various parochial appointments became Bp. of *Chester in 1776 and of London in 1787. He identified himself with the practical ideals of the rising *Evangelical school, energetically furthering many of their reforms, e.g. promoting mission work among negro slaves in America and securing the due observance of the Christian Holy Days. He was also an eager supporter of the *C.M.S. and of the *British and Foreign Bible Society. A keen *Sabbatarian, he actively opposed the practice of Sunday concerts by professional performers in private houses, as well as Sunday debating societies. In 1767 he preached a sermon at Cambridge, some extracts from which, falling into the hands of John Norris (1734–77), moved him to found the Norrisian chair in divinity. Theologically he was out of sympathy with the *Calvinism currently upheld by the Evangelicals and to this extent did not fully accept all their teaching.

Collected ed. of his Works (35 Sermons, 24 Lectures and various Tracts) in 6 vols., London, 1811, with life by R. Hodgson as vol. i. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xlv (1896), pp. 195–7, with further reff.

PORTIFORIUM. A name used in England in the Middle Ages for the *Breviary. Other forms of the word are 'Portas', 'Portuary', and 'Portuis'.

PORTIUNCULA. The Umbrian village, also known as Santa Maria degli Angeli, about 2 miles from *Assisi, where St. *Francis received his vocation on 24 Feb. 1208. He made it his headquarters for the rest of his life, and clothed St. *Clare here in 1212. The cell in which he died (3 Oct. 1226) is surrounded by an imposing church, largely rebuilt after an earthquake in 1832. The town gives its name to the 'Portiuncula *Indulgence', which is now to be obtained by visiting a parish church on 2 Aug. or the Sunday following. The evidence for connecting the Indulgence with St. Francis himself is unconvincing, though the practice of seeking the indulgence at the Portiuncula chapel (to which it was originally confined) is well attested before the end of the 13th century.

A. Teetaert, O.S.F.C., in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2602–11, s.v. 'Portioncule', with selection from the immense literature.

PORT-ROYAL, Convent of, *Jansenist centre. A convent of *Cistercian nuns was originally founded at Port-Royal, a marshy site some 18 miles SW. of *Paris (hence 'Port-Royal-des-Champs'), in 1204. The appointment in 1602 of (Jacqueline Marie) Angélique *Arnauld as abbess at the age of 10 was the prelude to its emergence as a house of major importance. Converted (by a *Capuchin friar) to a new view of her responsibilities in 1608, she undertook far-reaching reforms and began to attract numerous novices (including several members of her own huge family). Owing to the unhealthy conditions, in 1625 the community reluctantly moved into Paris to a new house in the Faubourg St. Jacques ('Port-Royal-de-Paris'). Under the direction of Sébastien Zamet, Bp. of Langres (Bp. 1615–55), in 1627 the community was removed from the jurisdiction of Cîteaux and formed an autonomous Ordre du St Sacrement, adding a large red cross to their white habit to signify their independence. The initial spirituality of Port-Royal was largely *Oratorian, but in 1635 Zamet handed over direction to *Saint-Cyran, Jansen's associate; his influence then became decisive, and was zealously maintained after his death in 1643 by Antoine *Arnauld, who became spokesman for what came to be called Jansenism. After 1637 some of Saint-Cyran's converts came to live near the convent (at first in Paris, then in the derelict Port-Royal-des-Champs) as 'Solitaires', without taking vows, but devoting themselves to the interests of the nuns, the education of a few boys (including Racine), and literary pursuits. By 1648 their labours had rendered Port-Royal-des-Champs habitable enough to receive some of the nuns, and henceforward the two houses existed with a single conventual organization, increasingly openly and militantly associated with the Jansenist cause. Blaise *Pascal, though never a 'Solitaire', was closely linked with Port-Royal, and his sister, Jacqueline, was professed there as a nun. Among the most famous 'Solitaires' were Antoine Singlin, Claude Lancelot and Le Maître de Sacy.

When in 1661 the nuns of Port-Royal refused to subscribe the condemnation of Jansenism, certain measures affecting the prosperity of the convent were taken by the civil power and in 1664 a real persecution began; but very few of the nuns were persuaded to sign the 'formulary' until after the *Peace of the Church (1668). In 1669 the two houses were legally separated, Port-Royal-de-Paris being given over to the nuns who had submitted before 1668, while the Jansenist majority were established in Port-Royal-des-Champs. A period of prosperity followed, cut short in 1679, after the recrudescence of the Jansenist controversy, when the convent was forbidden to take boarders or receive any more novices. Subsequently further measures were taken to the prejudice of its temporalities. In 1705 *Clement XI published a bull condemning those who, in signing the anti-Jansenist formulary of *Alexander VII, used mental reservations: the nuns of Port-Royal refused to accept this new definition, and, after a short persecution, were finally dispersed in 1709. The buildings were subsequently destroyed, and the site desecrated (1710–13).

A. de Dion (ed.), Cartulaire de l'abbaye de Porrois au diocèse de Paris plus connue sous son nom mystique Port-Royal, i, 1204–80 [all publd.] (1903). The fundamental modern critical work is that of C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Port-Royal (5 vols., 1840–59, and index, 1861; modern ed. by M. Leroy, Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, xciii, xcix, cvii; 1953–55). The more important earlier works include [C. Clémencet, O.S.B.] Histoire générale de Port-Royal (10 vols., Amsterdam, 1755–7); id., Histoire littéraire de Port-Royal, ed. [R. F. W.] Guettée (Paris, 1868); J. Racine (the poet), Abrégé de l'histoire de Port-Royal (1742–54; ed. A. Gazier, 1908); and C. *Beard, Port-Royal (2 vols., 1861). C. Gazier, Histoire du monastère de Port-Royal (1929); id., Les Belles Amies de Port-Royal (1930); id., Ces Messieurs de Port-Royal. Documents inédits (1932), and other works of this author. G. Denis, Port-Royal. Conférences données à la Salle du Chapeau Rouge de Nantes en 1924 [1931]. J. Laporte, La Doctrine de Port-Royal (1923; ed. 2, enlarged, 2 vols., Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1951–2). L. Cognet, La Mère Angélique et son temps, i: La Réforme de Port-Royal 1591–1618 (1950). A. Maulvault, Répertoire alphabétique des personnes et des choses de Port-Royal (1902). Popular sketches by Ethel Romanes, The Story of Port-Royal (1907); Lilian Rea, The Enthusiasts of Port-Royal (1912). Bremond, esp. vol. iv. E. Préclin in Fliche–Martin, xix (pt. 1; 1955), pp. 193–219. L. Cognet in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 597–99, s.v. See also bibl. to Jansenism.

PORTUARY. See Portiforium.

PORTUGAL, Christianity in. The independent history of Portugal begins in the 12th cent., when she became free from Castile and a self-governing vassal of the Papacy. At this time the country was much influenced in religious matters by the new *Cistercian Order, and in particular had the closest relations with the house at *Clairvaux. Under Sancho I (reigned 1185–1211) a strong nationalist and anti-Papal movement began which even *Innocent III could not finally crush. The submission of Sancho in 1210 produced only a temporary settlement and the disputes arising from the movement lasted through much of the 13th cent. The *Mendicant Orders which entered the country at that period proved valuable allies to the Popes in the quarrel. In the *Great Schism, anti-Spanish feeling kept the Portuguese bishops on the side of *Urban VI and his successors.

Early in the 15th cent. began the Portuguese conquests abroad, which by the middle of the next cent. had built up a great empire in Africa, *India, and America. Missionaries went with empire-builders throughout the new dominions, and partly by their preaching, and partly by the assistance of the secular power, secured mass conversions. But the immoral and tyrannous conduct of the civil governors and traders and the readiness of the Church to accept nominal conversion at its face value made much of this activity of little worth.

In Portugal itself reform of the bishops and clergy at the end of the 15th cent. had anticipated the *Reformation, which had no influence in the country. The Jewish problem arose at a later date than in Spain, and it was not until 1536 that, under the influence of the civil power, the *Inquisition was set up. Many of the Jews were forced to mass conversions, but for several generations these 'New Christians', as they were called, were placed on an inferior footing to the old.

From 1580 to 1640 the crown of Portugal was worn by the kings of Spain. From 1640 to 1668 a war of independence was waged in which the Papacy was in open military alliance with Spain, but eventually Portugal secured her freedom.

The 19th cent. saw the conflict of the Church with organized political and religious liberalism. In Portugal Catholicism triumphed in the Concordat of 1886. At the Revolution in 1910 the teaching of religion in primary schools was forbidden, the religious orders were expelled, and their property was confiscated. The RC Church was disestablished in 1911 in Portugal, and in 1913 in the Portuguese colonies. After the revolution of 1917 certain of the exiles were recalled, and in 1918 relations with the *Vatican were officially resumed. Except for the toleration of the religious orders (which in practice is allowed), the existing relations between Church and state were formally regularized in 1933. In 1940 a concordat between the Portuguese Government and the Vatican was signed. In Portugal and the Portuguese colonies the RC Church was recognized as a lawful body, most of its property was restored, it was allowed to maintain private schools and given some influence on the teaching of religion in state schools, and was allowed considerable exemption from taxation. In recent times there has been some evidence of a religious revival in Portugal in consequence of the occurrences at *Fatima (q.v.) in 1917, and Benedictine monasticism has been revived.

The Lusitanian Church of Portugal is a small Protestant episcopal Church dating from c. 1867; since 1963 it has been in full communion with the C of E on the same basis as the *Old Catholics.

F. de Almeida, História da igreja em Portugal (4 vols., 1910–22). M. de Oliveira Historia eclesiástica de Portugal (1940; ed. 4, 1968). C. Erdmann, Papstkunden in Portugal (Abh. (Gött.), N.F. xx, Hft. 3; 1927); id., Das Papsttum und Portugal im ersten Jahrhundert der portugiesischen Geschichte (Abh. (Berl.) 1928, Hft. 5). D. A. Reuter, Königtum und Episkopat in Portugal im 13. Jahrhundert (Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, lxix; 1928). A. Herculano, História da origem e estabelecimento da Inquisição em Portugal (3 vols., 1852; Eng. tr. by J. C. Branner, Stanford University Publications, History, Economics and Political Science, vol. i, No. 2; Stanford, Cal., 1926). F. Rodrigues, S.J., História da Companhia de Jesus en assistência de Portugal (4 vols. in 7 parts, to 1760, 1931–50). B. J. Wenzel, Portugal und der heilige Stuhl. Das Portugiesische Konkordats- und Missionsrecht (Lisbon, 1958). E. Moreira, The Significance of Portugal. A Study of Evangelical Progress (1933). G. V. de Pinas Martins and R. Danieli in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 1788–98, s.v. 'Portogallo'; J. Mattoso in N.C.E., xi (1967), pp. 607–14, s.v., with extensive bibl.

PORTUIS. See Portiforium.

POSITIVE THEOLOGY. The branch of theology which treats of matters of historic and particular fact, custom, or enactment, as opposed to '*natural theology' (or 'natural religion'), which deals with religious principles and laws of universal validity.

POSITIVISM. In its orig. and narrower sense, the system of the French thinker Auguste *Comte (q.v.), which confined intellectual inquiry to observable ('positive') facts and their relations, and eschewed all consideration of ultimate issues, incl. those of philosophy and theology. Its most prominent English exponent was Frederic Harrison (1831–1923); but similar doctrines were taught by H. *Spencer and other defenders of *Agnosticism. The term has now come to be used in a wider sense for any form of philosophical outlook which rejects metaphysics, esp. when the physical sciences are regarded as offering the norm of knowledge. Such an outlook was developed by the 'Vienna Circle' including R. Carnap and others, formed in 1922, which gave the name 'Logical Positivism' to its doctrines. They were influenced by Ludwig Wittgenstein (1889–1951). Wittgenstein published his Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus in German in 1921 (Eng. tr., 1922), but he spent most of his working life in England, especially in Cambridge, where he held a succession of academic appointments. It was, however, chiefly through the work of A. J. Ayer (1910–89) and esp. his Language, Truth and Logic (1936) that Logical Positivism became known in Great Britain. In its original and radical form its influence was most widespread in the late 1930s, but it has had a lasting effect on 20th cent. philosophy and indirectly on theology by its demand for verifiability as a criterion of any statement being meaningful; all theologians thus had to meet the possible criticism of their statements not as false or unknowable but as unverifiable and therefore meaningless. Attention was devoted by a number of writers to the analysis of language and the meaningfulness or otherwise of religious forms of words (sometimes referred to as 'God-talk').

POSSIDIUS, St. (c. 370–c. 440), biographer of St. *Augustine. A converted pagan, he lived in the monastery at Hippo until he became Bp. of Calama in Numidia in 397. He helped Augustine in his struggle against *Donatism and *Pelagianism, was with him when he died, and left, besides a list of his works, a short but valuable sketch of his life.

His 'Vita Augustini', commonly pr. in the earlier edd. of St. Augustine, is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxxii, 31–66. Crit. edd. by H. T. Weiskotten, Princeton, N.J., 1919, with Eng. tr.; A. Vega, Escurial, 1943; and M. Pellegrino, 'Verba Seniorum', Turin, [c. 1954]. Another Eng. tr. in E. A. Foran, O.S.A., The Augustinians, from St. Augustine to the Union, 1256 (1938), pp. ix–xii and 1–36. Study and Germ. tr. by A. *Harnack in Abh. (Berl.), 1930, Hft. 1. Possidius's 'Operum S. Augustini Elenchus', ed. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in Miscellanea Agostiniana, ii (1931), pp. 149–233. H. J. Diesner, 'Possidius und Augustinus' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, vi (T.U., lxxxi; 1962), pp. 350–65. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 428, 441, 443, 445; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 419. M. Pellegrino in E.C., ix (1952), col. 1838, s.v. 'Possidio'.

POSTCOMMUNION. In the Roman *Mass the prayer, similar in structure to the *Collect, which follows after the communion. In early times it was the last item in the Mass. In the past, when more than one Collect was recited, there was a corresponding increase in the number of the Postcommunions. The name Postcommunion is first found in the *Gelasian Sacramentary.

Jungmann (ed. 1952), ii, pp. 520–7; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 419–25.

POSTIL, also 'Apostil'. This word (Lat. postilla), which in the Middle Ages was used of a gloss on a scriptural text, came to be applied esp. to a homily on the Gospel or Epistle for the day or to a book of homilies. It is perhaps derived from post illa, meaning 'After those [words of scripture]'.

POSTLAPSARIANISM. See Sublapsarianism.

POST-SANCTUS. The prayer in the Eucharistic Liturgy which in the *Gallican Rite followed the *Sanctus and varied according to the feast commemorated. It survives in the *Mozarabic Rite.

POSTULANT. One who is undergoing a preliminary stage of testing as a candidate for a religious order before admission to the *novitiate. The period of postulancy varies in length acc. to the religious order and the circumstances of the candidate, but it commonly extends over several months, which are spent at the religious house where the candidate expects later to be professed.

POTAMIUS (d. c. 360), the earliest known Bp. of Lisbon and a leading Churchman of the West in the mid-4th cent. He originally professed and defended the orthodox *Nicene position, but from 355 onwards he aligned himself with the *Arianizing policy of the Emp. Constantius II, accepted the Second Creed of *Sirmium (357) with its repudiation of both ὁμοούσιος and ὁμοιούσιος and joined in putting pressure on Pope *Liberius to submit to the Emperor's demands. Of his numerous writings only four, three of them patently orthodox, survive.

'De Lazaro', 'Epistula ad Athanasium' and 'De Martyrio Isaiae prophetae' are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, viii. 1411–18; 'Epistula de substantia Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti' in A. Hamman, O.F.M. (ed.), Patrologiae cursus completus, Series latina, Supplementum, i (1958), cols. 202–16. The last two also ed. A. C. Vega, Scriptores Ecclesiastici hispano-latini veteris et medii aevi, ii (Madrid, 1934), pp. 25–54. A. Montes Moreira, O.F.M., Potamius de Lisbonne et la controverse arienne (Louvain, 1969), with bibl.

POTENTIANA, St. See Pudentiana, St.

POTHINUS, St. (c. 87–177), first Bp. of Lyons. He was probably a native of Asia Minor and a disciple of St. *Polycarp, and if so would have brought Asian influences to early Christianity in the south of Gaul. The circumstances of his death are described in the 'Ep. of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons' (ap. *Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., v. i). Feast day (with his companions in martyrdom), 2 June.

Eusebius, H.E., v. 1 f. T. Richoud, Le Premier Évêque de Lugdunum (Lyons, 1900). On the persecution of 177, J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, i (pt. 2; ed. 2, 1889), p. 515 f.; a number of refft. to discussions by A. *Harnack and P. Allard can be found in J. W. Thompson, 'The Alleged Persecution of the Christians at Lyons in 177' in The American Journal of Theology, xvii (1913), pp. 249–58; U. Kahrstedt, 'Die Märtyrerakten von Lugdunum 177' in Rheinisches Museum für Philologie, N.F., lxviii (1913), pp. 395–412. H. Quentin, O.S.B., 'La Liste des martyrs de Lyon de l'an 177' in Anal. Boll., xix (1921), pp. 113–38. See also works cited under Quartodecimanism.

POTTER, JOHN (c. 1674–1747), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Wakefield and University College, Oxford, Potter became successively Fellow of Lincoln (1694), Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1707), and Bp. of Oxford (1715). He ordained J. *Wesley, with whom he remained on good terms. In 1737 he unexpectedly succeeded W. *Wake as Abp. of Canterbury (E. *Gibson's appointment being thought probable). A Whig, Potter was nevertheless a High Churchman, as his Discourse of Church Government (1707) shows. His works include a long-used Archaeologia Graeca (2 vols., 1697–9), a fine edition of St. *Clement of Alexandria (1715), and attacks upon B. *Hoadly.

Collected ed. of his Theological Works publd. in 3 vols., Oxford, 1753. Life by Robert Anderson, M.D. (1750–1830), prefixed to the ed. of Potter's Archaeologia Graeca publd. London, 1818 (vol. i, pp. i–xi), and subsequent edd. A. W. Rowden, The Primates of the Four Georges (1916), pp. 115–166. J. H. Lupton in D.N.B., xlvi (1896), p. 216 f.

POWERS. Acc. to medieval angelology, the sixth order of angels in the celestial hierarchy. The word is also used more generally of any celestial being who exercises control or influence over other parts of creation (cf. the English version of the *Te Deum, 'To Thee all angels cry aloud: the heavens and all the powers therein').

PRAEDESTINATUS. A treatise, composed probably at Rome during the Papacy of Sixtus III (432–40), and directed against the extremer forms of the doctrine of *Predestination then being taught under the influence of certain passages in the writings of St. *Augustine. Its standpoint, if not actually *Pelagian, is at least *Semi-Pelagian. Of its three books, the first is mainly a plagiarized reproduction of St. Augustine's 'De haeresibus'; the second purports to be the work of an upholder of St. Augustine's predestination doctrines, though it is almost certainly a composition of the writer of the whole treatise; and the third is a refutation of the second book. It was first edited in 1643 by J. *Sirmond, S.J.

J. Sirmond based his ed. on the MS. Reims 40, once in the possession of *Hincmar. Revised text by J. de La Baune, S.J., in his ed. of Sirmond's works (1696); repr. (via A. *Gallandi) in J. P. Migne, PL, liii, 579–692. The work was much discussed in the *Jansenist controversies. H. von Schubert, Der sogenannte Praedestinatus. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Pelagianismus (T.U., xxiv, 4; 1903); G. Morin, O.S.B., Études, Textes, Découvertes (Anecdota Maredsolana, Seconde Série), i (1913), pp. 315–24 ('Que le Praedestinatus est du même Arnobe qui a écrit le Conflictus et le Commentaire sur les Psaumes'); G. Bardy, 'Le Souvenir d'Arius dans le Praedestinatus' in R. Bén., xl (1928), pp. 256–61; M. Abel, 'Le Praedestinatus et le pélagianisme' in R.T.A.M., xxxv (1968), pp. 5–25. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 521. É. Amann in D.T.C., xii (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2775–80, s.v.

PRAEMUNIRE. The title of statutes (first passed in 1353, 1365, and 1393) which were designed to protect rights claimed by the English crown against encroachment by the Papacy. The name can denote the statutes, the offence, the writ, and the punishment. The statute of 1353 forbade the withdrawal from England of cases which should be decided in the king's courts, and the penalties prescribed were in 1393 stiffened and extended to any who should promote any Papal bull or excommunication. In consequence appeals to Rome dwindled for a time. In 1529 *Henry VIII claimed that T. *Wolsey's activities as Papal legate infringed this statute, and, alleging that the acquiescent clergy were no less guilty, in 1531 blackmailed them into submitting to the Royal Supremacy. *Elizabeth I used Praemunire to deal with purely civil offences and with RC recusants; and *James I's judges used it to assist the encroachments of temporal upon ecclesiastical courts. By the Criminal Law Act of 1967 the statutes were repealed in entirety.

Eng. tr. of First Statute of Praemunire (1353) pr. Gee–Hardy, p. 103 f. (No. xxxv); that of 1393, ib., pp. 122–5 (No. xl). The latter is repr. in H. Bettenson (ed.), Documents of the Christian Church (World's Classics, 1943), pp. 239–42. W. T. Waugh, 'The Great Statute of Praemunire' in E.H.R., xxxvii (1922), pp. 173–205. E. B. Graves, 'The Legal Significance of the Statute of Praemunire of 1353' in Anniversary Essays in Mediaeval History by Students of Charles Homer Haskins (Boston–New York, 1929), pp. 57–80. G. Crosse in D.E.C.H. (1948), p. 487 f., s.v.

