V. Martin, Les Origines du gallicanisme (2 vols., 1939). N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme en occident (4 vols., 1896–1902), passim. V. Martin, Le Gallicanisme et la réforme catholique. Essai historique sur l'introduction en France des décrets du concile de Trente, 1563–1615 (1919); id., Le Gallicanisme politique et le clergé de France (Université de Strasbourg. Bibliothèque de l'Institut de Droit Canonique, iii; 1929). A. G. Martimort, Le Gallicanisme de Bossuet (Unam Sanctam, xxiv; 1953). L. Mention (ed.), Documents relatifs aux rapports du clergé avec la royauté de 1682 à 1705 (Collection de Textes pour servir à l'Étude et à l'Enseignement de l'Histoire, 1893). F. C. Gérin, Recherches historiques sur l'assemblée du clergé de France de 1682 (1868); id., Louis XIV et le Saint-Siège (2 vols. 1894). G. Mollat, 'Les Origines du gallicanisme parlementaire aux XIVe et XVe siècles' in R.H.E., xliii (1948), pp. 90–147; R. Thysman, 'Le Gallicanisme de Mgr Maret et l'influence de Bossuet', ib., lii (1957), pp. 401–65. H. Dubruel–H. X. Arquillière in A. d'Alès, S.J. (ed.), Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique, ii (1911), cols. 193–273, with full bibl. reff.; M. Dubruel in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1096–1137, s.v.; R. Laprat in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 426–525, s.v. 'Libertés de l'Église gallicane (Gallicanisme)'. J. Turmel in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), pp. 156–63, s.v.; C. Berthelot du Chesnay in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 262–7, s.v. See also bibl. to Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges.

GALLIO, LUCIUS JUNIUS. The brother of the philosopher *Seneca (q.v.). He was the Proconsul of Achaia before whom St. *Paul was accused at *Corinth (Acts 18. 12). He held office c. A.D. 52. His name occurs in an inscription found at Delphi in 1905.

The Delphic inscription is an important fixed date for NT Chronology. Cf. summary in L. Hennequin in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 355–73, s.v. 'Delphes (Inscription de)', with full bibl. A. Brassac, 'Une Inscription de Delphes et la chronologie de saint Paul' in R.Bibl., x (1913), pp. 36–53, 207–17. W. Larfeld, 'Die delphische Gallioinschrift und die paulinische Chronologie' in Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, xxxiv (1923), pp. 638–47. W. Rees, 'Gallio the Proconsul of Achaia' in Scripture, iv (1951), pp. 11–20. J. E. Roberts in D.A.C., i (1915), p. 439 f., s.v. 'Gallio', and (esp.) A. C. Zenos, ib., p. 275 f., s.v. Dates, 'III. 3', with useful bibl. F. Spadaforza in E.C., v (1951), col. 1904 f., s.v. 'Gallione'. See also comm. on Acts, cited s.v.

GAMALIEL. The great Jewish rabbi, 'had in reputation among all the people' (Acts 5. 34), who was the teacher of St. *Paul in his pre-Christian days (Acts 22. 3). He was a grandson of the liberal *Hillel, and his broad, tolerant views were well exemplified in his attitude to St. *Peter and his companions (Acts 5. 34–40). It has been doubted, but on insufficient grounds, whether so fiery and intolerant a character as St. Paul could have sat at the feet of such a tolerant master. Acc. to a late and prob. worthless tradition in the *Clementine Recognitions (1. 65), Gamaliel afterwards became a Christian.

A. Büchler, Das Synedrion in Jerusalem und das grosse Beth-Din in der Quaderkammer des Jerusalemischen Tempels (1902), pp. 115–31. H. Graetz, Geschichte der Juden, iii (ed. 3, 1878), pp. 373–5; Eng. tr., ii (1891), pp. 193–5; ed. 5 by M. Brann, iii (pt. 1; 1905), pp. 348–50; E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, ii (ed. 4; 1907), pp. 429–31; Eng. tr., ii (pt. 1; 1885), pp. 363–5. A. M. Hyman, Toledoth Tanna'im we-'Amora'im [in Hebr.], i (London, 1910), pp. 305–10, with sources; J. Klausner, History of the Second Temple (Hebr.), iv (ed. 2, Jerusalem, 1950), pp. 294–7, and v (1951), p. 92 f. H. L. Strack–P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, ii (1924), pp. 636–9; H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (ed. 5, 1930), p. 120 f., with bibl. (Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1945), pp. 109 f. and 304.

GAMBLING. See Betting and Gambling.

GAMS, PIUS BONIFATIUS (1816–92), Church historian. A native of Württemberg, he became a professor at Hildesheim in 1847, and in 1855 a Benedictine at St. Boniface's monastery at Munich. His two chief works are a history of the Church of Spain (Kirchengeschichte von Spanien, 3 vols., 1862–79), a massive compilation, but somewhat uncritical in its treatment of sources; and an invaluable Series Episcoporum (1873; supplement, 1886), which contains, arranged acc. to their sees, the names of all the known bishops in communion with Rome down to that date.

F. Lauchert, 'Die kirchengeschichtlichen und zeitgeschichtlichen Arbeiten von P. B. Gams in Zusammenhang gewürdigt' in Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benediktiner- und dem Cistercienser-Orden, xxvii (1906), pp. 634–49, xxviii (1907), pp. 53–71, 299–305, with list of his works, pp. 305–15.

GANDOLPHY, PETER (1779–1821), *Jesuit preacher. Born in London and educated abroad, he attained fame as a preacher at the Spanish Chapel in Manchester Square, London, where he made many converts. In 1812 he issued A Liturgy, or Book of Common Prayers and Administration of Sacraments . . . for the Use of all Christians in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, which was modelled upon the Anglican Prayer Book. This publication, together with his sermons, caused him to be accused by his ordinary, Bp. W. Poynter (d. 1827), of heresy. Although vindicated by the Congregation of *Propaganda in Rome (1817), he gave up his work in London (1818) and retired to his family home at East Sheen.

Sommervogel, iii (1892), col. 1181 f., s.v.; T. Cooper in D.N.B., xx (1889), p. 400 f., s.v., with further reff.

GANG-DAYS. An obsolete title of the three *Rogation Days (the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before *Ascension Day) from the ancient practice of perambulating the parish bounds on those days. The forms 'Gang-Monday' 'Gang-Week', are also met with.

GANGRA, Council of. A Council held at Gangra in Paphlagonia c. 345. It passed 20 canons, directed against a false asceticism (led by *Eustathius, Bp. of Sebaste) which condemned marriage and avoided the ordinary services of the Church. To these canons are added an epilogue, often called 'canon 21', explaining the true nature of asceticism. The canons are not in themselves important; but, as they were included in the first Greek corpus translated into Latin, they attained a very wide circulation.

Hardouin, i, cols. 529–40; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 1095–1122. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 79–83; crit. ed. of Lat. texts in E.O.M.I.A., II. ii (1913), pp. 145–214. Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 1029–45. H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (1882), pp. 185–8 (Note E: 'Date of the Council of Gangra'); O. Braun, 'Die Abhaltung der Synode von Gangra' in Hist. J., xvi (1895), p. 586 f. G. Bardy in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 935–8, s.v. 'Gangres (Concile de)'.

GANSFORT, WESSEL HARMENUS. See Wessel.

GARDEN OF EDEN. See Eden, Garden of.

GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE. See Gethsemane, Garden of.

'GARDEN OF THE SOUL, The'. The 'Manual of Spiritual Exercises and Instructions for Christians who, living in the world, aspire to Devotion' compiled by R. *Challoner and first published in 1740. It at once became a favourite with English RCs and has remained in continuous use until recent years, though in the course of 200 years parts of it have been modified almost out of recognition. The influence exercised by the earlier editions in moulding the deep but sober piety of English RCs, before more Italian forms of devotion became popular, led the older school sometimes to be called 'Garden-of-the-Soul Catholics'.

A well-produced repr. of the 1741 impression for practical use, with some minor alterations, was issued by the 'Society of St. Peter and St. Paul' (London) in 1916. See also bibl. to Challoner, R.

GARDINER, STEPHEN (c. 1490–1555), Bp. of *Winchester. From 1525 to 1549 he was master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and took an active interest in promoting Greek studies in the university. He was employed by *Henry VIII and T. *Wolsey on diplomatic business, notably in the negotiations with Rome for annulling the marriage with Catherine of Aragon, and in 1533 acted as an assessor in the court which finally declared the marriage null and void. In 1531 he had been given the see of Winchester. He accepted, at least for a time, the royal supremacy over the Church, arguing in his De Vera Obedientia (1535) that the Pope had no legitimate power over national Churches. He strongly opposed, however, the Protestant influences of T. *Cromwell, was probably very largely responsible for the *Six Articles, and by the end of Henry's reign he was regarded as the chief opponent in England of the Reformation doctrines. In *Edward VI's reign he was imprisoned in the Tower (1548) and deprived of his bishopric (1551), but was restored to his see by *Mary, and became Lord High Chancellor. He approved of the submission of England to Rome, but was instrumental in securing the retention of the property of the dissolved monasteries by their lay owners. The mediating course which he followed in the reign of Henry VIII has led his character to be variously judged.

H. Chitty–H. E. Maldon (edd.), Registra Stephani Gardiner et Johannis Poynet, Episcoporum Wintoniensium (*Canterbury and York Society, xxxvii; 1930), pp. 1–91; J. A. Muller (ed.), Letters of Stephen Gardiner (1933). P. Janelle (ed.), Obedience in Church and State. Three Political Tracts by Stephen Gardiner (1930). Second (1553) ed. of Eng. tr. of De Vera Obedientia, repr. Leeds, 1966. J. S. Brewer (ed.), State Papers, vii–xi (1849–52), passim; J. Brewer–J. *Gairdner (ed.), Letters and Papers, Domestic and Foreign, of the Reign of Henry VIII, iv–xxi (1870–1910), and Addenda, pts. i and ii, ed. by A. E. Sharp (1929–32), passim. J. A. Muller, Stephen Gardiner and the Tudor Reaction (1926). L. B. Smith, Tudor Prelates and Politics 1536–1558 (Princeton, 1953), passim.

GARNET or GARNETT, HENRY (1555–1606), English *Jesuit. He became a RC while a boy, went to Rome, and studied under R. *Bellarmine. In 1586 he set out to work on the English Mission, of which he became Superior in 1587. He was arrested and executed, some months after the *Gunpowder Plot, for complicity in it. Though he certainly had some knowledge of it beforehand, it is disputed whether his information was entirely gained through a confessional case, referred to him under the *seal, or whether he had independent evidence. In support of the latter view is the fact that, although English law gave no protection to the confessional, the prosecution apparently preferred not to use evidence based upon it. In any case, it was not suggested that Garnet personally took part in the plot; he was condemned and executed for not having revealed his knowledge of it.

Life in H. Foley, S.J., Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, iv (1878), pp. 35–192. Artt. by J. H. Pollen, S.J., in The Month, lxi (1887), pp. 305–20; lxiii (1888), pp. 58–73 and 382–97; lxiv (1888), pp. 41–59; also by J. Gerrard, S.J., ib., xci (1898), pp. 6–21 and 144–52. P. Caraman, Henry Garnet 1555–1606 and the Gunpowder Plot (1964).

GARNIER, JEAN (1612–81), S.J., *Patristic scholar. He was a native of *Paris, who entered the *Jesuit Order at Rouen in 1628 and taught theology at the Collège de *Clermont at Paris from 1653 to 1679. In 1673 he published his edition of *Marius Mercator (in J. P. *Migne, PL, xlviii) with valuable treatises on *Pelagianism and *Nestorianism which were the basis of all subsequent research on both subjects. In 1680 he edited the 'Liber Diurnus' of the Roman pontiffs, adding historical, doctrinal, and critical notes esp. on the ordinations and professions of faith of the Popes, and a treatise on the orthodoxy of Pope *Honorius (also reproduced in Migne, PL, cv, but without the treatise on Honorius). He also completed J. *Sirmond's edition of *Theodoret (1684; posthumous), with critical essays on his works and doctrine. He published, besides, several works on Scholastic philosophy and on moral and doctrinal theology.

He is not to be confounded with Julien Garnier (1670–1725), O.S.B., the *Maurist editor of St. *Basil.

Sommervogel, iii (1892), cols. 1228–32. H. Foerster (ed.), Liber Diurnus Romanorum Pontificum (Bern, 1958), pp. 15–20. P. Bernard in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1160–3.

GASCOIGNE, THOMAS (1403–58), English scholar and theologian. He was born at Hunslet, nr. Leeds, and educated at *Oxford, probably at Oriel, where he continued to live for the rest of his life. He was frequently either chancellor or vice-chancellor of the university. Ordained priest in 1427, he held the rectory of Kirk Deighton for a short time; but with the exception of a prebendal stall in *Wells Cathedral, he declined nearly all other ecclesiastical offices, including the chancellorship of *York Minster, to devote himself to scholarly pursuits. He was also very active as a preacher and, though hostile to *Wycliffite influences, severe in his denunciations of pluralities, appropriations, and other ecclesiastical and monastic abuses. His principal work was the 'Liber Veritatum' or 'Dictionarium Theologicum' (written between 1431 and 1457), a theological dictionary which is both an important guide to the political and religious history of the time and an interesting revelation of Gascoigne's own views.

'Collectanea Historica' from Gascoigne's Dictionarium Theologicum are printed in T. *Hearne's ed. of Walter Hemingford (fl. 1300), Historia de Rebus Gestis Edwardi I, Edwardi II et Edwardi III, ii (1731), pp. 509–50, with life, pp. 504–8; J. E. T. Rogers (ed.), Loci e Libro Veritatum. Passages Selected from Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary Illustrating the Condition of the Church and State, 1403–1453 (1881). Winifred A. Pronger, 'Thomas Gascoigne' in E.H.R., liii (1938), pp. 606–26, liv (1939), pp. 20–37. R. L. Poole in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 41–4; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 745–8.

GASQUET, FRANCIS AIDAN (1846–1929), cardinal and historian. Born in London of an old Provençal family, he was educated at *Downside and entered the *Benedictine Order in 1866. Elected Prior of Downside in 1878, he raised the standard of both priory and school and considerably enlarged their scope. From 1885 he carried on research at the British Museum and Record Office. In 1896 he went to Rome, where he played an important part as a member of the Commission on *Anglican Ordinations. On his return he became chairman of the commission for the reform of the English Benedictine Congregation, whose abbot-president he was from 1900 to 1914. In 1907 *Pius X made him president of the International Commission for the Revision of the *Vulgate. In 1914 he was created cardinal, and henceforward resided in Rome. On the death of Pius X he took part in the conclave, countering anti-British propaganda, and negotiated for the appointment of a British minister to the Vatican. He became Prefect of the Archives of the Holy See in 1917, and two years later *Vatican Librarian. Card. Gasquet was a fertile writer whose books largely increased the knowledge of medieval English monasticism. Among his best-known works are Henry VIII and the English Monasteries (2 vols., 1888–9), which caused a great stir, Religio Religiosi (1918), and Monastic Life in the Middle Ages (1922).

Notes by J. C. Fowler, O.S.B., B. Kuypers, O.S.B., and U. Butler, O.S.B., in The Downside Review, xlvii (1929), pp. 123–56, incl. bibl. of his works, pp. 147–9. S. Leslie, Cardinal Gasquet. A Memoir (1953). M. D. Knowles, Cardinal Gasquet as an Historian (Creighton Lecture; 1957); repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 240–63. E. C. Butler, O.S.B., in D.N.B., 1921–1930, pp. 330–2.

GAUDEN, JOHN (1605–62), Bp. of *Worcester. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, studied later also at Wadham College, Oxford, and in 1640 became Vicar of Chippenham. In the early days of the Civil War his sympathies were with Parliament, and for a short time in 1643 he was a member of the *Westminster Assembly. Later he changed his opinions, but was able none the less to retain his living throughout the Commonwealth period. At the Restoration in 1660 he was made Bp. of *Exeter, and in 1662 was translated, not, as he had hoped, to *Winchester, but to Worcester. He published several controversial works against the Puritans, including his monumental Ecclesiae Anglicanae Suspiria (1659), and defences of the Anglican ministry and liturgy. He was probably the author of the *Eikon Basilike (q.v.), alleged to have been written by *Charles I in prison.

See bibl. s.v. 'Eikon Basilike'. R. Hooper in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 69–72.

GAUDENTIUS, St. (4th–5th cent.), Bp. of Brescia. A friend of St. *Ambrose, he succeeded *Philaster in the see of Brescia before 397. In 404–5 he journeyed to Constantinople to plead with the Emperor on behalf of St. *Chrysostom, but without avail. Several of his sermons have survived. Feast day, 25 Oct.

Of his 21 surviving sermons, a set of 10 delivered in the Easter week have many reff. to the Eucharist; Serm. 21 is on Philaster of Brescia. J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 827–1002; crit. ed. by A. Glueck in C.S.E.L., lxviii (1936). J. Wittig, Filaster, Gaudentius und Ambrosiaster (Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen, No. 8; Breslau, 1909), pp. 1–56. C. R. Norcock, 'St Gaudentius of Brescia and the Tome of St. Leo' in J.T.S., xv (1913–14), pp. 593–6; Y. M. Duval, 'Saint Léon le Grand et saint Gaudence de Brescia', ib., N.S., xi (1960), pp. 82–4. F. Trisoglio, San Gaudenzio da Brescia scrittore (Turin, 1960). Bardenhewer, iii, p. 485 f. P. Viard in Dict. Sp., v (1967), cols. 139–43, s.v., with bibl.

GAUDETE SUNDAY. The Third in *Advent, from the opening word of the *Introit. As on Mid-Lent Sunday (*Laetare) rose-coloured vestments may be worn.

GAUME, JEAN JOSEPH (1802–79), theological writer. Ordained priest in 1825, he spent his earlier years in teaching and pastoral work at Nevers. Later he was Vicar-general successively of *Reims and Montauban. He came to notice through his advocacy of excluding the pagan classics from all Christian schools and substituting Patristic texts; he was supported by L. *Veuillot but controverted by F. *Dupanloup among others. His extensive writings (of unequal value) include Le Manuel des confesseurs (1837; ed. 11, 1880), Catéchisme de persévérance (8 vols., 1838), L'Europe en 1848 (1848), Lettres à Monseigneur Dupanloup, évêque d'Orléans, sur le paganisme dans l'éducation (1852), Bibliothèque des classiques chrétiens (30 vols., 1852–5), La Révolution (12 vols., 1856–9), and Pie IX et les études classiques (1875). The first named, publd. in an adapted Engl. tr. for the use of Anglican confessors by E. B. *Pusey (1877), was also widely used in England.

A. Ricard, Étude sur Mgr Gaume. Ses œuvres, son influence, ses polémiques (1872). H. P. *Liddon, Life of E. B. Pusey, iv (1897), pp. 303–6. E. Mangenot in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1168–71.

GAUNILO, Count. The 11th cent. Benedictine monk of Marmoutiers, near Tours, who, in the guise of the 'fool' (cf. Ps. 14. 1), criticized in his Liber pro insipiente the validity of the *Ontological Argument for the existence of God which St. *Anselm had formulated in his Proslogion. Anselm replied with his Liber apologeticus adversus respondentem pro insipiente.

GAVANTI, BARTOLOMMEO (1569–1638), *Barnabite liturgical scholar. He took an important part in the reform of the *Breviary and *Missal under Popes *Clement VIII and *Urban VIII. In his Thesaurus sacrorum rituum, seu Commentaria in rubricas Missalis et Breviarii Romani (Rome, 1628), his most considerable work, he brings together much historical information on the origin and mystical significance of W. liturgical practice.

Opera Theologico-Canonica (2 vols., bound in 1, Venice, 1760). O. Premoli, Barnabite, Storia dei Barnabiti nel seicento (1922), pp. 178–82; G. Boffito, Barnabite, Scrittori barnabiti, ii (1933), pp. 132–48, with bibl.

GEBIROL, SALOMON IBN. See Avicebron.

GEDDES, JENNY. Acc. to tradition, the name of a vegetable-seller who, on Sunday, 23 July 1637, threw her folding stool at the head of David Lindsay, Bp. of Edinburgh, in St. Giles' Cathedral when the new and hated Scottish Prayer Book was used for the first time.

The occurrence of a tumult on the introduction of the Scottish BCP is recorded in the contemporary annals. The name of 'Jane or Janot Gaddis (yet living at the time of this relation)' is apparently first mentioned in Richard Baker, A Chronicle of the Kings of England from the Time of the Romans Government unto the Death of King James. Continuation [by E. Phillips], 5th impression (1670), p. 478.

GEHENNA (Gk. γέεννα). Lit. 'the Valley of Hinnom' (Heb. גֵּי הִנֹּם); the meaning of Hinnom is unknown. It was orig. used purely topographically, prob. for the Wady er-Rabâbi to the SW. and S. of Jerusalem, which joined at the SE. of the city with the valley of the *Cedron, though it has sometimes (e.g. by Sir Charles Warren) been identified with the Cedron. In this sense the 'Valley of Hinnom' is mentioned at Jos. 15. 8 and 18. 16. From early times it was a place of human sacrifice, esp. to Moloch at Topheth (cf. 2 Kgs. 16. 3, 21. 6), and as such was polluted by Josiah (2 Kgs. 23. 10–12); it was foreshadowed by *Jeremiah as the 'Valley of Slaughter' (Jer. 7. 32, 19. 6). In later Jewish thought it was increasingly looked upon as a Divinely appointed place of punishment for apostates and other great sinners (e.g. Eth. *Enoch, 27. 2 f., 90. 26 f.; 2 *Esdras 7. 36–8). Hence in the NT the word is used for the final place of torment for the wicked after the Last Judgement (Mt. 5. 29, 10. 28, 18. 9; Jas. 3. 6; EVV 'hell'). The statement of Kimchi (c. A.D. 1200) that fires were continually kept burning in the Valley of Hinnom has commonly been accepted by modern commentators; but it seems to be without earlier authority.

H. Vincent, O.P., Jérusalem, i (1912), pp. 123–34. H. L. Strack–P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum N.T. aus Talmud und Midrasch, iv (1928), pp. 1029–1118. R. H. *Charles in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 121 f., s.v.; J. Jeremias in T.W.B., i (1933), p. 655 f., s.v. γέεννα, with bibl. reff.; J. Chaine in Dict. Bibl., Suppl, iii (1938), cols. 563–79, s.v.

GEILER VON KAISERSBERG, JOHANN (1445–1510), 'the German *Savonarola', preacher. Born at Schaffhausen on the Rhine, Geiler (also 'Geyler') was educated at Ammersweiher, nr. Kaisersberg in Alsace, and Freiburg University. From 1465 to 1471 he lectured on *Aristotle at Freiburg and from 1471 to 1476 on theology at Basle, where he also preached in the cathedral. In 1476 he returned to Freiburg as professor, becoming rector of the university in the same year. But his reforming interests soon led him to abandon academic work; and after declining an invitation to a pulpit at Würzburg on grounds of patriotism he accepted a special office of preacher created for him in the cathedral of the neighbouring Strassburg in 1478. Except for a short interval he remained here for the rest of his life.

Geiler seems to have been an uncommonly forceful and impressive preacher. In spite of his austere moral ideals and his denunciation of the vices of all classes, his freshness, vivacity, apt illustration and knowledge of the human heart won and held his hearers. Although he demanded reform, he never seems to have contemplated abandoning the Church. Personally something of a mystic, he is said to have enjoyed preaching but been haunted by fears arising from his work in the confessional.

He did not publish his own sermons, and they survive in texts taken down by his hearers or elaborated by others from his notes. His other works include an edition of the works of J. *Gerson (4 vols., 1488–1502).

Ausgewählte Schriften, ed. P. de Lorenzi (4 vols., Trier, 1881–3); Älteste Schriften, ed. L. Dacheux (Freiburg i.Br., 1882). Modern edd. of his Ars Moriendi by A. Hoch (ib., 1901) and of his Seelenparadies by F. X. Zacher (M.-Gladbach, 1923). C. Schmidt, Histoire littéraire de l'Alsace à la fin du XVe et au commencement du XVIe siècle, ii (1879), pp. 373–90, for details of the early edd. of his works. His life by Beatus *Rhenanus was publd. at Strassburg, 1510. L. Dacheux, Un Réformateur catholique à la fin du XVe siècle (1876). C. Schmidt, op. cit., i (1879), pp. 337–461. E. Breitenstein, O.M.I., 'Die Quellen der Geiler von Kaysersberg zugeschriebenen Emeis' in Archiv für Elsässische Kirchengeschichte, xiii (1938), pp. 149–202. E. Jane D. Douglass, Justification in late medieval preaching. A Study of John Geiler von Keiserberg (Leiden, 1966). N. Scheid in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 403–5, s.v.; P. Rapp in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 174–9, s.v.

GEISSHÄUSSLER, OSWALD. See Myconius.

GELASIAN DECREE, The. See Decretum Gelasianum.

GELASIAN SACRAMENTARY, The. Considerable confusion arises from the fact that the term is applied both to a particular MS. (Vat. Reg. Lat. 316) and to the class of Sacramentaries to which it belongs. The Vatican MS., which dates from the mid-8th cent., is the oldest known Roman Sacramentary in which the Feasts are arranged acc. to the ecclesiastical year. Acc. to B. Bischoff, it was written by the nuns of Chelles in the neighbourhood of Paris. It contains certain Gallican elements, e.g. mention of Francorum imperium in the *Good Friday prayers.

Vat. Reg. Lat. 316 and other like MSS. (Gelasians in the broader sense, sometimes known as 'Gelasians of the 8th century') contain the Roman *Canon of the Mass in nearly its traditional form. This Frankish Gelasianum, which embodied other Roman material as well as Gallican elements, circulated widely in Gaul later in the 8th cent. The ascription of the text in any of these forms to Pope *Gelasius (492–6) has been shown by B. *Capelle to be mistaken.

Vat. Reg. Lat. 316 was first pr. by G. M. *Tommasi, Codices Sacramentorum Nongentis Annis Vetustiores (Rome, 1680), pp. 13–262. Modern edd., including collations with other MSS., by H. A. Wilson (Oxford, 1894) and L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B. (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, iv; Rome, 1960). Photographic ed. of Vat. Reg. Lat. 316, with essays by L. M. Tocci and B. Neunheuser, O.S.B. (2 vols., Vatican City, 1975). E. Bourque, Études sur les sacramentaires romains, Seconde Partie, Tome i: Le Gélasien du VIIIe siècle (Bibliothèque théologique de Laval: Quebec, 1952). A. Chavasse, Le Sacramentaire Gélasien (Vaticanus Reginensis 316). Sacramentaire presbytéral en usage dans les titres romains au VIIe siècle (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Sér. iv, 1: 1958). B. Capelle, O.S.B., 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Gélase' in J.T.S., N.S. ii (1951), pp. 129–44, repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 146–60; B. Bischoff, 'Die Kölner Nonnenhandschriften und das Skriptorium von Chelles' in Karolingische und Ottonische Kunst, ed. F. Gerke and others (Forschungen zur Kunstgeschichte und christlichen Archäologie, iii; Wiesbaden, 1957), pp. 395–411; repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, i (Stuttgart, 1966), pp. 16–34. C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au Moyen Age (Biblioteca degli Studi Medievali, i; Spoleto [1966]), esp. pp. 48–67. [M.] B. Moreton, The Eighth-Century Gelasian Sacramentary (Oxford, 1976). H. Ashworth, O.S.B., in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 794 f., s.v. 'Sacramentaries', with bibl. p. 799 f. See also following entry.

GELASIUS, St. (d. 496), Pope from 492. Acc. to his own account he was 'Romanus natus', but the Liber Pontificalis* asserts that he was 'natione Afer'. On his accession to the Papacy he continued the policy of his predecessor, Felix III, in tenaciously upholding the primacy of the Roman See against *Constantinople during the *Acacian Schism. His genuine writings include a treatise on the Two Natures in Christ (Adversus Eutychen et Nestorium), other works on the Acacian conflict, and a large collection of Letters on practical matters arising out of *Arianism, *Pelagianism, and *Manichaeism, and various disciplinary subjects. To rebut the Manichean abhorrence of wine, he insisted on the Eucharist being received in both kinds. He also laid down (Ep. 15) the now established rule that ordinations should be at the *Ember Seasons. A famous passage on the superiority of the ecclesiastical to the civil power in Ep. 12 (ad Imp. Anastasium) influenced much medieval political doctrine. Although it is now agreed that the Gelasian Sacramentary, as well as the Decretum Gelasianum are wrongly attributed to him, some scholars have traced his work in the *Leonine Sacramentary (q.v.). Feast day, 21 Nov.

His Epp. (many, esp. in relation to his brief pontificate) are listed in Jaffé–Wattenbach. pp. 83–95. Text of his letters, and other docc., in J. P. Migne, PL, lix, 13–190; further material in Supplementum, ed. A. Hamman, O.F.M., iii (1963), cols. 739–87. Crit. ed. of 'Adversus Andromachum contra Lupercalia' and the Masses in the Leonine Sacramentary attributed to Gelasius by G. Pomarès (S.C., lxv; 1959). L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 255–7. Study by A. Roux (Paris, 1880). E. Michaud, 'Le Pape St. Gélase et le monophysisme eucharistique' in Revue Internationale de Théologie, vii (1899), pp. 303–9; id., 'La Papauté romaine d'après le Pape Gélase (492–496)', ib., xvi (1908), pp. 38–58. H. Koch, Gelasius im kirchenpolitischen Dienste seiner Vorgänger, der Päpste Simplicius, 468–483, und Felix III, 483–492 (Sb. (Bayr.), 1935, Hft. 6). A. K. Ziegler, 'Pope Gelasius I and his Teaching on the Relation of Church and State' in Catholic Historical Review, xxvii (1942), pp. 412–37. On his liturgical work, see B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Messes du pape S. Gélase dans le sacramentaire léonien' in R. Bén., lvi (1945–6), pp. 12–41; id., 'Retouches gélasiennes dans le sacramentaire léonien', ib., lxi (1951), pp. 3–14; id., 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Gélase' in J.T.S., N.S., ii (1951), pp. 129–44; all repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 79–115 and 146–60; C. Coebergh, O.S.B., 'Le Pape Saint Gélase Ier auteur de plusieurs messes et préfaces du soi-disant Sacramentaire léonien' in Sacris Erudiri, iv (1952), pp. 46–102. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 625–9; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 462 f. J. Chapin in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 315 f., with further bibl.

GELASIUS (d. 395), Bp. of *Caesarea in Palestine from c. 367. He was the son of St. *Cyril of Jerusalem's sister. A convinced *Nicene, Gelasius was ousted from his see during the reign of Valens (when Euzoïus was intruded), returning on the accession of *Theodosius in 379. He wrote: (1) a continuation of *Eusebius's 'Ecclesiastical History'. Possibly (so A. Glas, P. Heseler) this was the basis of *Rufinus' last two books, but more probably (P. van den Veen, P. Peeters, S.J.) the latter was an original work; (2) A treatise against the *Anomoeans; (3) An 'Expositio Symboli', a work prob. akin to Cyril's Catechetical Lectures, of which fragments survive.

He is praised by *Jerome, De Vir. Ill., 130, and *Theodoret, H.E., v. 8. Coll. of fragments, with introd., by F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxvii; 1938), pp. 16–49 (fragments, pp. 44–9). A. Glas, Die Kirchengeschichte des Gelasios von Kaisareia (Byzantinisches Archiv, vi; 1914); F. Winkelmann, Untersuchungen zur Kirchengeschichte des Gelasios von Kaisareia (Sb. (Berl.), Klasse für Sprachen, Literatur und Kunst, Jahrgang 1965, Nr. 3; 1966). Bardenhewer, iii, p. 282; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 225 f., with full bibl.

GELASIUS OF CYZICUS (fl. 475), ecclesiastical historian. He wrote a 'Syntagma', or collection of the Acta of the *Nicene Council (325), to refute the *Monophysite claim that their faith was identical with that professed by the Nicene Fathers. It has been proved recently that Gelasius made use of good sources such as *Eusebius, *Rufinus, *Socrates, and *Theodoret; but his book has little, if any, independent historical value. Its existence has sometimes been supposed (prob. wrongly) to lend support to the view that an official record of the Acta of Nicaea was current in the early Church.

J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv, 1191–1360. Crit. ed. by G. Loeschcke–M. Heinemann (G.C.S., 1918). G. Loeschcke, 'Das Syntagma des Gelasius Cyzicenus' in Rheinisches Museum, lx (1905), pp. 594–613, and lxi (1906), pp. 34–77. C. H. Turner. 'On Gelasius of Cyzicus' in J.T.S., i (1899), p. 125 f. Bardenhewer, iv (1924), pp. 145–8; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 227 f.

GELLERT, CHRISTIAN FÜRCHTEGOTT (1715–69), German poet. He spent most of his life at Leipzig, where he became a teacher at the university. He wrote, besides fables on the model of La Fontaine, many Church hymns which became very popular among both Lutherans and Catholics. They include the familiar Easter hymn, 'Jesus lives! thy terrors now'. Some of them were set to music by L. van Beethoven.

Sämmtliche Schriften, ed. J. A. Schlegel–G. L. Heyer (10 vols., Leipzig, 1769–74), with life by J. A. Cramer as vol. x. Eng. life in Mrs. Douglas's tr. of Gellert's Moral Lessons delivered . . . in the University of Leipzig (3 vols., 1805), vol. i. E. Werth, Untersuchungen zu Chr. F. Gellerts geistlichen Oden und Liedern (Diss., Breslau, 1936), with further reff. K. R. Hagenbach–C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 482–5, s.v., with bibl.

GELLONE, Sacramentary of. An early Sacramentary of the *Gelasian ('of the 8th cent.') type, written not earlier than 790, and a primary authority for the history of the early Roman liturgy. It formerly belonged to the *Benedictine abbey of Gellone, near Aniane, whence it passed in the 17th cent. to *St.-Germain-des-Prés and in 1795 to the Bibliothèque Nationale, where it is now Par. lat. 12048.

Text ed. by A. Dumas, O.S.B., with introduction by J. Deshusses, O.S.B. (C.C., Series Latina, clix–clixA; 1981). Incipits of text pr., with comm., by P. de Puniet, O.S.B., in E.L., xlviii (1934), pp. 3–65, 157–97, 357–81, 517–33, xlix (1935), pp. 109–25, 209–29, 305–47, l (1936), pp. 3–33, 261–95, li (1937), pp. 13–63, 93–135, 269–309, and lii (1938), pp. 3–27. E. Bourque, Études sur les sacramentaires romains, Seconde Partie, i (Bibliothèque Théologique de Laval; Quebec, 1952), pp. 3–6, 47–80. P. Cagin, O.S.B., 'Note sur le sacramentaire de Gellone' in Mélanges de littérature et d'histoire religieuses publiés à l'occasion du jubilé épiscopal de Mgr de Cabrières, i (1899), pp. 231–91. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 777–94, s.v.; H. Ashworth, O.S.B., in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 796, s.v. 'Sacramentaries'.

GEMARA. A name used of the second part of the *Talmud, which consists of a Rabbinic commentary on the first part (the *Mishnah). The Gemara of the Babylonian Talmud is written in E. Aramaic (a language closely allied to *Syriac), that of the Palestinian Talmud in W. Aramaic.

GEMATRIA. A method of interpretation employed by the Rabbis to extract hidden meanings from words. The name 'Gematria', which is Hebrew, is perhaps a corruption of the Greek word γεωμετρία ('geometry'). As in Hebrew every letter possessed a numerical value, it was possible, by counting up the values of the letters in a Hebrew word, to assign to it a numerical value; and on this basis the method operated. Thus the Rabbis argued that Eliezer, the steward of *Abraham (Gen. 15. 2), must be worth all the servants of Abraham put together, on the ground that Abraham had 318 servants (Gen. 14. 14), and 318 is the numerical equivalent of the word Eliezer.

Use was occasionally made of this strange method of interpretation by early Christians. In Rev. 13. 18 the number of the Beast is given as 666, and this is the numerical equivalent of the two Hebrew words for 'Nero Caesar'. In the Ep. of Barnabas (c. 9) gematria is applied on the basis of the corresponding number of the Greek numerals, to give a mystical significance to the number of Abraham's servants. $300 = \tau$ = the Cross, and $18 = \iota\eta$ the first two letters of the name Jesus. Therefore the number of servants typifies Jesus and the Cross.

S. Waldberg, Darkhe ha-shinnuyim [in Hebr.] (Lwów, 1870). C. Taylor, Sayings of the Jewish Fathers (1877), p. 76, Note 46. F. Dornseiff, Das Alphabet in Mystik und Magie (Στοιχεῖα, vii; 1922), pp. 91–118. Very competent summary by C. Levias in J.E., v (1903), pp. 589–92, s.v. See also bibl. to Cabbala.

GEMISTUS PLETHON, GEORGIUS (c. 1355–c. 1450), Renaissance scholar. A native of *Constantinople, he visited W. Europe when about 15 years old in the train of the Emp. John Paleologus; and on his return to the E. he settled at Mistra in the Peloponnese. He conceived a great veneration for the doctrines of *Plato, and exchanged his original name for that of 'Plethon', apparently through its similar sound with that of his master. In 1438–9, when, as one of the E. spokesmen, he attended the Council of *Florence, he was welcomed with enthusiasm by some of the Italian humanists, notably Cosimo de' Medici, and did much to overthrow the previous dominance of *Aristotle in the W. He set forth his philosophical doctrines in his 'Laws' (Νόμοι), a work (of which only fragments survive) written on the model of the 'Laws' of Plato. He was less interested in theology than in philosophical speculation; but he wrote in defence of the E. doctrine of the *Procession of the Holy Spirit.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PG, clx, 805–1020. Fragments of the Laws, ed. C. Alexandre, with Fr. tr. by A. Pellissier (Paris, 1858). W. Gass, Gennadius und Pletho. Aristotelismus und Platonismus in der griechischen Kirche, nebst einer Abhandlung über die Bestreitung des Islam im Mittelalter (2 vols., 1844), vol. i, pp. 24–58, with Gk. text of his 'Liber contra Gennadii Scripta pro Aristotele', vol. ii, pp. 54–116. J. Wilson Taylor, G. Gemistos Pletho's Criticism of Plato and Aristotle (Diss., Menasha, Wisc., 1921); I. P. Mamalakis, Γεώργιος Γεμιστὸς-Πλήθων (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, xxxii, Athens, 1939). M. V. Anastos, 'Pletho's Calendar and Liturgy' in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, iv (Cambridge, Mass., 1948), pp. 183–305. B. Tatakis, La Philosophie byzantine (Suppl. to E. Bréhier, Histoire de la philosophie, fasc. 2; 1949), pp. 281–93, 299–305. F. Masai, Pléthon et le platonisme de Mistra (1956). E. Stéphanou in D.T.C., xii (1933), cols. 2393–404, s.v. 'Pléthon', with further bibl.

GEMMA GALGANI, St. See Galgani, St. Gemma.

GENEALOGIES OF CHRIST, The. The gospels of Mt. and Lk. both contain a Genealogy of Christ, the former (1. 2–17) tracing His descent from *Abraham and the latter (3. 23–38) carrying it back to '*Adam, the son of God'. The Genealogies are intended in both cases to emphasize that Christ belonged to the House of *David. The differences between them are probably to be explained by the 'Jewish' and 'Gentile' interests of the respective Evangelists.

M. D. Johnson, The Purpose of the Biblical Genealogies with special reference to the Setting of the Genealogies of Jesus (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, viii; Cambridge, 1969). See also comm. to Matthew, St., and Luke, St., Gospel of.

GENERAL. The usual name for the head of a religious order or congregation. The necessity for the office arose out of the centralized government required by the *Mendicant orders and the later congregations. The term is usually combined with a noun. Thus, the *Franciscans and *Capuchins have a 'Minister General', the *Dominicans a 'Master General', the *Carmelites a 'Prior General', and the *Jesuits, *Redemptorists, and others a 'Superior General'. Since 1893 the *Benedictine congregations, too, have a General in the 'Abbot Primate', whose rights, however, are restricted by the independence of the individual monasteries prescribed by the rule. The General is normally elected by the 'General Chapter' for a term of three or six years, but in the case of the Jesuits for life. Heads of orders and sometimes also of congregations approved by the Pope reside in Rome.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY. The highest court of a Church in *Presbyterianism. It consists of ministers and elders elected to represent the whole Church, over which it exercises supreme jurisdiction.

GENERAL BAPTISTS. As contrasted with the *Particular Baptists (q.v.), those *Baptists whose theology was *Arminian and whose polity allied with that of the *Presbyterians. To this group belonged the earliest English Baptists, led by T. *Helwys. After many General Baptist Churches had moved towards *Unitarianism, a New Connexion was formed in 1770 under the influence of the Evangelical revival. This group united with the Particular Baptists in 1891.

GENERAL CHAPTER. A canonical meeting of the heads and representatives of a religious order or congregation esp. for the purpose of electing new superiors and dealing with business concerning the whole order. They were introduced in the *Cistercian Order in 1119 and made compulsory for all orders by the Fourth *Lateran Council in 1215. Their frequency varies, but today they are normally held every three or four years. Apart from the Pope they constitute the highest authority for their respective religious.

GENERAL CONFESSION. (1) In the BCP the Confession at the beginning of *Matins and *Evensong 'to be said of the whole congregation after the minister, all kneeling'. It is in three parts—a confession of sin, a supplication for forgiveness of past misdeeds, and a prayer for grace to live righteously in the future. It was first added to the BCP in 1552 and has remained virtually unchanged.

(2) The term is also applied to a private confession where the penitent (exceptionally) resolves to confess, so far as he is able, all his past sins and not only those since his last confession. General confessions are sometimes recommended when the penitent is entering on a new state of life, e.g. marriage, Holy Orders, or the religious life, or leaving for a foreign land.

GENERAL COUNCILS. See Oecumenical Councils.

GENERAL JUDGEMENT, The. Also the Last Judgement. In Christian theology, the final judgement on mankind after the Resurrection of the Dead. In contrast with the so-called *Particular Judgement (q.v.) on souls only immediately after death, the General Judgement is held to be the occasion of God's final sentence on humanity as a whole, as well as His verdict on both the soul and body of each individual.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT. Formerly the highest ecclesiastical office in many of the German Protestant Churches. The General Superintendent exercised his authority in conjunction with the provincial consistory and synod. The number varied in the different provinces, e.g. there were four in Brandenburg, three in Saxony, two in Pomerania. In recent times the title has been replaced, often after much controversy, in the Western provinces by that of Präses; and in the Eastern provinces there has now been set up a Bishop of Berlin over the General Superintendents. The appointment is purely ecclesiastical and does not receive confirmation from the State.

GENERAL THANKSGIVING, The. In the BCP the first of the Thanksgivings 'to be used before the two final prayers of the Litany or of Morning and Evening Prayer', so named to distinguish it from the particular thanksgivings ('for rain', &c.) which follow. It was composed in 1661 by Bp. E. *Reynolds.

W. W. S. March, Ground of the Heart (1963).

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, New York City. The largest training centre for clergy of the *Protestant Episcopal Church of U.S.A. It was founded in 1817 in answer to a demand within the Church for a more thorough, systematic, and disciplined training for the ministry, and it seeks to cater for the needs of the Church in all parts of the country. Assisted by bequests, the seminary has been able to erect several fine buildings. Training is now given to over a hundred students in both academic and practical subjects by a large and scholarly faculty. The 'Paddock Lectures' are delivered regularly by noted visitors.

P. M. Dawley, The Story of the General Theological Seminary. A Sesquicentennial History 1817–1967 (New York, 1969).

GENESIS, Book of. The opening Book of the OT, and the first of the five Books of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows that of the *Septuagint (Greek) version, the Hebrew title (בְּרֵאשִׁית, 'Bereshith', i.e. 'in the beginning') being the first word of the text. The Book contains the story of the Creation of the universe and of the early history of man, including accounts of the *Fall and the *Flood (chs. 1–11), and the story of the *Patriarchs, *Abraham (12–25.18), *Isaac (25. 19–26), *Jacob (27–35) and Joseph (37–50). Both in Jewish and in Christian tradition the Book has long been held to be the work of *Moses, but nearly all modern Biblical critics are now agreed that it is not the work of a single hand, but a composite structure made up of varying material from sources which can also be traced in other Books of the Pentateuch (q.v.). For the Christian theologian it is of value as containing the Biblical basis of much Christian doctrine, e.g. of the *Creation and the *Fall. Upon the promise made to Abraham and his seed (22. 15–18) depends the covenant relationship between God and the chosen nation of Israel, a conception fundamental to the OT as a whole, although the relationship was extended in later times to all peoples.

Commentaries by H. *Gunkel (K.H.A.T., i; 1901), S. R. *Driver (West. Comm., 1904; ed. 12, with appendix by G. R. *Driver, 1926), J. Skinner (I.C.C., 1910), O. Procksch (K.A.T., i; 1913), H. E. *Ryle (Camb. Bib., RV; 1914), G. von *Rad (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, ii–iv, 1949–53; ed. 9, 1972; Eng. tr., 1972), E. A. Speiser (Anchor Bible, New York, [1964]), and C. Westermann (Biblischer Kommentar. Altes Testament, i; 1966 ff.). G. J. Spurrell, Notes on the Text of the Book of Genesis (Oxford, 1887); H. E. Ryle, The Early Narratives of Genesis (1892). W. Eichrodt, Die Quellen der Genesis von neuem untersucht (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxxi; 1916); S. *Mowinckel, The Two Sources of the Predeuteronomic Primeval History (JE) in Gen. 1–11 (Avhandlinger Utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo. II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1937, No. 2; 1937). S. H. Hooke, In the Beginning (Clar. Bib., 1947). J. Chaine, Le Livre de la Genèse (1949). O. Eissfeldt, Die Genesis der Genesis. Vom Werdegang des ersten Buches der Bibel (Tübingen, 1958; ed. 2, 1961). G. F. Moore in E.Bi., ii (1901), cols. 1669–78, s.v.

GENEVA BIBLE. This translation of the Bible, popularly known as the 'Breeches Bible' from its rendering of Gen. 3. 7 ('they . . . made themselves breeches'; AV 'aprons'), was first published as a whole at Geneva in 1560. It was the first English edition to introduce verse numeration. Issued in a handy form, instead of in folio, with compendious notes of a *Calvinist flavour, it was the Bible most widely read in private use in England for fifty years. For further details, see Bible, English Versions.

Facsimile of the 1560 ed., with introd. by L. E. Berry and full bibl. (Madison, Wisc.–London, 1969). C. Easson, The Geneva Bible. Notes on its Production and Distribution (1937). A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 24–8, 43–5, with docc., pp. 279–86. B. Hall, The Genevan Version of the English Bible (Presbyterian Historical Society of England, Lecture; 1957). L. Lupton, A History of the Geneva Bible (2 vols. [1967–70]). Darlow–Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, i (1968), pp. 61–3; for further edd. of Geneva Bible, see pp. 65 f., 74 f., and passim.

GENEVA GOWN. The black preaching-gown worn by the early *Reformed ministers, loose fitting, with full sleeves. It was almost universally replaced by a surplice for Anglican preachers in the 19th cent. after some controversy, and is now worn by *Presbyterians and other Calvinists. Its use was held to emphasize the ministry of the Word, over against belief in a sacrificing priesthood.

GENEVAN ACADEMY. This celebrated school was founded in 1559 by J. *Calvin with the support of the City Council and under the guidance of the Compagnie des Pasteurs, primarily for the education of theologians. Students were attracted in large numbers from all over Europe, and Geneva soon became the centre of international Protestantism. The first Rector was T. *Beza, and among early members were T. *Cartwright, who lectured in theology in 1571, J. *Arminius, and J. Uytenbogaert (1557–1644), the leader of the Dutch Arminians. The scope of studies, at first purely theological, was gradually widened. In 1872 a Faculty of Medicine was created and the Academy transformed into the modern university.

C. Borgeaud, Histoire de l'Université de Genève (4 vols., 1900–32).

GENEVAN CATECHISM, The. A name applied to two quite distinct formulae of J. *Calvin:

(1) Catechismus Genevensis Prior. A compendium of doctrine (Instruction et confession de foi dont on use en l'Église de Genève), based on the Institutes.* It was issued early in 1537 and followed on 27 Apr. by a formal Confession, compiled either by Calvin himself or by G. *Farel. The documents were forthwith imposed on the inhabitants of Geneva. As yet the Trinity was not made a doctrine of faith.

(2) Catechismus Genevensis. A catechism in the form of question and answer, first published in French in 1542 and formally reissued in a Latin version in 1545. It became one of the basic documents of the Genevan ecclesiastical state. Its five sections are on Faith, the Law, Prayer, the Word of God, and the Sacraments.

Text of (1) is pr. among Calvin's works, ed. H. W. Baum–E. Cunitz–E. Reuss, xxii (Brunswick, 1880), cols. 33–96; Lat. tr., ib., v (1866), cols. 317–62; Fr. text repr., with notes by R. Rilliet–T. Dufour (Geneva, 1878). Text of (2), Lat. and Fr. in columns, with appendices, pr. among Calvin's works, ed. cit., vi (1867), cols. 1–160; Lat. version also pr. in H. A. Niemeyer (ed.), Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 123–190. An Eng. tr. was publd. at Geneva, 1556; also in [W. Dunlop (ed.),] A Collection of Confessions of Faith, Catechisms, Directories, Books of Discipline, etc., of Public Authority in the Church of Scotland, ii (1722), pp. 141–251, and T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith. The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 3–65. Extracts from the Confession of 27 April 1537 and of (2), in Kidd, pp. 568–72 (No. 286) and pp. 604–15 (No. 304) respectively. M. Boegner, Les Catéchismes de Calvin (Paris thesis, Pamiers, 1905). P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, i (1877), pp. 467–71. See also works cited under Calvin.

GENEVIÈVE, St., or Genovefa (c. 422–c. 500), Virgin and chief Patroness of the city of *Paris. Acc. to the ancient Life, she consecrated herself to God at the age of 7, and was specially blessed by St. *Germanus of Auxerre. At 15 she took the veil, and from then onwards devoted herself to a life of mortification. The great power attributed to her intercession was seen in her influence with the Frankish conquerors of Paris, and in the diversion from the city in 451 of the hordes of Huns under *Attila II. After her death, her intercession continued to be invoked, and to it was attributed the cessation of a fierce pestilence in 1129. The trustworthiness of her Life, which exists in three main recensions, has been contested in recent times; but some competent scholars continue to defend the traditional account. Feast day, 3 Jan.

Of the three recensions of the Life: 'Text A' ed. by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 204–38; 'Text B' by C. Kohler, Étude critique sur le texte de la vie latine de Sainte Geneviève (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, xlviii; 1881), pp. 5–47; and 'Text C' by C. Künstle, Vita Sanctae Genovefae (Teubner ed., 1910). G. Kurth, Études Franques, ii (1919), No. xii,' Étude critique sur la vie de Sainte Geneviève', pp. 1–96, with good bibl. Modern lives by C. H. Lesêtre ('Les Saints', 1900), A. D. Sertillanges (Paris, 1917), and Mme Reynès-Monlaur (Paris, 1924). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 960–90, s.v. 'Geneviève (Vie de Sainte)'.

GENIZA (from Heb. גנז, 'to hide'). The chamber attached to a *synagogue used to house MS. books unfit for use in worship, e.g. worn-out copies of the Scriptures and also heretical books. Valuable fragments of Biblical and other Jewish MSS. were discovered in 1896–8 by S. Schechter in the geniza of an ancient synagogue at Cairo, dating from A.D. 882, among them portions of the Hebrew text of *Ecclesiasticus and the text published as Fragments of a Zadokite Work. They now constitute the Taylor–Schechter Collection in Cambridge University Library. See also Dead Sea Scrolls.

P. [E.] Kahle, The Cairo Geniza (1947; ed. 2, Oxford, 1959); R. H. *Charles (ed.), Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii (1913), pp. 785–834.

GENNADIUS I (d. 471), Patr. of *Constantinople. In his earlier years he vigorously opposed the Christological teaching of St. *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444). In 458 he succeeded Anatolius (449–58) as Patriarch and in 460 he received a letter from St. *Leo (ep. 170), warning him against *Timothy Aelurus. Gennadius was the author of many Commentaries, notably on Gen., Dan., and the Pauline Epp.; considerable sections of these have survived, mainly in catenae. A few fragments of his dogmatic writings have also been preserved, among them extracts from a work against Cyril's 'Twelve Anathemas' and of a treatise 'Ad Parthenium'. He also wrote an encomium on the *Tome of St. Leo and an encyclical against *simony (from a Synod at Constantinople, prob. 459). Feast day, in the E. 25 Aug. (also in Roman martyrology) and also 17 Nov.

Fragg. collected in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxv (2), 1613–1734; others in K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 352–418. F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxvii; 1938), sect. vi, 'Gennadius von Konstantinopel', pp. 54–108. R. Devreesse, Les Anciens Commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (S.T., cci; 1959), pp. 183–5. C. H. *Turner in H.D.B., v (extra vol., 1904), pp. 517–19, s.v. 'Patristic Commentaries'. Basic material for his life in AA.SS., Aug. VI (1743), pp. 106–16.

GENNADIUS II. See George Scholarius.

GENNADIUS OF MARSEILLES (fl. 470), presbyter and ecclesiastical historian. His chief surviving work, the 'De Viris Illustribus', is a continuation of *Jerome's book of the same name. Completed about 480, it contains 101 notices (10 of them added by a later hand) of ecclesiastical writers, E. and W., mostly of the 5th cent. While biographical detail is slight, the bibliographical information is invaluable. The account of Gennadius himself (No. 100 [101]) mentions several dogmatic works of which only fragments remain. C. Munier attributed to him the 'Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua' (q.v.). He was a *Semipelagian.

J. P. Migne, PL, lviii, 1059–1120. Modern edd. of De Vir. Illust. by E. C. Richardson (T.U., xiv (1), 1896) and G. Herdinger (Teub., 1924). Text of Liber Ecclesiasticorum Dogmatum, ed. C. H. *Turner in J.T.S., vii (1905–6), pp. 78–99, viii (1906–7), pp. 103–14. Important studies by A. Feder, S.J., in Scholastik, ii (1927), pp. 481–514, iii (1928), pp. 238–43, and viii (1933), pp. 217–32 and 380–99. G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Le Liber Dogmatum de Gennade de Marseille et problèmes qui s'y rattachent' in R. Bén., xxiv (1907), pp. 445–55. H. Koch, Vincenz von Lerin und Gennadius (T.U., xxxi (2b), 1907). Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 595–9; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 474, for further bibl.

GENNESARET. A district on the western shore of the Sea of *Galilee, which is hence called also the Lake of Gennesaret (Lk. 5. 1). Christ landed there after the Feeding of the Five Thousand (Mk. 6. 53).

GENTILE, GIOVANNI (1875–1944), Italian philosopher and educationist. A native of Castelvetrano, he studied at Palermo. He then taught at Naples (1898–1906), and was professor of the history of philosophy at Palermo (1906–14), Pisa (1914–17), and Rome from 1917. Shortly after this last appointment he was made a senator. He was one of the earliest supporters of Fascism, which he regarded as the incarnation of Idealism, and on B. Mussolini's accession to power became Minister of Education (1922–4). As such, he carried out important paedagogic reforms and reintroduced the teaching of the Catholic religion into the schools. He was assassinated by anti-Fascists at Florence in 1944.

Gentile developed his idealist philosophy in conjunction with B. *Croce (from whom he later parted on political grounds) under the influence of G. B. *Vico, I. *Kant, and G. W. F. *Hegel. Reality, which was fundamentally historical, was the idea as realized in the human mind, so that philosophy was the supreme form of self-consciousness, in which the process of self-formation culminated. God was the 'transcendent pure thinking', which overcomes all mental differences and antagonisms. The significance of religion was that it promoted the awareness of objective ideas, and in particular of the reality to which all others were subordinate. It was a complete intuition of life, and the Catholic form of it was esp. suited to the needs of the Italian people.

Gentile was a prolific writer. His most important philosophical work was Teoria generale dello spirito (1916; Eng. trans., 1922).

Opere complete (partly Milan, partly Florence, 1928 ff.; 19 vols. in 22 to 1955; also ed. a cura della Fondazione Giovanni Gentile per gli Studi Filosofici (55 vols. + at least 4 vols. of letters, Florence, 1942 ff.: Giovanni Gentile. La vita e il pensiero, a cura della Fondazione Giovanni Gentile per gli Studi Filosofici (1948 ff.), incl. bibl. of his writings, vol. iii. E. Chiocchetti, La filosofia di G. Gentile (1922); V. La Via, L'idealismo attuale di G. Gentile (1925); R. W. Holmes, The Idealism of G. Gentile (1937); B. Bianchi, Il problema religioso in Giovanni Gentile (Problemi filosofici, v; 1940). A. Signorini, Il Giovanni Gentile e Marx (Milan, 1966).

GENTILES. A Biblical term (Heb. גּוֹיִם, 'nations'; Gk. ἔθνη, 'nations', or Ἕλληνες, 'Greeks') usually applied to non-Jews. The meaning of the corresponding Lat. word, gentiles, used in the *Vulgate to translate the Heb. and Greek, has changed during the centuries. In post-Augustan Latin it meant 'fellow-countrymen' and in still later Latin more generally 'foreigners'.

GENUFLECTENTES (Lat., 'those who kneel'). In the ancient Church a class of *Penitents who were permitted to be present at the first part of the liturgy, kneeling at the west end of the nave. They were dismissed, together with the *catechumens and *energumens, before the Mass of the *Faithful.

GENUFLEXION. A momentary kneeling on the right knee, with the body erect, used in the W. Church as a ceremonial reverence when passing before the Blessed Sacrament, or before the unveiled cross on *Good Friday, and formerly at the incarnatus in the *Nicene Creed, and on certain other occasions. Until 1967, a double genuflection, made by kneeling on both knees and bowing the head, was used before the Blessed Sacrament exposed.

L. Gougaud, O.S.B., 'Some Liturgical and Ascetic Traditions of the Celtic Church. I. Genuflexion' in J.T.S., ix (1908), pp. 556–61. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1017–21; E. Bertaud, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 213–26, s.v. 'Génuflexions et Métanies', with reff.

GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH (c. 1100–54), Bp. of *St. Asaph and chronicler. He was educated under the supervision of his uncle, Uchtryd, Archdeacon, and later Bp., of *Llandaff, and prob. became a *Benedictine monk. He was prob. a canon and prebendary of the collegiate church of St. George in the Castle at Oxford until its absorption by the new foundation of Oseney Abbey. He was made Archdeacon of St. Teilo's c. 1140 and Bp. of St. Asaph in 1152, but he died before entering his diocese.

The first version of his famous 'Historia Britonum' was completed by 1139; but the text which survives seems to date from 1147. It purports to be a translation from an old Celtic book brought to England by Walter the Archdeacon, but the truth of this statement has been questioned. Its historical value is very slight, it abounds in chronological impossibilities, and it is largely the work of Geoffrey's own imagination; but it soon acquired a great reputation which no historical criticism could diminish. It became a potent factor in the unification of England through its emphasis on the common origin of Britons, Saxons, and Normans, as well as a rich source for chroniclers and poets, incl. J. *Milton and W. Shakespeare. Above all, it was the principal source of the stories of Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table, which, based on Nennius, were much elaborated in Geoffrey's 'Historia'. Among other legends popularized by Geoffrey are the stories of the giant Goëmagot, Merlin, and Vortigern and Rowena. A 'Vita Merlini' has also been attributed to him, but its authenticity has been contested.

Editio princeps of 'Historia Britonum', Paris, 1508. Other edd. by A. Griscom (London, 1929) and E. Faral (see below). Variant version ed. J. Hammer (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication lvii; 1951). Eng. trr. by A. Thompson (London, 1718), J. A. Giles (ib., 1842), S. Evans (ib., 1904, revised by C. W. Dunn, 1963) and L. Thorpe (Harmondsworth, 1966). Modern ed. of the 'Vita Merlini', with Eng. tr., by J. J. Parry (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, x, No. 3; 1925), with reff. to earlier lit. E. Faral, La Légende arthurienne, Part I, 3 vols. (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, cclv–cclvii; 1929, with text in last vol.). J. S. P. Tatlock, The Legendary History of Britain (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1950). J. J. Parry–R. A. Caldwell in R. S. Loomis (ed.), Arthurian Literature in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1959), pp. 72–93. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), p. 1294 f., s.v. 'Monmouth, Geoffrey of', with further reff.

GEORGE, St., Patron Saint of England and Martyr. Very little is known of his life, or even of his martyrdom; but his historical existence, though still sometimes disputed, is now generally accepted. Despite E. *Reynolds' and E. *Gibbon's identification of the two, he seems to have nothing to do with *George of Cappadocia. A not improbable view is that he suffered at or near Lydda before the time of *Constantine (d. 337). He is perhaps referred to (though not by name) in *Eusebius (H.E., VIII. v); but not until the 6th cent. did his cultus become popular and the legends of his exploits receive elaboration. The slaying of the dragon is first credited to him in the latter part of the 12th cent. and the belief became popular from its appearance in the 13th cent. '*Golden Legend'. It may have derived from the myth of Perseus's slaying of the sea monster at Arsuf or Joppa, both cities in the neighbourhood of Lydda. In the E. he is distinguished as the great martyr (μεγαλόμαρτυς). Feast day, 23 Apr. He is reckoned one of the *Auxiliary Saints.

The circumstances in which St. George became the patron saint of England, where he appears to have been known at least from the 8th cent., are obscure. His acta were translated into Anglo-Saxon, and pre-Conquest churches (e.g. one at Doncaster, 1061) are dedicated to him. In 1222 St. George's Day was made a lesser holy day at the Synod of Oxford. From the 14th cent. the red cross on a white background ('St. George's arms') became a kind of uniform for soldiers and sailors. His rank as patron of England (in place of St. *Edward the Confessor) prob. dates from the reign of Edward III, who founded the Order of the Garter under St. George's patronage (c. 1347). In 1415 the Constitution of Abp. H. *Chichele made his feast one of the chief holy days of the year. W. *Caxton's translation and printing of the 'Golden Legend' did much to popularize the story.

AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 100–63. Widely variant Acts of St. George exist in many recensions (Gk., Lat., Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, etc.). Gk. Acts ed., with discussion, by K. Krumbacher–A. Ehrhard (Abh. (Bayr.), xxv, Hft. 3; 1911); crit. ed. of Ethiopic Acts by V. Arras, O.F.M. (C.S.C.O., cxxxviii, 1953; Lat. trans. C.S.C.O., cxxxix, 1953). Ethiopic text also reproduced from MSS. in the British Museum with Eng. tr. and useful introd. by E. A. W. Budge (London, 1930); Syriac Acts, also with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in Muséon, xxxviii (1925), pp. 67–115. M. Huber, O.S.B., 'Zur Georgslegende' in Festschrift zum XII. Allgemeinen Deutschen Neuphilologentage in München' Pfingsten 1906 (Erlangen, 1906), pp. 175–235 (with Lat. texts, pp. 194–235). H. *Delehaye, S.J., Les Légendes grecques des saints militaires (1909), pp. 45–76. J. B. Aufhauser, Das Drachenwunder des heiligen Georg in der griechischen und lateinischen Überlieferung (Byzantinisches Archiv, v; 1911). F. Cumont, 'La Plus Ancienne Légende de saint Georges' in Revue d'Histoire des Religions, cxiv (1936), pp. 5–41, with further Lat. text, pp. 42–51. Popular account in G. J. Marcus, Saint George of England (1939); also Isabel H. Elder, George of Lydda (1949). A. Amore, O.F.M.–V. Wehr–P. Toschi in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 441–5, s.v. 'Georgio, santo, martire' (incl. Iconography and Folklore).

GEORGE (c. 640–724), 'Bp. of the Arabians'. He was born in the neighbourhood of *Antioch and in 686 became bishop of the Arabian nomads in Mesopotamia, with his see at Akula. His writings are one of the principal authorities for the history of *Syriac Christianity and literature. They include a translation of, and commentaries on, a number of *Aristotle's works, additions to the 'Hexaemeron' of *Jacob of Edessa, and a long series of letters on matters of doctrine, liturgy, and ascetic practice.

His verse treatises on the consecration of *chrism and the lives of the hermits ed. V. Ryssel in Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, Cl. di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, ix (1892), pp. 45–93. Selected works tr. into Germ. by id., Georgs des Araberbischofs Gedichte und Briefe (1891). 'An Exposition on the Rites of Baptism, the Eucharist and the Consecration of the Chrism' ed. R. H. *Connolly–H. W. Codrington, Text and Translation Society, 1913, pp. 3–15 (of the Syriac), with Eng. tr. pp. 11–23. Syriac texts of his translations of Aristotle ed. G. Furlani in Atti della Reale Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Memorie della Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, Serie VI, vol. v (1933–6), pp. 3–68 [Categories and De Interpretatione]; pp. 143–230 [Prior Analytics, Bk. I]; Serie VI, vol. vi (1937–40), pp. 231–87 [Prior Analytics, Bk. II]. W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894), pp. 156–9; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (Rome, ed. 2, 1965), p. 183 f., with further bibl.

GEORGE OF CAPPADOCIA (4th cent.), *Arian bishop who was intruded into the see of *Alexandria. Our knowledge of him, though derived almost exclusively from hostile sources, leaves little doubt of his grasping and violent character. He took possession of the see of Alexandria in the Lent of 357, i.e. about a year after Athanasius's retirement in Feb. 356, and held it till he was murdered by the rabble on 24 Dec. 361. As a member of the extreme Arian party, he was opposed by the *Semi-Arians no less than the orthodox. Some features of his martyrdom passed into the legends about St. *George; it was this fact which formed the basis of the mistaken view of E. *Gibbon that he was the historical character around whom the legends of the saint originated.

W. *Bright in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 638–40, s.v. 'Georgius (4)'.

GEORGE HAMARTOLOS (9th cent.), 'George the Sinner', also 'George the Monk', Byzantine chronicler. He flourished under Michael III (842–867). He wrote a 'Chronicon Syntomon' in four Books, extending from the Creation down to A.D. 842. Though coloured by its bitter hatred of *Iconoclasm, it is an important source for the period immediately preceding *Photius. Its main interests are those of the more educated members of a Byzantine monastery. In the MSS. it is carried on to 948 by 'The Logothete' (prob. *Simeon Metaphrastes), and to the 12th cent. by other writers. It was translated at an early date into Old Church Slavonic and Georgian.

Editio princeps of complete chronicle by E. de Muralt (St. Petersburg, 1857, unsatisfactory; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cx). Crit. ed. by C. de Boor (2 vols., Teub., 1904). [The 'Vitae Recentiorum Imperatorum' in PG, cix, 823–984, is only an extract from the Chronicon, repeated from cx, 979–1194.] K. Praechter in B.Z., xv (1906), pp. 307–30 (review of C. de Boor's ed.). Slavonic text ed. V. M. Istrin (3 vols., Leningrad, 1920–30); Georgian text ed. S. Kauchtschischwili (Tiflis, 1910–16). Krumbacher, pp. 352–8; G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, i (ed. 2, Berlin, 1958), pp. 277–80, with extensive bibl.

GEORGE OF LAODICEA (4th cent.), *Semi-Arian bishop. A native of Alexandria, he became a strong supporter of the Arian party which followed *Eusebius of Nicomedia, and c. 335 was appointed Bp. of Laodicea in Syria. In doctrine, however, he took up a less extreme position than Eusebius, and became one of the chief exponents of the *Homoiousian theology. In defence of his position he composed in 359, in conjunction with *Basil of Ancyra and others, a statement of his faith which is preserved by *Epiphanius (Haer., 73. 12–22). He appears to have died shortly after 360.

F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 539–41. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 264 f.

GEORGE SCHOLARIUS (c. 1405–c. 1472), Patr. of *Constantinople. In early life he became a teacher of philosophy and then a civil court judge in Constantinople. He attended the Council of *Florence (1439), where he supported the scheme for reunion in opposition to his fellow-Greek, *Gemistus Plethon. On returning to the East, however, he gradually became the enemy of all projects of union. Around 1450 he entered a monastery and took the name of 'Gennadius'. After the capture of the city he was made Patriarch as 'Gennadius II' in 1454 by the Sultan Mohammed II, who himself invested him with his crozier and mantle, and established with him the *concordat which in effect governed the relations between the Orthodox Church and the Moslem power until 1923. After one (or possibly two) years in office he resigned, spending the rest of his life in a monastery, apart from two more short reigns as Patriarch (not of his choice, but by order of the Sultan). He was a prolific writer. In philosophy he was an enthusiastic admirer of Aristotle. He learnt Latin in youth, and translated works by St. *Thomas Aquinas into Greek: despite his later opposition to the Union of Florence, he retained his interest in Thomism to the end of his life.

Crit. ed. of his Works by L. Petit, A.A.–X. A. Siderides–M. Jugie, A.A. (8 vols., Paris–Athens, 1928–36), with full introd. Older edd. repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, clx, 319–774. Speeches at the Council of Florence ed. J. Gill, S.J. (Concilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, viii, fasc. 1; Rome, 1964). The first satisfactory study of George Scholarius is by M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1521–70, with bibl. Older studies by E. *Renaudot, Gennadii . . . Homiliae de Sacramento Eucharistiae (Paris, 1709; repr. J. P. Migne, loc. cit., cols. 249–312), and L. *Allatius, De Georgiis et eorum Scriptis (Paris, 1651). J. Gill, Personalities of the Council of Florence and other Essays (Oxford, 1964), pp. 79–94; C. J. G. Turner, 'George-Gennadius Scholarius and the Union of Florence', in J.T.S., N.S. xviii (1967), pp. 83–103. Krumbacher, pp. 119–21. J. Gill in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 333 f., s.v. 'Gennadius II Scholarius', with further reff.

GEORGE SYNCELLUS (fl. c. 800), Byzantine historian. Little is known of him beyond the facts that he lived for some time in Palestine and was later the '*Syncellus' of Tarasius, Patr. of *Constantinople (784–806). He wrote an important 'Chronicle' from the Creation to the time of *Diocletian, which after his death was brought down by his friend, Theophanes the Confessor, to A.D. 813. The treatment of Biblical times is much fuller than that of the later period. His sources included (either directly or indirectly) *Eusebius, *Julius Africanus, Anianus of Alexandria (5th cent.), Panodorus (c. 400), and other writers. He possessed some critical insight into the value of his material and preserves some important fragments, but his use of his sources is dull and unimaginative.

Chronicle ed. W. Dindorf (C.S.H. Byz., 1828). Krumbacher, pp. 339–42. R. A. Laqueur in P.W., iv (2. Reihe; 1932), cols. 1388–1410, s.v. 'Synkellos'.

GEORGIA, Church of. The origins of Christianity in Georgia (also known as Iberia: in the S. Caucasus) extend back to the 4th cent., if not earlier. The preaching of a Christian slave woman from Cappadocia, St. Nina, led to the conversion of the Iberian royal house c. 330, and so to the adoption of the Christian faith as the religion of the country. Whereas the neighbouring Church of *Armenia adopted *Monophysitism, Georgia remained Chalcedonian, except for a period in the 6th cent. when it came under Monophysite control. At first dependent upon the Patriarchate of *Antioch, the Georgian Church became *autocephalous in the 8th cent., its independence being reaffirmed at a Council of Antioch c. 1057. The Georgians developed a rich Christian literature in their own tongue, above all during the 11th–13th cent. In 1811 the Georgian Church was absorbed by the Church of *Russia, but since 1917 it has been autocephalous once more, although in practice closely dependent upon the Patriarchate of Moscow. The head of the Georgian Church has the title *Catholicos-Patriarch.

M. Tamarati, L'Église géorgienne des origines jusqu'à nos jours (Rome, 1910). S. C. Malan (ed.), A Short History of the Georgian Church, tr. from the Russian of P. Ioselian (1866). C. Toumanoff, Studies in Christian Caucasian History (Washington, 1963). W. E. D. Allen, A History of the Georgian People from the beginning down to the Russian Conquest in the Nineteenth Century (1932). M. Tarchnišvili, Geschichte der kirchlichen georgischen Literatur (S.T., clxxxv; 1955). D. M. Lang, Lives and Legends of the Georgian Saints (1956). R. Janin A.A., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1239–89, with full bibl.; J. Assfalg–J. Sauer in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), cols. 697–700, with bibl.; C. Toumanoff in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 361–9, s.v. 'Georgia, Church in Ancient'.

GEORGIAN VERSION. The earliest version of the New Testament in the Georgian language, which like *Armenian probably owes its alphabet to St. *Mesrob (5th cent.), dates from the 6th cent. The translation was apparently made from the Armenian, though from better texts than any now surviving Armenian MS. R. P. Blake has observed that certain MSS. of the Georgian Gospels represent a type of the *Caesarean text, which in the Adysh MS. of the Gospels (897) has been preserved in relative purity, though in most MSS. it has been more or less completely 'corrected' to the *Lucianic type. The Gospels and the Pauline Epp. were always written until modern times in distinct MSS., so that their textual traditions are independent.

Ed. princeps of OT by Prince Vakhusht, Moscow, 1742–3. Modern edd. of Matt. and Mk. by B. V. Beneševič (St. Petersburg, 1909–11), of Mk. and Matt. by R. P. Blake in P.O., xx, fasc. 3 [pp. 437–574] (1928), and xxiv, fasc. 1 [pp. 1–168] (1933). K. *Lake–R. P. Blake, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospel of Mark' in H.T.R., xxi (1928), pp. 207–404, esp. pp. 286–307. L. J. M. Bebb in H.D.B., iv (1902), p. 861, s.v. 'Versions'; L. Leloir, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vi (1960), cols. 829–34, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', with bibl.

GERALD DE BARRI. See Giraldus Cambrensis.

GERALD OF WALES. See Giraldus Cambrensis.

GERBERT OF AURILLAC. See Sylvester II.

GERHARD, JOHANN (1582–1637), *Lutheran theologian. From 1616 he was professor at Jena, where, with Johann Major and Johann Himmel, he formed the so-called 'Trias Johannea'. In his Loci communes theologici (1610–22) he issued a systematized and detailed exposition of Lutheran theology which for long remained a standard work. He also wrote a very popular devotional book, Meditationes Sacrae ad veram pietatem excitandam (1606), the English translation of which by R. Winterton (1631) went through a large number of editions.

New edd. of Gerhard's Loci Communes Theologici by F. J. Cotta (20 vols., bound in 7, Tübingen, 1762–81), with index by G. H. Müller (2 pts., ib., 1787–9), and by E. Preuss (9 vols., bound in 5, Berlin, 1863–75). Life by E. R. Fischer, together with some of his letters (Leipzig, 1723). E. *Troeltsch, Vernunft und Offenbarung bei Johann Gerhard und Melanchthon (Göttingen Diss., 1891). R. Hupfeld, Die Ethik Johann Gerhards (1908). J. Wallmann, Der Theologiebegriff bei Johann Gerhard und Georg Calixt (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xxx; 1961). J. Kunze in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 554–61; H. Jaeger, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 300–303, both s.v.

GERHARD OF ZUTPHEN (1367–98) (Gerhard Zerbolt), member of the *Brethren of the Common Life. After studying at various places he became a priest and librarian of the Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer. He became a close friend of *Florentius Radewyns. He was remarkable for his learning, esp. in moral theology and canon law as well as in ascetic and mystic theology, and an excellent director of souls. Of his writings the best known are 'De reformatione virium animae' and 'De spiritualibus ascensionibus', which influenced, the '*Spiritual Exercises' of St. *Ignatius Loyola. His authorship of two treatises on prayer and the reading of Scripture in the vernacular is uncertain.

His 'Scriptum pro quodam Inordinate Gradus Ecclesiasticos et Praedicationis Officium Affectante', ed. A. Hyma in Nederlandsch Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, N.S., xx (1927), pp. 179–232. Life by *Thomas à Kempis in Opera et Libri Vite Fratris Thomae de Kempis [Nuremberg, 1494], fols. xxix–xxxviii. G. H. J. W. Geesink, Gerhard Zerbolt von Zutphen (Amsterdam, 1879). J. van Rooij, O.Carm., Gerard Zerbolt van Zutphen, i. Leven en Geschriften (1936). F. Jostes, 'Die Schriften des Gerhard Zerbolt von Zutphen "De Libris Teutonicalibus" ' in Hist. J., xi (1890), pp. 1–22 and 709–17; A. Hyma, 'Is Gerard of Zutphen the author of the "Super Modo Vivendi"?' in Nederlandsch Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, N.S., xvi (1921), pp. 107–28. Id., The 'Devotio Moderna' or Christian Renaissance (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1924), pp. 66–82. A. Rayez, S.J., 'Gérard Zerbolt de Zutphen et saint Bonaventure. Dépendances littéraires' in A. Ampe, S.J. (ed.), Dr. L. Reypens-Album (Antwerp, 1964), pp. 323–56. S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 735–7, s.v. 'Zütphen, Gerhard Zerbolt van'; W. Lourdaux in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 284–9, s.v. 'Gérard (19) Zerbolt de Zutphen'.

GERHARDT, PAUL (c. 1607–76), German *Lutheran hymn-writer. After studying theology at *Wittenberg and spending some years as a private tutor at Berlin he became provost at Mittelwalde in 1651 and pastor at the St. Nikolaikirche at Berlin in 1657. He resigned this post in 1666 through unwillingness to sign a declaration submitting to the *Syncretist edicts of the Elector of Brandenburg. In 1668 he was appointed archdeacon at Lübben, where he remained to his death. Though in his theology he was an uncompromising Lutheran, he was susceptible to the influence of Catholic mysticism, esp. that of St. *Bernard, and one of his most beautiful hymns, 'O sacred head, sore wounded', is based on the 'Salve caput cruentatum' attributed to the saint. Combining a deep personal piety and filial trust in God with the love of nature of the true poet, as expressed, e.g., in the fine verses of 'The duteous day now closeth' (Eng. tr., R. *Bridges), his hymns have become widely known, esp. in Germany. He ranks as one of the greatest hymn-writers of German Protestantism.

P. Wackernagel (anon. ed.), Paulus Gerhardts geistliche Lieder [1843]; modern ed. of his Dichtungen und Schriften by E. von Cranach-Sichart (Munich [1957]). E. G. Roth, Paul Gerhardt. Nach seinem Leben und Wirken aus zum Theil ungedruckten Nachrichten dargestellt (1829). E. Kochs, Paul Gerhardt. Sein Leben und seine Lieder (1907). H. Petrich, Paul Gerhardt (1914). R. Eckart, Paul Gerhardt. Urkunden und Aktenstücke zu seinem Leben und Kämpfen (1919). T. B. Hewitt, Paul Gerhardt as a Hymnwriter and his Influence on English Hymnology (New Haven and London, 1919), with bibl. R. Eckart, Paul Gerhardt-Bibliographie (1909). C. Palmer–C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 561–5, s.v., with bibl.

GERHOH OF REICHERSBERG (1093–1169). One of the principal agents of the Gregorian (see Gregory VII) reforms in Germany. After studying at Moosburg, Freising, and Hildesheim he became 'scholasticus' of the cathedral school at Augsburg in 1119, which post he had to leave two years later owing to his opposition to his simoniacal bishop, Hermann of Augsburg. After their reconciliation in 1123 he accompanied him to the First *Lateran Council, where he submitted his plans for reforming the clergy by means of the introduction of the communal life. As his proposals were rejected he entered the monastery of *Augustinian Canons at Rottenbuch on his return to Germany in 1124, and introduced a reform of the rule. His ideas on Church discipline were laid down about the same time in his 'Liber de aedificio Dei' (1128–9). In 1132 he was appointed provost of the Canons Regular of St. Augustine at Reichersberg, to the great spiritual and material advantage of the community. He was often sent on embassies to Rome, where he came into contact with St. *Bernard of Clairvaux; but his zeal for reform gained him much hostility. He was even accused of heresy, though he had always defended the orthodox teaching, esp. against the *Christological errors of *Abelard and *Gilbert de la Porrée. In 1166 he was banned by the Emp. *Frederick I and forced to flee from his monastery because he refused to support the Imperialist antipope. His ideas on the schism were laid down in his famous work 'De Investigatione Antichristi' (c. 1161), in which he advocates a clearer definition of the spheres of Papal and Imperial power. In addition to his controversial writings, Gerhoh wrote a discursive commentary on the Psalms, in which he draws extensively on contemporary sources, esp. *Anselm of Laon, *Rupert of Deutz, *Hugh of St. Victor, and Gilbert de la Porrée.

Opera Omnia in J. P. Migne, PL, cxciii, 461–1814, and cxciv, 9–1490: F. Scheibelberger (ed.), Gerhohi . . . Opera Hactenus Inedita (Lincii, 1875); much of his work also ed. E. Sackur in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI. et XII., iii (1897), pp. 131–525; Opera Inedita, edd. D. Van den Eynde, O.F.M., and others (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, viii–x; 1955–6). H. F. A. Nobbe, Gerhoh von Reichersberg (1881). H. H. Jacobs, 'Studien über Gerhoh von Reichersberg. Zur Geistesgeschichte des 12. Jahrhunderts' in Z.K.G., I (1931), pp. 315–77; H. von Fichtenau, 'Studien zu Gerhoh von Reichersberg' in Mitteilungen des Österreichischen Instituts für Geschichtsforschung, lii (1938), pp. 1–56. J. Günster, Die Christologie des Gerhoh von Reichersberg. Eine dogmengeschichtliche Studie zu seiner Auffassung von der hypostatischen Union (1940). D. van den Eynde, O.F.M., L'Œuvre littéraire de Géroch de Reichersberg (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, xi; 1957). E. Meuthen, Kirche und Heilsgeschichte bei Gerhoh von Reichersberg (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, vi; Leiden, 1959). P. Classen, O.F.M., Gerhoch von Reichersberg (Wiesbaden, 1960). R. W.–A. J. Carlyle, A History of Mediaeval Political Thought in the West, iv (1922), pp. 342–83. P. Classen, O.F.M., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 303–8, s.v.

GERMAIN, St. See Germanus, St.

GERMAIN-DES-PRÉS, St.- See Saint-Germain-des-Prés.

GERMAN BAPTISTS. See Tunkers.

GERMAN-CHRISTIANS (Deutsche Christen). The Protestants who, during the Hitler régime, tried to bring about a synthesis between Nazism and Christianity. Their more extreme adherents wished to eliminate the OT, St. *Paul ('the Rabbi'), and the doctrines of St. *Augustine (with their 'Jewish' sense of sin), and to eradicate from the Gospels everything Jewish or 'servile'. Finding their Holy Land not in Palestine, but in Germany, they held that the law of God was embodied in Hitler. It was their professed purpose to 'complete' M. *Luther's Reformation. Concealment of their more extreme aims, coupled with a broadcast by Hitler urging all Nazis to vote, gained them a large majority at the Church elections in July 1933; and L. *Müller (q.v.), the most influential figure in the group, was elected *Reichsbischof. Müller's extreme measures, notably his incorporation of the Evangelical Youth into the 'Hitler Jugend', wholly alienated the embryonic '*Confessing Church' and he was virtually superseded by the appointment of Hans Kerrl as Minister for Church Affairs in 1935. None the less, the 'German-Christians' dominated more than half the German Landeskirchen during the Second World War. After it the more extreme members disappeared from public view, while others seceded from the official Landeskirchen to join in a free Church.

H. Buchheim, Glaubenkrise im Dritten Reich. Drei Kapitel nationalsozialistischer Religionspolitik (Stuttgart, 1952). See also works cited under Confessing Church.

GERMANUS, St. (c. 378–448), Bp. of Auxerre. Trained as a Roman advocate, Germanus ruled part of Gaul before his election to the see of Auxerre in 418. The chief events of his life can be distinguished from legendary accretions. In 429 he came to Britain (with Lupus of Troyes) to combat *Pelagianism and silenced the heretics at Verulamium. In 447 he revisited Britain, when he led British troops to victory over the Picts and Saxons, teaching them, it is said, the war-cry 'Alleluia'. In 448 he was at *Ravenna, pleading for the rebellious Armoricans. There he died. Some scholars have dated his second visit to Britain in 444–5, and his death in 445. *Patrick of Ireland and *Illtyd of Wales were probably his pupils, and he is said to have encouraged the early religious life of St. *Geneviève. Feast day, 31 July.

A 'Vita', with good historical basis but many miraculous details, was written c. 480 by Constantius, a presbyter of Lyons. It is printed, with many 9th cent. interpolations, in AA.SS., Jul. VII (1731), pp. 200–20. The original form was first printed in B. Mombritius, Sanctuarium seu Vitae Sanctorum i (Milan, 1480), pp. 319–25; crit. edd. by W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vii (i; 1919), pp. 225–83, and with Fr. tr., by R. Borius (S.C., cxii; 1965). Metrical version, dating from c. 875, ed. L. Traube in M.G.H. Poetae Latinae, iii (1896), pp. 428–517. W. Levison, 'Bischof German von Auxerre und die Quellen zu seiner Geschichte' in N.A., xxix (1904), pp. 97–175. Saint Germain d'Auxerre et son temps. Communications présentées à l'occasion du XIXe Congrès de l'Association Bourguignonne des Sociétés Savantes réuni à Auxerre . . . pour commémorer le XVe centenaire de la mort de saint Germain d'Auxerre, with introd. by G. Le Bras (Auxerre, 1950). E. A. Thompson, 'A Chronological Note on St. Germanus of Auxerre' in Anal. Boll., lxxv (1957), pp. 135–8; P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Notes d'hagiographie celtique', Nos. 27–29, ib., pp. 158–85. Modern Life by L. Prunel (Paris, 1929), with bibl. Nora K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 240–74. See also bibl. to Heiric of Auxerre.

GERMANUS, St. (c. 496–576), Bp. of *Paris. A native of Autun (Augustodunum), he was ordained priest in 530 and rose to become abbot of the monastery of St. Symphorian in his own city, where he exercised great generosity to the poor. In 555 he became Bp. of Paris. Here he sought to check the licence of the Frankish kings and stop the perpetual civil wars; and he won considerable influence over Childebert, son of *Clovis. He took part in several Councils, among them Paris III (557), Tours II (566), and Paris IV (573). His prophecy that death would overtake Sigebert if he did not desist from invoking the trans-Rhenish barbarians against his brother, Chilperic, was fulfilled when Sigebert was murdered by assassins. The church of *St.-Germain-des-Prés stands on the site of an elaborate 7th cent. tomb over his remains (destroyed, 1793). His Life, written by *Venantius Fortunatus, abounds in miraculous legends. Feast day, 28 May; of his translation, 25 July.

Two Letters attributed to him are of great importance for the history of the *Gallican Liturgy. Older scholars, accepting their genuineness, used them in the reconstruction of the Gallican Rite; but A. *Wilmart, following up doubts expressed by H. Koch and E. *Bishop, has made out a strong case against their authenticity. Wilmart maintains that they were written in the S. of France c. 700, and represent a rite as much Spanish as French, which had already absorbed a number of foreign elements.

Crit. ed., with introd., of the 'Vita' by Venantius Fortunatus, by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vii (1919) pp. 337–418; another brief life, together with the account of the translation of his relics, ib., pp. 419–28. These three items also pr. in AA.SS., Mai. VI (1688), pp. 774–806: the life by Venantius Fortunatus, also J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 55–78. O. Holder-Egger, 'Zur Translatio S. Germani' in N.A., xviii (1893), pp. 274–81. Bardenhewer, v, p. 377.

The two letters mentioned above are preserved in an 8th cent. MS. at Autun. They were first pr. by E. *Martène, O.S.B., in his Thesaurus Novus Anecdotorum. v (Paris, 1717), pp. 91–100; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 89–98; also ed. J. Quasten (Opuscula et Textus, Series Liturgica, iii; Münster, 1934), with reff. On their authenticity, see P. *Batiffol, Études de liturgie et d'archéologie chrétienne (1919), pp. 245–90 ('L'Expositio Liturgiae Gallicanae attribuée à Saint Germain de Paris'), and A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1049–1102, s.v.

GERMANUS, St. (c. 634 – c. 733), Patriarch of *Constantinople. Descended from a noble Byzantine family, Germanus received a careful education and became one of the clergy of *Santa Sophia in 668, of which he was later made the head. He was among the chief promoters of the *Quinisext Council (692) and he seems to have been appointed to the metropolitan see of Cyzicus in return for services rendered shortly afterwards, though acc. to his 9th cent. 'Vita' not until c. 705–6. It seems that at the synod convoked by the Emp. Philippicus in 712 to restore the *Monothelite heresy he ceded to the threats of the Emperor and signed the declaration against the Sixth Oecumenical Council. If he actually did so, a fact which has been contested, he soon returned to orthodoxy. He was elected patriarch in 715 and at a synod called shortly afterwards officially proclaimed the Catholic faith and anathematized the Monothelites. In 725 the Emp. Leo III, the Isaurian, issued his first edict against the veneration of icons (see Iconoclastic Controversy), and during the four subsequent years of his patriarchate Germanus was the soul of resistance against Iconoclasm. He was forced to resign in 730 and retired to Platonium, where he probably wrote his treatise 'De haeresibus et synodis', his only extant historical work. Among his other writings, many of which perished at the hands of the Iconoclastic Emperors, there survive four dogmatic letters, three of them bearing on the Iconoclastic Controversy, and seven homilies on the BVM, of whose cult he was one of the most ardent promoters. Mary's incomparable purity, foreshadowing the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception, and her universal mediation in the distribution of supernatural blessings, are his two frequently recurring themes. He is probably also the author of the 'Historia mystica ecclesiae catholicae', an interpretation of the contemporary Byzantine Liturgy, as well as of several fine liturgical poems. Feast day, 12 May.

Life from various sources pr. in AA.SS., Mai. III (1680), pp. 155–61. Works in J. P. Migne, PG, xcviii, 9–454. His Historia Mystica, ed. S. Pétrides in Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, x (1905), pp. 287–309 and 350–64; the Lat. vers. by *Anastasius Bibliothecarius ed. J. Cozza-Luzi in Mai, N.P.B., x (2; 1905), pp. 9–28; on this work, see F. E. *Brightman, 'The Historia Mystagogica and other Greek Commentaries on the Byzantine Liturgy' in J.T.S., ix (1907–8), pp. 248–67 and 387–98. J. List, Studien zur Homiletik Germanos I. von Konstantinopel und seine Zeit (Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, xxix; 1939; philological). W. Lackner, 'Ein hagiographisches Zeugnis für den Antapodotikos des Patriarchen Germanos I. von Konstantinopel' in Byzantion, xxxviii (1968), pp. 42–104, with extensive reff. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 48–51; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), p. 525. H. G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im Byzantinischen Reich (1959), pp. 473–6, with reff. F. Cayré in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1300–9, s.v., with full bibl.; J. Darrouzès, A.A., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 309–11, s.v. 'Germain (2) I de Constantinople', with recent bibl.

GERONTIUS, The Dream of. This celebrated poem by J. H. *Newman was first published in the periodical, The Month, for April and May 1865, and in book form in 1866. It is a vision of a just soul leaving a body at death and of its subsequent intercourse with the angels. It has been set to music by E. *Elgar, and two of the poems in it are well known as hymns—'Firmly I believe and truly' and 'Praise to the Holiest in the height'.

GERSON, JEAN LE CHARLIER DE (1363–1429), French Churchman and spiritual writer, the 'doctor christianissimus'. He was born nr. Rethel in the Ardennes. In 1377 he entered the College of Navarre at *Paris, then the centre of *Nominalism, where he studied under Pierre *d'Ailly, who remained his lifelong friend. He was made doctor of theology c. 1394, and in 1395 succeeded d'Ailly as Chancellor of Notre-Dame and of the University. From the beginning of his career he worked for the reform of the Church from within, which he endeavoured to bring about chiefly by a renewal of the spirit of prayer and sacrifice, and for the abolition of the *Great (Western) Schism. In 1397 he fled from the strain of the life in Paris to Bruges, where he held the benefice of Dean of the Church of St. Donatian. While there he wrote his famous treatise 'On the Manner of Conducting oneself in a Time of Schism', exhorting clergy and laity of both obediences to recognize each other's Sacraments and urging charity in their judgements. In 1398 he did not vote for the refusal of obedience to the *Avignon Pope, and the later return of France to the obedience of *Benedict XIII was largely his work, due esp. to his treatise 'De Restitutione Obedientiae'. After his return to Paris (1401) he resumed his office as chancellor and was instrumental in bringing back the *Dominicans (1403), who had been expelled from the University for their teaching on the *Immaculate Conception. He approved the decisions of the Councils of *Pisa (1409) and Rome (1412–13), though not taking part in them himself. In 1415 he attended the Council of *Constance, which he encouraged to continue its sessions after the flight of *John XXIII. He asserted the superiority of a General Council over the Pope and demanded that the doctors of theology should have a deliberative and definitive voice in it together with the bishops. He also took an important part in the drawing-up of the famous Four Articles of Constance, the future Charter of *Gallicanism. He had a share in the condemnation of J. *Hus, and denounced the propositions advanced by Jean Petit in favour of tyrannicide. This earned him the hostility of the Duke of Burgundy, Jean sans Peur, who had had the Duke of Orléans assassinated, and in whose defence Jean Petit had drawn up his theses. The hatred of Burgundy prevented Gerson from returning to Paris after the conclusion of the Council, and he went to the Benedictine abbey of Melk, nr. Vienna, where he wrote his treatise 'De Consolatione Theologiae', modelled on *Boethius. After the death of Jean sans Peur he returned to France (1419), where he spent the last ten years of his life in seclusion at Lyons, devoting himself entirely to the practice of the spiritual life and pastoral work.

Among his writings dealing with the position of the Church are 'De Unitate Ecclesiae', 'De Auferibilitate Papae ab Ecclesia', and 'De Potestate Ecclesiae' (1417), in which he developed the *Conciliar theory but without rejecting the Primacy of the Pope. In moral theology he accepted the extreme Nominalist doctrine, then generally taught in the schools, acc. to which nothing was sinful in itself but the sinfulness or goodness of an act depended solely on the Will of God. Among the large number of his treatises devoted to the spiritual life are 'The Mountain of Contemplation' (1397, his principal work), 'Mystical Theology', 'Perfection of the Heart', and Commentaries on the *Magnificat and on the *Song of Solomon. His mystical teaching, which has marked *Augustinian tendencies, is a synthesis of much that is best in Catholic mysticism from *Dionysius the Areopagite to J. *Ruysbroeck, his particular sympathies being with St. *Bernard, the *Victorines and St. *Bonaventure. He consciously opposed this spiritual teaching of the 'antiqui' to the dry intellectualist activities of the Nominalist 'moderni', who threatened to convert theology into mere dialectics. Gerson was also a zealous advocate of frequent *Communion and was deeply concerned over the religious education of children.

Gerson's influence has been deep and lasting mainly in two directions: his Conciliar views found an echo in Gallicanism, of which he is sometimes called the father, and his mystical teaching was admired by *Nicholas of Cusa and by the *Brethren of the Common Life, as well as by St. *Ignatius Loyola, St. Robert *Bellarmine, and St. *Francis of Sales. His writings were also greatly valued by M. *Luther in his early years. The '*Imitation of Christ' has sometimes been ascribed to him, esp. by French scholars, but it is now generally admitted that both internal and external evidence are against this attribution.

Editio princeps of his collected works, 4 vols., Cologne, 1483–4; the best complete ed. is that of L. E. *Dupin (5 vols., Antwerp, 1706, with life); modern ed. by [P.] Glorieux (Paris, 1960 ff.), with useful introd. in vol i. Notulae super quaedam verba Dionysii de Caelesti Hierarchia, ed. A. Combes (Études de philosophie médiévale, xxx: 1940); six sermons in the vernacular, ed. L. Mourin (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, viii; 1946). J. B. Schwab, Johannes Gerson (Würzburg, 1858); J. L. Connolly, John Gerson, Reformer and Mystic (Louvain, 1928). J. Stelzenberger, Die Mystik des Johannes Gerson (Breslauer Studien zur historischen Theologie, x: 1928); M. J. Pinet, La Vie ardente de Gerson (1929); W. Dress, Die Theologie Gersons (1931). A. Combes, Jean de Montreuil et le Chancelier Gerson (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, xxxii; 1942); id., Essai sur la critique de Ruysbroeck par Gerson (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, iv and v (1); 1945–8); id., La Théologie mystique de Gerson. Profil de son évolution (2 vols., 1963–5), with reff. to other studies by this author. L. Mourin, Jean Gerson, prédicateur français (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent, Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren, cxiii; 1952). J. B. Morrall, Gerson and the Great Schism (Manchester, 1960). E. Delaruelle–E. R. Labande–P. Ourliac, L'Église au temps du grand schisme et de la crise conciliaire (1378–1449) (Fliche–Martin, xiv, pt. 4; 1964), pp. 837–69, incl. bibl. L. Salembier in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1312–30, s.v.; A. Combes–L. Mourin–F. Simone in E.C., vi (1952), cols. 185–91, s.v., with detailed bibl.; P. Glorieux in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 314–31, s.v., with extensive bibl. reff.; id. in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 449 f., s.v. T. M. *Lindsay in E.B. (ed. 11), xi (1910), pp. 904–6.

GERTRUDE, St. (1) (626–59), abbess. She was the daughter of Pepin the Elder (d. 640). On her father's death, her mother, Blessed Ida, founded a convent at Nivelles in Belgium, and on Ida's death Gertrude became its first abbess. She ruled the convent well, but her personal austerities so weakened her that c. 656 she resigned her office and gave herself wholly up to devotion until her death three years later. She is widely venerated in Holland and Belgium, and is invoked as patroness of travellers. Her symbol is the mouse, though the reason is unknown. Feast day, 17 Mar.

A contemporary Vita is printed in AA.SS., Mar. II (1668), pp. 592–99; critical ed. of two recensions by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, ii (1888), pp. 447–74. B.H.L. (1898–1901), Nos. 3490–504, pp. 520–2. L. van der Essen, Étude critique et littéraire sur les Vitae des saints mérovingiens de l'ancienne Belgique (1907), pp. 1–13.

GERTRUDE, St. (2), 'The Great' (1256–c. 1302), German mystic. She is to be distinguished from the Abbess Gertrude of Hackeborn (1232–92), with whom she was long confused in older works and in the Breviary. At the age of five she was entrusted to the *Benedictine (or *Cistercian) convent of Helfta in Thuringia, where she received a sound education. She experienced a conversion at the age of twenty-five, and from that time led a life of contemplation. Her 'Legatus Divinae Pietatis', of which only the Second Book was written by herself (the other four being based on her notes), is one of the finest literary products of Christian mysticism. Most of her mystical experiences took place during the liturgical offices of the Church which were the mainspring of her spirituality. St. Gertrude was one of the first exponents of devotion to the *Sacred Heart, which she believed was revealed to her in several visions, described in her book with great beauty and simplicity. She also wrote a collection of prayers, 'Exercitia Spiritualia', some of which have become very popular in RC piety. She was never formally canonized, but her cult was first authorized in 1606 and extended to the entire RC Church by *Clement XIII in 1738, and since 1677 she has been included in the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day (since 1932), 16 Nov.; in the Benedictine Order, 17 Nov. She is the patroness of the West Indies.

St. Gertrude's Revelations were first publd. in the vernacular, along with those of St. *Mechtild of Magdeburg, by Marcus von Weida, O.P., Leipzig, 1503; Lat. ed. by J. Lansperge–T. Loher, Cologne, 1536. The best complete ed. of her works is that of the Benedictines of Solesmes, Poitiers and Paris, 1875, with important introd. Œuvres spirituelles ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Hourlier, O.S.B.–A. Schmitt, O.S.B., P. Doyère, O.S.B. (S.C., cxxvii, cxxxix, cxliii, etc., 1967 ff.). Numerous Eng. trr. Modern studies by G. Ledos ('Les Saints', 1901), M. Molenaar (Amsterdam [c. 1925]) and W. Lampen, O.F.M. (Hilversum, 1939). St. Gertrude the Great (anon., London, 1912; often, but apparently wrongly, ascribed to G. Dolan, O.S.B.). Mary Jeremy, ' "Similitudes" in the Writing of Saint Gertrude of Helfta' in Mediaeval Studies, xix (1957), pp. 48–54. Pourrat, ii, pp. 126–36. F. Vernet in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1332–8, s.v.; P. Doyère, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 331–9, s.v., both with detailed bibl.; and id. in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 450 f.

GERVASIUS and PROTASIUS, Sts., the protomartyrs of Milan. When, in 386, St. *Ambrose was about to dedicate his new church at Milan, the predecessor of the present S. Ambrogio, he obeyed 'a presentiment' (cuiusdam ardor praesagii) and dug in the church of Sts. Felix and Nabor in search of relics. Two large skeletons were discovered, perfect except that the heads had been severed. These were recognized as the remains of two early martyrs, Gervasius and Protasius, and were transferred to the new church, whereat, it is recorded, miraculous healings took place, to the discomfiture of the *Arians and the edification of the orthodox. Of Gervasius and Protasius nothing certain is known, though later tradition declared that they had been martyred in the latter half of the 2nd cent. It has even been sought (J. R. *Harris) to identify them with the pagan deities, Castor and Pollux. Feast day, 19 June.

Ambrose, ep. 22 (PL, xvi, 1019–26). AA.SS., Jun. III (1701), pp. 817–46. J. R. Harris, The Dioscori in the Christian Legends (1903); crit. by P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, 'I SS. Gervasio e Protasio sono una imitazione di Castore e Polluce?' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, ix (1903), pp. 109–26, and H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Castor et Pollux dans les légendes hagiographiques' in Anal. Boll., xxiii (1904), pp. 427–32. H. Delehaye, Les Origines du culte des martyrs (1912), passim; id., 'Quelques Dates du martyrologe hiéronymien' in Anal. Boll., xlix (1931), pp. 22–50, esp. pp. 30–4. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1232–9; A. Rimoldi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vi (Rome, 1965), cols. 298–302, s.v.

GESENIUS, HEINRICH FRIEDRICH WILHELM (1786–1842), orientalist and Biblical scholar. From 1811 till his death he was professor of theology at Halle, where he concentrated his attention on problems of Semitic philology and became the most outstanding Hebraist of his generation. In 1810–12 he issued the earliest edition of his celebrated Hebräisches und chaldäisches Handwörterbuch, which went through many revisions, and formed the basis of the Hebrew Lexicon (1906) of C. A. *Briggs, S. R. *Driver, and F. Brown. This was followed in 1813 by the 1st edition of his 'Hebrew Grammar', and in 1820–1 by his commentary on Isaiah.

T. K. *Cheyne, Founders of Old Testament Criticism (1893), pp. 53–65. E. F. Miller, The Influence of Gesenius on Hebrew Lexicography (Contributions to Oriental History and Philology, No. 11, New York, 1927). E. Reuss–R. Kraetzschmar in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 624–7, s.v.; F. Vigouroux in Dict. Bibl., iii (1903), cols. 215–18, s.v.

GESS, WOLFGANG FRIEDRICH (1819–91), German theologian. From his earliest years he possessed a deep faith, built up on an intensive study of the Bible. In 1850 he became professor at the Protestant 'Missionshaus' at Basle, in 1864 ordinary professor of systematic theology at Göttingen, and in 1871 professor at Breslau. From 1880 to 1885 he was *Generalsuperintendent of the province of Posen. He was among the earliest defenders of a *Kenotic doctrine of the Incarnation, which he expounded in Die Lehre von der Person Christi (1856), his most important work. He claimed to base this teaching (as, indeed, all his theology) on the Bible alone, without reference to the Creeds or other post-Biblical authority.

Gess elaborated his views on the Person of Christ further in Christi Selbstzeugnis (Basle, 1870) and several later works. W. Schmidt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 642–6.

GESTAS. See Dismas.

GESUATI (or, officially, Clerici apostolici S. Hieronymi). A congregation of laymen, founded c. 1360 by Bl. John *Colombini (c. 1300–67). They devoted themselves esp. to prayer, mortification, and works of charity, and followed at first the *Benedictine, later the *Augustinian Rule. Their popular name derived from their frequent use of the ejaculations 'Praised be Jesus', or 'Hail Jesus', esp. at the beginning and end of their sermons. Originally a very loosely knit group, they received Papal approbation from *Urban V in 1367 on condition that they established proper monasteries. At the same time they adopted a uniform habit, consisting of a white tunic with a square hood and a greyish-brown cloak. They took only *minor orders till 1606, when they were allowed to have one or two priests in each of their convents. After Colombini's death (1367) they spread throughout Italy, and in 1425 founded houses also in Toulouse. They were dissolved by Clement IX in 1668 because they had lost the spirit of their order.

They also had a female institute of contemplative nuns, the 'Jesuatesses' or 'Sisters of the Visitation of Mary', founded c. 1367 by Colombini's cousin, Catherine Colombini (d. 1367). They led a very austere life and existed as a congregation till 1872.

P. Helyot (anon.), Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, iii (1715), pp. 407–22. Heimbucher, i (ed. 3, 1933), pp. 596–8.

GETHSEMANE, The Garden of. The garden to which the Lord retired with His disciples after the Last Supper and which was the scene of His agony and betrayal (Mt. 26. 36, &c.). It is in the valley between *Jerusalem and the Mount of *Olives, just across the brook *Cedron. The traditional site is now in *Franciscan hands.

G. Orfali, O.F.M., Gethsémani, ou Notice sur l'Église de l'Agonie de la Prière, d'après les fouilles récentes accomplies par la custodie franciscaine de Terre Sainte, 1909 et 1920 (1924); [L.] H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1914–26), pp. 301–27, with appendix on 'L'Église primitive de Gethsémani', pp. 1007–13. C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 387–99; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 335–50. E. Power, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iii (1938), cols. 632–59, s.v.

GEULINCX, ARNOLD (1624–69), Belgian philosopher. A native of Antwerp, he studied philosophy and theology at Louvain (1641–6), where he became professor of philosophy in 1646. In 1658 he was deprived of his chair on account of his attacks on Scholasticism and monasticism. In the same year he went to *Leyden, where he became a *Calvinist. In 1662 he was made a lecturer on logic, and professor of philosophy in 1665. Among the works that appeared during his lifetime are Quaestiones Quodlibeticae (1653), Logica (1662 and 1668), Methodus (1663), and Ethica (1666). His more important works, however, viz. the Γνῶθι σεαυτόν, sive Ethica (1675), and the Metaphysica Vera (1691), were posthumous.

Starting from R. *Descartes's distinction between body and thought, Geulincx was led to develop the theory known as '*Occasionalism', denying any action of bodies on bodies or bodies on spirits or spirits on bodies, and consequently all movements produced by our will. God is the sole Cause of all movement and of all thought, all secondary causes, acc. to Geulincx, being illusory. As man is incapable of exercising any activity whatever on the outside world or on his own body, on each 'occasion' of a bodily event God causes the corresponding feeling in the soul and vice versa, and thereby everything is immediately subjected to God. The human will, which is capable of making a voluntary effort towards the good, has only an appearance of freedom, for the resulting activity, whether it be success or failure, depends on God alone. Man can thus in fact achieve nothing of himself. He is a spectator of what God works in him, the greatest virtue being a resigned and humble submission to all that happens. God himself, however, is wholly inaccessible to man, and in order to lead the moral life man must turn to the Divine in himself, i.e. the human reason by which he participates in the Divine nature. This combination of a rigorous determinism with an almost pantheistic exaltation of reason, which was one of the main features of Geulincx's thought, was later developed by N. *Malebranche and B. *Spinoza.

Complete Works, ed. J. P. N. Land (3 vols., The Hague, 1891–3). V. van der Haeghen, Geulincx. Études sur sa vie, sa philosophie et ses œuvres (Ghent, 1886); J. P. N. Land, 'Arnold Geulincx and his Works' in Mind, xvi (1891), pp. 223–42; id., Arnold Geulincx und seine Philosophie (1895). E. Pfleiderer, Arnold Geulinx als Hauptvertreter der okkasionalistischen Metaphysik und Ethik (1882); E. Terraillon, La Morale de Geulincx dans ses rapports avec la philosophie de Descartes (1912). G. Schmitz, 'Geulincx und die Bewegung des Pur Amour' in Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, iii (1951), pp. 209–19. Überweg, iii, pp. 262–5, 663.

GEYLER VON KAISERSBERG. See Geiler von Kaisersberg.

GHÉON, HENRI, pseudonym of Henri Léon Vangeon (1875–1944), French Catholic writer. The son of a chemist, he became a doctor by profession. He was brought up as a Catholic by his mother, but at the age of c. 15 appears to have lost all faith, until the death of his niece and other friends precipitated his reconciliation (1914). He published his first collection of verse in 1897 and in 1909 he was among the founders of the Nouvelle Revue Française. His first play, Le Fils de M. Sage.—Le Pain (performed in 1912), was a popular tragedy written in verse. His first two specifically Christian dramas, however, Trois Miracles de sainte Cécile and Le Pauvre sous l'escalier, both 1921, were failures, a fact which convinced him of the need to appeal to a wider Catholic public. He devoted himself to the task of building up a Christian theatre, producing his own plays and working with a company of young Catholics founded by himself in 1924 under the title 'Les Compagnons de Notre-Dame' and from 1931 with their successors 'Les Compagnons de Jeux'. Many of his works had kinship with the 15th cent. *mystery plays. Their subject was the lives of the Saints and other sacred themes and their deliberate naïveté of tone was an attempt to reproduce the atmosphere of medieval hagiography. They include La Vie profonde de S. François d'Assise (written 1925), Le Mystère du Roi S. Louis (1931), Le Mystère de l'invention de la Croix (1932; Eng. tr., 1956), Mystère des prodiges de Notre-Dame de Verdun (1937), and Le Jeu de S. Laurent de Fleuve (1938). Henri Ghéon's biographies, which combined the freshness of his plays with a higher standard of authenticity, appealed to a wide public; they included lives of the *Curé d'Ars (1928; Eng. tr., 1929), of St. *Teresa of Lisieux (1934; Eng. tr., 1935), of St. John *Bosco (1935; Eng. tr., 1935), of St. *Vincent Ferrer (1939; Eng. tr., 1939), and of St. *Martin (1941; Eng. tr., 1946). He also wrote the script for a film on John Bosco (1936), novels and literary criticism.

GHETTO. In former times the street or quarter of a city in which the Jewish population customarily lived. The word is perhaps a shortened form of the Ital. diminutive borghetto, 'small borough'. The earliest ghettoes were found in the Italian cities of the 11th cent., but they became common in the later Middle Ages, and in 1556 *Paul IV established a ghetto in Rome which was not finally abolished until 1870. As a general rule the Jews were not allowed to leave the ghetto, which was commonly surrounded by walls and gates, at night or on Christian holy days. The ghettoes were often self-governing. Ghettoes of great importance existed at *Venice, Frankfurt, Prague, and Trieste. In modern times the word has often been used loosely of any close settlement of a minority group.

GIBBON, EDWARD (1737–94), historian of the later Roman Empire. He was born at Putney. His weak constitution prevented a normal school career, but he was an omnivorous reader, esp. on historical subjects. He was educated at Westminster and in 1752, at the early age of 15, sent to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he was converted to the RC Church (1753). Though of short duration, his conversion was sincere. To detach him from Catholicism, his father placed him with M. Pavilliard, a *Calvinist minister at Lausanne, where by wide and systematic reading of French literature and the Latin classics he laid the foundations of his vast erudition. In 1754 he returned to Protestantism; in 1758 he was back in England; and in 1761 published an Essai sur l'étude de la littérature in defence of the study of ancient literature. From 1763 to 1765 he again travelled on the Continent, visiting France, Switzerland, and Italy. On 15 Oct. 1764, at Rome, as he 'sat musing amidst the ruins of the Capitol, while the bare-footed friars were singing vespers in the temple of Jupiter', he conceived the plan of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, which was to occupy him for nearly all the rest of his life. Vol. i, which was published in 1776, had an immediate success, vols. ii and iii followed in 1781. For a time he was M.P. for Liskeard (1774–80) and Lymington (1781–1783). In 1783 he went to Lausanne, where between 1782 and 1787 he finished the last three volumes (publd. 1788). They were followed by his Memoirs, written in 1789. He returned to England in 1793, and died in the following year. He was a typical representative of cultured 18th-cent. society, widely read, elegant, temperate, and content.

The Decline and Fall remains unchallenged as a history of the later Roman Empire on the grand scale. It is based on a very wide study of original material, supplemented by the researches of such French and Italian historians as *Tillemont, J. *Mabillon, B. *Montfaucon, and L. A. *Muratori. Its breadth of treatment, large perspectives, and meticulous accuracy are among its principal merits; and its author's mastery of style, despite its pomposity, adds to its fascination. In the famous chs. 15 and 16 of vol. i, the rapid growth of early Christianity is ascribed to five causes, viz. the intolerant zeal of its followers, the doctrine of a future life, the miraculous powers ascribed to the early Church, the pure morals of its members and the discipline it enforced; and the violent controversy provoked by Gibbon's hostile attitude is even today not wholly extinct. The history of the Byzantine Empire is a medley of superstition and crimes and the Middle Ages are the 'triumph of barbarism and religion'. All supernatural considerations are treated with bitter irony and ridicule; but the author's indirect method escaped the prosecution to which an open attack on Christianity would have exposed him.

The best ed. of The Decline and Fall is that of J. B. Bury (7 vols., 1896–1900). Miscellaneous Works of Edward Gibbon with Memoirs of his Life and Writings (3 vols., 1796–1815). Autobiography, repr. from ed. 2, with introd. by J. B. Bury ('The World's Classics', 1907); J. Murray (ed.), The Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon printed verbatim from hitherto unpublished MSS. (1896): G. A. Bonnard (ed.), Memoirs of My Life (1966). R. E. Prothero (ed.), Private Letters of Edward Gibbon, 1753–1774 (2 vols., 1896); J. E. Norton (ed.), The Letters of Edward Gibbon (3 vols., 1956). D. M. Low (ed.), Gibbon's Journal to January 28th, 1763 (1929); G. Bonnard (ed.), Le Journal de Gibbon à Lausanne 17 août 1763–19 avril 1764 (Lausanne, 1945); id. (ed.), Gibbon's Journey from Geneva to Rome. His Journal from 20 April to 2 October 1764 (1961). Studies by H. H. *Milman (London, 1839), G. M. Young (ib., 1932), R. B. Mowat (ib., 1936), D. M. Low (ib., 1937), P. Fughum (Oslo Studies in English, Oslo and Oxford 1953), E. J. Oliver (London, 1958), and J. W. Swain (ib., 1966). S. T. McCloy, Gibbon's Antagonism to Christianity (1933). H. L. Bond, The Literary Art of Edward Gibbon (Oxford, 1960). J. E. Norton, A Bibliography of the Works of Edward Gibbon (ib., 1940): G. [L.] Keynes, The Library of Edward Gibbon. A Catalogue of his Books (1940), with introd., pp. 11–36. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 250–6.

GIBERTI, GIAN MATTEO (1495–1543), Bp. of *Verona. He was one of the leading advocates in Italy of ecclesiastical reform who prepared the way for the Council of *Trent. Patronized by Cardinal Giulio de' Medici (the future *Clement VII), whose secretary he became, in 1521 he was sent as envoy to *Charles V and in 1524 became Bp. of Verona. He was a trusted counsellor of Clement VII and *Paul III, and in 1536 was appointed to sit on the reforming commission known as the 'consilium de emendenda ecclesia'. He also produced some good editions of various patristic writings (e.g. of *Chrysostom and *John of Damascus).

Works (Constitutiones Gibertinae, Costituzioni per le monache, Monitiones generales, Edita selecta, Lettere scelte, &c.), ed. P. and H. *Ballerini (Verona, 1733). Life by G. B. Pighi (Verona, 1900; ed. 2, 1924). M. A. Tucker, 'Gian Matteo Giberti. Papal Politician and Catholic Reformer' in E.H.R., xviii (1903), pp. 24–51, 266–86, 439–69. T. Pandolfi, 'G. M. Giberti e l'ultima difesa della libertà d'Italia negli anni 1521–25' in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, xxxiv (1911), pp. 131–237. A. Grazioli, Gian Matteo Giberti, vescovo di Verona, precursore della riforma del Concilio di Trento (Verona, 1955).

GIBSON, EDMUND (1669–1748), Bp. of London. A native of Bampton, Cumbria, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he was elected a taberdar in 1690. His early publications included editions of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (1692), of Quintilian's De Institutione Oratoria (1693), and of W. Camden's Britannia (1695). In 1696 he was appointed by T. *Tenison *Lambeth Librarian, and in 1697 ordained priest. He entered the lists against F. *Atterbury in the *Convocation controversy, upholding the archbishop's prerogatives over both Houses. A fruit of the controversy was his standard manual Synodus Anglicana; or the Constitution and Proceedings of an English Convocation (1702; new ed. by E. *Cardwell, 1854). In 1703 he became Canon of *Chichester and rector of Lambeth. After prolonged studies he issued in 1713 his magnum opus, the Codex Iuris Ecclesiastici Anglicani (ed. 2, 1761), still the most complete collection of English ecclesiastical statutes. Soon after the accession of George I, Gibson was elected Bp. of *Lincoln (1716) and began to play an important part in ecclesiastical politics. Himself a High Church Whig, he made it his chief object to reconcile the clergy, nearly all Tories, to the House of Hanover. He also furthered many schemes of ecclesiastical reform and was constantly consulted by Robert Walpole about appointments. Theologically he upheld orthodoxy, writing against the *Latitudinarians and the *Deists. On the other hand, he was relatively tolerant towards the *Methodists, personally befriended I. *Watts, and strenuously opposed Walpole in the *Quakers' Relief Bill (1736). He was the driving force behind the foundation of the Regius Professorships of Modern History at Oxford and Cambridge. In 1723 he became Bp. of London, ruling his diocese energetically and conscientiously, and actively promoting the religious welfare of the American plantations, still under the jurisdiction of the see of London. Among his later writings were A Preservative against Popery (3 vols., 1738), a collection of controversial treatises, mainly from the time of *James II.

N. Sykes, Edmund Gibson. A Study in Politics and Religion in the Eighteenth Century (1926). G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xxi (1890), p. 274 f.

GICHTEL, JOHANN GEORG (1638–1710), German sectarian. A native of Ratisbon in Bavaria and of Protestant upbringing, he came under the influence of Dutch visionaries and, exiled from Ratisbon, spent most of his life in Amsterdam. Here he read the writings of J. *Boehme, which he esteemed as highly as the Bible and of which he made the first complete edition in 1682. He himself became the founder of a small sect which condemned marriage and Church services, and which had followers in Holland and Germany until recent times.

G. C. A. von Harless, Jakob Böhme und die Alchymisten. Ein Beitrag zum Verständniss J. Böhme's (1870), Anhang, 'J. G. Gichtel's Leben und Irrthümer', pp. 117–85. A. W. Hegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), pp. 657–60, s.v.

GIDDING, Little. See Little Gidding.

GIESELER, JOHANN KARL LUDWIG (1792–1854), German Protestant Church historian. Of a Westphalian family, he was educated at Halle, and after holding various scholastic appointments became professor of theology at Bonn in 1819. In 1831 he accepted a chair at Göttingen, where he lectured on Church history and doctrine and also took an important part in the administrative work of the university. His earliest work, Historisch-kritischer Versuch über die Entstehung der Evangelien (1818), was a minute examination of the oral tradition behind the Gospel narratives. His main publications, however, lay in the field of Church history, the chief of them being his Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte (5 vols., 1824–57; Eng. trans. of vols. i–ii, A Compendium of Ecclesiastical History, 5 vols., by S. Davidson and J. W. Hull, 1846–55), which was long a standard book in Great Britain, esp. valued for its selection of original documents. He also wrote several monographs on the early heretics.

A supplementary vol. to his Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte was issued in 1855. Note by E. R. Redepenning on 'Gieseler's Leben und Wirken' in vol. v (1857), pp. xliii–lvi. F. C. *Baur, Die Epochen der kirchlichen Geschichtschreibung (1852), pp. 232–6. N. Bonwetsch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), p. 663 f., s.v.

GIFFORD LECTURES. The series of lectures delivered in the Scottish universities under the foundation of Adam Gifford, Lord Gifford (1820–1887), 'for promoting, advancing, teaching, and diffusing the study of natural theology, in the widest sense of that term, in other words, the knowledge of God' and 'of the foundation of ethics'. The first course was delivered in 1888. Notable Gifford Lecturers (with their years of tenure) include J. Ward (1896–8), R. B. Haldane (1902–4), B. *Bosanquet (1911–12), A. S. Pringle-*Pattison (1912–13), A. J. *Balfour (1914 and 1922–3), S. Alexander (1916–18), W. R. *Inge (1917–18), C. C. J. *Webb (1918–20), F. *von Hügel (1924–6), E. W. Barnes (1927–9), E. *Gilson (1931–2), E. R. Bevan (1932–4), W. *Temple (1932–1934), K. *Barth (1937–8), R. *Niebuhr (1939), C. Dawson (1947–8), G. Marcel (1949–50), L. Hodgson (1955–7), V. A. Demant (1956–8), and H. Chadwick (1962–4).

GILBERT FOLIOT. See Foliot, Gilbert.

GILBERT DE LA PORRÉE (Porreta) (c. 1080–1154), scholastic theologian. Born at Poitiers, he studied under *Bernard of Chartres, *Anselm of Laon, and at Paris. He taught at Poitiers, at *Chartres, where he was chancellor, and at Paris. In 1142 he became bishop of Poitiers. His earliest works were his commentaries on the Psalter, undertaken in the school of Laon, and on the Pauline Epistles. These commentaries were sometimes cited as the middle gloss (media glosatura), i.e. between those of Anselm of Laon and *Peter Lombard. The work for which he is chiefly remembered is his commentary on the theological opuscula of *Boethius. The language used in this work on the question of reconciling the statements 'God is one' and 'God is three' aroused violent opposition, and Gilbert was summoned to appear before the Council of Reims in 1148. The accounts of this proceeding vary, but it is certain that there was no formal condemnation. Gilbert, like many of his contemporaries, was deeply interested in language and logic. He was attempting to make his distinctions clear, and was not so much concerned to show that they were verified in reality. In some fields of theology this had fruitful results, e.g., in the development of methods of theological inquiry, and in clarifying concepts, such as the power of the sacraments, but for the consideration of the doctrine of the Trinity it led to serious misunderstandings. Gilbert was clearly a very inspiring teacher, and the views of his followers, the Porretani, are often cited by twelfth century theologians. As late as the third quarter of the 12th cent. a small group of writers, of whom the chief was Adhémar, canon of St. Ruf, was obstinately searching for materials to justify Gilbert's statements on the Trinity. The second canon of the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), in which the formulation of Peter Lombard was promulgated, put an end to these attempts. Gilbert has in the past been credited with the authorship of the 'Liber sex Principiorum', which is found in MSS. of the 13th cent. onwards incorporated in *Aristotle's 'Organon'; it is now clear that it is not his work.

Gilbert's commentaries on four of Boethius's Opuscula Sacra first pr. among Boethius's works, Basle, 1570, pp. 1119–1273; repr. J. P. Migne, PL, lxiv, 1255–1412; crit. ed. by N. M. Haring, S.A.C. (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, xiii; Toronto, 1966). Comm. on I Cor. ed. A. M. Landgraf (S.T., cxvii; 1945). The 'Liber Sex Principiorum' is pr. by L. Minio-Paluello (Aristoteles Latinus, i, 6–7, Bruges–Paris, 1966, pp. 33–59, with index pp. 123–32). A. Landgraf, 'Untersuchungen zu den Eigenlehren Gilberts de la Porrée' in Z.K.T., liv (1930), pp. 180–213; M. D. Chenu, O.P., 'Un Essai de méthode théologique au XII[e] siècle' in Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, xxiv (1935), pp. 258–67; A. Hayen, S.J., 'Le Concile de Reims et l'erreur théologique de Gilbert de la Porrée' in A.H.D.L.M.A., x (1936), pp. 29–102; M. E. Williams, The Teaching of Gilbert Porreta on the Trinity, as found in his commentaries on Boethius (Analecta Gregoriana, lvi; 1951); H. C. van Elswijk, O.P., Gilbert Porreta. Sa vie, son œuvre, sa pensée (S.S.L., xxxiii; 1966), with bibl. A. Dondaine, O.P., Écrits de la 'Petite École' Porrétaine (Conférence Albert le Grand, 1962; Montreal–Paris, 1962). N. M. Haring in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 478 f., s.v.

GILBERT OF SEMPRINGHAM, St. (c. 1083–1189), founder of the Gilbertine Order. While parish priest of his native *Sempringham, he encouraged seven women of his flock to adopt a rule of life on a *Cistercian model, and about a year later, with the support of Alexander, Bp. of *Lincoln, received their profession. He soon associated with them companies of lay sisters and lay brothers to assist with the manual work of the community. Their numbers grew; in 1139 a second foundation was established; and further foundations followed. In 1148 Gilbert journeyed to Cîteaux, seeking the incorporation of his nuns in the Cistercian Order; but when the chapter declined to govern communities of women, Gilbert returned and arranged for the spiritual direction of his communities by *Canons Regular who followed the *Augustinian Rule. Henceforward his communities took the form of a double order. In 1148 Gilbert had received papal approbation of his work. The only purely English order, it rapidly grew, and at the time of Gilbert's death numbered nine double monasteries and four of canons only. It was generously treated by several of the English kings, notably Henry II and *Henry VI. At the Dissolution they possessed some 25 houses, which were surrendered to the Crown without resistance. Feast day, 4 Feb.

The principal source is a 'Vita S. Gilberti Confessoris' by an unknown canon of the Order, pr. ('ex Cod. MS. in bibl. Cotton. (sub. effigie Cleopatrae B 1) f 37 b') by W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi (pt. 2; ed. 1830), pp. *v–*xxix (between p. 946 and p. 947); early Eng. tr. in J. J. Munro, John Capgrave's Lives of Saint Augustine and Saint Gilbert of Sempringham . . . (E.E.T.S., Original Series, cxl; 1910), pp. 61–142. Life based on Capgrave in AA.SS., Feb. I (1658), p. 572 f. [J. B. *Dalgairns after W. Lockhart], 'St. Gilbert, Prior of Sempringham' in Lives of the English Saints, ed. J. H. *Newman (1844), in ed. 2, iv (1901), pp. 3–155. Rose Graham, S. Gilbert of Sempringham and the Gilbertines (1901), esp. pp. 1–28. R. Foreville, Un Procès de canonisation à l'aube du XIII[e] siècle (1201–1202). Le Livre de Saint Gilbert de Sempringham (1943), with text. T. A. Archer in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 315–17. R. Foreville in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 374–6, s.v. 'Gilbert (4) de Sempringham'.

GILDAS, St. (c. 500–c. 570), monk and first British historian. The facts of his life are very uncertain. Acc. to the oldest life (11th cent.), the work of a monk from the Abbey of St.-Gildas-de-

Ruys in Brittany (acc. to F. Lot, Abbot Vitalis of Ruys, 1060–7), which perhaps draws on some genuine traditions, Gildas was born at Arecluta (Strathclyde), was forced to flee to Wales, where he married, and, after the death of his wife, became a pupil of St. *Illtyd. He then spent some time in *Ireland, went on a pilgrimage to Rome c. 520, founded a religious house at Ruys in Brittany on the way back, reached Wales again in 527, later visited Ruys and also Ireland once more, and died at Ruys on 29 Jan. 570. It has been questioned whether the sections of the 'Vita' connecting him with Ruys deserve credence; and indeed whether Gildas ever visited Brittany at all. There are two later lives, but these are of even less value.

His famous history, 'De Excidio et Conquestu Britanniae ac flebili Castigatione in Reges, Principes et Sacerdotes' (prob. written between 516 and 547), is the only history of the Celts. Written in a cumbrous and verbose style, it covers the period from the coming of the Romans to Gildas's own time; but the amount of real history in it is strictly limited and, its whole purpose being hortatory, it may safely be presumed to take an exaggerated view of the evils of its times. Among other writings attributed to him are some penitential canons. Feast day, 29 Jan.

Crit. ed. of Gildas's 'De Excidio' by T. *Mommsen in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xiii [=Chronica Minora, iii] (1896), pp. 25–85; other works, pp. 86–90. The life by the monk of Ruys ed. id., ib., pp. 91–106; 12th cent. life by Caradoc of Llancarvan also ed. id., ib., pp. 107–110; introd., pp. 3–24. Gildas's 'De Excidio' was also ed. for the English Historical Society by J. Stevenson (London, 1838); an older ed. (here erroneously divided into two works) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxix, 329–92. Eng. tr. of Stevenson's ed. by J. A. Giles, Six Old English Chroniclers (1885), pp. 295–380. A. de la Borderie, 'La Date de la naissance de Gildas' in Revue Celtique, vi (1883–5), pp. 1–13. F. Lot, 'De la valeur du De Excidio . . . de Gildas' in Medieval Studies in Memory of Gertrude Schoepperle Loomis (Paris and New York, 1927), pp. 229–64; C. E. Stevens, 'Gildas Sapiens' in E.H.R., lvi (1941), pp. 353–73; P. Grosjean, S.J., 'Notes d'hagiographie celtique, Nos. 30–36' in Anal. Boll., lxxv (1957), pp. 185–226. T. D. O'Sullivan, The De Excidio of Gildas. Its Authenticity and Date (Columbia Studies in the Classical Tradition, vii; Leiden, 1978). Hardy, i (pt. 1; 1862), pp. 151–6. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 399–401. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 344–6, s.v.

GILES, St. (? 8th cent.), Lat. Aegidius. One of the Fourteen *Auxiliary Saints. Acc. to a 10th cent. biography, St. Giles was an Athenian who fled to France from the admiration of his countrymen and made himself a hermitage in a forest near the mouth of the Rhône, where he lived on herbs and the milk of a hind. Once when Flavius Wamba, king of the Visigoths, was hunting in the forest, the monarch chased the hind to the abode of the hermit and was so impressed by Giles's holiness that he built him a monastery. Though the medieval account, which makes him an Athenian and connects him with persons as far apart in time as St. *Caesarius of Arles (d. 542) and *Charlemagne (d. 814), is clearly unhistorical, it may contain a basis of real fact. A 9th cent. Papal bull mentions Wamba as having founded an abbey for him, to which a charter was given by Benedict II (684–5). Later on, the town of St. Gilles, which grew up near his grave, became a famous place of pilgrimage. He was one of the most popular medieval saints, and in England alone 160 churches were dedicated to him. He was invoked as their patron by cripples, beggars, and blacksmiths. Feast day, 1 Sept.

The principal authority is an anonymous Lat. life pr. in AA.SS., Sept. I (1746), pp. 299–304, with introd. and brief extracts of his miracles (see below), pp. 284–99; another recension of the life is pr., with introd., in Anal. Boll., viii (1889), pp. 102–20. The Liber Miraculorum Sancti Aegidii, written before 1124, ed. in full by P. Jaffé in M.G.H., Scriptores, xii (1861), pp. 316–23; also pr. in Anal. Boll., ix (1890), pp. 393–422. B.H.L., i, p. 17 f. (Nos. 93–8); suppl., p. 6 f. E. Rembry, Saint Gilles. Sa vie, ses reliques. son culte en Belgique et dans le nord de la France (2 vols., bound in 1, Bruges, 1881–2); E. C. Jones, Saint Gilles. Essai d'histoire littéraire (Paris thesis, 1914). F. Brittain, Saint Giles (Cambridge, 1928).

GILES OF ROME (d. 1316; born c. 1243–7), otherwise 'Aegidius Romanus', medieval philosopher. He was born at Rome, perhaps descended from the *Colonna family. At an early age he became an *Augustinian hermit at *Paris and attracted attention by his intellectual gifts, which later won him the surname of 'doctor fundatissimus'. From 1269 to 1271 he had as his teacher St. *Thomas Aquinas. In 1292 he was elected *General of his order, which he strove to extend by the foundation of many convents. In 1295 *Boniface VIII made him Abp. of Bourges.

Giles was a very fertile author whose writings include commentaries on *Aristotle's 'Physics', the 'De Anima', and the '*Liber de Causis', and on *Peter Lombard's 'Sentences'; treatises against the *Averroists, on *Angels, and on *Original Sin; and exegetical writings on several Pauline Epp. and on St. John's Gospel. His most popular work, which was translated into many languages, was the 'De Regimine Principum' written c. 1285 for his pupil, the future King Philip the Fair. His treatise 'De Summi Pontificis Potestate' was the foundation of Boniface VIII's famous bull '*Unam Sanctam' (q.v.). In his teaching Giles of Rome followed St. Thomas on such points as the unity of the substantial form and the real distinction between essence and existence in creatures, but against him he maintained the primacy of will over reason and denied that before the Fall Adam possessed sanctifying grace. His teaching, both past and future (sententias scriptas et scribendas), was prescribed to be followed in the schools of the Augustinian Order in 1287.

His writings were widely printed in the 15th and 16th cents. For bibl. details, see G. Boffito, Saggio di bibliografia egidiana (Florence, 1911), G. Bruni, Le opere di Egidio Romano (1936), and id., 'Saggio bibliografico sulle opere stampate di Egidio Romano' in Analecta Augustiniana, xxiv (1961), pp. 331–55. Modern edd. of 'De Ecclesiastica Potestate' by R. Scholz (Weimar, 1929); 'Theoremata de Esse et Essentia', with introd., by E. Hocedez, S.J. (Museum Lessianum, Section Philosophique, xii; 1930); and 'De Erroribus Philosophorum' by J. Koch, with Eng. tr. (Milwaukee, 1944). F. Lajard in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxx (1888), pp. 421–566. E. Hocedez, S.J., 'La Condamnation de Gilles de Rome' in R.T.A.M., iv (1932), pp. 34–58; P. W. Nash, S.J., 'Giles of Rome on Boethius' "Diversum est esse et id quod est" ' in Mediaeval Studies, xii (1950), pp. 57–91, with full notes; id., 'The Accidentality of Esse according to Giles of Rome' in Gregorianum, xxxviii (1957), pp. 103–15. Überweg, ii, pp. 532 f., 543–6, 774. N. Merlin in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1358–65, s.v. 'Gilles de Rome'; A. Trape in E.C., v (1951), cols. 138–41, s.v. 'Egidio Romano', with good bibl.; D. Gutiérrez in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 385–90, s.v. 'Gilles (3) de Rome'; P. W. Nash in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 484 f.

GILGAMESH, The Epic of. A long Babylonian epic poem, dating, at least in part, from c. 1198 B.C. and chiefly known from twelve tablets of the 7th cent. B.C., discovered at Nineveh by George Smith (1840–76) in 1872. It depicts the hero, Gilgamesh, an historical ruler of the first dynasty of Uruk, as a demi-god who rules tyrannically. In an account of the Flood elaborated by the immortal Utnapishtim for the edification of Gilgamesh (c. 200 lines of Tablet XI) there are several close parallels to the Biblical narrative in Gen. 6–9 (plan of ark; use of bitumen to make it water-tight; grounding of ark on mountain; only very few saved; gods smelling goodly savour of sacrifice). It has been very widely supposed (C. F. A. *Dillmann, S. R. *Driver, H. *Gunkel, and F. *Delitzsch) that the Biblical narrative is partly dependent on this epic or, alternatively, that the similarities derive from the common stock of ancient oriental mythology.

Best ed. of the cuneiform text, with transliteration and notes, by R. Campbell Thompson (Oxford, 1930); Eng. tr. into hexameters by id. (ib., 1928); modern Eng. prose tr., with introd., by N. K. Sandars (Harmondsworth, 1960). [E. A. Wallis Budge–R. H. Hall], The Babylonian Story of the Deluge and the Epic of Gilgamesh (British Museum, 1920). A. Heidel, The Gilgamesh Epic and Old Testament Parallels (Chicago, 1946), with bibl. reff. P. Garelli (ed.), Gilgames et sa légende. Études recueillies . . . à l'occasion de la VIIe Rencontre Assyriologique Internationale (Cahiers du Groupe François-Thureau-Dangin, i; 1960), with bibl. pp. 7–23. L. W. King, Legends of Babylon and Egypt in Relation to Hebrew Tradition (Schweich Lects., 1918), esp. pp. 41–3 and 132–5.

GILL, ERIC (1882–1940), sculptor, letterist, and wood-engraver. The son of a minister in the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion who became an Anglican priest, he joined the RC Church in 1913 and became a *Dominican tertiary. After training in an architect's office, he studied lettering under Edward Johnston. His best-known works are the *Stations of the Cross in *Westminster Cathedral (finished 1918), ten panels in the New Museum, Jerusalem (1934–7), and the bas-reliefs of 'The Re-creation of Adam' with the words of G. M. *Hopkins, 'Thou mastering me God', inscribed above it (1935–8) in the League of Nations Council Hall at Geneva. A Christian craftsman with a love for the liturgy, he was also a social philosopher, a pacifist, and a writer. As a stone-carver who revived the art of working directly upon the stone, he excelled as a carver of inscriptions and a maker of small stone objects such as crucifixes and holy-water stoups.

Eric Gill, Autobiography (1940); W. Shewring (ed.), Letters of Eric Gill (1947). J. Thorp, with critical monograph by C. Marriott, Eric Gill (1929), with plates; R. Speaight, The Life of Eric Gill (1966); D. Attwater, A Cell of Good Living. The Life, Works and Opinions of Eric Gill (1969). Evan R. Gill, Bibliography of Eric Gill (1953); id., The Inscriptional Work of Eric Gill. An Inventory (1964). W. Shewring in D.N.B., 1931–1940, pp. 339–41, s.v.

GILPIN, BERNARD (1517–83), 'Apostle of the North'. He was a great-nephew of C. *Tunstall, Bp. of *Durham. Born at Kentmere in Cumbria, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he came under the spell of D. *Erasmus's writings. After *Henry VIII's refoundation of Cardinal College as *Christ Church, Gilpin was elected one of its first Students. Disapproving of the doctrinal changes and disgusted by the robbery of Church property, he had serious scruples about giving his support to the Reforming Movement and in 1552 preached before *Edward VI at Greenwich on sacrilege. He found the persecution under *Mary hateful and became more outspoken in advocating a reformation of clerical scandals. He was protected by Tunstall, who even granted him the important benefice of Houghton-le-Spring. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he was offered, but declined, both the Bishopric of *Carlisle (1559) and the Provostship of Queen's (1560). His scruples about the doctrinal changes soon revived and, horrified by E. *Sandys's views on the Eucharist, he accepted the new order with some reluctance. In the next years he made many long and successful missionary journeys in the N. of England, during which his unbounded liberality and unsparing denunciation of abuses brought him a very large following, including some of the *Puritans.

The sermon preached before Edward VI in 1552 was pr. in ed. 4 of Carleton's life, 1636 (see below), and in 1752 with W. Gilpin's life. The primary authority is the life by George Carleton, Bp. of *Chichester (London, 1628, in Lat.; Eng. version, ib., 1629); more substantial life by William Gilpin, a collateral descendant (London, 1752). G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 378–80.

GILSON, ÉTIENNE (1884–1978), French *Thomist philosopher. He was educated at the *Sorbonne, where he came under the influence of H. *Bergson and L. Lévy-Bruhl. At the latter's suggestion he embarked on a study of the Scholastic influence on R. *Descartes and thus became conversant with medieval thought. In 1913 he was appointed professor at Lille and subsequently held chairs at Strassburg (1919–20), the Sorbonne (1921–32), and the Collège de France (1932–51). After his retirement he became a full-time professor at the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies at Toronto, of which he had been one of the founders in 1929 and a director ever since. From 1959 he lived mainly in France.

The first-fruits of the studies suggested by Lévy-Bruhl were the Index scolastico-cartésien (1912) and La Liberté chez Descartes et la théologie (1913). These were followed by La Philosophie au moyen âge (2 vols., 1922; revised 1944; Eng. tr. 1955), a popular manual which showed the systems of the Middle Ages as achievements in their own right. His other important works on medieval philosophy include Le Thomisme (1919; Eng. tr. 1924), an outline of St. Thomas's metaphysics; La Philosophie de saint Bonaventure (1924; Eng. tr. 1938), on St. *Bonaventure's conception of philosophical and mystical experience; Introduction à l'étude de saint Augustin (1929); L'Esprit de la philosophie médiévale (*Gifford Lectures, 1932; Eng. tr. 1936); La Théologie mystique de saint Bernard (1934; Eng. tr. 1940) on the special characteristics of *Cistercian mysticism; Héloïse et Abélard (1938; Eng. tr. 1953), and Jean Duns Scot, introduction à ses positions fondamentales (1952). He was one of the founders of the Archives d'histoire doctrinale et littéraire du moyen âge, to which he contributed some of his most significant work, including articles on St. Thomas Aquinas's criticism of Augustine and *Avicenna's influence on Duns Scotus in the first two volumes. In his later years he wrote on art.

J. *Maritain and others, Étienne Gilson. Philosophie de la chrétienté (Rencontres, xxx; 1949), with brief life and list of works to date, pp. 13–21; Mélanges offerts à Étienne Gilson de l'Académie française (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, hors série, Toronto–Paris, 1959), with list of works to date, pp. 15–58. C. J. O'Neil (ed.), An Étienne Gilson Tribute Presented by his North American Students (Milwaukee, 1959). Mediaeval Studies, xx (1958) was also dedicated to him. A. Maurer in N.C.E., xiv (1967), p. 137 f., s.v. 'Thomism', with further bibl.

GIOBERTI, VINCENZO (1801–52), Italian politician and religious philosopher. He was born and educated at Turin and ordained priest in 1825. Under the influence of Giuseppe Mazzini (1805–1872), he made it his chief ambition to free Italy from foreign political and intellectual domination. On resigning a chaplaincy which he held at court (1833), he was arrested on suspicion of political intrigue and banished from Italy (1834). For the next eleven years he taught at Brussels, where he published most of his philosophical works. Returning to Italy in 1847, he became President of the Chamber of Deputies and in 1849 a member of the Cabinet of Victor Emmanuel II (1820–78). After unsuccessful negotiations in Paris, he relinquished his political position shortly afterwards and lived in France for the rest of his life.

Gioberti's philosophical ideas were in substance *Ontologistic. He held that there was an exact correspondence between the orders of being and knowing and that the human mind directly perceived the absolute necessary Being, God, the creative cause of all existence and the source of human knowledge. The Pantheistic character of some of his later teaching, in which he came to regard creation as the essential function of thought, caused some of his treatises to be put on the *Index. Despite the affinities of his doctrines with those of A. *Rosmini, the two philosophers wrote against each other.

His principal writings were Teoria del sovrannaturale (Brussels, 1838), Introduzione allo studio della filosofia (ib., 1840), Considerazioni sulle dottrine religiose di V. Cousin (ib., 1840), Lettre sur les doctrines philosophiques et politiques de M. de Lamennais (ib., 1841), Del bello (Venice, 1841), Degli errori filosofici di Antonio Rosmini (3 vols., Brussels, 1841–4), Del buono (id., 1843), Del primato morale e civile degli Italiani (2 vols., ib., 1843), and Prolegomeni del primato (ib., 1845).

Among Gioberti's posthumous writings were Meditazioni filosofiche inedite di Vincenzo Gioberti (ed. E. Solmi, Florence, 1909), Epistolario (ed. G. *Gentile and G. Balsamo-Crivelli, 11 vols., Turin, 1927–37), and Cours de philosophie, 1841–42 (ed. G. Calò and M. Battistini, Milan, 1947). Anthology by G. Gentile entitled Nuova protologia (Bari, 1912). 'National Edition' of his complete works (unfinished) Milan, 1938–47. Gioberti has received much attention in Italy, esp. in the Fascist period; works on him by B. Spaventa (Naples, 1863), D. Berti (Florence, 1881), A. Anzilotti (Florence, 1922 and 1923), V. Piccolo (Rome, 1923), V. Padovani (Milan, 1927), S. Caramella (Genoa, 1927), F. Palhoriès (Paris, 1929), J. Rivieri (Genoa, 1931), A. Bruni (Turin, 1937), L. Stefanini (Milan, 1947), G. Bonafede (Palermo, 1950), and G. de Crescenzo (Brescia, 1964). L. Stefanini in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 414–22.

GIOVANNI CAPISTRANO, St. (1386–1456), *Franciscan friar. He was born at Capistrano in the Abruzzi and studied law at Perugia, where in 1412 he was made governor by King Ladislaus of Naples and married. Taken prisoner in a war with the family of the Malatestas, he experienced a vision of St. *Francis while in captivity, which fired him with a desire to enter religion. On his release he obtained a dispensation from the impediment of matrimony and in 1416 sought admission to the novitiate of the Friars Minor. He was professed in 1417, priested in 1420, and immediately undertook a series of missions throughout Italy. In 1429, with other *Observant Friars, he was charged at Rome with heretical teaching on the poverty of Christ but acquitted. He took part in the General Chapter of the Order which met at *Assisi in 1430 to secure the union of the Conventuals and the Observants, and assisted his old master, St. *Bernardino of Siena (d. 1444), in the reform of the order. On several occasions he was vicar-general of the order. In 1451 he was sent by Pope *Nicholas V to Austria in response to an appeal by the Emp. Frederick III for help against the *Hussites. His successful labours all over Eastern Europe were ended by the advance of the Turks after the capture of *Constantinople (1453). After failing to arouse Bavaria and Austria to the danger, he went to Hungary, where early in 1456 the Turks were preparing to attack Belgrade. Together with Hunyady he raised an army which completely defeated the Turks on 22 July, but died of plague on 23 Oct. of the same year. He was beatified in 1694, canonized in 1724; the feast was made of general observance in 1890, when it was transferred to 28 Mar.; in 1969 it was restored to 23 Oct.

The primary authorities, besides his own writings, are the contemporary lives by his companions in the order, viz. (arranged chronologically) Jerome of Utino, pr. in AA.SS., Oct. X (1861), pp. 483–91; Nicholas of Fara, pr. ib., pp. 439–83, with variant MS. of the preface ed. E. Hocedez, S.J., in Anal. Boll., xxiii (1904), pp. 320–4; Christopher of Varese, pr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 491–545; the Hungarian, Peter of Oedenburg (completed by 1489), publd. Vienna, 1523. Seven of his letters are pr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 546–52, with important introd. by J. van Hecke, S.J., pp. 269–439. Considerable material also in the works of L. *Wadding (q.v.). D. van Andrichem, O.F.M., 'Explicatio Primae Regulae S. Clarae auctore S. Joanne Capistranensi (1445)' in A.F.H., xxii (1929), pp. 336–57, 515–28, incl. text. J. Łuszczki, O.F.M., De Sermonibus S. Ioannis a Capistrano. Studium Historico-Criticum (Studia Antoniana, xvi; Rome, 1961). A. Hermann, Capistranus Triumphans (Cologne, 1700). Other modern lives by L. de Kerval (Bordeaux, 1887) and E. Jacob (2 vols., Breslau, 1903–5). J. Hofer, C.SS.R., Johannes von Capistrano (Innsbruck, [1936]; revised ed. by O. Bonmann, O.F.M., 2 vols., Heidelberg. 1964–5; Eng. tr., St. Louis. Mo., 1943; the best modern work). H. Lippens, O.F.M., 'S. Jean de Capistrano en mission aux états bourguignons, 1442–1443' in A.F.H., xxxv (1942), pp. 113–32 and 254–95, with docc. In English there is a brief life by Vincent Fitzgerald, O.F.M. (London, 1911). Édouard d'Alençon, O.F.M., in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1686–8, s.v. 'Capistran (Saint Jean de)'; O. Bonmann in Dict. Sp., viii ('1972'), cols. 316–23, s.v. 'Jean de Capestrano'.

GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS (c. 1147–1223), Gerald de Barri, historian. A native of Pembrokeshire, he studied at Paris and Oxford, and from 1175 to 1203 was Archdeacon of Brecon. He was elected Bp. of *St. Davids in 1176 and again in 1199, but on each occasion failed to obtain consecration to the see, as the English feared that a Welshman would seek to make his Church independent again of *Canterbury. After protracted negotiations at Rome, his election was cancelled by Pope *Innocent III in 1203. He filled, however, several other important offices, and in 1188 preached the Third *Crusade in Wales, on which he would have gone himself had not Henry II dissuaded him. Among his more important writings are 'Topographia Hibernica', 'Expugnatio Hibernica', 'Itinerarium Cambriae' and 'De iure Menevensis Ecclesiae'. They are amusing and vivid, though at times much influenced by personal and party feeling and their facts exaggerated.

Works ed. J. S. Brewer (R.S., 8 vols., 1861–91). Crit. ed. of De Invectionibus by W. S. Davies (Y Cymmrodor, xxx; 1920). Eng. tr. of Historical Works by T. Forester–R. C. Hoare–T. Wright (Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 1863); of his Autobiography by H. E. Butler (London, 1937), with introd. by C. H. Williams, pp. 9–21; of the first version of 'Topographia Hibernica' by J. J. O'Meara (Dundalk, 1951). H. Owen, Gerald the Welshman (1889; enlarged ed., 1904). F. M. Powicke, 'Gerald of Wales' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xii (1928), pp. 389–410, repr. in his Christian Life in the Middle Ages and other Essays (1935), pp. 107–29.

J. Conway Davies, 'Giraldus Cambrensis 1146–1946' in Archaeologia Cambrensis, xcix (1947), pp. 85–108 256–80. H. R. Luard in D.N.B., xxi (1890), pp. 389–93; B.R.U.O., i (1957), p. 117 f., s.v. 'Barri, Gerald de'.

GIRDLE (Lat. cingulum, Gk. ζώνη). As an article of liturgical attire, a normal accompaniment of the *alb, and hence one of the six Eucharistic vestments. It is held to typify sacerdotal chastity and, in ref. to Lk. 12. 35–8, spiritual watchfulness. In the E. Church its use is confined to bishops and priests, the deacon's alb being worn ungirdled.

Braun, L.G., pp. 101–17.

GLABRIO, MANIUS ACILIUS, consul in A.D. 91. Ordered by the Emp. *Domitian to fight with the wild beasts in the amphitheatre at Albano, he was banished after a successful contest, and finally executed with Flavius Clemens, Flavia *Domitilla, and others c. 96. It is probable that he was a Christian and there are some grounds for supposing that he was martyred for his creed.

The authorities are Dio Cassius, Hist., lxvii. 13 f., and *Suetonius, Domitianus, 10. The family grave of the Christians of the Gens Acilia, discovered by G. B. *de Rossi in 1888, is described by de Rossi, 'L'ipogeo degli Acilii Glabrioni nel cimitero di Priscilla', in Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, Ser. IV, vi (1888–9), pp. 15–66 and 103–33. See also H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (1924), cols. 1259–74, s.v.

GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART (1809–98), British statesman. Under the influence of his ardently Evangelical mother he early showed religious inclinations. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, but his desire to take holy orders was frustrated by his father, who had destined him for a political career, and he entered Parliament in 1832. Though he left Oxford before the beginning of the *Oxford Movement, he was brought into contact with it by his friends James Robert Hope[-Scott] (1812–73) and H. E. *Manning. His study of Richard *Hooker and other 16th- and 17th-cent. English divines and of the 'Occasional Offices' of the BCP convinced him of the soundness of the High Church doctrines, which he succeeded in combining with the tenets of his Evangelical education, and for the defence of which he frequently used his political position. In 1838 he published The State in its Relations with the Church, written from the point of view of the politician and in favour of the establishment of the Church, not without pungent criticisms of the RC position. In Church Principles considered in their Results (1840) he upheld the visibility of the Church, the certainty of the Apostolic Succession, and the efficacy of the Sacraments as well as the Divine institution of the C of E. In 1845 he resigned from Peel's Cabinet over the proposed grant to the RC college of *Maynooth, though he later defended the grant in the House of Commons. His High Church views led him to address an Open Letter to the Bp. of London (C. J. *Blomfield) after the *Gorham case, in which he maintained the compatibility of the royal supremacy with the intrinsic jurisdiction of the Church. In 1854 he supported Archdeacon G. A. *Denison, who was prosecuted for teaching the *Real Presence, a doctrine to which Gladstone was deeply attached. Owing to these convictions he was sometimes suspected of sympathy with the RC Church, which, however, he strongly repudiated, mainly on the ground that it was a régime of tyranny. He was much involved in the controversies of the Scottish Episcopal Church.

After having been several times Chancellor of the Exchequer he became in 1865 for the first time leader of the House of Commons, and in 1867 leader of the Liberal Party, which, though predominantly Anglican in leadership, drew strong support from Nonconformist votes. He was responsible for the law abolishing compulsory Church rates and fought the next election on the issue whether the Irish Church was to be disestablished. Having abandoned his earlier view, he defended disestablishment in his Chapter of Autobiography (1868) and carried it through as Prime Minister in 1869. In 1871 his government passed the *University Tests Act. In 1873 he brought in a bill proposing a combined Catholic and Protestant university for Ireland, which was defeated. In the next year he opposed Abp. A. C. *Tait's *Public Worship Bill in the interests of the liberty of the C of E, and in the same year published several bitter attacks on the Church of Rome, esp. on the *Vatican decrees, which were answered by J. H. *Newman and H. E. Manning. In 1896 he pleaded in a letter to Card. M. Rampolla for the recognition of *Anglican Ordinations. Though he kept close to Tractarian principles throughout his life, he defended the doctrine of *Conditional Immortality in his Studies Subsidiary to the Works of Bishop Butler (1896). Gladstone in his private life lived up to the tenets of his religion: he was a weekly communicant, lavish in almsgiving and frugal in his habits, esp. in matters of sleep and food. He was responsible for the founding of many new sees in the growing British Empire, and maintained his keen and sympathetic interest in all theological and ecclesiastical questions until his death. Much of his legislation was controversial, not least to Churchmen, but he was widely recognized as an outstanding example of a Victorian Christian statesman.

Diaries ed. M. R. D. Foot et al. (Oxford, 1968 ff.). Correspondence on Church and Religion of W. E. Gladstone, ed. by D. C. Lathbury (2 vols., 1910). Some of Gladstone's political correspondence has also been published. There is an important collection of Gladstone's theological articles in his Later Gleanings (1897). The extensive literature includes J. Morley, The Life of W. E. Gladstone (3 vols., 1903); G. W. E. Russell, W. E. Gladstone (1891); P. [M.] Magnus, Gladstone (1954). A. R. Vidler, The Orb and the Cross. A Normative Study in the Relations of Church and State with Reference to Gladstone's Early Writings (1945).

GLAGOLITIC. The ancient Slavonic alphabet, still used in the liturgical books of the *Uniats in Dalmatia, &c. It was devised by St. *Cyril, the Apostle of the Slavs, in the 9th cent. Other surviving literature in the alphabet includes translations of the Gospels and collections of Homilies. In modern Glagolitic *Missals (since 1927), only the *canon is printed in Glagolitic letters, the rest being in Latin type. See also Cyrillic.

L. Jelic (ed.), Fontes Historici Liturgiae Glagolito-Romanae a XIII ad XIX saeculum (Krk, 1906). S. Smržik, S.J., The Glagolitic or Roman-Slavonic Liturgy (Series Cyrillomethodiana, ii; Cleveland, Ohio–Rome, 1959).

GLANVILL, JOSEPH (1636–80), religious writer. Educated at Exeter and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford, he became rector of the Abbey Church, Bath, in 1666. Throughout his life he took a keen interest in natural phenomena, esp. in their bearing on religion, and he became one of the original members of the Royal Society. In several of his many treatises he endeavoured to prove that the evidence derived from the most varied physical phenomena lent support to religious belief. Like most of his scientific contemporaries, he was an ardent believer in the *Cartesian philosophy. In his Saducismus Triumphatus (1681) he defended belief in witchcraft. A passage in his Vanity of Dogmatizing (1661) suggested to Matthew *Arnold his poem 'The Scholar Gipsy'.

Facsimile repr. of the 1689 ed. of Saducismus Triumphatus with introd. by C. O. Parsons (Gainesville, Florida, 1966), and of Glanvill's Plus Ultra or The Progress and Advancement of Knowledge since the Days of Aristotle (1668) with introd. by J. I. Cope (ib., 1958). Life prefixed to Saducismus Triumphatus, ed. 4, 1726. F. Greenslet, Joseph Glanvill. A Study in English Thought and Letters (Columbia University Studies in English, i; 1900); J. I. Cope, Joseph Glanvill, Anglican Apologist (St. Louis, Mo., 1956), with bibl. J. *Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century, ii (1872), pp. 443–55; B. Willey, The Seventeenth Century Background (1934), ch. ix, pp. 170–204. H. S. and I. M. L. Redgrove, Joseph Glanvill and Psychical Research in the Seventeenth Century (1921). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxi (1890), p. 408 f.

GLASITES (also Sandemanians), a small Scottish sect named after John Glas (1695–1773) and his son-in-law, Robert Sandeman (1718–71). Their founder, John Glas, the son of the (*Presbyterian) minister at Auchtermuchty, Fife, was ordained in 1719 as minister of Tealing, near Dundee. Having come to doubt the Scriptural basis of the Presbyterian civil polity and holding that secular and political weapons were unlawful instruments of reformation and that a National Church was unscriptural, he gave public expression to his views in The Testimony of the King of Martyrs concerning His Kingdom (1727). He was accordingly suspended from his ministerial work in 1728 and deposed in 1730. His followers ('Glasites') organized communities on a *Congregational basis at Dundee, Edinburgh, and elsewhere. They introduced several peculiar customs, including the celebration of the *Agape with broth.

Gradually the leadership of the movement passed into the hands of his son-in-law, then minister at Perth. Sandeman, whose name was soon applied to the whole body, laid great stress on the sole sufficiency of faith (which provoked a charge of antinomianism) and also adopted a number of unusual practices and rites (e.g. the custom of members washing one another's feet). His successors never had more than a small following, but here and there communities were established outside Scotland, and for a time Michael Faraday, the physicist and natural philosopher, was a member of the London Sandemanians.

The Works of Glas, who was a man of considerable erudition, were published at Edinburgh (4 vols., 1761) and again at Perth (5 vols., 1872). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxi (1890), p. 417 f. and (1897), p. 255 f.

GLASTONBURY ABBEY. Probably the oldest and one of the most influential of English monasteries. Orig. a *Celtic foundation believed to date from the 7th cent., it was turned into a Saxon monastery by King Ina c. 708. It was destroyed in the 9th cent. by the Danes. Later it seems to have been served by a small group of clerks until, c. 940, King *Edmund made St. *Dunstan its abbot. From his time dates the great revival of the monastery, which was organized acc. to the *Benedictine Rule, and which became one of the main educational and religious centres in the country. About 970 it adopted the '*Regularis Concordia', designed to unify English monastic life. It continued to flourish under the Normans, and became a famous place of pilgrimage, owing to the tombs of King Arthur and St. Dunstan, which it was believed to contain. About 1135 *William of Malmesbury wrote its history, 'De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesiae': in a version of this revised in the mid 13th cent. are recorded the legends which associate it with *Joseph of Arimathaea (q.v.), King Arthur, and St. *Patrick. Under Richard I a long drawn-out dispute arose between the abbey and the Bp. of *Bath and Wells, who claimed its revenues. It was eventually settled by the Pope in favour of the monks. The monastery was suppressed in 1539 and its last abbot, Bl. Richard Whiting, executed. Since 1908 the ruins have been the property of Diocesan Trustees; adjoining is an Anglican Retreat House.

Around the 'Glastonbury Thorn', a kind of Levantine hawthorn which flowered twice a year, about Christmas and in May, several legends collected. It was cut down by one of O. *Cromwell's soldiers, but descendants of it remain to the present day.

A. Watkin, O.S.B. (ed.), The Great Cartulary of Glastonbury (Somersetshire Record Society, lix, lxiii, and lxiv; 1947–56). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 1–79. R. Willis, The Architectural History of Glastonbury Abbey (Cambridge, 1866). J. Parker, 'Glastonbury: the Abbey Ruins' in Somersetshire Archaeological and Natural History Society, xxvi (1881), pp. 25–106; the excavations under the direction of C. R. Peers–A. W. Clapham–E. Horne, O.S.B., begun in 1929, are reported ib., lxxv (1930), and foll. vols. W. Newell, 'William of Malmesbury and the Antiquities of Glastonbury' in Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, xviii (1903), pp. 459–512. J. A. *Robinson, Two Glastonbury Legends. King Arthur and St. Joseph of Arimathea (1926); G. Ashe, King Arthur's Avalon. The Story of Glastonbury (1957); R. F. Treharne, The Glastonbury Legends. Joseph of Arimathea, The Holy Grail and King Arthur (1967).

GLEBE. In English and Scots ecclesiastical law, the land devoted to the maintenance of the incumbent of the parish. Every church was at first entitled to a house and glebe, but the term now excludes the parsonage house and the land on which it is built. It can be cultivated either by the incumbent himself or by tenants to whom he leases it; and recent legislation permits of its being alienated altogether from the benefice in certain circumstances. By an Act of 1925, all the glebe in Scotland will ultimately be vested in the General Trustees of the Church.

GLORIA IN EXCELSIS. The initial words in Latin, and hence the common designation, of the hymn 'Glory be to God on high', &c. It is also known as the 'Greater *Doxology' and the 'Angelic Hymn'. A Greek Christian 'private psalm', i.e. a hymn composed upon the model of the canonical Psalms, its authorship and age are alike unknown. In the 4th cent. it formed part of morning prayers, and is still recited in the Byzantine *Orthros. In the Roman Mass it is sung after the *Kyries on Sundays (except those of *Advent and *Lent) and on certain feast days, a usage the beginning of which appears in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. In the English BCP of 1549 the hymn followed the Kyries as in the Roman Mass. In later editions of the BCP it was moved to the conclusion of the service, where it immediately precedes the Blessing. The ASB provides for it to be used in either position. The American Prayer Book of 1928 used to allow its use at the end of the Psalms for the day in Evening Prayer.

C. Blume, 'Der Engelhymnus Gloria In Excelsis Deo' in Stimmen aus Maria Laach, lxxiii (1907), pp. 43–62; A. *Baumstark, 'Die Textüberlieferung des Hymnus Angelicus', in Hundert Jahre Marcus-und-Weber Verlag (Bonn, 1909), pp. 83–7; J. Brinktrine, 'Zur Entstehung und Erklärung des Gloria in Excelsis' in R.Q., xxxv (1927), pp. 303–15; B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Texte du Gloria in excelsis' in R.H.E., xliv (1949), pp. 439–57; repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (1962), pp. 176–91. Jungmann, i (1958), pp. 446–61; Eng. tr., i, pp. 346–59.

GLORIA PATRI. The first words of the Lesser *Doxology ('Glory be to the Father', &c.), an ascription of praise to the Holy Trinity. It probably originated as an adaptation of the Jewish 'blessings' addressed to God, early Christian examples being Rom. 16. 27, Phil. 4. 20, Rev. 5. 13, but its form was no doubt influenced by the Trinitarian Baptismal formula of Mt. 28. 19. The use of the Gloria Patri at the end of Psalms dates from the 4th cent., and it is found quite early in metrical form at the end of hymns in the Offices. Until recent times it was omitted in *Requiem Masses and in the Office for the Dead, at Mass during the last two weeks of Lent and in the Psalms of the Office on the last three days of Holy Week, but it is now retained on all these occasions. The English Puritans forbade its use as unscriptural, but it was restored with the BCP at the Restoration.

H. Thurston, S.J., 'Notes on Familiar Prayers: ix, The "Gloria Patri"' in The Month, cxxxi (1918), pp. 406–17; repr. in Thurston's Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), pp. 178–92. J. A. Jungmann, S.J., 'Die Stellung Christi im liturgischen Gebet' in Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, Hft. 7/8 (1925), pp. 151–77. Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, p. 423 f.; Eng. tr., i, p. 328 f.

GLORIOUS MYSTERIES, The Five. The third *chaplet of the *Rosary (q.v.), consisting of (1) the Resurrection; (2) the Ascension; (3) the Descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost; (4) the *Assumption of the BVM; and (5) the *Coronation of the BVM.

GLOS(S)A ORDINARIA, the standard medieval commentary on the Bible, also known as the glos(s)a communis. It was drawn up chiefly from extracts from the Fathers, and was arranged in the form of marginal and interlinear glosses. Its history has until recently been obscured because it was believed that the marginal gloss was the work of *Walafrid Strabo, and the interlinear gloss the work of *Anselm of Laon. In fact one is never found without the other, and the same compiler was responsible for both. Its composition was begun in the school of Anselm of Laon. Anselm was responsible for the Gloss on the Psalter, the Pauline Epistles, and on the Gospel of St. John, his brother Ralph for the Gloss on the Gospel of St. Matthew. Gilbert the Universal, who taught at Auxerre before becoming Bp. of London (1128–34), was responsible for the Pentateuch and prob. Joshua, Judges and the four Books of Kings, and also the Great Prophets and Lamentations. The compilers of the Gloss on the other books are either uncertain or unknown, but the whole Bible was covered by c. the middle of the 12th cent. The history of the Gloss varies from book to book. For example, the Gloss on the Pauline Epistles has a long and complicated pre-history. The Gloss on the Acts of the Apostles is almost entirely compiled from *Rabanus Maurus and *Bede.

The term is also used of the standard commentaries on the *canon law texts.

The edition in J. P. Migne, PL, cxiii–cxiv includes only the marginal gloss. The text pr. with the works of *Nicholas of Lyra is complete, but is to some extent interpolated with later additions. S. Berger, Histoire de la Vulgate pendant les premiers siècles du moyen-âge (1893), pp. 132–6; Beryl Smalley, 'Gilbertus Universalis, Bishop of London (1128–34) and the Problem of the "Glossa Ordinaria" ' in R.T.A.M., vii (1935), pp. 235–62; viii (1936), pp. 24–60; id., 'La Glossa Ordinaria. Quelques prédécesseurs d'Anselme de Laon', ib., ix (1937), pp. 365–400; J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Le Mouvement théologique du XIIe siècle (ed. 2, Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, x; 1948), pp. 104–12; Beryl Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (ed. 2, Oxford, 1952), pp. 46–66. Id., 'Les Commentaires bibliques et l'époque romane: glosse ordinaire et glosses périmées' in Cahiers de civilisation médiévale, iv (1961), pp. 15–22; R. Wasselynck, 'L'Influence de l'exégèse de S. Grégoire le Grand sur les commentaires bibliques médiévaux (VIIe–XIIe s.)' in R.T.A.M., xxxii (1965), pp. 157–204, esp. pp. 183–92.

On the canon law gloss, H. Kantorowicz in B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (ed. 2, Oxford, 1952), p. 55 f., with refl.

GLOSSOLALIA (Gk. γλῶσσα, 'tongue', and λαλιά, 'talking'). The faculty of speaking with 'tongues'. It was a common phenomenon in NT times. Thus Acts 2. 4 records how on the Day of *Pentecost the Apostles 'were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance'; and St. *Paul attests that the custom was widespread at *Corinth, though here the inability of those possessing the faculty to disclose their meaning led him to regard it with suspicion and to contrast it with 'prophecy' (1 Cor. 14. 1 ff.). Similar phenomena are constantly met with in religious revivals. In all cases their healthiness or otherwise is best judged by their effect on the character and moral resolution of the person under possession. The word 'Glossolalia' appears to be a 19th cent. coinage, without ancient authority.

GLOUCESTER. Until 1541, Gloucester was in the diocese of *Worcester. The abbey-church of St. *Peter, the present cathedral, is on the site of an earlier religious house, established in 681 and converted into a college of secular priests in 823. This college, refounded by *Wulfstan, Abp. of York, in 1022 as a Benedictine monastery, was rebuilt in 1059 by Aldred, Bp. of Worcester. In 1088 Aldred's buildings were destroyed and in 1089 Serlo, the first Norman Abbot (1072–1104), began the present church. This Norman structure was constantly added to and embellished in the Middle Ages. Specially notable are the early Perpendicular panelling superimposed on the Norman pillars in the choir (begun after 1337); the great East window, a war memorial to Gloucester knights slain at Crécy (1346) and the siege of Calais (1347); the magnificent cloisters with the earliest example of fan tracery (before 1377); and the remarkably fine central tower (mid-15th cent.). In the N. ambulatory is the tomb of Edward II, whose body was brought here after his murder at Berkeley Castle, 21 Sept. 1327; it became an important place of pilgrimage for a time and the wealth of the abbey greatly increased. The most notable person connected with the abbey was Gilbert *Foliot (Abbot 1139–48).

In 1540 the monastery was suppressed and in 1541 John Wakeman, the last Abbot of *Tewkesbury became the first Bishop of the newly founded see of Gloucester. The diocese covered most of Gloucestershire, with parts of Herefordshire and Worcestershire. In 1836 it was united with the see of Bristol, but separated again in 1897. From 1713 to 1937 one of the canonries was attached to the Mastership of Pembroke College, Oxford. Notable Bps. of Gloucester have been J. *Hooper (1551–5), burnt in St. Mary's Square outside the Abbey gates; R. Frampton (1681–91), *Nonjuror, who just missed joining the *Seven Bishops; W. *Warburton (1760–79); C. J. *Ellicott (1863–1905); E. C. S. Gibson (1905–22), who published notable works on the *Thirty-Nine Articles and the *Creeds; and A. C. Headlam (1923–45). Deans have included W. *Laud (1616–21) and the economist Josiah Tucker (1758–99). Every third year the Three Choirs Festival is held at Gloucester.

W. H. Hart (ed.), Historia et Cartularium Monasterii Sancti Petri Gloucestriae (3 vols., R.S., 1863–7). H. P. R. Finberg, The Early Charters of the West Midlands (Leicester, 1961), pp. 153–166. H. G[ee] (ed.), The Statues of Gloucester Cathedral (1918). 'The Records of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester' are described by W. H. Stevenson in the Twelfth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix, Part ix (1891), pp. 397–9. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Man, Lichfield, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester and Bristol, ii (1727), pp. 691–757. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1817), pp. 531–66. W. H. St. J. Hope, 'Notes on the Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester' in The Archaeological Journal, liv (1897), pp. 77–119. Rose Graham, 'The Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester' in V.C.H., Gloucester, ii, ed. W. Page (1907), pp. 53–61. E. Foord, Gloucester, Tewkesbury and District (Cathedrals, Abbeys and Famous Churches; 1925), pp. 25–88. D. Verey, Gloucestershire: The Vale and Forest of Dean (The Buildings of England, ed. N. Pevsner, 1970), pp. 198–226. C. W. C. Oman in D.E.C.H., pp. 244–7, s.v.

GLOVES, Liturgical (Lat. chirothecae). In the W. Church, the privilege of wearing liturgical gloves ordinarily belonged to the Pope, the cardinals, and the bishops, though it has sometimes been conferred on abbots and others by the Holy See. They may be worn during a *Pontifical Mass, though since 1968 they have ceased to be obligatory. They used to follow the liturgical colour of the day, and may still do so, or may be white. Apparently first used in France at about the end of the 9th cent., they made their way thence to Rome a little later. In the E. Church the Epimanikia (ἐπιμανίκια), or liturgical cuffs, are their counterpart.

X. Barbier de Montault. Les Gants pontificaux (Tours, 1877). Braun, L.G., pp. 359–84; Braun, L.P., pp. 154–7.

GNOSTICISM. The name, derived from the Greek word γνῶσις ('knowledge'), given to a complex religious movement which in its Christian form comes into clear prominence in the 2nd cent. It is now generally held that Christian Gnosticism had its origins in trends of thought already present in pagan religious circles. In Christianity, the movement appeared at first as a school (or schools) of thought within the Church; it soon established itself in all the principal centres of Christianity; and by the end of the 2nd cent. the Gnostics had mostly become separate sects. In some of the later books of the NT, e.g. 1 John and the *Pastoral Epistles, forms of false teaching are denounced which appear to be similar to, though less developed than, the Gnostic systems of teaching referred to by 2nd cent. writers.

Gnosticism took many different forms, commonly associated with the names of particular teachers, e.g. *Valentinus, *Basilides, and *Marcion (qq.v.). But though Marcion and his community stand somewhat apart, certain features are common to the movement as a whole. A central importance was attached to 'gnosis', the supposedly revealed knowledge of God and of the origin and destiny of mankind, by means of which the spiritual element in man could receive redemption. The source of this special 'gnosis' was held to be either the Apostles, from whom it was derived by a secret tradition, or a direct revelation given to the founder of the sect. The systems of teaching range from those which embody much genuine philosophical speculation to those which are wild amalgams of mythology and magical rites drawn from all quarters, with the most slender admixture of Christian elements. The OT Books and many of the NT Books were used and expounded by the greater sects, and a central place was assigned to the figure of Jesus, but on a number of fundamental points the interpretation of these Christian features differed widely from that of orthodox Christianity.

Characteristic of Gnostic teaching was the distinction between the *Demiurge or 'creator god' and the supreme remote and unknowable Divine Being. From the latter the Demiurge was derived by a longer or shorter series of emanations or 'aeons'. He it was who, through some mischance or fall among the higher aeons, was the immediate source of creation and ruled the world, which was therefore imperfect and antagonistic to what was truly spiritual. But into the constitution of some men there had entered a seed or spark of Divine spiritual substance, and through 'gnosis' and the rites associated with it this spiritual element might be rescued from its evil material environment and assured of a return to its home in the Divine Being. Such men were designated the 'spiritual' (πνευματικοί), while others were merely 'fleshly' or 'material' (σαρκικοί or ὑλικοί), though some Gnostics added a third intermediate class, the 'psychic' (ψυχικοί). The function of Christ was to come as the emissary of the supreme God, bringing 'gnosis'. As a Divine Being He neither assumed a properly human body nor died, but either temporarily inhabited a human being, Jesus, or assumed a merely phantasmal human appearance.

The principal anti-Gnostic writers, such as *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, and *Hippolytus, emphasized the pagan features of Gnosticism, and appealed to the plain sense of the Scriptures as interpreted by the tradition of the Church, which had been publicly handed down by a chain of teachers reaching back to the Apostles. They insisted on the identity of the Creator and the supreme God, on the goodness of the material creation, and on the reality of the earthly life of Jesus, esp. of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. Man needed redemption from an evil will rather than an evil environment. These writers' excerpts and descriptions of the Gnostic systems were until recently our main source of information.

The study of Gnosticism entered a new phase, however, with the discovery of a large collection of *Coptic texts near *Nag Hammadi (Chenoboskion) in Upper Egypt in 1945–6. It comprised over 40 separate treatises, of which only two were previously known, apparently most if not all translated from the Greek. The writings vary widely in date and style; some are thought to date from the second cent. or even earlier, though the actual copies are not earlier than the 4th cent. Some of them are akin to the *Hermetic books, but most are at least superficially Christian, and display Gnostic features in very varying degrees; thus the Apocryphon of John, found in three copies, contains much bizarre and fanciful mythology, but one or two works, e.g. the so-called Gospel of Truth (see Evangelium Veritatis) and the treatise On the Resurrection, are not notably unorthodox. One text which has attracted special attention is the Coptic Gospel of *Thomas. At least one, an Apocalypse of Adam, shows no distinctly Christian features and may conceivably be pre-Christian.

The discovery promises to throw fresh light on the origins of Gnosticism, though many details are still unclear. It has generally been thought that while some of the important ideas used by the Gnostics, e.g. the light-symbolism and the religious use of the word 'gnosis' itself, are pre-Christian, the sects themselves and their elaborate mythologies are not; though some German scholars, such as R. *Reitzenstein, W. *Bousset and R. *Bultmann, have strongly supported the conception of pre-Christian Gnosticism. It is at least clear that pre-Christian Jewish sects provided a fertile soil for Gnostic ideas. The Jews had developed a tradition of speculative interpretation of the OT (see Midrash) which gave rise to a large extra-canonical literature which was influenced by Iranian religious thought (see Zoroastrianism). On the other hand Greek-speaking Jews such as *Philo attempted to explain their faith in terms of Greek philosophy; Egyptian religious writers of the Hermetic school borrowed both from the Greeks and from the Book of Genesis (e.g. in the Poimandres), and cultivated Greeks such as Plutarch discussed philosophical adaptations of the Egyptian myth of Isis. Finally, specifically Christian themes were introduced into this amalgam of ideas, whether as a dominant force or as a mere superficial decoration. The Nag Hammadi texts probably show all these influences, though that of philosophy is less evident than in already known Valentinian texts.

Gnosticism in various forms persisted for several centuries. The sect of the *Manichees, founded by Mani the Persian in the 3rd cent., spread as far as Turkestan and survived there until the 13th cent.; meanwhile the possibly related sects of the *Albigenses and *Cathari had appeared in France, Germany and Italy. One sect of Gnostics, the *Mandaeans, has survived in Mesopotamia until the present day. See also Docetism.

Much information on Gnostic doctrines and practices may be gathered from the anti-heretical writings of the Christian Fathers, notably Irenaeus, Adversus Haereses, *Clement of Alexandria, Excerpta ex Theodoto, Tertullian, Adversus Marcionem, etc., Hippolytus, Refutatio Omnium Haeresium, and *Epiphanius, Panarion. See also the criticisms of *Plotinus, Enneads, ii. 9. A useful selection of Gk. texts, including many fragments of Gnostic writings, is W. Völker, Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (Tübingen, 1932). The Ep. of Ptolemy to Flora was re-edited by G. Quispel (S.C., xxiv; 1949; ed. 2, 1966).

Coptic Gnostic texts known before 1946 are contained in the Askew Codex (see Pistis Sophia), the Bruce Codex (ed. C. Schmidt, T.U., viii, Hftt. 1–2, 1892; see also W. Till (ed.), Koptisch-gnostische Schriften, i, 1954, and Charlotte A. Baynes (ed.), A Coptic Gnostic Treatise (Cambridge, 1933), incl. Eng. tr.), and the Berlin Codex 8502 (ed. W. Till, T.U. lx; 1955; partial Eng. tr. in R. M. Grant, Gnosticism. An Anthology (1961), pp. 65–85).

The best introductory collection of texts in English is R. M. Grant, op. cit. Larger collections are Die Gnosis, ed. R. Haardt (Salzburg, 1967; Eng. tr., Leiden, 1971) and Die Gnosis, ed. W. Förster (2 vols., Zürich, 1969–71; Eng. tr., ed. R. McL. Wilson, 2 vols., Oxford, 1972–4).

Some older studies of Gnosticism are still valuable, including F. C. *Baur, Die christliche Gnosis oder die christliche Religionsphilosophie in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Tübingen, 1835); R. A. *Lipsius, Die Quellen der ältesten Ketzergeschichte neu untersucht (Leipzig, 1875; on the literary relations between the early anti-Gnostic writers); A. *Hilgenfeld, Die Ketzergeschichte des Urchristenthums, urkundlich dargestellt (ib., 1884; with text of chief fragments); W. Bousset, Hauptprobleme der Gnosis (Göttingen, 1907); E. de Faye, Gnostiques et gnosticisme (1913; ed. 2, 1925). The nearest approach to a comprehensive survey is H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist (Göttingen, 1934 ff.; with supplement, 1964–6). See also id., The Gnostic Religion (Boston, 1958; ed. 2, 1963); R. P. Casey, 'The Study of Gnosticism' in J.T.S., xxxvi (1935), pp. 45–60; G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (Hilda Stick Stroock Lectures for 1938; Jerusalem, 1941); H. J. Schoeps, Theologie und Geschichte des Judenchristentums (Tübingen, 1949); id., Urgemeinde—Judenchristentum—Gnosis (ib., 1956); G. Quispel, Gnosis als Weltreligion (Zürich, 1951); J. Doresse, Les Livres secrets des gnostiques d'Égypte, i (1958; Eng. tr., 1960); R. McL. Wilson, The Gnostic Problem (1958); id., Gnosis and the New Testament (Oxford, 1968); R. M. Grant, Gnosticism and Early Christianity (New York, 1959; ed. 2, 1966); E. Peterson, Frühkirche, Judentum und Gnosis (1959); U. Bianchi (ed.), Le origini dello gnosticismo (Studies in the History of Religions, xii; Leiden, 1967); W. Eltester (ed.), Christentum und Gnosis (Beiheft zur Z.N.T.W., xxxvii; 1969).

For the Nag-Hammadi texts, see J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag-Hammadi Library in English (Leiden, 1977). The numeration of the codices is that of M. Krause; those of J. Doresse and H. C. Puech stand second and third in the following list, which refers to editions of separate treatises and uses the editors' titles:

Codex I (XIII; II), the Jung Codex: (1) 'Prayer of the Apostle Paul' (formerly put last); (2) Epistula Iacobi Apocrypha, ed. M. Malinine et al. (Zürich–Stuttgart, 1968); (3) Evangelium Veritatis*, q.v.; (4) De Resurrectione, same edd. (Zürich, 1963); The Epistle to Rheginus, Eng. tr. M. L. Peel (London, 1969); (5) Tractatus Tripartitus, ed. R. Kasser et al. (2 vols., Bern, 1973–5).

Codex II (X; III): (1) Apocryphon Johannis, longer version (=IV, 1), ed. M. Krause and P. Labib (Wiesbaden, 1962); ed. S. Giversen (Copenhagen, 1963); (2) The (Coptic) Gospel of Thomas, q.v.; (3) The *Gospel of Philip, q.v.; (4) 'The Hypostasis of the Archons', ed. R. A. Bullard (Berlin, 1970); (5) 'Anonymous Revelation', ed. A. Böhlig and P. Labib (Berlin, 1962); (6) 'The Exegesis on the Soul', and (7) 'The Book of Thomas the Athlete', ed. M. Krause and P. Labib, with Codex VI (Glückstadt, 1971).

Codex III (I; I): (1) Apocryphon Johannis, shorter version (=Berlin Codex 8502, 19–77; see above), ed. M. Krause and P. Labib (Wiesbaden, 1962); (2) 'The Egyptian Gospel' (=IV, 2), ed. A. Böhlig and F. Wisse (Leiden, 1975); (3) 'Letter of Eugnostos' (=V, 1), ed. M. Krause, forthcoming; (4) 'The Sophia of Jesus Christ' (related to III, 3; =Berlin Codex 8502, 77–end, see above); (5) 'The Dialogue of the Saviour'.

Codex IV (II; VIII): (1) See II, 1; (2) See III, 2, above.

Codex V (III; VII): (1) See III, 3; (2–5) 'Apocalypse of Paul', two 'Apocalypses of James', 'Apocalypse of Adam', ed. A. Böhlig and P. Labib (Halle–Wittenberg, 1963).

Codex VI (VI; XI): Eight treatises, including (1) 'The Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles', see under II, 6 and 7.

Codex VII (VII; V): (1) 'The Paraphrase of Sēem'; (2) 'Second Treatise of the Great Seth'; (3) 'Apocalypse of Peter'; (4) 'The Teachings of Silvanus'; (5) 'The Three Pillars of Seth'.

Codex VIII (IV; IX): (1) 'Words of Truth of Zostrianos'; (2) 'The Letter of Peter to Philip'.

Codex IX (V; X): (1) 'Melchisedek'; (2) 'The Thought of Norea'; (3) 'The Testimony of Truth'.

Codex X (XII; XII): 'Marsanes'.

Codex XI (VIII; VI): (1) 'The Interpretation of Gnosis'; (2) A Valentinian Exposition, with liturgical texts; (3) 'Allogenes' ('The Stranger'); (4) 'Hypsiphrone' ('The Heavenly Minded').

Codex XII (XI; XIII): (1) 'The Sentences of Sextus'; (2) = I. 3; (3) fragments.

Codex XIII (IX; IV): (1) 'The Trimorphic Protennoia'; (2) = II, 5.

The Facsimile edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices (Leiden, 1972 ff.). D. M. Scholer, Nag Hammadi Bibliography, 1948–1969 (ib., 1971); annual supplements in Novum Testamentum, 1971 ff.

GOAR, JACQUES (1601–54), French liturgiologist. He was a native of Paris, and after studying Greek and Latin entered the *Dominican Order in 1619. Having been lecturer at the convent at Toul, he went to Greece in 1631 as prior of the convent of St. Sebastian in Chios in order to perfect himself in the language and to study the rites of the Greek Church. In 1637 he went to Rome as prior of San Sisto, and in 1644 settled at Paris, where he brought out a series of works, the most important being his celebrated Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; ed. 2, much improved, Venice, 1730). It contains the rites of the Greek Liturgy, Offices, Sacramentaries, &c., based on MSS. as well as on printed sources, and gives Latin translations and valuable notes. It is still the classic work for Greek liturgical studies, and has served as a basis for all subsequent research on the subject. Among his other works are editions of the Compendium Historiarum of George Cedrenus (1647), the De Officiis Magnae Ecclesiae of the so-called Codinus Curopalata (1648), and of the Chronographia of George Monachus and the Patr. Tarasius (1652).

Quétif-Échard, ii, pp. 574 f. A. Strittmatter, O.S.B., 'The "Barberinum S. Marci" of Jacques Goar' in E.L., xlvii (1933), pp. 329–67. R. Coulon, O.P., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1467–9.

GOD. The Greek word for God (θεός) is used both as a common noun, e.g. in polytheism, where a number of supposed existences claim belief, worship, and service, and as a proper name, e.g. in monotheism, where there is and can be but one such existence. As contrasted with Jewish and Moslem monotheism which tend to separate God completely from the world (*deism), Christian monotheism combines God's presence and activity in the world (*immanence) with His eternal and infinite reality beyond the world of time and space (transcendence). Christianity also affirms that God is a trinity in unity, a 'Tri-unity', consisting of 'three persons in one substance', the Father being the Source of all existence, the Son the Eternal Object of the Father's love and the Mediator of that love in creation and redemption, and the Holy Ghost (the Spirit of God) the Bond of Union between Father and Son.

In the OT revelation to *Moses on Sinai (Ex. 3. 2–15 and 6. 2–8) God makes Himself known in the Divine name '*Yahweh' ('I am who I am') as the unique God (Ex. 20. 3, 5), who tolerates no rival and is alone Lord of the earth (Ex. 9. 29), omnipotent and holy (Ex. 15. 3–15), merciful and faithful to His word (Ex. 34. 6 f.) and demanding obedience to His commandments (Ex. 20. 1–17). This exalted conception of the Creator-God came to be affirmed by all the greatest religious leaders of Israel. The prophets esp. developed the different aspects of God acc. to their character and special mission. *Amos preached the righteousness of God, limited by no national barriers, while *Hosea was the first to proclaim His fatherhood in regard to Israel and His gentleness which desires 'mercy, not sacrifice' (Hos. 6. 6). *Isaiah, and later *Ezekiel, exalt His incomparable holiness and transcendence, a conception which finally triumphed in the Exile. With *Jonah the idea of God as the saviour of Gentiles as well as Jews makes its first appearance. This universality is esp. reflected in some of the Psalms, in which Book all the strands of Jewish monotheistic piety are gathered. Yet the full development of the revelation of the One God could not be completely achieved while in popular Jewish teaching He remained pre-eminently the God of a single nation, whose chief function it was to fulfil the earthly hope of temporal blessings.

It was to make patent the fullness of truth about God that (acc. to Christian belief) a new revelation was given. This was made through the Incarnate Son, who revealed God as the Father of all men, whose infinite goodness has no need to manifest itself in material recompenses. It was in the light of this new knowledge that St. John conceived God as light, life, and love; but no epitome can convey the richness and extent of the several aspects of the revelation contained in the NT. Above all, it was a revelation of God through the facts of history. Certain events of an historic order were perceived to possess a unique status and significance for those to whom the truth was committed. There resulted a conception of God which, while safeguarding the legitimacy of natural theology (cf. Rom. 1. 18 ff.) within certain limits, recognized His character as sui generis.

In the Patristic age three principal factors determined the development of the doctrine of God: (1) the data of Scripture, (2) the controversies with pagans, Jews, and heretics, and (3) the Greek philosophy which was the foundation of the education of most of the Fathers. Whereas the *Apostolic Fathers confined themselves to the Scriptural teaching, the exigencies of controversy led the *Apologists of the 2nd and 3rd cents. to a greater preoccupation with reason and philosophy. Thus St. *Justin Martyr, who was much influenced by *Platonist teaching, stressed the ineffability, omnipotence and impassibility of God. This attitude was shared by *Tatian and many others, whereas *Athenagoras and *Theophilus elaborated His simplicity, indivisibility and universal providence. St. *Irenaeus developed his doctrine esp. against the *Gnostics, to whose dualism and emanationism he opposed the absolute self-sufficiency and perfection of God. The theology of the early Alexandrian Fathers, *Clement and *Origen, is characterized by their vigorous affirmation of the Divine transcendence, incomprehensibility, and ineffability. Despite this emphasis, however, they upheld the natural knowability of God through creation. This is also stressed by *Tertullian, who adds to it the testimony of the human soul and deduces from the conception of God as the First Cause His possession of all perfections. Thus by the time of *Nicaea (325) the great lines of Christian thought were fixed, and such Divine attributes as eternity, immutability, omniscience, and omnipotence had become the undisputed belief of all Christians.

The doctrine of the pre-Nicene age was deepened by the great speculative theologians of Alexandria, esp. St. *Athanasius, St. *Didymus, and St. *Cyril. They insist that God, though incomprehensible in His inner Being, can be known through the human soul, made in His image, and through the visible creation. St. *Cyril of Jerusalem deals with the subject implicitly in his 'Catecheses', esp. with the unity, sovereign dominion, and creative action of God. The *Cappadocians were led to an explicit examination of the Divine nature and our knowledge of it in their call to reply to *Eunomius, who had asserted that the full Being of God is adequately expressed by the word 'Unoriginate' (ἀγέννητος), to which all other designations can be reduced. Against him St. *Gregory of Nazianzus maintained that negative attributes are not enough, and that such positive names as love, wisdom, justice, &c., should be added, the most suitable, however, being God and Being.

The speculations of the Fathers were gathered up into a powerful synthesis in the various works of St. *Augustine. He gives several proofs for the existence of God, e.g. from contingency, from the order and beauty of the world, from the eternal principles of human reason, and the moral argument from conscience. These proofs, however, were not yet elaborated with the systematic methods of the Middle Ages. The influence of Plato shows itself in Augustine's idea of God as the First Principle, cause of all truth and of all goodness. Though God is above all human thought and language, He is not abstract and indeterminate being, but concrete and actual, 'above whom, outside whom, and without whom nothing exists' (Soliloq., I. i. 4). In his theology the three ways of conceiving God—by affirmation, negation, and eminence—are combined. Thus, while His goodness (way of affirmation) is asserted, He may also be called 'not good', i.e. not good in the way a man is called good (way of negation), and 'super-good', i.e. above all human ideas of goodness (way of eminence). These last two methods of conceiving the Divine Being were esp. favoured by the Greek theologian *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite in his treatises 'De Divinis Nominibus' and 'De Mystica Theologia'. Though stressing the Divine transcendence more than any other Father, he avoids agnosticism by recognizing that man may elevate himself to the Supreme Being by considering Him as the cause of all creatures. This Cause, however, is so infinitely superior to all created things that it is more fitting to the Divine Majesty to deny Him all the perfections predicated to creatures than to affirm them of Him, unless by way of eminence. This latter leads the author to a whole series of almost untranslatable superlatives such as 'super-essential', 'essential super-goodness', &c.

The ideas of Dionysius were taken over, with some modifications, by his translator John Scotus *Erigena. Acc. to Erigena God is known by reason as the cause of things, but not as what He is. A higher knowledge of Him is possible by contemplation, but even here and in the *Beatific Vision He is not seen Himself but only through theophanies, which He produces in the angels and the elect; all affirmations of Scripture and the Fathers are but metaphors devised for the ignorant. This fundamental agnosticism led to reiterated condemnations of his doctrine; but the stress he laid on philosophy constitutes a link between the Patristic age and the Scholasticism that was to follow.

One of the principal concerns of the Schoolmen was to investigate the Divine Nature by the method of rational proof, without direct appeal to revelation. St. *Anselm of Canterbury was the author of the *Ontological Argument (q.v.) for His Being. Under the influence of the newly discovered *Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas introduced some radical changes and developments. He rejected the Ontological Argument; but on the principle that only something itself in the state of 'act' can move anything from the state of 'potentiality' to the state of 'act', he elaborated his famous fivefold proof for the existence of God (Quinque Viae). Starting with creation, he argued from its visible effects to the conception of God as the First Immovable Mover, the First Efficient Cause, the necessary Being, the most perfect Being, and the Ordainer of the universe. He endeavoured to hold the balance between an anthropomorphic conception of God and an exaggerated transcendence. In God, as self-subsistent Being, essence was identical with existence, and as 'Actus purus' without any admixture of potentiality He was Himself all perfections. Though St. Thomas was not immediately followed in his rejection of the Ontological Argument, which continued to be upheld by theologians of the *Franciscan school, e.g. St. *Bonaventure and *Duns Scotus, his doctrine of God became the officially accepted basis of the teaching of *Tridentine Catholic theology.

The shattering personal experiences of the Reformers were reflected in their intensely personal conceptions of God. M. *Luther directed a fierce tirade against the speculative theology of the Schools. J. *Calvin esp. emphasized the Divine Majesty and transcendence. And even in Catholic quarters the *Nominalism of the late Middle Ages contributed to the disintegration of the Thomistic synthesis. One of the first Christian thinkers to abandon belief in a knowable God, distinct from the world, had been *Nicholas of Cusa (d. 1464), who maintained that God is necessarily unknowable and immanent in the world. The fundamental unity of God and the world was stated even more clearly in the next century by G. *Bruno, for whom God was the world-soul. In contrast to these pantheistic conceptions, R. *Descartes endeavoured to uphold the transcendence of the Divine Being. In his former argument in his Meditations for the Being of God, he urged that the human mind can conceive an infinite and perfect Being only because the idea of the other exists in our minds and this idea has a proportionate cause. His other argument was essentially a reformulation of the Ontological Argument. The pantheistic trend of modern philosophy was resumed by B. *Spinoza, who elaborated the threefold notion of God as thought, as substance, and nature. There are no two separate terms of Creator and creature, but a complex series of stages from God to the universe, so that the exact transition from the Divine to the finite is incapable of definition. Descartes's ontological argument for the existence of God was reasserted, with an attempt at greater stringency, by G. W. *Leibniz. If a perfect and necessary Being is not a contradictory and fictitious object, such a Being must exist, because existence is one of its attributes.

A decisive attack on natural theology was made in the 18th cent. by I. *Kant, who, in his Critique of Pure Reason (1781), attempted to prove the impossibility of any rational proof of the existence of God. This was a consequence of his attack on speculative metaphysics in all its forms. He also urged that in any case the arguments from causality and teleology would be insufficient to prove what Christian Theism means by God without the assistance of the Ontological Argument. The only valid proof of the existence of God is that from morality. 'I had to remove knowledge (Wissen) to make way for faith (Glauben).' The reality of moral obligation implied the existence of a wise, holy, and omnipotent Being, who would ensure the future harmony between the accomplishment of duty and happiness. The step from the refusal of any metaphysical basis for the belief in God to resting the belief on feeling ('Anschauung und Gefühl') was made by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. All religious statements must be derived not from deductive logic but from personal experience, and the origin of belief in God be sought in the feeling of dependence, common to human beings. Among British thinkers of the 19th cent. Sir W. Hamilton and H. L. *Mansel sought to uphold the traditional conception of God on a basis of agnosticism which had affinities with the teaching of Kant.

But the 19th cent. also witnessed under the stimulus of G. W. F. *Hegel a powerful movement in speculative theology. In a grandiose system, Hegel fused evolutionary conceptions with the pantheism of Spinoza and thereby, while doing violence to the Christian doctrine of creation, put philosophical theology into relationship with modern physical, biological, and historic conceptions. His work exercised great influence in England through its presentation, in a much modified form, by T. H. *Green, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet, as well as in more recent times, with much greater reserve, by A. S. Pringle-*Pattison, C. C. J. *Webb and W. *Temple.

The main trend in the present century has been against immanentism, with a reaffirmation of the Divine transcendence. The beginnings of the movement are probably to be sought in the Anti-Intellectualism of such movements as *Pragmatism (W. *James, H. *Bergson, F. C. S. Schiller's 'Humanism') and also RC *Modernism (M. *Blondel, A. *Loisy). Since 1914 the movement has been esp. associated in Protestant theology with the names of K. *Barth and, in a less extreme form, E. *Brunner. In Catholic theology this movement has had its counterpart in a revival of the Scholastic teaching about a Divine Being at once rigidly traditional in its fundamental principles and yet anxious to take full account of the changed position of secular thought. This Scholastic movement, which may be said to take its origin with the constitution 'Dei Filius' of the First *Vatican Council (1870), was fostered by *Leo XIII and the Louvain School (D. J. *Mercier). Among its more recent exponents are E. *Gilson, R. Garrigou-Lagrange, J. *Maritain, and M. C. *D'Arcy. Mention should also be made of the 'transcendental Thomists', of whom the most prominent are K. *Rahner and E. Coreth. Their thought is a development of that of J. Maréchal, who, back in the 1920s, produced a massive version of the transcendental critique of knowledge which claimed to be free from the 'agnosticism' characterizing the critique of Kant; their philosophical idiom is heavily influenced by the *existentialism of M. *Heidegger. Of the same outlook, but uninfluenced by Heidegger, is the Canadian B. J. F. Lonergan, whose work has a growing acceptance in RC circles. There are also affinities with the work of M. Blondel.

The 'death of God' theologians, mainly located in the United States of America, had a considerable vogue in the 1960s. Though agreeing in proclaiming the death of God, they interpreted His death in very diverse ways, ranging from the quasi-Hegelian T. Altizer, for whom God (also identified with Satan) literally died on the cross and has been dead ever since, to the more moderate G. Vahanian, for whom the death of God is primarily a cultural phenomenon, with others, such as W. Hamilton, in various intermediate positions. More recently there has been a revival of the thought of A. N. Whitehead in the shape of the '*process theology' of C. Hartshorne, J. B. Cobb, P. Hamilton and W. N. Pittenger. For these writers, God is Himself in process of development through His intercourse with a changing world. Hartshorne in addition has produced a highly individualistic interpretation of Anselm's ontological argument; most members of the school, however, incline to a more empiricist position. Among other 'radical' theists may be mentioned S. Ogden and the widely read J. A. T. Robinson, and the controversial figure of L. Dewart, for whom God has 'reality' but not 'existence'. The 'secularizers', who wish to eliminate God altogether from theology, hardly fall within the scope of this work.

From the vast modern literature may be mentioned: J. Baillie, Our Knowledge of God (1939); K. Barth, The Knowledge of God and the Service of God according to the Teaching of the Reformation (1938); F. H. Bradley, Appearance and Reality (1893); A. Caldecott–H. R. Mackintosh, Selections from the Literature of Theism (1904); R. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., Dieu, son existence et sa nature (1915); E. Gilson, The Spirit of Medieval Philosophy (1936); R. M. Grant, The Early Christian Doctrine of God (Charlottesville, 1966); F. J. Hall, The Being and Attributes of God (1909); F. *von Hügel, Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion (2 Series, 1921; 1926); J. Maréchal, Le Point de départ de la métaphysique (5 vols., 1922–47); J. Maritain, Distinguer pour unir. Les degrés du savoir (1932; Eng. trans., The Degrees of Knowledge, 1937); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is (1943); H. P. Owen, The Christian Knowledge of God (1969); G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936); A. S. Pringle-Pattison, The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy (1917); K. Rahner, S.J., Geist in Welt. Zur Metaphysik der endlichen Erkenntnis bei Thomas von Aquin (Leipzig, 1939; ed. 2, 1957; Eng. tr. as Spirit in the World, 1968); A. E. *Taylor, art. 'Theism' in H.E.R.E., xii, pp. 261–87; id., The Faith of a Moralist (2 vols., 1930); id., Does God Exist? (1943); W. Temple, Nature, Man and God (1934); C. C. J. Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915); id., God and Personality (1918).

Recent and mainly more radical works include: T. J. J. Altizer, The Gospel of Christian Atheism (Philadelphia, 1966; London, 1967); J. B. Cobb, Jr., A Christian Natural Theology based on the Thought of Alfred North Whitehead (Philadelphia, 1965; London, 1966); E. Coreth, S.J., Metaphysik (Innsbruck [1961]; abridged Eng. tr. with critique by B. J. F. Lonergan, New York, 1968); L. Dewart, The Foundations of Belief (1969); P. Hamilton, The Living God and the World (1967); W. Hamilton, The New Essence of Christianity (New York, 1961; London, 1966); C. Hartshorne, The Divine Relativity. A Social Conception of God (New Haven–London, 1948); B. J. F. Lonergan, S.J., Insight. A Study of Human Undertsanding (1957); S. M. Ogden, The Reality of God and Other Essays (New York, 1966; London, 1967); [W.] N. Pittenger, Process-Thought and Christian Faith (1968); J. A. T. Robinson, Honest to God* (1963); id., Exploration into God (1967); R. G. Smith, The Doctrine of God, ed. K. G. Smith–A. D. Galloway (1970); G. Vahanian, The Death of God. The Culture of our post-Christian Era (New York, 1961).

GOD SAVE THE KING, British National Anthem. The origins of both words and tune are obscure; and as regards the words it is also uncertain whether the Eng. or Lat. version is the older. The opening words of the Lat. are 'O Deus optime, salvum nunc facito, Regem nostrum'.

The phrase 'God save the King' occurs in the Eng. Bible at 1 Sam. 10. 24, 2 Sam. 16. 16, and 2 Kgs. 11. 12, both in the *Coverdale version (1535) and in the AV of 1611, while as early as 1545 'God save the King' was a watchword in the Navy, with 'Long to reign over us' as a counter-sign. It seems probable that the anthem arose from a series of common loyal phrases being gradually combined into one national hymn; and there is some evidence that the words were put into substantially their present form for use in the RC chapel of *James II. Among individuals of later date to whom the authorship of the Anthem has sometimes (prob. wrongly) been attributed are Henry Carey (c. 1685–1743), author of 'Sally in our Alley', and James Oswald (c. 1710–69), a Scotsman who had settled in London. It was certainly much used in its present form in London theatres in 1745 (the year of the landing of the Young Pretender); the three stanzas were printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for Oct. of the same year; and its general popularity dates from that time.

In a similar way the tune seems to be a 17th-cent. recasting of earlier phrases. We find the earliest elements in the medieval plainsong notation to the antiphon to the *Magnificat for the Saturday before the Seventh Sunday after Pentecost ('Unxerunt Salamonem'). The same rhythm occurs in a 16th-cent. Genevan folk-song. In the tune of a Christmas carol, dated 1611, and attributed to John Bull (c. 1562–1628), it begins to take the familiar form. In the U.S.A., where the tune goes by the name of 'America', it is sung to the words 'My country, 'tis of thee'.

W. H. Cummings, God Save the King. The Origin and History of the Music and Words of the National Anthem (1902); P. A. Scholes, 'God Save the King!' Its History and its Romance (1942). Id., God Save the Queen! The History and Romance of the World's First National Anthem (1954; the most substantial work on the subject).

GODCHILDREN. See Godparents.

GODESCALC. See Gottschalk.

GODET, FRÉDÉRIC LOUIS (1812–1900), Swiss Protestant theologian and NT scholar. He was a native of Neuchâtel. From 1838 to 1844 he was tutor to the Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia; from 1850 to 1873 professor of NT exegesis in the Swiss Academy (now the university) at Neuchâtel; and from 1873 to 1887 professor in the new faculty of the Free Church of Neuchâtel, which he helped to found. Besides interpreting German thought to French-speaking Protestants, he was himself a considerable exegete whose influence extended far beyond Switzerland. He published Commentaries on Jn. (1863–5), Lk. (1871), Rom. (1880), and Cor. (1886), as well as other Biblical treatises. In the main his influence was in a conservative direction.

Philippe E. Godet, Frédéric Godet (1812–1900), d'après sa correspondance et d'autres documents inédits (1913).

GODFREY OF BOUILLON (c. 1060–1100), one of the leaders in the First *Crusade. He was a French noble who had fought under the Emp. *Henry IV. In 1096 he led a German contingent on the First Crusade, and in 1099, after forcing Raymond of Toulouse to march on *Jerusalem, himself took a prominent part in the siege and capture of the city. After Raymond had declined the honour, Godfrey was chosen ruler of Jerusalem under the title of 'Advocate [i.e. protector] of the Holy Sepulchre'. He seems to have contemplated a theocracy as the future government of Jerusalem, but died in 1100 and was succeeded by his brother Baldwin I as king. In later legend he appears as the type of the ideal Christian knight.

The primary authorities for his career include the Liber Christianae Expeditionis pro Ereptione, Emundatione et Restitutione Sanctae Hierosolymitanae Ecclesiae of Albert of Aix (Lotharingian; pr. in Recueil des historiens des croisades publié par les soins de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, Historiens occidentaux, iv (1879), pp. 265–713) and, from the opposite standpoint, the Historia Francorum qui ceperunt Jerusalem of Raymond of Aguilers (Provençal; ib., iii (1866), pp. 231–309). Modern works specifically devoted to him include T. Breysig, 'Gottfried von Bouillon vor dem Kreuzzuge' in Westdeutsche Zeitschrift für Geschichte und Kunst, xvii (1898), pp. 169–201, with reff.; C. Moeller, 'Godefroy de Bouillon et l'avouerie du saint-sépulcre' in Mélanges Godefroy Kurth, i (1908), pp. 73–83; M. Lobet, Godefroid de Bouillon. Essai de biographie antilégendaire (Brussels, 1943); J. C. Andressohn, The Ancestry and Life of Godfrey of Bouillon (Indiana University Publications, Social Science Series, v; Bloomington, 1947); and H. Dorchy, 'Godefroid de Bouillon, Duc de Bas-Lotharingie' in Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, xxvi (1948), pp. 961–99 (mainly on his earlier life). E. Barker in E.B. (ed. 11), xi (1910), p. 172, s.v. For main bibl. see works cited under Crusades.

GODPARENTS, also Sponsors. Witnesses, in person or by proxy, to a Christian baptism, who take on themselves special responsibilities for the Christian upbringing of the newly baptized. These responsibilities are most serious in the case of infant baptism, at which the godparents also make the promises of renunciation, faith, and obedience in the child's name. The BCP requires every candidate for baptism to have at least three godparents, of which two are to be of its own sex, but the 1969 canons (B 23) permit one godparent of each sex. Parents may stand.

GOERRES, J. J. VON. See Görres, J. J. von.

GOG AND MAGOG. In Rev. 20. 8 Gog and Magog are two powers under the dominion of Satan. In the OT they are mentioned together in Ezek. 38. 2, where, however, Gog is a people (apparently the Scythians who ravaged W. Asia about 630 B.C.) and Magog a land. In the later *apocalyptic and *rabbinic literature they are conventional figures for those opposed to the people of God. Acc. to an almost independent medieval legend, formerly embodied in the well-known wooden statues of Gog and Magog at the Guildhall, London (destroyed in the fire, 29 Dec. 1940), they were two giants who were made porters at 'Troynovant' (London) by 'Brutus the Trojan'.

J. G. Aalders, Gog en Magog in Ezechiël (Kampen, 1951), with Eng. summary. S. H. Hooke, 'Gog and Magog' in The Expository Times, xxvi (1914–15), pp. 317–19. J. Halévy in Revue Sémitique, xii (1904), pp. 370–5. A. van den Born, 'Étude sur quelques toponymes bibliques, I. Le Pays du Magog' in Oudtestamentische Studien, x (1954), pp. 197–201. A. H. Sayce in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 224, s.v. 'Gog', and iii (1900), p. 212, s.v. 'Magog'. See also commentaries on Ezekiel, &c., cited s.vv.

GOGARTEN, FRIEDRICH (1887–1967), Protestant theologian. A native of Dortmund, he became pastor at Stelzendorf in Thuringia in 1917 and at Dorndorf in 1925. From 1931 to 1935 he was Professor of Systematic Theology at Breslau and from 1935 to 1953 at Göttingen. In reaction from E. *Troeltsch's historicism, Gogarten formulated a fresh interpretation of culture and civilization in the spirit of K. *Barth's *Dialectical Theology, but (unlike the other leading theologians of the school) from a *Lutheran, as opposed to a

*Calvinist, background. Real historical happenings take place only in the obedience of faith when the Ego accepts the unconditional claims of a concrete 'Thou'. His writings include Fichte als religiöser Denker (1914), Religion und Volkstum (1915), Von Glauben und Offenbarung (1923), Ich glaube an den dreieinigen Gott (1926), and Entmythologisierung und die Kirche (1953; Eng. tr., 1955). He also contributed extensively to the Barthian periodical Zwischen den Zeiten (1923 onwards).

Glaube und Geschichte. Festgabe für Friedrich Gogarten, ed. H. Runte (1948). List of his works in T.L.Z., lxxvii (1952), cols. 745–8, and lxxxvii (1962), col. 155 f. R. Wagler, Der Ort der Ethik bei Friedrich Gogarten (Theologische Forschung, xxiv; 1961), incl. list of his works; H. Fischer, Christlicher Glaube und Geschichte. Voraussetzungen und Folgen der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (Gütersloh, 1967); A. V. Bauer, Freiheit zur Welt. Zum Weltverständnis und Weltverhältnis des Christen nach der Theologie Friedrich Gogartens (Paderborn, 1967).

GOLDEN CALF (עֵגֶל, the Heb. word translated 'calf', would be more properly rendered 'young bull'). An object of worship set up (a) by the Israelites in the wilderness (Ex. 32); (b) by King Jeroboam I (937–915 B.C.) at Bethel and Dan for the worship of the Ten Tribes (1 Kgs. 12. 28).

GOLDEN LEGEND, The. This manual, also known as the 'Lombardica Historia', which consists mainly of lives of the saints and short treatises about the Christian festivals, was drawn up by *Jacob of Voragine (q.v.) between 1255 and 1266. Its 177 (or, acc. to other enumerations, 182) chapters are disposed acc. to the Church's year. The purpose of its engagingly written narrative, full of anecdotes and curious etymologies, is to foster piety; and it soon became exceedingly popular. In the 14th cent. it was translated into French by Jean Belet de Vigny; and it was issued constantly in a variety of languages from the earliest printing presses. Its real literary merits tended to be lost sight of in the 16th cent., when it was condemned on considerations purely of its historicity by such scholars as L. Vives and M. *Cano.

Editio princeps by J. Zainer (printer), Ulm, c. 1469; crit. ed. by T. Graesse, Dresden and Leipzig, 1846. Caxton's translation was repr. by W. *Morris and F. S. Ellis, 3 vols., London, 1892; also ed., in modern Eng., by F. S. Ellis in The Temple Classics, 7 vols., 1900. Modern Eng. tr. from the Lat. by G. Ryman–H. Ripperger, New York and London, 1941. P. Butler, Legenda Aurea—Légende dorée—Golden Legend. A Study of Caxton's Golden Legend with Special Reference to its Relation to the Earlier English Prose Translation (thesis; Baltimore, 1899). Sister Mary Jeremy, 'Caxton's Golden Legend and Voragine's Legenda Aurea' in Speculum, xxi (1946), pp. 212–21; R. E. Seybolt, 'Fifteenth Century Editions of the Legenda Aurea', ib., pp. 327–38 [with bibl.]; id., 'The Legenda Aurea, Bible and Historia Scholastica', ib., pp. 339–42. J. Baudot in D.T.C., viii (part 1; 1924), cols. 310–13, s.v. 'Jacques de Voragine', with refl.

GOLDEN NUMBER, The. The number of any year in the Metonic cycle (devised in 432 B.C. by the Athenian astronomer Meton) and adopted in the ecclesiastical calendar since the time of St. *Hippolytus. The calculation rests on the assumption (very nearly correct) that 235 lunations ('lunar months') correspond with 19 solar years. As stated in the tables at the beginning of the BCP, the Golden Number of any given year is found by adding 1 to the number of the year of our Lord, and then dividing by 19; the remainder is the Golden Number of the year in question (or, if there is no remainder, it is 19). It was the value of the number for computing the date of *Easter that led it to be termed in the Middle Ages the Golden Number (aureus numerus). The view sometimes found that it was so named because it was printed in calendars in letters of gold is without authority.

GOLDEN ROSE. An ornament of wrought gold and gems in the form of a rose which is blessed by the Pope on the Fourth Sunday in *Lent ('Rose Sunday') and afterwards presented as a mark of special favour to some distinguished individual or community. In recent times it has often been sent to the queens of Catholic countries. If there is no worthy recipient, the rose is laid up in the *Vatican, where it is blessed every year until distribution is made. The origin of the custom is obscure; but as early as 1049 *Leo IX speaks of it as an ancient institution. That sent by *Clement V to the city of Basle is preserved in the Musée de Cluny at Paris.

C. Cartari, La rosa d'oro pontificia (Rome, 1681); A. Baldassarri, S.J., La rosa d'oro. Che si benedice nella quarta domenica di quaresima dal sommo pontifice (Venice, 1709). A. Shield, 'The Golden Rose' in The Month, xcv (1900), pp. 294–304. J. Kreps, O.S.B., 'La Rose d'or' in Les Questions liturgiques et paroissiales, xi (1926), pp. 71–104, 149–78. P. M. J. Rock in C.E., vi (1909), p. 629 f., s.v.; N. Del Re in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1344–6, s.v. 'Rosa d'oro', with further bibl.

GOLDEN RULE. A (modern) name for the precept in the Sermon on the Mount: 'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them' (Mt. 7. 12; cf. Lk. 6. 31). In a negative form it is found in the *Western text of Acts 15. 29, and in the *Didache (1, 2).

A. Dihle, Die Goldene Regel. Eine Einführung in die Geschichte der antiken und frühchristlichen Vulgärethik (1962).

GOLDEN SEQUENCE, The. The *Sequence for *Whitsunday, '*Veni, Sancte Spiritus' (q.v.).

GOLGOTHA. See Calvary, Mount.

GOMAR, FRANCIS (1563–1641), Dutch *Calvinist leader. A native of Bruges, he studied at Strassburg, Neustadt, *Oxford, Cambridge, and Heidelberg. In 1587 he became pastor of the Dutch community at Frankfurt, and in 1594 was appointed professor of theology at *Leyden. Here he became an upholder of rigid Calvinist principles, and engaged in a prolonged controversy with J. *Arminius, esp. after he became his fellow-professor in 1603. After Arminius's death (1609) the bitterness of the controversy was further increased through the appointment of the liberal C. *Vorstius as Arminius's successor. Accordingly in 1611 Gomar resigned and became preacher of the Reformed congregation at Middelburg. From 1614 to 1618 he taught at Saumur, and from 1618 till his death held a professorship at Groningen. At the Synod of *Dort (1618–19) he was among the principal opponents of Arminianism. In his later years he took part in the revision of the Dutch OT. His extreme Calvinism is shown by his rejection on theological grounds of a plea for the toleration of heretics.

Works publd. in 3 vols. fol., Amsterdam, 1644. Full study by G. P. van Itterzon (The Hague, 1929). C. Sudhoff–S. D. van Veen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vi (1899), p. 763 f., s.v.;

J. Forget in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1477–86, s.v. See also works cited under Dort, Synod of.

GONZALES, St. PETER. See Elmo, St.

GOOD FRIDAY ('Feria sexta in Parasceve'). The Friday before Easter on which the anniversary of the Crucifixion is kept. It is a day of fast, abstinence, and penance, and in the RC Church Good Friday, together with (after 1955) *Holy Saturday, are the only days in the year on which no Celebration of the Mass takes place.

The present Latin Rite goes back to the early days of Christianity. It consists of three parts: (1) the lessons and prayers, which are virtually the old 'Mass of the *Catechumens', with the singing of the Passion acc. to St. John; (2) the ceremonial *Veneration of the Cross, described already in the 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae', with the chanting of the *Reproaches and the *Trisagion; and (3) the Communion with Hosts reserved on Maundy Thursday (see Mass of the *Presanctified). Since 1955 this has included a General Communion of the people, accompanied by solemn singing. The liturgical colour of the day, which was formerly black, is now red. The hour of the service, which since the 16th cent. had customarily taken place in the morning, was moved in 1955 to the afternoon or evening. *Tenebrae of Holy Saturday, which until the 1955 reform was sung on Good Friday evening, has now been restored to the early hours of Holy Saturday.

Most of the medieval practices were abolished by the Churches of the Reformation. The C of E provides for the normal celebration of the Eucharist, but it now rarely happens. In some Nonconformist Churches the day is kept as a feast rather than a fast; in Continental Protestantism it is customary to have the usual services with sermons, and often Good Friday is a special day for the administration of the Lord's Supper. In the RC Church popular devotions developed beside the liturgical services. The best known is the *Three Hours Service from noon to 3 P.M., a post-Reformation devotion propagated by the *Jesuits and now widely taken over in the C of E. In the Greek Church the day is known as the 'Great Friday' (ἡ μεγάλη παρασκευή).

H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J. (ed.), Hebdomada Sancta, i (Rome, 1956), pp. 92–116; vol. ii, pars 1 (1957), passim; vol. ii, pars 2 (1957), pp. 778–808. H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 326–403; J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week. Its Services and Ceremonial (Alcuin Club Collections, xxix; 1932), esp. pp. 116–42. G. G. Willis, Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (ib., xlvi; 1964), pp. 1–48 ('The Solemn Prayers of Good Friday'). T. P. Gilmartin in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 643–5, s.v.; W. J. O'Shea in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 621–4, s.v.

GOOD SAMARITAN, The. The Samaritan of the Parable in Lk. 10. 30–37 who, in contrast to the priest and levite who 'passed by on the other side', tended the traveller who had fallen among thieves on his way from *Jerusalem to *Jericho and provided hospitality for him at an inn. His action illustrates the Christian response to the question: 'Who is my neighbour?' (Lk. 10. 29).

W. Monselewski, Der barmherzige Samariter. Eine auslegungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zu Lukas 10, 25–37 (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, v; Tübingen, 1967). See also comm. on Luke.

GOOD SHEPHERD, The. The title of Christ based esp. on His discourse in Jn. 10. 7–18 and the Parable of the Good Shepherd in Lk. 15. 3–7 (cf. Mt. 18. 12–14). The theme is taken up later in the NT, e.g. in Heb. 13. 20 and 1 Pet. 2. 25 and 5. 4. In early Christian art Christ was frequently represented (e.g. in the *catacombs) as the Good Shepherd with a lamb upon His shoulders. The Second Sunday after *Easter has sometimes been known as 'Good Shepherd Sunday', on account of the traditional Gospel for the day, which in the RC Church is now used in only one year out of three.

GORCUM MARTYRS, The. A group of nineteen religious and secular priests who were put to death by *Calvinists at Briel on 9 July 1572, after the capture of Gorcum (S. Holland) by the *Gueux (26 June 1572). Eleven of the martyrs were friars of the *Franciscan convent at Gorcum. They were beatified by Clement X in 1675 and canonized by *Pius IX on 29 June 1867. Feast day, 9 July.

W. *Estius, Historia Martyrum Gorcomiensium (Douai, 1603), repr. in AA.SS., Jul. II (1721), pp. 736–847. J. Meerbergen, Die HH. Martelaren van Gorcum (Tongerloo, 1928). G. Hesse, 'De oudere Historiografie der HH. Martelaren van Gorcum' in Collectanea Franciscana Neerlandica, ii (1931), pp. 447–98; W. Lampen, O.F.M., 'Notae de SS. Nicolao et Sociis O.F.M. Martyribus Gorcomiensibus' in Collectanea Franciscana, xxviii (1958), pp. 404–11.

GORDON RIOTS (also No Popery Riots). The riots that broke out on 2 June 1780 when a mob, headed by Lord George Gordon, an eccentric and fanatic, marched to Parliament with a petition for the repeal of the *Catholic Relief Act of 1778. The huge procession of demonstrators carried flags with the legend 'No Popery', and, after pillaging the houses of Catholics, the rioters became completely out of hand and held the City of London until, at the personal command of George III, they were dispersed by the military. 210 persons were killed in the streets and another 75 died of wounds. Lord George Gordon, after being acquitted on a charge of high treason (1781), became a Jew and finally (1793) died insane in Newgate prison.

J. P. de Castro, The Gordon Riots (1928), with bibl. G. F. E. Rudé, 'The Gordon Riots: a study of the Rioters and their Victims' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, vi (1956), pp. 93–114. C. Hibbert, King Mob. The Story of Lord George Gordon and the Riots of 1780 (1958). The proceedings of the trial of Gordon for high treason on 5th and 6th Feb. 1781, taken in shorthand by S. Gurney, are repr. in A Complete Collection of State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Misdemeanours, ed. T. R. Howell, xxi (1814), cols. 485–652; the trial of H. J. Maskell, also connected with the riot, is pr. ib., cols. 653–88. The Life of Lord George Gordon by his friend and admirer, Robert Watson (1795). Modern life by P. Colson, The Strange History of Lord George Gordon (1937). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxii (1890), p. 197 f., s.v. 'Gordon, Lord George'.

GORDON'S CALVARY. The site outside the Damascus Gate in the north wall of *Jerusalem which is held by some modern archaeologists to be the place of Christ's Crucifixion. As against the traditional site of the *Holy Sepulchre, this place was first proposed by O. Thenius in 1849. It derives its usual name from General C. G. Gordon, a strong advocate of it. It is a cliff with weathermarks which have a certain likeness to the features of a human countenance (cf. Jn. 19. 17: 'the place of a skull'), but the shape of the rock in this area is largely due to later quarrying. Since there is now archaeological evidence that the traditional site was outside the walls of Jerusalem at the time of the Crucifixion, Gordon's Calvary cannot claim credence on the ground that it alone was 'without the gate' (Heb. 13. 12). Near by is a tomb, known as the 'Garden Tomb', which advocates of Gordon's Calvary hold to have been the site of Christ's burial.

C. G. Gordon, Reflections in Palestine 1883 (1884), pp. 1–3. See further general works, s.v. Calvary and Jerusalem.

GORE, CHARLES (1853–1932), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1875. From his schooldays he had been a High Churchman, and in 1884, on H. P. Liddon's recommendation, was appointed first principal of Pusey House, Oxford. His independent mind, combined with an almost prophetic strength of character, brought a new strand into the Anglo-Catholic Movement. In his concern to bring Catholic principles to bear on social problems and to come to terms with OT criticism, he exercised great influence on the younger generation at Oxford. When in 1889 Lux Mundi (q.v.) appeared under Gore's editorship, his own essay on 'The Holy Spirit and Inspiration' caused disquiet among many of the older and more conservative school of High Church theologians. In The Ministry of the Christian Church (1888; new ed., 1919, by C. H. *Turner) he upheld Catholic teaching about episcopacy, largely in criticism of E. *Hatch's *Bampton Lectures. His own Bampton Lectures (1891) on 'The Incarnation of the Son of God' were a popular exposition of the *Chalcedonian Doctrine of the Person of Christ. They were supplemented by his Dissertations on allied subjects in 1895.

Meanwhile Gore had been actively concerned with the foundation of the *Community of the Resurrection (now at Mirfield), and in 1893 he became vicar of Radley, Oxon, settling the community in the vicarage. From 1894 to 1902 he was Canon of *Westminster. Here he became widely known as a preacher and exegete, and several series of his NT expositions were afterwards issued as books. In his Body of Christ (1901), a work on the Eucharist, he set out the place of the Sacrament in the Christian life and also sought to reformulate the doctrine of the Real Presence without *transubstantiation.

In 1902 he was consecrated Bp. of Worcester and when, largely through his initiative, the diocese of Birmingham was established in 1905 he became its first bishop. Here in the civic life of Birmingham he was highly successful. In 1911 he was translated to Oxford. He was far less happy in this large rural diocese and became increasingly conscious of isolation through the trend of various theological controversies (Foundations, *Reservation, &c.) and the absence of Catholic support in the Convocations. In 1919 he resigned his see. In his later years he continued to write in defence of the Christian faith. His trilogy, Belief in God (1921), Belief in Christ (1922), and The Holy Spirit and the Church (1924)—the three works being subsequently reissued in a single volume as The Reconstruction of Belief—was very widely read and appreciated. After 1920 his attitude towards certain developments in Anglo-Catholicism became increasingly critical, and in 1925 he summarized his position in The Anglo-Catholic Movement To-day; but he remained a fervent apologist for High Church principles until his death. His other writings include The Question of Divorce (1911), The Religion of the Church (1916), and Jesus of Nazareth (Home University Library, 1929).

G. L. Prestige, The Life of Charles Gore. A Great Englishman (1935). J. Carpenter, Gore. A Study in Liberal Catholic Thought (1960). G. Crosse, Charles Gore (1932); A. Mansbridge, Edward Stuart Talbot and Charles Gore (1935). W. R. *Inge, 'Bishop Gore and the Church of England' (anon.), in Edinburgh Review, ccvii (1908), pp. 79–104; repr. in Inge's Outspoken Essays, i (1919), pp. 106–36. Alwyn Dunelm. [A. T. P. Williams] in D.N.B., 1931–1940, pp. 349–53.

GORGONIA, St. (d. c. 370), sister of St. *Gregory Nazianzen (q.v.) and St. *Caesarius. She is known almost exclusively through St. Gregory's panegyric (orat. 8), which represents her as of a pious and generous disposition. An incident in her life has sometimes (but probably wrongly) been taken as an early instance of devotion to the Reserved Sacrament. In acc. with contemporary custom she was not baptized until the end of her life. Feast day in E., 23 Feb.; in W., 9 Dec.

Gregory's Oratio is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxv, 787–818. H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Early Cultus of the Reserved Eucharist' in J.T.S., xi (1909–10), pp. 275–9.

GORHAM CASE. In 1847 the Rev. G. C. Gorham was presented by the Lord Chancellor to the vicarage of Brampford Speke in the diocese of *Exeter. The Bp. of Exeter, H. *Phillpotts, who suspected his orthodoxy, examined him, found him unsound on the doctrine of *baptismal regeneration, and refused to institute him to the living. After a complicated lawsuit, Gorham appealed to the recently formed *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, attributing to him a view which he did not hold, declared it to be not contrary to the doctrine of the C of E. The decision gave great offence to High Churchmen and aroused a storm of controversy. Over 60 books and pamphlets were published, and many seceded to Rome, including H. E. *Manning and R. I. *Wilberforce. As the Bp. of Exeter still refused to institute, Gorham was eventually instituted by Abp. J. B. *Sumner. The case had the result of drawing attention to the limitations of the Privy Council as an ecclesiastical court of appeal.

J. C. S. Nias, Gorham and the Bishop of Exeter (1951), with full bibl. details of pamphlets and other contemporary literature.

GÖRRES, JOHANN JOSEPH VON (1776–1848), German Catholic author. A native of Coblenz, he was educated under the deep influence of the rationalism of the 18th cent. As a youth he was an enthusiastic supporter of the French Revolution, but a stay at Paris in 1799–1800 disillusioned him. In 1800–6 he taught natural science at Coblenz. The study of J. G. *Herder and F. W. J. *Schelling awakened his religious interests, which found expression in his Glaube und Wissen (1805), a work of largely pantheistic character. In 1806–7 he lectured at Heidelberg university, mainly on historical and literary subjects. Here he came into contact with the leaders of German Romanticism, whose love of the religious history of the past inspired his Mythengeschichte der asiatischen Welt (2 vols., 1810). During the Napoleonic wars he took up the cause of German independence and was for a time an immensely popular figure. In 1814 he started the first great German newspaper, the Rheinischer Merkur. After the Peace of Paris (1815) he met with increasing hostility from the reactionary Prussian government and his paper was suppressed in 1816. In Teutschland und die Revolution (1819) he demanded liberty and a fuller place for the Catholic Church in public life. An order of arrest followed, but Görres escaped by flight to Strassburg. In 1824 he formally returned to the faith of the RC Church. In 1827 Ludwig I of Bavaria offered him a professorship at Munich university, where he became the centre of a circle of famous Catholic scholars, among whom were J. J. I. *Döllinger and J. A. *Möhler. From 1828 to 1832 they published the influential periodical Eos, which opposed Catholic ideals to the contemporary rationalism. There followed his Christliche Mystik (4 vols., 1836–42), which, though uncritical in the use of sources and sometimes fanciful, gave a strong impulse to the study of the mystics. When, in 1837, the Abp. of Cologne, Clemens August von *Droste-Vischering, was deposed and imprisoned by the Prussian government, Görres took up his cause in his tract Athanasius (1837), which brought all Catholic Germany to the defence of the Church. Another treatise, Die Triarier (1838), directed against the defenders of the government, received special Papal approval. His last years were darkened by the scandal round Lola Montez which resulted in the deposition of several professors belonging to his circle. A brilliant writer, he devoted himself unstintingly to the cause he had at heart. His work contributed considerably to the spread of Catholic ideas in modern Germany.

The 'Görres-Gesellschaft zur Pflege der Wissenschaft im katholischen Deutschland' was founded at Coblenz on the centenary of Görres' birth (25 Jan. 1876) to promote scientific and historical studies on Catholic principles. Suppressed by the Nazis in 1941, when its property was confiscated, it was reconstituted in 1948. It has published, inter alia, two important periodicals, the Historisches Jahrbuch and Oriens Christianus*. Collected ed. of Görres's writings, Munich, 9 vols., 1854–74; crit. ed. by W. Schellberg under the auspices of the Görres-Gesellschaft (Cologne, 1926 ff.). Lives by J. Galland (Freiburg i.Br., 1876), J. N. Sepp (Nördlingen, 1877; ed. 2, Dresden, 1896), W. Schellberg (Cologne, 1926), R. Saitschick (Olten–Freiburg i.Br., 1953), and others. L. Just in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), cols. 1058–60, with selection from the large German literature on Görres.

GORTON, SAMUEL (c. 1592–1677), founder of the 'Gortonites'. Born in Lancashire, he worked as a clothier in London for some time before he sailed c. 1636 for Boston, Mass., in the hope of enjoying complete religious freedom. Of a fiery and difficult temperament, he found himself engaged in continual conflict with the civil authorities in America. He gradually came to hold many unorthodox doctrines, e.g. he denied that of the Trinity and professed faith in *conditional immortality. Further difficulties with the civil powers led him to return to England in 1644, where he published an attack on what he held to be the repressive policy of the Massachusetts government, Simplicitie's Defence against Seven-Headed Policy (1646). He died in America. His followers survived as a sect till the middle of the 18th cent.

His Simplicitie's Defence and a letter to Nathaniel Morton are repr. in P. Force (ed.), Tracts and Other Papers Relating Principally to the Origin, Settlement and Progress of the Colonies in North America, iv (1846); further letters in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Ser. 4, vii (1865), pp. 601–31. Lives by J. M. Mackie ('The Library of American Biography', ed. J. Sparks, Ser. 2, v; 1845) and Adelphos Gorton (Philadelphia, 1907). C. Goodwin in D.N.B., xxii (1890), pp. 251–3.

GORZE, Benedictine monastery in the diocese of Metz, not far from the city. It was founded in 748 by St. *Chrodegang, who acquired the relics of the Roman martyr St. Gorgonius for the house. Like other Lotharingian communities, it went through a difficult period with lay abbots in the 9th cent. After 933, however, it was revived and built up by Albero I, Bp. of Metz (919–62), and became one of the chief seats of monastic reform; it acquired great influence and many adherents, esp. in the Empire. Not only was the abbey itself a centre of monastic revival based on rigorous conventual discipline, common life and efficient estate management, in the area E. of the Rhine, but it has become customary to describe a variety of observances and their propagation as 'Gorzian' in contrast with those of *Cluny. The Gorzian reform worked within the traditions of St. *Benedict of Aniane. One of its salient features was that its leaders, such as Abbots Arnold (d. c. 968), John (d. 974) and Immo (d. 1015) put themselves at the disposal of patrons, both lay and episcopal, who invited them to take charge of and reform monasteries in their domains. *Reichenau and St. *Gall were among the houses reformed in this way. Ecclesiastical and secular control remained with the bishops, lordship and advocacy with the lay rulers who had called in the abbots of Gorze or their disciples. They did not form a network of institutions permanently subject to a mother house and their association found expression chiefly in the bonds of confraternity and mutual prayer.

Historians of monasticism have distinguished between the original currents of reforming enterprise from Gorze and St. Maximin, Trier, and a new impulse, the so-called neo-Gorzian (Junggorze) movement of the 11th cent. In this the influence of Cluny on the internal life of the communities was more marked, but the constitutional arrangements were left unchanged. The chief agents of this observance were St. William of Dijon (Abbot of Gorze 1016–31) and two monks of the house, Ekkebert, later Abbot of Schwarzach (in the diocese of Würzburg), and Herrand of Ilsenburg, nr. Halberstadt, who became bishop in 1090. In distant abbeys such as Tegernsee, traces of the Gorzian customs, introduced in the 10th cent., remained until well into the 12th.

The importance of Gorze declined after the 11th cent., but the monastery continued in existence until its secularization in 1572. In 1580 canons took the place of monks until the chapter was suppressed in 1790.

The Cartulary of Gorze was ed. A. d'Herbomez (Mettensia, ii; Mémoires et documents publiés par la Société Nationale des Antiquaires de France, Paris, 1898). The principal narrative sources are the life of Abbot John written by John of St. Arnulf between 974 and 984, ed. H. G. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), pp. 335–77, and the 'Miracula S. Gorgonii' of c. 964, ib., pp. 238–47. K. Hallinger, O.S.B., Gorze–Kluny. Studien zu den monastischen Lebensformen und Gegensätzen im Hochmittelalter (Studia Anselmiana, xxii–xxv; Rome, 1950–1). H. E. Feine, 'Klosterreformen im 10. und 11. Jahrhundert und ihr Einfluss auf die Reichenau und St. Gallen' in Aus Verfassungs- und Landesgeschichte. Festschrift zum 70. Geburtstag von Theodor Mayer dargebracht, ii (Lindau–Constance, 1955), pp. 77–91; H. Büttner, 'Verfassungsgeschichte und lothringische Klosterreform' in J. Engel–H. M. Klinkenberg (edd.), Aus Mittelalter und Neuzeit. Gerhard Kallen zum 70. Geburtstag dargebracht (Bonn, 1957), pp. 17–27. A. Hauck, Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands, iii (ed. 3, Leipzig, 1906), pp. 353–87.

GOSCELIN (d. after 1107), English hagiographer. He is believed to have been born at or near Thérouanne, in France, and entered the *Benedictine monastery of St. Bertin at St. Omer. Herman, then Bp. of Ramsbury (later Bp. of Sherborne and then *Salisbury), came there in exile, and on his return to England in 1058 took Goscelin into his service. Goscelin was also, for a time, one of the chaplains to the nuns of Wilton, and c. 1080 wrote the life of St. Edith. At Wilton he was the director of Eve, one of the nuns, who became a recluse at Angers. To her he wrote his 'Liber Confortatorius' (1082–3), a work of spiritual direction. Before it was written Goscelin had fallen into disfavour with Herman's successor, *Osmund, and he seems to have stayed in a succession of monastic houses (among them *Peterborough, *Ely, Ramsey, and the nunnery of Barking), writing the lives of local saints, usually based on earlier material. About 1090 he came to St. Augustine's, *Canterbury, where he remained for the rest of his life. He wrote lives of many Canterbury saints, the chief being a longer and shorter life of St. *Augustine and an account of the translation of his relics. The date of Goscelin's death is unknown, but he was still alive in 1107. He was a skilful writer, but his rhymed prose and high-flown vocabulary are an obstacle to the modern reader's enjoyment. His Lives were the means by which the memory of many Anglo-Saxon saints survived the Norman Conquest.

The longer of his lives of St. Augustine (the Historia Major) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxx, 43–94; the shorter (the Historia Minor) is repr. ib., cl, 743–64, with the account of the translation of his relics, clv, 13–46. Of the other lives collected in Migne, PL, clv, 47–116, that of St. *Swithun (47–80) is spurious; those of St. *Ives, St. *Werburgh, St. Edith, and St. Laurence, Abp. of Canterbury, are genuine. The life of St. Edith is pr. in full by A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., in Anal. Boll., lvi (1938), pp. 5–101, 265–307; life of St. Wulfhilde of Barking ed. M. Esposito, ib., xxxii (1913), pp. 10–26; that of St. Wulsin (or Wulsige), Bp. of Sherborne, ed. C. H. Talbot in R. Bén., lxix (1959), pp. 68–85; that of St. *Justus is pr. in AA.SS., Nov. IV (1925), pp. 535–7. For the life of St. Milburg, H. P. R. Finberg, The Early Charters of the West Midlands (Leicester, 1961), pp. 197–216. It is possible that Goscelin was the author of the anonymous life of *Edward the Confessor, ed., with Eng. tr., by F. Barlow, The Life of King Edward . . . attributed to a Monk of St. Bertin (1962), who gives the best account of his works, pp. 91–111, with further reff. The 'Liber Confortatorius' was ed. C. H. Talbot in Studia Anselmiana, xxxvii (Rome, 1955), pp. 1–117. A. Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Ève et Goscelin' in R. Bén., xlvi (1934), pp. 414–38, 1 (1938), pp. 42–83.

GOSPEL (Gk. εὐαγγέλιον, Old Eng. godspel, 'good news'). (1) The central content of the Christian revelation, the glad tidings of redemption. Hence Christ's own preaching is a 'Gospel' (Mk. 1. 14 f.). The use of the word in Christian vocabulary probably comes from the OT, and perhaps Christ Himself quoted Is. 61. 1, where the *Septuagint has the verb εὐαγγελίζομαι. For a pre-Christian pagan use of the word, cf. an inscription from Priene (9 B.C.), where Augustus's birthday is said to have been 'for the world the beginning of things which owing to him are glad tidings'. (2) Somewhat later the word came to be used as a title for the written books in which the Christian Gospel was set forth. The usage probably originated from the occurrence of the word in the opening sentence of Mk. (1. 1). As there was but one single Good News, the separate Gospels were distinguished as 'the Gospel according to Matthew' (τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κατὰ Μαθθαῖον), etc. The unique authority belonging to the four Gospels of Mt., Mk., Lk., and Jn. was fully established by the middle of the 2nd cent. (e.g. *Tatian's *Diatessaron, *Irenaeus). The so-called '*Apocryphal Gospels' (q.v.), which mostly arose in heretical circles, are wholly inferior works of later date and virtually devoid of historical value. They never seriously challenged the authority of the canonical Gospels. See also entries on separate Gospels; also Synoptic Problem and Form Criticism.

General works on the Gospels include B. F. *Westcott, An Introduction to the Study of the Gospels (1851; ed. 8, 1895); V. H. Stanton, The Gospels as Historical Documents (3 vols., 1903–20); F. C. *Burkitt, The Gospel History and its Transmission (1906); B. H. *Streeter, The Four Gospels. A Study of Origins (1924); C. H. *Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936), esp. pp. 75–129, and other works of this author; F. C. Grant, The Gospels. Their Origin and Growth (New York, 1957; London, 1959). For works on the Apocryphal Gospels, see bibl. to Apocryphal New Testament.

GOSPEL (in the Liturgy). In the Eucharistic rite, the lection from the Gospels proper to each Mass. It varies greatly in length, from one or two verses to a whole chapter or more. It always occupies the last place (i.e. after the *Epistle and other lections, if any) as the position of honour. Traditionally it is the privilege of the deacon to read it, though at one time it was read at *Constantinople on Easter Day by the bishop and at *Alexandria by the archdeacon (*Sozomen, H.E., VII. xix). In early times it was prob. read from the *ambo by the deacon facing south, but nowadays, wherever the Gospel is read, the reader always faces the congregation.

In the current W. rite, the deacon, bearing the book, goes in procession to the appointed place, accompanied by *thurifer and *acolytes, and before beginning to read sings 'Dominus vobiscum', announces the place, makes the *sign of the cross on the book and on himself and censes the book. He then reads the Gospel in its proper tone. The use of lights at the Gospel is already mentioned by St. *Jerome (*Bethlehem, A.D. 378). From the earliest times it has been the custom for the congregation to stand at the Gospel; cf. the rubric in the BCP (inserted by J. *Cosin in 1661). See also Last Gospel.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 565–83; Eng. tr., pp. 442–55, with reff.

GOSPEL OF TRUTH. See Evangelium Veritatis.

GOSPELLER. The person who reads or sings the Gospel at the *Eucharist. The word is used esp. of the deacon who is selected by the Bishop from among the newly ordained to perform this function at an Ordination Mass.

GOTHER, JOHN (d. 1704), RC controversialist. A native of Southampton, he came from a *Presbyterian family and was converted to the RC faith at an early age. In 1668 he entered the English College at Lisbon, where he was ordained priest and later became prefect and supervisor of studies. Being sent to England in 1682, he defended the RC cause during the controversies under *James II. In 1685 he published the first part of his famous work, A Papist Misrepresented and Represented, the second and third parts following in 1687. It evoked a long line of answers from E. *Stillingfleet and other Anglican divines. After the Revolution of 1689 Gother became chaplain at Warkworth Castle, where he taught the future Bishop, R. *Challoner. There he also wrote several treatises on doctrinal subjects such as *Transubstantiation and the use of *images, as well as devotional books on hearing Mass, Confession, and other religious duties.

His writings were edited by W. Crathorne, Spiritual Works (16 vols., 1718–36).

GOTHIC VERSION. Acc. to *Philostorgius (H.E., ii. 5), *Socrates (H.E., iv. 33), and *Sozomen (H.E., vi. 37), the Greek Bible was translated into the Gothic language by the *Arian bishop *Ulphilas (d. 383). Of the NT only 2 Cor. and considerable portions of the four Gospels and the other Pauline Epp. survive. Of the OT only three short fragments of Ezra and Neh. exist. Among the NT MSS. is the celebrated 'Codex Argenteus', written in gold and silver letters upon purple vellum, and now at Uppsala; it contains more than half of the text of the Gospels.

All the surviving MSS. derive from the period of the Gothic settlement in northern Italy and of contact with the Latin-speaking Church. This provides the most likely explanation for the Western readings of Old-Latin type which are found in the text, as also for the Gospels being in the Western order—Mt., Jn., Lk., Mk. Bilingual Latin–Gothic MSS. have played a part in this, each side influencing the other. The version on the whole is extremely literal, especially in Mt. and Jn.

Text ed. W. Streitberg, Die Gotische Bibel (2 parts, Heidelberg, 1908–10). The Gospels were publd. from the 'Codex Argenteus' by A. Uppström (Uppsala, 1854); photographic facsimile ed. of this codex issued by order of the Senate of the University of Uppsala, with introd. by O. van Friesen, Uppsala [1928]. G. W. [S.] Friedrichsen, The Gothic Version of the Gospels. A Study of its Style and Textual History (1926); id., The Gothic Version of the Epistles. A Study of its Style and Textual History (Oxford, 1939); id., Gothic Studies (ib., 1961). M. J. Hunter in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, ii (1969), pp. 338–62. E. *Nestle in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), pp. 59–61, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen, 3a. Die gotische Bibelübersetzung des Ulfila'. See also bibl. to Ulphilas.

GOTHIC VESTMENTS. The name popularly given to Eucharistic *vestments of medieval shape and pattern, the *stole and *maniple being long and narrow, and the *chasuble circular, or nearly so, when laid out flat. The name is applied by contrast with the (esp. post-*Tridentine) Roman pattern, in which the stole and maniple are broad and short, and the chasuble approximately rectangular. The older shape was that generally used, at any rate at first, when vestments were revived in the C of E in the 19th cent. In recent years Gothic vestments, which never became entirely obsolete, have become increasingly common in the RC Church, esp. in churches and religious communities influenced by the *Liturgical Movement.

GOTTESFREUNDE. A group of 14th cent. mystics in the Rhineland and Switzerland who conceived of themselves as the 'friends of God', probably on the basis of such passages as Jas. 2. 23 and Jn. 15. 14. Over against the seeming externality of certain aspects of ecclesiastical life, they stressed the transforming personal union of their souls with God. For the most part they remained within the Church, though some of the more extreme became organized into separate societies with a *pantheistic theology. The '*Theologia Germanica' came from these circles. Their chief sources of inspiration were *Eckhart, J. *Tauler, and H. *Suso, and the movement had connexions with the '*Brethren of the Common Life' in the Netherlands.

Works by R. Merswin and others ed. P. Strauch, Schriften aus der Gottesfreund-Literatur (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek, xxii, xxiii, and xxvii; 1927–9). Id. in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 203–27, s.v. 'Rulman Merswin und die Gottesfreunde', with bibl. to date. A. Jundt, Les Amis de Dieu au quatorzième siècle (1879). K. Rieder, Der Gottesfreund vom Oberland. Eine Erfindung des Strassburger Johanniter Bruders Nikolaus von Löwen (1905); important critique by P. Strauch in Zeitschrift für deutsche Philologie, xxxix (1907), pp. 101–36. J. B. Schoemann, S.J., Die Rede von den 15 Graden. Rheinische Gottesfreunde-Mystik (Germanische Studien, Hft. lxxx; 1930). R. M. Jones, The Flowering of Mysticism. The Friends of God in the Fourteenth Century (New York, 1939). On the name, E. Peterson, 'Der Gottesfreund. Beiträge zur Geschichte eines religiösen Terminus' in Z.K.G., xlii (1923), pp. 161–202. A. Chiquot in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 493–500, s.v. 'Amis de Dieu'.

GOTTHARD, St. (d. 1038), also Godehard, Bp. of Hildesheim. A native of Reichersdorf in Bavaria, in 990 he received the monastic habit at Nieder-Altaich, where he rose to be prior and later abbot. His success as a ruler attracted the attention of the Emp. Henry I (who when Duke of Bavaria had been present at Gotthard's installation), who later commissioned him to reform many of the monasteries in Upper Germany. In 1022 he became Bp. of Hildesheim, where he was an ardent and successful ruler. It is said that the famous St. Gotthard Pass in the Alps takes its name from a former chapel dedicated to him on the summit. Feast day, 4 May.

Two lives by his disciple, Wolfher, the one written shortly after his death, the other c. thirty years later, ed. G. Pertz, in M.G.H., Scriptores, xi (1854), pp. 167–218, with introd., pp. 162–5. Some letters addressed to him are ed. by K. Strecker, ib., Epistolae Selectae, iii (1925), pp. 59–71 and 108–110. Modern lives by F. X. Sulzbeck (Ratisbon, 1863) and O. J. Blecher (Hildesheim, 1931). K. Algermissen in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 1034 f., s.v. 'Godehard'.

GOTTSCHALK (c. 804–c. 869), heterodox monk and theologian. A son of the Saxon count Bern, he was entered by his parents as an *oblate in the Benedictine abbey of *Fulda. For part of his education he was sent to *Reichenau, where he became friendly with *Walafrid Strabo. When it was time for him to be ordained deacon, he sought to leave the monastic life; his abbot, *Rabanus Maurus, strongly opposed his wishes, and his case was discussed at the Synod of Mainz (829). The outcome is not clear. We next hear of him in France, first apparently at *Corbie, where he studied under *Ratramnus, and then at *Reims under the protection of Abp. Ebbo. Finally he moved to Orbais in the diocese of Soissons. Here he devoted himself to the study of theology and elaborated an extreme doctrine of Divine *predestination. Basing himself on the anti-Pelagian treatises of St. *Augustine, he advocated a double predestination (the phrase came from *Isidore), acc. to which the chosen are predestined to blessedness and others to eternal fire, though not to sin; as a consequence of this view he restricted the universal saving will of God and the universality of Redemption. He obtained ordination at the hands of a *chorepiscopus, and after some years he set out with some companions to visit Rome. He propagated his views in Italy and the Balkans, where he preached to the Bulgars. Rabanus Maurus tried to stop his activities. In 848 Gottschalk returned to Germany to face his opponents, but at the Synod of Mainz his teaching was condemned. Rabanus sent him to *Hincmar, Abp. of Reims. In 849 at the Synod of *Quiercy he was again condemned, deprived of the orders he had received uncanonically, beaten, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Hincmar sent him to the monastery of Hautvillers. Nevertheless, Gottschalk was able to continue his theological studies and to engage in controversy. Hincmar wrote a pastoral letter in which he warned the simple folk of his diocese against the errors of Gottschalk, who replied with a statement of his views known as the 'Confessio prolixior'. Hincmar consulted *Prudentius of Troyes; and Rabanus, Johannes Scotus *Erigena, and the Church of Lyons (in effect *Florus), Ratramnus and Servatus *Lupus of Ferrières were drawn in, but these consultations only complicated the issue, and it was not until 859 at the Synod of Touzy that Hincmar was able to find a formula that satisfied those whom he had consulted. Gottschalk remained obdurate, and hoped that Pope *Nicholas I would reopen the case, but Nicholas died (867) before it was heard, and Gottschalk himself died unreconciled about two years later. He also defended the use of the phrase 'trina deitas' against Hincmar and took part in the Eucharistic controversy raised by *Paschasius Radbertus. He was a religious poet of a high order. Apart from some of his poems, his works had little circulation, and it was not until 1631 that Abp. *Ussher printed his two 'Confessions', at a time when the doctrine of predestination was once more a live issue. They attracted the sympathetic notice of the *Jansenists. In 1930 G. *Morin discovered a collection of his theological writings, to which C. Lambot was able to add grammatical writings. These writings give a strong impression of unusual independence of mind, for example in criticizing not only classical authors like Priscian, but also Fathers, such as *Jerome and *Gregory the Great.

Gotteschalci et praedestinatianae controversiae ab eo motae historia, ed. J. Ussher (Dublin, 1631). G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Gottschalk retrouvé' in R. Bén., xliii (1931), pp. 303–12. Crit. ed., with new texts, by C. Lambot, O.S.B. (ed.), Œuvres théologiques et grammaticales de Godescalc d'Orbais (S.S.L., xx; 1945). The projected second volume on his life, writings and doctrine did not appear, but see K. Vielhaber, Gottschalk der Sachse (Bonner historische Forschungen, v; 1956). C. Lambot, O.S.B., 'Lettre inédite de Godescalc d'Orbais' in R. Bén., lxviii (1958), pp. 41–51. J. Jolivet, Godescalc d'Orbais et la Trinité. La Méthode de la théologie à l'époque carolingienne (Études de philosophie médiévale, xlvii; 1958). Poems ed. L. Traube in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 707–738; K. Strecker, ib., iv (1923), pp. 934–6; and N. Fickermann, ib., vi (fasc. 1, 1951), pp. 86–106. B. Bischoff, 'Gottschalks Lieb für den Reichenauer Freund' in Medium Aevum Vivum. Festschrift für Walter Bulst, ed. H. R. Jauss–D. Schaller (Heidelberg, 1960), pp. 61–8; repr. in Mittelalterliche Studien, ii (Stuttgart, 1967), pp. 26–34. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, i (1964), pp. 235–44, with bibl. reff. C. Lambot in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 888 f.

GOULBURN, EDWARD MEYRICK (1818–97), Dean of *Norwich. Educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, he was a Fellow of Merton from 1841 to 1846. In 1847 he became chaplain to S. *Wilberforce and in 1849 headmaster of Rugby. In 1850 he preached the *Bampton Lectures on the Resurrection of the Body (publd. 1851). His dislike of the liberal tradition upheld by his predecessors at Rugby, T. *Arnold and A. C. *Tait, led to a decline in numbers and in 1857 he felt obliged to resign. In 1859 he became vicar of St. John's, Paddington, and in 1866 Dean of Norwich. Here he upheld a strict but moderate ecclesiastical orthodoxy and published his Thoughts on Personal Religion (1862) and The Pursuit of Holiness (1869), both very popular in their day. He was also the author of the Life of J. W. *Burgon (2 vols., 1892), Reminiscences of C. P. Golightly (1886), and of several other works.

B. Compton, Edward Meyrick Goulburn (1899). A. F. Pollard in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), p. 333 f.

GRABE, JOHANNES ERNST (1666–1711), Anglican divine of German birth. Born and educated at Königsberg, where he was appointed Privatdozent in 1685, he was led to question the validity of Lutheran orders and contemplated becoming a RC. On the recommendation of P. J. *Spener, however, he made his way to England in 1697 in the belief that here he would find a Church possessing the *Apostolic succession. He was ordained to the priesthood and entered into close relations with the *Nonjurors, but without losing his esteem for the Establishment. A royal pension having been soon settled on him, Grabe gave himself up to research into the texts of the Bible and the early Fathers. His published writings included Spicilegium SS. Patrum, ut et haereticorum, seculi post Christum natum I, II, et III (2 vols., 1698–9), editions of the First Apology of St. *Justin (1700) and of St. *Irenaeus (1702), and an edition of a considerable portion of the *Septuagint based on the *Codex Alexandrinus (1707–9).

R. Hooper in D.N.B., xx (1890), p. 306 f., s.v.; J. Erdmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), p. 56 f., s.v. On his ed. of the Septuagint, H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 182–4.

GRABMANN, MARTIN (1875–1949), historian of medieval philosophy and theology. He was born at Winterzhofen, ordained priest in 1898, and appointed professor of theology and philosophy at Eichstätt in 1906. In 1913 he became professor of Christian philosophy at Vienna university and in 1918 professor of theology at Munich. Inspired and encouraged by H. *Denifle and F. *Ehrle, by tireless research among manuscripts throughout Europe, he became the first to give a clear account of the development and ramifications of scholastic thought, and to seek in the works of *Thomas Aquinas the evolution and changes of thought rather than the outline of a fixed system. Through his own disciples, such as K. Baeumker and B. Geyer, and others such as E. *Gilson who used his work, his influence lies behind almost all the advances made in this field of studies. His works include Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode (1909–11), Mittelalterliches Geistesleben (3 vols., 1926–56), Der lateinische Averroismus (1931), Die Werke des heiligen Thomas von Aquin (1931), Die Geschichte der katholischen Theologie (1933), and Methoden und Hilfsmittel des Aristoteles-Studiums im Mittelalter (1939). Accessible in English is Thomas Aquinas (1928), a brief compendious exposition.

Festschrift for Grabmann's 60th birthday, entitled Aus der Geisteswelt des Mittelalters (B.G.P.M., Supplementband iii, 2 Hftt.; 1935), with bibl. to date [i, pp. xxiii–xxxv]. Autobiographical introduction appended to Grabmann's Mittelalterliches Geistesleben, iii (1956), pp. 1–9, and bibl. by L. Ott, pp. 10–35.

GRACE. In Christian theology, the supernatural assistance of God bestowed upon a rational being with a view to his sanctification. While the necessity of this aid is generally admitted, the manner of it has been a subject of discussion among Christians since the 4th cent.

The Scriptural doctrine, though fragmentary, historically is important because of the way in which isolated texts have been handled in controversy. In the Bible the word 'grace' is largely confined to St. Paul, but the thought is widespread. It denotes the sovereign divine favour shown towards undeserving and ungrateful men simply on account of their need (Mt. 5. 45, Lk. 18. 9–14). Hence it is not the answer to a legal claim on God but to faith in Him (Rom. 4. 13–16, Eph. 2. 5–8). It is effectively displayed in particular divine activities—supremely in the redemptive death of Christ (Rom. 3. 21–25, 5. 6–8, Heb. 2. 9), then in the calling of the Church to its existence and mission (Gal. 1. 6, 2 Cor. 4. 15) and in the making of apostolic ministers (Rom. 1. 5, 15. 15–16, 1 Cor. 15. 10, Gal. 1. 15, 2. 9, Eph. 3. 2–10) with the consequent necessary endowments (Rom. 12. 6–8, 1 Tim. 4. 14, 2 Tim. 1. 6). Indeed the whole range of Christian life within the Church is derived from grace (as when the generous support of needy fellow-Christians is prompted by recalling 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich', 2 Cor. 8. 4–9), and the most comprehensive blessing that can be invoked always includes 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ'.

The first attempt at formulating a doctrine of grace is found in *Tertullian, whose original contribution was the idea of grace as the Divine energy working in the soul. Although at times he represented it as coercive, he elsewhere emphasized strongly man's responsibility (e.g. Adv. Marc, ii. 9). But the theology of grace first emerged clearly in the controversy between St. *Augustine and *Pelagius, the complete divergence between whose doctrines was caused by their opposing views of human nature. To the former fallen man was 'one mass of sin' (De div. quaest. ad Simplicianum, I. 2, 16); to the latter sin was only the following of an evil example. Logically, therefore, Augustine held that all deserved damnation (De nat. et grat., 5), from which, however, God's mercy reserved a fixed number of souls (De corrept. et grat., 39). The logical inference from this, though Augustine never taught it, was predestination to damnation. Grace was at all times necessary, since man by himself, in consequence of the Fall, could only sin (De spir. et litt., 5). In Baptism was received remission of sins and the grace of justification (De pecc. mer. et remiss., III. 6, 9). Such grace was essential to the Christian for the performance of good works, and existed in an attenuated form in Jews and heretics. The apparent virtues of the heathen were only vices (C. duas Epist. Pelag., 3. 14). Against this teaching *Pelagianism held that grace was not needed for the performance of good actions, but was given in order that the commands of God might be more easily fulfilled (De grat. Christi et de pecc. orig., I. 26). Augustine at times called such Divine grace the gift of the Spirit. At other times he equated it with the Spirit Himself. It was not indefectible since for salvation the gift of perseverance was needed (De corrept. et grat., 10), but it is not unfair to say it was irresistible; for he stated that it unfailingly attained its object (ib., 38, 45).

Augustine endeavoured to preserve man's free-will by distinguishing between prevenient grace (i.e. grace antecedent to conversion), which is the free gift of God, and subsequent grace, in which the Divine energy co-operates with man after his conversion, and also by distinguishing sufficient from efficacious grace. The former, though adequate, is not in fact followed by its proper result, while the latter is so followed. The effect depends on the congruity or appropriateness of the grace, and that is of God's choice. In practice, though controversy led him to emphasize the influence of God's grace at the expense of man's free-will, he strongly emphasized man's responsibility (e.g. De grat. et lib. arb., 2, 5).

*Semi-Pelagianism endeavoured to mediate between the doctrines of Augustine and Pelagius. Its chief exponent, John *Cassian, while accepting Augustine's teaching on original sin, rejected total depravity, irresistible grace, and unconditional predestination (i.e. ante praevisa merita). Though grace was universally necessary, the will remained free at all stages.

The Second Council of *Orange (529) attempted to settle the question on an Augustinian basis, but with important modifications. Prevenient grace was taught, being rendered necessary by the Fall, but emphasis was laid on human co-operation after conversion. Reprobation (i.e. predestination to damnation) was anathematized. When in the 9th cent. *Gottschalk attempted to teach a sharpened Augustinianism, embodying double predestination and denying that Christ died for all, he was condemned by the Council of Mainz in 848.

Controversy revived in the 13th cent. St. *Thomas Aquinas in general followed the teaching of St. Augustine, though he differentiated more clearly between predestination to grace and that to glory and laid more stress on free-will. He was the first to distinguish accurately between 'habitual' and 'actual' grace (v. inf.). The teaching of *Duns Scotus, *Alexander of Hales, and St. *Bonaventure is of considerable interest. In general they are in sympathy with the teaching of Cassian, himself largely dependent on St. John *Chrysostom. Original sin was reduced to a 'loss of original righteousness', owing to the 'deprivation of supernatural gifts' that Adam suffered at the Fall, so that even the unbaptized could, by initiating some movement towards virtue, merit '*congruous grace'. Other striking medieval doctrines are Alexander's identification of prevenient grace with the 'general assistance' (assistentia generalis) of God, and Scotus's teaching on the timelessness of God in relation to the theology of grace.

Later controversies are in essence contained in the above. The Reformers returned to Augustinianism. M. *Luther, at any rate in his earlier period, and the followers of J. *Calvin taught absolute predestination, to which the latter added the indefectibility of grace. In Holland the followers of Jacobus Arminius (d. 1604) taught a doctrine (see Arminianism) closely resembling that of Cassian, which had affinities with Caroline thought on the subject in England.

The Church of England in the *Thirty-Nine Articles and the Church of Rome at the Council of *Trent substantially followed the Council of Orange. An attempt to introduce Calvinist teaching in the *Lambeth Articles of 1595 was unsuccessful. In the Roman Church there have been two serious controversies. The teaching of the later scholastics reappeared in the doctrines upheld by L. de *Molina, S.J., and the resultant controversy dragged on until 1607, when it was shelved by *Paul V. The Jansenist controversy arose from the posthumous publication in 1640 of the Augustinus by C. O. *Jansen, Bp. of Ypres (d. 1638). Two propositions allegedly contained in it, and embodying an exaggerated Augustinianism, were condemned by *Innocent X in 1653. It is disputed how far they accurately represent Jansen's position.

The relation between grace and the Sacraments has produced similar difficulties. There are four main lines of approach. (1) The Sacraments are symbols, which produce feelings in the recipients which enable them to receive grace. This denies a unique status to the Sacraments. (2) They are God's instruments for the direct causation of grace. This does not account for the difficulties that arise in the reception of, e.g., baptism in bad faith. (3) The theory of moral causation, i.e. the Church impetrates for the recipient the particular grace implied. The Sacrament becomes an acted prayer of the Church, and therefore of Christ. (4) The Sacraments convey a title exigent of grace. The title can only be appropriated if a right disposition is attained.

In the theology of grace, the following distinctions have been currently drawn:

(1) Habitual or sanctifying grace. The gift of God inhering in the soul, by which men are enabled to perform righteous acts. It is held to be normally conveyed in the Sacraments.

(2) Actual grace. A certain motion of the soul, bestowed by God ad hoc for the production of some good act. It may exist in the unbaptized.

(3) Prevenient grace. That form of actual grace which leads men to sanctification before the reception of the Sacraments. It is the free gift of God ('gratuitous'), and entirely unmerited.

See also Efficacious Grace, Sufficient Grace.

The subject is treated at length in the standard textbooks of Dogmatic Theology. The Tridentine teaching is stated in full in D. *Soto, O.P., Ad Sanctum Concilium Tridentinum de Natura et Gratia (Venice, 1547). The Jesuit doctrine had its classical exponent in various works of F. Suarez, S.J. (q.v.). Cf. also D. *Petavius, S.J., 'De Lege et Gratia', pr. in his Opus de Doctrina Temporum, iii (new ed., Antwerp, 1703), pp. 212–55. G. H. Joyce, S.J., The Catholic Doctrine of Grace (1920; ed. 2, 1930); J. Daujat, La Grâce et nous chrétiens (1956; Eng. tr., 1959). Studies by Anglicans include E. Jauncey, The Doctrine of Grace up to the End of the Pelagian Controversy (1925); N. P. *Williams, The Grace of God (1930); L. Hodgson, The Grace of God in Faith and Philosophy (Paddock Lectures, 1936; 1936); O. Hardman, The Christian Doctrine of Grace (1937) and A. G. Hebert, S.S.M., Grace and Nature (1937). A wide spectrum of views is represented in W. T. Whitley (ed.), The Doctrine of Grace (1932) [Essays prepared for the Theological Committee appointed by the Continuation Committee of the *Faith and Order Movement]. On the word, C. Moussy, Gratia et sa famille (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de l'Université de Clermont-Ferrand, deuxième série, xxv; 1966). H. R. Mackintosh in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), pp. 364–7, s.v.; E. L. van Becelaere, ib., pp. 367–72, s.v. 'Grace, Doctrine of (Roman Catholic)', with valuable bibl. J. Van der Meersch in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1554–1687, s.v.; various writers, incl. E. *Brunner, in R.G.G. (ed. 2), ii (1928), cols. 1253–68, s.v. 'Gnade Gottes'. G. Baumgartner–P. Tihon in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 701–50, s.v., with bibl.

GRACE AT MEALS (in earlier English, Graces). The custom of giving thanks before and after food is natural and not exclusively Christian. It was followed by Christ (Jn. 6. 11) and the Apostles (e.g. Acts 27. 35). In religious houses, and later in schools and colleges, fixed forms were provided, and are recited audibly at the principal meals. The Breviarium Romanum* provided a form with the title Benedictio Mensae.* Many other forms of grace are traditional among both RCs and other Christians.

H. L. Dixon, 'Saying Grace' historically considered, and numerous forms of Grace, taken from ancient and modern sources (1903). E. von der Goltz, Tischgebete und Abendmahlsgebete in der altchristlichen und in der griechischen Kirche (T.U., xxix (2b); 1905). L. Gougaud, O.S.B., 'Notes sur les prières chrétiennes de la table' in Rassegna Gregoriana, viii (1909), cols. 524–7. W. E. Scudamore in D.A.C., i (1875), p. 745 f., s.v.; J. Baudot in D.A.C.L., i (1910), cols. 713–16, s.v. 'Bénédiction de la table ou des aliments'. T. Barnes in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), pp. 372–4 (with many examples of liturgical graces).

GRACE, Pilgrimage of. See Pilgrimage of Grace.

GRADINE (a word of French origin). A ledge above and behind the altar upon which the cross, candlesticks, and other ornaments are sometimes placed. Such ledges became common from the 16th cent. Since the altar is properly a table, gradines are now very generally held to be the mark of a debased use, on the ground that the correct place for the ornaments is on the altar itself. See also Retable.

GRADUAL (Lat. gradus, 'step'). In the W. Church, the set of *antiphons, usually from the Psalms, sung immediately after the first Scriptural lesson. The name, which is found as far back as *Rabanus Maurus, derives from the practice of singing it either on the altar steps or while the deacon was ascending the steps of the *ambo. Originally it was chanted only by the cantors or choir, and not until later in the Middle Ages did the practice of its recitation also by the priest become established. The gradual used to be omitted from the Sunday immediately after *Easter to the Saturday before *Whitsun. Since 1969 its place has usually been taken by a *responsorial Psalm sung by the cantor or choir and the people, but the gradual texts may still be used. The word 'gradual' is also applied to the book containing the texts. The older English form of the word is 'Grail'.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 543–57; Eng. tr. (New York, 1951), pp. 421–35, with refs. M. Huglo in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 685–7, s.v.

GRADUAL PSALMS, The. The group of Psalms, Pss. 120–34, each of which bears a title in Hebrew rendered by St. *Jerome 'canticum graduum', and in the AV 'A Song of Degrees' (RV, 'Ascents'). Various explanations of the title have been offered, referring it: (1) to the supposed literary character of the Psalms, as containing instances of a step-like progression; (2) to the 'lifting-up' of the heart in praise; (3) to the 'going up' of the Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem after the Exile; most probably (4) to the 'going up' of pilgrims to Jerusalem for annual festivals; or (5) to the 15 'ascents' or steps which led from the Women's Court to that of the men in the Temple area. The *Mishnah tractate Middoth ii. 5 describes these steps as 'corresponding to the fifteen Songs of Ascents in the Psalms'; it has been inferred that one was sung on each step.

In addition to comm. on Psalms (q.v.), see also W. Riedel, 'Die Stufenpsalmen' in Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, xvii (1906), pp. 43–56 and 83–105; J. Calès, 'Le Psautier des montées' in Rech. S.R., xvii (1927), pp. 288–313, 434–44, 532–7, and xviii (1928), pp. 326–44 and 489–99. C. C. Keet, A Study of the Psalms of Ascents. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary upon Psalms CXX to CXXXIV (1969).

GRAFFITI (Ital.). The name given to ancient inscriptions which are merely roughly or casually scratched and not properly carved. Christian graffiti are numerous, esp. in the *catacombs of Rome and at other ancient holy places. They generally take the form of memorials of the dead and prayers to God or the saints commemorated there, scratched by mourners, worshippers, or visitors. Of particular interest are those under *St. Peter's, Rome, and those under San Sebastiano by the Via Appia, which show a remarkable mixture of Latin and Greek and are in some cases quite illiterate.

G. B. *de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, ii (1867), pp. 13–20. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1453–1542, s.v. 'Graffites', with refl. Jocelyn [M. C.] Toynbee–J. W. Perkins, The Shrine of St. Peter (1956), passim (see index); Margherita Guardicci, I graffiti sotto la Confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano (3 vols., 1958). See also works cited s.v. St. Peter's, Rome.

GRAFTON, RICHARD (d. c. 1572), printer of *Matthew's Bible and English Prayer Books. A London merchant, who had become an ardent supporter of the Reformation, he arranged c. 1536 with a fellow-merchant, Edward *Whitchurch, for the printing at Antwerp of the modified form of M. *Coverdale's translation known as Matthew's Bible. A copy was dispatched to T. *Cranmer on 13 Aug. 1537 and six more to T. *Cromwell on 28 Aug. Their enthusiastic reception led Grafton to arrange for a large edition at Paris, then noted for its paper and founts, from the press of François Regnault, and in Nov. 1538 copies of the NT, with the Latin text against the English, were put on sale in London. The printing of the whole Bible (the '*Great Bible') was completed in 1539; but shortly afterwards it was suspended by the *Sorbonne. Grafton escaped to England and later the types were also rescued and brought over. Other works bearing his imprint (mostly in conjunction with Whitchurch) were The Prymer (1540; see Primer), the proclamation directing the Great Bible to be read in churches (6 May 1541), the English Gospels and Epistles (8 May 1546), the *First Book of Homilies (1547), and the First (1549) and Second (1552) Books of Common Prayer. Under *Mary he lost his position as King's Printer, and for a time he suffered imprisonment. In 1554 and again in 1557 he was elected M.P. for London and in 1563 for Coventry.

His Chronicle (2 vols., 1568) was repr. in 2 vols., London, 1809. J. A. Kingdon, Incidents in the Lives of T. Poyntz and R. Grafton (1895); id., Richard Grafton, Citizen and Grocer of London and one time Master of his Company, Servant and Printer to Edward, Prince and King, and First Treasurer General of Christ's Hospital (1901). E. G. Hamann, 'The Clarification of Some Obscurities Surrounding the Imprisonment of Richard Grafton in 1541 and 1543' in The Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, lii (1958), pp. 262–82. S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xxii (1890), pp. 310–13.

GRAHAM, 'BILLY' (William Franklin Graham, 1918–), American evangelist. Born in North Carolina, he experienced conversion at the age of sixteen and began to preach while still at high school, and later as a student, first at the Bible Institute, Florida, then in Tennessee, and then at Wheaton College, Illinois, where he graduated. Having entered the Southern *Baptist ministry, in 1943 he took a leading part in the American 'Youth For Christ' movement. In 1948 he became President of Northwestern Schools, Minneapolis, and in 1949 began his first great evangelistic campaign at Los Angeles. Thereafter he toured the U.S.A., making full use of radio and television. He first visited Great Britain in 1954 where he made a deep impression on large gatherings at Harringay and elsewhere. There was another visit in 1966.

The many studies include an 'authorized biography' by J. Pollock (London, 1966).

GRAIL. An older form of the word Gradual (q.v.), derived through the Old French grael from the same root.

GRAIL, The Holy. In medieval romances, a vessel possessing spiritual powers and qualities, and affording, under certain conditions, mystical benefits to its beholders. The legend first appears in the Perceval of Chrestien de Troyes (?1180–90) and, in a Christianized version, in the Estoire dou Graal (or Joseph d'Arimatie) of Robert de Boron (c. 1190). In the *Cistercian Queste del Saint Graal and in the Parzifal of Wolfram von Eschenbach (c. 1200) the legend of the Grail is incorporated with the stories of Arthur and the Round Table, and made to bear an exalted moral interpretation. The origins of the legend, which appears to contain elements of the most diverse provenance, are obscure. In the extant versions, the Grail itself is sometimes identified with the cup used by Christ in the *Last Supper, which later belonged to *Joseph of Arimathea, and its effects upon those who see it are made to correspond closely with the effects of Holy Communion upon communicants. The whole legend, however, remained within the field of secular literature, and was never recognized by any ecclesiastical authority.

The Perceval was ed. from a MS. of the Dukes of Burgundy at Brussels (MS. 11145) by C. Potvin, Brussels, 1866; Eng tr. of this text by S. Evans, The High History of the Holy Graal (2 vols., Temple Classics, 1898; repr. in Everyman's Library [1910]). Further Eng. tr. of The Quest of the Holy Grail by W. W. Comfort, London, 1926. There is a very wide literature on the subject. Studies in English include A. Nutt, Studies on the Legend of the Holy Grail, with special reference to the Hypothesis of its Celtic Origin (Folk-Lore Society, xxiii; 1888); S. Evans, In Quest of the Holy Grail. An Introduction to the Study of the Legend (1898); Dorothy Kempe, The Legend of the Holy Grail, its Sources, Character and Development (E.E.T.S., Extra Series, xcv; 1905), with refl. to edd. of Early English versions; Jessie L. Weston, The Legend of Sir Percival (Grimm Library, xvii and xix; 1906–9). Id., From Ritual to Romance (1920), pp. 130–54; R. S. Loomis, Celtic Myth and Arthurian Legend (New York, 1927), pp. 139–270; id., Arthurian Tradition and Chrétien de Troyes (New York, 1949), pp. 335–459; id. in id. (ed.), Arthurian Literature in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1959), pp. 274–94 ('The Origin of the Grail Legends'), with extensive bibl.; D. R. D. Owen, The Evolution of the Grail Legend (1968). M. Cocheril, O.C.R., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 672–700, s.v. 'Graal (Le saint)'.

GRANDE CHARTREUSE, La. The mother house of the *Carthusian Order, situated in the Dauphiné Alps, some 15 miles north of Grenoble. A primitive monastery on the site was built by St. *Bruno in 1084. It was many times destroyed by fire and rebuilt before the present monastery was begun in 1676. In 1904 the monks were forcibly ejected under the '*Association Laws' of 1901, and the building secularized. The famous liqueur was thereafter made by the expelled monks at Tarragona in Spain. In 1940 Carthusians were permitted to return to La Grande Chartreuse.

B. Bligny, Recueil des plus anciens actes de la Grande-Chartreuse (1086–1196) (Grenoble, 1958). [C. M. Boutrais, O.S.B.,] La Grande Chartreuse (Grenoble, 1881, and numerous subsequent editions; abridged Eng. tr., 1893). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1322–4, s.v., for full reff.

GRANDMONT, Order of. French religious order, now extinct. It was founded by St. Stephen of Muret (c. 1054–1124). Its early history is uncertain, and its rule was not drawn up until 1143. The order established their mother house at Grandmont in Normandy under a prior. The discipline was severe, strict poverty and silence were observed, and the monks were popularly known as 'Bons Hommes'. From c. 1184 disputes arose between monks and lay brothers, and though these were temporarily allayed, discipline began to relax more and more. In 1643 a Strict Observance branch was formed, but it was short-lived, and the order came to an end in the French Revolution. There had been three houses in England (c. 1222–1464): Alberbury, Creswell, and Grosmont.

Rose Graham–A. W. Clapham, 'The Order of Grandmont and its Houses in England' in Archaeologia, lxxv (1926), pp. 159–210, with reff. Heimbucher, i, p. 326 f., with bibl. J. Becquet, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., iv (pt. 2; 1961), cols. 1504–14, s.v. 'Étienne (15) de Muret', with bibl.; J. C. Dickinson in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 694 f., s.v.

GRATIAN (12th cent.: d. not later than 1159), author of the 'Decretum Gratiani' and virtually the father of canon law. Practically nothing is known of his life. He appears to have been a native of central Italy, professed as a *Camaldolese monk; he taught at the monastery of that order in *Bologna and is mentioned as a consultant to a papal judge in 1143.

His 'Concordantia Discordantium Canonum', which later came to be known as the 'Decreta' or 'Decretum Gratiani', is a collection of nearly 4,000 patristic texts, conciliar decrees, and papal pronouncements touching on all fields of Church discipline, which he presented in a framework of a treatise designed to resolve into harmony all the contradictions and inconsistencies of his sources. The date of the 'Decretum' is much disputed, but since it incorporates decisions of the Second Lateran Council of 1139, it cannot have been earlier than that year. It quickly became the basic text on which masters of canon law lectured, first at Bologna, and before the end of the 12th cent. also at Oxford, Paris and elsewhere. Although it never received formal approbation, it was used as an authority in the practice of the papal curia and came to form the first part of the Corpus Iuris Canonici. 'It has always been held one of Gratian's fundamental merits that he gave to Canon Law the shape of a legal system, approached it with juridical categories of thinking and separated it as an autonomous practical subject matter distinct from dogmatic theology' (S. Kuttner). *Dante (Paradiso, x. 103–5) assigns to Gratian a place in paradise.

The standard ed. is that of A. Friedberg in his ed. of the Corpus Iuris Canonici, i (Leipzig, 1879). A. van Hove, Commentarium Lovaniense in Codicem Iuris Canonici, i, tomus 1 (ed. 2, Mechlin–Rome, 1945), pp. 338–48, with reff. S. Kuttner, 'The Father of the Science of Canon Law' in The Jurist, i (1948), pp. 2–19, with extensive reff. G. Fransen, 'La Date du décret de Gratien' in R.H.E., li (1956), pp. 521–31, with bibl. G. Le Bras, Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en Occident, vii: L'Age classique, by G. Le Bras, C. Lefebvre and J. Rambaud (1965), pp. 47–129. A. Villien, S.J., and J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1727–1751, s.v. J. Rambaud-Buhot in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 706–9, s.v. 'Gratian, Decretum of'. Studia Gratiana post Octava Decreti Saecularia (14 vols., Bonn, 1953–67; vol. xv &c., Rome, 1972 ff.). See also bibl. to Canon Law and Corpus Iuris Canonici.

GRATRY, AUGUSTE JOSEPH ALPHONSE (1805–72), French Catholic apologist. After a severe mental conflict, described in Souvenirs de ma jeunesse (published 1874 by A. Perraud), he was ordained priest in 1832. He was successively professor of the Petit Séminaire of Strassburg (1828), director of the Collège Stanislas (1840), and chaplain of the École Normale Supérieure (1846). In 1861 he became Vicar-general of Orléans and in 1867 was elected a member of the French Academy. He was deeply concerned for the revival of Church life in France and took a principal part in the restoration of the *Oratory (under the title of the Immaculate Conception). He was among the *Inopportunists in opposing the definition of Papal Infallibility, but, after the *Vatican Council, submitted to the decrees. His many books, which sought to present the Christian faith to educated opinion and had a large circulation, include De la connaissance de Dieu (2 vols., 1853), La Logique (1855), Les Sources, conseils pour la direction de l'esprit (1861–2), La Morale et la loi de l'histoire (1868), and Lettres sur la religion (1869). His somewhat independent approach to theology, which included a proof of the existence of God by induction with the aid of the infinitesimal calculus, brought him into conflict with some of the authorities during his lifetime. His teaching had some affinities with *ontologism; but Gratry certainly rejected ontological doctrines in the form given them by N. *Malebranche.

Souvenirs de ma jeunesse (1874; autobiographical). A. Perraud, Le Père Gratry. Ses derniers jours, son testament spirituel (1872; Eng. tr., 1872); id., Le Père Gratry, sa vie et ses œuvres (1900); A. Chauvin, Le Père Gratry d'après des documents inédits (1901); J. Vaudon, Une Âme de lumière, le Père Gratry (1914). A. Largent in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1754–63, s.v.; M. Join-Lambert in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 781–5, s.v., with bibl.

GRAVAMEN (Med. Lat., a 'grievance'). A memorial sent from the Lower to the Upper House of *Convocation with a view to securing the remedy of disorders or grievances in the Church.

GRAVE-DIGGERS. See Fossors.

GRAY, GEORGE BUCHANAN (1865–1922), OT and Semitic scholar. In 1893 he was ordained to the *Congregationalist ministry, and from 1900 until his sudden death was professor of Hebrew and OT exegesis at Mansfield College, Oxford. He combined original and sound judgement with great knowledge of detail, and became one of the most respected OT scholars and teachers of his generation. Of outstanding merit were his volumes in the 'International Critical Commentaries'—Numbers (1903), Isaiah I–XXVII (1912), and Job (with S. R. *Driver, 1921). In his Sacrifice in the Old Testament (1925, posthumous) he made a notable contribution to OT theology.

List of G. B. Gray's publd. writings in the last-named work, pp. ix–xi. G. R. *Driver in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 356–8.

GRAY, ROBERT (1809–72), Bp. of Cape Town and Metropolitan of Africa. He was the son of Robert Gray, Bp. of Bristol (1762–1834), who ordained him deacon in 1833. He was priested in 1834 and in 1845 became Vicar of Stockton-on-Tees. He soon afterwards reluctantly accepted the bishopric of Cape Town and was consecrated in 1847. He promoted the division of his diocese by establishing new bishoprics at Grahamstown and Natal, and resigned his see in 1853 in order to facilitate its reconstitution as a metropolitan see. He was reappointed Bp. and Metropolitan by Letters Patent in the same year.

In 1861 he suspended from cure of souls and in 1862 withdrew the licence of Mr. Long, a clergyman who had refused to attend synods on the grounds that Gray's Letters Patent gave him no authority to summon them. The colonial courts agreed that the Letters Patent of 1853, being issued after the establishment of constitutional rule in the colony, gave Gray no coercive jurisdiction, but held that Mr. Long was bound by his voluntary submission to submit to the decisions of the Bp. On appeal, however, the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1863, while agreeing that the Letters Patent were ineffectual to create any jurisdiction, denied that the synod was a court and held that the dispute must be treated as a suit between members of a religious body not established by law, and maintained that by the laws of the C of E Mr. Long's behaviour had not warranted deprivation. The judgement was of constitutional importance in that it ended the legal contention that the C of E as a body established by law extended to all the dominions of the crown.

Also in 1863, J. W. *Colenso, Bp. of Natal, was presented on a charge of heresy to Gray, who deposed and excommunicated him. On appeal, Gray's decision was reversed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council who again in 1865 held that his Letters Patent could grant him no coercive authority over Colenso, who had been appointed earlier, in 1853. Gray gained some support from the *Convocation of Canterbury in 1866 and the Pan-Anglican Conference at *Lambeth in 1867 for his project of appointing another bishop for Natal with a different title. When W. K. Macrorie (1831–1905) accepted the post of Bp. of Maritzburg, there were legal difficulties about the consecration, which finally took place at Cape Town in 1869. By this time Gray's health was failing and he died in 1872. During his episcopate he added five new sees to the South African Church, viz., besides Grahamstown and Natal, St. Helena (1859) and the missionary sees of Zambesi (1861) and the Orange Free State Territory (1863).

[H. L. Farrer,] Life of Robert Gray, Bishop of Cape Town and Metropolitan of Africa, ed. C. N. Gray (son; 2 vols., 1876). A. E. M. Anderson-Morshead, A Pioneer and Founder. Reminiscences of some who knew Robert Gray (1905). Audrey Brooke, Robert Gray, First Bishop of Cape Town (Cape Town, 1947). N. Pocock in D.N.D., xxxiii (1890), pp. 17–19, s.v. See also works cited under Colenso, J. W.

GREAT AWAKENING, The. A name applied to a widespread religious revival in U.S.A. Beginnings of the movement may be traced among the Dutch Reformed Churches of New Jersey c. 1726; it spread to the *Presbyterians and *Congregationalists in the following decade and reached its zenith in New England in the early 1740s. It was closely associated with the preaching of Jonathan *Edwards and George *Whitfield, though both preachers discouraged the excessive emotionalism which marked the revival. Stress was laid on the visible evidences of conversion and those who did not manifest such tokens of inward grace were openly denounced as unregenerate. Both the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists became deeply divided over the theological implications of the revival, esp. the relative importance of experimental faith and correct doctrine. J. Edwards's Treatise concerning Religious Affections (1746) was designed to discriminate between the healthy and the morbid elements in the revival. During the later 1740s and in the following decade the revival spread into Virginia and even further south. The movement may be regarded as parallel to Continental *Pietism and English *Evangelicalism.

A similar revival at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th cent. is sometimes known as the 'Second Great Awakening'. This began among the Congregational Churches of New England, but came to affect the Presbyterians, *Methodists and *Baptists, and spread throughout the U.S.A. The early leaders of this revival determined to restrain excessive emotionalism and laid stress on the need for active works of Christian benevolence. By analogy, a further revival in the period c. 1875–1914 is sometimes called the 'Third Great Awakening'.

J. Tracy, The Great Awakening (Boston, 1842); C. H. Maxson, The Great Awakening in the Middle Colonies (Chicago, 1920); W. M. Gewehr, The Great Awakening in Virginia, 1740–90 (Durham, N.C., 1930); M. W. Armstrong, The Great Awakening in Nova Scotia, 1776–1809 (Studies in Church History, vii; Chicago, 1948); E. S. Gaustad, The Great Awakening in New England (New York, 1957). D. R. Rutman (ed.), The Great Awakening. Event and Exegesis (New York–London, 1970). K. S. Latourette in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 714 f., s.v.

GREAT BIBLE. The. The edition of the English Bible which Thomas *Cromwell ordered in Sept. 1538 to be set up in every parish church. It was not issued till the early summer of 1539 and was the work of M. *Coverdale, who had used as his basis *Matthew's Bible. The printing was begun in Paris, but owing to the hostility of the *Sorbonne, Coverdale was forced to transfer such of the sheets as he could rescue and the type to London. Its handsome title-page, which represents God blessing the King, who is handing out copies of the Bible to T. *Cranmer and T. Cromwell, is usually held to be the work of Hans Holbein. In Apr. 1540, after extensive revision by Coverdale, the 'Great Bible' was reissued with an important preface by Cranmer; in this version it is sometimes known as 'Cranmer's Bible'. From its rendering of Jer. 8. 22 the Great Bible was also popularly known as the *Treacle Bible. The 1539 edition was printed by R. *Grafton (q.v.).

Darlow–Moule, i (ed. A. S. Herbert, 1968), p. 25 f., later edd. pp. 28–35 and passim. A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 17–24, with documents, pp. 223–74, passim. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 175–81. See also bibl. to Bible (English Versions) and Grafton, R.

GREAT SCHISM. The term is used in two senses:

(1) The breach between the East and West, traditionally dated 1054. Political and ecclesiastical differences, together with theological disputes, had long embittered relations before Pope *Leo IX and *Michael Cerularius inflamed matters by suppressing Greek and Latin usages in their respective domains. Leo sent *legates to Constantinople to refuse the title of *Oecumenical Patriarch to Cerularius and to demand the recognition of the *Filioque clause. On the Greek refusal, the Latin leader, Cardinal *Humbert, excommunicated Cerularius, while the latter excommunicated the Western legates. This event of 1054 is commonly taken as the beginning of the schism, but the Western act was of doubtful validity, since Leo was dead, and the Eastern was personal to the legates. Negotiations continued over a long period, but the cruelties inflicted during the *Crusades, the capture of *Constantinople in 1204 and the imposition of Latin Patriarchs rendered nugatory the work of the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439) in endeavouring to restore unity. The formal repudiation of the Union of Florence by a Synod of Constantinople in 1484 marks the final breach. Though the division remains, in 1965 Pope *Paul VI and the Oecumenical Patriarch *Athenagoras simultaneously nullified the anathemas of 1054.

(2) The period 1378–1417, during which W. Christendom was divided by the creation of anti-popes. On the death of *Gregory XI, the last *Avignonese Pope, in 1378, the Abp. of Bari was elected as *Urban VI, the Cardinals being subjected to considerable pressure by the local Roman populace. When, in attempting reforms, he showed signs of insanity, the cardinals withdrew to Anagni, where they elected Cardinal Robert of Geneva as Clement VII, on the ground that their previous action had been taken under duress. Clement VII set up court at Avignon, and the two leaders attracted support along strongly nationalist lines. The *Conciliar Movement offered a means of resolving the schism, but the Council of *Pisa (1409) only produced another candidate for the papacy, *Alexander V. The Council of *Constance (1414–18) finally ended the schism by the election of *Martin V in 1417.

Popes and Anti-Popes:

Roman obedience: Urban VI (1378–89); Boniface IX (1389–1404); Innocent VII (1404–6); Gregory XII (1406–15).

Avignonese: Clement VII (1378–94); *Benedict XIII (1394–1423).

Pisan: Alexander V (1409–10); *John XXIII (1410–15).

(1) A. Michel, Humbert und Kerullarios (2 vols., Paderborn, 1924–30); id., Die Kaisermacht in der Ostkirche (843–1204) (Darmstadt, 1959). M. Jugie, A.A., Le Schisme byzantin, aperçu historique et doctrinal (1941). [J. C.] S. Runciman, The Eastern Schism (Oxford, 1955). M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1312–1468, s.v. 'Schisme byzantin', with older bibl.

(2) G. J. Jordan, The Inner History of the Great Schism in the West (1930); W. Ullmann, The Origins of the Great Schism (1948); J. H. Smith, The Great Schism, 1378 (1970). E. Vansteenberghe in D.T.C., xiv (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1468–92, s.v. 'Schisme d'Occident', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Conciliar Movement.

GREATER ANTIPHONS, The. See O-Antiphons.

GREATER ENTRANCE, The (Gk. ἡ μεγάλη εἴσοδος). In the E. Church, the solemn procession in which the Eucharistic bread and wine are carried from the *prothesis to the *altar. See also Lesser Entrance.

GREECE, Christianity in. Christianity was first preached in Greece in the 1st cent., principally by St. *Paul, whose main centre was *Corinth. Under the Christian Empire the Greek clergy won favour with their people by their general support of the popular cause, often against the Byzantine court and patriarchate. In the *Iconoclastic Controversy the Greeks always stood firm in the cause of the images against the iconoclastic emperors. Meanwhile, during the 8th to 10th cents., Slavonic invaders from the north were hellenized and converted, chiefly by the exertions of the Greek clergy. During the Frankish occupation, from 1204 onwards, the Church, though subject to a RC archbishop, retained its E. character and its hold upon the affections of its people. When the Turks became masters of Greece in 1503, the Greek clergy were favoured; they were given positions as minor officials and also acted as the representatives of their own nation in dealing with the Turks. In the War of Independence it was Abp. Germanos of Patras who raised the standard of revolt in Morea (Peloponnese) in 1821.

The Greek Church is in communion with *Constantinople, though it repudiated hierarchical connexion with it in 1833. It is governed by the 'Synod of the Hierarchy', which meets once a year; in the intervals executive power is vested in the permanent 'Holy Synod'. The Abp. of Athens presides over both bodies. The clergy are paid by the State, but Church–State links have been weakened since 1974. There is a relatively small community of RCs (mainly of the Latin Rite), with Abps. of Athens, Corfu, and Naxos, and there are a very few Protestants.

Maximilian, Prince of Saxony, Das christliche Hellas (Leipzig, 1918). C. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος (Athens, 1920 [19th cent.]). G. J. Konidaris, Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Ἱστορία τῆς Ἑλλάδος (2 vols., ib., 1960–70). B. Atesis, Ἐπίτομος Ἐπισκοπικὴ Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἀπὸ τοῦ 1833 μέχρι σήμερον (3 vols., Athens, 1948–69). P. Hammond, The Waters of Marah. The Present State of the Greek Church (1956). M. Rinvolucri, Anatomy of a Church. Greek Orthodoxy Today (1966). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), pp. 479–84; iv (1962), pp. 522–6. A. Fortescue in C.E., vi (1909), pp. 737–744, s.v.; H. Alivisatos in R.G.G. (ed. 2), ii (1928), cols. 1455–9, s.v. 'Griechenland'.

GREEK (Biblical and Patristic). The basis of the Greek of both the *Septuagint and the NT is the Hellenistic Greek (known as the Κοινή or 'Common' dialect) which spread over the Near East as the result of the conquests of Alexander the Great (d. 323 B.C.). This was a simplified form of Attic Greek, with some contributions from other dialects, the more delicate refinements in the use of particles, prepositions, participial constructions, and use of moods being smoothed away. Hellenistic Greek in its literary form appears in such writers as Polybius (d. 122 B.C.), *Philo, and *Josephus. Until recently it was generally supposed that the differences between the common Hellenistic and Biblical Greek were due to the influence on the latter of Hebrew and Aramaic; but the papyrus documents discovered in thousands in Egypt in the last eighty years have shown that very many of the usages and phrases supposed to be Biblical are in fact part of the vernacular language of the time. Some Hebrew influence remains, esp. in the Septuagint (which in turn influenced the NT), but often this means no more than that, of two forms of phrase employed in the vernacular, that one is chosen which comes nearest to the Hebrew phraseology.

Subject to these general considerations, there are differences between different writers. In the Septuagint, the *Pentateuch and Is. are in good Hellenistic Greek; the other Prophets, the Pss., Chron. and most of Sam. and Kgs. are nearer to the vernacular. On the other hand, some of the later books (Dan., 1 Esdr., Est., Job, Prov., Wisd.) are more literary and deliberately artistic in style. In the NT, Luke is the most literary writer, then come St. Paul and the author of Heb. St. Paul's style is educated Hellenistic Greek, but without deliberate literary refinements, while Heb. shows some conscious rhetoric. At the other end of the scale, Rev. is in an uneducated vernacular Greek, being frequently quite ungrammatical, though not more so than some of the papyri (the want of grammar, of course, usually disappears in English translations).

Apart from the general loss of the finer shades of Attic idiom, Hellenistic Greek is marked by such changes as the disappearance of the dual, a diminished use of the dative, interchange of the prepositions ἐν and εἰς, a tendency to amalgamate the perfect and aorist (leading in Patristic Greek to the gradual disuse of the perfect), an almost complete disuse of the optative, and many other modifications in the use of words. Just as in pronunciation the differentiation of vowels, and esp. of diphthongs, tends to become obliterated, so the whole system becomes that of a simple language for general utility, in place of the delicate sensitiveness of Attic Greek.

For the first three cents. Christian writers remained generally free from the influence of pagan literature. But when Christianity had become the religion of the Empire, Christians shared the education of the Greek world, and were moulded by the prevailing literary tendencies. These tendencies were pre-eminently a deliberate cultivation of Attic models, and a conscious elaboration of style fostered by the schools of rhetoric. *Patristic Greek is coloured by both these influences, found in varying degree in all the principal writers. Of the two most celebrated for their style, *Chrysostom, with his unselfconscious zeal for moral instruction, comes nearest to true Attic, while *Gregory of Nazianzus shows the elaborate rhetoric of the schools in all its intentional artistry. The Fathers in general—*Basil the Great, the *Cyrils, *Athanasius, and others of less note—show the current manner of Byzantine Greek on a lower plane of achievement. In all, however, the language is progressively affected by modifications in the meanings of words necessitated by the requirements of Christian theology and philosophy. These can be followed only in a detailed Patristic lexicon. In general, however, it may be said that Biblical Greek is the common Hellenistic Greek of the people, somewhat modified by Hebrew or Aramaic influence, while Patristic Greek is the Byzantine Greek of the rhetoricians and literary artists, somewhat modified to suit the needs of Christian thought and terminology.

The standard Greek-English Dictionary is that of H. G. Liddell and R. Scott (ed. 1, Oxford, 1843), constantly revised and extended by the orig. editors until the last ed. of 1897 (often reissued); it was completely revised under the editorship of H. S. Jones and R. Mackenzie and issued in 10 parts [2 vols., 1925–40] as the 'New Edition'. From this 'New Edition', however, words and usages found only in Patristic and Byzantine authors were excluded, in view of work then in progress on A Patristic Greek Lexicon, publd. under the editorship of G. W. H. Lampe (5 fascc., Oxford, 1961–8). Of older lexicons, the most ambitious was that of H. *Stephanus (4 vols., Paris, 1572; new ed. in 10 vols., London, 1816–28; revised in 8 vols., Paris, 1831–65). Of lexicons for the vocabulary of the NT only, the best of the older dictionaries was C. L. W. Grimm–J. H. Thayer (Edinburgh, 1886). More recent are the successive edd. of E. Preuschen (Giessen, 1910; ed. 2 by W. Bauer, ib., 1928; since ed. 3, 1936, with Bauer's name only; ed. 4, 1952; adapted Eng. tr. of ed. 4 by W. F. Arndt and F. W. Gingrich, Cambridge, 1957); this admirable work takes full account of the new knowledge of Hellenistic Greek and has full bibliographies. For words found in papyri, see also F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyruskunden (2 vols., 1925–7; suppl., 1931; with continuation by E. Kiessling, 1944 ff.). On the theological aspects of NT vocabulary, there is the important Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, ed. G. Kittel and G. Friedrich (10 vols. in 11; 1933–79). Good concise dictionary by A. *Souter, A Pocket Lexicon to the Greek New Testament (1916; often repr.).

Of NT Greek grammars, the most elaborate is A. Debrunner, Friedrich Blass' Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Griechisch (ed. 10, 1959; Eng. tr. and revision by F. W. Funk, Cambridge, 1961). Different in approach is the illuminating work of J. H. Moulton, A Grammar of New Testament Greek (vol. i, Prolegomena, 1906; vol. ii, Accidence and Word-Formation, ed. W. F. Howard, 1919–29; vol. iii, Syntax, by N. Turner, 1963; esp. notable is Moulton's introd. in vol. i). L. Radermacher, Neutestamentliche Grammatik. Das Griechisch des Neuen Testaments im Zusammenhang mit der Volkssprache (Hb.N.T., I (1), 1911; ed. 2, 1925). A. T. Robertson, A Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research (1914). H. E. Dana–J. R. Mantey, A Manual Grammar of the Greek New Testament (1927). C. F. D. Moule, An Idiom Book of New Testament Greek (1953).

For Patristic Greek, in addition to the above, E. A. Sophocles, Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods, B.C. 146–A.D. 1100 (Boston, Mass., 1870). Much useful material of a lexical and factual kind also in J. C. *Suicer (q.v.), Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus e Patribus Graecis (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1682). For OT Greek, H. St. J. Thackeray, A Grammar of the Old Testament in Greek, vol. i (all publd., 1909) and R. Helbing, Grammatik der Septuaginta (2 vols., 1907–28). Cf. also F. M. Abel, O.P., Grammaire du grec biblique (1927). E. Mayser, Grammatik der griechischen Papyri aus der Ptolemäerzeit (2 vols. in 4, 1906–1934).

Further important works include E. Hatch, Essays in Biblical Greek (1889); A. Thumb, Die griechische Sprache im Zeitalter des Hellenismus (1901); A. *Deissmann, Licht vom Osten (1908; ed. 4, 1923; Eng. tr. as Light from the Ancient East, 1910; revised from the 4th Germ. ed., 1927); C. H. *Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935); R. Devreesse, Introduction à l'étude des manuscrits grecs (1954).

J. Vergote in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iii (1938), cols. 1320–69, s.v. 'Grec biblique', with good bibl. See also bibl. to Papyrology.

GREEN, THOMAS HILL (1836–82), philosopher. Educated at Rugby under E. M. *Goulburn and at Balliol College, Oxford, under B. *Jowett, he was elected a Fellow of Balliol in 1860 and, after a period of unsettlement, eventually (1866) became a tutor at Balliol, where his unaffected sincerity exercised a deep and permanent influence over many of his pupils. From 1878 until his early death he was Whyte's Professor of moral philosophy at Oxford. In his later years he took an active part in projects for educational and social reform.

Green's main endeavour was to re-think and propagate in the English world the idealistic philosophical doctrines of I. *Kant and G. W. F. *Hegel. His position was largely worked out in polemic against the empirical views of D. *Hume and the then influential J. S. Mill. Theologically he owed much to F. D. *Maurice. He held that the analysis of consciousness proved that reality was an organic whole, a 'world of thought relations' and not a mere aggregate; that the evidence of art, morality, and religion all pointed to the spiritual nature of reality; that God, the eternal consciousness, was realized in each individual person; and that, since personality alone gave meaning to the evolutionary process, the permanence and immortality of the individual were assured. The basis of the State was not an externally imposed coercive authority, but a desire for the common good (a 'general will').

Green's teaching exercised a great influence on the Lux Mundi* school, which rejected, however, its extreme *immanentism. His chief published works were his Introduction to an edition of Hume's Treatise of Human Nature (1875), Prolegomena to Ethics (ed. by A. C. Bradley, 1883), and his Lectures on the Principles of Political Obligation (1895; ed. B. *Bosanquet).

Most of Green's writings were collected by R. L. Nettleship (3 vols., 1885–8). The 'Introduction to Hume' is in Vol. i; and a Memoir is prefaced to Vol. iii. W. H. Fairbrother, The Philosophy of T. H. Green (1896); W. D. Lamont, Introduction to Green's Moral Philosophy (1934); M. Richter, The Politics of Conscience. T. H. Green and his Age (1964). J. Pucelle, La Nature et l'esprit dans la philosophie de T. H. Green (2 vols., [1961]–1965). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), p. 55 f.

GREEN THURSDAY (Lat. dies viridium; Germ. Gründonnerstag). The usual name in Germany, also occasionally found elsewhere, for *Maundy Thursday. Its origin is perhaps connected with a custom of providing penitents, who had made their confession on *Ash Wednesday, with green branches on that day as tokens that their *penance was completed and that they were thereby received back into full ecclesiastical communion.

GREENWOOD, JOHN (d. 1593), a leader among the early English separatists. As a young man he was chaplain to Lord Rich, a *Puritan, and conducted unauthorized services in his house. When these were suppressed he moved to London, where he either found or created the 'Ancient Church' in a house in St. Paul's Churchyard. For this he was imprisoned in 1586; and he remained in prison for seven years with a short interval in 1592. He was constantly examined before the *High Commission and other courts, but stood firm, and along with his fellow prisoner, H. *Barrow, wrote many pamphlets defending the separatist cause. Both Barrow and Greenwood were hanged in 1593.

His own account of his examination, written in 1586 and publ. with that of H. Barrow and J. Penry (London, c. 1593), is repr. in The Harleian Miscellany, iv (c. 1745), pp. 338–40; 'A Pastoral Letter from Prison', prob. written c. the end of 1586, is pr. in Relics of the Puritan Martyrs, 1593 (Congregational Historical Society; 1906), pp. 17–23. The Writings of John Greenwood 1587–1590, together with the joint writings of Henry Barrow and John Greenwood 1587–1590, ed. L. H. Carlson (1962); The Writings of John Greenwood and Henry Barrow 1591–1593, ed. id. (1970). F. J. Powicke, Henry Barrow, Separatist (1550?–1593) and the Exiled Church of Amsterdam (1593–1622) (1900), esp. pp. 31–79 passim. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), p. 84 f.

GREGORIAN CALENDAR. The calendar as reformed in 1582 by *Gregory XIII, and now in use throughout most of the Christian world. As the Julian Calendar, devised by Julius Caesar (46 B.C.), did not correspond with sufficient accuracy to the period taken by the earth to go round the sun (just under 365¼ days), an error of ten days had accumulated by the 16th cent. Gregory in his bull 'Inter gravissimas' of 24 Feb. 1582 ordered that matters should be remedied by reckoning the day after 4 Oct. of that year as 15 Oct. To prevent a recurrence of the situation it was decided that the century years were only to be leap years when divisible by 400 (e.g. 1600, 2000). Protestant countries were reluctant to introduce it, and it was not adopted in England until 1752. In a few RC Churches of E. rites it had been accepted before the beginning of the 19th cent., but even now most of their individual members follow the Julian Calendar. The Orthodox Churches only began to accept it in 1924. In the Julian Calendar fixed feasts now fall thirteen days later than in the Gregorian, but the two Easters, and feasts depending thereon, coincide about once every three years.

The classical early work on the subject is C. Clavius, S.J., Romani Calendarii a Gregorio XIII P.M. Restituti Explicatio (Rome, 1603). F. Kaltenbrunner, 'Die Vorgeschichte der gregorianischen Kalenderreform' in Sb. (Wien), lxxxii (1876), pp. 289–414; id., 'Die Polemik über die gregorianische Kalenderreform', ib., lxxxvii (1877), pp. 485–586; id., 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der gregorianischen Kalenderreform', ib., xcvii (1881), pp. 7–54. C. Trasselli in E.C., iii (1950), col. 357 f., s.v. 'Calendario', with bibl., col. 364. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), pp. 255–7 (Nos. 37544a–37571). See also works cited under Calendar.

GREGORIAN CHANT. See Plainsong.

GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY, The. The name given to a family of Sacramentaries traditionally ascribed to Pope *Gregory I (590–604). The most important of these is the book known to scholars as the 'Hadrianum'. In response to a request of *Charlemagne for the standard Roman Mass book, c. 790 Pope *Hadrian I sent him a sacramentary described both in the covering letter and in the earliest copy of the book itself as the work of Gregory. The original has not survived, but a copy made from it, dated 811 or 812, is preserved at Cambrai (MS. 164). The ascription to St. Gregory cannot be taken literally, since it contains a mass for his feast, but it has been shown to include material composed by him. Charlemagne's purpose in sending for the book was to promote uniformity in liturgy as in creed and in canon law, but it is probable that the standard Mass book for which he asked did not exist. Certainly the book which Hadrian sent him was defective in that it made no provision for considerable parts of the year and was lacking in other respects. The deficiencies were made good from *Gelasian service books current in Gaul. From the fusion of these two sources, 'Gregorian' and 'Gelasian', the later Roman Missal is derived. The process by which this fusion came about is not completely documented. One important step was the formation of a supplement of 'Gelasian' material, known from the opening word of its preface as the '*Hucusque'. Originally it was kept distinct but later it was integrated with the 'Gregorian' text. An examination of the textual tradition of 9th cent. sacramentaries shows that there were other sources as well as this supplement, but they have not yet been clearly delimited. There is some evidence to show that *Alcuin played a part in this process.

The other important representative of the Gregorian family of Sacramentaries is a MS. preserved in the Chapter Library of Padua (Cod. D. 47), which was written in the area of Lorraine. Although it dates from the 9th cent., it is thought to contain elements from the late 7th cent.

The text was first published by G. Pamelius (Cologne, 1571). Later edd. by H. Ménard, O.S.B. (Paris, 1642), and L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748). Crit. ed. by H. A. Wilson (H.B.S., 1915). Das Sacramentarium Gregorianum nach dem Aachener Urexemplar ed. H. *Lietzmann (on the basis of Cambrai 164; Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen, iii; 1921); Cod. Padua D. 47, ed. K. Mohlberg–A. *Baumstark (ib., xi–xii; 1927). J. Deshusses, O.S.B., Le Sacramentaire grégorien. Ses principales formes d'après les plus anciens manuscrits (Spicilegium Friburgense, xvi, xxiv; 1971–9). B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'La Main de S. Grégoire dans le Sacramentaire grégorien' in R. Bén., xlix (1937), pp. 13–28, repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (1962), pp. 161–75; H. Ashworth, O.S.B., 'The Influence of the Lombard Invasions on the Gregorian Sacramentary' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxvi (1954), pp. 305–27; id., 'The Liturgical Prayers of St. Gregory the Great' in Traditio, xv (1959), pp. 107–61. R. Amiet, 'Le Prologue Hucusque et la table de Capitula du Supplément d'Alcuin au Sacramentaire grégorien' in Scriptorium, vii (1953), pp. 177–209. E. Bourque, Étude sur les sacramentaires romains, i (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xx; 1949), pp. 299–391, and ii. 2 (ib., xxv; 1958). K. Gamber, Wege zum Urgregorianum. Erörterung der Grundfragen und Rekonstruktionsversuch des Sakramentars Gregors d. Gr. vom Jahre 592 (Texte und Arbeiten, xlvi; 1956). C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au Moyen Age (Biblioteca degli Studi Medievali, i; Spoleto [1966]), esp. pp. 67–83. F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2, 1925), s.v. 'Grégorien (le Sacramentaire)', cols. 1766–96, with bibl.; H. Ashworth in N.C.E., xii (1967), pp. 795–8, s.v. 'Sacramentaries'.

GREGORIAN WATER. In W. usage, solemnly blessed water formerly used in the consecration of churches and altars with which not only salt (as in ordinary *Holy Water), but also ashes and wine, had been mixed. The beginnings of its ceremonial use go back to the *Gelasian Sacramentary, and it has an established place in the 9th cent. *Pontificals. It is so named from the formula used in blessing it being attributed to *Gregory the Great.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, ii (1933), pp. 455–68 passim. S. Benz in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 1218, s.v. 'Gregoriuswasser', for further reff.

GREGORIANA. The Jesuit university (Pontificia Università Gregoriana) at Rome. It was founded in 1551 as the 'Collegium Romanum' by St. *Ignatius Loyola, and in 1582–4 provided by Pope *Gregory XIII with adequate buildings and resources and constituted a university. Since 1920 it has published a quarterly periodical entitled Gregorianum.

P. Tacchi-Venturi, S.J., 'L'inaugurazione della Pontificia Università Gregoriana' in Gregorianum, xxxiv (1953), pp. 333–40. R. G. Villoslada, S.J., Storia del Collegio Romano dal suo inizio (1551) all a soppressione della Compagnia di Gesù (1773) (Analecta Gregoriana, lxvi; 1954).

GREGOROVIUS, FERDINAND (1821–91), German historian. After studying at Königsberg and some time spent as a schoolmaster, he went to Italy in 1852, where he stayed for more than twenty years. He afterwards took up residence at Munich. During his sojourn in Rome he wrote his Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter (1859–1872; Eng. trans. as History of Rome in the Middle Ages, 13 vols., 1894–1900), covering the period from A.D. 400 to 1534. It was a monumental work and brilliantly written, though often somewhat subjective in its judgements. His other writings include Geschichte des Kaisers Hadrian und seiner Zeit (1851), Wanderjahre in Italien (3 vols., 1864), Lucrezia Borgia (1874), Die Grabdenkmäler der Päpste (1881), and Geschichte der Stadt Athen im Mittelalter (1889). His poetical attempts, among which was a play Der Tod des Tiberius (1851), were less successful. An English translation of his 'Roman Journals' (1892) was published in 1907.

J. Hönig, Ferdinand Gregorovius als Dichter (Breslauer Beiträge zur Literaturgeschichte, xxxix; 1914); id., Ferdinand Gregorovius der Geschichtschreiber der Stadt Rom (1921; with correspondence, pp. 183–528); enlarged ed., without the letters, as Ferdinand Gregorovius. Eine Biographie (1944), with bibl. reff.

GREGORY I, St. (c. 540–604) (Gregory the Great), Pope from 590. He was the fourth and last of the traditional Latin '*Doctors of the Church' and the father of the medieval Papacy. The son of a senator, he became prefect of the city (Praefectus Urbi) in 573, but, like many of the finer men of the age, he sold his vast property and devoted the proceeds to the relief of the poor. He founded seven monasteries, six in Sicily and one in *Rome, which last he himself entered as a monk c. 574. After a few years of a very austere life, the Pope compelled him to leave the cloister, creating him 'regionarius', i.e. one of the seven deacons of Rome. Soon afterwards (c. 578) Pelagius II made him 'apocrisiarius' at the Imperial court of *Constantinople. His experiences there, which convinced him that no help was to be expected from the struggling E. Empire, largely influenced his future course of action as Pope. About 585 he returned to Rome and became abbot of his former monastery (St. Andrew's). To this period probably belongs the famous story, related by *Bede, of his encounters with the fair Saxon slaves in the market ('Non Angli, sed angeli').

On his accession to the Papacy, accepted only after a severe interior struggle, Gregory found Italy in an alarming state. The land was devastated by inundations, famine, pestilence, and the invasion of the Lombards, and the position of the Church threatened by the claims of the Imperial power at Constantinople. It was owing to Gregory, in whom firmness and strength of character were tempered by gentleness and charity, that many of these evils were conquered. Of particular significance were his relations with the Lombards, with whom he concluded, in 592–3, what amounted to a separate peace. By this unprecedented step he set aside the authority of the exarch of *Ravenna, the Emperor's representative. Throughout this period of unrest, aggravated by the weakness and treachery of the Byzantine authorities, he followed a course of independent action, appointing governors to the Italian cities and providing war materials, and thus establishing the temporal power of the Papacy. In his administration of the vast estates of the Church, in which he spent great sums on works of charity, he showed conspicuous ability. In his frequently strained relations with the E. he upheld the supremacy of the Roman see and refused to recognize the title of '*Oecumenical Patriarch', adopted by the Patr. of Constantinople. One of the greatest successes of his pontificate was the conversion of England, for which task he selected St. *Augustine, later of *Canterbury, with about 40 missionaries from his own monastery. He also intervened with great effect in strengthening the Church in Spain, Gaul, and N. Italy.

Gregory was a very fertile author, of a practical rather than speculative bent of mind. His 'Liber Regulae Pastoralis' (c. 591) sets out the directives for the pastoral life of a bishop, whom he regards first as a shepherd of souls. The book, which was translated by King *Alfred, became the textbook of the medieval episcopate. The 'Dialogues' (c. 593), which told the lives and miracles of St. *Benedict and other early Latin saints, reflect the uncritical credulity of the age; they served as a model to most medieval hagiographers. His 'Expositio in Librum Iob, sive Moralium Libri XXV' is an exegesis of the Book of Job in the threefold literal, mystical, and moral sense, with special emphasis on the last. The 'Homilies on the Gospels' were sermons preached on texts from the Gospels; they were much drawn on as lessons for the third *Nocturn in the *Breviary of 1570. There is also a collection of 854 of Gregory's letters, which are of extreme interest for the information they supply on the Pope's character and multifarious activities.

St. Gregory was an ardent promoter of monasticism. By granting the monks 'privilegia', which partly restricted episcopal jurisdiction, he laid the foundations of the later *exemption of religious orders that brought them under direct Papal control. In his theology he did not aim at originality, but followed the teaching of St. *Augustine of Hippo, whose ideas he accommodated to the minds of his contemporaries. He developed esp. the doctrine of *Purgatory, teaching that the pains of the souls detained there may be relieved by the Sacrifice of the Mass, and popularized the mystical doctrines of St. *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite, esp. his angelology. He encouraged the veneration of relics if authentic. He made important changes in the liturgy, and some of the prayers in the *Gregorian Sacramentary (q.v.) are his, though the Sacramentary as a whole is a later compilation. He fostered the development of liturgical music, and, though his exact share in its codification is disputed, his name has been so closely linked with *plainsong that it is commonly known as the 'Gregorian Chant'; he gave to the Roman '*schola cantorum' its definite form. His pontificate and personality did much to establish the idea in men's minds that the Papacy was the supreme authority in the Church, and his achievement was the more impressive in that (as is reflected in the title 'servus servorum Dei', which he applied to himself) he had great personal humility. He was canonized by popular acclamation immediately after his death. Feast day, 3 Sept. (formerly 12 Mar.).

The best ed. of his collected Works is that of the *Maurist, D. de Sainte-Marthe (4 vols., Paris, 1704), supplemented by J. B. Gallicciolli (16 vols., Venice, 1768–76), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxv–lxxviii. Crit. edd. of his 'Registrum Epistolarum' by P. Ewald–L. M. Hartmann in M.G.H., Epistolae i and ii (1891–99), of his comm. on the Song of Songs and I Sam. by P. Verbraken, O.S.B. (C.C., Series Latina, cxliv; 1963), and of his comm. on Ezek. by M. Adriaen (ib., cxlii; 1971). The earliest life is the brief one in L.P. (Duchesne), i, 312, with notes, pp. 312–14. Other early lives by an unnamed monk of *Whitby (c. 713), first ed. by F. A. *Gasquet (London, 1904), crit. ed., with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave (Lawrence, Kansas, 1968); by *Paul the Deacon, a late 8th cent. *Cassinese monk, ed. in its original form by H. Grisar, S.J., in Z.K.T., xi (1887), pp. 158–73, and in an expanded form in the older edd. of Gregory's Works (PL, lxxv, 41–60); and by John the Deacon (9th cent.; PL, lxxv, 59–242). There are important modern lives by F. H. Dudden (2 vols., London, 1905), by P. *Batiffol (Paris, 1928; Eng. tr., 1929), and J. Richards, Consul of God (1980). L. Weber, Hauptfragen der Moraltheologie Gregors des Grossen. Ein Bild altchristlicher Lebensführung (Paradosis, i; 1947). M. Frickel, O.S.B., Deus totus ubique simul. Untersuchungen zur allgemeinen Gottgegenwart im Rahmen der Gotteslehre Gregors des Grossen (Freiburger Theologische Studien, lxix; 1956). V. Recchia, L'esegesi di Gregorio Magno al Cantico dei Cantici (Turin, 1967). Gregory's life and work are also discussed in all histories of the Papacy and of the Middle Ages. E. Spearing, The Patrimony of the Roman Church in the Time of Gregory the Great (1918). [E.] C. *Butler, O.S.B., Western Mysticism (1922), pp. 89–133 and 211–41. E. H. Fischer, 'Gregor der Grosse und Byzanz' in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxvii, Kanonistische Abteilung, xxxvi (1950), pp. 15–144. K. Hallinger, O.S.B., 'Papst Gregor der Grosse und der hl. Benedikt' in B. Steidle, O.S.B. (ed.), Commentationes in Regulam S. Benedicti (Studia Anselmiana, xlii; 1957), pp. 231–319. Mann, i (1902), pp. 1–250. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 284–302; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 466–72. J. Barmby in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 779–91, s.v. 'Gregorius (51)'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1753–76, s.v. 'Grégoire le Grand', and viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2861–70, s.v. 'Lettres chrétiennes'; R. Gillet, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 872–910, s.v., with extensive bibl.

GREGORY II, St. (669–731), Pope from 715. As a deacon in 710 he accompanied Pope Constantine I to *Constantinople, where he distinguished himself by his lucid answers in the discussions on the canons of the Council 'in *Trullo'. Having succeeded to the Papacy in 715, he was at once confronted with the Saracen danger, against which he had the walls of Rome repaired, and the paganism of the German tribes, esp. in Bavaria, Thuringia, and Hesse. In 719 he sent there St. *Boniface, aided by British monks and nuns. In his instructions to the missionaries he advocated a lenient view in the question of marriage among the newly converted, authorizing separation in certain cases and exceptions in the matter of forbidden degrees. In 726 *Leo III, the Isaurian, inaugurated the *Iconoclast controversy, in the course of which Gregory severely rebuked the Emperor at the synod of Rome in 727 without, however, countenancing the planned revolt of Italy against Byzantium and the election of another Emperor. His relations with the Lombards who tried to conquer Italy under Liutprand were for the most part friendly, owing to his personal influence with their king. The *Benedictine Order enjoyed Gregory's special protection and during his reign King Ine of Wessex entered a Roman monastery. Feast day, 13th Feb.

The chief authorities are L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 396–414), *Bede, *Paul the Deacon and Theophanes Confessor. A. Schäfer, Die Bedeutung der Päpste Gregor II (715–731) und Gregor III (731–741) für die Gründung des Kirchenstaates (Diss. Münster i.W.; 1913), esp. pp. 14–33. Mann, i (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 141–202. P. Moncelle in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1781–5, s.v. 'Grégoire II'.

GREGORY VII, St. (c. 1021 – 85), Pope from 1073. Hildebrand was a native of Tuscany, born of poor parents, who came to Rome at an early age. He was educated at the monastery of St. Mary on the Aventine, but probably did not become a monk. He was chosen by Pope Gregory VI as his chaplain, and went into exile with him to Germany in 1046. After the Pope's death in 1047, he remained there in reforming circles, and he was confirmed in his austere views of the obligations of clerical life. He returned to Rome in 1049 with the newly elected Pope St. *Leo IX, who appointed him administrator of the patrimony of St. Peter. Under him and his successors, on whose elections he exercised great influence, Hildebrand was the virtual guide of the Papacy. Under Nicholas II he had a large share in the decree which assigned the election of the Popes to the cardinals; in 1059 he became Archdeacon of the Roman Church; and under *Alexander II he was made Chancellor of the Apostolic See.

After his election to the Papacy Hildebrand (1073) began his work for the reform and moral revival of the Church by issuing decrees against the simony and incontinence of the clergy in the Lenten synod of 1074. In the following year he forbade lay *investiture, which exemplified the Church's dependence on the secular power and the consequent bestowal of ecclesiastical offices on unsuitable persons. This measure, which was enforced by Papal legates who deposed simoniacal and immoral clerics, was violently opposed, esp. in Germany, France, and England. In England, however, *William the Conqueror refused to comply in the matter of lay investiture, though he escaped excommunication, as he carried out the other Papal decrees with zeal. In France nearly the whole episcopate was renewed, despite Philip I's opposition. In Germany *Henry IV, threatened with ban and deposition, held two synods at Worms and at Piacenza (1076) which declared the Pope deposed. Gregory replied by deposing and banning Henry, and freeing his subjects from their oath of allegiance at the Lenten synod of 1076. The Emperor, whose situation soon became desperate, submitted to the Pope at *Canossa in 1077, did penance, and was absolved from his censures. In spite of this the German princes elected Rudolf of Swabia in the same year. The Pope did not recognize him until 1080, when he once more excommunicated Henry, who had not fulfilled the promises given at Canossa. The latter now set up Wibert, the excommunicated Abp. of *Ravenna, as antipope and marched against Rome, which he took after a two years' siege. Gregory was freed by Robert Guiscard, whose Norman troops, however, exasperated the Roman population, so that they turned against Gregory, who had called them in. The Pope had to flee first to *Monte Cassino and later to Salerno, where he died.

Though Gregory was once regarded as an ambitious tyrant, most modern historians have revised this judgement and are agreed on his purity of intention and his desire for 'justice'. In his own lifetime the Church suffered division, and he himself incurred much criticism; but Gregory's example, and the activities of his successors (esp. *Urban II) did much to regenerate the Church. He reconciled *Berengar of Tours, who had denied the real change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ in the Mass. His efforts at reuniting the E. Church to the W. failed, and his struggle against Henry IV prevented him from carrying out the plan of a crusade against the Turks, suggested by the E. Emperor, Michael VII. Gregory was canonized in 1606. Feast day, 25 May.

Epistolae et Diplomata Pontificia in J. P. Migne, PL, cxlviii, incl. Register (repr. from G. D. *Mansi), cols. 283–645, and works doubtfully attributed to him as 'Monumenta Gregoriana', cols. 847–1448. Crit. edd. of his Registrum by E. Caspar in M.G.H., Epistolae Selectae, ii (pts. 1 and 2; 1920–3); Eng. tr. of selections by E. Emerton (Records of Civilisation, Sources and Studies, xiv; New York, 1932); for letters not in Registrum see ed. by P. Jaffé, Monumenta Gregoriana (Bibliotheca rerum Germanicarum, 1865). Epistolae Vagantes ed., with Eng. tr., by H. E. J. Cowdrey (Oxford, 1972); 'Privileges' ed. L. Santifaller (S.T., cxc; 1957). A. Murray, 'Pope Gregory VII and his Letters' in Traditio, xxii (1966), pp. 149–201. Life by Paul Bernried, completed 1128, in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 39–104. A. F. Gfrörer, Papst Gregorius VII und sein Zeitalter (7 vols., 1859–61); O. Delarc, Saint Grégoire VII et la réforme de l'Église au XIe siècle (3 vols., 1889–90); W. Martens, Gregor VII. Sein Leben und Wirken (2 vols. bound in one, 1894). A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne (S.S.L., vi, ix, and xvi; 1924–37), with full bibl. H. X. Arquillière, Saint Grégoire VII. Essai sur sa conception du pouvoir pontifical (1934). G. B. Borino et al. (edd.)., Studi gregoriani per la storia di Gregorio VII e della riforma gregoriana (1947 ff.). W. R. W. Stephens, Hildebrand and his Times (1888); A. Fliche, Saint Grégoire VII ('Les Saints'; 1920); A. J. Macdonald, Hildebrand (1932); J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (1932), I and II, pp. 1–94. L. F. J. Meulenberg, Der Primat der römischen Kirche im Denken und Handeln Gregors VII (The Hague, 1965). W. Ullmann, The Growth of Papal Power in the Middle Ages (1955; ed. 2, 1962), esp. pp. 262–309. Z. N. Brooke in C.Med.H., v (1929), pp. 51–85; A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1944), pp. 55–198, with bibl. Mann, vii (1910), pp. 1–217. P. Moncelle in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1791–1804, s.v., with bibl.; G. Miccoli in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vii (Rome, 1966), cols. 294–379, s.v., with extensive bibl.

GREGORY IX (c. 1148 – 1241), Pope from 1227. Count Ugolino of Segni, a nephew of *Innocent III, studied at *Paris and *Bologna. He was created Cardinal Deacon on the accession of his uncle in 1198, Cardinal Bp. of Ostia in 1206, and was employed as Papal Legate on a series of diplomatic missions to Germany. In 1217 he was commissioned to preach a *Crusade in northern, and later in central, Italy; from him the Emp. *Frederick II took the Cross at his coronation (1220). Insisting on the immediate fulfilment of the vow as soon as he became Pope, he forced the Emperor to embark in 1227, excommunicated him (29 Sept.) when he returned a few days later, and refused his overtures for peace. When Frederick II sailed unreconciled (1228) he proclaimed an interdict over his lands and wherever he should go. After conducting an unsuccessful campaign against Sicily, he agreed in 1230 to the Treaty of San Germano with the Emperor, loosing him from the ban. In 1239, however, he again excommunicated Frederick for invading Lombardy and usurping the rights of the Church in Sicily, tried to secure the election of an anti-king and in 1241 summoned a General Council to Rome which Frederick II, however, prevented from meeting. He died while the Emperor was besieging Rome (22 Aug. 1241).

A personal friend of St. *Francis of Assisi, he was appointed Protector of the *Franciscan Order as early as 1220 and assisted in the development of the *Third Order. To the *Dominicans he entrusted the *Inquisition in 1232. He canonized St. Francis in 1228, St. *Antony of Padua in 1232 and St. *Dominic in 1234. In 1230 he commissioned *Raymond of Peñafort to collect the papal decretals (published in 1234) and in 1231 instructed William of Beauvais to examine the works of *Aristotle and prepare an orthodox edition to supersede the old Latin translation, the use of which had been forbidden in 1210 ('Physics') and 1215 ('Metaphysics'). Throughout his pontificate he laboured unsuccessfully to effect a union with the Eastern Church.

L. Auvray (ed.), Les Registres de Grégoire IX (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. 2, ix, 1896–1910; index still wanting). G. Levi (ed.), Registri dei Cardinali Ugolino d'Ostia e Ottaviano degli Ubaldini (Fonti per la storia d'Italia, viii, 1890), pp. 3–154. A contemporary life, prob. by John of Ferentino, ed. by P. Fabre–L. *Duchesne (ed.), Liber Censuum, ii (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. 2, vi, 1910), pp. 18–36. P. Balan, Storia di Gregorio IX e dei suoi tempi (3 vols., Modena, 1872–3); J. Felten, Papst Gregor IX (1886). C. Thouzellier, 'La Légation en Lombardie du Cardinal Hugolin (1221). Un épisode de la cinquième croisade' in R.H.E., xlv (1950), pp. 508–42, with reff. to earlier litt.; K. Esser, O.F.M., 'Die Briefe Gregor IX. an die hl. Klara von Assisi' in Franziskanische Studien, xxxv (1953), pp. 274–95. Mann, xiii (1925), pp. 165–441, with bibl. details. Fliche–Martin, x [1950], pp. 225–38. O. Bonmann, O.F.M., in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1134–40, s.v. 'Gregorio IX', with further bibl.; G. Mollat in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 775–7, s.v. See also bibl. to the Emperor Frederick II.

GREGORY X (1210–76), Pope from 1271. Teobaldo Visconti was elected Pope at Viterbo after the Holy See had been vacant for three years, though he was neither cardinal nor even priest. He was forthwith summoned to Italy from Acre, whither he had accompanied Prince Edward of England on his pilgrimage to the Holy Land. The deliverance of *Jerusalem, the reform of the Church, the reunion with the Greeks, and the pacification of the German Empire, were the leading ideas of his short pontificate. He solved the German question by recognizing Rudolf of Habsburg as Emperor and inducing Alfonso of Castile to resign his claims to the German throne. At the Council of *Lyons (1274–5), which Gregory had summoned immediately on his accession, the Greek Emp. Michael Paleologus made his submission to the Pope for purely political reasons, but the reunion was short-lived. The plan of a Crusade was discussed at the Council, but, though financial preparations were made, it came to nothing. One of the most important ecclesiastical innovations of Gregory's reign was the introduction of the *Conclave at the election of the Pope by the Constitution 'Ubi periculum' of 1274. After his death, which took place on his way back from the Council, he received a local cult in several dioceses, e.g. Arezzo and Piacenza; *Benedict XIV added his name to the Roman *Martyrology. Feast day, 10 Jan.; since 1963, 9 Jan.

Les Registres de Grégoire X, 1272–1276, ed. J. Guiraud–L. Cadier and others (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2e Série, xii; 1892–1960). A. Zisterer, Gregor X. und Rudolf von Habsburg in ihren beiderseitigen Beziehungen (1891); H. Otto, Die Beziehungen Rudolfs von Habsburg zu Papst Gregor X (1895). O. Joelson, Die Papstwahlen des 13. Jahrhunderts bis zur Einführung der Conclaveordnung Gregors X (Historische Studien, Hft. clxxviii; 1928). L. Gatto, Il pontificato di Gregorio X (1271–1276) (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, xxviii–xxx; 1959). Mann, xv (1929), pp. 347–501, with discussion of sources. A. Clerval in D.T.C., vi (1920), col. 1806 f., s.v. 'Grégoire X', with further bibl.; F. Molinari in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vii (Rome, 1966), cols. 379–87, s.v. 'Gregorio X', with bibl.

GREGORY XI (1329–78), Pope from 1370. Pierre Roger de Beaufort was the last French Pope. After being created cardinal by his uncle, *Clement VI, at the age of 18, he studied at Perugia. A skilled canonist, he was elected Pope at *Avignon in 1370. His chief efforts were directed towards pacifying the Papal states, which were then revolting against the foreign officials under the leadership of Florence. Gregory finally excommunicated the city and sent against it the ruthless cardinal, Robert of Geneva (Antipope Clement VII). The Florentines having thereupon persuaded St. *Catherine of Siena to negotiate for them, the Pope yielded to the entreaties of the saint, and decided to return to Italy to restore order, despite the protests of the King of France and most of the cardinals. He solemnly entered Rome on 17 Jan. 1377. Unable to put an end to the disturbances, he contemplated returning to Avignon, but the plan was prevented by his death in the following year. While in Rome, Gregory condemned the teachings of J. *Wycliffe (May 1377). After his death began the '*Great Schism'.

Lettres secrètes et curiales du pape Grégoire XI (1370–1378) relatives à la France ed. L. Mirot, H. Jassemin and others (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3e Série, vii; 1935–57); Lettres secrètes . . . intéressant les pays autres que la France ed. G. Mollat (ib., 1962–5); acta concerning Bohemia ed. C. Stloukal (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas Illustrantia, iv; Prague, 1949–53); letters concerning Belgium ed. Camille Tihon (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, xi, xx, xxv; Brussels–Rome, 1958–64); those on the E. Church ed. A. L. Tăutu (Pontificia Commissio ad redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, Series III, xii; Rome, 1966). Five lives in S. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. G. Mollat, i, 1914, pp. 415–67; other material in vol. iv, 1922, passim). J. P. Kirsch, Die Rückkehr der Päpste Urban V und Gregor XI von Avignon nach Rom (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, iv; 1898), pp. 169–262. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 100–16, with reff.; G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (ed. 9, 1950), pp. 122–33 and passim; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 59–63 and passim. A. Pélissier, Grégoire XI ramène la papauté à Rome [c. 1962]. A. Clerval in D.T.C., vi (1920), col. 1807 f., s.v. 'Grégoire XI'.

GREGORY XIII (1502–85), Pope from 1572. Ugo Buoncompagni studied and later taught law at *Bologna. In 1539 he was called to Rome by *Paul III, where he was appointed judge of the Capitol, and some years later he was sent to *Trent as one of the Pope's jurists. In 1564 he was made Cardinal-Priest of San Sisto. Elected Pope in 1572, his main endeavour was the reform of the Church and the restoration of the Catholic faith. Though he failed in his efforts at winning back *Sweden and at obtaining religious freedom for RCs in England, he furthered the cause of the *Counter-Reformation by carrying into effect the decrees of the Council of Trent wherever possible. He erected numerous seminaries and colleges in Rome and elsewhere, mostly under the direction of the *Jesuits, who enjoyed his special favour. He approved the Congregation of the *Oratory (1574) and the Discalced *Carmelites (1580), and was esp. interested in the missions to the Far East. One of the chief events of his reign was his institution in 1582 of the *Gregorian Calendar (q.v.). He also issued an improved edition of the '*Corpus Iuris Canonici' (1582). Towards the end of his life the state of the Papal finances became increasingly bad, owing to the vast sums spent on education and architecture, and the menace of the banditti which had developed in the Papal states was not conquered till after his death. In 1579 he founded the *English College at Rome as a seminary for training missionaries for England.

M. A. Ciappi, Compendio delle heroiche et gloriose attioni et santa vita di Papa Gregorio XIII (1591); G. P. Maffei, S.J., Degli annali di Gregorio XIII, publd. by C. Cocquelines (2 vols., 1742). I. Bompiano, Historia Pontificatus Gregorii XIII (Rome, 1655). L. Karttunen, Grégoire XIII comme politicien et souverain (Annales Academiae Scientiae Fennicae, Ser. B, vol. ii; Helsinki, 1911). K. Schellhass, 'Wissenschaftliche Forschungen unter Gregor XIII für die Neuausgabe des Gratianischen Dekrets' in Papsttum und Kaisertum. Forschungen zur politischen Geschichte und Geisteskultur des Mittelalters Paul Kehr zum 65. Geburtstage dargebracht, ed. A. Brackmann (1926), pp. 674–90. G. Levi della Vida, Documenti intorno alle relazioni delle chiese orientali con la S. Sede durante il pontificato di Gregorio XIII (S.T., cxliii; 1948). Pastor, xix and xx (1930), with full bibl. P. Moncelle in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1809–15, s.v. 'Grégoire XIII'; G. Schwaiger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), cols. 1188–90, s.v. 'Gregor XIII', with bibl. See also bibl. to Gregorian Calendar.

GREGORY XVI (1765–1846), Pope from 1831. Bartolomeo Cappellari entered the *Camaldolese monastery of San Michele di Murano in 1783. In 1799 he published Il trionfo della Santa Sede, in which he treated of the sovereignty of the Pope and developed the doctrine of Papal Infallibility. In 1807 he was made Abbot of San Gregorio, but had to leave Rome in the following year, owing to the Napoleonic suppression of the religious orders. He returned in 1814, was created Cardinal and Prefect of the *Propaganda in 1826, and elected Pope in 1831 by the party of the Zelanti after a conclave lasting over fifty days. Soon after, revolution broke out in the Papal states and was quelled only by the intervention of Austria, a fact which caused the five great powers—Austria, Russia, England, France, and Prussia—to demand reforms in their administration. As these were only partly carried out, the revolt began again, and in 1832 Austrian troops were recalled, whereupon the French occupied Ancona and did not withdraw till 1838. But the troubles continued, and on Gregory's death, in 1846, dissatisfaction was rife and the finances of the Holy See in disorder, owing to the heavy expenditure involved by the upkeep of a strong military force. Gregory's relations with the foreign powers remained strained during the greater part of his reign. He condemned Liberalism in the person of F. R. de *Lamennais (encyclical Singulari nos, 1834) and its application to theology in the German scholar G. *Hermes (Dum acerbissimas, 1835). Despite the political difficulties in which he was involved, Gregory XVI did much for the missions, erecting many new bishoprics and vicariates. He also favoured science and art. The Etruscan and Egyptian museums at the Vatican and the Christian museum at the *Lateran were founded by him.

Acta Gregorii Papae XVI, ed. A. M. Bernasconi (Rome, 1901–4) (defective); for the first five years of his pontificate, cf. A. Barberi (ed.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, xix–xx (Rome, 1857–8). Gregorio XVI. Miscellanea Commemorativa by A. Bartoli and others (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, xiii–xiv; Rome, 1948). N. *Wiseman, Recollections of the Last Four Popes and of Rome in their Times (1858), part iv (pp. 415–532). J. Leflon, 'La Crise révolutionnaire 1789–1846' in Fliche–Martin, xx (1949), pp. 426–71. P. dalla Torre in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1148–56; A. Simon in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 783–8, both with bibl.

GREGORY, St. (late 6th cent.), Bp. of Agrigentum (Girgenti) in Sicily. Born near Agrigentum, he made a pilgrimage to Palestine, where he was ordained deacon by the Patriarch of *Jerusalem. In Rome he was consecrated Bp. of Agrigentum and appears to have been the victim of a plot against his character. *Gregory the Great addressed several letters to him. He had either died or been deposed by 594. There is a long Greek life of him by Leontius, apparently prior of the monastery of St. Sabas in Rome (d. 688), which was revised by *Simeon Metaphrastes. A Greek commentary on Ecclesiastes was long attributed to him, but recently some scholars have maintained that this was the work of a 9th cent. Bp. Gregory of Agrigentum, who was venerated in the E. Church. Feast day, 23 Nov.

The Commentary on Eccles. was first publd. by S. A. Morcelli (Venice, 1791), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xcviii, cols. 741–1182. The Life by Leontius ib., cols. 549–716 Simeon Metaphrastes' life ib., cxvi, cols. 189–270. C. Mercurelli, Agrigento paleocristiana. Memorie storiche e monumentali (Atti della Pont. Accad. Romana di Archeologia. Serie III. Memorie, viii. 1; 1948), passim. I Croce, 'Per la cronologia della vita di S. Gregorio Agrigentino' in Bollettino della Badia Greca di Grottaferrata, N.S., iv (1950), pp. 189–207; v (1951), pp. 77–91. S. Gennaro, 'Influssi di scrittori greci nel "Commento all'Ecclesiaste" di Gregorio di Agrigento' in Miscellanea di Studi di Letteratura Cristiana Antica, iii (1951), pp. 162–84; further art. by G. Mannelli, ib., pp. 185–94. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 105–7. C. Hole in D.C.B., ii (1880), p. 776 f.; A. Amore in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vii (Rome, 1966), cols. 169–73, s.v., with extensive bibl.

GREGORY DIALOGOS, St. The title commonly given to St. *Gregory the Great in the MSS. and editions of the Greek 'Liturgy of the *Presanctified' which baselessly presuppose that he was its author.

GREGORY OF ELVIRA, St. (d. after 392), Bp. of Elvira ('Illiberis'), near Granada. One of the most intransigent opponents of *Arianism, he supported the refusal of *Lucifer of Cagliari to pardon those who 'Arianized' at the Council of Ariminum (359), and after Lucifer's death became the leader of the 'Luciferians'. Controversy continues over the extent of his written work, but it probably includes (1) 'Homilies on Canticles' (ed. by A. *Wilmart, Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique, 1906, pp. 233–9); (2) the '*Tractatus Origenis' (ed. P. *Batiffol, 1900); (3) the 'De Arca Noe' (Revue Bénédictine, xxvi (1909), 1–12); (4) the 'De Fide' (J. P. *Migne, PL, xx, 31–50). His exegesis of Scripture was highly allegorical.

Modern ed. of works by V. Bulhart (C.C., Series Latina, lxix, 1967, pp. 1–247, with 'Dubia et Spuria', pp. 251–83). P. Lejay, 'L'Héritage de Grégoire d'Elvire' in R. Bén., xxv (1908), pp. 435–57, and H. Koch, 'Zu Gregors von Elvira Schrifttum und Quellen' in Z.K.G., li (1932), pp. 238–72; A. Marazuela, 'El Salterio de Gregorio de Elvira y la Vetus Latina Hispana' in Biblica, xl (1959), pp. 135–59. F. J. Buckley, S.J., Christ and the Church according to Gregory of Elvira (Rome, 1964). Giuseppe Madoz, S.J., in E.C., vi (1951), col. 1085 f.

GREGORY THE ILLUMINATOR, St. (c. 240–332), the 'Apostle of *Armenia'. He appears to have been of royal descent and to have been brought up as a Christian while an exile in Cappadocia. After returning to Armenia, he eventually (c. 280) succeeded in converting the King, Tiridates (c. 238–314), to the Christian faith, which forthwith became the official religion of the country. He was consecrated Bishop (*Catholicos) by the Metropolitan of Caesarea in Cappadocia and the episcopate remained for some generations in his family. His son, Aristakes, whom Gregory had consecrated to succeed him, attended the Council of *Nicaea (325). The homilies and epistles ascribed to him are probably not genuine. There is a 'Life' by *Agathangelos. Feast day, 30 Sept.; in the American BCP (1979), 23 Mar.

G. Garitte, Documents pour l'étude du livre d'Agathange (S.T., cxxvii; 1946), esp. ch. x; id., 'La Vie grecque inédite de saint Grégoire d'Arménie (MS. 4 d'Ochrida)' in Anal. Boll., lxxxiii (1965), pp. 233–90. H. Gelzer, 'Die Anfänge der armenischen Kirche' in Ber. (Sächs.), xlvii (1895), pp. 109–74. P. Ananian, 'La data e le circostanze della consacrazione di S. Gregorio Illuminatore' in Le Muséon, lxxiv (1961), pp. 43–73, 317–60. P. Peeters, S.J., 'S. Grégoire l'Illuminateur dans le calendrier lapidaire de Naples' in Anal. Boll., lx (1942), pp. 91–130. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 182–5. P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vii (Rome, 1966), cols. 180–90, s.v. 'Gregorio Illuminatore', with bibl. See also bibl. to Armenia.

GREGORY OF NAZIANZUS, St. (329–89), 'the Theologian', one of the '*Cappadocian Fathers'. He was the son of the Bp. of Nazianzus in Cappadocia (also 'Gregory') and studied at the university of Athens, where he was a contemporary of St. *Basil. Soon afterwards he adopted the monastic life, which he found very congenial to his contemplative and retiring spirit. Under pressure and against his will he was ordained priest (? c. 362), and c. 372 was consecrated to the see of Sasima, a small village in Cappadocia (which he never visited, however). Until his father's death in 374 he remained at Nazianzus to help his father as suffragan, and soon afterwards retired for some years to Seleucia in Isauria. In 379 he was summoned to Constantinople, where his eloquent preaching in the Church of the Anastasis was a great influence in restoring the *Nicene faith and leading to its final establishment at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. During the Council he was appointed Bp. of Constantinople, but he resigned the see before the end of the year, retiring first to Nazianzus and later to his own estate, where he died.

His more important writings include his 'Five Theological Orations', which date from his Constantinopolitan period and contain an elaborate treatment of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit; the '*Philocalia', a selection from the writings of *Origen which he compiled in conjunction with St. Basil; several important letters against *Apollinarianism; and many poems. Feast day in the E., 25 and 30 Jan.; in the W., 2 Jan. (with St. Basil) (formerly 9 May, as in the American BCP, 1979).

Early edd. of his Works were publd. at Basle (1550) and Paris (1609 and 1630). Much improved *Maurist ed. by C. Clémencet, O.S.B., and A. B. Caillau (Paris, vol. i, 1778; vol. ii, 1840); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xxxv–xxxviii. Crit. edd. of Five Theological Orations by A. J. Mason (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1899) and of his letters by P. Gallay (with Fr. tr., 2 vols., Collection des Universités de France, 1964–7, and text alone, C.G.S., 1969). The nine Orations hastily tr. by *Rufinus into Lat. (Nos. 2, 6, 16, 17, 26, 27, 38, 39, 40), ed. by A. Engelbrecht (C.S.E.L., xlvi; 1910). Eng. tr. of Select Orations and Letters, with introd., by C. G. Browne–J. E. Swallow in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. II, vol. vii (1894), pp. 185–498. The main sources for his Life are his own writings, esp. his poem 'De vita sua' (PG, xxxvii, 1029–1166). Biog. of ample dimensions by a 7th cent. presbyter named Gregory (pr. PG, xxxv, 243–304). Modern lives by C. Clémencet (PG, xxxv, 147–242), C. Ullmann (Darmstadt, 1825; ed. 2, Gotha, 1867; Eng. tr., 1851), A. Benoît (2 vols., Paris, 1876, ed. 2, 1884) and P. Gallay (Lyons, 1943). M. Guignet, St. Grégoire de Nazianze et la rhétorique (1911). M. Pellegrino, La poesia di S. Gregorio Nazianzeno (1932). P. Gallay, Langue et style de S. Grégoire de Nazianze dans sa correspondance (1943). J. Plagnieux, Saint Grégoire de Nazianze théologien (Strasbourg thesis; Paris, 1952). F. Lefherz, Studien zu Gregor von Nazianz (Diss., Bonn, 1958). Marie-M. Hauser-Meury, Prosopographie zu den Schriften Gregors von Nazianz (Theophaneia, xiii; 1960). J. Mossay, La Mort et l'au-delà dans saint Grégoire de Nazianze (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 4e série, xxxiv; 1966). Rosemary R. Ruether, Gregory of Nazianzus. Rhetor and Philosopher (Oxford, 1969). T. Špidlik, S.J., Grégoire de Nazianze. Introduction à l'étude de sa doctrine spirituelle (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clxxxix; 1971). J. Dräseke, 'Neuplatonisches in des Gregorios von Nazianz Trinitätslehre' in B.Z., xv (1906), pp. 141–60. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 162–88; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 298–303. F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 138–46; J. Rousse in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 932–71, s.v. 'Grégoire (14) de Nazianze'; J. T. Cummings in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 791–4.

GREGORY OF NYSSA, St. (c. 330–c. 395), Bp. of Nyssa, *Cappadocian Father. He was a younger brother of St. *Basil. Though early destined for an ecclesiastical career he temporarily became a rhetorician, but returned to his first vocation and entered a monastery founded by his brother. He was consecrated Bp. of Nyssa, c. 371. A warm supporter of the faith of *Nicaea, he was deposed by the *Arians in 376 and remained in exile until the death of Valens in 378, when he regained his see. In 379 he attended the Council of Antioch, and in the next year was elected Bp. of Sebaste, but protested against the election. At the Council of *Constantinople in 381 he eloquently championed the Nicene cause. In his later life he travelled considerably and was much in demand as a preacher. In 394 he took part in the Council of Constantinople convoked by the Patr. *Nectarius; he seems to have died soon afterwards.

St. Gregory of Nyssa was a thinker and theologian of great originality and knowledge, acquainted esp. with *Platonist and *Neoplatonist speculation, as well as an outstanding exegete, orator, and ascetical author. His principal theological works are polemical treatises against *Eunomius, *Apollinarius, and the *Tritheistic teaching of a certain Abladius. In his famous 'Catechetical Orations' he expounded the doctrines of the Trinity, Incarnation, and Redemption, and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Eucharist for those whose duty it was to instruct the catechumens. Among his exegetical works, which are influenced by *Origen and deal esp. with the mystical sense of Scripture, are a 'Life of Moses', 'On the Pythonissa', and homilies on Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Beatitudes. His ascetical works include treatises on virginity, in which he develops the thought that by virginity the soul becomes a spouse of Christ, and on Christian perfection, as well as the attractive Life of his sister, St. *Macrina. Many of his sermons, funeral orations, and letters have also survived.

He was an ardent defender of the Nicene dogma of the Trinity, and distinguished carefully between the generation of the Son and the procession of the Holy Ghost. The Second Person of the Trinity was incarnate in the womb of Mary, who therefore is truly θεοτόκος, for Christ is one Person in two natures. In his eschatology he is influenced by Origen, with whom he holds that ultimately both the souls in hell and the devils will return to God. In his account of the Atonement he employs, prob. for the first time, the simile of the fish-hook by which the devil was baited. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Works ed. F. *Ducaeus, S.J., 2 vols., Paris, 1615; rev., with additions by J. Gretser, S.J., 3 vols., ib., 1638 (repr. J. P. Migne, PG, xliv–xlvi); the text of this, the last complete ed., remains very unsatisfactory. Crit. ed. of De Anima et Resurrectione by J. G. Krabinger (Leipzig, 1837) and of De Oratione Dominica by id. (Landshut, 1840); of Apol. in Hexameron, etc., by G. H. *Forbes (2 pts., Burntisland, 1855–61); of Catechetical Oration by J. H. Srawley (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1903). Crit. text of his whole works by W. Jaeger begun in 1921: Contra Eunomium ed. W. Jaeger (2 vols., Berlin, 1921), Epistulae ed. G. Pasquali (Berlin, 1925), Opera Ascetica, pt. i, ed. W. Jaeger and others (Leiden, 1952), and Opera Dogmatica Minora, pt. 1, ed. F. Mueller (ib., 1958), only publd. New ed. by W. Jaeger and H. Langerbeck (Leiden, 1960 ff.): Contra Eunomium ed. W. Jaeger (2 vols., 1960), In Canticum Canticorum ed. H.

Langerbeck (1960), In Inscriptiones Psalmorum in Sextum Psalmum in Ecclesiasten Homiliae ed. J. McDonough, S.J., and P. Alexander (1962), De Vita Moysis ed. H. Musurillo (1964), and Sermones, i, ed. G. Heil, A. van Heck, E. Gebhardt, and A. Spira (1967). Crit. ed. of De Pauperibus Amandis Orationes duo by A. van Heck (Leiden, 1964) and Encomium in Sanctum Stephanum Protomartyrem by O. Lendle (ib., 1968). De Virginitate ed. M. Aubineau, S.J. (S.C., cxix; 1966). W. Jaeger, Two Rediscovered Works of Ancient Christian Literature: Gregory of Nyssa and Macarius (Leiden, 1954). Syr. version of Gregory's Commentary on Song of Songs ed. C. van den Eynde, O.P. (Bibliothèque du Muséon, x; Louvain, 1939). Eng. tr. of 'Select Writings' in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, vol. v (1890); of 'Life of St. Macrina' ed. W. K. L. Clarke (London, 1916), and of 'The Lord's Prayer' and 'The Beatitudes' by Hilda C. Graef (A.C.W., xviii; 1954). Fr. tr. of Vita Moysis and De Hominis Opificio ed. J. Daniélou, S.J. (S.C., i and vi [1942–3]).

F. Diekamp, Die Gotteslehre des hl. Gregor von Nyssa (1896). J. B. Aufhauser, Die Heilslehre des hl. Gregors von Nyssa (1910). H. F. Cherniss, 'The Platonism of Gregory of Nyssa' in University of California Publications in Classical Philology, xi, for 1930–3 (1934), pp. 1–92. M. Pellegrino, 'Il platonismo di San Gregorio Nisseno nel dialogo "Intorno all'Anima e alla Risurrezione"' in Rivista di Filosofia Neo-Scolastica, xxx (1938), pp. 437–74. G. González, La fórmula μία οὐσία τρεῖς ὑποστάσεις en S. Gregorio de Nisa (Analecta Gregoriana, xxi; 1939). H. U. von Balthasar, S.J., Présence et pensée. Essai sur la philosophie religieuse de Grégoire de Nysse (1942). J. Daniélou, S.J., Platonisme et théologie mystique. Essai sur la doctrine spirituelle de St. Grégoire de Nysse (1944). A. Lieske, S.J., 'Die Theologie der Christusmystik Gregors von Nyssa' in Z.K.T., lxx (1948), pp. 49–93, 129–68, 315–40. R. Leys, S.J., L'Image de Dieu chez Saint Grégoire de Nyssa (Museum Lessianum, xlix; 1951). W. Völker, Gregor von Nyssa als Mystiker (Wiesbaden, 1955). W. Jaeger, Gregor von Nyssa's Lehre vom heiligen Geist, ed. H. Dörries (Leiden, 1966). E. Mühlenberg, Die Unendlichkeit Gottes bei Gregor von Nyssa (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, xvi; 1966). Marguerite Harl (ed.), Écriture et culture philosophique dans la pensée de Grégoire de Nysse. Actes du Colloque de Chevetogne (22–26 septembre 1969) (Leiden, 1971). Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 188–220; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 303–8. 'G.' [Giovanni] Daniélou, S.J., in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1096–1111; Mariette Canévet in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 971–1011, s.v. 'Grégoire (16) de Nysse'.

GREGORY PALAMAS, St. (c. 1296–1359), Greek theologian and chief exponent of *Hesychasm. He was born probably at *Constantinople of a noble Anatolian family. Attracted from his youth to the monastic ideal, he persuaded his brothers and sisters, as well as his widowed mother, to embrace the religious life. Around 1318 he went, with his two brothers, to Mt. *Athos, where he became familiar at first hand with the Hesychast tradition of mystical prayer. The advance of the Turks forced him to flee to *Thessalonica, where he was ordained priest in 1326; subsequently he retired as a hermit to a mountain near Beroea, whence he returned to Athos in 1331. In 1337 he became involved in controversy with Barlaam, a Greek monk from Calabria. Influenced by western *Nominalism and by a one-sided interpretation of the writings of *Dionysius the pseudo-Areopagite, Barlaam stated the doctrine of God's unknowability in an extreme form. When criticized by Gregory, he replied with a vigorous attack on the contemplative practices of the Hesychasts, and in answer Gregory composed his most important work, the Triads in defence of the Holy Hesychasts (c. 1338). Gregory's teaching was approved by his fellow monks, who met in synod on Mt. Athos during 1340–1 and put out a statement known as the 'Hagioritic Tome' (Ἁγιορειτικὸς Τόμος), supporting his views. A council held at Constantinople in 1341 likewise took Palamas' side in the dispute and condemned Barlaam. Although in 1344 Palamas' opponents secured his conviction for heresy and his excommunication, the orthodoxy of his doctrines was reaffirmed by two further Councils at Constantinople in 1347 and 1351. In 1347 he was consecrated Abp. of Thessalonica, but political conditions made it impossible for him to take possession of his see until 1350. During a journey to Constantinople in 1354, he was captured by the Turks and remained in captivity for more than a year. He was canonized in 1368.

In his theological teaching Palamas stressed the Biblical notion of man as a single and united whole, body and soul together; and in virtue of this he argued that the physical exercises used by the Hesychasts in prayer, as well as their claim to see the Divine Light with their bodily eyes, could be defended as legitimate. He distinguished between the essence and the energies of God: God's essence remains unknowable, but His uncreated energies—which are God Himself—permeate all things and can be directly experienced by man in the form of deifying grace. Like St. *Simeon the New Theologian, Palamas laid great stress in his spiritual teaching upon the vision of Divine Light. Feast day in E., 14 Nov., and also the second Sunday in Lent.

The bulk of his work is still in MS. Various writings, in an inferior text, are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, cl, 771–1372, and cli, 9–678. Crit. ed. of his collected work by P. C. Christou (Thessalonica, 1962 ff.). The Triads (Περὶ τῶν ἱερῶς ἡσυχαζόντων) ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Meyendorff, Défense des saints hésychastes (Spicilegium Sacrum Lovaniense, xxx–xxxi; 1959). J. Meyendorff, Introduction à l'étude de Grégoire Palamas (Patristica Sorbonensia, iii [1959]; abbreviated Eng. tr., 1964); id., St Grégoire Palamas et la mystique orthodoxe (Maîtres Spirituels [1959]; Eng. tr., New York, 1974). M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1735–76.

GREGORY OF RIMINI (d. 1358), 'Doctor authenticus', medieval philosopher. He joined the *Augustinian Hermits, studied in *Paris from 1323 to 1329, and subsequently taught at *Bologna, Padua, and Perugia. In 1341 he returned to Paris, where he lectured on the Sentences and in 1345 was made doctor of the *Sorbonne by *Clement VI. Elected *General of his order in 1357, he began at once to introduce reforms, but his work was cut short by his death in the following year. His philosophical doctrines carried further the *nominalist teaching of *William of Occam. His theology was thoroughly Augustinian. He taught that works done without grace are sinful and that unbaptized infants incur eternal damnation, an opinion which, though also held by St. Augustine, earned him the title 'tortor infantium'. He also wrote a treatise on Usury. Persistent attempts have been made to trace his influence on M. *Luther, perhaps not entirely convincingly.

His work on the Sentences was publd. at Paris in 1482 (later edd. 1487, 1642) and Venice (1532), his De Usuris at Rimini (1622). J. Würsdörfer, Erkennen und Wissen nach Gregor von Rimini. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Erkenntnistheorie des Nominalismus (B.G.P.M., xx, Hft. 1, 1917); M. Schüler, Prädestination, Sünde und Freiheit bei Gregor von Rimini (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte 3, 1934). G. Leff, Gregory of Rimini (Manchester, 1961). Überweg, ii, pp. 587–90, 783. N. Merlin in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1852–4, s.v. 'Grégoire de Rimini'.

GREGORY THAUMATURGUS, St. (c. 213–c. 270), Greek Church Father. He came from a noble family of Neocaesarea in Pontus, and studied law and rhetoric. About 233 he went to *Caesarea in Palestine, where he became a disciple of *Origen, who converted him to the Christian faith and with whom he remained for five years. Soon after his return to his native city he was made its bishop, and during his episcopate converted its pagan population. The wealth of legends and miracles which were attributed to him in later times and to which he owes his surname of Thaumaturgus or wonder-worker, such as the moving of a mountain and the drying-up of a swamp, testify to his uncommon strength of character as well as to his popularity. In 253–4 he witnessed the Goths devastating Pontus, as described in his so-called 'Canonical Letter'. In 264–265 he took part in the first Synod of *Antioch against *Paul of Samosata; he also fought *Sabellianism and *Tritheism. Acc. to *Suidas he died in the reign of the Emp. Aurelian (270–5).

St. Gregory was a practical Churchman rather than a speculative theologian. He based his teaching on Origen, but his terminology is still undeveloped and often equivocal. His name has been affixed to a number of treatises, only a few of which are authentic. His first extant work is his panegyric on Origen, Εἰς Ὠριγένην . . . Προσφωνητικός, delivered when he took leave of his master. It contains much autobiographical material as well as an account of Origen's teaching methods. His Ἔκθεσις τῆς Πίστεως is a Trinitarian exposition of belief, the basis of his instructions to catechumens. Acc. to St. *Gregory of Nyssa, whose grandmother St. *Macrina had been instructed by Gregory Thaumaturgus, it was given to him in a vision by St. *John the Evangelist at the command of the BVM, the first known instance of a record of a Marian apparition. His Ἐπιστολὴ Κανονική contains much information on the penitential discipline of the early Church. His Μετάφρασις εἰς τὸν Ἐκκλησιαστήν is a paraphrase of Ecclesiastes, and his letter to Theopompus, extant only in a Syriac translation, is a philosophical colloquy on the impassibility of God. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Life, by Gregory of Nyssa, in J. P. Migne, PG, xlvi, 893–958. There also exist Syr., Armen., and Lat. lives, all of little value. Works (incl. several dubia and spuria) publd. by G. Voss (Mainz, 1604) and others; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG, x, 963–1232. Crit. text of Gregory's address to Origen ed. P. Koetschau (Sammlung ausgewählter Quellenschriften, No. 9, 1894), repr., with Fr. tr., introd. and notes by H. Crouzel, S.J. (S.C., cxlviii; 1969). V. Ryssel, Gregorius Thaumaturgus. Sein Leben und seine Schriften (1880). M. Jugie, A.A., 'Les Homélies mariales attribuées à S. Grégoire le Thaumaturge' in Anal. Boll., xliii (1925), pp. 86–95. On his Creed, cf. L. Froidevaux, 'Le Symbole de Saint Grégoire le Thaumaturge', in Rech. S.R., xix (1929), pp. 193–247. A. Poncelet, S.J., 'La Vie latine de Saint Grégoire le Thaumaturge', ib., i (1910), pp. 132–60. W. Telfer, 'The Cultus of St. Gregory Thaumaturgus' in H.T.R., xxix (1936), pp. 225–344. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 315–332; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 211 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, ii (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 123–8. E. Peterson in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1158 f., s.v.; H. Crouzel in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1014–20, s.v. 'Grégoire (19), le Thaumaturge'; id., in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 797 f., s.v.

GREGORY OF TOURS, St. (c. 540–94), Bp. of Tours and historian of the Franks. He came of a Gallo-Roman senatorial family which had already produced several bishops, and was elected Bp. of Tours in 573. Though he had at first to oppose King Chilperic, he readily supported the 'good king', Guntram, against the turbulent aristocracy, thus gaining royal favour for the Church. About 576 he began his Historia Francorum. Book I runs quickly from the Creation to 397; Books II to IV, based on valuable sources, relate early Frankish history to 575; and Books V to IX cover the years 575 to 591 in detail. The important position Gregory filled in Church and state and the access he thus obtained to original documents made him a well-informed historian, without whose work the early history of France could hardly be written. But his History, though honest and vivid, was untidy and unreflective, and his knowledge of events outside France was slight. His chief hagiographical work is his eight Miraculorum Libri: (1) In Gloriam Martyrum, on the miracles of the Lord, the Apostles, and esp. Gallic martyrs; (2) De Virtutibus S. Juliani, on miracles at the tomb of St. Julian, put to death at Clermont-Ferrand in 304; (3–6) De Virtutibus S. Martini, on miracles at the tomb of St. *Martin; (7) De Vita Patrum, lives of 23 Gallic saints; (8) In Gloriam Confessorum, miracles of (esp. Gallic) saints not martyrs. Here he often displays extreme credulity, so that the work is of altogether less historical value than his Historia Francorum. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Editio princeps of the Historia Francorum, with a few other works (Paris, 1522). Improved ed. of his works by T. *Ruinart, O.S.B. (Paris, 1699), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxi. Crit. ed. by W. Arndt–B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores rerum Merovingicarum, i (2 pts., 1884–5), which prints the author's orig. text with all its asperities before its 'revision' to conform it with the Carolingian standards of elegance; the Historia Francorum from this ed. was rev. by B. Krusch–W. Levison (ib., 1951); Gregory's Lat. tr. of the 'Passio Septem Dormientium apud Ephesum' was ed. B. Krusch in M.G.H., loc. cit., vii (pt. 2; 1920), pp. 757–69. Eng. trr. of Historia Francorum, with valuable introd. and notes, by O. M. Dalton (2 vols., Oxford, 1927; vol. i, introduction, vol. ii, tr.), and of selections of his Minor Works by W. C. McDermott (Philadelphia, etc., 1949). G. Kurth, Études francques (2 vols., 1919), esp. i, pp. 1–65, and ii, pp. 117–271. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Les Recueils antiques de miracles des saints' in Anal. Boll., xliii (1925), pp. 305–25. L. Halphen, 'Grégoire de Tours, historien de Clovis' in Mélanges d'Histoire du moyen-âge offerts à M. Ferdinand Lot (1925), pp. 235–44, repr. in Halphen's À travers l'histoire du moyen-âge (1950), pp. 31–8. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, 'The Work of Gregory of Tours in the Light of Modern Research' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, Fifth Series, i (1951), pp. 25–45; revised in The Long Haired Kings and other Studies in Frankish History (1962), pp. 49–70. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 357–67; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 477 f., both with bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1711–53; L. Pietri in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1020–5, s.v. 'Grégoire (20) de Tours', with extensive bibl.; H. G. J. Beck in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 798 f., s.v.

GREGORY, ROBERT (1819–1911), Dean of *St. Paul's. He came from a Nottingham Methodist family, and, influenced by the *Tractarian Movement, studied at Corpus Christi College, *Oxford (1840–3), and was ordained priest of the C of E in 1844. After serving several curacies he was vicar of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, from 1853 to 1873, interesting himself esp. in elementary education. In 1868 he was appointed Canon of St. Paul's, where he collaborated with H. P. *Liddon and R. W. *Church in making the cathedral a centre of active religious life in London. The introduction of more elaborate ritual and decorations led to considerable hostility against him, esp. after he had been appointed Dean in 1890. He was succeeded as Dean by W. R. *Inge.

W. H. *Hutton (ed.), Robert Gregory, 1819–1911, being the Autobiography of Robert Gregory, D.D., Dean of St. Paul's (1912). A. R. Buckland in D.N.B., 1901–1911, Suppl., ii (1912), p. 163 f.

GREMIAL. Acc. to W. liturgical usage, a cloth spread by the bishop upon his lap when he is seated during the singing of the Kyries, Gloria in excelsis, and *Creed in the Mass, and on certain other occasions, to prevent the soiling of his vestments by his hands. Its use, originally not confined to bishops, first appears in the late 13th cent., though the name is not found until the 15th cent. In 1968 the Congregation of Sacred *Rites decreed that the use of silk gremials should cease; when required for practical purposes, e.g. at *anointings, they should be made of linen.

Braun, L.P., p. 231 f. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., vii (1910), p. 26.

GREY FRIARS. Friars of the *Franciscan Order (q.v.), so named from the colour of their habit (now brown), to distinguish them from the Black Friars (*Dominicans) and White Friars (*Carmelites).

GREY NUNS. A name given to Sisters of Charity in various countries. The best known are the Grey Nuns of Charity in N. America. They were founded by Madame d'Youville (Ven. Marie-Marguerite Dufrost de Lajemmerais) at Montreal in 1737 as a small community of ladies who devoted themselves to the care of the sick. Eight years later they adopted a Rule which was sanctioned by episcopal authority in 1754 and approved by *Leo XIII in 1880. Besides the three religious vows, the Sisters promise to devote their lives to the relief of human suffering. From Montreal the Sisters spread to other parts of N. America, and separate congregations were formed in different cities, one of the most notable being the Grey Nuns of the Cross founded at Ottawa in 1845. Apart from the American Grey Nuns, the name is given to Sisters of Charity in France and in Germany ('Grey Sisters of St. Elisabeth').

On the Grey Nuns of N. America and the Grey Nuns of the Cross, see Sisters M. E. Ward and V. O'Leary in C.E., vii (1910), p. 31 f., s.vv. respectively, and L. R. Cayer-M. P. Pitts in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 802 f., s.v. 'Grey Nuns'. Also life of Mère d'Youville by A. Ferland-Angers (Montreal, 1945). On the Grey Sisters of St. Elisabeth there are commemorative volumes to mark the 50th anniversary of their foundation by J. Jungnitz (Breslau, 1892) and the 80th anniversary by O. Cohausz (ib., 1922). J. Schweter, Geschichte der Kongregation der Grauen Schwestern von der heiligen Elisabeth (2 vols., ib., 1937). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 481–3. H. C. Wendlandt–K. van Volxen in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), iv (1960), col. 1173 f., s.v. 'Graue Schwestern'.

GRIESBACH, JOHANN JAKOB (1745–1812), NT scholar. A pupil of J. S. *Semler, he was professor of the NT at Jena from 1775 until his death. The first critic to make a systematic application of literary analysis to the Gospels, he maintained that St. *Mark was the latest of the three Synoptists and based his work on Mt. and Lk. (the 'dependence theory'). His most valuable work, however, was in the field of *textual criticism. After travels in England and France to work at MSS., he published an edition of the Greek NT in which, for the first time in Germany, the '*Textus Receptus' was abandoned (2 vols., 1775–7), and thereby laid the foundations of all subsequent work on the Greek text. His other works include Symbolae Criticae ad supplendas et corrigendas Variarum N.T. Lectionum Collectiones (Halle, 2 vols., 1785–93) and Commentarius Criticus in Textum Graecum Novi Testamenti (Jena, 1793–1811).

A collection of his Opuscula Academica was issued by his pupil, J. P. Gabler (Jena, 2 vols., 1824–5). J. C. W. Augusti, Über J. J. Griesbachs Verdienste (Breslau, 1812). B. Orchard, O.S.B.–T. R. W. Longstaff (edd.), J. J. Griesbach: Synoptic and text-critical studies 1776–1976 (1978).

GRIGNION DE MONTFORT, LOUIS MARIE, St. (1673–1716), popular missionary. Educated at the *Jesuit College at Rennes, he devoted himself early to a life of poverty and prayer, and was ordained priest in 1700. From 1701 to 1703 he was chaplain at a hospital at Poitiers, where he founded the 'Daughters of Wisdom', a congregation for nursing the sick and educating poor children. In 1704 he began to realize his true vocation, the giving of missions throughout W. France, where he suffered from persecutions from the *Jansenists, who grudged his influence. About 1712 he founded the 'Company of Mary', a congregation of missionaries. Both his foundations were almost extinct at his death, but they have subsequently revived. His Traité de la vraie dévotion à la Sainte Vierge, after having long been lost, was recovered in 1842 and has exercised a powerful influence on Catholic devotion. He was beatified in 1888, and canonized by *Pius XII on 20 July 1947. Feast day, 28 Apr.

Œuvres complètes, ed. M. Gendrot and others (Paris, 1966). There is an Eng. tr. of his Traité de la vraie dévotion à la Sainte Vierge by F. W. *Faber (London, 1863). There is much documentary material in the report of the inquiries leading up to his canonization, publ. by the Sacra Rituum Congregatio, Sectio Historica, Nos. 66 and 67; Rome, 1947. Lives and studies include those of P. Grandet (Nantes, 1724), P. Picot de Clorivière, S.J. (Paris, Saint-Malo, and Rennes, 1785), J. M. Quérard (4 vols., Rennes, 1887), 'A Secular Priest' ([Dr. Cruikshank], Blessed Louis Marie Grignon de Montfort and his Devotion, 2 vols., London, 1892, with bibl.), E. Jac ('Les Saints', 1903), A. Laveille, Cong. Orat. (Paris, 1907), G. Rigault (Marseilles, 1930; Eng. tr., 1932), E. Tisserant (Rome, 1943; incl. text of his Testament), G. Bernoville (Paris, 1946), P. Eyckeler (Maastricht, etc., 1947), and L. Pérouas, S.S.M. (Paris, 1966). P. Eyckeler, Le Testament de S. Louis-Marie Grignon de Montfort. Étude historique (Maastricht, etc., 1953). E. Tisserant, 'Le Testament de S. Louis-Marie Grignon de Montfort' in Anal. Boll., lxviii (1950), pp. 464–74.

GRIMSHAW, WILLIAM (1708–63), perpetual curate of Haworth. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1731 and for some years was chaplain at Todmorden, where he emerged from a long spiritual crisis a fervent missionary. Becoming perpetual curate of Haworth, W. Yorks, in 1742, by his devoted zeal and consistency he gained a remarkable influence in his own and the surrounding parishes. He welcomed to his pulpit *Methodists and *Evangelicals, among them J. *Wesley, G. *Whitefield, and H. *Venn, and later himself engaged in itinerant preaching. When troubles arose from incumbents in the parishes where Grimshaw preached uninvited, his evident sincerity led his diocesan, the Abp. of *York (Matthew Hutton, 1747–57), to give him a measure of support. Grimshaw was himself a strong *Calvinist, though not intolerant of *Arminians and others with whom he disagreed.

R. Spence Hardy, William Grimshaw, Incumbent of Haworth, 1742–1763 (1860); F. Baker, William Grimshaw 1708–1763 (1963). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), p. 254 f.

GRINDAL, EDMUND (? 1519–83), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of a Cumberland farmer, he was educated at Cambridge and became a fellow of Pembroke Hall in 1538, and later, chaplain to *Edward VI and prebendary of *Westminster. He went into exile under *Mary to Frankfurt, where he sought to reconcile the party of J. *Knox and the defenders of the 1552 BCP. In 1559 he was made Bp. of London and one of the revisers of the BCP, in 1570 Abp. of *York, and in 1575 Abp. of Canterbury. On his refusal to suppress the Puritan 'prophesyings' he was suspended in 1577 from his jurisdictional, but not from his spiritual, functions; these were restored to him in 1582. His theology was moderately *Calvinist, and he had considerable sympathy even with the Puritan critics of episcopacy. See also Elizabeth I.

J. *Strype, History of the Life and Acts of Edmund Grindal (1710; new ed., 1821). W. Nicholson (ed.), The Remains of Archbishop Grindal (*Parker Society, 1843), with preface by the editor. H. Robinson (ed.), The Zürich Letters (2 vols., Parker Society, 1842–5), passim. P. Collinson, Archbishop Grindal 1519–1583 (1979). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 261–4.

GRINFIELD, EDWARD WILLIAM (1785–1864), Biblical scholar. Educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1808, and wrote a large number of pamphlets and articles in defence of a rigid theological orthodoxy. He is remembered esp. by the lectureship at Oxford which he founded in 1859 to promote the study of the *Septuagint.

N. D. F. Pearce in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), p. 265.

GROCYN, WILLIAM (?1449–1519), English Renaissance scholar. He was educated at New College, Oxford, and later taught at Magdalen and Exeter Colleges. After studying Greek and Latin in Italy under famous teachers from c. 1489 to 1491, he was recognized on his return to Oxford as the foremost English scholar and teacher of his time. J. *Colet, T. *More, and D. *Erasmus all sought his guidance. His influence in the university made it unnecessary for the future to go to Italy for Greek learning. In his religious attitude he was more conservative than most of those who had come under similar influences, e.g. he preferred *Aristotle to *Plato and did not cease to study the *Schoolmen. In his later life he denied, however, the traditional attribution of the 'Ecclesiastical Hierarchy' to *Dionysius, the companion of St. Paul, though he had earlier defended it.

The best account is the memoir by M. Burrows appended to his ed. of 'Linacre's Catalogue of Books belonging to William Grocyn in 1520 together with his Accounts as Executor', pr. in O.H.S. Collectanea, ii (O.H.S., xvi; 1890), pp. 317–31, the memoir being pr. pp. 332–80. S. Lee in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 266–9; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 827–30.

GROOTE, GEERT DE (1340–84), Gerardus Magnus, the mystic who founded the '*Brethren of the Common Life'. A native of Deventer, he was educated at *Paris, where he had a brilliantly successful career. For a time he taught at *Cologne and elsewhere, living (as his means easily allowed) in great luxury and self-indulgence. In 1374 he was converted and began to live a devout and simple life. After three years spent in the monastery of Munnikhuizen, he followed the advice of Jan van *Ruysbroeck and became (1379) missionary preacher in the diocese of Utrecht, though he was never ordained priest. Here his outspoken condemnation of the abuses of the time led his licence to be withdrawn in 1383; but his appeal against the sentence was never answered, as he died soon after. Groote gathered round him a few friends who lived a quasi-monastic life at Deventer and became the nucleus of the Brethren of the Common Life. Some years earlier he had started a community for women on similar lines in the town. Groote succeeded in giving mysticism a note at once less unworldly and less self-centred than it commonly assumed. His Life was written by *Thomas à Kempis.

Epistolae ed. W. Mulders, S.J. (Tekstuitgaven van Ons Geestelijk Erf, iii; Antwerp, 1933). Contra Turrim Traiectensem ed. R. R. Post (The Hague, 1967). Life by Thomas à Kempis pr. among the latter's works (Nuremberg, 1494, fols. xxix–xxxviii); Eng. tr. by J. P. Arthur, The Founders of the New Devotion (1905), pp. 1–78. G. Bonet-Maury, Gérard de Groote (Paris, 1878); C. L. Grube, Gerhard Groot und seine Stiftungen (1883). R. R. Post, De Moderne Devotie. Geert Groote en zijn Stichtingen (Amsterdam, 1940), esp. pp. 9–44; id., The Modern Devotion. Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, iii; Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 51–196. T. P. van Zijl, Gerard Groote Ascetic and Reformer 1340–1384 (Catholic University of America Studies in Mediaeval History, xviii; 1963). J. van Ginneken, S.J., Geert Groote's Levensbeeld naar de Oudste Gegevens bewerkt (Verhandelingen der Nederlandsche Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, Deel xlvii, No. 2; 1942). K. C. L. M. De Beer, Studie over de Spiritualiteit van Geert Groote (Brussels–Nijmegen, 1938), with bibl. E. F. Jacob, 'Gerard Groote and the Beginnings of the "New Devotion" in the Low Countries' in J.E.H., iii (1952), pp. 40–57, repr. in Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (ed. 3, Manchester, 1963), pp. 139–53, with additional note, p. 249 f. J. Tiecke, O.C.O.S., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 265–74, s.v. 'Gérard (9) Groote'. See also bibl. to Brethren of the Common Life, Devotio Moderna, Imitation of Christ, and Windesheim.

GROPPER, JOHANN (1503–59), theologian. He studied jurisprudence and theology at *Cologne university, where he became known as 'Os cleri Coloniensis', and in 1532 he was appointed a Canon of Xanten. After attending a Synod at Cologne (1536), called by the Abp. *Hermann to combat the teaching of the Reformers, he drew up an Enchiridion in which he included an exposition of the *Creed, the *Seven Sacraments, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Decalogue. This, though later (1596) placed on the *Index, was well received by the theologians of Cologne, and by Cardinals G. *Contarini, R. *Pole, and G. *Morone, who regarded it as a suitable basis for a reconciliation between the Protestants and Rome. In the cause of reunion Gropper negotiated with M. *Bucer in 1540, but, though some agreement was reached on grace and justification, none was attempted on authority and the Eucharist. When the Abp. of Cologne himself became a Protestant, Gropper secured his deposition, and restored the Catholic religion, for which services he was made Provost of Bonn in 1547, and in 1556 *Paul IV offered him a cardinal's hat.

Lives by W. van Gulik (Freiburg i.Br., 1906) and W. Lipgens (Münster i.W., 1951; with portrait and bibl.). L. Pastor, Die kirchlichen Reunionsbestrebungen während der Regierung Karls V (1879). S. Ehses, 'Johannes Groppers Rechtfertigungslehre auf dem Konzil von Trient' in R.Q., xx (1906, II), pp. 175–88. H. Lutz, 'Reformatio Germaniae. Drei Denkschriften Johannes Groppers (1546, 1558)' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xxxvii (1957), pp. 222–310, incl. text. A. Humbert in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1880–5; F. Zoepfl in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1054–6, with bibl.

GROSSTESTE, ROBERT (c. 1175–1253), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was the descendant of a poor family of Stradbroke in Suffolk. Little is known of his early life except that he studied at *Oxford and possibly at *Paris. Early in the 13th cent. he came to Oxford as a teacher, and became the most famous master of the time. He was given many preferments and sinecures, among them the Archdeaconry of Leicester, but after a grave illness he resigned all in 1232 except a prebend at Lincoln. From 1224 to 1235 he taught at the newly founded *Franciscan house of studies at Oxford; he was a close personal friend of *Adam Marsh and a great admirer of the order, the English branch of which mainly owed to him its position in Oxford as well as its interest in scholarship. In 1235 he was elected Bp. of Lincoln, then the largest diocese in England, and at once began a thorough visitation, in the course of which he deposed many abbots and priors. He saw their chief fault in neglecting to staff adequately the parish churches in their care. In 1236 he witnessed the confirmation of Magna Carta. From 1239 to 1245 he was at variance with his dean and chapter, who claimed exemption from episcopal visitation, and in the course of the conflict suspended and deprived the dean. The affair was settled when *Innocent IV by a bull of 25 Aug. 1245 gave the bishop full power over the chapter. In 1245 Grossteste also attended the Council of *Lyons, and in 1250 visited Rome, where he made his famous speech 'De corruptelis Ecclesiae', directed esp. against the custom of appointing Italians, ignorant of the language and country, to rich English benefices. The last years of his life were troubled by the appointment of one of the Pope's nephews to a canonry of Lincoln, which he refused to recognize. Several attempts to secure Grossteste's canonization came to nothing.

Grossteste's interests covered a very wide range of learned studies, including astronomy, mathematics, optics, and other scientific subjects. His experiments in natural science were commended by, and probably inspired, Roger *Bacon. His translations from the Greek include *Aristotle's 'Nicomachean Ethics' and 'De Virtute', works of St. *John of Damascus and of Pseudo-*Dionysius with the scholia of *Maximus Confessor, the Epp. of St. *Ignatius of Antioch, and the '*Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs' in collaboration with John of Basingstoke, all of them very literal. He also commented on Book VIII of Aristotle's 'Physics' and the 'Nicomachean Ethics', the works of Pseudo-Dionysius and several Biblical books, among them Psalms 1–100 and St. *Paul's Epp. to the Romans and to the Galatians. His philosophico-theological works include treatises 'De Anima', 'De Libero Arbitrio', 'De Forma Prima Omnium', 'De Veritate', 'De Potentia et Actu', and 'Quaestiones Theologicae'. In his philosophy of nature he follows St. *Augustine and the Arab *Neoplatonists rather than Aristotle, taking over esp. the Augustinian doctrine of light, on which he builds a complete system of metaphysics in his treatise 'De Luce'. He held that light was a very subtle corporeal substance and the first form to be created in prime matter, from which all else develops acc. to immanent laws. He also taught that God was the exemplary cause of all things and that His existence was immediately known but could also be proved from the argument of motion. He was with the Franciscan school in teaching the primacy of will over intellect. In addition he wrote a number of pastoral and devotional works, incl. treatises on confession, on the *Eucharist, and on the pains of *Purgatory, as well as sermons and letters.

In American BCP (1979), feast day, 9 Oct.

A number of his works were printed in the 16th cent., but many still remain unpublished. Epistolae ed. H. R. Luard (R.S., 1861); these are the chief source for his life. Rotuli ed. F. N. Davis (*Canterbury and York Society, x, 1913; Lincoln Record Society, xi, 1914). Other texts in L. Baur, Die philosophischen Werke des Robert Grosseteste (B.G.P.M., ix; 1912). His translation of Pseudo-Dionysius is pr. among the latter's works. His commentary on his De Mystica Theologia ed. U. Gamba (Orbis Romanus, xv; Milan, 1942); his translation of St. John of Damascus's Dialectica ed. O. A. Colligan, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, Text Series, vi; 1953), and his Commentary on Book VIII of Aristotle's Physics ed. R. C. Dales (Boulder, Colorado, 1963). Full details of editions of other texts by S. Gieben, O.F.M. Cap., 'Bibliographia Universa Roberti Grosseteste ab An. 1473 ad An. 1969' in Collectanea Franciscana, xxxix (1969), pp. 362–418. Lives by S. Pegge (London, 1793), G. G. Perry (ib., 1871), and F. S. Stevenson (ib., 1899). E. Franceschini, 'Roberto Grossatesta, vescovo di Lincoln, e le sue traduzioni latini' in Atti del Reale Istituto Veneto di Scienze, Lettere ed Arti, xciii, Parte Seconda (1934), pp. 1–138. A. C. Crombie, Robert Grosseteste and the Origins of Experimental Science (1953). D. A. Callus, O.P. (ed.), Robert Grosseteste, Scholar and Bishop. Essays in Commemoration of the Seventh Centenary of his Death (1955). S. H. Thomson, The Writings of Robert Grosseteste (1940; bibliography). H. R. Luard in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 275–8; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 830–3.

GROTIUS, HUGO (1583–1645), Huig de Groot, Dutch jurist and theologian. He was the descendant of an influential family of Delft. A very precocious boy, at the age of twelve he went to *Leyden university, where he was deeply influenced by humanism (J. J. *Scaliger). At the age of fifteen he accompanied J. van Oldenbarnevelt on a visit to France, and at eighteen he was appointed Historian of the States General and in 1607 Advocate Fiscal of Holland, Zeeland, and W. Friesland. He now began to take a keen interest in theological questions, siding with the *Arminians. In 1613 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to England, where he acquainted *James I with the religious situation in the Netherlands, but without being able to gain him to his opinions. On his return (1613) he was made Pensionary of Rotterdam. By his support of moderation in his Ordinum Pietas (1613) he incurred the hostility of Prince Maurice of Nassau, the leader of the Calvinists. In 1614 he drafted a Resolution for Peace in the Church. His eirenical sympathies, combined with his friendship for Oldenbarnevelt, led to a sentence of lifelong imprisonment in 1618. His wife having contrived to arrange his escape in a box of books, he settled at *Paris in 1621, where Louis XIII awarded him a pension. But though in sympathy with many Catholic doctrines, Grotius refused the advantages which conversion would have brought him and remained outside the RC Church. In 1622 he wrote his treatise De Veritate Religionis Christianae, and in 1623 began the work that established his permanent fame as a jurist, De Jure Belli ac Pacis (Paris, 1625). Having returned to Holland in 1631, he was banished and went a little later to Germany. In 1635 he returned to Paris as ambassador of Queen *Christina of Sweden. In these later years his literary energies were mainly devoted to the cause of reunion, among his writings being Via ad Pacem Ecclesiasticam and Votum pro Pace Ecclesiastica (both 1642). He died at Rostock on his way back from Sweden to France from the consequences of a shipwreck.

Grotius's principal religious work was the De Veritate Religionis Christianae. Designed as a practical handbook for missionaries, it sought to uphold the evidences of natural theology and to establish the superiority of the Christian faith to all other creeds. It found the essentials of the Gospel in a perfect trust in Divine Providence and in the ordering of human life acc. to the principles laid down by Christ. The book contained much that was valued by Christians of all denominations and became a standard work. In his teaching on the Atonement, Grotius anticipated some of the more liberal doctrines of the 19th–20th cents.

Of his other theological writings, his Annotationes in Vetus et Novum Testamentum (1642) marked a new departure in the science of exegesis. Discarding the current belief in Biblical inspiration, Grotius here adopted the method of philological criticism. At the same time he stressed the need of ecclesiastical tradition for the right understanding of Scripture, tradition, acc. to him, holding the same place in this domain as custom interpreting the written law holds in jurisprudence.

His great work, De Jure Belli ac Pacis, also rests its theses to a large extent on tradition. Though it finally severed law from theology, fixing the principle of justice in the unalterable Law of Nature which has its source in man as a social being, it utilized medieval and modern theologians, and, by its comprehensive systematization, earned him the title of 'Father of International Law'.

Grotius's Opera Theologica, ed. 3 vols. fol. at Amsterdam, 1644–6 (repr. London, 1660). Letters first ed. Leiden, 1648; fuller collection ed. Amsterdam, 1687. Eng. tr. of De Iure Belli (abridged) by W. Whewell (3 vols., Cambridge, 1853). J. ter Meulen–P. J. J. Diermanse, Bibliographie des écrits imprimés de Hugo Grotius (The Hague, 1950). Early bibl. in P. A. Lehmann, Hugonis Grotii Manes Vindicati (Delft, 1727); modern bibl. by J. ter Meulen, Concise Bibliography of Hugo Grotius (Leiden, 1925); id.–P. J. J. Diermanse, Bibliographie des écrits sur Hugo Grotius imprimés au XVIIe siècle (2 vols., The Hague, 1961). Lives by P. A. Lehmann (in op. cit.), C. van Brandt–C. van Cattenbuch (2 vols., Dordrecht, 1727), C. Butler (London, 1826). W. S. M. Knight, The Life and Works of Hugo Grotius (Grotius Society Publications, iv; London, 1925). Fiorella de Michelis, Le origini storiche e culturali del pensiero di Ugo Grozio (Florence, 1967); A. Droetto, Studi Groziani (Turin, 1968). R. S. Franks, A History of the Doctrine of the Work of Christ in its Ecclesiastical Development, ii [1918], pp. 48–73. M. *Pattison in E.B. (ed. 11), xii (1910), pp. 621–4.

GROTTAFERRATA (Lat. Crypta ferrata). The site of a *Basilian monastery on the lower slopes of the Alban hills, near Rome, founded in 1004 by St. Nilus the Younger. It has remained a centre of Greek learning in Italy, though in the Middle Ages it came largely under Latinizing influences. In the Renaissance period its (*commendatory) abbots included many distinguished scholars, notably Cardinals *Bessarion, Giulio della Rovere (afterwards Pope *Julius II), and *Consalvi. In 1881 *Leo XIII re-established here a purely Byzantine Rite. The monastery contains a fine collection of Greek MSS.

A. Rocchi, Codices Cryptenses (Rome, 1884); id., La badia di S. Maria di Grottaferrata (Rome, 1884); id., De Coenobio Cryptoferratensi eiusque Bibliotheca et Codicibus praesertim Graecis Commentarii (Tusculum, 1893); P. *Batiffol, L'Abbaye de Rossano (Paris, 1891); A. Muñoz, L'Art byzantin à l'exposition de Grottaferrata (Rome, 1906); O. Marucchi, 'Grottaferrata. Scoperta di un antico cimitero cristiano' in Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, xix (1913), pp. 230–7. M. Petta in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 813 f., s.v.

GROU, JEAN NICOLAS (1731–1803), French *Jesuit. From 1751 to 1755 he was professor at the Jesuit college of La Flèche. Later he lived at Pont-à-Mousson, at Paris, and (from 1792 till his death) in England. He published several works on *Plato as well as a vigorous defence of the Jesuit Order. 'Père Grou' is best known, however, for his fine spiritual writings, some of which have circulated very widely both in French and in translations—among them his Caractères de la vraie dévotion (1778), Maximes spirituelles (1789), Méditations en forme de retraite sur l'amour de Dieu (1796), besides several posthumous books, notably L'École de Jésus-Christ (2 vols., 1855).

A. Cadrès, S.J., Notice sur la vie et les œuvres du Père Jean-Nicolas Grou (1862; repr. in J. N. Grou, L'Intérieur de Jésus et de Marie, posthumous, 1862, pp. xiii–cii). F. *von Hügel, 'The Spiritual Writings of Father Grou, S.J.' in The Tablet, lxxiv (1889), pp. 990 f., 1029–31, repr. in Eng. tr. of Grou's Spiritual Maxims (1961), pp. 265–93. Sommervogel, iii (1892), cols. 1868–82, and ix (1900), 442 f. A. Rayez, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1059–83.

GROUP MOVEMENT. See Oxford Group.

GRUNDTVIG, NIKOLAI FREDRIK SEVERIN (1783–1872), Danish religious teacher. From 1839 till his death he was preacher at the Vartov Hospital at Copenhagen, and in 1861 was given the title and rank of a 'Bishop'. In 1824, after some deep religious experiences, he started a reforming movement in Danish Lutheranism, attacking the rationalism and state domination of religion, and seeking to restore dogmatic orthodoxy with the *Apostles' Creed as the standard. With the movement thus begun ('Grundtvigianism') came a renewed understanding of the Church and the Sacraments in Danish theology. He was also active in founding the Folk High Schools in Denmark. He was an authority on Anglo-Saxon and Norse literature. He and S. *Kierkegaard together are the most notable figures in Danish theology in the 19th cent.

Grundtvig's extensive MSS. are housed in the Royal Library at Copenhagen. No complete edition of his writings exists. The fullest is that ed. H. Begtrup (10 vols., Copenhagen, 1904–9); extracts ed. G. Christensen–H. Koch, Værker i Udvalg (10 vols., ib., 1940–9). His poetry was ed. by Svend Grundtvig–C. J. Brandt–G. Christensen (9 vols., ib., 1880–1930). Correspondence ed. G. Christensen and Stener Grundtvig (2 vols., ib., 1924–6). His correspondence with Ingemann between 1821 and 1850 also ed. Svend Grundtvig (ib., 1882). Danish Life, setting Grundtvig in relation to the history of Denmark in the 19th cent., by F. Rönning (8 vols., Copenhagen, 1907–14). Shorter lives in Danish by H. Brun (2 vols., Kolding, 1879–82) and H. Koch (Copenhagen, 1944; Eng. tr., Yellow Springs, Ohio, 1952), and in German by J. *Kaftan (Basle, 1876). J. P. Bang, Grundtvig og England (1932). H. Begtrup, N. F. S. Grundtvigs danske Kristendom. Historisk Fremstillet (2 vols., 1936); also several other writings by the same author. P. G. Lindhardt, Grundtvig. An Introduction (1951), with useful bibl., pp. 137–9. S. Johansen, Bibliografi over N. F. S. Grundtvigs Skrifter (4 parts, 1948–54). L. Schröder in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 206–17; K. E. Bugge in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1085–8, s.v.

GRÜNEWALD, MATTHIAS (c. 1475–1528), German painter. Very little is known of his life. The most famous work attributed to him is the altar-piece of Isenheim, near Colmar, a polyptych of eleven panels completed before 1516, and now in the Colmar Museum. The Crucifixion is portrayed with cruel realism, with St. *John the Baptist directing an exceptionally long index finger to the Cross, with the inscription: 'He must increase and I must decrease' (Jn. 3. 30). K. *Barth sees in the Baptist the true type of the Christian witness, pointing away from himself and his experience to the objective Word of God.

Paintings and drawings ed. H. A. Schmid (2 parts and suppl., Strassburg, 1908–11), also reproduced, with introd. by N. Pevsner–M. Meier (London, etc., 1958). Collection of drawings also ed. M. I. Friedländer (Berlin, 1927). A. Burckhard, Matthias Grünewald. Personality and Accomplishment (Cambridge, Mass., 1936), with detailed bibl. Other general studies by F. Boek (Strassburg, 1904), O. Hagen (Munich, 1923), and H. Feurstein (Bonn, 1930), all with copious illustrations. W. Fraenger, Matthias Grünewald in seinem Werke. Ein physiognomischer Versuch (1936). W. K. Zülch, Der historische Grünewald (Munich, 1938). W. Stengel, 'Der neue Grünewald-Fund' in Zeitschrift für Kunstwissenschaft, vi (1952), pp. 65–78. H. A. Schmid in Allgemeines Lexikon der bildenden Künstler, ed. U. Thieme–F. Becker and others, xv (1922), pp. 134–7, s.v., with bibl.

GUALBERT, St. JOHN. See John Gualbert, St.

GUARANTEES, The Law of. The law passed on 13 May 1871 to regulate the relations between the first government of the new Kingdom of Italy and the Papacy. The Pope's person was declared sacred and inviolable; he was to receive an annual sum of 3,225,000 lire, free of taxation, for certain specified expenses; the *Vatican, the *Lateran Palace, and the Papal villa at *Castel Gandolfo were to remain in the Pope's possession; the freedom of *conclaves and of *General Councils was guaranteed; the diplomatic immunity of foreign envoys to the Holy See was recognized; and the seminaries in Rome and in the six *Suburbicarian sees were to be under the sole authority of the Pope. The relations between the Vatican and the Italian government were regulated by it until the *Lateran Treaty of 1929.

Text (Italian) ed. H. v. Kremer-Auenrode–P. Hirsch in Das Staatsarchiv, Erster Supplementband zu Band xxiii, xxiv (1877), pp. 63–6; operative clauses of Germ. tr. repr. in Mirbt, No. 608, pp. 466–8. F. Olgiati, La questione romana e la sua soluzione (1929), pp. 75–91, also with operative clauses of (Ital.) text, pp. 77–81. G. Amabile, La legge delle guarentigie. Studi giuridico-politico (Catania, 1897). U. Benigni in C.E., vii (1910), p. 48 f., s.v.; C. Corsanego in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 1060–2, s.v. 'Legge delle guarentigie'.

GUARDIA NOBILE. See Noble Guard.

GUARDIA PALATINA D' ONORE. See Palatine Guard.

GUARDIAN. The superior of a *Franciscan friary. He normally holds office for three years.

GUARDIAN, The. A weekly Anglican religious newspaper, founded in 1846 by R. W. *Church, Frederic Rogers, and others, to uphold *Tractarian principles, and to show their relevance to the best secular thought of the day. The Guardian always claimed to be the offspring of the Tractarian movement, and to provide independent comment upon theological, political and social issues. It ceased publication in 1951.

GUARDIAN ANGELS. The belief that God assigns to every man an angel to guard him in body and soul was common to the pagan (e.g. *Plato, Phaedo, 108 B) and the Jewish world, though it is not clearly formulated in the OT. It is expressed in *Enoch (100. 5), where the author states that the just have protecting spirits. In the NT the popular belief is reflected in Acts 12. 15 and confirmed, in the case of children, by the Lord (Mt. 18. 10). Though the Shepherd of *Hermas (c. 140 – 55) says that every man has an angel to guide him (Mand. VI. ii. 1–3), there is much variety of opinion among the Fathers in general. St. *Ambrose (In Ps. 37. 43) believed that the righteous were deprived of guardian spirits in order that, having a harder struggle against evil, they might attain to greater glory, while St. *Jerome (In Jerem. 30. 12) and St. Basil (Hom. in Ps. 33. 5) state that sin drives them away. *Honorius of Autun (d. 1151), who was followed by subsequent teachers, first defined the belief clearly. He held that each soul, at the moment that it was introduced into the body, was entrusted to an angel (Unaquaeque etiam anima, dum in corpus mittitur, angelo committitur, Elucidarium, ii. 31). St. *Thomas Aquinas (S. Theol. I, q. 113, a. 4) held that only angels of the lowest order fulfilled this function, whereas *Duns Scotus and others maintained that the mission might be committed to any member of the angelic host.

The function of the Guardian Angels is the protection of body and soul and the presentation of prayers to God (Rev. 8. 3 f.). They were originally commemorated with St. *Michael, but an independent feast, first found in *Portugal in 1513, was extended to the whole RC Church by Clement X in 1670, and assigned to 2 Oct.

J. Duhr in Dict. Sp., i (1937), cols. 586–98, s.v. 'Anges gardiens', with refl.; further bibl., col. 624 f. H. Pope in C.E., vii (1910), p. 49 f., s.v. A. Wilmart, O.S.B., Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), ch. xiv, 'Prières à l'ange gardien', pp. 537–58.

GUDULE, St. (d. ?712), Patroness of Brussels. She is said to have belonged to a noble family of Brabant, but since the oldest surviving Life dates from the 11th cent., little is known of her with any certainty. Since 1047 the principal church of Brussels, whither her remains were translated in that year, has been dedicated to her. She is often depicted with a lantern, in reference to the legend that, when the devil had one morning blown out the taper by which she regularly discovered her way to church, it was miraculously rekindled. Feast day, 8 Jan.

AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 513–30, which includes (pp. 514–24) the Life by Hubert of Brabant (11th cent.; mainly apocryphal). J. *Bollandus–C. Smetius, 'De S. Gudila Virgine Commentarius Praevius' in Acta Sanctorum Belgii, v (1789), pp. 667–89. R. Podevyn, O.S.B., 'Étude critique sur la Vita Gudulae' in Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, ii (1923), pp. 619–41.

GUÉRANGER, PROSPER LOUIS PASCAL (1805–75), French *Benedictine monk. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1827. With a view to the re-establishment of the Benedictine Order in France, he bought the priory of *Solesmes in 1832, opened it in 1833, and in 1837 made his profession at Rome and was appointed by *Gregory XVI the first Abbot of Solesmes, where he spent the rest of his life. He was keenly interested in liturgical matters, and as a zealous *ultramontane led the movement in France for replacing the existing local diocesan uses by the one rite of Rome. He was a voluminous writer, whose popular style led some of his books to circulate very widely. Among the best known were his Institutions liturgiques (3 vols., 1840–51) and L'Année liturgique (a devotional commentary on the ecclesiastical year; 9 vols., 1841–66).

For his writings (126 items) see F. *Cabrol, Bibliographie des bénédictins de la congrégation de France (Solesmes, 1889), pp. 3–33. [P. Delatte, O.S.B.,] Dom Guéranger, abbé de Solesmes (2 vols., 1909); E. Sevrin, Dom Guéranger et Lamennais (1933); B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Dom Guéranger et l'esprit liturgique' in Questions liturgiques et paroissiales, xxii (1937), pp. 131–46. J. Hourlier, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1097–1106, s.v., with extensive bibl.

GUEST, EDMUND (1518–77), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow and vice-provost. In 1548 he published A Treatise against the Privy Mass in which he repudiated the Eucharistic Sacrifice and the adoration of the consecrated elements. In 1549 he spoke against the dogma of *Transubstantiation in discussions held at Cambridge before the Commissioners. During the reign of *Mary he remained in hiding. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he became a domestic chaplain to M. *Parker (1559) and in the same year Archdeacon of *Canterbury. In 1560 he was appointed Bp. of *Rochester, and in 1564 he took part in the disputes concerning the *Real Presence, which he defended. In 1571 he subscribed the *Thirty-Nine Articles despite some difficulties about their Eucharistic doctrine. In the same year the Queen, one of whose favourites he was, appointed him to the see of Salisbury.

H. G. Dugdale, The Life and Character of Edmund Geste (1840). For his Eucharistic teaching, see also G. F. Hodges, Bishop Guest: Articles Twenty-eight and Twenty-nine (1894). E. T. Bradley in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 316–18.

GUEUX (Fr., 'ragamuffins'). A title given (originally in contempt) to those who in 1566 petitioned Margaret of Parma, the regent of the Netherlands, against the *Inquisition. It was later adopted by other bodies of Protestants who opposed the Spaniards in the Low Countries.

GUNKEL, HERMANN (1862–1932), Protestant theologian. After holding teaching appointments at Göttingen (1888), Halle (1889), and Berlin (1894), he became Prof. of OT Theology at Giessen in 1907 and at Halle (succeeding C. H. *Cornill) in 1920. He was a leading member of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule and a pioneer of *Form Criticism. He worked out the method in his comm. on Genesis (1901) and then extended it to the Psalms. He concluded that Hebrew religious poetry had a long history and that its forms had taken shape in oral tradition at a comparatively early date and become fully developed before the Exile. His writings include Die Wirkungen des heiligen Geistes nach der populären Anschauung der apostolischen Zeit (1888), Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit (1895), Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständnis des Neuen Testaments (1903), his comm. on Psalms (1925–6) and Einleitung in die Psalmen (posthumously publd. 1933). He also contributed several important articles to R.G.G.

Eng. tr. of various short works by A. K. Dallas as What Remains of the Old Testament and other Essays (1928). On his work on the Psalms, see A. R. Johnson in H. H. Rowley (ed.), The Old Testament and Modern Study (1951), pp. 162–81. W. Klatt, Hermann Gunkel. Zu seiner Theologie der Religionsgeschichte und zur Entstehung der formgeschichtlichen Methode (Göttingen, 1969), with bibl. L. Hennequin in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iii (1938), cols. 1374–7, s.v., with refs. to obituary notices.

GUNNING, PETER (1614–84), Bp. of *Ely. From 1633 to 1646 he was a fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. He was a staunch Churchman, opposed to both Romanism and Puritanism, who continued during the Commonwealth to minister to Anglican congregations and held the C of E service at Exeter House in the Strand. At the *Restoration he was rewarded with rapid promotion. In 1660 he became Lady Margaret professor, and in 1661 Regius professor, of divinity at Cambridge, in 1669 Bp. of *Chichester, and in 1674 Bp. of Ely. He took a leading part at the *Savoy Conference, where as 'the incomparable hammer of the schismatics' he argued against R. *Baxter. He probably wrote the original draft of the prayer for 'All Sorts and Conditions of Men' in the BCP, though the prayer has also been ascribed to Bp. R. *Sanderson.

Modern ed. of his treatise The Paschal or Lent Fast (1662) by C. P. Eden in L.A.C.T. (1845). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 345–8.

GUNPOWDER PLOT, The (1605). The attempt to blow up the Houses of Parliament and destroy the King, Lords, and Commons together, in the hope that the RCs would then be enabled to seize the government. A small band headed by R. *Catesby hired a cellar under the Houses of Parliament in 1604, stored it with gunpowder, and arranged for Guy *Fawkes to start the explosion. The plot was revealed to Lord Salisbury by Lord Monteagle, and the leading conspirators were executed. It resulted in the greater unpopularity of Popery and an increased severity in the Penal Code. A form of service in commemoration of the frustration of the Plot was added by Royal Proclamation to the BCP in 1605, and appointed to be used annually on 5 Nov. Its use was revoked in 1859.

The Trial of Guy Fawkes and Others (The Gunpowder Plot), ed. D. Carsewell (London, 1934). D. Jardine (ed.), Criminal Trials, ii, The Gunpowder Plot (1835), with full introd. Id., A Narrative of the Gunpowder Plot (1857). J. Gerard, S.J., What was the Gunpowder Plot? The Traditional Story Tested by the Original Evidence (1897); S. R. Gardiner, What the Gunpowder Plot was (1897). P. Sidney, A History of the Gunpowder Plot. Its Conspiracy and its Agents (1904). G. B. Morgan, The Great English Treason known as the Gunpowder Plot and its (faked) Miraculous Discovery with its hitherto unknown greater Betrayal in the Year 1605 (2 vols., privately printed, Oxford, 1931–2). H. R. Williamson, The Gunpowder Plot (1941), with further bibl. P. Caraman, Henry Garnet 1555–1606 and the Gunpowder Plot (1964).

GÜNTHER, ANTON (1783–1863), religious philosopher. He was ordained priest in 1820, spent two years in a *Jesuit novitiate, and settled down for the rest of his life at Vienna without official position; there he actively propagated in lectures and books a system of philosophy and speculative theology. He made it his aim to interpret Catholic sacramentalism in terms of modern pantheistic idealism, esp. that of F. W. J. *Schelling and G. W. F. *Hegel. He held that the human reason could prove scientifically the mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, and that there was no real cleavage between natural and supernatural truth. By a form of the *ontological argument, he maintained that the existence of God could be deduced from the analysis of self-consciousness. All the dogmas of the Church, he held, were liable to revision and improvement in the light of fuller knowledge. In spite of influential friends, all his works were condemned by the *Index in 1857, and Günther submitted to the decision. After the First *Vatican Council, most of those who still adhered to his philosophy joined the *Old Catholics.

Günther's writings include (titles abbreviated): Vorschule zur spekulativen Theologie (1828–9), Peregrins Gastmahl (1830), Süd- und Nordlichter (1832), Der letzte Symboliker (1834; on the controversy between J. A. *Möhler and F. C. *Baur), Thomas a Scrupulis (1835; against *Hegelianism), Die Juste-Milieus in der deutschen Philosophie gegenwärtiger Zeit (1838; against Baur), Eurystheus und Herakles (1843), and Antisavarese (posthumous, 1883). Collected works ed. in 9 vols., Vienna, 1882. P. Knoodt, Anton Günther (2 vols., Vienna, 1881). L. Orbán, Theologia Güntheriana et Concilium Vaticanum. Inquisitio historico-dogmatica de re Güntheriana iuxta vota inedita consultoris J. Schwetz actaque Concilii Vaticani exarata (Analecta Gregoriana, xxviii and 1; 1942–9). P. Wenzel, Das wissenschaftliche Anliegen des Güntherianismus (Essen, 1961); id., Der Freundeskreis um Anton Günther und die Gründung Beurons (ib., 1965). Other modern studies by J. Pritz (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, iv; 1963) and K. Beck (ib., xvii; 1967). Überweg, iv, pp. 259–62, 699 f. F. Lauchert in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 85–8, with full bibl.; H. Thurston, S.J., in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), p. 455 f., s.v. 'Güntherianism'; A. Piolanti in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1307–9.

GUSTAV-ADOLF-VEREIN. A German Protestant society to aid the weaker sister Churches in the '*diaspora'. It was founded in 1832 by the Leipzig professor C. G. L. Grossmann, to commemorate the bicentenary of the death of King *Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, but did not gain importance until, in 1842, the court preacher, Karl Zimmermann of Darmstadt, amalgamated it with a similar society of his own. The activities of the Gustav-Adolf-Verein are extended to all the Protestant Churches irrespective of denomination, and though mainly devoted to the needs of German Protestants, do not exclude members of other nations. The help it gives takes various forms, esp. the building of churches and schools and provision for pastors and teachers. The society, which once formed a strong bond of union between the various Protestant Churches on the Continent and in N. America, and to a lesser degree also in England, has been accused of systematically fighting Rome on the one hand and trying to Germanize other countries on the other.

K. Zimmermann, Der Gustav-Adolf-Verein nach seiner Geschichte, seiner Verfassung und seiner Werken, ed. W. Zimmermann (son; 1878), and other works of K. Zimmermann. H. F. von Criegern, Der Gustav Adolf-Verein in den ersten 50 Jahren seines Bestehens (1882); id., Geschichte des Gustav-Adolf-Vereins (Schloessmann's Bücherei für das christliche Haus, iv; 1903). P. Lutze, Das Buch vom Gustav Adolf-Verein (1932); F. Blanckmeister, Ehrenbuch des Gustav Adolf-Vereins. Gustav Adolf-Stunden (1932). H. Drescher, Der Gustav Adolf-Verein . . . Festschrift zum Jahrhundert-Jubiläum (1932). P. W. Gennrich, 'Das Gustav-Adolf-Werk der evangelischen Kirche in Deutschland' in Kirchliches Jahrbuch für die Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland, lxxxii (1955), pp. 310–56. W. Zimmermann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 252–7; F. Lau in E.K.L. i (1956), cols. 1733–5, s.v. 'Gustav-Adolf-Werk', both s.v., and with bibl.

GUSTAVUS II ADOLPHUS (1594–1632), King of *Sweden. He was the son of Charles IX, received a careful Protestant upbringing, and succeeded his father in 1611, making Axel Oxenstjerna his chancellor. In 1613 he brought the war with Denmark to an end, and in 1617 successfully concluded that with Russia by the Peace of Stolbova. In 1621 he began a war against the Catholic Vasas in Poland, to uphold the Protestant cause and make Sweden the principal power in the Baltic. In 1626 he transferred the war to the Prussian provinces, occupying Pillau, Ermland, and the delta of the Vistula. After repeated defeats by the Poles in 1627 and 1628, he concluded the six years' truce of Altmark in 1629. In 1630 his fear of the increasing Imperial power in the Baltic led him to intervene in the *Thirty Years War. He landed a large army in Pomerania, and by the Treaty of Bärwalde obtained help from France for the promise of maintaining Catholic worship in the Catholic places he should conquer. The German Protestant princes at first opposed him, but the majority of them finally joined him after his victory over Tilly at Breitenfeld (1631). Acclaimed everywhere as the hero of Protestantism, he penetrated deeply into W. and S. Germany, wintered at Mainz, and in the spring of 1632 took the field against Tilly, whom he defeated in the battle of Rain on the Lech. After devastating Bavaria he turned against Wallenstein, whom he confronted for two months near Nuremberg. At last he offered battle at Lützen, where he was killed.

Though Gustavus Adolphus saved German Protestantism by his intervention, his premature death probably alone secured the survival of Germany. His powerful personality and his strategic gifts are generally praised; but the traditional notion that he took up arms in defence of the Gospel rather than for political reasons has been widely challenged in modern times.

Skrifter [ed. C. G. Styffe] (Stockholm, 1861). Studies by W. Harte (2 vols., London, 1759), F. F. von Soden (3 vols., Erlangen, 1865–9), G. Droysen (2 vols., Leipzig, 1869–70), J. L. Stevens (London, 1885), C. R. L. Fletcher (New York and London, 1892), N. Ahnlund (Stockholm, 1918; Eng. tr., Princeton, 1940), G. Wittrock (Stockholm, 1927), G. MacMunn (London, [1930]), J. Paul (3 vols., Leipzig, 1927–32), and M. Roberts (2 vols., London, 1953–8). Gustaf II Adolf. Minnesskrift på 300-Årsdagen av Slaget vid Lützen utarbetad inom Generalstabens Krigshistoriska Avdelning (Stockholm, 1932). See also bibl. to Thirty Years War.

GUTENBERG, JOHANN (c. 1396–1468), inventor of printing. Born at Mainz and trained as a goldsmith, Gutenberg went to Strassburg c. 1430. By c. 1449, when he returned to Mainz, he seems already to have possessed movable metal type cast in separate letters and had invented a typecasting machine. At Mainz he received two loans from Johann Fust, a banker, to finance the printing of the 42-line (*Mazarin) Bible during the years 1453–1455. But in 1455 the partners went to law and the partnership was dissolved. Peter Schoeffer, a scribe, who designed the firm's types, became Fust's partner and the firm produced in 1457 the first dated book, a beautiful Psalter. Gutenberg, with his share of the workmen and equipment, continued independently and printed the 36-line Bible and probably the Catholicon (a vocabulary) of 1460. From 1465 he was pensioned by the Abp. of Mainz. Schoeffer continued to print until 1502.

The best general study is the life by A. Ruppel (Berlin, 1939; rev. ed., 1947; with bibl.). D. C. McMurtrie (ed.), The Gutenberg Documents, with Translations of the Texts into English (New York, 1941). G. D. Painter, 'Gutenberg and the B36 Group. A Re-consideration' in D. E. Rhodes (ed.), Essays in Honour of Victor Scholderer (Mainz, 1970), pp. 292–322, with reff. G. P. Winship, John Gutenberg. A Lecture at the University of Pennsylvania delivered on February 14, 1940 (Chicago, 1940). P. Butler, The Origin of Printing in Europe (Chicago, 1940), esp. pp. 114–37. Popular account of his work in H. G. Aldis, The Printed Book (1916), pp. 7–12, ed. 3 by J. Carter–B. Crutchley (1951), pp. 3–8.

GUTHLAC, St. (? 673–714), early English hermit. He was related by blood to the royal house of Mercia. Originally a monk at the *double monastery at Repton, he later migrated to an island in the marshes around the site of the present *Crowland Abbey, where for 15 to 20 years he lived a life of severe asceticism. Feast day, 11 Apr. (in some calendars, 12 Apr.).

The Guthlac Roll, now in the British Museum (Harley Roll Y 6), is a vellum roll consisting of seventeen and a half drawings depicting the life of St. Guthlac. It was probably executed in the later half of the 12th cent. for the Abbot of Crowland.

The primary authority is the life (not later than 749) by Felix, prob. a monk of Jarrow, pr. in AA.SS., Apr. II (1675), pp. 38–50; crit. ed. B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1956); Eng. tr. in C. W. Jones, Saints' Lives and Chronicles in Early England (New York, 1947), pp. 123–60. An Anglo-Saxon prose version of this life was ed., with Eng. tr., by C. W. Goodwin (London, 1848); on this life see P. Gosner, Das angelsächsische Prosa-Leben des hl. Guthlac (Anglistische Forschungen, xxvii; 1909), and B. P. Kurtz, 'From St. Antony to St. Guthlac. A Study in Biography' in University of California Publications in Modern Philology, xii (1925–6), pp. 133–46, with reff. On the early English poem derived from the same source in the Codex Exoniensis (10th cent.), see F. Olivero, 'Sul poemetto anglosassone "Guthlac" ' in Memorie della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, Ser. 2, lxx (1942), pp. 223–65, with full reff. On the early lives see Hardy, i, 404–10 (Nos. 920–32), and B.H.L., i, 555 f. (Nos. 3723–32), and Suppl., p. 153. Jane Roberts, 'An Inventory of Early Guthlac Materials' in Mediaeval Studies, xxxii (1970), pp. 193–233. Facsimile ed. of the Guthlac Roll, with useful introd. by G. F. Warner (Roxburghe Club, Oxford, 1928). C. Hole in D.C.B., ii (1880), pp. 823–6, s.v.

GUTHRIE, JAMES (c. 1612–61), Scottish *Presbyterian. He was educated at St. Leonard's College, St. Andrews. At first an Episcopalian, he became a Presbyterian under the influence of S. *Rutherford and was ordained a minister in 1642. From 1644 to 1651 he was a member of the *General Assembly. In 1650 he excommunicated General J. Middleton as an enemy of the *National Covenant and made him do public penance. In 1651 he became one of the 'Protesters' (or 'Remonstrants') against the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the King and was deposed by the Assembly, which favoured a less rigid policy. In 1654 the English Privy Council appointed him one of the *Triers and a visitor for the universities. After the Restoration he attempted to prove his loyalty to the King, but his efforts were unsuccessful. In 1661 he was arraigned for high treason and tried by a commission presided over by Middleton, who had never forgiven the insult of compelling him to do public penance. He was hanged at the cross of Edinburgh after making a long speech from the scaffold.

T. McCrie and T. Thomson, Lives of Alexander Henderson and James Guthrie (1846), pp. 141–284 (by T. Thomson). D. P. Thomson, James Guthrie, the Covenanting Minister of Lauder and Stirling (1946). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 377–9.

GUTHRIE, THOMAS (1803–73), Scottish divine and social reformer. After ten years at Edinburgh university he was licensed as a preacher by the presbytery of Brechin in 1825, and in 1830, after a period of study abroad, inducted to the charge of Arbirlot, Tayside, where he revealed his remarkable pastoral gifts. In 1837 he moved to Edinburgh to assist John Sym in the pastorate of Old Greyfriars; and in 1840 he became minister of St. John's Church, Victoria Street, Edinburgh. At the *Disruption (1843), he came out as a strong supporter of the Free Church, and soon gained recognition by his outstanding success in collecting funds for manses for the disestablished ministers. From 1847 onwards he was engaged in establishing his celebrated 'Ragged Schools', where the poor could be given a sound education on a Protestant basis. From 1844 onwards he also identified himself with the cause of total abstinence. He was the author of many popular tracts, his most substantial work being The Gospel in Ezekiel (1856).

Autobiography [to 1843] ed. with a Memoir by David K. Guthrie-Charles J. Guthrie, sons (2 vols., London, 1874–5). Shorter studies by T. Muller (Geneva, 1890) and O. Smeaton (Edinburgh–London, 1900); also by A. L. Drummond in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 167–81. C. J. Guthrie in D.N.B., xxiii (1890), pp. 380–2.

GUYARD, MARIE (1599–1672), Ven. Marie de l'Incarnation, first Superior of the *Ursulines at Quebec. A native of Tours, she was early drawn to the religious life, but in 1617, in obedience to her parents, married Claude Joseph Martin (d. 1620), by whom she had a son, later Dom Claude Martin, O.S.B. (1619–96). In 1631 she entered the Ursuline convent at Tours, where she was appointed novice-mistress in 1633. Inspired by visions which she had received since her childhood, with the blessing of the Abp. of Tours, she joined Mme de la Peltrie (1603–71) and two other sisters in accepting an invitation of the *Jesuit mission to form a convent in Quebec in 1639. The community, of which she was appointed superior, settled first in Lower Quebec and in 1641 moved to its present site. It engaged in educational work among French and Indians, and despite hardships of climate, fire and attacks by the natives, prospered, largely owing to her leadership. She was the recipient of religious experiences which she recorded in obedience to her directors (1633 and 1654). Her works, published posthumously, include her letters (1681), Retraites (1682) and L'École sainte, ou Explication familière des mystères de la foi (1684). In 1911 she was pronounced Venerable by *Pius X.

Letters ed. Claude Martin, O.S.B., son (Paris, 1681); enlarged ed. by P. F. Richaudeau (2 vols., Tournai, 1876); supplement by E. Griselle (Paris, 1909). Eng. tr. of selected letters entitled Word from New France by Joyce Marshall (Toronto, 1967). Claude Martin, O.S.B., La Vie de la vénérable Mère Marie de l'Incarnation (Paris, 1677). Other lives by F. X. Charlevoix (Paris, 1724), H. R. Casgrain (Quebec, 1864), P. F. Richaudeau (Paris, 1874), L. Chapot (2 vols., ib., 1892), and F. L. Beaumier (Three Rivers, Quebec, 1959). P. Renaudin, Une Grande Mystique française au XVIIe siècle: Marie de l'Incarnation. . . . Essai de psychologie religieuse (1935); J. Klein, L'Itinéraire mystique de la vén. Mère Marie de l'Incarnation (1938). Bremond, vi (1922), pp. 3–176.

GUYON, Madame (1648–1717), French *Quietist author. Jeanne Marie Bouvier de la Mothe was born at Montargis, where after a neurotic youth she came under the influence of the Duchesse de Béthune. Her unhappy marriage in 1664 to Jacques Guyon, an invalid 22 years older than herself, increased her leaning towards mysticism, and after his death (1676) she entered on a life of religious devotion. She soon fell under the spell of the Quietist works of M. de *Molinos, and in 1681 she began, in company with an imprudent *Barnabite friar, F. Lacombe (1643–1715), her spiritual director, a five years' journey through France, endeavouring to propagate her mystical beliefs. Suspected of heresy and immorality, they were arrested in 1687. Lacombe remained in prison until 1699 (he eventually died insane), but Mme Guyon was released by the efforts of Mme de Maintenon. She now became prominent in the royal circle and often lectured in Mme de Maintenon's girls' school at St.-Cyr. Her greatest follower was F. *Fénelon (q.v.), with whom she corresponded from 1688. J. B. *Bossuet, who distrusted her illuminism, though he judged her sincere, wrote her a doctrinal letter in 1694. In the following year she demanded a theological commission to clear her. The resulting Conference of *Issy (1695), in which Fénelon took part, condemned her, and she was again arrested. She was finally released in 1702 on her submission, and spent the remainder of her life in Blois. Meanwhile her cause was vigorously defended by Fénelon against Bossuet. Mme Guyon's chief mystical writings include Moyen court et très facile de faire oraison (1685) and Le Cantique des cantiques (1688). She taught complete indifference, even to eternal salvation, and that in contemplation all distinct ideas should be repulsed, even of the attributes of God and the mysteries of the life of Christ.

Works ed. by her disciple, P. *Poiret (39 vols., 'Cologne', 1713–32). Eng. tr. of her autobiography in 2 vols., London, 1897. Many of her other works have also been translated into English, incl. a tr. of her Poems by W. *Cowper (Newport Pagnell, 1801). Modern studies by T. C. Upham (London, 1854; revised ed. [1905]), L. Guerrier (Paris, 1881), and E. Aegerter (ib., 1941). [P.] M. Masson, Fénelon et Mme Guyon. Documents nouveaux et inédits (1907). E. Seillière, Mme Guyon et Fénelon, précurseurs de J.-J. Rousseau (1918). Dorothy L. Gilbert–R. Pope, 'The Abbé and the Lady: The Correspondence of Fénelon and Mme Guyon' in Journal of Religion, xxi (1941), pp. 147–72. M. de la Bedoyere, The Archbishop and the Lady. The Story of Fénelon and Madame Guyon (1956). H. Bremond, Apologie pour Fénelon (1910), pp. 3–150. R. A. Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), pp. 319–52. Pourrat, iv, pp. 231–66. A. Largent in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 1997–2006; L. Cognet in Dict. Sp., vi (1967), cols. 1306–36, s.v. See also bibl. to Fénelon and Quietism.

H

HABAKKUK, Book of. The eighth of the *Minor Prophets. It opens with Habakkuk's complaint at the reign of oppression and lawlessness and God's answer that punishment is imminent in the invasion by the Chaldeans. The Prophet, terrified lest God should abandon His people, is instructed that the Chaldeans, too, will eventually fall through pride and idolatry. Ch. 3, a poem (or psalm), describes a vision of the Holy God coming from Mount Paran to work the deliverance of His people and expresses the writer's unshakable confidence in Him.

The date of the Book has been variously fixed between the last years of the reign of Manasseh (698–643) and the second cent. B.C., but a date in the second half of the 7th cent. seems most probable. Scholars favouring an earlier date argue that the 'Chaldeans' mentioned in the Book in its present form have replaced an earlier 'Assyrians'; those who place it later maintain that the 'Chaldeans' (Chasdim) have either replaced or stand for an earlier 'Kittim', i.e. Cypriots or Greeks, a suggestion to some extent confirmed by a commentary on Habakkuk found among the Dead Sea Scrolls which explains that Chaldeans 'refers to the Kittim'.

Most scholars are agreed that ch. 3 is an independent addition, and this hypothesis finds support in the fact that the Dead Sea commentary covers only chs. 1–2. It has long been recognized that this last chapter is a liturgical piece, but many now regard the first two chapters as the work of a cult prophet attached to the Jerusalem Temple, whether or not he was also the author of chapter 3.

Chs. 1–2 are written in the form of a dialogue of great power and beauty between Jehovah and His prophet. Their central message is that, while the Chaldean is filled with pride, 'the just shall live by his faith' (2. 4), which will sustain the innocent who is involved in the sufferings of the guilty. This passage has played an important part in Christian thought through its use in Rom. 1. 17 and in Gal. 3. 11, and also in Heb. 10. 38, as the starting-point of the theological concept of faith.

Commentaries by A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, on Nah., Hab., Zeph., 1896, pp. 45–94), W. H. Ward (I.C.C. on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., Joel, 1912; sep.), G. W. Wade (West. Comm. on Zeph., Nah., Hab., 1929, pp. 141–215) and J. H. Eaton (Torch Bib. Comm., on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1961, pp. 81–118). G. G. V. Stonehouse, The Book of Habakkuk. Introduction, Translation and Notes on the Hebrew Text (1911). P. Humbert, Problèmes du livre d'Habaccuc (Neuchâtel, 1944). W. H. Brownlee, The Text of Habakkuk in the ancient commentary from Qumran (Journal of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, xi; 1959). W. F. Albright, 'The Psalm of Habakkuk' in Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to . . . Theodore H. Robinson, ed. H. H. Rowley (1950), pp. 1–18; E. Nielsen, 'The Righteous and the Wicked in Habaqquq' in Studia Theologica, vi (1953), pp. 54–78; J. H. Eaton, 'The Origin and Meaning of Habakkuk 3' in Z.A.T.W., lxxvi (1964), pp. 144–71. E. Cothenet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., viii (1972), cols. 791–811, s.v. 'Prophètes', with bibl. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets.

HABIT (Religious dress). The distinctive outward sign of the religious state. A habit is worn by all members of the old orders (monks, friars, and nuns), and normally consists of a tunic, belt or girdle, scapular, hood for men and veil for women, and a mantle for use in choir and out of doors. The colours are, as a rule, white, brown, or black. Some modern orders and Congregations dispense with a habit in the case of men (e.g. the *Jesuits). In recent years drastic modifications have been made in the habits of some of the women's orders, esp. those engaged in teaching.

HABITUAL GRACE. See Grace.

HABURAH. See Chaburah.

HADES (Gk. ᾅδης). The place or state of departed spirits. The word is used in the *Septuagint as a translation for the Hebrew '*Sheol' (e.g. Is. 38. 18). In later Judaism the term took on a more definite meaning, of a place of reward for the pious dead, or alternatively, and later, of a place of waiting before judgement. In English usage it first appears c. 1600, as a term used to explain the article in the Creed, 'He descended into hell', where the place of waiting (the place of 'the souls in prison', 1 Pet. 3. 19) into which the Lord is there affirmed to have gone after the Crucifixion needed to be distinguished from that more usually called 'hell', i.e. the place or state of those finally damned. See also Hell and Descent of Christ into Hell.

G. Beer, 'Der biblische Hades' in Theologische Abhandlungen. Festgabe zum 17. Mai 1902 für H. J. Holtzmann, ed. W. Nowack and others (1902), pp. 2–29. On the passage in 1 Peter 3. 19, Bo Reicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, xiii; Copenhagen, 1946). J. Jeremias in T.W.B., i (1933), pp. 146–50, s.v. ᾅδης, with reff.; W. Bauer, Griechisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch (ed. 4, 1952), cols. 21 f., s.v. ᾅδης. See also bibl. to Descent into Hell.

HADRIAN I (d. 795), Pope from 772. He was a Roman of noble birth. During his long pontificate he continued the policy of *Stephen III of maintaining close relations with *Charlemagne. By persuading Charlemagne to conquer Lombardy (774) and depose its king, Desiderius, he freed the Papacy from a long-standing menace. But Charlemagne's increased power meant a corresponding limitation of the Church's freedom, though Hadrian's personal relations with Charlemagne continued for the most part amicable. Charlemagne occasionally intervened in purely ecclesiastical matters, e.g. in defending the claims of the Abp. of *Ravenna against the Pope. The Pope also enlisted the King's help in suppressing *Adoptianism and supported him in his efforts for uniformity in liturgy and canon law. In the *Iconoclastic controversy, however, Hadrian and Charlemagne differed, and the latter, refusing to sanction the decisions of the Synod of *Nicaea of 787, formally condemned them at Frankfurt in 794. Hadrian was a notable administrator, restoring aqueducts, walls, and towers, and fortifying the city of Rome. See also Gregorian Sacramentary.

His epp. are printed in J. P. Migne, PL, xcvi, 1203–44, and xcviii, 261–438. L.P. (Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 486–523

(also in PL, xcvi, 1167–1204); id., Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (1911), pp. 134–48. Also H. Hemmer in D.T.C., i (1903), cols. 448–52; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 614–19; id. in E.C., i (1949), cols. 338–41, s.v. 'Adriano I'. On the collection of canons which goes under his name (the so-called 'Hadriana'), cf. F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, i (1870), pp. 441–71.

HADRIAN IV (c. 1100–59), Nicholas Breakspear, Pope from 1154. He is the only Englishman who has occupied the See of Peter. Prob. the son of a clerk attached to *St. Albans, he studied in France, and having entered the *Augustinian monastery of St. Rufus near *Avignon became Abbot in 1137. When on a mission to Rome he was retained by *Eugenius III (1145–53), who appointed him Cardinal Bp. of Albano at some date before 1150. Soon afterwards he was sent as papal legate on a mission to Scandinavia, where he reorganized the Churches of *Sweden and *Norway, made Trondhjem (Nidaros) an independent archbishopric (1152) and did much to reform abuses. In 1154 he was unanimously elected Pope. He forthwith forced the expulsion of *Arnold of Brescia (q.v.) and finally secured his execution (1155). In 1155 he exacted full homage from *Frederick I (Barbarossa) before consenting to crown him. He at first refused to recognize William I (d. 1166) as King of Sicily, but after a disastrous military campaign agreed to invest him with the territory he held in return for an oath of homage and annual tribute. His claim that the Emperor held his crown as a beneficium from the Pope precipitated a quarrel with Barbarossa which outlasted his pontificate and became acute under *Alexander III. Hadrian IV also intervened in France, where he confirmed a royal sentence against the Duke of Burgundy. He is said to have granted to Henry II of England, possibly at the suggestion of *John of Salisbury, the overlordship of *Ireland, but the facts are uncertain and the bull in question ('Laudabiliter') is prob. a forgery.

Surviving 'Epistolae et Privilegia' printed in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxviii, 989–1088; further docc. calendared in P. Jaffé (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, ii (ed. 2 by G. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1888), pp. 102–45. Life by Boso, his English disciple (d. c. 1178), in L.P. (Duchesne), ii (1892), pp. 388–97. H. K. Mann, Nicholas Breakspear (Hadrian IV), A.D. 1154–1159, the Only English Pope (1914); Edith M. Almedingen, The English Pope. Adrian IV (1925). H. Schroers, Untersuchungen zu dem Streite Kaiser Friedrichs I mit Papst Hadrian IV, 1157–1158 (1916); A. Eggers, Die Urkunde Papst Hadrians IV für König Heinrich II von England über die Besetzung Irlands (Historische Studien, Hft. 151; 1922). M. Maccarrone, Papato e impero dalla elezione di Federico I alla morte di Adriano IV (1152–1159) (Lateranum, N.S., xxv, 1–4; 1959). W. Ullmann, 'The Pontificate of Adrian IV' in Cambridge Historical Journal, xi (1953–5), pp. 233–52. R. W. Southern, Medieval Humanism and Other Studies (Oxford, 1970), pp. 234–52. Mann, ix (1914), pp. 231–340. M. *Creighton in D.N.B., i (1885), pp. 143–6; A. u. Clerich in C.E., i (1907), pp. 156–9, s.v. 'Adrian IV'; W. Ullmann in N.C.E., i (1967), p. 146, s.v. 'Adrian IV'.

HADRIAN VI (1459–1523), Pope from 1522. Adrian Dedel was a native of Utrecht. He studied under the *Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer or Zwolle, and later at Louvain, where he became a doctor of theology in 1492. In 1507 he was chosen as tutor to the future *Charles V, and from 1516 he was the virtual ruler of Spain. In the same year he became Bp. of Tortosa, and in 1517 he was made *Inquisitor of Aragon and Navarre and created cardinal. He was unanimously elected Pope in 1522 on the death of *Leo X. The principal aims of his pontificate were the reform of the Roman Curia, the reconciliation of the European princes, the check of the spread of Protestantism, and the deliverance of Europe from the menace of the Turks. But the times were against him, and Hadrian found himself compelled to struggle almost single-handed against the depravity, luxury and restlessness of his age. His efforts after reform met with frustration on all sides. Nor was he more successful in arousing the princes of Christendom to defend Rhodes, which fell on 24 Oct. 1522. He died a premature death, worn out with the burdens of his office, after a pontificate of little over a year. He was the author of a number of theological writings, only two of which, the Commentarii in IV libros Sententiarum (1516) and the Quaestiones Quodlibeticae (1515), were published. Except Marcellus II, he is the only Pope of modern times who has retained his baptismal name.

M. Gachard (ed.), Correspondance de Charles-Quint et d'Adrien VI (1859). A. Mercati (ed.), Diarii di Concistori del pontificato di Adriano VI (S.T., civii, 1951, pp. 83–113). C. Burmann (ed.), Hadrianus VI, sive Analecta Historica de Hadriano VI (Utrecht, 1727). E. H. J. Reusens (ed.), Anecdota Adriani Sexti . . . partim ex codice ipsius Adriani autographo, partim ex autographis (Louvain, 1862). C. von Höfler, Papst Adrian VI, 1522–3 (1880); A. Lepitre, Adrien VI (Dijon thesis, Paris, 1880); G. Pasolini, Adriano VI (1913); E. Hocks, Der letzte deutsche Papst (1939), with further bibl. E. H. J. Reusens, Syntagma Doctrinae Theologicae Adriani Sexti P.M. . . . una cum Apparatu de Vita et Scriptis Adriani (Louvain, 1862). E. Rodocanachi, Les Pontificats d'Adrien VI et de Clément VII (1933), pp. 7–86 and 273–9, with bibl. pp. 281–4. Artt. by R. R. Post and others in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, xxxv (1959), pp. 524–629 (issue commemorating the 5th centenary of his birth). Pastor, ix (1910), pp. 1–230. J. F. Loughlin in C.E., i (1907), p. 159 f., s.v. 'Adrian VI'; P. Richard in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 628–30, s.v. 'Adrien VI'.

HADRIAN THE AFRICAN, St. (d. 709), monk. An African by birth, he became head of a monastery near Naples and a great friend of Pope *Vitalian. Having declined the Pope's offer of the see of *Canterbury for himself, he was instrumental in securing the appointment for *Theodore of Tarsus, and set out with him for England in 668. He was detained in France on the way, but arrived at Canterbury two years later, where he became abbot of the monastery of Sts. Peter and Paul and master of the school. For forty years he furthered the movement for conforming the religious customs and practices of England to those of Rome. A man of great learning, he keenly furthered education, and established schools in different parts of England. Feast day, 9 Jan.

*Bede, H.E., iv. 1 f.; v. 20, 23; notes to Baedae Opera Historica, ed. by C. Plummer, ii (1896), pp. 202–5, 233, and 329. The passages from Bede and the legend as given by J. Capgrave in AA.SS., Jan. I (1643), pp. 595–7. Hardy, i, pt. 1 (1862), p. 403 f.

HADRIANUM. The name given by modern scholars to the book sent c. 790 by Pope *Hadrian I in response to *Charlemagne's request for a copy of the standard Roman Mass book. See Gregorian Sacramentary.

HAECKEL, ERNST HEINRICH (1834–1919), German scientist. A native of Potsdam, after studying medicine and science at the universities of Würzburg, Berlin, and Vienna, he became director of the Zoological Institute of Jena in 1862 and professor of biology in 1865. He remained at Jena till his death. A keen naturalist, he popularized C. *Darwin's theory of evolution in a treatise on General Morphology (1866) and in Natürliche Schöpfungsgeschichte (1867; Eng. trans., 1892). In his most widely read book, Die Welträtsel (1899; Eng. trans. The Riddle of the Universe, 1901), he attempted to apply Darwin's theories to philosophical and religious questions. He upheld the essential unity of organic and inorganic nature and derived all the phenomena of life, physical, intellectual, and spiritual, from natural causes, denying all doctrines of a personal God, of human free-will, and of the immortality of the soul. The Welträtsel was followed in 1904 by the supplementary work Lebenswunder. Though his theories attracted wide attention, they were never of real philosophical consequence and were rejected by many of his fellow-scientists. They are now chiefly of historical interest.

Was wir Ernst Haeckel verdanken. Ein Buch der Verehrung und Dankbarkeit, ed. H. Schmidt (2 vols., 1914). Überweg, iv, pp. 321–5 (incl. list of Haeckel's writings) and 705–7 (long bibl.).

HAERETICO COMBURENDO, De. See De Haeretico Comburendo.

HAGENAU, Conference of. The gathering convened in June–July 1540 by the Emp. *Charles V to discuss the points of dispute between the Catholics and Protestants of Germany. Unable to agree upon the essential nature of the Church, and therefore to proceed to the discussion of particular doctrines, the conference broke up without achieving any result. It was arranged that there should later be another gathering at Worms. See Worms, Disputation of.

L. *Pastor, Die kirchlichen Reunionsbestrebungen während der Regierung Karls V (1879), pp. 184–98. L. Cardauns, Zur Geschichte der kirchlichen Unions- und Reformsbestrebungen von 1538 bis 1542 (Bibliothek des kgl. Preussischen historischen Instituts in Rom, v; 1910), pp. 33–7, with various relevant docc., pp. 131–57. Pastor, xi (1912), pp. 391–6, with reff. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 531 f. (Nos. 41323a–28). G. Kawerau in P.R.E., vii (1899), pp. 333–5, s.v. 'Hagenauer Religionsgespräch'. See also bibl. to Charles V and Worms, Disputation of.

HAGGADAH (Heb. הַגָּדָה, 'narrative'). A term which prob. originally meant 'exegesis' in general, but came to be limited to those portions of the traditional Jewish interpretation of Scripture which were of a non-prescriptive kind, i.e. such as were not included in the *Halacha (q.v.). Haggadah thus consists of parables, legends, narrative, folklore and other subjects.

J. [W.] Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 40–8.

HAGGAI, Book of. The tenth of the *Minor Prophets. The Book, dated in the second year of Darius, i.e. 520–519 B.C., consists of four separate discourses concerned to promote the rebuilding of the *Temple. It is addressed esp. to the two leaders of the people, Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, and Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high priest. Though the foundations of the Temple had been laid, the work had been interrupted chiefly owing to the opposition of the *Samaritans and other neighbours of the Jews. The first discourse (1. 4–11) attributes the prevalent drought and famine to the people's neglect of rebuilding the Temple; in the second (2. 2–9) the prophet consoles the Jews for the inferiority of the present building and prophesies a glorious future in the Messianic age, when all the nations will come to Jerusalem; the third prophecy (2. 11–19) predicts a return of fertility to the land; and the fourth (2. 21–24) promises Zerubbabel victory over his enemies. This last prophecy has been frequently regarded as referring to the Messiah.

Commentaries by H. G. Mitchell (I.C.C. on Haggai, Zech., Mal., and Jonah, 1912, pp. 3–79) and W. E. Barnes (Camb. Bib. on Hag. and Zech., RV, 1917, pp. 1–20). P. F. Bloomhardt, 'The Poems of Haggai' in Hebrew Union College Annual, v (1928), pp. 153–95; P. R. Ackroyd, 'Studies in the Book of Haggai' in Journal of Jewish Studies, ii (1951), pp. 163–76; iii (1952), pp. 1–13; F. S. North, 'Critical Analysis of the Book of Haggai' in Z.A.T.W., lxviii (1956), pp. 25–46; K. Koch, 'Haggais unreines Volk', ib., lxxix (1967), pp. 52–66. A. Deissler in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., viii (1972), cols. 701–6, s.v. 'Prophètes d'Israël', with extensive bibl. Further comm. under Minor Prophets.

HAGIOGRAPHA (Gk. ἁγιόγραφα, 'sacred writings'; Heb. כְּתוּבִים, writings'). A title applied to the third division of the OT canonical Scriptures, i.e. all Books not belonging to the 'Law' or the 'Prophets'. The Books comprised are Pss., Prov., Job; the five *Megilloth, i.e. Ruth, Lam., Song of Songs, Eccles., and Esther; and Dan., 1 and 2 Chron., Ezra, Neh. They were the latest Books in the Hebrew OT to achieve canonicity.

HAGIOGRAPHY. The writing of the lives of the saints. It involves a study and comparison of the extant sources, the assessment of their historical importance, and the relating of them to contemporary secular history. The primary sources include *martyrologies, *passions, calendars, biographies, prose and verse compositions, and liturgical texts. The earliest collection of such material, now unhappily lost, was that compiled by *Eusebius (c. 260 – c. 340). The critical examination of these writings, which dates from the 17th cent., has been esp. fostered by the *Bollandists. See also Acta Sanctorum; Delehaye, Hippolyte.

The principal collections of sources, besides the Acta Sanctorum (q.v.), are listed under the various countries and religious orders (qq.v.); many also in E.C. (see below). Socii Bollandiani, Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca (1895; ed. 3, 1957); idd., Bibliotheca Hagiographica Latina Antiquae et Mediae Aetatis (2 vols., Brussels, 1898–1901; suppl., 1911). A. *Butler, The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs and other Principal Saints (homiletic; 4 vols., 1756–9; rev. by H. Thurston–D. Attwater, 12 vols., 1926–38, with suppl. vol. by D. Attwater, 1949; improved ed. in 4 vols., 1956); D. Attwater, A Dictionary of Saints, being also an index to the revised edition of Alban Butler's 'Lives of the Saints' (1938). Vies des saints et des bienheureux selon l'ordre du calendrier, by the Benedictines of Paris (13 vols., 1935–59). The Book of Saints, compiled by the Benedictine Monks of St. Augustine's Abbey, Ramsgate (1921); F. G. Holweck, A Biographical Dictionary of Saints (1924). F. von S. Doyé, Heilige und Selige der römischen Kirche (2 vols., 1929). P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche (Studi e Testi, viii, ix, xxii, xxiv, xxvii, xxxiii, xlix, lxv, clxxvi; 1902–53); id., Hagiographica (ib., xix; 1908). H. Delehaye, S.J., Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905; Eng. tr., 1907) and other works cited, s.v. J. Minischthaler, Heiligenlegenden (2 vols., 1911–13). A. Ehrhard, Überlieferung und Bestand der hagiographischen und homiletischen Literatur der griechischen Kirche von den Anfängen bis zum Ende des 16. Jahrhunderts (T.U., l and lii; 1937–52). F. Grossi-Gondi, Principi e problemi di critica agiografica (1919). R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie, ses sources, ses méthodes, son histoire (1953). Analecta Bollandiana (Brussels, 1882 ff.). L. Oliger, O.F.M., in E.C., i (1948), cols. 449–54, s.v. 'Agiografia', for further bibl.; F. Halkin, S.J., in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 894–7, s.v.

HAGIOLOGY (fr. Gk. ἅγιος, 'holy', and λογία, 'discourse', i.e. the science of holiness). The literature dealing with the lives and legends of the saints and their cultus. See Hagiography.

HAGIOS O THEOS. See Agios O Theos.

HAGIOSCOPE, also 'squint'. An opening in the chancel walls of ancient churches, to permit worshippers in the transepts, side aisles, or other parts of the church from which the altar is not otherwise visible to see the elevation of the *Host at Mass.

HAIL, HOLY QUEEN. See Salve Regina.

HAIL MARY (Lat. Ave Maria; also known as The Angelic Salutation). The form of prayer to the BVM, based on the greetings of *Gabriel (Lk. 1. 28) and *Elizabeth (Lk. 1. 42). In its modern form it is as follows: (a) 'Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee: Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.' (b) 'Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners now and in the hour of our death.' The devotional use of (a) goes back to the 11th cent., and first became common in the 12th, whereas the complete Hail Mary, with (b) added, did not come into general use until the 16th cent. In this later form it received official recognition from its inclusion by Pope *Pius V in the Roman *Breviary of 1568. It was dropped from the Office in 1955.

T. Esser, O.P., 'Geschichte des englischen Grusses' in Hist. J., v (1884), pp. 88–116. S. Beissel, S.J., Geschichte der Verehrung Marias in Deutschland während des Mittelalters (1909), ch. 13, 'Das "Gegrüsset seist du, Maria" und der Rosenkranz bis zum 15. Jahrhundert', pp. 228–50; id., Geschichte der Verehrung Marias im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (1910), pp. 5–16 and passim; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Prière à la Vierge Marie sur un ostrakon de Louqsor' in Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétiennes, ii (1912), pp. 3–32, repr. Hefele–Leclercq, v (ii; 1913), App. IV, pp. 1734–59; E. Vacandard, 'L'Histoire de l'"Ave Maria"' in Revue du Clergé français, lxxi (1912), pp. 315–19; H. Thurston, S.J., 'The Origins of the Hail Mary' in The Month, cxxi (1913), pp. 162–76 and 379–84; repr. in Thurston's Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, S.J. (1953), pp. 90–114. E. Campana, Maria nel culto cattolico, i (1933), pp. 519–64; G. M. Roschini, O.S.M., 'L'Ave Maria. Note storiche' in Marianum, v (1943), pp. 177–85. Good introductory discussion by H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 110–12, s.v. H. Leclercq in D.A.C.L., x (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2043–62, s.v. 'Marie (Je vous salue)'.

HAIR-SHIRT. A shirt made of cloth woven from hair, and worn at all periods in the history of the Church as a means of discipline by penitents and ascetics.

HALACHA (Heb. הֲלָכָה, 'that by which one walks'). In the Jewish schools, the body of legal decisions not directly enacted in the *Mosaic law. It arose from the pious wish to make the law apply to even the most trivial and unexpected situations in daily life. At first handed down by word of mouth, it was later collected and written down, and thus gave rise to such treatises as the *Mishnah. It forms the bulk of the *Talmud, the non-Halachic remainder being known as the *Haggadah.

J. [W.] Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 40–8. L. Jacobs in Encyclopaedia Judaica, vii (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1156–66, s.v. 'Halakhah', with bibl. See also bibl. to Talmud and Midrash.

HALES, ALEXANDER OF. See Alexander of Hales.

HALES, JOHN (1584–1656), Anglican divine, known as the 'ever-memorable'. He was a native of Bath, and educated at the Bath grammar school and at Corpus Christi College, *Oxford, where he took his degree in 1603. In 1605 he was elected Fellow of Merton, and in 1612 he became public lecturer in Greek at the university. He probably had a large share in H. *Savile's edition of St. *Chrysostom (1610–13). In 1613 he pronounced the funeral oration on Sir Thomas Bodley, and in the same year became Fellow of Eton. In 1616 he went to Holland as chaplain to the English ambassador, Sir Dudley Carleton, in which capacity he was present at the Synod of *Dort (1618). In 1619 he returned to Eton. In 1639 he became chaplain to Abp. W. *Laud and canon of *Windsor. He was dispossessed of his canonry by the parliamentary committee in 1642, and of his Fellowship at Eton in 1649. He then became tutor to a nephew of the Bp. of *Salisbury. He died in retirement at Eton. Perhaps the best known of his works is his tract Schism and Schismatics (written 1636, first publd. 1642), which reflects his broadminded and eirenical position. The Golden Remains was published posthumously.

Collected Works [ed. by David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes] (3 vols., Glasgow, 1765). Life by J. H. Elson (New York, 1948, with detailed bibl.). R. Peters, 'John Hales and the Synod of Dort' in Studies in Church History, vii (1971), pp. 277–88. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 30–2.

HALF-WAY COVENANT, The. A doctrine current in American *Congregationalism in the 17th and 18th cents. expressive of the relationship in which those (esp. baptized) members of the community who were devoid of personal religious faith were held to be bound to God. Its purpose was by giving such persons a definite status to prevent the Church from being reduced to an assemblage of individuals and Baptism from losing all significance for those who professed no change of heart. Its Scriptural basis was found in Jehovah's Covenant with *Abraham (Gen. 17. 7). The doctrine has now been generally rejected as incompatible with the principles of Congregationalism, acc. to which the only true basis of relationship of man to God must be personal faith.

R. G. Pope, The Half-Way Covenant. Church Membership in Puritan New England (Princeton, 1969). See also bibl. to United States of America, Christianity in.

HALIFAX, CHARLES LINDLEY WOOD (1839–1934), Second Viscount Halifax. He was the son of Sir Charles Wood, First Viscount Halifax (1800–1885), and Mary, d. of Earl Grey, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where under the influence of E. B. *Pusey's sermons, J. M. *Neale's writings, H. P. *Liddon's friendship, and R. I. *Wilberforce's Doctrine of the Incarnation he became a strong and devoted High Churchman. In 1865 he was associated with the foundation of the *S.S.J.E. and himself had thoughts of joining the Society, but was dissuaded by R. M. *Benson. He continued, however, to take a keen interest in its work and made his annual retreat at Cowley until 1931. Acceptance in 1868 of the Presidency of the *English Church Union, vacant by Colin Lindsay's impending secession to Rome, brought him into most of the ecclesiastical controversies of his lifetime (*Athanasian Creed; *Public Worship Regulation Act; W. J. E. *Bennett and A. H.

*Mackonochie cases; Trial of Bp. E. *King; *Lambeth Opinions; *Deceased Wife's Sister bill; *Modernism; projects for *Prayer Book Revision), in many of which he took a leading part. He held the office continuously until 1919 and again from 1927 until his death. A friendship with E. F. Portal which began at Madeira in 1890 led him to interest himself in promoting reunion between the C of E and the Holy See. With Portal he was responsible for initiating the conversations at Rome in 1894–6 and the publication of the Revue Anglo-Romaine; and their abortive termination by Apostolicae Curae* (13 Sept. 1896), largely, as he thought, through the influence of the English RC hierarchy under Cardinal H. *Vaughan, caused him profound disappointment. He later published a fully documented account of the negotiations in Leo XIII and Anglican Orders (1912). After the *Lambeth Appeal of 1920 he reopened the matter with Cardinal D. J. *Mercier, with whom he arranged the *Malines Conversations (q.v.); but soon after Mercier's death in Jan. 1926 they were terminated. In Jan. 1928, impatient with the caution and delay of the Anglican authorities, he issued the Report himself and, soon after, his Notes on the Conversations at Malines. This was followed in 1930 by The Conversations at Malines. Original Documents (printed in France). In 1930 he also published The Good Estate of the Catholic Church, summing up many of his ecclesiastical ideals and expressing his long-held high regard for the BCP of 1549.

His son, EDWARD FREDERICK LINDLEY WOOD (1881–1959), Baron Irwin (1925), 1st Earl of Halifax (1944), President of the Board of Education (1922–4 and 1932–5), Viceroy of India (1926–1931), Chancellor of Oxford University (from 1933 to his death), Foreign Secretary (1938–40), and British Ambassador in Washington (1941–6), was also a devoted High Churchman. He was the author of a Life of John Keble (1909) as well as an autobiography entitled Fulness of Days (1957).

J. G. Lockhart, Charles Lindley Viscount Halifax. Part I, 1839–85 (1935); Part II, 1885–1934 (1936). Id. in D.N.B., 1931–1940, pp. 919–21.

Life of Edward Frederick Lindley Wood by the Earl of Birkenhead (London, 1965). K. Rose in D.N.B., 1950–1960, pp. 1072–80.

HALL, JOSEPH (1574–1656), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and soon became keenly interested in the Roman controversy. He won favour with *James I, who in 1616 made him Dean of *Worcester and in 1618 sent him as one of his representatives to the Synod of *Dort. In 1627 he became Bp. of *Exeter, but he was held suspect by W. *Laud as being too favourable to *Calvinism and *Puritanism, though he maintained conformity in his diocese. When the bishops were attacked by the Parliament of 1640, Hall came forward to defend his order, and pleaded for an unprelatical episcopacy in his Episcopacy by Divine Right (1640). His Humble Remonstrance to the High Court of Parliament (1640–1) evoked the reply of '*Smectymnuus'. In 1641 he was translated to Norwich, but before he could reach his see was sent to the Tower with the rest of the bishops. After release, his income was impounded by Parliament, and in 1647 he was ejected from his palace and lived in poverty until his death. Hall represented the moderating influence among the bishops. Of his voluminous writings the earlier ones were verse satires, the later ones controversial and devotional. His Heaven upon Earth (1606) was reprinted by J. *Wesley in his '*Christian Library'. His Hard Measure is autobiographical and narrates the persecution of the bishops by Parliament.

Collected editions of his works by Josiah Pratt (10 vols., London, 1808), Peter Hall (12 vols., Oxford, 1837–9), and Philip Wynter (10 vols., ib., 1863). Modern ed. of his poetry by A. Davenport (Liverpool, 1949). Lives by J. Jones (London, 1826), G. Lewis (ib., 1886), and T. F. Kinloch (ib., 1951). G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 75–80.

HALL, ROBERT (1764–1831), *Baptist preacher. Born at Arnesby, Leicestershire, he was trained at the Baptist Academy at Bristol and King's College, Aberdeen. Later he became an influential preacher in Bristol (1785–90 and 1826–31), Cambridge (1791–1806) and Leicester (1807–25). He was of commanding presence and eloquence; and his discourse on Modern Infidelity (1800), his sermon on the death of Princess Charlotte (1817), and his championship of the Leicestershire lace-workers brought him a wide following. His writings include Christianity consistent with a Love of Freedom (1791; defending J. *Priestley), Reflections on War (1802), On Terms of Communion (1815) and Memoir of Thomas Toller (1821).

Works, with Memoir by O. G. Gregory (6 vols., 1832). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 85–7.

HALLEL (Heb. הַלֵּל, 'praise'). A name given by the Jews to Pss. 113–18, and less frequently to other groups of Pss. between 104 and 150. Pss. 113–18 were also sometimes called the 'Egyptian Hallel', from the tradition that they were sung during the killing of the *Passover lambs. They were recited at all the principal Jewish festivals, and may have been the hymn sung by Christ and the Apostles after the *Last Supper (Mt. 26. 30). Ps. 136 is called the 'Great Hallel'.

HALLELUJAH. See Alleluia.

HALLER, BERCHTOLD (1492–1536), Reformer of Berne. After studying theology at *Cologne he became chaplain of the bakers' guild at Berne in 1513 and in 1520 was given the canonry formerly held by his friend T. *Wyttenbach, who had imbued him with the reformatory ideas of H. *Zwingli. Though he had become suspect by his preaching activities he was acquitted of heresy in 1523, but he ceased to say Mass two years later. He took part in the Conferences of Baden (1526) and *Berne (1528), and collaborated with F. Kolb in the composition of a Protestant liturgy and the reformatory edict of 1528. After most members of the Council of Berne had accepted the Reformation, he became the acknowledged religious leader of the town, being actively engaged in preaching, visitations, and catechetical instructions, but he failed in his efforts at establishing Protestantism at Solothurn. His last years were filled with controversies against the *Anabaptist movement. He has left no writings except a few letters.

M. Kirchhofer, Bertold Haller oder die Reformation von Bern (1828). F. Trechsel–E. Blösch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 366–70, with bibl.

HALO (or NIMBUS). A circle or disc of light round the head or, more rarely, round the whole body. It was used in the religious symbolism of the Hellenistic period as a distinguishing mark in the representation of gods and demi-gods, later also of the Roman Emperors. Christian art adopted it only gradually. In the 3rd and 4th cents. its use was restricted to Christ and the Lamb, from the 5th cent. it was extended to the BVM, the angels and the saints, and soon also to other important personages. In the Middle Ages the round halo was used only for angels and saints, in the case of Christ being usually distinguished by a cross or the monogram A and Ω, whereas at the same period a rectangular form was sometimes employed for the representation of living people, esp. Popes and bishops, as in the famous picture of St. *Gregory the Great in the monastery of Clivus Scauri at Rome. The colour of the halo seems originally to have been blue, but from the 5th and 6th cents. gold, yellow, or rainbow colours were preferred. In modern RC practice a halo is permitted only for persons canonized or beatified or whose cultus has been otherwise approved.

A. Krücke, Der Nimbus und verwandte Attribute in der frühchristlichen Kunst (Strassburg, 1905); J. Wilpert, Die römischen Mosaiken und Malereien der kirchlichen Bauten vom 4. bis 13. Jahrhundert, i (ed. 2, 1917), pp. 97–113; ii (ed. 2, 1917), pp. 1193–5; K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, i (1928), pp. 25–9, with reff. H. *Leclercq in D.A.C.L., xii (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 1272–1312, s.v. 'Nimbe', and J. H. Emminghaus in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vii (1962), col. 1004 f., s.v. 'Nimbus'.

HAMANN, JOHANN GEORG (1730–88), German religious thinker. He was born at Königsberg. After having followed a rather irregular course of studies at the university from 1746, he became a private tutor in 1752. In 1758 he entered the service of a merchant of Riga, who sent him to London on a business enterprise which proved a failure. This disappointment was accompanied by an interior crisis, resulting in a conversion experience. Having returned to Königsberg in 1759, he nursed his ailing father until his death in 1766. He then accepted a subaltern post at an excise office, which left him sufficient time for his literary pursuits.

Hamann was one of the fathers of the German 'Storm and Stress' movement. A prophet of religious 'immediacy', he proclaimed the rights of the individual personality and attacked the rationalism of the Aufklärung*. His works are written in an aphoristic and somewhat obscure style, which earned him the title of 'The Magus in the North'. The best known are Sokratische Denkwürdigkeiten (1759), Aesthetica in nuce (1761), and Golgatha und Scheblimini! (1784). In the last of these, his most important contribution to religious thought, he upholds Christianity as the historical revelation of the Triune God, of Atonement and of Redemption, against the rationalistic popular philosophy of Moses Mendelssohn. Though a personal friend of I. *Kant, he opposed his philosophy and insisted on the importance of inner experience, esp. in matters of religion. He regarded himself as the rejuvenator of Lutheranism, and was in some respects a precursor of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and A. *Ritschl.

Editions of his Works by F. Roth and G. A. Wiener (8 Theile in 9 vols., Augsburg, 1821–43), C. H. Gildemeister (6 vols., Gotha, 1857–73) and J. Nadler (6 vols., Vienna, 1949–57); Correspondence ed. W. Ziesemer–A. Henkel (7 vols., Wiesbaden, 1955–79); Hauptschriften erklärt by F. Blanke and others (Gütersloh, 1956 ff.), incl. bibl. in vol. 1. Selections from his writings, in Eng. tr., in R. G. Smith, J. G. Hamann . . . A Study in Christian Existence (1960). Eng. tr. of his Sokratische Denkwürdigkeiten, with very full introd., by J. C. O'Flaherty (Baltimore, 1967). Studies by F. Thoms, (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xxxvii, Hft. 3; 1933), J. Nadler (Salzburg [1949]), H. A. Salmony (Zollikon, 1958 ff.), W. Koepp (Göttingen, 1965), and W. M. Alexander (The Hague, 1966; in English). Überweg, iii, pp. 607 f., 614, 751. F. C. Arnold in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 370–5; H. Stephan in R.G.G. (ed. 2), ii (1928), cols. 1595–7.

HAMARTOLOS, GEORGE. See George Hamartolos.

HAMILTON, JOHN (1511–71), Abp. of St. Andrews. The natural son of James Hamilton, first earl of Arran, he entered the *Benedictine monastery of Kilwinning as a boy but probably never became a monk. In 1525 he was appointed Abbot of Paisley, and retained the office till his death. In 1540 he took a three-year course of studies at *Paris. On his return to Scotland he was appointed keeper of the privy seal and two years later Bp. of Dunkeld. On the assassination of D. *Beaton in 1546 he was made Abp. of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. From this time until his death he was one of the most influential opponents of Protestantism. He called a succession of synods (1548, 1549, 1552, and 1559) with the view to a reform of the morals of the clergy and the religious education of the laity, the chief result of which was the compilation of a valuable catechism in the vernacular, known as Archbishop Hamilton's Catechism (1552). In 1560 he protested against the acceptance by Parliament of J. *Knox's new confession of faith. Three years later he was imprisoned for saying Mass and hearing confessions, but was released at the intervention of Queen *Mary, whose son, later *James VI, he baptized in 1566. In her subsequent troubles he became her faithful supporter, advising her, though in vain, to remain in Scotland. After her flight he was pronounced a traitor and captured at Dumbarton Castle, where he had sought safety. Three days later he was hanged at Stirling in his pontifical vestments.

A man of political prudence and moderation and an intrepid defender of his religion, Hamilton was not blameless in his personal life. He had several illegitimate children, and his annulment of Bothwell's marriage which enabled him to marry the Queen was gravely irregular. On the other hand, his complicity in the assassinations of Darnley and Moray, of which he was accused, is doubtful.

His Catechism and The Two-Penny Faith, ed. together, with introd. by A. F. Mitchell; the Catechism also ed. by T. G. Law (1884). J. Robertson, Concilia Scotiae (Bannatyne Club, 1866), i, 147–82. T. G. Law in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 190–2.

HAMILTON, PATRICK (c. 1504–28), Scottish Protestant proto-Martyr. While still a boy, in 1517, he was made Abbot of Fern. He studied at Paris, where M. *Luther's writings attracted his attention, and afterwards at St. Andrews. From 1526 he began to show open sympathy with Lutheran ideas and in 1527 he visited both *Wittenberg, where he met Luther and P. *Melanchthon, and *Marburg with its newly founded Protestant university. Here he wrote his only work, a set of Loci Communes ('Patrick's Pleas'). Towards the end of 1527 he returned to Scotland.

A. *Alesius, who was deputed to convince him of his errors, was himself converted to the Protestant creed. Early in the following year Hamilton was formally charged with heresy by Abp. James Beaton and burnt at the stake on 29 Feb.

P. Lorimer, Patrick Hamilton. An Historical Biography (1857); D. M. Kay, Patrick Hamilton, Scottish Martyr, 1528 (1929); A. Cameron (ed.), Patrick Hamilton, First Scottish Martyr of the Reformation (1929). Æ. Mackay in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 201–3.

HAMILTON, WALTER KERR (1808–69), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was the first of the *Tractarians to become a diocesan bishop in England. Educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, he was for a time a Fellow and tutor of Merton College and from 1837 to 1841 Vicar of St. Peter's-in-the-East, Oxford; and from c. 1838 he came under the influence of the *Oxford Movement. In 1841 he became a canon of Salisbury and in 1854 Bishop. Here he did much to stimulate the spiritual life of his diocese, e.g. by instituting Diocesan *Retreats; and in 1860 he founded Salisbury Theological College. In 1861–4 he prosecuted Rowland *Williams (1817–70), one of the contributors to Essays and Reviews, who was beneficed in his diocese. In his Charge for 1867 he defended the Eucharistic Sacrifice, the Real Presence, and Sacramental Confession; and he was attacked by Lord Portman in the House of Lords. He was devoted to his work at Salisbury cathedral and in 1853 issued Cathedral Reform.

H. P. *Liddon, W. K. Hamilton. A Sketch, repr. with Additions and Corrections, from *The Guardian (1869); id., Life in Death. A Sermon preached in Salisbury Cathedral on 8 Aug. 1869. W. A. Greenhill in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), p. 216 f.

HAMMOND, HENRY (1605–60), Anglican divine. Born at Chertsey, Surrey, he was educated at Eton and from 1619 at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1625. He was ordained in 1629. In 1633 he was presented to the living of Penshurst, Kent, where he worked with great energy, instituting daily services in church and monthly celebrations of the Holy Communion. In 1643 he was appointed Archdeacon of *Chichester and also nominated as a member of the *Westminster Assembly, but never sat. Forced to leave Penshurst during the Civil War, he returned to Oxford and composed, among other things, his Practical Catechism (publd. anon. 1645), which rapidly became very popular. As chaplain to the royal commissioners at the conference at Uxbridge in 1645, he was called upon to defend *Episcopacy. In 1645 he was presented to a Canonry at *Christ Church, Oxford, and became Chaplain in Ordinary to the King. After visiting Penshurst in 1646, he attended the King until his imprisonment at Carisbrooke in Dec. 1647. On his return to Christ Church he was deprived and confined first in Oxford and then under light restraint at Clapham, Bedfordshire. In 1649 he moved to Westwood, Worcs. He suffered personally from the decree (1655) forbidding the clergy of the C of E to exercise their ministry and devoted himself to relieving the deprived clergy and to raising funds to train a succession of future ordinands. Throughout his life he maintained a high standard of personal devotion and a discipline bordering on asceticism.

Besides innumerable topical pamphlets and pastoral treatises, Hammond compiled A Paraphrase and Annotations upon all the Books of the New Testament (1653), a pioneer work of English Biblical criticism. He also assisted Brian Walton in the compilation of his Polyglott (1657) and wrote a prefatory letter for *The Whole Duty of Man.

Works ed. W. Fulham (4 vols., London, 1674–84); repr. by N. Pocock as The Miscellaneous Theological Works of Henry Hammond (L.A.C.T., 3 vols. in 4, 1847–50). The admirable life by Bp. J. *Fell, orig. publd. London, 1661, is repr. among his works. Short life by G. G. Perry (London, [1864]). J. W. Packer, The Transformation of Anglicanism 1643–1660, with special reference to Henry Hammond (Manchester, 1969). R. Hooper in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 242–6.

HAMPDEN, RENN DICKSON (1793–1868), Bp. of *Hereford. After a brilliant university career he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1814, and made friends with T. *Arnold and R. *Whately, both *Broad Churchmen like himself. In 1832 he expounded in his *Bampton Lectures on The Scholastic Philosophy, considered in its relations to Christian Theology a view of Christianity in which its dogmatic elements were greatly reduced. In 1833 he was appointed Principal of St. Mary's Hall, Oxford. His name came into much prominence in 1836 when the *Tractarians, suspicious of his theology, unsuccessfully attempted to prevent his becoming Regius professor of divinity. In 1837, however, his suspension from the board which nominated Select Preachers was achieved. In 1847 Lord John Russell offered him the see of Hereford, and, despite violent High Church opposition, he was consecrated bishop in the following March. He administered his see conscientiously till his death, displaying tolerance and charity. His Essay on the Philosophical Evidence of Christianity (1827) and other writings illustrate a phase in liberal thought, but have little permanent value.

Henrietta Hampden (daughter), Some Memorials of Renn Dickson Hampden (1871). G. C. Boase in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 264–6.

HAMPTON COURT CONFERENCE. The conference held at Hampton Court in January 1604, between the English bishops and the Puritan leaders and presided over by *James I. Its purpose was to consider the Puritan demands for reform in the Church, set out in the *Millenary Petition. The Puritans were led by John *Rainolds, Dean of Lincoln, and the bishops by R. *Bancroft and T. Bilson. When Rainolds demanded the modification of Episcopacy, James declared that he had learnt in Scotland 'No bishop, no king', and so gave the bishops his support. The only concessions to the Puritans were slight changes in the BCP. The most substantial result of the Conference was a new translation of the Bible issued as the *Authorized Version in 1611.

E. *Cardwell, A History of the Conferences and other Proceedings Connected with the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer from 1558 to 1690 (1840), pp. 121–228. H. M. Curtis, 'The Hampton Court Conference and its Aftermath' in History, xlvi (1961), pp. 1–16. R. G. Usher in D.E.C.H., p. 258 f., s.v.

HANDEL, GEORGE FRIDERIC (1685–1759), musical composer. The original form of his name was Händel. He was born in Saxony, and, after spending some years in Italy, came in 1710 to England, which he afterwards left for only very short periods, becoming a naturalized British subject in 1726. Of his religious compositions, the most famous are the *oratorios, among them 'Esther' (complete version, 1733); 'Deborah' (1733); 'Athaliah' (1733); 'Saul' (1738); 'Israel in Egypt' (1738); 'Messiah' (1741; it was first produced in 1742); 'Samson' (1743); 'Belshazzar' (1745); 'Judas Maccabaeus' (1747); 'Joshua' (1748); 'Alexander Balus' (1748); 'Solomon' (1749); 'Susanna' (1749); 'Theodora' (1750); 'Jephtha' (1751, first produced 1752). Of these works, the 'Messiah', 'Israel in Egypt', and 'Judas Maccabaeus' are the only ones frequently performed in modern times, despite the acknowledged merits of several of the others (e.g. 'Samson'). In many places, esp. in the north of England, the annual performance of the 'Messiah' by local amateur choral societies is one of the principal religious and musical events of the winter.

Selection of his Works published by the English Handel Society (London, 13 vols., 1843–57). Complete ed. by [F. Chrysander for] the Händel-Gesellschaft (Leipzig, 96 vols., pt. 49 not yet published, 1859–1902); also ed. M. Schneider–R. Steglich (Kassel, 1955 ff.). E. H. Müller (ed.), The Letters and Writings of George Frideric Handel (1935). O. E. Deutsch, Handel. A Documentary Biography (1955). J. Mainwaring, Memoirs of the Life of George Frederic Handel (1760). Later lives and studies by F. Chrysander (3 vols., Leipzig, 1858–67), W. N. Flower (London, 1923), and P. H. Lang (New York, 1966; London, 1967). G. [E. H.] Abraham (ed.), Handel. A Symposium (1954). W. Dean, Handel's Dramatic Oratorios and Masques (1959). K. Sasse, Händel Bibliographie (Leipzig [1963]). S. Goddard in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, iv (ed. 5; 1954), pp. 37–60.

HANDS, Imposition of. A manner of blessing used in the OT (e.g. Gen. 48) and followed by Christ, who used it in working miracles, and by the Church. The Apostles and the primitive Church employed it in *Confirmation (Acts 8 and 19) and in *Ordination (Acts 13. 3, 1 Tim. 4, 14), if such be the Christian use of χειροτονεῖν and the proper interpretation of these passages, as is commonly held; and it has certainly been traditionally used by the Church in these rites. Acc. to the Latin Rite it is also used in *Unction. It also has a place in the rite of Unction authorized by the Convocation of Canterbury in 1935. In private blessings of individuals, the hands may be placed on the heads of men and the shoulders of women, e.g. by a newly ordained priest after his first Mass.

J. Behm, Die Handauflegung im Urchristentum (1911); J. Coppens, L'Imposition des mains et les rites connexes dans le N.T. et dans l'Église primitive (1925). C. H. *Turner, 'Χειροτονία, χειροθεσία, ἐπίθεσις χειρῶν (and the accompanying verbs)' in J.T.S., xxiv (1922–3), pp. 496–504. H. B. *Swete in E.Bi., ii (1901), col. 1956, s.v. 'Laying on of Hands'; P. Galtier, S.J., in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1302–1425; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 391–413.

HANNINGTON, JAMES (1847–85), Bp. of Eastern Equatorial Africa. After offering himself to the *C.M.S., he landed in Zanzibar in June 1882 at the head of six missionaries, but fever and dysentery compelled him to return to England in the following May. On recovering, he again offered himself for the work, was consecrated the first Bp. of Eastern Equatorial Africa in June 1884, and was back in Mombasa in Jan. 1885. In Oct. 1885 he was murdered by the natives of Uganda when leading a hazardous expedition to open up a shorter route to Lake Victoria Nyanza. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 29 Oct.

E. C. Dawson, James Hannington (1887); id., The Last Journals of Bishop Hannington (1888).

HAPLOGRAPHY. In the copying of manuscripts, the writing of any letter(s) or word(s) only once where it ought to be repeated. The opposite error is known as '*dittography'.

HARDENBERG, ALBERT (c. 1510–74), Reformer. Educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life at Groningen in Holland, he entered the monastery at Aduard c. 1527, studied at Louvain university, and took his doctor's degree in 1537 or 1539 at Mainz, where he came into contact with John *Laski. On his return to Louvain he was opposed by the university authorities for teaching the doctrine of *Justification by faith. Retiring to Aduard, he cultivated relations with the Reformers, esp. Abp. *Hermann of Wied, P. *Melanchthon, and J. Laski, and was finally persuaded to join them openly. In 1542 he went to *Wittenberg, and from there to Cologne to help Hermann of Wied establish the Reformation. He also took part in the Diets of *Speyer (1544) and *Worms (1545). After Hermann's resignation (1547), Hardenberg was appointed cathedral preacher at Bremen; but in 1561 he was expelled from this post for his denial of the *Lutheran doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and for the next four years he lived quietly under the protection of the Count of Oldenburg. In 1565 he became pastor at Sengwarden, and from 1567 to his death he was preacher at Emden.

Life by B. Spiegel (Bremen, 1869); lesser study by W. Schweckendieck (Emden, 1859). Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 325 (Nos. 7938–54). C. Bertheau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 408–16, s.v., with bibl.

HARDENBERG, FRIEDRICH LEOPOLD FREIHERR VON. See Novalis.

HARDING, St. STEPHEN. See Stephen Harding, St.

HARDOUIN, JEAN (1646–1729), French scholar. A native of Brittany, he became a *Jesuit at about the age of 16 and for most of his life (from 1683) was Librarian of the Jesuit Collège de *Clermont at Paris. He published many excellent editions of the classics and other ancient writings. He took great delight in defending paradoxical and fantastic theories, maintaining, e.g., that the NT was originally written in Latin, that the great majority of the ancient classics were really the product of 13th cent. monks, and that all the councils commonly supposed to have preceded that of *Trent (1546–63) were fabrications. The last of these theories did not prevent him from producing a valuable edition of the texts of the ecclesiastical councils from NT times onwards (Conciliorum Collectio Regia Maxima, Paris, '1715', but for some years the French government withheld it from circulation owing to its *ultramontane notes); it was largely drawn on by J. D. *Mansi and has not yet been superseded. Hardouin was also a great authority on numismatics, his works in this field including Chronologia Veteris Testamenti ad vulgatam versionem exacta et nummis antiquis illustrata (1696).

H. *Quentin, O.S.B., J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 38–54; E. Galletier, 'Un Breton du XVIIe siècle à l'avant-garde de la critique. Le père Jean Hardouin de Quimper', in Annales de Bretagne, xxxvi (1925), pp. 462–83, and xxxviii (1928), pp. 171–87. [W.] O. Chadwick, From Bossuet to Newman. The Idea of Doctrinal Development (Birkbeck Lectures, 1955–6; Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 49–51, 211–13. Sommervogel, iv (1893), cols. 84–111. P. Bernard in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2042–6, s.v.

HARDWICKE, Act of Lord (1754) (26 Geo. II, c. 33). This Act, 'for the Better Prevention of Clandestine Marriages', for the first time made clandestine marriages, which had previously been regulated by canon law, subject to statute. All marriages in England and Wales (except those of members of the Royal Family, Jews and *Quakers) were required to be celebrated in the parish church of one of the parties and after banns, save that the Archbishop could grant a special licence for the marriage to be celebrated in some other church and without the delay entailed by banns, and that the Bishop had the right to dispense from banns. All other unions were declared invalid. The Act also invalidated the marriage of infants without consent of parents or guardians. The Act initiated modern English statute law on *matrimony (q.v.).

HARE, JULIUS CHARLES (1795–1855), Archdeacon of Lewes. Having entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1812, he was elected a Fellow in 1818, and intended at first to enter the legal profession. In 1826, however, he was ordained, and in 1832 appointed Rector of Hurstmonceaux. Through travel in Germany, he came much under the influence of German theologians and men of letters and introduced many German ideas to English theology, He was a *Broad Churchman. His writings, some of which secured great popularity, included Guesses at Truth (1827; it was written in conjunction with his brother Augustus), a collection of observations on philosophy, religion, literature, and other subjects; The Victory of Faith (1840; ed. 3, 1874); and Sermons preacht on Particular Occasions (1858). He also issued, in conjunction with C. *Thirlwall, a translation of B. G. Niebuhr's History of Rome (2 vols., 1828–1832). In 1840 he was appointed Archdeacon of Lewes.

Anon. Introd. (by F. D. *Maurice) to Charges to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Lewes, delivered at the Ordinary Visitations in the Years 1843, 1845, 1846 (1856), pp. i–lxiii, and anon. study (by A. P. *Stanley) in the Quarterly Review, xcvii (1855), pp. 1–27, both repr. in Hare's The Victory of Faith (ed. 3, by E. H. Plumptre, 1874), pp. xvii–cxxxii. A. J. C. Hare (nephew), Memorials of a Quiet Life (2 vols., 1872). G. F. McFarland, 'The early literary career of Julius Charles Hare' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlvi (1964), pp. 42–83; id., 'Julius Charles Hare: Coleridge, DeQuincey, and German literature', ib., xlvii (1965), pp. 165–97. A. J. C. Hare in D.N.B., xxiv (1890), pp. 369–72.

HARKLEAN VERSION. A revision of the *Philoxenian Syriac Version of the NT made by Thomas of Harkel ('Heraclea') in 616, on the basis of readings derived from Greek MSS. in the library of the Enaton, near Alexandria. In the margin Thomas recorded many variants which are textually of great interest and value, mostly akin to those of *Codex Bezae. About 50 MSS. of this version have survived, the oldest dating from c. the 7th cent. It is this version of the text of Rev. which is printed in the current ('*Peshitta') Syriac New Testaments. The Harklean revision is the counterpart of the contemporary version of the OT made by Paul of Tella, known as the *Syro-Hexaplar.

Only ed. is that of Joseph White with the inappropriate title 'Versio Philoxeniana': Gospels, Oxford, 1788; Acts and Epp., ib., 1799–1803. Later (partial) edd. of Gospel of Jn. by G. H. Bernstein (Leipzig, 1853) and of Heb. 11. 28–13. 25 by R. L. Bensly (Cambridge, 1889). List of MSS. in C. R. Gregory, Textkritik des Neuen Testaments, ii (1902), pp. 524–8. G. Zuntz, The Ancestry of the Harklean New Testament (British Academy Supplemental Papers, No. vii [1945]). P. E. Kahle, 'The Chester Beatty Manuscript of the Harklean Gospels' in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, vi (S.T., cxxvi; 1946), pp. 208–33. G. Zuntz, 'Études harkléennes' in R. Bibl., lvii (1950), pp. 550–82. J. Gwynn in D.C.B., iv (1887), pp. 1014–21, s.v. 'Thomas (17) Harklensis'.

HARLESS, GOTTLIEB CHRISTOPH ADOLPH VON (1806–79), German *Lutheran theologian. When a student at Halle university he was converted under the influence of F. A. G. *Tholuck to an ardent belief in the doctrine of justification by faith. From 1829 to 1845 he was Prof. of NT exegesis at Erlangen, where he considerably raised the standard of the theological faculty and founded the Zeitschrift für Protestantismus und Kirche (1838–76). From 1845 to 1850 he was professor at Leipzig. Appointed court preacher at Dresden in 1850, he was called to Munich two years later and made president of the supreme consistory of Bavaria. Here he reorganized the Lutheran State Church, to which he gave a new hymn-book and a new Order of Services. He was one of the most influential representatives of Lutheran orthodoxy of his generation.

W. Langsdorff, Adolf von Harless. Ein kirchliches Charakterbild (1898). T. Heckel, Adolf von Harless. Theologie und Kirchenpolitik eines lutherischen Bischofs in Bayern (Munich, 1933). D. Bachmann, 'Adolf von Harless. . . . Eine Studie zur Geschichte der neueren Theologie' in Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, xvii (1906), pp. 860–91, 944–72, incl. list of his works. A. von Stählin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 421–32, s.v., with further bibl.

HARMONY, Pre-established. See Pre-established Harmony.

HARMONY SOCIETY. A communist sect, also known as the 'Harmonists', founded by J. G. Rapp (1757–1847). Rapp first established his sect in Württemberg; but in 1803–4 he emigrated to the U.S.A., and there settled his community on a site of some 5,000 acres in Butler County (Pa.), giving it the name of 'Harmony'. In 1814 his followers transferred themselves to a much larger estate in Posey County (Ind.). The Harmonists held many eccentric ideas. Rapp himself believed that Napoleon was God's ambassador, that attendance at school was wicked, and that Baptism and the Lord's Supper were the work of the devil. By the middle of the 19th cent. the Harmonists had almost died out.

A. Williams, The Harmony Society at Economy, Penn'a (Pittsburgh, 1866); J. A. Bole, The Harmony Society. A Chapter in German American Culture History (Americana Germanica, New Series, Philadelphia, 1904). M. Holloway, Heavens on Earth. Utopian Communities in America 1680–1880 (1951), pp. 88–95, with chapter on The New Harmony, pp. 101–15. K. J. R. Arndt, George Rapp's Harmony Society 1785–1847 (Philadelphia, 1965). R. B. Taylor in H.E.R.E., iii (1910), p. 780 f., s.v. 'Communistic Societies of America: I, The Harmony Society'.

HARMS, CLAUS (1778–1855), German *Lutheran theologian. A native of Holstein, after helping his father in his corn mill he went in 1799 to the university of Kiel, where the study of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher's writings made him a zealous Evangelical. In 1806 he was elected deacon at Lunden in Norder Ditmarschen (Holstein), where he became popular as a preacher. Ten years later he was appointed archdeacon at St.

Nicolai at Kiel, and in 1835 provost. In 1834 he had declined an offer to succeed Schleiermacher at the Dreifaltigkeitskirche in Berlin. He is chiefly remembered for his defence of *Lutheran theology at a time when its distinctive elements were threatened by the movement for reuniting the two Protestant confessions in Prussia. On the third centenary of the outbreak of the Reformation (1817) he published, together with M. *Luther's 95 theses, 95 theses of his own directed to the quickening of Lutheran piety. They stressed the necessity of the forgiveness of sins and the importance of the Sacraments, and won the approval of Schleiermacher. His other writings include a Pastoraltheologie (1830) and collections of sermons.

Lebensbeschreibung verfasset von ihm selber ('Zweite Auflage', Kiel, 1851). Ausgewählte Schriften und Predigten, ed. P. Meinhold (2 vols., Flensburg, 1955). F. Wintzer, Claus Harms. Predigt und Theologie (Schriften des Vereins für Schleswig-Holsteinische Kirchengeschichte, Reihe I, xxi; 1965), with extensive bibl. H. C. Carstens in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 433–9, with full bibl.

HARNACK, ADOLF (1851–1930), German Church historian and theologian. He was the son of Theodosius Harnack (1817–89), professor of pastoral theology at Dorpat and the author of Luthers Theologie (2 vols., 1862–6). He studied at Dorpat and then at Leipzig, where he became Privatdozent (1874) and Extraordinary Prof. (1876). He later held full professorships at Giessen (1879–86), Marburg (1886–9), and Berlin (1889–1921). From 1905 to 1921 he was also Director of the Prussian Staatsbibliothek and in 1910 he became President of the 'Kaiser Wilhelm Gesellschaft' for furthering learning and science.

In the range of his achievements Harnack was prob. the most outstanding Patristic scholar of his generation. He made himself complete master of the early Christian literature, esp. of the pre-Nicene period, and published innumerable contributions to its history. In conjunction with O. von Gebhardt, he founded the important series Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur (1882 ff.), very many of its papers being his own compositions or owing their inspiration to his enthusiasm. These extended historical studies formed the basis of his Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte (3 vols., 1886–9; Eng. trans. as History of Dogma, 7 vols., 1894–9), which traced the history of Christian doctrine down to the Reformation, with esp. attention to the earlier period. The work reflected throughout Harnack's theological standpoint (a form of *Ritschlianism); he regarded the metaphysics which came into Christian theology as an alien intrusion from Greek sources ('Hellenization'). This critical attitude to traditional Christian dogma evoked strong opposition from conservative theologians, who resisted, but without success, his call to Berlin. Here he became involved in a long controversy on the *Apostles' Creed, embodying his views in Das apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (1892). In the winter of 1899–1900 he delivered a celebrated course of lectures stressing the moral side of Christianity, esp. the claims of human brotherhood, to the exclusion of all that was doctrinal. They were subsequently published as Das Wesen des Christentums (1900; Eng. trans., 1901) and attracted very wide attention. Meanwhile, Harnack pursued his historical studies with sustained energy, issuing, inter alia, Die Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur bis Eusebius (3 vols., 1893–1904). Later he published a series of notable studies on the *Synoptic Problem, in which (to the surprise of friends and foes alike) he upheld very early dates for the Synoptic Gospels and *Acts, holding e.g. that Acts was written by St. *Luke when St. *Paul was still in his (first) Roman Captivity and assigning a very early date to '*Q'. These studies were embodied in Beiträge zur Einleitung in das Neue Testament (4 parts, 1906–11; Eng. trans. under separate titles, e.g. Luke the Physician, 1907; The Sayings of Jesus, 1908; The Acts of the Apostles, 1909). His other writings included Die Mission und Ausbreitung des Christentums in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (1902; ed. 4, much enlarged, 1924; Eng. trans. by J. *Moffatt, from ed. 1 only, 2 vols., 1904–5), Entstehung und Entwickelung der Kirchenverfassung (1910; Eng. trans., 1910), Marcion (1921; ed. 2, 1924), and Briefsammlung des Apostels Paulus (1926). With E. *Schürer he also founded the Theologische Literaturzeitung (1876 ff.).

Correspondence with K. Holl ed. H. Karpp (Tübingen, 1966). Life by Agnes von Zahn-Harnack (Berlin, 1936, ed. 2, 1951). J. de Ghellinck, S.J., Patristique et moyen-âge, iii (1948), Étude III, pp. 1–102. G. W. Glick, The Reality of Christianity. A Study of Adolf von Harnack as Historian and Theologian (1967). W. Pauck, Harnack and Troeltsch (New York, 1968), pp. 3–42. Studies by K. H. Neufeld (Paderborn, 1977, and Innsbruck, 1979).

HARRIS, HOWEL (1714–73), founder of Welsh *Calvinistic Methodism. Born at Trevecca, near Hay-on-Wye, he was intended for ordination in the Anglican Church. In 1735 he was converted to a life of great religious seriousness, and later in the year went up to St. Mary Hall, Oxford; but after a term's residence he returned to Wales, where he became an ardent mission preacher and rapidly gathered large crowds. Owing to the resistance encountered from orthodox Anglicans and the refusal of Ordination, he was driven to separation from the C of E. For several years his cause was helped by Daniel Rowlands (1713–90) of Llangeitho, Cards., but some obscure misunderstanding led to a violent conflict in 1751. Shortly afterwards he established a religious community at Trevecca, where, towards the end of his life, he gained the warm support of Selina, Countess of *Huntingdon. He published some books in Welsh.

A Brief Account of the Life of Howell Harris, Esq., Extracted from Papers written by himself, To which is added a concise Collection of his Letters from the Year 1738 to 1772 [ed. B. La Trobe–E. Moses] (Trevecca, 1791). Correspondence publd. as 'The Trevecka Letters' in supplements to the Journal of the Calvinistic Methodist Historical Society; Calendar by M. H. Jones (Carnarvon, 1932); selections also ed. G. M. Roberts (ib., 1956 and 1962). Lives in Eng. by J. Bulmer (Haverfordwest, 1824), E. Morgan (Holywell, 1852), H. J. Hughes (London, 1892), H. E. Lewis (ib. [1912]), G. T. Roberts (Wesley Historical Lecture No. 17; London, 1951), and G. F. Nuttall (Cardiff, 1965). R. Bennett, The Dawn of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism [in Welsh, 1909]; Eng. tr. The Early Life of Howell Harris, 1962). R. J. Jones in D.N.B., xxv (1891), p. 6 f.

HARRIS, JAMES RENDEL (1852–1941), Biblical scholar and orientalist. He was brought up as a *Congregationalist, but later became a *Quaker. Educated at Plymouth Grammar School and Clare College, Cambridge, he taught in the U.S.A. (1882–92), at Cambridge (1893–1903), and at Woodbrooke Settlement, Birmingham (1903–18), and from 1918 to 1925 was Curator of MSS. at the John Rylands Library, Manchester. Harris was the author of many studies on Biblical and early Christian texts and on the Mediterranean cults. In 1889 he discovered at the St. Catherine's Monastery on Mount *Sinai the Syriac text of the 'Apology' of *Aristides (published 1891); and in 1910 issued the Syriac text of the 'Odes of *Solomon'. His numerous other works include Biblical Fragments from Mount Sinai (1890), *The Diatessaron (1890), Lectures on the Western Text of the NT (1894), *The Teaching of the Apostles and the Sibylline Books (1885), Testimonies (1917; 1920). In collaboration with R. L. Bensly and F. C. *Burkitt he edited The Four Gospels from the Syriac Palimpsest (1894). His writings reflect his unconventional and speculative mind, and immense, if at times somewhat unbalanced, erudition.

C. A. Phillips, 'Rendel Harris' in Expository Times, lii (1941), pp. 349–52. H. G. Wood in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 360–62.

HARRISON, FREDERIC (1831–1923), English *Positivist. Educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1854, he began to practise as a barrister-at-law in 1858. In his earlier years he was a member of the C of E, influenced by the school of F. D. *Maurice and also by H. P. *Liddon, a school friend with whom he kept up a friendship till Liddon's death; but he came gradually under the influence of A.*Comte, and embraced Positivism in 1870. From 1880 to 1905 he was president of the 'English Positivist Committee', and the recognized leader in England of that school of thought. Among his writings were The Creed of a Layman (1907), The Philosophy of Common Sense (1907), and The Positive Evolution of Religion (1912).

Autobiographic Memoirs (2 vols., London, 1911); Austin Harrison (son), Frederic Harrison. Thoughts and Memories (1926). A. Cochrane in D.N.B., 1922–1930, pp. 406–8.

HARROWING OF HELL, The. The medieval English term for the defeat of the powers of evil at the *Descent of Christ into Hell after His death. It was a favourite theme of art and drama in the Middle Ages.

HARTMANN, EDUARD VON (1842–1906), German philosopher. Born at Berlin, in 1858 he became an artillery officer in the Prussian Guards, but owing to an affliction of the knee he was forced to resign in 1865, and resided at Berlin for the rest of his life.

The main outlines of his system, which owed much to the influence of G. W. F. *Hegel, A. *Schopenhauer and F. W. J. *Schelling, were already contained in his early treatise on the 'Philosophy of the Unconscious' (Die Philosophie des Unbewussten, '1869', really Nov. 1868; Eng. trans. by W. C. Coupland, 1884). He saw in the 'Unconscious' an all-pervasive monistic principle which was at once will (Wille) and presentation (Vorstellung), and the ground of evolutionary development. Rejecting mechanism in favour of a teleological vitalism, he became a robust champion of progress, enlightenment and practical activity, uniting his disciples in the service of 'Concrete Monism'. Christianity, which was only a stage along the way to the religion of Absolute Spirit, was now at length dead and its gravedigger was modern Protestantism.

Among von Hartmann's other writings were Das religiöse Bewusstsein der Menschheit im Stufengang seiner Entwickelung (1882), Die Religion des Geistes (1882), Die deutsche Aesthetik seit Kant (1886), and Die Philosophie des Schönen (1887). Of specifically religious import were Die Selbstzersetzung des Christentums und die Religion der Zukunft (1874) and Die Krisis des Christentums und die moderne Theologie (1880).

Von Hartmann found an enthusiastic disciple in A. *Drews (q.v.).

There is a large literature, mainly in German. Überweg, v, pp. 331–9, also p. 707 f. with list of his writings and full bibl. to date. In English D. N. K. Darnoi, The Unconscious and Eduard von Hartmann. A Historico-Critical Monograph (The Hague, 1967), with bibl. L. E. Loemker in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, iii (1967), pp. 419–21, with select bibl.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING. In Gt. Britain an unofficial religious festival of thanksgiving for the fruits of the earth, usually observed on a Sunday in Sept. or Oct. after the ingathering of the harvest. In the C of E and Free Churches, and of recent times in the RC Church also, it is customary to decorate the church with fruit, flowers, and vegetables which are later devoted to charity; special hymns are sung; and there is frequently a visiting preacher. In medieval England *Lammas Day (1 Aug.) was prob. recognized as a thanksgiving for the first fruits of the harvest, bread made with the new wheat being offered at Mass and solemnly blessed. This last custom was revived by R. S. Hawker (1804–75) at Morwenstow, Cornwall, in 1843. Although no provision is made for any such observance in the BCP, special forms of thanksgiving for abundant harvests were occasionally authorized from the end of the 18th cent. By the mid 19th cent. an annual festival was common and a parochial thanksgiving replaced the traditional Harvest Home. In 1862 the Convocation of Canterbury issued a form of service. The proposed Revised Prayer Book of 1927–8 provided a Collect, to follow that of the day, and an Epistle and Gospel, while the ASB has a complete set of Collect, Psalms and Biblical lections for use at all services. Other Anglican revisions have made similar provisions. The American Prayer Book of 1789 already contained a form of thanksgiving for the fruits of the earth which was used on 'Thanksgiving Day' (a general holiday, since 1941 observed on the fourth Thursday in November).

H. C. Batterbury in P.B.D. (1912), p. 377 f., s.v. 'Harvest Festival'.

HASE, KARL AUGUST VON (1800–90), German Church historian. After teaching for a short time at Tübingen and Leipzig, he held a professorship at Jena from 1830 till 1883. In 1829 he published a Life of Christ in which the supernatural elements in the Gospels were rationalized. His Kirchengeschichte (ed. 1, 1834) long remained a standard work. He also wrote Evangelisch-protestantische Dogmatik (1826), Gnosis, oder protestantisch-evangelische Glaubenslehre (3 vols., 1827–9) and Handbuch der protestantischen Polemik gegen die römisch-katholische Kirche (1862; ed. 7, 1900; Eng. trans., Handbook to the Controversy with Rome [2 vols., 1906]).

Gesammelte Werke, ed. G. Krüger and others (12 vols., Leipzig, 1890–93). R. Bürkner, Karl von Hase (Leipzig, 1900). G. Krüger in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 453–61, s.v.

HASIDAEANS. The Greek form ('Ασιδαῖοι) of the Heb. '*Chasidim' (q.v.), found e.g. in 1 Macc. 2. 42.

HASMONAEANS. The family name of the *Maccabees, apparently derived from one of their ancestors.

HASTINGS, JAMES (1852–1922), *Presbyterian divine and editor of religious encyclopaedic works. Educated at the grammar school, the university, and the Free Church Divinity College at Aberdeen, he was ordained a Presbyterian minister in 1884, and appointed pastor of Kinneff, Grampian, Free Church. From 1897 to 1901 he was pastor of Willison Church, Dundee, and from 1901 to 1911 of the United Free Church, St. Cyrus, Grampian, after which he retired to Aberdeen. In 1889 he founded the monthly Expository Times, which he edited until his death. He is famous as the editor of the Dictionary of the Bible (5 vols., 1898–1904; 1-vol. edition, 1909; revised by F. C. Grant and H. H. Rowley, 1963), the Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols., 1908–21; Index vol., 1926), the Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels (2 vols., 1906–8), and the Dictionary of the Apostolic Church (2 vols., 1915–18).

Artt. by H. E. *Ryle, W. A. Curtis, and H. R. *Mackintosh in Expository Times, xxxiv (1922–3), pp. 102–6. E. R. Micklem in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 409 f.

HAT, Cardinal's. See Red Hat.

HATCH, EDWIN (1835–89), Anglican divine. Educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, he was successively professor of classics at Toronto (1859), rector of Quebec High School (1862), vice-principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford (1867), rector of Purleigh, Essex (1883), and reader in ecclesiastical history at Oxford (1884). In 1880 he preached a series of *Bampton Lectures on The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (1881) in which he maintained that the origin of the Christian episcopate lay in the ἐπίσκοποι or financial administrators of Greek religious associations. His other writings included The Growth of Church Institutions (1887), his *Hibbert Lectures for 1888 on The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages on the Christian Church (1890), and his Essays in Biblical Greek (1889). He was engaged on a *Concordance to the Septuagint (subsequently completed by H. A. Redpath, 1897) at the time of his death.

S. C. Hatch (ed.), Memorials of E. Hatch (1890). W. *Sanday, 'In Memoriam Dr. Edwin Hatch' in The Expositor, 4th Series, i (1890), pp. 93–111. Id. in D.N.B., xxv (1891), p. 149 f.

HATFIELD, Council of (680). The Council arose out of the wish of Pope *Agatho to sound the English Church on the subject of *Monothelitism. As his intermediary the Pope chose John, Precentor of St. Peter's, whom St. *Benedict Biscop had brought back with him from Rome to instruct his monks at *Wearmouth in singing. The Council, which met under the presidency of Abp. *Theodore at Hatfield (or ? Heathfield), repudiated Monothelitism, accepted the decrees of the first five General Councils, and affirmed its belief in the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit.

*Bede, H.E., iv. 17 f. Hardouin, iii, col. 1037 f.; Mansi, xi (1765), cols. 175–80; A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (ed.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 141–60. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 316–22. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 475–84.

HAUCK, ALBERT (1845–1918), German *Lutheran historian. He held professorships at Erlangen from 1878 to 1889 and at Leipzig from 1889. Of his writings, the most considerable was his Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands (5 vols., 1887–1920). He was at first joint editor (1880), and from the death of J. J. *Herzog in 1882 sole editor, of the 2nd edition of the Herzog–Plitt Realencyklopädie (completed 1888); and he also edited the 3rd edition (1896–1913), cited as P.R.E. in this Dictionary.

Geschichtliche Studien A. Hauck zum 70. Geburtstage dargebracht (1916). List of his works by Else Hauck in Z.K.G., liv (1935), pp. 565–75, with further refs. H. Heimpel in Neue Deutsche Biographie, viii (1969), p. 75 f., s.v., with bibl.

HAURANNE, JEAN DUVERGIER DE. See Saint-Cyran.

HAVERGAL, FRANCES RIDLEY (1836–79), hymn-writer. She was the daughter of William Henry Havergal (1793–1870), the writer of much sacred music. Endowed with remarkable ability for composing verse, she contributed many poems and hymns to Good Words and other religious periodicals. Some of these have found their way into most hymnals, e.g. 'Take my life and let it be'.

Memorials of F. R. H., by her sister M. V. G. Havergal (1880).

HAWKINS, EDWARD (1789–1882), Provost of Oriel College, Oxford. Elected a Fellow of Oriel in 1813, he became Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, in 1823, and Provost of Oriel in 1828. From 1847 to 1861 he was also (the first) Dean *Ireland professor of the interpretation of Holy Scripture. His sermon on Tradition (1818), urging that Scripture was intended to prove doctrine, not to teach it, had a profound influence on J. H. *Newman, then an undergraduate of Trinity. Later he developed the same subject in his *Bampton Lectures (1840). Though a High Churchman, he became involved in an embittered struggle with the *Tractarians, chiefly in connexion with Tract No. 90. In 1874 he withdrew to *Rochester, where he continued to hold the canonry hitherto attached to the provostship of Oriel.

J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, i (1888), 'iv, The Great Provost', pp. 374–465. W. A. Greenhill in D.N.B., xxv (1891), p. 208 f.

HAYMO OF FAVERSHAM (d. 1244), English *Franciscan friar. Born at Faversham in Kent, he became a Master of Divinity at Paris and in 1224 entered the Order of Friars Minor. Soon afterwards he returned to England and lectured at *Oxford. In 1230 the General Chapter at *Assisi sent him as one of the deputies to *Gregory IX to seek an official explanation of the rule. In 1233 he was sent on a mission to *Constantinople to negotiate a reunion with the E. Church. He took a leading part in the deposition of Brother *Elias, which finally took place at the General Chapter of the Order at Rome in 1239. At that Chapter he became Provincial of the English Province; in 1240 he was elected General of the Order. At his request the 'Expositio Regulae Quatuor Magistrorum' was written by the Four Masters of Paris (1241–2). He died at Anagni. Among his surviving works are an order for private and conventual Mass on ferias ('Indutus planeta'), presented at the Chapter of *Bologna in 1243, and notes for a ceremonial ('Ordinationes Divini Officii'; 'Ad Omnes Horas'). At the behest of *Innocent IV, in 1243–4 he revised the *ordinals for the Roman Breviary, Missal, and *grace before and after meals.

Works ed. S. J. P. van Dijk, O.F.M., The Sources of the Modern Roman Liturgy (Studia et Documenta Franciscana, i–ii; Leiden, 1963), ii, pp. 1–331, with introd. i, pp. 1–109 and 156–206. Ordines also [ed. id.] (H.B.S., lxxxv; 1959). Rosalind B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government. Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 195–209. C. L. Kingsford in D.N.B., xxv (1891), p. 299. Antoine de Sérent, O.F.M., in D.H.G.E., i (1912), cols. 1192–4, s.v. 'Aimon (14) de Faversham', with bibl.

HEADLAM, ARTHUR CAYLEY (1862–1947), Bp. of *Gloucester. He was born at Whorlton, Durham, and educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford. Ordained priest in 1889, he was successively Fellow of All Souls (1885), rector of Welwyn (1896), professor of dogmatic theology at *King's College, London (1903), Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1918), and Bp. of Gloucester (1923–45). A Central Churchman who disliked all ecclesiastical parties (*Anglo-Catholics, *Evangelicals, and *Modernists), he was one of the most influential of English prelates in the inter-war period. In his early years he devoted his attention esp. to NT problems, collaborating with W. *Sanday in his fine Commentary on *Romans (1895) and contributing extensively to J. *Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., 1898–1902). His *Bampton Lectures, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920), written with the forthcoming *Lambeth Conference in view, endeavoured to provide an ecclesiological basis for reunion between the C of E and other religious bodies. His other writings include St. Paul and Christianity (1913), The Life and Teaching of Jesus the Christ (1923), Christian Theology (1934), and The Fourth Gospel as History (1948, posthumous; with biographical essay by Agnes Headlam-Morley).

Life and Letters by R. C. D. Jasper (London, 1960). A. T. P. Williams in D.N.B., 1941–1950 (1959), pp. 369–71.

HEARNE, THOMAS (1678–1735), English antiquary. The son of a humble parish clerk, he was born at Littlefield Green, Berks, and educated in *Nonjuring principles by Francis Cherry and H. *Dodwell. Here his close scholarly habits attracted the attention of the principal, John *Mills (d. 1707), and for some years Hearne collated MSS. and held appointments in the *Bodleian Library. Refusing to take the oath to George I in 1716, he was deprived of his post in the Bodleian, and, though denied access to libraries, continued his medieval studies in Oxford, intransigent politically until his death. He produced over 40 learned volumes, including several editions of classical writers (Pliny, Eutropius, Livy, &c.) and esp. medieval authors (Chronicles, works on *Glastonbury, &c.). He also left 140 MS. notebooks, now preserved in the Bodleian. Though at times uncritical, his meticulous accuracy in transcribing authorities makes his works valuable for reference. His diaries, published posthumously, contain intimate and often malicious comment on contemporary life in Oxford.

The Life of Mr. Thomas Hearne . . . from his own MS. Copy (Oxford, 1772). P. Bliss (ed.), Reliquiae Hearnianae (2 vols., 1867; abridged ed. by J. Buchanan-Brown, 1966). Remains and Collections of Thomas Hearne, ed. C. E. Doble, D. W. Rannie, H. E. Salter, and others (Oxford Historical Society, ii, vii, xiii, xxxiv, xlii, xliii, xlviii, l, lxv, lxvii, and lxxii; 1885–1921). P. Ouvry (ed.), Letters Addressed to Thomas Hearne (1874). Impartial Memorials of the Life and Writings of Thomas Hearne. . . . By Several Hands (1736). W. D. Macray, Annals of the Bodleian Library, Oxford (1868), passim; D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), ch. 9, 'Portrait of Hearne', pp. 226–48. H. R. Luard in D.N.B., xxv (1891), pp. 335–8.

HEARSE. (1) Formerly Herse (Med. Lat. hercia). A triangular frame on a stand, holding 15 candles, formerly used at *Tenebrae in Holy Week, the candles being extinguished one by one during the service. There is also an obsolete use of the word for the triple candlestick formerly used in the *Holy Saturday rite.

(2) Various funeral furnishings. The current use of the word is for the carriage bearing the coffin, but it is also found for a *catafalque, or framework (permanent or temporary) bearing lighted tapers about a coffin.

HEART (Heb. לֵבָב or לֵב, Gk. καρδία). In the Bible it usually designates the whole personality, though, in contrast to modern usage, the emphasis is on the activities of reason and will rather than the emotions. Both in the OT and NT it is the seat of wisdom (1 Kgs. 3. 12), and of thought and reflection (e.g. Jer. 24. 7, Lk. 2. 19), the instrument of belief (Rom. 10. 10) and of will, the principle of action (Ex. 35. 21) which may be hardened so that it resists God (Deut. 15. 7; Mk. 16. 14). It is the principle both of virtues and vices, of humility (Mt. 11. 29) and pride (Deut. 17. 20), of good thoughts (Lk. 6. 45) and of evil thoughts (Mt. 15. 19). Hence in Scripture the heart is the centre of the human person, in which the physical and the spiritual life are concentrated, and therefore in the NT the dwelling-place of Christ (Eph. 3. 17) in which reigns the peace of God (Col. 3. 15). In this sense it is used in the language of Christian spirituality, which regards the human heart as the special organ of the love of God; and it is here that is to be found the inspiration of the modern devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus (q.v.).

J. Baumgärtel and J. Behm, Καρδία in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 609–16.

HEART OF JESUS. See Sacred Heart.

HEAVEN. In Christian theology the dwelling-place of God and the angels, and ultimately of all the redeemed, wherein they receive their eternal reward.

In OT language the word 'heaven' or 'heavens' denotes the visible sky and also the abode of God, conceived as in or beyond the physical heavens, where, for example, Jacob saw Him in a dream (Gen. 28. 12 f.) and whence He could 'come down' upon the top of Mt. Sinai (Exod. 19. 18–20, cf.

20. 22); but it was also acknowledged that 'the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain' God (1 Kgs. 8. 27), who is omnipresent (Ps. 139. 8–10). In the NT heaven as God's dwelling-place is still conceived as high above the earth: thus Christ raised His eyes 'to heaven' in prayer (Mk. 6. 41, Jn. 17. 1), and at His *Ascension seemed to the disciples to pass away from them upwards to heaven. In the Apostolic Church the Hellenistic conception of a series of heavens was widely accepted (cf. 2 Cor. 12. 2–4), together with that of angelic and demonic powers existing in the heavens (e.g. Eph. 6. 12, RV; cf. Rom. 8. 38 f.), over whom Christ since His Resurrection and Ascension reigns supreme with the Father 'far above all heavens' (Eph. 4. 10).

Whereas in Hebrew thought only exceptional human beings (esp. *Enoch and *Elijah) were conceived as being raised to heaven after this life, for Christians it was the distinctive Christian hope and belief that the faithful disciple, through Christ's victory over death, would eventually reign with Him in glory. On the one hand, this might be thought of as attained in the *Kingdom of God at the end of history, when Christ would descend from heaven and the dead would either be raised and caught up to meet Him (1 Thess. 4. 15–17) or enjoy a new life on earth (see Millenarianism). On the other hand, as St. Paul implies when he says that for him to die is to be with Christ (Phil. 1. 23), it was also believed that even before the general resurrection some at least of the redeemed would be with Christ, i.e. in heaven. Acc. to Catholic doctrine, these are the souls who, having died in a state of grace and been purged of their stains in *Purgatory, have passed to heaven, where they enjoy perfect bliss; but, except for the Bl. Virgin *Mary (see Assumption), these souls still await reunion with their bodies at the general *resurrection of the dead, after which both body and soul together will enjoy the life of heaven eternally. Some modern RC theologians, however, have suggested that this teaching involves an invalid extrapolation of the notion of time; they hold that, while it is not until the general resurrection that bodies and souls are reunited, it does not follow that there is a 'period' of bodiless existence in heaven corresponding with the interval between death and resurrection on the earthly time-scale. Catholic theology regards heaven as 'a place' but claims no knowledge of its spatial characteristics or its relation to the physical universe, stressing rather the essential quality of the life of heaven which consists in the enjoyment of the *Beatific Vision (q.v.). Virtually all Christians, while making greater or lesser reservations in regard to details, would agree that heaven is essentially the fulfilment, to a degree impossible on earth, of what is, acc. to the Shorter Catechism of the *Westminster Assembly, the 'chief end of man', viz. 'to glorify God, and to enjoy Him for ever'.

HEBDOMADARIAN (Gk. ἑβδομάς, 'a period of seven days'). In cathedral churches and monasteries, the priest who presides at the Eucharist and Divine Office. He was so named because he held office for a week.

HEBER, REGINALD (1783–1826), Bp. of Calcutta. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and in 1805 elected a Fellow of All Souls. In 1807, on his return from a long tour in Europe, he was ordained and at once became vicar of Hodnet in Salop. In 1815 he delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures on The Personality and Office of the Christian Comforter. In 1823 he accepted the bishopric of Calcutta. In his short episcopate he laboured hard for the spread of Christianity in his large diocese and beyond. He is best remembered for his hymns, which include 'Brightest and best of the sons of the morning', 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty', and 'From Greenland's icy mountains', while his prose works include a Life and edition of the writings of Jeremy *Taylor (1822).

Some Account of the Life of Reginald Heber (anon., 1829). A. Heber (widow), The Life of Reginald Heber (2 vols., 1830), incl. selections of correspondence and unpublished works. Some of his letters are also included in R. H. Cholmondeley (ed.), The Heber Letters 1783–1832 (1950). Later lives by A. Montefiore (London, 1894) and G. Smith (ib., 1895). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxv (1891), pp. 355–7.

HEBREW (people). The Hebrews, the inhabitants of Palestine, who entered the land with the *Patriarchs and *Moses, generally spoke of themselves as the Israelites (בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, *b*ne Yisrael*, 'the Sons of Israel', Gen. 32. 28, 35. 10). The term 'Hebrew' was largely used of them by other peoples, often with a shade of contempt (cf. esp. Gen. 43. 32, 1 Sam. 13. 19 f.). It disappeared with the rise of the monarchy.

The word 'Hebrew' (עִבְרִי, 'ibhrî) was derived by popular Hebrew etymology from the root עבר, 'br, 'to go over', 'to cross', with the meaning that *Abraham came from the other side of the Euphrates (cf. Josh. 24. 2 f.), but the real etymology of the word is uncertain. Similar words in the related languages seem to indicate at first an ethnic group and later a menial social class. It was only in Israel that the ethnic significance continued under the impulse of the new religious nationalism begun by Moses.

HEBREW (tongue). The language in which practically all the OT was written. It belongs to the Semitic group of languages, so called by J. G. *Eichhorn because they were spoken by the races sprung from Noah's eldest son Shem (Gen. 9. 18, 26 f., 10. 21–31). In the OT it is called the 'lip (i.e. speech) of Canaan' (Is. 19. 18) or the 'Jewish (language)' (2 Kgs. 18. 26); and in the NT 'Hebrew' may denote either classical Hebrew (e.g. Rev. 9. 11, 16. 16) or the colloquial Aramaic dialect of Palestine (e.g. Jn. 5. 2, 19. 13, 17).

The earliest forms of the language are preserved in some 1,200 Hebrew words incorporated in Egyptian texts, while the so-called 'Canaanite glosses' in the letters from *Tell el-Amarna (c. 1400 B.C.) and the language of the *Ras Shamra tablets (c. 1425–1375 B.C.) come very close to the archaic Hebrew in the early poems in the OT. Classical Hebrew first appears in a calendar engraved on a stone from Gezer (c. 10th cent. B.C.).

The surviving Hebrew vocabulary is small, containing perhaps only some 7,000–8,000 words, many of them occurring only once or in set phrases of which the exact sense is not always clear. The absence of any surviving literature apart from the OT, except for a very few brief texts such as the Gezer calendar, often makes interpretation difficult if not impossible. The student of the OT, therefore, unless the sense can be recovered from the ancient versions (themselves often incorrect or obscure) can only have recourse to the sister languages to discover the meaning of an otherwise unknown Hebrew word. Medieval Jewish commentators and European scholars from the 17th cent. onwards used Arabic for this purpose; modern scholars have also drawn on Aramaic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Assyrian and Babylonian texts, and more recently on Ugaritic. Even so, the vocabulary of the classical language is preserved only in the OT, and countless words once in regular daily use have disappeared completely.

Hebrew style is simple and direct, and paratactic rather than syntactic—that is, dependent clauses are normally connected by 'and', as in 'keep my commandments and live', instead of 'if thou keepest my commandments, thou shalt live' (Prov. 7. 2). Poetry is distinguished from prose by the parallelism of ideas in the two halves of a verse, as was discovered by R. *Lowth, and by the number of units of sense (not of syllables) in each half of the verse, as was elucidated by K. *Budde. An illustration here is the so-called qînah or 'falling rhythm' characteristic of Lamentations, in which the verses consist of three beats followed by two.

The earliest Hebrew was written in a form of the ancient Phoenician script, running from right to left, which was also the ancestor of the Greek alphabet and ultimately of our own. During the Babylonian captivity (586–538 B.C.) this gave way to an Aramaizing form of the same script, popularly ascribed to *Ezra, from which the modern so-called 'Assyrian' or 'square' script was developed. This is used in the Hebrew texts found near the *Dead Sea (1st cent. B.C.–1st cent. A.D.), although the archaic script was revived as propaganda on *Maccabean coins and sporadically in the Scrolls. This alphabet consisted of 22 signs for the consonants, while the vowels were unrepresented. The absence of signs for vowels caused considerable confusion: e.g. the LXX misread pehām 'coals of fire' (at Ps. 11. 6) as pahîm 'snares'. In the pre-Christian period certain consonants began to be used for vowels—e.g. w (ו) was inserted for ō or ū, and y (י) for ē or ī, and so on. Traces of such a system can be recognized behind the renderings of the LXX, and it is clearly seen in the Scrolls from Qumran. As the knowledge of the classical language died out, however, elaborate systems indicating the vowels by strokes and/or dots above or within or below the consonantal signs were developed and reached their highest point in the Palestinian (or Tiberian) and the Babylonian systems in the 5th–8th centuries A.D. The former, the more elaborate, has survived in modern Hebrew Bibles, while the latter, in which the signs are exclusively superlinear, is known only in MSS. of the Aramaic *Targums.

In the Calendar from Gezer one or two clauses are separated by vertical strokes, but otherwise both clauses and words run on undivided. In the inscription from Siloam (c. 700 B.C.) all the words are separated by dots. Thereafter dots are common but not universal. In the Scrolls from Qumran words are occasionally separated by short spaces, while paragraphs and chapters (though not always the same as in the *Massoretic text) are clearly defined by spaces of varying length.

The standard Eng. Dict. is that of F. Brown–S. R. *Driver–C. A. *Briggs, Oxford, 1906 (corrected repr., 1952); this was based on the classic work of W. *Gesenius (q.v.), esp. ed. 12 by F. Buhl (Leipzig, 1895). More recent dicts. by F. Zorell–L. Semkowski (Rome, 1940–54), and L. Koehler–W. Baumgartner (Leyden, 1953; supplement, 1958). The basic work on Hebrew grammar is W. Gesenius, Hebräische Grammatik (Halle, 1813; ed. 22 by E. Kautzsch, 1878; Eng. tr. of ed. 28 by A. E. Cowley, 1910). Other grammars by H. Bauer–P. Leander (Halle a.Saale, i, all publd., 1922), G. Beer, ed. R. Meyer (2 vols., Berlin, 1952–5; ed. 3, 1966–9), and A. Sperber, A Historical Grammar of Biblical Hebrew (Leyden, 1966). Introductory grammars by A. B. *Davidson, (Edinburgh, 1874 and 1894) and J. Weingreen (Oxford, 1939; ed. 2, 1959). On the comparative grammar of Hebr. and other Semitic languages, W. Wright, Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages (1890; still useful), and C. Brockelmann, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der semitischen Sprachen (2 vols., 1907–13). Studies in Hebrew tense system by S. R. Driver (Oxford, 1874; ed. 2, 1881), R. H. *Kennett (Cambridge, 1901), and F. R. Blake (Rome, 1951 [in English]). G. R. *Driver, Problems of the Hebrew Verbal System (Old Testament Studies published under the Auspices of the Society for Old Testament Study, ii; 1936). General introductions by G. R. Driver, 'The Modern Study of the Hebrew Language' in A. S. *Peake (ed.), The People and the Book (1925), pp. 73–120, with bibl., p. 481 f.; D. W. Thomas, 'The Language of the Old Testament' in H. W. *Robinson (ed.), Record and Revelation (1938), pp. 374–407, with bibl. p. 490 f.; id., Understanding the Old Testament (Ethel M. Wood Lecture, 1967). Other studies include E. Brønno, Studien über hebräische Morphologie und Vokalismus (Leipzig, 1943; important for attention to Gk. transliterations of Heb. words), F. M. Cross–D. N. Freedman, Early Hebrew Orthography (New Haven, Conn., 1952), and J. Barr, Comparative Philology and the Text of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1968).

HEBREWS, Epistle to the. Traditionally included among the letters of St. *Paul, this Ep., unlike most others in the NT, does not contain the name of the writer or that of those addressed. In content it resembles a homily, though it has an epistolary close (13. 18–25). The traditional title (πρὸς Ἑβραίους), though found in the earliest MSS., is prob. an inference from its contents.

The Ep. asserts with emphasis the finality of the Christian dispensation and its superiority to that of the Old Covenant, as a dissuasive from any return to Judaism. Christ is God's Son, the 'effulgence of his glory' (1. 3, RV), the unique and supreme messenger from God to mankind (chs. 1, 2), and hence the Gospel demands unhesitating acceptance (3. 1–4. 13). Christ, moreover, is our High Priest, whose priesthood, unlike that of the Levitical (Aaronic) priests, is eternal (4. 14–6. 20). It is a priesthood 'after the order of *Melchizedek' (6. 20, cf. Ps. 110. 4), who was greater than *Abraham (Gen. 14. 18 ff.) and was thus a fortiori greater than the Levitical priests. In contrast to the repeated sacrifices of the Old Covenant, the Atonement in Christ is eternal. This New Covenant, which, as foretold by Jer. 31. 31–4, was to supersede the temporary covenant of the Old Dispensation, was made, acc. to Ps. 40. 6–8, by the perfect obedience offered by Christ to God (7. 1–10. 18). With these facts before them, the readers are encouraged to steadfastness, perseverance, watchfulness for the Coming of Christ, and greater faith. Of the last a long roll of historic examples is cited (10. 19–11. 40). The Ep. concludes with particular ethical instructions and messages (chs. 12 f.).

From an early date the Ep. was received at *Alexandria as Pauline, whether considered as a translation by St. *Luke from St. Paul's Hebrew (*Clement of Alexandria, ap. *Eusebius, H.E., vi. 14), or as St. Paul's in substance, but committed to writing by someone else (*Origen ap. Eusebius, H.E., vi. 24); while in the E. generally, e.g. by the Council of *Antioch (264) and the later E. Fathers, it was regularly quoted as St. Paul's own composition. In the W. it was known to *Clement of Rome (Ad Cor., xxxvi. 1–5; cf. Heb. 1. 1–13), but it was not quoted as Pauline or as certainly canonical before the 4th–5th cent. The Council of *Trent (sess. iv, 1546) affirmed its canonicity but not its Pauline authorship; but the RC *Biblical Commission ruled (1914) that it was in substance St. Paul's. Modern scholars, however, almost unanimously consider that the internal evidence marks it as non-Pauline, while its style shows that it is unlikely to be a translation. Clearly both the author and his intended readers were thoroughly familiar with Jewish worship and the latter were prob. converts from Judaism. But there are indications that this familiarity came through the Biblical ordinances (e.g. those concerning the *Tabernacle) rather than through direct knowledge of the *Temple itself (destroyed A.D. 70), and it has been argued (on the basis of 6. 1 f.) that the recipients of the Ep. were Gentiles. We learn that the author was a contemporary of *Timothy (13. 23), temporarily absent from those whom he was addressing, and expecting to return to them (13. 19). His identification with, e.g., *Barnabas (*Tertullian and certain modern scholars), *Apollos (M. *Luther, C. Spicq, and H. W. Montefiore), *Aquila (H. *Alford and others), or *Priscilla (A. *Harnack) cannot be more than conjectural. The use of the Ep. by Clement of Rome and the delay in the W. (as compared with the E.) in accepting it into the *Canon (supposedly because there was here a genuine tradition of its non-Pauline authorship; so A. *Loisy, followed by A. H. McNeile), together with the ref. to Italy in 13. 24, have suggested to some scholars that the Ep. was originally connected with Rome. In that case 10. 32–4 might allude to the *Neronian persecution. On general grounds, a date before A.D. 70 has been supported by several scholars, e.g. B. F. *Westcott and T. W. Manson; some, however, argue for a date under *Domitian. Its theological teaching, notably on the Person of Christ (1. 1–14, etc.), His real Humanity and sinlessness (4. 14 f.), His heavenly Priesthood and the Sacrifice of Calvary (7. 24 ff., etc.), as well as its literary capacity and expository power, reach a level unsurpassed in the NT. But the circumstances of its composition and its authorship remain obscure.

Modern commentaries include those by B. *Weiss (K.E.K., xiii, ed. 5; 1888), B. F. Westcott (London, 1889), A. S. *Peake (Cent. Bib., 1902), H. Windisch (Hb. N.T., iv, Th. 3; 1913; ed. 2, ib., 1931), J. *Moffatt (I.C.C., 1924), T. H. Robinson (Moff. Com., 1933), O. Michel (K.E.K., xiii, ed. 7, 1936), C. Spicq, O.P. (Études Bibliques, 1952–3), J. Héring (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, xii; 1954; Eng. tr., 1970), H. [W.] Montefiore (Black's N.T. Comm., 1964), F. F. Bruce (New London Commentary on the NT, 1964), and J. H. Davies (Cambr. Bib. Comm., 1967). Studies on the theology of the Epistle by G. Milligan (Edinburgh, 1899), A. B. *Bruce (ib., 1899), E. F. Scott (ib., 1922), and W. Manson (Baird Lecture for 1949; 1950). W. P. Du Bose, High Priesthood and Sacrifice (Bishop Paddock Lectures for 1907–1908, 1908); A. Nairne, The Epistle of Priesthood (1913). A. Harnack, 'Probabilia über die Adresse und den Verfasser des Hebräerbriefs' in Z.N.T.W., i (1900), pp. 16–41. T. W. Manson, 'The Problem of the Epistle to the Hebrews' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxii (1950), pp. 1–17. F. C. Synge, Hebrews and the Scriptures (1959). A. Vanhoye, S.J., La Structure littéraire de l'Épître aux Hébreux (1963). McNeile, pp. 224–39. T. *Zahn in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 492–506, s.v. 'Hebräerbrief'; C. Spicq, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., vii (1966), cols. 226–79, s.v. 'Paul (Épîtres attribuées à saint), 5. Hébreux (Épître aux)', with full bibl.

HEBREWS, Gospel according to the. An *apocryphal Gospel, acc. to St. *Jerome used by the *Nazarenes, and hence also called by modern scholars the 'Gospel of the Nazarenes'. Jerome, who claims that he himself had translated it into Latin and Greek, also reports that it was composed in *Aramaic speech written in Hebrew letters and that some regarded it as the original version of St. *Matthew's Gospel. The surviving fragments suggest that the work was written from a Jewish-Christian standpoint, but that in its theology it was on the whole orthodox. It contained, besides much that is closely paralleled in the canonical Gospels, esp. Mt., sayings of Christ not recorded in them (e.g. 'Never be glad, except when ye look upon your brother in love', 'He that wonders shall reach the kingdom, and having reached the kingdom shall rest'). Modern scholars have held the most divergent views as to its relation to the canonical Gospels; but the present tendency is to believe that in some places at least it is based on independent traditions of historical value.

The work is mentioned by St. *Clement of Alexandria (Strom., II. ix. 45) and cited several times by *Origen. Acc. to *Eusebius (H.E., IV. xxii. 8), it was already known to *Hegesippus, while Jerome states that he had found a copy in the Library at Caesarea. Fragments collected in M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., 'L'Évangile selon les Hébreux' in R. Bibl., xxxi (1922), pp. 161–81 and 321–49, with crit. discussion. Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 1–8. R. Handmann, Das Hebräer-Evangelium (T.U., v, Hft. 3; 1888). A. Schmidtke, 'Zum Hebräerevangelium' in Z.N.T.W., xxxv (1936), pp. 24–44; H. Waitz, 'Neue Untersuchungen über die sogen. judenchristlichen Evangelien' ib. (1937), pp. 60–81. G. Bardy, 'Saint Jérôme et l'Évangile selon les Hébreux' in Mélanges de Science religieuse, iii (1946), pp. 5–36 (denies the trustworthiness of Jerome). P. Vielhauer in Schneemelcher, i (1959), pp. 75–108; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 117–65. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 513–18.

HEBRON, the modern El-Hâlil, some 23 miles SSW. of *Jerusalem. It is believed to be one of the oldest cities in the world. It was chosen by *Abraham as his nomadic home when he arrived in Palestine (Gen. 13. 18), and he acquired here the Cave of Machpelah as the burying place for his family (Gen. 23). *Joshua made it one of the *Cities of Refuge (Josh. 20. 7). After the death of Saul, *David made it his headquarters (2 Sam. 2. 1–4) and ruled the kingdom from Hebron for seven years and six months (ib. 2. 11) until he had secured possession of Jerusalem. Absalom in turn, on his revolt from David, made it his capital (2 Sam. 15. 7–11). It has sometimes been identified by Christian writers with the scene of the Visitation of the BVM.

L. H. Vincent, O.P.–E. J. H. Mackay–F. M. Abel, O.P., Hébron. Le Haram el-Khalîl, sépulture des patriarches (1923, with sep. vol. of plates). F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), pp. 345–7, with further refs. S. Mowinckel, 'Die Gründung von Hebron' in Orientalia Suecana, iv (1955), pp. 67–76. Reports of recent excavations in R. Bibl., lxxii (1965), pp. 267–70, lxxiii (1966), pp. 566–9; lxxv (1968), pp. 253–8. C. Warren in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 338–40.

HECKER, ISAAC THOMAS (1819–88), founder of the *Paulists. A native of New York, he was at first a keen *Methodist and as a youth took an active interest in the social conditions of the industrial classes. In 1844 he became a RC and, after spending some years in Europe, returned to New York in 1851. Meanwhile he had entered the novitiate of the *Redemptorists in Belgium in 1845 and been ordained priest by N. P. S. *Wiseman in 1849. In the early 'fifties he devoted himself wholeheartedly to the many RC immigrants then entering the U.S.A. Difficulties having arisen with his Redemptorist superiors in 1857 he was dispensed from his vows by *Pius IX, and founded a new congregation for missionary work in the States which was known as the 'Paulists'. After his death it was frequently suggested, but perhaps mistakenly, that the condemnation of *Americanism by *Leo XIII in his Testem benevolentiae (1899) had Hecker in mind.

W. Elliott, The Life of Father Hecker (New York, 1891; Fr. tr., with preface by l'Abbé Félix Klein, 1897). C. Maignen, Étude sur l'américanisme. Le Père Hecker, est-il un saint? (1898). V. F. Holden, C.S.P., The Yankee Paul. Isaac Thomas Hecker (Milwaukee [1958]); deals with the period up to 1858). List of writings with full bibl. in M. de Meulemeester, C.SS.R., Bibliographie générale des Écrivains rédemptoristes, ii (1935), p. 185 f., and iii (1939), p. 316. V. F. Holden in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 126–31; id. in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 982 f., both s.v. See also bibl. to Americanism.

HEDONISM. The ethical doctrine which maintains that the proper end of all moral action is pleasure (Gk. ἡδονή, 'pleasure'). It thus closely resembles *Utilitarianism (q.v.). It is also known, esp. by Continental moral philosophers, as 'Eudaemonism' (Gk. εὐδαιμονία, 'true well-being'). The title 'psychological hedonism' is applied to the doctrine which holds that man is so constituted psychologically that he cannot avoid making 'pleasure' the end of his actions, i.e. that even though he may persuade himself that he is doing acts of great sacrifice, it is really his own pleasure that he is seeking all the time. Such a doctrine, by ruling out freedom, precludes the possibility of moral action altogether.

HEFELE, KARL JOSEPH (1809–93), Church historian. Appointed Privatdozent in Church history at Tübingen in 1836 and professor in 1840, he soon won fame both as teacher and scholar. In 1869 he was elected Bp. of Rottenburg. He spent the winter of 1868–9 at Rome, where he took a prominent part as consultor in the preparations for the *Vatican Council of 1870, and was entrusted, owing to his unrivalled historical knowledge in the field, with drawing up the procedure. At the Council itself he was among the most influential of those opposed to the definition of Papal *Infallibility; but after some initial hesitations, he decided (10 Apr. 1871) to publish the Vatican Decrees in his diocese. His most important work was his History of the ecclesiastical Councils (9 vols., 1855–90, the last two by J. *Hergenröther; the earlier vols. exist in an Eng. trans.; and the whole is in a French trans. with important additions by H. *Leclercq and others, bringing the whole up to 1949; 11 vols. in 22 parts; 1907–52). His other writings include Geschichte der Einführung des Christenthums im südwestlichen Deutschland (1837), Der Kardinal Ximenes (1844; Eng. tr., 1860), and Beiträge zur Kirchengeschichte, Archäologie und Liturgik (2 vols., 1864). He also contributed regularly to the Theologische Quartalschrift.

A. Hagen, 'Hefele und das vatikanische Konzil' in Th.Q., cxxiii (1942), pp. 223–52; id., 'Die Unterwerfung des Bischofs Hefele unter das Vatikanum', ib., cxxiv (1943), pp. 1–40, and other works of this author. F. X. Funk, ib., lxxvi (1894), pp. 1–14. J. B. Sagmüller in C.E., vii (1910), p. 191 f.; V. Conzemius in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 985 f., s.v.

HEGEL, GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH (1770–1831), German Idealist philosopher. Born at Stuttgart, he entered the Tübingen Stift in 1788, nominally as a student of theology, where J. C. F. Hölderlin and F. W. J. *Schelling were his contemporaries. Here Hegel devoted himself to classical subjects, without apparent interest in theology or philosophy. He first became interested in Christian origins during a three years' tutorship in Switzerland (1793–6) and worked at a philosophically conceived 'Life of Christ' (unfinished; first publd. in 1906). Ignoring the miraculous, he found the significance of Christ not in His moral teaching but in His proclamation that the contrasts of virtue and vice were transcended in a Life in which our finitude was embraced by the infinite, and that the meaning of life lay not in abstract speculation but in the concrete history of the human race. This early work contained the germs of the whole of Hegel's subsequent system, though later the theological elements receded into the background.

In 1797 Hölderlin procured for him a tutorship at Frankfurt, where he became a keen student of political science, but still holding that all forms of philosophy were subordinate to religion. In 1801 he moved to Jena. At first he found himself in close agreement with Schelling, then supreme among philosophers at Jena. To this period belongs his essay Die Differenz des Fichteschen und Schellingschen Systems (1801) and also the Kritische Journal der Philosophie, in which he and Schelling collaborated. His De Orbitis Planetarum (1801) qualified him for the post of Privatdozent and in 1801–2 he lectured to an audience of some eleven students on Logic and Metaphysics. After Schelling's departure for Würzburg (1803), Hegel set to work to develop his own system. He expounded it in Die Phänomenologie des Geistes, proof-sheets of which were circulated among his logic class in 1806. The Battle of Jena (14 Oct. 1806) terminated his career at the university, and for some 18 months (1807–8) he edited a newspaper (the Bamberger Zeitung).

In 1808 Hegel became headmaster of a school in Bavaria and in 1816 he accepted a professorship at Heidelberg. His Wissenschaft der Logik (vols. i–ii, 1812; iii, 1816) was his first presentation of what was in essentials the final form of his system. It was followed in 1817 by Die Encyclopaedie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse (2nd much enlarged ed., 1827; 3rd ed., 1830).

A new stage in his life was reached in 1818 when Hegel succeeded J. G. *Fichte as professor of philosophy at Berlin. He arrived at a time of great political unrest (assassination of Kotzebue, 1819) and sought to lay the theoretical foundations of a stable social order. In its fundamental teaching his Grundlinien der Philosophie des Rechts (1821), though standing above contemporary issues and in points of detail diverging from official policy, endorsed the aims of the Government. His influence as a lecturer steadily rose and to this period belong the courses on Aesthetics, Philosophy of Religion, Philosophy of History, History of Philosophy which were subsequently published as the well-known books. He was strongly critical of the teaching of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, a rival influence at Berlin, with its emphasis on feeling in religion. In 1830 he was rector of the university. He died of cholera on 14 Nov. 1831.

Hegel's system, proverbially difficult to apprehend, grew out of the Critical Idealism of I. *Kant, which, carried forward by Fichte and Schelling, reached its ultimate development in his 'Absolute Idealism'. Despite its elaborate speculations, it professed to be severely realistic (as opposed to the romanticism of Schelling) and through and through rational, but only because 'the real is the rational and the rational is the real'. In the form of a 'logic', it claimed to do for the whole of human knowledge what *Aristotle's logic had accomplished for the demonstrative reason. It was a logic not of mere being, but of becoming, and the logical idea fell under the three heads of being (Sein), essence (Wesen), and notion (Begriff). Development followed through a dialectical process in which a thesis was succeeded by an antithesis; through the ensuing conflict the two were brought together again at a higher level as a synthesis. In this way Hegel expounded an essentially evolutionary view of the universe and brought within the purview of his system not only the natural sciences but also such disciplines as history, law, aesthetics and religion. Truth lay not in individual truths or in individual disciplines, but in the whole ('Die Wahrheit ist das Ganze').

Hegel's influence has been immense. The modern study of ecclesiastical history begins with the *Tübingen School (F. C. *Baur, D. F. *Strauss, A. *Hilgenfeld), which drew its inspiration directly from Hegel. On the wider philosophical and religious issues, his followers were divided into two camps. On the one hand his doctrines were developed in a materialist direction by such thinkers as L. *Feuerbach and K. Marx. On the other hand were those who developed the more spiritualistic aspects of his teaching. Among his leading English disciples were T. H. *Green, W. Wallace (1844–97), F. H. *Bradley, and B. Bosanquet. Through such exponents, Absolute Idealism exercised a profound influence on English religious philosophy in the years between 1885 and 1914, and provided the philosophical background for the groups which produced Lux Mundi (1889) and Foundations* (1914).

Collected ed. of Werke, 19 vols., 1832–87, repr., with introd. by H. Glockner (26 vols., Stuttgart, 1927–40, incl. Hegel-Lexikon as vols. xxiii–xxvi). The edition begun by G. Lasson (Leipzig, 1905 ff.), revised by G. Lasson and J. Hoffmeister (Hamburg, 1949 ff.), is now being edited by various scholars. Among English versions, the Logic (from the Encyclopaedie; W. Wallace, 2 vols., 2nd ed., 1893), Philosophy of Mind (from the Encyclopaedie; W. Wallace, 1894), Science of Logic (i.e. the Wissenschaft der Logik; 2 vols., 1929), Philosophy of History (1858), Philosophy of Right (T. M. Knox, 1942), Early Theological Writings, ed. T. M. Knox (Chicago, 1949). J. H. Stirling, The Secret of Hegel (1865); E. *Caird, Hegel (1883); A. *Seth, Hegelianism and Personality (1887); J. M. Sterrett, Studies in Hegel's Philosophy of Religion (1891); J. E. McTaggart, Studies in the Hegelian Dialectic (1896); id., Studies in Hegelian Cosmology (1901); B. *Croce, Cio che è vivo e cio che è morto della filosofia di Hegel (1907); W. T. Stace, The Philosophy of Hegel (1924); G. R. G. Mure, Hegel (1940); id., A Study of Hegel's Logic (1950); id., The Philosophy of Hegel (H.U.L., 1965); J. N. Findlay, Hegel. A Re-examination (1958); W. Kaufmann, Hegel. Reinterpretation, Texts and Commentary (New York, 1965; London, 1966). German studies by K. Rosenkranz (various works; 1840, 1844, 1858, 1870), R. Haym (1857), J. E. Erdmann (1880), K. Fischer (2 vols., 1901), H. Falkenheim (1911), N. Hartmann (1929), and T. L. Haering (2 vols., 1929–38). Also W. *Dilthey, Die Jugendgeschichte Hegels (1905), and R. Kroner, Von Kant bis Hegel (Bd. ii, 1924). F. Grégoire, Études hégéliennes. Les Points capitaux du système (Bibliothèque philosophique de Louvain, 1958). H. Küng, Menschwerdung Gottes. Eine Einführung in Hegels theologisches Denken als Prolegomena zu einer künftigen Christologie (Ökumenische Forschungen, II. Soteriologische Abteilung, i; 1970). C. Taylor, Hegel (Cambridge, 1975).

HEGESIPPUS, St. (2nd cent.), Church historian. A converted Jew and probably a native of Palestine, he wrote five Books of 'Memoirs' (ὑπομνήματα) against the *Gnostics. Though they now survive, as far as is known, only in fragments (nearly all preserved in *Eusebius's Hist. Eccl.), the work is said to have existed entire in some libraries as late as the 16th–17th cents. The surviving portions deal for the most part with the early history of the Church at *Jerusalem. It appears (Eusebius, H.E., IV. xxii. 1–3) that he drew up a 'succession-list' (διαδοχή) of the early bishops of the Church at Rome; and it has been argued that the list in *Epiphanius (Haer., 27. 6) is a reproduction of this list. If so, it is the earliest witness to the names of the first Roman bishops. Feast day, 7 Apr.

Fragg. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, i (ed. 2, 1846), pp. 207–19 (annott. 220–84), and T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, vi (1900), pp. 228–73. N. Hyldahl, 'Hegesipps Hypomnemata' in Studia Theologica, xiv (1960), pp. 70–113. W. Telfer, 'Was Hegesippus a Jew?' in H.T.R., liii (1960), pp. 143–53. On his 'Papal List' see C. H. *Turner in H. B. *Swete, Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918), pp. 115–20 and 207; and T. Klauser in Bonner Zeitschrift für Theologie und Seelsorge (1931), pp. 193–213. Further bibl. in Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 109 f.

HEGIRA. The emigration (hijra) of *Mahomet from Mecca to Medina, the traditional date for which is 16 July 622. From this event begins the Moslem era, though, as its (luhar) years consist of only 354 or 355 days, it is not possible to relate it to the Christian era by simple addition or subtraction.

Tables for the conversion of Islamic and Christian dates include H. F. Wüstenfeld–E. Mahler, Vergleichungs-Tabellen zur muslimischen und iranischen Zeitrechnung (ed. 3 revised by J. Mayr–B. Spuler, Wiesbaden, 1961) and G. S. P. Freeman-Grenville, The Muslim and Christian Calendars (1963). There is also a convenient handbook by [T.] W. Haig, Comparative Tables of Muhammadan and Christian Dates [1932].

HEGUMENOS (Gk. ἡγούμενος, lit. 'leader'). A title in the E. for the ruler of a monastery. He is usually elected by the monks of the monastery, though confirmation is required from the patriarch, the diocesan bishop, or the patron (acc. to the status of the monastery).

HEIDEGGER, MARTIN (1889–1976), German *existentialist philosopher. A native of Messkirch, Baden, and coming from a peasant background, Heideggger studied for a time at a Jesuit seminary before he went to Freiburg University. He was much influenced by the writings of F. *Brentano and the teaching of E. Husserl. After submitting a thesis on Pseudo-*Duns Scotus's Grammatica Speculativa, Heidegger became Privatdozent at Freiburg in 1915. In 1923 he was appointed Professor at Marburg, where his colleagues included R. *Bultmann and P. *Tillich. In 1929 he returned to Freiburg as Husserl's successor. At first he apparently supported the Nazi regime and was Rector of the University from 1933 to 1934. In later years he spent much of his time in the Black Forest, though he did not resign his Professorship until 1951.

In an obscure language, consciously opposed to the intellectual vocabulary of the scientific Greek tradition, Heidegger elaborated a metaphysic of the human person. Though trained in the neo-*Kantian school, he rejected Kant's 'self' as ignoring man's historical being in the world. He was indebted to Husserl's *phenomenology for reflecting on the structure of consciousness, but felt that this was only a preliminary to philosophy's proper concern, that of the nature of being. Thus, his Sein und Zeit (1927; Eng. tr., 1962), with elaborate etymological excursuses, uncovers man's temporal being in order to focus on Being in its unity and totality. Man's personal existence (Dasein: literally 'there-ness') is a unique, transcendent possibility, which is rooted in immediate, temporal relationships. Authentic existence, facing nothingness, is lived out only in the full acceptance of death. In his later works (the extent of discontinuity with his earlier writings is much disputed) it seems that Being is intuitively grasped rather than philosophically explored. In Hölderlin und das Wesen der Dichtung (1936) he treats of language as the house of Being and of the poet as guardian of Being.

Heidegger's influence on theologians has been considerable. Bultmann, for instance, adopts his categories (of authentic and unauthentic existence), regarding them as a systematic and secularized version of NT anthropology; he maintains that Heidegger's analysis is correct, though it is only in Christian faith that the transition to authentic existence is realized. In Heidegger's later work some theologians have found suggestions for a 'non-objectifying' mode of theological discourse.

Durchblicke. Martin Heidegger zum 80. Geburtstag (Frankfurt, 1970). Several of his works have been translated into English, incl. 'Hölderlin und das Wesen der Dichtung', which is incl. in Existence and Being (1949), pp. 291–315, with useful introd. by W. Brock, pp. 20–248. Marjorie Grene, Martin Heidegger (1957); T. Langan, The Meaning of Heidegger. A Critical Study of an Existentialist Phenomenology (1959); J. M. Robinson–J. B. Cobb, Jr. (edd.), The Later Heidegger and Theology (1963); Magda King, Heidegger's Philosophy. A Guide to his Basic Thought (Oxford, 1964). M. Wyschogrod, Kierkegaard and Heidegger. The Ontology of Existence (1954); J. Macquarrie, An Extentialist Theology. A Comparison of Heidegger and Bultmann (1955). H. M. Sass, Heidegger-Bibliographie (Meisenheim am Glam, 1968); id. (ed.), Materialien zur Heidegger-Bibliographie 1917–1972 (ibid., 1975). See also works cited under Existentialism.

HEIDELBERG CATECHISM. The Protestant confession of faith compiled in 1562 by Z. Ursinus and K. Olevian, two Heidelberg theologians, and others, at the instance of the Elector, *Frederick III, and accepted in the following year as the standard of doctrine in the Palatinate. In fundamentals its theology is *Calvinist, though the specific doctrines of J. *Calvin have sometimes been modified under the influence of J. H. *Bullinger, and others of even stronger Lutheran sympathies. Its spirit has been said to combine the intimacy of M. *Luther, the charity of P. *Melanchthon, and the fire of J. Calvin.

An Eng. tr. was publd. in 1572. A. Wolters, Heidelberger Katechismus in seiner ursprünglichen Gestalt, herausgegeben nebst der Geschichte seines Textes im Jahre 1563 (1864). Text from ed. 3 in H. A. Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum in Ecclesiis Reformatis Publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 390–461, with introd. pp. lvii–lxiii. P. Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, i (1877), pp. 529–54, with bibl., incl. reff. to modern Eng. trr. Convenient Eng. tr. in T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith. The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 67–96. A. Lang, Der Heidelberger Katechismus (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, xxxi, 1, 1913). K. *Barth, Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (1948); id., Einführung in den Heidelberger Katechismus (1960; Eng. tr. of both as The Heidelberg Catechism for Today, 1964). W. Hollweg, Neue Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Heidelberger Katechismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, xiii, 1961; 2nd series, ib., xxviii, 1968). M. Lauterburg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 164–73, s.v. 'Katechismus, Heidelberger', with bibl.

HEILER, FRIEDRICH (1892–1967), German religious writer. As a RC, he studied Catholic theology, philosophy, and oriental languages at Munich, but he soon came under the influence of Protestantism, especially of the Swedish theologian, N. *Söderblom. In 1919 he became a member of the Lutheran Church at *Upsala. In 1922 he was appointed professor of the comparative history of religions at *Marburg. Influenced by the writings of F. *von Hügel, his later development took a more Catholic line. He became the organizer of a German High Church movement, and even founded an Evangelical order of Franciscan *Tertiaries. In his latter years he played an active part in the *Ecumenical Movement. His first and most important work is Das Gebet (1918), a comprehensive historical analysis of prayer from its most primitive forms in the inarticulate shouts of the savage to the heights of mystic contemplation, the description of the latter being largely based on F. von Hügel, W. R. *Inge, and E. *Underhill. His work on Catholicism, Der Katholizismus (1923), is remarkable for its appreciative understanding of it in its earlier expressions, but almost entirely negative on post-Tridentine developments. Among his other works are Evangelische Katholizität (1926), The Spirit of Worship (1926), and Die Wahrheit Sundar Singhs (1927).

Eng. tr. of Das Gebet (abridged) by S. McComb (New York, 1932). In Deo Omnia Unum. Eine Sammlung von Aufsätzen F. Heiler zum 50. Geburtstage dargebracht (ed. C. M. Schröder and others, Munich, 1942 [issue of periodical Eine Heilige Kirche]). K. Goldammer, 'Die Frühentwicklung der allgemeinen Religionswissenschaft und die Anfänge einer Theologie der Religionen' in Saeculum, xviii (1967), pp. 181–98. E. Dammann in Neue Deutsche Biographie, viii (1968), p. 259 f., s.v.

HEIM, KARL (1874–1958), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Frauenzimmern in Württemberg, he studied at *Tübingen and was for some years a pastor and schoolmaster. In 1907 he became a Privatdozent at Halle, in 1914 professor of theology at Münster i.W., and in 1920 at Tübingen. For several years he was one of the leading opponents of the (pagan) German Faith Movement. His theology, which developed out of a *Pietistic background, stressed the *Ritschlian contrast of faith and reason and, while fully conscious of the achievements of modern secular culture and science, emphasized the transcendence of faith. He was esp. concerned to analyse the conditions governing the valid apprehension of supernatural truth. In his personalism (the 'I–Thou' relationship; cf. M. *Buber) and his doctrine of 'perspectives', his teaching had affinities with certain *existentialist doctrines. Among his writings are Das Weltbild der Zukunft (1904), Glaubensgewissheit (1916; ed. 2, 1923), Das Wesen des evangelischen Christentums (1926), Glauben und Denken

(1931; ed. 3, 1934; Eng. trans. as God Transcendent, 1935), Glaube und Leben, Gesammelte Aufsätze und Vorträge (1925; ed. 3, 1928), and his autobiography, Ich gedenke der vorigen Zeiten (1957).

Many of Heim's works have been translated into English. Theologie als Glaubenswagnis. Festschrift für Karl Heim zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht von der Evang.-theol. Fakultät in Tübingen (Hamburg, 1952). Brief studies on various aspects of his theology by W. Ruttenbeck (Leipzig, 1925), H. E. Eisenhuth (Göttingen, 1928), and F. Spemann (Tübingen, 1932). H. Schwarz, Das Verständnis des Wunders bei Heim und Bultmann (1966), with bibl. In English, popular introduction by E. L. Allen, Jesus Our Leader. A Guide to the Thought of Karl Heim [1950]. W. Wiesner in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), col. 198 f., s.v.

HEIRIC OF AUXERRE (841–876/7), teacher and hagiographer. When only about 7 years old he entered the monastery of St. *Germanus at Auxerre as an oblate. There his teacher was Haymo of Auxerre. From 859 to 860 he studied under Servatus *Lupus at Ferrières, and from 862 to 865 he was at the abbey of St. Médard at Soissons, where he came into contact with Johannes Scotus *Erigena. He then returned to his monastery at Auxerre and taught there until his death. His chief work was a metrical life of St. Germanus, one of the best hagiographical poems of the times, which he dedicated c. 876 to Charles the Bald. He also wrote 'Miracula S. Germani' in prose, and put together 'Collectanea', partly classical from Valerius Maximus, *Suetonius and other sources, and partly theological; these were based on the teaching of Lupus and Haymo. He is important as a link between the Carolingian schools and the later Middle Ages, esp. as the teacher of *Remigius. He is not to be identified with Helpericus, the computist.

The best text of his metrical life of St. Germanus is that of L. Traube, with important introd., in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 421–517; it is also pr. in AA.SS., Jul. VII (1731), pp. 221–55. Miracula S. Germani, ib., pp. 255–83. Collectanea ed. R. Quadri, O.F.M. (Spicilegium Friburgense, xi; Fribourg, 1966). G. Billanovich, 'Dall'antica Ravenna alle biblioteche umanistiche' in Aevum, xxx (1956), pp. 319–53, revised in Annuario dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Anni Accademici 1955–57 (Milan, 1958), pp. 71–107. Manitius, i, pp. 499–504. For Helpericus, see A. van de Vyver in R. Bén., xlvii (1935), pp. 147–9.

HEIRMOS (Gk. εἱρμός, 'chain'). The opening stanza in each ode of the *canon. All the remaining *troparia in the ode follow the same rhythm as the heirmos. In content it acts as a 'link' verse (hence its name), joining together: (a) the theme of the Biblical Canticle, which the ode of the canon was originally designed to accompany; and (b) the theme of the feast or commemoration of the day, which is developed in the troparia that follow.

HELENA, St. (c. 255–c. 330), also Helen, mother of the Emp. *Constantine. Born at Drepanum (later 'Helenopolis' after her) in Bithynia of humble parentage, she became the wife of the Emp. Constantius Chlorus, by whom she bore Constantine in 274. She was abandoned by her husband in 292 when political reasons led him to marry the stepdaughter of the Emp. Maximian. When Constantine became Emperor in 306, Helena was immediately raised to a position of great honour and zealously supported the Christian cause. In 326, at a great age, she made a visit to the Holy Land, where she founded the basilicas on the Mount of *Olives and at *Bethlehem, and (acc. to later tradition; *Sulpicius Severus, *Ambrose, *Rufinus, all c. 395–400) discovered the Cross on which Christ was crucified.

The medieval belief that St. Helena was a native of England derives from the chroniclers who appear to have confounded her with another Helen, the wife of Magnus Clemens Maximus, Emp. in Britain, Gaul, and Spain from 383 to 388, by whom she had several sons, one of them named Constantine. *Geoffrey of Monmouth and later legends described St. Helena as the daughter of Coel ('Old King Cole') of Colchester. From the 9th cent. the abbey of Hautvillers, near *Reims, claimed to possess her body. Feast day, formerly 18 Aug.; in the E., 21 May (with St. Constantine, Emp.).

The chief early sources are *Eusebius, Vita Constantini, *Zosimus, Historia, ii. 8, and Eutropius, Breviarium, x. 2. R. Couzard, Sainte Hélène d'après l'histoire et la tradition (1911). On her Palestinian churches, F. Nau, 'Les Constructions Palestiniennes dues à Ste Hélène' in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, x (1905), pp. 162–88. A. Heisenberg, Grabeskirche und Apostelkirche. Zwei Basiliken Konstantins, ii (1908). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2126–45, s.v. 'Hélène, Impératrice'.

For the legend, see B.H.L., i (1899), Nos. 3772–90. Life by Almannus of Hautvillers in AA.SS., Aug. III (1737), pp. 580–99. J. Maurice, Ste Hélène ('L'Art et les saints', illustr.; 1929); A. M. Rouillon, Sainte Hélène ('Les Saints', 1908).

HELIAND ('Saviour'; Old English hælend, Ger. Heiland). An Old Saxon Biblical poem of the 9th cent. It owes its title to its first editor, A. Schmeller (1830), though the work had been discovered in the 17th cent. by F. Junius (d. 1671). It is based on *Tatian's harmony of the Gospels and is written in alliterative verse. The Latin 'Praefatio', now generally considered genuine, states that the Heliand was written by a well-known Saxon bard at the order of King *Louis the Pious for the benefit of his Saxon subjects recently converted to Christianity. The poem, which shows the influence of the contemporary Anglo-Saxon religious poetry, represents Christ as a liege-lord and the Apostles as His faithful vassals, and inculcates the virtues of humility and love of one's enemies.

The work survives complete in a 10th cent. MS. in the British Museum (Cotton Caligula A. VII); a 9th cent. MS. at Munich has two lacunae; there are also 9th cent. fragments at Prague and the Vatican, the latter also containing a fragment of a Genesis in the same style but by a later poet. Editio princeps by J. A. Schmeller at Munich, 1830, with crit. apparatus as 'Lieferung 2', ib., 1840. Other edd. by E. Sievers (Halle, 1878), O. Behaghel (ib., 1882; ed. 6, 1948, with bibl.), and P. Piper (Stuttgart, 1897; with Gen. fragments). Modern Eng. tr. of the text by Mariana Scott (University of North Carolina Studies in the Germanic Languages and Literatures, lii [1966]). Study of the British Museum MS. by R. Priebsch (Oxford, 1925). J. K. Bostock, A Handbook of Old German Literature (Oxford, 1955), pp. 141–65, with reff. to further bibl.

HELKESAITES. See Elkesaites.

HELL. The word 'hell' is used in English translations of the Bible to represent both the Hebrew '*Sheol, (q.v.), meaning the place of the departed, and the Greek 'Gehenna' (q.v.), which came to denote the divinely ordained place of punishment for the wicked after death. In Christian theology it normally signifies the place or state to which unrepentant sinners are held to pass after this life, whereas the redeemed go either to *Purgatory (q.v.) or direct to *Heaven (q.v.). Its character is inferred from Biblical teaching, esp. Christ's words in the Gospels about the fate of those who refuse the opportunity of entering the Kingdom of Heaven (cf. Matt. 13. 42; 25. 30, 41). In Rev. the 'second death' (2. 11; 20. 14, etc.) is depicted symbolically as the fate of being cast into a 'lake which burneth with fire and brimstone' (21. 8; cf. 19. 20, 20. 10). From such texts as this, often understood over-literally, the popular idea of hell was derived.

It is clear that in the NT Hell in this sense is an ultimate state or destiny into which souls pass only by God's final and irrevocable judgement, whether that is conceived as the *Particular Judgement at death or the *General Judgement on the last day. Acc. to the traditional Scholastic theology, souls experience in Hell both the poena damni, i.e. the exclusion from God's presence and loss of all contact with Him, and a certain poena sensus, denoted in the Bible by fire, which is usually interpreted as an external agent tormenting them. Modern theology tends rather to stress the fact that Hell is but the logical consequence of ultimate adherence to the soul's own will and rejection of the will of God, which (since God cannot take away free will) necessarily separates the soul from God, and hence from all possibility of happiness. This exclusion from Heaven (in which the unrepentant person would from his very character be both unable and unwilling to share) is held to be contrary neither to God's justice nor to His love, since He will not force response to the good from any creature against his will.

See also Descent of Christ into Hell.

HELVETIC CONFESSIONS, The. Two important Reformation Confessions of Faith.

(1) First Helvetic Confession (also known as the 'Second Confession of *Basle'). It was compiled at Basle in 1536 by J. H. *Bullinger of Zürich, *Myconius and Grynaeus of Basle, and others, after much dissension, esp. on the Eucharist, as a uniform confession of faith for the whole of Switzerland. Its basis was *Zwinglian, but it contained a considerable *Lutheran element. It was accepted by all the Protestant Swiss cantons but rejected by Strassburg and Constance.

(2) Second Helvetic Confession. This was the work of J. H. Bullinger, who made an early draft of it in 1562. It was issued in 1566 in response to a request from the Elector-Palatine, *Frederick III ('the Pious'), who had announced his definite adhesion to *Calvinism. It is among the longest of the Reformation Confessions, in places taking on the character of a theological treatise. Its teaching is mainly Calvinist, with some Zwinglian elements. It soon won acceptance not only in all the Swiss Protestant Churches, but also among the 'Reformed' (i.e. Calvinists) outside Switzerland.

(1) Latin and German text in P. *Schaff, Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 211–31; Eng. tr. in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 97–111.
(2) Latin text in P. Schaff, Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 233–306; Eng. tr. in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 220–301.

HELVIDIUS (4th cent.). A Latin theologian who was attacked by St. *Jerome for his denial of the perpetual virginity of the BVM. His underlying motive seems to have been the defence of marriage against the prevalent exaltation of virginity. Helvidius declared that the *Brethren of the Lord were the natural sons of Joseph and Mary. Jerome replied in his De perpetua virginitate B. Mariae adversus Helvidium that they were the sons of another Mary, the wife of Alphaeus and the sister of the Virgin. Acc. to St. *Augustine (De haer., 84), he won disciples who were known as 'Helvidians'.

Helvidius's tract has not survived. Jerome's reply is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxiii, 185–206. Bardenhewer, iii, p. 631. G. Jouassard, 'La Personnalité d'Helvidius' in Mélanges J. Saunier (Bibliothèque de la Faculté Catholique des Lettres de Lyon, iii; 1944), pp. 139–56.

HELWYS, THOMAS (c. 1550–c. 1616), English *Baptist divine. Of a Nottinghamshire family, he studied at Gray's Inn. In 1608 he emigrated to Holland with J. *Smyth and became a member of the *Brownist Church at Amsterdam. Here, like Smyth, he became convinced that 'Infant Baptism' was not baptism at all, and accordingly received baptism at Smyth's hands. In consequence, when he and Smyth were excommunicated (1609), he joined Smyth's separate community at Amsterdam, the first Baptist Church to come into being. In 1612, feeling it his duty no longer to absent himself from the dangers of persecution, he returned to London, where he founded the first *General Baptist congregation in England at Pinners' Hall, London, and met with remarkable success as a preacher. Opposition was aroused, however, when he began to put into circulation his Declaration of the Mystery of Iniquity, which, written and printed in Holland (1611–12), contained the first sustained plea by an English divine for universal religious toleration and a denial of the right of the State to legislate on matters which concern a man's relation to God. There seems to be no record of the circumstances of Helwys's death.

A facsimile ed. of The Mystery of Iniquity was publd. for the Baptist Historical Society (London, 1935), with introd. by H. Wheeler *Robinson, pp. iii–xv. W. H. Burgess, John Smith, the Se-Baptist, Thomas Helwys and the First Baptist Church in England (1911), pp. 107–296 passim. W. T. Whitley, 'Thomas Helwys of Gray's Inn and of Broxtowe Hall, Nottingham' in Baptist Quarterly, N.S., vii (1935), pp. 241–54. A. C. Bickley in D.N.B., xxv (1891), p. 375 f. See also works cited under Baptists.

HEMEROBAPTISTS (Gk. ἡμέρα, 'day', and βαπτιστής, 'baptist'), a Jewish sect for which daily ablution was an essential part of religion. Acc. to *Epiphanius (Haer., i. 17) their doctrines were similar to those of the *Pharisees, except that they denied the resurrection. The sect is mentioned by *Hegesippus (Eus., H.E., IV. xxii) and *Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Tryph., 80). The Clementine Recognitions* (ii. 23) state that *John the Baptist was a Hemerobaptist. J. B. *Lightfoot (Col., p. 402) identified them with the Hebrew sect of Toble-shacharith ('morning bathers').

HEMMERLIN, FELIX, also 'Hemerli' (c. 1388–c. 1460), also 'Malleolus', reformer. A native of Zürich, he studied canon law at Erfurt (1406–8 and 1413–18) and *Bologna (1408–12 and 1423–4) and states that he was present at the Council of *Constance (1415). In 1421 he became provost at St. Ursus at Solothurn, where he revised the statutes of his collegiate clergy and defended their rights against the municipality. From now on he loudly advocated reforms of all kinds, e.g. suppression of concubinage and simony and reduction of feast-days; and he also attacked the *Mendicant Orders and the *Lollards. He appears to have been a man of small stature, quarrelsome, and in some matters extremely superstitious (defence of cultus of relics). In 1428 he was made Cantor of the Stift at Zürich, and from 1429 onwards he appears as a canon of St. Moritz at Zofingen. In his later years he took a prominent part in politics, supporting the alliance of Zürich with Austria against the Swiss Confederation, which he attacked violently in Dialogus de Nobilitate et Rusticitate (c. 1452). On the reconciliation of Zürich with the Swiss in 1456 he was condemned to the loss of his ecclesiastical offices and perpetual imprisonment. He spent his last years in mild captivity with the *Franciscans at Lucerne. He was the author of over thirty polemical works.

A collection of his writings was publd. by S. Brandt at Basle c. 1497. Studies by B. Reber (Zürich, 1846) and H. Walser (ib., 1940). A. Schneider in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 656–9, s.v. 'Hemerli', with bibl.; H. Tüchle in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 227 f., s.v., with further reff.

HENDERSON, ALEXANDER (c. 1583–1646), Scottish Covenanting leader. As an Episcopalian he obtained a professorship at St. Andrews, and in 1611 or 1612 was appointed to the parish of Leuchars in Fifeshire. By 1618 he was sufficiently in sympathy with *Presbyterianism to oppose the Articles of *Perth, and later offered strong resistance to the Prayer Book of 1637. He was mainly responsible for drafting the *National Covenant of 1638, became Moderator of the Assembly which met at Glasgow in Nov. 1638, and in Jan. 1639 was inducted to Greyfriars, Edinburgh. During the *Bishops' Wars of 1639–40 he was the recognized leader of the Scottish Presbyterians, and even *Charles I, on his visit to Scotland in 1641, was forced to accept him as his chaplain and Dean of the Chapel Royal. In 1643 he went to Oxford in a vain attempt at mediation between King and Parliament, while in the following months he prepared the draft of the *Solemn League and Covenant for both Scotland and England (1643) and of the Directory for Public *Worship (1644). In 1646 he spent the last months of his life debating the presbyterian and episcopal systems of Church government with the King.

J. Aiton, The Life and Times of Alexander Henderson (1836); T. McCrie and T. Thomson, Lives of Alexander Henderson and James Guthrie (1846), pp. 1–140; G. W. Thomson, Alexander Henderson. A Biography (1883); R. L. Orr, Alexander Henderson, Churchman and Statesman (1919). There is also a short sketch by J. B. Salmond–G. H. Bushnell, Henderson's Benefaction (St. Andrews, 1942), issued to mark the third centenary of his donation of £1,000 to found the University Library at St. Andrews.

HENGSTENBERG, ERNST WILHELM (1802–1869), Biblical exegete. From 1828 till his death he was professor of theology at Berlin. He was brought up in a rationalist atmosphere, then fell under *Pietist influences in 1823–4, and from c. 1840 accounted himself an orthodox Lutheran. As editor from 1827 to 1869 of the Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, which he had himself founded, he possessed an influential organ in which he attacked the theology of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and other unorthodox systems. His works include many commentaries on OT and NT books, some of which were translated into English.

J. Bachmann–T. Schmalenbach, E. W. Hengstenberg. Sein Leben und Wirken nach gedruckten und ungedruckten Quellen (3 vols., 1876–92). J. Bachmann in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 670–4, s.v.

HENOTHEISM (Gk. εἷς, ἑνός, 'one', and θεός, 'god'). A term first employed by F. *Max Müller in 1860 for a primitive form of faith which, as distinct from *monotheism (belief in the existence of a single god) and monolatry (restriction of worship to a single god), recognizes the existence of several gods, but regards one particular god as the deity of the family or tribe; makes him the centre of its worship; and in its relations with him neglects for practical purposes the existence of others. It thus stands mid-way between polytheism and monotheism. Modern scholars commonly hold that the early Hebrew faith in *Yahweh (down to the 8th cent. B.C. or later) took this form.

HENOTICON (Gk. ἑνωτικόν). The theological formula put forward in 482 to secure union between the *Monophysites and the Orthodox and sponsored by the Emp. *Zeno. It was apparently the work chiefly of Acacius, Patr. of *Constantinople, and *Peter Mongo, Patr. of *Alexandria. Though it condemned both *Nestorius and *Eutyches, by its assertion that the orthodox faith was epitomized in the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed together with the Twelve Anathemas of St. *Cyril of Alexandria, and by its omission of all reference to the burning question of the number of 'natures' in Christ, it really made important concessions to Monophysitism. It was widely accepted in the East, but never countenanced at Rome.

Text in *Evagrius, H.E., iii. 14 (PG, lxxxvi, 2620–25). Crit. ed. by E. *Schwartz in Codex Vaticanus gr. 1431. Eine antichalkedonische Sammlung aus der Zeit Kaiser Zenos (Abh. (Bayr.), xxxii, Hft. 6 [1927], pp. 52–4); Lat. tr. in Liberatus's Breviarium, pr. ib., pp. 54–6. E. Schwartz, Publizistische Sammlungen zum acacianischen Schisma (Abh. (Bayr.), N.F., Hft. 10, 1934), esp. pp. 182–218. S. Salaville, A.A., 'L'Affaire de l'hénotique ou le premier schisme byzantin au Ve siècle' in É.O., xviii (1918), pp. 255–66, 389–97; xix (1920), pp. 49–68. Further bibl. in A. Grillmeier, S.J.–H. Bacht, S.J. (edd.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, ii (1953), p. 120, note 14. 'L.' Salaville, A.A., in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2153–78, s.v. 'Hénotique', with bibl.

HENRICIANS. A medieval heretical sect which arose at Tours in the 12th cent. under the inspiration of *Henry of Lausanne (q.v.). They seem to have been closely connected with the followers of *Peter de Bruys (q.v.).

HENRIETTA MARIA (1609–66). The Queen of *Charles I and daughter of *Henry IV of France. She married Charles in 1625, on condition that the penal laws against RCs were suspended and that the Queen be allowed free exercise of her religion. After the assassination of Buckingham in 1628, the Queen acquired great influence over Charles. She irritated the country by allowing her court to become the focus of RC intrigues, and it was probably her advice that led Charles to his more despotic acts, e.g. his attempt to arrest the Five Members in 1642. During the Civil War she increased her unpopularity by attempting to raise money and forces for the King from France. She finally left Charles for France in Apr. 1644, where she remained until after the Restoration, when Somerset House was given her for a residence.

Mary A. E. Green (ed.), Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria (1857); le Comte [C.] de Baillon, Henriette-Marie de France, reine d'Angleterre. Étude historique . . . suivie de ses lettres inédites (1877); H. Ferrero (ed.), Lettres de Henriette-Marie de France, reine d'Angleterre, à sa sœur Christine, duchesse de Savoie (Estratto dalla Miscellanea di Storia italiana, Ser. II, v; 1881). C. Cotolendi, La Vie de très-haute et très-puissante Princesse Henriette-Marie de France, reine de la Grand'Bretagne (1690). I[da] A. Taylor, The Life of Queen Henrietta Maria (2 vols., 1905). Other lives by Henrietta Haynes (London, 1912), Carola Oman (ib., 1936) and Janet Mackay (ib., 1939). S. R. Gardiner in D.N.B., xxv (1891), pp. 429–36.

HENRY II, St. (972–1024), German king and Holy Roman Emperor. The son of Henry, Duke of Bavaria ('the Quarrelsome'), he succeeded his cousin Otto III as Emperor in 1002, intent on consolidating the political unity of Germany. In his earlier years he was involved in constant warfare first against attacks from the East and then in Lombardy, where he defeated Arduin of Ivrea. In 1006 he created and richly endowed the new see of Bamberg, largely to effect the Germanization of the Wends. He was crowned by Benedict VIII on 14 Feb. 1014 during an expedition to Rome. His frequent and often high-handed interference in Church affairs issued in many disputes with the ecclesiastical leaders in his domains, though he commonly had the political support of Rome. In his later years he became an active supporter of the *Cluniac reform. In 1021, on a last journey to Rome, he assisted in preparations for ending the Greek supremacy in Italy. Later legends saw in him a monarch of outstanding piety and asceticism. He was canonized in 1146. Feast day, 13 (formerly 15) July. (His wife, Cunegund, was canonized in 1200; feast day, 3 Mar.)

H. Bresslau–H. Bloch–M. Meyer–R. Holtzmann (edd.), Die Urkunden Heinrichs II und Arduins (M.G.H., Diplomata Regum et Imperatorum Germaniae, iii, 1900–3, with 'Nachträgen zu den Urkunden Heinrichs II' in iv (1909), pp. 419–32 and 552). AA.SS., Jul. III (1723), pp. 711–93; crit. text of life by Adalbold, O.S.B., Bp. of Utrecht, 1010–27, ed. G. Waitz, M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), pp. 679–95, and of mid. 12th cent. life by Adalbert, deacon of Bamberg, ib., pp. 789–816, with 'Additamentum', pp. 816–820, and of Vita Sanctae Cunegundis, with miracles, pp. 821–8. S. Hirsch, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich II (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 3 vols. in 2, 1862–75). Modern lives by H. Lesêtre ('Les Saints'; 1899) and H. Günter (Sammlung illustrierter Heiligenleben, i; 1904). H. L. Mikoletzky, Kaiser Heinrich II und die Kirche (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, viii; 1951), with bibl. H. Bloch, 'Die Urkunden Kaiser Heinrichs II für Kloster Michelsberg zu Bamberg' in N.A., xix (1894), pp. 603–49. Renate Klauser, Der Heinrichs- und Kunigundenkult im mittelalterlichen Bistum Bamberg (Bamberg, 1957). Further study of the development of his cult in Basel by C. Pfaff (Basel, 1963).

HENRY IV (1050–1106), German King and Holy Roman Emperor. He succeeded to the throne in 1056 and was declared of age in 1065. His reign was beset with difficulties owing to the rebellious Saxon princes on the one hand and the reforms of Pope *Gregory VII on the other. Gregory prohibited *simony and lay *investiture, which had hitherto enabled the Emperors to appoint to the highest ecclesiastical posts men devoted to the Imperial interests. Henry, having conquered the Saxons in 1075, refused obedience to the Pope and answered the threat of excommunication by declaring Gregory deposed. Thereupon Gregory carried out his threat and released Henry's subjects from their oath of allegiance. The King's position having become desperate when the Saxons rose again and the princes refused obedience unless he was reconciled to the Pope, Henry submitted at *Canossa in 1077 and, having done solemn penance, was freed from excommunication and returned to Germany. The peace between Pope and King was, however, short-lived. Three years later Henry was again excommunicated, but set up an *antipope, Clement III, who crowned him Emperor in 1084. Gregory died the next year, but his successor *Urban II carried on the struggle. The last years of Henry's reign were filled with revolts, two of his sons became rebels, and only his premature death saved Germany from civil war. Under his successor, Henry V (1098–1125), the investiture conflict ended in the compromise of the Concordat of *Worms (1122).

Constitutiones ed. G. H. Pertz in M.H.G., Leges, ii (1837), pp. 44–62; mostly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cli, 1125–66; D. v. Gladiss (ed.), Die Urkunden Heinrichs IV (M.G.H., Diplomata Regum et Imperatorum Germaniae, vi; 2 pts., 1952–3). C. Erdmann (ed.), Die Briefe Heinrichs IV (Deutsches Mittelalter, i; 1937). 'Vita Henrici IV Imperatoris', ed. W. Wattenbach in M.G.H., xii (1856), pp. 268–83. S. Hellmann, 'Die Vita Henrici IV. und die kaiserliche Kanzlei' in Historische Vierteljahrschrift, xxviii (1934), pp. 273–334. G. Meyer von Knonau, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. und Heinrich V., vols. i–v (1890–1904). E. Höhne, Kaiser Heinrich IV. Sein Leben und seine Kämpfe (1056–1106) nach dem Urteile seiner deutschen Zeitgenossen (1906). B. Schmeidler, Kaiser Heinrich IV. und seine Helfer im Investiturstreit (1927). H. F. Haefele, Fortuna Heinrich IV. Imperatoris. Untersuchungen zur Lebenschreibung des dritten Saliers (Graz-Cologne, 1954). H. M. Schaller in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 180 f., s.v. 'Heinrich IV', with bibl. See also bibl. to Canossa.

HENRY IV (1553–1610), King of France. Brought up as a Protestant, he became King of Navarre in 1572. He took part in the wars of religion on the Protestant side, and, on the assassination of Henry III in 1589, inherited the crown of France. But his Protestantism made him unacceptable to the Catholic League, which was supported by *Philip II of Spain and the Pope; and though he defeated the Guise party in the field he was not recognized as king until his conversion to Catholicism in 1593. Opinion is now decidedly against the popular legend that this was a merely political move ('Paris vaut bien une messe'). His lengthy discussions with theologians previous to his submission, together with his protestations that 'Religion is not changed as easily as a shirt', are considered sufficient proof of his sincerity. It was not until 1595, however, after many difficulties, esp. from Philip II, that the Pope solemnly absolved Henry from the crime of heresy. In 1598 the King promulgated the Edict of *Nantes, which gave freedom of worship to the Protestants in recognized places and permitted them to garrison certain towns as a security for its maintenance. By extending the powers of the crown Henry tried to restore prosperity to his country. The lines of his domestic and foreign policy were later continued by A. J. *Richelieu. He was assassinated by the fanatic Ravaillac on 14 May 1610.

M. Berger de Xivrey–J. Guadet (edd.), Recueil des lettres missives de Henri IV (Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France, publiés par ordre du Roi et par les soins du Ministre de l'Instruction Publique, 9 vols., 1843–76). There is also a small modern collection of his letters and speeches publd. in the series 'Les Cahiers de l'Unité française' ed. by J. and R. Wittmann, xii (1941). B. Barbiche (ed.), Lettres de Henri IV concernant les relations du Saint-Siège et de la France 1595–1609 (S.T., ccl; 1968). N. Valois (ed.), Inventaire des arrêts du Conseil d'État (règne de Henri IV) (2 vols., 1886–93). There is a vast literature on Henry IV. Older Eng. works include Martha W. Freer, History of the Reign of Henry IV, King of France and Navarre (3 pts., 6 vols., 1860–3) and P. F. Willert, Henry of Navarre and the Huguenots in France ('Heroes of the Nations'; 1893). J. H. Mariéjol in E. Lavisse, Histoire de France, vi (pt. 1; 1904), pp. 303–423 and (pt. 2; 1904) pp. 1–140, with full bibl. reff.; S. Leathes in C.M.H., iii (1904), ch. xx, 'Henry IV of France', pp. 657–95, with full bibl. to date, pp. 860–6. More recent works include P. de Vaissière, Henri IV (1925); M. Reinhard, Henri IV ou la France sauvée (1943); R. Ritter, Henri IV lui-même. L'Homme (1944). P. Feret, Henri IV et l'Église catholique (1875); M. Brouard, 'Sixte-Quint, Henri IV et la Ligue. La Légation du Cardinal Caetani en France (1589–1590)' in R.Q.H., cxvi (1932), pp. 59–140, with docc. R. Mousnier, L'Assassinat d'Henri IV (1964; Eng. tr., 1973). On the reign there is a good account in D. Buisseret, Sully, and the Growth of Centralized Government in France, 1598–1610 (1968). See also works cited under Nantes, Edict of.

HENRY VI (1421–71), King of England. He succeeded his father, Henry V, in 1422. During his minority England was ruled by a Council, the King's protector being John, Duke of Bedford, and his first spiritual guide the *Carmelite theologian, Thomas *Netter. He was crowned King of England in 1429 and King of France in 1431. Throughout his reign the difficulties in France increased, and the situation in England was unsettled, chiefly through differences between the Duke of Gloucester and Richard of York and popular opposition to Card. H. *Beaufort's peace policy. After Beaufort's death (1447) Suffolk became the chief power, but he was supplanted by Richard of York in 1450. The birth of a son to Henry, in 1453, excluded Richard from the succession. About the same time the King was seized with an attack of mental derangement, during which Richard governed. After his recovery war broke out between York and Edmund Beaufort, Duke of Somerset (1406–55), ending with the latter's defeat in 1455. It was resumed in 1459, and in 1460 Henry was taken prisoner and compelled to declare York his heir. After Richard's death (1460) he was freed, but Edward of York made himself king and Henry lived as an exile in Scotland. In 1465 he was captured and imprisoned in the Tower, until, in 1470, Warwick restored him to the throne. After six months, however, he was once more confined to the Tower, where he was murdered.

Henry VI was a deeply religious man, but too generous and trusting to be a successful ruler in his troubled age. He often sought refreshment in religious houses and gave much time to prayer and pious works. He was passionately devoted to the encouragement of learning, and was the founder of Eton and of King's College, Cambridge (1440 and 1441). The report of many miracles at his tomb at the *Benedictine monastery of Chertsey in Surrey soon made it a place of pilgrimage; and though Richard III had his body removed to St. George's Chapel, *Windsor, he was unable to put a stop to the popular devotion. Henry VII petitioned Innocent VIII and *Alexander VI for his canonization, and in modern times renewed efforts have been made to this end.

J. Stevenson (ed.), Letters and Papers Illustrative of the Wars of the English in France during the Reign of Henry the Sixth (Rolls Series, 2 vols. bound in 3; 1861–4). Memoir of Henry VI by John Blacman, his confessor, orig. publ. London, 1510, repr. mainly from text of T. *Hearne, 1732, by M. R. James (Cambridge, 1919). The Lat. account of his miracles in Brit. Mus. Royal MS. 13. C. VIII, written c. 1500, ed. R. [A.] *Knox–S. Leslie, with introd. and Eng. tr. (Cambridge, 1923); crit. ed. by P. Grosjean, S.J. (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxii; 1935). M. E. Christie, Henry VI ('Kings and Queens of England'; 1922). F. A. *Gasquet, The Religious Life of King Henry VI (1923). T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xlvi (1891), pp. 56–69.

HENRY VIII (1491–1547), King of England from 22 Apr. 1509. The second son of Henry VII, he was born at Greenwich, where he was baptized by R. *Fox in the Church of the Friars *Observants. He was precocious as a child, readily susceptible to the cultural influence of the Renaissance, and learned to speak Latin, French, and Spanish easily. He was also an accomplished musician, even if not (as traditionally supposed) the author of the anthem 'O Lord, Maker of all Things'. The story, first met with in P. *Sarpi and repeated by Lord *Herbert of Cherbury, that Henry was originally destined for an ecclesiastical career is without foundation. Nevertheless he had great theological interests. From an early date he opposed the Reforming Movement and his Assertio Septem Sacramentorum (1521), directed against M. *Luther, won for him from *Leo X on 11 Oct. 1521 the title of '*Defender of the Faith'. Throughout his life he showed zeal in the outward practices of religion.

In the opening years of Henry's reign, England under T. *Wolsey's able management played a prominent, if expensive, part in European affairs. In 1525 the balance of power was lost when *Charles V captured Francis I at Pavia. Two years later Henry took the first steps to dissolve his marriage with Catherine of Aragon (b. Dec. 1485), the widow of his elder brother, Arthur, which had taken place by papal dispensation on 11 June 1509. The only one of Catherine's children to survive infancy was a daughter, *Mary, and Henry became increasingly anxious about the Tudor succession. He had already conceived a strong passion for Anne Boleyn, who was determined to become his acknowledged queen. A collusive inquiry, held by Wolsey as Legate and W. *Warham as assessor, on the grounds of supposed doubts as to Mary's legitimacy, resulted only in eliciting from Catherine a solemn statement that her first marriage had never been consummated. Henry next sent his secretary, William Knight, to Rome to sue *Clement VII for a decree of nullity and the removal of any impediments to Henry's marriage with Anne arising from his unlawful connexions with her elder sister, but Knight succeeded only in obtaining a conditional dispensation for a new marriage. Proceedings continued in England before Wolsey and L. *Campeggio as papal commissioners until in July 1529 Clement revoked the cause to Rome, partly to give Catherine facilities lacking in England. The fall of Wolsey followed inevitably and Henry, unprepared to answer a citation outside his own realm, turned to the repudiation of papal authority.

In the autumn of 1529 T. Cranmer, then a Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, suggested that the universities of Europe should be consulted on the theological, and not merely the canonical, issues of the divorce; and favourable opinions were soon obtained from seats of learning outside Charles V's dominions. Henry's statesmanship prompted him to associate his people with himself in establishing the new order by summoning Parliament to pass Acts designed to put pressure on the Pope and ultimately to transfer the headship of the Church in England to himself. But the clergy were subjected to repressive measures. In 1531 they were accused of having committed breaches of praemunire by illegally exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the land, and secured pardon only by the payment of a large fine and Convocation's recognition of the Royal Supremacy. In 1532 followed the Commons' 'Supplication against the Ordinaries', the answer of the Ordinaries, the acceptance by Convocation on 15 May of the '*Submission of the Clergy' and the passing of the Act in restraint of *Annates and first-fruits. Shortly after Abp. Warham's death (August 1532), Cranmer was appointed his successor. The necessary bulls having been obtained from the Pope in return for withholding the royal assent to the Act against Annates, consecration took place in April 1533. An Act forbidding appeals to Rome in matrimonial and certain other causes having been passed, Henry agreed that the Archbishop should summon Catherine and himself to Dunstable, where (in the absence of Catherine, who was pronounced contumacious for her non-appearance) Cranmer gave judgement on 23 May that the marriage was invalid. Five days later, at Lambeth, Henry was pronounced to be lawfully married to Anne Boleyn, who was crowned Queen on 1 June. By a Bull of 11 July Clement VII excommunicated Henry and declared his divorce and remarriage null. In the following year Parliament passed Acts for the Submission of the Clergy, for the regulation of ecclesiastical appointments, for the absolute restraint of appeals, as well as forbidding the payment of *Peter's Pence and transferring dispensing powers to the see of Canterbury. The first Act of Succession entailed the Crown on Anne Boleyn's children, imposing an oath which men of the stamp of T. *More and J. *Fisher could not take. Their execution in 1535 was universally mourned.

The *Dissolution of the Monasteries (1536 and 1539) and the transfer of their wealth won for the monarchy the support of the beneficiaries and brought some replenishment to the royal coffers. Six new bishoprics (*Westminster, *Gloucester, *Peterborough, *Oxford, *Chester, Bristol) were founded and education and the navy derived some benefit. Considerable opposition was aroused among the people by the suppression; the *Pilgrimage of Grace in the North in 1536 was a formidable rising, suppressed only by trickery.

By countenancing the *Ten Articles (1536) and the order that the English Bible should be set up in churches (1538) Henry seems for a brief space to have shown a measure of tolerance for Protestantism. His readiness to make overtures to *Lutheranism, admittedly under political necessity, were reflected in the events which led to his marriage to Anne of Cleves (6 Jan. 1540). But a halt was soon called. The *Six Articles (June 1539) reaffirmed Catholic doctrine under the threat of severe penalties (H. *Latimer and N. *Shaxton resigned their bishoprics), and Henry's repudiation of Protestantism was symbolized by his marriage to Catherine Howard (8 Aug. 1540). The last years of his reign were marked by some attempts at promoting religious reforms, while maintaining the substance of traditional Catholicism. 1543 saw the formal authorization of the *Sarum use throughout the kingdom and also the issue of the *King's Book (q.v.). In 1544 the *Litany (in English) was issued and in 1545 an Act passed suppressing chantries and other similar foundations. At the same time, though there was spasmodic and selective persecution of Protestants, incl. Anne *Askew, who was burnt in 1546 on account of her views on the Eucharist, on the Council Henry maintained a balance between Catholic and Protestant sympathizers and he entrusted the education of the future *Edward VI to Protestants. It was not until after the death of Henry VIII on 28 Jan. 1547 that in the next reign doctrinal Protestantism became the official ecclesiastical policy.

Documentary evidence in Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII, vols. i–iv ed. J. S. Brewer (1862–75); vols. v–xxi ed. J. *Gairdner and R. H. Brodie (1880–1907). Relevant section of Edward Hall's Chronicle (1548), ed. C. Whibley (2 vols., 1904). J. S. Brewer (ed. J. Gairdner), The Reign of Henry VIII from his Accession to the Death of Wolsey (2 vols., 1884). A. F. Pollard, Henry VIII (1902). C. Fatta, Il regno di Enrico VIII d'Inghilterra (1936; esp. for diplomacy). J. Bowle, Henry VIII. A Biography (1965); J. J. Scarisbrick, Henry VIII (London, 1968). G. Constant, La Réforme en Angleterre, i. Le schisme anglican. Henry VIII (1509–1547) (1930; Eng. tr., 1934). H. Maynard Smith, Henry VIII and the Reformation (1948). N. S. Tjernagel, Henry VIII and the Lutherans. A Study in Anglo-Lutheran Relations from 1521 to 1547 (St. Louis, Mo., 1965). G. de C. Parmiter, The King's Great Matter. A Study of Anglo-Papal Relations 1527–1534 (1967). G. R. Elton, The Tudor Revolution in Government. Administrative Changes in the Reign of Henry VIII (Cambridge, 1953). Id., Henry VIII. An Essay in Revision (Historical Association Pamphlet, 51, 1965). Life of Catherine of Aragon by G. Mattingly (London, 1942). J. Gairdner in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), pp. 76–94. See also bibl. to Dissolution of the Monasteries.

HENRY BEAUFORT. See Beaufort, Henry.

HENRY OF BLOIS (d. 1171), Bp. of *Winchester. The grandson of William the Conqueror and brother of King Stephen, he was brought up at *Cluny, which imbued him with high ideals of religious discipline and of the rights of the Church. In 1126 Henry I made him Abbot of *Glastonbury, which he ruled impeccably for forty-five years, and in 1129 Bp. of Winchester; by a Papal dispensation, he held both offices together. In 1135 he crowned Stephen. After the death of Abp. William of Corbeil (1136), he hoped for the see of *Canterbury; but it was granted to *Theobald (1139). In the same year, however, Innocent II granted Henry of Blois a legatine commission which made him in some matters the Archbishop's superior. In the Chronicles he is termed 'lord of England'. After Stephen's capture at the Battle of Lincoln (1141), Henry deserted Stephen's cause and declared for Matilda, accompanying her to London for the coronation (which never took place); but finding his assistance unwanted, he returned to Stephen's side and made formal profession of loyalty at a Council in London (Dec. 1141). Until his legatine powers terminated on Innocent's death (1143) he continued to oppose Abp. Theobald, one of his chief endeavours being the elevation of Winchester to an archiepiscopal see (with the seven suffragan sees of *Salisbury, *Exeter, *Wells, *Chichester, *Hereford and *Worcester and a newly created see of Hyde Abbey). After Stephen's death (Oct. 1154) he gave Henry II his support and in the *Becket controversy sought to mediate between King and Archbishop.

Henry was a great builder. He much extended the fabric at Glastonbury; built several castles, including Farnham and Wolvesey; and founded the monastery of St. Cross at Winchester (enlarged by Card. Henry *Beaufort). He was also a munificent benefactor to Cluny. His high character won the esteem of such men as *Peter the Venerable, Becket, and *John of Salisbury.

L. Voss, Heinrich von Blois, Bischof von Winchester, 1129–71 (Historische Studien, Hft. ccx; 1932), with bibl. M. D. Knowles, The Episcopal Colleagues of Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures for 1949; 1951), pp. 34–7 and passim. H. W. C. Davis in D.E.C.H. (1912), p. 264 f., s.v.

HENRY BRADSHAW SOCIETY. The Society founded in 1890 in memory of Henry Bradshaw (1831–86), librarian of the university of Cambridge, 'for the purpose of printing liturgical MSS. and rare editions of service books and illustrative documents, on an historical and scientific basis, preference being given to those which bear upon the history of the Book of Common Prayer or of the Church of England'. Its publications include many important works, among them *The Manner of the *Coronation of King Charles I, 1626 (for 1892), the Bangor Antiphonarium* (for 1892, 1895), the Gregorian Sacramentary* (for 1915), the Bobbio Missal* (for 1917, 1918, 1923), the Monastic Breviary of Hyde Abbey (for 1930, 1931, 1932, 1937, 1939 and 1941–2) and the Psalter Collects from the papers of A. *Wilmart (for 1947–8).

'Eleven Letters from Henry Bradshaw to S. W. Lawley', ed. F. Jenkinson in Fasciculus Ioanni Willis Clark Dicatus (Cambridge, 1909), pp. 115–34. G. W. Prothero, A Memoir of Henry Bradshaw (1888). J. S. Crone, Henry Bradshaw. His Life and Work (Lecture; Dublin [1931]).

HENRY OF GHENT (d. 1293), 'De Gandavo', 'Doctor solemnis', theologian. He became a canon at Tournai (1267), and later archdeacon successively of Bruges (1276) and Tournai (1278); but little is known of his life. He was one of the chief representatives among the secular clergy of *Augustinianism, which he defended in his disputations at *Paris university. In 1282 he took part in the fight against the privileges of the Mendicant Orders. In his two most important works, the 'Quodlibeta' and the unfinished 'Summa theologica', he treated of most of the theological and philosophical questions discussed in the Schools, opposing both St. *Thomas Aquinas and *Siger of Brabant in his attempt to combine the old Augustinianism with the new Aristotelian teaching. As against St. Thomas, he held that the 'principle of individuation' was not 'matter' but 'negation'. His teaching was later attacked by *Duns Scotus and *William of Occam. His rejection of the species intelligibiles was destined to exercise great influence on later epistemological theory.

M. de Wulf, Histoire de la philosophie scolastique dans les Pays-Bas et dans la principauté de Liége (Mémoires couronnés et autres mémoires publiés par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, li; 1895), pp. 46–272. E. Hocedez, S.J., 'Gilles de Rome et Henri de Gand sur la Distinction Réelle (1276–87)' in Gregorianum, viii (1927), pp. 358–84; id., 'Le Premier Quodlibet d'Henri de Gand (1276)', ib., ix (1928), pp. 92–117. J. Paulus, Henri de Gand. Essai sur les tendances de sa métaphysique (Études de Philosophie médiévale, xxv; 1938), with bibl. E. Bettoni, O.F.M., Il processo astrattivo nella concezione di Enrico di Gand (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Nuova Serie, xlvii [1954]); J. Gómez Caffarena, S.J., Ser participado y ser subsistente en la metafísica de Enrique de Gante (Analecta Gregoriana, xciii; 1958); J. M. R. Belloso, La visión de Dios según Enrique de Gante (Seminario Conciliar de Barcelona. Colectanea san Paciano, Serie Teológica, vii; 1960); F. A. Prezioso, La Critica di Duns Scoto all'Ontologismo di Enrico di Gand (Pubblicazioni dell'Instituto Universitario di Magistero di Catania, Serie filosofica, xxvi; 1961). A. C. Pegis, 'Toward a New Way to God: Henry of Ghent' in Mediaeval Studies, xxx (1968), pp. 226–247, and xxxi (1969), pp. 93–116. J. Paulus in N.C.E., vi (1967), pp. 1035–7, s.v.; J. Ribaillier in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 197–210, s.v. 'Henri de Gand', with extensive bibl.

HENRY OF LAUSANNE (d. after 1145), medieval sectarian. Little is known of his life. He was probably a French monk who had left his monastery and may have been connected with *Cluny. He became an itinerant preacher and gave the Lenten sermons at Le Mans c. 1116 by permission of the bishop, *Hildebert of Lavardin. His invectives against the worldliness of the clergy and his insistence on the ideal of absolute poverty made him very popular. But he was expelled from the diocese on account of heretical teaching and continued his activities in the south of France. Acc. to St. *Bernard, he denied the objective efficacy of the Sacraments and made it dependent on the worthy character of the priest. In 1135 he was arrested and forced to recant at the Synod of Pisa, but soon resumed his anti-clerical preaching, strongly opposed by St. Bernard. He was arrested a second time c. 1145 and probably died soon after. He was in some respects a precursor of the *Waldensians.

St. Bernard, Ep. ccxli (J. P. Migne, PL, clxxxii, 434–6). Eng. tr. of primary material, with introd., in W. L. Wakefield–A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxxi; 1969), pp. 107–17, with notes p. 675 f. M. Esposito, 'Sur quelques écrits concernant les hérésies et les hérétiques aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles', I, 'Traité contre Henri l'Hérésiarque' in R.H.E., xxxvi (1940), p. 143 f. R. Manselli, 'Il monaco Enrico e la sua eresia' in Bullettino dell'Istituto storico italiano per il medio evo e Archivio Muratoriano, lxv (1953), pp. 1–63. F. Vernet in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2178–83, s.v. 'Henri, hérésiarque', with bibl.; R. Manselli in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), col. 220 f., s.v. 'Henri (30) dit de Lausanne'.

HENRY SUSO (c. 1295–1366), German mystic. Of noble family, Heinrich Seuse entered a *Dominican convent at Constance at the age of 13. After 15 years of moderate piety, he experienced a conversion. Some time between 1322 and 1325 he studied at Cologne under J. *Eckhart, for whom he developed a great admiration. He returned to Constance c. 1326 and about a year later wrote Das Büchlein der Wahrheit ('The Little Book of Truth'), a speculative treatment of mystical questions designed to combat what he regarded as the immoral tenets of the *Brethren of the Free Spirit. His defence of Eckhart brought him a rebuke from a provincial or possibly a general chapter of his Order and he was deprived of his professorship. He preached widely, esp. in Switzerland and the Upper Rhine area, and became a valued spiritual director in many women's convents, esp. those of the Dominican Order. In 1343–4 he was prior of the Constance community in exile at Diessenhoven. After some hostility, however, c. 1347 he was transferred to Ulm, where he remained for the rest of his life.

His principal work, Das Büchlein der ewigen Weisheit ('The Little Book of Eternal Wisdom') (c. 1328), is one of the classics of German mysticism. It is a practical meditation book, with little in the way of theoretical discussion, and concludes with a hundred brief meditations on the Passion. It was widely read in the 14th and 15th cent., and included *Thomas à Kempis among its admirers. Suso himself made a Latin adaptation entitled Horologium sapientiae (c. 1334). Other works attributed to him include four sermons (only two of which are genuine), some spiritual letters (surviving only in an abridged form), and a life of the Dominican nun, Elsbeth Stägel (c. 1300–60).

His veneration began shortly after his death; his beatification was approved by Pope *Gregory XVI in 1831. Feast day, 15 (formerly 2) Mar.

Collected ed. of original German Works publ. Augsburg, 1482; crit. ed. by K. Bihlmeyer (Stuttgart, 1907; repr. Frankfurt, 1961). Edd. in mod. German by M. Diepenbrock (Regensburg, 1829), H. S. *Denifle, O.P. (Munich, vol. i only publd., 1876–80) and N. Heller (Regensburg, 1926). Mod. Fr. trr. from the German by J. Ancelet-Hustache (Paris, 1943) and by B. Lavaud, O.P. (5 vols., ib., 1946–8). Eng. trr. of his autobiography by T. F. Knox, Cong. Orat. (London, 1865) and J. M. Clark (ib., 1952), and of the Little Book of Eternal Wisdom by C. H. McKenna, O.P. (ib., 1910), and, together with the Little Book of Truth, with introd. and notes by J. M. Clark (ib., 1953). C. Gröber, Der Mystiker Heinrich Seuse. Die Geschichte seines Lebens. Die Entstehung und Echtheit seiner Werke (1941). J. A. Bizet, Henri Suso et le déclin de la scolastique [1946]. E. M. Filthaut, O.P. (ed.), Heinrich Seuse. Studien zum 600. Todestag 1366–1966 (Cologne, 1966). Anne-Marie Holenstein-Hasler, 'Studien zur Vita Heinrich Seuses' in Zeitschrift für Schweizerische Kirchengeschichte, lxii (1968), pp. 185–332. J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (1949), pp. 54–74, with bibl. pp. 114–17. A. Walz, O.P., 'Bibliographiae susonianae conatus' in Angelicum, xlvi (1969), pp. 430–91. W. A. Hinnebusch in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 1043 f., s.v.; J. A. Bizet in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 234–57. s.v. 'Henri (43) Suso', with extensive bibl. Crit. ed. of Horologium Sapientiae by P. Künzle, O.P. (Spicilegium Friburgense, xxiii; 1977).

HENRY, MATTHEW (1662–1714), Nonconformist Biblical exegete. The son of Philip Henry, who was ejected in 1662 by the Act of *Uniformity, he began to study for the legal profession, but soon decided to devote himself to theology and resided at the Islington Academy under Thomas Doolittle from 1680 to 1682. From 1687 to 1712 he was Presbyterian Minister at *Chester, where a meeting-house was opened for him in Crook Lane (now Crook St.) in 1700. His Exposition of the Old and New Testaments (1708–10), a devotional commentary on the whole of the OT and the Gospels and Acts, is notable esp. for its good sense, pregnant thought, and felicitous expression. He was also the author of many devotional works and sermons.

Works, with a sermon preached at his funeral and Life by W. Tong (see below), publd. at London, fol., 1726; additional matter was included in The Miscellaneous Works of Matthew Henry, ed. S. Palmer (ib., 1809); re-edited with further additions, with preface by J. B. Williams (ib., 1830). Lives by W. Tong (London, 1716), J. B. Williams (ib., 1828), and C. Chapman (ib., 1859). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), p. 123 f.

HENSON, HERBERT HENSLEY (1863–1947), Bp. of *Durham. Educated at Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1884. He was successively vicar of Barking (1888), Chaplain of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford (1895), rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster (1900), Dean of Durham (1912), Bp. of *Hereford (1918), and Bp. of Durham (1920–39). Not long after ordination he abandoned his earlier High Church sympathies for a latitudinarian conception of the C of E, which he defended in several published collections of sermons and other writings, among them Cross Bench Views of Current Church Questions (1902), Sincerity and Subscription (1903), The National Church (1908), The Liberty of Prophesying (1909), The Creed in the Pulpit (1912), Anglicanism (1921), and Quo Tendimus? (1924). His doctrinal position, esp. his attitude to the Virgin Birth and the Gospel miracles, provoked strong protests when D. Lloyd George nominated him to Hereford late in 1917, and a serious crisis was averted only when the Abp. of Canterbury (R. T. *Davidson), who had had grave misgivings about consecrating him, and Henson issued a joint statement in which Henson appeared to retract his earlier views. Until his later years Henson was a strong advocate of the Establishment, in which he saw the ideal of a nation-wide Church, which should ultimately include all Nonconformists, and a safeguard of theological freedom. But the rejection of the revised Prayer Books in Parliament (1927–8) convinced him that the Establishment was incompatible with the Church's freedom, and in his Disestablishment (1929) he pleaded for liberty for the Church from state control. His other writings include Notes on Spiritual Healing (1925); The Oxford Groups (1933), a pungent criticism; Christian Morality (1936), based on *Gifford Lectures; and The Church of England (1939).

Henson publd. his autobiography, Retrospect of an Unimportant Life (3 vols., 1942–50); also a collection of papers repr. from The Bishoprick under the title Bishoprick Papers (1946). Collections of his Letters ed. E. F. Braley (1950); More Letters (1954). A. T. P. Williams in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 378 f.

HEORTOLOGY (Gk. ἑορτή, 'festival'). The study of the origin, history, and meaning of the festivals and seasons of the Ecclesiastical *Year, and thus a branch of *Liturgiology.

HEPTATEUCH (Gk. ἑπτά, 'seven' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A name sometimes used of the first seven books of the OT, i.e. the five Books of Moses together with Joshua and Judges, on account of their supposed unity. The word is formed on the analogy of '*Pentateuch'.

HERACLEAN VERSION. See Harklean Version.

HERACLEON (fl. c. 145–80), *Gnostic teacher. He was a disciple of *Valentinus. He wrote a highly allegorizing commentary (Ὑπομνήματα) on St. John's Gospel; but only fragments have survived, mainly in quotations in *Origen's commentary on that Gospel. H. C. Puech and G. Quispel have suggested that he was the author of the 'Tractate on the Three Natures' among the Gnostic texts found at *Nag Hammadi (see Gnosticism).

A. E. Brooke, The Fragments of Heracleon (Texts and Studies, i, No. 4; Cambridge, 1891). Y. Janssens, 'Héracléon. Commentaire sur l'Évangile selon saint Jean' in Muséon, lxxii (1959), pp. 101–51, 277–99. H. C. Puech–G. Quispel, 'Le Quatrième Écrit gnostique du Codex Jung' in V.C., ix (1955), pp. 65–102. An edition of the 'Tractate on the Three Natures' by R. Kasser and others is forthcoming. Altaner–Stuiber (1968), pp. 101 and 104, with further bibl. H. Crouzel, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1960), col. 238, s.v., with bibl.

HERACLIUS (575–641), Byzantine Emperor. A native of Cappadocia, he secured the throne in 610–11 in place of the usurper Phocas, and then founded a new dynasty which continued until 717. During his reign the Empire was repeatedly attacked. The Visigoths gained complete possession of Spain, and the Persians and later the Arabs invaded the E. On 21 Mar. 629 Heraclius solemnly brought back to *Golgotha the Cross which the Persians had removed from *Jerusalem in 614. In an attempt to secure doctrinal unity in his dominions he issued the *Ecthesis (q.v.) in 638. See also Exaltation of the Cross.

A. Pernice, L'Imperatore Eraclio (1905). P. Lemerle, 'Quelques Remarques sur le règne d'Héraclius' in Studi Medievali, 3ª Serie, i (1960), pp. 347–61. A. Frolow, 'La Vraie Croix et les expéditions d'Héraclius en Perse' in Revue des Études Byzantines, xi (1953), pp. 88–105. J. B. Bury, The Later Roman Empire, ii (1889), pp. 197–398; N. H. Baynes in C. Med. H., ii (1913), ch. ix, pp. 263–301 passim; Fliche–Martin, v (1947), pp. 79–150.

HERBERT, EDWARD (1583–1648), first Lord Herbert of Cherbury; philosopher, deist, and poet. He was appointed ambassador at Paris in 1619, after a youth spent in study, much travel, and many duels. In 1624 he published at Paris his famous philosophical treatise, De Veritate prout distinguitur a revelatione, a verisimili, a possibili, et a falso, an original attack on empiricism. The first work of its kind to be written by an Englishman, it greatly influenced J. *Locke. His more specifically religious writings included De Religione Laici (1645) and De Religione Gentilium (1663). He maintained that common to all religions were five innate ideas: (1) that there is a God; (2) that He ought to be worshipped; (3) that virtue is the chief element in this worship; (4) that repentance for sin is a duty; and (5) that there is another life of rewards and punishments. His conviction that in these five innate ideas lay the essence of religion, combined with his denial of revelation, made him a forerunner of English *Deism.

His Autobiography, extending to 1624, existed in two MS. copies in the 18th cent., but both have now disappeared; one was ed. by H. Walpole (Strawberry Hill, 1764); crit. edd., based on Walpole's text, by S. Lee (London, 1886) and C. H. Herford (Newtown, Montgomeryshire, 1928). The Poems, English and Latin, of Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, ed. by G. C. W. Smith (1923). Modern ed. of his De Religione Laici, with Eng. tr. and critical discussion of his life and philosophy, by H. R. Hutcheson (New Haven–London, 1944). Eng. tr. of De Veritate, with introd., by M. H. Carré (Bristol, 1937). C. de Rémusat, Lord Herbert de Cherbury, sa vie et ses œuvres (1874). M. M. Rossi, La vita, le opere, i tempi di Edoardo Herbert di Chirbury (Biblioteca Storica Sansoni, N.S., xiv; 3 vols., 1947). R. D. Bedford, The Defence of Truth. Herbert of Cherbury and the Seventeenth Century (Manchester, 1979). W. R. Sorley, 'The Philosophy of Herbert of Cherbury' in Mind, N.S., iii (1894), pp. 491–508. S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), pp. 173–81.

HERBERT, GEORGE (1593–1633), poet and divine. A younger brother of Edward, Lord *Herbert of Cherbury, he was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where his classical scholarship and musical ability (he played the lute and viol, and sang) secured him a fellowship in 1614. He became Public Orator of the university in 1620, and his success seemed to mark him out for the career of a courtier. The death of *James I, however, and the influence of his friend, N. *Ferrar, led him to study divinity, and in 1626 he was presented to a prebend in Huntingdonshire. In 1630 he was ordained priest, and persuaded by W. *Laud to accept the rectory of Fugglestone with Bemerton, near *Salisbury, where in piety and humble devotion to duty he spent his last years.

Herbert's most famous prose work, A Priest to the Temple; or the Country Parson (1652), outlines a sober and well-balanced ideal of the English clergyman. In simple and homely language Herbert shows him as a well-read divine, temperate in all things, a man of duty and prayer, devoted to his flock, who has come to be the model of future generations. His collection of poems entitled The Temple was entrusted to N. Ferrar on his deathbed and first published in 1633. An author of sincere religious conviction and considerable poetic gifts, skilful in handling both rhyme and rhythm, Herbert is among the first devotional poets of the C of E, of whose spirit and teaching he is an authentic representative. His poems, rather less heavily laden with quaint imagery and 'conceits' than those of many of his contemporaries, breathe a gentle piety and a sincere love of Christian virtue. They also exercised a widespread influence on later poets such as H. *Vaughan and S. T. *Coleridge. Among those in current use as hymns are 'The God of love my Shepherd is' (Ps. 23), 'Teach me, my God and King' and 'Let all the world in every corner sing'. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 27 Feb.

Collected ed. of his Works publ. London, 2 vols. bound in one, 1835–6; modern edd. include The English Works of George Herbert, ed. G. H. Palmer (3 vols., 1905), with introd. in vol. i, pp. 17–167, and F. E. Hutchinson (ed.), The Works of George Herbert (Oxford, 1941). Poems ed. by A. Waugh (The World's Classics, cxix; [1907]), with introd. pp. v–xviii. I. *Walton, The Life of Mr. George Herbert (1670). [J. Daniell], The Life of George Herbert of Bemerton (1893); A. G. Hyde, George Herbert and his Times (1906); Margaret Bottrall, George Herbert (1954); J. H. Summers, George Herbert. His Religion and Art (1954); Marchette Chute, Two Gentle Men. The Lives of George Herbert and Robert Herrick (1960), pp. 11–152, 277–82. A. Stein, George Herbert's Lyrics (Baltimore, 1968). G. H. Palmer, A Herbert Bibliography (Cambridge, 1911); further bibl. by F. E. Hutchinson in C.B.E.L., i (1940), pp. 451–3. S. L. Lee in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), pp. 185–8; H. Jaeger, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 270–6, s.v. See also Metaphysical Poets.

HERDER, JOHANN GOTTFRIED (1744–1803), German critic. With G. E. *Lessing he was a leader of the poetical movement which saved the *Aufklärung from a dry intellectualism. After various temporary posts, he became *Generalsuperintendent and court preacher at Weimar (1776), where he spent the rest of his life. An early disciple of I. *Kant, he influenced J. W. Goethe in turn, and has been regarded as anticipating C. Darwin in treating human history as a natural science. His interests were as wide as the culture of his age, and his researches and writings dealt with poetry, art, language, and religion; but his most important contribution to the ideas of his time was in the philosophy of history. In his Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit (1784–91; Eng. trans., 1800) he discovered in the developments of the different nations the stages of an ascending process in the course of which the essence of 'Humanity' comes to progressively fuller expression. Of more exclusively religious interest was his book Vom Geist der hebräischen Poesie (1782–3), in which he urged the study of the Bible in a 'human' way. His mediating position in theology, in which he advocated critical principles and conservative findings, brought him the enmity of the orthodox and the suspicions of the rationalists.

Crit. ed. of Herder's Works by B. Suphan (33 vols., Berlin, 1877–99; 1913); later ed. by F. Schultz (Potsdam, 1939 ff.). Memoirs, 2 vols., Stuttgart, 1820. Life and Letters, 3 vols., Erlangen, 1846–8. Lives by J. M. H. Döring (Leipzig, 1823). R. Haym (2 vols., Leipzig, 1880–5), H. W. Nevinson (London, 1884), E. Kühnemann (Munich, 1895), F. MacEachran (Oxford Studies in Modern Language and Literature, Oxford, 1939), A. Gillies (Oxford, 1945), and R. T. Clark, Jr. (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1955). A. Werner, Herder als Theolog (1871). F. M. Barnard, Herder's Social and Political Thought (Oxford, 1965). Überweg, iii, pp. 614 f., 751–3.

HEREFORD. The see was founded in 676 by Putta, Bp. of *Rochester (669–86), who had fled from the heathen invaders of his diocese. St. *Ethelbert, King of the E. Angles (killed c. 793), was buried in the cathedral, and with the BVM designated its joint patron soon afterwards. The original cathedral was damaged by the Welsh in 1055. The main part of the present edifice dates from 1079–1110, though there are considerable later additions. The 'Use of Hereford', a variant of the Roman Rite, with less individuality than that of *Sarum, was displaced by the latter only in the reign of *Henry VIII. The most famous medieval bishop was St. Thomas of Hereford (Thomas de *Cantilupe), 1275–82, whose shrine, after his canonization in 1320, was a centre of pilgrimage from all over England. In 1786 the west end of the cathedral suddenly collapsed, carrying some of the nave with it, and the later restoration was poorly done, though the west front (early 20th cent.) is well in harmony with the building as a whole. The buildings of the College of Vicars-Choral remain intact, and the cathedral school, though its buildings are mostly of the 19th cent., has a continuous history from the 14th cent. The diocese includes Herefordshire, S. Salop, and a few parishes in other counties.

The Episcopal Registers are exceptionally nearly complete; the following have been publd. concurrently in the series of the Cantilupe Society [publicn. dates in this series are added here] and of the *Canterbury and York Society: that of Thomas de Cantilupe (1275–82), ed. R. G. Griffiths–W. W. Capes (1906); of Richard de Swinfield (1282–1317), ed. W. W. Capes (1909); of Adam de Orleton (1317–27), ed. A. T. Bannister (1907); of Thomas de Charlton (1327–44), ed. W. W. Capes (1912); of John de Trillek (1344–61), ed. J. H. Parry (1910); of Lewis de Charlton (1361–9), ed. id. (1913); of William de Courtenay (1370–5), ed. W. W. Capes (1913); of John Gilbert (1375–89), ed. J. H. Parry (1913); of John Trefnant (1389–1404), ed. W. W. Capes (1914); Robert Mascall (1404–16), ed. J. H. Parry (1916); Edmund Lacy (1417–20), ed. id.–A. T. Bannister (1917); Thomas Poltone (1420–2), ed. W. W. Capes (1916); Thomas Stofford (1422–1448), ed. A. T. Bannister (1917); Richard Beauchamp (1449–50), ed. id. (1917); Reginald Boulers (1451–3; register of first year only), ed. id. (1917); John Stanbury (1453–74), ed. J. H. Parry–A. T. Bannister (1918); Thomas Mylling (1474–92), ed. A. T. Bannister (1919); Richard Mayew (1504–16), ed. id. (1919); Charles Bothe (1516–35), with extracts from registers of Edmund Foxe and Edmund *Bonner, ed. id. (1921). W. W. Capes (ed.), Charters and Records of Hereford Cathedral (Cantilupe Society, 1908). Eng. tr. of Extracts from the Cathedral Registers, A.D. 1275–1535, by E. N. Dew (Hereford, 1932). The 'Missal according to the Use of Hereford' was repr. from the Rouen ed. of 1502 by W. G. Henderson (London, 1874); the 'Breviary', orig. pr. Rouen, 1505, was ed. by W. H. *Frere–L. E. G. Brown (H.B.S., xxvi, xl, and xlvi; 1904–15). A. T. Bannister, The Cathedral Church of Hereford. Its History and Constitution (Studies in Church History, 1924). On the cathedral see also W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi (pt. 3; ed. 1830), pp. 1210–17. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of York, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Man, Lichfield, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester and Bristol, ii (1727), pp. 499–622. H. W. Phillott, Hereford (Diocesan Histories, 1888); A. H. Fisher, The Cathedral Church of Hereford (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). E. [A.] Foord, Hereford and Tintern (Cathedrals, Abbeys and Famous Churches, 1925), pp. 11–110. Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, England, An Inventory of Historical Monuments in Herefordshire, i, South-West (1931), pp. 90–120. A. T. Bannister, A Descriptive Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Hereford Cathedral Library (Hereford, 1927); B. H. *Streeter, The Chained Library (1931), pp. 77–119, 311–39. W. W. Capes in D.E.C.H., 266–70, s.v.

HEREFORD, NICHOLAS. See Nicholas of Hereford.

HERESIARCH (Gk. αἱρεσιάρχης; late Lat. haeresiarcha). The originator of a heresy, or founder of an heretical sect.

HERESY. The formal denial or doubt of any defined doctrine of the Catholic faith. In antiquity the Greek word αἵρεσις, denoting 'choice' or 'thing chosen', from which the term is derived, was applied to the tenets of particular philosophical schools. In this sense it appears occasionally in Scripture (e.g. Acts 5. 17) and the early Fathers. But it was employed also in a disparaging sense (e.g. 1 Cor. 11. 19) and from St. *Ignatius (Trall., 6, Eph., 6) onwards it came more and more to be used of theological error. From the earliest days the Church has claimed teaching authority and consequently condemned heresy, following Christ's command: 'If he refuse to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican' (Mt. 18. 17). On the other hand the need to rebut heresy has sometimes stimulated the formation of orthodox Christian doctrine.

Present RC teaching makes a distinction between 'formal' and 'material' heresy. The former, which is heresy properly so called, consists in the wilful and persistent adherence to an error in matters of faith on the part of a baptized person; as such it is a grave sin involving ipso facto excommunication. 'Material heresy', on the other hand, means holding heretical doctrines through no fault of one's own, 'in good faith', as is the case, e.g., with most persons brought up in heretical surroundings. This constitutes neither crime nor sin, nor is such a person strictly speaking a heretic, since, having never accepted certain doctrines, he cannot reject or doubt them. Heresy is to be distinguished from *apostasy and *schism (qq.v.). See also Inquisition and De Haeretico Comburendo.

C. W. F. Walch, Entwurf einer vollständigen Historie der Ketzereien, Spaltungen, und Religionstreitigkeiten bis auf die Zeiten der Reformation (11 pts., 1762–85). W. Bauer, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, x; 1934; ed. 2 by G. Strecker, 1964; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1971; London, 1972). [J. J.] I. von *Döllinger, Beiträge zur Sektengeschichte des Mittelalters (2 vols., 1890). W. L. Wakefield–A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages. Selected Sources translated and annotated (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxxi; 1969). G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages. The Relation of Heterodoxy to Dissent c. 1250–c. 1450 (2 vols., Manchester–New York, 1967). J. H. Blunt (ed.), Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, Ecclesiastical Parties and Schools of Religious Thought (1874). H. Schlier in T.W.B., i (1933), cols. 179–84, s.v. αἱρέομαι. A. Michel in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2208–57, s.v. 'Hérésie, Hérétique', with bibl. M. D. Lambert, Medieval Heresy. Popular Movements from Bogomil to Hus (1977).

HERGENRÖTHER, JOSEPH (1824–90), ecclesiastical historian. He was a native of Würzburg, where he taught from 1852 onwards. In 1857 he published *Photius's 'Liber de Spiritus Sancti mystagogia', and in 1867–9 an elaborate work on Photius himself. He represented the more conservative element in German Catholicism, attacking J. J. I. von *Döllinger in 1861 with his Der Zeitgeist und die Souveränität des Papstes. Called to Rome in 1868 to act as a consultor for the forthcoming *Vatican Council, he defended the definition of Papal Infallibility, directing against Döllinger Anti-Janus (1869; see Janus) and other pamphlets. His later writings include a treatise on Church history (Handbuch der allgemeinen Kirchengeschichte, 3 vols., 1876–80), which in its successive revisions long remained a standard work. In 1879 he was created a *cardinal. In his later years he devoted himself to continuing K. J. *Hefele's Konziliengeschichte.

J. P. Kirsch in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 262–4, s.v.; V. Conzemius in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 1070, s.v.

HERIC OF AUXERRE. See Heiric of Auxerre.

HERIMANNUS CONTRACTUS (1013–54), Hermann the Lame, Christian poet and chronicler. He was educated in the monastery at *Reichenau, where he later took his vows. Despite great physical infirmities, he possessed one of the most gifted minds of his age, and wrote extensively on a wide range of subjects including mathematics, astronomy, and chronography. His writings included a didactic poem 'De octo vitiis principalibus', based on classical models, and many hymns and antiphons. The widespread attribution to him of the '*Salve Regina' and the 'Alma Redemptoris Mater' rests in each case, however, on insufficient evidence. His 'Chronicon Augiense', which stretches from the beginning of the Christian era to 1054, is based, directly or indirectly, on a large variety of important sources and is of esp. value for its record of contemporary history.

His writings are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxliii, 9–458; crit. ed. of his 'Chronicon' by G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, v (1844), pp. 67–133. H. Hansjakob, Hermann der Lahme von der Reichenau. Sein Leben und seine Wissenschaft (1875). H. Bresslau, 'Beiträge zur Kritik deutscher Geschichtsquellen des 11. Jahrhunderts. Neue Folge I, Hermann von Reichenau und das Chronicon Suevicum Universale' in N.A., xxvii (1902), pp. 127–69, with reff. to other artt. Good popular account by C. C. Martindale, S.J., From Bye-Ways and Hedges (1935), pp. 3–27. G. Michiels in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), col. 293 f., s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under Salve Regina.

HERITOR. In *Scotland, heritors were the owners of heritable property in a parish to whom descended the ancient obligation to pay the *teinds or tithes to the minister and to keep the parish church and manse in repair. By an Act of Parliament, 1925, with a view to union between the Established and the *United Free Churches, provision was made for the termination of their rights and duties and the transfer of these responsibilities to the Church of Scotland itself.

HERMAN, EMMA, Mrs. (1874–1923), writer on *Mysticism and spiritual subjects. The wife of a *Presbyterian minister, she spent much of her early married life in *Constantinople and Sydney. In 1908 she began regular work as a journalist at Sydney, soon becoming widely known through her brilliant and penetrating writing. In 1913 she was appointed editor of the Presbyterian and later held posts in the Challenge and the Church Times. Towards the end of her life she joined the C of E, where she became warmly sympathetic to *Anglo-Catholicism. Her two chief books—The Meaning and Value of Mysticism (1915) and Creative Prayer (1921)—are notable for their understanding and interpretation of Christian spiritual values. She was also the author of Eucken and Bergson (1912), Voices of Today (1912; on contemporary preachers; published under the pseudonym of 'Hugh Sinclair'), and three posthumous collections, The Finding of the Cross (1924), The Secret Garden of the Soul (1924; with memoir by D. C. Macgregor), and The Touch of God (1926).

HERMANN OF REICHENAU. See Herimannus Contractus.

HERMANN OF WIED (1477–1552), German reformer. In 1515, while still a *subdeacon, he became Abp.-Elector of *Cologne. He governed his principality with marked efficiency, taking strong measures against the *Anabaptists and at a council at Cologne (1536) tightening up discipline and introducing some liturgical reforms. Throughout his earlier years he was hostile to the Protestant Movement; but c. 1539 he set out to create a parallel movement within the Catholic Church, making a start with his own archdiocese and inviting the assistance of M. *Bucer and P. *Melanchthon. He embodied many proposals for a moderate reform of the Church in his Einfaltigs Bedencken einer christlichen Reformation (1543), also known as the 'Didagma', an English translation of which (A Simple and Religious Consultation of us, Herman, by the grace of God, Archbishop of Cologne, 1548) was considerably drawn on by the compilers of the Anglican BCP. In 1554 J. Gropper published an 'Antididagma' (q.v.) as a reply. Hermann's increasing adhesion to the Protestant cause was an important accession to its strength, but his policy met with hostility from most of his own subjects, from the Emp. *Charles V, and from Pope *Paul III, who excommunicated and deposed him in 1546. He died a Lutheran.

C. Varrentrapp, Hermann von Wied und sein Reformationsversuch (1878). H. Jedin, 'Fragen um Hermann von Wied' in Hist. J., lxxiv (1955), pp. 687–99, with bibl. C. Varrentrapp in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 712–14. For his influence on the BCP, see F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (1915), Introd., passim (cf. index, p. 1063).

HERMAS (2nd cent.), author of 'The Shepherd'. He is accounted one of the '*Apostolic Fathers'. Of his life nothing certain is known except what he himself says in his work. We learn that he was a Christian slave, sold in Rome to a woman called Rhoda, who set him free. He married, became a merchant, and enriched himself by means that were not always lawful. In a persecution he lost all his property, was denounced by his own children, and finally he and his whole family did penance.

His book, 'The Shepherd' (ὁ Ποιμήν), purports to have been written in consequence of a series of visions. It is divided into three parts, viz. five 'Visions', twelve 'Mandates', and ten 'Similitudes'. In the 'Visions' a matron appears to him who represents the Church, which is pictured as a tower. In the fifth Vision appears the Angel of Penance in the guise of a shepherd, whence the name of the treatise. In the following 'Mandates' Hermas gives us his teaching on Christian behaviour and virtues, such as faith in one God, truthfulness, chastity, &c. The third section, the 'Similitudes', represents various Christian principles under a series of sometimes very forceful images.

The person of the author of the work has given rise to much speculation. Hermas himself says that he is a contemporary of St. *Clement of Rome (d. c. 96; if he is the Clement mentioned at Vis., II. iv. 3); but the *Muratorian Canon (c. 180) attributes the work to a brother of Pope *Pius (d. c. 154), while *Origen believes the Hermas mentioned in Rom. 16. 14 to be its author. A great number of modern scholars, including A. *Harnack, O. *Bardenhewer, and P. *Batiffol, accept the view of the Muratorian Canon, which would suggest a date between 140 and 155. This would also fit the internal evidence, which seems to suggest that the work was written after a considerable period of peace. In the Greek Church of the 2nd and 3rd cents. the work was widely regarded as Scripture, e.g. by St. *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, also by *Tertullian in his pre-Montanist days, though there was no unanimity on the subject. It was, however, greatly esteemed for its moral value and served as a textbook for catechumens, as is testified by St. *Athanasius. In the *Codex Sinaiticus it comes after the NT, together with the Pseudo-*Barnabas. In the Latin Church it was valued far less highly; the Muratorian Canon denies its inspiration and *Jerome asserts that it was almost unknown in the West (De vir. illust., 10). From the 4th cent. it came to be also more and more neglected in the East.

The principal aim of the book is the inculcation of the necessity of penance and of the possibility of the forgiveness of sins at least once after baptism, a doctrine which caused Tertullian, in his Montanist period, to call it the 'Shepherd of the adulterers'. The author seems to identify the Holy Spirit with the Son of God before the Incarnation, and to hold that the Trinity came into existence only after the humanity of Christ had been taken up into heaven.

The Gk. original of 'The Shepherd' is incomplete. In the *Codex Sinaiticus the Gk. text is to be found up to Mand. iv, and in the MS. of Mt. *Athos, ed. by C. *Tischendorf, Leipzig, 1856, as far as Sim. ix. The rest of the text is known from two Lat. versions, one of which, the 'Versio Vulgata', was first publd. by J. *Faber Stapulensis, Paris, 1513, the other, known as the 'Versio Palatina', by A. R. M. Dressel, Leipzig, 1857. Further additions to Gk. text from papyrus fragments ed. C. Wessely in P.O., iv (1908), pp. 195–9, and xviii (1924), pp. 468–81. C. Bonner, A Papyrus Codex of the Shepherd of Hermas (Simil. 2–9), with a Fragment of the Mandates (University of Michigan, Humanistic Series, xxii; 1934). Crit. edd. by Molly Whittaker (G.C.S., 1956; ed. 2, 1967) and, with Fr. tr., by R. Joly (S.C., liii, 1958). The Gk. text is pr. in all edd. of the Apostolic Fathers, e.g. O. Gebhardt–A. *Harnack, J. B. *Lightfoot, K. *Lake. J. A. *Robinson, Barnabas, Hermas and the Didache (Donnellan Lectures for 1920; 1920). R. van Deemter, Der Hirt des Hermas. Apokalypse oder Allegorie? (Delft, 1929); E. Peterson, 'Beiträge zur Interpretation der Visionen im Pastor Hermae' in O.C.P., xiii (1947), pp. 625–35; S. Giet, Hermas et les Pasteurs. Les trois auteurs du Pasteur d'Hermas (1963). L. Pernveden, The Concept of the Church in the Shepherd of Hermas (Studia Theologica Lundensia, xxvii; Lund, 1966). Bardenhewer, i, pp. 465–87; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 55–8. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2265–90; J. Paramelle–P. Adnès in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 316–34, both s.v. with bibl.

HERMENEUTICS (from Gk. ἑρμηνεύω, 'to interpret'). The science of the methods of *exegesis (q.v.). Whereas exegesis is usually the act of explaining a text, often in the case of sacred literature according to formally prescribed rules, hermeneutics is the science (or art) by which exegetical procedures are devised. In theology, hermeneutical theory arises out of awareness of the ambiguity of a sacred text and the consequent analysis of the act of understanding. There are traces of both these processes in St. *Augustine, esp. in De Doctrina Christiana, though patristic and medieval exegesis was largely governed by formal rules of allegorical interpretation and the theory of scriptural infallibility. The Protestant emphasis on the importance of Scripture and belief in the possibility of comprehending it encouraged reflection on the act of understanding, as well as a return to more literal exegesis. Although the Latin term hermeneutica dates from the mid-17th cent. (the English form 'hermeneutics' is found only in the 18th cent.), it was F. D. E. *Schleiermacher who in modern times gave new prominence to the act of correctly understanding the speech of others, esp. in Christian theology in relation to communication by speech of the consciousness of God. Building on Schleiermacher's work, W. *Dilthey and M. *Heidegger developed the philosophical analysis of understanding to include all expressions of man's self-awareness, esp. as a socially and historically conditioned being. In some modern theological usage 'hermeneutics', as a preliminary to exegesis, is distinguished from 'hermeneutic', the wider study of how Biblical faith may be conveyed in the language of fundamentally different civilizations.

R. *Bultmann, 'Das Problem der Hermeneutik' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, xlvii (1950), pp. 47–69; Eng. tr. in Bultmann's Essays, Philosophical and Theological (1955), pp. 234–61; G. Ebeling, 'Wort Gottes und Hermeneutik' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, lvi (1959), pp. 224–51; Eng. tr. in Ebeling's Word and Faith (1963), pp. 305–32. J. M. Robinson–J. B. Cobb (edd.), The New Hermeneutic (New York, 1964). J. Macquarrie, God-Talk (1967), pp. 147–67 ('Language and Interpretation. Case-Study: Heidegger on Hermeneutics'). E. v. Dobschütz in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 390–5, s.v. 'Interpretation'; G. Ebeling in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), cols. 242–62, s.v., with extensive bibl.

HERMESIANISM. The system of philosophical and theological doctrines taught by Georg Hermes (1775–1831), Prof. of Theology at Münster i.W. It was an attempt to adjust the principles of RC theology to the supposed requirements of the philosophy of I. *Kant. Holding that our only certain knowledge was of ideas and notions actually present in the mind, it taught that the criterion of objective truth must be found in our subjective beliefs. Hermes believed that, starting from this principle, it was possible (as against the contentions of Kant) to prove the existence of God by the theoretical reason; and that when this fact had been established, the possibility of supernatural revelation could then be demonstrated. For a time Hermesian doctrines became very popular, esp. in the Rhineland, where many of the chief theological professorships were filled by Hermes' disciples. Soon after his death, Rome pronounced against them, however, and in 1835 *Gregory XVI put a number of Hermes' writings on the *Index.

Hermes' writings include Untersuchung über die Wahrheit des Christentums (1805), Studierplan der Theologie (1819), Einleitung in die christkatholische Theologie (1819–29), Positive Einleitung (1829), and Christkatholische Dogmatik (3 vols., 1834–5; posthumous, ed. J. H. Achterfeldt). His doctrines were condemned in the encyclical 'Dum Acerbissimas' (26 Sept. 1835); cf. Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), Nos. 2738–40. Acta Romana, ed. W. J. Braun and P. J. Elvenich (Hanover, 1838; pro-Hermesian). S. Merkle, 'Der hermesische Streit im Lichte neuer Quellen' in Hist. J., lx (1940), pp. 179–200. Full bibl. to date in D. Gla, Repertorium der katholisch-theologischen Literatur, I, ii (1904), 355–70. J. Schulte in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 276–9, s.v. 'Hermes', and A. Thouvenin in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2288–2303, s.v. 'Hermes', with bibl.

HERMETIC BOOKS. A collection of Greek and Latin religious and philosophical writings ascribed to Hermes Trismegistus ('Hermes the Thrice-Greatest'), a later designation of the Egyptian God, Thoth, who was believed to be the father and protector of all knowledge. Dating probably from between the middle of the 1st and the end of the 3rd cents. A.D., these writings represent a fusion of *Platonic, *Stoic, Neo-Pythagorean, and Eastern religious elements, in the form of the Platonic dialogues. The aim of their mystic teaching was the deification of man through 'Gnosis', i.e. the knowledge of God. The most important of the writings, '*Poimandres', contains much cosmological and astronomical teaching and describes the ascent of the soul to God through the seven spheres of the planets.

Corpus Hermeticum, ed. A. D. Nock, with Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière, O.P. (Collection Budé, Paris, 4 vols., 1945–54). Older edd. by F. Patrizi (Venice, 1593) and G. Parthey (Berlin, 1854). Elaborate edition by W. Scott, Hermetica (4 vols., Oxford, 1924–36), with Eng. introd. and notes, but it suffers from the editor's over-drastic emendation of the text. The 'Poimandres' ed., with discussion, by R. *Reitzenstein, Poimandres. Studien zur griechisch-ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur (1904). A. J. Festugière, O.P., La Révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste (Études bibliques, 4 vols., 1944–54). C. H. *Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935), Part II (pp. 97–248, 'Hellenistic Judaism and the Hermetica'); id., The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (1953), pp. 10–53. G. Zuntz, 'On the Hymns in Corpus Hermeticum XIII' in Hermes, lxxxv (1955), pp. 68–92. G. van Moorsel, The Mysteries of Hermes Trismegistus. A Phenomenological study in the process of spiritualisation in the Corpus Hermeticum and Latin Asclepius (Studia Theologica Rheno-Traiectina, i; Utrecht, 1953).

HERMIAS (date uncertain), Christian philosophical writer. He is known only as the author of a small treatise, the 'Irrisio' or 'Mockery of the Heathen Philosophers' (Διασυρμὸς τῶν ἔξω Φιλοσόφων), which satirizes the conflicting opinions of pagan writers on the human soul (cc. 1–2) and the fundamental principles of the universe (cc. 3–10). The apology is clearly the work of a writer of very mediocre attainments. Some points of literary contact between the 'Irrisio' and the pseudo-Justin's 'Cohortatio ad Gentiles' have been observed, but they are probably not sufficiently close to throw light on their relative dates, esp. in view of the possible use of common sources. Modern authors have assigned various dates to the 'Irrisio' from the 2nd to the 6th cents.

The editio princeps was issued by J. Oporinus (Basle, 1553). More recent editions are in J. C. T. de Otto, Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, ix, pp. 1–31, and H. Diels, Doxographi Graeci (Berlin, 1879), pp. 649–56. A. Freiherr v. Di Pauli, Die Irrisio des Hermias (1907); L. Alfonsi, Ermia filosofo (Brescia, 1947).

HERMIT (Gk. ἐρημίτης, from ἐρημία, 'desert'). One who from religious motives has retired into a solitary life, esp. one of the early Christian recluses.

Christian hermits first began to abound in Egypt and surrounding regions towards the close of the 3rd cent., and from that date the eremitical life quickly gained in popularity, being esp. cultivated in the cents. which witnessed the disintegration of the Roman Empire. In the W. hermits finally died out after the *Counter-Reformation, though much of their tradition is retained in an organized form in certain monastic orders, notably the *Carthusians and *Carmelites. In the E. Church hermits still exist. The hermits observed no uniform rule of life. While some lived in isolation, others were united in loosely organized communities which sometimes formed the nucleus of a new monastery or order (see also Augustinian Hermits).

HEROD FAMILY. Herod the Great was appointed King of the Jews by the Romans in 40 B.C., and ruled from 37 to 4 B.C. He was of an Idumaean (Edomite) family, and married a granddaughter of Hyrcanus, the last legal *Hasmonaean ruler. By ruthlessness and genuine ability he kept the peace for 37 years in a country very hard to rule. During his reign Christ was born, and the story of the Massacre of the Innocents (Mt. 2. 16) fits his reputation. On his death his territory was divided between his sons: Archelaus, as ethnarch of *Judaea, Idumaea, and Samaria; Antipas, as tetrarch of *Galilee and Peraea; and Philip, as tetrarch of the remaining territory to the north-east (Lk. 3. 1). Archelaus was deposed in A.D. 6 and his territory put under Roman procurators, of whom *Pontius Pilate was the fifth or sixth. Antipas, the 'Herod the tetrarch' of the Gospels (4 B.C.–A.D. 39), who married Herodias and beheaded *John the Baptist, and Philip (4 B.C.–A.D. 34) were ruling at the time of Christ's ministry. In 37–41 all these territories were successively conferred on Agrippa I, the son of Herod the Great's second son Aristobulus (d. 7 B.C.); he ruled till A.D. 44 with the title of King. It was he (called 'Herod' in Acts) who put St. *James the Apostle to death and died 'eaten of worms' (Acts 12). In A.D. 50 Agrippa II, his son, was made king of various territories in N. Palestine and ruled till c. 93. He was the 'king Agrippa' before whom St. *Paul appeared (Acts 25. 13 ff.).

Much the most important authority is *Josephus (q.v.), who for the careers of Antipas and Herod the Great was mainly dependent on the 'Universal History' of Nicolaus of Damascus, Herod the Great's court historiographer. A. H. M. Jones, The Herods of Judaea (1938; by a first-class scholar, but without bibl. reff.). H. Willrich, Das Haus des Herodes zwischen Jerusalem und Rom (Bibliothek der klassischen Altertumswissenschaften, vi, 1929; a defence of the Herods and their policies). S. Perowne, The Life and Times of Herod the Great (1956); id., The Later Herods. The Political Background of the New Testament (1958). A. Schalit, König Herodes. Der Mann und sein Werk (German tr. from Hebrew, Studia Judaica, iv; 1969), with bibl. A. C. *Headlam in H.B.D., ii (1899), pp. 353–62, with useful 'Index of Herod Family'. W. Otto in P.W., Suppl., ii (1913), cols. 1–200; J. Blinzler in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 263–6, both s.v. 'Herodes'.

HERODIANS. A party twice mentioned in the Gospels (Mk. 3. 6, in Galilee; Mk. 12. 13, cf. Mt. 22. 16, at Jerusalem) as a group hostile to the Lord. They were presumably partisans or retainers of the *Herod family, which was ruling at the time of Christ's ministry in Galilee and Iturea, but no longer in Judaea. The view of Ps.-*Tertullian (De praescr., 45 fin.), *Philaster (Haer., 28), and others that they held Herod to be the Messiah was doubtless a mere (mistaken) conjecture.

H. H. Rowley, 'The Herodians in the Gospels' in J.T.S., xli (1940), pp. 14–27. W. Otto in P.W., Suppl., ii (1913), cols. 200–2, s.v. 'Herodiani'. See also comm. on Mark, cited under Mark, Gospel of St.

HERRING, THOMAS (1693–1757), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Wisbech, he was educated at Jesus and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, where he early won fame as a preacher. After holding many ecclesiastical appointments he was promoted to the see of *Bangor in 1737. In 1743 he was translated to *York, where he was energetic in defence of the government during the 1745 revolt. In 1747 he became Abp. of Canterbury but did little of note there. In his religious outlook he was a *Latitudinarian without theological interests. His chief claim to fame is his episcopal Visitation Returns for 1743, which are an important document for the religious history of his times.

Seven Sermons (1763), with pref. life [by W. Duncombe], pp. i–xli; Letters [1728–57] . . . to William Duncombe (1777). Visitation Returns ed. S. L. Ollard–P. C. Walker (Yorkshire Archaeological Society, Record Series, lxxi, lxxii, lxxv, lxxvii, and lxxix; 1928–31), with life by S. L. Ollard as Appendix D, vol. v, pp. 1–30. A. W. Rowden, The Primates of the First Four Georges (1916), pp. 167–229. R. Hooper in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), p. 259 f.

HERRMANN, WILHELM (1846–1922), theologian. After an appointment at Halle in 1875, he became professor of systematic theology at *Marburg in 1879. He was a follower of I. *Kant in philosophy, of A. *Ritschl in theology. While, like the latter, he looked upon the Gospels as in some sense the record of a historical personality, he insisted that the Church should teach only those facts about Christ which will act upon man, e.g. His moral teaching as distinguished from His Virgin Birth or Resurrection. He held, too, that the aspects of Christ's Person which had value for the disciples are not necessarily those important for us. He went beyond Ritschl in excluding both mysticism (or personal religious experience) and metaphysics (or intellectual reasoning about ultimate reality) from religion, contending that religion is centred entirely in 'the historical Christ', whose life, however, is relevant to us only in so far as it possesses ethical value. The book in which these views are most fully expounded is Der Verkehr des Christen mit Gott (1886; Eng. trans., The Communion of the Christian with God). His other writings include Die Religion im Verhältnis zum Welterkennen und zur Sittlichkeit (1879), Ethik (1901), and Christlich-protestantische Dogmatik (in Die Kultur der Gegenwart, IV, 1 (2), 1906).

Herrmann's 'Vorlesungsdiktate' on Dogmatik were ed. by M. Rade (1925; Eng. tr., Systematic Theology, by N. Micklem and K. A. Saunders, 1927). Several of his minor writings in Gesammelte Aufsätze (ed. F. W. Schmidt, 1923), with bibl. of his works; Schriften zur Grundlegung der Theologie, ed. P. Fischer-Appelt (2 vols., Munich, 1966–7), with introd. P. Fischer-Appelt, Metaphysik im Horizont der Theologie Wilhelm Herrmanns (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, II. Reihe, xxxii; 1965), with list of his works, pp. 215–30, and bibl. pp. 233–42. G. Koch in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), cols. 275–7, s.v.

HERRNHUT. The village in Saxony, some 40 miles east of Dresden, built and settled in 1722 by a group of *Moravian Brethren (hence known on the Continent as 'Herrnhuter') under Christian David, an artisan, on a site presented by Count N. L. *Zinzendorf. Institutions exist here for the brethren and sisters of the community, and since the Second World War the Directorate of the Moravian Church in the D.D.R. (East Germany) has been centred here. In 1738 J. *Wesley made a pilgrimage here and for some weeks actively took part in the life of the community.

HERSE. See Hearse.

HERTFORD, Council of (673). A Council of bishops held on 24 Sept. 673, under *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury, to promote the reorganization of the English Church. It issued 10 canons, concerned esp. with the rights and duties of clerics and monks. Bishops were not to intrude on the diocese ('parochia') of a neighbouring bishop (can. 2); precedence among bishops was to be determined by their dates of consecration (can. 8); and monks were not to leave their monasteries without their abbot's permission (can. 4). Synods were to be held twice annually, or, if that proved impossible, at least once a year on 1 Aug., at *Clovesho (can. 7). Divorce was forbidden except for fornication, and a man divorced from his wife was not to re-marry (can. 10). The date for the keeping of Easter was settled (can. 1). The Council was the first occasion on which the English Church deliberated and acted as a unity.

*Bede, H.E., iv. 5; notes to ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 211–14. Hardouin, iii, cols. 1015–18; Mansi, xi (1765), cols. 127–30; A. W. Haddan–W. *Stubbs (ed.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, iii (1871), pp. 118–22. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 240–9 and 441–4. Hefele–Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), p. 310.

HERVETUS, GENTIAN (1499–1584), French theologian, translator, and controversialist. He was a native of Olivet, nr. Orléans, where he studied. He then became a private tutor, counting R. *Pole among his pupils, and for a short time, c. 1534 professor of Greek at Orléans university. He translated several Greek writings into Latin, among them *Aristotle's De Anima (1544) and Alexander of Aphrodisias's De Fato (1544). He then went to Rome, where he lived in the house of Cardinal Pole, whom he accompanied to *Trent in 1545. In his service he made more translations, esp. of the Greek Fathers, e.g. *Zacharias Scholasticus (1548). He also took an active part in the discussions preceding the decrees of the Council. In 1549 he entered the service of Card. M. Cervini, later Pope Marcellus II, for whom he translated works by *Theodoret (1549), St. *Chrysostom (1549), and St. *Clement of Alexandria (1551). In 1556 he was ordained priest, and shortly afterwards became Vicar General of Noyon. In 1561 he published a treatise De Reparanda Ecclesiasticorum Disciplina, in which he recommended the enforcing of episcopal residence as the chief means for the reform of the Church. In 1561 he joined the group of theologians formed by Card. Charles of Lorraine for fighting Protestantism and published a number of controversial pamphlets against it. From 1562 he was Canon of *Reims. In 1562 he again went to Trent, in the company of Charles of Lorraine. In 1564 he published a complete French translation of the decrees of the Council entitled Le Saint, Sacré, Universel et Général Concile de Trente. In his later years he wrote chiefly pamphlets, and in 1572 published a French translation of St. *Augustine's Civitas Dei.

A. Humbert in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2315–20, s.v. 'Hervet'.

HERZOG, JOHANN JAKOB (1805–82), German Reformed theologian. A pupil of F. D. *Schleiermacher and J. A. W. *Neander, he began to teach at Lausanne in 1835, where he was professor of historical theology from 1838 to 1846. Later he held professorships at Halle (from 1847) and Erlangen (from 1854). In 1848 he published De origine et pristino statu Waldensium, a study embodying much original research. The greatest of his labours, however, was the editing of the Realencyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche (22 vols., 1853–68), a standard work of reference which was adapted and condensed into an American version by P. *Schaff (3 vols., 1882–4). Both the German and American versions have been rewritten and expanded in more recent editions (see Hauck, A.).

Herzog also issued a 2nd ed. of the Realencyclopädie (18 vols., 1877–88) in conjunction with G. L. Plitt. F. Sieffert in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1899), pp. 782–7.

HESYCHASM (from Gk. ἡσυχία, 'quietness'). In the E. Church, the tradition of inner, mystical prayer associated above all with the monks of Mt. *Athos. Its distant origins extend back to the 4th–5th cent., in particular to St. *Gregory of Nyssa, *Evagrius Ponticus, the *Macarian Homilies, and *Diadochus of Photike. Other writers who exercised a formative influence on the growth of Hesychasm were St. *John Climacus, St. *Maximus the Confessor, and St. *Simeon the New Theologian. Hesychasm in its developed form finds full expression in the works of St. Gregory of Sinai, St. Nicephorus of Mt. Athos, and esp. St. *Gregory Palamas (q.v.), all of the 14th cent.

The Hesychasts attached particular importance to the unceasing repetition of the *Jesus Prayer (q.v.). To facilitate this continual recitation they recommended the aspirant to adopt a particular bodily posture—head bowed, eyes fixed on the place of the heart—and they taught that the breathing should be carefully controlled so as to keep time with the recitation of the prayer. This physical method was, of course, not regarded as the essential element in the practice of the Jesus Prayer, but simply as a useful accessory. The immediate aim of the Hesychasts was to secure what they termed 'the union of the mind with the heart', so that their prayer became 'prayer of the heart'. This prayer of the heart leads eventually, in those who are specially chosen by God, to the vision of the Divine Light, which, it was believed, can be seen—even in this present life—with the material eyes of the body, although it is first necessary for a man's physical faculties to be refined by God's grace and so rendered spiritual. The Hesychasts held this Light to be identical with the Light that surrounded the Lord at His *Transfiguration on Mt. Tabor, and to be none other than the uncreated energies of the Godhead. They considered this Light, and not (as in W. theology) God's essence, to be the object of the *Beatific Vision.

The Hesychast way of prayer, and above all the physical method, were fiercely attacked by the Calabrian Barlaam (esp. from 1337), who denounced the Athonite practices as gross superstition. He ridiculed the Hesychast claim to behold the Divine Light with bodily eyes, and he argued that the distinction which they drew between the essence and the energies of God impaired the divine unity and simplicity. Barlaam's chief opponent, St. Gregory Palamas, passionately defended Hesychasm, and was instrumental in securing its acceptance in the 'Hagioritic Tome' (1340–1) and also its formal adoption at the Councils of Constantinople in 1341, 1347, and 1351. Henceforward Hesychasm became an accepted part of the Orthodox tradition.

The chief texts embodying the Hesychast teaching on prayer are collected in the Philokalia of St. *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (q.v.).

The fullest accounts are those of M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., xi (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1777–1818, s.v. 'Palamite (Controverse)', with bibl., based largely on unpublished MS. material, and J. Meyendorff, Introduction à l'étude de Grégoire Palamas (Patristica Sorbonensia, iii, 1959; abridged Eng. tr., 1964). V. *Lossky, Vision de Dieu (Neuchâtel, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963). I. Hausherr, S.J., La Méthode d'oraison des hésychastes (Orientalia Christiana, ix, pt. 2; fasc. 36 of the series; 1927, paginated pp. 97–209); id., 'L'Hésychasme. Étude de spiritualité' in O.C.P., xxii (1956), pp. 5–40, 247–85, both repr., together with other artt. on the subject, in his Hésychasme et prière (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, clxxvi; 1966). S. Guichardan, Le Problème de la simplicité divine en Orient et en Occident aux XIVe et XVe siècles: Grégoire Palamas, Duns Scot, Georges Scholarios (thesis; Lyons, 1933). P. Adnès in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 381–99, s.v. See also bibl. to Gregory Palamas.

HESYCHIUS (fl. c. 300), Biblical textual critic. Acc. to St. *Jerome (Praef. in lib. Paralipp.) he made a revision of the text of the *Septuagint at *Alexandria, which he corrected acc. to the Hebrew. He is perhaps to be identified with an Egyptian bishop, martyred in the *Diocletianic persecution (*Eusebius, H.E., VIII. xiii), who in conjunction with his colleagues, Pachomius, Theodore, and Phileas, sent a letter to *Melitius of Lycopolis which has survived in a Latin translation.

Lat. tr. of the letter sent to Melitius in J. P. Migne, PG, x, 1565–8. F. G. Kenyon, 'Hesychius and the Text of the New Testament' in Mémorial Lagrange (1940), pp. 245–50, with reff. to older lit. H. *Lietzmann in P.W., viii (pt. 2; 1913), cols. 1327 f.

HESYCHIUS OF ALEXANDRIA (prob. 5th cent.), lexicographer. Nothing is known of his life. His elaborate lexicon (Συναγωγὴ πασῶν λέξεων κατὰ στοιχεῖον) is an important authority for the Greek dialects and the vocabulary of some of the Fathers. Based on the lexicon of Diogenianus of Heraclea (2nd cent. A.D.), it also drew on the compilations of Aristarchus, Heliodorus, Apion and others; and appears to have made extensive use of a glossary illustrating the vocabulary of St. *Cyril of Alexandria. It survives in a single 15th cent. MS. (Venice 622), extensively interpolated and disfigured, from which the reff. to the sources of the words have been excised.

Editions by J. Alberti (2 vols., Leyden, 1746–66), M. Schmidt (5 vols., Jena, 1858–68), and K. Latte (Copenhagen, 1963 ff.). A. von Blumenthal, Hesych-Studien. Untersuchungen zur Vorgeschichte der griechischen Sprache nebst lexicographischen Beiträgen (1930). H. Schultz in P.W., viii (pt. 2, 1913), cols. 1317–22, s.v. 'Hesychios (9)'.

HESYCHIUS OF JERUSALEM, St. (d. after 451), Greek ecclesiastical writer and exegete. In early life he was a monk, and in 412, acc. to Theophanes Confessor, presbyter at *Jerusalem. Little, however, is known of him beyond the fact that he was held in high repute by his contemporaries. He is said to have commented on the whole Bible. The surviving portions of his commentaries, glosses, and sermons show that he generally followed the *Alexandrian method of exegesis. He defended orthodoxy against the *Manichees, *Arians, *Apollinarians, and other heretics. It seems probable that the bulk of the long Commentary on the Psalms, ascribed by N. Antonelli, its first editor (1746), to St. *Athanasius, is his work. He was also the author of a lost Church History. The 'centuries' of ascetic maxims, printed among the works of Hesychius of Jerusalem, belong to an Abba Hesychius of Sinai (6th–7th cent.). Feast day in the Greek Church, 28 Mar.

For his Life, cf. *Cyril of Scythopolis, Vita S. Euthymii, 31 f. Works, incl. a 6th cent. Lat. version of his Comm. on Lev. and other exegetical remains, in J. P. Migne, PG, xciii, 781–1560; Comm. on Pss., ib., xxvii, 849–1344 (inter Opp. S. Athanasii). On this last see M. *Faulhaber, 'Eine wertvolle Oxforder Handschrift' in Th.Q., lxxxiii (1901), pp. 218–32. M. Faulhaber also edited Hesychius's Comm. on Is. (Freiburg i.Br., 1900). A. Vaccari, S.J., 'Esichio di Gerusalemme e il suo "Commentarius in Leviticum"' in Bessarione, xxiv (1918), pp. 8–46, incl. fragments of Gk. text. K. Jüssen, Die dogmatischen Anschauungen des Hesychius von Jerusalem (2 vols., 1931–4); id., 'Die Mariologie des Hesychius von Jerusalem' in J. Auer–H. Volk (edd.), Theologie in Geschichte und Gegenwart Michael Schmaus zum sechzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht (Munich, 1957), pp. 651–70; A. Wenger, A.A., 'Hésychius de Jérusalem. Notes sur les discours inédits et sur le texte grec du commentaire "In Leviticum"' in Revue des Études Augustiniennes, ii (1956), pp. 457–70. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 257–61; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 333 f. M. Faulhaber in C.E., vii (1910), p. 303 f.; J. Kirchmeyer, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 399–408, s.v. 'Hésychius (1) de Jérusalem'.

HEXAEMERON (Gk. ἑξαήμερον, '[a work] of six days'). The account of the creation of the universe in six days, as set forth in Gen. 1. The name is also used of the *patristic commentaries on this narrative, notably those of St. *Basil and St. *Ambrose.

HEXAPLA (Gk. ἑξαπλᾶ, 'sixfold'). The elaborate edition of the OT produced by *Origen, in which the Hebrew text, the Hebrew text transliterated into Greek characters, and the four Greek versions of *Aquila, *Symmachus, the *Septuagint (in a revised text with critical signs) and *Theodotion were arranged in parallel columns. For certain sections of the OT, up to three further Greek versions were added, making a total of nine columns. The work, begun before Origen left Alexandria for Caesarea in 231, was not finished until c. 245. It was of such huge dimensions that it was probably never copied in its entirety, and St. *Jerome expressly stated that he had used the original copy preserved in Origen's library at Caesarea. The text of the LXX in the fifth column, however, was widely copied and circulated on its own. Origen had adapted the LXX to the Hebrew, using asterisks and obeli to mark the differences, and though these signs tended to disappear when the LXX was copied on its own, this Hexaplaric recension was regarded as of great authority in the early Church. Fragments of the Hexapla have been identified at Milan and Cambridge, though in each case the first column (the Hebrew) is wanting. According to *Eusebius, Jerome, and other Fathers, the last four columns (Aquila, Symmachus, LXX and Theodotion) also existed in a separate form known as the 'Tetrapla'. See also Syro-Hexapla.

The most extensive collection of fragments is in F. *Field, Origenis Hexaplorum quae Supersunt (2 vols., Oxford, 1867–75); that at Cambridge was ed. by C. Taylor, Hebrew-Greek Cairo Genizah Palimpsests (Cambridge, 1900), pp. 1–50; those at Milan by G. *Mercati (Codices ex Ecclesiasticis Italiae Bybliothecis delecti, viii; with photographic reproduction and transcript of text, together with reconstruction of col. 1, Rome, 1958; vol. of 'Osservazioni', ib., 1965). Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 112–17; Eissfeldt, pp. 709–12, with reff. to recent lit. C. Taylor in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 14–23, s.v. See also works cited under Septuagint.

HEXATEUCH (Gk. ἕξ, 'six' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A name given by J. *Wellhausen (1876), and after him by many other modern Biblical scholars, to the first six books of the Hebrew Bible (Genesis to Joshua), in the belief that like the *Pentateuch all are compiled from a single set of literary sources.

HEXHAM, in Northumberland. The site of an abbey founded by St. *Wilfrid of York in 674. In 678 the new see of Bernicia was set up here, which survived until 821, when it was united with the bishopric of *Lindisfarne. The abbey church of St. Andrew is chiefly Early English and Transitional, and since the *Dissolution in 1536 has been used as the parish church. Only fragments of other parts of the monastery remain.

J. Raine (ed.), The Priory of Hexham, its Chronicles, Endowments and Annals (Surtees Society, xliv and xlvi; 1864–5). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi (pt. 1; ed. 1830), pp. 179–85. C. C. Hodges, The Abbey of St. Andrew, Hexham (1888). Id.–J. Gibson, Hexham and its Abbey (1919), pp. 24–122. A History of Northumberland, iii, by A. B. Hinds (1896), pp. 105–200. D. P. Kirby (ed.), Saint Wilfrid at Hexham (Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1974).

HEYLYN, PETER (1600–62), Anglican controversialist and historian. Educated at Burford and at Hart Hall and Magdalen College, *Oxford, he became a Fellow of Magdalen in 1618. In 1627 at a public disputation he defended against H. *Prideaux, the Regius professor of divinity, the visibility of the Church and soon attracted the attention of W. *Laud by his championship of *High Church views. In 1630 he was appointed by *Charles I a royal chaplain and also rector of Hemingford, Hunts. When J. *Williams, Bp. of Lincoln, declined to institute him at Hemingford, Charles made him a prebendary of *Westminster (1631), where he began a long feud with Williams which ended with Williams's suspension by the Star Chamber in 1637. Other preferments followed in the next years. His rising fame as a controversialist led him to be called in to help W. Noy (1633) to prepare the case against W. *Prynne for his Histriomastix. In 1636, at the King's command, he wrote a History of the Sabbath against the *Puritans. After 1640 his fortunes altered with the decline in the King's power. During the Civil War his issue of Mercurius Aulicus, a royalist newssheet, caused his property at Alresford to be plundered and his library dispersed. Under the Commonwealth he lived quietly at first, but later renewed his controversial writings, one of which, Ecclesia Vindicata, or the Church of England justified (1657), again brought upon him the indignation of the government. This was followed in 1659 with an attack on T. *Fuller. At the Restoration (1660) he worked for the re-instatement of the C of E in all her traditional and legal rights and was particularly anxious for the revival of the *Convocations. As a writer, Heylyn was learned, trenchant, and critical, but he was above all a partisan. Among his principal works are Historia Quinquarticularis, or a Historical Declaration of the Five Controverted Points reproached in the Name of Arminianism (1660); Ecclesia Restaurata, or the History of the Reformation (1661); Cyprianus Anglicus (1668), a defence of Laud; and Aerius Redivivus: or, The History of Presbyterianism (1670).

Photographic repr. of The History of the Sabbath (Amsterdam–New York, 1969). G. Vernon, The Life of the Learned and Reverend Doctor Peter Heylyn (1682). G. Barnard, Theologico-Historicus, or True Life of the Most Reverend Divine and Excellent Historian, Peter Heylyn, D.D. (1683), repr., with additional information from Vernon, in Heylin's Ecclesia Restaurata, ed. J. C. Robertson (1849). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), pp. 319–23.

HIBBERT, ROBERT (1770–1849), founder of the Hibbert Trust. He was born in Jamaica, was a pupil of Gilbert Wakefield at Nottingham, and studied at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from 1788 to 1791. On his estate in Jamaica he kept slaves, for whose conversion he employed a *Unitarian minister. In 1847 he founded the Hibbert Trust for 'the spread of Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form' and also 'the unfettered exercise of the right of private judgement in matters of religion'. Its aims were anti-Trinitarian and its recipients must be 'heterodox'. The Trust provides for scholarships and fellowships. Its best-known activities are the Hibbert Lectures (1878 onwards), and the publication of the Hibbert Journal (66 vols., 1902–68), which treated philosophical and religious subjects from a liberal point of view.

J. Murch, Memoir of R. Hibbert, Esquire, Founder of the Hibbert Trust, with a Sketch of its History (1874). On the Hibbert Trust see also The Christian Reformer, N.S., ix (1853), pp. 246–9. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), p. 344.

HICKES, GEORGE (1642–1715), *Nonjuring bishop. Educated at Oxford, Hickes first served as Chaplain to the Duke of Lauderdale, *Charles II's Vice-regent in Scotland, where he greatly aided the episcopalian interest. In 1680 he became Vicar of All Hallows, Barking. In 1683 he published Jovian, a major work in defence of the *Divine Right of Kings, and in the same year he was appointed Dean of *Worcester. He opposed the pro-RC measures of *James II, but in 1689 he refused to take the oaths to William and Mary, and in 1690 he was deprived of his deanery. In his retirement, he remained firm in his principles. In 1694 he was consecrated titular Bp. of Thetford by the Nonjurors; and after the death in 1709 of W. Lloyd (formerly Bp. of *Norwich), he was their acknowledged head. Being anxious, in opposition to T. *Ken, to continue the Nonjuring succession, he consecrated three bishops in 1713, viz. J. *Collier, S. Hawes, and N. *Spinckes. Hickes was a man of great piety and wide scholarship. Besides his very learned Linguarum veterum Septentrionalium Thesaurus (1703–5), his writings included The Case of Infant Baptism (1683); Speculum Beatae Virginis (1686); Institutiones Grammaticae Anglo-Saxonicae et Moeso-Gothicae (1689); Of the Christian Priesthood (1707); and Of the Dignity of the Episcopal Order (1707). The posthumous publication of Hickes's Constitution of the Catholic Church and the Nature and Consequences of Schism (1716) was the immediate occasion of the *Bangorian Controversy.

His Two Treatises on the Christian Priesthood and on the Dignity of the Episcopal Order were ed. by I. B[arrow] in L.A.C.T. (3 vols., 1847–8). There are frequent reff. to him in T. *Hearne's Remains and Collections. J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902), pp. 91–113 and passim; D. C. Douglas, English Scholars, 1660–1730 (1939), ch. iv, pp. 93–119. W. D. Macray in D.N.B., xxvi (1891), pp. 350–4.

HICKS, ELIAS (1748–1830), American *Quaker. He was born of Quaker parents at Hempstead, Long Island. After taking little interest in religion as a young man, he gradually came to feel a call to preaching and from 1779 onwards made evangelistic tours, becoming a commanding influence. He also took up the cause of the negroes, esp. in Observations on the Slavery of the Africans and their Descendants (1811). He strongly opposed the creation of any credal basis for Quakerism, notably in his Doctrinal Epistle (1824), where he protested against insistence on the orthodox doctrines of the Person of Christ and the Atonement. A schism ensued (1827–8) at Philadelphia and elsewhere between his followers (the 'Liberal Branch', called by their opponents 'Hicksites') and the orthodox, which had repercussions in England (see Friends, Society of).

Some of his discourses, taken down in shorthand by M. T. C. Gould, were publd. at Philadelphia in 1825. [V. Hicks–R. Seaman (edd.)], Journal of the Life and Religious Labours of E. Hicks, written by himself (ed. 3, New York, 1832). H. W. Wilbur, The Life and Labours of Elias Hicks (Philadelphia, 1910); E. Russell, The Separation after a Century (ib., 1928); B. Forbush, Elias Hicks, Quaker Liberal (New York, 1956); R. W. Doherty, The Hicksite Separation (New Brunswick, 1967). R. M. *Jones in Dict. Amer. Biog., ix (1932), p. 6 f.

HICKS, GEORGE DAWES (1862–1941), philosopher. Educated at Owens College, Manchester, at Manchester College, Oxford, and under W. Wundt at Leipzig, he was a *Unitarian minister at Islington from 1897 to 1903 and professor of philosophy at University College, London, from 1904 to 1928. From an intensive interest in I. *Kant, he became a life-long student of the theory of knowledge. In his *Hibbert Lectures on The Philosophical Bases of Theism (1937) he defended the traditional Christian position, arguing that besides the strictly intellectual grounds of theistic belief there was a legitimate place for the argument from religious experience. His other writings mainly took the form of contributions to periodicals, esp. the Hibbert Journal (with which he was closely associated from 1902 until his death) and the Proceedings of the Aristotelian Society; but he published in 1932 a study of Berkeley* and in 1937 Critical Realism.

A. Dorward in D.N.B., 1941–1950, pp. 387–8.

HICKSITES. See Hicks, Elias.

HIERARCHY. The word has been in use for the ordered body of the Christian clergy since patristic times. RC theologians distinguish the hierarchy of order and that of pastoral government. The former is subdivided into the three grades of Divine institution (bishops, priests, and deacons) on the one hand and the subdiaconate and minor orders, instituted by the Church, on the other. In the hierarchy of pastoral government, only the Papacy and the episcopate are held to be of Divine institution. All other grades are of ecclesiastical origin. The latter are divided into two classes, viz. those exercising an authority derived directly from the Pope, e.g. cardinals, legates, and vicars apostolic (CIC, cans. 230–328), and those whose authority derives from the bishop, e.g. diocesan synods, vicars general, &c. The threefold hierarchical order of bishops, priests, and deacons has been retained by the C of E in common with the RC and E. Churches.

HIEROME, HIERONYMUS. See Jerome.

HIERONYMIAN MARTYROLOGY (Lat. Hieronymianum). A famous *Martyrology (q.v.), based on an earlier Greek martyrology of Asia Minor, which was composed in Italy in the middle of the 5th cent. It gives, after the calendar date in the year, the names of the saints commemorated on that day, the places of their tombs (or alternatively where they were venerated), and other details connected with their cultus. It is so named from a statement in an apocryphal correspondence preceding the text that its compilation was the work of St. *Jerome.

Ed. princeps by F. Fiorentini (Lucca, 1668). Text also in D. *Vallarsi's ed. of Jerome, xi (Verona, 1742), cols. 475–524; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxx, 433–86. Crit. ed., with magisterial discussion, by G. B. *de Rossi–L. *Duchesne in AA.SS., Nov. II (pt. 1; 1894), pp. [1]–[195], with text of 'Bernensis', 'Epternacensis', and 'Wisseburgensis' in three columns, with the further text of the 'Laureshamensis' for 38 days, and with prolegomena, pp. [i]–[lxxxii]; 'Commentarius Perpetuus', by H. *Quentin, O.S.B.–H. *Delehaye, S.J., as Nov. II (pt. 2; 1931). A. Bugnini, C.M., in E.C., viii (1952), cols. 249–52, s.v. 'Martirologio, III, 2'.

HIERUSALEM. A Latinized form of the word *Jerusalem (Gk. Ἱερουσαλήμ).

HIGH ALTAR. The main altar of a church, traditionally standing in the centre of the east end. In ancient English Gothic churches the length was commonly the same as that of the splay of the east window, which formed the *reredos. Acc. to modern RC practice there should be only one altar in the principal part of the church, so placed as to form the focal point, and sufficiently separated from the wall to allow Mass to be celebrated facing the people. The altar is normally made of stone, though other solid material may be used. It is normally fixed and consecrated. Either on or near the altar there is to be a cross (crux) and two, four or six candlesticks.

HIGH CHURCHMEN. The group in the C. of E which esp. stresses her historical continuity with Catholic Christianity, and hence upholds a 'high' conception of the authority of the Church, of the claims of the episcopate and of the nature of the Sacraments. Though the existence of the school can be traced back to the Elizabethan age, when such men as R. *Bancroft and R. *Hooker resisted the attacks of the Puritan Reformers, the actual title is not found till the end of the 17th cent. In the 17th cent. the tradition was maintained by L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, and a host of others. Their doctrine of the *Divine Right of Kings brought a close alliance with the Stuarts, and thus, finding their position compromised when William III became king, the High Churchmen who were more eminent in piety and learning mostly went into schism as '*Non-Jurors'. Those who remained in the Established Church were excluded from ecclesiastical preferment as tainted with Jacobitism and for the most part fell into obscurity. The continuance of High Church opinions is evidenced, however, by such men as J. *Butler and S. Johnson, and in the next century by the success of the Tracts for the Times among the older generation. It was the *Oxford Movement which reasserted their position in the Church, though only after the bitterest struggle.

G. W. O. Addleshaw, The High Church Tradition (1941). G. Every, S.S.M., The High Church Party 1688–1718 (C.H.S., 1956).

HIGH COMMISSION, Court of. From 1549 ecclesiastical commissions to check heresy and enforce the forms of worship prescribed by public authority were frequently appointed in England. From 1559 the power of the Crown to create such bodies was expressly recognized by the Elizabethan Act of *Supremacy. The actual term 'High Commission' begins to appear c. 1570 and is employed normally after 1580, a development corresponding with the elevation of an ad hoc commission into a permanent court. At this stage the visitatorial function of the commission declined by comparison with the multiplication of suits between party and party, while professional lawyers played an increasing part and rigid procedure developed. The High Commission also became the normal court of appeal from the ancient ecclesiastical courts in doctrinal and disciplinary suits. Together with the other conciliar courts, it incurred the dislike and fear of the common lawyers, even Lord Burghley, Elizabeth's first minister, denouncing the procedure by the oath ex officio as savouring of the *Inquisition. The Court of High Commission was abolished by the Star Chamber Act of 1641. In 1686 *James II instituted an Ecclesiastical Commission, which some authorities regard as a revival of the Court of High Commission. This in turn was discontinued in 1688 and condemned in the Bill of Rights. Apart from the central High Commission, there existed certain regional commissions, e.g. that appointed for the two dioceses of Bristol and *Gloucester in 1574, and that for the Northern Province, which, closely associated with the Council in the North, took a leading part in the repression of *recusancy.

The greater part of the Act Books and other papers belonging to the Registry of the Commission at London seems to have been lost, having probably been destroyed by order of Parliament during the Civil War; some records, however, survive among the State Papers. A large part of the papers of the Commission at Durham has survived; ed., in part, by W. H. D. Longstaffe, The Acts of the High Commission Court within the Diocese of Durham (Surtees Society, xxxiv; 1858); and an Act Book of the Commission at Gloucester is extant among the diocesan records. R. G. Usher, The Rise and Fall of the High Commission (Oxford, 1913; repr., with introd. by P. Tyler, and further bibl., 1968). The only other works of significance on the Court of High Commission in general are J. S. Burn, The High Commission. Notices of the Court, and its Proceedings (1865), and W. *Stubbs in Report of the Commissioners Appointed to Inquire into the Constitution and Working of the Ecclesiastical Courts, i (Parliamentary Papers, 1883, xxiv), Historical Appendix I, p. 49 f. (p. 123 of MS. pagination). On the Court of High Commission in the North, R. R. Reid, The King's Council in the North (1921), passim. F. D. Price, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Causes for the Dioceses of Bristol and Gloucester, 1574' in Transactions of the Bristol and Gloucester Archaeological Society for 1937 (1938), pp. 61–184. R. G. Usher in D.E.C.H., pp. 275–8, s.v.

HIGH MASS (Missa solemnis). In the W. Church for centuries the normal, though not the most usual, form of the Mass. Its essential feature was the presence of the *deacon and *subdeacon assisting the celebrant; they were accompanied by the choir, the *thurifer, and a number of servers or *acolytes. Their respective functions were carefully regulated, the chief office of the deacon being the chanting of the *Gospel and the *Ite, Missa Est, and that of the subdeacon the chanting of the *Epistle; whereas the choir and people sang the *proper and *common respectively. Other distinctive features were the use of *incense and the giving of the *Kiss of peace.

Since the Second *Vatican Council the term 'High Mass' has disappeared from official documents and a more typical pattern of celebration is advocated; greater emphasis is placed on the part of the congregation and on the role of the deacon as their leader, as well as on his traditional functions of assisting the celebrant, while the celebrant is conceived as president of the liturgical assembly.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 257–72; Eng. tr., pp. 195–207.

'HIGH PLACES', The (Heb. מִבָּמוֹת). In the OT the local sanctuaries other than *Jerusalem at which Jehovah was worshipped with sacrifice in early times. Among the most renowned were *Bethel and Gibeon. The cultus, which had heathen affinities and was often accompanied by immoral rites, was denounced by many of the Prophets (*Amos, *Hosea, &c.). The 'high places' were finally destroyed under Josiah in 621 B.C. (2 Kings 23. 5–20).

L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'La Notion biblique du haut-lieu' in R. Bibl., lv (1948), pp. 245–78, 438–45; W. F. Albright, 'The High Places in Ancient Palestine' in Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, iv (1957), pp. 242–58. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 107–13, with bibl. p. 438 f.; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 284–8, with bibl. p. 539.

HIGH PRAYERS. A title for service in certain college chapels in Oxford on great festivals.

HIGH PRIEST. In the OT the head of the *Levitical priesthood whose institution and vestments are described in Exod. 28. Acc. to this (*P) account, *Aaron, the brother of *Moses, was appointed the first high priest by Jehovah. The chief function of the high priest was the superintendence of the Temple worship, and his special prerogatives the offering of the Liturgy on the Day of *Atonement, when he alone was allowed to enter the Holy of Holies, and the consulting of '*Urim and Thummim'. His exalted office required an unusually high degree of ritual purity, which forbade him to 'defile himself' with the dead even in the case of his nearest relations. His vestments, more precious than those of the other priests, included a violet robe adorned with bells and tassels, a special mitre with a golden plate in front bearing the inscription 'Holy to the Lord', and a breastplate with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel.

In post-exilic times, the High Priest was the head of the Jewish state as well as the principal religious functionary. At first the office may have been for life and hereditary; but under *Antiochus Epiphanes and his successors the appointment and deposition of high priests passed more and more into the authority of the secular powers. In the time of the *Herods and the Roman occupation the high priests were usually taken from the most influential families; they seem to have professed a materialistic creed, believing neither in an immortal soul nor in a future life, and, acc. to the *Talmud, they lived in worldliness and luxury.

Christian theology holds that the Saviour, by His death on the Cross, abolished for the redeemed the high-priestly office and sacrifices, perfecting them in His own Person. This teaching is developed in the NT in the Ep. to the Hebrews, which sets forth the Christ as the perfect High Priest, unique and immortal, of whom the long series of imperfect high priests under the old dispensation had been but types and shadows.

E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, ii (ed. 4, 1907), pp. 267–77, with bibl. W. Graf Baudissin, Die Geschichte des alttestamentlichen Priesterthums (1889), esp. pp. 26–8, 88 f., 127–30, 140–2, 251–3. F. Stummer, 'Gedanken über die Stellung des Hohenpriesters in der alttestamentlichen Gemeinde' in Episcopus. Studien über das Bischofsamt seiner Eminenz Michael Kardinal von Faulhaber . . . zum 80. Geburtstag dargebracht (Regensburg, 1949), pp. 19–48. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 266–74, with bibl., p. 450; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 397–403, with bibl., p. 546. On the High Priest's vesture, see J. Gabriel, Untersuchungen über das alttestamentliche Hohepriestertum, mit besonderer Berücksichtigung des hohepriesterlichen Ornates (Theologische Studien der Österreichischen Leo-Gesellschaft, xxxiii; 1933). F. Buhl in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 251–6, s.v. 'Hoher Priester'; W. Baudissin in H.D.B., iv (1902), pp. 67–97, s.v. 'Priests and Levites', esp. p. 83 f.; G. Schrenk in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 265–84, s.v. ἱερεύς [ἀρχιερεύς]. For the conception of Christ as the High Priest, see bibl. to Hebrews, Ep. to the.

HIGHER CRITICISM. The critical study of the literary methods and sources used by the authors of (esp.) the Books of the OT and NT, in distinction from *Textual ('Lower') Criticism, which is concerned solely with the recovery from extant MSS. and other evidence of the text of the Books as it left their authors' hands. The word came into currency from its use by W. R. *Smith in The Old Testament in the Jewish Church (1881; p. 105).

HILARION, St. (c. 291–371). The founder of the *anchoritic life in Palestine. A native of Palestine and the son of pagan parents, he was converted to Christianity at *Alexandria, and under the influence of St. *Antony retired for a short time to the Egyptian desert as a hermit. In 306 he returned to his own land, where he settled in the wilderness south of Majuma, near Gaza, to live a life of extreme asceticism. As his fame and miraculous gifts became increasingly known, enormous crowds visited him, to escape from whom he returned c. 353 to Egypt. Later he went to Libya, Sicily, and Cyprus, where he died. He was well known to St. *Epiphanius, to whom St. *Jerome, the chief authority for his life, was doubtless mainly indebted for his knowledge of him. Feast day, 21 Oct.

Jerome's Vita (c. A.D. 386–91) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxiii, 29–54; cf. *Sozomen, H.E., III. xiv, V. x, and VI. xxxii. The letter of Epiphanius, mentioned by Jerome as his source, is lost. The attempt of W. Israel, 'Die Vita S. Hilarionis des Hieronymus' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xxiii (1880), 129–65, to deny all historicity to Hilarion has been generally rejected; cf. O. Zöckler, 'Hilarion von Gaza. Eine Rettung' in Neue Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie, iii (1894), pp. 147–78. G. Grützmacher, Hieronymus, ii (1906), pp. 87–91. E. Coleiro, 'St. Jerome's Lives of the Hermits' in V.C., xi (1957), pp. 161–78. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., vii (1910), p. 347 f.

HILARY OF ARLES, St. (403–49), Abp. of Arles and leader of the *Semi-Pelagian party. He became a monk at *Lérins, under the influence of his kinsman, St. *Honoratus, and in 428–9 he succeeded him as Abp. of *Arles. In this capacity he presided over several councils, among them the First Council of *Orange (441) and that of *Vaison (442). In 444, by deposing a bishop, Chelidonius, Hilary appears to have exceeded his rights as *metropolitan, and on the dethroned bishop's appeal to *Leo I, the Pope deprived Arles of its metropolitical jurisdiction and obtained from Emp.

Valentinian III a decree granting Rome supreme authority over the Church in Gaul. Hilary wrote a Life of Honoratus which is still extant. Feast day, 5 May.

Fragments of Hilary's works collected in edd. of Leo's Opera by P. *Quesnel (1675) and P. and H. *Ballerini (1753–7; qq.v.). Repr. from the latter in J. P. Migne, PL, I, 1213–92, with additions. B. Kolon, O.F.M., Die Vita S. Hilarii Arelatensis (1925), argues that the Vita (repr. in J. P. Migne, l.c., 1219–46) ascribed by Ps.-*Gennadius to an otherwise unknown Honoratus, Bp. of Marseilles, is really the work of a certain Reverentius and historically almost valueless. Crit. texts of Vitae ed. S. Cavallin (Skrifter utgivna av Vetenskaps-Societen i Lund, xl; 1952). Bardenhewer, iv, p. 571 f.; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 455 f.

HILARY OF POITIERS, St. (c. 315–67), the '*Athanasius of the West'. A convert from *Neoplatonism, he was elected Bp. of Poitiers c. 353 and became at once involved in the *Arian disputes. His defence of orthodoxy led to his condemnation at the Synod of Biterrae (356) and to a four-year exile to Phrygia by the Emp. Constantius. In 359 he defended the cause of orthodoxy at the Council of *Seleucia. He became the leading and most respected Latin theologian of his age. His chief works were a treatise 'De Trinitate' (against the Arians), in twelve books; 'De Synodis', very valuable for the history of the period; and the so-called 'Opus Historicum'. His other writings include commentaries on the Pss. and Mt., in which he closely followed *Origen. His style is difficult and obscure. In matters of detail his doctrinal position deviated at points from later orthodoxy, e.g. he held an almost *Monophysite Christology. In 1851 he was proclaimed by *Pius IX a '*Doctor of the Church'. His feast day (in BCP, 13 Jan.; in the RC Calendar, 14 Jan.; from 1969, 13 Jan.) gives its name to the spring term at the Law Courts, and at Oxford and Durham universities.

Editio princeps, by D. *Erasmus (Basle, 1523). Greatly improved text by P. *Coustant, O.S.B. (Paris, 1693), one of the best of the *Maurist editions; further improved by F. S. *Maffei (2 vols., Verona, 1730). This last is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, ix and x; further texts in Supplement to PL by A. Hamman, O.F.M., i (1958), cols. 241–86 (inc. 'Tractatus mysteriorum': see below). Crit. text in course of publication in C.S.E.L., ed. A. Zingerle–A. Feder, 1891 ff. Eng. tr., with valuable introds., ed. W. *Sanday, in N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, vol. ix, 1899; also of his 'De Trinitate' by S. McKenna, C.SS.R. (Fathers of the Church, 1954). Hilary's Tractatus Mysteriorum (or 'De Mysteriis'), which treats of NT types in the OT, first publd. from fragments in the Arezzo MS., which contains the 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae', by J. F. Gamurrini (Rome, 1887); new ed. by J. P. Brisson in S.C., xix (1947). Three certainly genuine Hymns of Hilary, who was the first known hymn-writer of the W. Church, also ed. J. F. Gamurrini from the Arezzo MS. (1887); cf. A. J. Mason, 'The First Latin Christian Poet', in J.T.S., v (1904), pp. 413–32 and 636. A. L. Feder, S.J., Studien zu Hilarius von Poitiers (Sb. (Wien), clxii, Abh. 4, 1909; clxvi, Abh. 5, 1910; clxix, Abh. 5, 1913). P. Smulders, S.J., La Doctrine trinitaire de S. Hilaire de Poitiers (Analecta Gregoriana, xxxii; Rome, 1944). E. Goffinet, C.SS.R., L'Utilisation d'Origène dans le Commentaire des Psaumes de saint Hilaire de Poitiers (Studia Hellenistica, xiv; 1965). J. Daniélou, S.J., H. I. Marrou and others, Hilaire de Poitiers, évêque et docteur. Cinq conférences données à Poitiers à l'occasion du XVIe centenaire de sa mort (Études Augustiniennes, 1968); E. R. Labande (ed.), Hilaire et son temps. Actes du colloque de Poitiers . . . à l'occasion du XVIe centenaire de la mort de saint Hilaire (ib., 1969). J. Doignon, Hilaire de Poiters avant l'exil (Études Augustiniennes, 1971). Modern lives by J. G. Cazenove (London, 1883), A. Largent ('Les Saints', 1902), P. Galtier, S.J. (Paris, 1960), and others. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 365–93; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 361–6. J. G. Cazenove in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 54–66; X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., vi (1920), cols. 2388–2462, with bibl.; C. Kannengiesser, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 466–99, s.v. 'Hilaire (4) de Poitiers', with bibl.

HILDA, St. (614–80), Abbess of Whitby. Descended from the Northumbrian royal line, she was baptized at Easter 627 by *Paulinus, Bp. of *York. When her sister, Hereswith, had been professed as a nun at Chelles, near Paris, Hilda sought to join her; but having reached East Anglia she was recalled by St. *Aidan, who in 649 made her abbess of a religious house at Hartlepool. In 657 she founded a monastery for both men and women at 'Streanaeshalch', later named Whitby by the Danes, which rapidly grew in fame and influence. At the celebrated Synod of *Whitby (664), Hilda sided with St. *Colman in his defence of the Celtic customs against St. *Wilfrid, though after the decision had gone in favour of the Romanizing party, she loyally accepted it. Feast day, 17 Nov.; 18 Nov. in the American BCP (1979).

The principal authority is *Bede, H.E., iii. 24 f. and iv. 23; notes in ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), p. 189 f., 244–8. E. Venables in D.C.B., xxvi (1891), p. 381 f.

HILDEBERT OF LAVARDIN (1056–1133), Abp. of Tours, poet and canonist. He was born at Lavardin near Montoire and came to be Master of the cathedral school of Le Mans, and Archdeacon in 1091. In 1096 he was elected Bp. of Le Mans. He had a powerful opponent in William Rufus, who, alleging that Hildebert had attacked the royal castle from the towers of his cathedral, forced him to follow him to England in 1099. On regaining his freedom (1100) he went to Rome, where *Paschal II confirmed him in his office. After his return to Le Mans he continued the building of his cathedral and made a reputation as a powerful preacher. He was an ardent defender of the freedom of the Church and of sound doctrine; he expelled *Henry of Lausanne (q.v.) from his diocese, consecrated his cathedral on its completion in 1120, and probably took part in the First *Lateran Council of 1123. In 1125 he became Abp. of Tours. He was involved in a dispute with King Louis VI and presided over the important provincial Synod of Nantes (1127).

Hildebert is famous chiefly for his literary works. He had studied the best classical authors, and his Latin, superior to that of most of his contemporaries, was looked to as the model of elegant style in the Middle Ages. The original printed collection of his works contains much spurious material. Certainly genuine are most of the Letters, the 'Vitae' of St. *Radegunde and St. *Hugh of Cluny, the 'Liber de Querimonia', the longer poems, 'De Sacrificio Missae' and 'Vita Mariae Aegyptiacae', and over fifty other shorter poems on sacred and secular subjects.

Collected ed. of his Works by A. Beaugendre, O.S.B. (Paris, 1708); repr. with certain alterations by J. J. Bourassé in J. P. Migne PL, clxxi, 45–1458. Crit. ed. of Carmina Minora by A. B. Scott (Teub., 1969). M. Hauréau, 'Notice sur les mélanges poétiques d'Hildebert de Lavardin' in Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale et autres Bibliothèques, xxviii (pt. 2; 1878), pp. 289–448. A. Dieudonné, Hildebert de Lavardin, évêque du Mans, archevêque de Tours (1056–1133), sa vie, ses lettres (Paris, 1898; repr. from Revue historique et archéologique du Maine). F. X. Barth, Hildebert von Lavardin (1056–1133) und das kirchliche Stellenbesetzungsrecht (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, ed. U. Stutz, xxxiv–xxxvi; 1906); P. von Moos, Hildebert von Lavardin 1056–1133 (Pariser historische Studien, iii; 1965). A. B. Scott, 'The Biblical Allegories of Hildebert of Le Mans' in Sacris Erudiri, xvi (1965), pp. 404–24; W. von den Steinen, 'Les Sujets d'inspiration chez les poètes latins du XIIIe siècle: I. Hildebert et l'humanisme' in Cahiers de Civilisation médiévale, ix (1966), pp. 165–75. Raby, pp. 265–73. Manitius, iii, pp. 853–65. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Les Sermons d'Hildebert', R. Bén., xlvii (1935), pp. 12–51. H. Böhmer in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 67–71, s.v.; P. von Moos in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 502–4, s.v.

HILDEBRAND. See Gregory VII.

HILDEFONSUS, St., of Toledo. See Ildefonsus, St., of Toledo.

HILDEGARD, St. (1098–1179), Abbess of Rupertsberg, near Bingen, the 'Sibyl of the Rhine'. Born of noble family at Böckelheim on the R. Nahe and subject to supernatural religious experiences from early childhood, she was brought up by Bl. Jutta, a recluse in a cell on the adjacent Diessenberg, and c. 1116 received into the *Benedictine community which had gathered round Jutta. In 1136 she succeeded Jutta as Abbess. Under the direction of her confessor, she began to record some of her visions. Having won the approval of the Abp. of Mainz, between 1141 and 1151 she dictated her Scivias (prob. an abbreviation of 'sciens vias'). Meanwhile *Eugenius III, under the influence of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux, gave his guarded approbation of her visions (1147). Sometime between 1147 and 1152 she moved her community to Rupertsberg, near Bingen, where a large convent was built. Thence she undertook many journeys in the Rhineland and, prob. in 1165, founded a daughter house at Eibingen, near Rüdesheim. Towards the end of her life she had difficulty with the Chapter of Mainz concerning an excommunicate man who had been buried near her church; and for a short time the convent was placed under an interdict.

Hildegard seems to have exerted a wide influence, numbering the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa and various kings, prelates, and saints among her correspondents. Her Scivias, divided into three books containing 26 visions, contain inter alia denunciations of the vices of the world and enigmatic prophecies of disaster. Many of her letters and reported speeches are in the same strain. Her Physicae Elementorum, Fluminum aliquot Germaniae, Metallorum, Leguminum, Fructuum et Herbarum, Arborum et Arbustorum, Piscium denique Volatilium et Animantium Terrae Natura et Operationes and her Liber Compositae Medicinae reflect a degree of scientific observation unusual in medieval times. Her theological works include an Explicatio Symboli S. Athanasii, an Expositio Evangeliorum, and an Expositio Regulae S. Benedicti, as well as the answers to questions put by the *Cistercians of Villars in Brabant. She also compiled a Liber Vitae Meritorum and composed various carmina for her nuns. Miracles, already reported during her life, mutiplied at her tomb after her death. Various efforts to secure her canonization during the 13th and 14th cents. were unsuccessful; but from the 15th cent. she is called a saint in the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day, 17 Sept. (observed in several German dioceses).

A number of her works are collected in J. P. Migne, PL, cxcvii (the text of the 'Scivias' is particularly defective); further works ed. J. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra, viii (Monte Cassino, 1882). Modern ed. of her 'Liber de Causis et Curis' by P. Kaiser (Teub., 1903), her 'Carmina' by G. M. Dreves in A.H.M.A. 1 (1907), pp. 483–92, and 'Scivias' by Adelgundis Fürkötter, O.S.B., and Angela Carlevaris (C.C., Continuatio Mediaevalis, xliii–xliiiA; 1978). Collection of works tr. into modern German by J. Bühler (Leipzig, 1922); Germ. tr. of Scivias by Maura Böckeler (Berlin, 1928; ed. 2, Salzburg, 1954), and of her correspondence by Adelgundis Führkötter, O.S.B. (Salzburg, 1965). AA.SS., Sept. V (1755), pp. 629–701, incl. Lat. text of contemporary life by the monk Godefridus, pp. 679–82, cont. by Theodoricus, pp. 683–97 (repr. in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., cols. 91–150); modern Fr. tr. of this life publd. at Paris, 1907. 'Acta Inquisitionis de Virtutibus et Miraculis S. Hildegardis', ed. P. Bruder in Anal. Boll., ii (1883), pp. 116–29. Modern lives of St. Hildegard by P. Franche ('Les Saints'; 1903), J. May (Kempten–Munich, 1911), and Francesca M. Steel (London [1914]). C. [J.] Singer, 'The Scientific Views and Visions of Saint Hildegard' in id. (ed.), Studies in the History and Method of Science, i (1917), pp. 1–55; H. Fischer, Die heilige Hildegard von Bingen. Die erste deutsche Naturforscherin und Ärztin (Münchener Beiträge zur Geschichte und Literatur der Naturwissenschaften und Medizin, Hftt. vii–viii; 1927). L. Bronarski, Die Lieder der hl. Hildegard (Veröffentlichungen der Gregorianischen Akademie zu Freiburg (Schweiz), ix; 1922). H. Liebeschütz, Das allegorische Weltbild der heiligen Hildegard von Bingen (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, xvi; 1930). Marianna Schräder, O.S.B.–Adelgundis Führkötter, O.S.B., Die Echtheit des Schrifttums der Hildegard von Bingen. Quellenkritische Untersuchungen (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, vi; Cologne, 1956). H. Schipperges, Die Welt der Engel bei Hildegard von Bingen (Salzburg [1963]). L. Baillet, O.S.B., 'Les Miniatures du "Scivias" de Sainte Hildegarde conservé à la Bibliothèque de Wiesbaden' in Fondation Eugène Piot. Monuments et mémoires publiés par l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, xix (1911), pp. 49–149, with plates. I. Herwegen, O.S.B., in L.Th.K., v (1933), cols. 30–2, s.v., with further bibl. Marianna Schrader, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 505–21, s.v.

HILGENFELD, ADOLF (1823–1907), German Protestant theologian. He taught in the university of Jena from 1847 till his death, and was editor of the Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie from 1858. He adopted the principles of F. C. *Baur and the *Tübingen School, but gave them a somewhat less radical cast, e.g. he defended the genuineness of 1 Thess., Phil., Philem. He wrote extensively on later Judaism, Biblical criticism, and Patristics, and was the author of an important edition of the extra-canonical NT books, Novum Testamentum extra Canonem receptum (4 vols., 1866).

List of his works, with brief life by Heinrich Hilgenfeld, son (Leipzig, 1906); additional material in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, l (1908), pp. 14–24. Obituary notice by F. Nippold, ib., pp. 154–75. [The Zeitschrift finally came to an end in 1914.]

HILLEL, School of. The followers of Hillel, an influential rabbinical teacher of the time of Christ. In opposition to the school of *Shammai, the Hillelites upheld a liberal and lenient interpretation of the *Law, and their attitude in controversy, whether religious or political, towards Jew and Gentile alike, was tolerant and conciliatory. The influence of the Hillelites was at its greatest after the destruction of the Temple (A.D. 70). The *Talmud records the many differences of opinion between the two schools.

A. Schwarz, Die Controversen der Schammaiten und Hilleliten, i (1893). I. Sonne, 'The Schools of Shammai and Hillel seen from Within' in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume, on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday. English Section (New York, 1945), pp. 275–91, with refs.; A. Guttmann, 'Hillelites and Shammaites—a clarification' in Hebrew Union College Annual, xxviii (1957), pp. 115–26. G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Three Centuries of the Christian Era, i (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1927), pp. 72–82, with notes in vol. iii (1930), pp. 29–31. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, ii (ed. 4, 1907), esp. pp. 424–8. H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (ed. 5, 1930), pp. 118–22 (Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1931), pp. 108–10, with notes, pp. 301–6. F. J. *Delitzsch, Jesus und Hillel. Mit Rücksicht auf Renan und Geiger verglichen (1866); P. Rieger, Hillel und Jesus. Ein Wort zur Versöhnung (1904). J. Klausner, Jesus of Nazareth. His Life, Times and Teaching (Eng. tr. from Heb. by H. Danby, 1925), esp. pp. 223–7.

HILTON, WALTER (d. 1396), English mystic. Of his life little is known. He incepted in *canon law, prob. at Cambridge, and after a period as a hermit became an *Augustinian canon at Thurgarton Priory, Notts, where he died. His spiritual writings were widely read in England in the 15th cent. The most famous, the Scala Perfectionis (which is written in English; first printed in 1494), describes the reformation of the defaced image of God in the soul in two stages: the first 'in faith', the second 'in faith and feeling', separated by a mystical 'dark night' in which the soul is detached from earthly things and directed to the things of the spirit. The expression 'reform in feeling' derives from Rom. 12. 2 (in novitate sensus vestri). His teaching is influenced by St. *Augustine, St. *Bernard, the *Victorines and St. *Thomas Aquinas. It is critical of some aspects of Richard Rolle and shows limited affinities with the anonymous Cloud of Unknowing. His other writings in English include an Epistle to a Devout Man in Temporal Estate (first printed 1494), The Song of Angels (first printed 1521), expositions of the Psalms Qui Habitat and Bonum Est and the Benedictus*, and an expanded translation of meditations of James of Milan (Stimulus Amoris). His Latin works include four epistles and an academic quaestio on the veneration of images.

Crit. edd. by B. Wallner of his expositions on the Qui Habitat and Bonum Est (Lund Studies in English, xxiii; 1954) and on the Benedictus (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. I, Bd. liii, No. 1; 1957). Modernized edd. of the Scala Perfectionis by E. *Underhill (London, 1923), [F.] G. Sitwell, O.S.B. (ib., 1953), and with introd. by L. Sherley-Price ('Penguin Classics', 1957); a crit. ed. is being prepared for E.E.T.S. Modernized ed. of The Minor Works of Walter Hilton by Dorothy Jones (London, 1929). The Middle English text of his Epistle to a Devout Man in Temporal Estate is ed. C. Horstmann, Yorkshire Writers, Richard Rolle of Hampole, i (1895), pp. 264–92. Modernized ed. of Walter Hilton's tr. of the Stimulus Amoris, formerly attributed to St. *Bonaventure, by Clare Kirchberger as The Goad of Love (London, 1952). W. R. *Inge, Studies of English Mystics (1906), Lecture III, pp. 80–123; Helen L. Gardner, 'Walter Hilton and the Mystical Tradition in England' in Essays and Studies, xxii (1936), pp. 103–27; id., 'The Text of The Scale of Perfection' in Medium Ævum, v (1936), pp. 11–30; G. Sitwell, O.S.B., 'Contemplation in the "Scale of Perfection" ' in Downside Review, lxvii (1949), pp. 276–90, lxviii (1950), pp. 21–34 and 271–89; Joy M. Russell-Smith, 'Walter Hilton and a Tract in defence of the Veneration of Images' in Dominican Studies, vii (1954), pp. 180–214; G. Sitwell, O.S.B., 'English Spiritual Writers. VII. Walter Hilton' in Clergy Review, xliv (1959), pp. 321–32; Joy Russell-Smith, 'Walter Hilton' in The Month, N.S., xxii (1959), pp. 133–48, repr. in J. Walsh, S.J. (ed.), Pre-Reformation English Spirituality (1966), pp. 182–97. [M.] D. Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 100–18. A. C. Hughes, Walter Hilton's Direction to Contemplatives (Rome diss., 1962). J. E. Milosh, The Scale of Perfection and the English Mystical Tradition (Madison, Milwaukee, and London, 1966). B.R.U.C., pp. 305–6. M. D. Knowles–Joy Russell-Smith in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 525–30, s.v.

HINCMAR (c. 806–82), Abp. of *Reims. He was educated at the abbey of *St.-Denis, and in 822 accompanied his teacher, Abbot Hilduin, to the court of *Louis the Pious. In 834 he officially entered the King's service, and after Louis's death attached himself to Charles the Bald, whose loyal supporter he became, thereby incurring the hostility of the Emp. Lothair I. Through Charles's influence he was elected Abp. of Reims in 845 and at once began to reorganize his diocese. Persistent friction with Lothair led the Emperor to seek his deposition under the pretext of Hincmar's having unjustly nullified the ordinations of his predecessor. A synod at Soissons in 853, however, came out in his favour, and its decision was confirmed by Benedict III in 855. Hincmar strongly opposed Lothair, King of Lorraine (the second son of Lothair I), when he wished to divorce his wife, Teutberga. In 863 he deposed Rothad, Bp. of Soissons, who had attacked his privileges as metropolitan, but his action was not upheld by *Nicholas I. He succeeded, however, in procuring the condemnation of his own nephew, Hincmar, Bp. of Laon, who had refused to recognize his authority. After King Lothair's death (869) he secured the succession of Charles the Bald, whom he crowned himself, despite the objection of the Pope. In 876 he again opposed the Pope, whose appointment of a *Vicar Apostolic for Germany and Gaul he regarded as an interference with his metropolitan rights. He died at Épernay when fleeing from the Normans.

Though not a speculative theologian, Hincmar took a prominent part in the controversy with the monk *Gottschalk on predestination. He wrote against him 'Ad Reclusos et Simplices', which elicited a sharp reply from *Ratramnus of *Corbie. Hincmar, after vainly seeking defenders among his friends, finally asked John Scotus *Erigena for help. The latter's work, 'De Divina Praedestinatione', roused a storm of indignation both against its author and against Hincmar. The controversy was continued at the Synods of *Quiercy (853), which gave a decision favourable to the archbishop, and *Valence (855), which was against him. Hincmar wrote in his defence 'De Praedestinatione Dei et Libero Arbitrio', a rather disorderly compilation of Scriptural and patristic texts, in which he argued that, if God predestines the wicked to hell, He must be accounted the author of sin. A reconciliation of both parties, largely through weariness with the conflict, was reached at the Synod of Tuzey in 860. Another dispute with Gottschalk and Ratramnus arose from Hincmar's changing the words 'Trina Deitas' from the *Vespers Hymn of the Common of Many Martyrs into 'Summa Deitas', because he suspected the former version of *Tritheism. He defended his view in the treatise 'De Una et Non Trina Deitate' (c. 865), chiefly by quotations from authorities.

In his practical works, esp. 'De Divortio Lotharii et Teutbergae' (860), he displayed a vast knowledge of canon law, while in 'Opusculum LV Capitulorum', directed against Hincmar of Laon, he ably defended the rights of the metropolitan over his bishops. He was among the first writers to know of the *False Decretals, which were a product of the early years of his archiepiscopate. He was also the author of a life, without historical value, of St. *Remigius and of a number of poems.

Opera, ed. J. *Sirmond, S.J. (2 vols., Paris, 1645), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxv and cxxvi. Poems ed. L. Traube in M.G.H., Poetae, iii (1896), pp. 406–20; letters ib., Epistolae, viii (1939). Modern life by H. Schroers (Freiburg i.Br., 1884). Eleanor S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, 1962), pp. 202–64. M. Cappuyns, O.S.B., Jean Scot Érigène (1933), esp. pp. 81–5, 91–4, 102–111, and 116–26. M. Andrieu, 'Le Sacre épiscopal d'après Hincmar de Reims' in R.H.E., xlviii (1953), pp. 22–73; J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, 'Archbishop Hincmar and the Authorship of Lex Salica' in Revue d'histoire du droit, xxi (1953), pp. 1–29, revised in The Long-Haired Kings and other Studies in Frankish History (1962), pp. 95–120. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., vii (1910), p. 356 f.; R. Naz in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1135–54, s.v.; H. G. J. Beck in N.C.E., vi (1967), p. 1122 f., s.v., with extensive bibl. Full study by J. Devisse (3 vols., Geneva, 1975–6).

HINNOM, Valley of. See Gehenna.

HINSLEY, ARTHUR (1865–1943), Abp. of *Westminster and cardinal. He was educated at Ushaw and the *English College at Rome. After being headmaster of St. Bede's grammar school at Bradford from 1899 to 1904, he was pastor of several parishes and from 1917 to 1928 rector of the English College. In 1930 he was made Titular Abp. of Sardis and *Apostolic Delegate in Africa, and in 1935 Abp. of Westminster. He was created cardinal in 1937. He became known to wide circles through his foundation, in 1940, of the '*Sword of the Spirit', and through the vigorous spiritual and national leadership he gave to English RCs during the first years of the second World War.

J. C. Heenan, Cardinal Hinsley (1944). D. Newton in D.N.B. 1941–1950, pp. 394–5.

HIPPO, Council of. A council of the Catholic (i.e. non-*Donatist) Church in Latin Africa held on 8 Oct. 393. A breviarium of its canons was read at the Council of *Carthage (397) and their substance, then re-enacted, passed, via the *Hispana and the *Quinisext Council, into general canon law.

Text of the breviarium pr. among the works of *Leo I, ed. P. and H. *Ballerini, iii (Venice, 1757), cols. 90–104; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lvi, 420–33. Hefele–Leclercq, ii (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 82–91.

HIPPOLYTUS, St. (c. 170 – c. 236), ecclesiastical writer and Doctor. Though the most important 3rd cent. theologian of the Roman Church, the facts of his life as well as his writings were soon forgotten in the W., perhaps by reason of his schismatic activities and of the fact that he wrote in Greek. Of his early life nothing is known. The assertion of *Photius that he was a disciple of St. *Irenaeus is doubtful. During the first decades of the 3rd cent. he must have been an important personality among the Roman presbyters; when *Origen came to Rome (c. 212) he attended one of his sermons. Soon afterwards Hippolytus took an active part in attacking the doctrines of *Sabellius. He refused to accept the teaching of Pope *Zephyrinus (198–217), and under his successor, *Callistus (217–22), whom he rejected as a heretic, he seems to have set himself up as an anti-Pope. He continued to attack Callistus', successors, Urban (222–30) and Pontianus (230–5). In the persecution of the Emp. Maximin (235–8), however, he and Pontianus were exiled together to Sardinia, and it is very probable that before his death he was reconciled to the other party at Rome; for under Pope *Fabian (236–50) his body with that of Pontianus was brought to Rome (236). The *Liberian Catalogue (q.v., in the part dated c. 255) already considers him a Catholic martyr and gives him the rank of a priest, not of a bishop. When these facts had been forgotten in Rome, many legends grew up round his person. Pope *Damasus (366–84) makes him a priest of the *Novatianist Schism, a view later accepted by *Prudentius in his 'Passion of St. Hippolytus'. In the Roman Passionals of the 7th and 8th cents. he is represented as a soldier converted by St. *Laurence, a legend which long survived in the Roman *Breviary. He also has been confused with a martyr of the same name who was buried at Portus, of which city he was believed to have been a bishop. Feast day, 13 Aug.

A list of Hippolytus's writings as well as his Easter tables were discovered on a statue of him, made probably during his lifetime and found in Rome in 1551. Hippolytus's principal work is his 'Refutation of all Heresies' of which books 4–10 were found in a MS. of Mount *Athos and published under the title 'Philosophumena' in 1851 at *Oxford by E. Miller, who attributed it to Origen; but J. J. I. von *Döllinger argued that its author was Hippolytus. Its main object is to show that the philosophical systems described in books 1–4 are responsible for the heresies dealt with in the later books. His other works include commentaries on Daniel and the Song of Songs, fragments from a treatise on the nature of the universe against *Noetus and *Plato, and the important treatise on the '*Apostolic Tradition' (q.v.). The 'Little Labyrinth', which Photius attributed to *Gaius of Rome, has also often been ascribed to Hippolytus. A Paschal Homily, at one time attributed to St. John Chrysostom, and then held to be the work of Hippolytus, is almost certainly somewhat later, though it may have a Hippolytean basis. See also foll. entry.

The most interesting element in Hippolytus's teaching is his *Logos doctrine. Resuming the speculations of St. *Justin Martyr, he distinguished two states of the Word, the one immanent and eternal (λόγος ἐνδιάθετος) and the other exterior and temporal (λόγος προφορικός). Whether this Logos is really a Divine Person remains vague; Hippolytus seems to regard Him rather as an instrument of creation whose personality is completed only in the Incarnation when He receives the title of Son. This teaching implies a development in the Word which involves a change in the relations between Him and the Father and must ultimately lead to Ditheism, for which he was rebuked by Zephyrinus and Callistus. This charge gains force from his defective teaching on the Holy Ghost, to whom he refuses the title of 'Person'. The other important divergence between his teaching and that of the Roman bishops was his strenuous opposition to the mitigation of the penitential system necessitated by the influx of pagan converts in large numbers. This attitude is an instance among many others of the conservatism and harshness of his character, both of which reveal themselves esp. in his relentless hostility towards Callistus. Feast day in E., 30 Jan.; in W., 13 Aug.

The first collected edition was that of J. A. *Fabricius (2 vols., Hamburg, 1716–18; repr. with additions in J. P. Migne, PG, x. 261–962). P. A. de *Lagarde, Hippolyti Romani quae feruntur omnia graece (London, 1858). Crit. ed. by H. Achelis, G. Bonwetsch, and others in G.C.S. (4 vols., 1897–1955). E. Miller, Origenis Philosophumena (Oxford, 1851). Comm. on Daniel, ed. by M. Lefèvre and G. Bardy, with Fr. tr. (S.C., 1947); Contra Noetum ed. P. Nautin (Paris, 1949). Eng. trr. of many of his writings in A.N.C.L. (vols. vi and ix, pt. 2); of the Philosophumena by F. Legge (2 vols., S.P.C.K., 1921). For edd. of the 'Apostolic Tradition', see bibl. s.v. J. J. I. von Döllinger, Hippolytus und Kallistus (1853; Eng. tr., 1876); C. *Wordsworth, Hippolytus and the Church of Rome (1853); J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, I (2) (1890), pp. 317–477 ('Hippolytus of Portus'); G. Ficker, Studien zur Hippolytfrage (1893); H. Achelis, Hippolytstudien (T.U., xvi, Hft. 4, 1897; several other items in this series are devoted to Hippolytus); A. d'Alès, La Théologie de Saint Hippolyte (1906); G. Bovini, Sant'Ippolito della Via Tiburtina (1942); A. Hamel, Kirche bei Hippolyt von Rom (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, xlix; 1951). P. Nautin, Hippolyte et Josipe (1947; argues that a certain Josephus and not Hippolytus was the author of the Philosophumena; a conclusion not generally accepted). On the Paschal Homily ed. with Fr. tr. P. Nautin, P.S.S., Homélies Pascales, i (S.C., 1950), see R. Cantalamessa, O.F.M.Cap., L'omelia 'In S. Pascha' dello Pseudo-Ippolito di Roma (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi, Serie 3, Scienze Filologiche e Letteratura, xvi; 1967), with reff. to earlier works. Bardenhewer, ii, pp. 550–610; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 164–9. M. Richard in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 531–71, s.v. See also bibl. to Apostolic Tradition, esp. the work of J. M. Hanssens.

HIPPOLYTUS, Canons of St. A collection of canons, mainly on disciplinary and liturgical subjects, which were compiled in Greek prob. c. A.D. 500. They are dependent on the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St. Hippolytus, to whom they are wrongly attributed, as well as on the Apostolic Constitutions (late 4th cent.). The Greek text is lost; but they survive in an Arabic version of a Coptic translation. The extant MSS. are not earlier than the 13th cent. In the later 19th cent. they were generally held, notably by H. Achelis, to be prior to the 'Apostolic Tradition' (then dated in the 4th cent. or later) and St. Hippolytus often held to be the real author, at least of most of the work; and hence they received disproportionate attention in liturgical studies. Since the researches of E. *Schwartz and R. H. *Connolly on the 'Apostolic Tradition', they have lost most of their importance.

Arab. text ed., with Lat. tr., by D. B. von Haneberg, Bp. of Speyer (Munich, 1870); improved translation (but with many doubtful conjectures) by H. Achelis (T.U., vi, Hft. 4; 1891); crit. ed., with Fr. tr. and valuable introd. with reff. to previous works, by R. G. Coquin (P.O., xxxi, fasc. 2; 1966). See also bibl. to Apostolic Tradition.

HISPANA CANONS. The name given to a collection of canons and decretals apparently compiled in Spain in the 6th–7th cents. They are arranged geographically by the parts of the Church in which they originated. The collection is also known as the Isidoriana, it having been (wrongly) attributed from the 9th cent. onwards to St. *Isidore of Seville (d. 636). They formed one of the chief sources of the genuine historical material embodied in the '*False Decretals' (q.v.).

The text as found in the False Decretals is pr. in all the principal edd. of the Concilia from J. Merlin (Paris, 1524 ['1523']) onwards. Only ed. based on early MSS. is that of F. A. Gonzalez (Madrid, 1808), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxiv. The Lugo MS., supposed to be the most complete text, was destroyed by fire in 1671; reconstruction by C. Garcia Goldaraz, S.J., El Códice Lucense de la Colección Canónica Hispana (Biblioteca de la Escuela Española de Historia y Arqueologia en Roma, x–xii; Rome, 1954). F. Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters, i (1870), pp. 667–716. P. Fournier–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en Occident, i (1931), esp. pp. 68–70, 100–6. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 252, with bibl. R. Naz in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1159–62, s.v.; G. Martínez Diez in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 1, s.v.

HOADLY, BENJAMIN (1676–1761), Bp. in succession of *Bangor, *Hereford, *Salisbury and *Winchester. He was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1697 and was a tutor from 1699 to 1701. Ordained priest in 1701, he was lecturer at St. Mildred's, Poultry, from 1701 to 1711 and Rector of St. Peter-le-Poor, London, from 1704 to 1724. At the beginning of his public life he advocated conformity for the sake of union; he soon won the leadership of the Low Church divines favoured by the Whigs through his controversy with F. *Atterbury and O. Blackall, Bp. of *Exeter (1708–16), on passive obedience and non-resistance. Recommended to the Queen by the House of Commons in 1709, he became rector of Streatham in 1710 and chaplain to the Duke of Bedford. On the accession of George I he became chaplain to the King, and was consecrated Bp. of Bangor in 1716. His sermon of 31 Mar. 1717 on 'The Nature of the Kingdom or Church of Christ' provoked the *Bangorian controversy (q.v.). Translated to Hereford in 1721 and to Salisbury in 1723, when he resigned the rectory of Streatham, he was translated to Winchester in 1734. He excited stiff opposition by maintaining that the Lord's Supper was purely commemorative and in upholding *Latitudinarian views generally.

He spent very little time in his dioceses, never visiting Bangor, but living mainly in London, where he engaged in political and theological controversy. His many publications include A Defence of the Reasonableness of Conformity (1707; against E. *Calamy the younger), A Preservative against the Principles and Practices of Non-Jurors both in Church and State (1716), A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (1735) and The Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts (1736; a plea for toleration).

J. Hoadly (son [1711–76], ed.), The Works of Benjamin Hoadly (3 vols., 1773), with acct. of author, i, pp. v–xxv. N. Sykes, 'Benjamin Hoadly, Bishop of Bangor', in F. J. C. Hearnshaw (ed.), The Social and Political Ideals of some English Thinkers of the Augustan Age (1928), pp. 112–57; id., Church and State in England in the XVIIIth Century (1934), esp. pp. 332–62. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), pp. 16–21.

HOBBES, THOMAS (1588–1679), philosopher. In early life he travelled much abroad as tutor to the Cavendish family, and met and was influenced by F. *Bacon, G. *Galileo, and M. *Mersenne, the philosopher friend of R. *Descartes. He displeased both Royalists and Parliamentarians by holding that, although sovereignty is ultimately derived from the people, it is transferred to the monarch by implicit contract, so that while the power of the sovereign is absolute, it is not of *Divine right. From 1640 to 1651 Hobbes was in exile, for the most part in Paris, where from 1646 to 1648 he was tutor to the Prince of Wales (later Charles II). In 1651 he returned and submitted to the Commonwealth, and in the same year published his greatest work, the Leviathan, which, though it has been called a reaction against the 'liberty' of the Renaissance and Reformation, is really a philosophical exposition of the system of political absolutism which replaced the supremacy of the medieval Church. In his Questions Concerning Liberty, Necessity, and Chance (1656) he expounded a doctrine of psychological *determinism in opposition to Bp. J. *Bramhall's defence of free will. In 1666 the Leviathan, which from the first was considered to be atheistic, was censured by name by the House of Commons, and thereafter its author was not allowed to publish ethical writings in England. Hobbes was perhaps the first philosopher to attempt seriously to base a theory of human conduct upon natural science; he was a pioneer in psychology; and his early work De Cive (1642; Eng. trans., 1651) gives him some claim to be considered the founder of modern social science. His doctrine of political absolutism cut at the root of ethics, however, as it left no room for any genuine moral distinction between good and bad.

Collected ed. of Hobbes's Opera Philosophica (Amsterdam, 1668; suppl., London, 1675); of his Moral and Political Works (London, 1720), incl. his autobiography, pp. ix–xxviii. Complete ed. of his English Works (11 vols., London, 1839–45) and his Opera Philosophica (5 vols., ib., 1839–45), both by Sir W. Molesworth. Reprint of the 1651 ed. of the Leviathan, with introd. by W. G. Pogson Smith (Oxford, 1909), and, with modernized spelling, by M. Oakeshott (ib., 1955). Modern ed. of his Eng. version of De Cive with introd. by S. P. Lamprecht (New York, 1949).

The vast literature on Hobbes includes studies by G. Croom Robertson (London, 1886), L. Stephen ('English Men of Letters', 1904), A. E. *Taylor (London, 1908), B. Landry (Paris, 1930), and J. Laird (London, 1934). L. Strauss, The Political Philosophy of Hobbes (Oxford, 1936); H. Warrender, The Political Philosophy of Hobbes (ib., 1957); S. I. Mintz, The Hunting of Leviathan. Seventeenth-Century Reactions to the Materialism and Moral Philosophy of Thomas Hobbes (Cambridge, 1962); F. C. Hood, The Divine Politics of Thomas Hobbes. An Interpretation of Leviathan (Oxford, 1964); K. C. Brown (ed.), Hobbes Studies (ib., 1965); J. W. N. Watkins, Hobbes's System of Ideas (1965); D. P. Gauthier, The Logic of Leviathan. The Moral and Political Theory of Thomas Hobbes (Oxford, 1969). H. Macdonald–Mary Hargreaves, Thomas Hobbes. A Bibliography (1952). Überweg, iii, pp. 249–59, with bibl., p. 661 f.

HOCKTIDE (also 'Hock Monday' and 'Hock Tuesday'). The second Monday and Tuesday after Easter, on which in medieval times money was collected for church and parish uses, and various sports and amusements took place. The merrymaking at this season survived in some places until the 19th cent. The origin of the name is unknown.

HODGE, CHARLES (1797–1878), American *Presbyterian theologian. He was ordained in 1821, and taught at Princeton for nearly his whole life. His most important works are his commentaries on Rom. (1835), Eph. (1856), 1 Cor. (1857), 2 Cor. (1859), as well as Constitutional History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (2 vols., 1839–40), Systematic Theology (3 vols., 1871–3), and What is Darwinism? (1874). If less an original thinker than a systematizer and defender of traditional *Calvinism, Hodge has a real claim to be considered one of the greatest of American theologians, and he had a great influence and following. He took a broader and more tolerant view of other forms of Christianity than many of those in general sympathy with his position.

A. A. Hodge (son), The Life of C. Hodge, D.D. (1881); C. A. Salmond, Princetoniana: Charles and A. A. Hodge (1888). L. J. Trinterud in H. T. Kerr (ed.), Sons of the Prophets (Princeton, 1963), pp. 22–38. R. H. Nichols in Dict. Amer. Biog., ix (1932), p. 98 f.

HODY, HUMPHREY (1659–1707), Anglican divine. Having entered Wadham College, Oxford, in 1676, he was elected a Fellow in 1685. In his Contra historiam Aristeae de LXX interpretibus Dissertatio (1684) he proved that the 'Letter of *Aristeas' was a forgery. His support of the Established Church against the *Nonjurors brought him to the notice of Abp. J. *Tillotson, who made him his chaplain; and in 1698 he was made Regius professor of Greek at Oxford. His researches into the text of the *Septuagint are embodied in his De Bibliorum Textis Originalibus (4 vols., 1703). By his will a number of exhibitions for the study of Hebrew and Greek, which still bear his name, were established at Wadham College.

Study (in Latin) of his life and writings by S. Jebb prefixed to his edition of Hody's De Graecis Illustribus, Linguae Graecae, Literarumque Humanlorum Instauratoribus, eorum Vitis, Scriptis et Elogiis (posthumous, 1742), pp. v–xxix. G. Goodwin in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), p. 77 f.

HOFBAUER, St. CLEMENT MARY (1751–1820), the 'Apostle of Vienna'. He was a native of Tasswitz in Moravia and the son of a grazier and butcher; and at the age of 15 he became a baker's apprentice. Led by his religious aspirations to become a hermit, and later a student for the priesthood (1780–4) in Vienna and Rome, he entered the congregation of the *Redemptorists at Rome in 1784 and was professed and ordained in 1785. In the same year he returned to Vienna, but unable to found a house there because of the anti-religious *Josephinist legislation, he went on to Warsaw, where he laboured from 1787 to 1808, chiefly among the German-speaking population. Here he met with remarkable success, devoting himself esp. to the cure of souls and to educational and charitable activities. Appointed Vicar-General for the houses of his congregation N. of the Alps in 1793, he founded several establishments in Poland and one at Jestetten, nr. Schaffhausen (1802). In 1808 he was driven from Warsaw by Napoleon and went back to Vienna. At first he worked mainly at the Italian church, but from 1813 onwards he was confessor to the Ursulines. His influence in the capital, which spread from the highest to the lowest, powerfully counteracted the effects of Josephinism and the Aufklärung. The Redemptorists, however, could not be established in Austria till shortly after his death. He was canonized in 1909. Feast day, 15 Mar.

Monumenta Hofbaueriana (15 vols., Cracow, Thorn, Tournai and Rome, 1915–51). Lives by S. Brunner (Vienna, 1858), M. Haringer (ib., 1877), M. Bauchinger (ib., 1888), A. Innerkofler (Ratisbon, 1910), J. Hofer (Freiburg i.Br. 1920; Eng. tr., New York, 1926), G. Hünermann (Innsbruck, 1936; Fr. tr., ed. 2, 1955), J. Carr, C.SS.R. (London, 1939) and E. Hosp, C.SS.R. (Vienna, 1951). M. B. Schweitzer, 'Die Einwirkung des hl. Clemens Maria Hofbauer auf das Geistesleben in Wien' in Hist. J., xlviii (1928), pp. 389–460.

HÖFFDING, HARALD (1843–1931), Danish philosopher. From 1883 to 1915 he was professor at Copenhagen. In his earlier years he was much under the influence of S. *Kierkegaard, but almost completely abandoned his teaching later. He sought at once to do full justice to the claims of the natural sciences and to show that all knowledge received meaning only in relation to the realm of value. But while he upheld a spiritual interpretation of the universe, he denied that there were sufficient theoretical grounds for applying the notions of 'cause' and 'personality' to the Absolute or for affirming (or denying) belief in personal immortality. He described his position as 'critical monism'. His many writings included a widely-used history of philosophy, Den nyere Filosofis Historie (1894; Eng. trans., 2 vols., 1900) and a Religionsfilosofi (1901; Eng. trans., 1906).

H. Höffding, Udvalgte Skrifter (7 vols., 1902–6); id., Erindringer [with portrait] (1928). Correspondance entre Harald Höffding et Emile Meyerson, ed. F. Brandt, Hans Höffding, and others (Copenhagen, 1939). G. Schott, Harald Höffding als Religionsphilosoph (1913); V. Hansen, Harald Höffding som Religionsfilosof (Copenhagen, 1923).

HOFFMANN, MELCHIOR (c. 1500–c. 1543), German *Anabaptist. A leather-dresser by profession, he joined the *Lutherans and became a lay-preacher in Livonia in 1523. Having come into conflict with the authorities he left for Stockholm in 1526; there he became more and more imbued with eschatological ideas and prophesied the approaching end of the world. After a short stay in Holstein he had a disputation with J. *Bugenhagen at Flensburg in 1529 in which he denied the Lutheran doctrine of the Lord's Supper, holding it to be a mere sign. He was consequently banished from Denmark, and went to Strassburg, where he joined the Anabaptists. Between 1530 and 1533 he preached there, in E. Friesland, and in Holland. In 1533 he returned to Strassburg, which was to be the New Jerusalem, to await the Last Day. He was arrested and sentenced to imprisonment for life, but remained unshaken in his eschatological beliefs till his death. His influence on his contemporaries was considerable, and the 'Melchiorites' survived him as a distinct party among the Anabaptists.

Eng. tr. of his 'Ordinance of God' (first publd. in 1530), from the surviving Dutch translation, by G. H. Williams (ed.), Spiritual and Anabaptist Writers (Library of Christian Classics, xxv; 1957), pp. 184–203. F. O. Zur Linden, Melchior Hoffmann. Ein Prophet der Wiedertäufer (1885). P. Kawerau, Melchior Hoffman als religiöser Denker (Haarlem, 1954). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, Pa. [1962]), esp. pp. 259–64, 292–5, 307–9, 355–8. A. Hegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 222–7.

HOFFMEISTER, JOHANNES (c. 1509–47), *Augustinian hermit. He entered the Augustinian monastery at Colmar as a youth, studied at several German universities, and was made prior in 1533. His life was devoted to the defence of his order against *Lutheran teaching and to the inner reform of the Church by preaching and writing. In 1543 he became provincial of the Rhenish-Swabian province, which had been severely affected by Protestantism. His powerful sermons soon made him widely known and he was frequently called upon to preach on important occasions, e.g. at the Diet of Worms (1545) and the (second) Colloquy of Ratisbon (1546). In 1546 he was made vicar-general of the Augustinian hermits in Germany, but his work was cut short by his death in 1547. His writings, which are occasionally marred by their polemical extravagance, include two books of Dialogues (1538) and his Loci Communes (Mainz, 1545; often repr.), a collection of Patristic extracts.

N. Paulus, Der Augustinermönch J. Hoffmeister. Ein Lebensbild aus der Reformationszeit (Freiburg i.Br., 1891). A. von Druffel, 'Der Elsässer Augustinermönch Johannes Hoffmeister und seine Korrespondenz mit dem Ordensgeneral Hieronymus Seripando' in Abh. (Bayr.), hist. Kl., xiv, Abt. 1 (1879), pp. 135–96.

HOFMANN, JOHANN CHRISTIAN KONRAD VON (1810–77), German *Lutheran theologian. A native of Nuremberg, he studied at Erlangen and Berlin, and became lecturer at Erlangen university in 1838. In 1842 he was called to Rostock as professor of theology, and in 1845 returned in the same capacity to Erlangen, where he remained till the end of his life. His most important works were Weissagung und Erfüllung im Alten und Neuen Testament (2 parts, 1841–4), a study of the theology of prophecy; Der Schriftbeweis (3 pts., 1852–6), a treatise in the course of which the vicarious Atonement was denied; Schutzschriften für eine neue Weise, alte Wahrheit zu lehren (1856–1859), written in defence of the preceding; and Die hl. Schriften des Neuen Testaments (8 parts, 1862–78), an unfinished commentary on the NT. Hofmann aimed at being an uncompromising exponent of Lutheran doctrines. His disciples became known as the 'Erlangen School'.

Theologische Briefe der Professoren [F.] Delitzsch und von Hofmann (ed. W. Volck, 1891). Life by P. Wapler (Leipzig, 1914). P. Bachmann, J. C. K. Hofmanns Versöhnungslehre und der über sie geführte Streit (1910); M. Schellbach, Theologie und Philosophie bei von Hofmann (1935). E. W. Wendebourg, 'Die heilsgeschichtliche Theologie J. Chr. K. v. Hofmanns in ihrem Verhältnis zur romantischen Weltanschauung' in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, lii (1955), pp. 64–104. A. Hauck in P.R.E. (ed. 3), vii (1900), pp. 234–41; E. Hübner in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), cols. 420–2, s.v.

HOHENHEIM. See Paracelsus.

HOLCOT, ROBERT (d. 1349), scholastic theologian and biblical commentator. A native of Northamptonshire, he entered the *Dominican Order and studied at Oxford. He lectured on the Sentences of Peter Lombard in 1330–2 and incepted in theology in 1334. He also wrote quodlibets and biblical commentaries on the *Minor Prophets, Wisdom (possibly written at Cambridge), and Ecclesiasticus, as well as Moralitates and Convertimini (both aids to preaching) and sermons. By 1343 he was assigned to the Northampton house of his Order, where he is said to have died while nursing the sick during the plague. His commentary on the Sentences is extant in four redactions, and circulated widely outside England. Holcot was working in Oxford at a time when the impact of *William of Occam's views was fresh, and when it had become impossible to maintain that rational proof could be found that God exists or that God is the creator of the world. Holcot was reduced to saying that God will communicate to men of good will sufficient knowledge of Himself for salvation. Views of this kind are found not only in the commentary on the Sentences, but also in the Biblical commentaries. In his commentaries little attention is paid to the literal sense, and the main emphasis is on the application of the text for use in preaching, with many illustrations, and with an extensive use of classical and pseudo-classical quotations. Holcot also developed, but did not originate, the use of emblem-like 'pictures' of mythological and allegorical figures. He was among the scholars said to have been patronized by Richard de Bury (d. 1345), but the ascription of de Bury's 'Philobiblon seu de amore librorum' to Holcot in some MSS. is not acceptable. He may have helped de Bury to collect material, but he was not the author of the book.

His commentary on Wisdom was publd. at Cologne, c. 1480; that on the Sentences at Lyons in 1497; Moralitates at Venice, 1514. They were repr. in the 16th cent., but there are no modern edd. The comm. on Ecclesiasticus, pr. at Paris, 1515, is the work of Ralph Ringstead (d. 1366). Holcot's own comm. on Ecclus. is still unpublished. 'Philobiblon' publd. Cologne, 1473; modern ed. by A. Altramura, Naples, 1954; Eng. tr. by J. B. Inglis (anon.), London, 1832. Holcot's 'Sermo finalis' ed. J. C. Wey, C.S.B., in Mediaeval Studies, xi (1949), pp. 219–24; 'Quodlibet 'Utrum Theologia sit Scientia' ed. J. T. Muckle, C.S.B., ib., xx (1958), pp. 127–53. C. A. Moody, 'A Quodlibetal question of Robert Holkot, O.P., on the problem of the objects of knowledge and of belief' in Speculum, xxxix (1964), pp. 53–74, incl. text. P. Molteni, Robert Holcot O.P. Dottrina della grazia e della giustificazione, con due questioni quodlibetali inedite (Pinerolo [c. 1969]). B. Smalley, 'Robert Holcot' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxvi (1956), pp. 5–97; id., English Friars and Antiquity in the Early Fourteenth Century (Oxford, 1960), pp. 133–202. A. Meissner, S.A.C., Gotteserkenntnis und Gotteslehre nach dem englischen Dominikanertheologen Robert Holkot (Limburg am Lahn [1953]), with bibl. H. Schepers, 'Holkot contra dicta Crathorn' in Philosophisches Jahrbuch, lxxvii (1970), pp. 320–54; lxxix (1972), pp. 106–36 and 361. F. Hoffmann, Die theologische Methode des Oxforder Dominikanerlehrers Robert Holcot (B.G.P.M., N.F., v; 1972). B.R.U.C., p. 309 f.; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), p. 946 f.

HOLGATE, ROBERT (c. 1481–1555), Abp. of *York. He was probably educated at the *Gilbertine house of studies in Cambridge, where he was university preacher in 1524. He became Master of the Order of *Sempringham, and, on the eve of its dissolution (1537), Bp. of *Llandaff. He proved an active member of the King's Council in the North, and in 1538 he succeeded C. *Tunstall as Lord President. In 1545 he was translated to York. His marriage and strong support of the Edwardian reforming measures brought about his deprivation by the Marians in 1554. Holgate founded three grammar schools and an almshouse, all in Yorkshire.

A. G. Dickens, 'The Marriage and Character of Archbishop Holgate' in E.H.R., lii (1937), pp. 428–42. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 128–30.

HOLIDAYS OF OBLIGATION. See Feasts of Obligation.

HOLINESS, The Code of, also 'Law of Holiness'. The collection of Mosaic legislation in Lev. 17–26, so named by A. Klostermann in 1877, and designated 'H'. The subjects dealt with are animal sacrifice and the prohibition of eating blood (17), laws of marriage and chastity (18), miscellaneous religious and ethical precepts (19), penalties for violation of the ritual laws (20), the priesthood (21 f.), the sacred calendar, incl. *Sabbath, *Passover, *Weeks, and the Day of *Atonement (23), the sacred lamp and the *Shewbread (24. 1–9), punishment for blasphemy and the Lex Talionis (24. 10–25), the *Sabbatical Year and *Jubilee (25), with a final exhortation (26). The recurrence of certain phrases (in particular, 'for I, the Lord, am holy') supports the view that the section is a unity. Acc. to most scholars, it was a product of the Exile in *Babylon (cf. 26. 34–44). It has a number of parallels with Ezekiel, and prob. left its compiler's hand c. 550 B.C. It may be supposed to have been incorporated in *P, of which it now forms a part, some 75–100 years later.

K. H. Graf, Die geschichtlichen Bücher des Alten Testaments (1866), pp. 66–83, with suggestion that these chapters in their present form were the work of Ezekiel. A. Klostermann, 'Beiträge zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Pentateuchs' in Zeitschrift für die gesammte lutherische Theologie und Kirche, xxxviii (1877), pp. 401–45; id., Der Pentateuch (1893), pp. 386–418. L. Horst, Leviticus XVII–XXVI und Hezekiel (1881); B. Baentsch, Das Heiligkeits-Gesetz (1893). H. G. Reventlow, Das Heiligkeitsgesetz formgeschichtlich untersucht (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, vi; 1961); R. Kilian, Literarkritische und formgeschichtliche Untersuchung des Heiligkeitsgesetzes (Bonner Biblischer Beiträge, xix; 1963). L. E. Elliott-Binns, 'Some Problems of the Holiness Code' in Z.A.T.W., lxvii (1955; publd. 1956), pp. 26–40 [favours an earlier dating]. Eissfeldt, pp. 233–9, with further reff. See also works cited under Pentateuch and comm. to Leviticus, cited s.v.

HOLINESS, His. A title which in the early Church was regularly used of all bishops. Since c. 600 it has been restricted to *patriarchs, a use still followed in the E. Church. In the W., since the 14th cent., it has been used only of the Pope. The title was also occasionally given to the Byzantine Emperors, and there is an instance of its use by *John of Salisbury of Henry II of England.

HOLLAND, Christianity in. The territory now known as Holland was reached by Christian missionaries as early as c. 630. Its effective conversion was mainly the work of St. *Willibrord (q.v.), Bp. of Utrecht from 695 to 739, who at one stage had the support of St. *Boniface. The range and success of Willibrord's activities brought the whole country under the influence of the see of Utrecht, which was the only bishopric until modern times, and its Prince Bishop exerted a dominating influence on the subsequent history of the Church. In the course of the later Middle Ages the see lost much of its political power to the Counts of Holland and Guelders, the Bishop finally surrendering his temporal claims to *Charles V in 1526.

Before the country threw off the Spanish yoke, the Reformation had made its influence felt. *Lutheranism was never popular, but *Calvinism formed a rallying creed for the revolt and found an early exponent in Philip van *Marnix (q.v.). In 1574 the University of *Leyden was established in the Calvinist interest. A conflict between orthodoxy and liberalism raged in the early years of the 17th cent., represented by the two Leyden theologians, F. *Gomarus and J. *Arminius. After the definitive condemnation of the latter group ('*Remonstrants') at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19), its leaders were executed or exiled and for some two hundred years strict Calvinism was the official creed. In 1816 the introduction of a more liberal form of Church government under William I led some of the stricter Protestants to separate and organize themselves as the 'Christian Reformed Church'. In 1848 the Church was disestablished; in 1857 denominational religious instruction ceased in the schools; and in 1876 'theology' gave place to 'comparative religion' at the universities.

In an endeavour to find favour with the Catholics, *Philip II secured the creation of five new sees under Utrecht, which was now raised to an Archbishopric (1560). But the experiment was a failure, and from 1580 to 1853 the RC Church was without territorial Bishops, being governed by *Vicars Apostolic or Papal Legates. From 1583 to 1795 it was subjected by the government to severe penal restrictions. In 1697 accusations of *Jansenism were launched from Rome against the RCs of Holland, notably against Petrus Codde (1648–1710), then Vicar-General and titular Abp. of Philippi. In 1702 he was officially censured and a schism began. Codde's followers upheld the continuity of their communion with the national Catholic Church of the past. The support of the French Jansenists, who refused to accept the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713), secured for these '*Old Catholics', as they came to be called, the maintenance of the *Apostolic Succession; and the group still survives as a branch of the Old Catholic Church. The main body of Dutch Catholics, however, accepted the condemnation of Jansenism. They looked largely to external (esp. *Jesuit) influence for guidance and protection until the archiepiscopal see of Utrecht was restored in 1853. In modern Holland they are a vigorous body, esp. strong in the provinces of Limburg and North Brabant. In recent years there has been much advanced thinking among Dutch RCs, which has brought them near to conflict with the Papacy, on such subjects as clerical *celibacy and contraception.

Acc. to the 1971 census, c. 38 per cent of the population belong to the RC Church, c. 39 per cent are Protestant (mainly 'Dutch Reformed Church' and other Calvinist bodies) and c. 23 per cent profess no religious allegiance.

The principal works are in Dutch. In English there is a general introduction by P. H. Ditchfield, The Church in the Netherlands (1892; dealing with Belgium and Holland). Also D. Nobbs, Theocracy and Toleration. A Study of the Disputes in Dutch Calvinism from 1600 to 1650 (1938); J. H. Mackay, Religious Thought in Holland during the Nineteenth Century (Hastie Lectures, 1909–1911; 1911), and E. C. Vanderlaan, Protestant Modernism in Holland (1924). S. Axters, O.P., La Spiritualité des Pays-Bas (Bibliotheca Mechliniensis, 2 Série, i; 1948; Eng. tr., 1954). A. G. Weiler, O. J. de Jong and others, Geschiedenis van de Kerk in Nederland (Antwerp, 1962), with bibl. W. Moll, Kerkgeschiedenis van Nederland voor de Hervorming [1871]; Germ. tr. (1895). R. R. Post, Kerkgeschiedenis van Nederland in de Middeleeuwen (2 vols., 1957). S. Axters, O.P., Geschiedenis van de Vroomheid in de Nederlanden (1950 ff.). L. J. Rogier, Geschiedenis van het Katholicisme in Noord-Nederland in de 16e en de 17e Eeuw (3 vols., 1945–7). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, iii, Lieferung 1 (Lieferung 9 des Gesamtwerkes; 1934), and iii, Lieferung 3 (Lieferung 11 des Gesamtwerkes; 1935), pp. 54–64 (484–94 of vol. 3). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), pp. 237–51, iv (1962), pp. 172–5, 382–93, with extensive reff. Archief voor Nederlandsche Kerkgeschiedenis (The Hague, 1885–99), cont. as Nederlandsch Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis (ib., 1900 ff.). J. A. Gerth van Wijk in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 263–79, s.v. 'Holland, Kirchliche Statistik'; S. van der Linde–K. H. Miskotte in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), cols. 1460–72, s.v. 'Niederlande'; A. G. Weiler in N.C.E., x (1967), pp. 354–62, s.v. 'Netherlands', all with bibl. See also bibl. to Arminianism, Calvinism, Devotio Moderna and Old Catholics.

HOLLAND, HENRY SCOTT (1847–1918), theologian and preacher. Educated at Eton and at Balliol College, *Oxford, where he was influenced by T. H. Green, he was a Senior Student at Christ Church from 1870 to 1884, canon of St. Paul's Cathedral from 1884 to 1910, and Regius professor of divinity at Oxford from 1910 until his death. He shared the outlook of Lux Mundi, to which he contributed the first essay (on 'Faith'). He was a robust and independent philosopher and theologian, keenly interested in relating Christian principles to the social and economic problems of human living. The Christian Social Union found in him its most brilliant spokesman, and he was editor of the Commonwealth from 1895 to 1912. His writings, mainly collections of sermons, include Logic and Life (1882), Creed and Character (1887), and God's City (1894). He was also the author of the hymn 'Judge Eternal, throned in splendour' (E.H., 423).

Stephen Paget, Henry Scott Holland. Memoir and Letters (1921); E. Lyttelton, The Mind and Character of Henry Scott Holland (1926). T. B. *Strong in D.N.B., 1912–1921, pp. 260–2.

HOLOCAUST (Gk. ὁλόκαυστον, 'something entirely burnt up'). A sacrifice completely consumed by fire ('burnt-offering'), and thus a perfect sacrifice. Less accurately, the word is also used of a sacrifice with many victims.

HOLSTE, LUCAS (1596–1661) (Holstenius), *Vatican librarian. A native of Hamburg, he went for his studies to *Leyden, where he was converted in 1625–6 to the RC Church. He became secretary, and later librarian (1636), to Cardinal Francesco *Barberini, and subsequently librarian of the Vatican. In 1655 he received Queen *Christina of Sweden's public abjuration of Protestantism at Innsbruck. He was a scholar of enormous erudition, whose writings included Codex Regularum Monasticarum et Canonicarum (3 vols., 1661), studies in many classical and ecclesiastical writings (*Porphyry; *Eusebius, Contra Hieroclem; the later Pythagoreans) and an edition of the Liber Diurnus (1660).

His correspondence (Epistolae ad Diversos) was ed. by J. F. Boissonade (Paris, 1817). [N. Wilckens,] Leben des gelehrten Lucae Holstenii (Hamburg, 1723). L. G. Pélissier, 'Les Amis d'Holstenius' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire de l'École française de Rome, vi (1886), pp. 554–87, vii (1887), pp. 62–128, and viii (1888), pp. 323–402 and 521–608. R. Almagià, L'opera geografica di Luca Holstenio (S.T., cii; 1942).

HOLTZMANN, HEINRICH JULIUS (1832–1910), Protestant theologian and Biblical critic. After study at Berlin university and a pastorate at Baden (1854–7), he taught at Heidelberg (1858–74) and Strassburg (1874–1904). He was a moderate liberal in his beliefs. In Die synoptischen Evangelien (1863) he strongly defended the *Marcan hypothesis, at that date rarely accepted. In his later writings he argued for a psychological development in the Lord's self-consciousness, maintaining that there were two principal periods in His earthly life, that of 'success' which reached its climax at *Caesarea Philippi, and a subsequent period of 'failure', when the new conception of a suffering Messiah supervened. His books include an Einleitung in das NT (1885); commentaries on the Synoptic Gospels (1889), the Johannine books (1890), and Acts (1901); a Lehrbuch der NT Theologie (2 vols., 1896–7); and *Richard Rothe's Speculatives System (1899).

Theologische Abhandlungen. Eine Festgabe zum 17. Mai 1902 für H. J. Holtzmann (1902). Brief life by W. Bauer (Berlin, 1932). A. *Jülicher, 'Heinrich Holtzmanns Bedeutung für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft' in Protestantische Monatshefte, vi (1902), pp. 165–72. [E.] von Dobschütz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxiii (1913), pp. 655–60, s.v.; A. Faux in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 112–16, s.v., with further reff.

HOLY ALLIANCE, The. The declaration signed by Alexander I of Russia, Francis I of Austria, and Friedrich Wilhelm III of Prussia on 26 Sept. 1815, and eventually by all the sovereigns of Europe except the Prince Regent of England, the Pope, and the Sultan. It laid down that the relations of the Powers would henceforth be based on 'the sublime truths which the Holy Religion of our Saviour teaches'; that the actions of princes would be guided by justice, charity, and peace; and that the signatories would regard each other as brothers and 'on all occasions and in all places lend each other aid and assistance'. The project originated with the Czar, under the inspiration of Barbara J. von *Krüdener, and appears to have been conceived in sincerity, though Metternich called it a 'loud-sounding nothing', and Castlereagh 'a piece of sublime mysticism and nonsense'. It soon became synonymous, however, with the combined interests of the Great Powers by whom Europe was ruled after 1815 and their policy of reaction. As a diplomatic instrument it was never effective, though it inspired Nicholas II to summon the first international peace conference at The Hague in 1899.

Text in E. Reich (ed.), Select Documents Illustrating Mediaeval and Modern History (1905), pp. 119–21, with reff. J. H. Pirenne, La Sainte Alliance. Organisation européenne de la paix mondiale (2 vols., [1946–9]); M. Bourquin, Histoire de la Sainte Alliance (Geneva, 1954). E. Muhlenbeck, Étude sur les origines de la Sainte Alliance [1887]. W. P. Cresson, The Holy Alliance. The European Background of the Monroe Doctrine (New York and London, 1922). On the circumstances leading up to and following the making of the alliance, see also C. K. Webster, The Congress of Vienna, 1814–1815 ([1919] ed. 2, 1934); id., The European Alliance 1813–1825 (Calcutta, 1929). H. G. Schenk, The Aftermath of the Napoleonic Wars (1947).

HOLY CITY, The. *Jerusalem (Mt. 27. 53). Among the Arabs the city is now commonly known as el-Kuds, i.e. 'the Holy'.

HOLY CLUB, The. The nickname given to the group of '*methodists' which Charles and John *Wesley formed at Oxford in 1729 for the deepening of personal religion. At first it met weekly on Sundays, but later every evening. The Greek Testament and the classics were read, and its members received Holy Communion very frequently and fasted on Wednesdays and Fridays. Its members also undertook pastoral work, e.g. among those in the Oxford gaol.

HOLY COAT, The. Both the cathedral of Trier and the parish church at Argenteuil claim the possession of Christ's 'coat without seam' (Jn. 19. 23). Dating alike from about the 12th cent., the two traditions agree both in admitting the other's relic to be a genuine garment of Christ's, and in insisting that their own is that mentioned in Scripture. The Trier tradition would seem to hold the advantage in Papal utterances and popular devotion. Over two million pilgrims visited the Trier relic when it was exposed in 1933. At other places, e.g. Mantua, where an alleged garment of Christ is shown, there is a less-developed cultus.

O. Zöckler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvii (1906), pp. 58–61; E. Iserloh in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), viii (1963), cols. 1348–60, both s.v. 'Rock'; F. Lauchert in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 400–2; all with extensive bibll.

HOLY CROSS DAY. The name given in the BCP calendar to 14 Sept., also known as the Feast of the '*Exaltation of the Holy Cross' (q.v.).

HOLY DAYS OF OBLIGATION. See Feasts of Obligation.

HOLY DOOR, The (Porta Sancta). The door in the façade of *St. Peter's, Rome, which is nearest the *Vatican Palace. The Holy Door is normally sealed with brickwork, except during the *Holy Year, when it is opened for the passage of those wishing to gain the *Indulgence of the Holy Year. The opening and closing of the Holy Door at the beginning and end of the Holy Year are ceremonially performed by the Pope, assisted by the Cardinal Penitentiary.

H. Thurston, S.J., The Holy Year of Jubilee (1900), ch. ii, 'The Porta Sancta', pp. 28–54, with reff.; Appendix C, 'The Porta Sancta and the Golden Gate of Jerusalem', pp. 405–11.

HOLY FAMILY, The. The Infant Jesus, His Mother (St. *Mary), and His foster-father (St. *Joseph). The cult of the Holy Family as such became widely popular in the RC Church in the 17th cent., and since that time several religious congregations have been founded under this title. A feast of the Holy Family was instituted by the Congregation of *Rites on 26 Oct. 1921, and was kept on the First Sunday after the *Epiphany until it was transferred to the First Sunday after Christmas in 1969. Of the innumerable paintings of the Holy Family one of the most celebrated is that by B. E. *Murillo (1670), now in the Louvre.

Institution of Feast in A.A.S., xiii (1921), p. 543 f. G. Löw, C.SS.R., and W. Wehr in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 1551–5, s.v. 'Sacra Famiglia', with bibl.

HOLY FATHER, The Most (Beatissimus Pater). A title of the Pope (in common usage abbreviated to 'Holy Father'), which is first quoted in English c. 1380.

HOLY GHOST, The. An alternative title of the *Holy Spirit (q.v.), esp. in liturgical usage.

HOLY HELPERS. See Auxiliary Saints.

HOLY INNOCENTS. The children of *Bethlehem, 'from two years old and under', massacred by order of *Herod the Great, in a vain attempt to destroy the Infant Jesus (Mt. 2. 16–18). The event is commemorated in the calendar on 28 Dec. Until 1960, if it fell on a weekday it was celebrated in purple with a penitential rite, but in the Roman Rite it is now always kept with the full privileges of a martyrs' day (red vestments and the recital of the *Gloria in Excelsis).

V. Ermoni in Dict. Bibl., iii (1903), cols. 879–81, s.v. 'Innocents (Saints)'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 608–16, s.v. 'Innocents (Massacre des)'.

HOLY ISLAND. See Lindisfarne.

HOLY LANCE, The. See Lance, The Holy.

HOLY LAND, The. A name given to Palestine since the Middle Ages with reference both to its having been the scene of the Incarnation and also to the existing sacred sites there, esp. the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem.

HOLY MOUNTAIN, The. A designation of Mount *Athos from the large collection of monasteries which covers it.

HOLY NAME OF JESUS. See Name of Jesus.

HOLY OFFICE, The. The Roman *Congregation established in connexion with the *Inquisition (q.v.) by *Paul III in 1542 under the title of 'Sacra Congregatio Romanae et Universalis Inquisitionis seu Sancti Officii' as the final court of appeal in trials of heresy. Originally composed of six cardinals, it was reorganized, and the number raised to 13, by *Sixtus V in 1587. On all important occasions the Pope presides in person. In 1908 it was affected by *Pius X's general reorganization of the Roman Congregations (q.v.), and its title changed to 'Congregatio Sancti Officii'. In 1965 *Paul VI reformed it under the title 'Congregatio pro Doctrina Fidei' and assigned to it the more positive function of promoting as well as safeguarding sound doctrine on faith and morals.

H. Bangen, Die römische Curie, ihre gegenwärtige Zusammensetzung und ihr Geschäftsgang (1854), pp. 91–124. J. Simor, 'De Sacris Congregationibus Romanis S. Officii et Concilii. I: De Sacra Cong. Officii' in Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, xv (1866), pp. 133–6. B. Ojetti, S.J., in C.E., xiii (1912), pp. 137–9, s.v. 'Roman Congregations'; U. Beste in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 944–6, s.v. 'Doctrine of the Faith, Congregation for the', both with bibl. See also works cited under Inquisition and Roman Congregations.

HOLY OILS. See Chrism.

HOLY ORDERS. The higher grades (sacri ordines) of the Christian Ministry, i.e. those of *Bishop, *Priest, and *Deacon (qq.v.). In the RC Church the *Sub-diaconate (until suppressed) was also reckoned among the 'Major Orders' (q.v.).

HOLY PLACES, The. The places in Palestine to which pilgrimage is made on account of their traditional association with many of the principal Biblical events.

HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE. The Empire set up in the W. following the coronation of *Charlemagne as Emperor in Rome by Pope *Leo III on Christmas Day 800. This in the first instance created a new empire within the existing (Roman) empire, which itself continued at *Constantinople until 1453. After *Louis the Pious the title was held by Western rulers of diminishing territorial power until its temporary disappearance in 924. In 962 Otto I of Germany, who was already also king of Italy, was crowned Emperor in Rome by Pope *John XII; Otto's successors of the Saxon, Salian and Hohenstaufen dynasties held the title until 1254. These emperors were crowned in Rome, but all save Otto III (983–1002) and *Frederick II were wholly or mainly German, rather than Italian, in their preoccupations. The title 'Roman empire' came into use from 1034, following Conrad II's acquisition of the kingdom of Burgundy (1032), to denote the sum of kingdoms held by their common ruler; the style 'holy empire' (sacrum imperium) was used from 1157 when *Frederick I wished to counter the claims of the sancta ecclesia; the title 'Holy Roman Empire' was in use only from 1254, when the Empire had already lost much ground to the Papacy (esp. *Innocent III) and to the German princes; its loss of any pretensions to universal monarchy was reflected in *Dante's De Monarchia.

Of the emperors after 1250 only five were ever actually crowned as such, *Charles V (at Bologna in 1529) being the last; from 1440 the title was held by successive rulers of the Hapsburg dynasty, the empire being known with justice as 'the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation'. *Ferdinand II sought to use the imperial position to further the *Counter-Reformation in Germany, but the Treaty of *Westphalia finally undermined the Hapsburg position outside their hereditary lands. The dignity was abolished by Napoleon I in 1806.

The terms 'the western empire' and 'the medieval empire' are modern inventions to denote 'the Holy Roman Empire'; the title 'emperor' was assumed by kings of more than one kingdom in medieval Spain and Scandinavia.

J. Bryce, The Holy Roman Empire (1864; enlarged and revised ed., 1904; classic but outdated); H. [A. L.] Fisher, The Medieval Empire (2 vols., 1898). A. Dempf, Sacrum Imperium. Geschichts- und Staatsphilosophie des Mittelalters und der politischen Renaissance (1929). G. Barraclough, The Mediæval Empire. Idea and Reality (Historical Association Publications, General Series, G.17; 1950; repr. in History in a Changing World, Oxford, 1955, pp. 105–30); R. Folz, L'Idée d'empire en Occident du Ve au XIVe siècle (1953). F. Heer, Das Heilige Römische Reich (Bern, 1967; abridged Eng. tr., 1968).

HOLY SATURDAY. The day before *Easter Sunday, also known as Easter Even (as in the BCP). It commemorates the resting of Christ's body in the tomb. In early times there were no special services. The BCP provides a special Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for the day; these are commonly used at the *Ante-Communion service, without a Celebration. In the RC Church the practice of anticipating the first Mass of Easter on the morning of Holy Saturday, current since the Middle Ages, was abandoned after 1955, and the liturgy, with the traditional ceremonies, restored to the Saturday–Sunday night. See Paschal Vigil Service.

HOLY SEE, The. The see of the Bishop of Rome. As commonly used, it denotes the Papacy, esp. in reference to the authority, jurisdiction, and functions of government which attach to it.

HOLY SEPULCHRE, The. The rock cave in *Jerusalem where, acc. to an early tradition, Christ was buried and rose from the dead. The tomb is said to have been 'discovered' by St. *Helena, mother of the Emperor *Constantine, and the first 'Church of the Holy Sepulchre' (more correctly, that of the 'Anastasis', or Resurrection) was dedicated c. 335. In 626 a new church was completed, after the Persians had destroyed the first in 614, but this building was so much damaged in the 10th and 11th cents. that a third building was set up c. 1050. In place of this church, the Crusaders built one much larger, c. 1130, to cover all the neighbouring holy places, including the site of *Calvary. This in turn, after having been rebuilt in 1310, was partly destroyed by fire in 1808. The present church largely dates from 1810, though some of the earlier bell tower (1160–80) remains, in a poor state of repair.

The main structure of the church consists of two halves: on the west the domed building which covers the Holy Sepulchre itself, and on the east the church proper. There are also several chapels and shrines in which many of the ancient Christian bodies have rights. The scene on Sunday mornings, when the various rites, all with music, are proceeding simultaneously, is unique in Christendom. Here also the Holy Week rites of the different Churches are carried out, each with its peculiar ceremonies and on the dates fixed by its own calendar. Anglicans, with the permission of the Orthodox authorities, have been allowed since the end of the 19th cent. to celebrate the *Eucharist in the 'Chapel of Abraham', which stands above the site of Calvary. The fact that the Holy Sepulchre lies within the city itself (contrast Heb. 13. 12) is attributed to the circumstance that the modern city occupies a slightly different position from that of NT times. See also Gordon's Calvary.

H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem, ii (1914–1926), pp. 89–300, with plates 12–29. A. Heisenberg, Grabeskirche und Apostelkirche. Zwei Basiliken Konstantins, i (1908); A. *Baumstark, Die Modestianischen und die Konstantinischen Bauten am heiligen Grabe zu Jerusalem (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, vii, Hftt. 3 and 4; 1915). E. Wistrand, Konstantins Kirche am heiligen Grab in Jerusalem nach den ältesten literarischen Zeugnissen (Acta Universitatis Gotoburgensis, lviii; 1952, 1). A. Parrot, Golgotha et Saint-Sépulcre (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, vi; 1955; Eng. tr., 1957). W. Harvey, Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Jerusalem. Structural Survey. Final Report (1935). B. Bagatti, O.F.M., in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 358–63, s.v. 'Sepolcro santo', with bibl. C. Coüasnon, O.P., The Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem (1974).

HOLY SHROUD, The. A relic, preserved at Turin since 1578, and venerated as the winding-sheet in which Christ's body was wrapped for burial (Mt. 27. 59, &c.). The shroud bears the imprint of the front and back of a human body marked with the traditional stigmata. Its history cannot be traced beyond the mid-14th cent.

C. U. J. Chevalier, 'Le Saint Suaire de Turin est-il l'original ou une copie?' in Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société savoisienne d'Histoire et d'Archéologie, xxxviii (1899), pp. 105–33, also publd. separately; id., 'Le Saint Suaire de Lirey–Chambéry–Turin et les défenseurs de son authenticité' in Bulletin d'Histoire et d'Archéologie du Diocèse de Valence, xxi (1901), pp. 1–41, also publd. separately. Supporters of the genuineness of the relic, basing their conclusions on the photographic evidence obtained after the Exposition of 1898 and later on the further photographs taken in 1931, include P. Vignon, Le Linceul du Christ. Étude scientifique (1902; Eng. tr., 1902); id., Le Saint Suaire de Turin devant la science, l'archéologie, l'histoire, l'iconographie, la logique (1938); G. Enrie, La Santa Sindone rivelata dalla fotografia (Turin, 1933); R. W. Hynek, La passione di Cristo e la scienza medica (Milan, 1937, tr. from Czech original publd. Prague, 1935; Eng. tr. from Italian, 1951), and W. Bulst, S.J., Das Grabtuch von Turin (Frankfurt, 1955). There is a popular account of the controversy by J. [E.] Walsh, The Shroud (New York, 1963; London, 1964). P. Scotti–A. Vaccari, S.J., in E.C., xi (1953), cols. 692–7, s.v. 'Sindone', with detailed bibl.; A. J. Otterbein in N.C.E., xiii (1967), pp. 187–9, s.v. 'Shroud, Holy'.

HOLY SPIRIT. In Christian theology, the Third Person of the Holy *Trinity, distinct from, but consubstantial, coequal and coeternal with, the Father and the Son, and in the fullest sense God. It is held that the mode of the Spirit's procession in the Godhead is by way of 'spiration' (not 'generation') and that this procession takes place as from a single principle.

Christian theologians point to a gradual unfolding of the doctrine in the OT, where the notion of the 'Spirit' (ruach) plays a large part as an instrument of Divine Action, both in nature and in the human heart. The Spirit of God is already operative at the Creation, brooding on the face of the waters (Gen. 1. 2). In early times, the Hebrews saw evidence of the Spirit's action in deeds of valour and prowess. The Divine Spirit inspired the artistic skill of Bezaleel (Exod. 36. 1 f.), the successes of *Joshua (Deut. 34. 9), and the strength of *Samson (Jgs. 14. 6). In particular the Spirit was bestowed on those appointed to communicate Divine truth and esp. on the Prophets (Is. 61. 1 f.). He is also the chief power making for moral purity and holiness (Ps. 51. 11). Above all, the Spirit was to be the possession of the Coming Davidic King (Is. 11. 2) and of the Servant of the Lord (Is. 42. 1); and in the future Messianic Age there would be a large extension of the Spirit's activities and power (Jer. 31. 31 ff.; Ezek. 36. 26 f.). In the later OT writings the Spirit was increasingly seen as the Bestower of intellectual capacities. It is the Spirit of understanding which fills the devout man (Ecclus. 39. 6) and conveys to him wisdom and religious knowledge (Wisd. 7. 7, 9. 17).

In the NT, the OT teaching on the Spirit finds further development. It was through the overshadowing of the Spirit that the BVM conceived the Saviour (Lk. 1. 35; cf. Mt. 1. 18–20). The Spirit descended upon Christ at His Baptism (Mk. 1. 10), was His support in the wilderness in His conflict with Satan (1. 12), and was an operative power throughout His ministry, not least in His miracles. 'Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost' was the sin for which there was no forgiveness (Mk. 3. 29). Teaching on the Spirit receives an esp. characteristic form in St. *John's Gospel, where He is 'another *Paraclete' (Jn. 14. 26, 15. 26). His full mission will lie in the future, after Jesus has been glorified; and it was after the Resurrection that the Apostles received the bestowal of the Spirit in the Upper Room with the power esp. to remit sins.

At *Pentecost the illapse of the Holy Spirit in His fullness on the Church is described in Acts 2. 1–13. It was marked by the gift of tongues, and St. Peter saw in this outpouring of the Spirit the new dispensation prophesied by *Joel (Acts 2. 16 f.; cf. Joel 2. 28–32). Lk. emphasizes the extent to which the early Church was possessed by the belief of the Spirit's operation. Deception of the Apostles was deception of the Holy Spirit and lying to God (Acts 5. 3–9). Moreover, the Apostles were conscious of receiving direct communications from the Spirit (Acts 11. 12, 16. 6 f.) and the Holy Spirit shared in the deliberations of the Apostles on the question of the law (Acts 15. 28). And the gift of the Spirit was so far entrusted to the Apostles that it was conveyed to others through the imposition of their hands (Acts 8. 15 f., 19. 6). See Hands, Imposition of; Confirmation.

In the theology of St. *Paul, the thought of the Spirit occupies a central place. Indeed he associates the exalted Christ so closely with the Spirit that Christ and the Spirit often seem almost identified. The Christian life as life 'in the Spirit' (alternatively life 'in Christ') is sharply contrasted with life 'in the flesh', and it is the presence of the Holy Ghost which makes the Christian's body the temple of God (1 Cor. 3. 16, 6. 17). The Spirit is our Intercessor with the Father (Rom. 8. 26 f.). He divides His gifts to men severally as He will (1 Cor. 12. 11) and the fruits and gifts of the Spirit are described (Gal. 5. 22 f.). Hereafter He will raise up our bodies as 'spiritual bodies' in the likeness of Christ's Resurrection (1 Cor. 15. 42–44, cf. Rom. 8. 11).

The doctrine of the Spirit in a theologically elaborated form, though implicit in the NT, was not reached for some centuries. An important stage was reached in *Tertullian. The *Montanists (q.v.) showed the need to distinguish between true and false operations of the Holy Ghost; but despite the insistence of the Montanists on the Spirit's activities, their strange conceptions of the operation of the Spirit do not seem to have left any permanent mark on the development of the doctrine. *Origen emphasized that the characteristic sphere of the Spirit's operation was the Church, as contrasted with the whole of Creation which was that of the Word. From A.D. 360 onwards the doctrine of the Spirit became a matter of acute controversy. A group of theologians known as the '*Macedonians', while maintaining against the *Arians the full Divinity of the Son, denied that of the Spirit. The most considerable work which these discussions provoked was St. *Basil's De Spiritu Sancto. At the Council of *Constantinople of 381 Macedonianism was finally repudiated and the full doctrine of the Spirit received authoritative acceptance in the Church. In the West, this doctrine was elaborated by St. *Augustine in his De Trinitate, notably by his conception of the Spirit as the Bond of Union in the Holy Trinity.

On the difference between the Eastern and Western doctrines of the Spirit, see also Double Procession; Filioque.

Important Patristic discussions of the doctrine include St. *Athanasius, Epp. ad Seraptonem; St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, Catech. Lect., xvi; St. Basil, De Spiritu Sancto; and St. *Ambrose, De Spiritu Sancto. The doctrine also has a prominent place in St. Augustine, De Trinitate. The subject is discussed in all systematic expositions of Christian doctrine, e.g. the works of St. *John of Damascus and of St. *Thomas Aquinas (S. Theol. I, i, qq. 36–43), as well as in the modern treatises of D. *Petavius, J. B. *Franzelin, A. *Tanquerey and K. *Barth. Modern works dealing expressly with the doctrine include: H. B. *Swete, The Holy Spirit in the New Testament (1909); id., The Holy Spirit in the Ancient Church (1912), and other works; H. Watkin-Jones, The Holy Spirit in the Mediaeval Church (1922); id., The Holy Spirit from Arminius to Wesley [1929]. W. H. G. Thomas, The Holy Spirit of God (1913). T. Rees, The Holy Spirit in Thought and Experience (1915). B. H. *Streeter (ed.), The Spirit. God and His Relation to Man considered from the standpoint of Philosophy, Psychology and Art (1919). F. Büchsel, Der Geist Gottes im Neuen Testament (1926). H. W. *Robinson, The Christian Experience of the Holy Spirit (1928). C. K. Barrett, The Holy Spirit and the Gospel Tradition (1947). M. H. Lavocat, O.P., L'Esprit d'amour. Essai de synthèse de la doctrine catholique sur le Saint-Esprit (vol. i [1950: no more publd.]). G. S. Hendry, The Holy Spirit in Christian Theology (1957). L. Dewar, The Holy Spirit and Modern Thought (1959). H. B. Swete in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 113–33, s.v.; R. Birch Hoyle in H.E.R.E., xi (1920), pp. 784–803, s.v. 'Spirit (Holy)'; E. Schweizer and others in T.W.B., vi (1959), cols. 357–453, s.v. πνεῦμα; partial Eng. tr. as Spirit of God (1960); J. Guillet, S.J., J. Gribomont, O.S.B., and others in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1246–1333, s.v. 'Esprit Saint'.

HOLY SYNOD. From 1721 to 1917, the supreme organ of government in the *Russian Orthodox Church. It was not a real synod, but an ecclesiastical committee composed of bishops and clergy, established by Peter the Great to replace the earlier government of the Church by the Russian *Patriarch. The lay procurator attended as the Emperor's representative, but was not a member. In 1917, after the first Revolution, it was abolished and the patriarchate restored.

HOLY WATER. Water which has been blessed for certain specific religious purposes. Acc. to W. usage, it is blessed by a priest acting in the name of the Church; he may add to it a small quantity of *salt, blessed with a separate prayer. By a natural symbolism it is used for blessings, dedications, and exorcisms, also at burials, and for ceremonial cleansing on entering a church as well as the *Asperges at the beginning of Mass. When the water is blessed during the Mass, the blessing of the water and the Asperges take the place of the normal penitential rite. The Christian use of water for religious purposes other than Baptism can be traced back to the 4th cent. in the E. and to the 5th in the W. The use of 'Holy Water stoups' at the entrance of churches had become general at any rate by Norman times. See also Stoups.

A. Gastoué, L'Eau bénite. Ses origines, son histoire, son usage (1908); A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter (1909), pp. 43–220; A. A. King, Holy Water. The Use of Water for Ceremonial and Purificatory Purposes in Pagan, Jewish and Christian Times (1926).

HOLY WEEK. The week preceding *Easter, observed throughout Catholic Christendom both in E. and W. as a period of devotion to the Passion of Christ. The various traditional rites of the week, of which each day has its own, probably began to develop at *Jerusalem in the 4th cent., when pilgrimages became easily possible, and Christians could indulge a natural desire to re-enact the last scenes of the life of Christ in liturgical drama. The Pilgrimage of *Etheria, a document variously dated in the 4th–6th cent., gives a detailed account of the contemporary observance of Holy Week in Jerusalem. For the ceremonies proper to each day in more recent E. and W. liturgical practice, see Palm Sunday, Maundy Thursday, Good Friday, Holy Saturday, Paschal Vigil, Easter.

H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J. (ed.), Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3; Rome, 1956–7). J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week, its Services and Ceremonial (*Alcuin Club Collections, No. xxix; 1932). H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904), 149–440; Aemiliana Löhr, Die Heilige Woche (Regensburg, 1957; Eng. tr., 1958). J. G. Davies, Holy Week. A Short History (Ecumenical Studies in Worship, xi; 1963).

HOLY YEAR. A year during which the Pope grants a special *Indulgence, the so-called *Jubilee, to all those who visit Rome, on certain conditions. It was instituted in 1300 by *Boniface VIII, who had meant it to be celebrated every 100 years. *Clement VI, in 1343, however, changed the period to 50; *Urban VI, in 1389, to 33 in honour of the years of the Lord's earthly life; and Paul II, in 1470, settled on 25, the regular interval that has been kept ever since. The conditions and special benefits are laid down each time by a special bull, issued on the preceding Feast of the *Ascension. The chief conditions are normally worthy reception of the Sacraments and visits to the four *basilicas during a specified time. The benefits include 'plenary indulgence' and exceptional powers for the confessors, who may absolve from most sins ordinarily reserved to higher authority, and commute all vows except those reserved to the Pope. One of the most important ceremonies of the Holy Year is the opening of the *Holy Door (q.v.) by the Pope before the First Christmas Vespers, and its walling up again at the same time a year later. Originally the Jubilee Indulgence was to be gained only at Rome, but since 1500 it has been extended to all churches throughout the world, to which it is granted for the six months following the Roman year on similar conditions, among them visits to local shrines and works of penance and charity. A Holy Year was last celebrated in 1975.

H. Thurston, S.J., The Holy Year of Jubilee. An Account of the History and Ceremony of the Roman Jubilee (1900), with bibl. refs.

HOMBERG, Synod of. A synod which *Philip, Landgraf of Hesse, convoked at Homberg, 20 miles south-west of Cassel, on 21 Oct. 1526 to establish a constitution on Protestant principles for the Church of his domains. A set of 158 articles (paradoxa), which had been circulated in advance by F. *Lambert, a former *Franciscan friar, was taken as a basis of the proceedings, while the opponent of the reforming doctrines was Nicolas Ferber. The one important outcome of the synod was the appointment of a committee to draw up a Church Order for Hesse, which issued the 'Reformatio Ecclesiarum Hassiae', a set of regulations on a Protestant basis covering the whole area of Church life. By insisting on the independence of each Christian community, responsible for the maintenance of its own discipline, the 'Reformatio' upheld a congregationalism which went far beyond Luther's teachings. Largely through Luther's influence, Philip of Hesse refrained from allowing it to be promulgated, and in consequence it was never enforced.

The Reformatio Ecclesiarum Hassiae was first publd. in F. C. Schmincke (ed.), Monimenta Hassiaca, ii (Cassel, 1748), pp. 588–666. Also ed. K. A. Credner (Giessen, 1852). More important clauses in Kidd, pp. 222–30 (No. 98). W. Schmitt, Die Synode zu Homberg und ihre Vorgeschichte. Festschrift zur vierhundert-Jahrfeier der Homberger Synode (Homberg, 1926). C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 288–94, s.v. 'Homberger Synode und Kirchenordnung', with bibl. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, iv (1938), p. 640 f. (Nos. 43042–55). See also bibl. to Lambert, F., and Philip, Landgraf of Hesse.

HOMILIARY (Lat. homiliarium). A collection of homilies arranged acc. to the ecclesiastical calendar for reading at the office of *Mattins. Homiliaries were compiled esp. in the earlier Middle Ages, and among surviving examples are those of *Paul the Deacon (c. A.D. 790), made at the command of *Charlemagne, and of Alain of Farfa (d. 770).

H. Barré, C.S.Sp., Les Homéliaires carolingiens de l'école d'Auxerre. Authenticité, inventaire, tableaux comparatifs, initia (S.T., ccxxv; 1962); R. Grégoire, O.S.B., Les Homéliaires du Moyen Age. Inventaire et analyse des manuscrits (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, vi; 1966), with extensive reff. P. Siffrin, in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 465 f., s.v. 'Homiliar', with older reff.

HOMILIES, The Books of. The plan of issuing prescribed homilies for the use of disaffected and unlearned clergy was agreed to in the Convocation which met on 20 Jan. 1542. A collection was duly produced twelve months later, but, prob. because *Henry VIII refused to authorize it, not formally issued until early in *Edward VI's reign, when it appeared with the authority of the Council on 31 July 1547. The subjects of its twelve homilies were: (1) A fruitful Exhortation to the Reading of Holy Scripture (T. *Cranmer); (2) Of the Misery of all Mankind (Archdeacon John Harpsfield, 1516–78); (3) Of the Salvation of all Mankind (Cranmer); (4) Of the true and lively Faith (Cranmer); (5) Of Good Works (Cranmer); (6) Of Christian Love and Charity (E. *Bonner); (7) Against Swearing and Perjury; (8) Of the Declining from God; (9) An Exhortation against the Fear of Death (prob. Cranmer); (10) An Exhortation to Obedience; (11) Against Whoredom and Adultery; (12) Against Strife and Contention.

A 'Second Book', with 21 further homilies, was issued under *Elizabeth I. It was prob. completed by the beginning of 1563, but it was not published in its final form until 1571. Their titles are listed in Art. 35 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The majority are the work of J. *Jewel; but E. *Grindal wrote No. 5 and M. *Parker (prob.) No. 17. No. 21 ('Against Rebellion') was added in 1571 in view of the Northern Rebellion of 1569.

From Elizabethan times, the Homilies provided a considerable element in Anglican preaching, and acquired status alongside the BCP and *Thirty-Nine Articles as a repository of Anglican doctrine. Bishops frequently enjoined that they should be read and inquired into practice during their triennial visitations. At the Restoration (1660) they were revived, and, though hopes of a revision were unfulfilled, they were frequently cited by R. *South, G. *Morley, G. *Hickes, and the later *Nonjurors. Though they are unsuitable for modern use, the Homilies retain a measure of authority in view of Art. 35, while Art. 11 refers to the 'Homily of Justification' (presumably No. 3 of the First Book) for a fuller account of the 'most wholesome doctrine' 'that we are justified by faith only'.

HOMILIES, Clementine. See Clementine Literature.

HOMOEANS. The Arian party which came into existence c. 355 under the leadership of *Acacius, Bp. of Caesarea. Repudiating both the *Homoousion and the Homoiousion, they sought to confine theological discussion about the Person of the Son to the assertion that He was like (Gk. ὅμοιος, 'like') the Father. For a brief interval they were closely associated with the much more orthodox *Semiarians.

HOMOIOTELEUTON (Gk. ὅμοιος, 'like', and τελευτή, 'ending'). In MSS., the repetition of the same sequence of letters or words in two neighbouring places, considered as a source of error in copying. Where the repeated sequence occurs at the beginning of a word or phrase, the alternative expression 'homoioarcton' is occasionally used.

HOMOOUSION (Gk. ὁμοούσιον, 'of one substance'). The term used in the *Nicene Creed to express the relations of the Father and the Son within the Godhead and originally designed to exclude *Arianism. Its earlier associations with the *Gnostics and *Paul of Samosata at first made it suspect, and many *Origenists, who had no sympathy with Arianism, preferred the term 'Homoiousion' (ὁμοιούσιον, i.e. 'of like substance with the Father'), which was held to leave more room for distinctions in the Godhead. It is possible that the introduction of the word for anti-Arian purposes is to be ascribed to *Hosius of Cordova, who used it to express in Greek the Latin consubstantialis.

J. F. Bethune-Baker, The Meaning of Homoousios in the 'Constantinopolitan' Creed (Texts and Studies, vii, No. 1; Cambridge, 1901). G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), ch. x f., pp. 197–241. C. Hauret, Comment le défenseur de Nicée a-t-il compris le dogme de Nicée? (*Gregoriana University thesis; Bruges, 1936). J. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., 'L' "Homousios" preniceno' in O.C.P., viii (1942), pp. 194–209. J. Lebon, 'Le Sort du "Consubstantiel" Nicéen' in R.H.E., xlvii (1952), pp. 485–529, and xlviii (1953), pp. 632–82. See also works cited s.v. Arianism.

'HONEST TO GOD'. The title of a book by J. A. T. Robinson, then Bp. of Woolwich, first publd. in 1963, in which many of the traditional concepts about the transcendence of God were criticized. It attracted much publicity.

D. L. Edwards (ed.), The Honest to God Debate (1963).

HONORATUS, St. (c. 350–429), Abp. of *Arles. Of a consular family, he was converted to Christianity and set out with his brother Venantius on a pilgrimage to the holy places in Syria and Egypt; but on his brother's death in Achaia, he returned through *Rome and with the encouragement of Leontius, Bp. of Fréjus, settled in the island of *Lérins, where he founded (c. 410) the celebrated monastery. In 426 he became Abp. of Arles, where he was active in establishing orthodoxy and continued to direct his monastery. St. *Hilary of Arles, his successor in the see and biographer, was probably a relative. His writings have been lost. The authorship of the *Athanasian Creed was at one time (1896) ascribed to him by A. E. Burn. Feast day, 16 Jan.

St. Hilary's 'Sermo de Vita S. Honorati' pr. in AA.SS., Jan. II (1643), pp. 17–24, and, from MSS., in J. P. Migne, PL, l. 1249–72. B. Munke (ed.), Die Vita S. Honorati nach drei Handschriften (Zeitschrift für Romanische Philologie, Beiheft xxxii, 1911); new ed. by S. Cavallin (Lund, 1952). A. E. Burn, The Athanasian Creed and its Early Commentaries (Cambridge Texts and Studies, iv, 1; 1896), esp. ch. iii.

HONORIUS I (d. 638), Pope from 625. He came from a noble family of the Campagna, but little is known of his life before his election to the Papacy. Like his predecessor, St. *Gregory the Great (d. 604), he interested himself in the christianization of the Anglo-Saxons, and sent his congratulations to King *Edwin of Northumbria on the occasion of his baptism in 627. He also sent St. *Birinus to preach in Britain, and gave the pallium to Honorius of Canterbury and *Paulinus of York. He gained considerable influence over the government of Italy by his wise administration of the patrimony of Peter, and despite heavy expenditure on churches and other buildings collected a considerable Papal treasure. One of his principal achievements was the ending of the schism of the patriarchs of *Aquileia-Grado, which had been renewed by Fortunatus, whom he deposed, probably with the help of the Exarch of *Ravenna. Gratitude for this assistance may have influenced his attitude towards the Emp. *Heraclius in the matter of the *Monothelite heresy, which has been among the chief historical arguments against Papal Infallibility. About 634 *Sergius, the Patr. of *Constantinople, addressed a letter to the Pope interrogating him on the question of the 'one energy' (μία ἐνέργεια) of Christ. This formula, which, while confessing the two natures, attributed only one mode of activity, viz. that of the Divine Word, to the Incarnate Christ, had been found useful in the E. for reconciling the Monophysites. It was strenuously opposed, however, by *Sophronius of Jerusalem, and Sergius, in his diplomatic letter to Honorius, stressed the unity of the Person of Christ safeguarded by the new formula, while disregarding the duality of natures. Without further inquiries, Honorius sent back a favourable reply in which he used the unfortunate formula of 'one will' in Christ. When his injunction of silence on both parties was disobeyed, he wrote a second letter rejecting the expression 'two wills' as giving rise to contentions, though insisting strongly on the two natures. He died in 638, the year of the publication of the *Ecthesis, the charter of Monothelitism, which utilized Honorius' formula of the 'one will'.

His successors repeatedly condemned the heresy, and at the Council of *Constantinople (681) Honorius himself was formally anathematized. This condemnation, which was forgotten in the W. during the Middle Ages, was discussed in the 15th cent. at the negotiations for reunion between the Catholic and Orthodox Churches, and again in the *Gallican controversies of the 17th and 18th cents., and before the definition of Papal Infallibility in 1870. The authenticity of the letter of Honorius as well as of the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, once rejected by some RC scholars, e.g. C. *Baronius, is now generally admitted. The common argument in defence of Honorius is that the letters do not contain heretical teaching, but only gravely imprudent expressions, and that, in these circumstances, condemnation of a Pope's carelessness by a General Council was justified.

J. P. Migne, PL, lxxx. 463–94. J. J. I. von *Döllinger, Die Papstfabeln des Mittelalters (1863), pp. 131–53; C. J. *Hefele, Causa Honorii Papae (Naples, 1870); J. *Chapman, O.S.B., 'The Condemnation of Pope Honorius' in Dublin Review, cxxxix (1906), pp. 129–54, cxl (1907), pp. 42–72; P. Galtier, S.J., 'La Première Lettre du Pape Honorius' in Gregorianum, xxix (1948), pp. 42–61. R. Bäumer, 'Die Wiederentdeckung der Honoriusfrage im Abendland' in R.Q., lvi (1961), pp. 200–14. Hefele-Leclercq, iii (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 347–538. Mann, i (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 304–45. É. Amann in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 93–131. G. Kreuzer, Die Honoriusfrage im Mittelalter und in der Neuzeit (Stuttgart, 1975).

HONORIUS III (d. 1227), Pope from 1216. Cencio Savelli was a native of Rome. Well educated and of a strong religious character, he became successively canon of Sta Maria Maggiore, papal chamberlain (1188), cardinal-deacon (1193), tutor to the Emp. *Frederick II (1197) and cardinal priest (before 1201). On 18 July 1216 he was elected to succeed *Innocent III and consecrated at Perugia on 24 July. In general he continued the policy of his predecessor. On 22 Nov. 1220 he crowned the Emp. Frederick in St. Peter's on promises that he would uphold the rights of the Church and promote a crusade. He took a prominent part in political affairs throughout Europe, acting as arbitrator between Philip II of France and James of Aragon, supporting Henry III of England (which he virtually ruled during the King's minority) against the barons, crowning Peter of Courtenay Emp. of Byzantium (1217), and defending the privileges of the Church in Bohemia (1223). He also approved the *Dominican, *Franciscan and *Carmelite Orders and fostered the growth of their *Tertiary orders. Among his many writings are a large collection of *Decretals ('Compilatio Quinta'), a Life of *Gregory VII, an *Ordo Romanus which included a Coronation Order and an important Liber Censuum Romanae Ecclesiae (1192); the last is a valuable record of the secular relations of the Papacy in his day. Several of his letters and sermons have also survived. He also wrote a continuation of the Liber Pontificalis*.

Opera Omnia, ed. C. A. Horoy, Medii Aevi Bibliotheca Patristica (5 vols., Paris, 1879–83); Selected Letters, ed. C. Rodenberg in M.G.H., Ep. Saec. XIII, i (1883), pp. 1–260; Regesta Honorii Papae III, ed. P. Pressutti, 2 vols., Rome, 1888–95; Liber Censuum Romanae Ecclesiae, ed. with preface and commentary by P. Fabre and L. *Duchesne ([1889–]1910). Documents of his pontificate relating to Spain ed. D. Mansilla (Monumenta Hispaniae Vaticana. Sección: Registros, ii; Rome, 1965). J. Clausen, Papst Honorius III (1895). F. Caillemer, Le Pape Honorius III et le droit civil (1881); F. Vernet, Étude sur les sermons d'Honorius III (thesis, Lyons, 1888); N. Mengozzi, Onorio III e le sue relazioni col regno di Inghilterra (Siena, 1911); A. Keutner, Papsttum und Krieg unter dem Pontifikat des Papstes Honorius III (1935). U. Berlière, O.S.B., 'Honorius III et les monastères bénédictins, 1216–1227' in Revue belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, ii (1923), pp. 237–65 and 461–84. H. X. Arquillière in Fliche–Martin, x (1950), pp. 291–304, with bibl. H. Schulz in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 318–33, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 180–220, s.v. 'Liber Censuum', and G. Mollat in E.C., ix (1952), cols. 141–3, s.v. 'Onorio III'.

HONORIUS 'OF AUTUN' (Augustodunensis) (early 12th cent.), popular theologian. In his De luminaribus ecclesiae he describes himself as 'Honorius Augustodunensis ecclesiae presbyter et scholasticus', and nothing more is certainly known of his life. The view of earlier scholars that 'Augustodunensis' refers to Autun has been abandoned, but no agreed alternative has been found. There are indications that he spent part of his life in England, but was not an Englishman, and that he had some connexion with *Canterbury and came for a time under the influence of St. *Anselm. It is also usually agreed that the later part of his life was spent in S. Germany as a monk, and probably a recluse. He was a very prolific writer. To his English period belong: the Elucidarium, one of the earliest surveys of Christian doctrine, in the form of a dialogue between pupil and master. It had a wide and lasting popularity, and was translated into several vernaculars, beginning with extracts in Anglo-Saxon in his own life-time; the Sigillum sanctae Mariae, an exposition of the lessons for the feast of the *Assumption, including a short commentary on the Song of Songs, in which it is given a Marian interpretation; the Gemma animae, a work on the liturgy and liturgical practices with much allegory and symbolism. To his German period belong long commentaries on the Psalter and on the Song of Songs, which is here interpreted as applying to Christ and the Church; a Clavis physicae consisting of extracts from Johannes Scotus *Erigena; and the De luminaribus ecclesiae, a brief catalogue of Christian writers, ending with a list of twenty-one works of his own, which is far from complete. Honorius also wrote Imago mundi, a popular compendium of cosmology and geography which enjoyed very wide popularity throughout the Middle Ages and was translated into various vernaculars. Many of his shorter tracts are concerned with themes of topical interest in the period of the *Gregorian reform, such as the celibacy of the clergy. Honorius was not an original thinker or writer, but he wrote in simple language for those without access to many books, and he had the art of making interesting any subject on which he touched.

Of the works collected and pr. under the name of Honorius, with prolegomena, in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxii, 9–1270, the De Philosophia (cols. 39–102) is the work of *William of Conches, the De Solis Effectibus (cols. 101–16) is of doubtful authorship, and the Quaestiones et ad easdem Responsiones in . . . Proverbia et Ecclesiasten (cols. 311–48) is the work of Salonius of Geneva. His Cognitio Vitae is pr. among the works of St. *Augustine in J. P. Migne, op. cit., xl, 1005–32; further sections of his commentary on the Psalms are pr. among the works of *Gerhoh of Reichersberg in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cxciii, 1315–72 (on Pss. 31–7), and cxciv, 485–730 (on Pss. 78–117); further 'Libelli' ed. I. Dieterich in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, iii (1897), pp. 29–80, with bibl. reff. An edition of the Elucidarium by Y. Lefèvre (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, clxx; 1954) ignores the early English MSS. The original text of the Inevitabile was pr. by J. Kelle (Sb. (Wien), cl, Heft. 3; 1905). J. A. Endres, Honorius Augustodunensis (Kempten–Munich, 1906). F. Baeumker, Das Inevitabile des Honorius Augustodunensis und dessen Lehre über das Zusammenwirken von Wille und Gnade (B.G.P.M., xiii, Hft. 6; 1914). E. Rooth, 'Kleine Beiträge zur Kenntnis des sog. Honorius Augustodunensis' in Studia Neophilologica, xii (1939/40), pp. 120–35. Eva M. Sanford, 'Honorius, Presbyter and Scholasticus' in Speculum, xxiii (1948), pp. 397–425. Marie Thérèse d'Alverny, 'Le Cosmos symbolique du XIIe siècle' in A.H.D.L.M.A., Année xxviii (for 1953; 1954), pp. 31–81. H. Menhardt, 'Der Nachlass des Honorius Augustodunensis' in Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Literatur, lxxxix (1958/9), pp. 23–69. R. W. Southern, St. Anselm and his biographer (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge, 1963), pp. 209–17. Manitius, iii, pp. 57–9, 364–76. Y. Lefèvre in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 730–7, s.v. 'Honorius (2) Augustodunensis'.

HONTHEIM, JOHANN NIKOLAUS VON (1701–90), founder of *Febronianism. He was a native of Trier, where he spent the greater part of his life. While a student at Louvain, he came under the influence of the *Gallican canonist, Z. B. *van Espen. In 1728 he was ordained priest and in 1748 became suffragan Bp. of Trier. In 1742 he began an investigation, on behalf of the German Archbishop-Electors, of the historical position of the Papacy, and in 1763, under the pseudonym of 'Justinus Febronius', published his conclusions in his principal work, De statu ecclesiae et legitima potestate Romani Pontificis (see Febronianism). Owing to its Gallican doctrines the book was put on the *Index in 1764; but though for several years Hontheim was involved in controversy, he was not compelled to make a formal retractation until 1778. In 1781 he published Justini Febroni Commentarius in suam retractationem Pio VI, a work which, despite its conciliatory spirit, showed little real change of view. His other writings include two valuable historical works on the city of Trier, Historia Trevirensis Diplomatica (3 vols., 1750) and Prodromus Historiae Trevirensis (2 vols., 1757). His integrity, devotion to truth, and learning were admired even by his enemies.

See bibl. to Febronianism.

HOOK, WALTER FARQUHAR (1798–1875), Dean of *Chichester. Educated at *Winchester and *Oxford, he spent some years after his ordination in parochial work at Coventry and Leeds. As vicar of Leeds (1837–59), although sympathetic with the *Tractarian Movement, he became involved in a controversy with E. B. *Pusey over the alleged Romish practices at St. Saviour's, Leeds. Differences in their interpretation of the effects of the Reformation on the Anglican Church led to an increasingly heated correspondence until finally their friendship was formally terminated by Hook, who declared himself an enemy of 'Romanism' and 'Puseyism'. In 1859 he became Dean of Chichester. He was the author of many historical and theological works, including a Church Dictionary (1842; often reprinted), a Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Biography (8 vols., 1845–52), and the Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury (12 vols., 1860–76).

W. R. W. Stephens, The Life and Letters of Walter Farquhar Hook (2 vols., 1878). C. J. Stranks, Dean Hook (1954). W. R. W. Stephens in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 276–9.

HOOKER, RICHARD (c. 1554–1600), Anglican divine. Born at Heavitree near Exeter, he was admitted through the influence of J. *Jewel at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1577. In 1579 he was appointed deputy professor of Hebrew. Vacating his fellowship on his marriage to Joan Churchman 'who brought him neither beauty nor portion' (I. *Walton), in 1584 he was appointed rector of Drayton Beauchamp, and in 1585 Master of the Temple, where he controverted the *Calvinistic views of the Reader, W. *Travers. Later (1591) he became rector of Boscombe, Wilts, and finally (1595) of Bishopsbourne, near Canterbury, where he died.

Hooker was par excellence the apologist of the Elizabethan Settlement of 1559 and perhaps the most accomplished advocate that Anglicanism has ever had. He developed his doctrines in his Treatise on the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. Of the five Books which appeared in Hooker's lifetime I–IV were published in 1594 and V in 1597. Books VI (certainly spurious in its present form) and VIII did not appear until 1648 and Book VII until 1662. In conception the Treatise was a livre de circonstance, designed to justify episcopacy, but it embodied a broadly conceived philosophical theology. His opposition to the *Puritans, who held to the literal following of the Scriptures as an absolute in the sense that whatever was not expressly commanded in Scripture was unlawful, led him to elaborate a whole theory of law, based on the 'absolute' fundamental of natural law, whose 'seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world' (E.P., I. xvi. 8). This natural law, which governs the universe and to which both ecclesiastical and civil polity are subservient, is the expression of God's supreme reason, and everything, including the Scriptures, must be interpreted in the light of it. 'Laws human must be made according to the general laws of nature, and without contradiction unto any positive law in Scripture. Otherwise they are ill made' (E.P., III. ix. 2). The Puritans were wholly mistaken in regarding the Bible as a mechanical code of rules; for not everything that is rightful finds precise direction in the Scriptures. In a similar way the permanence of law does not preclude development of detail. The Church is an organic, not a static, institution, and the method of Church government and ecclesiastical administration will change acc. to circumstances. Hence the C of E, though reformed, possesses continuity with the medieval Church. Further, the visible organized Church is a political society, 'a court not temporal merely', yet able to control its own legislation in a way analogous to that in which the civil state through parliament makes its laws. Hooker developed an essentially contractual theory of political government which influenced future political writers, esp. J. *Locke.

In particular matters, Hooker has been less universally acceptable to Anglicans. In his unreadiness to condemn the orders of Continental Protestants, he denied the necessity of episcopal ordination. His doctrine of the Eucharist, not wholly consistent, closely approximates in many places to *Receptionism. His argument on points of detail is not infrequently difficult to grasp and not wholly clear. But Hooker remains one of the greatest theologians that the English Church has ever possessed; and he conveyed his beliefs in a masterly English prose. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 3 Nov.

Works ed. by J. *Keble (3 vols., 1836). Life by I. Walton (1665; reprinted in Keble's edition of Works). F. *Paget, An Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's Treatise of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1899). L. S. Thornton, C.R., Richard Hooker (1924); A. P. d'Entrèves, The Medieval Contribution to Political Thought. Thomas Aquinas, Marsilius of Padua, Richard Hooker (1939); C. J. Sisson, The Judicious Marriage of Mr. Hooker and the Birth of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1940); F. J. Shirley, Richard Hooker and Contemporary Political Ideas (1949); P. Munz, The Place of Hooker in the History of Thought (1952). G. Hillerdal, Reason and Revelation in Richard Hooker (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. I, liv, 7; 1962); J. S. Marshall, Hooker and the Anglican Tradition. An historical and theological study of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (Sewanee, Tenn., and London, 1963). S. Lee in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 289–95.

HOOPER, JOHN (d. 1555), Bp. of *Gloucester and *Worcester, and Protestant martyr. A native of Somerset, he was educated at Oxford and is said to have entered a *Cistercian monastery. On the dissolution of the religious houses he went to London and began to interest himself in the Continental Reformers, esp. H. *Zwingli and J. H. *Bullinger, and returned to Oxford to propagate their views. After a disputation with S. *Gardiner, Bp. of *Winchester, he was exiled for heresy and spent the next years travelling in Europe. From 1547 to 1549 he lived at Zürich, where he became a friend of Bullinger, M. *Bucer, and J. *Laski. In 1549 he came back to England and was made chaplain to the Protector *Somerset. In 1550 he was nominated to the see of Gloucester, which he accepted only after the reference to angels and saints had been omitted from the Oath of Supremacy and after further prolonged hesitation on the lawfulness of episcopal vestments, which led to a short term of imprisonment. In 1552, when Gloucester was reduced to an archdeaconry, he was given the see of Worcester. He governed his diocese with exemplary zeal and vigour, introducing, however, many Continental customs. He was also very liberal to the poor. On the accession of *Mary he was imprisoned in the Fleet in 1553. In 1555 he was tried for heresy, and having refused to recant was excommunicated and burned at the stake (9 Feb. 1555). One of the chief English exponents of extreme Continental Protestantism, he exercised a considerable influence on the later Puritans through his writings, which include A Godly Confession and Protestation of the Christian Faith (1551) and A Brief and Clear Confession of the Christian Faith, containing an hundred Articles acc. to the Order of the Creed of the Apostles (1581).

S. Carr (ed.), The Early Writings of John Hooper (*Parker Society, 1843); C. Nevinson (ed.), Later Writings of Bishop Hooper (ib., 1852), with biographical sketch pp. vii–xxx. H. Robinson (ed.), Original Letters Relating to the English Reformation, 1537–1558 (ib., 2 vols., 1846–7). Short life by J. C. *Ryle (London, [1868]). F. D. Price, 'Gloucester Diocese under Bishop Hooper, 1551–3' in Transactions of the Bristol and Gloucester Archaeological Society, lx (1938), pp. 51–151. G. G. Perry in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 304–6.

HOPE. One of the three *theological virtues. In its widest sense it may be defined as the desire and search for a future good, difficult but not impossible of attainment. In the course of OT history hope played an important part, often in the form of merely earthly desires, in the preparation of Israel for the Incarnation. By the resurrection of Christ, mankind was 'begotten again unto a living hope' (1 Pet. 1. 3). As a Christian virtue its primary end, its motive, and its author is God Himself, and like faith it may continue even when charity has been lost by mortal sin. It is confined to this life and to purgatory, and has no place either in heaven (where its object, the *Beatific Vision, is already attained) or in hell. Hope, being confidence in God's goodness tempered by fear of His justice, is opposed to both despair and presumption.

R. L. *Ottley in H.E.R.E., iv (1913), p. 779 f., s.v. 'Hope (Christian)'; R. *Bultmann–K. H. Rengstorf in T.W.B., ii (1935), cols. 515–31, s.v. ἐλπίς, with reff.; J. H. Nicolas, O.P., in Dict. Sp., iv (1960), cols. 1208–33, s.v. 'Espérance'.

HOPKINS, GERARD MANLEY (1844–89), poet. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was the pupil of B. *Jowett and W. Pater and the friend of R. *Bridges and D. M. Dolben. At this time he came under the religious influence of E. B. *Pusey and H. P. *Liddon. In 1866 Hopkins joined the RC Church, in 1868 he entered the *Jesuit novitiate, and in 1877 he was ordained priest. In 1884 he was appointed professor of Greek at the Royal university, Dublin, a position which he held till his death. He was unknown as a poet during his life, except to two or three friends, and the preservation of his MSS. is due to R. Bridges, who first edited them in 1918. His poems, the most ambitious of which is The Wreck of the Deutschland and perhaps the most representative The Windhover: to Christ our Lord, are marked by their great intensity of feeling, freedom in rhythm, and individual use of words, and have exerted much influence on more recent poets. They show a priest's pastoral care for souls, and conceive the fundamental personal relationship between the soul and its Redeemer as sacrificial. The opening words of The Wreck of the Deutschland, 'Thou mastering me God', were carved over the sculpture of the Re-creation of Man by E. *Gill at Geneva.

Poems, ed. with notes by Robert Bridges (1918); ed. 2, enlarged, with an introduction by Charles *Williams (1930); ed. 3, further enlarged, with notes and biographical introduction by W. H. Gardner (1948); ed. 4 by W. H. Gardner and N. H. Mackenzie (1967). C. C. Abbott, The Letters of Gerard Manley Hopkins to Robert Bridges (1935); id., The Correspondence of Gerard Manley Hopkins and Richard Watson Dixon (1935); id., Further Letters of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1938; ed. 2 with additional letters, 1956); H. House, Note-books and Papers of G. M. Hopkins (1937); ed. 2 by H. House and G. Storey, The Journals and Papers of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1959); C. Devlin, S.J. The Sermons and Devotional Writings of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1959). G. F. Lahey, S.J., Gerard Manley Hopkins (London, 1930); W. H. Gardner, Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844–1889). A Study of Poetic Idiosyncrasy in Relation to Poetic Tradition (2 vols., 1944–9). J. E. Ritz, Le Poète Gérard Manley Hopkins [1963]. The numerous other studies include J. Pick, Gerard Manley Hopkins. Priest and Poet (1942); A. Heuser, The Shaping Vision of Gerard Manley Hopkins (1958); D. A. Downes, Gerard Manley Hopkins. A Study of his Ignatian Spirit (New York and London, 1960); and A. Thomas, S.J., Hopkins the Jesuit (1969). B. I. Evans in C.B.E.L., iii, p. 325 f.

HORMISDAS, St. (d. 523), Pope from 514. His chief importance lies in his success in healing the *Acacian Schism which since 484 had divided the E. from the W. After an attempt at union in 515 had come to grief through the obstinacy of the Emp. Anastasius I, Hormisdas secured in 519, under the new Emp. Justin I, the signature of John, the Patr. of Constantinople, and afterwards of some 250 E. bishops, to a dogmatic formula (the 'Formula Hormisdae') in which the *Chalcedonian Definition and Leo's *Tome were accepted, Acacius and other heretics were expressly condemned, and the authority of the Roman see (on the basis of Mt. 16. 18) was strongly emphasized. He also took a notable part in negotiating with the (*Arian) Goths matters of ecclesiastical concern to the W. Church, and maintained good relations with *Theodoric. It was under his direction that *Dionysius Exiguus made his second version of the Greek ecclesiastical canons. Feast day, 6 Aug.

Some ninety of Hormisdas' genuine letters survive; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxiii, 367–534; crit. texts in the so-called 'Collectio Avellana' ed. O. Guenther (C.S.E.L., xxxv, pt. 2; 1898). Life in L.P. (Duchesne), i, 269–74. L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIe siècle (1925), pp. 37–40, 48–65. W. Haacke, Die Glaubensformel des Papstes Hormisdas im Acacianischen Schisma (Analecta Gregoriana, xx; 1939). J. S. Martin, 'La "Prima Salus" del Papa Hormisdas (514–523)' in Rivista Española de Teología, i (1941), pp. 767–812. F. Dvornik, The Idea of Apostolicity in Byzantium (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), pp. 124–34. Bardenhewer, v, p. 279 f. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., vii (1910), p. 470 f., s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 161–76, s.v.; J. Chapin in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 148, s.v.

HORNE, GEORGE (1730–92), Bp. of *Norwich. Born at Otham, nr. Maidstone, he was educated at University College, *Oxford, where he became a friend of W. *Jones ('of Nayland'), his future biographer, and J. Moore, later Abp. of *Canterbury. In 1750 he was elected Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he became president in 1768. He was appointed vice-chancellor of the university in 1776 and Dean of Canterbury in 1781. In 1790 he became Bp. of Norwich. Horne was a disciple of J. *Hutchinson, but rejected his more fanciful speculations on Hebrew etymology. Though an adherent of High Church principles, he was in sympathy with the spiritual earnestness of the *Methodists and refused to forbid J. *Wesley to preach in his diocese. He also supported the Scottish bishops' petition to Parliament in 1789. Among his writings are many pamphlets directed in various ways against the views of I. *Newton, D. *Hume, W. *Law, and others, whose importance he seems not always to have understood. Horne was above all a preacher, and his sermons were frequently reprinted. His most important work is his Commentary on the Psalms (1771); in it he maintained that the greater number of the Psalms were Messianic.

Collected ed., 6 vols., London, 1809 (incomplete). W. Jones, Memoirs of the Life, Studies and Writings of the Right Reverend George Horne (1795; with list of Horne's writings, pp. 414–18). A. C. Bickley in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 356–8.

HORNE, THOMAS HARTWELL (1780–1862), Biblical commentator and bibliographer. He was the grandfather of T. K. *Cheyne. Educated at Christ's Hospital, where S. T. *Coleridge was his contemporary, he began as a barrister's clerk. To supplement his income he took up literary work and wrote on a great variety of subjects. For many years he was a *Wesleyan Methodist. In 1808 he was invited to catalogue the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, and from then on was engaged in several bibliographical undertakings. In 1818 appeared the first edition of his Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures (3 vols.), which at once established itself by its completeness as a standard work, though it was without originality. A supplementary volume appeared in 1821, and it went through a large number of editions both in Great Britain and the U.S.A. down to 1860. Among those who helped in the revision of its later editions were S. Davidson and S. P. *Tregelles. In 1819 Horne was ordained by W. *Howley to the curacy of Christ Church, Newgate Street, and held various ecclesiastical offices in the London diocese till his death. His many other writings include an Introduction to the Study of Bibliography (2 vols., 1814), Deism Refuted (1819), The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity briefly stated and defended (1820), and A Compendious Introduction to the Study of the Bible (1827).

Reminiscences Personal and Bibliographical of Thomas Hartwell Horne, with notes by his daughter, S. A. Cheyne (1862), incl. list of Horne's writings (pp. 199–208). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), p. 363 f.

HORNECK, ANTHONY (1641–97), Anglican divine. He was a native of Bacharach on the Rhine, of Protestant parentage, who studied theology at Heidelberg and came to England c. 1661. In 1663 he was made a member of Queen's College, Oxford, and vicar of All Saints, Oxford, in 1664. He became prebendary of *Exeter Cathedral in 1670, and in the following year preacher at the Savoy, where he enjoyed great popularity. In 1689 he was appointed chaplain to William III, and in 1693 prebendary of *Westminster. He wrote a number of devotional books which were widely used at the time, dealing esp. with Holy Communion. Among them are The Happy Ascetic (1681), The Fire of the Altar (1683), and The Crucified Jesus (1686).

Collected ed. of Several Sermons upon the Fifth of St. Matthew; Being Part of Christ's Sermon on the Mount (2 vols., 1698), with life by Richard Kidder, Bp. of Bath and Wells, vol. i, pp. 3–58, and list of his works, p. 61 f.; also publ. separately (London, 1698). Four Tracts by Horneck were ed. by W. Edwards (London, 1697); The Crucified Jesus was also ed. by W. F. *Hook (Leeds and London, 1848); extracts from The Happy Ascetic were ed. by J. Wesley, The Christian Library, xvi (1823), pp. 291–432; short extract from The Fire of the Altar pr. in P. E. More–F. L. Cross (edd.), Anglicanism (1935), No. 359, p. 777. L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), p. 367 f.

HOROLOGION (Gk. ὡρολόγιον). In the E. Church, the liturgical book which contains the recurrent portions of the ecclesiastical *office extending through the whole year.

HORSIESI, St. See Orsisius, St.

HORSLEY, SAMUEL (1733–1806), Bp. of *St. Asaph. He was born in London and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1759 he succeeded his father as rector of Newington (now part of London). His interests in science led him to become a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1767, and its Secretary from 1773 to 1784. In 1771 he was appointed domestic chaplain to the Bp. of London, who made him Archdeacon of *St. Albans in 1781. In 1788 he was consecrated Bp. of *St. Davids. He proved an energetic bishop, both in his diocese and in the House of Lords. In 1793 he was translated to *Rochester, and in 1802 once more translated to St. Asaph. He is chiefly famous for his controversy with J. *Priestley over the doctrines of the Trinity and Christ's Divinity in which he defended the traditional view that the pre-Nicene Church was unanimous in its theology of the Lord's consubstantiality with the Father. His many writings, largely on scientific and philological subjects, include Providence and Free Agency (1778), The Analogy between the Light of Inspiration and the Light of Learning (1787), Tracts in controversy with Dr. Priestley (1789), An Apology for the Liturgy and Clergy (1790), Hosea translated . . . with Notes (1801), and The Book of Psalms translated (1815; posthumous). He also published many separate sermons.

Sermons [ed. H. Horsley] (2 vols., Dublin, 1810) and later edd.; The Speeches in Parliament of Samuel Horsley [ed. id.] (ib., 1813); The Charges of Samuel Horsley . . . delivered at his Several Visitations of the Dioceses of St. David's, Rochester, and St. Asaph (ib., 1813). His Sermon on 'The Death of Louis XVI', delivered on 30 Jan., 1793, was reissued in D. Macleane, Famous Sermons by English Preachers (1911), pp. 180–92. Heneage Horsley Jebb, A Great Bishop of One Hundred Years Ago, being a Sketch of the Life of Samuel Horsley (1909). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 383–6.

HORT, FENTON JOHN ANTHONY (1828–1892), NT scholar. Educated at Rugby under T. *Arnold and A. C. *Tait, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was from 1852 to 1857 a Fellow of his college, from 1857 to 1872 incumbent of St. Ippolyts, near Hitchin, and from 1872 till his death back at Cambridge, where he held various appointments, incl. the Hulsean (1878–87) and the Lady Margaret (1887–92) Professorships. In his early years at Cambridge he became a lifelong friend and fellow-worker with E. W. *Benson, J. B. *Lightfoot, and B. F. *Westcott, and also came under the influence of F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, Tom Hughes, and others, with whose social endeavours he was in sympathy. His original intention was to publish large-scale commentaries on the Gospels, Acts, and some of the *Catholic Epistles; but most of his energies were in fact diverted to the Greek text of the NT, at which he worked, in conjunction with Westcott, almost continuously from 1852 till its publication in 1881. His work in this field, summarized in his fine 'Introduction' to the Westcott–Hort NT, was remarkable for the accuracy and sobriety of his judgements. Its somewhat difficult style, combined with a modesty which often conceals the range of its writer's learning, can still hide its distinction and erudition from those who handle it for the first time. From 1882 to 1890 he was engaged, with Westcott and W. F. *Moulton, in preparing the RV of Wisdom and 2 Macc. Of the first importance also were his Two Dissertations (1876) on Μονογενὴς Θεός and the *Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed, and his (posthumous) Judaistic Christianity (1894) and The Christian Ecclesia (1897). He contributed a number of major articles to the first volume of D.C.B. Hort had also wide and constructive interests in theology, esp. in its relations with the natural sciences, but these found little expression in writing. His *Hulsean Lectures for 1871, The Way, the Truth, and the Life (publd. posthumously, 1893), were an impressive essay in philosophical theology.

Life and Letters, ed. Arthur Fenton Hort, son (2 vols., London and New York, 1896); full review of this work, with appreciation of Hort, by W. *Sanday in American Journal of Theology, i (1897), pp. 95–117; further appreciation of Hort by T. B. *Strong in J.T.S., i (1900), pp. 370–86. E. G. Rupp, Hort and the Cambridge Tradition (Inaugural lecture; Cambridge, 1970). H. E. *Ryle in D.N.B., Suppl., ii (1901), pp. 443–7.

HOSANNA (Gk. ὡσαννά). The Greek form of the Hebrew petition הוֹשִׁיעָ־נָא ('Save, we beseech Thee'). It was used by the multitude when they proclaimed Jesus to be the Messiah on His triumphal entry into Jerusalem on *Palm Sunday (Mt. 21. 9, 15, Mk. 11. 9 f., Jn. 12. 13); and was thence introduced into the Christian liturgies at a very early date (e.g. *Didache 10. 6). The words 'Glory be to thee, O Lord, most High' in the *Sanctus of the Anglican BCP are a rendering of the Hosanna in excelsis ('Hosanna in the highest') in the medieval and modern Latin rite.

HOSEA, Book of. The first of the Twelve *Minor Prophets. Its author, Hosea (Vulg. Osee), the son of Beeri, was a younger contemporary of *Amos and apparently a native of the Northern Hebrew Kingdom. He prophesied during the years of its decline, some time before the fall of *Samaria in 721 B.C. The opening chapters (1–3) narrate the story of the prophet's tragic home life, in which he interpreted his experiences with Gomer, his unfaithful wife, as a parable of what had taken place between God and Israel. The remainder of the Book (chs. 4–14) is a development of the theme of Israel's apostasy and unfaithfulness in spite of the enduring love of God. Hosea is the first Biblical writer to use the family tie as an illustration of the relation between God and man (cf. St. Paul's description of the Church as the 'bride of Christ'). His realization of God's character of love also paved the way for the Christian teaching on the Fatherhood of God. Like Amos, he denounced the corrupt and shallow sacrificial worship of his day, but perhaps sought not so much its abolition as its spiritualization.

Commentaries by T. K. *Cheyne (Camb. Bibl., AV, 1884), W. R. Harper (I.C.C. on Amos and Hosea, 1905, pp. 201–417), S. L. Brown (West. Comm., 1932), H. W. Wolff (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, xiv, part 1; 1961; ed. 2, 1965), J. M. Ward (New York, 1966), W. Rudolph (K.A.T., xiii. 1; 1966), and J. L. Mays (London, 1969). H. S. Nyberg, Studien zum Hoseabuche, zugleich ein Beitrag zur Klärung des Problems der Alttestamentlichen Textkritik (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1935, pt. 6; 1935). N. Snaith, Mercy and Sacrifice. A Study of the Book of Hosea (1953). H. W. *Robinson, Two Hebrew Prophets. Studies in Hosea and Ezekiel (1948), pp. 11–61. H. H. Rowley, 'The Marriage of Hosea' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxix (1957), pp. 200–33, repr. in Men of God (1963), pp. 66–97. Eissfeldt, pp. 384–91 and 749 f., with bibl. A. Gelin in Dict. Bibl., vi (1960), cols. 926–40, s.v. 'Osée (Livre de)', with further bibl. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets.

HOSIUS, or OSSIUS (c. 257–357), Bp. of Cordova. He was consecrated Bp. of Cordova c. 296, and suffered in the persecution under Maximian. He took part in the Council of *Elvira (c. 306) and from 313 to the Council of *Nicaea seems to have acted as ecclesiastical adviser to the Emp. *Constantine. In the early stages of the Arian controversy he was sent to *Alexandria to investigate the dispute between *Alexander and *Arius, and it was apparently in consequence of his report that the Emperor summoned the Nicene Council. There are some grounds for believing that here he presided, and also introduced the *Homoousion. He certainly presided at the anti-Arian Council of *Sardica in 343. In 355 he was banished to Sirmium for his support of St. *Athanasius, and from his exile addressed to Constantius a letter, which is his only surviving writing. At the Synod of *Sirmium (357) he succumbed to pressure to the extent that he signed the 'Blasphemy' which involved communicating with the Arians and was allowed in consequence to return to his diocese. He repudiated his action at Sirmium, however, before his death in his hundredth year.

Primary sources (scattered) incl. Athanasius, Hist. Ar., 42–45; id., Apol. c. Ar., 89; id., De Fuga, 5; *Hilary, Fragmenta, 2 and 6; id., De Synodis, 10 f.; *Socrates, H.E., ii. 31. V. C. De Clercq, C.I.C.M., Ossius of Cordova. A Contribution to the History of the Constantinian Period (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, xiii; 1954). U. Domínguez del Val, O.S.A., 'Osio de Córdoba' in Rivista Española de Teologia, xviii (1958), pp. 141–65, 261–81. M. Aubineau, S.J., 'La Vie grecque de "saint" Ossius de Cordoue' in Anal. Boll., lxxviii (1960), pp. 356–61. For the spelling 'Ossius' see C. H. *Turner in J.T.S., xii (1910–11), pp. 275–7. Bardenhewer, iii (1912), pp. 393–5; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 366, for further bibl. T. D. C. Morse in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 162–74.

HOSIUS, STANISLAUS (1504–79), Polish cardinal. He was a native of Cracow, of German origin, and studied law at Cracow, at *Bologna, where he came into touch with R. *Pole, and at Padua. He was ordained priest in 1543, and after holding several benefices, he was appointed Bp. of Kulm in 1549. In 1551 he was translated to the diocese of Ermland, where one of his chief tasks was the fight against Protestantism. Here he preached extensively in Latin, Polish, and German. In 1552–3 he published his chief work, the Confessio Catholicae Fidei Christiana, in which he contrasted the Catholic dogmas with the opposing beliefs of the Reformers and endeavoured to prove from Scripture and tradition that Catholicism and Christianity were identical. The work had a great success, over 30 editions and many translations appearing in the author's lifetime. Among other controversial writings that followed were his Confutatio Prolegomenorum Brentii (1558) against the Württembergian *Lutheran theologian, J. *Brenz, which had a preface by St. Peter *Canisius, and De Expresso Dei Verbo (1558), in which he claimed to demonstrate the necessity of an authoritative interpretation of Scripture. In 1558 *Paul IV called him to Rome as his adviser on the religious affairs of Poland and Prussia, and in 1560 *Pius IV appointed him nuncio to Ferdinand I. In this capacity he prepared the reopening of the Council of *Trent and brought back to the RC Church the Emperor's son, Maximilian, who had come under the influence of Protestant preachers. In 1561 he was created cardinal and appointed Papal legate at Trent, where he was entrusted esp. with the leadership in the doctrinal discussions. At the Council he vigorously upheld the primacy of the Pope. After returning to his diocese in 1564, he published the decrees of Trent at the Synod of Parczow (1564) and invited the *Jesuit Order to open a college, the later 'Lyceum Hosianum', at Braunsberg. In 1566 he was nominated legate a latere by *Pius V, and from 1569 resided in Rome as the permanent Polish representative. He upheld the use of violence against heretics, but in private life he was a man of a simple and unworldly faith.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Paris, 1562; the best ed. (still incomplete) is that publd. in 2 vols. fol., Cologne, 1584. Modern edd. of selections of his correspondence by F. Hipler–V. Zakrzewski [up to 1558] (Acta Historica Res Gestas Poloniae Illustrantia ab Anno 1507 ad Annum 1795, iv, ix, parts 1 and 2; Editionum Collegii Historici Academiae Litterarum Cracoviensis, xv, xxxiv, xl; Cracow, 1879–88) and S. Steinherz (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, 1560–72, nebst ergänzenden Actenstücken, Zweite Abt., Bd. i; Vienna, 1897). Correspondence with Albert, Duke of Prussia, on the Council of Trent (1560–62), ed. E. M. Wermter (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, lxxxii; 1957). Early life (in Lat.) by S. Rescius (his secretary, Rome, 1587; repr. in ed. of his letters by F. Hipler–V. Zakrzewski, cited above, vol. i, pp. ii–cxxiv). Modern studies by A. Eichhorn (2 vols., Kirchheim, 1854–5), B. Elsner (Königsberg, 1911), and J. Lortz (Braunsberg, 1931). S. Frankl, Doctrina Hosii de Notis Ecclesiae, in luce s. XVI considerata (Rome, 1934); L. Bernacki, La Doctrine de l'Église chez le Cardinal Hosius (1936). G. Grabka, 'Cardinal Hosius and the Council of Trent' in Theological Studies, vii (1946), pp. 558–76. A. Humbert in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 178–90, s.v.; I. Rogger in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1483–5, s.v.; E. M. Wermter in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 490 f., s.v.

HOSKYNS, Sir EDWYN CLEMENT (1884–1937), Anglican Biblical scholar. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, and on the Continent, where he heard A. *Harnack and became a friend of A. Schweitzer. He was ordained in 1908, became an army chaplain in 1915, and from 1919 till his death he was Dean of Chapel of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He made a name by his essay 'The Christ of the Synoptic Gospels' in Essays Catholic and Critical (1926), in which he argued that the so-called 'historical Jesus' of Liberal Protestantism was unhistorical, and that the teaching behind the Synoptic Gospels was much more complex and 'Catholic' than was generally supposed by liberal NT critics. The Riddle of the New Testament (1931), written in collaboration with F. N. Davey, deals with the principles underlying the critical and historical study of the NT. In these studies Hoskyns passed from a *Modernist position, influenced by A. Schweitzer and A. *Loisy, to an objective and dogmatic attitude. Later he took over much from K. *Barth, whose Commentary on Romans he translated (1933). He also adopted the methods of G. Kittel's Wörterbuch, as is shown esp. in his sermons on the vocabulary of the NT. In his posthumously published work, The Fourth Gospel (ed. F. N. Davey, 1940), he upheld the unity of St. John's Gospel; he was concerned esp. to bring out the theological meaning of the whole, making full use both of patristic and modern exegetical works.

His sermons were edited with a memoir by C. H. Smyth, Cambridge Sermons (1938). J. O. Cobham in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 448 f., s.v.

HOSMER, FREDERICK LUCIAN (1840–1929), American hymn writer. Born at Framingham, Mass., he was educated at Harvard and, after two years' school teaching (1866–8), was ordained in the *Unitarian ministry in 1869. After holding charges at Quincey, Ill., from 1872 to 1877, at Cleveland, Ohio, from 1878 to 1892, at St. Louis from 1894 to 1899 and at Berkeley, Cal., from 1899 to 1904, he delivered a series of lectures on Church hymnody in 1908 at Harvard Divinity School, of which he was president for the year 1920–1. His hymns had a wide appeal esp. among adherents of the emancipated liberal theology of the late 19th cent. They include 'Not always on the Mount may we', 'O beautiful my country', 'O Name all other names above', and 'Thy Kingdom come, On bended knee'. They were mainly published in three series of The Thought of God in Hymns and Poems, which he edited in conjunction with W. C. Gannett (1885, 1894, and 1918). He also issued Way of Life (1877) for use in Sunday schools and, with W. C. Gannett and J. V. Blake, edited Unity Hymns and Carols (1880, enlarged 1911).

H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog., ix (1932), p. 241 f.

HOSPITALLERS, also 'Knights Hospitaller'. At the end of the 11th cent. the headquarters of the order were a hospital at *Jerusalem which was dedicated to St. *John Baptist; hence its members were more fully described as 'Knights of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem'. After 1310 they were also known as the Knights of Rhodes, and from 1530 as the Knights of Malta.

The beginnings of the order are uncertain; they may have been connected with the old *Benedictine Abbey of S. Maria Latina in Jerusalem or alternatively with a separate foundation in the city made by merchants of Amalfi c. 1050. Its first historical personage is Master Gerard, under whom, after the successes of the *Crusaders in 1099, the order greatly developed and obtained Papal sanction. Under his successor, Raymond of Provence (1120–60), the order added the care of the sick to its original duties of providing hospitality for pilgrims and Crusaders. It also established an armed guard of knights for the defence of pilgrims which soon developed into a regular army. All members of the order were bound by the three religious vows and divided into two classes, the 'military brothers' and the 'brothers infirmarians'. To the latter were added the 'brothers chaplains', responsible for Divine worship and the spiritual needs of the community. During the 12th cent. the order spread to Europe, where it created foundations in Italy, France, Germany, and other countries. Its knights shared both the successes and the defeats of the Crusaders; and after the fall of Acre (1291) they escaped to Cyprus and subsequently conquered Rhodes (1309), which became the centre of their activities for the next 200 years. Here their character became predominantly military, and their power and wealth increased greatly after the suppression of the Knights *Templars (1312; q.v.), whose possessions were assigned to the Hospitallers by the Pope. Their principal achievements during this period were their exploits against the Turks, notably the victorious defence of Rhodes by the Grand Master Pierre d'Aubusson in 1480 and that of 1522 against Suleiman II which ended in honourable defeat. After being without a home for seven years, the order received the sovereignty of Malta from *Charles V in 1530, where it regained its old importance for some time. The knights continued fighting the Turks in many battles and in 1571 took a decisive part in the battle of *Lepanto. The 17th and 18th cents. saw the decline of the order in morals and discipline, culminating in the treacherous surrender of Malta to Napoleon in 1798. Since then it has led a somewhat precarious existence. It now devotes itself to the maintenance of hospitals and still has knights under obedience to a Grand Master and several commanders. Its distinctive sign is the eight-pointed *Maltese cross worn on a black cloak.

In England the property of the Grand Priory was sequestrated in 1540. Apart from a brief revival under Mary, the English Langue of the Hospitallers remained dormant, with a series of non-resident titular Grand Masters, the last of whom held office from 1806 to 1815. In 1831, however, the Grand Priory was revived on a mainly Anglican basis. A royal charter of 1888 constituted it an order of chivalry, with the sovereign as its head, and a charter of 1926 authorized the creation of priories and commanderies in other countries of the Commonwealth. The order was responsible for the foundation of the St. John's Ambulance Association in 1878, the St. John Ophthalmic Hospital in Jerusalem in 1882 and the St. John Ambulance Brigade in 1888.

The term 'Hospitallers' is sometimes used in a wider sense, e.g. to include the *Brothers Hospitallers (q.v.) founded by St. *John of God.

J. Delaville Le Roulx, Cartulaire général de l'ordre de S. Jean de Jérusalem, 1100–1310 (4 vols., 1894–1906). Id., Les Hospitaliers en Terre Sainte et à Chypre, 1100–1310 (1904); id., Les Hospitaliers à Rhodes jusqu'à la mort de Philibert de Naillac, 1310–1421 (1913). Id., 'Les Statuts de l'ordre de l'hôpital de Saint-Jean de Jérusalem' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, xlviii (1887), pp. 342–56, and other works by the same author. E. J. King, The Rule, Statutes, and Customs of the Hospitallers 1099–1319 [in Eng. tr.] (1934). [R. Aubert de] Vertot [d'Aubeuf], Histoire des chevaliers hospitaliers de S. Jean de Jérusalem appellez depuis les chevaliers de Rhodes et aujourd'hui les chevaliers de Malte (4 vols., 1726; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1728). J. Riley-Smith, The Knights of St. John in Jerusalem and Cyprus c. 1050–1310 (1967), with bibl.; other volumes on the history of the order under the editorship of L. Butler are planned. G. Bottarelli, Storia politica e militare del sovrano ordine di S. Giovanni di Gerusalemme detto di Malta (2 vols., Milan, 1940). E. E. Hume, Medical Work of the Knights Hospitallers of Saint John of Jerusalem (Baltimore, 1940). E. J. King, The Grand Priory of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England (1924; ed. 3, entitled The Knights of St. John in the British Realm, by H. Luke, 1967). Heimbucher, i, pp. 615–17, with further bibl. W. A. Phillips in E.B. (ed. 11), xxiv (1911), pp. 12–19, s.v. 'St. John of Jerusalem, Knights of the Order of the Hospital of'.

HOSPITALS. Christian hospitals were founded throughout E. Christendom from the 4th cent. onwards, and became exceedingly numerous in W. Europe during the earlier Middle Ages, when they were commonly associated with the monastic orders. From the earliest times different types were instituted to meet different problems, e.g. those of orphans, the sick, the aged, and the impotent poor. With some notable exceptions, e.g. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London (begun 1123), the medieval hospitals of England were for the most part almshouses for the aged. By the close of the 15th cent. a large proportion of these had been allowed to perish or to survive only in decadent forms. The secularization of the Reformation period interfered only temporarily with the hospitals of Europe, and numbers of important foundations by rulers, municipalities, and Christian societies took place in the 17th and 18th cents.

R. M. Clay, The Medieval Hospitals of England (1909). J. Imbert, Les Hôpitaux en droit canonique (du décret de Gratien à la sécularisation de l'administration de l'Hôtel-Dieu de Paris en 1505) (L'Église et l'État au Moyen Age, viii; 1947). J. J. Walsh in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 480–8, s.v.; E. Nasalli-Rocca and A. B. McPadden in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 159–66, s.v.' Hospitals, History of'.

HOST (Lat. hostia). A sacrificial victim, and so the consecrated Bread in the *Eucharist, regarded as the Sacrifice of the Body of Christ.

HOURS, Canonical. The times of daily prayer laid down in the *Breviary, and esp. the services appointed to be recited at these times. In the W. Church, the seven commonly recognized Hours have traditionally been *Mattins and *Lauds (reckoned as a single hour), *Prime, *Terce, Sext, None, *Vespers, and *Compline (qq.v.). The whole pattern of daily prayer, however, was much simplified in the 1971 Breviary. See Breviary.

HOUSEL. A medieval English name for the Eucharist, perhaps descended from a Teutonic stem meaning 'holy'. In *Ulphilas' rendering of Mt. 9. 13, a similar word (hunsl) is used for 'sacrifice'.

The 'houselling cloth' was the (late medieval) long white linen cloth spread before, or held by, the communicants at the time of receiving the Sacrament. It has survived continuously at St. Mary the Virgin's, Oxford, at Wimborne Minster, and perhaps in a few other places. It has been restored in some other Anglican churches in modern times. In the RC Church the use of such a cloth was ordered by the '*Rituale Romanum' (IV. ii. 1) but tended to become obsolete after 1929, when the Sacred Congregation of *Rites ordered that a silver plate should be held before communicants.

Artt. 'Housel' and 'Houseling' in O.E.D., v (1901), p. 423.

HOWARD, JOHN (c. 1726–90), English philanthropist and prison reformer. He was a man of Evangelical piety, firmly convinced of the truth of the *Calvinistic creed in which he had been brought up, and though his second wife was a Churchwoman and he accompanied her to the local parish church, he remained a dissenter throughout his life. In 1773 he became High Sheriff of Bedford, where what he saw of the terrible afflictions of both tried and untried in the county gaol inspired him to his work of prison reform. His first step (1774) was to secure official salaries for gaolers, who had hitherto depended on fees extorted from the prisoners. He then visited numerous prisons and hospitals in England and throughout Europe, regardless of the dangers of entering infectious dwellings and noxious cells. His writings included the State of the Prisons (1777), which led to the Reform Act of the same year, and an Account of the Principal Lazarettos in Europe (1789).

The Howard League for Penal Reform, a small voluntary society, was founded in memory of John Howard in 1866. Its objectives include 'study and research into the treatment of offenders and the prevention of crime'. It championed the abolition of capital punishment and corporal punishment long before these subjects became popular issues, and it was largely instrumental in bringing about the provision of payment of prisoners for work done in prison and the institution of Legal Aid.

Howard's State of the Prisons was ed. by K. Ruck for Everyman's Library, No. 835 (1929). J. Aikin, A View of the Character and Public Services of the late John Howard (1792); J. B. Brown, Memoirs of the Public and Private Life of John Howard the Philanthropist (1818). H. Dixon, John Howard and the Prison-World of Europe (1849). J. Field, The Life of John Howard (1850); id., Correspondence of John Howard with memoir and notes (1855). Other studies by J. Stoughton (London, 1884), E. C. S. Gibson (ib., 1901), L. O. Cooper (ib. [1904]), J. F. Rowe (ib., 1927), D. L. Howard (ib., 1958), and M. Southwood (ib., 1958). G. F. R. Barker in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), pp. 44–8.

HOWE, JOHN (1630–1705), *Puritan divine and writer. In 1650 he became chaplain (though apparently unordained), and a little later Fellow, of Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1652 he was ordained by the Puritan rector of Winwick, whom he looked up to as a 'primitive bishop'. About 1654 he became incumbent of Great Torrington, Devon, and in 1657 O. *Cromwell made him his domestic chaplain, an office which he continued to hold under Richard Cromwell. On the latter's resignation he returned to Great Torrington, from which he was ejected in 1662 on the passing of the Act of *Uniformity. Unlike most of his contemporary fellow *Nonconformists, his standpoint inclined to *latitudinarianism. After some years of wandering he published in 1668 The Blessedness of Righteousness, which brought him to the notice of Lord Massarene, and he became his chaplain at Antrim Castle with the approval of the bishop of the diocese. In 1676 he was appointed co-pastor of the Presbyterian congregation at Haberdashers' Hall, where he continued his publications and lived on friendly terms with eminent Anglicans. In 1686, owing to the increasing severity of measures against the Nonconformists, he settled for a while at Utrecht, but in 1687 he returned to England to minister to his flock under the protection of *James II's first *Declaration of Indulgence. After the Revolution, he headed the deputation of Nonconformist ministers who congratulated William III in Jan. 1689. He continued to work for mutual forbearance among Christians of differing denominations, and unsuccessfully sought to unite the *Presbyterians and *Congregationalists.

Works (2 vols., London, 1724), with Memoir by E. *Calamy, vol. i, pp. 1–88; new ed., 3 vols., ib., 1848. Works also ed. J. Hunt (8 vols., London, 1810–22); Posthumous Works, ed. id. (4 vols., ib., 1832); also publd., with general introd. by H. Rogers, by *Religious Tract Society (6 vols., 1862–3). H. Rogers, The Life and Character of John Howe with an Analysis of his Writings (1836); R. F. Horton, John Howe (1895). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), pp. 85–8.

HOWLEY, WILLIAM (1766–1848), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the last 'Prince-Archbishop', the revenues of the archiepiscopal see coming under the control of the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners at his death. Educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford, he was appointed Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford in 1809, Bp. of London in 1813, and Abp. of Canterbury in 1828. An 18th cent. High Churchman and an extreme Tory, he was opposed to political reform and relief for RCs and Jews, and it was largely his influence that secured the rejection of Lord John Russell's moderate Education scheme in 1839. On the death of William IV (1837), whom he had attended on his sick bed, it fell to him to announce to the Princess Victoria (whom he had baptized when he was Bp. of London) her accession to the crown.

B. Harrison, The Remembrance of a departed Guide and Ruler in the Church of God. A Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Maidstone (1848). G. F. R. Barker in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), p. 128 f.

HOWSON, JOHN SAUL (1816–85), Dean of *Chester. He was educated at Giggleswick School and Trinity College, Cambridge. After ordination as deacon (1845; priest, 1846), he taught at Liverpool Collegiate Institute, where W. J. *Conybeare was head master. On Conybeare's resignation in 1849, Howson succeeded him. In 1866 Howson was presented to the vicarage of Wisbech. From 1867 till his death he was Dean of Chester, where he laboured for the restoration of the fabric of the cathedral and for schools in the city. He is best known for his Life and Epistles of St. Paul (2 vols., 1852), in which he collaborated with Conybeare. This book, based on extensive geographical, archaeological, and historical studies, was an impressive work of scholarship for its time, learned yet not beyond the general reader, and is still worthy of study. Most of the descriptive passages were done by Howson. He also wrote other Pauline studies, as well as works on other NT subjects. An article on 'Deaconesses in the Church of England' in the Quarterly Review (1861), reissued in 1862 as a pamphlet, did much to promote the systematized ministry of women in England.

E. Venables in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), pp. 130–2.

HRABANUS MAURUS. See Rabanus Maurus.

HROSVIT (10th cent.), German Christian poetess. Of a noble Saxon family, she became a nun of the *Benedictine abbey of Gandersheim in Saxony. She was very learned and well versed not only in Scripture and the Fathers but also in classical literature—Horace, Virgil, Ovid, Plautus, and esp. Terence, whom, acc. to her own admission, she took as her model. The MS. of her writings, in Latin, was discovered by the humanist, Conrad Celtes, at Ratisbon and printed for the first time in 1501. Originally her works were divided into three parts containing 8 poems on saints, 6 plays, and a long panegyric on the Ottos which was left unfinished. Among the poems on saints the 'Passio Sancti Pelagii' is esp. interesting, since she claims to have derived her facts from an eye-witness of the martyrdom. It is printed in full by the *Bollandists in the '*Acta Sanctorum'. Other poems treat of the BVM, St. *Basil, St. *Dionysius, and St. *Agnes. The main object of her plays was to oppose to Terence's representations of the frailty of women the chastity of Christian virgins and penitents. 'Gallicanus', 'Dulcitius', and 'Sapientia' describe the steadfastness of martyrs, whereas 'Callimachus', 'Abraham', and 'Paphnutius' deal with the struggle between the spirit and the flesh; and many of them reveal a remarkable sense of the dramatic. She was greatly encouraged by the scholars of her time, but soon after her death almost completely forgotten. In recent times she has once more aroused much interest, esp. in Britain, where modern translations of several of her plays have been made.

Editio princeps by C. Celtes (Nuremberg, 1501); modern edd. by K. Strecker (Teub., ed. 2, 1930) and H. Homeyer (Munich, 1970). Earlier texts repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxvii, 941–1168. Eng. trr. of her plays by H. J. W. Tillyard (London, 1923, with general introd. and bibl.) and C. St. John (ib., 1923), and of her non-dramatic works by Sister M. Gonsalva Wiegand (St. Louis, Mo., 1936). J. Aschbach, Roswita und Conrad Celtes (1867; ed. 2, much enlarged, 1868). Other studies by R. Köpke (Ottonische Studien, ii; Berlin, 1869) and J. Schneiderhan (Paderborn, 1912). Anne L. Haight (ed.), Hroswitha of Gandersheim (New York, 1965), with extensive bibl. Manitius, i, pp. 619–32.

HUBER, SAMUEL (c. 1547–1624), Protestant controversialist. A native of Burgdorf, near Berne, he took an active part in a series of religious disputes, generally defending *Lutheran doctrines against the *Calvinism of the Swiss Reformed Church. He caused special offence by his assertion of Christ's universal atonement ('Christum Jesum esse mortuum pro peccatis totius generis humani'), and was banished from Switzerland on 28 June 1588. Shortly afterwards he signed the 'Formula of *Concord' (1580) and for a time held offices in the Lutheran Church in Germany. The title 'Huberianism' was widely given to doctrines of the Atonement identical with or similar to those which Huber advocated.

J. A. Schmid, De Samuelis Huberi Vita Fatis et Doctrina (Helmstedt, 1708), with full list of his works. K. R. Hagenbach and G. Müller in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 409–12, with bibl.

HUBERT, St. (d. 727), 'Apostle of the Ardennes'. He succeeded St. *Lambert as Bp. of Tongeren (or Maestricht) c. 705 and later transferred the see to Liège. The well-known traditions about him are of much later date. Acc. to one story, his conversion from a very worldly life took place on a *Good Friday morning when he was out hunting, and met a stag with a crucifix between its horns. In astonishment, he cast himself to the ground, and on asking for guidance was told to seek instruction from St. Lambert, the bishop, by whom he was converted. He shares with St. *Eustace (of whom a similar story is told) the patronage of huntsmen. He was also invoked against hydrophobia. Feast day, 3 Nov.

AA.SS., Nov. I (1887), pp. 759–930, with seven Lives; crit. ed. of the first by W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vi (1913), pp. 471–96. M. Coens, S.J., 'Notes sur la légende de S. Hubert' in Anal. Boll., xlv (1927), pp. 345–62 (with review of recent lit.). Modern studies by L. Huyghebaert (Antwerp, 1949), F. Pény (Gembloux, 1961) and A. Paffrath (Hamburg–Berlin, 1961).

HUBERT WALTER (d. 1205), Abp. of *Canterbury. Orig. one of the chaplains of Ranulf de Glanville, he became Dean of *York in 1186 and Bp. of *Salisbury in 1189. In 1190 he accompanied Richard I on the Third *Crusade, where his efficiency and care for the oppressed won him respect and gratitude from all classes. On his way back to England he visited the imprisoned King at Dürenstein and after his return raised the ransom for the King's release. In 1193 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury. In 1194, when Richard finally left England for his French wars, Hubert Walter was appointed justiciar during the King's absence, and in this capacity governed England for the next four years. He became unpopular through the King's constant demands for money and the consequent heavy taxation; and also came into ill odour by executing William Fitz Osbert, the leader of an insurrection who had sought sanctuary in *Bow Church. These troubles, increased by difficulties with the monks of Christ Church, Canterbury, in which *Innocent III finally decided in favour of the monks, led him to resign his justiciarship in 1198. In the next year, however, he resumed the office, probably because he knew himself to be the only person able to deal with the new King, *John. In 1201 and 1203 he was employed on unsuccessful missions to Philip of France. He died on a journey from Canterbury to Boxley, undertaken to reconcile the *Rochester monks to their bishop. Hubert has been accused of sacrificing his pastoral duties to his political position. He ably administered, however, the temporalities of his see, and did much for his cathedral, to which he made valuable bequests at his death.

Various letters addressed to him or written by him are pr. in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard I, ii, Epistolae Cantuarienses (R.S., 1865), pp. 366–72, 391–3, 394–7, 429 f., 439 f., 445 f., 459–68, 473 f., 479 f., 482 f., 494, 508, and 520. Life by C. R. Cheney (Edinburgh–London, 1967). Id., From Becket to Langton (1956), pp. 31–41. Kate Norgate in D.N.B., xxvii (1891), pp. 137–40. H. W. C. Davis in D.E.C.H., p. 615 f., s.v. 'Walter, Hubert'. See also histories of the reign of John, cited s.v.

HÜBMAIER, BALTHASAR (?1485–1528), German *Anabaptist. He studied under J. *Eck at Freiburg (Breisgau) and Ingolstadt, at the latter place becoming professor and parish priest. In 1516 he was appointed preacher at Regensburg cathedral, and in 1521 parish priest at Waldshut. Here he came into contact with the Swiss Reformers, allied himself with H. *Zwingli openly in 1523, and forthwith introduced the Reformation. Soon, however, he abandoned Zwinglian doctrines for those of the Anabaptists, and in his Von dem Tauf der Gläubigen, published in May 1525, asserted the necessity of personal faith for baptism and condemned infant baptism as idolatry. Soon afterwards he became entangled in the *Peasants' War and may have been the author of the *Twelve Articles. When in the night of 5–6 Dec. 1525 Waldshut was occupied by government troops, Hübmaier fled to Zürich, where he was forced by Zwingli to abjure his Baptist views. But early in the next year he left Zürich, renounced his recantation, and in July 1526 settled at Nikolsburg in Moravia, where he worked for the Anabaptist cause esp. by writing pamphlets on theological questions, e.g. on the Lord's Supper and in defence of free-will. In 1527 the Austrian authorities demanded his extradition, and he was taken to Vienna, where he was burnt on 10 Mar. 1528.

Schriften ed. G. Westin–T. Bergsten (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte. xxix; 1962), with bibl. p. 11. Eng. tr. of extracts from his treatise on free-will, Von der Freyhait des Willens (1527), with introd., in G. H. Williams (ed.), Spiritual and Anabaptist Writers (Library of Christian Classics, xxv; 1957), pp. 112–35. Lives by J. Loserth (Brünn, 1893), H. C. Vedder (London, 1905), and T. Bergsten [in German] (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Studia Historico-Ecclesiastica Upsaliensia, iii; Kassel, 1961). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, 1957), esp. pp. 64–7, 134–41 and 218–29. J. H. Yoder, 'Balthasar Hubmaier and the Beginnings of Swiss Anabaptism' in Mennonite Quarterly Review, xxxiii (1959), pp. 5–17. A. W. Hegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 418–24.

HUCK, ALBERT (1867–1942), NT scholar. He held pastoral appointments in several places in Germany. He compiled a very widely used 'Synopsis' of the first three Gospels, presenting their Greek text with the parallel passages in adjacent columns. The 1st edition appeared in 1892 and the 9th, much revised by H. *Lietzmann, in 1936. Its existence has greatly assisted modern researches (esp. in the years 1895–1925) into the *Synoptic Problem.

English adaptation of the 9th German edition by F. L. Cross (Tübingen, 1936; Oxford, 1949). Revised ed., in Germ. and Eng., by H. Greeven (Tübingen, 1981).

HUCUSQUE. The opening word of the preface to the supplement to the '*Gregorian' sacramentary composed at the end of the 8th, or beginning of the 9th, cent., and often applied to the supplement itself. The author explains the deficiencies of the sacramentary sent by *Hadrian I to *Charlemagne (known as the '*Hadrianum') and the means he has taken to remedy them. The supplement proper contains the Sunday masses, those of the *Common of the Saints, *votive masses and other pieces. There follows a series of 221 *prefaces, 52 episcopal blessings, and other texts. The authorship is ascribed by a late tradition to *Alcuin, and this ascription was supported by E. *Bishop: 'No name occurs more readily or more reasonably to the mind than that of Alcuin.' Recently Dom Deshusses has shown that the supplement cannot be fitted in with what is known of Alcuin's work. He has also shown that it was subject to Visigothic influence. He proposes the name of *Benedict of Aniane as its compiler.

Crit. ed. by J. Deshusses, O.S.B., Le Sacramentaire grégorien. Ses principales formes d'après les plus anciens manuscrits (Spicilegium Friburgense, xvi; 1971), pp. 351–605, under the title 'Supplementum Anianense'. For earlier edd. see bibl. to Gregorian Sacramentary. J. Deshusses, O.S.B., 'Le "Supplément" au sacramentaire grégorien: Alcuin ou saint Benoît d'Aniane?' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, ix (pt. 1; 1965), pp. 48–71.

HUET, PIERRE DANIEL (1630–1721), French scholar. In 1652 an invitation from Queen *Christina to his friend, Samuel Bochart (1599–1667), to the court of Sweden, led Huet to accompany him to Stockholm, where, having discovered in the Royal Library some fragments of *Origen's Comm. on Matt., Huet was stimulated to produce an edition of Origen, which he published in 1668. He then edited, in conjunction with Anne Lefèvre, the famous 'Delphin Classics' in some 60 volumes for the Dauphin, whose tutor (with J. B. *Bossuet) he was. His Demonstratio evangelica (1679) was an apology for Christianity. Having been ordained in 1676, he became Bp of Avranches in 1689. After having been at first sympathetic to *Descartes's philosophy, he later abandoned it, for reasons which he outlines in his Censura philosophiae Cartesianae (1689). His valuable collection of MSS., which he bequeathed to the Jesuits of the rue St.-Antoine at Paris, passed, after the order was suppressed, for the most part into the Royal Library, and have thus found their way into the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris.

C. Bartholmess, Huet, évêque d'Avranches, ou le scepticisme théologique (Paris, 1850); J. B. M. Flottes, Étude sur Daniel Huet (Montpellier, 1857); A. Dupront, P. D. Huet et l'exégèse comparatiste du XVIIe siècle (1930); L. Tolmer, Pierre-Daniel Huet (1630–1721), humaniste physicien (Mémoire de l'Académie nationale des sciences, arts et belles-lettres de Caen, nouvelle série, xi; 1949). C. Urbain, 'La Bibliothèque de P. D. Huet' in Bulletin du Bibliophile et du Bibliothécaire, 1910, pp. 133–46. B. Heurtebize in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 199–201, with bibl.

HUG, JOHANN LEONHARD (1765–1846), Catholic NT scholar. From 1791 he was professor at the university of Freiburg (Breisgau). He directed his vast erudition against the rationalistic Biblical criticism of his time. His researches also stimulated the growth of the *textual criticism of the NT, though his ingenious attempt to connect three recensions of the *Septuagint (whose places of origin he believed assured) with three types of NT text failed. His most important Biblical work was his Einleitung in die Schriften des NT (2 vols., 1808–9; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1827).

A. Maier, Gedächtnisrede auf Joh. Leonh. Hug, . . . bei dessen akademischer Todtenfeier in der Universitäts-Kirche zu Freiburg (1847). O. Zöcklin in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 429–31, s.v.

HÜGEL, BARON FRIEDRICH VON. See Von Hügel, Friedrich.

HUGH, St. (1024–1109), Abbot of *Cluny. Of a noble Burgundian family, he was brought up by his great-uncle, Hugh, Bp. of Auxerre. At the age of 14 he entered the monastery of Cluny under St. *Odilo and owing to outstanding piety was allowed to take his vows only a year later. Before the age of 21 he was Prior and on Odilo's death (1 Jan. 1049) was unanimously chosen Abbot, being installed by the Abp. of Besançon on 22 Feb. 1049. *Leo IX, formerly Bp. of Toul and a warm supporter of Cluniac principles, took him into his confidence, and henceforward Hugh, as adviser to nine Popes, came to exercise a dominating influence in ecclesiastical and political affairs. He took part in securing the condemnation of *Berengar of Tours (1050); assisted Nicholas II in the decree on Papal elections (Council of Rome, 1059); and upheld the privileges of his order against the attacks of his fellow-countrymen (Council of Rome, 1063). He warmly encouraged *Gregory VII's efforts for reform and tried to mediate in the bitter feud between the Pope and Emp. *Henry IV. Despite his constant absence, the monastery suffered no relaxation in discipline and, indeed, reached under Hugh a position never surpassed. In 1068 he settled the usages for the whole Cluniac order. He induced Pope *Urban II (d. 1099) to consecrate in person the high altar of the new basilica at Cluny (25 Oct. 1095), then the largest church in Christendom. During his rule, the first Cluniac house in England, the priory of St. Pancras at Lewes, was founded. At the Council of *Clermont (1095) he took a leading part in the organization of the First Crusade. Among his liturgical reforms was the introduction of the singing of the Veni Creator at terce during Pentecost. He wrote a 'Life of the Blessed Virgin', but this, with most of his letters, has been lost. He was canonized by *Callistus II in 1120. Feast day, 29 April.

Surviving correspondence in J. P. Migne, PL, clix, 927–946, with various statutes and other docc. bearing his name, ib., 945–84. M. Férotin, O.S.B., 'Une Lettre inédite de Saint Hugues, abbé de Cluny, à Bernard d'Agen, archevêque de Tolède' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, lxi (1900), pp. 339–45, and lxiii (1902), pp. 682–6, incl. text. Early lives include that of Gilo, first publd. in full by A. L'Huillier, Vie de Saint Hugues (Solesmes, 1888), pp. 574–618; life, identified by editor with that of Ezlo, mentioned by Rainaud (see below), ed. L. M. Smith in E.H.R., xxvii (1912), pp. 96–101; life by Rainaud, abbot of Vézelay, pr. in AA.SS., Apr. III (1675), pp. 648–53; that by *Hildebert of Lavardin, pr. ib., pp. 634–48; other material, pp. 654–62, with introd. pp. 628–34; the whole entry in AA.SS. is repr. in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 840–928. T. Schieffer, 'Notice sur les vies de Saint Hugues, abbé de Cluny' in Le Moyen-Âge, xlvi (3e Sér., vii; 1936), pp. 81–103. On the development of Cluny under his rule, Noreen Hunt, Cluny under Saint Hugh 1049–1109 (1967). G. de Valous in D.H.G.E., xiii (1956), cols. 49–56, s.v. 'Cluny'. See also other works cited under Cluny.

HUGH, St. (1052–1132), Bp. of Grenoble. Born at Châteauneuf, near Valence, he became (when still a layman) a Canon of Valence. In 1080 he was elected Bp. of Grenoble to reform the disorders in the diocese, where in a long episcopate he successfully redressed abuses and fostered devotion. He welcomed St. *Bruno and his monks to his diocese, granting them the *Grande Chartreuse (1084). He was canonized by Innocent II in 1134, two years after his death. Feast day, 1 Apr.

The primary authority is the Lat. life by his friend Guigo, Prior of the Grande Chartreuse, pr., with introd., in AA.SS., Apr. I (1675), pp. 36–46; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cliii, 759–84; also ed. C. Bellet (Montreuil, 1889). Modern life by A. Du Boys (Grenoble, 1837).

HUGH, St. (c. 1140–1200), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was the son of the lord of Avalon in Burgundy. Brought up to be a member of an order of *canons regular near Grenoble, he was early attracted by the much more severe and secluded life of the newly founded *Carthusian Order, and took vows at the *Grande Chartreuse in 1160. His character and talents became known to Henry II, who was attempting to establish at Witham in Somerset the first Carthusian house in England, and in 1175 he secured the services of Hugh as its prior. This was the beginning of a frequent intercourse between Hugh and the King. In 1186 he became, at Henry's earnest wish, Bp. of Lincoln, though he insisted that he should be freely elected before he accepted the office. As bishop he administered his huge diocese well and showed a courageous independence of the King, e.g. as champion of the people against the royal foresters. He later took the lead, with the Bp. of Salisbury, in refusing a demand of Richard I for money for the King's wars, an event of significance in constitutional history. He never forgot that he was a monk, and every year retired for a time to the priory of Witham. Already in his own lifetime he was greatly revered for his holiness and devotion, e.g. his Christian love towards lepers, and in 1220 he was canonized. His tomb at Lincoln became second only to that of St. *Thomas of Canterbury as a place of popular devotion until it was spoiled by *Henry VIII. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Magna Vita, by Adam, monk of Eynsham and chaplain to St. Hugh, ed. F. J. Dimock (Rolls Series, 1864) and, with Eng. tr. and full introd., by Decima L. Douie–H. Farmer, O.S.B. (2 vols., London, 1961–2); Vita, by *Giraldus Cambrensis in Opera, ed. F. J. Dimock, vii (R.S., 1877), pp. 83–147, with 'Legenda . . . to be Read . . . on the Day of his Obit' in Appendix D, pp. 172–92; metrical life, written prob. shortly after his canonization (1220–35), ed. id. (London, 1860). H. Farmer, O.S.B., 'The Canonization of St. Hugh of Lincoln' in Lincolnshire Architectural and Archaeological Society Reports and Papers, N.S., vi, part 2 (1956), pp. 86–117. Modern lives by 'Un Religieux de la Grande Chartreuse' (Montreuil, 1890; Eng. tr. with additions by H. Thurston, S.J., 'Quarterly Series', xcix; 1898); G. G. Perry (London, 1879), C. L. Marson (ib., 1901), F. A. Forbes (ib., 1917), R. M. Woolley (ib., 1927), and J. Clayton (ib., 1931).

HUGH OF ST.-VICTOR (d. 1142), *Victorine theologian. Little is known about his life. About 1115 he entered St.-Victor, the house of *Augustinian canons recently founded in Paris by *William of Champeaux. According to one account he was born in the region of Ypres, according to another he came from Saxony. His uncle is said to have been archdeacon of the church of Halberstadt, and Hugh dedicated his De arrha animae ('The Soul's Betrothal-gift') to the Augustinian canons of Hamersleben near Halberstadt. The tradition that makes him a member of the family of the Counts of Blankenberg in Saxony is post-medieval. From the time of his arrival in Paris he does not seem to have left it except for a visit to the court of Pope Innocent II.

Hugh's works cover a very wide field. He wrote on grammar and geometry, an Epitome in philosophiam, a chronicle, the Didascalion, which is a guide to the study of the artes and of theology, biblical commentaries on the Octateuch and Lamentations, homilies on Ecclesiastes, a commentary on Ps.-*Dionysius' Celestial Hierarchy, a large-scale De sacramentis Christianae fidei, and works of spirituality such as De arca Noe, De vanitate mundi, De laude caritatis, and a number of shorter pieces. In all these fields Hugh made a distinctive contribution with no parade of learning or claims to originality. It has been said that his work is 'rich in new ideas and fresh presentations of old ones' (A. Squire). In his biblical commentaries he gave new emphasis to the historical study of Scripture and to the importance of studying the literal sense. The same feeling for history underlies the organization of the De sacramentis into the work of Creation and the work of Restoration. History was the foundation. From study (lectio) man must go on to meditation (meditatio) by which the soul tries to discover the Divine thoughts hidden under the veil of both creatures and the Scriptures and to achieve purity of life and strive after loving contemplation (contemplatio). For Hugh everything was ultimately to be subordinated to the contemplative life. Nevertheless, he was in close touch with the discussions and controversies of his day, and it is possible to see in his writings how he takes account of the views of e.g. Peter *Abelard, *William of Conches and St. *Bernard.

Collected ed. of his works first publd. at Paris, 1518; also ed. by the Canons of St.-Victor, 3 vols., Rouen, 1648, virtually repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxxv–clxxvii. Further works not included in these editions are 'De Tribus Maximis Circumstantiis Gestorum' first publd. by W. M. Green in Speculum, xviii (1943), pp. 484–93, and Opera Propaedeutica ['Practica geometriae', 'De Grammatica', and 'Epitome in philosophiam'] ed. R. Baron (University of Notre Dame Publications in Mediaeval Studies, xx; 1966). There are also modern edd. of 'Soliloquium de Arrha Animae' and 'De Vanitate Mundi' by K. Müller (Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, cxxiii; 1913); of 'Didascalion de Studio Legendi' by C. H. Buttimer (Catholic University of America Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Latin, x; 1939), and of Six Opuscules spirituels, with Fr. tr., by R. Baron (S.C., clv; 1969). The 'De Contemplatione' publ. by [J.] B. Hauréau, Hugues de Saint-Victor. Nouvel examen de l'édition de ses œuvres (1859), pp. 177–210, is not genuine; there is a crit. ed. of this work by R. Baron (Monumenta Christiana Selecta, ii; Tournai, 1955). Eng. trr. of 'De Arrha Animae' by F. S. Taylor (London, 1945); of 'De Sacramentis' by R. J. Deferrari (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, lviii; 1951); of 'Didascalion' by J. Taylor (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, lxiv; 1961), with important introd. and commentary; and of Selected Spiritual Writings [incl. 'De Arca Noe' and 'De vanitate mundi'] by Sr. [Penelope], C.S.M.V. (Classics of the Contemplative Life, 1962), with introd. by A. Squire, O.P., pp. 13–42. The Explanation of the Rule of St. *Augustine usually attributed to Hugh of St.-Victor, but prob. the work of Lietbert of St.-Ruf, was

tr. into Eng. by A. Smith, O.S.B. (London, 1911). J. B. Hauréau, Les Œuvres de Hugues de Saint-Victor (1886). A. Mignon, Les Origines de la scolastique et Hugues de Saint-Victor (2 vols., [1895]). H. Ostler, Die Psychologie des Hugo von St. Viktor (B.G.P.M., vi, Hft. 1; 1906). H. Weisweiler, S.J., Die Wirksamkeit der Sakramente nach Hugo von St.-Viktor (1932). R. Baron, Science et sagesse chez Hugues de Saint-Victor (1957); id., Études sur Hugues de Saint-Victor (1963); D. van den Eynde, O.F.M., Essai sur la succession et la date des écrits de Hugues de Saint-Victor (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, xiii; 1960). F. Vernet in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 240–308, s.v. 'Hugues de Saint-Victor', with bibl.; D. van den Eynde in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 194 f., s.v.; R. Baron in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 901–39, s.v. 'Hugues de Saint-Victor'.

HUGHES, HUGH PRICE (1847–1902), *Methodist divine. A native of Carmarthen and son of a doctor, he began preaching at the age of 14 and, after entering the Wesleyan ministry, became a great preacher, who concerned himself esp. with such social problems as the housing of the poor, sweating, and gambling. In 1885 he started the Methodist Times, a weekly which soon became one of the leading organs of Nonconformist opinion. He worked hard to secure co-operation among the various Nonconformist bodies, and in 1896 he became the first president of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. He also took a prominent part in the Education Acts controversy, in which, though supporting the Nonconformist policy, he on one occasion expressed his willingness to accept the *Apostles' Creed as a basis of teaching in the schools.

[Dorothea Price Hughes, daughter], The Life of Hugh Price Hughes (1904). J. G. Mantle, Hugh Price Hughes ('New Century Leaders Series', 1901). Katherine Price Hughes (wife), The Story of My Life (1945).

HUGUENOTS, the *Calvinist French Protestants. The name, which is explained by Henri Estienne (*Stephanus) in his Apologie d'Hérodote (1566) as a nickname based on a medieval romance about a King Hugo, came to be applied to the French Protestants c. 1560. (The formerly accepted derivation from Eidgenossen (Ger. 'confederates'), i.e. those admitted to the Swiss Confederation, is untenable.) The movement has been traced back to the publication of J. *Faber's Sancti Pauli Epistolae xiv . . . cum commentariis (1512), which upheld a doctrine of *justification by faith alone. But its real originator was J. *Calvin, who, though he had to flee from France in 1534, dedicated his Institutes (1536) to Francis I. At the Synod of Paris (1559), the French Protestant Church formally organized itself on a Calvinist basis. The movement was fiercely resisted by the family of the Guises, who came into power with the accession of Francis II only a few weeks after the Synod, but by 1561 it had grown to a formidable national minority and was consolidated by the Colloquy of *Poissy (q.v.). For over thirty years (1562–94) there was almost continuous civil war with the Catholic majority in which the Massacre of St. *Bartholomew (1572, q.v.) was the most terrible incident. The increasing influence of the *Politiques (q.v.) led to full freedom of worship by the Edict of *Nantes (13 Apr. 1598). Nevertheless the Huguenots continued to be a disruptive element in the state until their fortress of La Rochelle was reduced in 1628. Under Louis XIV, continual attempts were made to nullify the concessions of the Edict of Nantes, and it was finally revoked on 18 Oct. 1685. Many Huguenots were forced by *dragonnades and similar methods to apostatize, and some 300,000 sought refuge in Holland, Switzerland, America, England and Prussia. In 1702–5 Huguenot extremists raised the rebellion of the *Camisards. But it failed and their influence was negligible for the rest of the century. Marriages celebrated before Huguenot ministers were not recognized by the state until 1787, and only in 1802 was the legal standing of the Huguenot Church established. From then on, except for a short period of repression after the Bourbon restoration of 1815, they suffered no further restriction, and increased considerably in numbers. From the period 1819–29 date the more important Protestant Church societies of France, for education, missions, and the circulation of the Bible. In the middle of the century dissension between the liberal and traditionalist sections led to a schism in 1872. A step towards reunion was the creation of the 'National Union of the Reformed [i.e. Calvinist] Churches of France' in 1907, a body which combines with non-Calvinistic bodies to form the Protestant Federation of France. See also France, Christianity in; Du Plessis-Mornay, Philippe; Henry IV of France.

M. H. Baird, History of the Rise of the Huguenots (2 vols., 1880); id., The Huguenots and Henry of Navarre (2 vols., 1886); id., The Huguenots and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (2 vols., 1895). R. Lane Poole, A History of the Huguenots of the Dispersion (1880); A. J. Grant, The Huguenots (H.U.L., 1934). J. Viénot, Histore de la réforme française des origines à l'édit de Nantes (1926); id., Histoire de la réforme française de l'édit de Nantes à sa révocation (1934). R. Stéphan [R. A. P. Stoupan], L'Épopée huguenote [1946]; id., Histoire du protestantisme français [1961]. O. Zoff, Die Hugenotten. Geschichte eines Glaubenskampfes (1948; Eng. tr., 1943). J. Orcibal, Louis XIV et les Protestants (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1951). S. Mours, Le Protestantisme en France au XVIe siècle (1959); id., Le Protestantisme en France au XVIIe siècle (1598–1685) (1967). G. H. Dodge, The Political Theory of the Huguenots of the Dispersion with special Reference to the Thought and Influence of Pierre Jurieu (New York, 1947). See also bibl. to France, Christianity in; Camisards; Nantes, Edict of; Henry IV of France; and Richelieu.

HULSEAN LECTURES. The course of lectures delivered annually at Cambridge in acc. with the bequest of the Rev. John Hulse (1708–90). The original distribution of the bequest provided: (1) two divinity scholarships at St. John's College, (2) a prize for a dissertation, (3) a 'Christian Advocate', and (4) a preacher or lecturer. By a revision of the statutes in 1860, a divinity professorship was substituted for (3) and the status of (4) considerably altered. By a further revision in 1934, the Hulsean and Norrisian professorships were united to form the Norris-Hulse professorship, the first holder of the joint professorship being F. C. *Burkitt.

HULST, MAURICE D'. See D'Hulst, Maurice.

HUMANAE VITAE. The encyclical issued by Pope *Paul VI on 25 July 1968 condemning all forms of birth control except the 'rhythm method'. The majority of the Papal Commission appointed by *John XXIII in 1963 (during *Vatican II) and confirmed by Paul VI, appears to have favoured the legitimacy of contraception. The encyclical, however, taking its stand on the sanctity of *natural law, condemned *abortion (even for therapeutic reasons), sterilization, or any action which, in connexion with the conjugal act, purposes 'to render procreation impossible'. Although it merely reaffirmed the traditional doctrine of the Church, it appears to imply that, in view of the difficulty of its teaching, married couples unable to comply are not to be debarred from the Eucharist.

Text in A.A.S., lx (1968), pp. 481–503; also pr., with Eng. tr. by R. Bogan, in P. Harris and others, On Human Life (1968), pp. 107–61.

HUMANI GENERIS. The encyclical of *Pius XII (12 Aug. 1950) condemning several modern intellectual movements and tendencies of the RC Church. They included *Existentialism; excessive emphasis on the Word of God to the detraction of reason; distrust of theological dogmatism as incompatible with the language of Scripture and the Fathers; contempt for the authority of the Church and unwillingness to identify the Mystical Body of Christ with the Catholic Church in communion with the see of Rome; distrust of *Scholastic philosophy (esp. of St. *Thomas Aquinas); the denial that *Adam existed as a historical person and that *original sin has reached us by direct descent from him; and undue freedom in the interpretation of the Books of the OT.

Text in A.A.S., xlii (1950), pp. 561–78. Eng. tr. by R. A. *Knox in The Tablet, 2 Sept. 1950. J .M. Connolly in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 214, s.v., with bibl.

HUMBERT OF SILVA CANDIDA (d. 1061), ecclesiastical reformer and statesman. A monk of the Lotharingian monastery of Moyenmoutier, where he became an enthusiastic scholar and reformer, he was created in 1050 Cardinal-Bishop of Silva Candida by *Leo IX and became one of the principal advisers of the Pope in his programme of ecclesiastical reform. His work Adversus Simoniacos was a vigorous denunciation of one of the chief evils of the Church; indeed, he refused (unlike *Peter Damian) to admit that Ordination by a simoniac was valid. He was also put in charge of the mission to *Constantinople at the time of the schism (1054). He engaged in controversies with Leo of Bulgaria and Nicetas Stethatos over the use of unleavened bread in the Eucharist.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL, cxliii, 929–1218; crit. ed. of his Adversus Simoniacos by F. Thaner in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, i (1891), pp. 95–253. A. Michel, Die Sentenzen des Kardinals Humbert, das erste Rechtsbuch der päpstlichen Reform (Schriften des Reichsinstituts für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, vii; 1943), incl. reff. to edd. of this work. Id., Humbert und Kerullarios (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, xxi and xxiii; 1925–30). J. P. Whitney, 'Peter Damiani and Humbert' in The Cambridge Historical Journal, i (1925), pp. 225–48, esp. pp. 237–41; repr., with revisions, in his Hildebrandine Essays (1932), pp. 95–142, esp. pp. 120–6. W. Ullmann, 'Cardinal Humbert and the Ecclesia Romana' in G. B. Borino (ed.), Studi gregoriani, iv (1952), pp. 111–27, with reff.; also H. Tritz, C.SS.R., ib., pp. 236–72. J. J. Ryan, 'Cardinal Humbert De s. Romana ecclesia: Relics of Roman–Byzantine Relations 1053–1054' in Mediaeval Studies, xx (1958), pp. 206–38. J. T. Gilchrist, 'Humbert of Silva-Candida and the Political Concept of Ecclesia in the Eleventh Century Reform Movement' in Journal of Religious History, ii (1962–3), pp. 13–28.

HUMBLE ACCESS, The Prayer of. The prayer in the Order of Holy Communion in the 1662 BCP which immediately precedes the Prayer of Consecration. Its name derives from the Scottish Liturgy of 1637, where it is entitled 'Collect of Humble Access to the Holy Communion'. The prayer was composed for the new 'Order of *Communion' of 1548 and thus stood originally between the Communion of the priest and that of the people. In the Book of 1549 it was moved with most of the items in the 'Order of Communion' to a place immediately before the Communion of both priest and people. In the Book of 1552, however, the Prayer of Humble Access was separated altogether from the other items of the 'Order of Communion' and (with slight alterations in the wording) inserted in the position which it has since occupied. Some revisions of the Anglican rite have restored this prayer to its original place, to bring it into closer connexion with the rest of the Communion Devotions, e.g. the Scottish Liturgy since 1637, the South African Book, and the American (1928 and 1979) Books.

J. Dowden, 'A Contribution towards the Study of the Prayer of Humble Access' in The Irish Church Quarterly, i (1908), pp. 8–24, reprinted in id., Further Studies in the Prayer Book, Appendix, pp. 317–43. W. W. S. March, We do not presume. A Commentary on the Prayer of Humble Access (Derby, 1965).

HUME, DAVID (1711–76), Scottish philosopher and historian. He was a native of Edinburgh, where he was educated, and at an early age resolved to become a philosopher. From 1734 to 1737 he lived in France, where he elaborated his sceptical principles and wrote the Treatise of Human Nature (3 vols., 1739–40), the success of which fell far short of his expectations. In 1741–2 appeared Essays Moral and Political (2 vols.), which was favourably received and much appreciated by Bp. J. *Butler. During the following years he held several secretarial and administrative posts in England and abroad. In 1748 he published Philosophical Essays Concerning Human Understanding which contained his famous 'Essay upon Miracles', followed, in 1751, by An Enquiry Concerning the Principles of Morals. By this time he had also completed his Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion, which was published only posthumously (1779). During the latter part of his life his interests turned to history; in 1752 he published his Political Discourses, the first of his works to attract general attention, and from 1754 to 1761 his famous History of England (6 vols.), written from the Tory standpoint, which long remained a standard work. In 1763 he accompanied Lord Hertford to France, where he was much admired and became the friend of J. Le R. *d'Alembert and A. R. J. Turgot. In 1766 he found for J.-J. *Rousseau a refuge in England. In his last years he almost ceased to write.

Hume's philosophy is based on the experimental method of J. *Locke and G. *Berkeley. By reducing reason to a product of experience he destroyed its claim to sole validity, which had been put forward by the thinkers of the *Enlightenment. All perceptions of the human mind are either impressions of experience or ideas, i.e. faded copies of these impressions. But whereas the relations between ideas can be known with certainty, the facts of reality cannot be established beyond an appearance of probability. Causality is not a concept of logic, but a result of habit and association, impressed on our imagination, and the human soul itself is but a sum of perceptions connected by association. Hence there is no such science as metaphysics; and belief in the existence of God and of the physical world, though a practical necessity, cannot be proved by reason. *Theism is neither the original nor the highest form of religion. The immortality of the soul is doubtful, and suicide is permissible. Our moral life is dominated by the passions, which determine our will and our actions.

Hume was aware that, by reducing all cognition to single perceptions and by ruling out any purely intellectual faculty for recording and sifting them, he destroyed all real knowledge and taught pure scepticism. This scepticism is particularly evident in his 'Essay on Miracles'. Basing himself on the assumption that it had never been observed in any place or age that a dead man should come to life again, he brushed aside the historical evidence for miracles with the assertion that the possibility of an event being a miracle is inevitably counterbalanced by the possibility of its being a deception by the witnesses or the writers reporting it. For 'it is contrary to experience that a miracle should be true, but not contrary to experience that testimony should be false'.

Hume's influence has been widespread. Among the thinkers indebted to him are I. *Kant, J. Bentham, and A. *Comte; and he has received attention from modern philosophical empiricists.

Hume's autobiography appeared in 1777. His Life and Correspondence were edited by J. H. Burton in 1846. Modern ed. of his Letters, by J. Y. T. Greig (2 vols., Oxford, 1932); New Letters, ed. R. Klibansky–E. C. Mossner (ib., 1954). W. Knight, Hume (1886); J. Y. T. Greig, David Hume (1931). Separate studies: A. E. *Taylor, David Hume and the Miraculous (1927); R. W. Church, Hume's Theory of the Understanding (1935); N. K. Smith, The Philosophy of David Hume (1941); E. C. Mossner, The Life of David Hume (1954): J. B. Stewart, The Moral and Political Philosophy of David Hume (New York–London, 1963). For a full bibliography see T. E. Jessop, A Bibliography of David Hume (1938). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), pp. 215–26.

HUME, GEORGE BASIL. See p. 1519.

HUMERAL VEIL. In the W. Church, a silk shawl laid round the shoulders serving to cover the hands. At *High Mass the *subdeacon used to hold the *paten with it, from after the *Offertory till after the *Pater Noster. The humeral veil is already mentioned in the Roman '*Ordines' of the 8th and 9th cents., where it is worn by an *acolyte who then held the paten. When c. the 11th cent. the *subdeacon became paten-bearer he used the *pall in place of the humeral veil and the latter did not come into use again for this purpose until the 15th cent. Its adoption became universal only in the 19th cent. It is still worn by the celebrant in processions of the Blessed Sacrament, at the service of *Benediction, and (in some countries) when the *Viaticum is taken to the sick.

Braun, L.P., pp. 228–31. N. F. Robinson, S.S.J.E., 'Concerning Three Eucharistic Veils of Western Use' in Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society, vi (1906–10), pp. 129–60, esp. pp. 129 f. and 153–8. J. Braun, S.J., in C.E., vii (1910), p. 542 f., s.v.

HUMILIATI. An order of penitents, founded in the 12th cent., which followed the *Benedictine Rule. They devoted themselves to a life of mortification and care for the poor, and for a time took a prominent part in combating the *Cathari. The discipline of the order became much relaxed in later times; and when in 1571 St. *Charles Borromeo, after trying in vain to reform it, was assaulted by one of its monks, it was finally suppressed.

The principal authority is H. Tiraboschius, S.J., Vetera Humiliatorum Monumenta (3 vols., Milan, 1766–8). L. Zanoni, Gli Umiliati nei loro rapporti con l'eresia, l'industria della lana ed i comuni nei secoli XII e XIII (Milan, 1911). V. d'Alessandro (ed.), Le Pergamene degli Umiliati di Cremona (Università degli Studi di Palermo, Istituto di Storia, Testi e Documenti, ii; 1966). P. Guerrini, 'Gli Umiliati a Brescia' in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, i (Lateranum, N.S., xiv; 1948), pp. 187–214; G. *Mercati, 'Due ricerche per la storia degli Umiliati' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xi (1957), pp. 167–94. Heimbucher, i, p. 200. F. Vernet in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 312–21; A. Mens in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1129–36, both s.v. 'Humiliés'.

HUMILITY. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, humility is a moral virtue which consists 'in keeping oneself within one's own bounds, not reaching out to things above one' (Contra Gent. iv. 55). Catholic theology regards it as part of the cardinal virtue of temperance in that it represses inordinate ambition and self-esteem without allowing man to fall into the opposite error of exaggerated or hypocritical self-abjection. Hence humility is considered the foundation and conditio sine qua non of the spiritual life, because it subjects reason and will to God. It was enjoined by Christ in His teaching (e.g. Lk. 14. 11, Mt. 18. 4) and esp. by His example (Mt. 11. 29; Phil. 2. 7 ff.), and after Him by many of the saints, so that St. *Augustine could write: Tota Christiana religio humilitas est ('The whole of the Christian religion is humility'). St. *Benedict in his 'Rule' set forth 12 degrees of humility, and since then spiritual writers have systematically studied it and arrived at various enumerations, esp. with regard to its development both in the life of the religious in general (e.g. St. *Ignatius Loyola in his 'Exercises') and that of the mystics in particular (St. *Bernard and J. *Tauler). By Protestant theologians humility has been variously defined. M. *Luther regarded it as the joyful acceptance of God's will, and modern Protestant moralists (e.g. A. *Ritschl) identify it as complete resignation to our unconditional dependence on God.

R. L. *Ottley in H.E.R.E., vi (1913), pp. 880–2, s.v., with useful reff.; P. Adnès, S.J., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 1136–87, with bibl.

HUNDRED CHAPTERS, Council of the. See Russia, Christianity in.

HUNGARY, Christianity in. Christianity was first preached in what is now Hungary in the 4th cent., but made no permanent impression. In the 9th and 10th cents. more successful missionaries arrived, and Christianity spread in both its Eastern and Western forms; ultimately the Western Church prevailed. In 1001 a formal constitution was laid down for the Church by King (St.) *Stephen I, who created 10 bishoprics and the archbishopric of Esztergom (Gran), which since 1279 has been the primatial see. There are now two other archbishoprics. State control of Church affairs has always been strong. In 1404 the Emp. Sigismund, in accordance with the resolution of the Council of *Constance, introduced the placitum regium. Joseph II (1780–90) tried to consolidate it by means of his Church policy (see Josephinism); he dissolved over a third of the monasteries, but they were restored soon after his death. The Church maintained great influence over political affairs up to 1945, in spite of certain secular laws introduced in the last decade of the 19th cent. Since the 16th cent. there has been a considerable Protestant minority, mainly in the Eastern part of the country and in what is now Transylvania. In the Western part the RC Church prevailed. The two principal Protestant bodies are the *Calvinists (c. 19 per cent. of the population) and the *Lutherans (c. 5 per cent.).

A. Theiner (ed.), Vetera Monumenta Historica Hungariam Sacram Illustrantia (2 vols., Rome, 1859–60). Monumenta Vaticana Historiam Regni Hungariae Illustrantia (Budapest; series i, 6 vols., 1884–91; series ii, 3 vols., 1884–1909). P. Bod (1712–69), Historia Hungarorum Ecclesiastica inde ab Exordio Novi Testamenti ad Nostra usque Tempora, ed. L. W. E. Rauwenhoff–C. Szalay (3 vols., Leyden, 1888–90). E. Horn, Le Christianisme en Hongrie (1906); id., Organisation religieuse de la Hongrie (1906); C. Wolfsgruber, Kirchengeschichte Österreich-Ungarns (Vienna, 1909). M. Bucsay, Geschichte des Protestantismus in Ungarn (Stuttgart, 1959). E. Mályusz, Das Konstanzer Konzil und das königliche Patronatsrecht in Ungarn (Studia Historica, xviii; Budapest, 1959). G. Gombos, The Lean Years. A Study of Hungarian Calvinism in Crisis (New York, 1960). L. Tóth, 'Catholicisme et protestantisme en Hongrie' in Nouvelle Revue de Hongrie, lviii (1938), pp. 397–407. E. Horn in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 41–61, s.v. 'Hongrie', and ix (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1566–71, s.v. 'Magyarie'; L. Mezey, C. Salacz and others in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), x (1965), cols. 488–94, s.v. 'Ungarn'; W. Juhász in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 255–66, s.v.; P. Radó–J. Félegyházy in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 675–704, s.v. 'Hongrie'.

HUNT, WILLIAM HOLMAN (1827–1910), Pre-Raphaelite painter. A native of London, he was destined by his father for a business career, but began to study art in 1843 and was admitted to the Royal Academy in 1844. Here he began his lifelong friendship with J. E. Millais, and later he also formed a close connexion with D. G. *Rossetti. In 1848 they founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, in which Hunt was the guiding spirit. In the following year he painted his first truly Pre-Raphaelite picture, Rienzi. Though much attacked by the press, he and his school were warmly defended by J. *Ruskin. In 1852 he completed The Hireling Shepherd, and in 1854 the famous Light of the World, one of the most popular pictures of modern times, representing the Lord knocking at the door of the soul. From 1854 to 1856 he travelled, mostly in Palestine, which he revisited several times. Here he made studies for The Finding of the Saviour in the Temple, completed in 1860, and, in 1869, for The Shadow of the Cross. In 1875 he began his great work, The Triumph of the Innocents, which was finished in two versions in 1885. In 1904 he re-painted The Light of the World, which is now in *St. Paul's, the original being in Keble College, Oxford. In 1905 he published a largely autobiographical work, Pre-Raphaelitism and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood (2 vols.). Most of Hunt's works were executed very slowly, and with great love of detail, in which he excelled, though sometimes to the detriment of composition and colouring. His art is imbued throughout with strong religious feeling.

[F. G. Stephens,] William Holman Hunt and his Works (1860); A. *Meynell and F. W. *Farrar, William Holman Hunt. His Life and Work (1893). A. C. Gissing, William Holman Hunt. A Biography (1936). W. Armstrong in D.N.B., 1901–1911, ii, pp. 323–8.

HUNTING. Though this has been generally held to be lawful for the laity, it was forbidden to the clergy by a series of Gallic councils beginning with a canon (55) of the Council of *Agde (506) which reappears in the '*Corpus Iuris Canonici'. In the Scholastic period a distinction was made between 'quiet' and 'noisy' hunting (quieta and clamorosa), and there was a division of opinion whether both kinds or only the noisy were forbidden to the clergy. The common opinion was that only the noisy was illicit. By 'noisy' was meant the hunting of large or dangerous animals by a crowd of people accompanied by a numerous pack of hounds. 'Quiet hunting' meant the use of snares, nets, or small packs of hounds for the destruction of hares, foxes, and other small animals.

In modern times, hunting, for laity and clergy alike, has occasionally been condemned altogether by Christian moralists on humanitarian grounds. In the RC Church the stricter view forbidding hunting of either kind to the clergy was taken by *Benedict XIV. The *Codex of 1917 (CIC, can. 138: 'venationi ne [clerici] indulgeant, clamorosam autem nunquam exerceant'), while disallowing altogether noisy hunting to the clergy, perhaps tolerates the other sort, if by indulgere may be understood 'to practise immoderately' or 'at the expense of one's duties'.

HUNTINGDON, SELINA, COUNTESS OF (1707–91). Selina Hastings, foundress of the body of *Calvinistic Methodists known as 'the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion'. She joined the *Wesleys' Methodist society in 1739, and on her husband's death in 1746 gave herself wholly up to social and religious work, making herself the chief medium for introducing Methodism to the upper classes. In 1768 she opened Trevecca House, Talgarth, as a Methodist seminary. Her chief method of supporting Methodist ministers was by constituting them her *chaplains; but her opinion that she could, as a peeress, appoint to the rank of chaplain as many priests of the established C of E as she wished, and employ them publicly, was disallowed by the consistory court of London in 1779. In consequence of this decision she registered her chapels as dissenting places of worship under the *Toleration Act. In the disputes between J. Wesley and G. *Whitefield she took the side of the latter, at whose death she became trustee of his foundations in America. Before her own death she formed her chapels into an association (1790).

The Life and Times of Selina Countess of Huntingdon by a Member of the Houses of Shirley and Hastings [i.e. A. C. H. Seymour] (2 vols., 1839); index by F. M. Jackson in Proceedings of the Wesley Historical Society, v (1905), following page 256. A. H. New, The Coronet and the Cross, or Memorials of the Right Hon: Selina, Countess of Huntingdon (1857); J. B. Figgis, The Countess of Huntingdon and her Connexion [c. 1892]. Sarah Tytler [pseud. of H. Keddie], The Countess of Huntingdon and her Circle (1907). F. F. Bretherton, The Countess of Huntingdon (Wesley Historical Society Lecture, No. 6; 1940); K. M. Davies, 'Lady Huntingdon a Threfeca' in Journal of the Historical Society of the Presbyterian Church of Wales, xxvii (1942), pp. 66–75. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxv (1891), pp. 133–5, s.v. 'Hastings, Selina'.

HUPFELD, HERMANN (1796–1866), German OT scholar. He was educated at *Marburg and (under W. *Gesenius) at Halle, and for most of his life taught in these two universities. In the history of *Pentateuchal Criticism he occupies an important place through having in his Die Quellen der Genesis und die Art ihrer Zusammensetzung (1853) distinguished for the first time between the two sources *P and *E, both of which in Gen. use the same word *Elohim as the Divine Name. He also wrote a commentary on the Pss. (4 vols., 1855–61) and works dealing with Semitic grammar and philology.

Life by E. Riehm (Halle, 1867). A. Kamphausen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 462–7.

HUSS, JOHN (c. 1372–1415), Bohemian Reformer. Born of a peasant family at Husinec (whence 'Huss'), he entered Prague university c. 1390 and took his Master's degree in 1396. In 1401 he was elected Dean of the Philosophical Faculty. Having been ordained priest in 1400, he soon became a well-known preacher in Czech at the 'Bethlehem Chapel' at Prague. This was at the time when knowledge of J. *Wycliffe's writings had become more widespread in Bohemia through the closer relations with England that followed the marriage (1382) of Anne, sister of King Wenceslaus IV (d. 1419), to Richard II; Huss was especially attracted to his political doctrines (rejection of the right to property and of the hierarchical organization of society), which had been independently advocated by *Jerome of Prague, and was also sympathetic to his teachings on *Predestination and the Church of the elect. At first he received considerable encouragement from the new Abp. of Prague, Sbinko von Hasenburg, who made him preacher of the synod in 1403, and supported his attack on the pilgrimage of *Wilsnack in 'De Omni Sanguine Christi Glorificato' (1404); and, despite the university's condemnation of 45 of Wycliffe's propositions in 1403, Huss translated Wycliffe's 'Trialogus' into Czech. But before long his violent sermons on the morals of the clergy provoked hostility. They were denounced at Rome in 1407 and the Abp., at Innocent VII's orders, forbade Huss to preach. Huss replied by 'De Arguendo Clero pro Concione'. When the country became divided over the two claimants to the Papal see (*Alexander V and Gregory XII), Huss with Wenceslaus and the Czech 'nation' at the university upheld Alexander, while Sbinko and the other three 'nations' (Bavarians, Saxons, and Poles) supported Gregory. His influence was temporarily much increased by a royal decree (18 Jan. 1409) giving control of the university to the Czech nation, which became a stronghold of Wycliffite doctrines, with Huss as Rector. In his isolation Abp. Sbinko transferred his allegiance to Alexander V, who rewarded him with a bull (9 Mar. 1410) ordering the destruction of all Wycliffite books, the retractation of Wycliffite doctrines, and, to stop Huss's influence at the Bethlehem Chapel, the cessation of preaching in private chapels; and in Feb. 1411 Huss was excommunicated by the new Pope, *John XXIII. Opinion now moved against him and in 1412 the Pope imposed on Huss the great excommunication and placed his followers under an interdict. To restore peace Wenceslaus forthwith removed Huss from Prague and he found refuge with his supporters among the Czech nobility. Two conferences in 1412 and 1413 having failed to achieve peace, Huss devoted himself to writing his chief work, 'De Ecclesia' (1413), the first ten chapters of which are taken over bodily from Wycliffe. Having appealed from the decision of the papal curia to a general Council, he left Bohemia in 1414 for the Council of *Constance, with a safe-conduct of the Emp. Sigismund. Arriving on 3 November 1414, he soon found his liberty threatened. When the trial opened he was confined in the conventual prison of the *Dominicans, later in a castle of the Bp. of Constance, and in the end in the convent of the *Franciscans, the Emperor's endeavour to free him being of no avail. He suffered death at the stake with great fortitude on 6 July 1415.

By his death he became a national hero. The university of Prague declared him a martyr and fixed his feast on the day of his execution.

Opera Omnia, ed. by V. Flajšhans (3 vols., Prague, 1903–1908); also ed. under the auspices of the Academia Scientiarum Bohemoslovenica (Prague, 1959 ff.). Modern ed. of De Ecclesia by S. H. Thompson (Boulder, Colorado–Cambridge, 1957). His Letters were translated into English by H. B. Workman and R. M. Pope (1904), the De Ecclesia by D. S. Schaff (New York, 1915). Eng. tr. of Peter of Mladoňovice's 'Relatio de Mag. Joannis Hus causa', with introd., notes, and other relevant docc., by M. Spinka, John Hus at the Council of Constance (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, lxxiii; 1965). Much of the important literature is in Czech, esp. the works of F. M. Bartoš, V. Novotný, and A. Molnár. J. Loserth, Hus und Wiclif. Zur Genesis der husitischen Lehre (1884; Eng. trans., 1884; ed. 2 of German, 1925); F. Lützow, The Life and Times of Master John Hus (1909); J. Herben, Huss and his Followers (1926). M. Spinka, John Hus and the Czech Reform (Chicago, Ill., 1941). M. Vischer, Jan Hus. Sein Leben und seine Zeit (2 vols., Frankfurt [1940]); P. de Vooght, O.S.B., L'Hérésie de Jean Huss (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire ecclésiastique, xxxiv; 1960); id., Hussiana (ib., xxxv; 1960). M. Spinka, John Hus' Concept of the Church (Princeton, 1966); id., John Hus. A Biography (Princeton, 1968). H. Kaminsky, A History of the Hussite Revolution (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1967). E. Delaruelle–E. R. Labande–P. Ourliac in Fliche–Martin, xiv (4e partie; 1964), pp. 989–1029. J. Loserth in P.R.E. (ed. 3), viii (1900), pp. 472–88.

HUTCHINSON, JOHN (1674–1737), author. He was a native of Yorkshire, and, after being steward to the Earl of Scarborough and the Duke of Somerset, planned a work on the Mosaic account of the Flood. In his chief work, Moses's Principia (1724), he expounds a system of Biblical philosophy, maintaining that Hebrew was the primitive language of mankind which, if rightly interpreted, gave the key to all knowledge whether secular or religious. The book was written in opposition to I. *Newton's Principia and had a considerable success. Its theories were developed by a circle called the 'Hutchinsonians', to which belonged, among others, G. *Horne and W. *Jones of Nayland.

The Philosophical and Theological Works . . . of John Hutchinson, ed. R. Spearman–J. Bate (12 vols., London, 1748–9). An Abstract of the Works of J. Hutchinson (1753). J. P[arkhurst] (ed.), A Supplement to the Works of John Hutchinson . . . being an Index and Explanation of the Hebrew Words cited in the Second Part of his Moses's Principia, with additional Remarks, by R. Spearman (1765), and life by R. Spearman, pp. i–xiv. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, i (1876), pp. 389–91. Id. in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), p. 342 f.

HUTTEN, ULRICH VON (1488–1523), German humanist and controversialist. He belonged to the lower nobility and was born at the castle of Steckelberg, nr. *Fulda. In 1499 he was placed in the monastery of Fulda by his parents, who designed him for the religious life, probably on account of his weak health. In 1505, however, he fled, and during the next years led an unsettled life, visiting many of the German universities, among them *Cologne, *Wittenberg, and Vienna. In 1512–13 he took part in the wars of the Emp. Maximilian in Italy as a Landsknecht. In 1515 he began to write a series of attacks (publd. 1519) against Duke Ulrich of Württemberg, who had murdered a member of his family. About the same time he became a contributor to the famous Humanistic satire Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum*. In 1517 he received the laurel crown of the poet from the Emperor and entered the service of the Elector of Mainz, Abp. *Albert of Brandenburg. In 1518 he edited L. *Valla's treatise on the '*Donation of Constantine' with a sarcastic dedication to the Pope and wrote an exhortation to the German princes to take up arms against the Turks. From 1519 he dedicated his life to the propagation of M. *Luther's reformation, in which he saw the instrument for the deliverance of Germany from the power of Rome. A series of Latin and German treatises, among them Febris Secunda, Vadiscus Dialogus (both 1520), and the famous Gesprächbüchlein (1521), served this purpose. Having failed to gain the Archduke Ferdinand for the Reformation, he was dismissed from the service of the Abp. of Mainz and, being under an order of arrest from Rome, fled to Franz von *Sickingen. After the latter's defeat he sought the protection of D. *Erasmus (1522), who refused to receive him, and at last went to H. *Zwingli, who provided him, broken by disease and misfortune, with a refuge on the island of Ufenau in the Lake of Zürich.

Works ed. E. Böcking, 5 vols. and 2 suppl. vols., Leipzig, 1859–70. German writings ed. S. Szamatólski, Strassburg, 1891. Several modern lives, among them those of D. F. *Strauss (Leipzig, 1858; new ed. by O. Clemen, 1914; Eng. tr., 1874), G. Wolf (Berlin, 1906), K. Jordan (Berlin, 1908), O. Flake (Berlin, 1929), and H. Holborn (Leipzig, 1929; Eng. tr., Yale Historical Publications, No. 11, 1937). P. Kalkoff, Ulrich von Hutten und die Reformation (1920), and other works; P. Held, Ulrich von Hutten. Seine religiösgeistige Auseinandersetzung mit Katholizismus, Humanismus, Reformation (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, Jahrg. xlvi, Hft. 1; 1928). G. W. Kitchin in E.B. (ed. 11), xiv (1910), p. 14 f.; H. Holborn in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), col. 496 f.; F. Zoepfl in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 549 f., all s.v., with further bibl.

HUTTERITES. See Anabaptists.

HUTTON, RICHARD HOLT (1826–97), lay religious writer. The son of Joseph Hutton (1790–1860), *Unitarian minister at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, he was educated at University College, London, where he became a lifelong friend of Walter Bagehot (1827–77). In 1847 he entered Manchester New College to prepare for the Unitarian ministry and came under the influence of J. *Martineau; but failing to secure a permanent ministerial charge, he accepted in 1851 the editorship of the Inquirer, a Unitarian weekly. His tolerant outlook soon caused offence to conservative Unitarians and before long he had to give up the Inquirer. From 1855 to 1864 he edited with Bagehot the National Review. Under the influence of F. W. *Robertson and F. D. *Maurice he was increasingly drawn to the C of E, of which he became a member. In 1861 he was offered by Meredith W. Townsend (1831–1911) the joint-editorship and proprietorship of the Spectator. He made the utmost of this opportunity, using the journal as a pulpit from which to challenge, on Christian principles, the regnant agnosticism (J. S. Mill, T. H. *Huxley) and to present the case for many worth-while causes; and he held his editorship until his death. He was one of the original members of the *Metaphysical Society (founded 1869) and in his later years became intimate with many leading High Churchmen (R. W. *Church, H. P. *Liddon) and RCs (W. G. *Ward). In 1891 he wrote a Life of J. H. *Newman. His Essays Theological and Literary (2 vols., 1871) went through several editions.

J. Hogben, Richard Holt Hutton of 'The Spectator'. A Monograph (1899). D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 19–22 [anon.].

HUTTON, WILLIAM HOLDEN (1860–1930), Dean of *Winchester. Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, he became in 1884 a Fellow of St. John's, where he remained a history tutor for 25 years. From 1911 to 1919 he was Canon of *Peterborough, and from 1919 till his death Dean of Winchester. He was a devoted and influential sponsor of the conservative High Church tradition in *Anglicanism. His writings include Lives of *Sir Thomas More (1895), *William Laud (1895), and *Thomas Becket (1910), a set of *Bampton Lectures on The Lives of the English Saints (1903), and a history of The English Church from the Accession of Charles I to the Death of Anne, 1625–1714 (1903).

C. W. C. Oman in D.N.B., 1922–1930, p. 442 f., s.v.

HUXLEY, THOMAS HENRY (1825–95), biologist. A native of Ealing, after a precocious boyhood he studied medicine at Charing Cross Hospital from 1842 to 1845 and in 1846 secured an appointment in the Navy which enabled him to pursue scientific investigations in the Rattlesnake (1846–50) in southern tropical waters. Here he carried through some remarkable biological researches. Recognition quickly followed and in 1851 he was elected a F.R.S. In 1854 he left the Navy and accepted a post as lecturer at the Royal School of Mines. From the publication of Collected Essays (1854) he became prominent as an advocate of scientific training as the surest remedy for man's intellectual, social, and moral needs. His campaign on behalf of science was greatly stimulated by the controversy aroused in 1859 by C. *Darwin's Origin of Species. At the meeting of the British Association at *Oxford in 1860 he had a memorable passage of words with the Bp. of Oxford (S. *Wilberforce) on the subject of evolution. In 1863 there appeared his Zoological Evidences as to Man's Place in Nature, a defence of man's descent from the lower animal world, and in 1868 he delivered a lecture on 'The Physical Basis of Life' in which he expounded '*agnosticism' (a term of his own coining a year or two later). Man, he argued, cannot know the nature of either spirit or matter; metaphysics is impossible; and man's primary duty in life is the relief of misery and ignorance. From c. 1870 he filled several important administrative offices, in some of which he exercised great influence. As a member of the London School Board from 1870 to 1872 he laid stress on the merits of physical, moral, and esp. scientific education, but he held that such education should be supplemented by the study of the Bible as the only means by which religious feeling, the basis of moral conduct, could be sustained. In 1879 he published a study of D. *Hume with a special chapter on *miracles. He would not reject miracles out of hand because 'nobody can presume to say what the order of nature must be', but he explicitly abandoned the theological conception of a Personal God, substituting 'the passionless impersonality of the unknown and unknowable'. Compelled in 1885 to retire from public work for reasons of health, he continued active in writing. His attacks on Christian orthodoxy became more persistent and he carried his agnosticism into the field of NT study, holding that certain knowledge as to the teaching and convictions of Christ was impossible. He summarized his final views in his Romanes Lecture on 'Ethics and Evolution', delivered at Oxford on 18 May 1893. Huxley had few claims to be considered an exact thinker, but his obvious sincerity won him a wide hearing and influence.

Collected Essays (9 vols., 1893–4); Scientific Memoirs, ed. M. Foster–E. R. Lankester (5 vols., 1898–1903). Leonard Huxley, The Life and Letters of Thomas Henry Huxley (2 vols., 1900). His scientific achievements are treated in P. C. Mitchell, Thomas Henry Huxley (1900); H. Peterson, Huxley, Prophet of Science (New York, 1932); C. Bibby, T. H. Huxley. Scientist, Humanist and Educator (1959). W. T. Thiselton-Dyer in E.B. (ed. 11), xiv (1910), pp. 17–20; W. F. R. Weldon in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 22–31.

HUYSMANS, JORIS KARL (1848–1907), French Catholic novelist. Of Dutch descent, he was for thirty years a member of the French Ministry of the Interior, but his main claim to fame lay in his literary work. His early novels, Marthe (1876), À rebours (1884), and Là-bas (1891), reveal his association with the Goncourt–Zola school of literary realism, many of their characters being decadent types. He was converted to a living Christian faith by a visit to the *Trappist monastery of Igny. It found expression in En route (1895), La Cathédrale (1898), Sainte Lydwine de Schiedam (1901, a study in the value of suffering), L'Oblat (1903) and other books. His writings generally reflected his deep interest in religious art, ritual, and mysticism.

Œuvres complètes, ed. L. Descaves (18 vols., Paris, 1928–1934). Life by R. Baldick (Oxford, 1955). K. Bosch, J. K. Huysmans' religiöser Entwicklungsgang (Constance, 1920); H. Bachelin, J. K. Huysmans. Du naturalisme littéraire au naturalisme mystique (1926). Other studies by L. Deffoux (Paris, 1927), E. Seillière (ib., 1931), H. Trudgian (ib., 1934), J. Laver (London, 1954), and H. R. T. Brandreth, O.G.S. (ib., 1963).

HY. See Iona.

HYACINTH, St. (1185–1257), 'Apostle of the North', known to the Poles as St. Iaccho. Acc. to the traditional account, he came of a noble Polish family and studied at Cracow, Prague, and *Bologna. On a visit to Rome with his uncle, Ivo of Konski, Bp. of Cracow, he met St. *Dominic and in 1220 received the habit from him at Santa Sabina. Becoming the superior of a small band of Dominicans, he set out for Poland in the same year and engaged in missionary work first in his own and the adjacent countries, and then in *Denmark, *Sweden, and *Norway. His later activities are reputed to have extended as far as the Black Sea. There is considerable uncertainty as to the historical truth of some of these details. He was canonized by *Clement VIII in 1594. Feast day, 17 Aug.

L. Cwiklinski, 'De Vita et Miraculis S. Iacchonis (Hyacinthi) Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum, auctore Stanislao Lectore Cracoviensi eiusdem Ordinis' and other items in Monumenta Poloniae Historica, iv (Lemberg, 1884), pp. 818–903. B. *Altaner, Die Dominikanermissionen des 13. Jahrhunderts (1924), pp. 196–214. R. J. Loenertz, O.P., 'La Vie de S. Hyacinthe du lecteur Stanislas envisagée comme source historique' in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxvii (1957), pp. 5–38. J. Gottschalk, 'Zur Geschichte der Hyazinth-Verehrung' in Archiv für schlesische Kirchengeschichte, xvi (1958), pp. 60–98, with other articles by A. Seidel, ib., pp. 99–110 and P. Birkner, pp. 111–36.

HYDROPARASTATAE (Gk. Ὑδροπαράσταται, 'those who advocate water'). A name used from the 4th cent. of the *Aquarians.

HYLOMORPHISM. A metaphysical doctrine derived from *Aristotle, acc. to which the actual specific reality of a physical thing is the μορφή (forma), while the ὕλη (materia) contributes to its being only potentiality and limitation. It had a fundamental place in the systems of St. *Albertus Magnus and St. *Thomas Aquinas.

HYLOZOISM. The doctrine that all matter is endowed with life. In a crude form it was taught by the ancient Greek philosophers (Thales, Anaximenes, Heracleitus) and the *Stoics ('world soul') and in a more spiritual form by many of the Renaissance thinkers (B. *Telesio, G. *Bruno), by some of the *Cambridge Platonists (H. *More, R. *Cudworth), and by G. T. *Fechner. A materialistic form of the doctrine was revived by E. H. *Haeckel.

HYMNARY (Lat. Hymnarium). The medieval liturgical book of the W. Rite which contained the metrical hymns of the Divine Office arranged acc. to the Liturgical Year. It was often appended to the *Psaltery and sometimes to the *Antiphonary. Its contents were later incorporated into the *Breviary.

J. Mearns, Early Latin Hymnaries. An Index of Hymns in Hymnaries before 1100 (Cambridge, 1913). See also bibl. to following entry.

HYMNS (Gk. ὕμνος, 'song in praise of gods or heroes'). Sacred poetry set to music and sung in the course of the services of the Church has always formed part of Christian worship, whether to express doctrine or the devotion of individuals. At first the hymns of the Jewish Church, esp. the Psalms, were in use, and there is the record of a hymn in the Upper Room (Mk. 14. 26), prob. the *Hallel. At an early date distinctively Christian compositions, e.g. *Magnificat, *Benedictus, and *Nunc Dimittis, appeared. What seem to be quotations from early Christian hymns also occur in Eph. 5. 14, 1 Tim. 3. 16, 1 Tim. 6. 15 f., 2 Tim. 2. 11–13, Rev. 15. 3–4 and Rev. 22. 17, while hymns are differentiated from Psalms in Col. 3. 16 and Eph. 5. 19. *Pliny's famous letter (Ad Traj., 96) may refer to an antiphonal hymn or to a form of liturgy. The rhythmical prose in use in the early Church (1 *Clement 59–61, Ep. to *Diognetus, *Didache, *Melito's treatise On the Passion) furthered the development of hymnody. A 3rd-cent. writer (perhaps *Hippolytus) refers to 'psalms and odes such as from the beginning were written by believers, hymns to the Christ, the Word of God, calling Him God' (Eusebius, H.E., V. xxviii. 5).

The earliest complete Christian hymn that survives, 'Bridle of colts untamed', is a hymn to Christ preserved by *Clement of Alexandria. Other hymns of pre-Nicene date are 'Up, Maidens', included by *Methodius of Olympus in his Symposium, and the Φῶς ἱλαρόν ('Hail, gladdening Light', A.M. 18, E.H. 269), which is still part of the Evening Office of the Eastern Church. The *Gnostics (*Valentinus, *Bardesanes and his son Harmonius, *Marcion) made extensive use of hymns, but, except for the 'Odes of *Solomon' (q.v.), most of these have been lost.

From the 4th cent. the use of hymns became more general. A Gk. form of the Gloria in excelsis, which is of unknown authorship, is found in the Apostolic Constitutions (vii. 47). In the E. it formed part of morning prayer; in the W. it was introduced into the Mass, apparently under *Symmachus I (d. 514), though its use was long restricted. From this period hymns were also employed as a powerful means of promoting or refuting heresy. In the E. St. *Ephraem Syrus (d. 378) wrote Syriac hymns to counter the heresy of Bardesanes and to celebrate the Christian mysteries. Early Greek hymn-writers include St. *Gregory Nazianzen (d. 390) and *Synesius (d. c. 414). Both used classical models, and the latter is notable for his introduction of *Neoplatonist ideas into Christian hymns. In both E. and W. hymnody played a part in the Arian controversy. In Constantinople under the Emp. *Theodosius I (d. 395) the Arians sang hymns through the streets, while St. John *Chrysostom (d. 407) organized orthodox hymn-singing. Similarly, St. *Augustine (Confessions, ix. 7) records the introduction of the custom of singing psalms and hymns in the manner of the E. Church at Milan during the struggle of St. *Ambrose with Justina.

From the 5th cent. the belief obtained in some quarters that no words other than those of Scripture should be allowed in the liturgy, and as late as 563 the Council of Braga forbade the singing of non-Biblical poetical compositions in Church (can. 12), a decision not reversed until the fourth Council of *Toledo in 633 (can. 13). From the 5th cent. *troparia (single-stanza hymns), of which the *Monogenes and the *Cherubicon are the most famous, are found in the E. service books. These were later joined together to form *contakia of 18 to 30 stanzas, and from the 7th cent. *canons. The classical Greek hymn-writers include *Romanos (6th cent.), *Sergius I, Patr. of Constantinople (d. 641), to both of whom the *Acathistos has been attributed, St. *Andrew of Crete (d. c. 730), *Cosmas Melodus (d. c. 760), St. *John of Damascus (d. c. 750) and St. *Joseph the Hymnographer (c. 810–86). Characteristic of Greek hymns are their dogmatic emphasis and faculty of sustained praise, often offset by monotony of thought and repetition of diction.

Latin hymns appear later than Greek. The most famous, the *Te Deum, is written not in verse but in rhythmical prose. The authorship of the first 21 verses has been assigned to *Niceta of Remesiana (d. c. 414), but the whole may be derived from a *Paschal Vigil Baptismal Mass. St. *Hilary (d. 369) wrote hymns, prob. under Eastern influence, when he was in exile, but the 'liber hymnorum' ascribed to him by St. *Jerome is lost, except for a few fragments. The real impetus, however, came from St. Ambrose. Though only three hymns can be ascribed to him with certainty, they laid down the line of development of Latin hymnody as simple, devotional and direct, and it was through his influence that hymns became a recognized and integral part of the public worship of the W. Church. Though hymns were not admitted to the Roman Office until the 13th cent. the development came to be towards an ordered sequence for use at different times and seasons, with hymns designed to express not the feelings of the individual worshipper but the meaning of the feast or Office. Other Latin hymn-writers include *Prudentius (d. c. 410), (Caelius) Sedulius (d. c. 450), *Venantius Fortunatus (d. 609), *Bede (d. 735), *Theodulph of Orleans (d. 821), *Notker of St. Gall (d. 1022; the popularizer of *Sequences, the first hymns introduced into the Mass), P. *Abelard (d. 1142), *Adam of St. Victor (d. between 1177 and 1192; 'the greatest of the sacred Latin poets of the Middle Ages', R. C. *Trench), Philip the Chancellor (d. 1236), and St. *Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274). The *Counter-Reformation led to the remodelling of a number of the old *Breviary hymns and the composition of new ones in a more classical diction and metre, first in Italy under Pope *Urban VIII, and then in France. Some monastic orders, including the *Benedictines, did not adopt the new hymns. Among their authors were the brothers Claude and Jean Baptiste de Santeuil (d. 1684 and 1697) and Charles *Coffin (d. 1749). Two well-known hymns of the 17th or 18th cent. are *Veni, veni, Emmanuel' (A.M. 49; E.H., 8) and *Adeste Fideles' (A.M. 59, E.H. 28), both of obscure origin.

In England hymns first appear in the vernacular with *Caedmon (Bede, H.E., iv. 24), *Aldhelm (d. 709) and King *Alfred (d. 899). Towards the close of the Middle Ages hymns to Christ as Redeemer and to the BVM, together with translations of Latin hymns, became popular. Among the leading medieval English hymn-writers was Richard *Rolle of Hampole (d. 1349).

Although hymns in the vernacular were written during the Middle Ages, as they were not admitted to the Mass, and the Offices already had their own Latin hymns, they were, with some individual exceptions, mainly the work of those outside the main religious stream. The most important, and essentially English, development of the period was the *carol. Its origin, and the derivation of the word itself, are both in dispute. The earliest printed collection of carols is that of Wynkyn de Worde of 1521. The carol flourished in England until the *Puritan ascendancy, and then survived in provincial broadsheet and oral tradition until the 19th cent., when interest rapidly revived; collections of carols were published by Davies Gilbert in 1822 and by W. Sandys in 1833. A fresh stimulus was provided by J. M. *Neale's discovery of the Swedish Piae Cantiones of 1582. Since then carols have been the subject of much serious study.

The Reformation had a deep and varied effect on the development of hymnody. *Lutheranism was marked by a wealth of new hymns written by M. *Luther himself (d. 1546), who was a skilled musician and imitated the pattern of medieval secular music, and by M. Weisse (d. 1534), P. Nicolai (d. 1609) and later by M. A. von Löwenstern (d. 1648) and P. *Gerhardt (d. 1676). Apart from J. S. *Bach (d. 1750), German hymnology has not since attained so high a standard. The first Protestant hymn-book was M. Weisse's Ein New Geseng Buchlein (1531). *Calvinism, on the other hand, would tolerate nothing but the words of Scripture in its services. Hence the Psalms were put into *metrical versions, first in French by C. *Marot (d. 1544) and T. *Beza (d. 1605), with L. Bourgeois (d. 1561) as musical editor; their work was collected in the 'Genevan Psalter' (1563). An attempt by M. *Coverdale to introduce Lutheran chorales into England in his Goostly Psalmes and Spirituall Songes [undated] was unsuccessful, and hymns (with the exception of the two versions of the *Veni Creator in the *Ordinal) disappeared from the English service books, less, it would seem, on grounds of principle than because T. *Cranmer's literary powers lay in other directions. His second scheme for the Offices, the Prayer Book of 1549, contained 26 Latin hymns. Metrical versions of the Psalter were made and widely used in England from an early date, and continued in use until they were displaced by hymns in the 19th cent. The 'Old Version' of the Psalter of T. S. *Sternhold (q.v.) and J. Hopkins appeared in 1557, and was authorized by the Royal *Injunctions of 1559. In 1623 Hymns and Songs of the Church was published by George Wither (d. 1667). It gained considerable initial popularity, but was successfully opposed by the Company of Stationers, which had a monopoly of printing the metrical Psalter. The 'New Version' of N. *Tate and N. Brady, with a supplement, appeared in 1696, and was authorized as an alternative to the 'Old Version' by Order in Council. Hymns continued to be written for private and local use, e.g. by G. *Herbert (whose poems were edited and first used as hymns by J. *Wesley), H. *Vaughan, 'the Silurist' (d. 1695) and T. *Ken (d. 1711).

Modern hymn-writing and hymn-singing were mainly the creation of the 18th cent. A prominent place is filled by Isaac *Watts (d. 1748), the *Congregationalist, whose hymns were written to express the spiritual experience of the singer. In 1737 appeared John Wesley's Collection of Psalms and Hymns, the first hymn-book of modern type, followed in 1739 by Hymns and Sacred Poems by John and Charles Wesley. The latter was the most prolific, and probably the most gifted, of all English hymn-writers. The practice of hymn-singing was much encouraged and developed by the *Methodists. It soon spread among the *Evangelical party of the C of E, though it was long frowned upon by authority. Other hymn-writers of this period were P. *Doddridge (d. 1751) and A. *Toplady (Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Worship, 1776). In 1779 J. *Newton and W. *Cowper published Olney Hymns, a collection of hymns of the subjective and emotional type characteristic of the Evangelical school.

In America, social conditions in the 19th cent. found expression in the Negro spiritual, which was a powerful factor in the Second *Great Awakening of 1797–1805. The most important collection of Negro spirituals is that of J. Ingall, Christian Harmony (1805). In the same tradition, the mission hymns of D. L. *Moody (d. 1899) and Ira D. Sankey (d. 1908) exerted considerable influence in both America and England.

By the beginning of the 19th cent., prejudice against the use of hymns in the C of E was dying, and the time was ripe for a hymn-book which could be integrated into the Prayer Book scheme of worship. R. *Heber (d. 1826), who both wrote and collected hymns, intended his (posthumous) Hymns written and adapted to the Weekly Church Services of the Year (1827) to be both 'literary' and 'liturgical'. Though never widely used, it did much to break down the remaining hostility to hymns outside Evangelical circles. J. Montgomery (d. 1854) also wrote many hymns, including some still in use. A further important influence in fostering the use of hymns came from the *Oxford Movement. The hymns of the ancient and medieval Church were employed to emphasize the antiquity and catholicity of the Church. Translations were made by I. *Williams (d. 1865), J. M. *Neale (d. 1865), F. *Oakeley (d. 1880), E. *Caswall (d. 1878), and W. J. Copeland (d. 1885). Original compositions came from J. *Keble (d. 1866; Christian Year, 1827) and J. H. *Newman (d. 1890; Dream of Gerontius, 1865).

By the middle of the 19th cent. hymn-singing was firmly established in the Church, and hymn-books were published which combined the ancient hymns with those of recent composition. The Sacred Hymns from the German (1841) of Frances Cox (d. 1897) and the Lyra Germanica (1855) of Catherine Winkworth (d. 1878) introduced a knowledge of German hymnology into England. The Hymnal Noted appeared in 1852 (Part I) and 1854 (II). This was followed by Hymns, Ancient and Modern* (1861, q.v.), which set the pattern for Anglican hymn books with hymns for the liturgical calendar as well as those of personal devotion. The publication of the Yattendon Hymnal (1895–9) of R. S. *Bridges (d. 1930) and the Songs of Syon (1904) edited by G. R. Woodward (d. 1934) set a new literary and musical standard which was followed by the widely used English Hymnal* (1906) and the Oxford Hymn Book (1908). For the C of E these have been supplemented by the Anglican Hymn Book (1965). A new ecumenical approach may be seen in Songs of Praise* (1925), the B.B.C. Hymn Book (1951) and the Cambridge Hymnal (1967).

The legality of hymns in the C of E was challenged in the ecclesiastical courts by the parishioners of St. Paul's, Sheffield, after the publication of a hymnal by the Vicar, T. Cotterill, in 1805. This dispute was settled in 1820 by a ruling of the Abp. of York, Vernon Harcourt, who sanctioned the use of a modified version of the hymnal. In 1890 Abp. *Benson in the '*Lincoln Judgement' allowed the use of hymns provided that they did not interrupt the course of the service. He based his decision on the first Act of *Uniformity of *Edward VI.

Among RCs there arose in the 19th cent. a demand for popular hymns, which was met by such writers as F. W. *Faber (d. 1863). In its time, a standard work was the Westminster Hymnal (1912; new ed., 1940). The many local hymnals, however, received support from Pope *Pius XII's encyclical 'Musicae sacrae disciplina' (1955), which encouraged the use of religious songs by the people; it was reinforced by the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy issued by the Second *Vatican Council; but the resulting use of vernacular hymns and 'religious songs' is still in a state of development. In addition, the Latin hymns in the 1971 Breviary have been extensively revised and many of the older hymns have been restored to their original form.

Apart from the Quakers, other English-speaking Churches have all assigned an important place to hymns, as being an integral part of Christian worship rather than an addition to it. Among the best-known modern works are the Church Hymnary of the Scottish and other Presbyterians (1898), the Baptist Hymnal (1900), the Methodist Hymn Book (1904), and Congregational Praise (1951). The current editions of these books exhibit the same widening musical and theological sympathies as their Anglican counterparts.

Special hymnals for schools have been very numerous. Many public schools, beginning with Rugby in 1824, have issued their own books, and a representative work, the Public School Hymn Book, was published in 1903. The Church and School Hymnal (1926), The Daily Service. Prayers and Hymns for Schools (1936) and Hymns for Church and School (1964) are examples of similar works designed for wider educational use.

W. Christ–M. Paranikas (edd.), Anthologia Graeca Carminum Christianorum (Leipzig, 1871). H. Follieri, Initia Hymnorum Ecclesiae Graecae (S.T., ccxi–ccxv bis; 1960–6). J. B. *Pitra, Hymnologie de l'Église grecque (1867). E. Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949; ed. 2, 1961), with extensive bibl. H. A. Daniel (ed.), Thesaurus Hymnologicus (5 vols. bound in 2, Leipzig and Halle, 1841–56); F. J. *Mone, Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters (3 vols. bound in 2, 1853–5); G. M. Dreves, S.J.–C. Blume, S.J. (edd.), Analecta Hymnica Medii Aevi (55 vols., Leipzig, 1886–1922); A. S. Walpole–A. J. Mason, Early Latin Hymns (1922). W. Bulst, Hymni Latini Antiquissimi LXXV (Heidelberg, 1956). U. Chevalier (ed.), Repertorium Hymnologicum. Catalogue des chants, hymnes, proses, séquences, tropes en usage dans l'Église latine depuis ses origines jusqu'à nos jours (6 vols., 1892–1921); C. Blume, Repertorium Repertorii. Kritische Wegweiser durch U. Chevalier's Repertorium Hymnologicum (Hymnologische Beiträge, ii; 1901). F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian-Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1927; ed. 2, 1953) [cited as 'Raby']. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung. Ein Handbuch (2 vols., 1964). B. Stäblein (ed.), Die mittelalterlichen Hymnenmelodien des Abendlandes (Monumenta Monodica Medii Aevi, i; Kassel, 1956). J. Connelly, Hymns of the Roman Liturgy (1957). L. Benson, The English Hymn (New York, 1915). C. S. Phillips, Hymnody Past and Present (1937). W. T. Whitley, Congregational Hymn-Singing (1933); H. A. L. Jefferson, Hymns in Christian Worship (1950); E. [R.] Routley, Hymns and Human Life (1952); id., The Music of Christian Hymnography (1957), and other works by the same author; M. Frost, English and Scottish Psalm and Hymn Tunes, c. 1543–1677 (1953). J. Julian, A Dictionary of Hymnology (1892; revised ed., 1907) [cited as 'Julian']. A. *Baumstark, A. J. Maclean, D. S. Margoliouth, G. M. Dreves, S.J., E. Hull, and T. G. Crippen in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 5–38, s.v. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2826–2928, s.v. J. Szövérffy and others in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 287–304, s.vv. 'Hymnology' and 'Hymns'; E. R. Routley in E.B. (ed. 1968), xi, pp. 986–91, s.v.

'HYMNS, ANCIENT AND MODERN'. This famous hymnal (publd. 1861), edited by H. W. *Baker (q.v.), was a product of the *Oxford Movement. It drew freely on ancient, medieval and modern sources and also incorporated many of the traditional *office hymns (often in the translation of J. M. *Neale). The music, expressive and tuneful, which greatly assisted its popularity, was edited by William Henry Monk (1823–89). In 1868 a supplement was added. In 1875 the whole work was completely revised; further supplements were added in 1889 and 1916; and from 1922 onwards these were issued as a single book ('Standard Edition'). A more drastic revision ('New Edition'), issued in 1904, never became popular.

In 1950 a completely new edition ('Hymns Ancient and Modern. Revised, 1950') appeared. A few new hymns were added, but many more excised, so that the total number was reduced to 636. More provision was made for processions and special occasions and the arrangement of the book much improved. The music was edited by Sydney H. Nicholson (1875–1947), assisted by G. H. Knight (b. 1908) and J. Dykes Bower (b. 1905).

In its various forms the book has familiarized many generations of Church people with the fundamentals of Anglican doctrine and practice. The Chairmen of the Proprietors, who control the hymnal, have included H. W. Baker, W. H. *Frere, S. H. Nicholson and W. K. Lowther Clarke (1879–1968).

A 'Historical Edition', incl. notes on the words and tune of each hymn and the orig. texts in the case of translations, was publd. in 1909, with valuable introd. by W. H. Frere (pp. ix–cxi). W. K. L. Clarke, A Hundred Years of Hymns Ancient & Modern (1960). M. Frost (ed.), Historical Companion to Hymns Ancient & Modern (1962).

HYPAPANTE (Gk. ὑπαπαντή, 'meeting'). The name used in the E. Church for the feast of *Candlemas, in reference to the meeting of *Simeon and Anna with the BVM and the Infant Christ at the *Presentation in the Temple. In the Middle Ages the title ('Occursus Domini') was also frequently used in the W.

HYPATIA (c. 375–415), *Neoplatonist philosopher. The daughter of Theon, the mathematician and philosopher, she was the glory of the Neoplatonic School of Alexandria, where *Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais, was one of her pupils. On the suspicion that she had set the pagan prefect of Alexandria against the Christians, she was attacked by a Christian mob under Peter the Reader and put to death. The archbishop, *Cyril, was suspected of complicity, but his responsibility was never proved. She was the authoress of works on philosophy and mathematics.

The chief sources are *Socrates, H.E., vii. 15 and *Suidas, s.v. W. A. Meyer, Hypatia von Alexandria. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Neuplatonismus (1885). F. Schaefer, 'Cyril of Alexandria and the Murder of Hypatia' in Catholic University Bulletin [Washington], viii (1902), pp. 441–53; H. von Schubert, 'Hypatia von Alexandrien in Wahrheit und Dichtung' in Preussische Jahrbücher, cxxiv (1906), pp. 42–60. K. Praechter in P.W., ix (1916), cols. 242–9. Her story was the basis of C. *Kingsley's novel, Hypatia (1853).

HYPERDULIA. (Gk. ὑπέρ, 'more than'; δουλεία, 'servitude', 'veneration'.) The special veneration paid to the BVM on account of her eminent dignity as Mother of God. It is of a more limited kind than '*latria', the worship due only to God, but higher than '*dulia', the honour paid to angels and saints.

HYPOCRISY (from Gk. ὑποκρίνομαι, 'to play a part', 'pretend'). The hiding of interior wickedness under the appearance of virtue. The Lord denounced it esp. in the case of the *Pharisees (Mt. 23. 1–36) as the vice of those who do their good deeds only in order to be seen by men and not for the glory of God. Not all hiding of one's own sins, however, is to be regarded as hypocrisy, for there is no obligation as such to make them public, and in certain cases to do so might even cause grave scandal. According to moral theologians hypocrisy is the fruit of pride. It is a sin against truthfulness, being a lie expressed by external actions with the intention of deceiving.

HYPOSTASIS (Gk. ὑπόστασις, lit. 'substance'). The Gk. word has had a variety of meanings. In popular language it was used orig. for 'objective reality' as opposed to illusion (so also in *Aristotle and esp. the *Neoplatonists). In the NT this seems to be roughly its meaning at Heb. 1. 3. Allied to this was its use for 'basis' or 'foundation' and hence also 'confidence', e.g. in Heb. 3. 14 and 11. 1 and 2 Cor. 9. 4 and 11. 17. It often came to be almost identical with οὐσία, i.e. to denote 'being' or 'substantial reality'; it was so used by *Tatian and *Origen, and also in the anathemas appended to the *Nicene Creed of 325.

But side by side with this usage the term also came to mean 'individual reality' and, from the middle of the 4th cent. onwards esp. in Christological contexts, a 'person'. Its employment for this purpose led to great confusion in the minds of Western theologians, who naturally translated ὑπόστασις by 'sub-stantia' ('substance') and understood the Easterns when speaking of three 'Hypostaseis' in the Godhead to mean three 'Substances', i.e. they suspected them of tritheism. It was mainly under the influence of the *Cappadocian Fathers that the terminology was clarified and standardized, and the theological ambiguities removed. From the Council of *Constantinople of 381 onwards the formula 'Three Hypostaseis in one Ousia' came to be everywhere accepted as an epitome of the orthodox doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), pp. 162–190. J. Tixeront, 'Des concepts de "Nature" et de "Personne" dans les pères et les écrivains ecclésiastiques des Ve et VIe siècles' in Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, viii (1903), pp. 582–92; repr. in id., Mélanges de patrologie et d'histoire des dogmes (1921), pp. 210–27. M. Richard, 'L'Introduction du mot "Hypostase" dans la théologie de l'Incarnation' in Mélanges de Science religieuse, ii (1945), pp. 5–32, 243–70. F. Erdin, Das Wort Hypostasis. Seine bedeutungsgeschichtliche Entwicklung (1939; Erdin's conclusions generally rejected). A. Michel in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 369–437, s.v. 'Hypostase', with bibl.

HYPOSTATIC UNION, The. The substantial union of the Divine and human natures in the One Person ('Hypostasis') of Jesus Christ. The doctrine was elaborated by St. *Cyril of Alexandria and formally accepted by the Church in the Definition of *Chalcedon (451). See also preceding entry.

A. Michel in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 437–568; M. Schmaus–H. Vorgrimler in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 579–84, s.v. See also bibl. to Christology.

HYPSISTARIANS (Gk. ὕψιστος, 'highest'). A 4th cent. sect, probably confined to Cappadocia, which is mentioned by *Gregory of Nazianzus (Orat., 18. 5, where he says that his father had formerly belonged to it) and by *Gregory of Nyssa. It was so named because its members, refusing to worship God as 'Father' (πατήρ), revered Him only as the 'All Ruler and Highest' (παντοκράτωρ καὶ ὕψιστος). They incorporated into their system many oriental and Jewish elements.

C. Ullmann, De Hypsistariis (Heidelberg, 1825). G. T. Stokes in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 188 f.; G. Bareille in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1, 1922), col. 572; L. Spätling in E.C., vii (1951), col. 181 f.

I

IAMBLICHUS (c. 250 – c. 330). The chief *Neoplatonist of the Syrian school. Little is known of his life. He was a native of Chalcis in Coele-Syria; he may have studied under *Porphyry or perhaps only studied his works; he later taught in Syria, surrounded by many disciples. He held a very elaborate theory of mediation between the spiritual and physical worlds, radically modifying the doctrine of *Plotinus by duplicating the Plotinian One (ἕν) and distinguishing between its transcendental and creative aspects. This distinction lies at the basis of the negative and affirmative theologies which have differentiated E. and W. theology (see God).

Iamblichus incorporated in his system many Greek and Oriental pagan mythologies, whose deities he amalgamated with his orders of hypostases. He also carried a stage further the development of the number-symbolism cherished by the later Neoplatonists. He wrote a commentary (now lost) on the Chaldean Oracles, which influenced *Proclus; a comprehensive exposition of the Pythagorean philosophy, entitled Συναγωγὴ τῶν Πυθαγορείων Δογμάτων (of this the only parts to survive are a treatise 'On the Pythagorean Life' (Περὶ τοῦ Πυθαγορικοῦ Βίου), an 'Exhortation to Philosophy' (Λόγος προτρεπτικὸς εἰς Φιλοσοφίαν), and various treatises of a speculative kind on mathematics); and, apparently, the 'Liber de Mysteriis', whose ascription has been doubted but is now generally accepted. This last work is of no philosophical importance, but is a curious guide to the superstitions of the age. There are apparently no direct references to Christianity in his writings, but it was from Iamblichus and his school that *Julian the Apostate learnt the Neoplatonism which he used as a weapon against Christianity.

Editions of the treatise 'On the Pythagorean Life' by L. Deubner (Teub., 1937), of the 'Exhortation to Philosophy' by H. Pistelli (ib., 1888), of three mathematical treatises by N. Festa, H. Pistelli and V. de Falco (ib., 1891, 1894, and 1922 respectively). 'Liber de Mysteriis' ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by E. des Places, S.J. (Collection des Universités de France, 1966). Eng. tr. of 'Vita Pythagorica' by T. Taylor (London, 1818); of 'De Mysteriis' by id. (Chiswick, 1821; ed. 3, London, 1968). M. Sicherl, Die Handschriften, Ausgaben und Übersetzungen von Iamblichos De Mysteriis (T.U., lxii; 1957). A. C. Lloyd in A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1967), pp. 294–301, with reff. Überweg, i, 612–17, with full bibl., p. 191 f. G. Mau–W. Kroll in P.W., xvii (1914), cols. 645–51. E. R. Dodds in O.C.D. (ed. 2, 1970), p. 538. See also bibl. to Neoplatonism.

IBAS, Bp. of *Edessa from 435 to 449 and from 451 to 457. In the contemporary Christological controversies, he took a mediating position between the dualistic teaching of the *Nestorians and the *Alexandrine position of St. *Cyril, and was closely associated in doctrine and policy with *Theodoret. On account of his views, summarized in his famous letter addressed in 433 to Bp. Mari of Hardascir (in Persia), he was deposed at the *Latrocinium at Ephesus in 449. Though he was vindicated at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), his epistle was condemned by *Justinian and anathematized by the Fifth General Council (553). None of his writings, apart from the Epistle to Mari in a Greek translation from the original Syriac, has survived. See also Three Chapters.

Text of Ep. to Mari in acta of Councils, e.g. Mansi, vii. 241–50. A. d'Alès, S.J., 'La Lettre d'Ibas à Marès le Persan' in Rech. S.R., xxii (1932), pp. 5–25. Bardenhewer, iv (1924), p. 410 f. E. Venables in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 192–6.

ICELAND, Christianity in. Christianity reached Iceland from *Norway c. 980. The medieval Church had two bishoprics, Skálholt and Hólar, and was at first under the administrative jurisdiction of Bremen, then of Lund, and finally of Trondhjem (Nidaros). Questions of the jurisdiction of the clergy brought about a civil war in the 13th cent. which ended in her subjection to Norway in 1262. *Benedictine and *Augustinian communities were established in the island for several centuries. At the Reformation Iceland followed *Denmark, to whose rule she had been subject since c. 1380, in adopting *Lutheranism. In modern times there has been a revival of Church life. The ecclesiastical government is in the hands of the Lutheran bishop, with deanery and parish councils; and the civil government has also some voice in ecclesiastical appointments.

F. Jónsson, Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiae (4 vols., Copenhagen, 1772–8; cont. by P. Pétursson, ib., 1841). J. Helgason, Islands Kirke fra dens Grundlæggsle til Reformationen (ib., 1925); id., Islands Kirke fra Reformationen til vore Dage (ib., 1922). J. C. F. Hood, Icelandic Church Saga (1946). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, ii, Lieferung vii, pt. 2, 'Die Kirche in Island' (1937), with bibl. L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches. A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965), pp. 104–17.

I.C.F. See Industrial Christian Fellowship.

ICHABOD, the son of Phinehas and grandson of the priest Eli, the tragic circumstances of whose birth are described in 1 Sam. 4. 19–22. The name, acc. to 1 Sam. 4. 21, means 'The glory has departed' (lit. 'no glory'); hence the use of 'Ichabod' as an exclamation.

ICHTHUS. See Fish.

ICON (Gk. εἰκών). Icons are flat pictures, usually painted in egg tempera on wood, but also wrought in mosaic, ivory, and other materials, to represent the Lord, the BVM, or another saint, which are used and venerated in the Greek Church. The likenesses are depicted in the traditional rather stiff Byzantine manner. For protection they are frequently, esp. in Russia, covered with a metal shield on which the outlines of the clothes are carved, but which leave free the face and hands belonging to the painting underneath. Icons became numerous in the E. from the 5th cent., and the effect of the *Iconoclastic Controversy of the 8th and 9th cents. was to increase devotion to them among the people. Since then they have always played an essential part in the public as well as in the private worship of the Greek Church, and they are accorded all the external marks of veneration common in the E., such as kisses, genuflexions, incense, &c. As it is believed that through them the saints exercise their beneficent powers, they preside at all important events of human life and are held to be effective remedies against illness, to drive away devils, to procure both spiritual and temporal blessings, and generally to be powerful channels of Divine grace. Many icons have been famous for their miracles, esp. that of Christ of *Edessa, believed not to have been made by hands (ἀχειροποίητος), and that of the *Theotokos, also 'acheiropoietos', in the monastery of the Abramites at *Constantinople. Perhaps the best-known icon is now that of Our Lady of Perpetual Succour at *Rome. See also Iconostasis and Images.

O. Wulff–M. Alpatoff, Denkmäler der Ikonenmalerei in kunstgeschichtlicher Folge (1925). I. Dirks, O.S.B., Les Saintes Icones (ed. 2, Amay-sur-Meuse, 1939). W. P. Theunissen, Ikonen. Historisch, Aesthetisch en Theologisch Belicht (1948), with bibl. L. Ouspensky–V. *Lossky, The Meaning of Icons (Boston, Mass., 1952). L. Ouspensky, Essai sur la théologie de l'icone dans l'Eglise orthodoxe (Recueil d'Études orthodoxes, ii; 1960). K. Onasch, Ikonen (Gütersloh, 1961; Eng. tr., 1963). N. P. Kondakov (Eng. tr. by E. H. Minns from larger Russian work), The Russian Icon (Oxford, 1927). P. Muratov, Les Icones russes (1928). D. T. Rice, Russian Icons (King Penguin Book, 1947). W. Felicetti-Liebenfels, Geschichte der byzantinischen Ikonenmalerei (Olten–Lausanne, 1956). K. Weitzmann and others, Ikone sa Balkana (1966; Eng. tr., 1968). C. von Schönborn, O.P., L'Icône du Christ. Fondements Théologiques (Paradosis, xxiv; 1976). L. Ouspensky in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 324–6, s.v.

ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY (from εἰκονοκλάστης, 'iconoclast', 'image-breaker'). The controversy on the veneration of *icons (q.v.) agitated the Greek Church from c. 725 to 842. At the end of the 7th and the beginning of the 8th cents. several influences hostile to the veneration of icons had made themselves felt in the E. Empire, notably the *Monophysite heresy, which minimized the human side of the Incarnation, the *Manichaean tendencies of the *Paulicians, who held that all matter was evil, and possibly also *Islam. The open outbreak of this hostility was due to the Emp. *Leo III, the Isaurian (717–41), who thought that the use of icons, which had admittedly become excessive, was the chief obstacle to the conversion of Jews and Moslems. In 726 he published an edict declaring all images idols and ordering their destruction. Very soon serious disturbances throughout the Empire followed. The patriarch *Germanus, who appealed to the Pope, was deposed in 730, and a systematic persecution unleashed, esp. against the monks, who were the most ardent defenders of the icons. At the same time St. *John of Damascus wrote his famous apologies against the iconoclasts and Pope Gregory III held two synods at Rome condemning Leo's supporters (731).

In 741 Leo was succeeded by his son Constantine V (Copronymus), who, after a quickly suppressed revolt of his brother-in-law, Artabasdus, in favour of the icons, continued his father's policy. In 753 he called the Synod of Hieria, which neither the patriarchs of *Antioch, *Jerusalem, and *Alexandria nor the Pope attended. The synod alleged that, by representing only the humanity of Christ, the icon-worshippers either divided His unity as the *Nestorians or confounded the two Natures as the *Monophysites; and it further declared that the icons of the BVM and of the saints were idols and decreed the destruction of all of them. The persecution now raged more fiercely than ever, many of the secular clergy giving way, but a great number of monks became martyrs in the cause of the icons.

Under Constantine's son, Leo IV (775–80), the persecution abated, and after his death his wife, the Empress Irene, regent for her young son Constantine, reversed the policy of her predecessors despite the iconoclastic leanings of the army. In 784 *Tarasius became Patr. of Constantinople and, in concert with Irene, opened negotiations with Pope *Hadrian I, who sent legates to the Seventh General Council which met at *Nicaea in 787. This Council completely undid the work of the Synod of Hieria, defined the degree of veneration to be paid to icons, and decreed their restoration throughout the country.

Though the decrees of the Council were officially received, Iconoclasm retained a strong following esp. in the army. In 814 the outbreak of the 'Second Iconoclastic Controversy' took place under Leo V the Armenian, a general elected Emperor by the army. Leo again began to remove icons from churches and public buildings; the Patr. *Nicephorus was deposed (815); St. *Theodore of Studios, the foremost defender of images among the monks, sent into exile; and many others imprisoned and martyred. After Leo's assassination in 820 his successor, Michael II, continued his iconoclastic policy though in a milder form, whereas his son Theophilus, who succeeded him in 829, returned to the violence of Leo, esp. after the enthronization of the iconoclast patriarch John the Grammarian in 832. The persecution ended only with Theophilus' death in 842. His widow, Theodora, like Irene, regent for her son, caused the monk Methodius to be elected patriarch in 843, and on the first Sunday of Lent a great feast was celebrated in honour of the icons, since then solemnly kept in the E. Church as the 'Feast of *Orthodoxy'.

The few repercussions which the controversy had on theology in the W. were mainly caused by the misunderstanding of certain passages from the Acts of the Second Council of Nicaea. A faulty translation of the Acts, sent to *Charlemagne by Hadrian I, together with a general dislike of the Greeks and political friction, led to a manifesto against the Council by the Frankish bishops in 790, later expanded and issued as the 'Libri Carolini' (*Caroline Books). It was reiterated by the Synod of Frankfurt in 794 which formally condemned the Second Council of Nicaea, misunderstanding it to enjoin an adoration of images equal to that due to the Divine Trinity. A similar attitude was taken up by the bishops who met at Paris in 828, who would tolerate pictures only as ornaments. Owing to the authority of the Popes, however, and the influence of theologians such as *Walafrid Strabo and *Hincmar of Reims, the Frankish bishops gradually accepted the Nicene decrees, opposition to them having virtually ceased in the 10th cent.

The Iconoclastic Controversy, more important for its practical than for its theological results, is usually considered the last step towards the great schism between E. and W. before the actual breach. The Caesaro-Papism which showed itself during the struggle encountered in this period relatively little resistance in the Greek Church, esp. among the secular clergy, while it was viewed by the Popes with growing apprehension. The unity achieved by imperial decree in 787 and again in 843 proved artificial, and with the restoration of the Empire by the Franks and the development of the temporal power of the Papacy the ground was prepared for the final separation between the independent Church of the W. and the Church of the Byzantine Empire.

K. Schwarzlose, Der Bilderstreit (1890); L. Bréhier, La Querelle des images. VIIIe–IXe siècles (1904). E. J. Martin, A History of the Iconoclastic Controversy (C.H.S. [1930]). G. Ostrogorsky, Studien zur Geschichte des byzantinischen Bilderstreites (Historische Untersuchungen, v; Breslau, 1929). A. Grabar, L'Iconoclasme byzantin: dossier archéologique (1957). P. J. Alexander, The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople (Oxford, 1958). P. Brown, 'A Dark-Age crisis: aspects of the Iconoclastic controversy' in E.H.R., lxxxviii (1973), pp. 1–34. Fliche–Martin, v (1938), pp. 431–70 (L. Bréhier) and vi (1937), pp. 107–27 and 229–46 (É. Amann), each with bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vi (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 214–302, s.v. 'Images'.

ICONOGRAPHY, Christian. The subject of Christian iconography is the pictorial or symbolical representation of Christian ideas, persons, and history. It is not a form of aesthetic criticism, but, like *archaeology, an auxiliary to historical and theological studies.

The earliest Christian art was mainly symbolical. Christ was represented by a *fish (Ichthus) or a young shepherd, a ship symbolized the Church, an anchor hope or salvation, a peacock immortality. Pictorial scenes, drawn from the Bible or the *Apocryphal literature, were also typical, not merely illustrative, e.g. Jonah's story symbolized death and resurrection.

From the time of *Constantine, Christian art could display Christianity triumphant. Syrian influence, however, brought more realism to counteract the early idealism, and from the 6th cent. onwards there are examples of Christ depicted no longer as a Greek youth but bearded and in E. dress, and the Crucifixion begins to be portrayed with pathos. The chief descriptive monuments of the period are *catacomb painting, church mosaics, and *sarcophagi. A reaction from realism set in, due perhaps to influences from further E. Byzantine churches often exhibit a planned system of stylized and didactic decoration, covering the whole interior. After the *Iconoclastic Controversy this plan was adapted more precisely to the Liturgy and stereotyped for centuries.

W. art also was predominantly didactic, though the artist was freer and his subject-matter more comprehensive. Gothic cathedrals, by their sculpture, glass, paintings, and textiles, were encyclopaedias of theology, history, hagiography, natural history (moralized, after the Bestiaries), learning (the seven arts), morality (following *Prudentius' 'Combat of Virtues and Vices'), and the trades and crafts. All activity, this indicated, is religious. While individualism had some play and not all art was didactic, art commonly conformed to a pattern determined by the Church. This was partly based on, partly explained by, the encyclopaedic writings of *Honorius of Autun, Bartholomaeus Anglicus (c. 1250), and, above all, *Vincent of Beauvais, which developed the work of *Isidore of Seville and *Rabanus Maurus. Such a cathedral as *Chartres demonstrates a highly organized scheme of decoration.

In the 14th cent. art grew less intellectual and more emotional or mystical. In the next century it became frankly realistic and picturesque. Didactic schemes were already dissolving when the Renaissance killed medieval methods. Since then there have been many experiments in both realism and symbolism, but, while religious art still abounds, it is impossible to discern any dominant tradition or system in Christian art and symbolism.

L. Bréhier, L'Art chrétien. Son développement iconographique des origines à nos jours (1918); K. Künstle, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst (2 vols., 1926–8), with bibl. G. de Jerphanion, S.J., La Voix des monuments. Notes et études d'archéologie chrétienne (1930), esp. No. 2, 'Le Développement iconographique de l'art chrétien', pp. 30–54. D. Talbot Rice, The Beginnings of Christian Art (1957). L. Réau, Iconographie de l'art chrétien (3 vols. in 6, 1955–8). A. Grabar, Christian Iconography. A Study of its Origins (1969). Gertrud Schiller, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst (3 vols., 1966–71; Eng. tr., 1971 ff.). É. Mâle, L'Art religieux du XIIe siècle en France (1922); id., L'Art religieux du XIIIe siècle en France (1898; Eng. tr., 1913); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du moyen-âge en France (1908); id., L'Art religieux de la fin du XVIe siècle, du XVIIe siècle et du XVIIIe siècle (1932); Eng. tr. of parts of these works issued as Religious Art from the Twelfth to the Eighteenth Century (1949). E. Kirschbaum, S.J., and others (edd.), Lexikon der christlichen Ikonographie (8 vols., 1968–76).

ICONOSTASIS. The screen which, in Byzantine churches, separates the sanctuary from the nave. Originally a lattice consisting of columns joined by a decorated parapet and coping, since the 14th to 15th cents. the screen has presented the form of a wall of wood or stone, covered with *icons, from which it derives its name. It is pierced by three doors, the central or Royal Door admitting to the altar, and those on the right and left respectively to the *Diaconicon and the *Prothesis.

C. Rohault de Fleury, La Messe. Études archéologiques sur ses monuments, iii (1883), pp. 105–34. K. Holl, 'Die Entstehung der Bilderwand in der griechischen Kirche' in Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, ix (1906), pp. 365–84; B. Pace, 'Nuova ipotesi sull' origine dell' iconostasio' in Byzantion, xix (1949), pp. 195–205. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 31–48, s.v. 'Iconostase'.

IDIORRHYTHMIC. A term applied to certain monasteries on Mount *Athos which, in contradistinction to the *coenobitic houses, allow considerable freedom to their monks, including the right to possess personal property.

IDIOT, The (from the Gk. ἰδιώτης, a private person, one of no special skill), the pseudonym used by a medieval spiritual writer generally identified as Raymundus Jordanus, a French Canon Regular of St. Augustine and Abbot of Selles-sur-Cher, who flourished c. 1381. A collected edition of his devotional works in Latin, which were very popular in the Middle Ages, was published in 1654 by Théophile Raynaud, S.J., who first made the identification. The word 'idiot' long retained its original meaning in English; in 1657 some writings of Dame Gertrude *More, O.S.B. (1606–33) were publd. at Paris under the title 'The Holy Practices of a Divine Lover, or, the Sainctly Idiots Devotions'.

IGNATIUS, St. (c. 35 – c. 107), Bp. of *Antioch. Ignatius describes himself as also called 'Theophoros' (Θεοφόρος, 'bearer of God', or perhaps Θεόφορος, 'borne by God'). He was probably of Syrian origin, and J. B. *Lightfoot, basing himself on a passage from his Ep. ad Romanos, believed that he was a pagan and a persecutor of Christians before his conversion. Acc. to *Origen he was the second Bp. of Antioch, the successor of St. *Peter; acc. to *Eusebius he was the third, following St. Peter's successor, Euodius, c. 69. Nothing is known of his life beyond his journey to martyrdom from Antioch to *Rome under a guard of ten soldiers. He was received en route at Smyrna with great honour by St. *Polycarp and visited by many members of neighbouring Christian communities, and wrote thence to the Churches of *Ephesus, Magnesia, and Tralles letters of encouragement, and a fourth to the Church at Rome, begging them not to deprive him of martyrdom by intervention with the pagan authorities. He was then taken to Troas, where he wrote three further letters to the Churches of *Philadelphia and Smyrna and to St. Polycarp, and thence through Macedonia and Illyria to Dyrrhachium, where he was embarked for Italy. That the martyrdom to which Ignatius looked forward in his letters actually took place is already asserted by Polycarp and Origen, the latter of whom expressly mentions Rome as its place (traditionally the *Colosseum). The statement of *John Malalas (6th cent.) that Ignatius was martyred at Antioch is wholly without warrant. There survive five different accounts of his death (Acta), none of them meriting much credence.

The high esteem in which Ignatius's letters were held is proved both by patristic quotations, e.g. in Eusebius and *Theodoret, and also by interpolations and the circulation of spurious letters under his name. A Latin version of the seven genuine but interpolated letters, together with four spurious epistles, was first publd. by J. *Faber (Stapulensis) in 1498. The genuineness of this collection (the 'Long Recension') was a matter of prolonged dispute. It was accepted as authentic in toto by older RC scholars, but rejected equally in toto esp. by anti-episcopalian Protestant divines. The whole matter appeared in a new light when J. *Ussher, who observed that Ignatian quotations in medieval English authors differed from Faber's text but agreed with those in the Fathers, deduced both that the current text was interpolated and that the original text was probably to be found in England. He subsequently discovered a Latin translation which agreed with the old quotations. His Polycarpi et Ignatii Epistolae (1644) was a work of remarkable critical genius and erudition, its only serious error being the rejection of the letter to Polycarp. In 1646 Isaak *Voss edited the corresponding Greek text which Ussher had traced to a Florentine MS. (Laur. Plut. lvii. 7). For a long time, however, many Protestant scholars continued to reject all the letters owing to their strong emphasis on episcopacy. The controversy was virtually settled in favour of the authenticity of the seven letters by J. *Pearson's Vindiciae Epistolarum S. Ignatii (1672).

In the 19th cent. the dispute arose afresh through W. *Cureton's publication (1845) of a *Syriac MS. containing a recension of only the three genuine letters to the Ephesians, to the Romans, and to Polycarp. He maintained that this 'Short Recension' was the only authentic one. Lightfoot's learned defence of the authenticity of the seven letters in his monumental edition of the Apostolic Fathers (1885) has, however, won general acceptance. He maintained further that the six apocryphal letters and the interpolations of the 'Long Recension' are by the same 4th cent. hand; but whether the forger held *Arian or *Apollinarian views is still disputed.

The authentic epistles, and esp. that to the Romans, reveal a man passionately devoted to Christ. His consuming desire for martyrdom comes out esp. in the Ep. to the Romans. In the other epistles he warns the recipients against a Judaizing heresy with *Docetic elements. He insists on the reality both of the Divinity and the Humanity of the Lord, whom he calls ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός ('our God Jesus Christ'). His Birth, Passion, and Death were not appearances but realities. The life of Christ is continued in the Eucharist, which he calls 'the bread that is the flesh of Jesus Christ, this flesh which has suffered for our sins'. The best safeguard of the unity of the Christian faith is the bishop, who is pre-eminent because he is 'as the Lord', and without whose authority neither the Eucharist nor marriage may be celebrated. The Church of Rome is referred to with special reverence as 'presiding in the region of the Romans' (ἥτις προκάθηται ἐν τόπῳ χωρίου Ῥωμαίων). There is, however, no reference to the Bp. of Rome.

Feast day: 17 Oct. in the RC Calendar (formerly 1 Feb.), some Anglican Churches, and at Antioch; 17 Dec. (his translation in the *Roman Martyrology) in the 1928 BCP; 20 Dec. in the Greek Church.

The history of Ignatian criticism, with full survey of the MS. material and modern discussions, is fully described in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, Part II (3 vols., 1885), with crit. text and Eng. tr. Gk. text and Eng. trr. also readily accessible in editions of the 'Apostolic Fathers'. Convenient Eng. tr., with notes, by J. H. Srawley (Early English Church Classics, 2 vols., London, 1900); more recent ed., with Fr. tr. and useful commentary, by P. T. Camelot, O.P. (S.C., x; 1944; ed. 2, 1951). T. *Zahn, Ignatius von Antiochien (Gotha, 1873); E. v. der Goltz, Ignatius von Antiochien als Christ und Theologe (T.U., xii, Hft. 3; 1894). H. Schlier, Religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu den Ignatiusbriefen (Beihefte zur Z.N.T.W., viii; 1929). C. C. Richardson, The Christianity of Ignatius of Antioch (New York, 1935); H. W. Bartsch, Gnostisches Gut und Gemeindetradition bei Ignatius von Antiochien (1940). Virginia Corwin, St. Ignatius and Christianity in Antioch (Yale Publications in Religion, i; 1960). M. P. Brown, The Authentic Writings of Ignatius. A Study of linguistic criteria (Durham, N.C., 1963). H. Rathke, Ignatius von Antiochien und die Paulusbriefe (T.U., xcix; 1967). B. H. *Streeter, The Primitive Church (1929), pp. 163–78. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 131–58; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 47–50. G. Bareille in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 685–713; P. T. Camelot, O.P., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1250–66, s.v. Recent study by P. Meinhold (Wiesbaden, 1979).

IGNATIUS LOYOLA, St. (1491 or 1495–1556), founder of the *Jesuits. Born of a noble family at the castle of Loyola not far south of the Pyrenees, he entered on a military career, taking service with the Duke of Nagera. A wound in the right leg which he received during the siege of Pampeluna (1521) reduced him to a prolonged state of inactivity, during which the reading of the Life of Christ and the biographies of the saints led him to change his life and decide to become a soldier of Christ. After his recovery he went to Montserrat, where he made a general confession, hung up his sword at the altar of the BVM, and exchanged clothes with a beggar. From there he went to Manresa, where he stayed a year (1522–3) in retirement, giving himself up to a life of prayer and extreme mortification. From his mystic experiences in Manresa he derived the profound spiritual insight which marks the Spiritual Exercises (q.v.), the bulk of which was probably written there. From Manresa Ignatius went first to Rome and then to *Jerusalem, subsisting on alms and trusting entirely to Divine Providence. On his return to Spain he studied at Barcelona, Alcalá, and Salamanca (1524–8), where he made a deep impression on his fellow-students.

From Salamanca Ignatius went to Paris, where he continued his studies with short interruptions for seven years (1528–35). He laid the foundations of the Society of Jesus in 1534, when he and six companions, among them St. *Francis Xavier and Bl. Peter Faber, made a vow of poverty, chastity, and of a pilgrimage to Jerusalem if possible, which was to be followed by a life devoted to apostolic labours. In 1537 they went to Italy, where Ignatius and several others were ordained priests. Their pilgrimage being prevented by a set of adverse circumstances, they offered their services to the Pope. On their way to Rome Ignatius had the famous vision of La Storta, where he saw Christ promising him to be propitious to them in the City. In 1540 the Society was solemnly sanctioned by *Paul III in the bull '*Regimini militantis Ecclesiae', and Ignatius became its first *general. His remaining years were filled with the organization of his rapidly spreading order. He drew up the constitutions of the Society between 1547 and 1550, continuing to improve them until the end of his life.

Ignatius's paramount endeavours had been the reform of the Church from within, principally by education and the more frequent use of the Sacraments, and the preaching of the Gospel to the newly discovered pagan world. He was canonized in 1622. Feast day, 31 July.

Critical edd. in Monumenta Ignatiana, Series I, S. Ignatii de Loyola . . . Epistolae et Instructiones (12 vols., Madrid, 1903–14); Series II. Exercitia Spiritualia Sancti Ignatii de Loyola (Madrid, 1919; ed. 2, Rome, 1969); Series III, Constitutiones Societatis Jesu (4 vols., Rome, 1934–48); Series IV, Scripta de Sancto Ignatio de Loyola (2 vols., Madrid, 1904–18; ed. 2, 4 vols., Rome, 1943–65, incl. as vol. 4, crit. ed. of contemporary life by P. Ribadeneira, S.J., first publ. Naples, 1572, Eng. tr., 1616). Manual ed. of works by I. Iparraguirre, S.J.–C. Delmases, S.J. (Madrid, 1963). Convenient Eng. tr. of his Letters to Women from the German of H. Rahner, S.J. (orig. publd. Freiburg, 1956; Eng. tr., 1960); also of The Constitutions of the Society of Jesus, with comm. and introd., by G. E. Ganss, S.J. (St. Louis, Mo., 1970). Modern lives by J. A. Polanco, S.J. (6 vols., Madrid, 1894–8), H. Joly ('Les Saints', 1899; Eng. tr., 1899), F. *Thompson–J. H. Pollen, S.J. (London, 1909), H. D. Sedgwick (New York, 1923), P. Van Dyke (New York and London, 1926), P. Dudon, S.J. (Paris, 1934), C. Hollis (London, 1931), Mary Purcell (Dublin, 1956) and, on the period up to 1538, by J. Brodrick, S.J., Saint Ignatius Loyola. The Pilgrim Years (1956). V. Larrañaga, S.J., San Ignacio de Loyola. Estudios sobre su vida, sus obras, su espiritualidad (Zaragoza [1956]). F. Wulf and others (edd.), Ignatius von Loyola. Seine geistliche Gestalt und sein Vermächtnis 1556–1956 (Würzburg [1956]); P. de Leturia, S.J., Estudios Ignacionos (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., x–xi; Rome, 1957). H. Rahner, S.J., Ignatius von Loyola als Mensch und Theologe (Freiburg, etc., 1964; Eng. tr. of chs. 11–16, 1968), and other works of this author. I. Iparraguirre, S.J., Orientaciones bibliográficas sobre San Ignacio de Loyola (Subsidia ad Historiam S.I., series minor, i; Rome, 1957; ed. 2, 1965); J. F. Gilmont, S.J.–P. Daman, S.J., Bibliographie ignatienne (1894–1957) (Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, xvii; 1958).

IGNATIUS, Father. The Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne (1837–1908), mission preacher. In 1860 he was ordained deacon to the title of a curacy at St. Peter's, Plymouth, under G. R. Prynne. Shortly afterwards he left Plymouth and worked for some months with the Rev. C. F. *Lowder at St. George's-in-the-East, London. He made it his chief aim to revive the *Benedictine Order in the Anglican Church, and after various abortive steps eventually acquired in 1869 a site for his monastery at Capel-y-ffin, some four miles from Llanthony. A striking preacher with great gifts of popular oratory, he carried out successful missions in many parts of England, mainly in secular buildings. He remained a deacon until 1898, when he was ordained priest by J. R. *Vilatte. On Ignatius's death, the buildings at Capel-y-ffin passed into the possession of the Anglican Benedictines at *Caldey Island.

Baroness de Bertouch, The Life of Father Ignatius, O.S.B. (1904); D. Attwater, Father Ignatius of Llanthony (1931); A. Calder-Marshall, The Enthusiast. An Enquiry into the Life, Beliefs and Character of the Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne alias Fr. Ignatius, O.S.B. (1962).

IGNORANCE, Invincible. See Invincible Ignorance.

IHS. A monogram for the name Jesus, formed by abbreviating the corresponding Greek word which in *uncials is written ΙΗΣΟΥΣ. It is found, e.g., in the Latin text of Lk. 6. 3 in the *Codex Bezae. That the second symbol, H, was really a Greek η and not a Latin h was soon forgotten, and the abbreviation 'ihs' was thus often wrongly expanded to 'Ihesus'. Other attempts to explain the three letters as initials of separate words became very common. Thus they were held to denote Iesus Hominum Salvator (i.e. 'Jesus, Saviour of Men') or In Hoc Signo [vinces] (i.e. 'in this sign [thou shalt conquer]'). In the Middle Ages the IHS was widely used among the *Franciscans and later it became popular among the *Jesuits, who sometimes interpreted it as Jesum Habemus Socium (i.e. 'We have Jesus as our companion').

F. Victorius, De Vetustate et Forma Monogrammatis . . . Nominis Jesu (Rome, 1747). L. Traube, Nomina Sacra (1907), pp. 156–9; F. J. Dölger, ΙΧΘΥΣ. Das Fischsymbol in frühchristlicher Zeit, i (R.Q., Suppl. xvii; 1910), pp. 355–61.

ILDEFONSUS, St. (c. 607–67), Abp. of Toledo. He came from a noble family, and is traditionally believed to have been a pupil of St. *Isidore of Seville. While still young, he entered the *Benedictine monastery of Agalia, nr. Toledo, and later became its abbot. As such he attended the Councils of *Toledo in 653 and 655. He was appointed Abp. of Toledo in 657. Acc. to St. Julian of Toledo, he was the author of a long list of works, but only four have survived. His 'De Virginitate S. Mariae', in praise of the BVM, towards whom he showed great devotion, was an ardent defence of the privileges of the Mother of God, directed esp. against the Spanish Jews. His 'Annotationes de Cognitione Baptismi' uses skilfully the works of older writers on the subject, esp. St. *Augustine, St. *Gregory the Great, and St. Isidore of Seville, and contains much valuable information on the discipline of *catechumens. His 'De Itinere Deserti quo Pergitur post Baptismum' completes the 'Annotationes' by a mystical application of the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness to the spiritual journey of the soul after baptism. The fourth of his extant works, 'De Viris Illustribus', is an important document of the history of the Spanish Church during the first two-thirds of the 7th cent. St. Ildefonsus was a favourite subject for medieval artists, esp. the legend of the apparition of the BVM presenting him with a chasuble. Feast day, 23 Jan.

Works ed. Card. F. de Lorenzana, Abp. of Toledo, in Sanctorum Patrum Toletanorum quotquot extant Opera, i (Madrid, 1782), pp. 94–290; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xcvi, 9–330. Crit. text of 'De Virginitate Beatae Mariae', with discussion, by V. B. García (Textos latinos de la edad media española, Madrid, 1937). Spanish tr. of Life by A. Martínez de Toledo (Clásicos castellanos, No. 134, Madrid, 1952).

Sister Athanasius Braegelmann, O.S.B., The Life and Writings of Saint Ildefonsus of Toledo (Catholic University of America Studies in Mediaeval History, New Series, iv; 1942). J. M. Cascante Dávila, Doctrina Mariana de S. Ildefonso de Toledo (Barcelona, 1958). J. Madoz, S.J., 'San Ildefonso de Toledo' in Estudios eclesiásticos, xxvi (1952), pp. 467–505. Bardenhewer, i, p. 7 f., and v, p. 388 f. (treatment inadequate). Mrs. Humphry Ward in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 223–5; G. Bareille in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 740–44.

ILLINGWORTH, JOHN RICHARDSON (1848–1915), English divine. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Jesus College in 1872, and ordained in 1875. In 1883 he became Rector of Longworth, Oxon, where he remained till his death. A philosopher rather than a theologian, who had come under the influence of the school of T. H. *Green, he applied some of the principles of Idealistic philosophy to the exposition of the Christian faith. His rectory became the centre of the 'Lux Mundi' group, and Illingworth himself contributed two essays to the volume. His books include Personality, Human and Divine (*Bampton Lectures, 1894), Divine Immanence (1898), Reason and Revelation (1902), and The Doctrine of the Trinity (1907).

The Life and Work of J. R. Illingworth, by his wife (1917).

ILLTYD, St. (450–535), Welsh saint. It is difficult to disentangle fact and legend from the records of his life; but it would seem that he was a native of Brittany who came to Britain c. 470, was converted to Christianity in 476, and founded a famous monastery, later named after him 'Llantwit' or 'Llanilltyd' (i.e. 'Church of Illtyd'; probably the modern Llantwit Major, but perhaps *Caldey), and a centre of missionary activity in Wales. A late and unhistorical tradition makes him a cousin of King Arthur. Feast day, 6 Nov.

AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), pp. 219–36, incl. text of anonymous 12th-cent. life, which is the principal source, pp. 225–34; this is also printed, with Eng. tr., in A. W. Wade-Evans, Vitae Sanctorum Britanniae et Genealogiae (Cardiff, 1944), pp. 194–233. On this life see J. S. P. Tatlock, 'The Dates of the Arthurian Saints' Legends', in Speculum, xiv (1939), pp. 345–65, esp. pp. 353–6. G. H. Doble, Saint Iltud (Cardiff, 1944); repr. in Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (ib., 1971), pp. 88–145. D. L. Thomas in D.N.B., xxviii (1891), p. 416 f., s.v.

ILLUMINATI. A name applied to several bodies of religious enthusiasts, among them:

(1) The Alumbrados (q.v.).

(2) The Rosicrucians (q.v.).

(3) A masonic sect founded in Bavaria in 1778 by Adam Weishaupt (1748–1830), who had been trained in a *Jesuit school and become a professor of *canon law at Ingolstadt. Its object was to diffuse knowledge and to stimulate humanistic ideals and brotherly fellowship among its members. Those who belonged to it took names of the ancients and called Munich 'Athens' and Vienna 'Rome'. They aimed at forming a classless society and at bringing about the 'restoration' of the patriarchal state. Repudiating the claims of all existing religious bodies, they professed themselves to be those in whom the 'illuminating' grace of Christ (hence their name; cf. Heb. 6. 4: τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας) alone resided, and organized themselves on a new and very elaborate system, which required absolute obedience (largely modelled on *Jesuit ideals) to the unknown superiors. In 1784 they were banished from Bavaria, but they continued to survive elsewhere, e.g. in France. They were also known as Perfectibilists. In quite recent times (1896, and again in 1925) they have been revived in Germany in a modified form.

ILLUMINATIVE WAY (Via illuminativa). The intermediary stage of the mystic way between the *purgative and the *unitive ways (qq.v.), also called the 'Way of Proficients'. It is held that the soul is therein cleansed from attachment to creatures and 'enlightened' (illuminated) concerning the things of the spirit.

ILLYRICUS. See Flacius, Matthias.

IMAGES. The use of any representations of men, animals, and plants whether carved or painted was prohibited in the Mosaic Law (Exod. 20. 4), by reason of the danger of idolatry. In other parts of the OT, however, images are mentioned, such as the *brazen serpent made by *Moses himself (Num. 21. 9), the *Cherubim standing over the *ark of the covenant (Exod. 25. 18–22), and the carvings in *Solomon's temple (1 Kgs. 6. 18–35). There is no mention of imagery in the NT, as at least from the time of the *Maccabees the Palestinian Jews had observed the Second Commandment rigorously. It was only when the theological significance of the Incarnation came to be more fully grasped, and what was involved in the fact that God had become visible by taking human nature better understood, that, to many, there seemed to be no further obstacle to the use of images and other products of the artistic gifts of mankind in the service of the true religion.

The paintings of the Catacombs, some of which date from the late 2nd cent., are the earliest Christian pictures, and after the period of the *Persecutions sacred images came to play an increasing part in the cultus, esp. in the E., where they received a special veneration and called forth the *Iconoclastic Controversy (q.v.) of the 8th and 9th cents. After the final settlement in favour of *icons, which remain the only form of representation legitimate in the Greek Church, they have continued to be an integral element of Orthodox religion, whether public or private, in which they are given a much more important place than in the W. Church.

In the West the veneration of images, which at an early age began to comprise also statues, made much slower progress. It was given a doctrinal basis by the Schoolmen, esp. St. *Thomas Aquinas, who developed its theoretical justification on the lines laid down by the E. theologians, applying St. *Basil's principle that the honour paid to the image passes on to its prototype, a principle which had already been accepted by the Second Council of *Nicaea (787).

In the 16th cent. the abuses which had grown up around the use of images in the later Middle Ages led the practice to be violently opposed by the majority of the Reformers, esp. H. *Zwingli and J. *Calvin, who were followed by the *Puritans. The *Lutherans were more tolerant of the practice, and to this day the crucifix is retained in the Lutheran churches. The Anglican Article XXII confines itself to condemning the 'Romish doctrine' on the subject. The Council of *Trent defined that due honour should be paid to images of the Lord, the BVM, and the other saints, on the ground not of any virtue inherent in the image, but because in it the person represented is venerated. This veneration is allowed only to images of actual human persons, not to such symbolical representations as that of God the Father as a venerable old man or the Holy Ghost as a dove, and similar devices.

St. Thomas Aquinas, In Sent., lib. III, dist. ix, a. 2, qu. 2; id., S. Theol., III, i, qu. xxv, a. 3. The relevant clauses from the acts of the Second Council of Nicaea are conveniently repr. with Lat. tr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 200–202 (Nos. 600–603). The Tridentine ruling promulgated in sess. xxv, sect. 'De Invocatione, Veneratione et Reliquiis Sanctorum et Sacris Imaginibus', is repr. ib., p. 419 f. (Nos. 1821–5). E. Bevan, Holy Images (*Gifford Lectures for 1933; 1940). A. *Fortescue in C.E., vii (1910), pp. 664–72, s.v., with bibl.; V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 766–84, s.v., with full reff. to classical lit. See also bibl. to Iconoclastic Controversy and to Iconography.

IMAGO DEI (Lat., 'image of God'), in which, acc. to Gen. 1. 26 f. and elsewhere, man was created. Acc. to Catholic theologians this image was obscured, but not lost, in the *Fall, in contrast to the similitudo Dei, which was destroyed by *Original Sin but is restored by *Baptism. Many theories have been advanced to explain in what the Imago consists. Several Gk. Fathers, including St. *Gregory of Nyssa, the author of the 'Spiritual Homilies' attributed to *Macarius of Egypt, and St. *John of Damascus, identify it with human free-will; others seek it in man's superiority to the rest of creation, or in a quality of his soul such as simplicity and immortality, or in his reason. Acc. to St. *Augustine, the Image of the Trinity is to be found in the intellectual nature of the soul and its three powers, Memory (the Father), Intellect (the Son) and Will (the Holy Ghost). In the mystical theology of the E. as well as of the W. Church the Imago has played an important part as the point in which the soul is capax Dei and hence can enter into union with God.

In Protestant theology the vitiating effect of the Fall on the Imago Dei has been strongly emphasized. K. *Barth and E. *Brunner both stress this in different ways, though the latter accuses Barth of exaggerating the principle of sola gratia to the extent of destroying the Imago completely, and with it all moral responsibility. Acc. to Brunner there is a 'formal image', that which constitutes man as human and responsible and is the 'point of contact' (Anknüpfungspunkt) for grace, which was not destroyed by the Fall, and the 'material image', which has been lost. Barth, on the other hand, rejects the formal image, and holds man to be utterly corrupted by sin and incapable of discovering any kind of truth about God or himself apart from Revelation.

E. Brunner, Der Mittler (1927; Eng. trans., 1934); id., Natur und Gnade (1934); K. Barth, Nein! (1934).

'IMITATION OF CHRIST', The. The purpose of this famous manual of spiritual devotion is to instruct the Christian how to seek perfection by following Christ as his model. The book is divided into four parts. The first two contain general counsel for the spiritual life, the third deals with the interior dispositions of the soul, and the fourth with the sacrament of the Holy Communion. It was first put into circulation (anon.) in 1418, and has traditionally been assigned to *Thomas à Kempis (c. 1380–1471). Indeed a MS. still exists at Brussels (Bibl. Roy., 5855–61) with his signature. Attempts have been made since the 17th cent. to assign it to an earlier writer, among those suggested being J. *Gerson, St. *Bonaventure, and *Innocent III; but the grounds for overthrowing the traditional ascription have failed to win general assent.

Facsimile reprod. of the edito princeps, which was printed at Augsburg 1471–2, ed. with introd. by W. J. Knox-Little (London, 1893). Crit. ed. by C. Hirsche (Berlin, 1874); also ed., with important introd., among the works of Thomas à Kempis by M. J. Pohl, vol. ii (Freiburg i.Br., 1904). First Eng. tr. (mid 15th cent.) ed. J. K. Ingram (E.E.T.S., extra series, lxiii; 1892); modern ed. of Eng. tr. made by R. Whitford c. 1530 by E. J. Klein with full introd. and notes prepared for E.E.T.S. (New York and London, 1941). There have been a large number of Eng. trr., including that with introd. by J. *Wesley (London 1735); convenient trr. by C. *Bigg ('The Library of Devotion'; 1898, with useful introd., pp. 1–42), by A. Hyma (New York, 1927), L. Sherley-Price (Penguin Classics, 1952) and R. A. *Knox–M. Oakley (London [1959]). Modern discussions on the authorship by C. Hirsche (2 vols., Berlin, 1873–83), S. Kettlewell (London, 1877), O. A. Spitzen (Utrecht, 1881), L. A. Wheatley (London, 1891), F. R. Cruise (ib., 1896), J. E. G. de Montmorency (ib. 1906), E. F. Jacob in the Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxii (1938), pp. 493–509, J. Huijben–P. Debongnie, C.SS.R. (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xxx; 1957), and L. M. J. Delaissé (Publications de Scriptorium, ii; 1956), all attributing it to Thomas à Kempis (as do most edd. of the work). G. Bonet-Maury (Paris, 1878), K. C. L. M. De Beer (Brussels-Nijmegen, 1938), J. van Ginneken, S.J. (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1940–41), J. Tiecke (Nijmegen, 1941), and F. Kern (Olten, 1947) all attribute the work to G. *Groote, mainly on the basis of certain 'pre-Kemptistes' texts, ed. by J. van Ginneken, op. cit. The attribution to a certain John Gersen of Canabaco, a Benedictine Abbot of Vercelli, suggested by the discovery by B. Rossignoli, S.J., in 1605, of a MS. at Arona describing it as the work of 'Abbatis Johannis Gersen', was accepted by J. *Mabillon and, though unlikely, has been defended in modern times by P. E. Puyol (2 vols., Paris, 1889–1900) and P. Bonardi, C.P.–T. Lupo, S.D.B. (2 vols., Turin, 1964). The theory of the authorship of J. C. de Gerson has been championed by D. G. Barron, Jean Charlier de Gerson. The author of the De Imitatione Christi (1936), who gives a full discussion of the classic attempts at assigning the authorship. P. E. Puyol, Descriptions bibliographiques des manuscrits et des principales éditions du livre De Imitatione Christi (1898). See also works cited under Devotio Moderna and Thomas à Kempis.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION OF THE BVM. The dogma that 'from the first moment of her conception the Blessed Virgin Mary was, by the singular grace and privilege of Almighty God, and in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, Saviour of mankind, kept free from all stain of original sin' (Bull '*Ineffabilis Deus' of *Pius IX, 8 Dec. 1854). The belief has had a long and varied history, largely bound up with the observance of a feast of the Conception of the BVM. Biblical support has been found for the doctrine in Gen. 3. 15 and Lk. 1. 28. The argument from tradition is taken from the teaching of the Fathers, who as early as *Justin Martyr and *Irenaeus regarded Mary as the 'new Eve' corresponding to Christ as the 'new Adam'. In the East, where *Andrew of Crete and *John of Damascus, without going into theological details, had extolled the perfect sinlessness of Mary as implicit in the title '*Theotokos', the feast of her Conception was known from the 7th cent., and its observance spread to the West, where it is attested for Naples and probably *Ireland in the 9th, and for England in the first half of the 11th cent. On its introduction into France (c. 1130–40) St. *Bernard opposed it and a controversy went on for several centuries. Most of the great schoolmen, incl. St. *Albert, St. *Bonaventure, and St. *Thomas Aquinas, declared against the belief on the grounds that in every natural conception the stain of original sin is transmitted and that, as Mary was conceived in the natural way, she was not exempt from this law. In opposition to the Paris theologians the contrary opinion was defended by *Duns Scotus at Oxford and later in Paris, and in his wake the *Franciscans became its proponents as the *Dominicans, following St. Thomas, its opponents. The 15th cent. brought decisive developments. The Council of *Basle affirmed (1439) the belief as a pious opinion in accordance with Catholic faith, reason, and Scripture; ten years later the *Sorbonne required an oath of all its candidates to defend it, and other universities followed. In 1476 Sixtus IV approved the feast with its own Mass and Office, and in 1708 *Clement XI extended it to the Universal Church and even imposed its observance as a *Feast of Obligation. The Council of *Trent had explicitly declared that its decree on original sin did not include the BVM, and from the 16th cent. belief in the Immaculate Conception became general and was defended not only by the Franciscans but also by the *Carmelites, by many Dominicans, and esp. by the *Jesuits. Of this development the definition of 1854 was the natural result. The Feast of the Immaculate Conception is kept on 8 Dec.

C. Passaglia, S.J., De Immaculato Deiparae Semper Virginis Conceptu Commentarius (3 parts, Rome, 1854–5); A. Ballerini, S.J., Sylloge Monumentorum ad Mysterium Conceptionis Immaculatae Virginis Deiparae Illustrandum (2 vols., Rome, 1854–6). W. B. *Ullathorne, The Immaculate Conception of the Mother of God (1855). M. Jugie, A.A., L'Immaculée Conception dans l'Écriture sainte et dans la tradition orientale (Rome, 1952). E. D. O'Connor (ed.), The Dogma of the Immaculate Conception (Notre Dame, Indiana, 1958). E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. x ('On the Origins of the Feast of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary'). A. W. Burridge, *White Father, 'L'Immaculée Conception dans la théologie de l'Angleterre médiévale' in R.H.E., xxxii (1936), pp. 570–97; F. M. Mildner, O.S.M., 'The Oxford Theologians of the Thirteenth Century and the Immaculate Conception' in Marianum, ii (1940), pp. 284–306; I. Brady, O.F.M., 'The Development of the Doctrine on the Immaculate Conception in the Fourteenth Century after Aureoli' in Franciscan Studies, xv (1955), pp. 175–202. H. S. Box in E. L. Mascall–H. S. Box (edd.), The Blessed Virgin Mary (1963), pp. 77–88. X. Le Bachelet in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 845–1218, s.v. 'Immaculée Conception', with bibl.; P. Bonnetain, P.S.S., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. iv (1949), cols. 233–98, s.v. 'Immaculée Conception', with bibl.

IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY. See Sacred Heart of Mary.

IMMANENCE, Divine. The omnipresence of God in His universe. The doctrine is a necessary constituent of the Christian conception of God, but, when held without the parallel doctrine of Divine transcendence, it is commonly indistinguishable from *pantheism (q.v.).

IMMANUEL, or EMMANUEL (Heb. עִמָּנוּאֵל, 'With us [is] God'). In the OT the word is used only in Is. 7. 14 and 8. 8. There are several interpretations. The prophet may here have meant by the expression (1) Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz; or (2) a son of his own; or (3) the *Messiah. It has also been suggested that no individual is referred to, but only future Divine deliverance. In Mt. 1. 23 the prophecy is interpreted with reference to the Birth of Jesus Christ.

Besides Commentaries on Is. and Matt., see A. S. *Peake in D.C.G., i (1906), pp. 782–4, s.v., with bibl.; P. Cruveilhier in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., ii (1934), cols. 1041–9, s.v. 'Emmanuel'.

IMMERSION. A method of *baptism, employed at least from the 2nd cent., whereby part of the candidate's body was submerged in the baptismal water which was poured over the remainder. The rite is still found in the E. Church. In the W. it began to be replaced from c. the 8th cent. by the method of *affusion, though instances are still found as late as the 16th cent.; it is still permitted in the RC Church. The term is occasionally loosely used to include *submersion, from which it is strictly to be distinguished.

IMMOLATION (Lat. immolatio, lit. 'the sprinkling of a sacrificial victim with meal' as required by the pagan ritual), an act of sacrificial offering. In early Christian usage the word was applied esp. to the actual slaughter of the victim, in the *Vulgate being often interchangeable with mactatio ('slaying'). In modern Eucharistic theology it has occupied an important place in view of the various doctrines held of the Immolation in the Mass, esp. since the publication of M. *de la Taille's Mysterium Fidei (1921).

IMMORTALITY. Though in no sense a specifically Christian doctrine, the hope of immortality is an integral element in Christian belief, where it receives emphatic insistence and a characteristic shape. In pre-Christian times, the Greeks esp. developed a reasoned doctrine on the subject. The rationality of the human intellect seemed to imply an essential kinship of the soul with the principles of reason, so that it partook of their eternity. From this kinship *Plato inferred the existence of the soul before birth as well as its survival of death and saw in the process of learning the reminiscence (ἀνάμνησις) of knowledge possessed in a previous life. The striving of the virtuous man after the eternally valid principles of morality also pointed to the same belief. Plato and other Greeks insisted on the limitations which matter imposed on the soul. The body was an impediment, even a prison-house, from which death brought to the soul release into a fuller existence.

Such philosophical conceptions of immortality have commonly been confined to the few. In early times Hebrew thought about the next world hardly exceeded the conception of a very shadowy existence in *Sheol (q.v.). In later pre-Christian Judaism a greater sense of the reality of the future life developed, partly through reflection on the problem of suffering, partly from the ardent desire for abiding communion with God, partly through the recasting of the Messianic expectation. In this way the Jewish hope was given a fundamentally religious colouring, which looked forward to the Christian teaching on the next life. It also became increasingly bound up with belief in the resurrection of the body, esp. in the *Apocalyptic writers. Outside Palestine later Judaism borrowed extensively from Greek thought; in the Book of *Wisdom, e.g., the doctrine of immortality has a strong Platonic bent.

The essential shape which the doctrine assumed in Christianity arose from the fact of Christ's Resurrection. Man's highest destiny was more than the survival of an immortal soul. It was a life of abiding union with the risen Christ which reached its completion only by the reunion of body and soul. The teaching of St. *Paul, embodied in 1 Cor. 15 and elsewhere, admirably expresses the essence of the Christian belief. Consequently, in Christian philosophy the defence of immortality after the manner of the Greek philosophers, i.e. apart from the resurrection, has always been an argumentum ad hominem.

The Fathers interpret the hope of immortality in close connexion with the redemptive work of Christ. The *Fall of *Adam had brought death and it was through the *Second Adam that life was restored (*Irenaeus, *Athanasius, *Gregory of Nyssa). Most of the Fathers and the earlier Scholastics, however, were liable under Platonist influences to consider the relation of the soul to the body as extrinsic; and it was not until the 13th cent. that a fully elaborated defence of the specifically Christian doctrine appeared. Then the acceptance of the *Aristotelian tenet that the soul was the 'form' of the body gave philosophical justification for the beliefs that a disembodied soul was no true being and that the resurrection of the body was necessary for a full human life in the world to come.

The Scholastic arguments for the future life have been taken over since the later Middle Ages into popular apologetics. They were repeated, without substantial additions, by professional philosophers down to the end of the 18th cent. In *Descartes, with his sharp separation of mind and matter, they reappeared in a Platonic form. In G. W. *Leibniz they received a new emphasis through his belief that the human soul was the primary monad in man. The famous onslaught on the traditional arguments made by I. *Kant rested on his view of the limits of metaphysics. As the structure of the soul was outside the range of possible experience, it was beyond the competence of the 'theoretical reason' to establish its immortality or the contrary. Nevertheless Kant, who had no doubt about the fact of the future life, maintained that the soul's immortality could be established on the ground of moral experience, i.e. through the 'practical reason'. The abiding character of the moral law and the manifest injustices in this present life were a sure index that there was a purer and fuller life in which these injustices would be remedied. Since Kant's time philosophers have increasingly stressed the moral aspects of the problem of eternal life, and it has been esp. on these lines that immortality has been defended by such thinkers as W. R. Sorley, A. S. Pringle-*Pattison and C. C. J. *Webb. See also Conditional Immortality; Resurrection of the Dead.

J. *Martineau, A Study of Religion (2 vols., 1888); R. H. *Charles, Eschatology (1899; ed. 2, 1913); F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life. A Study of its Implications and Applications (1912); W. O. E. Oesterley, Immortality and the Unseen World (1921); A. S. Pringle-Pattison, The Idea of Immortality (1922); J. Baillie, And the Life Everlasting (1934); A. E. *Taylor, The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938).

IMPANATION. A term applied to certain doctrines of the *Eucharist. The first known occurrence of the word is in Guitmund of Aversa (d. c. 1090), who says that while the followers of *Berengar all hold that in the Eucharist the Bread and the Wine are not essentially changed, some, poss. incl. Berengar himself, think that the Body and Blood of the Lord are 'truly present, but hidden, in such a way that they can in a certain manner be received, that is to say, that they are impanated' (revera sed latenter contineri, et ut sumi possint quodammodo, ut ita dixerim, impanari, J. P. *Migne, PL, cxlix, 1430 D). The reason why this word was used is indicated by a passage in Alger of Liège (d. 1131) where certain unnamed heretics are stated to assert that 'Christ is in person impanated in the bread just as God was in person incarnate in human flesh' (ita personaliter in pane impanatum Christum, sicut in carne humana personaliter incarnatum Deum, id., PL, clxxx, 754 B). In the later Middle Ages, and esp. during and after the Reformation, the term was applied to various Eucharistic doctrines which endeavoured to safeguard a belief in the *Real Presence while denying the destruction of the substance of the natural elements.

IMPASSIBILITY OF GOD, The. There are three respects in which orthodox theology has traditionally denied God's subjection to 'passibility', namely (1) external passibility or the capacity to be acted upon from without, (2) internal passibility or the capacity for changing the emotions from within, and (3) sensational passibility or the liability to feelings of pleasure and pain caused by the action of another being. The doctrine was a regular tenet of philosophical theology among the Greeks, and its foundation in Christian sources is probably due to direct Greek influences. The human and Divine natures of Christ were often distinguished (e.g. at *Chalcedon, 451) as passible and impassible. On the other hand, Hebrew religion, esp. in its early stages, freely ascribed emotions to God.

In Christianity there is an acute tension between the Greek and the Hebrew conceptions. On the one side there is the immutability, perfection, and all-sufficiency of God which would seem to exclude all passion, and this has been the basis of the traditional emphasis among theologians. But on the other side there is the central Christian conviction that God in His essence is love, that His nature is revealed in the Incarnate Christ and not least in His Passion, and that He 'sympathizes' with His creatures. Recognition of this second aspect has led some modern theologians to doubt whether it is legitimate to speak unreservedly of God's impassibility. Among the earliest writers to challenge the traditional view was James Hinton (The Mystery of Pain, 1866). In the present century the same view has been upheld partly on the purely theological ground of belief in a limited God (H. G. Wells, W. *Temple, W. H. Moberly), partly to give meaning to the tragic sufferings esp. of war (G. A. *Studdert-Kennedy). Nevertheless the traditional view has had its staunch defenders, e.g. F. *von Hügel (on the ground that God is 'Unmixed Joy, Entire Delectation') and J. K. Mozley. Perhaps the problem is akin to that of the admitted coexistence of justice and mercy in God, and truth lies in the recognition that both aspects must be preserved in a way that it is beyond the competence of human reason to exhibit.

F. von Hügel, Essays and Addresses, Second Series (1926), ch. vii; J. K. Mozley, The Impassibility of God (1926); B. R. Brasnett, The Suffering of the Impassible God (1928).

IMPEDIMENT. In canon law, an obstacle, such as *consanguinity or *clandestinity, standing in the way of a properly constituted marriage. In RC canon law, impediments may be either 'impedient' or 'diriment'. An impedient impediment prohibits a marriage, but does not invalidate it, if it is contracted despite the impediment (CIC, can. 1036). A diriment impediment invalidates such a marriage. This latter type of impediment may be either 'irremovable' (e.g. close blood-relationship or the insanity of either party at the time of marriage) or 'removable' by *dispensation, e.g. marriage with a deceased wife's sister. When a diriment impediment is removed by a post factum dispensation, the marriage is normally validated only from the moment at which the dispensation is granted. Canon law (but not English statutory law), however, provides for retrospective validation by the process termed sanatio in radice* (q.v.). See also Diriment Impediment.

IMPOSITION OF HANDS. See Hands, Imposition of.

IMPRECATORY PSALMS, The. A term apparently first used by W. Robertson *Smith (1881) for the Psalms which, in whole or in part, invoke the Divine vengeance (e.g. Pss. 58, 68. 21–3, 69. 23–9, 109. 5–19, 137. 7–9). The proposed revision of the BCP in 1928 provided for the omission from public recitation of such portions of the Psalter as were considered incompatible with the spirit of Christianity.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat., 'let it be printed'). The certification that a book has been passed for publication by the appropriate authority.

(1) In England the origin of the licensing laws lies in the ordinances issued by the Star Chamber in 1586 and 1637; the latter provided an elaborate system of licensing which was in substance enacted after the Restoration. Acc. to the Licensing Act of 1662 (14 Car. II, c. xxxiii) prohibiting the printing or importing of books contrary to the Christian faith or the doctrine and discipline of the C of E, or tending to the scandal of the government, all books were to be entered at the Stationers' Hall and licensed according to their subject by the Lord Chancellor, the Earl Marshal, one of the principal Secretaries of State, or the Abp. of Canterbury or the Bp. of London. Such licence was known as the imprimatur. The Act remained in force until 1679, was renewed in 1685 and expired in 1695.

(2) In the RC Church certification by a 'censor' normally appointed by the Bishop of the diocese is required before writings on theological or moral subjects are published. When it has been obtained the word 'imprimatur' is printed at the beginning or end of the work together with the censor's name. Many religious orders require in addition the approval of their own authorities which is commonly attested by the additional words 'Imprimi potest' ('It may be printed').

IMPROPERIA. See Reproaches.

IMPROPRIATION. The assignment or annexation of an ecclesiastical benefice to a lay proprietor or corporation. It has come to be distinguished from 'appropriation', which was used of benefices assigned to a monastic house. When at the *Dissolution many appropriated monastic benefices passed into the hands of '*lay rectors' (q.v.), it became necessary for such rectors to appoint *perpetual curates (q.v.) to execute the spiritual duties of impropriated benefices.

IMPUTATION (from Lat. imputare, Gk. λογίζεσθαι). In theology the ascription to a person, by deliberate substitution, of the righteousness or guilt of another. The idea plays an important part in the *Lutheran doctrine of *Justification by Faith, which asserts that a man is formally justified by the imputation of the obedience and righteousness of Christ, without becoming possessed of any personal righteousness of his own. By a legal fiction God is thus held to regard the sinner's misdeeds as covered by the imputation of the sanctity of Christ. Support for this doctrine is found in certain passages of St. *Paul (notably Rom. 3. 21–30, 5. 1 f.; Gal. 3. 21 f.) and also in St. *Augustine. It is opposed both to the traditional Catholic teaching, acc. to which the merits of Christ are not imputed but imparted to man and produce a real change from the state of sin to the state of grace, and to the doctrine of Liberal theologians to the effect that our highest vocation consists in the following of Christ, who is our supreme example.

IN COENA DOMINI (Lat., 'On the Lord's Supper'). A series of excommunications of specified offenders against faith and morals which was issued regularly in the form of a Papal bull at Rome. In later times publication was confined to *Maundy Thursday (hence its name), but originally it was read also on *Ascension Day and the feast of the Chair of St. Peter (18 Jan.); and from the 15th cent. onwards it was also read outside Rome. The practice, which dates from at least the time of *Honorius III (1216–27), was constantly attacked by the civil authorities, who objected to its exalted claims for the Papacy, and in 1522 M. *Luther wrote a tirade against it (Die Bulle vom Abendfressen des allerheiligsten Herrn). The issue of the bull was suspended by *Clement XIV in 1773 and the practice finally abrogated by *Pius IX's bull 'Apostolicae Sedis' (12 Oct. 1869), which incorporated many of its censures. Some of these found their way into the 1917 *Codex Iuris Canonici.

The text of the bull issued by Pope Urban VIII 'in die Coenae Domini' 1627, after which its form remained practically unchanged until its abrogation, is pr. in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, xiii (Turin, 1868), pp. 530–7; principal clauses repr. in Mirbt, pp. 369–71 (No. 513), with reff. to other lit. The text of 'Apostolicae Sedis' is pr. in the Acta Sanctae Sedis, v (1869), pp. 287–312, with notes and reff.; also in the Acta Pii IX, I, v (Rome [1871]), pp. 55–72. J. F. Le Bret, Pragmatische Geschichte der soberufenen Bulla Coena Domini (Ulm, 1769). E. Göller, Die päpstliche Pönitentiarie von ihrem Ursprung bis zu ihrer Umgestaltung unter Pius V, i (pt. 1; Bibliothek des Kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, iii; 1907), pp. 242–76, and ii (pt. 1; ib., vii; 1911), pp. 190–208. K. Pfaff, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Abendmahlsbulle vom 16. bis 18. Jahrhundert' in R.Q., xxxviii (1930), pp. 23–76. G. Friedberg in P.R.E. (ed. 3), iii (1897), p. 535 f., s.v. 'Bulla in Coena Domini'; J. Prior in C.E., vii (1910), p. 717 f., s.v.

IN COMMENDAM. See Commendam.

IN HOC SIGNO VINCES (Lat., 'by this sign thou shalt conquer'). Acc. to tradition, the words which the Emp. *Constantine saw inscribed across the sun (312). They are first mentioned in *Eusebius' Life of Constantine (i. 28), where they have the form 'by this, conquer' (τούτῳ νίκα).

INCARDINATION (Lat. cardo, 'hinge'; hence incardinore, 'to hang on a hinge'). In W. canon law, the permanent enlistment of a cleric under the jurisdiction of a new ordinary. From early times (cf. *Chalcedon, can. 6), all ordinands were ordered to be subject to an ecclesiastical superior; and the primitive rule (*Ap. Can. 15; *Nicaea, can. 16; *Antioch, can. 3; Chalcedon, can. 5) bound a cleric for life to the diocese in which he had been ordained. The process of incardination, with its correlative, *excardination (q.v.), was designed to avoid the inconveniences of the latter rule, while upholding its general principle. In the RC Church such transferences are permitted only for some 'just cause' and always subject to strict regulation. RC legislation was incorporated in CIC, cans. 111–17, but since the Second *Vatican Council has been somewhat modified. A priest working with due leave in another diocese is automatically incardinated into it if, after five years, he notifies both its Ordinary and his own that such is his desire and neither of them objects.

J. T. McBride, Incardination and Excardination of Seculars. An historical synopsis and commentary (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, cxlv; 1941). R. Naz in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1293–6, s.v.

INCARNATION, The. The Christian doctrine of the Incarnation affirms that the eternal Son of God took human flesh from His human mother and that the historical Christ is at once fully God and fully man. It is opposed to all theories of a mere theophany or transitory appearance of God in human form, frequently met with in other religions. By contrast, it asserts an abiding union in the Person of Christ of Godhead and Manhood without the integrity or permanence of either being impaired. It also assigns the beginnings of this union to a definite and known date in human history.

The doctrine, which took classical shape under the influence of the controversies of the 4th–5th cents. (for history, see Christology), was formally defined at the Council of *Chalcedon of 451 (q.v.). It was largely moulded by the diversity of tradition in the schools of *Antioch and *Alexandria, the one stressing esp. the human aspects of the Incarnate Christ, the other, under the influence of a *Platonizing philosophy, esp. His Divinity. By its emphasis on the complete manhood of the Incarnate Christ, the Antiochene theology sometimes tended to approximate Incarnation to Inspiration. In Alexandrine circles, on the other hand, insistence on the full continuity between the Divinity of Christ and the Second Person of the Trinity could lead in careless hands to a view of the Incarnation approximating to a theophany. It was these two opposite tendencies which the Chalcedonian formula sought to hold in proper balance.

Yet the Definition was scarcely a solution; it only determined the limits to orthodoxy. Within these limits further refinements were added in the later Patristic and Medieval periods. Orthodox theologians held that the duality of natures entailed a duality of wills. They also emphasized that the Incarnation was an act of the whole Godhead, not of one Person acting independently. In the Middle Ages a much disputed (but never formally settled) matter was whether the Incarnation would have taken place had the Fall not occurred: while *Thomist theologians identified themselves with the belief that it was contingent on *Adam's transgression, *Scotists maintained the opposing doctrine. But in substance the Chalcedonian teaching has been accepted by Christian theologians of all schools down to modern times. It has further provided the dogmatic basis for the theology of Grace and of the Sacraments ('the extension of the Incarnation', a phrase popularized by C. *Gore). On this last ground appeal was made, in Patristic times, to Eucharistic belief in confirmation of Christological doctrines. In modern times, the application of the historical method of study to the Gospels has raised anew the question of the limits of the Lord's knowledge and its bearing on belief in His Divinity. In this connexion various doctrines of *kenosis have been put forward.

In a wider setting the Incarnation is a special exemplification of the general problem of the relation of Time and Eternity, of Finitude and Infinity. More recently the doctrine has been revalued in terms of philosophy. The post-Kantian Idealists saw in it the religious expression of the principle of immanence, i.e. the essential relatedness of man and God; and with this immanental re-interpretation the liberalizing movement in theology of the later 19th and early 20th cents. was in sympathy (see Foundations). Among the more orthodox, the same tendency was reflected in a theological emphasis on the significance of culture and civilization in the purposes of God (R. W. *Church, Christian Socialism). In both these schools stress was laid on the Incarnation rather than the Atonement as the fundamental Christian verity (Lux Mundi). Other modern theologians, under Kantian influence distrustful of metaphysics, have sought to interpret the Incarnation in terms of morality and seen the essence of the Lord's Divinity in the complete conformity of His human Will with that of God. More recently, partly under the impact of catastrophic external events, the immanental revaluation of the doctrine popular at the beginning of the present century has been generally abandoned, and the traditional conception of transcendence reaffirmed. Catholic theology, with the help of the doctrine of *analogy, has stressed the essential distinctness of the Lord's divine and human natures, while Neo-Protestant theology, under the influence esp. of K. *Barth and his school, has sometimes been so emphatic in its denial of immanence as almost to imperil belief in a real Incarnation altogether.

Useful collection of Patristic passages ed. F. Diekamp, Doctrina Patrum de Incarnatione Verbi. Ein griechisches Florilegium aus der Wende des siebenten und achten Jahrhunderts (Münster, 1907). In addition to the items on the history and development of the doctrine cited under Christology, the following works may be mentioned: modern RC treatises on the Theology of the Incarnation include those of F. Stentrup, S.J. (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1882–9), J. B. *Franzelin (Turin, 1870), and L. Billot (Rome, 1892). H. P. *Liddon, The Divinity of Christ (*Bampton Lectures for 1866; 1867);

A. B. *Bruce, The Humiliation of Christ (Cunningham Lectures for 1875; 1876); C. Gore, The Incarnation of the Son of God (Bampton Lectures for 1891; 1891); A. M. *Fairbairn, The Place of Christ in Modern Theology (1893); C. Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895); P. T. *Forsyth, The Person and Place of Jesus Christ (1909); W. *Sanday, Christologies, Ancient and Modern (1910); H. R. *Mackintosh, The Doctrine of the Person of Jesus Christ (1912); J. K. Mozley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1936); W. R. Matthews, The Problem of Christ in the Twentieth Century. An Essay on the Incarnation (Maurice Lectures, 1949; 1950); G. S. Hendry, The Gospel of the Incarnation (Philadelphia, 1958; London, 1959); W. N. Pittenger, The Word Incarnate. A Study of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ (1959); T. F. Torrance, Space, Time and Incarnation (1969). W. D. Mackenzie in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 505–51, esp. 539–51, s.v. 'Jesus Christ'; A. Michel in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1445–1539, s.v. For studies on the historical Christ, see under Jesus Christ.

INCENSE. Incense is used in many religious rites, the smoke being considered symbolical of prayer. It was used in the worship of the Jewish *Temple, at least in later times, while Rev. 8. 3–5 has been held to imply that it was used in sub-Apostolic Christian worship. There is, however, no clear evidence of its Christian use until c. A.D. 500. Censers or *thuribles may at first have been fixed, both in the E. and W., and the portable thurible have originated, at least in the W., in imitation of that carried before Roman magistrates. The incensing of the altar, church, people, &c., is first recorded in the 9th cent. In the W. incense was long used only at solemn sung services, though since 1969 it is permitted at any Eucharistic service; in the E. it is employed much more frequently than in the W.

The use of incense appears occasionally in the C of E between the 16th and 19th cents., but it only became common in the ceremonial revival which followed the *Oxford Movement. It has been argued that it is required by the *Ornaments Rubric, though Abps. F. *Temple and W. D. Maclagan, in the Lambeth Opinion of 1899, gave it as their personal belief that it was not allowed.

The standard work on the subject is E. G. C. F. Atchley, A History of the Use of Incense in Divine Worship (*Alcuin Club Collections, xiii; 1909). The Case for Incense submitted to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury on behalf of the Rev. H. Westall on Monday, May 8, 1899, together with a legal argument and Appendices of the Experts (London, 1899; includes appendices by W. H. *Frere, W. J. Birkbeck, H. R. Percival, D. *Stone, E. Geldart, T. A. *Lacey, and W. H. St. J. Hope). P. Connolly, 'The Use of Incense in the Roman Liturgy' in E.L., xliii (1929), pp. 171–8. On the use of incense in Biblical times, E. Levesque in Dict. Bibl., ii (1899), cols. 1768–77, s.v. 'Encens'; on its use in the early Church, E. Fehrenbach in D.A.C.L., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 2–21, s.v. 'Encens'. M. F. Bond in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3, 1948), pp. 302–4, s.v.

INCORPORATED CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY, The. See Church Building Society, The.

INCUBATION. The term is used of the practice of sleeping in churches or their precincts in expectation of visions, revelations, and healing from disease. Of pagan origin, the custom was introduced into Christianity after the fall of paganism. Certain saints at definite places were believed in particular to perform the healing miracles formerly attributed to Asclepius, notably St. *Michael in the church of Anaplous near *Constantinople, Sts. *Cosmas and Damian (who had been physicians in their lifetime) also at Constantinople, St. *Andrew at Patras, and the BVM at Athens and in *Notre-Dame de Paris. The practice and the beliefs associated with it are not wholly extinct.

L. Deubner, De Incubatione (Teubner, 1900). Mary Hamilton, Incubation, or the Cure of Disease in Pagan Temples and Christian Churches (St. Andrews, 1906). R. Herzog, Die Wunderheilungen von Epidauros (Philologus, Suppl.band xxii, Hft. 3; 1931). J. Gessler, 'Notes sur l'incubation et ses survivances' in Le Muséon, lix (1946), pp. 661–70. G. G. Dawson, Healing Pagan and Christian (1935). L. H. Gray in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), p. 206 f., s.v., with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 511–17, s.v.

INCUMBENT. In the C of E the holder of a parochial charge. An incumbent may therefore be a *rector, a *vicar, or a *curate-in-charge. In Scotland the word is used only of those holding ecclesiastical office in the Episcopal Church. The term, which in this sense is peculiar to English, is apparently derived from the medieval Latin incumbere in the sense of obtaining possession (obtinere, possidere) of a benefice.

INCUNABULA (Lat. incunabula, 'swaddling-clothes', hence 'cradle'). Books produced in the first stages of the art of printing, and esp. those printed before 1501, of which a very large proportion was religious. The earliest known book printed with movable type is the *Mazarin Bible (q.v.). The first known printed book with a date is the Mainz Psalter of 1457.

Gesamtkatalog ed. Kommission für den Gesamtkatalog der Wiegendrucke (Leipzig, 1925 ff.). K. Haebler, Handbuch der Inkunabelkunde (1925; Eng. tr., New York, 1933). H. G. Aldis, The Printed Book (ed. 3 by J. Carter–B. Crutchley, 1951), pp. 1–21.

INDEPENDENTS. Another name for the Congregationalists (q.v.), as upholders of the independence or autonomy of each local congregation. It was in very general use in Britain (but not in the U.S.A., where it was much disliked) down to the end of the 18th century.

INDEX, Congregation of the. See following entry.

INDEX LIBRORUM PROHIBITORUM (Lat., 'List of prohibited books'), in short, just 'the Index', the official list of books issued by the RC Church which its members were forbidden, except in special circumstances, to read or possess. The first Index was issued by the Congregation of the *Inquisition under *Paul IV in 1557. In 1571 *Pius V established a special 'Congregation of the Index' to be in charge of the list and revise it as needed; and this Congregation survived until 1917, when *Benedict XV transferred its duties to the *Holy Office. In modern times the control of literature likely to be contrary to faith or morals rested much more than formerly with the diocesan Bishops, whose duties were laid down by *Leo XIII in 'Officiorum ac Munerum' (25 Jan. 1897), whence they passed into the *Codex (cans. 1384–1405). Hence the Index came to fill a less prominent place than formerly in the life of the RC Church and in fact many widely circulating books contrary to faith or morals never found their way to it. Besides the Index proper, the Holy Office also issued an 'Index Expurgatorius' of books which might be freely read after certain passages had been deleted from them. The Index was finally abolished in 1966.

J. Hilgers, S.J., Der Index der verbotenen Bücher. In seiner neuen Fassung dargelegt und rechtlich-historisch gewürdigt (1904); id., Die Bücherverbote in Papstbriefen. Kanonistisch-bibliographische Studie (1907). F. H. *Reusch, Der Index der verbotenen Bücher (2 vols., Bonn, 1883–5); id., Die Indices Librorum Prohibitorum des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts (Tübingen, 1886). A. Boudinhon, La Nouvelle Législation de l'Index. Texte et commentaire de la constitution Officiorum ac Munerum du 25 janvier 1897 [1899]. J. Hilgers in C.E., vii (1910), p. 721 f., s.v.; A. Thouvenin in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1570–80, s.v.; A. de Iorio in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1825–9, s.v. 'Indice dei libri proibiti'; H. Wagnon–R. Naz in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1318–30, s.v.

INDIA, Christianity in. The Church has certainly existed in India since the 4th cent. All sections of the Thomas Christians (see Malabar Christians) believe that their Church was founded by St. *Thomas the Apostle, but this tradition can be regarded as no more than possible. This Church, which had previously been in contact with the (Nestorian) Patriarchate of Baghdad, in the 17th cent. became attached to the (Jacobite) *Syrian Orthodox Patriarchate. In 1599 one large section came under the jurisdiction of Rome. In the 19th cent. a small group became Anglican; a larger group formed the 'Mar Thoma' Church. For centuries confined to their small territory in SW. India, the 'Syrian' community in recent years has spread extensively in the East and developed strong missionary activity.

Western Christianity came to India with the ships of Vasco da Gama in 1498. In their small territories of Goa, Cochin, &c., the Portuguese exercised strong pressure, though not actual coercion, on the inhabitants to become Christian, but they made no extensive attempts to convert the inhabitants of India as a whole. Such general missionary activity was undertaken by the *Jesuits, who arrived in 1542. St. *Francis Xavier organized the Church of the Fisher caste on the Coromandel coast. For many years a mission was maintained at the court of the Great Mogul. Robert *de Nobili, who reached Madura, adopted the manner of life of a Hindu guru and thereby won a number of high-caste converts, though his methods were much criticized.

Under the padroado (or royal patronage) grants of the Pope, Portugal claimed the right to nominate all bishops and missionaries in the East. Goa, which became an Archbishopric in 1557, was the centre of these missionary operations. By the 17th cent., however, it was clear that Portugal could not fulfil all these obligations and in 1637 the *Propaganda in Rome consecrated a Brahman from Goa as *Vicar Apostolic for the non-Portuguese regions of India. Though the policy of choosing Indians for the office lapsed, Vicars Apostolic were appointed in increasing numbers, esp. after the suppression of the Jesuit Order in 1773. Portuguese hostility continued, and in the 19th cent. led to the Goa Schism, which lasted into the present century. In 1886 *Leo XIII created a regular hierarchy for India and in 1896 appointed Indian bishops for the *Uniat section of the Thomas Christians. In 1969 there were in India 16 RC Archbishoprics, 58 Bishoprics, 6 Apostolic Prefectures and 4 Exarchates, the great majority of the Bishops being Indians. The Abp. of Goa retains the honorary title of Patriarch of the East Indies and Primate of the East.

From 1600 the English and later the Dutch were present in India. The greater part of their Church work consisted in the spiritual care of their own people through chaplains, but there were records of missionary work and a few conversions. Protestant missionary work began seriously in 1706, when King Frederick IV of Denmark founded a mission to work in his territory of Tranquebar in S. India. The pioneer, Bartholomäus Ziegenbalg (1683–1719), translated the NT and parts of the OT into Tamil; the text was printed on a press supplied by the *S.P.C.K. As the work spread beyond the limits of the Danish possession, the S.P.C.K. took over the support of the missionaries, who served the Society in spite of the fact that they had not received Anglican ordination. The greatest of these Lutheran missionaries, Christian Friedrich Schwartz (1726–1798), who worked continuously in India from 1750 onwards, also served as a chaplain to the East India Company and, at a time of hostility towards the missionaries, won the support of both the Indians and the British rulers. His greatest work was at Tanjore, where the number of converts increased greatly.

In 1793 the first English missionary, a *Baptist, William *Carey, landed in Bengal. At that time the East India Company was opposed to missionary activity on the ground that it would influence opinion against Europeans. Carey, however, secured the protection of the Danish Crown and established a mission in the Danish territory of Serampore. With the assistance of Joshua Marshman (1768–1837) and William Ward (1769–1823) he translated the NT into Bengali and within 30 years had printed parts of the Bible in 37 Indian languages. At the revision of the East India Company's charter in 1813, *Evangelical opinion secured the insertion of provisions for a Bishopric of Calcutta as well as freedom for missionary enterprise. T. F. *Middleton became the first bishop (1814–22); he had, however, clear jurisdiction only over chaplains and European congregations and was doubtful whether he had authority to ordain Indians to the ministry of the C of E. During his episcopate, in 1820, Bishop's College, Calcutta, was opened for the training of ordinands in India, but the work lapsed until it was resumed in 1917. R. *Heber, the second bishop (1823–6), licensed the missionaries, including some Lutherans supported by the S.P.C.K., but laid down that for the future the missions should be solely Anglican. He also (re-)ordained a few Lutherans to make them acceptable as chaplains in the East India Company's churches, including among those whom he (re-)ordained the first Indian Anglican priest (who had previously received Lutheran orders). From about this time the *C.M.S. began to send missionaries, and Anglican clergy from England came to India in increasing numbers. Bishoprics were created for Madras (1835) and Bombay (1837), and the Bp. of Calcutta was given the title of Metropolitan, though not Archbishop. Under Daniel Wilson (Bp. of Calcutta 1835–58), the first Metropolitan, the provision of churches and chaplains for stations, regiments and schools was much improved.

In 1830 a new type of school was opened in Calcutta by Alexander *Duff, in the conviction that the Gospel should be offered to leading Indian families through the provision of education for their children in the English language. Similar schools were set up in Bombay, Madras and Nagpur. Converts were few but distinguished, and the schools did much to diffuse Christian influence in the higher ranks of Indian society.

At successive renewals of the East India Company's Charter in 1813 and 1833, the remaining restrictions on missionary work were removed, and there was a great increase in the number of non-British societies working in India. By the end of the 19th cent. American missionaries outnumbered British, and there were strong contingents from Switzerland, Germany, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. In the same period the RC Church in India became internationalized, receiving missionaries from Holland, followed by Germans, Americans and others. The British Government maintained an attitude of neutrality towards all religions which did not offend the law, though it did (in 1829) abolish the Hindu custom of suti (the burning of widows on their husband's pyre). It also subsidized schools prepared to accept a measure of government control and thus enabled the missionaries to build up an immense educational structure, as well as medical services.

The second half of the 19th cent. was marked by strong missionary endeavours among the aboriginal peoples of India and the 'untouchables'. The Gossner Lutheran Church met with success among the Oraons and other peoples of Chota Nagpur. The Welsh Calvinists converted the Khasis in large numbers, and the Baptists worked among the tribes on the frontiers of Burma. From 1866 onwards there were widespread conversions among the most oppressed and poverty-stricken sections of the community, esp. in the Telugu-speaking areas of the Madras Presidency.

During the 19th cent. a native Indian village ministry was formed through the ordination of those trained in their own language and with no knowledge of English. The first ordination of such a candidate took place in 1850, and gradually the number of Indians ordained came to exceed the number of missionaries. Progress in this matter was slower in the RC Church than among other denominations, the demand for celibacy posing difficulties. In S. India, Anglican training of candidates for the ministry in English began in 1883, and the United Theological College of Bangalore was founded in 1910. In 1912 the first Indian Anglican bishop in India was consecrated, to be followed by the first RC bishop of the Latin rite in 1923. In 1930 the Anglican Church in India, which had hitherto legally been a part of the C of E, acquired independence as the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon (Pakistan was added to the title in 1947). This Church, while part of the Anglican Communion, had the right to draw up its own constitution, elect its own bishops and settle its liturgical principles and practice. Other denominations established independent national Churches in the following period. Though Indian Christians have continued to complain of the influence exerted by the West through financial pressures and in other ways, it is significant that the Church became autonomous well before political independence was achieved.

Ecumenical relations developed early in India. Co-operation among the non-RC missions began in 1855, and a long series of conferences (esp. that of Bangalore in 1879) led to the formation in 1908 of the South India United Church (*Presbyterian and *Congregational), the first trans-confessional union of modern times. Out of this grew the movement which eventually led to the formation of the Church of *South India (q.v.). A parallel movement in North India in 1970 brought into being the United Churches in *North India and *Pakistan (qq.v.).

Religious liberty is written into the constitutions of India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh. Christians have full liberty to profess and practise their faith, but conversions are discouraged and strict limitations are placed on missionary work. The number of Christians is only some 2.5 per cent of the population in India, less than 1.5 per cent in Pakistan, and below 0.3 per cent in Bangladesh. Of these the RC Church claims more than half; in 1971 it had over 8 million members in India. For Pakistan, the latest figure available is 907,861 Christians of all denominations in a population of nearly 65 million; in Bangladesh 216,000 out of over 76 million. The influence of Christianity in Indian society is, however, vastly greater than the number of Christians would suggest.

Recent general survey by S. C. Neill, The Story of the Christian Church in India and Pakistan (Grand Rapids, 1970). C. B. Firth, An Introduction to Indian Church History (Madras, 1961; better on earlier than later period). P. Thomas, Christians and Christianity in India and Pakistan. A General Survey of the Progress of Christianity in India from Apostolic Times to the Present Day (1954). J. Hough, The History of Christianity in India from the Commencement of the Christian Era (5 vols., 1839–60; vol. v is ed. by his son, T. G. P. Hough). There is no entirely satisfactory history of the RC Church in India; the best account is that of M. F. X. D'Sa, History of the Catholic Church in India (2 vols., Bombay, 1925). J. Richter, Indische Missionsgeschichte (Allgemeine evangelische Missionsgeschichte; 1906; Eng. tr. [1908]). E. Chatterton, A History of the Church of England in India since the Early Days of the East India Company (1924). C. J. Grimes, Towards an Indian Church. The Growth of the Church of India in Constitution and Life (1946). F. Penny, The Church in Madras, being the History of the Ecclesiastical and Missionary Action of the East India Company in the Presidency of Madras in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (3 vols., 1904–22). A. Mayhew, Christianity and the Government of India. An Examination of the Christian Forces at Work in the Administration of India and of the Mutual Relations of the British Government and Christian Missions, 1600–1900 (1929). J. W. Pickett, Christian Mass Movements in India (New York, 1933); id., Christ's Way to India's Heart. Present day Mass Movements to Christianity (Lucknow, [1937]; revised ed., London, 1938). B. G. M. Sundkler, Church of South India. The Movement towards Union, 1900–1947 (1954). There is also much information in the biographies of bishops and other leaders, in the history of the various missionary societies, and in periodicals, esp. The Harvest Field (Madras, etc., 1880 ff.; from 1925 The National Christian Council Review). Latourette, iii (1940), pp. 247–84, with bibl. pp. 458–85 passim; vi [1944], pp. 65–214, with bibl. pp. 457–84 passim; vii (1945), pp. 274–315, with bibl. pp. 507–31 passim. K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 400–15, and v (1963), pp. 299–331, also with bibl. See also bibl. to Malabar Christians and South India, Church of.

INDICOPLEUSTES. See Cosmas Indicopleustes.

INDUCTION (in Logic). The process of reasoning whereby a general law or principle is reached from the observance of particular instances. The word, which in its Lat. form (inductio) occurs in Cicero, is a rendering of *Aristotle's ἐπαγωγή. The opposite process is termed '*deduction'.

INDUCTION (to a benefice). The term used to denote the final stage, after nomination and *institution, in the appointment of a new *incumbent. The effect is to place the priest in legal possession of the temporalities of the *benefice, and in control of his parish. The Bishop after institution issues a mandate to the *archdeacon or other person having the power to induct, who lays the hand of the person to be inducted on the key of the church door and causes him to toll the bell. The induction is also commonly accompanied by other ceremonial acts.

INDULGENCE, Declarations of. See Declarations of Indulgence.

INDULGENCES. The remission by the Church of the temporal penalty due to forgiven sin, in virtue of the merits of Christ and the saints. In the RC Church the granting of indulgences is now ordinarily confined to the Pope. The practice presupposes (1) a retributive basis for Divine justice, i.e. that sin must have a penalty either on earth or in purgatory, even after the sinner has been reconciled with God by penitence and absolution; (2) the existence of the 'treasury of merits', i.e. the infinite merits of Christ, together with the merits of the BVM and the saints available to the Church in virtue of the Communion of Saints; (3) the belief that the Church, by her power of jurisdiction, has the right of administering the benefit of these merits in consideration of prayers or other pious works undertaken by the faithful.

In the early Church, esp. from the 3rd cent., the intercession of confessors and those awaiting martyrdom was allowed by the ecclesiastical authorities to shorten the canonical discipline of those under penance; and when canonical penance came to be considered a substitute for temporal punishment in purgatory, the transition was easy to the belief that the prayers and merits of the saints availed to shorten such punishment itself, even for sins which did not require canonical penance. Later, with the relaxation of the penitential discipline, alternative works were permitted instead of the prescribed penances, and the merits of Christ and the saints applied to make up the deficiency. For general indulgences, there is no certain evidence datable before the 11th cent. In the 12th cent., however, the practice of granting indulgences became more common. *Plenary indulgences were offered to those who took part in the *Crusades, and bishops were authorized to give limited indulgences at the dedication of churches and their anniversaries, one of the most famous of these being the *Portiuncula Indulgence granted to St. *Francis in 1221. The later Middle Ages saw the growth of considerable abuses, such as the unrestricted sale of indulgences by professional 'pardoners', whose false doctrine and scandalous conduct were an immediate occasion of the Reformation, and whose activities were finally prohibited by *Pius V in 1567.

Until recent times RC practice was to encourage piety and good works among the faithful by very liberal grants of indulgences, generally by the Pope himself, but also, within certain limits, by metropolitans and bishops. In response to suggestions made at the Second *Vatican Council, however, Pope *Paul VI in the constitution 'Indulgentiarum doctrina' (1 Jan. 1967) substantially revised the practical application of the traditional doctrine in order to make it clear that the Church's object was not merely to help the faithful to make due satisfaction for their sins, but chiefly to induce them to a greater fervour of charity. Under the new discipline, the number of plenary indulgences was greatly reduced, and it was emphasized that no plenary indulgence could be gained without a total conversion of heart from all sin. Partial indulgences are no longer reckoned in days and years; they simply supplement, and to the same degree, the remission which the person performing the indulgenced action has already gained by the charity and contrition with which he does it. At the same time, the former distinction between 'personal', 'real' and 'local' indulgences was abolished, in order to indicate that it is the personal actions of the faithful that are indulgenced, even when they are connected with some sacred office or place.

Indulgences can also be gained by the living for the souls in purgatory, but only per modum suffragii, i.e. by an act of intercession, since the Church on earth has no jurisdiction beyond the grave. See also Merit, Plenary Indulgence, and Raccolta.

Enchiridion Indulgentiarum. Normae et Concessiones (Rome, 1968), with useful introd. E. Amort, De Origine, Progressu, Valore ac Fructu Indulgentiarum (2 pts., Augsburg, 1735; ed. 2 with additions, Venice, 1738). F. Beringer, S.J., Die Ablässe, ihr Wesen und Gebrauch (1860; ed. P. A. Steiner, S.J., 2 vols., 1921–30; Fr. tr., 1890). A. H. M. Lépicier, Indulgences. Their Origin, Nature and Development (1895; revised ed., 1928). H. C. Lea, A History of Auricular Confession and Indulgences in the Latin Church, iii (Philadelphia, 1896; polemical and hostile). J. Hilgers, S.J., Die katholische Lehre von den Ablässen und deren geschichtliche Entwicklung (1914). N. Paulus, Geschichte des Ablasses im Mittelalter, vom Ursprunge bis zur Mitte des 14. Jahrhunderts (3 vols., 1922–3). B. Poschmann, Der Ablass im Lichte der Bussegeschichte (1948). J. E. Campbell, Indulgences. The Ordinary Power of Prelates Inferior to the Pope to Grant Indulgences. An Historical Synopsis and a Canonical Commentary (Ottawa thesis; Ottawa, 1953). W. E. Lunt, Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, lxxiv; 1962), pp. 447–620.

L. Fanfani, De Indulgentiis. Manuale theoretico-practicum ad normam Codicis Iuris Canonici (Rome, 1919; ed. 2, Turin and Rome, 1926).

E. Magnin in D.T.C., vii (1922), cols. 1594–1636, s.v., with bibl.; G. Löw, C.SS.R.–S. De Angelis in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1901–10, s.v. 'Indulgenze', with bibl.; E. Jombart in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1331–52, s.v.; K. *Rahner, S.J., and others, in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), i (1957), cols. 46–54, s.v. 'Ablass'.

INDULT (Lat. indultum, 'a permission'). A faculty granted by the *Apostolic See to deviate from the common law of the Church. It is generally given for a specific case and for a specific period, and is commonly personal in reference, i.e. it cannot be communicated to others unless special permission be given.

INDUSTRIAL CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP (I.C.F.). An Anglican organization which endeavours to present the Christian faith to the world of industry both by missions to industrial workers and by relating the theory and practice of Christianity to modern industry. It was formed in 1918 by the fusion of two earlier bodies, the Navvy Mission and the Christian Social Union, with the Rev. P. T. R. Kirk as its first General Director. It was responsible for the convening of the *Malvern Conference in Jan. 1941, and for the meeting in the Albert Hall, London, on 26 Sept. 1942, when Abp. W. *Temple made a strong plea for the application of Christian principles to business and economics. The aims of the Fellowship have similarities with those of *Catholic Action in some RC countries.

INEFFABILIS DEUS. The constitution of *Pius IX, issued 8 Dec. 1854, defining the dogma of the *Immaculate Conception. It asserted that the BVM 'in the first instant of her conception was, by a singular privilege and grace granted by God, in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the human race, preserved exempt from all stain of original sin'. During the octave of the Feast (8–15 Dec.) it used to be read in the second *nocturn at *Mattins.

Text in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentiorum. Collectio Lacensis. Auctoribus Presbyteris S.J. e Domo B.V.M. sine Labe Conceptae ad Lacum, vi (Freiburg i.Br., 1882), cols. 836–43. Extract in Denz.-Schön. (ed. 33; 1965), pp. 560–2 (Nos. 2800–4). See also bibl. to Immaculate Conception.

INFALLIBILITY. Inability to err in teaching revealed truth. It is a negative condition, complementary to the positive quality of 'inspiration'. While many Christians maintain that the Church is infallible, upon the basis of such texts as Jn. 16. 13, Acts 15. 28, various beliefs have been held as to the seat where such infallibility resides. It has sometimes been sought in those doctrines and truths of revelation which have been accepted by all the historic branches of the Church; at other times in the definitions of such councils of the Church as have been generally accepted as *Oecumenical. At the First *Vatican Council (1870) the RC Church declared that the Pope was infallible when he defined that a doctrine concerning faith or morals was part of the deposit of divine revelation handed down from apostolic tradition and was therefore to be believed by the whole Church. In RC doctrine such a definition is infallible even antecedently to its acceptance by the Church. The RC Church also teaches that the same infallibility attaches to whatever is taught as part of the deposit of revelation by the entire body of RC bishops in union with the Pope, whether inside or outside an Oecumenical Council; this point, made in the First Vatican Council, was stressed at the Second Vatican Council.

INFANCY GOSPELS, The. The apocryphal stories about the Birth and Childhood of Christ which were put into circulation in early Christian times. They are all of poor literary quality and devoid of historical value. The two most important are the 'Book of *James' (the '*Protevangelium') and the 'Infancy Gospel of *Thomas' (qq.v.).

INFANT BAPTISM. Although from the first *Baptism was the universal means of entry into the Christian community, the NT contains no specific authority for its administration to infants. But by a tradition at least as old as the 3rd cent., and virtually universal until the *Reformation, children born to Christian parents have been baptized in infancy. In the 16th cent. this practice ('paedobaptism') was rejected by the *Anabaptists and since the early 17th cent. also by the *Baptists (and later by the *Disciples of Christ).

In the period of the NT, positive hints of Infant Baptism have been found in the facts that the children of Christian parents are said to be 'holy' whereas they might be 'unclean' (1 Cor. 7. 14), and that they are exhorted to obey their parents 'in the Lord' (Col. 3. 20, Eph. 6. 1); and never is there a suggestion that they will have to seek baptism on reaching years of discretion. St. *Paul also speaks of Baptism as a spiritual counterpart of circumcision, the rite whereby Jews were admitted as infants to the benefits of the Covenant and membership of the religious community (cf. Col. 2. 11 f.). Further, in the households whose baptism is mentioned in Acts 16. 15 and 33 (cf. 18. 8) and 1 Cor. 1. 16, children may well have been baptized together with adults, as were the children of *proselytes to Judaism. Beyond this, evidence is lacking. But since the NT documents are concerned mainly with the expansion of Christianity in the non-Christian world, and hardly at all with the natural recruitment of the Church from persons of Christian parentage and upbringing, this lack of evidence is not surprising. This should be borne in mind in relation to the claim of certain antipaedobaptists that Christ's command to 'make disciples of (μαθητεύσατε) all nations, baptizing them . . .' (Mt. 28. 19) forbids baptism without conscious discipleship.

In post-Apostolic times the evidence becomes more definite. *Justin Martyr (Apol., i. 15) speaks of Christians then of sixty or seventy years of age who had 'from childhood been made disciples' (ἐμαθητεύθησαν, cf. Mt. 28. 19). *Polycarp at his martyrdom (prob. A.D. 155 or 156) claimed to have been 'Christ's servant' for 86 years (Mart. Polyc., 9). *Irenaeus (Haer., ii. 33) speaks of Christ as 'giving salvation to those of every age' (omnem aetatem) who are 'regenerated' (renascuntur) through Him, and expressly includes 'infants and little children' (infantes et parvulos) among these. Explicit statements concerning infant baptism are made by *Origen, who refers to it as an established custom, which the Church has received from the Apostles (Hom. in Lev., viii. 4, Comm. in Rom., v. 9). In both passages he finds the practice justified by the need which infants, no less than adults, have for liberation from *original sin. Opposition to infant baptism (implying the prior existence of the practice) is voiced by *Tertullian, who urges (De Bapt., 18) that the baptism of children be deferred (despite Mt. 19. 14) until they can 'know Christ'. This advocacy of delaying baptism for infants, as well as spiritually immature adults, appears to spring from Tertullian's ideas of the impossibility or great difficulty of the remission of post-baptismal sin. Such considerations led to a widespread deferment of baptism in the 4th cent., e.g. in the cases of *Constantine and of St. *Augustine (Conf., I. xi). On the other hand, by the middle of the 3rd cent. infant baptism was regularly performed, as is attested by *Cyprian (Ep. 64), where it is stated to convey remission not only of actual sins but also of original sin. From then onwards evidence for the practice is ample, and even *Pelagius, despite his denial of original sin, did not oppose the established practice. In the Middle Ages it was rejected by a few small sects and movements which were heretical in other ways also.

In the E. Church, infant baptism is followed at once by the administration of *chrism and also of Holy Communion, while in the W. both these are deferred till the age of conscious, participation, after instruction (see Confirmation). Except in cases of emergency, sponsors (*godparents) are required for every baptized infant, whose duty it is to see that the child receives Christian instruction and is brought for Confirmation at the appropriate age. Acc. to Catholic doctrine (set forth, e.g., in the service of Infant Baptism in the BCP), the rite conveys the essential gift of regeneration, so that 'children which are baptized, dying before they commit sin, are undoubtedly saved'. The Baptists and other Protestants who reject infant baptism do so traditionally on the double ground that it is without warrant in the NT and that as a mere ceremony or ordinance (not a sacrament) it could convey no spiritual benefit to the unconscious recipient. Among those who retain it, e.g. *Lutheran, *Reformed (Presbyterian), *Methodist, and *Congregationalist bodies, many regard it as a dedication of the child and a declaration of the universal availability of the salvation wrought by Christ, which is prior to any individual response, holding that full Church membership is granted later in response to profession of faith.

In most Churches which practise Infant Baptism there has in recent times been much reconsideration of the traditional practice by individuals and unofficial groups, esp. in view of the fact that many who bring their children for baptism are now only nominally Christian, and reasonable expectation of a Christian upbringing is lacking. In such cases the refusal of baptism, or its deferment on condition of the parents' accepting instruction, has been advocated, and the 1969 RC Order for the Baptism of Infants envisages that in some circumstances Baptism should be delayed. On theological grounds this deferment had been defended by K. *Barth. Against this it is urged that such a rebuff to those who voluntarily, if ignorantly, seek baptism for their children is inconsistent with the Church's duty to them and that a valuable pastoral opportunity is lost.

The classic English defence of the practice is W. *Wall, The History of Infant Baptism (2 pts., London, 1705). K. Barth, Die kirchliche Lehre der Taufe (ed. 2, Theologische Studien, ed. K. Barth, xiv; Zürich, 1943; Eng. tr. by E. A. Payne, 1948), a vigorous attack on the practice. Reply by O. Cullmann, Die Tauflehre des Neuen Testaments (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, ed. W. Eichrodt–O. Cullmann, xii; Zürich, 1948; Eng. tr. by J. K. S. Reid, Studies in Biblical Theology, i; 1950). Other modern discussions include D. *Stone, Holy Baptism (1899), pp. 96–109 and 254–8. W. F. Flemington, The New Testament Doctrine of Baptism (1953), pp. 130–47; P. C. Marcel, The Biblical Doctrine of Infant Baptism (tr. from periodical artt. by P. E. Hughes, 1953). J. Jeremias, Die Kindertaufe in den ersten vier Jahrhunderten (1958; Eng. tr., 1960); K. Aland, Die Säuglingstaufe im Neuen Testament und in der Alten Kirche: eine Antwort an Joachim Jeremias (1961; Eng. tr., 1963). See also bibl. to Baptism.

INFIDEL. A person who has a positive disbelief in every form of the Christian faith. In medieval times the word (Lat. infidelis) was employed esp. of the Mohammedans and also, though less often, of Jews and pagans; but the distinction 'Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Hereticks' in the third *Good Friday *collect of the BCP points to its use in a narrower sense.

INFIRMARIAN. In a monastery or religious house, the person in charge of the sick-quarters.

INFRALAPSARIANS. See Sublapsarianism.

INFUSION. See Affusion.

INGE, WILLIAM RALPH (1860–1954), Dean of *St. Paul's. He was born at Crayke, N. Yorks, educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and successively Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford (1889–1905), vicar of All Saints', Knightsbridge (1905–7), Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge (1907–11) and Dean of St. Paul's (1911–34). His sympathies with *Platonic spirituality found their expression in a long series of theological and devotional writings, among them Christian Mysticism (*Bampton Lectures, 1899), Personal Idealism and Mysticism (1907), an essay on 'The Theology of the Fourth Gospel' in Cambridge Biblical Essays (ed. H. B. *Swete; 1909), Faith and its Psychology (1909), and The Philosophy of Plotinus (*Gifford Lectures, 2 vols., 1918). This last was an attempt to assess the positive value of Plotinus's system for the modern world. There followed two widely read series of Outspoken Essays (1919; 1922); they included a notable 'Confessio Fidei', which upheld a philosophy of value in which God was the 'supreme value' and true faith 'belief in the reality of absolute value'. Inge's grasp of the tastes and prejudices of the English mind, his provocative and epigrammatic manner of writing and his pure English style made him one of the best-known Churchmen of his generation.

There is autobiographical material in Inge's Vale (1934) and Diary of a Dean. St. Paul's 1911–1934 [1950]. Life by Adam Fox (London, 1960). R. M. Helm, The Gloomy Dean. The Thought of William Ralph Inge (Winston–Salem, 1962). W. R. Matthews in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 529–32.

INHIBITION. An episcopal order suspending from the performance of his office an incumbent whose conduct makes such action advisable either for the avoidance of scandal or for some other reason in the interests of the parish. It is the duty of the inhibiting bishop to arrange and provide for the services during the suspension. Such orders are governed in the C of E by procedure under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure, 1963, and, except temporarily, can be made only after due judicial inquiry.

INITIATION. See Baptism.

INJUNCTIONS, Royal. A series of Tudor royal proclamations on ecclesiastical affairs.

(1) By *Henry VIII, 1536. These required the clergy to observe the anti-papal laws and the abrogation of certain holy days and ceremonies, not to extol images, relics, or miracles, to discourage pilgrimages, and to teach their people the Paternoster, the articles of the faith and the Ten Commandments in English. The clergy were also ordered to teach and to administer the Sacraments more regularly and not to frequent taverns. A fortieth part of their income was to go to the poor and a fifth part to the repair of their own churches and parsonages.

(2) By Henry VIII, 1538. This order, after confirming the previous injunctions, provided for the setting up of R. *Grafton's *Great Bible in all churches, for the regular instruction of the people in the Scriptures, and for the checking of certain superstitions. Only duly licensed preachers were permitted to officiate. A register of all marriages, births, and burials was to be kept and stored in the parish chest. The use of ora pro nobis in processions was strongly discouraged.

(3) By *Edward VI, 1547. These Injunctions, issued from Grafton's press on 31 July, required regular sermons against superstition and the Pope's authority, and in favour of the royal supremacy. Church services were to be performed regularly, tithes to be paid, an alms-chest to be kept near the high altar, and church registers to be kept. The clergy were to study and teach the Scriptures. Rogationtide processions were to be kept up, and Sunday to be better observed. A pulpit was to be provided in each church. The Litany was in future to be said or sung in English kneeling, and not in procession.

(4) By *Mary I, 1554. These Injunctions abolished the Oath of *Supremacy and required all canons not contrary to statute law to be enforced, married priests to be either removed or divorced, the neglect of baptism and confirmation to cease, heresy to be repressed, holy days and ceremonies to be restored as at the end of Henry VIII's reign, and clerics ordained 'after the new sort' to have 'that thing which wanted in them before' supplied.

(5) By *Elizabeth I, 1559. The first 28 of this series are substantially a re-enactment of those of 1547, with their extreme anti-Romanism somewhat toned down, perhaps in the interests of comprehensiveness. They are followed by 25 new orders. Of these No. 29, without forbidding, sought to discourage the marriage of clergy, but from the first it proved a dead letter. No. 49 was designed to encourage music (apparently plainchant) in collegiate and parish churches, and permitted the use of hymns before or after service. No. 52 enjoined bowing at the Holy Name; No. 53 slow and distinct reading of the service. Others prescribed the proper habiting of the clergy (No. 30), the use of the *Primer (No. 39), and the observance of holy days and fast-days (Nos. 46, 48).

Texts in Gee-Hardy: (1) pp. 269–74; (2) pp. 275–81; (4) pp. 380–83; (3) and (5) pp. 417–42.

INNER LIGHT. The principle of Christian certitude, consisting of inward knowledge or experience of salvation, which is upheld by the Society of *Friends (q.v.).

INNERE MISSION. The term covers all voluntary religious, charitable, and social work organized within the Protestant Churches in Germany apart from the actual parish work. It was first employed by J. H.* Wichern (q.v.) in connexion with his foundation at Hamburg, but he soon came to use it for all 'works of saving love'. The chief object of the Innere Mission is to reclaim those who have strayed, a task carried out by preaching, distributing of religious literature (Bible and Tract societies), and charitable works, such as nursing the sick and assisting the poor. The years of its early enthusiasm (1848–c. 1860) produced a number of new associations and revived old ones for nursing, prison reform, care of the homeless and the mentally deficient, and the institution of deaconesses on the model of the early Church. From 1890 down to 1918 the social question played a paramount part and theoretical discussions on the attitude of the Protestant Churches to socialism, the emancipation of women, and other topical problems, were in the foreground. After 1918 the work was resumed with special stress on education and the winning back of the paganized youth of the cities to Christianity.

During the Second World War it made a notable and not completely unsuccessful stand against the Nazi policy of *euthanasia for the physically and mentally chronic sick. In 1957 it was united with the Hilfswerk, an organ of the *Evangelical Church in Germany established in 1945 to relieve distress and try to make contact with those alienated from the Church. It has spread to France, Holland, Poland and Scandinavia.

M. Gerhardt, Ein Jahrhundert Innere Mission. Die Geschichte des Central-Ausschusses für die Innere Mission der Deutschen Evangelischen Kirche (2 vols., 1948). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, ii (1960), esp. pp. 102–9, iv (1962), pp. 251–3. F. Frick in E.K.L., ii (1958), cols. 323–31, s.v.; W. Schütz in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), cols. 756–63, with reff. See also bibl. to Wichern, J. H.

INNOCENT I, St. (d. 417), Pope from 402. A man of great ability, firm resolution, and high moral character, he made more substantial claims for the Papacy than any of his predecessors at *Rome. He insisted that major cases of dispute should be brought to the judgement of the Apostolic See. His determination to exercise authority in the E. as well as the W. is reflected in his support of St. *Chrysostom against his adversaries and of St. *Jerome against John, Bp. of *Jerusalem, while nearer home he succeeded with the assistance of the Bp. of *Thessalonica in bringing E. Illyricum, which since 388 had been part of the E. Empire, under the ecclesiastical authority of the W. The civil power also found in Innocent a force to be reckoned with, and it was through his instrumentality that the Emp. Honorius in 404 issued his decree against the *Donatists. His famous letter to Decentius, Bp. of Eugubium (19 Mar. 416), is important for the history of the *canon of the Mass; it also speaks of *confirmation as reserved for bishops and mentions the rites of *unction and *penance. Feast day, 28 July.

For his correspondence see J. P. Migne, PL, xx, 457–636; also 'Collectio Avellana' (C.S.E.L., xxxv), pp. 92–8. Letter to Decentius is conveniently repr. in G. A. Michell, Landmarks in Liturgy (1961), pp. 220–24. L.P. (Duchesne), i, 220–4. H. Gebhardt, Die Bedeutung Innocenz I für die Entwickelung der päpstlichen Gewalt (Diss., Leipzig, 1901). É. Demougeot, 'A propos des interventions du Pape Innocent Ier dans la politique séculière' in R.H., ccxii (1954), pp. 23–38. B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Innocent Ier et le Canon de la Messe' in R.T.A.M., xix (1952), pp. 5–16, repr. in Travaux liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 236–47. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 296–343. J. Barnaby in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 243–9, s.v.; É. Amann in D.T.C., vii (1922), cols. 1940–50, s.v.

INNOCENT III (1160–1216), Pope from 1198. Of a noble family, the Scotti, Lotario de' Conti di Segni was educated at *Paris, where he studied theology under Peter of Corbeil, and at *Bologna, where he learned canon law under Uguccio of Ferrara. Rising rapidly in the Papal service, he became cardinal in 1190, and in 1198, when not yet in priest's orders, was elected Pope in succession to the aged *Celestine III (1191–8).

In method, Innocent was businesslike and legally minded. He was wholly sincere, diplomatic but opportunist, liable to fits of depression, and above all determined to enforce, extend, and define the 'plenitudo potestatis' of the Roman see. In making the right of the Papacy to interfere in secular affairs depend upon its duty to control the moral conduct of rulers and upon the theory of Papal feudal overlordship, Innocent was enabled by the circumstances of his age and his own will-power and personality to make theory and practice correspond to an extent without parallel, either before or afterwards.

With a view to establishing his authority in Rome and Italy, Innocent began by expelling the German mercenaries from Sicily and elsewhere. The Emp. Henry VI having died in 1197, Innocent used the opportunity for arbitrating between the rival claimants to the Imperial throne. In the bull 'Venerabilem' he laid down that, though the right of electing an emperor lay with the Imperial electors, the Pope must have 'the right and authority of examining the person elected' (jus et auctoritas examinandi personam electam), and that the appointment of an emperor came within the sphere of the Papal authority 'principaliter' and 'finaliter'—principaliter since the translation of the Empire from the Greeks to the Romans took place through the Pope, and finaliter because the blessing, coronation, and investiture of the Emperor lay with the Pope. He supported first Otto IV, then Philip of Swabia (Henry's brother), and then, after Philip's murder in 1208 (when Otto, who was left without a rival, became as anti-Papal as his predecessors), *Frederick II, the only son of Henry VI, who was elected on condition that he did homage to the Pope for Sicily.

Outside the Empire Innocent was equally successful in enforcing his authority. In France he compelled Philip Augustus to be reconciled to his wife, Ingeborg of Denmark; his consequent support of the French king issued in his victory over the discarded Emp. Otto at Bouvines in 1214. The quarrel over the appointment of Stephen *Langton to the see of *Canterbury led to the submission of King *John of England, who agreed to recognize Innocent as his feudal overlord. The Pope also made his authority felt in Scandinavia, the *Spanish peninsula, the Balkans, and even as far east as *Cyprus and *Armenia. His patronage of the new orders of Friars, the *Franciscans and *Dominicans, was further proof of his genius. Like most of the medieval Popes, he wished to preach a *Crusade for the recovery of the Holy Land, but the Fourth Crusade, of 1204, was diverted from its true objective to operate against the Byzantine Empire; the Greek patriarch of *Constantinople was then replaced by a Latin, Thomas Morosini, a Venetian.

The *Lateran Council of 1215 (q.v.) was the culminating event of his reign. Heresies, of which that of the *Albigensians, against whom Innocent had preached a crusade, was the most prominent, were condemned and doctrine clearly formulated. In addition reform decrees were passed, encouraging the foundation of schools and a higher standard of conduct for the clergy.

His pontificate may be considered as marking the climax of the medieval Papacy. He thought of his office in a semi-Divine light, 'set in the midst between God and man, below God but above man'. The vast extent of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction is seen in the number of cases which came up before him for decision from distant parts of the earth. He was the first to employ the title 'Vicar of Christ'. 'No king can reign rightly unless he devoutly serve Christ's vicar.' 'Princes have power in earth, priests over the soul. As much as the soul is worthier than the body, so much worthier is the priesthood than the monarchy.' He was, so he affirmed, *Melchisedech, the priest-king, who would bring a centralized Christian society into being, and such was his genius that alone of all the Popes he was able to convert theory into short-lived but nevertheless active reality.

Innocent III was a considerable writer. Apart from his letters, sermons, and canonical rulings, his principal works were the De Miseria Humanae Conditionis, a widely read ascetical treatise written before he became Pope, and his De Sacro Altaris Mysterio, which is a valuable witness to the liturgy of his time.

Collected ed. of his Opera in J. P. Migne, PL, ccxiv–ccxvii; crit. edd. of his Regestum super Negotio Romani Imperii by W. Holtzmann (2 vols., Bonn, 1947–8) and F. Kempf, S.J. (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, xii; Rome, 1947) and of his annual Registers by O. Hageneder–A. Haidacher and others (Publikationen des Österreichischen Kulturinstituts in Rom, II. Abteilung, Quellen. I. Reihe, 1964 ff.). C. R. Cheney–W. H. Semple (edd.), Selected Letters of Pope Innocent III concerning England, 1198–1216 (Lat. text with Eng. tr., 1953). C. R. Cheney–Mary G. Cheney (edd.), The Letters of Pope Innocent III (1198–1216) concerning England and Wales. A Calendar with an Appendix of Texts (Oxford, 1967). 'De Miseria Humanae Conditionis', ed. M. Maccarrone (Lugano, 1955). Studies by F. Hurter (4 vols., Hamburg, 1834–42), A. Luchaire (6 vols., Paris, 1904–6), C. H. C. Pirie-Gordon (London, 1907), L. E. Binns (London, 1931), and Helene Tillmann (Bonner historische Forschungen, iii; 1954). E. W. Meyer, Staatstheorien Papst Innocenz' III (Jenaer historische Arbeiten, Hft. ix; 1919); M. Maccarrone, Chiesa e stato nella dottrina di Papa Innocenzo III (Lateranum, N.S., vi, Nos. 3–4; 1940); id., 'Innocenzo III prima del Pontificato' in Archivio della R. Deputazione romana di Storia Patria, lxvi (1943), pp. 59–134; id., 'Riforma e sviluppo della vita religiosa con Innocenzo III' in Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, xvi (1962), pp. 29–72. F. Kempf, S.J., Papsttum und Kaisertum bei Innocenz III (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, xix; Rome, 1954). G. Barbéro, S.S.P., La dottrina eucaristica negli scritti di Papa Innocenzo III (1953). Helmut Roscher, Papst Innocenz III. und die Kreuzzüge (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, xxi; 1969), with extensive bibl. Helene Tillmann, 'Datierungsfragen zur Geschichte des Kampfes zwischen Papst Innocenz III. und Kaiser Otto IV.' in Hist.J., lxxxiv (1964), pp. 34–85. C. R. Cheney, Pope Innocent III and England (Stuttgart, 1976). R. W.–A. J. Carlyle, A History of Mediæval Political Theory in the West, v (1928), pp. 151–234. Mann, xi and xii (1915); Fliche–Martin, x (1950), pp. 11–213, with bibl. É. Amann in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1961–81, s.v.; W. Ullmann in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 521–4, s.v.

INNOCENT IV (d. 1254), Pope from 1243. He was a native of Genoa, who rose to fame as a teacher of *canon law at *Bologna. In 1227 he became *Cardinal and in 1243 Pope after the see had been vacant for some 18 months. He at once tried to compose the Papal dispute with the Emp. *Frederick II, but without success, and in 1245 at the Council of *Lyons declared Frederick to be deposed and proclaimed a crusade against him. Under Frederick's successors he interfered with the affairs of the Empire, until agreement was reached between Pope and Empire after the death of Conrad IV in 1254. In English matters Innocent took the side of Henry III against the barons, encouraged the nomination of foreigners to English ecclesiastical preferment, and extorted heavy taxes from the country. In his bull 'Ad extirpanda' (1252) he permitted the use of torture by the *Inquisition. He wrote a commentary ('Apparatus') on the *Decretals, which secured considerable authority.

É. Berger (ed.), Les Registres d'Innocent IV (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Ser. 2; 4 vols., 1884–1919; full text of docc. not given in all cases); F. Guerello, S.J., Lettere di Innocenzo IV dai cartolari notarili genovesi (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, xxiii; Rome 1961); Acta concerning E. canon law ed. T. T. Haluščynskyj, O.S.B.M.–M. M. Wojnar, O.S.B.M. (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes. Series III, vol. iv, tom. I; Rome, 1962); further important docc. are preserved by *Matthew Paris in his Chronica Majora. A. Potthast (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, ii (Berlin, 1875), pp. 943–1286. Contemporary life by his chaplain, Nicolao de Carbio (or Calvi), pr. in L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, iii (pt. 1; Milan, 1723), pp. 592 ff.; crit. ed., with introd. and other docc., by F. Pignotti in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, xxi (1898), pp. 7–120. É. Berger, Saint Louis et Innocent IV (1893). G. von Puttkamer, Papst Innocenz IV. Versuch einer Gesamtcharakteristik aus seiner Wirkung (1930). L. Pisanu, O.F.M., Innocenzo IV e i Francescani (Studi e Testi Francescani, xli; 1968). M. Pacaut, 'L'Autorité pontificale selon Innocent IV' in Le Moyen Age, lxvi (1960), pp. 85–119. Mann, xiv (1928), with detailed bibl., incl. reff. to publ. of docc. not pr. by E. Berger, op. cit. É. Amann in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1981–95, s.v.; J. M. Muldoon in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 524 f., s.v., with bibl.

INNOCENT X (1574–1655), Pope from 1644. Giambattista Pamfili was a native of Rome. He became consistorial advocate in 1601, Auditor of the *Rota in 1604, nuntius at Naples in 1621, and at Madrid in 1626. He was created cardinal in petto in 1627, the appointment being published in 1629. On the death of *Urban VIII he was elected Pope despite the opposition of the French court, which resented his pro-Spanish views. He at once broke the power of the *Barberini, the hated relatives of his predecessor, who were supported by J. *Mazarin. In the bull 'Zelo domus Dei' (26 Nov. 1648) he confirmed the protest of the Papal legate, Fabio Chigi, against the Peace of Westphalia (1648), on the ground that it violated the laws of the Church; but the protest was ignored. His most important doctrinal decision was the condemnation of the five propositions from the Augustinus of C. *Jansenius by the bull '*Cum occasione' (31 May 1653). A much resented feature of his pontificate was the influence of Olimpia Maidalchini, the widow of his brother. He is the subject of the famous portrait by D. Velazquez in the Galleria Doria at Rome.

W. Friedensburg (ed.), 'Regesten zur deutschen Geschichte aus der Zeit des Pontifikats Innocenz' X' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken herausgegeben vom koenigl. preussischen historischen Institut in Rom, v (1903), pp. 60–124 and 207–22, vi (1904), pp. 146–73, and vii (1904), pp. 121–38. I. Ciampi, Innocenzo X Pamfili e la sua corte. Storia di Roma dal 1644 al 1655, da nuovi documenti (Imola, 1878). Pastor, xxx (1940). G. B. Picotti in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 19–22, s.v. 'Innocenzo X'. See also works cited under Mazarin.

INNOCENT XI, Bl. (1611–89), Pope from 1676. He became *Cardinal in 1645, and Bp. of Novara in 1650, and in both offices was greatly loved for his piety and generosity. In 1669 his candidature for the Papacy was defeated through the influence of Louis XIV of France, but the latter's interference was unavailing in 1676. By careful economy he much improved the finances of the curia. He struggled continuously against the absolutism of Louis XIV in Church affairs, disapproving of Louis's revocation in 1685 of the Edict of *Nantes; and he also opposed *Gallicanism, which reached its climax in the *Gallican Articles of 1682. Similar motives led him to disapprove of the measures taken by *James II of England to restore RCism, and esp. of the *Declaration of Indulgence (1687). His piety and zeal inspired him to bring about several reforms within the Church, and he encouraged daily communion. In the bull 'Sanctissimus Dominus' (1679) he condemned 65 *laxist propositions in moral theology; while in 1687 the bull 'Coelestis Pastor' condemned 68 *Quietist propositions. Innocent is thought, however, to have shown some favour to the *Jansenists, and for this reason his beatification, though begun in the next century, was long delayed. He was finally beatified in 1956.

I. I. Berthier, O.P. (ed.), Innocentii P.P. XI Epistolae ad Principes (2 vols., Rome, 1891–5); F. de Bojani (ed.), Innocent XI. Sa correspondance avec ses nonces (unfinished; up to 1684, 3 vols., 1910–12). G. B. P[ittoni], Vita d'Innocenzo Undecimo (Venice, 1691); F. Caccia, O.F.M., Innocentia Apostolica (1697). M. Immich, Papst Innocenz XI, 1676–1689. Beiträge zur Geschichte seiner Politik und zur Charakteristik seiner Persönlichkeit (1900). G. Papàsogli, Innocenzo XI (1611–1689) (1956); C. Miccinelli, Il Beato Innocenzo XI (1956). E. Michaud, Louis XIV et Innocent XI (4 vols., 1882–3). L. O'Brien, Innocent XI and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (thesis, Berkeley, Cal.; 1930); J. Orcibal, Louis XIV contre Innocent XI. Les appels au futur concile de 1688 et l'opinion française (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France; 1949). Pastor, xxxii (1940), pp. 1–524, with Appendix on the Biographies of Pope Innocent XI in vol. xxx (1940), pp. 449–51. S. Monti, Bibliografia di Papa Innocenzo XI . . . fino al 1927, ed. M. Zecchinelli (Como, 1957). J. Paquier in D.T.C., vii (1922), cols. 2006–13, s.v.,with bibl.; P. Gini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum vii (Rome, 1966), cols. 848–56, s.v. 'Innocenzo XI'.

INNOCENTS, Holy. See Holy Innocents.

INOPPORTUNISTS. Those at the *Vatican Council of 1869–70 who were opposed to defining Papal Infallibility on the ground not that they postively disbelieved in it, but that they considered the moment for its promulgation 'not opportune'. This position was adopted by the great majority of the opponents of the dogma.

INQUISITION, The. 'Inquisition' denotes the juridical persecution of heresy by special ecclesiastical courts. In early times the usual punishment for heresy was *excommunication. Physical penalties were generally disapproved of by the Fathers, though after Christianity had become the official religion of the Empire, secular princes tended to regard heresy as a kind of lèse-majesté for which confiscation or even death could be inflicted, as e.g. in the case of *Donatism and *Priscillianism in the 4th and 5th cents. The Church, on the whole, kept to her original attitude as late as the 12th cent., when St. *Bernard laid down the principle 'Fides suadenda, non imponenda'. In the latter half of the 12th and early 13th cents., however, when the *Catharist heresy which threatened not only religion but all the institutions of contemporary society began to spread rapidly, the attitude of the Church changed in favour of securing the help of the secular power.

The Inquisition properly so called came into being when in 1232 the Emp. *Frederick II issued an edict for the whole Empire entrusting the hunting-out of heretics to state officials. Thereupon *Gregory IX, fearing Frederick's political ambitions, claimed this office for the Church and appointed Papal inquisitors. These were selected, not from the bishops or their representatives who had hitherto dealt with heresy, but from members of the mendicant orders, chiefly *Dominicans and *Franciscans, who from their theological learning and the absence of worldly motives seemed esp. fitted for the work. The inquisitors went round the country, admonishing those guilty of heresy to confess voluntarily. If they confessed, an ordinary penance such as fasting or a pilgrimage would be imposed; but after a time of 'grace' of about a month the actual trials began. The inquisitor was normally assisted by a kind of jury, composed of both clerics and laymen, and the suspect persons were summoned by the parish priest. The evidence was established on the testimony of at least two witnesses, whose names were at first kept secret, but this custom was abrogated by Pope *Boniface VIII in his 'Ut commissi vobis officii'. The accused was allowed a counsel, whose main interest, however, was not the defence of his client but that justice should be done. If, in face of many proofs, the accused remained obstinate he was frequently imprisoned under severe conditions (carcer durus). In 1252 Innocent IV allowed the use of torture by his bull 'Ad extirpanda', to break the resistance of the accused. The sentence was pronounced at the sermo generalis or auto da fé*, after consultation with the jury. The penalties, in grave cases, were confiscation of goods, imprisonment of various degrees, either temporary or perpetual, and surrender to the secular arm, which meant death at the stake. In 1542 *Paul III established the 'Congregation of the Inquisition' as the final court of appeal in trials for heresy (see Holy Office).

The so-called Spanish Inquisition which was instituted as late as the end of the 15th cent. bears a somewhat different character, as it is closely bound up with the state. Set up with Papal approval by *Ferdinand V and *Isabella in 1479, it was originally directed against the marranos, baptized Jews suspected of having returned to their old beliefs and practices. It later served against moriscos (Moors who had been forced to accept Baptism), alumbrados*, and Protestants. Its organization was highly centralized, from 1516 under a single Inquisitor General. The Council of the Inquisition, whose members were appointed by the King, worked through a series of permanent local tribunals. Procedures were a development of those of the medieval Inquisition. The early years, under T. *Torquemada, and those c. 1560, were periods of intense activity. After the Spanish Inquisition had been abolished by Joseph Bonaparte in 1808, it was reintroduced in 1814 but finally suppressed in 1834.

H. C. Lea, History of the Inquisition in the Middle Ages (3 vols., 1888; polemical and hostile); A. S. Turberville, Medieval Heresy and the Inquisition (1920); A. L. Maycock, The Inquisition (1926). C. Douais, L'Inquisition. Ses origines, sa procédure (1906); J. [H.] Guiraud, Histoire de l'inquisition au moyen âge (2 vols., 1935–8); M. Maisonneuve, Études sur les origines de l'Inquisition (1942; ed. 2, 1960). Christine Thouzellier in Fliche–Martin, x (1950), pp. 291–340. E. van der Vekené, Bibliographie der Inquisition (Hildesheim, 1963). E. Vacandard in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2016–68, s.v., with older bibl.; Y. Dossat in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 535–41, with further refl. See also bibl. under individual heresies; and for Spanish Inquisition, s.v. Spain.

I.N.R.I. The initial letters of the Latin words over the Cross of Christ, viz. 'Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum' ('Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews'). The superscription 'was written in Hebrew and in Latin and in Greek' (Jn. 19. 19 f.).

INSCRIPTIONS, Early Christian. Inscriptions on stone and other materials are a valuable supplement to other sources of Christian history. Though they abound at all periods, esp. in churches and cemeteries, Christian epigraphy is conventionally limited to texts of the first six cents. For practical purposes, inscriptions are 'Christian' if they bear evidence of Christianity, though others were doubtless set up by Christians.

Many Christian inscriptions are dated, by consular years, provincial eras, or indictions, but usually their date needs to be inferred from knowledge of either the site or building in which they are found or from the internal evidence of each inscription—its content, style of lettering or accompanying symbols (e.g. the anchor is early and it is possible to date the forms of the Chi-Rho monogram (☧), which was used as a ligature in pre-Christian inscriptions and first appears in a Christian context, for the name of Christ, in the late-third cent.). If the well-known SATOR word-square is Christian, the examples of it found at Pompeii (destroyed in 79) must be the earliest extant Christian inscriptions. 3rd cent. inscriptions are fairly common in the Roman catacombs; particularly interesting are those found under *St. Peter's and under San Sebastiano by the Via Appia (see Graffiti). By the 4th cent. they are very common, esp. in *Rome, N. Africa, Syria, and Asia Minor. Some are heretical, *Montanist in Phrygia or *Donatist in Africa. Thousands of original inscriptions exist, mostly in Greek or Latin, and the text of others survives in copies.

In contrast to pagan custom, Christian inscriptions give little personal detail; epitaphs normally mention only the name, age, and date of death, occasionally adding the profession of the deceased. Prominent names occur, particularly in the memorials set up by Pope *Damasus in the catacombs, but the inscriptions are more valuable en masse as evidence of the texture of a community and the expansion of the Church; they bear witness to the beliefs of rank-and-file Christians of the period. Specially important are those which record the foundation of churches and witness to the cult of martyrs. Doctrine is illustrated vividly, but less fully and precisely than in the literary sources.

O. *Marucchi, Epigrafia cristiana (1910; Eng. tr., 1912); R. Aigrain, Manuel d'épigraphie chrétienne (2 vols., 1912, 1913); C. M. Kaufmann, Handbuch der altchristlichen Epigraphik (1917). Selections in E. Diehl, Lateinische altchristliche Inschriften (2te Aufl., 1913, short); id., Inscriptiones Latinae Christianae Veteres (3 vols., 1925–31). General collections: Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, passim; Corpus Inscriptionum Graecarum, esp. t. IV. There are many regional collections, notably G. B. *De Rossi, Inscriptiones christianae urbis Romae, 1861, continued by I. Gatti, A. Silvagni, and A. Ferrua, S.J. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 623–1089, s.v. 'Inscriptions'. This dictionary is rich throughout in discussion and illustration of inscriptions. The progress of Christian epigraphy may be followed in L'Année épigraphique (1888 ff.) and Rivista di Archeologia cristiana (1924 ff.). See also works cited under Graffiti.

INSTALLATION. The formal induction by the Dean or his representative of a canon or prebendary to a seat or stall in a cathedral or collegiate church, symbolizing his admission to the chapter and right to perform the duties and enjoy the privileges of his office. In the case of canons appointed by the Crown, it appears that installation is not strictly necessary. The term is also used of the ceremonies of admission in certain orders of chivalry, and incorrectly to include both the *enthronement of a bishop and *induction to a rectory or vicarage.

INSTANTIUS (late 4th cent.), a Spanish bishop of unknown see. He was one of the chief supporters of *Priscillian, whom he accompanied to Italy (381–2) in a fruitless endeavour to secure the favour of St. *Ambrose and Pope *Damasus. In 384 he was deposed by the Council of Bordeaux. He is the probable author of eleven treatises attributed by G. Schepss (who first published his discovery of them in a Würzburg MS. in 1886) to Priscillian.

The eleven tractates were publd. by G. Schepss in C.S.E.L., vol. xviii (1889). G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Pro Instantio. Contre l'attribution à Priscillien des opuscules du manuscrit de Würzburg' in R. Bén., xxx (1913), pp. 153–73. Critique of Morin by J. Martin, 'Priscillianus oder Instantius?' in Hist. J., xlvii (1927), pp. 237–51. A. d'Alès, Priscillien et l'Espagne chrétienne à la fin du quatrième siècle (1936). See also bibl. to Priscillian.

INSTITUTE OF CHARITY. See Rosminians.

INSTITUTES, The. The abbreviated English title of J. *Calvin's Christianae Religionis Institutio. The first edition, publd. in Latin in 1536, was a small volume of six chapters, with a prefatory letter to Francis I, King of France. Its double purpose was to be a theological introduction to the Bible and a vindication of Reformation principles. It was arranged as an exposition of the Decalogue, the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Sacraments and Church government. In 1539 appeared an enlarged edition with seventeen chapters and in 1541 a French translation by Calvin himself. The final edition, comprising 80 chapters, was published in Latin in 1559 and in French in 1560. This last edition consisted of four parts dealing with (1) God the Creator, (2) God the Redeemer, (3) the Holy Spirit, and (4) the means of grace and the Church. Although the arrangements of topics was altered, the fundamental doctrines remained unchanged throughout.

The treatise is a clear and systematic exposition of Calvin's fundamental beliefs. It soon became the text-book of Reformed theology, its central doctrines being the absolute sovereignty of God, the basis of all Christian faith in the Word of God revealed in the Holy Scriptures, and the inability of man to find pardon or salvation apart from the working of the free grace of God. It went far to prevent the Reformation movement, in its revolt against the authority of the visible Church, from becoming individualist or antinomian by its emphatic insistence upon the absolute authority of God.

Crit. ed. of French text by J. D. Benoît (5 vols., Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1957–63). The earliest Eng. trans. (from the Lat.) was made by T. Norton (1561). Later transs. from the Lat., collated with the French, by J. Allen (3 vols., 1813; reissued, 2 vols., 1838), H. Beveridge (2 vols., 1845; reissued 1949) and F. L. Battles, ed. J. T. McNeill (Library of Christian Classics, xx–xxi; 1961). B. B. Warfield, The Literary History of the 'Institutes' (1909; reprinted in Calvin and Calvinism, 1931, pp. 373–428); A. Austin, L'Institution chrétienne de Calvin (1919); J. W. Marmelstein, Étude comparative des textes latin et français de l'"Institution de la religion chrétienne" (1921).

INSTITUTION. The term used to denote the admission of a new *incumbent into the spiritual care of the parish. It is contrasted with the (subsequent) *induction, which admits him into the temporalities of the cure. The Institution is performed by the bishop of the diocese and (unlike the induction) may take place anywhere.

INSTITUTION, The Words of. The words 'This is My Body' and 'This is My Blood', used by Christ in instituting the *Eucharist. They appear in the central prayer of the Liturgy in all its forms, with one or two possible exceptions in very early times, and in the W. it has been commonly held that these words alone effect the consecration of the elements. This view clearly underlies the rubric in the BCP that if a second consecration of either species is necessary during the communion of the people, only that section of the Prayer of Consecration which contains the relevant words for that species is to be repeated. See also Epiclesis.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 243–51; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 194–201. A. Raes, S.J., 'Le Récit de l'institution eucharistique dans l'anaphore chaldéenne et malabare des apôtres' in O.C.P., x (1944), pp. 216–26. See also works cited s.v. Eucharist.

INSTITUTS CATHOLIQUES. The five 'free' Catholic institutions for higher studies at *Paris, Angers, Lille, Lyons, and Toulouse. These Institutes were founded on the basis of a French legal enactment of 1875 as Christian counterparts to the secularized state universities, though a later law of 1880 denied them the right of describing themselves as universities. In the concluding years of the 19th cent., the Institut Catholique at Paris was the chief centre of the *Modernist Movement. Its professors have included M. *d'Hulst, L. *Duchesne, and A. *Loisy, and, more recently, L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., J. Daniélou, S.J., and P. Henry, S.J.

INSTRUMENTS, Tradition of the (Lat. Traditio or Porrectio Instrumentorum). The solemn delivery to those being ordained of the instruments characteristic of their ministry. This ceremony, which now forms part of the Latin rites of Ordination, belonged originally to the *Minor Orders. At *Rome the ceremony was at first merely symbolical, as there was originally no formal ordination to these Orders, but in the *Gallican rites it was accompanied by a charge and formed part of a solemn ordination. During the Middle Ages it was extended to the diaconate and priesthood. Deacons received the Gospel Book and priests the *Paten with the bread and chalice, the delivery being accompanied in each case by an appropriate charge. In his 'Decretum de Unione Armeniorum' (1439) *Eugenius IV gave formal expression to the doctrine already asserted by St. *Thomas Aquinas that this ceremony formed the essential 'matter' of the Sacrament, and this view was widely accepted by Latin theologians until the 17th cent., when J. *Morin, by his research into E. and early W. Ordination rites, showed it to be a comparatively late and entirely W. innovation and hence not an essential for Ordination. *Pius XII in his Apostolic Constitution 'Sacramentum Ordinis' of 30 Nov. 1947 laid down that the laying on of hands was the sole 'matter' of the sacrament, and this view is now incorporated in the 1968 RC Ordination rite. In the first Anglican Ordinal (1550) the New Testament was delivered to deacons and the Bible and chalice with the bread to priests, each with a corresponding charge, but in the Ordinal attached to the Second BCP (1552) the chalice with the bread was omitted at the Ordination of priests, although the accompanying charge remained unchanged.

St. Thomas, Summa Theologica, Suppl., qu. xxxv, art. 5 [but a different view is perhaps implied in qu. xxxvii, art. 5]. Relevant section of Eugenius IV's decree is pr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 1965), p. 336 (No. 1326), with useful note, p. 332. 'Sacramentum Ordinis' is pr. in A.A.S., xl (1948), pp. 5–7. J. Morin, Commentarius de Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (Paris, 1655), esp. pt. III, Exercitatio vii (pp. 129–57, 'De Presbyteratus Materia et Forma'). F. Dalbus (pseud. of F. Portal), Les Ordinations anglicanes (Arras, 1894; orig. pr. in La Science catholique for 15 Dec. 1893, 15 Jan. 1894, and 15 April 1894) [by a tour de force argues that the suppression of the porrectio instrumentorum at the Reformation is the sole ground against the validity of Anglican Ordinations].

INSUFFLATION. The action of blowing or breathing upon a person or thing to symbolize the influence of the Holy Spirit. The *Vulgate uses the term of the Lord's breathing on the disciples (haec cum dixisset insufflavit, Jn. 20. 22). Its purpose is the expulsion of evil spirits. The RC Church still has a special rite of insufflation in connexion with the consecration of chrism on *Maundy Thursday, and until recently also for that of the baptismal water. In some E. rites an insufflation is still found in all baptisms, infant and adult, e.g. among the *Maronites.

INTENTION. The word is used in religious contexts in several senses.

(1) In moral theology, for an act of free will directed to the attainment of an end. Such intention may be 'actual', if one wills with conscious attention; 'virtual', if one continues to will in virtue of an antecedent decision, though at the moment not consciously aware of it; 'habitual', if all voluntary action has ceased but without the original decision being revoked; and 'interpretative', if a certain intention is ascribed to a person who has no opportunity to confirm or deny the imputation. The intention influences the morality of an action. A good intention makes a morally indifferent action good and increases the worth of an action good in itself, but does not make a bad action good. A bad intention, on the other hand, whilst making an indifferent action bad and worsening an action bad in itself, ruins even a good action.

(2) In the administration of the Sacraments, the purpose of doing what the Church does (quod facit ecclesia). If the right *form and the right *matter were alone needed, apart from any intention, Sacraments might occasionally be conferred by accident, e.g. in religious drama or in demonstrations or rehearsals. The requirement of such intention was laid down by the Council of *Trent (Sess. 7, can. 11). In the 16th and 17th cents. it was held by some RC theologians, e.g. by Catharinus in his De Intentione Ministri (Rome, 1552), that the required intention existed if the minister intended to perform the customary rites, though not to confer the Sacraments of the Church, i.e. if he possessed the so-called 'exterior intention'. This opinion has also been defended by some Anglican scholars. Most modern theologians, however, agree in requiring the 'interior intention' of the minister for the validity of the Sacrament. It was esp. on the grounds of defect of intention that *Leo XIII condemned *Anglican Ordinations (q.v.) by the bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896). The nature of the intention required from the recipient (as opposed to the minister) varies with the particular Sacrament. In the case of children under the age of reason and mentally deficient persons, clearly no intention can be necessary for the validity of such Sacraments as they are capable of receiving. The sacramental theology of the E. Church on the whole avoids all use of the concept of intention.

(3) The special object, spiritual or material, for which a prayer of intercession is made. Thus a 'Mass intention' is the particular end to which the celebrant prays that the fruits of the sacrifice may be applied, e.g. the repose of the soul of one who has died.

(4) In the Scholastic theories of knowledge, the term was sometimes used of the objects of knowledge in so far as they are present to the knowing consciousness. Thus, as contrasted with the real tree, which is the object of external perception, there was held to be an 'intentional tree' in the mind of the knower, and the conceptual tree was thus said to have an 'intentional existence' (ens or esse intentionale). This doctrine, taken up in the 19th cent. by F. *Brentano, was developed by E. Husserl, who maintained that every mental act was directed towards some entity, and that thus intentionality was the characteristic mark of consciousness.

A. Thouvenin in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2267–80. S. da Romallo and G. Rambaldi in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 66–73, s.v. 'Intenzione'. H. J. Fischer in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1838–58, s.v., with bibl.

INTERCESSION. Petitionary prayer on behalf of others. Such prayer, implicit or explicit, forms part of almost all Christian worship, and in particular of all the traditional forms of the Liturgy of the *Eucharist. Intercession may be made (1) in words of definite petition, (2) in mental prayer, by direction of thought, (3) by offering a service or action for a specified *intention.

INTERDICT. Acc. to CIC, can. 2268, an ecclesiastical punishment in the RC Church excluding the faithful from participation in spiritual things, but without loss of the Communion of the Church. Interdicts are of several kinds. The 'personal' interdict is attached only to particular persons; the 'local' forbids sacred actions in particular places; the 'general' refers to a whole district or its population; and the 'partial' visualizes only certain parts or inhabitants of a district. The 1917 canon law no longer mentions 'cessatio a divinis', which prohibited all cultual actions in certain places.

An interdict can be imposed only by the Pope, except in cases of single persons, groups of persons, or parishes, when it falls within the competence of the bishop. Acc. to present legislation the chief effects of a general local interdict are the cessation of the administration of the Sacraments and of all solemn services. Exceptions are made, however, for the Last Sacraments; for clerics not personally responsible for the interdict, who are allowed to perform all religious rites privately with doors locked and in a low voice; for one Mass which may be said in the cathedral or parish church; and for certain high Feasts, viz. *Christmas, *Easter, *Pentecost, *Corpus Christi, and the *Assumption. The lifting of the interdict follows the expression of repentance.

Cases of interdicts are attested from the 6th cent. At first they were imposed only on the churches of a single city, but from the 9th cent. they were extended to dioceses, and from the 12th to whole countries. *Alexander III placed Scotland under an interdict for the expulsion of the Bp. of St. Andrews, and *Innocent III used this powerful weapon with great effect in his struggles with Philip Augustus of France (1200) and *John of England (1208). With the decline of Papal influence in the later Middle Ages the interdict lost most of its force, and in modern times it is used very rarely. Modern examples are those imposed on the Convent of Marienthal near Strassburg in 1921 and on the parish church of Barbentane in Provence in 1929.

A. Haas, Das Interdikt nach geltendem Recht mit einem geschichtlichen Ueberblick (1923). E. J. Coran, The Interdict (Washington, 1930). W. Richter, S.J., De Origine et Evolutione Interdicti usque ad aetatem Ivonis Carnotensis et Paschalis II (Textus et Documenta in usum Exercitationum et Praelectionum Academicarum, Series Theologica 12 and 13; Pontificia Universitas *Gregoriana, 1934). A. Auer, O.S.B., 'Eine verschollene Denkschrift über das grosse Interdikt des 14. Jahrhunderts' in Hist.J., xlvi (1926), pp. 532–49; H. Maisonneuve, 'L'Interdit dans le droit classique de l'Église' in Mélanges d'histoire du moyen âge dédiés à la mémoire de Louis Halphen (1951), pp. 465–81. A. Boudinhon in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 73–5, s.v.; E. Jombart in D.D.C., v (1953), cols. 1464–75, s.v.

INTERIM OF AUGSBURG. See Augsburg Interim.

INTERIM RITE. The Order of Holy Communion in the C of E proposed in 1931 by A. Chandler, formerly Bp. of Blomfontein, after the rejection of the proposed BCP of 1927–8. Its distinctive feature was the placing of the Prayer of Oblation immediately after the Consecration, followed by the *Lord's Prayer, i.e. the use of the prayers of the 1662 BCP in the sequence of the 1549 Book. This order had been used by Bp. J. *Overall in the 17th cent. and recently urged by W. H. *Frere. In the post-1928 period it was thought in some circles to represent the probable direction of any future Prayer Book revision, and it was hoped that if a sufficient number of priests undertook to use it until a formal revision was authorized, it might receive episcopal approval; hence, it became known as the 'Interim' rite. In spite of the criticism of G. *Dix, it passed into frequent and widespread use. The *Alternative Services, Holy Communion Rite (Series I), authorized a use closely akin to the Interim Rite, and the ASB allows most of its elements.

J. M. M. Dalby, 'Alternative Services: The Canon of Series 1' in C.Q.R., clxviii (1967), pp. 442–51, with reff.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION. See Jehovah's Witnesses.

INTERSTICES. The spaces of time which, by canon law, must elapse between the conferment of different *orders in the Christian ministry upon the same person. In the RC Church the Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 978) laid down that the intervals between *minor orders should be at the bishop's discretion, though it was forbidden to confer all the minor orders on the same day; between the order of acolyte and that of *subdeacon a year was to elapse, between subdeacon and *deacon three months. These rules were in practice dispensable. It is, however, strictly laid down that two major orders may not be received on the same day, and some space of time is to elapse between the lesser 'ministeria' or minor orders. In the C of E the 1969 Canons reaffirm the prohibition against conferring the diaconate and priesthood upon the same man on the same day, 'unless he have a faculty from the Archbishop of Canterbury' (Can. C 3.7) and add that a 'deacon shall not be ordained to the priesthood for at least one year, unless the bishop shall find good cause to the contrary' (Can. C 3.8).

J. M. Gannon, The Interstices Required for the Promotion to Orders (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, cxcvi; 1944).

INTHRONIZATION. See Enthronization.

INTINCTION. In liturgical usage, the practice of dipping the Eucharistic bread into consecrated or unconsecrated wine prior to Holy Communion. Its first use seems to have been in clinical Communion (cf. *Dionysius of Alexandria in *Eusebius, H.E., VI. xliv); the consecrated bread was moistened with unconsecrated wine to make consumption easier for the sick person. Later it became a regular method of Communion with the two consecrated species in both E. and W. In the E. the Hosts to be reserved for the Mass of the Presanctified and for viaticum were intincted by means of the communion spoon (λαβίς). The method in use in the W. is less certain. Intinction was forbidden by the Council of *Braga of 675, but it was reintroduced and is attested for Cluny in the 10th cent. A third form of intinction, resting on the belief that the consecrated Host itself exercised a consecratory effect on the unconsecrated wine, is described in the Ordines Romani. In all forms it had virtually disappeared in the Latin West by c. 1200. In recent times it has been revived sporadically in the Anglican Communion as a method of giving Holy Communion to the sick, and in the RC Church it was authorized in 1965 as one of the three ways of receiving Communion in both kinds.

W. H. Freestone, The Sacrament Reserved (1917; Alcuin Club Collections, XXI), ch. x. M. Andrieu, Immixtio et Consecratio. La consécration par contact dans les documents liturgiques du moyen âge (1924).

INTROIT. In the W. Church, the opening act of worship in the Mass. Originally it consisted of a whole Psalm, sung with antiphon and Gloria Patri. It was sung as the celebrant entered the church. In the Ordo Romanus Primus* (early 8th cent.) it is prescribed that the celebrant should stop the singing when he reached the altar; by the time of (*Mabillon's) tenth Ordo (13th cent.) the practice of singing a single verse of the Psalm was established. Acc. to the present (1970) RC rite the Introit may be sung or said as the celebrant approaches the sanctuary; if it is said only the antiphon need be recited, but if sung the Psalm, or at least part of it, is required, unless some other chant is substituted. The 1549 BCP provided for an entire Psalm, with Gloria Patri, but without antiphon, to be sung as an Introit. In subsequent revisions of the English Prayer Book the Introits have been omitted, though their use has been widely revived unofficially in the C of E since the middle of the 19th cent. and the ASB specifically states that at the entry of the ministers a 'Sentence may be used; and a Hymn, or a Canticle, or a Psalm may be sung'.

The Introit is thought to be of later origin than the *Gradual, from which it differs in not being an integral part of the service; it was introduced to accompany the entrance procession. In *Gallican rites the Introit was called 'Antiphona ad praelegendum'; in the *Ambrosian, 'Ingressa'; in the *Mozarabic and others, 'Officium'. The title 'antiphona ad introitum' was restored in the RC Holy Week liturgy of 1955 and remains in the 1970 Missal.

Eng. tr. of *Sarum Introits in E.H., Nos. 657–733. H. Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1212–20. Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 414–29; Eng. tr., i, pp. 320–33.

INVENTION OF THE CROSS, The. Acc. to legend the three crosses on *Golgotha (of Christ and the two robbers) were found (Lat. inventae) by St. *Helena, the mother of *Constantine, the true one being identified by a miracle. St. *Ambrose, whose 'Oratio de Obitu Theodosii' (395) is the first work to connect the event with St. Helena, is followed by many other Fathers such as St. John *Chrysostom and *Paulinus of Nola. St. *Jerome, however, who lived quite near the place, is silent on the matter. St. *Cyril of Jerusalem, without mentioning St. Helena, states that the Cross was found at Jerusalem in the time of Constantine (d. 337), and it has been suggested that this occurred during the excavations for the Emperor's basilica of the *Holy Sepulchre. The relic was preserved in that church in a silver receptacle, after a large part of the wood had been distributed among the churches throughout the world. The veneration of the Cross at Jerusalem is first described in the Pilgrimage of *Etheria. In the Greek Church the Feast of the Finding of the Cross was originally kept on 14 Sept., now the Feast of the *Exaltation of the Cross (q.v.), together with the consecration of Constantine's two Jerusalem basilicas. The commemoration on 3 May, which seems to go back to the apocryphal treatise 'De Inventione Crucis Dominicae', is not found in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. It was probably first observed on this day in Gaul in the 7th cent. and thence came to Rome c. 800. It was suppressed in 1960. See also Exaltation of the Cross.

J. Straubinger, Die Kreuzauffindungslegende. Untersuchungen über ihre altchristlichen Fassungen mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der syrischen Texte (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, xi, Hft. 3; 1912). A. Frolow, La Relique de la Vraie Croix. Recherches sur le développement d'un culte (Archives de l'Orient, vii; 1961); id., Les Reliquaires de la Vraie Croix (ib., viii; 1965). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., iii (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3131–9, s.v. 'Croix (Invention et exaltation de la vraie)'; E. Romanelli in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 130–2, s.v. 'Invenzione della Santa Croce'. On the Feast, cf. A. Bugnini in E.C., iv (1950), cols. 960–3, s.v. 'Croce, VII'. See also bibl. to Exaltation of the Cross.

INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY, The. The famous dispute dating from the late 11th–12th cent. over the claim of the Emperor and other lay princes to invest an Abbot- or Bishop-elect with the ring and staff and to receive homage from him before his consecration. The custom, which was closely linked with lay-patronage, was condemned by Pope Nicholas II in 1059; and in 1075 all lay investiture was expressly forbidden by *Gregory VII. Serious attempts were now made to enforce anti-investiture legislation; the prohibition was repeated by Gregory in 1076, 1078, and 1080, and by subsequent Popes; and in the ensuing controversy between the Papacy and the Emps. *Henry IV and V, wide political issues became involved.

In England the matter became esp. acute under St. *Anselm, who tried to enforce a decree of a Council of Rome (1099) excommunicating all who gave or received lay investiture. He himself refused to do homage to Henry I (1100) or to consecrate Bishops who had received lay investiture. In 1105 a compromise was reached, ratified in the Council of London of 1107, acc. to which Henry was allowed to receive homage for temporalities before consecration in return for a complete renunciation of lay investiture.

In France a tacit understanding was apparently reached between Philip I and the Pope in the same year (1107). A formal settlement was at last reached in the Empire by the Concordat of *Worms (1122; q.v.), the provisions of which were reasserted by the First *Lateran Council (1123; cans. 8 and 9), the Emperor relinquishing the right to invest with ring and staff but continuing to bestow the temporalities, and in Germany receiving homage before consecration and in other parts of the Empire after six months' delay. In Germany he was also allowed some influence in elections.

Although the Papacy won a complete victory over the issue of lay investiture itself, lay rulers retained a varying degree of control over elections.

For text of the official documents, see bibll. to Popes (Gregory VII, *Urban II, *Paschal II, and *Callistus II), Emperor (Henry IV), and contemporary monarchs concerned. Contemporary information is pr. in M.G.H., Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII (3 vols., 1891–7). Eng. tr. of a selection of the relevant docc. in E. F. Henderson (ed.), Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages (Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 1892), pp. 351–409. E. Bernheim, Quellen zur Geschichte des Investiturstreits (Quellensammlung zur deutschen Geschichte; 2 Hfte., 1907); A. Scharnagl, Der Begriff der Investitur in den Quellen und der Literatur des Investiturstreits (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, lvi; 1908). P. Schmid, Der Begriff der kanonischen Wahl in den Anfängen des Investiturstreits (1926). A. Fliche, La Querelle des investitures (1946), with bibl. G. Tellenbach, Libertas, Kirche und Weltordnung im Zeitalter des Investiturstreites (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, vii; 1936; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1940). N. F. Cantor, Church, Kingship, and Lay Investiture in England, 1089–1135 (Princeton, 1958), passim. Z. N. Brooke, 'Lay Investiture and its Relation to the Conflict of Empire and Papacy' in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxv (1939), pp. 217–47. A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1946), pp. 76–390 passim. K. Löffler in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 84–9, s.v. 'Investitures, Conflict of'; J. Gaudemet in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 601–4, s.v. 'Investiture Struggle', with further bibl. See also bibl. s.v. Worms, Concordat of.

INVINCIBLE IGNORANCE. A term in *moral theology denoting ignorance of a kind that cannot be removed by serious moral effort. It totally excuses from sin because, being involuntary, it can involve no intention of breaking the law of God. It is to be distinguished from 'vincible ignorance', which, though partly excusing from sin, is culpable in itself, apart from the action to which it leads, as it involves neglect to acquire information necessary to avoid the transgression. The term 'invincible ignorance' is frequently used, esp. by RC theologians, with reference to those who, because of their upbringing and environment, are unable to accept the teachings of the Church.

K. E. *Kirk, Ignorance, Faith and Conformity (1925). E. Mangenot in D.T.C., vii (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 731–40, s.v. 'Ignorance'; L. Simeone in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 1606–12, s.v. 'Ignoranza', both with bibl.

INVITATORY. In the Lat. Breviary, the Psalm Venite (AV Ps. 95; Vulg. Ps. 94), with its corresponding *antiphon, which stand at the outset of the first Office of the day. The recitation of the Psalm at the Night Office was already ordered by St. *Benedict (ch. 9). Until recently it invariably came at the beginning of Mattins, but the 1971 Roman Breviary orders that the Invitatory be said before Lauds if that is the Office said first in the day, or before the Office of Readings if that comes first, and it provides Pss. 23, 66 or 99 (Vulg.) as alternatives. The antiphon (also itself alone sometimes termed the Invitatory) varies acc. to the season and is repeated several times in the course of the Psalm. In the BCP the Venite is retained at Morning Prayer, with the antiphon discarded ('without any Invitatory', 1549). See also Venite.

J. Pascher, 'Das Invitatorium' in Liturgisches Jahrbuch, x (1960), pp. 149–58. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in C.E., viii (1910), p. 89 f.; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1419–22, with bibl.

INVOCATION OF THE SAINTS. See Saints, Devotion to the.

I.O.D.G. See U.I.O.D.G.

IONA (or Hy). A small island of the Inner Hebrides; the present form of the name is said to derive from an error in copying 'Ioua insula' (as in *Adamnan's Life of St. *Columba). From another early name of the island, it appears that it was already sacred when St. Columba landed in 563 and founded a monastery which rapidly became the centre of *Celtic Christianity. From this monastery missionaries were sent to *Scotland and N. England and numerous daughter houses were established. After his death, until the removal of his relics in the 9th cent., the island was a popular centre of pilgrimages; and the monastery became famous for its learning. Although many times plundered by Norsemen, it was repeatedly rebuilt and survived until the Reformation. The *Benedictine rule was adopted c. 1203. A nunnery (prob. *Augustinian) was also established in association with the monastery. In 1561 the buildings were dismantled by order of the Convention of Estates.

There are traces of a bishop's see at Iona in the 7th and 8th cents. From 1506 until the Reformation the abbey church served as the cathedral of the Scottish diocese of the Western Isles.

Recent excavations have revealed the prob. site of St. Columba's cell to the W. of the present church, together with wooden and stone foundations of the Celtic monastery. The graveyard, known as Reilig Oran, was the burying-place of the kings of Scotland from the 9th to the 11th cent., and the walls of the (restored) chapel of St. Oran may go back to the earlier part of this period; the elaborate doorway is 12th-cent. work. St. Martin's cross exhibits 9th-cent. carving and there are fragments of at least four other early crosses. Of the 13th-cent. abbey church (which served as the cathedral) only the N. walls and transept remain; the greater part of the old building dates from the 15th-cent. reconstruction of the abbey. After falling into ruins, the church was restored and reroofed c. 1900. Rebuilding of the conventual buildings was begun by the Iona Community in 1938 and completed in 1966. The ruins of the original nunnery are also preserved.

The Iona Community was founded in 1938 by the Rev. George MacLeod (b. 1895; created Baron MacLeod of Fuinary in 1967) for the general purpose of expressing in social terms the theology of the *Incarnation and using the co-operative rebuilding of the Benedictine abbey as the symbol of its purpose. Its members are ministers and laymen of the Church of Scotland and others who live together in Iona for three months in the year in preparation for work in Scottish industrial areas and in the mission field. It lays special stress on political activity, the discipline of devotional and economic witness and spiritual healing. It was officially recognized by the General Assembly in 1951.

E. C. Trenholme, S.S.J.E., The Story of Iona (1909), with bibl.; T. Hannan, Iona and Some of its Satellites (1928). J. Drummond, Sculptured Monuments in Iona and the West Highlands (Archaeologia Scotica, 1881), pp. 3–6 and pll. I–XLIV. L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 1461 f., s.v., for futher reff. G. [F.] MacLeod, We Shall Rebuild. The Work of the Iona Community on Mainland and Island [1944].

IOTA. The Greek letter ι (corresponding to the Hebrew yod both in sound and as being the smallest letter of the alphabet), mentioned in Christ's saying that 'one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law' (Mt. 5. 18). The English 'jot', a transliteration of this Greek word (ἰῶτα), derives its meaning from this text.

IRELAND, Christianity in. Intercourse with Britain prob. brought Christianity to Ireland by the 4th cent., but the early history is obscure and much contested. Pope *Celestine I (422–32) sent *Palladius as first Bishop to the 'Irish believing in Christ'; he was followed by St. *Patrick in the second third of the 5th cent. Both seem to have been concerned not only with evangelization but also with the organization of a Church already existing, at least in the N. and E. of the country, and St. Patrick established the see of *Armagh. After the break-up of the Roman civilization, Ireland, comparatively isolated from the rest of Christendom, developed a Church life very much on her own. Although an episcopal system had been established by the early missionaries, the bishops became subordinated to a peculiar degree to the heads of land-owning communities, esp.

abbots and abbesses, but to laymen also; numbers of bishops were consecrated without dioceses, and no parochial system was developed. Hermits remained alongside the considerable cenobitical communities which developed in the 6th cent., and came into prominence again in the 8th cent. (see Culdees). Learning flourished in the Irish monasteries, which produced masterpieces of art, such as the Book of *Kells. The monasteries were also centres of missionary activity, notable examples being the mission of St. *Columba to Scotland and of St. *Columban to the Continent. Gradually under influences from S. Wales the communities began to be brought into closer alignment with contemporary practice elsewhere. In the 7th cent. the dispute between the *Celtic Church in Anglo-Saxon Britain and St. *Augustine's mission was reflected in Ireland, the South accepting Roman practices earlier than the North, though the question was not completely settled until a generation after the Synod of *Whitby (664). From the end of the 8th cent., when the invasions of the Northmen began, Irish scholars and ecclesiastics went abroad in large numbers; the best known of those who followed were *Sedulius Scottus and Johannes Scotus *Erigena.

The rise of the see of *Dublin in the 11th cent. was linked with a movement for closer contact with Norman England and with the W. Church as a whole. Celsus (or 'Cellach'), Bp. of Armagh (d. 1129), was won over by the reformers and various steps were taken by the Synods of Rathbreasail (1111), Kells (1152) and *Cashel (c. 1172), of which the most important was the establishment of fixed sees. Meanwhile St. *Malachy had brought back four *Cistercians from *Clairvaux and in 1142 established the first Irish house of the Order. The English conquest of 1172 completed the ecclesiastical process. In the following centuries there was a tendency to appoint Englishmen to Irish sees, but the Irish Church always retained a strong individuality.

The *Reformation was less thorough in Ireland than elsewhere. In areas where the government's influence was effective the monasteries were suppressed, but the friars continued to live a vagrant life. Under *Henry VIII the majority of the clergy and laity in contact with the government were ready to give nominal assent to the royal claims of the 1537 Irish Supremacy Act, but no serious attempt was made to win the majority of the Irish people to Reformation principles. Under *Elizabeth I the Church was officially reformed on the same lines as in England and by the enactments of the Irish Parliament of 1560 made dependent upon the state. Translation of the Prayer Book into Irish was forbidden (Latin was permitted where English was unknown) but the old service-books continued in use in many places and there was practically no persecution of those who did not conform.

The plantation of English and Scots settlers at the beginning of the 17th cent. provided a stronghold of militant Protestantism in Ulster. At the same time, *Trinity College, Dublin, founded in 1591 for members of the Established Church, came under the influence of *Puritans from Cambridge. In 1615 the *Irish Articles, which were slightly more *Calvinist than the *Thirty-Nine Articles, were promulgated, and J. *Ussher withstood attempts to introduce into Ireland the reforms favoured by W. *Laud. In 1635, however, Strafford as Governor was able to secure the acceptance of the Thirty-Nine Articles in Ireland. The RC rebellion of 1641 led O. *Cromwell to set up a Protestant economic ascendancy a few years later, which *Charles II only partially mitigated. On his succession the Church of Ireland was strengthened by the elevation of J. *Bramhall to the archbishopric of Armagh (1661) and by the consecration of twelve other Bishops, incl. J. *Taylor. In 1658 the Bible was issued in Irish.

At the beginning of the 18th cent. a stricter penal code brought further unpopularity to the Church of Ireland, which was increased by the fact that the Church drew most of its tithes from RC tenant farmers. The appointment of Englishmen to Irish bishoprics also weakened the Church, and, despite the efforts of men such as W. *King, the Church seems to have suffered a general spiritual decline. Disestablishment, foreshadowed by the Church Temporalities Bill of 1833, which reduced the archbishoprics to two and the other sees to eight, was provided for by the Act of 1869, and came into force in 1871. The governing body of the Church then became the General Synod, consisting of Bishops and representatives of the Diocesan Synods, which deal with local affairs and until 1959 elected the Bishops; these are now chosen by an electoral college representing all the dioceses of the province in which the vacancy has occurred. The BCP was revised in 1878 and in 1924–6, though the dominant Evangelical party failed to make as sweeping changes as they wished.

After the Reformation, which never secured the allegiance of more than a minority of the Irish people, Catholicism retained its hold on the masses outside the Pale. The maintenance of contact with Rome and of Catholic life was much facilitated by the *Franciscans and the *Jesuits, who came to Ireland at an early date. During the 17th cent. economic power came to be largely transferred to the settlers, but apart from the period following the invasion of O. Cromwell, there was little persecution of RCs. Oliver *Plunket (d. 1681) was among the relatively few who suffered the death penalty, and this at a time when fear of RC-ism was unusually strong in England. The toleration promised by William III in the Treaty of Limerick (1691) was not realized, and the continued recognition given by the Vatican to *James II's son was prob. among the reasons for the more repressive penal measures against RCs at the beginning of the 18th cent. The imposition of an oath against *transubstantiation on those taking office excluded RCs from public service and the discriminatory laws against succession to Catholic estates led to a further decline in their economic status. By the middle of the 18th cent., however, restrictions were being less strictly applied, and tension was sufficiently eased for the clergy of Dublin to pray publicly for the Hanoverian royal family under George III. Towards the end of the 18th cent. freedom of worship and freedom of education were granted by the various *Catholic Relief Acts (q.v.), and in 1795 *Maynooth College was founded. Finally, through the efforts of D. *O'Connell and the *Catholic Association, emancipation was achieved on 13 Apr. 1829. This was followed by a period of rapid expansion and reorganization, largely inaugurated by the appointment of Paul Cullen (d. 1878) as Abp. of Dublin and Apostolic Delegate. A plenary synod was held at Thurles in 1850 and efforts were soon made to tackle the questions of payment for the clergy and the irregularities (such as the celebration of marriages in the evening and hearing of confessions in private houses) which had developed in Ireland in times when few church buildings were available. A massive programme of church building was undertaken, despite the fact that in general the RCs in Ireland were among the less wealthy section of the community. In the century following emancipation 24 cathedrals or pro-cathedrals (incl. that of Dublin, begun in 1815 and completed in 1825) were erected, as well as over 3,000 substantial churches. Since the creation of the Irish Free State in 1922, the RC Church in Southern Ireland has received strong government support, and its rights were given further recognition in the Constitution of 1937; at the same time religious toleration was specifically established for Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Quakers and Jews. There are four provinces and 26 sees. The vitality of Irish Catholicism as a power in daily life is unsurpassed.

In the island as a whole, acc. to the 1971 census, c. 73 per cent. of the population professes the RC faith (c. 93 per cent. of the population in the Republic and c. 35 per cent. in Northern Ireland). The main strength of Anglicanism and Presbyterianism is in Northern Ireland, where they form respectively 24 per cent. and 29 per cent. of the population. The discontent of the RCs was one of the causes of recent disturbances.

T. Olden, The Church of Ireland [to the Disestablishment] (National Churches, 1892). W. A. Phillips (ed.), History of the Church of Ireland from the Earliest Times to the Present Day (3 vols., 1933), with detailed bibl. T. J. Johnston–J. L. Robinson–R. W. Jackson, A History of the Church of Ireland (Dublin, 1953). A. Bellesheim, Geschichte der katholischen Kirche in Irland (3 vols., 1890–1). The best modern study of Irish Church history from an RC standpoint is P. J. Corish (ed.), A History of Irish Catholicism (Dublin, 1967 ff.). G. T. Stokes, Ireland and the Celtic Church. A History of Ireland from St. Patrick to the English Conquest in 1172 (1886; ed. 6 by H. J. Lawlor, 1907). Id., Ireland and the Anglo-Norman Church. A History of Ireland and Irish Christianity from the Anglo-Norman Conquest to the Dawn of the Reformation (1899). Kathleen Hughes, The Church in Early Irish Society (1966). W. Delius, Geschichte der irischen Kirche von ihren Anfängen bis zum 12. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1954). J. Ryan, Irish Monasticism. Origins and Development (1931). C. Plummer (ed.), Miscellanea Hagiographica Hibernica (Subsidia Hagiographica, xv; 1925); W. W. Heist (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae ex codice olim Salmanticensi nunc Bruxellensi (ib., xxxviii; 1965). J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland. An Introduction and a Guide, i, Ecclesiastical (Records of Civilization, New York, 1929). J. T. Ball, The Reformed Church of Ireland (1886). H. Holloway, The Reformation in Ireland. A Study of Ecclesiastical Legislation (1919). M. V. Ronan, The Reformation in Ireland under Elizabeth, 1558–1580 (1930). F. R. Bolton, The Caroline Tradition of the Church of Ireland with special reference to Bishop Jeremy Taylor (1958). D. H. Akenson, The Church of Ireland. Ecclesiastical Reform and Revolution, 1800–1885 (New Haven–London, 1971). P. M. H. Bell, Disestablishment in Ireland and Wales (C.H.S., 1969), pp. 1–225. R. D. Edwards, Church and State in Tudor Ireland. A History of the Penal Laws against Irish Roman Catholics, 1534–1603 (1935), with bibl. E. R. Norman, The Catholic Church and Ireland in the Age of Rebellion, 1859–1873 (1965). J. S. Reid, History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland . . . [to 1735] continued to the Present Time, by W. D. Killen (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1834–53; new ed. revised by D. W. Killen, 3 vols., Belfast, 1867). J. C. Beckett, Protestant Dissent in Ireland, 1687–1780 (1948). I. Grubb, Quakers in Ireland, 1654–1900 (1927). E. A. D'Alton in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 98–116, s.v. J. H. Whyte, Church and State in Modern Ireland (Dublin, 1971; ed. 2, 1980).

IRELAND, JOHN (1761–1842), Dean of *Westminster. Having entered Oriel College, Oxford, as a Bible clerk in 1779, he became Vicar of Croydon in 1793, and succeeded W. *Vincent as Dean of Westminster in 1816. He gave large sums to the university of Oxford for classical scholarships, and in his will he founded the chair of Exegesis of the Holy Scriptures (since 1947 confined to the NT) which goes by his name, and some exhibitions at Oriel College.

E. *Hawkins, An Inaugural Lecture upon the Foundation of Dean Ireland's Professorship, read before the University of Oxford, Nov. 2, 1847, with brief notices of the Founder (1848), esp. pp. 9–12, and Appendix, pp. 45–59, with reff. to obituary notices.

IRENAEUS, St. (c. 130 – c. 200), Bp. of Lyons. Relatively little is known of his life, but as he heard *Polycarp as a boy, it is generally supposed that he was a native of Smyrna. He studied at *Rome, and later became a presbyter of Lyons, in which capacity he was commissioned to take letters to Pope Eleutherius at Rome, requesting toleration for the *Montanists of Asia Minor. There is no evidence, however, to show that Irenaeus himself sympathized with the sect. During his absence fierce persecution took place at Lyons (c. 177), in which Pothinus, the bishop, was among the martyrs; and on his return (c. 178) Irenaeus succeeded to the see. In 190 he wrote to Pope *Victor on behalf of the *Quartodecimans of Asia Minor. Whether or not he met a martyr's death is uncertain. Feast day, 28 June.

Irenaeus forms in thought and action an important link between E. and W. His chief work, the 'Adversus omnes Haereses' (Ἔλεγχος καὶ Ἀνατροπὴ τῆς Ψευδωνύμου Γνώσεως), is a detailed attack upon *Gnosticism, esp. the system of *Valentinus, and the *millenarianism popular in Montanist circles. Part of it is preserved in Greek, but the whole text survives in a literal Latin version and sections of it are also extant in *Syriac and *Armenian. As sources Irenaeus appears to have drawn upon *Justin and *Theophilus of Antioch, and he was himself drawn upon regularly by subsequent heresiologists. In modern times a second work, 'The Demonstration of the Apostolic Preaching' (Εἰς Ἐπίδειξιν τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ Κηρύγματος), has been discovered in an Armenian translation. It is an apologetic work, notable for its lavish use of the OT.

St. Irenaeus is the first great Catholic theologian. Unlike *Clement of Alexandria he opposed Gnosticism, not by setting up a rival Christian Gnosis, but by emphasizing the traditional elements in the Church, esp. the Episcopate, the Canon of Scripture, and, so far as such already existed, the religious and theological tradition. In his insistence on Christian Monotheism, on the unity of Father and Son in the work of Revelation and the Redemption, and on the fullness of the Incarnation of Christ he goes behind the *Apologists of the middle of the 2nd cent. to *Ignatius at its beginning. He developed a doctrine of the 'recapitulation' (ἀνακεφαλαίωσις; Lat. recapitulatio), or summary, of human evolution in the humanity of the Incarnate Christ, and thereby gave a positive value of its own to the Lord's full manhood. He also laid great stress on the co-ordinate authority of all four Gospels. See also Pfaff Fragments.

Early edd. of Adv. Haer. by D. *Erasmus (Basle, 1526), F. *Feuardent (Cologne, 1596), J. E. *Grabe (Oxford, 1702), and R. Massuet, O.S.B. (Paris, 1710). Later edd. by A. Stieren (Leipzig, 1848–53) and W. W. Harvey (Cambridge, 1857). Crit. text by A. Rousseau, O.S.B.–L. Doutreleau, S.J., and others, of Book i (S.C., cclxiii–cclxiv; 1979); of Book iii (ib., ccx–cccxi; 1974); and of Books iv and v (ib., c, clii, cliii; 1965–9). The 'Demonstration' was first publd. by K. Ter-Mekerttschian and E. Ter-Minassiantz (T.U., xxxi, Hft. 1; 1907). Eng. tr. of Adv. Haer. by J. *Keble in L.F. (posthumous, 1872) and by A. Roberts and W. H. Rambaut in A.N.C.L. (2 vols., 1868–9); of chief passages in Adv. Haer. by F. R. M. Hitchcock in S.P.C.K. 'Early Christian Classics' (2 vols., 1916); of 'Demonstration' by J. A. *Robinson, with good notes, in S.P.C.K. 'Translations of Christian Literature' (1920); Fr. tr. by L. M. Froidevaux (S.C., lxii; 1959). There is an immense modern literature. Recent studies in English include F. R. M. Hitchcock, Irenaeus of Lugdunum (1914), and J. Lawson, The Biblical Theology of St. Irenaeus (1948). On Irenaeus's Biblical text, W. *Sanday and C. H. *Turner, Novum Testamentum Sancti Irenaei (Oxford, 1923). On the Lat. vers. of Adv. Haer., S. Lundström, Studien zur lateinischen Irenäusübersetzung (Lund, 1943); id., Neue Studien zur lateinischen Irenäusübersetzung (Lund, 1948). F. M. M. Sagnard, O.P., La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de Saint Irénée (1947). G. Wingren, Människan och Inkarnationen enligt Irenaeus (Lund, 1947; Eng. tr., 1959). A. Houssiau, La Christologie de Saint Irénée (Louvain, 1955). A. Benoît, Saint Irénée. Introduction à l'étude de sa théologie (1960). N. Brox, Offenbarung, Gnosis und gnostischer Mythos bei Irenäus von Lyon (Salzburger Patristische Studien, i; 1966). A. Orbe, S.J., Antropología de San Ireneo (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1969). Altaner-Stuiber (1966), pp. 110–17, with bibl. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 287–313. F. Vernet in D.T.C., vii (1923), cols. 2394–2533, s.v., with full bibliographies to date (esp. cols. 2407–10); L. Doutreleau, S.J.–L. Regnault, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1923–69, s.v.

IRISH ARTICLES. The 104 articles of faith adopted by the Irish Episcopal Church in 1615 at its first Convocation. More definitely *Calvinistic than the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E (1562), which had never been accepted in Ireland, they were apparently compiled by J. *Ussher, then head of the faculty of theology at Dublin. They teach absolute predestination and perseverance, affirm that the Pope is antichrist, and make no mention of the threefold ministry or of the necessity of Episcopal Ordination. They remained the official statement of faith in the Church of Ireland down to 1635, when at a Convocation held under Strafford and his chaplain, J. *Bramhall, the Anglican Thirty-Nine Articles were adopted, apparently with the intention that they should replace those of 1615. Ussher, however, continued for a time to require subscription to both series, though ultimately the earlier ones became a dead letter. They seem to have exercised considerable influence on the text of the *Westminster Confession.

The text is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, iii, 526–44. Cf. also ib. i, § 85, pp. 662–5.

IRMOS. See Heirmos.

IRON CROWN, of Lombardy. A crown made for Theodelinda, widow of Authoris, King of Lombardy, and presented in 594 to the Duke of Turin, from whom it passed eventually to the recent royal house of Italy. It is of gold with an inner circlet of iron which is said to have been made from a nail of the true Cross. It is preserved in the cathedral church of Monza.

IRVING, EDWARD (1792–1834), Scottish minister associated with the origins of the '*Catholic Apostolic Church' (q.v.). He was a native of Annan, Dumfriesshire, and educated at Edinburgh university. He was appointed master of a school at Haddington in 1810 and at Kirkcaldy in 1812. Having been licensed to preach in the Church of Scotland in 1815, in 1819 he became the assistant of T. *Chalmers at Glasgow, where he had a great influence among the poorer population. In 1822 he was appointed minister of the Caledonian chapel in Hatton Garden, London, where his magnetic personality soon drew large congregations. But his merciless criticism of society and personalities later lost its attraction, and Irving then turned to *millenarian ideas. He was greatly impressed by a work of the Spanish *Jesuit, Lacunza (1816), which he translated under the title The Coming of the Messiah in Glory and Majesty (1827). This work brought Irving into contact with the circle of H. *Drummond, who was devoted to eschatological speculations. In 1828 he lectured at Edinburgh on the Book of Revelation. In 1830 he was excommunicated by the London presbytery for his tract on The Orthodox and Catholic Doctrine of our Lord's Human Nature, in which he declared Christ's human nature to be sinful; but he rejected their decision and continued to minister. In 1831 disturbances of a revivalist character began to occur at the services in his church at Regent Square, from which he was finally removed in 1832. His followers now constituted themselves the 'Catholic Apostolic Church'. In 1833 he was expelled from the ministry of the Church of Scotland. After travelling for some time in Dumfriesshire he returned to London, but, surprisingly, was accorded only an inferior rank in the sect which he had helped to found, and he died soon afterwards.

His Collected Writings appeared in 5 vols. in 1864–5. Life by M. O. W. Oliphant (2 vols., 1862). A. L. Drummond, Edward Irving and his Circle (1938). H. C. Whitley, Blinded Eagle. An Introduction to the Life and Teaching of Edward Irving (1955).

ISAAC, OT patriarch. The Divinely promised son of *Abraham and Sarah after a long childless marriage, who became the heir of the covenanted blessings (Gen. 17. 19, 21). To try Abraham's faith Jehovah asked him in sacrifice, but, satisfied with the perfect obedience of both father and son, accepted at the last moment a ram instead (Gen. 22). After Sarah's death Abraham procured a wife for Isaac from his own family, Rebecca, who became the mother of Esau and *Jacob (Gen. 24 and 25).

In the NT Isaac appears in Gal. 3. 16 and 4. 21–31 as a type of Christ and of the Church. He is both the son of the promise and the father of the faithful. In Heb. the sacrifice of Isaac is brought into connexion with the sacrifice of Christ (11. 17–19). This theme was developed in the Fathers, who regard his intended immolation as a type of the sacrifice of *Golgotha. Thus *Tertullian sees in Isaac carrying the wood the type of Christ carrying His Cross. St. *Cyril of Alexandria elaborates in detail the similarities between the two sacrifices, and St. *Augustine compares the ram substituted for Isaac with Christ crucified. In the Middle Ages the sacrifice of Isaac as a prefiguration of the Passion was a favourite topic of theologians. The important part which this conception has played in Christian art is shown by the paintings of the Catacombs, where the representation of the scene is used as a figure of the Eucharist. See also Abraham.

See comm. on Gen., cited s.v. H. J. Schoeps, 'The Sacrifice of Isaac in Paul's Theology' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lxv (1946), pp. 385–92; J. Daniélou, S.J., 'La Typologie d'Isaac dans le christianisme primitif' in Biblica, xxviii (1947), pp. 363–93; D. Lerch, Isaaks Opferung christlich gedeutet (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, xii; 1950). J. Gribomont, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1987–2005, s.v.

ISAAC THE GREAT, St. (c. 350–440), 10th *Catholicos of the *Armenian Church. He was the son of St. *Nerses and a lineal descendant of St. *Gregory the Illuminator. After studying at *Constantinople, he married, and then, after the early death of his wife, became a monk. He was appointed Catholicos of Armenia in 390. By gaining from Constantinople the recognition of the metropolitical rights of the Armenian Church, he terminated its long dependence on Caesarea in Cappadocia. He was also very active in fostering a national Armenian literature, translating in conjunction with St. *Mesrob much of the Bible and many other Greek works. Tradition also ascribes to him the authorship of many Armenian hymns, as well as (apparently erroneously) the Armenian Liturgy. In 425 he was deposed from his office by the Persians, but allowed later, in view of strong popular support, to regain his see. Feast days ('St. Sahak') in the Armenian Church, 9 Sept. and 25 Nov.

Three of Isaac's letters are preserved by *Moses of Chorene in his 'History of Armenia Major' (iii. 57); further letters ed. J. Izmiveantz in his 'Book of Letters' (Tiflis, 1901; in Armenian). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 195–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 350 f. S. Vailhé in C.E., viii (1910), p. 175 f., s.v.; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., in E.C., x (1953), col. 1616, s.v. 'Sahak (Isaac) I'; unsigned art. in Enciclopedia ecclesiastica, ed. A. Bernareggi–L. Cortesi, v (1952), p. 102, s.v. 'Isaaco (Saak) I'.

ISAAC OF NINEVEH (d. c. 700), also 'Isaac Syrus', *Nestorian Bp. of Nineveh. He was originally a monk of Bethabe in Kurdistan who after a brief episcopate retired to the monastery of Rabban Shapur. In his later years his teaching was under a cloud, owing to its divergence from Nestorian orthodoxy. His extensive writings, mainly on ascetic subjects and all in Syriac, were translated at an early date into Arabic, Ethiopic, and Greek. Extracts from the Greek version, the work of two monks of St. *Saba, Patrick and Abraham, were publd. by Nicephorus Theotokes (Leipzig, 1770) under the title Τοῦ ὁσίου πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἰσαὰκ . . . τὰ εὑρεθέντα ἀσκητικά.

Isaac of Nineveh is often confounded with a 4th cent. Syriac writer, Isaac of Antioch (also 'Isaac the Great', but to be distinguished again from the subject of the previous entry), extracts from whose writings have been publd. by G. *Bickell (2 vols., 1873–7) and P. Bedjan (1903).

The Syriac text of Isaac of Nineveh is in part unpubld. 82 treatises ed. P. Bedjan, De perfectione religiosa (Paris, 1909). Eng. tr. of these by A. J. Wensinck (Amsterdam, 1923). Latin versions in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi (1), 811–86 ('De Contemptu Mundi'). J. B. Chabot, De Isaaci Ninevitae Scriptis et Doctrina (1892). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 223–5. On Isaac of Antioch, I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 100–102; on Isaac of Nineveh, p. 145 f. L. Petit in D.T.C., viii (part 1; 1924), cols. 10–12, s.v.; B. Khalifé-Hachem in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2041–54, s.v.

ISABELLA OF CASTILE (1451–1504) ('la Católica'), Queen of Spain. The daughter of John II, King of Castile and León, she married *Ferdinand, heir to the Aragonese throne, in 1469, and on the death of Henry IV in 1474 ascended the Castilian throne. The reign of the 'Catholic Sovereigns', as she and her husband are called, laid the foundations of Spanish power and greatness. Under their aegis C. Columbus (d. 1506) made his discoveries, Granada was conquered from the Moors (1492), culture was patronized, the army modernized, and through a series of clever political moves and marriages Spain made one of the focal points of European diplomacy. A woman of strong religious principles and deep personal piety, she exercised a bracing influence at the Castilian court. She greatly assisted the efforts of Cardinal F. *Ximenes to raise the standard of the Spanish clergy, and of B. de *Las Casas to convert the American Indians. She was succeeded on the throne of Castile by her daughter, Juana la Loca ('the Insane'), but Ferdinand virtually ruled the country.

W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella (3 vols., '1838' [1837] and many later edd.). Lives by G. de Nervo (Paris, 1874; Eng. tr. 1897), W. T. Walsh (London, 1931), F. Gómez de Mercado y de Miguel (Madrid, 1943), C. Silio Cortés (ib., 1943), L. Fernández de Retana, C.SS.R. (2 vols., ib., 1947), M. B. Gaibrois (Segovia, 1953), and Tarsicio de Azcona, O.F.M.Cap. (Madrid, 1964). O. Ferrara, L'Avènement d'Isabelle la Catholique (Fr. tr., 1958), R. García y García de Castro, Virtudes de la Reina Católica (1961). See also bibl. to Ferdinand V.

ISAIAH. The Hebrew prophet of the 8th cent. B.C. He exercised influence at the court of the kings of Judah, and took a prominent part esp. in foreign politics. Called to the prophetic office in the year of King Uzziah's death (c. 740; Is. 6. 1), he continued his prophetic work till the Assyrian invasion of Judah in 701 B.C. Tradition relates his death by martyrdom in the reign of Manasseh (c. 690 – c. 640).

In his teaching Isaiah followed *Amos and *Hosea in asserting the supremacy of *Jehovah, the God of Israel, and in emphasizing His moral demands on His worshippers. He laid special stress on the Divine holiness (ch. 6), giving to this conception for the first time an ethical content. From these beliefs much of his teaching on particular matters followed, e.g. his political counsels, urging Judah to keep out of foreign alliances and trust only in God; his confidence in the inviolability of *Jerusalem; and his insistence that sacrificial worship must be accompanied by spiritual effort in the participants. The names of his sons were symbolic (7. 3; 8. 3), indicating his conviction that a 'remnant' of Judah would be saved from the downfall which was awaiting those who relied on human assistance. His expectations for the future were chiefly centred on his belief in the permanence of the Davidic dynasty, and around these expectations gathered the fervent hopes of successive generations of Jews. From NT times onwards the so-called Messianic passages in the prophecies ascribed to Isaiah (esp. 9. 2–7) have very frequently been referred by Christian writers to the historic Christ. See also the following entries.

ISAIAH, Ascension of. An apocryphal work well known in the early Church. It divides naturally into two parts. The first part (chs. 1–5) describes the circumstances of Isaiah's martyrdom by being 'sawn asunder' (though the thread of the narrative is awkwardly interrupted in chs. 3 and 4 by the detailed description of a vision); the second part (chs. 6–11) describes Isaiah's ascent in ecstasy through the heavens and the revelations made to him there. The work is extant complete only in Ethiopic; but a series of fragments make it certain that there were at one time complete *Coptic and Latin texts as well. There are also both Latin and Slavonic versions of chs. 6–11 only.

It is now generally agreed that the basis is a document describing Isaiah's martyrdom, prob. Jewish in origin and perhaps originally in *Hebrew or *Aramaic, into which a Christian editor has inserted a Christian apocalypse (3. 13–4. 22) and also made other minor additions and adaptations. Whether or not it was this same editor who added chs. 6–11 it is impossible to say. But the evidence of the versions compels us to assume that a complete Greek text lies behind them and this cannot be later than A.D. 350. The date of the final editing of the work must therefore be earlier. R. H. *Charles put it very much earlier (c. 150–200) and supposed that the three 'constituents' circulated independently even during the first century.

Edd. of Eth. text by A. *Dillmann (Leipzig, 1877), of Gk. fragment and Lat. texts by R. H. Charles (London 1900; also with Eng. tr. of Eth. and Lat. tr. of Slavonic), and of Coptic by L. T. Lefort in Le Muséon, li (1938), pp. 24–32, ib., lii (1939), pp. 7–10, and by P. Lacau, ib., lix (1946), pp. 453–67. Eng. tr. of 'Martyrdom of Isaiah' with introd. and notes by R. H. Charles, in R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1913), ii, pp. 155–62; also in S.P.C.K. series (London, 1917). Fr. tr. of Ethiopic text, with introd. and notes, by E. Tisserant (Documents pour l'Étude de la Bible, 1909). A. Vaillant, 'Un Apocryphe pseudo-bogomile: La Vision d'Isaïe' in Revue des Études slaves, xlii (1963), pp. 109–121. J. A. *Robinson in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 499–501.

ISAIAH, Book of. Traditionally the whole Book is ascribed to *Isaiah (q.v.), but critics are now generally agreed that everything after ch. 36, as well as considerable portions of the earlier chapters, have no real claim to be his.

The Book falls naturally into three divisions.

(1) Chs. 1–35. The sections which can be ascribed to Isaiah with most plausibility are the greater part of chs. 1–12, 16–22, and 28–32. Apart from the Prophet's inaugural vision (6) these prophecies are concerned chiefly with the political situation in Judah under Syrian pressure in the years 740–700 B.C. The so-called Syro-Ephraimite War (735 B.C.) was the occasion of the famous *Immanuel Prophecy (cf. Matt. 1. 22 f.), and most scholars hold that 1. 2–9 reflects the circumstances of the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib of Assyria in 701 B.C. (cf. 2 Kgs. 18. 13–19. 34). The definitely non-Isaianic items in this part of the Book include the Ode against Babylon (13. 1–14. 23), the Pronouncement of World Judgement (24–27), and the Prophecies on the Downfall of Edom and the Blessedness of God's People (34 f.), all of which would seem to be of considerably later date than the age of Isaiah. There are, however, no compelling grounds for questioning Isaiah's authorship of the Messianic passages in 9. 2–7 and 11. 1–9.

(2) Chs. 36–39. A section taken over from 2 Kgs. 18. 13–20. 19, with the addition of the 'Song of Hezekiah' (Is. 38. 10–20).

(3) Chs. 40–66. These chapters appear to be of a later date than the two previous sections and were known collectively to 19th cent. critics as '*Deutero-Isaiah'. More recently scholars have sub-divided the section, applying the title 'Deutero-Isaiah' to chs. 40–55 and attributing chs. 56–66, which seem to presuppose that the *Temple had been rebuilt, to a later author or authors dubbed '*Trito-Isaiah'.

The main theme of chs. 40–66 is Israel's redemption and her mission to the world. The purpose of chs. 40–55 is to encourage the Jewish exiles in Babylon; they are usually dated shortly before the release of the Jews by Cyrus in 537 B.C. Chs. 56–66 are dated after 520 B.C. While they have much in common with the previous chapters they hardly sustain the same level of teaching, notably in their attitude towards the Gentiles, who are conceived less as summoned to join in the common worship of Jehovah than as contributing to Israel's glory and physical needs. See also Servant Songs.

The chief Patristic commentaries on Isaiah come from *Origen, St. *Basil, St. *Cyril of Alexandria and St. *Jerome. Of the older English works the principal is that of R. *Lowth (London, 1778). More modern commentaries include those of F. J. *Delitzsch (Biblischer Commentar über das Alte Testament, Th. 3, Bd. i; 1866; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1867), T. K. *Cheyne (2 vols., London, 1880–1), G. A. *Smith (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1889–90), B. *Duhm (K.H.A.T., Abteilung 3, Bd. i; 1892; ed. 3, 1922), O. C. Whitehouse (Cent. Bib., 2 vols., 1905–8), G. W. Wade (West. Comm., 1911), G. B. *Gray (on chs. 1–27; I.C.C., 1912), O. Procksch (K.A.T., ix, 1930), E. J. Kissane (2 vols., Dublin, 1941–3), O. Kaiser (on chs. 1–12; Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xvii; 1960; ed. 2, 1963; Eng. tr., 1972; on chs. 13–39, ib., xviii; 1973; Eng. tr., 1974), C. R. North (on chs. 40–55; Oxford, 1964), and C. Westermann (on chs. 40–66; Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xix; 1966; Eng. tr., 1969). S. R. *Driver, Isaiah. His Life and Times [1888]. R. H. *Kennett, The Composition of the Book of Isaiah in the Light of History and Archaeology (Schweich Lectures for 1909; 1910). J. Lindblom, Die Jesaja Apokalypse, Jes. 24–27 (Lunds Universitats Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. I, Bd. xxxiv, No. 3; 1938). H. W. *Robinson, The Cross of the Servant. A Study in Deutero-Isaiah (1926). C. C. Torrey, The Second Isaiah. A New Interpretation (1928). K. Elliger, Die Einheit des Tritojesaia (Jesaia 56–66) (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 3, ix; 1928); id., Deuterojesaja in seinem Verhältnis zur Tritojesaja (ib., Folge 4, xiii; 1933). S. Smith, Isaiah Chapters xl–lv. Literary Criticism and History (Schweich Lectures for 1940; 1944). C. R. North, The Suffering Servant in Deutero-Isaiah. An Historical and Critical Study (Oxford, 1948; ed. 2, 1956). A. Neubauer–S. R. Driver, The Fifty-Third Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpreters (2 vols., 1876–7; text and Eng. tr.). A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 647–729, s.v. 'Isaie', with bibl. See also bibl. to Servant Songs.

ISCARIOT. See Judas Iscariot.

ISHO'DAD OF MERV (9th cent.), *Nestorian Bp. of Hedatta. He wrote commentaries on the whole of both the OT and the NT, packed with quotations from earlier exegetes, e.g. *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Ephraem Syrus ('Commentary on the *Diatessaron'), and many little-known Syriac authors. His works (all in Syriac) throw valuable light on the history of Biblical interpretation.

OT Comm. ed. J. M. Vosté–C. van den Eynde (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syriaci, lxvii [Gen.], lxxx [Exod.–Deut.], xcvi [Jos., Jgs., Sam., Kgs., Prov., Eccles., Ecclus., Song of Songs, Ruth and Job], and cxxviii [Is. and Minor Prophets], with Fr. tr., ib., lxxv, lxxxi, xcvii and cxxix; 1950–69). NT Commentaries, ed., with Eng. tr., by Margaret D. Gibson, and introd. by J. R. *Harris (Horae Semiticae, v–vii, Cambridge, 1911 [Gospels]; and x and xi, 1913–16 [Acts and three Catholic Epistles, and Epistles of St. Paul, respectively]).

J. M. Vosté, O.P., 'Mar Išo 'dad de Merw sur les Psaumes' in Biblica, xxv (1944), pp. 261–96. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 234.

ISIDORE, St. (d. c. 450), of Pelusium, ascetic and exegete. He early took monastic vows and was for some forty years abbot of a monastery on a hill near Pelusium on the eastern estuary of the Nile. He intervened with *Cyril of Alexandria on behalf of the memory of *Chrysostom, whose exegesis he chiefly followed, and also opposed *Nestorius. His writings also show his opposition to *Eutyches, though he seems to have died before the latter's condemnation at *Chalcedon. Of his large correspondence, which contains much of doctrinal, exegetical, and moral interest, some 2,000 items have survived. Feast day in E., 4 Feb.

Ed. princeps by J. Billius (Paris, 1585). Later edd. by C. Rittershaus (Heidelberg, 1605) and A. Schott (Antwerp, 1623; Paris, 1638). J. P. Migne, PG, lxxviii, 9–1674 (repr. of text of P. Possinus, 1680). On the editions, C. H. *Turner in J.T.S., vi (1904–5), pp. 70–85, and K. *Lake, ib., pp. 270–82. R. Aigrain, Quarante-neuf Lettres de St. Isidore de Péluse (1911). H. A. Niemeyer, De Isidori Pelusiotae Vita, Scriptis et Doctrina Commentatio Historico-theologica (Halle, 1825; repr. in PG, lxxviii, 9–102). A. Schmid, O.S.B., Die Christologie Isidors von Pelusium (Paradosis 2; Fribourg, 1948). M. Smith, 'The Manuscript Tradition of Isidore of Pelusium' in H.T.R., xlvii (1954), pp. 205–10. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 100–7; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 267 f., with further bibl. G. Bareille in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 84–98.

ISIDORE, St. (c. 560–636), 'Hispalensis', Abp. of Seville. Little is known of his earlier life. He belonged to a noble family of Cartagena; when the city was destroyed by the Arian Goths his father fled to Seville, where Isidore was born. After the death of his parents he was educated at a monastery under the supervision of his brother, St. *Leander, who was a monk before becoming Isidore's predecessor in the see of Seville. During these years he laid the foundations of his encyclopaedic knowledge, with the double aim of checking barbarism in Spain and defending the Catholic faith against *Arianism. He entered a monastery c. 589 either as a clerk or a monk, where he continued his studies. He succeeded his brother as Abp. of Seville c. 600. As such he devoted all his energies to the spread of Catholicism by founding schools and convents and working for the conversion of the Jews. He presided over several important Spanish Councils, notably *Toledo IV (633), the canons of which reflect his organizing abilities. He was famous for his learning, sanctity, and lavish almsgiving. He was canonized in 1598, and in 1722 was formally given the title of '*Doctor of the Church', which he had already virtually received (nostri saeculi doctor egregius) at the Eighth Council of Toledo (653). Feast day, 4 Apr.

His works became a storehouse of knowledge freely utilized by innumerable medieval authors. The most important of them, the 'Etymologiae', is an encyclopaedia of the knowledge of his time, containing information on subjects such as grammar, rhetoric, mathematics, medicine, and history, as well as on the books and offices of the Church and other theological matters. The work received its name from the (frequently quite fanciful) etymological explanations of the words signifying the different subjects. The 'Sententiarum Libri Tres' is a manual of Christian doctrine and practice which draws freely on St. *Augustine and St. *Gregory the Great and became the predecessor of many similar works. 'De Ecclesiasticis Officiis' is a valuable source for the *Mozarabic liturgy as well as for the duties and rights of the various orders in the Church, from the archbishop down to lay men and women. The 'Synonyma' is a curious mixture of linguistic and doctrinal items, in which reason exhorts the soul of the sinner to be converted and aim at perfection. The 'Chronica Majora', extending from the Creation to A.D. 615, contains material borrowed from *Julius Africanus, *Eusebius, St. *Jerome, and other Fathers, and also original information on the history of Spain. The 'Historia de Regibus Gothorum, Vandalorum et Suevorum' is the principal source for the history of these peoples, esp. that of the Visigoths. His 'De Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis' is a continuation of the similar works of Jerome and *Gennadius. For his supposed authorship of the *False Decretals, see s.v.

Editio princeps (incomplete and inadequate) by M. de La Bigne, in his 'Bibliotheca SS. Patrum', Paris, 1580. Of later edd. the best is that of F. Arevalo, S.J., 7 vols., Rome, 1797–1803; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxxi–lxxxiv. Crit. ed. of his 'Etymologiae' by W. M. Lindsay in O.C.T. (2 vols., 1911); of 'Historia Gothorum' and 'Chronica Maiora' by E. Wartz in M.G.H., Auctores Antiquissimi, xi (1894), pp. 241–506; of 'De Haeresibus' by A. C. Vega, O.S.A. (Scriptores Ecclesiastici Hispano-Latini Veteris et Medii Aevi, fasc. v; The Escurial, 1940); of 'De Variis Quaestionibus', ed. id.–A. E. Anspach (ib., vi–viii; 1940), and of 'De Natura Rerum', with Fr. tr., by J. Fontaine (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, xxviii; 1960). E. Bréhaut, An Encyclopaedist of the Dark Ages, Isidore of Seville (Columbia University Studies in History, Economics and Public Law, xlviii, No. 1; New York, 1912); C. H. Beeson, Isidor-Studien (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, iv, Hft. 2; 1913); P. Séjourné, O.S.B., Le Dernier Père de l'Église, Saint Isidore de Séville (1929). Miscellanea Isidoriana. Homenaje a S. Isidoro de Sevilla en el XIII centenario de su muerte . . . Lo edita la provincia de Andalucía S.I. (Rome, 1936). J. Fontaine, Isidore de Séville et la culture classique dans l'Espagne wisigothique (2 vols., 1959). M. C. Díaz y Díaz (ed.), Isidoriana. Estudios sobre san Isidore de Sevilla en el XIV centenario de su nacimiento (1961). A. Borst, 'Das Bild der Geschichte in der Enzyklopädie Isidors von Sevilla' in Deutsches Archiv, xxii (1966), pp. 1–62. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 401–16; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 494–7, with extensive bibl. Dekkers (ed. 2), pp. 267–77 (Nos. 1186–1229). Manitius i, pp. 52–70. G. Bareille in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 98–111, s.v.; J. Madoz, S.J., in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 254–8, s.v. 'Isidoro di Siviglia'; J. Fontaine in Dict. Sp., vii (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2104–2116, s.v., all with bibl.

ISIDORE MERCATOR. The pseudonym adopted by the author of the *False Decretals (q.v.), doubtless to suggest a connexion (if not an identity) with St. *Isidore of Seville.

ISLAM (i.e. 'submission', viz. to the Will of God), the religion founded by Muhammad (or Mohammed) (*c.*570 – 632), the adherent of which is called a Muslim. Its doctrine, which is laid down in the Koran (q.v.) and the 'Sunna', i.e. the 'customs' of the Prophet and of his immediate successors, contains Arabian, Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic elements. Its central dogma is the absolute unity of God (Allah). At several periods of history God has sent prophets, one of whom was Jesus. In Muslim belief, Jesus, though born of a Virgin and being 'a spirit from God and His Word', is nevertheless created and not begotten; his crucifixion was only apparent (cf. Docetism). The last of the prophets is Muhammad. The chief Islamic religious practices are confession of faith in Allah and in Muhammad, his prophet, ritual prayer, which is practised five times a day, almsgiving, fasting during the month of Ramadan, and the pilgrimage to Mecca. Among a wide variety of sects, two main branches stand out. The Sunnites have a doctrine founded on the Koran and the Sunna of the prophet, with a possibility of appeal to the consensus of believers and an interpretative tradition which is regarded as closed and can no longer be added to; the Shiites, who are specially strong in Persia, hold that plenitude of prophetic authority was transmitted to a series of descendants of Muhammad, the 'imams' (reckoned as seven or twelve according to sect), and that doctrinal authority can still be exercised by 'mujtahids'. Some sects, including the followers of the Aga Khan, hold that the succession of imams is perpetual and still operative today. Mysticism plays a large part in Islam, and the 'sufis' aim, by spiritual and bodily ascesis, at achieving direct apprehension of God or even total submerging of self in the Divine.

In the beginnings of Islam Christian ideas exercised a certain influence. Its expansion in the Middle Ages and its contact with Christianity during the *Crusades necessitated its theological discussion in the W., where it was dealt with e.g. by *Peter the Venerable and Raymond *Lull. Missionary activities among the Muslims were undertaken chiefly by the *Mendicant Orders, but with little success. In modern times they were resumed by many Protestant missionary societies as well as by the *White Fathers, esp. in N. Africa.

H. A. R. Gibb, Mohammedanism. An Historical Survey (1949); id. in R. C. Zaehner (ed.), The Concise Encyclopaedia of Living Faiths (1959), pp. 178–208. F. Schuon, Comprendre l'Islam (1961; Eng. tr., 1963); F. Rahman, Islam (1966). T. Andrae, Mohammed. Sein Leben und sein Glaube (Göttingen, 1932; Eng. tr., 1936); W. M. Watt, Muhammad, Prophet and Statesman (1961). Id., Islamic Philosophy and Theology (1962), with bibl. A. J. Wensinck, The Muslim Creed. Its Genesis and Historical Development (Cambridge, 1932). J. W. Sweetman, Islam and Christian Theology (4 vols., 1945–67). [L. J. M.] Gaudefroy-Demombynes, Les Institutions musulmanes (1921; Eng. tr., 1950). R. A. Nicholson, The Mystics of Islam (1914); id., Studies in Islamic Mysticism (Cambridge, 1921). The Encyclopaedia of Islam, ed. M. T. Houtsma, etc. (4 vols. and suppl., 1913–38; ed. 2, by H. A. R. Gibb and others, 1960 ff.).

ISRAEL. The Hebrew nation, because of its descent from the Patriarch Israel (*Jacob), after whose twelve sons the twelve tribes of Israel were named (Gen. 49). Acc. to Gen. 32. 28, the name Israel was divinely bestowed on Jacob by an angel; and in the *J narrative of Gen. it is regularly used of Jacob from this point forward. In their history of the period of the Monarchy the Biblical writers normally applied the word (esp. in contrast to 'Judah') to the Ten Northern Tribes, i.e. those which attached themselves to Jeroboam on the death of *Solomon (c. 930 B.C.) and were carried away to Assyria two centuries later (721 B.C.). The name is already found on the *Moabite Stone (c. 850 B.C.).

In a theological sense, the word was used of the nation, esp. in its covenant-relation to Jehovah. In the NT it was transferred to the Christian Church, considered as the new 'Israel of God' (Gal. 6. 16), which now inherits the privileges of ancient Israel.

ISSY, Articles of. The 34 articles drawn up at Issy, near Paris, in 1695 by the ecclesiastical commission charged with the examination of Mme *Guyon's works. Signed by J. B. *Bossuet, F. *Fénelon, and Mme Guyon herself, they condemn theses of the last named and implicitly certain opinions of Fénelon. They are principally directed against the *Quietist teaching on the desirability of suppressing all explicit acts of faith, e.g. in the Trinity and the Incarnation, on the uselessness of petitionary prayer, on the continuous act of contemplation in which all other religious practices are contained, on the depreciation of the exercise of the virtues and mortifications in the state of perfection, and on the idea that every Christian should aim at extraordinary states of passive prayer. On other points, e.g. the nature of passive prayer and disinterested charity, the articles are somewhat ambiguous, owing to the differences between Fénelon and Bossuet. Their publication led to a literary feud between Bossuet and Fénelon, which ended in the condemnation of 23 propositions of the latter in 1699.

Text pr. among J. B. Bossuet's Œuvres, xxvii (Versailles, 1817), pp. 12–22. Pourrat, iv, pp. 257–66. R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), p. 341 f. A. Largent in D.T.C., vi (1913), cols. 2146–50, s.v. 'Fénelon', with text of articles repr., cols. 2146–9; P. Pourrat, P.S.S., ib., xiii (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1576–8, s.v. 'Quiétisme', with further reff. See also bibl. to Bossuet, Fénelon, Guyon, and Quietism.

ISTANBUL. See Constantinople.

ITALA, The (Lat., 'Italian (version)'). A name sometimes given, esp. by German scholars, to the *Old Latin (pre-*Vulgate) text of the Bible (q.v.). The term derives from a passage in St. *Augustine (Doctr. Christ., ii. 22), where he commends the 'Itala' as the best 'interpretation' (i.e. version or recension) among those current in his day. In this its original context the name has been variously explained as referring to (a) the Italian branch of the Old Latin text generally as distinct from the African (e.g. by B. F. *Westcott, J. *Wordsworth); (b) the recension popular in North Italy (known regularly as 'Italia' at this period), which St. Augustine is held to have adopted under the influence of St. *Ambrose at Milan (e.g. by F. J. A. *Hort); and (c) St. *Jerome's Vulgate, of which the Gospels at least were published in Italy (F. C. *Burkitt).

F. C. Burkitt, The Old Latin and the Itala (Texts and Studies, ed. J. A. *Robinson, iv, No. 3; 1896), pp. 55–78; id., 'St. Augustine's Bible and the Itala' in J.T.S., xi (1910), pp. 258–68 and 447–58. L. Ziegler, Die lateinischen Bibelübersetzungen vor Hieronymus und die Itala des Augustinus (1879).

ITALO-GREEKS. The extant Greek communities descended from (1) Greek settlements in Sicily and S. Italy in Byzantine times, (2) later Greek colonies established in Italian seaports, and (3) Greek and Albanian refugees from the Moslem invasion. Their ecclesiastical status is *Uniat, their rite and usages being Byzantine with some Roman modifications. The abbey of *Grottaferrata is an Italo-Greek monastery, which, however, has its own rite.

M. Petta in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 747–51, s.v. 'Italo-Albanian Rite', with bibl.

ITE, MISSA EST. The concluding formula of the Roman Mass. The word missa is the Low Latin form of missio, 'dismissal', and the meaning of the formula is 'Go, you are dismissed'. During the Middle Ages it became customary to add a blessing and to restrict the use of the Ite, missa est to Masses at which the Gloria in excelsis* was recited. In 1967 its use was restored at all Masses except those for the dead when the commendation followed immediately, but since 1970 two alternative forms of dismissal have been provided; the dismissal now follows the blessing. In English-speaking countries the official rendering is 'The Mass is ended, go in peace'.

T. Michels, O.S.B., Ite Missa Est. Deo Gratias (Per Hanc Lucis Viam, viii; Salzburg, 1929). F. Dölger, 'Zu den Zeremonien der Messliturgie. III. Ite missa est in kultur- und sprachgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung' in Antike und Christentum, vi (1940), pp. 81–132. B. Botte, O.S.B., 'Ite Missa Est' in id.–Christine Mohrmann, L'Ordinaire de la Messe (Études liturgiques, ii; 1953), pp. 145–9; Christine Mohrmann, 'Missa' in V.C., xii (1958), pp. 67–92. Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 535–41 and 595–7; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 432–7.

ITINERARIUM. A brief office formerly included in the *Breviary and prescribed for recitation by clerics about to set out on a journey. The prayers and the use of the *Benedictus (Lk. 1. 68–79) suggest that it originated in a blessing of pilgrims setting out for the Holy Places in Palestine.

IVES, St. (? 7th cent.). Traditionally, a British bishop of Persian birth. Acc. to the account of *Goscelin, he came to Great Britain from Persia via Rome, and with three companions preached Christianity in Cambridgeshire. His alleged bones were discovered at St. Ives in that county in 1001. He is commemorated on 24 Apr. and 10 June. The town of St. Ives in Cornwall seems to be named after another saint (a maiden, also known as St. Ia, Hia, or Iva) of whom the extant legends seem equally unhistorical. Her feast day is 1 Feb.

The account by Goscelin is pr. in AA.SS., Jun. II (1698), pp. 288–92. Hardy, i (pt. 1; 1862), pp. 184–6, for further sources. G. H. Doble, 'St. Ivo, Bishop and Confessor, Patron of the Town of St. Ives', in Laudate, xii (1934), pp. 149–56. C. Hole in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 324 f., s.v. 'Ivo, St.' On the Saint after whom St. Ives in Cornwall is named, see AA.SS., Oct. XII (1867), pp. 293–6, with reff.; G. H. Doble, Saint Euny . . . with St. Ya and St. Erc (Cornish Saints Series 2; c. 1924), pp. 18–23; L. Gougaud, O.S.B., Les Saints irlandais hors d'Irlande (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire ecclésiastique, xvi; 1934), p. 83 f. C. W. Boase in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 23, s.v. 'Hia'.

IVO, St. (c. 1040–1115), Bp. of *Chartres (hence Carnotensis). Educated at Paris and (under *Lanfranc) at *Bec, he became prior of the *canons regular of St.-Quentin at Beauvais by 1079 and Bp. of Chartres in 1090. His courageous opposition to the adulterous intentions of King Philip I led to his imprisonment in 1092. The most learned canonist of his age, his three treatises, the Collectio Tripartita, the Decretum (in 17 books), and esp. the Panormia (in 8 books), exercised a determining influence on the development of canon law. Special importance attaches to the principles of the interpretation of canon law, laid down in the 'Prologus' to the Decretum, and to his teaching on dispensation. A large collection of his letters has survived which throws much light on the ecclesiastical and religious issues of his age, as well as 25 of his sermons. In the *Investiture struggle, in which he took a prominent part, he advocated moderation. Feast day, 20 or 23 May.

The Panormia was first pr. [ed. S. Brant] at Basle, 1499; the Decretum, ed. J. Molin, at Louvain, 1561; the Collectio Tripartita has not been publd.; cf. A. Theiner, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, clxi, cols. li–lxxviii. Collected ed. of his other works by J. Fronteau, with brief life (no pagination), Paris, 1647; repr., with further notes, in J. P. Migne, PL, clxi and clxii. Crit. ed. of his correspondence, with Fr. tr., by J. Leclercq, O.S.B. (Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au moyen âge, 1949 ff.). [A.] Esmein, 'La Question des investitures dans les lettres d'Yves de Chartres' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études. Sciences religieuses, i (1889), pp. 139–78. P. Fournier, 'Les Collections canoniques attribuées à Yves de Chartres' in Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, lvii (1896), pp. 645–98, lviii (1897), pp. 26–77, 410–44, 624–76; P. Fournier–G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, ii (1932), pp. 55–114. F. P. Bliemetzreider, Zu den Schriften Ivos von Chartres. Ein literargeschichtlicher Beitrag (Sb. (Wien), clxxxii, Abhandlung 6; 1917). R. Sprandel, Ivo von Chartres und seine Stellung in der Kirchengeschichte (Pariser Historische Studien, i; Stuttgart, 1962), with full bibl. É. Amann–L. Guizard in D.T.C., xv (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3625–40, s.v. 'Yves de Chartres', with full reff. (but confuses him with the later Master Ivo of Chartres, the author of the gloss on the Psalms; cf. Beryl Smalley in E.H.R., l (1935), pp. 680–6).

IZNIK. The modern name of the ancient Nicaea, now little more than a village.

J

'J' The name given (since the work of J. *Wellhausen) to the Jahvistic (Yahwistic or Jehovistic) source held to be embodied in the *Pentateuch. It consists largely of narrative, beginning with the story of *Adam and *Eve (Gen. 2. 4 ff.) and including, in conjunction with 'E' (q.v.), most of the famous stories of the Patriarchs and the Exodus. It is distinguished from the later sources, 'D' and 'P' (qq.v.), by its simple narrative style and relatively primitive ideas (e.g. Gen. 3. 8), and from 'E' (and also from 'P') by its use of the divine name *Jehovah (Yahweh; 'the LORD' in AV and RV) from the first, even before its revelation to Moses in Ex. 3. 14 f. Where this criterion is absent, 'J' cannot always be certainly distinguished from 'E', with which it was probably combined in one cycle of stories before the date of 'D' (7th cent. B.C.). It is commonly thought to embody the traditions current in the Southern Kingdom of Judah; it is usually dated under the early monarchy (perhaps 9th cent. B.C.), though it is increasingly recognized that as a cycle of traditional stories it cannot be dated precisely, as can a document by a single author.

For bibl. see Pentateuch.

JABNEH, Synod of. See Jamnia, Synod of.

JACKSON, THOMAS (1579–1640), *Anglican theologian. He was educated at Queen's and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, and resided at Oxford for several years studying and teaching theology. Presentation to the living of St. Nicholas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in 1623 did not seriously interrupt his work at Oxford. In 1630 he became president of Corpus, largely through W. *Laud's influence, and in 1639 Dean of *Peterborough. Originally of *Puritan sympathies, he later became a member of the *High Church school, and his great learning and theological ability made him one of the most widely esteemed of Caroline divines down to the middle of the 19th cent. His principal work, Commentaries upon the Apostles' Creed, was arranged in twelve Books, of which nine had appeared before his death (1613–38). The first complete edition of all 12 books was in his Collected Works (3 vols., 1672–3). Jackson was also the author of several volumes of sermons and of a tract against the Puritans.

The last collected edition of Jackson's works was issued at Oxford (12 vols., 1844). E. T. Bradley in D.N.B., xxix (1892), p. 107 f.

JACOB, Hebrew patriarch. The son of *Isaac and grandson of *Abraham, he was one of the key figures in Hebrew history (Gen. 25–50 passim). After depriving his brother Esau of his birthright by an elaborate ruse, he fled to his mother's brother, Laban, who lived at Haran in Mesopotamia. On the journey, at *Bethel, he received a vision of God in which he was promised blessing and posterity, a vision which came to be regarded as one of the outstanding events in early Hebrew history (Gen. 28. 10–22). In Mesopotamia, Jacob served Laban for twenty years, married his two daughters, Leah and Rachel, and prospered greatly. On his way back to Canaan, he wrestled with a mysterious Divine stranger at Peniel and received the divinely given name of '*Israel'. Towards the end of his life, during a period of famine, he received news that his favourite son, Joseph, whom he had supposed killed by wild beasts, had become a great man in Egypt, and at his invitation Jacob and all his family 'went down into Egypt'. Jacob died in Egypt, but had made Joseph promise to take his body back to the burying-place of his ancestors. The twelve tribes of Israel took their names from those of his twelve sons. Acc. to tradition, the stone of *Scone beneath the sovereign's coronation chair in *Westminster Abbey is that which served as Jacob's pillow at Bethel (Gen. 28. 11, 18).

See comm. to Genesis, cited s.v.

JACOB BARADAEUS (c. 500–78) (Βαραδαῖος), reputed founder of the *Jacobites. A native of Tella, he was educated in the monastery of Phesilta, near Nisibis. About 528 he went to *Constantinople with a fellow-monk, Sergius, to plead the cause of *Monophysitism with the Empress, and remained there in a monastery for fifteen years until he was consecrated Bp. of *Edessa c. 542. Disguised as a beggar to prevent arrest (hence his nickname Baradai or 'ragged'), he wandered about for the rest of his life from Egypt to the Euphrates, preaching and founding independent Monophysite churches. A Life of him has come down, attributed (apparently wrongly) to John of Ephesus (d. 586). See also Jacobites.

The Syriac 'Vita Baradaei' ascribed to John of Ephesus was ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in P.O., xix (1926), pp. 228–68. For a 7th cent. revision and expansion of the text, with mention of the removal of the bones of Jacob in A.D. 622, see M. A. Kugener in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, vii (1902), pp. 196–217 (with tr.). E. Honigmann, Évêques et évêchés monophysites d'Asie antérieure au VIe siècle (C.S.C.O., cxxvii; 1951), pp. 157–77. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), p. 163 f. E. Venables in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 328–32, s.v. 'Jacobus (15)'.

JACOB OF EDESSA (c. 640–708), *Monophysite Syrian scholar and exegete. In 684 he became Bp. of *Edessa, but after less than five years he withdrew from his see on account of practical difficulties and lived mainly in monasteries at Kaisûm and Tell-Adda. For his range and depth of learning, he has been described as the '*Jerome' of the Syrian Monophysites. He knew Greek and Hebrew and undertook the revision of the *Peshitta text of the OT on the basis of the *Hexapla. His own writings include a treatise on grammar, a continuation of *Eusebius's Chronicle down to A.D. 692, a 'Hexaemeron' (completed by *George, Bp. of the Arabians), and many scholia on the Bible. He also translated and annotated some of the works of *Severus of Antioch, including his hymns and his Ὁμιλίαι ἐπιθρόνιοι. Of his many letters on liturgical and other subjects, only a small proportion have survived.

His principal writings (many still unpubld.) are listed in A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 248–56, with notes of edd. to date. Crit. ed. of his 'Hexaemeron' by I. B. Chabot–A. Vaschalde (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, Series Secunda, lvi; 1928; with Lat. tr. by A. Vaschalde, ib., 1932); also of his tr. of the hymns of Severus of Antioch and others, with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in P.O., vi (1911), pp. 5–179 (fasc. 1); vii (1911), pp. 592–805 (fasc. 5); for edd. of his tr. of Severus's 'Ομιλίαι ἐπιθρόνιοι, see s.v. Severus of Antioch. C. Kayser, Die Canones Jacob's von Edessa (Leipzig, 1886) [Germ. tr. and commentary], with introd. on his life and works, pp. 48–78. I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 177–83. C. J. Ball in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 332–5, s.v. 'Jacobus (24) Edessenus'; E. Tisserant in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 286–91, s.v.; W. de Vries in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 839 f., s.v. 'Jakobos, Bisch. v. Edessa'.

JACOB OF NISIBIS, St. (early 4th cent.), the 'Moses of Mesopotamia', Bp. of Nisibis. He was always a prominent figure in Syriac Church tradition, and in later times acquired a reputation for great learning, ability, and holiness; but beyond his presence at the Council of *Nicaea (325), where acc. to *Theodoret he took a leading part in the debates, little about him is beyond dispute. He is said to have suffered in the persecution under Emp. Maximin and to have been a keen champion of orthodoxy against *Arius, so that (acc. to an interpolated passage in Theodoret's Religiosa Historia) when *Constantine ordered Alexander, Bp. of *Constantinople, to receive Arius back to communion in 336, Jacob persuaded the people to seven days' fast and prayer which was answered by the sudden death of the heresiarch. He is also said to have intervened in the deliverance of Nisibis from the Persians under Sapor II in 338 and again, this time by the miraculous circumvention of the Persian stratagem of a dam across the Mygdon, in 350. He is still honoured, esp. as a theological doctor, by both *Syrians and *Armenians. His relics, saved from the oncoming Persians, finally reached Constantinople c. 970. The belief of many older scholars, following N. Antonelli, that Jacob was the author of certain writings traditionally ascribed to *Aphraates has been abandoned. *Abraham Ecchellensis wrongly ascribes to him 84 spurious Arabic Nicene canons. Feast day, 15 July.

*Gennadius, De Viris Illustribus, i [PL, lviii, 1060 f.; ascribing to Jacob certain works of Aphraates]. P. Peeters, S.J., 'La Légende de saint Jacques de Nisibe' in Anal. Boll., xxxviii (1920), pp. 285–373. P. Krüger, 'Jakob von Nisibis in syrischer und armenischer Überlieferung', in Muséon, lxxxi (1968), pp. 161–79. A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, i (C.S.C.O., clxxxiv; 1958), esp. pp. 141–3. Bardenhewer, iv, p. 327 f. (on Aphraates). E. Venables in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 325–7, s.v. 'Jacobus (4)'; E. Tisserant in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), pp. 292–5, s.v. 'Jacques de Nisibe'.

JACOB OF SARUG (or more properly SERUGH) (c. 451 – 521), Syriac ecclesiastical writer. After education at *Edessa, he was ordained to the priesthood, and during the severe sufferings of his countrymen at the hands of the Persians, did much to encourage his people. In 519 he became Bp. of Batnae, the chief town of Sarug in Osrhoene, but died shortly afterwards. His principal writing was a long series of metrical homilies, most of them on Biblical themes and written in a dodecasyllabic metre, which earned him the title of 'The Flute of the Holy Ghost'. He was also the author of hymns and a large correspondence. His doctrinal position has been a subject of dispute in modern times. Older scholars, such as J. S. *Assemani, considered him to be orthodox, but since the publication of his letters to the monks of the monastery of Mar-Bassus, near Apamea, most scholars (though not P. Peeters) have seen him as an adherent of the *Monophysite cause. Many of his homilies remain unpublished and only a few of his works have been translated.

Homiliae Selectae, ed. P. Bedjan (5 vols., Paris, 1905–10; Syr. text only). Epp. ed. G. Olinder (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syri, lvii; 1937). Sermons against the Jews ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Albert in P.O., xxxviii (1976–77), pp. 3–242. S. Euringer, Die äthiopischen Anaphoren . . . des hl. Jacobus von Sarug (Orientalia Christiana, xxxiii, No. 1 (1934), pp. 79–122). 'Anaphora Syriaca Iacobi Sarugensis, prima, secunda, tertia' ed., with Eng. tr., by H. W. Codrington in Anaphorae Syriacae, ii, fasc. 1 (Rome, 1951), pp. 1–83. Italian tr. of his Mariological sermons, with introd. and comm., by C. Vona (Lateranum, N.S., xix, Nos. 1–4; 1953). Fr. tr. of several of his homilies and other material in L'Orient Syrien, ii–xii (1957–67), passim. P. Peeters, S.J., 'Jacques de Saroug, appartient-il à la secte monophysite? [No!]' in Anal. Boll., lxvi (1948), pp. 134–98. T. Jansma, 'Die Christologie Jakobs von Serugh und ihre Abhängigkeit von der alexandrinischen Theologie und der Frömmigkeit Ephraems des Syrers' in Muséon, lxxviii (1965), pp. 5–46. A. Vööbus, Handschriftliche Überlieferung der Mêmrê-Dichtung der Ja'qôb von Serûg (C.S.C.O., Subsidia, xxxix, xl, lx, and lxi; 1973–80). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 148–58; I. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), pp. 104–9. E. Tisserant in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), s.v. 'Jacques de Saroug', cols. 300–5, with bibl.

JACOB OF VORAGINE (c. 1230 – c. 1298), Abp. of Genoa and author of the '*Golden Legend' (q.v.). Born at the village of Varazze, nr. Genoa, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1244, and devoted himself assiduously to preaching and teaching. From 1267 to 1285 he was Provincial of Lombardy. In 1288 he was commissioned by Nicholas IV (Pope 1288–92) to free the Genoese from the ban imposed on his compatriots for aiding the Sicilians against Charles II of Naples. In 1292 he was persuaded, with much difficulty, to accept the Archbishopric of Genoa. After his death a cultus grew up, which was ratified by *Pius VII in 1816.

Jacob was also the author of (1) Chronicon Genuense, a chronicle of the history of Genoa (said to have been founded by James, the first King of Italy) down to 1296, part of which is of great value for local history; (2) Sermons for the ecclesiastical year; (3) Defensorium contra Impugnantes Fratres Praedicatores; and (4) Summa Virtutum et Vitiorum Guillelmi Peraldi, a Dominican who died c. 1250.

Early pr. edd. of his Sermons include 'Sermones Quadragesimales', Brixen, 1483; 'Sermones Dominicales', no place, 1484; 'Sermones de Sanctis', no place, 1484, and Augsburg, 1484; 'Sermones de Tempore', Brixen, 1491; and 'Mariale', Venice, 1497; frequent later edd. 'Chronicon Genuense', pr. by L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, ix (Milan, 1726), cols. 2–56; modern ed., with full introd. and notes, by G. Monleone (R. Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Fonti per la storia d'Italia [lxxxiv–lxxxvi]; 1941). M. de Waresquiel, Le Bienheureux Jacques de Voragine (1902). E. C. Richardson, Materials for a Life of Jacopo da Varagine (New York, 1935). Quétif–Échard, i, pp. 454–9. J. Baudot in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 310–13, s.v. 'Jacques de Voragine'; A. Zimmermann, O.S.B., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 849 f.; Maria Sticco in E.C., vi (1951), col. 332 f., s.v. 'Giacomo da Varazze' See also bibl. to Golden Legend.

JACOBINS. A name given originally to the *Dominican friars in France, from the fact that their first house in the north of France was established at Paris in 1218 in the rue St.-Jacques. In 1789 this house was acquired by the revolutionary political club which thence assumed the name Jacobins.

JACOBITES. The body of Syrian *Monophysites who rejected the teaching of the Council of *Chalcedon (451) on the Person of Christ. They take their name from *Jacob Baradaeus (q.v.), through whose labours they became the national Church of Syria, though the title 'Jacobites' is not met with till the synodal decree of the Second Council of *Nicaea in 787. Imperial persecution could not repress Jacob's work and bring them back to Orthodoxy and they were encouraged by the vigorous enthusiasm of their monks. Although there were many converts to *Islam after the Arab invasion of Syria (c. 640), the Jacobite Church continued to produce a number of important writers, incl. *Jacob of Edessa, *Moses bar Kepha, and *Bar Hebraeus. Its real decline came only in the 13th and 14th centuries with the Mongol invasions. See also Syrian Catholics and Syrian Orthodox Church.

J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (1909). E. Honigmann, Le Couvent de Barsaumâ et le patriarcat jacobite d'Antioche et de Syrie (C.S.C.O., cxlvi; 1954). S. P. Kawerau, Die jakobitische Kirche im Zeitalter der syrischen Renaissance (Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, iii; 1955). W. Hage, Die syrisch-jakobitische Kirche in frühislamischer Zeit nach orientalischen Quellen (Wiesbaden, 1966). B. Spuler, 'Die west-syrische (monophysitische) Kirche unter dem Islam' in Saeculum, ix (1958), pp. 322–44, with reff. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 139–93. W. de Vries in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 313–16, s.v. 'Giacobiti'.

JACOBSON, WILLIAM (1803–84) Bp. of *Chester. After being brought up a Nonconformist, he was elected a scholar of Lincoln College, Oxford, in 1825 and held various other appointments in Oxford, until he became Regius professor of divinity in 1848. In 1865 he was appointed Bp. of Chester. One of the more learned patristic scholars of his day, he issued a scholarly edition of the Apostolic Fathers (Patres Apostolici, 2 vols., 1838, and later edns.) based on a study of the MSS., in which against W. *Cureton he upheld the genuineness of the now generally acknowledged seven Epistles of St. *Ignatius. He also published an edition of the writings of R. *Sanderson, Bp. of *Lincoln (6 vols., 1854). Theologically, from his undergraduate days onwards, he was a moderate High Churchman.

For a good sketch of him as 'The Single-Minded Bishop' see J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888), ii, pp. 238–303. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxix (1892), p. 124 f.

JACOBUS. See Jacob, and also James.

JACOPONE DA TODI (Jacopo Benedetti) (c. 1230–1306), *Franciscan poet. The relatively late date of the records raises some uncertainty about the facts of his life, but the following account seems probable. After studying law, perhaps at *Bologna, and living for some years a worldly life, he was converted on the death of his wife in 1268 and scandalized his friends by becoming a 'Christian Diogenes'. About 1278 he became a Franciscan lay-brother and in 1294 he and some of his brethren were granted permission by *Celestine V to live in a separate community, in order to observe the rule of the order in its original strictness. This decision, however, was reversed by *Boniface VIII on his accession in 1298, and Jacopone as one of the *Spirituals was imprisoned till 1303. He wrote many exquisite and deeply devotional poems (Laude) in Latin and in the Umbrian dialect, which became widely popular, among them (probably) the *Stabat Mater. His outstanding austerities and the fame of his mystical poems would probably have induced his canonization but for his satirical attacks upon Boniface VIII. There is a local cultus at Todi. Feast day, 25 Dec.

Editio princeps of the 'Laude' by F. Bonaccorsi (Florence, 1490), repr., with introd., by G. Ferri (Rome, 1910; also without the introd., in the series 'Scrittori d'Italia', Bari, 1915; revised by S. Caramella, ib., 1930); improved ed. by F. Ageno (Florence, 1953), with useful bibl. Italian text with Eng. tr. of a selection by Mrs Theodore Beck appended to E. *Underhill, Jacopone da Todi, Poet and Mystic (1919), pp. 249–501. In English, besides the admirable study of E. Underhill, cited above, there is an essay by E. G. Gardner, 'The Poet of the Franciscan Movement. Fra Jacopone da Todi', in The Constructive Quarterly, ii (1914), pp. 446–60. The many other studies include A. d'Ancona, Jacopone da Todi, il Giullare di Dio del secolo XIII (Todi, 1914); M. Casella, 'Jacopone da Todi' in Archivum Romanicum, iv (1920), pp. 281–339, 429–85; N. Sapegno, Frate Jacopone (Turin, 1926); and Iacopone e il suo tempo. Convegni del Centro di Studi sulla spiritualità medievale, i, 13–15 ottobre 1957 (Todi, 1959). Raby, pp. 429–39 and 484 (bibl.). L. Oliger, O.F.M., in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 263–5, s.v.

JAHWEH. See Tetragrammaton.

JAIRUS. A Galilaean 'ruler of the synagogue' (ἀρχισυνάγωγος) whose young daughter Christ restored to life (Mk. 5. 21–43).

JAMES. The normal English form of Lat. Jacobus, Gk. Ἰάκωβος, representing the declinable form of the Hebrew name which is transliterated directly into English as 'Jacob'. In English versions of the Bible the form 'Jacob' is retained in the OT and in those passages of the NT which refer to the OT patriarch (Gk. Ἰακώβ; Lat. Jacob; indeclinable). See also following entries.

JAMES, St., 'the Lord's brother' (Mk. 6. 3 and parallels). The natural interpretation of the NT evidence would imply that he was the son of the BVM and St. *Joseph, but for other possibilities see Brethren of the Lord. From 1 Cor. 15. 7 it appears that he was granted a special appearance of the Lord after the Resurrection. From an early date he was, with St. *Peter, a leader of the Church at Jerusalem (e.g. Gal. 1. 19), and from the time when Peter left Jerusalem after Herod's attempt to kill him (Acts 12), James appears as the principal authority, who presided at the council of Jerusalem recorded in Acts 15. Acc. to *Clement of Alexandria, as reported by *Eusebius (H.E., ii. 1), he was chosen 'bishop of Jerusalem'. On the basis of Gal. 1. 19 it has been argued that he was an apostle, and he has been identified with the son of Alphaeus (see James the Less); both Clement and *Hegesippus describe him as 'James the Just'. Acc. to Hegesippus (ap. Eusebius, H.E., ii. 23) he was put to death by the Sanhedrin in A.D. 62. Among Jewish Christians he was held in high repute, and elaborate stories of his sanctity are reported by Hegesippus. The (fictitious) 'Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', prob. 3rd cent. Judaistic writings, purport to be addressed to him, while the apocryphal Infancy Gospel known as the 'Book of James' is ascribed to him, as is also the Gnostic 'Apocryphal Epistle of James' (qq.v.). Feast day in E., 23 Oct.; also in the American BCP (1979). See also James, Apocalypses of; James, Book of; James, Epistle of St.; James, Liturgy of St.

W. Patrick, James, the Lord's Brother (1906). See also bibl. to Brethren of the Lord.

JAMES, St., 'the Great', Apostle. He was a son of Zebedee, elder brother of St. *John, and with St. *Peter and St. John he belonged to the privileged group of disciples who were present at the *Transfiguration and the Agony in *Gethsemane. Because of their ardent zeal (cf. Lk. 9. 49 and 54 and Mk. 10. 37) James and John were named 'Boanerges', i.e. 'sons of thunder' (Mk. 3. 17), by the Lord. St. James was the first of the Twelve to suffer martyrdom, being beheaded by *Herod Agrippa I in A.D. 44 (Acts 12. 2).

Since the 7th cent. it has been alleged that before his martyrdom he preached in *Spain, but the tradition of the early Church, acc. to which the Apostles did not leave Jerusalem till after his death, as well as Rom. 15. 20 and 24, are against the authenticity of this story, which is now almost universally abandoned. Acc. to an old Spanish tradition the body of St. James was translated to Santiago de *Compostela (q.v.). In the Middle Ages St. James was one of the most popular Spanish saints, whose patronage was invoked esp. against the Mohammedans. Feast day in E., 30 Apr.; in W., 25 July.

AA.SS., Jul. VI (1729), 5–124. Gk. text of his acta (prob. 8th cent.) ed. J. Ebersolt (Paris, 1902). J. B. Mayor in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 540 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2089–2109, s.v. 'Jacques le Majeur'; also id., ib., v (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 412–17, s.v. 'Espagne, v; La Légende de Jacques'.

JAMES, St., 'the Less'. The title derives from the description of 'James the less' (Gk. ὁ μικρός) in Mk. 15. 40, but is commonly applied to James, the son of Alphaeus (Mk. 3. 18 etc.), one of the Twelve Apostles, who is thus identified with the James of Mk. 15. 40. There is, however, no sufficient reason for the identification, and the epithet is prob. attached to the Apostle only as a convenient way of distinguishing him from James 'the Great' (see previous entry). Unless (as is unlikely) the tradition which identifies the Apostle with *James, 'the Lord's brother' is correct, nothing further is known of him. Feast day of the Apostle in the E., 9 Oct.; in the W., with the Apostle St. *Philip, formerly 1 May and still so in the BCP; in RC Church transferred to 11 May in 1955 and then to 3 May in 1969.

JAMES, Apocalypses of. Two short works contained in the fifth of the codices discovered at *Nag Hammadi (see Gnosticism). They embody dialogues between Jesus and James, who is called 'the Just' and the Lord's 'brother'; the second describes his martyrdom, the first being damaged at this point. The two books are influenced by Gnosticism and are unrelated to the NT.

Coptic text ed., with Germ. tr., by A. Böhlig–P. Labib, Koptisch-gnostische Apokalypsen aus Codex V von Nag Hammadi (Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther Universität, Halle-Wittenberg, Sonderband; 1963), pp. 27–85. See also bibl. to Gnosticism.

JAMES, Apocryphal Epistle of. A previously unknown work which appears on the opening pages of the first of the codices discovered at *Nag Hammadi (see Gnosticism: the *Jung Codex). It purports to record Jesus's last discourse before His Ascension, delivered to Peter and James, who is ostensibly the writer, '550 days after He had risen'. It appears to have originated in Jewish-Christian circles; it has some affinities with Gnostic writings, but cannot be certainly attributed to any known Gnostic sect. The writer is a *dualist who preaches contempt of the world and especially commends martyrdom. A 2nd cent. date is suggested by his apparent ignorance of the canonical Gospels and notably of Acts.

Text ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by M. Malinine et al. (Zürich–Stuttgart, 1968). See also bibl. to Gnosticism.

JAMES, Book of. An apocryphal *Infancy Gospel, apparently compiled by a Jewish Christian from a variety of sources, including the canonical Gospels of Mk. and Lk. Since the 16th cent. it has also been known as the '*Protevangelium'. It consists in the main of a highly embellished version of the account of the events connected with Christ's birth as related in Lk. 1 f. The Book, which professes to be by *James (the Lord's brother), was probably known to *Justin Martyr, still more probably to *Clement of Alexandria, and certainly to *Origen; and seems to date from the middle of the 2nd cent. It survives in its original Greek, in several oriental translations including Syriac, and in Latin adaptations. In the Middle Ages its legends about the BVM became popular subjects with artists. It is here that the names of the BVM's parents, *Joachim and *Anne, occur for the first time.

Gk. text in C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (ed. 2, 1876), pp. 1–50; also ed., with Fr. tr., by É. Amann, Le Protévangile de Jacques et ses remaniements latins (1910) and by E. de Strycker, S.J., La Forme la plus ancienne du Protévangile de Jacques (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxxiii; 1961). Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 38–49. H. R. Smid, Protevangelium Jacobi. A Commentary (Eng. tr., Apocrypha Novi Testamenti, i; Assen, 1965). On the Lat. workings-over of the text, see also M. R. James, Latin Infancy Gospels (1927), who prints those found in MSS. Hereford O.3.9 and Brit. Mus., Arundel 404. Bardenhewer, i, 533–7; O. *Cullmann in Schneemelcher, i, pp. 277–290; Eng. tr., i, pp. 370–88. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 125 f.

JAMES, Epistle of St. This NT Book, in the form of an Ep. of 'James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes of the Diaspora' (1. 1), stands first among the '*Catholic Epistles'. The writer opens by insisting on the joy which temptation brings, since by enduring it with prayer a man 'shall receive the crown of life' (1. 2–12); the sins into which he falls, however, are not to be imputed to God (1. 13–15). As the firstfruits of God's creatures (1. 18), we are to avoid wrath and meekly receive the Word (1. 19–21), not being mere hearers (1. 22 f.); the test of religion is its practical manifestations (1. 27). Subservience to the rich and despising the poor are fundamentally opposed to the Christian ethic (2. 1–13). To make profession of faith which does not issue in works is valueless (2. 14–26). Wisdom requires strict control of the tongue, which, though of divine origin, may issue in great evil (3. 1–12); when wisdom comes from God it manifests itself in peaceableness (3. 13–18). The lustful, the proud, those who do not resist the devil, the censorious, and the presumptuous are never close to God (4. 1–17). The rich are warned of their fate (5. 1–6); patience is commended (5. 7–11); oaths are disallowed (5. 12); and *Unction is recommended for the sick (5. 13–15), together with mutual confession of sins (5. 16) and prayer (5. 17 f.). Finally, to convert a man from error is to save one's own soul (5. 19 f.).

The Epistle is written in a clear forceful style, using good Greek, and is almost entirely moral in content. Apart from two verses (1. 1 and 2. 1) there is nothing incontestably Christian in it and it has been argued by F. *Spitta that the work is a revision of a Jewish writing; but the close parallels to the *Sermon on the Mount and other of the Lord's teachings make this theory unconvincing. J. H. *Moulton's suggestion that the absence of Christian reference was due to its being addressed to unconverted Jews seems equally improbable.

The traditional view that the author was St. James the Lord's brother has to face the difficulty that the Epistle presupposes a good Greek culture; the suggestion that it is a translation from an original Aramaic is unlikely on stylistic grounds. Also, if the passage in 2. 14–26 is directed against a misuse of St. *Paul's doctrine of justification by faith, the Epistle must have been written after A.D. 60 and St. James died in 62. Other arguments urged against the traditional authorship are the absence of reference in the *Muratorian fragment and any other 2nd-cent. writing, the doubts of *Origen and *Eusebius, and the fact that it stands apart from the Judaizing controversy in the 1st cent. in which St. James was a central figure. None of these objections, however, is quite conclusive. There remain the close parallels with the speech of St. James recorded in Acts 15; and the most natural interpretation of 'James' (alone) in the opening verse is that it refers to the Lord's brother, though it is possible that the ascription to James may not be original. Even if the Epistle is not the work of St. James, it seems likely that it was composed before A.D. 95. Some scholars (e.g. J. B. Mayor), impressed by its primitive nature, argue for a date c. A.D. 40. At any rate it is not later than 150. It is first mentioned by Origen and seems to have been widely known in the E. soon afterwards. In the W. it is not quoted before the middle of the 4th cent., but it was recognized as canonical at the Council of *Hippo of 393. It was translated into Syriac as part of the *Peshitta in the early 5th cent. In modern times the Epistle was disliked by M. *Luther ('a right strawy epistle') and has been little valued by orthodox *Protestants.

Modern commentaries by J. B. Mayor (London, 1892; ed. 3, with additions, 1913; with full bibl.), R. J. Knowling (West. Comm., 1904), W. O. E. Oesterley (Expositor's Gk. Test., 1910), H. Windisch (Hb. N.T., iv, Hft. 2, 1911; on the Catholic Epistles, ed. 3, with H. Preisker, xv, 1951, pp. 1–36), J. H. Ropes (I.C.C., 1916), M. *Dibelius (K.E.K., xv, ed. 7, 1921; ed. 11 by H. Greeven, 1964), J. Moffatt (Moff. Comm., with other General Epistles, 1928; pp. 6–83), J. Chaîne (Études Bibliques, 1927), R. V. G. Tasker (Tyndale New Testament Commentaries, 1956), C. L. Mitton (London, [1967]), E. M. Sidebottom (New Cent. Bib., Jas., Jude and 2 Pet., 1967, pp. 1–64), and Sophie [S.] Laws (Black's N.T. Comm., 1980); also F. J. A. *Hort (as far as Jas. 4. 7; posthumously publd., London, 1909). R. St. J. Parry, A Discussion of the General Epistle of St. James (1903). G. H. Rendall, The Epistle of James and Judaic Christianity (1927). A. Meyer, Das Rätsel des Jacobusbriefes (Beihefte zur Z.N.T.W., x; 1930). J. Marty, L'Épître de Jacques. Étude critique (1935). A. T. Cadoux, The Thought of St. James (1944). G. Kittel, 'Der geschichtliche Ort des Jakobusbriefes' in Z.N.T.W., xli (1942), pp. 71–105. J. Bonsirven, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 783–95.

JAMES, Liturgy of St. This ancient liturgy, extant in a Greek and a Syriac form, is traditionally ascribed to St. *James, the Lord's brother and the first Bp. of *Jerusalem. It has many points of contact with the liturgy known to St. *Cyril, Bp. of Jerusalem (d. 386), and contains an apparent reference to the discovery of the true cross at Jerusalem in A.D. 326. It came to be much used in the *Syriac, *Armenian, and *Georgian-speaking parts of the Church. Its use by the Syrian *Jacobites (who separated from Orthodoxy in 451) after the Council of *Chalcedon, as well as by the Orthodox themselves, proves that it cannot be later than the middle of the 5th cent. By the latter it is now celebrated at Zante on 23 Oct. (acc. to the E. Church, the day of St. James's death) and at Jerusalem on the Sunday after Christmas.

Text in Brightman, L.E.W., pp. 31–68 [Gk. text]; 69–110 [Syr. text]. Crit. text with Lat. tr., ed. B. C. Mercier, O.S.B., in P.O., xxvi (1950), pp. 119–256. Cf. also O. Heiming, O.S.B., 'Palimpsestbruchstücke der syrischen Version der Jakobusanaphora aus dem 8. Jahrhundert' in O.C.P., xvi (1950), pp. 190–200; A. Rücker, Die syrische Jakobusanaphora nach der Rezension der Je'qob(h) von Edessa (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen, iv; 1923). Eng. tr. in J. M. *Neale, The Liturgies of S. Mark, S. James, S. Clement, S. Chrysostom and the Church of Malabar (1859), pp. 31–65. Classic commentaries by (1) Moses bar Kēphā (813–903), ed., with Eng. tr., by R. H. *Connolly–H. W. Codrington, Two Commentaries on the Jacobite Liturgy (1913), pp. 16–66 (in Syriac script); Eng. tr., pp. 24–90, and (2) Dionysius bar Salibi (d. 1171), ed., with Lat. tr., by H. Labourt (C.S.C.O., Scriptores Syrici, xciii; 1903). L. *Allatius, Συμμικτά ('Coloniae Agrippinae' [Amsterdam?] 1653), i, 176–203 ('Ep. i ad Bartodum Nihusium de Liturgia S. Iacobi'), an attempt to prove the Liturgy to be the work of St. James the Apostle. G. *Dix, O.S.B., The Shape of the Liturgy [1945], esp. pp. 175–207. A. Tarby, La Prière Eucharistique de l'Église de Jérusalem (Théologie Historique xvii; 1971). A. *Fortescue in C.E., i (1907), pp. 571–4, s.v. 'Antiochene Liturgy'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., vii (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2116–21.

JAMES I (1566–1625), King of England and VI of Scotland. The only son of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, and *Mary, Queen of Scots, on the abdication of his mother he became King of Scotland in 1567. He was educated mainly by George Buchanan (1506–82), who endeavoured to inculcate doctrines of constitutional monarchy. Undertaking the direction of government in 1578, he tried to build up the royal power amid strong rival factions of the Scottish nobility. In 1586 he entered an alliance with England, raising few objections to the execution of his mother. In 1589 he married Anne of Denmark (1574–1619). He generally supported the clergy against the nobility, but he resented the political influence of the Kirk. From 1598 he sought the restoration of episcopacy, in 1600 appointing three representatives of the Church in Parliament under the title of Bishops.

On the death of *Elizabeth I (1603), he succeeded to the English throne by right of his mother's descent from Henry VII, under the new style of King of Great Britain. Travelling immediately to London, he was met by the *Puritans, who presented the *Millenary Petition in 1603. Although personally prepared to accept the desired changes, he at first adopted a position of mediation at the *Hampton Court Conference. When, however, the name of Presbyter was mentioned, confusing the English Puritans with the Scottish Presbyterians, he scolded the assembly and decided to harry dissenters out of the land.

Henceforth he upheld the connexion between *Divine Right of Kings and *Apostolic Succession. At the same time he authorized a new translation of the Bible (the '*Authorized Version' of 1611). He favoured lenient treatment of RCs, and concluded peace with Spain in 1604. The discrepancy, however, between his promises and the policy of his government in 1605 provoked the *Gunpowder Plot, which was followed by stricter laws against *Recusants. He refused to ratify the canons prepared by *Convocation in 1606 because they advocated non-resistance to the king in possession, whereas he believed in the sanctity of hereditary right and denied that tyranny could exist by the appointment of God. In 1610 he persuaded the Assembly of the Scottish Church to agree to the introduction of episcopacy. Three bishops were consecrated in England and he prob. hoped to extend the English rite to Scotland. In 1614 and 1615 he ordered that all persons in Scotland should receive the Holy Communion on Easter Day, and in 1616 called upon the Assembly of Aberdeen to pass the Five Articles, which (after James's visit to Scotland in 1617) were finally accepted at *Perth in 1618. He issued the 'Book of *Sports' (1618) approving lawful sport on Sundays.

James's attempts to negotiate a marriage treaty with Spain were frustrated by Parliament's refusal to repeal the laws against RCs, while he was equally unsuccessful in his attempts to mediate in Bohemia. He negotiated an alliance with France in 1624, but he was unable to disclose the terms of a treaty which promised relief to Catholics. Throughout his reign he quarrelled with his Parliaments over foreign policy and never saw that parliamentary control over finance made compromise necessary. Although renowned for his erudition, he failed to win sympathy because of his pedantry and high opinion of his own ability. His published works include Essays of a Prentice in the Divine Art of Poetry (1584), Poetical Exercises [1591], Daemonology (1597), Basilikon Doron* (1599), The True Law of Free Monarchies (anon. 1598; 1603), A Counter Blast to Tobacco (anon. 1604), Triplici Nodo, Triplex Cuneus; or an Apology for the Oath of Allegiance (anon. 1607), Declaratio pro Iure Regio (1615), The Peacemaker (anon. 1618) and Meditations on the Lord's Prayer (1619) and on Mt. 27. 27–29 (1620).

Collected ed. of his prose Works to date publd. by James [Montague], Bp. of Winchester, in 1616. Repr. of his political works by C. H. Macllwain, 1918. Poems ed. J. Craigie (Scottish Text Society, 3rd Series, xxii and xxvi; 1955–8). R. Ashton (ed.), James I by his Contemporaries. An Account of his career and character as seen by some of his contemporaries (1969). S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Outbreak of the Civil War, vols. i–v (1883–4). C. and H. Steeholm, James I of England (1938). D. H. Willson, King James VI and I (1956); W. McElwee, The Wisest Fool in Christendom. The Reign of King James I and VI (1958). D. Mathew, James I (1967). S. R. Gardiner in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 161–81, s.v. 'James VI'.

JAMES II (1633–1701), King of England, 1685–8. The second son of *Charles I, James fought in the Civil War as Duke of York, but after being captured escaped abroad, where he served with the French army. At the Restoration (1660), he was made Lord High Admiral and in 1662 issued 'Instructions' to the Navy which remained in force until the 19th cent. He married twice: first in 1660 Anne Hyde, who died a RC; by her he had two daughters, Mary and *Anne; and secondly in 1673 the RC Princess Mary Beatrice of Modena. About 1670 he was received into the RC Church. This step involved him in trouble both at Court and in Parliament, which tried to exclude him from the succession. The *Exclusion Bill was, however, rejected by the Lords, many of whom believed in the *Divine Right. As High Commissioner in Scotland, James was careful to countenance the Episcopal Church of Scotland, and so encouraged Anglican loyalty in England. In 1685 he ascended the throne and openly professed his Roman allegiance. At the beginning of his reign he continued to support the C of E, but after quelling the Duke of Monmouth's Rebellion, he increasingly sought to improve the position of his co-religionists. In order to check Anglican criticism, he created the Court of Ecclesiastical Commission (see High Commission), which suspended H. *Compton, Bp. of London. He claimed the power to dispense from the provisions of the *Test Act of 1673 and appointed Romanists to office in the state and armed forces. He also intruded RC dons into the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. A collision with the hierarchy of the C of E was occasioned by his issuing two *Declarations of Indulgence in 1687 and 1688. In the second case he ordered the clergy to publish his Declaration of Liberty of Conscience from the pulpit. When W. *Sancroft, Abp. of *Canterbury, and six other bishops refused to carry out the order and presented a petition to the King, they were committed to the Tower and charged with publishing a seditious libel (see Seven Bishops, Trial of). Their acquittal was marked by general rejoicing. Alarmed by the rumour of invasion by William, Prince of Orange, James reversed some of his measures and promised once more to uphold the established rights of the C of E. But William had already landed and James fled to France. He later attempted to recover Ireland, but was eventually defeated at the Boyne in 1690. He returned to France. His exclusion gave rise to the *Non-juring Schism and the long-lived Jacobite movement. He died in 1701 after spending the last four years of his life in religious observance.

The principal authority, apart from the State Papers (of which the Calendar of the Domestic Series is being ed. by E. K. Timings and others, 1972), is The Life of James the Second . . . Collected out of Memoirs Writ with his own Hand [compiled at his son's command shortly after his death], ed. J. S. Clarke (2 vols., London, 1816). On this life cf. L. von *Ranke, Englische Geschichte vornehmlich im sechszehnten und siebzehnten Jahrhundert, vii (1868), pp. 137–54; Eng. tr., vi (1875), pp. 29–45. More modern lives by Florence M. G. Higham (London, 1934) and F. C. Turner (ib., 1948). D. Ogg, England in the Reigns of James II and William III (Oxford, 1955), esp. pp. 139–224. M. Ashley, 'King James II and the Revolution of 1688: Some Reflections on the Historiography' in H. E. Bell–R. L. Ollard (edd.), Historical Essays 1600–1750 presented to David Ogg (1963), pp. 185–202; R. A. Beddard, '"The Violent Party": the Guildhall Revolutionaries and the Growth of Opposition to James II' in Guildhall Miscellany, iii (1970), pp. 120–36. A. W. Ward in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 181–99, s.v. 'James II of England'.

JAMES BARADAEUS. See Jacob Baradaeus.

JAMES THE DEACON (7th cent.), companion of St. *Paulinus, Bp. of *York. When Paulinus returned to Kent in 633, James was apparently the sole member of the mission to the N. left behind. Acc. to *Bede (H.E., ii. 16 and 20), he resided chiefly at a village near Catterick. On the restoration of Christianity in Northumbria, James took an active and successful part in spreading the Gospel and, skilful in music, he taught his converts the Gregorian Chant. In 664 he was present, on St. *Wilfrid's side, at the Synod of *Whitby. He survived until Bede's time.

JAMES OF EDESSA. See Jacob of Edessa.

JAMES OF NISIBIS, St. See Jacob of Nisibis, St.

JAMES OF SARUG. See Jacob of Sarug.

JAMES OF VORAGINE. See Jacob of Voragine.

JAMES, WILLIAM (1842–1910), American *Pragmatist philosopher. The son of a *Swedenborgian theologian and brother of the novelist Henry James, he was professor successively of psychology (1887–97) and philosophy (1897–1907) at Harvard university. He held that we have a 'right to believe in' the existence of God (because it makes us 'better off'), but no scientific certainty of the validity of that belief. In his *Gifford Lectures, The Varieties of Religious Experience (1902), he drew the now familiar distinction between 'once-born' and 'twice-born' religious types, and made a scientific analysis of conversion. The cases he quotes have been widely criticized on the ground that they are too predominantly morbid, irrational, and Protestant, but the book remains a classic, and has stimulated much fruitful study of the psychology of religion. His other writings include his Principles of Psychology (2 vols., 1890), an epoch-making contribution to its subject; The Will to Believe and Other Essays (1897); and Pragmatism (1907).

Collected Essays and Reviews ed. R. B. Perry (1920); Letters ed. Henry James, son (1920). R. B. Perry, The Thought and Character of William James (2 vols. [1936]). G. W. Allen, William James. A Biography (1967). Commemorative volume (New York, 1942). R. B. Perry in Dict. Amer. Biog., ix (1932), pp. 590–600.

JAMNIA or JABNEH. A city c. 13 miles south of Joppa. After the fall of *Jerusalem (A.D. 70), an assembly of religious teachers was established at Jamnia; this body was regarded as to some extent replacing the *Sanhedrin, though it did not possess the same representative character or national authority. It appears that one of the subjects discussed among the rabbis was the status of certain Biblical books (e.g. Eccles. and Song of Songs) whose canonicity was still open to question in the 1st cent. A.D. The suggestion that a particular synod of Jamnia, held c. 100 A.D., finally settled the limits of the OT Canon, was made by H. E. *Ryle; though it has had a wide currency, there is no evidence to substantiate it.

F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, ii (1938), p. 352 f., with reff. H. E. Ryle, The Canon of the Old Testament (1892), p. 171 f. C. Warren in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 524 f., s.v. 'Jabneel'; A. Legendre in Dict. Bibl., iii (1903), cols. 1115–19, s.v.

JANE FRANCES DE CHANTAL, St. (1572–1641), foundress of the Order of the *Visitation. The daughter of a noble family, she was married to the Baron Christophe de Chantal in 1592, and on his death in 1601 took a vow of chastity. Her friendship with St. *Francis de Sales, who became her spiritual director in 1604, resulted in the establishment at Annecy in 1610 of the Congregation of the Visitation for young girls and widows unable to endure the severe ascetic life of the ordinary religious house but none the less eager to enter religion. She spent the remainder of her life in the cloister, visiting the sick and poor and fostering her foundation with such success that by her death there were 86 houses in existence. She was beatified in 1751 and canonized in 1767. Feast day, 21 Aug.

Sainte J. F. Frémyot de Chantal. Sa vie et ses œuvres. Mémoires sur la vie et les vertus de sainte Jeanne-Françoise Frémyot de Chantal . . . par la mère Françoise-Madeleine de Chaugy (8 vols., 1874–9), with life forming vol. i; Eng. tr. of vol. ii as Exhortations, Conferences, Instructions, and Retreat (Clifton, 1888). L. V. E. Bougaud, Histoire de Sainte Chantal et des origines de la Visitation (2 vols., 1861; Eng. tr. from 11th Fr. ed., 1895). A. Gazier, Jeanne de Chantal et Angélique Arnauld d'après leur correspondance, 1620–1641 (1915). Other lives by H. *Bremond ('Les Saints', 1912), Ella K. Sanders (London, 1918), Vte E. Du Jeu (Paris, 1927), and Elisabeth [C. V.] Stopp (London, 1962). Bremond, ii (1916), esp. pp. 555–76.

JANNES AND JAMBRES. Two reputed Egyptian magicians who imitated the miracles performed by *Moses before Pharaoh (Ex. 7 ff.). They are mentioned in the NT at 2 Tim. 3. 8. There are many references to them in other literature of the early Christian period, Jewish as well as Christian, while *Origen (Comm. in Mt. 27. 9) refers to an apocryphal 'Book of Jannes and Jambres', which, however, has not been recovered.

J. A. *Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, i (Hamburg and Leipzig, 1713), pp. 813–25, and ii (Hamburg, 1723), pp. 105–11. E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, ii (ed. 3, 1898), pp. 292–4, with bibl. L. E. Iselin, 'Zwei Bemerkungen zu Schürer's "Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi". I. Jannes und Jambres' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xxxvii (1894), pp. 321–6. M. R. James, 'A Fragment of the "Penitence of Jannes and Jambres"' in J.T.S., ii (1901), pp. 572–7, with text, p. 573 f. J. T. Marshall in H.D.B., ii (1899), p. 548 f., s.v.; H. Odeberg in T.W.B., iii (1938), p. 192 f., s.v. Ἰάννης.

JANSEN, CORNELIUS OTTO (1585–1638) (Jansenius), the author of the Augustinus* (q.v.). He is to be distinguished from his uncle, Cornelius Jansen the Elder (1510–76), who was Bp. of Ghent from 1564 (confirmed by *Pius V, 1568). After two years in the Collège du Faucon at Louvain, he migrated in 1604 to Paris. Here he met *Saint-Cyran, with whom, at Bayonne and Champré, he spent the years 1612–17 in unremitting study. In these years, as his later correspondence with Saint-Cyran reveals, he conceived an elaborate plan of concerted action against the theologians of the *Counter-Reformation. In 1617 he became the director of a newly founded college at Louvain, and in 1626–7 defended at Madrid the cause of the university of Louvain against the aspersions of the *Jesuits. In 1628 he began to write the Augustinus, for which purpose he read the whole of St. *Augustine's writings ten times and the anti-Pelagian writings thirty; but it was not published till 1640, after his death. In 1636 he was consecrated Bp. of Ypres. See also foll. entry.

J. Orcibal, Correspondance de Jansénius ('Les Origines du jansénisme', i, in Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xxv; 1947). Pastor, xxix (1938), pp. 62–102. H. de Lubac, S.J., Augustinisme et théologie moderne (Théologie, lxiii; 1965), pp. 49–112; Eng. tr. (1969), pp. 34–96. J. Forget in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 285–8, s.v. 'Jansenius and Jansenism: I and II'; J. Carreyre in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 319–30 (life, with bibl.) and 330–448 (full analysis of the Augustinus). See also bibls. to Augustinus and Jansenism.

JANSENISM. Technically, Jansenism is summed up in five propositions, extracted (the first two textually, the others by compression) from the Augustinus* (1640) of C. *Jansen, and condemned as heretical by the *Sorbonne (1649) and *Innocent X (1653). The sense of these propositions is (1) that without a special *grace from God, the performance of His commandments is impossible to men, and (2) that the operation of grace is irresistible; and hence, that man is the victim of either a natural or a supernatural determinism, limited only by not being violently coercive. This theological pessimism was expressed in the general harshness and moral rigorism of the movement.

The first generation of French Jansenists were all disciples of *Saint-Cyran (Du Vergier), Jansen's friend and collaborator. This party of 'Cyranists', which included the convent of *Port-Royal, was already in existence in 1638. After Saint-Cyran's death in 1643, Antoine *Arnauld succeeded him as its leader, and in De la fréquente communion (1643), La Théologie morale des Jésuites (1643), and two Apologies pour M. Jansénius (1644–5) defined the directions of the movement. These were (1) the defence of St. *Augustine's theology of grace, as interpreted by Jansen's, against *Molinism; (2) a rigorist tendency in all matters of ecclesiastical discipline; (3) hostility to *Probabilism. The unifying characteristic of the movement was antagonism to the *Jesuits. (2) and (3) remained unchanged throughout the whole history of Jansenism, and were exhibited in all its principal monuments, from the Lettres provinciales (1656–7) of *Pascal onwards.

In 1653 five propositions were condemned by Innocent X in the bull '*Cum Occasione' as summarizing the Jansenist position. The supporters of the movement sought to evade the condemnation by their distinction of 'fact' (fait) and 'law' (droit). The five propositions were admitted to be heretical, but in 'fact' they were declared unrepresentative of Jansen's doctrine, which the Jansenists professed to uphold. After this distinction had been disallowed by *Alexander VII (1656), attempts were made to compel the Jansenists to sign a formulary embodying the Papal anathema. In 1668 they were persuaded into a qualified submission, but the movement continued to gain sympathizers, particularly among the *Oratorians and *Maurists. P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales (1693), in which all the substantive tenets of Jansenism were reaffirmed, was condemned in the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713). The bull, however, was not accepted by the Jansenists, who consequently suffered persecution in France during most of the 18th cent. In the Netherlands, where many French Jansenists took refuge, Jansenism was tolerated or encouraged by successive *Vicars Apostolic, and in 1723 the Dutch Jansenists nominated for themselves a schismatic Bishop of Utrecht (see Old Catholics). In Tuscany, chiefly owing to the anti-Papal policy of the Grand Duke Leopold, Jansenism became so strong that the local synod of *Pistoia (1786) promulgated one of the most comprehensive statements of Jansenist positions that exist. After Napoleon's *Concordat of 1801, French Jansenism survived only as the secret conviction of a few Catholics and as the guiding spirit of a few pious institutions.

The principal primary docc. are being ed. by L. Ceyssens, O.F.M.: Sources relatives aux débuts du jansénisme et de l'antijansénisme 1640–1643 (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xxxi; 1957); La Première Bulle contre Jansénius. Sources relatives à son histoire (1644–53) (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, ix–x; 1961–2); La Fin de la première période du jansénisme. Sources des années 1654–1660 (ib., xii–xiii; 1963–5); Sources relatives à l'histoire du jansénisme et de l'antijansénisme des années 1661–1672 (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., xlv; 1968); La Seconde Période du jansénisme, i. Les Débuts. Sources des années 1673–1676 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, xvii; 1968). The 'Five Propositions' are conveniently pr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), p. 445 f. (Nos. 2001–5).

There has been an immense literature from the outbreak of the controversy onwards. Modern studies include J. Paquier, Le Jansénisme. Étude doctrinale d'après les sources (1909); A. Gazier, Histoire générale du mouvement janséniste (2 vols., 1922). E. Préclin, Les Jansénistes du XVIIIe siècle et la constitution civile du clergé (1928). L. Ceyssens, O.F.M., Jansenistica. Studien in verband met Geschiedenis van het Jansenisme (4 vols., Malines, 1950–62). P. de Leturia, S.J., and others, Nuove ricerche storiche sul giansenismo (Analecta Gregoriana, lxxi; 1954). L. Cognet, Le Jansénisme (1961). J. Orcibal–Annie Barnes, Les Origines du jansénisme (6 vols., 1947 ff.). A. Adam, Du mysticisme à la révolte. Les Jansénistes du XVIIe siècle (1968). On the theological aspects of the movement, N. J. Abercrombie, The Origins of Jansenism (1936). A. C. Jemolo, Il giansenismo in Italia prima della rivoluzione (Bari, 1928). J. Carreyre, Le Jansénisme durant la régence, 1715–23 (Bibliothèque de la R.H.E., ii–iv, 1929–33). É. Appolis, Les Jansénistes espagnols (Bordeaux [1966]). Bremond, iv. List of Jansenist works in L. Patouillet (ed.), Dictionnaire des livres jansénistes (4 vols., Antwerp, 1752). L. Willaert, S.J., Bibliotheca Janseniana Belgica. Répertoire des imprimés concernant les controverses théologiques en relation avec le jansénisme dans les Pays-Bays catholiques et le Pays de Liège aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de Namur, iv, v, xii; 1949–51). J. Forget in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 285–94, s.v. 'Jansenius and Jansenism'; J. Carreyre in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 318–529, s.v. 'Jansénisme', with full bibl. B. Matteucci in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 350–60, s.v. 'Giansenio, Cornelio, e giansenismo'; L. J. Cognet in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 820–4, s.v. See also bibl. to Port-Royal.

JANUARIUS, St., Bp. of Benevento, patron saint of Naples. Several late and historically worthless accounts of his martyrdom survive, but beyond the fact of his death in the neighbourhood of Naples, perhaps at Pozzuoli in the *Diocletianic persecution, nothing is really known of him. His fame rests on the alleged 'liquefaction' of his blood, preserved in a small glass phial, which is believed to take place on some eighteen occasions every year. A vast crowd gathers in the cathedral at Naples to witness the ceremony, headed by a body of poor and aged women, the zie di San Gennaro ('aunts of St. Januarius'), who occupy a privileged position in the church. Feast day in E., 21 Apr.; in W., 19 Sept.

List of 'Acta' in B.H.L., i (1898–9), Nos. 4115–40. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, 'San Gennaro, vescovo e martire' in Note agiografiche, fasc. 4 (S.T., xxiv; 1912), pp. 79–102 (with ed. of Gk. text, pp. 105–14). Discussion of evidence for liquefaction, H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 295–7, with bibl.; cf. also id., 'The Blood-Miracles of Naples' in The Month, cxlix (1927), pp. 44–55, 123–35, 236–47, and id., 'The "Miracle" of St. Januarius', ib., clv (1930), pp. 119–29. H. *Delehaye, S.J., 'Hagiographie napolitaine' in Anal. Boll., lix (1941), pp. 1–33, esp. pp. 1–13. E. Josi, C. Testore, and P. Toschi in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 9–16, s.v. 'Gennaro', with bibl.

JANUS. The pseudonym over which J. J. I. von *Döllinger, with J. N. Huber and J. *Friedrich, issued a series of letters in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung early in 1869, attacking the Papal *Syllabus Errorum of 1864 as tending to obscurantism and tyranny. The purpose of the letters was to promote anti-*Ultramontane tendencies in view of the forthcoming *Vatican Council. See also Quirinus.

The letters were issued in book form in the same year, both in the original and in an Eng. translation.

JAPAN, Christianity in. St. *Francis Xavier first brought Christianity to Japan in 1549, and he and his successors gained many converts. In 1587, under the suspicion that the missions were merely preparing the way for a coming conquest of the country, Christianity was proscribed, but still made progress down to 1596. From 1596 to 1598 persecution raged and in 1597 claimed 26 Japanese converts, who suffered martyrdom by crucifixion at Nagasaki (canonized in 1862; feast day, 6 Feb.). It broke out again in 1613, and by 1640 many thousands, both Japanese and foreigners, had suffered for their faith. Then all foreigners were excluded from Japan under pain of death. Their exclusion continued in force, together with the proscription of Christianity, down to 1859, when a treaty between the Japanese Government and France partially removed the former restriction, allowing also liberty of worship to foreigners, though complete toleration for all was not conceded till 1890. In 1859 RC missions re-entered the country and shortly afterwards (1865) discovered that thousands of Christians, in small local communities, had, though without priests or education, secretly kept and handed on their faith through the two centuries of persecution.

In 1859 some American (Anglican) missionaries arrived, and in 1861–3 the Presbyterians. In 1861 came a mission, sent by the Russian Orthodox Church, under Fr. (later Abp.) Nicolai Kassatkin (canonized by the Orthodox in 1977 and second only to Xavier as the apostle of Japan), who founded a communion whose numbers were exceeded only by that of the Roman obedience. Missions of other denominations followed. Though temporarily hindered by the persecution of 1867–73, in which many thousands of Christians were exiled, work went steadily forward in the later years of the 19th cent. The RCs set up a Vicariate-Apostolic in 1866, for which an archbishopric and three suffragan sees were substituted in 1891. In 1877 the various Presbyterian bodies at work in Japan began an amalgamation which was completed in 1891, while the American Episcopalian missions united with missions from the Churches of England and Canada to form the 'Nippon Sei Ko Kwai' (Holy Catholic Church of Japan) (1887), to some of the dioceses of which Japanese bishops came to be appointed. At first conversions were aided not only by the thirst of younger Japanese for W. education, but through desire to enter the civilization of the W. But by 1890 reaction to national self-reliance had set in. This was confirmed by the defeat of Russia (1905), and events from 1931 onwards intensified the nationalist spirit, reinforcing the state religion of Shinto.

The outbreak of war with U.S.A. and Great Britain in Dec. 1941 led to the removal of all European bishops (some of whom suffered harsh imprisonment) and clergy, and the government endeavoured to force all non-RC Christians into a united and national protestant Church, which some Anglicans joined under duress while others consistently stood out. After the war the 'Nippon Sei Ko Kwai' was reconstituted, under an entirely Japanese episcopate, while the government was obliged to grant freedom of religion and decree the 'abolition' of Shintoism.

O. Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan (2 vols., 1909). R. H. Drummond, A History of Christianity in Japan (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1971). T. Nagayama, Collection of Historical Material Connected with the Roman Catholic Religion in Japan (Nagasaki, c. 1926), with texts. L. Pagès, Histoire de la religion chrétienne au Japon depuis 1598 jusqu'à 1651 (2 vols., 1869–70); H. Hass, Geschichte des Christentums in Japan (2 vols., Tokyo, 1902–4 [up to 1570]); L. Delplace, S.J., Le Catholicisme au Japon (2 vols., 1909–10 [1540–1660]); C. R. Boxer, The Christian Century in Japan, 1549–1650 (1951). H. St. G. Tucker, The History of the Episcopal Church in Japan (Hale Lectures, 1937; 1938 [Anglican]), with bibl. C. W. Iglehart, A Century of Protestant Christianity in Japan (Rutland, Va.–Tokyo, 1959). R. Lee, Stranger in the Land. A Study of the Church in Japan (1967). Latourette, iii, pp. 322–35, vi, pp. 370–411, and vii, pp. 379–400, with bibl. reff.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, iii (1961), pp. 450–57; v (1963), pp. 424–42.

JARROW. See Wearmouth and Jarrow.

JASPERS, KARL (1883–1969), German philosopher. His early interests were in medicine and psychiatry. In 1913 he became Privatdozent, and in 1920 Professor of Philosophy, at Heidelberg, where he remained until forced for political reasons to resign in 1937. He was reinstated in 1945, but moved to Basle, where he was Professor of Philosophy from 1948 to 1961.

Under the influence of S. *Kierkegaard, F. W. *Nietzsche and Protestant theology he developed a Christian *Existentialism, akin to (but not directly influenced by) the teaching of G. Marcel, in an endeavour to interpret the crisis in post-1918 Germany in secular philosophy and culture. Jaspers put religion and philosophy in contrast, and stressed the limits of science, notably in its ability to reach the self. This self is the ground of all existence and esp. characterized by the need for self-communication. Later Jaspers criticized R. *Bultmann on the grounds that his attempts at *demythologization presupposed that science had a total world-view, while he himself held that myths are rather particular signs or ciphers by which alone finite beings can be brought into relationship with Transcendence. He repudiated the exclusive claims of Christ, whom he regarded as one cipher among many, though in his last works he seems to have accorded Him a special position. His writings include Die geistige Situation der Zeit (1931; Eng. tr. as Man in the Modern Age, 1933), Philosophie (3 vols., 1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., Chicago, 1969–71), Der philosophische Glaube (1948; Eng. tr. as The Perennial Scope of Philosophy, 1950), Vom Ursprung und Ziel der Geschichte (1949; Eng. tr. as The Origin and Goal of History, 1953), and Der philosophische Glaube angesichts der Offenbarung (1962; Eng. tr. as Philosophical Faith and Revelation, 1967).

Festschriften for his 70th Birthday, K. Piper (ed.), Offener Horizont (Munich, 1953), with bibl. to date, pp. 449–59, and for his 80th Birthday, id. (ed.), Karl Jaspers Werk und Wirkung (ib., 1963), with bibl. pp. 173–216. P. A. Schilpp (ed.), The Philosophy of Karl Jaspers (New York, 1957), incl. a 'Philosophical Autobiography' by Jaspers, tr. into Eng., pp. 5–94. J. Pfeiffer, Existenzphilosophie. Eine Einführung in Heidegger und Jaspers (1933). M. Dufrenne and P. Ricœur, Karl Jaspers et la philosophie de l'existence (1947); W. Lohff, Glaube und Freiheit. Das theologische Problem der Religionskritik von Karl Jaspers (Gütersloh, 1957); X. Tilliette, Karl Jaspers. Théorie de la vérité métaphysique des chiffres, foi philosophique (Théologie, xliv [1960]); W. Schneiders, Karl Jaspers in der Kritik (1965); G. Simon, Die Achse der Weltgeschichte nach Jaspers (Analecta Gregoriana, cxlvii; 1965); L. H. Ehrlich, Karl Jaspers. Philosophy as Faith (Amherst, Mass., 1975).

JASSY, Synod of (1642). Next to the Synod of *Jerusalem (1672), that of Jassy (in Moldavia: i.e. the modern *Rumania) is the most important Council in the history of the E. Church since the fall of Constantinople. Meeting as it did in the border country between the Ottoman Empire and Russia, it included representatives of both the Greek and the Slav Orthodox Churches. Its chief work, besides condemning the Calvinist teachings of Cyril *Lucar, was to ratify the Orthodox Confession of Peter *Mogila, Metropolitan of Kiev, who was present at the Synod. Before approval was secured, however, Meletius Syrigos, one of the two delegates of the Patriarchate of *Constantinople, made extensive alterations in Mogila's original text, aimed at lessening its markedly Latin and Scholastic character; but even in its revised form the Confession remains strongly influenced by RC theology.

Acts of the Synod in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ii (1953), pp. 575–82. See also bibl. to Peter Mogila.

JEAN-BAPTISTE MARIE VIANNEY, St. See Curé d'Ars, The.

JEANNE D'ARC, St. See Joan of Arc, St.

JEANNE FRANÇOISE FRÉMYOT DE CHANTAL. See Jane Frances de Chantal, St.

JEBB, JOHN (1775–1833), Bp. of Limerick. A native of Drogheda, he entered *Trinity College, Dublin, in 1791. After ordination as deacon in 1799 he held curacies in *Ireland and became Rector of Abington, Co. Limerick, in 1809. In 1820 he published his Essay on Sacred Literature, which made his name as an author. In 1822 he was appointed Bp. of Limerick.

A lifelong friend of Alexander *Knox, a Thirty Years' Correspondence (2 vols.) with whom was published in 1836, he anticipated certain of the leading doctrinal emphases of the *Oxford Movement, e.g. he laid stress on the unbroken continuity of the Church; but, though he was highly spoken of by J. H. *Newman, there is no clear evidence that the course of the movement was directly influenced by Jebb's teaching.

He is to be distinguished from JOHN JEBB (1736–86), a Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, who in 1771 advocated the abolition of clerical subscription at graduation to the *Thirty-Nine Articles and in his later life gave up his ecclesiastical preferments and practised as a physician.

Life by C. Forster, incl. selection of his letters (2 vols., London, 1836). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 259–61.

JEHOSHAPHAT, The Valley of. On the basis of Joel 3. 2 and 12 (the only OT refs.), the traditional scene of the Lord's Coming Judgement. The name is perh. to be connected with King Jehoshaphat (1 Kgs. 15. 24, 22. 50) or some other historic person, but is prob. artificial, since 'Jehoshaphat' means 'Jehovah has judged'. Since the 4th cent. A.D. (*Eusebius, *Bordeaux Pilgrim, *Jerome) the name has been in current use among Jews, Christians and Moslems for the valley separating *Jerusalem on the East from the Mount of *Olives and traversed by the brook *Cedron, though the valley is not so described in the NT or by *Josephus.

H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem. Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, ii, Jérusalem nouvelle (1926), pp. 849–52. G. M. Perrella, C.M., 'La valle di Giosafat e il giudizio universale' in Divus Thomas (Piacenza), xxxvi (1933), pp. 45–50. C. Warren in H.D.B., iii (1899), p. 561 f.; F. Vigouroux in Dict. de la Bible, iii (1903), cols. 1651–5, s.v. 'Josaphat (Vallée de)'.

JEHOVAH. A form of the Hebrew Divine Name, (more properly '*Yahweh', q.v.), which was popularized at the Renaissance. See Tetragrammaton.

JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES. A sect of American origin, founded by C. T. *Russell (q.v.) under the name of 'International Bible Students'. The centre of Russell's message was his belief in the near end of the world for all save his own adherents the 'elect of Jehovah', who would be the sole members of the Messianic Kingdom. This Adventist teaching was developed by his successor, J. F. *Rutherford (q.v.), on lines professedly subversive of civil authority. He held the theory of a 'theocratic Kingdom', membership of which prevented allegiance to any country, and in his periodicals The Watchtower and Consolation carried on a vigorous propaganda against the British Empire as well as against all institutional religion. The RC Church, the C of E, and the Free Churches are the constant butt of abuse in these publications, which deny most of the fundamental Christian doctrines.

Jehovah's Witnesses is an organization with printing establishments all over the world. They carry on an effective propaganda among an uncritical public and attract esp. the dissatisfied elements of society by preaching hatred of all existing institutions. During the war of 1939 to 1945 they were suppressed in several countries, e.g. *Australia and *New Zealand, as a subversive organization. They can hardly be regarded as a religious society, since, acc. to Rutherford's own statement, they hold that 'religion is against God'. From their headquarters in Great Britain (since 1958 at 7 Ridgeway, London N.W.7), they operate under the name of the 'Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society'.

M. S. Czatt, The International Bible Students: Jehovah's Witnesses (1933); H. H. Stroup, The Jehovah's Witnesses (1945); R. Pike, Jehovah's Witnesses (1954); M. Cole, Jehovah's Witnesses (New York, 1955; London, 1956); G. Hébert, S.J., Les Témoins de Jéhovah. Essai critique d'histoire et de doctrine (Montreal, 1960); A. Rogerson, Millions Now Living Will Never Die. A Study of Jehovah's Witnesses (1969).

JELF, RICHARD WILLIAM (1798–1871), Anglican divine. Educated at Eton and at *Christ Church, Oxford, he became a canon of Christ Church in 1830. From 1844 to 1868 he was principal of *King's College, London. During the *Tractarian controversies Jelf was one of the few theologians who gained the confidence of both sides. In 1841, as soon as the attack on Tract No. 90 was opened, J. H. *Newman addressed an Open Letter to Jelf in explanation of his position, and later in the same year E. B. *Pusey also addressed a Letter to Jelf in Newman's defence; and in 1843 he sat on the tribunal which examined Pusey's delated sermon on the Holy Eucharist. In 1844 he delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures on An Inquiry into the Means of Grace. While at King's College he strongly disapproved of the teaching of his colleague, F. D. *Maurice. His lectures on the Thirty-Nine Articles were published posthumously (1873).

W. A. Greenhill in D.N.B., xxix (1892), p. 291 f., s.v. Scattered reff. in H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, i and ii (1893).

JEREMIAH (7th cent. B.C.), prophet of Judah. He was a native of Anathoth, nr. *Jerusalem, and probably belonged to the family of Abiathar, the high priest whom King *Solomon had deprived of his priestly functions. He was born c. 650, and received his vocation to the prophetic office in 626 (Jer. 1. 1–19). Although he seems to have played no prominent role in public affairs during the first years of his ministry, he probably approved Josiah's reform (2 Kgs. 22. 1 – 23. 30), but without taking part in it. The death of Josiah at Megiddo (608) caused a change in the people and its rulers, under Jehoiakim (607–597), who fell back into idolatry, and from now on Jeremiah proclaimed the destruction of Jerusalem and the *Temple. After the fall of Nineveh (606) the prophet counselled submission to the Babylonians, but the king resisted, and Judah did not give in until after Jehoiakim's death in 597. Under the new king, Zedekiah, however, Judah continued to side with Egypt against Babylon, despising the warnings of the prophet, who, during the siege of Jerusalem, was first imprisoned and then thrown into a pit from which he was rescued by the Ethiopian eunuch Ebed-melech (38. 7–13). After the final destruction of the city (586) Jeremiah was left free to live in Judah, but after the assassination of the governor, Gedaliah, the Jews forced him to flee with them into Egypt, where he continued to reproach his countrymen for their idolatry (ch. 44). There is no record of his death in Scripture; acc. to a tradition mentioned by *Tertullian he was stoned to death by the Jews (cf. Heb. 11. 37). The same tradition is found, together with many colourful details, in the 'Rest of the Words of Baruch' (see Baruch, III and IV).

Jeremiah is the most personal and sensitive of the OT prophets, conscious throughout of a close union with God and of the value and responsibility of the individual soul. His prophetic office, which entailed the denunciation of the sins of Judah and the proclamation of their punishment, was in tragic conflict with his love for his people, which led him to intercede repeatedly on his nation's behalf.

The Prophet's sufferings, caused by the ingratitude and misunderstanding of his people, his prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem and his weeping over the doomed city, have traditionally been interpreted as figures of the life of Christ, and the Church has used the Book, together with the Book of *Lamentations ascribed to him, in her Offices for Passiontide.

For Bibliography, see foll. entry.

JEREMIAH, Book of. The Jewish tradition, which ascribes it to *Jeremiah (q.v.), is ancient and unanimous, and is supported by frequent NT quotations. Many modern critics ascribe a great part of the Book to editors, esp. to Jeremiah's amanuensis *Baruch, and frequently attribute the promises of restitution and the giving of a New Covenant (chs. 30 and 31) to an author living after the time of the return of the exiles to *Jerusalem (537), on the grounds of their resemblances to *Deutero-Isaiah. The so-called Oracles to the Nations are also often denied to Jeremiah, esp. the prophecy against Babylon (chs. 50 and 51), which contradicts the policy of submission consistently advocated by the prophet in other parts of the Book. The greatest critical problem raised by the Book, however, is the striking difference between the *Septuagint and the *Massoretic texts. The former is about one-eighth shorter than the latter, and in the Septuagint the Oracles against the Nations do not come at the end, but follow 25. 14. This divergence has been explained in many different ways; but most modern critics believe that the order of the Greek is original. The different order of the two texts may, however, arise from the amalgamation of two collections of prophecies, which were combined in two different ways, a theory which would also explain the chronological confusion noticeable throughout the Book. In ch. 36 the prophet himself tells us something of its origin. The prophecies, he says, were written down in the fourth year of Jehoiakim by Baruch, read to the king and burned by him, and then written again with additional material. These prophecies are usually believed to form the kernel of the Book, to which other material was added later, either by Jeremiah himself or by his disciples.

The prophecies generally held to be authentic relate to the ruin of Judah and Jerusalem, to the victories of Nebuchadnezzar, and to the captivity; and the prophet's chief object was the preparation of the Jewish people for receiving the lesson of the Exile. Emphatic in his scorn of idols (e.g. 2. 27 f.; 10. 1–5; 11. 10–13), he extols the transcendence of Jehovah, the ruler of the nations (10. 10; 25. 15 ff.), who are to Him as clay to the potter (18. 5–10). He is the God of justice and goodness, who condemns His people because they have abandoned righteousness (e.g. 7. 4–15). This sense of Divine justice causes Jeremiah's astonishment at seeing the wicked prosper (12. 1 f.), and here is raised for the first time in the OT the problem of the good fortune of sinners and the sufferings of the just. In face of the hostility of the official representatives of the Jewish religion, Jeremiah emphasizes the interior cult of the righteousness of the heart and of the observance of the moral law (22. 3), and has hard words for a purely external cult (6. 20; 7. 21 f.), though he assigns a place to a true ritual worship in Messianic times (17. 26; 31. 14) and insists on the importance of the Sabbath (17. 19–27). He denounces the universality of sin, which reigns in Judah from the highest to the lowest, among young and old, men and women (2. 29–37; 5. 1), and destroys almost all hope of salvation (5. 20–29). But in the midst of this world of despair the prophet proclaims hope for the future (chs. 30 and 31). The most striking characteristic of Jer. is the New Covenant (31. 31–4) which God will make with His people, writing His Law in their hearts, and in which the Gentiles, too, will participate (16. 19–21) under the rule of the Messianic King, of the seed of David (23. 5–8, 33. 14–26). The Book of Jeremiah has had a great influence on the formation of exilic and post-exilic Jewish piety, and is one of the most striking adumbrations of the religion of the NT.

Modern commentaries include those of B. *Duhm (K.H.C., xi; 1901), A. S. *Peake (Jer. and Lam., 2 vols., Cent. Bibl. [1911], vol. i, and vol. ii, pp. 3–286), S. R. *Driver (London, 1906), A. W. Streane (Camb. Bibl., RV, 1913), W. Rudolph (H.A.T., I, xii; 1947), J. Steinmann (Lectio Divina, ix; Paris, 1952), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xx/xxi; 1952; ed. 4, 1960; ed. 6, 1969 ff.), H. Cunliffe-Jones (Torch Comm., 1960). T. K. *Cheyne, Jeremiah. His Life and Times [1888]. J. Skinner, Prophecy and Religion. Studies in the Life of Jeremiah (1922). G. A. *Smith, Jeremiah (Baird Lecture for 1922; [1923]). W. F. Lofthouse, Jeremiah and the New Covenant (1925). A. C. Welch, Jeremiah. His Time and his Work (1928). V. Herntrich, Jeremia der Prophet und sein Volk (1938). S. *Mowinckel, Zur Komposition des Buches Jeremia (Skrifter utgit av Videnskapsselskapet i Kristiania, ii, historisk-filosofisk Klasse, 1913, No. 5). P. Volz, Studien zum Text des Jeremia (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, xxv; 1920). E. Podechard, 'Le Livre de Jérémie. Structure et formation' in R. Bibl., xxxvii (1928), pp. 181–97. H. H. Rowley, 'The Book of Jeremiah and the Book of Deuteronomy' in Studies in Old Testament Prophecy Presented to Professor Theodore H. Robinson (1950), pp. 157–74, repr. in From Moses to Qumran (1963), pp. 187–208; id., 'The Early Prophecies of Jeremiah in their Setting' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlv (1963), pp. 198–234, repr. in Men of God (1963), pp. 133–68, with extensive reff. E. W. Nicholson, Preaching to the Exiles. A Study in the Prose Tradition of the Book of Jeremiah (1970). A. B. *Davidson in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 567–78, s.v.; A. Gelin, P.S.S., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 857–89, s.v.

JEREMIAH, Lamentations of. See Lamentations of Jeremiah.

JEREMY, Epistle of. A short item in the OT *Apocrypha. In what is now in its outward form a letter, the Prophet *Jeremiah (q.v.) declaims to the exiles whom Nebuchadnezzar had brought to Babylon (597 and 586 B.C.) against the folly of idol-worship. The traditional view that it was written in Heb. has had its modern defenders (C. J. Ball, O. Eissfeldt); but more probably the Book was composed in Gk., in which alone it survives. It prob. dates from the 2nd cent. B.C. In most Gk. MSS. it is a separate item; but in a few, as well as in the Vulg. (and in the English Bible, AV and RV), it appears as the conclusion of the Book of *Baruch (Bar. 6).

E. *Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, iii (ed. 4; 1909), p. 467 f., with reff. to earlier lit. C. J. Ball in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 596–611. W. Naumann, Untersuchungen über den apokryphen Jeremiasbrief (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxv; 1913). H. St. J. Thackeray, Some Aspects of the Greek Old Testament (Arthur Davis Memorial Lecture, 1927), pp. 54–64. R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 426–32, with bibl. p. 536. Eissfeldt, p. 594 f. A. Robert in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 849–57, s.v. See also bibl. to Baruch, Book of.

JERICHO. A town of Palestine, near the Jordan, north-east of *Jerusalem. Its miraculous capture by Joshua is narrated in Josh. 6. A later city on the site, in a very fertile valley, was favoured by *Herod the Great and visited by Christ (Mk. 10. 46, Lk. 19. 1, &c.).

J. Garstang–J. B. E. Garstang, The Story of Jericho (1940). Kathleen M. Kenyon, Digging up Jericho (1957). E. Sellin–C. Watzinger, Jericho. Die Ergebnisse der Ausgrabungen (Wissenschaftliche Veröffentlichung der Deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft, Hft. xxii, 1913). L. H. Vincent, 'La Chronologie des ruines de Jéricho' in R. Bibl., xxxiv (1930), pp. 403–33.

JEROME. Eng. form of Lat. 'Hieronymus'. The form 'Hierome' is sometimes found in older (e.g. 17th cent.) English.

JEROME, St. (c. 342–420), Eusebius Hieronymus, Biblical scholar. Born at Strido near *Aquileia, Jerome studied at *Rome, where he was baptized, and then travelled in Gaul before devoting himself to an ascetic life with friends at Aquileia. About 374 he set out for Palestine. He delayed in *Antioch, where he heard the lectures of *Apollinarius of Laodicea until self-accused in a dream of preferring pagan literature to religious ('Ciceronianus es, non Christianus'). He then settled as a hermit at Chalcis in the Syrian desert for four or five years, and while there learnt Hebrew. On his return to Antioch he was ordained priest by *Paulinus, next spent some time in *Constantinople, and from 382 to 385 was back in Rome, where he acted as secretary to Pope *Damasus and successfully preached asceticism (see Melania; Paula). After Damasus's death he visited Antioch, Egypt, and Palestine, and in 386 finally settled at *Bethlehem, where he ruled a newly-founded men's monastery and devoted the rest of his life to study.

Jerome's writings issued from a scholarship unsurpassed in the early Church. His greatest achievement was his translation of most of the Bible into Latin from the original tongues, to which he had been orig. prompted by Damasus (see Vulgate). He also wrote many Biblical commentaries, in which he brought a wide range of linguistic and topographical material to bear on the interpretation of the sacred text. Further, he anticipated the Reformers in advocating the acceptance by the Church of the Hebrew *Canon of Scripture, thereby excluding those Books which came to be called the *Apocrypha. In addition to his Biblical work, he translated and continued *Eusebius's 'Chronicle'; compiled a 'De Viris Illustribus', a bibliography of ecclesiastical writers; and translated into Latin works by *Origen and *Didymus. His correspondence is of great interest and historical importance. His passionate nature also led him to throw himself into many controversies and to attack *Arianism, *Pelagianism, and *Origenism (the last of which had been championed by his friend *Rufinus of Aquileia). In some of his letters to friends and in his tracts against *Helvidius and *Jovinian, he advocated extreme asceticism.

Since the 13th cent. he has often been depicted in art with a red hat, on the supposition that Damasus created him a cardinal. He is also often represented with a lion at his feet. Feast day, 30 Sept. See also Psalters, Western.

Jerome himself gives a list of his writings prior to A.D. 392 in his De Viris Illustribus, 135. Earliest collected ed. by D. *Erasmus (9 vols., Basle, 1516). Later edd. by Marianus Victorius, Bp. of Rieti (9 vols., Rome, 1565–72), and the *Maurists (mainly J. Martianay, O.S.B., 5 vols., Paris, 1693–1706). Best collected ed. that of D. *Vallarsi (11 vols., Verona, 1734–42), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxii–xxx. A number of separate works ed. in C.S.E.L. and C.C. Ed. of his letters, with Fr. tr., by J. Labourt (Collection des Universités de France; 8 vols., 1949–63). Eng. tr. of letters, by C. C. Mierow, with notes by T. C. Lawler (A.C.W., xxxiii, etc., 1963 ff.). Eng. tr. of De Viris Illustribus by E. C. Richardson (N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, iii, 1892, pp. 359–84) and of letters and other select works by W. H. Fremantle and others (ib., vi, 1893). 'Select Letters' ed., with Eng. tr., by F. A. Wright (Loeb, 1933). B. Lambert, O.S.B., Bibliotheca Hieronymiana Manuscripta. La Tradition manuscrite des œuvres de saint Jérôme (4 vols., Instrumenta Patristica, iv; 1969–72). Extended studies by G. Grützmacher (3 vols., Leipzig, 1901–8) and F. Cavallera, S.J. (S.S.L., i and ii, 1922; all published). Other studies by O. Zöckler (Gotha, 1865), P. Monceaux (Paris, 1932; Eng. tr. of pt. 1, 1933), A. Penna (Turin–Rome [1949]), P. Antin, O.S.B. (Paris, 1951), J. Steinmann (ib., 1958; Eng. tr., 1959), M. Testard (ib., 1969) and J. N. D. Kelly (London, 1975). Miscellanea Geronimiana. Scritti varii pubblicati nel XV centenario dalla morte di San Girolamo (Rome, 1930). F. X. Murphy, C.SS.R. (ed.), A Monument to Saint Jerome. Essays on some Aspects of his Life, Works and Influence (1952). Y. Bodin, Saint Jérôme et l'Église (Théologie historique, vi; 1966). P. Antin, O.S.B., Recueil sur saint Jérôme (Collection Latomus, xcv; 1968). H. F. D. Sparks, 'Jerome as Biblical Scholar' in P. R. Ackroyd –C. F. Evans (edd.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, i (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 510–41. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 605–54; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 394–404. W. H. Fremantle in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 29–50, s.v. 'Hieronymus (4)'; J. Forget in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 894–983; F. Cavallera, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 889–97, s.v.; id. and others in E.C., vi (1951) cols. 652–64, s.v. 'Girolamo'. See also bibl. to Vulgate.

JEROME EMILIANI, St. (1481–1537), the founder of the *Somaschi. A native of *Venice, after service in the army he was ordained priest in 1518, and devoted himself for the rest of his life to work among the poor and afflicted, establishing orphanages, hospitals, and houses for fallen women. To foster this work he founded in 1532 a society, with its mother-house at the village of Somasca, between Milan and Bergamo. He was canonized in 1767 and made the patron saint of orphans and abandoned children by *Pius XI in 1928. Feast day, 20 July.

Life by A. Tortora (Milan, 1620), repr. in AA.SS., Feb. II (1658), pp. 220–74. G. Landini, S. Girolamo Miani dalle testimonianze processuali, dai biografi, dai documenti editi e inediti fino ad oggi (1947). S. Raviolo, San Girolamo Emiliani (1947). N. Del Re in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vi (Rome, 1965), cols. 1143–8, s.v. 'Girolamo Miani', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to Somaschi.

JEROME OF PRAGUE (c. 1370–1416), Bohemian Reformer and friend of J. *Huss. Very little is known of his early life. He was prob. a native of Prague, where he studied and came under the influence of Huss and of the *Wycliffite philosophy. Encouraged by Huss to visit the European centres of learning, after taking his degree at Prague he made his way (1398) to *Oxford. Here he studied the theological writings of Wycliffe, esp. his 'Dialogus' and 'Trialogus', and brought them back to *Paris and Prague (c. 1402). Acc. to his own testimony he was in *Jerusalem in 1403; he was in Paris again in 1404, at Heidelberg in 1405 and Cologne in 1406. In all these universities his exaggerated *Realism aroused much opposition. On his return to Prague in 1407 he took an active part in the religious controversies and became a leader of the nationalist university students. Wishing to gain also the neighbouring countries to Wycliffe's ideas, he had a discussion with King Sigismund of Hungary at Ofen in 1410 on the vices of the clergy. Being declared suspect of heresy, he fled to Moravia, but in 1412 he was back at Prague, where he violently attacked the bull of *John XXIII proclaiming an Indulgence for the crusade against Ladislaus of Naples. In 1413 he accompanied Grand-Duke Witold of Cracow to Russia and Lithuania, and aroused suspicion by showing himself favourable to heterodox rites. In 1415 he followed Huss to *Constance. He escaped when he realized his danger, but was brought back to the Council in chains. After Huss's death (6 July), which led to a schism in Bohemia, the Council wished to avoid a second execution and applied pressure to obtain a retractation from Jerome. On 11 Sept. 1415 he consented to read a document anathematizing the teaching of Wycliffe and Huss and accepting the authority of the Papacy and the Council. The sincerity of this abjuration, however, soon became suspect, and the trial was resumed in May 1416. Jerome defended himself with great eloquence, but in the last part of his speech he took back his abjuration, proclaimed the innocence and sanctity of Huss, and his own adherence to the teaching of Wycliffe on all points except *Transubstantiation, which he accepted. After a last attempt to obtain his submission he was condemned to the stake, where he died with great courage, reciting hymns to the BVM.

The principal sources are the acts of the Council of Constance, and works dealing with Huss, q.v. L. Heller, Hieronymus von Prag (Lübeck, 1835). R. R. Betts, 'Jerome of Prague' in University of Birmingham Historical Journal, i (1947), pp. 51–91; P. P. Bernard, 'Jerome of Prague, Austria and the Hussites' in Church History, xxvii (1958), pp. 3–22. B.R.U.O., iii (1959), p. 1512 f., s.v. 'Prague, Jerome of'.

JERUSALEM. Referred to as 'Urusalem' in Egyptian texts c. 1900 B.C. and again in the *Tell-el-Amarna Letters (15th–14th cent. B.C.; it was then subject to Egypt), the city became the capital of Judah, the site of its religious sanctuary (the *Temple, q.v.), and as such the 'Holy City'. The town, with its highest point c. 2680 ft. above sea-level, controls the north–south route along the hilly backbone of the country, though it stands apart from the coastal route connecting Egypt with Syria and Mesopotamia. The earliest Jerusalem lies to the south of the present Old City, on the eastern of the two ridges running south from the present walls. To the E., the *Cedron valley bounds both the Old City and the original site. The latter is separated from the western ridge by the Tyropoeon valley, now largely silted up. The Hinnom Valley (see Gehenna) bounds the Old City and the western ridge on the west and curves round to the east to join the Cedron.

Archaeological evidence indicates the existence of habitation on the eastern portion of the site (Ophel) as early as c. 3000 B.C. In pre-Israelite times the inhabitants of the township seem to have been of mixed race. Acc. to Ezek. 16. 3 they included Amorites and Hittites, while elsewhere (e.g. Josh. 15. 63) they are called 'Jebusites'. About 1000 B.C. the Jebusite stronghold known as 'Zion' was captured by *David, who refortified it as his own city (the 'City of David') and made Jerusalem, which had previously belonged to the territory of neither the northern nor the southern tribes, the capital of the United Monarchy. *Solomon, his successor, built the Temple some 950 ft. to the north of the original north wall, and enlarged the city by fortifying the intervening space. About 700 B.C. Jerusalem was threatened by attack from the Assyrians (2 Kgs. 18 f.). Among the measures taken by Hezekiah to counter this attack was the cutting of the 'Siloam Tunnel' through solid rock a distance of some 1700 ft. to carry the water of the spring Gihon from the exposed E. flank of the town to a rock-cut cistern on the W. side. In 597 B.C., and again in 586 B.C., it was captured and devastated by Nebuchadnezzar, and all except the lower classes were deported to Babylon (2 Kgs. 24 f.).

After the Exile it was not rebuilt till the end of the 6th cent., with the building of the Second Temple. From now on the Jews were an ecclesiastically governed state under the suzerainty first of Persia and then of the Seleucids. This period ended with the *Maccabaean wars of the 2nd cent. B.C., during which the Temple was profaned under *Antiochus Epiphanes (167 B.C.). There followed the revival of Jewish national glory under a short dynasty of priest-kings. During this period the city was extended on to the northern end of the western ridge. The Maccabaean period ended with the Roman conquest by Pompey (64 B.C.), after which the country was ruled directly or indirectly by Rome. The Third Temple was the work of *Herod the Great, who ruled as a vassal of Rome from 37 to 4 B.C. The turbulence of the people and the misgovernment of Roman procurators and native dynasts combined to produce the rebellion of A.D. 66, which was followed by a four-year siege, and, on its fall in 70, the extermination or removal of most of the population and the destruction of the city. A small and scattered population survived, however, until Hadrian, after the Jewish revolt in his reign, refounded the place as a Gentile city under the name of *Aelia Capitolina (A.D. 135).

The Christian history of the city begins with the short ministry of the Lord, culminating in His Crucifixion and Resurrection. There the Apostles lived and taught for some time after *Pentecost, and after they had scattered farther afield they met in Jerusalem with the 'elders' of the Church for the first Christian council (Acts 15; c. A.D. 49). St. *James, 'the Lord's brother', presided over the local Church after the dispersion of the Twelve, and it seems likely that the kinsmen of the Lord exercised some measure of leadership among the neighbouring Christian community until the foundation of Aelia Capitolina and the banishment at that time of all Jews from the region. From that date the local Church was purely Gentile in composition.

It was not until the visit of St. *Helena (c. A.D. 326), the mother of *Constantine, and the beginning of the fashion of venerating the holy places set by her visit, that the Christian see became of any importance. Until the 5th cent. the see was suffragan to *Caesarea. But at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) the bishopric (see Juvenal) was granted patriarchal dignity. The see never attained, however, to the prestige of the other patriarchates, and when the Crusaders held the city in the 12th cent. the (Eastern) patriarch lived in *Constantinople. Though for some periods afterwards the patriarchs came back to Jerusalem, they have been permanently settled there only since 1845; since the first half of the 16th cent. the Patriarch has always been a Greek, although the great majority of the faithful were and are Arabs. A Latin patriarchate was in existence from 1099 till 1291, and nominally till 1374, and was again constituted in 1847. There is also a (Gregorian) *Armenian patriarchate, and the *Melchite Patr. of Antioch adds the title of Jerusalem to his others.

The Christian centre of Jerusalem is the Church of the Resurrection, commonly known outside the country as the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre. The site of the Temple was long in Muslim hands, and is occupied mostly by the *Dome of the Rock. There are numerous other holy places within and outside the city. Where both Orthodox and Latins claim that their particular site is the genuine scene of the mystery commemorated, the Easterns have usually the more ancient tradition, the Latin sites generally having been established at earliest in Crusading times.

The present city covers only part of that of NT times. During the reign of Herod Agrippa (A.D. 40–4) the whole of the western ridge was enclosed, with a wall joining the southern tip of the original city on the eastern ridge, and to the north the walls were advanced by c. half a mile. When Aelia Capitolina was built on the ruins of Jerusalem, the whole of the area to the south, including the entire original city, was left outside the walls, while the north wall of Aelia followed that of Herod the Great. The walls of the Old City now follow approximately those of Aelia Capitolina. The traditional sites of *Calvary and the Holy Sepulchre lie in the area outside the walls of the town of Herod the Great, but inside those of Herod Agrippa built some 14 years after the date of the Crucifixion, and are therefore within the present Old City. The alternative site to the north of the present wall (see Gordon's Calvary) can no longer be accepted. The walls of the present city date from the 16th cent., though much of the work done in the Frankish rebuilding (c. 1230) still remains.

L. H. Vincent, O.P.–F. M. Abel, O.P., Jérusalem. Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire (2 vols., bound in 4, 1912–26); J. Simons, S.J., Jerusalem in the Old Testament. Researches and Theories (Leiden, 1952); L. H. Vincent, O.P.–A. M. Steve, O.P., Jérusalem de l'Ancien Testament. Recherches d'archéologie et d'histoire (3 parts in 2 vols. + 2 vols. of plates, 1954–6); J. Jeremias, Jerusalem zur Zeit Jesu (4 parts, 1923–37; ed. 3, 1962; Eng. tr., 1969). Kathleen M. Kenyon, Jerusalem. Excavating 3000 Years of History (1967). C. Mommert, Topographie des alten Jerusalem (4 vols., 1901–7). G. A. *Smith, Jerusalem. The Topography, Economics and History from the Earliest Times to A.D. 70 (2 vols., 1907–8). H. V. Morton, In the Steps of the Master (1934; popular). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., Étude sur la 'Peregrinatio Silviae'. Les églises de Jérusalem. La discipline et la liturgie au IVe siècle (1895). On the Greek Patriarchate, M. *Le Quien, O.P., Oriens Christianus, iii (1740), pp. 101–528; C. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἱεροσολύμων (1910); T. Dowling, The Orthodox Greek Patriarchate of Jerusalem (1913). L. H. Vincent in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 898–966, s.v.

JERUSALEM, Anglican Bishopric in. In 1841 a bishopric was set up in *Jerusalem by the joint efforts of England and Prussia to serve the Anglicans and Protestants of Syria, Chaldaea, Egypt, and Abyssinia. The scheme, which provided that the bishop was to be nominated by England and Prussia alternately, excited opposition both among *Lutherans, who disliked any semblance of episcopal order, and High Church Anglicans, who objected to a virtual union with a Protestant body, without guarantees for the preservation of Church order or doctrine. The first holder of the see was M. S. *Alexander (q.v.), a Christian convert from orthodox Judaism. Estrangement between the two communities increased as the numbers of Germans living in Palestine grew, and the scheme finally collapsed in 1886, when the Anglicans required that the bishop should always be consecrated acc. to the Anglican rite and should assent to the *Thirty-Nine Articles. Since then the see has been maintained by the Anglicans alone. Besides serving the spiritual needs of Anglicans in Palestine and the neighbouring countries, it does missionary work and is a valued point of contact for Anglicanism with the E. Churches and, to a less degree, with the Latin Churches in the East. From 1957 to 1976 it was an archbishopric.

[H. Abeken, anon.], Das evangelische Bisthum in Jerusalem. Geschichtliche Darlegung mit Urkunden (Berlin, 1842). Eng. tr. of this work, with additions, in W. H. Hechler (ed.), The Jerusalem Bishopric (1883). P. J. Welch, 'Anglican Churchmen and the Establishment of the Jerusalem Bishopric' in J.E.H., viii (1957), pp. 193–204, with reff. J. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H., p. 298 f., s.v.

JERUSALEM, Knights of St. John in. See Hospitallers.

JERUSALEM, Synod of (1672). The most important modern Council in the Eastern Church, held in the Basilica of the Nativity at *Bethlehem (hence sometimes known as the 'Synod of Bethlehem'). It was convened by *Dositheus (q.v.), Patr. of Jerusalem, and sought to repudiate the movement fostered by Cyril *Lucar towards accommodation with *Calvinism. Along with the Synod of *Jassy (1642) it marked the closest approximation of E. Orthodoxy, of which it desired to be fully representative, to *Tridentine Catholicism. It decreed, inter alia, that the Church is equally infallible with Scripture; that predestination depends on foreknowledge and takes account of works; that God cannot be the cause of evil; that the Church has a part in the mediatorial office of Christ; that justification is through faith working by love; that natural virtue is to be distinguished from that of the regenerate; that souls which have fallen from grace may be purified in Hades after death, so as to be fit for the final vision of God; that there are seven sacraments; that *Receptionism, or the doctrine that the beneficial operation of the sacrament depends upon the faith of the recipient, is to be condemned; that Baptism is an effectual sign of grace; that in the Eucharist the elements are transubstantiated (though doubt has been sometimes expressed as to whether the philosophical implications of μετουσιοῦσθαι are the same as those of transubstantiari); and that the Books of Tobit, Judith, Ecclus., and Wisdom are to be regarded as canonical.

Acta first pr. by the *Maurist, M. Foucqueret, O.S.B., Synodus Bethleemitica adversus Calvinistas Haereticos (Paris, 1676); repr. in Hardouin, ix, cols. 179–274; also in E. J. Kimmel (ed.), Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis (Jena, 1850), i, 325–487, and in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, ii (Athens, 1953), pp. 694–773. Eng. tr., with tr. of Cyril Lucar's Confession of 1631 in an appendix, by J. N. W. B. Robertson, The Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Jerusalem (1899). Further bibl. in D.T.C., iv (1911), col. 1793, s.v. 'Dosithée'.

JESSE WINDOW. A window whose design is based on the descent of Jesus from the royal line of *David, in most cases taking the form of a tree springing from Jesse, the father of David, and ending in Jesus or the Virgin and Holy Child, with the intermediary descendants placed on scrolls of foliage branching out of each other. Examples of the window are to be seen at the cathedrals of *Wells and *Chartres, St. George's, Hanover Square (a 16th cent. window from Malines), and in *Dorchester Abbey, near Oxford, where the tree forms the central mullion.

A. Watson, The Early Iconography of the Tree of Jesse (1934); C. Woodforde, 'A Group of Fourteenth Century Windows showing the Tree of Jesse' in the Journal of the British Society of Master Glass Painters, vi (1937), pp. 184–90.

JESU, DULCIS MEMORIA. The celebrated late 12th cent. poem, very familiar through the translations of sections of it in the English hymns 'Jesu, the very thought of Thee With sweetness fills my breast' (by E. *Caswall) and 'Jesu! the very thought is sweet! In that dear name all heart-joys meet' (by J. M. *Neale). The intense mysticism and honeyed beauty of its language are unsurpassed in medieval devotional literature, though the complete poem (168 lines) suffers from a certain monotony in ideas. It has traditionally (but certainly wrongly) been ascribed to St. *Bernard of Clairvaux. A. *Wilmart has shown that it is prob. the work of an English Cistercian. Sections of it have been used as a *sequence and an *office-hymn for the Feast of the Holy *Name. It is sometimes known as the 'Rosy Sequence' or as the 'Joyful' (or 'Jubilee') 'Rhythm'.

The best ed. of the Lat. text is that in A. Wilmart, O.S.B., Le 'Jubilus' dit de Saint Bernard (Storia e Letteratura, ii; Rome, 1944), pp. 183–97. Convenient text also in Oxford Book of Medieval Latin Verse (new ed. by F. J. E. Raby, 1959), No. 233, pp. 347–53. H. Lausberg, Der Hymnus 'Jesu dulcis memoria' (Hymnologische und hagiographische Studien, i; Munich, 1967 [an exhaustive study]). E. Vacandard, 'Les Poèmes latins attribués à S. Bernard' in R.Q.H., xlix (1891), pp. 218–31. E. *Gilson, 'Sur le Jesu Dulcis Memoria' in Speculum, iii (1928), pp. 322–34. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, ii (1965), pp. 79–83.

JESUITS. The Society of Jesus, founded by St. *Ignatius Loyola (q.v.) with six companions in Paris in 1534, was approved by *Paul III in the bull '*Regimini militantis ecclesiae' in 1540. The constitution of the Society was drawn up by Ignatius, who submitted his work for approval in 1550. Beyond securing the spiritual benefit of its members, the aim of the Order was twofold: to foster reform within the Church, esp. in the face of the acute problems posed by the Reformation, and to undertake missionary work among the heathen, esp. in the recently discovered parts of the world. The constitution laid down that the services of the Order should be at the disposal of the Pope; to the normal three vows of religious was added a fourth, to go without question, delay or the provision of journey-money wherever the Pope might order for the salvation of souls; and no Jesuit was to accept any ecclesiastical dignity or benefice except under direct constraint by the Pope. Members of the Order wear no distinctive *habit and are exempt from any obligation to say the office in choir. They were to live on alms and rely on benefactions to maintain and expand their work. Careful provision was made for the spiritual and intellectual formation of those entering the Order and for their extended probation after admission. Superiors hold office for limited periods, usually six years. Supreme authority is vested in a General Congregation representative of the members; this body has to be summoned on the death of a General to elect his successor and if a lesser Congregation, drawn from the delegates of the provinces sent at intervals to report to the General, requires him to summon it. For routine administration authority is concentrated in the General, who is elected for life.

The Jesuits undertook a variety of tasks arising from the Reformation crisis, largely at the request of rulers or prelates, but their work soon came to consist particularly in teaching, conducting catechisms and giving the '*Spiritual Exercises', as well as in administering the sacraments. Ignatius himself founded grammar schools and both the Roman College (*Gregorianum) and the German College in Rome and established missions in *India, Malaya, the Congo, *Brazil, *Japan, *Ethiopia, and *China. At his death the Order had over a thousand members. Those of the first hundred years included St. *Francis Xavier, J. *Laynez (the second General), St. Francis *Borgia, St. *Aloysius Gonzaga, St. Robert *Bellarmine, St. Peter *Canisius, C. *Aquaviva, F. de *Suarez, and M. Ricci. By 1600 the Order numbered over 8,500 members in 23 provinces, grouped in four assistancies, whose heads resided with the General. Under Aquaviva (General, 1581–1615) the Order achieved an organization of high efficiency, with an elaborate code, the Ratio Studiorum, to govern its work in education. At the beginning of the 17th cent. the Society appeared secure both in Europe and the mission field. In 1623 a province was formed in England, where St. Edmund *Campion and R. *Parsons had been sent in 1580 to work alongside the seminary priests among the *recusants. In the prevailing situation they could readily be represented as especially obnoxious, not least because they had an effective organization behind them, and there was some hostility towards them even among a few English RCs. In France they made little progress because of the Wars of Religion and the influence of *Gallicanism, but they were protected by *Henry IV, who chose a Jesuit as his confessor, starting a tradition which lasted for nearly two centuries in France and spread to other courts. In Flanders the Jesuits made a large contribution to the establishment of Catholic reform, and the Jesuit J. *Bollandus inaugurated the publication of critical editions of lives of the saints (see Acta Sanctorum).

In the later 17th cent. the Jesuits met with serious opposition within the RC Church. The debate on the question of free will and grace which *Paul V tried to close by ending the 'Congregatio *De Auxiliis' was reopened on a new foundation by C. *Jansenius in a work so learned that few immediately grasped its full implications. His followers attacked the Jesuits for their lax casuistry, and not long afterwards the Jesuits also came under attack on the question of *accommodation in the Chinese Rites controversy. A combination of the opponents of the Jesuits, who were regarded as a foreign influence in France likely to frustrate any moves towards absolutism, brought about their expulsion in 1764. In 1759, under the influence of the Marquis de Pombal, the Order was banished from *Portugal, and in 1767, by order of the Count of Aranda, chief minister of Charles III, 5,000 Jesuits were deported from Spain and its Empire. In 1773 Pope *Clement XIV gave way to the demands of France, Spain, Portugal and many of the Italian states, and issued the brief '*Dominus ac Redemptor' suppressing the Society.

The suppression did not mean that the Society was extinguished. In Austria and Germany Jesuits were allowed to teach, and they were protected by both Frederick II of Prussia and the Empress Catherine of Russia. In White Russia, indeed, a noviciate was opened in 1780. They also survived and were able to retain their possessions in England, where the government took no action and the local RC bishops were deterred from enforcing the brief by fears of the penalties of *praemunire. In 1794 they established their school at *Stonyhurst (q.v.). The mission in Maryland, U.S.A. (founded in 1634), continued unaffected. Elsewhere they gradually managed to re-establish themselves, and in 1814 the Society was formally restored by *Pius VII in the bull 'Sollicitudo omnium ecclesiarum'.

At present the Jesuits are to be found in most non-Communist countries of the world, and have some 27,000 members. They are responsible for numerous institutions in Rome (including the Vatican Radio Station) and for schools and academic centres in many parts of the world, as well as for supplying priests in hundreds of parishes. They also edit a number of periodicals, incl. Gregorianum, Analecta Bollandiana, Biblica, Études, Recherches de Science Religieuse, Theological Studies and The Month.

D. Bartoli, S.J., Dell'istoria della Compagnia de Giesu (5 vols., Genoa–Rome, 1656–73). J. Cretineau-Joly, S.J., Histoire religieuse, politique et littéraire de la Compagnie de Jésus (6 vols., 1844–6). J. Brucker, S.J., La Compagnie de Jésus. Esquisse de son institut et de son histoire, 1521–1773 (ed. 2, 1919); T. J. Campbell, S.J., The Jesuits, 1534–1921 [1921]; M. P. Harney, S.J., The Jesuits in History (New York, 1941); H. Becker, S.J., Die Jesuiten. Gestalt und Geschichte des Ordens (1951). J. Brodrick, S.J., The Origin of the Jesuits (1940); id., The Progress of the Jesuits, 1556–79 (1946). M. Foss, The Founding of the Jesuits, 1540 (1969). P. de Guibert, S.J., La Spiritualité de la Compagnie de Jésus (posthumous; Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., iv; Rome, 1953; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1964). F. Charmot, S.J., La Pédagogie des Jésuites. Ses principes, son actualité (1943). Valuable account of the suppression of the Society in Pastor, xxxviii ('1951' [1952]), based on unpublished sources placed at the author's disposal by the Society. Augustin de Backer, S.J.–Aloys de Backer, S.J.–A. Carayon, S.J., Bibliothèque de la Compagnie de Jésus (ed. C. Sommervogel, S.J., 10 vols., 1890–9, with 2 supplementary vols. by E. M. Rivière, S.J., 1911–13). L. Koch, S.J., Jesuiten-Lexikon. Die Gesellschaft Jesu einst und jetzt (1934). Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu (Madrid, 1894 ff., and Rome, 1925 ff.); Archivum Historicum Societatis Jesu (Rome, 1932 ff.). L. Polgár, S.J., Bibliography of the History of the Society of Jesus (Sources and Studies for the History of the Jesuits, i; Rome–St. Louis, Mo., 1967). H. Foley, S.J., Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus (7 vols. bound in 8, 1877–83). M. V. Hay, The Jesuits and the Popish Plot (1934). E. F. Sutcliffe, S.J., Bibliography of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 1773–1953 (1957). T. Hughes, S.J., The History of the Society of Jesus in North America (3 vols. bound in 4, 1907–17). H. Fouqueray, S.J., Histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus en France des origines à la suppression, 1528–1762 (5 vols., 1910–25). A. Astrain, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la Asistencia de España (7 vols., 1902–25). L. Frías, S.J., Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en su Asistencia moderna de España (2 vols., 1923–44). F. Rodrigues, S.J., História da Companhia de Jesus na Assistência de Portugal (4 vols. in 7 parts, 1931–50). P. Tacchi Venturi, S.J., Storia della Compagnia di Gesù in Italia [1534–1556] (2 vols. in 4, 1910–51), cont. as vol. iii by M. Scaduto, S.J., L'epoca di Giacomo Laínez, Il governo (1556–1565) (1964). B. Duhr, S.J., Geschichte der Jesuiten in den Ländern deutscher Zunge (4 vols. bound in 5, 1907–28). J. A. Otto, Gründung der neuen Jesuitenmission durch General Pater Johann Philipp Roothaan (1939). See also bibliographies under separate countries. Heimbucher, ii, pp. 130–340 and 666 f. X. Le Bachelet and others in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1, 1924), cols. 1012–1108; B. Schneider, S.J., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 912–20; J. F. Broderick in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 898–909, s.v., all with further bibl. See also works cited under Ignatius Loyola, St. J. C. H. Aveling, The Jesuits (1981).

JESUS. The Gk. form ('Ιησοῦς) of the Heb. Joshua (lit. 'Jehovah saves'), who is thus referred to in the NT at Heb. 4. 8 (AV). By Divine command (Lk. 1. 31, Mt. 1. 21) the name was bestowed on the Infant Christ, the Saviour of mankind.

JESUS CHRIST. This article touches on the main aspects of the earthly life and teaching of Jesus as set out in the *Gospels, with a view to understanding the faith in His person and work which the Church has professed from the beginning. The four Gospels embody the accounts of Jesus's words and acts which were at first handed on and repeated orally in the earliest Christian community. The Gospels contain such facts as it was held important for a Christian to know about His earthly life and therefore often fail to satisfy a purely biographical curiosity. Moreover, being written for and by believers, they interpret as well as record, but their aim is to make plain what actually happened, i.e. they are concerned with historical truth as well as with theological interpretation.

(1) The Birth of Jesus. Jesus was born before the death of King *Herod the Great (4 B.C.), but probably not more than three or four years before. His mother *Mary and her spouse *Joseph, of *Nazareth in *Galilee, were pious Jews, not identified with any particular party. Jesus is once called 'the carpenter', or stone-mason, but the family though manual workers were not necessarily ill-educated. For comment on stories of the virginal conception of Jesus, see art. Virgin Birth; the estimate of these stories will largely depend on the estimate of the other contents of the Gospels.

(2) The Beginning of Jesus's Public Ministry. Between A.D. 27 and 29, *John the Baptist began to preach repentance and to baptize those who came to him in preparation for a coming Divine judgement. The public work of Jesus began just before or just after John had been imprisoned by King Herod Antipas. Jesus came to be baptized by John, thereby accepting John as divinely sent and his work as preparatory to His own. At His baptism Jesus received the sign to begin His mission in the form of the access of the Spirit and the assurance of His unique Sonship ('my beloved', i.e. only, 'Son', Mk. 1. 11, &c.). The story of the Temptations which follows expresses (perhaps in a generalized form) His initial and persistent choice of the way of self-abnegation and dependence on the Father's will. The main scene of Jesus's activity was in Galilee and the neighbouring districts of N. Palestine. The first three Gospels record only the one visit to *Jerusalem, which ended in the crucifixion, but they contain evidence supporting the statement of St. John's Gospel that there were earlier visits to the holy city during the ministry (e.g. Mt. 23. 37).

(3) Jesus and the Kingdom of God. The central and unifying theme of the preaching of Jesus was the imminent approach of the *Kingdom of God. By the Kingdom Jewish teachers meant that visible manifestation of the sovereign power of God which was to usher in 'the last days', bringing judgement on evil and a golden age of Divine blessing for His faithful people. In the teaching of Jesus the Kingdom 'comes', is 'given', 'received', or 'entered'; it is not a creation of human activity but an irruption of Divine judging and saving power. Thus the parables of growth (the Mustard Seed, the Leaven) emphasize not the gradualness of the development of the Kingdom, but the wonder of its great results. Other parables (e.g. the Marriage Supper, the Wheat and the Tares) portray the urgency of decision, the tragedy of the rejection of the Gospel message, and the certainty of Judgement. Jesus speaks of the coming of the Kingdom and of its accompanying events sometimes as definitely in the future, when the '*Son of Man' will come in glory to judge and the whole present order of things will be brought to a catastrophic end; sometimes it is said that the present generation will see the Kingdom coming in power; sometimes again it is implied that the Kingdom has already arrived or begun to arrive. We may gather that Jesus envisaged the arrival of the Kingdom as an extended series of events in which His own coming and teaching were the decisive beginning. Thus He affirms that His mastery over the evil spirits of disease and madness by the finger or Spirit of God shows that the Kingdom of God has come; and His own miracles are a first sign of the new manifestation of God's sovereign power conquering evil and providing the promise of final triumph. Other sayings indicate the claim of Jesus that with His coming a new dispensation has begun; the old dispensation (the Law and the Prophets) had lasted until John; something greater than Solomon is here; the disciples are seeing what many prophets and kings had looked for. Above all, the mysterious title 'Son of Man' (cf. Dan. 7), used by Jesus of Himself, indicates that He is the accredited agent of God in final judgement and redemption; in the coming and the consummation of the Kingdom His own work is central and decisive. Those who acknowledge Him He Himself will acknowledge before the Father. In the name of the Kingdom and in His own name Jesus made demands on His disciples which knew no limits.

(4) Jesus and the Fatherhood of God. The utterances of Jesus concerning the Fatherhood of God must be understood in harmony with the message of the Kingdom. God is Father, Judge, and King, uniting generosity and love with sovereign and holy power. Men can enter into sonship with Him through faith in His providential power, through repentance and forgiveness, and through obedience to His commandments. God as Father is the supreme giver not only of bodily life and sustenance but of all spiritual blessing, and that not in accordance with man's deserts but according to His own limitless goodness, which goes out to meet the sinner more than half-way (parable of the Prodigal Son). Jesus Himself not only taught but manifested the true nature both of man's sonship to God and of the Divine Fatherhood, the former by His own faithful obedience to the point of death, the latter in His self-sacrificing concern for the weak and sinful.

(5) Jesus and Judaism. The mission of Jesus was confined almost exclusively to the Jewish people. With the authority of the OT Scriptures, to which He constantly appealed, He accepted Israel's privileged position. The Kingdom must be preached to God's people, who had been taught by prophets to expect it. But His message by its newness and finality presented the Jewish Church with a critical choice. Thus He called current Judaism to account by an appeal to the OT which in its freedom, insight, and authority attracted both the attention and the opposition of the Jewish legal experts. His interpretation of the precepts of the Law (e.g. on anger, impurity, divorce) was at once more free and more exacting than any known to Judaism; ceremonial observance (e.g. prayer, fasting, almsgiving, sacrifice) was not rejected, but placed in subordination to fundamental principles of charity, sincerity, and humility. The *Pharisees were criticized as having cultivated an elaborate system of ceremonial obedience to the Law, thus obscuring its weightier precepts and generating self-righteous contempt for the less precise. Many parables and sayings imply that Jesus expected His message to be accepted by those who in the eyes of official Judaism were religiously outcast or ignorant ('publicans and sinners'), since they more easily responded to the appeal for humility and repentance. In cleansing the *Temple (Mk. 11. 15–19), Jesus attacked the conduct of Israel's central shrine by the worldly Sadducean priesthood. In all this the Jewish rulers detected the assumption of an authority which was as Divine as that of the Mosaic Law itself. Together with the pronouncement of the forgiveness of the sins of individuals there was the hint that He spoke not merely as a prophet, but as *Messiah and Judge, revealing, proclaiming, and manifesting the sovereignty of God as Father and King and thereby presenting the Jewish Church with an inescapable challenge (cf. the parable of the Wicked Husbandmen). Jesus was in fact claiming that Judaism would be judged by its reaction to Him and His message.

(6) Jesus and the Disciples. Jesus selected an intimate band of twelve disciples (see Apostles) to be with Him in His mission. On at least one occasion He sent them out to teach and to preach. He spoke of His claims and authority explicitly only to the disciples. The turning-point of the Gospel story (esp. clear in St. Mark) is the incident of St. *Peter's confession at *Caesarea Philippi (Mk. 8. 27–33). When St. Peter acknowledged that He was the Christ, i.e. the expected Messiah, Jesus proceeded to transform the traditional idea by insisting that the Son of Man must suffer before entering into His glory. His followers must be prepared to accept this way of humility and suffering for themselves. At this stage of His mission, if not from the beginning, it was clear to Him that His challenge to Judaism must end in His death and that His death (a 'ransom for many') was part of the Divine purpose in the establishment of the Kingdom. It is probable that He saw in the passages of *Isaiah describing God's Suffering Servant (esp. Is. 52. 13–53. 12) a prophecy of His own mission. After the days of final conflict with the Jewish authorities in Jerusalem, Jesus on the night before the Crucifixion interpreted His death to His disciples at the Last Supper. He took bread, and having blessed it, gave it to them to eat, describing it as His body given for them; and He took a cup of wine, and having similarly blessed it, gave it to them to drink, calling it the new covenant in His blood. Apart from any question of the institution of a permanent rite to be repeated, His action had a twofold meaning. First, His death was interpreted as a covenant sacrifice; the shedding of His blood was to found a new covenant relation of forgiveness and fellowship between man and God. Secondly, the new covenant implied a new community with whom the Divine covenant was made, just as the people of Israel had been brought into the old covenant with God by the sacrificial shedding of blood (cf. Ex. 24. 1–11). The people of Israel having decided to reject Him, Jesus founded through His sacrifice a new people or Church, of which the nucleus was the Twelve, to be the heir of the blessings of the Kingdom. By His action at the Last Supper Jesus stamped His death in its creative and redeeming results as an essential and indeed the most significant act of His mission.

(7) The Crucifixion and Resurrection (see also art. Resurrection of Christ). The Jewish authorities, after a preliminary investigation, presented Jesus to the Roman governor, Pontius *Pilate, as worthy of capital punishment, and He suffered crucifixion (a criminal's death) as a claimant to Messianic dignity. For the date of this event the years A.D. 29, 30, or 33 have been suggested. The Gospels (in harmony with the mind of Jesus as already indicated) do not portray the Crucifixion as a tragedy or the martyrdom of a human hero deserving of pity or admiration, but as an event which, though brought about by human sin, fulfilled the Divine purpose, and is therefore to be regarded with awe and faith. At the time, the death of their Master seemed to the disciples (in spite of His warnings) the end of all their hopes. It is intelligible that this was so, since the whole idea of a suffering Messiah was entirely new to Jewish minds. It is equally intelligible that in the light of the Resurrection much that He had said returned to their minds with new meaning: the Gospels constantly emphasize the slowness of the disciples in understanding the teaching of Jesus as He gave it to them. On the third day (i.e. the next day but one) after the Crucifixion, the tomb in which the body of Jesus had been laid was found empty and, during a short period that followed, Jesus presented Himself alive in a glorified but recognizable form to individual disciples and to groups of them. In their details of time and place the stories of the resurrection-appearances raise difficulties, but they testify to an intimate contact with a living person which was not the product of the disciples' imagination. The subsequent confident preaching of the early Church is a strong proof of this. They were convinced that God had raised Him from the state of death, victorious over every evil that could oppose God and beset man. Jesus had entered into His glory through His passion and thus not only vindicated and illuminated much that the disciples remembered Him to have said, but also pointed to much more that remained to be understood. The outpouring of the Holy Spirit subsequently experienced by the community of disciples in Jerusalem indicated that through the work of Jesus the promised blessings of the Kingdom were already being enjoyed by the Church. The new covenant of forgiveness, sonship, and grace was in operation in the community brought into being by Jesus.

(8) The Person of Jesus. Official Judaism had crucified Jesus as a troublesome impostor; His disciples in the light of all that had happened believed in Him as Lord and Christ. Those who knew Jesus, disciples and opponents alike, found it impossible to select a few points of His teaching for acceptance and avoid the question of the ultimate authority and nature of His person. The first Jewish disciples accepted Him as the promised Messiah, but it soon became clear that their ideas about Him would not fit into the traditional Messianic conceptions inherited from Judaism. The early Church saw that He was more than an inspired prophet; in Him God had acted in a special way and He was more than man; and gradually it became clear to the early Church that He was divine. For the development of the doctrine of the Person of Jesus, see Christology. See also Trinity, Doctrine of the.

Among the innumerable introductory studies may be mentioned the Life by F. W. *Farrar (q.v.); also W. *Sanday, Outlines of the Life of Christ (1905), and C. *Gore, Jesus of Nazareth (1929). Popular treatment, with vivid topographical descriptions, in H. V. Morton, In the Steps of the Master (1934).

Other works from many different standpoints are: D. F. *Strauss, Leben Jesu (2 vols., 1835–6). E. *Renan, La Vie de Jésus (1863). [J. *Seeley], Ecce Homo (London, 1866). H. P. *Liddon, The Divinity of Christ (Bampton Lectures for 1866; 1867). H. Latham, Pastor Pastorum (Cambridge, 1890). G. *Dalman, Die Worte Jesu (1898; Eng. tr., 1902). P. Wernle, Die Quellen des Lebens Jesu (1904; Eng. tr., Sources of our Knowledge of the Life of Jesus, 1907). A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906; Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910). W. Sanday, The Life of Christ in Recent Research (1907). J. *Denney, Jesus and the Gospel (1908). F. C. *Burkitt, The Earliest Sources for the Life of Jesus (Boston, Mass., 1910; ed. 2, London, 1922). E. F. Scott, The Kingdom and the Messiah (1911). H. *Rashdall, Conscience and Christ (1916). T. R. Glover, The Jesus of History (1917). G. Dalman, Jesus-Jeschua (1922; Eng. tr., 1929). A. C. *Headlam, The Life and Teaching of Jesus the Christ (1923). J. Klausner, Jesus of Nazareth (1925). R. *Bultmann, Jesus (Berlin [1926]; Eng. tr., 1934). A. E. J. Rawlinson, The New Testament Doctrine of the Christ (1926). L. de Grandmaison, S.J., Jésus Christ. Sa personne, ses messages, ses preuves (2 vols., posthumous, 1928; Eng. tr., 1935). T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus (1931). M. Goguel, La Vie de Jésus (Bibliothèque historique, 1932; Eng. tr., 1933). C. Guignebert, Jésus (L'Évolution de l'Humanité, 1933; rationalistic). R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn. Ein religionsgeschichtlicher Versuch (1934; Eng. tr. entitled The Kingdom of God and the Son of Man, 1938). H. D. A. Major–T. W. Manson–C. J. Wright, The Mission and Message of Jesus (1937). V. Taylor, Jesus and His Sacrifice (1939); id., The Life and Ministry of Jesus (1954). W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah (1943). G. S. Duncan, Jesus, Son of Man. Studies contributory to a modern Portrait (1947). G. Bornkamm, Jesus von Nazareth (1956; ed. 3, 1959; Eng. tr., 1960). X. Léon-Dufour, S.J., Les Évangiles et l'histoire de Jésus (1963; abridged Eng. tr., 1968). H. K. McArthur (ed.), In Search of the Historical Jesus (1970). J. Reumann, Jesus in the Church's Gospels. Modern Scholarship and the Earliest Sources (1970). C. H. *Dodd, The Founder of Christianity (New York, 1970; London, 1971).

See also bibliography to artt. Christology (esp. for works on the Person of Christ); Gospels; Messiah.

JESUS, Name of. See Name of Jesus.

JESUS PRAYER, The. The prayer 'Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy upon me' (sometimes 'a sinner' is added at the end, or the prayer may be said in the plural, 'us' instead of 'me'). The continual repetition of this prayer is specially recommended in Byzantine *Hesychasm, and its recitation is sometimes associated with a certain 'physical method': head bowed, eyes fixed on the place of the heart, careful control of the breathing. To assist the repetition, a rosary or *komvoschinion is frequently employed. The full text of the Jesus Prayer is first found in a work of the 6th–7th cent., the Life of the Abba Philemon; Greek spiritual writers of earlier date, such as *Diadochus of Photike and *Nilus the Ascetic, speak of the invocation or 'remembrance' of the Name of Jesus, without specifying exactly what form this invocation took. The 'physical method' seems to be considerably later than the Prayer as such; it is first described in a text attributed to St. *Simeon the New Theologian, 'The Method of Sacred Prayer and Attention' (perhaps by Nicephorus of Mount Athos, 14th cent.). The Jesus Prayer is widely practised in the Orthodox Church today; but the use of the 'physical method' is now generally discouraged and it is very little followed.

'Un Moine de l'Église d'Orient', 'La Prière de Jésus' in Irénikon, xx (1947), pp. 249–73, 381–421; id., 'Sur l'usage de la Prière de Jésus', ib., xxv (1952), pp. 371–82; also issued separately as La Prière de Jésus (ed. 3, Chevetogne, 1959). I. Hausherr, S.J., Noms du Christ et voies d'oraison (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 157; Rome, 1960). Id., La Méthode d'oraison hésychaste (Orientalia Christiana, ix, pt. 2; fasc. 36 of the series; Rome, 1927). B. Krivocheine, 'Date du texte traditionnel de la "Prière de Jésus" ', Messager de l'Exarchat du Patriarche russe en Europe occidentale, vii–viii (1951), pp. 55–9. P. Adnès in Dict. Sp., viii (1974), cols. 1126–50, s.v.

JESUS, Sayings of. See Sayings of Jesus.

JEU, Books of. The title of two *Gnostic treatises mentioned in the *Pistis Sophia which are ascribed to *Enoch. They have been identified with the first two treatises in the Bruce codex (see Gnosticism).

Text ed. by C. Schmidt, Gnostische Schriften in Koptischer Sprache aus dem Codex Brucianus (T.U., viii, Hftt. 1–2; 1892), pp. 38–141, with Germ. tr. pp. 142–225. Coptic text repr., with Eng. tr. and notes by Violet MacDermot, The Books of Jeu and the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex (Nag Hammadi Studies, xiii; Leiden, 1978), pp. 1–211. See also bibl. to Gnosticism.

JEUNESSE OUVRIÈRE CHRÉTIENNE. See Jocists.

JEW, The Wandering. See Wandering Jew, The.

JEWEL, JOHN (1522–71), Bp. of *Salisbury. Educated at Merton and Corpus Christi colleges, Oxford, he was elected in 1542 a Fellow of Corpus. After 1547, largely through the influence of *Peter Martyr, he became one of the intellectual leaders of the Reforming party. Under *Mary, Jewel signed a set of anti-Protestant articles (1554), but notwithstanding he was forced to flee to Frankfurt (1555), where he opposed J. *Knox and the advanced *Calvinists. A little later he joined Martyr at Strassburg and travelled with him to Zürich. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he returned to England, and in 1560 was consecrated Bp. of Salisbury. From now onwards he became a strong supporter of the Anglican settlement, opposing both RCs and Puritans, and taking his stand on the Fathers of the first six centuries. In 1562 he published his celebrated treatise in defence of the C of E, the Apologia Ecclesiae Anglicanae, which established itself at once as the best defence of the Anglican claims. It endeavoured to prove that a general Reformation had been necessary, that reform by such a body as the Council of *Trent was impossible, and that local Churches had the right to legislate through provincial synods. In the prolonged and bitter controversy that followed with Thomas Harding (1516–72), who defended the Papacy, the lines which the Roman controversy was to take in the 17th cent. were mainly determined; and under *James I, Abp. R. *Bancroft gave official approval to Jewel's teaching. Jewel, who administered his diocese with a vigour unusual in the Elizabethan Church, made several visitations, preached frequently, and built the library of Salisbury Cathedral. Among a number of poor boys whom Jewel maintained and prepared for the university was R. *Hooker, whose Ecclesiastical Polity owed much to his patron's teaching.

Collected Works ed. under the direction of R. Bancroft, London, fol., 1609, with memoir [by D. Featly] (no pagination; ed. 2, 1611). Modern edd. by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1845–50), with memoir in vol. iv, pp. v–xxx; and R. W. *Jelf (8 vols., Oxford, 1848). The principal authority is the official biography, sponsored by Abp. M. *Parker, by Jewel's friend Laurence Humphrey (in Latin; London, 1573); it is the basis of all subsequent memoirs. More modern life by C. W. Le Bas (London, 1835). W. M. Southgate, John Jewel and the Problem of Doctrinal Authority (Cambridge, Mass., 1962); J. E. Booty, John Jewel as Apologist of the Church of England (C.H.S., 1963). M. *Creighton in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 378–82; C. Wordsworth in D.E.C.H., p. 299 f.

JEWISH PEOPLE. See Judaism.

JEWS, Missions to the. Despite the fact that Christianity found its earliest converts among the Jews, mutual hostility soon impeded missionary enterprise. Legal enactments (e.g. by *Constantine and the Merovingian kings) encouraged, and in some cases compelled, conversion, but a few voices (e.g. that of St. *Bernard of Clairvaux) were raised against the long prevalent policy of persecution. In the 16th cent. this policy was carried to an unsurpassed intensity by the Spanish *Inquisition. In Rome of the *Counter-Reformation era missionary activity was encouraged from time to time (e.g. by the *Jesuits and St. *Philip Neri), so that between 1634 and 1790 some 2,430 Jews were baptized in the city. But except for the notable work of Ezra Edzard (1629–1708), J. H. Callenberg (1694–1760, under whose auspices, with the support of A. H. *Francke, the Institutum Judaicum was founded at Halle in 1728), and some of the *Moravians, little progress was made until the 19th cent. The impulse for creating missionary societies came from Christian Jews. Thus J. S. C. F. Frey (1771–1851) and Ridley Haim Herschell (1807–64) were responsible respectively for the foundation of the 'London Society' and the 'British Society' for 'Promoting Christianity among the Jews'. The former, established in 1809 and later known also as *Church Missions to Jews, is still the largest of its kind and has a wide sphere of influence. Other societies include Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel (estd. 1893), the Barbican Mission to the Jews (estd. 1889), and the Parochial Missions to the Jews. The missions resulted in some very talented converts, among them the scholars C. P. *Caspari, A. *Edersheim, C. D. Ginsburg, and J. A. W. *Neander; Bishops M. S. *Alexander, I. Hellmuth, and S. I. J. Schereschewsky; and the missionaries H. Stern and J. Wolff. Conversion also resulted in the evolution of a Jewish Christian Church closely associated with the work of the Hebrew-Christian Alliance, and in particular of Joseph Rabinowitz (1837–99).

W. T. Gidney, The History of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews from 1809 to 1908 (1908).

JIMÉNEZ DE CISNEROS, FRANCISCO. See Ximénez de Cisneros, Francisco.

JOACHIM, St. The husband of St. *Anne and the father of the BVM. He is first mentioned in the '*Protevangelium of James' (2nd cent.), where the birth of the Virgin, promised by an angel to her aged and childless parents, is recorded. Apart from this passage, he is rarely referred to in Christian tradition till much later times—in the E. seldom before the 7th cent., and in the W. not till the Middle Ages. In later medieval times he became a frequent subject for the religious artist. He has been commemorated on many different dates: from 1913 to 1969 his feast day in the RC Church was assigned to 16 Aug.; it was then joined with St. Anne on 26 July; in E., 9 Sept. (with St. Anne).

É. Amann, Le Protévangile de Jacques et ses remaniements latins (1910), pp. 45–51. On his reputed tomb at Jerusalem, see L. Cré, 'Tombeau de St Joachim et de Ste Anne' in R. Bibl., ii (1893), pp. 245–74, and H. Vincent, O.P., 'La Crypte de sainte Anne à Jérusalem', ib., xiii (1904), pp. 228–41. B. Kraft in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 973 s.v.

JOACHIM OF FIORE (c. 1132–1202), or of 'Flora', mystic. Little is known of his life, which has been richly embellished with legends. He made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land as a young man and during it he is said to have experienced a conversion to the interior life. He subsequently entered the *Cistercian Order, being elected Abbot of Corazzo against his will in 1177. He resigned his office a few years later to devote himself to the writing of his apocalyptic works and resided first at the abbey of Casamari and later at Fiore in Calabria, where he founded a monastery of his own which received Papal sanction in 1196 and developed into a separate order of some local significance. He died before being able to obtain the approval of the Holy See for his works, but in his will he required his successors in the order to seek this and to abide by the decision. The sanctity of his life is unquestioned—he is described by *Dante as di spirito profetico dotato—but some of his views were condemned by the *Lateran Council in 1215, and by the provincial Council of Arles in 1263.

The central doctrine of his three chief works, 'Liber Concordiae Novi ac Veteris Testamenti', 'Expositio in Apocalypsim', and 'Psalterium Decem Cordarum', is a Trinitarian conception of the whole of history which views it in three great periods ('status'). The first, characterized by the 'Ordo conjugatorum', is the age of the Father in which mankind lived under the Law until the end of the OT dispensation; the second, characterized by the 'Ordo clericorum', is that of the Son which is lived under grace and covers the NT dispensation, which Joachim thought would last for forty-two generations of c. thirty years each; the third, belonging to the 'Ordo monachorum' or 'contemplantium', is the age of the Spirit which will be lived in the liberty of the 'Spiritualis Intellectus' proceeding from the Old and New Testaments and be inaugurated c. 1260. This last age would see the rise of new religious orders destined to convert the whole world and to usher in the 'Ecclesia Spiritualis'. Joachim never advanced his doctrine of the third age to a point of danger to ecclesiastical authority, but his optimistic expectations concerning history had a far-reaching influence in the following centuries among groups who often carried his ideas to revolutionary conclusions, notably the *Spiritual Franciscans and *Fraticelli, who believed themselves to be Joachim's new order of spiritual men. It was his ideas which inspired the attempt by the Spiritual Franciscan, Gerard of Borgo San Donnino, in 1254 to complete Joachim's pattern of threes by proclaiming an Eternal Evangel (excerpts from Joachim's works) which had superseded the OT and NT. Joachim's conceptions continued to captivate the imagination of individuals throughout the later Middle Ages.

His three principal works, the Liber Concordiae (Venice, 1519) and the Expositio in Apocalypsim with the Psalterium Decem Cordarum (ib., 1527), are available in modern photocopy. There are modern edd. of his Tractatus super Quatuor Evangelia by E. Buonaiuti (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, lxvii; 1930), of his Expositio de Articulis Fidei by id. (ib., lxxviii; 1936), of Adversus Iudeos by A. Frugoni (ib., xcv; 1957), of his Liber Figurarum by L. Tondelli (2 vols., Turin, 1936; ed. 2, Turin, 1953, vol. i ed. L. Tondelli, vol. ii ed. L. Tondelli, Marjorie E. Reeves, and Beatrice M. Hirsch-Reich), and of his De Vita Sancti Benedicti by C. Baraut, O.S.B., in Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, xxiv (1951), pp. 33–122. The Liber contra Lombardum, attributed to Joachim but in fact by one of his disciples, ed. C. Ottaviano (Reale Accademia d'Italia, Studi e documenti, iii; 1934). P. Fournier, Études sur Joachim de Flora et ses doctrines (1909). H. Grundmann, Studien über Joachim von Floris (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, xxxii; 1927); id., Neue Forschungen über Joachim von Fiore (Münstersche Forschungen, Hft. 1; 1950). E. Buonaiuti, Gioacchino da Fiore. I tempi, la vita, il messaggio (1931). F. Foberti, Gioacchino da Fiore (Florence, 1934); id., Gioacchino da Fiore e il gioacchinismo antico e moderno (Padua, 1942). A. Crocco, Gioacchino da Fiore (Naples, 1960). Majorie [E.] Reeves, The Influence of Prophecy in the Later Middle Ages. A Study in Joachimism (Oxford, 1969). Id.–Beatrice [M.] Hirsch-Reich, The Figurae of Joachim of Fiore (ib., 1972). H. Mottu, La Manifestation de l'Esprit selon Joachim de Fiore (Université de Genève thesis; Neuchâtel–Paris, 1977). H. de Lubac, S.J., La Postérité spirituelle de Joachim de Flore (1979 ff.). M. W. Bloomfield, 'Recent Scholarship on Joachim of Fiore and his Influence' in Prophecy and Millenarianism. Essays in Honour of Marjorie Reeves, ed. Ann Williams (1980), pp. 21–52.

JOAN, Pope. The legend of a female Pope first appears in the (13th cent.) *Dominican chronicler, Jean de Mailly, and was repeated in various versions by historical writers of the following centuries. The gist of the story is that about the year 1100 (later forms say after St. *Leo IV, d. 855) a woman in male disguise, after a distinguished career as a scholar, succeeded to the chair of St. Peter. After reigning more than two years she gave birth to a child during a procession to the *Lateran and died immediately afterwards. There is no evidence whatever to substantiate the tale, but it was widely believed in the Middle Ages. Today it is rejected as an invention by all serious scholars. J. J. I. *Döllinger explained it as an ancient Roman folk-tale.

J. J. I. Döllinger, Die Papst-Fabeln des Mittelalters (1863), pp. 1–45 (Eng. tr., 1871, pp. 1–67); E. Vacandard, Études de critique et d'histoire religieuse, Ser. 4 (1923), pp. 15–39 (La Papesse Jeanne). See also entry Blondel, David.

JOAN OF ARC, St. (1412–31), called 'La Pucelle', the 'Maid of Orléans'. The setting of her life was the Hundred Years' War. The daughter of a peasant, she was born and brought up in Domrémy, Champagne. A pious child, she experienced in 1425 the first of her supernatural visitations, which she described as a voice accompanied by a blaze of light. Gradually her 'voices' increased and she was able to distinguish St. *Michael, St. *Catherine, St. *Margaret and others, who revealed to Joan her mission to save France. She was unsuccessful in an attempt in 1428 to persuade the French commander at Vaucouleurs of the genuineness of her visions; but after her prophecies had been fulfilled in 1429 she was sent to the King (Charles VII), who was convinced when she recognized him in disguise. Joan then gave the King a secret sign, which she never revealed. After close examination of her case by a body of theologians at Poitiers, it was decided to allow her to lead an expedition to Orléans. Clad in a suit of white armour and bearing a banner with a symbol of the Trinity and the words 'Jesus, Maria', she worked wonders by her presence and the city was relieved. After a short campaign in the Loire, she persuaded Charles VII to proceed to *Reims for his coronation, which took place on 17 July 1429, with Joan at his side. The relief of Orléans and the crowning of the Dauphin virtually saved France. After six months of military inactivity fresh campaigns took place in the spring of 1430 in which she was less successful. She was taken prisoner near Compiègne on 24 May 1430, sold to the English by the Duke of Burgundy on 21 Nov. 1430, and appeared before the court of the Bp. of Beauvais (Pierre Cauchon) at Rouen on 21 Feb. 1431 on a charge of witchcraft and heresy. After further examination in her cell, a summary of her statements was compiled. The judges of the episcopal court declared her visions 'false and diabolical' and the summary was also denounced by the university of *Paris. After some form of recantation on 23 May, she resumed male attire, which she had agreed to abandon, and on 29 May was condemned as a relapsed heretic and on 30 May burnt at Rouen. The determination of her captors to encompass her death is a measure of the influence she exerted on her followers. A revision of her trial by an appellate court appointed by Pope *Callistus III declared her innocent in 1456. Canonized on 9 May 1920 by *Benedict XV as a holy maiden, she is the second patron of France. Feast day, 30 May.

J. Quicherat (ed.), Procès de condamnation et de réhabilitation de Jeanne d'Arc (Société de l'histoire de France; 5 vols., 1841–9); P. Champion (ed.), Procès de condamnation de Jeanne d'Arc (2 vols., 1920–1), with introd., Fr. tr., and notes; P. Tisset–Yvonne Lanhers (edd.), Procès de Jeanne d'Arc (Société de l'histoire de France; 3 vols., 1960–71). Eng. tr. of documents of the trial by W. P. Barrett, The Trial of Joan of Arc (1931). P. Doncœur, S.J.–Y. Lanhers (edd.), Documents et recherches relatives à Jeanne la Pucelle (5 vols., 1952–61). Studies include those by H. Wallon (2 vols., Paris, 1860), M. Sépet (ib., 1869), J. B. J. Ayrolles (ib., 1890), P. H. Dunand (3 vols., Toulouse, 1898–9), and other works of this author, A. Lang (London, 1908), G. Hanotaux (Paris, 1911), A. Fabre (ib., 1912), G. Goyau (ib., 1920), A. B. Paine (2 vols., New York, 1925), V. Sackville-West (London, 1936),

J. Calmette (Paris, 1946), J. Cordier (ib., 1948), R. Pernoud (ib., 1954; Eng. tr., 1961), and other works of this author.

JOASAPH, St. See Josaphat, St.

JOB, Book of. The main portion of the book, which is in poetical form, is preceded by a prose Prologue (1 and 2); it is followed by an Epilogue (42. 7–17). Discussions between Job and his three friends appear in three cycles (3–14, 15–21, 22–31), culminating in an appeal to the Almighty. There follow the speeches of Elihu (32–7), which are sometimes regarded as an intrusion since they add nothing to the arguments of the friends and interrupt the connexion of chs. 31 and 38. The Divine reply and Job's acceptance of it are recorded in chs. 38 – 42. 6.

The main subject of the Book is the perennial problem of innocent suffering. Job rejects the traditional view that suffering is the result of sin, for he has no doubt of his innocence. Although no final solution to the problem is offered, apart from the emphasis on the omnipotence of God in 38 – 42. 6, the Book nonetheless offers the most thorough treatment of the subject in the OT. Already in the NT (Jas. 5. 11) the patience of Job had become proverbial. Owing to the universal nature of the subject matter of the book, considerations of age and of historical background are of little importance except for the critical student. Various dates have been suggested, but the consensus of modern scholarly opinion favours a date in the region of 400 B.C.

Modern commentaries include those by L. Hirzel (Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament, ii; 1839; ed. 3, by A. *Dillmann, 1869), A. B. *Davidson (Camb. Bib., AV, 1884), K. *Budde (H.K.A.T., Abteilung 2, Bd. i; 1896), B. *Duhm (K.H.C., xiv; 1897), A. S. *Peake (Cent. Bib.; 1905), S. R. *Driver–G. B. *Gray (I.C.C.; 1921), C. J. Ball (Oxford, 1922, including translation into English verse), P. Dhorme, O.P. (Études Bibliques; 1926; Eng. tr., 1967), G. Hölscher (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. xvii; 1937), E. J. Kissane (Dublin, 1937), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xiii; 1951; ed. 4, 1963), N. H. Tur-Sinai ([in English] Jerusalem, 1957), F. Horst (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, xvi [on 1. 1 – 19. 29]; 1963), G. Fohrer (K.A.T., xvi; 1963), and H. H. Rowley (Cent. Bib., 1970). T. K. *Cheyne, Job and Solomon (1887), pp. 12–115. G. Richter, Textstudien zum Buche Hiob (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 3, vii; 1927). Id., Studien zu Hiob. Der Aufbau des Hiobbuches, dargestellt an den Gattungen des Rechtslebens (Theologische Arbeiten, xi [1959]). J. Lindblom, Boken om Job (Lund, 1940). W. B. Stevenson, The Poem of Job. A Literary Study with a New Translation (Schweich Lectures, 1943; 1947). Id., Critical Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Poem of Job (1951). A. S. Peake, The Problem of Suffering in the Old Testament (Hartley Lectures for 1904; 1904), pp. 83–103. H. W. *Robinson, The Cross of Job (1916). M. Jastrow, The Book of Job. Its Origin, Growth and Interpretation (Philadelphia, 1920). N. H. Snaith, The Book of Job. Its Origin and Purpose (Studies in Biblical Theology, Second Series, xi; 1968).

JOCISTS. The organized association of factory workers in the RC Church known as the Jeunesse Ouvrière Chrétienne (J.O.C.). It endeavours to bring Christian moral principles to bear on modern industry and keep the young of the working classes within the life of the Church. As an organization it grew up after the war of 1914–18 in and around Brussels, under the guidance of the Abbé Joseph Cardijn (1882–1967, created cardinal in 1965) and the inspiration of the ideals of Leo XIII's Rerum Novarum. The title was adopted in 1924, and in 1926 the movement spread to France. The unit of organization is the section, usually in the parish, 30–40 sections forming a regional federation. Corresponding associations have also been created for agricultural workers (J.A.C.; Jeunesse Agricole Chrétienne) and sailors (J.M.C.; Jeunesse Maritime Chrétienne).

J. Cardijn, Laïcs en premières lignes (1963; Eng. tr., 1964). M. de la Bedoyere, The Cardijn Story. A Study of the Life of Mgr Joseph Cardijn and the Young Christian Workers' Movement which he founded (1958).

JOEL, The Book of. One of the twelve *Minor Prophets of the OT. Wide differences exist among scholars about the origin, purpose and date of the Book, and about 'Joel, the son of Pethuel', nothing is known at all. The prophecy, for the most part written in poetic form, has two sections. The first (1. 1 – 2. 17) tells of a plague of locusts and its results, and draws against this background a picture of the approaching Day of the Lord with its call to repentance. The rest of the Book (2. 18 – 3. 21) foretells the future outpouring of the Spirit on all flesh, the final salvation of Judah, and the destruction of foreign nations, all subjects of the kind more fully developed in the Apocalyptic literature. The passage predicting the outpouring of the Spirit of God and its effects (2. 28–32) is cited in Acts 2. 17–21 as foreshadowing the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost.

Commentaries by S. R. *Driver (Camb. Bib., AV, on Joel and Amos, 1897, pp. 9–91), J. A. Bewer (I.C.C. on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912; sep. pagination) and G. W. Wade (West. Comm. on Mic., Obad., Joel, and Jon., 1925; sep. pagination). A. S. Kapelrud, Joel Studies (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1948, No. 4; 1948). L. Dennefeld, 'Les Problèmes du livre de Joël' in Rev. S.R., iv (1924), pp. 555–75, v (1925), pp. 35–57, 591–608, vi (1926), pp. 26–49. J. M. Myers, 'Some Considerations bearing on the Date of Joel' in Z.A.T.W., lxxiv (1962), pp. 177–95. Eissfeldt, pp. 391–5, with additions, p. 760. P. Pautrel, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1098–1104, s.v. Further Commentaries under Minor Prophets.

JOHANNINE COMMA (also known as the 'Three Witnesses'). An interpolation in the text of 1 Jn. 5. 7 f., viz. the words in italics in the following passage from the AV: 'For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these Three are One. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood, and these three agree in one.' They occur in Latin MSS. from about A.D. 800 onwards and so became established in the official Latin text of the Bible, but they are certainly not part of the original Epistle and are omitted from the RV and other scholarly modern translations. The origin of the interpolation is obscure. Traces of a mystical interpretation of the phrase about the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood, applying it to the Trinity, are to be found in *Cyprian and *Augustine; but the earliest evidence for the insertion of a gloss in the text of the Epistle comes from a MS. of *Priscillianist provenance discovered by G. Schepss at Würzburg in 1885. Later the insertion is found in quotations in African authors. It would thus seem to have originated in N. Africa or Spain and to have found its way into the Latin Bibles used in those districts (both *Old Latin and *Vulgate), possibly under the stress of *Arian persecution.

K. Künstle, Das Comma Ioanneum auf seine Herkunft untersucht (1905); E. Riggenbach, Das Comma Johanneum (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, xxxi, Hft. 4; 1928; posthumous). T. A. Marazuela, 'Nuevo estudio sobre el "Comma Ioanneum" ' in Biblica, xxviii (1947), pp. 83–112, 216–35, xxix (1948), pp. 52–76. W. Thiele, 'Beobachtungen zum Comma Iohanneum (1 Joh 5 7 f.)' in Z.N.T.W., l (1959), pp. 61–73. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964), p. 101 f. See also Commentaries on 1 Jn., esp. A. E. Brooke, The Johannine Epistles (I.C.C., 1912), pp. 154–65.

JOHN, St., Apostle. Acc. to tradition, the author of the Fourth Gospel, the Book of Revelation, and three of the Catholic Epistles. He was the son of Zebedee (Mt. 4. 21), and, together with his brother St. *James and St. *Peter, he belonged to the inner group of disciples who were present at the raising of Jairus's daughter (Mk. 5. 37), the *Transfiguration (Mt. 17. 1), and the Agony in the Garden (Mt. 26. 37). He and his brother were of impetuous character, hence the Lord designated them Boanerges, i.e. 'sons of thunder' (Mk. 3. 17), but they were also generous, offering to drink with Him the cup of suffering (Mt. 20. 22). In Acts John is several times mentioned with St. Peter (3. 1 and 11), with whom he is imprisoned and appears before the Sanhedrin (4. 1–21). Later he is sent to Samaria with Peter, to transmit the Holy Ghost to the new converts (8. 14 f.). He was present also at the Apostles' Council at *Jerusalem (Gal. 2. 9).

In the Fourth Gospel John is never mentioned by name, but tradition identifies him with the anonymous disciple to whom St. *John the Baptist shows the Lamb of God (1. 35–40) and with the disciple 'whom Jesus loved', who reclined on His bosom at the Last Supper (13. 23), to whom He entrusted His Mother at the foot of the Cross (19. 26), who ran with Peter to the tomb on the morning of the Resurrection (20. 2–8), and who recognized the Risen Lord at the Sea of Tiberias (21. 7). On this last occasion the Lord spoke of him the words which were interpreted as meaning that he would not die. This traditional identification of the 'beloved disciple' with John, the son of Zebedee, has been contested in modern times; and the idea has been put forward, notably by H. Delff, W. *Bousset, and H. B. *Swete, that he was not one of the Twelve, but a Jerusalem disciple. Defenders of the traditional view have argued: (1) that, just as the John of the Synoptics and Acts is always shown in close association with St. Peter, so also is the Beloved Disciple of the Fourth Gospel; and (2) that the consistent omission in the Fourth Gospel of so important a disciple as St. John is inexplicable except on the assumption that he is referred to under some other designation.

Acc. to tradition, St. John later went to Asia Minor and settled at *Ephesus. Under *Domitian he was exiled to *Patmos, where he wrote the Book of Revelation (Rev. 1. 9), and under Nerva returned to Ephesus and there wrote the Gospel and Epistles in his old age. Against this Mk. 10. 39 has sometimes been urged by critics as a 'vaticinium ex eventu', implying that St. John suffered martyrdom with St. James (cf. Acts 12. 2). Support for this theory is found in an alleged passage from *Papias mentioning the death of one John at the hands of the Jews, and also in a notice on the death of 'James and John' in several martyrologies. The evidence, however, is very inconclusive: the terms of the prophecy in Mk. 10. 39 are very vague; the Papias passage may embody a tradition relating to St. John the Baptist; and since the Carthage martyrology explicitly mentions John the Baptist on the same day as St. James, it seems probable that the mention of St. John the brother of James on the same day is due to a confusion between the two Johns.

Both the question of the identity of the Beloved Disciple and that of the date of St. John's death have played a considerable part in the controversy over the authorship of the Gospel according to St. John. Feast day in E., 26 Sept. (also 8 May); in W., 27 Dec. Acc. to later Latin legend, St. John was ordered by Domitian to be thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil 'before the Latin Gate', i.e. the gate leading southwards from Rome to Latium, and came out unharmed. This event was long commemorated in his feast 'ante portam Latinam' on 6 May.

The principal discussions occur in comm. and studies on the Gospel acc. to St. John (q.v.), though Bousset's speculations are included in his comm. on Rev. Modern discussion of the various problems by F. M. Braun, O.P., Jean le théologien et son évangile dans l'Église ancienne (Études Bibliques, 1959), pp. 301–93, with extensive reff. E. *Schwartz, Über den Tod der Söhne Zebedaei (Abh. (Gött.), N.F., vii, No. 5; 1904); id., 'Noch einmal der Tod der Söhne Zebedaei' in Z.N.T.W., xi (1910), pp. 89–104. H. B. Swete, 'The Disciple whom Jesus Loved' in J.T.S., xvii (1916), pp. 371–4; id., 'John of Ephesus', ib., pp. 375–8. J. H. *Bernard, Studia Sacra (London, 1917), pp. 260–84 ('The Tradition as to the Death of John, the Son of Zebedee'). H. P. V. Nunn, The Son of Zebedee and the Fourth Gospel (1927). J. N. Sanders, 'Who was the Disciple whom Jesus Loved?' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studies in the Fourth Gospel (1957), pp. 72–82; id., 'St. John on Patmos' in New Testament Studies, ix (1963), pp. 75–85. On the church dedicated to St. John at Ephesus, Die Johanneskirche (Forschungen in Ephesos, Band iv, Heft 3; Vienna, 1951). T. B. *Strong in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 680–94; P. W. Schmiedel in E.Bi., ii (1901), cols. 2503–62, s.v. 'John, Son of Zebedee'.

See also comm. to John, Epistles of St., and Revelation, cited s.vv.

JOHN, Acts of. A Greek apocryphal treatise, not later than the early 3rd cent., describing events in the life of the Apostle St. *John. Large parts of it have come down to us in a number of scattered MSS., all incomplete. A fragment, discovered by M. R. James in 1886, contains an extended account of Christ's passion in highly *Docetic language, and a hymn which at a much later date was used by the *Priscillianists; it is commonly known in modern times as the 'Hymn of Jesus' and was set to music by Gustav Holst (d. 1934). A long account of the death of St. John has also survived. As the events described are mainly connected with *Ephesus, it is likely that the treatise is of Ephesian provenance. It was known to *Clement of Alexandria, and apparently also to the author of *Monarchian Prologues to the Gospels. It was ascribed, esp. in later times, to a certain *Leucius.

Reff. in *Eusebius, H.E., III. xxv. 6, *Epiphanius, Haer., xlvii. 1, and *Philaster, Haer., 88. Text in R. A. *Lipsius–M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, II (1; 1898), pp. 151–216. Eng. tr. by M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 228–70; new frag. in B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt, The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, vi (1908), pp. 12–18 (No. 850). Germ. tr. and introd. by K. Schäferdiek in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 125–76; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 188–259. The Acta Ioannis, attributed to a certain Prochorus and publd. by T. *Zahn (Erlangen, 1880), are a later (5th cent.) orthodox revision of the orig. Gnostic Acts. J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 134–6.

JOHN, Epistles of St. There are three '*Catholic Epistles' which tradition ascribes to St. John, the Apostle and author of the Fourth Gospel. The longest and most important of them is the First. It is reckoned by *Eusebius among the 'homologoumena' and is attested by *Papias, *Polycarp, the *Muratorian Canon, and *Irenaeus. Modern scholars who defend the Apostolic authorship of the Gospel commonly also admit that of this Epistle. Among those who reject the Apostolic authorship of the Gospel opinion is divided. Some, e.g. A. *Harnack, attribute both the Gospel and the First Epistle to the same author; others, e.g. C. H. *Dodd, distinguish their authors. The other two Epistles are intimately connected with each other. They were, however, not generally admitted as authentic in antiquity. Eusebius placed them among the 'antilegomena' and St. *Jerome reports that many attributed them to one 'John the Elder' because of their opening words (see John the Presbyter). They are not contained in the Syriac (*Peshitta) Version, and not a few modern critics assign them to a different author from that of the First Epistle. The Second Epistle is addressed to 'the elect lady and her children', which words are generally believed to refer not to a person but to a church; the Third to a Christian named Gaius.

The First Epistle may be considered as a practical application of the doctrines of the Fourth Gospel. The letter opposes false doctrines on the Person of Christ. Those who do not confess that Jesus is the Christ, or who deny that He came 'in the flesh', but try to substitute some more 'spiritual' religion, are not of God; they are 'antichrists' (4. 1–3). The advocates of such doctrines are 'false brethren', for they sin against the command of neighbourly love (4. 20). The conception of God as Light and Life, prominent in the Gospel, recurs in the First Epistle. Special stress is laid on the Love of God, which manifested itself principally in the Son, who was sent into the world as a propitiation for sin to give eternal life to all believers (4. 9–10). The Divinity of Christ is clearly affirmed (ch. 3). He is the Saviour of the world, to which He gives life (5. 12 f.), but the world that does not accept Him lies in the evil one (RV 5. 19), whose marks are the lust of the flesh and of the eyes and the vainglory of life (2. 16). Christ has come by water and blood (5. 6), an allusion to His Death and probably also to the Sacraments. He is our propitiation; His Blood purifies us from all sin (1. 7). In Him we possess Eternal Life (5. 11, 13) so that we become children of God (3. 1), capable of imitating, His sanctity, justice, and love (3. 3, 7, 16). The Second Epistle insists esp. on the necessity of professing the right doctrine (2 Jn. 9) and of avoiding communion with the teachers of error (vv. 10, 11), and the Third on hospitality, reprimanding one Diotrephes for evading the practice of this virtue. The teaching of all three Epistles centres in the love of one's neighbour, for our love of God is best proved by the practice of fraternal charity.

On 1 Jn. 5. 7 f. see Johannine Comma.

Patristic commentaries include the 'Adumbrationes' of St. *Clement of Alexandria (i.e. Lat. tr. of part of Clement's 'Hypotyposeis' made by *Cassiodorus c. 540) and the 'Decem Tractatus' of St. *Augustine. The more important modern commentaries on the Epp. are those of B. F. *Westcott (London, 1883), A. E. Brooke (I.C.C., 1912), H. Windisch (Hb. N.T., iv, Hft. 2; 1911, on the Catholic Epistles; ed. 3 by H. Preisker, xv, 1951, pp. 106–44 and 166–72), J. Chaine (Études bibliques, 1939, on the Catholic Epistles, pp. 97–260), C. H. Dodd (Moff. Comm., 1946), R. Schnackenberg (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, xiii, Fasz. 3, 1953; ed. 3, 1965), N. Alexander (Torch Comm., 1962), R. R. Williams (on I–III John and James, Cambridge, 1965, pp. 3–72) and R. *Bultmann (K.E.K., xiv; 1967). C. H. Dodd, 'The First Epistle of St. John and the Fourth Gospel' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxi (1937), pp. 129–56; W. F. Howard, 'The Common Authorship of the Johannine Gospel and Epistles' in J.T.S., xlviii (1947), pp. 12–25; W. G. Wilson, 'An Examination of the Linguistic Evidence adduced against the Unity of Authorship of the First Epistle of John and the Fourth Gospel', ib., xlix (1948), pp. 147–56. J. C. O'Neill, The Puzzle of I John. A New Examination of Origins (1966). A. *Harnack, Über den dritten Johannesbrief (T.U., xv, Hft. 3; 1897). S. D. F. Salmond in H.D.B., ii (1899), pp. 728–42, s.v.; R. Leconte in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 797–815, s.v. 'Jean (Épitres de saint)'. See also bibl. to John, St.

JOHN, Gospel of St. The Fourth Gospel, which both in contents and outlook differs notably from the preceding three 'Synoptics', raises a series of problems generally known as the 'Johannine Question'. Acc. to an unbroken tradition going back to the second half of the 2nd cent. and attested by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and the *Muratorian Canon, it was written by St. *John the Apostle. This attribution was contested in early times only by the sect of the *Alogi and their Roman follower, *Gaius. (That the Gospel was already in existence in the first half of the 2nd cent. was proved by the discovery of the '*Rylands St. John' papyrus, and it is probable that passages in St. *Polycarp and St. *Ignatius of Antioch reflect Johannine ideas.) The Apostolic origin of the Book, however, is contested by a large body of modern scholars whose positions vary from a complete rejection of both its authenticity and its historicity to the admission of Apostolic inspiration and a certain historical value. The unity of the book has been disputed, esp. by German scholars, e.g. J. *Wellhausen, R. *Bultmann. Where its unity is admitted its attribution to *John the Presbyter (cf. p. 753) is favoured. This theory has been defended, e.g., by A. *Harnack, W. *Sanday, W. *Bousset, and B. H. *Streeter. It rests on a passage from Papias, preserved by *Eusebius (H.E., III. xxxix. 4), where there is a reference to John in the list of the Apostles and immediately afterwards another mention of a John, called the 'Elder' (πρεσβύτερος). From this passage, from which Eusebius himself concludes that there were two Johns living in *Ephesus at the same time, one the Apostle and the other the 'Elder', modern scholars have suggested that in fact only one John was then living at Ephesus, viz. John the Elder, who was also the author of the Gospel, and that tradition confused him with the Apostle. This hypothesis, however, has been rejected by many conservative scholars, who maintain that the Apostle's authorship is supported not only by tradition but also by internal evidence. In the Prologue of the Gospel the author apparently presents himself as an eye-witness (1. 14), and this testimony is held to be borne out by several details, such as the specified day and hour of certain events (e.g. 1. 29, 35, 39; 4. 6, &c.). On the traditional view that the Beloved Disciple is identical with St. John (see art. John, St.) his testimony in 19. 35 and that of his followers in 21. 24 are an additional proof of Apostolic authorship. On this assumption the reason commonly given for the Gospel's omission of the name of St. John is the humility of the Apostle. While he avoided putting himself forward, he left sufficient indications of his identity for those who knew him.

A further objection to Apostolic authorship is seen in the divergence between the Fourth Gospel and the Synoptics, notably the shifting of the Lord's activities from *Galilee to *Jerusalem and the extension of His ministry from the one year of the Synoptics to some three in all. Moreover, while the latter place the expulsion of the money-changers from the Temple at the close of His ministry, John records it at the beginning. Another striking divergence is the changing of the date of the *Last Supper and the *Crucifixion from the 14th and 15th Nisan to the 13th and 14th. Apart from these details the whole tenor of the Gospel is different from that of the Synoptics. The Lord's teaching is not given in parables and pithy sayings, but in long discourses; His Divinity is far more emphasized; very important events such as the institution of the Eucharist at the Last Supper are left out, while others, the omission of which in the Synoptics is difficult to explain, e.g. the Raising of Lazarus (11. 1–44) and the Feet-washing (13. 1–15), are included. These striking differences have been explained by conservative scholars on various lines. It is suggested that St. John presupposed the knowledge of the Synoptics in his readers, and his Gospel, whilst correcting them in some details, is concerned not to reproduce the popular teaching of Christ, which is given by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, but the higher doctrines reserved for His disciples, which were relegated to the background in the catechetical instructions which furnished the material of the other three.

The Gospel also raises some textual problems. The so-called '*Pericope adulterae' (7. 53 – 8. 11; q.v.) cannot have been part of the original text; it is missing from most of the best Greek codices, though it is found in the *Codex Bezae, and is almost certainly an interpolation. Another difficulty is the present place of chs. 15 and 16, which seem originally to have preceded ch. 14. Ch. 21, too, must be a later addition; but all except the last two verses (21. 24 f.) were probably by the author of the Gospel, and written to combat the belief that the Beloved Disciple would not die.

The purpose of the Gospel as stated in 20. 31 is to strengthen the readers' faith in Jesus as the Christ and the Son of God, so that they may have life in His name. The Prologue (1. 1–18) has given rise to much speculation. Whereas most commentators believe it to contain the key to the whole, others, e.g. A. Harnack, defend the opinion that it was added afterwards to make the Johannine doctrine acceptable to Hellenistic readers. The general view, however, is that the *Logos (q.v.) doctrine of the Prologue is simply the statement of the theology of the Incarnation in philosophical terms; and that though the word Λόγος does not recur in the Gospel, the idea underlies its whole teaching. The principal theme of the Gospel is the progressive manifestation of the Divine Word, the Light in the darkness. In the first four chapters this Light begins to shine and is received by men with joy. But when, in chs. 5 and 6, the Lord's teaching becomes more definite, men take sides for or against Him. Chs. 7–12 show the formation of the two parties; while opposition increases, the disciples gather more closely round their Master. In chs. 13–17 He is surrounded by a small group of followers to whom He reveals the secret of His Person and of His teaching. In chs. 18–19 the powers of darkness seem to have conquered. But this victory is only apparent, and the concluding chs. 20–21 show the final triumph of the Risen Christ.

The Gospel teaches a high Christological doctrine. Though all the faithful are the children of God, Jesus is His Son in a special sense: He is the Logos, the Only-Begotten of the Father (3. 16–18). Both in the Prologue and in the Gospel His pre-existence is repeatedly affirmed (e.g. 1. 1–5; 8. 58; 17. 5). He Himself clearly states His equality with God, hence He is accused of blasphemy by the Jews (5. 18). He enjoys omniscience (16. 30), He and the Father are one (10. 30), and all that belongs to the Father belongs also to Him (16. 15). At the same time He also teaches His dependence on the Father as Son (5. 19, 26) and His inferiority as man to the Father (14. 28), a statement which provided the *Arians with one of their chief arguments. The Incarnate Word was sent into the world to be its light and its life (1. 4–9), two conceptions which frequently recur in the Gospel; through Him alone can men go to the Father (14. 6), for He is the Good Shepherd who lays down His life for His sheep (10. 11–17). He has brought man salvation by revealing God in His own Person, for to know Christ is to know the Father (14. 7) and in Him man has eternal life. This latter conception largely replaces, as well as supplements, the Synoptic teaching on the Kingdom. Eternal life, as understood by St. John, begins already here on earth through faith in Christ (5. 24; 6. 47); its principle is the mystic union of the believer with his Lord (14. 20), most clearly expressed in the allegory of the Vine (15. 1–7) and in the so-called High-Priestly Prayer (ch. 17, esp. v. 23). This union is operated by the Holy Ghost, the Paraclete, who dwells in the faithful (14. 17 and 26) and is their guide into the fullness of truth (16. 13). The effects of this union of Christ with the soul are the loving observance of His commandments (14. 21), perfect peace and interior joy even in the midst of persecution (14. 27; 15. 11 and 20), and union of the faithful among themselves, a union that is modelled on the union of the Father with the Son (esp. 17. 20–24). The eschatological elements which are prominent in the Synoptics appear in a variant form in the Fourth Gospel: resurrection and judgement begin already in this life, the future is contained in the present, and the terms of the eternal in the temporal.

*Clement of Alexandria called the Fourth Gospel a 'spiritual Gospel'. It is evidently not a simple account of the Lord's miracles and popular teaching, but a deeply meditated representation of His Person and doctrine by a contemplative conscious of inspiration by the Holy Ghost. It may be regarded as the necessary complement of the picture of Christ drawn by the Synoptics.

Ancient Gk. commentaries include those of the Gnostic *Heracleon (fragmentary), *Origen (only eight out of thirty-two books survive), *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia (many Gk. fragments and complete in Syr.), *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theophylact and *Euthymius Zigabenus; the most important Lat. work is St. *Augustine's collection of Tractates on the Gospel. Notable pre-19th cent. modern commentaries include those of J. *Calvin and J. *Maldonatus (qq.v.). Much later criticism of the Gospel is foreshadowed in K. G. *Bretschneider, Probabilia de Evangelii et Epistolarum . . . Joannis Apostoli Indole et Origine (Leipzig, 1820).

Modern commentaries include those of B. F. *Westcott (Speaker's Commentary, 1881; Gk. text, 2 vols., London, 1908), A. *Loisy (Paris, 1903), T. *Zahn (in his own Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, iv; 1908), J. *Wellhausen (Berlin, 1908), W. Bauer (Hb. N.T., 1912; ed. 3, 1933), M. J. *Lagrange, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1924), J. H. *Bernard (2 vols., I.C.C., 1928), E. C. *Hoskyns (ed. F. N. Davey, 2 vols., London, 1940), R. *Bultmann (K.E.K., Abt. ii, ed. 11; 1941; Eng. tr. of 1964 ed., with additions, Oxford, 1971), H. Strathmann (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, iv, 1951; ed. 2, 1955), C. K. Barrett (London, 1955), R. H. *Lightfoot (ed. C. F. Evans, Oxford, 1956), R. Schnackenberg (Freiburg, 1965 ff.; Eng. tr., 1968 ff.), R. E. Brown, S.S. (2 vols., New York, 1966–70; London, 1971), J. N. Sanders (ed. B. A. Mastin, Black's N.T. Comm., 1968), J. C. Fenton (New Clar. Bib., 1970) and Barnabas Lindars, S.S.F. (New Cent. Bib., 1972).

Studies in the 'Johannine Question': W. *Sanday, The Authorship and Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel (1872); J. *Drummond, An Enquiry into the Character and Authorship of the Fourth Gospel (1903); W. Sanday, The Criticism of the Fourth Gospel (1905); E. F. Scott, The Fourth Gospel. Its Purpose and Theology (1906); B. W. Bacon, The Fourth Gospel in Research and Debate (1910); B. *Weiss, Das Johannesevangelium als einheitliches Werk (1912); C. F. *Burney, The Aramaic Origin of the Fourth Gospel (1922); W. F. Howard, The Fourth Gospel in Recent Criticism and Interpretation (1931); P. Gardner-Smith, Saint John and the Synoptic Gospels (Cambridge, 1938); E. Percy, Untersuchungen über den Ursprung der johanneischen Theologie (Lund, 1939); W. F. Howard, Christianity according to St. John (1943); J. N. Sanders, The Fourth Gospel in the Early Church (1943); C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge, 1953); id., Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (ib., 1963). F. M. Braun, O.P., Jean le théologien et son évangile dans l'Église ancienne (3 vols., Études Bibliques, 1959–66). Aileen Guilding, The Fourth Gospel and Jewish Worship. A Study of the Relation of St. John's Gospel to the ancient Jewish Lectionary System (Oxford, 1960). E. Malatesta, S.J., St. John's Gospel 1920–1965. A Cumulative and Classified Bibliography of Books and Periodical Literature on the Fourth Gospel (Analecta Biblica, xxxiii; Rome, 1967).

F. *von Hügel in E.B. (ed. 11), xv (1911), pp. 452–8. E. B. Allo, O.P., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 815–43, s.v. 'Jean (Évangile de Saint)'.

JOHN XII, XXII, XXIII, Popes. See after John Peckham.

JOHN, King of England. See after John Gualbert.

JOHN OF ANTIOCH (d. 441), Bp. of *Antioch from 429. The leader of the moderate Easterns in the *Nestorian controversy, he gave active support to his friend, Nestorius, in his dispute with *Cyril of Alexandria. In 431 he failed to arrive at the Council of *Ephesus in time for its opening meeting (22 June); and Cyril, suspecting him (probably wrongly) of employing Fabian tactics to aid his friend, refused to wait and proceeded to condemn Nestorius forthwith. When John eventually reached Ephesus a few days later, he held a counter-council which condemned Cyril and vindicated Nestorius. In 433 he became reconciled with Cyril on the basis of a theological formula devised as a compromise; but John thereby lost many supporters in his own patriarchate. A few of his letters are extant.

For his Letters see J. P. Migne, PG, lxxvii, 1449–62. See also bibl. to Cyril of Alexandria and to Ephesus, Council of (431).

JOHN OF APAMEA (flourished early 6th cent.), Syriac spiritual writer, also known as John the Solitary. His writings include a 'Dialogue on the Soul' and a number of letters and tractates which have sometimes been attributed to John of Lycopolis (d. 394).

Dialogue on the Soul, ed., under the name of John of Lycopolis, by S. Dedering (Leipzig, etc., 1936); Fr. tr. by I. Hausherr, S.J. (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxx; Rome, 1939). L. G. Rignell (ed.), Briefe von Johannes dem Einsiedler (Lund, 1941); id. (ed.), Drei Traktate von Johannes dem Einsiedler) (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, N.F., Avd. I, Bd. liv, No. 4; 1960), both with Germ. tr. I. Hausherr, S.J., 'Un Grand Auteur spirituel retrouvé: Jean d'Apamée' in O.C.P., xiv (1960), pp. 3–42. W. Strothmann, Johannes von Apamea (Patristische Texte und Studien, xi; 1972).

JOHN OF ÁVILA, St. (1500–69), Spanish mystic, 'Apostle of Andalusia'. Born near Toledo, he studied law at Salamanca (1514–15), but, shrinking from a worldly career, he returned home and for three years devoted himself to austerity and prayer; he then studied philosophy and theology under D. *Soto at Alcalá. Selling all his property on the death of his parents, he was ordained in 1525 and prepared for missionary work in Mexico in 1527. In 1528, however, he was persuaded by the Abp. of Seville (A. de Manrique) to divert his efforts to reviving the faith in Andalusia, where he began preaching in 1529. Summoned before the *Inquisition of Seville on a charge of preaching rigorism and exaggerating the dangers of wealth, he was promptly acquitted and widely acclaimed. After a ministry of nine years in Andalusia, he returned to Seville. He visited Cordova, Granada and various other Spanish towns. During the last seventeen years of his life he was in constant physical pain.

John of Ávila was one of the most effective preachers of his time, St. Francis *Borgia and St. *John of God being among the many who owed to him their conversion. He was also the trusted counsellor of St. *Teresa of Ávila and his association with the early *Jesuits did much to foster the spread of the Order in Spain. Among his works the best known are his Audi Filia (c. 1530), a treatise on Christian perfection addressed to a young nun, Doña Sancha Carillo, and his Spiritual Letters. He was beatified in 1894 and canonized in 1970. Feast day, 10 May.

His Works were ed. at Madrid, 1588 (repr., 1941). Crit. ed. by L. Sala Balust (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 2 vols., 1952–3), with biographical introd., i, pp. 3–221, incl. extensive bibl. 'Audi Filia' also ed. id. (Espirituales Españoles, Series A, Textos, x; 1963). Eng. tr. of selected letters by the Benedictines of *Stanbrook Abbey (1904); Fr. tr. of letters of direction, with introd., by J. M. de Buck (Museum Lessianum, Section Ascétique et Mystique, xxv; 1927). Early Life by his disciple, St. *Luis of Granada (1588); also ed. L. Sala Balust (Espirituales Españoles, Series A, Textos, xiv; 1964). Other lives by Martín Ruiz (Madrid, 1618) and Longaro degli Oddi, S.J. (Rome, 1754; Eng. tr. by J. G. Macleod, S.J., 1898). There is a specialist review Maestro Avila (Montilla, 1946 ff.).

JOHN THE BAPTIST, St., the 'Fore-runner of Christ'. He was the son of *Zachariah, a priest of the *Temple, and of *Elizabeth, a kinswoman of the BVM, from whom he was born in old age. His birth had been foretold by an angel (Lk. 1. 13–20), who had instructed Zachariah that he should be called John. On the fulfilment of this injunction his father uttered the *Benedictus (q.v.). John appeared c. A.D. 27 as a mission preacher on the banks of the *Jordan demanding repentance and baptism from his hearers in view of the approach of the *Kingdom of God. His dress and diet (locusts and wild honey) were reminiscent of the OT prophets, though some of his preaching foreshadowed that of Christ. Large crowds were attracted to him and among those who submitted to his baptism was the Lord Himself. Later his denunciation of *Herod Antipas for his marriage led to his imprisonment and subsequent beheading (Mt. 14. 1–12). His influence twenty years later is attested in the Acts (18. 25, 19. 1–7). He is highly revered by the *Mandaeans (q.v.), who may possibly have some remote connexion with St. John's original disciples.

Outside the NT, John is also mentioned by *Josephus (Antiq. XVIII. v. 2) in a passage of which there is no good reason to doubt the authenticity. Here the place of his imprisonment and death are given as the fortress of Machaerus by the Dead Sea. He was believed to have been buried at Sebaste (Samaria), where his tomb was honoured in the 4th cent. On its desecration under *Julian the Apostate (c. 362) his relics appear to have been scattered, numerous churches claiming to possess them.

Acc. to tradition (*Origen, *Ambrose, *Jerome, and *Leo the Great), John the Baptist was endowed with pre-natal grace at the time of the *Visitation of the BVM (Lk. 1. 41). Consequently the Feast of his Nativity, originally celebrated in connexion with the *Epiphany but from c. the late 4th cent. fixed on June 24 (six months before *Christmas), was regarded a of greater solemnity than that of his death ('Decollation'), observed on 29 Aug. from c. the 5th cent. The liturgy for the feast of his Nativity has retained certain affinities with that of Christmas, but because of its date the feast has become linked with certain customs connected with the summer solstice. The early importance of his cult is testified by his place in the *Canon of the Mass and formerly in the *Confiteor.

In art, at first depicted only in connexion with the Baptism of the Lord, he is later represented as an ascetic preacher wearing camel hair and carrying a staff and scroll saying 'Ecce Agnus Dei' (cf. Jn. 1. 29); he often bears a book or dish with a lamb on it. In Greek art he usually appears with the wings of a messenger.

A. Blakiston, John the Baptist and his Relation to Jesus (1912). M. Goguel, Au seuil de l'évangile: Jean-Baptiste (1928; with esp. ref. to his relations to Christ). C. H. Kraeling, John the Baptist (New York, 1951). C. H. H. Scobie, John the Baptist (1964). J. Daniélou, S.J., Jean-Baptiste témoin de l'Agneau (1964). W. Wink, John the Baptist in the Gospel Tradition (Society for New Testament Studies, Monographs Series, vii; 1968). H. Houbaut in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1, 1924), cols. 646–56, s.v. 'Jean-Baptiste (Baptême de saint').

JOHN BAPTIST DE LA SALLE, St. (1651–1719), founder of the Institute of the Brothers of Christian Schools. Born at *Reims of noble family, he received the tonsure in 1662 and was installed as Canon of Reims in 1667. After studying at the seminary of *Saint-Sulpice from 1670 to 1672, he was ordained priest in 1678. In 1679 he assisted in the opening of two free schools in Reims, where he soon became interested in fostering religious principles in the teachers. The original group, which he had taken into his own house in 1681, having resisted his attempt to enforce a semi-monastic discipline, soon left him; but in 1682 others came forward. Resigning his canonry in 1683, he distributed his fortune to the poor (1684) and devoted himself to the training of his new community. In 1688 he took charge of the free school in the parish of Saint-Sulpice, founded by J. J. *Olier. In 1699 he opened in Paris the first Sunday Schools giving technical and religious instruction to the sons of artisans; and he was also asked by *James II to educate the Irish boys of his court. In subsequent years schools were started in other parts of France and beyond. In 1690 he finally decided to exclude priests from the Order and in 1693 he drew up the first rule. Although officially deposed in 1702, he retained personal control of the Institute until 1717.

Apart from his spiritual importance, de La Salle is significant as a pioneer in educational practice. First in the field for training colleges for teachers, as distinct from ecclesiastical seminaries, he popularized the teaching of the vernacular in French schools and the use of the simultaneous method. His boarding school at Saint-Yon (est. 1705) has been considered the prototype of modern secondary educational institutions. His published works include Méditations pour tous les dimanches de l'année (c. 1710; Eng. tr., 1953) and Conduite des écoles chrétiennes (1720; Eng. tr., New York, 1935). He was canonized in 1900. Feast day, 7 Apr. (formerly 15 May).

Letters and Documents, ed. W. J. Battersby (London, 1952), with introd. The principal authority is the life by his friend, J. B. Blain (2 vols., Rouen, 1733). Other lives include those by J. P. Garreau (Rouen, 1760; abridged Eng. tr., 1843), A. Ravelet (Paris, 1847), 'Un Frère des écoles chrétiennes' [Frère Lucard] (Rouen, 1874), J. Guibert (Paris, 1900), A. Delaire (ed. 4, 'Les Saints', 1902), and F. *Thompson (London, 1911). W. J. Battersby, De La Salle. A Pioneer of Modern Education (1949); id., De La Salle. Saint and Spiritual Writer (1950); id., St. John Baptist de la Salle (1957). E. Lett, Les Premiers Biographes de Saint J.-B. de la Salle [1956]. Mrs. R. F. Wilson, The Christian Brothers. Their Origin and Work (1883); G. Rigault, Histoire générale de l'Institut des Frères des Écoles Chrétiennes (9 vols., 1937–1953). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 433–44, with bibl. Cahiers Lasalliens (Rome, 1959 ff.).

JOHN BAPTIST MARY VIANNEY, St. See Curé d'Ars, The.

JOHN OF BEVERLEY, St. (d. 721), Bp. of *York. A monk of St. *Hilda's double-abbey at *Whitby and a diligent scholar and teacher, he was consecrated Bp. of *Hexham c. 687. In 705 he was translated to the see of York, then being claimed by *Wilfrid. Before his death he retired to the abbey at Inderawood, afterwards *Beverley, of which he had himself been the founder. The reputation he acquired for sanctity during his lifetime increased after his death, and in the Middle Ages he enjoyed a widespread cultus in England, and many miracles were attributed to his prayers. Henry V ascribed the victory of Agincourt (1415) to his intercession and in 1416 ordered his feast to be kept throughout England. Feast days, 7 May (death) and 25 Oct. (translation of relics).

The chief authority for his life is *Bede, H.E., iv and v. A Life by Folcard, based on Bede, in J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, i (Rolls Series, 1879), pp. 239–91. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxix (1892), p. 435 f.

JOHN BOSCO, St. See Bosco, St. John.

JOHN CAPISTRAN, St. See Giovanni Capistrano, St.

JOHN CAPREOLUS. See Capreolus, John.

JOHN CHRYSOSTOM, St. See Chrysostom, St. John.

JOHN CLIMACUS, St. (c. 570 – c. 649), ascetic and writer on the spiritual life. He was also known as σχολαστικός, but is not to be confused with *John Scholasticus, Patr. of Constantinople (q.v.). After studying on Mt. *Sinai, he became an *anchorite and later Abbot of Sinai. His celebrated 'Ladder of Paradise' (Κλῖμαξ τοῦ παραδείσου) treats of the monastic virtues and vices, the anchoritic and coenobitic life, and the nature of complete dispassionateness (ἀπάθεια), which is upheld as the ideal of Christian perfection. There are 30 'steps of the ladder' (i.e. 30 chapters) to correspond with the age of Christ at His Baptism. Feast day, in W., 30 Mar.; in E., 4th Sunday in Lent (also 30 Mar.).

There is no critical text. Ed. M. Rader, S.J. (Paris, 1633); repr., with additional material, in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxviii, 585–1248; ed. based on Migne, with Ital. tr., by P. Trevisan (Corona Patrum Salesiana, Series Graeca, viii–ix; Turin, 1941). Medieval Lat. trr. by Ambrogio *Traversari and others; a Spanish tr. of one of these Lat. texts of John Climacus was destined to be the first book to be printed in the New World (Mexico, 1532). Eng. tr. by L. Moore (London, 1959). W. Völker, Scala Paradisi. Eine Studie zu Johannes Climacus und zugleich eine Vorstudie zu Symeon dem neuen Theologen (Wiesbaden, 1968), with reff. J. R. Martin, The Illustration of the Heavenly Ladder of John Climacus (Studies in Manuscript Illumination, v; Princeton, 1954). L. Petit in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 690–3, s.v. '30. Jean Climaque'; G. Couilleau in Dict. Sp., viii (1974), cols. 369–89, s.v. '60. Jean Climaque (saint)'.

JOHN OF THE CROSS, St. (1542–91), mystical Doctor and joint founder of the Discalced *Carmelites. The son of a poor family of noble origin, he entered the Carmelite monastery of Medina del Campo in 1563, studied theology at Salamanca (1564–8), and was ordained priest in 1567. Dissatisfied with the prevalent laxity of his order, he considered becoming a *Carthusian, but was dissuaded by St. *Teresa. Then with her aid he brought her Reform to include friars. He was Master of the Discalced Carmelite College at Alcalá de Henares (1571–2) and from 1572 to 1577 confessor of the Convent of the Incarnation at Ávila, where St. Teresa had returned as prioress in 1571. After the anti-Reformist General Chapter of the Calced Carmelites (i.e. of the Mitigated Observance) held in Italy at Piacenza in 1575, he was seized at the order of the Visitor General, taken to Toledo, and imprisoned in their monastery there (Dec. 1577). After nine months of great hardships he escaped to the monastery of El Calvario, in Andalusia. The separation between the Calced and Discalced Carmelites was soon to be effected (1579–80). From 1579 to 1582 St. John was rector of the college which he established at Baeza; in 1582 he went to Granada as prior. From 1588 he was prior at Segovia. Having incurred the hostility of Nicolás Doria, vicar general of the Discalced Carmelites, inter alia by resisting his wish to impose the observance of additional detailed rules on the Discalced Nuns, he was banished to the province of Andalusia, in mid 1591, and after severe illness and great suffering died at Úbeda at the end of the year. He was beatified in 1675, canonized in 1726, and declared a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1926. Feast day, 14 Dec. (formerly, 24 Nov.).

The writings of St. John possess the paradoxical character of works in which the imagination and sensitivity of a poet are combined with the intellectual activity of a theologian trained in *Thomist philosophy in seeking to capture and communicate the mystic's apprehension of a living and loving Being which is found essentially beyond the reach of feeling, imagination and understanding; it can ultimately be known in itself only as these modes give way to the response of pure love. His extensive treatises on the mystical life consist of commentaries which he gradually built up on his own poems, the chief of which are among the greatest in Spanish. The major part of his Spiritual Canticle was composed in prison in 1578; the Ascent of Mount Carmel ('En una noche oscura') was written soon afterwards, and the Living Flame of Love c. 1583–4. His commentaries on the first two deal with the purgation of the soul by the 'night of the senses', when, becoming detached from all sensible devotion, the soul maintains itself in pure faith. This, usually after a period of rest, is followed by a second purification, the 'night of the spirit', when the soul is further spiritualized by the Divine action, normally accompanied by intense suffering, in order to fit it for the transforming Union described in the Living Flame and its commentary. St. John's general debt to the North European mystical tradition of the preceding centuries is suggested by the important similarities that exist between the Cloud of Unknowing* (which he almost certainly did not know) and the more developed analyses of St. John himself. Together with St. Teresa, to whose spiritual experience he seems to have owed more than a little of his own understanding of the spiritual life, St. John brought into being a uniquely comprehensive and analytical account of the successive stages of purgation, illumination and union through which the soul passes in the course of its approach to God. The accounts of this progress given by these two Carmelites are commonly regarded as possessing unique authority.

Crit. edd. of his collected works are those of Silverio de Santa Teresa, O.C.D. (Biblioteca Mística Carmelitana, vols. x–xiv, Burgos, 1929–31) and Lucinio del SS. Sacramento, O.C.D. (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1946, with life by Crisógono de Jesús, O.C.D., pp. 3–488; ed. 6, with life revised by Matías del Niño Jesús, O.C.D., 1972). Eng. trr. of his works by E. A. Peers (3 vols., London, 1934–5; ed. 2, with additional material, 3 vols., 1953) and K. Kavanaugh, O.C.D.–O. Rodriguez, O.C.D. (ib., 1966). Lives by Bruno de Jésus-Marie, O.C.D., Saint Jean de la Croix (1929; revised, 1961; Eng. tr., 1932), and Crisógono de Jesús, O.C.D. (see above; Eng. tr. of 3rd ed., 1958). E. A. Peers, Handbook to the Life and Times of St. Teresa and St. John of the Cross (1954). Crisógono de Jesús, O.C.D., San Juan de la Cruz: su obra científica y su obra literaria (2 vols., 1929). J. Baruzi, Saint Jean de la Croix et le problème de l'expérience mystique (1924; ed. 2, 1931), with bibl. Dámaso Alonso, La poesía de San Juan de la Cruz (1942; ed. 4, 1966). Efrén de la Madre de Dios, O.C.D., San Juan de la Cruz y el misterio de la Santísima Trinidad en la vida espiritual (1947), with bibl. J. Vilnet, Bible et mystique chez saint Jean de la Croix (Bruges, 1949). M. Milner, Poésie et vie mystique chez saint Jean de la Croix (1951). H. Sanson, L'Esprit humain selon saint Jean de la Croix (1953). The Mediaeval Mystical Tradition and St. John of the Cross by a Benedictine of *Stanbrook Abbey (1954). G. Morel, Le Sens de l'existence selon saint Jean de la Croix (3 vols., 1960–1). E. W. T. Dicken, The Crucible of Love. A Study of the Mysticism of St. Teresa of Jesus and St. John of the Cross (1963). J. Orcibal, Saint Jean de la Croix et les mystiques rhéno-flamands (Bruges, 1966). F. Ruiz Salvador, O.C.D., Introducción a San Juan de la Cruz. El escritor, los escritos, el sistema (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1968). C. P. Thompson, The Poet and the Mystic. A Study of the Cántico Espiritual de San Juan de la Cruz (Oxford, 1977). Luis de San José, O.C.D., Concordancias de las obras y escritos del Doctor de la Iglesia San Juan de la Cruz (Burgos, 1948). Other studies include those of David Lewis (London, 1897), [M.] Demimuid ('Les Saints', ed. 2, 1916), B. Frost (London, 1937) and E. A. Peers (ib., 1943). Id., Studies of the Spanish Mystics, i (1927; ed. 2, 1951), pp. 227–88. Pourrat, iii, pp. 269–308. B. Zimmerman, O.C.D., in C.E., viii (1910), p. 480 f., s.v.; Lucien-Marie de Saint-Joseph in Dict. Sp., viii (1974), cols. 408–47, s.v. 'Jean de la Croix'. 'Bibliographia carmelitana annualis', Carmelus (Rome, 1954 ff.). Archivum bibliographicum carmelitanum (Rome, 1956 ff.).

JOHN OF DAMASCUS, St. (c. 675–c. 749), Greek theologian and '*Doctor of the Church'. Little is known of his life, and such sources as exist are in considerable conflict. Born of a rich Christian family of *Damascus, he succeeded his father as the chief representative ('Logothete') of the Christians to the Caliph. He was compelled for his faith to abandon this office c. 716 and withdrew to the monastery of St. *Sabas near *Jerusalem, where he became a priest. He was a strong defender of *Images in the *Iconoclastic Controversy, writing three discourses on the subject between 726 and 730. Acc. to his biographer, Stephen Thaumaturgus, he died in 749.

His most important work, the 'Fount of Wisdom' (Πηγὴ γνώσεως), was written at the suggestion of his former fellow-monk, *Cosmas Melodus, Bp. of Maïuma. It is divided into three parts, dealing with philosophy ('Dialectica'), heresies, and the Orthodox faith ('De Fide Orthodoxa'), the most important of the three. For his philosophical doctrines he is indebted to *Aristotle, though he also borrowed from *Plato through *Maximus the Confessor, whereas the book of heresies is for the most part a reproduction of the 'Anakephalaiosis', attributed to St. *Epiphanius. The 'De Fide Orthodoxa' is a comprehensive presentation of the teaching of the Greek Fathers, on the main Christian doctrines, esp. the Trinity, Creation, and the Incarnation; the Sacraments, Mariology, Images, and other subjects are also treated, but less systematically. In his demonstration of the existence and unity of God he adduces the metaphysical arguments from the contingency of creatures and the order of the universe. His Trinitarian theology sums up the doctrine esp. of the *Cappadocian Fathers and develops the conception of περιχώρησις ('*circumincession') in order to express the Inner-Trinitarian relations. His angelology reproduces that of St. *Gregory of Nazianzus, his favourite Father, and of the Pseudo-*Dionysius. His treatment of the Incarnation is a representative synthesis of Greek theological thought, finding its end in the restoration of fallen man to his former state. He teaches that in the *Hypostatic Union the Word served as 'hypostasis' ('Person') to the humanity which He took; hence he adopted the *Enhypostasia of *Leontius of Byzantium, which he interprets along the lines of the '*Communicatio Idiomatum'. He saw in the interpenetration of the two natures in Christ the formation of '*Theandric Activities', a term he takes over from Pseudo-Dionysius, interpreting it in an orthodox sense. A corollary of his Christological doctrine was his fully developed Mariology. He teaches the Divine maternity of Mary, her exemption from all stain of sin, and her assumption into heaven. In the doctrine of the Eucharist he emphasizes the Real Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ almost to the exclusion of the accidents of bread and wine.

His other great work, the 'Sacra Parallela', preserved only in fragments, is a vast compilation of Scriptural and patristic texts on the Christian moral and ascetical life. It received its name from the parallel treatment of virtues and vices in its third part. He also wrote a comprehensive commentary on the Pauline Epp. and several homilies of a strongly dogmatic bent, e.g. on the Transfiguration, on Holy Saturday, and on the death of the Virgin. Beside his prose works he composed a number of poems which form part of the Greek Liturgy, though not all of those attributed to him are authentic. Some of these have found their way into modern English hymn-books, e.g. 'Come, ye faithful, raise the strain' and 'The Day of Resurrection! Earth, tell it out abroad' (both in J. M. *Neale's renderings). The Life of *Barlaam and Joasaph (q.v.) is apparently also a genuine work of the Damascene, though modern scholars have widely questioned it.

St. John of Damascus exercised a considerable influence on later theology. 'De Fide Orthodoxa', in the inadequate translation of Burgundio of Pisa, was known to *Peter Lombard and St. *Thomas Aquinas, and his authority was invoked in favour of the Latin doctrine of the *Double Procession of the Holy Ghost by the Unionist Greek theologians of the later 13th cent. and by Card. *Bessarion at the Council of *Florence. All through the Middle Ages his works were used by the Greeks and esp. by the Slavs, though they were never commented on nor did they lead to the formation of a school as did those of Peter Lombard and St. Thomas in the West. In modern times they have retained their influence in the formation of E. theologians, though supplemented by later W. writers (RC and Protestant). St. John of Damascus, whose cult developed soon after his death, was declared a Doctor of the Church by *Leo XIII in 1890. Feast day, in the Greek Church, 4 Dec.; in the W., 4 Dec. (formerly, 27 Mar.).

Earliest collected ed. by M. *Le Quien, O.P. (2 vols. fol., Paris, 1712, with important prolegomena and dissertations); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, xciv–xcvi, with additions from A. *Gallandi, A. *Mai, and others. Crit. text being ed., under the auspices of the Byzantinisches Institut der Abtei Scheyern, by B. Kotter, O.S.B. (Patristische Texte und Studien, vii, xii, xvii, xxii, etc., 1969 ff.). Homilies on the Nativity and Dormition of the BVM ed., with Fr. tr., by P. Voulet, S.J. (S.C., lxxx; 1961). B. Kotter, O.S.B., Die Überlieferung der Pege Gnoseos des hl. Johannes von Damaskos (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, v; 1959). The Latin tr. of the 'Dialectica' by R. *Grossteste ed. O. A. Colligan, O.F.M. (Franciscan Institute Publications, Text Series, vi; 1953) and that of the 'De Fide Orthodoxa' by Burgundio of Pisa, together with the slightly earlier, partial, tr. made in Hungary by Cerbanus, ed. E. M. Buytaert, O.F.M. (ib., viii; 1955). Eng. tr. of 'De Fide Orthodoxa' by S. D. F. Salmond (N.P.N.C.F., Ser. 2, ix, 1899). Arabic Life by Michael of Antioch (1085; ed. by C. Bacha, Harisa (Lebanon), 1912; Germ. tr. by G. Graf in Der Katholik, xciii (1913), pp. 164–190, 320–31); this Arabic life was tr. into Gk. by Patr. John VIII of Jerusalem. On the details of St. John's life see M. Jugie, A.A., 'La Vie de saint Jean Damascène' in É.O., xxiii (1924), pp. 137–61; id., 'Une Nouvelle Vie et un nouvel écrit de saint Jean Damascène', ib., xxviii (1929), pp. 35–41. Modern studies of his life and writings by J. Langen (Gotha, 1879), J. H. Lupton ('The Fathers for English Readers', London, 1883), K. J. Diobuniotes (Athens, 1903), V. Ermoni ('La Pensée chrétienne', Paris, 1904), and J. Nasrallah ('Les Souvenirs chrétiens de Damas', ii, Paris, 1950). On the Sacra Parallela, F. *Loofs, Studien über die dem Johannes von Damaskus zugeschriebenen Parallelen (1892); K. Holl, Die Sacra Parallela des Johannes Damascenus (T.U., xvi, Hft. 1; 1896); id., Fragmenta vornicänischer Kirchenväter aus den Sacra Parallela (ib., xx, Hft. 2; 1899). J. Bilz, Die Trinitätslehre des hl. Johannes von Damaskus (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte ix, Hft. 3; 1909). B. Studer, O.S.B., Die theologische Arbeitsweise des Johannes von Damaskus (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, ii; 1956); Keetje Rozemond, La Christologie de Saint Jean Damascène (ib., viii; 1959); G. Richter, Die Dialektik des Johannes von Damaskos (ib., x; 1964). Bardenhewer, v, pp. 51–65; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 526–32; Krumbacher, pp. 68–71, 674–6. F. Kattenbusch in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1901), pp. 286–300; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 693–751, s.v. '31. Jean Damascène (Saint)'; J. M. Hoeck, O.S.B., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 1023–6. See also bibl. to Iconoclastic Controversy.

JOHN OF EPHESUS (c. 507 – 86), *Monophysite historian. Born near Amid in Mesopotamia, he was sent by *Justinian I in 542 to convert the pagans in the region of Ephesus, of which he was later consecrated bishop by *Jacob Baradaeus. His Ecclesiastical History, of which only the third part survives complete, covers the period 571–85. His Lives of Eastern Saints consists of 58 short accounts of contemporary hermits and others. Both works are in Syriac.

The Third Part of his Ecclesiastical History ed. E. W. Brooks (C.S.C.O., cv; 1935, with Lat. tr., ib., cvi; 1936); fragments of First and Second Part, ed. id. in Incerti Auctoris Chronicon Pseudo-Dionysianum vulgo dictum, ed. I. B. Chabot, ii (ib., civ; 1933), pp. 402–20. Eng. tr. of Third Part by R. Payne Smith (Oxford, 1860). Lives of Eastern Saints, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in P.O., xvii (1923), pp. 1–307, xviii (1924), pp. 513–698, and xx (1926), pp. 153–285. L. Ortiz de Urbina, S.J., Patrologia Syriaca (ed. 2, Rome, 1965), p. 166 f.

JOHN EUDES, St. See Eudes, St. John.

JOHN THE FASTER, St. (d. 595), John IV, Patriarch of *Constantinople from 582. His renown as an ascetic won him the title of 'Faster' (ὁ νηστευτής, 'jejunator'). Though personally unambitious, he used his great influence at court to gain for his see supremacy over the Churches of the E. and equality with Rome. When in 588 he assumed the challenging title of 'Oecumenical [οἰκουμενικός, "Universal"] Patriarch' (a style which had earlier been applied to his predecessors by *Justinian), Pope Pelagius II, and later St. *Gregory the Great, protested, the latter interpreting the description as a claim to be sole bishop and source of the episcopate. Their objections, however, did not prevent John from bequeathing the description to his successors. Attributed to him is a manual for confessors, commonly known as his 'Penitential' ('Ακολουθία καὶ τάξις ἐπὶ ἐξομολογουμένων), but it is of much later date, and not earlier than the 9th cent. His only genuine writing which survives appears to be a sermon on 'Repentance, Self-control and Virginity', largely based on St. *Chrysostom. Feast day in E., 2 Sept.

J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxviii, 1887–1978. E. Herman, S.J., 'Il più antico penitenziale greco' in O.C.P., xix (1953), pp. 71–127. Bardenhewer, v, p. 74 f., with bibl. R. Janin, A.A., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1, 1924), col. 828 f., s.v. 'Jean IV le Jeûneur'.

JOHN OF FIDANZA. See Bonaventure, St.

JOHN FISHER, St. See Fisher, St. John.

JOHN OF GOD, St. (1495–1550), founder of the 'Order of Charity for the Service of the Sick', or '*Brothers Hospitallers' (q.v.). He was born in *Portugal and, after a pious upbringing, joined a company of foot soldiers and forsook the practice of religion. At the age of about 40 he changed his mode of life in an attempt to atone for his past waywardness. He hoped for martyrdom in Morocco; but, this being denied him, he returned to the south of *Spain and spread the faith by hawking tracts and pictures until in 1538 he was converted to a life of great sanctity by St. *John of Ávila. At first his excesses of penitence and devotion caused him to be treated as a lunatic, but a further interview with John of Ávila directed his energies to the care of the sick and poor. After his death his order gradually took shape. He was canonized in 1690 and in 1886 declared by *Leo XIII the heavenly patron of all hospitals and sick folk. He is also often regarded as the patron of printers and booksellers. Feast day, 8 Mar.

Life, written within twenty years of his death, by Francis de Castro, Rector of the Hospital of St. John at Granada, publ. at Granada, 1585; Lat. tr., 1623; excerpts (Lat.) in AA.SS., Mar. I (1668), pp. 814–35; excerpts from early 17th cent. life, ib., pp. 835–58. M. Gomez-Moreno, Primicias históricas de San Juan de Dios (1950). Modern studies include those of L. Saglier (Paris, 1877), E. Baillon (London, 1884), I. M. Magnin (Lille, 1887; Eng. tr., 1936), I. Giordani (Florence, 1947) and N. McMahon (Dublin, 1952). Florence M. Rudge in C.E., viii (1910), p. 472 f.; G. Russotto, F.B.F., in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vi (Rome, 1965), cols. 740–8, s.v. 'Giovanni di Dio'.

JOHN GUALBERT, St. (c. 990 – 1073). The founder of the *Vallumbrosan Order (q.v.). After generously pardoning on a *Good Friday the murderer of one of his relatives, he entered the *Benedictine monastery of San Miniato, near Florence. Some four years later he left this house for *Camaldoli; and, at a date which cannot be fixed, he left for the place later known as Vallombrosa, where he collected around him a body of monks who lived under a modified form of the Benedictine Rule, austere in its demands and adapted to the conditions of a semi-hermit existence. In the later part of his life, John Gualbert took a prominent part in assisting the Papacy in its struggles against simony. Feast day, 12 July.

The earliest authority is the life by Andrew of Strumi, who became Abbot of Vallombrosa in 1085 (d. 1097), pr. in AA.SS., Jul. III (1723), pp. 343–65; also ed. F. Baethgen in M.G.H., Scriptores, xxx (pt. 2; 1934), pp. 1080–1104, with introd. pp. 1076–8. Life by St. Atto, later Bp. of Pistoia (d. 22 May 1153), also pr. in AA.SS., loc. cit., pp. 365–82. Third life (12th cent.) first pr. by R. Davidsohn, Forschungen zur älteren Geschichte von Florenz, i (Berlin, 1896), pp. 55–60, with introd. pp. 50–4; also ed. F. Baethgen, op. cit., pp. 1104–10, with introd. p. 1078 f. Further sources in B.H.L., p. 651 f. (Nos. 4397–406), and Suppl. (1911), p. 176. D. de Franchi, Historia del Patriarcha S. Giovan Gualberto (Florence, 1640). Modern lives (in Italian) by D. F. Tarani (Udine, 1903), S. Casini (Alba, 1927), A. Savani (Rome, 1950) and E. Lucchesi (Florence, 1959); B. Quilici, 'Giovanni Gualberto e la sua riforma monastica' in Archivio Storico Italiano, xcix, Disp. I–II (1941), pp. 113–32, Disp. III–IV (for 1941; 1942), pp. 27–62; c, Disp. I–II (for 1942; 1943), pp. 45–99. A. *Wilmart, O.S.B., 'Le Manuel des prières de saint Jean Gualbert' in R. Bén., xlviii (1936), pp. 259–99. R. Volpini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vi (Rome, 1966), cols. 1012–29, s.v. 'Giovanni Gualberto', with extensive bibl.

JOHN, KING OF ENGLAND (1167–1216), King from 1199. He was the youngest son of Henry II and Eleanor of Aquitaine. He was early nicknamed Lackland because he had not been provided like his brothers with an apanage of land by his father, though he was Henry's favourite and richly endowed with castles and rents. In 1177 he was made 'King of Ireland', which he was sent to govern in 1185. Alienating the Irish by his insolence and misrule, he was recalled after a few months. In 1189 he took part in the conspiracy of his brother Richard and the King of France against his father, whose death was hastened by this treachery. After his accession (1189) Richard I confirmed him in his possessions, which were increased by his marriage to Isabella of Gloucester. During Richard's absence on the Third *Crusade John expelled his chancellor, William Longchamp, and intrigued with the King of France against Richard. After Richard's return (1194) the brothers were reconciled; John assisted the King against Philip of France; and Richard named John as his successor. On his accession (1199) John was recognized by England and Normandy, and in 1202 defeated Anjou and Brittany, who urged the claims of his nephew Arthur (whom John murdered in 1203). During the following years he lost most of his possessions in France, and with the death of Abp. *Hubert of Canterbury in 1205 he was deprived of the only counsellor able to exercise on his acts a measure of restraint. The election of a new archbishop involved him in a quarrel with the chapter of *Canterbury, and when *Innocent III appointed Stephen *Langton (1207) John refused to recognize him. In 1208 England was placed under an *interdict and in 1209 John was excommunicated. Unsure of his barons, threatened with deposition by the Pope and with invasion from France, in 1213 John made his submission to the Pope, promised full reconciliation and restitution, and placed England and Ireland under the suzerainty of Innocent and his successors. The last years of his reign were troubled by renewed war with France in which he was defeated in 1214. In 1215 the barons obtained the famous grant of Magna Carta, but soon afterwards John regretted his action and civil war broke out, France intervening on the side of the barons. John died during the struggle, leaving his kingdom in confusion.

Recent historians have taken a less critical view of John than some nineteenth century writers or some chroniclers of his own time. He was profligate and could be ruthless, violent, treacherous, grasping and arbitrary; but he was not wholly unsympathetic towards the Church and possessed considerable skill as a strategist, politician, administrator and judge. However, he failed to manage his magnates, was an indifferent military tactician, and above all lacked judgement in a crisis.

The principal modern studies are Kate Norgate, John Lackland (London, 1902), S. Painter, The Reign of King John (Baltimore, 1949), J. C. Holt, The Northerners. A Study in the Reign of King John (Oxford, 1961), and W. L. Warren, King John (1961). Other studies by J. Lehmann (Historische Studien, xlv; 1904) and E. B. d'Auvergne (London, 1934). J. C. Holt, Magna Carta (Cambridge, 1965). C. R. Cheney, 'King John and the Papal Interdict' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xxxi (1948), pp. 295–317; id., 'King John's Reaction to the Interdict of England' in Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th Ser., xxxi (1949), pp. 129–50. J. C. Holt, King John (Historical Association Pamphlet G 53; 1963). F. M. Powicke in C. Med. H., vi (1929), pp. 204–51, with details of sources and other bibl. pp. 881–7; A. L. Poole, From Domesday Book to Magna Carta (Oxford History of England, iii; 1951), esp. pp. 425–86. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 402–17, with full reff. to original sources.

JOHN LATERAN, Church of St. See Lateran Basilica.

JOHN MALALAS (later 6th cent.), i.e. 'John Rhetor' or 'Scholasticus', Byzantine chronicler. He is prob. to be identified with the *John Scholasticus who became Patr. of *Constantinople (d. 577; q.v.). His 'Chronography' (Χρονογραφία) in 18 Books (Bks. 1–17 from the *Monophysite standpoint; Bk. 18 orthodox), woven round the fortunes of *Antioch, is a primary source of religious and secular history, written in the 'vulgar' Greek of his age. The text originally went down to 574, but now survives only to 563. His work was closely followed by many later chronographers and annalists.

'Chronicle' (Gk. text preserved only in Bod. Barocc. gr. 182 and a few fragments), ed. L. Dindorf, in C.S.H. Byz., 1831; repr. J. P. Migne, PG, xcvii, 9–790. Crit. text of Bks. IX–XII, ed. A. Schenk Graf von Stauffenberg, Die römische Kaisergeschichte bei Malalas (1931), with imp. commentary. Eng. tr. of Bks. VIII–XVIII from Slavonic version by M. Spinka–G. Downey (Chicago, 1940). W. Weber, 'Studien zur Chronik des Malalas' in Festgabe für A. Deissmann (1927), pp. 20–66. Krumbacher, pp. 325–34; G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, i (ed. 2; Berliner Byzantinistische Arbeiten, x; 1958), pp. 329–34, with extensive bibl.

JOHN MARK, St. See Mark, St.

JOHN OF MATHA, St. (d. 1213), founder of the *Trinitarian Order. Practically all that is known of him is that he was a native of Provence, founded his Order for the redemption of captives and died at Rome on 17 Dec. 1213. The abundant details in the older biographies are based on spurious records fabricated in the 15th and 16th cents. Feast day, 8 Feb.

Uncritical lives include those of G. Gonzales de Ávila (Madrid, 1630), J. M. Prat, S.J. (Paris, 1846), and le Père Calixte de la Providence, Trinitarian (ib., 1867). Much early material is also pr. in Antoninus ab Assumptione, Trinitarian, Monumenta Ordinis Excalceatorum SS. Trinitatis Redemptionis Captivorum ad Provinciam S.P.N. Ioannis de Matha Spectantia (Rome, 1915). N. Schuhmacher, Der hl. Johannes von Matha (Klosterneuburg, 1936). See also bibl. to Trinitarians.

JOHN MOSCHUS, St. See Moschus, John.

JOHN OF NEPOMUK, St. (c. 1340–93), Bohemian martyr. As vicar-general of the Archdiocese of Prague, John resisted the attempts of Wenceslas IV to suppress an abbey in order to create a see for one of his favourites and to interfere with clerical prerogatives. By the King's orders he was drowned in the Moldau in consequence; but his recovered body became the centre of a widespread cultus and he was canonized in 1729. Tradition credits him with having incensed the monarch by refusing to betray the Queen by breaking the *seal of the confessional. The details of his life are shrouded in obscurity, and some have held that two Johns suffered martyrdom in similar circumstances at the hands of Wenceslas. Feast day, 16 May.

Life by B. Balbino, S.J. (written in 1670), in AA.SS., Mai. III (1680), pp. 668–80. Acts of the Process of his Canonization, publ. Verona, 1725. J. T. A. Berghauer, Proto-martyr Poenitentiae eiusque Sigilli Custos semper Fidelis Divus Joannes Nepomucenus (Augsburg, 1736). Modern studies by A. H. Wratislaw (London, 1873), A. L. Frind (Prague, 1879; new ed. with crit. notes by W. Frind, ib., 1929), and J. Weisskopf (Vienna, 1931). P. de Vooght, 'Jean de Pomuk' in R.H.E., xlviii (1953), pp. 777–95.

JOHN OF PARMA, Bl. (1209–89), *Franciscan Minister General. He taught logic for several years at Parma, where he took the Franciscan habit, probably in 1233, and was later sent to *Paris to continue his studies. A popular teacher and preacher, he was elected Minister General of his order in 1247, and as such endeavoured to restore its asceticism and discipline to the original standards of St. *Francis. In pursuit of this aim he carried out visitations throughout Europe, journeying to France, England, Spain and Greece, and working, but without success, for the reunion of East and West. But his austerity and his leanings towards the teaching of *Joachim of Fiore and the attribution to him of the authorship of Gerard of Borgo San Donnino's 'Introductorius Evangelii Aeterni' made him many enemies, and he was accused of heresy in Rome. He resigned his office in 1257, suggesting St. *Bonaventure as his successor. On the examination of his doctrine he narrowly escaped condemnation and retired into the hermitage of Greccio, where for thirty-two years he led a solitary life of penance and contemplation. In 1289 he was sent once more on an embassy to Greece on matters of reunion, but died on his way at Camerino. Many miracles were reported at his tomb, but owing to his Joachimite views his cultus was not confirmed until 1777. Feast day, 20 Mar.

Lives by F. Camerini (Ravenna, 1730) and I. Affo (Parma, 1777). René de Nantes, 'Quelques pages d'histoire franciscaine' in Études franciscaines, xv (1906), VI, 'Le Bienheureux Jean de Parme', pp. 148–67, and VII, 'Le B. Jean de Parme et le joachimisme', pp. 277–300. Rosalind B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government. Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 255–72. E. d'Alençon, O.F.M., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 794–6, s.v. 'Jean de Parme'.

JOHN AND PAUL, Sts. Two Roman martyrs of the 4th cent. of whom virtually nothing further is known. Their 'Acta', whose trustworthiness, however, is doubtful, testify to their having served Constantia, daughter of the Emp. *Constantine, and been instrumental in the conversion to Christianity of one of his generals, and having been finally martyred by the Emp. *Julian for their firm adherence to the Christian faith. A cult of these saints existed from the latter half of the 4th cent. and their names stand in the Roman *Canon of the Mass. A Council at *Oxford in 1222 made the hearing of Mass by all the faithful of England obligatory on their feast day, 26 June.

V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Rome, 1938), pp. 131–7. P. F. de' Cavalieri, 'Note agiografiche' in S.T., ix (1902), pp. 53–65, and xxvii (1915), pp. 41–62. On the Acts, H. Grégoire–P. Orgels, 'S. Gallicanus, consul et martyr dans la passion des SS. Jean et Paul, et sa vision "constantinienne" du Crucifié' in Académie Royale de Belgique, Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, 5e Série, xlii (1956), pp. 125–46. G. De Sanctis, C.P., I santi Giovanni e Paolo. Martiri celimontani (1962; much criticized). For their reputed house on the Celian Hill, see also P. Germano di S. Stanislao, La casa celimontana dei SS. Martiri Giovanni e Paolo (1894), and A. Prandi, Il complesso monumentale della Basilica Celimontana dei SS. Giovanni e Paolo nuovamente restaurato per la munificenza del Cardinale Titolare Francesco Spellman (1953; Eng. tr., Rome, 1958), and bibl. to Rome, Churches of.

JOHN PAUL I and II. See p. 1519.

JOHN XII (d. 964), Pope from 955. Octavian was the son of the Roman patrician, Alberic the younger, who, after the death of his mother, Marozia, had become the absolute ruler of Rome and obliged the noblemen of the city to make his son Pope on the death of Agapetus II. Octavian, who took the name of John XII, thus became Pope at the early age of 18. His lack of experience and his addiction to pleasure and vice soon gave grave scandal to Christendom. The main cause of the troubles of his pontificate was his decision to call in Otto I from Germany to help him against the rulers of N. Italy, King Berengar II and his son Adalbert. Otto arrived in Rome in 962 and was crowned emperor by John, who sanctioned the erection of the archbishopric of Magdeburg and of the bishopric of Merseburg. In exchange the Emperor granted the famous 'Privilegium Ottonis', by which the Carolingian donations were considerably enlarged, but which also confirmed the rights of the Emperor in the Papal elections, conceded to Lothar I in 824. As soon as Otto had left Rome, the Pope, regretting his action, began to establish relations with Otto's enemy, Berengar, whose son he received with great honours at Rome. At the news of this treacherous move the Emperor, who returned in 963, received the support of a large section of the Roman population, and John and Adalbert were compelled to flee. In the same year Otto called a synod at Rome and caused the Pope to be deposed for immoral life, and a layman (Leo VIII) to be elected in his place, who received all the orders within two days. When Otto had left Rome, in 964, John returned and revenged himself on the Emperor's partisans. He then called a synod which deprived Leo and cancelled all actions of the previous synod. He died while Otto was on his way back, leaving the Papacy in a much enfeebled position to his successor, Benedict V.

'Epistolae et Privilegia' in J. P. Migne, PL, cxxxiii, 1013–41. P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, i (ed. 2 by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 463–7. L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 246–9. T. Sickel, Das Privilegium Otto I für die römische Kirche vom Jahre 962 (1883). W. Ullmann, 'The Origin of the Ottonianum' in Cambridge Historical Journal, xi (1953–1955), pp. 114–28. H. Zimmermann, 'Prozess und Absetzung Papst Johannes' XII. im Jahre 963. Quellen und Urteile' in Österreichisches Archiv für Kirchenrecht, xii (1961), pp. 207–30. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (ed. 2, 1904), pp. 337–51. Mann, iv (1910), pp. 241–72. Fliche–Martin, vii (1940), pp. 44–55, with reff. É. Amann in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 619–26, s.v. 'Jean XII', with further reff. to sources.

JOHN XXII (1249–1334), Pope from 1316. Jacques Duèse, a native of Cahors, after studying law at Paris and other French universities, was appointed Bp. of Fréjus by *Boniface VIII in 1300, Bp. of *Avignon in 1310, and Card. Bp. of Porto in 1312. Elected Pope in 1316 as the candidate of Robert of Anjou, he fixed his residence at Avignon, where he remained for the rest of his life. His reign was filled with theological and political conflicts. Almost at once he became involved in the difficulties threatening to split the *Franciscan Order (q.v.) and in 1317 dissolved the party of the *Spirituals, whose doctrines he denounced as heretical. He soon afterwards condemned the thesis, held by the bulk of the Franciscans, that the poverty of Christ and His Apostles was absolute. His decision won the assent of the majority of the order, but several of the more fanatical Franciscans fled to the Pope's enemy, Louis of Bavaria, who gave them his support. In 1324 the Pope declared Louis a heretic and the quarrel became the occasion of a violent literary feud in which *William of Occam and John of Jandun (d. 1328) took part. The literary conflict culminated in *Marsilius of Padua's 'Defensor Pacis' (anathematized by John in 1327), which upheld the absolute supremacy of the Emperor over the Pope, as one who may be elected, censured, and deposed at the Imperial pleasure. Louis then seized Rome, installed himself in the *Vatican, and set up as Antipope (1328) a Spiritual Franciscan under the name of Nicholas V, who, however, was forced to submit to John two years later; and Louis himself had eventually to take steps for reconciliation.

In his last years the Pope was involved in a theological dispute on the *Beatific Vision. He opposed the general opinion and denied its enjoyment to the souls of the blessed before the Last Judgement, a doctrine which met with strong resistance from the Masters of the University of Paris, and one which he professed himself ready to abandon if it were contrary to the faith of the Church. His successor, *Benedict XII, adopted the more generally accepted view, which he defined in 1336.

John was a capable administrator, enlarged and reorganized the Curia, put the Papal finances on a sound basis (though the new taxes were generally condemned at the time), and strengthened the hierarchy by founding new, and defining the frontiers of old, dioceses. The authorship of the famous prayer Anima Christi*, used and popularized by St. *Ignatius of Loyola, has been assigned to him.

S. Riezler (ed.), Vatikanische Akten zur deutschen Geschichte in der Zeit Kaiser Ludwigs des Bayern (1891), pp. 1–577. G. Mollat (ed.), Jean XXII (1316–1334). Lettres communes (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. 3, i bis, 16 vols. bound in 13; 1904–47). A. Coulon (ed.), Lettres secrètes et curiales du Pape Jean XXII . . . relatives à la France (ib., i; fascc. [to 1323]; 1906–13). A. Fayen (ed.), Lettres de Jean XXII [concerning the Low Countries] (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica publiés par l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, ii–iii; 1908–12). A. L. Tàutu (ed.), Acta Ioannis XXII (Pontificia Commissio ad redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, Series III, vol. vi, tom. 2; Rome, 1952). E. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat, iv (1916), pp. 107–94. V. Verlaque, Jean XXII, sa vie et ses œuvres d'après des documents inédits (1883). N. Valois, 'Jean Duèse, pape sous le nom de Jean XXII' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxiv (1914), pp. 391–630. W. Preger, 'Die Politik des Papstes Johann XXII in Bezug auf Italien und Deutschland' in Abh. (Bayr.), xvii (1886), pp. 499–593; H. Otto, 'Zur italienischen Politik Johanns XXII' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xiv (1911), pp. 140–265, with texts. A. Esch, Die Ehedispense Johanns XXII und ihre Beziehung zur Politik (Historische Studien, clxxxiii; 1929). G. Tabacco, La Casa di Francia nell'azione politica di Papa Giovanni XXII (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, fascc. 1–4; 1953). Pastor, i (1891), pp. 58–83. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (ed. 9 [1949]), pp. 38–67, with detailed bibl.; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 9–25. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 431–4, s.v.; G. Mollat in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 633–41, s.v. 'Jean XXII'; D. L. Douie in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 1014 f., s.v.

JOHN XXIII (1881–1963), Pope from 1958. Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli was born of humble parents at Sotto il Monte near Bergamo. After studying at the seminary at Bergamo, he went on to the Apollinare at Rome and was ordained priest in 1904. He served as secretary to Count Giacomo Radini-Tedeschi from the time of the latter's appointment as Bp. of Bergamo in 1905 until his death in 1914. In his spare time he engaged in study of the history of the diocese and published various brief monographs on the subject. His researches in the *Ambrosian Library brought him into touch with A. Ratti (later Pope *Pius XI).

After serving in the First World War, he was invited to Rome in 1921 for various administrative tasks. In 1925 he was appointed titular Abp. of Areopolis and Vicar Apostolic in Bulgaria. At Sofia he concerned himself particularly with the lot of the *Uniat Catholics. In 1934 he was translated to the titular see of Mesembria and appointed Apostolic Delegate in Turkey and Greece. In Turkey he established friendly relations with the Orthodox, visiting the Oecumenical Patriarch in 1939. In Greece his main success was in arranging relief supplies during the Second World War. In 1944, after the German retreat from France, he was sent as Papal Nuncio to Paris. Here he had to deal with a difficult situation in which the leaders of the Resistance Movement accused many of the French bps. of collaborating with the German army of occupation and tried to secure the removal of 33 of them. Roncalli investigated the charges and advised three bps. to resign. He pressed for humane treatment and immediate repatriation of German prisoners and won some concessions from the French government over the financing of Church schools. At this time he viewed with interest the development of the Worker Priests (restricted shortly after he left France). In 1953 he was created cardinal priest, destined for work in the *Curia. Later in the year he was offered the Patriarchate of Venice. In this position he completed the final volume of Gli atti della visita apostolica di S. Carlo Borromeo a Bergamo (1575) (5 vols., 1936–58), on which he had been working since 1909.

In 1958 Roncalli was elected Pope on the death of *Pius XII. Among his first actions was the creation of 23 new cardinals on 15 Dec. 1958. By 1962 he had increased the number to 87—the highest in history and with the greatest international representation. In 1959 he proposed to the cardinals three undertakings: a diocesan synod for Rome, an oecumenical council for the Church, and a revision of the code of canon law. The synod was held in 1960 and dealt with local problems of Rome. The council, which he decided to call the Second Vatican Council, is the most important event of his pontificate. He attributed the idea of convening such a council to a sudden inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and he gave to it the task of renewing the religious life of the Church and bringing up to date its teaching, discipline and organization, with the ultimate goal of the unity of all Christians. He opened and closed the first session of the Council, once intervening to give encouragement to those in favour of change. (For details of legislation, see Vatican Council, the Second.) Other notable reforms of his pontificate included permission for the use of the vernacular in the Byzantine liturgy of the *Melchites (5 April 1960), approval of a new code of rubrics for the *Missal and *Breviary (25 July 1960), the insertion of the name of St. *Joseph in the Canon of the Mass (13 Nov. 1962), and the creation of a pontifical commission to revise the code of canon law (28 March 1963). In the field of *ecumenical relations great advances were made. The Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity was established in 1960, and in the following year the RC Church was represented for the first time at an assembly of the *World Council of Churches. Non-RC observers were also invited to the Vatican Council and a general feeling grew that the RC Church was anxious to soften the obstacles to union with other Churches. The Pope's strong pastoral sense was exhibited in his visits to Roman prisons, as well as in his attempts to intervene in international affairs in the interests of peace. Procedures leading to his beatification have been instituted by Pope *Paul VI.

The official acts of his pontificate are pr. in A.A.S. Acta also ed. D. Bertetto, S.D.B. (Bibliotheca Theologica Salesiana, Series 2, i; Zürich, 1964). John XXIII's Souvenirs d'un nonce. Cahiers de France (1944–1953) ed. L. Capovilla (Rome, 1963; Eng. tr., 1966); Il giornale dell'anima e altri scritti di pietà ed. id. (ib., 1964; Eng. tr., 1965); Lettere ai familiari ed. id. (ib., 1968; Eng. tr., 1970). Quindici letture also ed. id. (ed. 3, 1970), with detailed chronology of his life and other material in appendices. His life of Radini-Tedeschi, orig. publd. at Bergamo in 1916, was tr. into Eng. from ed. 3, Rome, 1963, in 1970. The many studies include those of A. Hatch (London, 1963), E. Balducci (Florence, 1964; Eng. tr., 1965), E. E. Y. Hales (London, 1965), G. Lercaro–G. De Rosa (Rome, 1965; Eng. tr., 1967), and Meriol Trevor (London, 1967), with bibl. R. Trisco in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 1015–20, s.v.

JOHN XXIII (d. 1419), Antipope to both *Benedict XIII and Gregory XII from 1410 to 1415. Baldassare Cossa was the descendant of a noble but impoverished Neapolitan family. After a military career during which he is said to have engaged in piracy, he studied law at *Bologna and entered the service of the *Curia. Boniface IX, who appreciated his administrative and military talents, created him cardinal in 1402, and made him legate of Romandiola in 1403 and of Bologna in 1409. He was crowned Pope in 1410, but the validity of his election has been contested as being simoniacal. Of the three Popes then existing he had the largest number of supporters, esp. after Ladislaus of Naples, defeated at Roccasecca on 19 May 1411, transferred his allegiance from Gregory XII to John. In 1412 he called a synod at Rome which was very poorly attended and soon dissolved. In 1413, at the persuasion of King Sigismund, he convoked a General Council to end the W. Schism, which met at *Constance in 1414. Though he promised to cede his claims to the Papacy if Gregory XII and Benedict XIII would do the same, his sincerity was suspected, and he actually fled soon afterwards, so as to deprive the Council of its authority, under the pretext that he enjoyed no liberty. After being brought back by force he was imprisoned and deposed (1415), accepting his fate with unexpected meekness. He was held a prisoner in Germany for three years, but was set free in 1419, when he recognized *Martin V, who made him Card. Bp. of Tusculum. He died soon afterwards.

J. Schwerdfeger, Papst Johann XXIII und die Wahl Sigismunds zum römischen König, 1410 (1895). H. Blumenthal, 'Johann XXIII., seine Wahl und seine Persönlichkeit' in Z.K.G., xxi (1901), pp. 488–516. E. J. Kitts, Pope John the Twenty-Third and Master John Hus of Bohemia (1910). H. Finke, 'Zur Charakteristik des Hauptanklägers Johanns XXIII auf dem Konstanzer Konzil' in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, iii (S.T., xxxix; 1924), pp. 157–63. H. G. Peter, Die Informationen Papst Johanns XXIII. und dessen Flucht von Konstanz bis Schaffhausen (Freiburg, 1926). H. Diener, 'Rubrizellen zu Kanzleiregistern Johanns XXIII. und Martins V.' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xxxix (1959), pp. 117–72. Pastor, i (1891), pp. 191–9 and 212 f. G. Mollat in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 641–4, s.v. 'Jean XXIII', with reff. to sources; id., in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 1020 f. See also bibl. to Constance, Council of.

JOHN THE PRESBYTER. The term 'the Presbyter' ('elder', Gr. πρεσβύτερος) is applied to himself by the author of 2 and 3 Jn., while a 'John the Presbyter' is referred to by *Papias (*Eusebius, H.E. III., xxxix. 4); but the inference to be drawn from these data is disputed. (1) Some think that Papias's evidence points to the existence at *Ephesus of a second John besides the Apostle (the son of Zebedee), and ascribe to him the Canonical Gospel of Jn. and the three Johannine Epistles; this was the view of B. H. *Streeter, for whom 2 and 3 Jn. were 'the author's signature' to the Gospel and First Epistle. Among those who have held this view, some (J. H. *Bernard) identify the 'Beloved Disciple' of the Gospel (Jn. 13. 23, 20. 2, 21. 15–23) with the Apostle, others (W. *Sanday, H. B. *Swete) equate him with the Presbyter. (2) Acc. to others, e.g. J. *Moffatt, merely the last two Epistles and possibly the Apocalypse (Rev.) are to be attributed to 'John the Presbyter'; the ascription of 2 and 3 Jn. to him was a view already known to *Jerome (De vir. illustr. 9. 18). (3) But the common view of Christian tradition, viz. that 'the Presbyter' was a local designation for the Apostle himself (cf. e.g. 1 Pet. 5. 1, where St. *Peter is apparently termed a presbyter), still has its advocates.

See bibl. to John, Gospel of St.

JOHN OF RAGUSA (d. c. 1443), *Dominican theologian. John Stojković was a native of Ragusa who entered the Dominican Order at an early age, and in 1420 became master of theology at Paris. In 1422 he attended the Council of Pavia as legate of the university, and in 1431 *Martin V sent him to the Council of *Basle as Papal theologian, where he preached the opening sermon. In 1435 and 1437 he acted as legate to the Council of Constantinople in order to gain the Greeks for union with Rome, and the sending of an embassy by John Palaeologus was largely due to his influence. In 1438 he seems to have been made Bp. of Ardijsek and in 1440 cardinal by Felix V, though some authors assert that he remained faithful to the allegiance of *Eugenius IV, from whom he received the bishopric of Argos. Several of his writings have been printed, among them a treatise 'De Communione sub utraque Specie' against the *Hussites, a history of the Council of Basle and an unfinished history of the negotiations for union with the Greeks. While he was in Constantinople he assembled an important collection of Greek MSS., which were bequeathed to the Dominican house at Basle; MSS. from this collection were used as printer's copy by D. *Erasmus for the first edition of the NT, as well as providing readings for editions of various Fathers.

He is not to be confounded with Cardinal Giovanni Dominici (1356–1420), also known as 'John of Ragusa', who was appointed Abp. of Ragusa in 1407 and took a prominent part at the Council of *Constance (q.v.).

Several of his writings are contained in the Conciliar collections of Basle. Quétif–Échard, i, pp. 797–9. A. Krchňák, De Vita et operibus Ioannis de Ragusio (Lateranum, N.S., xxvi, 3–4; 1960). B. Duda, O.F.M., Joannis Stojković de Ragusio, O.P. (†1443) Doctrina de Cognoscibilitate Ecclesiae (Studia Antoniana, ix; 1958). R. W. Hunt, 'Greek Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library from the Collection of John Stojković of Ragusa' in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, vii (T.U., xcii; 1966), pp. 75–82, with reff.

JOHN OF RUYSBROECK. See Ruysbroeck, John of.

JOHN OF ST. THOMAS (1589–1644), Spanish *Dominican theologian. He was so named from his whole-hearted devotion to the teaching of St. *Thomas Aquinas. A native of Lisbon, he studied at Coimbra and Louvain, and in 1612 entered the Dominican Order at Madrid. For much of his life he taught at Alcalá. As against the modified Thomism of the *Jesuit theologians, F. de *Suarez and G. *Vázquez, John's system claimed to follow exactly the principles of St. Thomas in that it paid heed not only to Aquinas' conclusions, but also to the concatenation of the arguments by which he reached them. His chief work was his Cursus theologicus, a commentary on the 'Summa Theologica' of St. Thomas (1637–67), of which the first four vols. were published during his lifetime. His works in Spanish include Explicación de la doctrina cristiana y la obligación de los fieles en creer y obrar (1640) and Práctica y consideración para ayudar a bien morir (1645).

The Cursus Theologicus (except vol. v) was reissued at Lyons, 1663 (vol. viii, 1667); modern reissue by the *Benedictines of *Solesmes (Paris, 1931–46). Life by D. Ramírez, O.P., prefixed to vol. i of Cursus Theologicus; another by Échard to vol. viii of the same work (1667). T. Trapiello, O.P., Juan de Santo Tomás y sus obras (Oviedo, 1889). V. Beltrán de Heredia, 'La enseñanza de S. Tomás en la Universidad de Alcalá' in La Ciencia tomista, xiv (1916, ii), pp. 267–97. La Ciencia tomista, lxix (1945), is devoted to John of St. Thomas. J. Paquin, 'La Lumière de gloire selon Jean de Saint-Thomas' in Sciences Ecclésiastiques, iii (1950), pp. 5–66. J. M. Ramírez in D.T.C., viii (1924), cols. 803–8.

JOHN OF SALISBURY (c. 1115–80), medieval humanist. A native of *Salisbury, he studied at *Paris under *Abelard, *William of Conches and *Gilbert de la Porrée. Probably in 1148 he was attached to the household of *Theobald, Abp. of Canterbury, but not continuously until 1153–4. In the intervening period he was in the service of the Papal curia. On Theobald's death, he entered the service of his successor, Thomas *Becket. He supported Becket in his quarrel with Henry II; he was present at Canterbury on the fatal 29 Dec. 1170. In 1176 he became Bp. of Chartres, where he remained for the rest of his life.

His chief writings are the 'Policraticus, sive de nugis curialium et de vestigiis philosophorum', a survey of the courtly life of his time with a discussion of political problems, and the 'Metalogicon', a defence of the study of grammar, rhetoric and especially logic, originally directed against an adversary called 'Cornificius', who maintained a utilitarian view of liberal studies. Both these works were composed mainly during a period in which he fell into disfavour with Henry II and were finished in 1159. Many of his letters, some written in the name of the Abps. whom he served, survive and are an important historical source for the contest between Henry and Becket. He also wrote a historical work known as the 'Historia pontificalis' covering the years 1148–51, which deals chiefly with the affairs of the Papal court. John was an accomplished Latinist and man of letters, and one of the leaders of the literary renaissance of the 12th cent. He had an extensive knowledge of Latin classical writers on which he drew freely in his writings. One of the earliest medieval writers to be acquainted with the whole of *Aristotle's 'Organon', he was well versed in the logical questions which formed the staple of the discussion of philosophical problems in his day, but he cannot be termed a philosopher.

Works ed. by J. A. Giles (5 vols., Oxford, 1848); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cxcix, 1–1040. Crit. edd. of his Policraticus by C. C. J. *Webb (2 vols., Oxford, 1909); of his Metalogicon by C. C. J. Webb (ib., 1929); of his Historia Pontificalis by R. L. Poole (ib., 1927) and, with Eng. tr., by Marjorie Chibnall (London, 1956); and of his Letters, with Eng. tr., by W. J. Millor, S.J., H. E. Butler, and C. N. L. Brooke (2 vols., London and Oxford, 1955–79.). Eng. tr. of Policraticus IV–VI, with selections from VII and VIII, by J. Dickinson (New York, 1927), of id. I–III, with selections from VII and VIII, by J. B. Pike (Minneapolis, 1938); and of Metalogicon by D. D. McGarry (Berkeley–Los Angeles, 1955). C. C. J. Webb, John of Salisbury ('Great Medieval Churchmen', 1932). H. Liebeschütz, Medieval Humanism in the Life and Writings of John of Salisbury (Studies of the Warburg Institute, xvii; 1950). R. L. Poole, 'The Early Correspondence of John of Salisbury' in the Proceedings of the British Academy, xi (1924–5), pp. 27–53; M. A. Brown, O.S.F., 'John of Salisbury' in Franciscan Studies, xix (1959), pp. 241–97. R. L. Poole in D.N.B., xxix (1892), pp. 439–46; N. M. Haring in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 1071 f., s.v.

JOHN SCHOLASTICUS (d. 577), John III, Patriarch of *Constantinople from 565. In his early years he was a lawyer (σχολαστικός) at *Antioch, where he made a famous collection ('Synagoge') of Canons. Later, after he had become patriarch, he re-edited and enriched it from the 'Novellae' of *Justinian, and the work became one of the primary sources for subsequent E. canon law. He is also said to have written a 'Catechetical Oration' on the Trinity. He is not to be confounded with *John Climacus, also known as 'John Scholasticus', but is prob. to be identified with *John Malalas (q.v.).

'Synagoge', ed., with Lat. tr., by G. E. Heimbach, Ἀνέκδοτα, ii (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 202–34. Crit. ed. by V. N. Beneševič (Abh. (Bayr.), N.F., xiv, 1937). E. *Schwartz, Die Kanonessammlung von Johannes Scholastikos (Sb. (Bayr.), 1933, Hft. 6). P. van den Ven, 'L'Accession de Jean le Scolastique au siège patriarcal de Constantinople en 565' in Byzantion, xxxv (1965), pp. 320–52. On his identity with John Malalas, cf. J. Haury, 'Johannes Malalas identisch mit dem Patriarchen Johannes Scholastikos' in B.Z., ix (1900), pp. 337–56. Bardenhewer, v, p. 75 f. L. Petit in D.T.C., viii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 829–31, s.v. '77. Jean le Scolastique'; E. Herman in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 118–20, s.v. 'Jean III le Scolastique'.

JOHN THE SCOT. See Erigena.

JOHN OF WESEL (John Rucherat or Ruchrat) (c. 1400–81), ecclesiastical reformer. A native of Oberwesel am Rhein, he was educated at Erfurt university, where he was rector in 1456–7. Later he became canon at Worms (1460), professor at Basle (1461), and cathedral-preacher (Domprediger) at Worms (1463). Charged with preaching *Hussite doctrines on the Church and Sacraments, he was deposed by Reinhard, Bp. of Worms, from his preaching office in 1477 and in 1479 tried by the *Inquisition. After a public recantation at Worms on 21 Feb. 1479, he was sentenced to lifelong confinement in the *Augustinian monastery at Mainz, where he died some two years later. Several of his writings, many of them still unpublished, survive, among them a 'Commentary on the Sentences' (from his Erfurt period), a treatise against *Indulgences (1475), and a work on the *Immaculate Conception. He rejected *Original Sin, *Transubstantiation, compulsory fasting, Indulgences, and *Extreme Unction, and held that Scripture alone was the final authority in faith.

C. Ullmann, Johann Wesel, ein Vorgänger Luthers (1834). G. Shadé, Essai sur Jean de Wesel, précurseur de la Réformation (thesis, Strassburg, 1856). N. Paulus, 'Johann von Wesel über Busssacrament und Ablass' in Z.K.T., xxiv (1900), pp. 644–56; id., 'Die verloren geglaubten philosophischen Schriften des Johann von Wesel', ib., xxvii (1903), p. 601 f. G. Ritter, Studien zur Spätscholastik, iii, 'Neue Quellenstücke zur Theologie des Johann von Wesel' (Sb. (Heid.), Jahr. 1926/27, Abhandlung 5). O. Clemen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xxi (1908), pp. 127–31, s.v. 'Wesel, Johann von', with bibl.

JOHNSON, JOHN (1662–1725), English theologian. Educated at Magdalene and Corpus Christi colleges, Cambridge, he became Vicar of Boughton-under-the-Blean in 1687, of St. John's, Margate, in 1697, and of Cranbrook, Kent, in 1710. He wrote several works, the theology of which has considerable affinities with that of the *Nonjurors, among whom he had close personal friends. His best-known treatise is his Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar, Unvailed and Supported, in which the Nature of the Eucharist is explained according to the Sentiments of the Christian Church in the Four First Centuries (1714–18), in which he affirmed that the sacrifice is 'proper', 'expiatory', and 'propitiatory', and described the elements after the Consecration as the 'Sacramental' or 'Eucharistical body and blood' of the Lord. He held, however, that Christ was present in the elements in power and effect rather than in actuality. He also wrote The Propitiatory Oblation in the Holy Eucharist (1710).

The Unbloody Sacrifice was repr. in L.A.C.T., 1847. Posthumous Life by T. *Brett prefixed (pp. i–lvi) to three posthumous tracts by Johnson, viz. (1) 'The Primitive Communicant', (2) 'A Sermon . . . on Numb. xi. 29', and (3) 'An Explanation of Daniel's Prophecy of the LXX Weeks' (1748). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxx (1892), p. 906.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL (1709–84), author, lexicographer, and conversationalist. His religious beliefs and practice were of a standard rare in the C of E in the 18th cent. He ascribes his conversion as a young man to reading W. *Law's Serious Call, and, although unlike Law he was never a *Nonjuror, he was a strong *High Churchman, regular and sincere in his religious duties, and very generous to his friends and to the poor. He sometimes caused surprise by his marked tolerance of RCism, but, though he was on friendly terms with individuals, he was at no pains to conceal his dislike of Presbyterianism and Nonconformity.

Besides his famous Dictionary of the English Language (2 vols., 1755), his works include London. A Poem (1738); An Account of the Life of Mr. Richard Savage (1744), The Vanity of Human Wishes (1749); The Prince of Abissinia [Rasselas] (1759); A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland (1775), The Lives of the English Poets (3 vols., 1779–81), an edition of Shakespeare's plays (8 vols., 1765), the twice-weekly essays entitled the Rambler, which appeared from 1750 to 1752 and earned him the title of 'the Great Moralist', and the weekly essays called 'The Idler' which he wrote for the Universal Chronicle from 1758 to 1760. He also wrote many sermons for friends.

The American preacher and author, Samuel Johnson (1822–82), author of 'City of God, how broad and far' (E.H. 375) and other hymns, is not to be confused with the lexicographer.

Collected Works ed. by his friend and executor, Sir John Hawkins (11 vols., London, 1787), with life as vol. i; vols. xii and xiii, 'Debates in Parliament', 1787, and xiv and xv, 1788–9, by different edd. Crit. ed. of his works by E. L. McAdam, Jr., D. and Mary Hyde, and others (New Haven–London, 1958 ff.: 'The Yale Edition'). His prayers and private devotions were first publd. as Prayers and Meditations ed. G. Strahan (1785); often repr.; annotated by G. B. Hill in his Johnsonian Miscellanies, i (Oxford, 1897), pp. 1–124, and incl. in vol. i of the Yale ed. of Johnson's Works. A collection of his Sermons was publd. under the name of John Taylor (2 vols., 1788–9); fragments in M. Waingrow (ed.), The Correspondence and other papers of James Boswell relating to the making of the Life of Johnson (1969), pp. 609–22. The classic biography is that of James Boswell (2 vols., London, 1791; standard ed. by G. B. Hill (6 vols., London, 1887; revised by L. F. Powell, 6 vols., Oxford, 1934–50, with revisions to vols. v and vi, 1964). Biographical sources in A. L. Reade, Johnsonian Gleanings (11 vols., privately pr., 1909–52). Early life in J. L. Clifford, Young Samuel Johnson (1955). [R. Armitage,] Doctor Johnson, his religious life and death (1850). W. H. *Hutton, Burford Papers (1905), pp. 277–81 ('The Religion of Dr. Johnson'); W. T. Cairns, The Religion of Dr. Johnson and Other Essays (1946), pp. 1–23. M. J. Quinlan, Samuel Johnson. A Layman's Religion (Madison, Wis., 1964); C. F. Chapin, The Religious Thought of Samuel Johnson (Ann Arbor, 1968). R. Voitle, Samuel Johnson the Moralist (Cambridge, Mass., 1961); P. K. Alkon, Samuel Johnson and Moral Discipline ([Evanston], 1967); J. Gray, Johnson's Sermons. A Study (Oxford, 1972). The classic art of T.B. Macaulay, written for E.B. (ed. 7), is repr., with note by T. Seccombe, in E.B. (ed. 11), xv (1911), pp. 463–71. J. L. Clifford, Johnsonian Studies, 1887–1950. A Survey and Bibliography (1951).

JOINVILLE, JEAN DE (c. 1224–1319), French historian. Seneschal of Champagne from 1233, Joinville accompanied St. *Louis IX to Egypt and Palestine on the Sixth *Crusade in 1248. In this disastrous venture both he and the King were taken prisoners. In 1254 they returned to France, and Joinville spent most of the rest of his life upon his estates, except when in attendance at court. He declined to accompany the King on the Crusade of 1270. In 1282 he was one of the chief witnesses for Louis's canonization and was present at the exhumation of his body in 1298. During the next ten years he wrote his famous life of the King, Le Livre des saintes paroles et des bonnes actions de St. Louis, at the request of Queen Jeanne. It is the work of an old man, garrulous and discursive, but it gives a charming account of its hero, contains an illuminating picture of the Crusade of 1248, and is full of accurate observations. A 'Credo' which he drew up at Acre in 1252 while on the Crusade epitomizes his religious faith.

His History of St. Louis was first publd. at Poitiers in 1547; crit. ed. of his Works by N. de Wailly (Paris, 1867; revised, 1874); Eng. trr. of the History of St. Louis by Joan Evans (Newtown, 1937; London, 1938), with good introd., and by M. R. B. Shaw (Joinville & Villehardouin: Chronicles of the Crusades, Penguin Classics, 1963, pp. 163–353). L. J. Friedman, Text and Iconography for Joinville's Credo (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication lxviii; 1958), incl. text. A. Firmin-Didot, Études sur la vie et les travaux de Jean Sire de Joinville (2 pts., Paris, 1870); H. F. Delaborde, Jean de Joinville et les seigneurs de Joinville (1894). G. P[aris], 'Jean, Sire de Joinville' in Histoire littéraire de la France, xxxii (1898), pp. 291–459.

JONAH, Book of. This Book, which is included among the twelve *Minor Prophets, is unlike the other prophetical books in being almost entirely in narrative form. It describes Jehovah's call to Jonah to go to Nineveh, the Assyrian capital, to preach repentance, his disobedience, his attempted escape by sea to Tarshish, his punishment of being thrown overboard and swallowed by a great fish, his deliverance after three days and nights, and the final success of his mission (chs.

1, 3, 4). The psalm in ch. 2 is generally held by modern critics to be independent of the rest of the Book. The aim of the Book is primarily didactic, seeking to stress God's care for Gentiles and Jews alike. Considerations of language, style, and theology have led recent scholars to assign the Book to the post-exilic period and to hold that it belongs to a time when *Judaism was in danger of becoming narrowly exclusive. In the Gospels the Lord refers more than once to the 'sign of Jonah' (Mt. 12. 39, 16. 4, Lk. 11. 29), which is interpreted in Mt. 12. 40 as a prophecy of his resurrection.

Commentaries by T. T. Perowne (Camb. Bib., AV; 1878), J. A. Bewer (I.C.C. on Hag., Zech., Mal., and Jon., 1912; sep. pagination), G. W. Wade (West. Comm. on Mic., Obad., Joel, and Jon., 1925, pp. 120–46). H. Schmidt, Jona. Eine Untersuchung zur vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, ix; 1907). U. Steffen, Das Mysterium von Tod und Auferstehung. Formen und Wandlungen des Jona-Motivs (Göttingen [1963]). A. R. Johnson, 'Jonah II. 3–10: A Study in Cultic Phantasy' in H. H. Rowley (ed.), Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to Professor Theodore H. Robinson (1950), pp. 82–102. J. Howton, O.S.B., 'The Sign of Jonah' in Scottish Journal of Theology, xv (1962), pp. 288–304. J. Jeremias in T.W.B., iii (1938), pp. 410–13, s.v. Ἰωνᾶς. A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1104–31. Further commentaries under Minor Prophets.

JONAS, JUSTUS (1493–1555), orig. 'Jodocus Koch', German reformer. Educated at the universities of Erfurt and *Wittenberg, in 1518 he was appointed professor of law at Erfurt and canon of the church of St. Severus. In 1519 he was elected rector of the university, where he introduced Greek and Hebrew into the curriculum. A great admirer of D. *Erasmus and M. *Luther, he accompanied the latter to *Worms in 1521. The Elector of Saxony then appointed him professor of canon law at Wittenberg, and henceforward Jonas took a prominent part in the Protestant cause, notably at the *Marburg Conference (1529), the Diet of *Augsburg (1530), and in reform at Halle (1541). His greatest service to the Reformation Movement was his translation of the writings of Luther and *Melanchthon from German into Latin and the other way round. In 1546 he preached Luther's funeral sermon. After the outbreak of the Schmalkaldic war he was for a time a fugitive, but in 1553 was appointed superintendent at Eisfeld, where he remained till his death.

Briefwechsel, ed. G. Kawerau (2 vols., Halle, 1884–5); supplement by W. Delius in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, xlii (1951), pp. 136–45. Id., Justus Jonas (Gütersloh, 1952). M. E. Lehmann, Justus Jonas, loyal reformer (Minneapolis, 1963). P. Kalkoff, Humanismus und Reformation in Erfurt (1926). G. Kawerau in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1901), pp. 341–6. Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 391 f. (Nos. 9436–53).

JONES, GRIFFITH (1683–1761), the founder of the Welsh circulating schools. Of Nonconformist parentage, he was received into the C of E, ordained in 1708, and became rector of Llanddowror in 1716. He set himself to further social and religious reforms and to this end made successful preaching tours. In 1730 he began to found his 'circulating schools' for adults and children, with travelling teachers who instructed their pupils in reading the Welsh Bible. Largely through help from England, e.g. from the *S.P.C.K., the scheme rapidly developed, so that at his death over 3,000 of these greatly valued institutions were in existence. Jones published annually Welsh Piety, an account of the work and progress of his schools. He was also the author of a large number of writings in Welsh.

Lives by David Jones, Vicar of Penmaenmawr (1902), David Ambrose Jones (in Welsh, 1923), R. T. Jenkins (1930), F. A. Cavenagh (Univ. of Wales Press Board, 1930), and Evan John Davies (1930). T. Kelly, Griffith Jones, Llanddowror. Pioneer in Adult Education (1950). R. Williams in D.N.B., xxx (1892), p. 102 f., s.v.

JONES, INIGO (1573–1652), English architect. He was the son of a cloth-worker. During the last years of the 16th cent. he visited Italy, where he was deeply impressed by A. Palladio. In 1605 he was appointed architect to the Queen (Anne), and in 1612 he went to Italy again, making a long stay at Vicenza. After his return to England in 1614, he was appointed surveyor general of the royal buildings by *James I, and later served on the commission for the restoration of old *St. Paul's. Under *Charles I he was also employed as a designer of masques, and as such had frequent disputes with Ben Jonson. Despite the influence of Palladio, Inigo Jones preserved his originality and his love of simplicity and spaciousness which made him an inspirer of generations of English architects. He was hampered, however, in the full development of his powers by the unsettled political conditions, which hindered the carrying-out of great designs. Among his best-known ecclesiastical works are Lincoln's Inn Chapel (1617–23) and St. Paul's, Covent Garden (1631–8, rebuilt to his design in 1795). It is uncertain whether the porch of St. Mary the Virgin, *Oxford, is rightly attributed to him. A fine collection of his drawings is preserved at Worcester College, Oxford.

Inigo Jones. A Life of the Architect by P. Cunningham. . . . Remarks on Some of his Sketches for Masks and Dramas by J. R. Planché . . . (Shakespeare Society; 1848), Life, pp. 1–51. S. C. Ramsey, Inigo Jones (1924); J. A. Gotch, Inigo Jones (1928); J. Lees-Milne, The Age of Inigo Jones (1953); J. Summerson, Inigo Jones (Harmondsworth, 1966). W. J. Loftie, Inigo Jones and Wren, or the Rise and Decline of Modern Architecture in England (1893), ch. v, pp. 109–47. D.N.B., xxx (1892), pp. 111–19.

JONES, RUFUS MATTHEW (1863–1948), American *Quaker. Educated at Haverford College and in Europe, he was principal of Oak Grove Seminary from 1889 to 1893 and professor of philosophy at Haverford College from 1904 to 1934. Among his many works are: A Dynamic Faith (1901), Social Law in the Spiritual World (1904), Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), Spiritual Reformers in the 16th and 17th Centuries (1914), The Later Periods of Quakerism (1921), The Faith and Practice of the Quakers (1927), New Studies in Mystical Religion (1927), George Fox (1930), and The Testimony of the Soul (1936).

H. E. *Fosdick (ed.), Rufus Jones Speaks to Our Times. An Anthology (New York, 1951; London, 1953). H. H. Brinton (ed.), Children of Light. In Honor of Rufus M. Jones (New York, 1938), with introd. by H. H. Brinton, pp. ix–xii, and list of Jones's Works, pp. 407–11. Elizabeth G. Vining, Friend of Life. The Biography of Rufus M. Jones (Philadelphia, 1958; London, 1959).

JONES, WILLIAM, 'of Nayland' (1726–1800), Anglican divine. A native of Lowick in Northants, he was educated at Charterhouse and at University College, Oxford, where with his friend G. *Horne he studied the writings of J. *Hutchinson. Having been ordained in 1751 he held several curacies, and became rector of Pluckley, Kent, in 1765. In 1777 he accepted the perpetual curacy of Nayland, Suffolk, whence his traditional epithet. He endeavoured to keep alive the High Church traditions of the *Nonjurors. His best-known work, The Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity (1756), sought to prove from Scriptural texts that the Trinitarian dogma is contained in the Bible. In his later work on the same subject, A Short Way to Truth (1792), he attempts to find arguments for the doctrine of the Trinity in nature, e.g. in the three primary colours, the three dimensions, and other groups of three. In 1792 he assisted in the formation of a 'Society for the Reformation of Principles', designed to counteract the influence of the French Revolution. His sound and solid piety finds expression in The Scholar armed against the Errors of the Time (1792).

The Theological, Philosophical and Miscellaneous Works of the Rev. William Jones [ed. W. Stevens] (12 vols., London, 1801), with short account of his life and writings by the editor, i, pp. l–lv. Further Sermons (Sermons on Various Subjects and Occasions), ed. W. H. Walker [grandson] (2 vols., London, 1830). W. H. Teale, Lives of English Divines (1866), pp. 345–419. J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxx (1892), p. 177 f.; S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H., p. 303.

JORDAN, River. Formed from the waters of four streams which converge in the upper part of the plain of Lake Huleh, the Jordan expands into Lake Huleh (poss. the 'Waters of Merom' of Josh. 11. 5), flows through a narrow gorge and then forms a delta at the head of the Sea of *Galilee (q.v.). Emerging from the south of the lake, it meanders for 200 miles before it eventually enters the *Dead Sea (65 miles distant). The fault which contains it extends from northern Syria to Ezion-geber on the eastern arm of the *Red Sea.

Flowing through a steep infertile valley in the centre of Palestine, the Jordan was a natural barrier between the settled and the nomadic population. By their passage of the Jordan, when its waters were miraculously divided, the *Hebrews first entered the Promised Land (Josh. 3. 16); it was the scene of Elijah's ascent to Heaven (2 Kgs. 2. 11); in its waters Naaman the Syrian was cleansed (2 Kgs. 5. 14) after he had contrasted it unfavourably with the rivers of his own land. In NT times St. *John the Baptist preached on its banks and the Lord Himself was among those baptized in its waters (Mt. 3. 13). From these associations it became an emblem of the achievement of purity (esp. in baptism) and of man's last hindrance to his final blessedness.

W. Libbey–F. E. Hoskins, The Jordan Valley and Petra (2 vols., 1905); N. Glueck, The River Jordan (Philadelphia–London, 1946; revised ed., New York–London, 1968). M. *Noth, 'Der Jordan in der alten Geschichte Palästinas' in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins, lxxii (1956), pp. 123–48. G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (ed. 25, 1931), pp. 405–96. F. M. Abel, O.P., Géographie de la Palestine, i (1933), pp. 161–78.

JOSAPHAT, St., also 'Joasaph'. In medieval legend, the son of an Indian king, Abenner, who was converted to Christianity by the hermit Barlaam. The name 'Josaphat' appears to be a corruption of 'Bodisatva' (Bodhisattva), a title of the Buddha. He is commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 27 Nov. See also Barlaam and Joasaph, Sts.

JOSAPHAT, St. (1580 or 1584–1623), Abp. of Polotsk, the first saint of the E. Church to be formally canonized after process in the Congregation of *Rites, in 1867. John Kunsevich became a monk at Vilna in 1604. In 1617 he was consecrated Bp. of Vitebsk with right of succession to Polotsk, to which he succeeded a few months later. He did much to restore the ecclesiastical life of the eparchy, in which there was still much unrest following the Union of *Brest-Litovsk. He was killed by a rival faction. Feast day, now 12 Nov.

Life by A. Guépin, O.S.B. (2 vols. Paris, 1874).

JOSEPH, St., the spouse of the BVM. He figures prominently in the two Infancy narratives of the Gospels—in Mt. 1–2 and to a less extent in Lk. 1–2. Both state that Mary was 'betrothed' to him at the time of the Lord's birth, but both emphasize her virginity. He was a pious Jew of Davidic descent (Mt. 1. 19 f., Lk. 2. 4) but of humble situation, and acc. to Mt. 13. 55 a carpenter (τέκτων). Christ grew up in his household at Nazareth for at least 12 years (Lk. 2. 42, 51). Afterwards Joseph is mentioned only once by name in the NT (Lk. 4. 22; cf. Mt. 13. 55, Mk. 6. 3), but he is often referred to in later traditions. In the 'Protevangelium of *James' he is said to have been very old at the time of his marriage to Mary; and as a pattern of holiness he is the subject of various legends. The special veneration of St. Joseph seems to have originated in the E., where the apocryphal 'History of Joseph the Carpenter' (4th–7th cents.) enjoyed considerable popularity. It developed comparatively late in the W. Church, though a commemoration is mentioned in the Irish Félire of Oengus, assigned to the 9th cent. Among the earliest promoters of his cult are St. *Bernardino of Siena and John *Gerson in the 15th cent., who laid its theological foundations by drawing out the implications of his office as foster-father of Jesus, and whose teaching found liturgical expression in the introduction of his feast (19 Mar.) into the Roman Calendar in 1479. The devotion was popularized esp. by St. *Teresa and St. *Francis of Sales. In 1714 *Clement XI composed a special office for his feast, and in 1729 *Benedict XIII inserted his name in the Litany of the Saints. He was declared 'Patron of the Universal Church' by *Pius IX in 1870, when his principal feast (apart from 19 Mar.) became his 'Patronage', since 1914 celebrated on the 3rd Wednesday after Easter. This feast was suppressed in 1955, when the feast of St. Joseph the Worker on 1 May was promulgated by *Pius XII. In 1969 this latter observance ceased to be obligatory. His pre-eminent sanctity, which places him next to the BVM among the saints, was confirmed by *Leo XIII in his encyclical 'Quanquam pluries' of 1889. In 1962 the name of St. Joseph was added to the list of saints in the *Communicantes in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. St. Joseph is invoked as the patron of a good death; the month of March and each Wednesday are dedicated to him. He is usually represented with the Child Jesus and lily or staff. Feast day in E., the first Sunday after Christmas.

A. H. Lépicier, Tractatus de S. Joseph (Paris [1908]). C. A., 'Le Développement historique du culte de S. Joseph' in R. Bén., xiv (1897), pp. 104–14, 145–55, and 203–9. J. Seitz, Die Verehrung des hl. Joseph in ihrer geschichtlichen

Entwickelung bis zum Konzil von Trient (1908). U. Holzmeister, S.J., De Sancto Ioseph Quaestiones Biblicae (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici; Rome, 1945). F. L. Filas, S.J., The Man nearest to Christ. Nature and Historic Development of the Devotion to St. Joseph (Milwaukee, 1944; London, 1947), with Eng. tr. of principal papal docc. to date. B. Llamera, O.P., Teología de San José (1953; Eng. tr., 1962). A. Michel in D.T.C., viii (1924), cols. 1510–21, s.v., with bibl.

JOSEPH OF ARIMATHAEA, St. The 'councillor' (βουλευτής, Lk. 23. 50) who after the Crucifixion requested from Pilate the body of Christ and gave it burial the same day (Mt. 27. 60, Mk. 15. 46, Lk. 23. 53; cf. Jn. 19. 42. &c.). He is described as a 'good and a just man' (ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς καὶ δίκαιος; Lk. 23. 50) and as a disciple, 'but secretly for fear of the Jews' (Jn. 19. 38). Acc. to the apocryphal 'Gospel of *Nicodemus' he played an important part in the foundation of the first Christian community at Lydda. In the 'De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesiae' (c. 1130) of *William of Malmesbury occurs the earliest mention of the story that St. Joseph came to England with the Holy Grail and built the first church in the country at *Glastonbury, but the passage relating this incident was added to the book at least a century later. Feast day in E., and the American BCP (1979), 31 July; in W., 17 Mar.

E. von Dobschütz, 'Joseph von Arimathia' in Z.K.G., xxiii (1902), pp. 1–17; T. Kluge, 'Die apokryphe Erzählung des Joseph von Aramathäa über den Bau der ersten christlichen Kirche in Lydda' in Oriens Christianus, N.S., iv (1914), pp. 24–38. For works on the legend connecting St. Joseph with Glastonbury, see bibl. to Glastonbury.

JOSEPH CALASANCTIUS, St. (1556–1648), in religion 'a Matre Dei', founder of the *Piarists (q.v.). The son of Don Pedro Calasanza and Donna Maria Gastonia, he was born near Petralta de la Sal in Aragon. He studied in several Spanish universities including Valencia and Alcalá and, renouncing marriage, was ordained priest in 1583 by the Bp. of Urgel. After holding administrative appointments in Spain, he went to Rome in 1592, where he was patronized by the *Colonna family. Here he became very active in good works, and after a time interested himself esp. in the education of homeless and neglected children. Under his influence the first free school was established at Rome in Nov. 1597. To give permanence and inspiration to the work, which grew rapidly, he established the Piarist Order in a house at S. Andrea della Valle in 1602. The work was transferred in 1612 to the Torres Palace, adjoining S. Pantaleone, where Joseph spent the rest of his life. He was accused to the Holy Office by rival influences in his institute, being at one stage arrested and saved from imprisonment only by the intervention of Card. Cesarini. It was not until 1645 that his authority in the institute was restored. He was beatified in 1748 and canonized in 1767. Feast day, 25 (formerly 27) Aug.

Letters ed. L. Picanyol, Piarist (9 vols., Rome, 1950–6), with introd. in vol. i, pp. ix–xliv. The chief source is the material submitted for his beatification and canonization. Lives by V. Talenti (Rome, 1753; repr. Florence, 1917), U. Tosetti (Rome, 1767; also later edd.), J. Timon-David (2 vols., Marseilles, 1884), W. E. Hubert (Mainz, 1886), Josef Calasanz Heidenreich (Vienna, 1907), G. Giovannozzi (Florence, 1930), and Calasanz Bau (Madrid, 1949, and a posthumously publd. study, Salamanca, [1967]). There was also a special number of Revista Calasancia, iii, No. 12 (Madrid, 1957) to mark the 4th centenary of his birth, with bibl., pp. 695–721. In English there is a trans. of an Ital. life in the series, 'The Saints and Servants of God', ed. F. W. *Faber, 1850. See also bibl. to Piarists.

JOSEPH OF CUPERTINO, St. (1603–63). Joseph Desa was the son of a poor carpenter at Cupertino, in the kingdom of Naples, and very backward as a youth. After being refused admission by the Conventual *Friars Minor because of his ignorance and being dismissed by the *Capuchins on account of his awkwardness, he at last succeeded in being employed as a stable-boy at the Franciscan convent of La Grotella, nr. Cupertino. He became a choir religious in 1625 and was ordained priest in 1628. His subsequent life is said to have been a series of miracles and ecstasies, remarkable for the supposedly well-authenticated phenomena of levitation accompanying them. Through the disturbance they caused, Joseph was not allowed for 35 years to take part in the community duties such as choir or the common meals in the refectory, and was even denounced to the *Inquisition. From 1653 the ecclesiastical authorities removed him from the curiosity of the people to out-of-the-way convents of the *Capuchins, and in 1657 to the Conventual house at Osimo, where he remained in strict seclusion for the rest of his life. He was also said to have had the gift of reading consciences. It is related that a meeting with him decided the conversion of the Lutheran duke, John Frederick of Brunswick, to the Catholic faith. He was canonized by *Clement XIII in 1767. Feast day, 18 Sept., suppressed 1969.

D. Bernino, Vita del Padre Fr. Giuseppe da Copertino (1722; Fr. tr., 1856); [A. Pastrovicchi, O.F.M.C.,] Compendio della vita, virtù e miracoli del B. Giuseppe da Copertino (1753; Eng. tr., 1918); Lat. tr. of Pastrovicchi, with full introd. and other material, in AA.SS., Sept. V (1755), pp. 992–1060. E. M. Franciosi, Vita di S. Giuseppe da Copertino (Recanati, 1925). G. Parisciani, O.F.M.C., San Giuseppe da Copertino (1603–1663) alla luce dei nuovi documenti (Osimo, Ancona [1964]), with extensive refl. F. Mershman in C.E., viii (1910), p. 520 f.

JOSEPH THE HYMNOGRAPHER, St. (c. 810–86), the most voluminous of the Greek hymn-writers. In 830 he left his native Sicily when invaded by the Arabs for the monastic life at Thessalonica. Some time later he went on to *Constantinople, which he left for *Rome during the *Iconoclastic persecution (841). Captured by pirates, he was for several years a slave in Crete, but eventually escaped and c. 850 established a monastery at Constantinople. He suffered a further exile in the Chersonese for his defence of the Icons and yet another in the company of Photius. He is reputed to have composed 1,000 canons, over 200 being contained in the Menaion under the acrostic of his name. He also gave the final form to the Parakletike*. He has often been confused with Joseph of Thessalonica (also 'Joseph of the Studium'), the brother of *Theodore Studites. Feast day in the E. Church, 3 Apr.

Text of canons in J. P. Migne, PG, cv. 983–1426, with introds. and Gk. life by John the Deacon, cols. 925–82; cf. also Anal. Boll., lxv (1947), pp. 134–8. AA.SS., Apr. I (1675), pp. 266–76, and Bollettino della Badia greca di Grottaferrata, xi (1948), pp. 87–98, 177–92. C. van de Vorst, 'Note sur St. Joseph l'Hymnographe' in Anal. Boll., xxxviii (1920), pp. 148–54. Maria E. Colonna, 'Biografie di Giuseppe Innografo' in Università di Napoli, Annali della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, iii (for 1953; 1954), pp. 105–12.

JOSEPH OF VOLOKOLAMSK, St. (1439/40–1515), Russian saint and monastic founder. After some years of monastic life he instituted a strict reform and founded the celebrated monastery of Volokolamsk, not far from Moscow. Unlike *Nil Sorsky, he welcomed gifts of money and land, and created a large community with a rigorous life of obedience, work and lengthy liturgical services. He aimed at educating 'learned monks' for high office in the Church, and his followers collaborated in the 16th cent. expansion of the Muscovite state, founding urban monasteries and making possible the later subservience of monks to government. His activist, rigorous teaching won the day for a time against the contemplative ideal of Sorsky.

Life and Rule in Velikiya Minei Četii, September vol. (St. Petersburg, 1868), cols. 453–615 [in Russian]. I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum. Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das Östliche Christentum, x–xi; Würzburg, 1953), pp. 101–6.

JOSEPHINISM. The principles which actuated the ecclesiastical reforms of Joseph II, Holy Roman Emperor from 1765 to 1790. They included religious toleration, the right of the state to regulate ecclesiastical affairs and to reform ecclesiastical abuses, irrespective of Rome, and the restriction of the rights and powers of the Pope within spiritual limits, as laid down by *Febronius. They issued in the Toleration Edict of 1781, which granted all religious bodies the right to practise their beliefs unhindered, the suppression of certain religious orders, the transference of monasteries from the jurisdiction of the Pope to that of the diocesan bishops, and the requirement of civil consent for the publication of any Papal bull, brief or other document. A similar policy was introduced into Tuscany, under the direction of his brother Leopold, the Grand Duke, who was assisted by Scipio de' *Ricci, Bp. of Pistoia. Josephinism completely collapsed with the Emperor's death.

Docc. in F. Maass, Der Josephinismus (Fontes rerum Austriacarum, Abt. II, lxxi–lxxv; 1951–61). There is an immense lit. Modern works include F. Valjavec, Der Josephinismus. Zur geistigen Entwicklung Österreichs im achtzehnten und neunzehnten Jahrhundert (ed. 2, Munich, 1945); E. Winter, Der Josefinismus. Die Geschichte des österreichischen Reformkatholizismus, 1740–1848 (1962); F. Maass, Der Frühjosephinismus (Vienna, etc., 1969). Studies in English include S. K. Padover, The Revolutionary Emperor Joseph II (1934; ed. 2, 1967), and Sr. Mary C. Goodwin, The Papal Conflict with Josephinism (New York, 1938). G. Mollat in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1543–7; F. Maass in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 1137–9; id. in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 1118 f., all with bibl. See also bibl. to Febronianism.

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS (c. 37 – c. 100), Jewish historian. He was a native of Palestine of priestly descent who received a thorough education based on study of the Jewish Law. Having lived for three years in the desert as the disciple of the hermit Bannos, he became a *Pharisee. In 64 he went to Rome to plead for the release of some of his fellow-Jews, and after enlisting the sympathies of the Emp. *Nero's wife, Poppea, returned to Palestine. In 66 he took a leading part in the Jewish war. In 67 he was besieged in Jotopata, but escaped death and was taken prisoner by Vespasian, whose favour he won by prophesying that he would become emperor. On the fulfilment of the prophecy in 69 Josephus was set at liberty and took the name of 'Flavius'. During the siege of *Jerusalem (70) he acted as interpreter to Titus, with whom he returned to Rome, as his surrender had earned him the hostility of the Jews. In Rome he was highly honoured by Vespasian as well as by his successors, Titus and *Domitian, and received the Roman citizenship and a pension which enabled him to devote himself entirely to literary work. In 77–8 he published his 'Jewish War' (Περὶ τοῦ Ἰουδαϊκοῦ πολέμου), probably written originally in Aramaic. It opens with an historical summary of the events from the time of Antiochus Epiphanes to the outbreak of the war. The latter part is largely an eye-witness account, though supplemented by borrowings from other authors. Though the introduction promises an impartial treatment of the subject, the work is written from the standpoint of a Jew trying to gain the sympathy of the Roman public and therefore omits or minimizes all that might offend Roman susceptibilities, such as the activities of the *Zealots and the importance of the Messianic hope. He brought out c. 94 his second great work, the 'Antiquities of the Jews' (Ἰουδαϊκὴ Ἀρχαιολογία), the 20 books of which trace the history of the Jews from the creation of the world to the beginning of the Jewish war. Down to c. 400 B.C. Josephus mainly reproduces the Bible narratives; later he uses many other sources, among them Dionysius of Halicarnassus and Nicolaus of Damascus, as well as apocryphal books. The famous reference to Christ in XVIII. iii. 3, calling Him 'a wise man, if indeed one should call him a man', is in its present form not authentic. The most generally accepted opinion is that Josephus mentioned the Lord, as he refers to Him later on in a passage on St. James, but that the passage just referred to was interpolated by a Christian writer at an early date, certainly before the time of *Eusebius, who already knows it in its present form (H.E., I. xi. 7 f.). There are also two minor works extant, an autobiography and 'Contra Apionem', in the latter of which he tries to prove the unique validity of the Jewish conception of history.

The works of Josephus were highly appreciated by the Fathers, e.g. *Jerome, whom they furnished with a wealth of material for their apologetics.

Editio princeps of the Gk. text of his works, with Lat. tr. [ed. A. P. Arlenius], Basle, 1544. Best crit. ed. is that of B. Niese (6 vols. and index, Berlin, 1887–95); also ed. S. A. Naber (Teubner, 6 vols., 1888–96). Ed. based on Niese and Naber, with modern Eng. tr., by H. St. J. Thackeray and others (Loeb, 9 vols., 1926–65). Older Eng. tr. by W. *Whiston (2 vols., London, 1737) frequently repr.; revised by A. R. Shilleto, with topographical notes by C. W. Wilson (Bohn's Standard Library, 5 vols., 1889–90). Eng. tr. of Jewish War by G. A. Williamson (Penguin Classics, 1959). N. Bentwich, Josephus (Philadelphia, 1914). R. Laqueur, Der jüdische Historiker Flavius Josephus (1920). H. St. J. Thackeray, Josephus, the Man and the Historian (Hilda Stich Stoock Lectures; New York, 1929). R. J. H. Shutt, Studies in Josephus (1961). G. A. Williamson, The World of Josephus (1964). S. Zeitlin, Josephus on Jesus (Philadelphia, 1931). A. *Schlatter, Die Theologie des Judentums nach dem Bericht des Josephus (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, xxvi; 1932). B. Bienert, Der älteste nichtchristliche Jesusbericht: Josephus über Jesus (Theologische Arbeiten zur Bibel-, Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, ix; 1936). A. Pelletier, S.J., 'L'Originalité du témoignage de Flavius Josèphe sur Jésus' in Rech. S.R., lii (1964), pp. 177–203, with refs. to earlier discussions. Eng. tr. of the portion of the Slavonic text on St. *John the Baptist in F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. *Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, i (1920), pp. 433–5. On the relation of St. *Luke to Josephus see H. J. Cadbury and the editors, ib., ii (1922), pp. 355–8, and works there cited. H. St. J. Thackeray, A Lexicon to Josephus (Paris, 1930 ff.). K. H. Rengstorf (ed.), A Complete Concordance to Josephus (Leiden, 1968 ff.). H. St. J. Thackeray in H.D.B., Extra Vol. (1904), pp. 461–73.

JOSHUA, Book of. The first of the 'historical books' in the OT and, acc. to the Hebrew division, the first of the 'Former Prophets'. It traces the history of the Israelites from the death of *Moses to the death of his successor, Joshua, and gives an account of the entry into and conquest of Palestine, its partition among the twelve tribes, and Joshua's last speeches. Among the better-known incidents in the Book are the hiding of the spies in *Jericho by Rahab the harlot (2), the miraculous crossing of the *Jordan commemorated by the twelve stones representing the twelve tribes of Israel (3 f.), the Fall of Jericho (6), and the standing still of the sun on Gibeon (10). Chs. 12–21 record in detail the division of Palestine among the twelve tribes.

Though some of the sources of Joshua may date from the 9th cent. B.C. or even earlier, the Book prob. did not reach its present form before the 6th cent. or later. Many scholars have held that its compilers made use of the same set of literary sources which have been recognized in the *Pentateuch, and in consequence have classed Joshua with the five Books of the Law in what is termed the '*Hexateuch'. Other critics reckon Joshua as the second Book in the series Deuteronomy–II Kings known as the '*Deuteronomic History'. The Book affords an interesting example of the way in which the compilers' religious beliefs have influenced the historical record, e.g. in the description of the speedy and complete conquest of Canaan in the post-Exodus period which is at variance with the account at the beginning of the Book of *Judges.

Commentaries by H. Holzinger (K.H.C., Abt. vi; 1901), H. W. *Robinson (Cent. Bib. on Deut. and Jos., 1907, pp. 271–385), G. A. Cooke (Camb. Bib., RV, 1918), and M. *Noth, (H.A.T., Reihe 1, Bd. vii, 1938; ed. 2, 1953), H. W. Herrtzbeg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, ix, on Jos., Jgs. and Ruth, 1953; ed. 2, 1959, pp. 7–140), J. Gray (New Cent. Bib. on Jos., Jgs. and Ruth, 1967, pp. 1–200) and J. A. Soggin (Neuchâtel, 1970; Eng. tr., 1972). J. Garstang, Joshua–Judges (1931), pp. 3–260. Eissfeldt, pp. 248–57 and 747–9, with further bibl. P. Auvray, Cong. Orat., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1131–41.

JOVIAN (c. 332–64), Roman Emperor from June 363 to Feb. 364. He was born at Singidunum in Moesia. On the Emp. *Julian's fatal expedition against the Persians he was captain of his bodyguard; and when, after Julian's death (26 June 363), Sallust, the Prefect of the East, had declined to receive the purple at the hands of the army, Jovian was chosen. He was forced to conclude a humiliating peace with Sapor II, King of the Persians, abandoning Nisibis and the other territories conquered under *Diocletian in 298, and the Christian kingdom of *Armenia. In the theological disputes he supported orthodoxy and on his way back to the West he received St. *Athanasius, who presented a Confession of Faith at *Edessa and prob. accompanied the Emperor to *Antioch. Before reaching *Constantinople, Jovian died suddenly one night (17 Feb. 364) at Dadastana, apparently through overeating or suffocation. His support of orthodoxy made him for Catholics a welcome successor to Julian; and in *Syriac literature he even became the subject of a Christian romance.

The chief source is Ammianus Marcellinus, xxv. 5–10 Further information will be found in the Church historians, *Socrates (H.E., iii. 22–6), *Sozomen (H.E., vi. 3–6), and *Theodoret (H.E., iv. 1–4). J. *Wordsworth in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 461–5; O. Seeck in P.W., ix (pt. 2; 1916), cols. 2006–11; s.v. 'Jovianus'.

JOVINIAN (d. c. 405), an unorthodox monk, condemned by synods at Rome (under *Siricius) and at Milan (under St. *Ambrose in 393). He denied that virginity as such was a higher state than marriage, and that abstinence as such was better than thankful eating. He also attacked the tendency to associate differences of reward in heaven with different earthly states (virgins, widows, wives; monks, priests, laymen), and shared the disbelief of *Helvidius in the perpetual virginity of *Mary. *Jerome (Adversus Jovinianum, i–ii, A.D. 392) and *Augustine (in De bono conjugali and De sancta virginitate, A.D. 401) both wrote against him.

Jovinian's own writings are lost. W. Haller, Jovinianus (T.U., xvii, No. 2; 1897; a comprehensive study). F. Valli, Gioviniano. Esame delle fonti e dei frammenti (Pubblicazioni dell'Università di Urbino. Serie di Lettere e Filosofia, ii; 1953). J. Forget in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1577–1580; A. Amore in E.C., vi (1951), col. 646 f.

JOWETT, BENJAMIN (1817–93), Master of Balliol College, Oxford. Educated at St. Paul's School London, in 1836 Jowett entered Balliol, where he was elected a Fellow while still an undergraduate. He held a succession of college offices, finally becoming Master (1870). He was ordained priest in 1845. In 1855 he succeeded T. *Gaisford as Regius professor of Greek.

In strong contrast with his early colleague, W. G. *Ward, Jowett distrusted logic and, under the influence of Greek studies and German philosophy (esp. G. W. F. *Hegel), became a keen theological liberal. His theological views were first elaborated in his Commentaries on the Epp. of St. Paul (Thess., Gal., and Rom.; 2 vols., 1855). His exegesis may have wanted philological exactness, but the treatment was fresh and original. The work contained a personal and subjective exposition of the Atonement which he redrafted in a 2nd edition (1859) to meet objections, but without modifying it. His essay on 'The Interpretation of Scripture' in Essays and Reviews (1860, q.v.) was one of the most debated items in the book; and henceforth Jowett's orthodoxy remained under grave suspicion and he ceased to write on theological subjects. His most important work was his translation of *Plato (4 vols., 1871; ed. 3, 5 vols., 1892); this, together with his translation of *Aristotle's Politics (2 vols., 1885), made these works widely available to non-classical students. To the end of his life he continued to take an active part in academic affairs, instituting reforms in the interests of poorer students, and he secured for his college a unique place in the University.

Evelyn Abbott and L. Campbell, The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett (2 vols., 1897); L. A. Tollemache, Benjamin Jowett (1895); G. Faber, Jowett (1957; ed. 2, 1958). E. Abbott in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 49–56.

JOYFUL MYSTERIES, The Five. The first chaplet of the *Rosary (q.v.), consisting of (1) the *Annunciation, (2) the *Visitation, (3) the Nativity of Christ, (4) the *Presentation of Christ in the Temple, and (5) the Finding of the Child Jesus in the Temple.

JUBE (pron. as two syllables). The rood loft dividing the nave of a church from the choir.

The name is said to derive from the words 'Jube, domine, benedicere' ('Pray, sir, a blessing'), pronounced by the *deacon before the reading of the Gospel, which took place on the rood loft in medieval times.

JUBILATE (Lat., 'O be joyful'). The first word of Ps. 100, to which it thus gives the name. It is provided as an alternative to the *Benedictus at Morning Prayer in the BCP. The rubric requires its use only when the Benedictus occurs elsewhere in the service, though it is apparently permitted on other days. It was first inserted in 1552, probably owing to the dislike of the extreme Reformers for the traditional *canticles (so also Pss. 98 and 67 at Evening Prayer). The ASB provides it as an alternative to the *Venite.

JUBILATE SUNDAY. The third Sunday after *Easter, so called because the first words of the *Introit of the Latin Mass are Jubilate Deo, omnis terra (Ps. 66. 1; Vulg. Ps. 65. 1).

JUBILEE, Year of. (a) Acc. to the Jewish Law (Lev. 25), a year occurring once every fifty years, when Jewish slaves regained their freedom and land reverted to its former owners. (b) In the RC Church, a 'year of remission' or '*Holy Year' (q.v.) in which a special indulgence is granted to Catholics who visit *Rome and fulfil certain conditions.

(a) F. M. Lemoine, O.P., 'Le Jubilé dans la Bible' in Vie spirituelle, lxxxi (1949), pp. 262–88; G. Lambert, S.J., 'Jubilé hébreu et jubilé chrétien' in Nouvelle Revue Théologique, lxxii (1950), pp. 234–51. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, i (1958), pp. 267–70, with bibl. p. 338 f. (Eng. tr., ed. 2, 1965, pp. 175–7, with bibl. p. 532).

JUBILEES, Book of. An apocryphal Jewish work, also called 'The Little Genesis'. It purports to have been delivered by God to Moses on Mt. *Sinai. It reinterprets the contents of Gen. 1–Exod. 12, which are here arranged in forty-nine periods, each of forty-nine years' length, the whole forming a Jubilee of Jubilees (cf. Lev. 25. 8–13). Its purpose appears to be to show that the Law, with its prescriptions about feasts, the Sabbath, offerings, abstinence from blood and fornication (which for the writer includes intermarriage with the Gentiles), dated from patriarchal times. The original Hebrew text survives only in fragments found at *Qumran; until their discovery the work was known only from an Ethiopic translation of the whole and incomplete versions in Latin and Syriac. The fact that the surviving Hebrew fragments are from some ten different MSS. and that they were found in three different caves indicates that the Book enjoyed considerable popularity among the Qumran community; some scholars indeed have argued that it is the work of a member of that sect. The most probable date for its composition is c. 140 – 100 B.C.

Ethiopic text first publd. by A. *Dillmann (Kiel, 1859); Lat. fragments ed. A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, i (Milan, 1861), pp. 15–54; Syriac fragment, ii (ib., 1863), p. ix f. Crit. ed. of Ethiopic text, with other fragments, by R. H. *Charles (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Semitic Series, viii; Oxford, 1895); Eng. tr., with commentary and notes, by id. (London, 1902). Further Syriac fragments ed., with commentary, by E. Tisserant, in R. Bibl., xxx (1921), pp. 55–86 and 206–32. R. H. Charles in id. (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English, ii (1913), pp. 1–82, largely repr. from his vol. cited above. M. Testuz, Les Idées religieuses du Livre des Jubilés (1960), with bibl.; G. L. Davenport, The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees (Studia Post-Biblica, xx; Leiden, 1971). Eissfeldt, pp. 606–8, with further bibl.

JUDAEA. The region reoccupied by the Jews in 537 B.C. after the *Babylonian Captivity. In Christ's time it designated the most southern of the three districts, Galilee, Samaria, and Judaea, into which Palestine, west of the *Jordan, was divided; but in a broader sense it could be used to include the whole of Palestine (e.g. Lk. 23. 5, RV; 'Jewry', AV).

JUDAH, Tribe of. The most powerful of the twelve tribes of Israel. Possibly its earlier tribal history is represented in the story of Judah, the fourth son of Jacob (Israel) (Gen. 29. 35, and ch. 38). Already in the reigns of *David and *Solomon (c. 1000 B.C.) Judah was the predominant tribe. Afterwards, with Benjamin, it formed a separate kingdom which outlasted that of the northern tribes, and in general maintained a purer religious faith.

JUDAISM. The faith and practice of the Jewish people. Judaism shares with Christianity and Islam the belief in one universal God, conceived as personal, who is the Creator of the universe and the highest Source of values.

I. The words 'Jew' and 'Judaism', in their original Hebrew and Greek forms (Heb. Yehudi; Gk. 'Ιουδαῖος), are ultimately derived from the name of Judah, the Southern Kingdom in Palestine, which came to an end with the Babylonian Exile (586 B.C.). The changed circumstances of the Exile were the historical background of the rise of Judaism. Notably, they led to the redrafting of tradition and the transference of emphasis from cultus to teaching and ethics. These conditions also strongly influenced cosmology, angelology, and eschatology, with the subsequent contrast between the present and future 'ages'. In a wider sense, however, Judaism may be said to go back to the Patriarchs and their election very many centuries earlier. See also Israel.

II. The Jewish community in general may be characterized as follows:

(a) GEOGRAPHICALLY, by their centres of concentration which have lain in the Near East, Europe, and, esp. since the 19th cent., in America.

(b) POLITICALLY, by three States, viz., the Hebrew monarchy founded by Saul (c. 1025 B.C.) with a divided kingdom from *Solomon's death (c. 930 B.C.) until the Exile (586 B.C.), the rise of the *Hasmonaean rule (from 165 B.C.), and the State of Israel (from 1948).

(c) ECONOMICALLY, by their distribution along the trading centres and routes of the ancient and modern worlds.

(d) STATISTICALLY, by an expansion into millions at the beginning of the Christian era (7 per cent. of the Roman Empire, acc. to A. *Harnack), a reduction to c. 1½ millions by the end of the Middle Ages, and an increasing expansion with the emancipation (c. 13½ millions at present (c. 1970), of which 3½ million are in Europe and the U.S.S.R., nearly 7 million in America, and about 2½ million in Israel).

(e) LINGUISTICALLY, by the constantly revived use of the Biblical languages, *Hebrew and

*Aramaic; in addition the use of Greek and Arabic in the ancient and medieval, and *Yiddish, German, and English in the modern periods.

(f) JURIDICALLY, by the Ten *Commandments, the division into revealed and rational laws (with emphasis on assistance to the poor, orphan, and stranger), traditional methods of interpretation of law (*Hillel and *Shammai; schools of *Akiba and Ishmael; Palestinian, Babylonian, and European academies), the development of large law-codes, and a rich literature of case responsa.

(g) THEOLOGICALLY, by belief in a central revelation on Mt. *Sinai, ethical *Monotheism, God's thirteen qualities (Ex. 34. 6), the Covenant and the election of Israel, resurrection, and future Messianism as represented in written *Torah ('instruction'). Sacred and secular being undivided, there is no word for 'religion' in classical Hebrew (later dath, etc.). In character, Torah may be '*Halachah' (i.e. normative religious statute, e.g. that of R. Samuel, d. 254) or '*Haggadah' (i.e. exposition of non-legal matter).

(h) PHILOSOPHICALLY, by a triple set of influences, viz. in ancient times through Hellenism; in the Middle Ages through the Mu'tazilite Ḳalâm, *Neo-Platonism, *Aristotelianism; and lastly through modern, largely idealistic, philosophy. Outstanding thinkers have been: in the first period *Philo of Alexandria; in the second Seadiah ben Joseph (882–942), *Avicebron, Judah Halevi (c. 1085 – c. 1140), and M. *Maimonides; in the third B. de *Spinoza, M. Mendelssohn (1729–86), H. Cohen (1842–1918), L. Baeck (1873–1956), M. *Buber, and F. Rosenzweig (1886–1929).

(i) SOCIALLY, by several groups and schisms. Besides the *Samaritan schism, the principal early groupings were the *Sadducees (aristocratic minority, rationalist; acceptance of written Torah only), *Pharisees ('those who separate themselves', extending the revelation to oral Torah; progressive interpretation of tradition), *Essenes (monastic; common property; celibacy), the Damascus sect of the New Covenant (see Dead Sea Scrolls), and the *Karaïtes (since the 8th cent. Mikra (i.e. 'Scripture') only; stringent religious law, e.g. as to incest and the *Sabbath). Modern Rabbinic Judaism is divided into the 'priestly' group (S. R. Hirsch), Talmud- and Torah-centred orthodoxy, and the 19th–20th cent. 'historical', and in ritual 'progressive', Reform.

(j) LITURGICALLY, by the division of their rites into Palestinian (subsequently, e.g., Ashkenazi-Polish and Italian) and Babylonian (subsequently Sephardi), by the emphasis on the Sabbath for rest and joy, and by the close association of religious and national elements in the festivals.

Jewish influences on early Christian worship may include the recital of the *Lord's Prayer three times a day (Didache, viii. 3); the *Passover, *Kiddush or *Chaburah rites as influencing the *Eucharist; the 'Qedusha' as the prototype of the *Sanctus; and the use of Scripture-readings in worship. There are also the obvious festival correspondences: Sabbath/Sunday; Passover/Easter; Pentecost/Whitsuntide; three fasts after Nisan-Tishri/Embertide fasts; etc. Apart from Christianity, the Stoa, Gnosis, Islam, and Socialism have all been influenced by Judaism.

III. The sociological form of Jewish community life, particularly since the age of Roman legislation, has been that of loosely associated congregations (cf. St. *Paul's visits to those of Syria, Cyprus, Asia Minor, etc.). In Palestine these congregations centred round the Second *Temple, later round the patriarchal house. In the *Diaspora strictly organized communities, which were more or less autonomous, existed in Hellenistic Egypt, Mesopotamia, Spain, and Poland. Elsewhere there were individual overseers, e.g. in medieval England ('presbyteratus . . . judaeorum totius Angliae', 12th–13th cent.); the inscriptions of the Roman catacombs and Constantine's law for Cologne (321) show the kind of offices held in such congregations. Esp. since the Middle Ages, Jewish congregations have been mainly of an urban character. Apart from Jerusalem, the oldest extant Jewish communities are those of Rome (139 B.C.; Jewish workmen at the Colosseum), Athens (cf. Acts 17. 16 f.), Cologne (321), and Constantinople (under *Theodosius the Great); others include London (under William II, 1087–1100) and Vienna (regulations of Raffelstaetten, A.D. 906).

IV. The history of the Jews falls into three major periods: (a) Oriental (down to 12th cent. A.D.); (b) European (139 B.C. – A.D. 1492); and (c) Universal (1492 onwards).

(a) The first period may be divided (i) from the migrations of the Hebrews and the Patriarchs (2nd millennium B.C.) to the end of Persian rule in Judaea (332 B.C.). Its outstanding features are the Mosaic age with the Exodus from Egypt, the conquest of Canaan, the Solomonic Temple, classical Prophecy, the Assyrian exile (722), the Babylonian Exile (586–538), the Persian support for the restored community in Judah (Cyrus, 538, Artaxerxes I and *Nehemiah, 444), and the reforms of Josiah (622) before, and of *Ezra (457 or 397) and the sopherim after, the Babylonian Exile. (ii) From Alexander the Great to the Roman destruction of the Temple and Jerusalem (A.D. 70). It is marked by an autonomous high-priesthood carrying on from the Persians to the Greeks; Jewish Hellenism with the Septuagint, Philo, and *Josephus; the rise of the Hasmonaean and Herodian kingdoms; dependence on Rome (province from 63 B.C.); the Pharisaic movement, and a powerful Diaspora. (iii) A third, creative stage of Jewish history extends from the rise of the academy at *Jamnia under Johanan b. Zakkai (after A.D. 70) to the end of the Babylonian academies. Its main factors are the abortive *Bar-Cochba war (A.D. 132–5); the rise of the Palestinian patriarchate sponsoring works like the *Mishnah, Tannaitic Midrashim, the Palestinian *Talmud, and liturgical poetry (Kalir, Yannai, etc.). Within the transition from Parthian to Sassanid rule, and later to Islam, come the growing independence of the Babylonian Diaspora (after 200), with its exilarchs (worldly leaders, 2nd–9th cent.), gaonim (spiritual heads of the academies, c. 590 to the 13th cent., with authority as far as India and Arabia following Benjamin of Tudela, 12th cent.), and the Babylonian Talmud (fundamental for later Judaism up to the 19th cent.); finally the schism of the Karaïtes (revival in Czarist Russia; c. 6,000 in 1959).

(b) The European period reaches from the first dated testimony (edict of the Praetor Hispalus, 139 B.C.) to the end of Jewish community life in Spain and Portugal (1492 and 1497). Its landmarks are the rise of new centres in Spain, France, and Germany (in the 12th cent. 80–90 per cent still in the Near East); the protective legislation of Pope *Gregory the Great (c. 600; decrees 'sicut Judaeis'); the golden era in Spain; the institution of 'servi camerae imperialis' (since *Louis the Pious); the set-back through the *Crusades, the Black Death (1348–9), and the emigration movement to Eastern Europe. To this period belong the development of medieval philosophy and mysticism, the extensive commentation of the Bible, Talmud, Zohar, and vast legal codifications.

(c) The principal landmarks of the modern period appear at the death of Uriel da Costa (1640), the French revolution (1789, Mirabeau, etc.), and in the age of emancipation extending from Moses Mendelssohn (d. 1786) to the 'minority clauses' of the Versailles Treaty (1919), and in its final outcome to the establishment of the State of Israel (1948). Among the principal features of the period are the Eastern European Kahal ('community-organization' and Wa'ad, c. 1580–1761), the rise of Hasidism, the London Chief Rabbinate (since 1757–8), the French Consistoire (since 1808), and the gradual secularization and participation in European and American life and letters. The past century has seen the Romanoff repression since Czar Alexander III (1881), the rise of political Zionism (Balfour Declaration, 1917), the extermination of some six million Jews by the Nazis (1935–45), and the development of a flourishing secular Hebrew literature and the scientific New Learning (Wissenschaft des Judentums, orig. based on classical scholarship). Since the foundation of the State of Israel in 1948, its problems have dominated world Judaism. Massive immigration from nearly all parts of the world has created serious social difficulties within Israel, while the feeling of insecurity of a State bordered by hostile Arab countries, and the desire to incorporate the whole of Jerusalem, have been manifested in intensive military activity.

I. Epstein, The Jewish Way of Life (1946). Id., The Faith of Judaism (1954). L. Jacobs, Principles of the Jewish Faith (1964). L. Baeck, Das Wesen des Judentums (1905; Eng. tr. as The Essence of Judaism, 1936). Id., Wege im Judentum. Aufsätze und Reden (1933); id., Aus drei Jahrtausenden. Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen und Abhandlungen zur Geschichte des jüdischen Glaubens (1938). H. Graetz, Geschichte der Juden (11 vols., 1853–75, often revised by the author; Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1891–5). L. Finkelstein (ed.), The Jews. Their History, Culture and Religion (2 vols., New York, 1949; ed. 3, ib., 1960; London, 1961). S. W. Baron, A Social and Religious History of the Jews (3 vols., New York, 1937; ed. 2, on a larger scale, 1952 ff.). I. Epstein, Judaism. A Historical Presentation (Harmondsworth, 1959). G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era. The Age of the Tannaim (3 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1927–30). J. Bonsirven, S.J., Le Judaïsme palestinien au temps de Jésus Christ (Bibliothèque de Théologie Historique, 2 vols., 1935). C. Roth, A Short History of the Jewish People 1600 B.C.–A.D. 1935 (1936; enlarged ed., 1969), and other works of this author. S. Singer (ed.), The Authorized Daily Prayer Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire (1891); I. Abrahams, Companion to the preceding item (1922); new ed. of the Authorized Daily Prayer Book, with revised Eng. tr. (1962). Periodical Jewish publications include Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums (Dresden and other places, 83 vols., 1852–1939), Jewish Quarterly Review (Philadelphia, 1888 ff.), Revue des Études juives (Paris, 1880 ff.), Hebrew Union College Annual (Cincinnati, 1924 ff.) and Jewish Social Studies (New York, 1939 ff.); and for bibl., Kirjath Sepher (Jerusalem, 1924 ff.). The chief reference works are The Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer (12 vols., New York–London, 1901–6), the Encyclopædia Judaica, ed. J. Klatzkin and others (10 vols., Berlin, 1928–34; incomplete), R. J. Z. Werblowsky–G. Wigoder (edd.), The Encyclopedia of the Jewish Religion (Jerusalem, 1966; London, 1967), and C. Roth (ed.) Encyclopaedia Judaica (16 vols., Jerusalem [1972]). I. Abrahams in E.B. (ed. 11), xv (1911), pp. 371–410, s.v. 'Jews'; H. Loewe in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 581–609, s.v. 'Judaism'; J. Bonsirven, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1143–1285; R. J. Z. Werblowsky–N. de M. Bentwich in E.B. (1968 ed.), xiii, pp. 103–16, s.v.

JUDAIZERS. In the early Church a section of Jewish Christians who regarded the OT Levitical laws as still binding on all Christians. They tried to enforce on the faithful such practices as circumcision and the distinction between clean and unclean meats. Their initial success brought upon them the strong opposition of St. *Paul, much of whose writing was concerned with refuting their errors.

JUDAS ISCARIOT. The Apostle who betrayed Christ to the Jewish authorities (Mk. 14. 10 f. and 43 f., etc.). The Gospels leave his motive uncertain, as the hint given in Jn. 12. 6 is not supported by the other three. His suicide is recorded in three places—in Mt. 27. 3–5, in Acts 1. 16–20, and in *Papias—but the accounts differ in their details. He has been regarded with universal abhorrence in the Christian Church, though he was venerated in the *Gnostic sect of the *Cainites. If, as is usually thought, the epithet 'Iscariot' signifies 'man of Kerioth' (a place in S. Palestine), it would seem likely that Judas came from *Judaea, whereas nearly all the other Apostles were Galilaeans.

Besides commentaries on the Gospels, D. Haugg, Judas Iskarioth in den neutestamentlichen Berichten (1930). R. B. Halas, O.F.M., Judas Iscariot (Catholic University of America, Studies in Sacred Theology, xcvi; Washington, D.C., 1946). A. Spiteri, Die Frage der Judaskommunion neu untersucht (Theologische Studien der Oesterr. Leo-Gesellschaft, xxiii; 1918). C. C. Torrey, 'The Name "Iscariot" ' in H.T.R., xxxvi (1943), pp. 51–62; H. Ingholt, 'The Surname of Judas Iscariot' in Studia Orientalia Ioanni Pedersen Septuagenario . . . a collegis discipulis amicis dicata (Copenhagen, 1953), pp. 152–62. Note on Acts 1. 18 by A. D. Knox, 'The Death of Judas' in J.T.S., xxv (1924), p. 289 f.; K. Lake, 'The Death of Judas' in F. J. Foakes Jackson–K. Lake (edd.), The Beginnings of Christianity, v (1933), pp. 22–30; J. Herber, 'La Mort de Judas' in Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, cxxix (1945), pp. 47–56; P. Benoit, O.P. 'La Mort de Judas' in Synoptische Studien Alfred Wikenhauser zum siebzigsten Geburtstag am 22. Februar 1953 dargebracht (Munich [1954]), pp. 1–19, repr. in Exégèse et Théologie, i (1961), pp. 340–59. P. F. Baum, 'The Mediaeval Legend of Judas Iscariot' in Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, N.S., xxiv (1916), pp. 481–632, with extensive refft.

JUDAS MACCABAEUS (d. 161 B.C.), leader of the Jews in the revolt against the Syrians. The third son of the priest, Mattathias (d. 166), who nominated him to succeed him as captain of the hosts, he won a series of spectacular victories against the Syrians in the years 166–164. In 165 he purified the *Temple and restored its worship, and in 163, partly because of dynastic troubles of the Syrians, was able to obtain full religious liberty from *Antiochus IV, Epiphanes (173–162). After defeating the Idumaeans and the Ammonites, he eventually overcame the opposition of the Hellenizing party among the Jews in a battle near Beth-horon in 161. He asserted political independence by entering into negotiations with Rome to aid him against the Syrians. Although his mission was diplomatically successful, before the results were known he was defeated by the Syrian general, Bacchides, and killed in a battle near Eleasa. His career is recounted in the Books of *Maccabees (q.v.).

Monographs by C. R. Conder (London, 1879), H. Weiss (Freiburg i. Br., 1897), and A. M. Hyamson (London, 1935). [O.] Wolff in P.W., ix (pt. 2; 1916), cols. 2461–4, s.v. 'Judas Makkabaios'. See also works cited under Maccabees (family) and Maccabees, Books of.

JUDE, St., *Apostle. In the lists of the Apostles at Lk. 6. 16 and Acts 1. 13 he is referred to as 'Judas of James' and in Jn. 14. 22 as 'Judas not Iscariot'. (Many identify him with *Thaddaeus or Lebbaeus who is mentioned in the lists of Apostles at Mt. 10. 3 and Mk. 3. 18.) The description 'of James' in Lk. 6. 16 and Acts 1. 13 is most naturally interpreted as 'son of James' (RV), but the Apostle has generally been identified, at least in the W., with Jude the 'brother of *James' (Jude 1), one of the '*Brethren of the Lord', and the author of the Ep. of Jude (q.v.). The apocryphal 'Passion of *Simon and Jude' describes the preaching and martyrdom of the two Apostles in Persia, and in the W. Church the two saints are commemorated together. In modern times St. Jude has become a popular saint in the RC Church and is much invoked in circumstances of special difficulty. Feast day in E., 19 June; in W., with St. Simon, 28 Oct.

Jude's descendants are mentioned by *Eusebius, H.E., iii. 19 f. and 32, citing *Hegesippus. O. *Cullmann, 'Le Douzième Apôtre' in R.H.P.R., xlii (1962), pp. 133–40. On the Passion of St. Simon and St. Jude see R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, ii (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 142–200. J. van Hecke, S.J., in AA.SS., Oct. XII (1867), pp. 437–49. R. Sinker in D.C.A., i (1875), pp. 891–3, s.v. 'Jude the Apostle, St., Legend and Festival of'. See also introd. to commentaries on Jude, Epistle of, cited s.v., and bibl. to Brethren of the Lord.

JUDE, Epistle of St. One of the '*Catholic Epistles' of the NT. It purports to be written by 'Jude . . . brother of James', who is identified by *Origen, St. *Jerome, and others as the *Apostle, 'Judas of James', of Lk. 6. 16 and Acts 1. 13. The aim of the Epistle was to combat the spread of dangerous doctrines through false teachers 'having not the Spirit', whose immoral life it denounces. It was recognized as canonical by the *Muratorian Canon, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Tertullian, though *Eusebius puts it among the 'Antilegomena'. The doubts were due chiefly to vv. 9 and 14; the former seems to reproduce a passage from the apocryphal 'Assumption of *Moses', while the latter definitely quotes the 'Book of *Enoch'. The date is generally assigned to the close of the Apostolic age, perhaps before the destruction of *Jerusalem, which is not mentioned among the calamities enumerated in vv. 5–7. The striking similarities between the Ep. of Jude and 2 Pet. are most probably due to the use made of it by the latter.

Modern commentaries by C. *Bigg (I.C.C., with 1–2 Pet., 1901, pp. 305–44), J. B. Mayor (London, 1907), J. W. C. Wand (West. Comm., with 1–2 Pet., 1934, pp. 187–231), J. *Moffatt (Moffatt Comm., with other General Epistles, 1928, pp. 215–46), J. Chaîne (Études bibliques, with other Catholic Epistles, 1939, pp. 261–337) and J. N. D. Kelly (Black's N.T. Comm. on 1 and 2 Pet. and Jude, 1969, pp. 223–294. C. A. Albin, Judasbrevet. Traditionen, Texten, Tolkningen (Stockholm, 1962), with extensive bibl. McNeile, pp. 239–44. R. Leconte in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1285–98.

JUDGES, Book of. The Book traces the history of the Israelites from Joshua's death to the beginning of the monarchy, describing incidents connected with the conquest of Palestine, and woven round the names of several leaders ('judges') who ruled the country before the time of Saul. It professes at the outset (1, 1) to be a sequel to the Book of Joshua (q.v.), but in fact covers the same period. Its account of the entry of the Israelites into *Canaan, which depicts the settlement as gradual and spread over many years, is prob. more accurate than that in Josh., which claims for Israel the credit of a swift and thorough victory.

After an introductory section describing the attempts of the Israelites to secure a footing at Hebron, Debir, and Bethel (1. 2–2. 5), the exploits of the judges are described in turn. Of these the most notable are Ehud (3. 12–30); Deborah, the prophetess (4, 5); Gideon, also called Jerubbaal (6–8); Abimelech (9); Jephthah (11, 12); and *Samson (13–16). The compiler of the Book has supplied a framework which enabled a continuous historical narrative to be constructed out of what were probably really separate and unrelated histories of the individual judges, and has used it to illustrate his philosophy of history (2. 11–19), which saw a regular sequence of sin, punishment, penitence, and deliverance. The concluding chapters of the Book (17–21) contain incidents relating to the period, but outside this framework.

Some scholars maintain that some of the *Pentateuchal sources are identifiable in Judges and consequently have classed it as the last Book in the '*Heptateuch'. Others reckon Judges as the third Book in the series Deuteronomy–II Kings known as the '*Deuteronomic History'. In either case the Book throws valuable light on the premonarchical period, esp. on the beliefs of the early Israelites and the relation of their faith to the already existing religion in Canaan.

Commentaries by G. F. Moore (I.C.C., 1895), K. *Budde (K.H.C., Abt. vii; 1897), W. Nowack (H.K.A.T., Abt. 1, Bd. iv, on Judges, Ruth, and Sam., 1902, pp. 1–178), M. J. *Lagrange, O.P. (Études bibliques, 1903), G. A. Cooke (Camb. Bib., RV, 1913), C. F. *Burney (London, 1918), H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, ix, on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1953; ed. 2, 1959, pp. 141–256) and J. Gray (New Cent. Bib., on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1967, pp. 1–13 and 202–396). J. Garstang, Joshua–Judges (1931), pp. 3–115, 263–343. O. Eissfeldt, Die Quellen des Richterbuches in synoptischer Anordnung ins Deutsche übersetzt (Leipzig, 1925). E. Täubler, Biblische Studien. Die Epoche der Richter, ed. H. J. Zobel (Tübingen, 1958). W. Richter, Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zum Richterbuch (Bonner biblische Beiträge, xviii; 1963); id., Die Bearbeitungen des 'Retterbuches' in der Deuteronomischen Epoche (ib., xxi; 1964). H. Cazelles in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1394–1414.

JUDGEMENT, General (Particular). See General (Particular) Judgement.

JUDICA SUNDAY. The fifth Sunday in Lent (formerly called '*Passion Sunday.), so named from the opening words of the *Introit at the Mass (Ps. 43. 1: 'Give sentence with me, O God').

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. A Court of Appeal constituted by an Act of 1833 to regularize the extensive jurisdiction of the King in Council. It took over the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the High Court of Delegates which arose out of the statute of *Henry VIII abolishing appeals to Rome. Hence it determined appeals from both the Court of *Arches and the provincial Court of *York. It gained much notoriety through a series of ritual and doctrinal cases brought before it in the 19th cent., of which the *Gorham case was the most celebrated. Under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure of 1963 it ceased to have any jurisdiction in cases of discipline, but it continued to hear faculty appeals not involving doctrine, ritual or ceremonial. See also Lincoln Judgement.

JUDITH, Book of, OT Apocryphal Book. The Book relates how Nebuchadnezzar, 'who reigned over the Assyrians in Nineveh' (1. 1), failed to gain the support of certain nations, including the Jews, in his conflict with Arphaxad, King of the Medes, and determined to punish them by his general Holofernes (1. 1–2. 13). At first the Jews decide to resist (2. 14–4. 15). But when their city Bethulia is besieged and deprived of its water supply, they weaken through the persuasions of Ozias (5–7). Judith, a young and beautiful widow of great piety, upbraids Ozias and promises to deliver her people. She makes her way to the camp of Holofernes, who is captivated by her charms (10–12), and, having enticed him into a state of drunkenness, seizes a sword, cuts off his head and carries it back in a bag to Bethulia (13). The head is publicly displayed (14), the Israelites are encouraged to advance, and the Assyrians flee in panic (15). The narrative concludes with Judith's hymn of thanksgiving (16).

The whole book is wildly unhistorical and was prob. never intended to be read as history. Its orig. language was Heb., but it now exists only in Gk. versions. It prob. dates from the Maccabaean period, though some modern scholars have connected it with the time of Artaxerxes Ochus (359–338), chiefly because a Cappadocian named Holofernes fought in his armies. In the Christian Church it was known to *Clement of Rome, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Origen. In the Roman Breviary, part of the 'Hymn of Judith' (16. 2–3, 15–19) is now recited at *Lauds on Wednesdays in the first week of the monthly cycle.

Commentaries by A. Scholz (Würzburg, 1887; ed. 2, 1896), F. Steinmetzer (Leipzig, 1907), and A. E. Cowley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, i (1913), pp. 242–67. C. Meyer, S.J., 'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Buches Judith' in Biblica, iii (1922), pp. 193–203. F. Zimmermann, 'Aids for the Recovery of the Hebrew Original of Judith' in Journal of Biblical Literature, lvii (1938), pp. 67–74. E. Haag, Studien zum Buche Judith. Seine theologische Bedeutung und literarische Eigenart (Trierer theologische Studien, xvi; 1963). A. M. Dubarle, O.P., Judith. Formes et sens des diverses traditions (Analecta Biblica, xxiv; 2 vols., Rome, 1966). G. Brunner, Der Nabuchodonosor des Buches Judith (1940; ed. 2, 1959). Eissfeldt, pp. 585–7. A. Lefèvre, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1315–19, s.v. See also bibl. to Apocrypha.

JUDSON, ADONIRAM (1788–1850), American *Baptist missionary to Burma. He was born at Malden, Mass., and educated at Brown University (1804–7). In 1808 he entered the Andover Theological Seminary, and in 1810 went to England to confer with the *L.M.S. and to seek for co-operation with the American Board of Foreign Missions in the East. Having been ordained a *Congregationalist minister in 1812, he sailed for Calcutta. On reaching Serampore, Judson became a Baptist. After permission to continue in the territories of the East India Company was refused, he went to Mauritius, and in 1813 to Rangoon, where he began to translate the Bible into Burmese. During the war with England in 1824–5 he was imprisoned. In 1829 he transferred the seat of the mission to Moulmein, but travelled also among the Karens, a tribe living farther north, where he met with great success. In 1842 he began work on a Burmese dictionary, which was eventually completed in 1849. He died soon afterwards on a voyage undertaken to recover his broken health. His first wife, Ann Hasseltine (d. 1826), and his second wife, Sarah Boardman, gave him notable assistance in his work and are remembered on their own account.

Lives by F. Wayland (London, 2 vols., 1853), L. Bonar (ib., 1871) and Edward Judson (son; ib., 1883). Modern sketch by B. R. Pearn (ib., 1962). W. H. Allison in Dict. Amer. Biog., x (1933), p. 234 f.

JULIAN THE APOSTATE (332–63), 'Flavius Claudius Julianus', Roman Emperor from 361. He was born at *Constantinople, the nephew of *Constantine the Great (Emp. 311–37) and cousin of Constantius II (Emp. 337–61). In 337, after the murder of all his near male relations except his half-brother Gallus, Julian, a very precocious child, was entrusted to the care of a eunuch, Mardonius, and *Eusebius of Nicomedia. Already possessing strong pagan leanings, he was banished with Gallus in 345 to the remote fortress of Macellum in Cappadocia, where efforts were made to bring him under Christian influences. In 351, when Gallus was made Caesar, Julian became free to leave Cappadocia. He went first to *Constantinople and then to Nicomedia, where before long he was won to *Neoplatonism, mainly through the influence of the Sophist, Maximus of Ephesus. After Gallus's execution (end of 354), Julian was held captive at Milan; but in 355 he gained permission to visit the schools at Athens, where he was initiated into the Eleusinian mysteries. Among his fellow-students at Athens was St. *Gregory of Nazianzus. On 6 Nov. 355 he was presented to the army as Caesar. He soon justified his nomination by his successes in a difficult military situation, in Aug. 357 inflicting a decisive defeat on the Alamanni at Strassburg. He also carried through some drastic administrative reforms in Gaul. When Constantius, jealous of Julian's popularity, sought to take over the flower of Julian's army for his Persian campaigns, the soldiers resisted and proclaimed Julian Emperor (360). Civil war was prevented only by Constantius's death in Nov. 361.

Now that he was sole Emperor, Julian embarked on an ambitious programme for reform. With regard to the Church, his policy was to degrade Christianity and promote paganism by every means short of open persecution. He sought to re-establish the heathen worship throughout the empire; ordered all instruction in the Imperial schools to be completely paganized; retracted the legal and financial privileges accorded to the Christians by his predecessors; published polemical treatises against Christian doctrine; and even inflicted barbarous sentences on persons guilty only of Christian faith and practice. He also attempted to weaken the Church internally by allowing all exiled Bishops to return to their sees with a view to creating dissensions. At the same time he attempted to reform the morals and elevate the theology of paganism, himself giving (it must be allowed) a conspicuous example of austerity and purpose.

Having spent the winter of 361–2 at Constantinople, in May 362 he set out for *Antioch in preparation for a campaign against the Persians. In Asia Minor and Syria his strict discipline and strong anti-Christian policy made him very unpopular. In March 363 he set out for Mesopotamia. On 26 June 363 he was struck by an arrow and died the same night. The well-known story that he died with the words 'Vicisti Galilaee' ('Thou hast conquered, Galilean!') is a late embellishment of a passage in Theodoret (H.E., iii. 25).

Julian was an extensive author. His chief writings are (1) a set of eight Orations, including two panegyrics on Constantius, two on true and false cynicism, and theosophical orations on King Helios and on the Mother of the Gods; (2) a set of letters, more than eighty of which have come down under Julian's name (some perh. spurious); (3) 'Symposium' or 'Caesares', a satire on the vices of past Emperors; (4) 'Misopogon' (the 'Beard Hater'), a satire written at Antioch on the licentiousness of the inhabitants; (5) some epigrams. Unique interest attaches to (6) his 'Adversus Christianos', written during the Persian campaign. Though no MS. of this last survives, nearly the whole text can be recovered from *Cyril of Alexandria's refutation of the work.

Collected edd. by E. Spanheim (Leipzig, 1696), F. C. Hertlein (2 vols., Teubn., 1875–6), W. C. Wright (with Eng. tr., 3 vols., Loeb, 1913–23), and crit. ed., incorporating six new letters discovered by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus at Halki in 1884, by J. Bidez, G. Rochefort and C. Lacombrade (Collection Guillaume Budé, 2 vols. in 4, 1924–64, with Fr. tr.). His work against the Christians ed. from Cyr. Alex. by C. J. Neumann (Scriptorum Graecorum qui Christianam impugnaverunt religionem quae supersunt, fasc. iii; Leipzig, 1880).

The chief ancient authority for his life is Ammianus Marcellinus (Hist., xv. 8–xxv). Other pagan sources are Libanius, Eunapius and Claudius Mamertinus. Christian writers (naturally all very hostile) include, besides the Church Historians and Chroniclers, some poems of St. *Ephraem Syrus, two invectives of St. Gregory of Nazianzus, and St. Cyril of Alexandria's reply already mentioned.

The study of J. Bidez, La Vie de l'empereur Julien (Collection des Études anciennes publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 1930), supersedes all earlier works. Other studies by G. H. Rendall (Cambridge, 1879), Alice Gardner ('Heroes of the Nations', New York and London, 1905), G. Negri (Milan, 1901; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1905), P. Allard (3 vols., Paris, 1900–3), G. Ricciotti (Milan, 1946), and G. W. Bowersock (London, 1978). B. de Gaiffier, S.J., '"Sub Iuliano Apostata" dans le Martyrologe Romain' in Anal. Boll., lxxiv (1956), pp. 5–49. W. E. Kaegi, Jr., 'Research on Julian the Apostate, 1945–1964' in Classical World, lviii (1965), pp. 229–38. for discussion of recent lit. There are also full accounts by J. *Wordsworth in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 483–525; A. *Harnack in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1900), pp. 609–19; and E. von Borries in P.W., x (pt. 1; 1917), cols. 26–91, all s.v.

JULIAN (c. 386–454), *Pelagian Bp. of Eclanum, in Apulia, from c. 416. On his refusal to subscribe, in 417, the condemnation of Pelagianism published by *Zosimus, he was deprived of his see and banished. He travelled widely in search of protection or toleration, appealing in turn to *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, Sixtus III, and others; but was repeatedly condemned in various local councils, and repeatedly exiled by the civil powers. He is believed to have died in Sicily. His only uncontested works, besides three letters, are four books 'Ad Turbantium' and eight 'Ad Florum'; considerable portions of these are preserved in St. *Augustine's replies. They belong to the period 418–26. In them Julian appears to have possessed keen dialectical ability, as well as philosophical insight. His account of the worth and powers of human nature is coherent, and his indictment of Augustine's doctrine of the total depravity of fallen man (which he held to be a consequence of the *Manichaean errors of Augustine's youth), although couched in rather scurrilous terms, is powerful; but his conception of human self-sufficiency is not easily reconciled with the Christian doctrine of man's sinfulness. Certain exegetical works have also been attributed to him by G. *Morin, A. Vaccari and others.

A. Bruckner, Julian von Eclanum, sein Leben und seine Lehre (T.U., xv, 3; 1897); id., Die vier Bücher Julians von Aeclanum an Turbantius (1910). G. Morin, 'Un Ouvrage restitué à Julien d'Éclane' in R. Bén., xxx (1913), pp. 1–24; A. Vaccari, S.J., Un commento a Giobbe di Giuliano di Eclano (1915). G. Bouwman, S.V.D., Des Julian von Aeculanum Kommentar zu den Propheten Osee, Joel und Amos. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Exegese (Analecta Biblica, ix; 1958). Exegetical works ed. L. de Coninck (C.C., Series Latina, lxxxviii; 1977); his Lat. tr. of Theodore of Mopsuestia's Comm. on Psalms ed. id. (ib., lxxxviiiA; 1977). H. I. Marrou, 'La Canonisation de Julien d'Éclane' in Hist. J., lxxvii (1958), pp. 434–7. F. Refoulé, O.P., 'Julien d'Eclane, théologien et philosophe' in Rech. S.R., lii (1964), pp. 42–84, 233–47. Dekkers (ed. 2; 1961), pp. 174–6 (Nos. 773–7). J. Forget in D.T.C., viii (1924), cols. 1926–31.

JULIAN (d. after 518), Bp. of Halicarnassus in Caria. He was a *Monophysite who, on being deposed from his see c. 518, took refuge at *Alexandria, where he became the leader of the party known to their opponents as '*Aphthartodocetae' (teachers of the incorruptibility of the Body of Christ) or 'Phantasiastae' (teachers of a merely phenomenal Body of Christ). He wrote four works directed against *Severus of Antioch of which a large series of fragments has survived. Some of his letters have also been recovered. The Commentary on Job formerly ascribed to him appears to be the work of an unknown *Arian author of the 4th cent.

The standard work is R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère d'Antioche sur l'incorruptibilité du corps du Christ (Louvain, 1924; with fragments in Syr. and Gk. retransl., also full bibl.). Id., 'Pièces de polémique antijulianiste' in Muséon, xliv (1931), pp. 255–317 (text and Lat. tr.), and liv (1941), pp. 59–89 (text and Fr. tr.). Other texts in Severi Antijulianistica, i (ed. A. Sanda, Beyrout, 1931). M. Jugie, A.A., 'Julien d'Halicarnasse et Sévère d'Antioche' in É.O., xxiv (1925), pp. 129–62, 256–85. Bardenhewer, v, pp. 2–6; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 507. R. Draguet in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1931–40, and A. Mayer in E.C., vi (1951), col. 739 f.

JULIAN OF NORWICH (c. 1342 – after 1413), English mystic. Little is known of her life except that she prob. lived as an *anchoress, outside the walls of St. Julian's church, *Norwich. Acc. to her own account she received on 8 May 1373 a series of 15 revelations, in a state of ecstasy lasting 5 hours. One other vision followed the next day, and her book, The Sixteen Revelations of Divine Love, was written twenty years after, as the fruit of her meditations on the original experience, which consisted chiefly in visions of the Passion and of the Holy Trinity. The account of these visions is embedded in reflections on the mysteries of the faith, on prayer, and esp. on the love of God. In Divine Love lies the clue to all problems of existence, particularly that of evil, which, lacking the Divine reality, is but an aberration of the human will that serves to reveal the more clearly the merciful love of God. Julian seems to have written her work under *Neoplatonist influences, perh. mediated through the writings of Walter *Hilton and 'The *Cloud of Unknowing'. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 8 May.

There are three primary MSS. of the Revelations, two in the Brit. Mus. and one in Paris. The last (Bibl. Nat., Fonds Anglais No. 40 (Bibl. Bigotiana 388), 16th cent.) ed. by S. de Cressy (no place, 1670; frequently repr.). One of the MSS. in the Brit. Mus. (Sloane 2499; 17th cent.) ed. P. H. Collins (London, 1877), Grace Warrack (ib., 1901) and Dom [G.] R. Hudleston, O.S.B. (Orchard Books, xii; 1927), with notes on MSS. and early edd.; the other (Addit. MS. 37790, the 'shorter version'; early 15th cent.) ed. D. Harford, The Comfortable Words (London [1911]), and Anna M. Reynolds, C.P. (London, 1958). Ed., based on a collation of the Paris MS. and the Sloane MS., by J. Walsh, S.J. (Orchard Books, 1961). More completely modernized text by C. Wolters (Penguin Classics, 1966). P. Molinari, S.J., Julian of Norwich (1958).

JULIANA OF LIÈGE, St. (1192–1258), champion of the Feast of *Corpus Christi. Born at Retinnes, near Liège, and bereft of her parents, she was placed in the *Augustinian convent of Mont Cornillon, near Liège, where she made rapid spiritual progress and experienced visions. Once professed (1206), she devoted all her energies to securing the establishment of a Feast of Corpus Christi. In 1230 she became superior; but meeting with great opposition in the convent, she was forced to leave and took refuge in the city of Liège. Here, through the intervention of a recluse at St. Martin's church, she won to her cause John of Lausanne, one of the canons, who secured in turn the warm interest of James Pantaléon, then Archdeacon of Liège and later Pope Urban IV. The Bp. of Liège having obtained her restoration for a brief space, the feast was formally proclaimed in 1246, to be observed in the diocese of Liège for the next year. But the Bishop died (16 Oct. 1246) before the year was up; the feast was not repeated in Juliana's lifetime; and she herself was again exiled and passed the last years of her life first in a monastery near Namur and later as a recluse at Fosses. The real reward of her efforts was the institution of the Feast of Corpus Christi after her death by Urban IV in 1264. Her cultus was confirmed in 1869. Feast day, 5 Apr.

Latin tr. of contemporary Fr. life (1258–62) in AA.SS., Apr. I (1675), pp. 443–75. Later lives by U. Berlière, O.S.B. (anon., Namur, 1884), G. Simenon (Brussels, 1946) and J. Coenen ('Heiligen van onzen Stam', Bruges, 1946). E. Denis, La Vraie Histoire de sainte Julienne de Liége et l'institution de la Fête-Dieu (Tournai, 1935). F. Baix–C. Lambot, O.S.B., La Dévotion à l'eucharistie et VIIe centenaire de la Fête-Dieu (Namur, 1946), passim. E. W. McDonnell, The Beguines and Beghards in Medieval Culture (New Brunswick, N.J., 1954), esp. pp. 299–309. A. Piolanti in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 736–8, with bibl.

JÜLICHER, ADOLF (1857–1938), NT scholar. Born at Falkenberg, he received a pastoral appointment at Rummelsburg near Berlin in 1882. From 1889 to 1923 he was professor of theology at Marburg. His two principal writings were Die Gleichnisreden Jesu (2 vols., 1888–9), in which he insisted that the Lord's *Parables must be understood as real similes and not as allegories, and Die Einleitung in das Neue Testament (1894; Eng. trans., 1904), a careful critical introduction to the NT writings. He also made extensive studies in the *Old Latin versions of the NT (Itala. I: 'Matthäus-Evangelium', 1938). His other writings included Paulus und Jesus (1907), Hat Jesus gelebt? (1910) and an edition of St. *Vincent of Lérins' Commonitorium (1895).

Autobiography in E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart, iv (1928), pp. 159–200. Festgabe für A. Jülicher, hrsg. von R. *Bultmann und H. von Soden (1927). N. van Bohemen, O.F.M., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., iv (1949), cols. 1414–17, s.v.

JULIUS I, St. (d. 352), Pope from 337. In the *Arian struggle he was a strong supporter of orthodoxy and one of the chief influences leading to its ultimate triumph. He gave shelter to *Marcellus of Ancyra at Rome after his condemnation at the Council of *Constantinople (336), and later to *Athanasius after his escape from *Alexandria in 339. In 342–3 he convoked the Council of *Sardica, which consolidated the W. against Arianism and pronounced Athanasius the rightful occupant of his see. Through the appellate jurisdiction allowed by can. 3 (Gk.) of the Council to Julius as Bp. of Rome, his name has secured notoriety in connexion with the rise of the Papal claims. Two of Julius's letters, which survive in Greek, are evidence of his remarkable statesmanship. His pontificate was marked by the building of two new churches in Rome, S. Maria in Trastevere and the Basilica Julia (now the Church of the Twelve Apostles). Feast day, 12 Apr.

The two letters mentioned are preserved in Athanasius, Apologia c. Arianos, 21–35 and 52 f. Other (spurious) Epp. attributed to him are by *Apollinarian writers; texts in H. *Lietzmann, Apollinarius von Laodicea und seine Schule, i (1904), pp. 185–93, 193–203, 256–62, 283–6, 292 f., 307–10, 310–18, 318. Material on Julius collected in J. P. Migne, PL, viii, 857–944, and Supplement by A. Hamman, O.F.M., i (1958), col. 191 f. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 583–5. J. Barmby in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 526–32; J. P. Kirsch in C.E., viii (1910), p. 561; J. Chapin in N.C.E., viii (1967), p. 51 f.

JULIUS II (1443–1513), Pope from 1503. Giuliano della Rovere was the descendant of an impoverished noble family of Albissola, nr. Savona. He lived for some time at a house of Conventual *Franciscans under the supervision of his uncle, Francesco della Rovere. On the latter's accession to the Papacy as *Sixtus IV in 1471 he was created cardinal and loaded with benefices, holding several bishoprics and abbacies *in commendam. He took part in many political missions, and under Innocent VIII, whose election he had secured by means of bribery, continued to play a leading role in Papal affairs. When in 1492 his personal enemy, Rodrigo Borgia, was elected as *Alexander VI he fled to Charles VIII of France, and even after a formal reconciliation with the Pope in 1498 continued to live in hiding, mostly in N. Italy. After Alexander's death in 1503 he returned to Rome, and after the short reign of Pius III was himself elected Pope in the same year, having promised the cardinals to continue the war against the Turks, to call a General Council within two years, and to follow their advice in all matters of importance. These undertakings, however, which would have seriously limited the Papal power, he did not carry into effect. The principal achievement of his pontificate was the restoration and enlargement of the temporal power, which was to safeguard Papal independence in times to come. To assist in this end he drove Caesar *Borgia from Italy in 1504. In 1506 he conducted an expedition against Perugia and *Bologna, both of which submitted to his sovereignty, and in 1509 he joined the League of Cambrai against *Venice, which had frequently resisted Papal claims.

After the city had been defeated with the help of France he turned against the latter and, in 1511, founded the Holy League, including England, Spain, Venice, and Switzerland, for the purpose of defeating it. Louis XII replied by calling a Council to depose the Pope at Pisa in 1511. After Julius had deprived the rebellious cardinals who attended the Council of their dignity it retired to Milan, where Julius was declared suspended in 1512. At the same time the Pope called a Council at the Lateran and won the Emp. Maximilian over to his side. The *Pragmatic Sanction was condemned and France thus remained isolated. The death of Julius on 20–21 Feb. 1513, however, ended the conflict.

Though Julius II was chiefly a statesman and a military leader, he initiated certain important ecclesiastical reforms. His constitution 'De fratrum nostrorum' (1503) declared null and void every pontifical election brought about by simony. He was a patron of Renaissance art and recognized the genius of *Raphael, *Michelangelo, and Bramante. In 1506 he laid the cornerstone of the Basilica of *St. Peter. Among the many immortal works inspired by his generosity are Michelangelo's statue of Moses in San Pietro in Vincoli, the paintings in the *Sistine Chapel, and Raphael's frescoes in the Vatican. His indulgence for the rebuilding of St. Peter's was the occasion later of M. *Luther's 95 Theses. His warlike character was scathingly attacked by D. *Erasmus in his Moriae Encomium ('Praise of Folly').

A. J. Dumesnil, Histoire de Jules II (1873); M. Brosch, Papst Julius II (1878); E. Rodocanachi, Le Pontificat de Jules II (1928). F. Seneca, Venezia e Papa Giulio II (Padua, 1962). Pastor, vi (1923), pp. 185–607. G. Mollat in D.T.C., vii (pt. 2, 1925), cols. 1918–20, s.v. 'Jules II'; G. B. Picotti in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 750–58, s.v. 'Giulio II'; D. R. Campbell in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 52–4, s.v.

JULIUS III (1487–1555), Pope from 1550. Giammaria Ciocchi del Monte studied jurisprudence at Perugia and Siena, was made Abp. of Siponto in 1511, and under *Clement VII and *Paul III held administrative posts in Rome and the Papal states. He was taken as a hostage by the Imperial forces after the sack of Rome in 1527. In 1545 he opened the Council of *Trent as its first president and Papal legate, and had an important share in its transference to Bologna in 1547. Elected Pope in 1550 after a long and stormy conclave, in 1551 he commanded the Council to resume its sessions, but had to suspend it in the next year owing to political difficulties. During his pontificate he did much for the *Jesuit Order, which he confirmed and endowed with new privileges. On the death of *Edward VI in 1553, he sent Cardinal R. *Pole to England with far-reaching faculties. During the last three years of his life, however, Julius III more and more lost interest in the reform of the Church. His love of the arts—he was a protector of *Michelangelo—and of pomp, as well as his nepotism, range him with the typical Renaissance Popes.

The principal source is A. Massarelli, Diaria, v–vii (ed. S. Merkle, Concilii Tridentini Diariorum, ii, Freiburg i.Br., 1911, pp. 1–249). V. Schweitzer, Zur Geschichte der Reform unter Julius III (Görres-Gesellschaft 3; 1907). C. Erdmann, 'Die Wiedereröffnung des Trienter Konzils durch Julius III' in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, xx (1928–9), pp. 238–317. H. Jedin, 'Analekten zur Reformtätigkeit der Päpste Julius' III. und Pauls IV.' in R.Q., xlii (1934), pp. 305–32, xliii (1935), pp. 87–156. G. De Leva, 'La elezione di Papa Giulio III' in Rivista Storica Italiana, i (1884), pp. 22–38. Pastor, xiii (1924). Fliche–Martin, xviii (1948), pp. 105–45, with refr. G. Mollat in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), col. 1920 f., s.v.; G. B. Picotti in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 758–605, s.v. 'Giulio III'. See also works cited under Trent, Council of.

JULIUS AFRICANUS, SEXTUS (c. 160 – c. 240), Christian writer. He was born prob. at *Jerusalem (not, as *Suidas asserts, in Libya) and lived for several years at *Emmaus. From Emmaus he went on a successful embassy to the Emp. Heliogabalus (218–22) for the restoration of the township, which led to its being rebuilt as Nicopolis. He also enjoyed close relations with the royal house of *Edessa. Later, under the Emp. Alexander Severus (222–35), he was instrumental in the erection of the public library in the Pantheon at Rome. He also had connexions at *Alexandria with Heraclas and *Origen. Despite a later tradition (Dionysius bar-Salibi) to the contrary, it is unlikely that he was ever ordained.

His chief work was a 'History of the World' (Χρονογραφίαι) to A.D. 217 in five Books, of which fragments are preserved in *Eusebius's 'Chronicle', *George Syncellus, and other writers. He held that the world would last for 6000 years from the Creation and that the Birth of Christ, which he antedated in relation to his own times by three years, took place in the year 5500. His 'Embroidered Girdles' (Κεστοί) is an encyclopaedic work in 24 Books, dedicated to Alexander Severus, on natural history, medicine, military science, magic, and miscellaneous subjects. This, too, survives only in fragments. He was also the author of two letters, one to Origen contesting the genuineness of the story of *Susanna and the other to a certain Aristides on the Genealogies of Christ in Mt. and Lk., both epistles showing good critical powers.

Fragments collected by M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae (ed. 2, 1844), ii, pp. 238–309; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG, x, 63–94. New ed. of Epp. by W. Reichardt in T.U., xxxiv, 3 (1909); of frs. of Κεστοί by J. R. Vieillefond (1932). His 'Ep. to Origen' will be found in all editions of Origen. Newly recovered frs. in B. P. Grenfell–A. S. Hunt, The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, iii (1903), pp. 36–41; others ed. by J. R. Vieillefond in Revue des Etudes grecques, xlvi (1933), pp. 197–203. H. Gelzer, Sextus Julius Africanus und die byzantinische Chronographie (2 vols., 1880–98); F. Granger, 'Julius Africanus and the Library of the Pantheon' in J.T.S., xxxiv (1933), pp. 157–66. F. Lammert, 'Julius Afrikanus und die byzantinische Taktik' in B.Z., xliv (1951), pp. 362–9. É. Amann in D.T.C., viii (1924), cols. 1921–5, s.v., with bibl.; and W. Kroll–J. Sickenberger in P.W., x (1919), cols. 116–25.

JUMIÈGES (Lat. Gemeticum), Benedictine Abbey on the Lower Seine 17 miles W. of Rouen. Founded in 654 by St. *Philibert (q.v.), it rapidly developed in size and influence, sending missionaries to England and Ireland. In 841 it was plundered by the Normans and ten years later almost completely destroyed. After restoration and a second destruction, it rose to become one of the chief cultural centres in N. Europe, and through the patronage of *William the Conqueror, under whom the partly surviving abbey church was built (1040–67), it became the richest monastery in Normandy, continuing to prosper through most of the Middle Ages. Despoiled in 1562 by the *Huguenots, it was restored in 1573, and in the 17th cent. became linked to the *Maurist reform. Benedictine life finally came to an end in 1790, after which the buildings were largely destroyed.

Since 1918 its imposing ruins have been under State protection.

J. Loth (ed.), Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Pierre de Jumièges par un religieux bénédictin de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (3 vols., Rouen, 1882–5). R. Martin du Gard, L'Abbaye de Jumièges. Étude archéologique des ruines (Montdidier, 1909). L. Jouen, Jumièges (Rouen, 1926; ed. G. Lanfry [1954]). J. J. Vernier (ed.), Chartes de l'abbaye de Jumièges (v. 825 à 1204), conservées aux archives de la Seine-Inférieure (2 vols., Rouen, 1916). Jumièges. Congrès Scientifique du XIII[e] Centenaire (2 vols., Rouen, 1955). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 412–20, s.v., with bibl. L. M. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1496–9, s.v., for detailed reff.

JUMPERS. A nickname of the Welsh *Calvinistic Methodists, from their former custom of 'leaping for joy' at their meetings.

JUNG CODEX, The. One of the MSS. discovered at *Nag Hammadi, near the Nile. It was acquired in 1952 by the Jung Institute for Analytical Psychology at Zürich. It contains four books: the 'Apocryphal Epistle of James', the Evangelium Veritatis, an 'Epistle to Rheginos', and a 'Tract on the Three Natures'. For further details, see Gnosticism.

JURAVIT DOMINUS (Lat., 'The Lord hath sworn'). The votive Mass instituted by *Pius XI to implement the contents of his encyclical 'Ad Catholici Sacerdotii' (1935) on the Christian priesthood. It no longer appears in the 1970 Roman Missal. Its name derived from the first word of its *introit.

JURIEU, PIERRE (1637–1713), French *Calvinist controversialist. A grandson of the Reformed theologian P. *du Moulin, he was born at Mer, in the diocese of Blois, where his father was a minister. Having studied Protestant theology at Sedan, he came to England, where he completed his education under the guidance of his uncles, A. Rivet and C. and L. du Moulin, and himself received Anglican orders. On his return to France (1660) he was elected minister of Mer in the place of his father and reordained in the Calvinist form. In 1674 he was appointed professor of Hebrew at the Protestant academy of Sedan, and soon became involved in a number of controversies, notably with J. B. *Bossuet and A. *Arnauld. His Apologie pour la morale des Réformés (1675) attempts to prove, against the Catholics, that the Calvinist doctrine of *Predestination is not prejudicial to morality, and in his Traité de la puissance de l'Église (1677) he defends the Calvinist belief in the authority of synods against Bossuet as well as against his own uncle, du Moulin, who had become an Independent. In 1680 he published anonymously La Politique du clergé de France and consequently was watched by the police. When, in 1681, the academy at Sedan was closed he accepted a professorship at Rotterdam. Here he continued his controversy with Arnauld, against whom he wrote his Examen de l'eucharistie de l'Église romaine (1682). It was followed by the important Histoire du calvinisme et du papisme (1683), directed against L. Maimbourg. After the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) he did much for the Calvinist refugees from France. In 1686 he wrote L'Accomplissement des prophéties, ou la délivrance de l'Église, predicting the universal triumph of Protestantism for the year 1689. From 1686 to 1689 he published his Lettres pastorales, containing recitals of the sufferings of the French Protestants, which were a great success. From 1689 to 1702 he was employed by the Admiralty in London as an agent against France, which he sought to stir up to civil war. In 1704 appeared his last important work, Histoire critique des dogmes et des cultes (Eng. trans., 1715). Jurieu defended the claims of strict Calvinism against the RC Church as well as against other forms of Protestantism. He looked on the 'pure preaching of the Word' and the 'right dispensation of the Sacraments' as the signs of the true Church, and wished to confine its membership to narrow limits.

C. E. Mégnin, Pierre Jurieu (thesis, Strasbourg, 1854). C. van Oordt, P. Jurieu, historien, apologiste de la Réformation (thesis, Geneva, 1879). M. J. Denis, 'Bayle et Jurieu' in Mémoires de l'Académie Nationale des Sciences, Arts et Belles-Lettres de Caen, Partie littéraire (1886), pp. 54–132. R. Lureau, Les Doctrines politiques de Jurieu, 1637–1713 (Bordeaux thesis, 1904). R. Struman, 'La Perpétuité de la foi dans la controverse Bossuet–Jurieu, 1686–1691' in R.H.E., xxxvii (1941), pp. 145–89. G. H. Dodge, The Political Theory of the Huguenots of the Dispersion, with special Reference to the Thought and Influence of Pierre Jurieu (New York and London, 1947), with bibl. E. Kaeppler, 'Bibliographie chronologique des œuvres de Pierre Jurieu (1637–1713)' in Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, lxxxiv, Série 6, viii (1935), pp. 391–440. A. G. C. A. Bonet-Maury in P.R.E. (ed. 3), ix (1901), pp. 637–40, s.v.; A. Humbert in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1996–2001, s.v.

JUS DEVOLUTUM. In the Church of *Scotland, the right devolving on a *presbytery to elect a minister to a vacant charge when the congregation, after nine months, has failed to make an appointment. It is only rarely exercised, as an extension of time, if requested, can be granted to the congregation concerned.

JUSTIFICATION (Lat. justificatio; cf. Gk. δικαίωσις). Whereas the Lat. word is unambiguous (justum facere, 'to make just'), it has been widely held that in the NT (and esp. in St. *Paul) the Gk. δικαιόω and its cognates are to be understood as a legal metaphor and that they mean not 'to make righteous' but 'to pronounce righteous'. If this is so, it is etymologically inaccurate to render δικαιόω by 'justify' (though in fact this translation is regularly used).

The word is used theologically in several senses. It may mean:

(1) In an active sense, the act whereby God makes a man just. Acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, God thereby conveys the gift of sanctifying grace to the man's soul.

(2) In a passive sense, the change in a man's condition whereby he passes from the state of sin to that of righteousness.

(3) Esp. in Protestant theology, the act whereby God, in virtue of the Sacrifice of Christ, acquits a man of the punishment due to his sins and in His mercy treats him as though he were righteous. M. *Luther held that such justification was granted to men in response to the disposition of faith alone (sola fides) and that it brought with it the imputation to the sinner of the merits of Christ.

The subject is treated in all works on Christian Dogmatics and in commentaries on the Pauline Epistles. The classic study of the Protestant doctrine is A. *Ritschl, Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (3 vols., 1870–4). J. H. *Newman, Lectures on Justification (1838).

J. Buchanan, The Doctrine of Justification (Cunningham Lectures, 1867). E. Böhl, Von der Rechtfertigung durch den Glauben (1890). T. Häring, Δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ bei Paulus (1896). J. *Denney, The Christian Doctrine of Reconciliation (Cunningham Lectures for 1917; 1917). H. Rückert, Die Rechtfertigungslehre auf dem Tridentinischen Konzil (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, iii; 1925). H. Küng, Rechtfertigung. Die Lehre Karl Barths und eine katholische Besinnung (Einsiedeln, 1957; Eng. tr. of ed. 4, 1964). L. H. Ihmels in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xvi (1905), pp. 482–515, s.v. 'Rechtfertigung'. J. Rivière in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2042–2227, s.v. G. Schrenk in T.W.B., ii (1935), pp. 176–229, s.v. δίκη, δίκαιος, &c. M. D. Crossan and P. de Letter, S.J., in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 77–82, s.v.

JUSTIN MARTYR, St. (c. 100 – c. 165), early Christian *Apologist. He was born of pagan parents at Flavia Neapolis ('Nablus'), the ancient Shechem in *Samaria. After a long search after the truth in pagan philosophies (*Stoicism, *Aristotelianism, Pythagoreanism, and finally *Platonism), Justin at last embraced Christianity (c. 130). For a time he taught at *Ephesus, where he engaged in his Disputation with Trypho the Jew (c. 135). Later he moved to *Rome, where he opened a Christian school, having *Tatian (q.v.) as one of his pupils. Here he wrote his 'First Apology' (c. 155), addressed to the Emp. Antoninus Pius and his adopted sons (*Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus), and soon afterwards issued his 'Dialogue with Trypho'. His 'Second Apology', addressed to the Roman Senate, was apparently written shortly after the accession of Marcus Aurelius (161). He and some of his disciples were denounced as Christians c. 165 (acc. to Tatian, by the Cynic philosopher Crescens); and on refusing to sacrifice they were scourged and beheaded. The authentic record of their martyrdom ('Martyrium S. Iustini et Sociorum'), based on an official court report, survives. Feast day in the E., 1 June; in the W., formerly 14 April; since 1969, 1 June.

Justin is the most outstanding of the 'Apologists'. Though of no great philosophical or literary skill, he is the first Christian thinker to seek to reconcile the claims of faith and reason. He held that traces of the truth were to be found in the pagan thinkers, since all men shared in the 'generative' or 'germinative' Word (λόγος σπερματικός); but Christianity alone was the truly rational creed. The reason why the Word became incarnate was to teach men the truth and to redeem them from the power of the demons. Justin's stress on the transcendence of God (derived from his Platonism) led him into subordinationism in his doctrine of the Son (or Logos); but in intention his theology was orthodox. He also taught a form of *Millenarianism.

Of his writings his 'First Apology' is concerned to expound the doctrines just outlined. It also replies to the charges of immorality preferred against the early Church. Its later chapters are of great interest through their account of contemporary Christian Baptismal ceremonies and Eucharistic belief and practice. The 'Second Apology' is mainly concerned with rebutting certain specific charges against the Christians. In the 'Dialogue with Trypho', three main ideas are developed: viz. the transitoriness of the Old Covenant and its precepts, the identity of the Logos with the God who appears in the OT, and the vocation of the Gentiles to take the place of Israel.

A large number of other works have circulated from early times under Justin's name, all of them spurious. One group belongs to the late 2nd and 3rd cents. and consists of an 'Address to the Greeks', an 'Exhortation to the Greeks', and a work 'On the Monarchy of God'. Another group is probably all the work of a single author of the Aristotelian school (4th–5th cent.). Yet another pseudo-Justinian work—the 'Expositio Rectae Fidei'—has now been proved by J. Lebon and R. V. Sellers to be a work of *Theodoret.

Of the earlier editions of Justin, the best is that of P. *Maran, O.S.B. (Paris, 1742). The only complete modern critical edition is that of J. C. T. Otto (3 vols., Jena, 1842–1848; ed. 3 in 5 vols., 1876–81). J. P. Migne, PG, vi (1857). Apologies, ed. with notes by A. W. F. Blunt (1911). Eng. trans. in A.N.C.L. (1867); also of 'Dialogue with Trypho', by A. L. Williams (Translations of Christian Literature, 1930), with useful introd. A. L. Feder, Justins des Märtyrers Lehre von Jesus Christus (1906); J. Rivière, Saint Justin et les apologistes du IIe siècle (1907); M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., Saint Justin (1914); E. R. Goodenough, The Theology of Justin Martyr (1923); P. Prigent, Justin et l'Ancien Testament (Études Bibliques, 1964); L. W. Barnard, Justin Martyr. His Life and Thought (Cambridge, 1967).

B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Le Rescrit d'Hadrien et S. Justin' in R. Bén., xxxix (1927), pp. 365–8. J. Lebon, 'Restitutions à Théodoret de Cyr. II: L'Ἔκθεσις τῆς ὀρθῆς πίστεως pseudo-justinienne, œuvre de Théodoret' in R.H.E., xxvi (1930), pp. 536–50; R. V. Sellers, 'Pseudo-Justin's Expositio Rectae Fidei: A Work of Theodoret of Cyrus' in J.T.S., xlvi (1945), pp. 145–60. W. Schmid, 'Die Textüberlieferung der Apologie des Justin' in Z.N.T.W., xl (1941), pp. 87–138. H. Chadwick, 'Justin Martyr's Defence of Christianity' in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlvii (1965), pp. 275–97. Bardenhewer, i, pp. 206–62; Altaner-Stuiber (1966), pp. 65–71; J. Quasten, Patrology, i (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 196–219. H. S. *Holland in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 560–87, s.v. 'Justinus (2) Martyr, St.'; G. Bardy in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2228–77, s.v. 'Justin'; P. Toschi in E.C., vi (1951), cols. 841–5, s.v. 'Giustino'.

JUSTINA, St. See Cyprian, St., of Antioch.

JUSTINIAN I (483–565), Roman Emperor from 527. He was the most energetic of the early Byzantine Emperors, making it his aim to restore the political and religious unity of the empire in E. and W. He reconquered N. Africa from the Vandals and Italy from the Goths. A great builder, he erected many *basilicas at *Constantinople (including *Santa Sophia), *Ravenna, and elsewhere; and a sound juridical basis for the empire was established by his new legal Code (see foll. entry). As the champion of orthodoxy he persecuted the *Montanists, whom he almost exterminated, closed the celebrated ancient philosophical schools at Athens in 529, and forced many pagans to accept baptism. His unsuccessful efforts to reconcile the *Monophysites issued not only in his condemnation of the memory, as well as some alleged doctrines, of *Origen (see Origenism), but also in the *Three Chapters controversy (which led to the Second Council of *Constantinople, 553), in the humiliation of Pope *Vigilius, and in a schism in the West.

C. Diehl, Justinien et la civilisation byzantine au VIe siècle (1901); W. G. Holmes, The Age of Justinian and Theodora (2 vols., 1905–7); P. N. Ure, Justinian and his Age (Pelican Book, A 217; 1951); B. Rubin, Das Zeitalter Iustinians (1960 ff.). W. Schubart, Justinian und Theodora [1943]; R. Browning, Justinian and Theodora (1971). A. Knecht, Die Religionspolitik Kaiser Justinians I (1896). E. K. Chrysos, Ἡ Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Πολιτικὴ τοῦ Ἰουστινιανοῦ (Analecta Vlatadon, iii; 1969), with summary in German. Krumbacher (ed. 2), pp. 57 f., 928–41; Bardenhewer, v, pp. 20–4. J. Bryce in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 538–59; M. Jugie, A.A., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2277–90, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 507–604, s.v.; F. Dölger in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), cols. 1227–9, s.v., with further bibl.

JUSTINIAN, The Code of. This revision, enlargement and rearrangement of the *Theodosian Code (q.v.) was published by *Justinian (q.v.) in 529. It survives only in a revised edition embodying later constitutions which dates from 534. It was supplemented by further constitutions known as 'Novellae' and also by the 'Digest' (533), a comprehensive set of passages from juristic text-books and commentaries of the classical period, and the 'Institutes of Justinian' (533), a revised and modified edition of those of Gaius with extracts from similar works. Together the Code, Novellae, Digest and Institutes constituted the so-called Corpus Juris Civilis, which became the authoritative and ordered statement of Roman Law, purged of all that was obsolete or contradictory. The sixth 'Novella' provides the classic formulation of the Byzantine theory concerning the relationship between Church and State. A distinction is drawn between the imperial authority (imperium) and the priesthood (sacerdotium), the former being concerned with human affairs and the latter with things divine; the two are regarded as closely interdependent, but, at least in theory, neither is subordinated to the other. The Code much influenced the development of *Canon Law in the West, esp. in the later Middle Ages.

Standard edd. of the Code by P. Krueger (Berlin, 1877); of the Digest by T. *Mommsen (2 vols., ib., 1870); of the Institutes by P. Krueger (ib., 1869); and of the Novellae by R. Schoell–G. Kroll (ib., 1895). The text of the Institutes was repr., with Eng. tr., by J. B. Moyle (2 vols., Oxford, 1883); Eng. tr. of the Digest, Books I–XV, by C. H. Munro (2 vols., Cambridge, 1904–9); Eng. tr. of the whole Civil Law by S. P. Scott (17 vols. in 7, Cincinnati [1932]; to be used with caution). R. Mayr, Vocabularium Codicis Justiniani (2 vols., Prague, 1923–5). P. Collinet, Études historiques sur le droit de Justinien (5 vols., 1912–53); H. S. Alivisatos, Die kirchliche Gesetzgebung des Kaisers Justinian I (Neue Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, xvii; 1913). F. Schulz, History of Roman Legal Science (Oxford, 1946), p. 317 f. G. Mollat in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 644–81, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Civilis', with bibl.

JUSTUS, St. (d. c. 627), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was sent to England in 601 in Pope *Gregory's second band of missionaries. When *Ethelbert created a second Kentish see at *Rochester in 604, St. *Augustine appointed Justus its first bishop. In the pagan reaction under Eadbald he fled, with *Mellitus, Bp. of London, to Gaul, but came back when the Kentish Church again received royal protection. On the death of Mellitus (624), Justus succeeded him at Canterbury, where he consecrated St. *Paulinus for mission work in Northumbria. He was buried at St. Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury. Feast day, 10 Nov.

The main source is *Bede, H.E., i. 29, ii. 3–9 and 18; cf. ed. C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), pp. 78 f., 81 f., 90, 92 f., 110. There is an 11th cent. life by a monk, *Goscelin, mainly based on Bede, pr. by H. *Delehaye, S.J., in AA.SS., Nov. IV (1925); pp. 535–7, with comm., pp. 532–5. W. *Stubbs in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 592 f., s.v. 'Justus (22)'.

JUVENAL (d. 458), Bp. of *Jerusalem from c. 422. Nothing is known of his early life. His chief ambition seems to have been to make *Jerusalem into a '*Patriarchal see' at the expense of the metropolitical see of *Caesarea and the 'Patriarchal see' of *Antioch. For this purpose he sided with *Cyril, Bp. of Alexandria, against *Nestorius at the Council of *Ephesus in 431, asserting that the Bp. of Antioch (John) 'ought to have obeyed the apostolic see of Jerusalem, by which the throne of Antioch should be corrected and judged'. But Cyril, though glad of his support, refused to further his claims. In the *Eutychian controversy he figured as the chief supporter of *Dioscorus, the successor of Cyril, in his violent proceedings at the *Latrocinium of Ephesus (449). But when two years later Dioscorus was tried at the Council of *Chalcedon, Juvenal went over to the winning side and voted for his condemnation. As a reward, perhaps, he secured the Council's recognition of Jerusalem as a Patriarchal see with jurisdiction over the whole of Palestine. On his return he was faced by a revolt organized by the monks who favoured Dioscorus, and only the action of the Imperial government enabled him to regain his see. In parts of the E. he is revered as a saint; feast day, 2 July.

S. Vaillé, A.A., 'Formation du patriarcat de Jérusalem' in É.O. (1910), pp. 325–36. F. M. Abel, O.P., 'St. Cyrille d'Alexandrie dans ses rapports avec la Palestine' in Kyrilliana, 444–1944 (Cairo, 1947), pp. 214–20. E. Honigmann, 'Juvenal of Jerusalem' in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, v (1950), pp. 209–279. E. Venables in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 595–8, s.v. 'Juvenalis (2)'; P. T. Camelot, O.P., in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), v (1960), col. 1231 f.

JUVENCUS, CAIUS VETTIUS AQUILINUS (early 4th cent.), Christian Latin poet. He was a Spanish presbyter of noble descent, who wrote c. 330 a harmony of the four Gospels in some 3,200 lines of hexameter verse, emphasizing the transitoriness of the created universe and contrasting it with the glory and eternity of the Christian hope. The author's purpose was evidently to provide Christian readers with religious poetry to take the place of the popular pagan works. In its execution his work shows at every turn the influence of the study of *Virgil.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL, xix, 9–388; crit. edd. of his Libri Evangeliorum IIII by C. Marold (Teubner ed., 1886) and J. Huemer (C.S.E.L., xxiv; 1891). K. Marold, 'Ueber das Evangelienbuch des Juvencus in seinem Verhältniss zum Bibeltext' in Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, xxxiii (1890), pp. 329–41. J. T. Hatfield, A Study of Juvencus (Johns Hopkins University Diss., Bonn, 1890). N. Hansson, Textkritisches zu Juvencus (Lund, 1950). Raby, p. 17 f., with bibl. p. 464. Altaner–Stuiber (1966), p. 405, for further bibl.

JUXON, WILLIAM (1582–1663), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, where he studied law, and in 1609 became Vicar of St. Giles, Oxford. In 1621 he succeeded his friend, W. *Laud, as president of St. John's College, and actively assisted him in his revision of the university statutes. In 1633 he succeeded him as Bp. of London. Though known to be a High Churchman, he had a reputation for tolerance, and this fact, combined with his integrity and generosity, led him to be trusted by Churchmen of all types. After Laud's imprisonment, he became the regular adviser of *Charles I, whom he attended at his execution (1649). A little later he was deprived of his bishopric; but otherwise he was practically unmolested under the Commonwealth. At the Restoration he was the obvious choice for the see of Canterbury, but survived for only three years.

W. H. Marah, Memoirs of Archbishop Juxon and his Times (1869). W. H. *Hutton in D.N.B., xxx (1892), pp. 233–7.

K

KABBALA. See Cabbala.

KAFTAN, JULIUS WILHELM MARTIN (1848–1926), Protestant theologian. A native of Schleswig, he became professor of systematic theology at Basle in 1881 and of apologetics and the philosophy of religion at Berlin in 1883. He sought to reinterpret the *Ritschlian Soteriology so as to allow an adequate place for personal experience in religion. Believing that St. Paul's system of theology was the outcome of reflection on his vision of Christ on the Damascus road, he held that the Atonement must be understood by mystical and ethical categories, and that there was no place in the doctrine of Christ's work for any notion of satisfaction or of the reconciliation of God with man (as contrasted with that of man with God). His writings include Das Wesen der christlichen Religion (1881), Die Wahrheit der christlichen Religion (1888), and a Dogmatik (1897 and many later editions). Among his more recent works were Kant, der Philosoph des Protestantismus (1905) and Jesus und Paulus (1907).

His elder brother, THEODOR KAFTAN (1847–1932), who was Generalsuperintendent for Schleswig from 1886 to 1917, was also a theologian of some influence, who held similar beliefs.

J. W. M. Kaftan, Neutestamentliche Theologie (1927; from his remains). Short autobiography in Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen, iv (1928), pp. 201–310. Notice by A. Titius in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, N.F., viii (1927), pp. 1–20.
On Theodor Kaftan, Erlebnisse und Beobachtungen . . . von ihm selbst erzählt (Kiel, 1924; ed. 2, Gütersloh, 1931).

KAGAWA, TOYOHIKO (1888–1960), Japanese Christian social reformer. He came of a wealthy family and received his early education in a Buddhist monastery. After conversion to Christianity and disinheritance by his family, he studied at the *Presbyterian seminary at Kobe from 1905 to 1908. Here he became acutely conscious of Christian responsibility in the face of existing social evils and spent several years among the poor in the bad slums of Shinkawa. In 1914 he went to Princeton, U.S.A., to study modern social techniques, and after returning to Japan in 1917 devoted himself entirely to the improvement of social conditions. In 1921 he founded the first Labour Union and the first Peasant Union in the country; in 1923 he organized relief work after the Yokohama earthquake; in 1928 he founded the National Anti-War League; and in 1930 he established the Kingdom of God Movement to promote conversions to Christianity. In 1940 he was imprisoned for a time as a pacifist. After the War he became a leader in the movement for democracy in Japan.

Kagawa expounded his ideals in innumerable writings, among them The Religion of Jesus (Eng. tr., 1931), New Life through God (Eng. tr., 1932), Christ and Japan (Eng. tr., 1934), Songs from the Slums (Eng. tr., 1935), Meditations on the Cross (Eng. tr., 1936), Brotherhood Economics (Rauschenbusch Lectures, 1937), and The Two Kingdoms (Eng. tr., 1941; another Eng. tr., New York [1941], as Behold the Man). They reflect the influence of many spiritual writers and mystics of the West, among them J. *Wesley, G. *Fox, and Mme *Guyon.

There is a biog. introd. by Eleanor M. Hinder–Helen F. Topping in J. F. Gressitt's trans. into English of Kagawa's Love the Law of Life (1930), pp. 1–37. W. Axling, Kagawa (1932; ed. 8 revised, 1946). C. J. Davey, Kagawa of Japan (1960).

KÄHLER, MARTIN (1835–1912), German theologian. He was born at Neuhausen in E. Prussia, the son of a *Lutheran pastor. He studied theology in the universities of Heidelberg, Tübingen and Halle. After three years as Privatdozent at Bonn, in 1867 he was appointed professor of systematic theology at Halle, where he remained for the rest of his career. His principal work was a major book on dogmatics, Die Wissenschaft der christlichen Lehre (1883), which took the doctrine of *justification as its central theme. He is chiefly remembered now for a collection of essays entitled Der sogenannte historische Jesus und der geschichtliche, biblische Christus (1892; extended 1896; abridged Eng. tr., 1964), in which he attacked the 19th cent. attempts to reconstruct the Jesus of history. Such attempts were, he claimed, just as much exercises in human speculation as the dogmatic christological theories against which their authors were reacting. The real Christ is the Christ of the Bible, and he is the Christ of the *kerygma, rather than of doctrine or of historical research. However, Kähler was not indifferent to the historical question. He claimed that the impression of the Lord in the NT is realistic, and that poetic imagination could not have produced a convincing picture of a unique sinless person. His views anticipated in some respects those of J. *Weiss, A. *Schweitzer and R. *Bultmann; they have been the subject of considerable recent study. He also contributed a number of important articles to P.R.E. (ed. 3).

The original 1892 ed. of Der sogenannte historische Jesus und der geschichtliche, biblische Christus was ed. E. Wolf (Munich, 1953); the expanded 1896 ed. by id. (ib., 1956); of this latter the first two essays were translated into English as The So-Called Historical Jesus and the Historic, Biblical Christ by C. E. Braaten (Philadelphia, 1964), with useful introd., pp. 1–38. Further works of Kähler ed. by his son, E. Kähler: Geschichte der protestantischen Dogmatik im 19. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1962), with list of his works, pp. 292–307, and Aufsätze zur Bibelfrage (ib., 1967). Anna Kähler (daughter, ed.), Theologe und Christ. Erinnerungen und Bekenntnisse von Martin Kähler (1926), incl. text of Kähler's autobiography for the years 1835–67, pp. 1–234. J. Wirsching, Gott in der Geschichte. Studien zur theologiegeschichtlichen Stellung und systematischen Grundlegung der Theologie Martin Kählers (Munich, 1963); C. Seiler, Die theologische Entwicklung Martin Kählers bis 1869 (Gütersloh, 1966). C. E. Braaten, 'Martin Kähler on the Historic, Biblical Christ' in id.–R. A. Harrisville (edd.), The Historical Jesus and the Kerygmatic Christ (Nashville, 1964), pp. 79–105. R. Hermann in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iii (1959), cols. 1081–4, s.v.

KAISERSWERTH. The band of Protestant *deaconesses in this Rhineland town was begun by T. Fliedner in 1836 to meet the need of the reformed Churches for an organization of women devoted to the care of the sick and the education of neglected children, on the same lines as the corresponding institutes in the RC Church. The house at Kaiserswerth trains three kinds of deaconesses, who devote themselves either to the care of the sick and the poor, or to teaching, or to parish work. Candidates must be unmarried or widows and undertake to remain in the institute for five years, and are governed by a clergyman who is assisted by a woman superior. The Kaiserswerth deaconesses not only supply numerous charitable institutions in Germany with workers, but also have branches in other places, e.g. at *Jerusalem, *Alexandria, and Cairo. See also Deaconess.

J. Disselhoff, Das Diakonissen-Mutterhaus zu Kaiserswerth a. Rhein und seine Töchterhäuser (rev. ed., 1903; Eng. tr., 1883).

KAMELAVCHION (Gk. καμηλαύχιον, καλυμμαύχιον). The black cylindrical hat worn by monks and clergy in the E. Church. In the Greek Church, clergy in major orders have a projecting brim round the top of the kamelavchion. In the Russian Church there is no brim, but the diameter at the top is slightly greater than at the bottom. See also Epanokamelavchion.

KANT, IMMANUEL (1724–1804), German philosopher. He was born and died at Königsberg in East Prussia and never went beyond the confines of the province. In early life he was attracted to the study of mathematics and physics, and retained interest in the natural sciences throughout his life. After some years as a private tutor, he became a Privatdozent at Königsberg University in 1755, and in 1770 Professor of Logic, holding the post until his death. His dissertation De Mundi Sensibilis et Intelligibilis Forma et Principiis (1770) marks an important stage in his development, but it was not until after another eleven years (during which Kant wrote practically nothing) that he expounded his epoch-making 'Critical Philosophy' in Der Kritik der reinen Vernunft (1781). Its treatment of the problems of speculative philosophy was carried further in his Prolegomena zu einer jeden künftigen Metaphysik (1783), and esp. in the second (and in essentials final) edition of the Kritik der reinen Vernunft (1787). The Kritik der praktischen Vernunft (1788) and the Kritik der Urtheilskraft (1790) applied the principles of the earlier Kritiken to the problems of morals and to those of teleology and aesthetics respectively. In 1792 the divergence of Kant's teaching from orthodox *Lutheranism brought him into difficulties with the Prussian government. He was not prevented, however, from completing the publication of his Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft in 1793, the last of his large-scale works. His later writings include a monograph, Zum ewigen Frieden (1795). In his last years, as shown by his MSS. (publd. in their fullest form by E. Adickes as Kant's Opus Postumum, 1920), Kant moved towards a position more akin to that of B. *Spinoza.

It would seem that Kant's main object was to discover a definitive rationale for the admitted validity of mathematics and natural science (esp. the *Newtonian physics). This meant finding a way out of the deadlock arising from the co-existence, on the one hand, of Continental 'rationalism' (R. *Descartes, B. Spinoza, G. W. *Leibniz, and C. *Wolff), and, on the other, of English empiricism (J. *Locke, G. *Berkeley, D. *Hume). He felt that there could be only one solution, namely that it was the understanding (Verstand) which prescribed to nature her laws. The validity of the causal law ('every event has a cause') rests not on some constraining principle in the external world of nature, but in the fact that consciousness is so constituted that it cannot but so interpret the empirical data which it receives. Knowledge is thus the result of a synthesis between an intellectual act (through the twelve 'categories') and what is presented to the mind from without. The latter is received by the understanding under the two 'forms of perception' (Anschauungsformen) of space and time.

In holding that all knowledge required an ingredient derived from nature, Kant cut at the root of traditional metaphysics, with its claim to provide knowledge of subjects which wholly transcended nature. For being thus constituted the human mind could have no knowledge of the three central 'Ideas' (Ideen) of Metaphysics: God, Freedom, and Immortality. The three traditional proofs of God's existence (*Ontological, *Cosmological, and *Teleological) were all invalidated.

But while insisting that Natural Theology was an illusion, Kant believed that the validity of the Ideas could be established in another way. The stern voice of conscience in man assures him of truths which reason is impotent to establish. Kant summarized this belief in his dictum: 'I had to remove knowledge to make room for faith.' The sense of duty assures us of Freedom. And correlative with this belief in Freedom are those in Immortality and in a Divine Being, since the maladjustment of virtue and happiness in the present world requires a righteous God who will vindicate the claims of justice, and another world for His operation.

In his treatise on Religion (1793) Kant elaborated his ethical doctrines in relation to the traditional theology of Lutheranism. Its four sections treat of: (1) the existence of radical evil in human nature; (2) the conflict of the good and evil principles; (3) the victory of the good principle and the foundation of a Kingdom of God on earth; and (4) religion and priestcraft. Despite his constant use of accustomed theological terminology, his presentation of religion did not transcend the limits of morality, and he expressly defined religion as the recognition of all our duties as Divine commands. The moral law had no purpose beyond itself. There was no place for mystical experience, no need for a personal redeemer and no place (as in traditional Christianity) for the historical as such. Kant once expressed the view that as a man advanced in moral perception he found the practice of prayer increasingly unprofitable. Miracles, if they ever happened, could have no religious significance.

Kant made no attempt to round off his beliefs into a system. This task was soon undertaken by others, who constructed on a Kantian basis a series of grandly conceived systems. J. G. *Fichte, F. W. J. *Schelling, and G. W. F. *Hegel (*Absolute Idealism) were all directly inspired by and looked back to Kant. In the latter part of the 19th cent. there arose in Germany a widespread and diversified philosophical movement seeking inspiration in a more literal interpretation of Kant. In Great Britain a similar, but independent, movement drew its inspiration from Kant and Hegel conjointly, its leading members being T. H. *Green, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet, and this in turn had a marked influence on Anglican theology (C. C. J. *Webb, W. *Temple, A. E. *Taylor). The moralism of Kant and his critique of metaphysics have made him congenial to some Protestant theologians. RC philosophical theologians tend to see in Kant esp. the critic of the (scholastic) Proofs of God's Existence and hence to be very critical of him.

Collected edition of Kant's Werke by G. Hartenstein (1867–9). The best critical edition is that of the Berlin Academy (1900 ff.; still unfinished). Most of the individual writings are obtainable in convenient form, with introductions and notes, in the Philosophische Bibliothek (publd. F. Meiner, Leipzig). His more important writings exist in English translations. The best version of the Critique of Pure Reason is by N. Kemp Smith (1929). From the vast literature, the following is a small selection: J. Watson, Kant and his English Critics (1881); W. Wallace, Kant (1882); H. Cohen, Kants Theorie der Erfahrung (2nd ed., 1885); E. *Caird, The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant (2 vols., 1889); H. A. Prichard, Kant's Theory of Knowledge (1909); N. K. Smith, A Commentary to Kant's 'Critique of Pure Reason' (1918); A. C. Ewing, Kant's Treatment of Causality (1924); C. C. J. Webb, Kant's Philosophy of Religion (1926); F. E. England, Kant's Conception of God, with a translation of the 'Nova Dilucidatio' (1929); A. D. *Lindsay, Kant (1934); H. J. Paton, Kant's Metaphysic of Experience (2 vols., 1936); H. J. de Vleeschauer, La Déduction transcendentale dans l'œuvre de Kant (3 vols., 1934–7); id., L'Évolution de la pensée kantienne (1939; Eng. tr., 1962). A. C. Ewing, A Short Commentary on Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (1938); T. D. Weldon, Introduction to Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (1945); H. J. Paton, The Categorical Imperative. A Study in Kant's Moral Philosophy [1947]; A. H. Smith, Kantian Studies (1947); Gabrielle Rabel, Kant (Oxford, 1963). Überweg, iii, pp. 488–620, with bibl. pp. 709–58; F. Copleston, S.J., A History of Philosophy, vi (1960), pp. 180–439, with bibl., pp. 466–71. E. *Troeltsch in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 653–9, s.v.; P. Charles, S.J., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2297–331, s.v. 'Kant et le kantisme' (on theological aspects of Kant's writings); W. H. Walsh in E.B. (ed. 1966), xiii, pp. 217–23.

KARAITES (Heb. קָרָא, 'to read'). A Jewish sect, dating from the 8th cent. A.D., which rejects rabbinical tradition and the *Talmud, and bases its teaching solely on the Scriptures. It survives mainly in Russia and Israel, and probably numbers c. 13,000 members.

The leading authority is S. A. Poznański (1864–1921), whose works are listed in the Livre d'hommage à la mémoire du Dr Samuel Poznański (1927), pp. xxix–xxxix. Z. Ankori, Karaites in Byzantium (New York, 1959). S. Hofman in Encyclopædia Judaica, x (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 761–85, with bibl.

KARLSTADT. See Carlstadt.

KATAVASIA (Gk. καταβασία, from καταβαίνω, 'go down'). In the E. Church, the concluding stanza of an ode of the *canon. On feast days there is a katavasia at the end of each ode; on ordinary weekdays, after the 3rd, 6th, 8th, and 9th odes only.

KATHISMA (Gk. κάθισμα, from καθῆσθαι, 'to be seated'). A term in the E. Church applied to (1) each of the twenty sections into which the Byzantine Psalter is divided; (2) a brief liturgical hymn sung during *Orthros at the end of each kathisma of the Psalter.

KATTENBUSCH, FERDINAND (1851–1935), historian of the Creeds and theologian. A pupil of A. *Ritschl, he became professor of systematic theology at Giessen (1878), Göttingen (1904) and Halle (1906). His principal work, Das apostolische Symbol (i, 1894; ii, 1900), was an erudite treatise built on the researches of C. P. *Caspari, which brought together a vast body of literary material, ancient and modern, on the history of the *Apostles' Creed. He dated the Old Roman Creed at c. A.D. 100. Many of his views, however, lacked clear outlines and changed as he was writing the work. Kattenbusch also contributed to the history of the Reformation Confessions and M. *Luther's personal theology and, in his later years, concerned himself with systematic theology. Among his many other publications were Luthers Lehre vom unfreien Willen und von der Prädestination (1875; ed. 2, 1905); 'Der Quellort der Kirchenidee' in the Harnack Festgabe (1921; the Quellort was Dan. 7); Die Vorzugsstellung des Petrus und der Charakter der Urgemeinde (1922); and Das Unbedingte und der Unbegreifbare (1927).

Autobiography in E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart, v (1929), pp. 85–121. O. Ritschl, 'Ferdinand Kattenbusch als Persönlichkeit, Forscher und Denker' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, cvii (1936), pp. 289–311.

KEBLE, JOHN (1792–1866), *Tractarian leader and author of *The Christian Year (q.v.). He was the son of John Keble, vicar of Coln St. Aldwyn, a priest of the High Church school. Born at Fairford, after a brilliant career at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was elected in 1811 at the age of 19 to one of the much coveted Fellowships of Oriel. In 1815 he was ordained deacon and in 1816 priest. In 1817 he became a tutor at Oriel, but resigned in 1823 to assist his father in his country cure in the Cotswolds. There he composed the poems which, at the insistence of close friends, he published in 1827 as The Christian Year. In 1831 he was elected professor of poetry at Oxford in succession to H. H. *Milman. With many of his friends there and elsewhere (J. H. *Newman, I. *Williams, R. H. *Froude, E. B. *Pusey, W. *Palmer of Worcester College, J. B. *Mozley, H. J. Rose), he became increasingly conscious of the dangers threatening the C of E from the reforming and liberal movements, and on 14 July 1833 preached before the University an assize sermon on National Apostasy (q.v.), directed esp. against the proposed suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. From now on he took a leading part in the Oxford Movement. He co-operated with Newman in the issue of the Tracts for the Times, to which he himself contributed Nos. 4, 13, 40, 52, 54, 57, 60, 78 and 89. No. 4, which bore the title 'Adherence to the Apostolical Succession the Safest Course', was a brief but forceful appeal to the clergy to take a high view of their privileges and duties. In 1836 he issued a learned edition of R. *Hooker's Works and in 1838, with Newman and Pusey, he became one of the editors of the Library of the Fathers*, to which he himself contributed the translation of St. *Irenaeus (publd. posthumously, 1872). His publication, with Newman, of the Remains (1838–9) of their close friend R. H. Froude (q.v.) provoked a storm. His tract No. 89, 'On the Mysticism attributed to the Early Fathers of the Church' (1840–1), a defence of Alexandrian theology and religious 'reserve', also met with a very hostile reception. After the cessation of the Tracts, he continued the close friend and adviser of Newman until his secession in 1845.

After 1845 Keble remained the firm associate of Pusey and co-operated with him in keeping the High Church Movement steadily attached to the C of E. In 1857 he published two pamphlets against the Divorce Act, as well as a treatise On Eucharistical Adoration, defending the doctrine of the *Real Presence from its attack in the G. A. *Denison case. In 1863 he issued a Life of T. *Wilson, Bp. of *Sodor and Man (d. 1755). His later poetry included contributions to the Lyra Apostolica (1836), an English rendering of the Psalter (1839) and Lyra Innocentium (1846).

Meanwhile, since 1836, Keble had been Vicar of Hursley, near Winchester. He was never offered (and never wished for) preferment, remaining at Hursley, a devoted parish priest, for the rest of his life. He died at Bournemouth on 29 Mar. 1866. His beauty of character impressed all who came into contact with him, and his advice on spiritual matters, always given with great diffidence, was widely sought after. In 1870 Keble College, Oxford, was founded in his memory, with E. S. *Talbot as the first warden. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 29 Mar.

A set of Letters of Spiritual Counsel and Guidance (Oxford, 1870) was ed. by R. J. Wilson. Memoir, with many extracts from letters, by Sir J. T. Coleridge (ib., 1869). Lives by W. *Lock (London, 1893); E. F. L. Wood, later Lord Halifax (ib., 1909); K. Ingram (ib., 1933); and Georgina Battiscombe (ib., 1963). H. P. *Liddon, Clerical Life and Work (1894), serm. xiii, and R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1890), ch. ii. S. L. Ollard in D.E.C.H. (ed. 3), pp. 314–16.

KEIM, KARL THEODOR (1825–78), Protestant historian and Biblical scholar. After studying under F. C. *Baur, he became lecturer at *Tübingen in 1851 and pastor at Esslingen in Württemberg in 1856. From 1860 to 1873 he was professor of theology at Zürich, from 1873 till shortly before his death at Giessen. In his earlier years his chief interests were the history of the 4th cent. and of the Reformation. His most important works of this period were 'Die römischen Toleranzedikte für das Christenthum (311–13)', in the Theologische Jahrbücher, xi (1852), pp. 207–59, Schwäbische Reformationsgeschichte bis zum Augsburger Reichstag (1855), and Der Uebertritt Konstantins des Grossen (1862). After his appointment to Zürich, Keim concerned himself esp. with the Apostolic age and the doctrine of the Person of Christ. His principal work, Die Geschichte Jesu von Nazareth (3 vols., 1867–72), is a somewhat rationalistic presentation of the life of Christ, but less radical than that of the Tübingen school in which he had been educated. He rejected the supernatural element in the Gospels, including the Resurrection. He denied any historicity to the Fourth Gospel, but asserted the priority of Mt. His view of the Person of Christ exercised considerable influence on the more moderate liberal school of Continental Protestant theology.

J. A. Porret, Trois Vies de Jésus. Strauss, Renan, Keim (Geneva, 1893), pp. 33–52. A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906), pp. 209–12 (Eng. tr., 1910, pp. 210–14). H. Ziegler in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 198–202, s.v.

KEITH, GEORGE (c. 1639–1716), 'Christian *Quaker'. Born in Aberdeen, he was educated for the *Presbyterian ministry at Marischal College, but in 1662 became a Quaker. After several imprisonments for preaching he eventually emigrated to America in 1688. There he became suspect among his fellow-Quakers for denying the 'sufficiency of the light within', and was interdicted from preaching. He then proceeded to gather followers around him whom he called the 'Christian Quakers'. In 1694 he returned to England, and for the next six years administered Baptism and the Lord's Supper, though still professing Quaker convictions. In 1700 he conformed to the Anglican Church; and, after ordination, he conducted from 1702 to 1704 a successful mission in America as one of the first missionaries sent out by the *S.P.G. In 1705 he became rector of Edburton in W. Sussex. His writings include *The Deism of William Penn and his Brethren (1699) and The Standard of the Quakers examined (1702), the latter directed against R. *Barclay.

E. W. Kirby, George Keith, 1638–1716 (The American Historical Association, New York and London, 1942), with full bibl. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxx (1892), pp. 318–21, s.v., with further refl.

KELLS, The Book of. A finely ornamented MS. of the Gospels, so named from the monastery of Kells (or Kenanna) in Co. Meath, where it was written. Its script is the finest specimen of writing in an Irish hand in existence. Acc. to tradition, it belonged to St. *Columba (d. 597), but it really dates from c. 800. The MS. is now at *Trinity College, Dublin (A. 1. 6).

Facsimile, partly in colour, with introductions by E. H. Alton–P. Meyer (3 vols., Berne, 1950–1). Sir Edward Sullivan, The Book of Kells (1914; with twenty-four coloured plates). A. Gwynn, S.J., 'Some Notes on the History of the Book of Kells' in Irish Historical Studies, ix (1954), pp. 131–61. Partial reproduction in colour, with introd. by F. Henry (London, 1974). J. Dunn in C.E., viii (1910), p. 614 f.; and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1, 1928), cols. 713–18, both s.v. 'Kells'.

KEMPE, JOHN (c. 1380–1454), Abp. of *Canterbury. He first became prominent in the ecclesiastical courts and by 1414 he was *Dean of Arches. He filled in turn the sees of *Rochester (1419), *Chichester (1421), London (1421), *York (1425), and Canterbury (1452). He was a prominent member of the Council of Regency for *Henry VI, in which he was a supporter of H. *Beaufort. During the years following 1430 he was a strong but ineffectual advocate of a policy of peace with France. In 1439 he was made cardinal. In his later years he espoused the Lancastrian cause, and checked the Kentish rebellion of 1450; but he died before the struggle was far advanced. He was far more a politician than a Churchman, and took little interest in the care of his dioceses.

W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, v (1867), pp. 188–267. W. Ullmann, 'Eugenius IV, Cardinal Kemp, and Archbishop Chichele' in J. A. Watt and others (edd.), Medieval Studies Presented to Aubrey Gwynn, S.J. (Dublin, 1961), pp. 359–83. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xxx (1892), pp. 384–8, s.v. 'Kemp, John' [date of death erroneously given as 1447]; B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1031–2.

KEMPE, MARGERY (c. 1373–after 1433), author of the Book of Margery Kempe. Born at Lynn, Norfolk, the daughter of John Burnham (d. 1413), who was several times Mayor of Lynn, c. 1393 she married John Kempe (d. prob. 1431), burgess of Lynn, by whom she had 14 children. After she had received several visions following a period of madness, she and her husband went on a pilgrimage to *Canterbury. Her fervent denunciation of all pleasure aroused stiff opposition and the first taunts of *Lollardy, which later developed into formal accusations. In 1413 Margery and John took vows of chastity before Philip *Repingdon, Bp. of *Lincoln. She publicly rebuked Abp. *Arundel for the behaviour of his followers. In 1413 she went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. On her return she was prob. encouraged by *Julian of Norwich. She visited *Compostela in 1417 and *Norway and Danzig in 1433.

The Book of Margery Kempe, which is almost the sole source of information about the authoress, describes her travels and mystical experiences. She was endowed with the gift of tears and seems to have been favoured with singular signs of Christ's love, whereby for long periods she enjoyed consciousness of close communion with Him and developed a strong compassion for the sins of the world. Only one MS. of the Book, which was at one time in the possession of the *Carthusian house of Mountgrace and at least since 1754 has been in the Butler-Bowdon family, is now known to exist. Unrepresentative selections, prob. from another MS., were published by W. de Worde (prob. 1501).

Worde's extracts reissued by H. Pepwell (London, 1521), repr. in E. G. Gardner (ed.), The Cell of Self-Knowledge (1910), pp. 51–9. Crit. ed. of the whole book by S. B. Meech–H. E. Allen (E.E.T.S., Orig. Ser., ccxii ff., 1940 ff.); modern version by W. Butler-Bowdon (London, 1936). K. Cholmeley, Margery Kempe. Genius and Mystic (1947); M. [S. F.] Thornton, Margery Kempe. An Example in the English Pastoral Tradition (1960); Louise Collis, The Apprentice Saint (1964). H. Thurston, S.J., 'Margery the Astonishing' in Month, clxviii (1936), pp. 446–56, repr. in Surprising Mystics (1955), pp. 27–37; E. I. Watkin, 'In Defence of Margery Kempe' in Downside Review, lix (1941), pp. 243–63, repr. in Poets and Mystics (1953), pp. 104–35; [M.] D. Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 138–50; E. Colledge, O.S.A., 'Margery Kempe' in Month, N.S., xxviii (1962), pp. 16–29, repr. in J. Walsh, S.J. (ed.), Pre-Reformation English Spirituality [1965], pp. 210–23.

KEMPIS, THOMAS À. See Thomas à Kempis.

KEN, THOMAS (1637–1711), Bp. of *Bath and Wells. He was educated at Winchester and Hart Hall, Oxford, and in 1657 became a Fellow of New College, Oxford. After several pastoral cures he taught at Winchester College from 1672. Here he wrote a manual of devotion for boys and possibly his two famous morning and evening hymns, 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun' and 'Glory to Thee, my God, this night' (E.H., 257 and 267). In 1679 *Charles II appointed him chaplain to Princess Mary at The Hague, where he braved the anger of William of Orange in a matrimonial case. In 1683 as chaplain to Charles II he refused the use of his house to the royal mistress, Nell Gwyn. The King respected his boldness and, in 1684, conferred on him the bishopric of Bath and Wells, and it was Ken who gave the King absolution on his deathbed. Though one of the *Seven Bishops who refused to read the *Declaration of Indulgence at the command of *James II, he declined to take the oath to William. Deposition from his see followed, and Ken then allied himself with the *Nonjurors. For the rest of his life he lived in retirement, refusing the offer of reinstatement on the death of Kidder (1703), who had held the see since his deposition. He opposed, however, the consecration of further nonjuring bishops. He lived an ascetic life as a celibate, and, true to the Laudian tradition, he wrote in his will: 'I die in the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Faith, professed by the whole Church, before the disunion of East and West: more particularly I die in the communion of the Church of England, as it stands distinguished from all Papal and Puritan Innovations.' His Exposition on the Church Catechism; or, The Practice of Divine Love (1685) is a classic expression of Laudian doctrine. Feast day in ASB, 20 Mar.; in American BCP (1979), 21 Mar.

[Poetical] Works ed. W. Hawkins (4 vols., London, 1721); Prose Works ed. J. T. Round (ib., 1838), with life by W. Hawkins (orig. publd., London, 1713) repr., pp. 1–23. Other lives by W. L. Bowles (2 vols. bound in 1, London, 1830), J. L. Anderson (anon., London, 1851), E. H. Plumptre (2 vols., ib., 1888; ed. 2, 1890), F. A. Clarke ('Leaders of Religion', London, 1896), and H. A. L. Rice (London, 1958). E. Marston, Thomas Ken and Izaak Walton (1908), pp. 3–78. W. Hunt in D.N.B., xxx (1892), pp. 399–404.

KENITES. An obscure Semitic clan which belonged to the south of Palestine. It had several associations with the Hebrews, esp. the tribe of Judah, e.g. *Moses' father-in-law was a Kenite (Jgs. 1. 16) and the *Rechabites were apparently of Kenite origin (1 Chron. 2. 55); and it has sometimes been held that they exercised an important influence on the shaping of Hebrew religion. The name may be associated with 'Cain' (Gen. 4. 1).

KENNETT, ROBERT HATCH (1864–1932), OT and Semitic scholar. He was educated at Merchant Taylors School and Queens' College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1888. From 1903 until his death he was Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of *Ely. He became a well-known figure in OT scholarship by his unconventional theses, e.g. a late dating for *Deuteronomy and the defence of a *Maccabaean date for the Pss. and other portions of the OT. His writings include two series of Schweich Lectures (publd. in 1910 and 1933), a collection of Old Testament Essays (1928), and many other essays and articles.

Collection of his Essays, under the title The Church of Israel, posthumously ed. S. A. *Cook (Cambridge, 1933), with study of Kennett's 'Contribution to Biblical Research', pp. xv–liii, and list of his chief writings, p. lv f. Id. in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), p. 505 f.

KENNETT, WHITE (1660–1728), Bp. of *Peterborough. Educated at *Westminster and at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, he was successively vicar of Ambrosden, Oxon (1685), tutor and vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall (c. 1690), Archdeacon of Huntingdon (1701), and Dean (1707) and Bp. (1718) of Peterborough. He was an active supporter of the Revolution of 1689, became a leading Low Churchman, and in the *Bangorian controversy opposed the proceedings against B. *Hoadly. He was, however, a close friend of G. *Hickes the *Nonjuror, whom he encouraged in the preparation of his Thesaurus. A keen antiquary, he was the author of a long list of works, including sermons. Among them were Parochial Antiquities (1695; a history of Ambrosden, &c.), Ecclesiastical Synods and Parliamentary Convocations (1701), Compleat History of England (1706), and Register and Chronicle, Ecclesiastical and Civil (1728). Kennett urged that in every collegiate church a dignity should be reserved for a student of its antiquities, and founded an Antiquarian and Historical Library for the use of his cathedral.

Many of Kennett's valuable unpublished collections are preserved in the British Museum. Anonymous life [by William Newton] (London, 1730). Modern life by G. V. Bennett (Thirlwall Prize Essay for 1955; C.H.S., 1957). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), pp. 2–6.

KENNICOTT, BENJAMIN (1718–83), Biblical scholar and Hebraist. By the generosity of friends he was enabled to enter Wadham College, Oxford, in 1744, where, while still an undergraduate, he published two dissertations. From 1747 to 1771 he was a Fellow of Exeter College, from 1767 to 1783 Radcliffe Librarian, and from 1770 till his death Canon of Christ Church. His life-work was the critical study of the Hebrew text of the OT, in which he was assisted by collations of MSS. from many parts of Europe. His wife, whom he married in 1771, gave him considerable help in his researches. Their fruits were collected in his Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum cum variis lectionibus (2 vols., 1776–80), a work which established the important negative conclusion that the variants in the Heb. MSS. of the OT are so slight as to be of minimal importance for establishing the correct text.

W. McKane, 'Benjamin Kennicott: An Eighteenth-Century Researcher' in J.T.S., N.S., xxviii (1977), pp. 445–464. W. Michels in Dict. Bibl., iii (1903), cols. 1887–9, s.v.

KENOTIC THEORIES. Certain theories which are concerned to explain the condescension involved in the Incarnation. The title comes from the Greek verb (κενόω) in Phil. 2. 7, translated in the RV 'emptied himself'. A number of 19th cent. *Lutheran theologians held that the Divine Son abandoned His attributes of deity, such as omnipotence, omniscience, and cosmic sovereignty, in order to become man. A more moderate theory, defended by C. *Gore, maintained that, within the sphere of the Incarnation, the deity so restrained its activity as to allow the existence in the Lord of a limited and genuinely human consciousness. Traditional orthodoxy has generally admitted a self-emptying of the Lord's deity only in the sense that, while remaining unimpaired, it accepted union with a physically limited humanity.

The early exponents of the modern theory were G. Thomasius (Beiträge zur kirchlichen Christologie, 1845, and Christi Person und Werke, 1853) and W. F. Gess (Die Lehre von der Person Christi, 1854). Gore's modified form of this appears in his *Bampton Lectures and, more fully, in his essay 'The Consciousness of Our Lord in His Mortal Life' in Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895), pp. 69–226. Imp. artt. by F. *Loofs in P.R.E. (ed. 3), x (1901), pp. 246–63 and in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 680–7; and esp. the valuable study by P. Henry, S.J., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 7–161, s.v. 'Kenose', with bibl. Cf. also E. H. Gifford, The Incarnation. A Study of Phil. ii. 5–11 (1897), and W. *Sanday, Christologies Ancient and Modern (1910), esp. pp. 71–8. D. G. Dawe, 'A Fresh Look at the Kenotic Christologies' in Scottish Journal of Theology, xv (1962), pp. 337–49, with further reff. See also works cited under Christology and comm. on Philippians, cited s.v.

KENSIT, JOHN (1853–1902), Protestant propagandist. An early supporter of the more extreme type of Protestantism, he started the City Protestant bookshop in Paternoster Row in 1885 and later used the Churchman's Magazine for the propagation of his opinions. In 1890 he became secretary of the newly founded 'Protestant Truth Society' and from that date took an increasingly violent and individualist stand against what he believed to be romanizing tendencies in the C of E. From 1898 to 1902 he organized resistance to the growth of 'ritualism' in the dioceses of London (e.g. at St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate) and Liverpool, causing considerable friction and disturbance wherever he went. At the general election of 1900 he unsuccessfully contested Brighton as an Independent Conservative.

J. C. Wilcox, John Kensit, Reformer and Martyr [c. 1903].

KENT, Maid of. See Barton, Elizabeth.

KENTIGERN, St. (d. 603), also known as St. Mungo, missionary in Scotland. Acc. to late but perhaps not untrustworthy sources, Kentigern, the grandson of a British prince in S. Scotland, was brought up by St. Serf in a monastic school at Culross on the Firth of Forth; later he became a missionary to the Britons of Strathclyde, and was consecrated their bishop; after being driven out by persecution, he preached in Cumbria and then in Wales (where he is said to have founded the monastery at *St. Asaph); he eventually returned to Scotland, where he was active in planting or restoring Christianity in the district around Glasgow. His reputed tomb is in Glasgow Cathedral. Feast day, 13 Jan.

Fragment of the Life by an unknown 12th cent. author pr. by C. I[nnes] in the Registrum Episcopatus Glasguensis, i (for the Maitland Club, 1843), pp. lxxviii–lxxxvi. The life by Jocelin, monk of Furness (c. 1185), is to be found in J. Pinkerton, Vitae Antiquae Sanctorum qui habitaverunt in ea parte Britanniae nunc vocata Scotia (1789), pp. 198–297 (Eng. tr. by W. M. Metcalfe, 1895, pp. 175–280). Both repr. with trans. in A. P. Forbes, Lives of S. Ninian and S. Kentigern (1874; The Historians of Scotland, vol. v). K. H. Jackson, 'The Sources for the Life of St. Kentigern' in Nora K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 273–357. G. W. Sprott in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), p. 26 f.

KEPLER, JOHANN (1571–1630), German astronomer. He was educated at *Tübingen, where he received instruction in *Copernican principles, and in 1594 was appointed professor of mathematics at Graz. In 1600 he went to Prague, to Tycho Brahe, and there he became court astronomer in 1601. In 1613 he took part in the Diet of Ratisbon, where he defended the Gregorian reform of the calendar against the many attacks of his fellow-Protestants. He was led to his discovery of the three laws of planetary motion, to which his fame is chiefly due, by *Neoplatonist mystical doctrines. His understanding of nature was essentially pantheistic, despite his belief in the traditional authority of the Bible, and he held the world to be an order expressing the being of God Himself, particularly in the relations between the sun, the image of God the Father, and the planets. The appearance of a new star in 1604–5 caused him to propose in his De Jesu Christi Servatoris Nostri Vero Anno Natalitio (1606) and later writings a new theory concerning the star of the *Magi, which he tried to explain by the unusual conjunction of Mars, Saturn, and Jupiter in the sign of the Taurus, calculated by him for the beginning of the year 6 B.C.

Works ed. C. Frisch (8 vols., Frankfurt a.M., 1858–71), also ed. W. von Dyck–M. Caspar–F. Hammer (22 vols., Munich, 1937 ff.). Letters ed. M. Caspar–W. von Dyck (2 vols., Munich and Berlin, 1930). M. Caspar, Johann Kepler (Stuttgart, 1948; Eng. tr., 1959); Carola Baumgardt, Johannes Kepler. Life and Letters (1952). L. Schuster, Johann Kepler und die grossen kirchlichen Streitfragen seiner Zeit (1888); L. Günther, Kepler und die Theologie (1905). Johann Kepler, 1571–1630. A Tercentenary Commemoration of his Life and Work. A Series of Papers prepared under the Auspices of the History of Science Society (Baltimore, 1931), with bibl. of his works pp. 86–112 and comm. pp. 113–33. K. Stöckl (ed.), Kepler-Festschrift. Teil 1 (Berichte des Naturwissenschaftlichen Vereins zu Regensburg, xix, 1930; all publd.). M. Caspar (ed.), Bibliographia Kepleriana (Munich, 1936; ed. 2, 1968).

KERYGMA (Gk. κήρυγμα, 'preaching'). The element of proclamation in Christian apologetic, as contrasted with '*Didache' or its instructional aspects.

KERYGMA PETRI. See Peter, Preaching of.

KESWICK CONVENTION. An annual gathering of Evangelical Christians for prayer, Bible study, and addresses. It began at Keswick in 1875 with the aim of 'the promotion of Practical Holiness'. Its motto is 'All One in Christ Jesus'. The meeting is for a week every year, and it attracts visitors from many countries.

C. F. Harford (ed.), The Keswick Convention [1907]; W. B. Sloan, These Sixty Years. The Keswick Convention (1935); S. Barabas, So Great Salvation. The History and Message of the Keswick Convention (1952). The Convention also publishes an annual report, Keswick Week.

KETHUBIM (Heb. כְּתוּבִים, 'writings'). The Jewish name for the third and last division of the OT, more commonly known to Christian scholars as the '*Hagiographa' (q.v.).

KETTELER, WILHELM EMMANUEL (1811–1877), Bp. of Mainz from 1850. Ordained priest in 1844, he made it his main life-work to free the RC Church in Germany from state control. His keen interest in social questions is reflected in his Die Arbeiterfrage und das Christenthum (1864). He also took a prominent part at the *Vatican Council of 1869–70, opposing the dogma of Infallibility on the ground that its promulgation was 'inopportune' and returning to Germany before the voting took place. After the decrees had been promulgated, however, he accepted them (Aug. 1870). In the *Kulturkampf he warmly and successfully championed the cause of the Church.

Writings ed. J. Mumbauer (3 vols., Kempten, 1911). Sermons ed. I. M. Raich (2 vols., Mainz, 1878); correspondence ed. id. (ib., 1879). Lives by O. Pfülf (3 vols., Mainz, 1899), F. Vigener (Munich, 1924), W. Geiger (Freiburg i.Br., 1933), and L. Lenhart (2 vols., Mainz, 1966–7), with bibl. Id. in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), cols. 128–30, with extensive bibl., and in N.C.E., viii (1967), p. 170 f.

KETTLEWELL, JOHN (1653–95), devotional writer and *Nonjuror. He was educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, and in 1675 became a Fellow of Lincoln College, where he was tutor from 1677 to 1684. He was ordained in 1678 and about the same time wrote his first book, The Measures of Christian Obedience, which, however, was not published till 1681. It had a great success and led to his appointment as vicar of Coleshill, Warwickshire, in 1682. In 1687 he wrote a popular devotional work, The Practical Believer, which was widely read. During the revolution of 1689 he preached against rebellion under any pretext, an attitude which resulted in his being deprived of his living in 1690. He spent his remaining years in retirement in London, writing devotional books and controversial tracts. His Companion for the Persecuted (1693) was esteemed as a book of comfort among his Nonjuring fellow-sufferers. His advocacy of a relief fund for the deprived clergy came to nothing owing to the opposition of the government.

Complete Works (2 vols., 1719). [F. Lee,] Memoirs of the Life of Mr. John Kettlewell (1718; reprinted in K.'s works); T. T. *Carter (ed.), The Life and Times of John Kettlewell (1895). W. D. Macray in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), pp. 80–2.

KEVIN, St. (d. 618), also named 'Coemgen', Abbot of Glendalough, Co. Wicklow. The sources for his life are late and untrustworthy. Acc. to these, he was born in Leinster of royal descent, given the name of Kevin (i.e. 'fair-begotten') at his baptism, and educated by St. *Petrock during the latter's stay in Ireland. For a time he settled at Disert-Coemgen, where Refert church now stands, and later established his permanent foundation at Glendalough, the parent of several other monasteries and destined to become, with its seven churches, one of the chief centres of pilgrimage in Ireland. He was on intimate terms with St. Kieran of Clonmacnoise. He is said to have lived to the great age of 120. Feast day, 3 June.

Three Irish lives pr. by C. Plummer in Bethada Naem nÉrenn (1922), i, pp. 125–67; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 121–61. One of the Latin lives is contained in C. Plummer, Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae, i (1910), pp. 234–57, the other in W. W. Heist (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae ex Codice olim Salmanticensi (Subsidia Hagiographica, xxviii; 1965), pp. 361–5.

KHOMIAKOFF, ALEXIS STEPANOVICH (1804–60), Russian philosophical theologian. He was born at Moscow into a family which fled with him from the city in 1812, when their house was burnt by the French. Later he studied literature and mathematics at the university of Moscow. After two attempts at a military career (1822 and 1828), he abandoned it for the study of art. After marriage in 1836 he found his vocation in the service of 'true Russia' and became with Ivan Kireevsky one of the founders of the Slavophil movement, which he sought to build up on Orthodox Christianity. He attacked the scholastic rationalism ('Aristotelianism') of W. philosophy and was esp. critical of German *Idealism (F. W. J. *Schelling and G. W. F. *Hegel), then influential in Russia. Over against the RC ('unity without freedom') and Protestant ('freedom without unity') conceptions of the Church, Khomiakoff saw in the Orthodox Church an organic society of which Christ was the Head and the Holy Spirit the Soul and whose essence was 'freedom in the spirit at one with itself'. Of this Church the essential quality was inward holiness, and those who partook of it could be saved even though not in external communion with it. Here, as in other dogmatic matters, Khomiakoff's liberal and independent attitude came under ecclesiastical suspicion during his own life-time; but since his death, and in particular during the present century, his conception of the Church (often summed up in the term '*sobornost') has exercised considerable influence on Orthodox ecclesiology, Greek as well as Russian. His writings were largely occasional. From 1856 until his death he collaborated in the Russkaia Beseda, a review newly founded to further Slavophil ideals. A number of essays and polemical writings which originally appeared in French were re-issued by his son Dmitri Alexéevitch Khomiakoff, as L'Église latine et le protestantisme au point de vue de l'Église d'Orient (Lausanne, 1872).

Khomiakoff also cultivated close relations with some English theologians, notably (from 1844) W. *Palmer ('of Magdalen'), with whom he stayed on a visit to Oxford in 1847. The correspondence between Khomiakoff and Palmer, as well as Khomiakoff's important essay, 'The Church is One', are to be found in W. H. Birkbeck (ed.), Russia and the English Church during the Last Fifty Years (vol. i, all publd.; 1895).

Collected edition of his works by his son, D. A. Khomiakoff (8 vols., Moscow, 1900). Eng. tr. of another of his essays in A. Schmemann (ed.), Ultimate Questions. An Anthology of Modern Russian Religious Thought (New York, 1965), pp. 29–69. Life by V. Z. Zavitnevitch (2 vols., Kiev, 1902–13); study by N. *Berdyaev (Moscow, 1912). G. Samarine, Préface aux œuvres théologiques de A. S. Khomiakov (Unam Sanctam, vii; 1939). A. Gratieux, A. S. Khomiakov et le mouvement slavophile (2 vols., Unam Sanctam, v and vi; 1939). P. Baron, Un Théologien laïc orthodoxe russe au XIXe siècle, Alexis Stépanovitch Khomiakov (1804–1860) (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, cxxvii; 1940). P. K. Christoff, An Introduction to Nineteenth-Century Russian Slavophilism. A Study in Ideas, i: A. S. Xomjakov (The Hague, 1961). E. C. Suttner, Offenbarung, Gnade und Kirche bei A. S. Chomjakov (Das östliche Christentum, N.F., xx; 1967).

KIDDUSH (Heb. קִדּוּשׁ, 'sanctification'). The Jewish ceremony of the sanctification of the *Sabbath or other holy day. The rite, full directions for which are given in the *Mishnah (Pesachim, 10), is thought to go back to pre-Christian times. On Friday afternoon the household assembled for the evening meal and, at the beginning of the Sabbath, the head filled a cup of wine and water and said over it the Kiddush or 'Blessing' of the day. The same custom was observed on the eves of festivals, when the Kiddush made reference to the festival as well as to the Sabbath. It has been argued that the custom was observed also by *chaburoth, and that Christ's blessing of the cup at the *Last Supper was the Kiddush of the Passover. This theory is defended by alleged reminiscences of the idea and phraseology of the Kiddush in Eucharistic prayers, quoted or described in early Christian writings, e.g. the Didache, *Ignatius, and *Justin. This theory presupposes the *Synoptic synchronism of the Last Supper with the Passover meal. Other scholars, preferring the Johannine dating of the Last Supper twenty-four hours before the Passover, hold that the blessing over the cup was the ordinary Jewish *berakah at the end of a chaburah meal.

J. Elbogen, 'Eingang und Ausgang des Sabbats nach Talmudischen Quellen' in Festschrift zu Israel Lewy's siebzigstem Geburtstag (Breslau, 1911), pp. 173–87. The identification of the Last Supper with the Kiddush ceremony, orig. suggested by F. Spitta, was first defended by G. H. Box, 'The Jewish Antecedents of the Eucharist', in J.T.S., iii (1901–2), pp. 357–69. W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (1925), esp. pp. 79–81 and 167–77; H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), pp. 202–10; F. Gavin, The Jewish Antecedents of the Christian Sacraments (1928), esp. pp. 64–69; cf., however, J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (1935), pp. 18–21; ed. 3 (1960), pp. 20–3; Eng. tr. (1966), pp. 26–9. L. N. Dembitz in J.E., vii (1904), p. 483, s.v.

KIDRON. See Cedron.

KIERKEGAARD, SØREN AABY (1813–55), Danish philosopher. The son of a wealthy hosier who was a devout *Lutheran, he spent practically his whole life at Copenhagen. After a secluded and unhappy childhood his university years were given over partly to idleness and amusements, partly to an inborn melancholy. He passed his theological examination in 1840, and in the following year became engaged to Regina Olsen; but, feeling marriage to be impossible, he broke off the engagement shortly afterwards. In the twelve years from 1843, the year of the publication of his first book, Enten-Eller ('Either-Or'), till his death, he produced the series of works which were to place him in the first rank of modern philosophical writers, though his influence was hampered for a long time by the fact of his writing in Danish. In 1846 he was subjected to a long and cruel attack by the comic Copenhagen paper, Den Corsaren, and in 1854 he launched his great assault on the Established Church, criticizing it because it had sought to accommodate the Christian revelation to human desires.

He was one of the most personal of thinkers, and his successive publications mark the development of his thought from the aesthetic to the religious and soon to the definitely Christian point of view. He was reared in the atmosphere of *Hegelian dialectics—the only philosophy then taught in Denmark—and attacked this pantheistic falsification of Christianity as 'the system', esp. in the Philosophiske Smuler (1844; Eng. trans., 'Philosophical Fragments') and Afsluttende uvidenskabelig Efterskrift (1846; 'Concluding Unscientific Postscript'). He opposed to it his own powerful '*existential' dialectics, pointing out with uncompromising vigour, though often in abstruse terminology, the dialectics involved in the position of man 'existing before God'. The whole complex of sin and redemption was described with profound psychological insight in Begrebet Angest (1844; Eng. trans., 'The Concept of Dread') and Sygdommen til Döden (1849; Eng. trans., 'Sickness unto Death'). His thought, though deeply original and in its ascetic tendencies showing a marked leaning to Catholic ideals, reflects at many points its Lutheran ancestry, e.g. in its opposition of faith to reason and the stress laid on the relation of the individual soul with God almost to the exclusion of the idea of a Christian community. His often-repeated statement, 'truth is subjectivity', though it should not be understood in the sense of a shallow individualism, links up truth with the existing subject instead of with its object, and so, in the last resort, makes its communication to other subjects impossible. Kierkegaard draws the theological consequences from this position by denying the possibility of an objective system of doctrinal truths.

As contrasted with his philosophical writings, his properly religious books, e.g. the Christelige Taler (1850; Eng. trans., 'Christian Discourses') and Indövelse i Christendom (1850; Eng. trans., 'Training in Christianity'), have aroused less interest, but they are in many respects of great devotional value and show a profound understanding of the redemptive work of Christ and the meaning of the Cross. His total influence on contemporary thought is very considerable. Both the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth and his followers and the Existential philosophy, esp. as expounded by M. *Heidegger, owe their inspiration to him.

Collected ed. of Samlede Værker by A. B. Drachmann–J. L. Heiberg–H. O. Lange (15 vols., Copenhagen, 1901–36); of his 'Papirer' ed. P. A. Heiberg–V. Kuhr–E. Torsting (11 vols. in 19 parts, Copenhagen, 1909–38). Breve og Aktstykker vedrørende Søren Kierkegaard, ed. N. Thulstrup (2 vols., Copenhagen, 1953–4). Eng. tr. of most of his works, mainly by W. Lowrie, A. Dru, D. F. Swenson, and Lilian Swenson, publd. 1936 ff., esp. at Princeton, N.J., and London; list of these up to 1955 in J. Himmelstrup, Søren Kierkegaard International Bibliography (Copenhagen, 1962), pp. 38–43 (Nos. 1286–1516a), with general bibl. pp. 53–176. Selection from his Journals tr. and ed. A. Dru (London–Princeton, 1938); Journals for 1853–5 ed. and tr. R. G. Smith (1965). Life by W. Lowrie (Princeton–London, 1938); shorter life by id. (Princeton–London, 1942). R. Bretall (ed.), A Kierkegaard Anthology (Princeton–London, 1947). G. Brandes, Sören Kierkegaard (Copenhagen, 1877; Germ. tr., Leipzig, 1879). J. Wahl, Études kierkegaardiennes (1938; with bibl.); E. Hirsch, Kierkegaard Studien (2 vols., 1933); E. L. Allen, Kierkegaard. His Life and Thought (1935); J. Hohlenberg, Søren Kierkegaard (Copenhagen, 1940; Eng. tr., 1954); R. Thomte, Kierkegaard's Philosophy of Religion (Princeton–London, 1948); H. Diem, Die Existenzdialektik von Sören Kierkegaard (Zollikon, 1950; Eng. tr., 1959); J. Collins, The Mind of Kierkegaard (Chicago, 1953; London, 1954); T. H. Croxall, Kierkegaard Commentary (1956); L. Dupré, Kierkegaards Theologie (Theologische Bibliotheek, 1958; Eng. tr., 1963); P. Rohde, Søren Kierkegaard (Hamburg, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963); P. Sponheim, Kierkegaard on Christ and Christian Coherence (1968). A. Grieve in H.E.R.E., vii (1914), pp. 696–700, s.v.; L. Dupré in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 174–6, s.v.

KIKUYU. The village in British E. Africa where a Missionary Conference of Anglicans, Presbyterians, and other Protestants was held in June 1913, under the leadership of the Bps. of Mombasa (W. G. Peel) and Uganda (J. J. Willis). A federation of the constituent Churches was proposed, on the basis of common acceptance of the *Apostles' and *Nicene Creeds and the recognition of common membership between the Churches in the federation, carrying with it the right of receiving Communion in any of them. Strong opposition was raised by F. *Weston, Bp. of Zanzibar, who appealed to the Abp. of *Canterbury. The latter gave his 'opinion' that Nonconformists in these areas might be admitted to Communion in Anglican churches, but that Anglicans should not seek Communion at the hands of Nonconformist ministers.

J. J. Willis, The Kikuyu Conference (1914); [R. T. *Davidson,] Abp. of Canterbury, Kikuyu (Easter, 1915); H. M. Smith, Frank [Weston], Bp. of Zanzibar (1926), ch. viii.

KILHAM, ALEXANDER (1762–98), founder of the '*Methodist New Connexion'. The son of *Methodist parents, he was admitted a preacher in 1785. After J. *Wesley's death in 1791, he became leader of the radical wing of the movement and advocated complete separation from the Established Church. In several pamphlets he expounded his views with vigour, and even violence, and in 1796 was in consequence expelled by the Methodist Conference. In 1798 he founded the New Connexion, but died later in the same year.

Autobiography publd. Nottingham [c. 1799]. Anon. life, based on materials supplied by his widow and daughter (London, 1838). Shorter life by W. J. Townsend (ib., [c. 1889]). A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), p. 102 f.

KILIAN, St. (d. c. 689), 'Apostle of Franconia'. A native of *Ireland, Kilian was probably already a bishop when he went as a missionary to the Franks and established his headquarters at Würzburg. Acc. to the most ancient account, he converted the local ruler, Duke Gozbert, and much of the population of E. Franconia and Thuringia, before he was put to death in the duke's absence through the enmity of his wife. His feast day, 8 July, is that of the solemn translation of his remains in 752 to the cathedral of Würzburg, of which he is the patron saint.

His Acta and Passio, pr. in AA.SS., Jul. II (1721), pp. 612–18. Modern crit. ed. of Passio Kiliani Martyris by W. Levison in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, v (1910), pp. 711–28 (text, pp. 722–8). F. Emmerich, Der heilige Kilian (1896). A. Bigelmair, 'Die Passio des heiligen Kilian und seine Gefährten' in Herbipolis Jubilans. 1200 Jahre Bistum Würzburg. Festschrift zur Säkularfeier der Erhebung der Kiliansreliquien (Würzburg, 1952), pp. 1–25. J. Dienemann, Der Kunst des heiligen Kilian im 8. und 9. Jahrhundert (Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Bistums und Hochstifts Würzburg, x; 1955); cf. A. Gwynn, S.J., 'New Light on St. Kilian' in Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 6th series, lxxxviii (1957), pp. 1–16.

KILWARDBY, ROBERT (d. 1279), Abp. of *Canterbury. A master of arts in the University of Paris, he made his reputation by his commentaries on Priscian's 'Institutiones grammaticae', Books XVII–XVIII, and on *Aristotle's 'Prior Analytics'. Returning to England, he entered the *Dominican Order and studied theology at Oxford. He was elected provincial prior for England in 1261. He was consecrated Abp. of Canterbury in 1273, on the nomination of Pope *Gregory X, and was assiduous in visitations and in works of charity. In 1277 he visited Oxford and in conjunction with the Masters of the University he issued a condemnation of 30 propositions in grammar, logic and natural science. The condemnation was chiefly directed against certain views maintained by *Thomas Aquinas, notably those connected with the doctrine of the unity of form, a view which seemed to Kilwardby irreconcilable with the Christian faith. In 1278 he was made a cardinal and translated to the see of Porto in Italy. He died at Viterbo.

Kilwardby wrote the 'De ortu scientiarum', a classification of knowledge, based largely on Aristotle. It is still unpublished. He also wrote an important commentary on the 'Sentences' (also unpublished). He was responsible for organizing large-scale indexes of the chief works of the Fathers. For this purpose the texts were divided into sections and provided with summaries, an arrangement which has left traces in modern editions.

The Injunctions of Archbishop Kilwardby (on his Visitation of the University of Oxford in 1276), ed. by H. W. G[arrod] and privately pr. (Oxford, 1929). Kilwardby's Quaestio De Natura Theologiae, ed. F. Stegmüller (Opuscula et Textus Historiam Ecclesiae Eiusque Vitam atque Doctrinam Illustrantia, Series Scholastica, ed. M. *Grabmann–F. Pelster, S.J., fasc. xvii; 1935). F. *Ehrle, S.J., 'Ein Schreiben des Erzbischofs von Canterbury Robert Kilwardby zur Rechtfertigung seiner Lehrverurtheilung von 18. März 1277' in Archiv für Literatur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, v (1889), pp. 607–32, with text. L. Baur, Dominicus Gundissalinus, De Divisione Philosophiae (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des Mittelalters, iv, Hftt. 2–3; 1903), pp. 368–80. M. D. Chenu, O.P., 'Le "De Spiritu Imaginativo" de Robert Kilwardby (d. 1279)' in Revue des Sciences philosophiques et théologiques, xv (1926), pp. 507–17; id., 'Le "De Conscientia" de R. Kilwardby, O.P., d. 1279', ib., xvi (1927), pp. 318–26, with text of questions; F. Stegmüller, 'Les Questions du commentaire des sentences de Robert Kilwardby' in R.T.A.M., vi (1934), pp. 55–79, with refl. D. A. Callus, O.P., 'The "Tabulae Super Originalia Patrum" of Robert Kilwardby, O.P.' in Studia Mediaevalia in Honorem Admodum Reverendi Patris Raymundi Josephi Martin . . . LXXum Natalem Diem Agentis (Bruges [1949]), pp. 243–70. Ellen M. F. Sommer-Seckendorff, Studies in the Life of Robert Kilwardby, O.P. (Dissertationes Historicae, fasc. viii; Rome, 1937), with bibl. Quétif–Échard, i, pp. 374–80. Überweg, ii, pp. 493–7, with bibl. p. 764. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1051–2. M. D. Chenu, O.P., in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2354–6, s.v., with bibl.; J. A. Weisheipl, O.P., in N.C.E., xii (1967), p. 533, s.v. 'Robert Kilwardby'.

KINDRED AND AFFINITY, Table of. This table, published by Abp. M. *Parker in 1563 and printed by custom at the end of the BCP, is based on the degrees of intermarriage prohibited in Lev. 18. It follows J. *Calvin's interpretation, namely that marriage is forbidden between any two persons related more nearly than, or as nearly as, any pair mentioned in Lev. 18, in contrast with M. *Luther's view, favoured by *Henry VIII, that only those marriages are forbidden by God's law which are expressly named in Lev. 18. The intention of the table was to set out clearly the marriages forbidden by Divine law and therefore incapable of being allowed by dispensation. Such marriages were voidable until 1835, when Lord *Lyndhurst's Marriage Act rendered them void from the beginning. Can. 99 of 1603 gave the 1563 table canonical authority in the C of E. In 1946 it was amended by canon to allow marriage with a *deceased wife's sister (on the ground that Calvin's interpretation of Lev. 18 was no longer upheld by modern scholarship), and also with an aunt by marriage or a niece by marriage. This amendment brought the law of the Church and State into conformity. Canon B 31 of 1969 added an adopted son or daughter to the Table, and specified that the term 'brother' included a brother of half blood.

Kindred and Affinity as Impediments to Marriage, being the Report of a Commission appointed by his Grace the Abp. of Canterbury (1940).

KING, EDWARD (1829–1910), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was successively assistant curate of Wheatley, Oxon (1855), chaplain of Cuddesdon Theological College (1858), principal of Cuddesdon (1863), Regius professor of pastoral theology at Oxford (1873), and Bp. of Lincoln (1885). A man of great holiness of life, he is most remembered for his teaching on the pastoral duties of the clergy, and for his fatherly care for individuals, both as priest and bishop. He was a Tractarian High Churchman, and a friend of E. B. *Pusey and H. P. *Liddon. In 1888 a 'ritual prosecution' was brought against him by the *Church Association, and in 1890 decided in the court of the Abp. of *Canterbury (E. W. *Benson) substantially in his favour (see Lincoln Judgement). Feast day in ASB, 8 Mar.

Spiritual Letters of Edward King, ed. B. W. Randolph (1910). Life by G. W. E. Russell (London, 1912). B. W. Randolph and J. W. Townroe, The Mind and Work of Bishop King (1918); Lord Elton, Edward King and our Times (1958). [W.] O. Chadwick, Edward King, Bishop of Lincoln 1885–1910 (Lincoln Minster Pamphlets, Second Series, iv; 1968). G. W. E. Russell in D.N.B., 1901–1911, pp. 397–400.

KING, MARTIN LUTHER (1929–68), Negro *Baptist minister and champion of civil rights in U.S.A. The son of a Baptist pastor, he was born in Atlanta and educated at the Negro Morehouse College and Boston University. In 1954 he became pastor of a church in Montgomery, Alabama. Here he became involved in the struggle over segregation on buses and in 1955 he organized a boycott of buses by Negroes which lasted more than a year; it inspired opposition to discrimination which resulted in an order of the Supreme Court imposing desegregation on Alabama buses. In 1960 he resigned from his pastorship to devote himself entirely to the civil rights movement. In 1963 he was arrested in the course of a major confrontation between his supporters and the police in Birmingham, Alabama. President Kennedy showed his sympathy and in 1964 a Civil Rights Bill was passed. In 1964 King was awarded a Nobel Peace Prize. He arranged further demonstrations in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and elsewhere; throughout he adhered to principles of non-violence. He was much influenced by the thinking of Gandhi, but he went further in believing that the reconciliation of the Negroes to the White population was as important as that of the Whites to the Negroes. He aroused the opposition of both races and was assassinated in 1968. His success was more marked in the South than in the North, where the Negro Church was less well organized and there was less discrimination. His writings include Stride toward Freedom (1958), Why We Can't Wait (1964) and Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos or Community? (1967).

L. D. Reddick, Crusader without Violence. A Biography of Martin Luther King, Jr. (New York, 1959); W. R. Miller, Martin Luther King, Jr. His Life, Martyrdom and Meaning for the World (ib., 1968); D. L. Lewis, Martin Luther King. A Critical Biography (New York–London, 1970). Coretta S. King (widow), My Life with Martin Luther King, Jr. (New York, 1969; London, 1970).

KING, WILLIAM (1650–1729), Abp. of *Dublin. Born in Antrim of Scottish parents, he was educated at *Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained in 1674 and became Chancellor (1679–89) and Dean (1689–91) of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin. During this time he conducted extensive controversies with both RCs and *Presbyterians. As a supporter of William III, he was imprisoned by the Jacobites, but in 1691 he was appointed Bp. of Derry and in 1703 Abp. of Dublin. In these offices, while continuing to oppose Presbyterianism, he energetically promoted the spiritual and temporal welfare of the Church of Ireland. He was passed over for the primacy on account of his Whig sympathies. He showed himself a convinced patriot, resisting all attempts to introduce Englishmen into high office. He was hampered in later years by ill health and, to some extent, by his duties as Lord Justice.

Among his writings are controversial works, including The State of the Protestants in Ireland, under King James's Government (1691), a large correspondence which is of value for our knowledge of Ireland in his time, and his most important work, De Origine Mali (1702; Eng. tr., 1731), which attempts to reconcile the existence of evil, and esp. moral evil, with the conception of an omnipotent and beneficent deity; P. *Bayle and G. W. *Leibniz issued rejoinders.

C. S. King (ed.), A Great Archbishop of Dublin (1906), incl. text of his autobiography and extensive correspondence. Diary kept during his imprisonment in 1689 ed. H. J. Lawlor in the Journal of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, xxxiii for 1903 (1904), pp. 119–52, 255–83, 389–411. Study by id. in Peplographia Dublinensis (London, 1902), pp. 101–42. R. Dunlop in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), pp. 163–7.

KING JAMES VERSION. A title used, esp. in America, for the English translation of the Bible commonly known in England as the *Authorized Version (1611).

KING'S BOOK, The. The name commonly given to A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man, put forth by *Henry VIII in the summer of 1543 after it had been presented to *Convocation earlier in the year. It was based upon the *Bishops' Book of 1537, but except for the fact that the King's supremacy was more strongly asserted, its theology was a reaction in a Catholic direction. *Transubstantiation was more clearly defined, some additional articles on Free Will, Good Works, &c., were added, and fuller treatment was given to such subjects as Justification. It was provided with a preface, apparently written by Henry VIII himself, and a preliminary article on Faith, probably the work of T. *Cranmer. In 1544 a free translation into Latin appeared, entitled Pia et Catholica Christiani Hominis Institutio.

The King's Book, ed. by T. A. *Lacey (1932). There is an earlier edition by C. *Lloyd (Oxford, 1825 and 1856).

KING'S BOOKS, The. See Valor Ecclesiasticus.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON. The College was incorporated in 1829 to provide an education on Anglican principles. It was designed as a counterweight to the undenominational University College, London, established by charter in 1827 (then the only English college of University status for Nonconformists, who were still excluded from Oxford and Cambridge). In 1836 a charter established the 'University of London' as a body empowered to grant degrees, for which members of King's College could apply. The opening of the theological department in 1846 was soon followed by a fierce controversy involving the removal of F. D. *Maurice from his position as lecturer in 1853. By the King's College, London (Transfer) Act, 1908, the greater part of the College was placed within the legal framework of the reconstituted (teaching) University of London, while the theological department gained a separate identity, with its Dean as head of the whole College. A residential hall for those in the department preparing for Holy Orders was established at Mecklenburgh Square in 1902; in 1913 it was transferred to Vincent Square. The 'Associateship of King's College' (A.K.C.) is an academic qualification often taken by non-graduate ordinands of the C of E.

F. J. C. Hearnshaw, History of King's College, London, 1828–1928 (1929); G. Huelin, King's College London 1828–1978 (1978). Much historical information is to be found in the Calendar of King's College, publd. annually.

KING'S CONFESSION, The. The very Protestant statement of belief drawn up by John Craig (c. 1512–1600) in 1581 when it was feared that Popery might be revived in Scotland through the recent arrival of the Duke of Lennox from France. Its formal title was 'A Short and General Confession of the True Christian Faith and Religion according to God's Word and Acts of our Parliaments', but as it was signed by the King (*James [VI of Scotland]) and his household, it was commonly known as the 'King's Confession'. All parish clergy (and from 1585 also all graduates) were required to sign it. It was reaffirmed in 1590 and 1595, and was the basis of the '*National Covenant' of 1638. See also Covenanters.

Text (Eng. and Lat.) in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, iii (1877), pp. 480–5. See further bibl. s.v. Covenanters.

KING'S EVIL, Touching for the. The tradition that there existed some virtue in the royal touch for healing the 'King's evil', or scrofula, can be traced back to the 11th cent. In France general curative powers were attributed to Robert II (996–1031) and there is evidence that touching for scrofula was regarded as hereditary in the Capetians from the time of Philip I (1060–1108). In England his early biographer records various healings by *Edward the Confessor (1042–66) and *Goscelin in his life of St. Edith (written in 1080) uses the term 'morbum regis'. The custom of touching for the king's evil was practised under Henry I (1100–35) and Henry II (1154–89) and is found again during the reign of Henry VII (1485–1509). *James I encouraged it as proof of his *Divine Right, and it has been estimated that *Charles II touched in all as many as 100,000 persons. Queen *Anne was the last sovereign to perform it, among those whom she touched being the infant Samuel *Johnson. There was often printed a form of service for the touching in editions of the BCP between the reign of *Charles I and 1719.

M. Bloch, Les Rois thaumaturges (1924 [requires revision on the early period]). K. [V.] Thomas, Religion and the Decline of Magic (1971), esp. pp. 192–8, 200–204. F. Barlow, 'The King's Evil' in E.H.R., xcv (1980), pp. 3–27.

KINGDOM OF GOD, The. The roots of the conception of the Kingdom of God (Gk. ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ) in Christ's teaching and elsewhere in the NT lie in Hebrew thought, acc. to which the word translated 'Kingdom' (מַלְכוּת) means rather the possession or exercise, than the sphere, of kingship. According to Hebrew thought, God was eternally king (Pss. 97, 99, etc.) in heaven. But owing to the existence of godless heathen empires His kingship was not visibly and outwardly effective on earth, though it would become so at the 'Day of the Lord' or the Day of Final Judgement. It thus came about that though some of the Rabbis suggest the conception of a spiritual and invisible kingdom of God in this life to which the good man might belong, the phrase 'the Kingdom of God' would normally have been understood in the time of Christ in an *eschatological sense. For the righteous, who alone would enter it, it would bring blessings, often conceived in a quite materialistic way (cf. *Enoch 10. 17 ff.). Its establishment would involve the punishment of the wicked, esp. the overthrow of heathen political powers and the transference of power to 'the saints', i.e. Israel, who would henceforth be ruled by God Himself, or by God's Anointed One, the *Messiah (Christ).

In the NT the theme of the Kingdom of God ('Kingdom of Heaven' in Mt.) becomes central. St. *John Baptist proclaimed to his hearers that the Kingdom was at hand (Mt. 3. 2) and Christ began His Ministry with the same message (Mt. 4. 17). The Lord, however, was to modify profoundly the idea of the Kingdom of God by His further teaching. In contrast to the many who thought mainly of the visible reward to be given to the righteous by an immediate intervention of God (cf. Lk. 19. 11) and even to the apostles who after the Resurrection still looked for a quasi-political kingdom under Jesus as Messiah (Acts 1. 6), Christ stressed the ethical and religious qualities demanded of those who were to enjoy ('enter' or 'receive') the Kingdom: these included the giving-up, if necessary, of home and family, and of every hindrance, even the loss of an eye or a hand (Mk. 9. 47), together with constant watchfulness (Mt. 25. 1–13; cf. Mt. 5. 20, 7. 21). Self-righteous Jews would be excluded from the Kingdom (Mt. 8. 11 f.), the rich barely admitted (Mk. 10. 23), and it belonged especially to the humble and childlike (Mt. 5. 3, 10; Mk. 10. 15, cf. John 3. 3–5). In many parables beginning with such words as 'The Kingdom of Heaven is like' the nature of the Kingdom is expounded and popular ideas of it corrected. In any attempt to integrate the Lord's teaching into a whole, three diverse aspects of the Kingdom must be considered.

(a) The Kingdom as future. To some extent Christ seems to have accepted the current expectation of a future earthly manifestation of the Kingdom, i.e. that it would 'come' in a sense in which it was not yet present when He spoke about it. He taught the disciples to pray 'Thy kingdom come' (Mt. 6. 10) and many of the parables speak of a period of growth or waiting, followed by a harvest or a coming (e.g. the Tares, the Ten Virgins), thus suggesting that the full manifestation of the Kingdom is in the future; and the Church has traditionally linked this with the belief in Christ's *Second Coming professed in the Creeds, and with the idea of the Judgement, *Eternal Life, and the *Resurrection of the Body. Christ also promised, acc. to Mk. 9. 1 (cf. Mt. 16. 28, Lk. 9. 27), that some of His hearers would live to 'see the kingdom of God come with power'. Though difficulties were early felt in the Church because the hope of an early return of Christ which such words aroused was not fulfilled (cf. 2 Pet. 3. 4), orthodox thought has steadily continued to believe in a future manifestation of the Kingdom of God, however delayed. Theologians of liberal sympathies (the most notable exception is A. *Schweitzer, q.v.) have tended, on the other hand, to replace the expectation of a sudden future revelation of the Kingdom by the hope of the progressive realization of better conditions of human life, moral and material, and this ideal state of human affairs has sometimes been loosely identified with the realization of 'the Kingdom of God'.

(b) The Kingdom as present. In Christ's teaching the kingdom of God is also declared to be actually present as He spoke and its coming is represented as a present, but hidden, reality. Such appears to be the sense of the verb 'is at hand' (ἤγγικεν, lit. 'has come near') in Mt. 3. 2; 4. 17. His works of healing done 'by the spirit of God', were evidence that 'the kingdom of God is upon you' (Mt. 12. 28) and, in contrast to the wish for a dramatic manifestation of the Kingdom, Christ taught that 'the kingdom of God is within you' or 'in the midst of you' (ἐντὸς ὑμῶν, Lk. 17. 21). It is possible that this conception of the Kingdom as a present reality may have occupied a considerably more prominent place in the Lord's teaching than it fills in the Gospels and elsewhere in the NT, where its centrality may have been displaced by the widespread expectation of the early Christians that a visible kingdom was on the point of appearing. That the Kingdom continued to be understood as present is shown by such expressions as 'made us to be a kingdom and priests to God' (Rev. 1. 6, 9; 5. 10) and 'translated us into the kingdom of His dear son' (Col. 1. 13), where the Kingdom is an actual possession of Christians already, 'not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost' (Rom. 14. 17). This, in the traditional orthodox view, does not exclude a future manifestation of the same Kingdom in its power and glory, where all the evil which now opposes it shall be done away. According to the 'realized eschatology' of C. H. *Dodd, however, Christ taught only one coming of the Kingdom, namely that inaugurated by His own ministry, death and resurrection, and the only fuller realization than this is the life of eternity realized for each Christian after earthly death.

(c) The Kingdom as the Church. The conception of the Kingdom of God as a present reality, including spiritually all who are God's true subjects, suggests a close relation between the Kingdom and the *Church; but in the NT the two terms are not closely related, unless Christ's promise to St. *Peter to give him 'the keys of the kingdom' (Mt. 16. 19) refers to Peter's position in the Apostolic Church on earth. Before St. *Augustine the identification of the kingdom of God with the Church on earth never seems to have been made, but from then on it became general. St. Augustine, distinguishing between the elect who are predestined to salvation, and the visible Church which contains an admixture of evil men, identified the body of the elect with the Kingdom of God, or the Kingdom of Christ, as opposed to 'the kingdom of the devil', and also with the 'City of God' (civitas Dei) as opposed to the earthly city (civitas terrena). Though strictly this identification applied to the invisible body of the elect, Augustine tended to speak as if it applied to the visible hierarchical Church, and in this he was followed, with even less reserve, by medieval thinkers generally.

For bibl. see works cited under Eschatology.

KINGS, Books of. These two Books, which record the history of the Jewish monarchy from the accession of *Solomon (c. 970 B.C.) to the Fall of *Jerusalem (586 B.C.), are structurally a continuation of the Books of *Samuel. The division into two books is not original, but comes from the Greek translators, who also grouped them with the Books of Samuel and designated all four as the 'Books of the Reigns'. In the MS. tradition of the *Vulgate there are two Books, namely Samuel and Kings. In some quarters, however, the division into four persisted and this method of designation (1–4 Regum) came to be printed in the headlines of the Clementine edition of the Vulgate; hence the 1 and 2 Kings of the AV are called 3 and 4 Kings in the *Douai Version.

The narrative opens with an account of the events leading up to the accession of Solomon (1 Kgs. 1–2). The reign of Solomon, esp. the building of the Temple, is described with great fullness (3–11). The history of the two separate kingdoms of Judah and Israel, formed from the partition of Solomon's domains at his death, then follows on a carefully arranged plan, the events of each reign being fitted into a standard framework which allowed the events of the two kingdoms to be treated alternately. This plan is adopted down to the fall of the kingdom of Israel to Assyria in 721 B.C. (2 Kgs. 17), after which the narrative is concerned solely with Judah (2 Kgs. 18–25). Of the later kings, the writer paid special attention to Josiah, whose reforming work he deservedly commended.

The author's main interest is religious throughout. This is seen from the way in which events and reigns of religious significance are described in great detail, whereas those of the highest political importance are often passed over very cursorily. Modern critics have come to see close affinities between the theological outlook of the author and that reflected in the Book of *Deuteronomy, and many of them regard Kings as the last two Books in the so-called '*Deuteronomic History' (q.v.). The author of the Books evidently had access to several sound historical sources. Some of these are cited in the text, e.g. the 'Acts of Solomon' (1 Kgs. 11. 41), the 'Chronicles of the Kings of Israel' (1 Kgs. 14. 19 &c.) and 'of Judah' (1 Kgs. 15. 7 &c.), and the probability is that there were others not named, such as official court records and collections of stories centred on the activities of the Prophets Elijah and Elisha.

Commentaries by J. Skinner (Cent. Bib., 1904), W. E. Barnes (Camb. Bib., RV, 2 vols., 1908), R. Kittel (H.K.A.T., Abt. I, Bd. v; 1900), A. Sanda (E.H., ix, 2 vols.; 1911–12), J. A. Montgomery (posthumous, ed. H. S. Gehman, I.C.C., 1951), J. Gray (London, 1964; ed. 2, 1970), and M. *Noth ([to 1 Kgs. 16] Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, ix; 1964–8). C. F. *Burney, Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings (1903). I. Benzinger, Jahvist und Elohist in den Königsbüchern (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, N.F., ii; 1921). G. von *Rad, 'Die deuteronomistische Geschichtstheologie in den Königsbüchern' in Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, N.F., xl (1947), pp. 52–64, repr. in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (1958), pp. 189–204; Eng. tr., The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays (1966), pp. 205–21. A. Jepsen, Die Quellen des Königsbuches (Halle/Saale, 1953). J. Begrich, Die Chronologie der Könige von Israel und Juda und die Quellen des Rahmens der Königsbücher (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, iii; 1929); E. R. Thiele, The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings (Chicago, 1951; Exeter, 1966); K. T. Andersen, 'Die Chronologie der Könige von Israel und Juda' in Studia Theologica, xxiii (1969), pp. 69–112, with ref.

KINGSHIP OF CHRIST, Feast of the. See Christ the King, Feast of.

KINGSLEY, CHARLES (1819–75), Anglican divine, social reformer and novelist. Born at Holne in Devonshire, he was educated locally, at *King's College, London (1836–8), and at Magdalene College, Cambridge (1838–42). In 1842 he was ordained to the curacy of Eversley, Hants, where he became vicar in 1844 and spent most of the rest of his life. From 1860 to 1869 he was Professor of modern history at Cambridge (a post for which he came to recognize that he was ill-qualified; it required only a short period of residence each year). Later he held canonries at *Chester (1869–73) and *Westminster (1873–5).

Kingsley, who fell under the influence of F. D. *Maurice and T. *Carlyle, became keenly interested in the movement for social reform. He was a leading spirit in the *Christian Socialist Movement (q.v.), but he looked to the extension of the co-operative principle and educational and sanitary reform rather than radical political change for the amelioration of the people. He was at first the principal pamphleteer and spokesman of the group and under the pseudonym 'Parson Lot' contributed to Politics for the People (1848) and The Christian Socialist (1850–1). He was strongly averse to all forms of asceticism (monasticism; clerical celibacy; non-smoking) and as such a critic of *Tractarian ideals. He soon came to be regarded as a leading exponent of 'muscular Christianity'.

The Saint's Tragedy (1848; preface by F. D. Maurice), written in dramatic form, developed out of a life of St. *Elizabeth of Hungary, begun in 1842 as a critique of asceticism. His principal novels were Yeast (1850; orig. publd. by 'Parson Lot' in Fraser's Magazine, 1848), Alton Locke (1850), Hypatia (1853; on the factions in the Church of *Alexandria in the early 5th cent.), Westward Ho! (1855), The Heroes (1856), Two Years Ago (1857) and Hereward the Wake (1866). An ill-considered jibe at J. H. Newman in 1863 ('Truth for its own sake has never been a virtue of the Roman clergy. Father Newman informs us that it need not and on the whole ought not to be') led to the publication of the latter's Apologia (q.v.) in 1864. To this period his popular children's book, The Water-Babies (1863), also belongs.

The novelist Henry Kingsley (1830–76), the author of Ravenshoe (1862), was a younger brother.

Collected Works (28 vols., 1880–5; 19 vols., 1901–3). Life by his widow (2 vols., 1877; abridgements, 1879, 1883). C. W. Stubbs, Charles Kingsley and the Christian Social Movement (1899); G. Kendall, Charles Kingsley and his Ideas (1946). Other studies by M. F. Thorp (Princeton, 1937), Una C. Pope-Hennessy (London, 1948), and R. B. Martin (ib., 1959). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), pp. 175–81.

KIRK. The Scottish equivalent of 'Church'. Although the Church of Scotland has ceased to be officially designated 'The Kirk' since the *Westminster Assembly (1645–8), the term is retained in the name of its lowest court, the *kirk-session, and popularly the old Presbyterian Establishment is still occasionally called 'the Auld Kirk'.

KIRK, KENNETH ESCOTT (1886–1954), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at St. John's College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1912 and priest in 1913. He was Chaplain to the Forces (1914–19), Fellow and chaplain of Trinity College, Oxford (1922–33), and Regius professor of moral and pastoral theology (1932–7). In 1937 he became Bp. of Oxford. He was widely recognized as the most outstanding of Anglican writers on moral theology in his day. His principal writings include Some Principles of Moral Theology (1920), Ignorance, Faith, and Conformity (1925), Conscience and its Problems (1927), and The Vision of God (1931; the *Bampton Lectures for 1928). Kirk also published a commentary on Rom. (Clarendon Bible, 1937) and edited Personal Ethics (1934), The Study of Theology (1939), and The Apostolic Ministry (1946).

Collected addresses and papers, Beauty and Bands, ed. E. W. Kemp (1955). E. W. Kemp, The Life and Letters of Kenneth Escott Kirk (1959). Id. in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 589–91.

KIRK-SESSION, also known simply as the Session. The lowest court in the Church of *Scotland and other Presbyterian Churches. It consists of the minister and elders of a local congregation. Its main duties are to supervise and control the congregation and to keep the Communion roll up to date.

KISS OF PEACE, also PAX. The mutual greeting of the faithful in the Eucharistic Liturgy, as a sign of their love and union. It is first mentioned by St. *Justin Martyr (2nd cent.) and is probably a usage of the Apostolic period (cf. Rom. 16. 16, 1 Pet. 5. 14, &c.). In the E., *Gallican, and *Mozarabic rites the Peace is given before or after the offering of the Oblations, a position suggested by Mt. 5. 23 f.; in the Roman and *Ambrosian rites it is given later in the service, viz. shortly before Communion. Originally an actual kiss, the form of the Peace has been modified in all rites. In the W. the traditional practice was for the person giving the Peace to place his hands on the shoulders of the recipient, who in turn placed his hands on the elbows of the giver, each bowing their heads towards each other, but in recent years hand-shaking has become more common outside monastic houses. In 1969 the official English rendering of 'osculum pacis' was given as the 'sign of peace', but no special manner of giving it was laid down. It was, however, no longer to be passed from the celebrant to the deacon, the deacon to the subdeacon and finally to the people, but the celebrant now gives the sign of peace to any ministers present and the people give it among themselves independently. The Peace was formerly omitted on *Maundy Thursday, *Good Friday, *Holy Saturday and in Masses for the Dead, but is now permitted on these occasions and indeed prescribed in the *Paschal Vigil Service. Its use was confined to *High Mass but prescribed for all Masses in 1969. Modern Anglican liturgies provide for an (optional) exchange of 'a sign of peace' (ASB) or mutual greetings, normally before the offertory. Among the *Nestorians a Kiss of Peace is also given at the end of the evening office. See also Pax Brede.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 399–413; Eng. tr., pp. 321–32, with reff. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., viii (1910), pp. 663–5, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ii (1910), cols. 117–30 s.v. 'Baiser'.

KITTO, JOHN (1804–54), writer on Biblical subjects. From his earliest days a delicate child and a great lover of books, he was prevented by health from following his father's trade of stonemasonry and for a time he was apprenticed to a shoemaker. Eventually he was enabled to go to the Islington Missionary College, where he was trained to be a printer. After working in Malta (1827–9) and travelling to Persia, he devoted his time to writing. His best-known work was the Pictorial Bible (2 vols., 1835–8). Among his other books were The History of Palestine (1843) and the Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature (2 vols., 1843–5). In 1848 he founded the Journal of Sacred Literature, which he edited until 1853. Often in pecuniary difficulties, he was awarded a Civil List pension in 1850.

J. Kitto, The Lost Senses (1845; autobiographical). J. E. Ryland, Memoirs of Kitto (1856); J. Eadie, Life of Kitto (1857).

KLOPSTOCK, FRIEDRICH GOTTLIEB (1724–1803), German poet. The son of a lawyer, he was born at Quedlinburg and studied at Schulpforta (1739–45), at Jena (1745–6) and Leipzig (1746–8). He completed c. 1746 the first section of an epic in prose inspired by a translation (1732) by J. Bodmer (1698–1783) of J. *Milton's '*Paradise Lost'. At Leipzig he began to transpose it into hexameters and in 1748 issued part of it in the Bremer Beiträge as the first three cantos of Der Messias (completed 1773); though published anonymously, its authorship was soon known. In 1751 he was offered a pension by King Frederick V of Denmark to enable him to complete Der Messias. He resided at Copenhagen until 1770, when he retired to Hamburg. In 1789 he was visited by S. T. *Coleridge and W. *Wordsworth.

The publication of the earlier parts of Der Messias marked a new epoch in German literature. The poem, consisting of nearly twenty thousand lines distributed in twenty cantos, is concerned with the Passion and forty days after the Resurrection. It not only describes events on earth, but introduces hosts of angels and devils, even the Trinity itself appearing, giving to every event and action its deeper significance. In the opening portions its bold suggestion of intensity and infinity raised reflective German poetry to a new level; but later the theme became wearisome. Moreover Klopstock's fear of anthropomorphism made his descriptions vague and his characters lifeless. From a literary point of view the work is important as the first modern German epic.

In his lyric poetry Klopstock adapted classical metres. For the most part he rejected rhyme and developed a free rhythmic form. The poems of his earlier years, such as An des Dichters Freunde (1747), An Fanny (1748) and An Gott (1748), are filled with religious fervour. These were followed by his calmer nature poems, such as Der Zürcher See (1750) and Die Frühlingsfeier (1759). His later poems, largely inspired by the German past, also expressed his disappointment in the French Revolution. In 1758 and 1769 he published two volumes of Geistliche Lieder and in 1771 a collection of Oden. He also wrote religious and bardic drama, incl. Der Tod Adams (1757), Salomo (1764), and David (1777), the last two in verse. He devoted the last years of his life to philology.

Collected edd. of his Works, 12 vols., Leipzig, 1798–1817; 18 vols., ib., 1823–30 (vols. xiii–xviii ed. A. L. Back–A. R. C. Spindler). K. [E. C.] Schmidt (ed.), Klopstock und seine Freunde. Briefwechsel der Familie Klopstock unter sich und zwischen dieser Familie, Gleim, Schmidt, Fanny, Meta und andern Freunden (2 vols., 1810; Eng. tr., with biographical note, 1814). Further correspondence ed. I. M. Lappenberg (Brunswick, 1867). Eng. tr. of Der Messias [by J. Collyer], 2 vols., London, 1763. Classic life by F. Muncker (Stuttgart, 1888). Modern studies include E. Bailly, Étude sur la vie et les œuvres de Frédéric Gottlieb Klopstock (Lyons thesis; Paris, 1888), and K. Kindt, Klopstock (Berlin, 1941). M. Freivogel, Klopstock der heilige Dichter (Basler Studien zur deutschen Sprache und Literatur, xv; 1954); G. Kaiser, Klopstock. Religion und Dichtung (Gütersloh, 1963); A. Bogaert, Klopstock. La Religion dans la Messiade (Germanica, vi; Paris, 1965), with reff.

KLOSTERNEUBURG, a celebrated monastery of *canons regular of St. *Augustine, nr. Vienna. It was founded not later than 1108 by Margrave Leopold III and his consort, Agnes, for secular canons, and was given to the Augustinian Canons in 1133. As it became very rich, it was frequently raided in times of war and civil strife, e.g. during the *Hussite wars, in the Reformation period, and in the wars against the Turks. It possesses great art treasures, e.g. the famous 'Verdun Altar' and precious stained glass dating from the 13th to the 15th cents., as well as a large library with important MSS. and *incunabula. Its present buildings date from the finest period of the Austrian Baroque. In modern times Klosterneuburg has become noted for its active support of the *Liturgical Movement, fostered esp. by Pius Parsch, the editor of several liturgical periodicals.

There is a considerable literature, of which the chief items to date are listed by F. Röhrig in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 349 f., s.v. Catalogue of MSS. ed. H. Pfeiffer–B. Cernik (i, Vienna, 1922; ii, Klosterneuburg, 1931); of the 'Kunst-Sammlungen', ed. by the Director of the Kunsthistorisches Museum at Vienna (1937 ff.; pt. 1 at Klosterneuburg; pts. 3 ff. at Vienna). Jahrbuch des Stiftes Klosterneuburg (9 vols., Klosterneuburg, 1908–20; N.F., 1961 ff.).

KNEELERS. See Genuflectentes.

KNEELING, Declaration on. See Black Rubric.

KNIGHTS HOSPITALLER; KNIGHTS OF MALTA; and KNIGHTS OF RHODES. See Hospitallers.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR. See Templars.

KNOX, ALEXANDER (1757–1831), Anglican writer. He was a descendant of J. *Knox, the Scottish Reformer. In much of his teaching he anticipated the *Oxford Movement. Thus he affirmed that the C of E was not a 'protestant' Church, but a reformed branch of the Church Catholic, and he stressed the need for adherence to the *Apostolic Succession, the BCP, and the *Thirty-Nine Articles. From his intimate friend, J. *Wesley, he learnt the value of frequent communion and for many years worked in harmony with Bp. J. *Jebb, whose Thirty Years' Correspondence gives a valuable picture of him.

His writings were collected as The Remains of Alexander Knox, by J. J. Hornby (4 vols., 1834–7). J. H. Overton in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), p. 304 f., with further reff.

KNOX, EDMUND ARBUTHNOTT (1847–1937), Bp. of Manchester. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he held a Fellowship at Merton from 1869 to 1884, and after various parochial charges became (suffragan) Bp. of *Coventry in 1894. From 1903 to 1921 he was Bp. of Manchester. He was one of the most prominent *Evangelicals of his generation, a great preacher (esp. famed were his missions on the Blackpool sands), and a strong advocate of Church schools. His writings include Sacrifice or Sacrament? (1914), a defence of the Protestant doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and On What Authority? (1922), attacking the liberal school of Biblical critics. After his retirement he continued to take an active part in ecclesiastical affairs and vigorously opposed the Revised Prayer Book (rejected 1927 and 1928). He was also the author of an interesting study, The Tractarian Movement, 1833–1845 (1933).

E. A. Knox, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 1847–1934 (1935). L. W. Grensted in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 516 f.

KNOX, JOHN (c. 1513–72), Scottish Reformer. He was born at Haddington, educated at Glasgow and possibly St. Andrews, received minor orders, perhaps even the priesthood, and set up as a notary in his native town. Having given up his profession he became a private tutor c. 1544, and soon afterwards, under the influence of the reforming G. *Wishart, embraced the principles of the Reformation. In 1547 he became preacher at St. Andrews; at the capture of the castle by the French galleys he was taken prisoner and sent to France, but released in 1549, when he came to England. In 1551 he was made chaplain to *Edward VI and as such assisted in the final stages of the revision of the Second Prayer Book; he appears to have been chiefly responsible for the *Black Rubric. In 1553 he went as a preacher to Bucks, but on *Mary's accession fled to the Continent. He met J. *Calvin at Geneva, and in 1554 was for a short time pastor of the English refugees at Frankfurt, but was expelled after a dispute over matters of Sunday worship. In 1555 he returned to Scotland. Here his preaching and writing met with great success, but the continuing persecution of Protestants led him in 1556 to accept a call to the English church at Geneva, where he published several tracts concerning the situation in Scotland, among them The First Blast of the Trumpet against the Monstrous Regiment of Women (1558), a violent diatribe against Mary of Guise, asserting that government by a woman is contrary to the law of nature and to Divine ordinance. This pamphlet, which appeared shortly before the accession of *Elizabeth, earned him the hostility of the English Queen, who refused to let him pass through England on his way back to Scotland in 1559.

Becoming leader of the Reforming party, he devoted himself to preaching and to procuring money and troops from England. After the death of Mary of Guise (1560), he drew up the Scottish Confession* (q.v.) and brought into being a commission which abolished the authority of the Pope, 'idolatry', and the Mass, the celebration and attendance of which was forbidden under pain of death. The First Book of Discipline* (q.v.) was largely his work. About the same time his only theological work, the Treatise on Predestination (1560), appeared at Geneva; it is an exposition of rigid *Predestinationism. After *Mary Stuart's return to Scotland (1561), Knox came into repeated conflicts with the Queen over the question of having Mass celebrated for her as well as over the worldliness of her court, on both of which subjects he preached violent sermons. The 'Book of *Common Order' (1556–64), the Scottish service book, was largely his work. In 1567 he preached daily against the Queen, and after her abdication preached the sermon at the coronation of *James and became closely connected with the regent, the earl of Moray. After the murder of Moray in 1570, Knox's political power diminished, and it was only after his death that his cause finally triumphed. Narrow, bigoted, and outspoken, Knox easily made enemies; yet, fearless and straightforward, he wielded an enormous influence. His principal work is the History of the Reformation of Religion within the Realm of Scotland. An early (unfinished) edition was issued by T. Vautrollier in 1587 and immediately seized and suppressed. The first complete edition appeared in 1644.

His works were edited by D. Laing (6 vols., Edinburgh, 1846–64). Modern ed. of his History of the Reformation in Scotland by W. C. Dickinson (2 vols., London, 1949). J. Ridley, John Knox (Oxford, 1968). Earlier studies by T. McCrie (Edinburgh, 1812), P. Hume Brown (2 vols., London, 1895), A. Lang (ib., 1905), E. Muir (ib., 1929), Lord Eustace Percy (ib., 1937), and G. MacGregor (ib., 1958). J. S. McEwen, The Faith of John Knox (Croal Lectures for 1960; 1961). Æ. Mackay in D.N.B., xxxi (1892), pp. 308–28.

KNOX, RONALD ARBUTHNOTT (1888–1957), Catholic apologist and translator of the Bible. The son of E. A. *Knox, he had a brilliant career at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, and became a leading personality in the extreme *Anglo-Catholic Movement in the years before the First World War. In 1912 he became Fellow and Chaplain of Trinity College, Oxford. A satirical poem in the style of J. *Dryden, Absolute and Abitofhell (1913), which was an attack on the recent volume Foundations*, made him widely known in ecclesiastical circles. In 1917 he was received into the RC Church at Farnborough Abbey; in 1918 he published A Spiritual Aeneid (autobiographical); and in 1919 he was ordained to the RC priesthood. After teaching for some years at St. Edmund's College, Ware, he became chaplain to the RC undergraduates at Oxford in 1926. In 1939 he resigned this appointment to devote himself to a translation of the Bible. This translation, which was based on the Latin *Vulgate text, sought to put the Bible into timeless English; it is generally agreed to be a remarkable achievement and among the best of modern renderings. The NT was completed in 1945 and the OT in 1949; the whole Bible in one volume was issued in 1955. After some hesitations, the edition was authorized by the RC hierarchy for public use in church. Knox's other writings include Some Loose Stones (1913), On Englishing the Bible (1949), Enthusiasm (1950), and many books of popular apologetic and fiction, esp. detective stories.

Life by E. Waugh (London, 1959). T. Corbishley, S.J., Ronald Knox the Priest (1964); R. Speaight, Ronald Knox the Writer (1966). C. Hollis in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 595–7.

KOCH, JOHANN. See Cocceius, Johannes.

KOHLER, CHRISTIAN and HIERONYMUS. See Brügglers.

KOLLYVA (Gk. κόλλυβα). In the E. Church, a cake made of grains of wheat or rice and usually covered with sugar; this is blessed during memorial services for the departed and distributed to those present.

KOMVOSCHINION (Gk. κομβοσχοίνιον; Slavonic, vervitsa or tchotki). In the E. Church, a knotted cord of wool or other material (less commonly, a string of beads), corresponding to the W. *rosary, although differing in structure. It is often used when reciting the *Jesus Prayer.

KONKORDIENFORMEL. See Concord, Formula of.

KONTAKION. See Contakion.

KORAN (Arab. Qur'ān, 'recitation'). The sacred book of *Islam, which Mohammed claimed had been revealed to him as the very Word of God, through the mediation of the archangel *Gabriel. It is made up of short passages revealed at intervals throughout Mohammed's prophetic career; although committed to writing during his life, the present text dates from the recension of the Caliph Uthman (643–56), as does also its arrangement in 114 sections (sūras), placed roughly in decreasing order of length, irrespective of date of revelation. It lays strong stress on God's unity and omnipotence, and on the rewards and punishments of the life to come, but it also embodies the basic principles of Islamic law, ethics and institutions, and some homiletic material based on Jewish and Christian sources, esp. the *Haggadah and the NT apocrypha.

The first Eng. tr. direct from the Arabic was that of G. Sale (London, 1734). That of R. Bell (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1937–9; revised ed. by W. M. Watt, 1970) and the Fr. tr. of R. Blachère (2 vols., Paris, 1949–51) are representative of the European scholarly approach; that of N. J. Dawood (Penguin Classics, 1956) is based on traditional Muslim scholarship; A. J. Arberry, The Koran Interpreted (2 vols., 1955), seeks rather to give an impression of the literary form. R. Bell, Introduction to the Qur'ān (1953). R. Blachère, Introduction au Coran (1947, ed. 2, 1959). T. Noeldeke, Geschichte des Qorāns (1860; ed. 2 by F. Schwally et al., 3 vols., 1909–38).

KORIDETHI CODEX, The. A MS. of the Gospels, dating prob. from the 9th cent.; it is written in rough *uncials and is known to textual critics as Θ. It is now at Tiflis, but it formerly belonged to the monastery of Koridethi, near the Caspian Sea. Its text of Mk., which differs widely from that of this Gospel in the other uncial MSS. and is akin to that of two groups of *minuscules (those designated by the numbers 1–118–131–209 and 13–69–124–346), was named by B. H. *Streeter the '*Caesarean Text' (q.v.), in the belief that it represented the text of the Gospel current at *Caesarea in Palestine in the 3rd cent.

The MS., found in the church of Sts. Kerykos and Julitta at Koridethi, was first publd. (in facsimiles) by the Imperial Moscow Archaeological Society at Moscow, 1907; later ed. by G. Beermann–C. R. Gregory, Leipzig, 1913, with a study of the history of the MS. based on its many marginal notes in Gk. and Georgian. K. *Lake–R. P. Blake, 'The Text of the Gospels and the Koridethi Codex' in H.T.R., xvi (1923), pp. 267–86; B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), esp. ch. iv. B. Botte, O.S.B., in Dict. Bibl., Suppl., v (1957), cols. 192–6.

KORNTHAL, NW. of Stuttgart, *Pietist settlement. It was founded in 1819 as a centre of Pietist life in opposition to the increasing rationalism of the contemporary *Lutheran state Church. Its members accepted the *Augsburg Confession with a few alterations, but their teaching was coloured by belief in the speedy coming of the *Millennium. Inspired by *Moravian influence, their daily life was strictly regulated down to matters of food and clothing, and they were exempted by the civil power from taking the oath and from military service. Their principal achievements were educational institutions for boys, girls, and neglected children, and missionary work on the lines of the '*Innere Mission'. In 1969 the membership of the community was c. 1200.

J. Hesse, Korntal einst und Jetzt (Stuttgart, 1910). F. Grünzweig, Die evangelische Brüdergemeinde Korntal. Weg, Wesen und Werk (Metzingen, Württemberg, 1958). H. Schmidt–C. Kolb in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 38–47, s.v., with reff. to earlier lit. See also bibl. to Pietism.

KRAUS, FRANZ XAVER (1840–1901), ecclesiastical historian. After studying at several German universities, he was ordained priest in 1864, and in 1872 became professor-extraordinary of the history of Christian art at the university of Strassburg. In 1878 he was appointed professor of Church history at Freiburg, where he filled a number of important civil offices and came into repute as a scholar of great learning. His political theories, which upheld the rights of the state against interference from the Church, led the government to support his candidature for the episcopate, but opposition from the ecclesiastical authorities prevented the appointment being made. Some of his books also gave offence to his religious superiors through their political teaching. He remained in communion with the RC Church, however, till his death. The most considerable of his numerous works was his Geschichte der christlichen Kunst (2 vols., 1896–1900; the last section of the work was completed after his death by Joseph Sauer in 1908). His other writings include Roma sotterranea (1873), Real-encyklopædie der christlichen Altertümer (2 vols., 1882–6), Die christlichen Inschriften der Rheinlande (2 vols., 1890–4), a book on *Dante (1897), of whom Kraus was a keen student, and an essay on Cavour (posthumous, 1902). In 1904 a 'Krausgesellschaft' was formed to further his supposed ecclesiastico-political doctrines.

Two collections of Essays were published (Berlin, 1896–1901). Diaries ed. H. Schiel (Cologne, 1957), with extensive bibl. Lives by K. Braig (Freiburg i.Br., 1902) and E. Hauviller (Colmar, 1904). Notice by K. Künstle in R.H.E., iii (1902), pp. 431–41. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 854–73 (with full bibl. of Kraus's works, but scornful of him as a scholar). H. Schiel in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 595, s.v.

KRÜDENER, BARBARA JULIANA FREIFRAU VON (1764–1824), *Pietist. After deserting her Russian husband and forming a liaison with a young French officer at Paris—during which period of her life she wrote a novel, Valérie (2 vols., 1803)—she was suddenly converted during a sojourn at Riga in the summer of 1804. She became an ardent devotee of the German Pietistic Movement, and in 1815 exercised great influence on the Czar Alexander I, proclaiming that Napoleon was the Apollyon of Rev. 9. 11 and thus winning the Czar's support for the idea of the *Holy Alliance.

C. Eynard, Vie de Madame de Krudener (2 vols., 1849). P. L. Jacob (pseudonym of P. Lacroix), Madame de Krudener. Ses lettres et ses ouvrages inédits (1880). C. Ford, The Life and Letters of Madame de Krudener (1893). H. von Redern, Zwei Welten. Das Leben von Juliane von Krüdener (1927); A. Hermant, Madame de Krüdener, l'amie du Tsar Alexandre (1934). E. J. Knapton, The Lady of the Holy Alliance. The Life of Julie de Krüdener (New York, 1939), with full bibl. F. Ley, Madame de Krüdener et son temps, 1764–1824 [1961], also with bibl.

KUENEN, ABRAHAM (1828–91), Dutch OT scholar. Appointed professor at Leyden in 1855, he became one of the most prominent advocates of liberal theological thought in Holland. At first he was a follower of H. G. A. *Ewald, under whose influence he wrote his Historisch-Kritisch Onderzoek (3 vols., 1861–5; 2nd edition, 1885–93; trans. in part into English by J. W. *Colenso [1865], by whom Kuenen was much influenced); but he later came to hold the current opinion that the priestly code (P) was the latest element in the Pentateuch. His later views were embodied in his book De Godsdienst van Israel (1869–70; Eng. trans., The Religion of Israel, 1874–5) and in De Profeten en de Profetie onder Israël (1875; Eng. trans., The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel, 1877). He delivered the *Hibbert Lectures in 1882 on National Religion and Universal Religion.

K. Budde (ed. and tr.), Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur biblischen Wissenschaft (1894; with full bibl. of Kuenen's writings, compiled by W. C. van Manen). P. H. Wicksteed in J.Q.R., iv (1892), pp. 571–605. A. Kamphausen in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 162–70, s.v., with bibl.

KULTURKAMPF. The repressive political movement in Germany in the 1870s against the RC Church. It was mainly inspired by Bismarck, who feared that the influence of Catholicism would endanger the unity of the German Empire.

In its earlier years the conflict was very bitter, provoked chiefly by the anti-Catholic legislation. In 1871 Bismarck suppressed the Catholic department of the Prussian Ministry of Public Worship, and in 1872 appointed P. L. A. *Falk Minister of Public Worship, under whose aegis the *Jesuits were expelled, education was brought under the control of the state, and the famous '*May laws' (1873) were passed. The opposition to this legislation was very strong, and several Catholic bishops, including Cardinal M. H. von Ledóchowski of Gnesen-Posen and K. Martin of Paderborn, were imprisoned. The German embassy at the Vatican was also recalled, and owing to the condemnatory tenor of the encyclical 'Quod nunquam' (7 Feb. 1875) the RC Church was deprived of all financial assistance from the state. Further, the religious orders were ordered to leave the country.

Bismarck, however, had misunderstood the extent and strength of the opposition, and gradually became convinced that a *concordat with the Vatican was the better solution. He also hoped by a change of tactics to gain the aid of the Catholic Church in the fight against Social Democracy. Hence at the end of the '70s the previous policy was reversed and peace was made with the new Pope, *Leo XIII. By 1887 most of the anti-Catholic laws, with the exception of that expelling the Jesuits, had been nullified. The Kulturkampf had the undesigned effect of creating in some measure a religious revival inside Germany. It certainly strengthened the hold of Roman Catholicism on the German people in the latter years of the 19th cent.

A. Constabel (ed.), Die Vorgeschichte des Kulturkampfes. Quellenveröffentlichung aus dem Deutschen Zentralarchiv (1956). Substantial works include J. B. Kissling, Geschichte des Kulturkampfs im Deutschen Reich (3 vols., 1911–16). G. Goyau, Bismarck et l'Église. Le Culturkampf, 1870–1878 (4 vols., 1911–13); G. Franz, Kulturkampf. Staat und katholische Kirche in Mitteleuropa von der Säkularisation bis zum Abschluss des Preussischen Kulturkampfes (Munich [1954]); and E. Schmidt-Volkmar, Der Kulturkampf in Deutschland 1871–1890 (Göttingen, 1962), with bibl. H. W. L. Freudenthal in N.C.E., vii (1967), pp. 267–9, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under Falk, P. L. A.

KUYPER, ABRAHAM (1837–1920), Dutch *Calvinist theologian and politician. Educated at *Leyden, he was pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church at Beesd from 1863. In 1879 he set out the ideas of the anti-revolutionary party, whose leader he had become, in his book Ons Program. He later became a professor of the Calvinistic university which he had founded at Amsterdam, and in 1886 he established the strictly Calvinistic Reformed Church Community. In 1898 he went to America to give the Stone Lectures, published in England in 1932 under the title Calvinism. Regarding Calvinism as a way of life satisfying all the needs of modern man, he presented it both as a religious belief opposed to *Liberal Protestantism and in its bearings on contemporary social and political life. He endeavoured to apply these principles in the responsible position he held as Minister of the Interior from 1901 to 1905. In 1903 he was opposed by the Dutch Socialists for using parliamentary legislation to crush a railway strike, and during the South African War he urged Holland to mediate between the Boers and the British. In his later years he led the anti-revolutionary party in the Upper Chamber.

Kuyper was the author of a large number of writings. J. C. Rullmann, Kuyper-Bibliografie (3 vols., The Hague, 1923–40). Lives by P. A. Diepenhorst (Volksuniversiteits Bibliotheek, No. 50; Haarlem, 1931) and P. Kasteel ([Louvain], 1938), with detailed bibl. B. D. Eerdmans, De Theologie van Dr. Abraham Kuyper (1909); S. J. Ridderbos, De Theologische Cultuurbeschouwing van Abraham Kuyper (1947). S. van der Linde in R.G.G. (ed. 3), iv (1960), col. 191 f., s.v.

KYRIALE. The Latin liturgical book containing the musical chant for the *Ordinary of the *Mass. It is so named from its opening part, the *Kyrie. As a separate book it seems to owe its existence to printers who sought to satisfy the convenience of choirs wanting the fixed parts of the Mass in a different book from that containing the variable parts such as the *Gradual. *Pius X issued an authoritative revision known as the Kyriale Vaticanum, with the music for 18 different plain-chant Masses. The name 'Graduale' is occasionally used to cover the Kyriale as well as the Gradual in its proper sense.

KYRIE ELEISON (Gk. Κύριε ἐλέησον, 'Lord, have mercy'). A brief prayer for Divine mercy which from an early date has been used in the liturgical worship of the Church. The use of the words in non-Christian cultus is also attested (cf. *Epictetus, Diss. ii. 7). In Christian worship their use in the latter part of the 4th cent. is recorded in the Apostolic Constitutions* (viii. 6), where they appear as the response of the people to the petitions made by the deacon; *Etheria (Peregrinatio, xxiv. 5) also reports that at Jerusalem they were used as a response in a litany at Vespers. In the W., towards the end of the 5th cent. a litany containing the response 'Kyrie eleison' (the so-called Deprecatio Gelasii*) was inserted into the Mass in place of the general intercession, while the Rule of St. *Benedict (ix and xvii) records the use of 'Kyrie eleison' in the Office. The Council of *Vaison of 529 (can. 3) ordered that the Kyrie should be said in France as it was in the Holy See and throughout Italy and the provinces of the East. Under Gregory the Great (590–604) various changes in the Mass were made: on many days in the year the customary invocations were to be omitted and only the response 'Kyrie eleison' was to be sung; in a letter of 598 Gregory mentions that at Rome the 'Kyrie eleison' is supplemented by a similar prayer, 'Christe eleison' ('Christ, have mercy'), not found in the East; and the whole seems soon to have been placed in what became its traditional position near the beginning of the Mass. What is commonly known as the ninefold Kyrie (that is, 'Kyrie eleison' repeated three times, followed by 'Christe eleison' repeated three times, and 'Kyrie eleison' three times) occurs in the Ordo Romanus of St. Amand (Ordo Romanus IV; 8th–9th cent.); it became the traditional pattern in the Roman Mass. The three groups were sometimes later conceived as directed to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost respectively. Elaborate musical settings were devised, and these led to the development of 'farced' Kyries, in which additional words were inserted.

In the Eucharistic Rite of the BCP of 1549, the ninefold Kyrie survived in an English translation ('Lord have mercy upon us'), but in 1552 the Ten *Commandments were substituted. From the middle of the 19th cent. use of the Kyrie both in Greek and English came to be adopted unofficially in many quarters and it is permitted in the ASB and other modern Anglican liturgies. The use of the Kyrie in an English form at *Mattins, *Evensong and in the *Litany has been continuous since 1549.

In the present RC Eucharistic Rite a sixfold Kyrie, usually in the vernacular (each of the three petitions, 'Lord have mercy', 'Christ have mercy', and 'Lord have mercy', being said by the celebrant and repeated by the people as a response) forms one of the penitential acts at the beginning of Mass, and the vernacular form of the Kyrie may also be used as the people's response in the Prayers of the Faithful.

E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. vi, pp. 116–36. B. *Capelle, 'Le Kyrie de la messe et le pape Gélase' in R. Bén., xlvi (1934), pp. 126–44; repr. in Travaux Liturgiques, ii (Louvain, 1962), pp. 116–34. C. Callewaert, 'Les Étapes de l'histoire du Kyrie' in R.H.E., xxxviii (1942), pp. 20–45. Texts of 'farced' Kyries, ed. C. Blume, S.J.–H. M. Bannister, Tropen des Missales im Mittelalter, i (A.H.M.A., xlvii; 1905). Margaretha Landwehr-Melnicki, Das einstimmige Kyrie des Lateinischen Mittelalters (Forschungsbeiträge zur Musikwissenschaft, i; 1955). Jungmann (ed. 1958), i, pp. 429–46; Eng. tr., i, pp. 333–46.

L

LABADISTS. A Protestant sect named after Jean de Labadie (1610–74), its founder, who had been a *Jesuit from 1625 to 1639, had joined the Reformed Church at Montauban in 1650, and after preaching at various places on the Continent, esp. in Holland, settled temporarily in 1670 at Herford in Westphalia with about 55 followers. On being forced to leave Herford in 1672, he moved first to Bremen and later to Altona, where he died. His followers held extreme *Pietist views. They believed that the Bible could be understood only by the immediate inspiration of the Holy Spirit, rarely celebrated the Eucharist, and held that marriage with an unregenerate person was not binding; and they were organized on a communistic basis. They survived de Labadie's death by some 50 years.

H. van Berkum, De Labadie en de Labadisten (2 pts., Sneek, 1851). A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, i (1880), pp. 194–268. K. D. Schmidt, 'Labadie und Spener. Literarkritischer Vergleich der "Pia Desideria" Speners mit Labadies Schriften "La Réformation de l'Église par le pastorat" und "L'Exercice profétique"' in Z.K.G., xlvi (1927), pp. 566–83. On Labadie, see also L. Marchal in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2383–5, s.v.

LABARUM. The military standard adopted by the Emp. *Constantine after his vision. In form it seems to have been an adaptation of the Roman cavalry standard, with the pagan emblems replaced by a Christian monogram, viz. the two Greek letters X and P (the first two of ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ, 'Christ') intersecting. It was at first the banner of only the W. Empire, but after Licinius's defeat at the battle of Chrysopolis (324) it was adopted by the E. as well. The name is probably an incorrect form of laureum, a Latin word used by the Roman soldiery for a standard (vexillum).

For the extensive modern literature, with a discussion, see N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (1929), pp. 60–5. H. Grégoire, 'L'Étymologie du "Labarum"' in Byzantion, iv (1929), pp. 477–82. J. J. Hatt, 'La Vision de Constantin au sanctuaire de Grand et l'origine celtique du labarum' in Latomus, ix (1950), pp. 427–36.

LABBE, PHILIPPE (1607–67), Church historian. In 1623 he entered the *Jesuit Order. A prolific writer and compiler, he published over 80 works, of which the most important was his collection of the Church Councils under the title Sacrosancta Concilia ad Regiam Editionem exacta. Before his death vols. 1–8 and 12–15 had been printed, but they were not published until 1671–3. The outstanding volumes were completed by his fellow-Jesuit, G. Cossart. This collection, the most extensive of its age, was later incorporated into the Concilia of J. D. *Mansi.

H. *Quentin, O.S.B., J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 29–33 and 182 f. Sommervogel, iv (1893), cols. 1295–1328.

LABERTHONNIÈRE, LUCIEN (1860–1932), RC *Modernist theologian. In 1886 he was ordained priest as an *Oratorian. He taught at the Collège at Juilly (1887) and at the École Massillon at Paris (1896), and in 1900 became rector of the Collège at Juilly. From 1905 to 1913 he edited the Annales de philosophie chrétienne. He joined with M. *Blondel in a vigorous attack on C. Maurras and the *Action Française. In theology he developed a pragmatic view of religious truth, called moral dogmatism, which he expounded in Essais de philosophie religieuse (1903) and Le Réalisme chrétien et l'idéalisme grec (1904). Both works were put on the *Index in 1906, and in 1913 he was prohibited from all further publication. His writings exercised considerable influence on G. *Tyrrell.

After his death his works were published by his literary executor, Louis Canet: Œuvres de Laberthonnière publiées par les soins de Louis Canet (1935 ff.: 8 vols. to 1955; of these, vols. 1–2, Études sur Descartes, 1935, was put on the Index in 1936, and vol. 3, Études de philosophie cartésienne et premiers écrits philosophiques, 1937, was put on the Index in 1941). Some of his retreat addresses were ed. Marie-Madeleine d'Hendecourt under the title, Les Fruits de l'Esprit (1961), with introd. Correspondance philosophique of Blondel and Laberthonnière, ed. C. Tresmontant (1961). Study by E. Castelli (Milan, 1927), with bibl. Marie-Madeleine d'Hendecourt, Essai sur la philosophie du Père Laberthonnière (1947). A. R. Vidler, A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), pp. 82–90. C. Testore in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 775–7, s.v., with bibl.

LABRE, St. BENEDICT JOSEPH (1748–83), pilgrim and mendicant saint. Born at Amettes near Boulogne, he showed pious dispositions from childhood and was strongly drawn to one of the religious orders. After vain attempts to be received by the *Trappists, *Carthusians, and *Cistercians, he was rejected by all as unsuitable to community life and found his vocation in a life of solitude and pilgrimage. He visited most of the leading sanctuaries of Europe (some many times), among them *Loreto, *Assisi, Naples, and Bari in Italy, *Einsiedeln in Switzerland, Paray-le-Monial in *France, and *Compostela in *Spain. Everywhere he begged his food, giving away the alms offered him and spending much of his time in churches. For his last few years he lived at Rome, except for an annual pilgrimage to Loreto. Here he became a familiar figure in the city, known from his devotion to the Quarant'Ore as the 'Saint of the *Forty Hours'. Exhausted by his austerities, he died outside his favourite church, Sta Maria dei Monti, in Holy Week 1783. A local cultus soon developed; and he was pronounced Venerable by *Pius IX in 1859 and canonized by *Leo XIII in 1881. Feast day, 16 Apr.

G. L. Marconi (his confessor), Ragguaglio della vita del servo di Dio, Benedetto Labre Francese (1783; abridged Eng. version, 1786). F. Gaguère, Le Saint Pauvre de Jésus-Christ, Benoit-Joseph Labre (Avignon, 1936). Other modern lives by A. M. Coltrato (Rome, 1807; Eng. tr., 1850), F. J. M. Desnoyers (2 vols., Lille, 1857), L. Aubineau (Paris, 1873), C. L. White (London [1906]), J. Mantenay ('Les Saints', 1908), A. de La Gorce (Paris, 1933; Eng. tr., 1952), J. Riverain (ib., 1948), and P. Doyère, O.S.B. (ib., 1964).

LACEY, THOMAS ALEXANDER (1853–1931), Anglican divine. Educated at Balliol College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1876 and after holding various scholastic and parochial appointments became Canon of *Worcester in 1918. Brilliant, versatile, and learned, and imbued with a sympathetic understanding of modern problems, he became known as an effective, and at times distinctly original, apologist for the *Anglo-Catholic presentation of the Christian faith. Throughout his life he was devoted to the cause of reunion. He took an active part at Rome in 1896, when a Papal commission was examining the validity of *Anglican ordinations, supplying, in conjunction with his friend Fr. F. W. Puller, S.S.J.E., much of the material from the Anglican side. His most important writings were De Hierarchia Anglicana Dissertatio Apologetica (1895; in conjunction with E. Denny); A Roman Diary and other Documents relating to the Papal Enquiry into English Ordinations, MDCCCXCVI (1910); Marriage in Church and State (1912; revised by R. C. Mortimer, 1947); Nature, Miracle, and Sin (on St. *Augustine; 1916); and Unity and Schism (1917). He was joint editor of the English Hymnal* and translated for it many Latin hymns.

Wayfarer's Essays [collection of Lacey's papers ed., with short memoir (pp. v–xi) and list of his books (p. xiii f.), by Arnold Wilson] (1934). C. B. Mortlock in D.N.B., 1931–1940, p. 519 f., s.v.

LACHMANN, KARL (1793–1851), philologist and textual critic. From 1825 to 1827 he was extraordinary, and from 1827 till his death ordinary, professor of classical and German philology at Berlin. Lachmann was the first scholar to produce an edition of the Greek NT text in which the *textus receptus was abandoned in favour of that of the oldest Greek MSS. He aimed at presenting the text, not as it was originally composed by the inspired writers of the NT, but as it circulated in E. Christendom at the end of the 4th cent.; and though his modus operandi, partly conditioned by this limited aim, suffered from being over-mechanical, he gave the impulse to the later work of C. *Tischendorf and B. F. *Westcott–F. J. A. *Hort. He issued two editions of the Greek text, the smaller in 1831 and a fuller edition in 2 vols. in 1842–50. Lachmann was also the first scholar to put the *Marcan hypothesis on a sound footing, which he did in an article in the Theologische Studien und Kritiken for 1835. His great services to the study of classical antiquity do not call for consideration here.

K. Lachmann, 'Rechenschaft über seine Ausgabe des Neuen Testaments' in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, iii (1830), pp. 817–45; id., 'De Ordine Narrationum in Evangeliis Synopticis', ib., viii (1835), pp. 570–90. Letters to M. Haupt ed. by J. Vahlen (1892); letters to Lachmann (1814–50), ed. A. Leitzmann in Abh. (Berl.), 1915, No. 1; A. Leitzmann, Briefe Karl Lachmanns (ib., 1942, No. 8). Life by M. Hertz (Berlin, 1851). A. Rüegg, Die neutestamentliche Textkritik seit Lachmann (Zürich, 1892). S. Timpanaro, Jr., 'La genesi del "Metodo del Lachmann" ' in Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, N.S., xxxi (1959), pp. 182–228, xxxii (1960), pp. 38–63. E. Michels in Dict. Bibl., iv (1908), cols. 27–9, s.v.

LACORDAIRE, HENRI DOMINIQUE (1802–1861), French *Dominican preacher. He was born at Recey-sur-Ource and, after losing his faith at an early age, became a disciple of J.-J. *Rousseau. He studied law at Dijon and *Paris and speedily made a reputation as an orator at the Paris bar. In 1824 he was converted, entered the seminary at Issy, and was ordained priest at *St.-Sulpice in 1827. In the next year he was appointed chaplain to the Convent of the *Visitation in Paris. In 1830 he became a contributor to F. de *Lamennais's periodical L'Avenir, but severed connexion with it on its condemnation by *Gregory XVI in 1832. He replied to Lamennais's Paroles d'un croyant (1834) with Considérations sur le Système de M. de Lamennais (1834). In 1835–36 he gave his first two series of famous Conferences at *Notre-Dame which drew a vast concourse, largely from the intelligentsia. His political liberalism and *Ultramontane theology aroused distrust, however, and at the height of his influence he retired to Rome. Here in 1839, after making a retreat under the direction of Dom P. *Guéranger, then engaged in restoring the *Benedictine Order in France, he entered the Dominican Order with the intention of re-establishing this Order also in France. After his return to Paris in 1841 he resumed his Conferences, and preached also in other cities (Bordeaux, Nancy, etc.). In 1843 he established at Nancy the first Dominican house in France since the suppression of the Order in 1790; and in 1850 he was appointed provincial of the newly founded French Dominican province. In his later years he devoted himself chiefly to organizing the new province and to fostering the liberal movement in politics. In 1860 he was elected a member of the Academy. If hardly a profound theologian or philosopher, he was fully conversant with the religious needs of his time. His most influential work was his Conférences de Notre-Dame de Paris (4 vols., 1844–51), directed esp. to unbelievers. His other writings include Vie de Saint Dominique (1841) and Sainte Marie-Madeleine (1860), both with many inspired passages but of no value as histories, and Le Testament (1863); a posthumous autobiographical work ed. by C. R. F. *Montalembert).

Editions of his works include those in 6 vols., Paris, 1857–61; 9 vols., ib., 1872; and 4 vols., ib., 1912. Among the numerous collections of his correspondence, listed in detail by H. D. Noble, O.P., cited infra, that of most general interest is his Lettres à des jeunes gens ed. H. Perreyve (Paris [1862]; Eng. tr., 1902). G. Ledos, Morceaux choisis et bibliographie de Lacordaire [1923], for full list of his works. The numerous studies include the primary lives by C. R. F. *Montalembert (Paris, 1862; Eng. tr., 1863), B. Chocarne, O.P. (Paris, 1866; Eng. tr., Dublin [1868]), and [J. T.] Foisset (2 vols., Paris, 1870). Further studies by A. Ricard, L'École menaisienne, iii (1882); [O. B. P. G. de Cléron], Comte de Haussonville ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1895; Eng. tr., 1913); G. Ledos ('Les Grands Hommes de l'Église au XIXe siècle', i, Paris, 1902); J. Bézy (Paris, 1910); and M. de Langle de Cary–J. G. Monneret (Paris, c. 1961). J. Favre, Lacordaire orateur. Sa formation et la chronologie de ses œuvres (1906). [E.] G. Ledos–L. Pauthe, Lacordaire. Son œuvre, sa survie et son actualité (1911). P. Baron, O.P., La Jeunesse de Lacordaire (1961). In English there are popular lives by Mrs. H. L. S. Lear (London, 1883), M. V. Woodgate (ib., 1939), and L. C. Sheppard (ib.–New York, 1964). P. Spencer, Politics of Belief in Nineteenth Century France (1954), pp. 17–115. H. D. Noble in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2394–424, s.v., with detailed bibl.

LACTANTIUS (c. 240 – c. 320), Christian apologist. A pupil of *Arnobius, Lucius Caecilius Firmianus Lactantius was appointed by *Diocletian a teacher of rhetoric at Nicomedia; but on his conversion to Christianity (c. 300) he was deprived of his post. Later the Emp. *Constantine made him tutor to his son Crispus. His important surviving works are 'Divinae Institutiones' (304–11), a treatise which sought to commend the truth of Christianity to men of letters and thereby for the first time to set out in Latin a systematic account of the Christian attitude to life; 'De Opificio Dei', an attempt to prove the existence of God from the marvels of the human body; 'De Ira Dei', which deals with God's punishment of human crime; and 'De Mortibus Persecutorum', which describes with a wealth of lurid detail the horrible deaths of the persecutors of the Church. The authenticity of the last-mentioned treatise, though formerly contested, is now generally admitted. In his style Lactantius was deliberately Ciceronian, in his theology almost deistic.

*Jerome, De Viris Illustribus, 80. Lactantius's writings have been constantly reissued since the 15th cent. Editio princeps of 'Divinae Institutiones', 'De Ira Dei' and 'De Opificio Dei' publd. at Subiaco, 1465 (the earliest dated printed book issued in Italy). The text of J. B. le Brun–N. Lenglet du Fresnoy (2 vols., Paris, 1748) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, vi and vii. Crit. text by S. Brandt and G. Laubmann (C.S.E.L., xix and xxvii; 1890–97); also, with Fr. tr., of 'De Mortibus Persecutorum' by J. Moreau (2 vols., S.C., xxxix; 1954). Eng. trr. by W. Fletcher (A.N.C.L., xxi and xxii; 1871) and Mary F. McDonald, O.P. (Fathers of the Church, xlix and liv; 1964–5). Eng. tr. of Lactantius's own Epitome of the 'Divine Institutes', with text and commentary, by E. H. Blakeney (London, 1950). R. Pichon, Lactance: études sur le mouvement philosophique et religieux sous le règne de Constantin (1901); P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, iii (1905), pp. 287–359. M. Pellegrino, Studi sull'antica apologetica (1947), pp. 151–207 (argues Lactantius dependent on *Minucius Felix). J. Stevenson, 'The Life and Literary Activity of Lactantius' in K. Aland–F. L. Cross (edd.), Studia Patristica, i (T.U., lxiii; 1957), pp. 661–77. Antonie Wlosok, Laktanz und die philosophische Gnosis (Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, 1960, 2. Abhandlung; 1960). J. Fontaine–M. Perrin (edd.), Lactance et son temps (1978). On Lactantius's language see Christine Mohrmann in V.C., ii (1948), pp. 165–76. H. *Lietzmann in P.W., xii (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 351–6, s.v. 'Lactantius (1)'; E. Amann in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2425–44, s.v. 'Lactance'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1018–41, s.v. 'Lactance'; M. Pellegrino in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 951–4, s.v. 'Lattanzio'.

LACTICINIA. Milk and foods such as cheese or butter, made from milk, which (as well as meat and eggs) were often forbidden on fast days in the early Church, and this is still the rule for many fast days in the E. Church.

LADISLAUS, St. (1040–95), King of Hungary. He was elected by the nobles in 1077; but the first years of his reign were troubled by the conspiracies of Solomon, son of a former king and rival claimant to the throne, who was finally defeated in 1089. In the *Investiture struggle between the German Emperor and the Pope he took the side of *Gregory VII and Victor III, and he laboured incessantly to spread the Christian faith among his subjects, esp. in Croatia and Dalmatia, which he annexed in 1091. He built many churches, obtained the canonization of *Stephen I and his son Emeric, and promulgated a series of laws on religious and civil matters at the Synod of Szabolcs (1092). When *Urban II, however, claimed suzerainty over part of his country, he refused to recognize the Pope as his temporal lord, though acknowledging him as his spiritual father. Venerated as a saint by his people, he was canonized in 1192. Feast day, 27 June.

Vita from 15th cent. MS. ed. by L. S. Endlicher, Rerum Hungaricarum Monumenta Arpadiana (St. Gall, 1849), pp. 235–44, with his laws, ib., pp. 325–48. R. K. Kaindal, 'Studien zu den ungarischen Geschichtsquellen' in Archiv für österreichische Geschichte, xci (1902), Section XV, 'Die Legenden des Heil. Ladislaus', pp. 46–53.

LADY, Our. A common designation in use among Catholics for *the Blessed Virgin *Mary (BVM). It is derived from the Latin 'Domina nostra'. Since 1559 the feast of the *Annunciation has been described in the Table of Lessons in the BCP as the 'Annunciation of our Lady'. In earlier times, the Annunciation (25 Mar.) was known as 'Our Lady in Lent' or 'in March'; the *Assumption (15 Aug.) as 'Our Lady in Harvest'; and the *Conception (8 Dec.) as 'Our Lady in December'.

LADY CHAPEL. A chapel dedicated to the BVM ('Our *Lady') when it forms part of a larger church. From the 13th cent. onwards the practice of constructing such chapels, often as later additions and to the east of the High Altar, became common in England, e.g. Henry VII's Chapel at *Westminster Abbey.

LADY DAY. The feast of the *Annunciation of the BVM, 25 Mar. The name was used in earlier times of any feast of our *Lady. In the Middle Ages and later 25 Mar. was reckoned the first day of the civil year. It is still a quarter day and Old Lady Day (6 April) still starts the fiscal year in Great Britain, e.g. for income-tax purposes.

LAETARE SUNDAY. The Fourth Sunday in *Lent ('Mid-Lent Sunday', Mi-carême), so named from the opening words of the *Introit at the Mass (Is. 66. 10: 'Rejoice ye with Jerusalem'). In W. Christendom certain relaxations of the penitential observances of Lent are allowed, e.g. the wearing of rose-pink instead of purple vestments. The Sunday is also known as *Mothering Sunday and *Refreshment Sunday.

LAETENTUR COELI (Lat., 'Let the heavens rejoice'). Two important theological documents, so named from their opening words. (They are otherwise quite unrelated.)

(1) The Greek Formulary of Union, sent on 23 Apr. 433 by *Cyril, Patr. of *Alexandria, to *John, Bp. of *Antioch, embodying the terms of reunion agreed upon by both parties, after John had previously given qualified support to the teaching of Cyril's adversary, *Nestorius. Inasmuch as the document was formally approved by the Council of *Chalcedon (451), it possesses *oecumenical authority. It expounds, in Alexandrian terms, the orthodox doctrine of the Person of Christ, insisting on the *theotokos and both the unity of person and the distinction of the natures.

(2) The bull issued by Pope *Eugenius IV on 6 July 1439 decreeing the union settled at the Council of *Florence between the Orthodox E. Church and the W. It laid down that the Orthodox should accept, inter alia, the doctrine of the *Double Procession of the Holy Ghost and the primacy of the see of Rome. It had been signed by Latins and Greeks alike on the previous day. See also Florence, Council of.

(1) The formulary (Gk. opening, Εὐφραινέσθωσαν οἱ οὐρανοί) is Ep. xxxix of the correspondence of Cyril of Alexandria (J. P. Migne, PG, lxxvii, 173–82). It has often been repr. in collections of 'Oecumenical Documents', e.g. T. H. Bindley, Oecumenical Documents of the Faith (ed. 4 by F. W. Green, 1950), pp. 138–48. The only critical text is in E. *Schwartz, A.C.O., I. i. 4, pp. 15–20.

(2) Text in G. Hoffmann, S.J. (ed.), Concilium Florentinum. Documenta et Scriptores, Series A. Epistolae Pontificiae ad Concilium Florentinum Spectantes, pars ii (Rome, 1944), pp. 68–79. Lat. text of the principal clauses repr. in Denz.–Schön. (ed. 33, 1965), pp. 330–2 (Nos. 1300–8). See also bibl. to Florence, Council of.

LAGARDE, PAUL ANTON DE (1827–91), Protestant theologian and critic. In 1845 he exchanged his earlier name of Bötticher for de Lagarde. From 1854 to 1866 he was a schoolmaster at Berlin, and from 1869 till his death professor at Gottingen. His opposition to all forms of liberalism and economic materialism, his hatred of the Jews, and his intensely national feeling anticipated many subsequent developments in German thought. On the other hand he was a keen upholder of the rights of individual personality and deprecated any attempt to set up the state as an absolute norm. Possessed of untiring industry and an extraordinary range of knowledge, he produced a number of erudite works, covering an unusually wide range of subjects. Among those of importance to the ecclesiastical historian are Didascalia Apostolorum Syriace (1854), Onomastica Sacra (1870), Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos Hieronymi (1874), Aegyptiaca (1883), Septuaginta-Studien (1891; 1892), as well as an edition of part of the *Lucianic Recension of the *Septuagint (1883).

Anna de Lagarde (widow), Paul de Lagarde. Erinnerungen aus seiner Leben zusammengestellt (Göttingen, 1894). Other studies by L. Schemann (Leipzig, 1919), A. Rahlfs (Mitteilungen des Septuginta-Unternehmens der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, iv, Hft. 1; 1928), L. Schmid (Tübinger Studien zur systematischen Theologie, Hft. iv; Stuttgart, 1935), and R. W. Lougee (Cambridge, Mass.–London, 1962), with reasoned bibl. J. Schmid in L.Th.K. (ed. 2), vi (1961), col. 730 f., s.v., with further bibl.

LAGRANGE, MARIE JOSEPH (1855–1938), Biblical scholar. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1879. In 1890 he founded at Jerusalem the 'École Pratique d'Études Bibliques', and in 1892 the Revue Biblique [Internationale]. He gave his warm support to *Leo XIII's efforts to encourage the critical study of the Bible in the RC Church, and in 1902 was appointed a member of the *Biblical Commission. In matters of OT criticism, which was the chief field of his earlier labours, perhaps his position approached as nearly to that of the *Higher Critics as was compatible with Catholic orthodoxy. His sympathies with the critical position became manifest in a memorandum which he presented in 1897 to the International Congress of Catholics at Fribourg (Switzerland) and later published in the Revue Biblique (Jan. 1898). His monumental commentaries on the four Gospels (Marc, 1911; Luc, 1920; Matthieu, 1923; Jean, 1925) at once established themselves as standard works.

L. H. Vincent, O.P., 'Le Père Lagrange' in R. Bibl., xlvii (1938), pp. 321–54. Id. (ed.), Mémorial Lagrange (Paris, 1940), with an 'Essai d'une bibliographie sommaire du Père Lagrange' by id., pp. 1–11. L'Œuvre exégétique et historique du R.P. Lagrange, with pref. by A. Liénart (Cahiers de la Nouvelle Journée, xxviii [1935]). F. M. Braun, L'Œuvre du Père Lagrange (1943; Eng. adaptation, Milwaukee, 1963).

LAINEZ, JAMES. See Laynez, James.

LAITY (from Gk. λαός, people). Members of the Christian Churches who do not belong to the clergy. The distinction between the two has always been most marked in the RC and Greek Churches, less so in the C of E, and least in the Free Churches, whilst some sects such as the *Quakers admit no distinction at all. In the RC Church the emphasis has been modified by the Second *Vatican Council: this Council stressed the role of the laity as part of the 'people of God' in the 'Constitution on the Church' (1964); in the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' (1963) the laity were said to have a share in the 'priestly, prophetic and royal office of Christ' and were assigned various duties in public worship; while the 'Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity' (1965) recognized their special gifts (charismata) for building up the body of Christ and stressed their vocation to ameliorate the social order as well as their part in preaching the Gospel. A similar change of emphasis in the C of E is reflected in the enhanced position assigned to the laity in the government of the Church by the *Synodical Government Measure (1969). The laity, however, owe allegiance to the clergy in spiritual matters and in most Churches are bound to contribute to the support of their ministers.

LAKE, KIRSOPP (1872–1946), Biblical and patristic scholar. Educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1895, and after holding two curacies in England, was professor of NT exegesis at *Leyden from 1904 to 1914. Later he held professorships at Harvard university, U.S.A. Esp. in his earlier years he was a provocative NT critic. In his Historical Evidence for the Resurrection of Jesus Christ (1907) he challenged the sufficiency of the evidence for the empty tomb, and in his Earlier Epistles of St. Paul (1911) maintained that the course of primitive Christianity was profoundly affected by the influence of the mystery religions. These books were followed by The Beginnings of Christianity: The Acts of the Apostles (5 vols., 1920–33), a co-operative work in the editing of which he was associated with F. J. Foakes Jackson. Throughout his life he was a devoted student of the palaeography of Greek MSS. *The Early Days of Monasticism on Mount Athos (1909) was the fruit of an early visit to Greece for the study of MSS., and from 1934 onwards he edited with his wife Monumenta Palaeographica Vetera, First Series, a fine set of facsimiles of 'Dated Greek Minuscule Manuscripts to the Year 1200'. From 1934 until his death he and his wife also edited the series Studies and Documents, with contributions by R. P. Blake, C. Bonner, R. P. Casey, C. H. Kraeling and others.

R. P. Casey–Silva Lake–Agnes K. Lake (edd.), Quantulacumque. Studies presented to Kirsopp Lake by Pupils, Colleagues and Friends [1937], with biogr. note by Gerard Kirsopp Lake (son), p. vii f. F. C. Grant in D.N.B., 1941–1950, p. 466 f.

LAMB. The use of a lamb as a symbol of Christ is based on such passages as Jn. 1. 29, Rev. 5. 12. Occasionally in early times a lamb with or near a cross was used to represent the sacrifice of Christ, e.g. in a 3rd cent. inscription in the *Catacomb of San Callisto. Common types of symbolism represent the lamb as standing on Mt. *Sion (cf. Rev. 14. 1), from which flow the four rivers of Paradise, or as carrying a crook and milk-pail (cf. Rev. 7. 17). Other passages in the NT (e.g. Jn. 10. 14) suggest the representation of the Christian believers as sheep, and where this symbolism is used the Good Shepherd carries His lambs or, alternatively, stands among them. See also Paschal Lamb.

J. A. Martigny, Étude archéologique sur l'Agneau et le Bon-Pasteur [1860]. F. Meinecke, Das Symbol des apokalyptischen Christuslammes als Triumphbekenntnis der Reichskirche (Diss. Strassburg, Frankfurt a.M., 1908). F. Gerke, 'Der Ursprung der Lämmerallegorien in der altchristlichen Plastik' in Z.N.T.W., xxxiii (1934), pp. 160–96. A. de Waal in F. X. *Kraus (ed.), Real-Encyklopädie der christlichen

Alterthümer, ii (1886), cols. 264–7, s.v. 'Lamm'; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., i (pt. 1, 1907), cols. 877–905, s.v. 'Agneau'; A. Romeo–A. Ferrua, S.J., in E.C., i (1948), cols. 459–64, s.v. 'Agnello', with further bibl.

LAMBERT, St. (c. 636 – c. 700), also 'Landebertus', martyr. He was Bp. of Maestricht from c. 670 till his death, though from c. 675 to 682 he was, for political causes, exiled from his see to the monastery of Stavelot. In his later life he worked zealously as a missionary in what is now Brabant. It seems indisputable that he suffered a violent death, but the circumstances are differently recorded. Acc. to some authorities it occurred in a blood feud, while there is another story (insufficiently attested) that it was the result of his outspoken reproof of Pepin of Heristal, Mayor of the Palace, for adultery. He was succeeded by St. *Hubert, who transferred the see to Liège. Feast day, 17 Sept.; of the 'Translation' (of Lambert's remains to Liège c. 715), 31 May.

Life (c. 730 A.D.) by Godescalcus, deacon of Liège, and three other medieval lives, pr. in AA.SS., Sept. V (1755), pp. 574–617; J. Demarteau, Vie la plus ancienne de S. Lambert (Liège, 1890), incl. text of first, pp. 39–64; crit. ed. of the four lives by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, vi (1913), pp. 299–429; H. Moretus in Anal. Boll., xxxiii (1914), pp. 247–9. G. Kurth, Études franques, ii (1919), No. xviii, 'Le Vita Sancti Lamberti et M. Krusch', pp. 319–47.

LAMBERT (or LAMPBERT) OF HERSFELD (c. 1024 – post 1077), medieval chronicler. Little is known of his life, except that he became a monk at the *Benedictine abbey of Hersfeld in 1058. Of his writings, much the most important is his Annals; these begin with the creation of the world and from 708 to 1039 are in brief annalistic form; from 1040 to 1068 they become fuller, increasing in scope from 1069 to 1072; from 1072 to 1077 they provide a very detailed account of events. Lambert wrote with great skill, using classical models extensively but unobtrusively, and giving an impression of objectivity and fairness. From the time of the first edition (1525) until the middle of the 19th cent. he was regarded as the main source for the history of the struggle between the Emp. *Henry IV and Pope *Gregory VII, but since the time of L. von *Ranke (1854), who showed that many of his statements were motivated by strong prejudices against the Emperor, subsequent investigators have brought to light many mistakes. How far these are intentional has been much discussed and variously judged.

The best ed. of his Opera by O. Holder-Egger (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum Scholarum; 1894). Guido Billanovich, Lamperto di Hersfeld e Tito Livio (Padua, 1945). E. E. Stengel, 'Lambert von Hersfeld der erste Abt von Hasungen' in *Aus Verfassungs- und Landesgeschichte. Festschrift zum 70. Geburtstag von Theodor Mayer dargebracht von seinen Freunden und Schülern, ii (Constance, 1955), pp. 245–58; J. Semmler, 'Lambert von Hersfeld und Giselbert von Hasungen' in Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, lxvii (1956), pp. 261–76. Full bibl. in W. Wattenbach–R. Holtzmann, Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter. Deutsche Kaiserzeit, Band i, Heft 3 (1948), pp. 456–73.

LAMBERT, FRANCIS (1486–1530), Reformer of Hesse. Of noble birth, he entered the *Franciscan Order at *Avignon in 1501 and soon acquired fame as a powerful preacher. On a journey in 1522 he established relations with H. *Zwingli and the other Swiss Reformers, left his order, and travelled under a false name to *Wittenberg (1523), where M. *Luther obtained a pension for him from the Elector, and where he married. In 1524 he went to Metz, but not being well received he moved to Strassburg, where he lived in poverty, writing several treatises and commentaries on the OT prophets. In 1526 he was called to Hesse by the Landgraf *Philip. Here he took a prominent part in the Homberg Synod, was charged with the preparation of the new Protestant 'Church Order' for Hesse, and in 1527 became professor of exegesis at the newly founded *Marburg university. His increasing inclination towards the Zwinglian view of the Eucharist lost him more and more the sympathies of his Lutheran fellow-Reformers. He was the author of commentaries on the Song of Songs (1524) and the Apocalypse (1528), and of several polemical writings including an attack on D. *Erasmus (1525)

Studies by L. Ruffet (Paris, 1873) and R. L. Winters (Philadelphia, 1938). W. Maurer, 'Franz Lambert von Avignon und das Verfassungsideal der Reformatio Ecclesiarum Hassiae von 1526' in Z.K.G., xlviii (1929), pp. 208–60. E. Kurten, O.F.M., Franz Lambert von Avignon und Nikolaus Herborn in ihrer Stellung zum Ordensgedanken und zum Franziskanertum im Besonderen (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, lxxii; 1950). G. Müller, Franz Lambert von Avignon und die Reformation in Hessen (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen und Waldeck, xxiv, 4; Marburg, 1958). J. A. Wagenmann–C. Mirbt in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 220–3; Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 426 (Nos. 10,223–33).

LAMBETH. For over 700 years Lambeth has been the London residence of the Abps. of *Canterbury. Abp. *Baldwin (1185–90) acquired from the possessions of the see of *Rochester the manor of Lambeth and the manor-house, which was called 'Lambeth House' until about 1658, when, owing to the decay of the palace at Canterbury, the title of palace was transferred to Lambeth. The chapel, built in 1245 by Abp. Boniface in the Early English style, is the oldest part of the building. The South Gateway with its two towers was erected by Cardinal John Morton (Abp., 1486–1501). The Water Tower, known in recent times as the 'Lollards' Tower' (on the supposition that *Lollards were imprisoned in it), is a massive square keep, erected by Abp. H. *Chichele in 1434. Abp. M. *Parker was consecrated at Lambeth in 1559 and is the only archbishop buried in the palace. The Great Hall, built by Abp. W. *Juxon in 1663, contains part of the Library (founded by Abp. R. *Bancroft in 1610), which has some 2,500 MSS., including the Registers of the archbishops from 1279 to 1928. The part of the palace occupied by modern archbishops dates from 1829–34. It was seriously damaged in 1940 in an air raid; restorations were completed c. 1956. See also Lambeth Conferences.

[A. C.] Ducarel, The History and Antiquities of the Archiepiscopal Palace of Lambeth (1785; incl. in J. Nichols, Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, ii, 1790, No. 4). J. C. Browne, Lambeth Palace and its Associations (1882). H. Roberts–W. H. Godfrey (edd.), The London County Council Survey of London, xxiii (1951), pp. 81–103. C. R. Dodwell, Lambeth Palace (1958). Catalogues of the MSS. in the archiepiscopal library by H. J. Todd (London, 1812; cont. [MSS. 1222–1860] by E. G. W. Bill, Oxford, 1972) and M. R. James–C. Jenkins (5 parts, Cambridge, 1930–2); of some early pr. books by S. R. *Maitland (London, 1843); index of Eng. pr. books up to 1550 by id. (ib., 1845). There are also a number of more recent works on the Archives in the library, incl. calendars of the American Colonial Section of the Fulham Papers, by W. W. Manross (Oxford, 1965), and of the Original Papal Documents, by Jane E. Sayers (London, 1967); Dorothy M. Owen, A Catalogue of the Lambeth Manuscripts 889 to 901 (Carte antique et miscellanee) (1968).

LAMBETH APPEAL. See Lambeth Conferences.

LAMBETH ARTICLES. Nine theological propositions compiled at Lambeth in 1595 by a committee that met under Abp. J. *Whitgift. Drawn up in the interests of a pronounced *Calvinism, they maintained the *Supralapsarian doctrine that God from all eternity had predestined by an unchangeable decree a definite number of persons to salvation, and that the elect were saved not because God had foreseen their merits but through His good pleasure alone. Although they represented a considerable body of Puritan opinion at the time, they were never formally authorized and they were strongly disapproved of by *Elizabeth I.

The text is in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England (1839), ii, pp. 30–4.

LAMBETH CONFERENCES. Assemblies of the bishops of the Anglican Communion held about once every ten years under the presidency of the Abp. of *Canterbury, usually in *Lambeth Palace. The demand for these Conferences came from the synod of the Anglican Church in *Canada, held in 1865, with a view to counteracting the unsettling effects of the case of Bp. J. Colenso and of the publication of Essays and Reviews. After the original idea of a Council authorized to define doctrine had been abandoned owing to strenuous opposition, the first Conference, with 76 bishops, was held in 1867 by Abp. C. T. *Longley and issued an 'Address to the Faithful'. The following Conferences have been attended by increasing numbers of bishops. That of 1908, with 242 bishops, was preceded by a large Pan-Anglican Congress, composed of some 7,000 clerical and lay delegates. That of 1920, with 252 bishops, was esp. important for its 'Appeal to all Christian People' for Reunion, which was sent to the heads of the Christian communities throughout the world. That of 1930, with 308 bishops, returned to the subject of unity, as have all subsequent Conferences. Its leading theme was the doctrine of God. It also gave guarded approval to the *South India scheme, and radically condemned Racialism. The next Conference, postponed until 1948 because of the Second World War (1939–45), was attended by 329 bishops, with a higher proportion than previously from N. America. The chief subjects were the doctrine of man, the Church in the modern world, and marriage discipline. One result was the issue of rules of churchmanship. The Conference of 1958, with 310 bishops, dealt with the authority of the Bible, peace, and the family in contemporary society, giving approval, with reservations, to family planning. The Conference of 1968, attended by 462 bishops, devoted itself largely to considerations of the renewal of the Church in faith, ministry, and unity. For the first time a number of observers from other Christian bodies was present, as well as Anglican consultants who were not bishops. In 1978 the eleventh Lambeth Conference (of 407 bishops) met in Canterbury. The resolutions of Lambeth Conferences, though not binding, are significant.

The Reports are published immediately after each Conference by the S.P.C.K. [Honor Thomas (ed.),] The Six Lambeth Conferences, 1867–1920 (1929). A. M. G. Stephenson, The First Lambeth Conference 1867 (C.H.S., 1967). J. B. Simpson–E. M. Story, The Long Shadows of Lambeth X. A critical eye-witness account (1969). A. M. G. Stephenson, Anglicanism and the Lambeth Conferences (1978).

LAMBETH DEGREES. The degrees in Divinity, Arts, Law, Medicine, and Music, which the Abp. of Canterbury confers from time to time in virtue of 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, which committed to his immediate possession many rights previously enjoyed by the Primate as '*Legatus natus' of the Pope. Their recipients usually wear the academic dress of the university to which the Archbishop belongs. Since 1906 Lambeth diplomas in theology have also been awarded; these are frequently supplemented by the Abp. of Canterbury's 'Licence and Authority to teach Sacred Theology'.

LAMBETH OPINIONS, The. The first 'Lambeth Opinion' was delivered on 31 July 1899, by the Abps. of Canterbury (F. *Temple) and York (W. D. Maclagan), at *Lambeth Palace, in response to questions raised by some of the English bishops. It stated that the liturgical use of *incense and the carrying of lights in procession were 'neither enjoined nor permitted' in the C of E. In the matter of incense, however, the archbishops added that there was nothing to prevent its use for sweetening the atmosphere of a church and that it was not in itself an undesirable accompaniment to Divine service. A year later (1 May 1900) the two archbishops issued further opinions (on this occasion that of Canterbury was separate from that of York, though they agreed in substance) denying the legality of *Reservation of the Sacrament. These opinions are sometimes described as the 'Lambeth Judgements', but less correctly, as the two archbishops did not sit as an ecclesiastical court.

The official texts were publd. by Macmillan under the titles The Archbishops on the Lawfulness of the Liturgical Use of Incense and the Carrying of Lights in Procession (1899); The Archbishop of Canterbury on Reservation of the Sacrament (1900, signed F. Cantuar.); Archbishop of York on Reservation of Sacrament (1900).

LAMBETH QUADRILATERAL (1888). A slightly revised edition of the four Articles agreed upon at the General Convention of the (Anglican) Protestant Episcopal Church held at Chicago in 1886. In this revised form the Articles were approved by the Lambeth Conference of 1888 as stating from the Anglican standpoint the essentials for a reunited Christian Church. The text of the Articles is as follows:

'A. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as "containing all things necessary to salvation", and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

'B. The Apostles' Creed, as the Baptismal Symbol; and the Nicene Creed, as the sufficient statement of the Christian Faith.

'C. The two Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with unfailing use of Christ's Words of Institution, and of the elements ordained by Him.

'D. The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the Unity of His Church.'

LAMENNAIS, FÉLICITÉ ROBERT DE (1782–1854), French religious and political author. He was a member of a well-to-do family of St.-Malo. While still a child he read widely, esp. J.-J. *Rousseau, whose influence contributed to his loss of religious faith at an early age. But under the guidance of his brother Jean Marie (c. 1780–1860), who had become a priest, he was converted and made his first communion at the age of 22. He was appointed professor of mathematics at the episcopal college of St.-Malo in 1804; later he retired to the country house of his grandfather, La Chênaie, which became the centre of his circle of like-minded friends. In 1808 he published his Réflexions sur l'état de l'Église, written in collaboration with his brother. The book aimed at showing the futility of trust in individual reason, which led to rationalism, atheism, and intellectual anarchy, and called for systematic clerical organization. This demand brought him into conflict with Napoleon's policy and caused him to flee to London during the Hundred Days in 1815. After his return, against his own inclinations, he became a priest in 1816.

In 1818 he published the first volume of his chief work, the Essai sur l'indifférence en matière de religion. Lamennais here developed the principle of authority, which he equated with the 'raison générale' or 'sens commun'. He maintained that the individual is dependent on the community for his knowledge of the truth; to isolate oneself is to doubt; and toleration is an evil. His eloquence gained him fervent disciples, esp. among the *Ultramontanists and Royalists, and effected many conversions; but its ideas were suspect esp. to the *Sulpicians and *Jesuits and opposed by the *Gallicans. The later volumes of the work (1820, 1823) were still more opposed to the traditional doctrines. They equated Catholic Christianity with the religion of all mankind, denied the supernatural, and proclaimed subjects freed from loyalty to their temporal sovereigns when rulers refused to conform their conduct to Christian ideals. In order to counteract the evils of the time he desired a theocracy, with the Pope as supreme leader of kings and peoples. The work received the approval of Pope *Leo XII, who possibly intended to make him a cardinal. In Des progrès de la Révolution (1829) he prophesied an impending revolution and demanded the separation both of the Church and of the entire educational system from the state, as well as the freedom of the press. In order to carry out these ideas he founded a religious congregation, the short-lived Congrégation de St. Pierre (1828), an Agence Générale pour la Défense de la Liberté Religieuse (1830), and the paper L'Avenir (1830–1), and won the co-operation of a number of brilliant younger religious thinkers, among them C. de *Montalembert and H. *Lacordaire. He asserted that the essence of Christianity was freedom, but freedom understood in a political sense and guaranteed by the Papacy. In the last number of L'Avenir he launched the 'Acte d'Union', in which he called for the union of all freedom-loving men. Convinced that the Pope would put himself at the head of this crusade for freedom, he went to Rome in 1832 to defend his ideas before *Gregory XVI; they, were, however, condemned in the encyclical '*Mirari vos' of 15 Aug. 1832. Lamennais, though submitting externally, retired to La Chênaie, where he wrote his reply, the famous Paroles d'un croyant (1834). Though admitting the authority of the Church in questions of faith, he denied it in the sphere of politics. In apocalyptic language he presented a picture of the ideal community in which production and consumption were to be harmoniously balanced. The book aroused tremendous excitement throughout Europe; it was condemned in the encyclical 'Singulari nos' of 25 June 1834. Lamennais's friends submitted, but he himself left the Church.

From this time Lamennais's interests became more and more exclusively political. He gave his views on the social needs of the times in Le Livre du peuple (1837; Eng. tr., 1838) and L'Esclavage moderne (1839; Eng. tr., 1840). The Discussions critiques (1841) marked the final end of his Christian faith. He denied the whole supernatural order together with the doctrinal beliefs of Catholicism and tended more and more to a vague pantheism, expressed also in Esquisse d'une philosophie (4 vols., 1841–6). In 1846 he published a translation of the Gospels with commentary, Les Évangiles, which was placed on the Index. In the Revolution of 1848 he became a member of Parliament, but the political reaction of 1852 completely disillusioned him. All efforts, even those of the new Pope *Pius IX, to reconcile him to the Church were in vain. An extraordinarily gifted writer, Lamennais was one of the greatest inspirers of the new social and political ideas of the 19th and 20th cents. as well as a forerunner of *Modernism.

Œuvres complètes (12 vols. bound in 6, Paris, 1836–7); Œuvres posthumes, ed. E. D. Forgues (2 vols., ib., 1856–9); Œuvres inédites, ed. A. Blaize (2 vols., ib., 1866). Among the various later collections of his letters the most substantial are Correspondance inédite entre Lamennais et le Baron de Vitrolles . . . 1819–1853, ed. E. Forgues (Paris, 1886), and Lettres inédites de Lamennais à Montalembert, ed. id. (ib., 1898). Also posthumously publd. was his Essai d'un système de philosophie catholique, ed. Y. Le Hir (Rennes, 1954). There is a considerable literature about the various aspects of Lamennais's life, thought, and influence, esp. in French, but no fully documented biography. The two best general studies are C. Boutard, Lamennais. Sa vie et ses doctrines (3 vols., 1905–13); F. Duine, La Mennais. Sa vie, ses idées, ses ouvrages, d'après les sources imprimées et les documents inédits (1922). Further items listed in F. Duine, Essai de bibliographie de Félicité Robert de La Mennais (1923). L. Le Guillou, L'Évolution de la pensée religieuse de Félicité Lamennais (1966), with recent bibl. In English the main items include W. Gibson, The Abbé de Lamennais and the Liberal Catholic Movement in France (1896); A. R. Vidler, Prophecy and Papacy. A Study of Lamennais, the Church, and the Revolution (Birkbeck Lectures, 1952–1953; 1954); W. G. Roe, Lamennais and England. The Reception of Lamennais's Religious Ideas in England in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1966), with bibl. A. Fonck in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2473–2526, s.v., with detailed bibl.

LAMENTABILI. The decree of the *Holy Office issued on 3 July 1907 in which 65 propositions believed to be derived from the teaching of the contemporary *Modernists on the subjects of the Church, of Revelation, of Christ, and of the Sacraments, were condemned. It was shortly afterwards followed by the encyclical 'Pascendi' (8 Sept. 1907).

Text in A.S.S., xl (1907), pp. 470–8; operative clauses in Denz.-Schön. (ed. 33; 1965), pp. 669–74 (Nos. 3401–66). F. Heiner, Der Neue Syllabus Pius X (1907). J. Rivière, Le Modernisme dans l'Église (1929), pp. 331–48. G. Thils, 'Le Décret "Lamentabili sane Exitu" et la convergence de probabilité' in Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, xxxii (1956), pp. 65–72, with further refs.

LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH. In the Hebrew Bible, as one of the five *Megilloth, this Book is placed in the third main division of the OT, called the 'Writings' (*Kethubim). In the English Bible, as in the *Septuagint and *Vulgate, it follows Jer. The Book consists of five chapters. all dealing with the desolation of Judah after the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. They show considerable, if somewhat laboured, literary art, extensive use being made of acrostic arrangement and the greater part of the Book being composed in the metre used in Hebrew dirges (the 'Qinah'; see Hebrew tongue). Traditionally the Book has been ascribed to the prophet *Jeremiah, but the tradition may not be more than a misinterpretation of 2 Chr. 35. 25, and the tendency of modern Biblical scholarship is against this attribution and to put it later. In Jewish worship it was appointed to be read at the annual commemoration of the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the Christian Church it has been commonly interpreted in reference to Christ's Passion.

Commentaries by A. W. Streane (Camb. Bib., AV; 1881), A. S. *Peake (Cent. Bib., with pt. 2 of Jer. [c. 1912], pp. 289–350), K. *Budde (K.A.T., Abt. xvii, on Song of Songs, Ruth, Lam., Eccles., and Est., 1898, pp. 70–105), W. Rudolph (K.A.T., xvi. 3; 1939; ed. 2, xvii, 1–3, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Lam., 1962, pp. 187–263), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, xvi. 2, by H. Ringgren–A. Weiser, on Song of Songs, Lam., and Esther, 1958, pp. 39–112; ed. 2, 1969, pp. 295–370), and O. Plöger (H.A.T., Reihe I, Bd. xviii, ed. 2, by E. Würthwein–K. Galling–O. Plöger, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Eccl., Lam., Esther, 1969, pp. 127–64). H. Jahnow, Das hebräische Leichenlied im Rahmen der Völkerdichtung (Beihefte zur Z.A.T.W., xxxvi; 1923). H. Wiesmann, S.J., 'Die literarische Art der Klagelieder des Jeremias' in Th.Q., cx (1929), pp. 381–428, and other works of this author. N. K. Gottwald, Studies in the Book of Lamentations (Studies in Biblical Theology, xiv; 1954); B. Albrektson, Studies in the Text and Theology of the Book of Lamentations, with a critical edition of the Peshitta text (Studia Theologica Lundensia, xxi; 1963).

LAMMAS DAY. The term 'Lammas', denoting 1 August, is found in the work of King *Alfred and was common throughout the Middle Ages; though now archaic, it occurs in the BCP. By etymology it derives from 'loaf' and 'mass', and in the early English Church it was customary to consecrate bread made from the first-ripe corn at Mass on this day, prob. in thanksgiving for the harvest. A later explanation (dating from the 15th cent.) suggested that it derived from 'lamb' and 'Mass', denoting the time at which a feudal tribute of lambs was paid (at *York). The day, to which some chronological significance always seems to have attached, is observed as a quarter-day in Scotland. It used also to be the feast of St. *Peter ad Vincula ('St. Peter's Chains'; cf. Acts 12. 3, 6 f.).

LAMPBERT OF HERSFELD. See Lambert of Hersfeld.

LAMPS. These were probably used in Christian worship from the first, as it usually took place at night, but of ceremonial use there is no early evidence. From the time of *Constantine, however, lamps were burnt in large candelabra during the Liturgy, and for a long time this custom continued in E. worship. In the W. it became customary to burn lights—lamps or candles indifferently—before shrines and relics, at least as early as the 6th cent. The burning of lamps before the altar, and, in particular, of a perpetual white lamp before the reserved Sacrament, came into general use in the W. in the 13th cent., but the latter was not held to be obligatory before the 16th cent. See also Candle.

Rohault, vi (1888), pp. 1–58. D. R. Dendy, The Use of Lights in Christian Worship (Alcuin Club Collections, xli; 1959). C. Babington, 'Lamps' in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 919–23; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1928), cols. 1086–1221, s.v. 'Lampes', with full reff.

LANCE (liturgical). In the Byzantine rites, a small knife (Gk. λόγχη), shaped like a lance, with a handle ending in a small cross, which is used to cut the Eucharistic bread at the *Proskomide.

LANCE, The Holy. A relic, believed to be the lance mentioned in Jn. 19. 34 as having been used by a Roman soldier for piercing the Lord's dead body. The first record of its existence occurs in the 6th cent., when the pilgrim, St. Antoninus of Piacenza, states that he had seen it at *Jerusalem in the basilica of Mount Sion. Its presence there is also attested by *Cassiodorus and St. *Gregory of Tours. At the capture of Jerusalem by the Persians in 615, it fell into the hands of the pagans, together with the other relics of the Passion; but its point, which had been broken off, was saved and given to Nicetas, who brought it to *Constantinople, where it was kept in *Santa Sophia, set in an icon. In 1241 it was given to St. *Louis and preserved in the *Sainte-Chapelle together with the *Crown of Thorns. It disappeared during the French Revolution. The other part of the Lance was stated to have been seen in Jerusalem by the Frankish pilgrim, Arculf (c. 670), but after that nothing is heard of it until it reappears in Constantinople before the 10th cent. In 1492 it fell into the hands of the Turks, who sent it to the Pope as a present. Since then it has been kept at Rome under the dome of St. Peter, but its authenticity has always been doubted.

There have been several other relics, claimed to be the Holy Lance. One of them was found by the Crusaders at Antioch in 1098 in consequence of a vision. Another was kept among the Imperial insignia of the Holy Roman Empire, having been taken to Prague by Charles IV in 1350, to Nuremberg in 1424, and finally to Vienna in 1800. A special Feast of the Holy Lance was kept in Germany, on the Friday after the Octave of Easter.

F. de Mély, Exuviae Sacrae Constantinopolitanae (Paris, 1904), pp. 22–163. C. Rohault de Fleury, Mémoire sur les instruments de la Passion de N.-S. J.-C. (1870), pp. 272–5. S. Runciman, 'The Holy Lance found at Antioch' in Anal. Boll., lxviii (1950), pp. 197–209. A. Hofmeister, Die heilige Lanze, ein Abzeichen des alten Reiches (Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Staats- und Rechtsgeschichte, xcvi; 1908); Mathilde Uhlirz, 'Zu den heiligen Lanzen der karolingischen Teilreiche' in Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, lxviii (1960), pp. 197–208, with further reff. H. Thurston, S.J., in C.E., viii (1910), p. 773 f., s.v.; J. A. Brundage in N.C.E., vii (1967), p. 75 f., s.v. 'Holy Lance'.

LANFRANC (c. 1010–89), early Scholastic theologian and Abp. of *Canterbury. He came of an established but not aristocratic family in Pavia. He was educated in Pavia and other (unnamed) cities in N. Italy. As a young man he left Italy and built up a reputation as an itinerant scholar in N. France, possibly in the area of Auxerre and Dijon and almost certainly in Avranches. In 1042 he entered the recently founded abbey of *Bec, where he became Prior c. 1045. In 1063 he became Abbot of St. Stephen's, Caen, and in 1070 Abp. of Canterbury. He was most able both as a scholar and controversialist and as an administrator.

As a scholar, his principal work before 1042 was on the trivium (grammar, logic, and rhetoric); this does not survive. At Bec he commented on the Psalms and Pauline Epistles, and made notes on certain works of the Fathers. His commentary on St. Paul shows real concern for the structure of the argument; it was widely known from c. 1060 to 1150, both complete and in the excerpts incorporated in *Anselm of Laon's Pro altercatione. Under him the school at Bec became one of the most celebrated of the time; his pupils included *Anselm of Canterbury, Guitmund of Aversa (d. c. 1095), reputedly the future Pope *Alexander II and possibly *Ivo of Chartres. His theological importance, however, rests mainly on his De Corpore et Sanguine Domini (written c. 1070), the first widely-known criticism of the Eucharistic teaching of *Berengar of Tours. This work is based mainly on the writings of the Fathers, esp. *Ambrose and *Paschasius, and the proof-texts which he and his successors accumulated. But at one point (chs. 7–9), Lanfranc also employed the tools of logic. He maintained that the Sacred Species in the Eucharist contained the invisible Body of Christ, identical with the body born of the BVM, but hidden under the species of bread and wine; here he approached the doctrine of *transubstantiation.

Lanfranc's outstanding achievement was in organization. He raised Bec from 'the least and most wretched house in Normandy' (Gilbert Crispin) to a substantial monastery. He incurred the wrath of Duke William of Normandy (*William the Conqueror) because of his condemnation of his marriage within the prohibited degrees, but later he effected a reconciliation and became William's most trusted counsellor. As Abp. of Canterbury he preserved peace with both William I and William Rufus. Soon after his appointment he had difficulties with Abp. Thomas of York, who refused to recognize the supremacy of Canterbury and claimed certain dioceses for his obedience. The dispute was carried before the Pope in 1071, but Alexander II referred the matter to a council of bishops and abbots who met at Winchester in 1072; it resulted in a victory for Lanfranc. Although the documents by which he supported his claims have been proved to be falsifications, Boehmer's suggestion that the Archbishop himself perpetrated the fraud is now generally rejected. Lanfranc held further provincial synods in 1075, 1076, 1078 and 1081; he introduced in an abridged form the 9th cent. Pseudo-*Isidorean collection of canons (in preference to the modern collections available); and his letters show that he exercised further personal control over the bishops within his province. His policy of replacing Saxon bishops and abbots by Normans brought the English Church into closer contact with the Continent and the reform movement of *Gregory VII. Lanfranc did not, however, carry out the Gregorian programme in its entirety; he opposed *simony and clerical immorality, but he showed no sympathy with the Gregorian dislike of lay *investiture. He was loyal to Gregory during his life-time, but he maintained strict neutrality between Gregory's successors and the imperialist antipope Clement III. At Canterbury he rebuilt the cathedral, established a library, compiled a book of constitutions for the monastic community and displayed great efficiency in recovering its lands and rights.

First collected ed. of his works by L. *d'Achéry, O.S.B. (fol., Paris, 1648); also ed. J. A. Giles (2 vols., Oxford, 1844; based on ed. d'Achéry), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, cl. Crit. ed. of the 'Decreta Lanfranci Monachis Cantuariensibus transmissa', with Eng. tr., by [M.] D. Knowles, O.S.B. (Medieval Classics, 1951; revised ed. in Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, iii; Siegburg, 1967). Crit. ed. of Lanfranc's letters, with Eng. tr., by Helen Clover – Margaret [T.] Gibson (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1979). 'Acta Lanfranci' ed. J. Earle–C. Plummer, Two Saxon Chronicles Parallel, i (Oxford, 1892), pp. 287–92. Best ed. of Gilbert Crispin's 'Vita Herluini' (first Abbot of Bec), by J. A. *Robinson, Gilbert Crispin, Abbot of Westminster (Cambridge, 1911), pp. 87–110. A. J. Macdonald, Lanfranc. A Study of his Life, Work and Writing (1926; ed. 2, 1944); Margaret [T.] Gibson, Lanfranc of Bec (Oxford, 1978). F. Liebermann, 'Lanfranc and the Anti-pope' in E.H.R., xvi (1901), pp. 328–32. H. Boehmer, Die Fälschungen Erzbischof Lanfranks von Canterbury (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, viii, Hft. 1; 1902), with text. Z. N. Brooke, The English Church and the Papacy from the Conquest to the Reign of John (1931), pp. 57–83 and 117–31. B. Smalley, 'La Glossa Ordinaria; quelques prédécesseurs d'Anselme de Laon' in R.T.A.M., ix (1937), pp. 365–400. R. W. Southern, 'Lanfranc of Bec and Berengar of Tours' in R. W. Hunt–W. A. Pantin–R. W. Southern (edd.), Studies in Medieval History Presented to Frederick Maurice Powicke (Oxford, 1948), pp. 27–48; id., 'The Canterbury Forgeries' in E.H.R., lxxiii (1958), pp. 193–226. J. de Montclos, Lanfranc et Bérenger. La controverse eucharistique du XIe siècle (S.S.L., xxxvii; 1971), esp. pp. 249–482. See also bibl. to Berengar and Gregory VII.

LANG, COSMO GORDON (1864–1945), Abp. of *Canterbury. A Scotsman by birth and of *Presbyterian upbringing, he was educated at Glasgow University and at Balliol College, Oxford, and then studied for the Bar. In 1888 he was elected to a fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford. In 1890 he was ordained in the C of E, and after working as a curate of Leeds Parish Church from 1890 to 1893 under E. S. *Talbot, he returned to Oxford to become Dean of Divinity at Magdalen, and from 1894 to 1896 was vicar of St. Mary's, the university church. From 1896 to 1901 he was vicar of Portsea. In 1901 he became (suffragan) Bp. of Stepney and in 1908 Abp. of *York. He was translated to Canterbury in 1928 and resigned in 1942. In Dec. 1936 he played an important part in public affairs in connexion with the abdication of Edward VIII.

J. G. Lockhart, Cosmo Gordon Lang (1949). A. C. Don in D.N.B., 1941–1950 (1959), pp. 474–8.

LANGE, JOHANN PETER (1802–84), German Protestant theologian. After studying at Bonn, he published in 1836 a vigorous attack on D. F. *Strauss's Leben Jesu entitled Über den geschichtlichen Charakter der kanonischen Evangelien and thus became a recognized leader of the *Vermittlungstheologie. In 1841 he was appointed professor at Zürich and in 1854 at Bonn. His many books on Biblical and doctrinal subjects were written under the influence of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. They included a Leben Jesu (3 vols., 1844–7; Eng. trans., 4 vols., 1872), a Christliche Dogmatik (3 vols., 1849–52), and several commentaries in a composite work on the Bible.

J. P. Lange's Gedichte (Essen, 1843). W. Krafft in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 264–8.

LANGTON, STEPHEN (d. 1228), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was of English extraction, but migrated to *Paris as a student and became one of the principal theologians of the university. In 1206 *Innocent III, with whom he had established a close friendship while at Paris, created him a cardinal, and in 1207 nominated and consecrated him to the see of Canterbury, but owing to *John's opposition Langton could not land in England until 1213, and he resided in the interval at Pontigny. He showed marked sympathy with the barons, and it was probably he who suggested that they should take their stand on the charter of Henry I which served as the model for Magna Carta. On the Carta itself Langton's name heads the list of the counsellors by whose advice John professed to be acting. In his later life Langton warmly supported the regency in its struggles against baronial insubordination. He upheld the privileges of Canterbury and established the claim of the Abp. of Canterbury to be the Pope's 'legatus natus'. At a synod at Oseney (1222) he promulgated, besides the decrees of the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), special constitutions for the English Church. Little is known of his private life, but he was 'perhaps the greatest of our medieval Archbishops' (H. W. C. Davis).

Langton's writings grew out of his teaching at Paris. They consist of commentaries (glosae) on the 'Historia Scholastica' of *Peter Comestor, on most Books of the Old and New Testament, on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard, and extensive theological quaestiones. They are marked by a strong practical and moral purpose. Langton 'perfected the technique of moralizing Scripture as an aid to preaching' (B. Smalley). He is also credited with the division of the Books of the Bible into chapters which, with small modification, is still in use.

Commentary on the Sentences of Peter Lombard (known also as Langton's 'Summa') ed., with full reff. to previous discussions on attribution to Langton, by A. M. Landgraf (B.G.P.M., xxxvii, Hft. 1; 1952). Episcopal Acta transcribed and ed. Kathleen Major (*Canterbury and York Society, 1; 1950). F. M. Powicke, Stephen Langton (Ford Lectures for 1927; 1928). G. Lacombe–Beryl Smalley–A. L. Gregory, 'Studies on the Commentaries of Cardinal Stephen Langton' in A.H.D.L.M.A., v ('1930' [1931]), pp. 5–266. F. A. Cazel, Jr., 'The Last Years of Stephen Langton' in E.H.R., lxxix (1964), pp. 673–97. Phyllis B. Roberts, Stephanus de Lingua-Tonante. Studies in the Sermons of Stephen Langton (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, xvi; Toronto, 1968), with bibl. T. F. Tout in D.N.B., xxxii (1892), pp. 122–32; H. W. C. Davis in D.E.C.H., p. 311 f.

LAODICEA. A Hellenistic city of the Roman province of Asia. It was the seat of an early Christian Church to which St. *Paul wrote an epistle (Col. 4. 16), perhaps the same as the extant Eph. The city was reproved at a somewhat later date by the writer of *Rev. (3. 14 ff.) for being 'neither cold nor hot'. It was materially very prosperous in Apostolic times, and a bishopric of some importance for several centuries. It is not to be confounded with the town of Laodicea on the Syrian coast, the home of *Apollinarius.

W. M. *Ramsay, Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia, i (1895), pp. 32–83; id., Letters to the Seven Churches (1904), pp. 413–30.

LAODICEA, Canons of. A set of 60 4th-cent. canons which were embodied in the early collections of ecclesiastical law. They fall into two groups, acc. to their opening words (1–19: περὶ τοῦ and 20–59: ὅτι οὐ δεῖ). Among the subjects dealt with are the treatment of heretics (*Quartodecimans, *Novatianists, *Montanists, etc.), liturgy, penance, Church order, and the observance of *Lent. Nothing definite is known of the 'Council of Laodicea', though a mention of the *Photinians in can. 7 points to a date not before c. 345, and prob. the Council took place at least 20 years later. Acc. to A. Boudinhon, the 'canons' are really subject-headings of canons issued by earlier 4th cent. councils, among them that of Nicaea (325) and an otherwise unknown Council of Laodicea. The last canon (No. 60) contains a list of the Canonical Scriptural Books closely akin to that of Apostolic Canons, can. 85 (84), e.g. it omits the OT Apocrypha and Rev. Acc. to T. *Zahn and others (against C. J. *Hefele), this canon is prob. a later addition.

Hardouin, i (1715), cols. 777–92; Mansi, ii (1759), cols. 563–604. Canons also in Lauchert, pp. 72–9; crit. ed. of Lat. texts in E.O.M.I.A., II. iii (1939), pp. 321–400. Hefele–Leclercq, i (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 989–1028. A. Boudinhon, 'Note sur le concile de Laodicée' in Congrès scientifique international des Catholiques tenu à Paris, 1888 (1889), ii, pp. 420–447 (resumed in Hefele–Leclercq, loc. cit., pp. 992–4, note). On Canon 60, see B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the History of the Canon of the New Testament (1855), pp. 498–508; T. Zahn, Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons, ii (pt. 1; 1890), pp. 193–202. É. Amann in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2611–15, s.v.

LAODICEANS, The Epistle to the. A Latin apocryphal Ep. of St. *Paul. The work, which is found in many 6–15th cent. Lat. MSS. of the NT and in early printed editions of the Bible, is an artless collection of St. Paul's own words (esp. from Phil.), which was doubtless produced to meet the demand suggested by Col. 4. 16. It appears to date from the 4th–5th cent. and was prob. originally issued in Greek. A. *Harnack sought to prove, without success, that it was a 2nd-cent. *Marcionite forgery. The first clear mention of it occurs in St. *Augustine, the earlier references to an 'Ep. to the Laodiceans' (*Muratorian Canon; *Jerome, De vir. ill., 5) prob. being to MSS. of St. Paul's (canonical) Ep. to the *Ephesians, which read 'Laodicea' for 'Ephesus' at 1. 1.

Crit. ed. of Lat. text, with discussion, in J. B. *Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon (ed. 1879), pp. 274–300 (actual text, pp. 287–9). Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 478–80. B. Carra de Vaux, 'L'Épître aux Laodicéens en arabe' in R. Bibl., v (1896), pp. 221–6, with Arabic text, p. 223 f. A. von Harnack, 'Der apokryphe Brief des Apostels Paulus an die Laodicener, eine marcionitische Fälschung aus der 2. Hälfte des 2. Jahrhunderts' in Sb. (Berl.), 1923, pp. 235–45. K. Pink, 'Die pseudopaulinischen Briefe II. Der Laodizenerbrief' in Biblica, vi (1925), pp. 179–92. G. Quispel, 'De Brief aan de Laodicensen een marcionitische Vervalsing' in Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift, v (1950–1), pp. 43–6. Germ. tr., with introd., by W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, ii (1964), pp. 80–84; Eng. tr., ii (1965), pp. 128–32.

LAPCLOTH. See Gremial.

LAPIDE, CORNELIUS A. See Cornelius a Lapide.

LAPSI (Lat., 'the fallen'). Those who in varying degrees denied the Christian faith under persecution. At first apostasy was held to be an unforgivable sin, but, when the problem became serious in the Decian persecution of 250–1, the Church, guided largely by St. *Cyprian, decided to readmit such persons after penance and probation, a decision which led the *Novatianist rigorists to make open schism. The Councils of *Elvira (306), *Arles (314), *Ancyra (314), and *Nicaea (325) also legislated on the subject. See also Traditors.

LARDNER, NATHANIEL (1684–1768), Nonconformist apologist. He was a native of Hawkhurst in Kent, studied at Utrecht and *Leyden (1699–1703), and became an Independent minister in 1709. After being a private chaplain and tutor from 1713 to 1721, he began to give lectures in 1723. These developed into his famous work on The Credibility of the Gospel History (14 vols., 1727–57), in which he set himself the task of reconciling the discrepancies in the Biblical narratives. Its valuable collection of materials on the date and authorship of the NT books, together with a large apparatus of footnotes, made the work a mine of information for scholars, for whom it was of greater service than for the ordinary reader for whom it was originally intended. Lardner's interpretation is based on patristic texts as well as on the commentaries of H. *Grotius. He also published sermons and a Letter concerning the Logos (1759), expounding his Christological doctrine.

Works [ed. B. Cole], 11 vols., London, 1788, with life by A. Kippis in vol. i, pp. i–cviii. A more important authority for his life is the anonymous Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Reverend Nathaniel Lardner, . . . with a Catalogue of his Works [by Joseph Jennings], publd. along with eight of Lardner's Sermons (London, 1769), memoir, pp. 1–134. A. Gordon in D.N.B., xxxii (1892), pp. 147–51.

LA SALETTE. The village in the Alps near Grenoble, where on 19 Sept. 1846 a peasant boy and girl saw a vision of the BVM, who through them gave 'to all her people' a promise of the Divine Mercy after repentance. A special secret, communicated by the Virgin to each child, was afterwards sent to *Pius IX. At first doubts were thrown on the vision; but a commission appointed by the Bp. of Grenoble convinced itself of its reality, and miraculous cures were soon alleged to occur. Pilgrimages quickly followed, and in 1852 the first stone of the present church was laid on the scene of the vision. The church has been served from the first by religious known as the 'Missionaries of La Salette'. Many thousands annually make pilgrimages to the 'Virgin of the Alps'.

There is a vast literature, mostly of little critical value. More substantial works include I. Bertrand, La Salette (1888); id., La Salette. Documents et bibliographie pour servir de pièces justificatives à l'ouvrage portant le même titre (1889); J. Giray, Les Miracles de La Salette (2 vols., Grenoble, 1921). J. Jaouen, La Grâce de La Salette (1946; revised ed. 1964); id., Les Missionnaires de Notre-Dame de La Salette (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et Instituts religieux, lxiii [1953]). In English there is a popular account by J. S. Kennedy, Light on the Mountains. The Story of La Salette (Dublin, 1954). L. Clugnet in C.E., ix (1910), p. 8 f., s.v., with bibl.

LAS CASAS, BARTOLOMÉ DE (1474–1566), Spanish missionary to the New World, sometimes known as 'The Apostle of the Indies'. Originally a lawyer, he accompanied the Spanish governor, Ovanda, to Hispaniola (Haiti) in 1502, and was ordained priest in 1510. From this time he devoted himself to the interests of the Indians by opposing, both in America and at the court of Spain, the cruel methods of exploitation of the Spanish settlers. These activities were strongly resented by his countrymen, and in 1515 he went back to Spain, where he successfully presented the cause of the Indians to *Charles V. He returned to America with far-reaching powers; but though supported by his fellow-clergy and many settlers, his projects of colonization miscarried owing to a revolt of the Indians (1521). Two years later Las Casas joined the *Dominicans. He continued to labour for the Indians and put together many lurid reports on the abuses of the settlers, notably his famous Destrucción des las Indias (publd. 1552), in which he may sometimes have transgressed the limits of truth in his accusations against the Spanish colonists. In 1543 he became Bp. of Chiapa in Mexico, but he left his diocese in 1551 to retire to Valladolid, where he zealously continued to champion the rights of the Indians in numerous publications. He favoured the importation of negro slaves into America, a practice which had long existed and was not then considered contrary to Christian morals. He died at the age of 92, having pleaded the cause of the natives of Guatemala with *Philip II shortly before his death.

Colección de las obras del obispo de Chiapa, don Bartolomé de las Casas, ed. J. A. Llorente (2 vols., Paris, 1822). Selected Works also ed. J. Pérez de Tudela Buesca (Biblioteca de Autores Españoles, xcv, xcvi, cv, cvi and cx: 1957–8). There is much biogr. material in A. Dávila Padilla, Historia de la fundación y discurso de la provincia de Santiago de México de la Orden de Predicadores (Madrid, 1596). Lives by A. M. Fabie (Colección de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, lxx; Madrid, 1879 [cf. also lxxi, 1879, pp. 459–64]), F. A. MacNutt (New York, 1909), M. Brion (Paris, 1927), L. U. Hanke (The Hague, 1951), and M. Giménez Fernández (Publicaciones de la Escuela de Estudios Hispano-Americanos de Sevilla, lxx, cxxi, etc., 1953 ff.). L. U. Hanke, Bartolomé de Las Casas. Bookman, Scholar and Propagandist (Rosenbach Lectures, Univ. of Pennsylvania; 1952). R. Menéndez Pidal, El Padre Las Casas. Su doble personalidad (1963). M. Bataillon, Études sur Bartolomé de las Casas (1965). Estudios lascasianos. IV Centenario de la Muerte de Fray Bartolomé de las Casas (1566–1966) (Publicaciones de la Escuela de Estudios Hispano-Americanos de Sevilla, clxxv; 1966). H. R. Wagner, The Life and Writings of Bartolomé de las Casas (posthumously ed. by Helen R. Parish, Albuquerque, New Mexico, 1967). L. Hanke–M. Giménez Fernández, Bartolomé de las Casas 1474–1566. Bibliografía crítica y cuerpo de materiales para el estudio de su vida, escritos, actuación y polémicas que suscitaron durante cuarto siglos (Santiago, 1954).

LASKI or À LASCO, JOHN (1499–1560), Protestant Reformer. He was a Polish nobleman by birth, who, after studying at *Bologna from 1514 to 1517, visited Basle in 1523; here he met D. *Erasmus and later lived in his house for nearly a year (1524–5). Soon he developed some sympathies with the Reformers, though they were not sufficiently pronounced to prevent his becoming Bp. of Vesprim in 1529 and Archdeacon of Warsaw in 1538. Later (1538), however, he declined the offer of a further bishopric and avowed his belief in the Reformed faith. He made his way to Emden in Holland, where he was appointed Pastor in 1542. His sympathies were soon seen to be with the more extreme *Calvinist party among the Reformers. Having made friends with J. *Hooper, he came to England in 1548 at the invitation of T. *Cranmer to advise on the projected reforms and returned in 1550 to become superintendent of the Foreign Protestants in London. He is generally held to have influenced the BCP of 1552. After 1553 he lived for the rest of his life in several places on the Continent.

Works ed. by A. Kuyper (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1866). H. Dalton, Johannes a Lasco (Gotha, 1881; earlier part tr. into Eng. by M. J. Evans, 1886); G. Pascal, Jean de Lasco.

baron de Pologne, évêque catholique, réformateur protestant, 1499–1560. Son temps, sa vie, ses œuvres (1894): Lasciana (1898). Further lives by P. Bartels (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, ix; 1860), and O. Bartel (vol. i, covering the period up to 1556; Warsaw, 1955), with Eng. summary. [K. A. R.] Kruske, Johannes a Lasco und der Sacramentsstreit (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, vii, Hft. 1; 1901). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, i (1933), nos. 10324–10364, p. 431 f. H. Dalton in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 292–6, also with bibl.

LAST GOSPEL. A second reading from the Gospels which used to take place at the very end of Mass in the W. rite. In medieval times it was said as a private devotion by the celebrant as he went back to the sacristy, but it was later read by the priest at the altar aloud. The usual Last Gospel was Jn. 1. 1–14; but on a small number of days different passages were appointed. The reading of the Last Gospel was suppressed on 26 Sept. 1964.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 554–9; Eng. tr., ii (1953), pp. 447–51.

LAST JUDGEMENT. See General Judgement.

LAST SUPPER. The final meal of Christ with His Apostles on the night before the Crucifixion. It was followed by the washing of the Apostles' feet (see Pedilavium) and the institution of the *Eucharist. Traditionally it has been held that the meal was the *Passover, in agreement with the *Synoptic Gospels, which appear to put it on the evening when the Passover celebrations began and the paschal lamb was consumed. The Gospel of St. *John, however, asserts that the Crucifixion itself took place on the 'preparation' (Παρασκευή) of the Passover, i.e. a few hours before the Passover meal. If the latter assertion is correct, we may regard the Last Supper as an anticipation of the Passover meal or, perhaps less probably, as either a *Kiddush or some other form of religious meal, such as was celebrated by families or groups of friends. Since the discovery at *Qumran of evidence suggesting that the community there was governed by a solar calendar based on a cycle of 364 days, which is also found in the Book of *Jubilees and in Enoch, Mlle Jaubert has tried to reconcile the accounts of the Last Supper given in the Synoptic Gospels and St. John by suggesting a new chronology for the week of the Passion. Acc. to this chronology, the Last Supper was a Passover meal on the Tuesday evening, which was the time of the Passover meal according to the ancient sacerdotal calendar found at Qumran; while Christ, who was arrested on the night of Tuesday/Wednesday, died on Friday, 14 Nisan, the time of the Passover meal according to the official calendar. Though support for this view may be found in the Didascalia, 21, in the work of *Victorinus of Pettau and in a letter of *Epiphanius of Salamis, the theory has not been generally accepted. See also Eucharist, Chaburah, Kiddush, and Passover.

The principal literature on the Last Supper is found in works on the Eucharist (q.v.) and in commentaries on the Gospels. Annie Jaubert, La Date de la Cène. Calendrier biblique et liturgie chrétienne (Études Bibliques, 1957); cf. J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (ed. 3, 1960; Eng. tr., 1966).

LAST THINGS, The. See Eschatology.

LATERAN BASILICA, The (S. Giovanni in Laterano). The present basilica stands on the site of an ancient palace on the Celian Hill at Rome which formerly belonged to the family of the Laterani. This palace, part of the dowry of Fausta, the wife of the Emp. *Constantine, who gave it to the Church, was the official residence (patriarchium) of the Popes from the 4th cent. until their departure for *Avignon (1309); it covered a much larger area than the present buildings. In 1308 it was nearly all destroyed by fire; only the 'Sancta Sanctorum' chapel now survives (see Scala Sancta). In 1586 *Sixtus V entrusted Domenico Fontana (1543–1607) with the erection of a new palace. This building remained unoccupied until 1693, when it was converted by Innocent XII into an asylum for orphans; in 1843 it was transformed into a museum for antiquities, Christian (Museo Cristiano) and classical (Museo Profano). For the *Lateran Councils, see foll. entry.

The Lateran Basilica, which remains the cathedral church of Rome ('omnium urbis et orbis ecclesiarum mater et caput'), is one of the four 'Major *Basilicas'. The original dedication was to the Redeemer (S. Salvator); but after destruction by an earthquake in 896 the church was rebuilt by Sergius III (904–11), who dedicated it to St. *John Baptist (with whom has since been associated St. *John the Apostle). After the fire of 1308 it was restored by *Clement V (1305–14); but it was again burnt down in 1360. The present church was built under the direction of a succession of Popes beginning with *Urban V, among the architects being D. Fontana (1543–1604) and F. Borromini (1599–1667). The façade to the E. (c. 1734) is by Alessandro Galilei (1691–1737). On the NW. is an octagonal baptistery (S. Giovanni in Fonte), the traditional site of Constantine's baptism by Pope *Sylvester in 324 (in fact Constantine was baptized on his deathbed near Nicomedia in 337); its real founder appears to have been *Sixtus III (432–40). Feast of dedication of the Lateran Basilica, 9 Nov.

A. Valentini, La Patriarcale Basilica Lateranense (2 vols., fol., 1836). P. Lauer, Le Palais de Latran (1911). E. Josi, 'Scoperte nella Basilica Costantiniana al Laterano' in Riv.A.C., xi (1934), pp. 335–58; A. M. Colini, Storia e topografia del Celio nell'antichità (Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Serie III, Memorie, vii; 1944); R. Krautheimer et al., Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, v (Rome, 1977), pp. 1–92 [in Eng.], with full bibl. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1529–1887, s.v. 'Latran', with extensive bibl.; E. Josi in E.C., x (1953), cols. 1213–20, s.v. 'Roma. V. Topografia, ii. San Giovanni in Laterano e il Patriarchium'.

LATERAN COUNCILS. A series of councils were held in the Lateran Palace at Rome from the 7th to the 18th cents. Five of these rank as *oecumenical and are thus of special interest, viz.:

(1) First (1123). Convoked by *Callistus II for the solemn confirmation of the Concordat of *Worms which ended the *Investiture contest. Twenty-two disciplinary canons were also promulgated, most of them repeating and emphasizing previous decrees.

(2) Second (1139). Convoked by Innocent II for the reformation of the Church after the schism which had taken place at his election. It issued 30 canons, and condemned the followers of *Arnold of Brescia.

(3) Third (1179). Convoked by *Alexander III

to remove the traces of the schism of the anti-pope Callixtus III. The most important decree of the Council concerned Papal elections. The right to elect the Pope was restricted to the college of cardinals, and a two-thirds majority was declared necessary. Another important canon (can. 18) provided for the establishment at every cathedral of a school for clerics.

(4) Fourth (1215). Convoked by *Innocent III, it was much the most important of the Lateran Councils. In the course of it an official definition of the doctrine of the *Eucharist (in which the word 'transubstantiate' is used officially for the first time) was given, and annual confession for all Christian people was prescribed. Rules were made concerning preaching in cathedral churches; bishops were reminded of their duties as teachers; and steps were taken to withdraw ecclesiastical countenance from judicial *ordeals. The foundation of new religious orders was also forbidden, one consequence of which was that St. *Dominic was compelled to take an already existing rule as the basis of his Friars Preachers.

(5) Fifth (1512–17). Convened by Pope *Julius II, the Council's immediate purpose was to invalidate the decrees of the antipapal Council of Pisa convoked by Louis XII of France. It promulgated a few minor reforms, but left the main causes of the *Reformation untouched.

(1) Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1109–18; Mansi, xxi (1776), cols. 277–304. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 630–44. A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, viii (1946), pp. 391–5. See also bibl. to Callistus II and below.

(2) Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1207–18; Mansi, xxi (1776), cols. 525–46. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 721–46. See also bibl. to Arnold of Brescia and below.

(3) Hardouin, vi (pt. 2), cols. 1671–1876; Mansi, xxii (1778), cols. 209–468. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1086–112. See also below.

(4) Hardouin, viii, cols. 1–86; Mansi, xxii (1778), cols. 953–1086. Hefele–Leclercq, v (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1316–98. S. Kuttner–A. Garcia y Garcia, 'A New Eyewitness Account of the Fourth Lateran Council' in Traditio, xx (1964), pp. 115–78, incl. text. A. Luchaire, Innocent III (6 vols., 1904–8), esp. vol. vi, 'Le Concile de Latran et la réforme de l'Église'. A. Fliche in Fliche–Martin, x (1950), pp. 194–211. See also other works cited under Innocent III and below.

(5) Hardouin, viii, cols. 1561–1856. Hefele–Leclercq, viii (pt. 1; 1917), pp. 339–558. See also bibl. to Leo X.

V. Tizzani, I concili lateranesi (1878). R. Foreville, Latran I, II, III et Latran IV (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, vi; 1965), with full bibl. F. Vernet in D.T.C., viii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2628–67, s.v. 'Latran (Ier, IIe, IIIe et IVe Concile[s] œcuménique[s] de)'; R. Naz in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 344–53, s.v. 'Latran (Conciles de)'; C. Duggan in N.C.E., iv (1967), pp. 406–10, s.v.

LATERAN TREATY, The. This treaty, signed on 11 Feb. 1929, 'finally and irrevocably' settled the Roman question, and established the *Vatican City as a sovereign state. The Holy See recognized the Italian state with Rome as capital. The Italian state recognized 'the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman Religion as the sole religion of the State', 'the sovereign independence of the Holy See in the international field', and the Holy See's 'sovereign jurisdiction' in the Vatican City. Attached to the Treaty was a *Concordat which provided for Catholic religious instruction in the schools, the civil recognition of marriage performed in accordance with canon law, the freedom of *Catholic Action on condition of its being non-politically conducted, and the swearing of an oath of allegiance to the King by bishops before taking possession of their dioceses.

Text in A.A.S., xxi (1929), pp. 209–74, followed by text of Concordat, pp. 274–94, with 'Processo-Verbale' p. 295. V. Del Giudice, La questione romana e i rapporti tra stato e chiesa fino alla conciliazione (1947), pp. 247–79. N. Tripodi, I patti lateranensi e il fascismo [1960]. D. A. Binchy, Church and State in Fascist Italy (1941). R. Danielo in E.C., ix (1953), cols. 990–5, s.v. 'Patti lateranensi'.

LATIMER, HUGH (c. 1485–1555), Bp. of *Worcester and Reformer. He was the son of a yeoman farmer of Thurcaston in Leicestershire, educated at Cambridge, and in 1510 elected Fellow of Clare Hall. In his earlier years he was an ardent opponent of the New Learning. He was ordained priest, and in 1522 his eloquence and zeal in reforming abuses and defending social justice led the University to license him as one of the 12 preachers commissioned to preach anywhere in England. From c. 1523 his opinions began to become suspect to the ecclesiastical authorities, and when in 1525 he declined the request of his bishop, N. West of *Ely, to preach a sermon against M. *Luther, he was forbidden to preach in the diocese. After skilfully defending himself before T. *Wolsey, he was again allowed to preach throughout England. The directness of his method, his understanding of human character, his homely style, and his ready wit won his sermons increasing influence. A sermon before *Henry VIII in Lent 1530, though it attacked the use of temporal weapons for the defence of God's Word, won him the royal favour, and in 1531 he was given the living of West Kington, Wilts. But his preaching, which now openly challenged ecclesiastical authority and spread Protestant doctrines, was censured by Convocation in Mar. 1532. Later in the year he submitted.

After T. *Cranmer's appointment to *Canterbury (1533), Latimer's position improved, and when, in 1534, Henry formally broke with the Pope, Latimer became one of the King's chief advisers. In 1535 he was appointed Bp. of Worcester. In his sermons he continued to denounce social injustices and other contemporary corruptions, attacking also Catholic teaching on purgatory, images, etc. He also supported the King in the *Dissolution of the Monasteries. In 1538 he preached at the execution of John Forest, and in the same year approved the putting to death of the family of R. *Pole. But his career was cut short in 1539, when, in acc. with his Protestant beliefs, he opposed the Act of the *Six Articles, and resigned his see on hearing from T. *Cromwell that this was the King's wish. Taken into custody, he was freed in 1540, but ordered to leave London and forbidden to preach. Very little is known of the next few years of his life. In 1546 he was confined to the Tower, but was released on *Edward VI's accession in the following year. On New Year's Day 1548 he preached his famous sermon 'Of the Plough' at Paul's Cross, and became very popular as a court preacher, continuing to denounce social and ecclesiastical abuses and supporting the government of Somerset. On the accession of *Mary he was arrested and committed to the Tower (1553). In 1554, together with T. Cranmer and N. *Ridley, he was taken to Oxford to dispute with Catholic theologians of both universities esp. on *Transubstantiation and the Sacrifice of the Mass. Having refused to accept the medieval doctrine, he was excommunicated. He was examined again in 1555 and, after a renewed refusal to recant, was burnt with Ridley at Oxford on 16 Oct. 1555. In the American BCP (1979), feast day (with Cranmer and Ridley), 16 Oct.

Collected ed. of his Sermons (2 vols., London, 1758), with life in vol. i, pp. ix–lxxxvii; Sermons and Remains, ed. G. E. Corrie (*Parker Society, xvi and xx; 1844–5, with extract from J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, repr. in vol. i, pp. ix–xxxi). Lives by R. Demaus (Religious Tract Society, London, 1869; many subsequent edd.), R. M. Carlyle–A. J. Carlyle (London, 1899), H. S. Darby (ib., 1953), and A. G. Chester (Philadelphia, 1954, with detailed bibl.). J. *Gairdner in D.N.B., xxxii (1892), pp. 171–9.

LATITUDINARIANISM. A term opprobriously applied in the 17th cent. to the outlook of a group of Anglican divines who, while continuing to conform with the C of E, attached relatively little importance to matters of dogmatic truth, ecclesiastical organization, and liturgical practice. It found characteristic representatives in the '*Cambridge Platonists'. In general the sympathies of Latitudinarian divines lay with the *Arminian theology. Their views did much to prepare the way for the religious temper of England in the 18th century.

LA TRAPPE, Notre-Dame de. Abbey near Soligny (Orne), often now known as la Grande Trappe, which gives its name to the *Trappist reform, instituted here by A. de *Rancé. It was founded as a *Benedictine monastery in 1122, and in 1148 adopted the *Cistercian reform in the filiation of *Clairvaux. Early in the 16th cent. it fell on evil days, largely through the custom of appointing *commendatory abbots. The last of these, de Rancé, succeeded his brother in 1636, but after conversion introduced a reform in 1662 and became regular abbot in 1664; he soon evolved his own brand of reform, only much later known as Trappist (q.v.). After a period of great prosperity the community was expelled by the Revolution of 1790, but after many wanderings returned to the abbey in 1817, having survived continuously as a community throughout. La Trappe ranks second after Cîteaux in the Order of Reformed Cistercians.

H. de Charencey (ed.), Cartulaire de l'abbaye de Notre-Dame de la Trappe [Alençon, 1889]. Id., Histoire de l'abbaye de la Grande-Trappe (2 vols., Mortagne, 1896–1911). H. Tournoüer, Bibliographie et iconographie de la Maison-Dieu Notre-Dame de la Trappe (2 pts., ib., 1894–6). G. Grandpré, L'Abbaye de la Trappe (1827); P. P[icquignot], La Trappe mieux connue, ou Aperçu descriptif et raisonné sur le monastère de la Maison-Dieu, Notre-Dame de la Trappe, près Mortagne, diocèse de Séez (1834). L. H. Cottineau, O.S.B., Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 3201 f., for further bibl. See also bibl. to Trappists.

LATRIA (λατρεία), as contrasted with 'dulia' (δουλεία; q.v.), that fullness of Divine worship which may be paid to God alone.

LATROCINIUM (i.e. 'Robber Council'). The Council held at *Ephesus in Aug. 449. Summoned by *Theodosius II, to deal with difficulties arising out of the condemnation of *Eutyches for unorthodoxy at a synod at *Constantinople (the σύνοδος ἐνδημοῦσα) in Nov. 448 (see Monophysites), it was under the domination of *Dioscorus, Patr. of Alexandria, a strong upholder of Monophysitism. Eutyches was acquitted of heresy and reinstated in his monastery, Flavian and other bishops were deposed, and the Roman legates, who had brought with them St. Leo's *Tome, were insulted. Its decisions were reversed by the Council of *Chalcedon in 451. The name 'Latrocinium' was derived from Leo's letter (Ep. 95) to the Empress Pulcheria, where he describes the synod as 'non iudicium, sed latrocinium'.

A.C.O., Tomus II, vol. i, pars 1 (1933), pp. 68–101; II. iii. 1 (1935), pp. 42–92. Hefele–Leclercq (pt. i; 1908), pp. 555–621. P. Martin, Le Pseudo-Synode connu dans l'histoire sous le nom de Brigandage d'Éphèse, étudié d'après ses actes retrouvés en syriaque (Paris, 1875); S. G. F. Perry, The Second Synod of Ephesus (Dartford, 1881). J. Liébaert in D.H.G.E., xv (1963), cols. 574–9, s.v. 'Éphèse (3), Concile dit Brigandage d' '.

LATTER-DAY SAINTS. See Mormons.

LAUD, WILLIAM (1573–1645), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of a master tailor, he was born at Reading and educated at St. John's College, *Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1593. In 1601 he received holy orders, and in 1611 he was made President of St. John's. From a very early date he opposed the prevailing *Calvinist theology, and sought to restore something of the pre-Reformation liturgical practice to the C of E. In 1616 he was made Dean of *Gloucester, where he moved the communion table to the east end of the choir, an action that brought him into violent conflict with his bishop. On being appointed Bp. of *St. Davids in 1621, he resigned the presidency of St. John's College. In 1622 he conducted a controversy with the Jesuit, J. Percy, commonly known as '*Fisher the Jesuit' (q.v.), in which he maintained that the RC Church and the C of E are both parts of the same Church Catholic. Under *Charles I his influence increased. In 1626 he was translated to *Bath and Wells, and in 1628 to London. In 1629 he became chancellor of the university of Oxford, where he carried through many necessary and enduring reforms, codifying the statutes, enforcing discipline, instituting the ('Laudian') professorship in Arabic, and presenting a large collection of MSS. to the *Bodleian Library, including the so-called 'Codex Laudianus' of Acts. He did much to encourage individual scholars, and among those who enjoyed his patronage were J. *Hales and W. *Chillingworth. In 1633 he was again translated and became Abp. of Canterbury.

For some years past Laud had been taking a leading part in the administration of the country, and now his work on the *High Commission and his attempts to impose liturgical uniformity by force increasingly aroused the intense hostility of the *Puritans. Among the chief grievances were that he made the communion table rather than the pulpit the centre of the church, that he suppressed Puritan *lecturers, and that he punished all opposition to his designs with heavy penalties. His attempts to enforce a new liturgy in Scotland (1637) proved the turning-point of his career. At the sitting of Convocation in 1640 he introduced new canons, proclaiming the *Divine right of kings, and compelling whole classes of men to swear never to 'consent to alter the government of this Church by archbishops, deans, and archdeacons, &c.' This formula, known as the 'etcetera oath', exposed him to general ridicule and had to be suspended at the order of the King. Soon afterwards he was impeached by the Long Parliament. In 1641 he was imprisoned in the Tower, but his trial did not begin until 1644. It is generally held to have been conducted without regard for the demands of justice, the Commons imposing their will on the Lords by force. He was executed on Tower Hill, London, on 10 Jan. 1645, after repudiating the accusation of 'Popery' and declaring his adherence to the Protestant Church of England.

Laud's apparent failure arose from his inability to understand the popular leaning towards Puritanism and the hatred aroused by his violent measures against all who did not share his own views on ritual. In doctrinal matters he showed himself broad-minded and conciliatory. He sought to improve the economic condition of the national Church, but thereby he promoted its identification with a political party. He left a remarkable private diary recording esp. the events of his last years. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 10 Jan.

Works ed. W. Scott–J. Bliss (L.A.C.T., 7 vols., 1847–60). Apart from the records among the State Papers, the principal authority is the life by his disciple P. *Heylyn, Cyprianus Anglicus (London, 1668). Modern lives by C. W. Le Bas (London, 1836; repr. among his works), A. C. Benson (London, 1887), W. H. *Hutton (ib., 1895), W. L. Mackintosh (ib., 1907), A. S. Duncan-Jones (ib., 1927) and H. R. Trevor-Roper (ib., 1940). E. C. E. Bourne, The Anglicanism of William Laud (1947). [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956). Catalogue of the MSS. which he presented to the Bodleian Library by H. O. Coxe, Catalogi Codicum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Bodleianae pars prima (Oxford, 1853), cols. 491–582, and pars secunda (1858–85). S. R. Gardiner in D.N.B., xxxii (1892), pp. 185–94; W. H. Hutton in D.E.C.H., pp. 316–20.

LAUDA SION. The opening words, and hence the name, of the *sequence (now optional) for the feast of *Corpus Christi, composed for the occasion by St. *Thomas Aquinas (c. 1264). Summoning the Church (here addressed as Sion) to the adoration of the Eucharist, it contains a doctrinal exposition of the Presence, closely following that in the Summa Theologica*. The hymn combines with close philosophical reasoning a severity of form and economy of expression which give it a grandeur and austerity lost in most English translations. These include versions by R. *Crashaw, E. B. *Pusey, F. *Oakeley, and E. *Caswall; the most familiar, 'Laud, O Sion, thy Salvation', is the work of several authors.

Crit. ed. of text in G. M. Dreves (ed.), Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters (A.H.M.A., 1; 1907), p. 584 f. Raby, pp. 405–8, with reff. and bibl., p. 483; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, ii (1965), pp. 246–251, with reff.

LAUDS. The traditional morning prayer of the W. Church, one of the oldest parts of the Divine Office. Before the reform of the *Breviary (q.v.) by *Pius X, it had six or seven Psalms (as is still the case in the Monastic Office), always including Pss. 148–50, in which the word laudate (Lat., 'praise ye . . .') frequently recurs, whence its name. In the 1971 Breviary, in which the Office is entitled 'Laudes Matutinae', it opens with the *invitatory, if it is the first Office of the day, followed by a hymn, a Psalm, a *canticle from the OT, another Psalm (each, except the hymn, having its own *antiphon), a short Biblical reading, short *responsory, the *Benedictus, intercessions, the *Lord's Prayer, the *collect for the day, blessing and dismissal. Before 1960 Lauds was usually joined to *Mattins and said overnight by anticipation, except in religious orders which rose for the Night Office; in that year the recitation of Lauds was restored to the morning. In the BCP parts of Lauds and Mattins were combined to form the service of Morning Prayer.

C. Callewaert, 'De Laudibus Matutinis' in Collationes Brugenses, xxvii (1927), pp. 383–9, 448–51, xxviii (1928), pp. 63–72, 152–66, 245–50, and 328–38; repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 53–89. G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Les Laudes du Dimanche du IVe au VIIe Siècle' in Le Messager des Fidèles [later R. Bén.], vi (1889), pp. 301–4. I. M. Hanssens, S.J., Aux origines de la prière liturgique. Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, lvii; 1952), passim. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L. viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1887–98.

LAURA. See Lavra.

LAURENCE, St. (d. 258), deacon and martyr. He was one of the seven deacons at Rome during the pontificate of Sixtus II (257–8), and suffered martyrdom in the persecution under Valerian. Acc. to a tradition handed down by St. *Ambrose, *Prudentius, and others, on being asked by the prefect of Rome to deliver up the treasure of the Church, he assembled the poor among whom he had distributed the ecclesiastical possessions and presented them to the prefect, saying, 'These are the treasure of the Church', an action for which he was punished by being slowly roasted to death on a gridiron. This story has been widely rejected by modern scholars, who maintain that he was beheaded like Sixtus II and other contemporary martyrs. He was one of the most famous saints of the Roman Church. During the reign of *Constantine a chapel was built over his tomb in a *catacomb (Cyriaca) on the Via Tiburtina, and this was enlarged by Pelagius II (579–90) into a basilica, the present San Lorenzo fuori le Mura. His feast occurs in the Roman 'Depositio Martyrum' of the 4th cent. and his name is also found in the *Canon of the Mass and in the Litanies. Feast day, 10 Aug.

AA.SS., Aug. II (1735), pp. 485–532. B.H.L., pp. 708–12 (Nos. 4751–89), and suppl. (ib., 1911), p. 187 f. P. F. de' Cavalieri, 'S. Lorenzo e il supplizio della graticola' in R.Q., xiv (1900), pp. 159–76; id., Note agiografiche, v (S.T., xxvii; 1915), No. 3, 'Assum est, versa et manduca', pp. 65–82. H. Grisar, S.J., 'Zum ältesten Kultus des Märtyrers Laurentius' in Z.K.T., xxvii (1903), pp. 133–8. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), esp. pp. 124–8, with reff. L. *Duchesne, 'Le Sanctuaire de saint Laurent' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxxix (1921), pp. 3–24; W. Frankl–E. Josi–R. Krautheimer, 'Le esplorazioni nella basilica di S. Lorenzo nell'Agro Verano' in Riv.A.C., xxvi (1950), pp. 9–48. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929) cols. 1917–61, s.v. 'Laurent'. See also bibl. to Sixtus II.

'LAUSANNE.' The first Conference of the *Ecumenical Movement of '*Faith and Order' held at Lausanne under Bp. C. H. *Brent in 1927. It aimed at promoting doctrinal unity among the diverse branches of Christianity, about 90 different Churches being represented. Among those not represented were the RC Church, the Russian Orthodox, and several *Baptist Churches. The subjects discussed were the call to unity, the message of the Church to the world, the essence of the Church, Episcopacy and Apostolic succession, the Sacraments, and the Unity of Christendom in general. Great differences became apparent esp. as regards the doctrine of the Sacraments, of which the Orthodox recognized seven and the *Quakers none. The difficulties were emphasized by the Greek Abp. Germanos, who declared a union impossible without the acceptance of the Seven *Oecumenical Councils. None the less, the Conference did much to stimulate interest in reunion and to encourage theological co-operation.

Faith and Order. Proceedings of the World Conference, Lausanne, August 3–21, 1927. Edited by H. N. Bate (1928). Convictions. A Selection from the Responses of the Churches to the Report of the World Conference on Faith and Order, held at Lausanne in 1927. Edited by L. Hodgson, with the assistance of H. N. Bate and R. W. Brown (1934).

LAVABO (Lat., 'I will wash'). The washing of the celebrant's fingers after the offering of the oblations in the Mass, so called from the initial Latin word of Ps. 26. 6–end (Vulg., Ps. 25. 6–end) with the recitation of which the celebrant formerly accompanied the action. In 1969 the traditional text was replaced by Ps. 51 (Vulg. 50), verse 4.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 95–103; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 76–82.

LAVRA (Gk. λαύρα, literally, 'street' or 'alley'). In the early Church a colony of *anchorites who, while living in separate huts, were subject to a single abbot. The oldest lavras were founded in Palestine in the early 4th cent., where for some centuries they continued to flourish. Esp. famous were those under the direction of St. Euthymius the Great (d. 473) and his pupil, St. *Sabas (d. 532), the founder of the Lavra, Mar Saba (μεγίστη λαύρα), south-east of Jerusalem. In more recent times the term 'lavra' has also come to be applied to *coenobitic communities of particular importance.

LAW, Canon. See Canon Law.

LAW, Natural. See Natural Law.

LAW, WILLIAM (1686–1761), *Nonjuror and spiritual writer. He was born at Kings Cliffe, Northants, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1711. On the accession of George I Law refused the Oath of Allegiance, was deprived of his fellowship, and became a Nonjuror. From 1727 to 1737 he lived in the household of the *Gibbons at Putney as tutor to the father of the historian. In 1740 he retired to Kings Cliffe, where he was joined later by a Mrs. Hutcheson and Miss Hester Gibbon, with whom he organized schools and almshouses, and, until his death, led a life of great simplicity, devotion, and pursuits of charity.

Among his earlier writings are Three Letters to the Bishop of Bangor (1717) which were welcomed as a convincing reply to B. *Hoadly's attack on High Church principles, and in 1726 appeared his Absolute Unlawfulness of the Stage Entertainment, a strong but somewhat one-sided attack on the evils of the contemporary theatre. In the same year he published the first of his treatises, On Christian Perfection, which was followed, in 1728, by the most famous of his works, A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life. Inspired by the teaching of J. *Tauler, J. *Ruysbroeck, *Thomas à Kempis, and other orthodox spiritual writers, the book is a forceful exhortation to embrace the Christian life in its moral and ascetical fullness. The author recommends the exercise of the moral virtues and meditation and ascetical practices; corporate worship, however, finds little place. He insists esp on the virtues practised in everyday life, temperance humility, and self-denial, all animated by the intention to glorify God, to which every human activity should be directed. The simplicity of its teaching and its vigorous style soon established the work as a classic, which has probably had more influence than any other post-Reformation spiritual book except *The Pilgrim's Progress, and was greatly appreciated e.g. by J. *Wesley, G. *Whitefield, and H. *Venn. In 1732 he published his Case of Reason against M. *Tindal and the *Latitudinarian position generally; and his attitude towards Rome is to be found in his Letters to a Lady inclined to enter the Church of Rome (1779). He became acquainted c. 1734 with the writings of the German Protestant mystic, J. *Boehme, whose influence is noticeable in his later works, esp. The Spirit of Prayer (2 parts, 1749–50) and The Spirit of Love (2 parts, 1752 and 1754), which emphasize the indwelling of Christ in the soul. This development of his spirituality estranged many of his former disciples, e.g. Wesley, and led him, though he always remained faithful to the C of E, to a doctrine resembling the *Quaker conception of the '*Inner Light'. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 9 Apr.

Collected ed. of his works, 9 vols., London, each with a general title-page, 1762 (sets being made up from various edd.). Works also ed. 'G. Moreton', 9 vols., privately pr., London, 1892–3. New ed. of the Liberal and Mystical Writings of William Law, with Introd. by W. S. Palmer (London, 1908); Selected Mystical Writings of William Law, ed. with notes and studies by S. [H.] Hobhouse (London, 1938). There has been a steady flow of edd. of A Serious Call to a Devout Life. J. H. Overton, William Law, Non-Juror and Mystic (1881). S. [H.] Hobhouse, William Law and Eighteenth Century Quakerism, with some unpublished Letters and Fragments (1927). A. W. Hopkinson, About William Law. A Running Commentary on his Works (1948). E. W. Baker, A Herald of the Evangelical Revival. A Critical Inquiry into the Relation of William Law to John Wesley and the Beginnings of Methodism (1948). A. K. Walker, William Law. His Life and Thought (1973). L. Stephen in D.N.B., xxxii (1892), pp. 236–40.

LAWRENCE, Brother. See Brother Lawrence.

LAWRENCE, St. See Laurence, St.

LAXISM. A system in *Moral Theology which relaxed the obligations of natural and positive law on grounds deemed by its critics to be insufficient. It developed in the 17th cent., when modern conditions, e.g. the growing practice of taking interest on money loans, hitherto forbidden by the Church as usury, raised several difficult cases of conscience. Its formulation is connected with the appearance of *Probabilism (q.v.), of which it may be considered a perversion. First attacked in France, esp. in B. *Pascal's Lettres provinciales (1657), it was rather clumsily defended by the *Jesuit G. Pirot in L'Apologie pour les casuistes (1657), which provoked great scandal. In 1658 certain propositions in Pirot's book which asserted that even the slightest degree of probability, derived either from reason or from authority, suffices to excuse from sin were condemned by the *Sorbonne, and in 1659 the *Holy Office censured the book itself. In 1665 and 1666 *Alexander VII condemned Laxism, and in 1679 *Innocent XI condemned 65 propositions drawn from Laxist casuists.

M. Petrocchi, Il problema del lassismo nel secolo XVII (1953), with refl. A. Degert, 'Réaction des "Provinciales" sur la théologie morale en France' in Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique publié par l'Institut Catholique de Toulouse.

Sér. 5, v (1913), pp. 400–20 and 442–51. A. Molien–É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 37–86, s.v. 'Laxisme'. See also works cited under Probabilism.

LAY BROTHER, LAY SISTER. A member of a religious order who is not bound to the recitation of the Divine Office and is occupied in manual work. The institution, which originated in the 11th cent., developed as a result of the general literacy of the monks and their abandonment of manual labour, and of the increasingly general custom of monks proceeding to holy orders if admitted to the monastery in youth. A similar development took place in the orders of women, where lay sisters were employed to leave the 'choir nuns' free for the Office, mental prayer, and intellectual pursuits. Lay brothers and sisters assist daily at Mass and recite a short office. The Second *Vatican Council's 'Decree on the Appropriate Renewal of the Religious Life' (1965), however, now requires that lay brothers be drawn into the heart of the community's life and activities, and, in the case of women's communities, that there should, if possible, be only one category of nun.

K. Hallinger, O.S.B., 'Woher kommen die Laienbrüder?' in Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, xii (1956), pp. 1–104. J. Dubois, 'L'Institution des convers au XIIe siècle. Forme de vie monastique propre aux laïcs' in I laici nella "Societas Christiana" dei secoli XI e XII. Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, v (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi. Serie III, v [1968]), pp. 183–261; C. D. Fonseca, 'I conversi nelle communità canonicali', ib., pp. 262–305. J. S. Donnelly, The Decline of the Medieval Cistercian Laybrotherhood (Fordham University Studies, History Series, iii; New York, 1949), with further reff. J. Bonduelle in D.D.C., iv (1949), cols. 562–88, s.v. 'Convers'. See also bibl. to Oblate.

LAY READER. In the C of E, a lay person licensed to conduct religious services. The history of the office in its present form dates from 1866, when the Bp. of *Gloucester and Bristol admitted the first Reader in the C of E. The number of Readers gradually increased and in 1905 the Bishops issued rules governing their status, duties, form of admission, etc. (revised in 1921 and 1940). The duties which may be assigned to them include the reading of *Morning and *Evening Prayer (except the Absolution) and of the *Litany, the publication of *Banns of Marriage, preaching, the catechizing of children and the receiving of alms; and generally giving an incumbent such assistance in his pastoral work as the bishop may direct. Readers are formally admitted to their office by a Bishop, from whom they may also receive a licence either for a particular parish or for the diocese generally. In each diocese there is provision for a Readers' Board on which the Readers are represented. Occasionally a reader is stipendiary. Since 1969 women have been eligible for the office, and the first was admitted in that year.

The duties of lay readers are defined in the Canons of 1969, E 4–6. R. Martineau, The Office and Work of a Reader (1970).

LAY RECTOR. In the C of E, a layman receiving the rectorial tithes of a benefice. By custom he enjoys the right to the chief seat in the chancel of the parish church for himself and his family and the freehold of the whole church, but this gives him no right of possession or of entering it when not open for divine service. He also has the duty of repairing the chancel, for the neglect of which duty he may be sued in the county court. He may compound for this liability, however, with the Board of Finance subject to the approval of the Diocesan Dilapidations Board.

LAYING ON OF HANDS. See Hands, Imposition of.

LAYMEN. See Laity.

LAYNEZ, JAMES (1512–65), second *General of the *Jesuits. After studying at the university of Alcalá, he joined St. *Ignatius Loyola in Paris and with him helped to found the Jesuit Order. He was appointed professor of scholastic theology at the Sapienza at Rome, and was largely responsible for crushing incipient Protestant opinion at Piacenza and other cities in N. Italy. He took a very prominent part in the Council of *Trent, where he represented the more irreconcilable elements (e.g. on *justification) and was one of the supporters of Papal absolutism. On Ignatius's death (1556) Laynez succeeded him first as 'General-Vicar' and (from 1558) as General. His rule was notable for the continued success and expansion of the order.

Lainii Monumenta. Epistolae et Acta Patris Jacobi Lainii (8 vols., Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, Madrid, 1912–17); his Disputationes Tridentinae, ed. H. Grisar, S.J. (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1886). Lives by P. de Ribaneira, S.J. (Madrid, 1594), and F. Dilarino (pseudonym of C. M. Rinaldi, S.J., Rome, 1672). Modern studies by G. Boero (Florence, 1880; Fr. tr. 1894), A. Martinez de Azagra y Beladiez (Madrid, 1933), H. Flichter, S.J. (St. Louis, 1944), and F. Cereceda, S.J. (2 vols., Madrid, 1945–6). M. Scaduto, S.J., L'epoca di Giacomo Lainez. Il governo 1556–1565 (Storia della Compagnia di Gesù in Italia, iii, etc., 1964 ff.). J. Brodrick, S.J., The Progress of the Jesuits, 1556–79 (1946), pp. 66–111. P. Dudon, 'Le Projet de Somme théologique du P. Jacques Laynez' in Rech. S.R., xxi (1931), pp. 361–74. A. Martini, S.J., in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 819–21 s.v. 'Lainez, Diego'.

LAZARISTS. The name popularly given to the 'Congregation of the Mission' (C.M.), a congregation of secular priests living under religious vows, founded by St. *Vincent de Paul in 1625. The name comes from the priory of St.-Lazare, which was Vincent's headquarters in Paris. At first they were confined to France and territories under French influence, but have now spread all over the world. The original work of the congregation was the preaching of missions in the various parishes of France, and conducting *retreats. Later they established seminaries. Only with great reluctance, however, did they accept the charge of parishes. Outside France the work of the Lazarists lay for many years chiefly in Tunis and Algiers, where they brought succour to the Christian captives of the Barbary pirates, and in Madagascar.

P. Coste, La Congrégation de la mission dite de Saint-Lazare (1927). A. Haas, Die Lazaristen in der Kurpfalz (privately pr., Speyer, 1960). Heimbucher, ii, pp. 574–86 with bibl., and p. 670.

LAZARUS. (1) The brother of Martha and Mary, and intimate friend of Jesus, who raised him from the dead (Jn. 11. 1–44). Of his subsequent life nothing is told in the NT. Acc. to E. tradition he and his sisters and some friends were put into a leaking boat by the Jews and, being miraculously preserved, landed on Cyprus, where he was made bishop at Kition. In 890 his supposed relics were translated to *Constantinople, where a church was built in his honour by *Leo VI ('the Philosopher'). In the 11th cent. the legend spread in the W. that he had been Bp. of Marseilles and martyred under *Domitian, a story probably due to confusion with a 5th cent. Bp. Lazarus of Aix whose epitaph is preserved in the crypt of St. Victor's at Marseilles, or, alternatively, with St. Nazarius, Bp. of Autun. Devotion to Lazarus appears to have been widespread in the early Church. The 'Peregrinatio *Etheriae' describes a procession to *Bethany on the Saturday before *Palm Sunday to the church erected over his tomb. On this day ('Lazarus Saturday') his feast is still observed in the E.; the W. Church keeps it on 17 Dec.

(2) The name of the beggar in Christ's parable of *Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16. 19–31), venerated as the patron of lepers in the middle ages.

On (1), M. J. *Lagrange, O.P., St. Jean (1925), pp. 295–318, and other comm. on St. John's Gospel, cited s.v. J. N. Sanders, 'Who was the Disciple whom Jesus loved?' [Lazarus] in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studies in the Fourth Gospel (1957), pp. 72–82; R. Dunkerley, 'Lazarus' in New Testament Studies, v (1959), pp. 321–7. On the legend, see G. *Morin, O.S.B., 'Saint Lazare et saint Maximin' in Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de France, lvi (1897), pp. 27–51; and L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, i (ed. 2, 1907), pp. 321–59. On the iconography, H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2009–86, s.v., and E. Josi in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 996–8. See also bibl. to Mary Magdalene and Martha.

LEANDER, St. (c. 550–600 or 601), Bp. of Seville, probably from 584. He was the brother of St. *Isidore. About 582 he went on an embassy to *Constantinople, where he made the acquaintance of *Gregory the Great, and on his return was appointed to the see of Seville (c. 584). He took a prominent part in furthering the cause of Catholic orthodoxy in Spain against the *Arianism of the Visigoths, and in 589 presided over the celebrated Synod of *Toledo. A rule for nuns ('De institutione virginum') and a Homily delivered at the Synod of Toledo are among his few surviving works. Feast day, 27 Feb.

The Rule for Nuns and Homily repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, lxxii, 869–98; modern ed. of the rule, with full introd., by A. C. Vega, O.S.A. (Scriptores Ecclesiastici Hispano-Latini Veteris et Medii Aevi, xvi–xvii; Madrid, 1948). The principal authority is Isidore of Seville, De Viris Illustribus, xli. J. Madoz, S.J., study of the 'Libellus de Institutione Virginum' in Anal. Boll., lxvii (1949), pp. 407–24. Mrs. Humphry Ward in D.C.B., iii (1882), pp. 637–40.

LEAVENED BREAD. See Bread, Leavened and Unleavened.

LEBBAEUS. An alternative name for *Thaddaeus, found in many MSS. of Mt. 10. 3 and also in a few at Mk. 3. 18. In the AV and NEB it occurs only at the former place, and in the RV not at all.

LE BRUN, PIERRE (1661–1729), French liturgical scholar. A native of Brignoles, he entered the *Oratory c. 1682. Having studied theology at Marseilles and Toulouse, he taught philosophy at Toulon and theology at Grenoble. In 1690 he was called to the seminary of Saint-Magloire, where he lectured on the Scriptures, the Councils and Church history. His principal liturgical work, Explication littérale, historique et dogmatique des prières et des cérémonies de la sainte messe (4 vols., 1716–26), embodied many extended studies. In its important preface he takes up an intermediary position between the excessive symbolism of the Middle Ages and an exaggerated naturalism. In the later volumes, which contain much curious information about usages in the French churches, he gives detailed studies of the various rites, stressing their unanimity in regard to liturgical essentials. In his Défense de l'ancien sentiment sur la forme de la consécration (1727) he maintained that the *Epiclesis was an integral element in Eucharistic consecration. He also advocated a more understanding participation in the Liturgy by the laity, for whom he compiled a liturgical prayer book, Heures ou manuel pour assister à la messe (1716).

New ed. of L'Explication de la messe (Lex Orandi, ix; 1949) by E. Bonnardet, Cong. Orat., with biography, full acct. of Le Brun's works, earlier edd., and bibl., pp. xi–xxxiii. A Lat. text of the Explication littérale, publd. by J. A. Dalmasius (Venice, 4 vols., 1770). A. Molien in D.T.C., ix (1926), cols. 101–3, s.v., and H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2218–29.

LECLERC, JEAN (1657–1736), 'Clericus', *Arminian theologian and Biblical scholar. Born at Geneva, he studied at Grenoble and Saumur, and later gave up strict *Calvinism, in which he had been brought up, and became an Arminian. In 1684 he was appointed professor of philosophy, afterwards of church history, at the *Remonstrant College at Amsterdam, where he met J. *Locke. In his first work, Liberii de Sancto Amore Epistolae Theologicae (1679), he stated his theological convictions, explaining the mysteries of the *Trinity, the *Incarnation and *Original Sin on rationalistic lines. In Sentiments de quelques théologiens de Hollande (1685) he attacked R. *Simon, esp. his plan of a *polyglot Bible, and denied the Mosaic authorship of the *Pentateuch. In 1696 he published an Ars Critica, and in 1699 a harmony of the Gospels, Harmonia Evangelica, in Greek and Latin. He brought out a Commentary on the Pentateuch in 1699, an annotated translation of the NT in 1703, and Commentaries on the historical books of the OT in 1708 and on the Psalms, the writings of Solomon and the prophets in 1731. He made a new edition of the 'Apostolic Fathers' of J. B. *Cotelier and revised writings of D. *Petavius, H. *Grotius, and others; he also edited three influential periodical works, Bibliothèque universelle et historique (26 vols., 1686–93), Bibliothèque choisie (28 vols., 1703–13), and Bibliothèque ancienne et moderne (29 vols., 1714–30). A champion of freedom of thought and an enemy of all dogmatism, he defended the unlimited rights of reason in the domain of faith. He held very advanced critical views on the inspiration of Scripture, which he denied altogether for Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Songs. The historic portions of the Pentateuch he assigned to King Josiah (637–608).

Vita et Opera ad annum 1711, publd. Amsterdam, 1711. Annie Barnes, Jean Leclerc (1657–1736) et la République des lettres (1938). Other studies by A. des Amorie van der Hoeven (Amsterdam, 1843) and J. Collen (thesis, Geneva, 1884). J. Carreyre in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 105–7.

LECLERCQ, HENRI (1869–1945), *Benedictine scholar. A native of Tournai (Belgium), he became a naturalized French subject and after profession at *Solesmes was sent to Farnborough

Abbey in 1896. He was ordained priest in 1898. From 1914 till his death he lived in London, where he became a very familiar reader at the British Museum. He was a prolific and voluminous editor and writer, esp. concerned with the history of Latin Christianity. His numerous publications include L'Afrique chrétienne (2 vols., 1904); L'Espagne chrétienne (1906); Manuel d'archéologie chrétienne depuis les origines jusqu'au VIIIe siècle (2 vols., 1907); Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica (4 vols., 1900–13), in conjunction with F. *Cabrol, a collection of early liturgical documents; Histoire des conciles (10 vols., 1907–38), a completely recast French edition of K. J. *Hefele's Conciliengeschichte; and a large number of articles in the Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (ed. by F. Cabrol and himself, 1903–53), the later volumes being almost wholly Leclercq's work. His major work on J. *Mabillon (2 vols., 1953–7) was virtually complete at the time of his death. He also wrote Histoire de la régence pendant la minorité de Louis XV (3 vols., 1921). The range of his writing led it to suffer seriously in accuracy and to compel him to borrow extensively from other writers, so that his work can seldom be used without checking. It is, however, always readable, and often clothed in a lively and controversial style.

LECTERN (Lat. legere, 'to read'). A bookstand used to support the liturgical books, usually of wood or metal and movable, often taking the form of an eagle or pelican with outstretched wings.

J. C. Cox, Pulpits, Lecterns and Organs in English Churches (1915), pp. 163–203.

LECTIONARY. A book containing the extracts ('pericopes') from Scripture appointed to be read at public worship. The apportionment of particular extracts to particular days began in the 4th cent. Originally the beginning (incipit) and ending (explicit) of each pericope was noted in the margin of the church Bible, and a 'capitulary', or table of incipits and explicits, was made for reference. Later the pericopes were collected into lectionaries, those for the Mass being further separated into *Epistolaries and *Evangeliaries. With the appearance of the Missal in the 10th cent. all the passages used in the Mass were incorporated in it. In the 1970 RC Missal, however, the Biblical readings were omitted. They were issued in the form of a separate lectionary (1969), which provides for a three-year cycle of three readings for Masses on Sundays, and a two-year cycle of two readings for weekday Masses.

The lessons read at *Mattins and *Evensong in the C of E were long regulated by a lectionary ('Table of Lessons') issued in 1871, or, alternatively, by a revised Table of 1922. Since 1944 there has been a series of revisions, culminating in the 1961 Lectionary. This provides for continuous reading of the OT at Mattins and Evensong, with readings from the NT generally in separate sequences in each Office. The Alternative Calendar and Lectionary, introduced in 1979 and incorporated into the ASB, provides separate sequences for both Lessons at each Office. It also provides for the Psalms to be spread over a period of about ten weeks. The ASB has, in addition, a 'Daily Eucharistic Lectionary' of Psalms and Lessons.

S. Beissel, S.J., Entstehung der Perikopen des Römischen Messbuches (Ergänzungsheft zu den Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, xcvi; 1907). G. G. Willis, St. Augustine's Lectionary (Alcuin Club Collections, xliv; 1962). H. Marot, O.S.B., 'Note sur le nouveau lectionnaire anglican de 1956' in Irénikon, xxix (1956), pp. 406–10. A. A. McArthur, The Christian Year and Lectionary Reform (1958). F. H. Scrivener in D.C.A., ii (1893), pp. 953–67, s.v. See also bibl. to Evangeliary.

LECTOR, also 'Reader'. In the E and RC Churches, one of the *Minor Orders of the ministry. In early times his main function was to read the OT Prophecies, the Epistle, and in some places (e.g. Africa, Spain) the Gospel. The first traces of the order may be seen in Col. 4. 16 and Rev. 1. 3, and express mention of a liturgical reader is found in St. *Justin (Apol., I. lxvii. 3 f.). From the end of the 2nd cent. there is plentiful but widely scattered evidence, e.g. St. *Cyprian (Epp. 29; 38. 2; 39. 4). Can. 10 of *Antioch (330 or 341) sanctioned their ordination by *chorepiscopi. In Syria (Ap. Const., viii. 2) and elsewhere they were appointed by the laying on of hands, accompanied in the W. ('Conc. Carth. IV', can. 8) by the delivery of a codex. From the Middle Ages the office ranked as the second of the Minor Orders. In 1972 it was constituted the lower of the two remaining 'Ministeria' and allotted various duties, incl. that of reading the Scriptures (except the Gospel) and, when there is no deacon or cantor present, of announcing the petitions in the General Intercession at Mass; the office may be conferred on a layman. In the E. Church it is usual for the lector to be ordained also subdeacon and deacon at the same service.

A. *Harnack, Die Quellen der sogenannten Apostolischen Kirchenordnung (T.U., ii, Hft. 5, 1886), pp. 57–100, 'Über den Ursprung des Lectorats und den anderen niederen Weihen'. F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (R.Q., Supplementheft vii; 1897), pp. 67–114 and 165–72. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2241–69, s.v. 'Lecteur'.

LECTURERS. Rare before the *Reformation, lecturers were ordained stipendiary ministers (often deacons), appointed during the century after 1559 by town corporations, by many parishes (esp. in London), and in a few cases by individual laymen, to provide for regular frequent preaching. By 1600 about 100 sermons a week were preached by lecturers in London. Most lecturers (e.g. J. *Field) were appointed by parishes, and the most influential by corporations. Lectureships were not benefices. Some lecturers were themselves incumbents of the same or another parish, and some held more than one lectureship; they were supported by endowments, voluntary contributions or levies on parishioners.

Lectureships were essentially a *Puritan device to secure preachers with views of which Puritans could approve; they were used in cathedrals in aid of the establishment, but were otherwise bitterly resisted by many bishops, e.g. by J. Aylmer and R. *Bancroft and esp. by W. *Laud. The Long Parliament encouraged lectureships; but in the 1650s Anglicans contrived to use them in London. The system was dealt its death-blow by the Act of Uniformity in 1662; a few lectureships still remain as archaic survivals.

P. S. Seaver, The Puritan Lectureships. The Politics of Religious Dissent 1560–1662 (Stanford, Ca., 1970). See also bibl. to Puritans.

LEDGER, St. See Leodegar, St.

LEE, FREDERICK GEORGE (1832–1902), theological writer. From 1867 to 1899 he was vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. He actively promoted reunion between the C of E and the RC Church, and to this end helped to found the *A.P.U.C. in 1857 and started the Union Review in 1863. It appears that c. 1877 he was secretly consecrated Bp. at or near *Venice by some prelate in communion with the see of Rome and took the title of 'Bp. of *Dorchester (Oxon)' (see Episcopi Vagantes). He also took a prominent part in furthering the ceremonial revival in the C of E. His voluminous writings, the historical ones mostly very partisan, include Historical Sketches of the Reformation (1879) and a Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms (1877). His widely used Directorium Anglicanum (1865; a much revised edition of an earlier book issued by J. *Purchas in 1858) was a manual of directions for clergy at the altar. In 1901 he became a RC.

H. R. T. Brandreth, Dr. Lee of Lambeth. A Chapter in Parenthesis in the History of the Oxford Movement (1951). W. G. D. Fletcher in D.N.B., 1901–1911, ii, pp. 440–2.

LEEN, EDWARD (1885–1944), Irish spiritual writer. A native of Co. Limerick, he entered the Congregation of the Holy Ghost and studied at Rockwell College and Rome. He was ordained priest in 1914, became dean of studies at Blackrock College in 1922, and its president in 1925. From 1939 he was superior of the house of his congregation at Kimmage. Leen was among the most popular RC spiritual authors. Among his best-known works are Progress through Mental Prayer (1935), containing practical instructions on the lower stages of mental prayer up to the Prayer of Quiet; The Holy Ghost (1936), considered esp. in His workings in souls; Why the Cross (1938), meditations on the problem of pain; and The Church before Pilate (1939). He also wrote numerous pamphlets and articles on Catholic education.

His The Voice of A Priest was posthumously ed. by B. J. Keily, C.S.Sp. (1947); fourteen of his talks on the BVM were also posthumously published, Our Blessed Mother. Talks on Our Lady by Edward Leen . . . and John Kearney, ed. id. (Dublin, 1947), pp. 1–106, and notes taken on his Last Retreat ed. R. F. Walker, C.S.Sp. (Cork, 1959). Life by M. O'Carroll (Dun Laoghaire [1952]).

LEFÈVRE D'ÉTAPLES, JACQUES. See Faber, Jacobus.

LEGATE, Papal. A personal representative of the *Holy See who has been entrusted with its authority. Papal legates are of three kinds—legates a latere, *nuncios, and legati nati. Legates a latere, to whom the term 'Papal Legate' in common usage is esp. applied, are persons deputed for important missions of a temporary character. This office is now confined to cardinals. Nuncios, also known as legati missi, have functions corresponding to those of the ambassadors of secular states. Legati nati were the holders of certain offices which conveyed a legatine status ex officio, e.g. before the Reformation the Abp. of *Canterbury was such a legatus natus, and performed some of the functions which would now be carried out by a nuncio. Though a Papal legate is usually fortified with abundant jurisdiction, the Council of *Trent regulated that his powers should not completely override those of the bishops of the country to which he is sent. See also Apostolic Delegate; Nuncio.

F. Claeys-Bouuaert in D.D.C., vi (1957), cols. 371–7, s.v. 'Légat du pape'; J. A. Abbo in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 607–9 s.v.

LEGER, St. See Leodegar, St.

LEIBNIZ, GOTTFRIED WILHELM (1646–1716), philosopher. He was a native of Leipzig, where after a precocious boyhood he entered the university in 1661 as a student of law. Here philosophy and mathematics soon became his chief interests, and in 1663 he wrote a dissertation on the Principle of Individuation, a subject which remained of permanent interest to him. A tract, De Arte Combinatoria, which elaborated a new system of symbolic logic, followed in 1666. In 1667 he declined a chair at Altdorf, the university town attached to Nuremberg. Shortly afterwards his friendship with J. C. von Boyneburg (1622–72) introduced him to the Elector of Mainz, who employed him on several political projects, including a plan to persuade Louis XIV to divert his attention from Germany to an attack on Egypt. Contacts with French savants while in Paris on this mission much widened his outlook; and it was at about this date that he made his celebrated discovery of the infinitesimal calculus. In 1673 he changed to the service of the Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg, in the employ of whose family he remained for the rest of his life, residing from 1676 at Hanover. Here his main official task was the assembly of a vast body of material relating to the history of the House of Brunswick. But he developed and maintained a great number of other interests. A Protestant by upbringing, he engaged in correspondence with J. B. *Bossuet on Christian reunion, and to this end published his Systema Theologicum (1686). The Prussian Academy, founded in 1700, was virtually Leibniz's creation, and he also exerted himself to promote the erection of similar institutions in other European states. Most of his philosophical writings date from the last sixteen years of his life in which he conducted a large correspondence with A. *Arnauld, S. *Clarke, and others. He also contributed to learned journals, and wrote an extensive critique of J. *Locke's Essay which, owing to Locke's death in 1704, he withheld from publication. (It was first issued by R. E. Raspe in 1765.) In 1710 appeared his Essais de Théodicée sur la bonté de Dieu, la liberté de l'homme et l'origine du mal, his one considerable theological work. In 1714 he wrote the Monadologie (publd. 1720) and Principes de la nature et de la grâce (publd. 1718), which though brief contain the only systematic account of his metaphysical doctrines. Throughout his life Leibniz was ardently devoted to the cause of international peace.

Acc. to the Monadology, the universe consisted of an infinite number of 'monads', i.e. simple substances, and nothing else. These monads are indivisible, yet, unlike the atoms of Democritus, ever-active. As every monad contains within itself the whole infinity of substance, each is a living mirror of all existence. Each is, however, limited and different from all the rest, as it mirrors the universe in its own way. All difference is relative and gradual, not absolute, and the universe is governed by a law of continuity. The monads form a continuously ascending series from the lowest, which is next to nothing, to the highest, which is God. Yet though Leibniz sometimes described God as the highest of the monads, he could not avoid the difficulties in the way of reconciling the inclusion of God in the monadic series with the Christian doctrine of the Divine transcendence. In some places he speaks as though God were outside the series and the cause of the monads' existence, or as though they proceeded from Him by 'fulgurations'. A radical optimism pervaded his whole system, expressed in his belief that this world is 'the best of all possible worlds'.

Leibniz defended the validity of the traditional proofs of God's existence, though he thought that they needed modification in detail, notably the *Ontological Proof. In general he was much more favourably disposed towards Scholastic principles than most philosophers who had come under the influence of F. *Bacon and R. *Descartes, and he firmly believed in final causes. He believed that one of the merits of his doctrine of substance was that it was in harmony with *transubstantiation and *consubstantiation alike.

A complete ed. of his works is being publd. under the auspices of the Berlin Academy (Darmstadt, Leipzig, Berlin, 1923 ff.). Details of earlier edd. in E. Ravier, Bibliographie des œuvres de Leibniz (1937). R. Latta, The Monadology and other Writings (Eng. tr. with introductions and notes, 1898). Eng. tr. of selected Philosophical Papers and Letters, with introd., by L. E. Loemker (Chicago, 1956; ed. 2, Dordrecht, 1969). There are also Eng. trr. of The Leibniz–Clarke Correspondence by H. G. Alexander (Manchester, 1956) and The Leibniz–Arnauld Correspondence by H. T. Mason (ib.–New York, 1967). B. Russell, A Critical Exposition of the Philosophy of Leibniz (1900). L. Couturat, La Logique de Leibniz d'après des documents inédits (1901). H. W. B. Joseph, Lectures on the Philosophy of Leibniz (posthumously publd., Oxford, 1949). G. Martin, Leibniz. Logik und Metaphysik (Cologne, 1960; Eng. tr., Manchester, 1964). Y. Belaval, Leibniz. Initiation à sa philosophie (1962). A. Görland, Der Gottesbegriff bei Leibniz (1907). G. J. Jordan, The Reunion of the Churches. A Study of G. W. Leibnitz and his great attempt (1927). J. Jalabert, Le Dieu de Leibniz (1960). Good survey of modern literature in D. Mahnke, 'Leibnizens Synthese von Universalmathematik und Individualmetaphysik' in E. Husserl's Jahrbuch, vii (1925), pp. 305–612. Überweg, iii, pp. 299–340, with bibl., pp. 673–81. J. Hirschberger in N.C.E., viii (1967), p. 620 f.; W. R. Sorley–Martha Kneale in E.B. (ed. 1968), xiii, pp. 913–17, s.v., with bibl.

LEIGHTON, ROBERT (1611–84), Abp. of Glasgow. Ordained in 1641, he became principal of Edinburgh University in 1653, Bp. of Dunblane in 1661, and Abp. of Glasgow in 1670. He laboured hard for the restoration of Church unity in Scotland, but being neither a consistent Presbyterian nor a typical Episcopalian, he failed in his hopes of accommodating the two systems. He purposed to retire from his bishopric of Dunblane when the Government continued persecuting the *Covenanters (1665), but on being reassured by *Charles II, relented. He finally resigned his archbishopric in 1674, after vainly redoubling his efforts towards conciliation.

His writings have never been satisfactorily edited. Early editions by J. Fall (1692–1708) and P. *Doddridge (2 vols., 1748). More recent ed. by W. West (vols. ii–vii, 1869–75; vol. i never publd.). Selections ed. by W. Blair (1883). D. Butler, Life and Letters of Robert Leighton (1903); E. A. *Knox, Robert Leighton, Archbishop of Glasgow [1931]. G. W. Sprott in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 4–7.

LEIPZIG, Disputation of. The disputation held at Leipzig from 27 June to 16 July 1519, under the orders of George, Duke of Saxony (1500–39), was provoked by J. *Eck's challenge of *Carlstadt. It began with a rather academic discussion between the two opponents on the relations of grace and free will, but the appearance of M. *Luther on 4 July turned the disputation to the question of the doctrinal authority of the Church. Under the pressure of Eck, Luther was led to the decisive statement that Councils not only may err, but actually have erred, holding that among the doctrines of J. *Huss condemned at *Constance some were very Christian and evangelical, and that the same Council had been wrong in affirming the primacy of the Pope. The disputation resulted in the clearing of the issues on both sides and furnished Rome with new material for the process against Luther.

Text in Kidd, pp. 44–51. H. Emser, De Disputatione Lipsicensi, quantum ad Boemos obiter deflexa est, 1519, ed. F. X. Thurnhofer (Corpus Catholicorum, Hft. 4; 1921). J. C. Seidemann, Die Leipziger Disputation im Jahre 1519 (1843). Schottenloher, i (1933), p. 557 (Nos. 13,015–30).

LEIPZIG INTERIM. See Augsburg, Interim of.

LE NEVE, JOHN (1679–1741), English antiquary. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. His Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae, or an Essay towards deducing a regular Succession of all principal Dignitaries in every Cathedral in those parts of Great Britain called England and Wales (fol., 1716), based on the collections of White *Kennett, was a work of immense industry and has remained a standard treatise on matters of ecclesiastical chronology, &c. His other publications include a Life of R. *Field, Dean of Gloucester (1716; but perhaps only the preface is Le Neve's own work), and The Lives and Characters . . . of all the Protestant Bishops in the Church of England since the Reformation (1720).

His Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae was 'corrected and continued from the Year M.DCC.XV. to the present time' by T. D. Hardy (3 vols., Oxford, 1854), with biog. note of Le Neve in vol. i, pp. xiii–xx. Modern ed. of the section covering the period 1300–1541 by H. P. F. King, Joyce M. Horn and B. Jones (12 vols., 1962–7); of that covering 1066–1300 by Diana E. Greenway and others (1968 ff.); and of that covering 1541–1857 by Joyce M. Horn and others (1969 ff.). W. Rye in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), p. 35 f.

LE NOURRY, DENIS NICOLAS (1647–1724), *Maurist historian. Educated by the *Oratorians, in 1665 he joined the *Benedictine Order at *Jumièges. From c. 1685 till his death he lived at *Paris. He took part in preparing some of the standard editions of the Fathers, notably of *Cassiodorus (with J. Garet) and St. *Ambrose (with J. Du Friche). His own principal work was his Apparatus ad Bibliothecam Maximam Veterum Patrum et Antiquorum Scriptorum (2 vols., 1703 and 1715), a very learned set of dissertations on several of the leading early Fathers and their writings, issued as an Appendix to the Lyons Bibliotheca. His Liber ad Donatum Confessorem de Mortibus Persecutorum (1710) is notable as the first modern attempt to prove that *Lactantius did not write the treatise 'On the Deaths of Persecutors'.

J. Baudot in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 217 f., s.v. with bibl.

LENT. The fast of forty days before *Easter. In the first three centuries the period of fasting in preparation for Easter did not, as a rule, exceed two or three days, as is evident from a statement of *Irenaeus recorded by *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl., v. 2). The first mention of a period of forty days (τεσσαρακοστή), prob. of Lent, occurs in the Canons of *Nicaea (A.D. 325; can. 5). The custom may have originated in the prescribed fast of candidates for baptism, and the number forty was evidently suggested by the forty days' fasts of *Moses, *Elijah, and esp. the Lord Himself, though till a much later date the period was reckoned differently in the different Churches. In the E. Churches the Lenten Fast was observed during seven weeks, but as Saturdays and Sundays (except *Holy Saturday) were exempt there were only thirty-six actual fast days. The W. Church, on the other hand, fasted during six weeks but also counted thirty-six days, as they normally left out only the Sundays. Only in *Jerusalem were the actual forty days observed as early as the 4th cent. by fasting on five days for eight weeks. Local customs, however, long varied and acc. to *Socrates (Hist. Eccl., v. 22) even a fast of three weeks or a fortnight was called τεσσαρακοστή. The number of forty was not made up in the Latin Church until the 7th cent., when the four days from *Ash Wednesday to the First Sunday in Lent were added, a practice first attested by the *Gelasian Sacramentary and spreading from Rome throughout the W.

During the early centuries the observance of the fast was very strict. Only one meal a day, taken towards evening, was allowed, and flesh-meat and fish, and in most places also eggs and lacticinia*, were absolutely forbidden. From the 9th cent. onwards in the W. the practice began to be considerably relaxed. The hour for breaking the fast was gradually anticipated to three o'clock in the afternoon, and by the 15th cent. it had become the general custom even for religious to eat at noon. These relaxations entailed not only the anticipation of the evening office of *Vespers to before midday (in order to keep the rule of not eating before Vespers), but also the concession of a 'collation' in the evening. This consisted originally only of a drink, but from the 13th cent. included some light food. Fish was allowed throughout the Middle Ages, and from the 15th cent. abstinence from lacticinia came to be more and more generally dispensed. By the Apostolic Constitution Paenitemini* (1966) in the RC Church the obligation to fast was restricted to the first day of Lent and *Good Friday. In the E. Church, however, abstinence from meat, fish, eggs, and lacticinia is still widely practised.

In the W. Church the penitential character of Lent is reflected in various features in the liturgy, such as the use of purple vestments and the omission of the Alleluia and (except on great feasts) of the Gloria in excelsis at Mass. There has long been a proper Mass for each day in Lent; despite some recent rearrangement of the lections, the Lenten Masses (except those for the Thursdays which are later than the rest) are among the earliest in the Missal. Since the time of *Pius X the ferial Masses of Lent have been gradually restored to prominence and now take precedence over all but the most important feasts.

Lent is generally observed as a time of penance by abstaining from festivities, by almsgiving, and by devoting more than the usual time to religious exercises. Of recent years in the W. Church more emphasis has been placed on these aspects than on physical fasting.

The observance of Lent continued in the C of E after the Reformation. It was expressly prescribed by the BCP, and sometimes enforced even by the secular authorities. Dispensations allowing the use of meat were issued in special cases, e.g. by Abp. W. *Juxon. Falling into comparative disuse in the 18th cent., it was revived by the Tractarians in the 19th and is now widely kept. See also Refreshment Sunday; Holy Week.

H. Thurston, S.J., Lent and Holy Week (1904). J. Pascher, Das liturgische Jahr (Munich, 1963), pp. 47–156. F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, i (1897), 'Die Entwickelung des Osterfastens', No. ix, pp. 241–78. C. Callewaert, Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 449–671. A. Chavasse, 'La Structure du Carême et les lectures des messes quadragésimales dans la liturgie romaine' in Maison-Dieu, 31 (1952, no. 3), pp. 76–119, and other specialized articles by this author; cf. J. A. Jungmann, S.J. 'Die Quadragesima in den Forschungen von Antoine Chavasse' in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, v (pt. 1; 1957), pp. 84–95. A. Chavasse in A. G. Martimort (ed.), L'Église en prière (ed. 3, 1965), pp. 720–32, with further refs. P. Radó, O.S.B., Enchiridion Liturgicum, ii (ed. 2, Rome, 1966), pp. 1145–1218, with bibl. and suppl. II/8° f. R. Sinker in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 972–7; H. Thurston in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 152–4; E. Vacandard in D.T.C., ii (1905), cols. 1724–50, and in D.A.C.L., ii (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2139–58, both s.v. 'Carême'; R. Pierret, O.S.B.–E. Flicoteaux, O.S.B., in Dict. Sp., ii (1953), cols. 136–52, also s.v. 'Carême'.

LEO I, St. (d. 461), 'Leo the Great', Pope from 440. Little is known of his early life beyond the fact that as a Roman deacon he opposed *Pelagianism. His Papacy is remarkable chiefly through the enormous extent to which he advanced and consolidated the influence of the Roman see. At a time of general disorder he sought to strengthen the Church by energetic central government, based on a firm belief that the supremacy of his see was of Divine and Scriptural authority, and he pressed his claims to jurisdiction in Africa, Spain, and Gaul. He also secured from Valentinian III a rescript which recognized his jurisdiction over all the W. provinces. Though his jurisdiction was not recognized in the E., he was drawn into E. affairs by the *Eutychian controversy, and his support was coveted by all parties. His legates spoke first at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where his *Tome (449) was accepted as a standard of Christological orthodoxy. In the political sphere he also much increased Papal prestige by persuading the Huns to withdraw beyond the Danube (452) and securing concessions when the Vandals took Rome (455). Doctrinally Leo was clear and forcible, but not profound. He knew no Greek. 143 genuine letters and 96 sermons have survived. The latter cover the whole ecclesiastical year; they provide important evidence of contemporary liturgical practices (e.g. the observance of *Ember Days) and reveal a remarkable grasp of liturgical principles. Both his letters and his sermons are distinguished by clarity of thought and purity of language. Mainly on grounds of style, many scholars have claimed to detect his hand in some of the prayers in the so-called *Leonine and *Gelasian Sacramentaries. He was declared a '*Doctor of the Church' by *Benedict XIV. Feast day, in the E., 18 Feb.; in the W., 10 Nov. (formerly 11 Apr.). See also Tome of Leo.

Works ed. by P. *Quesnel (2 vols., Paris, 1675; strongly *Gallicanist) and by P. and H. *Ballerini (3 vols., Venice, 1753–7, with replies to Quesnel's Disquisitions from the *Ultramontane standpoint); both deservedly famous Patristic editions. The latter is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, liv–lvi. Modern crit. ed. of Leo's Epistles in E. *Schwartz, A.C.O., II. 4 (1932). Eng. tr. of Letters by C. L. Feltoe (1896). Migne text of sermons repr., with Fr. tr. and notes by R. Dolle, O.S.B. (S.C., xxii, xlix, lxxiv, cc; [1947]–1973). C. *Gore, Leo the Great (n.d.; popular); W. *Bright, Sermons of S. Leo the Great on the Incarnation (1862; ed. 2, 1886); T. [G.] Jalland, The Life and Times of St. Leo the Great (1941). A. Regnier, S. Léon le Grand ('Les Saints'; 1910); S. Brezzi, S. Leone Magno (1947). A. P. Lang, Leo der Grosse und die Texte des Altgelasianums (1957). M. B. de Soos, O.S.B., Le Mystère liturgique d'après saint Léon le Grand (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxxiv; 1958). G. Hudon, O.M.I., La Perfection chrétienne d'après les sermons de saint Léon (Lex Orandi, xxvi; 1959). P. Stockmeier, Leo I des Grossen Beurteilung der kaiserlichen Religionspolitik (Münchener Theologische Studien, I. Historische Abteilung, xiv; 1959). W. Ullmann. 'Leo I and the Theme of Papal Primacy' in J.T.S., N.S., xi (1960), pp. 25–51. C. Lepelley, 'Saint Léon le Grand et la cité romaine' in Rev. S.R., xxxv (1961), pp. 130–50. Bardenhewer, iv, pp. 617–23; Altaner–Stuiber (1966), pp. 357–60, with bibl. H. *Lietzmann in P.W., xii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1962–73; P. *Batiffol in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 218–301; F. X. Murphy in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 637–9, s.v. See also works cited under Leonine Sacramentary.

LEO III, St. (d. 816), Pope. A Roman priest of humble birth and blameless character, he was unanimously elected Pope in 795. From the beginning of his reign he had to contend with the opposition of the ambitious relatives of his predecessor, *Hadrian I, who, during the procession of St. Mark's Day in 799, set on him and tried to mutilate him. After recovering from his wounds he fled to *Charlemagne, to whom he had sent the keys of the confessio of St. Peter in 795, and who now provided him with an escort back to Rome. In 800, Charles having come himself to investigate the charges brought against the Pope, Leo cleared himself by an oath of compurgation. On Christmas Day, two days later, he crowned Charles Roman Emperor, thus inaugurating a new age in Europe. At Charlemagne's instigation the Pope took severe measures against the Adoptianist heresy, but refused to accede to the Emperor's request to include the Filioque in the *Nicene Creed, in order not to alienate the Greeks. Several times he intervened in the differences between the Abps. of *Canterbury and the Anglo-Saxon kings, excommunicating the usurper of the throne of Kent, Eadbert Praen, and withdrawing the *pallium from *Lichfield. In the E. he encouraged the monks in their opposition to the Emp. Constantine VI, who had divorced his wife. After Charlemagne's death in 814, trouble began again for the Pope, who had to crush another conspiracy against himself and, shortly afterwards, revolts of nobles and peasants of the Campagna by the help of the Duke of Spoleto. Assisted by Charlemagne's rich gifts, Leo III did much to adorn the churches in Rome and other cities of Italy, and was an efficient and charitable ruler of the *Patrimony. He was canonized in 1673. Feast day, 12 June.

Some of his Correspondence and Privilegia are repr., mainly from J. D. *Mansi, in J. P. Migne, PL, cii, 1023–72; ten letters also ed. P. Jaffé, Bibliotheca Rerum Germanicarum, iv, Monumenta Carolina (Berlin, 1867), pp. 307–34. Id., Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, i (ed. 2 by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 307–16. L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 1–48. C. Bayet, 'L'Élection de Léon III, la révolte des Romains en 799 et ses conséquences' in Annuaire de la Faculté des Lettres de Lyon, i, fasc. 1 (1883), pp. 173–97; C. Huelsen, 'Osservazioni sulla biografia di Leone III nel "Liber Pontificalis" ' in Atti della Pontificia Academia Romana di Archeologia, Ser. 3, Rendiconti, i (1923), pp. 107–19; L. Wallach, 'The Genuine and Forged Oath of Pope Leo III' in Traditio, xi (1955), pp. 37–63; id., 'The Roman Synod of December 800 and the Alleged Trial of Leo III' in H.T.R., xlix (1956), pp. 123–42; W. Mohr, 'Karl der Grosse, Leo III. und der römische Aufstand von 799' in Bulletin Du Cange, xxx (1960), pp. 39–98. Mann, ii (1906), pp. 1–110. Fliche–Martin, vi (1937), pp. 148–203. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 304–12, s.v. 'Léon III'. See also bibl. to Charlemagne.

LEO IV, St. (d. 855), Pope. A native of Rome, he became cardinal-priest of the titulus of the *Quattro Coronati and in 847 was elected to succeed Sergius II. He at once set about repairing the damage done by the Saracens (846), putting a wall, 40 ft. high, round the part of Rome on the right of the Tiber (henceforward the '*Leonine City'); he restored many churches (*Vatican, *Lateran, St. Martin's, *Quattro Coronati); and he rebuilt and fortified ravaged cities (Porto, Subiaco). In 850 he crowned Louis, the son of Lothair, as co-Emperor. In 853 he is said to have 'hallowed' the young *Alfred as future King of England. Among those whom he sought to bring under his authority were *Anastasius Bibliothecarius (later anti-Pope), John, Abp. of Ravenna, *Hincmar of Reims and Nomenoe, Duke of Brittany. He was keenly interested in the liturgical chant and the *Asperges is ascribed to him. A terrible conflagration in the Borgo, said to have been extinguished in answer to Leo's prayers, is the subject of *Raphael's celebrated fresco in the Stanza dell'Incendio in the Vatican. Feast day, 17 July.

Various 'Epistolae et Decreta et Homilia' in J. P. Migne, PL, cxv, 629–84; fragg. of his Register ed. P. Ewald in N.A., v (1879), pp. 375–98, and ed. A. de Hirsch-Gereuth in M.G.H., Epistolae, v (1899), pp. 585–612. L.P. (Duchesne), ii, pp. 106–39. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (ed. 2, 1904), pp. 217–29. Mann, ii (1906), pp. 258–307. É. Amann in Fliche–Martin, vi (1931), pp. 281–8. Id. in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 312–16, s.v. 'Léon IV' with further bibl.

LEO IX, St. (1002–54), Pope from 1048. His original name was Bruno. A native of Alsace of noble birth, he was educated at Toul, where he was later successively canon and, from 1026, bishop. He became a keen supporter of the *Cluniac monastic reform. Through the influence of the Emp. Henry III, whose favour he had secured, he was elected Pope in 1048, and at once began to reform the Church from its decadence of a century and a half. In his pastoral zeal and personal humility, he did much to foster a wholly new ideal of the Papacy. At the Easter Synod of 1049 celibacy was enforced on all clergy from the rank of *subdeacon upwards and shortly afterwards Councils were held at Pavia, *Reims, and Mainz, at which decrees were promulgated against *simony and other abuses. In carrying out his programme Leo travelled extensively and was assisted by several able advisers, among them Hildebrand (*Gregory VII), *Humbert, and St. *Peter Damian. At the Easter Synod at Rome in 1050, *Berengar of Tours was condemned for his Eucharistic doctrine. The latter years of his pontificate were marred by defeat at the hands of the Normans at Civitate (18 June 1053) and the breach with the E. Church. He has a place in the *Roman Martyrology for 19 Apr.

Contemporary biography ed. A. Poncelet, 'Vie et miracles du Pape S. Léon IX', in Anal. Boll., xxv (1906), pp. 258–97, with further notes ib., xxvi (1907), pp. 302–4. O. Delarc, Un Pape alsacien. Essai historique sur saint Léon IX et son temps (1876); E. Martin, Saint Léon IX, 1002–1054 ('Les Saints'; 1904); L. Sittler–P. Stintzi, Saint Léon IX. Le Pape alsacien (Colmar [1950]). J. Drehmann, Leo IX und die Simonie (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters, ii; 1908); P. P. Brucker, L'Alsace et l'Église au temps du Pape Saint Léon IX (2 vols., 1889). H. Tritz, C.SS.R., 'Die hagiographischen Quellen zur Geschichte Papst Leos IX.' in Studi Gregoriani, iv (1952), pp. 191–364. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, i (S.S.L., vi; 1924), pp. 129–59. Mann, iv (1910), pp. 18–182, with reff. to sources. J. Choux in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, vii (1966), cols. 1292–1301, s.v. 'Leone IX'.

LEO X (1475–1521), Pope from 1513. Giovanni de' Medici was the second son of Lorenzo 'the Magnificent'. He was destined early for an ecclesiastical career and created a cardinal in 1489, but not invested with the insignia of office until he had completed three years' study of theology and canon law at Pisa. After the expulsion of his family from Florence in 1494 he led a wandering and almost Bohemian life in Germany, Holland, and France, returning to Rome in 1500. Towards the end of the pontificate of *Julius II, the affairs of the young cardinal began to improve. In 1511 he became legate in *Bologna and the Romagna, and in 1513, at the age of 38, he was elected Pope.

The high hopes which had been placed upon him were soon disappointed. Leo was, indeed, a person of moral life and sincerely religious, but he was pleasure-loving, easy-going, and far too liberal with money and offices. Within two years he had squandered the fortune left by Julius II and was in serious financial embarrassment. In politics, concern for the independence of the Papal states led him to pursue a shifting course. Eventually he concluded a concordat with Francis I of France (in place of the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges) which firmly established royal influence over the French Church (1516). He was completely blind to what was involved in the revolt of M. *Luther, whom he excommunicated in 1520.

Regesta ed. J. *Hergenröther (2 vols. only, to 16 Oct. 1515; Freiburg i.Br., 1884–91). Life by Paolo Giovio, Bp. of Nocera (Florence, 1548). W. Roscoe, The Life and Pontificate of Leo the Tenth (4 vols., 1805). É. Rodocanachi, Le Pontificat de Léon X (1931). F. S. Nitti, Leone X e la sua politica (1892). G. B. Picotti, La giovinezza di Leone X [1928]. G. Truc, Léon X et son siècle (1941). H. M. Vaughan, The Medici Popes (1908), pp. 1–284. Pastor, vii and viii (1908), with full bibl. K. Löffler in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 162–166, s.v.; G. Mollat in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 329–32, s.v. 'Léon X', with bibl.; G. B. Picotti in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 1150–5, s.v. 'Leone X'; J. G. Gallaher in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 643–5, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to Reformation.

LEO XIII (1810–1903), Pope from 1878. Vincenzo Gioacchino Pecci was a native of Carpineto. He was educated by the *Jesuits of Viterbo and later studied at the 'Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics' in Rome. Ordained priest in 1837, he was sent on a mission to Benevento in the next year. In 1843 he was appointed nuncio to Brussels, where he gained considerable diplomatic experience. On missions to London, *Paris, *Cologne, and many other European cities he became acquainted with modern social questions which were to play an important part in his pontificate. In 1846 *Gregory XVI made him Bp. of Perugia, and in 1853 he was created cardinal by *Pius IX. When, in 1860, Perugia passed under the secular power of Piedmont, the Cardinal opposed the new laws, esp. the suppression of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the institution of civil marriage, and the spoliation of the religious orders.

After his election to the Papacy in 1878, Leo outlined his programme of reconciling the Church with modern civilization in his first encyclical, 'Inscrutabili Dei Consilio' (21 Apr. 1878). This aim, largely a reversal of the policy of Pius IX, determined his attitude towards the great powers. He restored good relations with Germany after the Kulturkampf* by procuring the gradual abolition of the *May Laws in 1886 and 1887, and with Belgium after the victory of the Catholic party in 1884. In 1892 he established an Apostolic Delegation in Washington, and he renewed contacts with Russia and Japan. The improvement of relations with Gt. Britain found expression in King Edward VII's visit to the *Vatican in 1903. His policy failed, however, in the Italian question; the Pope remained the 'Prisoner of the Vatican', and the prohibition of the participation of Catholics in Italian politics was retained. In France, too, relations between Church and state deteriorated, and the Pope's last years were darkened by the increasingly anti-Catholic French legislation, esp. the *Associations Laws of 1901.

Leo XIII's pontificate was esp. important for the lead he gave on the burning political and social questions of his time. In some notable encyclicals he developed the Christian doctrine of the state on the basis of St. *Thomas Aquinas. In 'Immortale Dei' (1 Nov. 1885) he defined the respective spheres of spiritual and temporal power; 'Libertas Praestantissimum' (20 June 1888) deals with the freedom of citizens, and 'Graves de Communi' (18 Jan. 1901) with Christian democracy. He upheld the dignity and rights of the state, whether monarchy or republic, and emphasized the compatibility of Catholic teaching with a moderate democracy. His most important pronouncement on social questions was the famous '*Rerum Novarum' (q.v.) of 15 May 1891. Among his activities in the doctrinal sphere his injunction of the study of St. Thomas Aquinas by '*Aeterni Patris' (q.v.) of 4 Aug. 1879 had far-reaching consequences, leading to a great revival of Thomist studies. In 1883 he opened the Vatican archives to historical research; he encouraged the study of the Bible in the encyclical '*Providentissimus Deus' (18 Nov. 1893) and instituted the *Biblical Commission in 1902. He gave a limited measure of encouragement to the new methods of Biblical criticism, which ceased in the pontificate of his successor. His attitude to other Christian Churches is marked by the letter 'Praeclara' of 1894, in which he invited Greeks and Protestants of all shades to unite with Rome; but he rejected the conception of union as a federation of Churches in the encyclical '*Satis Cognitum' of 1896. In his Apostolic Letter 'Ad Anglos' (1895) he encouraged Anglican aspirations to union as promoted by Lord *Halifax and the *English Church Union, and in the same year appointed a commission for the investigation of *Anglican Ordinations. They were rejected as invalid in '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896). Leo XIII promoted the spiritual life of the Church in many encyclicals dealing with the redemptive work of Christ, the Eucharist, and devotion to the BVM and the *Rosary; and he sought to renew the spirit of St. *Francis by modifying the rules of the *Third Order in accordance with the requirements of his times. Following a revelation received by Mary von Droste-Vischering, religious of the Good Shepherd of Angers, he consecrated the whole human race to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus in the jubilee year 1900. He also encouraged the work of the missions, esp. the formation of a native clergy. In 1887 he condemned 40 propositions from the works of A. *Rosmini contradicting the doctrine of St. Thomas, and in 1899 he censured in 'Testem Benevolentiae' the teaching known as '*Americanism'.

Acta (22 vols., index and appendix, Rome, 1881–1905); Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, aliaque Acta Praecipua (8 vols., Bruges, 1887–1910). Carmina, Inscriptiones, Numismata, ed. J. Bach (Cologne, 1903). The basic life is that of C. de t'Serclaes (3 vols., Bruges, 1894–1906). The many others include those by M. Spahn (Munich, 1905), E. Soderini (3 vols., Milan, 1932–3; Eng. tr. of vols. i and ii, 1934–5), R. Fülöp-Miller (Leipzig, 1935, with bibl., pp. 206–15; Eng. tr., 1937), F. Hayward (Paris, 1937) and Lillian P. Wallace (Durham, N.C., 1966). E. Lecanuet, La Vie de l'Église sous Léon XIII (1930). G. Rossini (ed.), Aspetti della cultura cattolica nell'età di Leone XIII. Atti del convegno tenuto a Bologna il 27, 28, 29 dicembre 1960 (1961). G. Jarlot, S.J., Doctrine pontificale et histoire. L'Enseignement social de Léon XIII, Pie X et Benoît XV vu dans son ambiance historique (Studia Socialia, ix; 1964), pp. 17–257. R. F. Esposito, S.S.P., Leone XIII et l'oriente cristiano [1960]. U. Benigni in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 167–73, s.v.; G. Goyau in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 334–59, s.v. 'Léon XIII'; E. Martire, S.J., in E.C., viii (1951), cols. 1158–63, s.v. 'Leone XIII'; J. M. Mayeur in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 646–9, s.v., all with bibl. See also bibl. to Anglican Orders.

LEO III (c. 675–741), Byzantine Emperor, usually 'the Isaurian', but more correctly the Syrian. Born at Germanicia in Commagene, he won distinction as a soldier and became commander of the eastern army under Anastasius II. In 717 he was elected Emperor in place of the usurper Theodosius III. In the same year began the siege of *Constantinople by the Saracens, ending with Leo's victory in 718, which saved Europe from Islam. After the Mohammedan danger had been removed he effected many administrative reforms, and in 726 issued a new code of law, the 'Ecloge'. He also introduced reforms in the religious sphere. From 726 to 729 he published a number of edicts against image worship and thus initiated the *Iconoclastic Controversy. In 730 he replaced the Patriarch *Germanus I, an upholder of images, by Anastasius, against popular opinion, which was supported by the monks and the majority of Byzantine theologians. The defence of the veneration of images by the Popes, *Gregory II and Gregory III, in letters and synodal decrees caused the Emperor to annex the Papal Patrimonies in Southern Italy and the province of Illyria; he failed, however, to abolish image worship. In 740 he won another decisive victory over the Arabs, and thus at his death left the Empire well consolidated.

Eng. tr. of the Ecloge by E. H. Freshfield, with full introd. (Cambridge, 1926). K. Schenk, Kaiser Leon III. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Bilderstreits (Inaugural Diss., Halle, 1880); id., 'Kaiser Leons III Walten im Innern' in B.Z., v (1896), pp. 257–310. G. Findlay, A History of Greece (ed. H. F. Tozer), ii (1877), pp. 13–44. A. A. Vasiliev, History of the Byzantine Empire, 324–1453 (Eng. tr. from Russian, ed. 2, Oxford, 1952), pp. 234–59. M. V. Anastos in C.Med.H., iv (pt. 1; 1966), pp. 61–72. See also bibl. to Iconoclastic Controversy.

LEO VI (866–912), currently known as Leo the Philosopher or Leo Sapiens, Byzantine Emperor. Succeeding Basil I in 886, he opened his reign by banishing the Patr. of Constantinople, *Photius, to a monastery and installing his own brother Stephen in his place, thus restoring normal relations with the W. In the disputes that followed his fourth marriage he appealed from the Patriarch, now Nicolas Mysticus, to the Pope, who recognized the validity of the marriage against the Patriarch, whom Leo then deposed in favour of Euthymius I. The extensive writings of the Emperor contain many novellae and other items of ecclesiastical legislation, two homilies attacking the double procession of the Holy Ghost, and hymns and treatises in honour of the BVM.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG, cvii; further panegyrics ed. by Akakios, monk of Mt. *Athos (Athens, 1868); funeral oration of his father ed. A. Vogt–I. Hausherr, S.J. (Orientalia Christiana, vol. xxvi, No. 1 (fasc. 77); 1932); 'Problemata' ed. A. Dain (Paris, 1935). Standard ed. of his Novellae, with Fr. tr., by P. Noailles–A. Dain (ib., 1944). H. J. W. Tillyard, 'The Morning Hymns of the Emperor Leo' in Annual of the British School at Athens, xxx (1932), pp. 86–108, xxxi (1933), pp. 115–47, incl. text. C. Diehl, Figures byzantines (1906), ch. 8, 'Les Quatre Mariages de l'Empereur Léon VI', pp. 181–215. L. Petit, 'Notes sur les homélies de Léon le Sage' in É.O., ii (1899–1900), pp. 245–9; D. Serruys, 'Les Homélies de Léon le Sage' in B.Z., xii (1903), pp. 167–70. S. Salaville, A.A., in D.T.C., ix (1926), cols. 365–94, s.v. 'Léon VI le Sage'.

LEODEGAR, St., Ledger, or Leger (c. 616–79), Bp. of Autun. He was made archdeacon at an early age by his uncle, Bp. Dido of Poitiers, and in 653 became Abbot of St. Maxentius, where he introduced the Rule of St. *Benedict. In 663 he became Bp. of Autun and later imposed the Rule on all the religious houses in his diocese. He prob. also ordered his clergy to adopt the *Athanasian Creed, possibly as a safeguard against the *Monothelite heresy. After the death of Clotaire III in 670 Leodegar became involved in the struggles between the claimants to the throne, in the course of which he was successively banished, blinded (676), and tortured, and finally beheaded by his opponents. Though killed in a political cause he was soon regarded as a saint and martyr, and his cultus became popular throughout France. Feast day, 2 (occasionally 3) Oct.

Two lives, formerly believed to be nearly contemporary, but prob. much later though based on an early life now lost, pr., with full comm., in AA.SS., Oct. I (1765), pp. 355–491. Also ed., with attempted reconstruction of original life, by B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, v (1910), pp. 249–362. Id., 'Die älteste Vita Leudegarii' in N.A., xvi (1891), pp. 565–96. [Fr.] Camerlinck, O.P., Saint Léger, évêque d'Autun ('Les Saints', 1910). A. Lesage, Le Fondateur de Liége. Le martyr saint Léger, évêque d'Autun. Sa première sépulture à Saint-Trond (1919). H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2, 1929), cols. 2460–92, s.v. 'Léger'.

LEONARD, St. (6th cent.), hermit. Despite his great popularity in the Middle Ages, nothing was heard of him before the 11th cent. Acc. to the 'Vita' (c. 1050), he was a Frankish nobleman of the court of King *Clovis, whom St. *Remigius converted to Christianity. He lived in a cell at Noblac, nr. Limoges, and later founded a monastery. His cult spread in the 12th cent. to England, France, Italy, and Germany, and many churches were dedicated to him. He is the special patron of prisoners and also of peasants and of the sick. Feast day, 6 Nov.

Excerpts of the Vita ed. B. Krusch in M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, iii (1896), pp. 394–9; full text in AA.SS., Nov. III (1910), pp. 149–55, with comm. by A. Poncelet, S.J., pp. 139–49, and other material pp. 155–209. F. Arbellot, Vie de saint Léonard, solitaire en Limousin, ses miracles et son culte (1883). J. A. Aich, Leonard, der grosse Patron des Volkes (Vienna, 1928).

LEONARDO DA VINCI (1452–1519), Italian painter and scholar. The natural son of a Florentine notary and a peasant woman, he became a pupil of A. del Verrocchio at Florence, where he stayed till 1482. From 1483 to 1499 he lived at Milan, and during this period executed some of his best-known works, among them the Virgin of the Rocks and the Last Supper (1495–8), the latter done on the refectory wall of the Dominican convent of Sta Maria delle Grazie. The originality of the Last Supper lay in that it depicted not the institution of the Eucharist but the moment of the announcement of the betrayal, the quiet superiority of the sublime figure of Christ dominating a scene filled with human emotions and agitation. When the French invaded Milan (1499), Leonardo left and began to lead a nomadic life mainly devoted to scientific and scholarly work. In this he covered an enormous field of knowledge, and made creative contributions to such different branches as geological research and the construction of guns and even air-machines. To this period belong his St. Anne, Mona Lisa, and St. John the Baptist. In 1517 he went to France, where he died. With his complete mastery of technique, Leonardo introduced the style of the High Renaissance.

Reproductions of his pictures (in black and white) ed. H. Bodmer (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, xxxix [1931]); smaller collection of reproductions (incl. some colour plates) ed. L. Goldscheider (Phaidon Press, London, 1943). Drawings ed., with introd. and notes, by A. E. Popham (London, 1946). K. [M.] Clark, A Catalogue of the Drawings of Leonardo da Vinci in the Collection of his Majesty the King at Windsor Castle (2 vols., with reproductions, 1935; ed. 2, with the assistance of C. Pedretti, 3 vols., 1969). Literary Works, with Eng. tr., ed. J. P. Richter (London, 1883; ed. 2 by J. P. Richter–I. A. Richter, 2 vols., 1939). Facsimile reproduction of his MSS., with transcription and Fr. tr., by M. C. Ravaisson-Mollien (6 vols., Paris, 1881–91). The Notebooks of Leonardo da Vinci tr. into English by E. MacCurdy (2 vols., London, 1906; ed 2, 1938); selections ed. I. A. Richter (World's Classics, dxxx; 1952). General studies include those by O. Sirén (Stockholm, 1911; Eng. tr., 1916), E. Hildebrandt (Berlin, 1927), E. McCurdy (London, 1933), K. [M.] Clark (Ryerson Lectures for 1936; Cambridge, 1939), and L. Heydenreich (Berlin, 1943; revised ed., 2 vols., Basle, 1954; Eng. tr., 1954). E. Solmi, Scritti vinciani (1924). I. B. Hart, The Mechanical Investigations of Leonardo da Vinci (1925). J. P. McCurrich, Leonardo da Vinci, the Anatomist (Carnegie Institution of Washington Publication, ccccxi; 1930). Lorna Lewis, Leonardo the Inventor and Pioneer (1937). E. Verga, Bibliografia vinciana, 1493–1930 (2 vols., 1931). S. Colvin in E.B. (ed. 11), xvi (1911), pp. 444–54, s.v.; G. Castelfranco in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 1120–33, s.v., both with bibl.

LEONINE CITY (Lat. Civitas Leonina; Ital. Città Leonina). The part of Rome on the right bank of the Tiber, fortified with a wall by Pope *Leo IV in 848–52. Besides the *Vatican, it contains the Castello S. Angelo.

LEONINE PRAYERS. In the Roman rite, the prayers which, until 1964, were recited in the vernacular by priest and people at the end of Mass. Their ultimate form (three *'Hail Mary's, the Salve Regina*, a collect Deus refugium nostrum, an invocation of St. *Michael) went back to *Leo XIII. In 1859 Pius IX had introduced for local use similar prayers for the preservation of the Papal States, which continued to be said even after the end of the temporal power in 1870; in 1884 Leo XIII extended their use to the whole world, with special reference to the last stages of the Kulturkampf; and in 1886 he reissued them in a revised form, adding the invocation of St. Michael. A final optional petition ('Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, have mercy on us', three times) was added by *Pius X in 1904. After various curtailments they were suppressed on 26 Sept. 1964.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), ii, pp. 565–70; Eng. tr., ii, pp. 455–9.

LEONINE SACRAMENTARY. The earliest surviving book of *Mass prayers acc. to the Roman Rite. It exists in a single MS. of the early 7th cent., preserved in the Chapter Library at *Verona (cod. lxxxv), and was first published in 1735 by J. Bianchini. Its attribution to Pope *Leo I (d. 461) is quite arbitrary, though certain of its prayers may well be Leo's compositions. It is not a *sacramentary in the proper sense, but a private collection of *libelli; it drew on Roman material of the 5th or 6th cent., but was put together outside Rome. It possesses no *Ordinary or *Canon of the Mass, and contains only the variable parts of the liturgy. It is arranged according to the civil year, but three quires at the beginning (covering 1 Jan.–14 Apr.) are lost.

J. Bianchini, Vitae Romanorum Pontificum, IV (1735), pp. xii–lvii. Bianchini's text repr. by L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748) and J. A. *Assemani (Rome, 1754); rev. text by P. and H. *Ballerini in S. Leonis Opera, ii (Venice, 1756), cols. 1–160, repr. J. P. Migne, PL, lv. 21–156. Modern edd. by C. L. Feltoe (Cambridge, 1896) and by L. C. Mohlberg, O.S.B., and others, Sacramentarium Veronense (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, i; Rome, 1955). P. Bruylants, 'Concordance verbale du sacramentaire léonien' in Archivum Latinitatis Medii Aevi, Nos. 18–19 (Brussels, 1945–8). Fundamental is A. Stuiber, Libelli Sacramentorum Romani (Theophaneia, 6, Bonn, 1950). Other important recent studies include B. *Capelle, O.S.B., 'Messes du pape S. Gélase dans le sacramentaire léonien' in R. Bén., lvi (1945–6), pp. 12–41; id., 'Retouches gélasiennes dans le sacramentaire léonien', ib., lxi (1951), pp. 3–14; C. Callewaert, 'Saint Léon le Grand et les textes du Léonien' in Sacris Erudiri, i (1948), pp. 35–132; C. Coebergh, O.S.B., 'S. Gélase Ier, auteur principal du soi-disant sacramentaire léonien' in E.L., lxiv (1950), pp. 214–37, and lxv (1951), pp. 171–81; E. Dekkers, O.S.B., 'Autour de l'œuvre liturgique de S. Léon le Grand' in Sacris Erudiri, x (1958), pp. 363–98; D. M. Hope, The Leonine Sacramentary. A Reassessment of its Nature and Purpose (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971). F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2549–73.

LEONTIUS OF BYZANTIUM (6th cent.), anti-*Monophysite theologian. He is prob. to be distinguished from the Scythian monk of the same name who took a prominent part in the *Theopaschite controversy and with whom, until recently, he has been identified; on the other hand, he seems to be the same person as the *Origenist Leontius mentioned in *Cyril of Scythopolis's 'Vita S. Sabae' (so E. *Schwartz). Despite his theological importance, virtually nothing is known of his life. He was a staunch upholder of the *Chalcedonian Christology, which he interpreted on Cyrilline principles, introducing the notion of the *Enhypostasia

(q.v.). In his polemic he made full use of contemporary philosophy (*Aristotelianism in logic, *Neoplatonism in psychology). His chief theological work is his 'Libri III contra Nestorianos et Eutychianos' (c. 543–4), of which Bk. II took the form of a dialogue between an Orthodox and an *Aphthartodocetist, and Bk. III is directed esp. against *Theodore of Mopsuestia. He also wrote two works against *Severus of Antioch ('Solutio Argumentorum Severi' and 'Triginta Capitula adv. Nestorium'). He is prob. also the author (despite some modern doubts) of Adversus Fraudes Apollinistarum, a work of considerable critical acumen on the forgeries of the *Apollinarians (q.v.).

Of other works traditionally ascribed to him, the 'De Sectis' (perh. to be ascribed to *Theodore of Raïthu) is certainly not his, while the 'Adv. Nestorianos' and 'Contra Monophysitas' are to be assigned to a hitherto unrecognized 'Leontius of Jerusalem'.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG, lxxxvi, 1185–2016. F. *Loofs, Das Leben und die polemischen Werke des Leontius von Byzantium (1887); J. P. Jungklas, Leontius von Byzanz (Paderborn, 1908); V. Grumel, A.A., in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 400–26. All these largely superseded by E. Schwartz, Kyrillos von Skythopolis (T.U., xlix, Hft. 2; 1939), p. 388, n. 2; M. Richard, 'Léonce de Jérusalem et Léonce de Byzance' in Mélanges de Science religieuse, i (1944), pp. 35–88; id., 'Léonce de Byzance, était-il Origéniste?' in Revue des Études Byzantines, v (1947), pp. 31–66; and B. *Altaner, 'Der griechische Theologe Leontius und Leontius der skythische Mönch' in Th.Q., cxxviii (1947), pp. 147–65. S. Rees, 'The Literary Activity of Leontius of Byzantium' in J.T.S., N.S. xix (1968), pp. 229–42. S. Otto, Person und Subsistenz. Die philosophische Anthropologie des Leontios von Byzanz. Ein Beitrag zur spätantiken Geistesgeschichte (Munich, 1968). D. B. Evans, Leontius of Byzantium. An Origenist Christology (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, xiii; 1970). B. Daley, 'The Origenism of Leontius of Byzantium' in J.T.S., N.S., xxvii (1976), pp. 333–69. E. Peterson in E.C., vii (1951), col. 1168 f., s.v. 'Leonzio di Bisanzio'.

LEPANTO, Battle of. The naval battle, fought on 7 Oct. 1571, in which the 'Christian League' created chiefly by the efforts of *Pius V between Venice and Spain, with help from the Papal states and Genoa, decisively beat the Turks, who were threatening W. Christendom. Lepanto, on the northern entrance to the Gulf of Corinth, is the ancient Naupactos. In thanksgiving for the victory, the Pope instituted a special feast of the BVM on 7 Oct., which since 1573 has been kept as the Feast of the *Rosary (q.v.).

LEPORIUS (early 5th cent.), monk. Probably a native of Trier (so G. *Morin), he issued a letter in which he taught the essential similarity between Christ's moral experience and our own, and other doctrines akin to *Pelagianism and early *Nestorianism. Rebuked by several of the bishops of S. Gaul, Leporius and his followers fled to Africa, where he was brought into contact with St. *Augustine (Ep. 219, ad Proculum et Cylinnium); and he publicly confessed his error at Carthage in a 'Libellus Emendationis', subscribed by *Aurelius, Bp. of Carthage, and Augustine.

'Libellus' first publd. by J. *Sirmond, S.J., Opuscula Dogmatica Veterum Quinque Scriptorum (Paris, 1630), pp. 1–34; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, xxxi, 1221–30. G. Morin, O.S.B., 'Notes d'ancienne littérature chrétienne: v, Solution d'un problème d'histoire littéraire: le diocèse d'origine de Leporius, théologien gaulois du Ve siècle' in R. Bén., xiv (1897), p. 102 f. Bardenhewer, iv, 542 f. H. W. Phillott in D.C.B., iii (1882), p. 702 f.; É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 434–40.

LE QUIEN, MICHEL (1661–1733), patristic scholar. In 1681 he entered the Dominican Order at Paris, where he spent most of his life. His two principal works were (1) Oriens Christianus (published posthumously [1740] in 3 vols.), in which he collected a vast amount of material on the history of the E. Churches, and (2) his edition of the works of St. *John of Damascus (1712), still the standard text. His other writings included La Nullité des ordinations anglicanes (2 vols., 1725) and La Nullité des ordinations anglicanes démontrée de nouveau (2 vols., 1730), both in answer to P. *Courayer's book on the subject.

Quétif-Échard, ii (1721), pp. 808–10. S. Salaville, A.A., 'IIe Centenaire de Michel Le Quien' in É.O., xxxii (1933), pp. 257–66. J. Carreyre in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 441–3, s.v., with bibl.

LÉRINS. The ancient name of two islands off Cannes in the Mediterranean, on the smaller of which (formerly 'Lerinum', now 'St.-Honorat') a celebrated abbey was founded by St. *Honoratus c. 410. It was the nursery of a long line of scholars and bishops, among them St. *Hilary of Arles, St. *Vincent (author of the Commonitorium), St. *Lupus (Bp. of Troyes), and St. *Caesarius of Arles. Its religious history continued unbroken down to 1788, when it was secularized. Since 1871 a *Cistercian convent has been re-established on the island.

L. Alliez, Histoire du monastère de Lérins (2 vols., 1862); H. Moris, L'Abbaye de Lérins. Histoire et monuments (1909); A. C. Cooper-Marsdin, The History of the Islands of the Lerins (Cambridge, 1913; uncritical); L. Cristiani, Lérins et ses fondateurs (Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1946). V. Barralis, Chronologia Sanctorum et aliorum Virorum illustrium ac Abbatum Sacrae Insulae Lerinensis (Lyons, 1613). 'Cartulary' of Lérins, ed. H. Moris and E. Blanc (2 vols., Paris, 1883–1905); reconstructed 'Bullarium', ed. L. H. Labande in Annales de la Société des Lettres, Sciences et Arts des Alpes Maritimes, xxiv (1922–3), pp. 117–98. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., viii (pt. 2, 1929), cols. 2596–627, with full bibl.

LESLIE, CHARLES (1650–1722), *Nonjuring divine. After studying law at *Trinity College, Dublin, he was ordained in 1680 and presented in 1686 to the chancellorship of Connor. Refusal to take the oaths at the Revolution of 1688 deprived him of his benefice, and in 1689 he withdrew to London. Here he continued an ardent Jacobite and, after the failure of the 1715 rebellion, he joined the Pretender and accompanied him to Rome. His voluminous writings are learned and ranked highly as controversial productions in his day. The most celebrated was his attack on the *Deist philosophy—A Short and Easy Method with the Deists, wherein the Certainty of the Christian Religion is demonstrated by Infallible Proof from Four Rules, which are incompatible to any Imposture that ever yet has been, or that can possibly be (ed. 1, 1698 [with a slightly variant title]; ed. 2, 1699). Leslie's other works included The Snake in the Grass (1696), against the *Quakers; Gallienus Redivivus (1695), an important historical authority for the facts of the Glencoe massacre; and The Case Stated between the Church of Rome and the Church of England (1713), in which the strong anti-Roman sentiments which, despite his political allegiance, he retained till his death found expression.

Collected ed. of his Theological Works (2 vols., London, 1721); fuller ed. (7 vols., Oxford, 1832), with life of author from Biographia Britannica and list of other works, vol. i, pp. i–xii. R. J. Leslie, Life and Writings of Charles Leslie (1885). J. M. Rigg in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 77–83.

LESLIE, JOHN (1527–96), Bp. of Ross. Born at Kingussie, south of Inverness, he was educated at King's College, Aberdeen. In 1549 he studied theology at *Paris, and later canon and civil law at Poitiers. Returning to Scotland in 1554 he was ordained priest in 1558, and in 1559 received the parsonage of Oyne. He strongly opposed the introduction of the Reformation and in 1561 took part in a disputation at Edinburgh with J. *Knox and J. Willocks (d. 1585). Later in the year he went to France, where he visited *Mary Queen of Scots at Vitry, being one of her chief supporters. In 1562 he was appointed professor of canon law at Aberdeen, and in 1566 Bp. of Ross. In 1569 he became Mary's ambassador to *Elizabeth, at the same time keeping up communications between her and her adherents in Scotland. In 1571 he was imprisoned at *Ely and then in the Tower for assisting Mary in her projected marriage with the Duke of Norfolk, but was set free in 1573 on condition that he left Great Britain. Proceeding to Paris and Rome he tried to arrange the capture and Catholic education of the young James VI (later *James I of England) and to further other plans in the Catholic interest. In 1578 he published at Rome his De Origine, Moribus, et Rebus Gestis Scotorum, which had been partly written originally in Scottish and intended for Queen Mary. The latter part is an important authority for contemporary history. In 1579 he was appointed suffragan bishop and vicar-general of Rouen, and in 1593 Bp. of Coutances; but unable to reach his diocese he spent his last years with the *Augustinian Canons at Guirtenburg, near Brussels. His other writings include A Defence of the Honour of . . . Mary, Queen of Scotland (1569) under the pseudonym 'Eusebius Dicæophile'; De Illustrium Feminarum in Republica Administranda Authoritate Libellus (1580); and De Titulo et Jure Mariae Scot. Reg., quo Regni Angliae Successionem sibi juste Vindicat (1580).

Contemporary Eng. version of the latter part of his De Origine, Moribus et Rebus Gestis Scotorum, from the reign of James II (1436), ed. for the Bannatyne Club, xxxix (1830); a Scottish version of the history made by Fr. James Dalrymple in 1596, ed. by E. G. Cody, O.S.B., for the Scottish Text Society (2 vols., 1888–95). His 'Narrative of the Progress of Events in Scotland, 1562–1571', is also printed in W. Forbes-Leith, S.J. (ed.), Narratives of Scottish Catholics under Mary Stuart and James VI (1885), pp. 85–126; a letter from him to Cardinal de Cosmo (June 1579), ib., pp. 134–40. His Diary from Apr. 11 to Oct. 16, 1571, in The Bannatyne Miscellany, iii (1855), pp. 111–56. Short life printed at Brussels, 1596, repr. in J. Anderson (ed.), Collections Relating to the History of Mary Queen of Scotland, i (1727), pp. 1–19; Eng. tr. in vol. iii (1727), pp. vii–xx. T. F. Henderson in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 93–9.

LESSER ENTRANCE, The (Gk. ἡ μικρὰ εἴσοδος). In the E. Church, the procession at the *Liturgy with the *Gospel Book. In origin it marks the first intervention in the service of the Bishop, who at this point is fetched from the nave. The procession now takes place whether or not the Bishop is present in person. See also Greater Entrance.

LESSING, GOTTHOLD EPHRAIM (1729–81), one of the principal figures of the Aufklärung*. As the eldest son of a *Lutheran pastor he was intended to study theology, but soon took up a literary career and made himself a name as a dramatic and art critic and a playwright. In his later years he was chiefly concerned with theological and philosophical problems, his interest receiving a strong stimulus from the fragments of H. S. *Reimarus which Lessing edited (1774–8). He saw the essence of religion in a purely humanitarian morality independent of all historical revelation, and embodied his views in the principal figure of the play Nathan der Weise (1779), an ideal Jew of serene tolerance, benevolence, and generosity, conceived on the lines of enlightened rationalism. His chief theoretical writings on the same subject are Ernst und Falk (1778–80) and Die Erziehung des Menschengeschlechts (1780), in which he laid the foundations of the Protestant Liberalism that was to hold sway in Germany throughout the 19th cent. He rejected Christianity as an historical religion on the ground that 'the accidental truths of history can never become the proof of necessary truths of reason', and that the disinterested search for truth was intrinsically preferable to its possession.

Besides publishing the remains of Reimarus, the so-called Wolfenbüttel Fragments* (7 parts, 1774–8, q.v.), Lessing himself made original studies in Gospel origins. In his Neue Hypothese über die Evangelisten als blosse menschliche Geschichtsschreiber betrachtet (1788) he argued that an Aramaic original underlay St. *Matthew's Gospel, and that this was known to, and supplemented by, Mk. and Lk. He also discovered, in 1770, an incomplete MS. of *Berengar's famous treatise on the *Eucharist (De Sacra Coena), the text of which was first publd. by A. F. and F. T. Vischer in 1834.

The collected edd. of Lessing's works include those by K. *Lachmann (13 vols., Berlin, 1838–40), F. Muncker (23 vols., Stuttgart, 1886–1924), and J. Petersen–W. von Olshausen (25 vols., Berlin, 1925–9, incl., as vols. xx–xxiii, the 2nd ed. of his 'Theological Writings' ed. L. Zscharnack, 4 vols., Berlin, 1929). Eng. tr. of selected Theological Writings by H. Chadwick (1956), with introd., pp. 9–49. Lives by C. G. Lessing (3 vols., Berlin, 1793–5) and E. Schmidt (2 vols., Berlin, 1884–92). Lives in English by J. Sime (2 vols., London, 1877), Helen Zimmern (ib., 1878), and T. W. Rolleston (ib., 1889). W. Oehlke, Lessing und seine Zeit (2 vols., 1919). H. B. Garland, Lessing. The Founder of Modern German Literature (Cambridge, 1937; ed. 2, London, 1962). J. G. Robertson, Lessing's Dramatic Theory (1939). H. E. Allison, Lessing and the Enlightenment. His Philosophy of History and its Relation to Eighteenth-Century Thought (Ann Arbor, 1966). L. Zscharnack, Lessing und Semler. Ein Beitrag zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Rationalismus und der kritischen Theologie (1905). F. *Loofs, Lessings Stellung zum Christentum (Lecture before Univ. of Halle, 1910, with bibl.). E. Zeller, 'Lessing als Theolog' in H.Z., xxiii (1870), pp. 342–83; repr. in Zeller's Vorträge und Abhandlungen, ii (1877), pp. 283–327. A. Cozzi, Lessing teologo (Naples, 1960). Überweg, iii, pp. 470, 476–481, 706–8. J. Sime–J. G. Robertson in E.B. (ed. 11), xvi (1911), pp. 496–9, s.v.

LESSIUS, LEONHARD (1554–1623), *Jesuit theologian. A native of Brecht, near Antwerp, he taught philosophy at *Douai from 1574 to 1581 and at Louvain from 1585 to 1600, and studied for a time under F. *Suarez at Rome. Among his pupils was *Cornelius à Lapide. He took a prominent part in the controversies then raging on the nature of grace (see De Auxiliis), defending a position closely akin to that of L. *Molina, with the result that in 1587 M. *Baius secured the censure by the Louvain Theological Faculty of 34 theses taken from his writings. His principal work on the subject of grace was his De gratia efficaci (Antwerp, 1610). He also wrote extensively on moral theology, his De justitia et jure (1605) being one of the earliest treatises to investigate the ethics of economics.

Opuscula Varia (Paris, 1626). Works listed in Sommervogel, iv (1893), cols. 1726–51, and ix (1900), col. 588 f. L. Scotts, De Vita et Moribus R.P. Leonardi Lessii Liber (Paris, 1644). K. van Sull, S.J., Leonardus Lessius, 1554–1623 (Wetteren, 1923; French ed., Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, xxi; 1930). A. Ampe, S.J., 'Marginalia Lessiana' in Ons Geestelijk Erf, xxviii (1954), pp. 329–73, xxix (1955), pp. 3–29, with summary in Lat.; L. Ceyssens, O.F.M., 'Marginalia Lessio-Janseniana' in Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis, 3e Reeks, x (1958), pp. 95–142 [in French]. J. de Ghellinck, S.J., in C.E., ix (1910), p. 192 f.

LETTERS OF BUSINESS. The document issued by the Crown from time to time since the reign of *Anne to the English *Convocations permitting them to prepare canons on a prescribed subject. Without these Letters any such action was of doubtful legality. The Letters did not dispense the Convocations from the necessity of obtaining a further licence before any canons so prepared might be enacted. Canons are now made by the General *Synod and Letters of Business are no longer required.

LETTERS COMMENDATORY. The document issued by an ecclesiastical superior to one of his clerical subjects when travelling, testifying that he is of irreproachable morals and doctrine.

LETTERS DIMISSORY. In the C of E the licence which the Bishop of a diocese where a candidate for Holy Orders has his title issues to the Bishop of another diocese to perform the ministerial act of Ordination when the former Bishop finds it inconvenient or impossible to ordain the candidate. By Canon C 5 of the 1969 Canons, the Bishop who ordains must require the production of such letters from the candidate. They are to be distinguished from 'Letters of Request', which ask the ordaining bishop to examine as well as to ordain the candidate. The practice of providing a candidate with such Letters directed to 'any Bishop' (literae dimissoriae ad omnes) was formerly common, despite the abuse to which it was open; and, though now obsolete, it still appears to be legal. During the vacancy of a see the issue of such Letters is vested in the guardian of the spiritualities.

LETTERS OF ORDERS. A certificate issued to those who have been ordained, bearing the seal and signature of the officiating bishop. The Anglican Canon C 10 (of the 1969 Canons) requires that 'Letters of Orders or other sufficient evidence' of Ordination be shown to the bishop before *institution to a benefice, except when the presentee was ordained by the instituting bishop. Formerly Letters of Orders were the normal means of proving a claim to *benefit of clergy.

LETTERS TESTIMONIAL. The certificate of 'good life and conversation from three priests, of whom one at least must be beneficed' and from 'any college or hall in any university, or . . . any theological college' in which he may have resided, which a candidate for ordination in the C of E is required to present to the ordaining bishop by Canon C 6 of the 1969 Canons.

LEUCIUS. The name of a (real or fictitious) companion of St. *John the Apostle, to whom inter alia the apocryphal 'Acts of *John' is attributed. From the time of *Photius (Bibl. cod. 114), he was generally known as Leucius Charinus.

LEUTHOLF, HIOB. See Ludolf, Hiob.

LEVELLERS, 17th cent. English political and religious party. They were opposed to kingship and advocated complete freedom in religion and a wide extension of the suffrage. The name, to which they themselves objected, first occurs in 1647. Mainly supported by the Army, they found their chief leader in J. Lilburne, who, in The Case of the Army Truly Stated (1647), urged the dissolution of Parliament and its re-establishment on democratic lines. In 1648 Lilburne was temporarily imprisoned and his party was treated by O. *Cromwell with marked suspicion. After the execution of *Charles I (1649), they resumed their agitation, demanding the dissolution of the Council of State and a reformed Parliament; and Lilburne and other leaders were again arrested. Soon afterwards they lost in importance, though they tried to make contact with *Charles II in exile. By the *Restoration (1660) they had almost completely disappeared.

W. Haller and G. Davies (ed.), The Leveller Tracts (New York, 1944); D. M. Wolfe (ed.), Leveller Manifestoes of the Puritan Revolution (1944); W. Haller (ed.), Tracts on Liberty in the Puritan Revolution (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, xviii; 3 vols., New York, 1934–7); A. S. P. Woodhouse (ed.), Puritanism and Liberty. Being the Army Debates (1646–9) from the Clarke Manuscripts with Supplementary Documents (1939). T. C. Pease, The Leveller Movement. A Study in the historical and political theory of the English Great Civil War (1916); M. James, Social Problems and Policy during the Puritan Revolution, 1640–1660 (1930), passim; J. Holorenshaw, The Levellers and the English Revolution (The New People's Library, xxi, 1939); W. Schenk, The Concern for Social Justice in the Puritan Revolution (1948); D. B. Robertson, The Religious Foundations of Leveller Democracy (New York, 1951); J. Frank, The Levellers. A History of the Writings of Three Seventeenth-Century Social Democrats: John Lilburne, Richard Overton, William Walwyn (Cambridge, Mass., 1955); H. N. Brailsford, The Levellers and the English Revolution, ed. [J. E.] C. Hill (1961); C. B. Macpherson, The Political Theory of Possessive Individualism. Hobbes to Locke (Oxford, 1962), pp. 107–59. Pauline [E.] Gregg, Free-born John. A Biography of John Lilburne (1961).

LEVI, SON OF ALPHAEUS. The tax-gatherer whom the Lord called to be one of His disciples (Mk. 2. 14). He is apparently to be identified with St. *Matthew (Mt. 9. 9; 10. 3).

LEVIATHAN. The animal referred to by this name in Job 41 and Ps. 74. 14 is probably the crocodile. On the other hand, the leviathan of Ps. 104. 26 is a sea animal, perhaps the whale. The name was transferred mythologically to the devil (cf. Job. 3. 8 [RV], Is. 27. 1). T. *Hobbes gave his famous treatise (1651) on 'the matter, form and power of a Commonwealth, ecclesiastical and civil' this title on the ground that the commonwealth was 'that great Leviathan, or rather, to speak more reverently . . . that mortal god, to which we owe under the immortal God, our peace and defence'.

LEVIRATE MARRIAGE (Lat. levir, 'husband's brother'), the marriage of a man with his brother's widow. The Mosaic legislation (Deut. 25. 5–10) required that if a man died, leaving his widow without offspring, his surviving brother should marry the widow so that he might not be without descendants. Reference is made to the practice in the question on the *Resurrection put by the *Sadducees (Mk. 12. 19, &c.); but it seems probable that by NT times the requirement was already a dead letter. In the *Talmud, the subject is dealt with in the tractate 'Jebamoth'. For canonical legislation, see Affinity.

LEVITES. One of the twelve tribes, descended from Levi, one of the sons of *Jacob, and acc. to the Biblical account specially set apart as ministers of the sanctuary. Some modern scholars, however, have doubted the existence of such a tribe and have held that the term 'Levite' designated primarily a priestly functionary and that only when the function became hereditary was the idea of a tribe developed, with Levi as a quasi-fictional eponymous ancestor. In the *Deuteronomic legislation, the terms 'priest' and 'Levite' are clearly interchangeable. After the Exile, however, the Levites were allotted only the inferior duties in the Temple: they provided the officers and judges, the porters and players of musical instruments (1 Chron. 23. 3–5), and acc. to Ezek. (44. 11) they were to slay the burnt offering and sacrifice for the people. In the Middle Ages, the term levitae was applied to *deacons.

The subject is regularly discussed in works on the Pentateuch and in histories of the OT sacrificial system. A. van Hoonacker, Le Sacerdoce lévitique dans la loi et dans l'histoire des Hébreux (Louvain–London, 1899). G. B. *Gray Sacrifice in the Old Testament (1925), pp. 241–55. G. E. Wright, 'The Levites in Deuteronomy', in Vetus Testamentum, iv (1954), pp. 325–30; J. A. Emerton, 'Priests and Levites in Deuteronomy', ib., xii (1962), pp. 129–38. E. Nielsen, 'The Levites in Ancient Israel' in Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, iii (1964), pp. 16–27. R. de Vaux, O.P., Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, ii (1960), pp. 213–31, 254–63, with bibl. pp. 447 f.; Eng. tr. (ed. 2, 1965), pp. 358–71, 388–94, with bibl. p. 544 f. G. A. Cooke in H.D.B., iii (1900), pp. 99–102, s.v. 'Levi'; W. Baudissin, ib., vi (1902), pp. 66–97, s.v. 'Priests and Levites'; G. Hölscher in P.W., xii (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2155–208, s.v. 'Levi'.

LEVITICUS, Book of. The third Book of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows the Gk. and Lat. versions, the Hebrew title (וַיִּקְרָא, 'And he called') being the first word of the text. The Book consists almost wholly of legislation, the general subjects of which are sacrifice (1–10), ritual purification and holiness (11–26), and vows and tithes (27). Acc. to modern critical theories, the bulk of the Book, except chs. 17–26, is derived from the Priestly document ('P') and is thus not earlier than the 6th cent. B.C., while 17–26, which form a clearly defined unity and are generally known as 'The Code of *Holiness' (q.v.), seem to be older than the rest. The language and theology of Lev. are reflected in the terminology and conceptions of certain NT writers, notably the author of Heb., where the priesthood of Christ is contrasted with the Levitical priesthood, and the ritual and aim of the Jewish Day of *Atonement (Lev. 16, 23. 26 ff.) are explained as receiving their full significance and final realization in Christ's atoning death (Heb. 9 and 10).

Commentaries by A. Bertholet (K.H.C., Abt. iii; 1901), B. Baentsch (K.H.A.T., Abt. I, Bd. ii, on Ex., Lev., Num.; 1903, pp. 306–441), D. Hoffmann (2 vols., Berlin, 1905–6), A. R. S. Kennedy (Cent. Bib. on Lev., Num., c. 1910, pp. 3–182), A. T. Chapman–A. W. Streane (Camb. Bib., RV, 1914), P. Heinisch (Die heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments, i, Abteilung 3; 1935), M. *Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, vi; 1962; Eng. tr., 1965), K. Elliger (H.A.T., Reihe I, iv; 1966), and N. H. Snaith (Cent. Bib., new ed., on Lev. and Num., 1967, pp. 28–178). B. D. Eerdman, Alttestamentliche Studien, iv, Das Buch Leviticus (1912). G. F. Moore in E.Bi., iii (1902), cols. 2776–93, s.v.

LEYDEN. To mark its heroic defence against the Spanish (1574), William of Orange, in 1575, gave the city a university with a special college for the study of the Reformed Religion. At first it was a stronghold of *Calvinist orthodoxy and a refuge of the English *Puritans; from 1609 to 1620 it gave hospitality to the *Pilgrim Fathers. About the same time the *Arminians engaged in religious disputes with the *Gomarists; other great 17th cent. controversies connected with the name of the city concerned the theology of J. *Cocceius and the *Cartesian philosophy, which had been defended by A. van der Heyden. The *Elzevir family of printers had their headquarters here; but, despite the imprint 'Lugdunum Batavorum' on books issued from Leyden, the modern city has no connexion with this Roman town. The more famous theologians, historians, and scientists of the university include H. *Saravia, J. Lipsius (1580–1655), C. *Salmasius, G. J. *Voss, H. *Grotius, D. Heinsius (1547–1606), and J. J. *Scaliger. Today Leyden is a celebrated centre of philological, esp. oriental, studies.

P. J. Blok, Geschiedenis eener Hollandsche Stad (4 vols., 1910–18). P. C. Molhuysen (ed.), Bronnen tot de Geschiedenis der Leidsche Universiteit (7 vols., 1913–24); id., Geschiedenis der Universiteits-Bibliothek te Leiden (1905). C. A. Siegenbeek van Heukelon-Lamme, Album Scholasticum Academiae Lugduno-Batavae MDLXXV–MCMXL (Leiden, 1941).

LIBELLATICI. The name given to those who during the *Decian persecution (249–51) had procured certificates ('libelli pacis') by purchase from the civil authorities stating that they had sacrificed to the pagan idols when, in fact, no such sacrifice had been offered. The practice was condemned by the Church authorities, but those guilty of the circumvention were treated more leniently than those who had actually sacrificed (the 'sacrificati').

The chief authority is the correspondence of St. *Cyprian and the same writer's De Lapsis. Several actual libelli, from among the Egyptian papyri, have been publd. since 1897 by U. Wilcken, C. Wessely, P. M. Mayer, and others; cf. summary report in J. R. Knipfing, 'Libelli of the Decian Persecution', in H.T.R., xvi (1923), pp. 345–90. A. Bludau, Die ägyptischen Libelli und die Christenverfolgung des Kaisers Decius (R.Q., Suppl., xxvii; 1931). R. Andreotti, 'Religione ufficiale e culto dell'imperatore nei "Libelli" di Decio' in Studi in onore di Aristide Calderini e Roberto Paribeni, i (Milan, 1956), pp. 369–76. J. Bridge in C.E., ix (1910), p. 211 f. See also works cited s.v. Decius.

LIBELLI MISSARUM. The name given to the precursors of the *Sacramentary. They were booklets containing the formularies for one or more Masses for a given period for the use of a particular church. They did not include the *Canon, which was fixed, the readings from Scripture or the parts which were sung. They formed the link between the period of free composition and the organization of fixed formularies in a Sacramentary. No examples have survived, but there are literary references to them and the so-called *Leonine Sacramentary contains a series of them.

The fundamental work is A. Stuiber, Libelli Sacramentorum Romani (Theophaneia, 6; Bonn, 1950). F. L. Cross, 'Early Western Liturgical Manuscripts' in J.T.S., N.S., xvi (1965), pp. 61–7. C. Vogel, Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au moyen âge (Biblioteca degli 'Studi Medievali', i [1966]), pp. 20–42, with reff.

LIBER ANTIPHONARIUS. See Antiphonal.

LIBER CENSUUM. The official register of the Roman Church, which recorded the dues (census) payable by various institutions, esp. monasteries, churches, cities, dominions, and kingdoms, to the Holy See. It was drawn up by Cencio Savelli, the 'camerarius' of Popes Clement III (Pope, 1187–91) and *Celestine III (Pope, 1191–8). It drew extensively on the Liber Canonum of the younger *Anselm of Lucca, the Collectio Canonum attributed to Deusdedit (Pope, 616–18), the Liber Politicus of Canon Benedict (fl. c. 1140), and other sources. The original MS. is preserved in the *Vatican (lat. 8486). Besides the list of census, it contains a list of the bishoprics and monasteries directly dependent on the Holy See, a treatise Mirabilia Urbis Romae, and other documents.

Crit. ed. by P. Fabre (d. 1899)–L. *Duchesne, completed by G. Mollat (3 vols., Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, Sér. 2; '1910'–52). V. Pfaff, 'Der Liber Censuum von 1192' in Vierteljahrschrift für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, xliv (1957), pp. 78–96, 105–20, 220–42, 325–51. P. Fabre, Étude sur le Liber Censuum de l'Église de Rome (1892). R. Elze, 'Der Liber Censuum des Cencius (Cod. Vat. lat. 8486) von 1192 bis 1228. Zur Überlieferung des Kaiserkrönungsordo Cencius II' in Bullettino dell' 'Archivio Paleografico Italiano', N.S., ii–iii (pt. 1; 1956–7), pp. 251–70. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1929), cols. 180–220, s.v. 'Liber Censuum Romanae Ecclesiae', with further bibl.; M. Michaud in D.D.C., iii (1942), cols. 233–55, s.v. 'Censuum (Liber)'.

LIBER COMICUS. See Comes.

LIBER DE CAUSIS. A treatise, consisting for the most part of extracts from Proclus's 'Elements of Theology', which was put together in Arabic by an unknown Mohammedan philosopher c. 850. It exercised an important influence on medieval philosophy through Gerard of Cremona, who translated it into Latin at Toledo between 1167 and 1187. He announced it as a work of *Aristotle, with the result that many *Neoplatonist doctrines were mistakenly held to be Aristotelean. St. *Albertus Magnus attributed it to one 'David the Jew'. *William of Moerbeke's translation of Proclus's 'Elements of Theology' into Latin (completed on 18 May 1268) revealed to St. *Thomas Aquinas and medieval philosophers generally the true character of the 'Liber de causis'.

Arab. text, with Germ. tr. and version of Gerard of Cremona, in O. *Bardenhewer, Die pseudo-aristotelische Schrift Ueber das reine Gute, bekannt unter dem Namen Liber de Causis (Freiburg, 1882). Lat. text conveniently pr. in R. Steele (ed.), Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi, xii (Oxford, 1935), pp. 161–87. H. D. Saffrey, O.P., Sancti Thomae de Aquino Super Librum de Causis Expositio (Textus Philosophici Friburgenses, iv–v; 1954). L. Sweeney in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 693 f., s.v., with further bibl.

LIBER GRADUALIS. See Gradual.

LIBER PONTIFICALIS (Lat., 'the Papal Book'). A collection of early Papal biographies. The account of each Pope is written acc. to a regular plan, with stereotyped formulae and exact chronological data. The biographies of the earliest Popes are quite short, but from the 4th cent. onwards they tend gradually to increase in size until those of the 8th–9th cents. have the dimensions of a small book. The whole is prefaced by an apocryphal letter of Pope *Damasus to St. *Jerome, begging him to provide a history of the Popes from St. Peter down to his own times. The work was issued in a series of 'editions', which were brought up to date by the addition of later Lives. The earliest form of it, which was dependent on the *Liberian Catalogue (354), appears to have been the work of a Roman presbyter at the time of Boniface II (530–2). Subsequent redactions carry the history down to the death of *Martin V (1431), and even later.

Important crit. edd. by L. *Duchesne (2 vols., Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2e Sér. iii, 1886–92 + further vol. of additions and corrections by C. Vogel, ib., 1957) and T. *Mommsen (M.G.H., Gesta Pontificum Romanorum, i, vol. i, to A.D. 715, all publd., 1898). Eng. tr. of section up to 590, with introd., by Louise R. Loomis (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, iii; 1916). L. Duchesne, Étude sur le Liber Pontificalis (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 1e Sér. i, 1877; esp. on MSS.). J. B. *Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers, I, i (S. Clement of Rome; ed. 2, 1890), pp. 303–25. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, ii (1933), pp. 314–20. E. Griffe, 'Le Liber Pontificalis au temps du pape saint Grégoire' in Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, lvii (1956), pp. 65–70. J. P. Kirsch in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 224–6; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 354–460; E. Josi in E.C., vii (1951), cols. 1278–82; all s.v. and with further bibl.

LIBER PRAEDESTINATUS. See Praedestinatus.

LIBER REGALIS. The Book containing the English *Coronation Service introduced for the crowning of Edward II in 1308. The rubrics were extended for Richard II (1377). The Book was translated into English for *James I (1603), and continued in use until discarded by *James II in 1685. Its unknown compiler possessed considerable competence and knowledge. Among its many new features were the introduction of the seven Penitential Psalms, of the Veni Creator Spiritus, and the homage of the peers after the enthronement. Several 14th and 15th cent. MSS. survive.

Text ed., with Eng. tr., by L. G. Wickham Legg, English Coronation Records (1901), pp. 81–130. E. C. Ratcliff, The English Coronation Service (1936). See also other works cited under Coronation Rite in England.

LIBER SACRAMENTORUM. See Sacramentary.

LIBER VITAE (Lat., 'Book of Life'). A name occasionally given in the early Church to the *Diptychs, i.e. the lists of those who were recognized members of the Christian community. It was doubtless derived from the references in Scripture to the '*Book of Life' (e.g. Rev. 3. 5).

LIBERAL ARTS, The Seven. See Seven Liberal Arts, The.

LIBERAL EVANGELICALISM. The outlook of those within the C of E who, while maintaining their spiritual kinship with the *Evangelical Revival, have been concerned to re-state old truths, e.g. concerning the Atonement and the authority of the Bible, in terms thought to be more consonant with modern thought with its stress on historical method and the philosophy of personality. See also Anglican Evangelical Group Movement.

T. G. Rogers (ed.), Liberal Evangelicalism. By Members of the Church of England (1923).

LIBERALISM. The word, which came into use early in the 19th cent., has been defined as 'the holding of liberal opinions in politics or theology'. In theology it has been used with many different shades of meaning. If taken to mean freedom from bigotry and readiness to welcome new ideas or proposals for reform, it is a characteristic which many people will readily profess, but in itself it gives no indication of their beliefs or aspirations. There have been 'Liberal Catholics', 'Liberal Protestants', and 'Liberal Evangelicals'; but all that they have had in common is a general tendency to favour freedom and progress. Such a tendency may lead to many different results. The 'Liberal Catholics' who formed a distinguished group in the RC Church in the 19th cent. were for the most part theologically orthodox, but they favoured political democracy and ecclesiastical reform. Père H. D. *Lacordaire (1802–61), the famous French Dominican, said: 'I die a penitent Catholic, but an impenitent Liberal.' 'Liberal Protestantism', on the other hand, developed into an anti-dogmatic and humanitarian reconstruction of the Christian faith which at one time appeared to be gaining ground in nearly all the Protestant churches.

The word is sometimes also used of the belief in secular or anthropocentric humanism which has its origins in the Renaissance and which is quite inconsistent with Biblical and dogmatic orthodoxy. It was in this sense that the *Tractarians were fiercely opposed to Liberalism. On the other hand, by many orthodox Christians the word 'liberal' is felt to have positive associations of great value. Hence the confusion which surrounds its use.

LIBERIAN CATALOGUE. An early list of the Popes down to *Liberius (352–66). It is one of the items in a collection of documents made by a compiler known (since T. Mommsen's studies) as the '*Chronographer of 354' (q.v.). Its earlier section, which goes down to Pope Pontianus (230–5) and appears to be dependent on a list in the 'Chronicle' of St. *Hippolytus, is less reliable than its latter half. First edited by the Jesuit, A. Bucherius, at Antwerp in 1636, it used sometimes to be called the 'Bucherian Catalogue'.

For editions, see art. Chronographer of A.D. 354. Text also pr. in L.P. (ed. Duchesne), i (1886), pp. 1–12. Critical discussions in H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (ed. 2, 1927), esp. pp. 1–28, and E. Caspar, Die älteste römische Bischofsliste (Schriften der Königsberger gelehrten Gesellschaft, ii, Geisteswissenschaftliche Klasse, Hft. 4; 1926), pp. [170–8] (pp. 384–92 of vol. ii of the Schriften).

LIBERIUS, Pope from 352 to 366. Ordered by the Arian Emperor, Constantius, to assent to the condemnation of St. *Athanasius as a rebel, Liberius refused and was banished from Rome in 355. In 357 he submitted to Constantius, and in 358 he was permitted to reoccupy his see, having in the interval signed an Arian formulary. St. *Jerome and St. Athanasius agree that his subscription was forced, and it seems clear that the formula to which he subscribed was heretical in character. Its precise nature, however, is disputed, since the principal evidence derives from four letters ('Studens paci', 'Pro deifico', 'Quia scio', 'Non doceo') preserved by *Hilary of Poitiers, and the authenticity of these letters has been challenged, though by no means conclusively. He built a celebrated church on the Esquiline Hill (the 'Basilica Liberiana') which was the ancestor of the present *Santa Maria Maggiore. Though his name does not appear in modern calendars, his feast occurs on 23 Sept. in the *Hieronymian Martyrology.

Letters and other writings mainly repr. from P. *Coustant in J. P. Migne, PL, viii, 1349–1410; crit. text of the nine Epp. found in Hilary by A. L. Feder (C.S.E.L., lxv, 1916). A Sermon of Liberius survives in a modified form in *Ambrose, De Virginibus, III. 1–3 (text in PL, viii, 1345–50). L. *Duchesne, 'Libère et Fortunatien' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, xxviii (1908), pp. 31–78; J. *Chapman, 'The Contested Letters of Pope Liberius' in R. Bén., xxvii (1910), pp. 22–40, 172–203, 325–51; A. L. Feder, Studien zu Hilarius von Poitiers, i (Vienna, 1910), pp. 153–83; cf. also L.P. (Duchesne), i, pp. 207–10. E. Caspar, Geschichte de Papsttums, i (1930), pp. 166–95. P. Glorieux, 'Hilaire et Libère' in Mélanges de Science Religieuse, i (1944), pp. 7–34. C. Dagens, 'Autour du pape Libère. L'Iconographie de Suzanne et des martyrs romains sur l'Arcosolium de Celerina' in Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, lxxxviii (1966), pp. 327–81. Bardenhewer, iii, pp. 585–8. J. Chapman in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 217–23; H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 497–530; É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 631–59; P. T. Camelot, O.P., in N.C.E., viii (1967), pp. 714–16, s.v.

LIBRARY OF THE FATHERS, The. The series of English translations of selected writings of the early Christian Fathers, published under the inspiration of the Oxford Movement. The first volume to appear was the Confessions of St. *Augustine (1838; edited by E. B. *Pusey).

LIBRI CAROLINI. See Caroline Books.

LICENCES, Marriage. See Marriage Licences.

LICHFIELD. The seat of the Mercian diocese under St. *Chad, it was constituted by King *Offa for a brief period (787–803) an archiepiscopal see. Despite the nominal removal of the see to *Chester in 1075 and to *Coventry in 1095, Lichfield remained throughout the Middle Ages the centre of episcopal administration in the diocese. The formation of the Chester diocese in 1541, and various 19th cent. changes, greatly reduced its importance. The present cathedral dates mainly from the 13th cent. An Anglican theological college in the city was founded in 1857; closed in 1972.

E. Hobhouse, 'The Register of Roger of Norbury, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, from A.D. 1322 to A.D. 1358. An Abstract of Contents and Remarks' in Collections for a History of Staffordshire edited by the William Salt Archaeological Society, i (1880), pp. 241–88; Registers of Bishop Robert de Stretton, 1358–1385, abstracted into English by R. A. Wilson (ib., N.S., viii and x, pt. 2; 1905–7); H. E. Savage (ed.), The Great Register of Lichfield Cathedral known as Magnum Registrum Album (ib. for 1924; 1926). J. C. Cox, Catalogue of the Muniments and Manuscript Books pertaining to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield: Analysis of the Magnum Registrum Album; Catalogue of the Muniments of the Lichfield Vicars (ib., vi, pt. 2; 1886); 'The Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield' in the Fourteenth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix viii (1895), pp. 205–36. J. W. Lamb The Archbishopric of Lichfield (787–803) (1964). C. J. Godfrey, 'The Archbishopric of Lichfield' in Studies in Church History, i (ed. C. W. Dugmore and C. Duggan; 1964), pp. 145–53. T. Harwood, The History and Antiquities of the Church and City of Lichfield (Gloucester, 1806). A. B. Clifton, The Cathedral Church of Lichfield (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). R. Willis, 'On the Foundations of Early Buildings recently discovered in Lichfield Cathedral' in The Archaeologica Journal, xviii (1861), pp. 1–24. Ann J. Kettle–D. A. Johnson in V.C.H., Stafford, ii, ed. M. W. Greenslade (1970), pp. 140–99. T. Barns in D.E.C.H. (1912), pp. 322–6, s.v.

LICH-GATE. See Lych-Gate.

LIDDELL, HENRY GEORGE (1811–98), Greek lexicographer. He was educated at Charterhouse and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he became tutor (1836) and censor (1845). He was later headmaster of Westminster (1846–55) and Dean of Christ Church (1855–91). In 1852 he was appointed to sit on the commission for University Reform. Later he was a decisive influence in the radical plan of internal reconstruction embodied in the Christ Church, Oxford, Act of 1867. The famous Greek Lexicon, in which Liddell had the collaboration of R. *Scott (q.v.), appeared in a modest form in 1843, the original edition being based on the Greek-German lexicon of F. Passow, professor at Breslau. It was constantly revised and extended during Liddell's lifetime, the last (8th) edition being issued in 1897. It was later completely recast by H. Stuart Jones (1867–1939) and R. McKenzie (1887–1937), who greatly enlarged it by full attention to recent archaeological and papyrological discoveries, but with the exclusion of *patristic usages (issued in 10 parts, 1925–40).

Memoir by H. L. Thompson (London, 1899). Id. in D.N.B., Suppl., iii (1901), pp. 94–6.

LIDDON, HENRY PARRY (1829–90), Canon of *St. Paul's. He was educated at King's College School, London, and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he held a Studentship until his death. He was successively one of W. J. *Butler's curates at Wantage (1852–4), first vice-principal of Cuddesdon Theological College (1854–9), and vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford (1859–62). In the 'sixties he began to exercise great influence in face of the post-Tractarian Oxford liberalism. In 1864 he was appointed prebendary of *Salisbury and in 1870 Canon of St. Paul's, where his powerful preaching attracted large audiences. In 1870 he was also appointed Dean Ireland professor of exegesis at Oxford; this combination of offices strengthened his influence in the C of E, which he used chiefly for extending Catholic principles. He also stood firmly against the attempts made in the 'seventies to lessen or abandon the use of the *Athanasian Creed in the C of E services. After resigning his professorship in 1882 he travelled extensively, esp. in Russia, Palestine and Egypt. He was much interested in the *Old Catholics, and at the invitation of J. J. I. von *Döllinger, whom he visited in Munich many times, he attended the *Bonn Reunion Conferences. In 1886 he was made chancellor of St. Paul's. In his last years he watched with growing apprehension the spread of critical doctrines of the OT among the younger generation even of his own party, and the publication of Lux Mundi (1889) was a great grief to him. He was also a considerable, if hardly an original, theologian, whose *Bampton Lectures for 1866, on The Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (1867), were deservedly held in high repute. His intense admiration for E. B. *Pusey led him to devote himself assiduously in his later years to writing Pusey's life (4 vols., posthumously publd., 1893–7), and it was for this purpose that he resigned his professorship. Liddon House, in South Audley Street, was founded in his memory as a religious centre in London for educated Anglican Churchmen.

J. O. Johnston, Life and Letters of Henry Parry Liddon (London, 1904). Shorter life by G. W. E. Russell (ib., 1905). Centenary memoir with contributions by W. M. Whitley, T. B. *Strong, D. *Stone, E. S. *Talbot, and A. B. Emden (ib., 1929). H. Scott *Holland in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 223–8.

LIEBER, THOMAS. See Erastianism.

LIETZMANN, HANS (1875–1942), Church historian. He studied philosophy and theology at Jena and Bonn from 1893 to 1898. After being lecturer at Bonn from 1900 he was appointed professor at Jena in 1905. In 1924 he succeeded A. Harnack at Berlin. His early studies were largely in the little-worked Greek patristic catenae, which bore fruit in a Catalogue (1902; in conjunction with G. Karo) and a series of Catenenstudien under his editorship. In 1904 there followed Apollinaris von Laodicea und seine Schule, which by a fresh attempt to distinguish the genuine and spurious works completely transformed Apollinarian studies. Petrus und Paulus in Rom (1915; ed. 2, 1927) was the outcome of long archaeological and chronological researches. In the field of liturgy, he published an edition of the *Gregorian Sacramentary which derived from the ancient Aachen MS. (1921), and Messe und Herrenmahl (1926; Eng. tr., Leiden, 1953–79), in which he sought to trace the Eucharistic Rite back to two distinct primitive types. In his later years he issued a manual of Church history, Geschichte der alten Kirche (4 vols., 1932–44; Eng. trans., 1937–51). From 1902 onwards he edited Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, from 1906 the Handbuch zum Neuen Testament (to which he himself contributed the commentaries on Rom., Cor., and Gal.), and from 1920 the Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft.

Gedächtnissrede by H. Bornkamm and bibl. by K. Aland (490 items) in Z.N.T.W., xli (1942), pp. 1–33. Three volumes of Lietzmann's Kleine Schriften ed. K. Aland in T.U., lxvii (1958), lxviii (1958), and lxxiv (1962; with reissue of items by H. Bornkamm and K. Aland just mentioned).

'LIFE AND WORK'. The branch of the *Ecumenical Movement concerned with the relation of the Christian faith to society, politics, and economics. It held notable conferences at *Stockholm (1925) and *Oxford (1937). It owed its existence esp. to N. *Söderblom. See also Faith and Order, Reunion, and World Council of Churches.

N. Karlström and N. Ehrenström in Ruth Rouse–S. C. Neill (edd.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 509–96.

LIGHT OF THE WORLD, The (Lat. Lux Mundi). A title of Christ, derived from Jn. 8. 12. It is the subject of Holman *Hunt's famous picture (of which the artist painted two copies, the one at Keble College, *Oxford, and the other at *St. Paul's Cathedral).

LIGHTFOOT, JOHN (1602–75), Biblical and *Rabbinic scholar. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he was from 1630 to 1642 rector of Ashley, Staffs. In 1643 he became one of the original and more influential members of the *Westminster Assembly, opposing the extreme *Presbyterians. In 1643 he became master of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, and rector of Much Munden, Herts, and held both offices for the rest of his life. He early developed an interest in Hebrew and Talmudic studies and in 1629 published Erubhin; or Miscellanies, Christian and Judaical, followed later by a book on Genesis (1642) and many further learned writings. He also materially assisted B. *Walton with the *Polyglott Bible which appeared in 1657. His best-known work, his series of Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae (6 vols., 1658–78), was designed to show the bearing of Jewish studies on the interpretation of the NT. It is a mine of information and has never been wholly superseded.

Works in Eng. ed. G. Bright (2 vols., London, 1684); in Lat. [ed. J. Texelius] (2 vols., Rotterdam, 1686), also ed. J. Leusden (2 vols., Utrecht, 1699). Complete works ed. J. R. Pitman (13 vols., London, 1822–5). J. Hamilton in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 229–31.

LIGHTFOOT, JOSEPH BARBER (1828–89), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, where he came under the strong influence of James Prince Lee (1804–69) and made a lifelong friendship with E. W. *Benson (q.v.). In 1847 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a private pupil of B. F. *Westcott (q.v.) and in 1852 was elected Fellow. He was ordained deacon in 1854 and priest in 1858, in both cases by J. P. Lee (Bp. of Manchester since 1847). Becoming a tutor at Trinity College in 1857, he made classical and Biblical subjects his main interest and was one of the founders and editors of the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology (Mar. 1854 – Dec. 1859). In 1861 he succeeded C. J. *Ellicott as Hulsean professor of divinity, his lectures on the NT being the basis of his later commentaries. In 1871 he was appointed a Canon of *St. Paul's and in 1875 Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge. From 1870 to 1880 he was also one of the leading members of the Company of Revisers of the NT. Having accepted the see of Durham with great reluctance (1879), he here proved himself a remarkably successful administrator, did much for the adornment of Auckland Castle and personally trained many promising men for the priesthood.

The excellence of Lightfoot's critical work on the NT and the Fathers, which from the first won the highest recognition in Britain and beyond, has stood the test of time. His first important study, 'Recent Editions of St. Paul's Epistles' in the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology for Mar. 1856, was a critique of the works of A. P. *Stanley and B. *Jowett. His famous commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles—Galatians (1865), Philippians (1868), and Colossians with Philemon (1875)—followed. All were marked by a wide and original Patristic and classical erudition, lucid presentation, freedom from technicalities, and avoidance of sectional controversies; esp. notable were their long dissertations, e.g. the well-known essay on 'The Christian Ministry' in Philippians. The same qualities marked his work on the Apostolic Fathers, which perhaps showed an even greater mastery of learning and technique. His first edition of Clement of Rome appeared in 1869 (Appendix, 1877), a second and much extended recasting, revised in the light of the newly recovered full text, in 1890. In 1885 there followed his famous Ignatius (2 vols. in 3, 1885; ed. 2, 1889), which finally disposed of W. *Cureton's contention that only the three Epp. in the Syriac recension were genuine. His other writings included A Fresh Revision of the New Testament (1871), the valuable art. 'Eusebius of Caesarea' in the Dictionary of Christian Biography (vol. ii, 1880), Leaders of the Northern Church (1890), and several volumes of Sermons.

Brief account (attributed to H. W. Watkins) in Quarterly Review, clxxvi (1893), pp. 73–105, repr. separately, with prefatory note by B. F. Westcott (London, 1894). G. R. Eden–F. C. Macdonald (edd.), Lightfoot of Durham. Memoirs and Appreciations (1932). A. C. Benson, The Leaves of the Tree (1911), pp. 187–211. F. J. A. *Hort in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 232–40.

LIGHTFOOT, ROBERT HENRY (1883–1953), NT scholar. Educated at Eton and at Worcester College, Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1910. After teaching at Wells Theological College (1912–19), he became Fellow of Lincoln College (1919–21) and of New College (1921–50), Oxford, and Dean Ireland Professor of the Exegesis of Holy Scripture (1934–49). His chief publications were History and Interpretation in the Gospels (*Bampton Lectures for 1934; 1935), Locality and Doctrine in the Gospels (1938), The Gospel Message of St. Mark (1950), and St. John's Gospel (1956; ed. C. F. Evans). From 1941 until his death he edited the Journal of Theological Studies. His work was marked by accuracy and caution, deference to German *Form-criticism, and, largely through the influence of this last, scepticism with respect to the historicity of the Synoptic narratives. Of deep, if reticent, Christian faith, Lightfoot exercised a considerable influence, esp. on a group of younger Oxford NT students.

D. E. Nineham (ed.), Studies in the Gospels. Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot (1955), with memoir by D. E. Nineham, pp. vi–xvi. Obituary notice by R. L. P. Milburn in Proceedings of the British Academy, xl (1954), pp. 253–61.

LIGHTS, Feast of. See Dedication (Jewish Feast of the).

LIGUORI, St. ALPHONSUS. See Alphonsus Liguori, St.

LIGUGÉ, Defensor of. See Defensor.

LIMBO. In Latin theology the abode of souls excluded from the full blessedness of the beatific vision, but not condemned to any other punishment. There are distinguished (1) the limbus patrum, in which the saints of the Old Covenant remained until Christ's coming and redemption of the world; and (2) the limbus infantium, the everlasting state of those who die unregenerate, e.g. unbaptized infants, and hence in *original sin, but innocent of personal guilt. Those in limbo are held to be excluded from supernatural beatitude, but, acc. to St. *Thomas Aquinas, enjoy full natural happiness. St. *Augustine, however, esp. in combating the *Pelagians, taught that all who die unbaptized, being in original sin, suffer some degree of positive punishment.

The existence of limbo is a matter of theological opinion on which the Church has never pronounced definitively either way.

LIMINA APOSTOLORUM. See Ad Limina Apostolorum.

LINACRE, THOMAS (c. 1460–1524), humanist and founder of the Royal College of Physicians. He was among the first to cultivate Greek letters in England. He was educated at *Canterbury Cathedral School and at Oxford and in 1484 became a Fellow of All Souls. Soon afterwards he made his way to Italy, where he became the pupil of Angelo Poliziano, and after ten years, spent mainly in the study of medicine and the classics, he returned to Oxford and was at once recognized as one of the foremost humanist scholars of England. He was physician to Henry VII and *Henry VIII, and many great statesmen (e.g. T. *Wolsey, W. *Warham) were his patients. He was also the intimate friend of J. *Colet, D. *Erasmus, and T. *More. In 1520 he was ordained priest. The College for which he secured the royal charter (23 Sept. 1518) was designed to regulate the practice of medicine and to discourage the quacks who flourished at the time in London. He also founded chairs of medicine at Oxford and Cambridge. Among his writings are a treatise on Latin composition and Latin translations from Galen.

Linacre College, founded in 1962 (until 1965 Linacre House), in Oxford is named after him.

J. N. Johnson, Life of Thomas Linacre (1835). Shorter studies are the Linacre Lecture by W. Osler, Thomas Linacre (1908), and a sketch in R. T. Williamson's English Physicians of the Past (1923), pp. 7–19. J. F. Payne in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 266–71 [cf. P. S. Allen in E.H.R., xviii (1903), pp. 514–17, and R. J. Mitchell, ib., l (1935), pp. 696–8]. B.R.U.O., ii (1958), pp. 1147–9.

LINCOLN. A see was established here by Bp. Remigius (d. 1092), who transferred it from *Dorchester, Oxon. The diocese became the largest in England, extending from the Thames to the Humber, and including the present dioceses of *Oxford, *Peterborough, and Leicester, as well as the present Lincoln. The cathedral, begun in 1086 and largely completed before 1300, contains fine Early English and Decorated architecture. Among celebrated Bps. of Lincoln are St. *Hugh (1186–1200), R. *Grossteste (1235–53), Richard *Fleming (1420–31), Thomas *Barlow (1675–91), W. *Wake (1705–16), E. *Gibson (1716–23), and E. *King (1885–1910).

W. P. W. Phillimore (ed.), Rotuli Hugonis de Welles, Episcopi Lincolniensis A.D. MCCIX–MCCXXXV (Cant. and York Society, i, iii, and iv; 1907–9, and in The Lincoln Record Society, iii, vi, and ix, 1912–14); F. N. Davis (ed.), Rotuli Roberti Grosseteste, Episcopi Lincolniensis A.D. MCCXXXV–MCCLIII (Cant. and York Society, x; 1913, and, with the Rotulus Henrici de Lixington, Episcopi Lincolniensis MCCLIV–MCCLIX, in The Lincoln Record Society, xi; 1914); id.–C. W. Foster–A. H. Thompson (edd.), Rotuli Ricardi Gravesend [Bp., 1258–79] (Cant. and York Society, xxxi; 1925, and Linc. Record Society, xx; 1925); Rosalind M. T. Hill (ed.), The Rolls and Register of Bishop Oliver Sutton, 1280–1299 (Linc. Record Society, xxxix, xliii, xlviii, lii, lx, lxiv; 1948–69). A. H. Thompson, 'Registers of John Gynewell, Bishop of Lincoln, for the Years 1347–1350' in the Archaeological Journal, lxviii (1911) pp. 301–60, with extracts. The Register of Bishop Philip Repingdon 1405–1419, ed. Margaret Archer (Linc. Record Society, lvii, lviii, &c., 1963 ff.). C. W. Foster (ed.), Lincoln Episcopal Records in the Time of Thomas Cooper . . . Bishop of Lincoln A.D. 1571 to A.D. 1584 (ib., ii; 1912). A. H. Thompson (ed.), Visitations of Religious Houses in the Diocese of Lincoln [1420–49] (ib., vii, xiv, and xxi; 1914–29). R. E. G. Cole (ed.), Chapter Acts of the Cathedral Church of St. Mary of Lincoln A.D. 1520–1559 (ib., xii, xiii, and xv; 1915–20). C. W. Foster–Kathleen Major (edd.), The Registrum Antiquissimum of the Cathedral Church of Lincoln (ib., xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xxxii, xxxiv, xli, xlvi, li, lxii, etc.; 1931 ff.). A. H. Thompson (ed.), Visitations in the Diocese of Lincoln 1517–1531 (ib., xxxiii, xxxv, and xxxvii; 1940–7). C. W. Foster, The State of the Church in the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I as Illustrated by Documents Relating to the Diocese of Lincoln, vol. i (ib., xxiii; 1926). H. Bradshaw–C. *Wordsworth (edd.), Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral (2 vols., 1892–7). Kathleen Major, A Handlist of the Records of the Bishops of Lincoln and of the Archdeacons of Lincoln and Stow (1953). G. F. Apthorp, A Catalogue of the Books and Manuscripts in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral (Lincoln, 1859). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vi (pt. 3; 1830), pp. 1266–92. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of Lincoln, Ely, Oxford and Peterborough (1730), pp. 1–330. J. H. Srawley, The Story of Lincoln Minster (1933). J. W. F. Hill, Medieval Lincoln (Cambridge, 1948); id., Tudor & Stuart Lincoln (ib., 1956); id., Georgian Lincoln (ib., 1966). Phyllis Wragge, 'Lincoln Cathedral' in V.C.H., Lincoln, ii (1906), pp. 80–96. W. Hunt in D.E.C.H., pp. 328–32, s.v.

LINCOLN, Use of. The liturgical usage adopted in the vast pre-Reformation diocese of Lincoln and referred to by T. Cranmer in the preface to the 1549 BCP (see Concerning the Service of the Church). Among the few traces of it which have survived are three leaves of a 15th cent. MS. Missal secundum usum Lincoln., now among the Tanner MSS. in the *Bodleian Library (MS. 9824).

LINCOLN JUDGEMENT, The. The Judgement, given in 1890 by E. W. *Benson, Abp. of Canterbury, upon the complaints made two years before by the *Church Association against Edward *King, Bp. of Lincoln, for consecrating the Eucharist in the eastward position, having lighted candles on the Altar, mixing water and wine in the Chalice, allowing the *Agnus Dei to be sung after the Consecration, absolving and blessing with the *sign of the Cross, and taking the ablutions of the sacred vessels. The Judgement upheld the Bishop in the main, but ordered that the Chalice must be mixed, if at all, before the service, that the *manual acts of consecration must be visible to the people, and that the sign of the Cross may not be used. The Judgement was notable in that it ignored previous decisions of the secular courts and the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

E. S. Roscoe, The Bishop of Lincoln's Case. A Report of the Proceedings in the Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury . . . (1889). Read and Others v. the Lord Bishop of Lincoln: Judgment, Nov. 21, 1890.

LINDISFARNE. From the 11th cent. it has also been called 'Holy Island'. Its history begins with St. *Aidan's arrival from *Iona in 635, when it became a missionary centre and episcopal see, and a large number of churches were founded by its efforts from Edinburgh to the Humber and beyond. Among those educated in the monastery were St. *Chad, St. *Cedd, St. *Egbert, and St. *Wilfrid. The church was rebuilt by Aidan's successor, St. *Finan (d. 661). In the latter part of the 7th cent. the Scoto-Irish monks, with some of their English brethren, withdrew to Iona, as they disliked the Roman discipline agreed upon at the Synod of *Whitby (664), and from that time the monastery became 'Italo-Saxon'. St. *Cuthbert's association with it added to its celebrity. In 793 and again in 875 the monastery and church were pillaged by the Danes and the monks fled. Eardulf (d. 900), the last of the 16 bishops, fixed his see in 875 at Chester-le-Street, but it was transferred to *Durham in 995. From 1082 to the Dissolution there was continuous monastic life on the island. The abbey church was a small copy of Durham cathedral, and dedicated to St. Cuthbert.

The MS. known as the 'Lindisfarne Gospels', now in the British Museum (Cotton MS. Nero D. iv), was written and decorated c. 696–8 by Eadfrith (afterwards Bp. of Lindisfarne) 'in honour of St. Cuthbert'. Its script is insular majuscule, and its decoration one of the finest surviving monuments of early Hiberno-Saxon art. Its text is closely related to that of the *Codex Amiatinus. An interlinear gloss in Anglo-Saxon was added by Aldred, who was provost of Lindisfarne in 970.

The Liber Vitae Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (also in the Brit. Mus., Cotton MS. Domitian A. vii) contains the names of the benefactors of the Church of St. Cuthbert, Lindisfarne, and others entitled to commemoration. Begun in the 9th cent. (prob. c. 840) and written in silver and gold, it was later removed to Durham.

'Annales Lindisfarnenses et Cantuarienses a. 618–690', ed. G. H. Pertz in M.G.H., Scriptores, iv (1841), p. 1 f.; 'Annales Lindisfarnenses' [A.D. 532–993], ed. id., ib., xix (1866), pp. 502–7. W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, i (ed. 1846), pp. 220–52. J. Raine, The History and Antiquities of North Durham (1852), pp. 73–188. H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 1186–92, s.v.

Lindisfarne Gospels, ed. by J. Stevenson–G. Waring (Surtees Society, xxviii, xxxix, xliii, and xlviii; 1854–65) and by W. W. Skeat, The Holy Gospels in Anglo-Saxon, Northumbrian, and Old Mercian Versions (1871–87). Lat. text collated in the ed. of the *Vulgate by J. *Wordsworth–H. J. White (Oxford, 1889). Plates, with introd. by E. G. Millar (British Museum, 1923). Facsimile (Olten–Bern, 1956, with important vol. of comm. by T. J. Brown, R. L. Bruce-Mitford and others, ib., 1960). Liber Vitae, ed. J. Stevenson (Surtees Society, xiii, 1841); facsimile ed. by A. H. Thompson (ib., cxxxvi; 1923).

LINDSAY, THOMAS MARTIN (1843–1914), Church historian. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, and was for a time assistant at the latter to A. C. *Fraser in philosophy. He decided, however, to become a minister in the *Free Church of Scotland, and in 1873 he became professor of church history at the theological college at Glasgow. His main interest was the history of the Protestant Reformation on the Continent, his two principal books being Luther and the German Reformation (1900) and A History of the Reformation in Europe (2 vols., 1906, 1907). His other writings include The Church and the Ministry in the Early Centuries (Cunningham Lectures, 1903).

His son Alexander Dunlop, first LORD LINDSAY OF BIRKER (1879–1952), Master of Balliol College, Oxford (1924–49), took a prominent and effective part in furthering Christian principles in their bearing on social and ethical problems. In addition to philosophical works, notably studies of H. *Bergson (1911) and I. *Kant (1934), he wrote on personal, social, and political ethics.

A Collection of College Addresses: and Sermons preached on Various Occasions by the late Thomas Martin Lindsay, ed. by A. D. Lindsay, son (Glasgow, 1915). Letters of Principal T. M. Lindsay to Janet Ross (1923), with introd. by Janet [A.] Ross, pp. v–x. R. S. Rait in D.N.B., 1912–1921 (1927), p. 338 f., s.v. On Wallace Martin Lindsay (1858–1937), eminent Latinist, editor of St. *Isidore's Etymologiae (2 vols., 1911) and brother of T. M. Lindsay, see H. J. Rose in Proceedings of the British Academy, xxiii (1937), pp. 487–512, and C. J. Fordyce in D.N.B., 1931–1940 (1949), p. 537 f. Life of Alexander D. Lindsay by [A.] Drusilla Scott (daughter) (Oxford, 1971); [J. E.] C. Hill in D.N.B., 1951–1960, pp. 641–644.

LINDSEY, THEOPHILUS (1723–1808), English *Unitarian. Educated at Leeds and at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was later elected a Fellow (1747), he became rector of Kirkby Wiske, N. Yorks, in 1753 and of Puddletown, Dorset, in 1756. In 1760 he married the stepdaughter of his friend Archdeacon Francis Blackburne (1705–87), with whose *Latitudinarian ideas he was much in sympathy. In 1763 he became vicar of Catterick. Having become doubtful about the doctrine of the Trinity, he supported Blackburne in the controversy arising out of the latter's Confessional (1766) and, stimulated in his unorthodoxy by friendship with J. *Priestley, he joined in the '*Feathers Tavern' petition to Parliament of several Latitudinarians (J. Jebb, Bp. E. Law, &c.) against subscription to the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The failure of the petition and a change in his own intellectual position led him to adopt Unitarianism. He went to London, where, from 1774, he conducted services in Essex Street. His writings include Apology on Resigning the Vicarage of Catterick (1774), A Sequel to the Apology (1776), Historical View of the State of the Unitarian Doctrine and Worship from the Reformation to our own Time (1783), Vindiciae Priestleianae (1788), and Conversations on the Divine Government (1802).

Collected ed. of his Sermons (2 vols., London, 1810). T. Belsham, Memoirs of . . . Theophilus Lindsey . . . including a Brief Analysis of his Works (1812). H. McLachlan, Letters of Theophilus Lindsey (Publications of the University of Manchester, cxxxiv; 1920), with introductory 'Sketch of the Life of Theophilus Lindsey', pp. ix–xii. A. Nicholson in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), p. 317 f.

LINGARD, JOHN (1771–1851), English historian. He came from an old Lincolnshire RC family who had migrated to *Winchester, where he was born. He entered the English College at *Douai in 1782, but had to leave in 1793 on account of the French war. Having finished his theological studies at Crook Hall, nr. *Durham, he was ordained priest in 1795, made prefect of studies, and taught natural and moral philosophy. In 1806 he published his Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church (ed. 3, much enlarged, 1845), and in 1808 he went to Ushaw, where he helped with the foundation of the College and became its vice-president. In 1811 he moved to Hornby, nr. Lancaster, a small country mission, where he spent most of the rest of his life writing. In 1817 he paid a visit to Rome, where he negotiated the reopening of the *English College. In 1819 appeared the first three volumes of his History of England, the great work on which rests his fame. The eighth and last volume was published in 1830, carrying the history down to 1688. The work had a great success, which it owed esp. to its objectivity, its extensive use of contemporary documents, and the new light in which it viewed esp. such controversial periods as the *Reformation. It was translated into many European languages and earned its author the triple doctorate of theology, canon, and civil law from *Pius VII in 1821. There is some evidence that Leo XII created him cardinal in petto in 1826. Among his many other writings are a New Version of the Four Gospels (1836) and manuals of prayer and instruction, as well as some controversial treatises.

J. Hughes, John Lingard (1907); M. Haile and E. Bonney, Life and Letters of John Lingard (1911). T. Cooper in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 320–3.

LINUS, St. Acc. to all the early episcopal lists, Linus was the first Bp. of Rome after the Apostles Peter and Paul, but nothing else is known with certainty about him. A Christian of this name sends greetings, perhaps from Rome, in 2 Tim. 4. 21; and *Irenaeus and *Eusebius of Caesarea identify him with the Bishop. Feast day, 23 Sept.

St. Linus is mentioned by Irenaeus, Adv. Haer., III. iii. 3, and Eusebius, H.E., iii. 2 and v. 6. L.P. (Duchesne), i. 121. AA.SS., Sept. VI (1757), pp. 539–45. J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, i (pt. 1; ed. 2, 1890), pp. 76–9. V. L. Kennedy, C.S.B., The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, xiv; 1938), esp. pp. 111–13. É. Amann in D.T.C., ix (pt. 1; 1926), col. 772, s.v. 'Lin', with further refr.

LION. The lion appears in early Christian art esp. in two connexions. (1) In representations of the story of *Daniel, conceived as a 'type' of God's redemption of His chosen people. This occurs among the earliest *catacomb paintings. (2) As the symbol of St. *Mark. This symbolism, based on Ezek. 1 and Rev. 4, was discussed by St. *Jerome and St. *Augustine. In art its use dates from the 5th century.

H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 1198–1207, s.v.

LIPPI, Fra FILIPPO (c. 1406–69), Italian painter. Educated at a *Carmelite convent near Florence, he took the habit in 1420. When his artistic talent was discovered he received a great many orders for work, but he began to lead an immoral life and in the event was released from his vows by *Pius II and allowed to marry. Among his principal pictures are the Coronation of the Blessed Virgin (1441), the *Vision of St. Bernard (1447), and his great fresco works of *St. John the Baptist and *St. Stephen (1452–64). Though he belonged to the second generation of the Renaissance and his art did not reach the spiritual heights of a Fra *Angelico, it was far from the pagan style of somewhat later times. He exercised a considerable influence on the subsequent development of devotional art, and his pictures of the Annunciation became the usual models for the theme in the future. He was the father of the painter Filippino Lippi (c. 1457–1504).

Studies, with reproductions, by E. C. Strutt (London, 1901), Henriette Mendelsohn (Berlin, 1909), R. Oertel (Vienna, 1942), and Mary Pittalugo (Florence, 1949); works on Filippino Lippi by A. Scharf (Vienna, 1935) and Katherine B. Neilson (Harvard–Radcliffe Fine Arts Series, Cambridge, Mass., 1938).

LIPSIUS, RICHARD ADELBERT (1830–92), German Protestant theologian. He studied at Leipzig, and after holding other academic appointments became professor of systematic theology at Jena in 1871. In his Pilatusakten (1871; new ed., 1886) and his Die Apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden (4 vols., 1883–90) he did much towards unravelling problems connected with early Christian apocryphal literature, and in 1891 he edited, in association with M. Bonnet, the still standard collection of Apocryphal Acts. He also made researches into the early history of the Popes, arguing that St. Peter was never in Rome, and into the literary relationships of the early anti-heretical Christian writings. A pronounced liberal in dogmatic theology, he set out his systematic doctrines in a Lehrbuch der evangelisch-protestantischen Dogmatik (1876) and in Philosophie und Religion (1885); but he differed from A. *Ritschl and his disciples in a greater readiness to draw on the theoretical aspects of I. *Kant's idealism. His other writings include Zur Quellenkritik des Epiphanios (1868), Chronologie der römischen Bischöfe (1869), Die Quellen der römischen Petrussage (1872), and Die Quellen der ältesten Ketzergeschichte (1875). He also issued a commentary on Gal., Rom., and Phil. (1891).

A. Neumann, Grundlagen und Grundzüge der Weltanschauung von R. A. Lipsius (1896). Short study by H. Weinel (Tübingen, 1930). F. R. Lipsius in P.R.E. (ed. 3), xi (1902), pp. 520–4; M. Scheibe in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, lii (1906), pp. 7–27.

LISLE, AMBROSE LISLE MARCH PHILLIPPS DE. See De Lisle, Ambrose Lisle March Phillipps.

LISMORE, The Book of. A collection of the Lives of the Irish saints, written in medieval Irish, which was found in the castle at Lismore in 1814.

Facsimile, with introd. by R. A. S. Macalister (Facsimiles in Collotype of Irish Manuscripts, v; Dublin, 1950). Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore, ed., with Eng. tr. and notes, by W. Stokes (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Mediaeval and Modern Series, v; 1890).

LITANY (Gk. λιτανεία, 'a supplication'). A form of prayer consisting of a series of petitions or biddings which are sung or said by a deacon, a priest, or cantors, and to which the people make fixed responses, e.g. Kyrie eleison*, 'Grant, Lord', 'We beseech thee, hear us', &c. The Litany apparently originated at *Antioch in the 4th cent., and thence by way of Asia Minor passed to *Constantinople, whence it spread to the rest of the E. Litanies said by the deacon (ἐκτεναί) figure largely in the Greek liturgies, being the principal element of the devotion of the congregation, from whom the main parts of the service which take place in the sanctuary are concealed by the *iconostasis. From Constantinople the Litany spread also to Rome and the W. Pope *Gelasius I (492–6) introduced a litanic intercession into the Mass of which the Kyrie is the sole surviving relic. The litany became also a favourite form of private prayer. Invocations of saints were a feature in many litanies (see Litany of the Saints). The procession of St. *Mark's Day, instituted at Rome in the 5th cent. or earlier to replace a similar pagan observance, acquired the name of litaniae majores, while the *Rogations were by contrast known as the litaniae minores.

N. Serarius, S.J., Litaneutici seu de Litaniis (Cologne 1609; repr. in his Opuscula Theologica, iii (Mainz, 1611), pp. 60–94). Irish Litanies, ed., with Eng. tr., by C. Plummer (H.B.S., lxii; 1925). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, i (1932), pp. 193–202. A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (ed. 3 by B. Botte, O.S.B., 1953), pp. 80–90; Eng. tr. (1958), pp. 74–80. D. E. Moeller, 'Litanies majeures et rogations' in Questions Liturgiques et Paroissiales, xxiii (1938), pp. 75–91. H. J. Hotham in D.C.A., ii (1880), pp. 999–1005, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, O.S.B., in D.A.C.L., ix (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1540–71, s.v. 'Litanies', with bibl. See also bibl. to Kyrie eleison, Litany of the Saints, and Rogation Days.

LITANY, The (BCP). The form of 'general supplication' appointed to be sung or said after *Morning Prayer on *Sundays, *Wednesdays, and *Fridays. It is also included, with the addition of special suffrages, in the rites of Ordination. It falls into two parts: (1) the invocation of the Persons of the Trinity, the deprecations, the obsecrations, the intercessions, and a final section consisting of invocations, Kyrie eleison and the Lord's Prayer; and (2) versicles and responses, followed by collects, which are an adaptation of a special intercession in time of war. The Litany was first issued by T. *Cranmer in 1544 for use in the processions ordered by *Henry VIII at a time when England was at war with Scotland and France. Cranmer drew mostly on the Latin litanies then in use in England, esp. the *Sarum *Rogationtide Litany, but also on M. *Luther's 'Latin Litany' of 1529 and the Deacon's Litany in the 'Liturgy of St. John *Chrysostom'. Though he added little or nothing of his own, he made a notable change in the rhythm by grouping several suffrages under one response. In 1544 the invocations of the Trinity were followed by three invocations of saints; these were omitted when the Litany was included in the First BCP (1549). Minor changes were made in later versions of the BCP and the collects at the end have been altered several times. The appointment of Wednesday and Friday as Litany days coincides with Lutheran usage.

Text of the Litanies of 1544, 1552, and 1661, with indication of sources, in F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, i (1915), pp. 174–91. W. H. Karslake, The Litany of the English Church Considered in its History, its Plan, and the Manner in which it is Intended to be Used (1876). E. G. C. F. Atchley, The People's Prayers. Being some Considerations on the Use of the Litany in Public Worship (*Alcuin Club Tracts, vi; 1906). Cf. also Brightman, op. cit., pp. lviii–lxviii, and see bibl. to Book of Common Prayer.

LITANY DESK. In the C of E, a low movable desk placed in the midst of the church, within or without the chancel, at which the minister kneels to recite the Litany in acc. with *Injunctions 24 of 1547 and 18 of 1559.

LITANY OF LORETO, The. A Litany in honour of the BVM, consisting of a series of invocations of our Lady under various honorific titles, such as 'Mother of Divine grace', 'Virgin most prudent', 'Queen of Angels', &c., each followed by the request: 'Pray for us'. It derives its name from the famous Italian shrine, where its use is attested for the year 1558; but it is doubtful whether it was first sung at *Loreto and did not rather arise under *Dominican influence in the confraternities of the Rosary and thence make its way to the shrine. It is a simplified version of older Litanies of our Lady, which first appeared in the 12th cent. It was approved and indulgenced by *Sixtus V in 1587, and again by *Clement VIII in 1601. In the course of time more titles were added to the original series, e.g. 'Queen of the Most Holy Rosary', 'Queen conceived without Original Sin', and 'Mother of Good Counsel' by *Leo XIII, 'Queen of Peace' by *Benedict XV in 1917, and 'Queen assumed into Heaven' by *Pius XII after the definition of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM. It is often recited in RC churches after the service of *Benediction, and has been used in many religious orders, e.g. by the *Carmelites, every day after Vespers, and by the Dominicans on Saturdays after *Compline.

A. De Santi, S.J., Le Litanie lauretane (1897; Fr. tr., 1900). J. Sauren, Die lauretanische Litanei nach Ursprung, Geschichte und Inhalt dargestellt (Kempten, 1895). K. Kammer, Die lauretanische Litanei (Innsbruck, 1960). A. De Santi in C.E., ix (1910), pp. 286–90, s.v.

LITANY OF THE SAINTS, The. In the W. Church this litany is in regular use. It consists of invocations for mercy and deliverance addressed to the three Persons of the Trinity and for intercession to the BVM and a list of prophets, patriarchs, angels, apostles, saints, confessors, and virgins individually and in classes. Early forms of such a litany are found in the East from the end of the 3rd cent. and in the West from the late 5th cent. A later stage is represented in the 'Athelstan Psalter' (9th cent.), the *Stowe Missal and the 'Book of *Cerne'. The list of saints invoked varied locally and increased in length through the Middle Ages until in 1570 it became necessary to obtain papal licence to differ from the use of Rome. It was revised in 1969, when some modern saints were introduced. Acc. to current RC practice, the longer form may be used for solemn intercessions at any time; a shortened form is used for *Ordinations, dedications of churches and during the Paschal Vigil Service; and a further form exists in the Commendatio Animae. The practice of reciting the Greater Litanies on St. *Mark's day was suppressed in 1969 and it is no longer obligatory on the *Rogation days (q.v.). Other litanies, e.g. the *litany of Loreto and that of St. *Joseph, are used in private devotion. See also Deprecatio Gelasii.

H. Samson, Die Allerheiligen-Litanei geschichtlich, liturgisch und ascetisch erklärt (1894). C. Kammer, Die Litanei von Allen Heiligen, die Namen-Jesu-Litanei, die Josefs-Litanei (Innsbruck, 1962). E. *Bishop, 'The Litany of the Saints in the Stowe Missal' in J.T.S., vii (1906), pp. 122–36; repr., with additional note, in Liturgica Historica (Oxford, 1918), pp. 137–64. M. Coens, S.J., 'Anciennes Litanies des saints' in Anal. Boll., liv (1936), pp. 5–37; lv (1937), pp. 49–69; lix (1941), pp. 272–98; lxii (1944), pp. 126–68. S. A. van Dijk, O.F.M., 'The Litany of the Saints on Holy Saturday' in J.E.H., i (1950), pp. 51–62. F. Mersham in C.E., ix (1910), p. 291 f., s.v.

LITERATE. In the C of E a cleric who has been admitted to holy orders without a university degree. Canon 58 of 1604 permitted such ministers 'to wear upon their surplices, instead of hoods, some decent *tippet of black, so it be not silk'.

LITERARY CRITICISM. See Higher Criticism.

LITTLE BROTHERS OF JESUS. See De Foucauld, Charles Eugène.

LITTLE ENTRANCE. See Lesser Entrance.

LITTLE FLOWER OF JESUS, The. A popular designation of St. *Teresa of Lisieux (q.v.), who frequently so describes herself in her autobiography.

LITTLE FLOWERS OF ST. FRANCIS (the 'Fioretti'). A classic collection of legends and traditions about St. *Francis of Assisi (d. 1226) and his companions. It is apparently an anonymous Tuscan translation of 53 chapters of the 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius' which was written by Fra Ugolini Boniscambi of Montegiorgio c. 1325, to which the translator added 'Five Considerations of the Holy Stigmata' derived from other sources as well as from the 'Actus'. The translation dates from c. 1375. It gives an exquisite picture of the religious life and spirit of the early Franciscans. In some 15th cent. MSS. and modern editions other material has been added.

Editio princeps, Vicenza, 1476. Modern edd. by G. Pagnani, O.F.M. (Rome, 1959), and, incl. the later additions, by R. Pratesi, O.F.M., with note by B. Bughetti, O.F.M. (Florence, 1960), and among the writings of St. Francis ed. A. Vicinelli (Verona, 1955), pp. 255–397. The numerous Eng. trr. include that ed. H. E. *Manning, 1864; revised by R. Huddleston, O.S.B. (Orchard Books, 1926; with new introd., 1953) and the modern translation by L. Sherley-Price (Penguin Classics, 1959). 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius' ed. P. *Sabatier (Collection d'Études et de Documents sur l'Histoire religieuse et littéraire du Moyen Âge, iv; 1902). G. Pagnani, O.F.M., 'Contributi alla questione dei "Fioretti de S. Francesco" ' in A.F.H., xlix (1956), pp. 3–16. R. Brown in N.C.E., v (1967), p. 932 f., s.v. 'Fioretti, The'.

LITTLE GIDDING. A manor, 11 miles NW of Huntingdon, where the Ferrar family lived under a definite religious rule from 1625 to 1646. The household, some forty persons in all, consisted of Nicholas *Ferrar, in deacon's orders, his mother Mary, and the families of his brother and sister. A systematic rule of devotion and work was followed. At the beginning of every hour, from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m., there was an office of a quarter of an hour, in which several groups of the community took their turn. It consisted of a hymn and portions from the Psalms and the Gospels, the whole of the Psalter being thus recited every day and the Gospels once a month. In addition to this two or more members watched every night from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., once more reciting the whole of the Psalter. Ferrar himself kept this watch two, and later three, times a week. Besides prayer, the community engaged in charitable works for the whole neighbourhood. Its members visited and relieved the poor and sick, and ran a dispensary and a school for the village children. They were also skilled in the art of bookbinding, and the famous 'Harmonies', now in the British Museum, were arranged, illustrated, and bound by them under Ferrar's direction. For recreation they had a study circle called the Little Academy, which met frequently to tell and discuss stories illustrating events in the Church's year and Christian virtues.

The house was visited by *Charles I and G. *Herbert. After Nicholas Ferrar's death in 1637 the community continued until it was raided by O. *Cromwell's soldiers in 1646, when its members were dispersed. The house has disappeared, but the church still stands. Interest in Ferrar and his community was reawakened by the publication of J. H. *Shorthouse's famous novel, John Inglesant (1881), with its vivid and, except for the romance of Mary Collett, historically accurate picture of life at Little Gidding; it received further impetus from the poem 'Little Gidding' included in T. S. *Eliot's Four Quartets (1944).

The Arminian Nunnery; or a Brief Description and Relation of the late erected Monastical Place, called the Arminian Nunnery, at Little Gidding in Huntingdonshire (1641). H. Collett, Little Gidding and its Founder (1925). J. E. Acland, Little Gidding and its Inmates in the Time of Charles I (1903). Appendix on 'Little Gidding' by W. Page in The Victoria History of the County of Huntingdon, i (1926), pp. 399–406. E. C. Sharland (ed.), The Story Books of Little Gidding (1899); A. M. Williams (ed.), Conversations at Little Gidding. 'On the Retirement of Charles V', 'On the Austere Life'. Dialogues by Members of the Ferrar Family (Cambridge, 1970). See also bibl. s.v. Ferrar, Nicholas.

LITTLE LABYRINTH, The. A lost 3rd cent. treatise which was directed against the *Adoptionist heretics, *Theodotus and *Artemon. It is referred to under this title (ὁ σμικρὸς λαβύρινθος) by *Theodoret (Haer. Fab. Comp., ii. 5), who ascribes it to *Origen, and two passages are quoted by *Eusebius (H.E., v. 28). Its authorship was assigned with some probability by J. B. *Lightfoot and A. *Harnack, who are followed by O. *Bardenhewer, to St. *Hippolytus, though G. *Salmon wished to attribute it to *Gaius. It is to be distinguished from another writing, the 'Labyrinth', mentioned by *Photius (Cod. 48), which is very probably to be identified with Book X of St. Hippolytus's Refutatio.

J. B. Lightfoot, St. Clement of Rome, ii (ed. 1890), pp. 377–80. R. H. *Connolly, O.S.B., 'Eusebius H.E. v. 28' in J.T.S., xlix (1948), pp. 73–9. Bardenhewer, ii, p. 567 f. G. Salmon in D.C.B., i (1877), pp. 384–6, s.v. 'Caius (2)'.

LITTLE OFFICE OF OUR LADY (Officium Parvum Beatae Mariae Virginis). A brief office in honour of the BVM, modelled on the Divine *Office; it was thus divided into the traditional seven hours, but Mattins had only one *Nocturn with three Psalms and three Lessons, and the Psalms of the other hours did not vary acc. to the days of the week. It was first known in the 10th cent. It originated in the religious orders, being early adopted by the *Cistercians and *Camaldulensians, and was later taken over by the secular clergy. In the Middle Ages the Little Office of Our Lady was widely reproduced in 'Books of Hours', many of which were richly illuminated. It was retained at the *Breviary Reform of *Pius V in 1568, though the obligation of its recitation was no longer binding under sin; *Pius X removed the obligation altogether, though recommending it as a private devotion. It became the ordinary form of vocal prayer of a number of new congregations of women and its recitation was frequently enjoined upon *Tertiaries. In 1953 a revision was approved. This affords greater variety by dividing the year into six seasons (instead of two), with special lessons, collects, etc., and provides for the observance of 28 feasts (of which 12 are Marian).

Facsimile ed. of two 11th-cent. MSS. ed., with introd., by E. S. Dewick (H.B.S., xxi; 1902), with reff.; a 15th-cent. MS. ed. H. Littlehales, The Prymer or Lay Folks' Prayer Book (E.E.T.S., Orig. Series, cv, cix; 1895–7), with important essay by E. *Bishop, 'The Origin of the Prymer', pp. xi–xxxviii, repr. in Bishop's Liturgica Historica (1918), pp. 211–27. E. Taunton, The Little Office of Our Lady. A Treatise Theoretical, Practical, and Exegetical (1903). E. Hoskins, Horae Beatae Mariae Virginis or Sarum and York Primers with Kindred Books and Primers of the Reformed Roman Use (1901). J. Leclercq, O.S.B., 'Fragmenta Mariana', part 2, 'Formes successives de l'office votif de la Vierge' in E.L., lxxii (1958), pp. 294–301; id., 'Formes anciennes de l'office mariale', ib., lxxiv (1960), pp. 89–102. H. Bohatta, Bibliographie des Livres d'heures (Vienna, 1909). L. A. St. L. Toke in C.E., ix (1910), p. 294 f.

LITTLE OFFICES. Originally, very short offices modelled on the *Little Office of Our Lady, intended for devotional recitation. Recently the term has been more commonly used of forms of prayer, based on the Divine *Office, usually with a reduced content of Psalms and a modern lectionary. While it had long been customary for devout laity and religious not bound to recite the choir offices acc. to the Roman or monastic *Breviary to use the *Day Hours alone (omitting *Mattins) or the Little Office of Our Lady, in modern times a number of other 'Little Offices' have been compiled, mainly in the vernacular, to meet the needs of those not completely satisfied with the existing books and to provide some liturgical content for their common prayer. Among those most widely used are the Officium Divinum Parvum compiled by H. Fleischmann, O.S.B. (Freiburg, 1933; revised 1950), used particularly in German-speaking countries; A Short Breviary for Religious and the Laity, edited by the Monks of St. John's Abbey, Collegeville (Collegeville, 1940; new ed. by W. G. Heidt, O.S.B., ib., 1954), which circulated widely esp. in U.S.A.; Klein Brevier by T. Stallaert, C.SS.R. (Haarlem–Antwerp, 1950; Eng. tr., 1957; also tr. into Fr. and Ital.); Bréviaire des fidèles by A. M. Henry, O.P. (1951); and the Livre d'heures compiled by the Benedictines of En-Calcat (1952), which has predominated in French-speaking countries. Although these shortened offices were given a certain status by the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council (1963), it seems likely that they will be superseded now that the reform of the Breviary is completed.

H. A. P. Schmidt, S.J., Introductio in Liturgiam Occidentalem (Freiburg, 1960), pp. 472–83. L. J. Doyle in N.C.E., ii (1967), p. 793, s.v. 'Breviary, Short'.

LITTLE SISTERS. See De Foucauld, Charles Eugène.

LITTLEDALE, RICHARD FREDERICK (1833–1890), liturgical writer and Anglo-Catholic apologist. He came of an Irish family but lived in England from c. 1855, holding curacies from 1856 to 1861, when ill-health forced him to abandon parochial work. His Plain Reasons against joining the Church of Rome (1880) enjoyed a wide circulation. He also completed J. M. *Neale's Commentary on the Psalms from Primitive and Medieval Writers (4 vols., 1860–74). With J. E. Vaux, he was the first editor of The Priest's Prayer Book (1864).

G. C. Boase in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), p. 364 f., s.v.

LITURGICAL COLOURS. See Colours, Liturgical.

LITURGICAL MOVEMENT. A movement of which the object is the restoration of the active participation of the people in the official worship of the Church. In the RC Church the revival may be traced to P. L. R. *Guéranger (q.v.), but it received its chief impetus from the directions of *Pius X relating to Church music (1903) and to the promotion of Eucharistic piety and frequent communion. It was fostered esp. by the *Benedictines, e.g. the abbeys of *Solesmes in France, *Maredsous and Mont-César in Belgium, and *Maria Laach in Germany. From c. 1910 the movement spread to Holland, Italy and England, and later to the United States of America and elsewhere. In England there had been some restoration of traditional liturgical worship under Cardinal N. *Wiseman in the 19th cent., but a later stage of the Continental movement was popularized largely through the writings of F. *Cabrol on the liturgy and esp. his English-Latin Missal (1921). In 1929 the Society of St. Gregory was founded to encourage the active participation of the laity in worship through the propagation of *plainchant. At about the time of the Second World War in France, and soon afterwards in Germany, the impetus of the movement spread outside the monastic centres into the parochial and missionary spheres, and from then on the movement took a more pastoral direction. The attempt to restore the scrupulous observance of the rite in the form in which it had developed in the Middle Ages and later was joined by pressure for a reform of the rite itself in order to bring it into line with much earlier liturgical understanding and practice and with the pastoral and evangelistic needs of the day. These aspirations lay behind the development of the 'dialogue mass' in which the people joined in the responses, and the custom of reading a vernacular version of the liturgy in the body of the church at the same time as the priest celebrated in Latin. In his encyclical Mediator Dei (20 Nov. 1947) *Pius XII gave considerable encouragement to the liturgical movement by his insistence on the importance of the liturgy and the need for the participation of the people, though at the same time he stressed the need for proper order. From this time permission was given for the use of the vernacular in the administration of all sacraments except the Eucharist; and the reform of the rites began with the revision of the Holy Week liturgy in 1951 and 1955 (see Good Friday, Maundy Thursday and Paschal Vigil Service). The Second *Vatican Council in its 'Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy' (1963) endorsed the aims of the liturgical movement, encouraging the active participation of the people in the liturgy, and legislated for the use of the vernacular and the reform of the rites which is now almost complete (a new Ordo Missae, lectionary and calendar appeared in 1969 and a definitive Roman Missal in 1970).

The renewed interest in the liturgy has not been confined to the RC Church. The Ritualist Movement, inaugurated by the *Tractarians to give sacramental worship a central place in the C of E, grew steadily in the early part of the 20th cent. More recently there has been a tendency to change the traditional pattern of Sunday worship from a plain celebration of the Eucharist at an early hour, followed by either Morning Prayer or a Solemn Eucharist at which only the celebrant communicated; the tendency has been to replace these services by one 'Parish Communion' at which there is some singing and often a short sermon and at which nearly all present communicate. This has often been accompanied by ceremonial developments (mainly taken over from the RC Church) which are intended to stress the corporate aspects of the liturgy, such as the adoption of a '*westward position' by the celebrant and an 'offertory procession' in which members of the congregation bring the bread and wine up to the altar. The same influences which have been felt at work in the RC Church have also played some part in the revisions of the liturgy authorized by the Prayer Book (*Alternative and other Services) Measure (1965). Similar tendencies have been at work in most other Churches, possibly partly at least in reaction against the individualism by which nearly all Churches have been affected since the 16th cent.

O. Rousseau, O.S.B., Histoire du mouvement liturgique. Esquisse historique depuis le début du XIX* siècle jusqu'au pontificat de Pie X (Lex Orandi, iii; 1945), with bibl.; J. H. Srawley, The Liturgical Movement. Its Origin and Growth (*Alcuin Club Tracts, xxvii; 1954). E. B. Koenker, The Liturgical Renaissance in the Roman Catholic Church (Chicago, 1954). J. D. Benoit, Liturgical Renewal. Studies in Catholic and Protestant Developments on the Continent (Studies in Ministry and Worship, v; 1958). What is the Liturgical Movement? by Priests of St Séverin (Paris) and St Joseph (Nice), adapted into English by L. C. Sheppard [1964]. H. Davies, Worship and Theology in England. The Ecumenical Century, 1900–1965 (1965), esp. pp. 13–49.

L. *Beauduin, O.S.B., La Piété de l'Église (1914). La Participation active des fidèles au culte (Cours et conférences des Semaines Liturgiques, xi; Louvain, 1933). A. G. Hebert (ed.), The Parish Communion (1937). A. R. Shands, The Liturgical Movement and the Local Church (1959; revised ed., 1965). M. H. Shepherd, Jr. (ed.), The Liturgical Renewal of the Church. Addresses of the Liturgical Conference held in Grace Church, Madison, May 19–21, 1958 (New York, 1960). Id., The Reform of Liturgical Worship. Perspectives and Prospects (Bohlen Lectures, 1959; New York, 1961). J. D. Crichton, The Church's Worship. Considerations on the Liturgical Constitution of the Second Vatican Council (1964), incl. Eng. tr. of the Constitution. Id.–H. E. Winstone–J. R. Ainslee (edd.), English Catholic Worship. Liturgical Renewal in England since 1900 (1979).

LITURGIOLOGY. A cumbersome term for the scientific study of liturgies and related subjects. Its first appearance is in the title of J. M. *Neale's Essays on Liturgiology and Church History (1863).

LITURGY (Gk. λειτουργία from λεώς 'people' and ἔργον 'work'). The original Gk. word was used of a public work of any kind, not only religious, but by the time of the *Septuagint it had come to be applied particularly to the services of the *Temple. The word in English is used in two senses, viz. (1) Of all the prescribed services of the Church, e.g. incl. the canonical hours, as contrasted with private devotion. And (2), specifically as a title of the *Eucharist (as the chief act of public worship). It is commonly so used among the Eastern Churches. In derived senses the word is further used: (1) of the written texts which order such services (e.g. the 'Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom'), and (2) as a general name for the branch of study (more cumbrously 'liturgiology') which concerns itself with these Liturgies.

Among the classic collections of liturgical documents and texts are those of J. *Mabillon, E. *Martène, B. *Gavanti, G. M. *Tommasi, E. *Renaudot (qq.v.). Cf. also F. *Cabrol, O.S.B.–H. *Leclercq, O.S.B., Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica, I: Reliquiae Liturgicae Vetustissimae (Paris, 1900–2), F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, i (Eastern Liturgies, 1895; all publd.), and J. Quasten (ed.), Monumenta Eucharistica et Liturgica Vetustissima (Florilegium Patristicum, vii; Bonn, 1935). Imp. modern studies include P. *Guéranger, O.S.B., Institutiones Liturgicae (4 vols., Paris, 1878–85); L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889); C. Harris–W. K. Lowther Clarke (edd.), Liturgy and Worship. A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932); N. Micklem (ed.), Christian Worship. Studies in its History and Meaning by Members of Mansfield College (1936); L. Eisenhofer, Grundriss der Liturgik des römischen Ritus (1924; ed. 5, J. Lechner, 1950); id., Handbuch der Katholischen Liturgik (2 vols., 1932–3); C. Callewaert, Liturgicae Institutiones: De Sacra Liturgia universim (Bruges, 1933); A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (Chevetogne, 1939; ed. 3 by B. Botte, O.S.B., 1953; Eng. tr., 1958). M. Righetti, U.J.D., Manuale di storia liturgica (4 vols., Milan, 1944–53; ed. 2, 1950–59; ed. 3, 1964 ff.). A. G. Martimort and others, L'Église en prière. Introduction à la liturgie ([1962]; ed. 3, 1965). On the whole subject, A. Baumstark, Vom geschichtlichen Werden der Liturgie (Ecclesia Orans. x; 1923), and K. Mohlberg, O.S.B., Ziele und Aufgaben der liturgiegeschichtlichen Forschungen (Münster i.W., 1919). Among periodicals devoted mainly or exclusively to the furtherance of liturgical studies are Ephemerides Liturgicae (Rome, 1887 ff.), Les Questions liturgiques et paroissiales (Louvain, 1911 ff.), Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (1921 ff.), contd. since 1951 as Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, Ambrosius (Milan, 1925 ff.), Sacris Erudiri (Bruges, 1948 ff.), and Liturgisches Jahrbuch (Münster, 1951 ff.); also the series Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen (Münster, 1918 ff.), Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta cura Pontificii Athenaei Sancti Anselmi de Urbe edita (Rome, 1956 ff.), and the D.A.C.L. (unhappily its interesting and often sparkling artt. suffer from innumerable inaccuracies). P. Radó, O.S.B., Enchiridion Liturgicum (2 vols., Rome, 1961; ed. 2, 1966); L. Brinkhoff, O.F.M., and others, Liturgisch Woordenboek (2 vols., 1958–68).

LIUDHARD, St. (d. c. 602), chaplain of Queen Bertha, who brought him from Gaul to England, as was arranged by the terms of her marriage to *Ethelbert, king of Kent (*Bede, H.E., i. 25). He probably ministered in St. Martin's Church at *Canterbury. *William of Malmesbury (untrustworthy) represents him as having been prominent in preparing for the evangelization of Kent by the Roman mission of St. *Augustine. Feast day, 4 Feb.

The principal authority is Bede, H.E., i. 25; notes in ed. by C. Plummer, ii (Oxford, 1896), p. 42. Later lives listed in Hardy, i (pt. 1; 1862) p. 175 f. William of Malmesbury, Gesta Regum, i. 9 (ed. W. *Stubbs, i, Rolls Series, 1887 p. 13).

LIUTPRAND (c. 922 – c. 972), Bp. of Cremona. Of a noble Lombard family, he was ordained deacon at Pavia and later became Chancellor to Berengar of Italy, who sent him in 949 on an embassy to the Byzantine court. On his subsequent disgrace, he attached himself to the Emp. Otto I, who made him Bp. of Cremona in 961. In 963 he was sent as an ambassador to Rome, where he took part in the assembly which deposed *John XII, and later (968) to *Constantinople, where he negotiated the marriage between Otto's son (afterwards Otto II) and Theophano, the daughter of the Byzantine Emperor. Liutprand is the chief authority for the Italian history of his period, but he allowed rhetoric and prejudice to obscure accuracy and objectivity. His principal writings were 'Antapodosis', which relates the events from 888 to 949; 'Historia Ottonis', which covers the years 960–4; and a 'Relatio de Legatione Constantinopolitana' of the years 968–9. The ascription of the *Liber Pontificalis to him is erroneous.

Collected ed. of his works by H. de la Higuera–L. Ramirez de Prado (Antwerp, 1640); crit. ed. by J. Becker (M.G.H., Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum; 1915). Eng. tr. by F. A. Wright (Broadway Medieval Library, 1930), with introd., pp. 1–24. M. Lintzel, Studien über Liutprand von Cremona (Historische Studien, Hft. 233; 1933), with further reff., repr. in his Ausgewählte Schriften, ii (1961), pp. 351–98. G. Arnaldi, 'Liutprando e l'idea di Roma nell'alto medioevo' in Archivio della Società Romana di Storia Patria, lxxix (1956), pp. 23–34. J. E. Rexine, 'The Roman Bishop Liutprand and Constantinople', in Greek Orthodox Theological Review, iii (1957), pp. 197–211.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRALS. (1) The Anglican Cathedral was designed in the Romantic Gothic style by G. G. *Scott (RC; 1880–1960), the winner of an architectural competition in 1903. Built of local sandstone, on a massive scale, high on St. James's Mount, it dominates Merseyside. The foundation stone was laid in 1904. The Lady Chapel was consecrated in 1910 and the chancel in 1924. After his death, Scott's partner shortened and simplified the plans for the west end, consolidating the building symmetrically about the central tower. It was completed in 1978.

(2) The RC Cathedral. A large Gothic revival building was originally designed by A. W. *Pugin in 1853, on a site at Everton, but only the Lady Chapel was built. In 1930 Sir Edwin Lutyens (1869–1944) designed a massive domed building for a new site in the centre of the city; the foundation stone was laid in 1934, but the Second World War and rises in building costs caused it to be abandoned on completion of the crypt. Sir Frederick Gibberd's design, the winner of an architectural competition in 1959, is a circular and completely modern building, incorporating the crypt. A congregation of 2,000 people can encircle the central altar, which is surmounted by a tower of coloured glass. The Cathedral is dedicated to Christ the King and was consecrated in May 1967.

(1) V. E. Cotton, The Book of Liverpool Cathedral (1928; revised, 1964). J. Riley, Today's Cathedral. The Cathedral Church of Christ, Liverpool (1978).

(2) F. Gibberd, Metropolitan Cathedral of Christ the King Liverpool (1968). A. S. G. Butler and others, The Architecture of Sir Edwin Lutyens, iii (1950), pp. 47–51.

LIVINGSTONE, DAVID (1813–73), African missionary and explorer. A native of Blantyre in Strathclyde, he educated himself by omnivorous reading while employed in a cotton factory. The study of Thomas Dick's Philosophy of a Future State determined him to devote his life to missionary work and the alleviation of human suffering; and after attending medical classes in Glasgow he went to London in 1838, where he joined the *London Missionary Society, at first contemplating work in *China. In 1840, inspired by R. *Moffat, he embarked for the Cape of Good Hope and for some years worked as a missionary in the Bechuana country. Here he became passionately interested in Africa and worked for several years among the African people, winning their confidence by his medical work and schools. Reports of his explorations and experiences aroused wide interest in England and he was greeted with enthusiasm on his return in 1856. In 1858 he resumed his travels in Africa, no longer under the auspices of the L.M.S., as he had ceased to be a missionary in the technical sense. In 1861, however, he gave pioneer help to the *U.M.C.A. (q.v.). In 1859 he discovered the lakes of Shirwa and Nyasa; he later explored the basin of the Upper Nile and discovered Lake Bangweulu in 1868. In 1871 he was found in a state of exhaustion by H. M. *Stanley of the New York Herald. He died in 1873 in the village of Ilala and was buried in *Westminster Abbey. His principal works were his Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa (1857) and The Zambesi and its Tributaries (1865), which both had a wide circulation.

Livingstone's Private Journals, 1851–1853, ed. I. Schapera (London, 1960); African Journal, 1853–1856, ed. id. (2 vols., ib., 1963); The Zambesi Expedition . . ., 1858–1863. Journals with letters and dispatches, ed. J. P. R. Wallis (2 vols., ib., 1956); Last Journals in Central Africa from 1865 to his Death, ed. H. Waller (2 vols., London, 1874). Some Letters from Livingstone, 1840–1872, ed. D. Chamberlin (ib., 1940); Family Letters, 1841–1856, ed. I. Schapera (2 vols., ib., 1959). The Zambesi Doctors. David Livingstone's Letters to John Kirk 1858–1872, ed. R. Foskett (Edinburgh, 1964). Lives include those of W. G. Blaikie (London, 1880; the official biography), T. Hughes (ib., 1889), H. H. Johnston (ib., 1891), R. J. Campbell (ib., 1929), D. C. Somervell (ib., 1936), J. I. Macnair (ib., 1940), J. Simmonds (ib., 1955), and G. Seaver (ib., 1957). R. Coupland, Livingstone's Last Journey (1945). R. H. Vetch in D.N.B., xxxiii (1893), pp. 384–96.

LLANDAFF. Cathedral city in Wales, two miles north of the centre of Cardiff. The ancient diocese comprised Gwent, S., Mid and much of W. Glamorgan, with some parishes in Powys. In 1921 the diocese of Monmouth was formed out of it. Its early history, down to 1132, is told in the 'Book of Llandaff', which, however, is not a trustworthy authority. Acc. to this the first church was built in Llandaff by King *Lucius in the 2nd cent. The monastery itself seems not to have been founded by St. *Dubricius or Dyfrig (d. c. 546), whose name survives in Llandaff, but by his disciple, St. *Teilo (d. c. 560), who became its first abbot and bishop, a combination not unusual in early medieval Britain. The first abbots of Llandaff were styled 'archbishops', but the title probably expressed only the primacy of an episcopal abbot of the principal abbey over those of the subordinate monasteries. With the change from the monastic to the diocesan episcopate the diocesans were styled bishops, and in 1107 became suffragans of *Canterbury. In 1120 Bp. Urban (1107–33) began to build its cathedral. Bp. Anthony Kitchin (d. 1563) was the only English bishop to take the Oath of Supremacy in 1559. In the early years of the Elizabethan Reformation the diocese was a centre of *recusancy, but in the later 17th cent. it became a stronghold of *Puritanism. During the 18th and the first half of the 19th cent. Llandaff was unfortunate in its bishops, who were mostly Englishmen with little interest in their diocese; but from the middle of the 19th cent. Church life revived. Between 1844 and 1869 the medieval cathedral, much of which was in a ruinous condition, was restored. Many new churches and mission halls were built, and in 1907 St. Michael's Theological College (originally founded at Aberdare in 1892) was moved to Llandaff. The cathedral was badly damaged in an air raid in 1941; when it was restored in 1957 an impressive figure of 'Christ in Majesty' by Sir Jacob Epstein (d. 1959) was placed high at the east end of the nave.

The 'Book of Llandaff' was ed., with Eng. tr., by W. J. Rees (Welsh Manuscript Society, i; 1840); suppl. notes by T. Wakeman appended (sep. pagination) to W. J. Rees, Lives of the Cambro-British Saints (ib., iv; 1853). Text reproduced from the Gwysaney MS., with transcription, by I. G. Evans and J. Rhys (Series of Old Welsh Texts, iv; Oxford, 1894), with full refft. J. A. Bradney (ed.), Acts of the Bishops of Llandaff [1660–1724] (4 books in 3 vols., Llandaff Records, ii–iv; 1908–12). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272, ii (Historical Society of the Church in Wales, iii–iv; 1948), pp. 607–753. C. Brooke, 'The Archbishops of St. David's, Llandaff and Caerleon-on-Usk' in Nora K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 201–42. J. W. James, 'The Book of Llandav. The Church and See of Llandav and their critics' in Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales, ix (1959), pp. 5–22. W. de G. Birch, Memorials of the See and Cathedral of Llandaff (Neath, 1912). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of Llandaff (1719). E. J. Newell, Llandaff (Diocesan Histories; 1902); E. [A.] Foord, St. David's, Llandaff and Brecon (Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Famous Churches; 1925), pp. 97–124. G. E. Halliday, Llandaff Church Plate [of the Diocese] (1910). J. Fisher in D.E.C.H., pp. 333–5, s.v. See also works cited s.v. Wales, Christianity in.

