BIBLE CONCORDANCE

About the Authors

The late Edward W. Goodrick was for many years on the faculty at Multnomah School of the Bible and was co-editor with John R. Kohlenberger III of various reference works, including Zondervan NIV Exhaustive Concordance.

John R. Kohlenberger III is a specialist in the application of computers to Bible-related reference projects. He was taught at Multnomah School of the Bible and Western Seminary in Portland and has produced The NIV Interlinear Hebrew-English Old Testament and The NRSV Concordance, Unabridged.

PREFACE

New International Bible Concordance is the first concordance available for studying the English text of the New International Version Bible (North American Edition). Like other concordances it is one of the most basic tools of Bible study. It is a special index an alphabetical listing of the words used in the text of the Bible: each word entry is followed by the Scripture references as well as by a brief excerpt from the context in which the word occurs. Thus, a concordance may be used to do word studies, locate and trace biblical themes, and find forgotten references to verses.

In the past, concordances have been produced in different sizes and with different features. Exhaustive concordances list every occurrence of every word in the Bible, no matter how minor or insignificant the word. While exhaustive concordances are valuable reference works containing a wealth of information, they are not handy reference tools. Their large size and great bulk make them difficult to carry and awkward to use. At the other extreme are the greatly abridged concordances commonly placed in the back of a Bible. The convenience of having a small concordance bound with a Bible is indisputable, but the relatively small number of entries greatly restricts the usefulness of the abridged concordance.

There is a middle ground between these two extremes occupied by the New International Bible Concordance. This concordance has been appropriately called "complete" because it lists all the references for every word indexed. In other words, for every entry word every occurrence of that word from Genesis through Revelation is given. In a very few instances this might not appear to be true, though in fact it is. In the English language there are some completely different words with the same spelling. When one of these words was chosen to be indexed and the other, spelled in the same way, was eliminated, it will appear that every occurrence of the word is not given. But in reality, all the references of every indexed word of the same spelling and meaning are listed. There are twelve instance of this:

HIGH is indexed only in the sense of "God MOST HIGH" (the name Elyon).
JUST is indexed in "He was a just man," but omitted in "I just remembered."
LEAVES is indexed in "tree leaves," but omitted in "She leaves her coat."
LEFT is indexed in "left, not right," but omitted in "He left town."
MIGHT is indexed in "with all her might," but omitted in "He might go."
MINE is indexed in "the gold mine," but omitted in "The house is mine."

ON is indexed when a proper noun, but omitted in "on the housetop."
OWN is indexed in "I own a house," but omitted in "one's own house."
PUT is indexed when a proper noun, but omitted in "She put it down."
STILL is indexed in "the still small voice," but omitted in "He is still here."
WELL is indexed in "The well was deep," and in "She is well, not sick," but omitted in "well done."
WILL is indexed in "Do God's will," but omitted when used as an auxiliary verb.

But this is a complete, not an exhaustive, concordance. While every reference is given for every word indexed, not every NIV word is indexed. Every key word in the NIV is indexed, and only those that would have a very limited value in a concordance are omitted. For example, most adverbs and prepositions are not indexed, nor are the definite and indefinite articles (a, an, and the). All NIV words not indexed in this concordance are listed alphabetically in the appendix (see pages 1041 44).

As in any index, all NIV word entries are listed in alphabetical order; however, the alphabetical order is interrupted by punctuation (in particular, hyphens and apostrophes), keeping together words closest to their root word. For example, note the order in this sequence: BROTHER, BROTHER-IN-LAW, BROTHER'S, BROTHERHOOD, BROTHERLY, BROTHERS. In this same connection, the alphabetized word entries are always single words (or hyphenated word combinations), rather than phrases (such as "power of God," "in power," "my power," which appear in some existing concordances).

Another helpful feature of the NIV Complete Concordance is the system of cross-references. Variant spellings due to number, tense, compound forms, etc., of an entry word follow the entry in parentheses. For example, the entry CRUCIFY is followed by (CRUCIFIED CRUCIFYING). Here the cross-references refer the reader to the variant forms found in the NIV of the root word CRUCIFY. The entries CRUCIFIED and CRUCIFYING are both followed by (CRUCIFY), referring back to the root word.

Each variant spelling of a word cross-references back to its root. The entry for the root word also cross-references to all the variant spellings. Word groups closely related to the root are also included in this method of cross-referencing. For example, the entry HEART includes the cross-references HEARTS as well as HARD-HEARTED and WHOLE-HEARTEDLY. In this way, one can often do a topical study as well as a word study. Most entries, however, are not cross-referenced to their negative forms (such as those using the prefix "un" or the suffix "less"). Thus BLAME and BLAMELESS are not cross-referenced to each other, nor are END and ENDLESS.

Two of the names of God have a special feature that should be noted. The Hebrew name Adonai is usually translated "Lord" when referring to God. The proper name of God, Yahweh, is translated "LORD." The former is printed with a capital followed by lower-case letters (Lord) and the latter with a capital letter followed by small capitals (LORD). In this manner they are distinguished in the printed text of the NIV. However, since all the letters of the entry words in the concordance are capitalized, both entry words (Lord and LORD) look the same. To eliminate this confusion, "Lord" is marked with an asterisk (*) and "LORD" with a dagger (†). Both entries also include explanatory footnotes.

Another significant feature of the New International Bible Concordance is the one-line context that follows each reference under the indexed entry words. The excerpted context was selected to show how the entry word was used in each occurrence. The italicized first letter of the entry word represents that word to conserve space and allow for a longer context excerpt.

Two words listed in the concordance have all their occurrences listed, but not all their contexts. The word SELAH, a musical or poetic notation, never has a context; thus, only its references are listed. This is also true of the word AMEN, which is most often an isolated statement.

Sometimes an indexed entry word will occur more than once in the quoted context line. To achieve an accurate count of the number of times a word occurs, one should scan the contexts to see how many letters are italicized. For instance, "holy" occurs three times in the famous songs of Isaiah 6:3 and Revelation 4:8, but each occurrence is indicated in one context line as "H, h, h."

Because this concordance is based on the NIV, the excerpted contexts following the references contain all the marks of punctuation included in the NIV text. One unusual symbol is the "half bracket" (⌞ ⌟). These symbols mark the words that are not in the original languages but have been inserted by the translators for clarity. For example, Ecclesiastes 7:28 includes the word "⌞upright⌟" to clarify the meaning. Consequently, the context given for Ecclesiastes 7:28 under UPRIGHT reads, "I found one ⌞u⌟ man." This is a good translation in the context, but the half brackets indicate that this word was supplied by the translators rather than by the Hebrew text.

The NIV Complete Concordance, the former title of the New International Bible Concordance, was, to the best of our knowledge, the first Bible concordance set by computer technology and database management. Edward W. Goodrick and John R. Kohlenberger III were the innovative scholars who dared to think that biblical scholarship and computer science could successfully produce a concordance. What would have otherwise taken many years to produce was accomplished in less than two years. This concordance set the standard for how virtually all concordances are produced and typeset today.

In 1737 Alexander Cruden completed his famous concordance of the King James Version Bible. The closing words of his preface to the first edition are just as appropriate for the New International Bible Concordance:

> I conclude this preface with praying that God, who hath graciously enabled me to bring this large work to a conclusion, would render it useful to those who seriously and carefully search the scriptures; and grant that the sacred writings, which are so important and highly worthy of esteem, may meet with all that affection and regard which they deserve. May those who profess to believe the scriptures to be a Revelation from God, apply themselves to the reading and study of them; and may they, by the Holy Spirit of God, who indited [inspired] the scriptures, be made wise to salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus, Amen.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many organizations and people have joined forces to produce this concordance.

We applaud the indispensible skills and pioneering computer work of the Portland, Oregon branch of the Control Data Corporation, specifically analysts Bob Lind, Barbara Perz, and especially their principal analyst, Dennis Thomas. We also thank the staff and management of the Scientific Computer Center at Tektronix, Inc. of Beaverton, Oregon, and of the Milne Computer Center at Oregon State University of Corvallis for their services and cooperation.

We commend the typesetting skills of Auto-graphics, Inc. of Monterey Park, California, especially the cheerful cooperation of Bernie Maron in setting the entire concordance from our computer tapes within the span of a single week. We also gratefully acknowledge the painstaking proofreading of Frederick and Mildred Tripp.

We must express our affection and gratitude to the people of the Zondervan Publishing House for their willingness to support a rather large project with not inconsiderable funds, especially to Executive Vice-President Bob DeVries for his vision and faith in the project and its executors, and to editors Paul Hillman, Stan Gundry, and Doris Rikkers for their invaluable interaction and working-out of details.

Finally, we laud the diligent and sacrificial labors of the translators and editors of the New International Version, who spent more than a decade in producing that magnificent translation for the building-up of the Church and to the glory of God. But especially, the selfless and devoted energies of their Executive Secretary, Dr. Edwin H. Palmer, must be singled out. From the commencement of the activities relating to the NIV in 1968 to his untimely passing on September 16, 1980, Dr. Palmer was the organizing and driving force behind the NIV. It is to his memory that this Concordance, the first of the major study tools based on the NIV, is dedicated.
