preaching. shamefully entreated—ignominiously scourged (Acts 16:22, 23). bold—(Acts 4:29; Eph. 6:20). in our God—The ground of our boldness in speaking was the realization of God as "OUR God." with much contention—i.e., lit., as of competitors in a contest: striving earnestness (Col. 1:29; 2:1). But here outward conflict with persecutors, rather than inward and mental, was what the missionaries had to endure (Acts 17:5, 6; Phil. 1:30). 3. For—The ground of his "boldness" (vs. 2), his freedom from all "deceit, uncleanness, and guile"; guile, before God, deceit (Greek, "imposture"), towards men (cf. II Cor. 1:12; 2:17 Eph. 4:14); uncleanness, in relation to one's self (impure motives of carnal self-gratification in gain, vs. 5), or lust; such as actuated false teachers of the Gentiles (Phil. 1:16; II Pet. 2: 10, 14; Jude 8; Rev. 2:14, 15). So Simon Magus and Cerinthus taught [ESTIUS]. exhortation—The Greek means "consolation" as well as "exhortation." The same Gospel which exhorts comforts. Its first lesson to each is that of peace in believing amidst outward and inward sorrows. It comforts them that mourn (cf. vs. 11; Isa. 61:2, 3; II Cor. 1:3, 4). of—springing from—having its source in—deceit, etc. 4. as—according as; even as. allowed—Greek, "We have been approved on trial," "deemed fit." This word corresponds to "God which trieth our hearts" below. This approval as to sincerity depends solely on the grace and mercy of God (Acts 9:15; I Cor. 7:25; II Cor. 3:5; I Tim. 1:11, 12). not as pleasing—not as persons who seek to please men; characteristic of false teachers (Gal. 1:10). 5. used we flattering words—lit., "become (i.e., have we been found) in (the use of) language of flattery"; the resource of those who try to "please men." as ye know—"Ye know" as to whether I flattered you; as to "covetousness," GOD, the Judge of the heart, alone can be "my witness." cloak of—i.e., any specious guise under which I might cloak "covetousness." 6. Lit., "Nor of men (have we been found, vs. 5) seeking glory." The "of" here represents a different Greek word from "of" in the clause "of you . . .of others." ALFORD makes the former (Greek, ex) express the abstract ground of the glory; the latter (apo) the concrete object from which it was to come. The former means "originating from"; the latter means "on the part of." Many teach heretical novelties, though not for fain, yet for "glory." Paul and his associates were free even from this motive [GROTIUS], (John 5:44). we might have been burdensome—i.e., by claiming maintenance (vs. 9; II Cor. 11:9; 12:16; II Thess. 3:8). As, however, "glory" precedes, as well as "covetousness," the reference cannot be restricted to the latter, though I think it is not excluded. Translate, "when we might have borne heavily upon you," by pressing you with the weight of selfglorifying authority, and with the burden of our sustenance. as the apostles—i.e., as being apostles. 7. we were—Greek, "we were made" by God's grace. gentle—Greek, "mild in bearing with the faults of others" [TITTMANN]; one, too, who is gentle (though firm) in reproving the erroneous opinions of others (II Tim. 2:24). Some of the oldest MSS. read, "we became little children" (cf. Matt. 18:3, 4). Others support the English Version reading, which forms a better antithesis to vss. 6, 7, and harmonizes better with what follows; for he would hardly, in the same sentence, compare himself both to the "infants" or "little children," and to "a nurse," or rather, "suckling mother." Gentleness is the fitting characteristic of a nurse. among you—Greek, "in the midst of you," i.e., in our intercourse with you being as one of yourselves. nurse—a suckling mother. her—Greek, "her own children" (cf. vs. 11). So Galatians 4:19. 8. So—to be joined to "we were willing"; "As a nurse cherisheth . . .,so we were willing . . ." [ALFORD]. But BENGEL, "So," i.e., seeing that we have such affection for you. being affectionately destrous—The oldest reading in the Greek implies, lit., to connect one's self with another; to be closely attached to another. willing—The Greek is stronger, "we were well content"; "we would gladly have imparted. . . ." "even our own lives" (so the Greek for "souls" ought to be translated); as we showed in the sufferings we endured in giving you the Gospel (Acts 17). As a nursing mother is ready to impart not only her milk to them, but her life for them, so we not only imparted gladly the spiritual milk of the word to you, but risked our own lives for your spiritual nourishment, imitating Him who laid down His life for His friends, the greatest proof of love (John 15:13). ye were—Greek, "ye were become," as having become our spiritual children. dear—Greek, "dearly beloved." 9. labour and travail—The Greek for "labor" means hardship in bearing; that for "travail," hardship in doing; the former,

ADAM CLARKE

2. Shamefully entreated . . . at Philippi. There Paul and Silas had been beaten with many stripes, shut up in the inner prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks. See Acts xvi. 23 ff. With much contention. The words not only signify "with intense labor and earnestness," but may here mean "exposed to the greatest danger," "at the peril of our lives."

3. Our exhortation. The word has a very extensive meaning; it signifies not only "exhortation" but also "encouragement, consolation," and the like. Not of deceit. We did not endeavor to allure you with false pretenses; we did not deceive you, nor were we deceived ourselves. Nor of uncleanness. Such as the teachings of the Gentile philosophers were; their supreme gods were celebrated for their adulteries, fornication, uncleannesses, thefts, barbarities, and profligacies of the most odious kind. Our gospel was pure; came from the pure and holy God; was accompanied with the influences of the Holy Spirit, and produced purity both in the hearts and in the lives of all that received it. Nor in guile. We had no false pretenses, and were influenced by no sinister motives.

4. But as we were allowed of God. "As we were accounted worthy" to be put in trust, as God put confidence in us and sent us on His most especial message to mankind, even so we speak, keeping the dignity of our high calling continually in view; and acting as in the sight of God, we speak not to please or flatter men, but to please that God who searches the heart.

5. Flattering words. Though we proclaimed the gospel or glad tidings, yet we showed that without holiness none should see the Lord. Ye know. That while we preached the whole gospel we never gave any countenance to sin. Nor a cloke of covetousness. We did not seek temporal emolument; nor did we preach the gospel for a cloak to our covetousness. God is witness that we did not; we sought you, not yours.

6. Nor of men sought we glory. As we preached not for worldly gain, so we preached not for popular applause; we had what we sought for—the approbation of God and the testimony of a good conscience. When we might have been burdensome. They had a right to their maintenance while they devoted themselves wholly to the work of the gospel for the sake of the people's souls.

7. But we were gentle among you. Far from assuming the authority which we had, we acted towards you as a tender nurse or parent does to a delicate child. We fed, counselled, cherished, and bore with you; we taught you to walk, preserved you from stumbling, and led you in a right path.

8. Being affectionately desirous of you. We had such intense love for you that we were not only willing and forward to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to you, but also to give our "own lives" for your sake, because ye were dear, "because you were beloved by us." The words used here by the apostle are expressive of the strongest affection and attachment.

9. Ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail. From this it appears that Paul spent much more time at Thessalonica than is general-

MATTHEW HENRY

3. By bodily labour that his ministry might not be burdensome to them: You remember our labour and travail; for, labouring night and day, &c., v. 9. To the labour of the ministry he added that of his calling, as a tent-maker, that he might get his own bread. He spent part of the night, as well as the day, in this work; that he might have an opportunity to do good to the souls of men in the day time.

4. By the holiness of their conversation, concerning which he appeals not only to them, but to God also (v. 10): You are witnesses, and God also. They were observers of their outward conversation in public before men, and God was witness not only of their behaviour in secret, but of the inward principles from which they acted.

II. He mentions their faithful discharge of the work of the ministry, v. 11, 12. Paul and his fellow-labourers were not only good Christians, but faithful ministers. Paul exhorted the Thessalonians, and he comforted them also, and charged every one of them by personal addresses: this is intended by the similitude of a father's charging his children. He was their spiritual father; and, as he cherished them like a nursing mother, so he charged them as a father, with a father's affection rather than a father's authority. That they would walk worthy of God, who hath called them to his kingdom and glory, v. 12. 1. What is our great gospel privilege—that God has called us to his kingdom and glory. 2. What is our great gospel duty—that we walk worthy of God.

Verses 13–16

I. The success of his ministry among these Thessalonians (v. 13).

1. The manner of their receiving the word of God: When you received the word of God, which you heard of us, you received it, not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God. The word of the gospel is preached by men like ourselves, men of like passions and infirmities with others. However, it is in truth the word of God. Such was the word the apostles preached by divine inspiration, and such is that which is left upon record, and such is that word which in our days is preached. Those are greatly to blame who give out their own fancies or injunctions for the word of God. Those are also to blame who, in hearing the word, look no further than to the ministry of men, or the words of men. We should receive the word of God as the word of God. The words of men are frail and perishing, like themselves, and sometimes false, foolish, and fickle: but God's word is holy, wise, just, and faithful, and abides for ever.

2. The wonderful operation of this word they received: It effectually worketh in those that believe, v. 13. Such as have this inward testimony of the truth of the scriptures have the best evidence of their divine original, though this is not sufficient to convince others who are strangers thereto.

II. The good effects which his successful preaching had,

1. Upon himself and fellow-labourers. It was a constant cause of thankfulness: For this cause thank we God without ceasing, v. 13. He never could be sufficiently thankful that God had counted him faithful, and made his ministrations successful.

toil with the utmost solicitude; the latter, the being wearied with fatigue [GROTIUS]. ZANCHIUS refers the former to spiritual (see ch. 3:5), the latter to manual labor. I would translate, "weariness (so the Greek is translated, II Cor. 11:27) and travail" (hard labor, toil). for—omitted in the oldest MSS. labouring—Greek, "working," viz., at tent-making (Acts 18:3). night and day—The Jews reckoned the day from sunset to sunset, so that "night" is put before "day" (cf. Acts 20:31). Their labors with their hands for a scanty livelihood had to be engaged in not only by day, but by night also, in the intervals between spiritual labors. because we would not be chargeable—Greek, "with a view to not burdening any of you" (II Cor. 11:9, 10). preached unto you—Greek, "unto and among you." Though but "three Sabbaths" are mentioned, Acts 17:2, these refer merely to the time of his preaching to the Jews in the synagogue. When rejected by them as a body, after having converted a few Jews, he turned to the Gentiles; of these (whom he preached to in a place distinct from the synagogue) "a great multitude believed" (Acts 17:4, where the oldest MSS. read, "of the devout [proselytes] AND Greeks a great multitude"); then after he had, by labors continued among the Gentiles for some time, gathered in many converts, the Jews, provoked by his success, assaulted Jason's house, and drove him away. His receiving "once and again" supplies from Philippi, implies a longer stay at Thessalonica than three weeks (Phil. 4:16). 10. Ye are witnesses—as to our outward conduct. God—as to our inner motives. holily—towards God. justly—towards men. unblamably—in relation to ourselves. behaved ourselves—Greek, "were made to be," viz., by God. among you that believe—rather, "before (i.e., in the eyes of) you that believe"; whatever we may have seemed in the eyes of the unbelieving. As vs. 9 refers to their outward occupation in the world; so vs. 10, to their character among believers. 11. exhorted and comforted—Exhortation leads one to do a thing willingly; consolation, to do it joyfully [BENGEL], (ch. 5:14). Even in the former term, "exhorted," the Greek includes the additional idea of comforting and advocating one's cause: "encouragingly exhorted." Appropriate in this case, as the Thessalonians were in sorrow, both through persecutions, and also through deaths of friends (ch. 4: 13). charged—"conjured solemnly," lit., "testifying"; appealing solemnly to you before God. every one of you—in private (Acts 20:20), as well as publicly. The minister, if he would be useful, must not deal merely in generalities, but must individualize and particularize. as a father—with mild gravity. The Greek is, "his own children." 12. worthy of God—"worthy of the Lord" (Col. 1:10); "worthily of the saints" (Rom. 16:2, Greek): "... of the Gospel" (Phil. 1:27) "... of the vocation wherewith ye are called" (Eph. 4:1). Inconsistency would cause God's name to be "blasphemed among the Gentiles" (Rom. 2:24). The Greek article is emphatical, "Worthy of THE God who is calling you." hath called—So one of the oldest MSS. and Vulgate. Other oldest MSS., "Who calleth us." his kingdom—to be set up at the Lord's coming. glory—that ye may share His glory (John 17:22; Col. 3:4). 13. For this cause—Seeing ye have had such teachers (vss. 10, 11, 12) [BENGEL], "we also (as well as 'all that believe' in Macedonia and Achaia) thank God without ceasing ('always' ... 'in our prayers,' ch. 1: 2), that when ye received the word of God which ye heard from us (lit., 'God's word of hearing from us,' Rom. 10:16, 17), ye accepted it not as the word of men, but, even as it is truly, the word of God." ALFORD omits the "as" of English Version. But the "as" is required by the clause, "even as it is truly." "Ye accepted it, not (as) the word of men (which it might have been supposed to be), but (as) the word of God, even as it really is." The Greek for the first "received," implies simply the hearing of it; the Greek of the second is "accepted," or "welcomed" it. The proper object of faith, it hence appears, is the word of God, at first oral, then for security against error, written (John 20:30, 31; Rom. 15:4; Gal. 4:30). Also, that faith is the work of divine grace, is implied by Paul's thanksgiving. effectually worketh also in you that believe—"Also," besides your accepting it with your hearts, it evidences itself in your lives. It shows its energy in its practical effects on you; for instance, working in you patient endurance in trial (vs. 14; cf. Gal. 3:5; 5:6). 14. followers—Greek, "imitators." Divine working is most of all seen and felt in affliction. in Judea—The churches of Judea were naturally the patterns to other churches, as having been the first founded, and that on the very scene of Christ's own ministry. Reference to them is specially approly supposed; for the expressions in this verse denote a long continuance of a constantly exercised ministry, interrupted only by manual labor for their own support; labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto . . . you. Probably Paul and his companions worked with their hands by day, and spent a considerable part of the night, or evenings, in preaching Christ to the people.

10. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily. I.e., in reference to God; how justly in reference to men; and unblameably in reference to our spirit and conduct, as ministers of Christ, we behaved ourselves among you. What a consciousness of his own integrity must Paul have had to use the expressions that are here!

11. How we exhorted. What pastoral care is marked here! They exhorted—were continually teaching and instructing the objects of their charge. And comforted. They found many under trials and temptations, and those they encouraged. And charged. Continued to "witness" to the people that all the threatenings and promises of God were true; that He required faith, love, and obedience; that He could not behold sin with allowance; that Jesus died to save them from their sins; and that, without holiness, none should see God. And all these things they did, not in a general way only, but they spoke to every man; none was left unnoticed, unadmonished, uncomforted. The spirit in which they performed all these branches of the pastoral care was that which was most likely to insure success; as a father treats his children, so they treated every member of the church.

12. That ye would walk worthy of God. That they should, in every respect, act up to their high calling, that it would not be a reproach to the God of holiness to acknowledge them as His sons and daughters. His kingdom and glory. His Church here, for that is the kingdom of God among men; and His glory hereafter, for that is the state to which the dispensations of grace in His Church lead. The words, however, may signify His "glorious kingdom."

13. Ye received the word of God. You received the "doctrine" of God, not as anything fabricated by man, but as coming immediately from God himself, we being only His messengers to declare what He had previously revealed to us. And you have had the fullest proof that you have not believed in vain; for that doctrine, under the power and influence of the Holy Ghost, has "worked most powerfully" in you, filling you with light, life, and holiness.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. Upon them. The word wrought effectually in them. In constancy and patience under sufferings: You became followers of the churches of God, and have suffered like things as they have done (v. 14). The cross is the Christian's mark. It is a good effect of the gospel when we are enabled to suffer for its sake. The sufferings of the churches of God, which in Judæa were in Christ Jesus. Those in Judæa first heard the gospel, and they first suffered for it: for the Jews were the most bitter enemies Christianity had. Bitter zeal and fiery persecution will set countrymen at variance. They were the ringleaders of persecution in all places; so in particular it was at Thessalonica.

Upon this occasion, the apostle gives a character of the unbelieving Jews (v. 15). They killed the Lord Jesus. They killed their own prophets. They hated the apostles, and did them all the mischief they could. No marvel, if they killed the Lord Jesus, that they persecuted his followers. They pleased not God. They had quite lost all sense of religion. They were contrary to all men. Their persecuting spirit was a perverse spirit. Forbidding the apostles to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved. They were envious against the Gentiles, and angry that they should be admitted to share in the means of salvation. Thus did the Jews fill up their sins. For the sake of these things wrath has come upon them to the uttermost; wrath was determined against them, and would soon overtake them. It was not many years after this that Jerusalem was destroyed, and the Jewish nation cut off by the Romans.

The apostle apologizes for his absence: We, brethren, were taken from you, v. 17. He was unwillingly sent away by night to Berea. Though he was absent in body, yet he was present in heart. Even his bodily absence was but for a short time. This world is not a place where we are always, or long, to be together. It is in heaven that holy souls shall meet, and never part more. He earnestly desired and endeavoured to see them again: We endeavoured more abundantly to see your face with great desire, v. 17. But men of business are not masters of their own time. Paul did his endeavour, and he could do no more, v. 18.

Satan hindered his return (v. 18). Satan is a constant enemy to the work of God, and does all he can to obstruct it.

He assures them of his affection and high esteem for them. They were his hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing; his glory

priate here, as the Thessalonians, with Paul and Silas, had experienced from Jews in their city persecutions (Acts 17:5-9) similar to those which "the churches in Judea" experienced from Jews in that country. in Christ Jesus—not merely "in God"; for the synagogues of the Jews (one of which the Thessalonians were familiar with, Acts 17:1) were also in God. But the Christian churches alone were not only in God, as the Jews in contrast to the Thessalonian idolaters were, but also in Christ, which the Jews were not. of your own countrymen—including primarily the Jews settled at Thessalonica, from whom the persecution originated, and also the Gentiles there, instigated by the Jews; thus, "fellow countrymen" (the Greek term, according to HERODIAN, implies, not the enduring relation of fellow citizenship, but sameness of country for the time being), including naturalized Jews and native Thessalonians, stand in contrast to the pure "Jews" in Judea (Matt. 10:36). It is an undesigned coincidence, that Paul at this time was suffering persecutions of the Jews at Corinth, whence he writes (Acts 18:5, 6, 12); naturally his letter would the more vividly dwell on Jewish bitterness against Christians. 15. the Lord Jesus—rather as Greek, "Jesus THE LORD." This enhances the glaring enormity of their sin, that in killing Jesus they killed the LORD (cf. Acts 3:14, 15). their own—omitted in the oldest MSS. prophets—(Matt. 21:33-41; 23:31-37; Luke 13:33). persecuted us—rather as Greek (see Margin), "By persecution drove us out" (Luke 11:49). please not God—i.e., they do not make it their aim to please God.

16. Forbidding—Greek, "Hindering us from speaking. . . ." to fill up their sins alway—Tending thus "to the filling up (the full measure of, Gen. 15:16; Dan. 8:23; Matt. 23:32) their sins at all times," i.e., now as at all former times. Their hindrance of the Gospel preaching to the Gentiles was the last measure added to their continually accumulating iniquity, which made them fully ripe for vengeance. for—Greek, "but." "But," they shall proceed no further, for (II Tim. 3:8) "the"divine "wrath has (so the Greek) come upon (overtaken unexpectedly; the past tense expressing the speedy certainty of the divinely destined stroke) them to the uttermost"; not merely partial wrath, but wrath to its full extent, "even to the finishing stroke" [EDMUNDS]. The past tense implies that the fullest visitation of wrath was already begun. Already in A.D. 48, a tumult had occurred at the Passover in Jerusalem, when about 30,000 (according to some) were slain; a foretaste of the whole vengeance which speedily followed (Luke 19:43, 44; 21:24). 17. But we—resumed from vs. 13; in contrast to the Jews, vss. 15, 16. taken—rather as Greek, "severed (violently, Acts 17:7-10) from you," as parents bereft of their children. So "I will not leave you comfortless," Greek, "orphanized" (John 14:18). for a short time—lit., "for the space of an hour." "When we had been severed from you but a very short time (perhaps alluding to the suddenness of his unexpected departure), we the more abundantly (the shorter was our separation; for the desire of meeting again is the more vivid, the more recent has been the parting) endeavored..." (Cf. II Tim. 1:4.) He does not hereby, as many explain, anticipate a short separation from them, which would be a false anticipation; for he did not soon revisit them. The Greek past participle also forbids their view. 18. Wherefore—The oldest MSS. read, "Because," or "Inasmuch as." we would—Greek, "we wished to come"; we intended to come. even I Paul—My fellow missionaries as well as myself wished to come; I can answer for myself that I intended it more than once. His slightly distinguishing himself here from his fellow missionaries, whom throughout this Epistle he associates with himself in the plural, accords with the fact that Silvanus and Timothy stayed at Berea when Paul went on to Athens; where subsequently Timothy joined him, and was thence sent by Paul alone to Thessalonica (ch. 3:1). Satan hindered us—On a different occasion "the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Jesus" (so the oldest MSS. read), Acts 16:6, 7, forbad or hindered them in a missionary design; here it is Satan, acting perhaps by wicked men, some of whom had already driven him out of Thessalonica (Acts 17:13, 14; cf. John 13:27), or else by some more direct "messenger of Satan—a thorn in the flesh" (II Cor. 12:7; cf. 11:14).

The Greek for "hindered" is lit., "to cut a trench between one's self and an advancing foe, to prevent his progress"; so Satan opposing the progress of the missionaries. 19. For—giving the reason for his earnest desire to see them. Are not even ye in the presence of . . . Christ—"Christ" is

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

I only call your attention to the fact that the apostle says, "Ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus." Here are people converted in Judea, and they are of strongly Jewish type; quite another set of people over at Thessalonica become converted to Christ, and though they are thoroughly of the Greek type, they are very like the converts in Judea. They know nothing about the law of Moses, they have been heathens, worshiping idols; and yet, when they are converted, the strange thing is that they are exceedingly like those Jews over yonder, to whom idolatry was an abomination. Greek believers are like Hebrew believers. They have never spoken to one another, and nobody has been there to tell them the peculiarities of Christians, and yet a family likeness is distinctly visible. Were you never startled with this, that if, in the preaching of the gospel today, we were to bring to the Lord Jesus a person of high rank, and another of the very lowest extraction, they have the same experience, and upon the greatest of subjects they talk in the same way? "Oh, but," you say," they pick up certain phrases." No, no! They differ in speech: the likeness is in heart and character. I frequently meet with converts who have not attended this place of worship more than six times, but they have been converted, and when they come to tell the story of their inner life you would suppose that they had been born and bred among us, and had learned all our ways; for, though they do not use the phrases which we use, yet they say the same things. The fact is, we are all alike lost and ruined, and we are born again in the same way, and we find the Savior in the same way, and we rejoice in Him when we do find Him after much the same fashion, and express ourselves very much after the same style. Believers differ in many things, and yet they are alike in the main things. There are no two exactly alike in all the family of God, and yet the likeness to the Elder Brother is to be seen more or less in each one.
—The Treasury of the New Testament

17. Being taken from you for a short time. Through the persecution raised by the Jews, see Acts xvii, he was obliged to leave Thessalonica, and yield to a storm that it would have been useless for him to withstand. Being taken from you . . . in presence, not in heart. The apostle had compared himself to a parent or nurse, vv. 7 and 11; and the people he considered as his most beloved children. Here he represents himself as feeling what an affectionate father must feel when "torn from his children"; for this is the import of the word "bereft of children," which we tamely translate being taken from you. Endeavoured the more abundantly. His separation from them did not destroy his parental feelings, and the manner in which he was obliged to leave them increased his desire to visit them as soon as possible.

18. Even I Paul. He had already sent Timothy and Silas to them; but he himself was anxious to see them, and had purposed this once and again;

but Satan hindered; i.e., some "adversary," as the word means, whether the devil himself or some of his children.

19. For what is our hope? I can have no prospects from earth; I have forsaken all for the gospel. Why then should I continually labor and joy. Those that sow and those that reap shall rejoice together, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming. Though he should never be able to come to them, yet our Lord Jesus Christ will come.

CHAPTER 3

An account of his sending Timothy to the Thessalonians. Paul was content, for their good, to be left alone at Athens.

I. The character he gives of Timothy (v. 2): We sent Timotheus, our brother. Elsewhere he calls him his son; here he calls him brother. He calls him also a minister of God. He calls him also his fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ. Ministers should strengthen one another's hands, not strive and contend one with another (which will hinder their work), but strive together to carry on the great work they are engaged in.

II. The end why Paul sent Timothy: To establish you and to comfort you concerning your faith, v. 2. He was desirous that they might be confirmed and comforted. The more we are comforted, the more we shall be confirmed. The apostle's design was to establish and comfort the Thessalonians concerning their faith,—concerning the object of their faith,—concerning the recompence of faith.

III. The motive, a godly fear lest they should be moved from the faith of Christ, v. 3.

1. He apprehended there was danger, and feared the consequence.

(1) There was danger by reason of affliction and persecution for the sake of the gospel, v. 3. Those who made profession of the gospel were persecuted, and without doubt these Thessalonians themselves were afflicted. The apostle was afraid lest by any means the tempter had tempted him, v. 5. The devil is a subtle and unwearied tempter. He has often been successful in his attacks upon persons under afflictions.

(2) The consequence the apostle feared was lest his labour should be in vain. It is the devil's design to hinder the good fruit and effect of the preaching of the gospel. If he cannot hinder ministers from labouring he will, if he be able, hinder them of the success of their labours.

2. The apostle tells them what care he took in sending Timothy, (1) To put them in mind of what he had told them before concerning suffering tribulation (v. 4), he says (v. 3), We are appointed thereunto. Their troubles and persecutions did not come merely from the malice of the enemies of religion, but by the appointment of God. Being fore-warned, they should be fore-armed. Besides, it might prove a confirmation of their faith, when they perceived that it only happened to them as was predicted before. (2) To know their faith, whether they remained steadfast. If their faith did not fail, they would be able to stand their ground against the tempter and all his temptations.

omitted in the oldest MSS. Are not even ye (viz., among others; the "even" or "also," implies that not they alone will be his crown) our hope, joy, and crown of rejoicing before Jesus, when He shall come (II Cor. 1:14; Phil. 2:16; 4:1)? The "hope" here meant is his hope (in a lower sense), that these his converts might be found in Christ at His advent (ch. 3:13). Paul's chief "hope" was JESUS CHRIST (I Tim. 1:1). 20. Emphatical repetition with increased force. Who but ye and our other converts are our hope, etc., hereafter, at Christ's coming? For it is ye who ARE now our glory and joy.

VSS. 1-13. PROOF OF HIS DESIRE AFTER THEM IN HIS HAVING SENT TIMOTHY: HIS JOY AT THE TIDINGS BROUGHT BACK CONCERNING THEIR FAITH AND CHARITY: PRAYERS FOR THEM. 1. Wherefore—because of our earnest love to you (ch. 2:17-20). forbear—"endure" the suspense. The Greek is lit. applied to a watertight vessel. When we could no longer contain ourselves in our yearning desire for you. left at Athens alone This implies that he sent Timothy from Athens, whither the latter had followed him. It was an act of self-denial for their sakes that Paul deprived himself of the presence of Timothy at Athens, which would have been so cheering to him in the midst of philosophic cavillers; but from love to the Thessalonians, he is well content to be left all "alone" in the great city. 2. minister of God and our fellow labourer—Some oldest MSS. read, "fellow workman with God"; others, "minister of God." The former is probably genuine, as copyists probably altered it to the latter to avoid the bold phrase, which, however, is sanctioned by I Corinthians 3:9; II Corinthians 6:1. English Version reading is not well supported, and is plainly compounded out of the two other readings. Paul calls Timothy "our brother" here; but in I Corinthians 4:17, "my son." He speaks thus highly of one so lately ordained, both to impress the Thessalonians with a high respect for the delegate sent to them, and to encourage Timothy, who seems to have been of a timid character (I Tim. 4:12; 5:23). "Gospel ministers do the work of God with Him, for Him, and under Him" [EDMUNDS]. establish—Greek, "confirm." In II Thessalonians 3:3, GOD is said to stablish": He is the true establisher: ministers are His "instruments." concerning—Greek, "in behalf of," i.e., for the furtherance of your faith. The Greek for "comfort" includes also the idea, "exhort." The Thessalonians in their trials needed both (vs. 3; cf. Acts 14:22). 3. moved—"shaken," "disturbed." The Greek is lit. said of dogs wagging the tail in fawning on one. Therefore TITTMANN explains it, "That no man should, amidst his calamities, be allured by the flattering hope of a more pleasant life to abandon his duty." So ELSNER and BENGEL, "cajoled out of his faith." In afflictions, relatives and opponents combine with the ease-loving heart itself in flatteries, which it needs strong faith to overcome. yourselves know—We always candidly told you so (vs. 4; Acts 14:22). None but a religion from God would have held out such a trying prospect to those who should embrace it, and yet succeed in winning converts. we—Christians. appointed thereunto—by God's counsel (ch. 5:9). 4. that we should suffer—Greek, "that we are about (we are sure) to suffer" according to the appointment of God (vs. 3). even as—"even (exactly) as it both came to pass and ye know"; ye know both that it came to pass, and that we foretold it (cf. John 13:19). The correspondence of the event to the prediction powerfully confirms faith: "Forewarned, forearmed" [EDMUNDS]. The repetition of "ye know," so frequently, is designed as an argument, that being forewarned of coming affliction, they should be less readily "moved" by it. 5. For this cause—Because I know of your "tribulation" having actually begun (vs. 4). when I—Greek, "when I also (as well as Timothy, who, Paul delicately implies, was equally anxious respecting them, cf. "we," vs. 1), could no longer contain myself" (endure the suspense). I sent—Paul was the actual sender; hence the "I" here: Paul, Silas, and Timothy himself had agreed on the mission already, before Paul went to Athens: hence the "we," (vs. 1 Note). to know—to learn the state of your faith, whether it stood the trial (Col. 4:8). lest . . . have tempted . . . and . . . be—The indicative is used in the former sentence, the subjunctive in the latter. Translate therefore, "To know . . . whether haply the tempter have tempted you (the indicative implying that he supposed such was the case), and

at the risk of my life, preaching the gospel? Is it not to get your souls saved that you may be my crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ?

20. For ye are our glory and joy. You are the seal of our apostleship; your conversion and steadiness are a full proof that God has sent us.

1. Wherefore when we could no longer. The apostle was anxious to hear of their state, and as he could obatin no information without sending a messenger express, he therefore sent Timothy from Athens, choosing rather to be left alone than to continue any longer in uncertainty relative to their state.

2. Timotheus, our brother. It appears that Timothy was but a youth when converted to God; he had now however been some years in the work of God. Paul therefore calls him his brother; elsewhere he calls him his "own son," 1 Tim. i. 2; and his "dearly beloved son," 2 Tim. i. 2; because he was brought to the knowledge of the true God and to salvation by Christ through the apostle's instrumentality. Minister of God. Employed by God to preach the gospel; this was God's work, and He had appointed Timothy to do it, and to do it at this time in conjunction with Paul; and therefore he calls him his fellowlabourer.

3. That no man should be moved. That is, caused to apostatize from Christianity.

We are appointed thereunto. "We are exposed to this; we lie open to such." They are unavoidable in the present state of things.

4. That we should suffer tribulation. I prepared you for it, because I knew that it was according to their nature for wicked men to persecute the followers of God.

5. For this cause. Knowing that you would be persecuted, and knowing that your apostasy was possible, I sent to know your faith—whether you continued steadfast in the truth.

MATTHEW HENRY

Paul's great satisfaction upon the return of Timothy with good tidings.

I. The good report Timothy made concerning them, v. 6. Concerning their faith, that they were not shaken in mind, nor turned aside. Their love also continued; their love to the gospel, and the ministers of the gospel. They desired greatly to see them again, and there was no love lost for the apostle was as desirous to see them.

II. The great comfort the apostle had in this good report (v. 7, 8): Therefore, brethren, we were comforted in all our affliction and distress. The apostle thought this good news of them was sufficient to balance all the troubles he met with. This put new life and spirit into the apostle. Thus he was not only comforted, but greatly rejoiced also: Now we live, if you stand fast in the Lord, v. 8. It would have been a killing thing if the professors of religion had been unsteady, whereas nothing was more encouraging than their constancy.

III. The effects of this were thankfulness and prayer to God on their behalf. 1. How thankful the apostle was, v. 9. When we are most cheerful we should be most thankful. Paul speaks as if he could not tell how to express his thankfulness to God, or his joy and rejoicing for their sakes. His heart was enlarged with love to them and with thanksgiving to God.

2. He prayed for them night and day (v. 10), in the midst of the business of the day or slumber of the night lifting up his heart to God in prayer. He prayed exceedingly. When we are most thankful we should always give ourselves to prayer. There was something still lacking in their faith; Paul desired that this might be perfected, and to see their face in order thereunto. The best of men have something wanting in their faith, if not as to the matter of it, yet as to the clearness and certainty of their faith.

He desired to be instrumental in the further benefit of the Thessalonians; and the only way to be so while at a distance was by prayer for them, together with his writing or sending to them.

I. Whom he prays to, namely, God and Christ. Prayer is not only to be offered in the name of Christ, but offered up to Christ himself, as our Lord and our Saviour.

II. What he prays for.

1. He prays that their way might be directed to them, v. 11. The taking of a journey to this or that place, one would think, is a thing depending on a man's own will, and lies in his own power. But the apostle knew that God our Father directs and orders his children whither they shall go and what they shall do. Let us acknowledge God in all our ways, and he will direct our paths.

2. He prays for the prosperity of the Thessalonians. (1) That they might increase and abound in love (v. 12), in love to one another and in love to all men. Love is of God, and is the fulfilling of the gospel as well as of the law. Timothy brought good tidings of their faith, yet something was lacking therein; and of their charity, yet the apostle prays that this might increase and abound. We are beholden to God not only for the stock put into our hands at first, but for the improvement of it also. And to our prayer we must add endeavour. The apostle again mentions his abounding love, towards them. The more we are beloved, the more affectionate we should be.

(2) That they might be established unblameable in holiness, v. 13. To the end that he (the Lord) may establish your hearts. Holiness is required of all those who would go to heaven, and therein we must be unblameable. Our desire should be to have our hearts established in holiness before God, and that we may be unblameable before God, even the Father, now, and be presented blameless when the Lord Jesus shall come with all his saints.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

lest (in that case) our labor may prove to be in vain" (cf. Gal. 4:11). Our labor in preaching would in that case be vain, so far as ye are concerned, but not as concerns us in so far as we have sincerely labored (Isa. 49:4; I Cor. 3:8). 6. Join "now" with "come"; "But Timotheus having just now come from you unto us" [ALFORD]. Thus it appears (cf. Acts 18:5) Paul is writing from Corinth. your faith and charity—(ch. 1:3; cf. II Thess. 1:3, whence it seems their faith subsequently increased still more). Faith was the solid foundation: charity the cement which held together the superstructure of their practice on that foundation. In that charity was included their "good (kindly) remembrance" of their teachers. desiring greatly—Greek, "having a yearning desire for." we also—The desires of loving friends for one another's presence are reciprocal. 7. over you—in respect to you. in—in the midst of: notwithstanding "all our distress (Greek, 'necessity') and affliction," viz., external trials at Corinth, whence Paul writes (cf. vs. 6, with Acts 18:5-10). 8. now—as the case is; seeing ye stand fast. we live—we flourish. It revives us in our affliction to hear of your steadfastness (Ps. 22:26; II John 3:4). if—implying that the vivid joy which the missionaries "now" feel, will continue if the Thessalonians continue steadfast. They still needed exhortation, vs. 10; therefore he subjoins the conditional clause, "if ye . . . (Phil. 4:1). 9. what . . .—what sufficient thanks? render . . . again—in return for His goodness (Ps. 116:12). for you—"concerning you." for all the joy—on account of all the joy. It was "comfort," vs. 7, now it is more, viz., joy. for your sakes—on your account. before our God—It is a joy which will bear God's searching eye: a joy as in the presence of God, not selfseeking, but disinterested, sincere, and spiritual (cf. ch. 2:20; John 15:11). 10. Night and day—(Note, ch. 2:9). Night is the season for the saint's holiest meditations and prayers (II Tim. 1:3). praying—connected with, "we joy"; we joy while we pray; or else as ALFORD, What thanks can we render to God while we pray? The Greek implies a beseeching request. exceedingly—lit., "more than exceeding abundantly" (cf. Eph. 3:20). that which is lacking—Even the Thessalonians had points in which they needed improvement [BENGEL], (Luke 17:5). Their doctrinal views as to the nearness of Christ's coming, and as to the state of those who had fallen asleep, and their practice in some points, needed correction (ch. 4:1-9). Paul's method was to begin by commending what was praiseworthy, and then to correct what was amiss; a good pattern to all admonishers of others. 11. Translate, "May God Himself, even our Father (there being but one article in the Greek, requires this translation, 'He who is at once God and our Father'), direct. . . . "The "Himself" stands in contrast with "we" (ch. 2:18); we desired to come but could not through Satan's hindrance; but if God Himself direct our way (as we pray), none can hinder Him (II Thess. 2:16, 17). It is a remarkable proof of the unity of the Father and Son, that in the Greek here, and in II Thessalonians 2:16, 17, the verb is singular, implying that the subject, the Father and Son, are but one in essential Being, not in mere unity of will. Almost all the chapters in both Epistles to the Thessalonians are sealed, each with its own prayer (ch. 5:23; II Thess. 1:11; 2:16; 3:5, 16) [BENGEL]. Paul does not think the prosperous issue of a journey an unfit subject for prayer (Rom. 1:10; 15:32) [EDMUNDS]. His prayer, though the answer was deferred, in about five years afterwards was fulfilled in his return to Macedonia. 12. The "you" in the Greek is emphatically put first; "But" (so the Greek for "and") what concerns "YOU," whether we come or not, "may the Lord make you to increase and abound in love. . . ." The Greek for "increase" has a more positive force; that for "abound" a more comparative force, "make you full (supplying "that which is lacking," vs. 10) and even abound." "The Lord" may here be the Holy Spirit; so the Three Persons of the Trinity will be appealed to (cf. vs. 13), as in II Thessalonians 3:5. So the Holy Ghost is called "the Lord" (II Cor. 3:17). "Love" is the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22), and His office is "to stablish in holiness" (vs. 13; I Pet. 1:2). 13. your hearts—which are naturally the spring and seat of unholiness. before God, even our Father—rather, "before Him who is at once God and our Father." Before not merely men, but Him who will not be deceived by the mere show of holiness, i.e., may your holiness be such as will stand His searching scrutiny. coming—Greek, "presence," or "arrival." with all his saints—including both the holy angels and the holy elect of men (ch. 4:14; Dan. 7:10; Zech. 14:5; Matt. 25:31; II Thess. 1:7). The saints are "His" Acts 9:13).

ADAM CLARKE

6. When Timotheus came. We have already seen that he and Silas stayed behind at Thessalonica, when Paul was obliged to leave it, for the persecution seems to have been principally directed against him. When Paul came to Athens, he sent pressingly to Timothy and Silas to come to him with all speed to that city. We are not informed that they did come, but it is most likely that they did, and that Paul sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to comfort and build up these new converts. After Paul had sent away Timothy, it is likely he went himself straight to Corinth, and there Timothy soon after met him with the good news of the steadiness of the Thessalonian church. Your faith and charity. The good tidings which Timothy brought from Thessalonica consisted of three particulars: (1) Their faith; they continued steadfast in their belief of the gospel. (2) Their charity; they loved one another, and lived in unity and harmony. (3) They were affectionately attached to the apostle; they had good remembrance of him, and desired earnestly to see him.

8. For now we live. Your steadfastness in the faith gives me new life and comfort; I now feel that I live to some purpose, as my labor in the Lord is not in vain.

10. Night and day praying exceedingly. Supplicating God at all times; mingling this with all my prayers; "abounding and superabounding in my entreaties to God" to permit me to revisit you. How strong was his affection for this church! Might perfect that which is lacking. That I might have the opportunity of giving you the fullest instructions in the doctrine of Christ, so that the great outlines of truth which you already know may be filled up, that you may be perfectly fitted to every good word and work.

11. Now God himself and our Father. That is, God, who is our Father, who has adopted us into the heavenly family, and called us His sons and daughters. Direct our way. As he was employed in God's work he dared not consult his own inclinations; he looked for continual directions from God, where, when, and how to do his Master's work.

12. Make you to increase and abound in love. They had already love to each other, so as to unite them in one Christian body; and he prays that they may have an increase and an abundance of it, that they might feel the same love to each other which he felt for them all.

13. To the end he may establish your hearts. Without love to God and man there can be no establishment in the religion of Christ. It is love that produces both solidity and continuance. At the coming of our Lord. God is coming to judge the world. But who in that great day shall give up his accounts with joy? That person only whose heart is established in holiness before God; i.e., so as to bear the eye and strict scrutiny of his Judge.

CHAPTER 4

Verses 1–8

I. An exhortation to abound more and more in that which is good, v. 1, 2.

1. The manner in which the exhortation is given—very affectionately. The apostle entreats them as brethren; he exhorts them very earnestly: We beseech and exhort you.

2. The matter of his exhortation—that they would abound more and more in holy walking. The apostle would have them further to excel others. Those who most excel others fall short of perfection. We must not only persevere to the end, but we should grow better.

3. The arguments with which the apostle enforces his exhortation. They had been informed of their duty. They had received or been taught, how they ought to walk. The design of the gospel is to teach men not only what they should believe, but also how they ought to live. The apostle taught them how to walk, not how to talk. To talk well without living well will never bring us to heaven. The apostle taught and exhorted them in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Herein they would please God. We should not be men-pleasers, but should walk so as to please God. The rule according to which they ought to walk and act—the commandments they had given them by the Lord Jesus Christ. Though they had great authority from Christ, yet that was to teach men what Christ had commanded, not to give forth commandments of their own. The Thessalonians knew what commandments he gave them, that they were no other than what he had received from the Lord Jesus.

II. A caution against uncleanness.

1. That you should abstain from fornication (v. 3), by which we are to understand all uncleanness whatsoever. All that is contrary to chastity in heart, speech, and behaviour, is contrary to the command of God and contrary to that holiness which the gospel requires.

2. This branch of sanctification in particular is the will of God, v. 3. Not only does God require holiness in the heart, but also purity in our bodies. This will be greatly for our honour: so much is plainly implied, v. 4. The body is here called the vessel of the soul, which dwells therein, and it must be kept pure from defiling lusts. What can be more dishonourable than for a rational soul to be enslaved by bodily affections and brutal appetites? To indulge the lust of concupiscence is to live and act like heathens. Even as the Gentiles who know not God, v. 5. Christians should not walk as unconverted Gentiles. The sin of uncleanness, especially adultery, is a great piece of injustice that God will be the avenger of; so we may understand those words, That no man go beyond or defraud his brother (v. 6) in any matter. Some understand these words as a further warning and caution against injustice and oppression, which are certainly contrary to the gospel. But the meaning may rather be to show the injustice and wrong that are done by the sin of uncleanness. And, as this sin is of such a heinous nature, so it follows that God will be the avenger of it.

The sin of uncleanness is contrary to the design of our Christian calling: For God hath called us not unto uncleanness, but unto holiness, v. 7.

The contempt therefore of God's law and gospel is the contempt of God himself: He that despises, despises God, not man only.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

We must have "holiness" if we are to be numbered with His holy ones or "saints." On "unblamable," cf. Revelation 14:5. This verse (cf. vs. 12) shows that "love" is the spring of true "holiness" (Matt. 5:44-48; Rom. 13:10; Col. 3:14). God is He who really "stablishes"; Timothy and other ministers are but instruments (vs. 2) in "stablishing."

CHAPTER 4

Vss. 1-18. EXHORTATIONS TO CHASTITY; BROTHERLY LOVE; QUIET INDUSTRY; ABSTINENCE FROM UNDUE SORROW FOR DEPARTED FRIENDS, FOR AT CHRIST'S COMING ALL HIS SAINTS SHALL BE GLORIFIED. 1. Furthermore—Greek, "As to what remains." Generally used towards the close of his Epistles (Eph. 6:10; Phil. 4:8). then—with a view to the love and holiness (ch. 3:12, 13) which we have just prayed for in your behalf, we now give you exhortation. beseech—"ask" as if it were a personal favor. by . . .—rather as Greek, "IN the Lord Jesus"; in communion with the Lord Jesus, as Christian ministers dealing with Christian people [EDMUNDS]. as ye . . . received—when we were with you (ch. 2:13). how—Greek, the "how," i.e., the manner. walk and . . . please God—i.e., "and so please God," viz., by your walk; in contrast to the Jews who "please not God" (ch. 2:15). The oldest MSS. add a clause here, "even as also ye do walk" (cf. ch. 4:10; 5:11). These words, which he was able to say of them with truth, conciliate a favorable hearing for the precepts which follow. Also the expression, "abound more and more," implies that there had gone before a recognition of their already in some measure walking so. 2. by the Lord Jesus—by His authority and direction, not by our own. He uses the strong term, "commandments," in writing to this Church not long founded, knowing that they would take it in a right spirit, and feeling it desirable that they should understand he spake with divine authority. He seldom uses the term in writing subsequently, when his authority was established, to other churches. I Corinthians 7:10; 11:17; and I Timothy 1:5 (vs. 18, where the subject accounts for the strong expression) are the exceptions. "The Lord" marks His paramount authortiy, requiring implicit obedience. 3. For—enforcing the assertion that his "commandments" were "by (the authority of) the Lord Jesus" (vs. 2). Since "this is the will of God," let it be your will also. fornication—not regarded as a sin at all among the heathen, and so needing the more to be denounced (Acts 15:20). 4. know—by moral self-control. how to possess his vessel—rather as Greek, "how to acquire (get for himself) his own vessel," i.e., that each should have his own wife so as to avoid fornication (vs. 3; I Cor. 7:2). The emphatical position of "his own" in the Greek, and the use of "vessel" for wife, in I Pet. 3:7, and in common Jewish phraseology, and the correct translation "acquire," all justify this rendering. in sanctification—(Rom. 6:19; I Cor. 6:15, 18). Thus, "his own" stands in opposition to dishonoring his brother by lusting after his wife (vs. 6). honour—(Heb. 13:4) contrasted with "dishonor their own bodies" (Rom. 1:24). 5. in the lust—Greek, "passion"; which implies that such a one is unconsciously the passive slave of lust. which know not God—and so know no better. Ignorance of true religion is the parent of unchastity (Eph. 4:18, 19). A people's morals are like the objects of their worship (Deut. 7:26; Ps. 115:8; Rom. 1:23, 24). 6. go beyond—transgress the bounds of rectitude in respect to his brother. defraud—"overreach" [ALFORD]; "take advantage of" [EDMUNDS]. in any matter—rather as Greek, "in the matter"; a decorous expression for the matter now in question; the conjugal honor of his neighbor as a husband, vs. 4; vs. 7 also confirms this view; the word "brother" enhances the enormity of the crime. It is your brother whom you wrong (cf. Prov. 6:27-33). the Lord—the coming Judge (II Thess. 1:7, 8). avenger—the Righter. of all such—Greek, "concerning all these things"; in all such cases of wrongs against a neighbor's conjugal honor. testified—Greek, "constantly testified [ALFORD]. 7. unto—Greek, "for the purpose of." unto—rather as Greek, "in"; marking that "holiness" is the element in which our calling has place; in a sphere of holiness. Saint is another name for Christian. 8. despiseth . . .—Greek, "setteth at naught" such engagements imposed on him in his calling, vs. 7; in relation to his "brother," vs. 6. He who doth so, "sets at naught not man (as for instance his brother), but God" (Ps. 51:4). Or, as the Greek verb (Luke 10:16; John 12:48) is used of despising or rejecting God's min-

1. We beseech you, brethren, and exhort. We give you proper instructions in heavenly things, and request you to attend to our advice. The apostle used the most pressing entreaties; for he had a strong and affectionate desire that this church should excel in all righteousness and true holiness. Please God . . . more and more. God sets no bounds to the communications of His grace and Spirit to them that are faithful. And as there are no bounds to the graces, so there should be none to the exercise of those graces.

2. Ye know what commandments we gave you. This refers to his instructions while he was among them.

3. This is the will of God, even your sanctification. God has called you to holiness; He requires that you should be holy, for without holiness none can see the Lord. That ye should abstain from fornication. The word includes all sorts of uncleanness.

4. How to possess his vessel. Let every man use his wife for the purpose alone for which God created her and instituted marriage. The word answers to the Hebrew keli, which, though it signifies vessel in general, has several other meanings. The rabbins frequently express "wife" by it; and to me it appears very probable that the apostle uses it in that sense here. Peter calls the wife the "weaker vessel," 1 Pet. iii. 7. Others think that the body is meant, which is the vessel in which the soul dwells. In this sense Paul uses it in 2 Cor. iv. 7: "We have this treasure in earthen vessels"; and in this sense it is used by both Greek and Roman authors.

6. That no man go beyond and defraud his brother. That no man should by any means endeavor to corrupt the wife of another, or to alienate her affections or fidelity from her husband.

7. God hath not called us unto uncleanness. He is the Creator of male and female, and the Institutor of marriage, and He has called men and women to this state; but the end of this and all the other callings of God to man is holiness, not uncleanness. And they who use the marriage state as he directs will find it conducive to their holiness and perfection.

8. He therefore that despiseth. He who will not receive these teachings, and is led either to undervalue or despise them, despises not us but God, from whom we have received our commission and by whose Spirit we give these directions.

MATTHEW HENRY

God hath given Christians his Spirit. The Holy Ghost is given unto us to arm us against these sins.

Verses 9–12

I. Of brotherly love. This he exhorts them to increase in yet more and more. They were remarkable in the exercise of it, which made it less needful that he should write to them about it, v. 9. Thus by his good opinion of them he insinuated himself into their affections, and so made way for his exhortation to them.

1. What it is that the apostle commends in them. It was not so much their own virtue as God's grace. God had taught them this good lesson: You yourselves are taught of God to love one another, v. 9. Whoever does that which is good is taught of God to do it. All who are savingly taught of God are taught this lesson, to love one another. This is the livery of Christ's family. The Thessalonians gave good evidence of their being taught of God by their love to the brethren in all Macedonia, v. 10. Their love was extensive. And a true Christian's is so to all the saints.

2. The exhortation itself is to increase more and more in brotherly love, v. 10. They must be exhorted to pray for more, and labour for more. There are none on this side heaven who love in perfection.

II. Of quietness and industry in their callings. Study to be quiet, v. 11. It is the most desirable thing to have a calm and quiet temper, and to be of a peaceable and quiet behaviour. Satan is very busy to disquiet us; and we have that in our own hearts that disposes us to be disquiet; therefore let us study to be quiet. Do your own business. Those who are busy-bodies, meddling in other men's matters, generally have but little quiet in their own minds and cause great disturbances among their neighbours; at least they seldom mind the other exhortation, to be diligent in their own calling, to work with their own hands. Christianity does not discharge us from the work of our particular callings, but teaches us to be diligent therein. Thus we shall walk honestly, or decently and creditably, towards those that are without, v. 12. This will be to act as becomes the gospel, and will gain a good report from those that are strangers, yea, enemies to it. We shall live comfortably, and have lack of nothing, v. 12. Such as are diligent in their own business live comfortably and have lack of nothing. They earn their own bread, and have the greatest pleasure in so doing.

Verses 13–18

The apostle comforts the Thessalonians who mourned for the death of their relations and friends that died in the Lord. His design is to dissuade them from excessive grief. All grief for the death of friends is far from being unlawful; we may weep for our own loss, though it may be their gain. Yet we must not be immoderate in our sorrows.

I. This looks as if we had no hope, v. 13. It is to act too much like the Gentiles, who had no hope of a better life after this. This hope is more than enough to balance all our griefs.

II. This is an effect of ignorance concerning those who are dead, v. 13. There are some things which we cannot but be ignorant of concerning those that are asleep. Yet there are some things concerning those especially who die in the Lord that we need not to be ignorant of. They will be sufficient to allay our sorrow concerning them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

ister, it may mean here, "He who despiseth" or "rejecteth" these our ministerial precepts. who hath also given unto us—So some oldest MSS. read, but most oldest MSS. read, "Who (without 'also') giveth (present) unto you" (not "us"). his Spirit—Greek, "His own Spirit, the Holy (One)"; thus emphatically marking "holiness" (vs. 7) as the end for which the Holy (One) is being given. "Unto you," in the Greek, implies that the Spirit is being given unto, into (put into your hearts), and among you (cf. ch. 2:9; Eph. 4:30). "Giveth" implies that sanctification is not merely a work once for all accomplished in the past, but a present progressive work. So the Church of England Catechism, "sanctifieth (present) all the elect people of God." "His own" implies that as He gives you that which is essentially identical with Himself, He expects you should become like Himself (I Pet. 1:16; II Pet. 1:4). 9. brotherly love . . .—referring here to acts of brotherly kindness in relieving distressed brethren. Some oldest MSS. support English Version reading, "YE have"; others, and those the weightiest, read, "WE have." We need not write, as ye yourselves are taught, and that by God; viz., in the heart by the Holy Spirit (John 6:45; Heb. 8:11; I John 2:20, 27). to love—Greek, "with a view to," or "to the end of your loving one another." Divine teachings have their confluence in love [BENGEL]. 10. And indeed—Greek, "For even." 11. study to be quiet—Greek, "make it your ambition to be quiet, and to do your own business." In direct contrast to the world's ambition, which is, "to make a great stir," and "to be busybodies" (II Thess. 3:11, 12). work with your own hands—The Thessalonian converts were, it thus seems, chiefly of the working classes. Their expectation of the immediate coming of Christ led some enthusiasts among them to neglect their daily work and be dependent on the bounty of others. See end of vs. 12. The expectation was right in so far as that the Church should be always looking for Him; but they were wrong in making it a ground for neglecting their daily work. The evil, as it subsequently became worse, is more strongly reproved in II Thessalonians 3:6-12. 12. honestly—in the Old English sense, "becomingly," as becomes your Christian profession; not bringing discredit on it in the eyes of the outer world, as if Christianity led to sloth and poverty (Rom. 13:13; I Pet. 2:12). them . . . without—outside the Christian Church (Mark 4: 11). have lack of nothing—not have to beg from others for the supply of your wants (cf. Eph. 4:28). So far from needing to beg from others, we ought to work and get the means of supplying the need of others. Freedom from pecuniary embarrassment is to be desired by the Christian on account of the liberty which it bestows. 13. The leading topic of Paul's preaching at Thessalonica having been the coming kingdom (Acts 17:7), some perverted it into a cause for fear in respect to friends lately deceased, as if these would be excluded from the glory which those found alive alone should share. This error Paul here corrects (cf. ch. 5:10). I would not—All the oldest MSS. and versions have "we would not." My fellow labourers (Silas and Timothy) and myself desire that ye should not be ignorant. them which are asleep—The oldest MSS. read present tense, "them which are sleeping"; the same as "the dead in Christ" (vs. 16), to whose bodies (Dan. 12:2, not their souls; Eccl. 12:7; II Cor. 5:8) death is a calm and holy sleep, from which the resurrection shall waken them to glory. The word "cemetery" means a sleeping-place. Observe, the glory and chief hope of the Church are not to be realized at death, but at the Lord's coming; one is not to anticipate the other, but all are to be glorified together at Christ's coming (Col. 3:4; Heb. 11:40). ye sorrow not, even as others—Greek, "the rest"; all the rest of the world besides Christians. Not all natural mourning for dead friends is forbidden: for the Lord Jesus and Paul sinlessly gave way to it (John 11:31, 33, 35; Phil. 2:27); but sorrow as though there were "no hope," which indeed the heathen had not (Eph. 2:12): the Christian hope here meant is that of the resurrection. Psalm 16:9, 11; 17:15; 73:24; Proverbs 14:32, show that the Old Testament Church, though not having the hope so bright (Isa. 38:18, 19), yet had this hope. Contrast CATULLUS, 5. 4, "When once our brief day has set, we must sleep one everlasting night." The sepulchral inscriptions of heathen Thessalonica express the hopeless view taken as to those once dead: as ÆSCHYLUS writes, "Of one once dead there is no resurrection." Whatever glimpses some heathen philosophers, had of the existence of the soul after death, they had none whatever of the body (Acts 17:18, 20, 32). 14. For if—confirmation of his statement, vs. 13, that the removal of ignorance as to the sleeping be-

Hath also given unto us his holy Spirit. Instead of unto us, "unto you" is the reading of a great many MSS. This seems to be the better reading.

9. Touching brotherly love. They were remarkable for this; and though the apostle appears to have had this as a topic on which he intended to write to them, yet from the account which he received of their prosperous state by Timothy, he finds that it is unnecessary to spend any time in inculcating a doctrine which they fully understood and practiced.

10. Ye do it toward all the brethren. You not only love one another at Thessalonica, but you love all the brethren in Macedonia; you consider them all as children of the same Father.

11. That ye study to be quiet. Though in general the church at Thessalonica was pure and exemplary, yet there seem to have been some idle, tattling people among them, who disturbed the peace of others. To these the apostle gives those directions which the whole Church of God should enforce wherever such troublesome and dangerous people are found; viz., that they should study to be quiet, "to hold their peace," as their religious cant will never promote true religion; that they should do their own business, and let that of others alone; and that they should work with their own hands, and not be a burden to the Church of God. An idle person, though able to discourse like an angel or pray like an apostle, cannot be a Christian; all such are hypocrites and deceivers. The true members of the Church of Christ walk, work, and labor.

12. That ye may walk honestly. "Becomingly, decently, respectably"; as is consistent with the purity, holiness, gravity, and usefulness of your Christian calling. Them that are without. The unconverted Gentiles and Jews. That ye may have lack of nothing. That you may be able to get your bread by honest labor, which God will ever bless, and be chargeable to no man. He that is dependent on another is necessarily in bondage; and he who is able to get his own bread by the sweat of his brow should not be under obligation even to a king.

13. I would not have you to be ignorant. Instead of have, "wish," is the reading of many MSS. and many of the Greek fathers. This is undoubtedly the true reading: "Brethren, I would not wish you to be ignorant." This was probably one of the points which were lacking in their faith, that he wished to go to Thessalonica to instruct them in. Them which are asleep. That is, those who are dead. It is supposed that the apostle had heard that the Thessalonians continued to lament over their dead, as the heathens did in general who had no hope of the resurrection of the body, and that they had been puzzled concerning the doctrine of the resurrection.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. They sleep in Jesus. They are asleep, v. 13. They have retired out of this troublesome world, to rest from all their labours and sorrows, and they sleep in Jesus, v. 14. They are not lost, nor are they losers, but great gainers by death, and their removal out of this world is into a better.

2. They shall be raised up from the dead, and awakened out of their sleep, for God will bring them with him, v. 14. They then are with God, and are better where they are than when they were here; and when God comes he will bring them with him. The doctrine of the resurrection and the second coming of Christ is a great antidote against the fear of death and inordinate sorrow for the death of our Christian friends; and this doctrine we have a full assurance of, because we believe that Jesus died and rose again, v. 14.

3. Their state and condition shall be glorious and happy at the second coming of Christ. This the apostle informs the Thessalonians of by the word of the Lord (v. 15).

The Lord Jesus will come down from heaven in all the pomp and power of the upper world (v. 16): The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout.

He will descend from heaven into this our air, v. 17. The appearance will be with pomp and power, with a shout—with the voice of the archangel. The glorious appearance of this great Redeemer and Judge will be proclaimed and ushered in by the trump of God. The dead shall be raised: The dead in Christ shall rise first (v. 16). Those who shall then be found alive shall not prevent those that are asleep, v. 15. Those that shall be found alive will then be changed.

They shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, v. 17. Those who are raised, and thus changed, shall meet together in the clouds, and there meet with their Lord. Here is the bliss of the saints at that day: they shall be ever with the Lord, v. 17. The principal happiness of heaven is this, to be with the Lord, to see him, live with him, and enjoy him, for ever.

lievers would remove undue grief respecting them. See vs. 13, "hope." Hence it appears our hope rests on our faith ("if we believe"). "As surely as we all believe that Christ died and rose again (the very doctrine specified as taught at Thessalonica, Acts 17:3), so also will God bring those laid to sleep by Jesus with Him" (Jesus. So the order and balance of the members of the Greek sentence require us to translate). Believers are laid in sleep by Jesus, and so will be brought back from sleep with Jesus in His train when He comes. The disembodied souls are not here spoken of; the reference is to the sleeping bodies. 15. by the word of the Lord—Greek, "in," i.e., in virtue of a direct revelation from the Lord to me. So I Kings 20:35. This is the "mystery," a truth once hidden, now revealed, which Paul shows (I Cor. 15:51, 52). prevent—i.e., "anticipate." So far were the early Christians from regarding their departed brethren as anticipating them in entering glory, that they needed to be assured that those who remain to the coming of the Lord "will not anticipate them that are asleep." The "we" means whichever of us are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord. The Spirit designed that believers in each successive age should live in continued expectation of the Lord's coming, not knowing but that they should be among those found alive at His coming (Matt. 24:42). It is a sad fall from this blessed hope, that death is looked for by most men, rather than the coming of our Lord. Each successive generation in its time and place represents the generation which shall actually survive till His coming (Matt. 25:13; Rom. 13:11; I Cor. 15:51; Jas. 5:9; I Pet. 4:5, 6). The Spirit subsequently revealed by Paul that which is not inconsistent with the expectation here taught of the Lord's coming at any time; viz., that His coming would not be until there should be a "falling away first" (II Thess. 2:2, 3); but as symptoms of this soon appeared, none could say but that still this precursory event might be realized, and so the Lord come in his day. 16. himself—in all the Majesty of His presence in person, not by deputy. descend—even as He ascended (Acts 1:11). with—Greek, "in," implying one concomitant circumstance attending His appearing. shout—Greek, "signal shout," "war shout." Jesus is represented as a victorious King, giving the word of command to the hosts of heaven in His train for the last onslaught, at His final triumph over sin, death, and Satan (Rev. 19:11-21). the voice of . . . archangel—distinct from the "signal shout." Michael is perhaps meant (Jude 9; Rev. 12:7), to whom especially is committed the guardianship of the people of God (Dan. 10:13). trump of God—the trumpet blast which usually accompanies God's manifestation in glory (Exod. 19:16; Ps. 47:5); here the last of the three accompaniments of His appearing: as the trumpet was used to convene God's people to their solemn convocations (Num. 10:2, 10; 31:6), so here to summon God's elect together, preparatory to their glorification with Christ (Ps. 50:1-5; Matt. 24:31; I Cor. 15:52). shall rise first—previously to the living being "caught up." The "first" here has no reference to the first resurrection, as contrasted with that of "the rest of the dead." That reference occurs elsewhere (Matt. 13:41, 42, 50; John 5:29; I Cor. 15:23, 24; Rev. 20:5, 6); it simply stands in opposition to "then," vs. 17. FIRST, "the dead in Christ" shall rise, THEN the living shall be caught up. The Lord's people alone are spoken of here. 17. we which are alive . . . shall be caught up—after having been "changed in a moment" (I Cor. 15:51, 52). Again he says, "we," recommending thus the expression to Christians of all ages, each generation bequeathing to the succeeding one a continually increasing obligation to look for the coming of the Lord. [EDMUNDS]. together with them—all together: the raised dead, and changed living, forming one joint body. in the clouds—Greek, "in clouds." The same honor is conferred on them as on their Lord. As He was taken in a cloud at His ascension (Acts 1:9), so at His return with clouds (Rev. 1:7), they shall be caught up in clouds. The clouds are His and their triumphal chariot (Ps. 104:3; Dan. 7:13). ELLICOTT explains the Greek, "robed round by upbearing clouds" (Aids to Faith). in the air—rather, "into the air"; caught up into the region just above the earth, where the meeting (cf. Matt. 25:1, 6) shall take place between them ascending, and their Lord descending towards the earth. Not that the air is to be the place of their lasting abode with Him. and so shall we ever be with the Lord—no more parting, and no more going out (Rev. 3:12). His point being established, that the dead in Christ shall be on terms of equal advantage with those found alive at Christ's coming, he leaves undefined here

14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again. "Seeing that we believe"; knowing that the resurrection of Christ is as fully authenticated as His detah. Even so them. It necessarily follows that they who sleep—die, in Him—in the faith of the gospel, will God bring with him—He will raise them up as Jesus was raised from the dead, in the same manner, i.e., by His own eternal power and energy; and He will bring them with him—with Christ, for He is the Head of the Church, which is His body.

15. This we say unto you by the word of the Lord. This I have, by express revelation, from the Lord. What he now delivers he gives as coming immediately from the Spirit of God. We which are alive and remain. By the pronoun we the apostle does not intend himself and the Thessalonians to whom he was then writing; he is speaking of the genuine Christians which shall be found on earth when Christ comes to judgment. From not considering the manner in which the apostle uses this word, some have been led to suppose that he imagined that the day of judgment would take place in that generation, and while he and the then believers at Thessalonica were in life. Shall not prevent them which are asleep. Those who shall be found living in that day, though they shall not pass through death, but be suddenly changed, shall not go to glory before them that are dead, for "the dead in Christ shall rise first"—they shall be raised, their bodies made glorious, and be caught up to meet the Lord, before the others shall be changed. And this appears to be the meaning of the apostle's words which we translate shall not prevent; for although this word prevent, from prae and venio, literally signifies to "go before," yet we use it now in the sense of "to hinder or obstruct."

16. The Lord himself. That is, Jesus Christ. Shall descend from heaven. Shall descend in like manner as He was seen by His disciples to ascend; i.e., in His human form, but now infinitely more glorious. With a shout. Or "order," and probably in these words: "Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment"; which order shall be repeated by the archangel, who shall accompany it with the sound of the trump of God, whose great and terrible blasts, like those on Mount Sinai, sounding louder and louder, shall shake both the heavens and the earth!

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

In due time the last trump shall sound and Christ shall come, but the saints shall be with Him. The infinite providence has so arranged that Christ shall not come without His people, for "them also that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with him." The saints shall be with Him in the advent as they are now. Our souls shall hear the shout of victory and join in it; the voice of the archangel shall be actually heard by all His redeemed, and the trump of God shall be sounded in the hearing of every one of His beloved, for we shall be with Jesus all through that glorious transaction. Whatever the glory and splendor of the second advent, we shall be with Jesus in it. I am not going to give you glimpses of the revealed future, or offer any suggestion as to the sublime history which is yet to be written, but most certainly there is to be a last general judgment, and then we shall be with Christ, assessors with Him at that day. Being ourselves first acquitted, we shall take our seat upon the judgment bench with Him. What saith the Holy Ghost by the apostle—"Do ye not know that we shall judge angels?" The fallen angels, to their shame, shall in part receive the verdict of their condemnation from the lips of men, and thus vengeance shall be taken upon them for all the mischief they have done to the sons of men. Oh, think of it: amidst the terror of the tremendous day you shall be at ease, resting in the love of God, and beholding the glory of Christ, and "so shall you ever be with the Lord."

—The Treasury of the New Testament

MATTHEW HENRY

This should comfort the saints upon the death of their friends. We and they with all the saints shall meet our Lord, and be with him for ever, no more to be separated either from him or from one another for ever. And the apostle would have us comfort one another with these words, v. 18.

CHAPTER 5

I. The apostle tells the Thessalonians it was needless or useless to enquire about the particular time of Christ's coming: Of the times and seasons you need not that I write unto you, v. 1. There is a certain time appointed for his coming; but he had no revelation given him; nor should they or we enquire into this secret. There are times and seasons for us to do our work in: these it is our duty and interest to know and observe; but the time and season when we must give up our account we know not. There are many things which our vain curiosity desires to know which there is no necessity at all of our knowing, nor would our knowledge of them do us good.

II. He tells them that the coming of Christ would be a great surprise to most men, v. 2. As a thief in the night. As the thief usually cometh in the dead time of the night, when he is least expected, such a surprise will the day of the Lord be.

III. He tells them how terrible Christ's coming would be to the ungodly, v. 3. It will be to their destruction in that day of the Lord. It will be sudden. It will overtake them in the midst of their carnal security and jollity, when they say in their hearts, Peace and safety, and think not of it,—as travail cometh upon a woman with child, at the set time indeed, but not perhaps just then expected. It will be unavoidable destruction too: They shall not escape.

IV. He tells them how comfortable this day will be to the righteous, v. 4, 5. Their character and privilege. They are the children of the light, &c. This was the happy condition of the Thessalonians as it is of all true Christians. They were not in a state of sin and ignorance as the heathen world. They were the children of the day, for the day-star had risen upon them. They were no longer under the darkness of heathenism, but under the gospel, which brings life and immortality to light. Their great advantage on this account: that that day should not overtake them as a thief, v. 4. They had fair warning, and might hope to stand with comfort and confidence before the Son of man, as a friend in the day, not as a thief in the night.

Exhortations to several needful duties.

I. To watchfulness and sobriety, v. 6. These duties are distinct, yet they mutually befriend one another. We shall not keep sober, unless we be upon our guard, and, unless we keep sober, we shall not long watch. 1. Then let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch; we must not be secure and careless, nor indulge spiritual sloth and idleness. The generality of men are too careless of their duty and regardless of their spiritual enemies. Either they do not consider the things of another world at all, because they are asleep; or they do not consider them aright, because they dream. But let us watch, and act like men that are awake, and that stand upon their guard. 2. Let us also be sober. Let us keep our natural desires and appetites after the things of this world within due bounds. Watchfulness and sobriety are most suitable to the Christian's character and privilege, as being children of the day; because those that sleep, sleep in the night, and those that are drunken are drunken in the night, v. 7. They were not sensible of their danger, therefore they slept; they were not sensible of their duty, therefore they were drunk: but it ill becomes Christians to do thus.

II. To be well armed as well as watchful. Our spiritual enemies are many, and mighty, and malicious. We have need to arm ourselves against their attempts, and this spiritual armour consists of the three great graces of Christians, faith, love, and hope, v. 8. 1. We must live by faith, and this will keep us watchful and sober. Faith will be our best defence against the assaults of our enemies. 2. We must get a heart inflamed with love. True and fervent love to God, and the other events foretold elsewhere (as not being necessary to his discussion), Christ's reign on earth with His saints (I Cor. 6:2, 3), the final judgment and glorification of His saints in the new heaven and earth. 18. comfort one another—in your mourning for the dead (vs. 13).

Vss. 1-28. THE SUDDENNESS OF CHRIST'S COMING A MOTIVE FOR WATCHFULNESS: VARIOUS PRECEPTS: PRAYER FOR THEIR BEING FOUND BLAMELESS, BODY, SOUL, AND SPIRIT, AT CHRIST'S COMING: CONCLUSION. 1. times—the general and indefinite term for chronological periods. seasons—the opportune times (Dan. 7:12; Acts 1:7). Time denotes quantity; season, quality. Seasons are parts of times. ye have no need—those who watch do not need to be told when the hour will come, for they are always ready [BENGEL]. cometh—present: expressing its speedy and awful certainty. 2. as a thief in the night—The apostles in this image follow the parable of their Lord, expressing how the Lord's coming shall take men by surprise (Matt. 24:43; II Pet. 3:10). "The night is wherever there is quiet unconcern" [BENGEL]. "At midnight" (perhaps figurative: to some parts of the earth it will be literal night), Matthew 25:6. The thief not only gives no notice of his approach but takes all precaution to prevent the household knowing of it. So the Lord (Rev. 16:15). Signs will precede the coming, to confirm the patient hope of the watchful believer; but the coming itself shall be sudden at last (Matt. 24-32-36; Luke 21:25-32, 35).

3. they—the men of the world. Verses 5, 6; ch. 4:13, "others," all the rest of the world save Christians. Peace—(Judg. 18:7, 9, 27, 28; Jer. 6:14; Ezek. 13:10). then—at the very moment when they least expect it. Cf. the case of Belshazzar, Daniel 5:1-5, 6, 9, 26-28; Herod, Acts 12:21-23. sudden—"unawares" (Luke 21:34). as travail—"As the labor pang" comes in an instant on the woman when otherwise engaged (Ps. 48:6; Isa. 13:8). shall not escape—Greek, "shall not at all escape." Another awful feature of their ruin: there shall be then no possibility of shunning it however they desire it (Amos 9:2, 3; Rev. 6:15, 16). 4. not in darkness—not in darkness of understanding (i.e., spiritual ignorance) or of the moral nature (i.e., a state of sin), Ephesians 4:18. that—Greek, "in order that"; with God results are all purposed. that day—Greek, "THE day"; the day of the Lord (Heb. 10:25, "the day"), in contrast to "darkness." overtake—unexpectedly (cf. John 12:35). as a thief—The two oldest MSS. read, "as (the daylight overtakes) thieves" (Job 24:17). Old MSS. and Vulgate read as English Version. 5. The oldest MSS. read, "FOR ye are all. . . ." Ye have no reason for fear, or for being taken by surprise, by the coming of the day of the Lord: "For ye are all sons (so the Greek) of light and sons of day"; a Hebrew idiom, implying that as sons resemble their fathers, so you are in character light (intellectually and morally illuminated in a spiritual point of view), Luke 16:8; John 12:36. are not of—i.e., belong not to night nor darkness. The change of person from "ye" to "we" implies this: Ye are sons of light because ye are Christians; and we, Christians, are not of night nor darkness. 6. others—Greek, "the rest" of the world: the unconverted (ch. 4:13). "Sleep" here is worldly apathy to spiritual things (Rom. 13:11; Eph. 5:14); in vs. 7, ordinary sleep; in vs. 10, death. watch—for Christ's coming; lit., "be wakeful." The same Greek occurs in I Corinthians 15:34; II Timothy 2:26. be sober—refraining from carnal indulgence, mental or sensual (I Pet. 5:8). 7. This verse is to be taken in the literal sense. Night is the time when sleepers sleep, and drinking men are drunk. To sleep by day would imply great indolence; to be drunken by day, great shamelessness. Now, in a spiritual sense, "we Christians profess to be day people, not night people; therefore our work ought to be day work, not night work; our conduct such as will bear the eye of day, and such has no need of the veil of night" [EDMUNDS], (vs. 8). 8. Faith, hope, and love, are the three pre-eminent graces (ch. 1:3; I Cor. 13:13). We must not only be awake and sober, but also armed; not only watchful, but also guarded. The armor here is only defensive; in Ephesians 6:13-17, also offensive. Here, therefore, the reference is to the Christian means of being guarded against being surprised by the day of the Lord as a thief in the night. The helmet and breastplate defend the two vital parts, the head and

1-2. But of the times and the seasons. It is natural to suppose, after what he had said in the conclusion of the preceding chapter concerning the coming of Christ, the raising of the dead, and rendering those immortal who should then be found alive without obliging them to pass through the empire of death, that the Thessalonians would feel an innocent curiosity to know, as the disciples did concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, when those things should take place, and what should be the signs of those times, and of the coming of the Son of Man. And it is remarkable that the apostle answers here to these anticipated questions as our Lord did, in the above case, to the direct question of His disciples; and he seems to refer in these words, Of the times and the seasons . . . ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know . . . that the day of the Lord . . . cometh as a thief in the night, to what our Lord said, Matt. xxiv. 44; xxv. 13; and the apostle takes it for granted that they were acquainted with our Lord's prediction on the subject. It is very likely therefore that the apostle, like our Lord, couples these two grand events—the destruction of Jerusalem and the final judgment. And it appears most probable that it is of the former event chiefly that he speaks here, as it was certainly of the latter that he treated in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. In the notes on Acts i. 6-7, it has already been shown that the times or seasons refer to the destruction of the Jewish commonwealth, and we may fairly presume that they have the same meaning in this place.

3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety. This points out, very particularly, the state of the Jewish people when the Romans came against them; and so fully persuaded were they that God would not deliver the city and Temple to their enemies that they refused every overture that was made to them. Sudden destruction. In the storming of their city, the burning of their Temple, and the massacre of several hundreds of thousands of themselves; the rest being sold for slaves, and the whole of them dispersed over the face of the earth. As travail upon a woman. This figure is perfectly consistent with what the apostle had said before, viz., that the times and seasons were not known, though the thing itself was expected, our Lord having predicted it in the most positive manner. So a woman with child knows that, if she is spared, she will have a bearing time; but the week, the day, the hour, she cannot tell.

4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness. Probably Paul refers to a notion that was very prevalent among the Jews. The words in Midrash Tehillim, on Ps. ix. 8, are the following: "When the holy blessed God shall judge the Gentiles, it shall be in the night season, in which they shall be asleep in their transgressions; but when he shall judge the Israelites, it shall be in the day time, when they are occupied in the study of the law." This maxim the apostle appears to have in view in vv. 4-8.

5. Ye are all the children of light. You are children of God, and enjoy both His light and life.

6. Let us not sleep, as do others. Let us who are of the day—who believe the gospel and belong to Christ—not give way to a careless, unconcerned state of mind, like to the Gentiles and sinners in general, who are stupefied and blinded by sin. Let us watch. Be always on the alert; and be sober, making a moderate use of all things.

7. For they that sleep. Sleepers and drunkards seek the night season; so the careless and the profligate persons indulge their evil propensities and avoid all means of instruction; they prefer their ignorance to the word of God's grace and to the light of life.

8. Putting on the breastplate. We are not the things of God, will keep us watchful and sober. 3. We must make salvation our hope. This good hope of eternal life, will be as a helmet to defend the head, and hinder our being intoxicated with the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season. The apostle shows what grounds Christians have to hope for this salvation. He says nothing of their meriting it. No, the doctrine of our merits is altogether unscriptural and antiscriptural.

But our hopes are to be grounded, (1) Upon God's appointment: because God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, v. 9. If we would trace our salvation to the first cause, that is God's appointment.

On this we build unshaken hope, especially when we consider, (2) Christ's merit and grace, and that salvation is by our Lord Jesus Christ who died for us. Our salvation therefore is owing to, and our hopes of it are grounded on, Christ's atonement as well as God's appointment. That whether we wake or sleep we should live together with Christ, live in union and in glory with him for ever. Christ died for us, that, living and dying, we might be his; that we might live to him while we are here, and live with him when we go hence.

Several duties.

I. Towards those who were nearly related one to another. Such should comfort themselves, or exhort one another, and edify one another, v. 11. They must comfort or exhort themselves and one another. We should not only be careful about our own comfort and welfare, but of others also. They must edify one another. We should communicate our knowledge and experiences one to another. We should join in prayer and praise one with another. We should set a good example one before another. This the Thessalonians did (which also you do). Those who do that which is good have need of further exhortations to excite them to do more good, as well as continue in doing what they do.

II. Towards their ministers, v. 12, 13.

1. How the ministers of the gospel are described by the work of their office. Ministers must labour among their people, labour with diligence, and unto weariness (so the word in the original imports). They are called labourers, and should not be loiterers. Ministers are to rule their people also. They must rule, not with rigour, but with love. They must rule as spiritual guides, by setting a good example to the flock. They are over the people in the Lord, and must rule the people by Christ's laws. They must also admonish the people. They must instruct them to do well, and should reprove when they do ill.

2. What the duty of the people is towards their ministers. The people must know them. As the shepherd should know his flock, so the sheep must know their shepherd. They must esteem their ministers highly in love; and this for their work's sake, because their business is to promote the honour of Christ and the welfare of men's souls. Faithful ministers ought to be so far from being lightly esteemed because of their work that they should be highly esteemed on account of it.

III. Touching the duty Christians owe to one another. To be at peace among themselves, v. 13. The people should be at peace among themselves, doing all they can to hinder any differences from rising or continuing among them, and using all proper means to preserve peace and harmony.

To warn the unruly, v. 14. There will be in all societies some who walk disorderly. Such should be reproved and told plainly of the injury they do their own souls, and the hurt they may do to others. To comfort the feeble-minded, v. 14, the timorous and faint-hearted, or such as are dejected and of a sorrowful spirit. Such should be encouraged; we should not despise them, but comfort them; and who knows what good a kind and comfortable word may do them?

the heart respectively. "With head and heart right, the whole man is right" [EDMUNDS]. The head needs to be kept from error, the heart from sin. For "the breastplate of righteousness," Ephesians 6:14, we have here "the breastplate of faith and love"; for the righteousness which is imputed to man for justification, is "faith working by love" (Rom. 4:3, 22-24; Gal. 5:6). "Faith," as the motive within, and "love," exhibited in outward acts, constitute the perfection of righteousness. In Ephesians 6:17 the helmet is "salvation"; here, "the hope of salvation." In one aspect "salvation" is a present possession (John 3:36; 5:24; I John 5:13); in another, it is a matter of "hope" (Rom. 8:24, 25). Our Head primarily wore the "breastplate of righteousness" and "helmet of salvation," that we might, by union with Him, receive both. 9. For—assigning the ground of our "hopes" (vs. 8). appointed us—Translate, "set" (Acts 13:47), in His everlasting purpose of love (ch. 3:3; II Tim. 1:9). Contrast Romans 9:22; Jude 4. to—i.e., unto wrath. to obtain—Greek, "to the acquisition of salvation"; said, according to BENGEL, of one saved out of a general wreck, when all things else have been lost: so of the elect saved out of the multitude of the lost (II Thess. 2:13, 14). The fact of God's "appointment" of His grace "through Jesus Christ" (Eph. 1:5), takes away the notion of our being able to "acquire" salvation of ourselves. Christ "acquired (so the Greek for 'purchased') the Church (and its salvation) with His own blood" (Acts 20:28); each member is said to be appointed by God to the "acquiring of salvation." In the primary sense, God does the work; in the secondary sense, man does it. 10. died for us—Greek, "in our behalf." whether we wake or sleep—whether we be found at Christ's coming awake, i.e., alive, or asleep, i.e., in our graves. together—all of us together; the living not preceding the dead in their glorification "with Him" at His coming (ch. 4:13). 11. comfort yourselves—Greek, "one another." Here he reverts to the same consolatory strain as in ch. 4:18. edify one another—rather as Greek, "edify (ye) the one the other"; "edify," lit., "build up," viz., in faith, hope, and love, by discoursing together on such edifying topics as the Lord's coming, and the glory of the saints (Mal. 3:16). 12. beseech—"Exhort" is the expression in vs. 14; here, "we beseech you," as if it were a personal favor (Paul making the cause of the Thessalonian presbyters, as it were, his own). know—to have a regard and respect for. Recognize their office, and treat them accordingly (cf. I Cor. 16:18) with reverence and with liberality in supplying their needs (I Tim. 5:17). The Thessalonian Church having been newly planted, the ministers were necessarily novices (I Tim. 3:6), which may have been in part the cause of the people's treating them with less respect. Paul's practice seems to have been to ordain elders in every Church soon after its establishment (Acts 14:23). them which labour . . . are over . . . admonish you—not three classes of ministers, but one, as there is but one article common to the three in the Greek. "Labor" expresses their laborious life; "are over you," their pre-eminence as presidents or superintendents ("bishops," i.e., overseers, Phil. 1:1, "them that have rule over you," lit., leaders, Heb. 13:17; "pastors," lit., shepherds, Eph. 4:11); "admonish you," one of their leading functions; the Greek is "put in mind," implying not arbitrary authority, but gentle, though faithful, admonition (II Tim. 2:14, 24, 25; I Pet. 5:3). in the Lord—Their presidency over you is in divine things; not in worldly affairs, but in things appertaining to the Lord. 13. very highly—Greek, "exceeding abundantly." for their work's sake—The high nature of their work alone, the furtherance of your salvation and of the kingdom of Christ, should be a sufficient motive to claim your reverential love. At the same time, the word "work," teaches ministers that, while claiming the reverence due to their office, it is not a sinecure, but a "work"; cf. "labor" (even to weariness: so the Greek), vs. 12. be at peace among yourselves—The "and" is not in the original. Let there not only be peace between ministers and their flocks, but also no party rivalries among yourselves, one contending in behalf of some one favorite minister, another in behalf of another (Mark 9:50; I Cor. 1:12; 4:6). 14. brethren—This exhortation to "warm (Greek, 'admonish,' as in vs. 12) the unruly (those 'disorderly' persons, II Thessalonians 3:6, 11, who would not work, and yet expected to be maintained, lit., said of soldiers who will not remain in their ranks, cf. ch. 4:11; also those insubordinate as to Church discipline, in relation to those 'over' the Church, vs. 12), comfort the feeble-minded" (the faint-hearted, who are ready to sink "without hope" in afflictions, ch. 4:13, and only called to work, but we are called also to fight; and that we may not be surprised, we must watch; and that we may be in a condition to defend ourselves, we must be sober; and that we may be enabled to conquer, we must be armed: and what the breastplate and helmet are to a soldier's heart and head, such are faith, love, and hope to us. Faith enables us to endure, "as seeing him who is invisible"; love excites us to diligence and activity, and makes us bear our troubles and difficulties pleasantly; hope helps us to anticipate the great end, the glory that shall be revealed, and which we know we shall in due time obtain if we faint not.

9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath. So then it appears that some were appointed . . . to wrath, "to punishment"; on this subject there can be no dispute. But who are they? When did this appointment take place? And for what cause? It is very obvious that in the preceding verses the apostle refers simply to the destruction of the Jewish polity and to the terrible judgments which were about to fall on the Jews as a nation; therefore they are the people who were appointed to wrath; and they were thus appointed, not from eternity, nor from any indefinite or remote time, but from that time in which they utterly rejected the offers of salvation made to them by Jesus Christ and His apostles. The privileges of their election were still continued to them even after they had crucified the Lord of glory; for when He gave commandment to His disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, He bade them begin at Jerusalem. When the Jews were rejected and appointed to wrath, then the Gentiles were elected and appointed to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, whose gospel they gladly received and continue to prize.

10. Who died for us. His death was an atoning sacrifice for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews. Whether we wake or sleep. Whether we "live" or "die," whether we are in this state or in the other world, we shall live together with Him—shall enjoy His life and the consolations of His Spirit while here, and shall be glorified together with Him in the eternal world.

11. Comfort . . . one another. Rest assured that in all times and circumstances it shall be well with the righteous; let every man lay this to heart; and with this consideration comfort and edify each other in all trials and difficulties.

12. Know them. Act kindly toward them; "acknowledge" them as the messengers of Christ, and treat them with tenderness and respect. This is a frequent meaning of the word. Them which labour among you. The words have appeared to some as expressing those who had labored among them; but as it is the participle of the present tense, there is no need to consider it in this light. Both it and the word "superintendents" refer to persons then actually employed in the work of God.

13. Esteem them very highly in love. Christian ministers who preach the whole truth and labor in the word and doctrine are entitled to more than respect; the apostle commands them to be esteemed, "abundantly, and super-abundantly." And this is to be done in love; and as men delight to serve those whom they love, it necessarily follows that they should provide for them, and see that they want neither the necessaries nor conveniences of life.

14. Warn them that are unruly. The whole phraseology of this verse is military; I shall consider the import of each term. Those who are "out of their ranks," and are neither in a disposition nor situation to perform the work and duty of a soldier; those who will not do the work prescribed, and who will meddle with what is not commanded. Comfort the feeble-minded. Those of "little souls"; the "faint-hearted"; those who, on the eve of a battle, are

To support the weak, v. 15. Some are not well able to perform their work, nor bear up under their burdens; we should therefore help their infirmities, and lift at one end of the burden, and so help to bear it. To be patient towards all men, v. 14. We must bear and forbear. And this duty must be exercised towards all men, good and bad, high and low. We must endeavour to make the best we can of everything, and think the best we can of everybody. Not to render evil for evil to any man, v. 15. We must by all means forbear to avenge ourselves. It becomes us to forgive, as those that are, and that hope to be, forgiven of God. Ever to follow that which is good, v. 15. We must study to do what is pleasing to God. Whatever men do to us, we must do good to others, both among ourselves and then, as we have opportunity, unto all men.

Here we have divers short exhortations. The duties are of great importance, and we may observe how they are connected together. 1. Rejoice evermore, v. 16. If we do rejoice in God we may do that evermore. A religious life is a pleasant life, it is a life of constant joy. 2. Pray without ceasing, v. 17. The way to rejoice evermore is to pray without ceasing. We should rejoice more if we prayed more. The meaning is not that men should do nothing but pray, but that nothing else we do should hinder prayer in its proper season. Prayer will help forward and not hinder all other lawful business, and every good work. 3. In everything give thanks, v. 18. If we pray without ceasing, we shall not want matter for thanksgiving in everything. We should be thankful in every condition, even in adversity as well as prosperity. It is never so bad with us but it might be worse. We never can have any reason to complain of God, and have always much reason to praise and give thanks. This is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us, that we give thanks. He allows us to rejoice evermore, and appoints us in everything to give thanks. 4. Quench not the Spirit (v. 19). Christians are said to be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. We must be careful not to quench this holy fire. As fire is put out by withdrawing fuel, so we quench the Spirit if we do not stir up our spirits. And as fire is quenched by pouring water, or putting a great quantity of dirt upon it, so we must be careful not to quench the Holy Spirit by indulging carnal lusts and affections, or minding only earthly things.

5. Despise not prophesyings (v. 20). By prophesyings here we are to understand the preaching of the word. We must not despise preaching, though it be plain, and though we be told no more than what we knew before. It is useful, and many times needful, to have our affections and resolutions excited, to those things that we knew before to be our interest and our duty.

6. Prove all things, but hold fast that which is good, v. 21. We must not take things upon trust from the preacher. We must search the scriptures, whether what they say be true or not. But we must not be always trying, always unsettled; no, at length we must be settled, and hold fast that which is good. Proving all things must be in order to holding fast that which is good. 7. Abstain from all appearance of evil, v. 22. Corrupt affections indulged in the heart, and evil practices allowed of in the life, will greatly tend to promote fatal errors in the mind; whereas purity of heart, and integrity of life, will dispose men to receive the truth in the love of it. He who is not shy of the appearances of sin will not long abstain from the actual commission of sin.

I. Paul's prayer for them, v. 23. 1. To whom the apostle prays, The very God of peace. By their peaceableness and unity those things would best be obtained which he prays for. 2. The things he prays for are their sanctification, that God would sanctify them wholly; temptations), applies to all clergy and laity alike, though primarily the duty of the clergy (who are meant in vs. 12). support—lit., "lay fast hold on so as to support." the weak—spiritually. Paul practiced what he preached (I Cor. 9:22). be patient toward all men—There is no believer who needs not the exercise of patience "toward" him; there is none to whom a believer ought not to show it; many show it more to strangers than to their own families, more to the great than to the humble; but we ought to show it "toward all men" [BENGEL]. Cf. "the long-suffering of our Lord" (II Cor. 10:1; II Pet. 3:15). 15. (Rom. 12:17; I Pet. 3:9.) unto any man—whether unto a Christian, or a heathen, however great the provocation. follow—as a matter of earnest pursuit. 16, 17. In order to "rejoice evermore," we must "pray without ceasing." He who is wont to thank God for all things as happening for the best, will have continuous joy [THEOPHYLACT]. Ephesians 6:18; Philippians 4:4, 6, "Rejoice in the Lord . . . by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving"; Romans 14:17, "in the Holy Ghost"; Romans 12: 12, "in hope"; Acts 5:41, "in being counted worthy to suffer shame for Christ's name"; James 1:2, in falling "into divers temptations." The Greek is, "Pray without intermission"; without allowing prayerless gaps to intervene between the times of prayer. 18. In every thing—even what seems adverse: for nothing is really so (cf. Rom. 8:28; Eph. 5:20). See Christ's example (Matt. 15:36; 26:27; Luke 10:21; John 11:41). this—That ye should "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, (and) in every thing give thanks," "is the will of God in Christ Jesus (as the Mediator and Revealer of that will, observed by those who are in Christ by faith, cf. Phil. 3:14) concerning you." God's will is the believer's law. LACHMANN rightly reads commas at the end of the three precepts (vss. 16, 17, 18), making "this" refer to all three. 19. Quench not—the Spirit being a holy fire: "where the Spirit is, He burns" [BENGEL] (Matt. 3:11; Acts 2:3;7:51). Do not throw cold water on those who, under extraordinary inspiration of the Spirit, stand up to speak with tongues, or reveal mysteries, or pray in the congregation. The enthusiastic exhibitions of some (perhaps as to the nearness of Christ's coming, exaggerating Paul's statement, II Thess. 2:2, By spirit), led others (probably the presiding ministers, who had not always been treated with due respect by enthusiastic novices, vs. 12), from dread of enthusiasm, to discourage the free utterances of those really inspired, in the Church assembly. On the other hand, the caution (vs. 21) was needed, not to receive "all" pretended revelations as divine, without "proving" them. 20. prophesyings—whether exercised in inspired teaching, or in predicting the future. "Despised" by some as beneath "tongues," which seemed most miraculous; therefore declared by Paul to be a greater gift than tongues, though the latter were more showy (I Cor. 14:5). 21, 22. Some of the oldest MSS. insert "But." You ought indeed not to "quench" the manifestations of "the Spirit," nor "despise prophesyings"; "but," at the same time, do not take "all" as genuine which professes to be so; "prove (test) all" such manifestations. The means of testing them existed in the Church, in those who had the "discerning of spirits" (I Cor. 12:10; 14: 29; I John 4:1). Another sure test, which we also have, is, to try the professed revelation whether it accords with Scripture, as the noble Bereans did (Isa. 8:20; Acts 17:11; Gal. 1:8, 9).

hold fast that which is good—Join this clause with the next clause (vs. 22), not merely with the sentence preceding. As the result of your "proving all things," and especially all prophesyings, "hold fast (Luke 8:15; I Cor. 11:2; Heb. 2:1) the good, and hold yourselves aloof from every appearance of evil" ("every evil species" [BENGEL and WAHL]). Do not accept even a professedly spirit-inspired communication, if it be at variance with the truth taught you (II Thess. 2:2)"Hold yourselves aloof from every evil appearance" or "form." 23. the very God—rather as the Greek, "the God of peace Himself"; who can do for you by His own power what I cannot do by all my monitions, nor you by all your efforts (Rom. 16:20; Heb. 13:20), viz., keep you from all evil, and give you all that is good. sanctify you—for holiness is the necessary condition of "peace" (Phil. 4:6-9). wholly—Greek, (so that you should be) "perfect in every respect" [TITTMANN]. and—i.e., "and so (omit 'I pray God'; not in the Greek) may your . . . spirit and soul and body be preserved. . . ." whole—A different Greek word from "wholly." Translate, "entire"; with none of the integral parts wanting [TITTMANN]. It refers to man in his normal integrity, as originally dispirited, because of the number of the enemy and their own feeble and unprovided state. Support the weak. "Shore up, prop" them that are weak; strengthen those wings and companies that are likely to be most exposed, that they be not overpowered and broken in the day of battle. Be patient toward all. The disorderly, the feebleminded, and the weak will exercise your patience and try your temper. If the troops be irregular, and cannot in every respect be reduced to proper order and discipline, let not the officers lose their temper nor courage; let them do the best they can. God will be with them, and a victory will give confidence to their troops.

15. See that none render evil for evil. Every temper contrary to love is contrary to Christianity. A peevish, fretful, vindictive man may be a child of Satan; he certainly is not a child of God. Follow that which is good. That by which you may profit your brethren and your neighbors of every description, whether Jews or Gentiles.

16. Rejoice evermore. Be always happy; the religion of Christ was intended to remove misery. He that has God for his Portion may constantly exult.

17. Pray without ceasing. You are dependent on God for every good; without Him you can do nothing. Feel that dependence at all times, and you will always be in the spirit of prayer; and those who feel this spirit will, as frequently as possible, be found in the exercise of prayer.

18. In every thing give thanks. For this reason, that all things work together for good to them that love God; therefore every occurrence may be a subject of gratitude and thankfulness. While you live to God, prosperity and adversity will be equally helpful to you. For this is the will of God. That you should be always happy; that you should ever be in the spirit of prayer; and that you should profit by every occurrence in life, and be continually grateful and obedient —for gratitude and obedience are inseparably connected.

19. Quench not the Spirit. The Holy Spirit is represented as a fire, because it is His province to enlighten and quicken the soul; and to purge, purify, and refine it. This Spirit is represented as being quenched when any act is done, word spoken, or temper indulged contrary to its dictates. It is the Spirit of love, and therefore anger, malice, revenge, or any unkind or unholy temper will quench it so that it will withdraw its influences; and then the heart is left in a state of hardness and darkness. It has been observed that fire may be quenched as well by heaping earth on it as by throwing water on it; and so the love of the world will as effectually grieve and quench the Spirit as any ordinary act of transgression.

20. Despise not prophesyings. Do not suppose that you have no need of continual instruction; without it you cannot preserve the Christian life nor go on to perfection.

21. Prove all things. Whatever you hear in these "prophesyings" or preachings, examine by the words of Christ, and by the doctrines which, from time to time, we have delivered unto you in our preaching and writings. Try the spirits, the different teachers, by the Word of God. Hold fast that which is good. Whatever in these prophesyings has a tendency to increase your faith, love, holiness, and usefulness, that receive and hold fast.

22. Abstain from all appearance of evil. Sin not, and avoid even the appearance of it. Do not drive your morality so near the bounds of evil as to lead even weak persons to believe that you actually touch, taste, or handle it. Let not the "form" of it appear with or among you, much less the substance.

23. And the very God of peace. That same God who is the Author of peace, the Giver of peace, and who has sent for the redemption of the world the Prince of Peace—may that very God sanctify you wholly; leave no more evil in your hearts than His precepts tolerate evil in your conduct. The word wholly means precisely the same as our phrase "to all intents and purposes." May He sanctify you to the end and to the uttermost. Your whole spirit and soul and body. Some think that the apostle and their preservation, that they might be preserved blameless. All those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus shall be preserved to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. We should pray to God to perfect his work, and preserve us blameless, till at length we are presented faultless before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy.

II. His comfortable assurance that God would hear his prayer: Faithful is he who calleth you, who will also do it, v. 24. The faithfulness of God was their security that they should persevere to the end. God would do what he desired; he would accomplish all the good pleasure of his goodness towards them. Our fidelity to God depends upon his faithfulness to us.

III. His request of their prayers: Brethren, pray for us, v. 25. Brethren should thus express brotherly love. The more people pray for their ministers the more good ministers may have from God, and the more benefit people may receive by their ministry.

IV. His salutation: Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss, v. 26. Thus the apostle sends a friendly salutation from himself, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, and would have them salute each other in their names; and thus he would have them signify their mutual love and affection to one another.

V. His solemn charge for the reading of this epistle, v. 27. This is not only an exhortation, but an adjuration by the Lord. And this epistle was to be read to all the holy brethen. In order to this, these holy oracles should not be kept concealed in an unknown tongue, but translated into the vulgar languages. The scriptures should be read in the public assemblies of Christians also.

VI. The apostolical benediction that is usual in other epistles: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen, v. 28. We need no more to make us happy than to know that grace which our Lord Jesus Christ has manifested. This is an ever-flowing and overflowing fountain of grace to supply all our wants.

designed; an ideal which shall be attained by the glorified believer. All three, spirit, soul, and body, each in its due place, constitute man "entire." The "spirit" links man with the higher intelligences of heaven, and is that highest part of man which is receptive of the quickening Holy Spirit (I Cor. 15: 47). In the unspiritual, the spirit is so sunk under the lower animal soul (which it ought to keep under) that such are termed "animal" (English Version, "sensual," having merely the body of organized matter, and the soul the immaterial animating essence), having not the Spirit (cf. I Cor. 2:14; Notes, 15:44; 46-48; John 3:6). The unbeliever shall rise with an animal (soul-animated) body, but not like the believer with a spiritual (spirit-endued) body like Christ's (Rom. 8:11). blameless unto—rather as Greek, "blamelessly (so as to be in a blameless state) at the coming of Christ." In Hebrew, "peace" and "wholly" (perfect in every respect) are kindred terms; so that the prayer shows what the title "God of peace" implies. BENGEL takes "wholly" as collectively, all the Thessalonians without exception, so that no one should fail. And "whole" (entire), individually, each one of them entire, with "spirit, soul, and body." The mention of the preservation of the body accords with the subject (ch. 4:16). TRENCH better regards "wholly" as meaning, "having perfectly attained the moral end," viz., to be a full-grown man in Christ. "Whole," complete, with no grace which ought to be wanting in a Christian. 24. Faithful—to His covenant promises (John 10:27-29; I Cor. 1:9; 10:23; Phil. 1:6). he that calleth you—God, the caller of His people, will cause His calling not to fall short of its designed end. do it—preserve and present you blameless at the coming of Christ (vs. 23; Rom. 8:30; I Pet. 5:10). You must not look at the foes before and behind, on the right hand and on the left, but to God's faithfulness to His promises, God's zeal for His honor, and God's love for those whom He calls. 25. Some oldest MSS. read, "Pray ye also for (lit., concerning) us"; make us and our work the subject of your prayers, even as we have been just praying for you (vs. 23). Others omit the "also." The clergy need much the prayers of their flocks. Paul makes the same request in the Epistles to Romans, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, and in II Corinthians; not so in the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, whose intercessions, as his spiritual sons, he was already sure of; nor in the Epistles, I Corinthians and Galatians, as these Epistles abound in rebuke. 26. Hence it appears this Epistle was first handed to the elders, who communicated it to "the brethren." holy kiss—pure and chaste. "A kiss of charity" (I Pet. 5:14). A token of Christian fellowship in those days (cf. Luke 7:45; Acts 20:37), as it is a common mode of salutation in many countries. The custom hence arose in the early Church of passing the kiss through the congregation at the holy communion (JUSTIN MARTYR, Apology, 1. 65; Apostolic Constitutions, 2. 57), the men kissing the men, and the women the women, in the Lord. So in the Syrian Church each takes his neighbor's right hand and gives the salutation, "Peace." 27. I charge—Greek, "I adjure you." read unto all—viz., publicly in the congregation at a particular time. The Greek aorist implies a single act done at a particular time. The earnestness of his adjuration implies how solemnly important he felt this divinely inspired message to be. Also, as this was the FIRST of the Epistles of the New Testament, he makes this the occasion of a solemn charge, that so its being publicly read should be a sample of what should be done in the case of the others, just as the Pentateuch and the Prophets were publicly read under the Old Testament, and are still read in the synagogue. Cf. the same injunction as to the public reading of the Apocalypse, the LAST of the New Testament canon (Rev. 1:3). The "all" includes women and children, and especially those who could not read it themselves (Deut. 31:12; Josh. 8:33-35). What Paul commands with an adjuration, Rome forbids under a curse [BENGEL]. Though these Epistles had difficulties, the laity were all to hear them read (I Pet. 4:11; II Pet. 3:10; even the very young, II Tim. 1:5; 3:15). "Holy" is omitted before "brethren" in most of the oldest MSS., though some of them support it. 28. (Note, II Cor. 13:14.) Paul ends as he began (ch. 1:1), with "grace." The oldest MSS. omit "Amen," which probably was the response of the Church after the public reading of the Epistle.

ADAM CLARKE

alludes to the Pythagorean and Platonic doctrine, which was acknowledged among the Thessalonians. I should rather believe that he refers simply to the fact that the creature called man is a compound being, consisting: (1) Of a body, an organized system, formed by the creative energy of God out of the dust of the earth; (2) Of a soul, which is the seat of the different affections and passions, such as love, hatred, anger, with sensations, appetites, and propensities of different kinds; (3) Of spirit, the immortal principle, the source of life to the body and soul; and which alone possesses the faculty of intelligence, understanding, thinking, and reasoning, and produces the faculty of speech wherever it resides, if accident have not impaired the organs of speech. The apostle prays that this compound being, in all its parts, powers, and faculties, which he terms their whole, comprehending all parts, everything that constitutes man and manhood, may be sanctified and preserved blameless till the coming of Christ. Thus we learn that the sanctification is not to take place in, at, or after death.

24. Faithful is he that calleth you. In a great variety of places in His Word, God has promised to sanctify His followers, and His faithfulness binds Him to fulfill His promises; therefore He will do it. He who can believe will find this thing also possible to him.

25. Pray for us. Even apostles, while acting under an extraordinary mission, and enjoying the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, felt the necessity of the prayers of the faithful.

27. I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read. There must have been some particular reason for this solemn charge. He certainly had some cause to suspect that the Epistle would be suppressed in some way or other, and that the whole church would not be permitted to hear it; or he may refer to the smaller churches contiguous to Thessalonica, or the churches in Macedonia in general, whom he wished to hear it, as well as those to whom it was more immediately directed. There is no doubt that the apostles designed that their epistles should be copied and sent to all the churches in the vicinity of that to which they were directed. Had this not been the case, a great number of churches would have known scarcely anything of the New Testament. As every Jewish synagogue had a copy of the law and the prophets, so every Christian church had a copy of the Gospels and the Epistles, which were daily, or at least every Sabbath, read for the instruction of the people. This the apostle deemed so necessary that he adjured them by the Lord to read this Epistle to all the brethren; i.e., to all the Christians in that district.

28. The grace of our Lord Jesus. As the Epistle began, so it ends; for the grace of Christ must be at the beginning and end of every work, in order to complete it and bring it to good effect. Amen. This is wanting in some MSS. It was probably not written by Paul.

This second epistle was written soon after the former, and seems to have been designed to prevent a mistake concerning the second coming of Christ, as if it were near at hand. The apostle informs them that there were many intermediate counsels yet to be fulfilled before that day of the Lord should come, though, because it is sure, he had spoken of it as near.

CHAPTER 1

Verses 1–4

I. The introduction (v. 1, 2), in the same words as in the former epistle. This church of the Thessalonians was built, as all true churches are; in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

II. The apostle's expression of the high esteem he had for them.

1. How his esteem of them is expressed. (1) He glorified God on their behalf, v. 3. It is our duty to be thankful to God for all the good that is found in us or others: and it not only is an act of kindness to our fellow-christians, but our duty, to thank God on their behalf. (2) He also glories in them before the churches of God, v. 4. The apostle never flattered his friends, but he took pleasure in speaking well of them, to the glory of God.

2. For what he esteemed them and thanked God. In his former epistle (ch. i. 3) he gave thanks for their faith, love, and patience; here he gives thanks for the increase of all those graces. Where there is the truth of grace there will be increase of it. And where there is the increase of grace God must have all the glory of it. We are as much indebted to him for the improvement of grace, as we are for the very beginning of it. We may be tempted to think that though when we were bad we could not make ourselves good, yet when we are good we can easily make ourselves better. Their faith grew exceedingly, v. 3. The growth of their faith appeared by the works of faith; and, where faith grows, all other graces grow proportionably. Their charity abounded (v. 3). Where faith grows love will abound.

Vss. 1-12. ADDRESS AND SALUTATION: INTRODUCTION: THANKSGIVING FOR THEIR GROWTH IN FAITH AND LOVE, AND FOR THEIR PATIENCE IN PERSECUTIONS, WHICH ARE A TOKEN FOR GOOD EVERLASTING TO THEM, AND FOR PERDITION TO THEIR ADVERSARIES AT CHRIST'S COMING: PRAYER FOR THEIR PERFECTION. 1. in God our Father—still more endearing than the address, I Thessalonians 1:1 "in God THE Father." 2. from God our Father—So some oldest MSS. read. Others omit "our." 3. We are bound—Greek, "We owe it as a debt" (ch. 2:13). They had prayed for the Thessalonians (I Thess. 3:12) that they might "increase and abound in love"; their prayer having been heard, it is a small but a bounden return for them to make, to thank God for it. Thus, Paul and his fellow missionaries practice what they preach (I Thess. 5:18). In I Thessalonians 1:3, their thanksgiving was for the Thessalonians' faith, love, and patience"; here, for their exceeding growth in faith, and for their charity abounding. We are bound—expresses the duty of thanksgiving from its subjective side as an inward conviction. "As it is meet," from the objective side as something answering to the state of circumstances [ALFORD]. Observe the exact correspondence of the prayer (I Thess. 3:12, "The Lord make you to abound in love") and the answer, "The love of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth" (cf. I Thess. 4:10). meet—right. 4. glory in you—make our boast of you, lit., "in your case." "Ourselves" implies that not merely did they hear others speaking of the Thessalonians' faith, but they, the missionaries themselves, boasted of it. Cf. I Thessalonians 1:8, wherein the apostle said, their faith was so well known in various places, that he and his fellow missionaries had no need to speak of it; but here he says, so abounding is their love, combined with faith and patience, that he and his fellow missionaries themselves, make it a matter of glorying in the various churches elsewhere (he was now at Corinth in Achaia, and boasted there of the faith of the Macedonian

1. Paul, and Silvanus. See the notes on 1 Thess. i. 1. This Epistle was written a short time after the former; and as Silas and Timothy were still at Corinth, the apostle joins their names with his own, as in the former case.

3. Your faith groweth exceedingly. The word signifies "to grow luxuriantly," as a good and healthy tree planted in a good soil; and if a fruit tree bearing an abundance of fruit to compensate the labor of the husbandman.

4. We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God. We hold you up as an example of what the grace of God can produce when communicated to honest and faithful hearts.

MATTHEW HENRY

Their patience as well as faith increased in all their persecutions and tribulations. And patience has then its perfect work when it extends itself to all trials. They endured all these by faith, and endured them with patience, not with an insensibility under them, but with patience arising from Christian principles.

Verses 5–10

I. The present happiness and advantage of their sufferings, v. 5. They were improved by their sufferings, were counted worthy of the kingdom of God. Religion, if it is worth anything, is worth everything, and those either have no religion at all, or know not how to value it, that cannot find in their hearts to suffer for it.

II. The future recompence that shall be given to persecutors and persecuted.

1. In this future recompence there will be, (1) A punishment inflicted on persecutors, v. 6. And there is nothing that more infallibly marks a man for eternal ruin than a spirit of persecution. God will render a recompence, and will trouble those that trouble his people. (2) A reward for those that are persecuted, v. 7. There is a rest that remains for the people of God, a rest from sin and sorrow. The future rest will abundantly recompence all their present troubles. There is enough in heaven to countervail all that we may lose or suffer for the name of Christ in this world.

2. Concerning this future recompence.

(1) The certainty of it: It is a righteous thing with God (v. 6). God's suffering people will lose nothing by their sufferings, and their enemies will gain nothing.

(2) When this righteous recompence shall be made, v. 7. The Lord Jesus will in that day appear from heaven. He will be revealed with his mighty angels (v. 7).

He will come in flaming fire, v. 8. A refining fire, to purify the saints. A consuming fire to the wicked. The effects of this appearance will be terrible to some and joyful to others.

First, They will be terrible to some. Those that sinned against the principles of natural religion, and rebelled against the light of nature (v. 8). Those that rebel against the light of revelation.

To such persons the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ will be terrible, because of their doom, v. 9. They will then be punished. They did sin's work, and must receive sin's wages. Their punishment will be no less than destruction. This destruction shall come from the presence of the Lord. It shall come from the glory of his power.

churches, II Cor. 10:15-17; 8:1, at the same time giving the glory to the Lord), not only looking forward to glorying thereat at Christ's coming (I Thess. 2:19), but doing so even now. patience—in I Thessalonians 1:3, "patience of hope." Here hope is tacitly implied as the ground of their patience; vss. 5, 7 state the object of their hope, viz., the kingdom for which they suffer. tribulations—lit., "pressures." The Jews were the instigators of the populace and of the magistrates against Christians (Acts 17:6, 8). which ye endure—Greek, "are (now) enduring." 5. Which—Your enduring these tribulations is a "token of the righteous judgment of God," manifested in your being enabled to endure them, and in your adversaries thereby filling up the measure of their guilt. The judgment is even now begun, but its consummation will be at the Lord's coming. David (Ps. 73:1-14) and Jeremiah (12:1-4) were perplexed at the wicked prospering and the godly suffering. But Paul, by the light of the New Testament, makes this fact a matter of consolation. It is a proof (so the Greek)of the future judgment, which will set to rights the anomalies of the present state, by rewarding the now suffering saint, and by punishing the persecutor. that ye may be counted worthy—expressing the purpose of God's "righteous judgment" as regards you. for which—Greek, "in behalf of which ye are also suffering" (cf. Acts 5: 41; 9:16; Phil. 1:29). "Worthy" implies that, though men are justified by faith, they shall be judged "according to their works" (Rev. 20:12; cf. I Thess. 2:12; I Pet. 1:6, 7; Rev. 20:4). The "also" implies the connection between the suffering for the kingdom and being counted worthy of it. Cf. Romans 8:17, 18. 6. seeing it is a righteous thing—This justifies the assertion above of there being a "righteous judgment" (vs. 5), viz., "seeing that it is (lit., 'if at least,' 'if at all events it is') a righteous thing with (i.e., in the estimation of) God" (which, as we all feel, it certainly is). Our own innate feeling of what is just, in this confirms what is revealed. recompense—requite in kind, viz., tribulation to them that trouble you (affliction to those that afflict you); and to you who are troubled, rest from trouble. 7. rest—governed by "to recompense" (vs. 6). The Greek is lit., "relaxation"; loosening of the tension which had preceded; relaxing of the strings of endurance now so tightly drawn. The Greek word for "rest," Matthew 11: 28, is distinct, viz., cessation from labor. Also, Hebrews 4:9, "A keeping of sabbath." with us—viz., Paul, Silas, and Timothy, the writers, who are troubled like yourselves. when—at the time when . . .; not sooner, not later. with his mighty angels—rather as the Greek, "with the angels of His might," or "power," i.e., the angels who are the ministers by whom He makes His might to be recognized (Matt. 13:41, 52). It is not their might, but His might, which is the prominent thought 8. In flaming fire—Greek, "In flame of fire"; or, as other oldest MSS. read, in fire of flame. This flame of fire accompanied His manifestation in the bush (Exod. 3:2); also His giving of the law at Sinai (Exod. 19:18). Also it shall accompany His revelation at His advent (Dan. 7:9, 10), symbolizing His own bright glory and His consuming vengeance against His foes (Heb. 10:27; 12:29; II Pet. 3:7, 10). taking—lit., "giving" them, as their portion, "vengeance." know not God—the Gentiles primarily (Ps. 79:6; Gal. 4:8; I Thess. 4:5); not of course those involuntarily not knowing God, but those wilfully not knowing Him, as Pharaoh, who might have known God if he would, but who boasted "I know not the Lord" (Exod. 5:2); and as the heathen persecutors who might have known God by the preaching of those whom they persecuted. Secondarily, all who "profess to know God but in works deny Him" (Titus 1:16). obey not the gospel—primarily the unbelieving Jews (Rom. 10:3, 16); secondarily, all who obey not the truth (Rom. 2:8). Christ—omitted by some of the oldest MSS., and retained by others. 9. Who—Greek, "persons who . . . ." destruction from the presence of the Lord—driven far from His presence [ALFORD]. The sentence emanating from Him in person, sitting as Judge [BENGEL], and driving them far from Him (Matt. 25:41; Rev. 6:16; 12:14; cf. I Pet. 3:12; Isa. 2:10, 19). "The presence of the Lord" is the source whence the sentence goes forth; "the glory of His power" is the instrument whereby the sentence is carried into execution [EDMUNDS]. But ALFORD better interprets the latter clause (see vs. 10), driven "from the manifestation of His power in the glorification of His saints." Cast out from the presence of the Lord is the idea at the root of eternal death, the law of evil left to its unrestricted working, without one counteracting influence of the presence

ADAM CLARKE

For your patience and faith. From Acts xvii. 5, 13 and from 1 Thess. ii. 14, we learn that the people of Thessalonica had suffered much persecution from both the Jews and their own countrymen; but being thoroughly convinced of the truth of the gospel, and feeling it to be the power of God unto salvation, no persecution could turn them aside from it. And having suffered for the truth, it was precious to them. Persecution never essentially injured the genuine Church of God.

5. A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God. The persecutions and tribulations which you endure are a manifest proof that God has judged righteously in calling you Gentiles into His Church. The words, however, may be understood in another sense, and will form this maxim: "The sufferings of the just, and the triumphs of the wicked, in this life, are a sure proof that there will be a future judgment, in which the wicked shall be punished and the righteous rewarded." This maxim is not only true in itself, but it is most likely that this is the apostle's meaning.

6. Seeing it is a righteous thing. Though God neither rewards nor punishes in this life in a general way, yet He often gives proofs of His displeasure, especially against those who persecute His followers. They therefore who have given you tribulation shall have tribulation in recompense.

7. And to you who are troubled rest with us. And while they have tribulation, you shall have that eternal rest which remains for the people of God. When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed. But this fullness of tribulation to them and rest to you shall not take place till the Lord Jesus comes to judge the world. With his mighty angels. The coming of God to judge the world is scarcely ever spoken of in the sacred writings without mentioning the holy angels, who are to accompany Him and to form His court or retinue. See Deut. xxxiii. 2; Matt. xxv. 31; xvi. 27; xxvi. 64; Mark viii. 38.

8. In flaming fire, in thunder and lightning, taking vengeance, inflicting just punishment, on them that know not God—the heathen who do not worship the true God, and will not acknowledge Him, but worship idols; and on them that obey not the gospel—the Jews, particularly who have rejected the gospel and persecuted Christ and His messengers; and all nominal Christians who, though they believe the gospel as a revelation from God, yet do not obey it as a rule of life.

9. Who shall be punished. What this everlasting destruction consists in we cannot tell. It is not annihilation, for their being continues; and as the destruction is everlasting, it is an eternal continuance and presence of substantial evil and absence of all good; for a part of this punishment consists in being banished from the presence of the Lord, excluded from His approbation forever. The glory of his power. Never to see the face of God throughout eternity is a heart-rending, soul-appalling thought; and to be banished from the glory of his power, that power the glory of which is peculiarly manifested in saving the lost and glorifying the faithful, is what cannot be reflected on without confusion and dismay.

MATTHEW HENRY

Secondly, It will be a joyful day to some, even to the saints. Christ Jesus will be glorified and admired by his saints. Christ will be glorified and admired in them. His grace and power will be magnified in the salvation of his saints. How will they be wondered at in this great and glorious day; or, rather, how will Christ be admired!

Verses 11, 12

His earnest and constant prayer for them: Wherefore also we pray, &c.

I. What the apostle prayed for, v. 11. 1. That God would begin his good work of grace in them; so we may understand this expression: That our God would count you (or, as it might be read, make you) worthy of this calling. We are called to God's kingdom and glory. Now, if this be our calling, our great concern should be to be worthy of it. We should pray that he would make us worthy. 2. That God would carry on the good work that is begun. The good pleasure of God denotes his gracious purposes towards his people. Now, there are various and manifold purposes of grace and goodwill in God towards his people; and the apostle prays that all of them may be fulfilled towards these Thessalonians. In particular, the apostle prays that God would fulfil in them the work of faith with power.

II. Why the apostle prayed for these things (v. 12). Our good works should so shine before men that others may glorify God, that Christ may be glorified in and by us, and then we shall be glorified in and with him.

of God, who is the source of all light and holiness (Isa. 66:24; Mark 9:44). 10. "When He shall have come." glorified in his saints—as the element and mirror IN which His glory shall shine brightly (John 17:10). admired in all them that believe—Greek, "them that believed." Once they believed, now they see: they had taken His word on trust. Now His word is made good and they need faith no longer. With wonder all celestial intelligences (Eph. 3:10) shall see and admire the Redeemer on account of the excellencies which He has wrought in them. because . . .—Supply for the sense, among whom (viz., those who shall be found to have believed) you, too, shall be; "because our testimony unto (so the Greek for 'among') you was believed" (and was not rejected as by those "who obey not the Gospel," vs. 8). The early preaching of the Gospel was not abstract discussions, but a testimony to facts and truths experimentally known (Luke 24: 48; Acts 1:8). 11. Wherefore—Greek, "With a view to which," viz., His glorification in you as His saints. also—We not only anticipate the coming glorification of our Lord in His saints, but we also pray concerning (so the Greek) YOU. our God—whom we serve. count you worthy—The prominent position of the "YOU" in the Greek makes it the emphatic word of the sentence. May you be found among the saints whom God shall count worthy of their calling (Eph. 4:1)! There is no dignity in us independent of God's calling of us (II Tim. 1:9). The calling here is not merely the first actual call, but the whole of God's electing act, originating in His "purpose of grace given us in Christ before the world began," and having its consummation in glory. the good pleasure of . . .—on the part of God [BENGEL]. faith—on your part. with power—Greek, "in power," i.e., "powerfully fulfil in you" (Col. 1:11). 12. the name of our Lord Jesus—Our Lord Jesus in His manifested personality as the God-man. in you, and ye in him—reciprocal glorification; cf. Isaiah 28:5, "The Lord of hosts shall be . . . a crown of glory and . . . a diadem of beauty unto . . . . His people," with Isaiah 62:3, "Thou (Zion) shalt be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem . . ." (John 21:10; Gal. 1:24; I Pet. 4:14). The believer's graces redound to Christ's glory, and His glory, as their Head, reflects glory on them as the members. the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ—There is but one Greek article to both, implying the inseparable unity of God and the Lord Jesus.

ADAM CLARKE

10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints. As the grace of God is peculiarly glorified in saving sinners and making them into saints, this gracious power will be particularly manifested in the great day when countless millions will appear before that throne who have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. And to be admired. "To be wondered at among" and on the account of all them that believe. Instead of them that believe, "them that have believed" is the reading of many MSS. and most of the Greek fathers. This reading is undoubtedly genuine. Because our testimony among you was believed in that day. The members of this sentence seem to have been strangely transposed. I believe it should be read thus: "In that day, when He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and admired among all them that have believed; for our testimony was believed among you." The Thessalonians had credited what the apostles had said and written, not only concerning Jesus Christ in general, but concerning the day of judgment in particular.

11. We pray . . . that our God would count you worthy. It is our earnest prayer that God would "make you worthy," afford those continual supplies of grace by His Holy Spirit without which you cannot adorn your holy vocation.

12. That the name of our Lord. This is the great end of your Christian calling, that Jesus, who has died for you, may have His passion and death magnified in your life and happiness; that you may show forth the virtues of Him who called you from darkness into His marvellous light. And ye in him. That His glorious excellence may be seen upon you; that you may be adorned with the graces of His Spirit, as He is glorified by your salvation from all sin. According to the grace. That your salvation may be such as God requires, and such as is worthy of His grace to communicate. God saves as becomes God to save, and thus the dignity of His nature is seen in the excellence and glory of His work.

Some among the Thessalonians had mistaken the apostle's meaning about the coming of Christ, by thinking that it was near at hand. The apostle is careful to rectify this mistake. If errors and mistakes arise among Christians, we should take the first opportunity to rectify them, and good men will be especially careful to suppress errors that may arise from a mistake of their words and actions. We have a subtle adversary, who will sometimes promote errors even by means of the words of scripture.

I. How very earnest this apostle was, v. 1. He entreats them as brethren who might have charged them as a father charges his children. And this is the best way to deal with men when we would preserve or recover them from errors, to deal gently and affectionately with them.

1. It is most certain that the Lord Jesus Christ will come to judge the world. Whatever mistakes may arise about the time of his coming, his coming itself is certain.

2. At the second coming of Christ all the saints will be gathered together to him. It will be the completing of the happiness of his saints. There will then be a general meeting of all the saints, and none but saints; all the Old Testament saints, and all the New Testament saints. They shall be gathered together to Christ. He will be the great centre of their unity. To be with him for ever, and altogether happy in his presence to all eternity.

II. The Thessalonians should not be deceived about the time of Christ's coming, and so be shaken in mind, or be troubled. Errors in the mind tend greatly to weaken our faith, and such as are weak in faith and of troubled minds are oftentimes apt to be deceived.

VSS. 1-17. CORRECTION OF THEIR ERROR AS TO CHRIST'S IMMEDIATE COMING. THE APOSTASY THAT MUST PRECEDE IT. EXHORTATION TO STEADFASTNESS, INTRODUCED WITH THANKSGIVING FOR THEIR ELECTION BY GOD. 1. Now—rather, "But"; marking the transition from his prayers for them to entreaties to them. we beseech you—or "entreat you." He uses affectionate entreaty, rather than stern reproof, to win them over to the right view. by—rather, "with respect to"; as the Greek for "of" (II Cor. 1:8). our gathering together unto him—the consummating or final gathering together of the saints to Him at His coming, as announced, Matthew 24:31; I Thessalonians 4:17. The Greek noun is nowhere else found except in Hebrews 10: 25, said of the assembling together of believers for congregational worship. Our instinctive fears of the judgment are dispelled by the thought of being gathered together UNTO HIM ("even as the hen gathereth her chickens under her wings"), which ensures our safety. 2. soon—on trifling grounds, without due consideration. shaken—lit., "tossed" as ships tossed by an agitated sea. Cf. for the same image, Ephesians 4:14. in mind—rather as the Greek, "from your mind," i.e., from your mental steadfastness on the subject. troubled—This verb applies to emotional agitation; as "shaken" to intellectual. by spirit—by a person professing to have the spirit of prophecy (I Cor. 12:8-10, I John 4:1-3). The Thessalonians had been warned (I Thess. 5:20, 21) to "prove" such professed prophesyings, and to "hold fast (only) that which is good." by word—of mouth (cf. vss. 5, 15); some word or saying alleged to be that of Paul, orally communicated. If oral tradition was liable to such perversion in the apostolic age (cf. a similar instance, John 21:23), how much more in our age! by letter as from us—purporting to be from us, whereas it is a forgery. Hence he gives a test by which to know his genuine letters (ch. 3:17). day of Christ—The oldest MSS. read, "day of the Lord." is at hand—rather, "is

1. We beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord. It is evident that the Thessalonians, incited by deceived or false teachers, had taken a wrong meaning out of the words of the First Epistle, chap. iv. 15 ff., concerning the day of judgment, and were led then to conclude that that day was at hand; and this had produced great confusion in the church. To correct this mistake the apostle sent them this second letter, in which he shows that this day must be necessarily distant, because a great work is to be done previously to its appearing. Of the day of general judgment he had spoken before, and said that it should "come as a thief in the night," i.e., when not expected; but he did not attempt to fix the time, nor did he insinuate that it was either near at hand or far off. Now, however, he shows that it must necessarily be far off, because of the great transactions which must take place before it can come.

2. Be not soon shaken in mind. "From the mind"; i.e., that they should retain the persuasion they had of the truths which he had before delivered to them; that they should still hold the same opinions, and hold fast the doctrines which they had been taught. Neither by spirit. Any pretended revelation. Nor by word. Anything which any person may profess to have heard the apostle speak. Nor by letter. Either the former one which he had sent, some passages of which have been misconceived and misconstrued, or by any other letter, as from us—pretending to have been written by us, the apostles, containing predictions of this kind. There is a diversity of opinion among critics concerning this last clause, some supposing that

The apostle would not have them be deceived, v. 3. There are many who lie in wait to deceive, and they have many ways of deceiving; we have reason therefore to stand upon our guard. The apostle cautions them not to be deceived about the near approach of Christ's coming, as if it was to have been in the apostle's days. He gives them warning. He would not have their faith weakened. They ought not to waver in their minds as to this great thing, which is the faith and hope of all the saints. False doctrines are like the winds, that toss the water to and fro, and they are apt to unsettle the minds of men, who are sometimes as unstable as water. He would not have their comforts lessened with false alarms. In itself it should be matter of the believer's hope and joy. We should always watch and pray, but must not be discouraged nor uncomfortable at the thought of Christ's coming.

The apostle confutes the error against which he had cautioned them. There are several events previous to the second coming of Christ.

I. A general apostasy, v. 3. The apostle speaks of some very great apostasy such as should give occasion to the revelation or rise of that man of sin. This, he says (v. 5), he had told them of when he was with them. No sooner was Christianity planted and rooted in the world than there began to be a defection in the Christian church. It was so in the Old Testament church, and therefore it was no strange thing that after the planting of Christianity there should come a falling away.

II. A revelation of that man of sin (v. 3). The apostle afterwards speaks of the revelation of that wicked one (v. 8): here he seems to speak of his rise. He is called the man of sin, and he is the son of perdition, because he himself is devoted to certain destruction, and is the instrument of destroying many others.

The characters here given, v. 4. The antichrist is some usurper of God's authority who claims divine honours.

immediately imminent," lit., "is present"; "is instantly coming." Christ and His apostles always taught that the day of the Lord's coming is at hand; and it is not likely that Paul would imply anything contrary here; what he denies is, that it is so immediately imminent, instant, or present, as to justify the neglect of everyday worldly duties. CHRYSOSTOM, and after him ALFORD, translates, "is [already] present" (cf. II Tim. 2:18), a kindred error. But in II Timothy 3:1, the same Greek verb is translated "come." WAHL supports this view. The Greek is usually used of actual presence; but is quite susceptible of the translation, "is all but present." 3. by any means—Greek, "in any manner." Christ, in Matthew 24:4, gives the same warning in connection with the same event. He had indicated three ways (vs. 2) in which they might be deceived (cf. other ways, vs. 9, and Matthew 24:5, 24). a falling away—rather as the Greek, "the falling away," or "apostasy," viz., the one of which "I told you" before (vs. 5), "when I was yet with you," and of which the Lord gave some intimation (Matt. 24:10-12; John 5:43). that man of sin be revealed—The Greek order is, "And there have been revealed the man of sin." As Christ was first in mystery, and afterwards revealed (I Tim. 3:16), so Antichrist (the term used I John 2:18; 4:3) is first in mystery, and afterwards shall be developed and revealed (vss. 7-9). As righteousness found its embodiment in Christ, "the Lord our righteousness," so "sin" shall have its embodiment in "the man of sin." The hindering power meanwhile restrains its manifestation; when that shall be removed, then this manifestation shall take place. the son of perdition—a title applied besides to Judas (the traitor, John 17:12), and to none else. Antichrist (the second "beast" coming up out of the earth; therefore he shall at first be "like a lamb, while he speaks as a dragon" (Rev. 13:11); "coming in peaceably and by flatteries," "working deceitfully," but "his heart shall be against the holy covenant" (Dan. 11:21, 23, 28, 30). Seeds of "the falling away" soon appear (I Tim. 4:1-3), but the full development and concentration of these anti-Christian elements in one person are still to appear.

4. Daniel 11:36, 37 is here referred to. The words used there as to Antiochus Epiphanes, Paul implies, shall even be more applicable to the man of sin, who is the New Testament actual Antichrist, as Antiochus was the Old Testament typical Antichrist. The previous world kingdoms had each one extraordinary person as its representative head and embodiment (thus Babylon had Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 2:38, end; Medo-Persia had Cyrus; Greece had Alexander, and Antiochus Epiphanes, the forerunner of Antichrist); so the fourth and last world kingdom, under which we now live, shall have one final head, the concentrated embodiment of all the sin and lawless iniquity which have been in pagan and papal Rome. Rome's final phase will probably be an unholy alliance between idolatrous superstition and godless infidelity. Who opposeth and exalteth himself—There is but one Greek article to both participles, implying that the reason why he opposeth himself is in order that he may exalt himself above .... ALFORD takes the former clause absolutely, "He that withstands (CHRIST)," i.e., Antichrist (I John 2:18). Antichrist shall exalt himself above every object of worship, whether on earth as the Cæsar, or in heaven as God. The various prefigurations of Antichrist, Mohammed, Rome, Napoleon, and modern infidel secularism, contain only some, not all, his characteristics. It is the union of all in some one person that shall form the full Antichrist, as the union in one Person, Jesus, of all the types and prophecies constituted the full Christ [OLSHAUSEN]. in the temple of God ... that he is God—"He will reign a time, times, and half a time" (Dan. 7:25), i.e., three and a half years, and will sit in the temple at Jerusalem; then the Lord shall come from heaven and cast him into the lake of fire and shall bring to the saints the times of their reigning, the seventh day of hallowed rest, and give to Abraham the promised inheritance" [IRENÆUS, Adversus Hæreses, 30. 4]. showing himself—with blasphemous and arrogant DISPLAY (cf. a type, Acts 12:21-23). "Lucifer" (a title of Messiah, assumed by Antichrist, Rev. 22:16); "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God." "I will sit upon the mount of the congregation (i.e., God's place of meeting His people of old, the temple), in the sides of the north (Ps. 48:2); I will be like the Most High." Revelation 11:1, 2, "The temple of God ... the holy city" (viz., Jerusalem, Matt. 4:5), cf. Psalm 68:18, 29, referring to a period since Christ's ascension, therefore not yet fulfilled it refers simply to the First Epistle, others supposing that a forged epistle is intended. I have joined the two senses. The word "to be shaken" signifies to be agitated as a ship at sea in a storm, and strongly marks the confusion and distress which the Thessalonians had felt in their false apprehension of this coming of Christ.

3. Except there come a falling away first. We have the original word in our word "apostasy"; and by this term we understand a dereliction of the essential principles of religious truth—either a total abandonment of Christianity itself or such a corruption of its doctrines as renders the whole system completely inefficient to salvation. That man of sin. The same as the Hebrew expresses by ish aven and ish beliyaal; the perverse, obstinate, and iniquitous man. The son of perdition. "The son of destruction"; the same epithet that is given to Judas Iscariot, John xvii. 12.

The son of perdition and the man of sin or, as some excellent MSS. and versions, with several of the fathers, read, "the lawless man," must mean the same person or thing. It is also remarkable that the wicked Jews are styled by Isaiah, chap. i. 4, "children of perdition," persons who destroy themselves and destroy others.

4. Who opposeth and exalteth. He "stands against" and exalts himself above all divine authority and above every object of adoration and every institution relative to divine worship, himself being the source whence must originate all the doctrines of religion and all its rites and ceremonies; so that sitting in the temple of God—having the highest place and authority in the Christian Church, he acts as God—taking upon himself God's titles and attributes, and arrogating to himself the authority that belongs to the Most High. The words as God are wanting in many MSS. and the chief of the Greek fathers. There is indeed no evidence of their being authentic, and the text reads much better without them.

MATTHEW HENRY

His rise is mentioned, v. 6, 7. There was something that hindered, or let, until it was taken away.

ALBERT BARNES:

"That he might be revealed in his time." The man of sin. The meaning is, that there was then a restraint operating which would prevent the development of this antichristian power until the proper time; that is, till the state of the world should be such that in the divine arrangements it would be proper to permit it. It was not to be permitted until the gospel should be extensively preached, and had had an opportunity of showing its fair effects on the nations; until it had become so planted and established that even the rise of this antichristian power could not effectually uproot it. Had the "man of sin" been permitted to rise at once, the consequence might have been that the new religion would have been crushed, so that it could never have revived again. There was then a providential arrangement by which this growth of wickedness should be checked and restrained until the new religion should take deep root in the earth, and its perpetuity should be secured. Then the great trial was to be permitted under the "man of sin."—Popular Commentary

This mystery of iniquity was gradually to arrive at its height. The apostle calls it a mystery of iniquity. This mystery of iniquity did already work. While the apostles were yet living the enemy came and sowed tares.

The fall or ruin of the antichristian state is declared, v. 8. The head of this antichristian kingdom is called that wicked one. The revelation or discovery of this to the world would be the sure presage of his ruin. The apostle assures the Thessalonians that the Lord would destroy him. The power of antichrist in due time will be totally and finally destroyed, and this will be by the brightness of Christ's coming.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(Isa. 2:1-3; Ezek., chs. 40-44; Zech. 14:16-20; Mal. 3:1). 5. Remember . . .—confuting those who represent Paul as having labored under error as to Christ's immediate coming when writing his first Epistle, and as now correcting that error. I told you—more than once, lit., "I was telling," or "used to tell." 6. now ye know—by my having told you. The power must have been one "known" to the Thessalonians. what withholdeth—that which holds him back; "keeps him in check": the power that has restrained the man of sin from his full and final development, is the moral and conservative influence of political states [OLSHAUSEN]: the fabric of human polity as a coercive power; as "he who now letteth" refers to those who rule that polity by which the great upbursting of godlessness is kept down [ALFORD]. The "what withholdeth" refers to the general hindrance; "he who now letteth," to the person in whom that hindrance is summed up. that he might be—Greek, "in order that": ye know that which keeps him back, in God's purposes, from being sooner manifested, "in order that he may be revealed in his own time" (i.e., the time appointed by God to him as his proper time for being manifested), not sooner (cf. Dan. 11:35). The removal of the withholding power will be when the civil polity, derived from the Roman empire, which is to be, in its last form, divided into ten kingdoms (Rev. 17:3, 11-13), shall, with its leading representative head for the time being ("he who now letteth," Greek, "withholdeth," as in vs. 6), yield to the prevalent godless "lawlessness" with "the lawless one" as its embodiment. the mystery of iniquity—the counterwork to "the mystery of godliness" (I Tim. 3:16). Anti-Christianity latently working, as distinguished from its final open manifestation. "Mystery" in Scripture means, not what remains always a secret, but that which is for a while hidden, but in due time manifested (cf. Eph. 3:4, 5). "Iniquity," Greek, lawlessness; defiant rejection of God's law (cf. Note, Zech. 5:9, 10). "Wickedness" (translated by the LXX by the same Greek, meaning "lawlessness," which Paul employs here), embodied there as a woman, answers to "the mystery of iniquity," here embodied finally in "the man of sin" already—(II John 9:10; Col. 2:18-23; I Tim. 4:1)—cf. "even now already" (I John 2:18; 4:3) as distinguished from "in his own time" of being revealed hereafter. Antiquity, it appears from hence, is not a justification for unscriptural usages or dogmas, since these were "already," even in Paul's time, beginning to spring up: the written word is the only sure test. "Judaism infecting Christianity is the fuel; the mystery of iniquity is the spark." "It is one and the same impurity diffusing itself over many ages" [BENGEL]. only he who now letteth will let—The italicized words are not in the Greek. Therefore, translate rather, "only (i.e., the continuance of the MYSTERY of iniquity-working will be only) until he who now withholdeth (the same Greek as in vs. 6) be taken out of the way." "Only (waiting, Heb. 10:13) until he . . . ." Then it will work no longer in mystery, but in open manifestation. 8. Translate, "the lawless one"; the embodiment of all the godless "lawlessness" which has been working in "mystery" for ages (vs. 7): "the man of sin" (vs. 3). whom the Lord—Some of the oldest MSS. read, "the Lord Jesus." How awful that He whose very name means God-Saviour, should appear as the Destroyer; but the salvation of the Church requires the destruction of her foe. As the reign of Israel in Canaan was ushered in by judgments on the nations for apostasy (for the Canaanites were originally worshippers of the true God: thus Melchisedek, king of Salem, was the "priest of the most high God," Gen. 14:18: Ammon and Moab came from righteous Lot), so the Son of David's reign in Zion and over the whole earth, is to be ushered in by judgments on the apostate Christian world. consume . . . and . . . destroy—So Daniel 7:26, "consume and destroy"; Daniel 11:45. He shall "consume" him by His mere breath (Isa 11:4; 30:33): the sentence of judgment being the sharp sword that goeth out of His mouth (Rev. 19: 15, 21). Antichrist's manifestation and destruction are declared in the same breath; at his greatest height he is nearest his fall, like Herod his type (Isa. 1:24-27; Acts 12:20-23). with the brightness of his coming—Greek, "the manifestation (or appearance) of His presence": the first outburst of His advent—the first gleam of His presence—is enough to abolish utterly all traces of Antichrist, as darkness disappears before the dawning day. Next, his adherents are "slain with the sword out of His mouth" (Rev. 19:21).

ADAM CLARKE

5. I told you these things. In several parts of this description of the man of sin, the apostle alludes to a conversation which had taken place between him and the members of this church when he was at Thessalonica; and this one circumstance will account for much of the obscurity that is in these verses. Besides, the apostle appears to speak with great caution, and does not at all wish to publish what he had communicated to them; the hints which he drops were sufficient to call the whole to their remembrance.

6. And now ye know what withholdeth. I told you this among other things; I informed you what it was that prevented this man of sin, this son of perdition, from revealing himself fully.

7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work. There is a system of corrupt doctrine which will lead to the general apostasy, already in existence, but it is a mystery. It is as yet hidden; it dare not show itself, because of that which "hindereth" or "withholdeth."

But when that which now "restraineth" shall be taken out of the way, then shall that wicked one be revealed—it will then be manifest who he is and what he is.

8. Whom the Lord shall consume. He shall "blast" him so that he shall "wither" and "die away"; and this shall be done by the spirit of his mouth—the words of eternal life, the true doctrine of the gospel of Jesus; this shall be the instrument used to destroy this man of sin. Therefore it is evident his death will not be a sudden but a gradual one; because it is by the preaching of the truth that he is to be exposed, overthrown, and finally destroyed. The brightness of his coming. This may refer to that full manifestation of the truth which had been obscured and kept under by the exaltation of this man of sin.

MATTHEW HENRY

The apostle further describes the rule of this man of sin. A divine power is pretended for the support of this kingdom, but it is only after the working of Satan.

The apostle calls it all deceiveableness of unrighteousness, v. 10. Many are the subtle artifices the man of sin has used. His willing subjects, v. 10.

Had they loved the truth, they would have persevered in it, and been preserved by it; but no wonder if they easily parted with what they never had any love to.

The sin and ruin of the subjects of antichrist's kingdom declared, v. 11, 12. An erroneous mind and vicious life often go together and help forward one another. He will punish men for their unbelief, and for their dislike of the truth and love to sin and wickedness. He sometimes withdraws his grace from such sinners as are here mentioned; he gives them up to their own hearts' lusts, and leaves them to themselves, and then sin will follow of course.

I. The consolation the Thessalonians might take, v. 13, 14. The apostle reckoned himself bound in duty to be thankful to God on this account. And there was good reason, because they were beloved by the Lord.

1. The stability of the election of grace, v. 13. God had chosen them from the beginning. He had loved them with an everlasting love. (1) The eternal date of it—it is from the beginning. (2) The end to which they were chosen—salvation, complete and eternal salvation. (3) The means in order to obtaining this end—sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth. We are not elected of God because we were holy, but that we might be holy. Being chosen of God, we must not live as we list. Faith and holiness must be joined together, as well as holiness and happiness.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

9. whose coming—The same Greek as was used for the Lord's coming (vs. 8) or personal "presence." is—in its essential character. after—according to the working ("energy") of Satan, as opposed to the energy or working of the Holy Spirit in the Church (Note, Eph. 1:19). As Christ is related to God, so is Antichrist to Satan, his visible embodiment and manifestation: Satan works through him. Revelation 13:2, "The dragon gave him (the beast) his power . . . seat . . . great authority." lying wonders—lit., "wonders" or "prodigies of falsehood." His "power, signs, and wonders," all have falsehood for their base, essence, and aim (John 8:44), [ALFORD].

10. deceivableness—rather as Greek, "deceit of (to promote) unrighteousness" (vs. 12). in—The oldest MSS. and versions omit "in." Translate. "unto them that are perishing" (II Cor. 2:15, 16; 4:3): the victims of him whose very name describes his perishing nature, "the son of perdition"; in contrast to you whom (vs. 13) "God hath from the beginning chosen to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." because—lit., "in requital for"; in just retribution for their having no love for the truth which was within their reach (on account of its putting a check on their bad passions), and for their having "pleasure in unrighteousness" (vs. 12; Rom. 1:18); they are lost because they loved not, but rejected, the truth which would have saved them. received not—Greek, "welcomed not"; admitted it not cordially. love of the truth—not merely love of truth, but love of THE truth (and of Jesus who is the Truth, in opposition to Satan's "lie," vss. 9, 11; John 8:42-44), can save (Eph. 4:21). We are required not merely to assent to, but to love the truth (Ps. 119:97). The Jews rejected Him who came in His divine Father's name; they will receive Antichrist coming in his own name (John 5:43). Their pleasant sin shall prove their terrible scourge. 11. for this cause—because "they received not the love of the truth." The best safeguard against error is "the love of the truth." shall send—Greek, "sends," or "is sending"; the "delusion" is already beginning. God judicially sends hardness of heart on those who have rejected the truth, and gives them up in righteous judgment to Satan's delusions (Isa. 6:9, 10; Rom. 1:24-26, 28). They first cast off the love of the truth, then God gives them up to Satan's delusions, then they settle down into "believing the lie": an awful climax (I Kings 22:22, 23; Ezek. 14:9; Job 12:16; Matt. 24:5, 11; I Tim. 4:1). strong delusion—Greek, "the powerful working of error," answering to the energizing "working of Satan" (vs. 9); the same expression as is applied to the Holy Ghost's operation in believers: "powerful" or "effectual (energizing) working" (Eph. 1:19). believe a lie—rather, "the lie" which Antichrist tells them, appealing to his miracles as proofs of it . . . . (vs. 9). 12. they all . . . damned—rather as Greek, "that all . . . ." He here states the general proposition which applies specially to Antichrist's adherents. Not all in the Church of Rome, or other anti-Christian systems, shall be damned, but only "all who believed not the truth" when offered to them, "but had pleasure in unrighteousness" (Rom. 1:32; 2:8). Love of unrighteousness being the great obstacle to believing the truth. 13. But—In delightful contrast to the damnation of the lost (vs. 12) stands the "salvation" of Paul's converts. are bound—in duty (ch. 1:3). thanks . . . to God—not to ourselves, your ministers, nor to you, our converts. beloved of the Lord—Jesus (Rom. 8:37; Gal. 2:20; Eph. 5:2, 25). Elsewhere God the Father is said to love us (vs. 16; John 3:16; Eph. 2:4; Col. 3:12). Therefore Jesus and the Father are one. from the beginning—"before the foundation of the world" (Eph. 1:4; cf. I Cor. 2:7; II Tim. 1:9); in contrast to those that shall "worship the beast, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8). Some of the oldest MSS. read as English Version, but other oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "as first fruits." The Thessalonians were among the first converts in Europe (cf. Rom. 16:5; I Cor. 16:15). In a more general sense, it occurs in James 1:18; Revelation 14:4; so I understand it here including the more restricted sense. chosen you—The Greek, is not the ordinary word for "elected," implying His eternal selection; but taken for Himself, implying His having adopted them in His eternal purpose. It is found in the LXX (Deut. 7:7; 10:15). through—rather as Greek, "in sanctification" as the element in which the choice to salvation had place (cf. I Pet. 1. 2), standing in contrast to the "unrighteousness," the element in which Antichrist's followers are given over by God to damnation (vs. 12). of the Spirit—wrought by the Spirit who sanctifies all the elect

9. Whose coming is after the working of Satan. The operation of God's Spirit sends His messengers; the operation of Satan's spirit sends his emissaries. The one comes after or "according to the energy" or inward powerful working of God; the other comes according to the energy or inward working of Satan. With all power. All kinds of miracles, like the Egyptian magicians. And signs and lying wonders. The word lying may be applied to the whole of these; they were lying miracles, lying signs, and lying wonders; only appearances of what was real, and done to give credit to his presumption and imposture. Whereas God sent His messengers with real miracles, real signs, and real wonders; such Satan cannot produce.

10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness. With every art that cunning can invent and unrighteousness suggest, in order to delude and deceive. In them that perish. "Among them that are destroyed"; and they are destroyed and perish because they would not receive the love of the truth, that they might be saved. So they perish because they obstinately refuse to be saved, and receive a lie in preference to the truth.

11. God shall send them strong delusion. For this very cause, that they would not receive the love of the truth, "but had pleasure in unrighteousness," therefore God permits strong delusion to occupy their minds; so that they believe a lie rather than the truth, prefer false apostles and their erroneous doctrines to the pure truths of the gospel, brought to them by the well-accredited messengers of God; being ever ready to receive any false Messiah, while they systematically and virulently reject the true One.

12. That they all might be damned. "So that they may all be condemned who believed not the truth" when it was proclaimed to them; but took pleasure in unrighteousness, preferring that to the way of holiness. Their condemnation was the effect of their refusal to believe the truth, and they refused to believe it because they loved their sins.

13-14. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation. In your calling God has shown the purpose that He had formed from the beginning, to call the Gentiles to the same privileges with the Jews, not through circumcision and the observance of the Mosaic law, but by faith in Christ Jesus; but this simple way of salvation referred to the same end—holiness, without which no man, whether Jew or Gentile, can see the Lord.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. The efficacy of the gospel call, v. 14. They were called thereunto by the gospel. It is a call to honour and happiness, even the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. Such shall be with Christ, to behold his glory, and they shall be glorified with Christ and partake of his glory.

II. He does not say, "You are chosen to salvation, and therefore you may be careless and secure"; but therefore stand fast. The Thessalonians are exhorted to steadfastness in their Christian profession.

Verses 16, 17

The apostle's earnest prayer for them.

I. To whom he prays: Our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father. We may and should direct our prayers, not only to God the Father, but also to our Lord Jesus Christ himself.

II. From what he takes encouragement—from the consideration of what God had already done for him and them (v. 16). The love of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for. From this fountain all our consolation flows. And the consolation of the saints is an everlasting consolation. The comforts of the saints are not dying things. Their consolation is founded on the hope of eternal life. The free grace and mercy of God are what they hope for, and what their hopes are founded on.

III. What it is that he asks of God for them, v. 17. He prayed that they might have more abundant consolation, and he prayed that they might be established. Comfort is a means of establishment; for the more pleasure we take in the ways of God, the more likely we shall be to persevere therein. Our establishment in the ways of God is a likely means in order to comfort. If we are halting and faltering in our duty, no wonder if we are strangers to the pleasures and joys of religion. We must be established in every good word and work. Christ must be honoured by our good works and good words.

people of God, first by eternally consecrating them to perfect holiness in Christ, once for all, next by progressively imparting it. belief of the truth—contrasted with "believed not the truth" (vs. 12). 14. you—The oldest MSS. read, "us." by our gospel—"through" the Gospel which we preach. to . . . glory—In vs. 13 it was "salvation," i.e., deliverance from all evil, of body and soul (I Thess. 5:9); here it is positive good, even "glory," and that "the glory of our Lord Jesus" Himself, which believers are privileged to share with Him (John 17:22, 24; Rom. 8:17, 29; II Tim. 2:10). 15. Therefore—God's sovereign choice of believers, so far from being a ground for inaction on their part, is the strongest incentive to action and perseverance in it. Cf. the argument, Philippians 2:12, 13, "Work out your own salvation, FOR it is God which worketh in you . . . ." We cannot fully explain this in theory; but to the sincere and humble, the practical acting on the principle is plain. "Privilege first, duty afterwards" [EDMUNDS]. stand fast—so as not to be "shaken or troubled" (vs. 2). hold—so as not to let go. Adding nothing, subtracting nothing [BENGEL]. The Thessalonians had not held fast his oral instructions but had suffered themselves to be imposed upon by pretended spirit-revelations, and words and letters pretending to be from Paul (vs. 2), to the effect that "the day of the Lord was instantly imminent." traditions—truths delivered and transmitted orally, or in writing (ch. 3:6; I Cor. 11:2; Greek, "traditions"). The Greek verb from which the noun comes, is used by Paul in I Corinthians 11:23; 15:3.

Oral inspiration was necessary in their case, until the canon of the written Word should be complete; they proved their possession of inspiration by miracles wrought in support of the new revelation, which revelation, moreover, accorded with the existing Old Testament revelation; an additional test needed besides miracles (cf. Deut. 13: 1-6; Acts 17:11). When the canon was complete, the infallibility of the living men was transferred to the written Word, now the sole unerring guide, interpreted by the Holy Spirit. Little else has come down to us by the most ancient and universal tradition save this, the all-sufficiency of Scripture for salvation. Therefore, by tradition, we are constrained to cast off all tradition not contained in, or not provable by, Scripture.

our epistle—as distinguished from a "letter AS from us," vs. 2, viz., that purports to be from us, but is not. He refers to his first Epistle to the Thessalonians. 16, 17. himself—by His own might, as contrasted with our feebleness; ensuring the efficacy of our prayer. Here our Lord Jesus stands first; in I Thessalonians 3:11. "God our Father." which . . . loved us—in the work of our redemption. Referring both to our Lord Jesus (Rom. 8:37; Gal. 2: 20) and God our Father (John 3:16). everlasting consolation—not transitory, as worldly consolations in trials (Rom. 8:38, 39). This for all time present, and then "good hope" for the future [ALFORD]. through grace—rather as Greek "IN grace"; to be joined to "hath given." Grace is the element in which the gift was made. Comfort your hearts—unsettled as you have been through those who announced the immediate coming of the Lord. good word and work—The oldest MSS. invert the order, "work and word." Establishment in these were what the young converts at Thessalonica needed, not fanatical teaching (cf. I Cor. 15:58).

15. Therefore, brethren, stand fast. Their obtaining eternal glory depended on their faithfulness to the grace of God; for this calling did not necessarily and irresistibly lead to faith; nor their faith to the sanctification of the spirit; nor their sanctification of the spirit to the glory of our Lord Jesus. Had they not attended to the calling, they could not have believed; had they not believed, they could not have been sanctified; had they not been sanctified they could not have been glorified. All these things depended on each other; they were stages of the great journey; and at any of these stages they might have halted, and never finished their Christian race.

Hold the traditions which ye have been taught. The word which we render "tradition" signifies anything "delivered" in the way of teaching; and here most obviously means the doctrines delivered by the apostle to the Thessalonians, whether in his preaching, private conversation, or by these Epistles; and particularly the First Epistle, as the apostle here states.

16. Now our Lord Jesus. As all your grace came from God through Christ, so the power that is necessary to strengthen and confirm you unto the end must come in the same way. Everlasting consolation. The glad tidings of the gospel and the comfort which you have received through believing, a gift which God had in His original purpose in reference to the Gentiles, a purpose which has respected all times and places and which shall continue to the conclusion of time; for the gospel is everlasting, and shall not be superseded by any other dispensation. And good hope through grace. The hope of the gospel was the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of it and the soul throughout eternity. This was the good hope which the Thessalonians had, not a hope that they should be pardoned or sanctified. Pardon and holiness they enjoyed; therefore they were no objects of hope. But the resurrection of the body and eternal glory were necessarily future; these they had in expectation; these they hoped for; and through the grace which they had already received they had a good hope, a well-grounded expectation, of the glorious state.

17. Comfort your hearts. Keep your souls ever under the influence of His Holy Spirit; and stablish you—confirm and strengthen you in your belief in every good word or doctrine which we have delivered unto you, and in the practice of every good work recommended and enjoined by the doctrines of the gospel.

Verses 1–5

I. The apostle desires the prayers of his friends, v. 1. He always remembered them in his prayers, and would not have them forget him and his fellow-labourers. This is one way by which the communion of saints is kept up, not only by their praying together but by their praying for one another when they are absent one from another. What they are desired to pray for: 1. For the success of the gospel ministry, v. 1. He desired that the word of the Lord might run (so it is in the original), that it might get ground, and not only go forward, but go apace. We should pray that the gospel may have free course to the hearts and the consciences of men, that it may be glorified in the conversion of sinners. God will glorify the gospel, and so will glorify his own name. 2. For the safety of gospel ministers. He asks their prayers, not for preferment, but for preservation, v. 2. Those who are enemies to the preaching of the gospel are unreasonable and wicked men. There is the greatest absurdity in the world, as well as impiety. Godly and faithful ministers are as the standard-bearers,

CHAPTER 3

Vss. 1-18. HE ASKS THEIR PRAYERS: HIS CONFIDENCE IN THEM: PRAYER FOR THEM: CHARGES AGAINST DISORDERLY IDLE CONDUCT; HIS OWN EXAMPLE: CONCLUDING PRAYER AND SALUTATION. 1. Finally—lit., "As to what remains." may have free course—lit., "may run"; spread rapidly without a drag on the wheels of its course. That the new-creating word may "run" as "swiftly" as the creative word at the first (Ps. 147:15). The opposite is the word of God being "bound" (II Tim. 2:9). glorified—by sinners accepting it (Acts 13:48; Gal. 1:23, 24). Contrast "evil spoken of" (I Pet. 4:14). as it is with you—(I Thess. 1:6; 4:10; 5:11). 2. that we . . . be delivered from unreasonable . . . men—lit., men out of place, inept, unseemly: out of the way bad: more than ordinarily bad. An undesigned coincidence with Acts 18:5-9. Paul was now at Corinth, where the JEWS "opposed themselves" to his preaching: in answer to his prayers and those of his converts at Thessalonica and elsewhere, "the Lord, in vision," assured him of exemption from "the hurt," and of success in bringing in "much

1. Finally, brethren. The words do not mean finally, but "furthermore," "to come to a conclusion," "what remains is this," "I shall only add"—any of these phrases expresses the sense of the original. Pray for us. God, in the order of His grace and providence, has made even the success of His gospel dependent in a certain measure on the prayers of His followers. Why He should do so we cannot tell, but that He has done so we know; and they are not a little criminal who neglect to make fervent supplications for the prosperity of the cause of God. May have free course. They were to pray that "the doctrine of the Lord" "might run," an allusion to the races in the Olympic games; that, as it had already got into the stadium or race-course, and had started fairly, so it might "run on," get to the goal, and be glorified; i.e., gain the crown appointed for him that should get first to the end of the course.

2. Unreasonable and wicked men. The word who are most struck at. Many do not believe the gospel; no wonder if such are restless in their endeavours to oppose the gospel, and disgrace the ministers of the word; and too many have not common faith or honesty; there is no confidence that we can safely put in them, and we should pray to be delivered from those who have no conscience nor honour.

II. He encourages them to trust in God.

1. What the good is which we may expect from the grace of God—establishment, and preservation from evil. We stand no longer than God holds us up. We have as much need of the grace of God for our perseverance to the end as for the beginning of the good work.

2. What encouragement we have to depend upon the grace of God. He is faithful to his promises. When once the promise is made, performance is sure and certain. He is a faithful God and a faithful friend. Let it be our care to be true and faithful in our promises, and to the relations we stand in to this faithful God.

3. A further ground of hope that God would do this for them, v. 4. The apostle had this confidence in them, and this was founded upon his confidence in God; for there is otherwise no confidence in man.

III. He makes a short prayer for them, v. 5, that their hearts may be brought into the love of God. This is not only most reasonable in order to our happiness, but is our happiness itself. We can never attain to this unless God by his grace direct our hearts aright, for our love is apt to go astray after other things. We must wait for Christ, which supposes our faith in him, that we believe he came once in flesh and will come again in glory. We have need of patience, patience for Christ's sake and after Christ's example.

Commands and directions to some who were faulty, correcting some things that were amiss among them. The best society of Christians may have some faulty persons among them. Perfection is not to be found on this side heaven: but evil manners beget good laws.

I. That which was amiss among the Thessalonians.

1. There were some who walked disorderly, not after the tradition they received from the apostle, v. 6.

II. The good laws which were occasioned by these evil manners.

1. Whose laws they are: they are commands of the apostles of our Lord, that is, the commands of our Lord himself, v. 6, 12. The authority of Christ should awe our minds to obedience, and his grace and goodness should allure us.

2. What the good laws and rules are.

(1) His commands and directions to the whole church. [1] Their behaviour towards the disorderly persons (v. 6). Note that man is charged with not obeying the word of God. We must have sufficient proof of his fault before we proceed further. Admonish him in a friendly manner; we must put him in mind of his sin, and of his duty. If he will not hear do not keep company with him, that ye may not learn his evil ways; for he who follows vain persons is in danger of becoming like them. Another reason is for the shaming, and so the reforming, of those that offend. Love therefore to the persons of our offending brethren should be the motive of our withdrawing from them; and even those who are under the censures of the church must not be accounted as enemies (v. 15). [2] Their general conduct ought to be according to the good example the apostle had given them, v. 7. The particular good example the apostle mentions was their diligence: "We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you (v. 7), we did not spend our time idly." They took pains in their ministry and in getting their own living, v. 8. Those who preach the gospel may of right expect to live by the gospel. This is a just debt that people owe to their ministers, and the apostle had power or authority to have demanded this (v. 9); but he waived his right from affection to them, and that he might be an example for them to follow (v. 9).

people." On the unreasonable, out-of-the-way perversity of the Jews, as known to the Thessalonians, see I Thessalonians 2:15, 16. have not faith—or as Greek, "the faith" of the Christian: the only antidote to what is "unreasonable and wicked." The Thessalonians, from their ready acceptance of the Gospel (I Thess. 1:5, 6), might think "all" would similarly receive it; but the Jews were far from having such a readiness to believe the truth. 3. faithful—alluding to "faith" (vs. 2): though many will not believe, the Lord (other very old MSS. read "God") is still to be believed in as faithful to His promises (I Thess. 5:24; II Tim. 2:13). Faith on the part of man answers to faithfulness on the part of God. stablish you—as he had prayed (ch. 2:17). Though it was on himself that wicked men were making their onset, he turns away from asking the Thessalonians' prayers for HIS deliverance (vs. 2: so unselfish was he, even in religion), to express his assurance of THEIR establishment in the faith, and preservation from evil.

4. we have confidence in the Lord—as "faithful" (vs. 3). Have confidence in no man when left to himself [BENGEL]. that ye both do—Some of the oldest MSS. insert a clause, "that ye both have done" before, "and are doing, and will do." He means the majority by "ye," not all of them (cf. vs. 11; ch. 1:3; I Thess. 3:6). 5. If "the Lord" be here the Holy Ghost (II Cor. 3:17), the three Persons of the Trinity will occur in this verse. love of God—love to God. patient waiting for Christ—rather as Greek, "the patience (endurance) of Christ," viz., which Christ showed [ALFORD] (ch. 2:4; I Thess. 1:3). ESTIUS, however, supports English Version (cf. Rev. 1:9; 3:10). At all events, this grace, "patience," or persevering endurance, is connected with the "hope" (I Thess. 1:3, 10) of Christ's coming. In ALFORD'S translation we may compare Hebrews 12: 1, 2, "Run with patience (endurance) . . . looking to JESUS . . . who, for the joy that was before Him, endured the cross"; so WE are to endure, as looking for the hope to be realized at His coming (Heb. 10: 36, 37). 6. we command you—Hereby he puts to a particular test their obedience in general to his commands, which obedience he had recognized in vs. 4. withdraw—lit., "to furl the sails"; as we say, to steer clear of (cf. vs. 14). Some had given up labor as though the Lord's day was immediately coming. He had enjoined mild censure of such in I Thessalonians 5:14, "Warn . . . the unruly"; but now that the mischief had become more confirmed, he enjoins stricter discipline, viz., withdrawal from their company (cf. I Cor.. 5:11; II John 10:11): not a formal sentence of excommunication, such as was subsequently passed on more heinous offenders (as in I Cor. 5:5; I Tim. 1:20). He says "brother," i.e., professing Christian; for in the case of unprofessing heathen, believers needed not be so strict (I Cor. 5: 10-13). the tradition—the oral instruction which he had given to them when present (vs. 10), and subsequently committed to writing (I Thess. 4:11, 12). which he received of us—Some oldest MSS. read, "ye received"; others, "they received." The English Version reading has no very old authority. 7. how ye ought to follow us—how ye ought to live so as to "imitate (so the Greek for 'follow') us" (cf. Note, I Cor. 11:1; I Thess. 1:6). 8. eat any man's bread—Greek, "eat bread from any man," i.e., live at anyone's expense. Contrast vs. 12, "eat THEIR OWN bread." wrought—(Acts 20: 34). In both Epistles they state they maintained themselves by labor; but in this second Epistle they do so in order to offer themselves herein as an example to the idle; whereas, in the first, their object in doing so is to vindicate themselves from all imputation of mercenary motives in preaching the Gospel (I Thess. 2:5, 9) [EDMUNDS]. They preached gratuitously though they might have claimed maintenance from their converts. labour and travail—"toil and hardship" (Note, I Thess. 2:9). night and day—scarcely allowing time for repose. chargeable—Greek, "a burden," or "burdensome." The Philippians did not regard it as a burden to contribute to his support (Phil. 4:15, 16), sending to him while he was in this very Thessalonica (Acts 16:15, 34, 40). Many Thessalonians, doubtless, would have felt it a privilege to contribute, but as he saw some idlers among them who would have made a pretext of his example to justify themselves, he waived his right. His reason for the same course at Corinth was to mark how different were his aims from those of the false teachers who sought their own lucre (II Cor. 11:9, 12, 13). It is at the very time and place of writing these Epistles that Paul is expressly said to have wrought at tent-making with Aquila (Acts 18: 3); an undesigned coincidence. 9. (I Cor. 9:4-6, etc.; Gal. 6:6.) 10. For even—Translate, "For also."

which we translate unreasonable signifies rather "disorderly, unmanageable"; persons "out of their place"—under no discipline, regardless of law and restraint, and ever acting agreeably to the disorderly and unreasonable impulse of their own minds. For all men have not faith. The word is, without doubt, to be taken here for "fidelity" or "trustworthiness," and not for faith; and this is agreeable to the meaning given to it in the very next verse: "But the Lord is faithful."

3. From evil. May be translated, "from the evil one." They had disorderly men, wicked men, and the evil one or the devil to contend with; God alone could support and give them the victory. He had promised to do it, and He might ever be confided in as being invariably faithful.

4. And we have confidence. We have no doubt of God's kindness towards you; He loves you, and will support you; and we can confide in you that you are now acting as we have desired you, and will continue so to do.

5. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God. "Give a proper direction" to all its passions, and keep them in order, regularity, and purity. The patience of Christ. Such patience, under all your sufferings and persecutions, as Christ manifested under His. He bore meekly the contradiction of sinners against himself; and when He was reviled, He reviled not again.

6. That ye withdraw yourselves. Have no fellowship with those who will not submit to proper discipline; who do not keep their place; such as are "out of their rank," and act according to their own wills and caprices; and particularly such as are idle and busybodies. These he had ordered, 1 Thess. iv. 11-12, that they should study to be quiet, mind their own business, and work with their hands; but it appears that they had paid no attention to this order, and now he desires the church to exclude such from their communion. And not after the tradition. This evidently refers to the orders contained in the First Epistle; and that First Epistle was the tradition which they had received from him.

7. We behaved not ourselves disorderly. "We did not go out of our rank"—we kept our place, and discharged all its duties.

8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought. We paid for what we bought, and worked with our hands that we might have money to buy what was necessary.

Labour and travail night and day. We were incessantly employed, either in preaching the gospel, visiting from house to house, or working at our calling. As it is very evident that the church at Thessalonica was very pious, and most affectionately attached to the apostle, they must have been very poor, seeing he was obliged to work hard to gain himself the necessaries of life.

9. Not because we have not power. We have the power, the "right," to be maintained by those in whose behalf we labor. "The labourer is worthy of his hire" is a maxim universally acknowledged and respected; and "they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." The apostle did not claim his privilege, but labored for his own support, that he might be an example to those whom he found otherwise disposed, and that he might spare the poor.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) He commands those that lived idle lives to reform, v. 10. The labourer is worthy of his meat; but what is the loiterer worthy of? None should live like useless drones in the world.

There were among them some idle persons and busy-bodies, v. 11. It does not appear that they were gluttons or drunkards, but idle, and therefore disorderly people. It is not enough for any to say they do no hurt; for it is required of all persons that they do good. It is probable that these persons had a notion concerning the near approach of the coming of Christ, which served them for a pretence to leave off the work of their calling, and live in idleness. Industry in our particular callings as men is a duty required of us by our general calling as Christians. There were busy-bodies among them. The same persons who were idle were busy-bodies also. Most commonly those persons who have no business of their own to do, or who neglect it, busy themselves in other men's matters. If we are idle, the devil will soon find us something to do. The mind of man is a busy thing; if it be not employed in doing good, it will be doing evil.

It was not the mere humour of the apostle, it was the command of our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness we work, and eat our own bread, v. 12. Men ought some way or other to earn their own living, otherwise they do not eat their own bread. We must study to be quiet, and do our own business. This is an excellent but rare composition, to be of an active yet quiet spirit, active in our own business and yet quiet as to other people's.

(3) He exhorts those that did well, not to be weary in well-doing (v. 13). You must never give over, nor tire in your work. It will be time enough to rest when you come to heaven.

Verses 16-18

The apostle's benediction and prayers for these Thessalonians.

I. That God would give them peace. Peace is the blessing pronounced or desired. This peace is desired for them always. Peace by all means: for peace is often difficult, as it is always desirable. If we have any peace that is desirable, God must give it.

II. That the presence of God might be with them. We need nothing more to make us safe and happy, nor can we desire anything better for ourselves and our friends. It is the presence of God that makes heaven to be heaven, and this will make this earth to be like heaven.

III. That the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ might be with them. It is through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that we may comfortably hope to have peace with God and enjoy the presence of God. It is this grace that is all in all to make us happy.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

We not only set you the example, but gave a positive "command." commanded—Greek imperfect, "We were commanding"; we kept charge of you. would not work—Greek, "is unwilling to work." BENGEL makes this to be the argument: not that such a one is to have his food withdrawn from him by others; but he proves from the necessity of eating the necessity of working; using this pleasantry, Let him who will not work show himself an angel, i.e., do without food as the angels do (but since he cannot do without food, then he ought to be not unwilling to work). It seems to me simpler to take it as a punishment of the idle. Paul often quotes good adages current among the people, stamping them with inspired approval. In the Hebrew, Bereshith Rabba, the same saying is found; and in the book Zeror, "He who will not work before the sabbath, must not eat on the sabbath." 11. busy bodies—In the Greek the similarity of sound marks the antithesis, "Doing none of their own business, yet overdoing in the business of others." Busy about everyone's business but their own. "Nature abhors a vacuum"; so if not doing one's own business, one is apt to meddle with his neighbor's business. Idleness is the parent of busybodies (I Tim. 5:13). Contrast I Thessalonians 4:11. 12. by—The oldest MSS. read, "IN the Lord Jesus." So the Greek, I Thessalonians 4:1, implying the sphere wherein such conduct is appropriate and consistent. "We exhort you thus, as ministers IN Christ, exhorting our people IN Christ." with quietness—quiet industry; laying aside restless, bustling, intermeddling officiousness (vs. 11). their own—bread earned by themselves, not another's bread (vs. 8). 13. be not weary—The oldest MSS. read, "Be not cowardly in"; do not be wanting in strenuousness in doing well. EDMUNDS explains it: Do not culpably neglect to do well, viz., with patient industry do your duty in your several callings. In contrast to the "disorderly, not-working busybodies" (vs. 11; cf. Gal. 6:9). 14. note that man—mark him in your own mind as one to be avoided (vs. 6). that he may be ashamed—Greek, "made to turn and look into himself, and so be put to shame." Feeling himself shunned by godly brethren, he may become ashamed of his course. 15. admonish him as a brother—not yet excommunicated (cf. Lev. 19:17). Do not shun him in contemptuous silence, but tell him why he is so avoided (Matt. 18: 15; I Thess. 5:14). 16. Lord of peace—Jesus Christ. The same title is given to Him as to the Father, "the GOD of peace" (Rom. 15:33; 16:20; II Cor. 13:11). An appropriate title in the prayer here, where the harmony of the Christian community was liable to interruption from the "disorderly." The Greek article requires the translation, "Give you the peace" which it is "His to give." "Peace" outward and inward, here and hereafter (Rom. 14:17). always—unbroken, not changing with outward circumstances. by all means—Greek, "in every way." Most of the oldest MSS. read, "in every place"; thus he prays for their peace in all times ("always") and places. Lord be with you all—May He bless you not only with peace, but also with His presence (Matt. 28:20). Even the disorderly brethren (cf. vs. 15, "a brother") are included in this prayer. 17. The Epistle was written by an amanuensis (perhaps Silas or Timothy), and only the closing salutation written by Paul's "own hand" (cf. Rom. 16:22; I Cor. 16:21; Col. 4:18). Wherever Paul does not subjoin this autograph salutation, we may presume he wrote the whole Epistle himself (Gal. 6:11). which—which autograph salutation. the token—to distinguish genuine Epistles from spurious ones put forth in my name (ch. 2:2). in every epistle—Some think he signed his name to every Epistle with his own hand; but as there is no trace of this in any MSS. of all the Epistles, it is more likely that he alludes to his writing with his own hand in closing every Epistle, even in those Epistles (Romans, II Corinthians, Ephesians, Philippians, I Thessalonians) wherein he does not specify his having done so. so I write—so I sign my name: this is a specimen of my handwriting, by which to distinguish my geniune letters from forgeries. 18. He closes every Epistle by praying for GRACE to those whom he addresses. Amen—omitted in the oldest MSS. It was doubtless the response of the congregation after hearing the Epistle read publicly; hence it crept into copies.

The Subscription is spurious, as the Epistle was written not "from Athens," but from Corinth.

10. If any would not work, neither should he eat. This is a just maxim, and universal nature inculcates it to man. If man will work, he may eat; if he do not work, he neither can eat nor should he eat. The maxim is founded on these words of the Lord: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Industry is crowned with God's blessing; idleness is loaded with His curse.

11. For we hear that there are some. It is very likely that Paul kept up some sort of correspondence with the Thessalonian church; for he had heard everything that concerned their state, and it was from this information that he wrote his Second Epistle. Disorderly. "Out of their rank"—not keeping their own place. Working not at all. Either lounging at home or becoming religious gossips; "doing nothing." Busybodies. Doing everything they should not do—impertinent meddlers with other people's business; prying into other people's circumstances and domestic affairs; magnifying or minifying, mistaking or underrating everything; newsmongers and telltales; an abominable race, the curse of every neighborhood where they live, and a pest to religious society.

12. With quietness they work. "With silence"; leaving their talebearing and officious intermeddling. Less noise and more work! Eat their own bread. Their own bread because earned by their own honest industry. What a degrading thing to live on the bounty or mercy of another while a man is able to acquire his own livelihood!

13. Be not weary in well doing. While you stretch out no hand of relief to the indolent and lazy, do not forget the real poor—the genuine representatives of an impoverished Christ; and rather relieve a hundred undeserving objects than pass by one who is a real object of charity.

14. If any man obey not. They had disobeyed his word in the First Epistle, and the church still continued to bear with them; now he tells the church, if they still continue to disregard what is said to them, and particularly his word by this Second Epistle, they are to mark them as being totally incorrigible and have no fellowship with them. Some construe the words, "Give me information of that man by a letter"—let me hear of his continued obstinacy, and send me his name. The words of the original will bear either construction, that in the text or that given above.

15. Count him not as an enemy. Consider him still more an enemy to himself than to you; and admonish him as a brother, though you have ceased to hold religious communion with him. His soul is still of infinite value; labor to get it saved.

16. The Lord of peace. Jesus Christ, who is called "our peace," Eph. ii. 14; and "The Prince of Peace," Isa. ix. 6. May He give you peace, for He is the Fountain and Dispenser of it. The Lord be with you all. This is agreeable to the promise of our Lord: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," Matt. xxviii. 20. May the Lord, who has promised to be always with His true disciples, be with you!

17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand. It is very likely that Paul employed an amanuensis generally, either to write what he dictated or to make a fair copy of what he wrote. In either case the apostle always subscribed it, and wrote the salutation and benediction with his own hand; and this was what authenticated all his Epistles. A measure of this kind would be very necessary is forged epistles were carried about in those times.

18. The grace. The favor, blessing, and influence of our Lord Jesus Christ. Be with you all—be your constant companion. May you ever feel His presence, and enjoy His benediction!

Hitherto Paul's epistles were directed to churches; now follow some to particular persons: two to Timothy, one to Titus, and another to Philemon. Timothy and Titus were evangelists. Their commission and work was much the same with that of the apostles, and accordingly they were itinerants, as we find Timothy was. Timothy was first converted by Paul, and therefore he calls him his "own son in the faith."

The scope of these two epistles is to direct Timothy how to discharge his duty as an evangelist at Ephesus, where he now was.

CHAPTER 1

I. The inscription of the epistle. His credentials were unquestionable. He had a commandment, not only from God our Saviour, but from Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is a Christian's hope: all our hope of eternal life is built upon him. He calls Timothy his own son, because he had been an instrument of his conversion, and because he had been a son that served him. Timothy had not been wanting in the duty of a son to Paul, and Paul was not wanting in the care and tenderness of a father to him.

II. The benediction. In all the epistles to the churches the apostolical benediction is grace and peace; in these two epistles to Timothy and that to Titus it is grace, mercy, and peace. Ministers need more mercy than others. If Timothy needed the increase and continuance of it, how much more do we ministers.

III. Paul tells Timothy what was the end of his appointing him to this office. His business was to take care to fix both the ministers and the people of that church, that they do not add to the Christian doctrine, that they do not alter it, but cleave to it as it was delivered to them.

Vss. 1-20. ADDRESS: PAUL'S DESIGN IN HAVING LEFT TIMOTHY AT EPHESUS, VIZ., TO CHECK FALSE TEACHERS; TRUE USE OF THE LAW; HARMONIZING WITH THE GOSPEL; GOD'S GRACE IN CALLING PAUL, ONCE A BLASPHEMER, TO EXPERIENCE AND TO PREACH IT; CHARGES TO TIMOTHY. 1. by the commandment of God—the authoritative injunction, as well as the commission, of God. In the earlier Epistles the phrase is, "by the will of God." Here it is expressed in a manner implying that a necessity was laid on him to act as an apostle, not that it was merely at his option. The same expression occurs in the doxology, probably written long after the Epistle itself [ALFORD] (Rom. 16:26). God our Saviour—The Father (ch. 2:3; 4:10; Luke 1:47; II Tim. 1:9; Titus 1:3; 2:10; 3:4; Jude 25). It was a Jewish expression in devotion, drawn from the Old Testament (cf. Ps. 106:21). our hope—(Col. 1:27; Titus 1:2; 2:13). 2. my own son—lit., "a genuine son" (cf. Acts 16:1; I Cor. 4:14-17). See Introduction. mercy—added here, in addressing Timothy, to the ordinary salutation, "Grace unto you (Rom. 1:7; I Cor. 1:3,etc.), and peace." In Galatians 6: 16, "peace and mercy" occur. "Mercy" is grace of a more tender kind, exercised towards the miserable, the experience of which in one's own case especially fits for the Gospel MINISTRY. Cf. as to Paul himself (vss. 14, 16; I Cor. 7:25; II Cor. 4:1; Heb. 2:17) [BENGEL]. He did not use "mercy" as to the churches, because "mercy" in all its fulness already existed towards them; but in the case of an individual minister, fresh measures of it were continually needed. "Grace" has reference to the sins of men; "mercy" to their misery. God extends His grace to men as they are guilty; His mercy to them as they are miserable [TRENCH]. Jesus Christ—The oldest MSS. read the order, "Christ Jesus." In the Pastoral Epistles "Christ" is often put before "Jesus," to give prominence to the fact that the Messianic promises of the Old Testament, well known to Timothy (II Tim. 3: 15), were fulfilled in Jesus. I besought thee to remain—He meant to have added, "so I still beseech thee," but does not complete the sentence until he does so virtually, not formally, at vs. 18. at Ephesus—Paul, in Acts 20:25, declared to the Ephesian elders, "I know that ye all shall see my face no more." If, then, as the balance of arguments seems to favor, this Epistle was written

1. Paul an apostle . . . by the commandment of God. We have already seen that the term apostle literally signifies a person sent from one to another, without implying any particular dignity in the person or importance in the message. But it is differently used in the New Testament, being applied to those who were sent expressly from God Almighty with the message of salvation to mankind. It is therefore the highest character any human being can have; and the message is the most important which even God himself can send to His intelligent creatures. It was by the express command of God that Paul went to the Gentiles preaching the doctrine of salvation by faith in Christ Jesus. Jesus Christ . . . our hope. Without Jesus, the world was hopeless; the expectation of being saved can come to mankind only by His gospel. He is called our hope, as He is called our Life, our Peace, our Righteousness, because from Him hope, life, peace, righteousness, and all other blessings proceed.

2. My own son in the faith. Brought to salvation through Christ by my ministry alone. Probably the apostle speaks here according to this Jewish maxim: "He who teaches the law to his nighbor's son is considered by the Scripture as if he had begotten him." In the faith. The word faith is taken here for the whole of the Christian religion, faith in Christ being its essential characteristic. Grace, mercy, and peace. Grace, the favor and approbation of God. Mercy, springing from that grace, pardoning, purifying, and supporting. Peace, the consequence of this manifested mercy, peace of conscience, and peace with God; producing internal happiness, quietness, and assurance.

3. I besought thee. The apostle had seen that a bad seed had been sown in the church; and, as he was obliged to go then into Macedonia, he wished Timothy, on whose prudence, piety, and soundness in the faith he could depend, to stay behind and prevent the spreading of a doctrine that would have been pernicious to the people's souls. I have already supposed that this Epistle was written after Paul had been delivered from his first im-

MATTHEW HENRY

In the times of the apostles there were attempts made to corrupt Christianity, otherwise this charge to Timothy might have been spared. He must not only see to it that he did not preach any other doctrine, but he must charge others that they preach it pure and uncorrupt.

F. B. MEYER:

A charge against vain talking. The relation of Paul to Timothy is an example of one of those beautiful friendships between an older and a younger man, in which each is the complement of the other (1 Cor. 4:17; Phil. 2:22). Timothy was a lad of fifteen when converted at Lystra, and was probably about thirty-five years of age when this epistle was addressed to him. He was enthusiastic and devoted, but at times showed signs of timidity, and the apostle watched over him with tender interest.

In this chapter the young minister is warned against the Gnostic heresy, i.e., the heresy of the "knowing-ones," who pretended to give revelations about angels and their ministry and to bridge the gulf between man and God by a whole series of mysterious imaginary beings. Their teaching led from spiritual pride to sensuality, for they accounted the body as inherently evil. All this was contrary to "sound" or "healthy" doctrine. That word is peculiar to the pastoral epistles (1 Tim. 6:3; 2 Tim. 1:13; 4:3; Titus 1:9; 2:1). It suggests a certain test of the various teachers who cross our paths. The question always is, Do these words of theirs promote the health of the soul, and above all "love out of a pure heart and a good conscience"?—Bible Commentary

They will be the corrupting and ruining of religion among you, for they minister questions rather than edifying. That which gives occasion for doubtful disputes pulls down the church rather than builds it up. Godly edifying is the end ministers should aim at in all their discourses. Godly edifying must be in faith. It is by faith that we come to God at first, and it must be in the same way, and by the same principle of faith, that we must be edified. Ministers should avoid what will occasion disputes. Even disputes about great and necessary truths eat out the vitals of religion, which consist in practice and obedience as well as in faith.

Here the apostle shows the use of the law, and the glory of the gospel.

I. The end and uses of the law: it is intended to promote love.

1. The main scope and drift of the divine law are to engage us to the love of God and one another. Surely the gospel, which obliges us to love our enemies, to do good to those who hate us (Matt. v. 44), does not design to supersede a commandment the end whereof is love? Those therefore who boasted of their knowledge of the law, but used it only as a colour for the disturbance that they gave to the preaching of the gospel, defeated that which was the very end of the commandment, and that is love, love out of a pure heart.

subsequently to Paul's first imprisonment, the apparent discrepancy between his prophecy and the event may be reconciled by considering that the terms of the former were not that he should never visit Ephesus again (which this verse implies he did), but that they all should "see his face no more." I cannot think with BIRKS, that this verse is compatible with his theory, that Paul did not actually visit Ephesus, though in its immediate neighborhood (cf. ch. 3:14; 4:13). The corresponding conjunction to "as" is not given, the sentence not being completed till it is virtually so at vs. 18. I besought—a mild word, instead of authoritative command, to Timothy, as a fellow helper. some—The indefinite pronoun is slightly contemptuous as to them (Gal. 2:12; Jude 4), [ELLICOTT]. teach no other doctrine—than what I have taught (Gal. 1:6-9). His prophetic bodings some years before (Acts 20:29, 30) were now being realized (cf. ch. 6:3). 4. fables—legends about the origin and propagation of angels, such as the false teachers taught at Colosse (Col. 2:18-23). "Jewish fables" (Titus 1:14). "Profane, and old wives' fables" (ch. 4:7; II Tim. 4:4). genealogies—not merely such civil genealogies as were common among the Jews, whereby they traced their descent from the patriarchs, to which Paul would not object, and which he would not as here class with "fables," but Gnostic genealogies of spirits and aeons, as they called them, "Lists of Gnostic emanations" [ALFORD]. So TERTULLIAN, Adversus Valentinianos, c. 3, and IRENÆUS, Præf. The Judaizers here alluded to, while maintaining the perpetual obligation of the Mosaic law, joined with it a theosophic ascetic tendency, pretending to see in it mysteries deeper than others could see. The seeds, not the fullgrown Gnosticism of the post-apostolic age, then existed. This formed the transition stage between Judaism and Gnosticism. "Endless" refers to the tedious unprofitableness of their lengthy genealogies (cf. Titus 3:9). Paul opposes to their "aeons," the "King of the aeons (so the Greek, vs. 17), whom be glory throughout the aeons of aeons." The word "aeons" was probably not used in the technical sense of the latter Gnostics as yet; but "the only wise God" (vs. 17), by anticipation, confutes the subsequently adopted notions in the Gnostics' own phraseology.

questions—of mere speculation (Acts 25:20), not practical; generating merely curious discussions. "Questions and strifes of words" (ch. 6:4): "to no profit" (II Tim. 2:14); "gendering strifes" (II Tim. 2:23). "Vain jangling" (vss. 6, 7) of would-be "teachers of the law."

godly edifying—The oldest MSS. read, "the dispensation of God," the Gospel dispensation of God towards man (I Cor. 9:17), "which is (has its element) in faith." CONYBEARE translates, "The exercising of the stewardship of God" (I Cor. 9:17). He infers that the false teachers in Ephesus were presbyters, which accords with the prophecy, Acts 20:30. However, the oldest Latin versions, and IRENÆUS and HILARY, support English Version reading. Cf. vs. 5, "faith unfeigned."

5. But—in contrast to the doctrine of the false teachers. the end—the aim. the commandment—Greek, "of the charge" which you ought to urge on your flock. Referring to the same Greek word as in vss. 3, 18; here, however, in a larger sense, as including the Gospel "dispensation of God" (Notes, vs. 4 and vs. 11). which was the sum and substance of the "charge" committed to Timothy wherewith he should "charge" his flock. charity—LOVE; the sum and end of the law and of the Gospel alike, and that wherein the Gospel is the fulfilment of the spirit of the law in its every essential jot and tittle (Rom. 13:10). The foundation is faith (vs. 4), the "end" is love (vs. 14; Titus 3:15). out of—springing as from a fountain. pure heart—a heart purified by faith (Acts 15:9; II Tim. 2:22; Titus 1:15). good prisonment at Rome. When therefore the apostle came from Rome into Asia, he no doubt visited Ephesus, where ten years before he had planted a Christian church; and as he had not time to tarry then, he left Timothy to correct abuses. That thou mightest charge some. He does not name any person. The Judaizing teachers are generally supposed to be those intended; and the term some, "certain persons," which he uses, is expressive of high disapprobation, and at the same time of delicacy. They were not apostles nor apostolic men; but they were undoubtedly members of the church at Ephesus, and might yet be reclaimed.

4. Neither give heed to fables. Idle fancies; things of no moment; doctrines and opinions unauthenticated; silly legends, of which no people ever possessed a greater stock than the Jews. Endless genealogies. I suppose the apostle to mean those genealogies which were "uncertain" —that never could be made out, in either the ascending or the descending line; and, principally, such as referred to the great promise of the Messiah, and to the priesthood. The Jews had scrupulously preserved their genealogical tables till the advent of Christ; and the Evangelists had recourse to them and appealed to them in reference to our Lord's descent from the house of David; Matthew taking this genealogy in the descending, Luke in the ascending, line. All was then certain; but we are told that Herod destroyed the public registers. He, being an Idumean, was jealous of the noble origin of the Jews; and that none might be able to reproach him with his descent, he ordered the genealogical tables, which were kept among the archives in the Temple, to be burnt. From this time the Jews could refer to their genealogies only from memory, or from those imperfect tables which had been preserved in private hands; and to make out any regular line from these must have been endless and uncertain. It is probably to this that the apostle refers; I mean the endless and useless labor which the attempts to make out these genealogies must produce, the authentic tables being destroyed. Some learned men suppose that the apostle alludes here to the Aeons among the Gnostics and Valentinians, of whom there were endless numbers to make up what was called their pleroma. But it is certain that these heresies had not arrived to any formidable head in the apostle's time; and it has long been a doubt with me whether they even existed at that time. I think it the most simple way, and most likely to be the intention of the apostle, to refer all to the Jewish genealogies, which he calls "Jewish fables," Titus i. 14. Which minister questions. They are the foundation of endless altercations and disputes; for, being uncertain and not consecutive, every person had a right to call them in question; as we may naturally suppose, from the state in which the genealogical tables of the Jews then were, that many chasms must be supplied in different lines and consequently much must be done by conjecture. Rather than godly edifying. Such discussions as these had no tendency to promote piety. Many, no doubt, employed much of that time in inquiring who were their ancestors, which they should have spent in obtaining that grace by which, being born from above, they might have become the sons and daughters of God Almighty. Instead of godly edifying, "the economy or dispensation of God" is the reading of almost every MS. in which this part of the Epistle is extant, and of almost all the versions, and the chief of the Greek fathers. Of the genuineness of this reading scarcely a doubt can be formed.

5. Now the end of the commandment is charity. These genealogical questions lead to strife and debate; and the dispensation of God leads to "love" to both God and man, through faith in Christ. These genealogical questions leave the heart under the influence of all its vile tempers and evil propensities; faith in Jesus purifies the heart. The end, aim, and design of God in giving this dispensation to the world is that men may have an unfeigned faith, such as lays hold on Christ crucified, and produces a good conscience from a sense of the pardon received, and leads on to purity of heart; love to God and man being the grand issue of the grace of Christ here below, and this fully preparing the soul for eternal glory. He

Our hearts must be cleansed from all sinful love; our love must arise out of a good conscience; a real belief of the truth of the word of God, here called a faith unfeigned. It is love without dissimulation: the faith that works by it must be of the like nature, genuine and sincere.

When persons swerve from the great law of charity they will turn aside to vain jangling; when a man misses his end it is no wonder that every step he takes is out of the way.

Jangling, especially in religion, is vain, and yet many people's religion consists of little else but vain jangling.

2. The use of the law (v. 8). The Jews used it unlawfully. They set it up for justification, and so used it unlawfully. Call it back to its right use and take away the abuses, for the law is still very useful as a rule of life. It is good to teach us what is sin and what is duty. It is the grace of God that changes men's hearts; but the terrors of the law may be of use to tie their hands and restrain their tongues. The law is not made primarily for the righteous, but for sinners of all sorts, whether in a greater or less measure, v. 9, 10.

ALBERT BARNES:

"The law is not made for a righteous man." There has been great variety in the interpretation of this passage. Some suppose that the law here refers to the ceremonial laws of Moses; others, to the denunciatory part of the law; and others, that it means that the chief purpose of the law was to restrain the wicked. It seems clear, however, that the apostle does not refer merely to the ceremonial law, for he specifies that which condemns the unholy and profane. It was not the ceremonial law which condemned these things, but the moral law. It cannot be supposed, moreover, that the apostle meant to say that the law was not binding on a righteous man, or that he was under no obligation to obey it—for he everywhere teaches that the moral law is obligatory on all nankind. To suppose also that a righteous man is released from the obligation to obey the law, that is, to do right, is absurdity. Nor does he seem to mean that the law was not given for the purpose of justifying a righteous man—for this was originally one of its designs. Had man always obeyed it, he would have been justified by it.

The meaning seems to be that the purpose of the law was not to fetter and perplex those who were righteous and who aimed to please God. It was not intended to produce a spirit of servitude and bondage. As the Jews interpreted it, it did this, and this interpretation appears to have been adopted by the teachers at Ephesus, to whom Paul refers. The whole tendency of their teaching was to bring the soul into a state of bondage and to make religion a condition of servitude. Paul teaches that religion was a condition of freedom and that the main purpose of the law was not to fetter the minds of the righteous by numberless observances and minute regulations, but that it was to restrain the wicked from sin. This is the case with all law. No good man feels himself fettered and manacled by wholesome laws, nor does he feel that the purpose of law is to reduce him to a state of servitude. It is only the wicked who have this feeling—and in this sense the law is made for a man who intends to do wrong.

conscience—a conscience cleared from guilt by the effect of sound faith in Christ (vs. 19; ch. 3:9; II Tim. 1:3; I Pet. 3:21). Contrast I Timothy 4:2; Titus 1:15; cf. Acts 23:1. John uses "heart," where Paul would use "conscience." In Paul the understanding is the seat of conscience; the heart is the seat of love [BENGEL]. A good conscience is joined with sound faith; a bad conscience with unsoundness in the faith (cf. Heb. 9:14). faith unfeigned—not a hypocritical, dead, and unfruitful faith, but faith working by love (Gal. 5:6). The false teachers drew men off from such a loving, working, real faith, to profitless, speculative "questions" (vs. 4) and jangling (vs. 6). 6. From which—viz., from a pure heart, good conscience, and faith unfeigned, the well-spring of love. having swerved—lit., "having missed the mark (the 'end') to be aimed at." It is translated, "erred," ch. 6:21; II Tim. 2:18. Instead of aiming at and attaining the graces above named, they "have turned aside (ch. 5:15; II Tim. 4:4; Heb. 12:13) unto vain jangling"; lit., "vain talk," about the law and genealogies of angels (vs. 7; Titus 3:9; 1:10); I Timothy 6:20, "vain babblings and oppositions." It is the greatest vanity when divine things are not truthfully discussed (Rom. 1: 21) [BENGEL]. 7. Sample of their "vain talk" (vs. 6). Desiring—They are would-be teachers, not really so. the law—the Jewish law (Titus 1:14; 3:9). The Judaizers here meant seem to be distinct from those impugned in the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans, who made the works of the law necessary to justification in opposition to Gospel grace. The Judaizers here meant corrupted the law with "fables," which they pretended to found on it, subversive of morals as well as of truth. Their error was not in maintaining the obligation of the law, but in abusing it by fabulous and immoral interpretations of, and additions to, it. neither what they say, nor whereof—neither understanding their own assertions, nor the object itself about which they make them. They understand as little about the one as the other [ALFORD]. 8. But—"Now we know" (Rom. 3:19; 7:14). law is good—in full agreement with God's holiness and goodness. if a man—primarily, a teacher; then, every Christian. use it lawfully—in its lawful place in the Gospel economy, viz., not as a means of a "righteous man" attaining higher perfection than could be attained by the Gospel alone (ch. 4:8; Titus 1:14), which was the perverted use to which the false teachers put it, but as a means of awakening the sense of sin in the ungodly (vss. 9, 10; cf. Rom. 7:7-12; Gal. 3:21). 9. law is not made for a righteous man—not for one standing by faith in the righteousness of Christ put on him for justification,and imparted inwardly by the Spirit for sanctification. "One not forensically amenable to the law" [ALFORD]. For sanctification, the law gives no inward power to fulfil it; but ALFORD goes too far in speaking of the righteous man as "not morally needing the law." Doubtless, in proportion as he is inwardly led by the Spirit, the justified man needs not the law, which is only an outward rule (Rom. 6:14; Gal. 5:18, 23). But as the justified man often does not give himself up wholly to the inward leading of the Spirit, he morally needs the outward law to show him his sin and God's requirements. The reason why the ten commandments have no power to condemn the Christian, is not that they have no authority over him, but because Christ has fulfilled them as our surety (Rom. 10:4). disobedient—Greek, "not subject"; insubordinate; it is translated "unruly," Titus 1:6, 10; "lawless and disobedient" refer to opposers of the law, for whom it is "enacted" (so the Greek, for "is made"). ungodly and . . . sinners—Greek, he who does not reverence God, and he who openly sins against Him; the opposers of God, from the law comes. unholy and profane—those inwardly impure, and those deserving exclusion from the outward participation in services of the sanctuary; sinners against the third and fourth commandments. murderers—or, as the Greek may mean, 'smiters' of fathers and . . . mothers; sinners against the fifth commandment. manslayers—sinners against the sixth commandment. 10. whoremongers . . .—sinners against the seventh commandment. men-stealers—i.e., slave dealers. The most heinous offense against the eighth commandment. No stealing of a man's goods can equal in atrocity the stealing of a man's liberty. Slavery is not directly assailed in the New Testament; to have done so would have been to revolutionize violently the existing order of things. But Christianity teaches principles sure to undermine, and at last overthrow it, wherever Christianity has had its natural development (Matt. 7: 12). liars . . . perjured—offenders against the ninth commandment. if there be any other thing . . .— whose soul is filled with love to God and man has a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned. "A faith not hypocritical." The apostle appears to allude to the Judaizing teachers, who pretended faith in the gospel merely that they might have the greater opportunity to bring back to the Mosaic system those who had embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified. This is evident from the following verse.

6. From which some having swerved. From which some, though they have pretended to aim at the "scope," or "mark," have missed that mark. This is the import of the original word. Turned aside unto vain jangling. The original term signifies "empty or vain talking"; discourses that turn to no profit; a great many words and little sense.

7. Teachers of the law. To be esteemed or celebrated as rabbins; to be reputed cunning in solving knotty questions and enigmas, which answered no end to true religion. Understanding neither what they say. This is evident from almost all the Jewish comments which yet remain. Things are asserted which are either false or dubious; words, the import of which they did not understand, were brought to illustrate them.

8. But we know that the law is good. The law as given by God is both good in itself and has a good tendency. This is similar to what the apostle had asserted, Rom. vii. 12-16: "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." If a man use it lawfully. That is, interpret it according to its own spirit and design, and use it for the purpose for which God has given it.

9. The law is not made for a righteous man. There is a moral law as well as a ceremonial law. As the object of the latter is to lead us to Christ, the object of the former is to restrain crimes, and inflict punishment on those that commit them. It was, therefore, not made for the righteous as a restrainer of crimes and an inflicter of punishments; for the righteous avoid sin, and by living to the glory of God expose not themselves to its censures. This seems to be the mind of the apostle; he does not say that the law was not made for a righteous man, but it does not "lie against a righteous man," because he does not transgress it: but it "lies against" the wicked. The word "lies" refers to the custom of writing laws on boards and hanging them up in public places within reach of every man, that they might be read by all; thus all would see against whom the law lay. The lawless. Those who will not be bound by a law, and acknowledge none, therefore have no rule of moral conduct. Disobedient. Those who acknowledge no authority; from a, negative, and hypotasso, "to subject." For the ungodly. The "irreligious"—those who do not worship God or have no true worship; from a, negative, and sebo, "to worship." For unholy. Persons "totally polluted"—unclean within and unclean without; from a, negative, and hosios, "holy." And profane. Such who are so unholy and abominable as not to be fit to attend any public worship. Murderers of fathers. The murderer of a father or a mother, notwithstanding the deep fall of man and the general profligacy of the world, has been so rare and is a crime so totally opposite to nature that few civilized nations have found it necessary to make laws against it. Yet such monsters, like the most awful and infrequent portents, have sometimes terrified the world with their appearance. But I think the original may mean simply "beating or striking a father or mother." Manslayers. "Murderers" simply, all who take away the life of a human being contrary to law.

10. For whoremongers. Adulterers, fornicators, and prostitutes of all sorts. Menstealers. "Slave dealers"; whether those who carry on the traffic in human flesh and blood or those who steal a person in order to sell him into bondage; or those who buy such stolen men or women, no matter of what color or what country. For liars. They who speak for truth what they know to be false; and even they who tell the truth in such a way as to lead others to draw a contrary meaning from it. For perjured persons. Such as do or leave undone anything contrary to an oath or moral engagement, whether that engagement be made by what is

II. He shows the glory and grace of the gospel. The glorious gospel, for so it is: much of the glory of God appears in the works of creation and providence, but much more in the gospel, where it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. Paul reckoned it a great honour put upon him, and a great favour done him, that this glorious gospel was committed to his trust.

Verses 12–17

I. Thanks to Jesus Christ for putting him into the ministry. It is Christ's work to put men into the ministry. Ministers cannot make ministers, much less can persons make themselves ministers; for it is Christ's work. Those whom he puts into the ministry he fits for it; whom he calls he qualifies. Christ gives not only ability, but fidelity, to those whom he puts into the ministry. Christ's ministers are trusty servants. A call to the ministry is a great favour.

II. He gives an account of his conversion.

1. What he was before his conversion. Frequently those who are designed for great and eminent services are left to themselves before their conversion. The greatness of sin is no bar to our acceptance with God, nor to our being employed for him, if it be truly repented of. True penitents will not be backward to own their former condition. This good apostle often confessed what his former life had been.

2. The great favour of God to him.

(1) Because he did it ignorantly and in unbelief, he obtained mercy. What we do ignorantly is a less crime than what we do knowingly; yet a sin of ignorance is a sin. Ignorance in some cases will extenuate a crime, though it does not take it away. Unbelief is at the bottom of what sinners do ignorantly. For these reasons Paul obtained mercy.

answering to the tenth commandment in its widest aspect. He does not particularly specify it because his object is to bring out the grosser forms of transgression; whereas the tenth is deeply spiritual, so much so indeed, that it was by it that the sense of sin, in its subtlest form of "lust," Paul tells us (Rom. 7:7), was brought home to his own conscience. Thus, Paul argues, these would-be teachers of the law, while boasting of a higher perfection through it, really bring themselves down from the Gospel elevation to the level of the grossly "lawless," for whom, not for Gospel believers, the law was designed. sound—healthy, spiritually wholesome (ch. 6:3; II Tim. 1:13; Titus 1:13; 2:2), as opposed to sickly, morbid (as the Greek of "doting" means, ch. 6:4), and "canker" (II Tim. 2:17). "The doctrine," or "teaching, which is according to godliness" (ch. 6:3). 11. According to the glorious gospel—The Christian's freedom from the law as a sanctifier, as well as a justifier, implied in the previous, vss. 9, 10, is what this vs. 11 is connected with. This exemption of the righteous from the law, and assignment of it to the lawless as its true object, is "according to the Gospel of the glory (so the Greek, cf. Note, II Cor. 4:4) of the blessed God." The Gospel manifests God's glory (Eph. 1:17; 3:16) in accounting "righteous" the believer, through the righteousness of Christ, without "the law" (vs. 9); and in imparting that righteousness whereby he loathes all those sins against which (vss. 9, 10) the law is directed. The term, "blessed," indicates at once immortality and supreme happiness. The supremely blessed One is He from whom all blessedness flows. This term, as applied to GOD, occurs only here and in ch. 6:15: appropriate in speaking here of the Gospel blessedness, in contrast to the curse on those under the law (vs. 9; Gal. 3:10). committed to my trust—Translate as in the Greek order, which brings into prominent emphasis Paul, "committed in trust to me"; in contrast to the kind of law-teaching which they (who had no Gospel commission), the false teachers, assumed to themselves (vs. 8; Titus 1:3). 12. The honor done him in having the Gospel ministry committed to him suggests the digression to what he once was, no better (vs. 13) than those lawless ones described above (vss. 9, 10), when the grace of our Lord (vs. 14) visited him. and—omitted in most (not all) of the oldest MSS. I thank—Greek, "I have (i.e., feel) gratitude." enabled me—the same Greek verb as in Acts 9:22, "Saul increased the more in strength." An undesigned coincidence between Paul and Luke, his companion. Enabled me, viz., for the ministry. "It is not in my own strength that I bring this doctrine to men, but as strengthened and nerved by Him who saved me" [THEODORET]. Man is by nature "without strength" (Rom. 5:6). True conversion and calling confer power [BENGEL]. for that—the main ground of his "thanking Christ." he counted me faithful—He foreordered and foresaw that I would be faithful to the trust committed to me. Paul's thanking God for this shows that the merit of his faithfulness was due solely to God's grace, not to his own natural strength (I Cor. 7:25). Faithfulness is the quality required in a steward (I Cor. 4:2). putting me into—rather as in I Thessalonians 5:9, "appointing me (in His sovereign purposes of grace) unto the ministry" (Acts 20:24). 13. Who was before—Greek, "Formerly being a blasphemer." "Notwithstanding that I was before a blasphemer . . ." (Acts 26:9, 11). persecutor—Gal. 1:13). injurious—Greek, "insulter"; one who acts injuriously from arrogant contempt of others. Translate, Romans 1:30, "despiteful." One who added insult to injury. BENGEL translates, "a despiser." I obtained mercy—God's mercy, and Paul's want of it, stand in sharp contrast [ELLICOTT]; Greek, "I was made the object of mercy." The sense of mercy was perpetual in the mind of the apostle (cf. Note, vs. 2). Those who have felt mercy can best have mercy on those out of the way (Heb. 5:2, 3). because I did it ignorantly—Ignorance does not in itself deserve pardon; but it is a less culpable cause of unbelief than pride and wilful hardening of one's self against the truth (John 9:41; Acts 26:9). Hence it is Christ's plea of intercession for His murderers (Luke 23:34); and it is made by the apostles a mitigating circumstance in the Jews' sin, and one giving a hope of a door of repentance (Acts 3:17; Rom. 10:2).

14. And—Greek, "But." Not only so (was mercy shown me), but. . . . the grace—by which "I obtained mercy" (vs. 13). was exceeding abundant—Greek, "superabounded." Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound" (Rom. 5:20). with faith—accompanied with faith, the opposite of "unbelief" (vs. 13). love—in contrast to "a blasphemer, called swearing or by an affirmation or promise of any kind. And if there be any other thing. Every species of vice and immorality, all must be necessarily included that is contrary to sound doctrine—to the immutable moral law of God, as well as to the pure precepts of Christianity where that law is incorporated, explained, and rendered, if possible, more and more binding.

11. According to the glorious gospel. The "sound doctrine" mentioned above, which is here called "the gospel of the glory of the blessed or happy God"—a dispensation which exhibits the glory of all His attributes; and by saving man in such a way as is consistent with the glory of all the divine perfections, while it brings peace and goodwill among men, brings glory to God in the highest.

12. I thank Christ. I feel myself under infinite obligation to Christ, who hath "strengthened me," and put me into the ministry, the "deaconship," the "service" of mankind, by preaching the gospel, for that he counted me—He knew that I would be—faithful to the charge that was delivered to me.

13. A blasphemer. Speaking impiously and unjustly of Jesus, His doctrine, His ways, and His followers. And a persecutor. Endeavoring to the uttermost of his power to exterminate all who called on the name of the Lord Jesus. And injurious. As full of insolence as I was of malevolence; and yet all the while thinking I did God service, while sacrificing men and women to my own prejudices and intolerance.

14. The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant. The original is very emphatic, "that grace of our Lord hath superabounded"—it manifested itself in a way of extraordinary mercy. With faith and love. Not only pardoning such offenses, but leading me to the full experimental knowledge of Christianity, of that

(2) The abundant grace of Jesus Christ, v. 14, that grace of Christ which appears in his glorious gospel (v. 15). Here we have the sum of the whole gospel, that Jesus Christ came into the world. It is good news, worthy of all acceptation; and yet not too good to be true, for it is a faithful saying. Paul was a sinner of the first rank; so he acknowledges himself to have been. Persecutors are some of the worst of sinners: such a one Paul had been. He that elsewhere calls himself the least of all saints (Eph. iii. 8) here calls himself the chief of sinners. The chief of sinners may become the chief of saints. This is a faithful saying which may be depended on.

(3) The mercy which Paul found with God.

[1] For the encouragement of others to repent and believe (v. 16). It was an instance of the long-suffering of Christ that he would bear so much with one who had been so very provoking; and it was designed for a pattern to all others, that the greatest sinners might not despair of mercy with God.

[2] He mentions it to the glory of God. He could not go on with his letter without inserting a thankful acknowledgement of God's goodness to him. Those who are sensible of their obligations to the mercy and grace of God will have their hearts enlarged in his praise. When we have found God good we must not forget to pronounce him great; and his kind thoughts of us must not at all abate our high thoughts of him, but rather increase them. God's gracious dealings with us should fill us with admiration of his glorious attributes. "To him be glory for ever and ever." persecutor, and injurious." which is in Christ—as its element and home [ALFORD]: here as its source whence it flows to us. 15. faithful—worthy of credit, because "God" who says it "is faithful" to His word (I Cor. 1:9; I Thess. 5:24; II Thess. 3:3; Rev. 21:5; 22:6). This seems to have become an axiomatic saying among Christians the phrase, "faithful saying," is peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles (ch. 2:11; 4:9; Titus 3:8). Translate as Greek, "Faithful is the saying." all—all possible; full; to be received by all, and with all the faculties of the soul, mind, and heart. Paul, unlike the false teachers (vs. 7), understands what he is saying, and whereof he affirms; and by his simplicity of style and subject, setting forth the grand fundamental truth of salvation through Christ, confutes the false teachers' abstruse and unpractical speculations (I Cor. 1:18-28; Titus 2:1). acceptation—reception (as of a boon) into the heart, as well as the understanding, with all gladness; this is faith acting on the Gospel offer, and welcoming and appropriating it (Acts 2: 41). Christ—as promised. Jesus—as manifested [BENGEL]. came into the world—which was full of sin (John 1:29; Rom. 5:12; I John 2:2). This implies His pre-existence. John 1:9, Greek, "the true Light that, coming into the world, lighteth every man." to save sinners—even notable sinners like Saul of Tarsus. His instance was without a rival since the ascension, in point of the greatness of the sin and the greatness of the mercy: that the consenter to Stephen, the proto-martyr's death, should be the successor of the same! I am—not merely, "I was chief" (I Cor. 15:9; Eph. 3:8; cf. Luke 18:13). To each believer his own sins must always appear, as long as he lives, greater than those of others, which he never can know as he can know his own. chief—the same Greek as in vs. 16, "first," which alludes to this 15th verse, Translate in both verses, "foremost." Well might he infer where there was mercy for him, there is mercy for all who will come to Christ (Matt. 18:11; Luke 19:10). 16. Howbeit—Greek, "But"; contrasting his own conscious sinfulness with God's gracious visitation of him in mercy. for this cause—for this very purpose. that in me—in my case. first—"foremost." As I was "foremost" (Greek for chief, vs. 15) in sin, so God has made me the "foremost" sample of mercy. show—to His own glory (the middle Greek, voice), Ephesians 2:7. all long-suffering—Greek, "the whole (of His) long-suffering," viz., in bearing so long with me while I was a persecutor. a pattern—a sample (I Cor. 10:6, 11) to assure the greatest sinners of the certainty that they shall not be rejected in coming to Christ, since even Saul found mercy. So David made his own case of pardon, notwithstanding the greatness of his sin, a sample to encourage other sinners to seek pardon (Ps. 32:5, 6). The Greek for "pattern" is sometimes used for a "sketch" or outline—the filling up to take place in each man's own case. believe on him—Belief rests ON Him as the only foundation on which faith relies. to life everlasting—the ultimate aim which faith always keeps in view (Titus 1:2). 17. A suitable conclusion to the beautifully simple enunciation of the Gospel, of which his own history is a living sample or pattern. It is from the experimental sense of grace that the doxology flows [BENGEL]. the King, eternal—lit., "King of the (eternal) ages." The LXX translates Exodus 15:18, "The Lord shall reign for ages and beyond them." Psalm 145:13, Margin, "Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom," lit., "a kingdom of all ages." The "life everlasting" (vs. 16) suggested here "the King eternal," or everlasting. It answers also to "for ever and ever" at the close, lit., "to the ages of the ages" (the countless succession of ages made up of ages). immortal—The oldest MSS. read, "incorruptible." Vulgate, however, and one very old MS. read as English Version (Rom. 1:23). invisible—(ch. 6:16; Exod. 33:20; John 1:18; Col. 1:15; Heb. 11:27). the only wise God—The oldest MSS. omit "wise," which probably crept in from Romans 16:27, where it is more appropriate to the context than here (cf. Jude 25). "The only Potentate" (ch. 6:15; Ps. 86:10; John 5:44). for ever . . .—See Note, above. The thought of eternity (terrible as it is to unbelievers) is delightful to those assured of grace (vs. 16) [BENGEL]. 18. He resumes the subject begun at vs. 3. The conclusion (apodosis) to the foregoing, "as I besought thee . . . charge" (vs. 3), is here given, if not formally, at least substantially. This charge—viz., "that thou in them (so the Greek) mightest war," i.e., fulfil thy high calling, not only as a Christian, but as a minister officially, one function of which is, to "charge some that they teach no other doctrine" (vs. 3). I commit—as a sacred deposit (ch. 6:20; II Tim. 2:2) to be laid before thy hearers.

faith and love which are essential to it, and giving me authority to proclaim it to mankind.

15-16. Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. This is one of the most glorious truths in the Book of God, the most important that ever reached the human ear or can be entertained by the heart of man. This saying or "doctrine" he calls, first, a faithful or "true" saying. It is a doctrine that may be "credited" without the slightest doubt or hesitation. God himself has spoken it; and the death of Christ and the mission of the Holy Ghost, sealing pardon on the souls of all who believe, have confirmed and established the truth. Secondly, it is worthy of all acceptation; as all need it, it is worthy of being received by all.

Of whom I am chief. Confounding Paul the apostle, in the fullness of his faith and love, with Saul of Tarsus, in his ignorance, unbelief, and persecuting rage, we are in the habit of saying: "This is a hyperbolical expression, arguing the height of the apostle's modesty and humility; and must not be taken according to the letter." I take it not in this light; I take it not with abatement; it is strictly and literally true. Take into consideration the whole of the apostle's conduct previously to his conversion, and was there a greater sinner converted to God from the Incarnation to his own time? Not one; he was the chief; and keeping his blasphemy, persecution, and contumely in view, he asserts: Of all that the Lord Jesus came into the world to save, and of all that He had saved to that time, I am chief. He could with propriety say, "I am the first"; the "first" who, from a blasphemer, persecutor (and might we not add "murderer"? see the part he took in the martyrdom of Stephen), became a preacher of that gospel which I had persecuted. And hence, keeping this idea strictly in view, he immediately adds (v. 16): Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17. Now unto the King eternal. This burst of thanksgiving and gratitude to God naturally arose from the subject then under his pen and eye. God has most wondrously manifested His mercy, in this beginning of the gospel, by saving me, and making me a pattern to all them that shall hereafter believe on Christ. He is "the king of eternities": the eternity that was before time was, and the eternity that shall be when time is no more. Immortal. "Incorruptible"—not liable to decay or corruption; a simple, uncompounded essence, incapable therefore of decomposition, and consequently permanent and eternal. Invisible. One who fills all things, works everywhere, and yet is invisible to angels and men; the perfect reverse of false gods and idols, who are confined to one spot, work nowhere, and, being stocks and stones, are seen by everybody. The only wise God. The word wise is omitted by some MSS. Some of the Greek fathers quote it sometimes and omit it at others; which shows that it was an unsettled reading, probably borrowed from Rom. xvi. 27. Without it the reading is very strong and appropriate: "To the only God," nothing visible or invisible being worthy of adoration but himself. Be honour, all the respect and reverence that can be paid by intelligent beings, ascribing to Him at the same time all the glory—excellences, and perfections, which can be possessed by an intelligent, unoriginated, independent, and eternal Being; and this for ever and ever—through eternity.

18. This charge. It was a charge that the Judaizing teachers should not teach differently from that doctrine which the apostle had delivered to him.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 18-20

The charge he gives to Timothy to proceed in his work with resolution, v. 18. It seems, there had been prophecies before concerning Timothy. This encouraged Paul to commit this charge to him.

The ministry is a good warfare against sin and Satan. Ministers must war this good warfare diligently and courageously. The prophecies which went before concerning Timothy are a motive to stir him up to a vigorous discharge of his duty; so the good hopes that others have entertained concerning us should excite us to our duty. Holding faith and a good conscience, v. 19.

Those that put away a good conscience will soon make shipwreck of faith; we must look to the one as well as the other.

As for those who had made shipwreck of the faith, he specifies two, Hymenæus and Alexander, who had made a profession of the Christian religion.

Paul had delivered them to Satan, had declared them to belong to the kingdom of Satan that they might learn not to blaspheme. God can, if he please, work by contraries: Hymenæus and Alexander are delivered to Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme, when one would rather think they would learn of Satan to blaspheme the more. Let us hold faith and a good conscience, for if we once let go our hold of these we do not know where we shall stop.

according to—in pursuance of; in consonance with. the prophecies which went before on thee—the intimations given by prophets respecting thee at thy ordination, ch. 4:14 (as, probably, by Silas, a companion of Paul, and "a prophet," Acts 15:32). Such prophetical intimation, as well as the good report given of Timothy by the brethren (Acts 16:2), may have induced Paul to take him as his companion. Cf. similar prophecies as to others: Acts 13:1-3, in connection with laying on of hands; 11:28; 21:10, 11; cf. I Corinthians 12:10; 14:1; Ephesians 4:11. In Acts 20:28, it is expressly said that "the Holy Ghost had made them [the Ephesian presbyters] overseers." CLEMENT OF ROME, Epistola ad Corinthios, states it was the custom of the apostles "to make trial by the Spirit," i.e., by the "power of discerning," in order to determine who were to be overseers and deacons in the several churches planted. So CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA says as to the churches near Ephesus, that the overseers were marked out for ordination by a revelation of the Holy Ghost to St. John. by them—Greek, "in them"; arrayed as it were in them; armed with them. warfare—not the mere "fight" (ch. 6:12; II Tim. 4:7), but the whole campaign; the military service. Translate as Greek, not "a," but "the good warfare." 19. Holding—Keeping hold of "faith" and "good conscience" (vs. 5); not "putting the latter away" as "some." Faith is like a very precious liquor; a good conscience is the clean, pure glass that contains it [BENGEL]. The loss of good conscience entails the shipwreck of faith. Consciousness of sin [unrepented of and forgiven] kills the germ of faith in man [WIESINGER]. which—Greek singular, viz., "good conscience," not "faith" also; however, the result of putting away good conscience is, one loses faith also. put away—a wilful act. They thrust it from them as a troublesome monitor. It reluctantly withdraws, extruded by force, when its owner is tired of its importunity, and is resolved to retain his sin at the cost of losing it. One cannot be on friendly terms with it and with sin at one and the same time. made shipwreck—"with respect to THE faith." Faith is the vessel in which they had professedly embarked, of which "good conscience" is the anchor. The ancient Church often used this image, comparing the course of faith to navigation. The Greek does not imply that one having once had faith makes shipwreck of it, but that they who put away good conscience "make shipwreck with respect to THE faith." 20. Hymeneus—There is no difficulty in supposing him to be the Hymeneus of II Timothy 2:17. Though "delivered over to Satan" (the lord of all outside the Church, Acts 26: 18, and the executor of wrath, when judicially allowed by God, on the disobedient, I Cor. 5:5; II Cor. 12:7), he probably was restored to the Church subsequently, and again troubled it. Paul, as an apostle, though distant at Rome pronounced the sentence to be executed at Ephesus, involving, probably, the excommunication of the offenders (Matt. 18:17, 18). The sentence operated not only spiritually, but also physically, sickness, or some such visitation of God, falling on the person excommunicated, in order to bring him to repentance and salvation. Alexander here is probably "the coppersmith" who did Paul "much evil" when the latter visited Ephesus. The "delivering him to Satan" was probably the consequence of his withstanding the apostle (II Tim. 4:14, 15); as the same sentence on Hymeneus was the consequence of his "saying that the resurrection is past already" (II Tim. 2:18; his putting away good conscience, naturally producing shipwreck concerning FAITH, vs. 19. If one's religion better not his morals, his moral deficiencies will corrupt his religion. The rain which falls pure from heaven will not continue pure if it be received in an unclean vessel [ARCHBISHOP WHATELY]). It is possible that he is the Alexander, then a Jew, put forward by the Jews, doubtless against Paul, at the riot in Ephesus (Acts 19:33). that they may—not "might"; implying that the effect still continues—the sentence is as yet unremoved. learn—Greek, "be disciplined," viz., by chastisement and suffering. blaspheme—the name of God and Christ, by doings and teachings unworthy of their Christian profession (Rom. 2:23, 24; Jas. 2:7). Though the apostles had the power of excommunication, accompanied with bodily inflictions, miraculously sent (II Cor. 10:8), it does not follow that fallible ministers now have any power, save that of excluding from church fellowship notorious bad livers.

According to the prophecies. This may refer to some predictions by inspired men relative to what Timothy should be, and he wishes him to act in all things conformably to those predictions. It was predicted that he should have this high and noble calling; but his behavior in that calling was a matter of contingency, as it respected the use he might make of the grace of his calling.

The apostle therefore exhorts him to war a good warfare. Some think that "the foregoing prophecies" refer to revelations which the apostle himself had received concerning Timothy; while others think that the word is to be understood of advices, directions, and exhortations which the apostle had previously delivered to him. This is a very sober and good sense of the passage. War a good warfare. The trials and afflictions of the followers of God are often represented as a warfare or "campaign."

19. Holding faith. All the truths of the Christian religion, firmly believing them, and fervently proclaiming them to others. And a good conscience. So holding the truth as to live according to its dictates, that a good conscience may be ever preserved. Which some having put away. Having "thrust away"; as a foolhardy soldier might his shield and his breastplate or a mad sailor his pilot, helm, and compass. Concerning faith. The great truths of the Christian religion.

Have made shipwreck. Being without the faith, that only infallible system of truth; and a good conscience, that skillful pilot, that steady and commanding helm, that faithful and invariable loadstone; having been driven to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and getting among shoals, quicksands, and rocks, have been shipwrecked and engulfed.

20. Of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander. Who had the faith but thrust it away; who had a good conscience through believing, but made shipwreck of it. Hence we find that all this was not only possible, but did actually take place, though some have endeavored to maintain the contrary; who, confounding eternity with a state of probation, have supposed that if a man once enter into the grace of God in this life he must necessarily continue in it to all eternity. Thousands of texts and thousands of facts refute this doctrine. Delivered unto Satan. For the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. See what is noted on 1 Cor. v. 5; what this sort of punishment was no man now living knows. There is nothing of the kind referred to in the Jewish writings. It seems to have been something done by mere apostolical authority, under the direction of the Spirit of God. Hymenaeus, it appears, denied the resurrection, see 2 Tim. ii. 17-18; but whether this Alexander be the same with "Alexander the coppersmith," 2 Tim. iv. 14, or the Alexander in Acts xix. 33, cannot be determined. Probably he was the same with the "coppersmith." Whether they were brought back to the acknowledgment of the truth does not appear. From what is said in the Second Epistle the case seems extremely doubtful. Let him who most assuredly standeth take heed lest he fall.

I. A charge given to Christians to pray for all men in general, and particularly for all in authority. Paul does not send him any prescribed form of prayer. Paul thought it enough to give them general heads; they, having the scripture to direct them in prayer and the Spirit of prayer poured out upon them, needed not any further directions. The disciples of Christ must be praying people. There must be prayers for ourselves in the first place; this is implied here. We must also pray for all men. See how far the Christian religion was from being a sect, when it taught men this diffusive charity, to pray for all men.

Pray for kings (v. 2); though the kings at this time were heathens, yet they must pray for them. For kings, and all that are in authority. We must give thanks for them, pray for their welfare and for the welfare of their kingdoms, that in the peace thereof we may have peace. He does not say, "that we may get preferments under them, grow rich, and be in honour and power under them"; no, the summit of the ambition of a good Christian is to lead a quiet and peaceable life. We cannot expect to be kept quiet and peaceable unless we keep in all godliness and honesty. Here we have our duty as Christians summed up in two words: godliness, that is, the right worshipping of God; and honesty, that is, a good conduct towards all men. These two must go together. Christians are to be men much given to prayer. In our prayers we are to have a generous concern for others as well as for ourselves; we are to pray for all men, and to give thanks for all men. Kings themselves, and those who are in authority, are to be prayed for. They want our prayers, for they have many difficulties to encounter, many snares to which their exalted stations expose them.

II. He shows God's love to mankind in general, v. 4.

1. God bears a goodwill to all mankind. There is one God (v. 5), and one only. This one God will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. It concerns us to get the knowledge of the truth, because that is the way to be saved.

2. There is one Mediator, and that Mediator gave himself a ransom for all. As the mercy of God extends itself to all his works, so the mediation of Christ extends to all the children of men, so that they are not now under the law as a covenant of works, but as a rule of life. They are under grace. We deserved to have died. Christ died for us. He put himself into the office of Mediator between God and man. A mediator supposes a controversy. Sin had made a quarrel between us and God. Jesus Christ is a Mediator who undertakes to make peace, to bring God and man together.

Vss. 1-15. PUBLIC WORSHIP. DIRECTION AS TO INTERCESSIONS FOR ALL MEN, SINCE CHRIST IS A RANSOM FOR ALL. THE DUTIES OF MEN AND WOMEN RESPECTIVELY IN RESPECT TO PUBLIC PRAYER. WOMAN'S SUBJECTION; HER SPHERE OF DUTY. 1. therefore—taking up again the general subject of the Epistle in continuation (II Tim. 2:1). "What I have therefore to say to thee by way of a charge (ch. 1:3, 18), is . . . ." that, first of all . . . be made—ALFORD takes it, "I exhort first of all to make." "First of all," doubtless, is to be connected with "I exhort"; what I begin with (for special reasons), is . . . . As the destruction of Jerusalem drew near, the Jews (including those at Ephesus) were seized with the dream of freedom from every yoke; and so virtually "blasphemed" (cf. ch. 1:20) God's name by "speaking evil of dignities" (ch. 6:1; II Pet. 2:10; Jude 8). Hence Paul, in opposition, gives prominence to the injunction that prayer be made for all men, especially for magistrates and kings (Titus 3:1-3) [OLSHAUSEN]. Some professing Christians looked down on all not Christians, as doomed to perdition; but Paul says all men are to be prayed for, as Christ died for all (vss. 4-6). supplications—a term implying the suppliant's sense of need, and of his own insufficiency. prayers—implying devotion. intercessions—properly the coming near to God with childlike confidence, generally in behalf of another. The accumulation of terms implies prayer in its every form and aspect, according to all the relations implied in it. 2. For kings—an effectual confutation of the adversaries who accused the Christians of disaffection to the ruling powers (Acts 17:7; Rom. 13:1-7). all . . . in authority—lit., ". . . in eminence"; in stations of eminence. The "quiet" of Christians was often more dependent on subordinate rulers, than on the supreme king; hence, "all . . . in authority" are to be prayed for. that we may lead—that we may be blessed with such good government as to lead . . .; or rather, as Greek, "to pass" or "spend." The prayers of Christians for the government bring down from heaven peace and order in a state. quiet—not troubled from without. peaceable—"tranquil"; not troubled from within [OLSHAUSEN]. "He is peaceable (Greek) who makes no disturbance; he is quiet (Greek) who is himself free from disturbance" [TITTMANN]. in all godliness—"in all (possible . . . requisite) piety" [ALFORD]. A distinct Greek word, vs. 10, expresses "godliness." honesty Greek, "gravity" (Titus 2:2, 7), "decorum," or propriety of conduct. As "piety" is in relation to God, "gravity" is propriety of behavior among men. 3. this—praying for all men. in the sight of God—not merely before men, as if it were their favor that we sought (II Cor. 8:21). our Saviour—a title appropriate to the matter in hand. He who is "our Saviour" is willing that all should be saved (vs. 4; Rom. 5:18); therefore we should meet the will of God in behalf of others, by praying for the salvation of all men. More would be converted if we would pray more. He has actually saved us who believe, being "our Saviour." He is willing that all should be saved, even those who do not as yet believe, if they will believe (cf. ch. 4:10; Titus 2:11). 4. "Imitate God." Since He wishes that all should be saved, do you also wish it; and if you wish it, pray for it. For prayer is the instrument of effecting such things [CHRYSOSTOM]. Our prayers ought to include all, as God's grace included all. to come—They are not forced. unto the knowledge—Greek, "the full knowledge" or "recognition" (Note, I Cor. 13:12; Phil. 1:9). the truth—the saving truth as it is in, and by, Jesus (John 17:3, 17). 5. For there is one God—God's unity in essence and purpose is a proof of His comprehending all His human children alike (created in His image) in His offer of grace (cf. the same argument from His unity, Rom. 3:30; Gal. 3:20); therefore all are to be prayed for. Verse 4 is proved from vs. 5; vs. 1, from vs. 4. The one God is common to all (Isa. 45:22; Acts 17:26). The one Mediator is mediator between God and all men potentially (Rom. 3:29; Eph. 4. 5, 6; Heb. 8:6; 9:15; 12:24). They who have not this one God by one Mediator, have none: lit., a "go-between." The Greek order is not "and one mediator," but "one mediator also between . . . . While God will have all men to be saved by knowing God and the Mediator, there is a legitimate, holy order in the exercise of that will wherewith men ought to receive it. All mankind constitute, as it were, ONE MAN before God [BENGEL]. the man—rather "man," absolutely and generically: not a mere individual man: the Second Head of humanity, rep-

1. I exhort therefore, that, first of all. Prayer for the pardon of sin and for obtaining necessary supplies of grace and continual protection from God, with gratitude and thanksgiving for mercies already received, are duties which our sinful and dependent state renders absolutely necessary; and which should be chief in our view, and first of all performed. It is difficult to know the precise difference between the four words used here by the apostle. They are sometimes distinguished thus: Supplications. Prayers for averting evils of every kind. Prayers. Prayers for obtaining the good things, spiritual and temporal, which ourselves need. Intercessions. Prayers in behalf of others. Giving of thanks. Praises to God, as the Parent of all good, for all the blessings which we and others have received. It is probable that the apostle gives directions here for public worship, and that the words may be thus paraphrased: "Now I exhort first of all that in the public assemblies deprecations of evils, and supplications for such good things as are necessary, and intercessions for their conversion, and thanksgiving for mercies be offered in behalf of all men—for heathens as well as for Christians, and for enemies as well as for friends."

2. For kings. As it is a positive maxim of Christianity to pray for all secular governors, so it has ever been the practice of Christians. That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life. We thus pray for the government that the public peace may be preserved. Good rulers have power to do much good; we pray that their authority may be ever preserved and well-directed. Bad rulers have power to do much evil; we pray that they may be prevented from thus using their power.

4. Who will have all men to be saved. Because He wills the salvation of all men, therefore He wills that all men should be prayed for. In the face of such a declaration, how can any Christian soul suppose that God ever unconditionally and eternally reprobated any man?

5. One mediator. The word mediator signifies literally a "middle person," one whose office it is to reconcile two parties at enmity; and hence Suidas explains it by "a peacemaker."

He is a ransom that was to be testified in due time. This doctrine of Christ's mediation Paul was entrusted to preach to every creature. He was commissioned particularly to preach to the Gentiles, faithfully and truly. God has a goodwill to the salvation of all; so that it is not so much the want of a will in God to save them as it is a want of will in themselves to be saved in God's way. Those who are saved must come to the knowledge of the truth.

Without knowledge the heart cannot be good; if we do not know the truth, we cannot be ruled by it. Paul was ordained a minister, to declare this to the Gentiles, that Christ is the one Mediator between God and men, who gave himself a ransom for all. Ministers must preach the truth; they are, like our apostle, to preach in faith and verity, and they must also be faithful and trusty.

III. A direction how to pray, v. 8. Men must pray everywhere: no place is amiss for prayer, no place more acceptable to God than another. Lifting up holy hands, or pure hands, pure from the pollution of sin.

We must pray in charity: Without wrath, or malice, or anger at any person. We must pray in faith without doubting, or as some read it, without disputing.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

resenting and embodying in Himself the whole human race and nature. There is no "the" in the Greek. This epithet is thus the strongest corroboration of his argument, viz., that Christ's mediation affects the whole race, since there is but the one Mediator, designed as the Representative Man for all men alike (cf. Rom. 5:15; I Cor. 8:6; II Cor. 5:19; Col. 2:14). His being "man" was necessary to His being a Mediator, sympathizing with us through experimental knowledge of our nature (Isa. 50:4; Heb. 2:14; 4:15). gave himself—(Titus 2:14). Not only the Father gave Him for us (John 3:16); but the Son gave Himself (Phil. 2:5-8). ransom—properly of a captive slave. Man was the captive slave of Satan, sold under sin. He was unable to ransom himself, because absolute obedience is due to God, and therefore no act of ours can satisfy for the least offense. Leviticus 25:48 allowed one sold captive to be redeemed by one of his brethren. The Son of God, therefore, became man in order that, being made like unto us in all things, sin only excepted, as our elder brother He should redeem us (Matt. 20:28; Eph. 1:7; I Pet. 1:18, 19). The Greek implies not merely ransom, but a substituted or equivalent ransom: the Greek preposition, "anti," implying reciprocity and vicarious substitution. for all—Greek, "in behalf of all": not merely for a privileged few; cf. vs. 1: the argument for praying in behalf of all is given here. to be testified—Greek, "the testimony (that which was to be testified of, I John 5:8-11) in its own due times," or seasons, i.e., in the times appointed by God for its being testified of (ch. 6:15; Titus 1:3). The oneness of the Mediator, involving the universality of redemption [which faith, however, alone appropriates], was the great subject of Christian testimony [ALFORD] (I Cor. 1:6; 2:1; II Thess. 1:10). 7. Whereunto—For the giving of which testimony. I am ordained—lit., "I was set": the same Greek, as "puttting me . . ." (ch. 1:12). preacher—lit., "herald" (I Cor. 1:21; 9:27; 15:11; II Tim. 1:11; Titus 1:3). He recurs to himself, as in ch. 1:16, in himself a living pattern or announcement of the Gospel, so here "a herald and teacher of (it to) the Gentiles" (Gal. 2:9; Eph. 3:1-12; Col. 1:23). The universality of his commission is an appropriate assertion here, where he is arguing to prove that prayers are to be made "for all men" (vs. 1). I speak the truth . . . and lie not—a strong asseveration of his universal commission, characteristic of the ardor of the apostle, exposed to frequent conflict (Rom. 11:1; II Cor. 11:13). in faith and verity—rather, "in the faith and the truth." The sphere in which his ministry was appointed to be exercised was the faith and the truth (vs. 4): the Gospel truth, the subject matter of the faith [WIESINGER]. 8. I will—The active wish, or desire, is meant. that men—rather as Greek, "that the men," as distinguished from "the women," to whom he has something different to say from what he said to the men (vss. 9-12; I Cor. 11:14, 15; 14:34, 35). The emphasis, however, is not on this, but on the precept of praying, resumed from vs. 1. everywhere—Greek, "in every place," viz., of public prayer. Fulfilling Malachi 1:11, "In every place . . . from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same . . . incense shall be offered unto My name"; and Jesus' words, Matthew 18:20; John 4:21, 23. lifting up holy hands—The early Christians turned up their palms towards heaven, as those craving help do. So also Solomon (I Kings 8:22; Ps. 141:2). The Jews washed their hands before prayer (Ps. 26:6). Paul figuratively (cf. Job 17:9; Jas. 4:8) uses language alluding to this custom here: so Isaiah 1:15, 16. The Greek for "holy" means hands which have committed no impiety, and observed every sacred duty. This (or at least the contrite desire to be so) is a needful qualification for effectual prayer (Ps. 24:3, 4). without wrath—putting it away (Matt. 5:23, 24; 6:15). doubting—rather, "disputing," as the Greek is translated in Philippians 2:14. Such things hinder prayer (Luke 9:46; Rom. 14:1; I Pet. 3:7). BENGEL supports English Version (cf. an instance, II Kings 7:2; Matt. 14:31; Mark 11:22-24; Jas. 1:6). 9, 10. The context requires that we understand these directions as to women, in relation to their deportment in public worship, though the rules will hold good on other occasions also. in modest apparel—"in seemly guise" [ELLICOTT]. The adjective means properly, orderly, decorous, becoming; the noun in secular writings means conduct, bearing. But here "apparel." Women are apt to love fine dress; and at Ephesus the riches of some (ch. 6:17) would lead them to dress luxuriously. The Greek in Titus 2:3 is a more general term meaning "deportment." shamefacedness—TRENCH spells this word according

6. Who gave himself a ransom. The word lytron signifies a ransom paid for the redemption of a captive; and antilytron, the word used here, and applied to the death of Christ, signifies that ransom which consists in the exchange of one person for another, or the redemption of life by life. To be testified in due time. The original words are not very clear and have been understood variously. The most authentic copies of the printed Vulgate have simply, "Thus rendering testimony at the appointed time." And this was rendered literally by our first translator: "Whos witnessinge is confermyd in his timis." This appears to be the apostle's meaning: Christ gave himself a Ransom for all. This, in the times which seemed best to the divine wisdom, was to be testified to every nation, and people, and tongue.

7. I am ordained a preacher. "I am set apart, appointed." The word does not imply any imposition of hands by either bishop or presbytery. A teacher of the Gentiles. Being specially commissioned to preach the gospel, not to the Jews, but to the "nations" of the world. In faith and verity. "Faithfully" and "truly"; preaching the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and this fervently, affectionately, and perseveringly.

8. I will therefore. Seeing the apostle had his authority from Christ, and spoke nothing but what he received from Him, his I will is equal to "I command." That men pray. That is, for the blessings promised in this testimony of God. For although God has provided them, yet He will not give them to such as will not pray. Every where. "In every place." This may refer to a Jewish superstition. They thought at first that no prayer could be acceptable that was not offered at the Temple at Jerusalem; afterward this was extended to the Holy Land. But when they became dispersed among the nations, they built oratories or places of prayer, principally by rivers and by the seaside; and in these they were obliged to allow that public prayer might be legally offered, but nowhere else. In opposition to this the apostle, by the authority of Christ, commands men to pray every where; that all places belong to God's dominions; and, as He fills every place, in every place He may be worshipped and glorified. Lifting up holy hands. It was a common custom, not only among the Jews, but also among the heathens, to "lift up" or spread out their arms and hands in prayer. It is properly the action of entreaty and request, and seems to be an effort to embrace the assistance requested. But the apostle probably alludes to the Jewish custom of laying their hands on the head of the animal which they brought for a sin offering, confessing their sins, and then giving up the life of the animal as an expiation for the sins thus confessed. And this very notion is conveyed in the original term. This shows us how Christians should pray. They should come to the altar; set God before their eyes; humble themselves for their sins; bring as a sacrifice the Lamb of God; lay their hands on this Sacrifice; and by faith offer it to God in their souls' behalf, expecting salvation through His meritorious death alone. Without wrath. Having no vindictive feeling against any person, harboring no unforgiving spirit, while they are imploring pardon for their own offenses. The holy hands refer to the Jewish custom of washing their hands before prayer; this was done to signify that they had put away all sin, and purposed to live a holy life. And doubting. "Reasonings, dialogues."

9. In like manner also. That is, he wills or commands what follows, as he had commanded what went before. With shamefacedness or "modesty." This would lead them to avoid everything unbecoming in the mode or fashion of their dress.

I. Women who profess the Christian religion shou d be modest, sober, silent, and submissive. They must be very modest in their apparel (you may read the vanity of a person's mind in the gaiety and gaudiness of his habit), because they have better ornaments with which they should adorn themselves. Good works are the best ornament. Those that profess godliness should, in their dress, as well as other things, act as becomes their profession. Women must learn the principles of their religion, learn Christ, learn the scriptures. They must be silent, submissive, and not usurp authority.

II. The extensiveness of the rules of Christianity; they reach not only to men, but to women. Women are to profess godliness as well as men, and, to their honour be it spoken, many of them were eminent professors of Christianity in the days of the apostles, as the book of Acts will inform us. The best ornaments for professors of godliness are good works. Women must be learners, and are not allowed to be public teachers in the church; the woman must not usurp authority over the man, but is to be in silence. But, notwithstanding this prohibition, good women ought to teach their children at home the principles of religion. Timothy from a child had known the holy scriptures; and who should teach him but his mother and grandmother? Two very good reasons given for the man's authority over the woman, and her subjection to the man, v. 13, 14. Here is much for her support and encouragement, v. 15. Though in sorrow, yet she shall bring forth, and be a living mother of living children.

Adam was first formed, then Eve out of him. And as she was last in the creation, so she was first in the transgression.

A word of comfort (v. 15) that those who continue in sobriety shall be saved in child-bearing, or with child-bearing. The sentence which they are under for sin shall be no bar to their acceptance with Christ.

ALBERT BARNES:

15. "Notwithstanding she shall be saved." The promise in this verse is designed to alleviate the apparent severity of the remarks just made about the condition of woman, and of the allusion to the painful facts of her early history. What the apostle had just said would carry the mind back to the period in which woman introduced sin into the world, and, by an obvious and easy association, to the sentence which had been passed on her in consequence of her trangression, and to the burden of sorrows which she was doomed to bear. By the remark in this verse, however, Paul shows that it was not his intention to overwhelm her with anguish. He did not design to harrow up her feelings by an unkind allusion to a melancholy fact in her history. It was necessary for him to state, and for her to know, that her place was secondary and subordinate, and he wished this truth ever to be kept in memory among Christians. It was not unkind or improper also to state the reasons for this opinion, and to show that her own history had demonstrated that she was not designed for headship. But she was not to be regarded as degraded and abandoned. She was not to be overwhelmed. There were consolations in her case. There was a special divine interposition which she might look for, evincing tender care on the part of God in those deep sorrows which had come upon her in consequence of her transgression; and instead of being crushed and brokenhearted, she should remember that the everlasting arms of God would sustain her in her condition of sorrow and pain. Paul, then, would speak to her the language of consolation, and while he would have her occupy her proper place, he would have her feel that God was her Friend.

to its true derivation, "shamefastness" (that which is made fast by an honorable shame); as "steadfastness" (cf. vss. 11, 12). sobriety—"self-restraint" [ALFORD]. Habitual inner self-government [TRENCH]. I prefer ELLICOTT's translation, "sober-mindedness": the well-balanced state of mind arising from habitual self-restraint. with—Greek, "in." braided hair—lit., "plaits," i.e., plaited hair: probably with the "gold and pearls" intertwined (I Pet. 3:3). Such gaud is characteristic of the spiritual harlot (Rev. 17:4). 10. professing—Greek, "promising": engaging to follow. with good works—The Greek preposition is not the same as in vs. 9; "by means of"; "through good works." Their adorning is to be effected by means of good works: not that they are to be clothed in, or with, them (Eph. 2:10). 11. learn—not "teach" (vs. 12; I Cor. 14:34). She should not even put questions in the public assembly (I Cor. 14:35). with all subjection—not "usurping authority" (vs. 12). She might teach, but not in public (Acts 18:26). Paul probably wrote this Epistle from Corinth, where the precept (I Cor. 14:34) was in force. 12. usurp authority—"to lord it over the man" [ALFORD], lit., "to be an autocrat." 13. For—reason of the precept; the original order of creation. Adam . . . first—before Eve, who was created for him (I Cor. 11:8, 9). 14. Adam was not deceived—as Eve was deceived by the serpent; but was persuaded by his wife. Genesis 3:17, "hearkened unto . . . voice of . . . wife." But in Genesis 3:13, Eve says, "The serpent beguiled me." Being more easily deceived, she more easily deceives [BENGEL], (II Cor. 11:3). Last in being, she was first in sin—indeed, she alone was deceived. The subtle serpent knew that she was "the weaker vessel." He therefore tempted her, not Adam. She yielded to the temptations of sense and the deceits of Satan; he, to conjugal love.

being deceived—The oldest MSS. read the compound Greek verb for the simple, "Having been seduced by deceit": implying how completely Satan succeeded in deceiving her. was in the transgression—Greek, "came to be in the transgression": became involved in the existing state of transgression, lit., "the going beyond a command"; breach of a positive precept (Rom. 4:15). 15. be saved in child-bearing Greek, "in (lit., through) (her lit., the) child-bearing." Through, or by, is often so used to express not the means of her salvation, but the circumstances AMIDST which it has place. Thus I Corinthians 3:15, "He . . . shall be saved: yet so as by (lit., through, i.e., amidst) fire": in spite of the fiery ordeal which he has necessarily to pass through, he shall be saved. So here, "In spite of the trial of child-bearing which she passes through (as her portion of the curse, Gen. 3:16, 'in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children'), she shall be saved." Moreover, I think it is implied indirectly that the very curse will be turned into a condition favorable to her salvation, by her faithfully performing her part in doing and suffering what God has assigned to her, viz., child-bearing and home duties, her sphere, as distinguished from public teaching, which is not hers, but man's (vss. 11, 12). In this home sphere, not ordinarily in one of active duty for advancing the kingdom of God, which contradicts the position assigned to her by God, she will be saved on the same terms as all others, viz., by living faith.

"She shall be saved ([though] with child-bearing)," i.e., though suffering her part of the primeval curse in childbearing; just as a man shall be saved, though having to bear his part, viz., the sweat of the brow. if they . . .—"if the women (plural, taken out of "the woman," vs. 14, which is put for the whole sex) continue," or more lit., "shall (be found at the judgment to) have continued." faith and charity—the essential way to salvation (ch. 1:5). Faith is in relation to God. Charity, to our fellow man. Sobriety, to one's self. sobriety—"sober-mindedness" (Note, vs. 9, as contrasted with the unseemly forwardness reproved in vs. 11). Mental receptivity and activity in family life were recognized in Christianity as the destiny of woman. One reason alleged here by Paul, is the greater danger of self-deception in the weaker sex, and the spread of errors arising from it, especially in a class of addresses in which sober reflectiveness is least in exercise [NEANDER]. The case (Acts 21:9) was doubtless in private, not in public.

ADAM CLARKE

With sobriety. Moderation would lead them to avoid all unnecessary expense. They might follow the custom or costume of the country as to the dress itself, for nothing was ever more becoming than the Grecian; but they must not imitate the extravagance of those who through impurity or littleness of mind decked themselves merely to attract the eye of admiration or set in lying action the tongue of flattery.

10. But (which becometh). That is, good works are the only ornaments with which women professing Christianity should seek to be adorned.

11. Let the woman learn in silence. That is generally supposed to be a prohibition of women's preaching. I have already said what I judge necessary on this subject in the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 5, etc., and xiv. 34-35, to which places I beg leave to refer the reader.

12. Nor to usurp authority. A woman should attempt nothing, either in public or in private, that belongs to man as his peculiar function. This was prohibited by the Roman laws.

13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And by this very act God designed that he should have the preeminence. God fitted man by the robust construction of his body to live a public life, to contend with difficulties, and to be capable of great exertions. The structure of woman's body plainly proves that she was never designed for those exertions required in public life.

14. Adam was not deceived. It does not appear that Satan attempted the man; the woman said: "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." Adam received the fruit from the hand of his wife; he knew he was transgressing; he was not deceived. However, she led the way, and in consequence of this she was subjected to the domination of her husband: "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee," Gen. iii. 16.

15. She shall be saved in childbearing. "She shall be saved through childbearing"—she shall be saved by means, or through the instrumentality, of childbearing or of bringing forth a child. There are innumerable instances of women dying in childbed who have lived in faith and charity and holiness, with sobriety; and equally numerous instances of worthless women, slaves to different kinds of vices, who have not only been saved in childbearing, but have passed through their travail with comparatively little pain. Hence that is not the sense in which we should understand the apostle. Yet it must be a matter of great consolation and support to all pious women laboring of child to consider that by the holy Virgin's childbearing salvation is provided for them and the whole human race; and that, whether they die or live, though their own childbearing can contribute nothing to their salvation, yet He who was born of a woman has purchased them and the whole human race by His blood.

If they continue. "If they live"; for so it signifies in other passages, particularly Phil. i. 25.

Timothy, we suppose, was an evangelist who was left at Ephesus. They were very loth to part with Paul, especially because he told them they should see his face no more (Acts xx. 38), and therefore Paul left Timothy with them.

I. The ministry is a work. The office of a scripture-bishop is an office of divine appointment, and not of human invention. This office of a Christian bishop is a work which requires diligence and application. Ministers should always look more to their work than to the honour and advantage of their office. It is a good work, a work of the greatest importance. The ministry is conversant about no lower concerns than the life and happiness of immortal souls. There ought to be an earnest desire of the office in those who would be put into it.

II. The workman must be duly qualified. 1. A minister must be blameless, he must not lie under any scandal. 2. He must be the husband of one wife.

3. He must be vigilant and watchful against Satan. 4. He must be sober, temperate, moderate in all his actions, and in the use of all creature-comforts. 5. He must be of good behaviour, and not light, vain, and frothy. 6. He must be given to hospitality.

7. Apt to teach, both able and willing to communicate to others the knowledge which God has given him. 8. No drunkard. 9. No striker; one who is not quarrelsome, but does everything with mildness, love, and gentleness.

Vss. 1-16. RULES AS TO BISHOPS (OVERSEERS) AND DEACONS. THE CHURCH, AND THE GOSPEL MYSTERY NOW REVEALED TO IT, ARE THE END OF ALL-SUCH RULES. 1. Translate as Greek, "Faithful is the saying." A needful preface to what follows: for the office of a bishop or overseer in Paul's day, attended as it was with hardship and often persecution, would not seem to the world generally a desirable and "good work." desire—lit., "stretch one's self forward to grasp"; "aim at": a distinct Greek verb from that for "desireth." What one does voluntarily is more esteemed than what he does when asked (I Cor. 16:15). This is utterly distinct from ambitious desires after office in the Church. (Jas. 3:1). bishop—overseer: as yet identical with "presbyter" (Acts 20:17, 28; Titus 1:5-7). good work—lit., "honorable work." Not the honor associated with it, but the work, is the prominent thought (Acts 15:38; Phil. 2:30; cf. II Tim. 4:5). He who aims at the office must remember the high qualifications needed for the due discharge of its functions. 2. The existence of Church organization and presbyters at Ephesus is presupposed (ch. 5:17, 19). The institution of Church widows (ch. 5) accords with this. The directions here to Timothy, the president or apostolic delegate, are as to filling up vacancies among the bishops and deacons, or adding to their number. New churches in the neighborhood also would require presbyters and deacons. Episcopacy was adopted in apostolic times as the most expedient form of government, being most nearly in accordance with Jewish institutions, and so offering the less obstruction through Jewish prejudices to the progress of Christianity. The synagogue was governed by presbyters, "elders" (Acts 4:8; 24:1), called also bishops or overseers. Three among them presided as "rulers of the synagogue," answering to "bishops" in the modern sense [LIGHTFOOT, Horæ.], and one among them took the lead. AMBROSE (in Amularius de Officiis, 2. 13, as also BINGHAM, Ecclesiastical Antiquities, 2. 11) says, "They who are now called bishops were originally called apostles. But those who ruled the Church after the death of the apostles had not the testimony of miracles, and were in many respects inferior. Therefore they thought it not decent to assume to themselves the name of apostles; but dividing the names, they left to presbyters the name of the presbytery, and they themselves were called bishops." "Presbyter" refers to the rank; "bishop," to the office or function. Timothy (though not having the name) exercised the power at Ephesus then, which bishops in the modern sense more recently exercised. blameless—"unexceptionable"; giving no just handle for blame. husband of one wife—confuting the celibacy of Rome's priesthood. Though the Jews practiced polygamy, yet as he is writing as to a Gentile Church, and as polygamy was never allowed among even laymen in the Church, the ancient interpretation that the prohibition here is against polygamy in a candidate bishop is not correct. It must, therefore, mean that, though laymen might lawfully marry again, candidates for the episcopate or presbytery were better to have been married only once. As in ch. 5:9, "wife of one man," implies a woman married but once; so "husband of one wife" here must mean the same. The feeling which prevailed among the Gentiles, as well as the Jews (cf. as to Anna, Luke 2:36, 37), against a second marriage would, on the ground of expediency and conciliation in matters indifferent and not involving compromise of principle, account for Paul's prohibition here in the case of one in so prominent a sphere as a bishop or a deacon. Hence the stress that is laid in the context on the repute in which the candidate for orders is held among those over whom he is to preside (Titus 1: 16).

vigilant—lit., "sober"; ever on the watch, as sober men alone can be; keenly alive, so as to foresee what ought to be done (I Thess. 5:6-8). sober—sober-minded. of good behaviour—Greek, "orderly." "Sober" refers to the inward mind; "orderly," to the outward behavior, tone, look, gait, dress. The new man bears somewhat of a sacred festival character, incompatible with all confusion, disorder, excess, violence, laxity, assumption, harshness, and meanness (Phil. 4:8) [BENGEL]. apt to teach—(II Tim. 2:24). 3. Not given to wine—The Greek includes besides this, not indulging in the brawling, violent conduct towards others, which proceeds from being given to wine. The opposite of "patient" or (Greek) "forbearing," reasonable to others (Note, Phil. 4:5). no striker—with either hand or tongue: not as some teachers pretending a holy zeal

1. This is a true saying. "This is a true doctrine." These words are joined to the last verse of the preceding chapter by several of the Greek fathers, and by them referred to the doctrine there stated. The office of a bishop. The "episcopacy, overseership, or superintendency." The word oregetai, which we translate desire, signifies "earnest, eager, passionate desire," and epithymei, which we translate desire, also signifies "earnestly to desire or covet." A good work. A work it then was—heavy, incessant, and painful. There were no unpreaching prelates in those days, and should be none now.

2. A bishop then must be blameless. Our term bishop comes from the Anglo-Saxon, which is mere corruption of the Greek episcopos, and the Latin episcopus. The former, being compounded of epi, "over," and skeptomai, to "look or inspect," signifies one who has the inspection or oversight of a place, persons, or business; what we commonly term a "superintendent." Let us consider the qualifications of a Christian bishop. First: This Christian bishop must be blameless; a person against whom no evil can be proved. The word is a metaphor, taken from the case of an expert and skillful pugilist, who so defends every part of his body that it is impossible for his antagonist to give one hit. So this Christian bishop is one that has so conducted himself as to put it out of the reach of any person to prove that he is either unsound in a single article of the Christian faith or deficient in the fulfillment of any duty incumbent on a Christian. Second: He must be the husband of one wife. He should be a married man, but he should be no polygamist; and have only one wife, i.e., one at a time. It does not mean that, if he has been married and his wife die, he should never marry another. Third: He must be vigilant; "watchful." Fourth: He must be sober; "prudent," or, according to the etymology of the word, "a man of a sound mind." Fifth: He must be of good behaviour; "orderly, decent, grave, and correct" in the whole of his appearance, carriage, and conduct. The preceding term refers to the mind; this latter, to the external manners. Sixth: He must be given to hospitality; literally, a "lover of strangers"; one who is ready to receive into his house and relieve every necessitous stranger. Hospitality in those primitive times was a great and necessary virtue; then there were few inns or places of public entertainment; to those who were noted for benevolence the necessitous stranger had recourse. A Christian bishop, professing love to God and all mankind, preaching a religion one-half of the morality of which was included in "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," would naturally be sought to by those who were in distress and destitute of friends. Seventh: He should be apt to teach; one "capable of teaching"; not only wise himself, but ready to communicate his wisdom to others. One whose delight is to instruct the ignorant and those who are out of the way. He must be a preacher; an able, zealous, fervent, and assiduous preacher.

3. An eighth article in his character is, he must not be given to wine. This word not only signifies one who is inordinately attached to wine, a winebibber or tippler, but also one who is imperious, abusive, insolent, whether through wine or otherwise. Ninth: He must be no striker; not "quarrelsome"; not ready to strike a person who may displease him; no persecutor of those who may differ from him; not prone, as one wittily said,

To prove his doctrine orthodox
By apostolic blows and knocks.

MATTHEW HENRY

10. One who is not greedy of filthy lucre, who is dead to the wealth of this world, lives above it. 11. He must be patient, and not a brawler, of a mild disposition. As not a striker with his hands, so not a brawler with his tongue. 12. Not covetous. Covetousness is bad in any, but it is worst in a minister. 13. He must be one who keeps his family in good order. The families of ministers ought to be examples of good to all other families.—With all gravity. The best way to keep inferiors in subjection, is to be grave with them. Not having his children in subjection with all austerity, but with all gravity.

14. He must not be a novice, who knows no more of religion than the surface of it, for such a one is apt to be lifted up with pride: the more ignorant men are the more proud they are.

We should take heed of pride, because it is a sin that turned angels into devils.

15. He must be of good reputation among his neighbours.

III. What great reason we have to cry out, as Paul does, Who is sufficient for these things? (2 Cor. ii. 16). What holy watchfulness is necessary in this work! Have not the most faithful and concientious ministers just reason to complain against themselves? How far short do the best come of what they should be and what they should do! Yet let those bless God, and be thankful, whom the Lord has enabled, and counted faithful. He will fit us for our work and reward our faithfulness with a crown of glory.

The character of deacons. They must be grave. Gravity becomes all Christians, but especially those who are in office in the church.

Not doubled-tongued; a double tongue comes from a double heart; flatterers and slanderers are double-tongued.

Not given to much wine; for this opens the door to many temptations. Not greedy of filthy lucre; this would especially be bad in the deacons, who were entrusted with the church's money, v. 9.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(II Cor. 11:20), answering to "not a brawler" or fighter (cf. I Kings 22:24; Neh. 13:25; Isa. 58:4; Acts 23:2; II Tim. 2:24, 25). not covetous—Greek, "not a lover of money," whether he have much or little (Titus 1:7). 4. ruleth—Greek, "presiding over." his own house—children and servants, as contrasted with "the church" (house) of God (vss. 5, 15) which he may be called on to preside over. having his children—rather as Greek, "having children (who are) in subjection" (Titus 1:6). gravity propriety: reverent modesty on the part of the children [ALFORD]. The fact that he has children who are in subjection to him in all gravity, is the recommendation in his favor as one likely to rule well the Church. 5. For—Greek, "But." the church—rather, "a church" or congregation. How shall he who cannot perform the lesser function, perform the greater and more difficult? 6. not a novice—one just converted. This proves the Church of Ephesus was established now for some time. The absence of this rule in the Epistle to Titus, accords with the recent planting of the Church at Crete. Greek, neophyte, lit., "a young plant"; luxuriantly verdant (Rom. 6:5; 11:-17; I Cor. 3:6). The young convert has not yet been disciplined and matured by afflictions and temptations. Contrast Acts 21:16, "an old disciple." lifted up with pride—Greek, lit., "wrapt in smoke," so that, inflated with self-conceit and exaggerated ideas of his own importance, he cannot see himself or others in the true light (ch. 6: 4; II Tim. 3:4). condemnation of the devil—into the same condemnation as Satan fell into (vs. 7; II Tim. 2:26). Pride was the cause of Satan's condemnation (Job 38:15; Isa. 14:12-15; John 12:31; 16:11; II Pet. 2:4; Jude 6). It cannot mean condemnation or accusation on the part of the devil. The devil may bring a reproach on men (vs. 7), but he cannot bring them into condemnation, for he does not judge, but is judged [BENGEL]. 7. a good report—Greek, "testimony." So Paul was influenced by the good report given of Timothy to choose him as his companion (Acts 16:2). of them which are without—from the as yet unconverted Gentiles around (I Cor. 5:12; Col. 4:5; I Thess. 4:12), that they may be the more readily won to the Gospel (I Pet. 2:12), and that the name of Christ may be glorified. Not even the former life of a bishop should be open to reproach [BENGEL]. reproach and the snare of the devil—reproach of men (ch. 5:14) proving the occasion of his falling into the snare of the devil (ch. 6:9; Matt. 22:15; II Tim. 2:26). The reproach continually surrounding him for former sins might lead him into the snare of becoming as bad as his reputation. Despair of recovering reputation might, in a weak moment, lead some into recklessness of living (Jer. 18:12). The reason why only moral qualities of a general kind are specified is, he presupposes in candidates for a bishopric the special gifts of the Spirit (ch. 4:14) and true faith, which he desires to be evidenced outwardly; also he requires qualifications in a bishop not so indispensable in others. 8. The deacons were chosen by the voice of the people. CYPRIAN (Epistle 2. 5) says that good bishops never departed from the old custom of consulting the people. The deacons answer to the chazzan of the synagogue: the attendant ministers, or subordinate coadjutors of the presbyter (as Timothy himself was to Paul, ch. 4:6; Philemon 13; and John Mark, Acts 13:5). Their duty was to read the Scriptures in the Church, to instruct the catechumens in Christian truths, to assist the presbyters at the sacraments, to receive oblations, and to preach and instruct. As the chazzan covered and uncovered the ark in the synagogue, containing the law, so the deacon in the ancient Church put the covering on the communion table. (See CHRYSOSTOM, 19, Homily on Acts; THEOPHYLACT on Luke 19; and BALSAMAN on Canon 22, Council of Laodicea.) The appointing of "the seven" in Acts 6 is perhaps not meant to describe the first appointment of the deacons of the Church. At least the chazzan previously suggested the similar order of deacons. double-tongued—lit., "of double-speech"; saying one thing to this person, and another to that person [THEODORET]. The extensive personal intercourse that deacons would have with the members of the Church might prove a temptation to such a fault. Others explain it, "Saying one thing, thinking another" (Prov. 20:19; Gal. 2:13). I prefer the former. not greedy of filthy lucre—All gain is filthy (lit., "base") which is set before a man as a by-end in his work for God [ALFORD] (I Pet. 5:2). The deacon's office of collecting and distributing alms would render this a necessary qualification. 9. the mystery of the faith—holding the faith, which to the natural man remains a mystery, but which has been revealed by the Spirit to them

ADAM CLARKE

Tenth: He must not be greedy of filthy lucre, "not desirous of base gain," not using base and unjustifiable methods to raise and increase his revenues, not trading or trafficking; for what would be honorable in a secular character would be base and dishonorable in a bishop. Though such a trait should never appear in the character of a Christian prelate, yet there is much reason to suspect that the words above are not authentic. They are omitted in many MSS. and by most of the Greek fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text, in which it does not appear that it ever had a legitimate place. The word covetous, which we have below, expresses all the meaning of this. Eleventh: He must be patient; "meek, gentle"; the opposite to "a quarrelsome person," which it immediately follows when the spurious word is removed. Twelfth: He must not be a brawler; not "contentious or litigious," but quiet and peaceable. Thirteenth: He must not be covetous; "not a lover of money"; not desiring the office for the sake of its emoluments.

4. The fourteenth qualification of a Christian bishop is that he ruleth well his own house, one who "properly presides over and governs his own family." One who has the command of his own house, not by sternness, severity, and tyranny, but with all gravity.

5. For if a man know not. Method is a matter of great importance in all the affairs of life. It is a true saying, "He that does little with his head must do much with his hands"; and even then the business is not half done for want of method. He who has a disorderly family has no government of that family; he probably has none because he has no method, no plan, of presiding.

6. Fifteenth: It is required that he be not a novice. Not a "young plant," not "recently ingrafted," that is, one not newly converted to the faith. One who has been of considerable standing in the Christian church, if he have the preceding qualifications, may be safely trusted with the government of that church. It is impossible that one who is not long and deeply experienced in the ways of God can guide others in the way of life. Hence presbyters or elders were generally appointed to have the oversight of the rest, and hence presbyter and bishop seem to have been two names for the same office; yet all presbyters or elders certainly were not bishops, because all presbyters had not the qualifications marked above. But the apostle gives another reason: Lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil. It is natural for man to think himself of more importance than his fellows when they are entrusted to his government. The apostle's term "puffed up, inflated," is a metaphor taken from a bladder when filled with air or wind. From these words of the apostle we are led to infer that pride or "self-conceit" was the cause of the devil's downfall.

7. The sixteenth requisite is that he should have a good report of them which are without; that he should be one who had not been previously a profligate, or scandalous in his life. Such a person, when converted, may be a worthy private member of religious society; but I believe God rarely calls such to the work of the ministry, and never to the episcopate. Them which are without are the Jews, Gentiles, and the unconverted of all kinds. Lest he fall into reproach. For his former scandalous life. And the snare of the devil. Snares and temptations such as he fell in and fell by before. This is called the snare of the devil; for as he well knows the constitution of such persons and what is most likely to prevail, he infers that what was effectual before to their transgressing may be so still; therefore on all suitable occasions he tempts them to their old sins.

8. Likewise must the deacons. The term deacon simply signifies a "regular or stated servant." As nearly the same qualifications were required in the deacons as in the bishops, the reader may consult what is said on the preceding verses. Grave. Of a sedate and dignified carriage and conduct. Not doubletongued. Speaking one thing to one person and another thing to another on the same subject. This is hypocrisy and deceit. This word might also be translated "liars." Not given to much wine.

MATTHEW HENRY

If we keep a pure conscience, this will preserve in our souls the mystery of faith, v. 10. The soundness of their judgments, their zeal for Christ, and the blamelessness of their conversation, must be proved.

Their wives likewise must have a good character (v. 11). All who are related to ministers must double their care to walk as becomes the gospel of Christ, lest the ministry be blamed.

As he said before of the bishops or ministers, so here of the deacons, they must be the husband of one wife; they must rule their children and their own houses well: the families of deacons should be examples to other families.

The reason why the deacons must be thus qualified (v. 13). In the primitive church there were but two orders of ministers or officers, bishops and deacons. The design of the deacon's office was to mind the temporal concerns of the church, such as the salaries of the ministers and providing for the poor. Integrity and uprightness in an inferior office are the way to be preferred to a higher station in the church: They purchase to themselves a good degree. This will also give a man great boldness in the faith, whereas a want of integrity and uprightness will make a man timorous.

Verses 14–16

He hoped shortly to come to him, to give him further directions and assistance in his work, and he therefore wrote the more briefly to him.

But he wrote lest he should tarry long, that Timothy might know how to behave himself in the house of God.

I. Ministers ought to behave themselves well: their office binds them to their good behaviour, for any behaviour will not do in this case. The church is the house of God, he dwells there.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(Rom. 16:25; I Cor. 2:7-10), in a pure conscience (ch. 1:5, 19). ("Pure," i.e., in which nothing base or foreign is intermixed [TITTMANN]). 10. "And moreover . . ." [ALFORD]. be proved—not by a period of probation, but by a searching inquiry, conducted by Timothy, the ordaining president (ch. 5:22), whether they be "blameless"; then when found so, "let them act as deacons." blameless—Greek, "unexceptionable"; as the result of public investigation unaccused [TITTMANN]. 11. their wives—rather, "the women," i.e., the deaconesses. For there is no reason that special rules should be laid down as to the wives of the deacons, and not also as to the wives of the bishops or overseers. Moreover, if the wives of the deacons were meant, there seems no reason for the omission of "their" (not in the Greek). Also the Greek for "even so" (the same as for "likewise," vs. 8, and "in like manner," ch. 2:9), denotes a transition to another class of persons. Further, there were doubtless deaconesses at Ephesus, such as Phœbe was at Cenchrea (Rom. 16:1, "servant," Greek, "deaconess"), yet no mention is made of them in this Epistle if not here; whereas, supposing them to be meant here, ch. 3 embraces in due proportion all the persons in the service of the Church. Naturally after specifying the qualifications of the deacon, Paul passes to those of the kindred office, the deaconess. "Grave" occurs in the case of both. "Not slanderers" here, answers to "not double-tongued" in the deacons; so "not false accusers" (Titus 2:3). "Sober" here answers to "not given to much wine," in the case of the deacons (vs. 8). Thus it appears he requires the same qualifications in female deacons as in deacons, only with such modifications as the difference of sex suggested. PLINY, in his celebrated letter to Trajan, calls them "female ministers." faithful in all things—of life as well as faith. Trustworthy in respect to the alms committed to them and their other functions, answering to "not greedy of filthy lucre," vs. 8, in the case of the deacons. 12. husbands of one wife—(Note, vs. 2). ruling their children—There is no article in the Greek, "ruling children"; implying that he regarded the having children to rule as a qualification (vs. 4; Titus 1:6). their own houses—as distinguished from "the Church of God" (Note, vs. 5). In the case of the deacons, as in that of the bishops, he mentions the first condition of receiving office, rather than the special qualifications for its discharge.

13. purchase to themselves a good degree—lit., "are acquiring . . . a . . . step." Therefore, what those who have faithfully discharged the diaconate acquire for themselves is "a good standing-place" [ALFORD] (a well-grounded hope of salvation) against the day of judgment, ch. 6:19; I Cor. 3:13, 14 (the figurative meaning of "degree" or "step," being the degree of worth which one has obtained in the eye of God [WIESINGER]); and boldness (resting on that standing-place), as well for preaching and admonishing others now (Eph. 6:19; a firm standing forth for the truth against error), as also especially in relation to God their coming Judge, before whom they may be boldly confident (Acts 24:16; I John 2:28; 3:21; 4:17; Heb. 4:16). in the faith—rather as Greek, "in faith," i.e., boldness resting on their own faith. which is in Christ Jesus—resting in Christ Jesus. 14. write I . . . hoping—i.e., "though I hope to come unto thee shortly" (ch. 4:13). As his hope was not very confident (vs. 15), he provides for Timothy's lengthened superintendence by giving him the preceding rules to guide him. He now proceeds to give more general instructions to him as an evangelist, having a "gift" committed to him (ch. 4:14). shortly—Greek, "sooner," viz., than is presupposed in the preceding directions given to him.

15. But if I tarry long—before coming to thee. that—i.e., I write (vs. 14) "that thou mayest know. . . ." behave thyself—in directing the Church at Ephesus (ch. 4:11). the house of God—the Church (Heb. 3:2, 5, 6; 10:21; I Pet. 4:17; I Cor. 3:16, "the temple of God"; Eph. 2:22). which is—i.e., inasmuch as it is. the church—"the congregation." The fact that the sphere of thy functions is "the congregation of the living God" (who is the ever living Master of the house, II Tim. 2:19, 20, 21), is the strongest motive to faithfulness in this behavior as president of a department of the house." The living God forms a striking contrast to the lifeless idol, Diana of Ephesus (I Thess. 1:9). He is the fountain of "truth," and the foundation of our "trust" (ch. 4:10). Labor directed to a particular Church is service to the one great house of God, of which each particular Church is a part, and each Christian a lively stone (I Pet. 2:5). the pillar and ground of the truth—

ADAM CLARKE

Neither a drunkard, tippler, nor what is called a "jovial companion." All this would be inconsistent with gravity.

10. Let these also first be proved. Let them not be young converts or persons lately brought to the knowledge of the truth. This is the same in spirit with what is required of the bishops, v. 6. Being found blameless. Being irreproachable; persons against whom no evil can be proved. The same as in v. 2, though a different word is used.

11. Even so must their wives be grave. I believe the apostle does not mean here the wives of either the bishops or the deacons in particular, but the Christian "women" in general. The original is simply: "Let the women likewise be grave." Whatever is spoken here becomes women in general; but if the apostle had those termed "deaconesses" in his eye, which is quite possible, the words are peculiarly suitable to them.

Not slanderers. Literally "not devils." See on v. 7. This may be properly enough translated slanderers, for all these are of their father, the devil, and his lusts they will do. Faithful in all things. The deaconesses had much to do among the poor, and especially among poor women, in dispensing the bounty of the church. They were not only faithfully to expend all they had got, and for the purpose for which they got it, but they must do this with impartiality, showing no respect of persons.

12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife. This is the same that is required of the bishops. See on vv. 2, 4-5.

13. That have used the office of a deacon well. They who, having been tried or proved, v. 10, have shown by their steadiness, activity, and zeal that they might be raised to a higher office are here said to have purchased to themselves a good degree, for instead of having to administer to the bodily wants of the poor, the faithful deacons were raised to minister in holy things; and instead of ministering the bread that perisheth, they were raised to the presbyterate or episcopate, to minister the bread of life to immortal souls. And hence the apostle adds:

And great boldness in the faith; "great liberty of speech"; i.e., in teaching the doctrines of Christianity, and in expounding the Scriptures, and preaching.

14. These things write I. That is, I write only these things, because I hope to come unto thee shortly.

15. But if I tarry long. That is, notwithstanding I hope to come to you shortly, and therefore do not feel the necessity of writing at large; yet, lest I should be delayed, I write what I judge necessary to direct your conduct in the Church of God. The house of God. This is spoken in allusion to the ancient Tabernacle, which was God's house, and in which the symbol of the Divine Majesty dwelt. So the Christian Church is God's house, and every believer is a habitation of God through the Spirit. The church of the living God. The assembly in which God lives and works; each member of which is a living stone, all of whom, properly united among themselves, grow up unto a holy temple in the Lord. The pillar and ground of the truth. To what, or to whom, does the pillar and ground of the truth refer? (1) Some say to Timothy, who is called the pillar,

MATTHEW HENRY

II. It is the great support of the church that it is the church of the living God.

1. It is the pillar and ground of truth. (1) The church itself is the pillar and ground of truth. The church holds forth the scripture and the doctrine of Christ, as the pillar to which a proclamation is affixed holds forth the proclamation. (2) Others understand it of Timothy. He as an evangelist, he and other faithful ministers, are the pillars and ground of truth; it is their business to maintain the truths of Christ in the church. Let us be diligent and impartial in our own enquiries after truth; let us buy the truth at any rate, and not think much of any pains to discover it. Let us be careful to keep and preserve it. Let us take care to publish it.

2. But what is the truth which the churches and ministers are the pillars and grounds of? He tells us (v. 16).

(1) Christianity is a mystery that could not have been found out by reason or the light of nature, because it is above reason, though not contrary thereto. It is a mystery of godliness, and herein it exceeds all the mysteries of the Gentiles.

(2) It is Christ. [1] He is God manifest in the flesh.

[2] He is justified in the Spirit. Whereas he was reproached as a sinner, and put to death as a malefactor, being raised again, he was justified in the Spirit.

[3] He was seen of angels. Angels ministered to him, for he is the Lord of angels. [4] He is preached unto the Gentiles. This is a great part of the mystery of godliness, that Christ was offered to the Gentiles a Redeemer and Saviour.

evidently predicated of the Church, not of "the mystery of godliness" (an interpretation not started till the 16th century; so BENGEL); for after two weighty predicates, "pillar and ground," and these substantives, the third, a much weaker one, and that an adjective, "confessedly," or "without controversy great," would not come. "Pillar" is so used metaphorically of the three apostles on whom principally the Jewish Christian Church depended (Gal. 2:9; cf. Rev. 3:12). The Church is "the pillar of the truth," as the continued existence (historically) of the truth rests on it; for it supports and preserves the word of truth. He who is of the truth belongs by the very fact to the Church. Christ is the alone ground of the truth in the highest sense (I Cor. 3: 11). The apostles are foundations in a secondary sense (Eph. 2:20; Rev. 21:14). The Church rests on the truth as it is in Christ; not the truth on the Church. But the truth as it is in itself is to be distinguished from the truth as it is acknowledged in the world. In the former sense it needs no pillar, but supports itself; in the latter sense, it needs the Church as its pillar, i.e., its supporter and preserver [BAUMGARTEN]. The importance of Timothy's commission is set forth by reminding him of the excellence of "the house" in which he serves; and this in opposition to the coming heresies which Paul presciently forewarns him of immediately after (ch. 4: 1).

16. And—following up vs. 15: The pillar of the truth is the Church in which thou art required to minister; "AND (that thou mayest know how grand is that truth which the Church so upholds) confessedly (so the Greek for 'without controversy') great is the mystery of godliness: (viz.) HE WHO (so the oldest MSS. and versions read for 'God') was manifested in (the) flesh (He who) was justified in the Spirit.... There is set before us the whole dignity of Christ's person. If He were not essentially superhuman (Titus 2:13), how could the apostle emphatically declare that He was manifested in (the) flesh? [TREGELLES, Printed text, Greek New Testament.] (John 1:14; Phil. 2:7; I John 1:2; 4:2.) Christ, in all His aspects, is Himself "the mystery of godliness." He who before was hidden "with God" was made manifest (John 1:1, 14; Rom. 16:25, 26; Col. 1:26; II Tim. 1:10; Titus 2:11; 3:4; I John 3:5, 8). "Confessedly," i.e., by the universal confession of the members of "the Church," which is in this respect the "pillar" or upholder "of the truth." the mystery—the divine scheme embodied in CHRIST (Col. 1:27), once hidden from, but now revealed to, us who believe. of godliness—rather, "piety"; a different Greek, expresses godliness (ch. 2:10). In opposition to the ungodliness or impiety inseparable from error (departure from the faith: "doctrines of devils," "profane fables," ch. 4:1, 7; cf. ch. 6:3). To the victims of such error, the "mystery of piety" (i.e., Christ Himself) remains a mystery unrevealed (ch. 4:2).

justified—i.e., approved to be righteous [ALFORD]. Christ, while "in the flesh," seemed to be just such a one as men in the flesh, and in fact bore their sins; but by having died to sin, and having risen again, He gained for Himself and His people justifying righteousness (Isa. 50:8; John 16:10; Acts 22:14; Rom. 4:25; 6:7, 10; Heb. 9:28; I Pet. 3:18; 4:1; I John 2:1) [BENGEL]; or rather, as the antithesis to "was manifest in the flesh" requires, He was justified in the Spirit at the same time that He was manifest in the flesh, i.e., He was vindicated as divine "in His Spirit," i.e., in His higher nature; in contrast to "in the flesh," His visible human nature. This contrasted opposition requires "in the Spirit" to be thus explained: not "by the Spirit," as ALFORD explains it. So Romans 1:3, 4, "Made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." So "justified" is used to mean vindicated in one's true character (Matt. 11:19; Luke 7:35; Rom. 3:4). seen of angels—answering to "preached unto the Gentiles" (or rather "among the nations"; including the Jews), on the other hand (Matt. 28:19; Rom. 16:25, 26). "Angels saw the Son of God with us, not having seen Him before" [CHRYSOSTOM]: "not even they had seen His divine nature, which is not visible to any creature, but they saw Him incarnate" [THEODORET](Eph. 3:8, 10; I Pet. 1:12; cf. Col. 1:16, 20). What angels came to know by seeing, the nations learned by preaching. He is a new message to the one class as well as to the other; in the wondrous union in His person of things most opposite, viz., heaven and earth, lies "the mystery" [WIESINGER]. If the English Version, "Gentiles," be retained, the antithesis will be between the angels who are so near the Son of God, the Lord of angels, and the Gentiles because left there to support and defend the truth of God against false doctrines and false teachers; and is so called for the same reason that Peter, James, and John are said to be "pillars," i.e., supporters of the truth of God, Gal. ii. 9. (2) Others suppose that the pillar and ground of the truth is spoken of God, and that "who is" should be supplied as referring immediately to God, just before. (3) Others think that the words should be understood of the church of the living God. That is: The full revelation of God's truth is in the Christian Church.

16. And without controversy. "And confessedly, by general consent," it is a thing which no man can or ought to dispute; any phrase of this kind expresses the meaning of the original.

God was manifest in the flesh. Instead of God, several MSS., versions, and fathers have "who" or "which." And this is generally referred to the word mystery; "Great is the mystery of godliness, which was manifest in the flesh."

Justified in the Spirit. By the miracles which were wrought by the apostle in and through the name of Jesus, as well as by His resurrection from the dead, through the energy of the Holy Ghost, by which He was proved to be the Son of God with power. Christ was justified from all the calumnies of the Jews, who crucified Him as an impostor.

Seen of angels. By angeloi here, some understand not those celestial or infernal beings commonly called angels, but apostles and other persons who became "messengers," to carry far and wide and attest the truth of His resurrection from the dead. If, however, we take the word seen, in its Jewish acceptation, for "made known," we may here retain the term angels in its common acceptation. For it is certain that previously to our Lord's ascension to heaven these holy beings could have little knowledge of the necessity, reasons, and economy of human salvation; nor of the nature of Christ as God and man. Peter informs us that the "angels desire to look into" these things, 1 Pet. i. 12. And Paul says the same thing, Eph. iii. 9-10. Preached unto the Gentiles. This was one grand part of the mystery which had been hidden in God, that the Gentiles should be made fellow heirs with the Jews and be admitted into the kingdom of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

[5] He was believed on in the world. Who would have thought that the world, which lay in wickedness, would believe in the Son of God, would take him to be their Saviour who was himself crucified at Jerusalem? [6] He was received up into glory. It is not only his ascension that is meant, but his sitting at the right hand of God, where he ever lives. He who was manifest in flesh was God, really and truly God. This makes it to be a mystery. Godliness is a mystery in all its parts and branches. It being a great mystery, we should rather humbly adore it, than curiously pry into it.

A prophecy of the apostasy of the latter times.

I. The prophecies concerning antichrist, as well as the prophecies concerning Christ, came from the Spirit. Some shall depart from the faith, an apostasy from the faith. Some, not all; for in the worst of times God will have a remnant.

1. One of the great instances of the apostasy, giving heed to doctrines of demons, or concerning demons.

2. The instruments of promoting and propagating this apostasy and delusion. It will be done by hypocrisy of those that speak lies, v. 2, who have their consciences seared with a red-hot iron, who are perfectly lost to the very first principles of virtue and moral honesty.

Another part of their character is that they forbid to marry, and that they command to abstain from meats, and place religion in such abstinence at certain times and seasons.

3. The apostasy of the latter times should not surprise us, because it was expressly foretold by the Spirit. The Spirit speaks expressly, but the oracles of the heathen were always doubtful and uncertain. In such general apostasies all are not carried away, but only some. Men must be hardened, and their consciences seared, before they can depart from the faith, and draw in others to side with them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

who were so utterly "afar off" (Eph. 2:17). believed on in the world—which lieth in wickedness (I John 2:15; 5:19). Opposed to "glory" (John 3:16, 17). This followed upon His being "preached" (Rom. 10:14). received up into glory—Greek, "in glory." However, English Version may be retained thus, "Received up (so as now to be) in glory," i.e., into glory (Mark 16:19; Luke 24:51; Acts 1:11). His reception in heaven answers to His reception on earth by being "believed on."

VSS. 1-16. PREDICTION OF A COMING DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH: TIMOTHY'S DUTY AS TO IT: GENERAL DIRECTIONS TO HIM. The "mystery of iniquity" here alluded to, and already working (II Thess. 2: 7), stands opposed to the "mystery of godliness" just mentioned (I Timothy 3:16). 1. Now—Greek, "But." In contrast to the "mystery of godliness." the Spirit—speaking by the prophets in the Church (whose prophecies rested on those of the Old Testament, Dan. 7:25; 8:23, etc.; 11:30, as also on those of Jesus in the New Testament, Matt. 24:11-24), and also by Paul himself, II Thessalonians 2:3 (with whom accord II Pet. 3:3; I John 2:18; Jude 18). expressly—"in plain words." This shows that he refers to prophecies of the Spirit then lying before him. in the latter times—in the times following upon the times in which he is now writing. Not some remote future, but times immediately subsequent, the beginnings of the apostasy being already discernible (Acts 20:29): these are the forerunners of "the last days" (II Tim. 3:1). depart from the faith—The apostasy was to be within the Church, the faithful one becoming the harlot.

giving heed—(ch. 1:4; Titus 1:14). seducing spirits—working in the heretical teachers. I John 4:2, 3, 6, "the spirit of error," opposed to "the spirit of truth," "the Spirit" which "speaketh" in the true prophets against them. doctrines of devils—lit., "teachings of (i.e. suggested by) demons." James 3:15, "wisdom . . . devilish"; II Corinthians 11:15, "Satan's ministers." 2. Rather translate, "Through (lit., 'in'; the element in which the apostasy has place) the hypocrisy of lying speakers"; this expresses the means through which "some shall (be led to) depart from the faith," viz., the feigned sanctity of the seducers (cf. "deceivers," Titus 1:10). having their conscience seared—Greek, "having their own conscience . . ., i.e., not only "speaking lies" to others, but also having their own conscience seared. Professing to lead others to holiness, their own conscience is all the while defiled. Bad consciences always have recourse to hypocrisy. As faith and a good conscience are joined (ch. 1:5); so hypocrisy (i.e., unbelief, Matt. 24:5, 51; cf. Luke 12:46) and a bad conscience here. THEODORET explains like English Version, "seared," as implying their extreme insensibility; the effect of cauterizing being to deaden sensation. The Greek, however, primarily means "branded" with the consciousness of crimes committed against their better knowledge and conscience, like so many scars burnt in by a branding-iron. Cf. Titus 1:15; 3:11, "condemned of himself." 3. Sensuality leads to false spiritualism. Their own inward impurity is reflected in their eyes in the world without them, and hence their asceticism (Titus 1:14, 15) [WIESINGER]. By a spurious spiritualism (II Tim. 2:18), which made moral perfection consist in abstinence from outward things, they pretended to attain to a higher perfection. Austerity gained for them a show of sanctity while preaching false doctrine (Col. 2:23). EUSEBIUS (Ecclesiastical History, 4. 29) quotes from IRENÆUS (1. 28) a statement that Saturninus, Marcion, and the Encratites preached abstinence from marriage and animal meats. Paul prophetically warns against such notions, the seeds of which already were being sown (ch. 6:20; II Tim. 2:17, 18). to be received—Greek, "to be partaken of." of them—lit., (created and designed) "for them," Though all (even the unbelieving, Ps. 104:14; Matt. 5:45) are partakers in these foods created by God, "they which believe" alone fulfil God's design in creation by partaking of them with thanksgiving; as opposed to those who abstain from them, or in partaking of them, do not do so with thanksgiving. The unbelieving have not the designed use of such foods by reason of their "conscience being defiled" (Titus 1:15). The children of God alone "inherit the earth"; for obedience is the necessary qualification (as it was in the original grant of the earth to Adam), which they Believed on in the world. Was received by mankind as the promised Messiah, the Anointed of God, and the only Saviour of fallen man. Received up into glory. Even that human nature which He took of the Virgin Mary was not only raised from the grave but taken up into glory. His reception into glory is of the utmost consequence to the Christian faith; as, in consequence, Jesus Christ in His human nature ever appears before the throne as our Sacrifice and as our Mediator.

1. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly. "Manifestly, openly." It is very likely that the apostle refers here to a prophecy then furnished by the Holy Ghost, and probably immediately after he had written the words in the preceding verses; and as this prophecy contains things nowhere else spoken of in the sacred writings and of the utmost moment to the Christian Church, we cannot hear or read them with too much reverence or respect.

In the latter times. This does not necessarily imply the last ages of the world, but any times consequent to those in which the Church then lived. Depart from the faith. They will "apostatize" from the faith, i.e., from Christianity; renouncing the whole system in effect, by bringing in doctrines which render its essential truths null and void, or denying and renouncing such doctrines as are essential to Christianity as a system of salvation. A man may hold all the truths of Christianity, and yet render them of none effect by holding other doctrines which counteract their influence; or he may apostatize by denying some essential doctrine, though he bring in nothing heterodox. Giving heed to seducing spirits. Pretenders to inspiration and false teachers of every kind belong to this class. And doctrines of devils. "Demons."

2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy. Persons pretending, not only to divine inspiration, but also to extraordinary degrees of holiness, self-denial, mortification, in order to accredit the lies and false doctrines which they taught. Having their conscience seared with a hot iron. They bear the marks of their hypocrisy as evidently and as indelibly in their conscience in the sight of God as those who have been cauterized for their crimes do in their bodies in the sight of men. It was customary in ancient times to mark those with a hot iron who had been guilty of great crimes, such as sacrilege.

3. Forbidding to marry. These hypocritical priests pretending that a single life was much more favorable to devotion and to the perfection of the Christian life. This sentiment was held by the Essenes, a religious sect among the Jews; and we know that it is a favorite opinion among the Romanists, who oblige all their clergy to live a single life by a vow of continency. To abstain from meats. Both among the heathens, Jews, and Romanists, certain meats were prohibited; some always, others at particular times. This the apostle informs us was directly contrary to the original design of God, and says that those who know the truth know this.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The apostle takes occasion to lay down the doctrine of the Christian liberty,—that, whereas under the law there was a distinction of meats between clean and unclean, all this is now taken away. We are to look upon our food as that which God has created; we have it from him, and therefore must use it for him. We must not refuse the gifts of God's bounty, nor be scrupulous in making differences where God has made none; but receive them, and be thankful, v. 4. God's good creatures are then good, and doubly sweet to us, when they are received with thanksgiving, v. 5. It is a desirable thing to have a sanctified use of our creature-comforts. Now they are sanctified to us: By the word of God. By prayer, which blesses our meat to us. Every creature is God's, for he made all. Every creature of God is good. The blessing of God makes every creature nourishing to us, and therefore nothing ought to be refused. We ought therefore to sanctify the creatures we receive by prayer.

Verses 6–16

The apostles reckoned it a main part of their work to put their hearers in remembrance; for we are apt to forget, and slow to learn and remember, the things of God. The best way for ministers to grow in knowledge and faith is to put the brethren in remembrance; while we teach others, we teach ourselves.

I. Godliness is here pressed upon him and others, v, 7, 8. Those who would be godly must exercise themselves unto godliness; it requires a constant exercise. What will it avail us to mortify the body if we do not mortify sin? There is a great deal to be got by godliness. The promises made to godly people relate to the life that now is, but especially they relate to the life that is to come. If godly people have but little of the good things of the life that now is, yet it shall be made up to them in the good things of the life that is to come. It is not enough that we refuse profane and old wives' fables, but we must exercise ourselves to godliness.

II. The encouragement which we have to proceed in the ways of godliness (v. 8). Will the profit balance the loss?

alone possess. and know the truth—explanatory and defining who are "they which believe." Translate as Greek, "and have full knowledge of the truth" (Note, Phil. 1:9). Thus he contradicts the assumption of superior knowledge and higher moral perfection, put forward by the heretics, on the ground of their abstinence from marriage and meats. "The truth" stands in opposition to their "lies" (vs. 2). 4, 5. Translate as Greek, "Because" (expressing a reason resting on an objective fact; or, as here, a Scripture quotation)—"For" (a reason resting on something subjective in the writer's mind). every creature . . . good—(Gen. 1:31; Rom. 14:14, 20). A refutation by anticipation of the Gnostic opposition to creation: the seeds of which were now lurking latently in the Church. Judaism (Acts 10: 11-16; I Cor. 10:25, 26) was the starting-point of the error as to meats: Oriental Gnosis added new elements. The old Gnostic heresy is now almost extinct; but its remains in the celibacy of Rome's priesthood, and in its fasts from animal meats, enjoined under the penalty of mortal sin, remain. if . . . with thanksgiving—Meats, though pure in themselves, become impure by being received with an unthankful mind (Rom. 14:6; Titus 1:15). 5. sanctified—"hallowed"; set apart as holy for the use of believing men: separated from "the creature," which is under the bondage of vanity and corruption (Romans 8:19, etc.). word of God and prayer—i.e., "by means of intercessory prayer" (so the Greek)—i.e., consecratory prayer in behalf of "the creature" or food—that prayer mainly consisting of "the word of God." 6. If thou put . . . in remembrance—rather as Greek, "If thou suggest to (bring under the notice of) the brethren. . . ." these things—viz., the truths stated in vss. 4, 5, in opposition to the errors foretold, vss. 1-3. minister—"servant." nourished up—The Greek is present, not past: "continually being nourished in" (II Tim. 1:5; 3:14, 15). the words of faith—rather, ". . . of the faith" (cf. vs. 12). good doctrine—"the good teaching." Explanatory of "the faith," in opposition to the "teachings of demons" (English Version, "doctrines of devils," vs. 1) which Timothy was to counteract. Cf. "sound doctrine" (ch. 1:10; 6:3; Titus 1:9; 2:1). whereunto thou hast attained—"the course of which thou hast followed"; hast followed along by tracing its course and accompanying it [ALFORD]. Thou hast begun to follow up [BENGEL]. The same Greek occurs, "thou hast fully known" (II Tim. 3: 10), "having had perfect understanding" (Luke 1: 3). It is an undesigned coincidence that the Greek verb is used only by Paul and Paul's companion, Luke. 7. refuse—reject, avoid, have nothing to do with (II Tim. 2:23; Titus 3:10.) old wives' fables—anile myths (ch. 1:4, 9; Titus 1:14). They are "profane," because leading away from "godliness" or "piety" (ch. 1:4-7; 6:20; II Tim. 2:16; Titus 1:1, 2). exercise thyself—lit., "exercise thyself" as one undergoing training in a gymnasium. Let thy self-discipline be not in ascetical exercises as the false teachers (vss. 3, 8; cf. II Tim. 2:22, 23; Heb. 5:14; 12:11), but with a view to godliness or "piety" (ch. 6:11, 12). 8. profiteth little—Greek, "profiteth to (but) a small extent." Paul does not deny that fasting and abstinence from conjugal intercourse for a time, with a view to reaching the inward man through the outward, do profit somewhat, Acts 13: 3; I Corinthians 7:5, 7; 9:26, 27 (though in its degenerate form, asceticism, dwelling solely on what is outward, vs. 3, is not only not profitable but injurious). Timothy seems to have had a leaning to such outward self-discipline (cf. ch. 5:23). Paul, therefore, while not disapproving of this in its due proportion and place, shows the vast superiority of godliness or piety, as being profitable not merely "to a small extent," but unto all things; for, having its seat within, it extends thence to the whole outward life of a man.

having promise . . .—Translate as Greek, "Having promise of life, that which now is, and that which is to come." "Life" in its truest and best sense now and hereafter (II Tim. 1:1). Length of life now so far as it is really good for the believer; life in its truest enjoyments and employments now, and life blessed and eternal hereafter (Matt. 6:33; Mark 10:29, 30). "Now in this time" (Ps. 84:11; 112: Rom. 8:28; I Cor. 3:21, 22, "all things are yours . . . the world, life . . . things present, things to come"). Christianity, which seems to aim only at our happiness hereafter, effectually promotes it here (ch. 6:6; II Pet. 1:3). Cf. Solomon's prayer and the answer (I Kings 3:7-13). 9. (Ch. 1:15.) This verse (Greek), "faithful is the saying . . ." confirms the assertion as to the "promise" attached to "godliness," vs. 8, and forms a prefatory introduction to vs. 10, which is joined to vs. 9 by "For." So II

4. For every creature of God is good. That is, every creature which God has made for man's nourishment is good for that purpose, and to be thankfully received whenever necessary for the support of human life; and nothing of that sort is at any time to be refused, "rejected or despised."

5. For it is sanctified by the word of God. "By the command of God"; probably referring to Gen. i. 29: "And God said . . . I have given you every herb . . . and every tree . . . to you it shall be for meat"; and to chap. ix. 3: "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things"; i.e., I have given you every animal that is proper for food, as I have given you every herb and fruit proper for nourishment. Therefore all this was sanctified, "set apart," and appropriated to this use by this command. And when man is about to use it, he is to sanctify or set it apart to that use by prayer to God.

6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things. Show the church that even now there is danger of this apostasy; put them on their guard against it, for the forewarned are half armed. Nourished up in the words of faith. By acting as I command you, you will show that you are a good minister of Jesus Christ, and that you have been nourished from your youth up in the doctrines of faith. The apostle seems to allude here to Timothy's Christian education. Whereunto thou hast attained. Which you have "thoroughly understood."

7. But refuse profane and old wives' fables. This seems to refer particularly to the Jews, whose Talmudical writings are stuffed with the most ridiculous and profane fables that ever disgraced the human intellect. It may with equal propriety be applied to the legends of the Romish church. Exercise thyself rather unto godliness. To understand this expression it is necessary to know that the apostle alludes here to the gymnastic exercises among the Greeks, which were intended as a preparation for their contests at the public games.

8. For bodily exercise profiteth little. Those gymnastic exercises, so highly esteemed among the Greeks, are but little worth; they are but of short duration; they refer only to this life, and to the applause of men. But godliness has the promise of this life and the life to come; it is profitable for all things, and for both time and eternity. But godliness is profitable unto all things. By godliness we are to understand everything that the Christian religion either promises or prescribes: the life of God in the soul of man and the glory of God as the object and end of that life. Having promise of the life that now is. The man that fears, loves, and serves God has God's blessing all through life. His religion saves him from all those excesses in both action and passion which sap the foundations of life and render existence itself often a burden. The peace and love of God in the heart produce a serenity and calm which cause the lamp of life to burn clear, strong, and permanent.

MATTHEW HENRY

Here is another of Paul's faithful sayings, worthy of all acceptation—that all our labours and losses in the service of God will be abundantly recompenced, so that though we lose for Christ we shall not lose by him, v. 10.

1. Toil and trouble are to be expected by us in this world, not only as men, but as saints.

2. Those who labour and suffer reproach in the service of God may depend upon the living God that they shall not lose by it. Let this encourage them. He is the Saviour of all men. Now, if he be thus the Saviour of all men, we may hence infer that much more he will be the rewarder of those who seek and serve him. The salvation he has in store for those that believe is sufficient to recompence them for all their services and sufferings. The life of a Christian is a life of labour and suffering: We labour and suffer. The best we can expect to suffer in the present life is reproach for our well-doing, for our work of faith and labour of love.

III. An exhortation to Timothy,

1. To command and teach these things that he had now been teaching him.

2. To conduct himself with that gravity and prudence which might gain him respect, notwithstanding his youth. Men's youth will not be despised if they do not by youthful vanities and follies make themselves despicable; and this men may do who are old, who may therefore thank themselves if they be despised.

3. To confirm his doctrine by a good example. Those who teach by their doctrine must teach by their life, else they pull down with one hand what they build up with the other.

4. He charges him to study hard, v. 13. Though Timothy had extraordinary gifts, yet he must use ordinary means. Or it may be meant of the public reading of the scriptures; he must read and exhort. He must teach them both what to do and what to believe. The best way for ministers to avoid being despised is to teach and practise the things that are given them in charge. Those ministers that are the best accomplished for their work must yet mind their studies, and they must mind also their work.

5. He charges him to beware of negligence, v. 14. The gifts of God will wither if they be neglected.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Timothy 2:11. Godly men seem to suffer loss as to this life: Paul hereby refutes the notion [BENGEL]. "God is the Saviour specially of those that believe" (vs. 10), both as to "the life that now is," and also as to "the life which is to come" (vs. 8). 10. therefore—Greek, "with a view to this." The reason why "we both ('both' is omitted in the oldest MSS.) labor (endure hardship) and suffer reproach (some oldest MSS. read 'strive') is because we have rested, and do rest our hope, on the living (and therefore, life-giving, vs. 8) God." Saviour—even in this life (vs. 8). specially of those that believe—Their "labor and reproach" are not inconsistent with their having from the living God, their Saviour, even the present life (Mark 10:30, "a hundred fold now in this time . . . with persecutions"), much more the life to come. If God is in a sense "Saviour" of unbelievers (ch. 2:4, i.e., is willing to be so everlastingly, and is temporally here their Preserver and Benefactor), much more of believers. He is the Saviour of all men potentially (ch. 1:15); of believers alone effectually. 11. These truths, to the exclusion of those useless and even injurious teachings (vss. 1-8), while weighing well thyself, charge also upon others.

12. Let no man despise thy youth—Act so as to be respected in spite of thy youth (I Cor. 16:11; Titus 2:15); cf. "youthful" as to Timothy (II Tim. 2:22). He was but a mere youth when he joined Paul (Acts 16:1-3). Eleven years had elapsed since then to the time subsequent to Paul's first imprisonment. He was, therefore, still young; especially in comparison with Paul, whose place he was filling; also in relation to elderly presbyters whom he should "entreat as a father" (ch. 5:1), and generally in respect to his duties in rebuking, exhorting, and ordaining (ch. 3:1), which ordinarily accord best with an elderly person (ch. 5:19). be thou an example—Greek, "become a pattern" (Titus 2:7); the true way of making men not to despise (slight, or disregard) thy youth. in word—in all that thou sayest in public and private. conversation—i.e., "behavior" the Old English sense of the word. in charity . . . faith—the two cardinal principles of the Christian (Gal. 5:6). The oldest MSS. omit, "in spirit."

in purity—simplicity of holy motive followed out in consistency of holy action [ALFORD] (ch. 5:22; II Cor. 6:6; Jas. 3:17; 4:8; I Pet. 1:22). 13. Till I come—when Timothy's commission would be superseded for the time by the presence of the apostle himself (ch. 1:3; 3:14). reading—especially in the public congregation. The practice of reading Scripture was transferred from the Jewish synagogue to the Christian Church (Luke 4:16-20; Acts 13:15; 15:21; II Cor. 3:14). The New Testament Gospel and Epistles being recognized as inspired by those who had the gift of discerning spirits, were from the first, according as they were written, read along with the Old Testament in the Church (I Thess. 5:21, 27; Col. 4:16), [JUSTIN MARYTR, Apology, 1. 67]. I think that while public reading is the prominent thought, the Spirit intended also to teach that Scripture reading in private should be "the fountain of all wisdom from which pastors ought to draw whatever they bring before their flock" [ALFORD]. exhortation—addressed to the feelings and will with a view to the regulation of the conduct. doctrine—Greek (ministerial), "teaching" or instruction. Addressed to the understanding, so as to impart knowledge (ch. 6:2; Rom. 12:7, 8). Whether in public or private, exhortation and instruction should be based on Scripture reading. 14. Neglect not the gift—by letting it lie unused. In II Timothy 1:6 the gift is represented as a spark of the Spirit lying within him, and sure to smoulder by neglect, the stirring up or keeping in lively exercise of which depends on the will of him on whom it is bestowed (Matt. 25:18, 25, 27, 28). The charism or spiritual gift, is that of the Spirit which qualified him for "the work of an evangelist" (Eph. 4:11; II Tim. 4:5), or perhaps the gift of discerning spirits, specially needed in his function of ordaining, as overseer [BISHOP HINDS].

ADAM CLARKE

10. For therefore we both labour. This verse was necessary to explain what he had before said; and here he shows that his meaning was not that the followers of God should enjoy worldly prosperity and exemption from natural evils; for it is because we exercise ourselves to godliness that we have both labor and reproach, and we have these because we trust in the living God. But still we have mental happiness, and all that is necessary for our passage through life; for in the midst of persecutions and afflictions we have the peace of God that passeth knowledge, and have all our crosses and sufferings so sanctified to us that we consider them in the number of our blessings. Who is the Saviour of all men. Who has provided salvation for the whole human race, and has freely offered it to them in His Word and by His Spirit. Specially of those that believe. What God intends for all He actually gives to them that believe in Christ.

11. These things command and teach. Let it be the sum and substance of your preaching that true religion is profitable for both worlds, that vice destroys both body and soul, that Christ tasted death for every man, and that He saves to the uttermost all them that believe in His name.

12. Let no man despise thy youth. Act with all the gravity and decorum which become your situation in the Church. As you are in the place of an elder, act as an elder. Be thou an example of the believers. It is natural for the flock to follow the shepherd; if he go wrong, they will go wrong also. In word. "In doctrine"; teach nothing but the truth of God, because nothing but that will save souls. In conversation. In the whole of your "conduct" in every department which you fill in all your domestic as well as public relations. In charity. "In love" to God and man; show that this is the principle and motive of all your conduct. In spirit. In the "manner" and "disposition" in which you do all things. These words are wanting in some MSS. They have in all probability been added by a later hand. In faith. This word is probably taken here for "fidelity," a sense which it often bears in the New Testament. It cannot mean doctrine, for that has been referred to before. Be faithful to your trust, to your flock, to your domestics, to the public, to your God. "Fidelity" consists in honestly keeping, preserving, and delivering up when required, whatever is intrusted to our care; as also in improving whatever is delivered in trust for that purpose. Lose nothing that God gives, and improve every gift that He bestows. In purity. "Chastity" of body and mind; a direction peculiarly necessary for a young minister, who has more temptations to break its rules than perhaps any other person. "Converse sparingly with women, and especially with young women," was the advice of a very holy and experienced minister of Christ.

13. Give attendance to reading. Timothy could easily comprehend the apostle's meaning, but at present this is not so easy. What books does the apostle mean? The books of the Old Testament were probably what he intended; these testified of Jesus, and by these he could either convince or confound the Jews. But was the reading of these to be public or private? Probably both. It was customary to read the law and the prophets in the synagogue, and doubtless in the assemblies of the Christians, after which there was generally an exhortation founded upon the subject of the prophecy. Hence the apostle says: Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Timothy was therefore to be diligent in reading the sacred writings at home, that he might be the better qualified to read and expound them in the public assemblies to the Christians and to others who came to these public meetings.

14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee. The word here must refer to the "gifts" and "graces" of the divine Spirit, which Timothy received when set apart to the work of an evangelist by the imposition of Paul's hands, 2 Tim. i. 6, and by that of the presbytery or eldership. For it most evidently appears from this verse and that above quoted that he received this double imposition, not probably at different times, but on one and the same occasion. These very gifts and graces might be improved; and we

Here see the scripture-way of ordination: it was by the laying on of hands, and the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. The office of the ministry is a gift, it is the gift of Christ, and this was a very kind gift to his church. Ministers ought not to neglect the gift bestowed upon them, whether the office of the ministry or the qualifications for that office.

6. Having this work committed to him, he must give himself wholly to it, and make it appear that he improved in knowledge. Ministers are to be much in meditation. They are to meditate on the great trust committed to them. Ministers must be wholly in these things. By this means their profiting will appear in all things.

7. He presses it upon him to be very cautious. This will be the way to save thyself, and those that hear thee. "Save thyself in the first place, so shalt thou be instrumental to save those that hear thee." The best way to answer both these ends is to take heed to ourselves.

given thee —by God (I Cor. 12:4, 6). by prophecy—i.e., by the Holy Spirit, at his general ordination, or else consecration, to the special see of Ephesus, speaking through the prophets God's will to give him the graces needed to qualify him for his work (ch. 1:18; Acts 13:1-3). with . . . laying on of . . . hands—So in Joshua's case (Num. 27:18-20; Deut. 34:9). The gift was connected with the symbolical act of laying on hands. But the Greek "with" implies that the presbyter's laying on hands was the mere accompaniment of the conferring of the gift. "By" (II Tim. 1:6) implies that Paul's laying on his hands was the actual instrument of its being conferred. of the presbytery—In II Timothy 1:6 the apostle mentions only his own laying on of hands. But there his aim is to remind Timothy specially of the part he himself took in imparting to him the gift. Here he mentions the fact, quite consistent with the other, that the neighboring presbyters took part in the ordination or consecration, he, however, taking the foremost part. 15. Meditate—Greek, "Meditate CAREFULLY upon" (Ps. 1:2; 119:15; cf. "Isaac," Gen. 24:63). these things—(vss. 12-14). As food would not nourish without digestion, which assimilates the food to the substance of the body, so spiritual food, in order to benefit us, needs to be appropriated by prayerful meditation. give thyself wholly to—lit., "BE in these things"; let them engross thee wholly; be wholly absorbed in them. Entire selfdedication, as in other pursuits, so especially in religion, is the secret of proficiency. There are changes as to all other studies, fashionable today, out of fashion tomorrow; this study alone is never obsolete, and when made the all-engrossing aim sanctifies all other studies. The exercise of the ministry threatens the spirit of the ministry, unless it be sustained within. The minister must be first his own scholar before he can be another's teacher. profiting—Greek, "progress" towards perfection in the Christian life, and especially towards the fullest realization of the ideal of a Christian minister (vs. 12). may appear to all—not for thy glory, but for the winning of souls (Matt. 5:16). 16. Take heed—Give heed (Acts 3:5). thyself, and . . . doctrine—"and unto thy teaching." The two requisites of a good pastor: His teaching will be of no avail unless his own life accord with it; and his own purity of life is not enough unless he be diligent in teaching [CALVIN]. This verse is a summary of vs. 12. continue in them—(II Tim. 3:14). in doing this—not "by doing this," as though he could save himself by works. thou shalt . . . save thyself, and them . . .—(Ezek. 33:9; Jas. 5:20). In performing faithfully his duty to others, the minister is promoting his own salvation. Indeed he cannot "give heed unto the teaching" of others, unless he be at the same time "giving heed unto himself."

have reason to believe if not improved would be withdrawn by the great Head of the Church. Given thee by prophecy. It has already been conjectured that there had been some remarkable prediction relative to the future destiny and usefulness of Timothy. And probably it was in consequence of this that he was set apart to the office of evangelist and bishop in the church at Ephesus.

15. Meditate upon these things. Revolve them frequently in your mind; consider deeply their nature and importance; get them deeply fastened in your heart, and let all your conduct flow from this inward feeling and conviction. Give thyself wholly to them. "Be thou in these things." Occupy yourself wholly with them; make them not only your chief but your sole concern. You are called to save your own soul and the souls of them that hear you, and God has given you the divine gifts for this and no other purpose. To this let all your reading and study be directed; this is your great business, and you must perform it as the servant and steward of the Lord.

That thy profiting may appear to all. By being made a universal blessing, convincing and converting sinners, and building up the Church of God on its most holy faith.

16. Take heed unto thyself. See that the life of God remains and the work of God prospers in your own soul. Take heed . . . unto the doctrine, that the matter be pure and orthodox; that you teach nothing for truth but what God has revealed. Continue in them. I.e., in taking heed to yourself and to your doctrine, for this must be your continual study.

Ministers are reprovers by office; it is a part, though the least pleasing part, of their office. Be very tender in rebuking elders. Respect must be had to the dignity of their years and place. The younger must be rebuked as brethren, with love and tenderness. There is need of a great deal of meekness in reproving those who deserve reproof.

The elder women must be reproved, as mothers. The younger women must be reproved, but reproved as sisters, with all purity.

Verses 3–16

The general rule is to honour widows that are widows indeed, to maintain them, to relieve them with respect and tenderness.

II. The church should not be charged with the maintenance of those widows who had relations of their own that were able to maintain them (v. 4).

CHAPTER 5

VSS. 1-25. GENERAL DIRECTIONS AS TO HOW TIMOTHY SHOULD DEAL WITH DIFFERENT CLASSES IN THE CHURCH. 1. an elder—in age; probably not an elder in the ministry; these latter are not mentioned till vs. 17, "the elders that rule." Cf. Acts 2:17, "your old men," lit., "elders." Contrasted with "the younger men." As Timothy was admonished so to conduct himself as to give no man reason to despise his youth (ch. 4:12); so here he is told to bear in mind his youth, and to behave with the modesty which becomes a young man in relation to his elders. Rebuke not—lit., "Strike not hard upon"; Rebuke not sharply: a different word from "rebuke" in II Timothy 4:2. entreat—exhort. as brethren—and therefore equals; not lording it over them (I Pet. 5:1-3). 2. with all purity—respectful treatment of the other sex will promote "purity." 3. Honour—by setting on the church roll, as fit objects of charitable sustenance (vss. 9, 17, 18; Acts 6:1). So "honor" is used for support with necessaries (Matt. 15:4, 6; Acts 28:10). widows indeed —(vs. 16). Those really desolate; not like those (vs. 4) having children or relations answerable for their support, nor like those (in vs. 6) "who live in pleasure"; but such as, from their earthly desolation as to friends, are most likely to trust wholly in God, persevere in continual prayers, and carry out the religious duties assigned to Church widows (vs. 5). Care for widows was transferred from the Jewish economy to the Christian (Deut. 14:29; 16:11; 24: 17, 19). 4. if any widow . . .—not "a widow indeed," as having children who ought to support her. nephews—rather, as Greek, "descendants,"

CHAPTER 5

1. Rebuke not an elder. That is, an elderly person; for the word is here taken in its natural sense, and signifies one advanced in years. At v. 17 it is taken in what may be termed its ecclesiastical meaning and signifies an officer in the church, what we commonly call a "presbyter" or "bishop"; for sometimes these terms were confounded. There are but few cases in which it at all becomes a young man to reprove an old man, and especially one who is a father in the church. If such a one does wrong or gets out of the way, he should be entreated as a father, with great caution and respect. The younger men as brethren. Showing humility, and arrogating nothing to yourself on account of your office. Feel for them as you ought to feel for your own brethren.

2. The elder women as mothers. Treating them with the respect due to their age. With all purity. With all chastity.

3. Honour widows that are widows indeed. One meaning of the word to honour is to "support, sustain," Matt. xv. 4-5; and here it is most obviously to be taken in this sense. Provide for those widows especially which are widows indeed—persons truly destitute, being aged and helpless, and having neither children nor friends to take care of them, and who behave as becomes their destitute state.

4. But if any widow have children or nephews. This shows that "widows indeed" are those that have neither children nor nephews,

MATTHEW HENRY

So v. 16. The respect of children to their parents, with their care of them, is fitly called piety. Children can never sufficiently requite their parents for the care they have taken of them, but they must endeavour to do it.

I. She is to be reckoned a widow indeed, who, being desolate, trusteth in God, v. 5, 6. Those who trust in God must continue in prayer.

But she is not a widow indeed that lives in pleasure (v. 6). A jovial widow is not a widow indeed. She that lives in pleasure is dead while she lives, is no living member of the church, but as a carcase in it, or a mortified member. They are in the world to no purpose, buried alive as to the great ends of living.

He speaks of this again (v. 8). If they spend that upon their lusts which should maintain their families, they have denied the faith (v. 16).

III. Directions concerning the characters of the widows that were to receive the church's charity. Particular care ought to be taken to relieve those who, when they had wherewithal, were ready to every good work. Those who would find mercy when they are in distress must show mercy when they are in prosperity.

or "grandchildren" [HESYCHIUS]. "Nephews" in old English meant "grandchildren" [HOOKER, Ecclesiastical Polity, 5. 20]. let them—the children and descendants. learn first—ere it falls to the Church to support them. to show piety at home—filial piety towards their widowed mother or grandmother, by giving her sustenance. Lit., "... towards their own house." "Piety is applied to the reverential discharge of filial duties; as the parental relation is the earthly representation of God our heavenly Father's relation to us. "Their own" stands in opposition to the Church, in relation to which the widow is comparatively a stranger. She has a claim on her own children, prior to her claim on the Church; let them fulfil this prior claim which she has on them, by sustaining her and not burden ing the Church. parents—Greek, (living) "progenitors," i.e., their mother or grandmother, as the case may be. "Let them learn," implies that abuses of this kind had crept into the Church, widows claiming Church support though they had children or grandchildren able to support them. good and—The oldest MSS. omit. The words are probably inserted by a transcriber from ch. 2:3. 5. widow indeed, and desolate—contrasted with her who has children or grandchildren to support her (vs. 4). trusteth in God—perfect tense in Greek, "hath rested, and doth rest her hope in God." This vs. 5 adds another qualification in a widow for Church maintenance, besides her being" desolate" or destitute of children to support her.

in supplications and prayers—Greek, "in her supplications and prayers"; the former signifies asking under a sense of need, the latter, prayer (Notes, ch. 2:1; Phil. 4:6). night and day—another coincidence with Luke (Luke 18:7, "cry day and night"); contrast Satan's accusations "day and night" (Rev. 12:10). 6. she that liveth in pleasure—the opposite of such a widow as is described in vs. 5, and therefore one utterly undeserving of Church charity. The Greek expresses wanton prodigality and excess [TITTMANN]. The root expresses weaving at a fast rate, and so lavish excess (Note, Jas. 5:5). dead while she liveth—dead in the Spirit while alive in the flesh (Matt. 8:22; Eph. 5: 14). 7. these things—just now spoken (vss. 5, 6). that they may be blameless—viz., the widows supported by the Church. 8. But—reverting to vs. 4, "If any (a general proposition; therefore including in its application the widow's children or grandchildren) provide not for his own (relations in general), and especially for those of his own house (in particular), he hath (practically) denied the faith." Faith without love and its works is dead; "for the subject matter of faith is not mere opinion, but the grace and truth of God, to which he that believes gives up his spirit, as he that loves gives up his heart" [MACK]. If in any case a duty of love is plain, it is in relation to one's own relatives; to fail in so plain an obligation is a plain proof of want of love, and therefore of want of faith. "Faith does not set aside natural duties, but strengthens them" [BENGEL]. worse than an infidel—because even an infidel (or unbeliever) is taught by nature to provide for his own relatives, and generally recognizes the duty; the Christian who does not so, is worse (Matt. 5:46, 47). He has less excuse with his greater light than the infidel who may break the laws of nature. 9. Translate, "As a widow (i.e., of the ecclesiastical order of widowhood; a kind of female presbytery), let none be enrolled (in the catalogue) who is less than sixty years old." These were not deaconesses, who were chosen at a younger age (forty was the age fixed at the Council of Chalcedon), and who had virgins (in a later age called widows) as well as widows among them, but a band of widows set apart, though not yet formally and finally, to the service of God and the Church. Traces of such a class appear in Acts 9:41. Dorcas herself was such a one. As it was expedient (Note, ch. 3:2; Titus 1:6) that the presbyter or bishop should have been but once married, so also in her case. wife of one man—in order not to throw a stumbling block in the way of Jews and heathen, who regarded with disfavor second marriages (Note, ch. 3:2; Titus 1:6). This is the force of "blameless," giving no offense, even in matters indifferent. 10. for good works—Greek, "IN honourable (excellent) works"; the sphere or element in which the good report of her had place (Titus 2:7). This answers to ch. 3:7, as to the bishop or presbyter, "He must have a good report of them which are without." if—if, in addition to being "well reported of," she .... she ... brought up children—either her own (ch. 3:4, 12), or those of others, which is one of the "good works"; a qualification adapting her for ministry to i.e., no relatives that either will or can help them, or no near relative alive. Let them learn first to shew piety at home. Let these children and nephews provide for their aged or helpless parents or relatives, and not burden the church with them while they are able to support them.

And to requite their parents. Let them learn to give benefit for benefit. Your parents supported and nourished you when you were young and helpless; you ought therefore to support them when they are old and destitute. This is called showing piety; and there is doubtless allusion to the fifth commandment; "Honour thy father and thy mother"—provide for them in their old age and afflictions; God commands this.

5. And desolate. "Left entirely alone"—having neither children nor relatives to take care of her. Trusteth in God. Finding she has no other helper, she continues in prayer and supplication, that she may derive that from God which, in the course of His providence, He has deprived her of among men.

6. But she that liveth in pleasure. "She that liveth delicately"—voluptuously indulging herself with dainties; it does not indicate grossly criminal pleasures, but simply means one who indulges herself in good eating and drinking, pampering her body at the expense of her mind. The word is used in reference to what we term petted and spoiled children. Is dead while she liveth. No purpose of life is answered by the existence of such a person. Seneca, in Epist. 60, says of pleasure-takers and those who live a voluptuous life: "We rank such persons with brutes, not with men; and some of them not even with brutes, but with dead carcasses. They anticipate their own death."

8. But if any provide not for his own. His own people or relatives. Those of his own house. That is, his own family, or a poor widow or relative that lives under his roof. Hath denied the faith. The Christian religion, which strongly inculcates love and benevolence to all mankind.

Is worse than an infidel. For what are called the dictates of nature lead men to feel for and provide for their own families. Heathen writers are full of maxims of this kind, Tacitus says: "Nature dictates that to every one his own children and relatives should be most dear." And Cicero, in Epist. ad Caption.: "Every man should take care of his own family.

9. Taken into the number. Let her not be taken into the list of those for which the church must provide. But some think that the apostle means the list of those who were deaconesses in the church, and that no widow was to be admitted into that rank who did not answer to the following character. Under threescore years. As it might be supposed that, previously to this age, they might be able to do something towards their own support. Having been the wife of one man. Having lived in conjugal fidelity with her husband, or having had but one husband at a time; or, according to others, having never been but once married. But the former is the opinion of some of the most eminent of the Greek fathers, and appears to be that most consistent with the scope of the place and with truth.

10. Well reported of for good works. Numbers being able to "bear testimony," as the word implies, that she has not only avoided all sin but that she has walked according to the testimony of God. Brought up children. It was customary among the Gentiles to expose their children, when so poor that they were not able to provide for them. Pious and humane people took these up and fed, clothed, and educated them. The words brought up may refer to the

IV. Take heed of admitting into the number those who are likely to be no credit to them (v. 11): The younger widows refuse; they will be weary of living by rule, as they must do; so they will marry, and cast off their first faith.

ALBERT BARNES:

"Because they have cast off their first faith." This does not mean that they would lose all their religion or wholly fall away, but that this would show that they had not the strong faith, the deadness to the world, the simple dependence on God (v. 5), and the desire which they had to be weaned from worldly cares and influences, which they once had. When they became widows, all their earthly hopes seemed to be blasted. They were then dead to the world and felt their sole dependence on God. But if under the influence of these strong emotions they were admitted to the "class of widows" in the church, there was no certainty that they would continue in this state of mind. Time would do much to modify their grief. There would be a reviving love of the world, and under the influence of this they would be disposed to enter again into the marriage relation, and thus show that they had not the strong and simple faith which they had when the blow which made them widows fell heavily upon them.
—Popular Commentary

The apostle here advises the younger widows to marry (v. 14). It is seldom that those who are idle are idle only; they learn to make mischief among neighbours, and sow discord among brethren. If housekeepers do not mind their business, but are tattlers, they give occasion to the adversaries of Christianity to reproach the Christian name. In the primitive church there was care taken of poor widows, and the churches of Christ in these days should follow so good an example.

Great care is to be taken that those share in the public bounty who most want it and best deserve it. The credit of religion, and the reputation of Christian churches, are very much concerned in the character and behaviour of those that receive alms of the church. Christianity obliges its professors to relieve their indigent friends.

Rich people should be ashamed to burden the church with their poor relations.

saints' feet—after the example of the Lord (John 13: 14); a specimen of the universal spirit of humbly "by love serving one another," which actuated the early Christians. relieved the afflicted—whether by pecuniary or other relief. followed . . . good—(I Thess. 5:15; cf. instances in Matt. 25:35, 36). 11. younger—than sixty years old (vs. 9). refuse—to take on the roll of presbyteress widows. wax wanton—lit., "over-strong" (II Chron. 26:16). against Christ—rebelling against Christ, their proper Bridegroom [JEROME]. they will—Greek, "they wish"; their desire is to marry again. 12. Having—Bringing on themselves, and so having to bear as a burden (Gal. 5:10) judgment from God (cf. ch. 3:6), weighing like a load on them. cast off their first faith—viz., pledged to Christ and the service of the Church. There could be no hardship at the age of sixty or upwards in not marrying again (end of vs. 9), for the sake of serving better the cause of Christ as presbyteresses: though, to ordinary widows, no barrier existed against re-marriage (I Cor. 7:39). This is altogether distinct from Rome's unnatural vows of celibacy in the case of young marriageable women. The widow-presbyteresses, moreover, engaged to remain single, not as though single life were holier than married life (according to Rome's teaching), but because the interests of Christ's cause made it desirable (Note, ch. 3:2). They had pledged "their first faith" to Christ as presbyteress widows; they now wish to transfer their faith to a husband (cf. I Cor. 7:32, 34). 13. withal—"at the same time, moreover." learn—usually in a good sense. But these women's "learning" is idleness, trifling, and busybodies' tattle. wandering—Greek, "going about." from house to house—of the members of the Church (II Tim. 3:6). "They carry the affairs of this house to that, and of that to this; they tell the affairs of all to all" [THEOPHYLACT]. tattlers—lit., "trifling talkers." In III John 10, translated "prating." busybodies—mischievously busy; inconsiderately curious (II Thess. 3:11). Acts 19:19, "curious," the same Greek. Curiosity usually springs from idleness, which is itself the mother of garrulity [CALVIN]. speaking—not merely "saying." The subject matter, as well as the form, is involved in the Greek word [ALFORD]. which they ought not—(Titus 1: 11). 14. younger women—rather, as ellipsis ought to be supplied, "the younger widows," viz., younger widows in general, as distinguished from the older widows taken on the roll of presbyteresses (vs. 9). The "therefore" means seeing that young widows are exposed to such temptations, "I will," or "desire . . ." (vss. 11-13). The precept here that they should marry again is not inconsistent with I Corinthians 7:40; for the circumstances of the two cases were distinct (cf. I Cor. 7:26). Here re-marriage is recommended as an antidote to sexual passion, idleness, and the other evils noted in vss. 11-13. Of course, where there was no tendency to these evils, marriage again would not be so requisite; Paul speaks of what is generally desirable, and supposing there should be danger of such evils, as was likely. "He does not impose a law, but points out a remedy, to younger widows" [CHRYSOSTOM]. bear children—(ch. 2:15)—thus gaining one of the qualifications (vs. 10) for being afterwards a presbyteress widow, should Providence so ordain it. guide—Greek, "rule the house" in the woman's due place; not usurping authority over the man (ch. 2: 12). give none occasion—lit., "starting-point": handle of reproach through the loose conduct of nominal Christians. the adversary—of Christianity, Jew or Gentile. Philippians 1:28; Titus 2:8, "He that is of the contrary part." Not Satan, who is introduced in a different relation (vs. 15.) to speak reproachfully—lit., "for the sake of reproach" (ch. 3:7; 6:1; Titus 2:5, 10). If the handle were given, the adversary would use it for the sake of reproach. The adversary is eager to exaggerate the faults of a few, and to lay the blame on the whole Church and its doctrines [BENGEL]. 15. For—For in the case of some this result has already ensued; "Some (widows) are already turned aside after Satan," the seducer (not by falling away from the faith in general, but) by such errors as are stigmatized in vss. 11-13, sexual passion, idleness, etc., and so have given occasion of reproach (vs. 14). "Satan finds some mischief still for the idle hands to do." 16. If any . . . have widows—of his family, however related to him.

children of others, who were educated in the Christian faith by pious Christian women. Lodged strangers. If she have been given to hospitality, freely contributing to the necessitous, when she had it in her power. Washed the saints' feet. This was an office of humanity shown to all strangers and travellers in the Eastern countries, who, either walking barefoot, or having only a sort of sole to defend the foot, needed washing when they came to their journey's end. Pious women generally did this act of kindness. Relieved the afflicted. Visited and ministered to the sick. Diligently followed every good work. In a word, if she have been altogether a Christian, living according to the precepts of the gospel, and doing the Lord's work with all her heart, soul, and strength. From the character given here of the "widow indeed," it may be doubted whether "widow" was not in some cases the name of an office, which name it might have from being ordinarily filled by widows. It can hardly be supposed that any widow, unless she had considerable property, could have done the things enumerated in this verse, some of which would occasion no small expense. The "widow indeed" may mean a person who was to be employed in some office in the church; and Timothy is enjoined not to take any into that office unless she had been before remarkable for piety and humanity.

11. But the younger widows refuse. Do not admit those into this office who are under sixty years of age. Probably those who were received into such a list promised to abide in their widowhood. But as young or comparatively young women might have both occasion and temptations to remarry and so break their engagement to Christ, they should not be admitted. Not that the apostle condemns their remarrying as a crime in itself, but because it was contrary to their engagement. Wax wanton. A metaphor taken from a pampered horse, from whose mouth the rein has been removed, so that there is nothing to check or confine him.

12. Having damnation. In the sense in which we use this word I am satisfied the apostle never intended it. It is likely that he refers here to some promise or engagement which they made when taken on the list already mentioned, and now they have the guilt of having violated that promise; this is the "condemnation" of which the apostle speaks. They have cast off their first faith. By pledging their fidelity to a husband they have cast off their fidelity to Christ, as a married life and their previous engagement are incompatible.

13. And withal they learn to be idle. They do not love work, and they will not work. Wandering about from house to house. Gadding, gossiping; never contented with home; always visiting. And not only idle. If it went no further, this would be intolerable; but they are tattlers—talebearers; whisperers; light, trifling persons; all noise and no work. Busybodies. Persons who meddle with the concerns of others, who mind everyone's business but their own. Speaking things which they ought not. Lies, slanders, calumnies; backbiting their neighbors, and everywhere sowing the seed of dissension.

14. I will therefore that the younger women marry. As the preceding discourse has been about the younger widows, and this is an inference from it, it is most evident that by the younger women the apostle means the young widows. These he considers unfit for the office of the female diaconate, and therefore wills them to marry, educate children, and give themselves wholly up to domestic affairs. Here the apostle, so far from forbidding second marriages, positively enjoins or at least recommends them. The adversary. Any person, whether Jew or Gentile, who might be watching for an occasion to reproach, through the misconduct of its professors, the cause of Christianity.

15. For some are already turned aside. Some of these young widows, for he appears to be still treating of them, are turned aside to idolatry, to follow Satan instead of Christ. Slight deviations from a right line may lead at last to an infinite distance from Christ.

16. If any man or woman that believeth. If any Christian man or woman have poor widows,

MATTHEW HENRY

There should be prudence in the choice of the objects of charity, that it may not be thrown away upon those who are not properly so, that there may be the more for those who are real objects of charity.

Verses 17–25

I. Concerning the supporting of ministers. Care must be taken that they be honourably maintained (v. 17). They had not, in the primitive church, one to preach to them and another to rule them, but ruling and teaching were performed by the same persons. The work of ministers consists principally in two things: ruling well and labouring in the word and doctrine. Those who were not idle, but laborious in this work, were worthy of double honour.

Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treads out the corn. Does God take care for oxen, and will he not take care of his own servants? The ox only treads out the corn of which they make the bread that perishes; but ministers break the bread of life which endures for ever. Those who would have ministers starved, or not comfortably provided for, God will require it of them another day.

II. Concerning the accusation of ministers (v. 19). There must be an accusation; it must not be a flying uncertain report. This accusation is not to be received unless supported by two or three credible witnesses; and the accusation must be received before them, that is, the accused must have the accusers face to face.

Great care should be taken that the thing alleged against him be well proved, "but (v. 20) those that sin rebuke before all; that the plaster may be as wide as the wound, and that those who are in danger of sinning by the example of their fall may take warning by the rebuke given them for it, that others also may fear." Public rebuke is designed for the good of others as well as for the good of the party rebuked.

Concerning Timothy himself. A charge to him to be careful of his office, v. 21. He charges him to guard against partiality. Ministers must give an account to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and woe to them if they have been partial in their ministrations.

let them—rather as Greek, "let him," or "her"; "let such a one" (vs. 10). be charged—lit., "be burdened" with their support. widows indeed—really helpless and friendless (vss. 3, 4). 17. The transition from the widow presbyteresses (vs. 9) to the presbyters here, is natural. rule well—lit., "preside well," with wisdom, ability, and loving faithfulness, over the flock assigned to them. be counted worthy of double honour—i.e., the honor which is expressed by gifts (vss. 3, 18) and otherwise. If a presbyter as such, in virtue of his office, is already worthy of honor, he who rules well is doubly so [WIESINGER] (I Cor. 9:14; Gal. 6:6; I Thess. 5:12). Not literally that a presbyter who rules well should get double the salary of one who does not rule well [ALFORD], or of a presbyteress widow, or of the deacons [CHRYSOSTOM]. "Double" is used for large in general (Rev. 18:6). specially they who labour in the word and doctrine—Greek, "teaching"; preaching of the word, and instruction, catechetical or otherwise. This implies that of the ruling presbyters there were two kinds, those who labored in the word and teaching, and those who did not. Lay presbyters, so called merely because of their age, have no place here; for both classes mentioned here alike are ruling presbyters. A college of presbyters is implied as existing in each large congregation. As in ch. 3 their qualifications are spoken of, so here the acknowledgments due to them for their services. 18. the scripture—(Deut. 25:4; quoted before in I Cor. 9:9). the ox that treadeth out—Greek, "An ox while treading." The labourer is worthy of his reward—or "hire"; quoted from Luke 10:7, whereas Matthew 10:10 has "his meat," or "food." If Paul extends the phrase, "Scripture saith," to this second clause, as well as to the first, he will be hereby recognizing the Gospel of Luke, his own helper (whence appears the undesigned appositeness of the quotation), as inspired Scripture. This I think the correct view. The Gospel according to Luke was probably in circulation then about eight or nine years. However, it is possible "Scripture saith" applies only to the passage quoted from Deuteronomy 25:4; and then his quotation will be that of a common proverb, quoted also by the Lord, which commends itself to the approval of all, and is approved by the Lord and His apostle. 19. Against an elder—a presbyter of the Church. receive not—"entertain not" [ALFORD]. but before two or three witnesses—A judicial conviction was not permitted in Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15, except on the testimony of at least two or three witnesses (cf. Matt. 18:16; John 8:17; II Cor. 13:1; I John 5:6, 7). But Timothy's entertaining an accusation against anyone is a different case, where the object was not judicially to punish, but to admonish: here he might ordinarily entertain it without the need of two or three witnesses; but not in the case of an elder, since the more earnest an elder was to convince gainsayers (Titus 1:9), the more exposed would he be to vexatious and false accusations. How important then was it that Timothy should not, without strong testimony, entertain a charge against presbyters, who should, in order to be efficient, be "blameless" (ch. 3:2; Titus 1:6).

20. Them that sin—whether presbyters or laymen. rebuke before all—publicly before the Church (Matt. 18:15-17; I Cor. 5:9-13; Eph. 5:11). Not until this "rebuke" was disregarded was the offender to be excommunicated. others . . . fear—that other members of the Church may have a wholesome fear of offending (Deut. 13:11; Acts 5:11). 21. I charge thee—rather as Greek, "I adjure thee"; so it ought to be translated (II Tim. 4:1). before—"in the presence of God." Lord—omitted in the oldest MSS. God the Father, and Christ the Son, will testify against thee, if thou disregardest my injunction. He vividly sets before Timothy the last judgment, in which God shall be revealed, and Christ seen face to face with His angels [BENGEL]. elect angels—an epithet of reverence. The objects of divine electing love (I Pet. 2:6). Not only "elect" [according to the everlasting purpose of God] in contradistinction to the reprobate angels (II Pet. 2:4), but also to mark the excellence of the angels in general [as God's chosen ministers, "holy angels," "angels of light"], and so to give more solemnity to their testimony [CALVIN] as witnesses to Paul's adjuration. Angels take part by action and sympathy in the affairs of the earth (Luke 15:10; I Cor. 4:9). these things—the injunctions, vss. 19, 20. without preferring one before another—rather as Greek, "prejudice"; "judging before" hearing all the facts of a case. There ought to be judgment, but not prejudging. Cf. "suddenly," vs. 22, also vs. 24. partiality—in favor of a man, as "prejwhich are their relatives, let them relieve them—provide them with the necessaries of life, and not burden the church with their maintenance, that the funds may be spared for the support of those widows who were employed in its service, teaching children, visiting the sick.

17. Let the elders that rule well. Elder is probably here the name of an ecclesiastical officer, similar to what we now term "presbyter." Double honour. Almost every critic of note allows that time (Greek) here signifies "reward, stipend, wages." Let him have a double or a larger salary who rules well. And why? Because in the discharge of his office he must be at expense, in proportion to his diligence, in visiting and relieving the sick, in lodging and providing for strangers; in a word, in his being given to hospitality, which was required of every bishop or presbyter. Especially they who labour in the word and doctrine. Those who not only preach publicly, but instruct privately, catechize. Some think this refers to distinct ecclesiastical orders; but these technical distinctions were, in my opinion, a work of later times.

18. The scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox. This is a manifest proof that by "honour" in the preceding verse the apostle means "salary" or "wages": "Let the elders that rule well be accounted worthy of double honour," a larger salary than any of the official widows mentioned before, for "the labourerer is worthy of his hire." The maintenance of every man in the church should be in proportion to his own labor, and the necessities of his family.

19. Against an elder. Be very cautious of receiving reports against those whose business it is to preach to others and correct their vices. Do not consider an elder as guilty of any alleged crime unless it be proved by two or three witnesses. This the law of Moses required in respect to all.

20. Them that sin rebuke before all. That is, before the members of the church; which was the custom of the Jews in their synagogues. That others also may fear. This is the grand object of church censures, to reclaim the transgressors and to give warning to others.

21. I charge thee before God. The apostle would have Timothy to consider that all he did should be done as in the sight of God, the Father of the spirits of all flesh; in the sight of Christ, the Saviour of sinners, who purchased the Church with His own blood; and in the sight of the most holy, approved, and eminent angels, whose office it was to minister to the heirs of salvation. The word elect, applied to the angels here, is supposed to distinguish those who stood when others fell from their first estate. Without preferring one before another. "Without prejudice." Promote no man's cause; make not up your mind on any case till you have weighed both sides and heard both parties, with their respective witnesses, and then act impartially, as the matter may appear to be proved. Do not treat any man, in religious matters, according to the rank he holds in life, or according to any personal attachment you may have for him. Every man should be dealt with in the church as he will be dealt with at the judgment seat of Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. Concerning the ordination of ministers (v. 22), it seems to be meant of the ordaining of men to the office of the ministry. Some understand it of absolution: "Be not too hasty in laying hands on any." Those who are rash will make themselves partakers in other men's sins.

To take care of his health Paul advises him to use wine for the helping of his stomach and the recruiting of his nature. It is the will of God that people should take all due care of their bodies, to use them so that they may be most fit and helpful to us in the service of God. Wine should be used as a help, and not a hindrance, to our work and usefulness.

IV. Concerning absolution, to which v. 24, 25, seem to refer. Some men's sins are so plain and obvious that there is no dispute concerning the bringing of them under the censures of the church — Others they follow after; their wickedness does not presently appear, nor till after a due search has been made concerning it. So also, as to the evidences of repentance. There are secret, and there are open sins. Some are humbled and brought to repentance while it is quite otherwise with others. The incorrigible cannot be hid.

udice" is bias against a man. Some of the oldest MSS. read, "in the way of summoning (brethren) before a (heathen) judge." But Vulgate and other good authorities favor the more probable reading in English Version. 22. Lay hands—i.e., ordain (ch. 4:14; II Tim. 1:6; Titus 1:5). The connection is with vs. 19. The way to guard against scandals occurring in the case of presbyters is, be cautious as to the character of the candidate before ordaining him; this will apply to other Church officers so ordained, as well as to presbyters. suddenly—hastily: vss. 24, 25 show that waiting for a time is salutary. neither be partaker of other men's sins—by negligence in ordaining ungodly candidates, and so becoming in some degree responsible for their sins. Or, there is the same transition from the elders to all in general who may sin, as in vss. 19, 20. Be not a partaker in other men's sins by not "rebuking them that sin before all," as well as those that are candidates for the presbytery, as also all "that sin." keep thyself pure—"thyself" is emphatic. "Keep THYSELF" clear of participation in OTHER men's sin by not failing to rebuke them that sin (vs. 20). Thus the transition is easy to vs. 23, which is concerning Timothy personally; cf. also vs. 24. 23. no longer—as a habit. This injunction to drink wine occasionally is a modification of the preceding "keep thyself pure." The presbyter and deacon were enjoined to be "not given to wine" (ch. 3:3, 8). Timothy seems to have had a tendency to undue ascetical strictness on this point (cf. Note, ch. 4:8; cf. the Nazarene vow, Num. 6:1-4; John Baptist, Luke 1:15; Rom. 14). Paul therefore modifies the preceding words, "keep thyself pure," virtually saying, "Not that I mean to enjoin that kind of purity which consists in asceticism, nay, be no longer a water-drinker," i.e., no longer drink only water, but use a little wine, as much as is needed for thy health. So ELLICOTT and WIESINGER. ALFORD thus: Timothy was of a feeble frame (Note, I Cor. 16:10, 11), and prone to timidity in his duties as overseer where vigorous action was needed; hence Paul exhorts him to take all proper means to raise his bodily condition above these infirmities. God hereby commands believers to use all due means for preserving health, and condemns by anticipation the human traditions which among various sects have denied the use of wine to the faithful. 24. Two kinds of sins are specified: those palpably manifest (so the Greek for "open beforehand" ought to be translated; so in Heb. 7:14, it is translated "evident"; lit., "before" the eyes, i.e., notorious), further explained as "going before to judgment"; and those which follow after the men ("some men they, i.e., their sins, follow after"), viz., not going beforehand, loudly accusing, but hidden till they come to the judgment: so vs. 25, the good works are of two classes: those palpably manifest (translate so, instead of "manifest beforehand") and "those that are otherwise," i.e., not palpably manifest. Both alike "cannot be hid"; the former class in the case of bad and good are manifest already; the latter class in the case of both are not manifest now, but shall be so at the final judgment. going before to judgment—as heralds; crying sins which accuse their perpetrator. The connection seems to me this: He had enjoined Timothy, vs. 20, "Rebuke them that sin before all": and in vs. 22, "Neither be partaker of other men's sins," by ordaining ungodly men; having then by a digression at the clause, "keep thyself pure," guarded against an ascetical error of Timothy in fancying purity consisted in asceticism, and having exhorted him to use wine for strengthening him in his work, he returns to the subject of his being vigorous as an overseer in rebuking sin, whether in presbyters or people, and in avoiding participation in men's sins by ordaining ungodly candidates. He says, therefore, there are two classes of sins, as there are two classes of good works: those palpably manifest, and those not so; the former are those on which thou shouldest act decidedly at once when called on, whether to rebuke in general, or to ordain ministers in particular; as to the latter, the final judgment alone can decide; however hidden now they "cannot be hid" then. This could only be said of the final judgment (I Cor. 4:5; therefore, ALFORD'S reference of this verse to Timothy's judgment in choosing elders must be wrong); all judgments before then are fallible. Thus he implies that Timothy can only be responsible if he connive at manifest, or evident sins; not that those that are otherwise shall escape judgment at last: just as in the case of good works, he can only be responsible for taking into account in his judgments those which are patent to all, not those secret good works which nevertheless will not remain hidden at the final judgment.

ADAM CLARKE

22. Lay hands suddenly on no man. Do not hastily appoint any person to the sacred ministry; let the person be well proved before he receives the imposition of hands.

Neither be partaker of other men's sins. It is a sin for any improper person to thrust himself into the sacred office; and he partakes of that sin who introduces, helps him forward, or sanctions him in it. Keep thyself pure. From this and every other evil.

23. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine. The priests under the Mosaic law, while performing sacred rites, were forbidden to drink wine: "Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations," Lev. x. 9; Ezek. xliv. 21. From Athenæus we learn that the Greeks often mingled their wine with water; sometimes one part of wine to two of water, three parts of water to one of wine, and at other times three parts of water to two of wine. "And among the Romans, no servant, nor free woman, nor youths of quality, drank any wine till they were thirty years of age." And it was a maxim among all that continued water-drinking injured the stomach.

24. Some men's sins are open beforehand. In appointing men to sacred offices in the church, among the candidates Timothy would find: (1) Some of whom he knew nothing, but only that they professed Christianity; let such be tried before they are appointed. (2) Some of whose faith and piety he had the fullest knowledge, and whose usefulness in the church was well-known. (3) Some whose lives were not at all or but partially reformed, who were still unchanged in their hearts and unholy in their lives. The sins of these latter were known to all; they go before to judgment, "to condemnation." The sins of others might be found out after, or in consequence of, this investigation; and those that were otherwise could not be long hid from his knowledge or the knowledge of the church. On all these accounts the exhortation is necessary: "Lay hands suddenly on no man."

25. Likewise also the good works of some. Though those who are very holy and very useful in the church cannot be unknown, yet there are others not less holy who need to be brought forward, who do much good in private and their character and good works are not fully known till after diligent inquiry.

CHAPTER 6

Verses 1–5

I. Here is the duty of servants. They are yoked to work, not to be idle. They must respect their masters, they must count them worthy of all that honour which was fit for them to receive. If servants that embraced the Christian religion should grow disobedient to their masters, the doctrine of Christ would be reflected on for their sakes.

If the professors of religion misbehave themselves, the name of God and his doctrine are in danger of being blasphemed. And this is a good reason why we should all conduct ourselves well.

Or suppose the master were a Christian, and a believer, and the servant a believer too? They must think themselves the more obliged to serve them because the faith and love that bespeak men Christians oblige them to do good. Believing masters and servants are brethren, and partakers of the benefit.

II. Paul here warns Timothy to withdraw from those who corrupted the doctrine of Christ. If any man teach otherwise (v. 3–5). We are not required to consent to any words as wholesome words except the words of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But he that does not consent to the words of Christ is proud (v. 4), knowing nothing. Commonly those are most proud who know least. Those who fall off from the plain practical doctrines of Christianity fall in with controversies.

When men are not content with the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, but will frame notions of their own and impose them, they sow the seeds of all mischief in the church (v. 5); disputes that are all subtlety, and no solidity. Men of corrupt minds are destitute of the truth. The words of our Lord Jesus Christ are wholesome words, they are the fittest to prevent or heal the church's wounds, as well as to heal a wounded conscience. When men leave the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, they will never agree in other words, either of their own or other men's invention, but will perpetually wrangle and quarrel about them. Such persons as are given to perverse disputings appear to be men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth; especially such as act in this manner for the sake of gain, which is all their godliness. Christians will withdraw themselves from such.

Vss. 1-21. EXHORTATIONS AS TO DISTINCTIONS OF CIVIL RANK; THE DUTY OF SLAVES, IN OPPOSITION TO THE FALSE TEACHINGS OF GAIN-SEEKERS; TIMOTHY'S PURSUIT IS TO BE GODLINESS, WHICH IS AN EVERLASTING POSSESSION: SOLEMN ADJURATION TO DO SO AGAINST CHRIST'S COMING; CHARGE TO BE GIVEN TO THE RICH. CONCLUDING EXHORTATION. 1. servants—to be taken as predicated thus, "Let as many as are under the yoke (as) slaves" (Tit. 2:9). The exhortation is natural as there was a danger of Christian slaves inwardly feeling above their heathen masters. their own masters—The phrase "their own," is an argument for submissiveness; it is not strangers, but their own masters whom they are required to respect. all honour—all possible and fitting honor; not merely outward subjection, but that inward honor from which will flow spontaneously right outward conduct (Note, Eph. 5:22). that the name of God—by which Christians are called. blasphemed—Heathen masters would say, What kind of a God must be the God of the Christians, when such are the fruits of His worship (Rom. 2:24; Titus 2:5, 10)? 2. And—rather, "But." The opposition is between those Christian slaves under the yoke of heathen, and those that have believing masters (he does not use the phrase "under the yoke" in the latter case, for service under believers is not a yoke). Connect the following words thus, "Let them (the slaves) not, because they (the masters) are brethren (and so equals, masters and slaves alike being Christians), despise them" (the masters). but rather . . .—"but all the more (so much the more: with the greater good will) do them service because they (the masters) are faithful (i.e., believers) and beloved who receive (in the mutual interchange of relative duties between master and servant; so the Greek) the benefit" (English Version violates Greek grammer). This latter clause is parallel to, "because they are brethren"; which proves that "they" refers to the masters, not the servants, as TITTMANN takes it, explaining the verb in the common sense (Luke 1:54; Acts 20:35), "who sedulously labor for their (masters') benefit." The very term "benefit" delicately implies service done with the right motive, Christian "good will" (Eph. 6:7). If the common sense of the Greek verb be urged, the sense must be, "Because they (the masters) are faithful and beloved who are sedulously intent on the benefiting" of their servants. But PORPHYRY (de abstin. 1. 46) justifies the sense of the Greek verb given above, which also better accords with the context; for otherwise, the article "the," will have nothing in the preceding words to explain it, whereas in my explanation above "the benefit" will be that of the slaves' service. These things teach—(ch. 4:11; Titus 2:15). 3. teach otherwise—than I desire thee to "teach" (vs. 2). The Greek indicative implies, he puts not a merely supposed case, but one actually existing, ch. 1:3, "Every one who teaches otherwise," i.e., who teaches heterodoxy. consent not—Greek, "accede not to." wholesome—"sound" (ch. 1:10): opposed to the false teachers' words, unsound through profitless science and immorality. words of our Lord Jesus Christ—Paul's inspired words are not merely his own, but are also Christ's words. 4. He is proud—lit., "wrapt in smoke"; filled with the fumes of self-conceit (ch. 3:6) while "knowing nothing," viz., of the doctrine which is according to godliness (vs. 3), though arrogating pre-eminent knowledge (ch. 1:7). doting about—lit., "sick about"; the opposite of "wholesome" (vs. 3). Truth is not the center about which his investigations move, but mere word-strifes. questions—of controversy. strifes of words—rather than about realities (II Tim. 2:14). These stand with them instead of "godliness" and "wholesome words" (vs. 3; ch. 1:4; Titus 3:9). evil surmisings—as to those who are of a different party from themselves. 5. Perverse disputings—useless disputings. The oldest MSS. read, "lasting contests" [WIESINGER]; "incessant collisions" [ALFORD]. "Strifes of words" had already been mentioned so that he would not be likely to repeat the same idea (as in the English Version reading) again. corrupt minds—Greek, "of men corrupted (depraved) in mind." The inmost source of the evil is in the perverted mind (vs. 4; II Tim. 3:8; Titus 1:15). destitute of the truth—(Titus 1:14). They had had the truth, but through want of moral integrity and of love of the truth, they were misled by a pretended deeper gnosis (knowledge) and higher ascetical holiness, of which they made a trade [WIESINGER]. supposing . . .—The Greek requires, "supposing (regarding the matter in this point of view) that piety (so translated for 'godliness') is a means of gain"

ADAM CLARKE

1. Let as many servants as are under the yoke. The word here means slaves converted to the Christian faith; and the yoke is the state to understand the heathen masters of those Christianized slaves. Even these, in such circumstances and under such domination, are commanded to treat their masters with all honour and respect, that the name of God, by which they were called, and the doctrine of God, Christianity, which they had professed, might not be blasphemed—might not be evilly spoken of in consequence of their improper conduct. Civil rights are never abolished by any communications from God's Spirit. The civil state in which a man was before his conversion is not altered by that conversion, nor does the grace of God absolve him from any claims which either the state or his neighbor may have on him.

2. And they that have believing masters. Who have been lately converted as well as themselves. Let them not despise them. Supposing themselves to be their equals because they are their brethren in Christ. But rather do them service. Obey them the more cheerfully because they are faithful and beloved; faithful to God's grace, beloved by Him and His true followers. Partakers of the benefit. "Joint partakers of the benefit." This is generally understood as referring to the master's participation in the services of his slaves. "Because those who are partakers of the benefit of your services are faithful and beloved"; or it may apply to the servants who are partakers of many benefits from their Christian masters. Others think that benefit here refers to the grace of the gospel, the common salvation of believing masters and slaves.

3. If any man teach otherwise. It appears that there were teachers of a different kind in the church, a sort of religious levellers, who preached that the converted servant had as much right to the master's service as the master had to his. And consent not to wholesome words. "Healing doctrines"—doctrines which give nourishment and health to the soul, which is the true character of all the doctrines taught by our Lord Jesus Christ; doctrines which are according to godliness—securing as amply the honor and glory of God as they do the peace, happiness, and final salvation of man. All this may refer to the general tenor of the gospel; and not to anything said, or supposed to have been said, by our Lord relative to the condition of slaves. With political questions or questions relative to private rights, our Lord scarcely ever meddled. He taught all men to love one another; to respect each other's rights; to submit to each other; to show all fidelity; to be obedient, humble, and meek; and to know that His kingdom was not of this world.

4. He is proud. He is "blown up" or "inflated" with a vain opinion of his own knowledge; whereas his knowledge is foolishness, for he knows nothing. Doting about questions. He is "sick, distempered," about these questions relative to the Mosaic law and the traditions of the elders; for it is most evident that the apostle has the Judaizing teachers in view, who were ever, in questions of theology, straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel. Strifes of words. Logomachies; verbal contentions; splitting hairs. Whereof cometh envy, strife. How little good have religious disputes ever done to mankind or to the cause of truth! Most controversialists have succeeded in getting their own tempers soured and in irritating their opponents.

5. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds. Disputations that cannot be settled because their partisans will not listen to the truth; and they will not listen to the truth because their minds are corrupt. Both under the law and under the gospel the true religion was: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength; and thy neighbor as thyself. Where therefore the love of God and man does not prevail, there there is no religion. Supposing that gain is godliness. Professing religion only for the sake of secular profit, defending their own cause for the emoluments it produced, and having no respect to another world.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 6–12

I. The excellency of contentment and the evil of covetousness.

1. The excellency of contentment, v. 6–8. Though Christianity is the worst trade, it is the best calling in the world. Those that make a trade of it, merely to serve their turn for this world, will find it a sorry trade; but those that mind it as their calling, and make a business of it, will find it a gainful calling.

(1) The truth he lays down is that godliness with contentment is great gain. Godliness is itself great gain, and, wherever there is true godliness, there will be contentment. Christian contentment is great gain. He that is godly is sure to be happy in another world; and if withal he do by contentment accommodate himself to his condition in this world he has enough. It is not like the little gain of worldlings, who are so fond of a little worldly advantage. Godliness is ever accompanied with contentment. All truly godly people have learned with Paul, in whatever state they are, to be therewith content.

(2) The reason he gives for it, v. 7. We can challenge nothing as a debt that is due to us, for we came naked into the world. Whatever we have had since, we are obliged to the providence of God for it. We cannot be poorer than when we came into this world, and yet then we were provided for; therefore let us trust in God for the remaining part of our pilgrimage. We shall carry nothing with us out of this world. Why should we not be content with a little, because, how much soever we have, we must leave it behind us?

(3) Hence he infers, v. 8. If God give us the necessary supports of life, we ought to be content therewith. What will worldlings do when death shall strip them of their happiness and portion, and they must take an everlasting farewell of all these things, on which they have so much doted? The necessaries of life are the bounds of a true Christian's desire. A few comforts of this life, will serve him, and these he may hope to enjoy.

2. The evil of covetousness v. 9. It is not said, those that are rich, but those that will be rich, that place their happiness in worldly wealth. When the devil sees which way their lusts carry them, he will soon bait his hook accordingly.

(1) Some will be rich; they are resolved upon it. Such will not be safe nor innocent. Worldly lusts are foolish and hurtful, for they drown men in destruction and perdition.

(2) The apostle affirms that the love of money is the root of all evil, v. 10. People may have money, and yet not love it; but, if they love it inordinately, it will push them on to all evil.

Covetous persons will quit the faith, if that be the way to get money. Those that depart from God do but treasure up sorrows for themselves.

II. Hence he takes occasion to caution Timothy. He addresses himself to him as a man of God. Ministers are men of God, and ought to conduct themselves accordingly. He charges Timothy to take heed of the love of money. It ill becomes men of God to set their hearts upon the things of this world; men of God should be taken up with the things of God. To arm him against the love of the world, he directs him to follow that which is good. It is not enough that men of God flee these things, but they must follow after what is directly contrary thereto. What excellent persons men of God are who follow after righteousness! They are the excellent of the earth, they should be approved of men.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(i.e., a way of advancing one's worldly interests: a different Greek form, poriswa, expresses the thing gained, gain); not "that gain is godliness," as English Version. from such withdraw thyself—omitted in the oldest MSS. The connection with vs. 6 favors the omission of these words, which interrupt the connection. 6. But—Though they err in this, there is a sense in which "piety is" not merely gain, but "great means of gain": not the gaining which they pursue, and which makes men to be discontented with their present possessions, and to use religion as "a cloak of covetousness" (I Thess. 2:5) and means of earthly gain, but the present and eternal gain which piety, whose accompaniment is contentment, secures to the soul. 7. For—confirming the reasonableness of "contentment." and it is certain—Vulgate and other old versions support this reading. The oldest MSS., however, omit "and it is certain"; then the translation will be, "We brought nothing into the world (to teach us to remember) that neither can we carry anything out" (Job 1:21; Eccles. 5:15). Therefore, we should have no gain-seeking anxiety, the breeder of discontent (Matt. 6:25). 8. And—Greek, "But." In contrast to the greedy gain-seekers (vs. 5). having—so long as we have food. (The Greek expresses "food sufficient in each case for our continually recurring wants" [ALFORD]). It is implied that we, as believers, shall have this (Isa. 23:16). raiment—Greek, "covering"; according to some including a roof to cover us, i.e., a dwelling, as well as clothing. let us be therewith content—lit., "we shall be sufficiently provided"; "we shall be sufficed" [ALFORD]. 9. will be rich—have more than "food and raiment." Greek, "wish to be rich"; not merely are willing, but are resolved, and earnestly desire to have riches at any cost (Prov. 28:20, 22). This wishing (not the riches themselves) is fatal to "contentment" (vs. 6). Rich men are not told to cast away their riches, but not to "trust" in them, and to "do good" with them (vss. 17, 18; Ps. 62:10). fall into temptation—not merely "are exposed to temptation," but actually "fall into" it. The falling into it is what we are to pray against, "Lead us not into temptation" (Jas. 1:14); such a one is already in a sinful state, even before any overt act of sin. The Greek for "temptation" and "gain" contains a play on sounds—porasmus, peirasmus. snare—a further step downwards (ch. 3:7). He falls into "the snare of the devil." foolish—irrational. hurtful—to those who fall into the snare. Cf. Ephesians 4:22, "deceitful lusts" which deceive to one's deadly hurt. lusts—With the one evil lust ("wish to be rich") many others join themselves: the one is the "root of all evils" (vs. 10). which—Greek, "whatever (lusts)." drown—an awful descending climax from "fall into"; this is the last step in the terrible descent (Jas. 1:15); translated "sink," Luke 5:7. destruction . . . perdition—destruction in general (temporal or eternal), and perdition in particular, viz., that of body and soul in hell. 10. the love of money—not the money itself, but the love of it—the wishing to be rich (vs. 9)—"is a root (ELLICOTT and MIDDLETON: not as English Version, "the root") of all evils." (So the Greek plural.) The wealthiest may be rich not in a bad sense; the poorest may covet to be so (Ps. 62:10). Love of money is not the sole root of evils, but it is a leading "root of bitterness" (Heb. 12:15), for "it destroys faith, the root of all that is good" [BENGEL]; its offshoots are "temptation, a snare, lusts, destruction, perdition." coveted after—lusted after. erred from—lit., "have been made to err from the faith" (ch. 1:19; 4:1). pierced—(Luke 2:35). with . . . sorrows—"pains": "thorns" of the parable (Matt. 13:22) which choke the word of "faith." "The prosperity of fools destroys them" (Prov. 1:32). BENGEL and WIESINGER make them the gnawings of conscience, producing remorse for wealth badly acquired; the harbingers of the future "perdition" (vs. 9). 11. But thou—in contrast to the "some" (vs. 10). man of God—who hast God as thy true riches (Gen. 15:1; Ps. 16:5; Lam. 3:24). Applying primarily to Timothy as a minister (cf. II Pet. 1:21), just as the term was used of Moses (Deut. 33:1), Samuel (I Sam. 9:6), Elijah, and Elisha; but, as the exhortation is as to duties incumbent also on all Christians, the term applies secondarily to him (so II Tim. 3:17) as a Christian man born of God (Jas. 1:18; I John 5:1), no longer a man of the world raised above earthly things; therefore, God's property, not his own, bought with a price, and so having parted with all right in himself: Christ's work is to be his great work: he is to be Christ's living representative. flee these things—viz., "the love of money" with its evil results (vs. 9, 10). follow after righteousness—(II Tim. 2:22). godliness—"piety." Righteousness is

ADAM CLARKE

From such withdraw thyself. Have no religious fellowship with such people. But this clause is wanting in some MSS. It is probably spurious.

6. But godliness with contentment is great gain. The word godliness here and in several other places of this Epistle signifies the true religion, Christianity; and the word contentment signifies a "competency," a "sufficiency"; that measure or portion of secular things which is necessary for the support of life, while the great work of regeneration is carrying on in the soul. So if a man have the life of God in his soul, and just a sufficiency of food and raiment to preserve and not burden life, he has what God calls great gain, an abundant portion.

7. We brought nothing into this world. There are some sayings in Seneca which are almost verbatim with this of Paul: "No man is born rich; everyone that comes into the world is commanded to be content with food and raiment."

8. Having food and raiment let us be therewith content. Let us consider this a "competency." The word which we translate raiment signifies "covering" in general; and here means house or lodging, as well as clothing.

9. But they that will be rich. The words are emphatic, and refer to persons who are "determined" to get riches.

And into many foolish and hurtful lusts. The whole conduct of such a person is a tissue of folly; scraping, gathering, and heaping up riches, and scarcely affording to take the necessaries of life out of them for himself. These lusts or desires are not only foolish, but they are hurtful. The mind is debased and narrowed by them; benevolent and generous feelings become extinct; charity perishes; and selfishness, the last and lowest principle in mental degradation, absorbs the soul. For these foolish and hurtful lusts . . . drown men in destruction and perdition—the soul is destroyed by them here and brought through them into a state of perdition hereafter.

10. The love of money is the root of all evil. Perhaps it would be better to translate "of all these evils"; i.e., the evils enumerated above; for it cannot be true that the love of money is the root of all evil. It certainly was not the root whence the transgression of Adam sprang, but it is the root whence all the evils mentioned in the preceding verse spring. This text has been often very incautiously quoted; for how often do we hear, "The Scripture says, Money is the root of all evil"! No, the Scripture says no such thing. Money is the root of no evil, nor is it an evil of any kind; but the love of it is the root of all the evils mentioned here. While some coveted after. "Insatiably desiring." Have erred from the faith. Have "totally erred"—have made a most fatal and ruinous departure from the religion of Christ. And pierced themselves through with many sorrows. The word signifies to be "transfixed in every part"; and is an allusion to one of those "snares" mentioned in v. 9, where a hole is dug in the earth and filled full of sharp stakes, and being slightly covered over with turf, is not perceived; and whatever steps on it falls in and is pierced through and through with these sharp stakes, the "many torments" mentioned by the apostle.

11. But thou, O man of God. You who have taken God for your Portion, and are seeking a city that has foundations, flee these things. Escape for your life. Even you are not out of the reach of the love of money. Follow after righteousness—justice and uprightness in all your dealings with men. Godliness—a thorough conformity to the image of God and the mind of Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

He exhorts him to do the part of a soldier. Those who will get to heaven must fight their way thither. It is a good fight, it is a good cause, and it will have a good issue. It is the fight of faith. Eternal life is the crown proposed to us. This we must lay hold on, as those that are afraid of coming short of it and losing it. Lay hold, and take heed of losing your hold.

He reminds him of the confession that he himself had made, v. 12. The obligation of that was still upon him, and he must live up to that.

I. He gives him a solemn charge. He charges him as he will answer it at the great day to that God whose eyes are upon us all, who sees what we are and what we do. This should quicken us to the service of God that we serve a God who quickens all things. He charges him before Christ Jesus. Christ died not only as a sacrifice, but as a martyr; and he witnessed a good confession when he was arraigned before Pilate. That good confession of his before Pilate, My kingdom is not of this world, should be effectual to draw off all his followers from the love of this world.

He reminds him of Christ's second coming. The Lord Jesus Christ will appear, and it will be a glorious appearing. Ministers should have an eye to this appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, and, till his appearing, they are to keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable. The appearing of Christ is certain, but it is not for us to know the time and season of it. Let this suffice us, that in time he will show it.

1. Concerning Christ and God the Father the apostle here speaks great things. God is the only Potentate; the powers of earthly princes are all derived from him. He is the blessed and the only Potentate, infinitely happy. He only has immortality. He dwells in inaccessible light. No man can get to heaven but those whom he is pleased to bring thither, and admit into his kingdom. He is invisible. It is impossible that mortal eyes should bear the brightness of the divine glory. No man can see God and live.

2. He concludes with a doxology. What an evil is sin when committed against such a God! What are we then, that the blessed God, the King of kings and Lord of lords, should seek after us? Blessed are those who are admitted to dwell with this great and blessed Potentate.

more in relation to our fellow man; piety ("godliness") to God; faith is the root of both (Note, Titus 2:12). love—by which "faith worketh." patience—enduring perseverance amidst trials. meekness—The oldest MSS. read, "meek-spiritedness," viz., towards the opponents of the Gospel. 12. Fight the good fight—BIRKS thinks this Epistle was written from Corinth, where contests in the national games recurred at stated seasons, which will account for the allusion here as in I Corinthians 9:24-26. Contrast "strifes of words" (vs. 4). Cf. ch. 1:18; II Tim. 4:7. The "good profession" is connected with the "good fight" (Ps. 60:4). lay hold on eternal life—the crown, or garland, the prize of victory, laid hold of by the winner in the good fight (II Tim. 4: 7, 8; Phil. 3:12-14). "Fight (lit., 'strive') with such striving earnestness as to lay hold on the prize, eternal life." also—not in the oldest MSS. professed a good profession—Greek, "didst confess THE good confession," viz., the Christian confession (as the Greek word is the same in this verse as that for "confession" in vs. 13, probably the profession here is the confession that Christ's kingdom is the kingdom of the truth, John 18:36, 37), at thy being set apart to thy ministerial function (whether in general, or as overseer at Ephesus): the same occasion as is referred to in ch. 1:18; 4:14; II Tim. 1: 4. before many witnesses—who would testify against thee if thou shouldest fall away [BENGEL]. 13. quickeneth all things—i.e., "maketh alive." But the oldest MSS. read, "preserveth alive"; as the same Greek means in Acts 7:19; cf. Nehemiah 9:6. He urges Timothy to faithfulness here by the present manifestation of God's power in preserving all things, as in vs. 14, by the future manifestation of God's power at the appearing of Christ. The assurance that "eternal life," vs. 12, will be the result of "fighting the good fight," rests on the fulness and power of Him who is the God of all life, present and to come. witnessed—It was the Lord's part to witness, Timothy's part to confess (or "profess," vs. 12) "the good confession" [BENGEL]. The confession was His testimony that He was King, and His kingdom that of the truth (vs. 15; Note, vs. 12; Matt. 27:11). Christ, in attesting, or bearing witness to this truth, attested the truth of the whole of Christianity. Timothy's profession, or confession, included therefore the whole of the Christian truth. 14. keep this commandment—Greek, "the commandment," i.e., the Gospel rule of life (ch. 1:5; John 13:34; II Pet. 2:21; 3:2). without spot, unrebukeable—agreeing with "thou." Keep the commandment and so be without spot . . . . "Pure" (ch. 5:22; Eph. 5:27; Jas. 1:27; II Pet. 3:14). until the appearing of . . . Christ—His coming in person (II Thess. 2:8; Titus 2:13). Believers then used in their practice to set before themselves the day of Christ as near at hand; we, the hour of death [BENGEL]. The fact has in all ages of the Church been certain, the time as uncertain to Paul, as it is to us; hence, vs. 15, he says, "in HIS times": the Church's true attitude is that of continual expectation of her Lord's return (I Cor. 1:8; Phil. 1:6, 10). 15. in his times—Greek, "His own [fitting] times" (Acts 1:7). The plural implies successive stages in the manifestation of the kingdom of God, each having its own appropriate time, the regulating principle and knowledge of which rests with the Father (ch. 2: 6; II Tim. 1:9; Titus 1:3; Heb. 1:1). he shall show—"display": an expression appropriate in reference to His "APPEARING," which is stronger than His "coming," and implies its visibility; "manifest": make visible (cf. Acts 3:20): "He" is the Father (vs. 16). blessed—in Himself: so about to be the source of blessing to His people at Christ appearing, whence flows their "blessed hope" (ch. 1:11; Titus 2:13). only—(John 17:3; Rom. 16:27; Rev. 15:4). King of kings—elsewhere applied also to Jesus (Rev. 1:5; 17:14; 19:16). 16. Who only hath immortality—in His own essence, not merely at the will of another, as all other immortal beings [JUSTIN MARTYR, Quæst ad Orthod., 61]. dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto—After life comes mention of light, as in John 1:4. That light is unapproachable to creatures, except in so far as they are admitted by Him, and as He goes forth to them [BENGEL]. It is unapproachable on account of its exceeding brightness [THEOPHYLACT]. If one cannot gaze steadfastly at the sun, which is but a small part of creation, by reason of its exceeding heat and power, how much less can mortal man gaze at the inexpressible glory of God [THEOPHYLACT, ad Autolycus] (Ps. 104:2; I John 1:5). no man hath seen—(Exod. 23:20; John 1:18; Col. 1:15; Heb. 11:27; I John 4:12). Perhaps even in the perfect state no creature shall fully see God. Still the Faith in Jesus, and in all that He has spoken; and "fidelity" to the talents you have received and the office with which you are entrusted. Love to God and all mankind. Patience in all trials and afflictions. Meekness. Bearing up with an even mind under all adversities and contradictions.

12. Fight the good fight of faith. "Agonize the good agony." You have a contest to sustain in which your honor, your life, your soul, are at stake. Lay hold on eternal life. All this is in allusion to the exercises in the public Grecian games. Fight, conquer, and seize upon the prize; carry off the crown of eternal life! Whereunto thou art also called. The allusion to the public games is still carried on. You have been called into this palaestra; you have been accepted as one proper to enter the lists with any antagonists that may offer; "in the presence of many witnesses" you have taken the necessary engagements upon yourself, and submitted to be governed by the laws of the stadium; many eyes are upon you, to see whether you will fight manfully and be faithful.

13. I give thee charge. This is similar to that in v. 21 of the preceding chapter.

A good confession. The confession made by Christ before Pontius Pilate is that He was Messiah, the King, but that His kingdom was not of this world; and that hereafter He should be seen coming in the clouds of heaven to judge the quick and dead. See John xviii. 36-37 and Mark xiv. 61-62.

14. That thou keep this commandment without spot. Two things are mentioned here: (1) That the commandment itself, the whole doctrine of Christ, should be kept entire. (2) That his life should be agreeable to that doctrine. Keep it without spot—let there be no blot on the sacred Book; add nothing to it; take nothing from it; change nothing in it. Deliver down to your successors the truth as you have had it from God himself. Unrebukeable. Let there be nothing in your conduct or spirit contrary to this truth. Keep the truth, and the truth will keep you. Until the appearing of our Lord. Hand it down pure and let your conduct be a comment on it, that it may continue in the world and in the Church till the coming of Christ.

15. Which in his times he shall shew. Jesus will appear in the most proper time, the time which the infinite God in His wisdom has appointed for the second coming of His Son. The blessed and only Potentate. Potentate is applied to secular governors; but none of these can be styled "the happy and only One"; the King of kings, or "the King over all kings"; and "the Lord over all lords or rulers." These are titles which could not be given to any mortals. This is made more specific by the verse following.

16. Who only hath immortality. All beings that are not eternal must be mutable; but there can be only one eternal Being, that is, God; and He only can have immortality. Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto. All this is said by the apostle in three words: "inhabiting unapproachable light." Such is the excessive glory of God that neither angel nor man can approach it. Whom no man hath seen, nor can see. Moses himself could only see the symbol of the Divine Presence, but the face of God no man could ever see. Because He is infinite and eternal, therefore He is incomprehensible; and if incomprehensible to the mind, consequently invisible to the eye. To whom, as the Author of being and the Dispenser of all good, be ascribed honour and power—the sole authority of all-pervading, all-superintending, all-preserving, and everlasting might.

IV. The apostle adds a lesson for rich people, v. 17–19.

1. Timothy must charge those that are rich to beware of the temptations, and improve the opportunities of their prosperous estate. He must caution them to take heed of pride. He must caution them against vain confidence in their wealth. Nothing is more uncertain than the wealth of this world; many have had much of it one day and been stripped of all the next.

Those who are rich must see God giving them their riches, and giving them to enjoy them richly; for many have riches, but enjoy them poorly, not having a heart to use them.

He must charge them to do good with what they have. Those are truly rich who are rich in good works. He must charge them to think of another world, and prepare for that which is to come by works of charity.

2. Ministers must not be afraid of the rich. They must caution them against pride, and vain confidence in their riches. A lesson for ministers in the charge given to Timothy: Keep that which is committed to thy trust. Every minister is a trustee. The truths of God, the ordinances of God, keep these. Keep close to the written word, for that is committed to our trust.

Some who have been very proud of their learning, their science, which is falsely so called, have by that been drawn away from the faith of Christ, which is a good reason why we should keep to the plain word of the gospel. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust! as if he had said, "I cannot conclude without charging thee again; whatever thou doest, be sure to keep this trust, for it is too great a trust to be betrayed." That science which opposes the truth of the gospel is falsely so called. Those who are for advancing reason above faith are in danger of leaving faith.

V. Our apostle concludes with a solemn prayer and benediction. Grace is an earnest, yea, a beginning, of glory; for, wherever God gives grace, he will give glory. Grace be with you all. Amen.

saints shall, in some sense, have the blessedness of seeing Him, which is denied to mere man (Matt. 5: 8; I Cor. 13:12; I John 3:2; Rev. 22:4). rich in this world—constrasted with the riches of the future kingdom to be the portion of believers at Christ's "appearing," vs. 14. high-minded—often the character of the rich (see Rom. 12:16). trust—Greek, "to have their trust resting." in . . . in—rather, "upon . . . upon," as the oldest MSS. uncertain riches—rather as Greek, "the uncertainty of riches." They who rest their trust on riches, rest trust on uncertainty itself (Prov. 23:5). Now they belong to one person, now to another, and that which has many masters is possessed by none [THEODORET]. living God—The best MSS. and versions omit "living." He who trusts in riches transfers to them the duty he owes to God [CALVIN]. who giveth—Greek, "affordeth." all things richly—temporal and eternal, for the body and for the soul. In order to be truly rich, seek to be blessed of, and in, God (Prov. 10:22; II Pet. 1:3). to enjoy—Greek, "for enjoyment." Not that the heart may cleave to them as its idol and trust (ch. 4:3). Enjoyment consists in giving, not in holding fast. Nonemployment should be far removed, as from man, so from his resources (Jas. 5:2, 3) [BENGEL]. 18. do good—like God Himself (Ps. 119:68; Acts 14:17) and Christ (Acts 10:38). TITTMANN translates, "to do," or "act well"; as the Greek for "to be beneficent" is a distinct word, agathopoiein. rich in good works—so "rich in faith," which produces good works (Jas. 2:5). Contrasted with "rich in this world," vs. 17. Lit., it is "rich in honorable (right) works." Greek, kalois, ergois, are works good or right in themselves: agathois, good to another. ready to distribute—free givers [ALFORD]; the heart not cleaving to possessions, but ready to impart to others. willing to communicate—ready contributors [ALFORD]: liberal in admitting others to share our goods in common with ourselves (Gal. 6:6; Heb. 13:16). 19. Laying up in store—"therefrom (i.e., by this means [ALFORD]; but BENGEL makes the Greek apo mean laying apart against a future time), laying up for themselves as a treasure" [ALFORD] (Matt. 6:19, 20). This is a treasure which we act wisely in laying up in store, whereas the wisest thing we can do with earthly treasures is "to distribute" them and give others a share of them (vs. 18). good foundation—(Note, ch. 3:13; Luke 6:48; I Cor. 3:11). The sure reversion of the future heavenly inheritance: earthly riches scattered in faith lay up in store a sure increase of heavenly riches. We gather by scattering (Prov. 11:24; 13:7; Luke 16:9). that . . . eternal life—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "that which is really life," its joys being solid and enduring (Ps. 16:11).

O Timothy—a personal appeal, marking at once his affection for Timothy, and his prescience of the coming heresies. keep—from spiritual thieves, and from enemies who will, while men sleep, sow tares amidst the good seed sown by the Son of man. that which is committed to thy trust—Greek, "the deposit" (ch. 1:18; II Tim. 1:12, 14; 2:2). The true or sound doctrine to be taught, as opposed to the science falsely so called, which leads to error concerning the faith (vs. 21). "It is not thine: it is another's property with which thou hast been entrusted: Diminish it not at all" [CHRYSOSTOM] avoiding—"turning away from" (cf. II Tim. 3:4). Even as they have "turned away from the truth" (ch. 1:6; 5:15; II Tim. 4:4). profane—(ch. 4:7; II Tim. 2:16). vain—Greek, "empty": mere "strifes of words," vs. 4, producing no moral fruit. oppositions—dialectic antithesis of the false teachers [ALFORD]. WIESINGER, not so probably, "oppositions to the sound doctrine." I think it likely germs existed already of the heresy of dualistic oppositions, viz., between the good and evil principle, afterwards fully developed in Gnosticism. Contrast Paul's just antithesis (ch. 3:16; 6:5, 6; II Tim. 2:15-23). science falsely so called—where there is not faith, there is not knowledge [CHRYSOSTOM]. There was true "knowledge," a special gift of the Spirit, which was abused by some (I Cor. 8:1; 12:8; 14:6). 21. Which some professing—viz., professing these oppositions of science falsely so called. erred—(Note, ch. 1:6; 2:11—lit., "missed the mark" (II Tim. 3:7, 8). True sagacity is inseparable from faith. Grace—Greek, "the grace," viz., of God, for which we Christians look, and in which we stand [ALFORD]. be with thee—He restricts the salutation to Timothy, as the Epistle was not to be read in public [BENGEL]. But the oldest MSS. read, "be with you"; and the "thee" may be a transcriber's alteration to harmonize with II Timothy 4:22; Titus 3:15. Amen—omitted in the oldest MSS.

ADAM CLARKE

17. Charge them that are rich. He had before, in vv. 9-10, given them a very awful lesson concerning their obtaining riches; and now he gives them one equally so concerning their use of them. That they be not highminded. That they do not value themselves on account of their wealth, for this adds nothing to mind or moral worth. Nor trust in uncertain riches. The uncertainty of riches; things which are never at a stay, are ever changing, and seldom continue long with one proprietor. Therefore, as well as on many other accounts, they are not to be trusted in; they cannot give happiness, because they are not fixed and permanent; neither can they meet the wishes of an immortal spirit. But in the living God, who is the unchangeable Fountain of perfection. Who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. Who not only has all good, but dispenses it liberally for the supply of the wants of all His creatures; and He does not give merely what is necessary, but He gives what tends to render life comfortable. The comforts of life come from God, as well as the necessaries. He not only gives us a bare subsistence, but He gives us enjoyments.

18. That they do good. That they relieve the wants of their fellow creatures, according to the abundance which God has given them—the highest luxury a human being can enjoy on this side of the grave. Rich in good works. That their good works may be as abundant as their riches. Ready to distribute. That they give nothing through partiality or favor, but be guided in their distribution by the necessities of the objects presented to them; and that they confine not their charity at home, but scatter it abroad. Willing to communicate. Bringing every poor person into a state of fellowship with themselves.

19. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation. Paul seems to have borrowed this form of speech from Tobit. See chap. iv. 8-9: "If thou hast abundance, give alms accordingly: if thou hast but a little, be not afraid to give according to that little: for thou treasurest up a good reward for thyself against the day of necessity."

20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust. This is another repetition of the apostolic charge. (See chap. i. 5, 18-19; iv. 6-7, 14-16; v. 21; vi. 13.) Carefully preserve that doctrine which I have delivered to you. Nothing can be more solemn and affectionate than this charge. Avoiding profane and vain babblings. See on chap. i. 4 and iv. 7.

21. Which some professing. Which inspired knowledge some pretending to, have set up Levitical rites in opposition to the great Christian Sacrifice, and consequently have erred concerning the faith—have completely mistaken the whole design of the gospel. Grace be with thee. May the favor and influence of God be with you, and preserve you from these and all other errors! Amen. This word, as in former cases, is wanting in the most ancient MSS. In a majority of cases it appears to have been added by different transcribers nearly in the same way in which we add the word Finis, simply to indicate the end of the work.

This second epistle Paul wrote to Timothy from Rome when he was a prisoner there and in danger of his life; "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand" (4:6). He had been brought before the emperor Nero, which he calls "his first answer, when no man stood with him, but all men forsook him" (4:16). And interpreters agree that this was the last epistle he wrote. Where Timothy now was is not certain.

CHAPTER 1

I. The inscription of the epistle. The gospel is the promise of life in Christ Jesus; life is the end, and Christ the way. Paul was an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God; his commission to be an apostle was not by the will of man. God called him to be an apostle. We have the promise of life. This, as well as all other promises, is in and through Jesus Christ. The grace, mercy, and peace, which Timothy wanted, comes from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. The best want these blessings, and they are the best we can ask for our dearly-beloved friends.

II. Paul's thanksgiving to God for Timothy's faith and holiness. Paul was much in prayer, he prayed night and day. Prayer was his constant business, and he never forgot his friends in his prayers, as we often do. It was a comfort to him that he was of the seed of those that served God; as likewise that he had served him with a pure conscience. Timothy was sorry to part with Paul, he wept at parting, and therefore Paul desired to see him again, because he had perceived by that what a true affection he had for him.

Vss. 1-18. ADDRESS: THANKFUL EXPRESSION OF LOVE AND DESIRE TO SEE HIM: REMEMBRANCE OF HIS FAITH AND THAT OF HIS MOTHER AND GRANDMOTHER. EXHORTATION TO STIR UP THE GIFT OF GOD IN HIM, AND NOT SHRINK FROM AFFLICTION, ENFORCED BY THE CONSIDERATION OF THE FREENESS OF GOD'S GRACE IN OUR GOSPEL CALLING, AND BY THE APOSTLE'S EXAMPLE. THE DEFECTION OF MANY: THE STEADFASTNESS OF ONESIPHORUS. 1. This Epistle is the last testament and swanlike death-song of Paul [BENGEL]. according to the promise of life . . . in Christ—Paul's apostleship is in order to carry into effect this promise. Cf. "according to the faith . . . in hope of eternal life . . . promise . . ." (Titus 1:1, 2). This "promise of life in Christ" (cf. vs. 10; ch. 2:8) was needed to nerve Timothy to fortitude amidst trials, and to boldness in undertaking the journey to Rome, which would be attended with much risk (vs. 8). 2. my dearly beloved son—In I Timothy 1:2, and Titus 1:4, written at an earlier period than this Epistle, the expression used is in the Greek, "my genuine son." I thank—Greek, "I feel gratitude to God." whom I serve from my forefathers—whom I serve (Rom. 1:9) as did my forefathers. He does not mean to put on the same footing the Jewish and Christian service of God; but simply to assert his own conscientious service of God as he had received it from his progenitors (not Abraham, Isaac, etc., whom he calls "the fathers," not "progenitors" as the Greek is here; Rom. 9:5). The memory of those who had gone before to whom he is about to be gathered, is now, on the eve of death, pleasant to him; hence also, he calls to mind the faith of the mother and grandmother of Timothy; as he walks in the faith of his forefathers (Acts 23:1; 24:14; 26:6, 7; 28:20), so Timothy should persevere firmly in the faith of his parent and grandparent. I have remembrance of thee—"how unceasing I make my mention concerning thee" (cf. Philemon 4). The cause of Paul's feeling thankful is, not that he remembers Timothy unceasingly in his prayers, but for what Timothy is in faith (vs. 5) and graces; cf. Romans 1:8, 9, from which supply the elliptical sentence thus, "I thank God [for thee, for God is my witness] whom I serve . . . that (or how) without ceasing I have remembrance (or make mention) of thee . . . ." night and day—(Note, I Tim. 5:5). 4. desiring—Greek, "with yearning as for one much missed." mindful of thy tears—not only at our parting (Acts 20:37), but also often when under pious feelings. that I may be filled with joy—to be joined with "desiring to see thee" (Rom. 1:11, 12; 15:32). 5. When I call to remembrance . . .—This

1. Paul an apostle. Paul at once shows his office, the authority on which he held it, and the end for which it was given him. He was an apostle—an extraordinary ambassador from heaven. He had his apostleship by the will of God—according to the counsel and design of God's infinite wisdom and goodness. And he was appointed that he might proclaim that eternal life which God had in view for mankind by the incarnation of His Son, Jesus Christ, and which was the end of all the promises He had made to men and the commandments He had delivered to all His prophets since the world began.

3. Whom I serve from my forefathers. Being born a Jew, I was carefully educated in the knowledge of the true God and the proper manner of worshipping Him. With pure conscience. Ever aiming to please Him, even in the time when through ignorance I persecuted the Church.

Without ceasing I have remembrance of thee. The apostle thanks God that he has constant remembrance of Timothy in his prayers. It is a very rare thing now in the Christian Church that a man particularly thanks God that he is enabled to pray for others.

4. Being mindful of thy tears. Whether the apostle refers to the affecting parting with the Ephesian church, mentioned in Acts xx. 37, or to the deep impressions made on Timothy's heart when he instructed him in the doctrine of Christ crucified, or to some interview between themselves, it is not certainly known. The mention of this by the apostle is no small proof of his most affectionate regard for Timothy, whom he appears to have loved as a father loves his only son.

MATTHEW HENRY

He thanks God that Timothy kept up the religion of his ancestors, v. 5. It is a comfortable thing when children imitate the faith and holiness of their godly parents, and tread in their steps. The faith that dwells in real believers is unfeigned; it is a faith that will stand the trial, and it dwells in them as a living principle. It was the matter of Paul's thanksgiving that Timothy inherited the faith of his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois.

Verses 6–14

Exhortation and excitation of Timothy to his duty (v. 6). The best men need remembrancers.

I. Stir up the gift that is in them as fire under the embers.

Use gifts, and have gifts. He must take all opportunities to use these gifts, for that is the best way of increasing them.

The great hindrance of usefulness in the increase of our gifts is slavish fear. Paul therefore warns Timothy against this, v. 7. God hath delivered us from the spirit of fear, and hath given us the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The spirit of power, or of courage and resolution; the spirit of love to God which will set us above the fear of man, and the spirit of a sound mind, or quietness of mind, for we are oftentimes discouraged in our work by the creatures of our own imagination, which a sober, thinking mind would obviate.

II. He exhorts him to count upon afflictions, and get ready for them. Be not thou ashamed of the gospel.

increased his "desire to see" Timothy. The oldest MSS. read, "When I called to remembrance"; implying that some recent incident (perhaps the contrasted cowardice of the hypocrite Demas, who forsook him) had reminded him of the sincerity of Timothy's faith. faith that is in thee—ALFORD translates, "that was in thee." He remembers Timothy's faith in the past as a fact; its present existence in him is only matter of his confident persuasion or hope. which—Greek, "such as." dwelt—"made its dwelling" or abode (John 14:23). The past tense implies they were now dead. first—before it dwelt in thee. She was the furthest back of the progenitors of Timothy whom Paul knew. mother Eunice—a believing Jewess; but his father was a Greek, i.e., a heathen (Acts 16:1). persuaded that—it dwells, or it shall dwell "in thee also." The mention of the faith of his mother and grandmother is designed as an incentive to stir up his faith. 6. Wherefore—Greek, "For which cause," viz., because thou hast inherited, didst once possess, and I trust ["am persuaded"] still dost possess, such unfeigned faith [ALFORD]. stir up—lit., "rekindle," "revive the spark of"; the opposite of "quench" or extinguish (I Thess. 5:19). Paul does not doubt the existence of real faith in Timothy, but he desires it to be put into active exercise. Timothy seems to have become somewhat remiss from being so long without Paul (ch. 2:22). gift of God—the spiritual grace received for his ministerial office, either at his original ordination, or at his consecration to the particular office of superintending the Ephesian Church (Note, I Tim. 4:14), imparting fearlessness, power, love, and a sound mind (vs. 7). by the putting on of my hands—In I Timothy 4:14, it is "with [not by] the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." The apostle was chief in the ordination, and to him "BY" is applied. The presbytery were his assistants; so "with," implying merely accompaniment, is said of them. Paul was the instrument in Timothy's ordination and reception of the grace then conferred; the presbyters were the concurrent participants in the act of ordination; so the Greek, dia and meta. So in ordinations by a bishop in our days, he does the principal act; they join in laying on hands with him. 7. For . . .—implying that Timothy needed the exhortation "to stir up the gift of God in him," being constitutionally timid: "For God did not give us (so the Greek, viz., at our ordination or consecration) the spirit of fear." The spirit which He gave us, was not the spirit of timidity (lit., "cowardice," which is weakness), but of "power" (exhibited in a fearless "testimony" for Christ, vs. 8). "Power is the invariable accompaniment of the gift of the Holy Ghost. Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8; cf. 6:6, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," with vs. 8," full of faith and power." Fear is the result of "the spirit of bondage" (Rom. 8:15). Fear within exaggerates the causes of fear without. "The spirit of power" is the spirit of man dwelt in by the Spirit of God imparting power; this power "casteth out fear" from ourselves, and stimulates us to try to cast it out of others (I John 4:18). love—which moves the believer while "speaking the truth" with power, when giving his testimony for Christ (vs. 8), at the same time to do so "in love" (Eph. 4:15). a sound mind—The Greek, is rather, "the bringing of men to a sound mind" [WAHL]. BENGEL supports English Version, "a sound mind," or "sober-mindedness"; a duty to which a young man like Timothy especially needed to be exhorted (ch. 2:22; I Tim. 4:12; Titus 2:4, 6). So Paul urges him, in ch. 2:4, to give up worldly entanglements, which as thorns (Luke 8:14) choke the word. These three gifts are preferable to any miraculous powers whatever. 8. therefore—seeing that God hath given us such a spirit, not that of fear. Be not thou . . . ashamed—I agree with ELLICOTT, in opposition to ALFORD, that the Greek subjunctive here, with the negative, implies action completed at one time, not continued action, which the present imperative would express; thus implying that Timothy had not decidedly yet evinced such feeling of shame; though I think, Paul, amidst the desertion of others who once promised fair, and from being aware of Timothy's constitutional timidity (Note, vs. 7), felt it necessary to stir him up and guard him against the possibility of unchristian dereliction of duty as to bold confession of Christ. Shame (vs. 8) is the companion of fear (vs. 7); if fear be overcome, false shame flees [BENGEL]. Paul himself (vs. 12), and Onesiphorus (vs. 16), were instances of fearless profession removing false shame. He presents in contrast sad instances of fear and shame (vs. 15). of the testimony of our Lord—of the testimony which thou art bound to give in the cause of our Lord; he says "our," to connect Timothy and him-

5. The unfeigned faith that is in thee. Timothy had given the fullest proof of the sincerity of his conversion and of the purity of his faith. Which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois. In Acts xvi. 1, we are informed that Paul "came . . . to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek." Paul, in mentioning the grandmother, mother, and son, passes by the father in silence; which intimates that either the father remained in his unconverted state or was now dead. Lois, the grandmother, appears to have been the first convert to Christianity; she instructed her daughter, Eunice, and both brought up Timothy in the Christian faith.

6. Stir up the gift of God, which is in thee. The gift which Timothy had received was the Holy Spirit; and through Him, a particular power to preach and defend the truth. This gift is represented here under the notion of a fire, which if it be not frequently stirred up and fresh fuel added to it will go out. This is the precise idea which the apostle had in his mind; hence the term which signifies to "stir up the fire; to add fresh fuel to it." By the putting on of my hands. See on 1 Tim. iv. 14.

7. God hath not given us the spirit of fear. Here is an allusion to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. This was communicated with such terrible majesty as to engender fear in all the Israelites; even Moses, on the occasion, "did exceedingly fear and tremble." The gospel was ushered in, in a much milder manner; everything was placed on a level with the human intellect and within reach of every human spirit. Nothing was terrific, nothing forbidding; but all was inviting. The very spirit and genius of it was a spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind. But of power, to work miracles, to confound enemies, to support us in trials, and enable us to do that which is lawful and right in His sight. And of love, which enables us to hear, believe, hope, and endure all things; and is the incentive to all obedience. Of a sound mind, of "self-possession," according to some. But a sound mind implies much more; it means a clear understanding, a sound judgment, a rectified will, holy passions, heavenly tempers; in a word, the whole soul harmonized in all its powers and faculties, and completely regulated and influenced so as to think, speak, and act aright in all things.

8. Be not . . . ashamed of the testimony. The testimony of Christ is the gospel in general, which proclaims Christ crucified and redemption through His blood.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. We must not be ashamed of those who are suffering for the gospel of Christ. Timothy must not be ashamed of good old Paul, though he was now in bonds. The gospel is the testimony of our Lord; in and by this he bears testimony of himself to us, and by professing our adherence to it we bear testimony of him and for him. Paul was the Lord's prisoner. For his sake he was bound with a chain. If we are ashamed of either now, Christ will be ashamed of us hereafter. "Expect afflictions for the gospel's sake, be willing to take thy lot with the suffering saints in this world. Be partaker of the afflictions of the gospel."

2. He takes notice what great things God has donc for us by the gospel, v. 9, 10.

(1) The nature of that gospel and the glorious designs of it. The gospel aims at our salvation: and we must not think much to suffer for that which we hope to be saved by. It is designed for our sanctification. All who shall be saved hereafter are sanctified now. Wherever the call of the gospel is an effectual call, it is found to be a holy call.

The origin of it is the free grace and eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus. If we had merited it, it had been hard to suffer for it; but our salvation by it is of free grace, and therefore we must not think much to suffer for it. In Christ Jesus, for all the gifts that come from God to sinful man come in and through Christ Jesus. The gospel is the manifestation of this purpose and grace.

Did Jesus Christ suffer for it, and shall we think much to suffer for it? By the gospel of Christ death is abolished. Death once an enemy has become a friend; it is the gate by which we pass out of a troublesome, sinful world, into a world of perfect peace and purity. Death does not triumph over those who believe the gospel, but they triumph over it.

He has brought life and immortality to light by the gospel. He has brought it to light, not only set it before us, but offered it to us, by the gospel.

(2) Consider the example of blessed Paul, v. 11, 12. He was appointed to preach the gospel, and particularly appointed to teach the Gentiles.

He thought it a cause worth suffering for, and why should not Timothy think so too? No man needs to be afraid nor ashamed to suffer for the cause of the gospel. Good men often suffer many things for the best cause in the world. They need not be ashamed, the cause will bear them out. Those who trust in Christ know whom they have trusted.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

self together in the testimony which both should give for their common Lord. The testimony which Christ gave before Pilate (I Tim. 6:12, 13), is an incentive to the believer that he should, after His Lord's example, witness a good testimony or confession. nor of me his prisoner—The cause of God's servants is the cause of God Himself (Eph. 4:1). Timothy might easily be tempted to be ashamed of one in prison, especially as not only worldly shame, but great risk, attended any recognition of Paul the prisoner. be thou partaker—with me. of the gospel—rather, as Greek, "for the Gospel," i.e., suffered for the Gospel (ch. 2:3-5; Philemon 13). according to the power of God—exhibited in having saved and called us (vs. 9). God who has done the greater act of power (i.e., saved us), will surely do the less (carry us safe through afflictions borne for the Gospel). "Think not that thou hast to bear these afflictions by thine own power; nay, it is by the power of God. It was a greater exercise of power than His making the heaven, His persuading the world to embrace salvation" [CHRYSOSTOM]. 9. Who . . . called us—viz., God the Father (Gal. 1:6). The having "saved us" in His eternal purpose of "grace, given us in Christ before the world began," precedes his actual "calling" of us in due time with a call made effective to us by the Holy Spirit; therefore, "saved us" comes before "called us" (Rom. 8:28-30). holy calling—the actual call to a life of holiness. Hebrews 3:1, "heavenly calling" [TITTMANN, Synonyms]; whereas we were sinners and enemies (Eph. 1:18; 4:1). The call comes wholly from God and claims us wholly for God. "Holy" implies the separation of believers from the rest of the world unto God. not according to—not having regard to our works in His election and calling of grace (Rom. 9:11; Eph. 2:8, 9). his own purpose—The origination of salvation was of His own purpose, flowing from His own goodness, not for works of ours coming first, but wholly because of His own gratuitous, electing love [THEODORET and CALVIN]. grace . . . given us—in His everlasting purpose, regarded as the same as when actually accomplished in due time. in Christ—believers being regarded by God as IN HIM, with whom the Father makes the covenant of salvation (Eph. 1:4; 3:11). before the world began—Greek, "before the times (periods) of ages"; the enduring ages of which no end is contemplated (I Cor. 2:7; Eph. 3:11). 10. But . . . now . . . manifest—in contrast to its concealment heretofore in the eternal purpose of God "before the world began" (vs. 9; Col. 1:16; Titus 1:2, 3). appearing—the visible manifestation in the flesh. abolished death—Greek, "taken away the power from death" [TITTMANN]. The Greek article before "death" implies that Christ abolished death, not only in some particular instance, but in its very essence, being, and idea, as well as in all its aspects and consequences (John 11:26; Rom. 8:2, 38; I Cor. 15:26, 55; Heb. 2:14). The carrying out of the abolition of death into full effect is to be at the resurrection (Rev. 20: 14). The death of the body meanwhile is but temporary, and is made no account of by Christ and the apostles. brought . . . to light—making visible by the Gospel what was before hidden in God's purpose. life—of the Spirit, acting first on the soul here, about to act on the body also at the resurrection. immortality—Greek, "incorruptibility" of the new life, not merely of the risen body [ALFORD], (Rom. 8:11). through—by means of the Gospel, which brings to light the life and immortality purposed by God from eternity, but manifested now first to man by Christ, who in His own resurrection has given the pledge of His people's final triumph over death through Him 11. Whereunto—For the publication of which Gospel. I am appointed—Greek, "I was appointed." preacher—Greek, "herald." teacher of the Gentiles—(I Tim. 2:7). He brings forward his own example in this verse and vs. 12, as a pattern for Timothy, as a public "preacher," an "apostle," or missionary from place to place, and a "teacher" in private instructing His flock with patient perseverance. 12. For the which cause—For the Gospel cause of which I was appointed a preacher (vss. 10, 11). I also suffer—besides my active work as a missionary. ELLICOTT translates, "I suffer even these things"; the sufferings attendant on my being a prisoner (vss. 8, 15). I am not ashamed—neither be thou (vs. 8). for—Confidence as to the future drives away shame [BENGEL]. I know—though the world knows Him not (John 10:14; 17:25). whom—I know what a faithful, promisekeeping God He is (ch. 2:13). It is not, I know how I have believed, but, I know WHOM I have believed; a feeble faith may clasp a strong Saviour. believed—rather,

ADAM CLARKE

Nor of me his prisoner. When our friends are in power and credit, we can readily acknowledge them, and take opportunities to show that we have such and such connections; but when the person falls into disgrace or discredit, though we cannot pretend not to know him, yet we take care not to acknowledge him. This induced Cicero, in relation to friendships, to give for a maxim, "A true friend is known in adverse circumstances"; and from this we have borrowed our proverb, "A friend in need is a friend indeed." Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel. No parent could love a child better than Paul loved Timothy; and, behold! he who could wish him nothing but what was great, honorable, and good wishes him to be a partaker of the afflictions of the gospel! Because to suffer for Christ was the highest glory to which any human being in this state could arrive. The royal way to the crown of glory is by the cross of Christ. According to the power of God. While you have no more affliction than you have grace to sustain you, you can have no cause to complain. And God will take care that, if a faithful discharge of your duty shall expose you to afflictions, His power manifested in you shall be in proportion to your necessities. His load cannot be oppressive who is strengthened to bear it by the power of God.

9. Who hath saved us. From sin; the spirit of bondage, and all tormenting fear. This is the design of the gospel. And called us with an holy calling. Invited us to holiness and comfort here and to eternal glory hereafter. Not according to our works. We have not deserved any part of the good we have received, and can never merit one moment of the exceeding great and eternal weight of glory which is promised.

Before the world began. Before the Mosaic dispensation took place, God purposed the salvation of the Gentiles by Christ Jesus; and the Mosaic dispensation was intended only as the introducer of the gospel.

10. But is now made manifest. This purpose of God to save the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and call them to the same state of salvation by Jesus Christ, was, previously to the manifestation of Christ, generally hidden; and what was revealed of it was only through the means of types and ceremonies. Who hath abolished death. Who has "counterworked death." By death here we are not to understand merely natural death, but that corruption and decomposition which take place in consequence of it, and which would be naturally endless but for the work and energy of Christ. Brought life and immortality to light. The literal translation of the original is, "He hath illustrated life and incorruption by the gospel." Jesus Christ died and lay under the empire of death. He arose again from the dead and thus "illustrated" the doctrine of the resurrection. He took the same human body up into heaven, in the sight of His disciples, and ever appears in the presence of God for us; and thus has "illustrated" the doctrine of "incorruption."

11. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher. "A herald." And an apostle. Sent immediately from God to man. A teacher. One whose business it is to instruct men, and particularly the Gentiles, to whom he was especially sent; to proclaim the doctrines of eternal life, the resurrection and final incorruptibility of the human body; and, in a word, the salvation of both the body and soul of man by Christ Jesus.

12. I am not ashamed. Though I suffer for the gospel, I am not ashamed of the gospel; nor am I confounded in my expectation, His grace being at all times sufficient for me. For I know whom I have believed. I am well-acquainted with the goodness, mercy, and power of Christ, and know that I cannot confide in Him in vain.

MATTHEW HENRY

What must we commit to Christ? The salvation of our souls, and their preservation to the heavenly kingdom; and what we so commit to him he will keep. There is a day coming when we must give an account of our souls: now, if by an active obedient faith we commit it to Jesus Christ, we may be sure he is able to keep it.

III. He exhorts him to hold fast the form of sound words, v. 13. Adhere to it in opposition to all heresies and false doctrine. But how must it be held fast? Faith and love must go together; it is not enough to believe the sound words, but we must love them, believe their truth and love their goodness. It must be faith and love fastening upon Jesus Christ. Of hearing words, so it may read; there is a healing virtue in the word of God. To the same purport is v. 14. That good thing was the form of sound words, the Christian doctrine, which was committed to Timothy in his baptism, and in his ordination. The Christian doctrine is a trust committed to us. It is a good thing, of unspeakable value in itself, and which will be of unspeakable advantage to us. It is committed to us to be preserved pure and entire, and to be transmitted to those who shall come after us. Even those who are ever so well taught cannot keep what they have learned, any more than they could at first learn it, without the assistance of the Holy Spirit. We must not think to keep it by our own strength, but keep it by the Holy Ghost. The assistance and indwelling of the Holy Ghost do not exclude men's endeavours, but they very well consist together.

Verses 15–18

I. He mentions the apostasy of many from the doctrine of Christ, v. 15. He does not say that they had turned away from the doctrine of Christ, but they had turned away from him.

II. He mentions the constancy of Onesiphorus, v. 16. He often refreshed him and he was not ashamed of his chains. When Onesiphorus was at Rome he took care to seek Paul out, v. 17. A good man will seek opportunities of doing good. At Ephesus he had ministered to him, and been very kind to him. How Paul returns his kindness, v. 16–18. He repays him with his prayers.

III. He prays for Onesiphorus himself, as well as for his house: That he may find mercy in that day, in the day of death and of judgment. We need desire no more to make us happy than to find mercy of the Lord in that day. If you would have mercy then, you must seek for it now of the Lord. The best thing we can ask, either for ourselves or our friends, is that the Lord will grant to them that they may find mercy of the Lord in that day.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

"trusted"; carrying out the metaphor of a depositor depositing his pledge with one whom he trusts. am persuaded—(Rom. 8:38). he is able—in spite of so many foes around me. that which I have committed unto him—Greek, "my deposit"; the body, soul, and spirit, which I have deposited in God's safe keeping (I Thess. 5:23; I Pet. 4:19). So Christ Himself in dying (Luke 23:46). "God deposits with us His word; we deposit with God our spirit" [GROTIUS]. There is one deposit [His revelation] committed by God to us, which we ought to keep (vss. 13, 14) and transmit to others (ch. 2:2); there is another committed by God to us, which we should commit to His keeping, viz., ourselves and our heavenly portion. that day—the day of His appearing (vs. 18; ch. 4:8). 13. Hold fast the form—rather as Greek, "Have (i.e., keep) a pattern of sound (Greek, 'healthy') words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love." "Keep" suits the reference to a deposit in the context. The secondary position of the verb in the Greek forbids our taking it so strongly as English Version, "Hold fast." The Greek for "form" is translated "pattern" in I Timothy 1:16, the only other passage where it occurs. Have such a pattern drawn from my sound words, in opposition to the unsound doctrines so current at Ephesus, vividly impressed (WAHL translates it "delineation"; the verb implies "to make a lively and lasting impress") on thy mind. in faith and love—the element IN which my sound words had place, and in which thou art to have the vivid impression of them as thy inwardly delineated pattern, moulding conformably thy outward profession. So nearly BENGEL explains, I Timothy 3:9. 14. Translate as Greek, "That goodly deposit keep through the Holy Ghost," viz., "the sound words which I have committed to thee" (vs. 13; ch. 2:2). in us—in all believers, not merely in you and me. The indwelling Spirit enables us to keep from the robbers of the soul the deposit of His word committed to us by God. 15. all they which are in Asia—Proconsular Asia; "all who are there now, when they were in Rome (not "be" or are, but) turned from me" then; were "ashamed of my chain," in contrast to ONESIPHORUS; did not stand with me but forsook me (ch. 4:16). It is possible that the occasion of their turning from him was at his apprehension in Nicopolis, whither they had escorted him on his way to Rome, but from which they turned back to Asia. A hint to Timothy, now in Asia, not to be like them, but to imitate rather ONESIPHORUS, and to come to him (ch. 4:21). Phygellus and Hermogenes—specified perhaps, as being persons from whom such pusillanimous conduct could least be expected; or, as being well known to Timothy, and spoken of before in conversations between him and Paul, when the latter was in Asia Minor. 16. The Lord give mercy—even as ONESIPHORUS had abounded in works of mercy. the house of Onesiphorus—He himself was then absent from Ephesus, which accounts for the form of expression (ch. 4:19). His household would hardly retain his name after the master was dead, as BENGEL supposes him to have been. Nowhere has Paul prayers for the dead, which is fatal to the theory, favored by ALFORD also, that he was dead. God blesses not only the righteous man himself, but all his household. my chain—Paul in the second, as in his first imprisonment, was bound by a chain to the soldier who guarded him. 17. found me—in the crowded metropolis. So in turn "may he find mercy of the Lord in that day" when the whole universe shall be assembled. 18. grant unto him—as well as "unto his house" (vs. 16). the Lord—who rewards a kindness done to His disciples as if done to Himself (Matt. 25:45). of—from the Lord; "the Lord" is emphatically put instead of "from Himself," for solemnity and emphasis (II Thess. 3:5). in how many things—"how many acts of ministry he rendered." unto me—omitted in the oldest MSS., so that the "ministered" may include services rendered to others as well as to Paul. very well—rather as Greek, "Thou knowest better" (than I can tell thee, seeing that thou art more of a regular resident at Ephesus).

ADAM CLARKE

That which I have committed unto him. This is variously understood. Some think he means his life, which he had put, as it were, into the hands of Christ in order that he might receive it again in the resurrection, at the great day. Others think he means his faithful Creator, knowing that, although wicked men might be permitted to take away his life, yet they could not destroy his soul nor disturb its peace. Others think that he is speaking of the gospel, which he knows will be carefully preserved by the great Head of the Church. For though he shall be soon called to seal the truth with his blood, yet he knows that God will take care that the same truth shall be proclaimed to the world by others whom God shall raise up for that very purpose.

13. Hold fast the form. The word signifies the "sketch, plan, or outline" of a building, picture, etc.; and here refers to the plan of salvation which the apostle had taught Timothy.

In faith and love. Faith credits the divine doctrines. Love reduces them all to practice. Faith lays hold on Jesus Christ, and obtains that love by which every precept is cheerfully and effectually obeyed.

14. That good thing. The everlasting gospel. Keep by the Holy Ghost, for without a continual spiritual energy man can do nothing.

15. All they which are in Asia. It seems as if the apostle must refer to the Asiatic Christians which were then at Rome or had been lately there. Finding the apostle in disgrace and thinking it dangerous to own him or his cause, they neither visited him nor confessed Christianity. He cannot be speaking of any general defection of the Asiatic churches, but of those Asiatics who had professed a particular friendship for him. Phygellus and Hermogenes. These were two of the persons of whom he complains; but who they were or what office they held or whether they were anything but private Christians who had for a time ministered to Paul in prison and, when they found the state determined to destroy him, ceased to acknowledge him, we cannot tell.

16. The Lord give mercy. Onesiphorus had acknowledged him, and continued to do so; he and his house, or "family," ministered to him in prison, and were not ashamed of their imprisoned pastor nor of the cause for which he was in disgrace and suffering. As he showed mercy to the apostle, the apostle prays the Lord to show mercy to him.

17. When he was in Rome. Onesiphorus was no doubt an Asiatic who had frequent business at Rome; and when he came sought out the apostle, who, it is supposed, had been confined in some close and private prison, so that it was with great difficulty he could find him out. This man had entertained the apostle when he was at Ephesus, and now he sought him out at Rome. Pure love feels no loads. Here was a true friend, one "that sticketh closer than a brother."

18. The Lord grant . . . that he may find mercy of the Lord. Some think that this is a prayer to God the Father to communicate grace to him, that he might find mercy in the great day at the hand of Jesus Christ, the Judge. It is probably only a Hebraism for "God grant that he may here be so saved by divine grace that in the great day he may receive the mercy of the Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." See a similar form of expression, Gen. ix. 16; xix. 24; Exod. xxiv. 1-2.

Paul encourages Timothy to constancy and perseverance in his work, v. 1. Those who have work to do for God must strengthen themselves for it. Where there is the truth of grace there must be a labouring after the strength of grace. We have need to grow stronger and stronger in that which is good.

CHAPTER 2

VSS. 1-26. EXHORTATIONS; TO FAITHFULNESS AS A GOOD SOLDIER OF CHRIST; ERRORS TO BE SHUNNED; THE LORD'S SURE FOUNDATION; THE RIGHT SPIRIT FOR A SERVANT OF CHRIST. 1. Thou therefore—following my example (ch. 1:8, 12), and that of ONESIPHORUS (ch. 1:16-18), and shunning that of those who forsook me (ch. 1:15). my son—Children

CHAPTER 2

MATTHEW HENRY

Or it may be understood in opposition to our being strong in our own strength: "Be strong, not confiding in thy own sufficiency, but in the grace that is in Jesus Christ." There is grace enough in him for all of us. We must be strong in this grace; not in ourselves, or in the grace we have already received, but in the grace that is in him.

I. Timothy must count upon sufferings, even unto blood, and therefore he must train up others to succeed him in the ministry of the gospel, v. 2. He must lodge the gospel as a trust in their hands, and so commit to them the things which he had heard. Two things he must have an eye to in ordaining ministers: Their fidelity or integrity, and also their ministerial ability. They must not only be knowing themselves, but be apt to teach.

II. He must endure hardness (v. 3). All Christians, but especially ministers, are soldiers of Jesus Christ. The soldiers of Jesus Christ must approve themselves good soldiers, faithful to their captain, resolute in his cause. Those who would approve themselves good soldiers of Jesus Christ must endure hardness; we must count upon it in this world, and bear it patiently when it comes.

III He must not entangle himself in the affairs of this world, v 4. If we have given up ourselves to be Christ's soldiers, we must sit loose to this world; and though we must employ ourselves in the affairs of this life while we are here (we have something to do here), we must not entangle ourselves with those affairs. The great care of a soldier should be to please his general; so the great care of a Christian should be to please Christ.

IV. He must see to it that in carrying on the spiritual warfare he went by rule, that he observed the laws of war (v. 5). In doing that which is good we must take care that we do it in a right manner, that our good may not be evil spoken of. Those who do so shall be crowned at last.

V. He must be willing to wait for a recompence (v. 6). If we would be partakers of the fruits, we must labour. We must do the will of God, before we receive the promises.

The apostle further commends what he had said to the attention of Timothy. Timothy must be reminded to use his considering faculties about the things of God. Consideration is as necessary to a good conversation as to a sound conversion. He prays for him: The Lord give thee understanding in all things. The most intelligent man needs more and more of this gift. If he who gave the revelation in the word does not give the understanding in the heart, we are nothing.

Verses 8–13

I. To encourage Timothy in suffering, the apostle puts him in mind of the resurrection of Christ (v. 8). The consideration of it should make us faithful to our Christian profession. The incarnation and resurrection of Jesus Christ, heartily believed and rightly considered, will support a Christian under all sufferings in the present life.

II. Another thing to encourage him in suffering was that he had Paul for an example.

1. How the apostle suffered (v. 9). We must not think it strange if those who do well fare ill in this world, and if the best of men meet with the worst of treatment; but this was his comfort that the word of God was not bound. Persecuting powers cannot hinder the operation of the word of God upon men's hearts and consciences; that cannot be bound by any human force. This might encourage Timothy not to be afraid of bonds for the testimony of Jesus.

2. Why he suffered cheerfully, v. 10. Next to the salvation of our own souls we should be willing to do and suffer any thing to promote the salvation of the souls of others.

ought to imitate their father. be strong—lit., "be invested with power." Have power, and show thyself to have it; implying an abiding state of power. in the grace—the element IN which the believer's strength has place. Cf. ch. 1:7, "God hath given us the spirit of power." 2. among—Greek, "through," i.e., with the attestation (lit., "intervention") of many witnesses, viz., the presbyters and others present at his ordination or consecration (I Tim. 4:14; 6:12). commit—in trust, as a deposit (ch. 1:14). faithful—the quality most needed by those having a trust committed to them. who—Greek, "(persons) such as shall be competent to teach (them to) others also." Thus the way is prepared for inculcating the duty of faithful endurance (vss. 3-13). Thou shouldest consider as a motive to endurance, that thou hast not only to keep the deposit for thyself, but to transmit it unimpaired to others, who in their turn shall fulfil the same office.

3. Thou therefore endure hardness—The oldest MSS. have no "Thou therefore," and read, "Endure hardship with" (me). "Take thy share in suffering" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. 4. "No one while serving as a soldier." the affairs . . .—"the businesses of life" [ALFORD]; mercantile, or other than military. him who hath chosen him—the general who at the first enlisted him as a soldier. Paul himself worked at tent-making (Acts 18:3). Therefore what is prohibited here is, not all other save religious occupation, but the becoming entangled, or over-engrossed therewith. 5. And—"Moreover." strive for masteries—"strive in the games" [ALFORD]; viz., the great national games of Greece. yet is he not crowned, except—even though he gain the victory. strive lawfully—observing all the conditions of both the contest (keeping within the bounds of the course and stript of his clothes) and the preparation for it, viz., as to selfdenying diet, anointing, exercise, self-restraint, chastity, decorum, etc. (I Cor. 9:24-27). 6. must be first partaker—The right of first partaking of the fruits belongs to him who is laboring; do not thou, therefore, relax thy labors, as thou wouldest be foremost in partaking of the reward. CONYBEARE explains "first," before the idler. 7. Consider the force of the illustrations I have given from the soldier, the contender in the games, and the husbandmen, as applying to thyself in thy ministry. and the Lord give thee . . .—The oldest MSS. read, "for the Lord will give thee understanding." Thou canst understand my meaning so as personally to apply it to thyself; for the Lord will give thee understanding when thou seekest it from Him "in all things." Not intellectual perception, but personal appropriation of the truths metaphorically expressed, was what he needed to be given him by the Lord. 8. Rather as Greek, "Remember Jesus Christ, raised from the dead." Remember Christ risen, so as to follow Him. As He was raised after death, so if thou wouldest share His risen "life," thou must now share His "death" (vs. 11). The Greek perfect passive participle, implies a permanent character acquired by Jesus as the risen Saviour, and our permanent interest in Him as such. Christ's resurrection is put prominently forward as being the truth now assailed (vs. 18), and the one best calculated to stimulate Timothy to steadfastness in sharing Paul's sufferings for the Gospel's sake (Note, vs. 3). of the seed of David—The one and only genealogy (as contrasted with the "endless genealogies," (I Tim. 1: 4) worth thinking of, for it proves Jesus to be the Messiah. my gospel—that which I always taught. 9. Wherein—in proclaiming which Gospel. suffer trouble—lit., "evil." I am a sufferer of evil as though I were a doer of evil. bonds—(ch. 1:16). word . . . not bound—Though my person is bound, my tongue and my pen are not (ch. 4:17; Acts 28: 31). Or he alludes not merely to his own proclamation of the Gospel, though in chains, but to the freedom of its circulation by others, even though his power of circulating it is now prescribed (Phil. 1: 18). He also hints to Timothy that he being free ought to be the more earnest in the service of it. 10. Therefore—Because of the anxiety I feel that the Gospel should be extended; that anxiety being implied in vs. 9. endure—not merely "I passively suffer," but "I actively and perseveringly endure," and "am ready to endure patiently all things." the elect's sakes—for the sake of the Church: all the members of Christ's spiritual body (Col. 1:24). they . . . also—as well as myself: both God's elect not yet converted and those already so. salvation . . . glory—not only salvation from wrath, but glory in reigning with Him eternally (vs. 12). Glory is the full expansion of salvation (Acts 2:47; Rom. 8: 21-24, 30; Heb. 9:28). So grace and glory (Ps. 84:

1. Be strong in the grace. Though the genuine import of the word grace is "favor," yet it often implies an active principle communicated from God; light directing how to act, and power enabling to act according to the light.

2. The things that thou hast heard of me. Those doctrines which I have preached the most publicly and which many persons can attest. But he seems to refer here to the doctrines delivered to him when, in the presence of many witnesses, he laid his hands upon him; see 1 Tim. vi. 12. Then the apostle gave him the proper form of sound words which he was to teach; and now he tells him to commit those truths to faithful men in the same way that they were committed to him, that the truth might be preserved in the Church, and holy men appointed successively to preach it.

3. Endure hardness. He considers a Christian minister under the notion of a soldier, not so much for his continual conflicts with the world, the devil, and the flesh, for these are in a certain sense common to all Christians, but for the hardships and difficulties to which he must be exposed who faithfully preaches the gospel of Christ.

4. No man that warreth entangleth. It is well remarked by Grotius, on this passage, that the legionary soldiers among the Romans were not permitted to engage in husbandry, merchandise, mechanical employments, or anything that might be inconsistent with their calling. He who will preach the gospel thoroughly, and wishes to give full proof of his ministry, had need to have no other work. He should be wholly in this thing, that his profiting may appear unto all.

5. If a man also strive for masteries. "If a man contend in the public games"—the Olympic or Isthmian games among the Greeks. Is he not crowned, though he may have conquered, except he strive lawfully, unless he enter according to the rules of the athletae, and act as these direct.

6. The husbandman that laboureth. That is: The husbandman must first till his ground before he can expect a crop; and he must till it according to the proper rules of agriculture, else he cannot have a crop.

7. Consider what I say. Apply my metaphors and similitudes in a proper manner. And the Lord give thee understanding. But instead of "may He give," several MSS., besides versions and fathers, have "He will give." Consider properly, and God will give you a proper understanding of all things that concern your own peace and the peace and prosperity of His Church. Think as well as read.

8. Remember that Jesus Christ. The apostle seems to say: Whatever tribulations or deaths may befall us, let us remember that Jesus Christ, who was slain by the Jews, rose again from the dead, and His resurrection is the proof and pledge of ours. According to my gospel. The false teaching of Hymenaeus and Philetus stated that the resurrection was past already. Paul preached the resurrection from the dead, and founded his doctrine on the resurrection and promise of Christ. This was his gospel; the other was of a different nature.

10. For the elect's sakes. For the sake of the Gentiles, elected by God's goodness to enjoy every privilege formerly possessed by the Jews, and, in addition to these, all the blessings of the gospel: the salvation of Christ here, and eternal glory hereafter.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. Another thing with which he encourages Timothy is the prospect of a future state.

1. Those who faithfully adhere to Christ, whatever it cost them, will certainly have the advantage of it in another world, v. 11. If we be dead to this world we shall go to live with him in a better world, to be for ever with him.

Those who suffer for Christ on earth shall reign with Christ in heaven, v. 12.

2. It is at our peril if we prove unfaithful to him. That man must needs be for ever miserable whom Christ disowns at last. This will certainly be the issue, whether we believe it or no (v. 13). If we be faithful to Christ, he will certainly be faithful to us. If we be false to him, he will be faithful to his threatenings. This is a faithful saying, and may be depended on and ought to be believed.

Verses 14–18

He comes in the next place to direct him in his work.

I. He must make it his business to edify those who were under his charge. This is the work of ministers; not to tell people that which they never knew before, but to put them in mind of that which they do know, charging them that they strive not about words. If people did but consider of what little use most of the controversies in religion are, they would not be so zealous in their strifes of words. People are very prone to strive about words, and such strifes never answer any other ends than to shake some and subvert others.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, v. 15, a workman that need not be ashamed. Workmen that are unskilful, or unfaithful, or lazy, have need to be ashamed; but those who mind their business, and keep to their work, are workmen that need not be ashamed. And what is their work? Not to invent a new gospel, but rightly to divide the gospel that is committed to their trust.

II. He must take heed of that which would be a hindrance to him in his work, v. 16. He must take heed of error: Shun profane and vain babblings. When once men became fond of those they will increase unto more ungodliness. The way of error is down-hill. The infecting of one often proves the infecting of many, or the infecting of the same person with one error often proves the infecting of him with many errors. The apostle mentions some who had lately advanced erroneous doctrines: Hymeneus and Philetus.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12). 11. Greek, "Faithful is the saying." For–"For" the fact is so that, "if we be dead with Him (the Greek aorist tense implies a state once for all entered into in past times at the moment of regeneration, Rom. 6:3, 4, 8; Col. 2:12), we shall also live with Him." The symmetrical form of "the saying," vss. 11-13, and the rhythmical balance of the parallel clauses, makes it likely, they formed part of a Church hymn (Note, I Tim. 3:16), or accepted formula, perhaps first uttered by some of the Christian "prophets" in the public assembly (I Cor. 14:26). The phrase "faithful is the saying," which seems to have been the usual formula (cf. I Tim. 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; Titus 3:8) in such cases, favors this. 12. suffer–rather, as the Greek is the same as in vs. 10, "If we endure (with Him)," (Rom. 8:17). reign with him–The peculiar privilege of the elect Church now suffering with Christ, then to reign with Him (Note, I Cor. 6:2). Reigning is something more than mere salvation (Rom. 5:17; Rev. 3:21; 5:10; 20:4, 5). deny–with the mouth. As "believe" with the heart follows, vs. 12. Cf. the opposite, "confess with thy mouth" and "believe in thine heart" (Rom. 10:9, 10). he also will deny us–(Matt. 10:33). 13. believe not–"If we are unbelievers (lit., 'unfaithful'), He remains faithful" (Deut. 7:9, 10). The oldest MSS. read, "For He cannot (it is an impossibility that He should) deny Himself." He cannot be unfaithful to His word that He will deny those who deny Him, though we be not faithful to our profession of faith in Him (Rom. 3:3). Three things are impossible to God, to die, to lie, and to be deceived [AUGUSTINE, Symbolism ad Catechumenos, 1. 1], (Heb. 6:18). This impossibility is not one of infirmity, but of infinite power and majesty. Also, indirectly, comfort is suggested to believers, that He is faithful to His promises to them; at the same time that apostates are shaken out of their self-deceiving fancy, that because they change, Christ similarly may change. A warning to Timothy to be steadfast in the faith. 14. them–those over whom thou dost preside (Titus 3:1). charging–Greek, "testifying continually": "adjuring them." before the Lord–(I Tim. 5:21). that they strive not about words–rather, "strive with words": "not to have a (mere) war of words" (vss. 23, 24; I Tim. 6:4) where the most vital matters are at stake (vss. 17, 18; Acts 18:15). The oldest MSS. put a stop at "charging them before the Lord" (which clause is thus connected with "put them in remembrance") and read the imperative, "Strive not thou in words . . . ." to no profit–not qualifying "words"; but Greek neuter, in apposition with "strive in words," "(a thing tending) to no profit," lit., "profitable for nothing"; the opposite of "meet for the master's use" (vs. 21). to the subverting–sure to subvert (overturn) the hearers: the opposite of "edifying" (building up) (II Cor. 13:10). 15. Study–Greek, "Be earnest," or "diligent." to show–Greek, "present," as in Romans 12:1. thyself–as distinguished from those whom Timothy was to charge (vs. 14). approved–tested by trial: opposed to "reprobate" (Titus 1:16). workman–alluding to Matthew 20:1 etc. not to be ashamed–by his work not being "approved" (Phil. 1:20). Contrast "deceitful workers" (II Cor. 11: 13). rightly dividing–"rightly handling" [Vulgate]; "rightly administering" [ALFORD]; lit., cutting "straight" or "right": the metaphor being from a father or a steward (I Cor. 4:1) cutting and distributing bread among his children [VITRINGA and CALVIN], (Luke 12:42). LXX, Proverbs 3:6 and 11:5, use it of "making one's way": so BENGEL here takes Paul to mean that Timothy may make ready a straight way for "the word of truth," and may himself walk straight forward according to this line, turning neither to the right nor to the left, "teaching no other doctrine" (I Tim. 1:3). The same image of a way appears in the Greek for "increase" (Note, vs. 16). The opposite to "rightly handling," or "dispensing," is, II Corinthians 2:17, "corrupt the word of God." truth–Greek, "the truth" (cf. vs. 18). 16. shun–lit., "stand above," separate from, and superior to. vain–opposed to "the truth" (vs. 15). babblings–with loud voice: opposed to the temperate "word" (Titus 3:9). increase–Greek, advance"; lit., "strike forward": an image from pioneers cutting away all obstacles before an advancing army. They pretend progress; the only kind of progress they make is to a greater pitch of impiety. more ungodliness–Greek, "a greater degree of impiety." 17. will eat–lit., "will have pasture." The consuming progress of mortification is the image. They pretend to give rich spiritual pasture to their disciples: the only pasture is that of a spiritual cancer feeding on their vitals. canker– a "cancer" or "gangrene." Hymeneus–

ADAM CLARKE

11. If we be dead with him. That is: As surely as Christ rose again from the dead, so surely shall we rise again, and if we die for Him, we shall surely live again with Him. This, says the apostle, is "a true doctrine."

13. If we believe not. Should we deny the faith and apostatize, He is the same, as true to His threatenings as to His promises; he cannot deny, act contrary to, himself.

14. That they strive not about words. Words, not things, have been a most fruitful source of contention in the Christian world; and among religious people, the principal cause of animosity has arisen from the different manner of apprehending the same term, while in essence both meant the same thing. All preachers and divines should be very careful, in both speaking and writing, to explain the terms they use, and never employ them in any sense but that in which they have explained them. The subverting of the hearers. This is the general tendency of all polemical divinity and controversial preaching, when angry passions are called in to support the doctrines of the gospel.

15. Study to shew thyself approved unto God. Endeavor so to cultivate and improve your heart and mind that you may not be a reproach to Him from whom you profess to receive your commission. Rightly dividing the word of truth. The word signifies (1) simply to "cut straight," (2) to "walk in the right way." Therefore, by rightly dividing the word of truth we are to understand his continuing in the true doctrine and teaching that to every person.

16. Shun profane and vain babblings. This is the character he gives of the preaching of the false teachers. Whatever was not agreeable to the doctrine of truth was, in the sight of God, "empty and profane babbling"; engendering nothing but ungodliness, and daily increasing in that.

17. Their word will eat as doth a canker. "As a gangrene"; i.e., as a mortification in the flesh, where the circulation is entirely stopped and putrefaction takes place, which continues to corrupt all the circumjacent flesh, spreading more and more till death takes place, unless stopped by a timely and judicious application of medicine. Such is the influence of false doctrine; it fixes its mortal seed in the soul, which continues to corrupt and assimilate everything to itself till, if not prevented by a timely application of the word of life, under the direction of the heavenly Physician, it terminates in the bitter pains of an eternal death. To such a gangrene the apostle compares the corrupt doctrines of Hymenaeus and Philetus.

MATTHEW HENRY

They did not deny the resurrection, but they put a corrupt interpretation upon that true doctrine, saying that the resurrection was past already. By this they overthrew the faith of some. Whatever takes away the doctrine of a future state overthrows the faith of Christians. Error is very productive and on that account the more dangerous. When men err concerning the truth, they always endeavour to have some plausible pretence for it.

Verses 19–21

I. The unbelief of men cannot make the promise of God of no effect. The prophets and apostles, that is, the doctrines of the Old and New Testament, are still firm; and they have a seal with two mottoes upon it, one on the one side, and the other on the other, as is usual in a broad seal.

One expresses our comfort—that the Lord knows those that are his. He will never lose them. Another declares our duty—that everyone who names the name of Christ must depart from iniquity. We must depart from iniquity, else he will not own us.

II. Though there are some whose faith is overthrown, yet there are others who keep their integrity, and hold it fast (v. 20). There are some professors of religion that are like the vessels of wood and earth, they are vessels of dishonour. But at the same time all are not vessels of dishonour. When we are discouraged by the badness of some, we must encourage ourselves by the goodness of others. Now we should see to it that we be vessels of honour: sanctified for our Master's use. Every vessel must be fit for its Master's use; everyone in the church whom God approves must be devoted to his Master's service and meet for his use.

I. Paul here exhorts Timothy to beware of youthful lusts, v. 22. The lusts of the flesh are youthful lusts, which young people must carefully watch against. He prescribes an excellent remedy against youthful lusts. Youthful lusts are very dangerous, for they war against the soul. The exciting of our graces will be the extinguishing of our corruptions; the more we follow that which is good the faster and the further we shall flee from that which is evil. Our prayers to God and Christ are not acceptable except they come out of a pure heart.

II. He cautions him against contention, and (v. 23) cautions him against foolish and unlearned questions,

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(Note, I Tim. 1:20). After his excommunication he seems to have been re-admitted into the Church and again to have troubled it. 18. erred—Greek, "missed the aim" (Note, I Tim. 6:21). is past already—has already taken place. The beginnings of the subsequent Gnostic heresy already existed. They "wrested" (II Pet. 3:16) Paul's own words (Rom. 6:4; Eph. 2:6 Col. 2:12) "to their own destruction," as though the resurrection was merely the spiritual raising of souls from the death of sin. overthrow—trying to subvert "the foundation" on which alone faith can rest secure (vs. 19; cf. Titus 1:11). 19. Nevertheless—Notwithstanding the subversion of their faith, "the firm foundation of God standeth" fast (so the Greek ought to be translated). The "foundation" here is "the Church" [ALFORD], "the ground" or basement support "of the truth" (I Tim. 3:15), Christ Himself being the ultimate "foundation" (I Cor. 3:11). In the steadfast standing of the Church there is involved the steadfast certainty of the doctrine in question (vs. 18).

having—seeing that it has [ELLICOTT]. seal—"inscription": indicating ownership and destination; inscriptions were often engraven on a "foundation" stone (Rev. 21:14) [ALFORD]. This will agree with the view that "the foundation" is the Church (Eph. 2:20). If it be taken God's immovable faithfulness, the "seal" will be regarded as attached to His covenant promise, with the inscription or legend, on one side of its round surface, "The Lord knoweth [it is 'knew' in LXX, Num. 16:5, to which Paul here alludes, altering it for his purpose by the Spirit) them that are His"; on the observe side, "Let every one that nameth (as his Lord, Ps. 20:7, or preacheth in His name, Jer. 20:9) Christ. . . ." depart—Greek, "stand aloof." from iniquity—(Isa. 52:11). In both clauses there may be an allusion to Num. 16:5, 26, LXX. God's part and man's part are marked out. God chooseth and knoweth His elect; our part is to believe, and by the Spirit depart from all iniquity, an unequivocal proof of our being the Lord's (cf. Deut. 29:29; Luke 13:23-27). 20. in a great house—i.e., the visible professing Christian Church (I Tim. 3:15). Paul is speaking, not of those without, but of the [visible] family of God [CALVIN]. So the parable of the sweep net (Matt. 13:47-49) gathering together of every kind, good and bad: as the good and bad cannot be distinguished while under the waves, but only when brought to shore, so believers and unbelievers continue in the same Church, until the judgment makes the everlasting distinction. "The ark of Noah is a type of the Church; as in the former there were together the leopard and the kid, the wolf and the lamb; so in the latter, the righteous and sinners, vessels of gold and silver, with vessels of wood and earth" [JEROME, contra Luciferianos, 302] (cf. Matt. 20:16). vessels of gold . . . silver—precious and able to endure fire. of wood and earth—worthless, fragile, and soon burnt (II Cor. 3:12-15; 15:47). some . . . some—the former . . . the latter. to dishonour—(Prov. 16:4; Rom. 9:17-23). 21. If a man . . . purge himself from these—The Greek expresses "If one (e.g., thou, Timothy) purify himself (so as to separate) from among these" (vessels unto dishonor). sanctified—set apart as wholly consecrated to the Lord. and meet—Some oldest MSS. omit "and." the master's—the Lord's. Paul himself was such a vessel: once one among those of earth, but afterwards he became by grace one of gold. prepared unto every good work—(Ch. 3:17; Titus 3:1). Contrast Titus 1:16. 22. Flee—There are many lusts from which our greatest safety is in flight (Gen. 39:12). Avoid occasions of sin. From the abstemious character of Timothy (I Tim. 5:23) it is likely that not animal indulgences, but the impetuosity, rash self-confidence, hastiness, strife, and vainglory of young men (I John 2:14-16), are what he is here warned against: though the Spirit probably intended the warning to include both in its application to the Church in general. also—Greek, "But"; in contrast to "every good work," vs. 21. youthful—Timothy was a youth (I Tim. 4:12). righteousness—the opposite of "iniquity," i.e., unrighteousness (vs. 19; cf. I Tim. 6:11). peace, with . . .—rather put no comma, "peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart" (I Tim. 1:5; Eph. 6:5; Col. 3:22). We are to love all men, but it is not possible to be at peace with all men, for this needs community of purpose and opinion; they alone who call on the Lord sincerely [as contrasted with the false teachers who had only the form of godliness, ch. 3:5, 8; Titus 1:15, 16] have this community [THEODORET]. (Rom. 12:18). 23. (Titus 3:9.) unlearned—Greek, "undisciplined"; not tending to promote the discipline of faith and morals (Prov.

ADAM CLARKE

18. Who concerning the truth have erred. They had the truth, but erred or "wandered from it," saying the resurrection was already past, and thus denying the resurrection of the body and, by consequence, future rewards and punishments.

19. The foundation of God standeth sure. The word signifies literally a foundation, and especially the foundation of a building; and metaphorically, the building itself, and often a noble mansion or palace. In this place the apostle compares the religion of Christ to a great or noble mansion. See v. 20. And as this religion is founded on the authority and power of the Almighty, it necessarily must stand sure and be permanent. This house has an "inscription" on it, for so seal is frequently understood; and this is evidently an allusion to the ancient temples. Above the door of the temple of Delphi there was the Greek word, "Thou art," on which Plutarch has written an express treatise. And we know that there was an inscription on the mitre of the high priest among the Jews, viz., "Holiness to the Lord"; Exod. xxviii. 36; xxxix. 30.

But some suppose here a "contract" or "covenant" by which two parties are bound to fulfill certain conditions and duties, the obligation to which each takes on him by sealing the instrument with his seal. The twofold inscription, i.e., one on the seal of each party, may be here alluded to; that on God's seal is, "The Lord approveth of them that are his." That on the seal of His followers is, "Let every one that nameth the name of the Lord (every Christian) depart from iniquity." "Lord," instead of Christ, is the reading of almost all the MSS. of importance, and the principal versions. The Lord knoweth. I.e., Approves, watches over, and provides for, them that are His true followers. To this His followers most cheerfully subscribe, and say: "Let every one that nameth this Lord avoid every appearance of evil."

20. But in a great house. Here the apostle carries on the allusion introduced in the preceding verse. As the "foundation of God" refers to God's building, i.e., the whole system of Christianity, so here the great house is to be understood of the same; and the different kinds of vessels mean the different teachers, as well as the different kinds of members. In this sacred house at Ephesus there were vessels of gold and of silver—eminent, holy, sincere, and useful teachers and members; and also vessels of wood and of earth—false and heretical teachers, such as Hymenaeus and Philetus, and their followers.

21. If a man therefore purge himself from these. He that takes heed to his ways and to his doctrines, and walks with God, will separate himself, not only from all false doctrine, but from all wicked men, and thus be sanctified and proper to be employed by the Master in every good word and work. The apostle has not made the application of these different similes, and it is very difficult to tell what he means.

22. Flee also youthful lusts. Not only all irregular and sensual desires, but pride, ambition, and, above all, the lust of power, to which most men will sacrifice all other propensities, their ease, pleasure, health, etc. This is the most bewitching passion in the human heart. Both in church and state it is ruinous, but particularly so in the former. Timothy was now between thirty and forty years of age, the very age in which ambition and the love of power most generally prevail. Carnal pleasures are the sins of youth; ambition and the love of power, the sins of middle age; covetousness and carking cares, the crimes of old age. Follow righteousness. Flee from sin, pursue goodness. Righteousness—whatever is just, holy, and innocent. Faith—fidelity to both God and man, improving that grace by which your soul may be saved, and faithfully discharging the duties of your office. Charity—love to God and man. Peace among all the members of the church, and as far as possible with all men.

23. Foolish and unlearned questions. See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; and Titus iii. 9.

strifes of words. Those who advanced them thought themselves wise and learned; but Paul calls them foolish and unlearned. They breed debates and quarrels among Christians. Religion consists more in believing and practising what God requires than in subtle disputes.—The servant of the Lord must not strive, v. 24. The servant of the Lord must be gentle to all men.—Apt to teach. Those are unapt to teach who are apt to strive. In meekness instructing (v. 25) not only those who subject themselves, but those who oppose themselves. This is the way to convey truth in its light and power, and to overcome evil with good. That which ministers must have in their eyes, in instructing those who oppose themselves, is their recovery. Repentance is God's gift. It is a gift with a peradventure in the case of those who oppose themselves. The same God who gives us the discovery of the truth does by his grace bring us to the acknowledging of it, otherwise our hearts would continue in rebellion against it. And thus sinners recover themselves out of the snare of the devil.

The misery of sinners, v. 26. They are slaves to the worst of task-masters. They are taken in a snare, and in the worst snare, because it is the devil's. The happiness of those who repent: they recover themselves out of this snare. Those who before were led captive by the devil at his will come to be led into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

5:23). "Uninstructive"; in contrast with "instructing" (vs. 25), and "wise unto salvation" (ch. 3:15). avoid—"decline." 24. not strive—"The servant of the Lord" must imitate his master in not striving contentiously, though uncompromising in earnestly contending for the faith (Jude 3; Matt. 12:19). gentle unto all men—"patient" (Greek, "patient in bearing wrongs") in respect to adversaries. He is to be gentle so that he may occasion no evils; patient so that he may endure evils. apt to teach—implying not only solid teaching and ease in teaching, but patience and assiduity in it [BENGEL]. 25. instructing—Greek, "disciplining," instructing with correction, which those who deal in "uninstructive" or "undisciplined questions" need (Notes, vs. 23; I Tim. 1:20). those that oppose themselves—Greek, "oppositely affected"; those of a different opinion. if...peradventure—Greek, "if at any time." repentance—which they need as antecedent to the full knowledge (so the Greek for "acknowledgment") of the truth (I Tim. 2:4), their minds being corrupted (ch. 3:8), and their lives immoral. The cause of the spiritual ignorance which prompts such "questions" is moral, having its seat in the will, not in the intellect (John 7:17). Therefore repentance is their first need. That, not man, but God alone can "give" (Acts 5:31). 26. recover themselves—Greek, "awake to soberness," viz., from the spiritual intoxication whereby they have fallen into the snare of the devil. the snare—(Eph. 6:11, "the wiles of the devil"; I Tim. 3:7; 6:9). taken captive by him at his will—so as to follow the will of "THAT" (the Greek emphatically marks Satan thus) foe.

ADAM CLARKE

24. The servant of the Lord must not strive. See on 1 Tim. iii. 2-3.

25. Those that oppose. This seems to refer to those who opposed the apostle's authority, and hence the propriety of the allusion to the rebellion of Korah and his company. If God peradventure. He was to use every means which he had reason to believe God might bless; and the apostle intimates that, bad as they were, they were not out of the reach of God's mercy.

CHAPTER 3

Timothy must not think it strange if there were in the church bad men; for the net of the gospel was to enclose both good fish and bad, Matt. xiii. 47, 48. Even in gold ore there will be dross, and a great deal of chaff among the wheat when it lies on the floor.

I. In the last days (v. 1), in gospel times, there would come perilous times, not so much on account of persecution from without as on account of corruptions within. Two traitors within the garrison may do more hurt to it than two thousand besiegers without. Perilous times shall come, for men shall be wicked. Sin makes the time perilous.

II. Paul tells Timothy what shall be the marks and signs whereby these times may be known, v. 2, &c. Self-love will make the times perilous. Instead of Christian charity, which takes care for the good of others, they will mind themselves only. Covetousness. When men are lovers of themselves, no good can be expected from them, as good may be expected from those who love God. When every man is for what he can get and for keeping what he has, this makes men dangerous to one another. Pride and vain-glory. When men are boasters and blasphemers. When men do not fear God they will not regard man. When children are disobedient to their parents. What wickedness will those stick at who will be abusive to their own parents and rebel against them? Unthankfulness and unholiness make the times perilous. What is the reason that men are unholy and without the fear of God, but that they are unthankful for the mercies of God? When they are without natural affection, and truce-breakers, v. 3. When children are disobedient to their parents (v. 2) and when parents are without natural affection to their children, v. 3. And those who will not be bound by natural affection, no marvel that they will not be bound by the most solemn leagues and covenants. They are truce-breakers. When men are false accusers one of another—devils one to another. When men have no government of themselves and their own appetites: they are incontinent, they are fierce. When that which is good and ought to be honoured is generally despised.

When men are generally treacherous, wilful, and haughty (v. 4). When men are puffed up, behaving scornfully to all about them, then the times are perilous. When men are generally lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. That is a carnal mind, and is full of enmity against him, which prefers anything before him, especially such a sordid thing as carnal pleasure is. When they have the form of godliness (v. 5). A form of godliness is a very different thing from the power of it; men may have the one and be wholly destitute of the other.

Vss. 1-17. COMING EVIL DAYS: SIGNS OF EVIL ALREADY: CONTRAST IN THE DOCTRINE AND LIFE OF PAUL, WHICH TIMOTHY SHOULD FOLLOW IN ACCORDANCE WITH HIS EARLY TRAINING IN SCRIPTURE. 1. also—Greek, "but." last days—preceding Christ's second coming (II Pet. 3:3; Jude 18). "The latter times," I Timothy 4:1, refer to a period not so remote as "the last days," viz., the long days of papal and Greek anti-Christianity. perilous—lit., "difficult times," in which it is difficult to know what is to be done: "grievous times." shall come—Greek, "shall be imminent"; "shall come unexpectedly" [BENGEL]. 2. men—in the professing Church. Cf. the catalogue, Romans 1:29, etc., where much the same sins are attributed to heathen men; it shall be a relapse into virtual heathendom, with all its beastike propensities, whence the symbol of it is "a beast" (Rev. 13:1, 11, 12, etc.; 17:3, 8, 11). covetous—Translate, "money-loving," a distinct Greek word from that for "covetous" (Note, Col. 3:5). The cognate Greek substantive (I Tim. 6:10) is so translated, "the love of money is a (Greek, not "the") root of all evil." boasters—empty boasters [ALFORD]; boasting of having what they have not. proud—overweening: lit., showing themselves above their fellows. blasphemous—rather, "evil-speakers," revilers. disobedient to parents—The character of the times is even to be gathered especially from the manners of the young [BENGEL]. unthankful—The obligation to gratitude is next to that of obedience to parents. unholy—irreligious [ALFORD]; inobservant of the offices of piety. 3. truce-breakers—rather as the Greek is translated in Romans 1:31, "implacable." false accusers—slanderers (I Tim. 3:11; Titus 2:3). incontinent, fierce—at once both soft and hard: incontinently indulging themselves, and inhuman to others. despisers...—"no lovers of good" [ALFORD]; the opposite of "a lover of good" (Titus 1:8).

4. heady—precipitate in action and in passion. high-minded—lit., "puffed up" with pride, as with smoke blinding them. lovers of pleasure... God—Love of pleasure destroys the love and sense of God.

5. form—outward semblance. godliness—piety. denying—rather as Greek, "having denied," i.e., renounced. the power—the living, regenerating, sanctifying influence of it.

1. In the last days. This often means the days of the Messiah, and is sometimes extended in its signification to the destruction of Jerusalem, as this was properly the last days of the Jewish state. But the phrase may mean any future time, whether near or distant.

2. Lovers of their own selves. "Selfish," studious of their own interest, and regardless of the welfare of all mankind. Covetous. "Lovers of money," because of the influence which riches can procure. Boasters. Vainglorious: self-assuming; valuing themselves beyond all others. Proud. Airy, light, trifling persons; those who love to make a show—who are all outside. Blasphemers. Those who speak impiously of God and sacred things, and injuriously of men. Disobedient to parents. Headstrong children, whom their parents cannot persuade. Unthankful. Persons without grace, or gracefulness; who think they have a right to the services of all men, yet feel no obligation, and consequently no gratitude. Unholy. Without piety; having no heart reverence for God.

3. Without natural affection. Without that affection which parents bear to their young, and which the young bear to their parents. Trucebreakers. The word means those who are bound by no promise, held by no engagement, obliged by no oath; persons who readily promise anything because they never intend to perform. False accusers. "Devils"; but properly enough rendered false accusers, for this is a principal work of the devil. Slanderers; striving ever to ruin the characters of others. Incontinent. Those who are slaves to uncleanness. Fierce. Wild, impetuous, whatever is contrary to pliability and gentleness. Despisers of those that are good. "Not lovers of good men." Here is a remarkable advantage of the Greek over the English tongue, one word of the former expressing five or six of the latter. Those who do not love the good must be radically bad themselves.

4. Traitors. Those who deliver up to an enemy the person who has put his life in their hands. Heady. Headstrong, precipitate, rash, inconsiderate. Highminded. The frivolously aspiring; those who are full of themselves and empty of all good. Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Pleasure, sensual gratification, is their god, and this they love and serve; God they do not.

5. Having a form of godliness. The original word signifies a "draught, sketch, or summary," and will apply well to those who have all their religion in their creed, confession of faith, catechism, bodies of divinity, while destitute of

III. Paul warns Timothy to take heed of certain seducers. He shows how industrious they were to make proselytes (v. 6). They crept into houses, to insinuate themselves into the good opinion of people, and so to draw them over to their party. And see what sort of people those were that they gained; they were such as were weak, and such as were wicked. A foolish head and a filthy heart make persons an easy prey to seducers.

He shows how far they were from coming to the knowledge of the truth, though they pretended to be ever learning, v. 7.

He foretells the certain stop that should be put to their progress (v. 8, 9). Those heretics resisted the truth and were men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, but they shall proceed no further. Though the spirit of error may be let loose for a time, God has it in a chain. Their folly shall be manifest, it shall appear that they are impostors, and every man shall abandon them.

Verses 10–17

I. The apostle sets before him his own example (v. 10). Christ's apostles had no enemies but those who did not know them, or did not know them fully; those who knew them best loved and honoured them the most. Paul kept back nothing from his hearers, but declared to them the whole counsel of God, so that if it were not their own fault they might fully know it. He had fully known his conversation. His manner of life was of a piece with his doctrine, and did not contradict it. Those cannot expect to profit the people at all that preach well and live ill. Timothy fully knew what was the great thing that Paul had in view: "Thou hast known my purpose, what I drive at." Timothy fully knew Paul's good character. He knew that he had suffered ill for doing well (v. 11), (he mentions those only which happened to him while Timothy was with him, at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra). He knew what care God had taken of him. As he never failed his cause, so his God never failed him. Thou hast fully known my afflictions. When we fully know the afflictions, not only how they suffer, but how they are supported and comforted under their sufferings, then, instead of being discouraged, we shall be animated by them, especially considering that we are told before that we must count upon such things (v. 12). Those who will live godly must expect it; especially those who will live godly in Christ Jesus, especially when they are resolute in it. The apostle's life was very exemplary for three things: for his doctrine, for his life, and for his persecutions and sufferings. His life was a life of great usefulness, yet it was a life of great sufferings. The apostle mentions the Lord's delivering him out of them all, for Timothy's and our encouragement under sufferings.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

turn away—implying that some of such characters, forerunners of the last days, were already in the Church. 6. of this sort—Greek, "of these," such as were described (vs. 5). creep into—stealthily. laden with sins—(Isa. 1:4)—applying to the "silly women" whose consciences are burdened with sins, and so are a ready prey to the false teachers who promise ease of conscience if they will follow them. A bad conscience leads easily to shipwreck of faith (I Tim. 1:19). divers lusts—not only animal lusts, but passion for change in doctrine and manner of teaching; the running after fashionable men and fashionable tenets, drawing them in the most opposite directions [ALFORD]. 7. Ever learning—some new point, for mere curiosity, to the disparagement of what they seemed to know before. the knowledge—Greek, "the perfect knowledge"; the only safeguard against further novelties. Gnosticism laid hold especially of the female sex [IRENÆUS, 1. 13. 3.]: so Roman Jesuitism. 8. Now—Greek, "But"; it is no wonder there should be now such opponents to the truth, for their prototypes existed in ancient times [ALFORD]. Jannes . . . Jambres—traditional names of the Egyptian magicians who resisted Moses (Exod. 7:11, 22), derived from "the unwritten teaching of the Jews" [THEODORET]. In a point so immaterial as the names, where Scripture had not recorded them, Paul takes the names which general opinion had assigned the magicians. EUSEBIUS, Præparatio Evangelica, quotes from NUMENIUS, "Jannes and Jambres were sacred scribes (a lower order of priests in Egypt) skilled in magic." HILLER interprets Jannes from the Abyssinian language a trickster, and Jambres a juggler (Acts 13:8). resist—"withstand," as before. They did so by trying to rival Moses' miracles. So the false teachers shall exhibit lying wonders in the last days (Matt. 24:24; II Thess. 2:9; Rev. 13:14, 15). reprobate—incapable of testing the truth (Rom. 1:28) [BENGEL]. ALFORD takes passively, "not abiding the test"; rejected on being tested (Jer. 6:30). 9. they shall proceed no further—Though for a time (ch. 2:16) "they shall advance or proceed (English Version, 'increase') unto more ungodliness," yet there is a final limit beyond which they shall not be able to "proceed further" (Job 38:11; Rev. 11:7, 11). They themselves shall "wax worse and worse" (vs. 13), but they shall at last be for ever prevented from seducing others. "Often malice proceeds deeper down, when it cannot extend itself" [BENGEL]. their folly—lit., "dementation": wise though they think themselves. shall be manifest—Greek, "shall be brought forth from concealment into open day" [BENGEL], (I Cor. 4:5). as theirs . . . was—as that of those magicians was, when not only could they no longer try to rival Moses in sending boils, but the boils fell upon themselves: so as to the lice (Exod. 8:18; 9:11). 10. fully known—lit., "fully followed up" and traced; viz., with a view to following me as thy pattern, so far as I follow Christ; the same Greek as in Luke 1:3, "having had perfect understanding of all things." doctrine—"teaching." manner of life—"conduct," "behavior." purpose—The Greek is elsewhere usually used of God's "purpose." But here, as in Acts 11:23, of Paul's determined "purpose of heart in cleaving unto the Lord." My set aim, or resolution, in my apostolic function, and in every action is, not my selfish gain, but the glory of God in Christ. long-suffering—towards my adversaries, and the false teachers; towards brethren in bearing their infirmities; towards the unconverted, and the lapsed when penitent (ch. 4:2; II Cor. 6:6; Gal. 5:22; Eph. 4:2; Col. 3:12). charity—love to all men. patience—"endurance"; patient continuance in well-doing amidst adversities (vs. 11; Rom. 2:7). 11. afflictions—"sufferings." which—Greek, "such as." in Antioch—of Pisidia (Acts 13:14, 50, 51). Iconium—(Acts 14: 1-5). Lystra—(Acts 14:6, 19). what—How grievous. out of . . . all . . . Lord delivered me—(ch. 4: 17; Ps. 34:17; II Cor. 1:10). An encouragement to Timothy not to fear persecutions. 12. Yea, and—an additional consideration for Timothy: if he wishes to live godly in Christ, he must make up his mind to encounter persecution. that will . . .—Greek, "all whose will is to live . . ." So far should persecution be from being a stumbling block to Timothy, he should consider it a mark of the pious. So the same Greek is used of the same thing, Luke 14:28, 33, "intending (Greek, wishing) to build a tower . . . counteth the cost." live godly in Christ—(Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:21). There is no godliness (Greek, "piously") or piety out of Christ. The world easily puts up with the mask of a religion which depends on itself, but the piety which derives its vigor directly from Christ is as odious to modern Christians as it was to the ancient Jews [BENGEL].

ADAM CLARKE

the life of God in their souls; and are not only destitute of this life, but deny that such life or power is here to be experienced or known. They have religion in their creed, but none in their hearts. From such turn away—not only do not imitate them, but have no kind of fellowship with them; they are a dangerous people, and but seldom suspected, because their outside is fair.

6. For of this sort are they. He here refers to false teachers and their insinuating manners, practicing upon weak women, who, seeing in them such a semblance of piety, entertain them with great eagerness, and at last become partakers with them in their impurities.

7. Ever learning, from their false teachers, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, because that teaching never leads to the truth.

8. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. This refers to the history of the Egyptian magicians, given in Exodus vii. Men of corrupt minds. It appears as if the apostle were referring still to some Judaizing teachers who were perverting the church with their doctrines, and loudly calling in question the authority and doctrine of the apostle. Reprobate concerning the faith. "Undiscerning" or "untried"; they are base metal, unstamped; and should not pass current, because not standard. This metaphor is frequent in the sacred writings.

9. But they shall proceed no further. Such teaching and teachers shall never be able ultimately to prevail against the truth; for "the foundation of God standeth sure." Their folly shall be manifest. As the Scriptures, which are the only rule of morals and doctrine, shall ever be preserved; so, sooner or later, all false doctrines shall be tried by them, and the folly of men setting up their wisdom against the wisdom of God must become manifest to all.

10. Thou hast fully known my doctrine. And having long had the opportunity of knowing me, the doctrine I preached, my "conduct" founded on these doctrines, the "object" I have in view by my preaching, my "fidelity" to God and to my trust, my longsuffering with those who walked disorderly, my "love" to them and to the world in general, and my patience in all my adversities, you are capable of judging between me and the false teachers, and can easily discern the difference between their doctrines, conduct, motives, temper, spirit, and mine.

11. Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch. The Antioch mentioned here was Antioch in Pisidia, to which place Paul and Barnabas came in their first apostolic progress, and where Paul delivered that memorable discourse which is preserved in the thirteenth chapter of Acts, vv. 16-43. In this city, it is said, "the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came to Iconium," Acts xiii. 50-51. Here "there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to treat them despitefully, and to stone them . . . and [they] fled unto Lystra and Derbe . . . And there came thither certain Jews . . . who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead." The historian informs us that his life was miraculously restored, and that he departed thence and came to Derbe, and afterwards returned to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, where they had lately been so grievously persecuted. See Acts xiv. 5-6, 19-21. These are the persecutions to which the apostle alludes; and we find that he mentions them here precisely in the same order in which, according to the relation of Luke, they occurred.

12. All that will live godly. So opposite to the spirit and practice of the world is the whole of Christianity that he who gives himself entirely up to God, making the Holy Scriptures the rule of his words and actions, will be more or less reviled and persecuted.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He warns Timothy of the fatal end of seducers, v. 13. As good men, by the grace of God, grow better and better, so bad men, through the subtlety of Satan and the power of their own corruptions, grow worse and worse.

III. He directs him particularly to what he had learned out of the holy scriptures (v. 14, 15). It is not enough to learn that which is good, but we must continue in it, and persevere in it unto the end. If Timothy would adhere to the truth as he had been taught it, this would arm him against the snares and insinuations of seducers.

1. It is a great happiness to know the certainty of the things wherein we have been instructed. Consider of whom thou hast learned them; not of evil men and seducers, but good men, who had themselves experienced the power of the truths they taught thee. "Knowing especially the firm foundation upon which thou hast built (v. 15): That from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures."

2. Those who would acquaint themselves with the things of God, must know the holy scriptures.

3. It is a great happiness to know the holy scriptures from our childhood. The age of children is the learning age; and those who would get true learning must get it out of the scriptures.

4. They must not lie by us neglected, and seldom or never looked into.

(1) What is the excellency of the scripture (v. 16). The prophets and apostles did not speak from themselves, but what they received of the Lord that they delivered unto us.

(2) What use it will be of to us. It is able to make us wise to salvation. Those are wise indeed who are wise to salvation. "Through faith." The scriptures will make us wise to salvation, if they be mixed with faith. For, if we do not believe their truth and goodness, they will do us no good.

It is profitable to us for all the purposes of the Christian life. It instructs us in that which is true, reproves us for that which is amiss, directs us in that which is good.

That the man of God may be perfect, v. 17. That which furnishes a man of God in this world is the scripture. By it we are thoroughly furnished for every good work. Scripture has various uses, and answers divers ends and purposes. Scripture is a perfect rule of faith and practice. If we consult the scripture which was given by inspiration of God, and follow its directions, we shall be made men of God, perfect and thoroughly furnished to every good work. O that we may love our Bibles more, and keep closer to them than ever!

shall suffer persecution—and will not decline it (Gal. 5:11). 13. Reason why persecutions must be expected, and these becoming worse and worse as the end approaches. The breach between light and darkness, so far from being healed, shall be widened [ALFORD]. evil men—in contrast to the "godly" (vs. 12). seducers—lit., "conjurors." Magical arts prevailed at Ephesus (Acts 19:19), and had been renounced by many Ephesians on embracing Christianity: but now when Paul was writing to Ephesus, symptoms of a return to conjuring tricks appeared: an undesigned coincidence [BURTON]. Probably sorcery will characterize the final apostasy (Rev. 13:15; 18:23; 22:15). wax worse—lit., "advance in the direction of worse" (Note, vs. 9). Not contradictory to that verse: there the diffusion of the evil was spoken of; here its intensity [ALFORD]. deceiving, and being deceived—He who has once begun to deceive others, is the less easily able to recover himself from error, and the more easily embraces in turn the errors of others [BENGEL]. 14. But . . . thou—Whatever they may do. Resuming the thread begun at vs. 10. learned—from me and thy mother and grandmother (ch. 1:5; 2:2). assured of—from Scripture (vs. 15). of whom—plural, not singular, in the oldest MSS., "from what teachers." Not only from me, but from Lois and Eunice. 15. from a child—lit., "from an infant." The tender age of the first dawn of reason is that wherein the most lasting impressions of faith may be made. holy scriptures—The Old Testament taught by his Jewish mother. An undesigned coincidence with ch. 1:5; Acts 16:1-3. able—in themselves: though through men's own fault they often do not in fact make men savingly alive. wise unto salvation—i.e., wise unto the attainment of salvation. Contrast "folly" (vs. 9). Wise also in extending it to others. through faith—as the instrument of this wisdom. Each knows divine things only as far as his own experience in himself extends. He who has not faith, has not wisdom or salvation. which is in—i.e., rests on Christ Jesus. 16. All scripture—Greek, "Every Scripture," i.e., Scripture in its every part. However, English Version is sustained, though the Greek article be wanting, by the technical use of the term "Scripture" being so well known as not to need the article (cf. Greek, Eph. 3:15; 2:21). The Greek is never used of writings in general, but only of the sacred Scriptures. The Greek, "God-inspired," is found nowhere else. Most of the New Testament books were written when Paul wrote this his latest Epistle: so he includes in the clause "All Scripture is God-inspired," not only the Old Testament, in which alone Timothy was taught when a child (vs. 15), but the New Testament books according as they were recognized in the churches which had men gifted with "discerning of spirits," and so able to distinguish really inspired utterances, persons, and so their writings from spurious. Paul means, "All Scripture is God-inspired and therefore useful"; because we see no utility in any words or portion of it, it does not follow it is not God-inspired. It is useful, because God-inspired, not God-inspired, because useful. doctrine—Greek, "teaching," i.e., teaching the ignorant dogmatic truths which they cannot otherwise know. He so uses the Old Testament, Romans 1:17. reproof—"refutation," convicting the erring of their error. Including polemical divinity. As an example of this use of the Old Testament, cf. Gal. 3:6, 13, 16. "Doctrine and reproof" comprehend the speculative parts of divinity. Next follow the practical: Scripture is profitable for: (1) correction (Greek, "setting one right"; cf. an example, I Cor. 10:1-10) and instruction (Greek, "disciplining," as a father does his child, Note, ch. 2:25; Eph. 6:4; Heb. 12:5, 11, or "training" by instruction, warning, example, kindnesses, promises, and chastisements; cf. an example, I Cor. 5:13). Thus the whole science of theology is complete in Scripture. Since Paul is speaking of Scripture in general and in the notion of it, the only general reason why, in order to perfecting the godly (vs. 17), it should extend to every department of revealed truth, must be that it was intended to be the complete and sufficient rule in all things touching perfection. See Article VI, Common Prayer Book. in—Greek, "instruction which is in righteousness," as contrasted with the "instruction" in worldly rudiments (Col. 2:20, 22). 17. man of God—(Note, I Tim. 6:11). perfect, throughly furnished—Greek, "thoroughly perfected," and so "perfect." The man of God is perfectly accoutred out of Scripture for his work, whether he be a minister (cf. ch. 4:2 with ch. 3:16) or a spiritual layman. No oral tradition is needed to be added.

ADAM CLARKE

13. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse. They will yet get on for a season, deceiving themselves and deceiving others; but by and by "their folly shall be manifest unto all," v. 9. The word which we render seducers signifies "jugglers, pretenders to magical arts"; probably persons dealing in false miracles, with whom the Church in all ages has been not a little disgraced.

14. But continue thou. No man, however well-instructed in the things of God or grounded in divine grace, is out of the reach of temptation, apostasy, and final ruin; hence the necessity of watching unto prayer, depending upon God, continuing in the faith, and persevering unto the end.

15. From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures. The early religious education of Timothy already has been sufficiently noticed; see chap. i. 5. Paul introduces this circumstance again here for the confirmation of Timothy's faith. Able to make thee wise unto salvation. The apostle is here evidently speaking of the Jewish Scriptures and he tells us that they are able to make us wise unto salvation provided we have faith in Jesus Christ. This is the simple use of the Old Testament. No soul of man can be made wise unto salvation by it but as he refers all to Christ Jesus.

16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God. This sentence is not well-translated; the original should be rendered: "Every writing divinely inspired is profitable for doctrine." The apostle is here, beyond all controversy, speaking of the writings of the Old Testament, which, because they came by divine inspiration, he terms "the holy scriptures," v. 15; and it is of them alone that this passage is to be understood; and although all the New Testament came by as direct an inspiration as the Old, yet, as it was not collected at that time, nor indeed complete, the apostle could have no reference to it.

The doctrine of the inspiration of the sacred writings has been a subject of much discussion, and even controversy, among Christians. There are two principal opinions on the subject: (1) That every thought and word were inspired by God, and that the writer did nothing but merely write as the Spirit dictated. (2) That God gave the whole matter, leaving the inspired writers to their own language, and hence the great variety of style and different modes of expression. Is profitable for doctrine. To teach the will of God, and to point out Jesus Christ till He should come. For reproof. To "convince" men of the truth; and to confound those who should deny it. For correction. For "restoring things" to their proper uses and places, correcting false notions and mistaken views. Instruction in righteousness. For communicating all initiatory religious knowledge; for schooling mankind. All this is perfectly true of the Jewish Scriptures; and let faith in Christ Jesus be added, see v. 15, and then all that is spoken in the following verse will be literally accomplished.

17. That the man of God. The preacher of righteousness, the minister of the gospel, the person who derives his commission from God, and always appears as His herald and servant. May be perfect. It properly signifies an "integer" or "whole number" in arithmetic, to which nothing needs to be added to make it complete. Throughly furnished. Not only "complete" in himself as to his integrity, religious knowledge, faith in Jesus, and love to God and man, but that he should have all those qualifications which are necessary to complete the character and insure the success of a preacher of the gospel. Timothy was to teach, reprove, correct, and instruct others; and was to be to them a pattern of good works.

I. How awfully this charge is introduced (v. 1). The best of men have need to be awed into the discharge of their duty. The eye of God and Jesus Christ was upon him: I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ. He charges him as he will answer it at the great day, reminding him of the judgment to come. He will appear; he will come the second time, and it will be a glorious appearance. Then his kingdom shall appear in its glory: At his appearing and kingdom; for he will then appear in his kingdom.

II. What is the matter of the charge, v. 2–5.

1. To preach the word. This is ministers' business. It is not their own notions and fancies that they are to preach, but the pure plain word of God.

2. To urge what he preached: "Be instant in season and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort;' do this work with all fervency of spirit. In season, when some special opportunity offers itself of speaking to them with advantage. Out of season, because thou dost not know but the Spirit of God may fasten upon them."

3. He must tell people of their faults. Endeavour, by dealing plainly with them, to bring them to repentance.

4. He must direct, encourage, and quicken those who began well. "Exhort them with all longsuffering and doctrine." He must do it very patiently. While God shows to them all longsuffering, let ministers exhort with all longsuffering. He must do it rationally, not with passion, but with doctrine. Teach them the truth as it is in Jesus, and this will be a means both to reclaim them from evil and to bring them to good.

5. He must watch in all things. "Watch to thy work; watch against the temptations of Satan; watch over the souls of those who are committed to thy charge."

6. He must count upon afflictions and endure them. "Inure thyself to hardships."

7. He must remember his office, and discharge its duties. The office of the evangelist was, as the apostles' deputy, to water the churches that they planted. This was Timothy's work.

8. He must fulfil his ministry: Make full proof of it. Perform all the parts of his office with diligence and care. The best way to make full proof of our ministry is to fulfil it, to fill it up in all its parts with proper work.

III. The reasons to enforce the charge.

1. Because errors and heresies were likely to creep into the church (v. 3, 4). "Improve the present time when they will endure it." They will grow weary of the old plain gospel of Christ, and then they will be greedy of fables. False teachers were not of God's sending; but they chose them to please their itching ears. People do so when they will not endure sound doctrine; that preaching which is searching, plain, and to the purpose. There is a wide difference between the word of God and the word of such teachers; the one is sound doctrine, the word of truth, the other is only fables.

2. Because Paul for his part had almost done his work, v. 6.

(1) "Therefore there will be the more occasion for thee." The fewer hands there are to work the more industrious those hands must be that are at work.

(2) "I have done the work of my day and generation; do thou in like manner do the work of thy day and generation."

(3) The comfort and cheerfulness of Paul, in the prospect of his approaching departure, might encourage Timothy. "I can look back upon my warfare with a great deal of satisfaction; and therefore be not afraid of the difficulties thou must meet with. The crown of life is as sure to thee as if it were already upon thy head." Here the apostle looks forward, upon his death approaching, and he looks upon it now as near at hand: I am already poured out. Observe,

[1] With what pleasure he speaks of dying. He calls it his departure, or his release. Death to a good man is his release from the imprisonment of this world and his departure to the enjoyments of another world; he does not cease to be, but is only removed from one world to another.

[2] With what pleasure he looks back upon the life he had lived (v. 7). He did not fear death, because he had the testimony of his conscience that by the grace of God he had in some measure answered the ends of living. He had fought a good fight. His life was a course, and he had now finished it; as his warfare was accomplished, so his race was run. "I have kept the faith." We must fight this good fight; we must fight it out, and finish our course.

VSS. 1-22. SOLEMN CHARGE TO TIMOTHY TO DO HIS DUTY ZEALOUSLY, FOR TIMES OF APOSTASY ARE AT HAND, AND THE APOSTLE IS NEAR HIS TRIUMPHANT END: REQUESTS HIM TO COME AND BRING MARK WITH HIM TO ROME, AS LUKE ALONE IS WITH HIM, THE OTHERS HAVING GONE: 1. charge—Greek, "adjure." therefore—omitted in the oldest MSS. the Lord Jesus Christ—The oldest MSS. read simply, "Christ Jesus." shall judge—His commission from God is mentioned, Acts 10:42; his resolution to do so, I Peter 4:5; the execution of his commission, here. at his appearing—The oldest MSS. read, "and" for "at"; then translate, "(I charge thee before God . . .) and by His appearing." and his kingdom—to be set at His appearing, when we hope to reign with Him. His kingdom is real now, but not visible. It shall then be both real and visible (Luke 22:18, 30; Rev. 1:7 11:15; 19:6). Now he reigns in the midst of His enemies expecting till they shall be overthrown (Ps. 110:2; Heb. 10:13). Then He shall reign with His adversaries prostrate. 2. Preach lit., "proclaim as a herald." The term for the discourses in the synagogue was daraschoth; the corresponding Greek term (implying dialectial style, dialogue, and discussion, Acts 17:2, 18; 18:4, 19) is applied in Acts to discourses in the Christian Church.

be instant—i.e., urgent, earnest, in the whole work of the ministry. in season, out of season—i.e., at all seasons; whether they regard your speaking as seasonable or unseasonable. reprove—"convict," "confute." with . . .—Greek, "IN (the element in which the exhortation ought to have place) all long-suffering (ch. 2:24, 25; 3:10) and teaching"; cf. ch. 2:24, "apt to teach." The Greek for "doctrine" here is didache, but in ch. 3:16 didascalia. "Didascalia" is what one receives; didache is what is communicated [TITTMANN]. 3. they—professing Christians. sound doctrine—Greek, "the sound (Note, I Tim. 1:10) doctrine" (didascalias) or "teaching," viz., of the Gospel. Presently follows the concrete, teachers." after their own lusts—Instead of regarding the will of God they dislike being interrupted in their lusts by true teachers. heap—one on another: an indiscriminate mass of false teachers. Variety delights itching ears. "He who despises sound teaching, leaves sound teachers; they seek instructors like themselves" [BENGEL]. It is the corruption of the people in the first instance, that creates priestcraft (Exod. 32:1). to themselves—such as will suit their depraved tastes; populus vult decipi, et decipiatur—"the people wish to be deceived, so let them be deceived." "Like priest, like people" (I Kings 12:31; Hos. 4:9). itching—like to hear teachers who give them mere pleasure (Acts 17:19-21), and do not offend by truths grating to their ears. They, as it were, tickle with pleasure the levity of the multitude [CICERO], who come as to a theater to hear what will delight their ears, not to learn [SENECA, Ep. 10. 8] what will do them good. "Itch in the ear is as bad in any other part of the body, and perhaps worse" [SOUTH]. 4. The ear brooks not what is opposed to the man's lusts. turned—Greek, "turned aside" (I Tim. 1:6). It is a righteous retribution, that when men turn away from the truth, they should be turned to fables (Jer. 2:19). fables—(I Tim. 1:4). 5. I am no longer here to withstand these things; be thou a worthy successor of me, no longer depending on me for counsel, but thine own master, and swimming without the corks [CALVIN]; follow my steps, inherit their result, and the honor of their end [ALFORD]. watch thou—lit., "with the wakefulness of one sober." in all things—on all occasions and under all circumstances (Titus 2:7). endure affliction—suffer hardships [ALFORD]. evangelist—a missionary bishop preacher, and teacher. make full proof of—fulfil in all its requirements, leaving nothing undone (Acts 12:25; Rom. 15:19; Col. 4:17). 6. Greek, "For I am already being offered"; lit., as a libation; appropriate to the shedding of his blood. Every sacrifice began with an initiatory libation on the victim's head (Note, cf. Phil. 2:17). A motive to stimulate Timothy to faithfulness—the departure and final blessedness of Paul; it is the end that crowns the work [BENGEL]. As the time of his departure was indicated to Peter, so to Paul (II Pet. 1:14). my departure—lit., "loosing anchor" (Note, Phil. 1:23). Dissolution. 7. "I have striven the good strife"; the Greek is not restricted to a fight, but includes any competitive contest, e.g., that of the racecourse (I Tim. 6:12 [ALFORD]; I Cor. 9:24, etc.; Heb. 12:1, 2). kept the faith—the Christian faith committed to me as a believer and an apostle (cf. ch. 1:14; Rev. 2:10; 3:10).

1. I charge thee therefore before God. Whose herald you are; and before the Lord Jesus Christ, whose salvation you are to proclaim, and who is coming to judge the world—all that shall be found then "alive," and all that have died from the foundation of the world.

2. Preach the word. "Proclaim the doctrine," the doctrine of Christ crucified for the sins of the whole world; the doctrine that the Gentiles are invited to be fellow heirs with the Jews, and that for Jews and Gentiles there is no salvation but by faith in Christ. Be instant in season, out of season. Be urgent whether the times be prosperous or adverse, whenever there is an opportunity; and when there is none, strive to make one. Reprove. "Confute" the false teacher. Rebuke. Reprove "cuttingly and severely" those who will not abandon their sins. Exhort. "Comfort the feebleminded," the diffident and the tempted. With all longsuffering. In reference to each and all of these cases. And doctrine. The different modes of teaching suited to each.

3. For the time will come. There is a time coming to the Church when men will not hear the practical truths of the gospel, when they will prefer speculative opinions, which either do no good to the soul or corrupt and destroy it, to that wholesome doctrine of "Deny thyself, take up thy cross, and follow Me," which Jesus Christ has left in His Church. But after their own lusts. For these they will follow, and hate those preachers and that doctrine by which they are opposed. Shall they heap to themselves teachers. They will add one teacher to another, run and gad about after all, to find out those who insist not on the necessity of bearing the cross, of being crucified to the world, and of having the mind that was in Jesus. Having itching ears. Endless curiosity, an insatiable desire of variety; and they get their ears tickled with the language and accent of the person, abandoning the good and faithful preacher for the fine speaker.

4. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth. The truth strips them of their vices, sacrifices their idols, darts its lightnings against their easily besetting sins, and absolutely requires a conformity to a crucified Christ; therefore they turn their ears away from it. And shall be turned unto fables. Believe any kind of stuff and nonsense; for as one has justly observed, "Those who reject the truth are abandoned by the just judgment of God to credit the most degrading nonsense."

5. But watch thou in all things. It is possible to be overtaken in a fault, to neglect one's duty, and to lose one's soul. Watching unto prayer prevents all these evils. Endure afflictions. Let no sufferings affright you; nor let the dread of them either cause you to abandon the truth or relax in your zeal for the salvation of men. Do the work of an evangelist. That is: Preach Christ crucified for the sins of the whole world; for this, and this alone, is doing the work of an evangelist, or preacher of the glad tidings of peace and salvation by Christ.

6. For I am now ready to be offered. "I am already poured out as a libation." See the note on Phil. ii. 17. He considers himself as on the eve of being sacrificed, and looks upon his blood as the libation which was poured on the sacrificial offering. He could not have spoken thus positively had not the sentence of death already been passed upon him.

7. I have fought a good fight. Every reader will perceive that the apostle, as was his very frequent custom, alludes to the contests at the Grecian games: "I have wrestled that good wrestling"—I have struggled hard, and have overcome, in a most honorable cause. I have finished my course. I have started for the prize, and have come up to the goal, outstripping all my competitors, and have gained this prize also. I have kept the faith. As the laws of these games must be most diligently observed and kept (for though a man overcome, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully), so I have kept the rules of the spiritual combat and race; and thus, having contended lawfully and conquered in each exercise, I have a right to expect the prize.

MATTHEW HENRY

Towards the end of our days to be able to speak in this manner, what comfort, unspeakable comfort, will it afford!

[3] With what pleasure he looks forward to the life he was to live hereafter (v. 8). Let this encourage Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ that there is a crown of life before us. It is called a crown of righteousness, because our holiness and righteousness will there be perfected, and will be our crown.

And yet this crown of righteousness was not peculiar to Paul, as if it belonged only to apostles and martyrs, but to all those also that love his appearing. It is the character of all the saints that they love the appearing of Jesus Christ: they love his second appearing at the great day; love it, and long for it. This crown, which believers shall wear, is laid up for them; they have it not at present, for here they are but heirs; they have it not in possession, and yet it is sure.

1. He bids him hasten to him (v. 9). Paul wanted Timothy's company and help; and the reason he gives is because several had left him (v. 10): Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world. Love to this present world is often the cause of apostasy from the truths and ways of Jesus Christ. Crescens had gone one way and Titus another way.

Luke ever remained with Paul (v. 11, 12). 2. He speaks respectfully concerning Mark. This Mark was he about whom Paul and Barnabas had contended, Acts xv. 39. Paul would not take him with him to the work, because he had once flinched and drawn back: but now, says he, Take Mark, and bring him with thee. By this it appears that Paul was now reconciled to Mark. We must not disclaim for ever making use of those that are profitable and useful, though they may have done amiss.

3. Paul orders Timothy as he came through Troas to bring with him thence those things which he had left behind him there (v. 13), the cloak he had left there, which Paul had the more occasion for in a cold prison.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

8. a crown—rather as Greek, "the crown." The "henceforth" marks the decisive moment; he looks to his state in a threefold aspect: (1) The past "I have fought"; (2) The immediate present; "there is laid up for me". (3) The future "the Lord will give in that day" [BENGEL]. crown—a crown, or garland, used to be bestowed at the Greek national games on the successful competitor in wrestling, running, etc. (cf. I Pet. 5:4; Rev. 2:10). of righteousness—The reward is in recognition of righteousness wrought in Paul by God's Spirit; the crown is prepared for the righteous; but it is a crown which consists in righteousness. Righteousness will be its own reward (Rev. 22:11). give—Greek, "shall award" in righteous requital as "Judge" (Acts 17:31; II Cor. 5:10; II Thess. 1:6, 7). in that day—not until His appearing (ch. 1:12). The partakers of the first resurrection may receive a crown also at the last day, and obtain in that general assembly of all men, a new award of praise. The favorable sentence passed on the "brethren" of the Judge, who sit with Him on His throne, is in Matthew 25:40, taken for granted as already awarded, when that affecting those who benefited them is being passed [BENGEL]. me—individual appropriation. Greek, "not only to me." them that love—Greek, "have loved, and do love"; habitual love and desire for Christ's appearing, which presupposes faith (cf. Heb. 9:28). Cf. the sad contrast, vs. 10, "having loved this present world." 9. (vs. 21; ch. 1:4, 8.) Timothy is asked to come to be a comfort to Paul, and also to be strengthened by Paul, for carrying on the Gospel work after Paul's decease. 10. Demas—once a "fellow laborer" of Paul, along with Mark and Luke (Col. 4:14; Philemon 24). His motive for forsaking Paul seems to have been love of worldly ease, safety, and comforts at home, and disinclination to brave danger with Paul (Matt. 13:20, 21, 22). CHRYSOSTOM implies that Thessalonica was his home. Galatia—One oldest MS. supports the reading "Gaul." But most oldest MSS., etc., "Galatia." Titus—He must have therefore left Crete after "setting in order" the affairs of the churches there (Titus 1:5). Dalmatia—part of the Roman province of Illyricum on the coast of the Adriatic. Paul had written to him (Titus 3:12) to come to him in the winter to Nicopolis (in Epirus), intending in the spring to preach the Gospel in the adjoining province of Dalmatia. Titus seems to have gone thither to carry out the apostle's intention, the execution of which was interrupted by his arrest. Whether he went of his own accord, as is likely, or was sent by Paul, which the expression "is departed" hardly accords with, cannot be positively decided. Paul here speaks only of his personal attendants having forsaken him; he had still friends among the Roman Christians who visited him (ch. 4:21), though they had been afraid to stand by him at his trial (vs. 16). 11. Take—Greek, "take up" on thy journey (Acts 20:13, 14). John Mark was probably in, or near, Colosse, as in the Epistle to the Colossians (Col. 4:10), written two years before this, he is mentioned as about to visit them. Timothy was now absent from Ephesus and somewhere in the interior of Asia Minor; hence he would be sure to fall in with Mark on his journey. he is profitable to me for the ministry—Mark had been under a cloud for having forsaken Paul at a critical moment in his missionary tour with Barnabas (Acts 15:37-40; 13:5, 13). Timothy had subsequently occupied the same post in relation to Paul as Mark once held. Hence Paul, appropriately here, wipes out the past censure by high praise of Mark and guards against Timothy's making self-complacent comparisons between himself and Mark, as though he were superior to the latter (cf. Philemon 24). Demas apostatizes. Mark returns to the right way, and is no longer unprofitable, but is profitable for the Gospel ministry (Philemon 11). 12. And—Greek, "But." Thou art to come to me, but Tychicus I have sent to Ephesus to supply thy place (if thou so willest it) in presiding over the Church there in thy absence (cf. Titus 3:12). It is possible Tychicus was the bearer of this Epistle, though the omission of "to thee" is rather against this view. 13. cloak . . . I left—probably obliged to leave it in a hurried departure from Troas. Carpus—a faithful friend to have been entrusted with so precious deposits. The mention of his "cloak," so far from being unworthy of inspiration, is one of those graphic touches which sheds a flood of light on the last scene of Paul's life, on the confines of two worlds; in this wanting a cloak to cover him from the winter cold, in that covered with the righteousness of saints, "clothed upon with his house from heaven" [GAUSSEN]. So the inner vesture and outer garment of

ADAM CLARKE

8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown. This I can claim as my due; but the crown I expect is not one of fading leaves, but a crown of righteousness; the reward which God, in His kindness, has promised to them who are faithful to the grace He has bestowed upon them.

The Lord, the righteous judge. He alludes here to the brabeus, or umpire in the Grecian games, whose office it was to declare the victor and to give the crown. At that day. The day of judgment; the morning of the resurrection from the dead.

Unto all them also that love his appearing. All who live in expectation of the coming of Christ, who anticipate it with joyfulness.

9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. He appears to have wished Timothy to be present at his death, that he might have his faith confirmed by seeing how a Christian could die; and as he had but a short time to live, he begs Timothy to hasten his visit, and particularly so as he had scarcely now any companions.

10. Demas hath forsaken me. This is another proof of the posteriority of this Epistle; for Demas was with the apostle in his first imprisonment, and joins in the salutations, see Col. iv. 14, which were written when Paul was a prisoner at Rome for the first time. Crescens to Galatia. Whether the departure of Crescens was similar to that of Demas, as intimated above, or whether he went on an evangelical embassy, we know not. Charity would hope the latter; for we can hardly suppose that Titus, who is here said to have departed to Dalmatia, had abandoned his Cretan churches, his apostolical office, and especially his aged father and friend, now about to seal the truth with his blood! It is probable that both these persons had gone on sacred missions, and perhaps had been gone some time before the apostle was brought into such imminent danger.

11. Only Luke is with me. This was Luke the Evangelist, and writer of the Acts of the Apostles, who was always much attached to Paul, and it is supposed continued with him even to his martyrdom. Take Mark, and bring him with thee. This was John Mark, who, after having wavered a little at first, became a steady, zealous, and useful man. For he is profitable to me for the ministry. "For service"; that is, he would be very useful to the apostle, to minister to him in his present close confinement.

12. Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. For this person see Acts xx. 4; Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 7. It is rather strange that the apostle should say, I have sent Tychicus to Ephesus, if Timothy was at Ephesus at this time; but it is probable that Tychicus had been sent to Ephesus some time before this, and therefore the apostle might say, though writing now to Ephesus, Tychicus have I sent.

13. The cloke that I left at Troas. By several translated "bag"; and it is most likely that it was something of this kind, in which he might carry his clothes, books, and traveling necessaries.

MATTHEW HENRY

He would have his books with him. Whereas he had exhorted Timothy to give attendance to reading, so he did himself.

4. He mentions Alexander, and the mischief that he had done him, v. 14, 15. Paul foretells that God would reckon with him. The Lord will reward him according to his works. Some who were once Paul's hearers and admirers did not give him reason to remember them with much pleasure; for one forsook him, and another did him much evil. At the same time he mentions some with pleasure; the badness of some did not make him forget the goodness of others.

I. He gives Timothy an account of his own present circumstances.

1. He had lately been called to appear before the emperor (v. 16).

The Christians at Rome were forward to go and meet him (Acts xxviii); but when it came to the pinch, and they would be in danger of suffering with him, then they all forsook him. Paul had his trials in his friends' forsaking him in a time of danger as well as in the opposition made by enemies: all forsook him. God might lay it to their charge, but Paul endeavours to prevent it by his earnest prayers.

2. When he had nobody to keep him in countenance, God made his face to shine. Paul knew how to preach at the bar as well as in the pulpit. And that all the Gentiles might hear; the emperor himself and the great men who would never have heard Paul preach if he had not been brought before them. And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. See how Paul improved his experiences. "And shall preserve me to his heavenly kingdom." If the Lord stand by us, he will strengthen us, and his presence will more than supply everyone's absence. Former deliverances should encourage future hopes. We ought to give God the glory of all past, present, and future deliverances: To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

II. He sends salutations, v. 19.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Jesus, Paul's master, are suggestive of most instructive thought (John 19). books—He was anxious respecting these that he might transmit them to the faithful, so that they might have the teaching of his writings when he should be gone. especially the parchments—containing perhaps some of his inspired Epistles themselves. 14. Alexander the coppersmith—or "smith" in general. Perhaps the same as the Alexander (I Tim. 1:20, Note) at Ephesus. Excommunicated then he subsequently was restored, and now vented his personal malice because of his excommunication in accusing Paul before the Roman judges, whether of incendiarism or of introducing a new religion. See my Introduction. He may have been the Alexander put forward by the Jews in the tumult at Ephesus (Acts 19: 33, 34). reward—The oldest MSS. read, "shall reward," or "requite him." Personal revenge certainly did not influence the apostle (vs. 16, end). 15. our words—the arguments of us Christians for our common faith. Believers have a common cause. 16. At my first answer—i.e., "defense" in court, at my first public examination. Timothy knew nothing of this, it is plain, till Paul now informs him. But during his former imprisonment at Rome, Timothy was with him (Phil. 1:1, 7). This must have been, therefore, a second imprisonment. He must have been set free before the persecution in A.D. 64, when the Christians were accused of causing the conflagration in Rome; for, had he been a prisoner then, he certainly would not have been spared. The tradition [EUSEBIUS, 2. 25] that he was finally beheaded, accords with his not having been put to death in the persecution, A.D. 64, when burning to death was the mode by which the Christians were executed, but subsequently to it. His "first" trial in his second imprisonment seems to have been on the charge of complicity in the conflagration; his absence from Rome may have been the ground of his acquittal on that charge; his final condemnation was probably on the charge of introducing a new and unlawful religion into Rome. stood with me—Greek, "came forward with me" [ALFORD] as a friend and advocate. may [it] not be laid to their charge—The position of "their," in the Greek, is emphatic. "May it not be laid to THEIR charge," for they were intimidated; their drawing back from me was not from bad disposition so much as from fear; it is sure to be laid to the charge of those who intimidated them. Still Paul, like Stephen, would doubtless have offered the same prayer for his persecutors themselves (Acts 7:60). 17. the Lord—the more because men deserted me. stood with me—stronger than "came forward with me" (Greek, vs. 16). strengthened—Greek, "put strength in me." by me—"through me"; through my means. One single occasion is often of the greatest moment. the preaching—"the Gospel proclamation." might be fully known—might be fully made (Note, vs. 5). that all the Gentiles—present at my trial, "might hear" the Gospel proclaimed then. Rome was the capital of the Gentile world, so that a proclamation of the truth to the Romans was likely to go forth to the rest of the Gentile world. I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion—viz., Satan, the roaring, devouring lion (Luke 22:31; I Pet. 5:8). I was prevented falling into his snare (ch. 2:26; Ps. 22: 21; II Pet. 2:9); vs. 18 agrees with this interpretation, "The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work," viz., both from evil and the evil one, as the Greek of the Lord's Prayer expresses it. It was not deliverance from Nero (who was called the lion) which he rejoiced in, for he did not fear death (vss. 6-8), but deliverance from the temptation, through fear, to deny His Lord: so ALFORD. 18. And the Lord shall . . .—Hope draws its conclusions from the past to the future [BENGEL]. will preserve me—lit., "will save" (Ps. 22:21), "will bring me safe to." Jesus is the Lord and the Deliverer (Phil. 3:20; I Thess. 1:10: He saves from evil; He gives good things. heavenly kingdom—Greek, "His kingdom which is a heavenly one." to whom . . .—Greek, "to whom be the glory unto the ages of ages." The very hope produces a doxology: how much greater will be the doxology which the actual enjoyment shall produce! [BENGEL]. 19. Prisca and Aquila—(Acts 18:2, 3; Rom. 16:3, 4; I Cor. 16:19, written from Ephesus, where therefore Aquila and Priscilla must then have been). household of Onesiphorus—If he were dead at the time, the "household" would not have been called "the household of Onesiphorus." He was probably absent (Note, ch. 1:16). 20. In order to depict his desertion, he informs Timothy that Erastus, one of his usual companions (Acts 19:22, possibly the same Erastus as in Rom. 16:23, though how he could leave his official duties for missionary journeys is not clear), stayed behind

ADAM CLARKE

What the books were we cannot tell; it is most likely they were his own writings. And as to the parchments, they were probably the Jewish Scriptures and a copy of the Septuagint. These he must have had at hand at all times.

14. Alexander the coppersmith. We are not to understand this of any tradesman, but of some rabbin; for it was not unusual for the Jews to apply the name of some trade as an epithet to their rabbins and literary men. He is in all probability the very same mentioned in Acts xix. 33, where see the note; and it is not unlikely that he may have been the same whom the apostle was obliged to excommunicate, 1 Tim. i. 20. The Lord reward him. But instead of apodoe, which has here the power of a solemn imprecation, apodosei, "He will reward," is the reading of the very best MSS., several of the versions, and some of the chief Greek fathers. This makes the sentence declaratory: "The Lord will reward him according to his works." This reading is most like the spirit and temper of this heavenly man.

15. Of whom be thou ware also. It seems that this rabbin travelled about from place to place for the purpose of opposing the gospel, the Jews putting him forward, as it is said, Acts xix. 33. He hath greatly withstood our words. Has been a constant opposer of the Christian doctrines.

16. At my first answer. "At my first apology"; this word properly signifies a "defense" or "vindication." This is the meaning of what we call the "apologies" of the primitive fathers; they were vindications or defenses of Christianity. It is generally allowed that when Paul had been taken this second time by the Romans he was examined immediately and required to account for his conduct; and that, so odious was Christianity through the tyranny of Nero, he could procure no person to plead for him. Nero, who had himself set fire to Rome, charged it on the Christians, and they were in consequence persecuted in the most cruel manner. He caused them to be wrapped up in pitched clothes, and then, chaining them to a stake, he ordered them to be set on fire to give light in the streets after night. I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. How much more simple, elegant, and expressive are the apostle's own words: "Let it not be placed to their account!" Let them not have to reckon for it with the supreme Judge at the great day!

17. The Lord stood with me. When all human help failed, God, in a more remarkable manner, interposed; and thus the excellency plainly appeared to be of God, and not of man. That by me the preaching might be fully known. When called on to make his defense, he took occasion to preach the gospel, and to show that the great God of heaven and earth had designed to illuminate the Gentile world with the rays of His light and glory. This must have endeared him to some, while others might consider him an opposer of their gods and be the more incensed against him. I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. I escaped the imminent danger at that time. Probably he was seized in a tumultuous manner and expected to be torn to pieces. The words "to be rescued from the mouth or jaws of the lion" are a proverbial form of speech for deliverance from the most imminent danger.

18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. None of the evil designs formed against me to make me unfaithful or unsteady, to cause me to save my life at the expense of faith and a good conscience, shall succeed; my life may go, but He will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom.

19. Salute Prisca and Aquila. Several MSS., versions, and fathers have Priscilla instead of Prisca: they are probably the same as those mentioned in Acts xviii. 18, 26. The household of Onesiphorus. See chap. i. 16. Onesiphorus was probably dead at this time; his "family" still remained at Ephesus.

20. Erastus abode at Corinth. He was treasurer of that city, as we learn from Rom. xvi. 23. The apostle had sent him and Timothy on a mission to Macedonia, Acts xix. 22, whence it is probable he returned to Corinth and there

He mentions his leaving Trophimus sick at Miletum (v. 20).

III. He hastens Timothy to come to him before winter (v. 21).

IV. He sends commendations to him from Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia, and all the brethren.

V. He concludes with a prayer, that the Lord Jesus would be with his spirit. We need no more to make us happy than to have the Lord Jesus Christ with our spirits. And it is the best prayer we can put up for our friends. Grace be with you. Amen. And if grace be with us here to convert and change us, to make us holy, to keep us humble, and to enable us to persevere to the end, glory will crown us hereafter.

at Corinth, his native place, or usual residence, of which city he was "chamberlain," or city steward and treasurer (Rom. 16:23); and Trophimus he left behind at Miletus sick. (See on his former history, Acts 20:4; 21:29.) This verse is irreconcilable with the imprisonment from which he writes being the first: for he did not pass by Corinth or Miletus on his way to Rome when about to be imprisoned for the first time. As Miletus was near Ephesus, there is a presumption that Timothy was not at Ephesus when Paul wrote, or he would not need to inform Timothy of Trophimus lying sick in his immediate neighborhood. However, Trophimus may not have been still at Miletus at the time when Paul wrote, though he had left him there on his way to Rome. Prisca and Aquila were most likely to be at Ephesus (vs. 19), and he desires Timothy to salute them: so also Onesiphorus' household (ch. 1:18). Paul had not the power of healing at will (Acts 19:12), but as the Lord allowed him. 21. before winter—when a voyage, according to ancient usages of navigation, would be out of the question: also, Paul would need his "cloak" against the winter (vs. 13). Pudens . . . Claudia—afterwards husband and wife (according to MARTIAL IV, 13; XI, 54), he a Roman knight, she a Briton, surnamed Rufina. TACITUS, Agricola, 14, mentions that territories in southeast Britain were given to a British king, Cogidunus, in reward for his fidelity to Rome, A.D. 52, while Claudius was emperor. In 1772 a marble was dug up at Chichester, mentioning Cogidunus with the surname Claudius, added from his patron, the emperor's name; and Pudens in connection with Cogidunus, doubtless his father-in-law. His daughter would be Claudia, who seems to have been sent to Rome for education, as a pledge of the father's fidelity. Here she was under the protection of Pomponia, wife of Aulus Plautius, conqueror of Britain. Pomponia was accused of foreign superstitions, A.D. 57 [TACITUS, Annals, 3. 32], probably Christianity. She probably was the instrument of converting Claudia, who took the name Rufina from her, that being a cognomen of the Pomponian gens (cf. Rom. 16:13, Rufus, a Christian). Pudens in Martial and in the Chichester inscription, appears as a pagan; but perhaps he or his friends concealed his Christianity through fear. Tradition represents Timothy, a son of Pudens, as taking part in converting the Britons. Linus—put third; therefore not at this time yet, as he was afterwards, bishop. His name being here inserted between Pudens and Claudia, implies the two were not yet married. "Eubulus" is identified by some with Aristobulus, who, with his converts, is said to have been among the first evangelists of Britain. Paul himself, says CLEMENT, "visited the farthest west [perhaps Britain, certainly Spain], and was martyred under the rulers at Rome," who were Nero's vicegerents in his absence from the city. 22. Grace be with you—plural in oldest MSS., "with YOU," i.e., thee and the members of the Ephesian and neighboring churches.

became finally settled. Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick. Even the apostles could not work miracles when they pleased; that power was but rarely given, and that for very special purposes. Trophimus was an Ephesian. See Acts xx. 4. Miletus was a maritime town of Ionia, not far from Ephesus; but there was another Miletus, in Crete, which some learned men think to be intended here. It appears that Paul went from Macedonia to Corinth, where he left Erastus; from Corinth he proceeded to Troas, where he lodged with Carpus; from Troas he went to Ephesus, where he visited Timothy; from Ephesus he went to Miletus, where he left Trophimus sick; and having embarked at Miletus, he went by sea to Rome. It is most likely, therefore, that the Miletus of Ionia is the place intended.

21. Come before winter. (1) Because the apostle's time was short and uncertain. (2) Because sailing in those seas was very dangerous in winter. Whether Timothy saw the apostle before he was martyred is not known. Eubulus. This person is nowhere else mentioned in the New Testament. Pudens. Of this person we have traditions and legends, but nothing certain. The Catholics make him bishop of Rome. Linus. He also is made, by the same persons, bishop of Rome; but there is no sufficient ground for these pretensions. Claudia. Supposed to be the wife of Pudens. Some think she was a British lady converted by Paul, and that she was the first that brought the gospel to Britain. All the brethren. All the Christians, of whom there were many at Rome; though of Paul's companions in travel only Luke remained there.

22. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. This is a prayer addressed to Christ by one of the most eminent of His apostles; another proof of the untruth of the assertion that prayer is never offered to Christ in the New Testament. He prays that Christ may be with his spirit, enlightening, strengthening, and confirming it to the end. Grace be with you. These words show that the Epistle was addressed to the whole church, and that it is not to be considered of a private nature.

This epistle of Paul to Titus is much of the same nature with those to Timothy. We read much of this Titus. He was a Greek (Gal. 2:3). Paul called him "his son" (Titus 1:4), "his brother" (2 Cor. 2:13), "his partner and fellow helper" (2 Cor. 8:23). He went up with the apostles to the church at Jerusalem (Gal. 2:1), was much conversant at Corinth, for which church he had "an earnest care" (2 Cor. 8:16). Paul's second epistle to them was sent by his hand (2 Cor. 8:16-18, 23; 9:2-4; 12:18). He was with the apostle at Rome, and thence went into Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4:10), after which no more occurs of him in the Scriptures. In Crete the gospel had got some footing; and here were Paul and Titus in one of their travels; but the apostle could not himself tarry long at this place. He therefore left Titus some time there, to carry on the work which had been begun, wherein, probably, meeting with more difficulty than ordinary, Paul wrote this epistle to him; and yet, perhaps not so much for his own sake as for the people's, that the endeavors of Titus might be more significant and effectual among them.

Verses 1–4

I. The writer. Paul, a Gentile name taken by the apostle of the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 9, 46, 47. Ministers will accommodate even smaller matters, so that there may be any furthering of acceptance in their work. A servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ. The highest officers in the church are but servants. (Much divinity and devotion are comprehended in the inscriptions of the epistles.)

According to the faith of God's elect. Their doctrine agreed with the faith of all the elect. Faith is the first principle of sanctification.

The gospel is truth; the great, sure, and saving truth. Divine faith rests not on fallible reasonings and profitable opinions, but on the truth itself, which is after godliness. All gospel truth is after godliness; it is truth not only to be known, but acknowledged; it must be held forth in word and practice.

To bring to this knowledge and faith, and to the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness, is the great end of the gospel ministry, v. 2. This is the further intent of the gospel, to beget hope as well as faith. The faith and godliness of Christians lead to eternal life, and give hope of it; for God, that cannot lie, hath promised it. Here is the stability and antiquity of the promise of eternal life to the saints. God, who cannot lie, hath promised before the world began.

Vss. 1-16. ADDRESS: FOR WHAT END TITUS WAS LEFT IN CRETE. QUALIFICATIONS FOR ELDERS: GAINSAYERS IN CRETE NEEDING REPROOF. 1. servant of God—not found elsewhere in the same connection. In Romans 1:1 it is "servant of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 1:10; Phil. 1:1; cf. Acts 16:17; Rev. 1:1; 15:3). In Romans 1:1, there follows, "called to be an apostle," which corresponds to the general designation of the office first, "servant of GOD," here, followed by the special description, "apostle of Jesus Christ." The full expression of his apostolic office answers, in both Epistles, to the design, and is a comprehensive index to the contents. The peculiar form here would never have proceeded from a forger. according to the faith—rather, "for," "with a view to subserve the faith"; this is the object of my apostleship (cf. vss. 4, 9; Rom. 1:5). the elect—for whose sake we ought to endure all things (II Tim. 2:10). This election has its ground, not in anything belonging to those thus distinguished, but in the purpose and will of God from everlasting (II Tim. 1:9; Rom. 8:30-33; cf. Luke 18:7; Eph. 1:4; Col. 3:12). Acts 13:48 shows that all faith on the part of the elect, rests on the divine foreordination: they do not become elect by their faith, but receive faith, and so become believers, because they are elect. and the acknowledging of the truth—"and (for promoting) the full knowledge of the truth," i.e., the Christian truth (Eph. 1:13). after godliness—i.e., which belongs to piety: opposed to the knowledge which has not for its object the truth, but error, doctrinal and practical (vss. 11, 16; I Tim. 6:3); or even which has for its object mere earthly truth, not growth in the divine life. "Godliness," or "piety," is a term peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles: a fact explained by the apostle having in them to combat doctrine tending to "ungodliness" (II Tim. 2:16; cf. ch. 2:11, 12). 2. In hope of eternal life—connected with the whole preceding sentence. That whereon rests my aim as an apostle to promote the elect's faith and full knowledge of the truth, is, "the hope of eternal life" (ch. 2:13; 3:7; Acts 23:6; 24:15; 28:20). that cannot lie—(Rom. 3:4; 11:29; Heb. 6:18). promised before the world began—a contracted expression for "purposed before the world began (lit., before the ages of time), and promised actually in time," the promise springing from the eternal purpose; as in II Timothy 1:9, the gift of

1. Paul, a servant of God. In several places of his other Epistles, Paul styles himself the "servant of Jesus Christ," but this is the only place where he calls himself the servant of God.

The faith of God's elect. The Christians. The acknowledging of the truth. For the propagation of that truth, or system of doctrines, which is calculated to promote godliness, or a holy and useful life.

2. In hope of eternal life. In expectation of a state of being and well-being which should last through eternity, when time should be no more. Which God, that cannot lie, promised. We have often seen that the phrase "the foundation of the world" means the Jewish economy; and "before the foundation of the world," the times antecedent to the giving of the law. This is evidently the meaning here. See 2 Tim. i. 9-11.

MATTHEW HENRY

No wonder if the contempt of it be punished severely, since he has not only promised it of old, but (v. 3) has in due times manifested his word through preaching. That which some called foolishness of preaching has been thus honoured. Which is committed unto me. The ministry is a trust; none taketh this honour, but he who is thereunto appointed; and whoso is appointed and called must preach the word. According to the commandment of God our Saviour. Let none rest therefore in men's calling, without God's.

II. The person written to, Titus, a Gentile Greek, yet called both to the faith and ministry. The grace of God is free and powerful. What worthiness or preparation was there in one of heathen stock and education? My own (or my genuine) son, not by natural generation, but by supernatural regeneration. "After the common faith, that faith which is common to all the regenerate, and which thou hast in truth, and expressest in the life."

III. The salutation and prayer, wishing all blessings to him. The blessings wished: Grace, mercy, and peace. Grace is the fountain of all blessings. Mercy, and peace, and all good, spring out of this. Get into God's favour, and all must be well; for, the persons from whom blessings are wished: From God the Father, the fountain of all good. Every blessing, every comfort, comes to us from God, as a Father. And the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. All is from the Father by the Son.

I. More generally. Titus was to go on in settling what the apostle himself had not time for, in his short stay there. 1. The apostle's great diligence in the gospel; when he had set things on foot in one place, he hastened away to another. 2. His faithfulness and prudence. He neglected not the places that he went from; but left some to cultivate the young plantation. 3. His humility; he disdained not to be helped in his work, and that by such as were not of so great gifts as himself. 4. Titus, though inferior to an apostle, was yet above the ordinary fixed pastors or bishops, who were to tend particular churches as their peculiar stated charge; but Titus was in a higher sphere, to ordain such ordinary pastors where wanting, and settle things in their first state and form, and then to pass to other places. Here at Crete Titus was but occasionally, and for a short time; Paul willed him to despatch the business he was left for, and come to him at Nicopolis, where he purposed to winter; after this he was sent to Corinth, was with the apostle at Rome, and was sent thence into Dalmatia, which is the last we read of him in scripture.

II. In special: To ordain elders in every city. These presbyters or elders were to have the ordinary and stated care and charge of the churches. Presbyters here therefore are gospel ministers, to dispense Christ's ordinances, and to feed the church of God. A church without a fixed and standing ministry in it is imperfect and wanting. Where a fit number of believers is, presbyters or elders must be set; their continuance in churches is as necessary as their first appointment, for perfecting the saints, and edifying the body of Christ.

Verses 6–16

The apostle here gives Titus directions about ordination.

I. Of those whom he should ordain.

1. Their qualifications respecting their life.

(1) More general: If any be blameless; not absolutely without fault, so none are; nor altogether unblamed, this is rare and difficult; for Christ himself and his apostles were blamed. But he must be one who lies not under an ill character.

(2) More particularly.

[1] There is his relative character. In his own person, he must be of conjugal chastity. And, as to his children, having faithful children, obedient and good, brought up in the true Christian faith, and living according to it, at least as far as the endeavours of the parents can avail. Not accused of riot, nor unruly. The most innocent may be falsely so charged; they must look to it therefore that there be no colour for such censure. Children so faithful and obedient will be a good sign of faithfulness and diligence in the parent. From his faithfulness in the less, there may be encouragement to commit to him the greater, the rule of the church of God. The ground of this qualification is shown from the nature of his office (v. 7). Being such bishops and overseers of the flock, who were to be examples to them, and God's stewards to take care of the affairs of his house, there is great reason that they should be blameless.

[2] The more absolute ones are expressed, First, Negatively. Not self-willed. The prohibition is of large extent, excluding self-opinion,—self-love, making self the centre of all,—also self-confidence and self-grace was the result of the eternal purpose "before the world began." 3. in due times—Greek, "in its own seasons," the seasons appropriate to it, and fixed by God for it (Acts 1:7). manifested—implying that the "promise," vs. 2, had lain hidden in His eternal purpose heretofore (cf. Col. 1:26; II Tim. 1:9, 10). his word—equivalent to "eternal life" (vs. 2; John 5:24; 6:63; 17:3, 17). through preaching—Greek, "in preaching," or rather as ALFORD (Note, cf. II Tim. 4:17), "in the (Gospel) proclamation (the thing preached, the Gospel) with which I was entrusted." according to—in pursuance of (cf. I Tim. 1:1). of God our Saviour—rather as Greek, "of our Saviour God." God is predicated of our Saviour (cf. Jude 25; Luke 1:47). Also Psalm 24:5; Isaiah 12:2; 45:15, 21, LXX. Applied to Jesus, vs. 4; ch. 2:13; 3:6; II Timothy 1:10. 4. Titus, mine own son Greek, "my genuine child" (I Tim. 1:2), i.e., converted by my instrumentality (I Cor. 4:17; Philemon 10). after the common faith—a genuine son in respect to (in virtue of) the faith common to all the people of God, comprising in a common brotherhood Gentiles as well as Jews, therefore embracing Titus a Gentile (II Pet. 1:1; Jude 3). Grace, mercy, and peace—"mercy" is omitted in some of the oldest MSS. But one of the best and oldest MSS. supports it (Notes, cf. I Tim. 1:2; II Tim. 1:2). There are many similarities of phrase in the Pastoral Epistles. the Lord Jesus Christ—The oldest MSS. read only "Christ Jesus." our Saviour—found thus added to "Christ" only in Paul's Pastoral Epistles, and in II Pet. 1:1, 11; 2:20; 3:18. 5. I left thee—"I left thee behind" [ALFORD] when I left the island: not implying permanence of commission (cf. I Tim. 1:3). in Crete—now Candia. set in order—rather as Greek, "that thou mightest follow up (the work begun by me), setting right the things that are wanting," which I was unable to complete by reason of the shortness of my stay in Crete. Christianity, doubtless, had long existed in Crete: there were some Cretans among those who heard Peter's preaching on Pentecost (Acts 2:11). The number of Jews in Crete was large (vs. 10), and it is likely that those scattered in the persecution of Stephen (Acts 11:19) preached to them, as they did to the Jews of Cyprus,etc. Paul also was there on his voyage to Rome (Acts 27:7-12). By all these instrumentalities the Gospel was sure to reach Crete. But until Paul's later visit, after his first imprisonment at Rome, the Cretan Christians were without Church organization. This Paul began, and had commissioned (before leaving Crete) Titus to go on with, and now reminds him of that commission. ordain—rather, "appoint," "constitute." in every city—"from city to city." as I . . . appointed thee—i.e., as I directed thee; prescribing as well the act of constituting elders, as also the manner of doing so, which latter includes the qualifications required in a presbyter presently stated. Those called "elders" here are called "bishops" in vs. 7. Elder is the term of dignity in relation to the college of presbyters; bishop points to the duties of his office in relation to the flock. From the unsound state of the Cretan Christians described here, we see the danger of the want of Church government. The appointment of presbyters was designed to check idle talk and speculation, by setting forth the "faithful word." 6. (Notes, cf. I Tim. 3:2-4.) The thing dwelt on here as the requisite in a bishop, is a good reputation among those over whom he is to be set. The immorality of the Cretan professors rendered this a necessary requisite in one who was to be a reprover: and their unsoundness in doctrine also made needful great steadfastness in the faith (vss. 9, 13). having faithful children—i.e., believing children. He who could not bring his children to faith, how shall he bring others? [BENGEL.] ALFORD explains, "established in the faith." not accused—not merely not riotous, but "not (even) accused of riot" ("profligacy" [ALFORD]; "dissolute life" [WAHL]). unruly—insubordinate; opposed to "in subjection" (I Tim. 3:4). 7. For . . . must—The emphasis is on "must." The reason why I said "blameless," is the very idea of a "bishop" (an overseer of the flock; he here substitutes for "presbyter" the term which expresses his duties) involves the necessity for such blamelessness, if he is to have influence over the flock. steward of God—The greater the master is, the greater the virtues required in His servant [BENGEL], (I Tim. 3:15); the Church is God's house, over which the minister is set as a steward (Heb. 3:2-6; I Pet. 4:10, 17). Note: ministers are not merely Church officers, but God's stewards; Church government is of divine appointment. not self-willed—lit., "self-pleasing"; unaccommodating to others; harsh, the opposite of "a lover of hospitality" (vs. 6); so Nabal (I Sam. 25); self-loving and imperious; such

3. But hath in due times. "In its own times." See 1 Tim. ii. 6; Gal. iv. 4; Eph. i. 10; ii. 7. God caused the gospel to be published in that time in which it could be published with the greatest effect. It is impossible that God should prematurely hasten or causelessly delay the accomplishment of any of His works. Jesus was manifested precisely at the time in which that manifestation could best promote the glory of God and the salvation of man. Manifested his word. "His doctrine"—the doctrine of eternal life, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Which is committed unto me. That is, to preach it among the Gentiles. According to the commandment of God our Saviour. This evidently refers to the commission which he had received from Christ. See Acts ix. 15; xxvi. 16, etc. This is the commandment, and according to it he became the apostle of the Gentiles. God our Saviour. As the commission was given by Jesus Christ alone, the person whom he terms here God our Saviour must be Jesus Christ only; and this is another proof that Paul believed Jesus Christ to be God. This "eternal life" God had "promised" in a comparatively obscure way before the foundation of the world, the Jewish dispensation; but now under the gospel He had "made it manifest"—produced it with all its brightness, illustrations, and proofs.

4. To Titus, mine own son. Him whom I have been the instrument of converting to the Christian faith and in whom, in this respect, I have the same right as any man can have in his own begotten son.

5. For this cause left I thee in Crete. That Paul had been in Crete, though nowhere else intimated, is clear from this passage. That he could not have made such an important visit and evangelized an island of the first consequence without its being mentioned by his historian Luke, had it happened during the period embraced in the Acts of the Apostles, must be evident. That the journey therefore must have been performed after the time in which Luke ends his history, that is, after Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, seems almost certain. Set in order the things that are wanting. It appears from this that the apostle did not spend much time in Crete, and that he was obliged to leave it before he had got the church properly organized. The supplying of this defect, he tells Titus, he had confided to him as one whose spiritual views coincided entirely with his own. Ordain elders in every city. That thou mightest "appoint" elders—persons well-instructed in divine things, who should be able to instruct others, and observe and enforce the discipline of the church. It appears that those who are called elders in this place are the same as those termed "bishops" in v. 7. We have many proofs that bishops and elders were of the same order in the apostolic Church, though afterwards they became distinct. In every city. This seems to intimate that the apostle had gone over the whole of the "hundred cities" for which this island was celebrated. Indeed it is not likely that he would leave one in which he had not preached Christ crucified.

6. If any be blameless. See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. Having faithful children. Whose family is converted to God. It would have been absurd to employ a man to govern the church whose children were not in subjection to himself; for it is an apostolic maxim that he who cannot rule his own house cannot rule the church of God, 1 Tim. iii. 5.

7. Not selfwilled. Not one who is determined to have his own way in everything, setting up his own judgment to that of all others.

MATTHEW HENRY

pleasing, set on one's own will and way. A great honour it is to a minister to be ready to ask and to take advice, to be ready to defer to the mind and will of others, becoming all things to all men, that they may gain some. Not soon angry. How unfit are those to govern a church who cannot govern themselves. Not given to wine. Moderate use of this, as of the other good creatures of God, is not unlawful. But excess therein is shameful in all, especially in a minister. Not given to filthy lucre; not entering into the ministry with base worldly views. Nothing is more unbecoming a minister, who is to direct his own and others' eyes to another world, than to be too intent upon this. Secondly, Positively: he must be (v. 8) a lover of hospitality. Such a spirit and practice, according to ability and occasion, are very becoming such as should be examples of good works. A lover of good men, or of good things; ministers should be exemplary in both. Sober, or prudent; a needful grace in a minister both for his ministerial and personal carriage and management. Just in things belonging to civil life. Holy in what concerns religion. Temperate; it comes from a word that signifies strength, and denotes one who has power over his appetite and affections.

2. As to doctrine,

(1) Here is his duty: Holding fast the faithful word, as he has been taught—holding it fast in his own belief and profession, and in teaching others. Ministers must hold fast, and hold forth, the faithful word in their teaching and life.

(2) Here is the end: That he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort, and to convince the gainsayers. How should he do this if he himself were uncertain or unsteady, not holding fast that faithful word and sound doctrine.

II. Whom he should reject or avoid. The reasons he takes both from bad teachers and hearers among them, v. 10, to the end.

1. From bad teachers. (1) Those false teachers are described. They were unruly, headstrong and ambitious of power, refractory and untractable. And vain talkers and deceivers, falling into errors and mistakes, and fond of them, and studious and industrious to draw others into the same. Many such there were, especially those of the circumcision, who yet were for mingling Judaism and Christianity together, and so making a corrupt medley. (2) Here is the apostle's direction how to deal with them (v. 11): Their mouths must be stopped by confutation and conviction. (3) The reasons are given for this. From the pernicious effects of their errors. Their base end in what they do: serving a worldly interest under pretence of religion.

2. In reference to their people or hearers, who are described from ancient testimony given of them.

(1) Here is the witness (v. 12): One of the Cretans, likely to know and unlikely to slander them. A prophet of their own; so their poets were accounted.

(2) Here is the matter of his testimony: The Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. Even to a proverb, they were infamous for falsehood and lying; to play the Cretan, or to lie, is the same; and they were compared to evil beasts for their sly hurtfulness and savage nature, and called slow bellies for their laziness and sensuality, more inclined to eat than to work.

(3) Here is the verification of this by the apostle himself: v. 13. The apostle saw too much ground for that character.

(4) He instructs Titus how to deal with them. When Paul wrote to Timothy he bade him instruct with meekness; but now, when he writes to Titus, he bids him rebuke them sharply. Timothy had a more polite people to deal with, and therefore he must rebuke them with meekness; and Titus had to do with those who were more rough and uncultivated. Their corruptions were many and gross, and therefore should be dealt with accordingly. There must in reproving be a distinguishing between sins and sins; some are more gross and heinous in their nature: and between sinners and sinners; some are of a more tender and tractable temper, apter to be wrought on by gentleness; others are more hardy and stubborn, and need more cutting language.

(5) Here is the end of it noted (v. 14), that they may show themselves truly and effectually changed. The sharpest reproofs must aim at the good of the reproved, to reclaim and reform the erroneous and the guilty. Soundness in the faith is most desirable and necessary. This is the soul's health and vigour. A special means to soundness in the faith is to turn away the ear from fables and the fancies of men. Fancies and devices of men in the worship of God are contrary to truth and piety.

(6) He gives the reasons of this. To good Christians that are sound in the faith and thereby purified all not given to wine—(Notes, I Tim. 3:3, 8). not given to filthy lucre—not making the Gospel a means of gain (I Tim. 3:3, 8). In opposition to those "teaching for filthy lucre's sake" (vs. 11; I Tim. 6:5; I Pet. 5:2).

8. lover of hospitality—needed especially in those days (Rom. 12:13; I Tim. 3:2; Heb. 13:2; I Pet. 4:9; III John 5). Christians travelling from one place to another were received and forwarded on their journey by their brethren. lover of good men—Greek, "a lover of (all that is) good," men or things (Phil. 4:8, 9). sober towards one's self; "discreet"; self-restrained" [ALFORD], (Note, I Tim. 2:9). just—towards men. holy—towards God (Note, I Thess. 2:10). temperate—"One having his passions, tongue, hand and eyes, at command" [CHRYSOSTOM]; "continent." 9. Holding fast—Holding firmly to (cf. Matt. 6:24; Luke 16:13). the faithful—true and trustworthy (I Tim. 1:15). word as he has been taught—lit., "the word (which is) according to the teaching" which he has received (cf. I Tim. 4:6, end; II Timothy 3:14). by—Translate as Greek, "to exhort in doctrine (instruction) which is sound"; sound doctrine or instruction is the element IN which his exhorting is to have place. On "sound" (peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles), see I Timothy 1:10; 6:3. convince—rather, "reprove" [ALFORD], (vs. 13). 10. unruly—"insubordinate." and—omitted in the oldest MSS. "There are many unruly persons, vain talkers, and deceivers"; "unruly" being predicated of both vain talkers and deceivers. vain talkers—opposed to "holding fast the faithful word" (vs. 9). "Vain jangling" (I Tim. 1:6); "foolish questions, unprofitable and vain" (ch. 3:9). The source of the evil was corrupted Judaism (vs. 14). Many Jews were then living in Crete, according to JOSEPHUS; so the Jewish leaven remained in some of them after conversion. deceivers—lit., "deceivers of the minds of others" (Greek, Gal. 6:3). 11. mouths . . . stopped—lit., "muzzled," "bridled" as an unruly beast (cf. Ps. 32:9). who—Greek, "(seeing that they are) such men as"; or "inasmuch as they" [ELLICOTT]. subvert . . . houses—"overthrowing" their "faith" (II Tim. 2:18). "They are the devil's levers by which he subverts the houses of God" [THEOPHYL ACT]. for filthy lucre—(I Tim. 3:3, 8; 6:5). 12. One—Epimenides of Phæstus, or Gnossus, in Crete, about 600 B.C. He was sent for to purify Athens from its pollution occasioned by Cylon. He was regarded as a diviner and prophet. The words here are taken probably from his treatise "concerning oracles." Paul also quotes from two other heathen writers, ARATUS (Acts 17:28) and MENANDER (I Cor. 15:33), but he does not honor them so far as even to mention their names. of themselves . . . their own—which enhances his authority as a witness. "To Cretanize" was proverbial for to lie; as "to Corinthianize" was for to be dissolute. alway liars—not merely at times, as every natural man is. Contrast vs. 2, "God that cannot lie." They love "fables" (vs. 14); even the heathen poets laughed at their lying assertion that they had in their country the sepulchre of Jupiter. evil beasts—rude, savage, cunning, greedy. Crete was a country without wild beasts. Epimenides' sarcasm was that its human inhabitants supplied the place of wild beasts. slow bellies—indolent through pampering their bellies. They themselves are called "bellies," for that is the member for which they live (Rom. 16:18; Phil. 3:19). 13. This witness—"This testimony (though coming from a Cretan) is true." sharply—Gentleness would not reclaim so perverse offenders. that they—that those seduced by the false teachers may be brought back to soundness in the faith. Their malady is strifes about words and questions (ch. 3:9; I Tim. 6:4). 14. Jewish fables—(Notes, I Tim. 1:4; 4:7; II Tim. 4:4). These formed the transition stage to subsequent Gnosticism; as yet the error was but profitless, and not tending to godliness, rather than openly opposed to the faith. commandments of men—as to ascetic abstinence (vs. 15; Mark 7:7-9; Col. 2:16, 20-23; I Tim. 4:3). that turn from the truth—whose characteristic is that they turn away from the truth (II Tim. 4:4).

ADAM CLARKE

Not soon angry. Not a choleric man; one who is irritable, who is apt to be inflamed on every opposition; one who has not proper command over his own temper.

8. A lover of hospitality. "A lover of strangers." See the note on 1 Tim. iii. 2. A lover of good men. "A lover of goodness" or of good things in general. Sober. Prudent in all his conduct. Just in all his dealings. Holy in his heart. Temperate—self-denying and abstemious in his food and raiment; not too nice on points of honor, nor magisterially rigid in the exercise of his ecclesiastical functions.

9. Holding fast the faithful word. Conscientiously retaining, and zealously maintaining, the true Christian doctrine, "according to the instructions," or according to the institutions, form of sound doctrine, or confession of faith, which I have delivered to you. That he may be able by sound doctrine. If the doctrine be not sound, vain is the profession of it, and vain its influence. To exhort them to hold the faith, that they may persevere. And to convince. Refute the objections, confound the sophistry, and convert the gainsayers; and thus defend the truth.

10. There are many unruly. Persons who will not receive the sound doctrine nor come under wholesome discipline. Vain talkers. Empty boasters of knowledge, rights, and particular privileges; all noise, empty parade, and no work. Deceivers of the souls of men by their specious pretensions. They of the circumcision. The Judaizing teachers, who maintained the necessity of circumcision and of observing the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law in order to the perfecting of the gospel.

11. Whose mouths must be stopped. Unmask them at once; exhibit them to the people; make manifest their ignorance and hypocrisy, and let them be confounded before the people whom they are endeavoring to seduce. Subvert whole houses. Turn whole Christian families from the faith.

12. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own. This was Epimenides, who was born at Gnossus, in Crete. He died about 538 years before the Christian era. When Paul calls him a prophet of their own, he only intimates that he was, by the Cretans, reputed a prophet. And according to Plutarch, the Cretans paid him divine honors after his death. The Cretians are alway liars. The words quoted here by the apostle are, according to Jerome, Socrates, Nicephorus, and others, taken from a work of Epimenides, now no longer extant, entitled Concerning Oracles. The words form a hexameter verse: "The Cretans are always liars; destructive wild beasts; sluggish gluttons." That the Cretans were reputed to be egregious liars several of the ancients declare, insomuch that "to act like a Cretan" signifies "to lie." The other Greeks reputed them liars because they said that among them was the sepulchre of Jupiter, who was the highest object of the Greek and Roman worship. Evil beasts. Ferocious and destructive in their manners. Slow bellies. Addicted to voluptuousness, idleness, and gluttony; sluggish or hoggish men.

13. This witness is true. What Epimenides said of them nearly six hundred years before continued still to be true. Rebuke them sharply. "Cuttingly, severely"; show no indulgence to persons guilty of such crimes. That they may be sound in the faith. That they may receive the incorrupt doctrine, and illustrate it by a holy and useful life.

14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables. See on 1 Tim. i. 4 and iv. 7. Commandments of men. The injunctions of the scribes and Pharisees which they added to the law of God. That turn from the truth. For such persons made the Word of God of none effect by their traditions. Sometimes the verb signifies to be "averse from, slight, or despise." So here the persons in question despised the truth and taught others to do the same.

things are pure, but to those that are defiled and unbelieving nothing is pure. They suck poison out of that from which others draw sweetness; their mind and conscience, being defiled, a taint is communicated to all they do.

There are many who profess to know God, and yet in their lives deny and reject him; their practice is a contradiction to their profession. The apostle, instructing Titus to rebuke sharply, does himself rebuke sharply; he gives them very hard words, yet doubtless no harder than their case warranted, and their need required. Being abominable, deserving that God and good men should turn away their eyes from them as nauseous and offensive. And disobedient. They might do divers things; but it was not the obedience of faith. To every good work reprobate, without skill or judgment to do anything aright. See the miserable condition of hypocrites. Let us not be so ready to fix this charge on others as careful that it agree not to ourselves.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

15. all things—external, "are pure" in themselves; the distinction of pure and impure is not in the things, but in the disposition of him who uses them; in opposition to "the commandments of men" (vs. 14), which forbade certain things as if impure intrinsically. "To the pure" inwardly, i.e., those purified in heart by faith (Acts 15:9; Rom. 14:20; I Tim. 4:3), all outward things are pure; all are open to their use. Sin alone touches and defiles the soul (Matt. 23:26; Luke 11:41). nothing pure—either within or without (Rom. 14:23). mind—their mental sense and intelligence. conscience—their moral consciousness of the conformity or discrepancy between their motives and acts on the one hand, and God's law on the other. A conscience and a mind defiled are represented as the source of the errors opposed in the Pastoral Epistles (I Tim. 1:19; 3:9; 6:5). 16. They profess—i.e., make a profession acknowledging God. He does not deny their theoretical knowledge of God, but that they practically know Him. deny him—the opposite of the previous "profess" or "confess" Him (I Tim. 5:8; II Tim. 2:12; 3:5). abominable—themselves, though laying so much stress on the contracting of abomination from outward things (cf. Lev. 11:10-13; Rom. 2:22). disobedient—to God (ch. 3:3; Eph. 2:2; 5:6). reprobate—rejected as worthless when tested (Notes, Rom. 1:28; I Cor. 9:27; II Tim. 3:8).

ADAM CLARKE

15. Unto the pure all things are pure. This appears to have been spoken in reference to the Jewish distinctions of clean and unclean meats. To the genuine Christian every kind of meat proper for human nourishment is pure, is lawful and may be used without scruple. This our Lord had long before decided. See on Luke xi. 39-41. But unto them that are defiled, in their consciences, and unbelieving, "unfaithful," is nothing pure. Their mind is contaminated with impure and unholy images and ideas, and their conscience is defiled with the guilt of sins already committed against God.

16. They profess that they know God. He still speaks concerning the unbelieving Jews, the seducing teachers, and those who had been seduced by their bad doctrine. None were so full of pretensions to the knowledge of the true God as the Jews. But in works they deny him. Their profession and practice were at continual variance. Full of a pretended faith, while utterly destitute of those works by which a genuine faith is accredited and proved. Being abominable. This word sometimes refers to unnatural lusts. And disobedient. "Unpersuadable, unbelieving." Unto every good work reprobate. "Adulterate"; like a bad coin, deficient in both the weight and the goodness of the metal, and without the proper sterling stamp.

Here he exhorts him,

I. Generally, to a faithful discharge of his own office. His ordaining others to preach would not excuse himself from preaching, nor might he take care of ministers and elders only, but he must instruct private Christians also in their duty. The true doctrines of the gospel are sound doctrines, they are in themselves good and holy, and make the believers so.

II. Specially and particularly, he instructs him to apply this sound doctrine to several sorts of persons, from v. 2–10. Ministers must be particular as well as practical in their preaching; they must teach men their duty, and must teach all and each his duty.

1. To the aged men. Old disciples of Christ must conduct themselves in everything agreeably to the Christian doctrine. That the aged men be sober; they must keep measure in things, both for health and for fitness, for counsel and example to the younger. Grave: levity is unbecoming in any, but especially in the aged. Temperate. Sound in the faith, sincere and steadfast. Those who are full of years should be full of grace and goodness, the inner man renewing more and more as the outer decays. In charity, or love; this is fitly joined with faith, which works by, and must be seen in, love. It must be sincere love, without dissimulation: love of God for himself, and of men for God's sake. And in patience. Aged persons are apt to be peevish and therefore need to be on their guard against such infirmities. Faith, love, and patience, are three main Christian graces, and soundness in these is much of gospel perfection.

2. To the aged women. These also must be instructed and warned. Those virtues before mentioned (sobriety, gravity, temperance, soundness in the faith, charity, and patience) recommended to aged men, are not proper to them only, but applicable to both sexes. There is not one way of salvation for one sex or sort, and another for another; but both must learn and practise the same things; the virtues and duties are common. That the aged women likewise be in behaviour as becometh holiness; or as beseems and is proper for holy persons, such as they profess to be. Whatsoever things are beseeming or unbeseeming holiness form a measure and rule of conduct to be looked to. Not false accusers—slandering and backbiting their neighbours, a great and too common fault; not only loving to speak, but to speak ill, of people, and to separate very friends. Not given to much wine. This is unseemly and evil in any, but especially in this sex and age, and was too much to be found among the Greeks of that time and place. Teachers of good things. Not public preachers, that is forbidden, but otherwise teach they may and should, by example and good life. Those whose actions and behaviour become holiness are thereby teachers of good things; and, besides this, they may and should also teach by doctrinal instruction at home, and in a private way. Their business is, and they may be called on to it, to be teachers of good things.

3. There are lessons for young women also, whom the aged women must teach. For teaching such things

VSS. 1-15. DIRECTIONS TO TITUS: HOW TO EXHORT VARIOUS CLASSES OF BELIEVERS: THE GRACE OF GOD IN CHRIST OUR GRAND INCENTIVE TO LIVE GODLY. 1. But . . . thou—in contrast to the reprobate seducers stigmatized in ch. 1:11, 15, 16. "He deals more in exhortations, because those intent on useless questions needed chiefly to be recalled to the study of a holy, moral life; for nothing so effectually allays men's wandering curiosity, as the being brought to recognize those duties in which they ought to exercise themselves" [CALVIN]. speak—without restraint: contrast ch. 1:11, "mouths . . . stopped." doctrine—"instruction" or "teaching." 2. sober—Translated "vigilant," as sober men alone can be (I Tim. 3:2). But "sober" here answers to "not given to wine," vs. 3; ch. 1:7. grave—"dignified"; behaving with reverent propriety. temperate—"self-restrained"; "discreet" [ALFORD], (ch. 1:8; I Tim. 2:9). faith . . . charity [love] . . . patience—combined in I Timothy 6:11. "Faith, hope, charity" (I Cor. 13:13). "Patience," Greek, "enduring perseverance," is the attendant on, and is supported by, "hope" (I Cor. 13:7; I Thess. 1:3). It is the grace which especially becomes old men, being the fruit of ripened experience derived from trials overcome (Rom. 5:3).

3. behaviour—"deportment." as becometh holiness—"as becometh women consecrated to God" [WAHL]: being by our Christian calling priestesses unto God (Eph. 5:3; I Tim. 2:10). "Observant of sacred decorum" [BENGEL]. not false accusers—not slanderers: a besetting sin of some elderly women. given to much wine—the besetting sin of the Cretans (ch. 1:12). Lit., "enslaved to much wine." Addiction to wine is slavery (Rom. 6:16; II Pet. 2:19). teachers—in private: not in public (I Cor. 14:34; I Tim. 2:11, 12); influencing for good the younger women by precept and example.

1. But speak thou the things. This is a conclusion drawn from the preceding chapter. The Judaizing teachers not only taught a false doctrine, but they led an unholy life. Titus was to act directly opposite; he must teach a sacred doctrine and the things which become it; he must proclaim the truth and illustrate that truth. The people must not only be well-instructed, but they must be holy in their lives. Principle and practice must go hand in hand.

2. That the aged men be sober. It is very likely that the word aged is to be taken here in its literal sense; that it refers to advanced years and not to any office in the Church; the whole context seems to require this sense.

3. The aged women likewise. I believe elderly women are meant and not deaconesses. That they be in behaviour. That they be in their dress, gait, and general deportment such as their holy calling requires; that they be not like the world but like the Church, decent throughout, and adorned with holiness within. Not false accusers. "Not devils"; we have had the same expression applied in the same way, 1 Tim. iii. 11. Not given to much wine. Not enslaved by much wine, not habitual drunkards or tipplers; habit is a species of slavery. Both among the Greeks and Romans old women were generally reputed to be fond of much wine.

aged women have often better access than the men, even than ministers have. To be sober and discreet, contrary to the vanity and rashness which younger years are subject to. Discreet and chaste stand well together; many expose themselves to fatal temptations by that which at first might be but indiscretion. Chaste, and keepers at home, are well joined too. Not but there are occasions of going abroad; but a gadding temper for merriment and company sake is the opposite evil intended. Good, generally, in opposition to all vice; and specially kind, helpful, and charitable. It may also have a more particular sense; one of a meek and yet cheerful spirit and temper, not sullen nor bitter. To love their husbands, and to be obedient to them: and where there is true love this will be no difficult command. God would have a resemblance of Christ's authority over the church held forth in the husband's over the wife. Christ is the head of the church, to protect and save it, to supply it with all good, and secure it from evil; and so is the husband over the wife, to keep her from injuries, and to provide comfortably for her. It is not then a slavish subjection that is required; but a loving subordination. And to love their children, not with a natural affection only, but a spiritual; not a fond foolish love, neglecting due reproof and correction where necessary, but a regular Christian love, forming their life and manners aright, taking care of their souls as well as of their bodies. That the word of God may not be blasphemed. "What are these the better for this their new religion?" would the infidels be ready to say. "Judge what a God he is by these his servants; and what his word, and doctrine, and religion, are by these his followers."

4. Here is the duty of young men. They are apt to be eager and hot, therefore they must be earnestly exhorted to be considerate, not rash; humble and mild, not haughty and proud; for there are more young people ruined by pride than by any other sin.

5. With these instructions to Titus the apostle inserts some directions to himself. For his conversation, v. 7. Without this, he would pull down with one hand what he built with the other. Good doctrine and good life must go together. In all things; some read, above all things. Above all things, example, especially that of the teacher himself, is needful; hereby both light and influence are more likely to go together. Ministers must be examples to the flock, and the people followers of them, as they are of Christ. For his teaching and doctrine, as well as for his life, v. 7, 8. In their preaching, therefore, the display of human learning or oratory, is not to be affected; but sound speech must be used, which cannot be condemned; scripture-language in expressing scripture-truths. This is sound speech, that cannot be condemned. Thus be an example in word; and in conversation, the life corresponding with the doctrine. The reason both for the strictness of the minister's life and the gravity and soundness of his preaching. Adversaries would be seeking occasion to reflect, and would do so could they find anything amiss in doctrine or life. Faithful ministers will have enemies watching, such as will endeavour to find or pick holes in their teaching or behaviour; the more need therefore for them to look to themselves.

6. The directions respecting servants. Servants must know and do their duty to their earthly masters, but with an eye to their heavenly one.

(1) The duties themselves are these:

[1] v. 9: Obedience the prime duty, that by which they are characterized. Their will must be subject to their master's will, and their time and labour at their master's disposal and command. If he be a master, the duties of a servant are to be paid to him as such.

[2] To please them well in all things. We are not to understand it either of obeying or pleasing them, without any limitation; but always with a reserve of God's right. If his command and the earthly master's come in competition, we are instructed to obey God rather than man. And not only must the will of God be the measure of the servant's obedience, but the reason of it also. All must be done with a respect to him, in virtue of his authority, and for pleasing him primarily and chiefly.

[3] Not answering again. When conscious of a fault, to palliate or stand in justification of it doubles it. Yet this not answering again excludes not turning away wrath with a soft answer, when season and circumstances admit. Good and wise masters will be ready to hear and do right.

[4] Not purloining, but showing all good fidelity. This is another great essential of good servants, to be honest. They must be just and true, and do for their masters as they would or should for themselves. Be it so that the master is hard and strait, scarcely making sufficient provision for servants; yet

4. to be sober—Greek, "self-restrained," "discreet"; the same Greek as in vs. 2, "temperate." (But see Note vs. 2; cf. Note, II Tim. 1:7.) ALFORD therefore translates, "That they school [admonish in their duty] the young women to be lovers of their husbands . . ." (the foundation of all domestic happiness). It was judicious that Titus, a young man, should admonish the young women, not directly, but through the older women. 5. keepers at home—as "guardians of the house," as the Greek expresses. The oldest MSS. read, "Workers at home": active in household duties (Prov. 7:11; I Tim. 5:13). good—kind, beneficent (Matt. 20:15; Rom. 5:7; I Pet. 2:18). Not churlish and niggardly, but thrifty as housewives. obedient—rather "submissive," as the Greek is translated; (see Notes, Eph. 5:21, 22, 24). their own—marking the duty of subjection which they owe them, as being their own husbands (Eph. 5:22; Col. 3:18).

blasphemed—"evil spoken of." That no reproach may be cast on the Gospel, through the inconsistencies of its professors (vs. 8, 10; Rom. 2:24; I Tim. 5:14; 6:1). "Unless we are virtuous, blasphemy will come through us to the faith" [THEOPHYLACT]. 6. Young—Greek, "The younger men." sober-minded—self-restrained [ALFORD]. "Nothing is so hard at this age as to overcome pleasures and follies" [CHRYSOSTOM].

7. In—with respect to all things. thyself a pattern—though but a young man thyself. All teaching is useless unless the teacher's example confirm his word. in doctrine—in thy ministerial teaching (showing) uncorruptness, i.e., untainted purity of motive on thy part (cf. II Cor. 11:3), so as to be "a pattern" to all. As "gravity," etc., refers to Titus himself, so "uncorruptness"; though, doubtless, uncorruptness of the doctrine will be sure to follow as a consequence of the Christian minister being of simple, uncorrupt integrity himself. gravity—dignified seriousness in setting forth the truth. sincerity—omitted in the oldest MSS. 8. speech—discourse in public and private ministrations. he that is of the contrary part—the adversary (ch. 1:9; II Tim. 2:25), whether he be heathen or Jew. may be ashamed—put to confusion by the power of truth and innocence (cf. vss. 5, 10; I Tim. 5:14; 6:1). no evil thing—in our acts, or demeanor. of you—So one of the oldest MSS. Other very old MSS. read, "of US," Christians.

9. servants—"slaves." to please them well—"to give satisfaction" [ALFORD]. To be complaisant in everything; to have that zealous desire to gain the master's goodwill which will anticipate the master's wish and do even more than is required. The reason for the frequent recurrence of injunctions to slaves to subjection (Eph. 6:5, etc.; Col. 3:22; I Tim. 6:1, etc.; I Pet. 2:18) was, that in no rank was there more danger of the doctrine of the spiritual equality and freedom of Christians being misunderstood than in that of slaves. It was natural for the slave who had become a Christian, to forget his place and put himself on a social level with his master. Hence the charge for each to abide in the sphere in which he was when converted (I Cor. 7:20-24). not answering again—in contradiction to the master: so the Greek, "not contradicting" [WAHL]. 10. Not purloining—Greek, "Not appropriating" what does not belong to one. It means "keeping back" dishonestly or deceitfully (Acts 5:2, 3). showing—manifesting in acts. all—all possible. good—really good; not so in mere appearance (Eph. 6:5, 6; Col. 3:22-24). "The heathen do not judge of the Christian's doctrines from the doctrine, but from his actions and life" [CHRYSOSTOM]. Men will write, fight, and even die for their religion; but how few live for it! Translate, "That they may adorn the doctrine of our Saviour God," i.e., God the Father, the originating author of salvation (cf. Note, I Tim. 1:1). God deigns to have His Gospel-doctrine adorned even by slaves, who are regarded by the world as no better

4. That they may teach the young women to be sober. That it was natural for the young to imitate the old will be readily allowed; it was therefore necessary that the old should be an example of godly living to the young. Jerome, taking it for granted that drunkenness and impurity are closely connected, asks this serious question: "How can an elderly woman teach young women chastity when, if the young woman should imitate the drunkenness of the matron, it would be impossible for her to be chaste?" To love their husbands. The duties recommended in this and the following verses are so plain as to need no comment, and so absolutely necessary to the character of a wife that no one deserves the same who does not live in the practice of them.

5. Keepers at home. A woman who spends much time in visiting must neglect her family. Instead of "keepers of the house," or keepers at home, some MSS. have "workers at home"; not only staying in the house and keeping the house, but working in the house. That the word of God be not blasphemed. The enemies of the gospel are quick-eyed to spy out imperfections in its professors; and if they find women professing Christianity living an irregular life, they will not fail to decry the Christian doctrine on this account.

6. Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Reformation should begin with the old; they have the authority, and they should give the example. The young of both sexes must also give an account of themselves to God; sober-mindedness in young men is a rare qualification.

7. In all things shewing thyself a pattern. As the apostle had given directions relative to the conduct of old men, v. 2; of old women, v. 3; of young women, v. 4; and of young men, v. 6, the words which we translate in all things should be rather considered in reference to the above persons and the behavior required in them: "showing thyself a pattern of good works to all these persons"—being in sobriety, gravity, temperance what thou requirest others to be. In doctrine shewing uncorruptness. Mixing nothing with the truth; taking nothing from it; adding nothing to it; and exhibiting it in all its connection, energy, and fullness.

8. Sound speech. Sound or "healing doctrine." Human nature is in a state of disease, and the doctrine of the gospel is calculated to remove the disease and restore all to perfect health and soundness. He that is of the contrary part. Whether this may refer to the Judaizing teachers in general or to someone who might, by his false doctrine, have been disturbing the peace of the churches in Crete, we cannot tell. Having no evil thing to say of you. Against a person who is sound in his doctrine and holy in his life, no evil can be justly alleged. He who reports evil of such a person must be confounded when brought to the test. Instead of of you, "of us" is the reading of numerous MSS. and several of the primitive fathers. This reading makes a better sense and is undoubtedly genuine.

9. Exhort servants to be obedient. The apostle refers to those who were "slaves" and the property of their masters; even these are exhorted to be obedient "to their own despots." Please them well in all things. They were to endeavor to do this in all things, though they could not hope to succeed in everything. Not answering again. "Not contradicting or gainsaying." This is no part of a servant's duty; a servant is hired to do his master's work, and this his master has a right to appoint.

10. Not purloining. Neither "giving away, privately selling," nor in any way wasting the master's goods. The word signifies not only stealing but embezzling another's property, keeping back a part of the price of any commodity sold on the master's account. In Acts v. 2 we translate it "to keep back part of the price," the crime of which Ananias and Sapphira were guilty. It has been remarked that among the heathens this species of fraud was very frequent.

they must not be their own carvers, nor go about by theft to right themselves. He must not only not steal nor waste, but must improve his master's goods, and promote his prosperity to his utmost. He that increased not his master's talent is accused of unfaithfulness, though he had not embezzled nor lost it.

(2) The consideration with which Titus was to enforce them: That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. If they be careful to do their duty, it will redound to the glory of God and the credit of religion. The unbelieving masters would think the better of that despised way when they found that those of their servants who were Christians were better than their other servants. True religion is an honour to the professors of it; and they should see that they do not any dishonour to it.

The grounds upon which all the foregoing directions are urged.

I. From the nature and design of the gospel. Let all sorts do their respective duties, for this is the very aim and business of Christianity, to instruct persons, to a right frame and conduct.

1. They are put under the dispensation of the grace of God. Now grace is obliging and constraining to goodness. Without this effect, grace is received in vain.

2. This gospel grace brings salvation. Hence it is called the word of life; it brings to faith, and so to life.

3. It hath appeared. The old dispensation was comparatively dark and shadowy; this is a clear and shining light.

4. It hath appeared to all men. Gospel grace is open to all, and all are invited to come and partake of the benefit of it. The doctrine of grace and salvation by the gospel is for all ranks and conditions of men (slaves and servants, as well as masters).

5. This gospel revelation is to teach. It directs what to shun and what to follow, what to avoid and what to do. The gospel is not for speculation only or chiefly, but for practice and right ordering of life.

(1) Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. "Put away ungodliness and irreligion, all unbelief of the divine Being, not loving, nor fearing, nor trusting in him, nor obeying him as we should. And worldly lusts, all corrupt and vicious desires and affections that prevail in worldly men." An earthly sensual conversation suits not a heavenly calling.

(2) To live soberly, righteously, and godly, &c. Religion is not made up of negatives only; there must be doing good as well as eschewing evil. We should live soberly with respect to ourselves, keeping the limits of moderation and temperance; and righteously towards all men, rendering to all their due, and injuring none, but rather doing good to others. Selfishness is a sort of unrighteousness; it robs others of that share in us which is their due. Live righteously therefore as well as soberly. And godly towards God. Regard to him indeed should run through all.

(3) Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. Hope is put for the thing hoped for, heaven and the felicities thereof, called emphatically that hope, because it is the great thing we look for; and a blessed hope, because, when attained, we shall be completely happy for ever. This denotes both the time of the accomplishing of our hope and the sureness and greatness of it. The great God and our Saviour (or even our Saviour) Jesus Christ. Christ then is the great God, not figuratively, but properly and absolutely, the true God. In his second coming he will reward his servants, and bring them to glory with him. [1] There is a common and blessed hope for all true Christians in the other world. By hope is meant the thing hoped for, Christ himself, who is called our hope, and blessedness in and through him, hence fitly termed here that blessed hope. [2] The design of the gospel is to stir up all to a good life by this blessed hope. Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for the blessed hope; not as mercenaries, but as dutiful and thankful Christians. [3] At the glorious appearing of Christ will the blessed hope of Christians be attained. The glory of the great God and our Saviour will then break out as the sun. The work and design of the gospel are to raise the heart to wait for this second appearing of Christ. Let us then look to this hope. [4] The comfort and joy of Christians are that their Saviour is the great God, and will gloriously manifest himself.

II. From the end of Christ's death, v. 14. To bring us to holiness and happiness was the end of Christ's death, as well as the scope of his doctrine.

1. The purchaser of salvation—Jesus Christ, that great God and our Saviour, who saves not simply as

than beasts of burden. "Though the service be rendered to an earthly master, the honor redounds to God, as the servant's goodwill flows from the fear of God" [THEOPHYLACT]. Even slaves, low as is their status, should not think the influence of their example a matter of no consequence to religion: how much more those in a high position. His love in being "our Saviour" is the strongest ground for our adorning His doctrine by our lives. This is the force of "For" in vs. 11. 11. the grace of God—God's gratuitous favor in the scheme of redemption. hath appeared—Greek, "hath been made to appear," or "shine forth" (Isa. 9:2; Luke 1:79). "hath been manifested" (ch. 3:4), after having been long hidden in the loving counsels of God (Col. 1:26; II Tim. 1:9, 10). The image is illustrated in Acts 27:20. The grace of God hath now been embodied in Jesus, the brightness of the Father's glory," manifested as the "Sun of righteousness," "the Word made flesh." The Gospel dispensation is hence termed "the day" (I Thess. 5:5, 8; there is a double "appearing," that of "grace" here, that of "glory," vs. 13; cf. Rom. 13:12). Connect it not as English Version, but, "The grace . . . that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared," or "been manifested" (I Tim. 2:4; 4:10). Hence God is called "our Saviour" (vs. 10). The very name Jesus means the same. to all—of whom he enumerated the different classes (vss. 2-9): even to servants; to us Gentiles, once aliens from God. Hence arises our obligation to all men (ch. 3:2). 12. Teaching—Greek, "disciplining us." Grace exercises discipline, and is imparted in connection with disciplining chastisements (I Cor. 11:32; Heb. 12:6, 7). The education which the Christian receives from "the grace" of God is a discipline often trying to flesh and blood: just as children need disciplining. The discipline which it exercises teaches us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world (Greek, "age," or course of things) where such self-discipline is needed, seeing that its spirit is opposed to God (ch. 1:12, 16; I Cor. 1:20; 3:18, 19): in the coming world we may gratify every desire without need of self-discipline, because all desires there will be conformable to the will of God. that—Greek, "in order that"; the end of the "disciplining" is "in order that . . . we may live soberly. . . ." This point is lost by the translation, "teaching us." denying . . . lusts—(Luke 9:23). The Greek aorist expresses "denying once for all." We deny them when we withhold our consent from them, when we refuse the delight which they suggest, and the act to which they solicit us, nay, tear them up by the roots out of our soul and mind [ST. BERNARD, Serm. 11]. worldly lusts—The Greek article expresses, "the lusts of the world," "all worldly lusts" [ALFORD], (Gal. 5:16; Eph. 2:3; I John 2:15-17; 5: 19). The world (cosmos) will not come to an end when this present age (aeon) or course of things shall end. live soberly, righteously, and godly—the positive side of the Christian character; as "denying . . . lusts" was the negative. "Soberly," i.e., with self-restraint, in relation to one's self; "righteously" or justly, in relation to our neighbor; "godly" or piously, in relation to God (not merely amiably and justly, but something higher, godly, with love and reverence toward God). These three comprise our "disciplining" in faith and love, from which he passes to hope (vs. 13). 13. (Phil. 3:20, 21). Looking for—with constant expectation (so the Greek) and with joy (Rom. 8:19). This will prove the antidote to worldly lusts, and the stimulus to "live in this present world" conformably to this expectation. The Greek is translated, "waiting for," in Luke 2: 25. that—Greek, "the." blessed—bringing blessedness (Rom. 4:7, 8). hope—i.e., object of hope (Rom. 8:24; Gal. 5:5; Col. 1:5). the glorious appearing—the great God and our Saviour Jesus—There is but one Greek article to "God" and "Saviour," which shows that both are predicated of one and the same Being. "Of Him who is at once the great God and our Saviour." Also (2) "appearing" (epiphaneia) is never by Paul predicated of God the Father (John 1:18; I Tim. 6:16), or even of "His glory" (as ALFORD explains it): it is invariably applied to CHRIST'S coming, to which (at His first advent, cf. II Tim. 1:10) the kindred verb "appeared" (epephanee), vs. 11, refers (I Tim. 6:14; II Tim. 4:1, 8). Also (3) in the context (vs. 14) there is no reference to the Father, but to Christ alone; and here there is no occasion for reference to the Father in the exigencies of the context. Also (4) the expression "great God," as applied to Christ, is in accordance with the context, which refers to the glory of His appearing; just as "the true God" is predicated of Christ, I John 5:20.

ADAM CLARKE

11. The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men. Literally translated, the words stand thus: "For the grace of God, that which saves, hath shone forth upon all men." Or, as it is expressed in the margin of our Authorized Version: "The grace of God, that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared." As God's grace signifies "God's favor," any benefit received from Him may be termed God's grace. Now it cannot be said, except in a very refined and spiritual sense, that this gospel had then appeared to all men; but it may be well said that "it bringeth salvation to all men"; this is its design. There is a beauty and energy in the word "hath shined out" that is rarely noted; it seems to be a metaphor taken from the sun. As by his rising in the east and "shining out" he enlightens successively the whole world, so the Lord Jesus, who is called "the Sun of righteousness," Mal. iv. 2, arises on the whole human race "with healing in his wings." And as the light and heat of the sun are denied to no nation nor individual, so the grace of the Lord Jesus also shines out upon all; and God designs that all mankind shall be as equally benefited by it in reference to their souls as they are in respect to their bodies by the sun that shines in the firmament of heaven.

12. Teaching us that, denying. Instructing us as children are instructed. Denying ungodliness. All things contrary to God. Worldly lusts. Such desires, affections, and appetites as men are governed by who have their portion in this life and live without God in the world. We should live soberly. Having every temper, appetite, and desire under the government of reason, and reason itself under the government of the Spirit of God. Righteously. Rendering to every man his due; injuring no person in his body, mind, reputation, or property; doing unto all as we would they should do to us. And godly. Just the reverse of what is implied in "ungodliness." In this present world. Not supposing that anything will be purified in the world to come that is not cleansed in this. The three words above evidently include our duty to God, to our neighbor, and to ourselves. (1) We are to live soberly in respect to ourselves, (2) righteously in respect to our neighbor, and (3) godly, or piously, in respect to our Maker.

13. Looking for that blessed hope. Expecting the grand object of our hope, eternal life. This is what the gospel teaches us to expect, and what the grace of God prepares the human heart for. This is called a blessed hope; those who have it are "happy" in the sure prospect of that glory which shall be revealed. The glorious appearing. This clause, literally translated, is as follows: "And the appearing of the glory of the great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ." Some think that the blessed hope and glorious appearing mean the same thing, but I do not think so. The blessed hope refers simply to eternal glorification in general; the glorious appearing, to the resurrection of the body. For when Christ appears He will change this vile body, and make it "like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." See Phil. iii. 20-21.

MATTHEW HENRY

God, much less as man alone; but as God-man. Man, that he might obey, and suffer, and die, for man; and God, that he might support the manhood.

2. The price of our redemption: He gave himself. The Father gave him, but he gave himself too; and, in the freeness and voluntariness, as well as the greatness of the offering, lay the acceptableness and merit of it. The human nature was the offering, and the divine the altar, sanctifying the gift.

3. The persons for whom He died. He gave himself for us, not only for our good, but in our stead. He loved us, and gave himself for us; what can we do less than love and give up ourselves to him?

4. The ends of his giving himself for us, (1) That he might redeem us from all iniquity. This is fitted to the first lesson, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. Christ gave himself to redeem us from these, therefore put them away. To love and live in sin is to trample under foot redeeming blood. But how could the short sufferings of Christ redeem us from all iniquity? Through the infinite dignity of his person. He who was God suffered, though not as God. The great God and our Saviour gave himself for us; this accounts for it. Happy end and fruit of Christ's death, redemption from all iniquity! Christ died for this: and, (2) To purify to himself a peculiar people. This enforces the second lesson: To live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Christ died to purify as well as to pardon—to heal the nature, as well as to free from guilt and condemnation. Thus does he make to himself a peculiar people, by purifying them. Thus are they distinguished from the world that lies in wickedness. Redemption from sin and sanctification of the nature go together, and both made a peculiar people unto God. And (3) Zealous of good works. This peculiar people must be seen to be so by doing good, and having a zeal therein.

Verse 15

A summary direction to Titus in which we have the matter and manner of ministers' teaching.

I. The matter of ministers' teaching: These things, namely, those before mentioned: the truths and duties of the gospel, of avoiding sin, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world.

II. The manner; by doctrine, and exhortation, and reproof with all authority. The great and necessary truths and duties of the gospel, especially, these speak and exhort, press with much earnestness. Ministers must not be cold and lifeless in delivering heavenly doctrine and precepts, as if they were indifferent things; but they must urge them with earnestness. And rebuke; convince and reprove such as contradict or gainsay, or neglect and do not receive the truth as they should. Rebuke with all authority, as coming in the name of God. Ministers are reprovers in the gate.

III. "Let no man despise thee. Speak and exhort these things, press them upon all, with boldness and faithfulness reprove sin, and carefully look to thyself and thy own conduct, and then none will despise thee."

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

14. gave himself—"The forcible 'Himself, His whole self, the greatest gift ever given,' must not be overlooked." for us—Greek, "in our behalf."

redeem us—deliver us from bondage by paying the price of His precious blood. An appropriate image in addressing bond servants (vss. 9, 10). from all iniquity—the essence of sin, viz., "transgression of the law": in bondage to which we were till then. The aim of His redemption was to redeem us, not merely from the penalty, but from the being of all iniquity. Thus he reverts to the "teaching" in righteousness, or disciplining effect of the grace of God that bringeth salvation (vss. 11, 12). peculiar—peculiarly His own, as Israel was of old. zealous—in doing and promoting "good works."

15. with all authority—Translate, "authoritativeness" (cf. "sharply," ch. 1: 13). Let no man despise thee—Speak with such vigor as to command respect (I Tim. 4:12). Warn them with such authority that no one may think himself above (so the Greek lit.) the need of admonition [TITTMANN, Synonyms of New Testament].

ADAM CLARKE

14. Who gave himself for us. Who gave His own life as a "ransom price" to redeem ours. This is evidently what is meant, as the (Greek) words imply. Jesus gave His life for the world, and thus has purchased men unto himself; and having purchased the slaves from their thraldom, He is represented as stripping them of their sordid vestments, cleansing and purifying them unto himself, that they may become His own servants. Thus redeemed, they now become His willing servants and are zealous of good works—affectionately attached to that noble employment which is assigned to them by that Master whom it is an inexpressible honor to serve.

15. These things speak. That is, "teach." And exhort. Repeat them again and again, and urge them on their attention and consciences.

And rebuke. Demonstrate the importance, utility, and necessity of them; and show them that God requires their obedience. With all authority. With all that authority with which your office invests you, and which you have received from God. Let no man despise thee. That is, act so that no person shall have any cause to despise you, either for your work or the manner and spirit in which you perform it.

CHAPTER 3

The apostle had directed Titus in reference to the particular duties of several sorts of persons; now he bids him exhort to what concerned them more in common.

I. The duties themselves. 1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, that is, all civil rulers. That they be subject to them and obey them in things lawful and honest. The Christian religion was misrepresented by its adversaries as prejudicial to the rights of princes and civil powers, and tending to faction and sedition, and to rebellion against lawful authority. Christians must be reminded to show themselves examples rather of all due subjection and obedience to the government that is over them. 2. To be ready to every good work. The precept regards doing good of every kind and on every occasion that may offer, whether respecting God, ourselves, or our neighbour. Mere harmlessness, or good words and good meanings only, are not enough without good works. "Not only take, but seek, occasion for doing good. Put all in mind of this." And, 3. To speak evil of no man. If no good can be spoken, rather than speak evil unnecessarily, say nothing.4. To be no brawlers; no fighters, either with hand or tongue. Contention and strife arise from men's lusts, which must be curbed, not indulged; and Christian's need to be reminded of these things. 5. But gentle, equitable and just, not taking words or actions in the worst sense; and for peace sometimes yielding somewhat

VSS. 1-15. WHAT TITUS IS TO TEACH CONCERNING CHRISTIANS' BEHAVIOR TOWARDS THE WORLD: HOW HE IS TO TREAT HERETICS: WHEN AND WHERE HE IS TO MEET PAUL. SALUTATION. CONCLUSION. 1. Put them in mind—as they are in danger of forgetting their duty, though knowing it. The opposition of Christianity to heathenism, and the natural disposition to rebellion of the Jews under the Roman empire (of whom many lived in Crete), might lead many to forget practically what was a recognized Christian principle in theory, submission to the powers that be. Diodorus Siculus mentions the tendency of the Cretans to riotous insubordination. to be subject—"willingly" (so the Greek). principalities . . . powers—Greek, magistracies . . . authorities.'. to obey—the commands of "magistrates"; not necessarily implying spontaneous obedience. Willing obedience is implied in "ready to every good work." Cf. Romans 13:3, as showing that obedience to the magistracy would tend to good works, since the magistrate's aim generally is to favor the good and punish the bad. Contrast "disobedient" (vs. 3). 2. To speak evil of no man—especially, not of "dignities" and magistrates. no brawlers—"not quarrelsome," not attacking others. gentle—towards those who attack us. Yielding, considerate, not urging one's rights to the uttermost, but forbearing and kindly (Note, Phil. 4: 5). Very different from the innate greediness and spirit of aggression towards others which characterized the Cretans. showing—in acts. all—all pos-

1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities. By principalities we are to understand the Roman emperors, or the supreme civil powers in any place. By powers we are to understand the deputies of the emperors, such as proconsuls and all such as are in authority under the supreme civil powers in any place. This doctrine of obedience to the civil powers was highly necessary for the Cretans, who were reputed a people exceedingly jealous of their civil privileges, and ready to run into a state of insurrection when they suspected any attempt on the part of their rulers to infringe their liberties.

2. To speak evil of no man. To "blaspheme" no person, to reproach none, to speak nothing to any man's injury.

MATTHEW HENRY

of strict right. 6. Showing all meekness to all men. Not only have meekness in our hearts, but show it in our speech and conduct. All meekness—meekness in all instances and occasions, not towards friends only, but to all men. Meekness of spirit and demeanour renders religion amiable; it is a commanded imitation of Christ, and brings its own reward with it.

II. He adds the reasons.

1. From their own past condition. We ourselves also were sometimes, (1) Foolish; without true spiritual understanding, ignorant of heavenly things. Those should be most disposed to bear with others' follies who may remember many of their own. And, (2) Disobedient; heady and unpersuadable, resisting the word. Well are these set together, foolish and disobedient. For what folly like this, to disobey God and his laws, natural or revealed? (3) Deceived, or wandering, out of the ways of truth and holiness. Man in this his degenerate state is of straying nature. He is weak, and ready to be imposed upon by the wiles of Satan, and of men lying in wait to seduce and mislead. (4) Serving divers lusts and pleasures. Carnal people think they enjoy their pleasures; the word calls it servitude and vassalage. It is the misery of the servants of sin that they have many masters, one lust hurrying them one way, and another another. The lusts that tempt them promise them liberty, but in yielding they become the servants of corruption. (5) Living in malice. Malice desires hurt to another and rejoices in it. (6) And envy, which grudges and repines at another's good. Both are roots of bitterness, whence many evils spring. These were some of the sins in which we lived in our natural state. (7) Hateful. (8) And hating one another. It is the misery of sinners that they hate one another, as it is the duty and happiness of saints to love one another. The consideration of its having been thus with us should dispose us to be more meek and tender-hearted, towards those who are such.

2. From their present state. "We are delivered out of that our miserable condition by no merit nor strength of our own." The apostle again opens the causes of our salvation, v. 4–7.

(1) The prime author of our salvation—God the Father, therefore termed here God our Saviour. All things belonging to the new creation, and recovery of fallen man to life and happiness, are of God the Father. The Father begins, the Son manages, and the Holy Spirit works and perfects all.

(2) The spring and rise of it—the divine philanthropy, or kindness and love of God to man. By grace we are saved from first to last. This is the ground and motive. The occasion is in man, his misery and wretchedness. Sin bringing that misery, wrath might have issued out rather than compassion; but God would pity and save rather than destroy. He delights in mercy.

(3) Here is the means—the shining out of this love and grace of God in the gospel, after it appeared. The appearing of love and grace has, through the Spirit, great virtue to change and turn to God.

(4) False grounds are here removed: Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy, he saved us. Works must be in the saved but not among the causes of his salvation; they are the way to the kingdom, not the meriting price of it. Faith and all saving graces are God's free gift and his work; the beginning, increase, and perfection of them in glory, all are from him.

(5) The formal cause of salvation, regeneration or spiritual renewing, as it is here called. A new prevailing principle of grace and holiness is wrought which makes the man a new man, having new thoughts, desires, and affections. He saved us. What is so begun, as sure to be perfected in time, is expressed as if it already were so. We must be initially saved now, by regeneration, if on good ground we would expect complete salvation in heaven. The change then will be but in degree, not in kind. Grace is glory begun, as glory is but grace in its perfection.

(6) The outward sign and seal thereof in baptism, called therefore the washing of regeneration. The work itself is inward and spiritual; but it is outwardly signified and sealed in this ordinance. Baptism saves figuratively and sacramentally, where it is rightly used. Slight not this outward sign and seal, yet rest not in the outward washing. The covenant sealed in baptism binds to duties, as well as conveys benefits and privileges; if the former be not minded, in vain are the latter expected.

(7) The principal efficient, the renewing of the Holy Ghost. In the economy of our salvation, the applying and effecting part is especially attributed to the Holy Spirit. We are said to be born of the Spirit, to be quickened and sanctified by the Spirit, to be led and guided, strengthened and helped, by the Spirit. Earn-sible. meekness—(Note, II Cor. 10:1)—the opposite of passionate severity. unto all men—The duty of Christian conduct towards all men is the proper consequence of the universality of God's grace to all men, so often set forth in the pastoral Epistles.

For—Our own past sins should lead us to be lenient towards those of others. "Despise none, for such wast thou also." As the penitent thief said to his fellow thief, "Dost thou not fear God . . . seeing that thou art in the same condemnation." we—Christians. were—Contrast vs. 4, "But when," i.e., now: a favorite contrast in Paul's writing, that between our past state by nature, and our present state of deliverance from it by grace. As God treated us, we ought to treat our neighbor. sometimes—once. foolish—wanting right reason in our course of living. Irrational. The exact picture of human life without grace. Grace is the sole remedy for foolishness. disobedient—to God. deceived—led astray. The same Greek, "out of the way" (Heb. 5:2). serving—Greek, "in bondage to," serving as slaves." divers—The cloyed appetite craves constant variety. pleasures—of the flesh. malice—malignity. hateful . . . hating—correlatives. Provoking the hatred of others by their detestable character and conduct, and in turn hating them. 4. To show how little reason the Cretan Christians had to be proud of themselves, and despise others not Christians (Notes, vss. 2, 3). It is to the "kindness and love of God," not to their own merits, that they owe salvation. kindness—Greek, "goodness," "benignity," which manifests His grace. love . . . toward man—teaching us to have such "love (benevolence) toward man" (Greek, "philanthropy"), "showing all meekness unto all men" (vs. 2), even as God had "toward man" (ch. 2:11); opposed to the "hateful and hating" characteristics of unrenewed men, whose wretchedness moved God's benevolent kindness. of God our Saviour—Greek, "of our Saviour God," viz., the Father (ch. 1:3), who "saved us" (vs. 5) "through Jesus Christ our Saviour" (vs. 6). appeared—Greek, "was made to appear"; was manifested. 5. Not by—Greek, "Out of"; "not as a result springing from works. . . ." of righteousness—Greek, "in righteousness," i.e., wrought in a state of righteousness; as "deeds . . . wrought in God." There was an utter absence in us of the element ("righteousness") in which alone righteous works could be done, and so necessarily an absence of the works. "We neither did works of righteousness, nor were saved in consequence of them; but His goodness did the whole" [THEOPHYLACT]. we—emphatically opposed to "His." mercy—the prompting cause of our salvation individually: "In pursuance of His mercy." His kindness and love to man were manifested in redemption once for all wrought by Him for mankind generally; His mercy is the prompting cause for our individual realization of it. Faith is presupposed as the instrument of our being "saved"; our being so, then, is spoken of as an accomplished fact. Faith is not mentioned, but only God's part. as Paul's object here is not to describe man's new state, but the saving agency of God in bringing about that state, independent of all merit on the man's part (Note, vs. 4). by—Greek, "through"; by means of. the washing—rather, "the laver," i.e., the baptismal font. or regeneration—designed to be the visible instrument of regeneration.

Adult candidates for baptism are presupposed to have had repentance and faith (for Paul often assumes in faith and charity that those addressed are what they profess to be, though in fact some of them were not so, I Cor. 6:11), in which case baptism would be the visible "laver or regeneration" to them, "faith being thereby confirmed, and grace increased, by virtue of prayer to God" (Church of England, Article 27). "Regeneration" occurs only once more in New Testament, Matthew 19:28, i.e., the new birth of the heaven and earth at Christ's second coming to renew all material things, the human body included, when the creature, now travailing in labor-throes to the birth, shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Regeneration, which now begins in the believer's soul, shall then be extended to his body, and thence to all creation. and renewing—not "the laver ('washing') of renewing," but "and BY the renewing . . ." following "saved us." To make "renewing of the Holy Ghost" follow "the laver" would destroy the balance of the clauses of the sentence, and would make baptism the seal, not only of regeneration, but also of the

3. For we ourselves. All of us, whether Jews or Gentiles, were before our conversion to Christ foolish, disobedient, and deceived. There is no doubt that the apostle felt he could include himself in the above list previously to his conversion. The manner in which he persecuted the Christians, to whose charge he could not lay one moral evil, is sufficient proof that, though he walked according to the letter of the law, as to its ordinances and ceremonies, blameless, yet his heart was in a state of great estrangement from God, from justice, holiness, mercy, and compassion. Foolish. "Without understanding"—ignorant of God, His nature, His providence, and His grace. Disobedient. "Unpersuaded, unbelieving, obstinate, and disobedient." Deceived. "Erring"—wandering from the right way in consequence of our ignorance, not knowing the right way; and in consequence of our unbelief and obstinacy, not choosing to know it. It is a true saying, "There are none so blind as those who will not see." Such persons are proof against conviction; they will not be convinced by either God or man. Serving divers lusts and pleasures. Not served or gratified by our lusts and pleasures, but living, as their "slaves"; a life of misery and wretchedness. Divers lusts. Strong and irregular appetites of every kind. Pleasures—"Sensual pleasures." Persons intent only on the gratification of sense, living like the brutes, having no rational or spiritual object worthy the pursuit of an immortal being. Living in malice and envy. "Spending our lives in wickedness and envy"—not bearing to see the prosperity of others because we feel ourselves continually wretched. Hateful. "Abominable"; "hateful as hell." The word comes from Styx, the infernal river by which the gods were wont to swear; and he who (according to the mythology of the heathens) violated this oath was expelled from the assembly of the gods and was deprived of his nectar and ambrosia for a year; hence the river was hateful to them beyond all things.

4. But after that the kindness. The "essential goodness" of the divine nature; that which is the spring whence all kindness, mercy, and beneficence proceed. Love . . . toward man—"Philanthropy." Philanthropy is a character which God gives here to himself; while human nature exists, this must be a character of the divine nature. Where love is it will be active and will show itself. So the philanthropy of God appeared; it "shone out" in the incarnation of Jesus Christ and in His giving His life for the life of the world.

5. Not by works of righteousness. Those who were foolish, disobedient, and deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, could not possibly have works of righteousness to plead; therefore, if saved at all, they must be saved by mercy.

By the washing of regeneration. Undoubtedly the apostle here means baptism, the rite by which persons were admitted into the Church, and the visible sign of the cleansing, purifying influences of the Holy Spirit, which the apostle immediately subjoins. Baptism is only a sign, and therefore should never be separated from the thing signified; but it is a rite commanded by God himself, and therefore the thing signified should never be expected without it.

By the renewing of the Holy Ghost we are to understand, not only the profession of being bound to live a new life, but the grace that renews the heart and enables us thus to live; so the renewing influences are here intended. Baptism changes nothing; the grace signified by it cleanses and purifies.

estly therefore is he to be sought, and greatly to be heeded by us, that we quench not his holy motions. As we act towards him, so may we expect he will to us; if we slight, and resist, and oppose his workings, he will slacken them; if we continue to vex him, he will retire.

(8) The manner of God's communicating this Spirit in the gifts and graces of it; not with a scanty and niggardly hand, but most freely and plentifully: Which he shed on us abundantly. More of the Spirit in its gifts and graces is poured out under the gospel than was under the law. A measure of the Spirit the church has had in all ages, but more since the coming of Christ, than before. There was then great abundance of common gifts of illumination, outward calling and profession, and general faith, and of more special gifts of sanctification too, such as faith, and hope, and love.

(9) The procuring cause of all, namely, Christ: Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. All come through him, and through him as a Saviour. Let us praise God for him above all; let us go to the Father by him. Have we grace? Let us thank him with the Father and Spirit for it, and grow and increase therein more and more.

(10) The ends why we are brought into this new spiritual condition, justification, and heirship, and hope of eternal life: That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Justification is the free remission of a sinner, and accepting him as righteous through the righteousness of Christ received by faith. This God does freely as to us, yet through the intervention of Christ's sacrifice and righteousness, laid hold on by faith. It is by grace, as the spring and rise, though through the redemption that is in Christ, and by faith applying that redemption. Inherent righteousness we must have, and the fruits of it in works of obedience; as fruits of our justification, and evidences of our interest in Christ and qualification for life and happiness, and the very beginning and part of it; but the procuring of all this is by Christ, that, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs. Our justification is by the grace of God, and our justification by that grace is necessary in order to our being made heirs of eternal life. Eternal life is set before us in the promise.

III. When he has opened the grace of God towards us, he immediately presses the necessity of good works; for we must not expect the benefit of God's mercy: unless we make conscience of our duty (v. 8). It must be an operative working faith. They must make it their care to maintain good works, not to do them occasionally only. These things are good and profitable unto men; these good works, say some, or the teaching of these things, rather than idle questions, as follows.

What Titus should avoid in teaching; how he should deal with a heretic; with some other directions.

I. He tells Titus what, in teaching, he should shun, v. 9. Idle and foolish enquiries must be shunned.—And genealogies. Some lawful and useful enquiries might be made into these things, to see the fulfilling of the scriptures in some cases, and especially in the descent of Christ the Messiah; but all that served to pomp only, and to feed vanity, in boasting of a long pedigree, these Titus must withstand as foolish and vain.—And contentions, and strivings about the law. There were those who were for the Mosaic rites and ceremonies, and would have them continued in the church. Titus must give no countenance to these, but avoid and oppose them; for they are unprofitable and vain: this is to be referred to all those foolish questions and genealogies, as well as those strivings about the law. They are so far from instructing and building up in godliness, that they are hindrances of it rather. Ministers must not only teach things good and useful, but shun and oppose the contrary; nor should people have itching ears, but love and embrace sound doctrine.

II. But because there will be heresies and heretics in the church, the apostle next directs Titus how to deal with such, v. 10. "Admonish him once and again, that, if possible he may be brought back, and thou mayest gain thy brother; but, if this will not reduce him, cast him out of the communion. Those who will not be reclaimed by admonitions, but are obstinate in their sins and errors, are subverted and self-condemned. How great an evil real heresy is. Such a one is subverted or perverted—a metaphor from a building so ruined as to render it difficult if not impossible to repair and raise it up again. Real heretics have seldom been recovered to the true faith: not so much defect of judgment, as perverseness of the will, being in the case. Pains and patience must subsequent process of progressive sanctification ("renewing of the Holy Ghost"). Regeneration is a thing once for all done; renewing is a process daily proceeding. As "the washing," or "laver," is connected with "regeneration," so the "renewing of the Holy Ghost" is connected with "shed on us abundantly" (vs. 6). 6. Which—the Holy Ghost. he shed—Greek, "poured out"; not only on the Church in general at Pentecost, but also "on us" individually. This pouring out of the Spirit comprehends the grace received before, in, and subsequently to, baptism. abundantly—Greek, "richly" (Col. 3:16).

through Jesus Christ—the channel and Mediator of the gift of the Holy Ghost. our Saviour—immediately; as the Father is mediately "our Saviour." The Father is the author of our salvation and saves us by Jesus Christ.

7. That . . .—the purpose which He aimed at in having "saved us" (vs. 5), viz., "That being (having been) justified (accounted righteous through faith at our 'regeneration,' and made righteous by the daily 'renewing of the Holy Ghost') by His grace (as opposed to works, vs. 5) we should be made heirs." his grace—Greek, "the grace of the former," i.e., God (vs. 4; Rom. 5:15). heirs—(Gal. 3:29). according to the hope of eternal life—Ch. 1:2, and also the position of the Greek words, confirm English Version, i.e., agreeably to the hope of eternal life; the eternal inheritance fully satisfying the hope. BENGEL and ELLICOTT explain it, "heirs of eternal life, in the way of hope," i.e., not yet in actual possession. Such a blessed hope, which once was not possessed, will lead a Christian to practice holiness and meekness toward others, the lesson especially needed by the Cretans. 8. Greek, "faithful is the saying." A formula peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles. Here "the saying" is the statement (vss. 4-7) as to the gratuitousness of God's gift of salvation. Answering to the "Amen." these things . . .—Greek "concerning these things (the truths dwelt on, vss. 4-7; not as English Version, what follow), I will that thou affirm (insist) strongly and persistently, in order that they who have believed God (the Greek for 'believed in God' is different, John 14:1. 'They who have learnt to credit God' in what He saith) may be careful ('solicitously sedulous'; diligence is necessary) to maintain (lit., 'to set before themselves so as to sustain') good works." No longer applying their care to "unprofitable" and unpractical speculations (vs. 9). these things—These results of doctrine ("good works" are "good and profitable unto men," whereas no such practical results flow from "foolish questions." So GROTIUS and WIESINGER. But ALFORD, to avoid the tautology, "these (good works) are good unto men," explains, "these truths" (vss. 4-7). 9. avoid—stand aloof from. Same Greek, as in Note, II Timothy 2:16. foolish—Greek, "insipid"; producing no moral fruit. "Vain talkers." genealogies—akin to the "fables" (see Note, I Tim. 1:4). Not so much direct heresy as yet is here referred to, as profitless discussions about genealogies of aeons, etc., which ultimately led to Gnosticism. Synagogue discourses were termed daraschoth, i.e., discussions. Cf. "disputer of this world (Greek, 'dispensation')." strivings about the law—about the authority of the "commandments of men," which they sought to confirm by the law (ch. 1:14; Note, I Tim. 1:7), and about the mystical meaning of the various parts of the law in connection with the "genealogies." 10. heretic—Greek "heresy," originally meant a division resulting from individual self-will; the individual doing and teaching what he chose, independent of the teaching and practice of the Church. In course of time it came to mean definitely "heresy" in the modern sense; and in the later Epistles it has almost assumed this meaning. The heretics of Crete, when Titus was there, were in doctrine followers of their own self-willed "questions" reprobated in vs. 9, and immoral in practice. reject—decline, avoid; not formal excommunication, but, "have nothing more to do with him," either in admonition or intercourse. 11. is . . . subverted—"is become perverse." condemned of himself—He cannot say, no one told him better; continuing the same after frequent admonition, he is self-condemned. "He sinneth" wilfully against knowledge.

ADAM CLARKE

6. Which he shed on us abundantly. "Which He poured out on us," as the water was poured out on them in baptism, to which there is here a manifest allusion. But as this was sometimes only sprinkled on the person, the heavenly gift was "poured out," not in drops, but "richly," in "great abundance."

Through Jesus Christ. Baptism is nothing in itself, and there had been no outpouring of the Holy Spirit had there been no saving and atoning Christ. Through Him alone all good comes to the souls of men.

7. That being justified by his grace. Being freed from sin; for the term "justification" is to be taken here as implying the whole work of the grace of Christ on the heart in order to its preparation for eternal glory. Should be made heirs. The gospel not only gave them the hope of an endless state of glory for their souls, but also of the resurrection and final glorification of their bodies, and they who were children of God were to be made heirs of His glory.

8. This is a faithful saying. "This is the true doctrine," the doctrine that cannot fail. And these things I will. "And I will, or desire, you to maintain earnestly what concerns these points." The things to which the apostle refers are those of which he had just been writing. These things are good and profitable. They are good in themselves, and calculated to promote the well-being of men.

9. Avoid foolish questions, and geneaologies. In these the Jews particularly delighted; they abounded in the most frivolous questions; and, as they had little piety themselves, they were solicitous to show that they had descended from godly ancestors. Contentions, and strivings about the law. Of legal contentions and different and conflicting decisions about the meaning of particular rites and ceremonies, the Talmud is full.

10. A man that is an heretick. Generally defined, one that is obstinately attached to an opinion contrary to the peace and comfort of society, and will submit to neither Scripture nor reason. Here it means a person who maintains Judaism in opposition to Christianity, or who insists on the necessity of circumcision in order to be saved. This is obviously the meaning of the word heretick in the only place in which it occurs in the sacred writings. After the first and second admonition reject. Labor to convince him of his error; but if he will not receive instruction, if he have shut his heart against conviction, then—"shun him."

11. Is subverted. "Is turned out of the way" in which he may be saved, and consequently sinneth—enters into that way that leads to destruction. Being condemned of himself. This refers to the Judaizing teacher who maintained his party and opinions for filthy lucre's sake. He was conscious of his own insincerity; and that he proclaimed not his system from a conscientious love of truth, but from a desire to get his livelihood.

MATTHEW HENRY

be used about those that err most grievously. They must be admonished, instructed, and warned. Upon continued obstinacy the church is obliged, to preserve its own purity, by severing such a corrupt member; which discipline may by God's blessing become effectual to reform the offender.

III. The apostle subjoins some further directions, v. 12, 13.

1. Titus should hold himself ready to come to Paul at Nicopolis, as soon as Artemas or Tychicus should be sent to Crete, to supply his place. Of Artemas we read little, but Tychicus is mentioned on many occasions with respect. Paul calls him a beloved brother, and faithful minister, and fellow-servant in the Lord: one fit therefore for the service intimated.

2. The other personal charge to Titus is that he would bring two of his friends on their journey diligently, and see them furnished, so that nothing should be wanting to them. Zenas is styled the lawyer. Apollos was an eminent and faithful minister. Accompanying such persons part of their way, and accommodating them for their work and journeys, was a pious and needful service.

Let Christians learn to maintain good works, that they be not unfruitful. Christianity is not a fruitless profession. It is not enough that they be harmless, but they must be profitable, doing good, as well as eschewing evil.—"Let ours set up and maintain some honest labour and employment, to provide for themselves and their families, that they be not unprofitable burdens on the earth"; so some understand it. Let them not think that Christianity gives them a writ of ease. To maintain good works for necessary uses; not living like drones on the labours of others, but themselves fruitful to the common benefit.

IV. The apostle concludes with salutations and benedictions, v. 15. Great comfort and encouragement it is to have the heart and prayers of other Christians with and for us. Grace be with you all. Amen. This is the apostle's wish and prayer. Grace is the chief thing to be wished and begged for, with respect to ourselves or others; it is, summarily, all good. Amen shuts up the prayer, expressing desire and hope, that so it may, and so it shall be.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12. When I shall send—have sent—Artemas or Tychicus—to supply thy place in Crete. Artemas is said to have been subsequently bishop of Lystra. Tychicus was sent twice by Paul from Rome to Lesser Asia in his first imprisonment (which shows how well qualified he was to become Titus' successor in Crete); Ephesians 6:21; and in his second, II Timothy 4:12. Tradition makes him subsequently bishop of Chalcedon, in Bithynia. Nicopolis—"the city of victory," called so from the battle of Actium, in Epirus. This Epistle was probably written from Corinth in the autumn. Paul purposed a journey through Œtolia and Acarnania, into Epirus, and there "to winter."

13. Bring . . . on their journey—Enable them to proceed forward by supplying necessaries for their journey. Zenas—the contracted form of Zenodorus. lawyer—a Jewish "scribe," who, when converted, still retained the title from his former occupation. A civil lawyer. Apollos—with Zenas, probably the bearers of this Epistle. In I Cor. 16:12, Apollos is mentioned as purposing to visit Corinth; his now being at Corinth (on the theory of Paul being at Corinth when he wrote) accords with this purpose. Crete would be on his way either to Palestine or his native place, Alexandria. Paul and Apollos thus appear in beautiful harmony in that very city where their names had been formerly the watchword of unchristian party work. It was to avoid this party rivalry that Apollos formerly was unwilling to visit Corinth though Paul desired him. HIPPOLYTUS mentions Zenas as one of the Seventy, and afterwards bishop of Diospolis. 14. And . . . also—Greek, "But . . . also." Not only thou, but let others also of "our" fellow believers (or "whom we have gained over at Crete") with thee. for necessary uses—to supply the necessary wants of Christian missionaries and brethren, according as they stand in need in their journeys for the Lord's cause. Cf. ch. 1:8, "a lover of hospitality." 15. Greet—"Salute them that love us in the faith." All at Crete had not this love rooted in faith, the true bond of fellowship. A salutation peculiar to this Epistle, such as no forger would have used. Grace—Greek, "The grace," viz., of God. with you all—not that the Epistle is addressed to all the Cretan Christians, but Titus would naturally impart it to his flock.

ADAM CLARKE

12. When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus. These were either deacons or presbyters which the apostle intended to send to Crete to supply the place of Titus. Who Artemas was we know not; he is not mentioned in any other place in the New Testament. Tychicus was a native of Asia, as we learn from Acts xx. 4. For I have determined there to winter. Hence the apostle was at liberty, seeing his spending the winter at this or at any other practicable place depended on his own determination. It was probably now pretty late in the autumn, and the apostle was now drawing near to Nicopolis; for he certainly was not yet arrived, else he would not have said, I have determined there to winter.

13. Bring Zenas the lawyer. This person is mentioned only in this place; whether he was a Jewish, Roman, or Greek lawyer we cannot tell. And Apollos. Of this person we have some valuable particulars in Acts xviii. 24; 1 Cor. i. 12; iii. 5-6; and iv. 6. Either Paul had left these at Crete when he visited that island or he had heard that in their evangelical itinerancy they were about to pass through it. On their journey diligently. Afford them the means to defray their expenses. The churches through which these evangelists passed bore their expenses from one to the other. See 3 John, v. 6.

14. And let ours also learn to maintain good works. There is something very remarkable in this expression. The words which we translate to maintain good works occur also in v. 8: and some think they mean "to provide for our own, and the necessities of others, by working at some honest occupation"; and that this was necessary to be taught to the Cretans, let ours also learn, who were naturally and practically "idle gluttons." For necessary uses. That they may be able at all times to help the Church of God, and those that are in want. That they be not unfruitful. As they must be if they indulge themselves in their idle, slothful disposition.

15. All that are with me. He means his companions in the ministry. Salute thee. Wish thee well, and desire to be affectionately remembered to thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. All that love us for Christ's sake, and all that are genuine Christians.

Philemon, one of note and probably a minister in the church of Colosse, a city of Phrygia, had a servant named Onesimus, who, having stolen his goods, ran away from him, and came to Rome, where Paul was then a prisoner for the gospel, and was, by the blessing of God, converted by him, after which he ministered awhile to the apostle in bonds. Understanding him to be another man's servant, Paul would not, without his consent, detain him, but sends him back with this letter-commendatory, wherein he earnestly sues for his pardon and kind reception. There is no reason to doubt but Paul prevailed with Philemon to forgive and receive Onesimus.

CHAPTER 1

I. In the first two verses of the preface we have the persons from and to whom it is written,

1. The persons writing: Paul, the principal, who calls himself a prisoner of Jesus Christ. This was proper to move Philemon upon the request made to him by such a one, especially when strengthened too with the concurrence of Timothy. What could be denied to two such petitioners?

2. The persons written to are Philemon and Apphia, and with them Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house. Philemon, the master of Onesimus, was the principal; a good man he was, and probably a minister, and on both accounts dearly beloved by Paul. With Philemon Apphia is joined, probably his yoke-fellow. She was a party offended and injured by Onesimus, and therefore proper to be taken notice of in a letter for reconciliation and forgiveness. These are the principal parties written to. The less principal are, Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house. Archippus was a minister in the church of Colosse, Philemon's friend. Paul might think him one whom Philemon would advise with, and who might be capable of furthering the good work of peace-making and forgiveness. And to the church in thy house, his whole family, in which the worship of God was kept up. Families which generally may be most pious and orderly may yet have one or other in them impious and wicked. This was the aggravation of Onesimus's sin, that it was where he might have learned better.

II. The apostle's salutation of those named by him (v. 3). He wishes for them the best things; not gold, nor silver, nor any earthly good, but grace and peace from God in Christ. Grace, the spring and fountain of all blessings; and peace, all good, as the fruit and effect of that grace. From God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. From the Father, who is our Father in Christ; and from Christ, his favour and goodwill as God, and the fruits of it through him as Mediator. The favour of God and peace with him, as in itself it is the best and most desirable good, so is it the cause of all other, and what puts sweetness into every mercy and can make happy even in the want of all earthly things.

III. He expresses the singular affection he had for him, by thanksgiving and prayer to God in his behalf, and the great joy for the many good things he knew and heard to be in him, v. 4–7.

1. The object of Paul's praises and prayers for Philemon, v. 4. It is the privilege of good men that in their praises and prayers they come to God as their God: I thank my God, said Paul. Our prayers and praises should be offered up to God, not for ourselves only, but for others also. In this lies no little part of the communion of saints. Paul, in his private thanksgivings and prayers, was often particular in remembering his friends. This is a means of exercising love, and obtaining good for others.

2. The circumstance: Always making mention of thee. So must we remember Christian friends much and often, as their case may need.

Vs. 1-25. ADDRESS. THANKSGIVING FOR PHILEMON'S LOVE AND FAITH. INTERCESSION FOR ONESIMUS. CONCLUDING REQUEST AND SALUTATIONS. This Epistle affords a specimen of the highest wisdom as to the manner in which Christians ought to manage social affairs on more exalted principles. 1. prisoner of Jesus Christ—one whom Christ's cause has made a prisoner (cf. "in the bonds of the Gospel," (vs. 13). He does not call himself, as in other Epistles, "Paul an apostle," as he is writing familiarly, not authoritatively. our . . . fellow labourer—in building up the Church at Colosse, while we were at Ephesus. See my Introduction to Colossians. 2. Apphia—the Latin "Appia"; either the wife or some close relative of Philemon. She and Archippus, if they had not belonged to his family, would not have been included with Philemon in the address of a letter on a domestic matter. Archippus—a minister of the Colossian Church (Col. 4: 17). fellow soldier—(II Tim. 2:3).

church in thy house—In the absence of a regular church building, the houses of particular saints were used for that purpose. Observe Paul's tact in associating with Philemon those associated by kindred or Christian brotherhood with his house, and not going beyond it.

4. always—joined by ALFORD with, "I thank my God."

1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ. It has already been noted, in the preface, that Paul was a prisoner at Rome when he wrote this Epistle and those to the Colossians and Philippians. But some think that the term prisoner does not sufficiently point out the apostle's state, and that the original word should be translated "bound with a chain." This is certainly its meaning; and it shows us in some measure his circumstances—one arm was bound with a chain to the arm of the soldier to whose custody he had been delivered. Unto Philemon our dearly beloved. There is a peculiarity in the use of proper names in this Epistle which is not found in any other part of Paul's writings. The names to which we refer are Philemon, Apphia, Archippus, and Onesimus. "Affectionate" or "beloved"; this led the apostle to say: Unto Philemon our dearly beloved.

2. Apphia. Appha is the affectionate address of a brother or sister; or the diminutive of a brother and sister, used to express kindness and affection. Archippus. The "ruler" or "master of the horse." Heroes of old were, among both the Greeks and the Trojans, celebrated for their skill in managing and taming the horse and employing him in war; this frequently occurs in Homer. The import of the name of Archippus might suggest this idea to the apostle's mind, and lead him to say: Archippus our fellowsoldier. Onesimus. "Useful" or "profitable." The import of this name led the apostle to play upon the word thus: "I beseech thee for my son Onesimus . . . which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me." To the church in thy house. The congregation of Christians frequently assembling in Philemon's house; for at this time the Christians had neither temples, churches, nor chapels. It is very probable that Apphia was the wife of Philemon; and Archippus, their son, the pastor of the church at Philemon's house.

4. I thank my God. For all the good He has bestowed upon you, making mention of thee always in my prayers, that you may hold fast all that you have, and get all that you need further.

3. The matter both of his praises and prayers, in reference to Philemon.

(1) Of his praises. He thanks God for the love which he heard Philemon had towards the Lord Jesus. For his faith in Christ also. Love to Christ, and faith in him, are prime Christian graces, for which there is great ground of praise to God. He praises God likewise for Philemon's love to all the saints. These two must go together. Different sentiments and ways in what is not essential will not make a difference of affection as to the truth. Mere external differences are nothing here. Paul calls a poor converted slave his bowels. We must love, as God does, all saints. Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus, and towards all saints. Love to saints, if it be sincere, will be catholic and universal love towards all saints; faith and love, though in the heart they are hidden things, are known by the effects of them.

(2) The apostle joins prayer with his praises, that the fruits of Philemon's faith and love might be more and more conspicuous, that the communication of them might constrain others to the acknowledgment of all the good things that were in him and in his house towards Christ Jesus.

4. He adds a reason, both of his prayer and his praises (v. 7). The good thou hast done and still doest is abundant matter of joy and comfort to me and others, who therefore desire you may continue and abound in such good fruits more and more.

Verses 8–25

I. The main business of the epistle, which was to plead with Philemon on behalf of Onesimus. Many arguments Paul urges for this purpose, v. 8–21. The 1*st Argument* is taken from what was before noted: "Seeing so much good is reported of thee and found in thee, especially thy love to all saints, now let me see it on a fresh and further occasion." A disposition to do good, together with past instances and expressions of it, is a good handle to take hold of for pressing to more.

2*nd Argument* is from the authority of him that was now making this request to him, v. 8. This was a matter within the compass of the apostle's power to require, though he would not in this instance act up to it.

3*rd Argument.* He chooses to entreat it of him (v. 9). He argues from love rather than authority, which doubtless must carry engaging influence with it.

4*th Argument. Being such a one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.* Years bespeak respect. The request of an aged apostle, and now suffering for Christ and his gospel, should be tenderly considered.

5*th Argument.* From the spiritual relation now between Onesimus and himself, v. 10. My son, whom I have begotten in my bonds; he was dear to him, and he hoped would be so to Philemon, under this consideration. Prison mercies are sweet.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

5. Hearing—the ground of his thanksgiving. It is a delicate mark of authenticity, that he says "hearing" as to churches and persons whom he had not seen or then visited. Now Colosse, Philemon's place of residence, he had never yet seen. Yet vs. 19 here implies that Philemon was his convert. Philemon, doubtless, was converted at Ephesus, or in some other place where he met Paul. love and faith—The theological order is first faith then love, the fruit of faith. But he purposely puts Philemon's love in the first place, as it is to an act of love that he is exhorting him. toward . . . toward—different Greek, words: "towards" . . . "unto." Towards implies simply direction; unto, to the advantage of. 6. That . . .—The aim of my thanksgiving and prayers for thee is, in order that the. . . . the communication of thy faith—the imparting of it and its fruits (viz., acts of love and beneficence: as Heb. 13:16, "to communicate," i.e., to impart a share) to others; or, the liberality to others flowing from thy faith (so the Greek is translated, "liberal distribution," II Cor. 9:13). effectual by—Greek, "in"; the element in which his liberality had place, i.e., may be proved by acts in. . . . acknowledging—Greek, "the thorough knowledge," i.e., the experimental or practical recognition. of every good thing which is in you—The oldest MSS. read, "which is in US," i.e., the practical recognition of every grace which is in us Christians, in so far as we realize the Christian character. In short, that thy faith may by acts be proved to be "a faith which worketh by love." in Christ Jesus—rather as Greek, "unto Christ Jesus," i.e., to the glory of Christ Jesus. Two of the oldest MSS. omit "Jesus." This verse answers to vs. 5, "thy love and faith toward all saints"; Paul never ceases to mention him in his prayers, in order that his faith may still further show its power in his relation to others, by exhibiting every grace which is in Christians to the glory of Christ. Thus he paves the way for the request in behalf of Onesimus. 7. For—a reason for the prayer, vss. 4-6. we have—Greek, "we had." joy and consolation—joined in II Corinthians 7:4. saints are refreshed by thee—His house was open to them. brother—put last, to conciliate his favorable attention to the request which follows. 8. Wherefore—Because of my love to thee, I prefer to "beseech," rather than "enjoin," or authoritatively command. I might . . . enjoin—in virtue of the obligation to obedience which Philemon lay under to Paul, as having been converted through his instrumentality. in Christ—the element in which his boldness has place.

9. for love's sake—mine to thee, and [what ought to be] thine to Onesimus. Or, that Christian love of which thou showest so bright an example (vs. 7). being such an one—Explain, Being such a one as thou knowest me to be, viz., Paul (the founder of so many churches, and an apostle of Christ, and thy father in the faith)the aged (a circumstance calculated to secure thy respect for anything I request), and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ (the strongest claim I have on thy regard: if for no other reason, at least in consideration of this, through commiseration gratify me).

10. I beseech thee—emphatically repeated from vs. 9. In the Greek, the name "Onesimus" is skilfully put last, he puts first a favorable description of him before he mentions the name that had fallen into so bad repute with Philemon. "I beseech thee for my son, whom I have begotten in my bonds, Onesimus." Scripture does not sanction slavery, but at the same time does not begin a political crusade against it. It sets forth principles of love to our fellow men which were sure (as they have done) in due time to undermine and overthrow it, without violently convulsing the then existing political fabric, by stirring up slaves against their masters.

ADAM CLARKE

6. That the communication of thy faith. The words the "fellowship" or communication of thy faith may be understood as referring to the work of love towards the saints—the poor Christians—which his faith in Christ enabled him to perform, faith being taken here for its effects. Indeed the word koinonia itself is not unfrequently used to denote "liberality, almsgiving"; and this is very properly remarked by Theophylact here: "He terms almsgiving the communication of faith, because it is the fruit of much faith." Instead of in you, "in us" is the reading of all the best MSS., as well as of several versions and fathers.

7. For we have great joy. This verse does not read harmoniously. The Greek authorizes the following arrangement: "For we have great joy and consolation in your love, O brother, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by you." The apostle speaks here of the works of charity in which Philemon abounded towards poor Christians.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold. It would be better to read: "Wherefore, although I have much authority through Christ to command you to do what is proper, yet, on account of my love to you, I entreat you." There is certainly something very melting and persuasive in this and every part of the Epistle. Yet in my opinion the character of Paul prevails in it throughout. The warm, affectionate, authoritative teacher is interceding with an absent friend for a beloved convert. He urges his suit with an earnestness befitting, perhaps, not so much the occasion as the ardor and sensibility of his own mind. Here also, as everywhere, he shows himself conscious of the weight and dignity of his mission. Nor does he suffer Philemon, for a moment, to forget it: I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient. He is careful also to recall, though obliquely, to Philemon's memory the sacred obligation under which he had laid him by bringing him to the knowledge of Christ: "I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides." Without laying aside, therefore, the apostolic character, our author softens the imperative style of his address by mixing with it every sentiment and consideration that could move the heart of the correspondent. Aged, and in prison, he is content to supplicate and entreat. Onesimus was rendered dear to him by his conversation and his services; the child of his affliction, and ministering unto him "in the bonds of the gospel." This ought to recommend him, whatever had been his fault, to Philemon's forgiveness: "Receive him as myself," as my own bowels. Everything, however, should be voluntary. Paul was determined that Philemon's compliance should flow from his own bounty: "Without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly"; trusting, nevertheless, to his gratitude and attachment for the performance of all that he requested, and for more: "Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say."

9. Paul the aged. If we allow Paul to have been about twenty-five years of age at the utmost, in the year 31, when he was assisting at the martyrdom of Stephen, Acts vii. 58; as this Epistle was written about A.D. 62, he could not have been at this time more than about fifty-six years old. This could not constitute him an aged man in our sense of the term; yet when the whole length of his life is taken in, being martyred about four years after this, he may not improperly be considered an aged or elderly man, though it is generally allowed that his martyrdom took place in A.D. 66. But the word signifies not only an "old man," but also an "ambassador," because old or elderly men were chosen to fulfill such an office because of their experience and solidity; hence some have thought that we should translate here, "Paul the ambassador." This would agree very well with the scope and even the design of the place.

10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus. It is evident from this that Onesimus was converted by Paul while he was a prisoner at Rome, and perhaps not long before he wrote this Epistle.

MATTHEW HENRY

6th Argument is from Philemon's own interest, v. 11. Unsanctified persons are unprofitable persons. Grace makes good for somewhat: "In time past unprofitable but now profitable, as he has since his conversion been here to me, ministering to me in my confinement." There seems an allusion to the name Onesimus, which signifies profitable. Now he will answer to his name. How tenderly does Paul here speak, when he is pleading with Philemon not to make severe reflections on his servant's misconduct, but to forgive. What happy changes conversion makes—of evil good! of unprofitable useful!

7th Argument. He urges Philemon from the strong affection that he had to Onesimus, v. 12. Even good men may sometimes need great earnestness and entreaty to forgive those who have injured and offended them.

8th Argument is from the apostle's denying himself in sending back Onesimus, v. 13, 14. Paul was now in prison, and wanted a friend or servant to assist him, for which he found Onesimus fit and ready, and therefore would have detained him to minister to him. Yet he would not take this liberty, though his circumstances needed it: I have sent him back to thee, that any good office of thine to me might not be of necessity, but willingly. He might indeed have presumed on Philemon's willingness; but, notwithstanding his need, he would deny himself rather than take that way.

9th Argument. Such a change was now wrought in Onesimus that Philemon needed not fear his ever running from him, or injuring him any more, v. 15. Charity would so hope and judge, yea, so it would be. How tenderly still the sins of penitents are spoken of; he calls it a departure for a season instead of giving it the term that it deserved. True penitents will not return to folly. Observe the goodness, and power of God, that he should be led into the way of salvation who had fled from it, and find means made effectual at Rome who had been hardened under them at Colosse.

10th Argument is taken from the capacity under which Onesimus now would return, and must be received by Philemon (v. 16). There is a spiritual brotherhood between all true believers, however distinguished in civil and outward respects; they are all children of the same heavenly Father. Christianity does not annul nor confound the respective civil duties, but strengthens the obligation to them. Religious servants are more than mere ordinary servants; they have grace in their hearts, and have found grace in God's sight, and so will in the sight of religious masters. "A brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more to thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord. He is God's servant and thine too; here are more ties than he is under to me."

11th Argument. From the communion of saints, v. 17. Own and treat him as thou wouldst me, with a like ready and true, though perhaps not equal, affection.

12th Argument. A promise of satisfaction to Philemon, v. 18, 19.

(1) A confession of Onesimus's debt to Philemon. True penitents will be ingenuous in owning their faults, and especially is this to be done in cases of injury to others.

(2) Paul here engages for satisfaction. The communion of saints does not destroy distinction of property: Onesimus is yet Philemon's servant still, and indebted to him for wrongs that he had done. Suretiship is not in all cases unlawful, but in some is a good and merciful undertaking. Hereby he expresses his real and great affection for Onesimus, and his full belief of the sincerity of his conversion.

(3) The reason of things between him and Philemon: "Albeit, I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thy own self besides." The apostle glances at the benefits he had conferred on Philemon. I have been the instrument of all that spiritual good to thee; and what thy obligation to me on this account is I leave to thee to consider.

13th Argument is from the joy and comfort the apostle hereby would have on Philemon's own account, as well as on Onesimus's, v. 20. Philemon was Paul's son in the faith, yet he entreats him as a brother: Onesimus a poor slave, yet he solicits for

11. Which . . . was . . . unprofitable—belying his name Onesimus, which means "profitable." Not only was he "unprofitable," but positively injurious, having "wronged" his master. Paul uses a mild expression. now profitable—Without godliness a man has no station. Profitable in spiritual, as well as in temporal things. 12. mine own bowels—as dear to me as my own heart [ALFORD]. Cf. vs. 17, "as myself." The object of my most intense affection as that of a parent for a child.

13. I—emphatical. I for my part. Since I had such implicit trust in him as to desire to keep him with me for his services, thou mayest. I would have retained—different Greek from the "would," vs. 14, "I could have wished," "I was minded" here; but "I was not willing," vs. 14. in thy stead—that he might supply in your place all the services to me which you, if you were here, would render in virtue of the love you bear to me (vs. 19). bonds of the gospel—my bonds endured for the Gospel's sake (vs. 9). 14. without thy mind—i.e., consent. should not be as—"should not appear as a matter of necessity, but of free will." Had Paul kept Onesimus, however willing to gratify Paul Philemon might be, he would have no opportunity given him of showing he was so, his leave not having been asked.

15. perhaps—speaking in human fashion, yet as one believing that God's Providence probably (for we cannot dogmatically define the hidden purposes of God in providence) overruled the past evil to ultimately greater good to him. This thought would soften Philemon's indignation at Onesimus' past offense. So Joseph in Genesis 45:5. departed—lit., "was parted from thee"; a softening term for "ran away," to mitigate Philemon's wrath. receive him—Greek, "have him for thyself in full possession" (Note, Phil. 4:18). The same Greek as in Matthew 6:2. for ever—in this life and in that to come (cf. Exod. 21:6). Onesimus' time of absence, however long, was but a short "hour" (so Greek) compared with the everlasting devotion henceforth binding him to his master. 16. No longer as a mere servant or slave (though still he is that), but above a servant, so that thou shalt derive from him not merely the services of a slave, but higher benefits: a servant "in the flesh," he is a brother "in the Lord." beloved, specially to me—who am his spiritual father, and who have experienced his faithful attentions. Lest Philemon should dislike Onesimus being called "brother," Paul first recognizes him as a brother, being the spiritual son of the same God. much more unto thee—to whom he stands in so much nearer and more lasting relation. 17. a partner—in the Christian fellowship of faith, hope, and love. receive him as myself—resuming "receive him that is mine own bowels."

18. Greek, "But it (thou art not inclined to 'receive him' because) he hath wronged thee"; a milder term than "robbed thee." Onesimus seems to have confessed some such act to Paul. put that on mine account—I am ready to make good the loss to thee if required. The latter parts of vss. 19, 21, imply that he did not expect Philemon would probably demand it. 19. with mine own hand—not employing an amanuensis, as in other Epistles: a special compliment to Philemon which he ought to show his appreciation of by granting Paul's request. Contrast Colossians 4:18, which shows that the Epistle to the Colossian Church, accompanying this Epistle, had only its closing "salutation" written by Paul's own hand. albeit . . .—lit., "that I may not say . . . not to say. . . ." thou owest . . . even thine own self—not merely thy possessions. For to my instrumentality thou owest thy salvation. So the debt which "he oweth thee" being transferred upon me (I making myself responsible for it) is cancelled. 20. let me—"me" is emphatic: "Let me have profit (so Greek 'for joy,' onaimen, referring to the name Onesimus, 'profitable') from thee, as thou shouldst have had from Onesimus"; for "thou owest thine

11. Was to thee unprofitable. Alluding to the meaning of Onesimus' name, as has been already noted, though the apostle uses a different Greek word to express the same idea.

12. Whom I have sent again. The Christian religion never cancels any civil relations; a slave, on being converted and becoming a free man of Christ, has no right to claim on that ground emancipation from the service of his master. Justice therefore required Paul to send Onesimus back to his master, and conscience obliged Onesimus to agree in the propriety of the measure; but love to the servant induced the apostle to write this conciliating letter to the master.

13. That in thy stead he might have ministered unto me. As Philemon was one of Paul's converts, he thereby became his spiritual father and had a right to his services when in need. This was a strong argument, to induce Philemon not only to forgive his servant, but to send him back to the apostle, that he might minister to him in his master's stead.

14. That thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity. If the apostle had kept Onesimus in his service and written to Philemon to forgive him and permit him to stay, to this it is probable he would have agreed. But the benefit thus conceded might have lost much of its real worth by the consideration that, had he been at Colossae, Philemon would not have sent him to Rome; but, being there and in the apostle's service, he could not with propriety order him home. Thus the benefit to the apostle would have appeared to have been of necessity. The apostle therefore, by sending him back again, gave Philemon the opportunity to do all as if self-moved to it. This is a very delicate touch.

15. He therefore departed for a season. This is another most delicate stroke. He departed your slave, your unfaithful slave; he departed "for a short time." But so has the mercy of God operated in his behalf, and the providence of God in thine, that he now returns, not an unfaithful slave, in whom you could repose no confidence, but as a brother, a beloved brother in the Lord, to be in the same heavenly family with you forever.

16. Not now as a servant. Do not receive him merely as your slave, nor treat him according to that condition; but as a brother—as a genuine Christian, and particularly dear to me. Both in the flesh and in the Lord. There is no reason to believe that Onesimus was of the kindred of Philemon; and we must take the term flesh here as referring to the right which Philemon had in him. He was a part of his property and of his family; as a slave, this was his condition. But he now stood in a twofold relation to Philemon: (1) According to the flesh, as above explained, he was one of his family. (2) In the Lord, he was now also a member of the heavenly family, and of the church at Philemon's house.

17. If thou count me therefore a partner. If you do consider me as a friend, if I still have the place of a friend in your affection, receive him as myself; for, as I love him as my own soul, in receiving him you receive me.

18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought. Had the apostle been assured that Onesimus had robbed his master, he certainly would not have spoken in this hypothetical way. He only puts a possible case: If he have wronged you, or owes you anything, place all to my account; I will discharge all he owes you.

19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand. It is likely that the whole of the letter was written by Paul himself, which was not his usual custom. See on 2 Thess. iii. 17. But by thus speaking he bound Phileomon to do what he requested, as an act of common civility, if he could not feel a higher motive from what he had already urged. Albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me. I ask you to do this thing to oblige me, though I will not say how much you owe me; even thine own self, as having been the means of your conversion.

20. Yea, brother. It is even so that you are thus indebted to me. Let me have joy of thee, in forgiving Onesimus and receiving him into your favor. In the words which we should translate, "Let me have profit of thee," there is him as if he were seeking some great thing for himself. Christians should do the things that may rejoice the hearts of one another. From the world they expect trouble; and where may they look for comfort and joy but in one another? It is not any selfish respect I am actuated by, but what is pleasing to Christ.

14*th Argument.* This lies in the good hope and opinion which he expresses of Philemon, v. 21. Good thoughts and expectations of us more strongly move and engage us to do the things expected from us. Good persons will be ready for good works, and not narrow and pinching, but abundant in them.

II. The conclusion.

1. He signifies his good hope of deliverance, through their prayers, and that shortly he might see them, desiring Philemon to make provision for him, v. 22.

(1) Prepare me also a lodging. He wills Philemon to do it, intending to be his guest. Who would not show the utmost of affectionate regards to such a one?

(2) For I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you. He did not know how God might deal with him, but the benefit of prayer he had often found, and hoped he should again, for deliverance, and liberty to come to them. Trust must be with the use of means, prayer especially; this hath unlocked heaven and opened prison-doors. The least may in this way be helpful to the greatest. Though prayer obtains, yet it does not merit the things obtained: they are God's gift, and Christ's purchase. I trust that through your prayers I shall be freely bestowed on you. In praying for faithful ministers, people in effect pray for themselves: "I trust I shall be given unto you, for your service, and comfort."

2. He sends salutations from one who was his fellow-prisoner, and four more who were his fellow-labourers, v. 23, 24. Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus. He was of Colosse, and so countryman and fellow-citizen with Philemon, who, being at Rome, perhaps accompanying Paul, was confined in the same prison, and for the same cause. My fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus is mentioned as his glory and the apostle's comfort. So God sometimes lightens the sufferings of his servants by the communion of saints, the sweet fellowship they have one with another in their bonds. Never more enjoyment of God have they found than when suffering together for God.—Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. The mention of these seems in a manner to interest them in the business of the letter. How ill would it look by denial of the request of it to slight so many worthy names as most of these, at least, were! Marcus, cousin of Barnabas, and son of Mary, who was so hospitable to the saints at Jerusalem. Though some failing seems to have been in him when Paul and he parted, yet in conjunction with Barnabas he went on with his work, and here Paul and he, we perceive, were reconciled. Aristarchus is mentioned with Marcus (Col. iv. 10), and called there by Paul his fellow-prisoner. Next is Demas: no mark of disgrace lay on him here, but he is joined with others who were faithful. Lucas is the last, that beloved physician and evangelist, who came to Rome companion with Paul.

3. Here is the apostle's closing prayer and benediction, v. 25. What is wished and prayed for: Grace, the free favour and love of God; with this the apostle begins and ends. From whom: Our Lord Jesus Christ. All grace to us is from Christ; he purchased, and he bestows it. To whom: Your spirit, not of Philemon only, but of all who were named in the inscription. All the house saluted are here joined in the closing benediction, the more to quicken all to further the end of the epistle.

Amen is added, not only for strong and affectionate summing up the prayer and wish, so let it be; but as an expression of faith that it will be heard, so shall it be. The grace of Christ with their spirits, Philemon's especially, would sweeten and mollify them, and dispose to forgive others as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.

own self to me." in the Lord–not in worldly gain, but in thine increase in the graces of the Lord's Spirit [ALFORD]. my bowels–my heart. Gratify my feelings by granting this request. in the Lord–The oldest MSS. read, "in Christ," the element or sphere in which this act of Christian love naturally ought to have place. 21. Having confidence in thy obedience–to my apostolic authority, if I were to "enjoin" it (vs. 8), which I do not, preferring to beseech thee for it as a favor (vs. 9). thou wilt also do more–towards Onesimus: hinting at his possible manumission by Philemon, besides being kindly received.

22. This prospect of Paul's visiting Colosse would tend to secure a kindly reception for Onesimus, as Paul would know in person how he had been treated. your . . . you–referring to Philemon, Apphia, Archippus, and the Church in Philemon's house. The same expectation is expressed by him, Philippians 2:23, 24, written in the same imprisonment.

23. The same persons send salutations in the accompanying Epistle, except that "Jesus Justus" is not mentioned here. Epaphras, my fellow prisoner–He had been sent by the Colossian Church to inquire after, and minister to, Paul, and possibly was cast into prison by the Roman authorities on suspicion. However, he is not mentioned as a prisoner in Colossians 4:12, so that "fellow prisoner" here may mean merely one who was a faithful companion to Paul in his imprisonment, and by his society put himself in the position of a prisoner.

So also "Aristarchus, my fellow prisoner," Colossians 4:10, may mean. BENSON conjectures the meaning to be that on some former occasion these two were Paul's "fellow prisoners," not at the time.

25. be with your spirit–(Gal. 6:18; II Timothy 4:22).

an evident play on the name of Onesimus. See on vv. 2 and 11. Refresh my bowels. Gratify the earnest longing of my soul in this. I ask neither your money nor goods; I ask what will enrich, not impoverish, you to give.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience. I know that it will please you thus to oblige your friend; and I know that you will do more than I request, because you feel the affection of a son to your spiritual father. Some think that the apostle hints to Philemon that he should manumit Onesimus.

22. But withal prepare me also a lodging. Does not the apostle mention this as conferring an obligation on Philemon? I will begin to repay you by taking up my abode at your house as soon as I shall be freed from prison. But some think he wished Philemon to hire him a house, that he might have a lodging of his own when he returned to Colossae. For I trust that through your prayers. It is very likely that this Epistle was written a short time before the liberation of the apostle from his first imprisonment at Rome (see Acts xxviii. 30 and Phil. ii. 24), and that he had that liberation now in full prospect.

23. Epaphras, my fellowprisoner. Epaphras was a Colossian, as we learn from Col. iv. 12: "Epaphras, who is one of you." But there is no account there of his being in prison, though the not mentioning of it does not necessarily imply that he was not. Some time or other he had suffered imprisonment for the truth of the gospel, and on that account Paul might, in a general way, call him his fellow prisoner.

24. Marcus, Aristarchus. These were all acquaintances of Philemon, and probably Colossians, and may be all considered as joining here with Paul in his request for Onesimus. Aristarchus was probably the same with him mentioned in Acts xix. 29; xx. 4; xxvii. 2. See Col. iv. 10. Demas. Is supposed to be the same who continued in his attachment to Paul till his last imprisonment at Rome; after which he left him for what is supposed to have been the love of the world, 2 Tim. iv. 10. Lucas. Is supposed to be Luke the Evangelist, and author of the Acts of the Apostles.

25. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. By using the plural your the apostle in effect directs or addresses the Epistle, not only to Philemon, but to all the church at his house. Amen. Is wanting as usual in the best MSS.

Concerning this epistle we must inquire: (1) Into the divine authority of it, for this has been questioned by some. The divine original of it shines forth with such strong and unclouded rays that he who runs may read it as an eminent part of the canon of Scripture. Its general reception in the church of God in all ages—these are the evidences of its divine authority. (2) As to its author. Of this we are not so certain; it does not bear the name of any in the front if it, as the rest of the epistles do, and there has been some dispute among the learned to whom they should ascribe it. But it is generally assigned to the apostle Paul. In the primitive times it was generally ascribed to him. (3) As to its scope and design. It is very evident that it was clearly to inform the minds, and strongly to confirm the judgment, of the Hebrews in the transcendent excellency of the gospel above the law. The design of this epistle was to press the believing Hebrews to a constant adherence to the Christian faith, and perseverance in it, notwithstanding all the sufferings they might meet with in so doing. It must be acknowledged that there are many things in this epistle hard to be understood, but the sweetness we shall find therein will make us abundant amends for all the pains we take to understand it.

CHAPTER 1

Verses 1–3

The apostle begins with a general declaration of the excellency of the gospel dispensation above that of the law.

I. The way wherein God communicated himself and his will to men under the Old Testament. The persons by whom God delivered his mind under the Old Testament; they were the prophets, that is, persons chosen of God, and qualified by him, for that office of revealing the will of God to men. The persons to whom God spoke by the prophets: To the fathers, to all the Old Testament saints. The order in which God spoke to men in those past times: he spoke to his ancient people at sundry times and in divers manners. By several parts, as the word signifies, which may refer either to the several ages of the Old Testament dispensation; or to the several gradual openings of his mind concerning the Redeemer. In divers manners, according to the different ways in which God thought fit to communicate his mind to his prophets.

VSS. 1-14. THE HIGHEST OF ALL REVELATIONS IS GIVEN US NOW IN THE SON OF GOD, WHO IS GREATER THAN THE ANGELS, AND WHO, HAVING COMPLETED REDEMPTION, SITS ENTHRONED AT GOD'S RIGHT HAND. The writer, though not inscribing his name, was well known to those addressed (ch. 13:19).

1. at sundry times—Greek, "in many portions." All was not revealed to each one prophet; but one received one portion of revelation, and another another. To Noah the quarter of the world to which Messiah should belong was revealed; to Abraham, the nation; to Jacob, the tribe; to David and Isaiah, the family; to Micah, the town of nativity; to Daniel, the exact time; to Malachi, the coming of His forerunner, and His second advent; through Jonah, His burial and resurrection; through Isaiah and Hosea, His resurrection. Each only knew in part; but when that which was perfect came in Messiah, that which was in part was done away (I Cor. 13: 12). in divers manners—e.g., internal suggestions, audible voices, the Urim and Thummim, dreams, and visions. "In one way He was seen by Abraham, in another by Moses, in another by Elias, and in another by Micah; Isaiah, Daniel, and Ezekiel, beheld different forms" [THEODORET] (cf. Num. 12: 6-8). The Old Testament revelations were fragmentary in substance, and manifold in form; the very multitude of prophets shows that they prophesied only in part. In Christ, the revelation of God is full, not in shifting hues of separated color, but Himself the pure light, uniting in His one person the whole spectrum (vs. 3). spake—the expression usual for a Jew to employ in addressing Jews. So Matthew, a Jew writing especially for Jews, quotes Scripture, not by the formula, "It is written," but "said. . . ." in time past—From Malachi, the last of the Old Testament prophets, for four hundred

1. God, who at sundry times and in divers manners. We can scarcely conceive anything more dignified than the opening of this Epistle. The sentiments are exceedingly elevated; and the language, harmony itself. The infinite God is at once produced to view, not in any of those attributes which are essential to the divine nature, but in the manifestations of His love to the world, by giving a revelation of His will relative to the salvation of mankind, and thus preparing the way, through a long train of years, for the introduction of that most glorious Being, His own Son. This Son, in the fullness of time, was manifested in the flesh that He might complete all vision and prophecy, supply all that was wanting to perfect the great scheme of revelation for the instruction of the world, and then die to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. The description which he gives of this glorious personage is elevated beyond all comparison. In short, this first chapter, which may be considered the introduction to the whole Epistle, is, for importance of subject, dignity of expression, harmony and energy of language, compression and yet distinctness of ideas, equal, if not superior, to any other part of the New Testament. Sundry times. Polymeros, from polys, "many," and meros, "a part"; giving portions of revelation at different times. Divers manners. Polytropos, from polys, "many," and tropos, "a manner, turn, or form of speech." The words are rather intended to point out the imperfect state of divine revelation under the Old Testament; it was not complete, nor can it without the New be considered a sufficiently ample discovery of the divine will. Under the Old Testament, revelations were made at various times, by various persons, in various laws

MATTHEW HENRY

II. God's method of communicating his mind and will under the New Testament dispensation, these last days as they are called. Now we must expect no new revelation, but only more of the Spirit of Christ to help us better to understand what is already revealed. It is the final, the finishing revelation. It is a revelation which God has made by his Son, the most excellent messenger that was ever sent into the world.

1. The glory of his office. God hath appointed him to be heir of all things. By him God made the worlds, both visible and invisible, the heavens and the earth. By him he made the old creation, by him he makes the new creature, and by him he rules and governs both. He upholds all things by the word of his power. The weight of the whole creation is laid upon Christ: he supports the whole and all the parts.

2. Hence the apostle passes to the glory of the person of Christ, v. 3. He is the only-begotten Son of God, and as such he must have the same nature. The person of the Son is the glory of the Father, shining forth with a truly divine splendour. Jesus Christ in his person is God manifest in the flesh. The person of the Son is the true image and character of the person of the Father. In beholding the power, wisdom, and goodness, of the Lord Jesus Christ, we behold the power, wisdom, and goodness, of the Father. This is the glory of the person of Christ; the fulness of the Godhead dwells in him.

3. From the glory of the person of Christ he proceeds to mention the glory of his grace. The sufferings of Christ had this great honour in them, to be a full satisfaction for the sins of his people: By himself he purged away our sins; he has made atonement for sin. Himself, the glory of his person and nature, gave to his sufferings such merit as was a sufficient reparation of honour to God, who had suffered injury and affront by the sins of men.

4. From the glory of his sufferings we are at length led to consider the glory of his exaltation. Having assumed our nature, and suffered in it on earth, he has taken it up with him to heaven.

Now it was by no less a person than this that God in these last days spoke to men. The dispensations of the gospel must therefore exceed, very far exceed, the dispensation of the law.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

years, there had arisen no prophet, in order that the Son might be the more an object of expectation [BENGEL]. As God (the Father) is introduced as having spoken here; so God the Son, ch. 2:3; God the Holy Ghost, ch. 3:7. the fathers—the Jewish fathers. The Jews of former days (I Cor. 10:1). by—Greek, "in." A mortal king speaks by his ambassador, not (as the King of kings) in his ambassador. The Son is the last and highest manifestation of God (Matt. 21:34, 37); not merely a measure, as in the prophets, but the fulness of the Spirit of God dwelling in Him bodily (John 1:16; 3:34; Col. 2:9). Thus he answers the Jewish objection drawn from their prophets. Jesus is the end of all prophecy (Rev. 19:10), and of the law of Moses (John 1:17; 5:46). 2. in these last days—In the oldest MSS. the Greek is, "At the last part of these days." The Rabbins divided the whole of time into "this age," or "world," and "the age to come" (ch. 2:5; 6:5). The days of Messiah were the transition period or "last part of these days" (in contrast to "in times past"), the close of the existing dispensation, and beginning of the final dispensation of which Christ's second coming shall be the crowning consummation. by his Son—Greek, "IN (His) Son" (John 14:10). The true "Prophet" of God. "His majesty is set forth: (1) Absolutely by the very name 'Son,' and by three glorious predicates, 'whom He hath appointed,' 'by whom He made the worlds,' 'who sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;' thus His course is described from the beginning of all things till he reached the goal (vss. 2, 3). (2) Relatively, in comparison with the angels, vs. 4; the confirmation of this follows, and the very name 'Son' is proved at vs. 5; the 'heirship,' vss. 6-9; the 'making the worlds,' vss. 10-12; the 'sitting at the right hand' of God, vss. 13, 14." His being made heir follows His sonship, and preceded His making the worlds (Prov. 8:22, 23; Eph. 3:11). As the first begotten, He is heir of the universe (vs. 6), which He made instrumentally, ch. 11:3, where "by the Word of God" answers to "by whom" (the Son of God) here (John 1:3). Christ was "appointed" (in God's eternal counsel) to creation as an office; and the universe so created was assigned to Him as a kingdom. He is "heir of all things" by right of creation, and especially by right of redemption. The promise to Abraham that he should be heir of the world had its fulfilment, and will have it still more fully, in Christ (Rom. 4:13; Gal. 3:16; 4:7). worlds—the inferior and the superior worlds (Col. 1:16). Lit., "ages" with all things and persons belonging to them; the universe, including all space and ages of time, and all material and spiritual existences. The Greek implies, He not only appointed His Son heir of all things before creation, but He also (better than "also He") made by Him the worlds. 3. Who being—by pre-existent and essential being. brightness of his glory—Greek, the effulgence of His glory. "Light of (from) light" [NICENE Creed]. "Who is so senseless as to doubt concerning the eternal being of the Son? For when has one seen light without effulgence?" [ATHANASIUS against ARIUS, Orat. 2]. "The sun is never seen without effulgence, nor the Father without the Son" [THEOPHYLACT]. It is because He is the brightness, etc., and because He upholds, etc., that He sat down on the right hand, etc. It was a return to His divine glory (John 6:62; 17:5; cf. Wisd. 7:25, 26, where similar things are said of wisdom). express image—"impress." But veiled in the flesh. of his person—Greek, "of His substantial essence"; hypostasis. upholding all things—Greek, "the universe." Cf. Colossians 1:15, 17, 20, which enumerates the three facts in the same order as here. by the word—Therefore the Son of God is a Person; for He has the word [BENGEL]. His word is God's word (ch. 11:3). of his power—"The word" is the utterance which comes from His (the Son's) power, and gives expression to it. by himself—omitted in the oldest MSS. purged—Greek, "made purification of . . . sins," viz., in His atonement, which graciously covers the guilt of sin. "Our" is omitted in the oldest MSS. Sin was the great uncleanness in God's sight, of which He has effected the purgation by His sacrifice [ALFORD]. Our nature, as guilt-laden, could not, without our great High Priest's blood of atonement sprinkling the heavenly mercy seat, come into immediate contact with God. sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high—fulfilling Psalm 110:1. This sitting of the Son at God's right hand was by the act of the Father (ch. 8:1; Eph. 1:20); it is never used of His pre-existing state coequal with the Father, but always of His exalted state as Son of man after His sufferings, and as Mediator for man in the presence of God (Rom. 8:34): a relation towards and forms of teaching, with various degrees of clearness, under various shadows, types, and figures, and with various modes of revelation, such as by angels, visions, dreams, mental impressions. See Num. xii. 6, 8. But under the New Testament all is done simply by one Person, i.e., Jesus, who has fulfilled the prophets and completed prophecy. One great object of the apostle is to put the simplicity of the Christian system in opposition to the complex nature of the Mosaic economy: and also to show that what the law could not do because it was weak through the flesh, Jesus has accomplished by the merit of His death and the energy of His Spirit.

2. Last days. The gospel dispensation, called the last days and the "last time" because not to be followed by any other dispensation or the conclusion of the Jewish church and state now at their termination. By his Son. It is very remarkable that the pronoun his is not found in the text; nor is it found in any MS. or version. We should not therefore supply the pronoun as our translators have done; but simply read "by a son" or "in a son." The apostle begins with the lowest state in which Christ has appeared: (1) His being a Son, born of a woman, and made under the law. He then ascends (2) to His being an heir, and an heir of all things. (3) He then describes Him as the Creator of all worlds. (4) As the "brightness" of the divine glory. (5) As "the express image of his person," or "character of the divine substance." (6) As sustaining the immense fabric of the universe, and this "by the word of his power." (7) As having made an atonement for the sin of the world, which was the most stupendous of all His works. (8) As being on the right hand of God, infinitely exalted above all created beings, and the Object of adoration to all the angelic host. (9) As having an eternal throne, neither His person nor His dignity ever changing or decaying. (10) As continuing to exercise dominion when the earth and the heavens are no more!

3. The brightness of his glory. The resplendent outbeaming of the essential glory of God. The express image of his person. "The character or impression of His hypostasis or substance." It is supposed that these words expound the former, image expounding brightness, and person "substance," glory. The hypostasis of God is that which is essential to Him as God; and the "character" or image is that by which all the likeness of the original becomes manifest, and is a perfect facsimile of the whole. It is a metaphor taken from sealing, the die or seal leaving the full impression of its every part on the wax to which it is applied. Upholding all things by the word of his power. This is an astonishing description of the infinitely energetic and all-pervading power of God. He spoke, and all things were created; He speaks, and all things are sustained. The Jewish writers frequently express the perfection of the divine nature by the phrases, "He bears all things, both above and below"; "He carries all His creatures"; "He bears his world"; "He bears all worlds by His power." The Hebrews, to whom this Epistle was written, would, from this and other circumstances, fully understand that the apostle believed Jesus Christ to be truly and properly God.

The right hand of the Majesty on high. As it were associated with the supreme Majesty, in glory everlasting, and in the government of all things in time and in eternity; for the right hand is the place of the greatest eminence, I Kings ii. 19.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 4-14

The apostle now proceeds to show that he is much superior not only to the prophets, but to the angels themselves. Both in nature and office Christ is vastly superior to the angels themselves.

I. The superior nature of Christ is proved from his superior name.

II. The superiority of the name and nature of Christ above the angels is declared in the holy scriptures, and is to be deduced thence. Now here are several passages of scripture cited, in which those things are said of Christ that were never said of the angels.

1. It was said of Christ, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee (Ps. ii. 7). Now this was never said concerning the angels, and therefore by inheritance he has a more excellent nature and name than they.

2. It is said concerning Christ, but never concerning the angels, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son.

W. E. VINE:

PROTOTOKOS, firstborn (from protos, first, and tikto, to beget), is used of Christ as born of the Virgin Mary (Luke 2:7); further, in His relationship to the Father, expressing His priority to, and preeminence over, creation, not in the sense of being the first to be born. It is used occasionally of superiority of position in the O.T.

The five passages in the N.T. relating to Christ may be set forth chronologically thus: (a) Col. 1:15, where His eternal relationship with the Father is in view, and the clause means both that He was the Firstborn before all creation and that He himself produced creation; (b) Col. 1:18 and Rev. 1:5, in reference to His resurrection; (c) Rom. 8:29, His position in relationship to the Church; (d) Heb. 1:6, R.V., His Second Advent (the R.V. "when he again bringeth in," puts "again" in the right place, the contrast to His First Advent, at His birth, being implied).
—Vine's Expository Dictionary

3. It is said of Christ, When God bringeth his First-begotten into the world, let all the angels of God worship him. The proof of this is taken out of Ps. xcvii 7, Worship him, all you gods, "All you that are superior to men, own yourselves to be inferior to Christ in nature and power."

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

God and us about to come to an end when its object has been accomplished (I Cor. 15:28). 4. Being made . . . better—by His exaltation by the Father (vss. 3, 13): in contrast to His being "made lower than the angels" (ch. 2:9). "Better," i.e., superior to. As "being" (vs. 3) expresses His essential being so "being made" (ch. 7:26) marks what He became in His assumed manhood (Phil. 2:6-9). Paul shows that His humbled form (at which the Jews might stumble) is no objection to His divine Messiahship.

by inheritance obtained—He always had the thing itself, viz., Sonship; but He "obtained by inheritance," according to the promise of the Father, the name "Son," whereby He is made known to men and angels. He is "the Son of God" is a sense far exalted above that in which angels are called "sons of God" (Job 1:6; 38:7). "The fulness of the glory of the peculiar name 'the Son of God,' is unattainable by human speech or thought. All appellations are but fragments of its glory—beams united in it as in a central sun. Revelation 19:12. A name that no man knew but He Himself." 5. For—substantiating His having "obtained a more excellent name than the angels." unto which—A frequent argument in this Epistle is derived from the silence of Scripture (vs. 13; ch. 2:16; 7:3, 14) [BENGEL]. this day have I begotten thee—(Ps. 2:7). Fulfilled at the resurrection of Jesus, whereby the Father "declared," i.e., made manifest His divine Sonship, heretofore veiled by His humiliation (Acts 13:33; Rom. 1:4). Christ has a fourfold right to the title "Son of God"; (1) By generation, as begotten of God; (2) By commission, as sent by God; (3) By resurrection, as "the first-begotten of the dead" (cf. Luke 20:36; Rom. 1:4; Rev. 1:5); (4) By actual possession, as heir of all [BISHOP PEARSON]. The Psalm here quoted applied primarily in a less full sense to Solomon, of whom God promised by Nathan to David, "I will be his father and he shall be my son." But as the whole theocracy was of Messianic import, the triumph of David over Hadadezer and neighboring kings (II Sam. 8; Psalm 2:2, 3, 9-12) is a type of God's ultimately subduing all enemies under His Son, whom He sets (Hebrew, "anointed," Ps. 2:6) on His "holy hill of Zion," as King of the Jews and of the whole earth, he antitype to Solomon, son of David. The "I" in Greek is emphatic; I the Everlasting Father have begotten Thee this day, i.e., on this day, the day of Thy being manifested as My Son, "the first-begotten of the dead" (Col. 1:18; Rev. 1:5), when Thou hast ransomed and opened heaven to Thy people. He had been always Son, but now first was manifested as such in His once humbled, now exalted manhood united to His Godhead. ALFORD refers "this day" to the eternal generation of the Son: the day in which the Son was begotten by the Father is an everlasting today: there never was a yesterday or past time to Him, nor a tomorrow or future time: "Nothing there is to come, and nothing past, but an eternal NOW doth ever last" (Prov. 30:4; John 10:30, 38; 16:28; 17:8). The communication of the divine essence in its fulness, involves eternal generation; for the divine essence has no beginning. But the context refers to a definite point of time, viz., that of His having entered on the inheritance (vs. 4). The "bringing the firstbegotten into the world" (vs. 6), is not subsequent, as ALFORD thinks, to vs. 5, but anterior to it (cf. Acts 2:30-35). 6. And—Greek, "But." Not only this proves His superiority, BUT a more decisive proof is Psalm 97:7, which shows that not only at His resurrection, but also in prospect of His being brought into the world (cf. ch. 9:11; 10:5) as man, in His incarnation, nativity (Luke 2:9-14), temptation (Matt. 4:10, 11), resurrection (Matt. 28:2), and future second advent in glory, angels were designed by God to be subject to Him. Cf. I Tim. 3:16, "seen of angels"; God manifesting Messiah as one to be gazed at with adoring love by heavenly intelligences (Eph. 3:10; II Thess. 1:9, 10; I Pet. 3:22). The fullest realization of His Lordship shall be at His second coming (Ps. 97:7; I Cor. 15:24, 25; Phil. 2:9). "Worship Him all ye gods" ("gods," i.e., exalted beings, as angels), refers to God; but it was universally admitted among the Hebrews that God would dwell, in a peculiar sense, in Messiah (so as to be in the Talmud phrase, "capable of being pointed to with the finger"); and so what was said of God was true of, and to be fulfilled in, Messiah. KIMCHI says that Psalms 93-101 contain in them the mystery of Messiah. God ruled the theocracy in and through Him. the world—subject to Christ (ch. 2:5). As "the first-begotten" He has the rights of primogeniture (Rom. 8:29); Col. 1:15, 16, 18). In Deuteronomy 32:43, the LXX has, "Let all the angels of God worship Him," words not now found in the

4. So much better than the angels. Another argument in favor of the divinity of our Lord. The Jews had the highest opinion of the transcendent excellence of angels; they even associate them with God in the creation of the world, and suppose them to be of the privy council of the Most High; and thus they understand Gen. i. 26: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness"; "And the Lord said to the ministering angels that stood before Him, and who were created the second day, Let us make man." By inheritance obtained. The verb signifies generally to "participate, possess, obtain, or acquire." It is not by inheritance that Christ possesses a more excellent name than angels, but as God. He has it naturally and essentially; and, as God manifested in the flesh, He has it in consequence of His humiliation, sufferings, and meritorious death. See Phil. ii. 9.

5. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. These words are quoted from Ps. ii. 7, a psalm that seems to refer only to the Messiah; and they are quoted by Paul, Acts xiii. 33, as referring to the resurrection of Christ. And this application of them is confirmed by the same apostle, Rom. i. 4, as by His resurrection from the dead he was "declared," manifestly proved, "to be the Son of God with power." By His resurrection His innocence was demonstrated, as God could not work a miracle to raise a wicked man from the dead. The words This day have I begotten thee must refer either to His incarnation, when He was miraculously conceived in the womb of the Virgin by the power of the Holy Spirit, or to His resurrection from the dead, when God by this sovereign display of His almighty energy declared Him to be His Son. This most important use of this saying has passed unnoticed by almost every Christian writer which I have seen, and yet it lies here at the foundation of all the apostle's proofs. If Jesus was not thus the Son of God, the whole Christian system is vain and baseless; but His resurrection demonstrates Him to have been the Son of God. He shall be to me a Son. This place, which is quoted from 2 Sam. vii. 14, shows us that the Seed which God promised to David, and who was to sit upon his throne, and whose throne should be established forever, was not Solomon, but Jesus Christ; and indeed He quotes the words so as to intimate that they were so understood by the Jews.

6. And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten. This is not a correct translation of the Greek. "But when He bringeth again, or the second time, the Firstborn into the habitable world." This most manifestly refers to His resurrection, which might be properly considered a second incarnation; for as the human soul, as well as the fullness of the Godhead bodily, dwelt in the man Christ Jesus on and during His incarnation, so when He expired upon the Cross both the Godhead and the human spirit left His dead body; and as on His resurrection these were reunited to His revivified manhood, therefore with the strictest propriety does the apostle say that the Resurrection was a second bringing of Him into the world.

I have translated oikoumene the "habitable world," and this is its proper meaning; and thus it is distinguished from cosmos, which signifies the "globe," independently of its inhabitants, though it often expresses both the inhabited and uninhabited parts. Our Lord's first coming into the world is expressed by this latter word, chap. x. 5: "Wherefore when he cometh into the world" (cosmos), and this simply refers to His being incarnated, that He might be capable of suffering and dying for man. But the word is changed on this second coming, I mean His resurrection, and then oikoumene is used. And why? Because He was now to dwell with man; to send His gospel everywhere to all the inhabitants of the earth. Let all the angels of God worship him. The apostle recurs here to his former assertion, that Jesus is higher than the angels, v. 4. To worship any creature is idolatry. Jesus Christ can be no creature, else the angels who worship Him must be guilty of idolatry, and God the Author of that idolatry, who commanded those angels to worship Christ. There has been some difficulty in ascertaining the place from which the apostle quotes these words;

MATTHEW HENRY

4. God has said concerning Christ, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c., v. 8–12. But of the angels he has only said that he hath made them spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire, v. 7.

(1) What does God say here of the angels? He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. The office of the angels: they are God's ministers, or servants, to do his pleasure. He endows them with light and zeal, readiness and resolution to do his pleasure: they are no more than what God has made them to be.

(2) How much greater things are said of Christ by the Father. Here two passages of scripture are quoted.

[1] One of these is out of Ps. xlv. 5, 7, where God declares of Christ, First, His true and real divinity, Thy throne, O God. And, if God the Father declares him to be so, he must be really and truly so. Secondly, God declares his dignity and dominion, as having a throne, a kingdom, and a sceptre of that kingdom. Thirdly, God declares the eternal duration of the dominion and dignity of Christ: Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. This distinguishes Christ's throne from all earthly thrones, which are tottering, and will at length tumble down; but the throne of Christ shall be as the days of heaven. Fourthly, God declares of Christ the perfect equity of his administration, v. 8. He came righteously to the sceptre, and he uses it in perfect righteousness, v. 9. Christ came to fulfil all righteousness. He came to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin as a hateful as well as hurtful thing. Fifthly, God declares of Christ how he was qualified for the office of Mediator, and how he was installed and confirmed in it (v. 9). Christ has the name Messiah from his being anointed. This anointing of Christ was with the oil of gladness, that joy which was set before him as the reward of his service and sufferings, that crown of glory and gladness which he should wear for ever after the suffering of death. This anointing of Christ was above the anointing of his fellows. All God's other anointed ones had only the Spirit in a certain measure; Christ had the Spirit above measure, without any limitation.

[2] The other passage of scripture is taken out of Ps. cii. 25–27, and is recited in v. 10–12, where the omnipotence of the Lord Jesus Christ is declared as it appears both in creating the world and in changing it. In creating the world (v. 10). His right, as God with the Father, was absolute, resulting from his creating power. This power he had before the beginning of the world, and he exerted it in giving a beginning and being to the world. He not only founded the earth, but the heavens too are the work of his hands, the hosts of heaven, the angels themselves; and therefore he must needs be infinitely superior to them.

In changing the world that he has made, a This world is mutable, all created nature is so; this world has passed through many changes, and shall pass through more (v. 11, 12).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Hebrew. This passage of the LXX may have been in Paul's mind as to the form, but the substance is taken from Psalm 97:7. The type David, in the Psalm 89:27 (quoted in vs. 5), is called "God's firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth"; so the antitypical first-begotten, the son of David, is to be worshipped by all inferior lords, such as angels ("gods," Ps. 97:7); for He is "King of kings and Lord of lords" (Rev. 19:16). In the Greek, "again" is transposed; but this does not oblige us, as ALFORD thinks, to translate, "when He again shall have introduced. . . ." viz., at Christ's second coming; for there is no previous mention of a first bringing in; and "again" is often used in quotations, not to be joined with the verb, but parenthetically ("that I may again quote Scripture"). English Version is correct (cf. Matt. 5:33; Greek, John 12:39). 7. of—The Greek is rather, "In reference TO the angels." spirits—or "winds": Who employeth His angels as the winds, His ministers as the lightnings; or, He maketh His angelic ministers the directing powers of winds and flames, when these latter are required to perform His will. "Commissions them to assume the agency or form of flames for His purposes" [ALFORD]. English Version, "maketh His angels spirits," means, He maketh them of a subtle, incorporeal nature, swift as the wind. So Psalm 18:10, "a cherub . . . the wings of the wind." Verse 14, "ministering spirits," favors English Version here. As "spirits" implies the windlike velocity and subtle nature of the cherubim, so "flame of fire" expresses the burning devotion and intense all-consuming zeal of the adoring seraphim (meaning "burning"), Isaiah 6:1. 8. O God—the Greek has the article to mark emphasis (Ps. 45:6, 7). for ever . . . righteousness—Everlasting duration and righteousness go together (Ps. 45:2; 89:14). a sceptre of righteousness—lit., "a rod of rectitude," or "straightforwardness." The oldest MSS. prefix "and" (cf. Esther 4:11). 9. iniquity—"unrighteousness." Some oldest MSS. read, "lawlessness." therefore—because God loves righteousness and hates iniquity. God . . . thy God—JEROME, AUGUSTINE, and others translate Psalm 45:7, "O God, Thy God, hath anointed thee," whereby Christ is addressed as God. This is probably the true translation of the Hebrew there, and also of the Greek of Hebrews here; for it is likely the Son is addressed, "O God," as in vs. 8. The anointing here meant is not that at His baptism, when He solemnly entered on His ministry for us; but that with the "oil of gladness," or "exulting joy" (which denotes a triumph, and follows as the consequence of His manifested love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity), wherewith, after His triumphant completion of His work, He has been anointed by the Father above His fellows (not only above us, His fellow men, the adopted members of God's family, whom "He is not ashamed to call His brethren," but above the angels, fellow partakers in part with Him, though infinitely His inferiors, in the glories, holiness, and joys of heaven; "sons of God," and angel "messengers," though subordinate to the divine Angel—"Messenger of the covenant"). Thus He is antitype to Solomon, "chosen of all David's many sons to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel," even as His father David was chosen before all the house of his father's sons. The image is drawn from the custom of anointing guests at feasts (Ps. 23:5); or rather of anointing kings: not until His ascension did He assume the kingdom as Son of man. A fuller accomplishment is yet to be, when He shall be VISIBLY the anointed King over the whole earth (set by the Father) on His holy hill of Zion, Psalm 2:6, 8.

10. And—In another passage (Ps. 102:25-27) He says. in the beginning—English Version, Psalm 102:25, "of old": Hebrew, "before," "aforetime." LXX, "in the beginning" (as in Gen. 1:1) answers by contrast to the end implied in "They shall perish. . . ." The Greek order here (not in the LXX) is, "Thou in the beginning, O Lord," which throws the "Lord" into emphasis. "Christ is preached even in passages where many might contend that the Father was principally intended" [BENGEL]. laid the foundation of—"firmly founded" is included in the idea of the Greek. heavens—plural: not merely one, but manifold, and including various orders of heavenly intelligences (Eph. 4:10). works of thine hands—the heavens, as a woven veil or curtain spread out. 11. They—The earth and the heavens in their present state and form "shall perish" (ch. 12:26, 27; II Pet. 3:13). "Perish" does not mean annihilation; just as it did not mean so in the case of "the world that being overflowed with water, perished" under Noah (II Pet. 3:6). The covenant of the possession of the earth was renewed some suppose Ps. xcvii. 7: "Worship him, all ye gods"; which the Septuagint translates thus: "Worship him, all ye his angels." But it is not clear that the Messiah is intended in this psalm, nor are the words precisely those used here by the apostle. Our marginal references send us with great propriety to the Septuagint version of Deut. xxxii. 43, where the passage is found verbatim; but there is nothing answering to the words in the present Hebrew text. In Romans iii there is a large quotation from Psalms xiv, where there are six whole verses in the apostle's quotation which are not found in the present Hebrew text, but are preserved in the Septuagint! How strange it is that this venerable and important version, so often quoted by our Lord and all His apostles, should be so generally neglected, and so little known!

7. Who maketh his angels spirits. They are so far from being superior to Christ that they are not called God's sons in any peculiar sense, but His "servants," as tempests and lightenings are. It is very likely that the apostle refers here to the opinions of the Jews relative to the angels. In Pirkey R. Elieser, c. 4, it is said: "The angels which were created the second day, when they minister before God, become fire."

8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. If this be said of the Son of God, i.e., Jesus Christ, then Jesus Christ must be God; and indeed the design of the apostle is to prove this. The words here quoted are taken from Ps. xlv. 6-7, which the most intelligent rabbins refer to the Messiah. A sceptre of righteousness. The sceptre, which was a sort of staff or instrument of various forms, was the ensign of government, and is here used for government itself. This the ancient Jewish writers understand also of the Messiah.

9. Thou hast loved righteousness. This is the characteristic of a just governor: he abhors and suppresses iniquity; he countenances and supports righteousness and truth. Therefore God, even thy God. The original may be thus translated: "Therefore, O God, Thy God hath anointed Thee." The form of speech is nearly the same with that in the preceding verse. With the oil of gladness. We have often had occasion to remark that, anciently, kings, priests, and prophets were consecrated to their several offices by anointing; and that this signified the gifts and influences of the divine Spirit. Christ signifies "The Anointed One," the same as the Hebrew Messias, and He is here said to be anointed with the oil of gladness above His fellows. None was ever constituted prophet, priest, and king but himself. Thus He is infinitely exalted "beyond His fellows"—all that had ever borne the regal, prophetic, or sacerdotal offices. Gladness is used to express the festivities which took place on the inauguration of kings.

10. And, Thou, Lord. This is an address to the Son as the Creator, see v. 2; for this is implied in laying the foundation of the earth. The heavens, which are the work of His hands, point out His infinite wisdom and skill.

11. They shall perish. Permanently fixed as they seem to be, a time shall come when they shall be dissolved, and afterward new heavens and a new earth be formed, in which righteousness alone shall dwell. See 2 Pet. iii. 10-13.

MATTHEW HENRY

Not only men and beasts and trees grow old, but this world itself grows old, and is hastening to its dissolution; it changes like a garment, has lost much of its beauty and strength. It bears the symptoms of a dying world. But then its dissolution will not be its utter destruction, but its change. Christ will fold up this world as a garment not to be abused any longer. Sin has made a great change in the world for the worse, and Christ will make a great change in it for the better. b Christ is immutable. Thus the Father testifies of him, Thou remainest, thy years shall not fail. Christ is the same in himself, and the same to his people in all the changes of time. Christ is immutable and immortal: his years shall not fail. Christ lives to take care of us while we live, and of ours when we are gone.

III. The superiority of Christ to the angels appears in this that God never said to the angels what he has said to Christ, v. 13, 14.

1. What has God said to Christ? He has said, "Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thy enemies thy footstool, Ps. cx. 1. Christ Jesus has his enemies, enemies even among men. Let us not think it strange then if we have our enemies. Christ never did anything to make men his enemies; he has done a great deal to make them all his friends and his Father's friends, and yet he has his enemies. All the enemies of Christ shall be made his footstool. God the Father has undertaken for this, and, though it be not done presently, it shall certainly be done. Christ shall go on to rule and reign till this be done; he shall not leave any of his great designs unfinished. And it becomes his people to go on in their duty, till he make them conquerors over all their spiritual enemies.

2. What has God said to the angels? They are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for those who shall be the heirs of salvation. (1) What the angels are as to their nature: they are spirits. (2) What the angels are as to their office: they are ministering spirits. They are the ministers of divine Providence. The angels are sent forth for this end—to minister to those who shall be the heirs of salvation. The description given of the saints—they are heirs of salvation; at present they are under age, heirs, not inheritors. They are heirs because they are children of God. The dignity and privilege of the saints—the angels are sent forth to minister for them. Bless God for the ministration of angels.

with Noah and his seed on the renovated earth. So it shall be after the perishing by fire (II Pet. 3:12, 13). remainest—through (so the Greek) all changes. as . . . a garment—(Isa. 51:6). 12. vesture—Greek, "an enwrapping cloak." fold them up—So the LXX, Psalm 102:26; but the Hebrew, "change them." The Spirit, by Paul, treats the Hebrew of the Old Testament, with independence of handling, presenting the divine truth in various aspects; sometimes as here sanctioning the LXX (cf. Isa. 34:4; Rev. 6:14); sometimes the Hebrew; sometimes varying from both. changed—as one lays aside a garment to put on another. thou art the same—(Isa. 46:4; Mal. 3:6). The same in nature, therefore in covenant faithfulness to Thy people. shall not fail—Hebrew, "shall not end." Israel, in the Babylonian captivity, in Psalm 102, casts her hopes of deliverance on Messiah, the unchanging covenant God of Israel. 13. Quotation from Psalm 110:1. The image is taken from the custom of conquerors putting the feet on the necks of the conquered (Josh. 10:24, 25).

14. ministering spirits—referring to vs. 7, "spirits . . . ministers." They are incorporeal spirits, as God is, but ministering to Him as inferiors. sent forth—present participle: "being sent forth "continually, as their regular service in all ages. to minister—Greek, "unto (i.e., 'for') ministry." for them—Greek, "on account of the." Angels are sent forth on ministrations to God and Christ, not primarily to men, though for the good of "those who are about to inherit salvation" (so the Greek): the elect, who believe, or shall believe, for whom all things, angels included, work together for good (Rom. 8:28). Angels' ministrations are not properly rendered to men, since the latter have no power of commanding them, though their ministrations to God are often directed to the good of men. So the superiority of the Son of God to angels is shown. They "all," how ever various their ranks, "minister"; He is ministered to. They "stand" (Luke 1:19) before God, or are "sent forth" to execute the divine commands on behalf of them whom He pleases to save; He "sits on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (vss. 3, 13). He rules; they serve.

ADAM CLARKE

Shall wax old as doth a garment. As a garment by long using becomes unfit to be longer used, so shall all visible things; they shall wear old, and wear out, and hence the necessity of their being renewed. It is remarkable that our word "world" is a contraction of "wear old," a term by which our ancestors expressed the sentiment contained in this verse. That the word was thus compounded and that it had this sense in our language may be proved from the most competent and indisputable witnesses. It was formerly written "weorold."

12. And they shall be changed. Not destroyed ultimately or annihilated. They shall be changed and renewed. But thou art the same. These words can be said of no being but God; all others are changeable or perishable, because temporal; only that which is eternal can continue essentially and, speaking after the manner of men, formally the same. Thy years shall not fail. There is in the divine duration no circle to be run, no space to be measured, no time to be reckoned. All is eternity—infinite—and onward.

13. But to which of the angels? We have already seen, from the opinions and concessions of the Jews, that if Jesus Christ could be proved to be greater than the angels, it would necessarily follow that He was God: and this the apostle does most amply prove by these various quotations from their own Scriptures; for he shows that while He is the supreme and absolute Sovereign, they are no more than His messengers and servants.

14. Are they not all ministering spirits? That is, "They are all ministering spirits"; for the Hebrews often express the strongest affirmative by an interrogation.

CHAPTER 2

Verses 1–4

He now comes to apply this doctrine both by way of exhortation and argument.

I. By way of exhortation, v. 1. It is the great concern of everyone under the gospel to give the most earnest heed to all gospel discoveries and directions. We must embrace them in our hearts and affections, retain them in our memories, and finally regulate our words and actions according to them.

II. He adds strong motives to enforce the exhortation.

1. From the great loss we shall sustain if we do not take this earnest heed to the things which we have heard: We shall let them slip. Our minds and memories are like a leaky vessel, they do not without much care retain what is poured into them. Those meet with an inconceivable loss who let gospel truths slip out of their minds. All is lost, if the gospel be lost. If we do not well attend, we shall not long retain the word of God; inattentive hearers will soon be forgetful hearers.

2. Another argument is taken from the dreadful punishment we shall incur if we do not do this duty, v. 2, 3. (1) How the law is described: it was the word spoken by angels, and declared to be steadfast. It is like the promise, yea and amen; it is truth and faithfulness, and it will abide and have its force whether men obey it or no; for every transgression and disobedience will receive a just recompence of reward. If men trifle with the law of God, the law will not trifle with them. Punishments are as just, and as much due to sin as rewards are to obedience. (2) How the gospel is described. It is salvation, a great salvation, so great that none can fully express, no, nor yet conceive, how great it is. It shows how we may be saved from so great sin and so great misery, and be restored to so great holiness and so great happiness. (3) How sinning against the gospel is described: it is declared to be a neglect of this great salvation; it is a contempt put upon the saving grace of God in Christ, making light of it, not caring for it. Let us all take heed that we be not found among those wicked wretched sinners who neglect the grace of the gospel. (4) How the misery of such sinners is described: it is declared to be unavoidable (v. 3): How

Vss. 1-18. DANGER OF NEGLECTING SO GREAT SALVATION, FIRST SPOKEN BY CHRIST; TO WHOM, NOT TO ANGELS, THE NEW DISPENSATION WAS SUBJECTED; THOUGH HE WAS FOR A TIME HUMBLED BELOW THE ANGELS: THIS HUMILIATION TOOK PLACE BY DIVINE NECESSITY FOR OUR SALVATION. 1. Therefore—Because Christ the Mediator of the new covenant is so far (ch. 1) above all angels, the mediators of the old covenant. the more earnest—Greek, "the more abundantly." heard—spoken by God (ch. 1:1); and by the Lord (vs. 3). let them slip—lit., "flow past them" (ch. 4:1). 2. (Cf. vs. 3.) Argument a fortiori. spoken by angels—the Mosaic law spoken by the ministration of angels (Deut. 33:2; Ps. 68:17; Acts 7:53; Gal. 3:19). When it is said, Exodus 20:1, "God spake," it is meant He spake by angels as His mouthpiece, or at least angels repeating in unison with His voice the words of the Decalogue; whereas the Gospel was first spoken by the Lord alone. was steadfast—Greek, "was made steadfast," or "confirmed": was enforced by penalties on those violating it. transgression—by doing evil; lit., overstepping its bounds: a positive violation of it. disobedience—by neglecting to do good: a negative violation of it. recompense—(Deut. 32:35). 3. we—who have received the message of salvation so clearly delivered to us (cf. ch. 12:25). so great salvation—embodied in Jesus, whose very name means "salvation," including not only deliverance from foes and from death, and the grant of temporal blessings (which the law promised to the obedient), but also grace of the Spirit, forgiveness of sins, and the promise of heaven, glory, and eternal life (vs. 10). which—"inasmuch as it is a salvation which began. . . ." spoken by the Lord—as the instrument of proclaiming it. Not as the law, spoken by the instrumentality of angels (vs. 2). Both law and Gospel came from God; the difference here referred to lay in the instrumentality by which each respectively was promulgated (cf. vs. 5). Angels recognize Him as "the Lord" (Matt. 28:6; Luke 2:11). confirmed unto us—not by penalties, as the law was confirmed, but by spiritual gifts (vs. 4). by them that heard him—(Cf. Luke 1:2).

1. Therefore. Because God has spoken to us by His Son, and because that Son is so great and glorious a Personage, and because the subject which is addressed to us is of such infinite importance to our welfare. We ought to give the more earnest heed. We should hear the doctrine of Christ with care, candor, and deep concern. Lest at any time we should let them slip. "Lest at any time we should leak out." Superficial hearers lose the benefit of the word preached as the unseasoned vessel does its fluid; nor can anyone hear to the saving of his soul unless he give "most earnest heed."

2. If the word spoken by angels. The law (according to some), which was delivered by the mediation of angels, God frequently employing these to communicate His will to men. See Acts vii. 53 and Gal. iii. 19. But the apostle probably means those particular messages which God sent by angels, as in the case of Lot, Gen. xix, and suchlike. Was stedfast. Was so confirmed by the divine authority and so strict that it would not tolerate any offense, but inflicted punishment on every act of transgression, every case in which the bounds laid down by the law were "passed over," and every act of disobedience in respect to the duties enjoined. Received a just recompence. That kind and degree of punishment which the law prescribed for those who broke it.

3. How shall we escape? If they who had fewer privileges than we have, to whom God spoke in divers manners by angels and prophets, fell under the displeasure of their Maker and were often punished with a sore destruction, how shall we escape wrath to the uttermost if we neglect the salvation provided for us and proclaimed to us by the Son of God? Those who neglect it are not only they who oppose or persecute it, but they who pay no regard to it. Which at the first began to be spoken. Though John the Baptist went before our Lord to prepare His way, yet he could not be properly said to preach shall we escape? The despoilers of this salvation are condemned already, under arrest and in the hands of justice already. There is no escaping out of this condemned state, but by accepting the great salvation discovered in the gospel; as for those who neglect it, the wrath of God is upon them, and it abides upon them. There is no door of mercy left open for them; there will be no more sacrifice for sin.

3. Another argument to enforce the exhortation is taken from the person by whom the gospel began to be spoken (v. 3): that is, the Lord Jesus Christ. Now surely it may be expected that all will reverence this Lord, and take heed to a gospel that began to be spoken by one who spoke so as never man spoke.

4. Another argument is taken from the character of those who were witnesses to Christ and the gospel (v. 3, 4). (1) The promulgation of the gospel was continued and confirmed by the evangelists and apostles, who were eye and ear-witnesses of what Jesus Christ began both to do and to teach, Acts i. 1. These witnesses could have no worldly end to serve hereby. They exposed themselves by their testimony to the loss of all that was dear to them in this life, and many of them sealed it with their blood. (2) God himself bore witness to those who were witnesses for Christ. He bore them witness by signs, and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his will. It was the will of God that we should have sure footing for our faith, and a strong foundation for our hope in receiving the gospel. As at the giving forth of the law there were signs and wonders, so he witnesses to the gospel by more and greater miracles, as to a more excellent and abiding dispensation.

Verses 5–9

For to the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

I. Here the apostle lays down a negative proposition, including a positive one—That the state of the gospel-church, which is here called the world to come, is not subjected to the angels. This new world is committed to Christ, and put in absolute subjection to him only. His angels were too weak for such a charge.

II. A scripture-account of that blessed Jesus. It is taken from Ps. viii. 4–6. These words are to be considered both as applicable to mankind in general, and as applied here to the Lord Jesus Christ.

1. As applicable to mankind in general, an affectionate thankful expostulation with the great God concerning his kindness to the sons of men. (1) In remembering them, or being mindful of them. God is always mindful of us, let us never be forgetful of him. (2) In visiting them. He comes to see us, how it is with us; and by his visitation our spirit is preserved. (3) In making man the head of all the creatures in this lower world. (4) In crowning him with glory and honour, the honour of having noble powers and faculties. (5) In giving him dominion over the inferior creatures.

4. them—rather, "God also [as well as Christ, vs. 3] bearing witness to it" . . . "joining in attestation of it." signs and wonders—performed by Christ and His apostles. "Signs" and miracles, or other facts regarded as proofs of a divine mission; "wonders" are miracles viewed as prodigies, causing astonishment (Acts 2:22, 33); "powers" are miracles viewed as evidences of superhuman power. divers miracles—Greek, "varied (miraculous) powers" (II Cor. 12:12) granted to the apostles after the ascension. gifts . . .—Greek, "distributions." The gift of the Holy Spirit was given to Christ without measure (John 3:34), but to us it is distributed in various measures and operations (Rom. 12:3, 6, etc.; I Cor. 12:4-11). according to his own will—God's free and sovereign will, assigning one gift of the Spirit to one, another to another (Acts 5:32; Eph. 1:5). 5. For—confirming the assertion, vss. 2, 3, that the new covenant was spoken by One higher than the mediators of the old covenant, viz., angels. Translate in the Greek order, to bring out the proper emphasis, "Not the angels hath He. . . . the world to come—implying, He has subjected to angels the existing world, the Old Testament dispensation (then still partly existing as to its framework), vs. 2, the political kingdom of the earth (Dan. 4:13; 10:13, 20, 21; 12:1), and the natural elements (Rev. 9:11; 16:4), and even individuals (Matt. 18:10). "The world to come" is the new dispensation brought in by Christ, beginning in grace here, to be completed in glory hereafter. It is called "to come," or "about to be," as at the time of its being subjected to Christ by the divine decree, it was as yet a thing of the future, and is still so to us, in respect to its full consummation. In respect to the subjecting of all things to Christ in fulfilment of Psalm 8, the realization is still "to come." Regarded from the Old Testament standpoint, which looks prophetically forward to the New Testament (and the Jewish priesthood and Old Testament ritual were in force then when Paul wrote, and continued till their forcible abrogation by the destruction of Jerusalem), it is "the world to come"; Paul, as addressing Jews, appropriately calls it so, according to their conventional way of viewing it. We, like them, still pray, "Thy kingdom come"; for its manifestation in glory is yet future. "This world" is used in contrast to express the present fallen condition of the world (Eph. 2:2). Believers belong not to this present world-course, but by faith rise in spirit to "the world to come," making it a present, though internal, reality. 6. But—It is not to angels the Gospel kingdom is subject, BUT. . . . one. . . testified—the usual way of quoting Scripture to readers familiar with it. Psalm 8:5-7 praises Jehovah for exalting MAN, so as to subject all the works of God on earth to him: this dignity having been lost by the first Adam, is realized only in Christ the Son of man, the Representative Man and Head of our redeemed race. Thus Paul proves that it is to MAN, not to angels, that God has subjected the "world to come." In vss. 6-8, MAN is spoken of in general ("him . . . him . . . his"); then at vs. 9, first JESUS is introduced as fulfilling, as man, all the conditions of the prophecy, and passing through death Himself; and so consequently bringing us men, His "brethren," to "glory and honor." What . . .—How insignificant in himself, yet how exalted by God's grace! (Cf. Ps. 144:3). The Hebrew, Enosh and Ben-Adam, express "man" and "Son of man" in his weakness: "Son of man" is here used of any and every child of man: unlike, seemingly, the lord of creation, such as he was originally (Gen. 1 and 2), and such as he is designed to be (Ps. 8), and such as he actually is by title and shall hereafter more fully be in the person of, and in union with, Jesus, pre-eminently the Son of man (vs. 9). art mindful—as of one absent. visitest—lookest after him, as one present. 7. a little—not as BENGEL, "a little time." than the angels—Hebrew, "than God," Elohim, i.e., the abstract qualities of God, such as angels possess in an inferior form; viz., heavenly, spiritual, incorporeal natures. Man, in his original creation, was set next beneath them. So the man Jesus, though Lord of angels, when He emptied Himself of the externals of His Divinity (Note, Phil. 2:6, 7), was in His human nature "a little lower than the angels"; though this is not the primary reference here, but man in general. crownedst him with glory and honour—as the appointed kingly vicegerent of God over this earth (Gen. 1 and 2). and didst set him over the works of thy hands—omitted in some of the oldest MSS.; but read by others and by oldest versions: so Psalm 8:6, "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands." 8. (I Cor. 15:27.) For in that—i.e., "For in that" God saith in the 8th Psalm, "He put the all the gospel; and even Christ's preaching was only a beginning of the great proclamation. It was His own Spirit in the apostles and evangelists, the men who heard Him preach, that opened the whole mystery of the kingdom of Heaven.

4. God also bearing them witness. He did not leave the confirmation of these great truths to the testimony of men; He bore His own testimony to them by signs, wonders, various miracles, and "distributions of the Holy Ghost." And all these were proved to come from himself; for no man could do those miracles at his own pleasure, but the power to work them was given according to God's own will; or rather, God himself wrought them, in order to accredit the ministry of His servants.

5. The world to come. That the world to come meant the "days of the Messiah" among the Jews is most evident, and has been often pointed out in the course of these notes.

6. But one in a certain place. This one is David; and the certain place, Ps. viii. 4-6. But why does the apostle use this indeterminate mode of quotation? Because it was common thus to express the testimony of any of the inspired writers. So Philo. Thus even the heathens were accustomed to quote high authorities; so Plato. The mode of quotation therefore implies, not ignorance, but reverence. What is man? This quotation is verbatim from the Septuagint; the Greek is not so emphatic as the Hebrew: "What is miserable man, that thou rememberest him? and the son of Adam, that thou visitest him?"

7. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels. If this be spoken of man as he came out of the hands of his Maker, it places him at the head of all God's works; for literally translated it is: "Thou hast made him less than God." And this is proved by his being made in the image and likeness of God, which is spoken of no other creature either in heaven or on earth. If we take the words as referring to Jesus Christ, then they must be understood as pointing out the time of His humiliation, as in v. 9; and the little lower in both verses must mean "for a short time" or "a little while." And indeed the whole of the passage suits Him better than it does any of the children of men; for it is only under the feet of Jesus that all things are put in subjection, and it was in consequence of His humiliation that He had "a name . . . above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth," Phil. ii. 9-11. Thou crownedst him with glory and honour. This was strictly true of Adam in his state of innocence, for he was set over all things in this lower world; "all sheep and oxen . . . the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas," Ps. viii. 7-8. So far all this perfectly applies to Adam; but it is evident the apostle takes all in a much higher sense, that of universal dominion; and hence he says, He "left nothing that is not put under him." These verses, collated with the above passage from the Epistle to the Philippians, mutually illustrate each other. And the crowning Christ with glory and honor must refer to His exaltation after His resurrection, in which, as the victorious Messiah, He had all power given to Him in heaven and earth. And although we do not yet see all things put under Him, for evil men and evil spirits are only under the subjection of control, yet we look forward to that time when the whole world shall be bowed to His sway, and when the stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall become great and fill the whole earth.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. As applied to the Lord Jesus Christ, v. 8, 9. The moving cause of all the kindness God shows to men is the grace of God. The fruits of this free grace of God is that God crowned the human nature of Christ with glory and honour, in his being perfectly holy; that by his sufferings he might make satisfaction, tasting death for every man. As a reward of his humiliation in suffering death, he was crowned with glory and honour.

Verses 10–13

The apostle here proceeds to remove the scandal of the cross.

I. It became God that Christ should suffer, v. 10.

1. God is described as the final end and first cause of all things, and as such it became him to secure his own glory in all that he did.

2. He is declared to have acted up to this glorious character in the work of redemption.

(1) In the choice of the end; and that was to bring many sons to glory. We must be the sons of God both by adoption and regeneration, before we can be brought to the glory of heaven. Though the sons of God are but a few in one place and at one time, yet when they shall be all brought together it will appear that they are many.

(2) In the choice of the means. In finding out such a person as should be the captain of our salvation. In making this captain of our salvation perfect through sufferings. He perfected the work of our redemption by shedding his blood. He found his way to the crown by the cross, and so must his people too.

II. How much they should be benefited by the cross and sufferings of Christ. Hereby they are brought into a near union with Christ, and into a very endearing relation.

1. Into a near union (v. 11). Christ, who is the things (so the Greek, the all things just mentioned) in subjection under him (man), He left nothing. . . . As no limitation occurs in the sacred writing, the "all things" must include heavenly, as well as earthly things (cf. I Cor. 3:21, 22). But now—As things now are, we see not yet the all things put under man. 9. But—We see not man as yet exercising lordship over all things, "but rather, Him who was made a little lower than the angels (cf. Luke 22: 43), we behold (by faith: a different Greek verb from that for 'we see,' vs. 8, which expresses the impression which our eyes passively receive from objects around us; whereas, 'we behold,' or 'look at,' implies the direction and intention of one deliberately regarding something which he tries to see: so ch. 3:19; 10:25, Greek), viz., Jesus, on account of His suffering of death, crowned. . . ." He is already crowned, though unseen by us, save by faith; hereafter all things shall be subjected to Him visibly and fully. The ground of His exaltation is "on account of His having suffered death" (vs. 10; Phil. 2:8, 9). that he by the grace of God—(Titus 2:11; 3:4). The reading of ORIGEN, "That He without God" (laying aside His Divinity; or, for every being save God; or perhaps alluding to His having been temporarily "forsaken," as the Sin-bearer, by the Father on the cross), is not supported by the MSS. The "that . . ." is connected with "crowned with glory . . ." thus: His exaltation after sufferings is the perfecting or consummation of His work (vs. 10) for us: without it His death would have been ineffectual; with it, and from it, flows the result that His tasting of death is available for (in behalf of, for the good of) every man. He is crowned as the Head in heaven of our common humanity, presenting His blood as the all-prevailing plea for us. This coronation above makes His death applicable for every individual man (observe the singular; not merely "for all men"), ch. 4:14; 9:24; I John 2:2. "Taste death," implies His personal experimental undergoing of death: death of the body, and death (spiritually) of the soul, in His being forsaken of the Father. 10. For—giving a reason why "the grace of God" required that Jesus "should taste death." it became him—The whole plan was [not only not derogatory to, but] highly becoming God, though unbelief considers it a disgrace [BENGEL]. An answer to the Jews, and Hebrew Christians, whosoever, through impatience at the delay in the promised advent of Christ's glory, were in danger of apostasy, stumbling at Christ crucified. The Jerusalem Christians especially were liable to this danger. This scheme of redemption was altogether such a one as harmonizes with the love, justice, and wisdom of God. for whom—God the Father (Rom. 11:36; I Cor. 8:6; Rev. 4:11). In Colossians 1:16 the same is said of Christ. all things—Greek, "the universe of things," "the all things." He uses for "God," the periphrasis, "Him for whom . . . by whom are all things," to mark the becomingness of Christ's suffering as the way to His being "perfected" as "Captain of our salvation," seeing that His is the way that pleased Him whose will and whose glory are the end of all things, and by whose operation all things exist. in bringing—The Greek is past, "having brought as He did," viz., in His electing purpose (cf. "ye are sons," viz., in His purpose, Gal. 4:6; Eph. 1:4), a purpose which is accomplished in Jesus being "perfected through sufferings." many—(Matt. 20:28)." The Church" (vs. 12), "the general assembly" (ch. 12:23). sons—no longer children as under the Old Testament law, but sons by adoption. unto glory—to share Christ's "glory" (vs. 9; cf. 7; John 17:10, 22, 24; Rom. 8: 21). Sonship, holiness (vs. 11), and glory, are inseparably joined. "Suffering," "salvation," and "glory," in Paul's writings, often go together (II Tim. 2:10). Salvation presupposes destruction, deliverance from which for us required Christ's "sufferings." to make . . . perfect—"to consummate"; to bring to consummated glory through sufferings, as the appointed avenue to it. "He who suffers for another, not only benefits him, but becomes himself the brighter and more perfect" [CHRYSOSTOM]. Bringing to the end of troubles, and to the goal full of glory: a metaphor from the contests in the public games. captain of . . .—lit., Prince-leader: as Joshua, not Moses, led the people into the Holy Land, so will our Joshua, or Jesus, lead us into the heavenly inheritance (Acts 13:39). The same Greek is in ch. 12:2, "Author of our faith." Acts 3:15, "Prince of life" (5:31). Preceding others by His example, as well as the originator of our salvation. 11. he that sanctifieth—Christ who once for all consecrates His people to God (Jude 1, bringing them nigh to Him as the consequence) and everlasting glory, by having

9. Should taste death for every man. It was a custom in ancient times to take off criminals by making them drink a cup of poison. Socrates was adjudged to drink a cup of the juice of hemlock by order of the Athenian magistrates. The reference in the text seems to point out the whole human race as being accused, tried, found guilty, and condemned, each having his own poisoned cup to drink; and Jesus, the wonderful Jesus, takes the cup out of the hand of each, and cheerfully and with alacrity drinks off the dregs! Thus having drunk every man's poisoned cup, He tasted that death which they must have endured had not their cup been drunk by Another. Is not this the cup to which He refers, Matt. xxvi. 39: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me"? But without His drinking it, the salvation of the world would have been impossible; and therefore He cheerfully drank it in the place of every human soul and thus made atonement for the sin of the whole world; and this He did by the grace, mercy, or infinite goodness of God.

10. For it became him. It was suitable to the divine wisdom, the requisitions of justice, and the economy of grace to offer Jesus as a Sacrifice, in order to bring many sons and daughters to glory. For whom . . . and by whom. God is the Cause of all things, and He is the Object or End of them.

Perfect through sufferings. Without suffering He could not have died, and without dying He could not have made an atonement for sin. The sacrifice must be "consummated," in order that He might be qualified to be the captain or Author of the salvation of men, and lead all those who become children of God, through faith in Him, into eternal glory. I believe this to be the sense of the passage; and it appears to be an answer to the grand objection of the Jews: "The Messiah is never to be conquered, or die; but will be victorious, and endure forever."

11. For both he that sanctifieth. The word does not merely signify one who sanctifies or makes holy, but one who makes atonement or reconciliation to God; and answers to the Heagent in this work of sanctification, and Christians, are all of one. They are all of one heavenly Father. They are of one earthly father, Adam. Christ and believers have the same human nature. They are of one spirit, the same mind is in them that was in Christ.

2. Into an endearing relation.

(1) He declares what this relation is: he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Christ and believers are brethren in what is heavenly as well as in what is earthly. He will never be ashamed of any who are not ashamed of him, and who take care not to be a shame and reproach to him and to themselves.

(2) He illustrates this from three texts of scripture.

[1] The first is out of Ps. xxii. 22. Christ should have a church or congregation in the world, a company of volunteers, freely willing to follow him. These should not only be brethren to one another, but to Christ himself. He would declare his Father's name to them.

[2] The second scripture is quoted from Ps. xviii. 2. His brethren must suffer and trust too.

[3] The third scripture is taken from Isa. viii. 18. Christ's children were given him of the Father. And they are given to Christ at their conversion. Christ receives them, rejoices in them, takes them up to heaven, and there presents them to his Father.

Verses 14–18

The reasons and designs of the incarnation of Christ are declared.

1. For no higher nor lower nature than man's that had sinned could so suffer for the sin of man as to satisfy the justice of God, and raise man up to a state of hope.

consecrated Himself for them in His being made "perfect (as their expiatory sacrifice) through sufferings" (vs. 10; ch. 10:10, 14, 29; John 17:17, 19). they who are sanctified—Greek, "they that are being sanctified" (cf. the use of "sanctified," I Cor. 7:14). of one—Father, God: not in the sense wherein He is Father of all beings, as angels; for these are excluded by the argument (vs. 16); but as He is Father of His spiritual human sons, Christ the Head and elder Brother, and His believing people, the members of the body and family. Thus, this and the following verses are meant to justify his having said, "many sons" (vs. 10). he is not ashamed—though being the Son of God, since they have now by adoption obtained a like dignity, so that His majesty is not compromised by brotherhood with them (cf. ch. 11:16). It is a striking feature in Christianity that it unites such amazing contrasts as "our brother and our God" [THOLUCK]. "God makes of sons of men sons of God, because God hath made of the Son of God the Son of man" [ST. AUGUSTINE on Psalm 2]. 12. (Psalm 22:22). Messiah declares the name of the Father, not known fully as Christ's Father, and therefore their Father, till after His crucifixion (John 20:17), among His brethren ("the Church," i.e., the congregation), that they in turn may praise Him (Ps. 22:23). At vs. 22, the 22d Psalm, which begins with Christ's cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" and details minutely His sorrows, passes from Christ's sufferings to His triumph, prefigured by the same in the experience of David. will I sing—as leader of the choir (Ps. 8:2). 13. I will put my trust in him—from the LXX, Isaiah 8:17, which immediately precedes the next quotation, "Behold, I and the children. . . ." The only objection is the following words, "and again," usually introduce a new quotation, whereas these two are parts of one and the same passage. However, this objection is not valid, as the two clauses express distinct ideas; "I will put my trust in Him" expresses His filial confidence in God as His Father, to whom He flees from His sufferings, and is not disappointed; which His believing brethren imitate, trusting solely in the Father through Christ, and not in their own merits. Behold I and the children . . .—(Isa. 8:18). "Sons" (vs. 10), "brethren" (vs. 12), and "children," imply His right and property in them from everlasting. He speaks of them as "children" of God, though not yet in being, yet considered as such in His purpose, and presents them before God the Father, who has given Him them, to be glorified with Himself. Isaiah (meaning "salvation of Jehovah") typically represented Messiah, who is at once Father and Son, Isaiah and Immanuel (Isa. 9:6). He expresses his resolve to rely, he and his children, not like Ahaz and the Jews on the Assyrian king, against the confederacy of Pekah of Israel, and Rezin of Syria, but on Jehovah; and then foretells the deliverance of Judah by God, in language which finds its antitypical full realization only in the far greater deliverance wrought by Messiah. Christ, the antitypical Prophet, similarly, instead of the human confidences of His age, Himself, and with Him GOD THE FATHER'S children (who are therefore His children, and so antitypical to Isaiah's children, though here regarded as His "brethren," cf. Isaiah 9:6; "Father" and "His seed," 53:10) led by Him, trust wholly in God for salvation.

14. He who has thus been shown to be the "Captain (Greek, 'Leader') of salvation" to the "many sons," by trusting and suffering like them, must therefore become man like them, in order that His death may be efficacious for them [ALFORD]. the children—before mentioned (vs. 13); those existing in His eternal purpose, though not in actual being. are partakers of—lit., "have [in His purpose] been partakers" all in common. flesh and blood—Greek oldest MSS. have "blood and flesh." The inner and more important element, the blood, as the more immediate vehicle of the soul, stands before the more palpable element, the flesh; also, with reference to Christ's blood-shedding with a view to which He entered into community with our corporeal life. "The life of the flesh is in the blood; it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. 17:11, 14). also—Greek, "in a somewhat similar manner"; not altogether in a like manner. For He, unlike them, was conceived and born not in sin (ch. 4:15). But mainly "in like manner"; not in mere semblance of a body, as the Docetæ heretics taught. took part of—participated in. The forfeited inheritance (according to Jewish law) was ransomed by the nearest of kin; so Jesus became our nearest of kin by His assumed humanity, in order to be our Redeemer. that through brew caphar, "to expiate." See Exod. xxix. 33-36. He that sanctifies is He that makes atonement and they who are sanctified are they who receive that atonement and, being reconciled unto God, become His children by adoption, through grace. In this sense our Lord uses the word, John xvii. 19: "For their sakes I sanctify myself"; on their account I consecrate myself to be a sacrifice. This is the sense in which this word is used generally through this Epistle. Are all of one. What this one means has given rise to various conjectures. Father, family, blood, seed, race, nature have all been substituted. Nature seems to be that intended (see v. 14), and the conclusion of this verse confirms it. Both the Sanctifier and the sanctified, both Christ and His followers, are all of the same nature; for as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, i.e., of human nature, He partook of the same, and thus He was qualified to become a Sacrifice for man. He is not ashamed to call them brethren. Though, as to His Godhead, He is infinitely raised above men and angels, yet as He has become incarnate, notwithstanding His dignity, He blushes not to acknowledge all His true followers as His brethren.

12. I will declare thy name. See Ps. xxii. 22. The apostle certainly quotes this psalm as referring to Jesus Christ, and these words as spoken by Christ unto the Father, in reference to His incarnation; as if He had said: "When I shall be incarnated, I will declare Thy perfections to mankind; and among My disciples I will give glory to Thee for Thy mercy to the children of men." See the fulfillment of this, John i. 18: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Nor were the perfections of God ever properly known or declared till the manifestation of Christ.

13. I will put my trust in him. It is not clear to what express place of Scripture the apostle refers. Words to this effect frequently occur; but the place most probably is Ps. xviii. 2, several parts of which psalm seem to belong to the Messiah. Behold I and the children which God hath given me. This is taken from Isa. viii. 18. The apostle does not intend to say that the portions which he has quoted have any particular reference, taken by themselves, to the subject in question. They are only catchwords of whole paragraphs, which, taken together, are full to the point; because they are prophecies of the Messiah, and are fulfilled in Him. This is evident from the last quotation: "Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for wonders in Israel." Jesus and His disciples wrought a multitude of the most stupendous signs and wonders in Israel. The expression also may include all genuine Christians; they are for signs and wonders throughout the earth. And as to the eighteenth psalm, the principal part of it seems to refer to Christ's sufferings; but the miracles which were wrought at His crucifixion, the destruction of the Jewish state and polity, the calling of the Gentiles, and the establishment of the Christian Church appear also to be intended.

14. The children are partakers of flesh and blood. Since those children of God who have fallen and are to be redeemed are human beings, in order to be qualified to redeem them by suffering and dying in their stead, He also himself likewise took part of the same—He became incarnate. By the children here we are to understand, not only the disciples and all genuine Christians, as in v. 13, but also the whole human race, all Jews and all Gentiles.

2. He became man that he might die. The legal sacrifices and offerings God could not accept as a propitiation. A body was prepared for Christ.

3. The devil was the first sinner, and the first tempter to sin, and sin was the procuring cause of death. He draws men into sin, the ways whereof are death. In these respects he may be said to have had the power of death. But now Christ has so far destroyed him who had the power of death that he can keep none under the power of spiritual death; nor can he draw any into sin.

4. That he might deliver his own people from the slavish fear of death to which they are often subject, Christ became man, and died, to deliver them from perplexities of soul, by letting them know that death is not only a conquered enemy, but a reconciled friend. Death is not now in the hand of Satan, but in the hand of Christ.

The incarnation of Christ is asserted (v. 16). He took our nature into union with his divine nature, and became really and truly man. He did not lay hold of angels, but he laid hold of the seed of Abraham. The nature of angels could not be an atoning sacrifice for the sin of man. He took upon him the human nature from one descended from the loins of Abraham, that the same nature that had sinned might suffer. Now there is hope and help for the chief of sinners in and through Christ.

ALEXANDER MACLAREN:

Now, if the likeness here be the possession of true manhood, then my text is mere tautology, and it would simply be saying, "He became a man, wherefore it behooved him to become a man." The same conclusion is to be deduced from the last words of our chapter, where the fact of His suffering and being tempted are stated as His preparation to help and as His qualification as a merciful and faithful High Priest. That is to say, the "all things" of which our Lord became partaker like us His brethren are here the whole mass—in all its variety of pressure and diversity of nauseousness and bitterness—the whole mass of human sorrow which has ever made men's hearts bleed and men's eyes weep. Christ, in His single manhood, says the writer, gathered unto himself every form of pain, of misery, of weariness, of burden, which can weigh upon and wear out a human spirit; and no single ingredient that ever made any man's cup distasteful was left out, in that dreadful draught which He emptied to the dregs ere He passed the chalice to our lips, saying, "Drink ye all of it."

This is the great lesson and blessed thought of our text that no suffering soul, no harassed heart, no lonely life, has ever been able to say, "Ah! I have to bear this by myself, for Jesus Christ never knew anything like this." All the pain and sorrow of adverse circumstances that try some of us, He knows who had "not where to lay his head"; who was a poor man all His days, to whom the women had to minister of their charity, and who depended upon others for His sustenance in life. The sorrows that belong to a physical frame overwrought and crushed by excessive toil; the sorrows of weakness, of sickness, the pains of death—He understands them all.

death—which He could not have undergone as God but only by becoming man. Not by Almighty power but "by His death" (so the Greek) He overcame death. destroy—lit., "render powerless"; deprive of all power to hurt His people. "That thou mighest still the enemy and avenger" (Psalm 8:2). The same Greek verb is used in II Timothy 1:10, "abolished death." power—Satan is "strong" (Matt. 12: 29). of death—implying that death itself is a power which, though originally foreign to human nature, now reigns over it (Rom. 5:12; 6:9). The power which death has Satan wields. The author of sin is the author of its consequences. Cf. "power of the enemy" (Luke 10:19). Satan has acquired over man (by God's law, Gen. 2:17; Rom. 6:23) the power of death by man's sin, death being the executioner of sin, and man being Satan's "lawful captive." 15. fear of death—even before they had experienced its actual power. all their lifetime—Such a life can hardly be called life. subject to bondage—lit., "subjects of bondage"; not merely liable to it, but enthralled in it (cf. Rom. 8:15; Gal. 5:1). Contrast with this bondage, the glory of the "sons" (vs. 10). "Bondage" is defined by Aristotle, "The living not as one chooses"; "liberty," "the living as one chooses." Christ by delivering us from the curse of God against our sin, has taken from death all that made it formidable. Death, viewed apart from Christ, can only fill with horror, if the sinner dares to think. 16. For verily—Greek, "For as we all know"; "For as you will doubtless grant." Paul probably alludes to Isaiah 41:8 Jeremiah 31:32, LXX, from which all Jews would know well that the fact here stated as to Messiah was what the prophets had led them to expect. took not on him . . .—rather, "It is not angels that He is helping (the present implies duration); but it is the seed of Abraham that He is helping." The verb is lit., to help by taking one by the hand, as in ch. 8:9, "When I took them by the hand. . . ." Thus it answers to "succor," vs. 18, and "deliver," vs. 15. "Not angels," who have no flesh and blood, but "the children," who have "flesh and blood," He takes hold of to help by "Himself taking part of the same" (vs. 14). seed of Abraham—He views Christ's redemption (in compliment to the Hebrews whom he is addressing, and as enough for his present purpose) with reference to Abraham's seed, the Jewish nation, primarily; not that he excludes the Gentiles (vs. 9, "for every man"), who, when believers, are the seed of Abraham spiritually (cf. vs. 12; Ps. 22:22, 25, 27), but direct reference to them (such as is in Rom. 4:11, 12, 16; Gal. 3:7, 14, 28, 29) would be out of place in his present argument. 17. Wherefore—Greek, "Whence." Found in Paul's speech, Acts 26:19. in all things—which are incidental to manhood, the being born, nourished, growing up, suffering. Sin is not, in the original constitution of man, a necessary attendant of manhood, so He had no sin. it behooved him—by moral necessity, considering what the justice and love of God required of Him as Mediator (cf. ch. 5:3), the office which He had voluntarily undertaken in order to "help" man (vs. 16). his brethren—(vs. 11)—"the seed of Abraham" (vs. 16), and so also the spiritual seed, His elect out of all mankind. be . . .—rather as Greek, "that He might become High Priest"; He was called so, when He was "made perfect by the things which He suffered" (vs. 10; ch. 5:8-10). He was actually made so, when He entered within the veil, from which last flows His ever continuing intercession as Priest for us. The death, as man, must first be, in order that the bringing in of the blood into the heavenly Holy Place might follow, in which consisted the expiation as High Priest. merciful—to "the people" deserving wrath by "sins." Mercy is a prime requisite in a priest, since his office is to help the wretched and raise the fallen: such mercy is most likely to be found in one who has a fellowfeeling with the afflicted, having been so once Himself (ch. 4:15); not that the Son of God needed to be taught by suffering to be merciful, but that in order to save us He needed to take our manhood with all its sorrows, thereby qualifying Himself, by experimental suffering with us, to be our sympathizing High Priest, and assuring us of His entire fellow-feeling with us in every sorrow. So in the main CALVIN remarks here. faithful—true to God (ch. 3:5, 6) and to man (ch. 10:23) in the mediatorial office which He has undertaken. high priest—which Moses was not, though "faithful" (ch. 2). Nowhere, except in Psalm 110, Zechariah 6:13, and in this Epistle, is Christ expressly called a priest. In this Epistle alone His priesthood is professedly discussed; whence it is evident how necessary is this book of

That through death. That by the merit of His own death, making atonement for sin, and procuring the almighty energy of the Holy Spirit, He might "counterwork" or "render useless and ineffectual" all the operations of him who had the power or "influence" to bring death into the world; so that death, which was intended by him who was a murderer from the beginning to be the final ruin of mankind, becomes the instrument of their exaltation and endless glory; and thus the death brought in by Satan is counterworked and rendered ineffectual by the death of Christ. Him that had the power of death. This is spoken in conformity to an opinion prevalent among the Jews that there was a certain fallen angel who was called the "angel of death."

15. And deliver them who through fear of death. It is very likely that the apostle has the Gentiles here principally in view. As they had no revelation and no certainty of immortality, they were continually in bondage to the fear of death.

16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels. "Moreover, He doth not at all take hold of angels; but of the seed of Abraham He taketh hold." This is the marginal reading and is greatly to be preferred to that in the text. Jesus Christ, intending not to redeem angels but to redeem man, did not assume the angelic nature but was made man, coming directly by the seed or "posterity" of Abraham, with whom the original covenant was made, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and it is on this account that the apostle mentioned the seed of Abraham, and not the seed of Adam. The word itself signifies not only to "take hold of" but to "help, succor, save from sinking." The rebel angels, who sinned and fell from God, were permitted to "fall downe, alle downe," as one of our old writers expresses it, till they fell into perdition. Man sinned and fell, and was falling "downe, alle downe," but Jesus laid hold on him and prevented him from falling into endless perdition.

17. Wherefore in all things. Because He thus laid hold on man in order to redeem him, it was necessary that He should in all things become like to man, that He might suffer in his stead, and make an atonement in His nature.

That he might be a merciful and faithful high priest. "That He might be merciful"—that He might be affected with a feeling of our infirmities, that, partaking of our nature with all its innocent infirmities and afflictions, He might know how to compassionate poor, afflicted, suffering man. And that He might be a "faithful high priest in those things which relate to God," whose justice requires the punishment of the transgressors, or a suitable expiation to be made for the sins of the people—"to make propitiation or atonement for sins by sacrifice."

MATTHEW HENRY

5. He must be faithful to God and merciful to men. In things pertaining to God, to his justice, and to his honour—to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

In things pertaining to his people, to their support and comfort, v. 18. Christ's passion: He suffered being tempted; and his temptations were not the least part of his sufferings. Christ's compassion: He is able to succour those that are tempted. He knows how to deal with tempted sorrowful souls, because he has been himself sick of the same disease, not of sin, but of temptation and trouble of soul. The best of Christians are subject to many temptations. Temptations bring our souls into such distress and danger that they need support and succour.

Verses 1–6

The application of the doctrine concerning the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I. The apostle exhorts Christians to have this high priest much in their thoughts.

1. The honourable compellation used towards those to whom he wrote: Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling. Brethren, not only my brethren, but the brethren of Christ, and in him brethren to all the saints. Holy brethren; holy not only in profession and title, but in principle and practice, in heart and life. Partakers of the heavenly calling—partakers of the means of grace, and of the Spirit of grace, that came from heaven; that calling which brings down heaven into the souls of men.

2. The titles he gives to Christ, whom he would have them consider, (1) As the apostle of our profession, the great revealer of that faith which we profess to hold and of that hope which we profess to have. (2) Not only the apostle, but the high priest, too, of our profession, upon whose satisfaction and intercession we profess to depend for pardon of sin, and acceptance with God. (3) As Christ, the Messiah. (4) As Jesus, our Saviour, our healer.

II. The duty we owe to him who bears all these high and honourable titles. Look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith. Even those that are holy brethren, and partakers of the heavenly calling, have need to stir up one another to think more of Christ than they do; the best of his people think too seldom and too slightly of him.

III. Several arguments to enforce this duty of considering Christ the apostle and high priest of our profession.

1. The first is taken from his fidelity, v. 2. He was faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was in all his house. Moses was faithful in the discharge of his office to the Jewish church in the Old Testament, and so is Christ under the New; this was a proper argument to urge upon the Jews.

the New Testament. In Psalm 110, and Zechariah 6:13, there is added mention of the kingdom of Christ, which elsewhere is spoken of without the priesthood, and that frequently. On the cross, whereon as Priest He offered the sacrifice, He had the title "King" inscribed over Him [BENGEL]. to make reconciliation for the sins—rather as Greek, "to propitiate (in respect to) the sins"; "to expiate the sins." Strictly divine justice is "propitiated"; but God's love is as much from everlasting as His justice; therefore, lest Christ's sacrifice, or its typical forerunners, the legal sacrifices, should be thought to be antecedent to God's grace and love, neither are said in the Old or New Testament to have propitiated God; otherwise Christ's sacrifices might have been thought to have first induced God to love and pity man, instead of (as the fact really is) His love having originated Christ's sacrifice, whereby divine justice and divine love are harmonized. The sinner is brought by that sacrifice into God's favor, which by sin he had forfeited; hence his right prayer is, "God be propitiated (so the Greek) to me who am a sinner" (Luke 18:13). Sins bring death and "the fear of death" (vs. 15). He had no sin Himself, and "made reconciliation for the iniquity" of all others (Dan. 9:24). of the people—"the seed of Abraham" (vs. 16); the literal Israel first, and then (in the design of God), through Israel, the believing Gentiles, the spiritual Israel (I Pet. 2:10). 18. For—explanation of how His being made like His brethren in all things has made Him a merciful and faithful High Priest for us (vs. 17). in that—rather as Greek, "wherein He suffered Himself; having been tempted, He is able to succor them that are being tempted" in the same temptation; and as "He was tempted (tried and afflicted) in all points," He is able (by the power of sympathy) to succor us in all possible temptations and trials incidental to man (ch. 4:16; 5:2).

CHAPTER 3

VSS. 1-19. THE SON OF GOD GREATER THAN MOSES, WHEREFORE UNBELIEF TOWARDS HIM WILL INCUR A HEAVIER PUNISHMENT THAN BEFELL UNBELIEVING ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS. 1. Wherefore—Greek, "Whence," i.e., seeing we have such a sympathizing Helper you ought to "consider attentively," "contemplate"; fix your eyes and mind on Him with a view to profiting by the contemplation (ch. 12:2). The Greek word is often used by Luke, Paul's companion (Luke 12:24, 27). brethren—in Christ, the common bond of union. partakers—"of the Holy Ghost." heavenly calling—coming to us from heaven, and leading us to heaven whence it comes. Philippians 3:14, "the high calling"; Greek "the calling above," i.e., heavenly. the Apostle and High Priest of our profession—There is but one Greek article to both nouns, "Him who is at once Apostle and High Priest"—Apostle, as Ambassador (a higher designation than "angel"-messenger) sent by the Father (John 20:21), pleading the cause of God with us; High Priest, as pleading our cause with God. Both His Apostleship and High Priesthood are comprehended in the one title, Mediator [BENGEL]. Though the title "Apostle" is nowhere else applied to Christ, it is appropriate here in addressing Hebrews, who used the term of the delegates sent by the high priest to collect the temple tribute from Jews resident in foreign countries, even as Christ was Delegate of the Father to this world far off from Him (Matt. 21:37). Hence as what applies to Him, applies also to His people, the Twelve are designated His apostles, even as He is the Father's (John 20:21). So Jesus, "the Apostle of our profession," is delegated to intercede for the Church before the Father. The words "of our profession," mark that it is not of the legal ritual, but of our Christian faith, that He is the High Priest. Paul compares Him as an Apostle to Moses; as High Priest to Aaron. He alone holds both offices combined, and in a more eminent degree than either, which those two brothers held apart. profession—"confession," corresponds to God having spoken to us by His Son, sent as Apostle and High Priest. What God proclaims we confess. 2. He first notes the feature of resemblance between Moses and Christ, in order to conciliate the Hebrew Christians whom He addressed, and who still entertained a very high opinion of Moses; he afterwards brings forward Christ's superiority to Moses. Who was faithful—The Greek implies also that He still is faithful, viz., as our mediating High Priest, faithful to the trust God has assigned Him (ch. 2:17). So Moses in

ADAM CLARKE

18. For in that he himself hath suffered. The maxim on which this verse is founded is the following: A state of suffering disposes persons to be compassionate, and those who endure most afflictions are they who feel most for others. The apostle argues that, among other causes, it was necessary that Jesus Christ should partake of human nature, exposed to trials, persecutions, and various sufferings, that He might the better feel for and be led to succor those who are afflicted and sorely tried. Were the rest of the Scripture silent on this subject, this verse might be an ample support for every tempted soul.

1. Holy brethren. Persons "consecrated to God," as the word literally implies, and called, in consequence, to be holy in heart, holy in life, and useful in the world. The Israelites are often called a "holy people, saints," because consecrated to God, and because they were bound by their profession to be holy; and yet these appellations are given to them in numberless instances where they were very unholy. The not attending to this circumstance, and the not discerning between actual positive holiness and the call to it as the consecration of the persons, has led many commentators and preachers into destructive mistakes. A man may be a Christian in profession and not such in heart; and those who pretend that, although they are unholy in themselves, they are reputed holy in Christ, because His righteousness is imputed to them, most awfully deceive their own souls. Heavenly calling. The Israelites had an earthly calling; they were called out of Egypt to go into the Promised Land. Christians have a heavenly calling; they are invited to leave the bondage of sin and go to the kingdom of God. Apostle and High Priest of our profession. Among the Jews the high priest was considered to be also the apostle of God, and it is in conformity to this notion that the apostle speaks. And he exhorts the Hebrews to consider Jesus Christ to be both their High Priest and Apostle, and to expect these offices to be henceforth fulfilled by Him, and by Him alone. This was the fullest intimation that the Mosaic economy was at an end and the priesthood changed. By our profession, or "that confession of ours," the apostle undoubtedly means the Christian religion. Moses was the apostle under the old testament, and Aaron the priest. When Moses was removed, the prophets succeeded him; and the sons of Aaron were the priests after the death of their father. This system is now annulled; and Jesus is the Prophet who declares the Father's will, and He is the Priest who ministers in the things pertaining to God.

2. Who was faithful to him. In Num. xii. 7, God gives this testimony to Moses: "My servant Moses . . . is faithful in all mine house"; and to this testimony the apostle alludes. House means not only the place where a family dwells, but also the family itself. The whole congregation of Israel was the house or family of God; and Moses was His steward, and was faithful in the

2. The superior glory and excellence of Christ above Moses (v. 3–6). (1) Christ was a maker of the house, Moses but a member in it. Christ, who is God, drew the ground-plan of the church, provided the materials, and disposed them to receive the form; he has compacted and united this his house, and crowned all with his own presence, which is the true glory of this house of God.

(2) Christ was the master of this house, as well as the maker, v. 5, 6. Moses was only a faithful servant.

Christ, as the eternal Son of God, is the rightful owner and sovereign ruler of the church. Christ is worthy of more glory than Moses, and of greater regard and consideration.

Now follows a comfortable accommodation of it to himself and all true believers. Whose house we are.

A characteristic description of those persons who constitute this house: "If we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope, firmly to the end." There must not only be a setting out well in the ways of Christ, but a steadfastness and perseverance therein unto the end.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

God's house (Num. 12:7). appointed him—"made Him" HIGH PRIEST; to be supplied from the preceding context. Greek, "made"; so in ch. 5:5; I Samuel 12:6, Margin; Acts 2:36; so the Greek fathers. Not as ALFORD, with AMBROSE and the Latins, "created Him," i.e., as man, in His incarnation. The likeness of Moses to Messiah was foretold by Moses himself (Deut. 18:15). Other prophets only explained Moses, who was in this respect superior to them; but Christ was like Moses, yet superior. 3. For—assigning the reason why they should "consider" attentively "Christ" (vs. 1), highly as they regard Moses who resembled Him in faithfulness (vs. 2). was—Greek, "has been." counted worthy of more glory—by God, when He exalted Him to His own right hand. The Hebrew Christians admitted the fact (ch. 1:13). builded the house—Greek, "inasmuch as He hath more honor than the house, who prepared it," or "established it" [ALFORD]. The Greek verb is used purposely instead of "builded," in order to mark that the building meant is not a literal, but a spiritual house: the Church both of the Old Testament and New Testament; and that the building of such a house includes all the preparations of providence and grace needed to furnish it with "living stones" and fitting "servants." Thus, as Christ the Founder and Establisher (in Old Testament as well as the New Testament) is greater than the house so established, including the servants, He is greater also than Moses, who was but a "servant." Moses, as a servant, is a portion of the house, and less than the house; Christ, as the Instrumental Creator of all things, must be God, and so greater than the house of which Moses was but a part. Glory is the result of honor. 4. Someone must be the establisher of every house; Moses was not the establisher of the house, but a portion of it (but He who established all things, and therefore the spiritual house in question, is God). Christ, as being instrumentally the Establisher of all things, must be the Establisher of the house, and so greater than Moses.

5. faithful in all his house—i.e., in all GOD'S house (vs. 4). servant—not here the Greek for "slave," but "a ministering attendant"; marking the high office of Moses towards God, though inferior to Christ, a kind of steward. for a testimony . . .—in order that he might in his typical institutions give "testimony" to Israel "of the things" of the Gospel "which were to be spoken afterwards" by Christ (ch. 8:5; 9:8, 23; 10:1).

6. But Christ—was and is faithful (vs. 2). as a son over his own house—rather, "over His (GOD'S, vs. 4) house"; and therefore, as the inference from His being one with God, over His own house. So ch. 10:21, "having an High Priest over the house of God." Christ enters His Father's house as the Master [OVER it], but Moses as a servant [IN it, vss. 2, 5] [CHRYSOSTOM]. An ambassador in the absence of the king is very distinguished—in the presence of the king he falls back into the multitude [BENGEL].

whose house are we—Paul and his Hebrew readers. One old MS., with Vulgate and LUCIFER, reads, "which house"; but the weightiest MSS. support English Version reading.

the rejoicing—rather, "the matter of rejoicing." of the hope—"of our hope." Since all our good things lie in hopes, we ought so to hold fast our hopes as already to rejoice, as though our hopes were realized [CHRYSOSTOM]. firm unto the end--omitted in LUCIFER and AMBROSE, and in one oldest MS., but supported by most oldest MSS.

discharge of his office. Jesus Christ has His house—the whole great family of mankind, for all of whom He offered His sacrificial blood to God; and the Christian Church, which is especially His own household, is composed of His own children and servants, among and in whom He lives and constantly resides. He has been faithful to the trust reposed in Him as the Apostle of God; He has faithfully proclaimed the will of the Most High.

3. For this man was counted. The pronoun should have been translated "this person," and this would have referred immediately to Jesus Christ, v. 1. More glory than Moses. We have already seen that the apostle's design is to prove that Jesus Christ is higher than the angels, higher than Moses, and higher than Aaron. That He is higher than the angels has been already proved; that He is higher than Moses he is now proving. He who hath builded the house. There can be no doubt that a man who builds a house for his own accommodation is more honorable than the house itself; but the house here intended is the Church of God. This Church, here called a house or "family," is built by Christ; He must therefore be greater than Moses, who was only a member and officer in that Church.

4. For every house is builded by some man. The literal sense is plain enough: "Every structure plainly implies an architect, and an end for which it was formed. The architect may be employed by him for whose use the house is intended; but the efficient cause of the erection is that which is here to be regarded." The word house here is still taken in a metaphorical sense as above; it signifies "family" or Church. Now the general meaning of the words, taken in this sense, is: "Every family has an author, and a head or governor. Man may found families, civil and religious communities, and be the head of these; but God alone is the Head, Author, and Governor of all the families of the earth; He is the Governor of the universe."

5. As a servant. The fidelity of Moses was the fidelity of a servant; he was not the framer of that Church or house; He was employed, under God, to arrange and order it; he was steward to the Builder and Owner. For a testimony of those things. Every ordinance under the law was typical; everything bore a testimony to the things which were to be spoken after; i.e., to Jesus Christ, His suffering, death, and the glory which should follow; and to His gospel in all its parts. The faithfulness of Moses consisted in his scrupulous attention to every ordinance of God, his framing everything according to the pattern showed him by the Lord, and his referring all to that Christ of whom he spoke as the Prophet who should come after him.

6. But Christ as a son over his own house. Moses was faithful as a servant in the house; Jesus was faithful as the firstborn Son over the house of which He is the Heir and Governor. Here then is the conclusion of the argument in reference to Christ's superiority over Moses. Moses did not found the house or family; Christ did. Moses was but in the house, or one of the family; Christ was over the house as its Ruler. Moses was but servant in the house; Christ was the Son and Heir. Moses was in the house of another; Christ, in His own house. Whose house are we. We Christians are His Church and "family"; He is our Father, Governor, and Head. If we hold fast the confidence. We are now His Church, and shall continue to be such and be acknowledged by Him if we maintain our Christian profession, "that liberty of access to God," which we now have, and the rejoicing of the hope, i.e., of eternal life, which we shall receive at the resurrection of the dead. The word which is here translated confidence, and which signifies "freedom of speech, liberty of access," seems to be used here to distinguish an important Christian privilege. Under the old testament no man was permitted to approach to God; even the very mountain on which God published His laws must not be touched by man nor beast; and only the high priest was permitted to enter the holy of holies, and that only once a year, on the great Day of Atonement; and even then he must have the blood of the victim to propitiate the divine justice. Under the Christian dispensation the way to the holiest is now laid

Verses 7–19

Here the apostle proceeds in pressing upon them serious counsels and cautions; and he recites a passage out of Ps. xcv. 7, &c.

I. What he counsels them to do—to give a speedy and present attention to the call of Christ. "Hear his voice; apply it to yourselves and set about it this very day, for to-morrow it may be too late."

II. What he cautions them against—hardening their hearts, turning the deaf ear to the calls and counsels of Christ. The hardening of our hearts is the spring of all our other sins.

III. Whose example he warns them by—that of the Israelites their fathers in the wilderness: As in the provocation and day of temptation; this refers to Exod. xvii. 2–7. Days of temptation are often days of provocation. The sins of others should be a warning to us. Our fathers' sins and punishments should be remembered by us, to deter us from following their evil examples. The sin they were guilty of: they distrusted God, murmured against Moses, and would not attend to the voice of God. The aggravations of their sin: they sinned when they saw his works—works of wonder wrought for their deliverance out of Egypt, and their support and supply in the wilderness. They continued thus to sin against God for forty years. The source and spring of such aggravated sins. They erred in their hearts; and these heart-errors produced many other errors in their lips and lives. They did not know God's ways, though he had walked before them. They did not observe either his providences or his ordinances.

The just resentment God had at their sins, and yet the great patience he exercised towards them (v. 10). All sin does not only anger and affront God, but it grieves him. If they by their sins continue to grieve the Spirit of God, their sins shall be made grievous to their own spirits, either in a way of judgment or mercy.

God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. Sin, long continued in, will kindle the divine wrath. His wrath will make their condition a restless condition; there is no resting under the wrath of God.

IV. What use the apostle makes of their awful example, v. 12, 13, &c.

1. He gives the Hebrews a proper caution; the word is, Take heed—look to it. "Look about you; be upon your guard against enemies both within and without." The ruin of others should be a warning to us to take heed of the rock they split upon.

2. He enlarges upon the matter of the admonition: Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. A heart of unbelief is an evil heart. An evil heart of unbelief is at the bottom of all our sinful departures from God; if once we allow ourselves to distrust God, we may soon desert him.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

7-11.—Exhortation from Psalm 95, not through unbelief to lose participation in the spiritual house. Wherefore—Seeing that we are the house of God if we hold fast our confidence . . . (vs. 6). Jesus is "faithful," be not ye unfaithful (vss. 2, 12). The sentence beginning with "wherefore," interrupted by the parenthesis confirming the argument from Psalm 95, is completed at vs. 12, "Take heed . . . ." Holy Ghost saith—by the inspired Psalmist; so that the words of the latter are the words of God Himself. Today—at length; in David's day, as contrasted with the days of Moses in the wilderness, and the whole time since then, during which they had been rebellious against God's voice; as for instance, in the wilderness (vs. 8). The Psalm, each fresh time when used in public worship, by "today," will mean the particular day when it was, or is, used. hear—obediently. his voice—of grace. 8. Harden not your hearts—This phrase here only is used of man's own act; usually of God's act (Rom. 9:18). When man is spoken of as the agent in hardening, the phrase usually is, "harden his neck," or "back" (Neh. 9:17). provocation . . . temptation—Massah-meribah, translated in Margin "tentation . . . chiding," or "strife" (Exod. 17:1-7). Both names seem to refer to that one event, the murmuring of the people against the Lord at Rephidim for want of water. The first offense especially ought to be guarded against, and is the most severely reproved, as it is apt to produce many more. Numbers 20: 1-13 and Deuteronomy 33:8 mention a second similar occasion in the wilderness of Sin, near Kadesh, also called Meribah. in the day—Greek, "according to the day of." 9. When—rather, "Where," viz., in the wilderness. your fathers—The authority of the ancients is not conclusive [BENGEL]. tempted me, proved me—The oldest MSS. read, "tempted (Me) in the way of testing," i.e., putting (Me) to the proof whether I was able and willing to relieve them, not believing that I am so. saw my works forty years—They saw, without being led thereby to repentance, My works of power partly in affording miraculous help, partly in executing vengeance, forty years. The "forty years" joined in the Hebrew and LXX, and below, vs. 17, with "I was grieved," is here joined with "they saw." Both are true; for, during the same forty years that they were tempting God by unbelief, notwithstanding their seeing God's miraculous works, God was being grieved. 10. grieved—displeased. Cf. "walk contrary," Leviticus 26:24, 28. that generation—"that" implies alienation and estrangement. But the oldest MSS. read, "this." said—"grieved," or "displeased," at their first offense. Subsequently when they hardened their heart in unbelief still more, He sware in His wrath (vs. 11); an ascending gradation (cf. vss. 17, 18). and they have not known—Greek, "But these very persons . . . ." They perceived I was displeased with them, yet they, the same persons, did not a whit the more wish to know my ways [BENGEL]; cf. "but they," Psalm 106: 43. not known my ways—not known practically and believingly the ways in which I would have had them go, so as to reach My rest (Exod. 18:20). 11. So—lit., "as." I sware—BENGEL remarks the oath of God preceded the forty years. not—lit., "If they shall enter . . . (God do so to me and more also)," II Sam. 3:35. The Greek is the same, Mark 8:12. my rest—Canaan, primarily, their rest after wandering in the wilderness: still, even when in it, they never fully enjoyed rest; whence it followed that the threat extended farther than the exclusion of the unbelieving from the literal land of rest, and that the rest promised to the believing in its full blessedness was, and is, yet future: Psalm 25:13; 37: 9, 11, 22, 29, and Christ's own beatitude (Matt. 5:5) all accord with this, vs. 9. 12. Take heed—to be joined with "wherefore," vs. 7. lest there be—Greek (indicative), "lest there shall be"; lest there be, as I fear there is; implying that it is not merely a possible contingency, but that there is ground for thinking it will be so. in any—"in any one of you." Not merely ought all in general be on their guard, but they ought to be so concerned for the safety of each one member, as not to suffer any one to perish through their negligence [CALVIN]. heart—The heart is not to be trusted. Cf. vs. 10, "They do always err in their heart." unbelief—faithlessness. Christ is faithful; therefore, saith Paul to the Hebrews, we ought not to be faithless as our fathers were under Moses. departing—apostatizing. The opposite of "come unto" Him (ch. 4:16). God punishes such apostates in kind. He departs from them—the worst of woes. the living God—real: the distinctive characteristic of the God of Israel, not like the lifeless gods of the heathen; therefore One open; and we have "liberty of access," even to the holiest, by the blood of Jesus. Having such access unto God, by such a Mediator, we may obtain all that grace which is necessary to fit us for eternal glory; and having the witness of His Spirit in our heart, we have a well-grounded hope of endless felicity and exult in the enjoyment of that hope. But if we retain not the grace, we shall not inherit the glory.

7. Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To day. These words are quoted from Ps. xcv. 7; and as they were written by David, and attributed here to the Holy Ghost, it proves that David wrote by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit. As these words were originally a warning to the Israelites not to provoke God, lest they should be excluded from that rest which He had promised them, the apostle uses them here to persuade the Christians in Palestine to hold fast their religious privileges and the grace they had received, lest they should come short of that state of future glory which Christ had prepared for them. The words strongly imply, as indeed does the whole Epistle, the possibility of falling from the grace of God and perishing everlastingly; and without this supposition these words and all suchlike, which make more than two-thirds of the whole of divine revelation, would have neither sense nor meaning. Why should God entreat man to receive His mercy if He have rendered this impossible? Why should He exhort a believer to persevere if it be impossible for him to fall away?

8. Harden not your hearts. Which you will infallibly do if you will not hear His voice. Provocation. The "exasperation" or "bitter provocation."

9. When your fathers tempted me. It would be better to translate "where" than when, as the Vulgate has done in its ubi; and this translation has been followed by Wycliffe, Coverdale, Tyndale, and our first translators in general.

10. Wherefore I was grieved. God represents himself as the Father of this great Jewish family, for whose comfort and support He had made every necessary provision, and to whom He had given every proof of tenderness and fatherly affection; and because they disobeyed Him, and walked in that way in which they could not but be miserable, therefore He represents himself as grieved and exceedingly displeased with them.

11. So I sware in my wrath. God's grief at their continued disobedience became wrath at their final impenitence, and therefore He excluded them from the promised rest.

12. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you. Take warning by those disobedient Israelites; they were brought out of the house of bondage, and had the fullest promise of a land of prosperity and rest. By their disobedience they came short of it, and fell in the wilderness. You have been brought from the bondage of sin, and have a most gracious promise of an everlasting inheritance among the saints in light. Through unbelief and disobedience they lost their rest; through the same you may lose yours. An evil heart of unbelief will lead away from the living God.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. That which would be a remedy against this evil heart of unbelief, v. 13. Since tomorrow is none of ours, we must make the best improvement of today. There is a great deal of deceitfulness in sin; it promises much, but performs nothing. The deceitfulness of sin is of a hardening nature. Every act of sin confirms the habit.

4. He conforts those who not only set out well, but hold on well, and hold out to the end (v. 14). The saints' privilege: they are made partakers of Christ, in all that he is, in all that he has done, or can do. The condition on which they hold that privilege, their perseverance. Not but they shall persevere, being kept by the mighty power of God through faith to salvation, but to be pressed thus to it is one means by which Christ helps his people to persevere. The same spirit with which Christians set out in the ways of God they should maintain to the end. There are a great many who in the beginning show a great deal of courage and confidence, but do not hold them fast to the end.

5. The apostle resumes what he had quoted before, v. 15, 16, &c. The apostle tells them that though some who had heard the voice of God did provoke him, yet all did not so. God will have a remnant that shall be obedient to his voice.

6. The apostle puts some queries upon what had been before mentioned (v. 17–19). God is grieved only with those of his people who sin against him, and continue in sin. Unbelief (with rebellion which is the consequent of it) is the great damning sin of the world. This sin shuts up the heart of God, and shuts up the gate of heaven, against them.

whose threats are awful realities. To apostatize from Christ is to apostatize from the living God (ch. 2:3). 13. one another—Greek, "yourselves"; let each exhort himself and his neighbor. daily—Greek, "on each day," or "day by day." while it is called Today—while the "today" lasts (the day of grace, Luke 4:21, before the coming of the day of glory and judgment at Christ's coming, ch. 10:25, 37). Tomorrow is the day when idle men work, and fools repent. Tomorrow is Satan's today; he cares not what good resolutions you form, if only you fix them for tomorrow. lest . . . of you—The "you" is emphatic, as distinguished from "your fathers" (vs. 9). "That from among you no one (so the Greek order is in some of the oldest MSS.) be hardened" (vs. 8). deceitfulness—causing you to "err in your heart." sin—unbelief. 14. For . . .—enforcing the warning, vs. 12. partakers of Christ—(Cf. vss. 1, 6). So "partakers of the Holy Ghost" (ch. 6:4). hold—Greek, "hold fast." the beginning of our confidence—i.e., the confidence (lit., substantial, solid confidence) of faith which we have begun (ch. 6:11; 12:2). A Christian so long as he is not made perfect, considers himself as a beginner [BENGEL]. unto the end—unto the coming of Christ (ch. 12:2). 15. While it is said—connected with vs. 13, "exhort one another . . . while it is said, Today": vs. 14, "for we are made partakers . . . ," being a parenthesis. "It entirely depends on yourselves that the invitation of the 95th Psalm be not a mere invitation, but also an actual enjoyment." ALFORD translates, "Since (i.e., for) it is said . . . ," regarding vs. 15 as a proof that we must "hold . . . confidence . . . unto the end," in order to be "partakers of Christ." 16. For some—rather interrogatively, "For WHO was it that, when they had heard (referring to 'if ye will hear,' vs. 15), did provoke (God)?" The "For" implies, Ye need to take heed against unbelief: for, was it not because of unbelief that all our fathers were excluded (Ezek. 2:3)? "Some," and "not all," would be a faint way of putting his argument, when his object is to show the universality of the evil. Not merely some, but all the Israelites, for the solitary exceptions, Joshua and Caleb, are hardly to be taken into account in so general a statement. So vss. 17, 18, are interrogative: (1) the beginning of the provocation, soon after the departure from Egypt, is marked in vs. 16; (2) the forty years of it in the wilderness, vs. 17; (3) the denial of entrance into the land of rest, vs. 18. Note, cf. I Corinthians 10:5, "with the majority of them God was displeased." howbeit—"Nay (why need I put the question?), was it not all that came out of Egypt?" (Exod. 17:1, 2). by Moses—by the instrumentality of Moses as their leader. 17. But—Translate, "Moreover," as it is not in contrast to vs. 16, but carrying out the same thought. corpses—lit., "limbs," implying that their bodies fell limb from limb. 18. to them that believed not—rather as Greek, "to them that disobeyed." Practical unbelief (Deut. 1:26). 19. they could not enter—though desiring it.

ADAM CLARKE

13. But exhort one another daily. This supposes a state of close church fellowship, without which they could not have had access to each other. While it is called To day. Use time while you have it, for by and by there will be no more present time. All will be future; all will be eternity. Daily signifies time continued; to day, all present time.

14. For we are made partakers of Christ. Having believed in Christ as the promised Messiah and embraced the whole Christian system, they were consequently made partakers of all its benefits in this life, and entitled to the fulfillment of all its exceeding great and precious promises relative to the glories of the eternal world. The former they actually possessed; the latter they could have only in case of their perseverance. Therefore the apostle says, If we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end, i.e., of life. For our participation of glory depends on our continuing steadfast in the faith, to the end of our Christian race. The word hypostasis, which we here translate confidence, signifies properly a "basis" or "foundation"; that on which something else is builded, and by which it is supported. Their faith in Christ Jesus was this hypostasis or "foundation"; on that all their peace, comfort, and salvation was builded. If this were not held fast to the end, Christ in His saving influences could not be held fast; and no Christ, no heaven.

16. For some, when they had heard, did provoke. There is a various reading here, which consists merely in the different placing of an accent, and yet gives the whole passage a different turn—tines, if read with the accent on the epsilon. Tines is the plural indefinite, and signifies some, as in our translation; if read with the accent on the iota, it has an interrogative meaning; and, according to this, the whole clause, "But who were those hearers who did bitterly provoke? Were they not all they who came out of the land of Egypt by Moses?" Or the whole clause may be read with one interrogation: "But who were those hearers that did bitterly provoke, but all those who came out of Egypt by Moses?" It is more likely that this is the true reading, as all that follows to the end of the eighteenth verse is a series of interrogations.

17. Whose carcasses fell. "Whose members fell," the members of the body.

18. To whom sware he. God never acts by any kind of caprice; whenever He pours out His judgments, there are the most positive reasons to vindicate His conduct.

19. So we see that they could not enter in. It was no decree of God that prevented them; it was no want of necessary strength to enable them; it was through no deficiency of divine counsel to instruct them. All these they had in abundance; but they chose to sin, and would not believe. Unbelief produced disobedience, and disobedience produced hardness of heart and blindness of mind; and all these drew down the judgments of God, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost.

I. Our privileges by Christ under the gospel are not only as great, but greater than those enjoyed under the Mosaic law. We have a promise left us of entering into his rest. This promise of spiritual rest is a promise left us by the Lord Jesus Christ in his last will and testament, as a precious legacy. Our business is to see to it that we be the legatees, and so have the prospect and earnest of perfect and everlasting rest in heaven.

Those who enjoy the gospel should maintain a holy fear and jealousy over themselves, v. 1. Those who might have attained salvation by faith may fall short by unbelief. It is a dreadful thing so much as to seem to fall short of the gospel salvation. It is much more dreadful really to fall short. Maintain a holy and religious fear lest we should fall short. Presumption is the high road to ruin.

II. We have as great advantages as they (v. 2); the same gospel for substance was preached under both Testaments. We have the gospel as well as they, and in greater purity and perspicuity than they had.

Vss. 1-16. THE PROMISE OF GOD'S REST IS FULLY REALIZED THROUGH CHRIST: LET US STRIVE TO OBTAIN IT BY HIM, OUR SYMPATHIZING HIGH PRIEST. 1. Let us . . . fear—not with slavish terror, but godly "fear and trembling" (Phil. 2:12). Since so many have fallen, we have cause to fear (ch. 3:17-19). being left us—still remaining to us after the others have, by neglect, lost it. his rest—God's heavenly rest, of which Canaan is the type. "Today" still continues, during which there is the danger of failing to reach the rest. "Today," rightly used, terminates in the rest which, when once obtained, is never lost (Rev. 3:12). A foretaste of the rest is given in the inward rest which the believer's soul has in Christ. should seem to come short of it—Greek, "to have come short of it"; should be found, when the great trial of all shall take place [ALFORD], to have fallen short of attaining the promise. The word "seem" is a mitigating mode of expression, though not lessening the reality. BENGEL and OWEN take it, Lest there should be any semblance or appearance of falling short. 2. gospel preached . . . unto them—in type: the earthly Canaan, wherein they failed to realize perfect rest, suggesting to them

1. Let us therefore fear. Seeing the Israelites lost the rest of Canaan through obstinacy and unbelief, let us be afraid lest we come short of the heavenly rest through the same cause. Should seem to come short of it. "Lest any of us should actually come short of it"; i.e., miss it. Come short. The verb is applied here metaphorically; it is an allusion, of which there are many in this Epistle, to the races in the Grecian games.

2. For unto us was the gospel preached. "For we also have received good tidings as well as they." They had a gracious promise of entering into an earthly rest; we have a gracious promise of entering into a heavenly rest. God gave them every requisite advantage; He has done the same to us. Moses and the elders spoke the word of God plainly and forcibly to them; Christ and His apostles have done the same to us. They might have persevered; so may we. They disbelieved, disobeyed and fell; and so may we. But the word preached did not profit them. "But the word of hearing did not profit them." The word and promise to which the apostle most prob-

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The reason why so few of the ancient Jews profited by that dispensation of the gospel was their want of faith, v. 2. The word is preached to us that we may profit by it; it is a price put into our hands to get wisdom. There have been in all ages a great many unprofitable hearers. Those who are not gainers by hearing are great losers. That which is at the bottom of all our unprofitableness is our unbelief. If the hearers have not faith in their souls to mix with the word, they will be never the better for it. This faith must mingle with every word, and be in act and exercise while we are hearing.

V. The apostle confirms the happiness of all those who truly believe the gospel.

1. By asserting so positively the truth of it, from the experience of himself and others: "We who have believed, do enter into rest," v. 3.

2. He illustrates and confirms it. (1) From God's finishing his work of creation, and so entering into his rest (v. 3, 4). He will cause those who believe to finish their work, and then to enjoy their rest.

that they should look beyond to the heavenly land of rest, to which faith is the avenue, and from which unbelief excludes, as it did from the earthly Canaan. the word preached—lit., "the word of hearing": the word heard by them. not being mixed with faith in them that heard—So the Syriac and the Old Latin Versions, older than any of our MSS., and LUCIFER, read, "As the world did not unite with the hearers in faith." The word heard being the food which, as the bread of life, must pass into flesh and blood through man's appropriating it to himself in faith. Hearing alone is of as little value as undigested food in a bad stomach [THOLUCK]. The whole of oldest extant MS. authority supports a different reading, "unmingled as they were (Greek accusative agreeing with 'them') in faith with its hearers," i.e., with its believing, obedient hearers, as Caleb and Joshua. So "hear" is used for "obey" in the context, vs. 7, "Today, if ye will hear His voice." The disobedient, instead of being blended in "the same body," separated themselves as Korah: a tacit reproof to like separatists from the Christian assembling together (ch. 10:25; Jude 19).

3. For—justifying his assertion of the need of "faith," vs. 2. we which have believed—we who at Christ's coming shall be found to have believed. do enter—i.e., are to enter: so two of the oldest MSS. and LUCIFER and the old Latin. Two other oldest MSS. read, "Let us enter." into rest—Greek, "into the rest" which is promised in the 95th Psalm. as he said—God's saying that unbelief excludes from entrance implies that belief gains an entrance into the rest. What, however, Paul mainly here dwells on in the quotation is that the promised "rest" has not yet been entered into. At vs. 11 he again, as in ch. 3:12-19 already, takes up faith as the indispensable qualification for entering it. although . . .—Although God had finished His works of creation and entered on His rest from creation long before Moses' time, yet under that leader of Israel another rest was promised, which most fell short of through unbelief; and although the rest in Canaan was subsequently attained under Joshua, yet long after, in David's days, God, in the 95th Psalm, still speaks of the rest of God as not yet attained. THEREFORE, there must be meant a rest still future, viz., that which "remaineth for the people of God" in heaven, vss. 3-9, when they shall rest from their works, as God did from His, vs. 10. The argument is to show that by "My rest," God means a future rest, not for Himself, but for us. finished—Greek, "brought into existence," "made." 4. he spake—God (Gen. 2:2). God did rest the seventh day—a rest not ending with the seventh day, but beginning then and still continuing, into which believers shall hereafter enter. God's rest is not a rest necessitated by fatigue, nor consisting in idleness, but is that upholding and governing of which creation was the beginning [ALFORD]. Hence Moses records the end of each of the first six days, but not of the seventh. from all his works—Hebrew, Genesis 2:2, "from all His work." God's "work" was one, comprehending, however, many "works." 5. in this place—In this passage of the Psalm again, it is implied that the rest was even then still future. 6. it remaineth—still to be realized. some must enter—The denial of entrance to unbelievers is a virtual promise of entrance to those that believe. God wishes not His rest to be empty, but furnished with guests (Luke 14:23). they to whom it was first preached entered not—lit., "they who first (in the time of Moses) had the Gospel preached to them," viz., in type, as Note, vs. 2. unbelief—Greek, rather "disobedience" (Note, ch. 3:18).

7. Again—Anew the promise recurs. Translate as the Greek order is, "He limited a certain day, 'Today.'" Here Paul ably refers is that in Deut. i. 20-21. "Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the Lord our God doth give unto us. Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee; fear not." But instead of attending to the word of the Lord by Moses, the whole congregation murmured against him and Aaron, and "said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt," Num. xiv. 2, 4. Not being mixed with faith in them that heard. The word mixed is peculiarly expressive; it is a metaphor taken from the nutrition of the human body by mixing the aliment taken into the stomach with the saliva and gastric juice, in consequence of which it is concocted, digested, reduced into chyle, which, absorbed by the lacteal vessels and thrown into the blood, becomes the means of increasing and supporting the body, all the solids and fluids being thus generated; so that on this process, properly performed, depend (under God) strength, health, and life itself. Should the most nutritive aliment be received into the stomach, if not mixed with the above juices, it would be rather the means of death than of life; or, in the word of the apostle, it would not profit because not thus mixed. Faith in the word preached, in reference to that God who sent it, is the grand means of its becoming the power of God to the salvation of the soul.

3. For we which have believed do enter into rest. The great spiritual blessings, the forerunners of eternal glory, which were all typified by that earthly rest or felicity promised to the ancient Israelites, we Christians do, by believing in Christ Jesus, actually possess. We have peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost, are saved from the guilt and power of sin, and thus enjoy an inward rest. But this is a rest differing from the seventh day's rest, or Sabbath, which was the original type of Canaan, the blessings of the gospel, and eternal glory; seeing God said, concerning the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, I have sworn in my wrath that they shall not enter into my rest, notwithstanding the works of creation were finished, and the seventh day's rest was instituted from the foundation of the world; consequently the Israelites had entered into that rest before the oath was sworn. From the foundation of the world. The foundation of the world means the completion of the work of creation in six days.

4. For he spake in a certain place. This certain place or "somewhere" is probably Gen. ii. 2; and refers to the completion of the work of creation, and the setting apart the seventh day as a day of rest for man, and a type of everlasting felicity.

5. And in this place again. In the ninety-fifth psalm, already quoted, v. 3. This was a second rest which the Lord promised to the believing, obedient seed of Abraham; and as it was spoken of in the days of David, when the Jews actually possessed this long promised Canaan, therefore it is evident that that was not the rest which God intended, as the next verse shows.

6. It remaineth that some must enter therein. Why our translators put in the word must here I cannot even conjecture. I hope it was not to serve a system, as some have since used it: "Some must go to heaven, for so is the doctrine of the decree; and there must be certain persons infallibly brought thither as a reward to Christ for His sufferings; and in this the will of man and free agency can have no part." Now supposing that even all this was true, yet it does not exist either positively or by implication in the text. The words literally translated are as follows: "Seeing then it remaineth for some to enter into it"; or, "Whereas therefore it remaineth that some enter into it, and they to whom it was first preached (they to whom the promise was given; they who first received the good tidings; i.e., the Israelites, to whom was given the promise of entering into the rest of Canaan) did not enter in because of their unbelief"; and the promise still continued to be repeated even in the days of David; therefore some other rest must be intended.

7. He limiteth a certain day. The term day signifies not only time in general, but also present time, and a particular space. Day here

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) From God's continuing the observance of the sabbath. There is a more spiritual sabbath remaining for the people of God than that into which Joshua led the Jews (v. 6–9). Believers shall enter into their rest, v. 10.

VI. The apostle confirms the misery of those who do not believe; they shall never enter into this spiritual rest, either of grace here or glory hereafter. It remains only for the people of God; others by their sin abandon themselves to eternal restlessness.

Verses 11–16

I. A serious exhortation, v. 11. The end proposed —rest in Christ on earth, with Christ in heaven. The way to this end prescribed—labour, diligent labour; this is the only way to rest; those who will not work now shall not rest hereafter. Let us therefore labour, let us all call upon one another to this diligence. Now is our working time, our rest remains.

II. Powerful motives to make the advice effectual.

1. Lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. To have seen so many fall before us will be a great aggravation of our sin, if we will not take warning by them.

2. The great help we may have from the word of God that we may obtain this rest, v. 12.

interrupts the quotation by, "In (the Psalm of) David saying after so long a time" (after 500 years' possession of Canaan), and resumes it by, "as it has been said before (so the Greek oldest MS., before, viz., ch. 3:7, 15), Today if ye hear His voice . . ." [ALFORD]. 8. Answer to the objection which might be made to his reasoning, viz., that those brought into Canaan by Joshua (so "Jesus" here means, as in Acts 7:45) did enter the rest of God. If the rest of God meant Canaan, God would not after their entrance into that land, have spoken (or speak [ALFORD]) of another (future) day of entering the rest. 9. therefore—because God "speaks of another day" (Note, vs. 8). remaineth—still to be realized hereafter by the "some (who) must enter therein" (vs. 6), i.e., "the people of God," the true Israel who shall enter into God's rest ("My rest," vs. 3). God's rest was a Sabbatism; so also will ours be. a rest—Greek, "Sabbatism." In time there are many Sabbaths, but then there shall be the enjoyment and keeping of a Sabbath rest: one perfect and eternal. The "rest" in vs. 8 is Greek catapausis; Hebrew, Noah; rest from weariness, as the ark rested on Ararat after its tossings to and fro; and as Israel, under Joshua, enjoyed at last rest from war in Canaan. But the "rest" in this vs. 9 is the nobler and more exalted (Hebrew) "Sabbath" rest; lit., "cessation": rest from work when finished (vs. 4), as God rested (Rev. 16:17). The two ideas of "rest" combined, give the perfect view of the heavenly Sabbath. Rest from weariness, sorrow, and sin; and rest in the completion of God's new creation (Rev. 21:5). 10. For—justifying and explaining the word "rest," or "Sabbatism," just used (Note, vs. 9). he that is entered—whosoever once enters. his rest—God's rest: the rest prepared by God for His people [ESTIUS]. Rather, His rest: the man's rest: that assigned to him by God as his. The Greek is the same as that for "his own" immediately after. hath ceased—The Greek aorist is used of indefinite time, "is wont to cease," or rather, "rest": rests. The past tense implies at the same time the certainty of it, as also that in this life a kind of foretaste in Christ is already given [GROTIUS] (Jer. 6:16; Matt. 11:28, 29). Our highest happiness shall, according to this verse, consist in our being united in one with God, and moulded into conformity with Him as our archetype [CALVIN]. from his own works—even from those that were good and suitable to the time of doing work. Labor was followed by rest even in Paradise (Gen. 2: 3, 15). The work and subsequent rest of God are the archetype to which we should be conformed. The argument is: He who once enters rest, rests from labors; but God's people have not yet rested from them, therefore they have not yet entered the rest, and so it must be still future. ALFORD translates, "He that entered into his (or else God's, but rather 'his'; Isa. 11:10, 'His rest': 'the joy of the Lord,' Matt. 25:21,23) rest (viz., Jesus, our Forerunner, vs. 14; ch. 6:20, 'The Son of God that is passed through the heavens': in contrast to Joshua the type, who did not bring God's people into the heavenly rest), he himself (emphatical) rested from his works (vs. 4), as God (did) from His own" (so the Greek, "works") 11. Let us . . . therefore—Seeing such a promise is before us, which we may, like them, fall short of through unbelief. labour—Greek, "strive diligently." that rest—which is still future and so glorious. Or, in ALFORD'S translation of vs. 10, "That rest into which Christ has entered before" (vs. 14; ch. 6:20). fall—with the soul, not merely the body, as the rebel Israelites fell (ch. 3:17). after the same example—ALFORD translates, "fall into the same example." The less prominent place of the "fall" in the Greek favors this. The sense is, "lest any fall into such disobedience (so the Greek for 'unbelief' means) as they gave a sample of" [GROTIUS]. The Jews say, "The parents are a sign (warning) to their sons." 12. For—Such diligent striving (vs. 11) is incumbent on us(FOR we have to do with a God whose "word" whereby we shall be judged, is heart-searching, and whose eyes are all-seeing (vs. 13). The qualities here attributed to the word of God, and the whole context, show that it is regarded in its JUDICIAL power, whereby it doomed the disobedient Israelites to exclusion from Canaan, and shall exclude unbelieving so-called Christians from the heavenly rest. The written Word of God is not the prominent thought here, though the passage is often quoted as if it were. Still the word of God (the same as that preached, vs. 2), used here in the broadest sense, but with special reference to its judicial power, INCLUDES the Word of God, the sword of the Spirit with double edge, one edge for convicting and converting some (vs. 2), and the other for condemning seems to have the same meaning as "rest" in some other parts of this verse. The day or time of rest relative to the ancient Jews being over and past, and a long time having elapsed between God's displeasure shown to the disobedient Jews in the wilderness and the days of David, and the true rest not having been enjoyed, God in His mercy has instituted another day—has given another dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus; and now it may be said, as formerly, To day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. God speaks now as He spoke before; His voice is in the gospel as it was in the law. Believe, love, obey, and you shall enter into this rest.

8. For if Jesus had given them rest. It is truly surprising that our translators should have rendered the text Jesus, and not "Joshua," who is most clearly intended. They must have known that the Yehoshua of the Hebrew, which we write "Joshua," is everywhere rendered Jesus by the Septuagint; and it is their reading which the apostle follows. It is "Joshua" in Coverdale's Testament, 1535; in Tindal's 1548; several modern translators, Wesley, Macknight, Wakefield, etc., read "Joshua," as does our own in the margin. What a pity it had not been in the text, as all the smaller Bibles have no marginal readings and many simple people are bewildered with the expression! The apostle shows that, although Joshua did bring the children of Israel into the Promised Land, yet this could not be the intended rest, because long after this time the Holy Spirit, by David, speaks of this rest. The apostle therefore concludes,

9. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. It was not (1) the rest of the Sabbath; it was not (2) the rest in the Promised Land, for the Psalmist wrote long after the days of Joshua. Therefore there is another rest, a state of blessedness, for the people of God; and this is the gospel, the blessings it procures and communicates, and the eternal glory which it prepares for, and has promised to, genuine believers.

There are two words in this chapter which we indifferently translate rest, katapausis and sabbatismos, the first signifying a "cessation from labour," so that the weary body is rested and refreshed; the second meaning, not only a rest from labor, but a "religious rest"—a rest of a sacred kind, of which both soul and body partake. This is true whether we understand the rest as referring to gospel blessings, or to eternal felicity, or to both.

10. For he that is entered into his rest. The man who has believed in Christ Jesus has entered into His rest, the state of happiness which He has provided and which is the forerunner of eternal glory. Hath ceased from his own works. No longer depends on the observance of Mosaic rites and ceremonies for his justification and final happiness. He rests from all these works of the law as fully as God has rested from His works of creation. Those who restrain the word rest to the signification of eternal glory say that ceasing from our own works relates to the sufferings, tribulations, afflictions of this life, as in Rev. xiv. 13. I understand it as including both.

11. Let us labour therefore. The word implies every exertion of body and mind which can be made in reference to the subject. Lest any man fall. Lest he fall off from the grace of God, from the gospel and its blessings, and perish everlastingly. This is the meaning of the apostle, who never supposed that a man might not make final shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience as long as he was in a state of probation.

12. For the word of God is quick, and powerful. Commentators are greatly divided concerning the meaning of the phrase the word of God; some supposing the whole of divine revelation to be intended; others, the doctrine of the gospel faithfully preached; others, the mind of God or the divine intellect; and others, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is thus denominated in John i and Rev. xix. 13, the only places in which He is thus incontestably characterized in the New Testament. Mr. Wesley's note on this verse is expressed with his usual precision and accuracy: "For the word of God—preached, v. 2, and armed with threatenings, v. 3, is living and

It is quick; it is very lively and active, in seizing the conscience of the sinner, in cutting him to the heart, and in comforting him and binding up the wounds of the soul. It is powerful. It convinces powerfully, converts powerfully, and comforts powerfully. It is powerful to batter down Satan's kingdom, and to set up the kingdom of Christ upon the ruins thereof. It is sharper than any two-edged sword.

It will enter where no other sword can, and make a more critical dissection: it pierces to the dividing asunder of the soul and the spirit, the soul and its habitual prevailing temper; it makes a soul that has been a long time of a proud spirit to be humble, of a perverse spirit to be meek and obedient. This sword divides between the joints and the marrow. This sword can make men willing to undergo the sharpest operation for the mortifying of sin.

It is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The word will turn the inside of a sinner out, and let him see all that is in his heart.

3. The perfections of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(1) His person, particularly his omniscience, v. 13. None of the creatures can be concealed from Christ; and there are none of the motions and workings of our heads and hearts but what are open and manifest to him. This omniscience of Christ should engage us to persevere in faith and obedience.

(2) His office, and this particular office of our high priest.

[1] What kind of high priest Christ is (v. 14). First, A great high priest. The greatness of our high priest is set forth by his having passed into the heavens. Christ executed one part of his priesthood on earth, in dying for us; the other he executes in heaven, by pleading the cause of his people. The greatness of Christ is set forth by his name, Jesus—a physician and a Saviour, able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by him.

Secondly, He is not only a great, but a gracious high priest, merciful, compassionate, and sympathizing with his people, v. 15. He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, not only that he might be able to satisfy for us, but to sympathize with us.

and destroying the unbelieving (vs. 14). quick—Greek, "living"; having living power, as "the rod of the mouth and the breath of the lips" of "the living God." powerful—Greek, "energetic"; not only living, but energetically efficacious. sharper—"more cutting." two-edged—sharpened at both edge and back. Cf. "sword of the Spirit . . . word of God" (Eph. 6:17). Its double power seems to be implied by its being "two-edged." "It judges all that is in the heart, for there it passes through, at once punishing [unbelievers] and searching" [both believers and unbelievers] [CHRYSOSTOM]. piercing—Greek, "coming through." even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit—i.e., reaching through even to the separation of the animal soul, the lower part of man's incorporeal nature, the seat of animal desires, which he has in common with the brutes; cf. the same Greek, I Corinthians 2:14, "the natural [animalsouled] man" (Jude 19), from the spirit (the higher part of man, receptive of the Spirit of God, and allying him to heavenly beings). and of the joints and marrow—rather, (reaching even TO) "both the joints (so as to divide them) and marrow." Christ "knows what is in man" (John 2: 25): so His word reaches as far as to the most intimate and accurate knowledge of man's most hidden parts, feelings, and thoughts, dividing, i.e., distinguishing what is spiritual from what is carnal and animal in him, the spirit from the soul: so Proverbs 20:27. As the knife of the Levitical priest reached to dividing parts, closely united as the joints of the limbs, and penetrated to the innermost parts, as the marrows (the Greek is plural); so the word of God divides the closely joined parts of man's immaterial being, soul and spirit, and penetrates to the innermost parts of the spirit.

discerner of the thoughts—Greek, "capable of judging the purposes." intents—rather, "conceptions" [CRELLIUS]; "ideas" [ALFORD]. As the Greek for "thoughts" refers to the mind and feelings, so that for "intents," or rather "mental conceptions," refers to the intellect. 13. creature—visible or invisible. in his sight—in God's sight (vs. 12). "God's wisdom, simply manifold, and uniformly multiform, with incomprehensible comprehension, comprehends all things incomprehensible." opened—lit., "thrown on the back so as to have the neck laid bare," as a victim with neck exposed for sacrifice. The Greek perfect tense implies that this is our continuous state in relation to God. "Show, O man, shame and fear towards thy God, for no veil, no twisting, bending, coloring, or disguise, can cover unbelief" (Greek, "disobedience," vs. 11). Let us, therefore, earnestly labor to enter the rest lest any fall through practical unbelief (vs. 11). 14. having, therefore . . .—resuming ch. 2:17. great—as being "the Son of God, higher than the heavens" (ch. 7:26): the archetype and antitype of the legal high priest. passed into the heavens—rather, "passed through the heavens," viz., those which come between us and God, the aerial heaven, and that above the latter containing the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon, etc. These heavens were the veil which our High Priest passed through into the heaven of heavens, the immediate presence of God, just as the Levitical high priest passed through the veil into the Holy of Holies. Neither Moses, nor even Joshua, could bring us into this rest, but Jesus, as our Forerunner, already spiritually, and hereafter in actual presence, body, soul, and spirit, brings His people into the heavenly rest. Jesus—the antitypical Joshua (vs. 8). hold fast—the opposite of "let slip" (ch. 2:1); and "fall away" (ch. 6: 6). As the genitive follows, the lit., sense is, "Let us take hold of our profession," i.e., of the faith and hope which are subjects of our profession and confession. The accusative follows when the sense is "hold fast" [TITTMANN]. 15. For—the motive to "holding our profession" (vs. 14), viz., the sympathy and help we may expect from our High Priest. Though "great" (vs. 14), He is not above caring for us; nay, as being in all points one with us as to manhood, sin only excepted, He sympathizes with us in every temptation. Though exalted to the highest heavens, He has changed His place, not His nature and office in relation to us, His condition, but not His affection. Cf. Matthew 26:38, "watch with me": showing His desire in the days of His flesh for the sympathy of those whom He loved: so He now gives His suffering people His sympathy. Cf. Aaron, the type, bearing the names of the twelve tribes in the breastplate of judgment on his heart, when he entered into the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord continually (Exod. 28:29). cannot be touched with the feeling of—Greek, "cannot sympathize with our infirmities": our weaknesses, physical and moral (not sin, but powerful—attended with the power of the living God, and conveying either life or death to the hearers; sharper than any twoedged sword—penetrating the heart more than this does the body; piercing quite through, and laying open, the soul and spirit, joints and marrow—the inmost recesses of the mind, which the apostle beautifully and strongly expresses by this heap of figurative words; and is a discerner, not only of the thoughts, but also of the intentions." The law, the Word of God in general, is repeatedly compared to a twoedged sword among the Jewish writers. Is a discerner of the thoughts. "Is a critic of the propensities and suggestions of the heart." How many have felt this property of God's Word where it has been faithfully preached! How often has it happened that a man has seen the whole of his own character and some of the most private transactions of his life held up as it were to public view by the preacher, and yet the parties absolutely unknown to each other! Some, thus exhibited, have even supposed that their neighbors must have privately informed the preacher of their character and conduct; but it was the Word of God which, by the direction and energy of the divine Spirit, thus searched them out, was a critical Examiner of the propensities and suggestions of their hearts, and had pursued them through all their public haunts and private ways. Every genuine minister of the gospel has witnessed such effects as these under his ministry in repeated instances.

13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest. God, from this word comes and by whom it has all its efficacy, is infinitely wise. And so infinite is He in His knowledge, and so omnipresent is He, that the whole creation is constantly exposed to His view; nor is there a creature of the affections, mind, or imagination that is not constantly under His eye. But all things are naked and opened. The verb opened signifies to have the "neck bent back" so as to expose the face to full view, that every feature might be seen; and this was often done with criminals, in order that they might be the better recognized and ascertained. With whom we have to do. "To whom we must give an account." He is our Judge, and is well-qualified to be so, as all our hearts and actions are naked and opened to him.

14. Seeing then that we have a great high priest. It is contended, and very properly, that the particle which we translate seeing, as if what followed was an immediate inference from what the apostle had been speaking, should be translated "now"; for the apostle, though he had before mentioned Christ as the "High Priest of our profession," chap. iii. 1, and as the High Priest who made "reconciliation for the sins of the people," chap. ii. 17, does not attempt to prove this in any of the preceding chapters, but now enters upon that point, and discusses it at great length to the end of chap. x.

After all, it is possible that this may be a resumption of the discourse from chap. iii. 6, the rest of that chapter and the preceding thirteen verses of this being considered as a parenthesis. These parts left out, the discourse runs on with perfect connection. It is very likely that the words here are spoken to meet an objection of those Jews who wished the Christians of Palestine to apostatize: "You have no Tabernacle—no Temple—no high priest—no sacrifice for sin. Without these there can be no religion; return therefore to us, who have the perfect Temple service appointed by God." To these he answers: "We have a . . . high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God; therefore let us hold fast our profession. Three things the apostle professes to prove in this Epistle: (1) That Christ is greater than the angels. (2) That He is greater than Moses. (3) That He is greater than Aaron and all high priests. The former two arguments, with their applications and illustrations, he has already dispatched; and now he enters on the third. See the preface to this Epistle.

15. For we have not an high priest. To the objection, "Your High Priest, if entered into the heavens, can have no participation with you, and no sympathy for you, because out of the reach of human feelings and infirmities," he answers: "We have not a high priest who can-

Thirdly, He is a sinless high priest: He was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin. We seldom meet with temptations but they give us some shock. We are apt to give back, though we do not yield; but our great high priest came off clear in his encounter with the devil.

[2] How we should demean ourselves towards him. Let us hold fast our profession of faith in him, v. 14. Let us never deny him, never be ashamed of him before men. Christians must not only set out well, but they must hold out. We should encourage ourselves to come boldly to the throne of grace, v. 16. There is a throne of grace set up. God might have set up a tribunal of strict justice, but he has chosen to set up a throne of grace. There grace reigns, and acts with sovereign freedom, power, and bounty. It is our duty to be often found before this throne of grace. It is good for us to be there. Our business at the throne of grace should be that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. Mercy and grace are the things we want, mercy to pardon all our sins and grace to purify our souls. In all our approaches to this throne of grace for mercy, we should come with a humble freedom and boldness; we should ask in faith, nothing doubting. We are indeed to come with reverence and godly fear; not as if we were dragged before the tribunal of justice, but kindly invited to the mercy-seat, where grace reigns, and loves to exert and exalt itself towards us. The office of Christ, as being our high priest, and such a high priest, should be the ground of our confidence in all our approaches to the throne of grace.

liability to its assaults). He, though sinless, can sympathize with us sinners; His understanding more acutely perceived the forms of temptation than we who are weak can; His will repelled them as instantaneously as the fire does the drop of water cast into it. He, therefore, experimentally knew what power was needed to overcome temptations. He is capable of sympathizing, for He was at the same time tempted without sin, and yet truly tempted [BENGEL]. In Him alone we have an example suited to men of every character and under all circumstances. In sympathy He adapts himself to each, as if He had not merely taken on Him man's nature in general, but also the peculiar nature of that single individual. but—"nay, rather, He was (one) tempted" [ALFORD]. like as we are—Greek, "according to (our) similitude." without sin—Greek, choris, "separate from sin" (ch. 7:26). If the Greek aneu had been used, sin would have been regarded as the object absent from Christ the subject; but choris here implies that Christ, the subject, is regarded as separated from sin the object [TITTMANN]. Thus, throughout His temptations in their origin, process, and result, sin had nothing in Him; He was apart and separate from it [ALFORD]. 16. come—rather as Greek, "approach," "draw near." boldly—Greek, "with confidence," or "freedom of speech" (Eph. 6:19). the throne of grace—God's throne is become to us a throne of grace through the mediation of our High Priest at God's right hand (ch. 8:1; 12:2). Pleading our High Priest Jesus' meritorious death, we shall always find God on a throne of grace. Contrast Job's complaint (Job 23:3-8) and Elihu's "IF . . ." (Job 33:23-28). obtain—rather, "receive." mercy—"Compassion," by its derivation (lit., fellow feeling from community of suffering), corresponds to the character of our High Priest "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" (vs. 15). find grace—corresponding to "throne of grace." Mercy especially refers to the remission and removal of sins; grace, to the saving bestowal of spiritual gifts [ESTIUS]. Cf. Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest (the rest received on first believing); take My yoke on you . . . and ye shall find rest (the continuing rest and peace found in daily submitting to Christ's easy yoke; the former answers to "receive mercy" here; the latter, to "find grace," Matt. 11:28, 29). in time of need—Greek, "seasonably." Before we are overwhelmed by the temptation; when we most need it, in temptations and persecutions; such as is suitable to the time, persons, and end designed (Ps. 104:27). A supply of grace is in store for believers against all exigencies; but they are only supplied with it according as the need arises. Cf. "in due time," Romans 5. 6. Not, as ALFORD explains, "help in time," i.e., today, while it is yet open to us; the accepted time (II Cor. 6:2). help—Cf. ch. 2:18, "He is able to succor them that are tempted."

not sympathize with our weakness." Though He be the Son of God and equal in His divine nature with God, yet, having partaken of human nature, and having submitted to all its trials and distresses, and being in all points tempted like as we are . . . without feeling or consenting to sin, He is able to succor them that are tempted. See chap. ii. 18. The words might be translated "in all points according to the likeness," i.e., as far as His human nature could bear affinity to ours. For though He had a perfect human body and human soul, yet that body was perfectly tempered; it was free from all morbid action, and consequently from all irregular movements. His mind, or human soul, being free from all sin, being every way perfect, could feel no irregular temper, nothing that was inconsistent with infinite purity.

16. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace. The allusion to the high priest and his office on the Day of Atonement is here kept up. The approach mentioned here is to the propitiatory or mercy seat. This was the covering of the ark of the testimony or covenant, at each end of which was a cherub, and between them the shechinah, or symbol of the divine majesty, which appeared to, and conversed with, the high priest. The throne of grace in heaven answers to this propitiatory, but to this all may approach who feel their need of salvation; and they may approach with freedom, confidence, liberty of speech, in opposition to the fear and trembling of the Jewish high priest. Here nothing is to be feared, provided the heart be right with God, truly sincere, and trusing alone in the sacrificial Blood. That we may obtain mercy. "That we may take mercy"—that we may receive the pardon of all our sins; there is mercy for the taking. And find grace. Mercy refers to the pardon of sin, and being brought into the favor of God. Grace is that by which the soul is supported after it has received this mercy, and by which it is purified from all unrighteousness, and upheld in all trials and difficulties, and enabled to prove faithful unto death. To help in time of need. "For a seasonable support"; that is, support when necessary, and as necessary, and in due proportion to the necessity. The word is properly rendered "assistance, help, or support"; but it is an assistance in consequence of the earnest cry of the person in distress, for the word signifies "to run at the cry."

An account of the nature of the priestly office in general.

I. Of what kind of beings the high priest must be. He must be taken from among men; he must be a man, one of ourselves. This implies that God would not admit sinful man to come to him immediately and alone; that God was pleased to take one from among men, by whom they might approach God in hope.

II. For whom every high priest is ordained: For men in things pertaining to God, for the glory of God and the good of men.

III. For what purpose every high priest was ordained: That he might offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin.

1. That he might offer gifts or free-will offerings, as an acknowledgment that our all is of him and from him. All we bring to God must be free and not forced; it must be a gift.

2. That he might offer sacrifices for sin. Christ is constituted a high priest for both these ends. Our good deeds must be presented by Christ, and our evil deeds must be expiated by the sacrifice of himself.

IV. How this high priest must be qualified, v. 2.

1. He must be one that can have compassion on the ignorant. He must be one who can find in his heart to pity them, one that is willing to instruct those that are dull of understanding.

CHAPTER 5

VSS. 1-14. CHRIST'S HIGH PRIESTHOOD; NEEDED QUALIFICATIONS; MUST BE A MAN; MUST NOT HAVE ASSUMED THE DIGNITY HIMSELF, BUT HAVE BEEN APPOINTED BY GOD; THEIR LOW SPIRITUAL PERCEPTIONS A BAR TO PAUL'S SAYING ALL HE MIGHT ON CHRIST'S MELCHISEDEC-LIKE PRIESTHOOD. 1. For—substantiating ch. 4:15. every—i.e., every legitimate high priest; for instance, the Levitical, as he is addressing Hebrews, among whom the Levitical priesthood was established as the legitimate one. Whatever, reasons Paul, is excellent in the Levitical priests, is also in Christ, and besides excellencies which are not in the Levitical priests. taken from among men—not from among angels, who could not have a fellow feeling with us men. This qualification Christ has, as being, like the Levitical priest, a man (ch. 2:14, 16). Being "from men," He can be "for (i.e., in behalf of, for the good of) men." ordained—Greek, "constituted," "appointed." both gifts—to be joined with "for sins," as "sacrifices" is (the "both . . . and" requires this); therefore not the Hebrew, mincha, unbloody offerings, but animal whole burnt offerings, spontaneously given. "Sacrifices" are the animal sacrifices due according to the legal ordinance [ESTIUS]. 2. Who can—Greek, "being able"; not pleasing himself (Rom. 15:3). have compassion—Greek, "estimate mildly," "feel leniently," or "moderately towards"; "to make allowance for"; not showing stern rigor save to the obstinate (ch. 10:28). ignorant—sins not committed in resistance of light and knowledge, but as Paul's past sin (I Tim. 1:13). No sacrifice was appointed for wilful sin com-

CHAPTER 5

1. For every high priest taken from among men. This seems to refer to Lev. xxi. 10, where it is intimated that the high priest shall be taken from his brethren; i.e., he shall be of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Aaron. Is ordained for men. Is appointed to preside over the divine worship in those things which relate to man's salvation. That he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. God ever appeared to all His followers in two points of view: (1) as the Author and Dispenser of all temporal good; (2) as their Lawgiver and Judge. In reference to this twofold view of the Divine Being, His worship was composed of two different parts: (1) "offerings" or gifts; (2) sacrifices. As the Creator and Dispenser of all good, He had "offerings" by which His bounty and providence were acknowledged. As the Lawgiver and Judge, against whose injunctions offences had been committed, He had sacrifices offered to Him to make atonement for sin. The gifts mentioned here by the apostle included every kind of eucharistical offering. The sacrifices included victims of every sort, or animals whose lives were to be offered in sacrifice and their blood poured out before God as an atonement for sins.

2. Who can have compassion on the ignorant. The word signifies not merely to have compassion but to "acts with moderation" and to "bear with each in proportion" to his ignorance, weakness, and untoward circumstances, all taken

On those that are out of the way. He must be one who has tenderness enough to lead them back from the by-paths of error, sin, and misery, into the right away: this will require great patience and compassion, even the compassion of a God.

2. He must also be compassed with infirmity; and so be able from himself to sympathize with us. Thus Christ was qualified.

V. How the high priest was to be called of God. (v. 4). The office of the priesthood was a very great honour. Those only can expect his presence and blessing on them and their administrations, that are called of God; others may expect a blast instead of a blessing.

VI. How this is brought home and applied to Christ, v. 5. Though Christ reckoned it his glory to be made a high priest, yet he would not assume that glory to himself. He did not run without being sent; and, if he did not, surely others should be afraid to do it.

VII. The apostle prefers Christ before Aaron. In the manner of his call, in which God said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Now God never said thus to Aaron. Another expression that God used in the call of Christ, v. 6. God the Father appointed him a priest of a higher order than that of Aaron. The priesthood of Aaron was to be but temporary; the priesthood of Christ was to be perpetual. In the holiness of his person. Other priests were to offer up sacrifices, as for the sins of others, so for themselves, v. 3. But Christ needed not to offer for sins for himself.

VIII. Christ's discharge of this his office, and the consequences of that discharge, v. 7–9.

1. The discharge of his office of the priesthood (v. 7). He took to him flesh; he became a mortal man. Christ, in the days of his flesh, subjected himself to death; he was a tempted, bleeding, dying Jesus! God the Father was able to save him from death. What would have become of us if God had saved Christ from dying? It was in kindness to us that the Father would not suffer that bitter cup to pass away from him; for then we must have drunk the dregs of it. Christ, in the days of his flesh, offered up prayers and supplications to his Father. A great many instances we have of Christ's praying. This refers to his prayer in his agony, and to that before his agony.

The prayers and supplications that Christ offered up were joined with strong cries and tears, herein setting us an example. How many dry prayers, how few wet ones, do we offer up to God!

mitted with a high hand; for such were to be punished with death; all other sins, viz., ignorances and errors, were confessed and expiated with sacrifices by the high priest. out of the way—not deliberately and altogether wilfully erring, but deluded through the fraud of Satan and their own carnal frailty and thoughtlessness. infirmity—moral weakness which is sinful, and makes men capable of sin, and so requires to be expiated by sacrifices. This kind of "infirmity" Christ had not; He had the "infirmity" of body whereby He was capable of suffering and death. 3. by reason hereof—"on account of this" infirmity. he ought . . . also for himself, to offer for sins—the Levitical priest ought; in this our High Priest is superior to the Levitical. The second "for" is a different Greek term from the first; "in behalf of the people . . . , on account of sins." 4. no man—of any other family but Aaron's, according to the Mosaic law, can take to himself the office of high priest. This verse is quoted by some to prove the need of an apostolic succession of ordination in the Christian ministry; but the reference here is to the priesthood, not the Christian ministry. The analogy in our Christian dispensation would warn ministers, seeing that God has separated them from the congregation of His people to bring them near Himself, and to do the service of His house, and to minister (as He separated the Levites, Korah with his company), that content with this, they should beware of assuming the sacrificial priesthood also, which belongs to Christ alone. The sin of Korah was, not content with the ministry as a Levite, he took the sacerdotal priesthood also. No Christian minister, as such, is ever called Hiereus, i.e., sacrificing priest. All Christians, without distinction, whether ministers or people, have a metaphorical, not a literal, priesthood. The sacrifices which they offer are spiritual, not literal, their bodies and the fruit of their lips, praises continually (ch. 13:15). Christ alone had a proper and true sacrifice to offer. The law sacrifices were typical, not metaphorical, as the Christian's, nor proper and true, as Christ's. In Roman times the Mosaic restriction of the priesthood to Aaron's family was violated. 5. glorified not himself—did not assume the glory of the priestly office of Himself without the call of God (John 8:54). but he that said—i.e., the Father glorified Him or appointed Him to the priesthood. This appointment was involved in, and was the result of, the Sonship of Christ, which qualified Him for it. None but the divine Son could have fulfilled such an office (ch. 10:5-9). The connection of Sonship and priesthood is typified in the Hebrew title for priests being given to David's sons (II Sam. 8:18). Christ did not constitute Himself the Son of God, but was from everlasting the only-begotten of the Father. On His Sonship depended His glorification, and His being called of God (vs. 10), as Priest. 6. He is here called simply "Priest"; in vs. 5, "High Priest." He is a Priest absolutely, because He stands alone in that character without an equal. He is "High Priest" in respect of the Aaronic type, and also in respect to us, whom He has made priests by throwing open to us access to God [BENGEL]. "The order of Melchisedec" is explained in ch. 7:15, "the similitude of Melchisedec." The priesthood is similarly combined with His kingly office in Zechariah 6:13. Melchisedec was at once man, priest, and king. Paul's selecting as the type of Christ one not of the stock of Abraham, on which the Jews prided themselves, is an intimation of Messianic universalism. 7. in the days of his flesh—(ch. 2:14; 10:20). Verses 7-10 state summarily the subject about to be handled more fully in chs. 7 and 8. when he had offered—rather, "in that He offered." His crying and tears were part of the experimental lesson of obedience which He submitted to learn from the Father (when God was qualifying Him for the high priesthood). "Who" is to be construed with "learned obedience" (or rather as Greek, "His obedience"; the obedience which we all know about). This all shows that "Christ glorified not Himself to be made an High Priest" (vs. 5), but was appointed thereto by the Father. prayers and supplications—Greek, "both prayers and supplications." In Gethsemane, where He prayed thrice, and on the cross, where He cried, My God, my God . . . , probably repeating inwardly all the 22d Psalm. "Prayers" refer to the mind: "supplications" also to the body [viz., the suppliant attitude] (Matt. 26:39) [BENGEL]. with strong crying and tears—The "tears" are an additional fact here communicated to us by the inspired apostle, not recorded in the Gospels, though implied. Matthew 26:37, "sorrowful and very heavy." Mark 14:33; Luke 22:44, "in an agony into consideration with the offenses he has committed; in a word, to pity, feel for, and excuse as far as possible; and when the provocation is at the highest, to moderate one's passion towards the culprit, and be ready to pardon; and when punishment must be administered, to do it in the gentlest manner. The reason given why the high priest should be slow to punish and prone to forgive is that he himself is also "compassed with weakness"; "weakness lies all around him."

3. And by reason hereof. As he is also a transgressor of the commands of God, and unable to observe the law in its spirituality, he must offer sacrifices for sin, not only for the people, but for himself also; this must teach him to have a fellow feeling for others.

4. This honour. "The office," which is one meaning of the word in the best Greek writers. It is here an honorable office, because the man is the high priest of God, and is appointed by God himself to that office. But he that is called of God, as was Aaron. God himself appointed the tribe and family out of which the high priest was to be taken, and Aaron and his sons were expressly chosen by God to fill the office of the high priesthood.

5. Christ glorified not himself. The man Jesus Christ was also appointed by God to this most awful yet glorious office of being the High Priest of the whole human race. Thou art my Son. See on chap. i. 5.

6. He saith also in another place. That is, in Ps. cx. 4, a psalm of extraordinary importance, containing a very striking prediction of the birth, preaching, suffering, death, and conquests of the Messiah. For the mode of quotation here, see the note on chap. ii. 6. Thou art a priest for ever. As long as the sun and moon endure, Jesus will continue to be High Priest to all the successive generations of men, as He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. If He be a priest for ever, there can be no succession of priests. After the order of Melchisedec. Who this person was must still remain a secret. We know nothing more of him than is written in Gen. xiv. 18, etc.

7. Who in the days of his flesh. The time of His incarnation, during which He took all the infirmities of human nature upon Him, and was afflicted in His body and human soul just as other men are, irregular and sinful passions excepted. The Redeemer of the world appears here as simply man; but He is the Representative of the whole human race. He must make expiation for sin by suffering, and He can suffer only as men. Suffering was as necessary as death; for man, because he has sinned, must suffer, and because he has broken the law, should die. Jesus took upon himself the nature of man, subject to all the trials and distresses of human nature. Though He was the Son of God, conceived and born without sin, or anything that could render Him liable to suffering or death, yet to constitute Him a complete Saviour, He must submit to whatever the law required; and therefore He is stated to have "learned . . . obedience by the things which he suffered," v. 8, that is, subjection to all the requisitions of the law; "and being made perfect," that is, having finished the whole by dying, He by these means became the "author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," v. 9; to them who, according to His own command, repent and believe the gospel, and under the influence of His Spirit walk in holiness of life. Prayers and supplications. There may be an allusion here to the manner in which the Jews speak of prayer. "There are three degrees of prayer, each surpassing the other in silence; crying, with a loud voice; but tears surpass all" (Synops. Sohar, p. 33). The apostle shows that Christ made every species of prayer, and those especially by which they allowed a man must be successful with his Maker.

The word hiketerias, which we translate supplications, exists in no other part of the New Testament. Hiketes signifies a supplicant: "He who, in the most humble and servile manner, entreats and begs anything from another."

MATTHEW HENRY

Christ was heard in that he feared. He was answered by present supports in his agonies, and in being carried well through death, and delivered from it by a glorious resurrection. He was carried through death; and there is no real deliverance from death but to be carried well through it. We may have many recoveries from sickness, but we are never saved from death till we are carried well through it.

2. The consequences of this discharge of his office, v. 8, 9, &c.

(1) By these his sufferings he learned obedience, though he was a Son, v. 8. Let none then who are the children of God by adoption expect an absolute freedom from suffering. Though he never was disobedient, yet he never performed such an act of obedience as when he became obedient to death, even to the death of the cross. We should learn by all our afflictions a humble obedience to the will of God.

(2) Hereby he has become the author of eternal salvation to men. This salvation is actually bestowed on none but those who obey Christ. We must hearken to his word, and obey him. He is exalted to be a prince to rule us, as well as a Saviour to deliver us; and he will be a Saviour to none but to those to whom he is a prince. But to those who obey him, he will be the author—the grand cause of their salvation.

Verses 10–14

I. He had many things which he could say to them concerning this mysterious person called Melchisedec, whose priesthood was eternal. There are great mysteries in the person and offices of the Redeemer; Christianity is the great mystery of godliness.

II. The reason why he did not say all those things concerning Christ, our Melchisedec, that he had to say: You are dull of hearing. Dull hearers make the preaching of the gospel a difficult thing, and even many who have some faith are but dull hearers.

III. It was not a mere natural infirmity, but it was a sinful infirmity, v. 12.

1. They might have been so well instructed in the doctrine of the gospel as to have been teachers of others.

2. You have need that one should teach you again, &c. In the oracles of God there are some first principles, plain to be understood and necessary to be learned. There are also deep and sublime mysteries.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

He prayed more earnestly . . . His sweat . . . great drops of blood falling down to the ground." Psalm 22:1 ("roaring . . . cry"), 2, 19, 21, 24; 69:3, 10, "I wept." able to save him from death—Mark 14:36, "All things are possible unto Thee" (John 12:27). His cry showed His entire participation of man's infirmity: His reference of His wish to the will of God, His sinless faith and obedience. heard in that he feared—There is no intimation in Psalm 22, or the Gospels that Christ prayed to be saved from the mere act of dying. What He feared was the hiding of the Father's countenance. His holy filial love must rightly have shrunk from this strange and bitterest of trials without the imputation of impatience. To have been passively content at the approach of such a cloud would have been, not faith, but sin. The cup of death He prayed to be freed from was, not corporal, but spiritual death, i.e., the (temporary) separation of His human soul from the light of God's countenance. His prayer was "heard" in His Father's strengthening Him so as to hold fast His unwavering faith under the trial (My God, my God, was still His filial cry under it. still claiming God as His, though God hid His face), and soon removing it in answer to His cry during the darkness on the cross, "My God, my God . . . ." But see below a further explanation of how He was heard. The Greek lit., is, "Was heard from His fear," i.e., so as to be saved from His fear. Cf. Psalm 22:21, which well accords with this, "Save me from the lion's mouth (His prayer): thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns." Or what better accords with the strict meaning of the Greek noun, "in consequence of His REVERENTIAL FEAR," i.e., in that He shrank from the horrors of separation from the bright presence of the Father, yet was reverentially cautious by no thought or word of impatience to give way to a shadow of distrust or want of perfect filial love. In the same sense ch. 12:28 uses the noun, and ch. 11:7 the verb. 8. Though He WAS (so it ought to be translated: a positive admitted fact: not a mere supposition as were would imply) God's divine Son (whence, even in His agony, He so lovingly and often cried, Father, Matt. 26:39), yet He learned His (so the Greek) obedience, not from His Sonship, but from His sufferings. As the Son, He was always obedient to the Father's will; but the special obedience needed to qualify Him as our High Priest, He learned experimentally in practical suffering. Cf. Philippians 2:6-8, "equal with God, but . . . took upon Him the form of a servant, and became obedient unto death . . . ." He was obedient already before His passion, but He stooped to a still more humiliating and trying form of obedience then. The Greek adage is, Pathemata mathemata, "sufferings, disciplinings." Praying and obeying, as in Christ's case, ought to go hand in hand. 9. made perfect—completed, brought to His goal of learning and suffering through death (ch. 2:10) [ALFORD], viz., at His glorious resurrection and ascension. author—Greek, "cause." eternal salvation—obtained for us in the short "days of Jesus' flesh" (vs. 7; cf. vs. 6, "for ever," Isa. 45:17). unto all . . . that obey him—As Christ obeyed the Father, so must we obey Him by faith. 10. Greek, rather, "Addressed by God (by the appellation) High Priest." Being formally recognized by God as High Priest at the time of His being "made perfect" (vs. 9). He was High Priest already in the purpose of God before His passion; but after it, when perfected, He was formally addressed so. 11. Here he digresses to complain of the low spiritual attainments of the Palestinian Christians and to warn them of the danger of falling from light once enjoyed; at the same time encouraging them by God's faithfulness to persevere. At ch. 6:20 he resumes the comparison of Christ to Melchisedec. hard to be uttered—rather as Greek, "hard of interpretation to speak." Hard for me to state intelligibly to you owing to your dulness about spiritual things. Hence, instead of saying many things, he writes in comparatively few words (ch. 13:22). In the "we," Paul, as usual, includes Timothy with himself in addressing them. ye are—Greek, "ye have become dull" (the Greek, by derivation, means hard to move): this implies that once, when first "enlightened," they were earnest and zealous, but had become dull. 12. for the time—considering the long time that you have been Christians. Therefore this Epistle was not one of those written early. which be the first principles—Greek, "the rudiments of the beginning of." A Pauline phrase (Notes, Gal. 4:3, 9). Ye need not only to be taught the first elements, but also "which they be." oracles of God—viz., of the Old Testament:

ADAM CLARKE

To save him from death. I have already observed that Jesus Christ was the Representative of the human race; and have made some observations on the peculiarity of His sufferings, following the common acceptation of the words in the text, which things are true, howsoever the text may be interpreted. But here we may consider the pronoun him as implying the collective body of mankind. So he made supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save them from death; for I consider "them," of chap. ii. 15, the same or implying the same thing as him in this verse; and, thus understood, all the difficulty vanishes away. On this interpretation I shall give a paraphrase of the whole verse: "Jesus Christ, in the days of His flesh (for He was incarnated that He might redeem the seed of Abraham, the fallen race of man), and in His expiatory sufferings, when representing the whole human race, offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to Him who was able to save them from death. The intercession was prevalent, the passion and sacrifice were accepted, the sting of death was extracted, and Satan was dethroned."

9. And being made perfect. "And having finished all"—having died and risen again. Signifies to have "obtained the goal"; to have ended one's labor, and enjoyed the fruits of it. So when Christ had finished His course of tremendous sufferings and consummated the whole by His death and resurrection, He became the Cause of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. He was consecrated both High Priest and Sacrifice by His offering upon the Cross. He "tasted death for every man"; but He is the author and "cause of eternal salvation only to them who obey him. It is not merely believers, but obedient believers, who shall be finally saved. Therefore this text is an absolute, unimpeachable evidence that it is not the imputed obedience of Christ that saves any man.

10. Called of God an high priest. Being "constituted, hailed, and acknowledged" to be a High Priest.

11. Of whom we have many things to say. The words which we translate of whom are variously applied: (1) To Melchisedec; (2) To Christ, (3) To the endless priesthood. It is likely that the words are to be understood as meaning Jesus, or that endless priesthood of which he was a little before speaking, and which is a subject that carnal Christians cannot easily comprehend. Hard to be uttered. "Difficult to be interpreted," because Melchisedec was a typical person. Or if it refer to the priesthood of Christ, that is still more difficult to be explained, as it implies not only His being constituted a Priest after this typical order, but His paying down the ransom for the sins of the whole world. Dull of hearing. Your souls do not keep pace with the doctrines and exhortations delivered to you. Signifies a person who walks heavily and makes little speed.

12. For when for the time. They had heard the gospel for many years, and had professed to be Christians for a long time; on these accounts they might reasonably have been expected to be well-instructed in divine things, so as to be able to instruct others. Which be the first principles. "Certain first principles or elements." The literal translation of the passage is this: "You have need that one teach you a second time certain elements of the doctrines of Christ, or oracles of God"; i.e., the notices which the prophets gave concerning the priesthood of Jesus Christ, such as are found in Psalms cx and in Isaiah liii. By the oracles of God the writings of the Old Testament are undoubtedly meant. And are

IV. There are in the church babes and persons of full age (v. 12–14), and there are in the gospel milk and strong meat.

Those that are babes, unskilful in the word of righteousness, must be fed with milk. Christ despises not his babes; he has provided suitable food for them.

There is strong meat for those that are of full age, v. 14. The deeper mysteries of religion belong to those that are of a higher class in the school of Christ. Every true Christian stands in need of nourishment. The word of God is food and nourishment to the life of grace.

There are spiritual senses as well as those that are natural. The soul has its sensations as well as the body; these are much depraved and lost by sin, but they are recovered by grace. It is by use and exercise that these senses are improved, made more quick and strong to taste the sweetness of what is good and true, and the bitterness of what is false and evil.

instead of seeing Christ as the end of the Old Testament Scripture, they were relapsing towards Judaism, so as not only not to be capable of understanding the typical reference to Christ of such an Old Testament personage as Melchisedec, but even much more elementary references. are become—through indolence. milk . . . not . . . strong meat—"Milk" refers to such fundamental first principles as he enumerates in ch. 6:1, 2. The solid meat, or food, is not absolutely necessary for preserving life, but is so for acquiring greater strength. Especially in the case of the Hebrews, who were much given to allegorical interpretations of their law, which they so much venerated, the application of the Old Testament types, to Christ and His High Priesthood, was calculated much to strengthen them in the Christian faith [LIMBORCH].

13. useth—Greek, "partaketh," i.e., taketh as his portion. Even strong men partake of milk, but do not make milk their chief, much less their sole, diet. the word of righteousness—the Gospel wherein "the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith" (Rom. 1:17), and which is called "the ministration of righteousness" (II Cor. 3:9). This includes the doctrine of justification and sanctification: the first principles, as well as the perfection, of the doctrine of Christ: the nature of the offices and person of Christ as the true Melchisedec, i.e., "King of righteousness" (cf. Matt. 3:15). 14. strong meat—"solid food." them . . . of full age—lit., "perfect": akin to "perfection" (ch. 6:1).

by reason of use—Greek, "habit." senses—organs of sense. exercised—similarly connected with "righteousness" in ch. 12:11. to discern both good and evil—as a child no longer an infant (Isa. 7:16): so able to distinguish between sound and unsound doctrine. The mere child puts into its mouth things hurtful and things nutritious, without discrimination: but not so the adult. Paul again alludes to their tendency not to discriminate, but to be carried about by strange doctrines, in ch. 13:9.

become such. The words seem to intimate that they had once been better instructed, and had now forgotten that teaching; and this was occasioned by their being "dull of hearing." Either they had not continued to hear or they had heard so carelessly that they were not profited by what they heard. They had probably totally omitted the preaching of the gospel and consequently forgotten all they had learned. Indeed it was to reclaim those Hebrews from backsliding and preserve them from total apostasy that this Epistle was written. Such as have need of milk. Milk is a metaphor by which many authors, both sacred and profane, express the first principles of religion and science. On the contrary, those who had well learned all the first principles of religion and science and knew how to apply them were considered as adults who were capable of receiving "solid food"; i.e., the more difficult and sublime doctrines. The rabbins abound with this figure; it occurs frequently in Philo, and in the Greek ethic writers also. But all these are to derive their nourishment or spiritual instruction from the oracles of God. The word oracle is used by the best Greek writers to signify a "divine speech, or answer of a deity to a question proposed."

13. For every one that useth milk. It is very likely that the apostle, by using this term, refers to the doctrines of the law, which were only the rudiments of religion and were intended to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. The word of righteousness. "The doctrine of justification." I believe this to be the apostle's meaning. He that uses milk, rests in the ceremonies and observances of the law, is unskilful in "the doctrine of justification"; for this requires faith in the sacrificial death of the promised Messiah.

14. But strong meat. The high and sublime doctrines of Christianity: the atonement, justification by faith, the gift of the Holy Ghost, the fullness of Christ dwelling in the souls of men, the resurrection of the body, the glorification of both body and soul in the realms of blessedness, and an endless union with Christ in the throne of His glory. This is the "strong food" which the genuine Christian understands, receives, digests, and by which he grows. By reason of use. Who, by constant hearing, believing, praying, and obedience, use all the graces of God's Spirit; and in the faithful use of them find every one improved, so that they daily grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Have their senses exercised. The word signifies the different organs of sense through which we gain the sensations called seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling. There is something in the soul that answers to all these senses in the body. In the adult Christian these senses are said to be exercised, a metaphor taken from the athletes or contenders in the Grecian games, who were wont to employ all their powers, skill, and agility in mock fights, running, wrestling, that they might be the better prepared for the actual contests when they took place.

Verses 1–8

In order to their growth, Christians must leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ. They must not lose them, they must not despise them, they must not forget them. But they must not rest in them, they must not be always laying the foundation, they must go on, and build upon it. Though some of them were but weak, yet others of them had gained more strength; and they must be provided for suitably. He hoped they would be growing and so be able to digest stronger meat.

I. Several foundation-principles, which must be well laid at first, and then built upon.

1. Repentance from dead works. Take care that you return not to sin again, for then you must have the foundation to lay again. Repentance for and from dead works is a foundation-principle, which must not be laid again, though we must renew our repentance daily.

CHAPTER 6

VSS. 1-14. WARNING AGAINST RETROGRADING, WHICH SOON LEADS TO APOSTASY; ENCOURAGEMENT TO STEADFASTNESS FROM GOD'S FAITHFULNESS TO HIS WORD AND OATH. 1. Therefore—Wherefore: seeing that ye ought not now to be still "babes" (ch. 5:11-14). leaving—getting further forward than the elementary "principles." "As in building a house one must never leave the foundation: yet to be always laboring in 'laying the foundation' would be ridiculous" [CALVIN]. the principles of the doctrine—Greek, "the word of the beginning," i.e., the discussion of the "first principles of Christianity (ch. 5:12). let us go on—Greek, "let us be borne forward," or "bear ourselves forward"; implying active exertion: press on. Paul, in teaching, here classifies himself with the Hebrew readers, or (as they ought to be) learners, and says, Let us together press forward. perfection—the matured knowledge of those who are "of full age" (ch. 5:14) in Christian attainments. foundation of—i.e., consisting in "repentance." repentance from dead works—viz., not springing from the vital principle of faith and love toward God, and so counted, like their

1. Therefore. Because you have been so indolent, slow of heart, and still have so many advantages Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Ceasing to continue in the state of babes, who must be fed with milk—with the lowest doctrines of the gospel, when you should be capable of understanding the highest.

Let us go on unto perfection. Let us never rest till we are adult Christians—till we are saved from all sin, and are filled with the Spirit and power of Christ. The original is very emphatic: "Let us be carried on to this perfection." God is ever ready by the power of His Spirit to carry us forward to every degree of light, life, and love necessary to prepare us for an eternal weight of glory. Many make a violent outcry against the doctrine of perfection, i.e., against the heart being cleansed from all sin in this life and filled with love to God and man, because they judge it to be impossible! Is it too much to say of these that they know neither the Scripture nor the power of God? Surely the Scripture promises

2. Faith towards God. Repentance from dead works, and faith towards God, are connected, and always go together; they are inseparable twins, the one cannot live without the other.

3. The doctrine of baptisms. This ordinance of baptism is a foundation to be rightly laid, and daily remembered, but not repeated.

4. Laying on of hands, on persons passing solemnly from their initiated state by baptism to the confirmed state. Or by this may be meant ordination of persons to the ministerial office. This is to be done but once.

5. The resurrection of the dead.
6. Eternal judgment.
These are the great foundation-principles, and from these they must never depart.

II. The apostle declares his readiness to assist the Hebrews in building themselves up on these foundations, v. 3. That resolution is right which is not only made in the sincerity of our hearts, but in a humble dependence upon God. Ministers should not only teach people what to do, but go before them, and along with them, in the way of duty.

III. Spiritual growth is the surest way to prevent apostasy from the faith.

1. He shows how far persons may go in religion, and, after all, fall away, and perish for ever, v. 4, 5. (1) They may be enlightened. It is rather to be understood of notional knowledge and common illumination, of which persons may have a great deal, and yet come short of heaven.

(2) They may taste of the heavenly gift like persons in the market, who taste of what they will not come up to the price of, and so but take a taste, and leave it.

(3) They may be made partakers of the Holy Ghost, of his extraordinary and miraculous gifts. Such gifts in the apostolic age were sometimes bestowed upon those who had no true saving grace.

(4) They may taste of the good word of God; they may hear the word with pleasure, and talk well of it, and yet never have it dwelling richly in them.

doer, dead before God. This repentance from dead works is therefore paired with "faith toward God." The three pairs of truths enumerated are designedly such as JEWISH believers might in some degree have known from the Old Testament, but had been taught more clearly when they became Christians. This accounts for the omission of distinct specification of some essential first principle of Christian truth. Hence, too, he mentions "faith toward God," and not explicitly faith toward Christ (though of course included). Repentance and faith were the first principles taught under the Gospel. 2. the doctrine of baptisms—paired with "laying on of hands," as the latter followed on Christian baptism, and answers to the rite of confirmation in Episcopal churches. Jewish believers passed, by an easy transition, from Jewish baptismal purifications (ch. 9:10, "washings"), baptism of proselytes, and John's baptism, and legal imposition of hands, to their Christian analogues, baptism, and the subsequent laying on of hands, accompanied by the gift of the Holy Ghost (cf. vs. 4). Greek, baptismoi, plural, including Jewish and Christian baptisms, are to be distinguished from baptisma, singular, restricted to Christian baptism. The six particulars here specified had been, as it were, the Christian Catechism of the Old Testament; and such Jews who had begun to recognize Jesus as the Christ immediately on the new light being shed on these fandamental particulars, were accounted as having the elementary principles of the doctrine of Christ [BENGEL]. The first and most obvious elementary instruction of Jews would be the teaching them the typical significance of their own ceremonial law in its Christian fulfilment [ALFORD]. resurrection . . .—held already by the Jews from the Old Testament: confirmed with clearer light in Christian teaching or "doctrine." eternal judgment—judgment fraught with eternal consequences either of joy or of woe. 3. will we do—So some of the oldest MSS. read; but others, "Let us do." "This," i.e., "Go on unto perfection." if God permit—For even in the case of good resolutions, we cannot carry them into effect, save through God "working in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Phil. 2:13). The "for" in vs. 4 refers to this: I say, if God permit, for there are cases where God does not permit, e.g., "it is impossible," etc. Without God's blessing, the cultivation of the ground does not succeed (vs. 7). 4. We must "go on toward perfection"; for if we fall away, after having received enlightenment, it will be impossible to renew us again to repentance. for those—"in the case of those." once enlightened—once for all illuminated by the word of God taught in connection with "baptism" (to which, in vs. 2, as once for all done," once enlightened" here answers); cf. Ephesians 5:26. This passage probably originated the application of the term "illumination" to baptism in subsequent times. Illumination, however, was not supposed to be the inseparable accompaniment of baptism: thus CHRYSOSTOM says, "Heretics have baptism, not illumination: they are baptized in body, but not enlightened in soul: as Simon Magus was baptized, but not illuminated." That "enlightened" here means knowledge of the word of truth, appears from comparing the same Greek word "illuminated," ch. 10:32, with 26, where "knowledge of the truth" answers to it. tasted of the heavenly gift—tasted for themselves. As "enlightened" refers to the sense of sight: so here taste follows. "The heavenly gift"; Christ given by the Father and revealed by the enlightening word preached and written: as conferring peace in the remission of sins; and as the Bestower of the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:19, 20).made partakers of the Holy Ghost—specified as distinct from, though so inseparably connected with, "enlightened," and "tasted of the heavenly gift," Christ, as answering to "laying on of hands" after baptism, which was then generally accompanied with the impartation of the Holy Ghost in miraculous gifts. 5. tasted the good word of God—distinct from "tasted OF (genetive) the heavenly gift"; we do not yet enjoy all the fulness of Christ, but only have a taste OF Him, the heavenly gift now; but believers may taste the whole word (accusative) of God already, viz., God's "good word" of promise. The Old Testament promise of Canaan to Israel typified "the good word of God's" promise of the heavenly rest (ch. 4). Therefore, there immediately follows the clause, "the powers of the world to come." As "enlightening" and "tasting of the heavenly gift," Christ, the Bread of Life, answers to FAITH: so "made partakers of the Holy Ghost," to CHARITY, which is the first fruit of the Spirit: and "tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," to HOPE. Thus the triad of privileges an-the thing, and the power of God can carry us on to the possession of it. Laying again the foundation of repentance. The phrase dead works occurs but once more in the sacred writings, and that is in chap. ix. 14 of this Epistle; and in both places it seems to signify "such works as deserve death"—works of those who were dead in sins, and dead by sentence of the law, because they had by these works broken the law. Repentance may be properly called the foundation of the work of God in the soul of man, because by it we forsake sin and turn to God to find mercy. Faith toward God is also a foundation, or fundamental principle, without which it is impossible to please God, and without which we cannot be saved. By repentance we feel the need of God's mercy; by faith we find that mercy.

2. Of the doctrine of baptisms. I am inclined to think that all the terms in this verse, as well as those in the former, belong to the Levitical law and are to be explained on that ground. Baptisms, or immersions of the body in water, sprinklings, and washings, were frequent as religious rites among the Hebrews, and were all emblematical of that purity which a holy God requires in His worshippers, and without which they cannot be happy here nor glorified in heaven. Laying on of hands was also frequent, especially in sacrifices. The person bringing the victim laid his hands on its head, confessed his sins over it, and then gave it to the priest to be offered to God, that it might make atonement for his transgressions. This also had respect to Jesus Christ, that Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world. The doctrines also of the resurrection of the dead and of eternal judgment were both Jewish, but were only partially revealed and then referred to the gospel. Daniel has taught both, chap. xii. 2: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

3. And this will we do. God being my Helper, I will teach you all the sublime truths of the gospel, and show you how all its excellences were typified by the law, and particularly by its sacrificial system.

4. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened. Before I proceed to explain the different terms in these verses, it is necessary to give my opinion of their design and meaning: (1) I do not consider them as having any reference to any person professing Christianity. (2) They do not belong, nor are they applicable, to backsliders of any kind. (3) They belong to apostates from Christianity; to such as reject the whole Christian system, and its Author, the Lord Jesus. (4) And to those of them only who join with the blaspheming Jews, call Christ an impostor, and vindicate His murderers in having crucified Him as a malefactor; and thus they render their salvation impossible, by willfully and maliciously rejecting the Lord that bought them. No man believing in the Lord Jesus as the great Sacrifice for sin, and acknowledging Christianity as a divine revelation, is here intended, though he may have unfortunately backslidden from any degree of the salvation of God. Once enlightened. Thoroughly instructed in the nature and design of the Christian religion, having received the knowledge of the truth, chap. x. 32; and being convinced of sin, righteousness, and judgment; and led to Jesus, the Saviour of sinners. Tasted of the heavenly gift. Having received the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins, through the Dayspring which from on high had visited them; such having received Christ, the heavenly gift of God's infinite love, John iii. 16. Partakers of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit himself witnessing with their spirits that they were the children of God, and thus assuring them of God's mercy towards them, and of the efficacy of the atonement through which they had received such blessings.

5. And have tasted the good word of God. Have had this proof of the excellence of the promise of God in sending the gospel, the gospel being itself the good word of a good God, the reading and preaching of which they find sweet to the taste of their souls. Genuine believers have an appetite for the Word of God; they taste it, and then their relish for it is the more

(5) They may have tasted of the powers of the world to come. These lengths hypocrites may go, and, after all, turn apostates.

ALBERT BARNES:

It may be remarked respecting the various expressions used here (vv. 4, 5): (1) That they are such as properly denote a renewed state. They obviously describe the condition of a Christian. If they are not, it would be difficult to find any language which would be properly descriptive of the character of a sincere Christian. I regard the description here, therefore, as that which is clearly designed to denote the state of those who were born again, and who were the true children of God; and it seems plain to me that no other interpretation would have ever been thought of, if this view had not seemed to conflict with the doctrine of the "perseverance of the saints." (2) There is a regular gradation here from the first elements of piety in the soul to its highest developments; and, whether the apostle so designed it or not, the language describes the successive steps by which a true Christian advances to the highest stage of Christian experience. The mind is (a) enlightened; then (b) tastes the gifts of heaven, or has some experience of it; then (c) it is made to partake of the influences of the Holy Ghost; then (d) there is experience of the excellence and loveliness of the Word of God; and (e) finally there is a participation of the full "powers" of the new dispensation; of the extraordinary energy which God puts forth in the gospel to sanctify and save the soul.

2. The dreadful case of such as fall away. The greatness of the sin of apostasy. It is crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to open shame. They declare that they approve of what the Jews did in crucifying Christ, and that they would be glad to do the same thing again, and would have him to be a public shame and reproach. The great misery of apostates. It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance. God can renew them to repentance, but he seldom does it; and with men themselves it is impossible.

Their misery is exemplified by a proper similitude, v. 8. To give this the greater force, here is observed the difference that there is between the good ground and the bad. A description of the good ground: It drinketh in the rain that cometh often upon it. Believers do not only taste of the word of God, but they drink it in; and this good ground bringeth forth fruit. And this fruit-field or garden receives the blessing.

swers to the Trinity, the Father, Son, and Spirit, in their respective works toward us. "The world to come," is the Christian dispensation, viewed especially in its future glories, though already begun in grace here. The world to come thus stands in contrast to course of this world, altogether disorganized because God is not its spring of action and end. By faith, Christians make the world to come a present reality, though but a foretaste of the perfect future. The powers of this new spiritual world, partly exhibited in outward miracles at that time, and then, as now, especially consisting in the Spirit's inward quickening influences are the earnest of the coming inheritance above, and lead the believer who gives himself up to the Spirit to seek to live as the angels, to sit with Christ in heavenly places, to set the affections on things above, and not on things on earth, and to look for Christ's coming and the full manifestation of the world to come. This "world to come," in its future aspect, thus corresponds to "resurrection of the dead and eternal life" (vs. 2), the first Christian principles which the Hebrew believers had been taught, by the Christian light being thrown back on their Old Testament for their instruction (Note, vss. 1, 2). "The world to come," which, as to its "powers," exists already in the redeemed, will pass into a fully realized fact at Christ's coming (Col. 3:4). 6. If—Greek, And (yet) have fallen away"; cf. a less extreme falling or declension, Galatians 5:4, "Ye are fallen from grace." Here an entire and wilful apostasy is meant; the Hebrews had not yet so fallen away; but he warns them that such would be the final result of retrogression, if, instead of "going on to perfection," they should need to learn again the first principles of Christianity (vs. 1). to renew them again—They have been "once" (vs. 4) already renewed, or made anew, and now they need to be "renewed" over "again." crucify to themselves the Son of God—"are crucifiying to themselves" Christ, instead of, like Paul, crucifying the world unto them by the cross of Christ (Gal. 6:14). So in ch. 10:29, "trodden under foot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith . . . sanctified, an unholy thing." "The Son of God," marking His dignity, shows the greatness of their offense. put him to an open shame—lit., "make a public example of" Him, as if He were a malefactor suspended on a tree. What the carnal Israel did outwardly, those who fall away from light do inwardly, they virtually crucify again the Son of God; "they tear him out of the recesses of their hearts where He had fixed His abode and exhibit Him to the open scoffs of the world as something powerless and common" [BLEEK in ALFORD]. The Montanists and Novatians used this passage to justify the lasting exclusion from the Church of those who had once lapsed. The Catholic Church always opposed this view, and readmitted the lapsed on their repentance, but did not rebaptize them.

"He who is led into the whole (?) compass of Christian experiences, may yet cease to abide in them; he who abides not in them, was, at the very time when he had those objective experiences, not subjectively true to them; otherwise there would have been fulfilled in him, 'Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance' (Matt. 13:12), so that he would have abided in them and not have fallen away" [THOLUCK]. Such a one was never truly a Spirit-led disciple of Christ (Rom. 8:14-17). The sin against the Holy Ghost, though somewhat similar, is not identical with this sin; for that sin may be committed by those outside the Church (as in Matt. 12:24, 31, 32); this, only by those inside. 7. the earth—rather as Greek (no article), "land." which drinketh in—Greek, "which has drunk in"; not merely receiving it on the surface. Answering to those who have enjoyed the privilege of Christian experiences, being in some sense renewed by the Holy Ghost; true alike of those who persevere and those who "fall away." the rain that cometh oft upon it—not merely falling over it, or towards it, but falling and resting upon it so as to cover it (the Greek genitive, not the accusative). The "oft" implies, on God's part, the riches of His abounding grace ("coming" spontaneously, and often); and, on the apostate's part, the wilful perversity whereby he has done continual despite to the oft-repeated motions of the Spirit. Cf. "How often." Matthew 23:37. The rain of heaven falls both on the elect and the apostates. bringeth forth—as the natural result of "having drunk in the rain." See above. herbs—provender. meet—fit. Such as the master of the soil wishes. The opposite of "rejected," vs. 8. by whom—rather as Greek, "for (i.e., on account of) whom," viz., the lords of the soil; not the laborers, as English Version, viz., God abundantly increased. The powers of the world to come. These words are understood two ways: (1) They may refer to the stupendous miracles wrought in confirmation of the gospel, the gospel dispensation being "the world to come" in the Jewish phraseology, as we have often seen; and that dynamis is often taken for a "mighty work" or "miracle" is plain from various parts of the Gospels. The prophets had declared that the Messiah, when He came, should work many miracles, and should be as mighty in word and deed as was Moses; see Deut. xviii. 15-19. And they particularly specify the giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, strength to the lame, and speech to the dumb, Isa. xxxv. 5-6. All these miracles Jesus Christ did in the sight of this very people; and thus they had the highest evidence they could have that Jesus was this promised Messiah, and could have no pretense to doubt His mission or apostatize from the Christian faith which they had received. (2) The words have been supposed to apply to those communications and foretastes of eternal blessedness, or of the joys of the world to come, which they who are justified through the Blood of the covenant, and walk faithfully with their God, experience; and to this sense the word have tasted is thought more properly to apply. But "to taste," signifies "to experience or have full proof" of a thing. Thus, to "taste of death," Matt. xvi. 28, is "to die." It seems, therefore, that the first opinion is the best founded.

6. If they shall fall away. "And having fallen away." I can express my own mind on this translation nearly in the words of Dr. Macknight: "The participles who were enlightened, have tasted, and were made partakers, being aorists, are properly rendered by our translators in the past time; wherefore parapesontas, being an aorist, ought likewise to have been translated in the past time, 'HAVE fallen away.' Nevertheless, our translators, following Beza, who without any authority from ancient MSS. has inserted in his version the word 'if,' have rendered this clause, IF they fall away, that this text might not appear to contradict the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. But as no translator should take upon him to add to or alter the Scriptures, for the sake of any favourite doctrine, I have translated parapesontas in the past time, 'have fallen away,' according to the true import of the word, as standing in connection with the other aorists in the preceding verses." To renew them again unto repentance. As repentance is the first step that a sinner must take in order to return to God, and as sorrow for sin must be useless in itself unless there be a proper sacrificial offering, these having rejected the only available sacrifice, their repentance for sin, had they any, would be nugatory, and their salvation impossible on this simple account; and this is the very reason which the apostle immediately subjoins. Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God. They reject Him on the ground that He was an impostor, and justly put to death. And thus they are said to crucify Him to themselves—to do that in their present apostasy which the Jews did; and they show thereby that, had they been present when He was crucified, they would have joined with His murderers. And put him to an open shame. "And have made Him a public example"; or, "crucifying unto themselves and making the Son of God a public example." That is, they show openly that they judge Jesus Christ to have been worthy of the death which He suffered, and was justly made a public example by being crucified. This shows that it is final apostasy, by the total rejection of the gospel and blasphemy of the Saviour of men, that the apostle has in view. See the note on v. 4.

7. For the earth which drinketh in the rain. As much as if he had said: In giving up such apostates as utterly incurable, we act as men do in cultivating their fields; for as the ground, which drinketh in the rain by which the providence of God waters it, brings forth fruit to compensate the toil of the tiller, and continues to be cultivated, God granting His blessing to the labors of the husbandman; so,

MATTHEW HENRY

Here is the different case of the bad ground: It bears briers and thorns; it is not only barren of good fruit, but fruitful in that which is bad, briers and thorns. Such ground is rejected. And that is not all, but such ground is nigh unto cursing; so far is it from receiving the blessing. Its end is to be burned. This is the sad end to which apostasy leads, and therefore Christians should go on and grow in grace, lest, if they do not go forward, they should go backward.

The apostle proceeds to apply himself to their hopes.

I. He declares the good hope he had concerning them, v. 9. There are things that accompany salvation, things that are never separated from salvation. Ministers must sometimes speak by way of caution to those of whose salvation they have good hopes. And those who have in themselves good hopes should yet consider seriously how fatal a disappointment it would be if they should fall short. Thus they are to work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

II. Encouragements to them to go on. God had wrought a principle of holy love and charity in them, v. 10. Good works and labour proceeding from love to God are commendable; and what is done to any in the name of God shall not go unrewarded.

and His Christ (I Cor. 3:9). The heart of man is the earth; man is the dresser; herbs are brought forth meet, not for the dresser, by whom, but for God, the owner of the soil, for whom it is dressed. The plural is general, the owners whoever they may be; here God. receiveth—"partaketh of." blessing—fruitfulness. Contrast God's curse causing unfruitfulness (Gen. 3:17, 18); also spiritually (Jer. 17:5-8). from God—Man's use of means is vain unless God bless (I Cor. 3:6, 7). 8. that which—rather as Greek (no article), "But if it (the 'land' vs. 7) bear"; not so favorable a word as "bringeth forth," vs. 7, said of the good soil. briers—Greek, "thistles." rejected—after having been tested; so the Greek implies. Reprobate . . . rejected by the Lord. nigh unto cursing—on the verge of being given up to its own barrenness by the just curse of God. This "nigh" softens the severity of the previous "It is impossible . . ." (vss. 4, 6). The ground is not yet actually cursed. whose—"of which (land) the end is unto burning," viz., with the consuming fire of the last judgment; as the land of Sodom was given to "brimstone, salt, and burning" (Deut. 29: 23); so as to the ungodly (Matt. 3:10, 12; 7:19; 13: 30; John 15:6; II Pet. 3:10). Jerusalem, which had so resisted the grace of Christ, was then nigh unto cursing, and in a few years was burned. Cf. Matthew 22:7, "burned up their city" an earnest of a like fate to all wilful abusers of God's grace (ch. 10:26, 27).

9. beloved—appositely here introduced; LOVE to you prompts me in the strong warnings I have just given, not that I entertain unfavorable thoughts of you; nay, I anticipate better things of you; Greek "the things which are better"; that ye are not thorn-bearing, or nigh unto cursing, and doomed unto burning, but heirs of salvation in accordance with God's faithfulness (ch. 6:10). we are persuaded—on good grounds; the result of proof. Cf. Romans 15:14, "I myself am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye are full of goodness." A confirmation of the Pauline authorship of this Epistle. things that accompany—Greek, "things that hold by," i.e., are close unto "salvation." Things that are linked unto salvation (cf. vs. 19). In opposition to "nigh unto cursing." though—Greek, "if even we thus speak." "For it is better to make you afraid with words, that ye may not suffer in fact." 10. not unrighteous—not unfaithful to His own gracious promise. Not that we have any inherent right to claim reward; for (1) a servant has no merit, as he only does that which is his bounden duty; (2) our best performances bear no proportion to what we leave undone; (3) all strength comes from God; but God has promised of His own grace to reward the good works of His people (already accepted through faith in Christ); it is His promise, not our merits, which would make it unrighteous were He not to reward His people's works. God will be no man's debtor. your work—your whole Christian life of active obedience. labour of love—The oldest MSS. omit "labor of," which probably crept in from I Thess. 1:3. As "love" occurs here, so "hope," vs. 11, "faith," vs. 12; as in I Corinthians 13:13: the Pauline triad. By their love he sharpens their hope and faith. ye have showed—(Cf. ch. 10:32-34). toward his name—Your acts of love to the saints were done for His name's sake. The distressed condition of the Palestinian Christians appears from the collection for them. Though receiving bounty from other churches, and therefore not able to minister much by pecuniary help, yet those somewhat better off could minister to the greatest sufferers in their Church in various other ways (cf. II Tim. 1:18). Paul, as elsewhere, gives them the utmost credit for their graces, while delicately hinting the need of perseverance, a lack of which had probably somewhat begun to show itself. 11. And—Greek, "But." desire—Greek, "earnestly desire." The language of fatherly affection, rather than command. every one of you—

8. That which beareth thorns and briers is rejected. That is: The land which, notwithstanding the most careful cultivation, receiving also in due times the early and latter rain, produces nothing but thorns and briers, or noxious weeds of different kinds, is rejected, is given up as unimprovable; its briers, thorns, and brushwood burnt down; and then left to be pastured on by the beasts of the field. This seems to be the custom in husbandry to which the apostle alludes. Is nigh unto cursing. It is acknowledged, on almost all hands, that this Epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. This verse is in my opinion a proof of it, and here I suppose the apostle refers to that approaching destruction; and perhaps he has this all along in view, but speaks of it covertly, that he might not give offense.

There is a good sense in which all these things may be applied to the Jews at large, who were favored by our Lord's ministry and miracles. They were "enlightened" by His preaching; "tasted" of the benefits of the "heavenly gift"—the Christian religion established among them; saw many of their children and relatives "made partakers of the Holy Ghost"; "tasted the good word of God," by the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham; and saw the almighty power of God exerted, in working a great variety of miracles. Yet after being convinced that never man spake as this Man, and that none could do those miracles which He did except God were with him; after having followed Him in thousands for three years while He preached to them the gospel of the kingdom of God; they "fell away" from all this, crucified Him who, even in His sufferings as well as His resurrection, was demonstrated by miracles to be the Son of God; and then to vindicate their unparalleled wickedness, endeavored to make Him a public example by reproaches and blasphemies. Therefore their state, which had received much moral cultivation from Moses, the prophets, Christ and His apostles; and now bore nothing but the most vicious fruits—pride, unbelief, hardness of heart, contempt of God's Word and ordinances, blasphemy, and rebellion —was rejected, reprobated, of God; was nigh unto cursing—about to be cast off from the divine protection; and their city and Temple were shortly to be burnt up by the Roman armies.

9. But, beloved. Here he softens what he had before said. Having given them the most solemn warning against apostasy, he now encourages them to persevere, commends the good that is in them, and excites them to watchfulness and activity. Better things of you. Than that you shall resemble that unfruitful ground that can be improved by no tillage, and is thrown into waste, and is fit only for the beasts of the forests to roam in. Things that accompany salvation. "Things that are suitable to a state of salvation"; you give proofs still that you have not, whatever others have done, departed from the living God. Several of your brethren have already apostatized, and the whole nation is in a state of rebellion against God; and in consequence of their final rejection of Christ and His gospel are about to be finally rejected by God. They must meet with destruction; they have the things that are suitable to, and indicative of, a state of reprobation; the wrath of God will come upon them to the uttermost; but while they meet with destruction, you shall meet with salvation.

10. God is not unrighteous. God is bound to men only by His own promise. This promise He is not obliged to make; but, when once made, His righteousness or justice requires Him to keep it. Therefore whatever He has promised He will certainly perform. The word labour, prefixed to love, is wanting in almost every MS. and version of importance. Ministered to the saints. Have contributed to the support and comfort of the poor Christians who were suffering persecution in Judea. As they had thus ministered, and were still ministering, they gave full proof that they had a common cause with the others; and this was one of the things that proved them to be in a state of salvation.

11. We desire. We "earnestly wish" that each person among you may continue to "manifest, exhibit to full view," the same diligence. There

MATTHEW HENRY

Those who expect a gracious reward for the labour of love must continue in it as long as they have ability and opportunity. Those who persevere in a diligent discharge of their duty shall attain to the full assurance of hope in the end. Full assurance is a higher degree of hope; they differ not in nature, but only in degree. Full assurance is attainable by great diligence and perseverance to the end.

III. Caution and counsel how to attain this full assurance of hope to the end. They should not be slothful. They must not love their ease, nor lose their opportunities. They should follow the good examples of those who had gone before, v. 12. There are some who from assurance have gone to inherit the promises. The way by which they came to the inheritance was that of faith and patience. We must follow them in the way of faith and patience.

IV. The assured truth of the promises of God, v. 13, to the end.

1. They are all confirmed by the oath of God. Those whom he has blessed indeed he will go on to bless. He swore by himself. No greater security can be given or desired. It was made good to him after he had patiently endured. There is always an interval, and sometimes a long one, between the promise and the performance. That interval is a trying time to believers.

Those who patiently endure shall assuredly obtain the blessedness promised, as sure as Abraham did, v. 16. This is the nature and design of an oath, in which men swear by the greater, by the Lord himself. Now, if God would condescend to take an oath to his people, he will surely remember the nature and design of it.

2. The promises of God are all founded in his eternal counsel; and this counsel of his is an immutable counsel. God never needs to change his counsels.

3. The promises of God may safely be depended upon.

(1) Who they are to whom God has given such full security of happiness. They are the heirs of the promise. They are such as have fled for refuge to the hope set before them. Here is a refuge for all sinners who shall have the heart to flee to it.

(2) What God's design towards them is—that they might have strong consolation. God is concerned for the consolation of believers. The consolations of God are strong enough to support his people under their strongest trials. The comforts of this world are too weak, but the consolations of the Lord are neither few nor small.

implying that all in the Palestinian churches had not shown the same diligence as some of those whom he praises in vs. 10. "He cares alike for great and small, and overlooks none." "Every one of them," even those dilligent in acts of LOVE (vs. 10), needed to be stimulated to persevere in the same diligence with a view to the full assurance of HOPE unto the end. They needed, besides love, patient perseverance, resting on hope and faith (ch. 10:36; 13:7). Cf. "the full assurance of faith," ch. 10:22; Romans 4:21; I Thessalonians 1:5. unto the end—the coming of Christ.

12. be not—Greek, "become not." In ch. 5:11, he said, "Ye have become dull (Greek, slothful) of hearing"; here he warns them not to become "slothful" absolutely, viz., also in mind and deed. He will not become slothful who keeps always the end in view; hope is the means of ensuring this. followers—Greek, "imitators"; so in Ephesians 5:1, Greek; I Corinthians 11:1. patience—Greek, "long-suffering endurance." There is the long-suffering patience, or endurance of love, I Corinthians 13:4, and that of faith, vs. 15. them who . . . inherit the promises—Greek, ". . . who are inheriting . . ."; to whom the promises are their inheritance. Not that they have actually entered on the perfect inheritance, which ch. 11:13, 39, 40 explicitly denies; though doubtless the dead in Christ have, in the disembodied soul, a foretaste of it; but "them (enumerated in ch. 11) who in every age have been, are, or shall be, inheritors of the promises"; of whom Abraham is an illustrious example (vs. 13). 13. For—confirming the reasonableness of resting on "the promises" as infallibly sure, resting as they do on God's oath, by the instance of Abraham. "He now gives consolation, by the oath of God's grace, to those whom, in chs. 3 and 4, he had warned by the oath of God's 'wrath.' The oath of wrath did not primarily extend its force beyond the wilderness; but the oath of grace is in force for ever" [BENGEL]. 14 multiplying . . . multiply—Hebraism for superabundantly multiply. thee—The increase of Abraham's seed is virtually an increase of himself. The argument here refers to Abraham himself as an example; therefore Paul quotes Genesis 22:17, "thee," instead of "thy seed." 15. so—thus relying on the promise. 16. for confirmation—not to be joined, as English Version, to "an oath"; but to "an end" [ALFORD]. I prefer, "The oath is to them, in respect to confirmation (of one's solemn promise or covenant; as here, God's), an end of all contradiction" (so the Greek is translated, ch. 12:3), or "gainsaying." This passage shows: (1) an oath is sanctioned even in the Christian dispensation as lawful; (2) that the limits to its use are, that it only be employed where it can put an end to contradiction in disputes, and for confirmation of a solemn promise. 17. Wherein—i.e., Which being the case among men, God, in accommodation to their manner of confirming covenants, superadded to His sure word His oath: the "TWO immutable things" (vs. 18). willing . . . counsel—Greek, "willing . . . will"; words akin. Expressing the utmost benignity [BENGEL]. more abundantly—than had He not sworn. His word would have been amply enough; but, to make assurance doubly sure, He "interposed with an oath" (so the Greek). Lit., He acted as Mediator, coming between Himself and us; as if He were less, while He swears, than Himself by whom He swears [for the less among men usually swear by the greater]. Dost thou not yet believe, thou that hearest the promise? [BENGEL]. heirs of promise—not only Abraham's literal, but also his spiritual, seed (Gal. 3:29). 18, immutable—Translate, as in vs. 17, "unchangeable." impossible . . . to lie—"ever to lie"; this is the force of the Greek aorist [ALFORD]. His not being able to deny Himself is a proof, not of weakness, but of strength incomparable. consolation—under doubts and fears, and so "encouragement," lit., "exhortation." fled for refuge—as if from a shipwreck; or, as one fleeing to one of the six cities of refuge. Kadesh, i.e., holy, implies the holiness of Jesus, our Refuge. Shechem, i.e., shoulder, the government is upon his shoulder (Isa. 9:6). Hebron, i.e., fellowship, believers are called into the fellowship of Christ. Bezer, i.e., a fortress, Christ is so to all who trust in Him. Ramoth, i.e., high, for Him hath God exalted with His right hand (Acts 5:31). Golan, i.e., joy, for in Him all the saints are justified and shall glory. lay hold upon the hope—i.e.,the object of our hope, as upon a preservative from sinking. set before us—as a prize for which we strive; a new image, viz., the race-course (ch. 12:1, 2).

might be reason to suspect that some, through fear of man, might not wish the good they did to be seen, lest they also should suffer persecution. To the full assurance of hope. The person who has this full assurance of hope is he who not only knows and feels that his sins are forgiven through Christ Jesus, but also that his heart is purified from all unrighteousness, that the whole body of sin and death is destroyed, and that he is fully made a partaker of the divine nature. As without holiness—complete, entire holiness—no man can see God, so without this none can scripturally or rationally hope for eternal glory, it being a contradiction to profess to have the full assurance of hope to enjoy a state and place for which the soul is conscious it is not prepared.

12. That ye be not slothful. This shows how the full assurance of hope is to be regulated and maintained. They must be diligent; slothfulness will deprive them of both hope and faith. That "faith which worketh by love" will maintain hope in its full and due exercise. Followers of them. "That you be imitators of them who are inheriting the promises." And they inherited these promises by faith in Him who is invisible, and who, they knew, could not lie; and they patiently endured, through difficulties and adversities of every kind, and persevered unto death.

13. When God made promise to Abraham. The promise referred to is that made to Abraham when he had offered his son Isaac on the altar, Gen. xxii. 16-18: "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." He sware by himself. He pledged His eternal power and Godhead for the fulfillment of the promise; there was no being superior to himself to whom He could make appeal, or by whom He could be bound.

14. Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee. I will continue to bless you. Multiplying I will multiply thee. I will continue to increase your posterity. In the most literal manner God continues to fulfill this promise; genuine Christians are Abraham's seed, and God is increasing their number daily.

15. He obtained the promise. Isaac was supernaturally born; and in his birth God began to fulfill the promise. While he lived, he saw a provision made for the multiplication of his seed; and, having continued steadfast in the faith, he received the end of all the promises in the enjoyment of an eternal glory. And the inference from this is: If we believe and prove faithful unto death, we shall also inherit the promises.

16. Men verily swear by the greater. One who has greater authority.

17. The heirs of promise. All the believing posterity of Abraham, and the nations of the earth or Gentiles in general. The immutability of his counsel. His unchangeable purpose, to call the Gentiles to salvation by Jesus Christ; to justify every penitent by faith; to accept faith in Christ for justification in place of personal righteousness; and finally to bring every persevering believer, whether Jew or Gentile, to eternal glory.

18. That by two immutable things. The promise and oath of God: the promise pledged His faithfulness and justice; the oath, all the infinite perfections of His Godhead, for He sware by himself. We might have a strong consolation. There appears to be an allusion here to the cities of refuge and to the persons who fled to them for safety. As the person who killed his neighbor unawares was sure if he gained the city of refuge he should be safe, and had strong consolation in the hope that he should reach it, this hope animated him in his race to the city. He ran, he fled, knowing that, though in danger the most imminent of losing his life, yet as he was now acting according to an ordinance of God, he was certain of safety provided he got to the place.

(3) What use the people of God should make of their hope and comfort, v. 19. We are in this world as a ship at sea, in danger of being cast away. Heaven is the harbour to which we sail. We have need of an anchor to keep us sure and steady. Gospel hope is our anchor. It is sure and steadfast. It is sure in its own nature; it is not a flattering hope made out of the spider's web, but it is a true work of God. It is steadfast as to its object; it is an anchor that has taken good hold. It does not seek to fasten in the sands, but enters within the veil, and fixes there upon Christ; he is the anchor-hold of the believer's hope.

W. E. VINE:

PRODROMOS, forerunner, an adjective signifying running forward, going in advance, is used as a noun, of those who were sent before to take observations, acting as scouts, especially in military matters; or of one sent before a king to see that the way was prepared (Isa. 40:3); (cf. Luke 9:52; and, of John the Baptist, Matt. 11:10). In the N.T. it is said of Christ in Heb. 6:20, as going in advance of His followers who are to be where He is, when He comes to receive them to himself.

19. Hope is found represented on coins by an anchor. sure and steadfast—sure in respect to us: steadfast, or "firm" [ALFORD], in itself. Not such an anchor as will not keep the vessel from tossing, or an anchor unsound or too light [THEOPHYLACT]. which entereth into that—i.e., the place—within the veil—two images beautifully combined: I. The soul is the ship: the world the sea: the bliss beyond the world, the distant coast: the hope resting on faith, the anchor which prevents the vessel being tossed to and fro; the encouraging consolation through the promise and oath of God, the cable connecting the ship and anchor. II. The world is the fore-court; heaven, the Holy of Holies; Christ, the High Priest going before us, so as to enable us, after Him, and through Him, to enter within the veil. ESTIUS explains, As the anchor does not stay in the waters, but enters the ground hidden beneath the waters, and fastens itself in it, so hope, our anchor of the soul, is not satisfied with merely coming to the vestibule, i.e., is not content with merely earthly and visible goods, but penetrates even to those which are within the veil, viz., to the Holy of Holies, where it lays hold on God Himself, and heavenly goods, and fastens on them.

veil—Greek, catapetasma: the second veil which shut in the Holiest Place. The outer veil was called by a distinct Greek term. calumma: "the second (i.e., the inner) veil." 20. The absence of the Greek article requires ALFORD'S translation, "Where, AS forerunner for us (i.e., in our behalf), entered Jesus" [and is now: this last clause is implied in the "where" of the Greek, which implies being IN a place: "whither" is understood to "entered," taken out of "where"; whither Jesus entered, and where He is now]. The "for us" implies that it was not for Himself, as God, He needed to enter there, but as our High Priest, representing and introducing us, His followers, opening the way to us, by His intercession with the Father, as the Aaronic high priest entered the Holiest Place once a year to make propitiation for the people. The first fruits of our nature are ascended, and so the rest is sanctified. Christ's ascension is our promotion: and whither the glory of the Head has preceded, thither the hope of the body, too, is called. We ought to keep festal day, since Christ has taken up and set in the heavens the first fruit of our lump, that is, the human flesh [CHRYSOSTOM]. As John Baptist was Christ's forerunner on earth, so Christ is ours in heaven.

19. Which hope we have as an anchor. The apostle here changes the allusion; he represents the state of the followers of God in this lower world as resembling that of a vessel striving to perform her voyage through a troublesome, tempestuous, dangerous sea. At last she gets near the port; but the tempest continues; the water is shallow, broken, and dangerous, and she cannot get in. In order to prevent her being driven to sea again, she heaves out her sheet anchor, which she has been able to get within the pierhead by means of her boat, though she could not herself get in. Then, swinging at the length of her cable, she rides out the storm in confidence, knowing that her anchor is sound, the ground good in which it is fastened, and the cable strong. The comparison of hope to an anchor is frequent among the ancient heathen writers, who supposed it to be as necessary to the support of a man in adversity as the anchor is to the safety of the ship when about to be driven on a lee shore by a storm.

20. Whither the forerunner. The word prodromos does not merely signify one that goes or runs before another, but also one who shows the way, he who first does a particular thing. So in the Septuagint, Isa. xxviii. 4, prodromos sykou signifies the "first fruits of the fig tree." To this meaning of the word Pliny refers, Hist. Nat., xvi, c. 26: "The fig tree produces some figs which are ripe before the rest, and these are called by the Athenians prodromos, forerunner." The word is interpreted in the same way by Hesychius; it occurs in no other part of the New Testament, but may be found in Ecclus. xii. 8 and in Isa. xxviii. 4, quoted above from the Septuagint. From this we may at once perceive the meaning of the phrase: Jesus is the "Firstfruits" of human nature that has entered into the heavenly Kingdom. And He is entered for us, as the Firstfruits of all who have found redemption in His blood. After the order of Melchisedec. After a long digression the apostle resumes his explanation of Ps. cx. 4, which he had produced, chap. v. 6, 10, in order to prove the permanency of the high priesthood of Christ.

Here the apostle sets before them some of the strong meat he had spoken of before.

I. The great question that first offers itself is, Who was this Melchisedec? All the account we have of him in the Old Testament is in Gen. xiv. 18, &c., and in Ps. cx. 4. We are much in the dark about him.

1. The opinions concerning him that are best worthy our consideration are these three: (1) The rabbin, and most of the Jewish writers, think he was Shem the son of Noah. (2) Many Christian writers have thought him to be Jesus Christ himself. (3) The most general opinion is that he was a Canaanite king, who reigned in Salem.

2. How Christ is represented thereby, v. 1–3. (1) Melchisedec was a king, and so is the Lord Jesus. (2) He was king of righteousness: his name signifies the righteous king. Jesus Christ is a rightful and a righteous king. (3) He was king of Salem, that is, king of peace; first king of righteousness, and after that king of peace. So is our Lord Jesus. (4) He was priest of the most high God. So is the Lord Jesus. (5) The scripture has chosen to set him forth as an extraordinary person, without giving us his genealogy, that he might be a fitter type of Christ, whose priesthood is without descent, but is personal and perpetual. (6) He met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him. He gave as a king, and blessed as a priest. Thus our Lord Jesus meets his people, refreshes them, renews their strength, and blesses them. (7) Abraham gave him a tenth part of all (v. 2). And thus are we obliged to make all possible returns of love and gratitude to the Lord Jesus for all the favours we receive from him.

Vss. 1-28. CHRIST'S HIGH PRIESTHOOD AFTER THE ORDER OF MELCHISEDEC SUPERIOR TO AARON'S. 1. this Melchisedec—(ch. 6:20; Ps. 110:4). The verb does not come till vs. 3, "abideth." king . . . priest—Christ unites these offices in their highest sense, and so restores the patriarchal union of these offices. Salem—Jerusalem, i.e., seeing peace; others make Salem distinct, and to be that mentioned (Gen. 33: 18; John 3:23). the most high God—called also "Possessor of heaven and earth" (Gen. 14:19, 22). This title of God, "the Most High," handed down by tradition from the primitive revelation, appears in the Phœnician god "Elion," i.e., Most High. who met Abraham—in company with the king of Sodom (Gen. 14:17, 18). slaughter—perhaps defeat, as ALFORD translates. So Genesis 14:17 (cf. 15) may be translated. Arioch, king of Ellasar, lived and reigned after the disaster [BENGEL]. However, if Chedorlaomer and Amraphel and Tidal were slain, though Arioch survived, "slaughter of the kings" would be correct. blessed him—As priest he first blessed Abraham on God's part; next he blessed God on Abraham's part: a reciprocal blessing.

2. gave—Greek, "apportioned"; assigned as his portion. tenth . . . of all—viz., the booty taken. The tithes given are closely associated with the priesthood: the mediating priest received them as a pledge of the giver's whole property being God's; and as he conveyed God's gifts to man (vs. 1, "blessed him"), so also man's gifts to God. first being—Paul begins the mystical explanation of the historical fact (allegorical explanations being familiar to JEWS), by mentioning the significancy of the name. righteousness—not merely righteous: so Christ. Hebrew Malchi means king: Tzedek, righteousness. King of Salem—not only his own name, but that of the city which he ruled, had a typical significance, viz., peace. Christ is the true Prince of peace. The peace which He brings is the fruit of righteousness. 3. Without father . . .—explained by "without genealogy" (so the Greek is for "with-

1. For this Melchisedec, king of Salem. The name Melchisedec is thus expounded in Bereshith Rabba, "The Justifier of those who dwell in him." Salem is generally understood to be Jerusalem; but some think that it was that city of Shechem mentioned in Josh. xx. 7. Jerome was of this opinion.

2. Gave a tenth part of all. It was an ancient custom among all the nations of the earth to consecrate a part or tenth of the spoils taken in war to the objects of their worship.

(8) This Melchisedec was made like unto the Son of God, and abideth a priest continually. He bore the image of God in his piety and authority, and stands upon record as an immortal high priest.

TODAY'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE:

Melchizedek—king of righteousness—the king of Salem. All we know of him is recorded in Gen. 14:18-20. He is subsequently mentioned only once in the Old Testament, in Ps. 110:4. The typical significance of his history is set forth in detail in Hebrews 7. The apostle there points out the superiority of his priesthood to that of Aaron in these several respects: (1) Even Abraham paid him tithes; (2) he blessed Abraham; (3) he is the type of a Priest who lives forever; (4) Levi, yet unborn, paid him tithes in the person of Abraham; (5) the permanence of his priesthood in Christ implied the abrogation of the Levitical system; (6) he was made priest not without an oath; and (7) his priesthood can neither be transmitted nor interrupted by death: "This man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood."

His appearance in Scripture as the king of a city called Salem = peace and having a name meaning "king of righteousness" has made him the perfect object of speculation. A fragment of a document from cave eleven at Qumran gives evidence of the Jewish speculation about Melchizedek. It sees him as a divinely appointed judge in the court of heaven. Another Jewish tradition saw him as Shem, the son of Noah. Melchizedek was a Canaanite prince, a worshiper of the true God, and in his brief history and character an instructive type of our Lord, the great High Priest (Heb. 5:6, 7; 6:20).

II. Let us now consider how great this Melchisedec was, and how far his priesthood was above that of the order of Aaron (v. 4, 5, &c.). The greatness of this man and his priesthood appears from Abraham's paying the tenth of the spoils unto him;

It appears also it was Melchisedec's blessing of Abraham, v. 6, 7 Abraham's great dignity and felicity—was that he had the promises. That man is rich and happy indeed who has an estate in bills and bonds under God's own hand and seal.

out descent"); cf. vs. 6, i.e., his genealogy is not known, whereas a Levitical priest could not dispense with the proof of his descent. having neither beginning of days nor end of life—viz., history not having recorded his beginning nor end, as it has the beginning and end of Aaron. The Greek idiom expressed by "without father..." one whose parentage was humble or unknown. "Days" mean his time of discharging his function. So the eternity spoken of in Psalm 110:4 is that of the priestly office chiefly. made like—It is not said that he was absolutely "like." Made like, viz., in the particulars here specified. Nothing is said in Genesis of the end of his priesthood, or of his having had in his priesthood either predecessor or successor, which, in a typical point of view, represents Christ's eternal priesthood, without beginning or end. Aaron's end is recorded; Melchisedec's not: typically significant. "The Son of God" is not said to be made like unto Melchisedec, but Melchisedec to be "made like the Son of God." When ALFORD denies that Melchisedec was made like the Son of God in respect of his priesthood, on the ground that Melchisedec was prior in time to our Lord, he forgets that Christ's eternal priesthood was an archetypal reality in God's purpose from everlasting, to which Melchisedec's priesthood was "made like" in due time. The Son of God is the more ancient, and is the archetype: cf. ch. 8:5, where the heavenly things are represented as the primary archetype of the Levitical ordinances. The epithets, "without father, . . ." beginning of days, "nor end," "abideth continually," belong to Melchisedec only in respect to his priesthood, and in so far as he is the type of the Son of God, and are strictly true of Him alone. Melchisedec was, in his priesthood, "made like" Christ, as far as the imperfect type could represent the lineaments of the perfect archetype. "The portrait of a living man can be seen on the canvas, yet the man is very different from his picture." There is nothing in the account, Genesis 14, to mark Melchisedec as a superhuman being: he is classed with the other kings in the chapter as a living historic personage: not as ORIGEN thought, an angel; nor as the Jews thought, Shem, son of Noah; nor as CALMET, Enoch; nor as the Melchisedekites, that he was the Holy Ghost; nor as others, the Divine Word.

4. consider—not merely see, but weigh with attentive contemplation, the fact. even—"to whom (as his superior) Abraham even paid tithe (went so far as to pay tithe) of (consisting of, lit., 'from') the best of the spoils" (lit., "the top of the heap"; whether of corn, the first fruits of which, taken from the top, used to be consecrated to God; or of spoils, from the top of which the general used to take some portion for consecration to God, or for his own use). He paid "tithes of ALL," and those tithes were taken out of the topmast and best portion of the whole spoils. the patriarch—in the Greek emphatically standing at the end of the whole sentence: And this payer of tithe being no less a personage than "the patriarch," the first forefather and head of our Jewish race and nation See Note, vs. 3, on Melchisedec's superiority as specially consecrated king-priest, above the other patriarch-priests. 5. sons of Levi—viz., those alone who belonged to the family of Aaron, to whom the priesthood was restricted. Tithes originally paid to the whole tribe of Levi, became at length attached to the priesthood. according to the law—sanctioned by Jehovah (ch. 9:19). of their brethren—with whom, in point of natural descent, they are on a level. though . . .—Though thus on a level by common descent from Abraham, they yet pay tithe to the Levites, whose brethren they are. Now the Levites are subordinate to the priests; and these again to Abraham, their common progenitor; and Abraham to Melchisedec. "How great" (vs. 4) then, must this Melchisedec be in respect to his priesthood, as compared with the Levitical, though the latter received tithes! and now unspeakably great must "the Son of God" be, to whom, as the sacerdotal archetype (in God's purpose), Melchisedec was made like! 6. he whose descent is not counted from them—not from "the sons of Levi," as those "who receive the priesthood." This verse explains "without descent" (Greek, "genealogy" in both verses, vs. 3). He who needs not, as the Levitical priests, to be able to trace his genealogy back to Levi. received—Greek, "hath received tithes." blessed—Greek, "hath blessed." The perfect tense implies that the significance of the fact endures to the present time. him that had—"the possessor of the promises," Abraham's peculiar distinction and designation. Paul exalts Abraham in order still more to exalt Melchisedec. When Christ is the subject, the singular "promise" is used. "The prom-of Melchisedec was to show: (1) That Jesus was the Person prophesied of in the 110th psalm, which psalm the Jews uniformly understood as predicting the Messiah. (2) To answer the objections of the Jews against the legitimacy of the priesthood of Christ, taken from the stock from which He proceeded. The objection is this: If the Messiah is to be a true Priest, He must come from a legitimate stock, as all the priests under the law have regularly done; otherwise we cannot acknowledge Him to be a Priest. But Jesus of Nazareth has not proceeded from such a stock; therefore we cannot acknowledge Him for a Priest, the Antitype of Aaron. To this objection the apostle answers that it was not necessary for the priest to come from a particular stock, for Melchisedec was a priest of the most high God, and yet was not of the stock of either Abraham or Aaron, but a Canaanite. He who could not support his pretensions by just genealogical evidences was said by the Jews to be without father. In this way both Christ and Melchisedec were without father and without mother; i.e., were not descended from the original Jewish sacerdotal stock. Yet Melchisedec, who was a Canaanite, was a priest of the most high God. The old Syriac has given the true meaning by translating thus: "Whose father and mother are not inscribed among the genealogies." The Arabic is nearly the same: "He had neither father nor mother; the genealogy not being reckoned." The Aethiopic: "He had neither father nor mother upon earth, nor is his genealogy known." Made like unto the Son of God. Melchisedec was without father and mother, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. His genealogy is not recorded; when he was born and when he died are unknown. His priesthood, therefore, may be considered as perpetual. In these respects he was like to Jesus Christ, who, as to His Godhead, had neither father nor mother, beginning of time, nor end of days; and has an everlasting priesthood.

4. Consider how great this man was. There is something exceedingly mysterious in the person and character of this king of Salem, and to find out the whole is impossible. He seems to have been a sort of universal priest, having none superior to him in all that region; and confessedly superior even to Abraham himself, the father of the faithful and the source of the Jewish race.

5. They that are of the sons of Levi. The priests who are of the posterity of the Levites, and receive the priesthood in virtue of their descent from Aaron, have authority from the law of God to receive tithes from the people. According to the law. That is, the Levites received a tenth from the people. The priests received a tenth of this tenth from the Levites, who are here called their brethren, because they were of the same tribe and employed in the same sacred work. The apostle is proceeding to show that Melchisedec was greater even than Abraham, the head of the fathers, for to him Abraham gave tithes; and as the Levites were the posterity of Abraham, they are represented here as paying tithes to Melchisedec through him. Yet Melchisedec was not of this family, and therefore must be considered as having a more honorable priesthood than even Aaron himself; for he took the tenth from Abraham, not for his maintenance, for he was a king, but in virtue of his office as universal high priest of all that region.

6. Blessed him that had the promises. This is a continuation of the same argument, namely, to show the superiority of Melchisedec, and in consequence to prove the superiority of the priesthood of Christ beyond that of Aaron. As in the seed of Abraham all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, Abraham received a sacerdotal blessing from Melchisedec, who was ises" in the plural, refer to God's promise of greatness to himself and his seed, and of the possession of Canaan, twice repeated before the blessing of Melchisedec. As the priests, though above the people (vs. 7) whom it was their duty to "bless," were yet subordinate to Abraham; and as Abraham was subordinate to Melchisedec, who blessed him, Melchisedec must be much above the Levitical priests. 7. The principle that the blesser is superior to him whom he blesses, holds good only in a blessing given with divine authority; not merely a prayerful wish, but one that is divinely efficient in working its purport, as that of the patriarchs on their children: so Christ's blessing, Luke 24:51; Acts 3: 26. 8. Second point of superiority: Melchisedec's is an enduring, the Levitical a transitory, priesthood. As the law was a parenthesis between Abraham's dispensation of promise of grace, and its enduring fulfilment at Christ's coming (Rom. 5:20,Greek, "The law entered as something adscititious and by the way"): so the Levitical priesthood was parenthetical and temporary, between Melchisedec's typically enduring priesthood, and its antitypical realization in our ever continuing High Priest, Christ. here—in the Levitical priesthood. there—in the priesthood after the order of Melchisedec. In order to bring out the typical parallel more strongly, Paul substitutes, "He of whom it is witnessed that he liveth," for the more untypical, "He who is made like to Him that liveth." Melchisedec "liveth" merely in his official capacity, his priesthood being continued in Christ. Christ, on the other hand, is, in His own person, "ever living after the power of an endless life" (vss. 16, 25). Melchisedec's death not being recorded, is expressed by the positive term "liveth," for the sake of bringing into prominence the antitype, Christ, of whom alone it is strictly and perfectly true, "that He liveth." 9. as I may so say—to preclude what he is about to say being taken in the mere literal sense; I may say that, virtually, Levi, in the person of his father Abraham, acknowledged Melchisedec's superiority, and paid tithes to him. who receiveth tithes—(Cf. vs. 5). in Abraham—Greek, "by means of (by the hand of) Abraham"; through Abraham. "Paid tithes," lit., "hath been tithed," i.e., been taken tithes of. 10. in the loins of his father—i.e., forefather Abraham. Christ did not, in this sense, pay tithes in Abraham, for He never was in the loins of an earthly father [ALFORD]. Though, in respect to His mother, He was "of the fruit of (David's, and so of) Abraham's loins," yet, being supernaturally, without human father, conceived, as He is above the natural law of birth, so is he above the law of tithes. Only those born in the natural way, and so in sin, being under the curse, needed to pay tithe to the priest, that he might make propitiation for their sin. Not so Christ, who derived only His flesh, not also the taint of the flesh, from Abraham. BENGEL remarks, The blessings which Abraham had before meeting Melchisedec were the general promises, and the special one of a natural seed, and so of Levi; but the promises under which Christ was comprehended, and the faith for which Abraham was so commended, followed after Abraham's meeting Melchisedec, and being blessed by him: to which fact. Genesis 15:1, "After these things," calls our attention. This explains why Christ, the supernatural seed, is not included as paying tithes through Abraham to Melchisedec. 11. perfection—absolute: "the bringing of man to his highest state, viz., that of salvation and sanctification." under it—The reading in the oldest MSS. is, "Upon it (i.e., on the ground of it as the basis, the priest having to administer the law, Malachi 2:7: it being presupposed) the people (ch. 9:19, 'all the people') have received the law" (the Greek is perfect, not aorist; implying the people were still observing the law). what further need—(ch. 8:7). For God does nothing needless. another—rather as Greek, "that a different priest (one of a different order) should arise" (anew, vs. 15). not be called—Greek, "not be said (to be) after the order of Aaron," i.e., that, when spoken of in the Psalm 110:4, "He is not said to be (as we should expect, if the Aaronic priesthood was perfect) after the order of Aaron."

the representative of the Messiah, the promised Seed, to show that it was through Him, as the High Priest of the human race, that this blessing was to be derived on all mankind.

7. The less is blessed of the better. That the superior blesses the inferior is a general proposition. But Abraham was blessed of Melchisedec; therefore Melchisedec was greater than Abraham.

8. Here men that die receive tithes. The apostle is speaking of the ecclesiastical constitution of the Jews, which was standing at the time this Epistle was written. Under the Jewish dispensation, though the priests were successively removed by death, yet they were as duly replaced by others appointed from the same family, and the payment of tithes was never interrupted. But as there is no account of Melchisedec ceasing to be a priest or of his dying, he is represented as still living, the better to point him out as a type of Christ, and to show his priesthood to be more excellent than that which was according to the law, as an unchanging priesthood must be more excellent than that which was continually changing. But there he receiveth them. The here in the first clause of this verse refers to Mosaical institutions, as then existing; the there in this clause refers to the place in Genesis (chap. xiv. 20) where it is related that Abraham gave tithes to Melchisedec, who is still considered as being alive or without a successor, because there is no account of his death nor of any termination of his priesthood.

9. And as I may so say. "And so to speak a word." This form of speech, which is very frequent among the purest Greek writers, is generally used to soften some harsh expression, or to limit the meaning when the proposition might otherwise appear to be too general. It answers fully to our "so to speak—as one would say—I had almost said—in a certain sense." Payed tithes in Abraham. The Levites, who were descendants of Abraham, paid tithes to Melchisedec "through" Abraham, their progenitor and representative.

10. For he was yet in the loins of his father. That is, Levi was seminally included in Abraham, his forefather.

11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood. The word teleiosis signifies the "completing" or "finishing" of anything, so as to leave nothing imperfect and nothing wanting. Applied here to the Levitical priesthood, it signifies the accomplishment of that for which a priesthood is established, viz., giving the Deity an acceptable service, enlightening and instructing the people, pardoning all offenses, purging the conscience from guilt, purifying the soul and preparing it for heaven, and regulating the conduct of the people according to the precepts of the moral law. This perfection never came, and never could come, by the Levitical law; it was the shadow of good things to come, but was not the substance. It represented a perfect system, but was imperfect in itself. For under it the people received the law. That is, as most interpret this place, under the priesthood, because on the priesthood the whole Mosaical law and the Jewish economy depended. But it is much better to understand "on account of it," instead of under it; for it is a positive fact that the law was given before any priesthood was established, for Aaron and his sons were not called nor separated to this office till Moses came down the second time from the mount with the tables renewed, after that he had broken them, Exod. xl. 12-14. But it was in reference to the great sacrificial system that the law was given, and on that law the priesthood was established; for why was a priesthood necessary but because that law was broken and must be fulfilled? That another priest should rise. The law was given that the offense might abound and sin appear exceeding sinful, and to show the absolute necessity of the sacrifice and mediation of the great Messiah. But it was neither perfect in itself, nor could it confer perfection, nor did it contain the original priesthood. Melchisedec had a priesthood more than four hundred years before the law was given; and David prophesied, Ps. cx. 4, that another priest should arise after the order of Melchisedec, nearly five hundred years after the law was given. The law therefore did not contain the original priest-

III. It is asserted that the priesthood being changed there must of necessity be a change of the law.

IV. It is not only asserted, but proved, that the priesthood and law are changed, v. 13, 14. A dispensation is now set up, by which true believers may be made perfect.

1. There is a change in the tribe of which the priesthood comes, v. 14. This change of the family shows a real change of the law of priesthood.

2. There is a change in the form and order of making the priests. The law by which Christ was constituted a priest, after the order of Melchisedec, was the power of an endless life. This gives the preference infinitely to Christ and the gospel. The high priest of our profession holds his office by that innate power of endless life which he has in himself, to communicate eternal life to all those who duly rely upon his sacrifice and intercession.

3. There is a change in the efficacy of the priesthood, v. 18, 19. The Levitical priesthood brought nothing to perfection. But the priesthood of Christ brings along with it a better hope; it shows us the true foundation of all the hope we have towards God for pardon and salvation. By this hope we are encouraged to draw nigh unto God, to live a life of communion with him.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12. For—the reason why Paul presses the words "after the order of Melchisedec" in Psalm 110:4, viz., because these presuppose a change or transference of the priesthood, and this carries with it a change also of the law (which is inseparably bound up with the priesthood, both stand and fall together, vs. 11). This is his answer to those who might object, What need was there of a new covenant? 13. Confirming the truth that a change is made of the law (vs. 12), by another fact showing the distinctness of the new priesthood from the Aaronic. these things—(Ps. 110:4). pertaineth—Greek, "hath partaken of" (the perfect tense implies the continuance still of His manhood). another—"a different tribe" from that of Levi. 14. evident—lit., "manifest before the eyes" as a thing indisputable; a proof that whatever difficulties may now appear, then Jesus Christ's genealogy labored under none. our Lord—the only place where this now common title occurs without "Jesus," or "Christ," except II Peter 3:15. sprang—as a plant, and a branch. Judah—Genesis 49:10; Luke 1:27, 39 (Hebron of Judah, where LIGHTFOOT thinks Jesus was conceived); 2:4, 5; Rev. 5:5. of which tribe . . . priesthood—"in respect to which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priests" (so the oldest MSS. read, nothing to imply that priests were to be taken from it). 15. Another proof that the law, or economy, is changed, viz., forasmuch as Christ is appointed Priest, "not according to the law of a carnal (i.e., a mere outward) commandment," but "according to the power of an indissoluble (so the Greek) life." The 110th Psalm appoints Him "for ever" (vs. 17). The Levitical law required a definite carnal descent. In contrast stands "the power"; Christ's spiritual, inward, living power of overcoming death. Not agreeably to a statute is Christ appointed, but according to an inward living power. it—the change of the law or economy, the statement (vss. 12, 18). far more—Greek, "more abundantly." for that—"seeing that," lit., "if"; so Romans 5:10. after the similitude of Melchisedec—answering to "after the order of Melchisedec" (ch. 5:10). The "order" cannot mean a series of priests, for Melchisedec neither received his priesthood from, nor transmitted it to, any other mere man; it must mean "answering to the office of Melchisedec." Christ's priesthood is similar to Melchisedec's in that it is "for ever" (vss. 16, 17). another—rather as Greek, "a different." 16. carnal . . . endless—mutually contrasted. As "form" and "power" are opposed, II Timothy 3:5; so here "the law" and "power," cf. Romans 8:3, "The law was weak through the flesh"; and vs. 18, "weakness." "The law" is here not the law in general, but the statute as to the priesthood. "Carnal," as being only outward and temporary, is contrasted with "endless," or, as Greek, "indissoluble." Commandments is contrasted with "life." The law can give a commandment, but it cannot give life (vs. 19). But our High Priest's inherent "power," now in heaven, has in Him "life for ever"; ch. 9:14, "through the eternal Spirit"; ch. 7:25, "able" . . . "ever liveth" (John 5:26). It is in the power of His resurrection life, not of His earthly life, that Christ officiates as a Priest. 17. For—proving His life to be "endless" or indissoluble (vs. 16). The emphasis is on "for ever." The oldest MSS. read, "He is testified of, that Thou art. . . . 18. there is—Greek, "there takes place," according to Psalm 110:4. disannuling—a repealing. of the commandment—ordaining the Levitical priesthood. And, as the Levitical priesthood and the law are inseparably joined, since the former is repealed, the latter is so also (Note, vs. 11). going before—the legal ordinance introducing and giving place to the Christian, the antitypical and permanent end of the former. weakness and unprofitableness—The opposite of "power" (vs. 16). 19. For . . .—justifying his calling the law weak and unprofitable (vs. 18). The law could not bring men to true justification or sanctification before God, which is the "perfection" that we all need in order to be accepted of Him, and which we have in Christ. nothing—not merely "no one," but "nothing." The law brought nothing to its perfected end; everything in it was introductory to its antitype in the Christian economy, which realizes the perfection contemplated; cf. "unprofitableness," vs. 18. did—rather connect with vs. 18, thus, "There takes place (by virtue of Ps. 110:4) a repealing of the commandment (on the one hand), but (on the other) a bringing in afterwards (the Greek expresses that there is a bringing in of something over and above the law; a superinducing, or accession of something new, viz., something better than the good things which the pre-existing law promised [WAHL]) of a better hope," not one weak and unprofitable, but, as elsewhere the Christian hood: this existed typically in Melchisedec, and really in Jesus Christ.

12. The priesthood being changed. That is, the order of Aaron being now abrogated to make way for that which had preceded it, the order of Melchisedec. There is made of necessity a change also of the law. The very essence of the Levitical law consisting in its sacrificial offerings; and as these could not confer perfection, could not reconcile God to man, purify the unholy heart, nor open the kingdom of Heaven to the souls of men, consequently it must be abolished, according to the order of God himself.

13. For he of whom these things are spoken. That is, Jesus, the Messiah, spoken of in Ps. cx. 4, who came, not from the tribe of Levi, but from the tribe of Judah, of which tribe no priest ever ministered at a Jewish altar, nor could minister according to the law.

14. For it is evident. As the apostle speaks here with so much confidence, it follows that our Lord's descent from the tribe of Judah was incontrovertible. The genealogical tables, in both Matthew and Luke, establish this point.

15. And it is yet far more evident. "And besides, it is more abundantly, strikingly manifest." It is very difficult to translate these words, but the apostle's meaning is plain, viz., that God designed the Levitical priesthood to be changed, because of the oath in Ps. cx, where, addressing the Messiah, he says: "Thou art a priest for ever after the order [or similitude] of Melchisedek," who was not only a priest, but also a king. None of the Levitical priests sustained this double office; but they both, with that of prophet, appear and were exercised in the person of our Lord, who is the Priest to which the apostle alludes.

16. Who is made. Appointed to this high office by God himself, not succeeding one that was disabled or dead. This is probably all that the apostle intends by the words carnal commandment, for carnal does not always mean sinful or corrupt, but feeble, frail, or what may be said of or concerning man in his present dying condition. But after the power of an endless life. Not dying, or ceasing through weakness to be a priest, but properly immortal himself, and having the power to confer life and immortality on others.

17. For he testifieth. That is, either the Scripture, in the place so often quoted, or God by that Scripture. Thou art a priest for ever. This is the proof that He was not appointed according to the carnal commandment, but according to the power of an endless life, because He is a Priest for ever; i.e., One that never dies and is never disabled from performing the important functions of His office.

18. For there is verily a disannulling. There is a total abrogation "of the former law" relative to the Levitical priesthood. See v. 19. For the weakness. It had no energy; it communicated none; it had no Spirit to minister; it required perfect obedience, but furnished no assistance to those who were under it. And unprofitableness. No man was benefited by the mere observance of its precepts. It pardoned no sin, changed no heart, reformed no life; it found men dead in trespasses and sins, and it consigned them to eternal death. It was therefore weak in itself and unprofitable to men.

19. For the law made nothing perfect. It completed nothing; it was only the outline of a great plan, the shadow of a glorious substance; see on v. 11. It neither pardoned sin or purified the heart, nor gave strength to obey the moral precepts. Nothing is put here for "no person." But the bringing in of a better hope. The original is very emphatic, the "superintroduction" or the "after introduction"; and this seems to be put in opposition to the "the preceding commandment," or former Levitical law, of v. 18. This went before to prepare the way of the Lord, to show the exceeding sinfulness of sin and the strict justice of God. The better hope, which referred not to earthly but to spiritual good, not to temporal but eternal felicity, founded on the priesthood and atonement of Christ, was afterwards introduced for the purpose of doing what the law could not do, and giving privileges and advantages which the law would not afford. One

4. There is a change in God's way of acting in this priesthood. Christ was made a priest with the oath of God, v. 21.

5. There is a change in the dispensation of that covenant. The gospel dispensation is more full, free, and efficacious, than that of the law. He, as surety, has united the divine and human nature together in his own person, and therein given assurance of reconciliation; and he has, as surety, united God and man together in the bond of the everlasting covenant.

6. There is a remarkable change in the number of the priests. In that of Aaron there was a multitude of priests; but in this of Christ there is but one and the same. They were not suffered to continue by reason of death.

Our high priest continues for ever, and his priesthood is an unchangeable one. There can be no vacancy in this priesthood, no hour nor moment in which the people are without a priest to negotiate their spiritual concerns in heaven.

This ever-living high priest is able to save to the utmost all who come to God by him, v. 25.

dispensation is called, "everlasting," "true," "the second," "more excellent," "different," "living," "new," "to come," "perfect." Cf. ch. 8:6, bringing us near to God, now in spirit, hereafter both in spirit and in body. we draw nigh unto God—the sure token of "perfection." Weakness is the opposite of this filial confidence of access. The access through the legal sacrifices was only symbolical and through the medium of a priest; that through Christ is immediate, perfect, and spiritual. 20. Another proof of the superiority of Christ's Melchisedec-like priesthood; the oath of God gave a solemn weight to it which was not in the law-priesthood, which was not so confirmed. he was made priest—rather supply from vs. 22, which completes the sentence begun in this verse, vs. 21 being a parenthesis, "inasmuch as not without an oath He was made surety of the testament (for . . .), of so much better a testament hath Jesus been made the surety." 21. Translate in the Greek order, "For they indeed (the existing legal priests) without the (solemn) promise on oath (so the Greek [TITTMANN]) are made priests." by him—God. unto him—the Lord, the Son of God (Ps. 110:1). not repent—never change His purpose. after the order of Melchisedec—omitted in some oldest MSS., contained in others. 22. surety—ensuring in His own person the certainty of the covenant to us. This He did by becoming responsible for our guilt, by sealing the covenant with His blood, and by being openly acknowledged as our triumphant Saviour by the Father, who raised Him from the dead. Thus He is at once God's surety for man, and man's surety for God, and so Mediator between God and man (ch. 8:6). better—ch. 8:6; 13:20, "everlasting." testament—sometimes translated, "covenant." The Greek term implies that it is appointed by God, and comprises the relations and bearings partly of a covenant, partly of a testament: (1) the appointment made without the concurrence of a second party, of somewhat concerning that second party; a last will or testament, so in ch. 9:16, 17; (2) a mutual agreement in which both parties consent. 23. Another proof of superiority; the Levitical priests were many, as death caused the need of continually new ones being appointed in succession. Christ dies not, and so hath a priesthood which passes not from one to another. were—Greek, "are made." many—one after another; opposed to His "unchangeable (that does not pass from one to another) priesthood" (vs. 24). not suffered to continue—Greek, "hindered from permanently continuing," viz., in the priesthood. 24. he—emphatic; Greek, "Himself." So in Psalm 110:4, "THOU art a priest"; singular, not priests, "many." continueth—Greek, simple verb, not the compound as in vs. 23. "Remaineth," viz., in life. unchangeable—Greek, "hath His priesthood unchangeable"; not passing from one to another, intransmissible. Therefore no earthly so-called apostolic succession of priests are His vicegerents. The Jewish priests had successors in office, because "they could not continue by reason of death." But this Man, because He liveth ever, hath no successor in office, not even Peter (I Pet. 5:1). 25. Wherefore—Greek, "Whence"; inasmuch as "He remaineth for ever." also—as a natural consequence flowing from the last, at the same time a new and higher thing [ALFORD]. save—His very name JESUS (vs. 22) meaning Saviour —to the uttermost—altogether, perfectly, so that nothing should be wanting afterwards for ever [TITTMANN]. It means "in any wise," "utterly," in Luke 13:11. come unto God—by faith. by him—through Him as their mediating Priest, instead of through the Levitical priests. seeing he ever liveth —resuming "He continueth ever," vs. 24; therefore "He is able to the uttermost"; He is not, like the Levitical priest, prevented by death, for "He ever liveth" (vs. 23). to make intercession—There was but the one offering on earth once for all. But the intercession for us in the heavens (vs. 26) is ever continuing, whence the result follows, that we can never be separated from the love of God in Christ. He intercedes only for those who come unto God through Him, not for the unbelieving world (John 17:9). As samples of His intercession, cf. the prophetical descriptions in the Old Testament. "By an humble omnipotency (for it was by His humiliation that He obtained all power), or omnipotent humility, appearing in the presence, and presenting His postulations at the throne of God [BISHOP PEARSON]. He was not only the offering, but the priest who offered it. Therefore, He has become not only a sacrifice, but an intercessor; His intercession being founded on His voluntary offering of Himself without spot to God. We are not only then in virtue of His sacrifice forgiven, but in virtue of the intercession admitted to favor and grace of these privileges immediately follows: By the which we draw nigh unto God. This is a sacerdotal phrase. The high priest alone could approach to the Divine Presence in the holy of holies; but not without the blood of the sacrifice, and that only once in the year. But through Christ, as our High Priest, all believers in Him have an entrance to the holiest by His blood, and through Him perform acceptable service to God. The better hope means, in this place, Jesus Christ, who is the Author and Object of the hope of eternal life, which all His genuine followers possess.

21. Those priests, the Levitical, were made without an oath, to show that the whole system was changeable and might be abolished. But this, the everlasting priesthood of Christ, with an oath, to show that the gospel dispensation should never change and never be abolished. By him, God the Father, that said unto him, the promised Messiah, Ps. cx. 4, The Lord sware, to show the immutability of His counsel, and will not repent, can never change His mind nor purpose, Thou art a priest for ever—as long as time shall run and the generations of men be continued on earth. Till the necessity of the mediatorial Kingdom be superseded by the fixed state of eternity, till this Kingdom be delivered up unto the Father, and God shall be All in All, shall this priesthood of Christ endure.

22. By so much, this solemn, unchangeable oath of God, was Jesus made a surety, a "Mediator," One who brings the two parties together, witnesses the contract, and offers the covenant sacrifice on the occasion. A better testament. "A better covenant"; thus contradistinguished from the Mosaic, which was the old covenant; and this is called the new and better covenant, because God has in it promised other blessings, to other people, on other conditions, than the old covenant did. The new covenant is better than the old in the following particulars: (1) God promised to the Jewish nation certain secular blessings, peculiar to that nation, on condition of their keeping the law of Moses; but under the new covenant He promises pardon of sin, and final salvation to all mankind, on condition of believing on Jesus Christ and walking in His testimonies. (2) The Jewish priests, fallible, dying men, were mediators of the old covenant by means of their sacrifices, which could not take away sin, nor render the comers thereunto perfect. But Jesus Christ, who liveth forever, who is infinite in wisdom and power, by the sacrifice of himself has established this new covenant, and by the shedding of His blood has opened the kingdom of Heaven to all believers.

23. And they truly were many priests. Under the Mosaic law it was necessary there should be a succession of priests because, being mortal, they were not suffered to continue always by reason of death.

24. But this. "But He," that is, Christ, because he continueth ever, is eternal, hath an unchangeable priesthood, "a priesthood that passeth not away" from Him. He lives forever, and He lives a Priest forever.

25. Wherefore. Because He is an everlasting Priest and has offered the only available sacrifice, he is able . . . to save from the power, guilt, nature, and punishment of sin. To the uttermost, to all intents, degrees, purposes; and always, and in and through all times, places, and circumstances; for all this is implied in the original word. But "in and through all times" seems to be the particular meaning here, because of what follows, he ever liveth to make intercession for them; this depends on the perpetuity of His priesthood and the continuance of His mediatorial office. But none can be saved by His grace that do not come unto God by [through] him; i.e., imploring mercy through Him as their Sacrifice and Atonement. The phrase "to make intercession" for a person has a considerable latitude of meaning. It signifies: (1) To come to or meet a person on any cause whatever. (2) To intercede, pray for, or entreat in the behalf of, another. (3) To defend or vindicate a person. (4) To commend. (5) To furnish any kind of assistance or help.

MATTHEW HENRY

7. There is a remarkable difference in the moral qualifications of the priests. He is such a high priest as became us, holy, harmless, and undefiled, &c., v. 26–28. Our case, as sinners, needed a high priest to make satisfaction and intercession for us. No priest could be suitable or sufficient for our reconciliation to God but one who was perfectly righteous. The Lord Jesus was exactly such a high priest as we wanted, for he has a personal holiness, absolutely perfect. He is holy. No sin dwells in him, though it does in the best of Christians. He is harmless, never did the least wrong to God or man. He is undefiled, though he took upon him the guilt of our sins, yet he never involved himself in the fact and fault of them. He is separate from sinners. Though he took a true human nature, yet the miraculous way in which it was conceived set him upon a separate footing from all the rest of mankind.

He is made higher than the heavens, for he is exalted at the right hand of God, to perfect the design of his priesthood.

The validity and prevalency of Christ's priesthood in v. 27 are placed in the impartiality and disinterestedness of it. He needed not to offer up for himself: it was a disinterested mediation; he mediated for that mercy for others which he did not need for himself.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

[ARCHBISHOP MAGEE]. 26. such—as is above described. The oldest MSS. read, "also." "For to US (as sinners; emphatical) there was also becoming (besides the other excellencies of our High Priest) such an High Priest." holy—"pious" (a distinct Greek word from that for holy, which latter implies consecration) towards God; perfectly answering God's will in reverent piety (Ps. 16:10). harmless—lit., "free from evil" and guile, in relation to Himself. undefiled—not defiled by stain contracted from others, in relation to men. Temptation, to which He was exposed, left no trace of evil in Him. separate—rather, "separated from sinners," viz., in His heavenly state as our High Priest above, after He had been parted from the earth, as the Levitical high priest was separated from the people in the sanctuary (whence he was not to go out), Lev. 21:12. Though justifying through faith the ungodly, He hath no contact with them as such. He is lifted above our sinful community, being "made higher than the heavens," at the same time that He makes believers as such (not as sinners), "to sit together (with Him) in heavenly places" (Eph. 2:6). Just as Moses on the mount was separated from and above the people, and alone with God. This proves Jesus is GOD. "Though innumerable lies have been forged against the venerable Jesus, none dared to charge Him with any intemperance" [ORIGEN]. made—Jesus WAS higher before (John 17:5), and as the God-MAN was made so by the Father after His humiliation (cf. ch. 1:4). higher than the heavens—for "He passed through [so the Greek] the heavens" (ch. 4:14). 27. daily—"day by day." The priests daily offered sacrifices (ch. 9:6; 10:11; Exod. 29:38-42). The high priests took part in these daily-offered sacrifices only on festival days; but as they represented the whole priesthood, the daily offerings are here attributed to them; their exclusive function was to offer the atonement "once every year" (ch. 9:7), and "year by year continually" (ch. 10:1). The "daily" strictly belongs to Christ, not to the high priests, "who needeth not daily, as those high priests (year by year, and their subordinate priests daily), to offer...." offer up—The Greek term is peculiarly used of sacrifices for sin. The high priest's double offering on the day of atonement, the bullock for himself, and the goat for the people's sins, had its counterpart in the TWO lambs offered daily by the ordinary priests. this he did—not "died first for His own sins and then the people's," but for the people's only. The negation is twofold: He needeth not to offer (1) daily; nor (2) to offer for His own sins also; for He offered Himself a spotless sacrifice (vs. 26; ch. 4:15). The sinless alone could offer for the sinful. once—rather as Greek, "once for all." The sufficiency of the one sacrifice to atone for all sins for ever, resulted from its absolute spotlessness. 28. For—reason for the difference stated in vs. 27, between His one sacrifice and their oft repeated sacrifices, viz., because of His entire freedom from the sinful infirmity to which they are subject. He needed not, as they, to offer FOR HIS OWN SIN; and being now exempt from death and "perfected for evermore," He needs not to REPEAT His sacrifice. the word—"the word" confirmed by "the oath." which—which oath was after the law, viz., in Psalm 110:4, abrogating the preceding law-priesthood. the Son—contrasted with "men." consecrated—Greek, "made perfect" once for all, as in ch. 2:10; 5:9, Notes. Opposed to "having infirmity." Consecrated as a perfected priest by His perfected sacrifice, and consequent anointing and exaltation to the right hand of the Father.

ADAM CLARKE

26. Such an high priest became us. Such a High Priest was in every respect suitable to us, every way qualified to accomplish the end for which He came into the world. There is probably here an allusion to the qualifications of the Jewish high priest: (1) He was required to be holy, answering to the Hebrew chasid, "merciful." Holiness was his calling; and, as he was the representative of his brethren, he was required to be merciful and compassionate. (2) He was to be harmless, "without evil"—holy without and holy within; injuring none, but rather living for the benefit of others. (3) He was undefiled, answering to the Hebrew "without blemish"—having no bodily imperfection. Nothing low, mean, base, or unbecoming in his conduct. (4) He was separate from sinners. By his office he was separated from all men and worldly occupations, and entirely devoted to the service of God. (5) Higher than the heavens. There may be some reference here to the exceeding dignity of the high priesthood; it was the highest office that could be sustained by man, the high priest himself being the immediate representative of God. But these things suit our Lord in a sense in which they cannot be applied to the high priest of the Jews. (1) He was holy, infinitely so; and "merciful." Witness His shedding His blood for the sins of mankind. (2) Harmless—perfectly without sin in His humanity as well as His divinity. (3) Undefiled—contracted no sinful infirmity in consequence of His dwelling among men. (4) Separate from sinners—absolutely unblameable in the whole of His conduct, so that He could challenge the most inveterate of His enemies with, "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" (5) Higher than the heavens—more exalted than all the angels of God, than all created beings, whether thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, because all these were created by Him and for Him, and derive their continued subsistence from His infinite energy.

27. Who needeth not daily. Though the high priest offered the great atonement only once in the year, yet in the Jewish services there was a daily acknowledgement of sin, and a daily sacrifice offered by the priests, at whose head was the high priest, for their own sins and the sins of the people. The Jews held that a priest who neglected his own expiatory sacrifice would be smitten with death. For this he did once. For himself He offered no sacrifice; and the apostle gives the reason—he needed none, because he was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners"; and for the people He offered himself once for all, when He expired upon the Cross.

28. For the law maketh men high priests. The Jewish priests have need of these repeated offerings and sacrifices because they are fallible, sinful men. But the word of the oath (still referring to Ps. cx. 4), which was since the law. For David, who mentions this, lived nearly five hundred years after the giving of the law; and consequently that oath, constituting another priesthood, abrogates the law. And by this the Son . . . is consecrated, "is perfected," for evermore. Being a High Priest without blemish, immaculately holy, every way perfect, immortal, and eternal, He is a Priest "to eternity."

Verses 1–5

I. A summary recital of what had been said before concerning the excellency of Christ's priesthood, v. 1, 2. What we have in Christ; we have a high priest, and such a high priest as no other people ever had. all others were but types and shadows of this high priest. Where he now resides: He sits on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty on high. This is the reward of his humiliation.

CHAPTER 8

VSS. 1-13. CHRIST, THE HIGH PRIEST IN THE TRUE SANCTUARY, SUPERSEDING THE LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD; THE NEW RENDERS OBSOLETE THE OLD COVENANT. 1. the sum—rather, "the principal point"; for the participle is present, not past, which would be required if the meaning were "the sum." "The chief point in (or, 'in the case'; so the Greek, ch. 9:10, 15, 17) the things which we are speaking," lit., "which are being spoken." such—so transcendently pre-eminent, viz., in this respect, that "He is set on the right hand of...." Infinitely above all other priests in this one grand respect, He exercises His priesthood IN HEAVEN, not in the earthly "holiest place" (ch. 10:12). The Levitical high priests, even when they entered the Holiest Place once a year, only STOOD for a brief space before the symbol of God's throne; but Jesus SITS on the throne of the Divine Majesty in the heaven itself, and this for ever (ch. 10:11, 12).

CHAPTER 8

1. Of the things which we have spoken this is the sum. The word which we translate sum signifies the "chief," the "principal," or "head." Who is set on the right hand of the throne. This is what the apostle states to be the chief or most important point of all that he had yet discussed. His sitting down at the right hand of the throne of God, proves: (1) That He is higher than all the high priests that ever existed. (2) That the sacrifice which He offered for the sins of the world was sufficient and effectual, and as such accepted by God. (3) That He has all power in the heavens and in the earth, and is able to save and defend to the uttermost all that come to God through Him. (4) That He did not, like the Jewish high priest, depart out of the holy of holies after having offered the atonement; but abides there at the throne of God as a continual Priest, in the

What is that sanctuary of which he is a minister, v. 2. There was an outer part, in which was the altar where they were to offer their sacrifices, which typified Christ dying; and there was an interior part within the veil, which typified Christ interceding for the people in heaven. Having finished the work of satisfaction in the true tabernacle of his own body, he is now a minister of the sanctuary, the holy of holies, the true tabernacle in heaven. He is not only in heaven enjoying great dominion and dignity, but as the high priest of his church.

II. The apostle sets before the Hebrews what it was that belonged to that office, v. 3, 4. It necessarily belongs to the priesthood of Christ that he should have somewhat to offer; and he had himself to offer, as the great atoning sacrifice.

Christ must now execute his priesthood in heaven; having finished the work of sacrificing here, he must go into heaven, to present his righteousness and to make intercession there. If Christ were on earth, he would not be a priest (v. 4), that is, not according to the Levitical law. If he had still continued on earth, he could not have been a perfect priest; and an imperfect one he could not be.

Verses 6–13

The apostle illustrates and confirms the superior excellency of the priesthood of Christ. His ministry is more excellent, by how much he is the Mediator of a better covenant.

What is here said of the New Testament dispensation.

1. That it is a better covenant (v. 6). It is without fault, well ordered in all things. It requires nothing but what it promises grace to perform. All is put into a good and safe hand.

2. That it is established upon better promises. This covenant contains in it promises of assistance and acceptance in duty, promises of progress and perseverance in grace and holiness, of bliss and glory in heaven.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

2. minister—The Greek term implies priestly ministry in the temple. the sanctuary—Greek, "the holy places"; the Holy of Holies. Here the heavenly sanctuary is meant. the true—the archetypal and antitypical, as contrasted with the typical and symbolical (ch. 9:24). Greek alethinos (used here) is opposed to that which does not fulfil its idea, as for instance, a type; alethes, to that which is untrue and unreal, as a lie. The measure of alethes is reality; that of alethinos, ideality. In alethes the idea corresponds to the thing; in alethinos, the thing to the idea [KALMIS in ALFORD]. tabernacle—(ch. 9:11). His body. Through His glorified body as the tabernacle, Christ passes into the heavenly "Holy of Holies," the immediate immaterial presence of God, where He intercedes for us. This tabernacle in which God dwells, is where God in Christ meets us who are "members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones." This tabernacle answers to the heavenly Jerusalem, where God's visible presence is to be manifested to His perfected saints and angels, who are united in Christ the Head; in contradistinction to His personal invisible presence in the Holy of Holies unapproachable save to Christ. John 1:14, "Word . . . dwelt among us," Greek, "tabernacled." pitched—Greek, "fixed" firmly. not man—as Moses (vs. 5). 3. For—assigning his reason for calling him "minister of the sanctuary" (vs. 2). somewhat—He does not offer again His once for all completed sacrifice. But as the high priest did not enter the Holy Place without blood, so Christ has entered the heavenly Holy Place with His own blood. That "blood of sprinkling" is in heaven. And is thence made effectual to sprinkle believers as the end of their election (I Pet. 1:2). The term "consecrate" as a priest, is lit., to fill the hand, implying that an offering is given into the hands of the priest, which it is his duty to present to God. If a man be a priest, he must have some gift in his hands to offer. Therefore, Christ, as a priest, has His blood as His oblation to offer before God. 4. Implying that Christ's priestly office is exercised in heaven, not in earth; in the power of His resurrection life, not of His earthly life. For—The oldest MSS. read, "accordingly then." if . . .—"if He were on earth, He would not even (so the Greek) be a priest" (cf. ch. 7:13, 14); therefore, certainly, He could not exercise the high priestly function in the earthly Holy of Holies. seeing that . . .—"since there are" already, and exist now (the temple service not yet being set aside, as it was on the destruction of Jerusalem), "those (the oldest MSS. omit 'priests') who offer the (appointed) gifts according to (the) law." Therefore, His sacerdotal "ministry" must be "in the heavens," not on earth (vs. 1). "If His priesthood terminated on the earth, He would not even be a priest at all" [BENGEL].

5. Who—viz., the priests. serve unto the example—not "after the example," as BENGEL explains. But as in ch. 13:10, "serve the tabernacle," i.e., do it service: so "serve (the tabernacle which is but) the outline and shadow." The Greek for "example" is here taken for the sketch, copy, or suggestive representation of the heavenly sanctuary, which is the antitypical reality and primary archetype. "The mount" answers to heaven, ch. 12:22. admonished—The Greek especially applies to divine responses and commands. to make—"perfectly": so the Greek. See—Take heed, accurately observing the pattern, that so thou mayest make . . . . saith he—God. the pattern—an accurate representation, presented in vision to Moses, of the heavenly real sanctuary. Thus the earthly tabernacle was copy of a copy; but the latter accurately representing the grand archetypical original in heaven (Exod. 25: 40). 6. now—not time; but "as it is." more excellent ministry—than any earthly ministry. by how much—in proportion as. mediator—coming between us and God, to carry into effect God's covenant with us. "The messenger (angel) of the covenant." which—Greek, "one which" [ALFORD]: inasmuch as being one which. established—Greek, "enacted as a law." So Romans 3:27, "law of faith"; and 8:2; 9:31, apply "law" to the Gospel covenant. It is implied hereby, the Gospel is founded on the law, in the spirit and essence of the latter. upon—resting upon. better promises—enumerated vss. 10, 11. The Old Testament promises were mainly of earthly, the New Testament promises, of heavenly blessings: the exact fulfilment of the earthly promises was a pledge of the fulfilment of the heavenly. Cf. Jeremiah 7:21, 22, which shows that God's original design in the old covenant ritual system was, that it should be permanent act of offering His crucified body unto God in behalf of all the succeeding generations of mankind.

2. A minister of the sanctuary. "A public minister of the holy things" or places. The word means a person who officiated for the public, a public officer, in whom, and his work, all the people had a common right; hence our word "liturgy," the public work of prayer and praise, designed for the people at large. Properly speaking, the Jewish priest was the servant of the public; he transacted the business of the people with God. Jesus Christ is also the same kind of public officer; both as Priest and Mediator, He transacts the business of the whole human race with God. He performs the "holy things" or acts in the true tabernacle, heaven, of which the Jewish Tabernacle was the type. The Tabernacle was the place among the Jews where God, by the symbol of His presence, dwelt. This could only typify heaven, where God in His essential glory dwells; and hence heaven is called here the true tabernacle to distinguish it from the type. Which the Lord pitched. The Jewish Tabernacle was man's work, though made by God's direction; the heavens, this true tabernacle, the work of God alone. The Tabernacle was also a type of the human nature of Christ, John i. 14: "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (and "tabernacled" among us). For, as the Divine Presence dwelt in the Tabernacle, so the fullness of the Godhead, bodily, dwelt in the Man Christ Jesus. And this human body was the peculiar work of God, as it came not in the way of natural generation.

3. Every high priest is ordained. "Is set apart," for this especial work. Gifts and sacrifices. Eucharistic "offerings," and sacrifices for sin. By the former, God's government of the universe and His benevolence to His creatures in providing for their support were acknowledged. By the latter, the destructive and ruinous nature of sin and the necessity of an atonement were confessed. Wherefore it is of necessity. If Christ be a High Priest, and it be essential to the office of a high priest to offer atoning sacrifices to God, Jesus must offer such. Now it is manifest that, as he is the Public Minister, officiating in the true tabernacle as High Priest, He must make an atonement; and His being at the right hand of the throne shows that He has offered and continues to offer such an atonement.

4. For if he were on earth. As the Jewish Temple was standing when this Epistle was written, the whole Temple service continued to be performed by the legal priests, descendants of Aaron, of the tribe of Levi. Therefore if Christ had been then on earth, He could not have performed the office of a priest, being of the tribe of Judah, to which tribe the office of the priesthood did not appertain. There are priests that offer gifts. This is an additional proof that this Epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem.

5. Who serve. Who perform divine worship. Unto the example and shadow. "With the representation and shadow." The whole Levitical service was a representation and shadow of heavenly things; it appears, therefore, absurd to say that the priests served unto an example or "representation" of heavenly things; they served rather unto the substance of those things, with appropriate representations and shadows. As Moses was admonished. As Moses was divinely warned or admonished of God. According to the pattern. According to the "type," plan, or form. It is very likely that God gave a regular plan and specification of the Tabernacle and all its parts to Moses, and that from this divine plan the whole was constructed. See on Exod. xxv. 40.

6. Now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry. His office of priesthood is more excellent than the Levitical because the covenant is better, and established on better promises. The old covenant referred to earthly things; the new covenant, to heavenly. The old covenant had promises of secular good; the new covenant, of spiritual and eternal blessings. As far as Christianity is preferable to Judaism, as far as Christ is preferable to Moses, as far as spiritual blessings are preferable to earthly blessings, and as far as the enjoyment of God throughout eternity is preferable to the communication of earthly

3. It is a new covenant. This will always be a new covenant, in which all who truly take hold of it shall be always found preserved by the power of God.

That this covenant was not found faultless (v. 7, 8). It was perfect in its kind, and fitted to answer its end, but very imperfect in comparison of the gospel.

What is here said of the old covenant. That it was made with the fathers of the Jewish nation at Mount Sinai (v. 9).

That it was not sure or steadfast, v. 9. God will regard those who remain in his covenant, but will reject those who cast away his yoke from them.

4. The articles of this covenant are sealed between God and his people by baptism and the Lord's supper.

(1) God articles with his people, v. 10. He once wrote his laws to them, now he will write his laws in them. Their souls shall be a table and transcript of the law of God.

(2) He articles with them to take them into a near and very honourable relation to himself. He will be to them a God. Nothing more can be said in a thousand volumes than is comprehended in these few words: I will be a God to them. They shall be to him a people, to love, honour, observe, and obey him in all things. This those must do and will do who have God for their God; this they shall do, for God will enable them to do it. It is God himself who first founds the relation, and then fills it up with grace suitable and sufficient, and helps them in their measure to fill it up with love and duty.

(3) He articles with them that they shall grow more and more acquainted with their God (v. 11). There shall not be so much need of one neighbour teaching another the knowledge of God. This private instruction shall not be so necessary under the New Testament as it was under the Old. There shall be a mighty increase and spreading of Christian knowledge in persons of all sorts, of each sex, and of all ages. O that this promise might be fulfilled in our days!

pædagogical, as a schoolmaster leading and preparing men for Christ. 7. Same reasoning as in ch. 7:11. faultless—perfect in all its parts, so as not to be found fault with as wanting anything which ought to be there: answering all the purposes of a law. The law in its morality was blameless, Greek-amomos; but in saving us it was defective, and so not faultless, Greek-amemptos. should no place have been sought—as it has to be now; and as it is sought in the prophecy (vss. 8-11). The old covenant would have anticipated all man's wants, so as to give no occasion for seeking something more perfectly adequate. Cf. on the phrase "place . . . sought," ch. 12:17. 8. finding fault with them—the people of the old covenant, who were not made "faultless" by it (vs. 7); and whose disregard of God's covenant made Him to "regard them not" (vs. 9). The law is not in itself blamed, but the people who had not observed it. he saith—(Jer. 31:31-34; cf. Ezek. 11:19; 36:25-27).

Behold, the days come—the frequent formula introducing a Messianic prophecy. make—Greek, "perfect"; "consummate." A suitable expression as to the new covenant, which perfected what the old could not (cf. end of vs. 9, with end of vs. 10). Israel . . . Judah—Therefore, the ten tribes, as well as Judah, share in the new covenant. As both shared the exile, so both shall share the literal and spiritual restoration. 9. Not according to . . .—very different from, and far superior to, the old covenant, which only "worked wrath" (Rom. 4:15) through man's "not regarding" it. The new covenant enables us to obey by the Spirit's inward impulse producing love because of the forgiveness of our sins. made with—rather as Greek, "made to": the Israelites being only recipients, not co-agents [ALFORD] with God. I took them by the hand—as a father takes his child by the hand to support and guide his steps. "There are three periods: (1) that of the promise; (2) that of the pædagogical instruction; (3) that of fulfilment" [BENGEL]. The second, that of the pædagogical pupilage, began at the exodus from Egypt. I regarded them not—English Version, Jeremiah 31:32, translates, "Although I was an husband unto them." Paul's translation here is supported by LXX, Syriac, and GESENIUS, and accords with the kindred Arabic. The Hebrews regarded not God, so God, in righteous retribution, regarded them not. On "continued not in my covenant," SCHELLING observes: The law was in fact the mere ideal of a religious constitution: in practice, the Jews were throughout, before the captivity, more or less polytheists, except in the time of David, and the first years of Solomon [the type of Messiah's reign]. Even after the return from Babylon, idolatry was succeeded by what was not much better, formalism and hypocrisy (Matt. 12:43). The law was (1) a typical picture, tracing out the features of the glorious Gospel to be revealed; (2) it had a delegated virtue from the Gospel, which ceased, therefore, when the Gospel came. 10. make with—Greek, "make unto." Israel—comprising the before disunited (vs. 8) ten tribes' kingdom, and that of Judah. They are united in the spiritual Israel, the elect Church, now: they shall be so in the literal restored kingdom of Israel to come. I will put—lit., "(I) giving." This is the first of the "better promises" (vs. 6). mind—their intelligent faculty. in . . .—rather, "ON their hearts." Not on tables of stone as the law (II Cor. 3:3). write—Greek, "inscribe." I will be to them a God . . .—fulfilled first in the outward kingdom of God. Next, in the inward Gospel kingdom. Thirdly, in the kingdom at once outward and inward, the spiritual being manifested outwardly (Rev. 21:3). Cf. a similar progression as to the priesthood (1) Exodus 19:6; (2) I Peter 2:5; (3) Isaiah 61:6; Revelation 1:6. This progressive advance of the significance of the Old Testament institutions, etc., says THOLUCK, shows the transparency and prophetic character which runs throughout the whole. 11. Second of the "better promises" (vs. 6). they shall not—"they shall not have to teach" [ALFORD]. his neighbour—So Vulgate reads; but the—oldest MSS. have "his (fellow) citizen." brother—a closer and more endearing relation than fellow citizen. from the least to the greatest—Greek, "from the little one to the great one." Zechariah 12:8, "He that is feeble among them shall be as David." Under the old covenant, the priest's lips were to keep knowledge, and at his mouth the people were to seek the law: under the new covenant, the Holy Spirit teaches every believer. Not that the mutual teaching of brethren is excluded while the covenant is being promulgated; but when once the Holy Spirit shall have fully taught all the remission of their sins and good during time, so far does the new covenant exceed the old.

7. If that first . . . had been faultless. This is nearly the same argument with that in chap. vii. 11. The simple meaning is: If the first covenant had made a provision for and actually conferred pardon and purity, and given a title to eternal life, then there could have been no need for a second. But the first covenant did not give these things; therefore a second was necessary.

8. For finding fault with them. The meaning is evidently this: God, in order to show that the first covenant was inefficient, saith to them, the Israelites, Behold, the days come . . . when I will make a new covenant." He found fault with the covenant, and addressed the people concerning His purpose of giving another covenant, that should be such as the necessities of mankind required. As this place refers to Jer. xxxi. 31-34, the words finding fault with them may refer to the Jewish people, of whom the Lord complains that they had broken His covenant though He was a Husband to them. With the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. That is, with all the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob. This is thought to be a promise of the conversion of all the Jews to Christianity, both of the lost tribes and of those who are known to exist in Asiatic and European countries.

9. Not according to the covenant. The new covenant is of a widely different nature to that of the old; it was only temporal and earthly in itself, though it pointed out spiritual and eternal things. The new covenant is totally different from this, as we have already seen; and such a covenant, or system of religion, the Jews should have been prepared to expect, as the Prophet Jeremiah had in the above place so clearly foretold it. And I regarded them not. "And I neglected them or despised them"; but the words in the Hebrew text of the prophet we translate, "although I was an husband unto them." Let it be observed: (1) That the apostle quotes from the Septuagint. (2) The Hebrew words will bear a translation much nearer to the Septuagint and the apostle than our translation intimates. The words might be literally rendered, "And I was Lord over them," or, "I lorded or ruled over them"; i.e., I chastised them for their transgressions and punished them for their iniquities; "I took no further care of them," and gave them up into the hands of their enemies, and so they were carried away into captivity. This pretty nearly reconciles the Hebrew and the Greek, as it shows the act of God in reference to them is nearly the same when the proper meaning of the Hebrew and Greek words is considered.

10. This is the covenant. This is the nature of that glorious system of religion which I shall publish among them after those days, i.e., in the times of the gospel. I will put my laws into their mind. I will influence them with the principles of law, truth, holiness; and their understandings shall be fully enlightened to comprehend them. And write them in their hearts. All their affections, passions, and appetites shall be purified and filled with holiness and love to God and man; so that they shall willingly obey, and feel that love is the fulfilling of the law. Instead of being written on tables of stone, they shall be written on the fleshly tables of their hearts. I will be to them a God. These are the two grand conditions by which the parties in this covenant or agreement are bound: (1) "I will be your God." (2) "Ye shall be my people." To be God's people implies that they should give God their whole hearts, serve Him with all their might and strength, and have no other object of worship or dependence but himself. Any of these conditions broken, the covenant is rendered null and void, and the other party absolved from his engagement.

11. They shall not teach every man his neighbour. The prophecy here indicates that there should be, under the gospel dispensation, a should be, under the gospel dispensation, a profusion of divine light; and this we find to be the case by the plentiful diffusion of the sacred writings, and by an abundant gospel ministry. And these blessings are not confined to temples or palaces, but are found in every corner of the land;

MATTHEW HENRY

(4) God articles with them about the pardon of their sins (v. 12). The freeness of this pardon. It does not result from merit in man, but from mercy in God. The fulness of this pardon; it extends to all kinds of sin. The fixedness of this pardon. It is so final and so fixed that God will remember their sins no more; he will not recall his pardon. It is the effect of that mercy that is from everlasting, and the earnest of that mercy that shall be to everlasting. Therefore we have great reason to rejoice that the former dispensation is antiquated and has vanished away.

That it is decayed, grown old, and vanisheth away, v. 13. It is antiquated, of no more use in gospel times than candles are when the sun has risen.

CHAPTER 9

Verses 1–7

I. The apostle gives an account of the tabernacle. It was divided into two parts, called a first and a second tabernacle, an inner and an outer part. We are also told what was placed in each part of the tabernacle.

1. In the outer part. (1) The candlestick; doubtless not an empty and unlighted one, but where the lamps were always burning. And there was need of it, for there were no windows in the sanctuary. Their light was only candle-light, in comparison of the fulness of light which Christ, the Sun of righteousness, would bring along with him. (2) The table and the show-bread set upon it. This table was set directly opposite to the candlestick. We must not come in the dark to his table, but by light from Christ must discern the Lord's body. He is the bread of life; in our Father's house there is bread enough and to spare; we may have fresh supplies from Christ, especially every Lord's day.

inward sanctification, then there shall be no further need of man teaching his fellow man. Cf. I Thessalonians 4:9; 5:1, an earnest of that perfect state to come. On the way to that perfect state every man should teach his neighbor. "The teaching is not hard and forced, because grace renders all teachable; for it is not the ministry of the letter, but of the spirit (II Cor. 3:6). The believer's firmness does not depend on the authority of human teachers. God Himself teaches" [BENGEL]. The New Testament is shorter than the Old Testament, because, instead of the details of an outward letter law, it gives the all-embracing principles of the spiritual law written on the conscience, leading one to spontaneous instinctive obedience in outward details. None save the Lord can teach effectually, "know the Lord." 12. For . . .—the third of "the better promises" (vs. 6). The forgiveness of sins is, and will be, the root of this new state of inward grace and knowledge of the Lord. Sin being abolished, sinners obtain grace. I will be merciful Greek, "propitious"; the Hebrew, salach, is always used of God only in relation to men. and their iniquities—not found in Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and one oldest Greek MS.; but most oldest MSS. have the words (cf. ch. 10:17). remember no more—Contrast the law, ch. 10:3. 13. he—God. made . . . old—"hath (at the time of speaking the prophecy) antiquated the first covenant." From the time of God's mention of a NEW covenant (since God's words are all realities) the first covenant might be regarded as ever dwindling away, until its complete abolition on the actual introduction of the Gospel. Both covenants cannot exist side by side. Mark how verbal inspiration is proved in Paul's argument turning wholly on the one word "NEW" (covenant), occurring but once in the Old Testament. that which decayeth—Greek, "that which is being antiquated," viz., at the time when Jeremiah spake. For in Paul's time, according to his view, the new had absolutely set aside the old covenant. The Greek for (Kaine) New (Testament) implies that it is of a different kind and supersedes the old: not merely recent (Greek, nea). Cf. Hosea 3:4, 5.

Vss. 1-28. INFERIORITY OF THE OLD TO THE NEW COVENANT IN THE MEANS OF ACCESS TO GOD: THE BLOOD OF BULLS AND GOATS OF NO REAL AVAIL: THE BLOOD OF CHRIST ALL-SUFFICIENT TO PURGE AWAY SIN, WHENCE FLOWS OUR HOPE OF HIS APPEARING AGAIN FOR OUR PERFECT SALVATION. 1. Then verily—Greek, "Accordingly then." Resuming the subject from ch. 8:5. In accordance with the command given to Moses, "the first covenant had . . . ." had—not "has," for as a covenant it no longer existed, though its rites were observed till the destruction of Jerusalem. ordinances—of divine right and institution. service—worship. a worldly sanctuary—Greek, "its (lit., the) sanctuary worldly," mundane; consisting of the elements of the visible world. Contrasted with the heavenly sanctuary. Cf. vss. 11, 12, "not of this building," vs. 24. Material, outward, perishing (however precious its materials were), and also defective religiously. In vss. 2-5, "the worldly sanctuary" is discussed; in vs. 6, etc., the "ordinances of worship." The outer tabernacle the Jews believed, signified this world; the Holy of Holies, heaven. JOSEPHUS calls the outer, divided into two parts, "a secular and common place," answering to "the earth and sea"; and the inner holiest place, the third part, appropriated to God and not accessible to men. 2. Defining "the worldly tabernacle." a tabernacle—"the tabernacle." made—built and furnished. the first—the anterior tabernacle.

candlestick . . . table—typifying light and life (Exod. 25:31-39). The candlestick consisted of a shaft and six branches of gold, seven in all, the bowls made like almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch. It was carried in Vespasian's triumph, and the figure is to be seen on Titus' arch at Rome. The table of shittim wood, covered with gold, was for the shew-bread (Exod. 25:23-30). shew-bread—lit., "the setting forth of the loaves," i.e., the loaves set forth: "the show of the bread" [ALFORD]. In the outer holy place: so the Eucharist continues until our entrance into the heavenly Holy of Holies (I Cor. 11:26). which . . .—"which (tabernacle) is called the holy place," as distinguished from "the Holy of Holies."

so that, literally, all the people, from the least to the greatest, know and acknowledge the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom He has sent. Almost every man, at least in this land, has a Bible, and can read it; and there is not a family that has not the opportunity of hearing the gospel preached, explained, and enforced. Some have thought that from the least to the greatest is intended to signify the order in which God proceeds with a work of grace; He generally begins with the poor, and through these the great and the high often hear the gospel of Christ.

12. I will be merciful to their unrighteousness. In order to be their God, as mentioned under the preceding verse, it is requisite that their iniquity should be pardoned; this is provided for by the immolation of Jesus Christ as the covenant Sacrifice. All spiritual evil against the nature and law of God is represented here under the following terms: (1) Unrighteousness, "injustice" or "wrong." This is against God, his neighbor, and himself. (2) Sin, deviation from the divine law; "missing the mark." (3) Iniquity, "lawlessness"; not having, knowing, or acknowledging a law; having no law written in their hearts, and restrained by none in the conduct of their lives.

13. He hath made the first old. That is, He has considered it as "antiquated," and as being no longer of any force. That which decayeth and waxeth old. Here is an allusion to the ancient laws which either had perished from the tables on which they were written through old age, or were fallen into disuse, or were abrogated. Is ready to vanish away. "Is about to be abolished." The word is used to express the abolition of the law. The apostle therefore intimates that the old covenant was just about to be abolished; but he expresses himself cautiously and tenderly, that he might not give unnecessary offense.

1. The first covenant had also ordinances. Our translators have introduced the word covenant, the whole context showing that covenant is that to which the apostle refers, as that was the subject in the preceding chapter and this is a continuation of the same discourse. Ordinances. Rites and ceremonies. A worldly sanctuary. It is supposed that the term worldly here is opposed to the term "heavenly," chap. viii. 5, and that the whole should be referred to the secular nature of the Tabernacle service. But I think there is nothing plainer than that the apostle is speaking here in praise of this sublimely emblematic service, and hence he proceeds to enumerate the various things contained in the first Tabernacle, which added vastly to its splendor and importance; such as the table of the shewbread, the golden candlestick, the golden censer, the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, in which was the golden pot that had the manna, Aaron's rod that budded, and the two tables which God had written with His own finger.

2. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein. The sense is here very obscure and the construction involved: leaving out all punctuation, which is the case with all the very ancient MSS., the verse I suppose an indifferent person, who understood the language, would without hesitation render, "For there was the first Tabernacle constructed, in which were the candlestick," etc. And this Tabernacle or dwelling may be called the first dwelling place which God had among men, to distinguish it from the second dwelling place, the Temple built by Solomon; for tabernacle here is to be considered in its general sense, as implying a dwelling. To have a proper understanding of what the apostle relates here, we should endeavor to take a concise view of the Tabernacle erected by Moses in the wilderness. In the holy place, as the apostle observes, there were: (1) the golden candlestick of seven branches, (2) the golden altar, or altar of incense, (3) the altar or table of the shewbread; where the twelve loaves, representing the twelve tribes, were laid before the Lord. Which is called the sanctuary. "This is called holy." This clause may apply to any

2. We have an account of what was in the inner part of the sanctuary, which was within the second veil, and is called the holiest of all. Now in this part were, (1) The golden censer, which was to hold the incense, or the golden altar set up to burn the incense upon.

(2) The ark of the covenant overlaid round about with pure gold, v. 4. Now here we are told both what was in this ark and what was over it. [1] What was in it. First, The golden pot that had manna. This was a memorial of God's miraculously feeding his people in the wilderness, that they might never forget such signal favour, nor distrust God for the time to come.

Secondly, Aaron's rod that budded. This was that rod of God with which Moses and Aaron wrought such wonders; and this was a type of Christ, by whom God has wrought wonders for his people. Thirdly, The tables of the covenant, in which the moral law was written, signifying the regard God has to the preservation of his holy law, and the care we all ought to have that we keep the law of God. [2] What was over the ark (v. 5). The mercy-seat, which was the covering of the ark. It was of pure gold, as long and as broad as the ark in which the tables of the law were laid. It was an eminent type of Christ, and of his perfect righteousness, ever adequate to the dimensions of the law of God, and covering all our transgressions. The cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat, represented the holy angels of God.

II. The apostle proceeds to speak of the duties and services performed in those places, v. 6.

1. The ordinary priests went always into the first tabernacle, to accomplish the service of God. None but priests were to enter into the first part of the tabernacle. The ordinary priests were only to enter into the first part of the tabernacle, it would have been fatal presumption in them to have gone into the holiest of all.

2. Into the second, the interior part, went the high priest alone, v. 7. None but the high priest must go into the holiest; so none but Christ could enter into heaven by his own right, and by his own merits. The high priest must not enter without blood. None of us can enter either into God's gracious presence here or his glorious presence hereafter, but by the blood of Jesus. The high priest offered up that blood for himself and his own errors first, and then for the errors of the people, v. 7. Christ is a more excellent person and high priest than any under the law, for he has no errors of his own to offer for. Ministers, when in the name of Christ they intercede for others, must first apply the blood of Christ to themselves for their pardon. When the legal high priest had offered for himself, he must not stop there, but must also offer for the errors of the people. Our high priest forgets not to offer for his people; he pleads the merit of his sufferings for the benefit of his people on earth.

Verses 8–14

The apostle undertakes to deliver to us the mind and meaning of the Holy Ghost in all the ordinances of the tabernacle.

I. The way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, v. 8. There was not that free access to God then that there is now; God has now opened a wider door.

3. And—Greek, "But." after—behind: within. second veil—There were two veils or curtains, one before the Holy of Holies (catapetasma), here alluded to, the other before the tabernacle door (calumma). called—as opposed to "the true." 4. golden censer—The Greek, must not be translated "altar of incense," for it was not in "the holiest" place "after the second veil," but in "the holy place"; but as in II Chronicles 26:19, and Ezekiel 8:11, "censer": so Vulgate and Syriac. This GOLDEN censer was only used on the day of atonement (other kinds of censers on other days), and is therefore associated with the holiest place, as being taken into it on that anniversary by the high priest. The expression "which had," does not mean that the golden censer was deposited there, for in that case the high priest would have had to go in and bring it out before burning incense in it: but that the golden censer was one of the articles belonging to, and used for, the yearly service in the holiest place. ark—of shittim wood, i.e., acacia. Not in the second temple, but in its stead was a stone basement (called "the stone of foundation"), three fingers high. pot—"golden," added in the LXX, and sanctioned by Paul. manna—an omer, each man's daily portion. In I Kings 8:9; II Chronicles 5:10, it is said there was nothing in the ark of Solomon's temple save the two stone tables of the law put in by Moses. But the expression that there was nothing THEN therein save the two tables, leaves the inference to be drawn that formerly there were the other things mentioned by the Rabbis and by Paul here, the pot of manna (the memorial of God's providential care of Israel) and the rod of Aaron, the memorial of the lawful priesthood (Num. 17:3, 5, 7, 10). tables of the covenant—(Deut. 9:9; 10:2). 5. over it—over "the ark of the covenant." cherubim—representing the ruling powers by which God acts in the moral and natural world.

Hence sometimes they answer to the ministering angels; but mostly to the elect redeemed, by whom God shall hereafter rule the world and set forth His manifold wisdom: redeemed humanity, combining in, and with itself, the highest forms of subordinate creaturely life; not angels. They stand on the mercy seat, and on that ground become the habitation of God, from which His glory is to shine upon the world. glory—The cherubim were bearers of the divine glory, whence, perhaps, they derive their name. The Shekinah, or cloud of glory, in which Jehovah appeared between the cherubim over the mercy seat, the lid of the ark, is doubtless the reference.

mercy seat—Greek, "the propitiatory": the golden cover of the ark, on which was sprinkled the blood of the propitiatory sacrifice on the day of atonement; the footstool of Jehovah, the meeting-place of Him and His people. we cannot—conveniently: besides what met the eye in the sanctuary, there were spiritual realities symbolized which it would take too long to discuss in detail, our chief subject at present being the priesthood and the sacrifices. "Which" refers not merely to the cherubim, but to all the contents of the sanctuary enumerated in vss. 2-5. 6. The use made of the sanctuary so furnished by the high priest on the anniversary of atonement. ordained—arranged. always—twice at the least every day, for the morning and evening care of the lamps, and offering of incense (Exod. 30:7, 8). went—Greek, "enter": present tense. 7. once every year—the tenth day of the seventh month. He entered within the veil on that day twice at least. Thus "once" means here on the one occasion only. The two, or possibly more, entrances on that one day were regarded as parts of the one whole. not without blood—(ch. 8:3). offered—Greek, "offers." errors—Greek, "ignorances": "inadvertent errors." They might have known, as the law was clearly promulged, and they were bound to study it; so that their ignorance was culpable (cf. Acts 3: 17; Eph. 4:18; I Pet. 1:14). Though one's ignorance may mitigate one's punishment (Luke 12:48), it does not wholly exempt from punishment. 8. The Holy Ghost—Moses himself did not comprehend the typical meaning (I Pet. 1:11, 12). signifying—by the typical exclusion of all from the holiest, save the high priest once a year. the holiest of all—heaven, the antitype. the first tabernacle—the anterior tabernacle, representative of the whole Levitical system. While it (the first tabernacle, and that which represents the Levitical system) as yet "has a standing" (so the Greek, i.e., "has continuance": "lasts"). the way to heaven (the antitypical "holiest place") is not yet made manifest (cf. ch. 10:19, 20). The Old Testament econ-of the nouns in this verse, in the nominative case, which are all of the feminine gender; and the adjective "holy" may be considered here as the nominative singular feminine. The word tabernacle may be the proper antecedent.

3. And after the second veil. The first veil, of which the apostle has not yet spoken, was at the entrance of the holy place, and separated the temple from the court, and prevented the people, and even the Levites, from seeing what was in the holy place. The second veil, of which the apostle speaks here, separated the holy place from the holy of holies. The tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all. That is, that part of the Tabernacle which is called the holy of holies.

4. Which had the golden censer. The apostle says that the golden censer was in the holy of holies, but this is nowhere mentioned by Moses. But he tells us that the high priest went in, once every year, with the golden censer to burn incense; and Calmet thinks this censer was left there all the year, and that its place was supplied by a new one, brought in by the priest the year following. Others think it was left just within the veil, so that the priest by putting his hand under the curtain could take it out and prepare it for his next entrance into the holiest. The ark of the covenant. This was a sort of chest overlaid with plates of gold, in which the two tables of the law, Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, etc., were deposited. Its top, or lid, was the propitiatory or mercy seat.

5. And over it the cherubims of glory. Cherubim is the plural of cherub, and it is absurd to add our plural termination (s) to the plural termination of the Hebrew. The glory here signifies the Shechinah or symbol of the Divine Presence. Shadowing the mercyseat. One at each end of the ark, with their faces turned toward each other, but looking down on the cover or proptiatory, here called the mercyseat. Of which we cannot now speak particularly. What these point out or signify is thus explained by Cyril: "Although Christ be but one, yet he is understood by us under a variety of forms. He is the Tabernacle, on account of the human body in which he dwelt. He is the Table, because he is our Bread of life. He is the Ark which has the law of God enclosed within, because he is the Word of the Father. He is the Candlestick, because he is our spiritual light. He is the Altar of Incense, because he is the sweet-smelling odour of sanctification. He is the Altar of Burnt Offering, because he is the victim, by death on the Cross, for the sins of the whole world."

6. When these things were thus ordained. When the Tabernacle was made, and its furniture placed in it, according to the divine direction. The priests went always into the first tabernacle. That is, into the first part of the Tabernacle, or holy place, into which he went every day twice, accomplishing the service, which included his burning the incense at the morning and evening sacrifice, dressing the lamps, and sprinkling the blood of the sin offerings before the veil, Lev. iv. 6.

7. But into the second. That is, the holy of holies, or second part of the Tabernacle, The high priest alone once every year; that is, on one day in the year only, which was the day on which the general atonement was made. The high priest could enter into this place only on one day in the year, but on that day he might enter several times. See Leviticus xvi. Not without blood. The day prescribed by the law for this great solemnity was the tenth of the month Tisri, in which the high priest brought in the incense or perfumes, which he placed on the golden censer. He brought also the blood of the bullock, and sprinkled some portion of it seven times before the ark and the veil which separated the holy place from the holy of holies. See Lev. xvi. 14. He then came out, and taking some of the blood of the goat which had been sacrificed, he sprinkled it between the veil and the ark of the covenant, v. 15. Which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. For transgressions of which they were not conscious.

8. The Holy Ghost this signifying. These services were divinely appointed, and by each of them the Holy Spirit of God is supposed to

II. The first tabernacle was only a figure for the time then present, v. 9.

III. None of the gifts and sacrifices there offered could make the offerers perfect as pertaining to conscience (v. 9); they could not deliver conscience from a dread of the wrath of God. He might thereby be saved from temporal punishments, but he could not be saved by them from sin.

IV. The Old Testament institutions were but imposed upon them until the time of reformation, v. 10. These were never designed for a perpetuity, but only till the better things provided for them were actually bestowed upon them. We have far greater advantages under the gospel than they had under the law; and either we must be better or we shall be worse.

V. As he writes to those who believed that Jesus was the Christ, so he very justly infers that he is infinitely above all legal high priests (v. 11, 12).

1. Christ is a high priest of good things to come. The Old Testament set forth in shadows what was to come; the New Testament is the accomplishment of the Old. All the good things yet to come, when the promises shall be accomplished; all these depend upon Christ and his priesthood, and shall be fulfilled; all the good things to come in the heavenly state, which will perfect both the Testaments; as the state of glory will perfect the state of grace.

omy is represented by the holy place, the New Testament economy by the Holy of Holies. Redemption, by Christ, has opened the Holy of Holies (access to heaven by faith now, ch. 4:16; 7:19, 25; 10:19, 22; by sight hereafter, Isa. 33:24; Rev. 11: 19; 21:2, 3) to all mankind. The Greek for "not yet" (me po) refers to the mind of the Spirit: the Spirit intimating that men should not think the way was yet opened [TITTMANN]. The Greek negative, ou po, would deny the fact objectively; me po denies the thing subjectively. 9. Which—"The which," viz., anterior tabernacle: "as being that which was" [ALFORD]. figure—Greek, "parable": a parabolic setting forth of the character of the Old Testament. for—"in reference to the existing time." The time of the temple worship really belonged to the Old Testament, but continued still in Paul's time and that of his Hebrew readers. "The time of reformation" (vs. 10) stands in contrast to this, "the existing time"; though, in reality, "the time of reformation," the New Testament time, was now present and existing. So "the age to come," is the phrase applied to the Gospel, because it was present only to believers, and its fulness even to them is still to come. Cf. vs. 11, "good things to come." in which—tabernacle, not time, according to the reading of the oldest MSS. Or translate, "according to which" parabolic representation, or figure. were—Greek, "are." gifts—unbloody oblations. could not—Greek, "cannot": are not able. him that did the service—any worshipper. The Greek is latreuein, serve God, which is all men's duty; not leitourgein, to serve in a ministerial office. make . . . perfect—perfectly remove the sense of guilt, and sanctify inwardly through love. as pertaining to the conscience—"in respect to the (moral-religious) consciousness." They can only reach as far as the outward flesh (cf. "carnal ordinances," vss. 10, 13, 14). 10. Which—sacrifices. stood—consisted in [ALFORD]; or, have attached to them only things which appertain to the use of foods, etc. The rites of meats, etc., go side by side with the sacrifices [THOLUCK and WAHL]; cf. Colossians 2:16. drinks—(Lev. 10:9; 11:4). Usage subsequently to the law added many observances as to meats and drinks. washings—(Exod. 29:4). and carnal ordinances—One oldest MS., Syriac and Coptic, omit "and." "Carnal ordinances" stand in apposition to "sacrifices" (vs. 9). Carnal (outward, affecting only the flesh) is opposed to spiritual. Contrast "flesh" with "conscience" (vss. 13, 14). imposed—as a burden (Acts 15:10, 28) continually pressing heavy. until the time of reformation—Greek, "the season of rectification," when the reality should supersede the type (ch. 8:8-12). Cf. "better," vs. 23. 11. But—in contrast to "could not make . . . perfect" (vs. 9). Christ—The Messiah, of whom all the prophets foretold; not "Jesus" here. From whom the "reformation" (vs. 10), or rectification, emanates, which frees from the yoke of carnal ordinances, and which is being realized gradually now, and shall be perfectly in the consummation of "the age (world) to come." "Christ . . . High Priest," exactly answers to Leviticus 4:5, "the priest that is anointed." being come an . . .—rather, "having come forward (cf. ch. 10:7, a different Greek word, picturesquely presenting Him before us) as High Priest." The Levitical priests must therefore retire. Just as on the day of atonement, no work was done, no sacrifice was offered, or priest was allowed to be in the tabernacle while the high priest went into the holiest place to make atonement (Lev. 16:17, 29). So not our righteousness, nor any other priest's sacrifice, but Christ alone atones; and as the high priest before offering incense had on common garments of a priest, but after it wore his holy garments of "glory and beauty" (Exod. 28) in entering the holiest, so Christ entered the heavenly holiest in His glorified body. good things to come—Greek, "the good things to come," ch. 10:1; "better promises," (ch. 8:6; the "eternal inheritance," vs. 15; I Peter 1:4; the "things hoped for," ch. 11:1. by a . . . tabernacle—joined with "He entered." Translate, "Through the . . . tabernacle" (of which we know) [ALFORD]. As the Jewish high priest passed through the anterior tabernacle into the holiest place, so Christ passed through heaven into the inner abode of the unseen and unapproachable God. Thus, "the tabernacle" here is the heavens through which He passed (Note, ch. 4:14). But "the tabernacle" is also the glorified body of Christ (Note, ch. 8:2), "not of this building" (not of the mere natural "creation, but of the spiritual and heavenly, the new creation"), the Head of the mystical body, the Church. Through this glorified body He passes into the speak. The way into the holiest. That full access to God was not the common privilege of the people while the Mosaic economy subsisted. That the apostle means that it is only by Christ that any man and every man can approach God is evident from chap. x. 19-22. I have already observed that the apostle appears to use the word tabernacle in the general sense of a dwelling place and therefore applies it to the Temple, which was reputed the house or dwelling place of God, as well as the ancient Tabernacle. Therefore what he speaks here concerning the first tabernacle may be understood as applying with propriety to the then Jewish Temple, as well as to the ancient Tabernacle, which, even with all their sacrifices and ceremonies, could not make the way of holiness plain nor the way to God's favor possible.

9. Which, Tabernacle and its services, was a figure, a dark enigmatical representation, for the time then present—for that age and dispensation, and for all those who lived under it. In which, "during which," time or dispensation were offered both gifts and sacrifices, eucharistic offerings and victims for sin, that could not make him that did the service, whether the priest who made the offering or the person who brought it in the behalf of his soul, perfect, as pertaining to the conscience—could not take away guilt from the mind nor purify the conscience from dead works. The whole was a figure, or dark representation, of a spiritual and more glorious system; and although a sinner who made these offerings and sacrifices according to the law might be considered as having done his duty, and thus he would be exempted from many ecclesiastical and legal disabilities and punishments, yet his conscience would ever tell him that the guilt of sin was still remaining. The words in which, referred in the above paraphrase to the time, are read by several versions as referrring to the Tabernacle, and this is the reading which our translators appear to have followed.

10. In meats and drinks, and divers washings. He had already mentioned eucharistic and sacrificial offerings, and nothing properly remained but the different kinds of clean and unclean animals which were used, or forbidden to be used, as articles of food; together with the different kinds of drinks, washings, "baptisms," immersions, sprinklings, and washings of the body and the clothes, and carnal ordinances, or things which had respect merely to the body and could have no moral influence upon the soul, unless considered in reference to that of which they were the similitudes or figures. Carnal ordinances. Rites and ceremonies pertaining merely to the body. Imposed on them until the time of reformation. These rites and ceremonies were enacted, by divine authority, as proper representations of the gospel system, which should reform and rectify all things. The time of reformation, "the time of rectifying," signifies the gospel dispensation, under which everything is set straight; everything referred to its proper purpose and end; the ceremonial law fulfilled and abrogated; the moral law exhibited and more strictly enjoined (see our Lord's sermon upon the mount); and the spiritual nature of God's worship taught, and grace promised to purify the heart. So that, through the power of the eternal Spirit, all that was wrong in the soul is "rectified"; the affections, passions, and appetites purified; the understanding enlightened; the judgment corrected; the will refined; in a word, all things made new.

11. But Christ being come an high priest of good things. I think this and the succeeding verses not happily translated; indeed, the division of them has led to a wrong translation. Therefore they must be taken together thus: "But the Christ, the High Priest of those good things (or services) which were to come, through a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is, not of the same workmanship, entered once for all into the sanctuary; having obtained eternal redemption for us, not by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood. For if the blood of goats, and bulls, and calves, and a heifer's ashes, sprinkled on the unclean, sanctifieth to the cleansing of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself

3. Christ, our high priest, has entered into heaven, not as their high priest entered into the holiest, with the blood of bulls and of goats, but by his own blood.

4. Our high priest entered into heaven once for all, and has obtained eternal redemption.

5. The Holy Ghost showed what was the efficacy of the blood of the Old Testament sacrifices. The efficacy of the blood of the legal sacrifices extended to the purifying of the flesh (v. 13): from ceremonial uncleanness.

The far greater efficacy of the blood of Christ (v. 14). What it was that gave such efficacy to the blood of Christ. It was his offering himself to God. It was Christ's offering up himself to God through the eternal Spirit.

It was Christ's offering himself to God without spot, without any sinful stain. What the efficacy of Christ's blood is. It is sufficient to purge the conscience from dead works, it reaches to the very soul and conscience. It is sufficient to enable us to serve the living God by sanctifying and renewing the soul through the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit.

heavenly holiest place (vs. 24), the immaterial, unapproachable presence of God, where He intercedes for us. His glorified body, as the meeting-place of God and all Christ's redeemed, and the angels, answers to the heavens through which He passed, and passes. His body is opposed to the tabernacle, as His blood to the blood of goats, etc. greater—as contrasted with the small dimensions of the earthly anterior tabernacle. more perfect—effective in giving pardon, peace, sanctification, and access to closest communion with God (cf. vs. 9, ch. 10:1). not made with hands—but by the Lord Himself (ch. 8:2). 12. Neither—"Nor yet." by—"through"; as the means of His approach. goats . . . calves—not a bullock, such as the Levitical high priest offered for himself, and a goat for the people, on the day of atonement (Lev. 16:6, 15), year by year, whence the plural is used, goats . . . calves. by—"through," as the means of His entrance; the key unlocking the heavenly Holy of Holies to Him. The Greek is forcible, "through THE blood of His own" (cf. vs. 23). once—"once for all." having obtained—having thereby obtained; lit., "found for Himself," as a thing of insuperable difficulty to all save Divine Omnipotence, self-devoting zeal, and love, to find. The access of Christ to the Father was arduous (ch. 5:7). None before had trodden the path. eternal—The entrance of our Redeemer, once for all, into the heavenly holiest place, secures eternal redemption to us; whereas the Jewish high priest's entrance was repeated year by year, and the effect temporary and partial, "On redemption," cf. Matt. 20:28; Eph. 1:7; Col. 1:14; I Tim. 2:5, Titus 2:14; I Pet. 1:19. 13. if—as we know is the case; so the Greek indicative means. Argument from the less to the greater. If the blood of mere brutes could purify in any, however small a degree, how much more shall inward purification, and complete and eternal salvation, be wrought by the blood of Christ, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead? ashes of an heifer—(Num. 19:16-18). The type is full of comfort for us. The water of separation, made of the ashes of the red heifer, was the provision for removing ceremonial defilement whenever incurred by contact with the dead. the unclean—Greek, "those defiled" on any particular occasion. purifying—Greek, "purity." the flesh—Their effect in themselves extended no further. Ceremonial sacrifices released from temporal penalties and ceremonial disqualifications; Christ's sacrifice releases from everlasting penalties (vs. 12), and moral impurities on the conscience disqualifying from access to God (vs. 14). The purification of the flesh (the mere outward man) was by "sprinkling"; the washing followed by inseparable connection (Num. 19:19). So justification is followed by renewing. 14. offered himself—The voluntary nature of the offering gives it especial efficacy. He "through the eternal Spirit," i.e., His divine Spirit (Rom. 1:4, in contrast to His "flesh," vs. 3; His Godhead, I Tim. 3:16; I Pet. 3:18), "His inner personality" [ALFORD], which gave a free consent to the act, offered Himself. The animals offered had no spirit or will to consent in the act of sacrifice; they were offered according to the law; they had a life neither enduring, nor of any intrinsic efficacy. But He from eternity, with His divine and everlasting Spirit, concurred with the Father's will of redemption by Him. His offering began on the altar of the cross, and was completed in His entering the holiest place with His blood. The eternity and infinitude of His divine Spirit (cf. ch. 7:16) gives eternal ("eternal redemption," vs. 12, also cf. vs. 15) and infinite merit to His offering, so that not even the infinite justice of God has any exception to take against it. It was "through His most burning love, flowing from His eternal Spirit," that He offered Himself [ŒCOLAMPADIUS]. without spot—The animal victims had to be without outward blemish; Christ on the cross was a victim inwardly and essentially stainless (I Pet. 1:19). purge—purify from fear, guilt, alienation from Him, and selfishness, the source of dead works (vss. 22, 23). your—The oldest MSS. read "our." Vulgate, however, supports English Version reading. conscience—moral religious consciousness. dead works—All works done in the natural state, which is a state of sin, are dead; for they come not from living faith in, and love to, "the living God" (ch. 11:6). As contact with a dead body defiled ceremonially (cf. the allusion, "ashes of an heifer," vs. 13), so dead works defile the inner consciousness spiritually. to serve—so as to serve. The ceremonially unclean could not serve God in the outward communion of His people; so the unrenewed cannot serve God in spiritual communion. living God—therefore requiring without spot to God, cleanse your consciences from dead works, in order to worship (or that you may worship) the living God?"

In the above translation I have added, in v. 13, "of goats," on the authority of several MSS. High priest of good things. Or "services," to come. He is the High Priest of Christianity. A greater and more perfect tabernacle. This appears to mean our Lord's human nature. That, in which dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, was fitly typified by the Tabernacle and Temple, in both of which the majesty of God dwelt. Not made with hands. Though our Lord's body was a perfect human body, yet it did not come in the way of natural generation; His miraculous conception will sufficiently justify the expressions used here by the apostle.

12. But by his own blood. Here the redemption of man is attributed to the blood of Christ; and this Blood is stated to be shed in a sacrificial way, precisely as the blood of bulls, goats, and calves was shed under the law. Once. "Once for all," in opposition to the annual entering of the high priest into the holiest with the blood of the annual victim. The holy place, or "sanctuary," signifies heaven, into which Jesus entered with His own blood, as the high priest entered into the holy of holies with the blood of the victims which he had sacrificed. Eternal redemption. A redemption price which should stand good forever, when once offered; and an endless redemption from sin, in reference to the pardon of which, and reconciliation to God, there needs no other sacrifice. It is eternal in its merit and efficacy.

13. Sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh. Answers the end proposed by the law; namely, to remove legal disabilities and punishments, having the body and its interests particularly in view, though adumbrating or typifying the soul and its concerns.

14. Who through the eternal Spirit. This expression is understood two ways: (1) Of the Holy Ghost himself. As Christ's miraculous conception was by the Holy Spirit, and He wrought all His miracles by the Spirit of God, so His death or final offering was made through or by the eternal Spirit; and by that Spirit He was raised from the dead, I Pet. iii. 18. (2) Of the eternal Logos or Deity which dwelt in the Man Christ Jesus, through the energy of which the offering of His humanity became an infinitely meritorious victim; therefore the deity of Christ is here intended. But we cannot well consider one of these distinct from the other. It is probable that the Holy Ghost, not the Logos, is what the apostle had more immediately in view. But still we must say that the Holy Spirit, with the eternal Logos and the almighty Father, equally concurred in offering up the sacrifice of the human nature of Christ in order to make atonement for the sin of the world. Purge your conscience. "Purify your conscience." The term "purify" should be everywhere, both in the translation of the Scriptures and in preaching the gospel, preferred to the word purge, which at present is scarcely ever used in the sense in which our translators have employed it. Dead works. Sin in general, or acts to which the penalty of death is annexed by the law.

I. The gospel is here considered as a testament. A covenant is an agreement between two or more parties about things that are in their own power; this agreement takes effect at such time and in such manner as therein declared. A testament is a voluntary act and deed of a single person, bestowing legacies on such legatees as are described by the testator, and which can only take effect upon his death. Christ is the Mediator of a New Testament (v. 15), to redeem persons from their transgressions committed against the law or first testament; to qualify all those that are effectually called to receive the promise of an eternal inheritance.

II. To make this New Testament effectual, it was necessary that Christ should die. This he proves by two arguments: 1. From the general nature of every will or testamentary disposition, v. 16. No estate, no right, is conveyed by will, till the testator's death has made it effectual.

2. From the particular method that was taken by Moses in the ratification of the first testament, which was not done without blood, v. 18, 19, &c. God accepted the blood of bulls and goats; and by these means the covenant of grace was ratified under the former dispensation.

Moses spoke every precept to all the people, according to the law, v. 19.

living spiritual service (John 4:24). 15. for this cause—Because of the all-cleansing power of His blood, this fits Him to be Mediator (ch. 8:6, ensuring to both parties, God and us, the ratification) of the new covenant, which secures both forgiveness for the sins not covered by the former imperfect covenant or testament, and also an eternal inheritance to the called. by means of death—rather, as Greek, "death having taken place." redemption of . . . transgressions . . . under . . . first testament—the transgressions of all men from Adam to Christ, first against the primitive revelation, then against the revelations to the patriarchs, then against the law given to Israel, the representative people of the world. The "first testament" thus includes the whole period from Adam to Christ, and not merely that of the covenant with Israel, which was a concentrated representation of the covenant made with (or the first testament given to) mankind by sacrifice, down from the fall to redemption. Before the inheritance by the New Testament (for here the idea of the "INHERITANCE," following as the result of Christ's "death," being introduced, requires the Greek to be translated "testament," as it was before covenant) could come in, there must be redemption of (i.e., deliverance from the penalties incurred by) the transgressions committed under the first testament, for the propitiatory sacrifices under the first testament reached only as far as removing outward ceremonial defilement. But in order to obtain the inheritance which is a reality, there must be a real propitiation, since God could not enter into covenant relation with us so long as past sins were unexpiated; Romans 3:24, 25, "a propitiation . . . His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past." might—Greek, "may receive," which previously they could not (ch. 11:39, 40). the promise—to Abraham. 16. A general axiomatic truth; it is "a testament"; not the testament. The testator must die before his testament takes effect (vs. 17). This is a common meaning of the Greek noun diathece. So in Luke 22:29, "I appoint (by testamentary disposition; the cognate Greek verb diatithemai) unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." The need of death before the testamentary appointment takes effect, holds good in Christ's relation as MAN to us; of course not in God's relation to Christ. be—lit., be borne": "be involved in the case"; be inferred; or else, "be brought forward in court," so as to give effect to the will. Plainly, the death is supposed to be past (aorist, "made"); and the fact of the death is brought (Greek) before court to give effect to the will. These requisites of a will, or testament, concur here: (1) a testator; (2) heirs; (3) goods; (4) the death of the testator; (5) the fact of the death brought forward in court. In Matthew 26:28 two other requisites appear: witnesses, the disciples; and a seal, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the sign of His blood wherewith the testament is primarily sealed. It is true the heir is ordinarily the successor of him who dies and so ceases to have the possession. But in this case Christ comes to life again, and is Himself (including all that He hath), in the power of His now endless life, His people's inheritance; in His being Heir (ch. 1:2), they are heirs. 17. after—lit., "over," as we say "upon the death of the testators"; not as THOLUCK, "on the condition that slain sacrifices be there," which the Greek hardly sanctions. otherwise—"seeing that it is never availing" [ALFORD]. BENGEL and LACHMANN read with an interrogation, "Since, is it ever in force (surely not) while the testator liveth?" 18. Whereupon—rather, "Whence." dedicated—"inaugurated." The Old Testament strictly and formally began on that day of inauguration. "Where the disposition, or arrangement, is ratified by the blood of another, viz., of animals, which cannot make a covenant, much less make a testament, it is not strictly a testament, where it is ratified by the death of him that makes the arrangement, it is strictly, Greek diathece, Hebrewberith, taken in a wider sense, a testament" [BENGEL]; thus, in vs. 18, referring to the old dispensation, we may translate, "the first (covenant)": or better, retain "the first (testament)," not that the old dispensation, regarded by itself, is a testament, but it is so when regarded as the typical representative of the new, which is strictly a Testament. 19. For—confirming the general truth, vs. 16. spoken . . . according to the law—strictly adhering to every direction of "the law of commandments contained in ordinances" (Eph. 2:15). Cf. Exodus 24:3, "Moses told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments; and all the people answered with one voice . . . ." the blood of calves—Greek, "the calves," viz., those sacrificed

ADAM CLARKE

15. And for this cause. Some translate "on account of this" (Blood). Perhaps it means no more than a mere inference, such as "therefore" or "wherefore." He is the mediator of the new testament. There was no proper reason why our translators should render diatheke by testament here, when in almost every other case they render it "covenant," which is its proper ecclesiastical meaning, as answering to the Hebrew berith. Very few persons are satisfied with the translation of the following verses to the twentieth, particularly the sixteenth and seventeenth; at all events the word "covenant" must be retained. He, Jesus Christ, is the mediator; the mediator was the person who witnessed the contract made between the two contracting parties, slew the victim, and sprinkled each with its blood. Of the new testament. The "new contract" betwixt God and the whole human race, by Christ Jesus, the Mediator, distinguished here from the old covenant between God and the Israelites, in which Moses was the mediator. That by means of death. His own death upon the Cross. For the redemption of the transgressions. To make atonement for the transgressions which were committed under the old covenant, which the blood of bulls and calves could not do; so the death of Jesus had respect to all the time antecedent to it, as well as to all the time afterward till the conclusion of the world. They which are called, the Gentiles, might receive the promise—might, by being brought into a covenant with God, have an equal right with the Jews, not merely to an inheritance such as the Promised Land, but to an eternal inheritance, and consequently infinitely superior to that of the Jews.

16. For where a testament is. A learned and judicious friend furnishes me with the following translation of this and the seventeenth verse: "For where there is a covenant, it is necessary that the death of the appointed victim should be exhibited, because a covenant is confirmed over dead victims, since it is not at all valid while the appointed victim is alive." Mr. Wakefield has translated the passage in nearly the same way: "For where a covenant is, there must be necessarily introduced the death of that which establisheth the covenant; because a covenant is confirmed over dead things, and is of no force at all whilst that which establisheth the covenant is alive." This is undoubtedly the meaning of this passage; and we should endeavor to forget that testament and testator were ever introduced, as they totally change the apostle's meaning.

18. Whereupon. "Wherefore," as a victim was required for the ratification of every covenant, the first covenant made between God and the Hebrews, by the mediation of Moses, was not dedicated, "renewed" or solemnized, without blood—without the death of a victim and the aspersion of its blood.

19. When Moses had spoken every precept. The place to which the apostle alludes is Exod. xxiv. 4-8.

MATTHEW HENRY

Then he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and applied this blood by sprinkling it. With these Moses sprinkled, (1) The book of the law and covenant. (2) The people. The blood of Christ will be no advantage to us if it be not applied to us.

Moses at the same time used these words, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

(3) The tabernacle and all the utensils of it. All the sacrifices offered up and services performed there were accepted only through the blood of Christ.

Verses 23–29

I. The necessity of purifying the patterns of the things in heaven, v. 23. The sanctuary of God on earth is a pattern of heaven, and communion with God in his sanctuary is to his people a heaven upon earth.

by the "young men" whom he sent to do so (Exod. 24:5). with water—prescribed, though not in Exodus 24, yet in other purifications; e.g., of the leper, and the water of separation which contained the ashes of the red heifer. scarlet wool, and hyssop—ordinarily used for purification. Scarlet or crimson, resembling blood: it was thought to be a peculiarly deep, fast dye, whence it typified sin (Note, Isa. 1:18). So Jesus wore a scarlet robe, the emblem of the deep-dyed sins He bore on Him, though He had none in Him. Wool was used as imbibing and retaining water; the hyssop, as a bushy, tufty plant (wrapt round with the scarlet wool), was used for sprinkling it. The wool was also a symbol of purity (Isa. 1:18). The Hyssopus officinalis grows on walls, with small lancet-formed woolly leaves, an inch long, with blue and white flowers, and a knotty stalk about a foot high. sprinkled . . . the book—viz., out of which he had read "every precept": the book of the testament or covenant. This sprinkling of the book is not mentioned in Exodus 24. Hence BENGEL translates, "And (having taken) the book itself (so Exod. 24:7), he both sprinkled all the people, and (vs. 21) moreover sprinkled the tabernacle." But the Greek supports English Version. Paul, by inspiration, supplies the particular specified here, not in Exodus 24:7. The sprinkling of the roll (so the Greek for "book") of the covenant, or testament, as well as of the people, implies that neither can the law be fulfilled, nor the people be purged from their sins, save by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ (I Pet. 1:2).20. Exodus 24:8, "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord has made with you concerning all these words." The change is here made to accord with Christ's inauguration of the new testament, or covenant, as recorded in Luke 22:20, "This cup (is) the new Testament in My blood, which is shed for you": the only Gospel in which the "is" has to be supplied. Luke was Paul's companion, which accounts for the correspondence, as here too "is" has to be supplied. testament—(Note, vss. 16, 17). The Greek diathece means both "testament" and "covenant": the term "covenant" better suits the old dispensation, though the idea testament is included, for the old was one in its typical relation to the new dispensation, to which the term "testament" is better suited. Christ has sealed the testament with His blood, of which the Lord's Supper is the sacramental sign. enjoined unto you—commissioned me to ratify in relation to you. In the old dispensation the condition to be fulfilled on the people's part is implied in the words, Exodus 24:8, "(Lord made with you) concerning all these words." 21. Greek, "And, moreover, in like manner." The sprinkling of the tabernacle with blood is added by inspiration here to the account in Exodus 30:25-30; 40:9, 10, which mentions only Moses' anointing the tabernacle and its vessels. In Leviticus 8:10, 15, 30, the sprinkling of blood upon Aaron and his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the altar, is mentioned as well as the anointing, so that we might naturally infer, as JOSEPHUS has distinctly stated, that the tabernacle and its vessels were sprinkled with blood as well as being anointed: Leviticus 16. 16, 20, 33, virtually sanctions this inference. The tabernacle and its contents needed purification (II Chron. 29:21). 22. almost—to be joined with "all things," viz., almost all things under the old dispensation. The exceptions to all things being purified by blood are, Exodus 19:10; Leviticus 15:5, etc., 16:26, 28; 22:6; Numbers 31:22-24. without—Greek, "apart from." shedding of blood—shed in the slaughter of the victim, and poured out at the altar subsequently. The pouring out of the blood on the altar is the main part of the sacrifice (Lev. 17:11), and it could not have place apart from the previous shedding of the blood in the slaying. Paul has, perhaps, in mind here, Luke 22:20, "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." is—Greek, "takes place": comes to pass. remission—of sins: a favorite expression of Luke, Paul's companion. Properly used of remitting a debt (Matt. 6:12; 18:27, 32); our sins are debts. On the truth here, cf. Leviticus 5:11-13, an exception because of poverty, confirming the general rule. 23. patterns—"the suggestive representations"; the typical copies (Note, ch. 8:5). things in the heavens—the heavenly tabernacle and the things therein. purified with these—with the blood of bulls and goats. heavenly things themselves—the archetypes. Man's sin had introduced an element of disorder into the relations of God and His holy angels in respect to man. The purification removes this element of disorder and changes God's

And sprinkled both the book. The sprinkling of the book is not mentioned in the place to which the apostle refers, nor did it in fact take place. The words "and the book itself" should be referred to "having taken," and not to "he sprinkled." The verse should therefore be read thus: "For after every commandment of the law had been recited by Moses to all the people, he took the blood of the calves, and of the goats, with water and scarlet wool, and the book itself, and sprinkled all the people." The rite was performed thus: Having received the blood of the calves and goats into basins, and mingled it with water to prevent it from coagulating, he then took a bunch of hyssop, and having bound it together with thread made of scarlet wool, he dipped this in the basin, and sprinkled the blood and water upon the people who were nearest to him, and who might be considered on this occasion the representatives of all the rest.

20. This is the blood of the testament (covenant). Our Lord refers to the conduct of Moses here, and partly quotes his words in the institution of the Eucharist: "This is my blood of the new testament [covenant], which is shed for many for the remission of sins," Matt. xxvi. 28. And by thus using the words and applying them, He shows that His sacrificial blood was intended by the blood shed and sprinkled on this occasion, and that by it alone the remission of sins is obtained.

21. He sprinkled with blood . . . all the vessels of the ministry. To intimate that everything used by sinful man is polluted, and that nothing can be acceptable in the sight of a holy God that has not in effect the sprinkling of the atoning Blood.

22. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood. The apostle says almost, because in some cases certain vessels were purified by water, some by fire, Num. xxxi. 23, and some with the ashes of the red heifer, Num. xix. 2-10, but it was always understood that everything was at first consecrated by the blood of the victim. And without shedding of blood is no remission. The apostle shows fully here what is one of his great objects in the whole of this Epistle, viz., that there is no salvation but through the sacrificial death of Christ, and to prefigure this the law itself would not grant any remission of sin without the blood of a victim. This is a maxim even among the Jews themselves, "There is no expiation but by blood." Every sinner has forfeited his life by his transgressions, and the law of God requires his death; the blood of the victim, which is its life, is shed as a substitute for the life of the sinner. By these victims the sacrifice of Christ was typified. He gave His life for the life of the world; human life for human life, but a life infinitely dignified by its union with God.

23. The patterns of things in the heavens. That is, the Tabernacle and all its utensils, services, etc., must be purified by these, viz.,

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The things themselves are better than the patterns, and must therefore be consecrated with better sacrifices. These heavenly things are the privileges of the gospel state, begun in grace, perfected in glory. Now it is very evident that the sacrifice of Christ is infinitely better than those of the law, 1. From the places in which the sacrifices were offered. Those under the law were the holy places made with hands, v. 24. Christ's sacrifice was by himself carried up into heaven, for he appears in the presence of God for us.

2. From the sacrifices themselves, v. 26. Those under the law were the lives and blood of other creatures. The sacrifice of Christ was the oblation of himself; he offered his own blood, and it was of infinite value. 3. From the frequent repetition of the legal sacrifices. This showed the imperfection of that law; but it is the perfection of Christ's sacrifice, that being once offered, it was sufficient to all the ends of it. But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

4. From the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and the efficacy of Christ's sacrifice. The legal sacrifices could not of themselves put away sin. Jesus Christ by one sacrifice has made an end of sin.

III. The apostle illustrates the argument from the appointment of God concerning men (v. 27, 28).

wrath against man in heaven (designed to be the place of God's revealing His grace to men and angels) into a smile of reconciliation. Cf. "peace in heaven" (Luke 19:38). "The uncreated heaven of God, though in itself untroubled light, yet needed a purification in so far as the light of love was obscured by the fire of wrath against sinful man" [DELITZSCH in ALFORD]. sacrifices—The plural is used in expressing the general proposition, though strictly referring to the one sacrifice of Christ once for all. Paul implies that His one sacrifice, by its matchless excellency, is equivalent to the Levitical many sacrifices. It, though but one, is manifold in its effects and applicability to many. 24. Resumption more fully of the thought, "He entered in once into the holy place," vs. 12. He has in vss. 13, 14, expanded the words "by his own blood," vs. 12; and in vss. 15-23, he has enlarged on "an High Priest of good things to come." not . . . into . . . holy places made with hands—as was the Holy of Holies in the earthly tabernacle (Note, vs. 11). figures—copies "of the true" holiest place, heaven, the original archetype (ch. 8:5). into heaven itself—the immediate presence of the invisible God beyond all the created heavens, through which latter Jesus passed (Note, ch. 4:14; I Tim. 6: 16). now—ever since His ascension in the present economy (cf. vs. 26). to appear—TO PRESENT HIMSELF; Greek, "to be made to appear." Mere man may have a vision through a medium, or veil, as Moses had (Exod. 33:18, 20-23). Christ alone beholds the Father without a veil, and is His perfect image. Through seeing HIM only can we see the Father. in the presence of God—Greek, "to the face of God." The saints shall hereafter see God's face in Christ (Rev. 22:4): the earnest of which is now given (II Cor. 3:18). Aaron, the Levitical high priest for the people, stood before the ark and only saw the cloud, the symbol of God's glory (Exod. 28:30). for us—in our behalf as our Advocate and Intercessor (ch. 7:25; Rom. 8:34; I John 2:1). 25. As in vs. 24, Paul said, it was not into the typical, but the true sanctuary, that Christ is entered; so now he says, that His sacrifice needs not, as the Levitical sacrifices did, to be repeated. Construe, "Nor yet did He enter for this purpose that He may offer Himself often," i.e., present Himself in the presence of God, as the high priest does (Paul uses the present tense, as the legal service was then existing), year by year, on the day of atonement, entering the Holy of Holies. with—lit., "in." blood of others—not his own, as Christ did. 26. then—in that case. must . . . have suffered—rather as Greek, "It would have been necessary for Him often to suffer." since the foundation of the world—The continued sins of men, from their first creation, would entail a continual suffering on earth, and consequent oblation of His blood in the heavenly holiest place, since the foundation of the world, if the one oblation "in the fulness of time" were not sufficient. now—as the case is. once—for all; without need of renewal. end of the world—Greek, "at the consummation of the ages"; the winding up of all the previous ages from the foundation of the world; to be followed by a new age (ch. 1:1, 2). The last age, beyond which no further age is to be expected before Christ's speedy second coming, which is the complement of the first coming; lit., "the ends of the ages"; Matthew 28:20 is lit., "the consummation of the age," or world (singular; not as here, plural, ages). Cf. "the fulness of times," Ephesians 1:10. appeared—Greek, "been manifested" on earth (I Tim. 3:16; I Pet. 1:20). away—abolish; doing away sin's power as well by delivering men from its guilt and penalty, so that it should be powerless to condemn men, as also from its yoke, so that they shall at last sin no more. sin—singular number; all the sins of men of every age are regarded as one mass laid on Christ. He hath not only atoned for all actual sins, but destroyed sin itself. John 1:29, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin (not merely the sins: singular, not plural) of the world." by the sacrifice of himself—Greek, "by (through) His own sacrifice"; not by "blood of others" (vs. 25). ALFORD loses this contrast in translating, "by His sacrifice." 27. as—inasmuch as. it is appointed—Greek, "it is laid up (as our appointed lot)," Colossians 1:5. The word "appointed" (so Hebrew seth means) in the case of man, answers to "anointed" in the case of Jesus; therefore "the Christ," i.e., the anointed, is the title here given designedly. He is the representative man; and there is a strict correspondence between the history of man and that of the Son of man. The two most solemn facts of the blood of calves and goats, and the sprinkling of the blood and water with the bunch of hysop bound about with scarlet wool. These are called patterns, "exemplars," earthly things, which were the representatives of heavenly things. Purification implies, not only cleansing from defilement, but also dedication or consecration. All the utensils employed in the Tabernacle service were thus purified though incapable of any moral pollution. But the heavenly things themselves. Some think this means heaven itself, which, by receiving the sacrificed body of Christ, which appears in the presence of God for us, may be said to be purified, i.e., "set apart," for the reception of the souls of those who have found redemption in His blood. Others think the body of Christ is intended, which is the tabernacle in which His divinity dwelt; and that this might be said to be purified by its own sacrifice, as He is said, John xvii. 19, to sanctify himself; that is, to "consecrate" himself unto God as a Sin Offering for the redemption of man. Others suppose the Church is intended, which He is to present to the Father without entrance to the holy of holies must be made by the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifice, and as that holy of holies represented heaven, the apostle's meaning seems to be that there was and could be no entrance to the holiest but through His blood. And therefore, when by "a more perfect tabernacle," vv. 11-12, He passed into the heavens, not with the blood of bulls and goats, but by His own blood, He thus purified or laid open the entrance to the holiest, by a more valuable sacrifice than those required to open the entrance of the holy of holies. It was . . . necessary, therefore, for God had appointed it so, that the Tabernacle and its parts, which were patterns of things in the heavens, should be "consecrated" and entered with such sacrifices as have already been mentioned. But the heaven of heavens into which Jesus entered, and whither He will bring all His faithful followers, must be propitiated, consecrated, and entered by the infinitely better sacrifice of His own body and blood. That this is the meaning appears from the following verse.

24. Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands. He is not gone into the holy of holies of the Tabernacle or Temple, as the Jewish high priest does once in the year with the blood of the victim, to sprinkle it before the mercy seat there; but into heaven itself, which He has thus opened to all believers, having made the propitiatory offering by which both He and those whom He represents are entitled to enter and enjoy eternal blessedness.

25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often. The sacrifice of Christ is not like that of the Jewish high priest. His must be offered every year; Christ has offered himself once for all.

26. For then must he often have suffered. In the counsel of God, Christ was considered the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," Rev. xiii. 8, so that all believers before His advent were equally interested in His sacrificial death with those who have lived since His coming. The end of the world. The conclusion of the Jewish dispensation, the Christian dispensation being that which shall continue till the end of time.

To put away sin. "To abolish the sin offerings"; i.e., to put an end to the Mosaic economy by His one offering of himself. Some think that the expression should be applied to the putting away the guilt, power, and being of sin from the souls of believers.

27. As it is appointed. It is "laid before" them by the divine decree: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Unto men generally, during the course of the present world.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. The appointment ot God concerning men cc ntains in it two things. They must once die. This is matter of comfort to the godly, that they shall die well and die but once; but it is matter of terror to the wicked, who die in their sin. After death they shall come to judgment. This is the unalterable decree of God concerning men—they must die, and they must be judged.

2. The appointment of God concerning Christ. He must be once offered to bear the sins of many. He was not offered for any sin of his own; he was wounded for our transgressions.

Christ shall appear the second time without sin, to the salvation of those who look for him. He appeared in the form of sinful flesh; but his second appearance will be without any such charge upon him. This will be to the salvation of all who look for him; he will then perfect their holiness, their happiness.

our being are here connected with the two most gracious truths of our dispensation, our death and judgment answering in parallelism to Christ's first coming to die for us, and His second coming to consummate our salvation. once—and no more. after this the judgment—viz., at Christ's appearing, to which, in vs. 28, "judgment" in this verse is parallel. Not, "after this comes the heavenly glory." The intermediate state is a state of joyous, or else agonizing and fearful, expectation of "judgment"; after the judgment comes the full and final state of joy, or else woe. 28. Christ—Greek, "THE Christ"; the representative MAN; representing all men, as the first Adam did. once offered—not "often," vs. 25; just as "men," of whom He is the representative Head, are appointed by God once to die. to bear the sins—referring to Isaiah 53:12, "He bare the sins of many," viz., on Himself; so "bear" means, Leviticus 24:15; Numbers 5:31; 14:34. The Greek is lit. "to bear up" (I Pet. 2:24). "Our sins were laid on Him. When, therefore, He was lifted up on the cross, He bare up our sins along with Him" [BENGEL]. many—not opposed to all, but to few. He, the One, was offered for many; and that once for all (cf. Matt. 20:28). look for him—with waiting expectation even unto the end (so the Greek). It is translated "wait for" in Romans 8:19, 23; I Cor. 1:7, which see. appear—rather, as Greek, "be seen." No longer in the alien "form of a servant," but in His own proper glory. without sin—apart from, separate from, sin. Not bearing the sin of many on Him as at His first coming (even then there was no sin in Him). That sin has been at His first coming once for all taken away, so as to need no repetition of His sin offering of Himself (vs. 26). At His second coming He shall have no more to do with sin. unto salvation—to bring in completed salvation; redeeming then the body which is as yet subject to the bondage of corruption. Hence, in Philippians 3:20 he says, "we look for THE SAVIOUR."

ADAM CLARKE

28. So Christ was once offered. He shall die no more; He has borne away the sins of many, and what He has done once shall stand good forever.

Yet He will appear a second time without sin, "without a sin offering"; that He has already made.

Unto salvation. To deliver the bodies of believers from the empire of death, to reunite them to their purified souls, and bring both into His eternal glory. This is salvation, and the very highest of which the human being is capable.

CHAPTER 10

Here the apostle sets himself to lay low the Levitical dispensation.

I. The law had but a shadow, of good things to come. These good things were to come, not clearly discovered. The Jews then had but the shadow of the good things of Christ; we under the gospel have the substance.

II. The law was not the very image of the good things to come, but was only a shadow. The law was a very rough draught of the great design of divine grace, and therefore not to be so much doted on.

III. The legal sacrifices, being offered year by year, could never make the comers thereunto perfect, vv. 1, 2. Under the gospel, the atonement is perfect, and the sinner, once pardoned, is ever pardoned as to his state, and only needs to renew his repentance and faith.

VSS. 1-39. CONCLUSION OF THE FOREGOING ARGUMENT. THE YEARLY RECURRING LAW SACRIFICES CANNOT PERFECT THE WORSHIPPER, BUT CHRIST'S ONCE-FOR-ALL OFFERING CAN. 1. Previously the oneness of Christ's offering was shown; now is shown its perfection as contrasted with the law sacrifices. having—inasmuch as it has but "the shadow, not the very image," i.e., not the exact likeness, reality, and full revelation, such as the Gospel has. The "image" here means the archetype (cf. ch. 9:24), the original, solid image [BENGEL] realizing to us those heavenly verities, of which the law furnished but a shadowy outline before. good things to come—(ch. 9:11)—belonging to "the world (age) to come." Good things in part made present by faith to the believer, and to be fully realized hereafter in actual and perfect enjoyment.

never—at any time (vs. 11). with those sacrifices—rather, "with the same sacrifices. year by year—This clause in the Greek refers to the whole sentence, not merely to the words "which they the priests offered" (Greek, "offer"). Thus the sense is, not as English Version, but, the law year by year, by the repetition of the same sacrifices, testifies its inability to perfect the worshippers, viz., on the YEARLY day of atonement. The "daily" sacrifices are referred to, vs. 11. continually—Greek, "continuously," implying that they offer a toilsome and ineffectual "continuous" round of the "same" atonement-sacrifices recurring "year by year." comers thereunto—those so coming unto God, viz., the worshippers (the whole people) coming to God in the person of their representative, the high priest. perfect—fully meet man's needs as to justification and sanctification (Note, ch. 9:9). 2. For—if the law could, by its sacrifices, have perfected the worshippers. they—the sacrifices. once purged—IF they were once for all cleansed (ch. 7: 27). conscience—"consciousness of sin" (ch. 9:9). 3. But—so far from those sacrifices ceasing to be offered (vs. 2). in . . .—in the fact of their being offered, and in the course of their being offered on the day of atonement. Contrast vs. 17. a remembrance—a recalling to mind by the high priest's confession, on the day of atonement, of the sins both of each past year and of all former years, proving that the expiatory sacrifices of former years were not felt by men's consciences to have fully atoned for former sins; in fact, the expiation and remission

1. The law having a shadow of good things to come. (1) A shadow signifies, literally the shade cast from a body of any kind. (2) It signifies, technically, a sketch, rude plan, or imperfect draught of a building, landscape, man, beast, etc. (3) It signifies, metaphorically, any faint adumbration, symbolical expression, imperfect or obscure image of a thing; and is opposed to "body," or the thing intended to be thereby defined. And not the very image. Image signifies: (1) a simple representation, (2) the form or particular fashion of a thing, (3) the model according to which anything is formed, (4) the perfect image of a thing as opposed to a faint representation. The law, with all its ceremonies and sacrifices, was only a shadow of spiritual and eternal good. The gospel is the image or thing itself, as including every spiritual and eternal good. Can never . . . make the comers thereunto perfect. Cannot remove guilt from the conscience or impurity from the heart.

2. Would they not have ceased to be offered? Had they made an effectual reconciliation for the sins of the world, and contained in their once offering a plenitude of permanent merit, they would have ceased to be offered.

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. As the legal sacrifices did not of themselves take away sin, so it was impossible they should, v. 4. The atoning sacrifice must be one capable of consenting, and must voluntarily substitute himself in the sinner's stead: Christ did so.

V. There was a time fixed and foretold by the great God, and that time had now come, when these legal sacrifices would be no longer accepted by him nor useful to men. This time of the repeal of the Levitical laws was foretold by David (Ps. xl. 6, 7).

ALBERT BARNES:

"But a body hast thou prepared me." This is one of the passages which has caused a difficulty in understanding this quotation from the Psalm. The difficulty is that it differs from the Hebrew and that the apostle builds an argument upon it, though it thus differs. It is not unusual, indeed, in the New Testament to make use of the language of the Septuagint even where it varies somewhat from the Hebrew; and where no argument is based on such a passage, there can be no difficulty in such a usage, since it is not uncommon to make use of the language of others to express our own thoughts. But the apostle does not appear to have made such a use of the passage here, but to have applied it in the way of argument.

The argument, indeed, does not rest wholly, perhaps not principally, on the fact that a "body had been prepared" for the Messiah; but still, that a body had been thus prepared was evidently in the view of the apostle an important consideration, and this is the passage on which the proof of this is based. The Hebrew (Ps. 40:6) is, "Mine ears hast thou opened," or, as it is in the margin, "digged." The idea there is that the ear had been, as it were, excavated, or dug out, so as to be made to hear distinctly; that is, certain truths had been clearly revealed to the speaker; or perhaps it may mean that he had been made "readily and attentively obedient" (Stuart). Compare with Isa. 50:5, "The Lord God hath opened my ear, and I was not rebellious." In the Psalm, the proper connection would seem to be that the speaker had been made obedient, or had been so led that he was disposed to do the will of God. This was expressed by the fact that the ear had been opened so as to be quick to hear, since an indisposition to obey is often expressed by the fact that the ears are "stopped." The Hebrew in the Psalm the Septuagint translates, "A body hast thou prepared me," and this rendering has been adopted by the apostle. Various ways have been restored to for explaining the fact that the translators of the Septuagint rendered it in this manner, none of which are entirely free from difficulty.—Popular Commentary

He recommends Christ to them as the true high priest, the true atoning sacrifice. This he illustrates,

I. From the purpose and promise of God concerning Christ, which are frequently recorded in the volume of the book of God, v. 7.

II. From what God had done in preparing a body for Christ (that is, a human nature), that he might be qualified to be our Redeemer and Advocate.

III. From the readiness and willingness that Christ discovered to engage in this work, when no other sacrifice would be accepted, v. 7-9. Christ voluntarily came into it: "Lo, I come! I delight to do thy will, O God!" This should endear Christ and our Bibles to us, that in Christ we have the fulfilling of the scriptures.

were only legal and typical (vss. 4, 11). The Gospel remission, on the contrary, is so complete, that sins are "remembered no more" (vs. 17) by God. It is unbelief to "forget" this once-for-all purgation, and to fear on account of "former sins" (II Pet. 1:9). The believer, once for all bathed, needs only to "wash" his hands and "feet" of soils, according as he daily contracts them, in Christ's blood (John 13: 10). 4. For . . .—reason why, necessarily, there is a continually recurring "remembrance of sins" in the legal sacrifices (vs. 3). Typically, "the blood of bulls," etc., sacrificed, had power; but it was only in virtue of the power of the one real antitypical sacrifice of Christ; they had no power in themselves; take away—"take off." The Greek, vs. 11, is stronger, explaining the weaker word here, "take away utterly." The blood of beasts could not take away the sin of man. A MAN must do that (Notes, ch. 9:12-14). 5. Christ's voluntary self-offering, in contrast to those inefficient sacrifices, is shown to fulfil perfectly "the will of God" as to our redemption, by completely atoning "for (our) sins." Wherefore—seeing that a nobler than animal sacrifices was needed to "take away sins." when he cometh—Greek, "coming." But the time of "coming" is present; not "when He had come," but "when coming into the world"; so, in order to accord with ALFORD's view, "the world" must mean His PUBLIC ministry: when coming, or about to come, into public. a body hast thou prepared me—Greek, "Thou didst fit for Me a body." "In Thy counsels Thou didst determine to make for Me a body, to be given up to death as a sacrificial victim" [WAHL]. In the Hebrew, Psalm 40:6, it is "mine ears hast thou opened," or "dug." Perhaps this alludes to the custom of boring the ear of a slave who volunteers to remain under his master when he might be free. Christ's assuming a human body, in obedience to the Father's will, in order to die the death of a slave (ch. 2:14), was virtually the same act of voluntary submission to service as that of a slave suffering his ear to be bored by his master. His willing obedience to the Father's will is what is dwelt on as giving especial virtue to His sacrifice (vss. 7, 9, 10). The preparing, or fitting of a body for Him, is not with a view to His mere incarnation, but to His expiatory sacrifice (vs. 10), as the contrast to "sacrifice and offering" requires; cf. also Rom. 7:4; Eph. 2:16; Col. 1:22. More probably "opened mine ears" means opened mine inward ear, so as to be attentively obedient to what God wills me to do, viz., to assume the body He has prepared for me for my sacrifice, so Job, Margin, 33:16; 36:10 (doubtless the boring of a slave's ear was the symbol of such willing obedience); Isaiah 50:5, "The Lord God hath opened mine ear," i.e., made me obediently attentive as a slave to his master. Others somewhat similarly explain, "Mine ears hast thou digged," or "fashioned," not with allusion to Exodus 21:6, but to the true office of the ear—a willing, submissive attention to the voice of God (Isa. 50:4, 5). The forming of the ear implies the preparation of the body, i.e., the incarnation; this secondary idea, really in the Hebrew, though less prominent, is the one which Paul uses for his argument. In either explanation the idea of Christ taking on Him the form, and becoming obedient as a servant, is implied. As He assumed a body in which to make His self-sacrifice, so ought we present our bodies a living sacrifice (Rom. 12:1). 6. burnt offerings—Greek, "whole burnt offerings." thou hast had no pleasure—as if these could in themselves atone for sin: God had pleasure in (Greek, "approved," or "was well pleased with") them, in so far as they were an act of obedience to His positive command under the Old Testament, but not as having an intrinsic efficacy such as Christ's sacrifice had. Contrast Matthew 3:17. 7. I come—rather, "I am come" (Note, vs. 5). "Here we have the creed, as it were, of Jesus: "I am come to fulfil the law, Matthew 5:17; to preach, Mark 1:38; to call sinners to repentance, Luke 5:32; to send a sword and to set men at variance, Matthew 10:34, 35; I came down from heaven to do the will of Him that sent me, John 6:38, 39 (so here, Psalm 40:7, 8); I am sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matthew 15:24; I am come into this world for judgment, John 9:39; I am come that they might have life, and might have it more abundantly, John 10:10; to save what had been lost, Matthew 18:11; to seek and to save that which was lost, Luke 19:10; cf. I Timothy 1:15; to save men's lives, Luke 9:56; to send fire on the earth, Luke 12:49; to minister, Matthew 20:28; as "the Light," John 12:46; to bear witness unto the truth, John 18:37." in the volume . . .—lit., "the roll": the parchment MS. be-

4. For it is not possible. Common sense must have taught them that shedding the blood of bulls and goats could never satisfy divine justice nor take away guilt from the conscience; and God intended that they should understand the matter so; and this the following quotation from the Psalmist sufficiently proves.

5. When he (the Messiah) cometh into the world, was about to be incarnated, he saith to God the Father, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not—It was never Thy will and design that the sacrifices under Thy own law should be considered as making atonement for sin; they were only designed to point out My incarnation and consequent sacrificial death. And therefore a body hast thou prepared me, by a miraculous conception in the womb of a virgin, according to Thy word, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent." A body hast thou prepared me. The quotation in this and the following two verses is taken from Ps. xl. 6-8, as they stand now in the Septuagint, with scarcely any variety of reading; but although the general meaning is the same, they are widely different in verbal expression in the Hebrew. David's words we translate, "Mine ears hast thou opened"; but they might be more properly rendered, "My ears hast Thou bored"; that is, Thou hast made me Thy servant forever, to dwell in Thine own house; for the allusion is evidently to the custom mentioned in Exod. xxi. 2, etc.: "If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free . . . but if the servant shall plainly [positively] say, I love my master . . . I will not go out free: then his master shall bring him to . . . the door post; and . . . shall bore his ear through with an aul; and he shall serve him for ever." But how is it possible that the Septuagint and the apostle should take a meaning so totally different from the sense of the Hebrew? Dr. Kennicott supposes that the Septuagint and apostle express the meaning of the words as they stood in the copy from which the Greek translation was made, and that the present Hebrew text is corrupted. It is remarkable that all the offerings and sacrifices which were considered to be of an atoning or cleansing nature, offered under the law, are here enumerated by the Psalmist and the apostle, to show that none of them nor all of them could take away sin, and that the grand sacrifice of Christ was that alone which could do it. Four kinds are here specified, by both the Psalmist and the apostle, viz., sacrifice, offering, burnt offering, sin offering. Of all these we may say, with the apostle, it was impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin.

6. Thou hast had no pleasure. Thou couldst never be pleased with the victims under the law; Thou couldst never consider them as atonements for sin, as they could never satisfy Thy justice nor make Thy law honorable.

7. In the volume of the book. "In the roll of the book." Anciently, books were written on

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. From the errand and design upon which Christ came. Christ came to do the will of God in two instances. 1. In taking away the first priesthood, which God had no pleasure in. 2. In establishing the second, his own priesthood and the everlasting gospel. This is the great design upon which the heart of God was set from all eternity. And it is not more agreeable to the will of God than it is advantageous to the souls of men.

From the place to which our Lord Jesus is now exalted, v. 12, 13. 1. To what honour Christ is exalted—to the right hand of God, the seat of power, the giving hand; the receiving hand; the working hand; this is the highest post of honour. 2. How Christ came to this honour—as a reward due to his sufferings. He will never quit it, nor cease to employ it for his people's good. This is his rest for ever. He has further expectations, which shall not be disappointed. One would think such a person as Christ could have no enemies except in hell; but it is certain that he has enemies on earth. Let not Christians then wonder that they have enemies. But Christ's enemies shall be made his footstool; this he is expecting. When his enemies shall be subdued, their enemies shall be subdued also.

ing wrapped around a cylinder headed with knobs. Here, the Scripture "volume" meant is the 40th Psalm. "By this very passage 'written of Me,' I undertake to do Thy will [viz., that I should die for the sins of the world, in order that all who believe may be saved, not by animal sacrifices, vs. 6, but by My death]." This is the written contract of Messiah (cf. Neh. 9:38), whereby He engaged to be our surety. So complete is the inspiration of all that is written, so great the authority of the Psalms, that what David says is really what Christ then and there said. 8. he—Christ. Sacrifice . . .—The oldest MSS. read, "Sacrifices and offerings" (plural). This verse combines the two clauses previously quoted distinctly, vss. 5, 6, in contrast to the sacrifice of Christ with which God was well pleased. 9. Then said he—"At that time (viz., when speaking by David's mouth in the 40th Psalm) He hath said." The rejection of the legal sacrifices involves, as its concomitant, the voluntary offer of Jesus to make the self-sacrifice with which God is well pleased (for, indeed, it was God's own "will" that He came to do in offering it: so that this sacrifice could not but be well pleasing to God). I come—"I am come." taketh away—"sets aside the first," viz., "the legal system of sacrifices" which God wills not. the second—"the will of God" (vss. 7, 9) that Christ should redeem us by His self-sacrifice. 10. By—Greek, "In." So "in," and "through," occur in the same sentence. I Pet. 1:22, "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit." Also, I Peter 1:5, in the Greek. The "in (fulfilment of) which will" (cf. the use of in, Ephesians 1:6, "wherein [in which grace] He hath made us accepted in the Beloved"), expresses the originating cause; "THROUGH the offering . . . of Christ," the instrumental or mediatory cause. The whole work of redemption flows from "the will" of God the Father, as the First Cause, who decreed redemption from before the foundation of the world. The "will" here (boulema) is His absolute sovereign will. His "good will" (eudokia) is a particular aspect of it. are sanctified—once for all, and as our permanent state (so the Greek). It is the finished work of Christ in having sanctified us (i.e., having translated us from a state of unholy alienation into a state of consecration to God, having "no more conscience of sin," vs. 2) once for all and permanently, not the process of gradual sanctification, which is here referred to. the body—"prepared" for Him by the Father (vs. 5). As the atonement, or reconciliation, is by the blood of Christ (Lev. 17: 11), so our sanctification (consecration to God, holiness and eternal bliss) is by the body of Christ (Col. 1:22). once for all—(ch. 7:27; 9:12, 26, 28; 10:12, 14). 11. And—a new point of contrast; the frequent repetition of the sacrifices. priest—The oldest MSS. read, "high priest." Though he did not in person stand "daily" offering sacrifices, he did so by the subordinate priests of whom, as well as of all Israel, he was the representative head. So "daily" is applied to the high priests (ch. 7:27). standeth—the attitude of one ministering; in contrast to "sat down on the right hand of God," vs. 12, said of Christ; the posture of one being ministered to as a king. which—Greek, "the which," i.e., of such a kind as. take away—utterly; lit., "strip off all round." Legal sacrifices might, in part, produce the sense of forgiveness, yet scarcely even that (Note, vs. 4); but entirely to strip off one's guilt they never could. 12. this man—emphatic (ch. 3:3). for ever—joined in English Version with "offered one sacrifice"; offered one sacrifice, the efficacy of which endures for ever; lit., "continuously," (cf. vs. 14). "The offering of Christ, once for all made, will continue the one and only oblation for ever; no other will supersede it" [BENGEL]. 13. expecting—"waiting." Awaiting the execution of His Father's will, that all His foes should be subjected to Him. The Son waits till the Father shall "send Him forth to triumph over all His foes." He is now sitting at rest (vs. 12), invisibly reigning, and having His foes virtually, by right of His death, subject to Him. His present sitting on the unseen throne is a necessary preliminary to His coming forth to subject His foes openly. He shall then come forth to a visibly manifested kingdom and conquest over His foes. Thus He fulfils Psalm 110:1. This agrees with I Corinthians 15:23-28. be made his footstool—lit., "be placed (rendered) footstool of His feet." his enemies—Satan and Death, whose strength consists in "sin"; this being taken away (vs. 12), the power of the foes is taken away, and their destruction necessarily follows. 14. For—The sacrifice being "for ever" in its efficacy (vs. 12) needs no renewal.

skins and rolled up. Among the Romans these were called volumina, from volvo, "I roll"; and Pentateuch, in the Jewish synagogues, is still written in this way. There are two wooden rollers; on one they roll on, on the other they roll off, as they proceed in reading. The book mentioned here must be the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses, for in David's time no other part of divine revelation had been committed to writing. This whole book speaks about Christ and His accomplishing the will of God. To do thy will. God willed not the sacrifices under the law, but He willed that a human victim of infinite merit should be offered for the redemption of mankind. That there might be such a victim, a "body" was prepared for the eternal Logos and in that body He came to do the will of God, that is, to suffer and die for the sins of the world.

9. He taketh away the first. The offerings, sacrifices, burnt offerings, and sacrifices for sin which were prescribed by the law. That he may establish the second. The offering of the body of Jesus once for all.

10. By the which will we are sanctified. Closing in with this so solemnly declared will of God that there is no name given under heaven among men by which we can be saved but Jesus the Christ, we believe in Him, find redemption in His blood, and are sanctified unto God through the sacrificial offering of His body.

11. Every priest standeth. The office of the Jewish priest is here compared with the office of our High Priest. The Jewish priest stands daily at the altar, like a servant ministering, repeating the same sacrifices; our High Priest offered himself once for all, and sat down at the right hand of God, as the only begotten Son and Heir of all things, v. 12. This continual offering argued the imperfection of the sacrifices. Our Lord's once offering proves His was complete.

13. Till his enemies be made his footstool. Till all that oppose His high priesthood and sacrificial offering shall be defeated, routed, and confounded; and acknowledge in their punishment the supremacy of His power as universal and eternal King, who refused to receive Him as their atoning and sanctifying Priest.

V. From the perfect efficacy of the priesthood of Christ (v. 14). This is what the Levitical priesthood could never do; and, if we indeed are aiming at a perfect state, we must receive the Lord Jesus as the only high priest that can bring us to that state.

The apostle recommends Christ from the witness the Holy Ghost has given in the scriptures concerning him (v. 15): Whereof the Holy Ghost is a witness. The passage is cited from Jer. xxxi. 31. God promises that he will pour out his Spirit upon his people; he will put his laws in their hearts, and write them in their minds, v. 16.

Their sins and iniquities he will remember no more (v. 17), which will alone show the sufficiency of Christ's satisfaction, that it needs not be repeated, v. 18. This was much more than the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices could effect.

I. Here the apostle sets forth the dignities of the gospel state. The privileges are, 1. Boldness to enter into the holiest. They have access to God till they are prepared to enter into his glorious presence in heaven. 2. A high priest over the house of God, even this blessed Jesus. God is willing to dwell with men on earth, and to have them dwell with him in heaven; but fallen man cannot dwell with God without a high priest.

II. The way and means by which Christians enjoy such privileges—by the blood of Jesus. The apostle enters further into the particulars of it, v. 20. 1. It is the only way. 2. It is a new way. It is a way that will always be effectual. 3. It is a living way. This way we may come to God, and live. It is by a living Saviour who, though he was dead is alive; and it is a way that gives life and lively hope to those who enter into it. 4. It is a way that Christ has consecrated for us through the veil, that is, his flesh. Our way to heaven is by a crucified Saviour; his death is to us the way of life.

III. The duties binding upon them on account of these privileges, v. 22, 23, &c.

1. They must draw near to God, and that in a right manner. They must draw near in conformity to God, and communion with him, still endeavouring to get nearer and nearer, till they come to dwell in his presence. (1) With a true heart. God is the searcher of hearts, and he requires truth in the inward parts. (2) In full assurance of faith. We should lay aside all sinful distrust. Without faith it is impossible to please God. (3) Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. They may be cleansed from guilt, and whatever evils the consciences of men are subject to by reason of sin.

them that are sanctified—rather as Greek, "them that are being sanctified." The sanctification (consecration to God) of the elect (I Pet. 1:2) believers is perfect in Christ once for all (Note, vs. 10). (Contrast the law, ch. 7:19; 9:9; 10:1.) The development of that sanctification is progressive. 15. The Greek, has "moreover," or "now." is a witness—of the truth which I am setting forth. The Father's witness is given ch. 5:10. The Son's, ch. 10:5. Now is added that of the Holy Spirit, called accordingly "the Spirit of grace," vs. 29. The testimony of all Three leads to the same conclusion (vs. 18). for after that he had said . . .—The conclusion to the sentence is in vs. 17, "After He had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them (with the house of Israel, ch. 8:10; here extended to the spiritual Israel) . . . , saith the Lord; I will put (lit., "giving," referring to the giving of the law; not now as then, giving into the hands, but giving) My laws into their hearts ("mind," ch. 8:10) and in their minds ("hearts," ch. 8:10); I will inscribe (so the Greek) them (here He omits the addition quoted in ch. 8:10, 11, I will be to them a God . . . , and they shall not teach every man his neighbor . . .), and (i.e., after He had said the foregoing, HE THEN ADDS) their sins . . . will I remember no more."

18. where remission of these is—as there is under the Gospel covenant (vs. 17). "Here ends the finale (ch. 10:1-18) of the great tripartite arrangement (ch. 7:1-25; 7:26 to 9:12; 9:13 to 10:18) of the middle portion of the Epistle. 19. Here begins the third and last division of the Epistle; our duty now while waiting for the Lord's second advent. Resumption and expansion of the exhortation (ch. 4:14-16; cf. vss. 22, 23 here) wherewith he closed the first part of the Epistle, preparatory to his great doctrinal argument, beginning at ch. 7:1. boldness—"free confidence," grounded on the consciousness that our sins have been forgiven. to enter—lit., "as regards the entering." by—Greek, "in"; it is in the blood of Jesus that our boldness to enter is grounded. Cf. Ephesians 3:12, "In whom we have boldness and access with confidence." It is His having once for all entered as our Forerunner (ch. 6:20) and High Priest (vs. 21), making atonement for us with His blood, which is continually there (ch. 12:24) before God, that gives us confident access. 20. which . . .—The antecedent in the Greek is "the entering"; not as English Version, "way." Translate, "which (entering) He has consecrated (not as though it were already existing, but has been the first to open, INAUGURATED as a new thing; Note, ch. 9:18, where the Greek is the same) for us (as) a new (Greek, 'recent'; recently opened, Rom. 16:25, 26) and living way" (not like the lifeless way through the law offering of the blood of dead victims, but real, vital, and of perpetual efficacy, because the living and life-giving Saviour is that way. It is a living hope that we have, producing not dead, but living, works). Christ, the first fruits of our nature, has ascended, and the rest is sanctified thereby. "Christ's ascension is our promotion; and whither the glory of the Head hath preceded, thither the hope of the body, too, is called" [LEO]. the veil—As the veil had to be passed through in order to enter the holiest place, so the weak, human suffering flesh (ch. 5:7) of Christ's humanity (which veiled His God head) had to be passed through by Him in entering the heavenly holiest place for us; in putting off His rent flesh, the temple veil, its type, was simultaneously rent from top to bottom (Matt. 27:51). Not His body, but His weak suffering flesh, was the veil; His body was the temple (John 2:19). 21. high priest—As a different Greek term (archiereus) is used always elsewhere in this Epistle for "high priest," translate as Greek here, "A Great Priest"; one who is at once King and "Priest on His throne" (Zech. 6:13); a royal Priest, and a priestly King. house of God—the spiritual house, the Church, made up of believers, whose home is heaven, where Jesus now is (ch. 12:22, 23). Thus, by "the house of God," over which Jesus is, heaven is included in meaning, as well as the Church, whose home it is. 22. (Ch. 4:16; 7:19.) with a true heart—without hypocrisy; "in truth, and with a perfect heart"; a heart thoroughly imbued with "the truth" (vs. 26). full assurance—(ch. 6:11)—with no doubt as to our acceptance when coming to God by the blood of Christ. As "faith" occurs here, so "hope," and "love," vss. 23, 24. sprinkled from—i.e., sprinkled so as to be cleansed from. evil conscience—a consciousness of guilt unatoned for, and uncleansed away (vs. 2; ch. 9:9). Both the hearts and the bodies are cleansed. The legal purifications were with blood of animal victims and

14. For by one offering. His death upon the Cross. He hath perfected for ever. He has procured remission of sins and holiness; for it is well observed here, and in several parts of this Epistle, that "to make perfect" is the same as "to procure remission of sins." Them that are sanctified. Them that have received the sprinkling of the Blood of this offering. These, therefore, receiving redemption through that blood, have no need of any other offering; as this was a complete atonement, purification, and title to eternal glory.

15. The Holy Ghost also is a witness to us. The words are quoted from Jer. xxxi. 33-34, and here we are assured that Jeremiah spoke by the inspiration of the Spirit of God. Had . . . said before. See chap. viii. 10, 12.

18. Now where remission of these is. In any case, where sin is once pardoned, there is no further need of a sin offering; but every believer on Christ has his sin blotted out, and therefore needs no other offering for that sin.

19. Having therefore, brethren, boldness. The apostle, having now finished the doctrinal part of his Epistle and fully shown the superiority of Christ to all men and angels, and the superiority of His priesthood to that of Aaron and his successors, the absolute inefficacy of the Jewish sacrifices to make atonement for sin, and the absolute efficacy of that of Christ to make reconciliation of man to God, proceeds now to show what influence these doctrines should have on the hearts and lives of those who believe in His merits and death. Boldness to enter. "Liberty, full access to the entrance of the holy place." This is an allusion to the case of the high priest going into the holy of holies. He went with fear and trembling, because, if he had neglected the smallest item prescribed by the law, he could expect nothing but death. Genuine believers can come even to the throne of God with confidence, as they carry into the divine presence the infinitely meritorious Blood of the great atonement.

20. By a new and living way. It is a new way; no human being had ever before entered into the heaven of heavens. Jesus in human nature was the first, and thus He has opened the way to heaven to mankind, His own resurrection and ascension to glory being the proof and pledge of ours. Through the veil. As the high priest lifted up or drew aside the veil that separated the holy from the most holy place, in order that he might have access to the Divine Majesty; and as the veil of the Temple was rent from the top to the bottom at the crucifixion of Christ, to show that the way to the holiest was then laid open; so we must approach the throne through the mediation of Christ, and through His sacrificial death. Here the veil—His humanity—is rent, and the kingdom of Heaven opened to all believers.

21. An high priest over the house of God. The house or family of God is the Christian Church, or all true believers in the Lord Jesus. Over this Church, house, or family Christ is the High Priest—in their behalf He offers His own blood, and their prayers and praises.

22. Let us draw near. Let us come with the blood of our Sacrifice to the throne of God; the expression is sacrificial. With a true heart. Deeply convinced of our need of help, and truly in earnest to obtain it. In full assurance of faith. Being fully persuaded that God will accept us for the sake of His Son, and that the sacrificial death of Christ gives us full authority to expect every blessing we need. Having our hearts sprinkled. Not our bodies, as was the case among the Hebrews, when they had contracted any pollution, for they were to be sprinkled with the water of separation (see Num. xix 2-10); but our hearts, sprinkled by the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ, without which we cannot draw nigh to God. From an evil conscience. Having that deep sense of guilt which our conscience felt taken all away, and the peace and love of God shed

(4) Our bodies washed with pure water, that is, with the water of baptism, or with the sanctifying virtue of the Holy Spirit, cleansing from the filthiness of the flesh as well as of the spirit.

2. The apostle exhorts believers to hold fast the profession of their faith, v. 23. (1) The duty itself—to hold fast the profession of our faith. Our spiritual enemies will do what they can to wrest our faith, and hope, out of our hands, but we must hold fast. (2) The manner in which we must do this—without wavering. Those who begin to waver are in danger of falling away. (3) The motive or reason enforcing this duty: He is faithful that hath promised. There is no fickleness with him, and there should be none with us. We must depend more upon his promises to us than upon our promises to him.

IV. We have the means prescribed for promoting our fidelity and perseverance, v. 24, 25, &c. 1. We should consider one another, to provoke to love and to good works. Christians ought to have a tender consideration and concern for one another. A good example given to others is the best and most effectual provocation to love and good works.

2. Not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, v 25. Even in those times there were some who forsook these assemblies. The communion of saints is a great help and privilege, and a good means of steadiness and perseverance.

3. To exhort one another, to watch over one another, and be jealous of ourselves and one another with a godly jealousy. This, would be the best friendship.

4. We should observe the approaching of times of trial. Christians ought to observe the signs of the times, such as God has foretold. There is a trying day coming on us all, the day of our death, and we should observe all the signs of its approaching, and improve them to greater watchfulness and diligence in duty.

V. The apostle proceeds to enforce his exhortations (v. 26, 27, &c.).

1. From the description he gives of the sin of apostasy. It is sinning wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth. The sin here mentioned is a total and final apostasy, when men reject Christ, the only Saviour, and renounce the gospel, the only way of salvation, and the words of eternal life, after they have professed the Christian religion.

with water, and could only cleanse the flesh (ch. 9: 13, 21). Christ's blood purifies the heart and conscience. The Aaronic priest, in entering the holy place, washed with water (ch. 9:19) in the brazen laver. Believers, as priests to God, are once for all washed in BODY (as distinguished from "hearts") at baptism. As we have an immaterial, and a material nature, the cleansing of both is expressed by "hearts" and "body," the inner and the outer man; so the whole man, material and immaterial. The baptism of the body, however, is not the mere putting away of material filth, nor an act operating by intrinsic efficacy, but the sacramental seal, applied to the outer man, of a spiritual washing (I Pet. 3: 21). "Body" (not merely "flesh," the carnal part, as II Cor. 7:1) includes the whole material man, which needs cleansing, as being redeemed, as well as the soul. The body, once polluted with sin, is washed, so as to be fitted like Christ's holy body, and by His body, to be spiritually a pure and living offering. On the "pure water," the symbol of consecration and sanctification, cf. John 19:34; I Corinthians 6:11; I John 5:6; Ezekiel 36:25. The perfects "having . . . hearts sprinkled . . . body (the Greek is singular) washed," imply a continuing state produced by a once-for-all accomplished act, viz., our justification by faith through Christ's blood, and consecration to God, sealed sacramentally by the baptism of our body. 23. Ch. 3:6, 14; 4:14. profession—Greek, "confession." our faith—rather as Greek, "our hope"; which is indeed faith exercised as to the future inheritance. Hope rests on faith, and at the same time quickens faith, and is the ground of our bold confession (I Pet. 3:15). Hope is similarly (vs. 22) connected with purification (I John 3:3). without wavering—without declension (ch. 3:14), "steadfast unto the end." he—God is faithful to His promises (ch. 6:17, 18; 11:11; 12:26, 28; I Cor. 1:9; 10:13; I Thess. 5:24; II Thess. 3:3; see also Christ's promise, John 12:26); but man is too often unfaithful to his duties. 24. Here, as elsewhere, hope and love follow faith; the Pauline triad of Christian graces. consider—with the mind attentively fixed on "one another" (Note, ch. 3:1), contemplating with continual consideration the characters and wants of our brethren, so as to render mutual help and counsel. Cf. "consider," Psalm 41:1, and ch. 12:15. "(All) looking diligently lest any fail of the grace of God." to provoke—Greek, "with a view to provoking unto love," instead of provoking to hatred, as is too often the case. 25. assembling of ourselves together—The Greek, episunagoge, is only found here and II Thessalonians 2:1 (the gathering together of the elect to Christ at His coming, Matt. 24:31). The assembling or gathering of ourselves for Christian communion in private and public, is an earnest of our being gathered together to Him at His appearing. Union is strength; continual assemblings together beget and foster love, and give good opportunities for "provoking to good works," by "exhorting one another" (ch. 3:13). IGNATIUS says, "When ye frequently, and in numbers meet together, the powers of Satan are overthrown, and his mischief is neutralized by your likemindedness in the faith." To neglect such assemblings together might end in apostasy at last. He avoids the Greek term sunagoge, as suggesting the Jewish synagogue meetings (cf. Rev. 2:9). as the manner of some is—"manner," i.e., habit, custom. This gentle expression proves he is not here as yet speaking of apostasy. the day approaching—This, the shortest designation of the day of the Lord's coming, occurs elsewhere only in I Corinthians 3:13; a confirmation of the Pauline authorship of this Epistle. The Church being in all ages kept uncertain how soon Christ is coming, the day is, and has been, in each age, practically always near; whence, believers have been called on always to be watching for it as nigh at hand. The Hebrews were now living close upon one of those great types and foretastes of it, the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. 24), "the bloody and fiery dawn of the great day; that day is the day of days, the ending day of all days, the settling day of all days, the day of the promotion of time into eternity, the day which, for the Church, breaks through and breaks off the night of the present world" [DELITZSCH in ALFORD]. 26. Cf. on this and following verses, ch. 6:4, etc. There the warning was that if there be not diligence in progressing, a falling off will take place, and apostasy may ensue: here it is, that if there be lukewarmness in Christian communion, apostasy may ensue. if we sin—Greek present participle: if we be found sinning, i.e., not isolated acts, but a state of sin [ALFORD]. A violation not only of the law, but of the whole economy of the New Testament (vss. 28, 29).

abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us. Our bodies washed with pure water. The high priest, before he entered into the inner tabernacle or put on his holy garments, was to wash his flesh in water, Lev. xvi. 4, and the Levites were to be cleansed the same way, Num. viii. 7. The apostle probably alludes to this in what he says here, though it appears that he refers principally to baptisms, the washing by which was an emblem of the purification of the soul by the grace and Spirit of Christ. But it is most likely that it is to the Jewish baptisms, and not the Christian, that the apostle alludes.

23. Let us hold fast the profession. The word implies that general consent that was among Christians on all the important articles of their faith and practice; particularly their acknowledgment of the truth of the gospel, and of Jesus Christ as the only Victim for sin and the only Saviour from it. If the word "washed" above refer to Christian baptism in the case of adults, then the profession is that which the baptized then made of their faith in the gospel, and of their determination to live and die in that faith. The various readings on this clause are many in the MSS. But among all these, the confession or "profession of hope" is undoubtedly the genuine reading. Now among the primitive Christians the hope which they professed was the resurrection of the body and everlasting life. The apostle exhorts them to hold fast this "confession" without wavering—never to doubt the declarations made to them by their Redeemer, but having the "full assurance of faith" that their hearts were sprinkled from an evil conscience, that they had found redemption in the blood of the Lamb, they might expect to be glorified with their living Head in the kingdom of their Father. He is faithful that promised. The eternal life, which is the object of your hope, is promised to you by Him who cannot lie. As He then is faithful who has given you this promise, hold fast the profession of your hope.

24. And let us consider one another. Let us "diligently and attentively consider" each other's trials, difficulties, and weaknesses; feel for each other, and "excite" each other to an increase of love to God and man; and, as the proof of it, to be fruitful in good works. The words "to the provocation" are often taken in a good sense, and signify "excitement, stirring up" to do anything laudable, useful, honorable, or necessary.

25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves. Whether this means public or private worship is hard to say; but as the word is but once more used in the New Testament, (2 Thess. ii. 1) and there means the "gathering together" of redeemed of the Lord at the day of judgment, it is as likely that it means here private religious meetings for the purpose of mutual exhortation; and this sense appears the more natural here because it is evident that the Church was now in a state of persecution, and therefore their meetings were most probably held in private. For fear of persecution it seems as if some had deserted these meetings, "as the custom of certain persons is." They had given up these strengthening and instructive means, and the others were in danger of following their example. The day. "That day"—the time in which God would come and pour out His judgments on the Jewish nation. We may also apply it to the day of death and the day of judgment. Both of these are approaching to every human being. He who wishes to be found ready will carefully use every means of grace, and particularly the communion of saints, if there be even but two or three in the place where he lives, who statedly meet together in the name of Christ. Those who relinquish Christian communion are in a backsliding state; those who backslide are in danger of apostasy. To prevent this latter, the apostle speaks the awful words following.

26. For if we sin wilfully. If we deliberately, for fear of persecution or from any other motive, renounce the profession of the gospel and the Author of that gospel, after having received the knowledge of the truth so as to be convinced that Jesus is the promised Messiah, and that He had sprinkled our hearts from an evil conscience—for such there remaineth no . . . sacrifice for sins. For as the Jewish sacrifices are abolished, as appears by the declaration of God

2. From the dreadful doom of such apostates. (1) There remains no more sacrifice for such sins, no other Christ to come to save such sinners. Those under the gospel who will not accept of Christ, that they may be saved by him, have no other refuge left them. (2) There remains for them only a certain fearful looking for of judgment, v. 27. God gives some notorious sinners, while on earth, a fearful foreboding in their own consciences, with a despair of ever being able either to endure or escape it.

3. From the methods of divine justice with those who despised Moses's law. These, when convicted by two or three witnesses, were put to death; they died without mercy.

Hence the apostle infers the heavy doom that will fall upon those that apostatize from Christ. They have trodden under foot the Son of God. What punishment can be too great for such men?

They have counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing. Men who have seemed before to have the blood of Christ in high esteem may come to account it an unholy thing.

Those have done despite unto the Spirit of grace. They have grieved, resisted, yea, done despite to him, which is the highest act of wickedness, and makes the case of the sinner desperate, refusing to have the gospel salvation applied to him.

4. From the description we have of the nature of God's vindictive justice, v. 30. The terrors of the Lord are known both by revelation and reason. The other quotation is from Deut. xxxii. 36, The Lord will judge his people; he will search and try his visible church, and will punish the sinners in Zion with the greatest severity. Now those who know him who hath said, Vengeance belongeth to me, I will recompense, must needs conclude, as the apostle does (v. 31). Those who know the joy that results from the favour of God can thereby judge of the power and dread of his vindictive wrath.

wilfully—presumptuously, Greek "willingly." After receiving "full knowledge (so the Greek, cf. 1 Tim. 2:4) of the truth," by having been "enlightened," and by having "tasted" a certain measure even of grace of "the Holy Ghost" (the Spirit of truth, John 14:17; and "the Spirit of grace," vs. 29): to fall away (as "sin" here means, ch. 3:12, 17; cf. ch. 6:6) and apostatize (ch. 3:12) to Judaism or infidelity, is not a sin of ignorance, or error ("out of the way," the result) of infirmity, but a deliberate sinning against the Spirit (vs. 29; ch. 5:2): such sinning, where a consciousness of Gospel obligations not only was, but is present: a sinning presumptuously and preseveringly against Christ's redemption for us, and the Spirit of grace in us. "He only who stands high can fall low. A lively reference in the soul to what is good is necessary in order to be thoroughly wicked; hence, man can be more reprobate than the beasts, and the apostate angels than apostate man" [THOLUCK]. remaineth no more sacrifice—For there is but ONE Sacrifice that can atone for sin; they, after having fully known that sacrifice, deliberately reject it. 27. a certain—an extraordinary and indescribable. The indefiniteness, as of something peculiar of its kind, makes the description the more terrible (cf. Greek, Jas. 1:18). looking for—"expectation": a later sense of the Greek. ALFORD strangely translates, as the Greek usually means elsewhere, "reception." The transition is easy from "giving a reception to" something or someone, to "looking for." Contrast the "expecting" (the very same Greek as here), vs. 13, which refutes ALFORD. fiery indignation—lit., "zeal of fire." Fire is personified: glow or ardor of fire, i.e., of Him who is "a consuming fire." devour—continually. 28. Cf. ch. 2:2, 3; 12:25. despised—"set at naught" [ALFORD]: utterly and heinously violated, not merely some minor detail, but the whole law and covenant; e.g., by idolatry (Deut. 17:2-7). So here apostasy answers to such an utter violation of the old covenant. died—Greek, "dies": the normal punishment of such transgression, then still in force. without mercy—lit., "mercies": removal out of the pale of mitigation, or a respite of his doom. under—on the evidence of. 29. sorer—Greek, "worse," viz., "punishment" (lit., "vengeance") than any mere temporal punishment of the body. suppose ye—an appeal to the Hebrews' reason and conscience. thought worthy—by God at the judgment. trodden under foot the Son of God—by "wilful" apostasy. So he treads under foot God Himself who "glorified His Son as an high priest" (ch. 5:5; 6:6). an unholy thing—lit., "common," as opposed to "sanctified." No better than the blood of a common man, thus involving the consequence that Christ, in claiming to be God, was guilty of blasphemy, and so deserved to die! wherewith he was sanctified—for Christ died even for him. "Sanctified," in the fullest sense, belongs only to the saved elect. But in some sense it belongs also to those who have gone a far way in Christian experience, and yet fall away at last. The higher such a one's past Christian experiences, the deeper his fall. done despite unto—by repelling in fact: as "blasphemy" is despite in words (Mark 3:29). "Of the Jews who became Christians and relapsed to Judaism, we find from the history of URIEL ACOSTA, that they required a blasphemy against Christ. 'They applied to Him epithets used against Molech the adulterous branch,'" etc. [THOLUCK]. the Spirit of grace—the Spirit that confers grace. "He who does not accept the benefit, insults Him who confers it. He hath made thee a son: wilt thou become a slave? He has come to take up His abode with thee; but thou art introducing evil into thyself" [CHRYSOSTOM]. "It is the curse of evil eternally to propagate evil: so, for him who profanes the Christ without him, and blasphemes the Christ within him, there is subjectively no renewal of a change of mind (ch. 6:6), and objectively no new sacrifice for sins" (ch. 10:26) [THOLUCK]. 30. him—God, who enters no empty threats. Vengeance belongeth unto me—Greek, "To Me belongeth vengeance": exactly according with Paul's quotation, Romans 12:19, of the same text. Lord shall judge his people—in grace, or else anger, according as each deserves: here, "judge," so as to punish the reprobate apostate; there, "judge," so as to interpose in behalf of, and save His people (Deut. 32. 36). 31. fearful . . . to fall into the hands . . .—It is good like David to fall into the hands of God, rather than man, when one does so with filial faith in his father's love, though God chastises him. "It is fearful" to fall into His hands as a reprobate and presumptuous sinner doomed to His just vengeance as Judge (vs. 27). living God—therefore able to himself in the fortieth psalm, and Jesus being now the only Sacrifice which God will accept, those who reject Him have none other; therefore their case must be utterly without remedy. This is the meaning of the apostle, and the case is that of a deliberate apostate—one who has utterly rejected Jesus Christ and His atonement, and renounced the whole gospel system. It has nothing to do with backsliders in our common use of that term. A man may be overtaken in a fault, or he may deliberately go into sin, and yet neither renounce the gospel nor deny the Lord that bought him. His case is dreary and dangerous, but it is not hopeless; no case is hopeless but that of the deliberate apostate, who rejects the whole gospel system, after having been saved by grace or convinced of the truth of the gospel. To him there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; for there was but the one, Jesus, and this he has utterly rejected.

27. A certain fearful looking for of judgment. From this it is evident that God will pardon no man without a sacrifice for sin. And fiery indignation. A "zeal," or fervor of fire"; something similar to the fire that came down from heaven and destroyed Korah and his company, Num. xvi. 35.

28. He that despised Moses' law. He that rejected it, "threw it aside," and denied its divine authority by presumptuous sinning, died without mercy—without any extenuation or mitigation of punishment, Num. xv. 30. Under two or three witnesses. That is, when convicted by the testimony of two or three respectable witnesses. See Deut. xvii. 6.

29. Of how much sorer punishment? Such offenses were trifling in comparison of this, and in justice the punishment should be proportioned to the offense. Trodden under foot the Son of God. Treated Him with the utmost contempt and blasphemy. The blood of the covenant . . . an unholy thing. The blood of the covenant means here the sacrificial death of Christ, by which the new covenant between God and man was ratified, sealed, and confirmed. And counting this unholy, or "common," intimates that they expected nothing from it in a sacrificial or atoning way. How near to those persons, and how near to their destruction do they come in the present day who reject the atoning Blood and say "that they expect no more benefit from the blood of Christ than they do from that of a cow or a sheep"! Is not this precisely the crime of which the apostle speaks here, and to which he tells us God would show no mercy? Despite unto the Spirit of grace. Hath "insulted" the Spirit of grace. The apostle means the Holy Spirit, whose gifts were bestowed in the first age on believers for the confirmation of the gospel. See chap. vi. 4-6. Wherefore if one apostatized in the first age, after having been witness to these miraculous gifts, much more after having possessed them himself, he must, like the scribes and Pharisees, have ascribed them to evil spirits, than which a greater indignity could not be done to the Spirit of God.

30. Vengeance belongeth unto me. This is the saying of God, Deut. xxxii. 35, in reference to the idolatrous Gentiles, who were the enemies of His people; and is here with propriety applied to the above apostates, who, being enemies to God's ordinances and Christ's ministry and merits, must also be enemies to Christ's people. The Lord shall judge his people. That is, He shall execute judgment for them; for this is evidently the sense in which the word is used in the place from which the apostle quotes, Deut. xxxii. 36: "For the Lord shall judge his people, and repent himself for his servants, when he seeth that their power is gone." So God will avenge and vindicate the cause of Christianity by destroying its enemies, as He did in the case of the Jewish people, whom He destroyed from being a nation.

31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. To fall into the hands of God is to fall under His displeasure. How dreadful to have the displeasure of an eternal, almighty Being to rest on the soul forever!

MATTHEW HENRY

5. He presses them to perseverance by putting them in mind of their former sufferings for Christ. When they had suffered: In former days, after they were illuminated. A natural state is a dark state, and those who continue in that state meet with no disturbance from Satan and the world; but a state of grace is a state of light, and therefore the powers of darkness will violently oppose it. What they suffered: they endured a great fight of afflictions. They were afflicted in themselves. In their own persons. In their names and reputations (v. 33), by many reproaches. Christians ought to value their reputation, because the reputation of religion is concerned: this makes reproach a great affliction. They were afflicted in the afflictions of their brethren. The Christian spirit is a sympathizing spirit, not a selfish spirit, but a compassionate spirit. Christians are one body, the children of that God who is afflicted in all the afflictions of his people. If one member of the body suffers, all the rest suffer with it.

The apostle takes particular notice how they had sympathized with him (v. 34). How they had suffered. They took their sufferings patiently, and not only so, but joyfully received it from God, that they should be thought worthy to suffer reproach for the name of Christ. What it was that enabled them thus to bear up under their sufferings. They knew in themselves that they had in heaven a better and a more enduring substance. The happiness of the saints in heaven is substance. All things here are but shadows. It is a better substance than any thing they can have or lose here. It will out-live time and run parallel with eternity. In heaven they shall have everything better. Christians should know this in themselves. The assured knowledge of this will help them to endure any fight of afflictions they may be encountered with in this world.

6. He presses them to persevere (v. 35). He exhorts them not to cast away their confidence, but to hold fast that profession for which they had suffered so much. The reward of their holy confidence would be very great. It carries a present reward in it, in holy peace and joy, and it shall have a great recompence of reward hereafter.

He shows them how necessary a grace the grace of patience is in our present state (v. 36). They must first do the will of God before they receive the promise; and, after they have done the will of God, they have need of patience to wait for the time when the promise shall be fulfilled. We must be God's waiting servants when we can be no longer his working servants.

To help their patience, he assures them of the near approach of Christ's coming (v. 37). There is an appointed time and beyond that time he will not tarry.

7. He presses them to perseverance, by telling them that this will be their happiness, whereas apostasy is the reproach, and will be the ruin, of all who are guilty of it (v. 38, 39). It is the honourable character of just men that in times of the greatest affliction they can live by faith. Faith puts life and vigour into them. They can trust God, and live upon him. As their faith maintains their spiritual life now, it shall be crowned with eternal life hereafter.

punish for ever (Matt. 10:28). 32. As previously he has warned them by the awful end of apostates, so here he stirs them up by the remembrance of their own former faith, patience, and self-sacrificing love. So Revelation 2:3, 4. call to remembrance—habitually: so the present tense means. illuminated—"enlightened": come to "the knowledge of the truth" (vs. 26) in connection with baptism (Note, ch. 6:4). In spiritual baptism, Christ, who is "the Light," is put on. "On the one hand, we are not to sever the sign and the grace signified where the sacrifice truly answers its designs; on the other, the glass is not to be mistaken for the liquor, nor the sheath for the sword" [BENGEL]. fight of—i.e., consisting of afflictions. 33. The persecutions here referred to seem to have been endured by the Hebrew Christians at their first conversion, not only in Palestine, but also in Rome and elsewhere, the Jews in every city inciting the populace and the Roman authorities against Christians. gazing-stock—as in a theater (so the Greek): often used as the place of punishment in the presence of the assembled multitudes. Acts 19:29; I Corinthians 4:9, "Made a theatrical spectacle to the world." ye became—of your own accord: attesting your Christian sympathy with your suffering brethren. companions of—sharers in affliction with. 34. ye had compassion on me in my bonds—The oldest MSS. and versions omit "me," and read, "Ye both sympathized with those in bonds (answering to the last clause of vs. 33; cf. ch. 13:3, 23; 6:10), and accepted (so the Greek is translated in ch. 11:35) with joy (Jas. 1:2; joy in tribulations, as exercising faith and other graces, Rom. 5:3; and the pledge of the coming glory, Matt. 5:12) the plundering of your (own) goods" (answering to the first clause of vs. 33). in yourselves—The oldest MSS. omit "in": translate, "knowing that ye have for (or to) yourselves." better—a heavenly (ch. 11:16). enduring—not liable to spoiling. substance—possession: peculiarly our own, if we will not cast away our birthright. 35-37. Consequent exhortation to confidence and endurance, as Christ is soon coming. Cast not away—implying that they now have "confidence," and that it will not withdraw of itself, unless they "cast it away" wilfully (cf. ch. 3:14). which—Greek, "the which": inasmuch as being such as. hath—present tense: it is as certain as if you had it in your hand (vs. 37). It hath in reversion. recompense of reward—of grace not of debt: a reward of a kind which no mercenary selfseeker would seek: holiness will be its own reward; self-devoting unselfishness for Christ's sake will be its own rich recompense (Note, ch. 2:2; 11:26). 36. patience—Greek, "waiting endurance," or "enduring perseverance": the kindred Greek verb in the LXX, Habakkuk 2:3, is translated, "wait for it" (cf. Jas. 5:7). after ye have done the will of God—"that whereas ye have done the will of God" hitherto (vss. 32-35), ye may now show also patient, persevering endurance, and so "receive the promise," i.e., the promised reward: eternal life and bliss commensurate with our work of faith and love (ch. 6:10-12). We must not only do, but also suffer (I Pet. 4:19). God first uses the active talents of His servants; then polishes the other side of the stone, making the passive graces shine, patience, meekness, etc. It may be also translated, "That ye may do the will of God, and receive . . ." [ALFORD]: "patience" itself is a further and a persevering doing of "God's will"; otherwise it would be profitless and no real grace (Matt. 7:21). We should look, not merely for individual bliss now and at death, but for the great and general consummation of bliss of all saints, both in body and soul. 37, 38. Encouragement to patient endurance by consideration of the shortness of the time till Christ shall come, and God's rejection of him that draws back, taken from Habakkuk 2:3, 4. a little while—(John 16:16). he that shall come—lit., "the Comer." In Habakkuk, it is the vision that is said to be about to come. Christ, being the grand and ultimate subject of all prophetical vision, is here made by Paul, under inspiration, the subject of the Spirit's prophecy by Habakkuk, in its final and exhaustive fulfilment. 38. just—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "my just man." God is the speaker: "He who is just in My sight." BENGEL translates, "The just shall live by my faith": answering to the Hebrew, Habakkuk 2:4; lit., "the just shall live by the faith of Him," viz., Christ, the final subject of "the vision," who "will not lie," i.e., disappoint. Here not merely the first beginning, as in Galatians 3:11, but the continuance, of the spiritual life of the justified man is referred to, as opposed to declension and apostasy. As the justified man receives his first spiritual life by faith, so it is by faith that he shall

32. But call to remembrance. It appears from this, and indeed from some parts of the gospel history, that the first believers in Judea were greatly persecuted. Our Lord's crucifixion, Stephen's martyrdom, the persecution that arose after the death of Stephen, Acts viii. 1, Herod's persecution, Acts xii. 1, in which James was killed, and the various persecutions of Paul, sufficiently show that this disposition was predominant among that bad people. A great fight of afflictions. "A great combat or contention of sufferings." Here we have an allusion to the combats at the Grecian games or to exhibitions of gladiators at the public spectacles.

33. Ye were made a gazingstock. You were exhibited as wild beasts and other shows at the theaters. Companions of them that were so used. It appears, from I Thess. ii. 14-15, that the churches of God in Judea were greatly persecuted, and that they behaved with courage and constancy in their persecutions. When any victim of persecuting rage was marked out, the rest were prompt to take his part and acknowledge themselves believers in the same doctrine for which he suffered.

34. Ye had compassion of me in my bonds. "You suffered with me; you sympathized with me," when bound for the testimony of Jesus. This probably refers to the sympathy they showed towards him and the help they afforded him during his long imprisonment in Caesarea and Jerusalem.

Took joyfully the spoiling of your goods. They were deprived of their inheritances, turned out of their houses, and plundered of their goods; "they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented." To suffer such persecution patiently was great; to endure it without a murmur was greater; to rejoice in it was greatest of all. But how could they do all this? The next clause informs us. Knowing in yourselves. They had the fullest evidence that they were the children of God, the Spirit itself bearing this witness to their spirits; "and if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." They knew that heaven was their portion, and that to it they had a sure right and indefeasible title by Christ Jesus. This accounts, and this alone can account, for their taking joyfully the spoiling of their goods.

35. Cast not away therefore your confidence. "Your liberty of access" to God; your title and right to approach His throne; your birthright as His sons and daughters; and the clear evidence you have of His favor, which, if you be not steady and faithful, you must lose. "Do not throw it away." There is a reference here to cowardly soldiers who throw away their shields and run away from the battle.
Great recompence of reward. No less than God's continual approbation, the peace that passeth all understanding ruling the heart here, and the glories of heaven as an eternal portion. Conscientiously keep the shield, and all these shall be yours. This will be your reward.

36. Ye have need of patience. Having so great a fight of sufferings to pass through, and they of so long continuance. God furnishes the grace; you must exercise it. Patience and "perseverance" are nearly the same. Have done the will of God. By keeping the faith and patiently suffering for it.

37. For yet a little while. "For yet a very little time." In a very short space of time the Messiah will come, and execute judgment upon your rebellious country. This is determined, because they have filled up the measure of their iniquity, and their destruction slumbereth not. The apostle seems to refer to Hab. ii. 3-4, and accommodates the words to his own purpose.

38. Now the just shall live by faith. "But the just by faith," i.e., he who is justified by faith, shall live—shall be preserved when this overflowing scourge shall come. But if any man draw back. "But if he draw back"; he, the man who is justified by faith; for it is of him, and none other, that the text speaks. The insertion of the words any man, if done to serve the purpose of a particular creed, is a wicked perversion of the words of God. They were evidently intended to turn away the relative

Apostasy is the mark of those in whom God takes no pleasure; and it is a cause of God's severe displeasure and anger.

The apostle concludes with declaring his good hope concerning himself and these Hebrews (v. 39). Professors may go a great way, and after all draw back; and this drawing back from God is drawing on to perdition: the further we depart from God the nearer we approach to ruin. Those who have been kept faithful in great trials for the time past have reason to hope that the same grace will be sufficient to help them still to live by faith. If we live by faith, and die in faith, our souls will be safe for ever.

I. A definition of the grace of faith in two parts. It is the substance of things hoped for. Faith and hope go together; and the same things that are the object of our hope are the object of our faith. It is a firm persuasion and expectation that God will perform all that he has promised to us in Christ. Believers in the exercise of faith are filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

It is the evidence of things not seen. Faith demonstrates to the eye of the mind the reality of those things that cannot be discerned by the eye of the body. It is designed to serve the believer instead of sight, and to be to the soul all that the senses are to the body.

continue to live (Luke 4:4). The faith meant here is that fully developed living trust in the unseen (ch. 11:1) Saviour, which can keep men steadfast amidst persecutions and temptations (vss. 34-36). but–Greek, "and." if any man draw back–So the Greek admits: though it might also be translated, as ALFORD approves, "if he (the just man) draw back." Even so, it would not disprove the final perseverance of saints. For "the just man" in this latter clause would mean one seemingly, and in part really, though not savingly, "just" or justified: as in Ezekiel 18:24, 26. In the Hebrew, this latter half of the verse stands first, and is, "Behold, his soul which is lifted up, is not upright in him." Habakkuk states the cause of drawing back: a soul lifted up, and in self-inflated unbelief setting itself up against God. Paul, by the Spirit, states the effect, it draws back. Also, what in Habakkuk is, "His soul is not upright in him," is in Paul, "My soul shall have no pleasure in him." Habakkuk states the cause, Paul the effect: He who is not right in his own soul, does not stand right with God; God has no pleasure in him. BENGEL translates Habakkuk, "His soul is not upright in respect to him," viz., Christ, the subject of "the vision," i.e., Christ has no pleasure in him (cf. ch. 12:25). Every flower in spring is not a fruit in autumn. 39. A Pauline elegant turning-off from denunciatory warnings to charitable hopes of his readers (Rom. 8:12). saving of the soul–lit., "acquisition (or obtaining) of the soul." The kindred Greek verb is applied to Christ's acquiring the Church as the purchase of His blood (Acts 20:28). If we acquire or obtain our soul's salvation, it is through Him who has obtained it for us by His blood-shedding. "The unbelieving man loses his soul: for not being God's, neither is he his own [cf. Matt. 16:26 with Luke 9:25]: faith saves the soul by linking it to God" [DELITZSCH in ALFORD].

VSS. 1-40. DEFINITION OF THE FAITH JUST SPOKEN OF (ch. 10:39): EXAMPLES FROM THE OLD COVENANT FOR OUR PERSEVERANCE IN FAITH. 1. Description of the great things which faith (in its widest sense: not here restricted to faith in the Gospel sense) does for us. Not a full definition of faith in its whole nature, but a description of its great characteristics in relation to the subject of Paul's exhortation here, viz., to perseverance. substance . . . –It substantiates promises of God which we hope for, as future in fulfilment, making them present realities to us. However, the Greek is translated in ch. 3:14, "confidence"; and it also here may mean "sure confidence." By faith alone we are sure of eternal things that they ARE: but by hope we are confident that WE SHALL HAVE them. All hope presupposes faith (Rom. 8:25). evidence–"demonstration": convincing proof to the believer: the soul thereby seeing what the eye cannot see. things not seen–the whole invisible and spiritual world: not things future and things pleasant, as the "things hoped for," but also the past and present, and those the reverse of pleasant. "Eternal life is promised to us, but it is when we are dead: we are told of a blessed resurrection, but meanwhile we moulder in the dust; we are declared to be justified, and sin dwells in us; we hear that we are blessed, meantime we are overwhelmed in endless miseries: we are promised abundance of all goods, but we still endure hunger and thirst; God declares He will immediately come to our help, but He seems deaf to our cries. What should we do if we had not faith and hope to lean on, and if our mind did not emerge amidst the darkness above the world by the shining of the Word and Spirit of God?" [CALVIN]. Faith is an assent unto truths credible upon the testimony of God [not on the reasonableness of the thing revealed, though by this we may judge as to whether it be what it professes, a genuine revelation], delivered unto us in the writings of the apostles and prophets. Thus Christ's ascension is the cause, and His absence the crown, of our faith: because He ascended, we the more believe, and because we believe in Him who hath ascended, our faith is the more accepted [BISHOP PEARSON]. Faith believes what it sees not; from the antecedent, in order to save the doctrine of final and unconditional perseverance, which doctrine this text destroys. My soul shall have no pleasure in him. My very heart shall be opposed to him who makes shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. The word hypostellein signifies not only to draw back, but to "slink away and hide through fear." In this sense it is used by the very best Greek writers, as well as by Josephus and Philo.

39. But we are not of them who draw back. "We are not the cowards, but the courageous." I have no doubt of this being the meaning of the apostle, and the form of speech requires such a translation; it occurs more than once in the New Testament. We are not cowards who slink away, and notwithstanding meet destruction; but we are faithful, and have our souls saved alive.. The words signify the "preservation of the life." He intimates that, notwithstanding the persecution was hot, yet they should escape with their lives. It is very remarkable, and I have more than once called the reader's attention to it, that not one Christian life was lost in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem. Every Jew perished, or was taken captive; all those who had apostatized and slunk away from Christianity perished with them; all the genuine Christians escaped with their lives. This very important information, which casts light on many passages in the New Testament, and manifests the grace and providence of God in a very conspicuous way, is given by Eusebius: "When the whole congregation of the Church in Jerusalem, according to an oracle given by revelation to the approved persons among them before the war, were commanded to depart from the city, and inhabit a certain city which they call Pella, beyond Jordan, to which, when all those who believed in Christ had removed from Jerusalem, and when the saints had totally abandoned the royal city which is the metropolis of the Jews; then the Divine vengeance seized them who had dealt so wickedly with Christ and his apostles, and utterly destroyed that wicked and abominable generation."

1. Faith is the substance of things hoped for. "Faith is the subsistence of things hoped for," "the demonstration of things not seen." The word hypostasis, which we translate substance signifies "subsistence," that which becomes a foundation for another thing to stand on. And elenchos (evidence) signifies such a "conviction" as it produced in the mind by the "demonstration" of a problem, after which demonstration no doubt can remain, because we see from it that the thing is, that it cannot but be, and that it cannot be otherwise than as it is and is proved to be. Such is the faith by which the soul is justified; or rather, such are the effects of justifying faith. Elenchos is defined by logicians, "A demonstration of the certainty of a thing by sure arguments and indubitable reasons." Aristotle uses it for a mathematical demonstration, and properly defines it thus: "Elenchos, or Demonstration, is that which cannot be otherwise, but is so as we assert."

Things hoped for are the peace and approbation of God, and those blessings by which the soul is prepared for the kingdom of Heaven. A penitent hopes for the pardon of his sins and the favor of his God; faith in Christ puts him in possession of this pardon, and thus the thing that was hoped for is enjoyed by faith. In an extended sense the things hoped for are the resurrection of the body, the new heavens and the new earth, the introduction of believers into the heavenly country, and the possession of eternal glory. The things unseen, as distinguished from the things hoped for, are, in an extended sense, the creation of the world from nothing, the destruction of the world by the deluge, the miraculous conception of Christ, His resurrection from the dead, His ascension to glory, His mediation at the right hand of God, His government of the universe, etc., all which we as firmly believe on the testimony of God's Word as if we had seen them. But this faith has particular respect to the being, good-

II. An account of the honour it reflects upon all those who have lived in the exercise of it (v. 2). True faith is an old grace, and has the best plea to antiquity: it is not a new invention, a modern fancy. The eldest and best men that ever were in the world were believers. They were an honour to their faith, and their faith was an honour to them. It put them upon doing the things that were of good report.

III. We have here one of the first articles of faith, the creation of the worlds by the word of God, not out of pre-existent matter, but out of nothing, v. 3. The grace of faith has a retrospect as well as prospect; it looks not only forward to the end of the world, but back to the beginning of the world. Now what does faith give us to understand concerning the worlds. 1. That these worlds were not eternal, nor did they produce themselves, but they were made by another. 2. That the maker of the worlds is God. 3. That God made the world by his word and by his active will. 4. That the world was thus framed out of nothing. These things we understand by faith.

Verses 4–31

The apostle now proceeds to set before us some illustrious examples of it in the Old Testament times, and these may be divided into two classes: 1. Those whose names are mentioned, and the particular actings of whose faith are specified. 2. Those whose names are barely mentioned, and an account given in general of the exploits of their faith.

I. The leading instance and example of faith here recorded is that of Abel. It begins with Abel, one who lived by faith, and died for it, and therefore a fit pattern for the Hebrews to imitate.

1. He offered up a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain. After the fall, God opened a new way for the children of men to return to him in religious worship. After the fall, God must be worshipped by sacrifices. Cain was the elder brother, but Abel has the preference. It is not seniority of birth, but grace, that makes men truly honourable. Abel brought a sacrifice of atonement, brought of the firstlings of the flock. Cain brought only a sacrifice of acknowledgment, a mere thank-offering, the fruit of the ground.

2. What Abel gained by his faith. In this place we are told that he obtained by his faith some special advantages: Witness that he was righteous. God gave witness to the righteousness of his person, by testifying his acceptance of his gifts. By it he, being dead, yet speaketh. He had the honour to leave behind him an instructive speaking case; and what does it speak to us? That fallen man has leave to go in to worship God, with hope of acceptance. That God will not suffer the injuries done to his people to remain unpunished, nor their sufferings unrewarded.

for if thou seest there is no faith; the Lord has gone away so as not to be seen: He is hidden that He may be believed; the yearning desire by faith after Him who is unseen is the preparation of a heavenly mansion for us; when He shall be seen it shall be given to us as the reward of faith [AUGUSTINE]. As Revelation deals with spiritual and invisible things exclusively, faith is the faculty needed by us, since it is the evidence of things not seen. By faith we venture our eternal interests on the bare word of God, and this is altogether reasonable. 2. For—So high a description of faith is not undeserved; for . . . [ALFORD]. by it—Greek, "in it": in respect to . . . in the matter of," it, "or, as Greek more emphatically, "this." the elders—as though still living and giving their powerful testimony to the reasonableness and excellence of faith (ch. 12:1). "The elders," as "the fathers," is a title of honor given on the ground of their bright faith and practice. obtained a good report—Greek, "were testified of," viz., favorably (cf. ch. 7:8). It is a phrase of Luke, Paul's companion. Not only men, but God, gave testimony to their faith (vss. 4, 5, 39). Thus they being testified of themselves have become "witnesses" to all others (ch. 12:1). 3. we understand—We perceive with our spiritual intelligence the fact of the world's creation by God, though we see neither Him nor the act of creation as described in Genesis 1. The natural world could not, without revelation, teach us this truth, though it confirms the truth when apprehended by faith (Rom. 1:20). Adam is passed over in silence here as to his faith, perhaps as being the first who fell and brought sin on us all; though it does not follow that he did not repent and believe the promise. worlds—lit., "ages"; all that exists in time and space, visible and invisible, present and eternal. framed—"fitly formed and consolidated"; including the creation of the single parts and the harmonious organization of the whole, and the continual providence which maintains the whole throughout all ages. by the word of God—not here, the personal word (Greek, logos. John 1:1) but the spoken word (Greek, rhema); though by the instrumentality of the personal word (ch. 1:2). not made . . .—Translate as Greek, "so that not out of things which appear hath that which is seen been made"; not as in the case of all things which we see reproduced from previously existing and visible materials, as, for instance, the plant from the seed, the animal from the parent, etc., has the visible world sprung into being from apparent materials. So also it is implied in the first clause of the verse that the invisible spiritual worlds were framed not from previously existing materials. We were not spectators of creation; it is by faith we perceive it. 4. more excellent sacrifice—because offered in faith. Now faith must have some revelation of God on which it fastens. The revelation in this case was doubtless God's command to sacrifice animals ("the firstlings of the flock") in token of the forfeiture of men's life by sin, and as a type of the promised bruiser of the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15), the one coming sacrifice: this command is implied in God's having made coats of skin for Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:21): for these skins must have been taken from animals slain in sacrifice; inasmuch as it was not for food they were slain, animal food not being permitted till after the flood; nor for mere clothing, as, were it so, clothes might have been made of the fleeces without the needless cruelty of killing the animal; but a coat of skin put on Adam from a sacrificed animal typified the covering or atonement (the Hebrew for atone means to cover) resulting from Christ's sacrifice. The sacrifice seems to have been a holocaust, and the sign of the divine acceptance of it was probably the consumption of it by fire from heaven (Gen. 15:17). Hence, "to accept" a burnt sacrifice is in Hebrew "to turn it to ashes" (Margin, Ps. 20:3). A flame seems to have issued from the Shekinah, or flaming cherubim, east of Eden ("the presence of the Lord," Gen. 4:16), where the first sacrifices were offered. Cain, in unbelieving self-righteousness, presented merely a thank offering, not like Abel feeling his need of the propitiatory sacrifice appointed on account of sin. God "had respect (first) unto Abel, and (then) to his offering" (Gen. 4:4). Faith causes the believer's person to be accepted, and then his offering. Even an animal sacrifice, though of God's appointment, would not have been accepted, had it not been offered in faith. he obtained witness—God by fire attesting His acceptance of him as "righteous by faith." his gifts—the common term for sacrifices, implying that they must be freely given. by it—by faith exhibited in his animal sacrifice. dead, yet speaketh—His blood crying from the ground to God, shows how precious, ness, providence, grace, and mercy of God, as the subsequent verses sufficiently show.

2. For by it the elders obtained a good report. By the elders are meant "ancestors, forefathers," such as the patriarchs and prophets, several of whom he afterwards particularly names and produces some fact from the history of their lives. It is very remarkable that among the whole there is not one word concerning poor Adam and his wife, though both Abraham and Sarah are mentioned. There was no good report concerning them; not a word of their repentance, faith, or holiness. The word which we translate obtained a good report literally signifies "were witnessed of"; and thus leads us naturally to God, who by His Word, as the succeeding parts of the chapter show, bore testimony to the faith and holiness of His servants. The apostle does not mention one of whom an account is not given in the Old Testament. This therefore is God's witness or testimony concerning them.

3. Through faith we understand. By worlds we are to understand the material fabric of the universe: and as the word is used in the plural number, it may comprehend, not only the earth and visible heavens, but the whole planetary system; the different worlds which, in our system at least, revolve round the sun. The apostle states that these things were not made out of a preexistent matter.

4. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice. "More sacrifice"; as if he had said: Abel, by faith, made more than one offering; and hence it is said, God testified of his gifts. The plain state of the case seems to have been this: Cain and Abel both brought offerings to the altar of God, probably the altar erected for the family worship. As Cain was a husbandman, he brought a eucharistic offering, of the fruits of the ground, by which he acknowledged the being and providence of God. Abel, being a shepherd or a feeder of cattle, brought, not only the eucharistic offering, but also of the produce of his flock as a sin offering to God, by which he acknowledged his own sinfulnsss, God's justice and mercy, as well as His being and providence. Cain, not at all apprehensive of the demerit of sin or God's holiness, contented himself with the thank offering. This God could not, consistently with His holiness and justice, receive with complacency; the other, as referring to Him who was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, God could receive, and did particularly testify His approbation. Now by this faith, thus exercised, in reference to an atonement, he, Abel, though "dead, yet speaketh"; i.e., preacheth to mankind the necessity of an atonement, and that God will accept no sacrifice unless connected with this.

II. The faith of Enoch, v. 5.

1. What is here reported of him. (1) He walked with God. (2) He was translated, that he should not see death, nor any part of him be found upon earth. (3) Before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. He had the evidence of it in his own conscience, and the Spirit of God witnessed with his spirit.

2. What is here said of his faith, v. 6. We cannot please God without such a faith as helps us to walk with God, an active faith. God is again to be found of us through Christ. God has prescribed means and ways wherein he may be found.

Those who would find God must seek him diligently; and when once they have found him, they will never repent the pains they have spent in seeking after him.

III. The faith of Noah, v. 7.

1. The ground of Noah's faith—a warning he had received from God of things as yet not seen. God usually warns sinners before he strikes, and, where his warnings are slighted, the blow will fall the heavier.

2. The actings of Noah's faith, and the influence it had both upon his mind and practice. He was moved with fear. Faith first influences our affections, then our actions; and faith works upon those affections that are suitable to the matter revealed. If it be some good thing, faith stirs up love and desire; if some evil thing, faith stirs up fear. His faith influenced his practice. His fear moved him to prepare an ark. His faith set him to work in earnest.

3. The rewards of Noah's faith. (1) Hereby himself and his house were saved, when a whole world of sinners were perishing about them. (2) Hereby he judged and condemned the world; his holy fear condemned their vain confidence; his faith condemned their unbelief; his obedience condemned their contempt. Good examples will either convert sinners or condemn them. This is the best way the people of God can take to condemn the wicked; not by harsh and censorious language, but by a holy exemplary conversation. (3) Hereby he became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith. He was possessed of a true justifying righteousness; he was heir to it.

IV. The faith of Abraham, the friend of God, and father of the faithful, in whom the Hebrews boasted. The apostle enlarges more upon the heroic achievements of Abraham's faith than of that of any other of the patriarchs; and in the midst of his account of the faith of Abraham he inserts the story of Sarah's faith.

1. The ground of Abraham's faith, the call and promise of God, v. 8. (1) This call was the call of God. This was an effectual call, by which he was converted from the idolatry of his father's house, Gen. xii. 1. The grace of God is absolutely free, in taking some of the worst of men. God must come to us before we come to him. This calls us not only to leave sin, but sinful company. (2) The promise of God. God promised Abraham that the place he was called to he should afterwards receive for an inheritance. God calls his people to an inheritance. This inheritance is not immediately possessed by them, but the promise is sure.

2. The exercise of Abraham's faith. He went out, not knowing whither he went. He put himself into the hand of God, to send him whithersoever he pleased. All that are effectually called resign up their own will and wisdom to the will and wisdom of God. Though they know not always their way, yet they know their guide. He sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country. This was an exercise of his faith. Abraham lived in Canaan as a sojourner only. He dwelt in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs because of his "faith," he was still in God's sight, even when dead. So he becomes a witness to us of the blessed effects of faith. 5. Faith was the ground of his pleasing God; and his pleasing God was the ground of his translation. translated—(Gen. 5:22, 24). Implying a sudden removal (the same Greek as in Galatians 1:6) from mortality without death to immortality: such a CHANGE as shall pass over the living at Christ's coming (I Cor. 15:51, 52). had this testimony—viz., of Scripture; the Greek perfect implies that this testimony continues still: "he has been testified of." pleased God—The Scripture testimony virtually expresses that he pleased God, viz., "Enoch walked with God." LXX translates the Hebrew for "walked with God," Genesis 6:9, pleased God. 6. without—Greek, "apart from faith": if one be destitute of faith (cf. Rom. 14:23). to please—Translate, as ALFORD does, the Greek aorist, "It is impossible to please God at all" (Rom. 8:8). Natural amiabilities and "works done before the grace of Christ are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ; yea, rather, for that they are not done as God hath willed them to be done, we doubt not but they have the nature of sin" [Article XIII, Book of Common Prayer]. Works not rooted in God are splendid sins [AUGUSTINE]. he that cometh to God—as a worshipper (ch. 7:19). must believe—once for all: Greek aorist. that God is—IS: is the true self-existing Jehovah (as contrasted with all so-called gods, not gods, Gal. 4:8), the source of all being, though he sees Him not (vs. 1) as being "invisible" (vs. 27). So Enoch; this passage implies that he had not been favored with visible appearances of God, yet he believed in God's being, and in God's moral government, as the Rewarder of His diligent worshippers, in opposition to antediluvian skepticism. Also Moses was not so favored before he left Egypt the first time (vs. 27); still he believed. and . . . is—a different Greek verb from the former "is." Translate, "is eventually"; proves to be; lit., "becomes." rewarder—renderer of reward [ALFORD]. So God proved to be to Enoch. The reward is God Himself diligently "sought" and "walked with" in partial communion here, and to be fully enjoyed hereafter. Cf. Genesis 15:1, "I am thy exceeding great reward." of them—and them only. diligently seek—Greek, "seek out" God. Cf. "seek early," Proverbs 8:17. Not only "ask" and "seek," but "knock," Matthew 7:7; cf. ch. 11:12; Luke 13:24, "Strive" as in an agony of contest. 7. warned of God—The same Greek, ch. 8:5, "admonished of God." moved with fear—not mere slavish fear, but as in Note, ch. 5:7; Greek, "reverential fear": opposed to the world's sneering disbelief of the revelation, and self-deceiving security. Join "by faith" with "prepared an ark" (I Pet. 3:20). by the which—faith. condemned the world—For since he believed and was saved, so might they have believed and been saved, so that their condemnation by God is by his case shown to be just. righteousness which is by faith—Greek, "according to faith." A Pauline thought. Noah is first called "righteous" in Genesis 6:9. Christ calls Abel so, Matthew 23:35. Cf. as to Noah's righteousness, Ezekiel 14:14, 20; II Peter 2:5, "a preacher of righteousness." Paul here makes faith the principle and ground of his righteousness. heir—the consequence of sonship which flows from faith. 8. From the antediluvian saints he passes to the patriarchs of Israel, to whom "the promises" belonged. called—by God (Gen. 12:1). The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "He that was called Abraham," his name being changed from Abram to Abraham, on the occasion of God's making with him and his seed a covenant sealed by circumcision, many years after his call out of Ur. "By faith, he who was (afterwards) called Abraham (father of nations, Gen. 17:5, in order to become which was the design of God's bringing him out of Ur) obeyed (the command of God: to be understood in this reading), so as to go out. . . ." which he should after receive—He had not fully received even this promise when he went out, for it was not explicitly given him till he had reached Canaan (Gen. 12:1, 6, 7). When the promise of the land was given him the Canaanite was still in the land, and himself a stranger; it is in the new heaven and new earth that he shall receive his personal inheritance promised him; so believers sojourn on earth as strangers, while the ungodly and Satan lord it over the earth; but at Christ's coming that same earth which was the scene of the believer's conflict shall be the inheritance of Christ and His saints. 9. sojourned—as a "stranger and pilgrim." in—Greek, "into," i.e., he went into it and sojourned there. as in a strange country—a country not belonging to him, but to others (so the Greek), Acts 7:5, 6. dwel-

ADAM CLARKE

5. By faith Enoch was translated. It is said, in Gen. v. 24, that Enoch walked with God, and "he was not; for God took him." Here the apostle explains what God's taking him means, by saying that he was translated that he should not see death; from which we learn that he did not die, and that God took him to a state of blessedness without obliging him to pass through death. See his history explained at large in the above place, in Gen. v. 22-24.

6. He that cometh to God. The man who professes that it is his duty to worship God must, if he act rationally, do it on the conviction that there is such a Being, infinite, eternal, unoriginated, and self-existent; the Cause of all other being; on whom all being depends; and by whose energy, bounty, and providence all other beings exist, live, and are supplied with the means of continued existence and life. He must believe also that He rewards them that diligently seek him; that He is not indifferent about His own worship; that He requires adoration and religious service from men; and that He blesses and especially protects and saves those who in simplicity and uprightness of heart seek and serve Him. This requires faith, such a faith as is mentioned above; a faith by which we can please God; and now that we have an abundant revelation, a faith according to that revelation; a faith in God through Christ, the great Sin Offering, without which a man can no more please Him or be accepted of Him than Cain was.

7. By faith Noah. See the whole of this history, Gen. vi. 13. Warned of God. As we know from the history in Genesis that God did "warn" Noah, we see from this the real import of the verb as used in various parts of the New Testament; it signifies "to utter oracles, to give divine warning." Moved with fear. "Influenced by religious fear or reverence towards God." This is mentioned to show that he acted not from a fear of losing his life, but from the fear of God, and hence that fear is here properly attributed to faith. He condemned the world. He credited God; they did not. He walked in the way God had commanded; they did not. He repeatedly admonished them, I Pet. iii. 20; they regarded it not. This aggravated their crimes, while it exalted his faith and righteousness. Became heir of the righteousness. He became entitled to that justification which is by faith, and his temporal deliverance was a pledge of the salvation of his soul.

8. Abraham, when he was called. See on Gen. xii. 1-4. Not knowing whither he went. Therefore his obedience was the fullest proof of his faith in God, and his faith was an implicit faith. He obeyed, and went out from his own country, having no prospect of any good or success but what his implicit faith led him to expect from God, as the "rewarder of them that diligently seek him." In all the preceding cases, and in all that follow, the apostle keeps this maxim fully in view.

9. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise. It is remarkable that Abraham did not acquire any right in Canaan except that of a burying place; nor did he build any house in with him of the same promise. The promise is made to believers and their children, and it is pleasant to see parents and children sojourning together in this world as heirs of the heavenly inheritance.

3. The supports of Abraham's faith (v. 10). It is a city that hath foundations, even the immutable purposes and almighty power of God. The true regard that Abraham had to this heavenly city: he looked for it. He waited for it, and in the mean time he conversed in it by faith. It was a support to him under all the trials of his sojourning state.

V. The faith of Sarah.

1. The difficulties of Sarah's faith. The prevalency of unbelief for a time: she laughed at the promise, as impossible to be made good. The great improbability of the thing promised, that she should be the mother of a child.

2. The actings of her faith. Her unbelief is pardoned and forgotten, but her faith prevailed and is recorded, v. 11.

3. The rewards of her faith. She received strength to conceive seed. He can make the barren soul fruitful, as well as the barren womb. She was delivered of a child, a child of the promise. From them, by this son, sprang a numerous progeny of illustrious persons, as the stars of the sky (v. 12).

VI. The faith of the other patriarchs, v. 13.

1. The trial of their faith. They had not received the promises. One imperfection of the present state of the saints on earth is that their happiness lies more in promise than in actual enjoyment and possession.

2. The actings of their faith. Though they had not received the promises, yet,

(1) They saw them afar off. Faith has a clear and a strong eye, and can see promised mercies at a great distance.

(2) They were persuaded of them, that they were true and should be fulfilled.

(3) They embraced them. Faith has a long arm, and can lay hold of blessings at a great distance.

(4) They confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on earth. They are strangers as saints, whose home is heaven; they are pilgrims as they are travelling towards their home.

(5) Hereby they declared plainly that they sought another country (v. 14), heaven.

(6) They gave full proof of their sincerity. They were not mindful of that country whence they came, v. 15. Those that are once savingly called out of a sinful state have no mind to return into it again; they now know better things. They did not take the opportunity that offered itself for their return. But they steadfastly adhered to God. We must show the truth of our faith and profession by a steady adherence to him. Their sincerity appeared not only in not returning to their former country, but in desiring a better country, that is, a heavenly. All true believers desire this better country. The stronger faith is the more fervent those desires will be.

(7) They died in the faith of those promises, v. 13. That faith held out to the last.

ling in tabernacles—tents: as strangers and sojourners do: moving from place to place, as having no fixed possession of their own. In contrast to the abiding "city" (vs. 10). with—Their kind of dwelling being the same is a proof that their faith was the same. They all alike were content to wait for their good things hereafter (Luke 16:25). Jacob was fifteen years old at the death of Abraham. heirs with him of the same promise—Isaac did not inherit it from Abraham, nor Jacob from Isaac, but they all inherited it from God directly as "fellow heirs." 10. looked for—Greek, "he was expecting"; waiting for with eager expectation (Rom. 8:19). a city—Greek, "the city," already alluded to. Worldly Enoch, son of the murderer Cain, was the first to build his city here: the godly patriarchs waited for their city hereafter (vs. 16; ch. 12:22; 13:14). foundations—Greek, "the foundations" which the tents had not, nor even men's present cities have. whose builder and maker—Greek, "designer [Eph. 1:4, 11] and master-builder," or executor of the design. The city is worthy of its Framer and Builder (cf. vs. 16; ch. 8:2). Cf. "found," Note, ch. 12. 11. also Sara herself—though being the weaker vessel, and though at first she doubted. was delivered of a child—omitted in the oldest MSS.: then translate, "and that when she was past age" (Rom. 4:19). she judged him faithful who had promised—after she had ceased to doubt, being instructed by the angel that it was no jest, but a matter in serious earnest. 12. as good as dead—lit., "deadened"; no longer having, as in youth, energetic vital powers. stars . . . sand—(Gen. 22:17). 13-16. Summary of the characteristic excellencies of the patriarchs' faith. died in faith—died as believers, waiting for, not actually seeing as yet their good things promised to them. They were true to this principle of faith even unto, and especially in, their dying hour (cf. vs. 20). These all—beginning with "Abraham" (vs. 8), to whom the promises were made (Gal. 3:16), and who is alluded to in the end of vs. 13 and in vs. 15 [BENGEL and ALFORD]. But the "ALL" can hardly but include Abel, Enoch, and Noah. Now as these did not receive the promise of entering literal Canaan, some other promise made in the first ages, and often repeated, must be that meant, viz., the promise of a coming Redeemer made to Adam, viz., "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Thus the promises cannot have been merely temporal, for Abel and Enoch mentioned here received no temporal promise [ARCHBISHOP MAGEE]. This promise of eternal redemption is the inner essence of the promises made to Abraham (Gal. 3:16). not having received—It was this that constituted their "faith." If they had "received" THE THING PROMISED (so "the promises" here mean: the plural is used because of the frequent renewal of the promise to the patriarchs: verse 17 says he did receive the promises, but not the thing promised), it would have been sight, not faith. seen them afar off—(John 8:56). Christ, as the Word, was preached to the Old Testament believers, and so became the seed of life to their souls, as He is to ours. and were persuaded of them—The oldest MSS. omit this clause. embraced them—as though they were not "afar off," but within reach, so as to draw them to themselves and clasp them in their embrace.

confessed . . . were strangers—so Abraham to the children of Heth (Gen. 23:4); and Jacob to Pharaoh (Gen. 47:9; Ps. 119:19). Worldly men hold fast the world; believers sit loose to it. Citizens of the world do not confess themselves "strangers on the earth." pilgrims—Greek, "temporary (lit., by the way) sojourners." on the earth—contrasted with "an heavenly" (vs. 16): "our citizenship is in heaven" (Greek: ch. 10:34; Ps. 119:54; Phil. 3:20). "Whosoever professes that he has a Father in heaven, confesses himself a stranger on earth; hence there is in the heart an ardent longing, like that of a child living among strangers, in want and grief, far from his fatherland" [LUTHER]. "Like ships in seas while in, above the world." 14. For—proof that "faith" (vs. 13) was their actuating principle. declare plainly—make it plainly evident. seek—Greek, "seek after"; implying the direction towards which their desires ever tend. a country—rather as Greek, "a fatherland." In confessing themselves strangers here, they evidently imply that they regard not this as their home or fatherland, but seek after another and a better. 15. As Abraham, had he desired to leave his pilgrim life in Canaan, and resume his former fixed habitation in Ur, among the carnal and worldly, had in his long life ample opportunities to have done so; and so spiritually, as to all believers who came out from the world to become God's people, they might, if they had been

it. His faith showed him that it was only a type and pledge of a better country, and he kept that better country continually in view. He, with Isaac and Jacob, who were heirs . . . of the same promise, were contented to dwell in tents, without any fixed habitation.

10. For he looked for a city which hath foundations. He knew that earth could afford no permanent residence for an immortal mind, and he looked for that heavenly building of which God is the Architect and Owner. Whose builder and maker is God. The word technites signifies an "architect," one who plans, calculates, and constructs a building. The word demiourgos signifies the "governor of a people," one who forms them by institutions and laws, the framer of a political constitution. God is here represented the Maker or Father of all the heavenly inhabitants, and the Planner of their citizenship in that heavenly country.

11. Through faith also Sara. Her history, as far as the event here is concerned, may be seen in Gen. xvii. 19 and xxi. 2. Sarah at first treated the divine message with ridicule, judging it to be absolutely impossible, not knowing then that it was from God; and this her age and circumstances justified, for, humanly speaking, such an event was impossible. But when she knew that it was God who said this, it does not appear that she doubted anymore, but implicitly believed that what God had promised He was able to perform.

12. Him as good as dead. According to nature, long past the time of the procreation of children. The birth of Isaac, the circumstances of the father and mother considered, was entirely supernatural; and the people who proceeded from this birth were a supernatural people, and were and are most strikingly singular through every period of their history to the present day.

13. These all died in faith. That is, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Jacob continued to believe, to the end of their lives, that God would fulfill this promise; but they neither saw the numerous seed nor did they get the promised rest in Canaan.

Strangers and pilgrims. Strangers, persons who are out of their own country, who are in a foreign land. Pilgrims, sojourners only for a time, not intending to take up their abode in that place nor to get naturalized in that country. How many use these expressions, professing to be strangers and pilgrims here below, and yet the whole of their conduct, spirit, and attachments show that they are perfectly at home!

14. Declare plainly that they seek a country. A man's country is that in which he has constitutional rights and privileges; no stranger or sojourner has any such rights in the country where he sojourns. These, by declaring that they felt themselves strangers and sojourners, professed their faith in a heavenly country and state, and looked beyond the grave for a place of happiness.

15. If they had been mindful of that country. They considered their right to the promises of God as dependent on their utter renunciation of Chaldea, and it was this that induced Abraham to cause his steward Eliezer to swear that he would not carry his son Isaac to Chaldea; see Gen. xxiv. 5-8. There idolatry reigned; and God had called them to be the patriarchs and progenitors of a people among whom the knowledge of the true God, and the worship required by Him, should be established and preserved.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. The gracious reward of their faith, v. 16. He is called their God. He calls himself so; he gives them leave to call him so. God is not ashamed to be called their God: such is his love to them. Let them take care that they be not a shame and reproach to their God, and so provoke him to be ashamed of them. As the proof of this, God has prepared for them a city, a happiness suitable to the relation into which he has taken them. If God neither could nor would give his people anything better than this world affords, he would be ashamed to be called their God.

VII. Now after the apostle has given this account of the faith of others, with Abraham, he returns to him again, and gives us an instance of the greatest trial and act of faith that stands upon record. This was his offering up Isaac, v. 17.

1. The trial of Abraham's faith. God had before this tempted or tried the faith of Abraham. But this trial was greater than all; he was commanded to offer up his son Isaac. "Take thy son, thy only son by Sarah, Isaac thy laughter, the child of thy joy and delight; take him away to the land of Moriah; do not only leave him there, but offer him for a burnt-offering." Some things that very much added to the greatness of this trial. He was put upon it after he had received the promises (v. 18). In being called to offer up his Isaac, he seemed to be called to cut off his own family, to cancel the promises of God. This Isaac was his only-begotten son by his wife Sarah, the only one he was to have by her, and the only one that was to be the child and heir of the promise. Besides his most tender affection to this his son, all his expectations were bound up in him, and, if he perished, must perish with him. To have this son offered up as a sacrifice, and that by his own hand; it was a trial that would have overset the firmest and the strongest mind.

2. The actings of Abraham's faith in so great a trial: he obeyed. He went as far in it as to the very critical moment, and would have gone through with it if God had not prevented him.

3. The supports of his faith, v. 19. He knew that God was able to raise him from the dead, and he believed that God would do so. God is able to raise the dead, to raise dead bodies, and to raise dead souls.

4. The reward of his faith in this great trial (v. 19). He received his son. He had parted with him to God, and God gave him back again. He received him from the dead, for he gave him up for dead.

VIII. The faith of Isaac, v. 20.

1. The actings of his faith: He blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. Both Jacob and Esau were blessed as Isaac's children. Jacob had the precedency and the principal blessing. If one has his portion in this world, and the other in the better world, it is God who makes the difference; for even the comforts of this life are more and better than any of the children of men deserve.

2. The difficulties Isaac's faith struggled with. He seemed to have forgotten how God had determined the matter at the birth of these his sons, Gen. xxv. 23. When he came to pronounce the blessing, he trembled very exceedingly (Gen. xxvii. 33); and he charged Jacob that he had subtly taken away Esau's blessing. But, notwithstanding all this, Isaac's faith recovered itself, and he ratified the blessing: I have blessed him, yea, and he shall be blessed. Now, the faith of Isaac thus prevailing over his unbelief, it has pleased the God of Isaac to pass by the weakness of his faith, to commend the sincerity of it.

IX. The faith of Jacob (v. 21). There were a great many instances of the faith of Jacob; his life was a life of faith.

1. The actings of his faith.

(1) He blessed both the sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh. He made them both heads of different tribes, as if they had been his own immediate sons. As Isaac did before, so now Jacob prefers the younger, Ephraim; though Joseph had placed them so that the right hand of his father should be laid on Manasseh, the elder.

so minded, have easily gone back. 16. Proving the truth that the old fathers did not, as some assert, "look only for transitory promises" (Article VII, Book of Common Prayer). now—as the case is. is not ashamed—Greek, "is not ashamed of them." Not merely once did God call himself their God, but He is NOW not ashamed to have Himself called so, they being alive and abiding with Him where He is. Not only is He not ashamed, but glories in the name and relation to His people. The "wherefore" does not mean that God's good pleasure is the meritorious, but the gracious, consequence of their obedience (that obedience being the result of His Spirit's work in them in the first instance). He first so "called" Himself, then they so called Him. for—proof of His being "their God," viz., "He hath prepared (in His eternal counsels, Matt. 20:23, 25:34, and by the progressive acts of redemption, John 14:2) for them a city," the city in which He Himself reigns, so that their yearning desires shall not be disappointed (vss. 14,16). a city—on its garniture by God (cf. Rev. 21:10-27). 17. offered up—lit., "hath offered up," as if the work and its praise were yet enduring [ALFORD]. As far as His intention was concerned, he did sacrifice Isaac; and in actual fact "he offered him," as far as the presentation of him on the altar as an offering to God is concerned. tried—Greek, "tempted," as in Genesis 22:1. Put to the proof of his faith. Not that God "tempts" to sin, but God "tempts" in the sense of proving or trying (Jas. 1:13-15). and—and so. he that had received—rather as Greek, "accepted," i.e., welcomed and embraced by faith, not merely "had the promises," as in ch. 7:6. This added to the difficulty in the way of his faith, that it was in Isaac's posterity the promises were to be fulfilled; how then could they be fulfilled if Isaac were sacrificed? offered up—rather as Greek, "was offering up"; he was in the act of offering. his only-begotten son—Cf. Genesis 22:2, "Take now thy son, thine only son." EUSEBIUS, Præparatio Evangelica, l. 10, and 4. 16, has preserved a fragment of a Greek translation of Sanchoniatho, which mentions a mystical sacrifice of the Phœnicians, wherein a prince in royal robes was the offerer, and his only son was to be the victim: this evidently was a tradition derived from Abraham's offering, and handed down through Esau or Edom, Isaac's son. Isaac was Abraham's "only-begotten son" in respect of Sarah and the promises: he sent away his other sons, by other wives (Gen. 25:6). Abraham is a type of the Father not sparing His only-begotten Son to fulfil the divine purpose of love. God nowhere in the Mosaic law allowed human sacrifices, though He claimed the firstborn of Israel as His. 18. Of whom—rather as Greek "He (Abraham, not Isaac) TO whom it was said" [ALFORD]. BENGEL supports English Version. So ch. 1:7 uses the same Greek preposition, "unto," for "in respect to," or "of." This verse gives a difinition of the "only-begotten Son" (vs. 17). in Isaac shall thy seed be called—(Gen. 21:12). The posterity of Isaac alone shall be accounted as the seed of Abraham, which is the heir of the promises (Rom. 9:7). 19. Faith answered the objections which reason brought against God's command to Abraham to offer Isaac, by suggesting that what God had promised He both could and would perform, however impossible the performance might seem (Rom. 4:20, 21). able to raise him—rather, in general, "able to raise from the dead." he received him—"received him back" [ALFORD]. in a figure—Greek, "in a parable." ALFORD explains, "Received him back, risen from that death which he had undergone in, under, the figure of the ram."

It was then that Abraham saw Christ's day (John 8:56): accounting God was able to raise even from the dead: from which state of the dead he received him back as a type of the resurrection in Christ. 20. Jacob is put before Esau, as heir of the chief, viz., the spiritual blessing. concerning things to come—Greek, "even concerning things to come": not only concerning things present. Isaac, by faith, assigned to his sons things future, as if they were present. 21. both the sons—Greek, "each of the sons" (Gen. 47:29, 48:8-20). He knew not Joseph's sons, and could not distinguish them by sight, yet he did distinguish them by faith, transposing his hands intentionally, so as to lay his right hand on the younger, Ephraim, whose posterity was to be greater than that of Manasseh: he also adopted these grandchildren as his own sons, after having transferred the right of primogeniture to Joseph (Gen. 48:22). and worshipped . . .—This did not take place in immediate connection with the foregoing, but before it, when Jacob made Joseph swear that he would bury him with his fathers in

16. But now they desire a better. They all expected spiritual blessings and a heavenly inheritance. They sought God as their Portion, and in such a way and on such principles that He is not ashamed to be called their God; and He shows His affection for them by preparing for them a city, to wit, heaven, as themselves would seek no city on earth, which is certainly what the apostle has here in view. And from this it is evident that the patriarchs had a proper notion of the immortality of the soul and expected a place of residence widely different from Canaan.

17. Abraham, when he was tried. See the history of this whole transaction explained at large in the notes on Gen. xxii. 1-9. Offered up his only begotten. Abraham did, in effect, offer up Isaac; he built an altar, bound his son, laid him upon the altar, had ready the incense, took the knife, and would immediately have slain him had he not been prevented by the same authority by which the sacrifice was enjoined. Isaac is here called his only begotten, as he was the only son he had by his legitimate wife, who was heir to his property, and heir of the promises of God. The man who proved faithful in such a trial deserved to have his faith and obedience recorded throughout the world.

19. To raise him up, even from the dead. Abraham "staggered not at the promise . . . through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God." The resurrection of the dead must have been a doctrine of the patriarchs; they expected a heavenly inheritance. They saw they died as did other men, and they must have known that they could not enjoy it but in consequence of a resurrection from the dead. He received him in a figure. Parabole sometimes means a "daring exploit, a jeopardy of the life." I think it should be so understood here, as pointing out the very imminent danger he was in of losing his life. The clause may therefore be thus translated: "Accounting that God was able to raise him up from the dead, from whence he had received him, he being in the most imminent danger of losing his life." It is not therefore the natural deadness of Abraham and Sarah to which the apostle alludes, but the death to which Isaac on this occasion was exposed, and which he escaped by the immediate interference of God.

20. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau. He believed that God would fulfill His promise to his posterity, and God gave him to see what would befall them in their future generations. The apostle does not seem to intimate that one should be an object of the divine hatred and the other of divine love in reference to their eternal states.

21. Blessed both the sons of Joseph. That is, Ephraim and Manasseh. See the account in Gen. xlviii. 5, etc. Worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. This subject is particularly considered in the note on Gen. xlvii. 31. It appears that at the time Joseph visited his father

(2) He worshipped, leaning on his staff; he praised God for what he had done for him, and for the prospect he had of approaching blessedness. He was not able to support himself, so far as to sit up in his bed without a staff, and yet he would not make this an excuse for neglecting the worshipping of God; he would do it as well as he could with his body, as well as with his spirit.

2. When Jacob thus acted his faith: when he was dying. He lived by faith, and he died by faith and in faith.

X. The faith of Joseph, v. 22.

1. What he did by his faith. He made mention by faith of the departing of the children of Israel, that the time should come when they should be delivered out of Egypt. Though he should not live to see their deliverance, yet he could die in the faith of it. He gave commandment concerning his bones, that they should preserve them unburied in Egypt. Though he had lived and died in Egypt, yet he did not live and die an Egyptian, but an Israelite. He preferred a significant burial in Canaan before a magnificent one in Egypt.

2. When the faith of Joseph acted after this manner: when he was dying. God often gives his people living comforts in dying moments.

XI. The faith of the parents of Moses. 1. The acting of their faith: they hid this their son three months. Moses was persecuted betimes, and forced to be concealed; in this he was a type of Christ, who was persecuted almost as soon as he was born, and his parents were obliged to flee with him into Egypt for his preservation. 2. The reasons of their thus acting. No doubt, natural affection could not but move them; but there was something further. They saw he was a proper child. There appeared in him something uncommon; the beauty of the Lord sat upon him. Sometimes, not always, the countenance is the index of the mind. 3. The prevalency of their faith over their fear. They were not afraid of the king's commandment. They believed that God would preserve his people, and that the time was coming when it would be worth while for an Israelite to live. Some must hazard their own lives to preserve their children, and they were resolved to do it. Faith is a great preservative against the sinful slavish fear of men.

XII. The faith of Moses himself (v. 24, 25, &c.).

1. An instance of his faith in conquering the world.

(1) He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, whose foundling he was, and her fondling too. How glorious was the triumph of his faith. He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter lest he should undervalue the truer honour of being a son of Abraham, the father of the faithful; lest it should look like renouncing his religion as well as his relation to Israel; and no doubt both these he must have done if he had accepted this honour.

(2) He was willing to take his lot with the people of God here, though it was a suffering lot, that he might have his portion with them hereafter (v. 25). Herein he acted rationally as well as religiously. The pleasures of sin must end in speedy repentance or in speedy ruin. The pleasures of this world, and especially those of a court, are too often the pleasures of sin. A true believer will despise them. Suffering is to be chosen rather than sin, there being more evil in the least sin than there can be in the greatest suffering.

(3) See how Moses weighed matters: in one scale he put the worst of religion—the reproaches of Christ, in the other scale the best of the world—the treasures of Egypt (v. 26). The worst of religion weighed down the best of the world. The reproaches of the church of God are the reproaches of Christ. God's people are, and always have been, a reproached people. Christ accounts himself reproached in their reproaches and, while he thus interests himself in their reproaches, they become riches. Faith discerns this, and acts accordingly.

2. The circumstance of time is taken notice of, when Moses by his faith gained this victory (v. 24); not only in years of discretion, but of experience, to the age of forty years. He made this choice when he had grown ripe for judgment and enjoyment, able to know what he did and why he did it. It was not the act of a child, but it proceeded from mature deliberation. It is an excellent thing for persons to despise the world when they are most capable of relishing and enjoying it.

3. What it was that supported and strengthened the faith of Moses: He had respect unto the recompence of reward. Believers may and ought to have respect to this recompence of reward. It will prove a land-mark to direct their course, a load-stone to draw their hearts, and a cordial to refresh them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Canaan, not in Egypt. The assurance that Joseph would do so filled him with pious gratitude to God, which he expressed by raising himself on his bed to an attitude of worship. His faith, as Joseph's (vs. 22), consisted in his so confidentially anticipating the fulfilment of God's promise of Canaan to his descendants, as to desire to be buried there as his proper possession. leaning upon the top of his staff—Genesis 47:31, Hebrew and English Version, "upon the bed's head." LXX translates as Paul here. JEROME justly reprobates the notion of modern Rome, that Jacob worshipped the top of Joseph's staff, having on it an image of Joseph's power, to which Jacob bowed in recognition of the future sovereignty of his son's tribe, the father bowing to the son! The Hebrew, as translated in English Version, sets it aside: the bed is alluded to afterwards (Gen. 48:2; 49:33), and it is likely that Jacob turned himself in his bed so as to have his face toward the pillow, Isaiah 38:2 (there were no bedsteads in the East). Paul by adopting the LXX version, brings out, under the Spirit, an additional fact, viz., that the aged patriarch used his own (not Joseph's) staff to lean on in worshipping on his bed. The staff, too, was the emblem of his pilgrim state here on his way to his heavenly city (vss. 13, 14), wherein God had so wonderfully supported him. Genesis 32:10, "With my staff I passed over Jordan, and now I am become . . ." (cf. Exod. 12:11; Mark 6:8). In I Kings 1:47, the same thing is said of David's "bowing on his bed," an act of adoring thanksgiving to God for God's favor to his son before death. He omits the more leading blessing of the twelve sons of Jacob; because "he plucks only the flowers which stand by his way, and leaves the whole meadow full to his readers" [DELITZSCH in ALFORD]. 22. when he died—"when dying." the departing—"the exodus" (Gen. 50:24, 25). Joseph's eminent position in Egypt did not make him regard it as his home: in faith he looked to God's promise of Canaan being fulfilled and desired that his bones should rest there: testifying thus: (1) that he had no doubt of his posterity obtaining the promised land: and (2) that he believed in the resurrection of the body, and the enjoyment in it of the heavenly Canaan. His wish was fulfilled (Josh. 24:32; Acts 4:16). 23. parents—So the LXX has the plural, viz., Amram and Jochebed (Num. 26:59); but in Exod. 2:2, the mother alone is mentioned; but doubtless Amram sanctioned all she did, and secrecy being their object, he did not appear prominent in what was done. a proper child—Greek, "a comely child." Acts 7:20, "exceeding fair," Greek, "fair to God." The "faith" of his parents in saving the child must have had some divine revelation to rest on (probably at the time of his birth), which marked their "exceeding fair" babe as one whom God designed to do a great work by. His beauty was probably "the sign" appointed by God to assure their faith. the king's commandment—to slay all the males (Exod. 1:22). 24. So far from faith being opposed to Moses, he was an eminent example of it [BENGEL]. refused—in believing self-denial, when he might possibly have succeeded at last to the throne of Egypt. Thermutis, Pharaoh's daughter, according to the tradition which Paul under the Spirit sanctions, adopted him, as JOSEPHUS says, with the consent of the king. Josephus states that when a child, he threw on the ground the diadem put on him in jest, a presage of his subsequent formal rejection of Thermutis' adoption of him. Faith made him to prefer the adoption of the King of kings, unseen, and so to choose (vss. 25, 26) things, the very last which flesh and blood relish. 25. He balanced the best of the world with the worst of religion, and decidedly chose the latter. "Choosing" implies a deliberate resolution, not a hasty impulse. He was forty years old, a time when the judgment is matured. for a season—If the world has "pleasure" (Greek, "enjoyment") to offer, it is but "for a season." If religion bring with it "affliction," it too is but for a season; whereas its "pleasures are for evermore." 26. Esteeming—Inasmuch as he esteemed. the reproach of Christ—i.e., the reproach which falls on the Church, and which Christ regards as His own reproach, He being the Head, and the Church (both of the Old and New Testament) His body. Israel typified Christ; Israel's sufferings were Christ's sufferings (cf. II Cor. 1:5; Col. 1:24). As uncircumcision was Egypt's reproach, so circumcision was the badge of Israel's expectation of Christ, which Moses especially cherished, and which the Gentiles reproached Israel on account of. Christ's people's reproach will ere long be their great glory. had respect unto . . .—Greek, "turning his eyes away from other considerations, he fixed them on the

he was very weak and generally confined to his couch, having at hand his staff; either that with which he usually supported his feeble body or that which was the ensign of his office as patriarch or chief of a very numerous family. The ancient chiefs in all countries had this staff or sceptre continually at hand. It is said, Gen. xlviii. 2, that when Joseph came to see his father, Jacob, who was then in his last sickness, "Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed, with his feet on the floor, he supported himself with his staff. When Joseph sware to him that he should be carried up from Egypt, he "bowed himself upon the bed's head," still supporting himself with his staff, which probably with this last act he laid aside, "gathered up his feet," and reclined wholly on his couch. It was therefore indifferent to say that he worshipped or bowed himself on his staff or on his bed's head. But as shachah signifies not only to "bow," but also to "worship," because acts of adoration were performed by bowing and prostration; and as mittah, a "bed," by the change of the vowel points becomes matteh, a "staff," hence the Septuagint have translated the passage, "And Israel bowed or worshipped on the head of his staff." This reading the apostle follows here.

22. Joseph, when he died. "When he was dying."

23. By faith Moses. See the notes on Exod. ii. 2 and Acts vii. 20. We know that Moses was brought up at the Egyptian court, and there was considered to be the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and probably might have succeeded to the throne of Egypt. But finding that God had visited His people and given them a promise of spiritual and eternal blessings, he chose rather to take the lot of this people, i.e., God as his Portion forever, than to "enjoy the pleasures of sin," which, however gratifying to the animal senses, could only be "temporary."

26. The reproach of Christ. The Christ or Messiah had been revealed to Moses; of Him he prophesied, Deut. xviii. 15; and the reproach which God's people had, in consequence of their decided opposition to idolatry, may be termed the reproach of Christ, for they refused to become one people with the Egyptians, because the promise of the rest was made to them, and in this rest Christ and His salvation were included. But, although it does not appear these things were known to the Hebrews at large, yet it is evident that there were sufficient intimations given to Moses concerning the great Deliverer (of whom himself was a type) that determined his conduct in the above respect, as he fully understood that he must renounce his interest in the promises and in the life eternal to which they led, if he did not obey the divine call in the present instance. Many have been stumbled by the word Christ here, because they cannot see how Moses should have any knowledge of Him. It may be said that it was just as easy for God Almighty to reveal Christ to Moses as it was for Him to reveal Him to Isaiah, or to the shepherds, or to John Baptist; or to manifest Him in the flesh. After all, there is much reason to believe that by Christ the apostle means the whole body of the Israelitish or Hebrew people; for as the word signifies "the anointed," and anointing was a consecration to God, all the Hebrew people were considered thus anointed or consecrated; and it is worthy of remark that Christos is used in this very sense by the Septuagint, I Sam. ii. 35; Ps. cv. 15; and Hab. iii. 13, where the word is necessarily restrained to this meaning. He had respect unto the recompence. He "looked attentively" to it; his eyes were "constantly directed" to it. This is the import of the original word, and the whole conduct of Moses was an illustration of it.

MATTHEW HENRY

4. We have another instance of the faith of Moses, v. 27. (1) The product of his faith: He forsook Egypt. Twice Moses forsook Egypt: As a supposed criminal, when the king's wrath was incensed against him for killing the Egyptian. As a commander after God had employed him to humble Pharaoh and make him willing to let Israel go. (2) The prevalency of his faith. It raised him above the fear of the king's wrath. Those who forsook Egypt must expect the wrath of men; but they need not fear it. (3) The principle upon which his faith acted in these his motions: He endured, as seeing him that was invisible. By faith we may see this invisible God. We may be fully assured of his existence, and of his gracious and powerful presence with us. Such a sight of God will enable believers to endure to the end.

5. We have yet another instance of the faith of Moses, v. 28. The passover was one of the most solemn institutions of the Old Testament, and a very significant type of Christ. To entitle them to this distinguishing favour, a lamb must be slain; the blood of it must be sprinkled with a bunch of hyssop upon the lintel of the door, and on the two side-posts. Christ is that Lamb, he is our Passover, he was sacrificed for us. His blood must be sprinkled; it must be applied to those who have the saving benefit of it. It is not owing to our inherent righteousness that we are saved from the wrath of God, but to the blood of Christ and his imputed righteousness. Wherever this blood is applied, the soul receives Christ by faith, and lives upon him. All our spiritual privileges on earth should quicken us to set out early, and get forward, in our way to heaven.

XIII. The Israelites passing through the Red Sea under the conduct of Moses their leader, v. 29.

1. The safe passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, when there was no other way to escape from Pharaoh and his host. Israel's danger was very great. Their deliverance was very glorious. The grace of faith will help us through all the dangers we meet with in our way to heaven.

2. The destruction of the Egyptians. Their rashness was great, and their ruin was grievous. When God judges, he will overcome; and it is plain that the destruction of sinners is of themselves.

XIV. The Israelites, under Joshua their leader, before the walls of Jericho. The story we have Joshua vi. 5, &c. The means prescribed of God to bring down the walls of Jericho. Here was a great trial of their faith. The method prescribed seemed very improbable to answer such an end. But this was the way God commanded them to take, and he loves to do great things by small and contemptible means, that his own arm may be made bare. The powerful success of the prescribed means. The walls of Jericho fell before them. God can in his own time cause all the powerful opposition that is made to his interest to fall down, and the grace of faith is mighty through God for the pulling down of strongholds. When he has some great thing to do for them, he raises up great and strong faith in them.

XV. The faith of Rahab, v. 31.

1. Who this Rahab was. She was a Canaanite, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and had but little help for faith, and yet she was a believer. She was a harlot, and lived in a way of sin. Christ has saved the chief of sinners. Where sin has abounded, grace has superabounded.

2. What she did by her faith: She received the spies in peace. She not only bade them welcome, but she concealed them from their enemies, and she made a noble confession of her faith. True faith will show itself in good works, especially towards the people of God.

3. What she gained by her faith. She escaped perishing with those that believed not. It was an utter destruction that befell that city: man and beast were cut off. The signal preservation of Rahab.

Verses 32–40

The apostle now concludes his narrative with a more summary account of another set of believers. He prefaces this part of the narrative with an elegant expostulation: What shall I say more? Time would fail me. We should be pleased to think how great the number of believers was under the Old Testament, and how strong their faith.

I. The apostle mentions,

1. Gideon. He was an eminent instrument raised up of God to deliver his people from the oppression of the Midianites. God put the whole army of the Midianites to confusion and ruin.

2. Barak. He obtained a great victory by his faith over all the host of Sisera.

3. Samson. If Samson had not had a strong faith as well as a strong arm, he had never performed such exploits. True faith is acknowledged and accepted, even when mingled with many failings. The believer's

(eternal) recompense" (vss. 39, 40). 27. not fearing the wrath of the king—But in Exodus 2:14 it is said, "Moses feared, and fled from the face of Pharaoh." He was afraid, and fled from the danger where no duty called him to stay (to have stayed without call of duty would have been to tempt Providence, and to sacrifice his hope of being Israel's future deliverer according to the divine intimations; his great aim, Note, vs. 23). He did not fear the king so as to neglect his duty and not return when God called him. It was in spite of the king's prohibition he left Egypt, not fearing the consequences which were likely to overtake him if he should be caught, after having, in defiance of the king, left Egypt. If he had stayed and resumed his position as adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, his slaughter of the Egyptian would doubtless have been connived at; but his resolution to take his portion with oppressed Israel, which he could not have done had he stayed, was the motive of his flight, and constituted the "faith" of this act, according to the express statement here. The exodus of Moses with Israel cannot be meant here, for it was made, not in defiance, but by the desire, of the king. Besides, the chronological order would be broken thus, the next particular specified here, viz., the institution of the Passover, having taken place before the exodus. Besides, it is Moses' personal history and faith which are here described. The faith of the people ("THEY passed") is not introduced till vs. 29. endured—steadfast in faith amidst trials. He had fled, not so much from fear of Pharaoh, as from a revulsion of feeling in finding God's people insensible to their high destiny, and from disappointment at not having been able to inspire them with those hopes for which he had sacrificed all his earthly prospects. This accounts for his strange reluctance and despondency when commissioned by God to go and arouse the people (Exod. 3:15; 4:1, 10-12). seeing him . . . invisible—as though he had not to do with men, but only with God, ever before his eyes by faith, though invisible to the bodily eye (Rom. 1:20; I Tim. 1:17; 6:16). Hence he feared not the wrath of visible man; the characteristic of faith (vs. 1; Luke 12: 4, 5). 28. kept—Greek, "hath kept," the Passover being, in Paul's day, still observed. His faith here was his belief in the invisible God's promise that the destroying angel should pass over, and not touch the inmates of the blood-sprinkled houses (Exod. 12:23). "He acquiesced in the bare word of God where the thing itself was not apparent" [CALVIN]. the first-born—Greek neuter; both of man and beast. 29. they—Moses and Israel. Red Sea—called so from its red seaweed, or rather from Edom (meaning "red"), whose country adjoined it. which . . . assaying to do—Greek, "of which (Red Sea) the Egyptians having made experiment." Rashness and presumption mistaken by many for faith; with similar rash presumption many rush into eternity. The same thing when done by the believer, and when done by the unbeliever, is not the same thing [BENGEL]. What was faith in Israel, was presumption in the Egyptians. were drowned—Greek, "were swallowed up," or "engulfed." They sank in the sands as much as in the waves of the Red Sea. Cf. Exodus 15:12, "the earth swallowed them." 30. The soundings of trumpets, though one were to sound for ten thousand years, cannot throw down walls, but faith can do all things [CHRYSOSTOM]. seven days—whereas sieges often lasted for years. 31. Rahab showed her "faith" in her confession, Joshua 2:9, 11, "I know that Jehovah hath given you the land; Jehovah your God, is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath." the harlot—Her former life adds to the marvel of her repentance, faith, and preservation (Matt. 21:31-32). believed not—Greek, "were disobedient," viz., to the will of God manifested by the miracles wrought in behalf of Israel (Josh. 2:8-11). received—in her house (Josh. 2:1, 4, 6). with peace—peaceably; so that they had nothing to fear in her house. Thus Paul, quoting the same examples (vss. 17, 31) for the power of faith, as James (2:21, 25; see my Notes there) does for justification by works evidentially, shows that in maintaining justification by faith alone, he means not a dead faith, but "faith which worketh by love" (Gal. 5:6). 32. the time—suitable for the length of an Epistle. He accumulates collectively some out of many examples of faith. Gedeon—put before Barak, not chronologically, but as being more celebrated. Just as Samson for the same reason is put before Jephthae. The mention of Jephthae as an example of "faith," makes it unlikely he sacrificed the life of his daughter for a rash vow. David, the warrior king and prophet, forms the transition from warrior chiefs to the "prophets," of whom "Samuel" is mentioned as the

27. He forsook Egypt. He believed that God would fulfill the promise He had made, and he cheerfully changed an earthly for a heavenly portion. Not fearing the wrath of the king. The apostle speaks here of the departure of Moses with the Israelites, not of his flight to Midian, Exod. ii. 14-15; for he was then in great fear. But when he went to Pharaoh with God's authority, to demand the dismission of the Hebrews, he was without fear, and acted in the most noble and dignified manner; he then feared nothing but God.

As seeing him who is invisible. He continued to act as one who had the Judge of his heart and conduct always before his eyes. By calling the Divine Being the invisible, the apostle distinguishes Him from the gods of Egypt, who were visible, corporeal, gross, and worthless. The Israelites were worshippers of the true God, and this worship was not tolerated in Egypt.

28. He kept the passover. God told him that He would destroy the firstborn of the Egyptians, but would spare all those whose doors were sprinkled with the blood of the paschal lamb. Moses believed this, kept the Passover, and sprinkled the blood. See the notes on Exodus xii.

29. By faith they passed through the Red sea. See the notes on Exod. xiv. 22. The Egyptians thought they could walk through the sea as well as the Israelites; they tried, and were drowned, while the former passed in perfect safety. The one walked by faith, the other by sight; one perished, the other was saved.

30. The walls of Jericho fell down. This is particularly explained Josh. vi. 1, etc. God had promised that the walls of Jericho should fall down if they compassed them about seven days. They believed, did as they were commanded, and the promise was fulfilled.

31. The harlot Rahab perished not. See this account in Josh. ii. 1, 9, 11 and vi. 23, where it is rendered exceedingly probable that the word zonah in Hebrew and porne in Greek, which we translate harlot, should be rendered "innkeeper," as there is no proper evidence that the person in question was such a woman as our translation represents her. As to her having been a harlot before and converted afterwards, it is a figment of an idle fancy. She was afterwards married to Salmon, a Jewish prince; see Matt. i. 5. Received the spies with peace. "Giving them a kind welcome, good fare, and protection."

32. Time would fail me. A very usual mode of expression with the best Greek writers, when they wish to intimate that much important intelligence remains to be communicated on the subject already in hand, which must be omitted because of other points which have not yet been handled. Gedeon. Who by faith in God, with 300 men, destroyed a countless multitude of Midianites and Amalekites, and delivered Israel from oppression and slavery, Judges vi—viii. Barak. Who overthrew Jabin, king of Canaan, and delivered Israel from servitude, Judges iv. Samson. Who was appointed by God to deliver Israel from the oppressive yoke of the Philistines; and by extraordinary assistance discomfited them on various occasions, Judges xiii—xvi. Jephthae. Who, under the same guidance, defeated the Ammonites, and delivered Israel, Judges xi—xii. David. King of Israel, whose whole life was a life of faith and dependence on God. Samuel. The last of the Israelitish judges, to whom succeeded a race of kings, of whom Saul and David were the first two, and were both anointed by this most eminent man.

faith endures to the end, and, in dying, gives him victory over death and all his deadly enemies; his greatest conquest he gains by dying.

4. Jephthah. As various and new enemies rise up against the people of God, various and new deliverers are raised up for them. The grace of God often finds out, and fastens upon, the most undeserving and ill-deserving persons, to do great things for them and by them. Jephthah was the son of a harlot. Faith will not only put men upon making their vows to God, but paying their vows after the mercy received; yea, though they have vowed to their own great grief, as in the case of Jephthah and his daughter.

5. David that great man after God's own heart. Few ever met with greater trials, and few ever discovered a more lively faith. The same faith made him a very successful and victorious prince, and, after a long life of virtue and honour (though not without some foul stains of sin), he died in faith, and he has left behind him such excellent memoirs of the trials and acts of faith in the book of Psalms as will ever be of great esteem and use.

6. Samuel, raised up to be a most eminent prophet of the Lord to Israel, as well as a ruler over them. God revealed himself to Samuel when he was but a child, and continued to do so till his death.

7. To Samuel he adds, and of the prophets, who were employed of God sometimes to denounce judgment, sometimes to promise mercy, always to reprove sin; sometimes to foretell remarkable events; and chiefly to give notice of the Messiah. A true faith was very requisite for the right discharge of such an office as this.

II. What things were done by their faith.

1. By faith they subdued kingdoms, v. 33. The interests and powers of kings and kingdoms are often set up in opposition to God and his people. God can easily subdue all those kings and kingdoms that set themselves to oppose him.

2. They wrought righteousness. They believed God, and it was imputed to them for righteousness. It is a greater happiness to work righteousness than to work miracles.

3. They obtained promises. It is by faith that we are prepared to wait for the promises, and in due time to receive them.

4. They stopped the mouths of lions. Faith engages the power of God for his people, whenever it shall be for his glory, to overcome brute beasts and brutish men.

5. They quenched the violence of the fire, v. 34. So did the three children, or rather mighty champions, Dan. iii. 17–27. Never was the grace of faith more severely tried, never more nobly exerted, nor ever more gloriously rewarded, than theirs was.

6. They escaped the edge of the sword. The swords of men are held in the hand of God. Faith takes hold of that hand of God which has hold of the swords of men; and God had often suffered himself to be prevailed upon by the faith of his people.

7. Out of weakness they were made strong. It is the same grace of faith that from spiritual weakness helps men to recover and renew their strength.

8. They grew valiant in fight. True faith gives trust, courage and patience, as it discerns the strength of God, and thereby the weakness of all his enemies. And they were not only valiant, but successful. God, as a reward and encouragement of their faith, put to flight the armies of the aliens; God made them flee and fall before his faithful servants.

9. Women received their dead raised to life again, v. 35. Many of the weaker sex have been strong in faith. God has sometimes yielded so far to the tender affections of sorrowful women as to restore their dead children to life again.

III. The apostle tells us what these believers endured by faith. They were tortured, not accepting deliverance, v. 35. They bore the torture, and would not accept of deliverance. That which animated them thus to suffer was the hope they had of obtaining a better resurrection. They endured trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, and bonds and imprisonment, v. 36. They were persecuted in their reputation by mockings, which are cruel to an ingenuous mind; in their persons by scourging, the punishment of slaves; in their liberty by bonds and imprisonment. They were put to death in the most cruel manner. Their enemies clothed death in all the array of cruelty and terror, and yet they boldly met it and endured it. Those who escaped death were used so ill that death might seem more eligible than such a life. Their enemies spared them, only to prolong their misery, v. 37, 38.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

first. 33. subdued kingdoms—as David did (II Sam. 8:1, etc.); so also Gideon subdued Midian (Judg. 7). wrought righteousness—as Samuel did (I Sam. 8:9; 12:3-23 15:33); and David (II Sam. 8:15). obtained promises—as "the prophets" (vs. 32) did; for through them the promises were given (cf. Dan. 9:21) [BENGEL]. Rather, "obtained the fulfilment of promises," which had been previously the object of their faith (Josh. 21:45; I Kings 8:56). Indeed, Gideon, Barak, etc., also obtained the things which God promised. Not "the promises," which are still future (vss. 13, 39). stopped the mouths of lions—Note the words, "because he believed in his God." Also Samson (Judg. 14:6), David (I Sam. 17:34-37), Benaiah (II Sam. 23:20). 34. Quenched the violence of fire—(Dan. 3:27). Not merely "quenched the fire," but "quenched the power (so the Greek) of the fire." Daniel 3 and 6 record the last miracles of the Old Testament. So the martyrs of the Reformation, though not escaping the fire, were delivered from its having power really or lastingly to hurt them. escaped . . . sword—So Jephthah (Judg. 12: 3); and so David escaped Saul's sword (I Sam. 18: 11; 19:10, 12); Elijah (I Kings 19:1, etc.; II Kings 6: 14). out of weakness . . . made strong—Samson (Judg. 16:28; 15:19). Hezekiah (Isa. 37 and 38). Milton says of the martyrs, "They shook the powers of darkness with the irresistible power of weakness." valiant in fight—Barak (Judg. 4:14, 15). And the Maccabees, the sons of Matthias, Judas, Jonathan, and Simon, who delivered the Jews from their cruel oppressor, Antiochus of Syria. armies—lit., "camps" referring to Judges 7:21. But the reference may be to the Maccabees having put to flight the Syrians and other foes. 35. Women received their dead raised—as the widow of Zarephath (I Kings 17:17-24). The Shunammite (II Kings 4:17-35). The two oldest MSS. read, "They received women of aliens by raising their dead." I Kings 17:24 shows that the raising of the widow's son by Elijah led her to the faith, so that he thus took her into fellowship, an alien though she was. Christ, in Luke 4:26, makes especial mention of the fact that Elijah was sent to an alien from Israel, a woman of Sarepta. Thus Paul may quote this as an instance of Elijah's faith, that at God's command he went to a Gentile city of Sidonia (contrary to Jewish prejudices), and there, as the fruit of faith, not only raised her dead son, but received her as a convert into the family of God, as Vulgate reads. Still, English Version may be the right reading. and—Greek, "but"; in contrast to those raised again to life. tortured—"broken on the wheel." Eleazar (II Maccabees 6: 18, end; 19:20, 30). The sufferer was stretched on an instrument like a drumhead and scourged to death. not accepting deliverance—when offered to them. So the seven brothers, II Maccabees 7:9, 11, 14, 29, 36; and Eleazar, II Maccabees 6:21, 28, 30, "Though I might have been delivered from death, I endure these severe pains, being beaten." a better resurrection—than that of the women's children "raised to life again"; or, than the resurrection which their foes could give them by delivering them from death (Dan. 12:2; Luke 20:35; Phil. 3: 11). The fourth of the brethren (referring to Dan. 12:2) said to King Antiochus, "To be put to death by men, is to be chosen to look onward for the hopes which are of God, to be raised up again by Him; but for thee there is no resurrection to life." The writer of II Maccabees expressly disclaims inspiration, which prevents our mistaking Paul's allusion here to it as if it sanctioned the Apocrypha as inspired. In quoting Daniel, he quotes a book claiming inspiration, and so tacitly sanctions that claim. 36. others—of a different class of confessors for the truth (the Greek is different from that for "others," vs. 35, alloi, heteroi). trial—testing their faith. imprisonment—as Hanani (II Chron. 16:10), imprisoned by Asa. Micaiah, the son of Imlah, by Ahab (I Kings 22:26, 27). 37. stoned—as Zechariah, son of Jehoiada (II Chron. 24:20-22; Matt. 23:35). sawn asunder—as Isaiah was said to have been by Manasseh; but see my Introduction to Isaiah. tempted—by their foes, in the midst of their tortures, to renounce their faith; the most bitter aggravation of them. Or else, by those of their own household, as Job was [ESTIUS]; or by the fiery darts of Satan, as Jesus was in His last trials [GLASSIUS]. Probably it included all three; they were tempted in every possible way, by friends and foes, by human and satanic agents, by caresses and afflictions, by words and deeds, to forsake God, but in vain, through the power of faith. sword—lit., "they died in the murder of the sword." In vs. 34 the contrary is given as an effect of faith, "they escaped the edge of the sword." Both alike are marvellous effects of faith. In both accomplishes great things

ADAM CLARKE

33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms. As Joshua, who subdued the seven Canaanitish nations; and David, who subdued the Moabites, Syrians, Ammonites, and Edomites, 2 Samuel viii; etc. Wrought righteousness. Did a great variety of works indicative of that faith in God without which it is impossible to do anything that is good. Obtained promises. This is supposed to refer to Joshua and Caleb, who through their faith in God obtained the Promised Land, while all the rest of the Israelites were excluded; to Phineas also, who for his act of zealous faith in slaying Zimri and Cosbi got the promise of an everlasting priesthood; and to David, who for his faith and obedience obtained the kingdom of Israel, and had the promise that from his seed the Messiah should spring. Stopped the mouths of lions. Daniel, who, though cast into a den of lions for his fidelity to God, was preserved among them unhurt and finally came to great honor.

34. Quenched the violence of fire. As in the case of the three faithful Hebrews—Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego—who for their steady attachment to God's worship were cast into a fiery furnace, in which they were preserved and from which they escaped unhurt, Daniel iii. Escaped the edge of the sword. Moses, who escaped the sword of Pharaoh, Exod. xviii. 4; Elijah, that of Jezebel; and David, that of Saul; and many others. Out of weakness were made strong. Were miraculously restored from sickness, which seemed to threaten their life; as Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 21. Waxed valiant in fight. Like Gideon, who overthrew the camp of the Midianites, and Jonathan, that of the Philistines, in such a way as must have proved that God was with them.

35. Women received their dead. As did the widow of Zarephath, I Kings xvii. 21, and the Shunammite, 2 Kings iv. 34. Others were tortured. This word signifies to "beat violently."

36. Had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. We do not know the cases to which the apostle refers. The mockings here can never mean such as those of Ishmael against Isaac or the youths of Bethel against Elisha. It is more probable that it refers to public exhibitions of the people of God at idol feasts and the like; and Samson's case before Dagon, when the Philistines had put out his eyes, is quite in point. As to scourgings, this was a common way of punishing minor culprits; and even those who were to be punished capitally were first scourged. See the case of our Lord. Bonds and imprisonment. Joseph was cast into prison; Jeremiah was cast into a dungeon full of mire, chap. xxxvii. 16 and xxxviii. 6; and the Prophet Micaiah was imprisoned by Ahab, I Kings xxii. 27.

37. They were stoned. As Zechariah, the son of Barachiah or Jehoida, was, between the altar and the Temple; see the account in 2 Chron. xxiv. 21. And as Naboth the Jezreelite, who, on refusing to give up his father's inheritance to a covetous king, because it had respect to the promise of God, was falsely accused and stoned to death, 1 Kings xxi. 1-14. They were sawn asunder. There is a tradition that the Prophet Isaiah was thus martyred. In Yevomoth, fol. 49, 2, it is thus written: "Manasseh slew Isaiah; for he commanded that he should be slain with a wooden saw. They then brought the saw, and cut him in two; and when the saw reached his mouth, his soul fled forth." Were tempted. Epeirasthesan. I believe this word has vexed the critics more than any other in the New Testament. How being tempted can be ranked among the heavy sufferings of the primitive martyrs and confessors is not easy to discern, because to be tempted is the common lot of every godly man. This difficulty has induced learned men to mend the text by conjecture. Alberti thinks the original reading was espeirasthesan, "they were strangled." Many more differences have been proposed by learned men, all bearing a very near resemblance to the words now found in the Greek text. Were slain with the sword. As in the case of the eighty-five priests slain by Doeg, see 1 Sam. xxii. 18; and the prophets, of whose slaughter by the sword Elijah complains, 1 Kings xix. 10. Probably the word means being "beheaded," which was formerly done with a sword and not with an axe,

MATTHEW HENRY

Such sufferings as these they endured then for their faith; and such they endured through the power of the grace of faith: and which shall we most admire, the wickedness of human nature, or the excellency of divine grace, that is able to bear up the faithful under such cruelties, and to carry them safely through all?

IV. What they obtained by their faith. 1. A most honourable commendation from God—that the world was not worthy of such men; the world did not deserve such blessings. The righteous are not worthy to live in the world, and God declares the world is not worthy of them.

2. They obtained a good report (v. 39) of all good men, add the truth itself. 3. They had a title to the promises, though they received not the great things promised. They had shadows, but had not seen the substance; and yet, under this imperfect dispensation, they discovered this precious faith. This the apostle insists upon to render their faith more illustrious.

He tells the Hebrews that God had provided some better things for them (v. 40), and therefore they might be assured that he expected at least as good things from them. Their faith should be much more perfect than the faith of the Old Testament saints; for their state and dispensation were more perfect than the former.

and suffers great things, without counting it suffering [CHRYSOSTOM]. Urijah was so slain by Jehoiakim (Jer. 26:23); and the prophets in Israel (I Kings 19:10).

in sheepskins—as Elijah (I Kings 19:13, LXX). They were white; as the "goatskins" were black (cf. Zech. 13:4). tormented—Greek, "in evil state." 38. Of whom the world was not worthy—So far from their being unworthy of living in the world, as their exile in deserts, etc., might seem to imply, "the world was not worthy of them." The world, in shutting them out, shut out from itself a source of blessing; such as Joseph proved to Potiphar (Gen. 39:5), and Jacob to Laban (Gen. 30:27). In condemning them, the world condemned itself. caves—lit., "chinks." Palestine, from its hilly character, abounds in fissures and caves, affording shelter to the persecuted, as the fifty hid by Obadiah (I Kings 18:4, 13) and Elijah (I Kings 19:8, 13); and Mattathias and his sons (I Maccabees 2:28, 29); and Judas Maccabeus (II Maccabees 5:27). 39. having obtained a good report—Greek, "being borne witness of." Though they were so, yet "they received not the promise," i.e., the final completion of "salvation" promised at Christ's coming again (ch. 9:28); "the eternal inheritance" (ch. 9:15). Abraham did obtain the very thing promised (ch. 6:15) in part, viz., blessedness in soul after death, by virtue of faith in Christ about to come. The full blessedness of body and soul shall not be till the full number of the elect shall be accomplished, and all together, no one preceding the other, shall enter on the full glory and bliss. Moreover, in another point of view, "It is probable that some accumulation of blessedness was added to holy souls, when Christ came and fulfilled all things even as at His burial many rose from the dead, who doubtless ascended to heaven with Him" [FLACIUS in BENGEL] (cf. Note, Eph. 4:8). The perfecting of believers in title, and in respect to conscience, took place once for all, at the death of Christ, by virtue of His being made by death perfect as Saviour. Their perfecting in soul at, and ever after Christ's death, took place, and takes place at their death. But the universal and final perfecting will not take place till Christ's coming. 40. provided—with divine forethought from eternity (cf. Gen. 22:8, 14). some better thing for us—(ch. 7:19)—than they had here. It is not we who are perfected with them, but rather they with us. They waited for His coming; we enjoy Him as having come (ch. 1:1; 2:3). Christ's death, the means of perfecting what the Jewish law could not perfect, was reserved for our time. Cf. ch. 12:2, "perfecter (Greek) of our faith." Now that Christ is come, they in soul share our blessedness, being "the spirits of the just made perfect" (ch. 12:23); so ALFORD; however, see Note there. Ch. 9:12 shows that the blood of Christ, brought into the heavenly holy place by Him, first opened an entrance into heaven (cf. John 3:13). Still, the fathers were in blessedness by faith in the Saviour to come, at death (ch. 6:15; Luke 16:22).

ADAM CLARKE

and in the East is done by the sword to the present day. They wandered about in sheepskins. "Sheepskins dressed with the wool on." This was probably the sort of mantle that Elijah wore, and which was afterwards used by Elisha; for the Septuagint, in 2 Kings ii. 8, 13, expressly say: "And Elijah took his sheepskin" (mantle); "And he [Elisha] took the sheepskin of Elijah which had fallen from off him." It is likely that the prophets themselves wore such garments, and that the false prophets imitated them in this, in order that they might gain the greater credit. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision . . . neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive," Zech. xiii. 4; "a hairy skin," Septuagint, probably the goatskins mentioned above. In general, this was an upper garment; but in the cases to which the apostle alludes, the sheepskins and goatskins seem to have been the only covering. Being destitute. "In want" of all the comforts and conveniences of life, and often of its necessaries. Afflicted. In consequence of enduring such privations. Tormented. "Maltreated, harassed," variously persecuted by those to whom they brought the message of salvation.

38. Of whom the world was not worthy. Yet they were obliged to wander by day in deserts and mountains, driven from the society of men, and often obliged to hide by night in dens and caves of the earth to conceal themselves from the brutal rage of men. Perhaps he refers here principally to the case of Elijah and the hundred prophets hidden in caves by Obadiah and fed with bread and water. See 1 Kings xviii. 4. David was often obliged thus to hide himself from Saul, 1 Sam. xxiv. 3, etc.

39. Having obtained a good report (having been witnessed to; see v. 2) through faith. It was faith in God which supported all those eminent men who, in different parts of the world and in different ages, were persecuted for righteousness' sake. Received not the promise. They all heard of the promises made to Abraham of a Messiah, for this was a constant tradition; but they died without having seen this Anointed of the Lord. This must be the promise without receiving of which the apostle says they died.

40. God having provided some better thing for us. This is the dispensation of the gospel, with all the privileges and advantages it confers. That they without us should not be made perfect. Believers before the Flood, after the Flood, under the law, and since the law, make but one Church. The gospel dispensation is the last, and the Church cannot be considered as "complete," perfect, till the believers under all dispensations are gathered together. As the gospel is the last dispensation, the preceding believers cannot be consummated even in glory till the gospel Church arrive in the heaven of heavens.

CHAPTER 12

The great duty which the apostle urges upon the Hebrews. The duty consists of two parts.

I. Preparatory: Lay aside every weight, and the sin, &c. Every weight, that is, all inordinate affection and concern for the body, and the present life and world. The sin that doth so easily beset us; the sin that has the greatest advantage against us, by the circumstances we are in, our constitution, our company.

CHAPTER 12

VSS. 1-29. EXHORTATION TO FOLLOW THE WITNESSES OF FAITH JUST MENTIONED: NOT TO FAINT IN TRIALS: TO REMOVE ALL BITTER ROOTS OF SIN: FOR WE ARE UNDER, NOT A LAW OF TERROR, BUT THE GOSPEL OF GRACE, TO DESPISE WHICH WILL BRING THE HEAVIER PENALTIES, IN PROPORTION TO OUR GREATER PRIVILEGES. 1. we also—as well as those recounted in vs. 11. are compassed about—Greek, "have so great a cloud (a numberless multitude above us, like a cloud, 'holy and pellucid,' [CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS]) of witnesses surrounding us." The image is from a "race," an image common even in Palestine from the time of the Græco-Macedonian empire, which introduced such Greek usages as national games. The "witnesses" answer to the spectators pressing round to see the competitors in their contest for the prize (Phil. 3:14). Those "witnessed of" (Greek, ch. 11: 5, 39) become in their turn "witnesses" in a twofold way: (1) attesting by their own case the faithfulness of God to His people [ALFORD] (ch. 6:12), some of them martyrs in the modern sense; (2) witnessing our struggle of faith; however, this second sense of "witnesses," though agreeing with the image here if it is to be pressed, is not positively, unequivocally, and directly sustained by Scripture. It gives vividness to the image; as the crowd of spectators gave additional spirit to the combatants, so the cloud of witnesses who have themselves been in the same

CHAPTER 12

1. Wherefore. This is an inference drawn from the examples produced in the preceding chapter, and on this account both should be read in connection. Compassed about. Here is another allusion to the Olympic games. The agonistae, or contenders, were often greatly animated by the consideration that the eyes of the principal men of their country were fixed upon them; and by this they were induced to make the most extraordinary exertions. Cloud of witnesses. Both the Greeks and Latins frequently use the term cloud to express a great number of persons or things. Let us lay aside every weight. As those who ran in the Olympic races would throw aside everything that might impede them in their course, so Christians, professing to go to heaven, must throw aside everything that might hinder them in their Christian race. Whatever weighs down our hearts or affections to earth and sense is to be carefully avoided; for no man with the love of the world in his heart can ever reach the kingdom of Heaven. The sin which doth so easily beset. "The well-circumstanced sin"; that which has everything in its favor, time, and place, and opportunity; the heart and the object; and a sin in which all these things frequently occur, and consequently the transgression is frequently committed; the sin that stands well, or is favor-

II. Perfective: Run with patience the race that is set before us.

1. Christians have a race to run.

2. This race is set before them; it is marked out unto them, both by the word of God and the examples of the faithful servants of God, that cloud of witnesses with which they are compassed about.

3. This race must be run with patience and perseverance. Faith and patience are the conquering graces, and therefore must be always cultivated.

4. Christians have a greater example to encourage them than any who have been mentioned before, v. 2.

(1) What our Lord Jesus is to his people: he is the author and finisher of their faith, not only the object, but the author. He is the great leader and precedent of our faith. He is the finisher of our faith. He is the finisher of grace, and of the work of faith with power in the souls of his people; and he is the judge and the rewarder of their faith.

(2) What trials Christ met with in his race and course. He endured the contradiction of sinners against himself (v. 3), yet he endured their evil manners with great patience. He endured all. He endured the cross—all those sufferings that he met with in the world; for he took up his cross betimes, and was at length nailed to it. Yet all this he endured with invincible patience and resolution. He despised the shame. All the reproaches that were cast upon him, both in his life and at his death, he despised.

(3) What it was that supported the human soul of Christ, the joy that was set before him. He rejoiced to see that by his sufferings he should make satisfaction to the injured justice of God, that he should make peace between God and man, that he should open a way of salvation.

(4) The reward of his suffering: he has sat down at the right hand of the throne of God. He ever lives to make intercession for his people.

(5) What is our duty. We must look unto him; we must set him continually before us as our example. We must consider him, meditate much upon him. We shall find that as his sufferings far exceeded ours, so his patience far excels ours.

(6) The advantage we shall reap by thus doing: it will be a means to prevent our weariness and fainting (v. 3). There is a proneness in the best to grow weary and to faint under their trials and afflictions. The best way to prevent this is to look unto Jesus. Faith and meditation will fetch in fresh supplies of strength, comfort, and courage.

I. The gentle and moderate measure of their sufferings, v. 4. He owns that they had suffered much; they had been striving to an agony against sin. He puts them in mind that they might have suffered more; for they had not yet resisted unto blood. Our Lord Jesus does not call his people out to the hardest trials at first, but wisely trains them up by less sufferings to be prepared for greater. The gentleness of Christ in accommodating their trials to their strength. They should not magnify their afflictions, but should take notice of the mercy that is mixed with them.

contest, ought to increase our earnestness, testifying, as they do, to God's faithfulness. weight—As corporeal unwieldiness was, through a disciplinary diet, laid aside by candidates for the prize in racing; so carnal and worldly lusts, and all, whether from without or within, that would impede the heavenly runner, are the spiritual weight to be laid aside. "Encumbrance," all superfluous weight; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, and even harmless and otherwise useful things which would positively retard us (Mark 10:50, the blind man casting away his garment to come to Jesus; 9: 42-48; cf. Eph. 4:22; Col. 3:9, 10). the sin which doth so easily beset us—Greek, "sin which easily stands around us"; so LUTHER, "which always so clings to us"; "sinful propensity always surrounding us, ever present and ready" [WAHL]. It is not primarily "the sin," etc., but sin in general, with, however, special reference to "apostasy," against which he had already warned them, as one to which they might gradually be seduced; the besetting sin of the Hebrews, UNBELIEF. with patience—Greek, "in persevering endurance" (ch. 10:36). On "run" cf. I Corinthians 9:24, 25. 2. Looking unto—lit., "Looking from afar" (Note, ch. 11:26); fixing the eyes upon Jesus seated on the throne of God.

author—"Prince-leader." The same Greek is translated, "Captain (of salvation)," ch. 2:10; "Prince (of life)," Acts 3:15. Going before us as the Originator of our faith, and the Leader whose matchless example we are to follow always. In this He is distinguished from all those examples of faith in ch. 11. (Cf. I Cor. 11:1.) On His "faith" cf. ch. 2:13; 3:2. Believers have ever looked to Him (ch. 11:26; 13:8). finisher—Greek, "Perfecter," referring to ch. 11:40. of our faith—rather as Greek, "of the faith," including both His faith (as exhibited in what follows) and our faith. He fulfilled the ideal of faith Himself, and so, both as a vicarious offering and an example, He is the object of our faith.

for the joy . . . set before him—viz., of presently after sitting down at the right hand of the throne of God; including besides His own personal joy, the joy of sitting there as a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins. The coming joy disarmed of its sting the present pain. cross . . . shame—the great stumbling block to the Hebrews. "Despised," i.e., disregarded.

3. For—justifying his exhortation, "Looking unto Jesus." consider—by way of comparison with yourselves, so the Greek. contradiction—unbelief, and every kind of opposition (Acts 28:19). sinners—Sin assails us. Not sin, but sinners, contradicted Christ [BENGEL].

be wearied and faint—Greek, "lest ye weary fainting." Cf. Isaiah 49:4, 5, as a specimen of Jesus not being wearied out by the contradiction and strange unbelief of those among whom He labored, preaching as never man did, and exhibiting miracles wrought by His inherent power, as none else could do. 4. not yet resisted unto blood—image from pugilism, as he previously had the image of a race, both being taken from the great national Greek games. Ye have suffered the loss of goods, and been a gazing-stock by reproaches and afflictions; ye have not shed your blood (Note, ch. 18:7). "The athlete who hath seen his own blood, and who, though cast down by his opponent, does not let his spirits be cast down, who as often as he hath fallen hath risen the more determined, goes down to the encounter with great hope" [SENECA]. against sin—Sin is personified as an adversary; sin, whether within you, leading you to spare your blood, or in our adversaries, leading them to shed it, if they cannot through your faithfulness even unto blood, induce you to apostatize.

ably situated, ever surrounding the person and soliciting his acquiescence. What we term the "easily besetting sin" is the sin of our constitution, the sin of our trade, that in which our worldly honor, secular profit, and sensual gratification are most frequently felt and consulted. Some understand it of original sin, as that by which we are inveloped in body, soul, and spirit. Whatever it may be, the word gives us to understand that it is what meets us at every turn; that it is always presenting itself to us; that as a pair of compasses describe a circle by the revolution of one leg while the other is at rest in the center, so this, springing from that point of corruption within, called the "carnal mind," surrounds us in every place; we are bounded by it, and often hemmed in on every side. Let us run with patience the race. "Let us start, run on, and continue running" till we get to the goal. This figure is a favorite among the Greek writers.

2. Looking unto Jesus. "Looking off and on, or from and to"; looking off or from the world and all secular concerns to Jesus and all the spiritual and heavenly things connected with Him. This is still an allusion to the Grecian games. Those who ran were to keep their eyes fixed on the mark of the prize; they must keep the goal in view. The exhortation implies (1) That they should place all their hope and confidence in Christ, as their sole Helper in this race of faith; (2) That they should consider Him their Leader in this contest and imitate His example. The author and finisher of our faith. Archegos, translated here author, signifies in general captain or leader, or the first inventor of a thing; see chap. ii. 10. But the reference here seems to be to the brabeus, or judge in the games, whose business it was to admit the contenders and to give the prize to the conqueror. Jesus is here represented as this Officer; every Christian is a contender in this race of life, and for eternal life. The heavenly course is begun under Jesus, and under Him it is completed. He is the finisher by awarding the prize to them that are faithful unto death. Thus He is the author or the Judge under whom and by whose permission and direction, according to the rules of the heavenly race, they are permitted to enter the lists and commence the race; and He is the finisher, the "Perfecter," by awarding and giving the prize which consummates the combatants at the end of the race. Who for the joy that was set before him. The joy of fulfilling the will of the Father, Ps. xl. 6, etc., in tasting death for every man; and having endured the Cross and despised the shame of this ignominious death, He is set down at the right hand of God, ever appearing in the presence of God for us, and continuing His exhibition of himself as our Sacrifice, and His intercession as our Mediator.

3. For consider him. "Attentively observe" and "analyze" every part of His conduct, enter into His spirit, examine His motives and object, and remember that, as He acted, you are called to act; He will furnish you with the same Spirit, and will support you with the same strength. He bore a continual opposition of sinners against himself, but He conquered by meekness, patience, and perseverance; He has left you an example that you should follow His steps. If you trust in Him, you shall receive strength. Therefore, howsoever great your opposition may be, you shall not be weary; if you confide in and attentively look to Him, you shall have continual courage to go on, and never faint in your minds. Here is a continued allusion to the contenders in the Grecian games, who, when exhausted in bodily strength and courage, yielded the palm to their opponents, and were said "to be weary or exhausted"; "to be dissolved, disheartened, or to have lost all bravery and courage."

4. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood. Many of those already mentioned were martyrs for the truth; they persevered unto death, and lost their lives in bearing testimony to the truth. Though you have had opposition and persecution, yet you have not been called, in bearing your testimony against sin and sinners, to seal the truth with your blood. Striving against sin. An allusion to boxing at the Grecian games. In the former passages the apostle principally refers to the footraces.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He argues from the nature of those sufferings. They are divine chastisements; their heavenly Father has his hand in all; of this he has given them due notice, and they should not forget it, v. 5.

1. Those afflictions which may be truly persecution as far as men are concerned in them are fatherly rebukes and chastisements as far as God is concerned in them. Men persecute them because they are religious; God chastises them because they are not more so.

2. God has directed his people how they ought to behave themselves under all their afflictions. They must not despise the chastening of the Lord. Those who make light of affliction make light of God and make light of sin. They must not faint when they are rebuked.

3. Afflictions, though they may be the fruits of God's displeasure, are yet proofs of his paternal love to his people and care for them (v. 6, 7). The best of God's children have their faults and follies, which need to be corrected. He will correct sin in his own children; they are of his family. In this he acts as becomes a father; no wise and good father will wink at faults in his own children as he would in others.

To be suffered to go on in sin without a rebuke is a sad sign of alienation from God; such are bastards, not sons. They are the spurious offspring of another father, not of God, v. 7, 8.

4. Those that are impatient under the discipline of their heavenly father behave worse towards him than they would do towards earthly parents, v. 9, 10. It is the duty of children to give the reverence of submission to their correction when they have been disobedient. He recommends humble and submissive behaviour towards our heavenly Father, when under his correction. (1) Our earthly fathers are but the fathers of our flesh, but God is the Father of our spirits. Our fathers on earth were instrumental in the production of our bodies, which are but flesh. We must owe much more to him who is the Father of our spirits. (2) Our earthly parents chastened us for their own pleasure. Sometimes they did it to gratify their passion rather than to reform our manners. This is a weakness the fathers of our flesh are subject to. It should be for our profit. God loves his children so that he would have them to be as like himself as can be, and for this end he chastises them when they need it. (3) The fathers of our flesh corrected us for a few days, in our state of childhood, and when we came to maturity we loved and honoured them the more for it. Our whole life here is a state of childhood; when we come to a state of perfection we shall be fully reconciled to all the measures of God's discipline over us now.

(4) God's correction is no condemnation. He does it to prevent the death and destruction of their souls, that they may live to God, and be like God, and be for ever with him.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

5. forgotten—"utterly," so the Greek. Cf. vss. 15-17, in which he implies how utterly some of them had forgotten God's word. His exhortation ought to have more effect on you than the cheers and exhortations of the spectators have on the competitors striving in the games. which—Greek, "the which," of which the following is a specimen [ALFORD]. speaketh unto you—as in a dialogue or discourse, so the Greek, implying God's loving condescension (cf. Isa. 1:18). despise not—lit., "Do not hold of little account." Betraying a contumacious spirit of unbelief (ch. 3:12), as "faint" implies a broken-down, weak, and desponding spirit. "Chastening" is to be borne with "subjection" (vs. 9); "rebuke" (more severe than chastening) is to be borne with endurance (vs. 7). "Some in adversity kick against God's will, others despond; neither is to be done by the Christian, who is peculiarly the child of God. To him such adverse things occur only by the decree of God, and that designed in kindness, viz., to remove the defilements adhering to the believer, and to exercise his patience" [GROTIUS]. 6. (Rev. 3:19.) and—Greek, "yea and," "and moreover"; bringing out an additional circumstance. scourgeth—which draws forth "blood" (vs. 4). receiveth—accepts. Takes to Himself as a son "in whom He delighteth" (Prov. 3:12). 7. In vss. 7, 8 the need of "chastening" or "discipline" is inculcated; in vs. 9, the duty of those to whom it is administered. If—The oldest MSS. read, "With a view to chastening (i.e., since God's chastisement is with a view to your chastening, i.e., disciplinary amelioration) endure patiently"; so Vulgate. ALFORD translates it as indicative, not so well, "It is for chastisement that ye are enduring." dealeth with you—"beareth Himself toward you" in the very act of chastening. what son is he—"What son is there" even in ordinary life? Much more God as to His sons (Isa. 48:10; Acts 14:22). The most eminent of God's saints were the most afflicted. God leads them by a way they know not (Isa. 42:16). We too much look at each trial by itself, instead of taking it in connection with the whole plan of our salvation, as if a traveller were to complain of the steepness and roughness of one turn in the path, without considering that it led him into green pastures, on the direct road to the city of habitation. The New Testament alone uses the Greek term for education (paideia), to express "discipline" or correction, as of a child by a wise father. 8. if ye be without—excluded from participation in chastisement, and wishing to be so. all—all sons: all the worthies enumerated in ch. 11: all the witnesses (vs. 1). are—Greek, "have been made." then are ye bastards—of whom their fathers take no care whether they are educated or not; whereas every rightminded father is concerned for the moral well-being of his legitimate son. "Since then not to be chastised is a mark of bastardy, we ought [not to refuse, but] rejoice in chastisement, as a mark of our genuine sonship" [CHRYSOSTOM]. 9. fathers . . . which corrected us—rather as Greek, "We had the fathers of our flesh as correctors." subjection—See the punishment of insubordination, Deuteronomy 21:18. Father of spirits—contrasted with "the fathers of our flesh." "Generation by men is carnal, by God is spiritual" [BENGEL]. As "Father of spirits," He is both the Originator, and the Providential and Gracious Sustainer, at once of animal and spiritual life. Cf. "and LIVE," viz., spiritually; also vs. 10, "that we might be partakers of His holiness" (II Pet. 1:4). God is a spirit Himself, and the Creator of spirits like Himself, in contrast to men who are flesh, and the progenitors of flesh (John 3:6). Jesus our pattern "learned obedience" experimentally by suffering (ch. 5:8). and live—and so, thereby live spiritually and eternally. 10. Showing wherein the chastisement of our heavenly Father is preferable to that of earthly fathers. for a few days—i.e., with a view to our well-being in the few days of our earthly life: so the Greek. after their own pleasure—Greek, "according to what seemed fit to themselves." Their rule of chastening is what may seem fit to their own often erring judgment, temper, or caprice. The two defects of human education are: (1) the prevalence in it of a view to the interests of our short earthly term of days; (2) the absence in parents of the unerring wisdom of our heavenly Father. "They err much at one time in severity, at another in indulgence [I Sam. 3:13; Eph. 6:4], and do not so much chasten as THINK they chasten" [BENGEL]. that we might be partakers of his holiness—becoming holy as He is holy (John 15:2). To become holy like God is tantamount to being educated for passing eternity with God (vs. 14; II Pet. 1:4). So this "partaking of God's holiness" stands in contrast to the "few days"

ADAM CLARKE

5. And ye have forgotten. Or "Have you forgotten the exhortation?" This quotation is made from Prov. iii. 11-12, and shows that the address there, which at first sight appears to be from Solomon to his son or from some fatherly man to a person in affliction, is properly from God himself to any person in persecution, affliction, or distress. Despise not thou the chastening. "Do not neglect the correction of the Lord." That man neglects correction and profits not by it who does not see the hand of God in it or, in other words, does not fear the rod and Him who hath appointed it, and consequently does not humble himself under the mighty hand of God, deplore his sin, deprecate divine judgment, and pray for mercy. Nor faint. Do not be discouraged nor despair, for the reasons immediately alleged.

6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. Here is the reason why we should neither neglect correction nor faint under it. It is a proof of the fatherly love of God Almighty, and shows His most gracious designs towards us, from which we may be fully convinced that the affliction will prove the means of good to our souls if we make a proper use of it. And scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. This is a quotation from the Septuagint of Prov. iii. 12, of which place our version is: "Even as a father the son in whom he delighteth." But howsoever near this may appear to be the Hebrew, it bears scarcely any affinity to the apostle's words. The translation therefore of the Septuagint and apostle is perfectly consonant to the Hebrew text, and our version of Prov. iii. 12 is wrong.

7. If ye endure chastening. If you submit to His authority, humble yourselves under His hand, and pray for His blessing, you will find that He deals with you as beloved children, correcting you that He may make you partakers of His holiness. God dealeth with you as with sons. He acknowledges by this that you belong to the family, and that He, as your Father, has you under proper discipline. It is a maxim among the Jewish rabbins that "the love which is not conjoined with reproof is not genuine."

8. Then are ye bastards. This proceeds on the general fact that bastards are neglected in their manners and education; the fathers of such, feeling little affection for, or obligation to regard, their spurious issue. But all that are legitimate children are partakers of chastisement or "discipline"; for the original word does not imply stripes and punishments, but the whole "discipline" of a child, both at home and at school.

9. We have had fathers of our flesh. The fathers of our flesh, i.e., our natural parents, were correctors; and we reverenced them, notwithstanding their corrections often arose from whim or caprice. But shall we not rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits; to Him from whom we have received both body and soul; who is our Creator, Preserver, and Supporter; to whom both we and our parents owe our life and our blessings; and who corrects us only for our profit, that we may live and be "partakers of his holiness"? The apostle in asking, Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? alludes to the punishment of the stubborn and rebellious son, Deut. xxi. 18-21: "If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them: then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city . . . and they shall say . . . This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice . . . And all the man of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die."

10. For . . . a few days. The chastisement of our earthly parents lasted only a short time; that of our Heavenly Father also will be but a short time, if we submit. And as our parents ceased to correct when we learned obedience, so will our Heavenly Father when the end for which He sent the chastisement is accomplished. God delights not in the rod; judgment is His strange work.

5. The children of God ought not to judge of his dealings with them by present sense, but by reason, and faith, and experience, v. 11.

(1) The judgment of sense. Afflictions are not grateful to the sense, but grievous.

(2) The judgment of faith. Affliction produces peace, by producing more righteousness; for the fruit of righteousness is peace. Their great concern is that the chastening they are under may be endured by them with patience, and improved to a greater degree of holiness.

[1] That their affliction may be endured with patience, v. 12. A burden of affliction is apt to make the Christian's hands hang down, and his knees grow feeble, to dispirit him and discourage him; but this he must strive against; that he may the better run his spiritual race. Faith, and patience, and holy courage and resolution, will make him walk more steadily. He must encourage and not dispirit others. There are many that are in the way to heaven who yet walk but weakly and lamely in it. Such are apt to discourage one another; but it is their duty to help one another forward in the way to heaven.

[2] That their affliction may be improved to a greater degree of holiness, v. 14. Faith and patience will enable them to follow peace and holiness too. Sufferings are apt to sour the spirit and sharpen the passions; but the children of God must follow peace with all men. Peace and holiness are connected together. This true Christian peaceableness is never found separate from holiness. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

6. Where afflictions and sufferings for the sake of Christ are not considered by men as the chastisement of their heavenly Father, they will be a dangerous temptation to apostasy (v. 15, 16).

(1) A serious caveat against apostasy.

[1] The nature of apostasy. It is failing of the grace of God, coming short of a principle of true grace in the soul, and so coming short of the love and favour of God here and hereafter. The consequences of apostasy: where persons fail of having the true grace of God, a root of bitterness will spring up, corruption will prevail and break forth. It produces to themselves corrupt principles. It also produces bitter fruits to others.

of this life, with a view to which earthly fathers generally educate their sons. 11. joyous . . . grievous—Greek, "matter of joy . . . matter of grief." The objection that chastening is grievous is here anticipated and answered. It only seems so to those being chastened, whose judgments are confused by the present pain. Its ultimate fruit amply compensates for any temporary pain. The real object of the fathers in chastening is not that they find pleasure in the children's pain. Gratified wishes, our Father knows, would often be our real curses. fruit of righteousness—righteousness (in practice, springing from faith) is the fruit which chastening, the tree yields (Phil. 1:11). "Peaceable" (cf. Isa. 32:17): in contrast to the ordeal of conflict by which it has been won. "Fruit of righteousness to be enjoyed in peace after the conflict" [THOLUCK]. As the olive garland, the emblem of peace as well as victory, was put on the victor's brow in the games. exercised thereby—as athletes exercised in training for a contest. Chastisement is the exercise to give experience, and make the spiritual combatant irresistibly victorious (Rom. 5:3).

12. He addresses them as runners in a race, and pugilists, and warriors [CHRYSOSTOM]. The "wherefore" is resumed from vs. 1. lift up—In Isaiah 35:3, from which Paul here quotes, it is, "Strengthen ye the weak hands." The hand is the symbol of one's strength. ALFORD translates, "Put straight again the relaxed hands." English Version expresses the sense well. feeble—lit., "paralyzed"; a word used only by Luke, Paul's companion, in the New Testament. Lift up not only your own hands and knees, but also those of your brethren (cf. vs. 15; Isa. 35:4). 13. Quoted from Proverbs 4:26, LXX, "Make straight paths for thy feet." straight—i.e., leading by a straight road to joy and grace (vss. 1, 2, 15). Cease to "halt" between Judaism and Christianity [BENGEL]. paths—lit., "wheel tracks." Let your walk be so firm and so unanimous in the right direction that a plain track and "highway" may be thereby established for those who accompany and follow you, to perceive and walk in (Isa. 35:8) [ALFORD]. that which is lame—those "weak in the faith" (Rom. 14:1), having still Judaizing prejudices. be turned out of the way—(Prov. 4:27)—and, so missing the way, lose the prize of "the race" (vs. 1). rather he healed—Proper exercise of itself contributes to health; the habit of walking straight onward in the right way tends to healing. 14. follow peace with all men—with the brethren especially (Rom. 14:19), that so the "lame" among them be not "turned out of the way" (vs. 13), and that no one of them "fail of the grace of God" (vs. 15). holiness—a distinct Greek word from God's "holiness" (vs. 10). Translate here "sanctification." His is absolute holiness: our part is to put on His holiness, becoming "holy as He is holy," by sanctification. While "following peace with all men," we are not so to seek to please them, as to make God's will and our sanctification a secondary object; this latter must be our first aim. (Gal. 1:10). without which—Greek, "apart from which." no man shall see the Lord—no man as a son; in heavenly glory (Rev. 22:3, 4). In the East, none but the greatest favorites are admitted to the honor of seeing the king (cf. II Sam. 14:24). The Lord being pure and holy, none but the pure and holy shall see Him (Matt. 5:8). Without holiness in them, they could not enjoy Him who is holiness itself (Zech. 14:20). The connection of purity with seeing the Lord, appears in I John 3:2, 3; Ephesians 5:5. Contrast vs. 16 (cf. I Thess. 4:3). In Matthew 24:30; Revelation 1:7, it is said that all shall see the Lord; but, that shall be as a Judge, not as their lasting portion and God, which is meant here. The Greek verb does not denote the mere action of seeing, but the seer's state of mind to which the object is presented: so in Matthew 5:8 they shall truly comprehend God [TITTMANN]. None but the holy could appreciate the holy God, none else therefore shall abide in His presence. 15. lest any . . . fall—Greek, "lest any (viz., through sloth in running) failing," or "falling short of the grace of God . . . trouble you." The image is taken from a company of travellers, one of whom lags behind, and so never reaches the end of the long and laborious journey [CHRYSOSTOM]. root of bitterness—not merely a "bitter root," which might possibly bring forth sweet fruits; this, a root whose essence is "bitterness," never could. Paul here refers to Deuteronomy 29:18, "Lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood" (cf. Acts 8:23). Root of bitterness comprehends every person (cf. vs. 16) and every principle of doctrine or practice so radically corrupt as to spread corruption all around. The only safety is in rooting out such

11. No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous. Neither correction, wholesome restraint, domestic regulations, nor gymnastic discipline are pleasant to them that are thus exercised; but it is by these means that obedient children, scholars, and great men are made. And it is by God's discipline that Christians are made. He who does not bear the yoke of Christ is good for nothing to others, and never gains rest to his own soul. The peaceable fruit of righteousness. I.e., The joyous, prosperous fruits; those fruits by which we gain much, and through which we are made happy. Exercised thereby. "To the trained." There is still an allusion to the Grecian games, and in the word before us to those "gymnastic exercises" by which the candidates for the prizes were trained to the different kinds of exercises in which they were to contend when the games were publicly opened.

12. Wherefore lift up the hands. The apostle refers to Isa. xxxv. 3. The words are an address to persons almost worn out with sickness and fatigue, whose hands hang down, whose knees shake, and who are totally discouraged. These are exhorted to exert themselves, and take courage, with the assurance that they shall infallibly conquer if they persevere.

13. Make straight paths for your feet. That is, Take the straight path that is before you; do not go in crooked or rough ways, where are stones, briers, and thorns, by which you will be inevitably lamed, and so totally prevented from proceeding in the way; whereas if you go in the even, proper path, though you have been wounded by getting into a wrong way, that which was wounded will be healed by moderate, equal exercise, all impediments being removed. The application of all this to a correct, holy deportment in religious life is both natural and easy.

14. Follow peace with all men. Cultivate, as far as you possibly can, a good understanding, with both Jews and Gentiles. "Pursue peace" with the same care, attention, and diligence as beasts do their game; follow it through all places; trace it through all winding circumstances; and have it with all men, if you can with a safe conscience. And holiness. That state of continual "sanctification," that life of purity and detachment from the world and all its lusts, without which detachment and sanctity no man shall see the Lord—shall never enjoy His presence in the world of blessedness. "To see God," in the Hebrew phrase, is to "enjoy Him"; and without holiness of heart and life this is impossible. No soul can be fit for heaven that has not suitable dispositions for the place.

15. Looking diligently. "Looking about, over, and upon"; being constantly on your guard. Lest any man fail of the grace of God. "Lest any person should come behind, or fall off from, this grace or gift of God"; this state of salvation, viz., the gospel system or Christianity, for this is most evidently the meaning of the apostle. It is not the falling from a work of grace in their own souls, but from the gospel, to apostatize from which they had now many temptations; and to guard them against this, the whole Epistle was written. Lest any root of bitterness springing up. A root of bitterness signifies a "poisonous plant." The Hebrews call every species of poison a "bitter," and with considerable propriety, as most plants are poisonous in proportion to the quantum of the bitter principle they possess. The root of bitterness is here used metaphorically for a bad man, or a man holding unsound doctrines, and endeavoring to spread them in the church. Trouble you. This alludes to the effects of poison taken into the body. The blood itself (the principle, under God, of life) becomes putrescent; and probably

Many are defiled, tainted with those bad principles, and drawn into defiling practices.

[2] The apostle backs the caution with an awful example, that of Esau. Esau's sin. He profanely despised and sold the birthright, and all the advantages attending it. So do apostates.

Esau's punishment. His conscience was convinced of his sin and folly, when it was too late. He now saw that the blessing he had made so light of was worth the having. He was rejected of God: He found no place of repentance. Esau, in his great wickedness, had made the bargain, and God, in his righteous judgment, ratified and confirmed it.

(2) Apostasy from Christ is the fruit of preferring the gratification of the flesh to the blessing of God. Sinners will not always have such mean thoughts of the divine blessing and inheritance as now they have. When the day of grace is over they will find no place for repentance. Christians should never give up their hope of their Father's blessings by deserting their holy religion, to avoid suffering.

Verses 18–29

I. He shows how much the gospel church differs from the Jewish church, and how much it excels, v. 18–21. 1. It was a gross sensible state. Mount Sinai was a mount that might be touched (v. 18), a gross palpable place; so was the dispensation. The state of the gospel church on Mount Zion is more spiritual.

a root of bitterness. many—rather, "the many," i.e., the whole congregation. So long as it is hidden under the earth it cannot be remedied, but when it "springs up," it must be dealt with boldly. Still remember the caution (Matt. 13:26-30) as to rooting out persons. No such danger can arise in rooting out bad principles. 16. fornicator—(ch. 13:4; I Cor. 10:8). or profane—Fornication is nearly akin to gluttony, Esau's sin. He profanely cast away his spiritual privilege for the gratification of his palate. Genesis 25:34 graphically portrays him. An example well fitted to strike needful horror into the Hebrews, whosoever of them, like Esau, were only sons of Isaac according to the flesh [BENGEL]. for one morsel—The smallness of the inducement only aggravates the guilt of casting away eternity for such a trifle, so far is it from being a claim for mercy (cf. Gen. 3:6). One single act has often the greatest power either for good or for evil. So in the cases of Reuben and Saul, for evil (Gen. 49:4; I Chron. 5:1; I Sam. 13:12-14); and, on the other hand, for good, Abraham and Phinehas (Gen. 12:1, etc.; 15:5, 6; Num. 25:6-15). his birthright—Greek, "his own (so the oldest MSS. read, intensifying the suicidal folly and sin of the act) rights of primogeniture," involving the high spiritual privilege of being ancestor of the promised seed, and heir of the promises in Him. The Hebrews whom Paul addressed, had, as Christians, the spiritual rights of primogeniture (cf. vs. 23): he intimates that they must exercise holy selfcontrol, if they wish not, like Esau, to forfeit them. 17. afterwards—Greek, "even afterward." He despised his birthright, accordingly also he was despised and rejected when he wished to have the blessing. As in the believer's case, so in the unbeliever's, there is an "afterwards" coming, when the believer shall look on his past griefs, and the unbeliever on his past joys, in a very different light from that in which they were respectively viewed at the time. Cf. "Nevertheless afterward . . ." vs. 11, with the "afterward" here. when he would—when he wished to have. "He that will not when he may, when he will, shall have nay" (Prov. 1:24-30; Luke 13:34, 35; 19:42). he was rejected—not as to every blessing, but only that which would have followed the primogeniture. he found no place of repentance—The cause is here put for the effect, "repentance" for the object which Esau aimed at in his so-called repentance, viz., the change of his father's determination to give the chief blessing to Jacob. Had he sought real repentance with tears he would have found it (Matt. 7:7). But he did not find it because this was not what he sought. What proves his tears were not those of one seeking true repentance is, immediately after he was foiled in his desire, he resolved to murder Jacob! He shed tears, not for his sin, but for his suffering the penalty of his sin. His were tears of vain regret and remorse, not of repentance. For—The fact that we are not under the law, but under a higher, and that the last dispensation, the Gospel, with its glorious privileges, is the reason why especially the Hebrew Christians should "look diligently . . ." (vss. 15, 16). are not come—Greek, "have not come near to." Alluding to Deuteronomy 4:11, "Ye came near and stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire . . . with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness." "In your coming near unto God, it has not been to. . . ." the mount—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate omit "the mount." But still, "the mount" must be supplied from vs. 22. that might be touched—palpable and material. Not that any save Moses was allowed to touch it (Exod. 19:12, 13). The Hebrews drew near to the material Mount Sinai with material bodies; we, to the spiritual mount in the spirit. The "darkness" was that formed by the clouds hanging round the mount; the "tempest" accompanied the thunder. 19. trumpet—to rouse attention, and herald God's approach (Exod. 19:16). entreated that the word should not be spoken—lit., "that speech should not be added to them"; not that they refused to hear the word of God, but they wished that God should not Himself speak, but employ Moses as His mediating spokesman. "The voice of words" was the Decalogue, spoken by God Himself, a voice issuing forth, without any form being seen: after which "He added no more" (Deut. 5:22). 20. that which was commanded—"the interdict" [TITTMANN]. A stern interdictory mandate is meant. And—rather, "Even if a beast (much more a man) touch. . . ." or thrust through with a dart—omitted in the oldest MSS. The full interdict in Exodus 19:12, 13 is abbreviated here; the beast alone, being put for "whether man or beast"; the stoning, which applies to the human offender, alone being specified, the beast's punishment, viz., the being thrust through with a dart, to this the intelligent apostle alludes when he says, and thereby many be defiled, "corrupted or contaminated."

16. Lest there be any fornicator. Any licentious person who would turn the gospel of the grace of God into lasciviousness. Or profane person, as Esau. It is not intimated that Esau was a fornicator; and the disjunctive or separates the profane person from the fornicator. And Esau is here termed profane because he so far disregarded the spiritual advantages connected with his rights of primogeniture that he alienated the whole for a single mess of pottage. See the note on Gen. xxv. 34. The word which we translate profane was applied to those who were not initiated into the sacred mysteries or who were despisers of sacred things, and consequently were to be denied admittance to the Temple and were not permitted to assist at holy rites. Indeed, among the Greeks it signified any thing or person which was "not consecrated to the gods." The Latin profanus, from which we have our word, is compounded of procul a fano, "far from the temple," properly an "irreligious man." Sold his birthright. The firstborn, in patriarchal times: (1) Had a right to the priesthood, Exod. xxii. 29; (2) And a double portion of all the father's possessions, Deut. xxi. 17; (3) And was lord over his brethren, Gen. xxvii. 29, 37; xlix. 3; (4) And in the family of Abraham the firstborn was the very source whence the Messiah, as the Redeemer of the world, and the Church of God were to spring. In short, the rights of primogeniture were among the most noble, honorable, and spiritual in the ancient world.

17. When he would have inherited the blessing. When he wished to have the lordship over the whole family conveyed to him, and sought it earnestly with tears, he found no place for a "change" in his father's mind and counsel, who now perceived that it was the will of God that Jacob should be made lord of all. Repentance. Here metanoia is not to be taken in a theological sense, as implying contrition for sin, but merely "change of mind or purpose"; nor does the word refer here to Esau at all, but to his father, whom Esau could not, with all his tears and entreaties, persuade to reverse what he had done. "I have blessed him," said he, "yea, and he must be blessed"; I cannot reverse it now. Nothing spoken here by the apostle, nor in the history in Genesis to which he refers, concerns the eternal state of either of the two brothers. The use made of the transaction by the apostle is of great importance: Take heed lest, by apostatizing from the gospel, you forfeit all right and title to the heavenly birthright, and never again be able to retrieve it; because they who reject the gospel reject the only means of salvation.

18-21. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched. I believe the words should be translated "to a palpable or material mountain"; for that it was not a mountain that on this occasion might be touched, the history, Exod. xix. 12-13, shows; and the apostle himself, in v. 20, confirms. It is called here a palpable or material mount to distinguish it from that spiritual "mount Sion," of which the apostle is speaking.

The apostle's design is to show that the dispensation of the law engendered terror; that it was most awful and exclusive; that it belonged only to the Jewish people; and that, even to them, it was so terrible that they could not endure that which was commanded, and entreated that God would not communicate with them in His own person, but by the ministry of Moses.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. It was a dark dispensation. Upon that mount there were blackness and darkness. The gospel state is clear and bright. 3. It was a dreadful and terrible dispensation; the Jews could not bear the terror of it, v. 19. Yea, Moses himself said, I exceedingly fear and quake. The gospel state is mild, and kind, suited to our weak frame. 4. It was a limited dispensation; all might not approach to that mount. Under the gospel we have all access with boldness to God. This was the state of the Jewish church, fitted to set forth the strict and tremendous justice of God.

II. He shows how much the gospel church represents the church triumphant in heaven. The gospel church is called Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem. In coming to Mount Zion, believers come into heavenly places, and into a heavenly society.

1. Into heavenly places. (1) Unto the city of the living God. God has taken up his gracious residence in the gospel church, which on that account is an emblem of heaven. (2) To the heavenly Jerusalem, as free denizens there.

2. To a heavenly society. (1) To an innumerable company of angels. Those who by faith are joined to the gospel church are joined to the angels, and shall at length be like them. (2) To the general assembly and church of the first-born, that are written in heaven, to the universal church, however dispersed. By faith we come to them, have communion with them in the same blessed hope, and walk in the same way of holiness. Here will be the general assembly of the first-born, the saints of former and earlier times. The names of these are written in heaven: they have a name in God's house, and are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, as citizens are enrolled in the livery-books.

(3) To God the Judge of all, that great God who will judge both Jew and Gentile according to the law they are under.

(4) To the spirits of just men made perfect; to the best sort of men, the righteous, to the best part of just men, their spirits, and to these in their best state, made perfect.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

being left to be understood. 21. the sight—the vision of God's majesty. quake—Greek, "I am in trembling"; "fear" affected his mind; "trembling," his body. Moses is not recorded in Exodus to have used these words. But Paul, by inspiration, supplies (cf. Acts 20:35; II Tim. 3:8) this detail. We read in Deuteronomy 9:19, LXX, of similar words used by Moses after breaking the two tables, through fear of God's anger at the people's sin in making the golden calves. He doubtless similarly "feared" in hearing the ten commandments spoken by the voice of Jehovah. 22. are come—Greek, "have come near unto" (cf. Deut. 4:11). Not merely, ye shall come, but, ye have already come. Mount Sion—antitypical Sion, the heavenly Jerusalem, of which the spiritual invisible Church (of which the first foundation was laid in literal Zion, John 12:15; I Pet. 2:6) is now the earnest; and of which the restored literal Jerusalem hereafter shall be the earthly representative, to be succeeded by the everlasting and "new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven" (Rev. 21:2-27; cf. ch. 11:10). 22, 23. to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church—The city of God having been mentioned, the mention of its citizens follows. Believers being like the angels (Job 1:6; 38: 7), "sons of God," are so their "equals" (Luke 20: 36); and, being reconciled through Christ, are adopted into God's great and blessed family. For the full completion of this we pray (Matt. 6:10). English Version arrangement is opposed: (1) by "and" always beginning each new member of the whole sentence; (2) "general assembly and Church," form a kind of tautology; (3) "general assembly," or rather, "festal full assembly," "the jubilant full company" (such as were the Olympic games, celebrated with joyous singing, dancing, etc.), applies better to the angels above, ever hymning God's praises, than to the Church, of which a considerable part is now militant on earth. Translate therefore, "to myriads (ten thousands, cf. Deut. 33:2; Ps. 68: 17; Dan. 7:10; Jude 14; namely), the full festal assembly of angels, and the Church of the firstborn." Angels and saints together constitute the ten thousands. Cf. "all angels, all nations" Matthew 25: 31, 32. Messiah is pre-eminently "the First-born," or "First-begotten" (ch. 1:6), and all believers become so by adoption. Cf. the type, Leviticus 3: 12, 45, 50; I Peter 1:18. As the kingly and priestly succession was in the first-born, and as Israel was God's "first-born" (Exod. 4:22; cf. 13:2), and a "kingdom of priests" to God (Exod. 19:6), so believers (Rev. 1:6). written in heaven—enrolled as citizens there. All those who at the coming of "God the Judge of all" (which clause therefore naturally follows), shall be found "written in heaven," i.e., in the Lamb's book of life. Though still fighting the good fight on earth, still, in respect to your destiny, and present life of faith which substantiates things hoped for, ye are already members of the heavenly citizenship. "We are one citizenship with angels; to which it is said in the psalm, Glorious things are spoken of thee, thou city of God" [AUGUSTINE]. I think ALFORD wrong in restricting "the Church of the first-born written in heaven," to those militant on earth; it is rather, all those who at the Judge's coming shall be found written in heaven (the true patent of heavenly nobility; contrast "written in the earth," Jer. 17:13, and Esau's profane sale of his birthright, vs. 16); these all, from the beginning to the end of the world, forming one Church to which every believer is already come. The firstborn of Israel were "written" in a roll (Num. 3:40). the spirits of just men made perfect—at the resurrection, when the "JUDGE" shall appear, and believers' bliss shall be consummated by the union of the glorified body with the spirit; the great hope of the New Testament (Rom. 8:20-23; I Thess. 4:16). The place of this clause after "the JUDGE OF ALL," is my objection to BENGEL and ALFORD'S explanation, the souls of the just in their separate state perfected. Cf. (Note) ch. 11:39, 40, to which he refers here, and which I think confirms my view; those heretofore spirits, but now to be perfected by being clothed upon with the body. Still the phrase, "spirits of just men made perfect," not merely "just men made perfect," may favor the reference to the happy spirits in their separate state. The Greek is not "the perfected spirits," but "the spirits of the perfected just." In no other passage are the just said to be perfected before the resurrection, and the completion of the full number of the elect (Rev. 6:11); I think, therefore, "spirits of the just," may here be used to express the just whose predominant element in their perfected state shall be spirit. So spirit and spirits are used of a man or men in the body, under the influence of the spirit, the opposite of flesh

ADAM CLARKE

And even to Moses, who held the highest intimacy with Jehovah, the revealed glories, the burning fire, the blackness, the darkness, the tempest, the loud-sounding trumpet, and the voice of words were so terrible that he said, "I exceedingly fear and tremble." These were the things which were exhibited on that material mountain; but the gospel dispensation is one grand, copious, and interesting display of the infinite love of God. It is all encouragement; breathes nothing but mercy; is not an exclusive system; embraces the whole human race; has Jesus, the sinner's Friend, for its Mediator; is ratified by His blood; and is suited, most gloriously suited, to all the wants and wishes of every soul of man.

22. But ye are come unto mount Sion. In order to enter fully into the apostle's meaning we must observe: (1) That the Church, which is called here the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and mount Sion, is represented under the notion of a city. (2) That the great assembly of believers in Christ is here opposed to the congregation of the Israelites assembled at Mount Sinai. (3) That the innumerable company of angels is here opposed to those angels by whom the law was ushered in, Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19. (4) That the gospel "firstborn," whose names are "written in heaven," are here opposed to the enrolled firstborn among the Israelites, Exod. xxiv. 5; xix. 22. (5) That the "mediator of the new covenant," the Lord Jesus, is here opposed to Moses, the mediator of the old. (6) And that "the blood of sprinkling," of Christ, our High Priest, refers to the act of Moses, Exod. xxiv. 8: "And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." The heavenly Jerusalem. This phrase means the Church of the New Testament. To an innumerable company of angels. "To myriads, tens of thousands, of angels." These are represented as the attendants upon God when He manifests himself in any external manner to mankind. When He gave the law at Mount Sinai, it is intimated that myriads of these holy beings attended Him. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place," Ps. lxviii. 17. And when He shall come to judge the world, He will be attended with a similar company. "Thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him," Dan. vii. 10. In both these cases, as in several others, these seem to be, speaking after the manner of men, the bodyguard of the Almighty.

23. To the general assembly. This word is joined to the preceding by some of the best MSS., and is quoted in connection by several of the fathers: "Ye are come . . . to the general assembly of innumerable angels"; and this is probably the true connection. The firstborn. Those who first received the gospel of Christ, and who are elsewhere termed the "firstfruits." This is spoken in allusion to the firstborn among the Israelites, who were all considered as the Lord's property, and were dedicated to Him. The Jews gave the title "firstborn" to those who were very eminent or excellent, what we would term the head or top of his kin. The church of the firstborn is the assembly of the most excellent. Which are written in heaven. Who are enrolled as citizens of the New Jerusalem, and are entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the Church here and of heaven above. This is spoken in allusion to the custom of enrolling or writing on tables, etc., the names of all the citizens of a particular city; and all those thus registered were considered as having a right to live there, and to enjoy all its privileges. God the Judge of all. The supreme God is ever present in this general assembly. To Him they are all gathered; by Him they are admitted to all those rights, etc.; under His inspection they continue to act; and it is He alone who erases from the register those who act unworthily of their citizenship. Judge here is to be taken in the Jewish use of the term, i.e., one who exercises sovereign rule and authority. The spirits of just men made perfect. We cannot understand these terms without the assistance of Jewish phraseology. The Jews divide mankind into three classes: (1) the just perfect,

MATTHEW HENRY

(5) To Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. This is none of the least of the many encouragments there are to perseverance. [1] The gospel covenant is a new covenant, distinct from the covenant of works. [2] Christ is the Mediator of this new covenant. [3] This covenant is ratified by the blood of Christ sprinkled upon our consciences. This blood of Christ pacifies God and purifies the consciences of men.

[4] This is speaking blood, and it speaks better things than that of Abel. It speaks to God in behalf of sinners; it pleads not for vengeance, but for mercy. It speaks to sinners, in the name of God. It speaks pardon to their sins, peace to their souls.

III. The apostle closes the chapter by improving the argument in a manner suitable to the weight of it (v. 25, &c.). Then he spoke on earth, now he speaks from heaven.

1. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner he justly expects from them the most strict attention. He now speaks from a higher and more glorious throne—heaven. He speaks now more powerfully and effectually. Then indeed his voice shook the earth, but now he hath shaken not only the earth, but the heavens. It is by the gospel from heaven that God shook to pieces the Jewish nation, and introduced a new state of the church.

2. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner, the guilt of those who refuse him is the greater, v. 25.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(John 3:6). The resurrection bodies of the saints shall be bodies in which the spirit shall altogether preponderate over the animal soul (Note, I Cor. 15:44). 24. new—not the usual term (kaine) applied to the Christian covenant (ch. 9:15), which would mean new as different from, and superseding the old; but Greek, nea, recent, lately established, having the freshness of youth, as opposed to age. The mention of Jesus, the Perfecter of our faith (vs. 2), and Himself perfected through sufferings and death, in His resurrection and ascension (ch. 2:10; 5:9), is naturally suggested by the mention of "the just made perfect" at their resurrection (cf. ch. 7: 22). Paul uses "Jesus," dwelling here on Him as the Person realized as our loving friend, not merely in His official character as the Christ. and to the blood of sprinkling—here enumerated as distinct from "Jesus." BENGEL reasonably argues as follows: His blood was entirely "poured out" of His body by the various ways in which it was shed, His bloody sweat, the crown of thorns, the scourging, the nails, and after death the spear, just as the blood was entirely poured out and extravasated from the animal sacrifices of the law. It was incorruptible (I Pet. 1:18, 19). No Scripture states it was again put into the Lord's body. At His ascension, as our great High Priest, He entered the heavenly holiest place "BY His own blood" (not after shedding His blood, nor with the blood in His body, but), carrying it separately from his body (cf. the type, ch. 9:7, 12, 25; 13:11). Paul does not say, by the efficacy of His blood, but, "by His own proper blood" (ch. 9:12); not MATERIAL blood, but "the blood of Him who, through the eternal Spirit, offered Himself without spot unto God" (ch. 9:14). So in ch. 10:29, the Son of God and the blood of the covenant wherewith (the professor) was sanctified, are mentioned separately. Also in ch. 13:12, 20; also cf. ch. 10:19, with 21. So in the Lord's Supper (I Cor. 10:16; 11:24-26), the body and blood are separately represented. The blood itself, therefore, continues still in heaven before God, the perpetual ransom-price of "the eternal covenant" (ch. 13:20). Once for all Christ sprinkled the blood peculiarly for us at His ascension (ch. 9:12). speaketh better things than that of Abel—viz., than the sprinkling (the best MSS. read the article masculine, which refers to "sprinkling," not to "blood," which last is neuter) of blood by Abel in his sacrifice spake. This comparison between two things of the same kind (viz., Christ's sacrifice, and Abel's sacrifice) is more natural, than between two things different in kind and in results (viz., Christ's sacrifice, and Abel's own blood [ALFORD], which was not a sacrifice at all); cf. ch. 11:4; Genesis 4:4. This accords with the whole tenor of the Epistle, and of this passage in particular (vss. 18-22), which is to show the superiority of Christ's sacrifice and the new covenant, to the Old Testament sacrifices (of which Abel's is the first recorded; it, moreover, was testified to by God as acceptable to Him above Cain's), cf. ch. 9 and 10. The word "better" implies superiority to something that is good: but Abel's own blood was not at all good for the purpose for which Christ's blood was efficacious; nay, it cried for vengeance. 25. refuse not—through unbelief. him that speaketh—God in Christ. As the blood of sprinkling is represented as speaking to God for us, vs. 24; so here God is represented as speaking to us (ch. 1:1, 2). His word now is the prelude of the last "shaking" of all things (vs. 27). The same word which is heard in the Gospel from heaven, will shake heaven and earth (vs. 26). who refused him—Greek, "refusing as they did." Their seemingly submissive entreaty that the word should not be spoken to them by God any more (vs. 19), covered over refractory hearts, as their subsequent deeds showed (ch. 3:16). that spake—revealing with oracular warnings His divine will: so the Greek. if we turn away—Greek, "we who turn away." The word implies greater refractoriness than "refused," or "declined." him that speaketh from heaven—God, by His Son in the Gospel, speaking from His heavenly throne. Hence, in Christ's preaching frequent mention is made of "the kingdom of the heavens" (Greek, Matt. 3:2). 26. then shook—when He gave the law on Sinai. now—under the Gospel. promised—The announcement of His coming to break up the present order of things, is to the ungodly a terror, to the godly a promise, the fulfilment of which they look for with joyful hope. Yet once more—Cf. my Notes, Haggai 2:6, 21, 22, both of which passages are condensed into one here. The shaking began at the first coming of Messiah; it will be completed at His second coming, prodigies in the world of nature accompanying

(2) the wicked perfect, (3) those between. The "just perfect" are those (1) who have conquered all brutal appetites and gross passions, (2) who have stood in the time of strong temptation, (3) who give alms with a sincere heart, (4) who worship the true God only, (5) who are not invidious, (6) from whom God has taken evil concupiscence, and given the good principle. In several parts of this Epistle teleios, "the just man," signifies one who has a full knowledge of the Christian system, who is justified and saved by Christ Jesus; and the teteleiomenoi used here are the adult Christians, who are opposed to the babes in knowledge and grace. See chap. v. 12-14; viii. 11; and Gal. iv. 1-3. The spirits of just men made perfect, or the "righteous perfect," are the full-grown Christians; those who are justified by the blood and sanctified by the Spirit of Christ. Being come to such implies that spiritual union which the disciples of Christ have with each other, and which they possess how far soever separate. For they are all joined in one Spirit, Eph. ii. 18; they are "in the unity of the Spirit," Eph. iv. 3-4; "and of one soul," Acts iv. 32. This is a unity which was never possessed even by the Jews themselves in their best state; it is peculiar to real Christianity.

24. And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant. The old covenant and its mediator, Moses, are passed away. See chap. viii. 13. The new covenant, i.e., the gospel, is now in force, and will be to the end of the world; and Jesus, the Son of God, the brightness of the Father's glory, the Maker and Preserver of all things, the Saviour and the Judge of all men, is its Mediator. To the blood of sprinkling. This is an allusion, as was before observed, to the sprinkling of the blood of the covenant sacrifice upon the people when that covenant was made upon Mount Sinai; to the sprinkling of the blood of the sin offerings before the mercy seat; and probably to the sprinkling of the blood of the paschal lamb on their houses, to prevent their destruction by the destroying angel. But all these sprinklings were partial and inefficacious, and had no meaning but as they referred to the Blood of sprinkling under the new covenant. Better things than that of Abel. God accepted Abel's sacrifice, and was well-pleased with it; for Abel was a righteous man, and offered his sacrifice by faith in the great promise. But the blood of Christ's sacrifice was infinitely more precious than the blood of Abel's sacrifice, as Jesus is infinitely greater than Abel; and the blood of Christ avails for the sins of the whole world, whereas the blood of Abel's sacrifice could avail only for himself.

25. See, "take heed," that ye refuse not him, the Lord Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, who now speaketh from heaven, by His gospel, to the Jews and to the Gentiles, having in His incarnation come down from God. Him that spake on earth. Moses, who spoke on the part of God to the Hebrews, every transgression of whose word "received a just recompence of reward," none being permitted to escape punishment. Consequently, if you turn away from Christ, who speaks to you from heaven, you may expect a much sorer punishment, the offense against God being so much the more heinous as the privileges slighted are more important and glorious.

26. Whose voice then shook the earth. Namely, at the giving of the law on Mount Sinai; and from this it seems that it was the voice of Jesus that then shook the earth, and that it was He who came down on the mount.

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

We must, in approaching God, remember what we have received of Him; and is it not wonderful that it should be written, "We receiving a kingdom"? What a gift to receive! This is a divine gift; we have received, not a pauper's pension, but a kingdom—"a kingdom which cannot be moved." The old dispensation or kingdom has passed away; its ceremonial laws are abrogated; its very spirit is superseded by a higher spirit, and we have entered upon another kingdom in which the ruling principle is not law but love. We are not under the yoke of Moses, but we are the subjects of King Jesus, whose yoke is easy and whose burden is light. The kingdom of Jesus will never end while time shall last, for He is the King Eternal and Immortal; neither will His laws be changed, nor shall His subjects die. Till that day when He shall deliver up the kingdom unto God, even the Father: and God shall be all in all, Jesus must reign; and even when the earthly mediatorial reign is consummated, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven, shall be continued unto us and we shall still be members and citizens of it. We have received an eternal kingdom, and for this we ought to be eternally grateful. The shadows have vanished, but the substance abides: we have risen out of the types of Judaism into His kingdom by whom grace and truth have come unto us. This gospel state abideth; above the wreck of all things it remains, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Ours is the kingdom of Jesus Christ, in which the gospel is the law, believers are the privileged subjects, and grace and glory are the revenue—a kingdom daily growing in brightness, a kingdom which shall consummate its glory in the eternal world when Christ shall have put all enemies under His feet, and His people shall reign with Him forever and ever.

—The Treasury of the New Testament

It was by the sound of the gospel trumpet that a new kingdom was erected for God in the world, which can never be so shaken as to be removed. This was a change made once for all. The apostle justly concludes, (1) How necessary it is for us to obtain grace from God, to serve him acceptably. We lose all our labour in religion if we be not accepted of God.

(2) We cannot worship God acceptably, unless we worship him with godly reverence and fear. As faith, so holy fear, is necessary to acceptable worship. (3) It is only the grace of God that enables us to worship God in a right manner. (4) God is the same just and righteous God under the gospel that he appeared to be under the law. He is in himself a consuming fire; that is, a God of strict justice.

the overthrow of all kingdoms that oppose Messiah. The Hebrew is lit., "it is yet one little," i.e., a single brief space till the series of movements begins ending in the advent of Messiah. Not merely the earth, as at the establishment of the Sinaitic covenant, but heaven also is to be shaken. The two advents of Messiah are regarded as one, the complete shaking belonging to the second advent, of which the presage was given in the shakings at the first advent: the convulsions connected with the overthrow of Jerusalem shadowing forth those about to be at the overthrow of all the God-opposed kingdoms by the coming Messiah. 27. this word, Yet once more—So Paul, by the Spirit, sanctions the LXX rendering of Haggai 2:6, giving an additional feature to the prophecy in the Hebrew, as rendered in English Version, not merely that it shall be in a little while, but that it is to be "once more" as the final act. The stress of his argument is on the "ONCE." Once for all; once and for ever. "In saying 'once more,' the Spirit implies that something has already passed, and something else shall be which is to remain, and is no more to be changed to something else; for the once is exclusive, i.e., not many times" [ESTIUS]. those things that are shaken—the heaven and the earth. As the shaking is to be total, so shall the removal be, making way for the better things that are unremovable. Cf. the Jewish economy (the type of the whole present order of things) giving way to the new and abiding covenant: the forerunner of the everlasting state of bliss. as of things . . . made—viz., of this present visible creation: cf. II Corinthians 5:1; and ch. 9:11, "made with hands . . . of this creation," i.e., things so made at creation that they would not remain of themselves, but be removed. The new abiding heaven and earth are also made by God, but they are of a higher nature than the material creation, being made to partake of the divine nature of Him who is not made: so in this relation, as one with the uncreated God, they are regarded as not of the same class as the things made. The things made in the former sense do not remain; the things of the new heaven and earth, like the uncreated God, "shall REMAIN before God" (Isa. 66:22). The Spirit, the seed of the new and heavenly being, not only of the believer's soul, but also of the future body, is an uncreated and immortal principle. 28. receiving—as we do, in prospect and sure hope, also in the possession of the Spirit the first fruits. This is our privilege as Christians. let us have grace—"let us have thankfulness" [ALFORD after CHRYSOSTOM]. But (1) this translation is according to classical Greek, not Paul's phraseology for "to be thankful." (2) "To God" would have been in that case added. (3) "Whereby we may serve God," suits the English Version "grace" (i.e. Gospel grace, the work of the Spirit, producing faith exhibited in serving God), but does not suit "thankfulness." acceptably—Greek, "wellpleasingly." reverence and godly fear—The oldest MSS. read, "reverent caution and fear." Reverent caution (same Greek as in ch. 5:7; see Note there) lest we should offend God, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Fear lest we should bring destruction on ourselves. 29. Greek, "For even": "for also"; introducing an additional solemn incentive to diligence. Quoted from Deuteronomy 4:24. our God—in whom we hope, is also to be feared. He is love; yet there is another side of His character; God has wrath against sin (ch. 10: 27, 31).

ADAM CLARKE

Not the earth only, but also heaven. Probably referring to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and the total abolition of the political and ecclesiastical constitution of the Jews, the one being signified by the earth, the other by heaven; for the Jewish state and worship are frequently thus termed in the prophetic writings. And this seems to be the apostle's meaning, as he evidently refers to Hag. ii. 6, where this event is predicted. It may also remotely refer to the final dissolution of all things.

27. The removing of those things that are shaken. The whole of the Jewish polity, which had been in a shaken state from the time that Judea had fallen under the power of the Romans. As of things that are made. That is, subjects intended to last only for a time. God never designed that the Jewish religion should become general, nor be permanent. Those things which cannot be shaken. The whole gospel system, which cannot be moved by the power of man. May remain. Be permanent, God designing that this shall be the last dispensation of His grace and mercy, and that it shall continue till the earth and the heavens are no more.

28. We receiving a kingdom. The gospel dispensation, frequently termed the "kingdom of God" and the "kingdom of heaven," because in it God reigns among men, and He reigns in the hearts of them that believe; and His kingdom is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Which cannot be moved. Which never can fail, because it is the last dispensation. Let us have grace. "Let us have, keep, or hold fast, the benefit or gift," that is, the heavenly Kingdom which God has given us. This is the meaning of the word, 2 Cor. viii. 4, and is so rendered by our translators; and it is only by this heavenly gift of the gospel that we can serve God acceptably, for He can be pleased with no service that is not performed according to the gospel of His Son. If we prefer the common meaning of the word grace, it comes to the same thing. Without the grace, the especial succor and influence of Christ, we cannot serve, "pay religious worship to," God; for He receives no burnt offering that is not kindled by fire from His own altar. Acceptably. In such a way as to "please" Him well. And the offering with which He is well pleased, He will graciously accept; and if He accept our service, His Spirit will testify in our conscience that our ways please Him. When Abel sacrifices, God is well-pleased; where Cain offers, there is no approbation. Reverence. With "modesty." Godly fear. "Religious fear." We have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," but let that boldness be ever tempered with "modesty" and "religious fear"; for we should never forget that we have sinned, and that God "is a consuming fire."

29. For our God is a consuming fire. The apostle quotes Deut. iv. 24, and by doing so he teaches us this great truth, that sin under the gospel is as abominable in God's sight as it was under the law; and that the man who does not labor to serve God with the principle and in the way already prescribed will find that fire to consume him which would otherwise have consumed his sin.

The apostle calls the believing Hebrews to the performance of many excellent duties.

I. To brotherly love (v. 1). The spirit of Christianity is a spirit of love. Faith works by love. The true religion is the strongest bond of friendship. This brotherly love was in danger of being lost, and that in a time of persecution, when it would be most necessary. Christians should always love and live as brethren, and the more they grow in devout affection to God their heavenly Father, the more they will grow in love to one another for his sake.

II. To hospitality, v. 2. We must add to brotherly kindness, charity. The duty required—to entertain strangers. Seeing they are without any certain dwelling place, we should allow them room in our hearts and in our houses, as we have opportunity and ability.

VSS. 1-25. EXHORTATION TO VARIOUS GRACES, ESPECIALLY CONSTANCY IN FAITH, FOLLOWING JESUS AMIDST REPROACHES. CONCLUSION, WITH PIECES OF INTELLIGENCE AND SALUTATIONS. 1. brotherly love—a distinct special manifestation of "charity" or "love" (II Pet. 1:7). The Church of Jerusalem, to which in part this Epistle was addressed, was distinguished by this grace, we know from Acts (cf. ch. 6:10; 10:32-34; 12:12, 13). continue—Charity will itself continue. See that it continue with you. 2. Two manifestations of "brotherly love," hospitality and care for those in bonds. Be not forgetful—implying it was a duty which they all recognized, but which they might forget to act on (vss. 3, 7, 16). The enemies of Christianity themselves have noticed the practice of this virtue among Christians [JULIAN, Ep. 49]. entertained angels unawares—Abraham and Lot did so (Gen. 18:2; 19:1). To obviate the natural distrust felt of strangers, Paul says, an unknown guest

1. Let brotherly love continue. Feel for, comfort, and support each other; and remember that he who professes to love God should love his brother also. They had this brotherly love among them; they should take care to retain it. As God is remarkable for His "philanthropy," or love to man, so should they be for philadelphia, or love to each other. See the note on Titus iii. 4.

2. To entertain strangers. In those early times, when there were scarcely any public inns or houses of entertainment, it was an office of charity and mercy to receive, lodge, and entertain travellers; and this is what the apostle particularly recommends. Entertained angels. Abraham and Lot are the persons particularly referred to. Their history, the angels whom they

The motive: Thereby some have entertained angels unawares. God has often bestowed honours and favours upon his hospitable servants, beyond all their thoughts, unawares.

III. To Christian sympathy, v. 3.

1. The duty. Those that are themselves at liberty must sympathise with those that are in bonds and adversity, as if they were bound with them in the same chain.

2. The reason of the duty: As being yourselves in the body; not only in the body natural, but in the same mystical body. It would be unnatural in Christians not to bear each other's burdens.

IV. To purity and chastity, v. 4. A recommendation of God's ordinance of marriage, that it is honourable in all. It is honourable and happy, when persons come together pure and chaste, and preserve the marriage bed undefiled.

A dreadful but just censure of impurity and lewdness: Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. He will call such sins by their proper names, not by the names of love and gallantry, but of whoredom and adultery. He will bring them into judgment. He will convict them, condemn them.

V. To Christian contentment, v. 5, 6. The sin that is contrary to his grace and duty—covetousness. We must take care not only to keep this sin down, but to root it out of our souls. The duty that is contrary to covetousness—being satisfied and pleased with such things as we have. What God gives us from day to day we must be content with. We must bring our minds to our present condition. Those who cannot do it would not be contented though God should raise their condition to their minds, for the mind would rise with the condition. Paul, though abased and empty, had learned in every state, in any state, therewith to be content. What reason Christians have to be contented with their lot, v. 5, 6. This promise contains the sum and substance of all the promises.

From this comprehensive promise they may assure themselves of help from God, v. 6. Men can do nothing against God, and God can make all that men do against his people to turn to their good.

VI. To the duty Christians owe to their ministers, and that both to those that are dead and to those that are yet alive.

1. To those that are dead, v. 7.

(1) The description given of them. They were such as had the rule over them, and had spoken to them the word of God.

(2) The duties owing to them. "Remember them. Follow their faith; labour after the grace of faith by which they lived and died so well. Consider the end of their conversation!" may be better than he looks: he may be unexpectedly found to be as much a messenger of God for good, as the angels (whose name means messenger) are; nay more, if a Christian, he represents Christ Himself. There is a play on the same Greek word, Be not forgetful and unaware; let not the duty of hospitality to strangers escape you; for, by entertaining strangers, it has escaped the entertainers that they were entertaining angels. Not unconscious and forgetful of the duty, they have unconsciously brought on themselves the blessing. 3. Remember—in prayers and acts of kindness. bound with them—by virtue of the unity of the members in the body under one Head, Christ (I Cor. 12:26). suffer adversity—Greek, "are in evil state." being yourselves also in the body—and so liable to the adversities incident to the natural body, which ought to dispose you the more to sympathize with them, not knowing how soon your own turn of suffering may come. "One experiences adversity almost his whole life, as Jacob; another in youth, as Joseph; another in manhood, as Job; another in old age" [BENGEL]. 4. is . . .—Translate, "Let marriage be treated as honorable": as vs. 5 also is an exhortation. in all—"in the case of all men": "among all." "To avoid fornication let EVERY MAN have his own wife" (I Cor. 7:2). Judaism and Gnosticism combined were soon about to throw discredit on marriage. The venerable Paphnutius, in the Council of Nice, quoted this verse for the justification of the married state. If one does not himself marry, he should not prevent others from doing so. Others, especially Romanists, translate, "in all things," as in vs. 18. But the warning being against lasciviousness, the contrast to "whoremongers and adulterers" in the parallel clause, requires the "in all" in this clause to refer to persons. the bed undefiled—Translate, as Greek requires "undefiled" to be a predicate, not an epithet, "And let the bed be undefiled." God will judge—Most whoremongers escape the notice of human tribunals; but God takes particular cognizance of those whom man does not punish. Gay immoralities will then be regarded in a very different light from what they are now. 5. conversation—"manner of life." The love of filthy lust and the love of filthy lucre follow one another as closely akin, both alienating the heart from the Creator to the creature. such things as ye have—lit., "present things" (Phil. 4:11). I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee—A promise tantamount to this was given to Jacob (Gen. 28:15), to Israel (Deut. 31:6, 8), to Joshua (Josh. 1:5), to Solomon (I Chron. 28:20). It is therefore like a divine adage. What was said to them, extends also to us. He will neither withdraw His presence ("never leave thee") nor His help ("nor forsake thee") [BENGEL].

6. may—rather as Greek, expressing confidence actually realized, "So that we boldly (confidently) say" (Ps. 56:4. 11; 118:6). Punctuate as both the Hebrew and the Greek require, "And (so) I will not fear: what (then) shall man do unto me?" 7. Remember—so as to imitate: not to invoke in prayer, as Rome teaches. have the rule—rather, "who have had the rule over you": your spiritual leaders. who—Greek, "the which": such persons as. have spoken unto you—"spake" (so the Greek aorist means) during their lifetime. This Epistle was among those written later, when many of the heads of the Jerusalem Church had passed away. whose faith—even unto death: probably death by martyrdom, as in the case of the instances of faith in ch. 11:35. Stephen, James the brother of our Lord and bishop of Jerusalem, as well as James the brother of John (Acts 12:2), in the Palestinian Church, which Paul addresses, suffered martyrdom. considering—Greek, "looking up to," "diligently contemplating all over," as an artist would a model. the end—the termination, at death. The Greek, is used of decease (Luke 9:31; II Pet. 1:15). of their conversation—"manner of life": "religious walk" (Gal. 1:13; Eph. 4:22; I Tim. 4:12; Jas. 3:13). Considering how they manifested the soundness of their faith by their holy walk, which they maintained even to the end of that walk (their death by martyrdom).

entertained, not knowing them to be such, and the good they derived from exercising their hospitality on these occasions, are well-known; and have been particularly referred to in the notes on Gen. xviii. 3; xix. 2.

3. Remember them that are in bonds. He appears to refer to those Christians who were suffering imprisonment for the testimony of Jesus. As bound with them. Feel for them as you would wish others to feel for you were you in their circumstances, knowing that, being in the body, you are liable to the same evils, and may be called to suffer in the same way for the same cause.

4. Marriage is honourable in all. Let this state be highly esteemed as one of God's own instituting, and as highly calculated to produce the best interests of mankind. This may have been said against the opinions of the Essenes, who held marriage in little repute, and abstained from it themselves as a state of comparative imperfection. At the same time it shows the absurdity of the popish tenet that marriage in the clergy is both dishonorable and sinful; which is, in fact, in opposition to the apostle, who says marriage is honourable in all; and to the institution of God, which evidently designed that every male and female should be united in this holy bond; and to nature, which in every part of the habitable world has produced men and women in due proportion to each other. The bed undefiled. Every man cleaving to his own wife, and every wife cleaving to her own husband, because God will judge, i.e., punish, all "fornicators and adulterers."

5. Let your conversation. That is, the whole tenor of your conduct, the "manner of your life," or rather the disposition of your hearts in reference to all your secular transactions; for in this sense the original is used by the best Greek writers. Be without covetousness. Desire nothing more than what God has given you; and especially covet nothing which the Divine Providence has given to another man, for this is the very spirit of robbery. Content with such things as ye have. "Being satisfied with present things." The covetous man is ever running out into futurity with insatiable desires after secular good; and, if this disposition be not checked, it increases as the subject of it increases in years. Covetousness is the vice of old age. I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. These words were, in sum, spoken to Joshua, chap. i. 5: "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." They were spoken also by David to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxviii. 20: "David said to Solomon his son, Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." The apostle, in referring to the same promises, feels authorized to strengthen the expressions, as the Christian dispensation affords more consolation and confidence in matters of this kind than the old covenant did.

6. So that we may boldly say. We, in such circumstances, while cleaving to the Lord, may confidently apply to ourselves what God spoke to Joshua and to Solomon; and what He spoke to David, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do. God is omnipotent; man's power is limited; howsoever strong he may be, he can do nothing against the Almighty.

7. Remember them which have the rule over you. This clause should be translated, "Remember your guides who have spoken unto you the doctrine of God." Theodoret's note on this verse is very judicious: "He intends the saints who were dead, Stephen the first martyr, James the brother of John, and James called the Just. And there were many others who were taken off by the Jewish rage. 'Consider these (said he), and, observing their example, imitate their faith.'" Considering the end of their conversation. "The issue of whose course of life most carefully consider." They lived to get good and do good; they were faithful to their God and His cause; they suffered persecution, and for the testimony of Jesus died a violent death. God never left them; no, He never forsook them; so that they were happy in their afflictions and glorious in their death.

MATTHEW HENRY

Now this duty of following the same true faith in which they had been instructed the apostle enlarges much upon by referring to the immutability and eternity of the Lord Jesus Christ. The great head of the church ever lives, and is ever the same; and they should be steadfast and immovable, in imitation of Christ. Furthermore he describes erroneous doctrines which they must avoid.

[1] They were divers and various (v. 9), different from what they had received and inconsistent with themselves.

[2] They were strange doctrines.

[3] They were of an unsettling, distracting nature. They were quite contrary to that grace of God which fixes and establishes the heart.

[4] They were about external, little, perishing things, such as meats and drinks, &c.

[5] They were unprofitable. They did not make them more holy, nor more humble, nor more thankful, nor more heavenly.

[6] They would exclude those who embraced them from the privileges of the Christian altar (v. 10): We have an altar. The Christian church has its altar. Not a material altar, but a personal one, and that is Christ; he is both our altar, and our sacrifice. This altar furnishes out a feast for true believers. The Lord's supper is the feast of the gospel passover. Those who adhere to the tabernacle or the Levitical dispensation, or return to it again, exclude themselves from the privileges of this altar. This part of the argument he first proves and then improves.

a. This servile adherence to the Jewish state is a bar to the privileges of the gospel altar. The gospel feast is the fruit of the sacrifice, which those have no right to who do not acknowledge the sacrifice itself.

ALBERT BARNES:

13. "Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp." As if we were going forth with him when he was led away to be crucified. He was put to death as a malefactor. He was the object of contempt and scorn. He was held up to derision and was taunted and reviled on his way to the place of death, and even on the cross. To have been identified with him then; to follow him; to sympathize with him; to be regarded as his friend, would have subjected one to similar shame and reproach. The meaning here is that we should be willing to regard ourselves as identified with the Lord Jesus and to bear the same shame and reproaches which he did. When he was led away amidst scoffing and reviling to be put to death, would we, if we had been there, have been willing to be regarded as his followers and to have gone out with him as his avowed disciples and friends? Alas, how many are there who profess to love him when religion subjects them to no reproach, who would have shrunk from following him to Calvary!—Popular Commentary

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

8. This verse is not, as some read it, in apposition with "the end of their conversation" (vs. 7), but forms the transition. "Jesus Christ, yesterday and to-day (is) the same, and (shall be the same) unto the ages" (i.e., unto all ages). The Jesus Christ (the full name being given, to mark with affectionate solemnity both His person and His office) who supported your spiritual rulers through life even unto their end "yesterday" (in times past), being at once "the Author and the Finisher of their faith" (ch. 12:2), remains still the same Jesus Christ "to-day," ready to help you also, if like them you walk by "faith" in Him. Cf. "this same Jesus," Acts 1:11. He who yesterday (proverbial for the past time) suffered and died, is today in glory (Rev. 1:18). 9. about—rather, as oldest MSS. read, "carried aside"; viz., cf. Eph. 4:14. divers—differing from the one faith in the one and the same Jesus Christ, as taught by them who had the rule over you (vs. 7). strange—foreign to the truth. doctrines—"teachings." established with grace; not with meats—not with observances of Jewish distinctions between clean and unclean meats, to which ascetic Judaizers added in Christian times the rejection of some meats, and the use of others: noticed also by Paul in I Corinthians 8:8, 13; 6:13. Romans 14:17, an exact parallel to this verse: these are some of the "divers and strange doctrines" of the previous sentence. Christ's body offered once for all for us, is our true spiritual "meat" to "eat" (vs. 10), "the stay and the staff of bread" (Isa. 3:1), the mean of all "grace." which have not profited—Greek, "in which they who walked were not profited"; viz., in respect to justification, perfect cleansing of the conscience, and sanctification. Cf. on "walked," Acts 21:21; viz., with superstitious scrupulosity, as though the worship of God in itself consisted in such legal observances. 10. an altar—the cross of Christ, whereon His body was offered. The Lord's table represents this altar, the cross; as the bread and wine represent the sacrifice offered on it. Our meat, which we by faith spiritually eat, is the flesh of Christ, in contrast to the typical ceremonial meats. The two cannot be combined (Gal. 5:2). That not a literal eating of the sacrifice of Christ is meant in the Lord's Supper, but a spiritual is meant, appears from comparing vs. 9 with vs. 10, "with GRACE, NOT with MEATS." 11, 12. For just as "the bodies of those beasts whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by . . . are burned without the camp," so "Jesus also that . . . suffered without the gate" of ceremonial Judaism, of which His crucifixion outside the gate of Jerusalem is a type. for—reason why they who serve the tabernacle, are excluded from share in Christ; because His sacrifice is not like one of those sacrifices in which they had a share but answers to one which was "wholly burned" outside (the Greek is "burnt completely," "consumed by burning"), and which consequently they could not eat of. Leviticus 6:30, gives the general rule, "No sin offering whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten; it shall be burnt in the fire." The sin offerings are twofold: the outward, whose blood was sprinkled on the outward altar, and of whose bodies the priests might eat; and the inward, the reverse. the sanctuary—here the Holy of Holies, into which the blood of the sin offering was brought on the day of atonement. without the camp—in which were the tabernacle and Levitical priests and legal worshippers, during Israel's journey through the wilderness; replaced afterwards by Jerusalem (containing the temple), outside of whose walls Jesus was crucified. 12. Wherefore Jesus—In order that the Antitype might fulfil the type. sanctify—Though not brought into the temple "sanctuary" (vs. 11) His blood has been brought into the heavenly sanctuary, and "sanctifies the people" (ch. 2:11, 17), by cleansing them from sin, and consecrating them to God. his own—not blood of animals. without the gate—of Jerusalem; as if unworthy of the society of the covenant people. The fiery ordeal of His suffering on the cross, answers to the burning of the victims; thereby His mere fleshly life was completely destroyed, as their bodies were; the second part of His offering was His carrying His blood into the heavenly holiest before God at His ascension, that it should be a perpetual atonement for the world's sin. 13. therefore—This "therefore" breathes the deliberate fortitude of believers [BENGEL]. without the camp—"outside the legal polity" [THEODORET] of Judaism (cf. vs. 11) "Faith considers Jerusalem itself as a camp, not a city [BENGEL]. He contrasts with the Jews, who serve an earthly sanctuary, the Christians to whom

8. Jesus Christ the same yesterday. In all past times there was no way to the holiest but through the blood of Jesus, either actually shed or significantly typified. To day—He is the Lamb newly slain, and continues to appear in the presence of God for us. For ever—to the conclusion of time, He will be "the way, the truth, and the life," none coming to the Father but through Him; and throughout eternity it will appear that all glorified human spirits owe their salvation to His infinite merit.

9. Be not carried about. "Be not whirled about." But almost every MS. of importance has "be not carried away," which is undoubtedly the true reading, and signifies here, "Do not apostatize," permit not yourselves to be carried off from Christ and His doctrine. Divers and strange doctrines. "Variegated doctrines"; those that blended the law and the gospel, and brought in the Levitical sacrifices and institutions in order to perfect the Christian system. Remember the old covenant is abolished; the new alone is in force. Strange doctrines, "foreign" doctrines, such as have no apostolical authority to recommend them. That the heart be established with grace. It is well to have the heart, the mind, and conscience fully satisfied with the truth and efficacy of the "gospel"; for so the word charis should be understood here, which is put in opposition to bromasin, meats, signifying here the Levitical institutions, and especially its sacrifices, these being emphatically termed meats because the offerers were permitted to feast upon them after the blood had been poured out before the Lord. See Lev. vii. 15; Deut. xii. 6-7. Which have not profited them. Because they neither took away guilt, cleansed the heart, nor gave power over sin.

10. We have an altar. The altar is here put for the sacrifice on the altar; the Christian altar is the Christian Sacrifice, which is Christ Jesus, with all the benefits of His passion and death. To these privileges they had no right who continued to offer the Levitical sacrifices and to trust in them for remission of sins.

11. For the bodies of those beasts. Though in making covenants, and in some victims offered according to the law, the flesh of the sacrifice was eaten by the offerers, yet the flesh of the sin offering might no man eat. When the blood was sprinkled before the holy place to make an atonement for their souls, the skins, flesh, entrails, etc., were carried without the camp, and there entirely consumed by fire; and this entire consumption, according to the opinion of some, was intended to show that sin was not pardoned by such offerings. For as eating the other sacrifices intimated they were made partakers of the benefits procured by those sacrifices, so not being permitted to eat of the sin offering proved that they had no benefit from it, and that they must look to the Christ, whose sacrifice is pointed out, that they might receive that real pardon of sin which the shedding of His blood could alone procure. While therefore they continued offering those sacrifices and refused to acknowledge the Christ, they had no right to any of the blessings procured by Him, and it is evident they could have no benefit from their own.

12. That he might sanctify the people. That He might consecrate them to God and make an atonement for their sins, He suffered without the gate at Jerusalem, as the sin offering was consumed "without the camp" when the Tabernacle abode in the wilderness. Perhaps all this was typical of the abolition of the Jewish sacrifices and the termination of the whole Levitical system of worship. He left the city, denounced its final destruction, and abandoned it to its fate; and suffered without the gate to bring the Gentiles to God.

b. To improve this argument (v. 13–15): Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp. Let us be willing to bear his reproach. We must submit to it; and we have the more reason because we must necessarily go forth in a little time by death; for here we have no continuing city. We should go forth now by faith, and seek in Christ the rest and settlement which this world cannot afford us, v. 14.

Let us make a right use of this altar. Let us bring our sacrifices to this altar, v. 15, 16. 1. The sacrifice of praise to God, which we should offer up to God continually. In this are included all adoration and prayer, as well as thanksgiving; this is the fruit of our lips.

2. The sacrifice of alms-deeds, and Christian charity, v. 16, not contending ourselves to offer the sacrifice of our lips, mere words, but the sacrifice of good deeds.

2. To their living ministers (v. 17). The duty—to obey them, and submit themselves to them. Christians must submit to be instructed by their ministers, and not think themselves too wise, too good, or too great, to learn from them; and they must obey them. The motives to this duty. (1) They have the rule over the people; their office is truly authoritative.

(2) They watch for the souls of the people. They are to watch against everything that may be hurtful. They are to watch for all opportunities of helping the souls of men forward in the way to heaven. (3) They must give an account how they have discharged their duty. They would be glad to give a good account. If they can then give in an account of their own fidelity and success, it will be a joyful day to them. If they give up their account with grief, it will be the people's loss as well as theirs.

I. The apostle recommends himself, and his fellow-sufferers, to the prayers of the Hebrew believers (v. 18).

1. This is one part of the duty which people owe the altar in heaven stands open, while it is closed against the Jews. As Jesus suffered without the gate, so spiritually must those who desire to belong to Him, withdraw from the earthly Jerusalem and its sanctuary, as from this world in general. There is a reference to Exodus 33:7, when the tabernacle was moved without the camp, which had become polluted by the people's idolatry of the golden calves; so that "every one who sought the Lord went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation (as Moses called the tabernacle outside the camp), which was without the camp"; a lively type of what the Hebrews should do, viz., come out of the carnal worship of the earthly Jerusalem to worship God in Christ in spirit, and of what we all ought to do, viz., come out from all carnalism, worldly formalism, and mere sensuous worship, and know Jesus in His spiritual power apart from worldliness, seeing that "we have no continuing city" (vs. 14). bearing—as Simon of Cyrene did. his reproach—the reproach which He bare, and which all His people bear with Him. 14. here—on earth. Those Hebrews who clung to the earthly sanctuary are representatives of all who cling to this earth. The earthly Jerusalem proved to be no "abiding city," having been destroyed shortly after this Epistle was written, and with it fell the Jewish civil and religious polity; a type of the whole of our present earthly order of things soon to perish. one to come—(ch. 2:5; 11:10, 14, 16; 12:22; Phil. 3:20). 15. As the "altar" was mentioned in vs. 10, so the "sacrifices" here (cf. I Pet. 2:5, viz., praise and doing good, vs. 16). Cf. Psalm 119:108: Rom. 12:1. By him—as the Mediator of our prayers and praises (John 14:13, 14); not by Jewish observances (Ps. 50:14, 23; 69:30, 31; 107:22; 116:17). It was an old saying of the rabbis, "At a future time all sacrifices shall cease, but praises shall not cease." praise—for salvation. continually—not merely at fixed seasons, as those on which the legal sacrifices were offered, but throughout all our lives. fruit of our lips—(Isa. 57:19; Hos. 14:2). giving thanks—Greek, "confessing." BENGEL remarks that the Hebrew, todah, is beautifully emphatic. It literally means "acknowledgment" or "confession." In praising a creature, we may easily exceed the truth; but in praising God we have only to go on confessing what He really is to us. Hence it is impossible to exceed the truth, and here is genuine praise. 16. But—But the sacrifice of praise with the lips (vs. 15) is not enough; there must be also doing good (beneficence) and communicating (i.e., imparting a share of your means, Gal. 6:6) to the needy. with such—and not mere ritualistic sacrifices. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you—(Cf. vss. 7, 24). This threefold mention of the rulers is peculiar to this Epistle. In other Epistles Paul includes the rulers in his exhortations. But here the address is limited to the general body of the Church, in contrast to the rulers to whom they are charged to yield reverent submission. Now this is just what might be expected when the apostle of the Gentiles was writing to the Palestine Christians, among whom James and the eleven apostles had exercised a more immediate authority. It was important he should not seem to set himself in opposition to their guides, but rather strengthen their hands; he claims no authority directly or indirectly over these rulers themselves [BIRKS]. they—on their part; so the Greek. As they do their part, so do you yours. So Paul exhorts, I Thessalonians 5:12, 13. watch—"are vigilant" (Greek). for—Greek, "in behalf of." must give account—The strongest stimulus to watchfulness (Mark 13:34-37). CHRYSOSTOM was deeply struck with these words, as he tells us (De Sacerdotio, B. 6), "The fear of this threat continually agitates my soul." do it—"watch for your soul's eternal salvation." It is a perilous responsibility for a man to have to give account for others' deeds, who is not sufficient for his own [ESTIUS, from AQUINAS]. with joy—at your obedience; anticipating, too, that you shall be their "joy" in the day of giving account (Phil. 4:1). not with grief—at your disobedience; apprehending also that in the day of account you may be among the lost, instead of being their crown of rejoicing. that—Grief in your pastors is unprofitable for you, for it weakens their spiritual power; nay, more, "the groans (so the Greek for 'grief') of other creatures are heard; how much more of pastors!" [BENGEL]. So God will be provoked to avenge on you their "groaning" (Greek). If they must render God an account of their negligence, so must you for your ingratitude to them [GROTIUS]. 18. Pray for us—Paul usually requests the Church's intercessions for him in closing his Epistles, just as he begins with assuring them of his having them at

ADAM CLARKE

13. Let us go forth therefore unto him. Let us leave this city and system, devoted to destruction, and take refuge in Jesus alone, bearing his reproach—being willing to be accounted the refuse of all things, and the worst of men, for His sake who bore the contradiction of sinners against himself and was put to death as a malefactor.

14. For here have we no continuing city. Here is an elegant and forcible allusion to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem. The Jerusalem that was below was about to be burned with fire and erased to the ground; the Jerusalem that was from above was that alone which could be considered to be "permanent."

15. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise. He has now fulfilled all vision and prophecy, has offered the last bloody sacrifice which God will ever accept; and as He is the Gift of God's love to the world, let us through Him offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, this being the substitute for all the Levitical sacrifices. The Jews allowed that in the time of the Messiah all sacrifices, except the sacrifice of praise, should cease. To this maxim the apostle appears to allude; and understood in this way, his words are much more forcible. "Rabbi Phineas, Rabbi Levi, and Rabbi Jochanan, from the authority of Rabbi Menachem of Galilee, said, 'In the time of the Messiah all sacrifice shall cease except the sacrifice of praise.'" This was in effect quoting the authority of one of their own maxims, that now was the time of the Messiah, that Jesus was that Messiah, that the Jewish sacrificial system was now abolished, and that no sacrifice would now be accepted of God except the sacrifice of praise for the gift of His Son. That is, the fruit of our lips. This expression is probably borrowed from Hos. xiv. 2, in the version of the Septuagint, which in the Hebrew text is "the heifers of our lips." This may refer primarily to the sacrifices, heifers, calves, etc., which they had vowed to God; so that the "calves of their lips" were the sacrifices which they had promised. But how could the Septuagint translate "calves" by fruit? Very easily, if they had in their copy peri, the mem being omitted; and thus the word would be literally fruit, and not "calves."

16. But to do good and to communicate. These are continual sacrifices which God requires, and which will spring from a sense of God's love in Christ Jesus. Praise to God "for his unspeakable gift," and acts of kindness to men for God's sake. No reliance, even on the infinitely meritorious sacrifice of Christ, can be acceptable in the sight of God if a man have not love and charity towards his neighbor. Praise, prayer, and thanksgiving to God, with works of charity and mercy to man, are the sacrifices which every genuine follower of Christ must offer: and they are the proofs that a man belongs to Christ; and he who does not bear these fruits gives full evidence, whatever his creed may be, that he is no Christian.

17. Obey them that have the rule over you. "Obey your leaders." He is not fit to rule who is not capable of guiding. See on v. 7 in the former verse the apostle exhorts them to remember those who had been their leaders and to imitate their faith; in this he exhorts them to obey the leaders they now had, and to submit to their authority in all matters of doctrine and discipline, on the ground that they watched for their souls, and should have to give an account of their conduct to God. If this conduct were improper, they must give in their report before the great tribunal with grief, but it must be given; if holy and pure, they would give it in with joy.

18. Pray for us. Even the success of apostles depended, in a certain way, on the prayers of the Church. Few Christian congregations feel, as they ought, that it is their bounden duty to pray for the success of the gospel, both among themselves and in the world. The Church is weak, dark, poor, and imperfect because it prays little.

to their ministers. Ministers need the prayers of the people; and the more earnestly the people pray for their ministers the more benefit they may expect to reap from their ministry.

2. There are good reasons why people should pray for their ministers.

(1) We trust we have a good conscience, &c., v. 18. Many of the Jews had a bad opinion of Paul. He here modestly asserts his own integrity. We trust! he might have said, We know; but he chose to speak in a humble style. "We trust we have a good conscience in all things. We would act honestly and sincerely in all things." A good conscience has a respect to all God's commands and all our duty. Those who have this good conscience, yet need the prayers of others.

(2) Another reason why he desires their prayers, v. 19, intimating that, now he was absent from them, he had a great desire and real intention to come again to them,—and that the best way to facilitate his return to them, was to make it a matter of their prayer.

II. He offers up his prayers to God for them: Now the God of peace, &c., v. 20. The title given to God—the God of peace, who has found out a way for peace and reconciliation between himself and sinners.

The great work ascribed to him: He hath brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, &c. That divine power by which he was raised is able to do everything for us that we stand in need of. The titles given to Christ—our Lord Jesus, our sovereign, our Saviour, and the great shepherd of the sheep. They are the flock of his pasture, and his care and concern are for them.

The way and method in which God is reconciled, and Christ raised from the dead: Through the blood of the everlasting covenant. This blood is the sanction and seal of an everlasting covenant between God and his people.

The mercy prayed for, v. 21. The perfection of the saints in every good work is the great thing desired by them and for them. The way in which God makes his people perfect; it is by working in them always what is pleasing in his sight. To this every one should say, Amen.

heart in his prayers (but in this Epistle not till vss. 20, 21), Romans 15:30. "Us," includes both himself and his companions; he passes to himself alone, vs. 19. we trust we have a good conscience—in spite of your former jealousies, and the charges of my Jewish enemies at Jerusalem, which have been the occasion of my imprisonment at Rome. In refutation of the Jews' aspersions, he asserts in the same language as here his own conscientiousness before God and man, Acts 23:1-3; 24:16, 20, 21 (wherein he virtually implies that his reply to Ananias was not sinful impatience; for, indeed, it was a prophecy which he was inspired at the moment to utter, and which was fulfilled soon after). we trust Greek, "we are persuaded," in the oldest MSS. Good conscience produces confidence, where the Holy Spirit rules the conscience (Rom. 9:1). honestly—"in a good way." The same Greek word as "good conscience." Lit., "rightly," "becomingly." 19. the rather—Greek, "I the more abundantly beseech you." to do this—to pray for me. that I may be restored to you—(Philemon 22). It is here first in the letter he mentions himself, in a way so unobtrusive, as not to prejudice his Hebrew readers against him, which would have been the result had he commenced this as his other Epistles, with authoritatively announcing his name and apostolic commission. 20. Concluding prayer. God of peace—So Paul, Romans 15:33; 16:20; II Corinthians 13:11; Philippians 4:9; I Thessalonians 5: 23; II Thessalonians 3:16. The Judaizing of the Hebrews was calculated to sow seeds of discord among them, of disobedience to their pastors (vs. 17), and of alienation towards Paul. The God of peace by giving unity of true doctrine, will unite them in mutual love. brought again from the dead—Greek, "brought up . . .": God brought the Shepherd; the Shepherd shall bring the flock. Here only in the Epistle he mentions the resurrection. He would not conclude without mentioning the connecting link between the two truths mainly discussed; the one perfect sacrifice and the continual priestly intercession—the depth of His humiliation and the height of His glory—the "altar" of the cross and the ascension to the heavenly Holy of Holies. Lord Jesus—the title marking His person and His Lordship over us. But vs. 21, "through Jesus Christ." His office, as the Anointed of the Spirit, making Him the medium of communicating the Spirit to us, the holy unction flowing down from the Head on the members (cf. Acts 2:36). great—(Ch. 4. 14.) shepherd of the sheep—A title familiar to his Hebrew readers, from their Old Testament (Isa. 63:11; LXX): primarily Moses, antitypically Christ: already compared together, ch. 3:2-7. The transition is natural from their earthly pastors (vs. 17), to the Chief Pastor, as in I Peter 5:1-4. Cf. Ezekiel 34:23 and Jesus' own words, John 10:2, 11, 14. through the blood—Greek, "in," in virtue of the blood (ch. 2:9); it was because of His bloody death for us, that the Father raised and crowned Him with glory. The "blood" was the seal of the everlasting covenant entered into between the Father and Son; in virtue of the Son's blood, first Christ was raised, then Christ's people shall be so (Zech. 9:11, seemingly referred to here; Acts 20:28). everlasting—The everlastingness of the covenant necessitated the resurrection. This clause, "the blood of the everlasting covenant," is a summary retrospect of the Epistle (cf. ch. 9:12).

21. Make you perfect—properly said of healing a rent; join you together in perfect harmony [BENGEL]. to do his will, working in you—(Ch. 10:36) —rather as Greek, "doing in you." Whatever good we do, God does in us. well-pleasing in his sight—(Isa. 53:10; Eph. 5:10).

through Jesus Christ—"God doing (working) in you that . . . through Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1:11). to whom—to Christ. He closes as he began (ch. 1), with giving glory to Christ.

ADAM CLARKE

We trust we have a good conscience. We are persuaded that we have a conscience that not only acquits us of all fraud and sinister design, but assures us that in simplicity and godly sincerity we have labored to promote the welfare of you and of all mankind. To live honestly. "Willing in all things to conduct ourselves well" —to behave with decency and propriety.

19. The rather to do this. That is, pray for us, that, being enabled to complete the work which God has given us here to do, we may be the sooner enabled to visit you. It is evident from this that the people to whom this Epistle was written knew well who was the author of it, nor does there appear in any place any design in the writer to conceal his name; how the Epistle came to lack a name it is impossible to say.

20. Now the God of peace. We have often seen that peace among the Hebrews signifies "prosperity" of every kind. The God of peace is the same as the God of all blessedness, who has at His disposal all temporal and eternal good; who loves mankind, and has provided them a complete salvation. Brought again from the dead our Lord. As our Lord's sacrificial death is considered as an atonement offered to the divine justice, God's acceptance of it as an atonement is signified by His raising the human nature of Christ from the dead; and hence this raising of Christ is, with the utmost propriety, attributed to God the Father, as this proves His acceptance of the sacrificial offering. That great shepherd of the sheep. This is a title of our blessed Lord, given to Him by the prophets; so Isa. xl. 11; "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young"; and Ezek. xxxiv. 23; "I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David [i.e., the beloved, viz., Jesus]; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd"; and Zech. xiii. 7; "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd . . . smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered." In all these places the term shepherd is allowed to belong to our blessed Lord; and He appropriates it to himself, John x. 11, by calling himself "the good shepherd" who lays down "his life for the sheep." Through the blood of the everlasing covenant. Some understand this in the following way, that "God brought back our Lord from the dead on account of His having shed His blood to procure the everlasting covenant." Others, that "the Lord Jesus became the great Shepherd and Saviour of the sheep by shedding His blood to procure and ratify the everlasing covenant." The sense, however, will appear much plainer if we connect this with the following verse: "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, make you, through the blood of the everlasting coveant, perfect in every good work to do his will." The Christian system is termed the everlasting covenant, to distinguish it from the temporary covenant made with the Israelites at Mount Sinai, and to show that it is the last dispensation of grace to the world and shall endure to the end of time.

21. Make you perfect. "Put you completely in joint." See the note on 2 Cor. xiii. 9. From the following terms we see what the apostle meant by the perfection for which he prays. They were to do the will of God in every good work, from God working in them that which is well-pleasing in his sight. (1) This necessarily implies a complete change in the whole soul, that God may be well-pleased with whatsoever He sees in it; and this supposes its being cleansed from all sin, for God's sight cannot be pleased with anything that is unholy. (2) This complete inward purity is to produce an outward conformity to God's will, so they were to be made perfect in every good work. (3) The perfection within and the perfection without were to be produced by "the blood of the everlasting covenant"; for although "God is love," yet it is not consistent with His justice or holiness to communicate any good to mankind but through His Son, and through Him as having died for the offenses of the human race. To whom be glory for ever. As God does all in, by, and through Christ Jesus, to Him be the honor of His own work ascribed through time and eternity.

IV. He closes with salutations, and a solemn, though short benediction (v. 22).

III. He was pleased with the hopes of not only seeing Timothy, but seeing the Hebrews with him, v. 23.

1. The salutation. From himself to them all, ministers and people. From the Christians in Italy to them.

2. The solemn, though short benediction (v. 25).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

22. suffer the word—The Hebrews not being the section of the Church assigned to Paul (but the Gentiles), he uses gentle entreaty, rather than authoritative command.

few words—compared with what might be said on so important a subject. Few, in an Epistle which is more of a treatise than an Epistle (cf. I Pet. 5:12). On the seeming inconsistency with Galatians 6:11, cf. Note there. 23. our brother Timothy—So Paul, I Corinthians 4:17; II Corinthians 1:1; Colossians 1:1; I Thessalonians 3:2. is set at liberty—from prison. So Aristarchus was imprisoned with Paul. BIRKS translates, "dismissed," "sent away," viz., on a mission to Greece, as Paul promised (Phil. 2:19). However, some kind of previous detention is implied before his being let go to Philippi. Paul, though now at large, was still in Italy, whence he sends the salutations of Italian Christians (vs. 24), waiting for Timothy to join him, so as to start for Jerusalem: we know from I Timothy 1:3, he and Timothy were together at Ephesus after his departing from Italy eastward. He probably left Timothy there and went to Philippi as he had promised. Paul implies that if Timothy shall not come shortly, he will start on his journey to the Hebrews at once.

24. all—The Scriptures are intended for all, young and old, not merely for ministers. Cf. the different classes addressed, "wives," Ephesians 5:22; little children, I John 2:18; "all," I Peter 3:8; 5:5. He says here "all," for the Hebrews whom he addresses were not all in one place, though the Jerusalem Hebrews are chiefly addressed.

They of Italy—not merely the brethren at Rome, but of other places in Italy.

25. Paul's characteristic salutation in every one of his other thirteen Epistles, as he says himself, I Corinthians 16:21, 23; Colossians 4:18; II Thessalonians 3:17. It is found in no Epistle written by any other apostle in Paul's lifetime. It is used in Revelation 22:21, written subsequently, and in CLEMENT OF ROME. Being known to be his badge, it is not used by others in his lifetime. The Greek here is, "The grace (viz., of our Lord Jesus Christ) be with you all."

ADAM CLARKE

22. Suffer the word of exhortation. Bear the word or doctrine of this exhortation. This seems to be an epithet of this whole Epistle; and as the apostle had in it shown the insufficiency of the Levitical system to atone for sin and save the soul, and had proved that it was the design of God that it should be abolished, and had proved also that it was now abolished by the coming of Christ, whom he had shown to be a greater Priest than Aaron, higher than all the angels, the only Son of God as to His human nature, and the Creator, Governor, and Judge of all, and that their city was shortly to be destroyed, he might suppose that they would feel prejudiced against him, and thus lose the benefit of his kind intentions toward them. Therefore he entreats them to bear the exhortation which, notwithstanding the great extent of the subject, he had included in a short compass. I have written a letter unto you in few words. Perhaps it would be better to translate, "I have written to you briefly."

23. Know ye that our brother Timothy. The word our, which is supplied by our translators, is very probably genuine, as it is found in several MSS. and in the Syriac, the Coptic, Armenian, Slavonic, and Vulgate. Is set at liberty. "Is sent away," for there is no evidence that Timothy had been imprisoned. It is probable that the apostle refers here to his being sent into Macedonia, Phil. ii. 19-24, in order that he might bring the apostle an account of the affairs of the church in that country. In none of Paul's Epistles, written during his confinement in Rome, does he give any intimation of Timothy's imprisonment, although it appears from Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1; and Philemon 1 that he was with Paul during the greatest part of the time. With whom, if he come shortly, I will see you. Therefore Paul himself, or the writer of this Epistle, was now at liberty, as he had the disposal of his person and time in his own power. Some suppose that Timothy did actually visit Paul about this time, and that both together visited the churches in Judea.

24. Salute all them that have the rule over you. "Salute all your leaders" or "guides." See on vv. 7 and 17. And all the saints. All the Christians, for this is the general meaning of the term in most parts of Paul's writings. But a Christian was then a saint, i.e., by profession a holy person; and most of the primitive Christians were actually such. But in process of time the term was applied to all that bore the Christian name, as "elect, holy people, sanctified" were to the nation of the Jews when both their piety and morality were at a very low ebb. They of Italy salute you. Therefore it is most likely that the writer of this Epistle was then in some part of Italy, from which he had not as yet removed after his being released from prison. By they of Italy probably the apostle means the Jews there who had embraced the Christian faith. These salutations show what a brotherly feeling existed in every part of the Christian Church; even those who had not seen each other yet loved one another, and felt deeply interested for each other's welfare.

25. Grace be with you all. May the divine favor ever rest upon you and among you; and may you receive, from that source of all good, whatsoever is calculated to make you wise, holy, useful, and happy! And may you be enabled to persevere in the truth to the end of your lives!

The writer of this epistle was not James the son of Zebedee, for he was put to death by Herod (Acts 12). It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) it is not directed to any particular person or church, but is more like a circular letter. The time when this epistle was written is uncertain. The design of it is to reprove Christians for their great degeneracy both in faith and manners. It was also a special intention of the author of this epistle to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the way of their duty, under the calamities and persecutions they might meet with.

Verse 1

The inscription of this epistle.

I. The character by which our author desires to be known: James, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though James is called by the evangelist the brother of our Lord, yet it was his glory to serve Christ in the spirit, rather than to boast of his being akin according to the flesh. Hence let us learn to prize this title above all others in the world—the servants of God and of Christ. We cannot acceptably serve the Father, unless we are also servants of the Son.

II. The twelve tribes which are scattered abroad. They were dispersed in mercy. They were scattered in several countries for the diffusing of the light of divine revelation. They began now to be scattered in wrath. Even good people among them shared in the common calamity. These Jews of the dispersion were those who had embraced the Christian faith. It is often the lot even of God's own tribes to be scattered abroad. While God's tribes are scattered abroad, he will send to look after them. Here is an apostle writing to the scattered; an epistle from God to them. We should not despond and think ourselves rejected, under outward calamities, God remembers and sends comfort to his scattered people.

III. James here shows the respect he had even for the dispersed: greeting. It was the desire of this apostle's heart that those who were scattered might

VSS. 1-27. INSCRIPTION: EXHORTATION ON HEARING, SPEAKING, AND WRATH. The last subject is discussed in ch. 3:13 to 4:17. 1. James—an apostle of the circumcision, with Peter and John, James in Jerusalem, Palestine, and Syria; Peter in Babylon and the East; John in Ephesus and Asia Minor. Peter addresses the dispersed Jews of Pontus, Galatia, and Cappadocia; James, the Israelites of the twelve tribes scattered abroad. servant of God—not that he was not an apostle; for Paul, an apostle, also calls himself so; but as addressing the Israelites generally, including even indirectly the unbelieving, he in humility omits the title "apostle"; so Paul in writing to the Hebrews; similarly Jude, an apostle, in his General Epistle. Jesus Christ—not mentioned again save in ch. 2:1; not at all in his speeches (Acts 15:14, 15, and 21:20, 21), lest his introducing the name of Jesus oftener should seem to arise from vanity, as being "the Lord's brother" [BENGEL]. His teaching being practical, rather than doctrinal, required less frequent mention of Christ's name. scattered abroad—lit., "which are in the dispersion." The dispersion of the Israelites, and their connection with Jerusalem as a center of religion, was a divinely ordered means of propagating Christianity. The pilgrim troops of the law became caravans of the Gospel [WORDSWORTH]. greeting—found in no other Christian letter, but in James and the Jerusalem Synod's Epistle to the Gentile churches; an un-

CHAPTER 1

1. James, a servant of God. He neither calls himself an apostle nor does he say that he was the brother of Christ or bishop of Jerusalem. To the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad. To the Jews, whether converted to Christianity or not, who lived out of Judea and sojourned among the Gentiles for the purpose of trade or commerce. Greeting.

be comforted.

Verses 2–12

I. The suffering state of Christians in this world is represented. It is implied that troubles and afflictions may be the lot of the best Christians. Such as have a title to the greatest joy may yet endure very grievous afflictions. The trials of a good man are such as he does not create to himself, nor sinfully pull upon himself; but they are such as he is said to fall into.

II. The graces and duties of a state of trial and affliction.

1. One Christian grace to be exercised is joy, v. 2. We must not sink into a sad and disconsolate frame of mind, which would make us faint under our trials. Philosophy may instruct men to be calm under their troubles; but Christianity teaches them to be joyful. Our trials will brighten our graces now and our crown at last. There is the more reason for joy in afflictions if we consider the other graces that are promoted by them.

2. Faith, v. 3; and then in v. 6. There must be a sound believing of the great truths of Christianity, and a resolute cleaving to them, in times of trial.

3. There must be patience: The trial of faith worketh patience. The trying of one grace produces another. To exercise Christian patience aright, we must let it work. Stoical apathy and Christian patience are very different: by the one men become, in some measure, insensible of their afflictions; but by the other they become triumphant in and over them. Let us give it leave to work, and it will work wonders in a time of trouble. We must let it have its perfect work. When we bear all that God appoints, and as long as he appoints, and when we not only bear troubles, but rejoice in them, then patience hath its perfect work. When the work of patience is complete, then the Christian is entire, and nothing will be wanting.

4. Prayer. What we ought more especially to pray for—wisdom. We should not pray so much for the removal of an affliction as for wisdom to make a right use of it. To be wise in trying times is a special gift of God. In what way this is to be obtained—upon our asking for it. Let the foolish become beggars at the throne of grace, and they are in a fair way to be wise. We have the greatest encouragement to do this: he giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. It shall be given, v. 5. He to whom we are sent, has it to give: and he is of a giving disposition. Nor is there any fear of his favours being limited to some for he gives to all men. If you should say you want a great deal of wisdom, a small portion will not serve your turn, he gives liberally; and lest you should be afraid of being put to shame for your folly, he upbraideth not. Ask when you will, and as often as you will, you will meet with no upbraidings. The promise is: It shall be given him.

There is one thing necessary to be observed in our asking, v. 6. There must be no wavering, no staggering at the promise of God through unbelief.

5. Sincerity of intention, and a steadiness of mind, constitute another duty required under affliction: He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. To be sometimes lifted up by faith, and then thrown down again by distrust—this is very fitly compared to a wave of the sea, that rises and falls, swells and sinks, just as the wind tosses it higher or lower, that way or this.

The success of prayer is spoiled hereby, v. 7. Such a distrustful shifting, unsettled person is not likely to value a favour from God as he should do, and therefore cannot expect to receive it. A wavering faith and spirit has a bad influence upon our conversations, v. 8. There will be great unsteadiness in all our conversation and actions. He that is unstable as water shall not excel.

designed coincidence and mark or genuineness. In the original Greek (chairein) for "greeting," there is a connection with the "joy" to which they are exhorted amidst their existing distresses from poverty and consequent oppression. Cf. Romans 15:26, which alludes to their poverty. 2. My brethren—a phrase often found in James, marking community of nation and of faith. all joy—cause for the highest joy [GROTIUS]. Nothing but joy [PISCATOR]. Count all "divers temptations" to be each matter of joy [BENGEL]. fall into—unexpectedly, so as to be encompassed by them (so the original Greek). temptations—not in the limited sense of allurements to sin, but trials or distresses of any kind which test and purify the Christian character. Cf. "tempt," i.e., try, Genesis 22:1. Some of those to whom James writes were "sick," or otherwise "afflicted" (ch. 5:13). Every possible trial to the child of God is a masterpiece of strategy of the Captain of his salvation for his good. 3. the trying—the testing or proving of your faith, viz., by "divers temptations." Cf. Romans 5:3, "tribulation" worketh patience, and patience experience (in the original dokime, akin to dokimion, "trying," here; there it is experience: here the "trying" or testing, whence experience flows). patience—The original implies more; persevering endurance and continuance (cf. Luke 8:15). 4. Let endurance have a perfect work (taken out of the previous "worketh patience" or endurance), i.e., have its full effect, by showing the most perfect degree of endurance, viz., "joy in bearing the cross" [MENOCHIUS], and enduring to the end (Matt. 10:22), [CALVIN]. ye may be perfect—fully developed in all the attributes of a Christian character. For this there is required "joy" [BENGEL], as part of the "perfect work" of probation. The work of God in a man is the man. If God's teachings by patience have had a perfect work in you, you are perfect [ALFORD]. entire—that which has all its parts complete, wanting no integral part; I Thessalonians 5:23, "your whole (lit., 'entire') spirit, soul, and body"; as "perfect" implies without a blemish in its parts. 5. English Version omits "But," which the Greek has, and which is important. "But (as this perfect entireness wanting nothing is no easy attainment) if any. . . ." lack—rather, as the Greek word is repeated after James's manner, from vs. 4, "wanting nothing," translate, "If any of you want wisdom," viz., the wisdom whereby ye may "count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations," and "let patience have her perfect work." This "wisdom" is shown in its effects in detail, ch. 3:7. The highest wisdom, which governs patience alike in poverty and riches, is described in vss. 9, 10. ask—(Ch. 4:2). liberally—So the Greek is rendered by English Version. It is rendered with simplicity, Romans 12:8. God gives without adding aught which may take off from the graciousness of the gift [ALFORD]. God requires the same "simplicity" in His children ("eye . . . single," Matt. 6:22, lit., "simple"). upbraideth not—an illustration of God's giving simply. He gives to the humble suppliant without upbraiding him with his past sin and ingratitude, or his future abuse of God's goodness. The Jews pray, "Let me not have need of the gifts of men, whose gifts are few, but their upbraidings manifold; but give me out of Thy large and full hand." 6. ask in faith—i.e., the persuasion that God can and will give. James begins and ends with faith. In the middle of the Epistle he removes the hindrances to faith and shows its true character [BENGEL]. wavering—between belief and unbelief. Cf. the case of the Israelites, who seemed to partly believe in God's power, but leaned more to unbelief by "limiting" it. On the other hand, cf. Acts 10:20; Romans 4:20 ("staggered not . . . through unbelief," lit., as here, "wavered not"); I Timothy 2:8. like a wave of the sea—Isaiah 57:20; Ephesians 4:14, where the same Greek word occurs for "tossed to and fro," as is here translated, "driven with the wind" driven with the wind—from without. tossed—from within, by its own instability [BENGEL]. At one time cast on the shore of faith and hope, at another rolled back into the abyss of unbelief; at one time raised to the height of worldly pride, at another tossed in the sands of despair and affliction [WIESINGER]. 7. For—resumed from "For" in vs. 6. that man—such a wavering self-deceiver. think—Real faith is something more than a mere thinking or surmise. anything—viz., of the things that he prays for: he does receive many things from God, food, raiment, etc., but these are the general gifts of His providence: of the things specially granted in answer to prayer, the waverer shall not receive "anything," much less wisdom. 8. double-minded—lit., "double-souled," the one soul directed towards God, the other to something else. The Greek favors ALFORD'S

ADAM CLARKE

2. Count it all joy. The word which we translate temptations signifies affliction, persecution, or trial of any kind; and in this sense it is used here, not intending diabolic suggestion, or what is generally understood by the word temptations.

3. The trying of your faith. Trials put religion, and all the graces of which it is composed, to proof. The man that stands in such trials gives proof that his religion is sound, and the evidence afforded to his own mind induces him to take courage, bear patiently, and persevere.

4. Let patience have her perfect work. That is, continue faithful, and your patience will be crowned with its full reward; for in this sense is ergon, which we translate work, to be understood. The perfect work is the "full reward." That ye may be perfect and entire. "Fully instructed" in every part of the doctrine of God and in His whole will concerning you. Having all your parts, members, and portions; that you may have every grace which constitutes the mind that was in Christ, so that your knowledge and holiness may be complete, and bear a proper proportion to each other. These expressions in their present application are by some thought to be borrowed from the Grecian games. The man was perfect who in any of the athletic exercises had got the victory; he was entire, having everything complete, who had the victory in each of the five exercises. Of this use in the last term I do not recollect an example, and therefore think the expressions are borrowed from the sacrifices under the law. A victim was perfect that was perfectly sound, having no disease; it was entire if it had all its members, having nothing deficient.

5. If any of you lack wisdom. Wisdom signifies, in general, knowledge of the best end and the best means of attaining it; but in Scripture it signifies the same as true religion, the thorough practical knowledge of God, of oneself, and of a Saviour. Let him ask of God. Because God is the only Teacher of this wisdom. That giveth to all men liberally. Who has all good, and gives all necessary good to everyone that asks fervently. He who does not ask thus does not feel his need of divine teaching. The ancient Greek maxim appears at first view strange, but it is literally true: "The knowledge of ignorance is the beginning of knowledge."

6. Let him ask in faith. Believing that God is, that He has all good, and that He is ever ready to impart to His creatures whatever they need. Nothing wavering. "Not judging otherwise"; having no doubt concerning the truth of these grand and fundamental principles, never supposing that God will permit him to ask in vain, when he asks sincerely and fervently. Is like a wave of the sea. The man who is not thoroughly persuaded that if he ask of God he shall receive resembles a wave of the sea; he is in a state of continual agitation; driven with the wind and tossed; now rising by hope, then sinking by despair.

7. Let not that man think. The man whose mind is divided, who is not properly persuaded either of his own wants or God's sufficiency. Such persons may pray, but having no faith, they can get no answer.

8. A double minded man. The "man of two souls," who has one for earth and another for heaven; who wishes to secure both worlds; he

MATTHEW HENRY

III. Both poor and rich are directed on what grounds to build their joy and comfort, v. 9–11. Those of low degree are to be looked upon as brethren. Good Christians may be rich in the world, v. 10. Grace and wealth are not wholly inconsistent. Both these are allowed to rejoice. No condition of life puts us out of a capacity of rejoicing in God. All who are brought low, and made lowly by grace, may rejoice in the prospect of their exaltation at the last in heaven. What reason rich people have to be humble: As the flower of the grass he shall pass away. He, and his wealth with him, v. 11. For the sun has no sooner risen with a burning heat than it withereth the grass. As a flower fades before the heat of the scorching sun, so shall the rich man fade away in his ways. For this reason let him that is rich rejoice, not so much in the providence of God, that makes him rich, as in the grace of God, that makes and keeps him humble.

IV. A blessing is pronounced on those who endure their exercises and trials, v. 12. It is not the man who suffers only that is blessed, but he who endures. Afflictions cannot make us miserable. A blessing may arise from them. Sufferings and temptations are the way to eternal blessedness: When he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, when he is approved, when his graces are found to be true and of the highest worth (so metals are tried as to their excellency by the fire). The tried Christian shall be a crowned one: and the crown he shall wear will be a crown of life. We only bear the cross for a while, but we shall wear the crown to eternity. This blessedness is a promised thing to the righteous sufferer. It is therefore what we may most surely depend upon. Our enduring temptations must be from a principle of love to God and to our Lord Jesus Christ: The Lord hath promised to those that love him. The crown of life is promised to all those who have the love of God reigning in their hearts.

Verses 13–18

I. God is not the author of any man's sin. Some professors might fall in the hour of temptation. The blame of their misconduct must lie entirely upon themselves. There is nothing in the nature of God that they can lay the blame upon. There is nothing in the providential dispensations of God that the blame of any man's sin can be laid upon (v. 13). As God cannot be tempted with evil himself, so neither can he be a tempter of others. It is very bad to sin; but it is much worse, when we have done amiss, to charge it upon God, and say it was owing to him. Afflictions are designed to draw out our graces, but not our corruptions.

II. Where the true cause of evil lies, and where the blame ought to be laid (v. 14). The true original of evil and temptation is in our own hearts. The combustible matter is in us, though the flame may be blown up by some outward causes. The method of sin in its proceeding. First it draws away, then entices. The heart is carried from that which is good, and enticed to cleave to that which is evil, estranged from the life of God, and then by degrees fixed in a course of sin. The word here rendered drawn away signifies a being forcibly haled or compelled. The word translated enticed signifies being wheedled and beguiled. The force and power of sin could never prevail, were it not for its cunning and guile.

translation, "He (the waverer, vs. 6) is a man double-minded, unstable . . ."; or better, BEZA'S. The words in this vs. 8 are in apposition with "that man," vs. 7; thus the "us," which is not in the original, will not need to be supplied, "A man double-minded, unstable in all his ways!" The word for "double-minded" is found here and in ch. 4:8, for the first time in Greek literature. It is not a hypocrite that is meant, but a fickle, "wavering" man, as the context shows. It is opposed to the single eye (Matt. 6:22). 9, 10. Translate, "But let the brother . . .," i.e., the best remedy against double-mindedness is that Christian simplicity of spirit whereby the "brother," low in outward circumstances, may "rejoice" (answering to vs. 2) "in that he is exalted," viz., by being accounted a son and heir of God, his very sufferings being a pledge of his coming glory and crown (vs. 12), and the rich may rejoice "in that he is made low," by being stripped of his goods for Christ's sake [MENOCHIUS]; or in that he is made, by sanctified trials, lowly in spirit, which is true matter for rejoicing [GOMARUS]. The design of the Epistle is to reduce all things to an equable footing (ch. 2:1; 5:13). The "low," rather than the "rich," is here called "the brother" [BENGEL]. 11. Taken from Isaiah 40:6-8. heat–rather, "the hot wind" from the (east or) south, which scorches vegetation (Luke 12:55). The "burning heat" of the sun is not at its rising, but rather at noon; whereas the scorching Kadim wind is often at sunrise (Jonah 4:8) [MIDDLETON, Greek Article]. Matthew 20:12 uses the Greek word for "heat." Isaiah 40:7, "bloweth upon it," seems to answer to "the hot wind" here. grace of the fashion–i.e., of the external appearance. in his ways–referring to the burdensome extent of the rich man's devices [BENGEL]. Cf. "his ways," i.e., his course of life, vs. 8. 12. Blessed–Cf. the beatitudes in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:4, 10, 11). endureth temptation–not the "falling into divers temptations" (vs. 2) is the matter for "joy," but the enduring of temptation "unto the end." Cf. Job 5:17. when he is tried–lit., "when he has become tested" or "approved," when he has passed through the "trying" (vs. 3), his "faith" having finally gained the victory. the crown–not in allusion to the crown or garland given to winners in the games; for this, though a natural allusion for Paul in writing to the heathen, among whom such games existed, would be less appropriate for James in addressing the Jewish Christians, who regarded Gentile usages with aversion. of life–"life" constitutes the crown, lit., the life, the only true life, the highest and eternal life. The crown implies a kingdom (Ps. 21:3). the Lord–not found in the best MSS. and versions. The believer's heart fills up the omission, without the name needing to be mentioned. The "faithful One who promised" (Heb. 10:23). to them that love him–In II Timothy 4:8, "the crown of righteousness to them that love His appearing." Love produces patient endurance: none attest their love more than they who suffer for Him. 13. when . . . tempted–tried by solicitation to evil. Heretofore the "temptation" meant was that of probation by afflictions. Let no one fancy that God lays upon him an inevitable necessity of sinning. God does not send trials on you in order to make you worse, but to make you better (vss. 16, 17). Therefore do not sink under the pressure of evils (I Cor. 10:13). of God–by agency proceeding from God. The Greek is not "tempted by," but, "from," implying indirect agency. cannot be tempted with evil . . .–"Neither do any of our sins tempt God to entice us to worse things, nor does He tempt any of His own accord" (lit., "of Himself"; cf. the antithesis, vs. 18, "Of His own will He begat us" to holiness, so far is He from tempting us of His own will) [BENGEL]. God is said in Genesis 22:1 to have "tempted Abraham"; but there the tempting meant is that of trying or proving, not that of seducement.

14. Every man, when tempted, is so through being drawn away of (again here, as in vs. 13, the Greek for "of" expresses the actual source, rather than the agent of temptation) his own lust. The cause of sin is in ourselves. Even Satan's suggestions do not endanger us before they are made our own. Each one has his own peculiar (so the Greek) lust, arising from his own temperament and habit. Lust flows from the original birth-sin in man, inherited from Adam. drawn away–the beginning step in temptation: drawn away from truth and virtue. enticed–lit., "taken with a bait," as fish are. The further progress: the man allowing himself (as the Greek middle voice implies) to be enticed to evil [BENGEL]. "Lust" is here personified as the harlot that allures the man. 15. The guilty union is committed by the will embracing the tempt-will not give up earth, and he is loath to let heaven go. This was a usual term among the Jews to express the man who attempted to worship God and yet retained the love of the creature. Perhaps James refers to those Jews who were endeavoring to incorporate the law with the gospel, who were divided in their minds and affections, not willing to give up the Levitical rites and yet unwilling to renounce the gospel. Such persons could make no progress in divine things.

9. Let the brother of low degree. The poor, destitute Christian may "glory" in the cross of Christ, and the blessed hope laid up for him in heaven; for, being a child of God, he is an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ.

10. But the rich, in that he is made low. "In his humiliation"—in his being brought to the foot of the Cross to receive, as a poor and miserable sinner, redemption through the Blood of the Cross; and especially let him rejoice in this, because all outward glory is only as the flower of the field and, like that, will wither and perish.

11. For the sun is no sooner risen. All human things are transitory; rise and fall, or increase and decay, belong to all the productions of the earth, and to all its inhabitants.

12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation. Every man is in this life in a state of temptation or trial, and in this state he is a candidate for another and a better world; he that stands in his trial shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. There may be an allusion here to the contests in the Grecian games. He is crowned who conquers, and none else.

13. Let no man say. Lest the former sentiment should be misapplied, as the word temptation has two grand meanings—solicitation to sin, and trial from providential situation or circumstances—James, taking up the word in the former sense, after having used it in the latter, says: Let no man say, when he is tempted [solicited to sin], I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he [thus] any man."

14. But every man is tempted, successfully solicited to sin, when he is drawn away of his own lust—when, giving way to the evil propensity of his own heart, he does that to which he is solicited by the enemy of his soul. Among the rabbins we find some fine sayings on this subject. "Evil concupiscence is, at the beginning, like the thread of a spider's web: afterwards it is like a cart rope" (Sanhedrim, fol. 99). In the words drawn away of his own lust, and enticed, there is a double metaphor: the first referring to the dragging a fish out of the water by a hook which it had swallowed, because concealed by a bait; the second, to the enticements of impure women, who draw away the unwary into their snares and involve them in their ruin.

MATTHEW HENRY

The success of corruption in the heart (v. 15). Sin being allowed to excite desires in us, it will soon ripen those desires into consent, and then it is said to have conceived. The final issue of sin: Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. There is death upon the soul, and death comes upon the body.

III. We are taught yet further that God is the Father and fountain of all good, v. 16, 17. We should take particular care not to err in our conceptions of God: "Do not err, my beloved brethren, do not wander." God is not, cannot be, the author of anything that is evil; but must be acknowledged as the cause and spring of everything that is good, v. 17. God is unchangeable, and our changes and shadows are not from any mutability or shadowy alterations in him, but from ourselves. The Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Every good gift is from him. He gives the light of reason. He gives also the light of learning. The light of divine revelation is more immediately from above. So that we have nothing good but what we receive from God.

Our regeneration, and all the holy happy consequences of it, must be ascribed to him (v. 18). A true Christian is a creature begotten anew. It is of God's own will; not by our skill or power; but purely from the goodwill and grace of God. The means whereby this is effected, the word of truth, that is, the gospel. This gospel is indeed a word of truth, or else it could never produce such real, such lasting, such great and noble effects. The end and design of God's giving renewing grace, That we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures. Christ is the first-fruits of Christians, Christians are the first-fruits of creatures.

We are required,

I. To restrain the workings of passion. This we shall learn if we are indeed begotten again by the word of truth, v. 19. Be ready to hear and consider what God's word teaches. This may be applied to the afflictions and temptations spoken of in the beginning of the chapter. Instead of censuring God under our trials, let us open our ears and hearts to hear what he will say to us. This may be understood as referring to the disputes and differences that Christians were running into among themselves. We should be swift to hear reason and truth on all sides, and be slow to speak: and, when we do speak, there should be nothing of wrath. If men would govern their tongues, they must govern their passions. If we would be slow to speak, we must be slow to wrath.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

ress. "Lust," the harlot, then, "brings forth sin," viz., of that kind to which the temptation inclines. Then the particular sin (so the Greek implies), "when it is completed, brings forth death," with which it was all along pregnant [ALFORD]. This "death" stands in striking contrast to the "crown of life" (vs. 12) which "patience" or endurance ends in, when it has its "perfect work" (vs. 4). He who will fight Satan with Satan's own weapons, must not wonder if he finds himself overmatched. Nip sin in the bud of lust. 16. Do not err in attributing to God temptation to evil; nay (as he proceeds to show), "every good," all that is good on earth, comes from God. 17. gift... gift—not the same words in Greek: the first, the act of giving, or the gift in its initiatory stage; the second, the thing given, the boon, when perfected. As the "good gift" stands in contrast to "sin" in its initiatory stage (vs. 15), so the "perfect boon" is in contrast to "sin when it is finished," bringing forth death (II Pet. 1:3). from above—(Cf. ch. 3:15). Father of lights—Creator of the lights in heaven (cf. Job. 38:28 [ALFORD]; Gen. 4:20, 21; Heb. 12:9). This accords with the reference to the changes in the light of the heavenly bodies alluded to in the end of the verse. Also, Father of the spiritual lights in the kingdom of grace and glory [BENGEL]. These were typified by the supernatural lights on the breastplate of the high priest, the Urim. As "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all" (I John 1:5), He cannot in any way be the Author of sin (vs. 13), which is darkness (John 3:19). no variableness... shadow of turning—(Mal. 3:6). None of the alternations of light and shadow which the physical "lights" undergo, and which even the spiritual lights are liable to, as compared with God. "Shadow of turning," lit., the dark "shadow-mark" cast from one of the heavenly bodies, arising from its "turning" or revolution, e.g., when the moon is eclipsed by the shadow of the earth, and the sun by the body of the moon. BENGEL makes a climax, "no variation—not even the shadow of a turning"; the former denoting a change in the understanding; the latter, in the will. 18. (John 1:13.) The believer's regeneration is the highest example of nothing but good proceeding from God. Of his own will—Of his own good pleasure (which shows that it is God's essential nature to do good, not evil), not induced by any external cause. begat he us—spiritually: a once-for-all accomplished act (I Pet. 1:3, 23). In contrast to "lust when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sin, and sin ... death" (vs. 15). Life follows naturally in connection with light (vs. 17). word of truth—the Gospel. The objective mean, as faith is the appropriating mean of regeneration by the Holy Spirit as the efficient agent. a kind of first fruits—Christ is, in respect to the resurrection, "the first fruits" (I Cor. 15:20, 23): believers, in respect to regeneration, are, as it were, first fruits (image from the consecration of the first-born of man, cattle, and fruits to God; familiar to the Jews addressed), i.e., they are the first of God's regenerated creatures, and the pledge of the ultimate regeneration of the creation, Romans 8:19, 23, where also the Spirit, the divine agent of the believer's regeneration, is termed "the first fruits," i.e., the earnest that the regeneration now begun in the soul, shall at last extend to the body too, and to the lower parts of creation. Of all God's visible creatures, believers are the noblest part, and like the legal "first-fruits," sanctify the rest; for this reason they are much tried now. 19. Wherefore—as your evil is of yourselves, but your good from God. However, the oldest MSS. and versions read thus: "YE KNOW IT (so Eph. 5:5; Heb. 12:17), my beloved brethren; BUT (consequently) let every man be swift to hear," i.e., docile in receiving "the word of truth" (vss. 18, 21). The true method of hearing is treated in vss. 21-27, and ch. 2. slow to speak—(Prov. 10:19; 17:27, 28; Eccles. 5:2). A good way of escaping one kind of temptation arising from ourselves (vs. 13). Slow to speak authoritatively as a master or teacher of others (cf. ch. 3:1): a common Jewish fault: slow also to speak such hasty things of God, as in vs. 13. Two ears are given to us, the rabbis observe, but only one tongue: the ears are open and exposed, whereas the tongue is walled in behind the teeth. slow to wrath—(ch. 3:13, 14; 4:5). Slow in becoming heated by debate: another Jewish fault (Rom. 2:8), to which much speaking tends. TITTMANN thinks not so much "wrath" is meant, as an indignant feeling of fretfulness under the calamities to which the whole of human life is exposed; this accords with the "divers temptations" in vs. 2. Hastiness of temper hinders hearing God's word; so Naaman, II Kings 5:11; Luke 4:28. 20. Man's angry zeal in debating, as if jealous for the honor of God's righteousness,

ADAM CLARKE

15. When lust hath conceived. When the evil propensity works unchecked, it bringeth forth sin—the evil act between the parties is perpetrated. And sin, when it is finished. When this breach of the law of God and of innocence has been a sufficient time completed, it bringeth forth death—the spurious offspring is the fruit of the criminal connection, and the evidence of that death or "punishment" due to the transgressors. Sin is a small matter in its commencement; but by indulgence it grows great, and multiplies itself beyond all calculation. To use the rabbinical metaphor lately adduced, it is, in the commencement, "like the thread of a spider's web"—almost imperceptible through its extreme fineness, and as easily broken; afterwards it becomes like a cart rope. It has, by being indulged, produced strong desire and delight; next, consent. Then time, place, and opportunity serving, that which was conceived in the mind and finished in the purpose is consummated by act.

16. Do not err. By supposing that God is the author of sin or that He impels any man to commit it.

17. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above. Whatever is good is from God; whatever is evil is from man himself. As from the sun all light comes, so from God all good comes. With whom is no variableness. The sun, the fountain of light to the whole of our system, may be obscured by clouds; or the different bodies which revolve round him, and particularly the earth, may from time to time suffer a diminution of his light by the intervention of other bodies eclipsing his splendor, and his apparent shadow of turning; when for instance, in our winter, he has declined to the southern tropic, so that our days are greatly shortened, and we suffer in consequence a great diminution of both light and heat. But there is nothing of this kind with God; He is never affected by the changes and chances to which mortal things are exposed.

18. Of his own will begat he us. God's will here is opposed to the lust of man, v. 15; His truth, the means of human salvation, to the sinful means referred to in the above verse; and the new creatures, to the sin conceived and brought forth, as above. As the will of God is essentially good, all its productions must be good also; as it is infinitely pure, all its productions must be holy. The word or doctrine of truth, what Paul calls "the word of the truth of the gospel," Col. i. 5, is the means which God uses to convert souls. A kind of firstfruits. By creatures we are here to understand the Gentiles, and by firstfruits the Jews, to whom the gospel was first sent; and those of them that believed were the firstfruits of that astonishing harvest which God has since reaped over the whole Gentile world.

19. Swift to hear. "Talk little and work much," is a rabbinical adage (Pirkey Aboth, cap. i. 15). "The righteous speak little, and do much; the wicked speak much, and do nothing" (Bava Metzia, fol. 87).

Slow to wrath. Those who are hasty in speech are generally of a peevish or angry disposition. A person who is careful to consider what he says is not likely to be soon angry.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. A very good reason is given for suppressing anger, v. 20. The worst thing we can bring to a religious controversy is anger. Wrath is a human thing, and the wrath of man stands opposed to the righteousness of God. Those who pretend to serve the cause of God hereby show that they are acquainted neither with God nor his cause.

III. We are called upon to suppress other corrupt affections, as well as rash anger, v. 21. Hereby we are taught, as Christians, to watch against, and lay aside, all the disorders of a corrupt heart, which would prejudice it against the word and ways of God. There is abundance of that which is evil in us, to be watched against; there is superfluity of naughtiness. It is not enough to restrain evil affections, but they must be cast from us, or laid apart. This must extend not only to outward sins, but to all sin of thought and affection as well as speech and practice; all filthiness.

IV. Concerning hearing the word of God.

1. We are required to prepare ourselves for it (v. 21).

2. How to hear it: Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. In hearing the word of God, we are to receive it; receive it as the stock does the graft; so that the fruit which is produced may be, not according to the nature of the sour stock, but according to the nature of the gospel which is engrafted into our souls. We must therefore yield ourselves to the word of God, with most submissive tempers: this is to receive it with meekness. Being willing to hear of our faults, and taking it not only patiently, but thankfully. In all our hearing we should aim at the salvation of our souls. It is the design of the word of God to make us wise to salvation.

3. What is to be done after hearing (v. 22). Hearing is in order to doing; the most attentive and the most frequent hearing of the word of God will not avail us, unless we be also doers of it. It is not enough to remember what we hear. Bare hearers are self-deceivers. Self-deceit will be found the worst deceit at last.

4. What is the proper use of the word of God, v. 23–24. The use we are to make of God's word may be learnt from its being compared to a glass, in which a man may behold his natural face. As a looking-glass shows us the spots and defilements upon our faces, so the word of God shows us our sins. It shows us what is amiss, that it may be amended. When we attend to the word of God, so as to see ourselves, our true state and condition, and dress ourselves anew by the glass of God's word, this is to make a proper use of it. We have here an account of those who do not use this glass of the word as they ought, v. 24.

In vain do we hear God's word, and look into the gospel glass, if we go away, and forget our spots, and forget our remedy. This is the case of those who do not hear the word as they ought. Those also are described who hear aright, and who use the glass of God's word as they should do (v. 25). The gospel is a law of liberty, or of liberation. The ceremonial law was a yoke of bondage; the gospel of Christ is a law of liberty. It is a perfect law.

In hearing the word, we look into this perfect law. Then only do we look into the law of liberty as we should when we continue therein. Those who thus do, and continue in the law and word of God, are, and shall be, blessed in their deed. This blessedness does not lie in knowing, but in doing the will of God. It is not talking, but walking, that will bring us to heaven.

is far from working that which is really righteousness in God's sight. True "righteousness is sown in peace," not in wrath (ch. 3:18). The oldest and the received reading is "worketh," produceth not. best reading means "worketh," i.e., practiceth not: 21. lay apart—"once for all" (so the Greek): as a filthy garment. Cf. Joshua's filthy garments, Zechariah 3:3, 5; Revelation 7:14. "Filthiness" is cleansed away by hearing the word (John 15:3). superfluity of naughtiness—excess (for instance, the intemperate spirit implied in "wrath," vss. 19, 20), which arises from malice (our natural, evil disposition towards one another). I Peter 2:1 has the very same words in the Greek. So "malice" is the translation, Ephesians 4:31; Colossians 3:8. "Faulty excess" [BENGEL] is not strong enough. Superfluous excess in speaking is also reprobated as "coming of evil" (the Greek is akin to the word for "naughtiness" here) in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:37), with which James' Epistle is so connected. with meekness—in mildness towards one another [ALFORD], the opposite to "wrath" (vs. 20): answering to "as new-born babes" (I Pet. 2:2). Meekness, I think, includes also a childlike, docile, humble, as well as an uncontentious, spirit (Ps. 25: 9; 45:4; Isa. 66:2; Matt. 5:5; 11:28-30; 18:3, 4; contrast Rom. 2:8). On "receive," applied to ground receiving seed, cf. Mark 4:20. Contrast Acts 17:11; I Thessalonians 1:6 with II Thessalonians 2:10. engrafted word—the Gospel word, whose proper attribute is to be engrafted by the Holy Spirit, so as to be livingly incorporated with the believer, as the fruitful shoot is with the wild natural stock on which it is engrafted. The law came to man only from without, and admonished him of his duty. The Gospel is engrafted inwardly, and so fulfils the ultimate design of the law (Deut. 6:6 11:18; Ps. 119: 11). ALFORD translates, "The implanted word," referring to the parable of the sower (Matt. 13). I prefer English Version. able to save—a strong incentive to correct our dulness in hearing the word: that word which we hear so carelessly, is able (instrumentally) to save us [CALVIN]. souls—your true selves, for the "body" is now liable to sickness and death: but the soul being now saved, both soul and body at last shall be so (ch. 5:15, 20). 22. Qualification of the precept, "Be swift to hear": "Be ye doers . . . not hearers only"; not merely "Do the word," but "Be doers" systematically and continually, as if this was your regular business. James here again refers to the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 7:21-29). deceiving your own selves—by the logical fallacy (the Greek implies this) that the mere hearing is all that is needed. 23. For—the logical self-deceit (vs. 22) illustrated. not a doer—more lit., "a notdoer" [ALFORD]. The true disciple, say the rabbis, learns in order that he may do, not in order that he may merely know or teach. his natural face—lit., "the countenance of his birth": the face he was born with. As a man may behold his natural face in a mirror, so the hearer may perceive his moral visage in God's Word. This faithful portraiture of man's soul in Scripture, is the strongest proof of the truth of the latter. In it, too, we see mirrored God's glory, as well as our natural vileness. 24. beholdeth—more lit., "he contemplated himself and hath gone his way," i.e., no sooner has he contemplated his image than he is gone his way (vs. 11). "Contemplate" answers to hearing the word: "goeth his way," to relaxing the attention after hearing—letting the mind go elsewhere, and the interest of the thing heard pass away: then forgetfulness follows [ALFORD] (cf. Ezek. 33:31). "Contemplate" here, and in vs. 23, implies that, though cursory, yet some knowledge of one's self, at least for the time, is imparted in hearing the word (I Cor. 14:24). and . . . and—The repetition expresses hastiness joined with levity [BENGEL]. forgetteth what manner of man he was—in the mirror. Forgetfulness is no excuse (vs. 25; II Pet. 1:9). 25. looketh into—lit., "stoopeth down to take a close look into." Peers into: stronger than "beholdeth," or "contemplated," vs. 24. A blessed curiosity if it be efficacious in bearing fruit [BENGEL]. perfect law of liberty—the Gospel rule of life, perfect and perfecting (as shown in the Sermon on the Mount, Matt. 5:48), and making us truly walk at liberty (Ps. 119:32, Church of England Prayer Book Version). Christians are to aim at a higher standard of holiness than was generally understood under the law. The principle of love takes the place of the letter of the law, so that by the Spirit they are free from the yoke of sin, and free to obey by spontaneous instinct (ch. 2:8, 10, 12; John 8:31-36; 15:14, 15; cf. I Cor. 7:22; Gal. 5:1, 13; I Pet. 2:16). The law is thus not made void, but fulfilled. continueth therein—contrasted with "goeth his way," vs. 24:

ADAM CLARKE

21. All filthiness. This word signifies any impurity that cleaves to the body; but applied to the mind, it implies all impure and unholy affections, such as those spoken of in v. 15, which pollute the soul. In this sense it is used by the best Greek writers. Superfluity of naughtiness. The "overflowing of wickedness."

The engrafted word. That doctrine which has already been planted among you, which has brought forth fruit in all them that have meekly and humbly received it, and is as powerful to save your souls as the souls of those who have already believed. When those who were Jews, and who had been originally planted by God as altogether a right vine, received the faith of the gospel, it is represented as being engrafted on that right stock, the pure knowledge of the true God and His holy moral law. This indeed was a good stock on which to implant Christianity.

22. But be ye doers of the word. They had heard this doctrine; they had believed it; but they had put it to no practical use. Deceiving your own selves. Imposing on your own selves by sophistical arguments; this is the meaning of the words. They had reasoned themselves into a state of carnal security, and the object of James is to awake them out of their sleep.

23. Beholding his natural face in a glass. This metaphor is very simple, but very expressive. A man wishes to see his own face, and how, in its natural state, it appears; for this purpose he looks into a mirror, by which his real face, with all its blemishes and imperfections, is exhibited. He is affected with his own appearance; he sees deformities that might be remedied; spots, superfluities, and impurities that might be removed. While he continues to look into the mirror he is affected, and wishes himself different to what he appears, and forms purposes of doing what he can to render his countenance agreeable. On going away he soon forgets "what manner of person he was." The doctrines of God, faithfully preached, are such a mirror; he who hears cannot help discovering his own character and being affected with his own deformity. He sorrows and purposes amendment; but when the preaching is over, the mirror is removed, and not being careful to examine the records of his salvation, the "perfect law of liberty," v. 25, or not continuing to look therein, he soon forgets "what manner of man he was."

25. But whoso looketh into the perfect law. The word which we translate looketh into is very emphatic and signifies that deep and attentive consideration given to a thing or subject which a man cannot bring up to his eyes, and therefore must "bend his back and neck, stooping down," that he may see it to the greater advantage. The law of liberty must mean the gospel. It is a law, for it imposes obligations from God and prescribes a rule of life; and it punishes transgressors and rewards the obedient. It is, nevertheless, a law that gives liberty from the guilt, power, dominion, and influence of sin; and it is perfect, providing a fullness of salvation for the soul: and it may be called perfect here in opposition to the law, which was a system of types and representations of which the gospel is the sum and substance. And continueth. Takes time to see and examine the state of his soul, the grace of his God, the extent of his duty, and the height of the promised glory. The metaphor here is taken from those females who spend much time at their glass, in order that they may decorate themselves to the greatest advantage, and not leave one hair, or the smallest ornament, out of its place.

V. How we may distinguish between a vain religion and that which is pure and approved of God.

1. What is a vain religion: If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceives his own heart, this man's religion is vain. In a vain religion there is much of show. When men are more concerned to seem religious than really to be so, it is a sign that their religion is but vain. In a vain religion there is much censuring of others. When we hear people ready to speak of the faults of others, that they themselves may seem the wiser and better, this is a sign that they have but a vain religion. The man who has a detracting tongue cannot have a truly humble gracious heart. There is no strength nor power in that religion which will not enable a man to bridle his tongue. In a vain religion a man deceives his own heart. When once religion comes to be a vain thing, how great is the vanity!

2. Wherein true religion consists, v. 27. It is the glory of religion to be pure and undefiled. A holy life and a charitable heart show a true religion.

That religion is pure and undefiled which is so before God and the Father. True religion teaches us to do everything as in the presence of God.

Compassion and charity to the poor and distressed form a very great and necessary part of true religion: Visiting the fatherless and widow in their affliction. By them we are to understand all who are proper objects of charity, all who are in affliction. If the sum of religion be drawn up in two articles this is one—to be charitable and relieve the afflicted. An unspotted life must accompany an unfeigned love and charity: To keep himself unspotted from the world. The world is apt to spot and blemish the soul, and it is hard to live in it, and have to do with it, and not be defiled; but this must be our constant endeavour. Herein consists pure and undefiled religion.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

continues both looking into the mirror of God's word, and doing its precepts. doer of the work—rather, "a doer of work" [ALFORD], an actual worker. blessed in his deed—rather, "in his doing"; in the very doing there is blessedness (Ps. 19:11). 26, 27. An example of doing work. religious . . religion—The Greek expresses the external service or exercise of religion, "godliness" being the internal soul of it. "If any man think himself to be (so the Greek) religious, i.e., observant of the offices of religion, let him know these consist not so much in outward observances, as in such acts of mercy and humble piety (Mic. 6:7, 8) as visiting the fatherless, etc., and keeping one's self unspotted from the world" (Matt. 23:23). James does not mean that these offices are the great essentials, or sum total of religion; but that, whereas the law service was merely ceremonial, the very services of the Gospel consist in acts of mercy and holiness, and it has light for its garment, its very robe being righteousness [TRENCH]. The Greek word is only found in Acts 26:5, "after the straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee." Colossians 2:18, "worshipping of angels." bridleth not . . . tongue—Discretion in speech is better than fluency of speech (cf. ch. 3:2, 3). Cf. Psalm 39:1. God alone can enable us to do so. James, in treating of the law, naturally notices this sin. For they who are free from grosser sins, and even bear the outward show of sanctity, will often exalt themselves by detracting others under the pretense of zeal, while their real motive is love of evil-speaking [CALVIN]. heart—It and the tongue act and react on one another. 27. Pure . . . and undefiled—"Pure" is that love which has in it no foreign admixture, as self-deceit and hypocrisy. "Undefiled" is the means of its being "pure" [TITTMANN]. "Pure" expresses the positive, "undefiled" the negative side of religious service; just as visiting the fatherless and widow is the active, keeping himself unspotted from the world, the passive side of religious duty. This is the nobler shape that our religious exercises take, instead of the ceremonial offices of the law. before God and the Father—lit., "before Him who is (our) God and Father." God is so called to imply that if we would be like our Father, it is not by fasting, etc., for He does none of these things, but in being "merciful as our Father is merciful" [CHRYSOSTOM]. visit—in sympathy and kind offices to alleviate their distresses. the fatherless—whose "Father' is God (Ps. 68:5); peculiarly helpless. and—not in the Greek; so close is the connection between active works of mercy to others, and the maintenance of personal unworldliness of spirit, word, and deed; no copula therefore is needed. Religion in its rise interests us about ourselves; in its progress, about our fellow creatures; in its highest stage, about the honor of God. keep himself—with jealous watchfulness, at the same time praying and depending on God as alone able to keep us (John 17:15; Jude 24).

ADAM CLARKE

He being not a forgetful hearer. This seems to be a reference to Deut. iv. 9: "Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life." "He who studies and forgets is like to a woman who brings forth children, and immediately buries them" (Aboth R. Nathan, cap. 23). Shall be blessed in his deed. In Pirkey Aboth, cap. v. 14, it is said: "There are four kinds of men who visit the synagogues: (1) He who enters but does not work; (2) He who works but does not enter; (3) He who enters and works; (4) He who neither enters nor works. The first two are indifferent characters; the third is the righteous man; the fourth is wholly evil." As the path of duty is the way of safety, so it is the way of happiness; he who obeys God from a loving heart and pure conscience will infallibly find continual blessedness.

27. Pure religion and undefiled. James's definition rather refers to the effects of pure religion than to its nature. The "life of God in the soul of man," producing love to God and man, will show itself in the acts which James mentions here. It is pure in the principle, for it is divine truth and divine love. It is undefiled in all its operations. It can produce nothing unholy, because it ever acts in the sight of God; and it can produce no ungentle word nor unkind act, because it comes from the Father. The words pure and undefiled are supposed to have reference to a diamond or precious stone, whose perfection consists in its being free from flaws. True religion is the ornament of the soul; and its effects, the ornament of the life. To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction. Works of charity and mercy are the proper fruits of religion, and none are more especially the objects of charity and mercy than the orphans and widows. False religion may perform acts of mercy and charity: but its motives not being pure, and its principle being defiled, the flesh, self, and hypocrisy spot the man, and spot his acts. True religion does not merely give something for the relief of the distressed, but it visits them, it takes the oversight of them, it takes them under its care.

CHAPTER 2

He shows how much mischief there is in the sin of respect of persons.

I. A caution against this sin laid down in general, v. 1. The character of Christians fully implied: they are such as have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. They have it as a trust; they have it as a treasure. How honourably James speaks of Jesus Christ; he calls him the Lord of glory. Christ's being the Lord of glory should teach us not to respect Christians for anything so much as their conformity to Christ. We should not show respect to men, so as to cloud or lessen the glory of our glorious Lord. This is certainly a very heinous sin.

CHAPTER 2

VSS. 1-26. THE SIN OF RESPECT OF PERSONS: DEAD, UNWORKING FAITH SAVES NO MAN. 1-13. James illustrates "the perfect law of liberty" (ch. 1:25) in one particular instance of a sin against it, concluding with a reference again to that law (vss. 12, 13). 1. brethren—The equality of all Christians as "brethren," forms the groundwork of the admonition. the faith of . . . Christ—i.e., the Christian faith. James grounds Christian practice on Christian faith. the Lord of glory—So I Corinthians 2:8. As all believers, alike rich and poor, derive all their glory from their union with Him, "the Lord of glory," not from external advantages of worldly fortune, the sin in question is peculiarly inconsistent with His "faith." with respect of persons—lit., "in respectings of persons"; in the practice of partial preferences of persons in various ways and on various occasions. 2. assembly—lit., "synagogue"; this, the latest honorable use, and the only Christian use of the term in the New Testament, occurs in James's Epistle, the apostle who maintained to the latest possible moment the bonds between the Jewish synagogue and the Christian Church. Soon the continued resistance of the truth by the Jews led Christians to leave the term to them exclusively (Rev. 3:9). The "synagogue" implies a mere assembly or congregation not necessarily united by any common tie. "Church," a people bound together by mutual ties and laws, though often it may happen that the members are not assembled [TRENCH and VITRINGA]. Partly from James' Hebrew tendencies, partly from the Jewish Christian churches retaining most of the Jewish

1. My brethren, have not. This verse should be read interrogatively: "My brethren, do you not make profession of the faith or religion of our glorious Lord Jesus Christ with acceptance of persons?" That is, preferring the rich to the poor merely because of their riches, and not on account of any moral excellence, personal piety, or public usefulness. Faith is put here for religion; and of glory should, according to some critics, be construed with it as the Syriac and Coptic have done. Some connect it with our Lord Jesus Christ—"the religion of our glorious Lord Jesus Christ." Others translate thus, "the faith of the glory of our Lord Jesus." There are many various readings in the MSS. and versions on this verse; the meaning is clear enough, though the connection be rather obscure.

2. If there come unto your assembly. "Into the synagogue." It appears from this that the apostle is addressing Jews who frequented their synagogues. Our word assembly does not express the original; and we cannot suppose that these synagogues were at this time occupied with Christian worship, but that the Christian Jews continued to frequent them for the purpose of hearing the law and the prophets read, as they had formerly done, previously to their conversion to the Christian faith.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. We have this sin described and cautioned against, by an example of it (v. 2, 3). You act partially, and determine wrong, merely because the one makes a better appearance than the other. God has his remnant among all sorts of people, among those that wear soft and gay clothing, and among those that wear poor and vile raiment. In matters of religion, rich and poor stand upon a level; no man's riches set him in the least nearer to God, nor does any man's poverty set him at a distance from God. All undue honouring of worldly greatness and riches should especially be watched against in Christian societies. If a poor man be a good man, we must not value him a whit the less for his poverty; and, if a rich man be a bad man, we must not value him any whit the more for his riches. There is many a humble, heavenly, good Christian, who is clothed meanly; but neither should he nor his Christianity be thought the worse of on this account.

III. We have the greatness of this sin set forth, v. 4, 5. Are you not then partial in yourselves? According to the strict rendering of the original, the question is, "Have you not made a difference? And, in that difference, do you not judge by a false rule, and go upon false measures?" This respect of persons is owing to the evil and injustice of the thoughts. "You have become judges of evil thoughts; you are judges according to those unjust estimations and corrupt opinions which you have formed to yourselves. You secretly prefer outward pomp before inward grace, and the things that are seen before those which are not seen." The deformity of sin is never truly and fully discerned till the evil of our thoughts be disclosed. This respect of persons is a heinous sin, because it is to show ourselves most directly contrary to God (v. 5–6). God has made those heirs of a kingdom whom you make of no reputation. Many of the poor of this world are the chosen of God. Their being God's chosen does not prevent their being poor; their being poor does not at all prejudice the evidences of their being chosen. God designed to recommend his holy religion, not by the external advantages of gaiety and pomp, but by its intrinsic worth; and therefore chose the poor of this world. Many poor of the world are rich in faith; thus the poorest may become rich. It is expected from those who have wealth that they be rich in good works; but it is expected from the poor in the world that they be rich in faith. Believing Christians are heirs of a kingdom, though they may be very poor as to present possessions. Where any are rich in faith, there will be also divine love. We read of the crown promised to those that love God, in the former chapter (v. 12); we here find there is a kingdom too. And, as the crown is a crown of life, so the kingdom will be an everlasting kingdom. After such considerations as these, the charge is cutting indeed, v. 6.

Respecting persons on account of their riches or outward figure, is shown to be a very great sin because of the mischiefs which are owing to worldly wealth and greatness, v. 7. This will make your sin appear exceedingly sinful and foolish, in setting up that which tends to pull you down, and to dishonour that worthy name by which you are called.

How the matter may be mended.

I. The law that is to guide us, v. 8. As the scripture teaches us to love all our neighbours, be they rich or poor, as ourselves, so, in our having a steady regard to this rule, we shall do well. The rule for Christians to walk by is settled in the scriptures. The scripture gives us this as a law, to love our neighbour as ourselves. This law is a royal law, it comes from the King of kings. Its own worth and dignity deserve it should be thus honoured. A pretence of observing this royal law, when it is interpreted with partiality, will not excuse men in any unjust proceedings.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

forms, this term "synagogue" is used here instead of the Christian term "Church" (ecclesia, derived from a root, "called out," implying the union of its members in spiritual bonds, independent of space, and called out into separation from the world); an undesigned coincidence and mark of truth. 2, 3. "If there chance to have come" [ALFORD]. goodly apparel . . . gay clothing—As the Greek, is the same in both, translate both alike, "gay," or "splendid clothing." have respect to him . . .—though ye know not who he is, when perhaps he may be a heathen. It was the office of the deacons to direct to a seat the members of the congregation [CLEMENT, Constitut. 2. 57, 58]. unto him—not in the best MSS. Thus "thou" becomes more demonstratively emphatic. there—at a distance from where the good seats are. here—near the speaker. under my footstool—not literally so; but on the ground, down by my footstool. The poor man must either stand, or if he sits, sit in a degrading position. The speaker has a footstool as well as a good seat. 4. Are ye not . . . partial—lit., "Have ye not made distinctions or "differences" (so as to prefer one to another)? So in Jude 22. in yourselves—in your minds, i.e., according to your carnal inclination [GROTIUS]. are become judges of evil thoughts—The Greek words for "judges" and for "partial," are akin in sound and meaning. A similar translation ought therefore to be given to both. Thus, either for "judges . . ." translate, "distinguishers of (i.e., according to your) evil thoughts"; or, do ye not partially judge between men, and are become evilly-thinking judges (Mark 7:21)? The "evil thoughts" are in the judges themselves; as in Luke 18:6, the Greek, "judge of injustice," is translated, "unjust judge." 5. Hearken—James brings to trial the self-constituted "judges" (vs. 4). poor of this world—The best MSS. read, "those poor in respect to the world." In contrast to "the rich in this world" (I Tim. 6:17). Not of course all the poor; but the poor, as a class, furnish more believers than the rich as a class. The rich, if a believer, renounces riches as his portion; the poor, if an unbeliever, neglects that which is the peculiar advantage of poverty (Matt. 5:3; I Cor. 1:26, 27, 28). rich in faith—Their riches consist in faith. Luke 12:21, "rich toward God." I Timothy 6:18, "rich in good works" (Rev. 2:9; cf. II Cor. 8:9). Christ's poverty is the source of the believer's riches. kingdom . . . promised—(Luke 12:32; I Cor. 2:9; II Tim. 4:8). 6. The world's judgment of the poor contrasted with God's. ye—Christians, from whom better things might have been expected; there is no marvel that men of the world do so. despised—lit., "dishonored." To dishonor the poor is to dishonor those whom God honors, and so to invert the order of God [CALVIN]. rich—as a class. oppress—lit., "abuse their power against" you. draw you—Translate, "is it not they (those very persons whom ye partially prefer, vss. 1-4) that drag you" (viz., with violence) [ALFORD]. before . . . judgment seats—instituting persecutions for religion, as well as oppressive lawsuits, against you. 7. "Is it not they that blaspheme . . . ?" as in vs. 6 [ALFORD]. Rich heathen must here chiefly be meant; for none others would directly blaspheme the name of Christ. Only indirectly rich Christians can be meant, who, by their inconsistency, caused His name to be blasphemed; so Ezekiel 36:21, 22; Romans 2:24. Besides, there were few rich Jewish Christians at Jerusalem (Rom. 15:26). They who dishonor God's name by wilful and habitual sin, "take (or bear) the Lord's name in vain" (cf. Prov. 30:9, with Exod. 20:7). that worthy name—which is "good before the Lord's saints" (Ps. 52:9; 54:6); which ye pray may be "hallowed" (Matt. 6:9), and "by which ye are called," lit., "which was invoked" (or, "called upon) by you" (cf. Gen. 48:16; Isa. 4:1, Margin; Acts 15:17), so that at your baptism "into the name" (so the Greek, Matt. 28:19) of Christ, ye became Christ's people (I Cor. 3:23). 8. I think the translation is, "If in very deed (or indeed on the one hand) ye fulfil the royal law . . . , ye do well, but if (on the other hand) ye respect persons, ye practice sin." The Jewish Christians boasted of, and rested in, the "law" (Acts 15:1; 21:18-24; Rom. 2:17; Gal. 2:12). To this the "indeed" alludes. "(Ye rest in the law): If indeed (then) ye fulfil it, ye do well; but if . . ." royal—the law that is king of all laws, being the sum and essence of the ten commandments. The great King, God, is love; His law is the royal law of love, and that law, like Himself, reigns supreme. He "is no respecter of persons"; therefore to respect persons is at variance with Him and His royal law, which is at once a law of love and of liberty (vs. 12). The law is the "whole"; "the (particular) Scripture" (Lev. 19:18) quoted is

ADAM CLARKE

With a gold ring, in goodly apparel. The ring on the finger and the splendid garb were proofs of the man's opulence; and his ring and his coat, not his worth, moral good qualities, or the righteousness of his cause, procured him the respect of which James speaks. There come in also a poor man. In ancient times petty courts of judicature were held in the synagogues; and it is probable that the case here adduced was one of a judicial kind, where, of the two parties, one was rich and the other poor; and the master or ruler of the synagogue, or he who presided in this court, paid particular deference to the rich man and neglected the poor man; though, as plaintiff and defendant, they were equal in the eye of justice, and should have been considered so by an impartial judge.

3. Sit here under my footstool. Thus evidently prejudging the cause, and giving the poor man to see that he was to expect no impartial administration of justice in his cause.

4. Are ye not then partial? "Do you not make a distinction," though the case has not been heard and the law has not decided? Judges of evil thoughts. "Judges of evil reasonings"; that is, "judges who reason wickedly"; who in effect say in your hearts, We will espouse the cause of the rich, because they can befriend us; we will neglect that of the poor, because they cannot help us, nor have they power to hurt us.

5. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world? This seems to refer to Matt. xi. 5: "And the poor have the gospel preached to them." These believed on the Lord Jesus and found His salvation; while the rich despised, neglected, and persecuted Him.

6. Do not rich men oppress you? The administration of justice was at this time in a miserable state of corruption among the Jews; but a Christian was one who was to expect no justice anywhere but from his God. The words "exceedingly oppress" and "drag you to courts of justice" show how grievously oppressed and maltreated the Christians were by their countrymen the Jews, who made law a pretext to afflict their bodies and spoil them of their property.

7. Blaspheme that worthy name. They took every occasion to asperse the Christian name and the Christian faith.

8. The royal law. This epithet, of all the New Testament writers, is peculiar to James; but it is frequent among the Greek writers in the sense in which it appears James uses it. Royal is used to signify anything that is of general concern, is suitable to all, and necessary for all, as brotherly love is. This commandment, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, is a royal law, not only because it is ordained of God, and proceeds from His kingly authority over men, but because it is so useful, suitable, and necessary to the present state of man.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. This general law is to be considered together with a particular law, v. 9. The very royal law itself, rightly explained, would serve to convict them, because it teaches them to put themselves as much in the places of the poor as in those of the rich.

III. The extent of the law, and how far obedience must be paid to it. They must fulfil the royal law, have a regard to one part as well as another, v. 10. Do you plead for your respect to the rich, because you are to love your neighbour as yourselves? Well then show also an equitable and due regard to the poor, because you are to love your neighbour as yourself: or else your offending in one point will spoil your pretence of observing that law at all.

This is further illustrated by putting a case different from that before mentioned (v. 11). One, perhaps, is very severe in the case of adultery; but less ready to condemn murder: another has a prodigious dread of murder, but has more easy thoughts of adultery; whereas one who looks at the authority of the Lawgiver, will see the same reason for condemning the one as the other. If we offend in one point, we contemn the authority of him who gave the whole law, and so far are guilty of all.

IV. James directs Christians to govern and conduct themselves by the law of Christ, v. 12. The gospel is called a law. It prescribes duty, as well as administers comfort; and Christ is a king to rule us as well as a prophet to teach us, and a priest to sacrifice and intercede for us. It is a law of liberty, the service of God, according to the gospel, is perfect freedom. We must all be judged by this law of liberty. It concerns us therefore so to speak and act now as becomes those who must shortly be judged by this law of liberty; that we be of a gospel temper, and that our conversation be a gospel conversation. The consideration of our being judged by the gospel should engage us more especially to be merciful in our regards to the poor (v. 13). Such as show no mercy now shall find no mercy in the great day. There will be such as shall become instances of the triumph of mercy, in whom mercy rejoices against judgment.

Verses 14–26

The apostle shows the error of those who rested in a bare profession of the Christian faith, as if that would save them. A man is justified, not by faith only, but by works.

I. Upon this arises a very great question, namely, how to reconcile Paul and James. Paul, in his epistles to the Romans and Galatians, seems to assert the directly contrary thing, that we are justified by faith only, and not by the works of the law. It may be sufficient only to observe these few things following: When Paul says that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law (Rom. iii. 28), he plainly speaks of another sort of work than James does, but not of another sort of faith. Paul speaks of works wrought in obedience to the law of Moses, and before men's embracing the faith of the gospel. James speaks of works done in obedience to the gospel. Both are concerned to magnify the faith of the gospel, as that which alone could save us and justify us. Paul had to do with those who depended on the merit of their works in the sight of God. James had to do with those who cried up faith, but would not allow works to be used even as evidences. Those who cry up the gospel so as to set aside the law, and those who cry up the law so as to set aside the gospel, are both in the wrong. The justification of which Paul speaks is different from that spoken of by James; the one speaks of our persons being justified before God, the other speaks of our faith being justified before men: "Show me thy faith by thy works," says James. Paul speaks of justification in the sight of God.

II. Let us see what is more particularly to be learnt from this excellent passage of James.

1. Faith without works will not profit, and cannot save us. What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? Faith which does not save will not really profit us. All things should be accounted profitable a part. To break a part is to break the whole (vs. 10). ye do well—being "blessed in your deed" ("doing," Margin) as a doer, not a forgetful hearer of the law (ch. 1:25). 9. Respect of persons violates the command to love all alike "as thyself." ye commit sin—lit., "ye work sin," Matthew 7:23, to which the reference here is probably, as in ch. 1:22. Your works are sin, whatever boast of the law ye make in words (Note, vs. 8). convinced—Old English for "convicted." as transgressors—not merely of this or that particular command, but of the whole absolutely. 10. The best MSS. read, "Whosoever shall have kept the whole law, and yet shall have offended (lit., 'stumbled'; not so strong as 'fall,' Rom. 11:11) in one (point; here, the respecting of persons), is (hereby) become guilty of all." The law is one seamless garment which is rent if you but rend a part; or a musical harmony which is spoiled if there be one discordant note [TIRINUS]; or a golden chain whose completeness is broken if you break one link [GATAKER]. You thus break the whole law, though not the whole of the law, because you offend against love, which is the fulfilling of the law. If any part of a man be leprous, the whole man is judged to be a leper. God requires perfect, not partial, obedience. We are not to choose out parts of the law to keep, which suit our whim, while we neglect others. 11. He is One who gave the whole law; therefore, they who violate His will in one point, violate it all [BENGEL]. The law and its Author alike have a complete unity. adultery . . . kill—selected as being the most glaring cases of violation of duty towards one's neighbor. 12. Summing up of the previous reasonings. speak—referring back to ch. 1:19, 26; the fuller discussion of the topic is given ch. 3. judged by the law of liberty—(ch. 1:25)—i.e., the Gospel law of love, which is not a law of external constraint, but of internal, free, instinctive inclination. The law of liberty, through God's mercy, frees us from the curse of the law, that henceforth we should be free to love and obey willingly. If we will not in turn practice the law of love to our neighbor, that law of grace condemns us still more heavily than the old law, which spake nothing but wrath to him who offended in the least particular (vs. 13). Cf. Matthew 18:32-35; John 12:48; Revelation 6:16, "Wrath of the (merciful) Lamb." 13. The converse of, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy" (Matt. 5:7). Translate, "The judgment (which is coming on all of us) shall be without mercy to him who hath showed no mercy." It shall be such toward every one as every one shall have been [BENGEL]. "Mercy" here corresponds to "love," vs. 8. mercy rejoiceth against judgment—Mercy, so far from fearing judgment in the case of its followers, actually glorifieth against it, knowing that it cannot condemn them. Not that their mercy is the ground of their acquittal, but the mercy of God in Christ towards them, producing mercy on their part towards their fellow men, makes them to triumph over judgment, which all in themselves otherwise deserve. 14. James here, passing from the particular case of "mercy" or "love" violated by "respect of persons," notwithstanding profession of the "faith of our Lord Jesus" (vs. 1), combats the Jewish tendency (transplanted into their Christianity) to substitute a lifeless, inoperative acquaintance with the letter of the law, for change of heart to practical holiness, as if justification could be thereby attained (Rom. 2:3, 13, 23). It seems hardly likely but that James had seen Paul's Epistles, considering that he uses the same phrases and examples (cf. vss. 21, 23, 25, with Rom. 4:3; Heb. 11:17, 31; and vss. 14, 24, with Rom. 3:28; Gal. 2:16). Whether James individually designed it or not, the Holy Spirit by him combats not Paul, but those who abuse Paul's doctrine. The teaching of both alike is inspired, and is therefore to be received without wresting of words; but each has a different class to deal with; Paul, self-justiciaries; James, Antinomian advocates of a mere notional faith. Paul urged as strongly as James the need of works as evidences of faith, especially in the later Epistles, when many were abusing the doctrine of faith (Titus 2:14; 3:8). "Believing and doing are blood relatives" [RUTHERFORD]. What doth it profit—lit., "What is the profit?" though a man say—James' expression is not, "If a mon have faith," but "if a man say he hath faith"; referring to a mere profession of faith, such as was usually made at baptism. Simon Magus so "believed and was baptized," and yet had "neither part nor lot in this matter," for his "heart," as his words and works evinced, was not right in the sight of God. ALFORD wrongly denies that "say" is emphatic. The illustration, vs. 16, proves it is: "If one of you say"

ADAM CLARKE

9. But if ye have respect to persons, in judgment or in any other way; ye commit sin against God and against your brethren, and are convinced, "convicted," by the law; by this royal law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"; as transgressors, having shown this sinful acceptance of persons which has led you to refuse justice to the poor man and uphold the rich in his oppressive conduct.

10. For whosoever shall keep the whole law. This is a rabbinical form of speech. In the tract Shabbath, fol. 70, where they dispute concerning the thirty-nine works commanded by Moses, Rabbi Yochanan says: "But if a man do the whole, with the omission of one, he is guilty of the whole, and of every one."

11. For he that said. That is, the Authority that gave one commandment gave also the rest; and he who breaks one resists this Authority; so that the breach of any one commandment may be justly considered a breach of the whole law.

12. So speak ye, and so do. Have respect to every commandment of God, for this the law of liberty, the gospel of Jesus Christ, particularly requires; and this is the law by which all mankind who have had the opportunity of knowing it shall be judged. But all along James particularly refers to the precept, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

13. For he shall have judgment. He who shows no mercy to man, or in other words, he who does not exercise himself in works of charity and mercy to his needy fellow creatures, shall receive no mercy at the hand of God; for He has said, "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." Mercy rejoiceth against judgment. These words are variously understood. (1) Mercy, the merciful man, the abstract for the concrete, exults over judgment; that is, he is not afraid of it, having acted according to the law of liberty, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." (2) You shall be exalted by mercy above judgment. (3) For He (God) exalts mercy above judgment. (4) A merciful man rejoices rather in opportunities of showing mercy than in acting according to strict justice. (5) In the great day, though justice might condemn every man according to the rigor of the law, yet God will cause mercy to triumph over justice in bringing those into His glory who, for His sake, had fed the hungry, clothed the naked, ministered to the sick, and visited the prisoners. See what our Lord says, Matt. xxv. 31-46. In the MSS. and versions there is a considerable variety of readings on this verse, and some of the senses given above are derived from those readings. The spirit of the saying may be found in another scripture, "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice"—I prefer works of charity and mercy to everything else, and especially to all acts of worship.

14. What doth it profit . . . though a man say he hath faith? We now come to a part of this Epistle which has appeared to some eminent men to contradict other portions of the divine records. In short, it has been thought that James teaches the doctrine of justification by the merit of good works. while Paul asserts this to be insufficient, and that man is justified by faith. Luther, supposing that James did actually teach the doctrine of justification by works, which his good sense showed him to be absolutely insufficient for salvation, was led to condemn the Epistle in toto, as a production unauthenticated by the Holy Spirit, and consequently worthy of no regard; he therefore termed it "a chaffy epistle," an "epistle of straw," fit only to be burned. Learned men have spent much time in striving to reconcile these two writers, and to show that Paul and James perfectly accord: one teaching the pure doctrine, the other guarding men against the abuse of it. Mr. Wesley sums the whole up in the following words, with his usual accuracy and precision: "From chap. i. 22 the apostle has been enforcing Christian practice. He now applies to those who neglect this under the pretense of faith. Paul had taught that a man is justified by faith without the works of the law. This some already began to wrest to their own destruction. Wherefore James, purposely repeating, vv. 21, 23, 25, the same phrases, testimonies, and examples which Paul had used, Rom. iv. 3; Heb. xi. 17, or unprofitable to us as they tend to forward or hinder the salvation of our souls. For a man to have faith, and to say he has faith, are two different things. Men may boast of that to others, and be conceited of that in themselves, of which they are really destitute.

2. As love or charity is an operative principle, so is faith. By trying how it looks for a person to pretend he is very charitable who yet never does any works of charity, you may judge what sense there is in pretending to have faith without the fruits of it, v. 15–17. What will such a charity as this, that consists in bare words, avail either you or the poor? You might as well pretend that your love and charity will stand the test without acts of mercy as think that a profession of faith will bear you out before God without works of piety and obedience, v. 17. We are too apt to rest in a bare profession of faith, and to think that this will save us. Mock-faith is as hateful as mock-charity, and both show a heart dead to all real godliness.

3. Compare a faith boasting of itself without works and a faith evidenced by works, by looking on both together, to try how this comparison will work upon our minds, v. 18. "Thou makest a profession, and sayest thou hast faith; I make no such boasts, but leave my works to speak for me." This is the evidence by which the scriptures all along teach men to judge both of themselves and others. And this is the evidence according to which Christ will proceed at the day of judgment.

4. Look upon a faith of bare speculation and knowledge as the faith of devils, v. 19. That instance of faith which the apostle here chooses to mention is the first principle of all religion. But to rest here, and take up a good opinion of thy state towards God, merely on account of thy believing in him, this will render thee miserable: The devils also believe, and tremble. If thou contentest thyself with a bare assent to articles of faith, and some speculations upon them, thus far the devils go. They tremble, not out of reverence, but hatred and opposition to that one God on whom they believe.

5. He who boasts of faith without works is to be looked upon at present as a foolish condemned person, v. 20. Faith without works is said to be dead, not only as void of all those operations which are the proofs of spiritual life, but as unavailable to eternal life.

6. A justifying faith cannot be without works, from two examples.

(1) The first instance is that of Abraham (v. 21). By what Abraham did, it appeared that he truly believed.

to a naked brother, "Be ye warmed, notwithstanding ye give not those things needful." The inoperative profession of sympathy answering to the inoperative profession of faith. can faith save him—rather, "can such a faith (lit., "the faith") save him?"—the faith you pretend to: the empty name of boasted faith, contrasted with true fruit-producing faith. So that which self-deceivers claim is called "wisdom," though not true wisdom, ch. 3:15. The "him" also in the Greek is emphatic; the particular man who professes faith without having the works which evidence its vitality. 15. The Greek is, "But if . . .": the "But" taking up the argument against such a one as "said he had faith, and yet had not works," which are its fruits. a brother . . .—a fellow Christian, to whom we are specially bound to give help, independent of our general obligation to help all our fellow creatures. be—The Greek implies, "be found, on your access to them." 16. The habit of receiving passively sentimental impressions from sights of woe without carrying them out into active habits only hardens the heart. one of you—James brings home the case to his hearers individually. Depart in peace—as if all their wants were satisfied by the mere words addressed to them. The same words in the mouth of Christ, whose faith they said they had, were accompanied by efficient deeds of love. be . . . warmed—with clothing, instead of being as heretofore "naked" (vs. 15; Job 31:20). filled—instead of being "destitute of food" (Matt. 15:37). what doth it profit—concluding with the same question as at the beginning, vs. 14. faith . . . being alone—ALFORD joins "is dead in itself." So BENGEL, "If the works which living faith produces have no existence, it is a proof that faith itself (lit., "in respect to itself) has no existence; i.e., that what one boasts of as faith, is dead." "Faith" is said to be "dead in itself," because when it has works it is alive, and it is discerned to be so, not in respect to its works, but in respect to itself. English Version, if retained, must not be understood to mean that faith can exist "alone" (i.e., severed from works), but thus: Even so presumed faith, if it have not works, is dead, being by itself "alone," i.e., severed from works of charity; just as the body would be "dead" if alone, i.e., severed from the spirit (vs. 26). So ESTIUS. 18. "But some one will say": so the Greek. show me thy faith without thy works—if thou canst; but thou canst not SHOW, i.e., manifest or evidence thy alleged (vs. 14, "say") faith without works. "Show" does not mean here to prove to me, but exhibit to me. Faith is unseen save by God. To show faith to man, works in some form or other are needed: we are justified judicially by God (Rom. 8:33); meritoriously, by Christ (Isa. 53:11); mediately, by faith (Rom. 5:1); evidentially, by works. The question here is not as to the ground on which believers are justified, but about the demonstration of their faith: so in the case of Abraham.

The tree shows its life by its fruits, but it was alive before either fruits or even leaves appeared. 19. Thou—emphatic. Thou self-deceiving claimant to faith without works. that there is one God—rather, "that God is one": God's existence, however, is also asserted. The fundamental article of the creed of Jews and Christians alike, and the point of faith on which especially the former boasted themselves, as distinguishing them from the Gentiles, and hence adduced by James here. thou doest well—so far good. But unless thy faith goes farther than an assent to this truth, "the evil spirits (lit., 'demons': 'devil' is the term restricted to Satan, their head) believe" so far in common with thee, "and (so far from being saved by such a faith) shudder" (so the Greek), Matt. 8:29; Luke 4:34; II Pet. 2:4; Jude 6; Rev. 20:10. Their faith only adds to their torment at the thought of having to meet Him who is to consign them to their just doom: so thine (Heb. 10:26, 27, it is not the faith of love, but of fear, that hath torment, I John 4: 18). 20. wilt thou know—"Vain" men are not willing to know, since they have no wish to do the will of God. James beseeches such a one to lay aside his perverse unwillingness to know what is palpable to all who are willing to do. vain—who deceivest thyself with a delusive hope, resting on an unreal faith. without works—The Greek, implies separate from the works [ALFORD] which ought to flow from it if it were real. is dead—Some of the best MSS. read, "is idle," i.e., unavailing to effect what you hope, viz., to save you. 21. Abraham . . . justified by works—evidentially, and before men (see Note, vs. 18). In vs. 23, James, like Paul, recognizes the Scripture truth, that it was his faith that was counted to Abraham for right-

ADAM CLARKE

31, refutes, not the doctrine of Paul, but the error of those who abused it. There is therefore no contradiction between the apostles; they both delivered the truth of God, but in a different manner, as having to do with different kinds of men. This verse is a summary of what follows: 'What profiteth it?' is enlarged on, vv. 15-17; though a man say, vv. 18-19; can that faith save him? v. 20. It is not though he have faith, but though he say, I have faith. Here therefore true, living faith is meant. But in other parts of the argument the apostle speaks of a dead, imaginary faith. He does not therefore teach that true faith can, but that it cannot, subsist without works. Nor does he oppose faith to works, but that empty name of faith to real faith working by love. Can that faith which is without works save him? No more than it can profit his neighbor."

15. If a brother or sister be naked. That is, ill-clothed; for naked has this meaning in several parts of the New Testament, signifying bad clothing, or the want of some particular article of dress. See Matt. xxv. 36, 38, 43-44 and John xxi. 7.

16. Be ye warmed and filled. Your saying so to them while you give them nothing will profit them just as much as your professed faith, without those works which are the genuine fruits of true faith, will profit you in the day when God comes to sit in judgment upon your soul.

17. If it hath not works, is dead. The faith that does not produce works of charity and mercy is without the living principle which animates all true faith; that is, love to God and love to man.

18. Shew me thy faith without thy works. Your pretending to have faith while you have no works of charity or mercy is utterly vain. For as faith, which is a principle in the mind, cannot be discerned but by the effects—that is, good works—he who has no good works has, presumptively, no faith. I will shew thee my faith by my works. My works of charity and mercy will show that I have faith; and that it is the living tree, whose root is love to God and man, and whose fruit is the good works here contended for.

19. Thou believest that there is one God. This is the faith in which these persons put their hope of pleasing God and of obtaining eternal life. Believing in the being and unity of God distinguished them from all the nations of the world; and having been circumcised, and thus brought into the covenant, they thought themselves secure of salvation. The insufficiency of this James immediately shows. The devils also believe, and tremble. It is well to believe there is one only true God; this truth universal nature proclaims. Even the devils believe it; but far from justifying or saving them, it leaves them in their damned state, and every act of it only increases their torment. "They shudder with horror"; they believe, and tremble, are increasingly tormented; but they can neither love nor obey.

20. But wilt thou know? Are you willing to be instructed in the nature of true saving faith? Then attend to the following examples.

21. Was not Abraham our father? Did not the conduct of Abraham, in offering up his son Isaac on the altar, sufficiently prove that he believed in God, and that it was his faith in

MATTHEW HENRY

The faith of Abraham was a working faith (v. 22). Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness, v. 23. And thus he became the friend of God.

You see then (v. 24) how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only; not by believing without obeying, but by having such a faith as is productive of good works. Those who would have Abraham's blessings must be careful to copy after his faith: to boast of being Abraham's seed will not avail any. Those works which evidence true faith must be such as God himself commands, and not the mere fruits of our own imagination and devising. The actings of faith make it grow perfect, as the truth of faith makes it act. Such an acting faith will make others, as well as Abraham, friends of God.

(2) The second example is Rahab, v. 25. The former instance was of one renowned for his faith all his life long. This is of one noted for sin. The strongest faith will not do, nor the meanest be allowed to go without works. That which proved her faith sincere was, that, to the hazard of her life, she received the messengers, and sent them out another way. Where great sins are pardoned, there must be great acts of self-denial. Her former acquaintance must be discarded, her former course of life entirely abandoned, and she must give signal proof and evidence of this.

7. The apostle draws this conclusion, As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also, v. 26. The best works, without faith, are dead; they want their root and principle. It is by faith that anything we do is really good. The most plausible profession of faith, without works, is dead: as the root is dead when it produces nothing green, nothing of fruit. Faith is the root, good works are the fruits, and we must see to it that we have both. We must not think that either, without the other, will justify and save us.

eousness in his justification before God. when he had offered—rather, "when he offered" [ALFORD], i.e., brought as an offering at the altar; not implying that he actually offered him. 22. Or, "thou seest." how—rather, "that." In the two clauses which follow, emphasize "faith" in the former, and "works" in the latter, to see the sense [BENGEL]. faith wrought with his works—for it was by faith he offered his son. Lit., "was working (at the time) with his works." by works was faith made perfect—not was vivified, but attained its fully consummated development, and is shown to be real. So "my strength is made perfect in weakness," i.e., exerts itself most perfectly. shows how great it is [CAMERON]: so I John 4:17; Hebrews 2:10; 5:9. scripture was fulfilled—Genesis 15:6, quoted by Paul, as realized in Abraham's justification by faith; but by James, as realized subsequently in Abraham's work of offering Isaac, which, he says, justified him. Plainly, then, James must mean by works the same thing as Paul means by faith, only that he speaks of faith at its manifested development, whereas Paul speaks of it in its germ. Abraham's offering of Isaac was not a mere act of obedience, but an act of faith. called the Friend of God—He was not so called in his lifetime, though he was so even then from the time of his justification; but he was called so, being recognized as such by all on the ground of his works of faith. "He was the friend (in an active sense), the lover of God, in reference to his works; and (in a passive sense) loved by God in reference to his justification by works. Both senses are united in John 15:14, 15" [BENGEL]. 24. justified and, not by faith only—i.e., by "faith without (separated from: severed from) works," its proper fruits (Note, vs. 20). Faith to justify must, from the first, include obedience in germ (to be developed subsequently), though the former alone is the ground of justification. The scion must be grafted on the stock that it may live; it must bring forth fruit to prove that it does live. 25. It is clear from the nature of Rahab's act, that it is not quoted to prove justification by works as such. She believed assuredly what her other countrymen disbelieved, and this in the face of every improbability that an unwarlike few would conquer well-armed numbers. In this belief she hid the spies at the risk of her life. Hence, Hebrews 11:31 names this as an example of faith, rather than of obedience. "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not." If an instance of obedience were wanting, Paul and James would hardly have quoted a woman of previously bad character, rather than the many moral and pious patriarchs. But as an example of free grace justifying men through an operative, as opposed to a mere verbal faith, none could be more suitable than a saved "harlot." messengers—spies. had received . . . had sent—rather, "received . . . thrust them forth" (in haste and fear), [ALFORD]. another way—from that whereby they entered her house, viz., through the window of her house on the wall, and thence to the mountain. 26. Faith is a spiritual thing: works are material. Hence we might expect faith to answer to the spirit, works to the body. But James reverses this. He therefore does not mean that faith in all cases answers to the body; but the FORM of faith without the working reality answers to the body without the animating spirit. It does not follow that living faith derives its life from works, as the body derives its life from the animating spirit.

ADAM CLARKE

Him that led him to this extraordinary act of obedience?

22. Seest thou how faith wrought? Here is a proof that faith cannot exist without being active in works of righteousness. His faith in God would have been of no avail to him had it not been manifested by works. For by works, by his obedience to the commands of God, his faith was made perfect. It dictated obedience; he obeyed; and thus faith "had its consummation." Even true faith will soon die if its possessor does not live in the spirit of obedience.

23. The scripture was fulfilled. He believed God. This faith was never inactive; it was accounted to him for righteousness; and, being justified by thus believing, his life of obedience showed that he had not received the grace of God in vain. The Friend of God. The highest character ever given to man.

24. Ye see then how. It is evident from this example that Abraham's faith was not merely believing that there is a God, but a principle that led him to credit God's promises relative to the future Redeemer and to implore God's mercy; this he received and was justified by faith. His faith now began to work by love, and therefore he was found ever obedient to the will of his Maker. He brought forth the fruits of righteousness; and his works justified—proved the genuineness of his faith. Obedience to God is essentially requisite to maintain faith. Faith lives, under God, by works; and works have their being and excellence from faith. Neither can subsist without the other, and this is the point which James labors to prove, in order to convince the antinomians of his time that their faith was a delusion, and that the hopes built on it must needs perish.

25. Rahab the harlot. See the notes on Josh. ii. 1 ff. and Heb. xi. 31 ff. Rahab had the approbation due to genuine faith, which she actually possessed, and gave the fullest proof that she did so by her conduct. As justification signifies, not only the pardon of sin, but receiving the divine approbation, James seems to use the word in this latter sense. God approved of them because of their obedience to His will, and He approves of no man who is not obedient.

26. For as the body without the spirit is dead. There can be no more a genuine faith without good works than there can be a living human body without a soul.

CHAPTER 3

Verses 1–12

The foregoing chapter shows how unprofitable and dead faith is without works. Such a faith is, however, apt to make men conceited in their tempers and their talk. The best need to be cautioned against a dictating, censorious use of their tongues. We are therefore taught,

I. Not to use our tongues so as to lord it over others, v. 1. We must not affect to speak and act as those who are continually assuming the chair, we must not prescribe to one another, so as to make our own sentiments a standard by which to try all others. "Therefore be not many masters (or teachers, as some read it); but rather speak with the humility and spirit of learners." Those who thus set up for judges and censurers shall receive the greater condemnation. Our judging others will but make our own judgment the more strict and severe, Matt. vii. 1, 2. Another reason is because we are all sinners, v. 2. Were we to think more of our own mistakes

VSS. 1-18. DANGER OF EAGERNESS TO TEACH, AND OF AN UNBRIDLED TONGUE: TRUE WISDOM SHOWN BY UNCONTENTIOUS MEEKNESS. 1. be not—lit., "become not": taking the office too hastily, and of your own accord. many—The office is a noble one; but few are fit for it. Few govern the tongue well (vs. 2), and only such as can govern it are fit for the office; therefore, "teachers" ought not to be many. masters—rather, "teachers." The Jews were especially prone to this presumption. The idea that faith (so called) without works (ch. 2) was all that is required, prompted "many" to set up as "teachers," as has been the case in all ages of the Church. At first all were allowed to teach in turns. Even their inspired gifts did not prevent liability to abuse, as James here implies: much more is this so when self-constituted teachers have no such miraculous gifts. knowing—as all might know. we . . . greater condemnation—James in a humble, conciliatory spirit, includes himself: if we teachers abuse the office, we shall

CHAPTER 3

1. Be not many masters. Do not affect the "teacher's" office, for many wish to be teachers who have more need to learn. There were many teachers or rabbins among the Jews, each affecting to have the truth and to draw disciples after him. We find a caution against such persons, and of the same nature with that of James, in Pirkey Aboth. c. i. 10: "Love labour, and hate the rabbin's office." This caution is still necessary; there are multitudes whom God has never called and never can call, because He has never qualified them for the work, who earnestly wish to get into the priest's office. Their case is awful; they shall receive the greater condemnation than common sinners. They have not only sinned in thrusting themselves into that office to which God has never called them, but through their insufficiency the flocks over whom they have assumed the mastery perish for lack of knowledge, and their blood will God require at the watchman's hand.

and offences, we should be less apt to judge other people. Self-justifiers are commonly self-deceivers. Their magisterial deportment, and censorious tongues, may prove worse than any faults they condemn in others.

II. To govern our tongue so as to prove ourselves perfect and upright men, and such as have an entire government over ourselves. But, on the other hand, if a man seemeth to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain. Further, he that offends not in word will not only prove himself a sincere Christian, but a very much advanced Christian. For the wisdom and grace which enable him to rule his tongue will enable him also to rule all his actions.

This we have illustrated by two comparisons: 1. The governing and guiding of all the motions of a horse, by the bit which is put into his mouth, v. 3. There is a great deal of brutish fierceness and wantonness in us. This shows itself very much by the tongue, so that this must be bridled. As an unruly and ungovernable horse runs away with his rider, or throws him, so an unruly tongue will serve those who have no command over it. 2. The governing of a ship by the right management of the helm, v. 4, 5. As the helm is a very small part of the ship, so is the tongue a very small part of the body: but the right governing of the helm will steer and turn the ship, and a right management of the tongue is, in a great measure, the government of the whole man. Things of small bulk may yet be of vast use. We should learn to make the due management of our tongues more our study, because, though they are little members, they are capable of doing a great deal of good or a great deal of hurt.

III. To dread an unruly tongue as one of the greatest and most pernicious evils, v. 5, 6. There is such an abundance of sin in the tongue that it may be called a world of iniquity. So is the tongue among the members that it defileth the whole body. The whole body is often drawn into sin and guilt by the tongue. It setteth on fire the course of nature. The affairs of mankind and of societies are often thrown into confusion, and all is on a flame, by the tongues of men. And it is set on fire of hell. Hell has more to do in promoting the fire of the tongue than men are generally aware of. When it is set on fire of hell, as in all undue heats it is, there it is mischievous, producing rage and hatred, and those things which serve the purposes of the devil.

A. B. SIMPSON:

An unbridled tongue is a sure sign of an unsanctified, undisciplined, and perhaps unsaved soul. It is a sign of whether or not he is under the government of his conscience, his will and the Holy Spirit. This is a most heart-searching test. Let us take it home. Can we stand it? It was a foolish and hasty word that lost Moses the Land of Promise. He would have taken it back if he could have, but it was phonographed. It had gone upon the record and it had to stand, and for that one little speech Moses lost the hope of a lifetime.

When Isaiah was called to his ministry, it was his lips that were first sanctified. The live coal was applied to these members, and the word spoken, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged" (Isa. 6:7) His tongue had to be purified before God could use him.

On the day of Pentecost, it was cloven tongues, tongues of fire that came, tongues possessed by the Holy Ghost. If you have received the baptism of the Spirit, your tongue has received the first touch. You will never talk as you used to talk, you will never have the same unlicensed freedom, but your language will be under the control of a watchful spirit.

We find even in common life, that if a man has sense enough to hold this peace, "though a fool, he will be counted wise." Quiet, self-contained people are often taken for more than they really are, while many a man and woman of beautiful qualities wreck their whole lives by an uncontrolled tongue. If it settles our influence and character here, then how much more in the sight of Him who has said, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned" (Matt. 12:37).—Christ in the Bible receive greater condemnation than those who are mere hearers (cf. Luke 12:42-46). CALVIN, like English Version, translates, "masters" i.e., self-constituted censors and reprovers of others. Ch. 4:12 accords with this view. 2. all—The Greek implies "all without exception": even the apostles. offend not—lit., "stumbleth not": is void of offence or slip in word: in which respect one is especially tried who sets up to be a "teacher."

3. Behold—The best authorities read, "but if," i.e., Now whensoever (in the case) of horses (such is the emphatic position of "horses" in the Greek) we put the bits (so lit., "the customary bits") into their mouths that they may obey us, we turn about also their whole body. This is to illustrate how man turns about his whole body with the little tongue. "The same applies to the pen, which is the substitute for the tongue among the absent" [BENGEL]. 4. Not only animals, but even ships. the governor listeth—lit., "the impulse of the steersman pleaseth." The feeling which moves the tongue corresponds with this. 5. boasteth great things—There is great moment in what the careless think "little" things [BENGEL]. Cf. "a world," "the course of nature," "hell," vs. 6, which illustrate how the little tongue's great words produce great mischief. how great a matter a little fire kindleth—The best MSS. read, "how little a fire kindleth how great a . . . ." ALFORD, for "matter," translates, "forest." But GROTIUS translates as English Version, "material for burning": a pile of fuel.

6. Translate, "The tongue, that world of iniquity, is a fire." As man's little world is an image of the greater world, the universe, so the tongue is an image of the former [BENGEL]. so—omitted in the oldest authorities. is—lit., "is constituted." "The tongue is (constituted), among the members, the one which defileth . . ." (viz., as fire defiles with its smoke). course of nature—"the orb (cycle) of creation." setteth on fire . . . is set on fire—habitually and continually. While a man inflames others, he passes out of his own power, being consumed in the flame himself. of hell—i.e., of the devil. Greek, "Gehenna"; found here only and in Matthew 5:22. James has much in common with the Sermon on the Mount (Prov. 16:27).

ADAM CLARKE

2. In many things we offend all. "We all stumble or trip." Some have produced these words as a proof that "no man can live without sinning against God; for James himself, a holy apostle, speaking of himself, all the apostles, and the whole Church of Christ, says, In many things we offend all." This is a very bad and dangerous doctrine; and pushed to its consequences, would greatly affect the credibility of the whole gospel system. Offend not in word, the same is a perfect man. To understand this properly we must refer to the caution James gives in the preceding verse: "Be not many masters" (or teachers)—do not affect that for which you are not qualified. But, says he, if any man offend not, "trip not in doctrine," teaching the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, the same is "a man fully instructed" in divine things. How often the term logos, which we render word, is used to express "doctrine," and the doctrine of the gospel, we have seen in many parts of the preceding comment. And how often the word teleios, which we translate perfect, is used to signify an "adult Christian," one "thoroughly instructed" in the doctrines of the gospel, may be seen in various parts of Paul's writings. See, among others, 1 Cor. ii. 6; xiv. 20; Eph. iv. 13; Phil. iii. 15; Col. iv. 12; Heb. v. 14. The man, therefore, who advanced no false doctrine and gave no imperfect view of any of the great truths of Christianity, that man proved himself thereby to be "thoroughly instructed" in divine things; to be no novice, and consequently, among the many teachers, to be a perfect master and worthy of the sacred vocation. Able also to bridle the whole body. Grotius, by body, believed that the Church of Christ was intended; and this the view we have taken of the preceding clauses renders very probable. But some think the passions and appetites are intended; yet these persons understand "not offending in word" as referring simply to well-guarded speech. Now how a man's cautiousness in what he says can be a proof that he has every passion and appetite under control, I cannot see. Indeed, I have seen so many examples of a contrary kind that I can have no doubt of the impropriety of this exposition.

3. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths. In order to show the necessity of regulating the tongue, to which James was led by his exhortation to them who wished to thrust themselves into the teacher's office, supposing, because they had the gift of a ready flow of speech, that therefore they might commence teachers of divine things, he proceeds to show that the tongue must be bridled as the horse and governed as the ships; because, though it is small, it is capable of ruling the whole man, and of irritating and offending others.

5. Boasteth great things. That is, can do great things, whether of a good or evil kind. He seems to refer here to the powerful and all-commanding eloquence of the Greek orators. They could carry the great mob whithersoever they wished; calm them to peaceableness and submission, or excite them to furious sedition. Behold, how great a matter! See what a flame of discord and insubordination one man, merely by his persuasive tongue, may kindle among the common people.

6. The tongue is a fire. It is often the instrument of producing the most desperate contentions and insurrections. A world of iniquity. This is an unusual form of speech, but the meaning is plain enough; world signifies here a mass, a great collection, an abundance. We use the term in the same sense—a "world of troubles," a "world of toil." Setteth on fire the course of nature. "And setteth on fire the wheel of life." I question much whether this verse be in general well understood. There are three different interpretations of it: (1) James does not intend to express the whole circle of human affairs, so much affected by the tongue of man; but rather the penal wheel of the Greeks, and not unknown to the Jews, on which they were accustomed to extend criminals to induce them to confess or to punish them for crimes; under which wheels, fire was often placed to add to their torments. (2) But is it not possible that by the "wheel of life" James may have the circulation of the blood in view? Angry or irritating

IV. We are next taught how very difficult a thing it is to govern the tongue, v. 7, 8. Fierce creatures have not been subdued nor tamed by miracle only. What is here spoken of is something commonly done; not only hath been tamed, but is tamed of mankind. Yet the tongue is worse than these, and cannot be tamed by the power and art which serves to tame these things. The apostle does not intend to represent it as a thing impossible, but as a thing extremely difficult, which therefore will require great watchfulness, and pains, and prayer.

And sometimes all is too little; for it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. The tongue is apt to break through all bounds and rules, and to spit out its poison on one occasion or other, notwithstanding the utmost care.

V. We are taught to think of the use we make of our tongues in religion and in the service of God, v. 9, 10. How absurd it is that those who use their tongues in prayer and praise should ever use them in cursing, slandering, and the like! That tongue which addresses with reverence the divine Being cannot, without the greatest inconsistency, turn upon fellow-creatures with reviling brawling language.

These things ought not so to be; and, if such considerations were always at hand, surely they would not be. Further, to fix this thought, the apostle shows that contrary effects from the same causes are monstrous, and not to be found in nature, and therefore cannot be consistent with grace, v. 11, 12. True religion will not admit of contradictions; and a truly religious man can never allow of them either in his words or his actions.

The difference between men's pretending to be wise and their being really so, and between the wisdom which is from beneath and that which is from above.

I. We have some account of true wisdom, v. 13. A wise man will not value himself merely upon knowing things, if he has not wisdom to make a right application of that knowledge. These two things must be put together to make up the account of true wisdom. A good conversation. If we are wiser than others, this should be evidenced by the goodness of our conversation, not by the roughness or vanity of it. True wisdom may be known by its works. The conversation here does not refer only to words, but to the whole of men's practice; therefore it is said, Let him show out of a good conversation his works. Not he who thinks well, or he who talks well, is allowed to be wise, if he do not live and act well. True wisdom may be known by the meekness of the spirit and temper. It is a great instance of wisdom prudently to bridle our own anger, and patiently to bear the anger of others. When we are mild and calm, we are best able to hear reason, and best able to speak it. Wisdom produces meekness, and meekness increases wisdom.

7. every kind—rather, "every nature" (i.e., natural disposition and characteristic power). of beasts—i.e., quadrupeds of every disposition; as distinguished from the three other classes of creation, "birds, creeping things (the Greek includes not merely 'serpents,' as English Version), and things in the sea." is tamed, and hath been—is continually being tamed, and hath been so long ago. of mankind—rather, "by the nature of man": man's characteristic power taming that of the inferior animals. The dative in the Greek may imply, "Hath suffered itself to be brought into tame subjection TO the nature of men." So it shall be in the millennial world; even now man, by gentle firmness, may tame the inferior animal, and even elevate its nature. 8. no man—lit., "no one of men": neither can a man control his neighbor's, nor even his own tongue. Hence the truth of vs. 2 appears. unruly evil—The Greek, implies that it is at once restless and incapable of restraint. Nay, though nature has hedged it in with a double barrier of the lips and teeth, it bursts from its barriers to assail and ruin men [ESTIUS]. deadly—lit., "death-bearing." 9. God—The oldest authorities read, "Lord." "Him who is Lord and Father." The uncommonness of the application of "Lord" to the Father, doubtless caused the change in modern texts to "God" (ch. 1:27). But as Messiah is called "Father," Isaiah 9:6, so God the Father is called by the Son's title, "Lord": showing the unity of the Godhead. "Father" implies His paternal love; "Lord," His dominion. men, which—not "men who"; for what is meant is not particular men, but men generically [ALFORD]. are made after . . . similitude of God—Though in a great measure man has lost the likeness of God in which he was originally made, yet enough of it still remains to show what once it was, and what in regenerated and restored man it shall be. We ought to reverence this remnant and earnest of what man shall be in ourselves and in others. "Absalom has fallen from his father's favor, but the people still recognize him to be the king's son" [BENGEL]. Man resembles in humanity the Son of man, "the express image of His person" (Heb. 1:3), cf. Genesis 1:26; I John 4: 20. In the passage, Genesis 1:26, "image" and "likeness" are distinct: "image," according to the Alexandrians, was something in which men were created, being common to all, and continuing to man after the fall, while the "likeness" was something toward which man was created, to strive after and attain it: the former marks man's physical and intellectual, the latter his moral pre-eminence. 10. The tongue, says ÆSOP, is at once the best and the worst of things. So in a fable, a man with the same breath blows hot and cold. "Life and death are in the power of the tongue" (cf. Ps. 62:4). brethren—an appeal to their consciences by their brotherhood in Christ. ought not so to be—a mild appeal, leaving it to themselves to understand that such conduct deserves the most severe reprobation. 11. fountain—an image of the heart: as the aperture (so the Greek for "place" is lit.) of the fountain is an image of man's mouth. The image here is appropriate to the scene of the Epistle, Palestine, wherein salt and bitter springs are found. Though "sweet" springs are sometimes found near, yet "sweet and bitter" (water) do not flow "at the same place" (aperture). Grace can make the same mouth that "sent forth the bitter" once, send forth the sweet for the time to come: as the wood (typical of Christ's cross) changed Marah's bitter water into sweet. 12. Transition from the mouth to the heart. Can the fig tree . . .—implying that it is an impossibility: as before in vs. 10 he had said it "ought not so to be." James does not, as Matthew (7:16, 17), make the question, "Do men gather figs of thistles?" His argument is, No tree "can" bring forth fruit inconsistent with its nature, as e.g., the fig tree, olive berries: so if a man speaks bitterly, and afterwards speaks good words, the latter must be so only seemingly, and in hypocrisy, they cannot be real. so can no fountain . . . salt . . . and fresh—The oldest authorities read, "Neither can a salt (water spring) yield fresh." So the mouth that emits cursing, cannot really emit also blessing. 13. Who—(Cf. Ps. 34:12, 13). All wish to appear "wise": few are so. show—"by works," and not merely by profession, referring to ch. 2:18. out of a good conversation his works—by general "good conduct" manifested in particular "works." "Wisdom" and "knowledge," without these being "shown," are as dead as faith would be without works [ALFORD]. with meekness of wisdom—with the meekness inseparable from true "wisdom."

language has an astonishing influence on the circulation of the blood: the heart beats high and frequently; the blood is hurried through the arteries to the veins, through the veins to the heart, and through the heart to the arteries again, and so on; an extraordinary degree of heat is at the same time engendered; the eyes become more prominent in their sockets; the capillary vessels suffused with blood; the face flushed; and, in short, the whole wheel of nature is set on fire of hell. (3) It is true, however, that the rabbins use the term "the wheel of generations" to mark the successive generations of men, and it is possible that James might refer to this; as if he had said: "The tongue has been the instrument of confusion and misery through all the ages of the world." But the other interpretations are more likely.

7. Every kind of beasts. That is, every "species" of wild beasts is tamed, i.e., brought under man's power and dominion.

8. But the tongue can no man tame. No cunning, persuasion, or influence has ever been able to silence it. It is an unruly evil. "An evil that cannot be restrained"; it cannot be brought under any kind of government; it breaks all bounds. Full of deadly poison. He refers here to the tongues of serpents, supposed to be the means of conveying their poison into wounds made by their teeth. Throughout the whole of this poetic and highly declamatory description James must have the tongue of the slanderer, calumniator, backbiter, whisperer, and talebearer particularly in view. Vipers and rattlesnakes are not more dangerous to life than these are to the peace and reputation of men.

9. Therewith bless we God. The tongue is capable of rehearsing the praises and setting forth the glories of the eternal King; what a pity that it should ever be employed in a contrary work! It can proclaim and vindicate the truth of God, and publish the gospel of peace and goodwill among men; what a pity that it should ever be employed in falsehoods, calumny, or in the cause of infidelity! And therewith curse we men. In the true Satanic spirit, many pray to God the Father to destroy those who are objects of their displeasure! These are the common swearers, whose mouths are generally full of direful imprecations against those with thom they are offended.

10. Out of the same mouth. This saying is something like that of Prov. xviii. 21: "Death and life are in the power of the tongue."

11. Doth a fountain send forth . . . sweet water and bitter? In many things nature is a sure guide to man; but no such inconsistency is found in the natural world as this blessing and cursing in man. No fountain, at the same opening, sends forth sweet water and bitter; no fig tree can bear olive berries; no vine can bear figs; nor can the sea produce salt water and fresh from the same place. These are all contradictions, and indeed impossibilities, in nature. And it is depraved man alone that can act the monstrous part already referred to.

12. So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh. For the reading of the common text, which is, "So no fountain can produce salt water and sweet," there are various other readings in the MSS. and versions. The true reading appears to be, "Neither can salt water produce sweet," or, "Neither can the sea produce fresh water"; and this is a new comparison, and not an inference from that in v. 11. There are therefore four distinct comparisons here: (1) A fountain cannot produce sweet water and bitter. (2) A fig tree cannot produce olive berries. (3) A vine cannot produce figs. (4) Salt water cannot be made sweet. That is, according to the ordinary operations of nature, these things are impossible.

13. Who is a wise man? One truly religious; who, although he can neither bridle nor tame other men's tongues, can restrain his own. And endued with knowledge. And qualified to teach others. Let him shew. Let him by a holy life and chaste conversation show, through meekness and gentleness, joined to his divine information, that he is a Christian indeed; his works and his spirit proving that God is in him of a truth; and that, from the fullness of a holy heart, his feet walk, his hands work, and his tongue

II. We have the glorying taken away of those who are of a contrary character, v. 14–16. Envying and strife are opposed to the meekness of wisdom. The heart is the seat of both; but envy and wisdom cannot dwell together in the same heart. The order of things here laid down. Envying is first and excites strife; strife, vain-glorying and lying; and then (v. 16) hereupon ensue confusion and every evil work. One sin begets another, and it cannot be imagined how much mischief is produced: there is every evil work. Whence such wisdom cometh, v. 15. It springs from earthly principles. It is sensual, indulging the flesh. It is devilish. And therefore those who are lifted up with such wisdom as this must fall into the condemnation of the devil.

III. We have the lovely picture of that wisdom which is from above more fully drawn, v. 17, 18. True wisdom is God's gift. It comes from above. It is pure, without mixture of maxims or aims that would debase it: studious of holiness both in heart and life. The wisdom that is from above is peaceable. Those who are truly wise do what they can to preserve peace, that it may not be broken; and to make peace, that where it is lost it may be restored. Heavenly wisdom makes men peaceable. It is gentle, not being rude and overbearing in conversation, nor harsh and cruel in temper. Heavenly wisdom is easy to be entreated, it is very persuadable, either to what is good or from what is evil. There is an easiness that is weak and faulty; but it is not a blameable easiness to yield ourselves to the persuasions of God's word, and to all just requests of our fellow-creatures. Heavenly wisdom is full of mercy and good fruits, both to relieve those who want and to forgive those who offend. Heavenly wisdom is without partiality. The margin reads it, without wrangling. The wisest men are least apt to be censurers. That wisdom which is from above is without hypocrisy. It has no disguises nor deceits. It is sincere and open, steady and uniform, and consistent with itself.

True wisdom will go on to sow the fruits of righteousness in peace, and thus, to make peace in the world, v. 18. And that which is sown in peace will produce a harvest of joys.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

14. if ye have—as is the case (this is implied in the Greek indicative). bitter—Ephesians 4:31, "bitterness." envying—rather, "emulation," or lit., "zeal": kindly, generous emulation, or zeal, is not condemned, but that which is "bitter" [BENGEL]. strife—rather, "rivalry." in your hearts—from which flow your words and deeds, as from a fountain. glory not, and lie not against the truth—To boast of your wisdom is virtually a lying against the truth (the gospel), while your lives belie your glorying. Vs. 15; ch. 1:18, "The word of truth." Romans 2:17.23, speaks similarly of the same contentious Jewish Christians. 15. This wisdom—in which ye "glory," as if ye were "wise" (vss. 13, 14). descendeth not from above—lit., "is not one descending . . .": "from the Father of lights" (true illumination and wisdom), ch. 1:17; through "the Spirit of truth," John 15:26. earthly—opposed to heavenly. Distinct from "earthy," I Corinthians 15:47. Earthly is what is IN the earth; earthy, what is of the earth. sensual—lit., "animal-like": the wisdom of the "natural" (the same Greek) man, not born again of God; "not having the Spirit" (Jude 19). devilish—in its origin (from "hell," vs. 6; not from God, the Giver of true wisdom, ch. 1: 5), and also in its character, which accords with its origin. Earthly, sensual, and devilish, answer to the three spiritual foes of man, the world, the flesh, and the devil. 16. envying—So English Version translates the Greek, which usually means "zeal"; "emulation," in Romans 13:13. "The envious man stands in his own light. He thinks his candle cannot shine in the presence of another's sun. He aims directly at men, obliquely at God, who makes men to differ." strife—rivalry [ALFORD]. confusion—lit., "tumultuous anarchy": both in society (translated "commotions," Luke 21:9; "tumults," II Cor. 6:5), and in the individual mind; in contrast to the "peaceable" composure of true "wisdom," vs. 17. James does not honor such effects of this earthly wisdom with the name "fruit," as he does in the case of the wisdom from above. Vs. 18; cf. Galatians 5:19-22, "works of the flesh . . . fruit of the Spirit." 17. first pure—lit., "chaste," "sanctified": pure from all that is "earthly, sensual (animal), devilish" (vs. 15). This is put, "first of all," before "peaceable" because there is an unholy peace with the world which makes no distinction between clean and unclean. Cf. "undefiled" and "unspotted from the world," ch. 1:27; 4:4, 8, "purify . . . hearts"; I Peter 1:22, "purified . . . souls" (the same Greek). gentle "forbearing"; making allowances for others; lenient towards neighbors, as to the DUTIES they owe us. easy to be entreated—lit., "easily persuaded," tractable; not harsh as to a neighbor's FAULTS. full of mercy—as to a neighbor's MISERIES. good fruits—contrasted with "every evil work," vs. 16. without partiality—recurring to the warning against partial "respect to persons," ch. 2:1, 4, 9. ALFORD translates as the Greek is translated, ch. 1:6, "wavering," "without doubting." But thus there would be an epithet referring to one's self inserted amidst those referring to one's conduct towards others. English Version is therefore better. without hypocrisy—Not as ALFORD explains from ch. 1:22, 26, "Without deceiving yourselves" with the name without the reality of religion. For it must refer, like the rest of the six epithets, to our relations to others; our peaceableness and mercy towards others must be "without dissimulation." 18. "The peaceable fruit of righteousness." He says "righteousness"; because it is itself the true wisdom. As in the case of the earthly wisdom, after the characteristic description came its results; so in this verse, in the case of the heavenly wisdom. There the results were present; here, future. fruit . . . sown—Cf. Psalm 97: 11; Isaiah 61:3, "trees of righteousness." Anticipatory, i.e., the seed whose "fruit," viz., "righteousness," shall be ultimately reaped, is now "sown in peace." "Righteousness," now in germ, when fully developed as "fruit" shall be itself the everlasting reward of the righteous. As "sowing in peace" (cf. "sown in dishonor," I Cor. 15:43) produces the "fruit of righteousness," so conversely "the work" and "effect of righteousness" is "peace." of them that make peace—"by (implying also that it is for them, and to their good) them that work peace." They, and they alone, are "blessed." "Peacemakers," not merely they who reconcile others, but who work peace. "Cultivate peace" [ESTIUS]. Those truly wise towards God, while peaceable and tolerant towards their neighbors, yet make it their chief concern to sow righteousness, not cloaking men's sins, but reproving them with such peaceable moderation as to be the physicians, rather than the executioners, of sinners [CALVIN].

speaks. We may learn from this that genuine wisdom is ever accompanied with meekness and gentleness. Those proud, overbearing, and disdainful men who pass for great scholars and eminent critics may have learning, but they have not wisdom.

14. If ye have bitter envying and strive. If you are under the influence of an unkind, fierce, and contemptuous spirit, even while attempting or pretending to defend true religion, "do not boast" of either your exertions or success in silencing an adversary. You have no religion, and no true wisdom; and to profess either is to lie . . . against the truth.

15. This wisdom descendeth not from above. God is not the author of it, because it is bitter—not meek. Is earthly. Having this life only in view.

Sensual. "Animal"—having for its object the gratification of the passions and animal propensities. Devilish. "Demoniacal"—inspired by demons.

16. For where envying and strife is. "Zeal," fiery, inflammatory passion, and "contention," altercations about the different points of the law, of no use for edification; such as those mentioned in Titus iii. 9.

17. The wisdom that is from above. The pure religion of the Lord Jesus, bought by His blood and infused by His Spirit. See the rabbinical meaning of this phrase at the end of this chapter. Is first pure. "Chaste, holy, and clean." Peaceable. Living in peace with others, and promoting peace among men. Gentle. "Meek, modest, of an equal mind," taking everything in good part, and putting the best construction upon all the actions of others. Easy to be intreated. Not stubborn nor obstinate; of a yielding disposition in all indifferent things. Full of mercy. Ready to pass by a transgression, and to grant forgiveness to those who offend, and performing every possible act of kindness. Good fruits. Each temper and disposition producing fruits suited to and descriptive of its nature. Without partiality. "Without making a difference"—rendering to every man his due; and being never swayed by self-interest, worldly honor, or the fear of man. Without hypocrisy. Without pretending to be what it is not; acting always in its own character; never working under a mask.

18. And the fruit of righteousness is sown. The whole is the principle of righteousness in the soul, and all the above virtues are the fruits of that righteousness. Is sown in peace. When the peace of God rules the heart, all these virtues and graces grow and flourish abundantly. Of them that make peace. The peacemakers are continually recommending this wisdom to others, and their own conduct is represented as a sowing of heavenly seed, which brings forth divine fruit. Some render this verse, which is confessedly obscure, thus: "And the peaceable fruits of righteousness are sown for the practicers of peace. He who labors to live peaceably shall have peace for his reward."

Almost the whole of the preceding chapter is founded on maxims highly accredited in the rabbinical writings, and without a reference to those writings it would have been impossible, in some cases, to have understood James's meaning. There is one phrase, the rabbinical meaning and use of which I have reserved for this place, viz. "The wisdom that is from above." This they seem to understand to be a peculiar inspiration of the Almighty, or a teaching communicated immediately by the angels of God. In Sohar Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 19, Rabbi Chiya said: "The wisdom from above was in Adam more than in the supreme angels, and he knew all things." In Sohar Chadash, fol. 35, it is said concerning Enoch, "That the angels were sent from heaven, and taught him the wisdom that is from above." It is another word for the life of God in the soul of man, or true religion; it is the teaching of God in the human heart.

CHAPTER 4

This chapter speaks of a lust after worldly things as that which carried their divisions to a shameful height.

I. The apostle here reproves the Jewish Christians for their wars, and for their lusts as the cause of them, v. 1. The origin of their wars and fightings was not (as they pretended) a true zeal for their country, and for the honour of God, their prevailing lusts were the cause of all. What is shrouded under a specious pretence of zeal for God and religion often comes from men's pride. They make a war within as well as fightings without. From lust of power and dominion, lust of pleasure, or lust of riches, arise all the broils and contentions that are in the world. It is therefore the right method for the cure of contention to lay the axe to the root, and mortify those lusts that war in the members.

It should kill these lusts to think of their disappointment, v. 2. Inordinate desires are either totally disappointed, or they are not to be appeased and satisfied by obtaining the things desired. Worldly and fleshly lusts are the distemper which will not allow of contentment or satisfaction in the mind.

Sinful desires and affections generally exclude prayer: "You fight and war, yet you have not, because you ask not. You do not consult God in your undertakings, and you do not commit your way to him, but follow your own corrupt views and inclinations: therefore you meet with continual disappointments. Your lusts spoil your prayers," v. 3. Pride, vanity, luxury, and sensuality, are what you would serve by your successes, and by your very prayers. You disgrace devotion and dishonour God by such gross and base ends; and therefore your prayers are rejected. They ask God to give them success in their callings or undertakings; not that they may glorify their heavenly Father and do good with what they have, but that they may consume it upon their lusts. When we speed not in our prayers it is because we ask amiss; either we do not ask for right ends or not in a right manner. When our prayers are rather the language of our lusts than of our graces, they will return empty.

II. We have fair warning to avoid all criminal friendships with this world, v. 4. There is this brand put upon worldly-mindedness—that it is enmity to God. A man may have a competent portion of the good things of this life, and yet may keep himself in the love of God, but it is constructive treason and rebellion against God to set the world upon his throne in our hearts. Whosoever therefore is the friend of the world is the enemy of God. Hence arise wars and fightings, even from this adulterous idolatrous love of the world.

What peace can there be among men, so long as there is enmity towards God? (v. 5). Natural corruption principally shows itself by envying, and there is a continual propensity to this. Now this way of the world, affecting pomp and pleasure, and falling into strifes and quarrels for the sake of these things, is the certain consequence of being friends to the world. Christians, to avoid contentions, must avoid the friendship of the world. If we belong to God, he gives more grace than to live and act as the generality of the world do. The grace of God will correct and cure the spirit that naturally dwells in us; where he giveth grace, he giveth another spirit than that of the world.

Vss. 1-17. AGAINST FIGHTINGS AND THEIR SOURCE; WORLDLY LUSTS; UNCHARITABLE JUDGMENTS, AND PRESUMPTUOUS RECKONING ON THE FUTURE. 1. whence—The cause of quarrels is often sought in external circumstances, whereas internal lusts are the true origin. wars . . .—contrasted with the "peace" of heavenly wisdom. "Fightings" are the active carrying on of "wars." The best authorities have a second "whence" before "fightings." Tumults marked the era before the destruction of Jerusalem when James wrote. He indirectly alludes to these. The members are the first seat of war; thence it passes to conflict between man and man, nation and nation. come they not . . .—an appeal to their consciences. lusts—lit., "pleasures," i.e., the lusts which prompt you to "desire" (Note, vs. 2) pleasures; whence you seek self at the cost of your neighbor, and hence flow "fightings." that war—"campaign, as an army of soldiers encamped within" [ALFORD] the soul; tumultuously war against the interests of your fellow men, while lusting to advance self. But while warring thus against others they (without his knowledge) war against the soul of the man himself, and against the Spirit; therefore they must be "mortified" by the Christian. 2. Ye lust—A different Greek word from that in vs. 1. "Ye desire"; lit., "ye set your mind (or heart) on" an object. have not—The lust of desire does not ensure the actual possession. Hence "ye kill" (not as Margin, without any old authority, "envy") to ensure possession. Not probably in the case of professing Christians of that day in a literal sense, but "kill and envy" (as the Greek for "desire to have" should be translated), i.e., harass and oppress through envy [DRUSIUS]. Cf. Zechariah 11:5, "slay"; through envy, hate, and desire to get out of your way, and so are "murderers" in God's eyes [ESTIUS]. If literal murder [ALFORD] were meant, I do not think it would occur so early in the series; nor had Christians then as yet reached so open criminality. In the Spirit's application of the passage to all ages, literal killing is included, flowing from the desire to possess so David and Ahab. There is a climax: "Ye desire," the individual lust for an object; "ye kill and envy," the feeling and action of individuals against individuals; "ye fight and war," the action of many against many. ye have not, because ye ask not—God promises to those who pray, not to those who fight. The petition of the lustful, murderous, and contentious is not recognized by God as prayer. If ye prayed, there would be no "wars and fightings." Thus this last clause is an answer to the question, vs. 1, "Whence come wars and fightings?" 3. Some of them are supposed to say in objection, But we do "ask" (pray); cf. vs. 2. James replies, It is not enough to ask for good things, but we must ask with a good spirit and intention. "Ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it (your object of prayer) upon (lit., "in") your lusts" (lit., "pleasures"); not that ye may have the things you need for the service of God. Contrast ch. 1:5 with Matthew 6:31, 32. If ye prayed aright, all your proper wants would be supplied; the improper cravings which produce "wars and fightings" would then cease. Even believers' prayers are often best answered when their desires are most opposed. 4. The oldest MSS. omit "adulterers and," and read simply, "Ye adulteresses." God is the rightful husband; the men of the world are regarded collectively as one adulteress, and individually as adulteresses. the world—in so far as the men of it and their motives and acts are aliens to God, e.g., its selfish "lusts" (vs. 3), and covetous and ambitious "wars and fightings" (vs. 1). enmity—not merely "inimical"; a state of enmity, and that enmity itself. Cf. I John 2:15, "love . . . the world . . . the love of the Father." whosoever . . . will be—The Greek is emphatic, "shall be resolved to be." Whether he succeed or not, if his wish be to be the friend of the world, he renders himself, becomes (so the Greek for "is") by the very fact, "the enemy of God." Contrast "Abraham the friend of God." 5. in vain—No word of Scripture can be so. The quotation here, as in Ephesians 5:14, seems to be not so much from a particular passage as one gathered by James under inspiration from the general tenor of such passages in both the Old and New Testaments, as Numbers 14:29; Proverbs 21:20; Galatians 5:17. spirit that dwelleth in us—Other MSS. read, "that God hath made to dwell in us" (viz., at Pentecost). If so translated, "Does the (Holy) Spirit that God hath placed in us lust to (towards) envy" (viz., as ye do in your worldly "wars and fightings")? Certainly not; ye are therefore walking in the flesh, not in the Spirit, while ye thus lust towards, i.e.,

1. From whence come wars and fightings? About the time in which James wrote we find, according to the accounts given by Josephus, that the Jews, under pretense of defending their religion, and procuring that liberty to which they believed themselves entitled, made various insurrections in Judea against the Romans, which occasioned much bloodshed and misery to their nation. The factions also into which the Jews were split had violent contentions among themselves, in which they massacred and plundered each other. In the provinces, likewise, the Jews became very turbulent; particularly in Alexandria and different other parts of Egypt, of Syria, and other places, where they made war against the heathens, killing many, and being massacred in their turn. These are probably the wars and fightings to which James alludes. Come they not hence, even of your lusts? This was the principle from which these Jewish contentions and predatory wars proceeded, and the principle from which all the wars that have afflicted and desolated the world have proceeded.

2. Ye lust, and have not. You are ever covetous, and ever poor. Ye kill, and desire to have. You are constantly engaged in insurrections and predatory wars, and never gain any advantage. Ye have not, because ye ask not. You get no especial blessing from God, as your fathers did, because you do not pray. Worldly good is your god; you leave no stone unturned in order to get it; and as you ask nothing from God but to consume it upon your evil desires and propensities, your prayers are not heard.

3. Ye ask, and receive not. Some think that this refers to their prayers for the conversion of the heathen; and on the pretense that they were not converted thus, they thought it lawful to extirpate them and possess their goods. Ye ask amiss. "Ye ask evilly, wickedly." You have not the proper dispositions of prayer, and you have an improper object. You ask for worldly prosperity, that you may employ it in riotous living. This is properly the meaning of the original, "That ye may expend it upon your pleasures." The rabbins have many good observations on asking amiss or asking improperly, and give examples of different kinds of this sort of prayer; the phrase is Jewish, and would naturally occur to James in writing on this subject.

4. Ye adulterers and adulteresses. The Jews, because of their covenant with God, are represented as being espoused to Him; and hence their idolatry and their iniquity in general are represented under the notion of adultery. And although they had not since the Babylonish captivity been guilty of idolatry, according to the letter, yet what is intended by idolatry—having their hearts estranged from God, and seeking their portion in this life and out of God—is that of which the Jews were then notoriously guilty. Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world. How strange it is that people professing Christianity can suppose that with a worldly spirit, worldly companions, and their lives governed by worldly maxims, they can be in the favor of God, or ever get to the kingdom of Heaven! When the world gets into the Church, the Church becomes a painted sepulchre, its spiritual vitality being extinct.

5. Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain? This verse is exceedingly obscure. We cannot tell what scripture James refers to; many have been produced by learned men as that which he had particularly in view. Some think Gen. vi. 5: "Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. viii. 21: "The imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth." Num. xi. 29: "Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake?" and Prov. xxi. 10: "The soul of the wicked desireth evil." None of these scriptures, nor any others, contain the precise words in this verse; and therefore James may probably refer, not to any particular portion, but to the spirit and design of the Scripture in those various places where it speaks against envying, covetousness, worldly associations. Perhaps the word in this and the two succeeding verses may be well paraphrased thus: "Do you think that concerning these things the Scripture speaks falsely, or that the Holy

III. The difference God makes between pride and humility, v. 6. This is represented as the language of scripture in the Old Testament. 1. The disgrace cast upon the proud: God resists them. The proud resists God. Let proud spirits hear this and tremble—God resists them. He will certainly fill with shame the faces of such as have filled their hearts with pride. 2. The honour and help God gives to the humble. Grace, as opposed to disgrace, is honour; this God gives to the humble. Wherever God gives true grace, he will give more. He will especially give more grace to the humble, because they see their need of it, will pray for it and be thankful for it; and such shall have it.

IV. We are taught to submit ourselves entirely to God, v. 7. Christians should forsake the friendship of the world, and should by grace learn to glory in their submissions to God We are subjects, and as such must be submissive; not only through fear, but through love. Now, as this subjection and submission to God are what the devil most industriously strives to hinder, so we ought with great care and steadiness to resist his suggestions. "Resist him and he will flee from you." If we basely yield to temptations, the devil will continually follow us; but if we stand it out against him, he will be gone from us. Resolution shuts and bolts the door against temptation.

V. We are directed how to act towards God v. 8–10. 1. Draw nigh to God. The heart that has rebelled must be brought to the foot of God; the spirit that was estranged from a life of communion with God must become acquainted with him. 2. Cleanse your hands. He who comes unto God must have clean hands. The hands must be cleansed or it will be in vain for us to draw nigh to God. 3. The hearts of the double-minded must be purified. To purify the heart is to be sincere.

4. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep. 'What afflictions God sends take them as he would have you, and be duly sensible of them. Times of contention and division are times to mourn in, and the sins that occasion wars and fightings should be mourned for. Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to heaviness." This may be taken either as a prediction of sorrow or a prescription of seriousness. They are directed, before things come to the worst, to lay aside their vain mirth and their sensual pleasures, that they might indulge godly sorrow and penitential tears. 5. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord. Let there be a thorough humiliation in bewailing everything that is evil; let there be great humility in doing that which is good."

VI. We have great encouragement to act thus towards God (v. 8–10). Those that draw nigh to God in a way of duty shall find God drawing nigh to them in a way of mercy. If there be not a close communion between God and us, it is our fault, and not his. He shall lift up the humble. If we be truly penitent and humble under the marks of God's displeasure, we shall in a little time know the advantages of his favour; he will lift us up out of trouble, or he will lift us up in our spirits and comfort us under trouble. The highest honour in heaven will be the reward of the greatest humility on earth.

Verses 11–17

I. We are cautioned against the sin of evil-speaking, v. 11. We must not speak evil things of others, though they be true, unless there be some necessary occasion for it; much less must we report evil things when they are false. Our lips must be guided by the law of kindness, as well as truth and justice. 1. Because you are brethren. It is required of us that we be tender of the good name of our brethren; where we cannot speak well, we had better say nothing than speak evil.

with envy against one another. The friendship of the world tends to breed envy; the Spirit produces very different fruit. ALFORD attributes the epithet "with envy," in the unwarrantable sense of jealously, to the Holy Spirit: "The Spirit jealously desires us for His own." In English Version the sense is, "the (natural) spirit that hath its dwelling in us lusts with (lit., "to," or "towards") envy." Ye lust, and because ye have not what ye lust after (vss. 1, 2), ye envy your neighbor who has, and so the spirit of envy leads you on to "fight." James also here refers to ch. 3:14, 16. 6. But—"Nay, rather." he—God. giveth more grace—ever increasing grace; the farther ye depart from "envy" [BENGEL]. he saith—The same God who causes His spirit to dwell in believers (vs. 5), by the Spirit also speaks in Scripture. The quotation here is probably from Proverbs 3:34; as probably Proverbs 21:10 was generally referred to in vs. 5. In Hebrew it is "scorneth the scorners," viz., those who think "Scripture speaketh in vain." resisteth—lit., "setteth Himself in array against"; even as they, like Pharaoh, set themselves against Him. God repays sinners in their own coin. "Pride" is the mother of "envy" (vs. 5); it is peculiarly satanic, for by it Satan fell. the proud—The Greek means in derivation one who shows himself above his fellows, and so lifts himself against God. the humble—the unenvious, uncovetous, and unambitious as to the world. Contrast vs. 4. 7. Submit to . . . God—so ye shall be among "the humble," vs. 6; also vs. 10; I Peter 5:6. Resist . . . devil—Under his banner pride and envy are enlisted in the world; resist his temptations to these. Faith, humble prayers, and heavenly wisdom, are the weapons of resistance. The language is taken from warfare. "Submit" as a good soldier puts himself in complete subjection to his captain. "Resist," stand bravely against. he will flee—Translate, "he shall flee." For it is a promise of God, not a mere assurance from man to man [ALFORD]. He shall flee worsted as he did from Christ. 8. Draw nigh to God—So "cleave unto Him," Deuteronomy 30:20, viz., by prayerfully (vss. 2, 3) "resisting Satan," who would oppose our access to God. he will draw nigh—propitious. Cleanse . . . hands—the outward instruments of action. None but the cleanhanded can ascend into the hill of the Lord (justified through Christ, who alone was perfectly so, and as such "ascended" thither). purify . . . hearts—lit., "make chaste" of your spiritual adultery (vs. 4, i.e., worldliness) "your hearts": the inward source of all impurity. double-minded—divided between God and the world. The "double-minded" is at fault in heart; the sinner in his hands likewise.

9. Be afflicted . . .—lit., "Endure misery," i.e., mourn over your wretchedness through sin. Repent with deep sorrow instead of your present laughter. A blessed mourning. Contrast Isaiah 22:12, 13; Luke 6:25. James does not add here, as in ch. 5:1, "howl," where he foretells the doom of the impenitent at the coming destruction of Jerusalem. heaviness—lit., "falling of the countenance," casting down of the eyes.

10. in the sight of the Lord—as continually in the presence of Him who alone is worthy to be exalted: recognizing His presence in all your ways, the truest incentive to humility. The tree, to grow upwards, must strike its roots deep downwards; so man, to be exalted, must have his mind deep-rooted in humility. In I Peter 5:6, it is, Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, viz., in His dealings of Providence: a distinct thought from that here. lift you up—in part in this world, fully in the world to come.

11. Having mentioned sins of the tongue (ch. 3), he shows here that evil-speaking flows from the same spirit of exalting self at the expense of one's neighbor as caused the "fightings" reprobated in this chapter (vs. 1). Speak not evil—lit., "Speak not Spirit, who dwells in us, can excite us to envy others instead of being contented with the state in which the providence of God has placed us? Nay, far otherwise; for He gives us more grace to enable us to bear the ills of life, and to lie in deep humility at His feet, knowing that His Holy Spirit has said, Prov. iii. 34: 'God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.' Seeing these things are so, submit yourselves to God; resist the devil, who would tempt you to envy, and he will flee from you; draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you." I must leave this sense as the best I can give, without asserting that I have hit the true meaning.

6. But he giveth more grace. "A greater benefit" than all the goods that the world can bestow; for He gives genuine happiness, and this the world cannot confer. May this be James's meaning? God resisteth the proud. "Sets himself in battle array" against him. Giveth grace unto the humble. The sure way to please God is to submit to the dispensations of His grace and providence; and when a man acknowledges Him in all his ways, He will direct all his steps. The covetous man grasps at the shadow and loses the substance.

7. Submit . . . to God. Continue to bow to all His decisions and to all His dispensations. Resist the devil. He cannot conquer you if you continue to resist. Strong as he is, God never permits him to conquer the man who continues to resist him; he cannot force the human will.

8. Draw nigh to God. Approach Him, in the name of Jesus, by faith and prayer, and he will draw nigh to you—He will meet you at your coming. When a soul sets out to seek God, God sets out to meet that soul; so that while we are drawing near to Him, He is drawing near to us. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners. This I think to be the beginning of a new address, and to different persons, and should have formed the commencement of a new verse. Let your whole conduct be changed. "Cease to do evil; learn to do well." Washing or cleansing the hands was a token of innocence and purity. Purify your hearts. Separate yourselves from the world, and consecrate yourselves to God; this is the true notion of sanctification. We have often seen that to sanctify signifies to separate a thing or person from profane or common use, and consecrate it or him to God. The person or thing thus consecrated or separated is considered to be "holy" and to be God's property. There are therefore two things implied in a man's sanctification: (1) That he separates himself from evil ways and evil companions, and devotes himself to God; (2) That God separates guilt from his conscience and sin from his soul, and thus makes him internally and externally "holy."

9. Be afflicted, and mourn. Without true and deep repentance you cannot expect the mercy of God. Let your laughter be turned to mourning. It appears most evidently that many of those to whom James addressed this Epistle had lived very irregular and dissolute lives. He had already spoken of their lust and pleasures, and he had called them adulterers and adulteresses; and perhaps they were so in the grossest sense of the words. He speaks here of their laughter and their joy; and all the terms taken together show that a dissolute life is intended.

10. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord. In v. 7 they were exhorted to submit to God; here they are exhorted to humble themselves in His sight. Submission to God's authority will precede humiliation of soul, and genuine repentance is performed as in the sight of God; for when a sinner is truly awakened to a sense of his guilt and danger, he seems to see, whithersoever he turns, the face of a justly incensed God turned against him. He shall lift you up. Mourners and penitents lay on the ground and rolled themselves in the dust. When comforted and pardoned, they arose from the earth, shook themselves from the dust, and clothed themselves in their better garments. God promises to raise these from the dust, when sufficiently humbled.

11. Speak not evil one of another. Perhaps this exhortation refers to evil speaking, slander, and backbiting in general, the writer having no particular persons in view. It may, however, refer to the contentions among the different

2. Because this is to judge the law. He who quarrels with his brother, and condemns him for the sake of anything not determined in the word of God, does thereby reflect on that word of God, as if it were not a perfect rule. Let us take heed of judging the law, for the law of the Lord is perfect; if men break the law, leave that to judge them; if they do not break it, let us not judge them. Those who are most ready to set up for judges of the law generally fail most in their obedience to it. 3. Because God, the Lawgiver, has reserved the power of passing the final sentence on men wholly to himself, v. 12. God is the supreme Lawgiver, who only can give law to the conscience, and who alone is to be absolutely obeyed. His right to enact laws is incontestable, because he has such a power to enforce them. He is able to save, and to destroy. He has power fully to reward the observance of his laws, and to punish all disobedience. Here he cautions against being many judges. Let us not prescribe to our brethren. It is sufficient that we have the law of God, which is a rule to us all; and therefore we should not set up other rules.

II. We are cautioned against a presumptuous confidence of the continuance of our lives, v. 13, 14. Reflect a little on this way of thinking and talking; call yourselves to account for it. There were some who said of old, as too many say still, We will go to such a city, and do this or that, while all serious regards to the disposals of Providence were neglected. 1. How apt worldly men are to leave God out of their schemes. 2. How much of worldly happiness lies in the promises men make to themselves beforehand. Their heads are full of fine visions, as to what they shall do in some future time. 3. How vain a thing it is to look for anything good in futurity, without the concurrence of Providence. We will go to such a city (say they). Something might possibly stop their way, or call them elsewhere. Many who have set out on a journey have gone to their long home, and never reached their journey's end. But, suppose they should reach the city they designed, how did they know they should continue there? Something might happen to shorten their stay They could not be certain that they should buy and sell there. Suppose they should go to that city, and continue there a year, yet they might not get gain; getting of gain in this world is at best but an uncertain thing. The frailty, shortness, and uncertainty of life, ought to check the presumptuous confidence of such projectors for futurity, v. 14. God hath wisely left us in the dark concerning future events. We know not what shall be on the morrow; we may know what we intend to do and to be, but a thousand things may happen to prevent us. We are not sure of life itself, since it is but as a vapour. It appears but for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

III. We are taught to keep up a constant sense of our dependence on the will of God, v. 15. The apostle now directs them how to be and do better: "You ought to say it in your hearts at all times, that if the Lord will give leave, you have such and such designs to accomplish." With the leave and blessing of God was used by the Greeks in the beginning of every undertaking. If the Lord will, we shall live. We must remember that our times are not in our own hands, but at the disposal of God, and therefore must be submissive to him. If the Lord will, we shall do this or that. All our actions and designs are under the control of Heaven. Therefore both our counsels for action and our conduct in action should be entirely referred to God.

IV. We are directed to avoid vain boasting, v. 16. They promised themselves life and prosperity, and great things in the world, without any just regard to God; and then they boasted of these things. Such rejoicing is evil; it is foolish and it is hurtful. If we rejoice in God that our times are in his hand, that all events are at his disposal, and that he is our God, this rejoicing is good. But, if we rejoice in our own vain confidences and presumptuous boasts, this is evil.

V. We are taught to act up to our own convictions, that we never go contrary to our own knowledge (v. 17). It is aggravated sin; it is sinning with a witness; and it is to have the worst witness against a man that can be, when he sins against his own conscience. Omissions are sins which will come into judgment, as well as commissions. He that does not the good he knows should be done, as well as he who does the evil he knows should not be done, will be condemned.

against" one another. brethren—implying the inconsistency of such depreciatory speaking of one another in brethren. speaketh evil of the law—for the law in commanding, "Love thy neighbor as thyself" (ch. 2:8), virtually condemns evil-speaking and judging [ESTIUS]. Those who superciliously condemn the acts and words of others which do not please themselves, thus aiming at the reputation of sanctity, put their own moroseness in the place of the law, and claim to themselves a power of censuring above the law of God, condemning what the law permits [CALVIN]. Such a one acts as though the law could not perform its own office of judging, but he must fly upon the office [BENGEL]. This is the last mention of the law in the New Testament. ALFORD rightly takes the "law" to be the old moral law applied in its comprehensive spiritual fulness by Christ: "the law of liberty." if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer . . . but a judge—Setting aside the Christian brotherhood as all alike called to be doers of the law, in subjection to it, such a one arrogates the office of a judge. 12. There is one lawgiver—The best authorities read in addition," "and judge." Translate, "There is One (alone) who is (at once) Lawgiver and Judge, (namely) He who is able to save and destroy." Implying, God alone is Lawgiver and therefore Judge, since it is He alone who can execute His judgments; our inability in this respect shows our presumption in trying to act as judges, as though we were God. who art thou . . .—The order in the Greek is emphatic, "But (inserted in oldest MSS.) thou, who art thou that . . .?" How rashly arrogant in judging thy fellows, and wresting from God the office which belongs to Him over thee and THEM alike! another—The oldest authorities read, "thy neighbor."

13. Go to now—"Come now"; said to excite attention. ye that say—boasting of the morrow. Today or tomorrow—as if ye had the free choice of either day as a certainty. Others read, "Today and tomorrow." such a city—lit., "this the city" (viz., the one present to the mind of the speaker). This city here. continue . . . a year—rather, "spend one year." Their language implies that when this one year is out, they purpose similarly settling plans for to come [BENGEL]. buy and sell—Their plans for the future are all worldly. 14. what—lit., "of what nature" is your life? i.e., how evanescent it is. It is even—Some oldest authorities read, "For ye are." BENGEL, with other old authorities, reads, "For it shall be, the future referring to the "morrow" (vss. 13-15). The former expresses, "Ye yourselves are transitory"; so everything of yours, even your life, must partake of the same transitoriness. Received text has no old authority. and then vanisheth away—"afterwards vanishing as it came"; lit., "afterwards (as it appeared), so vanishing" [ALFORD]. 15. Lit., "instead of your saying . . ." This refers to "ye that say" (vs. 13). we shall live—The best MSS. read, "We shall both live and do. . . ." The boasters spoke as if life, action, and the particular kind of action were in their power, whereas all three depend entirely on the will of the Lord. 16. now—as it is. rejoice in . . . boastings—"ye boast in arrogant presumptions," viz., vain confident fancies that the future is certain to you (vs. 13). rejoicing—boasting [BENGEL]. 17. The general principle illustrated by the particular example just discussed is here stated: knowledge without practice is imputed to a man as great and presumptuous sin. James reverts to the principle with which he started. Nothing more injures the soul than wasted impressions. Feelings exhaust themselves and evaporate, if not embodied in practice. As we will not act except we feel, so if we will not act out our feelings, we shall soon cease to feel.

factions then prevailing among this wretched people, or to their calumnies against those of their brethren who had embraced the Christian faith. He that speaketh evil of his brother. It was an avowed and very general maxim among the rabbins that "no one could speak evil of his brother without denying God, and becoming an atheist." Speaketh evil of the law. The law condemns all evil speaking and detraction. He who is guilty of these, and allows himself in these vices, in effect judges and condemns the law; i.e., he considers it unworthy to be kept, and that it is no sin to break it. Thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. You reject the law of God, and set up your own mischievous conduct as a rule of life; or, by allowing this evil speaking and detraction, intimate that the law that condemns them is improper, imperfect, or unjust.

12. There is one lawgiver. "And judge" is added here by about thirty MSS. On this evidence Griesbach has received it into the text. The man who breaks the law, and teaches others so to do, thus in effect sets himself up as a lawgiver and judge. But there is only one such "lawgiver and judge"—God Almighty, who is able to save all those who obey Him, and able . . . to destroy all those who trample underfoot His testimonies. Who art thou that judgest another? Who are you who dare to usurp the office and prerogative of the supreme Judge? But what is that law of which James speaks? and who is this lawgiver and "judge"? Most critics think that the law mentioned here is the same as that which he elsewhere calls "the royal law" and "the law of liberty," thereby meaning the gospel; and that Christ is the Person who is called the Lawgiver and Judge. This, however, is not clear to me. I believe James means the Jewish law; and by the lawgiver and "judge," God Almighty, as acknowledged by the Jewish people. I find, or think I find, from the closest examination of this Epistle, but few references to Jesus Christ or His gospel. His Jewish creed, forms, and maxims, this writer keeps constantly in view; and it is proper he should, considering the persons to whom he wrote. Some of them were doubtless Christians; some of them, certainly no Christians; and some of them, half Christians and half Jews. The two latter descriptions are those most frequently addressed.

13. Go to now. "Come now," the same in meaning as the Hebrew "come," Gen. xi. 3-4, 7. "Come, and hear what I have to say, ye that say," To day or to morrow we will go. This presumption on a precarious life is here well reproved. And continue there a year, and buy and sell. This was the custom of those ancient times; they traded from city to city, carrying their goods on the backs of camels.

14. Whereas ye know not. This verse should be read in a parenthesis. It is not only impious, but grossly absurd, to speak thus concerning futurity when you know not what a day may bring forth. It is even a vapour. "It is a smoke," always fleeting, uncertain, evanescent. This is a frequent metaphor with the Hebrews. See Ps. cii. 11; "My days are like a shadow"; Job viii. 9; "Our days upon earth are a shadow"; 1 Chron. xxix. 15; "Our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding."

16. But now ye rejoice in your boastings. You glory in your proud and self-sufficient conduct, exulting that you are free from the trammels of superstition, and that you can live independently of God Almighty. "All such boasting is wicked."

17. To him that knoweth to do good. As if he had said: After this warning none of you can plead ignorance; if therefore any of you shall be found to act their ungodly part, not acknowledging the divine providence, the uncertainty of life, and the necessity of standing every moment prepared to meet God—as you will have the greater sin, you will infallibly get the greater punishment. This may be applied to all who know better than they act. He who does not the Master's will because he does not know it will be beaten with few stripes; but he who knows it and does not do it shall be beaten with many; Luke xii. 47-48. James may have the Christians in view who were converted from Judaism to Christianity.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 5

Verses 1–11

The apostle is here addressing first sinners and then saints.

I. The address to sinners; and here we find James seconding what his great Master had said: Woe unto you that are rich; for you have received your consolation, Luke vi. 24. The poor among the Jews received the gospel, and many of them believed; but the generality of the rich rejected Christianity, and persecuted those who believed on Christ.

1. He foretells the judgments of God that should come upon them, v. 1–3. They should have miseries come upon them, misery that should arise from the very things in which they placed their happiness. Go to now, you rich men. Rich men are apt to say to themselves (and others are ready to say to them), Eat, drink, and be merry; but God says, Weep and howl. Those who live like beasts are called to howl like such. "Corruption, decay, rust, and ruin, will come upon all your goodly things (v. 2). Those things which you now inordinately affect will be of no worth, of no use to you," v. 3. They think to heap up treasure for their latter days, but, alas! they are only heaping up treasures that will prove at last to be only treasures of wrath.

2. What those sins are which should bring such miseries. Covetousness is laid to the charge of this people. God gives us our worldly possessions that we may honour him and do good with them; but if, instead of this, we sinfully hoard them up, this is a very heinous crime, and will be witnessed against by the very rust and corruption of the treasure thus heaped together.

Another sin is oppression, v. 4. Those who have wealth in their hands get power into their hands, and then they are tempted to abuse that power to oppress such as are under them. They made as hard bargains with the poor as they could, and even after that would not make good their bargains as they should have done.

Another sin is sensuality and voluptuousness, v. 5. God does not forbid us to use pleasure; but to live in them as if we lived for nothing else is a very provoking sin. Luxury makes people wanton. Wantonness and luxury are commonly the effects of great plenty and abundance. "You have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter: you live as if it were every day a day of sacrifices, a festival." Some may say, "What harm is there in good cheer, provided people do not spend above what they have?" What! Is it no harm for people to make gods of their bellies, and to give all to these, instead of abounding in acts of charity and piety? Pride, and idleness, and fulness of bread, mean the same thing with living in pleasure, and being wanton, and nourishing the heart as in a day of slaughter. Another sin is persecution, v. 6. This fills up the measure of their iniquity. When such do suffer, and yield without resistance to the unjust sentence of oppressors, this is marked by God, to the honour of the sufferers and the infamy of their persecutors.

Vss. 1-20. WOES COMING ON THE WICKED RICH: BELIEVERS SHOULD BE PATIENT UNTO THE LORD'S COMING: VARIOUS EXHORTATIONS. 1. Go to now—Come now. A phrase to call solemn attention. ye rich—who have neglected the true enjoyment of riches, which consists in doing good. James intends this address to rich Jewish unbelievers, not so much for themselves, as for the saints, that they may bear with patience the violence of the rich (vs. 7), knowing that God will speedily avenge them on their oppressors [BENGEL]. miseries that shall come—lit., "that are coming upon you" unexpectedly and swiftly, viz., at the coming of the Lord (vs. 7); primarily, at the destruction of Jerusalem; finally, at His visible coming to judge the world. 2. corrupted—about to be destroyed through God's curse on your oppression, whereby your riches are accumulated (vs. 4). CALVIN thinks the sense is, Your riches perish without being of any use either to others or even to yourselves, for instance, your garments which are moth-eaten in your chests. garments . . . moth-eaten—referring to Matthew 6: 19, 20. 3. is cankered—"rusted through" [ALFORD]. rust . . . witness against you—in the day of judgment; viz., that your riches were of no profit to any, lying unemployed and so contracting rust. shall eat your flesh—The rust which once ate your riches, shall then gnaw your conscience, accompanied with punishment which shall prey upon your bodies for ever. as . . . fire—not with the slow process of rusting, but with the swiftness of consuming fire. for the last days—Ye have heaped together, not treasures as ye suppose (cf. Luke 12: 19), but wrath against the last days, viz., the coming judgment of the Lord. ALFORD translates more lit., "In these last days (before the coming judgment) ye laid up (worldly) treasure" to no profit, instead of repenting and seeking salvation (see Note, vs. 5). 4. Behold—calling attention to their coming doom as no vain threat. labourers—lit., "workmen." of you kept back—So English Version rightly. Not as ALFORD, "crieth out from you." The "keeping back of the hire" was, on the part OF the rich, virtually an act of "fraud," because the poor laborers were not immediately paid. The phrase is therefore not, "kept back by you," but "of you"; the latter implying virtual, rather than overt, fraud. James refers to Deuteronomy 24:14, 15, "At this day . . . give his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it, lest he CRY against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee." Many sins "cry" to heaven for vengeance which men tacitly take no account of, as unchastity and injustice [BENGEL]. Sins peculiarly offensive to God are said to "cry" to Him. The rich ought to have given freely to the poor; their not doing so was sin. A still greater sin was their not paying their debts. Their greatest sin was not paying them to the poor, whose wages is their all. cries of them—a double cry; both that of the hire abstractly, and that of the laborers hired. the Lord of sabaoth—here only in the New Testament. In Romans 9:29 it is a quotation. It is suited to the Jewish tone of the Epistle. It reminds the rich who think the poor have no protector, that the Lord of the whole hosts in heaven and earth is the guardian and avenger of the latter. He is identical with the "coming Lord" Jesus (vs. 7). 5. Translate, "Ye have luxuriated . . . and wantoned." The former expresses luxurious effeminacy; the latter, wantonness and prodigality. Their luxury was at the expense of the defrauded poor (vs. 4). on the earth—The same earth which has been the scene of your wantonness, shall be the scene of the judgment coming on you: instead of earthly delights ye shall have punishments. nourished . . . hearts—i.e., glutted your bodies like beasts to the full extent of your hearts' desire; ye live to eat, not eat to live. as in a day of slaughter—The oldest authorities omit "as." Ye are like beasts which eat to their hearts' content on the very day of their approaching slaughter, unconscious it is near. The phrase answers to "the last days," vs. 3, which favors ALFORD'S translation there, "in," not "for." 6. Ye have condemned . . . the just—The Greek aorist expresses, "Ye are accustomed to condemn . . . the just." Their condemnation of Christ, "the Just," is foremost in James' mind. But all the innocent blood shed, and to be shed, is included, the Holy Spirit comprehending James himself, called "the Just," who was slain in a tumult.

This gives a peculiar appropriateness to the expression in this verse, the same "as the righteous (just) man" (vs. 16). The justice or righteousness of Jesus and His people is what peculiarly provoked the ungodly great men of

1. Go to now. See on chap. iv. 13. Weep and howl for your miseries. James seems to refer here, in the spirit of prophecy, to the destruction that was coming upon the Jews, not only in Judea, but in all the provinces where they sojourned.

2. Your riches are corrupted. Are "putrefied." The term riches is to be taken here, not for gold, silver, or precious stones (for these could not putrefy), but for the produce of the fields and flocks, the different stores of grain, wine, and oil, which they had laid up in their granaries, and the various changes of raiment which they had amassed in their wardrobes.

3. Your gold and silver is cankered. Instead of helping the poor, and thus honoring God with your substance, you have, through the principle of covetousness, kept all to yourselves. The rust of them shall be a witness against you. Your putrefied stores, your moth-eaten garments, and your tarnished coin are so many proofs that it was not for want of property that you assisted not the poor, but through a principle of avarice; loving money, not for the sake of what it could procure, but for its own sake, which is the genuine principle of the miser. This was the very character given to this people by our Lord himself; He called them "lovers of money." Shall eat your flesh as it were fire. This is a very bold and sublime figure. He represents the rust of their coin as becoming a canker that should produce gangrenes in their flesh, till it should be eaten away from their bones. By the last days we are not to understand the day of judgment, but the last days of the Jewish commonwealth, which were not long distant from the date of this Epistle.

4. The hire of the labourers. The law, Lev. xix. 13, had ordered: "The wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning," every day's labor being paid for as soon as ended. This is more clearly stated in another law, Deut. xxiv. 15: "At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it . . . lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee." And that God particularly resented this defrauding of the hireling we see from Mal. iii. 5: "I will come near to you in judgment; and I will be a swift witness against . . . those who oppress the hireling in his wages." And on these laws and threatenings is built what we read in Synopsis Sohar, p. 100, n. 45: "When a poor man does any work in a house, the vapour proceeding from him, through the severity of his work, ascends toward heaven. Woe to his employer if he delay to pay him his wages." To this James seems particularly to allude when he says: "The cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of hosts." The Lord of sabaoth. James often conceives in Hebrew though he writes in Greek. It is well-known that Yehovah tsebaoth, "Lord of hosts," or "Lord of armies," is a frequent appellation of God in the Old Testament; and signifies His uncontrollable power and the infinitely numerous means He has for governing the world, and defending His followers, and punishing the wicked.

5. Ye have lived in pleasure. "You have lived luxuriously"; feeding yourselves without fear, pampering the flesh. And been wanton. "You have lived lasciviously." You have indulged all your sinful and sensual appetites to the uttermost. Ye have nourished your hearts. "You have fattened your hearts," and have rendered them incapable of feeling, as in a day of slaughter, "a day of sacrifice," where many victims are offered at once and where the people feast upon the sacrifices: many no doubt turning, on that occasion, a holy ordinance into a riotous festival.

6. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. Several by "the just one" understand Jesus Christ, who is so called, Acts iii. 14; vii. 52; xxii. 14. But the structure of the sentence and the connection in which it stands seem to require that we should consider this as applying to the just or righteous in general, who were persecuted and murdered by those oppressive rich men; and their death was the consequence of their drag-

II. An address to saints. From what has been said concerning wicked and oppressing rich men, occasion is given to administer comfort to God's afflicted people.

1. Attend to your duty. (1) "Be patient though God should not appear for you immediately. Wait for him." When we have done our work, we have need of patience to stay for our reward. This Christian patience is not a mere yielding to necessity, as the moral patience taught by some philosophers was, but it is a humble acquiescence in the wisdom and will of God. Be patient to the coming of the Lord. And because this is a lesson Christians must learn, though ever so hard or difficult to them, it is repeated in v. 8.

(2) "Establish your hearts—let your faith be firm, your practice of what is good constant and continued, and your resolutions for God and heaven fixed, in spite of all sufferings or temptations." (3) Grudge not one against another; Groan not one against another. Do not make yourselves uneasy and make one another uneasy by groaning to and grieving one another. Those who are in the midst of common enemies, and in any suffering circumstances, should be more especially careful not to groan against one another, otherwise judgments will come upon them as well as others.

2. Consider what encouragement here is for Christians to be patient. "Look to the example of the husbandman. When you sow your corn in the ground, you wait many months for the former and latter rain, and are willing to stay till harvest for the fruit of your labour. Consider him that waits for a crop of corn; and will not you wait for a crown of glory? If you should be called to wait a little longer than the husbandman does, is it not something proportionably greater and infinitely more worth your waiting for? Think how short your waiting time may possibly be (v. 8–9). Do not be impatient, do not quarrel with one another; the great Judge is at hand: as near as one who is just knocking at the door." Grudge not, lest you be condemned. Fretfulness and discontent expose us to the just judgment of God, and we bring more calamities upon ourselves by our groans and grudgings against one another, than we are aware of. We are encouraged to be patient by the example of the prophets (v. 10). When we think that the best men have had the hardest usage in this world, we should hereby be reconciled to affliction. Those who were the greatest examples of suffering affliction were also the best and greatest examples of patience. We count those happy who endure (v. 11).

Job also is proposed as an example, v. 11. Under all he could bless God and what came to him in the end?

God accomplished those things for him which plainly prove that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy. The tender mercy of God is such that he will make his people an abundant amends for all their sufferings and afflictions. Let us serve our God, and endure our trials, as those who believe the end will crown all.

the world. he doth not resist you—The very patience of the Just one is abused by the wicked as an incentive to boldness in violent persecution, as if they may do as they please with impunity. God doth "resist the proud" (ch. 4:6); but Jesus as man, "as a sheep is dumb before the shearers, so He opened not His mouth": so His people are meek under persecution. The day will come when God will resist (lit., "set Himself in array against") His foes and theirs. 7. Be patient therefore—as judgment is so near (vss. 1, 3), ye may well afford to be "patient" after the example of the unresisting Just one (vs. 6). brethren—contrasted with the "rich" oppressors, vss. 1-6. unto the coming of the Lord—Christ, when the trial of your patience shall cease. husbandman waiteth for—i.e., patiently bears toils and delays through hope of the harvest at last. Its "preciousness" (cf. Ps. 126:6, "precious seed") will more than compensate for all the past. Cf. the same image, Galatians 6:3, 9. hath long patience for it—"over it," in respect to it. until he receive—"until it receive" [ALFORD]. Even if English Version be retained, the receiving of the early and latter rains is not to be understood as the object of his hope, but the harvest for which those rains are the necessary preliminary. The early rain fell at sowing time, about November or December; the latter rain, about March or April, to mature the grain for harvest. The latter rain that shall precede the coming spiritual harvest, will probably be another Pentecost-like effusion of the Holy Ghost. 8. coming . . . draweth nigh—The Greek expresses present time and a settled state. I Peter 4:7, "is at hand." We are to live in a continued state of expectancy of the Lord's coming, as an event always nigh. Nothing can more "stablish the heart" amidst present troubles than the realized expectation of His speedy coming. 9. Grudge not—rather "Murmur not"; "grumble not." The Greek is lit., "groan": a half-suppressed murmer of impatience and harsh judgment, not uttered aloud or freely. Having exhorted them to patience in bearing wrongs from the wicked, he now exhorts them to a forbearing spirit as to the offenses given by brethren. Christians, who bear the former patiently, sometimes are impatient at the latter, though much less grievous. lest . . . condemned—The best MS. authorities read, "judged." James refers to Matthew 7:1, "Judge not lest ye be judged." To "murmur against one another" is virtually to judge, and so to become liable to be judged. judge . . . before the door—referring to Matthew 24:33. The Greek is the same in both passages, and so ought to be translated here as there, "doors," plural. The phrase means "near at hand" (Gen. 4:7, which in the oldest interpretations [the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem] is explained, "thy sin is reserved unto the judgment of the world to come." Cf. "the everlasting doors" (Ps. 24:7, whence He shall come forth). The Lord's coming to destroy Jerusalem is primarily referred to; and ultimately, His coming again visibly to judgment. 10. the prophets—who were especially persecuted, and therefore were especially "blessed." example of suffering affliction—rather, simply, "of affliction." lit., "evil treatment." 11. count them happy—(Matt. 5:10). which endure—The oldest authorities read, "which have endured," which suits the sense better than English Version: "Those who in past days, like the prophets and Job, have endured trials." Such, not those who "have lived in pleasure and been wanton on the earth" (vs. 5), are "happy." patience—rather, "endurance," answering to "endure": the Greek words similarly corresponding. Distinct from the Greek word for "patience," vs. 10. The same word ought to be translated, "endurance," ch. 1:3. He here reverts to the subject which he began with. Job—This passage shows the history of him is concerning a real, not an imaginary person; otherwise his case could not be quoted as an example at all. Though he showed much of impatience, yet he always returned to this, that he committed himself wholly to God, and at last showed a perfect spirit of enduring submission. and have seen—(with the eyes of your mind). ALFORD translates from the old and genuine reading, "see also . . . ." The old reading is, however, capable of being translated as English Version. the end of the Lord—the end which the Lord gave. If Job had much to "endure," remember also Job's happy "end." Hence, learn, though much tried, to "endure to the end." that—ALFORD and others translate, "inasmuch as," "for." pitiful . . . of tender mercy—The former refers to the feeling; the latter, to the act. His pity is shown in not laying on the patient endurer more trials than he is able to bear; His mercy, in ging them before the judgment seats, chap. ii. 6, where, having no influence, and none to plead their cause, they were unjustly condemned and executed. And he doth not resist you. In the word he doth not resist the idea is included of defense in a court of justice. These poor righteous people had none to plead their cause; and if they had it would have been useless, as their oppressors had all power and all influence, and those who sat on these judgment seats were lost to all sense of justice and right. Some think that he doth not resist you should be referred to God; as if he had said, God permits you to go on in this way at present, but He will shortly awake to judgment, and destroy you as enemies of truth and righteousness.

7. Be patient therefore. Because God is coming to execute judgment on this wicked people, therefore be patient till He comes. He seems here to refer to the coming of the Lord to execute judgment on the Jewish nation, which shortly afterwards took place. The husbandman waiteth. The seed of your deliverance is already sown, and by and by the harvest of your salvation will take place. God's counsels will ripen in due time. The early and latter rain. The rain of seedtime and the rain of ripening before harvest. The first fell in Judea about the beginning of November, after the seed was sown; and the second, toward the end of April, when the ears were filling, and this prepared for a full harvest. Without these two rains the earth would have been unfruitful. These God had promised: "I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil," Deut. xi. 14.

8. Be ye also patient. Wait for God's deliverance, as you wait for His bounty in providence. Stablish your hearts. Take courage; do not sink under your trials. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. "Is at hand." He is already on His way to destroy this wicked people, to raze their city and Temple, and to destroy their polity forever; and this judgment will soon take place.

9. Grudge not. "Groan not"; grumble not; do not murmur through impatience; and let not any ill treatment which you receive induce you to vent your feelings in imprecations against your oppressors. Leave all this in the hands of God. Lest ye be condemned. By giving way to a spirit of this kind you will get under the condemnation of the wicked. The judge standeth before the door. His eye is upon everything that is wrong in you and every wrong that is done to you, and He is now entering into judgment with your oppressors.

10. Take . . . the prophets. The prophets who had spoken to their forefathers by the authority of God were persecuted by the very people to whom they delivered the divine message; but they suffered affliction and persecution with patience, commending their cause to Him who judgeth righteously; therefore, imitate their example.

11. We count them happy which endure. According to that saying of our blessed Lord, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you . . . for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you," Matt. v. 11, etc. Ye have heard of the patience of Job. Stripped of all his worldly possessions, deprived at a stroke of all his children, tortured in body with sore disease, tempted by the devil, harassed by his wife, and calumniated by his friends, he nevertheless held fast his integrity, resigned himself to the divine dispensations, and charged not God foolishly. And have seen the end of the Lord. The issue to which God brought all his afflictions and trials, giving him children, increasing his property, lengthening out his life, and multiplying to him every kind of spiritual and secular good. This was God's end with respect to him; but the devil's end was to drive him to despair, and to cause him to blaspheme his Maker. This mention of Job shows him to have been a real person, for a fictitious person would not have been produced as an example of any virtue so highly important as that of patience and perseverance. The end of the Lord is a Hebraism for the "issue" to which God brings any thing or business. The Lord is very pitiful,

MATTHEW HENRY

I. The sin of swearing is cautioned against, v. 12. Some have translated the words, before all things; they should not, in common conversation, before every thing they say, put an oath. All customary needless swearing is all along in scripture condemned, as a very grievous sin. Profane swearing was very customary among the Jews. Some of the looser sort of those who were called Christians might be guilty also of this.

1. Above all things, swear not; but how many are there who mind this the least of all things, and who make light of nothing so much as common profane swearing! It strikes most directly at the honour of God and most expressly throws contempt upon his name and authority. This sin has, of all sins, the least temptation to it. It is with most difficulty left off when once men are accustomed to it, therefore it should above all things he watched against. "Above all things swear not." But "all this is so far from forbidding necessary oaths that it is but to conform them, by preserving the due reverence of them." The Jews thought if they did but omit the great oath they were safe. But they grew so profane as to swear by the creature, as if it were God. On the other hand, those who swear commonly and profanely by the name of God do hereby put him upon the level with every common thing.

2. But let your yea be yea, and your nay nay; lest you fall into condemnation. Be sure to stand to your word, and be true to it, so as to give no occasion for your being suspected of falsehood. It is being suspected of falsehood that leads men to swearing.

II. As Christians we are taught to suit ourselves to the dispensations of Providence (v. 13). Our condition in this world is various; and our wisdom is to submit to its being so, and to behave as becomes us both in prosperity and under affliction. Afflictions should put us upon prayer, and prosperity should make us abound in praise. 1. In a day of affliction nothing is more seasonable than prayer. Times of affliction should be praying times. God sends afflictions, that we may be engaged to seek him early; and that those who at other times have neglected him may be brought to enquire after him. Afflictions naturally draw out complaints; and to whom should we complain but to God in prayer? It is necessary to exercise faith and hope under afflictions; and prayer is the appointed means both for obtaining and increasing these graces in us. 2. In a day of mirth and prosperity singing psalms is very proper and seasonable. This we are sure of, that the singing of psalms is a gospel ordinance, and that our joy should be holy joy, consecrated to God. Holy mirth becomes families and retirements, as well as public assemblies.

III. We have particular directions given as to sick persons, v. 14, 15. It lies upon sick people as a duty to send for ministers, and to desire their assistance and their prayers. It is the duty of ministers to pray over the sick, when thus desired and called for. The sick were to be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. When miracles ceased, this institution ceased also. Some have thought that it should not be wholly laid aside in any age, but that where there are extraordinary measures of faith in the person anointing, and in those who are anointed, an extraordinary blessing may attend the observance of this direction for the sick. There is one thing carefully to be observed here, that the saving of the sick is not ascribed to the anointing with oil, but to prayer, v. 15. Prayer over the sick must proceed from, and be accompanied with, a lively faith. There must be faith both in the person praying and in the person prayed for. And, if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. The great thing therefore we should beg of God for ourselves and others in the time of sickness is the pardon of sin. Sin is both the root of sickness and the sting of it. If sin be pardoned, either affliction shall be removed in mercy or we shall see there is mercy in the continuance of it.

IV. Christians are directed to confess their faults one to another, v. 16. The confession here required is that of Christians to one another. Where persons have injured one another. Where persons have tempted one another to sin, or have consented in the same evil actions. So far as confession is necessary to our reconciliation with such as are at variance with us, or for reparation of wrongs done to any, making our own spirits quiet and easy, so far we should be ready to confess our faults. And sometimes also it may be of good use to Christians to disclose their peculiar weaknesses and infirmities to one another. Those who make confession of their faults one to another should thereupon pray with and for one another.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

His giving a happy "end" to the trials [BENGEL]. 12. But above all—as swearing is utterly alien to the Christian meek "endurance" just recommended. swear not—through impatience, to which trials may tempt you (vss. 10, 11). In contrast to this stands the proper use of the tongue, vs. 13. James here refers to Matthew 5:34, etc. let your yea be yea—Do not use oaths in your everyday conversation, but let a simple affirmative or denial be deemed enough to establish your word. condemnation—lit., "judgment," viz., of "the Judge" who "standeth before the doors" (vs. 9). 13. afflicted—referring to the "suffering affliction" (vs. 10). let him pray—not "swear" in rash impatience. merry—joyous in mind. sing psalms—of praise. Paul and Silas sang psalms even in affliction. 14. let him call for the elders—not some one of the elders, as Roman Catholics interpret it, to justify their usage in extreme unction. The prayers of the elders over the sick would be much the same as though the whole Church which they represent should pray [BENGEL]. anointing him with oil—The usage which Christ committed to His apostles was afterwards continued with laying on of hands, as a token of the highest faculty of medicine in the Church, just as we find in I Corinthians 6:2 the Church's highest judicial function. Now that the miraculous gift of healing has been withdrawn for the most part, to use the sign where the reality is wanting would be unmeaning superstition. Cf. other apostolic usages now discontinued rightly, I Corinthians 11:4-15; 16:20. "Let them use oil who can by their prayers obtain recovery for the sick: let those who cannot do this, abstain from using the empty sign" [WHITAKER]. Romish extreme unction is administered to those whose life is despaired of, to heal the soul, whereas James' unction was to heal the body. CARDINAL CAJETAN (Commentary) admits that James cannot refer to extreme unction. Oil in the East, and especially among the Jews (see the Talmud, Jerusalem and Babylon), was much used as a curative agent. It was also a sign of the divine grace. Hence it was an appropriate sign in performing miraculous cures. in the name of the Lord—by whom alone the miracle was performed: men were but the instruments. 15. prayer—He does not say the oil shall save: it is but the symbol. save—plainly not as Rome says, "save" the soul, but heal "the sick": as the words, "the Lord shall raise him up," prove. So the same Greek is translated, "made (thee) whole," Matthew 9:21, 22. and if . . . sins—for not all who are sick are so because of some special sins. Here a case is supposed of one visited with sickness for special sins. have committed—lit., "be in a state of having committed sins, i.e., be under the consequences of sins committed. they—rather, "it": his having committed sins shall be forgiven him. The connection of sin and sickness is implied in Isaiah 33:24; Matthew 9:2-5; John 5:14. The absolution of the sick, retained in the Church of England, refers to the sins which the sick man confesses (vs. 16) and repents of, whereby outward scandal has been given to the Church and the cause of religion; not to sins in their relation to God, the only Judge. 16. The oldest authorities read, "Confess, THEREFORE . . ." Not only in the particular case of sickness, but universally confess. faults—your falls and offenses, in relation to one another. The word is not the same as sins. Matthew 5:23, 24; Luke 17:4, illustrate the precept here. one to another—not to the priest, as Rome insists. The Church of England recommends in certain cases. Rome compels confession in all cases. Confession is desirable in the case of (1) wrong done to a neighbor; (2) when under a troubled conscience we ask counsel of a godly minister or friend as to how we may obtain God's forgiveness and strength to sin no more, or when we desire their intercessory prayers for us ("Pray for one another"): "Confession may be made to anyone who can pray" [BENGEL]; (3) open confession of sin before the Church and the world, in token of penitence. Not auricular confession. that ye may be healed—of your bodily sicknesses. Also that, if your sickness be the punishment of sin, the latter being forgiven on intercessory prayer, "ye may be healed" of the former. Also, that ye may be healed spiritually. effectual—intense and fervent, not "wavering" (ch. 1:6), [BEZA]. "When energized" by the Spirit, as those were who performed miracles [HAMMOND]. This suits the collocation of the Greek words and the sense well. A righteous man's prayer is always heard generally, but his particular request for the healing of another was then likely to be granted when he was one possessing a special charism of the Spirit. ALFORD translates, "Availeth much in its working." The and of tender mercy. Very pitiful might be rendered "of much sympathy."

12. Above all things . . . swear not. What relation this exhortation can have to the subject in question, I confess I cannot see. It may not have been designed to stand in any connection, but to be a separate piece of advice, as in the several cases which immediately follow. That the Jews were notoriously guilty of common swearing is allowed on all hands; and that swearing by heaven, earth, Jerusalem, the Temple, the altar, different parts of the body, was not considered by them as binding oaths has been sufficiently proved. Rabbi Akiba taught that "a man might swear with his lips, and annul it in his heart; and then the oath was not binding." See the notes on Matt. v. 33. Let your yea be yea. Do not pretend to say yea with your lips, and annul it in your heart; let the yea or the nay which you express be bona fide such. Do not imagine that any mental reservation can cancel any such expressions of obligation in the sight of God. Lest ye fall into condemnation. "Lest you fall under judgment."

13. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. The Jews taught that the meaning of the ordinance, Lev. xiii. 45, which required the leper to cry, "Unclean! unclean!" was "that thus making known his calamity, the people might be led to offer up prayers to God in his behalf." They taught also that when any sickness or affliction entered a family they should go to the wise men and implore their prayers.

14. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders. This was also a Jewish maxim. Rabbi Simeon, in Sepher Hachaiyim, said: "What should a man do who goes to visit the sick? Ans. He who studies to restore the health of the body should first lay the foundation in the health of the soul. The wise men have said, No healing is equal to that which comes from the word of God and prayer. Rabbi Phineas, the son of Chamma, hath said, 'When sickness or disease enters into a man's family, let him apply to a wise man, who will implore mercy in his behalf.'"

15. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick. That is, God will often make these the means of a sick man's recovery; but there often are cases where faith and prayer are both ineffectual, because God sees it will be prejudicial to the patient's salvation to be restored; and therefore all faith and prayer on such occasions should be exerted on this ground: "If it be most for Thy glory, and the eternal good of this man's soul, let him be restored; if otherwise, Lord, pardon, purify him, and take him to Thy glory." And if he have committed sins. So as to have occasioned his present malady, they shall be forgiven him; for being the cause of the affliction, it is natural to conclude that, if the effect be to cease, the cause must be removed. We find that in the miraculous restoration to health under the powerful hand of Christ, the sin of the party is generally said to be forgiven, and this also before the miracle was wrought on the body. Hence there was a maxim among the Jews, and it seems to be founded in common sense and reason, that God never restores a man miraculously to health till He has pardoned his sins; because it would be incongruous for God to exert His miraculous power in saving a body the soul of which was in a state of condemnation to eternal death because of the crimes it had committed against its Maker and Judge.

16. Confess your faults one to another. This is a good general direction to Christians who endeavor to maintain among themselves the communion of saints. This social confession tends much to humble the soul and to make it watchful. The effectual fervent prayer. The words signify "energetic supplication," or such a prayer as is suggested to the soul and wrought in it by a divine energy. When God designs to do some particular work in His Church, He pours out on His followers the spirit of grace and supplication; and this He does sometimes when He is about to do some especial work for an individual. When such a power of prayer is granted, faith should be immediately called into exercise, that the blessing may be given; the spirit of prayer is the proof that the power of God is present to heal. Long prayers give no particular evidence of divine inspiration. The

V. The great advantage and efficacy of prayer are declared and proved, v. 17, 18. He who prays must be a righteous man. The prayer itself must be a fervent, in-wrought, well-wrought prayer. Such prayer avails much. It is of great advantage to ourselves, it may be very beneficial to our friends, and we are assured of its being acceptable to God. Elijah was a man of like passions with us. He was a zealous good man and a very great man, but he had his infirmities. In prayer we must not look to the merit of man, but to the grace of God. He prayed earnestly, or, as it is in the original, in prayer he prayed. It is not enough to say a prayer, but we must pray in prayer. Elijah prayed that it might not rain; and God heard him, so that it rained not on the earth for the space of three years and six months. Again he prayed, and the heaven gave rain, &c. This is recorded for encouragement even to ordinary Christians to be instant and earnest in prayer. Where there may not be so much of miracle in God's answering our prayers, yet there may be as much of grace.

VI. The epistle concludes with an exhortation to do all we can to promote the conversion and salvation of others, v. 19, 20. "If any err, and one convert him, let him be who he will that does so good an office for another, he is therein an instrument of saving a soul from death." Be they ever so great, you must not be afraid to show them their error; and, be they ever so weak and little, you must not disdain to make them wiser and better. If they err from the truth, whether it be in opinion or practice, you must endeavour to bring them again to the rule. Errors in judgment and in life generally go together. If we are instrumental in the conversion of any, we are said to convert them, though this be the work of God. And, if we can do no more towards the conversion of sinners, yet we may do this—pray for the grace and Spirit of God to convert and change them. He that is said to err from the truth in v. 19 is described as erring in his way in v. 20 and we cannot be said to convert any merely by altering their opinions, unless we can bring them to correct and amend their ways. This is conversion. He who thus converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death. By such conversion of heart and life, a multitude of sins shall be hid. Though our sins are many, even a multitude, yet they may be hid or pardoned. Let people contrive to cover their sin as they will, there is no way effectually to hide it but by forsaking it. Some make the sense of this text to be, that conversion shall prevent a multitude of sins; and it is a truth beyond dispute that many sins are prevented in the party converted, many also may be prevented in others that he may have an influence upon.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

"righteous" is one himself careful to avoid "faults," and showing his faith by works (ch. 2:24). 17. Elias . . . like passions as we—therefore it cannot be said that he was so raised above us as to afford no example applicable to common mortals like ourselves. prayed earnestly—lit., "prayed with prayer": Hebraism for prayed intensely. Cf. Luke 22:15, "With desire I have desired," i.e., earnestly desired. ALFORD is wrong in saying, Elias' prayer that it might not rain "is not even hinted at in the Old Testament history." In I Kings 17:1 it is plainly implied, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." His prophecy of the fact was according to a divine intimation given to him in answer to prayer. In jealousy for God's honor (I Kings 19:10), and being of one mind with God in his abhorrence of apostasy, he prayed that the national idolatry should be punished with a national judgment, drought; and on Israel's profession of repentance he prayed for the removal of the visitation, as is implied in I Kings 18:39-42: cf. Luke 4:25. three years . . .—Cf. I Kings 18:1, "The third year," viz., from Elijah's going to Zarephath; the prophecy (vs. 1) was probably about five or six months previously. 18. prayed . . . and—i.e., "and so." Mark the connection between the prayer and its accomplishment. her fruit—her usual and due fruit, heretofore withheld on account of sin. Three and a half years is the time also that the two witnesses prophesy who "have power to shut and open heaven that it rain not." 19. The blessing of reclaiming an erring sinner by the mutual consent and intercessory prayer just recommended. do err—more lit., "be led astray." the truth—the Gospel doctrine and precepts. one—lit., "any"; as "any" before. Everyone ought to seek the salvation of everyone [BENGEL]. 20. Let him—the converted—know—for his comfort, and the encouragement of others to do likewise. shall save—future. The salvation of the one so converted shall be manifested hereafter. shall hide a multitude of sins—not his own, but the sins of the converted. The Greek verb in the middle voice requires this. Proverbs 10:12 refers to charity "covering" the sins of others before men; James to one's effecting by the conversion of another that that other's sins be covered before God, viz., with Christ's atonement. He effects this by making the convert partaker in the Christian covenant for the remission of all sins. Though this hiding of sins was included in the previous "shall save," James expresses it to mark in detail the greatness of the blessing conferred on the penitent through the converter's instrumentality, and to incite others to the same good deed.

following was a maxim among the ancient Jews, "The prayers of the righteous are short." This is exemplified in almost every instance in the Old Testament.

17. Elias was a man subject to like passions. This was Elijah, and a consistency between the names of the same persons as expressed in the Old and the New Testaments should be kept up. The word homoiopathes signifies of "the same constitution," a human being just as ourselves are. And he prayed earnestly. "He prayed with prayer"; a Hebraism for "He prayed fervently." That it might not rain. See this history, 1 Kings xvii. 1 ff. And it rained not on the earth. "On that land," viz., the land of Judea; for this drought did not extend elsewhere. Three years and six months. This is the term mentioned by our Lord, Luke iv. 25; but this is not specified in the original history. In 1 Kings xviii. 1 it is said, "In the third year" "the word of the Lord came to Elijah," that is, concerning the rain; but this third year is to be computed from the time of his going to live at Zarephath, which happened many days after the drought began, as is plain from this, that he remained at the brook Cherith till it was dried up, and then went to Zarephath, in the country of Zidon; 1 Kings xvii. 7-9. Therefore the three years and six months must be computed from his announcing the drought, at which time that judgment commenced.

18. And he prayed again. This second prayer is not mentioned in the history in express words. But as in 1 Kings xviii. 42, it is said, "He cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees," that was probably the time of the second praying, namely, that rain might come, as this was the proper posture of prayer.

19. Err from the truth—stray away from the gospel of Christ; and one convert him—reclaim him from his error and bring him back to the fold of Christ.

20. Let him know. Let him duly consider, for his encouragement, that he who is the instrument of converting a sinner shall save a soul from eternal death, and a body from ruin, and shall hide a multitude of sins; for in being the means of his conversion we bring him back to God, who, in His infinite mercy, hides or blots out the numerous sins which he had committed during the time of his backsliding. It is not the man's sins who is the means of his conversion, but the sins of the backslider, which are here said to be hidden.

VI. Conclusion (5:12-14)

Two epistles we have enrolled in the sacred canon of the Scripture written by Peter. When our Savior called his apostles and gave them their commission, he nominated Peter first in the list; and by his behavior toward Peter, he seems to have distinguished him as a special favorite among the twelve. Many instances of our Lord's affection to him, both during his life and after his resurrection, are upon record. Peter himself modestly styles himself an "apostle of Jesus Christ"; and, when he writes to the presbyters of the church, he humbly places himself in the same rank with them: "The elders who are among you I exhort, who am also an elder" (5:1).

The design of this first epistle is (1) to explain more fully the doctrines of Christianity to these newly converted Jews; (2) to direct and persuade them to a holy conversation; (3) to prepare them for sufferings. This seems to be his principal intention, for he has something to this purport in every chapter.

CHAPTER 1

Verses 1, 2

I. The author of it, described, 1. By his name—Peter. Jesus Christ gave him the surname of Peter, which signifies a rock, as a commendation of his faith. 2. By his office—an apostle of Jesus Christ. It signifies the highest office in the Christian church. Peter, (1) Asserts his own character as an apostle. To pretend to what we have not is hypocrisy; and to deny what we have is ingratitude. (2) He mentions his apostolical function as his warrant and call to write this epistle to these people.

II. The persons to whom this epistle was addressed are described,

1. By their external condition—Strangers dispersed throughout Pontus, Galatia, &c. At present their circumstances were poor and afflicted. The best of God's servants may, through the hardships of times, be dispersed about, and forced to leave their native countries. The value of good people ought not to be estimated by their present external condition.

Vss. 1-25. Address to the Elected of the Godhead: Thanksgiving for the Living Hope to Which We Are Begotten, Producing Joy amidst Sufferings: This Salvation an Object of Deepest Interest to Prophets and to Angels: Its Costly Price a Motive to Holiness and Love, as We Are Born Again of the Ever-abiding Word of God.

1. Peter—Greek form of Cephas, man of rock. an apostle of Jesus Christ—"He who preaches otherwise than as a messenger of Christ, is not to be heard; if he preach as such, then it is all one as if thou didst hear Christ speaking in thy presence" [Luther]. to the strangers scattered—lit., "sojourners of the dispersion"; only in John 7:35 and James 1:1, in New Testament, and LXX, Psalm 147:2, "the outcasts of Israel"; the designation peculiarly given to the Jews in their dispersed state throughout the world ever since the Babylonian captivity. These he, as the apostle of the circumcision, primarily addresses, but not in the limited temporal sense only; he regards their temporal condition as a shadow of their spiritual calling to be strangers and pilgrims on earth, looking for the heavenly Jerusalem as their home. So the Gentile Christians, as the spiritual Israel, are included secondarily, as having the same high calling. He (ch. 1:14; 2:10; 4:3) plainly refers to Christian Gentiles (cf. vs. 17; ch. 2:11). Christians, if they rightly consider their calling, must never settle themselves here, but feel themselves travellers. The order of the provinces is that in which they would be viewed by one writing from the east from Babylon (ch. 5:13); from northeast southwards to Galatia, southeast to Cappadocia, then Asia, and back to Bithynia, west of Pontus. Contrast the order, Acts 2:9. He now was ministering to those same peoples as he preached to on Pentecost: "Parthians, Medes, Elamites, dwellers in Mesopotamia and Judea," i.e., the Jews now subject to the Parthians, whose capital was Babylon, where he labored in person; "dwellers in Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Bithynia," the Asiatic dispersion derived from Babylon, whom he ministers to by letter. 2.

1. Peter, an apostle. Simon Peter, called also Cephas. He was a fisherman, son of Jonah, brother of Andrew, and born at Bethsaida; and one of the first disciples of our Lord. The strangers scattered throughout. Jews first, who had believed the gospel in the different countries here specified; and converted Gentiles also. Though the word strangers may refer to all truly religious people, yet the inscription may have a special reference to those who were driven by persecution to seek refuge in those heathen provinces to which the influence of their persecuting brethren did not extend.

Pontus. An ancient kingdom of Asia Minor, originally a part of Cappadocia. Galatia. The ancient name of a province of Asia Minor. Cappadocia. An ancient kingdom of Asia, comprehending all the country lying between Mount Taurus and the Euxine Sea. Asia. That province of Asia Minor of which Ephesus was the capital. It appears that it is in this sense that it is used here by Peter, because Pontus, Galatia, and Bithynia, are comprised in the provinces of Asia Minor. Bithynia. An ancient kingdom of Asia, formerly called Mysia.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. They are described by their spiritual condition. (1) Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. Election is either to an office, or it is to the enjoyment of special privileges, or it is to eternal salvation. This is the election here spoken of. [1] This election is said to be according to the foreknowledge of God. Foreknowledge may be taken in two ways: First, For mere prescience, foresight, or understanding, that such a thing will be, before it comes to pass. Thus a mathematician certainly foreknows that at such a time there will be an eclipse. But such a prescience is not the cause why anything is so or so. Secondly, Foreknowledge sometimes signifies counsel, appointment, and approbation. The death of Christ was not only foreseen, but foreordained, as v. 20. Take it thus here; so the sense is, elect according to the counsel, ordination, and free grace of God. [2] It is added, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. In the affair of man's redemption, election is ascribed to the Father, as reconciliation is to the Son and sanctification to the Holy Ghost.

(2) They were elect through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. Every elect person must be sanctified by the Spirit, and justified by the blood of Jesus. By sanctification here understand living to God in all the duties of a Christian life, which is here summed up in one word, obedience. By the Spirit is meant the Holy Ghost, the author of sanctification. Unto obedience. This word denotes the end of sanctification, which is, to bring rebellious sinners to obedience again, You have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, v. 22.

(3) They were elected also to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus. Here is a manifest allusion to the typical sprinklings of blood under the law. The blood of Christ, the grand and all-sufficient sacrifice, was not only shed, but must be sprinkled and communicated to every one of these elect Christians. All that are chosen to eternal life as the end are chosen to obedience as the way. Unless a person be sanctified by the Spirit, and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, there will be no true obedience in the life.

III. The salutation follows. The blessings desired for them are grace and peace. Grace—the free favour of God, with all its proper effects. Peace. All sorts of peace may be here intended: peace with God, with the feeling of it in our own consciences. The request or prayer, in relation to these blessings—that they may be multiplied. He wishes them the continuation, the increase, and the perfection of them. The best blessings we can desire for ourselves, or one for another, are grace and peace, with the multiplication of them. Peace cannot be enjoyed where there is no true grace; first grace, then peace. Peace without grace is mere stupidity; but grace may be true where there is for a time no actual peace. Christ was once in an agony. The increase of grace and peace, as well as the first gift of them, is from God.

Verses 3–5

I. A thanksgiving to God.

1. The duty performed, which is blessing God.

2. The object of this blessing described by his relation to Jesus Christ: The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here are three names of one person, denoting his threefold office. He is Lord, a universal king. Jesus, a priest or Saviour. Christ, a prophet.

3. The reasons that oblige us to this duty of blessing God, which are comprised in his abundant mercy. He hath begotten us again, and this deserves our thanksgiving to God, especially if we consider the fruit it produces in us, which is that excellent grace of hope, a lively hope, a living, durable hope, as that hope must needs be that has such a solid foundation as the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. A good Christian's condition is never so bad but he has great reason still to bless God. In our prayers and praises we should address God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; it is only through him that we and our services are accepted. The best of men owe their best blessings to the abundant mercy of God. All the evil in the world is from man's sin, but all the good in it is from God's mercy. We subsist entirely upon divine mercy. Regeneration produces a lively hope of eternal life. Those who are begotten to a new and spiritual life are begotten to a new and spiritual hope. The hope of a Christian has this excellency, it is a living hope. The hope of eternal life in a true Christian is a hope that keeps him alive, quickens him, supports him, and conducts him to heaven. The delusive hopes of the unregenerate are vain and perishing; the hypocrite and his hope expire and die both together. The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is the ground or foundation of a Christ-

foreknowledge—foreordaining love (vs. 20), inseparable from God's foreknowledge, the origin from which, and pattern according to which, election takes place. Acts 2:23, and Romans 11:2, prove "foreknowledge" to be foreordination. God's foreknowledge is not the perception of any ground of action out of Himself; still in it liberty is comprehended, and all absolute constraint debarred [ANSELM in STEIGER]. For so the Son of God was "foreknown" (so the Greek for "foreordained," vs. 20) to be the sacrificial Lamb, not against, or without His will, but His will rested in the will of the Father; this includes self-conscious action; nay, even cheerful acquiescense. The Hebrew and Greek "know" include approval and acknowledging as one's own. The Hebrew marks the oneness of loving and choosing, by having one word for both, bachar (LXX, Greek, hairetizo). Peter descends from the eternal "election" of God through the new birth, to the believer's "sanctification," that from this he might again raise them through the consideration of their new birth to a "living hope" of the heavenly "inheritance" [HEIDEGGER]. The divine three are introduced in their respective functions in redemption. through—Greek, "in"; the element in which we are elected. The "election" of God realized and manifested itself "IN" their sanctification. Believers are "sanctified through the offering of Christ once for all" (Heb. 10:10). "Thou must believe and know that thou art holy; not, however, through thine own piety, but through the blood of Christ" [LUTHER]. This is the true sanctification of the Spirit, to obey the Gospel, to trust in Christ [BULLINGER]. sanctification—the Spirit's setting apart of the saint as consecrated to God. The execution of God's choice (Gal. 1:4). God the Father gives us salvation by gratuitous election; the Son earns it by His blood-shedding; the Holy Spirit applies the merit of the Son to the soul by the Gospel word [CALVIN]. Cf. Numbers 6:24-26, the Old Testament triple blessing. unto obedience—the result or end aimed at by God as respects us, the obedience which consists in faith, and that which flows from faith; "obeying the truth through the Spirit" (vs. 22). Romans 1:5, "obedience to the faith," and obedience the fruit of faith. sprinkling . . .—not in justification through the atonement once for all, which is expressed in the previous clauses, but (as the order proves) the daily being sprinkled by Christ's blood, and so cleansed from all sin, which is the privilege of one already justified and "walking in the light." Grace—the source of "peace." be multiplied—still further than already. Daniel 4:1, "Ye have now peace and grace, but still not in perfection; therefore, ye must go on increasing until the old Adam be dead" [LUTHER]. 3. He begins, like Paul, in opening his Epistles with giving thanks to God for the greatness of the salvation; herein he looks forward (1) into the future (vss. 3-9); (2) backward into the past (vss. 10-12) [ALFORD]. Blessed—A distinct Greek word (eulogetos, "Blessed BE") is used of God, from that used of man (eulogemenos, "Blessed IS"). Father—This whole Epistle accords with the Lord's prayer; "Father," ch. 1:3, 14, 17, 23; 2:2; "Our," ch. 1:4, end; "In heaven," ch. 1:4; "Hallowed be Thy name," ch. 1:15, 16; 3:15; "Thy kingdom come," ch. 2:9; "Thy will be done," ch. 2:15; 3:17; 4:2, 19; "daily bread," ch. 5:7; "forgiveness of sins," ch. 4:8, 1; "temptation," ch. 4:12; "deliverance," ch. 4:18 [BENGEL]; cf. ch. 3:7 and 4:7, for allusions to prayer. Barak, Hebrew "bless," is lit. "kneel." God, as the original source of blessing, must be blessed through all His works. abundant—Greek, "much," "full." That God's "mercy" should reach us, guilty and enemies, proves its fulness. "Mercy" met our misery; "grace," our guilt. begotten us again—of the Spirit by the word (vs. 23); whereas we were children of wrath naturally, and dead in sins. unto—so that we have. lively—Greek, "living." It has life in itself, gives life, and looks for life as its object [DE WETTE]. Living is a favorite expression of Peter (vs. 23; ch. 2:4, 5). He delights in contemplating life overcoming death in the believer. Faith and love follow hope (vss. 8, 21, 22). "(Unto) a lively hope" is further explained by "(To) an inheritance incorruptible . . . fadeth not away," and "(unto) salvation . . . ready to be revealed in the last time." I prefer with BENGEL and STEIGER to join as in Greek, "Unto a hope living (possessing life and vitality) through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." Faith, the subjective means of the spiritual resurrection of the soul, is wrought by the same power whereby Christ was raised from the dead. Baptism is an objective means (ch. 3:21). Its moral fruit is a new life. The connection of our sonship with the resurrection

ADAM CLARKE

2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God. If the apostle had directed his letter to persons elected to eternal life, no one, as Drs. Lardner and Macknight properly argue, could have received such a letter, because no one could have been sure of his election in this way till he had arrived in heaven. But the persons to whom the apostle wrote were all, with propriety, said to be elect according to the foreknowledge of God; because, agreeably to the original purpose of God, discovered in the prophetical writings, Jews and Gentiles, indiscriminately, were called to be the visible Church, and entitled to all the privileges of the people of God, on their believing the gospel.

Through sanctification of the Spirit—through the renewing and purifying influences of His Spirit on their souls, unto obedience—to engage and enable them to yield themselves up to all holy obedience, the foundation of all which is the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ—the atoning blood of Jesus Christ which was typified by the sprinkling of the blood of sacrifices under the law, in allusion to which it is called the "blood of sprinkling."

3. Blessed be the God and Father. "Blessed be God even the Father" or "Blessed be God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Begotten us again unto a lively hope. I think the apostle has a reference here to his own case, and that of his fellow apostles, at the time that Christ was taken by the Jews and put to death. Previously to this time they had strong confidence that He was the Messiah, and that it was He who should redeem Israel; but when they found that He actually expired upon the Cross, and was buried, they appear to have lost all hope of the great things which before they had in prospect. This is feelingly expressed by the two disciples whom our Lord, after His resurrection, overtook on the road going to Emmaus; see Luke xxiv. 13-24. And the hope that with them died with their Master, and seemed to be buried in His grave, was restored by the certainty of His resurrection. The expressions, however, may include more particulars than what are above specified; as none can inherit eternal life except those who are children in the heavenly family, and none are children but those who are born again, then Peter may be considered as laying here the foundation of the hope of eternal life in the regeneration of the soul.

ian's hope. There being an inseparable union between Christ and his flock, they rise by virtue of his resurrection as a head.

II. The apostle goes on to describe that life under the notion of an inheritance. He tells them they were new-born to a new inheritance, infinitely better than what they had lost. They are put in mind of a noble inheritance reserved in heaven for them.

1. Heaven is the undoubted inheritance of all the children of God. God giveth his gifts unto all, but the inheritance to none but his children. This inheritance is not our purchase, but our Father's gift; not wages that we merit, but the effect of grace.

2. The incomparable excellencies of this inheritance. It is incorruptible, in which respect it is like its Maker. All corruption is a change from better to worse, but heaven is without change and without end; the house is eternal in the heavens. This inheritance is undefiled. Sin and misery have no place there. It fadeth not away, but always retains its vigour and beauty.

"Reserved in heaven for you." It is certain, a reversion in another world, safely kept and preserved till we come to the possession of it. The persons for whom it is reserved are described by their character: everyone that is begotten again to a lively hope.

III. The apostle supposes some doubt or uneasiness whether they might not possibly fall short by the way. He answers that they should be kept and preserved from all such destructive temptations as would prevent their safe arrival at eternal life. The heirs of heaven shall certainly be conducted safely to the possession of it. The blessing here promised is preservation: You are kept; the author of it is God; the means in us made use of for that end are our own faith and care; the end to which we are preserved is salvation; and the time when we shall see the safe end and issue of all is the last time. Their being kept implies both danger and deliverance; they may be attacked, but shall not be overcome. The preservation of the regenerate to eternal life is the effect of God's power. Preservation by God's power does not supersede man's endeavour and care for his own salvation. Faith is a sovereign preservative of the soul through a state of grace unto a state of glory. This salvation is ready to be revealed in the last time. It is now prepared and reserved in heaven for them. Though it be made ready now, yet it is in a great measure hidden and unrevealed at present, even to the heirs of salvation themselves. It shall be fully and completely revealed in the last time. Life and immortality are now brought to light by the gospel, but this life will be revealed more gloriously at death, when the soul shall be admitted into the presence of Christ, and behold his glory.

Verses 6–9

The first word, wherein, refers to the apostle's foregoing discourse about the excellency of their present state, and their grand expectations for the future, v. 6.

I. Several things in mitigation of their sorrows. Every sound Christian has always something wherein he may greatly rejoice. The chief joy of a good Christian arises from things spiritual and heavenly. His joy arises from his treasure, which consists of matters of great value, and the title to them is sure. The best Christians may yet be in great heaviness through manifold temptations. All sorts of adversities are temptations, or trials. These seldom go singly, but are manifold, and come from different quarters, the effect of all which is great heaviness. The afflictions and sorrows of good people are but for a season. The shortness of any affliction does much abate the heaviness of it. Great heaviness is often necessary to a Christian's good: If need be, you are in heaviness. God does not afflict his people willingly, but acts with judgment, in proportion to our needs. These troubles, that lie heavy, never come upon us but when we have need, and never stay any longer than needs must.

II. He expresses the end of their afflictions and the ground of their joy under them, v. 7. The afflictions of serious Christians are designed for the trial of their faith. God's design in afflicting his people is their probation, not their destruction. This trial is made upon faith principally, because the trial of this appears also in Luke 20:36; Acts 13:33. 4. To an inheritance—the object of our "hope" (vs. 3), which is therefore not a dead, but a "living" hope. The inheritance is the believer's already by title, being actually assigned to him; the entrance on its possession is future, and hoped for as a certainty. Being "begotten again" as a "son," he is an "heir," as earthly fathers beget children who shall inherit their goods. The inheritance is "salvation" (vss. 5, 9); "the grace to be brought at the revelation of Christ" (vs. 13); "a crown of glory that fadeth not away." incorruptible—not having within the germs of death. Negations of the imperfections which meet us on every side here are the chief means of conveying to our minds a conception of the heavenly things which "have not entered into the heart of man," and which we have not faculties now capable of fully knowing. undefiled—not stained as earthly goods by sin, either in the acquiring, or in the using of them; unsusceptible of any stain. that fadeth not away—Contrast vs. 24. Even the most delicate part of the heavenly inheritance, its bloom, continues unfading. "In substance incorruptible; in purity undefiled; in beauty unfading" [ALFORD]. reserved—kept up (Col. 1:5, "laid up for you in heaven," II Tim. 4:8); Greek perfect, expressing a fixed and abiding state, "which has been and is reserved." in heaven—Greek, "in the heavens," where it can neither be destroyed nor plundered. It does not follow that, because it is now laid up in heaven, it shall not hereafter be on earth also. for you—It is secure not only in itself from all misfortune, but also from all alienation, so that no other can receive it in your stead. He had said US (vs. 3; he now turns his address to the elect in order to encourage and exhort them. 5. kept—Greek, "who are being guarded." He answers the objection, Of what use is it that salvation is "reserved" for us in heaven, as in a calm secure haven, when we are tossed in the world as on a troubled sea in the midst of a thousand wrecks? [CALVIN]. As the inheritance is "kept" (vs. 4) safely for the far distant "heirs," so must they be "guarded" in their persons so as to be sure of reaching it. Neither shall it be wanting to them, nor they to it. "We are guarded in the world as our inheritance is kept in heaven." This defines the "you" of vs. 4. by—Greek, "in." The believer lives spiritually in God, and in virtue of His power, and God lives in him. "In" marks that the cause is inherent in the means, working organically through them with living influence, so that the means, in so far as the cause works organically through them, exist also in the cause. The power of God which guards the believer is no external force working upon him from without with mechanical necessity, but the spiritual power of God in which he lives, and with whose Spirit he is clothed. unto salvation—the final end of the new birth. "Salvation," not merely accomplished for us in title by Christ, and made over to us on our believing, but actually manifested, and finally completed. ready to be revealed—When Christ shall be revealed, it shall be revealed. The preparations for it are being made now, and began when Christ came: "All things are now ready"; the salvation is already accomplished, and only waits the Lord's time to be manifested: He "is ready to judge." last time—the last day, closing the day of grace; the day of judgment, of redemption, of the restitution of all things, and of perdition of the ungodly. 6. Wherein—in which prospect of final salvation. greatly rejoice—"exult with joy": "are exuberantly glad." Salvation is realized by faith (vs. 9) as a thing so actually present as to cause exulting joy in spite of existing afflictions. for a season—Greek, "for a little time." if need be—"if it be God's will that it should be so" [ALFORD], for not all believers are afflicted. One need not invite or lay a cross on himself, but only "take up" the cross which God imposes ("his cross"). ye are in heaviness—Greek, "ye were grieved." The "grieved" is regarded as past, the "exculting joy" present. Because the realized joy of the coming salvation makes the present grief seem as a thing of the past. At the first shock of affliction ye were grieved, but now by anticipation ye rejoice, regarding the present grief as past. through—Greek, "IN": the element in which the grief has place. manifold—many and of various kinds (ch. 4:12, 13). temptations—"trials" testing your faith. 7. Aim of the "temptations." trial—testing, proving. That your faith so proved "may be found (aorist; once for all, as the result of its being proved on the judgment-day) unto (eventuating in) praise . . ." viz., the praise to be bestowed by the Judge. than that of gold—rather "than gold."

ADAM CLARKE

4. To an inheritance. Called an inheritance because it belongs to the children of God.

Incorruptible. It has no principles of dissolution or decay in it. Undefiled. Nothing impure can enter it. Fadeth not away. "It cannot wither"; it is always in bloom—a metaphor taken from those flowers that never lose their hue nor their fragrance. Reserved in heaven. Such a place as that described above is not to be expected on earth.

5. Who are kept. Who are "defended as in a fortress or castle." There is a remarkable correspondence between the two verbs used in this sentence. The verb tereo signifies to "keep, watch, guard"; and phroureo signifies to "keep as under a military guard." The true disciples of Christ are under the continual watchful care of God, and the inheritance is "guarded" for them.

By the power of God. By the mighty and miracle-working power of God. But this power of God is interested in the behalf of the soul by faith. To believe is our work; the exertion of the almighty power is of God.

Ready to be revealed. Or rather, "prepared to be revealed." The inheritance is prepared for you; but its glories will not be revealed till the last time—till you have done with life and passed through your probation, having held fast faith and a good conscience. Some by salvation understand the deliverance of the Christians from the sack-age of Jerusalem, the end of the Jewish polity being called the last time; others suppose it to refer to the day of judgment, and the glorification of the body and soul in heaven.

6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice. Some refer wherein to the "salvation" mentioned above; others, to the "last time" in v. 5; others think that it applies to the being kept by the power of God through faith; and others, that it refers to all the preceding advantages and privileges. It was in the present salvation of God that they rejoiced or gloried, though not without having an eye to the great recompense of reward. Though now for a season. "A little while yet"—during your pilgrimage here below, which is but a point when compared with eternity. If need be. "If it be necessary"—if your situation and circumstances be such that you are exposed to trials and persecutions which you cannot avoid, unless God were to work a miracle for your deliverance, which would not be for your ultimate good, as He purposes to turn all your trials and difficulties to your advantage. Those to whom Peter wrote rejoiced greatly, "danced for joy," while they were "grieved" with "various trials."

7. That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold. As by the action of fire gold is separated from all alloy and heterogeneous mixtures, and is proved to be gold by its enduring the action of the fire without losing anything of its nature, weight, is, in effect, the trial of all that is good in us. Christ prays for this apostle, that his faith might not fail; if that be supported, all the rest will stand firm. A tried faith is much more precious than tried gold. Here is a double comparison of faith and gold. Gold is the most valuable and durable of all the metals; so is faith among the Christian virtues; it lasts till it brings the soul to heaven. The trial of faith is much more precious than the trial of gold. Gold does not increase and multiply by trial in the fire, it rather grows less; but faith is established and multiplied by the afflictions that it meets with. Gold must perish at last—gold that perisheth; but faith never will. The trial of faith will be found to praise, and honour and glory. If a tried faith be found to praise, honour, and glory, let this recommend faith to you, as much more precious than gold, though it be assaulted and tried by afflictions. Jesus Christ will appear again in glory. The trial will soon be over, but the glory, honour, and praise will last to eternity.

III. He particularly commends the faith of these primitive Christians.

1. The excellency of its object, the unseen Jesus, v. 8. It is one thing to believe God, or Christ (so the devils believe), and another thing to believe in him.

2. Two notable productions or effects of their faith, love and joy, and this joy so great as to be above description.

(1) Sense converses with things sensible and present; reason is a higher guide, but faith ascends further still. It is the evidence of things not seen.

(2) True faith is never alone, but produces a strong love to Jesus Christ. True Christians have a sincere love to Jesus, because they believe in him.

(3) Where there are true faith and love to Christ there is joy unspeakable and full of glory. It cannot be described by words; the best discovery is by an experimental taste of it; it is full of glory, full of heaven. There is much of heaven and the future glory in the present joys of improved Christians; their faith removes the causes of sorrow, and affords the best reasons for joy. Well might these primitive Christians rejoice with joy unspeakable, since they were every day receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls, v. 4. The blessing they were receiving: The salvation of their souls, which salvation is here called the end of their faith, the end wherein faith terminates. The salvation of the soul was the prize these Christians sought for, the end they aimed at, which came nearer and more within their reach every day. Every faithful Christian is daily receiving the salvation of his soul. These believers had the beginnings of heaven in the possession of holiness and a heavenly mind. They were on the losing side in the world, but the apostle puts them in mind of what they were receiving; if they lost an inferior good, they were all the while receiving the salvation of their souls. The glory of God and our own felicity are so connected that if we regularly seek the one we must attain the other.

Verses 10–12

The apostle goes on to show them what warrant he had for what he had delivered. He produces the authority of the prophets to convince them that the doctrine of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ was no new doctrine.

I. Who made this diligent search—the prophets, who were persons inspired by God.

II. The object of their search, which was salvation, and the grace of God which should come unto you. They foresaw glorious times of light, grace, and comfort, which made the prophets and righteous men desire to see and hear the things which came to pass in the days of the gospel.

III. The manner of their enquiry: they enquired and searched diligently. The words are strong and emphatic, alluding to miners, who dig to the bottom, and break through not only the earth, but the rock, to come to the ore; so these holy prophets had an earnest desire to know, and were proportionably diligent in their enquiries. Their being inspired did not make their industrious search needless. The doctrine of man's salvation by Jesus Christ has been the study and admiration of the greatest and wisest of men. Those who would be acquainted with this great salvation, and the grace that shines therein, must enquire and search diligently into it.

IV. The particular matters which the ancient prophets chiefly searched into, v. 11. Jesus Christ was the main subject of their studies.

1. His humiliation and death, and the glorious consequences of it. This enquiry would lead them into a view of the whole gospel.

2. Undoubtedly these holy prophets earnestly desired to see the days of the Son of man; and therefore their minds were set upon the time of its accomthough—"which perisheth, YET is tried with fire." If gold, though perishing (vs. 18), is yet tried with fire in order to remove dross and test its genuineness, how much more does your faith, which shall never perish, need to pass through a fiery trial to remove whatever is defective, and to test its genuineness and full value? glory—"Honor" is not so strong as "glory." As "praise" is in words, so "honor" is in deeds: honorary reward. appearing—Translate as in vs. 13, "revelation." At Christ's revelation shall take place also the revelation of the sons of God (Rom. 8:19, "manifestation," Greek, "revelation"; I John 3:2, Greek, "manifested . . . manifested," for "appear . . . appear"). 8. not having seen, ye love—though in other cases it is knowledge of the person that produces love to him. They are more "blessed that have not seen and yet have believed," than they who believed because they have seen. On Peter's own love to Jesus, cf. John 21:15-17. Though the apostles had seen Him, they now ceased to know Him merely after the flesh. in whom—connected with "believing": the result of which is "ye rejoice" (Greek, "exult"). now—in the present state, as contrasted with the future state when believers "shall see His face." unspeakable—(I Cor. 2:9.) full of glory—Greek, "glorified." A joy now already encompassed with glory. The "glory" is partly in present possession, through the presence of Christ, "the Lord of glory," in the soul; partly in assured anticipation. "The Christian's joy is bound up with love to Jesus: its ground is faith; it is not therefore either self-seeking or self-sufficient" [STEIGER]. 9. Receiving—in sure anticipation; "the end of your faith," i.e., its crowning consummation, finally completed "salvation" (Peter here confirms Paul's teaching as to justification by faith): also receiving now the title to it and the first fruits of it. In the next verse (vs. 10) the "salvation" is represented as already present, whereas "the prophets" had it not as yet present. It must, therefore, in this verse, refer to the present: Deliverance now from a state of wrath: believers even now "receive salvation," though its full "revelation" is future. of . . . souls—The immortal soul was what was lost, so "salvation" primarily concerns the soul; the body shall share in redemption hereafter; the soul of the believer is saved already: an additional proof that "receiving . . . salvation" is here a thing present. 10. The magnitude of this "salvation" is proved by the earnestness with which "prophets" and even "angels" searched into it. Even from the beginning of the world this salvation has been testified to by the Holy Spirit. prophets—Though there is no Greek article, yet English Version is right, "the prophets" generally (including all the Old Testament inspired authors), as "the angels" similarly refer to them in general. inquired—perseveringly: so the Greek. Much more is manifested to us than by diligent inquiry and search the prophets attained. Still it is not said, they searched after it, but "concerning" (so the Greek for "of") it. They were already certain of the redemption being about to come. They did not like us fully see, but they desired to see the one and the same Christ whom we fully see in spirit. "As Simeon was anxiously desiring previously, and tranquil in peace only when he had seen Christ, so all the Old Testament saints saw Christ only hidden, and as it were absent—absent not in power and grace, but inasmuch as He was not yet manifested in the flesh" [CALVIN]. The prophets, as private individuals, had to reflect on the hidden and far-reaching sense of their own prophecies; because their words, as prophets, in their public function, were not so much their own as the Spirit's, speaking by and in them: thus Caiaphas. A striking testimony to verbal inspiration; the words which the inspired authors wrote are God's words expressing the mind of the Spirit, which the writers themselves searched into, to fathom the deep and precious meaning, even as the believing readers did. "Searched" implies that they had determinate marks to go by in their search. the grace that should come unto you—viz., the grace of the New Testament: an earnest of "the grace" of perfected "salvation" "to be brought at the (second) revelation of Christ." Old Testament believers also possessed the grace of God; they were children of God, but it was as children in their nonage, so as to be like servants; whereas we enjoy the full privileges of adult sons. 11. what—Greek, "In reference to what, or what manner of time." What expresses the time absolutely: what was to be the era of Messiah's coming; "what manner of time"; what events and features should characterize the time of His coming. The "or" implies that some of the prophets, if they could not as individuals color, or any other property, so genuine faith is proved by adversities, especially such as the primitive Christians were obliged to pass through.

8. Whom having not seen, ye love. Those to whom the apostle wrote had never seen Christ in the flesh; and yet, such is the realizing nature of faith, they loved Him as strongly as any of His disciples could to whom He was personally known.

Ye rejoice with joy unspeakable. You have unutterable happiness through believing; and you have the fullest, clearest, strongest evidence of eternal glory.

9. Receiving the end of your faith. You are put in possession of the salvation of your souls, which was the thing presented to your faith when you were called by the gospel of Christ. The word end is often used so as to imply the "issue" or "reward" of any labor or action. Salvation of your souls. The object of the Jewish expectations in their Messiah was the salvation or deliverance of their bodies from a foreign yoke; but the true Messiah came to save the soul from the yoke of the devil and sin. This glorious salvation these believers had already received.

10. Of which salvation the prophets have enquired. The incarnation and suffering of Jesus Christ and the redemption procured by Him for mankind were made known, in a general way, by the prophets; but they themselves did not know the time when these things were to take place, nor the people among and by whom He was to suffer. They therefore "inquired accurately or earnestly," and searched diligently.

11. The glory that should follow. Not only the glory of His resurrection, ascension, exaltation, and the effusion of His Spirit; but that grand manifestation of God's infinite love to the world in causing the gospel of His Son to be everywhere preached, and the glorious moral plishment, so far as the Spirit of Christ, which was in them, had signified anything towards that purpose. The nature of the times was also under their strict consideration. From the example of Christ Jesus learn to expect a time of services and sufferings before you are received to glory. It was so with him, and the disciple is not above his Lord.

V. The success with which their enquiries were crowned. God gave them a satisfactory revelation to quiet and comfort their minds. They were informed that these things should not come to pass in their time: Not unto themselves, but to us; and we must report them, under the infallible direction of the Holy Ghost, to all the world. Which things the angels, &c.

You have here three sorts of enquirers: 1. The prophets, who searched diligently into it. 2. The apostles, who consulted all the prophecies, and were witnesses of the accomplishment of them, and so reported what they knew to others in the preaching of the gospel. 3. The angels, who most attentively pry into these matters. A diligent endeavour after the knowledge of Christ will certainly be answered with good success. The holiest and best of men sometimes have their lawful and pious requests denied. God is pleased to answer our necessities rather than our requests. It is the practice of a Christian to be useful to others rather than to himself. The prophets ministered to others, not unto themselves. The revelations of God to his church are all perfectly consistent; the doctrine of the prophets and that of the apostles exactly agree, as coming from the same Spirit of God. The gospel is the ministration of the Spirit; the success of it depends upon his operation and blessing. The mysteries of the gospel are so glorious that the blessed angels earnestly desire to look into them.

I. He exhorts them to sobriety and holiness.

1. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, &c., v. 13. Let the loins or strength and vigour of your minds be exerted in your duty; disengage yourselves from all that would hinder you, and go on resolutely in your obedience.

Be sober, be vigilant against all your spiritual dangers and enemies, and be temperate and modest in the whole of your behaviour. Be sober-minded also in opinion, as well as in practice. The main work of a Christian lies in the right management of his heart and mind. The best Christians have need to be exhorted to sobriety. A Christian's work is not over as soon as he has got into a state of grace; he must still hope and strive for more grace. We must hope perfectly, and yet gird up our loins, and address ourselves vigorously to the work we have to do, encouraging ourselves from the grace of Jesus Christ.

2. As obedient children, &c., v. 14. An argument to press them to holiness from the consideration of what they now are, children of obedience, and what they were when they lived in lust and ignorance.

discover the exact time, searched into its characteristic features and events. The Greek for "time" is the season, the epoch, the fit time in God's purposes. Spirit of Christ . . . in them—(Acts 16:7, in oldest MSS., "the Spirit of Jesus"; Rev. 19:10.) So JUSTIN MARTYR says, "Jesus was He who appeared and communed with Moses, Abraham, and the other patriarchs." CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS calls Him "the Prophet of prophets, and Lord of all the prophetical spirit." did signify—"did give intimation." of—Greek, "the sufferers (appointed) unto Christ," or foretold in regard to Christ. "Christ" the anointed Mediator whose sufferings are the price of our "salvation" (vss. 9, 10), and who is the channel of "the grace that should come unto you." the glory—Greek, "glories," viz., of His resurrection, of His ascension, of His judgment and coming kingdom, the necessary consequence of the sufferings. that should follow—Greek, "after these (sufferings)," ch. 3:18-22; 5:1. 12. Not only was the future revealed to them, but this also, that these revelations of the future were given them not for themselves, but for our good in Gospel times. This, so far from disheartening, only quickened them in unselfishly testifying in the Spirit for the partial good of their own generation (only of believers), and for the full benefit of posterity.

us—The oldest MSS. read "you," as in vs. 10. This verse implies that we, Christians, may understand the prophecies by the Spirit's aid in their most important part, viz., so far as they have been already fulfilled. with the Holy Ghost sent down—on Pentecost. The oldest MSS. omit Greek preposition en, i.e., "in"; then translate, "by." The Evangelists speaking by the Holy Spirit were infallible witnesses. "The Spirit of Christ" was in the prophets also (vs. 11), but not manifestly, as in the case of the Christian Church and its first preachers, "SENT down from heaven." things—"the things now reported unto you" by the evangelistic preachers "Christ's sufferings and the glory that should follow" (vss. 11, 12). angels—still higher than "the prophets" (vs. 10). Angels do not any more than ourselves possess an INTUITIVE knowledge of redemption. "To look into" in Greek is lit., "to bend over so as to look deeply into and see to the bottom of a thing." See Note on same word, James 1:25. As the cherubim stood bending over the mercy seat, the emblem of redemption, in the holiest place, so the angels intently gaze upon and desire to fathom the depths of "the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels." Their "ministry to the heirs of salvation" naturally disposes them to wish to penetrate this mystery as reflecting such glory on the love, justice, wisdom, and power of their and our God and Lord. They can know it only through its manifestation in the Church, as they personally have not the direct share in it that we have. 13. Wherefore—Seeing that the prophets ministered unto you in these high Gospel privileges which they did not themselves fully share in, though "searching" into them, and seeing that even angels "desire to look into" them, how earnest you ought to be and watchful in respect to them! gird up . . . loins—referring to Christ's own words, Luke 12:35; an image taken from the way in which the Israelites ate the passover with the loose outer robe girded up about the waist with a girdle, as ready for a journey. Workmen, pilgrims, runners, wrestlers, and warriors (all of whom are types of the Christians), so gird themselves up, both to shorten the garment so as not to impede motion, and to gird up the body itself so as to be braced for action. The believer is to have his mind (mental powers) collected and always ready for Christ's coming. "Gather in the strength of your spirit" [HENSLER]. Sobriety, i.e., spiritual self-restraint, lest one be overcome by the allurements of the world and of sense, and patient hopeful waiting for Christ's revelation, are the true ways of "girding up the loins of the mind." to the end—rather, "perfectly," so that there may be nothing deficient in your hope, no casting away of your confidence. 14. From sobriety of spirit and endurance of hope he passes to obedience, holiness, and reverential fear. As—marking their present actual character as "born again" (vss. 3, 22). obedient—Greek, "children of obedience": children to whom obedience is their characteristic and ruling nature, as a child is of the same nature as the mother and father. Contrast Ephesians 5:6, "the children of disobedience." Cf. vs. 17, "obeying the Father" whose "children" ye are. Having the obedience of faith (cf. vs. 22) and so of practice (cf. vss. 16, 18). "Faith is the highest obedience, changes which should take place in the world under that preaching, and the final glorification of all them who had here received the report and continued faithful unto death.

12. Unto whom it was revealed. We may presume that in a great variety of cases the prophets did not understand the meaning of their own predictions. They had a general view of God's designs; but of particular circumstances connected with those great events they seem to have known nothing, God reserving the explanation of all particulars to the time of the issue of such prophecies. If all succeeding interpreters of the prophecies had been contented with the same information relative to the predictions still unaccomplished, we should have had fewer books and more wisdom.

Angels desire to look into. "To stoop down to"; the posture of those who are earnestly intent on finding out a thing, especially a writing difficult to be read. They bring it to the light, place it so that the rays may fall on it as collectively as possible, and then stoop down in order to examine all the parts, that they may be able to make out the whole. We learn from the above that it was "the Spirit of Christ" in the Jewish prophets that prophesied of Christ; it was that Spirit which revealed Him; and it is the same Spirit which takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us.

13. Gird up the loins of your mind. The allusion here is to the long robes of the Asiatics, which, when they were about to perform any active service, they tucked in their girdles.

Hope to the end for the grace. Continue to expect all that God has promised, and particularly that utmost salvation, that glorification of body and soul, which you shall obtain at the revelation of Christ, when He shall come to judge the world.

MATTHEW HENRY

The children of God ought to prove themselves to be such by their obedience to God. The best of God's children have had their times of lust and ignorance. Persons, when converted, differ exceedingly from what they were formerly.

3. But as he who hath called you, &c., v. 15, 16. It is required in strong terms, and enforced by three reasons, taken from the grace of God in calling us,—from his command, it is written,—and from his example.

Be you holy, for I am holy. It is a great favour to be called effectually by divine grace into the possession of all the blessings of the new covenant; and great favours are strong obligations; they enable as well as oblige to be holy. Complete holiness is the desire and duty of every Christian. It must, for the extent of it, be universal. We must be holy, and be so in all manner of conversation, towards all people, friends and enemies; in all our intercourse and business still we must be holy. For the pattern of it, we must be holy, as God is holy: we must imitate him, though we can never equal him. The consideration of the holiness of God should oblige us to the highest degree of holiness we can attain unto.

4. If you call on the Father, &c., v. 17. The whole time of our sojourning here is to be passed in the fear of God. Holy confidence in God as a Father, and an awful fear of him as a Judge, are very consistent.

The judgment of God will be without respect of persons: According to every man's work. God will not respect persons from personal considerations, but judge them according to their work.

5. He adds (v. 18) a second argument. Herein he puts them in mind, (1) That they were redeemed by a ransom paid to the Father. (2) What the price paid for their redemption was.

(3) From what they were redeemed. (They knew this, and cannot pretend ignorance.) The consideration of our redemption ought to be a constant and powerful inducement to holiness, and the fear of God. God expects that a Christian should live answerably to what he knows. Neither silver nor gold, nor any of the corruptible things of this world, can redeem so much as one soul. They are corruptible, and therefore cannot redeem an incorruptible and immortal soul.

because discharged to the highest command" [LUTHER]. fashioning—The outward fashion (Greek, schema) is fleeting, and merely on the surface. The "form," or conformation in the New Testament, is something deeper and more perfect and essential. the former lusts in—which were characteristic of your state of ignorance of God: true of both Jews and Gentiles. The sanctification is first described negatively (vs. 14, "not fashioning yourselves . . ."; the putting off the old man, even in the outward fashion, as well as in the inward conformation), then positively (vs. 15, putting on the new man, cf. Eph. 4:22, 24). 15. Lit., "But (rather) after the pattern of Him who hath called you (whose characteristic is that He is) holy, be (Greek, 'become') ye yourselves also holy." God is our grand model. God's calling is a frequently urged motive in Peter's Epistles. Every one that begets, begets an offspring resembling himself [EPIPHANIUS]. "Let the acts of the offspring indicate similarity to the Father" [AUGUSTINE]. conversation—deportment, course of life: one's way of going about, as distinguished from one's internal nature, to which it must outwardly correspond. Christians are already holy unto God by consecration; they must be so also in their outward walk and behavior in all respects. The outward must correspond to the inward man. 16. Scripture is the true source of all authority in questions of doctrine and practice. Be ye . . . for I am—It is I with whom ye have to do. Ye are mine. Therefore abstain from Gentile pollutions. We are too prone to have respect unto men [CALVIN]. As I am the fountain of holiness, being holy in My essence, be ye therefore zealous to be partakers of holiness, that ye may be as I also am [DIDYMUS]. God is essentially holy: the creature is holy in so far as it is sanctified by God. God, in giving the command, is willing to give also the power to obey it, viz., through the sanctifying of the Spirit (vs. 2). 17. if—i.e., "seeing that ye call on," for all the regenerate pray as children of God, "Our Father who art in heaven." the Father—rather, "Call upon as Father Him who without acceptance of persons (Acts 10:34; Rom. 2:11; Jas. 2:1, not accepting the Jew above the Gentile, II Chron. 19:7; Luke 20:21; properly said of a judge not biassed in judgment by respect of persons) judgeth . . . ." The Father judgeth by His Son, His Representative, exercising His delegated authority (John 5:22). This marks the harmonious and complete unity of the Trinity. work—Each man's work is one complete whole, whether good or bad. The particular works of each are manifestations of the general character of his lifework, whether it was of faith and love whereby alone we can please God and escape condemnation. pass—Greek, "conduct yourselves during." sojourning—The outward state of the Jews in their dispersion is an emblem of the sojourner-like state of all believers in this world, away from our true Fatherland. fear—reverential, not slavish. He who is your Father, is also your Judge—a thought which may well inspire reverential fear. 18. Another motive to reverential, vigilant fear (vs. 17) of displeasing God, the consideration of the costly price of our redemption from sin. Observe, it is we who are bought by the blood of Christ, not heaven. The blood of Christ is not in Scripture said to buy heaven for us: heaven is the "inheritance" (vs. 4) given to us as sons, by the promise of God. corruptible—Cf. vs. 7, "gold that perisheth," 23. silver and gold—Greek, "or." Cf. Peter's own words, Acts 3:6: an undesigned coincidence. redeemed—Gold and silver being liable to corruption themselves, can free no one from spiritual and bodily death; they are therefore of too little value. Contrast vs. 19, Christ's "precious blood." The Israelites were ransomed with half a shekel each, which went towards purchasing the lamb for the daily sacrifice (Exod. 30:12-16; cf. Num. 3:44-51). But the Lamb who redeems the spiritual Israelites does so "without money or price." Devoted by sin to the justice of God, the Church of the first-born is redeemed from sin and the curse with Christ's precious blood (Matt. 20:28; I Tim. 2:6; Titus 2:14; Rev. 5:9). In all these passages there is the idea of substitution, the giving of one for another by way of a ransom or equivalent. vain—self-deceiving, unreal, and unprofitable: promising good which it does not perform. Cf. as to the Gentiles, Acts 14:15; Romans 1:21; Ephesians 4:17; as to human philosophers, I Corinthians 3:20; as to the disobedient Jews, Jeremiah 4:14. conversation—course of life. To know what our sin is we must know what it cost. received by tradition from your fathers—The Jews' traditions.

ADAM CLARKE

14. Not fashioning yourselves. As the offices of certain persons are known by the garb they wear, so are transgressors.

15. But as he which hath called you. Here Christianity has an infinite advantage over heathenism. God is holy, and He calls upon all who believe in Him to imitate His holiness; and the reason why they should be holy is that God, who has called them, is holy, v. 15.

17. Who without respect of persons. God is said to be "no respecter of persons" for this reason among many others, that, being infinitely righteous, He must be infinitely impartial. He cannot prefer one to another, because He has nothing to hope or fear from any of His creatures. God's judgment will be according to every man's work, and a man's work or "conduct" will be according to the moral state of his mind. No favoritism can prevail in the day of judgment; nothing will pass there but holiness of heart and life.

18. Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things. To "redeem" signifies to procure life for a captive or liberty for a slave by paying a price, and the precious blood of Christ is here stated to be the price at which the souls of both Jews and Gentiles were redeemed.

Vain conversation. Empty, foolish, and unprofitable conduct.

MATTHEW HENRY

The blood of Jesus Christ is the only price of man's redemption. The design of Christ in shedding his most precious blood was to redeem us, not only from eternal misery hereafter, but from a vain conversation in this world. Not only the open wickedness, but the vanity and unprofitableness of our conversation are highly dangerous. A man's conversation may plead antiquity, custom, and tradition, in its defence, and yet after all be a most vain conversation. Antiquity is no certain rule of verity.

6. Some things relating both to the Redeemer and the redeemed, v. 20, 21.

(1) The Redeemer is further described as one, [1] That was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world. It imports an act of the will, a resolution that the thing shall be.

[2] That was manifested in these last days for them. He was manifested to be that Redeemer whom God had fore-ordained. "This was done in these last times of the New Testament and of the gospel. You have the comfort of the manifestation and appearance of Christ, if you believe on him."

[3] That was raised from the dead by the Father, who gave him glory, proclaimed him to all the world to be his Son by his resurrection from the dead, and glorified him with that glory which he had with God before the world was.

(2) The redeemed are also described here by their faith and hope, the cause of which is Jesus Christ: "You do by him believe in God."

(3) The decree of God to send Christ to be a Mediator was from everlasting. God had purposes of special favour towards his people long before he made any manifestations of such grace to them. Great is the happiness of the last times in comparison with what the former ages of the world enjoyed. Our gratitude and services should be suitable to such favours.

II. He exhorts them to brotherly love.

1. He supposes that the gospel had already produced at least an unfeigned love of the brethren, v. 22. It is not to be doubted but that every sincere Christian purifies his soul. The apostle takes this for granted: Seeing you have, &c. The word of God is the great instrument of a sinner's purification. Many hear the truth, but are never purified by it, because they will not submit to it nor obey it. The Spirit of God is the great agent in the purification of man's soul. The Spirit excites our endeavours, and makes them successful. The aid of the Spirit does not supersede our own industry; these people purified their own souls, but it was through the Spirit. The souls of Christians must be purified before they can so much as love one another unfeignedly. There is no charity but out of a pure heart.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

19. precious—of inestimable value. The Greek order is, "With precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish (in itself) and without spot (contracted by contact with others), [even the blood] of Christ." Though very man, He remained pure in Himself ("without blemish"), and uninfected by any impression of sin from without ("without spot"), which would have unfitted Him for being our atoning Redeemer: so the passover lamb, and every sacrificial victim; so too, the Church, the Bride, by her union with Him.

20. God's eternal foreordination of Christ's redeeming sacrifice, and completion of it in these last times for us, are an additional obligation on us to our maintaining a holy walk, considering how great things have been thus done for us. Peter's language in the history corresponds with this here: an undesigned coincidence and mark of genuineness. Redemption was no afterthought, or remedy of an unforeseen evil, devised at the time of its arising. God's foreordaining of the Redeemer refutes the slander that, on the Christian theory, there is a period of 4000 years of nothing but an incensed God. God chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world. manifest—in His incarnation in the fulness of the time. He existed from eternity before He was manifested. in these last times—I Corinthians 10:11, "the ends of the world." This last dispensation, made up of "times" marked by great changes, but still retaining a general unity, stretches from Christ's ascension to His coming to judgment. 21. by him—Cf. "the faith which is by Him," Acts 3:16. Through Christ: His Spirit, obtained for us in His resurrection and ascension, enabling us to believe. This verse excludes all who do not "by Him believe in God," and includes all of every age and clime that do. Lit., "are believers in God." To believe IN (Greek, eis) God expresses an internal trust: "by believing to love God, going INTO Him, and cleaving to Him, incorporated into His members. By this faith the ungodly is justified, so that thenceforth faith itself begins to work by love" [P. LOMBARD]. To believe ON (Greek, epi, or dative case) God expresses the confidence, which grounds itself on God, reposing ON Him. that raised him—The raising of Jesus by God is the special ground of our "believing": (1) because by it God declared openly His acceptance of Him as our righteous substitute; (2) because by it and His glorification He received power, viz., the Holy Spirit, to impart to His elect "faith": the same power enabling us to believe as raised Him from the dead. that your faith and hope might be in God—the object and effect of God's raising Christ. He states what was the actual result and fact, not an exhortation, except indirectly. Your faith flows from His resurrection; your hope from God's having "given Him glory" (cf. vs. 11, "glories"). Remember God's having raised and glorified Jesus as the anchor of your faith and hope in God, and so keep alive these graces. Apart from Christ we could have only feared, not believed and hoped in God. Cf. vss. 3, 7-9, 13, on hope in connection with faith; love is introduced in vs. 22. 22. purified . . . in obeying the truth—Greek, "in your (or the) obedience of (i.e., to) the truth" (the Gospel way of salvation), i.e., in the fact of your believing. Faith purifies the heart as giving it the only pure motive, love to God (Acts 15:9; Rom. 1:5, "obedience to the faith"). through the Spirit—omitted in the oldest MSS. The Holy Spirit is the purifier by bestowing the obedience of faith (vs. 2; I Cor. 12:3). unto—with a view to: the proper result of the purifying of your hearts by faith. "For what end must we lead a chaste life? That we may thereby be saved? No: but for this, that we may serve our neighbor" [LUTHER]. unfeigned—ch. 2:1, 2, "laying aside . . . hypocrisies . . . sincere." love of the brethren—i.e., of Christians. Love to the brethren is the evidence of our regeneration and justification by faith. love one another—When the purifying by faith into love of the brethren has formed the habit, then the act follows, so that the "love" is at once habit and act. with a pure heart—The oldest MSS. read, "(love) from the heart." fervently—Greek, "intensely": with all the powers on the stretch (ch. 4:8). "Instantly" (Acts 26:7). 23. Christian brotherhood flows from our new birth of an imperishable seed, the abiding word of God. This is the consideration urged here to lead us to exercise brotherly love. As natural relationship gives rise to natural affection, so spiritual relationship gives rise to spiritual, and therefore abiding love, even as the seed from which it springs is abiding, not transitory as earthly things. of . . . of . . . by—"The word of God" is not the material of the spiritual new birth, but its mean or medium. 19. The precious blood of Christ. "The valuable Blood"; how valuable neither is nor could be stated. As of a lamb. Such as was required for a sin offering to God; the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world. Without blemish in himself and without spot from the world, being perfectly pure in His soul and righteous in His life.

20. Who verily was foreordained. "Foreknown"; appointed in the divine purpose to be sent into the world, because infinitely approved by the divine justice. Before the foundation of the world. Before the law was given, or any sacrifice prescribed by it. Its whole sacrificial system was appointed in reference to this foreappointed Lamb, and consequently from Him derived all its significance and virtue. The phrase foundation of the world occurs often in the New Testament, and is supposed by some learned men and good critics to signify the commencement of the Jewish state. Perhaps it may have this meaning in Matt. xiii. 35; Luke xi. 50; Eph. i. 4; Heb. iv. 3; and ix. 26. But if we take it here in its common signification, the creation of universal nature, then it shows that God, foreseeing the fall and ruin of man, appointed the remedy that was to cure the disease. Last times. The gospel dispensation, called the last times, as we have often seen, because never to be succeeded by any other.

21. Who by him do believe in God. This is supposed to refer to the Gentiles, who never knew the true God till they heard the preaching of the gospel.

Gave him glory. Raised Him to His right hand. That your faith in the fulfillment of all His promises, and hope of eternal glory, might be in God, who is unchangeable in His counsels and infinite in His mercies.

22. Seeing ye have purified your souls—having purified your souls, in obeying the truth—by believing in Christ Jesus, through the influence and teaching of the Spirit, and giving full proof of it by unfeigned love to the brethren, you love one another, or "you will love each other," with a pure heart fervently, "intensely or continually"; the full proof that their brotherly love was unfeigned—"without hypocrisy."

MATTHEW HENRY

2. He further presses upon Christians the duty of loving one another with a pure heart fervently from the consideration of their spiritual relation. All Christians are born again. They are brought into a new and a near relation to one another, they become brethren by their new birth. This new and second birth is much more desirable and excellent than the first. By the one we become the children of men, by the other the sons and daughters of the Most High. Brethren by nature are bound to love one another; but the obligation is double where there is a spiritual relation.

He now sets before us the vanity of the natural man. Nothing can make him a solid substantial being, but the being born again of the incorruptible seed, the word of God; and this word is daily set before you in the preaching of the gospel. Man, in his utmost flourish and glory, is still a withering, fading, dying creature. His wit, beauty, strength, vigour, wealth, honour—these are but as the flower of grass, which soon withers and dies away.

The only way to render this perishing creature solid and incorruptible is for him to entertain and receive the word of God; for this will preserve him to everlasting life, and abide with him for ever.

means of the word the man receives the incorruptible seed of the Holy Spirit, and so becomes one "born again": John 3:3-5, "born of water and the Spirit": as there is but one Greek article to the two nouns, the close connection of the sign and the grace, or new birth signified is implied. The word is the remote and anterior instrument; baptism, the proximate and sacramental instrument. The word is the instrument in relation to the individual; baptism, in relation to the Church as a society (Jas. 1:18). We are born again of the Spirit, yet not without the use of means, but by the word of God. The word is not the begetting principle itself, but only that by which it works: the vehicle of the mysterious germinating power [ALFORD]. which liveth and abideth for ever—It is because the Spirit of God accompanies it that the word carries in it the germ of life. They who are so born again live and abide for ever, in contrast to those who sow to the flesh. 24. Scripture proof that the word of God lives for ever, in contrast to man's natural frailty. If ye were born again of flesh, corruptible seed, ye must also perish again as the grass; but now that from which you have derived life remains eternally, and so also will render you eternal. flesh—man in his mere earthly nature. as—omitted in some of the oldest MSS. of man—The oldest MSS. read, "of it" (i.e., of the flesh). "The glory" is the wisdom, strength, riches, learning, honor, beauty, art, virtue, and righteousness of the NATURAL man (expressed by "flesh"), which all are transitory (John 3:6), not OF MAN (as English Version reads) absolutely, for the glory of man, in his true ideal realized in the believer, is eternal. withereth—Greek, aorist: lit., "withered," i.e., is withered as a thing of the past. So also the Greek for "falleth" is "fell away," i.e., is fallen away: it no sooner is than it is gone. thereof—omitted in the best MSS. and versions. "The grass" is the flesh: "the flower" its glory. 25. (Ps. 119:89.) this is the word . . . preached unto you—That is eternal which is born of incorruptible seed (vs. 24): but ye have received the incorruptible seed, the word (vs. 25); therefore ye are born for eternity, and so are bound now to live for eternity (vss. 22, 23). Ye have not far to look for the word; it is among you, even the joyful Gospel message which we preach.

ADAM CLARKE

23. Being born again. For being born of Abraham's seed will not avail to the entering of the kingdom of Heaven. Not of corruptible seed. By no human generation or earthly means; but of incorruptible—a divine and heavenly principle which is not liable to decay, nor to be affected by the changes and chances to which all sublunary things are exposed. By the word of God. "By the doctrine of the living God, which remaineth forever."

25. But the word of the Lord. The doctrine delivered by God concerning Christ endureth forever. And this is the word. "What is spoken," by the gospel preached unto you.

CHAPTER 2

I. Lay aside or put off what is evil.

1. The sins to be put off, or thrown aside. Malice. Malice is settled overgrown anger, retained till it inflames a man to design mischief. Guile, or deceit in words. Hypocrisies. The word being plural comprehends all sorts of hypocrisies. Envies; which is a grieving at the good and welfare of another. Evil speaking, speaking against another, or defaming him.

2. The best Christians have need to be cautioned and warned against the worst sins. They are but sanctified in part, and are still liable to temptations. Our best services towards God will neither please him nor profit us if we be not conscientious in our duties to men. One sin, not laid aside, will hinder our spiritual profit and everlasting welfare.

II. The apostle, like a wise physician, goes on to direct to wholesome food, that they may grow thereby. The duty exhorted to is a strong and constant desire for the word of God. This milk of the word must be sincere, not adulterated by the mixtures of men: As new-born babes. A new life requires suitable food. Infants desire common milk, and their desires towards it are fervent and frequent.

1. laying aside—once for all: so the Greek aorist expresses as a garment put off. The exhortation applies to Christians alone, for in none else is the new nature existing which, as "the inward man" (Eph. 3:16) can cast off the old as an outward thing, so that the Christian, through the continual renewal of his inward man, can also exhibit himself externally as a new man. "Malice," etc., are utterly inconsistent with the "love of the brethren," unto which ye have "purified your souls" (ch. 1:22). The vices here are those which offend against the BROTHERLY LOVE inculcated above. Each succeeding one springs out of that which immediately precedes, so as to form a genealogy of the sins against love. Out of malice springs guile; out of guile, hypocrises (pretending to be what we are not, and not showing what we really are; the opposite of "love unfeigned," and "without dissimulation"); out of hypocrisies, envies of those to whom we think ourselves obliged to play the hypocrite; out of envies, evil-speaking, malicious, envious detraction of others. 2. newborn babes—altogether without "guile" (vs. 1). As long as we are here we are "babes," in a specially tender relation to God (Isa. 40:11). The childlike spirit is indispensable if we would enter heaven. "Milk" is here not elementary truths in contradistinction to more advanced Christian truths, as in I Corinthians 3:2; Hebrews 5:12, 13; but in contrast to "guile, hypocrisies . . ." (vs. 1); the simplicity of Christian doctrine in general to the childlike spirit. The same "word of grace" which is the instrument in regeneration, is the instrument also of building up. "The mother of the child is also its natural nurse" [STEIGER]. The babe, instead of chemically analyzing, instinctively desires and feeds on the milk; so our part is not self-sufficient rationalizing and questioning, but simply receiving the truth in the love of it (Matt. 11: 25). desire—Greek, "have a yearning desire for," or "longing after," a natural impulse to the regenerate, "for as no one needs to teach newborn babes what food to take, knowing instinctively that a table is provided for them in their mother's breast," so the believer of himself thirsts after the word of God (Ps. 119). Cf. Tatius' language as to

CHAPTER 2

1. Wherefore laying aside. This is in close connection with the preceding chapter, from which it should not have been separated; and the subject is continued to the end of the tenth verse.

Laying aside all malice. See the notes on Eph. iv. 22-31. These tempers and dispositions must have been common among the Jews, as they are frequently spoken against. Christianity can never admit of such; they show the mind, not of Christ, but of the old murderer.

2. As newborn babes. In the preceding chapter, v. 23, the apostle states that they had been "born again"; and as the newborn infant desires that aliment which nature has provided for it, so they, being born again, born from above, should as earnestly require that heavenly nourishment which is suited to their new nature.

MATTHEW HENRY

Such must Christians' desires be for the word of God: that they may grow thereby. Strong desires and affections to the word of God are a sure evidence of a person's being born again. Growth and improvement in wisdom and grace are the desire of every Christian. The word of God, does not leave a man as it finds him.

III. He adds an argument from their own experience, v. 3. The apostle does not express a doubt, but affirms that these good Christians had tasted the goodness of God. Our Lord Jesus Christ is very gracious to his people; he has in him a fulness of grace. The graciousness of our Redeemer is best discovered by an experimental taste of it. We cannot taste at a distance, as we may see, and hear, and smell. To taste the graciousness of Christ experimentally supposes our being united to him by faith. The best of God's servants have in this life but a taste of the grace of Christ.

Verses 4–12

I. A description of Jesus Christ as a living stone.

1. He is called a stone, to denote his invincible strength and everlasting duration, and to teach his servants that he is the foundation on which they are built. He is the living stone, having eternal life in himself. The reputation and respect he has with God and man are very different. He is disallowed of men, but chosen of God, and gracious. To whom coming; by faith, whereby we are united to him at first, and draw nigh to him afterwards. Jesus Christ is the very foundation-stone of all our hopes and happiness. However Christ may be disallowed by an ungrateful world, yet he is chosen of God, and precious in his account. Those who expect mercy from this gracious Redeemer must come to him, which is our act, though done by God's grace—a real endeavour, not a fruitless wish.

2. The apostle goes on to speak of the superstructure, the materials built upon him, v. 6. The apostle is recommending the Christian church and constitution to these dispersed Jews. The Christian church is a much nobler fabric than the Jewish temple; it is a living temple. Christ, the foundation, is a living stone. Christians are lively stones, and they are a holy priesthood. They offer spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. All sincere Christians have in them a principle of spiritual life communicated to them from Christ; not dead in trespasses and sins, but alive to God. The church of God is a spiritual house. This house is daily built up, every part of it improving, and the whole supplied in every age by the addition of new particular members. All good Christians are a holy priesthood. This holy priesthood must and will offer up spiritual sacrifices to God. The most spiritual sacrifices of the best men are not acceptable to God, but through Jesus Christ; therefore bring all your oblations to him, and by him present them to God.

II. He confirms what he had asserted of Christ being a living stone, &c., from Isa. xxviii. 16. In their quotations they kept rather to the sense than the words of scripture. The true sense of scripture may be justly and fully expressed in other than scripture-words, but in the weighty matters of religion we must depend entirely upon scripture-proof. The word of God is the only rule God hath given us.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Achilles. sincere—Greek, "guileless." Cf. vs. 1, "laying aside guile." IRENÆUS says of heretics, They mix chalk with the milk. The article, "the," implies that besides the well-known pure milk, the Gospel, there is no other pure, unadulterated doctrine; it alone can make us guileless (vs. 1). of the word—Not as ALFORD, "spiritual," nor "reasonable," as English Version in Romans 12:1. The Greek logos in Scripture is not used of the reason, or mind, but of the WORD; the preceding context requires that "the word" should be meant here; the adjective logikos follows the meaning of the noun logos, "word." grow—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "grow unto salvation." Being BORN again unto salvation, we are also to grow unto salvation. The end to which growth leads is perfected salvation. thereby—Greek, "in it"; fed on it; in its strength (Acts 11:14). "The word is to be desired with appetite as the cause of life, to be swallowed in the hearing, to be chewed as cud is by rumination with the understanding, and to be digested by faith" [TERTULLIAN]. 3. Peter alludes to Psalm 34:8. The first tastes of God's goodness are afterwards followed by fuller and happier experiences. A taste whets the appetite [BENGEL]. gracious—Greek, "good," benignant, kind; as God is revealed to us in Christ, "the Lord" (vs. 4), we who are born again ought so to be good and kind to the brethren (ch. 1:22). "Whosoever has not tasted the word to him it is not sweet it has not reached the heart; but to them who have experienced it, who with the heart believe, 'Christ has been sent for me and is become my own; my miseries are His, and His life mine,' it tastes sweet" [LUTHER]. 4. coming—drawing near (same Greek as here, Hebrews 10:22) by faith continually; present tense: not having come once for all at conversion. stone—Peter (i.e., a stone, named so by Christ) desires that all similarly should be living stones BUILT ON CHRIST, THE TRUE FOUNDATION-STONE; cf. his speech in Acts 4:11.

He herein confirms Paul's teaching. Omit the as unto of English Version. Christ is positively termed the "living stone"; living, as having life in Himself from the beginning, and as raised from the dead to live evermore (Rev. 1:18) after His rejection by men, and so the source of life to us. Like no earthly rock, He lives and gives life. Cf. I Corinthians 10:4, and the type, Exodus 17:6; Numbers 20:11. disallowed—rejected, reprobated; referred to also by Christ Himself: also by Paul; cf. the kindred prophecies, Isaiah 8:14; Luke 2:34. chosen of God—lit., "with (or in the presence and judgment of) God elect," or, "chosen out" (vs. 6). Many are alienated from the Gospel, because it is not everywhere in favor, but is on the contrary rejected by most men. Peter answers that, though rejected by men, Christ is peculiarly the stone of salvation honored by God, first so designated by Jacob in his deathbed prophecy. 5. Ye also, as lively stones—partaking of the name and life which is in "THE LIVING STONE" (vs. 4; I Cor. 3:11). Many names which belong to Christ in the singular are assigned to Christians in the plural. He is "THE SON," "High Priest," "King," "Lamb"; they, "sons," "priests," "kings," "sheep," "lambs." So the Shulamite called from Solomon [BENGEL]. are built up—Greek, "are being built up," as in Ephesians 2:22. Not as ALFORD, "Be ye built up." Peter grounds his exhortations, vs. 2, 11, etc., on their conscious sense of their high privileges as living stones in the course of being built up into a spiritual house (i.e., the habitation of the Spirit"). priesthood—Christians are both the spiritual temple and the priests of the temple. There are two Greek words for "temple"; hieron (the sacred place), the whole building, including the courts wherein the sacrifice was killed; and naos (the dwelling, viz., of God), the inner shrine wherein God peculiarly manifested Himself, and where, in the holiest place, the blood of the slain sacrifice was presented before Him. All believers alike, and not merely ministers, are now the dwelling of God (and are called the naos, Greek, not the hieron) and priests unto God (Rev. 1:6). The minister is not, like the Jewish priest (Greek, hiereus), admitted nearer to God than the people, but merely for order's sake leads the spiritual services of the people. The Spirit never, in New Testament, gives the name hiereus, or sacerdotal priest, to ministers of the Gospel. holy—consecrated to God. spiritual sacrifices—not the literal one of the mass, as the Romish self-styled disciples of Peter teach. Cf. Isaiah 56:7, which cf. with "acceptable to God" here; Psalm 4:5; 50:14; 51:17, 19; Hosea 14:2; Philippians 4:18. "Among spiritual sacrifices the first place belongs to the general oblation of ourselves. For never can we offer anything to God until we have offered ourselves (II

And this the apostle calls the sincere milk of the word, or, as some translate, "the rational unadulterated milk"; i.e., the pure doctrines of the gospel, as delivered in the Epistles and Gospels, and as preached by the apostles and their successors.

That ye may grow thereby. "Unto salvation" is added here by about forty MSS. The reading is undoubtedly genuine, and is very important. It shows why they were regenerated, and why they were to desire the unadulterated doctrines of the gospel, viz., that they might "grow up unto salvation."

3. If so be ye have tasted. "Seeing ye have tasted." That the Lord is gracious. This seems to refer to Ps. xxxiv. 8: "O taste and see that the Lord is good."

4. To whom coming, as unto a living stone. This is a reference to Isa. xxviii. 16: "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." Jesus Christ is, in both the prophet and apostle, represented as the Foundation on which the Christian Church is built, and on which it must continue to rest; and the stone or foundation is called here living, to intimate that He is the Source of life to all His followers, and that it is in union with Him that they live. Disallowed indeed of men. That is, rejected by the Jews. This is a plain reference to the prophecy, Ps. cxviii. 22: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner." Chosen of God. To be the Saviour of the world and the Founder of the Church, and the Foundation on which it rests. Precious. "Honorable." Howsoever despised and rejected by men, Jesus, as the Sacrifice for a lost world, is infinitely honorable in the sight of God.

5. Ye also, as lively stones. "Living stones"; each being instinct with the principle of life, which proceeds from Him who is the Foundation, called above "a living stone." The metaphor in this and the following verse is as bold as it is singular; and commentators and critics have found it difficult to hit on any principle of explanation. The Church of Christ is represented under the figure of a house, or rather "household"; and as a household must have a place of residence, hence, by a metonymy, the house itself, or material building, is put for the household or family which occupies it. This point will receive the fullest illustration if we have recourse to the Hebrew. Beith signifies both a "house" and a "family"; ben, a son; bath, a daughter; and eben, a stone. Of all these nouns, banah, "he built," is, I believe, the common root. Now as beith, "a house," is built of abanim, "stones," hence banah, "he built," is a proper radix for both "stones" and "building"; and as beith, "a family or household" (Ps. lxviii. 6), is constituted or made up of banim, "sons," and banoth, "daughters," hence the same root, banah, "he built," is common to all; for sons and daughters build up or constitute a family, as stones do a building. Here then is the ground of the metaphor: The spiritual house is the holy or Christian family or household; this family or household is composed of the sons and daughters of God Almighty; and hence the propriety of "living stones," because this is the living house or spiritual family. And as all the stones, sons and daughters, that constitute the spiritual building are made partakers of the life of Christ, consequently they may with great propriety be called "living stones," that is, sons and daughters of God, who live by Christ Jesus, because He

The accounts that God hath given us in scripture concerning his Son Jesus Christ are what require our strictest attention. Behold, I lay, &c. The constituting of Christ Jesus head of the church is an eminent work of God: I lay in Zion. Jesus Christ is the chief corner-stone that God hath laid in his spiritual building. The corner-stone stays inseparably with the building, supports it, unites it, and adorns it. So does Christ by his holy church, his spiritual house.

III. He deduces an important inference, v. 7. "You who believe will be so far from being ashamed of him that you will boast of him and glory in him for ever." The disobedient will go on to disallow Jesus Christ; but God is resolved that he shall be, in despite of all opposition, the head of the corner. The apostle draws an inference from the prophet's testimony. The prophet did not expressly say so, but yet he said that from which the consequence was unavoidable. The business of a faithful minister is to apply general truths to the particular condition and state of his hearers. The apostle quotes a passage (v. 6) out of the prophet, and applies it severally to good and bad. This requires wisdom, courage, and fidelity; but it is very profitable to the hearers. Disobedient people have no true faith. These may have some right notions, but no solid faith. Those that ought to be builders of the church of Christ are often the worst enemies that Christ has in the world. God will carry on his own work notwithstanding the falseness of pretended friends and the opposition of his worst enemies.

IV. The apostle adds a further description, still preserving the metaphor of a stone, v. 8. The words are taken from Isa. viii. 13, 14.

1. The builders, the chief-priests, refused him, and the people followed their leaders; and so Christ became to them a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. All those that are disobedient take offence at the word of God. They are offended with Christ himself, with his doctrine and the purity of his precepts. The same blessed Jesus who is the author of salvation to some is to others the occasion of their sin and destruction. Those who reject him as a Saviour will split upon him as a Rock.

2. Those who received him were highly privileged, v. 9. The Jews were exceedingly tender of their ancient privileges.

(1) The apostle answers, that if they did not submit they were ruined (v. 7, 8), but that if they did submit they should lose no real advantage, but continue still a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, &c. All true Christians are a chosen generation; they all make one family, a sort and species of people distinct from the common world. All the true servants of Christ are a royal priesthood, separated from sin and sinners, consecrated to God, and offering to God spiritual services and oblations, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Cor. 8:5] in sacrifice to Him. by Jesus Christ—as our mediating High Priest before God. Connect these words with "offer up." Christ is both precious Himself and makes us accepted [BENGEL]. As the temple, so also the priesthood, is built on Christ (vss. 4, 5) [BEZA]. Imperfect as are our services, we are not with unbelieving timidity, which is close akin to refined self-righteousness, to doubt their acceptance THROUGH CHRIST. After extolling the dignity of Christians he goes back to CHRIST as the sole source of it. 6. Wherefore also—The oldest MSS. read, "Because that." The statement above is so "because it is contained in Scripture." Behold—calling attention to the glorious announcement of His eternal counsel.

elect—so also believers (vs. 9, "chosen," Greek, "elect generation"). precious—in Hebrew, Isaiah 28:16, "a cornerstone of preciousness." See all my Note there. So in vs. 7, Christ is said to be, to believers, "precious," Greek, "preciousness." confounded—same Greek as in Romans 9:33 (Peter here as elsewhere confirming Paul's teaching. See Introduction, also Rom. 10: 11,) "ashamed." In Isaiah 28:16, "make haste," i.e., flee in sudden panic, covered with the shame of confounded hopes. 7. Application of the Scripture just quoted first to the believer, then to the unbeliever. On the opposite effects of the same Gospel on different classes, cf. John 9:39; II Corinthians 2: 15, 16. precious—Greek, "THE preciousness" (vs. 6). To you believers belongs the preciousness of Christ just mentioned. disobedient—to the faith, and so disobedient in practice. the stone which . . . head of . . . corner—(Ps. 118:22). Those who rejected the STONE were all the while in spite of themselves unconsciously contributing to its becoming Head of the corner. The same magnet has two poles, the one repulsive, the other attractive; so the Gospel has opposite effects on believers and unbelievers respectively. 8. stone of stumbling . . .—quoted from Isaiah 8:14. Not merely they stumbled, in that their prejudices were offended; but their stumbling implies the judicial punishment of their reception of Messiah; they hurt themselves in stumbling over the cornerstone, as "stumble" means in Jeremiah 13:16; Daniel 11:19. at the word—rather join "being disobedient to the word"; so ch. 3:1; 4:17. whereunto—to penal stumbling; to the judicial punishment of their unbelief. See above. also—an additional thought; God's ordination; not that God ordains or appoints them to sin, but they are given up to "the fruit of their own ways" according to the eternal counsel of God. The moral ordering of the world is altogether of God. God appoints the ungodly to be given up unto sin, and a reprobate mind, and its necessary penalty. "Were appointed," Greek, "set," answers to "I lay," Greek, "set," vs. 6. God, in the active, is said to appoint Christ and the elect [directly]. Unbelievers, in the passive, are said to be appointed [God acting less directly in the appointment of the sinner's awful course] [BENGEL]. God ordains the wicked to punishment, not to crime [J. CAPPEL]. "Appointed" or "set" (not here "FOREordained") refers, not to the eternal counsel so directly, as to the penal justice of God. Through the same Christ whom sinners rejected, they shall be rejected; unlike believers, they are by God appointed unto wrath as FITTED for it. The lost shall lay all the blame of their ruin on their own sinful perversity, not on God's decree; the saved shall ascribe all the merit of their salvation to God's electing love and grace.

9. Contrast in the privileges and destinies of believers. Cf. the similar contrast with the preceding context. chosen—"elect" of God, even as Christ your Lord is. generation—implying the unity of spiritual origin and kindred of believers as a class distinct from the world. royal—kingly. Believers, like Christ, the antitypical Melchisedec, are at once kings and priests. Israel, in a spiritual sense, was designed to be the same among the nations of the earth. The full realization on earth of this, both to the literal and the spiritual Israel, is as yet future.

lives in them. Now, following the metaphor, these various living stones become one grand temple, in which God is worshipped, and in which He manifests himself as He did in the Temple of old. Every stone, son and daughter, being a spiritual sacrificer or priest, they all offer up praise and thanksgiving to God through Christ; and such sacrifices, being offered up in the name and through the merit of His Son, are all acceptable in His sight.

6. Behold, I lay in Sion. This intimates that the foundation of the Christian Church should be laid at Jerusalem; and there it was laid, for there Christ suffered, and there the preaching of the gospel commenced. A chief corner stone. This is the same as the foundation stone; and it is called here the chief corner stone because it is laid in the foundation, at an angle of the building where its two sides form the groundwork of a side and end wall. And this might probably be designed to show that, in Jesus, both Jews and Gentiles were to be united. Elect, precious. "Chosen" and "honorable." Shall not be confounded. These words are quoted from Isa. xxviii. 16; but rather more from the Septuagint than from the Hebrew text. The latter we translate, "He that believeth shall not make haste"—he who comes to God, through Christ, for salvation, shall never be confounded; he need not "haste" to flee away, for no enemy shall ever be able to annoy him.

7. Unto you therefore which believe. You, both Jews and Gentiles. He is precious. "The honor is to you who believe"; i.e., the honor of being in this building, and of having your souls saved through the blood of the Lamb, and becoming sons and daughters of God Almighty. Them which be disobedient. The Jews who continue to reject the gospel; that very Person whom they reject is head of the corner—is Lord over all, and has all power in the heavens and the earth.

8. A stone of stumbling. Because in Him all Jews and Gentiles who believe are united, and because the latter were admitted into the Church and called by the gospel to enjoy the same privileges which the Jews, as the peculiar people of God, had enjoyed for two thousand years before, therefore they rejected the Christian religion; they would have no partakers with themselves in the salvation of God. This was the true cause why the Jews rejected the gospel; and they rejected Christ because He did not come as a secular prince. In the one case He was a stone of stumbling—He was poor, and affected no worldly pomp; in the other He was a rock of offence, for His gospel called the Gentiles to be a peculiar people whom the Jews believed to be everlastingly reprobated and utterly incapable of any spiritual good. Whereunto also they were appointed. Some good critics read the verse thus, carrying on the sense from the preceding: "Also a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense: The disobedient stumble against the word, to which verily they were appointed." Peter refers to Isa. viii. 14-15: "And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken." The disobedient, therefore, being appointed to stumble against the Word, or being prophesied of as persons that should stumble, necessarily means, from the connection in which it stands and from the passage in the prophet, that their stumbling, falling, and being broken is the consequence of their disobedience or unbelief; but there is no intimation that they were appointed or "decreed" to disobey, that they might stumble and fall and be broken. They stumbled and fell through their obstinate unbelief; and thus their stumbling and falling, as well as their unbelief, were of themselves. In consequence of this they were appointed to be broken; this was God's work of judgment.

9. Ye are a chosen generation. The titles formerly given to the whole Jewish church. The Israelites were a chosen or "elected race," to be a special people unto the Lord their God, "above all people that are upon the face of the earth," Deut. vii. 6. They were also a royal priesthood, or what Moses calls "a kingdom of

All Christians, wheresoever they be, compose one holy nation. It is the honour of the servants of Christ that they are God's peculiar people.

These dignities and virtues of Christians are not natural to them; for their first state is a state of horrid darkness, but they are effectually called out of darkness that they should show forth the virtues and praises of him who hath called them.

(2) The apostle advises them to compare their former and their present state. Time was when they were not a people, nor had they obtained mercy, but now they are taken in again to be the people of God, and have obtained mercy.

V. He warns them to beware of fleshly lusts, v. 11. Knowing the difficulty, and yet the importance of the duty, he uses his utmost interest in them: Dearly beloved, I beseech you. The duty is to abstain from fleshly lusts. These Christians ought to avoid, considering, 1. The respect they have with God: They are dearly beloved. 2. Their condition in the world: They are strangers and pilgrims, and should not impede their passage by giving in to the lusts of the country through which they pass.

3. The grand mischief that sin does to man is this, it wars against the soul. Of all sorts of sin, none are more injurious to the soul than fleshly lusts.

VI. He exhorts them further to an honest conversation. They lived among the Gentiles who were inveterate enemies to them, and constantly spoke evil of them as of evil-doers. "A good conversation may not only stop their mouths, but may possibly be a means to bring them to glorify God, and turn to you, when they shall see you excel all others in good works. Vindicate yourselves by good works, this is the way to convince them. When the gospel shall come among them, and take effect, a good conversation will encourage them in their conversion, but an evil one will obstruct it."

holy nation—antitypical to Israel. peculiar people—lit., "a people for an acquisition," i.e., whom God chose to be peculiarly His: Acts 20: 28, "purchased," lit., "acquired." God's "peculiar treasure" above others. show forth—publish abroad. praises—Greek, "virtues," "excellencies": His glory, mercy (vs. 10), goodness (Greek, vs. 3; Num. 14:17, 18; Isa. 63:7). The same term is applied to believers, II Pet. 1:5. of him who hath called you—(II Pet. 1:3). out of darkness—of heathen and even Jewish ignorance, sin, and misery, and so out of the dominion of the prince of darkness. marvellous—Peter still has in mind Ps. 118:23. light—It is called "His," i.e., God's. Only the (spiritual) light is created by God, not darkness. In Isaiah 45:7, it is physical darkness and evil, not moral, that God is said to create, the punishment of sin, not sin itself. Peter, with characteristic boldness, brands as darkness what all the world calls light; reason, without the Holy Spirit, in spite of its vaunted power, is spiritual darkness. "It cannot apprehend what faith is: there it is stark blind; it gropes as one that is without eyesight, stumbling from one thing to another, and knows not what it does" [LUTHER]. 10. Adapted from Hosea 1:9, 10; 2:23. Peter plainly confirms Paul, who quotes the passage as implying the call of the Gentiles to become spiritually that which Israel had been literally, "the people of God." Primarily, the prophecy refers to literal Israel, hereafter to be fully that which in their best days they were only partially, God's people. not obtained mercy—lit., "who were men not compassionated." Implying that it was God's pure mercy, not their merits, which made the blessed change in their state; a thought which ought to kindle their lively gratitude, to be shown with their life, as well as their lips. 11. As heretofore he exhorted them to walk worthily of their calling, in contradistinction to their own former walk, so now he exhorts them to glorify God before unbelievers. Dearly beloved—He gains their attention to his exhortation by assuring them of his love. strangers and pilgrims—(ch. 1:17). Sojourners, lit., settlers having a house in a city without being citizens in respect to the rights of citizenship; a picture of the Christian's position on earth; and pilgrims, staying for a time in a foreign land. FLACIUS thus analyzes the exhortation: (1) Purify your souls (a) as strangers on earth who must not allow yourselves to be kept back by earthly lusts, and (b) because these lusts war against the soul's salvation. (2) Walk piously among unbelievers (a) so that they may cease to calumniate Christians, and (b) may themselves be converted to Christ. fleshly lusts—enumerated in Galatians 5:19, etc. Not only the gross appetites which we have in common with the brutes, but all the thoughts of the unrenewed mind. which—Greek, "the which," i.e., inasmuch as being such as "war," etc. Not only do they impede, but they assail [BENGEL]. the soul—i.e., against the regenerated soul; such as were those now addressed. The regenerated soul is besieged by sinful lusts. Like Samson in the lap of Delilah, the believer, the moment that he gives way to fleshly lusts, has the locks of his strength shorn, and ceases to maintain that spiritual separation from the world and the flesh of which the Nazarite vow was the type. 12. conversation—"behavior"; "conduct."

honest—honorable, becoming, proper (ch. 3:16). Contrast "vain conversation," ch. 1:18. A good walk does not make us pious, but we must first be pious and believe before we attempt to lead a good course. Faith first receives from God, then love gives to our neighbor [LUTHER]. whereas they speak against you—now (vs. 15), that they may, nevertheless, at some time or other hereafter glorify God. The Greek may be rendered, "Wherein they speak against you . . . , that (herein) they may, by your good works, which on a closer inspection they shall behold, glorify God." evildoers—Because as Christians they could not conform to heathenish customs, they were accused of disobedience to all legal authority; in order to rebut this charge, they are told to submit to every ordinance of man (not sinful in itself). by—owing to. they shall behold—Greek, "they shall be eyewitnesses of"; "shall behold on close inspection"; as opposed to their "ignorance" (vs. 15) of the true character of Christians and Christianity, by judging on mere hearsay. The same Greek verb occurs in a similar sense in ch. 3:2.

glorify—forming a high estimate of the God whom Christians worship, from the exemplary conduct of Christians themselves. We must do good, not with a view to our own glory, but to the glory of God. the day of visitation—of God's grace; when God shall visit them in mercy. 13. every ordinance of man—"every human institution" [AL-priests," Exod. xix. 6. They were an holy nation, Exod. xix. 6; for they were separated from all the people of the earth, that they might worship the one only true God, and abstain from the abominations that were in the heathen world. They were also a peculiar people, a "purchased people"; a "private property," belonging to God Almighty, Deut. vii. 6. But they were called to this state of salvation out of darkness, idolatry, superstition, and ungodliness, into his marvellous light, the gospel dispensation, which, in reference to the discoveries it had made of God, His nature, will, and gracious promises towards mankind, differed as much from the preceding dispensation of the Jews as the light of the meridian sun from the faint twinkling of a star. And they had these privileges that they might shew forth the praises of him who had thus called them; "the virtues," those perfections of the wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness of God, that shone most illustriously in the Christian dispensation. These they were to exhibit in a holy and useful life, being transformed into the image of God, and walking as Christ himself walked.

10. Which in time past were not a people. This is a quotation from Hos. i. 9-10 and ii. 23, where the calling of the Gentiles by the preaching of the gospel is foretold. From this it is evident that the people to whom the apostle now addresses himself had been Gentiles.

11. Which war against the soul. Which are "marshalled and drawn up in battle array," to fight against the soul; either to slay it or to bring it into captivity. This is the object and operation of every earthly and sensual desire. How little do those who indulge them think of the ruin which they produce!

12. Having your conversation honest. Living in such a manner among the Gentiles, in whose country you sojourn, as becomes the gospel which you profess.

In the day of visitation. I believe this refers to the time when God should come to execute judgment on the disobedient Jews in the destruction of their civil polity and the subversion of their Temple and city. That the day of visitation means a time in which punishment should be inflicted is plain from Isa. x. 3: "And what will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far?"

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 13–25

A Christian conversation must be honest.

I. The case of subjects. Christians were not only reputed innovators in religion, but disturbers of the state; it was highly necessary, therefore, that the apostle should settle the rules of obedience to the civil magistrate.

1. The duty required is submission.

2. The persons or objects to whom this submission is due are described. More generally: Every ordinance of man. Magistracy is certainly of divine right; and this is a general rule, binding in all nations, let the established form of government be what it will. Particularly: To the king, as supreme, or unto governors, who are sent by him, commissioned by him to govern.

3. The reasons to enforce this duty are,

(1) For the Lord's sake, who has ordained magistracy for the good of mankind.

(2) From the end and use of the magistrate's office, which are, to punish evil-doers and to praise and encourage all those that do well. True religion is the best support of civil government. The best way the magistrate can take to discharge his own duty, and to amend the world, is to punish well and reward well.

(3) Christians should submit to the civil magistrate, v. 15. The will of God is, to a good man, the strongest reason for any duty. A Christian must endeavour, in all relations, to behave himself so as to put to silence the unreasonable reproaches of the most ignorant and foolish men.

(4) The spiritual nature of Christian liberty. The apostle tells the Christians that they were free, but from what? Not from duty or obedience to God's law, which requires subjection to the civil magistrate. They were free spiritually, but must still remember they were the servants of God. All the servants of Christ are free men. The servants of Jesus Christ ought to be very careful not to abuse their Christian liberty.

4. The apostle concludes with four admirable precepts: (1) Honour all men. A due respect is to be given to all men; the poor are not to be despised; the wicked must be honoured, not for their wickedness, but for any other qualities.

(2) Love the brotherhood. All Christians are a fraternity. They should therefore love one another with an especial affection. (3) Fear God with the highest reverence. If this be wanting, none of the other three duties can be performed as they ought. (4) Honour the king.

II. The case of servants. They imagined that their Christian liberty set them free from their unbelieving and cruel masters; Servants, be subject, v. 18.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

FORD], lit., "every human creation." For though of divine appointment, yet in the mode of nomination and in the exercise of their authority, earthly governors are but human institutions, being of men, and in relation to men. The apostle speaks as one raised above all human things. But lest they should think themselves so ennobled by faith as to be raised above subordination to human authorities, he tells them to submit themselves for the sake of Christ, who desires you to be subject, and who once was subject to earthly rulers Himself, though having all things subject to Him, and whose honor is at stake in you as His earthly representatives. Cf. Romans 13:5, "Be subject for conscience' sake." king—The Roman emperor was "supreme" in the Roman provinces to which this Epistle was addressed. The Jewish zealots refused obedience. The distinction between "the king as supreme" and "governors sent by him" implies that "if the king command one thing, and the subordinate magistrate another, we ought rather to obey the superior" [AUGUSTINE in GROTIUS]. Scripture prescribes nothing upon the form of government, but simply subjects Christians to that everywhere subsisting, without entering into the question of the right of the rulers (thus the Roman emperors had by force seized supreme authority, and Rome had, by unjustifiable means, made herself mistress of Asia), because the de facto governors have not been made by chance, but by the providence of God. 14. governors—subordinate to the emperor, "sent," or delegated by Cæsar to preside over the provinces. for the punishment—No tyranny ever has been so unprincipled as that some appearance of equity was not maintained in it; however corrupt a government be, God never suffers it to be so much so as not to be better than anarchy [CALVIN]. Although bad kings often oppress the good, yet that is scarcely ever done by public authority (and it is of what is done by public authority that Peter speaks), save under the mask of right. Tyranny harasses many, but anarchy overwhelms the whole state [HORNEIUS]. The only justifiable exception is in cases where obedience to the earthly king plainly involves disobedience to the express command of the King of kings. praise of them that do well—Every government recognizes the excellence of truly Christian subjects. Thus PLINY, in his letter to the Emperor Trajan, acknowledges, "I have found in them nothing else save a perverse and extravagant superstition." The recognition in the long run mitigates persecution (ch. 3:13). 15. Ground of his directing them to submit themselves (vs. 13). put to silence—lit., "to muzzle," "to stop the mouth." ignorance—spiritual not having "the knowledge of God," and therefore ignorant of the children of God, and misconstruing their acts; influenced by mere appearances, and ever ready to open their mouths, rather than their eyes and ears. Their ignorance should move the believer's pity, not his anger. As free—as the Lord's freemen," connected with vs. 15, doing well as being free. "Well-doing" (vs. 15) is the natural fruit of being freemen of Christ, made free by "the truth" from the bondage of sin. Duty is enforced on us to guard against licentiousness, but the way in which it is to be fulfilled, is by love and the holy instincts of Christian liberty. We are given principles, not details. not using—Greek, "not as having your liberty for a veil (cloak) of badness, but as the servants of God," and therefore bound to submit to every ordinance of man (vs. 13) which is of God's appointment. 17. Honour all men—according to whatever honor is due in each case. Equals have a respect due to them. Christ has dignified our humanity by assuming it; therefore we should not dishonor, but be considerate to and honor our common humanity, even in the very humblest. The first "honor" is in the Greek aorist imperative, implying, "In every case render promptly every man's due" [ALFORD]. The second is in the present, implying, Habitually and continually honor the king. Thus the first is the general precept; the three following are its three great divisions. Love—present: Habitually love with the special and congenial affection that you ought to feel to brethren, besides the general love to all men. Fear God . . . the king—The king is to be honored; but God alone, in the highest sense, feared. 18. Servants—Greek, "household servants": not here the Greek for "slaves." Probably including freedmen still remaining in their master's house. be subject—Greek, "being subject": the participle expresses a particular instance of the general exhortation to good conduct, vss. 11, 12, of which the first particular precept is given vs. 13, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." The general exhortation is taken up again in vs. 16; and so

ADAM CLARKE

13. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man. In every settled state, and under every form of political government, where the laws are not in opposition to the laws of God, it may be very soundly and rationally said: "Genuine Christians have nothing to do with the laws but to obey them." The words literally signify, not every ordinance of man, but "every human creature"; it is better to understand the words thus, "All the constituted authorities." The meaning of Peter appears to be this: The Jews thought it unlawful to obey any ruler that was not of their own stock; the apostle tells them they should obey the civil magistrate, let him be of what stock he may, whether a Jew or a Gentile, and let him exercise the government in whatsoever form. This is the general proposition: and then he instances "emperors" and their "deputies"; and, far from its being unlawful for them to obey a heathen magistrate, they were to do it for the Lord's sake, "on account of the Lord," whose will it was and who commanded it.

14. Or unto governors. By "king, as supreme" the Roman emperor is meant; and by governors are meant leaders, governors, presidents, proconsuls, and other chief magistrates, sent by him into the provinces dependent on the Roman Empire. For the punishment of evildoers. This was the object of their mission; they were to punish delinquents, and encourage and protect the virtuous.

15. For so is the will of God. God, as their supreme Governor, shows them that it is His will that they should act uprightly and obediently at all times, and thus confound the ignorance of foolish men, who were ready enough to assert that their religion made them bad subjects. The word which we translate put to silence signifies to "muzzle," i.e., stop their mouths, leave them nothing to say.

16. As free. The Jews pretended that they were a free people, and owed allegiance to God alone; hence they were continually rebelling against the Roman government, to which God had subjected them because of their rebellion against Him. Thus they used their liberty for a cloke of maliciousness—for a pretext of rebellion, and by it endeavored to vindicate their seditious and rebellious conduct. But as the servants of God. These were free from sin and Satan, but they were the servants of God—"bound" to obey Him; and as He had made it their duty to obey the civil magistrate, they served God by submitting "to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."

17. Honour all men. That is, give honor to whom honor is due, Rom. xiii. 7.

Love the brotherhood. All true Christians, who form one great family of which God is the Head. Fear God, who gives you these commandments, lest He punish you for disobedience. Honour the king. Pay that respect to the "emperor" which his high authority requires, knowing that civil power is of God.

18. Servants, be subject. See the notes on Eph. vi. 5; Col. iii. 22; and Titus ii. 9.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. He orders them to be subject, and that not only to the good and gentle, but even to the crooked and perverse. The sinful misconduct of one relation does not justify the sinful behaviour of the other; the servant is bound to do his duty, though the master be sinfully froward and perverse. Good people are meek and gentle to their servants and inferiors.

2. He condescends to reason with them about it. (1) If they were patient under their hardships, while they suffered unjustly, this would be acceptable to God, v. 19, 20. There is no condition so mean but a man may glorify God in it; the meanest servant may do so. The most conscientious persons are very often the greatest sufferers. For conscience towards God, they suffer wrongfully; they do well, and suffer for it; but sufferers of this sort are praiseworthy, they do honour to God and they are accepted of him. Deserved sufferings must be endured with patience. (2) More reasons to encourage Christian servants to patience under unjust sufferings, v. 21. From their Christian calling. From the example of Christ. Good Christians are a sort of people called to be sufferers, and therefore they must expect it; they are bound to deny themselves, and take up the cross. Jesus Christ suffered for you, or for us, in our stead and for our good, v. 24.

The sufferings of Christ should quiet us under the most unjust and cruel sufferings we meet with in the world. Shall not we sinners submit to the light afflictions of this life, which work for us unspeakable advantages afterwards?

3. The example of Christ's subjection and patience is here explained: Christ suffered, (1) Wrongfully, v. 22. His words, as well as his actions, were all sincere, just, and right. (2) Patiently, v. 23. Provocations to sin can never justify the commission of it. The reasons for sin can never be so great, but we have always stronger reasons to avoid it.

4. Lest any should think that Christ's death was designed merely for an example of patience under sufferings, the apostle here adds a more glorious design and effect of it: Who his own self. The person suffering—Jesus Christ: His own self—in his own body. The expression his own self is emphatic to distinguish him from the Levitical priests (who offered the blood of others). The sufferings he underwent were stripes and the death of the cross—servile and ignominious punishments! The reason of his sufferings: He bore our sins. Christ, in his sufferings, stood charged with our sins. He bore the punishment of them. As the scape-goat did typically bear the sins of the people on his head, and then carried them quite away, so the Lamb of God does first bear our sins in his own body, and thereby take away the sins of the world.

the participle vs. 18, "being subject," is joined to the hortatory imperatives going before, viz., "abstain," "submit yourselves." "honor all men." with—Greek, "in." all—all possible: under all circumstances, such as are presently detailed. fear—the awe of one subject: God, however, is the ultimate object of the "fear": fear "for the Lord's sake" (vs. 13), not merely slavish fear of masters. good—kind. gentle—indulgent towards errors: considerate: yielding, not exacting all which justice might demand. froward—perverse: harsh. Those bound to obey must not make the disposition and behavior of the superior the measure of the fulfilment of their obligations. 19. Reason for subjection even to froward masters. thankworthy—(Luke 6:33). A course out of the common, and especially praiseworthy in the eyes of God: not as Rome interprets, earning merit, and so a work of supererogation (cf. vs. 20). for conscience toward God—lit., "consciousness of God": from a conscientious regard to God, more than to men. endure—Greek, "patiently bear up under": as a superimposed burden [ALFORD]. grief—Greek, "griefs." 20. what—Greek, "what kind of." glory—what peculiar merit. buffeted—the punishment of slaves, and suddenly inflicted [BENGEL]. this is—Some oldest MSS. read, "for." Then the translation is, "But if when . . . ye take it patiently (it is a glory), for this is. . . . acceptable—Greek, "thankworthy," as in vs. 19. 21. Christ's example a proof that patient endurance under undeserved sufferings is acceptable with God. hereunto—to the patient endurance of unmerited suffering (ch. 3:9). Christ is an example to servants, even as He was once in "the form of a servant." called—with a heavenly calling, though slaves. for us—His dying for us is the highest exemplification of "doing well" (vs. 20). Ye must patiently suffer, being innocent, as Christ also innocently suffered (not for Himself, but for us). The oldest MSS. for "us . . . us," read, "you . . . for you." Christ's sufferings, while they are for an example, were also primarily sufferings "for us," a consideration which imposes an everlasting obligation on us to please Him. leaving—behind: so the Greek: on His departure to the Father, to His glory. an example—Greek, "a copy," lit., "a writing copy" set by masters for their pupils. Christ's precepts and sermons were the transcript of His life. Peter graphically sets before servants those features especially suited to their case. follow—close upon: so the Greek. his steps—footsteps, viz., of His patience combined with innocence. 22. Illustrating Christ's well-doing (vs. 20) though suffering. did—Greek aorist. Never in a single instance did" [ALFORD]. Quoted from Isaiah 53:9, end, LXX. neither—nor yet: not even [ALFORD]. Sinlessness as to the mouth is a mark of perfection. Guile is a common fault of servants. "If any boast of his innocency, Christ surely did not suffer as an evildoer" [CALVIN], yet He took it patiently (vs. 20). On Christ's sinlessness, cf. II Corinthians 5:21; Hebrews 7:26. 23. Servants are apt to "answer again" (Titus 2:9). Threats of divine judgment against oppressors are often used by those who have no other arms, as for instance, slaves. Christ, who as Lord could have threatened with truth, never did so. committed himself—or His cause, as man in His suffering. Cf. the type, Jeremiah 11:20. In this Peter seems to have before his mind Isaiah 53:8. Cf. Romans 12:19, on our corresponding duty. Leave your case in His hands, not desiring to make Him executioner of your revenge, but rather praying for enemies. God's righteous judgment gives tranquillity and consolation to the oppressed. 24. his own self—there being none other but Himself who could have done it. His voluntary undertaking of the work of redemption is implied. The Greek puts in antithetical juxtaposition, OUR, and His OWN SELF, to mark the idea of His substitution for us. His "well-doing" in His sufferings is set forth here as an example to servants and to us all (vs. 20). bare—to sacrifice: carried and offered up: a sacrificial term. Isaiah 53:11, 12, "He bare the sin of many": where the idea of bearing on Himself is the prominent one; here the offering in sacrifice is combined with that idea. So the same Greek means in ch. 2:5. our sins—In offering or presenting in sacrifice (as the Greek for "bare" implies) His body, Christ offered in it the guilt of our sins upon the cross, as upon the altar of God, that it might be expiated in Him, and so taken away from us. Cf. Isaiah 53:10, "Thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin."

on the tree—the cross, the proper place for One on whom the curse was laid: this curse stuck to Him until it was legally (through His death as the guilt-bearer) destroyed in His body; thus the handwriting of the bond against us is can-

ADAM CLARKE

With all fear. With all submission and reverence. The froward. The crooked, perverse, unreasonable, morose, and austere.

19. For this is thankworthy. If, in a conscientious discharge of your duty, you suffer evil, this is in the sight of God thankworthy, pleasing, and proper.

20. For what glory is it? It appears from this that the poor Christians, and especially those who had been converted to Christianity while in a state of slavery, were often grievously abused; they were buffeted because they were Christians, and because they would not join with their masters in idolatrous worship.

21. Hereunto were ye called. You were called to a state of suffering when you were called to be Christians; for the world cannot endure the yoke of Christ, and they that will live godly in Christ must suffer persecution; they will meet with it in one form or other. Christ also suffered for us. And left us the example of His meekness and gentleness; for when He was reviled, He reviled not again. You cannot expect to fare better than your Master; imitate His example, and His Spirit shall comfort and sustain you. Many MSS. and most of the versions, instead of Christ also suffered for us, leaving us, read, "suffered for you, leaving you." This reading, which I think is genuine, is noticed in the margin.

22. Who did no sin. He suffered, but not on account of any evil He had either done or said. It is very likely that the apostle mentions guile, because those who do wrong generally strive to screen themselves by prevarication and lies. These words appear to be a quotation from Isa. liii. 9.

23. But committed himself. Though He could have inflicted any kind of punishment on His persecutors, yet to give us, in this respect also, an example that we should follow His steps, He committed His cause to Him who is the righteous Judge. To avoid evil tempers and the uneasiness and danger of avenging ourselves, it is a great advantage in all such cases to be able to refer our cause to God, and to be assured that the Judge of all the earth will do right.

24. Bare our sins in his own body. Bore the punishment due to our sins. In no other sense could Christ bear them. To say that they were so imputed to Him as if they had been His own, and that the Father beheld Him as blackened with imputed sin, is monstrous, if not blasphemous.

MATTHEW HENRY

The fruits of Christ's sufferings. Our sanctification. Our justification. By his stripes we are healed.

5. The difference between their former and present condition, v. 25. (1) Man's sin: he goes astray; it is his own act. (2) His misery: he goes astray from the shepherd, and from the flock.

(3) The recovery of these by conversion. This return is to Christ, who is the true careful shepherd, that loves his sheep, who is the most vigilant pastor, and bishop, or overseer of souls.

CHAPTER 3

Verses 1–7

I. Lest the Christian matrons should imagine that their conversion to Christ exempted them from subjection to their pagan or Jewish husbands, the apostle here tells them,

1. In what the duty of wives consists.

(1) In subjection, which obliging conduct would be the most likely way to win those unbelieving husbands who had rejected the word, or who attended to no other evidence of the truth of it than what they saw in the exemplary conversation of their wives. A cheerful subjection, and a loving, reverential respect, are duties which Christian women owe their husbands, whether they be good or bad. There is nothing more powerful, next to the word of God, to win people, than a good conversation.

(2) In fear, or reverence to their husbands.

(3) In a chaste conversation. Evil men are strict observers of the conversation of the professors of religion. A chaste conversation is an excellent means to win them to the faith of the gospel.

(4) In preferring the ornaments of the mind to those of the body, v. 3. Here are three sorts of ornaments forbidden: plaiting of hair, which was commonly used in those times by lewd women; wearing of gold; putting on of apparel with too much nicety and costliness in it. Religious people should take care that all their external behaviour be answerable to their profession. The outward adorning of the body is very often sensual and excessive. The attire of a harlot can never become a chaste Christian matron.

celled by His death. that we being dead to sins—the effect of His death to "sin" in the aggregate, and to all particular "sins," viz., that we should be as entirely delivered from them, as a slave that is dead is delivered from service to his master. This is our spiritful standing through faith by virtue of Christ's death: our actual mortification of particular sins is in proportion to the degree of our effectually being made conformable to His death. "That we should die to the sins whose collected guilt Christ carried away in His death, and SO LIVE TO THE RIGHTEOUSNESS (cf. Isa. 53:11. 'My righteous servant shall justify many'), the gracious relation to God which He has brought in" [STEIGER]. by whose stripes [Greek, "stripe"] ye were healed—a paradox, yet true. "Ye servants (cf. 'buffeted,' 'the tree,' vss. 20, 24) often bear the strife; but it is not more than your Lord Himself bore; learn from Him patience in wrongful sufferings. 25. (Isa. 53:6.) For—Assigning their natural need of healing (vs. 24). now—Now that the atonement for all has been made, the foundation is laid for individual conversion: so "ye are returned," or "have become converted to. . . ."

Shepherd and Bishop—The designation of the pastors and elders of the Church belongs in its fullest sense to the great Head of the Church, "the good Shepherd." As the "bishop" oversees (as the Greek term means), so "the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous" (ch. 3:12). He gives us His spirit and feeds and guides us by His word. "Shepherd," Hebrew, Parnas, is often applied to kings, and enters into the composition of names, as *Pharna*bazus.

VSS. 1-22. RELATIVE DUTIES OF HUSBANDS AND WIVES: EXHORTATIONS TO LOVE AND FORBEARANCE: RIGHT CONDUCT UNDER PERSECUTIONS FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS' SAKE, AFTER CHRIST'S EXAMPLE, WHOSE DEATH RESULTED IN QUICKENING TO US THROUGH HIS BEING QUICKENED AGAIN, OF WHICH BAPTISM IS THE SACRAMENTAL SEAL. 1. Likewise—Greek, "In like manner," as "servants" in their sphere; cf. the reason of the woman's subjection, I Corinthians 11:8-10; I Timothy 2:11-14. your own—enforcing the obligation: it is not strangers ye are required to be subject to. Every time that obedience is enjoined upon women to their husbands, the Greek, idios, "one's own peculiarly," is used, while the wives of men are designated only by heauton, "of themselves." that, if—Greek, "that even if." Even if you have a husband that obeys not the word (i.e., is an unbeliever). without the word—independently of hearing the word preached, the usual way of faith coming. But BENGEL, "without word," i.e., without direct Gospel discourse of the wives, "they may (lit., in oldest MSS., shall, which marks the almost objective certainty of the result) be won" indirectly. "Unspoken acting is more powerful than unperformed speaking" [ŒCUMENIUS]. "A soul converted is gained to itself, to the pastor, wife, or husband, who sought it, and to Jesus Christ; added to His treasury who thought not His own precious blood too dear to lay out for this gain" [LEIGHTON]. "The discreet wife would choose first of all to persuade her husband to share with her in the things which lead to blessedness; but if this be impossible, let her then alone diligently press after virtue, in all things obeying him so as to do nothing at any time against his will, except in such things as are essential to virtue and salvation" [CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS]. 2. behold—on narrowly looking into it, lit., "having closely observed." chaste—pure, spotless, free from all impurity. fear—reverential, towards your husbands. Scrupulously pure, as opposed to the noisy, ambitious character of worldly women. 3. Lit., "To whom let there belong [viz., as their peculiar ornament] not the outward adornment [usual in the sex which first, by the fall, brought in the need of covering, Note, ch. 5:5] of . . ." plaiting—artificial braiding, in order to attract admiration. wearing—lit., "putting round," viz., the head, as a diadem—the arm, as a bracelet—the finger, as rings. apparel—showy and costly. "Have the blush of modesty on thy face instead of paint, and moral worth and discretion instead of gold and emeralds" [MELISSA]. 4. But—"Rather." The "outward adornment" of jewelry, etc., is forbidden, in so far as woman loves such things, not in so far as she uses them from a sense of propriety, and does not abuse them. Singularity mostly comes

That we, being dead to sins. "That we, being freed from sin"—delivered out of its power, and from under its tyranny. Should live unto righteousness. That righteousness should be our master now, as sin was before. By whose stripes ye were healed. The apostle refers here to Isa. liii. 4-6; and he still keeps the case of these persecuted servants in view, and encourages them to suffer patiently by the example of Christ, who was buffeted and scourged, and who bore all this that the deep and inveterate wounds, inflicted on their souls by sin, might be healed.

25. For ye were as sheep going astray. Formerly you were not in a better moral condition than your oppressors; you were like stray sheep, in the wilderness of ignorance and sin, till Christ, the true and merciful Shepherd, called you back from your wanderings by sending you the gospel of His grace. Bishop of your souls. Unless we consider the word Bishop as a corruption of the word episcopos, and that this literally signifies an "overseer," an "inspector," or "one that has the oversight," it can convey to us no meaning of the original. Jesus Christ is the "Overseer of souls"; He has them continually under His eye; He knows their wants, wishes, dangers, and provides for them. As their Shepherd, He leads them to the best pastures, defends them from their enemies, and guides them by His eye. Jesus is the good Shepherd that laid down His life for His sheep. All human souls are inexpressibly dear to Him, as they are the purchase of His blood. He is still supreme Bishop or "Overseer" in His Church.

1. Ye wives, be in subjection. Consider that your husband is, by God's appointment, the head and ruler of the house. Do not, therefore, attempt to usurp his government; for even though he obey not the word, is "not a believer in the Christian doctrine," his rule is not thereby impaired. For Christianity never alters civil relations; and your affectionate, obedient conduct will be the most likely means of convincing him of the truth of the doctrine which you have received. Without the word. That your holy conduct may be the means of begetting in them a reverence for Christianity, the preaching of which they will not hear. See the notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

2. Chaste conversation coupled with fear. While they see that you join modesty, chastity, and the purest manners, to the fear of God. Or perhaps fear is taken, as in Eph. v. 33, for the "reverence" due to the husband.

3. Whose adorning. See the note on Heb. ix. 1, where the word cosmos, "world" or "ornament," is defined. Plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold. Plaiting the hair, and variously folding it about the head, was the most ancient and most simple mode of disposing of this chief ornament of the female head. Thin plates of gold were often mixed with the hair, to make it appear more ornamental by the reflection of light. Small golden buckles were also used in different parts; and among the Roman ladies, pearls and precious stones of different colors. But it is evident, from many remaining monuments, that in numerous cases the hair differently plaited and curled was the only ornament of the head. Often a simple pin, sometimes of ivory, pointed with gold, seemed to connect the plaits. In monuments of antiquity the heads of the married and single women may be known, the former by the hair being parted from the forehead over the middle of the top of the head, the latter by being quite close, or being plaited and curled all in a general mass. There is a remarkable passage in Plutarch very like that in the text: "An ornament, as Crates said, is that which becomes her best. This is neither gold, nor pearls, nor scarlet; but those things which are an evident proof of gravity, regularity, and modesty." The wife of Phocion, a celebrated Athenian general, receiving a visit from a lady who was elegantly adorned with gold and jewels, and her hair with pearls, took occasion to call the attention of her guest to the elegance and costliness of her dress, remarking at the same time, "My ornament is my husband, now for

He directs Christian wives to put on much more excellent and beautiful ornaments, v. 4. First, The part to be adorned: The hidden man of the heart. Take care to adorn and beautify your souls rather than your bodies.

Secondly, The ornament prescribed. It must be something not corruptible. The ornaments of the body perish in the using; but the grace of God, the longer we wear it, the brighter and better it is. The finest ornament of Christian women is a meek and quiet spirit. If the husband be harsh, and averse to religion, there is no way so likely to win him as a prudent meek behaviour. A true Christian's chief care lies in the right ordering and commanding of his own spirit. Where the hypocrite's work ends, there the true Christian's work begins. The endowments of the inner man are the chief ornaments of a Christian; but especially a composed, calm, and quiet spirit, renders either man or woman beautiful and lovely.

2. The apostle enforces them by the example, (1) Of the holy women of old, who trusted in God, v. 5. "The duties imposed upon you are not new, but what have ever been practised by the greatest and best women in the world."

(2) Of Sara, who obeyed her husband, and followed him. "Whose daughters you are if you imitate her in faith and good works." The subjection of wives to their husbands is a duty which has been practised universally by holy women in all ages. Christians ought to do their duty to one another, not out of fear, nor from force, but from a willing mind, and in obedience to the command of God.

II. The husband's duty to the wife.

1. The particulars are: Cohabitation. Dwelling with the wife according to knowledge, as wise and sober men, who know the word of God and their own duty. Giving honour to the wife—giving due respect to her, and placing a due trust and confidence in her.

2. The reasons are, Because she is the weaker vessel. The wife is, in other and higher respects, equal to her husband; they are heirs together of the grace of life, and therefore should live peaceable one with another; and, if they do not, their prayers one with another and one for another will be hindered.

Verses 8–15

I. How Christians and friends should treat one another. Christians should endeavour to be all of one mind in the great points of faith, in real affection, and in Christian practice. Though Christians cannot be exactly of the same mind, yet they should have compassion one for another, and love as brethren. Christianity requires pity to the distressed, and civility to all.

from pride and throws needless hindrances to religion in the way of others. Under costly attire there may be a humble mind. "Great is he who uses his earthenware as if it were plate; not less great is he who uses his silver as if it were earthenware" [SENECA in ALFORD]. hidden—inner man, which the Christian instinctively hides from public view. of the heart—consisting in the heart regenerated and adorned by the Spirit. This "inner man of the heart" is the subject of the verb "be," vs. 3, Greek: "Of whom let the inner man be," viz., the distinction or adornment. in that—consisting or standing in that as its element. not corruptible—not transitory, nor tainted with corruption, as all earthly adornments. meek and quiet—meek, not creating disturbances: quiet, bearing with tranquillity the disturbances caused by others. Meek in affections and feelings; quiet in words, countenance, and actions [BENGEL]. in the sight of God—who looks to inward, not merely outward things. of great price—The results of redemption should correspond to its costly price (ch. 1:19). 5. after this manner—with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit (cf. the portrait of the godly wife, Prov. 31:10-31). trusted—Greek, "hoped." "Holy" is explained by "hoped in (so as to be united to, Greek) God." Hope in God is the spring of true holiness [BENGEL]. in subjection—Their ornament consisted in their subordination. Vanity was forbidden (vs. 3) as being contrary to female subjection.

6. Sara—an example of faith. calling him lord—(Gen. 18:12). ye are—Greek, "ye have become": "children" of Abraham and Sara by faith, whereas ye were Gentile aliens from the covenant.

afraid with any amazement—Greek, "fluttering alarm," "consternation." Act well, and be not thrown into sudden panic, as weak females are apt to be, by any opposition from without. BENGEL translates, "Not afraid OF any fluttering terror coming from without" (vss. 13-16). So LXX, Proverbs 3:25 uses the same Greek word, which Peter probably refers to. Anger assails men; fear, women. You need fear no man in doing what is right: not thrown into fluttering agitation by any sudden outbreak of temper on the part of your unbelieving husbands, while you do well. 7. dwell—Greek, "dwelling": connected with the verb, ch. 2:17, "Honor all." knowledge—Christian knowledge: appreciating the due relation of the sexes in the design of God, and acting with tenderness and forbearance accordingly: wisely: with wise consideration. them . . . giving honour to the wife—translate and punctuate the Greek rather, "dwelling according to knowledge with the female (Greek adjective, qualifying 'vessel'; not as English Version, a noun) as with the weaker vessel (Note, I Thess. 4:4). Both husband and wife are vessels in God's hand, and of God's making, to fulfil His gracious purposes. Both weak, the woman the weaker. The sense of his own weakness, and that she, like himself, is God's vessel and fabric, ought to lead him to act with tender and wise consideration towards her who is the weaker fabric), giving (lit., 'assigning,' 'apportioning') honor as being also (besides being man and wife) heirs together . . ."; or, as the Vatican MS. reads, "as to those who are also (besides being your wives) fellow heirs." (The reason why the man should give honor to the woman is, because God gives honor to both as fellow heirs; cf. the same argument, vs. 9.) He does not take into account the case of an unbelieving wife, as she might yet believe. grace of life—God's gracious gift of life (ch. 1:4, 13). that your prayers be not hindered—by dissensions, which prevent united prayer, on which depends the blessing. 8. General summary of relative duty, after having detailed particular duties from ch. 2:18. of one mind—as to the faith. having compassion one of another—Greek, "sympathizing" in the joy and sorrow of others. love as brethren—Greek, "loving the brethren." pitiful—towards the afflicted. courteous—genuine Christian politeness; not the tinsel of the world's politeness; stamped with unfeigned love on one side, and humility on the other. But the oldest MSS. read, "humble-minded." It is slightly different from "humble," in that it marks a conscious effort to be truly humble.

the twentieth year general of the Athenians."

4. The hidden man of the heart. This phrase is of the same import with that of Paul, Rom. vii. 22, the "inner man"; that is, the soul, with the whole system of affections and passions. Every part of the Scripture treats man as a compound being: the "body" is the outward or visible man; the "soul," the inward, hidden, or invisible man. A meek and quiet spirit. That is, a mind that will not give provocation to others, nor receive irritation by the provocation of others. Meekness will prevent the first; "quietness" will guard against the last. Great price. All the ornaments placed on the head and body of the most illustrious female are, in the sight of God, of no worth; but a "meek and silent spirit" are, in His sight, invaluable.

5. For after this manner. Simplicity reigned in primitive times; natural ornaments alone were then in use. Trade and commerce brought in luxuries; and luxury brought pride, and all the excessive nonsense of dress. Being in subjection unto their own husbands. It will rarely be found that women who are fond of dress and extravagant in it have any subjection to their husbands but what comes from mere necessity. Indeed, their dress, which they intend as an attractive to the eyes of others, is a sufficient proof that they have neither love nor respect for their own husbands.

6. Even as Sara obeyed. Almost the same words are in Rab. Tanchum, fol. 9, 3: "The wife of Abraham reverenced him, and called him lord, as it is written, Gen. xviii. 12: 'And my lord is old.'" The words of the apostle imply that she acknowledged his superiority, and her own subjection to him, in the order of God. Whose daughters ye are. As Abraham is represented the father of all his male believing descendants, so Sara is represented as the mother of all her believing female posterity. As long as ye do well. For you cannot maintain your relationship to her longer than you believe, and you cannot believe longer than you continue to obey. And are not afraid with any amazement. It is difficult to extract any sense out of this clause. The original is not very easy: "And not fearing with any terror." If you do well, and act conscientiously your part as faithful wives, you will at no time live under the distressing apprehension of being found out, or terrified at every appearance of the discovery of infidelities or improper conduct.

7. Dwell with them according to knowledge. Give your wives, by no species of unkind carriage, any excuse for delinquency. How can a man expect his wife to be faithful to him if he be unfaithful to her? Giving honour unto the wife. Using your superior strength and experience in her behalf, and thus honoring her by becoming her protector and support. But the word honour signifies "maintenance" as well as "respect"—maintain, provide for the wife. As unto the weaker vessel. Being more delicately, and consequently more slenderly, constructed. Roughness and strength go hand in hand; so likewise do beauty and frailty. The female has what the man wants—beauty and delicacy. The male has what the female wants—courage and strength. The one is as good in its place as the other; and by these things God has made an equality between the man and the woman, so that there is properly very little superiority on either side. Being heirs together. Both the man and woman being equally called to eternal glory; and as prayer is one great means of obtaining a meetness for it, it is necessary that they should live together in such a manner as to prevent all family contentions, that they may not be prevented, by disputes or misunderstandings, from uniting daily in this most important duty—family and social prayer.

8. Be ye all of one mind. Unity, both in the family and in the Church, being essentially necessary to peace and salvation. See on Rom. xii. 16 and xv. 5. Having compassion. "Being sympathetic"; feeling for each other; bearing each other's burdens. Love as brethren. "Be lovers of the brethren." Pitiful. "Tenderhearted." Courteous. Be "friendly-minded," is the reading of more than twenty MSS. and some of the fathers. This is probably the true reading.

II. He instructs us how to behave towards enemies.

1. "When they rail at you, do you bless them; when they give you evil words, do you give them good ones; for Christ has called you to bless those that curse you, and has settled a blessing on you as your everlasting inheritance." The laws of Christ oblige us to return blessing for railing (Matt. v. 44). We must pity, pray for, and love those who rail at us. A Christian's calling, as it invests him with glorious privileges, so it obliges him to difficult duties.

2. An excellent prescription for a comfortable happy life in this quarrelsome ill-natured world (v. 10): it is quoted from Ps. xxxiv. 12–14. It is lawful to consider temporal advantages as motives and encouragements to religion. The practice of religion, particularly the right government of the tongue, is the best way to make this life comfortable and prosperous; a sincere, inoffensive, discreet tongue, is a singular means to pass us peaceably and comfortably through the world. It is the duty of Christians not only to embrace peace when it is offered, but to seek and pursue it when it is denied.

3. Christians need not fear that such patient inoffensive behaviour will invite the cruelty of their enemies (v. 12). His ears are open to their prayers. But the face of the Lord is against those that do evil. He is more an enemy to wicked persecutors than men are. God hath a special care and paternal affection towards all his righteous people. God doth always hear the prayers of the faithful.

4. This patient humble behaviour of Christians is further urged. This will be the best and surest way to prevent suffering, v. 13. "Ordinarily, there will be but few so diabolical and impious as to harm those who live so innocently and usefully as you do."

But if you suffer for righteousness' sake (v. 14), it will be your glory and your happiness. "You need not be afraid of anything they can do to strike you with terror, neither be much troubled nor concerned about the rage or force of your enemies." To follow always that which is good is the best course we can take to keep out of harm's way. To suffer for righteousness' sake is the honour and happiness of a Christian. Christians have no reason to be afraid of the threats or rage of any of their enemies.

Instead of terrifying yourselves with the fear of men, be sure to sanctify the Lord God in your hearts (v. 15).

"When this principle is laid deeply into your hearts, the next thing, as to men, is to be always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of your hope. The hope and faith of a Christian are defensible against all the world. Every Christian is bound to answer for the hope that is in him. Christians should have a reason ready for their Christianity, that it may appear they are not actuated either by folly or fancy. These confessions of our faith ought to be made with meekness and fear.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

9. evil—in deed. railing—in word. blessing—your revilers; participle, not a noun after "rendering." knowing that—The oldest MSS. read merely, "because." are—Greek, "were called." inherit a blessing—not only passive, but also active; receiving spiritual blessing from God by faith, and in your turn blessing others from love [GERHARD in ALFORD]. "It is not in order to inherit a blessing that we must bless, but because our portion is blessing." No railing can injure you (vs. 13). Imitate God who blesses you. The first fruits of His blessing for eternity are enjoyed by the righteous even now (vs. 10) [BENGEL]. 10. will love—Greek, "wishes to love." He who loves life (present and eternal), and desires to continue to do so, not involving himself in troubles which will make this life a burden, and cause him to forfeit eternal life. Peter confirms his exhortation, vs. 9, by Psalm 34:12-16. refrain—curb, lit., "cause to cease"; implying that our natural inclination and custom is to speak evil. "Men commonly think that they would be exposed to the wantonness of their enemies if they did not strenuously vindicate their rights. But the Spirit promises a life of blessedness to none but those who are gentle and patient of evils" [CALVIN]. evil . . . guile—First he warns against sins of the tongue, evil-speaking, and deceitful, double-tongued speaking; next, against acts of injury to one's neighbor. 11. In oldest MSS., Greek, "Moreover (besides his words, in acts), let him." eschew—"turn from." ensue—pursue as a thing hard to attain, and that flees from one in this troublesome world. 12. Ground of the promised present and eternal life of blessedness to the meek (vs. 10). The Lord's eyes are ever over them for good. ears . . . unto their prayers—(I John 5:14, 15). face . . . against—The eyes imply favorable regard; the face of the Lord upon (not as English Version, "against") them that do evil, implies that He narrowly observes them, so as not to let them really and lastingly hurt His people (cf. vs. 13). 13. who . . . will harm you—This fearless confidence in God's protection from harm, Christ, the Head, in His sufferings realized; so His members. if ye be—Greek, "if ye have become." followers—The oldest MSS. read "emulous," "zealous of" (Titus 2:14). good—The contrast in Greek is, "Who will do you evil, if ye be zealous of good?" 14. But and if—"But if even." "The promises of this life extend only so far as it is expedient for us that they should be fulfilled" [CALVIN]. So he proceeds to state the exceptions to the promise (vs. 10), and how the truly wise will behave in such exceptional cases. "If ye should suffer"; if it should so happen; "suffer," a milder word than harm. for righteousness—"not the suffering, but the cause for which one suffers, makes the martyr" [AUGUSTINE]. happy—Not even can suffering take away your blessedness, but rather promotes it. and—Greek, "but." Do not impair your blessing (vs. 9) by fearing man's terror in your times of adversity. Lit., "Be not terrified with their terror," i.e., with that which they try to strike into you, and which strikes themselves when in adversity. This verse and v. 15 is quoted from Isaiah 8:12, 13. God alone is to be feared; he that fears God has none else to fear. neither be troubled—the threat of the law, Leviticus 26:36; Deuteronomy 28: 65, 66; in contrast to which the Gospel gives the believer a heart assured of God's favor, and therefore unruffled, amidst all adversities. Not only be not afraid, but be not even agitated. 15. sanctify—hallow; honor as holy, enshrining Him in your hearts. So in the Lord's Prayer, Matthew 6:9. God's holiness is thus glorified in our hearts as the dwelling-place of His Spirit. the Lord God—The oldest MSS. read "Christ." Translate, "Sanctify Christ as Lord." and—Greek, "but," or "moreover." Besides this inward sanctification of God in the heart, be also ready always to give . . . . answer—an apologetic answer defending your faith. to every man that asketh you—The last words limit the universality of the "always"; not to a railer, but to everyone among the heathen who inquires honestly. a reason—a reasonable account. This refutes Rome's dogma, "I believe it, because the Church believes it." Credulity is believing without evidence; faith is believing on evidence. There is no repose for reason itself but in faith. This verse does not impose an obligation to bring forward a learned proof and logical defense of revelation. But as believers deny themselves, crucify the world, and brave persecution, they must be buoyed up by some strong "hope"; men of the world, having no such hope themselves, are moved by curiosity to ask the secret of this hope; the believer must be ready to give an experimental account "how this hope arose in him, what it contains, and on what it

9. Not rendering evil for evil. Purposing, saying, doing nothing but good; and invariably returning good for evil. Ye are thereunto called. This is your calling, your business in life—to do good, and to do good for evil, and to implore God's blessing even on your worst enemies.

10-11. For he that will love life. This is a quotation from Ps. xxxiv. 12-16, as it stands in the Septuagint; only the aorist of the imperative is changed from the second into the third person. He who wishes to live long and prosperously must act as he is here directed. (1) He must refrain from evil speaking, lying, and slandering. (2) He must avoid flattery and fair speeches, which cover hypocritical or wicked intentions. (3) He must "avoid" evil, keep "going away" from evil. (4) He must do good; he must walk in the way of righteousness. (5) He must live peaceably with all men; seek peace where it has been lost; and "pursue it" where it seems to be flying away. He who lives thus must live happy in himself.

12. The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous. That is, he is continually under God's notice and His care; God continually watches for him and watches over him, and he is under His constant protection. And his ears are open unto their prayers. The original is very emphatic: "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and His ears to their prayers." The righteous man ever attracts the divine notice, and wherever he is, there is the ear of God; for, as every righteous man is a man of prayer, wherever he prays, there is the ear of God, into which the prayer, as soon as formed, enters. But the face of the Lord. Far from His eye being upon them, or His ear open to their requests (for prayer they have none), His face, His "approbation," His providence and blessing, are turned away from them.

13. Who is he that will harm you? Is it possible that a man can be wretched who has God for his Friend? If ye be followers. "If you are imitators of the good One," i.e., of God. "The good One" is one of God's prime epithets, see Matt. xix. 17; and Satan is distinguished by the reverse, "the evil one," Matt. xxiii. 19. Instead of followers, or rather "imitators," "zealous" of what is good is the reading of numerous MSS., with some of the fathers. This is a very probable reading.

14. But and if ye suffer. God may permit you to be tried and persecuted for righteousness' sake, but this cannot essentially harm you; He will press even this into your service and make it work for your good. Happy are ye. This seems to refer to Matt. v. 10, "Blessed or happy are you when men persecute you." Be not afraid of their terror. "Fear not their fear"; see Isa. viii. 12. Sometimes fear is put for the object of a man's religious worship; see Gen. xxxi. 42; Prov. i. 26; and the place in Isaiah just quoted. The exhortation may mean, "Fear not their gods," they can do you no hurt; and supposing that they curse you by them, yet be not troubled. "He who fears God need have no other fear."

15. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts. To sanctify God may signify to offer Him the praises due to His grace; but as to sanctify literally signifies to "make holy," it is impossible that God should be thus sanctified. We have often already seen that hagiazo signifies to separate from earth, that is, from any common use or purpose, that the thing or person thus separated may be devoted to a sacred use. Perhaps we should understand Peter's words thus: Entertain just notions of God; of His nature, power, will, justice, goodness, and truth. Thus sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and you will ever be ready . . . to give . . . a reason of the hope that is in you to every serious and candid inquirer after truth. Most religious systems and creeds are incapable of rational explanation, because founded on some misconception of the divine nature. Instead of God, some MSS. have "Christ." "Sanctify Christ in your hearts" as Lord. The word apologia, which we translate answer, signifies a "defense"; from this we have our word "apology," which did not originally signify an excuse for an act but a defense of that act. The defenses of Christianity by the primitive fathers are called "apologies." With meekness and fear. Several

Verses 16, 17

The confession of a Christian's faith cannot credibly be supported but by a good conscience and a good conversation. Conscience is good when it is kept clear from guilt. A good conversation in Christ is a holy life. "Look well to your conscience, and to your conversation; and then, though men falsely accuse you as evil-doers, you will bring them to shame. Be not discouraged, for it is better for you, though worse for your enemies, that you suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing." The most conscientious persons cannot escape the censures and slanders of evil men. Christ and his apostles were so used. False accusation generally turns to the accuser's shame. As well-doing sometimes exposes a good man to suffering, so evil-doing will not exempt an evil man from it. If the sufferings of good people for well-doing be so severe, what will the sufferings of wicked people be for evil-doing?

Verses 18–20

I. The example of Christ is proposed as an argument for patience. Jesus Christ himself was not exempted from sufferings in this life. The reason of Christ's suffering was the sins of men: Christ suffered for sins. In the case of our Lord's suffering, it was the just that suffered for the unjust. He that knew no sin suffered instead of those that knew no righteousness. The merit and perfection of Christ's sacrifice. The legal sacrifices were repeated but the sacrifice of Christ, once suffered, purgeth away sin. The blessed design of our Lord's sufferings was to bring us to God. The issue of Christ's suffering. He was put to death in his human nature, but he was quickened and raised again by the Spirit. If Christ was not exempted from sufferings, why should Christians expect it? If he, though perfectly just, why should not we, who are all criminals? If he once suffered, and then entered into glory, shall not we be patient under trouble?

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

rests" [STEIGER]. with—The oldest MSS. read, "but with." Be ready, but with "meekness." Not pertly and arrogantly. meekness—(vs. 4.) The most effective way; not self-sufficient impetuosity. fear—due respect towards man, and reverence towards God, remembering His cause does not need man's hot temper to uphold it. 16. Having a good conscience—the secret spring of readiness to give account of our hope. So hope and good conscience go together in Acts 24:15, 16. Profession without practice has no weight. But those who have a good conscience can afford to give an account of their hope "with meekness." whereas—(ch. 2:12). they speak evil of you, as of evildoers—One oldest MS. reads, "ye are spoken against," omitting the rest. falsely accuse—"calumniate"; the Greek expresses malice shown in deeds as well as in words. It is translated, "despitefully use," Matthew 5:44; Luke 6:28. conversation—life, conduct. in Christ—who is the very element of your life as Christians. "In Christ" defines "good." It is your good walk as Christians, not as citizens, that calls forth malice (ch. 4:4, 5, 14). 17. better—One may object, I would not bear it so ill if I had deserved it. Peter replies, it is better that you did not deserve it, in order that doing well and yet being spoken against, you may prove yourself a true Christian [GERHARD]. if the will of God be so—rather as the optative is in the oldest MSS., "if the will of God should will it so." Those who honor God's will as their highest law (ch. 2:15) have the comfort to know that suffering is God's appointment (ch. 4:19). So Christ Himself; our inclination does not wish it. 18. Confirmation of vs. 17, by the glorious results of Christ's suffering innocently. For—"Because." That is "better," vs. 17, means of which we are rendered more like to Christ in death and in life; for His death brought the best issue to Himself and to us [BENGEL]. Christ—the Anointed Holy One of God; the Holy suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust. also—as well as yourselves (vs. 17). Cf. ch. 2:21; there His suffering was brought forward as an example to us; here, as a proof of the blessedness of suffering for well-doing. once—for all; never again to suffer. It is "better" for us also once to suffer with Christ, than for ever without Christ [BENGEL]. for sins—as though He had Himself committed them. He exposed Himself to death by His "confession," even as we are called on to "give an answer to him that asketh a reason of our hope." that he might bring us to God—together with Himself in His ascension to the right hand of God (vs. 22). He brings us, "the unjust," justified together with Him into heaven. So the result of Christ's death is His drawing men to Him; spiritually now, in our having access into the Holiest, opened by Christ's ascension; literally hereafter. put to death—the means of His bringing us to God. in the flesh—i.e., in respect to the life of flesh and blood. quickened by the Spirit—The oldest MSS. omit the Greek article. Translate with the preposition "in," as the antithesis to the previous "in the flesh" requires, "IN spirit," i.e., in respect to His Spirit. "Put to death" in the former mode of life; "quickened" in the other. Not that His Spirit ever died and was quickened, or made alive again, but whereas He had lived after the manner of mortal men in the flesh, He began to live a spiritual "resurrection" (vs. 21) life, whereby He has the power to bring us to God. Two ways of explaining vss. 18, 19, are open to us: (1) "Quickened in Spirit," i.e., immediately on His release from the "flesh," the energy of His undying spirit-life was "quickened" by God the Father, into new modes of action, viz., "in the Spirit He went down (as subsequently He went up to heaven, vs. 22, the same Greek verb) and heralded [not salvation, as ALFORD, contrary to Scripture, which everywhere represents man's state, whether saved or lost, after death irreversible. Nor is any mention made of the conversion of the spirits in prison. See Note, vs. 20. Nor is the phrase here 'preached the Gospel' (evangelizo), but 'heralded' (ekeruxe) or 'preached'; but simply made the announcement of His finished work; so the same Greek in Mark 1:45, 'publish,' confirming Enoch and Noah's testimony, and thereby declaring the virtual condemnation of their unbelief, and the salvation of Noah and believers; a sample of the similar opposite effects of the same work on all unbelievers, and believers, respectively; also a consolation to those whom Peter addresses, in their sufferings at the hands of unbelievers; specially selected for the sake of 'baptism,' its 'antitype' (vs. 21), which, as a seal, marks believers as separated from the rest of the doomed world] to the spirits (His Spirit speaking to the spirits) in prison (in Hades or Sheol, awaiting the judgment, II Pet. 2:4), which were of old disobedient when. . . ." (2) The strong-excellent MSS. add the word "but" here, and it improves the sense considerably: "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, but with meekness and fear." Do not permit your readiness to answer, nor the confidence you have in the goodness of your cause, lead you to answer pertly or superciliously to any person. Defend the truth with all possible gentleness and fear, lest while you are doing it you should forget His presence whose cause you support, or say anything unbecoming the dignity and holiness of the religion which you have espoused, or inconsistent with that heavenly temper which the Spirit of your indwelling Lord must infallibly produce.

16. Having a good conscience. The testimony of God in your own soul "that in simplicity and godly sincerity" you have your "conversation in the world." Whereas they speak evil of you. See the same sentiment in chap. ii. 11, and the note there.

17. For it is better. See on chap. ii. 19-20.

18. Christ also hath once suffered. See the notes on Rom. v. 6; Heb. ix. 28. Put to death in the flesh. In His human nature.

But quickened by the Spirit. That very dead body revived by the power of His divinity.

MATTHEW HENRY

A. B. SIMPSON:

This is His ministry in the interval between His death and resurrection of which Peter is almost the exclusive witness. It is true the Apostle Paul alludes to it when he speaks of Him who "also descended first into the lower parts of the earth." Peter, however, tells us definitely that during the interval after His death, He was quickened in the spirit, and in this state "he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." There is little room to question the literal reference of this passage to the disembodied spirits of those who had lived in the days of Noah, and who were now in prison in the realm of the dead, the region called Hades in the Scriptures.

That Christ visited this region is certain and that He gave some message there is also plain. That it was a message of salvation to these imprisoned spirits there is no reason to believe, and there is no hint of it anywhere in the Scriptures. The word translated "preached" here is not the word usually employed for the preaching of the Gospel, but it literally means to herald, to give a proclamation. It is not difficult for us to surmise what He might have proclaimed in the realms of the dead. These souls had heard the Gospel for a hundred and twenty years in the days of Noah, and rejected it with scorn while God's Spirit strove with them. Now they are informed by the authority of the Son of God that the message which they rejected and ridiculed is true, and has been at last fulfilled.

At the same time how natural it would be for Him to proclaim to the other spirits in Hades that had died in faith and waited for His coming, that at last the great redemption was complete, that sin was canceled, that death was conquered, and that He was about to open their prison doors and lead their captivity captive, and take them up with Him to heaven, to which He was about to ascend and open its portals henceforth to all believers. When He did ascend to heaven, we know He took with Him these captive spirits; and since that time the souls of believers, like Stephen, no longer pass into Hades to wait for their reward but pass immediately into glory and are with Jesus Christ himself in heaven, awaiting the resurrection of their bodies and their full inheritance and reward at His Second Coming.—Christ in the Bible

II. The apostle passes from the example of Christ to that of the old world. They had now an offer of mercy; those that accepted of it should be saved, but those who rejected Christ should be as certainly destroyed as ever the disobedient in the times of Noah were. 1. The preacher—Christ Jesus. He went and preached, by his Spirit striving with them. 2. The hearers. He properly calls them spirits now in prison; not that they were in prison when Christ preached to them.

3. The sin of these people: They were disobedient. This their sin is aggravated from the patience and long-suffering of God.

est point in favor of (I) is the position of "sometime," i.e., of old, connected with "disobedient"; whereas if the preaching or announcing were a thing long past, we should expect "sometime," or of old, to be joined to "went and preached." But this transposition may express that their disobedience preceded His preaching. The Greek participle expresses the reason of His preaching, "inasmuch as they were sometime disobedient" (cf. ch. 4:6). Also "went" seems to mean a personal going, as in vs. 22, not merely in spirit. But see the answer below. The objections are "quickened" must refer to Christ's body (cf. vs. 21, end), for as His Spirit never ceased to live, it cannot be said to be "quickened." Cf. John 5:21; Romans 8:11, and other passages, where "quicken" is used of the bodily resurrection. Also, not His Spirit, but His soul, went to Hades. His Spirit was commended by Him at death to His Father, and was thereupon "in Paradise." The theory—(1) would thus require that His descent to the spirits in prison should be after His resurrection! Cf. Ephesians 4:9, 10, which makes the descent precede the ascent. Also Scripture elsewhere is silent about such a heralding, though possibly Christ's death had immediate effects on the state of both the godly and the ungodly in Hades: the souls of the godly heretofore in comparative confinement, perhaps then having been, as some Fathers thought, translated to God's immediate and heavenly presence; but this cannot be proved from Scripture. Cf. however, John 3:13; Colossians 1:18. Prison is always used in a bad sense in Scripture. "Paradise" and "Abraham's bosom," the abode of good spirits in Old Testament times, are separated by a wide gulf from Hell or Hades, and cannot be called "prison." Cf. II Corinthians 12:2, 4, where "paradise" and the "third heaven" correspond. Also, why should the antediluvian unbelievers in particular be selected as the objects of His preaching in Hades? Therefore explain: "Quickened in spirit, in which (as distinguished from in person; the words "in which," i.e., in spirit, expressly obviating the objection that "went" implies a personal going) He went (in the person of Noah, "a preacher of righteousness," II Pet. 2:5: ALFORD'S own Note, Eph. 2:17, is the best reply to his argument from "went" that a local going to Hades in person is meant. As "He CAME and preached peace" by His Spirit in the apostles and ministers after His death and ascension: so before His incarnation He preached in Spirit through Noah to the antediluvians, John 14: 18, 28; Acts 26:23. "Christ should show," lit., "announce light to the Gentiles") and preached unto the spirits in prison, i.e., the antediluvians, whose bodies indeed seemed free, but their spirits were in prison, shut up in the earth as one great condemned cell (exactly parallel to Isa. 24: 22, 23 "upon the earth . . . they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison . . ." [just as the fallen angels are judicially regarded as "in chains of darkness," though for a time now at large on the earth, I Pet. 2:4], where vs. 18 has a plain allusion to the flood, "the windows from on high are open," cf. Gen. 7:11); from this prison the only way of escape was that preached by Christ in Noah. Christ, who in our times came in the flesh, in the days of Noah preached in Spirit by Noah to the spirits then in prison (Isa. 61:1, end, "the Spirit of the Lord God hath sent me to proclaim the opening of the prison to them that are bound"). So in ch. 1:11, "the Spirit of Christ" is said to have testified in the prophets. As Christ suffered even to death by enemies, and was afterwards quickened in virtue of His "Spirit" (or divine nature, Rom. 1:3, 4; I Cor. 15:45), which henceforth acted in its full energy, the first result of which was the raising of His body (vs. 21, end) from the prison of the grave and His soul from Hades; so the same Spirit of Christ enabled Noah, amidst reproach and trials, to preach to the disobedient spirits fast bound in wrath. That Spirit in you can enable you also to suffer patiently now, looking for the resurrection deliverance. 20. once—not in the oldest MSS. when . . . the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah —Oldest MSS. Greek, "was continuing to wait on" (if haply men in the 120 years of grace would repent until the end of His waiting came in their death by the flood. This refutes ALFORD'S idea of a second day of grace having been given in Hades. Noah's days are selected, as the ark and the destroying flood answer respectively to "baptism" and the coming destruction of unbelievers by fire. while the ark was a-preparing—(Heb. 11:7). A long period of God's "long-suffering and waiting," as Noah had few to help him, which rendered the world's unbelief the more inexcusable. wherein—lit., "(by having entered) into which." eight—seven (the

A. T. ROBERTSON:

Luther admits that he does not know what Peter means. Bigg has no doubt that the event recorded took place between Christ's death and his resurrection and holds that Peter is alluding to Christ's Descensus ad Inferos in Acts 2:27 (with which he compares Matt. 27:52 f.; Luke 23:34; Eph. 4:9). With this Windisch agrees. But Wohlenberg holds that Peter means that Christ in his preexistent state preached to those who rejected the preaching of Noah who are now in prison. Augustine held that Christ was in Noah when he preached. Bigg argues strongly that Christ during the time between his death and resurrection preached to those who once heard Noah (but are now in prison) and offered them another chance and not mere condemnation. If so, why did Jesus confine his preaching to this one group? So the theories run on about this passage.
—Word Pictures in the New Testament

19. By which. Spirit, His own divine energy and authority. He went and preached. By the ministry of Noah, 120 years. Unto the spirits in prison. The inhabitants of the antediluvian world, who, having been "disobedient" and convicted of the most flagrant transgressions against God, were sentenced by His just law to destruction. But their punishment was delayed to see if they would repent; and "the longsuffering of God waited" 120 years, which were granted to them for this purpose; during which time, as criminals tried and convicted, they are represented as being in prison—detained under the arrest of divine justice, which waited either for their repentance or the expiration of the respite, that the punishment pronounced might be inflicted. This I have long believed to be the sense of this difficult passage, and no other that I have seen is so consistent with the whole scope of the place. That the Spirit of God did strive with, convict, and reprove the antediluvians, is evident from Gen. vi. 3: "My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." And it was by this Spirit that Noah became a "preacher of righteousness," and condemned that ungodly world, Heb. xi. 7, who would not believe till wrath, divine punishment, came upon them to the uttermost. The word spirits is supposed to render this view of the subject improbable, because this must mean disembodied spirits; but this certainly does not follow, for "the spirits of just men made perfect," Heb. xii. 23, certainly means righteous men, and men still in the Church militant; and the "Father of spirits," Heb. xii. 9, means men still in the body; and "the God of the spirits of all flesh," Num. xvi. 22 and xxvii. 16, means men not in a disembodied state. There is no ground to believe that the text speaks of Christ's going to hell to preach the gospel to the damned, or of His going to some feigned place where the souls of the patriarchs were detained, to whom He preached, and whom He delivered from that place and took with Him to paradise.

20. When once the longsuffering of God waited. In Pirkey Aboth, cap. v. 2, we have these words: "There were ten generations from Adam to Noah, that the long-suffering of God might appear; for each of these generations provoked him to anger, and went on in their iniquity, till at last the deluge came."

MATTHEW HENRY

4. The event of all: Their bodies were drowned. Noah and his family, who believed and were obedient, were saved in the ark. Though the patience of God wait long upon sinners, yet it will expire at last; it is beneath the majesty of the great God always to wait upon man in vain. The way of the most is neither the best, the wisest, nor the safest way to follow: better to follow the eight in the ark.

Verses 21, 22

Noah's salvation in the ark upon the water prefigured the salvation of all good Christians by baptism.

I. What he means by saving baptism; not the outward ceremony of washing with water, but it is that baptism wherein there is a faithful answer of a resolved good conscience.

II. The efficacy of baptism to salvation depends not upon the work done, but upon the resurrection of Christ. The sacrament of baptism, rightly received, is a means and a pledge of salvation. Baptism now saveth us.

The external participation of baptism will save no man without an answerable good conscience and conversation. There must be the answer of a good conscience towards God.

III. The apostle proceeds to speak of his ascension, and sitting at the right hand of the Father, v. 22. If the advancement of Christ was so glorious after his deep humiliation, let not his followers despair, but expect that after these short distresses they shall be advanced to transcendent joy and glory. Upon his ascension into heaven, Christ is enthroned at the right hand of the Father. Angels, authorities, and powers, are all made subject to Christ Jesus.

sacred number) with ungodly Ham. few—so now. souls—As this term is here used of living persons, why should not "spirits" also? Noah preached to their ears, but Christ in spirit, to their spirits, or spiritual natures. saved by water—The same water which drowned the unbelieving, buoyed up the ark in which the eight were saved. Not as some translate, "were brought safe through the water." However, the sense of the preposition may be as in I Corinthians 3:15, "they were safely preserved through the water," though having to be in the water. 21. whereunto—The oldest MSS. read, "which": lit., "which (viz., water, in general; being) the antitype (of the water of the flood) is now saving (the salvation being not yet fully realized by us, cf. I Corinthians 10:1, 2, 5; Jude 5; puts into a state of salvation) us also (two oldest MSS. read 'you' for 'us': You also, as well as Noah and his party), to wit, baptism." Water saved Noah not of itself, but by sustaining the ark built in faith resting on God's word: it was to him the sign and mean of a kind of regeneration of the earth. The antitypical water, viz., baptism, saves you also not of itself, nor the mere material water, but the spiritual thing conjoined with it, repentance and faith, of which it is the sign and seal, as Peter proceeds to explain. Cf. the union of the sign and thing signified, John 3:5; Ephesians 5:26; Titus 3:5; Hebrews 10:22; cf. I John 5:6. not the . . .—"flesh" bears the emphasis. "Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh" (as is done by a mere water baptism, unaccompanied with the Spirit's baptism, cf. Eph. 2: 11), but of the soul. It is the ark (Christ and His Spirit-filled Church), not the water, which is the instrument of salvation: the water only flowed round the ark; so not the mere water baptism, but the water when accompanied with the Spirit. answer—Greek, "interrogation"; referring to the questions asked of candidates for baptism; eliciting a confession of faith "toward God" and a renunciation of Satan [AUGUSTINE, ad Catechumenos, B. 4., c. 1; CYPRIAN, Ep. 7., ad Rogatian], which, when flowing from "a good conscience," assure one of being "saved." Lit., "a good conscience's interrogation (including the satisfactory answer) toward God." by the resurrection of Jesus—joined with "saves you": In so far as baptism applies to us the power of Christ's resurrection. As Christ's death unto sin is the source of the believer's death unto, and so deliverance from, sin's penalty and power; so His resurrection life is the source of the believer's new spiritual life. 22. (Ps. 110:1; Rom. 8:34, 38; I Cor. 15: 24; Eph. 1:21; 3:10; Col. 1:16; 2:10-15.) The fruit of His patience in His voluntary endured and undeserved sufferings: a pattern to us, vss. 17, 18. gone—(Luke 24:51). Proving against rationalists an actual material ascension. Lit., "is on the right hand of God, having gone into heaven." The oldest MSS. of the Vulgate and the Latin Fathers, add what expresses the benefit to us of Christ's sitting on God's right hand, "Who is on the right hand of God, having swallowed up death that we may become heirs of everlasting life"; involving for us A STATE OF LIFE, saved, glorious, and eternal. The GREEK MSS., however, reject the words. Cf. with this verse Peter's speeches, Acts 2:32-35; 3:21, 26; 10: 40, 42.

ADAM CLARKE

Were saved by water. While the ark was a preparing, only Noah's family believed; these amounted to eight persons. And only these were saved from the deluge on the water; all the rest perished in the water.

21. The like figure whereunto. There are many difficulties in this verse, but the simple meaning of the place may be easily apprehended. Noah believed in God, walked uprightly before Him, and found grace in His sight; he obeyed Him in building the ark, and God made it the means of his salvation from the waters of the deluge. Baptism implies a consecration and dedication of the soul and body to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. He who is faithful to his baptismal covenant, taking God through Christ, by the eternal Spirit, for his Portion, is saved here from his sins; and through the resurrection of Christ from the dead has the well-grounded hope of eternal glory. This is all plain; but was it the deluge itself, or the ark, or the being saved by that ark from the deluge, that was the antetype of which Peter speaks? Noah and his family were "saved by water"; i.e., it was the instrument of their being saved through the good providence of God. So the water of baptism, typifying the regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit, is the means of salvation to all those who receive this Holy Spirit in His quickening, cleansing efficacy. Now as the waters of the Flood could not have saved Noah and his family had they not made use of the ark, so the water of baptism saves no man but as it is the means of his getting his heart purified by the Holy Spirit, and typifying to him that purification.

22. Who is gone into heaven. Having given the fullest proof of His resurrection from the dead, and of His having accomplished the end for which He came into the world. On the right hand of God. In the place of the highest dignity, honor, and influence. Angels and authorities and powers. That is, all creatures and beings, both in the heavens and in the earth, are put under subjection to Jesus Christ.

I. How the exhortation is expressed. Christ had suffered for us in the flesh, or in his human nature. "Arm and fortify yourselves likewise with the same mind. As Christ suffered in his human nature, do you make your corrupt nature suffer, by putting to death the body of sin by self-denial and mortification. Cease from sin." Some of the strongest and best arguments against all sorts of sin are taken from the sufferings of Christ. All sympathy and tenderness for Christ as a sufferer are lost if you do not put away sin. The beginning of all true mortification lies in the mind, not in penances and hardships upon the body.

II. How it is further explained, v. 2. Negatively, a Christian ought no longer to live the rest of his time in the flesh, but, positively, he ought to conform himself to the revealed will of the holy God. The lusts of men are the springs of all their wickedness. Let occasional temptations be what they will, they

VSS. 1-19. LIKE THE RISEN CHRIST, BELIEVERS HENCEFORTH OUGHT TO HAVE NO MORE TO DO WITH SIN. As the end is near, cultivate self-restraint, watchful prayerfulness, charity, hospitality, scriptural speech, ministering to one another according to your several gifts to the glory of God: Rejoicing patience under suffering. 1. for us—supported by some oldest MSS. and versions, omitted by others. in the flesh—in His mortal body of humiliation. arm—(Eph. 6:11, 13). the same mind—of suffering with patient willingness what God wills you to suffer. he that hath suffered—for instance, Christ first, and in His person the believer: a general proposition. hath ceased—lit., "has been made to cease," has obtained by the very fact of His having suffered once for all, a cessation from sin, which had heretofore lain on Him (Rom. 6:6-11, especially, vs. 7). The Christian is by faith one with Christ: as then Christ by death is judicially freed from sin; so the Christian who has in the person of Christ died, has no more to do with it judicially, and ought to have no more to do with it actually. "The flesh" is the sphere in which sin has place. 2. That he . . .—"That he (the believer, who has once for all obtained cessation from sin by suffering, in the person of Christ, viz., in virtue of his union with the crucified Christ) should could not prevail, were it not for men's own corruptions. True conversion makes a marvellous change in the heart and life of everyone who partakes of it. It alters the mind and conversation of everyone who has experienced it.

III. How it is enforced (v. 3). "It is but just that as you have hitherto all the former part of your life served sin and Satan, so you should now serve the living God." When a man is truly converted, it is very grievous to him to think how the time past of his life has been spent. While the will of man is unsanctified and corrupt, he walks continually in wicked ways, and he makes a bad condition daily worse and worse. One sin, allowed, draws on another. Here are six named. (1) Lasciviousness, expressed in looks, gesture, or behaviour. (2) Lusts, acts of lewdness. (3) Excess of wine. (4) Revellings, too frequent, too full, or too expensive. (5) Banquetings, by which is meant gluttony. (6) Abominable idolatry; the idol-worship of the Gentiles. It is a Christian's duty not only to abstain from what is grossly wicked, but also from those things that are generally the occasions of sin.

Verses 4–6

I. Here you have the visible change wrought in those who were represented as having been in the former part of their life very wicked. The conduct of their wicked acquaintance towards them. 1. They think it strange that their old friends should not run with as much violence as they used to do to the same excess of riot. 2. They speak evil of them. Those that are once really converted will not return to their former course of life. Neither persuasion nor reproach will prevail with them to be or to do as they were wont to do. The temper and behaviour of true Christians seem very strange to ungodly men. The ungodly cannot comprehend. The best actions of religious people cannot escape the censures and slanders of those who are irreligious. They will speak evil of good people, though they themselves reap the fruits of their charity, piety, and goodness.

II. For the comfort of the servants of God, it is here added,

1. That all wicked people shall give an account to him who is ready to judge. The malignant world shall in a little time give an account to the great God of all their evil speeches against his people.

2. That for this cause was the gospel preached also to those that are dead, v. 6. The mortifying of our sins and living to God are the expected effects of the gospel preached to us. God will certainly reckon with all those who have had the gospel preached to them, but without these good effects produced by it. It is no matter how we are judged according to men in the flesh, if we do but live according to God in the Spirit.

Verses 7–11

We have here an awful position and an inference drawn from it. The position is that the end of all things is at hand. Consequently, the time of their persecution is but very short. Your own life and that of your enemies will soon come to their utmost period. Nay, the world itself will not continue very long. The inference from this comprises a series of exhortations.

1. To sobriety and watchfulness, v. 7. Do not suffer yourselves to be caught with your former sins and temptations, v. 3. And watch unto prayer. Take care that you be frequent in prayers, lest this end come upon you unawares. Those who would pray to purpose must watch unto prayer.

2. To charity, v. 8. Christians ought to love one another. This mutual affection must not be cold, but fervent, that is, sincere, strong, and lasting. This sort of earnest affection is recommended above all things, which shows the importance of it. One excellent effect of it is that it will cover a multitude of sins. Have charity among yourselves. There is a special relation between all sincere Christians, and a particular amiableness and good in them, which require special affection. It is not enough for Christians not to bear malice, nor to have common respect for one another, they must intensely and fervently love each other. It is the property of true charity to cover a multitude of sins. It inclines people to forgive and forget offences against themselves, to cover the sins of others, rather than aggravate them and spread them abroad. It prepares for mercy at the hand of God, who hath promised to forgive those that forgive others.

no longer live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God" as his rule. "Rest of his time in the flesh" (the Greek has the preposition "in" here, not in vs. 1 as to Christ) proves that the reference is here not to Christ, but to the believer, whose remaining time for glorifying God is short (vs. 3). "Live" in the truest sense, for heretofore he was dead. Not as ALFORD, "Arm yourselves . . . with a view no longer to live the rest of your time." 3. may suffice—Greek, "is sufficient." Peter takes the lowest ground: for not even the past time ought to have been wasted in lust; but since you cannot recall it, at least lay out the future to better account. us—omitted in oldest MSS. wrought—Greek, "wrought out." Gentiles—heathen: which many of you were. when . . .—"walking as ye have done [ALFORD] in lasciviousness"; the Greek means petulant, immodest, wantonness, unbridled conduct: not so much filthy lust. excess of wine—"wine-bibbings" [ALFORD]. abominable—"nefarious," "lawless idolatries," violating God's most sacred law; not that all Peter's readers (Note, ch. 1:1) walked in these, but many, viz., the Gentile portion of them. 4. Wherein—In respect to which abandonment of your former walk (vs. 3). run not with them—eagerly, in troops [BENGEL]. excess—lit., "profusion"; a sink: stagnant water remaining after an inundation. riot—profligacy. speaking evil—charging you with pride, singularity, hypocrisy, and secret crimes (vs. 14; II Pet. 2:2). However, there is no "of you" in the Greek, but simply "blaspheming." It seems to me always to be used, either directly or indirectly, in the sense of impious reviling against God, Christ, or the Holy Spirit, and the Christian religion, not merely against men as such; Greek, vs. 14, below. 5. They who now call you to account falsely, shall have to give account themselves for this very evil-speaking (Jude 15), and be condemned justly. ready—very speedily (vs. 7; II Pet. 3:10). Christ's coming is to the believer always near. 6. For—giving the reason for vs. 5, "judge the dead." gospel preached also to . . . dead—as well as to them now living, and to them that shall be found alive at the coming of the Judge. "Dead" must be taken in the same literal sense as in vs. 5, which refutes the explanation "dead" in sins. Moreover, the absence of the Greek article does not necessarily restrict the sense of "dead" to particular dead persons, for there is no Greek article in vs. 5 also, where "the dead" is universal in meaning. The sense seems to be, Peter, as representing the true attitude of the Church in every age, expecting Christ at any moment, says, The Judge is ready to judge the quick and dead—the dead, I say, for they, too, in their lifetime, have had the Gospel preached to them, that so they might be judged at last in the same way as those living now (and those who shall be so when Christ shall come), viz., "men in the flesh," and that they might, having escaped condemnation by embracing the Gospel so preached, live unto God in the spirit (though death has passed over their flesh), Luke 20:38, thus being made like Christ in death and in life (Note, ch. 3:18). 7. Resuming the idea in vs. 5. the end of all things—and therefore also of the wantonness (vss. 3, 4) of the wicked, and of the sufferings of the righteous [BENGEL]. The nearness meant is not that of mere time, but that before the Lord; as he explains to guard against misapprehension, and defends God from the charge of procrastination: We live in the last dispensation, not like the Jews under the Old Testament. The Lord will come as a thief; He is "ready" (vs. 5) to judge the world at any moment; it is only God's long-suffering and His will that the Gospel should be preached as a witness to all nations, that induces Him to lengthen out the time which is with Him still as nothing. sober—"self-restrained." The opposite duties to the sins in vs. 3 are here inculcated. Thus "sober" is the opposite of "lasciviousness" (vs. 3). watch—Greek, "be soberly vigilant"; not intoxicated with worldly cares and pleasures. Temperance promotes wakefulness or watchfulness, and both promote prayer. Drink makes drowsy, and drowsiness prevents prayer. prayer—Greek, "prayers"; the end for which we should exercise vigilance. 8. above all things—not that "charity" or love is placed above "prayer," but because love is the animating spirit, without which all other duties are dead. Translate as Greek, "Having your mutual (lit., 'towards yourselves') charity intense." He presupposes its existence among them; he urges them to make it more fervent. charity shall cover the multitude . . .—The oldest MSS. have "covereth." Quoted from Proverbs 10:12; cf. 17:9. "Covereth" so as not harshly to condemn or expose faults; but forbearingly to bear the other's burdens, forgiving and forgetting past offences; but to the will of God—which will of God is that he should retain the truth and live according to its dictates, though he should suffer for it.

ADAM CLARKE

3. The time past of our life. This is a complete epitome of the Gentile or heathen state, and a proof that those had been Gentiles to whom the apostle wrote. They walked in lasciviousness, every species of lewdness and impurity; lusts, strong irregular appetites and desires of all kinds; excess of wine, "inflamed with wine"; revellings, lascivious feastings, with drunken songs; banquetings, "wine feasts, drinking matches"; abominable idolatries, that is, the abominations practiced at their idol feasts, where they not only worshipped the idol, but did it with the most impure, obscene, and abominable rites. This was the general state of the Gentile world, and with this monstrous wickedness Christianity had everywhere to struggle.

4. They think it strange. They wonder and are astonished at you, that you can renounce these gratifications of the flesh for a spiritual something, the good of which they cannot see. Excess of riot. "Flood of profligacy"; bearing down all rule, order, and restraints before it. Speaking evil of. Literally, "blaspheming"; i.e., speaking impiously against God, and calumniously of you.

5. To judge the quick and the dead. They shall give account of these irregularities to Him who is prepared to judge both the Jews and the Gentiles. The Gentiles, previously to the preaching of the gospel among them, were reckoned to be "dead in trespasses and sins," Eph. ii. 1-5; under the sentence of death, because they had sinned. The Jews had at least, by their religious profession, a name to live; and by that profession were bound to live to God.

6. Was the gospel preached also to them that are dead. But if the apostle had the same fact in view which he mentions in chap. iii. 19-20, then the antediluvians are the persons intended. For this cause—that Christ is prepared "to judge the quick and the dead," and to dispense righteous judgment in consequence of having afforded them every necessary advantage; was the gospel preached by Noah also to them that are dead—the antediluvian world, then dead in trespasses and sins, and condemned to death by the righteous judgment of God. But in His great compassion He afforded them a respite, that though they were condemned as men in the flesh (Gen. vi. 3), yet, hearing this gospel by Noah, they might believe, and live according to God in the spirit—live a blessed life in eternity according to the mercy of God, who sent His Spirit to strive with them.

7. But the end of all things is at hand. I think that here also Peter keeps the history of the deluge before his eyes, finding a parallel to the state of the Jews in his own time in that of the antediluvians in the days of Noah. In Gen. vi. 13, God said unto Noah, "The end of all flesh is come before me." This was spoken at a time when God had decreed the destruction of the world by a flood. Peter says, The end of all things is at hand; and this he spoke when God had determined to destroy the Jewish people and their polity by one of the most signal judgments that ever fell upon any nation or people. The end of the Temple, the end of the Levitical priesthood, the end of the whole Jewish economy, was then at hand. Be . . . sober, and watch unto prayer. Be . . . sober—make a prudent and moderate use of all you possess; and watch against all occasions of sin; and pray for the supporting hand of God to be upon you for good, that you may escape the destruction that is coming upon the Jews, and that you may be saved from among them when the scourge comes.

8. Have fervent charity. "Intense love; for love shall cover a multitude of sins." A loving disposition leads us to pass by the faults of others, to forgive offenses against ourselves, and to excuse and lessen, as far as is consistent with truth, the transgressions of men. It does not mean that our love to others will induce God to pardon our offenses.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. To hospitality, v. 9. The proper objects of Christian hospitality are one another. The manner of performing this duty is this: it must be done in an easy, kind, handsome manner, without grudging or grumbling at the expense or trouble. Christians ought not only to be charitable, but hospitable, one to another.

4. To the improvement of talents, v. 11.

(1) Whatever gift, whatever power, of doing good is given to us, we should minister with the same one to another. In receiving and using the manifold gifts of God we must look upon ourselves as stewards only.

(2) The apostle exemplifies his direction about gifts in two particulars—speaking and ministering. If any man speak or teach, he must do it as the oracles of God. What Christians in private, or ministers in public, teach and speak must be the pure word and oracles of God. If any man minister let him do it as of the ability which God giveth. That God in all things may be glorified, through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. First, It is the duty of Christians in private, as well as ministers in public, to speak to one another of the things of God. Secondly, It highly concerns all preachers of the gospel to keep close to the word of God, and to treat that word as becomes the oracles of God. Thirdly, Whatever we are called to do for the honour of God and the good of others we should do it with all our might. Fourthly, In all the duties and services of life we should aim at the glory of God; all other views must be subservient to this. Fifthly, God in all things must be glorified through Jesus Christ, who is the only way to the Father.

Verses 12–19

The frequent repetition of comfort to Christians, considered as sufferers, in every chapter of this epistle, shows that the greatest danger these new converts were in arose from the persecutions to which their embracing Christianity exposed them. The apostle comes here to direct them in the necessary duty of patience under sufferings.

I. The apostle's kind manner of address: they were his beloved, v. 9.

II. His advice to them, relating to their sufferings.

1. They should not think them strange, nor be surprised at them.

(1) Though they be sharp and fiery, yet they are designed only to try, not to ruin them. They ought rather to rejoice under their sufferings, because theirs may properly be called Christ's sufferings. He suffers in them, and feels in our infirmities; and, if we be partakers of his sufferings, we shall also be made partakers of his glory. The apostle owns these poor afflicted Christians, and calls them his beloved. True Christians never look more amiable one to another than in their adversities. There is no reason for Christians to wonder at the unkindnesses and persecutions of the world, because they are forewarned of them. Christ himself endured them. Christians ought not only to be patient, but to rejoice, in their sharpest sorest sufferings for Christ. Those who rejoice in their sufferings for Christ shall eternally triumph and rejoice with him in glory.

(2) The apostle descends to a lower degree of persecution, v. 14. They would be reviled, evil-spoken of, and slandered for the name or sake of Christ. In such case he asserts, Happy are you. "You have the Spirit of God with you and the Spirit of God is also the Spirit of glory. This glorious Spirit resteth upon you. By your patience and fortitude in suffering he is on your part glorified; but by the contempt and reproaches cast upon you the Spirit itself is evil-spoken of and blasphemed." The happiness of good people not only consists with, but even flows from, their afflictions: Happy are you. That man who hath the Spirit of God resting upon him cannot be miserable, let his afflictions be ever so great. When good people are vilified for the name of Christ his Holy Spirit is glorified in them.

fenses. Perhaps the additional idea is included, By prayer for them, love tries to have them covered by God; and so being the instrument of converting the sinner from his error, "covereth a (not 'the,' as English Version) multitude of sins"; but the former idea from Proverbs is the prominent one. 9. (Rom. 12:13; Heb. 13:2.) Not the spurious hospitality which passes current in the world, but the entertaining of those needing it, especially those exiled for the faith, as the representatives of Christ, and all hospitality to whomsoever exercised from genuine Christian love. without grudging–Greek, "murmuring." "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity," i.e. open-hearted sincerity; with cordiality. Not secretly speaking against the person whom we entertain, or upbraiding him with the favor we have conferred in him. 10. every–"even as each man hath received," in whatever degree, and of whatever kind. The Spirit's gifts (lit., "gift of grace," i.e., gratuitously bestowed) are the common property of the Christian community, each Christian being but a steward for the edifying of the whole, not receiving the gift merely for his own use. minister the same–not discontentedly envying or disparaging the gift of another. one to another–Greek as in vs. 8, "towards yourselves"; implying that all form but one body, and in seeking the good of other members they are promoting the good of themselves. stewards–referring to Matthew 25:15, etc.; Luke 19:13-26. 11. If any . . . speak–viz., as a prophet, or divinely taught teacher in the Church assembly. the . . .–The Greek has no article: "as oracles of God." This may be due to Greek: "God," having no article, it being a principle when a governed noun omits the Greek article that the governing noun should omit it, too. In Acts 7:38 also, the Greek article is wanting; thus English Version, "as the oracles of God," viz., the Old Testament, would be right, and the precept be similar to Romans 12:6, "prophesy according to the analogy of the faith." But the context suits better thus, "Let him speak as (becomes one speaking) oracles OF GOD." His divinely inspired words are not his own, but God's, and as a steward (4:10) having them committed to him, he ought so to speak them. Jesus was the pattern in this respect (Matt. 7:29; John 12:49; 14:10; cf. Paul, II Cor. 2:17). Note, the very same term as is applied in the only other passages where it occurs (Acts 7:38; Rom. 3:2; Heb. 5:12), to the Old Testament inspired writings, is here predicated of the inspired words (the substance of which was afterwards committed to writing) of the New Testament prophets. minister–in acts; the other sphere of spiritual activity besides speaking. as of–"out of" the store of his "strength" (Greek, physical power in relation to outward service, rather than moral and intellectual "ability"; so in Mark 12:30). giveth–Greek, "supplieth"; originally said of a choragus, who supplied the chorus with all necessaries for performing their several parts. that God in all things may be glorified–the final end of all a Christian's acts. through Jesus Christ–the mediator through whom all our blessings come down to us, and also through whom all our praises ascend to God. Through Christ alone can God be glorified in us and our sayings and doings. to whom–Christ. be–Greek, "is." for ever and ever–Greek, "unto the ages of the ages." 12. strange–they might think it strange that God should allow His chosen children to be sore tried. fiery trial–like the fire by which metals are tested and their dross removed. The Greek adds, "in your case." which is to try you–Greek, "which is taking place for a trial to you." Instead of its "happening to you" as some strange and untoward chance, it "is taking place" with the gracious design of trying you; God has a wise design in it–a consolatory reflection. 13. inasmuch as–The oldest MSS. read, "in proportion as"; "in as far as" ye by suffering are partakers of Christ's sufferings, i.e., by faith enter into realizing fellowship with them; willingly for His sake suffering as He suffered. with exceeding joy–Greek, "exulting joy"; now ye rejoice amidst sufferings; then ye shall EXULT, for ever free from sufferings (ch. 1:6, 8). If we will not bear suffering for Christ now, we must bear eternal sufferings hereafter. 14. for–Greek, "IN the name of Christ," viz., as Christians (vs. 16; ch. 3:14, above); "in My name, because ye belong to Christ." The emphasis lies on this: vs. 15, "as a murderer, thief," etc., stands in contrast. Let your suffering be on account of Christ, not on account of evil-doing (ch. 2:20). reproached–Reproach affects noble minds more than loss of goods, or even bodily sufferings. the spirit . . . upon you–the same Spirit as rested on Christ (Luke 4:18). "The Spirit of glory" is His Spirit, for He is the "Lord of glory" (Jas. 2:1). Be-

9. Use hospitality. Be ever ready to divide your bread with the hungry, and to succor the stranger. Without grudging. "Without grumblings." Do nothing merely because it is commanded, but do it from love to God and man; then it will be without grumbling.

10. Hath received the gift. "A gift"; any blessing of providence or grace. I cannot think that the word means here the Holy Ghost, or any of His supernatural gifts or influences; it may include those, but it signifies anything given by the mere mercy and bounty of God. But perhaps in this place it may signify some or any office in the Church; and this sense, indeed, the connection seems to require. Stewards of the manifold grace. Whatever gifts or endowments any man may possess, they are, properly speaking, not his own; they are the Lord's property, and to be employed in His work, and to promote His glory.

11. If any man speak. In order to explain or enforce God's Word, and edify his neighbor, let him do it as those did to whom the living oracles were committed; they spoke as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost.

Of the ability which God giveth. Perhaps the ministering here may refer to the care of the poor, and the ability is the means which God may have placed in their hands; and they are to minister this as coming immediately from God, and lead the minds of the poor to consider Him as their Benefactor, that He in all things may be glorified through Christ Jesus.

12. Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial. "The burning." The metaphor is old, but noble; it represents the Christians at Pontus as having fire cast upon them for the trying of their faith, as gold is tried by fire, chap. i. 7, to which the apostle alludes.

14. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ. To be reproached for the name of Christ is to be reproached for being a Christian. This is the highest honor to which any man can arrive in this world, and therefore the apostle says to such, Happy are ye.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. They should take care they did not suffer justly, as evil-doers, v. 15. Their enemies charged them with these and other foul crimes: therefore the apostle thought these cautions necessary. If any man suffer for the cause of Christianity, and with a patient Christian spirit, he ought not to account it a shame, and ought to glorify God who hath thus dignified him, v. 16. But there is very little comfort in sufferings when we bring them upon ourselves by our own sin and folly. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes the martyr.

3. Their trials were now at hand, v. 17, 18.

(1) The time had come when judgment must begin at the house of God. This renders all the foregoing exhortations to patience necessary for you. These judgments will but begin with you that are God's house. "Your troubles will be but light and short, in comparison of what shall befall the wicked world. What shall the end be of those who obey not the gospel of God?" The best of God's servants have so much amiss in them as renders it fit and necessary that God should sometimes correct and punish them. Judgment begins at the house of God. Those who are the family of God have their worst things in this life. Their worst condition is tolerable, and will soon be over. The apostle distinguishes the disobedient from the house of God. What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel?

(2) He intimates the irremediable doom of the wicked, v. 18. The grievous sufferings of good people in this world are sad presages of much heavier judgments coming upon impenitent sinners. It is as much as the righteous can do to be saved. Let the absolute necessity of salvation balance the difficulty of it. Your difficulties are greatest at first; God offers his grace and help.

4. When called to suffer, according to the will of God, they should look chiefly to the safety of their souls, committing them to God, who will undertake the charge, for he is their Creator, v. 19. All the sufferings that befall good people come upon them according to the will of God. It is the duty of Christians to look more to the keeping of their souls than to the preserving of their bodies. Good people have great encouragement to commit their souls to God, because he is their Creator, and faithful in all his promises.

lievers may well overcome the "reproach" (cf. Heb. 11:26), seeing that "the Spirit of glory" rests upon them, as upon Him. It cannot prevent the happiness of the righteous, if they are reproached for Christ, because they retain before God their glory entire, as having the Spirit, with whom glory is inseparably joined [CALVIN]. and of God—Greek, "and the (Spirit) of God"; implying that the Spirit of glory (which is Christ's Spirit) is at the same time also the Spirit of God. on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified—omitted in the two oldest Greek MSS. and Syriac and Coptic versions, but supported by one very old MS., Vulgate, Sahidic, Cyprian, etc. "Evil spoken of," lit., "blasphemed"; not merely do they "speak against you," as in ch. 3:16, but blasphemously mock Christ and Christianity itself. 15. But—Greek, "For." "Reproached in the name of Christ" I say (vs. 14), "FOR let none . . . ." as . . . as . . . as . . . as—the as twice in italics is not in the Greek. The second Greek, "as," distinguishes the class "busybody in other men's matters," from the previous class of delinquents. 16. a Christian—the name given in contempt first at Antioch, Acts 11:26; 26:28; the only three places where the term occurs. At first believers had no distinctive name, but were called among themselves "brethren," Acts 6:3; "disciples," Acts 6:1; "those of the way," Acts 9:2; "saints," Romans 1:7; by the Jews (who denied that Jesus was the CHRIST, and so would never originate the name Christian), in contempt, "Nazarenes." At Antioch, where first idolatrous Gentiles (Cornelius, Acts 10, was not an idolater, but a proselyte) were converted, and wide missionary work began, they could be no longer looked on as a Jewish sect, and so the Gentiles designated them by the new name "Christians." let him not be ashamed—though the world is ashamed of shame. To suffer for one's own faults is no honor (vs. 15; ch. 2:20),—for Christ, is no shame (vs. 14; ch. 3:13). but let him glorify God—not merely glory in persecution; Peter might have said as the contrast, "but let him esteem it an honor to himself"; but the honor is to be given to God, who counts him worthy of such an honor, involving exemption from the coming judgments on the ungodly. on this behalf—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "in this name," i.e., in respect of suffering for such a name. 17. Another ground of consolation to Christians. All must pass under the judgment of God; God's own household first, their chastisement being here, for which they should glorify Him as a proof of their membership in His family, and a pledge of their escape from the end of those whom the last judgment shall find disobedient to the Gospel. the time—Greek, "season," "fit time." judgment must begin at the house of God—the Church of living believers. Peter has in mind Ezekiel 9:6; cf. Amos 3:2; Jeremiah 25:29.

if . . . at us, what shall the end be of them . . .—If even the godly have chastening judgments now, how much more shall the ungodly be doomed to damnatory judgments at last. gospel of God—the very God who is to judge them. 18. scarcely—Cf. "so as by fire," I Corinthians 3:15; having to pass through trying chastisements, as David did for his sin. "The righteous" man has always more or less of trial, but the issue is certain, and the entrance into the kingdom abundant at last. The "scarcely" marks the severity of the ordeal, and the unlikelihood (in a mere human point of view) of the righteous sustaining it; but the righteousness of Christ and God's everlasting covenant make it all sure. ungodly—having no regard for God; negative description. sinner—loving sin; positive; the same man is at once God-forgetting and sin-loving. appear—in judgment. 19. General conclusion from vss. 17, 18. Seeing that the godly know that their sufferings are by God's will, to chasten them that they may not perish with the world, they have good reason to trust God cheerfully amidst sufferings, persevering in well-doing. let them—Greek, "let them also," "let even them," as well as those not suffering. Not only under ordinary circumstances, but also in time of suffering, let believers commit. . . . (Cf. Note, ch. 3:14.) according to the will of God—(Note, ch. 3:17). God's will that the believer should suffer (vs. 17), is for his good. One oldest MS. and Vulgate read, "in well-doings"; contrast ill-doings, vs. 15. Our committing of ourselves to God is to be, not in indolent and passive quietism, but accompanied with active well-doings. faithful—to His covenant promises. Creator—who is therefore also our Almighty Preserver. He, not we, must keep our souls.

ADAM CLARKE

On their part he is evil spoken of. "By them He is blasphemed. by you He is honored."

15. But let none of you suffer . . . as a busybody in other men's matters. "The inspector of another"; meddling with other people's concerns, and forgetting their own.

16. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian. If he be persecuted because he has embraced the Christian faith, let him not be ashamed; but let him rather glorify God on this very account. Christ suffered by the Jews because He was holy; Christians suffer because they resemble Him. The word Christian is used only here and in Acts xi. 26; xxvi. 28.

17. Judgment must begin at the house of God. Our Lord had predicted that, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem, His own followers would have to endure various calamities; see Matt. xxiv. 9, 21-22; Mark xiii. 12-13; John xvi. 2 ff. Here His true disciples are called the house or "family" of God. That the converted Jews suffered much from their own brethren needs little proof. But probably the word which we here translate judgment may mean no more than affliction and distress; for it was a Jewish maxim that, when God was about to pour down some general judgment, He began with afflicting His own people in order to correct and amend them, that they might be prepared for the overflowing scourge. And if it first begin at us—Jews who have repented and believed on the Son of God; what shall the end be of them—the Jews who continue impenitent, and obey not the gospel of God?

18. And if the righteous scarcely be saved? If it shall be with extreme difficulty that the Christians shall escape from Jerusalem when the Roman armies shall come against it with the full commission to destroy it, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Where shall the proud, Pharisaic boaster in his own outside holiness, and the profligate transgressor of the laws of God, "show themselves," as having escaped the divine vengeance? It is rather strange, but it is a fact, that this verse is the Septuagint translation of Prov. xi. 31: "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner." For this the Septuagint and Peter have, If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

19. Suffer according to the will of God. A man suffers according to the will of God who suffers for righteousness' sake; and who, being reviled, reviles not again. Commit the keeping of their souls. Place their lives confidently in His hand who, being their Creator, will also be their Preserver, and keep that safely which is committed to His trust. God is here represented as faithful, because He will always fulfill His promises, and withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 5

Verses 1-4

I. The persons to whom this exhortation is given—elders by office, rather than by age, ministers of those churches to whom he wrote this epistle.

II. He tells them he was their fellow-elder, and so puts nothing upon them but what he was ready to perform himself.

He was also a witness of the sufferings of Christ. He was also a partaker of the glory that shall be completely enjoyed at the second coming of Jesus Christ. It was the peculiar honour of Peter, and a few more, to be the witnesses of Christ's sufferings; but it is the privilege of all true Christians to be partakers of the glory that shall be revealed.

III. The pastor's duty described. 1. To feed the flock, by preaching to them the sincere word of God.

2. The pastors of the church must take the oversight thereof. 3. They must be examples to the flock, and practice the holiness which they preach and recommend to their people. These duties must be performed, not by constraint, but from a willing mind that takes pleasure in the work: not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, regarding the flock more than the fleece;

neither as being lords over God's heritage, tyrannizing over them. These poor, dispersed, suffering Christians were the flock of God. The rest of the world is a brutal herd. These are an orderly flock, redeemed to God by the great Shepherd. They are also dignified with the title of God's heritage, chosen out of the common multitude for his own people. They are God's people, and should be treated with love, meekness, and tenderness, for the sake of him to whom they belong.

IV. In opposition to that filthy lucre the apostle sets before them the crown of glory designed by the great shepherd for all his faithful ministers. Jesus Christ is the chief shepherd of the whole flock and heritage of God. He is also the chief shepherd over all inferior shepherds. This chief shepherd will appear, to judge all ministers and undershepherds. Those that are found to have done their duty shall receive from the grand shepherd a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Verses 5-7

The apostle comes now to instruct the flock.

I. He exhorts those that are younger and inferior to submit themselves to the elder.

As to one another, the rule is that they should all be subject one to another, so far as to receive the reproofs and counsels one of another. He advises them to be clothed with humility.

CHAPTER 5

Vss. 1-14. EXHORTATIONS TO ELDERS, JUNIORS, AND ALL IN GENERAL. PARTING PRAYER. CONCLUSION. 1. elders—alike in office and age (vs 5). I . . . also an elder—To put one's self on a level with those whom we exhort, gives weight to one's exhortations (cf. II John 1). Peter, in true humility for the Gospel's sake, does not put forward his apostleship here, wherein he presided over the elders. In the apostleship the apostles have no successors, for "the signs of an apostle" have not been transmitted. The presidents over the presbyters and deacons, by whatever name designated, angel, bishop, or moderator, etc., though of the same ORDER as the presbyters, yet have virtually succeeded to a superintendency of the Church analogous to that exercised by the apostles (this superintendency and priority existed from the earliest times after the apostles [TERTULLIAN]); just as the Jewish synagogue (the model which the Church followed) was governed by a council of presbyters, presided over by one of themselves, "the chief ruler of the synagogue." (Cf. VITRINGA, Synagogue, Part II, chs. 3 and 7.) witness—an eyewitness of Christ's sufferings, and so qualified to exhort you to believing patience in suffering for well-doing after His example (ch. 4:19; 2:20). This explains the "therefore" inserted in the oldest MSS., "I therefore exhort," resuming exhortation from ch. 4:19. His higher dignity as an apostle is herein delicately implied, as eyewitnessing was a necessary qualification for apostleship: cf. Peter's own speeches, Acts 1:21, 22; 2:32; 10:39. also—implying the righteous recompense corresponding to the sufferings. partaker of the glory—according to Christ's promise; an earnest of which was given in the transfiguration. 2. Feed—Greek, "Tend as a shepherd," by discipline and doctrine. Lead, feed, heed; by prayer, exhortation, government, and example. The dignity is marked by the term "elder"; the duties of the office, to tend or oversee, by "bishop." Peter has in mind Christ's injunction to him, "Feed (tend) My sheep . . . Feed (pasture) My lambs" (John 21:16). He invites the elders to share with him the same duty (cf. Acts 20:28). The flock is Christ's. which is among you—While having a concern for all the Church, your special duty is to feed that portion of it "which is among you." oversight—Greek, "bishopric," or duty of bishops, i.e., overseer. not by constraint—Necessity is laid upon them, but willingness prevents it being felt, both in undertaking and in fulfilling the duty [BENGEL]. willingly—One oldest MS., Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic, add, "as God would have it to be done" (Rom. 8:27). not for filthy lucre—(Isa. 56:11; Titus 1:7). of a ready mind—promptly and heartily, without selfish motive of gain-seeking, as the Israelites gave their services willing-heartedly to the sanctuary. 3. being lords—Greek, "lording it": implying pride and oppression. "Not that we have dominion over your faith." God's heritage—Greek, "the inheritances," i.e., the portions of the Church committed severally to your pastoral charge [BENGEL]. It is explained by "the flock" in the next clause. being—Greek, "becoming." ensamples—the most effective recommendation of precept (I Tim. 4:12). Titus 2:7, "patterns." So Jesus. "A monstrosity it is to see the highest rank joined with the meanest mind, the first seat with the lowest life, a grandiloquent tongue with a lazy life, much talking with no fruit" [BERNARD]. 4. And—"And so": as the result of "being ensamples" (vs. 3). chief Shepherd—the title peculiarly Christ's own, not Peter's or the pope's. when . . . shall appear—Greek, "be manifested" (Col. 3:4). Faith serves the Lord while still unseen. crown—Greek, stephanos, a garland of victory, the prize in the Grecian games, woven of ivy, parsley, myrtle, olive, or oak. glory—Greek, "the glory," viz., to be then revealed (vs. 1; ch. 4:13). that fadeth not away—Greek, "amaranthine" (cf. ch. 1:4). 5. ye younger—The deacons were originally the younger men, the presbyters older; but subsequently as presbyter expressed the office of Church ruler or teacher, so Greek neoteros means not (as lit.) young men in age, but subordinate ministers and servants of the Church. So Christ uses the term "younger." For He explains it by "he that doth serve," lit., "he that ministereth as a deacon"; just as He explains "the greatness" by "he that is chief," lit., "he that ruleth," the very word applied to the bishops or presbyters. Yea—to sum up all my exhortations in one. be subject—omitted in the oldest MSS. and Versions, but TISCHENDORF quotes the Vatican MS. for it. Then translate, "Gird (ch. 1:13; 4:1) fast on humility (lowliness of mind) to

ADAM CLARKE

1. The elders which are among you. In this place the term elders or presbyters is the name of an office. They were as pastors or shepherds of the flock of God, the Christian people among whom they lived. They were the same as bishops, 1 Tim. v. 17. Who am also an elder. "A fellow elder"; one on a level with yourselves.

A witness of the sufferings of Christ. He was with Christ in the garden; he was with Him when He was apprehended; and he was with Him in the high priest's hall.

A partaker of the glory. He had the promise from his Lord and Master that he should be with Him in heaven, to behold His glory, John xvii. 21, 24.

2. Feed the flock. Do not fleece the flock. Taking the oversight. Discharging the office of bishops or superintendents. This is another proof that bishop and presbyter were the same order in the apostolic times, though afterwards they were made distinct. Not by constraint. The office was laborious and dangerous, especially in these times of persecution; it is no wonder then that even those who were best qualified for the office should strive to excuse themselves. Not for filthy lucre. Could the office of a bishop, in those early days and in the time of persecution, be a lucrative office? Does not the Spirit of God lead the apostle to speak these things rather for posterity than for that time? But of a ready mind. Doing all for Christ's sake, and through love to immortal souls.

3. Neither as being lords over God's heritage. This is the voice of Peter in his catholic Epistle to the catholic Church! According to him there are to be no lords over God's heritage. The bishops and presbyters who are appointed by the Head of the Church are to feed the flock, to guide and to defend it, not to fleece and waste it; and they are to look for their reward in another world, and in the approbation of God in their consciences. And in humility, self-abasement, self-renunciation, and heavenly-mindedness they are to be ensamples, "types," to the flock.

4. When the chief Shepherd. That is, the Lord Jesus Christ, whose is the flock, and who provides the pasture, and from whom, if you are legally called to the most awful work of preaching the gospel, you have received your commission. When he shall appear to judge the world in righteousness, you who have fed His flock, who have taken the superintendency of it, "not by constraint," nor for filthy lucre's sake, not as lords over the heritage, but with a ready mind, employing body, soul, spirit, time, and talents in endeavoring to pluck sinners as brands from eternal burnings, and build up the Church of Christ on its most holy faith—ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, an eternal nearness and intimacy with the ineffably glorious God.

5. Likewise, ye younger. Probably means here "inferiors," or those not in sacred offices; and may be understood as referring to the people at large who are called to obey them that have the rule over them in the Lord. Be subject one to another. Strive all to serve each other; let the pastors strive to serve the people, and the people the pastors; and let there be no contention, but who shall do most to oblige and profit all the rest. Be clothed with humility. To be clothed with a thing or person is a Greek

"If you be disobedient and proud, God will set himself to oppose you; for he resisteth the proud, when he giveth grace to the humble." Humility is the great preserver of peace and order in all Christian societies, consequently pride is the great disturber of them. There is a mutual opposition between God and the proud. Where God giveth grace to be humble, he will give more grace and humility. Hence the apostle adds: "Since God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble, therefore humble yourselves, not only one to another, but to the great God. His hand is almighty, and can easily pull you down if you be proud, or exalt you if you be humble." Humbling ourselves to God under his hand is the next way to deliverance and exaltation.

II. The apostle rightly supposes that what he had foretold of greater hardships yet coming might excite in them abundance of care. Foreseeing this anxious care would be a heavy burden, and a sore temptation, he gives them the best advice. His advice is to cast all their care, or all care of themselves, upon God. Trust in him with a firm, composed mind, for he careth for you. He is willing to release you of your care, and take the care of you upon himself. The best of Christians are apt to labour under the burden of anxious and excessive care. The cares even of good people are very burdensome, and too often very sinful. The best remedy against immoderate care is to cast our care upon God. A firm belief of the rectitude of the divine will calms the spirit of man.

Verses 8, 9

I. He shows them their danger from an enemy whom he describes,

1. By his characters and names. He is an adversary: "That adversary of yours." The devil, the grand accuser of all the brethren. He is a roaring lion, the fierce and greedy pursuer of souls.

2. By his business: He walks about, seeking whom he may devour; his whole design is to devour and destroy souls.

II. Hence he infers that it is their duty to be sober, to be vigilant, to be watchful and diligent to prevent his designs and save their souls. To resist him steadfast in the faith. It was the faith of these people that Satan aimed at. This strong trial and temptation they must resist, by being steadfast in the faith.

III. The like afflictions befell their brethren in all parts of the world, all the people of God were their fellow-soldiers in this warfare. The devil is the grand persecutor, as well as the deceiver and accuser, of the brethren. Sobriety and watchfulness are necessary virtues at all times, but especially in times of suffering and persecution. If your faith give way, you are gone. The consideration of what others suffer is proper to encourage us to bear our own share in any affliction: The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren.

Verses 10–14

We come now to the conclusion of this epistle.

I. The apostle begins with a most weighty prayer, which he addresses to God as the God of all grace.

1. What he prays for on their account. After they had suffered awhile that God would perfect his work in them. Those who are called to be heirs of eternal life through Jesus Christ must, nevertheless, suffer in this world, but their sufferings will be but for a little while. Therefore he is earnestly to be sought unto by continual prayer, and dependence upon his promises.

one another." The verb is lit., "tie on with a fast knot" [WAHL]. Or, "gird on humility as the slave dress (encomboma)": as the Lord girded Himself with a towel to perform a servile office of humility and love, washing His disciples' feet, a scene in which Peter had played an important part, so that he would naturally have it before his mind. God resisteth the proud—Quoted, as James 4:6, from Proverbs 3:34. Peter had James before his mind, and gives his Epistle inspired sanction. Cf. vs. 9 with James 4:7, lit., "arrayeth Himself against." Other sins flee from God: pride alone opposeth itself to God; therefore, God also in turn opposes Himself to the proud [GERHARD in ALFORD]. Humility is the vessel of all graces [AUGUSTINE]. 6. under the mighty hand—afflicting you (ch. 3:15): "accept" His chastisements, and turn to Him that smiteth you. He depresses the proud and exalts the humble. in due time—Wait humbly and patiently for His own fit time. One oldest MS. and Vulgate read, "In the season of visitation," viz., His visitation in mercy. 7. Casting—once for all: so the Greek aorist. care—"anxiety." The advantage flowing from humbling ourselves under God's hand (vs. 6) is confident reliance on His goodness. Exemption from care goes along with humble submission to God. careth for you—lit., "respecting you." Care is a burden which faith casts off the man on his God. Cf. Psalm 22:10; 37:5; 55:22, to which Peter alludes; Luke 12:22, 37; Philippians 4:6. careth—not so strong a Greek word as the previous Greek "anxiety". 8. Peter has in mind Christ's warning to himself to watch against Satan, from forgetting which he fell. Be sober . . . vigilant—"Care," i.e., anxiety, will intoxicate the soul; therefore be sober, i.e., self-restrained. Yet, lest this freedom from care should lead any to false security, he adds, "Be vigilant" against "your adversary." Let this be your "care." God provides, therefore do not be anxious. The devil seeks, therefore watch [BENGEL]. because—omitted in the oldest MSS. The broken and disjointed sentences are more fervid and forcible. LUCIFER of Cagliari reads as English Version. adversary—lit., "opponent in a court of justice" (Zech. 3:1). "Satan" means opponent. "Devil," accuser or slanderer (Rev. 12:10). "The enemy" (Matt. 13:39). "A murderer from the beginning" (John 8:44). He counteracts the Gospel and its agents. "The tempter." roaring lion—implying his violent and insatiable thirst for prey as a hungry lion. Through man's sin he got God's justice on his side against us; but Christ, our Advocate, by fulfilling all the demands of justice for us, has made our redemption altogether consistent with justice. walketh about—(Job 1:7; 2:2). So the children of the wicked one cannot rest. devour—entangle in worldly "care" (vs. 7) and other snares, so as finally to destroy. Cf. Revelation 12:15, 16. 9. (Luke 4:13; Eph. 6:11-17; Jas. 4:7.) steadfast—Cf. established in the truth," II Pet. 1:12. Satan's power exists only in respect to the unbelieving; the faithful he cannot hurt (I John 5:18). Faith gives strength to prayer, the great instrument against the foe (Jas. 1:6, etc.). knowing . . .—"encouragement not to faint in afflictions": your brethren suffer the same; nothing beyond the common lot of Christians befalls you (I Cor. 10:13). It is a sign of God's favor rather than displeasure, that Satan is allowed to harass you, as he did Job. Your fellow Christians have the same battle of faith and prayer against Satan. are—are being accomplished according to the appointment of God. in the world—lying in the wicked one, and therefore necessarily the scene of "tribulation" (John 16:33). 10. Comforting assurance that God will finally "perfect" His work of "grace" in them, after they have undergone the necessary previous suffering. But—Only do you watch and resist the foe: God will perform the rest [BENGEL]. of all grace—(Cf. ch. 4:10). The God to whom as its source all grace is to be referred; who in grace completes what in grace He began. He from the first "called YOU (so the oldest MSS. read for 'us') unto (with a view to) glory." He will not let His purpose fall short of completion. If He does so in punishing, much more in grace. The three are fitly conjoined: the call, the glory to which we are called, and the way (suffering); the fourth is the ground of the calling, viz., the grace of God in Christ. by—Greek, "in." Christ is He in virtue of whom, and in union with whom, believers are called to glory. The opposite is "in the world" (vs. 9; John 16:33). after that ye have suffered—Join to "called you": suffering, as a necessary preliminary to glory, was contemplated in God's calling. a while—short and inconsiderable, as compared with the glory. perfect . . .— mode of speech for being that thing or person with which a man is said to be clothed. Be truly humble, and let your outward garb and conduct be a proof of the humility of your hearts.

6. Humble yourselves. Those who submit patiently to the dispensations of God's providence, He lifts up; those who lift themselves up, God thrusts down.

7. Casting all your care. Your "anxiety," your "distracting care." Upon him; for he careth for you. "For He concerns himself with the things that interest you." This is a plain reference to Ps. lv. 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee." He will bear both you and your burden.

8. Be sober. Avoid drunkenness of your senses, and drunkenness in your souls; be not overcharged with the concerns of the world. Be vigilant. Awake, and keep awake; be always "watchful"; never be off your guard. Your enemies are alert; they are never off theirs. Your adversary the devil. This is the reason why you should be sober and vigilant; you have an ever active, implacable, subtle enemy to contend with. He walketh about—he has access to you everywhere; he knows your feelings and your propensities, and informs himself of all your circumstances. Only God can know more and do more than he; therefore your care must be cast upon God. As a roaring lion. Satan tempts under three forms: (1) The subtle serpent; to beguile our senses, pervert our judgment, and enchant our imagination. (2) As an angel of light; to deceive us with false views of spiritual things. (3) As a roaring lion; to bear us down, and destroy us by violent opposition, persecution, and death. Thus he was acting towards the followers of God at Pontus, etc., who were now suffering a grievous persecution. Walketh about. Traversing the earth; a plain reference to Job ii. 2. Seeking whom he may devour. "Whom he may gulp down." There is a beauty in this verse, and a striking apposition between the first and last words, which I think have not been noticed: Be sober, from ne, "not," and piein, "to drink"—"do not drink, do not swallow down"; and the word from kata, "down," and piein, "to drink." If you swallow strong drink down, the devil will swallow you down.

9. Whom resist. Stand against him. The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren. It is the lot of all the disciples of Christ to suffer persecution. The "brotherhood," the Christian Church, everywhere is exposed to the assaults of men and devils. You are persecuted by the heathen among whom you live, and from among whom you are gathered into the fold of Christ; but even those who profess the same faith with you, and who are resident among the Jews (for so I think in the world is here to be understood), are also persecuted, both heathens and Jews being equally opposed to the pure and holy doctrines of the gospel. Any man who has read the Greek Testament with any attention must have observed a vast number of places in which the word cosmos, which we translate world, means the Jewish people and the Jewish state, and nothing else.

10. But the God of all grace. The Fountain of infinite compassion, mercy, and goodness. Who hath called us. By the preaching of the gospel. After that ye have suffered a while. "Having suffered a little time"; that is, while you are enduring these persecutions, God will cause all to work together for your good. Make you perfect. All these words are read in the

2. His doxology, v. 11.

III. He recommends Silvanus, the person by whom he sent them this brief epistle. The prejudices that some of these Jews might have against Silvanus, as a minister of the Gentiles, would soon wear off when they were once convinced that he was a faithful brother.

II. He recapitulates the design of his writing this epistle to them (v. 12). The doctrine of salvation, which he had explained and they had embraced, was the true account of the grace of God, foretold by the prophets and published by Jesus Christ.

As they had embraced the gospel, they would continue steadfast in it. A firm persuasion that we are in the true way to heaven will be the best motive to stand fast, and persevere therein.

IV. He closes with salutations and a solemn benediction. In this salutation he particularly joins Mark the evangelist, who was then with him, and who was his son in a spiritual sense.

All the churches of Jesus Christ ought to have a most affectionate concern one for another; they should love and pray for one another. He exhorts them to fervent love and charity one towards another, and to express this by giving the kiss of peace (v. 14), and so concludes with a benediction, which he confines to those that are in Christ Jesus. The blessing he pronounces upon them is peace, by which he means all necessary good.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

The Greek has, "shall HIMSELF perfect you": though you are called on to watch and resist the foe, God Himself must really do all in and through you. The same God who begins must Himself complete the work. The Greek for "stablish" (so as to be "steadfast in the faith," vs. 9) is the same as "strengthen," Luke 22:32.

11. To him—emphatic. To Him and Him alone: not to ourselves. Cf. "Himself," Note, vs. 10. glory and—omitted in the oldest MSS. and versions. dominion—Greek, "the might" shown in so "perfecting," you, vs. 10. 12. Silvanus—Silas, the companion of Paul and Timothy: a suitable messenger by whom to confirm, as Peter here does, Paul's doctrine of "the true grace of God" in the same churches (cf. II Pet. 3:16). as I suppose—Join "faithful unto you [STEIGER], as I suppose." Silvanus may have stood in a close relation to the churches in Asia, perhaps having taken the oversight of them after Paul's departure, and had afterwards gone to Peter, by whom he is now sent back to them with this Epistle. "By Silvanus, that faithful brother, as expect, I have written to you" [BIRKS]. briefly—Greek, "in few (words)," as compared with the importance of the subject (Heb. 13:22). exhorting—not so much formally teaching doctrines, which could not be done in so "few words." testifying—bearing my testimony in confirmation (so the Greek compound verb implies) of that truth which ye have already heard from Paul and Silas (I John 2:27). that this—of which I have just written, and of which Paul before testified to you (whose testimony, now that he was no longer in those regions, was called in question probably by some; cf. II Peter 3:15, 16). II Peter 1:12, "the present truth," viz., the grace formerly promised by the prophets, and now manifested to you. "Grace" is the keynote of Paul's doctrine which Peter now confirms (Eph. 2:5, 8). Their sufferings for the Gospel made them to need some attestation and confirmation of the truth, that they should not fall back from it. wherein ye stand—The oldest MSS. read imperatively, "Stand ye." Lit., "into which (having been already admitted, ch. 1:8, 21; 2:7, 8, 9) stand (therein)." Babylon—The Chaldean Babylon on the Euphrates. How unlikely that in a friendly salutation the enigmatical title of Rome given in prophecy (John, Rev. 17:5), should be used! Babylon was the center from which the Asiatic dispersion whom Peter addresses was derived. PHILO (Legat. ad Caium, sec. 36) and JOSEPHUS (Antiquities, 15. 2. 2; 23. 12) inform us that Babylon contained a great many Jews in the apostolic age (whereas those at Rome were comparatively few, about 8000 (JOSEPHUS 17. 11); so it would naturally be visited by the apostle of the circumcision. It was the headquarters of those whom he had so successfully addressed on Pentecost, Acts 2:9, Jewish "Parthians . . . dwellers in Mesopotamia" (the Parthians were then masters of Mesopotamian Babylon); these he ministered to in person. His other hearers, the Jewish "dwellers in Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia," he now ministers to by letter. ERASMUS explains, "Mark who is in the place of a son to me": cf. Acts 12:12, implying Peter's connection with Mark; whence the mention of him in connection with the Church at Babylon, in which he labored under Peter before he went to Alexandria is not unnatural. PAPIAS reports from the presbyter John (B. 3.39), that Mark was interpreter of Peter, recording in his Gospel the facts related to him by Peter. Silvanus or Silas had been substituted for John Mark, as Paul's companion, because of Mark's temporary unfaithfulness. But now Mark restored is associated with Silvanus, Paul's companion, in Peter's esteem, as Mark was already reinstated in Paul's esteem. That Mark had a spiritual connection with the Asiatic churches which Peter addresses, and so naturally salutes them, appears from II Timothy 4:11; Colossians 4:10.

14. kiss of charity—Romans 16:16, "an holy kiss": the token of love to God and the brethren. Love and holiness are inseparable. Cf. the instance, Acts 20:37. Peace—Peter's closing salutation; as Paul's is, "Grace be with you," though he accompanies it with "peace be to the brethren." "Peace" (flowing from salvation) was Christ's own salutation after the resurrection, and from Him Peter derives it. be with you all that are in Christ—The oldest MSS. omit "Jesus."

future tense by the best MSS. and versions. "He will make you perfect"—put you in "complete joint" as the timbers of a building. Stablish. Make you "firm" in every part. Strengthen. Cramp and bind every part so that there shall be no danger of warping, splitting, or falling. Settle. Cause all to rest so evenly and firmly upon the best and surest foundation that you may grow together to a holy temple in the Lord. In a word, that you may be "complete" in all the mind that was in Christ; "supported" in all your trials and difficulties; "strengthened" to resist and overcome all your enemies; and after all abide, firmly "founded," in the truth of grace. All these phrases are architectural; and the apostle has again in view the fine image which he produced in chap. ii. 5.

11. To him—the God of all grace; be glory—all honor and praise be ascribed; and dominion—the government of heaven, earth, and hell; for ever—through time; and ever—through eternity. Amen—so be it, so let it be, and so it shall be.

12. By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose. To say the least of this translation, it is extremely obscure, and not put together with that elegance which is usual to our translators. I see no reason why the clause may not be thus translated: "I have written to you, as I consider, briefly, by Silvanus, the faithful brother." On all hands it is allowed that this Silvanus was the same as Silas, Paul's faithful companion in travel, mentioned in Acts xv. 40; xvi. 19; and if he were the same, Peter could never say as I suppose to his faith and piety: but he might well say this to the shortness of his Epistle, notwithstanding the many and important subjects which it embraced. Exhorting. Calling upon you to be faithful, humble, and steady. And testifying. "Earnestly witnessing" that it is the true grace—the genuine gospel of Jesus Christ, "in which ye stand," and in which you should persevere to the end.

13. Elected together with you. "Fellow elect," or "elected jointly" with you.

And so doth Marcus my son. This is supposed to be the same person who is mentioned in Acts xii. 12, and who is known by the name of John Mark; he is the same who wrote the Gospel that goes under his name. He is called here Peter's son, i.e., according to the faith, Peter probably having been the means of his conversion. This is very likely, as Peter seems to have been intimate at his mother's house. See the account in Acts xii. 6-17.

14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16 and on 1 Cor. xvi. 20. In the above places the kiss is called "a holy kiss"; here, "a kiss of love"; i.e., as a mark of their love to each other, in order that misunderstandings might be prevented. Peace be with you all. May all "prosperity," spiritual and temporal, be with all that are in Christ Jesus—that are truly converted to Him, and live in His Spirit obedient to His will. Amen. Is wanting, as usual, in some of the principal MSS. and versions.

The design of this second epistle is the same with that of the former, as is evident from the first verse of the third chapter, whence observe that, in the things of God, we have need of "precept upon precept, and line upon line," and all little enough to keep them in remembrance; and yet these are the things which should be most faithfully recorded and frequently remembered by us.

CHAPTER 1

I. We have here a description of the person who wrote the epistle, by the name of Simon, as well as Peter, and by the title of servant, as well as that of apostle. He here styles himself a servant (as well as an apostle) of Jesus Christ. How great an honour is it to be the servants of this Master! This is what we cannot, without sin, be ashamed of.

II. We have an account of the people to whom the epistle is written. They are described as having obtained precious faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. True saving faith is a precious grace. True faith is very excellent and of very great use and advantage to those who have it. The just lives by faith. Faith is alike precious in the private Christian and in the apostle; it produces the same precious effects in the one and in the other. Faith, in whomsoever it exists, takes hold of the same precious Saviour, and applies the same precious promises. This precious faith is obtained of God. Faith is the gift of God. The preciousness of faith, as well as our obtaining it, is through the righteousness of Christ.

III. We have the apostolical benediction.

1. An account of the way and means whereby grace and peace are multiplied—it is through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ.

2. What we have already received should encourage us to ask for more. All things that have any relation to, and influence upon, the true spiritual life, the life and power of godliness, are from Jesus Christ.

Vss. 1-21. ADDRESS: EXHORTATION TO ALL GRACES, AS GOD HAS GIVEN US, IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST, ALL THINGS PERTAINING TO LIFE: CONFIRMED BY THE TESTIMONY OF APOSTLES, AND ALSO PROPHETS, TO THE POWER AND COMING OF CHRIST. 1. Simon—the Greek form: in oldest MSS., "Symeon" (Hebrew, i.e., "hearing"), as in Acts 15: 14. His mention of his original name accords with the design of this Second Epistle, which is to warn against the coming false teachers, by setting forth the true "knowledge" of Christ on the testimony of the original apostolic eyewitnesses like himself. This was not required in the First Epistle. servant—"slave": so Paul, Romans 1:1. to them . . .—He addresses a wider range of readers (all believers) than in the First Epistle, ch. 1, but means to include especially those addressed in the First Epistle, as ch. 3:1 proves. obstained—by grace. Applied by Peter to the receiving of the apostleship, lit., "by allotment": as the Greek is, Luke 1:9; John 19:24. They did not acquire it for themselves; the divine election is as independent of man's control, as the lot which is cast forth. like precious—"equally precious" to all: to those who believe, though not having seen Christ, as well as to Peter and those who have seen Him. with us—apostles and eyewitnesses (vs. 18). Though putting forward his apostleship to enforce his exhortation, he with true humility puts himself, as to "the faith," on a level with all other believers. The degree of faith varies in different believers; but in respect to its objects, present justification, sanctification, and future glorification, it is common alike to all. Christ is to all believers "made of God wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." through—Greek, "in." Translate, as the one article to both nouns requires, "the righteousness of Him who is (at once) our God and (our) Saviour."

2. Grace . . . peace—(I Pet. 1:2). through—Greek, "in": the sphere IN which alone grace and peace can be multiplied. knowledge—Greek, "full knowledge." of God, and of Jesus our Lord—The Father is here meant by "God," but the Son in vs. 1: marking how entirely one the Father and Son are (John 14:7-11). The Vulgate omits "of God and"; but oldest MSS. support the words. Still the prominent object of Peter's exhortation is "the knowledge of Jesus our Lord" (a phrase only in Rom. 4: 24), and, only secondarily, of the Father through Him (vs. 8; ch. 2:20; 3:18). 3. According as . . .——Seeing that [ALFORD]. "As He hath given us ALL things (needful) for life and godliness, (so) do you give us ALL diligence. . . ." The oil and flame are given wholly of grace by God, and "taken" by believers: their part henceforth is to "trim their lamps" (cf. vss. 3, 4 with 5, etc.). life and godliness Spiritual life must exist first before there can be true

1. Simon Peter. "Symeon" is the reading of almost all the versions, and of all the most important MSS. And this is the more remarkable, as the surname of Peter occurs upwards of seventy times in the New Testament, and is invariably read Simon, except here, and in Acts xv. 14, where James gives him the name of "Symeon." A servant. Employed in his Master's work. And an apostle. Commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ himself to preach to the Gentiles, and to write these Epistles for the edification of the Church.

Precious faith. "Valuable faith"; faith worth a great price, and faith which cost a great price. With us. God having given to you, believing Gentiles, the same faith and salvation which He had given to us, believing Jews. Through the righteousness of God. Through His method of bringing a lost world, both Jews and Gentiles, to salvation by Jesus Christ; through His gracious impartiality, providing for Gentiles as well as Jews. Of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. This is not a proper translation of the original, which is literally, "Of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ"; and this reading, which is indicated in the margin, should have been received into the text; and it is an absolute proof that Peter calls Jesus Christ "God," even in the properest sense of the word, with the article prefixed.

2. Grace—God's favor; peace—the effects of that favor in the communication of spiritual and temporal blessings. Through the knowledge of God. "By the acknowledging of God, and of Jesus our Lord."

3. As his divine power. His power, which no power can resist, because it is divine—that which properly belongs to the infinite Godhead. Hath given unto us. "Hath endowed us with the gifts," or hath "gifted us." By life and godliness we may understand: (1) a godly life; or (2) eternal life as the end, and godliness the way to it; or (3) what was essentially necessary for the present life, and what was requisite for the life to come.

MATTHEW HENRY

Knowledge of God, and faith in him, are the channel whereby all spiritual supports and comforts are conveyed to us; but then we must own and acknowledge God as the author of our effectual calling, for so he is here described: Him that hath called us to glory and virtue. The design of God in calling or converting men is to bring them to glory and virtue. It is the glory of God's power to convert sinners.

The apostle goes on to encourage their faith and hope in looking for an increase of grace and peace. (1) The good things which the promises make over are exceedingly great. Pardon of sin is one of the blessings here intended. To pardon sins that are numerous and heinous is a wonderful thing. (2) The promised blessings of the gospel are very precious. The great promise of the New Testament is the Holy Ghost. (3) Those who receive the promises of the gospel partake of the divine nature. Their hearts are set for God and his service. (4) Those in whom the Spirit works the divine nature are freed from the bondage of corruption. The dominion that sin has in the men of the world is through lust; their desires are to it, and therefore it rules over them. The dominion that sin has over us is according to the delight we have in it.

Having already obtained precious faith, and been made partakers of the divine nature is a very good beginning, but it is not to be rested in, as if we were already perfect. He exhorts them to press forward for the obtaining of more grace. Those who will make any progress in religion must be very industrious in their endeavours. Without giving all diligence, there is no gaining any ground in the work of holiness.

I. The believer's way is marked out step by step. 1. He must get virtue, by which some understand justice; and then the knowledge, temperance, and patience that follow. By virtue here we may understand strength and courage, without which the believer cannot stand up for good works. A cowardly Christian must expect that Christ will be ashamed of him another day. We have need of virtue while we live, and it will be of excellent use when we come to die. 2. The believer must add knowledge to his virtue, prudence to his courage. Christian prudence regards the persons we have to do with and the place and company we are in. 3. We must add temperance to our knowledge. We must be moderate in desiring and using the good things of natural life; an inordinate desire after these is inconsistent with an earnest desire after God and Christ. 4. Add to temperance patience, which must have its perfect work. We are born to trouble, and must through many tribulations enter into the kingdom of heaven. Our sufferings are less than our sins deserve. 5. To patience we must add godliness. When Christians bear afflictions patiently, they get an experimental knowledge of the loving-kindness of their heavenly Father, and hereby they are brought to the child-like fear and reverential love wherein true godliness consists. 6. We must add brotherly-kindness, a tender affection to all our fellow-christians, who are children of the same Father, and therefore are to be loved, as those who are peculiarly near and dear to us. 7. Charity, or a love of goodwill to all mankind. God has made of one blood all nations, and all the children of men are partakers of the same human nature, are all capable of the same mercies, and liable to the same afflictions. Thus must all believers in Christ evidence that they are the children of God, who is good to all.

godliness. Knowledge of God experimentally is the first step to life (John 17:3). The child must have vital breath first, and then cry to, and walk in the ways of, his father. It is not by godliness that we obtain life, but by life, godlines. To life stands opposed corruption; to godliness, lust (vs. 4). called us—vs. 10—"calling" (I Pet. 2:9). to glory and virtue—rather, "through (His) glory." Thus English Version reads as one oldest MS. But other oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "By His own (peculiar) glory and virtue"; being the explanation of "His divine power"; glory and moral excellency (the same attribute is given to God in I Peter 2:9, "praises," lit., "virtues" characterize God's "power." "Virtue," the standing word in heathen ethics, is found only once in Paul (Phil. 4:8), and in Peter in a distinct sense from its classic usage; it (in the heathen sense) is a term too low and earthly for expressing the gifts of the Spirit [TRENCH, Synonyms]. 4. Whereby . . .—By His glory and virtue: His glory making the "promises" to be exceeding great; His virtue making them "precious" [BENGEL]. Precious promises are the object of precious faith. given—The promises themselves are a gift: for God's promises are as sure as if they were fulfilled. by these—promises. They are the object of faith, and even now have a sanctifying effect on the believer, assimilating him to God. Still more so, when they shall be fulfilled. might . . .—Greek, "that ye MAY become partakers of the divine nature," even now in part; hereafter perfectly; I John 3:2, "We shall be like Him." the divine nature—not God's essence, but His holiness, including His "glory" and "virtue," vs. 3; the opposite to "corruption through lust." Sanctification is the imparting to us of God Himself by the Holy Spirit in the soul. We by faith partake also of the material nature of Jesus (Eph. 5:30). The "divine power" enables us to be partakers of "the divine nature." escaped the corruption—which involves in, and with itself, destruction at last of soul and body; on "escaped" as from a condemned cell, cf. ch. 2:18-20; Genesis 19:17; Colossians 1:13. through—Greek, "in." "The corruption in the world" has its seat, not so much in the surrounding elements, as in the "lust" or concupiscence of men's hearts. 5. And beside this—rather, "And for this very reason," viz., "seeing that His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness" (vs. 3). giving—lit., "introducing," side by side with God's gift, on your part "diligence." Cf. an instance, vs. 10; ch. 3:14; II Corinthians 7:11. all—all possible. add—lit., "minister additionally," or, abundantly (cf. Greek, II Cor. 9:10); said properly of the one who supplied all the equipments of a chorus. So accordingly, "there will be ministered abundantly unto you an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Saviour" (vs. 11). to—Greek, "in"; in the possession of your faith, minister virtue. Their faith (answering to "knowledge of Him," vs. 3) is presupposed as the gift of God (vs. 3; Eph. 2:8), and is not required to be ministered by us; in its exercise, virtue is to be, moreover, ministered. Each grace being assumed, becomes the stepping-stone to the succeeding grace: and the latter in turn qualifies and completes the former. Faith leads the band; love brings up the rear [BENGEL]. The fruits of faith specified are seven, the perfect number. virtue—moral excellency; manly, strenuous energy, answering to the virtue (energetic excellency) of God. and to—Greek, "in"; "and in (the exercise of) your virtue knowledge," viz., practical discrimination of good and evil; intelligent appreciation of what is the will of God in each detail of practice. 6. Greek, "And in your knowledge self-control." In the exercise of Christian knowledge or discernment of God's will, let there be the practical fruit of self-control as to one's lusts and passions. Incontinence weakens the mind; continence, or self-control, removes weakness and imparts strength [BENGEL]. "And in your self-control patient endurance" amidst sufferings, so much dwelt on in the First Epistle, chs. 2, 3 and 4. "And in your patient endurance godliness"; it is not to be mere stoical endurance, but united to [and flowing from] God-trusting [ALFORD]. 7. "And in your godliness brotherly kindness"; not suffering your godliness to be moroseness, nor a sullen solitary habit of life, but kind, generous, and courteous [ALFORD]. Your natural affection and brotherly kindness are to be sanctified by godliness. "And in your brotherly kindness love," viz., to all men, even to enemies, in thought, word, and deed. From brotherly kindness we are to go forward to love. Cf. I Thessalonians 3:12, "Love one toward another (brotherly kindness), and toward all men" (charity). So charity completes the choir of graces in Colossians 3:14. In a retrograde order, he who has love will exercise brotherly kind-

That hath called us to glory and virtue. To virtue or "courage" as the means; and glory—the kingdom of Heaven, as the end. This is the way in which these words are commonly understood, and this sense is plain enough, but the construction is harsh. Others have translated "by His glorious benignity," and read the whole verse thus: "God by His own power hath bestowed on us everything necessary for a happy life and godliness, having called us to the knowledge of himself, by His own infinite goodness." It is certain that the word which we translate virtue or "courage," is used, 1 Pet. ii. 9, to express the perfection of the divine nature. But there is a various reading here which is of considerable importance, and which, from the authorities by which it is supported, appears to be genuine: Through the knowledge of Him who hath called us "by His own glory and power," or "by His own glorious power."

4. Whereby are given unto us. By His own glorious power He hath "freely given unto us exceeding great and invaluable promises." Peter intimates to these Gentiles that God had given unto them exceeding great promises; indeed all that He had given to the Jews, the mere settlement in the Promised Land excepted; and this also He had given in all its spiritual meaning and force. And besides these "superlatively great" promises, which distinguished the Mosaic dispensation, He had given them the "valuable" promises, those which came through the great price: enrollment with the Church of God, redemption in and through the Blood of the Cross, the continual indwelling influence of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection of the body, and eternal rest at the right hand of God. That by these ye might be partakers. The object of all God's promises and dispensations was to bring fallen man back to the image of God, which he had lost. This, indeed, is the sum and substance of the religion of Christ. We have partaken of an earthly, sensual, and devilish nature; the design of God by Christ is to remove this, and to make us partakers of the divine nature; and save us from all the corruption in principle and fact which is in the world; the source of which is lust—irregular, unreasonable, inordinate, and impure desire. Lust is the source whence springs all the corruption which is in the world. Lust conceives and brings forth sin; sin is finished or brought into act, and then brings forth death. This destructive principle is to be rooted out, and love to God and man is to be implanted in its place. This is every Christian's privilege. God has promised to purify our hearts by faith; and that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so shall grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life; that here we are to be delivered out of the hands of all our enemies, and have even "the thoughts of our hearts so cleansed by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit that we shall perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His holy name."

5. And beside this. Notwithstanding what God hath done for you, in order that you may not receive the grace of God in vain. Giving all diligence. "Furnishing all earnestness" and activity. The original is very emphatic. Add to your faith. "Lead up hand in hand." Virtue. "Courage" or "fortitude," to enable you to profess the faith before men in these times of persecution. Knowledge. True wisdom, by which your faith will be increased, and your courage directed.

6. Temperance. A proper and limited use of all earthly enjoyments, keeping every sense under proper restraints, and never permitting the animal part to subjugate the rational. Patience. Bearing all trials and difficulties with an even mind, enduring in all, and persevering through all. Godliness. Piety towards God; a deep, reverential, religious fear.

7. Brotherly kindness. "Love of the brotherhood"—the strongest attachment to Christ's flock. Charity. "Love" to the whole human race, even to your persecutors. True religion is neither selfish nor insulated; where the love of God is, bigotry cannot exist. Narrow, selfish people, and people of a party, who scarcely have any hope of the salvation of those who do not believe as they believe and who do not follow with them, have scarcely any religion, though
